Brother James David Clardy was born in April, 1859 and died at his home near Houston, Va., May 22, 1919. He joined Pleasant Grove, (Va.), Christian church when he was twelve years old. While he was a young man he went to Lexington, N. C., to school. He was never married, but bought a home near his church and induced his sister, Miss Sallie, and brother, Charles H., to make their home with him. The three lived faithfully and lovingly together until his death.

James David Clardy was the youngest of a family of eight children—four boys and four girls. They all survive him. Brother Clardy was a good man. In his church work he was teacher, singer and Sunday school superintendent, all of which places he filled well. He was laid to rest in the church cemetery by his pastor and friends.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—LEE

Whereas; it hath pleased our Heavenly Father on Tuesday, May 20, 1919, to call from labor to reward Deacon Willis John Lee; and, whereas Deacon Lee has always done more than his duty as a member and a deacon of Berea Christian church; and, whereas, his life of humility, gentleness and service has been of such unbounded benefit to his church, his denomination and to Christianity at large, therefore, be it resolved;

1. That while we do deeply grieve over our loss and sadly miss him from his place among us yet we humbly bow to the will of him who doeth all things well, Who has called him to become a member of that Church not made with hands eternal in the Heavens.

2. That we thus record our deep feeling of gratitude for his life among us and the noble Christian example of word and deed he has given us to follow.

3. That we express in these resolutions, inadequate though they be, our love for him as a man and a follower of Christ, a man who neither spoke nor thought evil of his fellow man nor did naught but good for all mankind. As a man who ever thought and ever deported himself as a true follower of Christ spreading the spirit of Christianity both at home and abroad. As a man whose time and means were ever at the service of Christ or those of his creatures whose necessity required it. As a Christian gentleman whose courage, patriotism and Christian zeal will ever be an example worthy of commendation and imitation.

4. That we strive to emulate the glorious example of Christian manhood he has given us, keeping the memory of him ever before us that we may be enabled to live better lives and die as sure of a heavenly reward.

5. That we express our most sincere sympathy to his widow and to the other members of his family, their loss is in some small degree our loss, we mourn with them. May the Comforter of man be with them in this their great bereavement.

6. That a copy of these resolutions be entered upon the records of the church, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication and a copy sent to the family.

WATKINS

May 5, 1919, Gladys Elizabeth Watkins came for a brief stay in the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Watkins. On May 24, 1919, her spirit was called from her earthly home to her home above. Though the stay was brief, yet ties of affection and love were twined about the hearts of parents and child that death cannot part asunder. As they weep for their dear child may they ever remember that their loss is Heaven's gain, and their own treasure has been made richer and sweeter by her going.

Funeral services were conducted from Liberty church.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—TATE

Whereas, our Heavenly Father in His infinite wisdom, has seen fit to call our dear sister, Luna C. Tate, to that home where pain and suffering are no more; and

Whereas, we feel that we have lost a friend whose place cannot be filled, yet we realize that our loss is her gain, and she who was so patient, and cheerful through years of affliction, is now, at rest; and

Whereas, the Christian church and the Willing Workers' Sunday school Class have lost a loyal member;

Therefore, be it resolved by the Christian Church at Antioch:

First, That we extend to the family our heartfelt sympathy, with the prayer that God will comfort and bless them.

Second, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be spread upon our church record.

WEMBLEY

Mr. Peter Wembley, well known citizen of New Hill, N. C., departed this life May 14, 1919, after an illness of a few days. He was about sixty-three years of age. His remains were laid to rest in the family burying ground near his home the following day. A good neighbor, father and husband has gone. May God's blessings comfort the hearts of the bereaved ones is the prayer of a former pastor. Funeral services conducted by the writer.

"IN ESSENTIALS UNITY, IN NON-ESSENTIALS LIBERTY, IN ALL THINGS CHARITY"

Not for Sale:

George Clarke Peck

BY contrast to the many "For sale" cards in the windows of our neighborhood it may be well to remind ourselves that the real possessions of life never can be sold or bought for money. With money one may buy real estate, and automobiles, and railroad tickets, and admission to the movies. But such things are not real possessions; they are merely accessories. "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Life's real assets are inponderable as well as unpurchasable. They cannot be weighed in any mercantile scale or measured by any commercial yard stick. They are priced by the heart—which has its own cipher. One never can tell his most intimate friend what his best joy has cost him. Suffice to say that it costs little when it costs money, merely. Said Robert E. Lee, when asked to lend his name to a lottery scheme: "My good name is all that I have left, and it is not for sale."

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

DOING OUR PART THIS SUMMER IN THE EDUCATIONAL FIELD

There are three hundred and sixty-five days in the year in which we have opportunity to do work along the lines of education. But the summer months seem to be a time most opportune. This is true because it is vacation period. It is also true because of the new students who will make their plans during the summer to enter college in the early fall. During the next 3 months many young men and women within our reach will be planning to go away to college. There are those who will not be planning to go to college, but who could go, and who would go, if they but had a little encouragement. It is our part and portion to congratulate those who have decided to go to college and encourage those who have not decided to go. Many a life has been changed by some word of encouragement, some suggestion, some inspiration along an educational way. A brotherly talk to a man has often kindled in his soul an ambition to rise up and dare and do. This is true of many a young woman, and we ought to seize these opportunities and to inquire diligently concerning the young people of our community.

This is a day in which we ought to encourage college attendance as much as possible. The world is calling for leaders, yea, it is needing them. The world is calling for leaders who are trained in heart, in head, and in hand; the world is calling for that type of leadership that can weather the storm of stress and strain through years of devotion and sacrifice. Such a leadership cannot be had and cannot be developed from minds and hearts untrained in the great fundamentals of life.

Four years of preparation is a very short period. Let us go forth into the highways and hedges seeking out the young men and women of our country and encourage them to endeavor for an education. It is our privilege, our opportunity, and our Christian duty to thus act.

CONCERNING OUR CIRCULATION AGAIN

We have written in these columns so often about the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN SUN that we feel at times that it is useless to say anything more about it. We are glad to state that the circulation has grown slowly during the past three years climbing from 1,650 on May 1, 1916, to 2,150 on May 1, 1919. However, this gain is not what it should have been and what it should be for the good of the Church. Five thousand subscribers to THE SUN would be a very modest number for our constituency in the Southern Christian Convention. We have something over 25,000 members in this section of the Church and 2,150 subscribers to the official organ of the Church is far from what should be expected.

In every church community there are homes where THE SUN does not go. Many of our pastors have done well and many have done very little.

When it is possible for us to raise large sums for various enterprises of the Church, it does not seem possible to induce a man to take his Church paper at the small sum of $2.00 a year. When you get a man to take his Church paper, you are giving him more than value received; you are not asking him for a gift.

THE SUN needs a larger circulation from a financial standpoint, and also from the standpoint of the good that it can do. If our pastors will not help to get THE SUN into every home on account of the financial condition of the paper, we do beg them in the name of missionary work to help extend the circulation.

We have often wondered why certain pastors have done so little for THE SUN. There are churches with only one or two families taking THE SUN. There are a few churches where THE SUN does not go into a single family. Just how a pastor can be contented to serve under such condition is beyond our comprehension.

Can we not, in some way, get THE SUN into the homes of our people? If it is worth while, let us do it, and if it is not, let us say so.

PERISHING CHURCHES AND TITHING CHURCHES

There are churches that perish and there are churches that tithe. Here is an example between a perishing church and a tithing church which we glean from "Men and Money":

When Dr. Potter went to the First Methodist Episcopal church of Anderson, Indiana, the church was $2,100 behind on its current budget and no fairy god-mother in sight. Dr. Potter thought and prayed and finally warned his official board that he was going to put the tithing stewardship proposition up to the church; that it was for them to vote yea or nay, with nobody excused on account of a cold. Seventeen men on the board voted in favor of this action, while, in spite of warnings, several asked to be excused.

On the following Sunday after a stewardship sermon 79 people signed as tithing stewards, and at the present date more than 180 are enrolled from that church. Moreover the church is not only out of debt, but the benevolences, both home and foreign, are greatly increased.

TWO INSTANCES

We recall two instances that are only typical of the many that we have witnessed during the past three years. We think of these instances because of the impression they made upon us. The first instance was our visit to a home where every comfort and convenience that farm life could afford, was there. There were several hundred acres of beautiful farming land with every acre growing a splendid crop. We learned that there were no debts upon that home and upon that farm. The dwelling was worth about $10,000.00 with barns and out houses in proportion. We were assured by the pastor that this family was one of the most loyal families in the church—and we have learned since that his statement was correct.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN did not go into this home. We made inquiry as to why it did not go and we found that no effort had been made by the pastor to get it there. Just why we cannot understand. That family was placed on THE CHRISTIAN SUN list and is faithful to the paper.

And now the instance. Not over one hundred years ago we were in the field of a pastor who has done good work for THE SUN, and yet we found in his pastorate a family living in comfort, with conveniences, a productive farm, all interested and good workers in the church. We asked members of the family if they had ever seen a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and they replied that they had not. This ends the story. We leave it to our readers to guess what happened.

All of us can see things that the other fellow does not do, and we can tell the other man things to do that we cannot do. Beloved pastors, you will never convince this scribe that if he ever assumes the responsibility of being a pastor to a people, that he will not soon personally visit every home for one purpose only—and that is to know if THE CHRISTIAN SUN is going into that home. That will be the first approach. There will be no talking about the weather, the crops, the church, the school or anything else. Our message will be first about THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and they will have no difficulty understanding that THE SUN's interest is our chief business on that trip.

TWO METHODIST PAPERS MERGE

The Raleigh Christian Advocate, Raleigh, N. C., and The North Carolina Christian Advocate, Greensboro, N. C., merged themselves last week. Dr. L. S. Massey, Editor of The Raleigh Christian Advocate joins Dr. H. M. Blair, Editor of The North Carolina Christian Advocate in making one strong paper for the Methodist in North Carolina. The paper is published in Greensboro under the name of "The North Carolina Christian Advocate," the Raleigh office being discontinued. The Methodist people did not own their printing place in Raleigh, but the paper was published on contract. They own their own publishing house in Greensboro which is estimated to be worth about $40,000. The move seems to be one of wisdom since the two papers were published in the same State, and we predict for the united efforts of these two good editors great success. May the blessings of God continue to rest upon their work.

NUMBER TWENTY-SIX

By referring to the front page of this issue of THE SUN, you will notice that it is number twenty-six of the present volume. One-half the year is gone—twenty-six more numbers and the volume for Nineteen Hundred and Nineteen will be completed. How time does fly! It seems only yesterday when we placed on the shelf the volume for Nineteen Hundred and Eighteen and marked No. 1 on the front page. Let us all unite to make the remaining twenty-six numbers of this year the very best possible.

MISS MARTHA STACEY AT BURLINGTON

Miss Martha Stacey, Haverhill, Massachusetts, who is to sail in September as a missionary to Japan to be supported by the Sunday school of the First Christian church of Burlington, N. C., visited the Burlington church last week. As stated in THE SUN last week she conducted the Christian Endeavor meeting on Sunday evening and made a talk after the usual preaching hour.

On Tuesday evening at 8:30, the church and its organizations gave a reception to Miss Stacey. The different organizations of the church extended greetings and a most happy and joyful program was rendered. Miss Stacey was presented with a gold watch, and also a fountain pen.

On Wednesday evening a beautiful installation service was held. Brother John R. Foster, Superintendent of the Sunday school, presided. Dr. P. H. Fleming made a talk on "The Gift of Life;" THE SUN's Editor made a talk on "The Gift of Money," and the Pastor, J. W. Harrell, made a talk on "The Gift of Prayer."

At the close of Brother Harrell's talk, Miss Stacey came forward, and after being asked questions, accepted the work in the name of the Sunday school and then the Sunday school accepted her by unanimous vote. She made a very impressive and beautiful talk expressing her appreciation to the Sunday school for making it possible for her to go and do the work that she had chosen to do.

The Third church, Norfolk, Va., last week gave a reception to the more than one hundred new members received since January 15 when Brother L. E. Smith assumed charge as pastor.

Brother M. J. W. White, Norfolk, Va., called by to see us last week. He is one of THE SUN's most faithful friends and we are always glad to shake his hand.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

PLEASANT GROVE, VA.

The writer had the privilege and pleasure of being with Brother J. G. Truitt the first Sunday in June. It was memorial day. A sermon was preached and a short memorial address delivered, after which Brother Thompson, superintendent of the Sunday school, took charge and directed the distribution of the flowers. The flowers were in abundance and some were placed upon every grave. This was a happy day for me as I was pastor of this church some twenty-five years ago, for a period of seven years. Many that were active members of the church then were missing—they had gone to their reward. My visit here brought to mind many sweet and pleasant remembrances.

Brother J. G. Truitt is the beloved pastor of this church and his people love him dearly and regret that he is going to leave them this fall. He intends to enter some Bible school. God bless the pastor and people.

The third Sunday I met our congregation at Moore Union. It was a day that will not be forgotten soon, because the presence of the Lord was so wonderfully manifested. Many souls were filled with joy and made happy. We are praying for and expecting a great meeting at this place. Pray for us. Here comes six subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN from this church.

P. T. KLAPP.

P. S. I think that THE SUN needs an endowment fund, for it is the hand maid of missions and all other enterprises of the Church.

SOUTH NORFOLK REVIVAL

Our revival which began on Sunday May 4 and closed on Sunday night, May 25, has proven to be the greatest meeting ever held in the South Norfolk Christian church. The pastor did the preaching throughout the meeting and led the singing most of the time. He was loyally supported both in attendance and in prayers by the membership of the church. The power of the Holy Spirit was in evidence from the very first service. The attendance and interest were good throughout the meeting, and the church could not accommodate the crowds that sought admission to many of the services.

It was the idea and plan of the church to carry the meeting fifteen days but at the end of the first two weeks the meeting had grown in such proportion that it was unanimously voted to carry it on another week, which proved to be the crowning days of the meeting.

During the revival over one hundred persons professed faith in Christ, and sixty-four of these united with our church. A number joined other churches of the community. One of the greatest blessings of the meeting was the revival that was experienced in the church. We have always believed in the "good old fashioned way" of praying at the altar. This method was used throughout the meeting. When penitents would come and kneel at the altar, it was inspiring to see the church members come and kneel by them and pray as I have never heard them pray, and would not let go, "except He bless them." The Lord heard and answered.

Rev. J. F. Morgan and Rev. G. O. Lankford were present a number of times during the meeting and assisted in the song services. Brother J. S. Carden of Durham, N. C., paid us a visit while in Norfolk. The pastor and people were delighted to have these brethren with us and invite them to come again.

At the close of the meeting the pastor was given a delightful surprise when the superintendent of the Sunday school, Mr. B. F. Meginley, stated he wished to say something. He came forward and proceeded to present the pastor with a purse of $66.00, stating: "This is a little gift of the church and Sunday school we wish to make to you as an expression of love and appreciation we have for you as our faithful and untiring pastor." Words and deeds like these fill my heart with joy. They make me want to strive harder and harder to prove worthy of such expressions of appreciation, to live a life more like Jesus, and be a better pastor to these good people.

As a result of the great revival which we have just witnessed, we are beginning to see marked improvement of the work. Our Sunday school has increased in numbers until we have nowhere to put the people. But praise the Lord a movement has been started to have our present building enlarged at the earliest possible date. At the mid-week prayer service Wednesday evening eighty-five people were present, and a large number gave personal testimonials of the religion of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. God is wonderfully blessing us in our feeble efforts at South Norfolk. To Him be all the praise and glory. Brethren, continue to pray for us.

O. D. POYTRESS.

South Norfolk, Va.

DANVILLE, VIRGINIA

The evangelistic services which had been in progress during the past twelve days at the Third Avenue Christian church came to a close last night when a number of persons made professions or re-consecrated their lives to Jesus Christ, while eight united with the church on profession of faith. It was an inspiring service and God is to be praised for the wonderful way in which He blessed us. To Him be all the glory. In all there were about thirty professions and re-consecrations and the church was greatly revived.

Rev. F. C. Lester did the preaching and he brought some splendid messages. He dealt with fundamentals and always appealed to the reason as well as to the feelings. It was the beauty of holiness and the love of a dying Savior that formed the central theme of all his messages, and they were delivered with a simplicity and yet, withal, an earnestness that won his hearers. We also enjoyed the wholesome fellowship of this genial and consecrated man.

There is a great field of service at Danville and I am planning to spend my entire summer with my folks there. They are loyal and earnest, and they show a spirit of service that is an inspiration to anyone who witnesses their work. They need a pastor on the ground all the time and I hope and pray that God may thrust forth some laborer into this rich field. I am planning to enter Yale in the fall to complete my preparation for the mission field, or otherwise I would be glad to serve these people as pastor. It is with keen feelings of regret that I leave them, and I pray God's richest blessing on the work. May it grow and may the church become a real factor in the community life.

SUFFOLK LETTER

Sunday, June 15, 1919, was red letter day at Oakland Christian church, ten miles from Suffolk. It was the twenty-first anniversary of the pastorate of Rev. Dr. I. W. Johnson. The day was ideal, the grove was full of automobiles, the house and yard full of people—the community was there and many from cities and other neighborhoods. At least twelve hundred enjoyed the great dinner. The tables accommodated two hundred and fifty at a time and I saw the tables crowded four times, to say nothing of those who ate inside and as a final few outside. The dinner was a real dinner, with meats, vegetables, breads, cakes, pickles, et cetera, all well prepared and enough to have fed as many more. Many were there who had never seen an all-day meeting with dinner on the ground at a country church; and they enjoyed it, too.

The exercises in the church began at noon, and were resumed at four in the afternoon. Dinner and social intercourse filled up the recess. A big choir and Chandler's orchestra furnished music. Dr. W. A. Harper delivered a great address at the first service. At the afternoon service Leo DeWitte Martin, a recent graduate of Elon College, and a member of Oakland, pastor I. W. Johnson, and this pencil pusher, made brief addresses. The choir and orchestra enlivened both services with splendid music.

Dr. Johnson entered upon his work as pastor in June 1898. At that time the membership was one hundred and thirty-four. Two hundred and fifty-two members have been received during his incumbency, and the present membership is two hundred and eighty. The sum raised for benevolences the first year of his pastorate was $20.20; the sum raised last year for benevolences was $500.00. The result of these years has been a source of gratification to pastor and congregation; and the address of L. D. Martin expressed, in words of which the people were proud, the appreciation of the congregation for their pastor. A liberal offering was made for benevolences, and the day celebrated an event of great significance to the people, and, no doubt, the beginning of great usefulness in the service of the Master. If the increase in benevolences were to be as much during the next twenty-one years, as during the past twenty-one years Oakland would be giving in nineteen forty $12,500.00 per year. It is safe to hope that the future will increase all the activities and gifts of the congregation. We used to sing, "Shout, Shout, We're Gaining Ground," "Glory Hallelujah," and now, we add to that song, that we are paying as well as singing, and doing as well as believing, remembering that "faith without works is dead."

Great days mark great achievements. July the fourth celebrates a great victory. The Passover celebrated a great deliverance. Such days as Oakland had, celebrate a relation between pastor and people that touches deeper things than years and numbers. That day was the flower of spiritual births, Christian burials, marriage altars, growth in grace, community betterment, and the promise of fruits yet to be harvested. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

Monday followed Sunday by subscription to the Elon Endowment Fund, and Dr. Harper moves on toward three hundred thousand. W. W. STALEY.

ANOTHER RECOMMENDATION

There are many splendid resolutions and recommendations introduced in our Conferences and Conventions, the majority of which are adopted, and many of which are adapted. If wisdom adopts resolutions, energy augmented by wisdom should adapt them.

The following recommendation was adopted by one of our progressive Conferences during its last session:

"We recommend to each church and Sunday school to have at least one splendid representative at the Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods of the Christian Church at Virginia Beach, Va., paying at least a part of said representative's expenses, that he may bring back much of the valuable work of that summer Conference to our Churches."

This recommendation should not only be adapted by the churches composing said Conference, but by all the churches of our denomination. Our churches and Sunday schools will grow no faster than the leaders; the leaders will grow only as their vision is expanded. Proper expansion, a splendid vision, and adequate enthusiasm may be obtained by attending the Chautauqua. Let every Sunday school superintendent see that the above recommendation is adopted by his school. Send at least one representative, that he may bring back to your school the best and most practicable thoughts of the summer Conference.

NOTICE

The Sunday School Convention of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference will meet with Oakland Christian church, near Suffolk, Va., at 10 A. M., on Wednesday, July 23. By vote it was decided by the last session of the Convention to hold only a two days' session this year. The program, therefore, has been arranged accordingly. Let each superintendent keep this in mind in planning for the Convention. For information as to trains, see the pastor, Dr. I. W. Johnson's announcement in THE SUN. All together for a successful session. Meet us at Oakland on July 23 and 24.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

TWENTY-ONE YEARS A CHRISTIAN MINISTER

On the third Sunday in June Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., concluded his 21st year as a Christian minister and as pastor of the church at Oakland. It was a great and good day. His people celebrated in his honor, as only Eastern Virginia people can celebrate. Tables were built to accommodate 400 people at one time and four times they were filled. There was ample to have fed as many more. On few occasions have so many people ever assembled at a country church in any section. It was good to be there. The people love this man of God and they came to do him honor.

In the morning Dr. Johnson insisted that I speak and at the conclusion he expressed the hope that his church, apportioned $1,100, would give $2,100, making it $100 a year for each of his 21. These people would do any reasonable thing for their beloved pastor, and they did this. In the afternoon Dr. Staley brought a great message on the four-square church member. He squared him perfectly and instructed every listener. He was preceded by Mr. L. D. Martin, who graduated from Elon in May of this year, and who brought not only a message of appreciation from the local church to Dr. Johnson, but a challenge also to Oakland to become a real community centre. Dr. Johnson told some of his experiences during a 21 years pastorate and wittily remarked that a good preacher gets promotion. His people felt he had been promoted by remaining with them. It is lovely to see how these people love their pastor.

I must not forget to mention the splendid music at the anniversary celebration. Dr. Johnson's wife was accompanist during the day and her wifely heart must have swelled with pardonable pride in the esteem in which all could see her husband is so universally held.

But the best part of it all comes now. When I was in Suffolk in March Dr. Johnson did not make a gift. He had a reason. He was to be 21 years of age in the ministry on the third Sunday in June and he had decided on that day to make his gift. So at noon at Oakland he walked up to me and said he and his wife had decided to give $1,000 on his anniversary day. Is that not fine?

Dr. Johnson's other churches, Hobson, Liberty Spring and Berea have also gone over the top. His churches will give double his salary to general enterprises of the church for the next five years. Is that not something for a preacher to be happy over? And Dr. Johnson is happy. May he preach for 21 more years, twice over.

Other Places

I have also this week visited Union, (South.), Antioch, and Franklin.

Rev. H. H. Butler is pastor at Union and Antioch. He is a banner pastor, both his churches going over the top. I have rarely found two more promising churches than these. Antioch is a deeply spiritual church. It has been the seminary of preachers, and others yet are destined to come forth from her. Seven of her deacons, all we could see, subscribed to the fund, and a church with seven such deacons is highly blessed. Brother L. W. Vaughan at Union gave the drive a good start by subscribing very liberally.

Rev. C. H. Rowland and his wife preside at Franklin. They have been there since 1900 and have wrought a splendid work. Their new house of worship was dedicated on the fourth Sunday in May, when $13,000 was raised to wipe out the indebtedness. The people there are especially generous to their pastors, (plural properly), and they were generous to the fund too. Not a person canvassed refused to subscribe, and over the top the church went. Franklin is further proof that generous support to local enterprises does not hinder large giving to general enterprises. Has a church any more right to be selfish and self-centered than an individual? Can it be so and expect the blessing of God? Franklin says "No."

More From Suffolk

Suffolk originally gave $52,800. It is now $55,000. This makes it possible to say the church itself gave the $50,000 to endow the chair of the presidency in Dr. Staley's honor and leaves the $5,000 he gave to found a fund in memory of Mrs. Staley. Suffolk may do more yet. There is no end to what Suffolk may not do. Mr. B. D. Crocker and Mr. John King made the $55,000 possible for Suffolk.

Funds This Week

By Rev. and Mrs. I. W. Johnson on Dr. Johnson's 21st anniversary in the Christian ministry, in memory of their deceased parents, Mrs. Georgiana Johnson and Mr. F. R. Ellenor.

Mr. B. D. Crocker in memory of his wife, Mrs. Adona Brinkley Crocker and his son, Marvin Franklin Crocker. Mr. John King out of his deep affection for Dr. W. W. Staley.

Deacon Elisha Bradshaw for himself and wife, a real help-meet in his Christian life. Brother Bradshaw is a deacon that really "deaks."

Deacon W. C. Moore for himself and wife and because of his deep devotion to Dr. I. W. Johnson.

Finally, Brethren

Before another issue of THE SUN is printed, the Elon Standardization Fund drive will be history. The field force are earnestly engaged these latter days to put the fund safely over the top. Bear us up in your prayers that God may use us to do His will and that His cause through Elon may prosper.

W. A. HARPER.

Rev. O. B. Williams, Seattle, Washington, a member of the M. P. Church, is one of the several subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN who are not members of the Christian Church. He writes that he cannot do without THE SUN and we assure Brother Williams that we are glad to have him on the list.

Rev. D. F. Parsons changes his address from Nashville, Tenn., to Brownsville, Tenn., for the summer.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

We had hoped to reach the seven thousand dollar mile post in this report as our next report will be dated for July, but we fell just below that amount. I wish we could have reached it. We always feel happy when we reach the goal we set and try not to be discouraged when we do not reach our mark.

The summer months are always discouraging in this work as our financial income generally runs below our expense account and when we have to cut our bank account down to live it always hurts.

We do everything we can to keep the expenses as low as possible and try to raise as much on the farm as we can to help feed the children, and this spring we have been blessed with nice vegetables from the garden and now have plenty of Irish potatoes, snap beans and cabbage. But the things we have to buy are the items that cost us money and come at a high price.

Mrs. Wicker, our efficient kitchen and dining room matron, and the girls have had their first lesson in canning for this season. They were very industrious one day last week and put up thirty-six gallons of snap beans. They were so industrious that they conscripted all the boys and girls to help pick the beans and made the Superintendent help, too, and made us stay on the job till ten-thirty that night, till all the strings were pulled off and the beans snapped.

Two of our larger girls have reached the age limit in the last few weeks and have gone out. One took a place in the New Bern General Hospital, New Bern, N. C., and the other went to the Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va., to take training to nurse. Both are highly pleased with their new homes and the work, and I believe they will make good. It gives us much pleasure to secure for them, when they reach the age limit, places in institutions of this kind where they can be trained for usefulness in life.

Mrs. Wicker carried four of our little girls to visit the High Point church and to sing for them on their Children's Day, Sunday, June 15, and were highly pleased with their trip and the kindness shown them while there. Our High Point people are a great people.

LETTERS FROM THE COUSINS

Dear Uncle Charley: I wish to thank you for the picture you sent me. I think she is a very sweet looking little girl and I would like to hear her sing. Am sending thirty cents for May, June and July. Hope you and all the cousins are well.—T. D. Mathews, Jr.

I am glad you liked the picture of our little girl. She is a very sweet little girl. "Uncle Charley."

Dear Charley: I am slow but I am coming with twenty-five cents for the orphans. I have been sick a long time and they won't give me anything to eat but malted milk. I just cry for chicken soup. I have a little sister seven days old. Thank you for the lovely pictures you sent me.—John B. Taylor.

I am sorry you have been sick. Glad you are better. You must be good to that little sister.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: I am almost one year old and I feel my importance, too. Grandfather Newman has gone to Asheville and I miss him so much. Love to all.—Oliver E. Young, Jr.

"I see you are a very energetic young man. I know you miss grandfather.—"Uncle Charley."

HOUSEKEEPING HINTS

Put a little saltpeper in the water you use for your bouquets and the flowers will last for a fortnight.

To remove water spots on a dress dampen in luke-warm water. Place a blotter over warm spots on the wrong side and press with a warm iron.

When roast is small it is best to start it on top of the stove. Heat the pan very hot, put the roast in and turn it frequently. The quick searing holds the juices.

French Toast With Berries.—Cut stale bread into small, regular slices about one-half inch in thickness. Beat two eggs until light, add one-quarter teaspoonful of salt and one and one-half cupfuls of milk. Mix, dip the slices into this mixture, allow them to become thoroughly saturated, then fry in a shallow pan in hot melted butter. Or, if you have a gas range, place the slices on a pan or on the broiler, and toast on each side to a golden brown, and spread, while hot, with fresh butter. This is the more wholesome way. In either case, when the toast is made, sprinkle it thickly with powdered sugar to which just a little ground cinnamon has been added. Arrange the toast on a platter and heap the berries on top.

"SHOULDER TO SHOULDER"^{00*}

"That woman is by nature intended to obey, is shown by the fact that every woman who is placed in the unnatural position of absolute independence at once attaches herself to some kind of man, by whom she is controlled or governed; that is because she requires a master. If she is young, the man is a lover; if she is old, a priest." These are the sentiments of Schopenhauer, a typical Prussian. A nation founded on such misconception of woman as this was destined to curse mankind, and it did. We know the sad story, written in blood, and in the interest of man we women earnestly pray that the earth may be spared a repetition of the horrors through which it has been called upon the pass in our day. Autocracy has been done away, we say, but all autocracy, all over-lordship, all injustice is not political and governmental. We must go down to the roots of things. We must examine with fearless and sympathetic scrutiny the foundations of all the superstructure of our life, individual and organic. But not only among the Huns have women been regarded as the inferiors, not to say the vassals of men. Sad is the picture as we look down the vistas of recorded history to the earliest groups of human beings whose customs we can know. The most primitive, nomadic tribes, with no settled habitation, in company with their civilized brothers in the centuries since, regarded their women as weaker than themselves, and yet imposed on them the heavy routine work of the hut which they dignified with the name home. The first farmers, the first wood-hewers and drawers of water, were the women, the weaker half of these Bedouin tribes. And all through recorded history since the same rare inconsistency glares us stolidly and shamelessly in the face. The imperial Persian, the philosophic Syrian, the learned Egyptian, the cultured Greek, the lordly Roman, the pious Hebrew, the scornful Hun, the autocratic Churchman each and all agree in the divinely appointed limitations of women and in their laws as well as in their social customs nodlessly claim for their stronger selves advantages over the weaker sex. The disabilities of women legally to control their property or their children constitute a record of shame in the annals of mankind, while the monstrous age of consent legislation beggars appropriate description. It is a case of the strong legislating to perpetuate their strength, a glaring instance of the "CAT AND MOUSE" philosophy. Men have ever placed women under guardianship and as perpetually violated the trust committed to their tutelage.

Let us look at the picture of the ideal woman from the viewpoint of the religious Hebrew. We find it in Proverbs 31, and it reads as follows: "Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies. The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil. She will do him good and not evil all the days of her life. She seeketh wool and flax, and worketh willingly with her hands. She is like the merchant-ships; she bringeth food from afar. She riseth while it is yet night, and giveth meat to her household, and a portion to her maidens. She considereth a field and buyeth it: with the fruit of her hands she planteth a vineyard. She girdeth her loins with strength, and strengtheneth her arms. She perceiveth that her merchandise is good; her candle goeth not out by night.

"She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff. She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hand to the needy. She is not afraid of the snow for her household; for all her household are clothed in scarlet. She maketh herself coverings of tapestry; her clothing is silk and purple. Her husband is known in the gates, when he sitteth among the elders of the land. She maketh him fine linen and selleth it; and delivereth girdles unto the merchants.

"Strength and honor are her clothing; and she shall rejoice in time to come. She openeth her mouth with wisdom, and her tongue is the law of kindness. She looketh well to the ways of her household and eateth not the bread of idleness. Her children rise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and praiseth her. Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all. Favor is deceitful and beauty vain: but a woman that feareth the Lord, she shall be praised. Give her of the fruits of her hands; and let her own work praise her in the gates."

Does this picture satisfy the heart? Is it woman's sole duty to look well to her household cares, working till late at night, rising before day to prepare for family, saving from her extra sewing sufficient money to purchase additional land for her husband and sire, to fear God and be proud that her master is known among the town elders? Is this an inspiring challenge to the heart of woman? Yet the Hebrew women were taught to regard the realization of this scene as the highest life-expression for them, and the teaching was based on religion than which no stronger appeal can be made to the heart of woman. Have you noticed that the religions of the world are man-made? Have you also noticed that they are for the most part woman-obeyed? Women are naturally religious and religions has been deftly fashioned to terrorize and submerge them.

But let us examine the writings of the Apostles and the church Fathers. We expect the writings of these men to be flavored with the Hebrew conception of woman's place and our expectation is not misplaced. These venerable saints exhort to personal and social purity and condemn divorce, as their Master did, but they cannot free their minds of the teaching of Genesis that a woman is the cause of all the woes of mankind nor of that in Ecclesiasticus that the badness of men is better than the goodness of women. Wives, therefore, are to be in subjection to their husbands, daughters to their fathers, sisters to their brothers or other male kinsman, and such failing to some guardian of the virile sex. "Let the wife see that she fears her husband," says the Apostle Paul. Peter declares woman to be the weaker vessel. She is, therefore, to be silent in the church and if she desires to learn anything, she is to ask her husband at home. Paul writes his spiritual son Timothy some real philosophy on Christian equality of the sexes. "I permit not woman to teach, nor to have dominion over man, but to be in quietness. For Adam was first formed, then Eve; and Adam was not beguiled, but the woman being beguiled hath fallen into transgression," asserts this doughty champion of men's rights. The Apostles also legislated against certain apparel of the women, forbidding jewels, precious stones, and costly garments unbecoming a modest woman. Women were required by the same religious men to pray with their heads veiled, "for the man is not of the woman, but the woman for the man," they said.

Coming to the Church Fathers, we shall see these same ideas elaborated with all the zeal of religious intolerance. Jerome proves that all evils spring from women and considers marriage a lottery rendered because of their vices too risky to be tried by a real saint. The great Augustine logically proves that woman is not created in the image of God. Here is the proof: "The Apostles command that a man should not veil his head because he is the image of God; but the woman must veil hers according to the same Apostle; therefore the woman is not the image of God." These same spiritual leaders of the Church regarded marriage as a necessary evil, an indulgence to the weakness of the flesh, the view to this day of the Catholic Church, which teaches as Ambrose did the "Celibacy is the life of Angels" and with Optatus that "Celibacy is a spiritual kind of marriage." When the leaders of the Church entertained such notions of marriage, it is not strange that some of them like Tertullian and Paul ran away from their wives after marriage. A favorite theme with some men has ever been the style of women's dress. The Church Fathers are severe in their castigations of the gentler sex in respect to their dress. Tertullian would make them wear black or white and reaches his conclusions by a rare demonstration of logical power. "Inasmuch as God has not made crimson or green sheep, it does not behoove women to wear colors that He has not produced in animals naturally." And Augustine forbids nuns to bathe more than once a month surrounding them with other restrictions lest they become too attractive to their stronger brothers and divert their minds from the ways of sobriety and holy living.

As we women view the intricacies of the mental operations of men to perpetuate an untenable conception as to the relations of the male and female created in God's image, we would lose heart and conclude with Lady Somerville "the more we see of men, the better we like dogs," but for the teaching of our Master, who came to seek and to save the lost, to exalt the abased, to give full freedom to all. His loving tenderness to women and His insistency on every courtesy to them has been our Magna Charta through the Christian centuries. We, therefore, are not heartless, but hopeful. Progress we recognize to be a painful process, tedious, but sure, and in the long run self-interest will surrender to simple right and elemental justice, and when that day has come, as come it will the epic of woman's patient suffering will crown the racial accomplishments with a glory never to be dimmed. We women shall wait and love, we shall labor and hope, till the Shiloh-hour of our deliverance has struck, content with Jesus to endure humiliation in the interest of a cause that deserves our best, even the salvation from selfishness and self-interest of the stronger sex of the race and their consecration to a complete self-investment for others.

Jesus revealed to men their brotherhood, He taught us women too that we are endowed with personality. With him there is no respect of persons nor sexes. One-half of the race is not to be enslaved because weak. Men will see, men are now seeing, they have been seeing for a long time and now with increasing clarity, that the true goal of mankind is equality of men and women marching "shoulder to shoulder" in heroic spirit to subdue the world into a loving allegiance to the program of the Man of Galilee. I would not be misunderstood. All true men have ever loved women individually, in the concrete relations of life, so to speak. It is when we look at woman in the abstract that the inequality stands forth in glaring inconsistency. In the days ahead equality is to emerge in all their relations, concrete and abstract, personal and social, domestic and industrial. For a long time I have dreaded the thought of woman suffrage. Like every true soul when facing a great responsibility, I have shrunk from pleading for it. So have other thoughtful, true women, many of them. But "it is useless to kick against the pricks." Woman suffrage is bound to come or the program of our Master cannot be fully realized, and when it comes, we women, will be found as faithful and conscientious in the discharge of our duty as voters as we have been in the realms heretofore to which social customs and the wills of fathers, husbands and brothers have permitted us access. I know there has been a frantic over-working of the "woman's sphere" argument. But woman has a divine right to go wherever her father, husband, or brother may go, and if they are not willing that she should do so, they ought not resort to such a place or prerogative themselves. "A woman's place," says the sage Hennessy, "is in the home, darning her husband's childher, I mean" "I know what ye mean," says Mr. Dooley. "Tis a favorite argument iv mine whin I can't think iv nything to say." And Mr. Dooley is right. Woman has no sphere. Every sphere is hers, as created in the image of God, as the help-meet, the complement, the equal of man, and while men may stay the speedy coming of the logical consequences of the hand-writing of the All-Father in the act of creation, they cannot permanently delay its glorious consumation, the dawning of the era for which the noblest and best and devoutest of the race, men and women alike, have looked and longed and prayed and to which He, even the Christ, gave the charter of everlasting truth when he said, "With God there is no respect of persons."

It is true, we women have not furnished half the leaders of the world. How could we? Education underlies leadership, and the denial of education to woman is a rank injustice. Our right to be educated is distinctly a movement of the last half of the nineteenth century. Queen's College for women in England, was incorporated by royal charter in 1853. Eight of the ten men's universities of Great Britain now allow examinations and degrees to women, but Oxford and Cambridge do not. In the United States, the first school of college rank for women was Mt. Holyoke, founded in 1836. Vassar came in 1865. Radcliffe, the much abused "Harvard Annex" began in 1879. Antioch in 1826 and Oberlin in 1833 were the first instances of co-education in the sense of equal education for men and women. The allegations against equal education have been exploded by the stern argument of fact, and the day will come when woman's unfitness to profit by higher education on equal terms with man will take its place in the intellectual museum of mankind's upward progress with the Copernician theory of the earth's flatness.

Yet despite the denial to us for a long centuries of the foundation stone of leadership, education, we women have in every generation produced our Miriams, our Deborahs, our Faustinas, our Susanna Wesleys, our Mary Lyons, our Jane Addamses, our Alice Freeman Palmers, our Frances Willards, our George Eliotts, our Louisa May Alcotts, our Susan B. Anthonys, our Hettie Greens, our Helen Goulds, our Olympia Moratas, our Lady Jane Greys, our Queens Elizabeth and Victoria, our Marys and Marthas. We are proud of our women leaders. They are an earnest of our larger accomplishment when equality of privilege shall have fully dawned. Women, with their wonderful intuition and love for service, when given an equal chance, will become evangelists of light, angels of mercy, servants in joy of our fellow-men. Through our faith in Him we will assist our brothers in subduing the Kingdoms of evil, in doing the work of righteousness throughout the earth. And with our brothers we shall obtain the promises eternal because we shall stop the mouths of the lions of selfishness and greed, exterminate the social vultures that now prey on the vitals of our life, waxing valiant in our equal fight for truth and complete salvation, bringing in the blessed benedictions of the life that is hid, for both men and women, with Christ in God. We shall transform the world in that day of equality marching "shoulder to shoulder" with our brothers by deeds of mercy and love. We shall subdue it to the Christ.

Am I speaking in a dream? Or do I speak forth the words of truth and soberness? Eventually, without the shadow of doubt, the latter. But I may be dreaming for this present generation.

Then the women who have matched the sacrifice of the men in the world war, whose hearts have ached as their fingers have toiled in their homes that the soldier boys might have comfort and protection, who have died as nurses in the camps here and in the hospitals there,—these women, true to the resigned heart of women in every age, will dream on and in their dreams they will catch luminous glimpses of the face of Him who came to make all free and equal. We women of this day have gladly suffered our part to banish autocracy from the governments of the earth. We shall hopefully trust the gallantry of manhood to break the bands of the autocracy that confines us in limits too narrow for the fullest ripening of our souls, and if they do not, God will give us the grace to love on and, in a happier and juster day ahead, He will raise up a generation of men who will be real democrats, ready to remove every obstacle fettering the full and complete expression of the womanly spirit for the uplift and betterment of the race.

We women do not want rights. We want the opportunity of service. We do not wish to lessen our sacrifices. Sacrifice is the keynote, the major cord, the melodious theme of our symphony of life. But we know our Master's program of life cannot be fully achieved till we shall climb the long ascent up to equality with men, enabling us when we have scaled it to march "shoulder to shoulder" with them on the unending plateau of God's infinite purpose for the race's achievement. And when the summit is attained, "shoulder to shoulder," as God planned and as Jesus taught, together we shall do the work of our humankind.

"The woman's cause is man's; they rise or sink together, dwarf'd or God-like, bond or free; If she be small, slight-natured, misearable, how shall man grow?"

"For woman is not undeveloped man,
But diverse. Could we make her as the man,
Sweet love were slain: his dearest bond is this,—
Not like to like, but like in difference.
Yet in the long years liker must they grow;
The man be more of woman, she of man;
He gain in sweetness and moral height,
Nor lose the wrestling thews that throw the world;
She, mental breadth, nor fail in childward care,
Nor lose the childlike in the larger mind,
Till at the last she set herself to man
Like perfect music unto noble words;
And so these twain, upon the skirts of time,
Sit side by side, full-summed in all their powers,

Dispensing harvest, sowing the to-be.
Self-reverent each and reverencing each,
Distinct in individualities,
But like each other even as those who love.
Then comes the stately Eden back to men;
Then reign the world's great bridals, chaste and calm;
'Then springs the crowning race of human-kind."

*Alumni Address, given by Mrs. W. A. Harper, '99, on the evening of May 20, 1919.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE WINS

The United States Senate on June 4 adopted the Woman Suffrage Amendment by a vote of 56 to 25. The House voted 304 to 89 on May 21. Three-fourths of the Legislature will have to ratify the amendment before it is incorporated into the Federal Constitution. This movement was started in 1875 by Susan B. Anthony, and after more than a quarter of a century, seems to be on the eve of victory.

MISSIONARY

MADE READY FOR FURTHER ADVANCE

This sentence from a well known writer caught my eye recently, "Now is the time for the greatest missionary program of the greatest financial advance the women of America have ever made. Instead of being exhausted by sacrifice we have been made ready by sacrifice for further advance." And then the same writer asks this question which is as pertinent to men as to women, "Shall we American women maintain the standard of simplified living and sacrificial giving that has helped to win a war in order that a world may be led to Jesus Christ?"

Are the American people willing to do as much to make the world safe religiously as it has done during the war to make it safe politically? If we did great things, and rendered great service, and made great sacrifices to win a war for our country, ought we not now to do as great things to win a war for our Christ? One woman in North Carolina, of whom the writer has account took about the right view of the situation when she said, "When money was asked for War Savings Stamps I felt that I must help. Somehow I have managed to put $50 in Savings Stamps. Now when I get to thinking about the matter, I am determined that I can give as much to my Lord as I have invested in my country."

This woman had been a dollar a year woman in her Missionary Society. When this thought came to her she readily gave $50.00 for missions in Japan. A very wealthy woman in Philadelphia recently said, "Why should I not maintain the standard of sacrifice for the Lord's work that I set for patriotism during the days of war?" To ask the question was to answer it with far larger gifts than she had ever made before to missions.

We have released billions in money to be used in saving the world politically. Are we now willing to release as much to redeem the world through Christ our Lord? The sacrifices we have made have not exhausted our resources. They have made us richer. Are we ready now for further advance, or are we to recoil, and begin to lavish upon ourselves the rapidly accumulating wealth which our Creator is making us stewards of for the time being?

We shall have to bear in mind that it is not poverty but wealth that destroys a people, corrupts government and overthrows principalities. No nation has yet gone to ruin because of poverty. In the abundance of earthly possessions men forget God, indulge their passions, develop abnormal appetites, and create destructive lusts. The safety value of our civilization, and of our American people, is a rapidly increasing spirit of benevolence, and a growing sense of our responsibility for the salvation of others not favored as we are. This war with all its sacrificial offerings of men and money will have been fought in vain unless these sacrifices shall have made us ready for further advance.

J. O. ATKINSON.

"I HEARD THE CHILDREN SINGING"

By John Leonard Cole, in The Christian Advocate

The minister sat in his study, in solemn meditation. Perhaps it was a knotty theological question which engrossed him, but whatever it was, it escaped him completely when he heard from below, apparently from the front steps, a song of two small sopranos—Virginia, aged six, and Barbara, aged five. The song which they raised to the top of their little voices was:

Jesus loves me, this I know,

For the Bible tells me so.

Now, there was no reason why such a perfectly proper religious song, sung by little people to whom he had himself taught it, should so startle a minister, even though he were in the midst of a critical "thirdly." But still the sound of those piping, girlish voices, issuing from his front steps at the hour of noon, seemed to be something out of place. The first thought was: "Why does not some one keep those girls still? There are people in numbers passing, and what will they think of two children, sitting right on the front steps, singing 'Jesus loves me, this I know'?" They should be brought inside and stood beside the piano, if they are to sing so heartily at the hour of noon."

But, then, as the enthusiastic voices continued warbling "For the Bible tells me so," the minister began to wonder whether, after all, they were out of place or whether his ideas of propriety were? After all, why should not little girls sing on the front piazza? After all, were not Virginia and Barbara doing the very natural and proper thing? that is, they were voicing the emotion of their own small hearts, right where they happened to be. Yes; the girls had the right of it. There was nothing that they were ashamed to have passers-by hear in that sweet song of theirs and, as the minister meditated, he began to wish that more people had such a spontaneous and natural emotion of delight over Jesus' love that would set them a-singing just where they happened to be. The poor convention-bound grown-ups must have a special place, some retired spot lit with "dim religious light," before they would dare to sing out loud a song of holy joy. The minister was almost ashamed of his first impulse to quiet the little singers, and he felt like praying that he himself and others, who had grown up, and ought to prize more this wondrous love, might have the "holy boldness" to sing about it—to tell about it, wherever they were. He felt such an object lesson as this was much needed by many stolid professors of religion, who would sing in a prayer-meeting room:

I love to tell the story

Of Jesus and His love, and then, when the song had ceased and the time was come for testimony, would all with one accord sit silent, glum, and wonder why some one did not testify.

A Singing Lesson

Once again the minister was taught a practical lesson by the singing of his six-year-old. They were walking, he and she, during the height of the holiday season, along the street in front of Mr. Woolworth's five and ten-cent store. The crowd was thick. People were hurried and harried. Women with their bundles jostled one another and little holiday gladness was discernible on their faces. While they threaded their way along, the minister and his Virginia (she had gotten a step or two behind), he heard of a sudden a sweet girlish voice singing, most naturally and happily, "Brighten the corner where you are." The first impulse, again, was to say: "Be still, dear; somebody will hear you." At home, in the music room, or over at the church, in Sunday school, he would have thought nothing of it, but somehow on the street, in such a crowd of hurried people, it seemed such a very conventional thing to sing about "Brighten the corner." But the little singer was undisturbed by any doubt about propriety or convention. Whether it was the holly that decorated the nearby window, or the jolly Santa Claus that looked out from the shop window, or just the general anticipation of Christmas coming, something within her had made her feel like singing at just that time and spot, and "Brighten the corner" was the song that came to her lips. Therefore she sang it.

As far as one could judge, the effect was not unpleasant on the passer-by. Everyone who was within the sound of that song looked up and smiled and went their way with more peace and good will written on their faces than had been there before. And as the singer and song continued down the sidewalk it appeared the corner where she was was certainly being brightened.

Again the man beside the song was taught a lesson. Why should not a heart full of light and joy express itself in song, even in so "secular" a place as by a five and ten-cent store? Or why not sing on the street and in a crowd if one's heart was full at just that time and place? Why should not a believer sing at work as well as at his worship, or whistle and hum the melodies that are in his soul while he buys a beefsteak or drives an auto down the street? One invariable effect of a revival in a city is to set the people singing. It may be Alexander's "I will hold Thee fast," or it may be Rodeheaver's "Brighten the corner." But whatever be the popular song of the revival meetings the whole community is set to singing and whistling. And why not, all the year, have this mark of the glowing, happy experience of Christ? Why not sing and whistle after special meetings are over? Cannot the ordinary, everyday experience of Christ keep one in a tuneful mood? Do we indeed need a special pianist or trombonist to set our hearts aglow or make us bold enough to sing and speak of the joy of the Lord before men?

In Playtime, Too

And once again he "heard the children singing." This time it was the little three-year-old, trying to imitate a song of Rodeheaver's that she had heard the big folks sing, in which there is a strain:

He walks with me and He talks with me,
And He tells me I am His child.

But, to this little miss of three, "talking with" was not nearly so interesting as "playing with." So the version Gwendolyn surprised the minister with was:

He walks with me and He p'ays with me.

"P'ays" was the nearest that her small mouth could get to "plays." Plainly, what she sang the Lord did for her was to walk and to play with her. And under her ludicrous attempt to echo the grown-up's song there is a precious lesson. Why should not our Lord play with us as well as walk and talk with us and do the more solemn things? If He be indeed so real and natural to us we will find our Lord accompanying us not simply to church and to prayer meeting and Sunday school, but we will have the delightful sense of His going with us to our games and recreations. Our amusements and our "good times" will be all the better times because "He plays with us." It may be, too, that if we thought of Jesus as desiring to enter into our pleasures and amusements we would omit some forms of our amusements and diversions because they would not seem to be just the sort of things that He would care to indulge in.

What tremendous lessons these little ones can teach us in their songs and playing, in their laughter and their games! He was a wise Teacher, indeed, who, when He desired to convey a supreme truth to grown-ups, set a little child in their midst. "A little child" has "led us" all the time. How very natural it was, then, that, as a part of His triumphant entry to the Holy City, Jesus heard the children "crying in the temple and saying, Hosanna to the son of David." The children's song pleased Jesus so that He refused to quiet them and said to the complaining scribes and priests: "Did ye not learn that out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise?" Jesus plainly liked the singing of children, and that seer who endeavored to picture the New Jerusalem surely used a most accurate and descriptive phrase when he said:

I heard the children singing,
And ever as they sang
Methought the voice of angels
From heaven in answer rang.

Plattsburg, N. Y.

There is considerable disturbance in Congress over the political classes concerning the League of Nations.

It is expected that President Wilson will appoint E. Y. Webb of Shelby, N. C., as an additional Judge for the Western North Carolina district.

Preparations are being made by the Allied troops to invade Germany if she should fail to sign the peace treaty. We have divisions now in Europe ordered home several weeks ago that are being held for that purpose.

The Legislature of Ohio goes on record as being against prize fighting and adopts resolutions requesting Governor Cox to prevent the Willard-Dempsey match. Good for Ohio!

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

THINGS WE ALL KNOW

That millions of men have been killed, and billions of dollars wasted by cruel wars.

Force may conquer men into submission for a time, but the enmity out of which future wars may spring will still be in the heart.

The world never stood in such desperate need of something which can unify men and nations in harmonious co-operation.

Jesus taught men to pray, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." The truth of the Fatherhood of God is the only permanent and sure foundation of the brotherhood of man. Only the power of love will transform the hearts of those who now survive the terrific wars, and form a sure basis of peace.

What shallow hypocrisy to quote about the "Fatherhood of God" and the "Brotherhood of Man," and yet to go on glorifying war and trying to widen the chasms between nations and fan the fires of hatred, and array the rich against the poor, and the poor against the rich!

Once the Jew despised the Greek because he did not "observe the laws of Moses." The Greek despised the Jew as a "barbarian." When the love of God came into their hearts a few of them had sense enough to see in each other the brothers for whom Christ died.

Once the boys of this land flew at each others' throats. Now they march to the music of the union. When Jesus comes into the hearts of Japanese, Chinese, Russians and Germans, French and English, Italians and Belgians, Turks and Spaniards, they will all take up the angel chant that shook Bethlehem, "Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace and good will to men."

WHY STUDY THEOLOGY?

There are those who sneer at the suggestion of making a study of theology—especially by two classes of well meaning people. First, those who do not know what theology is, and second, by those who get what little knowledge of the Bible they have from going to church services occasionally, when some well advertised evangelist preaches, who tells his hearers that he knows nothing and cares less about theology.

"Theology is just as necessary in religion as botany is to the man who would not only see and smell flowers but also understand them." If religion is to become effective we must think out what lies back of its great experiences, and theology is just the ordered statement of these fundamental truths. Read the story of the blind man in the ninth chapter of John. The healed man exclaimed: "Well, herein is a momentous thing that ye know not whence he is. If this man were not from God, he could do nothing." When he thus reasoned "he passed from fact to its interpretation," from "experience to theology," and his healing was a different thing to him because he had grasped the meaning of the power that had cured him." A great writer has said: "Theology for Paul was the root which drew moisture and strength from the soil of truth, in order that the flower of life might be fully developed, beautiful and attractive."

VALLEY OF VISION

Isaiah speaks of the "valley of vision." The phrase is very suggestive and presents an unusual idea. It is to the mountain top and other high eminences that men think they must go in order to see. The valley hinders vision and narrows the horizon. Distances are cut off by the surrounding hills. So men climb to the heights to see.

But we sometimes forget that mountain-top vision, too, is limited—quite as much so as valley vision. While great distances may be swept by the eye, things appear in outline only, indistinct and blurred. Detail and individuality are lacking. In the valley we see things close at hand. The forest is not now a confused group of trees, but each stands out distinctly and is known by its family name. The river is no longer a mere silvery seam drawn carelessly across the land, but a living, bubbling, edifying artery, carrying life and verdure wherever its winding course lies. Beautiful flowers smile up from the most unexpected places; they never could have been seen from the mountain-top. The birds in their gayety of color are seen flitting to and fro, while they fill the air with their melody. And we become conscious of a thousand things we never could have known had we never come down from the lofty eminence. We are learning this more and more. The telescope must share honor with the microscope. There is more to be seen in the valley than in the mountain.

All of this is equally true in the spiritual realm. Mountain-top experiences, of course, are needed, too; but let us thank God for the "vision in the valley." Ah, what visions of truth have come to such as have walked there! Many a man has said that no price could buy from him what his soul saw and experienced when walking through the valley of sickness and bereavement and disappointment and trial. New glory has come into his life, and God is more real.—Evangelical Messenger.

President and Mrs. Wilson visited Belgium last week and were given a great welcome by the officials and people of that country.

Major Chas. M. Stedman, it is said, will be a candidate to succeed himself in the Fifth District as Congressman in the 1920 campaign.

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor

AN EXPLANATION

No Sunday school or Christian Endeavor matter this week. We had not received any material at the time this page had to be made up.—Editor.

ANNOUNCEMENT NO. 3

No Sunday school or Christian Endeavor Society can hope to make much progress without good music, and plenty of it. Now this is one of the features of our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention that is to be held at Shallow Well Christian church July 15, 16, 17. It is our purpose to make it this year a "BIG FEATURE." Do you believe in good music? Do you think it is essential to a live, wide, awake and progressive Sunday school, or Christian Endeavor Society? Do you believe in having an orchestra to lead your singing in your Sunday school? Yes, I believe that you believe in all this; and enjoy good music just as much as any of us, and so I am going to ask that you give this matter just a few minutes of your time now.

If you have in your school or Society an orchestra, or any part of one, I want you to see that we have same in full force at the Convention. We can use violins, cornets, clarinets, trombones, or any instrument that goes to make up a first class orchestra. If you have such in your possession, and will join our State orchestra, please let me know at once, and bring it with you to the Convention.

I am counting on you. Write me, or Brother George M. McCullers, McCullers, N. C., at once and let us know that you are with us. If you cannot play, or sing, come on to the Convention anyway.

C. H. STEPHENSON, Pres.

ATTEND THE CHAUTAUQUA

The time for holding the next session of the Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods is near at hand. The session this year will begin on Tuesday, July 29, continuing for one full week. The program for the coming session is in the hands of the President, Dr. Warren H. Denison, and will soon be ready for publication. The faculty this year consists of some of the strongest men and women of our own denomination with several from the outside. While it is impossible at this writing to forecast the attendance, we can say that if our people accept conditions this year as against those of last, we should have a much larger attendance. Last year the railroads made no concession in the way of reduced rates. This year summer rates to Norfolk will be on from almost every point of the Mississippi river. Those who have never attended before should by all means be present this year. The rates at the hotels and cottages at Virginia Beach will be about the same as heretofore. Considering the high cost of everything the rates last year were lower than we expected. We hope to be able to make special arrangements for those who desire still cheaper accommodations.

We shall urge this year more than ever a large attendance of our people in Eastern Virginia. Those desiring special information should write to,

S. M. SMITH, General Secretary.

FULLER-BROWN

Mr. Aaron Y. Fuller and Miss Josephine Brown were married at the home of Mr. J. D. Huffines, May 11, 1919, at 3:00 o'clock P. M. The occasion was a very quiet one, only one sister of the bride being present.

These young people are very popular in their community. They will make their home in Greensboro. Their friends wish for them long, happy and prosperous lives. The writer officiated

MARTIN-HUFFMAN

Married, June 18, 1919, at the home of the bride near Burlington, N. C., Mr. F. H. Martin and Miss Lula B. Huffman. The writer officiated.

It was a beautiful home wedding, witnessed by friends who vied with each other in good wishes for the happy couple.

The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. O. Huffman, and is very popular. Mr. Martin is a Southern Railway conductor and lives in Charlotte, N. C.

After an excellent wedding supper the bridal party motored to Burlington, N. C., where the bride and groom took the north bound train for Washington, D. C., and other northern cities.

May the blessing of God attend their wedded pathway.

GERMANY ACCEPTS

Germany has accepted the peace terms and will sign tomorrow (Tuesday), or a day or so thereafter. It is likely that she will insist that the terms will be again modified when her representatives assemble to sign, but such will not be granted, so it is stated.

OBITUARIES

A MEMORIAL—MRS. ELISHA HOWELL

Our Heavenly Father has in His infinite wisdom taken from our circle and from all pain and suffering our dear friend and sister, Mrs. Elisha Howell. She has been transplanted to that beautiful home beyond where joy, peace and happiness reigneth forever. Amid all her suffering and sickness she was cheerful and hopeful and her faith in God was unshaken. Her religious life was one of deep conviction, great faith and fervent zeal. Her interest in the Church was great and responsive to its needs and she attended every service whenever she was able.

Therefore, the Ladies' Aid Society of Holland Christian church, of which she was a charter member and one of its most faithful workers, would express its love and esteem in the following resolutions:

First, That such a life from our midst leaves a vacancy and a shadow that will be deeply realized by all the members of the society and will prove a great loss to her immediate relatives and friends.

Second, That we extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved family and commend to them the Word of God and the presence of the Holy Spirit for comfort and consolation.

Third, That a copy of these resolutions be entered upon our minutes, a copy be sent to the family and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

By order of the Ladies' Aid Society.

MRS. W. M. JAY,
MRS. JOB HOLLAND,
MRS. P. A. HOWELL,
Committee.

WILKINS

Annie Laura, infant twin daughter of Brother and Sister W. P. Wilkins of Liberty Christian church, died May 21, 1919, aged one year, seven months and twenty-eight days. The burial was at Liberty cemetery Sunday afternoon, May 25. The parents are sad to lose one of their bright little daughters but they sorrow with the hope of the promises of God's word concerning the resurrection of the body and the immortality of the soul.

C. E. NEWMAN.

CHANDLER

Thomas Edwin Chandler, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. T. W. Chandler of Virgilina, Va., was born November 1, 1918 and died June 1, 1919, aged seven months. The absence of the bright, interesting little boy from the home brings deep sorrow. Yet there is a comfort for Christian parents in the words of the Savior, "That in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in Heaven."

The funeral was conducted from the home by the writer on the afternoon of June 2 and the burial in Union cemetery.

C. E. NEWMAN.

William M. Stephens was born February 11, 1865, and died May 30, 1919, a few weeks after submitting to an operation in the hospital. The death came in his home near Isle of Wight Courthouse. He was for many years a faithful member of the Isle of Wight Christian church, which church he served as deacon for quite a while. He was a quiet and devoted servant of the Lord, and a man ready and willing to do his part for the uplift and betterment of the church and community. He will be greatly missed by his church.

He leaves to mourn their loss a devoted wife, ten children, four grandchildren, one brother and two sisters, and a host of relatives and friends. The funeral was conducted at Isle of Wight Christian church by the writer. Interment was made in the family cemetery at his home. The floral tributes were many and beautiful.

PERRY

Carlton C. Perry, the son of Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Perry of Myrtle Avenue, North Danville, was drowned while swimming in an old rock quarry pond about two miles north of town on Monday afternoon, June 8. It was a tragic death and it cast a deep gloom over the entire community where young Perry was known and loved by all. He was but a little over fifteen years of age, having passed his fifteenth birthday on May 19, 1919.

He was a young man of splendid character, obedient and devoted to his parents, a genial companion, and an ambitious and aspiring young fellow. He commanded the respect and admiration of all who knew him.

Funeral services were held at his home on Wednesday afternoon. The writer had charge of the service, assisted by Rev. F. C. Lester. Interment was made at Lecount cemetery.

May God bless and comfort the bereaved parents and loved ones.

H. S. HARDCASTLE.

JOHNSON

Frank Eldridge Johnson, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Johnson, was born January 7, 1919, and departed this life June 12, 1919, at 6:30 A. M. He is survived by a devoted father and mother, one sister, two grandfathers, one grandmother, one great grandfather, and three great grandmothers, several uncles and aunts, and other relatives and friends. The remains were laid to rest in the Mt. Carmel cemetery after a short service in the church, conducted by the writer.

E. T. COTTEN.

WALL

George C. Wall, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. Paul Wall, Virgilina, Va., was born March 6, 1884 and died June 9, 1919 at his home near Averett, Va., aged thirty-five years, three months and three days. He was twice married. After the death of his first wife, who was Miss Millie Ford, he married Miss Hallie Tuck, who survives him, together with three children. Two years ago he united with Hebron church where he remained a consistent member till death. Brother Wall was a painter by trade and in recent years did some farming. He was of a pleasant disposition, kind and generous to those about him. A year ago his health gave away. He spent a while at Catawba Springs sanatorium but continued to decline until tuberculosis brought an end to his earthly career. The funeral and burial was at Hebron church in the presence of a crowd of relatives and friends on the afternoon of June 10.

The Writer's Creed

I believe in myself as a writer—believe that I have individual thoughts to express and ideas to perpetuate.

I will never become a pilferer of the work of others—for what one person has conceived belongs to him and what I have conceived belongs to me.

I will write nothing untrue to my better self—nothing without the high purpose of giving knowledge or inspiration.

I will not write for money alone—knowing that when the chords of human sympathy and need are touched, there will be a just reward. —P. T. HINES.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

RALEIGH CHURCH GOES FORWARD

The church at Raleigh, N. C. seems to be taking on new life under the leadership of Pastor Eastes. Under recent date Brother Eastes writes: "The outlook for our work is very gratifying at present. Raleigh church was to have raised $3,000 for the Elon Standardization Fund and to our people the amount seemed large but the church gave $4,750. Immediately following this campaign the church put on a drive to liquidate a debt of $500 which had been borrowed to keep things running in the past, while the remainder of a thousand dollars was to pay for interior for Sunday school equipment, such as chairs, tables, etc. The canvass resulted in securing $2,000 instead of $1,000. This amount is to be paid in by the first of August. It is half in cash now. In addition to these things a piano has been purchased at a cost of $350, which makes a total of $2,350 for special local work."

In addition to these things above mentioned by Brother Eastes the church has organized from the ground floor and added to its organization a Woman's Missionary Society. Twenty-three adult members and two children have been added to the church in recent months. Several conversions have been during the regular services. The average attendance at mid-week prayer meeting during the last four months has been sixty and sometimes going over the one hundred mark.

PRESIDENT WILSON ADDRESSES HIS COUNTRYMEN

Immediately upon the signing of the peace treaty last week President Wilson delivered a very timely and significant message to his fellow countrymen. To us it seems worthy of consideration upon the part of every citizen and we are glad to reproduce it for the benefit of some subscribers who have not had an opportunity to see it. It is as follows:

"My fellow countrymen:

"The treaty of peace has been signed. If it is ratified and acted upon in full and sincere execution of its terms it will furnish the charter for a new order of affairs in the world. It is a severe treaty in the duties and penalties it imposes upon Germany, but it is severe only because great wrongs done by Germany are to be righted and repaired; it imposes nothing that Germany cannot do; and she can regain her rightful standing in the world by the prompt and honorable fulfillment of its terms.

"And it is much more than a treaty of peace with Germany. It liberates great peoples who have never before been able to find the way to liberty. It ends, once for all, an old and intolerable order under which small groups of selfish men could use the peoples of great empires to serve their ambition for power and dominion. It associates the free governments of the world in a permanent league in which they are pledged to use their united power to maintain peace by maintaining right and justice. It makes international law a reality supported by imperative sanctions. It does away with the right of conquest and rejects the policy of annexation and substitutes a new order under which backward nations—populations which have not yet come to political consciousness and peoples who are ready for independence but not yet quite prepared to dispense with protection and guidance—shall no more be subjected to the domination and exploitation of a stronger nation, but shall be put under the friendly direction and afforded the helpful assistance of governments which undertake to be responsible to the opinion of mankind in the execution of their task by accepting the direction of the league of nations. It recognizes the inalienable rights of nationality; the rights of minorities and the sanctity of religious belief and practice. It lays the basis for conventions which shall free the commercial intercourse of the world from unjust and vexatious restrictions and for every sort of international co-operation that will serve to cleanse the life of the world and facilitate its common action in beneficent service of every kind. It furnishes guarantees such as were never given or even contemplated for the fair treatment of all who labor at the daily tasks of the world.

"It is for this reason that I have spoken of it as a great charter for a new order of affairs. There is ground here for deep satisfaction universal reassurance and confident hope.

(Signed) "WOODROW WILSON."

A PLEA FOR THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

In these days of unrest and days when transportation and travel are in such an efficient way, we cannot too strongly urge the people to guard well against a non-attendance of Sunday school. One Judge in the United States has sentenced 2,500 boys in five years and in keeping a record of them he finds that not on of that number were members of the Sunday school.

This alone is a sufficient argument that we should lay special emphasis upon the Sabbath schools. Boys and girls are going to go somewhere and unless we give them a live and wide-awake Sunday school to attend, they will congregate together for other purposes. But the argument comes that boys will go elsewhere after Sunday school. This they will do and let them do it. It is the inculcation of the principles taught in the Sunday school that will guard them against entering into evil things upon the wholly and sacred day.

We were reminded of the little boy who was caught fishing on the Sabbath and after being scolded for it, replied that he was not fishing but just teaching the worms how to swim. That often is the case but it is breaking the law of the Sabbath and we know nothing that will help our boys to guard against such practices as the principles taught them in the Sunday school.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION OF THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina Conference is to convene at Shallow Well church, near Jonesboro, N. C., next week. On page 14 and 15 of this issue will be found announcements concerning this Convention that are far better than we can write, but we take the space and pleasure of adding our hopes that the Convention will be well attended and that each school in the bounds of the Convention will strive to make a good report. For several years there has been considerable lack of interest and enthusiasm upon the part of the Sunday schools in North Carolina. It seems to us that the day has come when definite and progressive action is needed and should be taken. The work now seems to be thoroughly organized and under the direction of capable directors. The work has no occasion to lack in interest or lag in activity.

Should there be any school or Christian Endeavor Society that has not planned to send a delegate and a report to the Convention, let that school or Society take steps today to be represented.

SCIENTIFIC EXPERIMENT

Dr. J. F. McCulloch, Editor of the Methodist Protestant Herald, Greensboro, N. C., visited his son in Pittsburgh, Pa., a few days ago, and so interesting is a part of his write-up of the trip we reproduce it, feeling that it will be a bit of information:

While the editor was in Pittsburgh he visited the plant (one of them) of the Westinghouse Electric Company. First he visited the research laboratory. This stands on an eminence reached by a stairway of 110 steps. The building, several stories high, is divided up into rooms, each of which is equipped with apparatus for chemical or physical experiment, and has its own force of men engaged in the study of some practical problems arising in the processes of manufacture. The editor's older son is one of the workers there. His work just now is to discover why metals rust and how to prevent it. He had been given the problem of discovering why brass castings contain "air holes." He had solved that, proving that the holes are caused by hydrogen gas generated in the furnace. The problem of preventing this generation of hydrogen was then given to another set of men. This illustrates the plan of operation. A general problem is divided into parts and assigned to different groups of men. Every few weeks they meet in conference and discuss their problems and report progress made and help each other. We then visited the great shops where things are made. These shops cover many acres. The buildings are said to extend for a mile in one direction. The employes number many hundreds, perhaps a few thousands,—men, women, and girls. Many electrical devices are made, motors being the principal ones, but believe. One requires a pass to get in, and note is made of what time he enters and what time he leaves. During the war visitors were not admitted, and the engine rooms where power is generated were guarded by men with guns to keep any German or pro-German from wrecking the power plant and stopping the works.

While in the research laboratory we were shown some liquid air. It looked like water, but on being poured into the room, it immediately evaporated in a dense vapor and disappeared. A stream was poured out through a rubber tube. The end of the tube became hard and brittle like glass. On being struck with a hammer, it broke into fragments. We picked one of them up cautiously. It felt like a piece of ice. A drop of liquid air striking the hand would probably cause a blister as does hot water. We were also shown the texture of different metals through a microscope.

These are interesting places to visit and to work in, for those that have the requisite tastes. The research is important work that a few men must do and that all mankind profit by.

This office is just in receipt of a letter from Chaplain B. F. Black telling us that he hopes to arrive in this country within the next two or three weeks. Brother Black will be open for work and will also be glad to visit churches or speak concerning his work and experiences in Europe. Address him at Elon College, N. C., and your letter will have proper attention by his splendid co-pastor and assistant, Mrs. B. F. Black.

Just as we go to press we have before us the initial copy of The Herald of Gospel Liberty under the editorship of Dr. A. M. Kerr. It glows with new life, presents a changed appearance and sounds a note of progressiveness. Success to Brother Kerr's labors and continued prosperity to The Herald, the oldest religious newspaper in the world.

Dr. Anna Howard Shaw honorary president of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, died at her home at Moylan, Pa., on July 2. Dr. Shaw came to this country from England, an unknown pioneer girl of four years. She was known the world over and her name will go into history as one of the country's great leaders.

We see the statement that Harvard University has never graduated a student with honor that was addicted to the tobacco habit.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

VALLEY LETTER

On account of the epidemic of influenza during the fall and winter I am about two months behind schedule time with my revival meetings. Since beginning meetings in the early spring I have held at Wood's Chapel, Palmyra, Bethlehem, Concord and Mayland. At Woods' Chapel we had ten conversions and ten additions to the church. At Palmyra we had eleven conversions and eleven additions to the church, and another one has been received since.

The meeting at Bethlehem did not bring forth any visible results, but we hope the result of the seed sowing will be seen later.

At Concord six publicly confessed faith in Christ and united with the church. The work at Concord looks more encouraging than at any time since I have been pastor there.

At Mayland we were gladdened with fifteen public confessions and sixteen additions to the church. This church enjoys a steady growth from year to year, and the outlook is promising, although for several years after the establishment of the church there it looked very discouraging. Dr. W. C. Wicker, at that time representing the Elon College Standardization Fund in the Valley, preached for me several nights at Mayland. Aside from this I have had no ministerial help in my meetings.

I have not held my meetings at Joppa and Dry Run yet, and as it is such a busy time with the farmers now and will likely be for some time, I do not know whether I shall be able to wedge these meetings in before Conference or not.

We held our annual memorial service at Timber Ridge third Sunday in June. As is always the case, a large congregation gathered for the occasion. Dr. W. C. Wicker did the preaching which was very much enjoyed by all.

Our Sunday School Convention at Newport was an excellent one, and we trust will do much to inspire interest and activity in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work throughout the Conference. Dr. N. G. Newman, of Elon College, added very much to the Convention by his addresses on Religious Education, and in other ways as opportunity afforded.

The next station of importance to us is New Hope where the Conference will be held, August 14-16. Those coming by rail will be met at Harrisonburg, which is only about three and a half miles from the church. Come and let us have the best Conference we have ever had yet.

A. W. ANDES.

Harrisonburg, Va., July 2, 1919.

UNION, N. C.

The Sunday school is arranging for Children's Day at an early date.

On the second Sunday in July Brother C. D. Johnston, Superintendent of our Orphanage with a class of children will be with us. Brother Johnston will present the needs and the claims of the Orphanage and the children will sing.

Our revival services are to begin on the fourth Sunday in July. Rev. George D. Eastes is to be with us. We are planning for a good meeting.

The young men of the church and congregation are called to meet at the church on the second Sunday in July at 10:30 A. M. for the purpose of organizing a young men's Bible class. The plan is to organize an up-to-date, progressive young men's class; elect officers, appoint committees, and get ready to do great things for Christ, the church, and the community. Let every young man who can possibly do so be present.

SEASIDE CHAUTAUQUA

Virginia Beach, near Norfolk, Virginia on the Atlantic
 July 29-August 5

Dr. L. E. Smith, of Norfolk, will preach the series of Chautauqua sermons this year. Dr. Smith is a great preacher and it will be a treat to hear him on great themes of "Man and His Relationships."

Dr. J. F. Burnett, Dayton, Ohio, will preach the Sunday night sermon.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge will speak Sunday at 4:30 on "Lessons Learned in the Camps."

Dr. E. K. McCord, missionary to Japan for seven-teen years, will conduct a daily mission class on the great themes "The Missionary Task," "The Missionary Church," "The Missionary Process," "Heathenism's Response," "Our Own Missions."

The Forward Movement messages will be given daily by Drs. R. C. Helfenstein, F. H. Peters, W. H. Denison, and Mr. Hermon Eldredge.

The Christian Endeavor study hour will be conducted by Revs. J. V. Knight and R. F. Brown.

Some of the themes to be treated by that Sunday school specialist, Rev. H. G. Rowe just home from "Y" work in France, will be: "Sunday School Publicity," "Discovering and Training Sunday School Leaders," "The Workers Meeting," "The School in Session," "Building an Adult Class from 5 to 100."

Rev. W. P. Minton, Defiance, Ohio, will conduct the music for the Chautauqua sessions and Mrs. E. T. Cotten will preside at the piano.

The Chautauqua lectures will be given by W. C. Pearce of Chicago; Dr. Peter Ainslie, Baltimore; Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, Urbana, Illinois; Rev. G. H. Ekins, Norfolk.

SUFFOLK LETTER

The fourth day of July was Suffolk's biggest, brightest, and best day in her history; and she has had many great days. It was the Home Coming Day, the welcome to the boys from Suffolk and Nansemond county. Senator J. E. West was county chairman, and Congressman E. E. Holland was the chief speaker. J. M. Darden had charge of the great dinner. Many faithful and efficient helpers aided Chairman West and Chairman Darden in their plans and the execution of them to a wonderful success. To tell the whole story and give all the names in this great day and its work would fill a paper; only bare mention can be made of the chief parts in this spontaneous welcome to the boys who have returned from the world-war, and who have done their part in the fight for human liberty.

The business of the city was closed for the day. The entire population abandoned itself to the spirit of a new celebration; not simply the celebration of Independence Day for our nation, but the celebration of a welcome that contains the germ of international Independence. That will be a great day when the whole world celebrates some fixed day as the Independence Day of the world. The stars and stripes would make a good flag for such independence—a star for every free nation under the sun; that will be a greater day when the Banner, with one star, waves over a redeemed race, “when every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father.”

The day was a typical “fourth of July”—clear, hot, and long. The parade started from the City Hall at 12:30, and consisted of returned soldiers and sailors, Confederate Veterans, Home Guards, Firemen, Marshals, floats, automobiles with Red Cross ladies, city officials, clergymen, bands, autos, fire engines, and the streets lined on both sides with people of the city and from the good county of Nansemond. About three hundred men were in the procession on foot, and more than two hundred of them were young men who had returned from service in this war to make the world a safe place in which to live.

At the close of the parade at the starting point in front of the City Hall, Chairman J. E. West introduced Mayor Stallings who made a brief speech, after which Senator West introduced Congressman E. E. Holland who made a splendid address, full of good words for the boys, praise for their heroic service, and sound advice as to the duties of citizenship. His final exhortation was beautiful, wise, and inspiring, that loyalty to government, fidelity to church, and the maintenance of social order require the same kind of courage that they had displayed on the field of battle.

The soldiers, sailors, veterans, and invited guests repaired to the Armory where three hundred Spartans sat down to a sumptuous dinner served by an army of young ladies. Movies and base ball free to the boys for the day, and the management throughout is worthy of praise for the success of Suffolk's biggest, brightest and best day.

W. W. STALEY.

RECONSTRUCTION POLICY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

The Executive Board of The American Christian Convention on December 19, 1918, requested the Commission on “Workers for the Field” to consider and report on a Reconstruction Policy for the Christian denomination for these days after the war, these wonderful days, pregnant with possibility and responsibility, as we face a new world order, an order that calls for workers as at no time in our history, and with a vision of the bigness of the Kingdom's program.

In response to the above request and instruction, the Commission on Workers for the Field begs leave to offer the following supplemental report:

I. That this Convention, in quadrennial session, hereby gives its hearty and strongest endorsement to The Forward Movement of the Christian Church, as our denomination's answer to Christ's call and challenge for these wonderful days, and pledge ourselves sacerally as officials, ministers, delegates, both in our representative and individual capacity, to aggressively carry out this five-point program, recognizing that these five points are fundamentals in Christian and church activity. We express the conviction that this Movement is divine in inspiration and purpose. We believe that our brethren were led of God to present such a program for our Church. We believe that it will help us to fill our place and do our part in these days of reconstruction. We offer our allegiance to The Forward Movement of the Christian Church and pledge our co-operation to those who are called to direct its activities.

II. We are of the opinion that Christian Unity must have a large place in these days of reconstruction. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ, the Interchurch World Movement, the Foreign Missions Conference, and many other Christian bodies, the great interdenominational religious papers like The Christian Herald, the secular press, are all placing a new emphasis on Christian Unity. We believe that there is no good reason why the Christian Church, in convention assembled, pioneers in the movement for Christian union, should not, in a very definite and positive manner, issue a challenge to the Christian forces of America to come together on a common platform, and send it forth in such a way that it will challenge the attention of the great bodies of the Church, and that we back up such a pronouncement with all the energies of our Church, that we commit ourselves definitely to all movement looking to the closer co-operation of Christian forces, and that we and our churches show the spirit of Christian unity in our own denominational enterprises. Therefore, we recommend that our Commission on Christian Unity be asked to offer such a manifesto, and that it be carried forth until Christ's prayer is answered. (The Commission on Christian Unity offered such a report and it was adopted).

III. After a careful survey of the field it is our judgment that we need at least fifty additional educated, trained workers, each year, or two hundred for the next quadrennium. As all who begin preparation do not complete their preparation, and as the number estimated is fifty thoroughly trained workers, it will therefore be necessary to have a much larger number begin such preparation in order to allow natural shrinkage. These would be pastors to take our present vacant churches, pastors to take the churches that need now to be brought to full time service, new home missionaries, new foreign missionaries, field secretaries, denominational specialists in education, rural life, social service, pastor's assistants and secretaries, and to supply the wastage that comes by death and old age. This is a conservative number and means that we actually need that number of well equipped, prepared Christian workers. We hereby call upon our Christian Divinity School, our colleges, our Educational Board, our conferences, and our homes to furnish annually this number of life recruits for Christian service, the same to be educated and thoroughly trained.

IV. We would urge individual and group study of the outstanding and immediate problems of reconstruction. We would suggest as a guide some such work as the “Study Outline in the Problems of the Reconstruction Period,” prepared by experts and published by the Association Press and which may be secured from The Christian Publishing Association. One or more study groups of this kind in each of our churches would be a most effective means in aiding that church to solve its local problems of reconstruction. We further urge that adequate provision be made in our conference, institute, convention, Seaside Chautauqua, Craigville, Winona Lake programs, for the consideration of specific phases of those problems of reconstruction, such as the problem of the Community Church; the Sunday Evening Service; the Sunday Morning Merger Service of Church and Sunday-school; the Mid-week Prayer-meeting; the Returning Soldiers, Sailors, and Aviators; the Broken Family; Mobilizing the Churches for Community Service; Adequate Church Programs; and others of vital importance.

V. We suggest to the editors of our denominational papers to arrange a plan whereby they may take up constructively the great vital themes of the Church, perhaps stressing great themes of the Church's need for a month each. If it were planned well in advance, with editorials on the theme, and by the strongest articles by our own men who are especially fitted to write on the theme to be considered, and these special themes fitted to most appropriate seasons of the year as to church work, and in harmony with the announced denominational plans, great good would result. The Herald of Gospel Liberty and THE CHRISTIAN SUN took up most effectively the theme of Life Recruits, for the third week in February, at the suggestion of the Board of Education. Were such issues put out on such a theme for a longer period of time, say a month, it would make a deep impression on our people. Some of the themes might be: Evangelism, Life Recruits, Christian Stewardship, Christian Unity, Church Attendance, Religious Education, Missionary Responsibility, Rural Church, Community Service, Interdenominational Movements, Young People's Work, Mid-week Prayer-meeting. There are many others.

VI. It is the judgment of your Commission that in these days of reconstruction we must enter in a larger way, through delegates, representatives, and in our church literature, the many great co-operative Christian movements, The Federal Council of Churches, the laymen's Missionary Movement, the Interchurch World Movement, the Missionary Education Movement, International Sunday School Association, Christian Endeavor Conventions, and similar agencies of the Kingdom should have our best and fullest representation, and the largest possible publicity of their messages and conclusions.

VII. The return of our enlisted men is now revealing to our churches their opportunity and responsibility. The war has emphasized the need that they and others had before the war, viz., that the Church should reach after them in the strongest possible way to win them to Christ and enlist them in the work of the Church for the Kingdom. The Church should give to them tasks that are worth while, that they may put into Christian activity the splendid principles of sacrifice, service, unity, which they have learned and used. Parents, Sunday school teachers, pastors, should place before the men returning to our churches the world call for Christian service. The view-point of life of our enlisted men has enlarged, their knowledge of the responsibilities of human relationships has increased, service to their fellowmen has become a habit; courage, loyalty, friendliness, sympathy, have become realities. The Church has the solemn duty of capitalizing in the most practical way this new, God-given power and turn it into channels which will advance the Kingdom of God. The Church must spare no effort to bring the returning soldier into relationships—business, social, and religious—which will be most helpful to him.

VIII. Again we express the conviction that one of the greatest needs of our people is that we get a church vision, and plan by systematic effort to enlist the people of the community with a church program—some organized system of church activity. It is believed that our people have the means and qualifications, let them but once get the vision of what ought to be done and how to do it. To this duty we challenge our church officials and our pastors. From our Forward Movement, our Seaside Chautauqua, our Craigville, and other summer conferences we expect large visions to be given, new inspiration imparted; thus we urge our people, the rank and file of our churches, a part of their reconstruction program, to avail themselves of these means of religious education. We suggest also that each church embody the outline of the Forward Movement program in a church program that will enlist all the members in active Christian work.

IX. We regard it important that we place greater emphasis on the social side of the gospel, on a present life religion essential to right living and serving, salvation from sin here and now, and for service to our fellowmen, not merely a form of words, but a living, loving power in and behind the words.

Respectfully submitted,

MONEY, THE LEAST OF HIS EXPENSES

Harry T. Hartwell of Mobile, Ala., was defeated in his race for Congressman in the First District. According to his statement filed with the Secretary of State, his expenditure of money was the least of all as his statement shows:

"I lost six months and ten days canvassing, lost 1,000 hours' sleep worrying over the results of the election, lost 20 pounds of flesh, kissed 500 babies, kindled 100 kitchen fires, put up 10 stoves, cut 11 cords of wood, carried 50 buckets of water, pulled 400 bundles of fodder, walked 1,100 miles, shook hands 20,000 times, and talked enough to fill one month's issue of the New York World, baptized four different times, made love to nine grass widows, got dog bit nine times, then got defeated."

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

A PLEA FOR THE CHRISTIAN SUN

We have just four methods of reaching our people and keeping them in touch with the Orphanage work.

First: By making personal visits to churches and Sunday schools and telling them about the work here.

Second: By writing personal letters to the churches and Sunday schools and also to individuals.

Third: By friends of the Orphanage making personal visits to the Institution and seeing at first hand the building and the children.

Fourth: Letters in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is really the strongest medium by which we can keep all our people in constant touch with the work. I am truly sorry that all families in our Church do not take our Church paper. Every family ought to have THE SUN in the home and read it. Then our people would keep posted as to the different institutions of the Church and would be more interested in the success of the Church.

People, generally, are not so much interested in things they know nothing about. If we could get each family in our Church to take THE CHRISTIAN SUN and read it, I feel sure that all departments of our Church would grow as never before.

Our people ought to take THE CHRISTIAN SUN, not because THE SUN needs subscribers so much, but because our people are so much in need of THE SUN to be able to keep up with the workings of the Church and know what each department is doing.

THE SUN has been more ably edited and we should show our appreciation for the efforts our Editor is making to give us a Church paper, as good as the best, by getting it in each home.

I am informed that we lack eight hundred subscribers having it on a paying basis. If we could place it in eight hundred homes not now taking THE CHRISTIAN SUN it would take care of itself and the Editor would get salary enough to make a living.

We have 226 churches in the Southern Christian Convention with a membership of 25,750. To raise the eight hundred subscriptions needed to place THE SUN on a paying basis it will be about four subscriptions to each church. How easy it ought to be raise four subscriptions in each church! If the pastors and superintendents of the Sunday schools, and also individuals who are interested in this, would make an urgent campaign for the month of July I know it could be done. I will see that four goes from my church. Let us raise the eight hundred. Then you will see our mission fund grow, our college grow, and the contributions to the Christian Orphanage will double.

LETTERS FROM THE COUSINS

Dear Uncle Charley:—I am sending a dime for the orphans. I am proud of my little picture you sent me. I would like to hear the little girl sing.—Herman Thomas.

I am glad you like the little girl's picture. I hope to have the opportunity of bringing her to Bethlehem to sing some Sunday.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley:—I am sending the orphans a dime for June. I did not have time to write last week. I was so busy attending to my little brother. He is three months old.—Mae Thomas.

You have a splendid job attending to your brother. You must be good to him and he will soon grow up and be a big brother to you.—"Uncle Charley."

DOCTOR SUNSHINE

"Course I'm going to be a doctor when I grow up," declared Tom. "I guess my Uncle Robert's a doctor, and I'm going to be just every bit like him when I grow up."

"Then if you're going to be a doctor," broke in his Uncle Roberts, "you're just the little boy I'm looking for."

He took an orange from his overcoat pocket. "Put that in your case," he said, "and then put on your hat and go down the street till you come to a small gray house with green shutters. A little boy lives there who has a broken leg. Give him the orange and see if you can make him laugh."

Tom trudged off in great delight. It was a long time before he came back; but when he did he was so happy that his eyes shone.

"Well, Dr. Sunshine, how do you like it?" asked his uncle.

"O, I'm going every day till he is well," Tom cried. "I shall put Tom under the seat of my automobile," laughed the doctor, "and when my patients are cross I will bring Dr. Sunshine in."—Exchange.

Churches are now making their plans for another year. If you keep your same pastor, show your appreciation by raising his salary, and if you change pastors, be sure to give the new pastor more money.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN UNBROKEN SUCCESSION

On the fifth Sunday in June I was at Damascus church, Sunbury, N. C., and that church too went safely over the top. It was the 80th church I had the pleasure to visit in person in the drive and personally it was a genuine satisfaction for this final church like the 79 preceding to go over the top. Rev. W. B. Fuller is the pastor of the Damascus people and is meeting with excellent success. He has a noble band to serve and will serve them effectually. He took the field like a hero and helped valiantly to put the thing over.

As I think over the days from February 16 to June 30, I am overcome with gratitude to God for His unmerited blessings. I have worked in four states, interviewed more than a thousand individuals, been entertained in more than 100 homes, and everywhere the courtesies that have been thrust upon have filled me with the sense of my unworthiness. I have accepted them as the representative of a great people in a great cause. My heart wells up in gratitude to every one.

The Elon drive has succeeded far beyond our expectations. It has done so because of wise and statesmanlike direction and a wonderful display of team-work on the part of the people. The Drive Committee, consisting of Col. J. E. West, Hon. K. B. Johnson, and Dr. R. M. Morrow, with Dr. W. W. Staley, ex-officio, as president of the Southern Christian Convention, directed the work in a spirit of sympathy and a determination that knew no defeat. I take off my hat to them. They will long be remembered in Elon annals for their brilliant guidance in this forward-moving event.

The field men did splendid work and were ready to do all in their power, consistent with other obligations in their time, to put the drive across. For varying portions of time outside their own churches the field men associated with me were: Rev. T. E. White, Rev. W. C. Wicker, Rev. L. I. Cox, Rev. J. V. Knight, Rev. A. T. Banks, Rev. R. F. Brown, Rev. C. B. Riddle, Rev. W. W. Staley, Rev. G. O. Lankford, Rev. E. M. Carter, Rev. H. S. Hardecastle, Rev. N. G. Newman, Mr. L. W. Vaughan, and Prof. C. C. Johnson. These brethren were busy pastors, editors, and college professors and officers, but each of them gave such time as he could and did it in beautiful spirit. My heart-felt thanks are due them.

I must particularly thank Rev. C. B. Riddle, our Editor. He not only helped in the field work, but he supplied the publicity matter for the back page of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and this matter was largely read by our people, thus making the presentation to individuals easy. The generous space accorded the drive in the reading columns of the paper is deeply appreciated. The college could not have asked for more than was willingly accorded in this instance. I am grateful.

Our pastors too without exception have received me open-heartedly. They opened up their pulpits and their homes. They arranged for my transit in their fields. They personally accompanied me and when I would get weak they would come with renewed vigor to cheer. God bless our pastors and multiply their kind!

And the laymen and lay-women of our churches—they are the light of the world, they are the salt of this earth. They have responded to the appeals we made in the spirit of a liberality as genuine as the principles of our beloved Church are generous. More than a thousand of them gave subscriptions from $100 to $5,000, and gave with smiling countenances. God loveth the cheerful giver. He has many in our Church that He loves. God has great things in store for the Christian Church. He must greatly bless her in this wave of splendid generosity.

But my chief thanks are to my Heavenly Father. He gave the health and strength for the tremendous strain of such a drive and He blessed the simple appeal for a great cause with willing responses from consecrated hearts. Through four states I traveled thousands of miles on automobile, with only one puncture. He knew we did not have time for punctures and prevented. There are numerous instances in the drive when I was conscious in a peculiar sense of His intervention and provision, but these things are too sacred for a printed page. He has been good to us. Blessed be His name!

We had hoped this week to give a verified statement, but some of the field-men have been delayed in getting their reports to the office. We shall certainly hope to have the statement final by the next issue. We are far beyond the $300,000 mark, and at this every heart will rejoice. It means not only enlarged resources, but multiplied friendships and amplified opportunity for service on Elon's part. May Elon be faithful and true to these friends and to this opportunity for service.

Funds This Week

The only full graduate of Elon to be killed in the world war was Herbert Harper Barber, '18. In his memory his brothers have founded a fund of $1,000. How sweet and appropriate! God bless these brothers.

Deacon M. J. W. White, Norfolk, Va., lost by death a splendid son in the person of Charles Nyack White, a Y. M. C. A. secretary. He perpetuates his beautiful life in a fund of $1,000. How fine a deed!

A few years ago a splendid son of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Johnson, Gilmerton, Va., was prepared to enter Elon, but by accidental drowning his precious young life went out. His parents have founded a fund in his memory.

Mr. Boyd Richards, Winchester, Va., the first man of the Virginia Valley Central Conference to give $1,000 to any church enterprise, founds a fund. May he be the first of a long line of spiritual successors!

There may be other funds to report next week.

Let every heart give thanks to God for His wonderful blessings to us in this campaign.

W. A. HARPER.

WHY EDUCATE

It will soon be time to pack valise and trunk and start off to school. "Shall I send my son or daughter, and if so, where?" is being asked by many anxious parents. The same question "shall I go to college, and if so, where?" is being asked by many anxious young men and women who have to map out their own way and pay their own bills.

Shall I go to college? The business world is calling for just such young people who have seen a vision of larger things and are desirous of entering some college or university.

The immediate remuneration seems enticing with a bright future; and the expense of an education is no small item. And besides the thought of getting out of the usual college or university with a degree and nothing to do and a big debt is not very prepossessing to those who have to foot their own bills. And yet it is those of this class who go usually make good.

But shall I go to college? In what way will it help me? Is it worth while? These are not idle questions. They need to be pondered well and answered wisely. The answer depends somewhat upon your idea of an education, your purpose, and the use you make of an education. It is will to go to college; it will help you; it is worth while, if you will make it so. Decide what you want to be and do and work it out in the school of life using all the means at your command for the accomplishment of your purpose.

I came across some striking figures in the "World Call" the other day that interested me. Let us study them:

"The child with no schooling has only one chance in 150,000 of performing distinguished service. With an elementary education he has four times the chance. With high school education he has eighty-seven times the chance. With a college education he has 800 times the chance."

To this general education, and Christian education and the chances are wonderfully increased for performing distinguished service. There is a distinctive need and place for the Christian college in the educational world. Every educational institution of our land ought to be permeated by the principles and teachings of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Again I noticed in the same magazine these significant figures:

"Less than one per cent of American men are college graduates. Yet this one per cent of college graduates has furnished fifty-five per cent of our presidents; thirty-six per cent of our members of Congress; forty-seven per cent of the Speakers of the House; fifty-four per cent of Vice-President; sixty-two per cent of the Secretaries of State; fifty per cent of the Secretaries of the Treasury; sixty nine per cent of the Attorney General; sixty-nine per cent of the Justices of the Supreme Court."

These figures speak for themselves and need no comment. Does it pay to go to college if you want to render distinguished service to your land and country? Does it pay to have an education if you wish to broaden your opportunities for advancement and useful service to God and man? It certainly does.

Where shall I go to college? Go where you want to go. Go where you can get that training you wish; and where the training will fit you for the best possible service for "God, home and native land." Go where with all your getting you will get an education plus Christianity, and not doubt and unbelief.

A Christian college of your own Church that rings true to true educational principles and Christian teaching and that will fit for service in the home church, and in the great world field for Christ, the Church, and Humanity, is a good place to go.

Denominational colleges ought to look out for their young people and ever seek to fit them for service in their chosen field, so that when they have completed their college course, they may go forth trained men and women. It is a good thing for their Alma Mater to ever lend a helping hand to those she sends out into the battle fields of life. Let us think of our college and see what we can do for it.

Adoniram Judson is quoted as having said, "If I had a thousand dollars to give away, I would put it into a Christian school in America, because in building Christian schools and in filling them with boys and girls we are raising the seed corn of the world."

We needed money for our college and the Church responded largely; now let the Church respond with her boys and girls; for money is naught without them.

MISSIONARY

CASUS GRATIAE

President Harper's wonderful campaign and glorious achievement for Elon bring us to our knees in gratitude and praise to the Giver of all good. Raising in a period of four months more than three hundred thousand dollars for our college shows that our people are both able and willing. And it has not yet begun to appear what we can do, and what by our Father's help, we shall do to advance His Kingdom.

The College began the campaign four months ago to raise $125,000.00. It was seen within a month after the campaign began that we had all of us underestimated the desire and the ability of our people to give to a worthy cause. Then the amount had to be doubled; the goal was fixed at $250,000.00. But long before the four months were out it was seen that we still were wanting in faith, and were still underestimating the strength and the willingness of our people to give.

How this wonderful work should inspire all of us! We are getting to be a missionary people. And a missionary people are always able, and always willing to give. We shall now have to fix our missionary goal at half a million, and when that is raised and paid in and used to the glory of God and to the advancement of His Kingdom, the President of our College after that will not have to start out for a quarter of a million—he may start out for a million—and get it. Ours is a benevolent God. He showers His bounties and His abundance upon those who undertake His program. Ours is a cause of rejoicing, for the people who have given $300,000 for a Christian cause will not be poorer but richer when they shall have paid it.

THE SPIRIT OF SACRIFICE

One of the benefits accruing from the war was the increased spirit of sacrifice. It was thought that there would be loss to the Mission Boards during the war. The opposite was true, as the following figures show. Putting it in round numbers contributions to foreign missions from the United States were as follows:

For 1915, $16,000,000. For 1916, $17,000,000. For 1917, $19,000,000. For 1918, $20,700,000.

Now if to this constant increase could be added as much the next four years to the cause of missions as we spent on the war, this whole world would be evangelized with this generation.

Are we ready for this spirit of self-sacrifice? Are we ready to do as much to redeem and save our fellow-man as we were to help kill and destroy?

MISSIONS IN HOLLAND SUNDAY SCHOOL

Mrs. Chas. H. Daughtrey, Holland, Va., has been elected Superintendent of Missions in our Holland, Va. Sunday school. On Sunday, June 29, she gave her first public missionary exercise by the children of the school. A splendid audience assembled in the High School building. The writer has never attended a more impressive and inspiring and suggestive missionary exercise. The Superintendent brought out on the stage in epitome that which is actually taking place on a world-wide scale in reality. The millions of unsaved who wait and weep in heathen darkness, the need of funds and more funds with which to send missionaries, and then the compelling need of more missionary volunteers were all represented in a most impressive manner. Holland Sunday school has made a great move in the right direction.

THIS LOOKS GOOD TO ME

I have in hand a letter, dated June 23, 1919 from one of our best business laymen, in which are these lines: "I am very glad to see the success that Dr. Harper is having raising the Elon College Endowment. Our people have always been to conservative. We have never tried to do anything for our Church (till recently). I feel like you should raise five hundred thousand dollars in five years for missions. Our Church needs it. We need several new churches now (in the home field). I believe you can raise half a million dollars for missions if you will keep hot on the trail."

I wonder if there are others amongst us who really have the growth of our dear Church at heart who feel as does this hustling, wide-awake, successful business man?

J. O. ATKINSON.

NOTES

Rev. J. S. Carden, Durham, N. C., called at THE SUN office last Saturday, and as usual, brought a new subscriber. Come again.

Rev. R. F. Brown, Durham, N. C., is doing the preaching in a series of evangelistic services now being held in Providence Christian church, Graham, N. C.

On June 30 Rev. J. O. Cox and wife, Flat Rock, N. C., had the misfortune of losing an infant child. Their friends will sympathize with them in the loss of their loved one.

We see in the Granite State News, Wolfeboro, N. H., a neat advertisement of the Christian church at that place, announcing the service on June 30 which was held by Chaplain H. E. Rountree.

Rev. A. H. Morrill, Newton, N. H., writes: "You people in the South are doing splendidly in rallying to the support of missions and in increasing the endowment of your college."

Mrs. E. W. Wilkins, Route 2, Burlington, N. C., sends this office five pounds of nice honey with her compliments and best wishes. Many thanks, Sister Wilkins. We are enjoying it very much.

This office has been assured by Rev. E. K. McCord, Dayton, Ohio, that he will write a monthly letter for our Southern people. We appreciate this on Brother McCord's part and know that our people will much enjoy what he has to say.

We have before us a well planned and prepared program of the fiftieth annual session of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention. The Convention is to be held at Oakland Christian church near Suffolk, Va., on Wednesday and Thursday, July 23 and 24. We trust that two good days will be spent for the Master's cause through the Sunday school work.

We chronicle with sorrow the passing of Mrs. S. C. E. Beamon, Sunbury, N. C. She was one of our friends whom we knew only by correspondence. She was a loyal and devoted worker and always interested herself in increasing THE SUN's circulation. She made it a rule to keep her subscription paid more than two years in advance. Her passing was on July 1. She was in her eighty-sixth year.

"Uncle" Wellons informs us that he overlooked one thing from his article of June 25 that he meant to say. He writes: "On one of the trains passing here (Varina, N. C.) the engineer whistled at all the stations, 'O, Happy Day, O, Happy Day, When Jesus Washed my Sins Away.' He whistled it just as if he meant it—and I think that he did."

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

WORSHIP

By Charles L. Brooks, in Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.

The word "worship" is a compound of the Anglo-Saxon worþ, worth, and scipe, ship. Worth signifies "deserving of" and ship, "reward." Hence worship literally means "deserving of reward." The Greek word is proskuneo from pros, toward, and kunco, to kiss the hand; and literally means "to kiss the hand toward," in token of reverence. In the New Testament sense it is homage paid to God. Worship, then, is the act of paying to the Supreme Being what is his due; the homage and reverence that belong to him; adoration.

The Roman Catholics distinguish three kinds of worship: (1) Latria, the worship that belongs to God; (2) hyperdulia, the worship that is due to the Virgin; and (3) dulia, the worship that belongs to the saints. The influence of these distinctions in worship is seen in the titles of honor applied to magistrates in some places, "Your worship." But in the light of divine revelation such distinctions are seen to be false. Only God is entitled to be worshiped; only he is worthy of worship. The messenger from heaven, whom John was about to worship on the isle of Patmos, commanded: "See thou do it not: for I am thy fellow servant, and of thy brethren that have the testimony of Jesus; worship God."

But how is one to worship—pay to God what is his due? The Book tells us: (1) En pneumati, in spirit, with that reverence which the Spirit begets. Otherwise one can have no reverence at all; only the cringing fear of devils. God is a spirit and demands above all that one's inner nature, or spirit, unfettered by any hindrances, shall be distinctively, consciously related to him. But (2) also en aletheia, in truth, reality as opposed to mere appearance, that which ought to be and alone has a right to be as opposed to the specious, the normal as opposed to the abnormal, the formula as embodied in the religion of Jesus Christ, opposed alike to the inventions of the Jews, the superstitions of the Gentiles, the speculations of corrupt men, and the precepts of the false teachers even among the Christians themselves. It is a categorical, imperative dei, must. Those who worship at all must worship after that fashion. Otherwise there is no worship. Everything is solemn mockery.

The worship of God, then, springs out of a heart of love. And love to God, as taught by the Master in the parable given at Luke VII, 41-47, is in proportion to man's sense of God's forgiveness. The poor woman who stood weeping at the feet of Jesus and washed them with her tears and wiped them with her hair and kissed them and anointed them with the ointment in the alabaster box did so because she had an acute sense of having been forgiven much. So she loved him much and worshiped him in proportion to her love. Worship is sometimes also an expression of faith preparatory to supplication. The poor leper, who came to him as he descended from the mount, worshiped him, saying: "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean."

The ideal of Christianity can only be made actual through worship. The reasoned idea without worship is theology; worship without the reasoned idea is superstition. Worship is the means of cultivating reverence and inculcating piety and obedience. It is both individual and social, not possible to the individual without the influences that make men devout, nor to society without organization and control. The influences that make men devout are the consciousness that they are related to God and God is related to them; that they can talk to God and God is able to hear and answer them; and that if their hearts are wounded and sore from trial and affliction, God is both willing and able to heal them. Christianity (whose heart and center are Christ) through the agency of the Church organizes and controls worship.

All true service to God springs out of the worship of God. He who does not worship does not serve. The critical Pharisee, in the parable already cited, did not worship the Master, and so did not serve him, even in the matter of common courtesies, water for his feet, the customary kiss and oil for his head. The character of one's worship types his service. If one is inattentive, listless, lazy, and sloven in worship, he is likewise inattentive, indifferent, lazy, and sloven in service. Where the pews are vacant on Sunday, the house of God is very apt to be dirty (unless the preacher sweeps it), the music a scream, the elements absent from the Lord's table on communion days, and the pastor's salary unpaid. Furthermore, the man who goes to church on Sunday and reads a few verses of scripture and says a prayer and sings a psalm and lets that end his program is neither worshipping nor serving God; he is camouflaging. The worshiper goes out from his holy communion with God into the great needy world to minister unto the bodies and souls of men in an effort to do God's will and work and build up his Kingdom.

On account of the failure to worship and so the failure to serve, effort is often made to substitute service for worship. This always results in rites and ceremonies; the less Christianity there is, the more rites and ceremonies there are. In some places it is all rites and ceremonies. The mighty choir does not want the plebeian multitude to break the harmony by joining in the song, so congregational singing is dead. The sermon is crowded out altogether or is reduced to a thin, skimmed-milk affair, in which floats one little idea vainly seeking, like Noah's dove, to find a place to rest its feet.

Religion without worship is nothing but a philosophy. The true end of our religion is to induce men to worship God. Then they will faithfully serve God. Whatever hinders worship hinders services. Out of the hindrances of worship commonly given I note two:

1. Mental Emptiness. There are minds that can pass through divine worship and never know what happened, unless there was something novel or strange about it. This makes a berth for a clown in the pulpit, and a clown is always popular with the empty-headed. A stick can travel around the world, but it is still a stick. So an empty mind may go to church and be just as empty when it leaves, no matter how profound the discourse. I don't know what is ever to become of such souls, unless God in his pity has provided for them in the same provision he has made for infants and idiots. Meditation and prayer are closely related. The Psalmist said: "While I was musing the fire burned: then spake I with my tongue, Lord, make me to know mine end."

2. Disorder. The thing that does more to destroy worship in a modern congregation than anything else is disorder. If the cackling of geese could save souls as it saved Rome, then would we all get to glory. The modern babel just before and at the close of our Sunday worship is nothing short of sacrilege. The fact is that many of us have never learned to properly appreciate God's house. The humble Mexican, commonly called "greaser" by us, will lift his hat and pass the house of God with uncovered head, just as a patriot will uncover before the flag of the nation; but our modern American, who looks down upon this humble soul, as the ancient Pharisee did upon the wretched publican, will carry on his twitter and gossip and gabble and giggle even in the house of God itself, as though that place were no more hallowed than the market place or a common dance hall.

Instead of taking our cue from newspaper correspondents, let us learn with Habakkuk: "The Lord is in his temple: let all the earth keep silent before him." So shall we learn how to worship God and go out from his presence with our souls strengthened for life's tasks.

Lord, teach us to worship!

THE LION

By Dr. William C. Herman

There are more than forty species of the cats, and of all that number but one is entirely domesticated, that is Thomas, the housecat. Nearly all of this noisy family are marked by stripes or spots. All live and prey upon other animals, usually weaker than themselves.

The lion is the recognized head of the entire cat family. For a long time he has been called the "King of Beasts." He is the monarch of all that he surveys. This well-known animal is found both in Africa and Asia, wherever sufficient game exists. When his natural quarry is wanting, this noble beast will not hesitate to attack man himself or more frequently the domestic animals.

The lion is a most powerful animal. A single blow of his mighty paw will fell an ox. His voice is a mighty roar; no other animal, with the exception of the hippopotamus, can surpass the fullness of the roar of the lion. This mighty cat preys on the deer, zebra, antelope, and other grass-eating animals. He is the terror of the natives and very frequently makes a meal off of a man.

A man-eating lion is usually an old one, who, being unable to capture his usual prey, must capture such as he can by his stealth and cunning, and he does not have much trouble in killing and carrying off a sleeping native. Several years ago two man-eating lions in Africa actually stopped the building of a railroad, because of their man-eating character. A large number of Indian coolies were employed in the building of this line and were housed in rough shacks and cabins. The man-eaters discovered how easy it was to break in and seize a sleeping man. Each night the lions would come there would be a loud cry from the victim, and the beasts were off. This occurred each night until twenty-eight coolies and an unknown number of natives were carried off and eaten by the man-eaters. Finally the men refused to work while they were in such danger, so all work stopped, and a search for the lions was begun. They were finally shot by one of the engineers, and the building of the line proceeded.—In Boy Life.

WILL EAT OUT OF YOUR HAND

The chickadee will eat out of your hand if you show him that you have something good to eat and he is not already pretty well satisfied; for he is a social, fearless, and responsive little fellow, says the American Forestry Association, Washington, which is conducting the national bird house-building contest that school children are entering into with great interest and enthusiasm. Another thing is that if you whistle to the chickadee he will invariably respond, which is more than can be said of most other birds. The chickadee braves the winter cold and remains even when the snow makes it hard for him to find much food. The top and back of his head are jet black, and there is a big black spot on his throat, while the rest of the bird is shaded from white to gray and buffish.—Exchange.

THE SPEED LIMIT

Uncle Sam Hodge came down from the Kentucky mountains with his yearly produce to market. His team of oxen was somewhat weary with a two days' pull. But when Sam reached the city limits he was confronted with the sign: "Speed limit, fifteen miles an hour."

He pulled his whiskers a moment in silent meditation, and then drawled out to his oxen, "Well, I know darn well we'll never make it, but we'll do our dog-gone best."—Everybody's Magazine.

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR JULY 20, 1919

The Lord's Supper. Matt. 26:26-30; I Cor. 11:20-34.

Golden Text: For as often as ye eat this bread and drink the cup, ye proclaim the Lord's death till he come.

This is another great lesson on the Sacraments of the church. You will remember, of course, that we are in the midst of a six months' study of the great fundamental truths of the Bible beginning with the first of April and to be concluded the last of September. This lesson is not to be a disquisition on the last night of the life of Christ, but a lesson on the observance and the meaning of the Lord's Supper. This is a memorial rite for us, of which the Lord said "as oft" and "do this in remembrance of Me." How often should we observe this Sacrament? How often should we remember our Lord by the rite which He Himself instituted? We know something of what broken bodies mean nowadays; something more than we used to know. We shall never forget those broken bodies, and all we can do for them and theirs we will feel to be all too small a remembrance. The body of our Lord was so marred that there was "no comeliness." His visage was "so marred from the form of man that his appearance was not that of a son of man." (literal rendering Isa. 52:14). All this was to happen within the next few hours, and with wistful tenderness and love He said, "Do this in remembrance of Me." His body was bread—that best of all foods for man, a food made of many small grains broken and blended for our food. His blood was our drink, like the fruit of the grape, strengthening, renewing, rejuvenating. "Don't forget me," He says. How long shall we remember Him? Till he comes. Do you pray, "Thy Kingdom come?" Do you earnestly look for His coming? Do you say, each time you commemorate His death, "Even so, come Lord Jesus"? What a supper that glad reunion feast will be, when we sit down with Him to drink of the new fruit of the vine in His Father's Kingdom!

MRS. FRED BULLOCK.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR JULY 20, 1919

Crusading Against Intemperance. Eph. 6:10-20.

Last night I read two articles in McClure's Magazine for July. One by a woman, "Why I Am Against Prohibition;" one by a man, "Why I Am For It." Such articles cause us to remember and proclaim that this is no sudden spurt of feeling, no "few fanatics" as Mrs. Atherton says, who have forced their will on the majority. This is the sober thought of a nation reached through almost a century of effort and crusade. It has been a majority, not a minority vote that has made townships, districts, counties, states, and finally a nation dry. Do not let any one make you believe this is a sudden impulse. It is not even religious or moral, on the part of thousands, possibly millions, who have voted for it. It was distinctly a matter of business. Business men found their output being lowered, their accident list lengthened, and they decreed against it. Life Insurance men found drinkers lived shorter lives, and they decreed against it. Railroads grew alarmed at the lengthening list of accidents and they decreed against it. And so it grew. The church, and the prohibition societies set the people to thinking, and their God-given commonsense has done the rest. Do not believe that nonsense about the results being different were the soldier's home. Hundreds of thousands had already cast their vote to make their own country or State dry before they went. As a matter of fact, the great majority of those who would have voted wet were right here in America, rejected for physical unfitness, either altogether from the army or held for selective service. This is not to say all who were rejected were rejected for these reasons, but a great majority were rejected for that cause, or for evils arising from it.

MRS. FRED BULLOCK.

ANNOUNCEMENT NO. 4

The program for the Big Convention is ready and you will find same elsewhere in this issue of THE SUN. So far as the efforts of your Executive Committee are concerned, we have done our best and hope that you will like the program, and do your part toward making the Convention a Victory Convention indeed and in truth.

Don't forget that we want every Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Society in the State represented, and this evidently means your school and society. It is now only a few days before the Convention convenes, and when you elect your delegates, read the program over carefully, and assign to each delegate, one or more subjects to report to your school, and insist that these reports be made in writing. In this way you will be able to boost the Convention before it meets, and your school after the Convention adjourns.

Let's line up now for the Big Victory Convention and after that, the best year in our Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work, not only in our individual school, but in the entire State. Lest you forget—the Convention meets at Shallow Well Christian church, July 15-17, 1919.

C. H. STEPHENSON,
President.

A BETTER SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

We are now preparing to attend the Eastern Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention, which convenes Wednesday and Thursday, July 23 and 24, at Oakland. We should be making better preparations to accomplish more during this session than we did last, and we should accomplish more, easily so, because we have known one whole year in advance both the place and the time for the coming session, neither of which did we know for the last session until shortly before the Convention was to convene. And we shall convene two days instead of one this year.

May we call attention to a few things, some of which were not done last year, which must be done this year, if we shall go forward.

In the first place, the Recording Secretary should be at the very opening of the Convention and on time to the minute. He should from then to the close make the closest copy of all the proceedings, and be ready to read the minutes, before the close of the Convention, for corrections, and lastly, have the minutes published and distributed to each and every Sunday school in a few weeks after the close of the Convention.

Next, each and every secretary of a Sunday school should fill out the Annual Report, that all the statistics be given for his school, and mail it to the General Secretary, Rev. G. O. Lankford, before July 20, or be sure it gets to him at the opening of the Convention.

Let each and every Department Superintendent make a written report to hand the Secretary of the Convention. This will not prevent a lengthy speech, but give the Recording Secretary something definite to place in the minutes for publication.

Last but not least, let each and every Sunday school have at least one delegate, if not the whole number permitted, present to the whole session. The best needs of the whole 39 schools cannot be planned and worked out unless every school is represented. If the individual school has a matter to place before the Convention, let that delegate speak for the school and be prepared to vote for same.

E. T. COTTEN,
Recording Secretary.

THAT INTERNATIONAL CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONFERENCE

Two great gatherings our Young People ought to be interested in for the summer months are:

First, the Seaside Chautauquan and School of Methods of the Christian Church to be held at Virginia Beach, July 29-August 5, at which time Christian Endeavor work will be given one of the most prominent places on the program. Our young people who go away for their summer vacation could not find a more desirable place than to spend one week of it at Virginia Beach. Those who have been there know it to be true.

The second is the International Christian Endeavor Conference to be held in Buffalo, N. Y., August 5-10. The writer has an outline of the program of that Conference before him. It is one of the finest roster of speakers I have ever seen. Some of the world's greatest speakers are on that program. I am sending a copy of it to our good Editor hoping that he will find space to give a list of some of these speakers and special features.

The railroads are giving reduced rates. One plus one-third fare. The fare one way from Greensboro is $23.25, plus war tax. Here's hoping some more of our people will line up with the Greensboro delegation. It will do both you and your Church much good.

J. VINCENT KNIGHT.

ALL SUNDAY SCHOOL AND ENDEAVOR WORKERS, TAKE HEED!

The stage is now set for the greatest Conference of Sunday school and Christian Endeavor workers ever held in the State. Never before was there such a good and fruitful period for Christian work as now. A year ago our energies were tied up with a great national strife. Today we turn to building Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies in our land. They must be built right. That is why we urge you to attend the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Convention at Shallow Well Christian church July 15-17 without fail. Not only will there be new ideas and methods there for you, but the hospitable people of the community have promised us entertainment, that will cause all delegates to remember the occasion forever and aye.

A program and train schedule elsewhere in THE SUN will give you an idea of the work of the Convention, and also show you how to get to Shallow Well. Meet me there.

C. H. STEPHENSON,
President.

ANNOUNCEMENT NO. 5

Tuesday evening at 8:00 o'clock, July 15, rain or shine, the first State Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, convenes at Shallow Well Christian church, located near Jonesboro, N. C. If you are going via Raleigh, notice the following train schedule—and don't get left:

Trains leave Raleigh at 8:45, 3:57, 4:45 A. M.; 6:47, 4:20 P. M. and arrive at Sanford 10:16, 5:12, 6:10 A. M.; 8:00, 5:56 P. M. All dele- gates will be met at Sanford.

For further information, write Mr. L. M. Foushee, Jonesboro, N. C., who is chairman of the Entertainment Committee, and at your service. Get busy and be there.

C. H. STEPHENSON,
President.

CHILDREN'S DAY

Many of our Sunday schools are having, and are planning to have Children's Day. But many are not. Programs are prepared, are in print and are for full distribution. A request to the writer will bring as many programs as needed and without price to the one requesting. Having prepared the programs we are anxious for the schools to use them. So if your school has not prepared, send for the programs, as many as you need, and they will be sent gratis at once. Let all our schools this year have Children's Day.

J. O. ATKINSON,
S. S. and C. E. Board.
Elon College, N. C.

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION

The Eastern North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, the Western North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor, and the North Carolina and Virginia Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention having been consolidated into one we certainly ought to have this year the greatest and best of all our Conventions. Chairman C. H. Stephenson, Raleigh, N. C., who has been so efficient in the Eastern Convention is Chairman of the consolidated body, and is working commendably and enthusiastically to make our first all State Convention a great success. His efforts should be applauded and enthusiastically supported by Sunday school superintendents and pastors in all the churches of the consolidated Conferences. The Convention is to be held at Shallow Well church, Jonesboro, N. C., July 15, 16 and 17 and every school and Endeavor Society should be represented. An excellent program has been arranged and the Convention should mark an epoch in our work.

J. O. ATKINSON.

OBITUARIES

WHITE

Mrs. Mary E. White was 81 years old when she departed this life on the evening of June 26, 1919. She was the wife of William White who preceded her to his reward several years ago. To this union were born three children, two of whom are dead. Mr. E. L. White, the only living relative of the White generation, resides in Norfolk, Va.

The funeral was conducted from the Christian church of which Mrs. White has been a faithful member for a number of years. Rev. J. S. Carden assisted the writer in the funeral services. The interment was made at Mount Hermon church. May the Lord bless the lonely son and the many friends who have sustained the loss of her friendship.

R. F. BROWN.

WILLIAMS

Sister Martha Jane Williams passed away to her home in the spirit land June 22, 1919, at the age of eighty-two years, one month and twenty-five days. She was the mother of eight children. She had twenty-five grandchildren and twenty-five great grandchildren. She connected herself with the Christian church at Damascus, Orange County, early in life. May God bless the bereaved. Funeral and service conducted by the writer.

P. T. KLAPP.

RUSH

Jessie May Rush was born August 9, 1894, and died June 11, 1919. Her age was, therefore, 24 years, 10 months and 2 days. Miss Jessie had suffered many afflictions during her life, but she bore them patiently.

She was a member of Palmyra Christian church from childhood, though for several years prior to her death she had been absent from the community most of the time. She is survived by her mother, and other relatives and friends who mourn her departure. Funeral services at Palmyra, June 13.

A. W. ANDES.

SHOMO

Mary Catherine Shomo was born January 19, 1837, and departed this life June 21, 1919, aged 82 years, 5 months, and 2 days. She was left a widow by the death of her husband about 13 years ago. Surviving are five daughters, eleven grandchildren, and eleven great grandchildren, two sisters and one brother.

Sister Shomo united with the Christian church at Bethlehem more than forty years ago, and lived a consistent Christian life. The place she filled for so long on earth is vacant but Heaven is richer. Funeral services were held at the Lutheran church in New Market, June 23, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Derrick, pastor of the church where the burial took place.

A. W. ANDES.

ANDERSON

June 6, 1919 closed the earthly career of Mary Frances Anderson, wife of Deacon A. S. Anderson of Timber Ridge Christian church. Sister Anderson was born June 2, 1844, and was, therefore, 75 years, and 4 days old when death came. Her life was full of good deeds and good service to humanity, to church, and to God. Since childhood she was a faithful member of the Timber Ridge church.

Surviving are the sorrow-stricken husband, four daughters, one son, and many other relatives and friends who deeply mourn her death. But in our sorrow we have the assurance that she is happy with other loved ones who have gone before. Funeral services at Timber Ridge, June 8, in which the writer was assisted by Rev. W. T. Walters, a former pastor.

A. W. ANDES.

SMITH

Departed this life at her home near Hopedale, N. C., Mrs. Margaret C. Smith, July 2, 1919, in her 86th year.

Mrs. Smith was a daughter of Henry Trolinger and was twice married. Her first husband, Willie Harder, died a number of years ago. Her second husband, John W. Smith, and three children, John R. Harder, Willie Harder, and Miss Corna Smith, survive her.

She was a member of New Providence Christian church and had been for a number of years. She had been sick for some time and death came not as a surprise. She fell asleep trusting Him who saved her.

The funeral services were conducted from Haw River Christian church by the writer and the interment was in the old Trolinger cemetery at that place. May the Healer of broken hearts comfort those who mourn.

P. H. FLEMING.

FROM OTHER SANCTUMS

Must Divide With Them.—Some one, writing of the perishing people of the Near East, whom he had seen and was trying to rescue, said: "It is wicked to let them starve." How can we excuse ourselves, if in our own abundance, we let others die for want of food? How can we excuse ourselves, either, if, knowing the gospel of God's grace, we permit those in heathen lands to perish without the knowledge of the way of life?—Herald and Presbyterian.

Who Am I?—Last leap year I did not wish to embarrass my best girl by letting her propose to me, says the editor of the "Orangeville Sun," so I asked her to be my wife, but she said she would much rather be excused, so I foolishly excused her; but I got even with her because I married her mother and then the girl became my daughter, and when my father married my daughter he became my son. When my father married her she became my mother. If my father is my son and my daughter is my mother, then who am I? My mother mother, who is my wife, must be my grandmother, and I, being my grandmother's husband must be my own grandfather.—Afton Free Press, (Canada).

"IN ESSENTIALS UNITY, IN NON-ESSENTIALS LIBERTY, IN ALL THINGS CHARITY"

July Fourth

THE FLAG is the center of attraction on July fourth. It is a symbol of what the nation is and what it has for its ideals. We float the flag because we have freed it from tyranny and are willing to protect it at the cost of blood. July fourth, nineteen hundred and nineteen, will have a deeper meaning than it has ever had. It means not only independence but inter-dependence. We have learned that our glory is not in maintaining our country alone, but in the protection of all mankind. It is in giving moral, social, economic and spiritual justice to the peoples of the world that we glory in and not in self-preservation alone. The occasion this year is sublime because of the larger freedom it signifies and the cost in blood of that freedom.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

CROSSING THE ATLANTIC

Some days ago the first successful attempt to cross the Atlantic in a seaplane happened. The London Daily Mail offered a prize of $50,000 for the first non-stop trans-Atlantic flight. The world is proud that the flight was a success. It is the revelation of the continued advance of civilization. May such progress continue, but may it not continue if the Lord is to be left out of all our daring and doing in this day of high accomplishment. Every modern invention and convenience should be used for the carrying on of the Gospel of Jesus Christ that all the world may have the privilege of the Gospel.

THE PRESIDENT AND PROHIBITION

There is being a hard fight made in Washington to get the war-time prohibition act repealed. The opponents of prohibition think that Mr. Wilson will do something for them whenever he returns. We believe that he will do something, but we believe that he will do the same thing that he did before—sign in favor of prohibition. Mr. Wilson is considered a war leader and admired by all parties, but if he signs the bill giving the whisky elements a longer chance to deal out their soul-killing stuff, he will undoubtedly lower his standing in the minds of thousands of people.

PEACE TERMS WITH GERMANY

This note is written Friday morning, June 27, while the world is anxiously waiting to know the outcome of the terms with Germany. The final terms have been issued and it is said that no change will be made. Before this note is read, these terms will likely be signed. There is a feeling of satisfaction that the world will hasten to its normal condition. But the signing of the peace terms will be of no avail unless it is the good will of the Germans to keep these terms. Just what per cent of the American people can trust Germany we do not know, but we are of the opinion that the number is small. We claim to be an optimist but fear that there is danger ahead. Let the nation pray that the world may become a community of friendship.

FLEETING YEARS

As we look upon the men and women about us we see those who are on the shady side of fifty; those who are soon to count their three-fourths of a century, and those who have already counted these three stages. There was a time when we considered old age as being unpleasant and being a day of sadness and sorrow. Such is not our thought now, but as we see our aged friends slowly walking down the sunset valley, there comes a thought that is hallowed and a pleasure of mind that these veterans have seen this world long enough to begin to yearn for a habitat elsewhere. The only regret and sorrow that comes to us in seeing these pilgrims living out the last half of their days is to think of those who know not God and whose lives are not in accord with the principles of Jesus.

The years on quiet sandals go

So softly we are not aware

Until summer's singing vales

We find the snow is everywhere.

MENDEO MEXICO

The trouble in Mexico has started again and it points to the same grave danger that Mexico will one day do harm to us if we do not do something to her, or for her. Mexico's problem is unique and most complicated. The people who live there have ideals far different from ours. There seems to be little chance of co-operation with them. Mexico's problem is economic, social and religious. These are the three things that must develop in any nation before it can gain the respect of the best civilization. In these three, Mexico is behind. In some parts of this land of confusion, developments are going forward. But in other parts the situation is exceedingly difficult. We believe that it is America's duty for America's sake, and for Mexico's good, to take over Mexico and point her people to the way of safety and satisfaction.

THE COWARDICE OF THE BREWERS

We have always known that there was a streak of cowardice in the man who makes whisky and beer for the detriment of his fellowman. The brewers have found that they can no longer operate in the United States, and so they are trying to shift their business into Japan and China, where they can hide behind ignorance and superstition. This undertaking is twice cowardly because they know that they can take advantage of the educational conditions and sow tares in the ignorant minds of the people. But thank God there are a few Christians in these countries who have backbone enough to put a fight against their coming; and if this country is in earnest about its missionary work, they will join hands with these benighted lands and the whisky business will be dumped into the Atlantic ocean when it starts its transfer from the shores of America to the shores of the Orient.

A PASTORAL VISIT AND A

The other day I was on my way from..... to..... The curtain of night was beginning to shut out the light of the day as I viewed a little house on the top of the hill. Having heard that a member of the Christian Church lived there, I stopped and knocked upon the door. A saintly soul came to greet me. Her form was bent by the toil of years and time had written wrinkles across her brow. In that house, cozy and comfortable, she had lived alone for ten long years. That many years ago her husband answered the summons of heaven. In my new friend's hand was held a bundle of papers that were being re-read because she wanted something to help her pass away the time. I told her that my first object was to meet her and to see if I could interest in her taking THE CHRISTIAN SUN. "I shall be glad to take it, Brother Riddle," she replied as she reached into her apron pocket for a ten dollar bill. She expressed a desire, a very earnest desire, to see the first copy.

No fiction! The story is too sad! For ten years THE SUN would have been a comfort to that lonely widow. Some pastor failed to pastor. I hurried home amid the shadows of night rejoicing that one more of the three thousand homes in the Southern Christian Convention without THE CHRISTIAN SUN was to have it. A glad rejoicing it was, and it would be yet if my heart was not bleeding over the thought of the 2,999 other homes without the official organ of our work; homes with a pastoral visit about once a year and the privilege of hearing preaching possibly once a month.

I stretched myself upon the resting couch to restore energy from the day's toil and dreamed of a new day, a new time, a new era, in which the ministry and the laity would give of their time just one whole day to visiting their fellow church members in interest of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. How peaceful that sleep would have been had it not been disturbed by the break of the morning and the facing of another day of strenuous effort to make a great task go!

Utinam modo agatur aliquid!

AN UNUSUAL OFFER

THE CHRISTIAN SUN office has decided to offer a reward of $25 in gold to the pastor sending on or before August 1 the largest list of persons who do not take

THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The conditions are as follows:

1. The list must be made up of members of the Christian Church.
2. The list must be members of the church or churches of the pastor sending the same.
3. The names composing the list must be heads of families, or what you would consider the logical person of the family to subscribe to the Church organ.
4. Only one name from the family can be given, unless some member is making his or her home permanently elsewhere.
5. The pastor must make up the list himself and get no information from this office.

In addition to the prize of $25 in gold, each pastor falling below the regular prize will be rewarded for his work.

☞ Three thousand families in the Southern Christian Convention without THE CHRISTIAN SUN. How many, dear brother pastor, of this number in your field? It will be a good day's work for the cause for you to get the facts. Will you do it?

SUFFOLK LETTER

The Church paper fills a place in Christian society that no other publication can fill. It is the organ of the denomination it represents, and is supposed to express the beliefs and doings of the body. It is the medium of communication between the scattered constituency, and the advocate of all its enterprises. No department of the Church could live, much less prosper, without the help of the church paper.

The Christian Church made an invaluable and permanent contribution to the progress of Christianity when, in September 1808 at Portsmouth, New Hampshire, through Elias Smith, it published The Herald of Gospel Liberty, the first religious newspaper in the world. It was a necessity for the Church separate from the State. From that day till this day Christian agencies have multiplied in all denominations with increasing efficiency.

The epistles of the New Testament were the first hints of a Church paper. They were letters written to the churches and individuals touching the vital interests of the life of the Church and the activities of the people. These letters gave the idea of personal touch and spiritual interest and remain as evidences of the wisdom and zeal of the apostles. The Church paper really copies this personal and Christian interest in the churches; and there is hardly an enterprise of the denomination that could live and prosper without this medium of inter-communication. The Orphanage lives because THE CHRISTIAN SUN is all the time speaking of its work, its needs, and its purposes. The little letters of children, the great words of the Superintendent, Chas. D. Johnston, and the reports of things accomplished all tell the same story of a great purpose. Through THE SUN one can hear the heart-beats of the liberal souls that give of their means, their prayers, and their thought to this one great charity of helping orphans. The cry of the orphan is also heard through this same organ, so that the work goes on, hopefully. The Institution would be impossible without such organ. The same is true of the College, the missionary enterprise, the woman's work, and all the general work of Christianity.

The Church paper does even more than propagate the teachings and work of the Church; it enters the field of public education and fashions many of the moral ideas that determine human welfare. It challenges the attention and moral consideration of society on many questions and wins its way into the confidence and approbation of the people. National prohibition would have been impossible without the religious press. The secular press with its paid advertisements would not have initiated a campaign against the saloon business. The Anti-Saloon League would have been powerless alone in such an undertaking. The religious press has a field of usefulness all its own, and no one can make a contribution of so great value for so small a sum of money as to subscribe for his Church paper.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN costs $2.00 a year. It speaks to 2,000 homes every week. It should speak to 3,000 homes every week. If you could know what it is doing for you, your family, and your business, you would subscribe at once and send Rev. C. B. Riddle a $2.00 check.

W. W. STALEY.

Some weeks ago we made a request for the names of invalids of the Church. To that request we received responses that gave us a list of fourteen who are invalids or shut-ins. We have always endeavored to let this office be the largest possible service to the people, and so we are mailing these fourteen invalid friends our exchanges. Our exchange list contains about twenty-five of the leading Church papers throughout the country. These papers are valuable, well edited, and many of them very beautiful in their make-up. We have enough copies to send these persons papers practically every week, and we are glad to do so. The only cost is postage. Only two of this list of fourteen take THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and so if there are friends who would like to contribute something to help send THE SUN to these persons, it will be gladly received and used for that purpose.

THE WAR'S GREATEST HERO

The war's greatest hero is Sergeant Alvin C. York, who killed twenty-five Germans and captured one hundred and thirty-two. Young York is from Pall Mall, Tenn. On June 7, 1919, he himself was captured by Miss Grace Williams and the marriage ceremony was performed by Governor Roberts of Tennessee. Congress has voted young York a medal for his bravery in the war.

Miss Sarah Nall—I do not see how I could do without my church paper. I hope THE SUN will continue to shine in my home.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

BURLINGTON LETTER

Since the Burlington Sunday school decided to support Miss Martha R. Stacey we have been looking forward to the time when she should visit us. By the courtesy of the Mission Board she was with us June 15 to 19. In this brief time we came to know each other in a measure at least. The fellowship of those days was much enjoyed and will prove very profitable. A bond has been created between us. She will go to Japan as the representative of our school and congregation. There is a mutual gladness about the privilege to go and to send. Miss Stacey came before the Mission Board in its last session and sought the privilege to go and later the Burlington Sunday school asked the privilege to send her. When the life was offered the support was soon provided. God will provide support for His workers. Men and women ready to go out is the need of the hour. Let there be more offering of life and support will be provided.

Miss Stacey while here impressed us with the fact of her love for mission cause. She has been contemplating the matter for a number of years. In fact she was consecrated to mission work by her mother. She has been in city mission work for several years in connection with her work as a public school teacher. She is a graduate of the Gordon Mission Training School and has since April first been taking special work in a Boston Kindergarten school. She is well equipped for her work and has natural gifts which promise great usefulness. Best of all she is promised the prayerful, sympathetic and loving support of the people who are sending her out. The few days with us developed beautiful touches of interest and called forth the expression of consecrated purpose.

The messages brought to us by Miss Stacey were much enjoyed and filled with helpful suggestions. She spoke to the Sunday school, the church, the Young People's Missionary Society and also spoke at the mid-week service and the reception given in her honor. The Sunday school presented her with a fountain pen and the Ladies' Societies presented her with a wrist watch. She is expecting to sail about September 5.

The work on the new church is being pushed. We are fully expecting to have it ready for the meeting of the new State Conference in November. However, considerable work remains to be done.

SPRING HILL

This is a mother church. Many good men and women have found the Kingdom of God at her altar. She has been the spiritual birth place where the men and women were born who have organized, and built up Waverly, Wakefield, and Dendron Christian churches, to say nothing of the members she has given other churches. We hope in her age that there may yet come strength and multiplication in her membership. The attendance in Sunday school and church services the past year has been larger than in preceding years. There are some loyal and faithful members as well as some who are indifferent but these conditions exist in all churches. The church has recently been recovered with tin and a splendid metal ceiling put up, and one of the best picket fences built and painted that is to be found in the community; also nice cement walk in front of the church. This is not all. A Ladies' Aid Society is kept up. This Society does many things useful as well as some things ornamental. They are largely responsible for much of the improvements done—then I forgot—a number one organ has also been placed in the church.

And the pastor has been pounded. Recently this Ladies' Aid Society met at the parsonage in Waverly, and the pastor noticed that the good women carried bundles, but that is nothing new when women go to town but when they were through with the meeting and ready to go home they left all their bundles. There it was that the pastor and his family found some of the best country eatables. The many articles donated formed a splendid "pounding" and pastor and family felt deeply grateful for these substantial gifts at this day of "high cost of living." We are praying for a good meeting on the second Sunday in August.

A MESSAGE FROM THE PORTSMOUTH CHURCH

Since the "Conference of Resolves" held in this church five months ago renewed activity has marked the work of every organization. In no part of the work is the interest better manifested than in the Sunday school where Brother R. B. Wood, superintendent with his officers and teachers are maintaining a high grade of efficiency, where the missionary spirit of giving and interest in other benevolences is constantly kept before the school and out of which recruits are being secured for church membership. A young people's class alone having raised $200 in six months for various purposes.

The Ladies' Aid and Missionary Societies have done excellent work with increased finances, which has enabled the church to contribute substantially to the various causes of city and State.

During the winter and fall congregations have been large. Up-to-date advertising and popular themes have made Washington Street church known all over the city as a good place to visit.

In common with other churches we feel the pressure of modern modes of life, especially in a city near a still larger one surrounded by so many attractions which even church people seem unable to resist and which the war period had had a tendency to increase. We are looking forward to a larger spiritual awakening in the fall.

DEDICATION DAY AT ROSEMONT CHURCH

Last Sunday was a day long to be remembered by the members and friends of Rosemont Christian church, the occasion being the dedication of the church building.

The day itself was ideal. Although the sun shone forth from an almost cloudless sky, his rays were so tempered by the breezes from the ocean that we hardly knew summer was on. The very beauty of the day spoke to us of the goodness and the glory of God.

But what was better than the day was the sweet spirit of fellowship that entered into it. Not all days are the same. Into some days may come the fruit of experiences of months and even of years. This must have happened with us on the last Lord's day. What was once toil and labor was experienced again as the fruit thereof, what was once prayer was translated into its answer, what was once hope was realized in its actuality, and what was one day faith was lost in sight—all of which entered into the day making fellowship sweet and worship a delight and an inspiration.

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., was the visiting speaker for the day. In the morning he gave a strong message on "Christian Courage." At the evening hour, at which time came the crowning service of the day, the dedicatory program, the speaker was at his best and from his heart he delivered a soul-stirred and a soul-stirring message on "The Significance of the Sanctuary," after which he dedicated the church to the worship and service of God.

As a part of the dedicatory exercises Brother T. O. Morrison, a charter member of the church, read the following sketch:

Historical Sketch

With the building of communities and the coming together of groups of families in neighborhood life arises the need for new enterprises for the public good, chief among which is the Church of Christ. Not many years ago the sections of land about us were devoted almost entirely to agricultural activities, but natural conditions were such as to determine that these fields should no longer be laid off by the plowman's measure, but by the surveyor's line and compass, and that industry must take the place of agriculture. So this community came into being and with the birth of the community was born the religious needs and responsibilities thereof.

It was out of this need and responsibility that this church came to be. So on August 14, 1902, almost seventeen years ago, Rosemont Christian church was organized, Rev. J. Pressley Barrett, D. D., being the organizer. The organization was very small at the beginning, there being only thirteen charter members, most of whom are still with us, the absent ones having finished their earthly task and are now in the experience of their reward.

The church has been served by the following pastors: Revs. J. W. Harrell, J. W. Barrett, W. D. Harward, C. C. Ryan, McDaniel Howsare, D. A. Keys, W. H. Denison, and the present pastor since March 1917.

The land on which the church now stands was given by Mr. John L. Gibson, now of sacred and sainted memory.

Upon this plat of ground two structures have been erected, the two being now as one. The first was built in the year 1900, or thereabout, and the second in 1915, and was opened for worship on the second Sunday in January 1916.

The history of the churches has often been a history of struggle. This church has been no exception in that case. Periods of sunshine and shadow have come and gone. At times failure has seemed almost inevitable, but out of the clouds the sun would shine again, and out of these alternating experiences has come at last a day of growth and progress. A spirit of earnestness, enthusiasm, and optimism at present so pervades the membership that a still larger and a better day in the future in the Master's service is assured.

After some years of toil and sacrifice mingled with a measure of faith and prayer, it now gives us pleasure to present this building with its furniture and fixtures unto Him Who is the Author of every good gift to be dedicated in the honor of His name and to the cause of truth and righteousness in the earth.

All in all the day was one of joy and gladness, of victory and inspiration, out of which comes to the church a forward and an upward look.

A VISIT TO WAKE COUNTY

On Friday, June 13, I left for Fuquay Springs, going by way of Raleigh. I arrived at the home of Brother K. B. Johnson, Varina, N. C., in the afternoon and spent the night pleasantly, seeing many old friends. On Saturday I visited the Springs and Wake Chapel church where I met a number of friends. We had a pleasant service. Rev. J. Lee Johnson, the pastor, is doing a great work at Wake Chapel. On Sunday we attended services at this dear old church where I commenced working in 1857. They have an excellent church, well furnished and a good organ of which Miss Ruth Johnson, a former Elon student, is organist. It is indeed a delightful place to worship.

What a change in the community since I organized the church at Wake Chapel! The Springs then had but three or four cabins where a few families would gather for the improvement of their health. Not a railroad was near, but now two roads are located near. Varina depot is in sight and a quantity of tobacco is sold in these two places. They have a fine school building with good teachers and prosperity seems to be in everything. At Varina I met many old friends and preached to a crowded house on Sunday. We had a delightful service and I saw many dear friends, among them being K. B. Johnson, Beale Johnson, J. Lee Johnson, the Ballentines, Smiths, Dr. Judd and family, and many others that I cannot recall. I spent nearly a week in the community. I saw Rev. R. P. Crumpler, who was once a student at Elon, and family. I never spent a more pleasant week than I did with these dear people. May God bless them.

CONCORD

On Saturday, May 24, 1919, at four o'clock, a few members of the Concord church assembled. After preaching by the pastor the second quarterly business was called. Some improvements have been made among which was the putting of a new fence around the graveyard. There was a special effort to get started on finishing some formerly started improvements. We hope to see it done by the revival meeting which will begin the fourth Sunday in July. Rev. J. F. Apple of Elon College has promised to assist in the preaching. Brother Apple is well known to this congregation.

The fourth Sunday in May was designated as Memorial Day which has been a custom of the church to observe for many years. Rev. C. B. Riddle was to be with us under the auspices of the Woman's Missionary Society. On account of a heavy rain that Sunday we were unable to have services.

A very large crowd assembled the fourth Sunday in June. The church has met its quota for Elon Standardization Fund, for which I am grateful.

CHAPLAIN BLACK RETURNING

The many friends of Rev. B. F. Black will be delighted to know that he is expecting to return from France about August 1. Brother Black has entered very heartily into his work across the seas and gathered therefrom much valuable experience. He is anxious to be back in the pastorate and will be glad to correspond with any churches needing a pastor. In the meantime he will be glad to assist brethren needing his services in their protracted meetings, or speak on his "Experiences Over the Sea." Address him at Elon College, N. C.

MOORE UNION

On Sunday, June 22, I had the pleasure of preaching, and presenting the call of the Elon Standardization Fund to a large congregation at my old home church, Moore Union. With only a few minutes on the grounds after the services, (on account of sickness in my family, I was compelled to make the round trip from Chapel Hill in the same day), the church's allotment to the Fund was subscribed.

Rev. P. T. Klapp is the beloved pastor at this place and under his leadership Moore Union can and will do things.

GRAHAM-HAW RIVER CHARGE

Perhaps the friends of Graham and Haw River would be interested to know something of the work that is being done on this field. I have spent a little more than a half year on this field as resident pastor and find it to be a good place to live and work. The people are very responsive and are willing to work when directed. There is need for two pastors on this field, if not three.

Last fall the churches were having preaching ser-VICES and Sunday school and the ladies of Graham and Haw River were doing good work in the Ladies' Aid Society and Woman's Missionary Society. Now there is a mid-week prayer meeting in these churches and a thriving Christian Endeavor Society in all three churches. The New Providence Society has been publishing a little paper each week for some time and is installing a printing press so it can do its own printing. The young people are very much interested in the Endeavor work and I prophesy great things for these churches if this work is continued.

From a financial stand point the churches have far exceeded previous records. They have increased the pastor's salary and at the same time bought a parsonage and made improvements on the churches. The first half of this year Graham alone raised more than three thousand dollars. This is a small amount for a big church of wealthy people but a large amount for a small church with limited means. Haw River has bought song books and a pipe tone organ and is preparing the basement of the church for Sunday school rooms. The Sunday school has more than doubled its membership during the last few months. More room is necessary at once.

This field has not been without its sorrows, however. My record of funerals reads as follows: December 13, Mrs. J. N. H. Clendennin, members of Graham; Dec. 24, Mrs. Malinda Whitsell of Haw River; January 17, Jno L. Ward, infant, of Haw River; January 20, Rufus B. Heritage, son of Treasurer Heritage of New Providence, killed in auto wreck; March 10, John G. Longest, member of Graham; April 11, Mrs. C. D. Johnston, wife of the Orphanage Superintendent, supporter of Graham though a member of Howard's Chapel; May 26, Mrs. Annie Albright, oldest daughter of Brother W. H. Holt, member of New Providence. There are several others who are not members of the Christian church. Many vacant chairs are in our midst, but we look to the better home where we all hope to be soon.

Revival services begin tomorrow, June 29, at New Providence and July 17 at Haw River. Rev. R. F. Brown is to preach for us at New Providence and Rev. H. S. Hardestie at Haw River. Each series will last ten days or more. We invite all who can attend and all to pray for the success of the services.

The country is advised by Mr. Wilson that he has no authority to make null and void the prohibition measure enacted for the duration of the war. A part of the measure reads: " * * * until the conclusion of the present war and thereafter until the termination of the demobilization, the date of which shall be determined and proclaimed by the President * * * " The war is over, but the demobilization is not. Bad for the beerites and liquorites, but good for the country. They close July 1.

MISSIONARY

THE SPIRIT OF SERVICE AND OF SACRIFICE

Perhaps our most apparent gain through the war is the most marvelous development of a spirit of service and even of sacrifice. The spirit of unselfish service became the law of common life. On his first return from Europe after the war began, Dr. Mott reported how this spirit had swept Europe so that a distinguished government leader said to him on one occasion when Dr. Mott was questioning our right to claim of certain men certain great service, "Dr. Mott, you will not find a selfish man in Europe today." Discount as we may the permanency or the depth of this spirit of service, the fact remains that with the advent of the war, suddenly, as by magic, the law of unselfishness for which the missionary enterprise had so long borne witness, became the common practice of the world. Where once it was irritating to business circles to have philanthropic proposals leave the rather small worlds in which they had been given birth, and the brazen statement that "business is business" was supposed to set the money-earning powers of men free from all claims to generosity, the war somehow changed all that: Dollar-a-year appointments became respectable, almost popular; corporations found it quite business-like to vote contributions to the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A.; firms readjusted the work of their staffs to set some major members and numerous minor members of the firm free for unremunerative war service while the rest "carried on" each man with a double load; Congress found it constitutional to vote $100,000,000 to relief work; the public rallied to appeal after appeal for all the varied forms of war service until an aggregate of a thousand million dollars is estimated to have been freely contributed to such causes. Nor did men stop with money; life itself was poured out like water. The Allied dead number well over five million of the cream of these nations; and this takes no reckoning of lives laid down in like spirit and often much more sacrificially by those who belonged to civilian classes, a yet greater number of women and a host of children, too—whose measure of courage in carrying increasing burdens, and of sacrifice in making constant self-denial, yielded to them also the crown of death. So, as some one has put it, we have come to realize "the undreamed of resources and splendor of even ordinary human nature, when touched by sacrifice into fire. And so we have discovered, too, our own past mistake—the common mistake of the majority of modern Christians—that of asking of men, in Christ's Name, not too much, but too little."

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Warren H. Denison, Superintendent

The Superintendent spent June 15-17 with Hannas Creek church in the Eastern Indiana Conference. Rev. Fred Stovenour, eighty-five years of age, has been preaching at this church for twenty-one years. There are eighty members on the church roll and the gifts for the Forward Movement work were $6,535.00 with the promise of more pledges. The men of the church left their work in the absence of their pastor and gave their hearty co-operation. Mrs. Olive Lafuse did a splendid thing in giving $1,000 to the Forward Movement as a memorial to her husband, William Henry Lafuze, who was an active Christian worker, both in his church and in the Conference. There is no more beautiful act that one can do than to give a fund of money to some Christian agency such as the Forward Movement, or as several have done, for Elon College in its present financial canvass.

The Indiana State Christian Conference and the Illinois State Christian Conference held splendid joint session at Merom, Indiana, June 10 and 11. The heartiest kind of endorsement was given to the Forward Movement. Nearly a third of the membership of the denomination is located within these two states and large opportunity and responsibility rests upon the workers and the leadership of these Conferences.

The American Christian Convention at its last session adopted a reconstruction policy for the Christian Church and ordered that it should be issued from the Forward Movement office. The program has been printed and is now ready for use by all pastors and church workers. Sufficient copies for your church workers may be had for the asking. It will be suggestive to pastors and other church workers and should be in their hands. Please write to the Forward Movement office for as many copies as you need.

All Sunday schools are asked during July, August, and September to lay special emphasis upon such matters as will deepen the devotional and worship spirit of the Sunday school. A goodly number of churches during April and June came to the place of a Standard Sunday school. We hope that others will report by the end of June that they too have reached a Standard school. There are many things that will help the worship in the Sunday school; among them, we suggest that the officers and teachers read some book especially prepared for such help. Some of those books are: "The Training of the Devotional Life"—Kennedy & Myers, "The Devotional Life of the Sunday School Workers"—Prewbaker, "The Spiritual Life of the Sunday School"—Chapman; to encourage and secure pledges for observance of the Quiet Hour; carry and use your Bibles at church and Sunday school; encourage the Pocket Testament League; emphasize definite prayer for definite causes and persons.

Rev. J. W. Wellons will preach at Good Hope, Granville County, the second Sunday in July and at Antioch, Chatham County, the third Sunday in July.

REMEMBER THE ORPHANAGE IN YOUR WILL

I sometimes wonder how many friends of the Christian Orphanage who have money and property to give to charitable purposes have made provision in their wills for a part of it to go to the Orphanage?

Suppose in writing that document—that is, to make the final distribution of your worldly possessions after you are gone—that you remember the Christian Orphanage and leave a portion of it to care for some worthy child, and from this portion of your estate a child is taken care of, trained and educated, and goes out into the world as a teacher to train the young to live and do right and be honest and upright citizens; or suppose that this child grows up to be a preacher to carry the message of the gospel to the unsaved; or perhaps the child becomes a trained nurse to administer to the sick and nurse them back to health, what a lasting monument you have built for yourself! You have built one that will last throughout the years of eternity, the value of which cannot be estimated. Could you help a more worthy cause than that of the little helpless children who have been unfortunate, and who are worthy of your love, your sympathy and your sacrifice?

If you have already written this final document and have left the Orphanage out, I appeal to you to add another clause and make provision for the fatherless. If you have not written it, then when you do, remember the little helpless ones who need your help and sacrifice.

Our friends still remember us and the following contributions have been received: J. Walter Johnston, 1 bushel seed corn; Mrs. J. T. Williams, one counterpane, two sheets, one pair pillow cases; Hon. C. D. West, one bag of peanuts.

A LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley:—I am a little girl ten years old. I want to join the band of cousins. Grandma Preston promised me a dime each month to send to the little orphans. I hope they are well and having a good time. Enclosed find my dime for June.—Ethelene Struder.

We give you a warm welcome and trust that you will write each month. I wish many of the little children would write for the corner.—“Uncle Charley.”

SEASIDE CHAUTAUQUA

Virginia Beach, July 29-August 5

Mr. W. C. Pearce, one of the best known Sunday school men of this country, will be at the Chautauqua and give two Chautauqua lectures and two class messages on different phases of Christian leadership. The Chautauqua management counts itself fortunate to secure this great field secretary of the International Sunday School Association. Mr. Pearce will give the opening message to the Chautauqua on Tuesday night, July 29. Every one who expects to attend the Chautauqua should be present.

Church Problems

Almost every church has some particular church problem. One period a day will be given to the discussion of church problems under the leadership of persons capable of speaking on those problems. Some of the problems to be considered are, “The Community Church,” “The Church for the New Time,” “The Merger Church and Sunday School Service,” “Christian Stewardship,” “The Sunday Evening Service.” It will be very valuable for ministers and church workers.

The Commissions on Christian Unity from the Christian Church and from the Disciples of Christ will hold their meeting at the Seaside Chautauqua this year. The members of the Christian Church Commission are: Rev. F. G. Coffin, Rev. J. F. Burnett, Rev. W. H. Denison, Mr. Hermon Eldredge, Rev. John MacCalman, Rev. O. B. Whitaker, President W. A. Harper and Rev. P. S. Sailor. The Disciples of Christ Commission is headed by Rev. Peter Ainslie.

Rev. H. G. Rowe has arrived hom from “Y” service over seas and will speak daily on Sunday school organization. Rev. J. V. Knight, Greensboro, N. C., and Rev. R. F. Brown, Durham, N. C., will conduct the Christian Endeavor work. The Sunday morning service will be a merger service illustrating the merging of the morning church and Sunday school services. The sermon will be by Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, Urbana, Ill. Mr. Hermon Eldredge will be the superintendent. Now is the time to plan to be at the greatest Chautauqua session we have yet had and carry back to your church the best methods and plans for these reconstruction days. Write S. M. Smith, Chamber of Commerce Building, Norfolk, Virginia for information concerning rooms, rates and time tables.

ODDS AND ENDS

Smile when you can. Heaven alone can reveal its worth. Live up to all the light you have and trust the rest to God.

God loveth a cheerful liver. Christians should be the happiest people in the world. There is no reason why we should put on a long face when Jesus takes up his abode in our hearts.

God pity that man whose mind is so narrow that he believes his Church contains all the good people in the world.

It is not all of life to live. If we fail to properly use the talent which God has intrusted to our care, we have failed to accomplish God’s purpose in creating us. Therefore we have lost all.

Why are we so unthankful, unhappy, miserable? Certainly we should not be thus. God created us in his own image and has placed all things at our disposal which can contribute to our happiness in this life.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

IN OLD VIRGINIA AND NORTH CAROLINA

The week just closing has been spent almost entirely in the field of Rev. J. M. Roberts, in Eastern Virginia and Gates County, North Carolina. Brother Jesse was with me at Oak Grove and Cypress Chapel. Monday evening we separated to meet Wednesday morning at Ivor to canvass that loyal people and Johnson’s Grove.

Brother Roberts had gone home to see his two sick children. They were taken worse and I have not seen his smiling face since. Wednesday morning came a brief telegram telling the sad news, and Thursday a letter overtook me, as follows: “Children are worse. Charlotte has pneumonia in both lungs and J. M. Jr., we fear, has typhoid fever. He had two hemorrhages yesterday afternoon and last night at eleven. We are very anxious about him. Tomorrow will be the 21st day since he was first taken sick.” I am sure all hearts will deeply sympathize with Brother Roberts and family in this sad hour and that many prayers will be offered up in their behalf.

Rev. J. L. Foster, “Uncle Jim,” we call him, came to my rescue for Johnson’s Grove, Brother L. H. Brantley and Brother B. H. Lane helping me through at Ivor. I then headed it to Gates and the Lord had one of the Kingdom’s noble men waiting for me in the person of Brother Sam Harrell, who gave me a subscription and delivered safely despite rain and “tough” roads to Brother Dempsey Harrell’s, who subscribed, took care of me, decided to send his daughter to Elon this fall, and conveyed me from place to place, rain or no rain, with mud all the time. His church, Sarem, went on over.

I next found myself in the home of my friend of many years, Deacon T. A. Eure. His beloved wife is now in Heaven, but his two daughters make his heart glad and did mine too. We are now -at work in Eure's church and hope for good results.

When Eure's and Damascus are through, the churches I was to visit in the drive are canvassed and then I can wend my way home where work in plenty in the beloved atmosphere of home awaits me.

Funds This Week

Brother R. S. Holland, Cypress Chapel church in loving memory of his brother, I. C. Holland, a student of Elon in my college days.

Brother Letcher Gay, upon solicitation by Dr. W. W. Staley, in memory of his wife.

Mrs. E. J. Brickhouse, Norfolk, Va., in memory of her sainted husband.

Finally, Brethren

Give our Heavenly Father thanks for His blessings upon our Brotherhood in the success of this drive. To Him be all the praise.

W. A. HARPER.

Editorial Note:—Since receiving the above we are informed by President Harper that every church in Bro. Robert's field, including Eure, has done her part. We have also been advised by 'phone from the College office that two other funds have been established—A. B. Hartz and wife, and Dr. and Mrs. S. W. Caddell.

C. B. R.

President Wilson is on his way home from Europe.

Rev. J. F. Apple preached for the Christian (Disciples) at Pinetown, Beaufort County, two nights last week.

No Sunday school and Christian Endeavor notes this week. The matter reached us too late to be included in this issue.

Germany signed the Peace Treaty on Saturday, June 28. She said that she wouldn't sign, couldn't sign, but she did sign. China, at the last moment, failed to sign, but no great significance is attached to that.

Brother F. C. Lester figures that four additional subscriptions to THE SUN from each church in the Convention would bring the list up to 3,000 and says that he is going after the four from each of his churches. Good! Next!

Dr. E. Oscar Randolph, one of THE SUN's loyal subscribers, who for the past year has been teacher of Geology in the A. and M. College, Bryan, Texas, changes his address to Chapel Hill, N. C., where he will be located during the summer, teaching in the Department of Geology.

We have before us the last issue of The Herald of Gospel Liberty, under Dr. J. P. Barrett's editorship. He bids his brethren farewell in the editorial field, thanks the friends and foes and asks that support be given to his successor, Rev. A. M. Kerr, D. D., and we speak for this section of the Brotherhood a loyal support to the new editor.

For some time great dissatisfaction has been growing out of the work of Postmaster General Burleson. The American Federation of Labor, in its annual session at Atlantic City, New Jersey, the other day, demanded that the present Postmaster General be removed. The probability is that he will be asked to leave the service.

Brother W. E. Cook, Mebane, N. C., called at this office last last week for the purpose of subscribing to the Elon Endowment Fund. Some days ago the Editor was in Brother Cook's church community in the interest of the College, but Brother Cook was away from home. He said that he wanted to have a part. We can think and feel it, but we have no words to express our appreciation of such acts. Steward of the Kingdom he is.

Just as we started to press this (Monday) morning, the telegram shown on page 16, was received. It reached Burlington at 10:34 as shown on the message. It reached this office at 10:50. The messenger boy brought us the message while we were standing on the outside of THE SUN office talking with Hon. R. T. Kernodle, the only man who has given $5,000.00 in cash toward the Elon Standardization Fund. Others have given that amount, but Brother Kernodle is the only man to make his subscription in cash. Next to the Editor, he was the first man to read the telegram. How fitting! Better still: How he rejoiced! He said, "good" and that is what say we all.

Pounded! Of course so—yes "cashed," "checked" and "honeyed," (who can beat that?), Mt. Auburn church, a place where THE SUN is popular, remembered the Editor the other day with a check for $26.60, while Brother T. H. Crocker, Middleburg, N. C., a member of Mt. Auburn, remembered us with a check for $20.00. Brother Crocker is a shoe salesman. He is not only interested in soles, but souls. "A friend" recently made us a gift of $5.00 (in cash), while Mrs. W. G. Teague, Route 2, Siler City, N. C., sent us recently a fine jar of honey, the finest that we have ever seen. So you see how we have been "cashed," "checked," and "honeyed" and all this happened in June. Of course we feel like a June bride. Thank you, kind friends, and God bless and multiply your kind is our wish.

Brother Irving Hitchcock, 801 Allison Street, Washington, D. C., is interested in locating all members of the Christian Church who live at the Nation's capital. Let any interested write him. If you have friends in Washington give Brother Hitchcock their names and their location.

THE BOY THAT LAUGHS

I know a funny little boy—
The happiest ever born;
His face is like a beam of joy.
Although his clothes are torn.

I saw him tumble on his nose,
And waited for a groan—
But how he laughed! Do you suppose
He struck his funny bone?

There's sunshine in each word he speaks,
His laugh is something grand;
Its ripples overrun his cheeks,
Like waves on snowy sand.

He laughs the moment he awakes,
And till the day is done;
The schoolroom for a joke he takes;
His lessons are but fun.

No matter how the day may go,
You cannot make him cry;
He's worth a dozen boys I know
Who pout and mope and sigh.

—Exchange.

PLAIN WHITE

Mary June caught sight of the tired little figure by the big range as soon as she reached the kitchen door. "I'll dish up the potatoes, mother," she called out, cheerily.

Mother turned. She was a little frail woman, with soft brown eyes.

"That you, dear?" she said, with a relieved sigh. "Run in, please, and see if the table is all right. Mrs. Jackson is bringing a friend to dinner today and I do want everything to be nice."

"Poor little mother!" she whispered. "She's forgotten to give Mr. Snodgrass a napkin and Mrs. Willets hasn't any fork. It's just a shame she has to work so hard. Boarders are no fun and she has had them so long. If father had just lived," and then Mary June, supplying the missing napkin, sighed a little.

Father had not lived and mother had been obliged to work, and work very hard, to keep food in their mouths and a roof over their heads and Mary June in school.

After seeing that the table lacked nothing Mary June went back to the kitchen, and for the next few minutes both were so busy that neither spoke. It was just after dinner that the opportunity came.

"Marjory Mills has invited me to her party," said Mary June, suddenly.

"She has?" answered mother, and then just a little shadow crept over the sweet, tired face, for Mary June would have to have a new dress if she went to the party, and with the high cost of living, how was she to give it to her?

When her bills were met there was scarcely anything left. For boarders, to be permanent, must be well fed, and Mary June's mother could not economize at their expense.

Mary June saw the look, and when she came back from the pantry she put her arms about her. "Now, mother," she said, fondly, "if that party is going to worry you, I won't go."

"But your dress," protested mother, faintly.

"Well," replied Mary June, with a practical air, "I've about figured out the dress. What the other girls wear must not influence me. Wasn't it grandma who used to say that we must not 'measure our oats in other people's half bushels'? In other words, what the rest of the world has need not concern us."

"And I thought," added Mary June, in her sweet young voice, "that if you could get me a few yards of plain white goods I could make it myself after school."

Mother looked at Mary June. "Plain white" she repeated.

Mary June nodded. "Plain white and nothing else. The goods won't cost much and the making nothing. And I can go to the party after all.

"You remember the little rhyme of the 'Birds' Ball' you used to tell me about, and what Jenny Wren said? The other birds were all going to dress up, but Jenny Wren said:

"I must wear my brown gown,
And never look too fine."

"I'm Jenny Wren and my mother keeps boarders. But when I get to teaching after I have my diploma, she's going to rest. We can both have better clothes then, but just now it has to be plain white. Why, mother, I don't care a bit, really. That Alice will wear pink chiffon and Edith blue messaline and Mildred lace does not matter to me. If my mother is willing I will be happy to go in the plain white."

For a moment mother did not reply. She could not. Mary June was such a help, and so unselfish, asking for so little always.

And then she saw Mary June in the plain white, with her sweet, glowing young face and her brown curls, and she knew that even in a plain white dress Mary June would still be Mary June—the sweetest little daughter in the world. It was worth all her struggles to feel that. A tear ran down the pale cheek, but there was joy in her heart.

"We will get the plain white, dear," she said, huskily.—Susan Hubbard Martin, in Baptist Boys and Girls.

Mrs. E. J. Hicks—Please renew my subscription to THE SUN which I enjoy reading so much.

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

By Cleora H. Read

O God, I thank Thee that I can see:

The blue of the ocean; the green of the hills against the sunset sky; the moon-lit world; the autumn-tinted forests; the eager smile of youth; the love-light in a mother's eyes; the courage in a father's face; the wonders, the glories all around. For these I thank Thee.

I thank Thee that I can hear:

The singing of birds; the murmur of the tide against the shore; the sighing of the wind among the trees; the laughter of little children; the crooning of a lullaby; the many harmonies throughout this world of Thine. For these I thank Thee.

I thank Thee that I can feel:

The balmy air; the winter's chill; the rushing wind; the love of friends; my baby's kiss; the comforts of home; the manifold blessings of the life that Thou hast given me. For these I thank Thee.

I pray Thee that my eyes be closed, my hearing dull, my feeling lost to envy, hate, maliciousness and shame, for these are not of Thee.

But may my heart know loving sympathy and cheerful ministry and my spoken words bring comfort. May I show truth and steadfastness when all the way is bright and peaceful faith when all my life seems dark. Thus only may I strive to make myself as Thou wouldst have Thy children. Amen.

WHAT IS MY CROSS?

As the shadow of the Cross begins to darken the road along which, in reverent retrospect, we are following the Master, we are fallen low indeed if we do not feel the reproach of the passion of our Lord, lending new and searching significance to the threshold command of Jesus, "If any man will come after me . . . let him take up his Cross . . ."

Thou sayest, Take up thy cross,

O man, and follow me.

Thy voice comes strange o'er years of change,

How can we follow Thee?

What are our crosses? The little sacrifices and self-denials to which sometimes we are compelled, to which sometimes we compel ourselves, seem too inadequate. Is there no middle way between trivialities which do not deserve that august and hallowed name and self-crucifixions whose barrenness does but mock their austerity?

What was Jesus' Cross? It was, in those aspects which we are called upon to imitate, no more assumption of sorrow, fate or penalty. It grew out of the main purpose of his life. It was what He had come to do and to be, followed clean through to the end. The hostility of the leaders of His people set up the post of it; His courage spread the arms of it. He began by teaching, whosoever would hear, healing whosoever would be restored, cleansing whosoever would be made clean. That was His central essential service, the great continuing thing for which He was commissioned.

Our own Crosses are like His. They are not austerities and limitations which we have searched out; they are holy tasks which search us out, lifted to splendid and fruitful conclusions. A man's Cross is the thing he was meant to do, done as Christ would have him do it, his own distinctive task in which he spends and expends himself, his contribution to the kingdom of God. The Cross of the teacher is his teaching, of the doctor his healing, of the minister his preaching, of the business man the administration of his business, all carried, in the spirit of the Lord Christ, to those fulfillments which crown them with fruitfulness and power, by men who are halted by no barriers of pain or fear, but, true to themselves and their Master, find in the completion of their tasks the consummation of their discipleship.

The sorrow and pain of the Cross are its accidents; the joy of it is eternal. There are men to whom it has been given again and again to render the last full measure of devotion to holy and accepted causes who through it all have walked in ever increasing fullness of life and in ways seemingly remote from the bitterness of Golgotha. None the less they bore their Crosses and were comrades of the Christ. Nay, they were prophets of what Christ meant cross-bearing should be in those diviner and ampler days which He died to make possible.

Most men who follow great causes to grave and consistent ends find themselves, at least once, called to those roads of loneliness which lead across the slopes of the hill of crucifixion or even to its crest. The world is not yet so constituted that we can be wholly true to the ideal without paying the price. Yet even then the Cross is not merely the lonely, tragic culmination of hostility between far-seeing love and short-sighted hate. Even then our Crosses are the supreme tasks of our life, the great work of love and service to which we have long been committed. Whether on ways of light or hills of pain, to have served is to have borne the Cross, to have been true to holy love is to have shared the secret of the Master.—The Congregationalist.

A good word is just as easily spoken as an evil one. Kind speech is as easy as profane language and is often invaluable, while profanity is absolutely useless and vile.—Young People.

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor

NORTH CAROLINA SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION

Every Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Society of the North Carolina Christian Conference should be represented at the first Convention in the new State Conference. The place is Shallow Well Christian church and the time is July 15-17.

Has your school appointed delegates? See that it is done next Sunday. Appoint delegates who will attend and help to make a great Convention. It is of importance that your school shall be represented. The Convention needs you and you need the Convention. This is the day of great Conventions. All causes are using them and finding them helpful. Will our Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies use the coming Convention and become a blessing to themselves and others?

A splendid program has been prepared. There is help for all in its execution. The Convention will suggest to you how you may have a better Sunday school or Christian Endeavor Society. Attend the Convention with a prepared heart and mind. Take in all you can and carry back home to your work the largest inspiration possible.

Another thing of great importance is a well prepared report. Let secretaries and superintendents see that reports are properly prepared before they are sent to the Convention. Give your school or Society credit for all it is doing. Report on all vital matters and let us know what you are doing. Your school may be an example to others. Exert the best influence possible. Let your light shine. Do not put it under a bushel by means of a poorly prepared report. Have the report from your school in good shape and bring it to the Convention with lots of good cheer. Let's realize we are in big business—business that is abundant—worth while.

The Convention has a live, wide-awake president in Brother C. H. Stephenson of Raleigh. He is doing his best for a great Convention. He is vitally interested in Sunday school work. He is enthusiastic about it.

Let us rally about him. Let's help him. Let's heed his calls.

The Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention of which the writer is Chairman, is back of the Convention in the strongest way possible. We are expecting a great Convention.

J. W. HARRELL,
Chairman.

A CHALLENGE TO CHRISTIAN ENDEAVORERS

All denominations in the State having Christian Endeavor Societies are planning great things for their work during the next Christian Endeavor Convention year, and are coming to the next State Convention in Greensboro June 11-13, 1920, with a great work done. Ours must not be behind the times, and it is for the purpose of stirring interest that this challenge to the Christian Endeavorers in our churches in North Carolina is given. What will you do about it, Christian Endeavorers? Here it is:

What do you say about having a rally day at some central point, at a date not later than September 25, for the purpose of getting our Christian Endeavor workers together, laying plans, stirring up enthusiasm, making a drive for the organization of new Societies, reviving the dead ones, and placing before our people a definite program of work?

It seems to me that a rally day of this kind would be one of the most helpful meetings our work could have, and it would help to stimulate the work in such a manner as to make Christian Endeavor one of the most interesting topics of our coming Conference next fall. What about it, Christian Endeavor officers, committees and Societies? This work is recognized by the State Christian Endeavor Union, and will be given recognition in the Convention work, provided the plans are worked.

In the interest of the State work, and the work of the Christian Church in North Carolina I make this appeal to you in behalf of Christian Endeavor.

J. VINCENT KNIGHT, Pres.

THE BOOKS OF THE BIBLE

Do you know many books are in the Bible? You once knew, but have forgotten? Let me tell you one good way to remember, so as never to forget. First, write down the words "Old Testament."

Now, how many letters are in the word "old"? Three. How many in the word "Testament"? Nine. Put three and nine together and you have 39—the number of books in the Old Testament.

Next, write down the words "New Testament."

There are also in "New" and "Testament" 3 and 9 letters. Now, multiply 3 and 9 and you have 27—the number of books in the New Testament.

Of course by adding 39 and 27, you have 66—the number of books in the Bible.

Any boy or girl who will read this over twice will never forget how many books are in the Bible.—Select-ed.

JANKOVSKY-THOMPSON

Married, June 18, 1919 at the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. Anna Jankovsky, near Waverly, Va., Miss Anna E. Jankovsky and Mr. George M. Thompson of Robinson County, Kentucky, at 2:30 P. M., in the presence of the family and a few friends.

Miss Jankovsky is one of Virginia's splendid daughters who loved home and mother and is the last of five sisters to leave and go out set up a new home.

Mr. Thompson is one of Kentucky's substantial farmers and with so splendid a wife the friends wish them a happy home and long, useful life. The ceremony was performed by the pastor of Waverly Christian church.

OBITUARIES

HOBBY

Mrs. Virginia Atkinson Hobby departed this life June 18, 1919. She was the daughter of George Atkinson, deceased, and Alice Atkinson, living. She married T. C. Hobby, son of S. M. Hobby, Raleigh, N. C., and to them were born six children, all living. The youngest child is only about two months old. Besides her husband and children she leaves behind three sisters, Mrs. Sadie Jones, Mrs. Vivian Stephenson and Mrs. Ethel Smith and three half brothers, J. O. Atkinson, Moses Atkinson and C. H. Stephenson.

Mrs. Hobby had for several years been a member of Wentworth Christian church. Her body was laid to rest at the family burying ground at Mr. S. M. Hobby's country home. Services were conducted by Rev. George D. Eastes, Raleigh, and the writer. May God's richest blessing rest upon the bereaved.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

WELLONS

Virginia Murdur Wellons was born November 10, 1833. On February 14, 1860 she was married to M. M. English, and after his death on August 23, she was married to Z. W. Wellons. She died June 20, 1919, aged 85 years, 7 months and 10 days. She is survived by three children, Mrs. M. L. Williams of Petersburg, Va.; Mrs. J. E. Barrett, and J. W. Wellons of Wakefield, Va., 5 grandchildren and one great grandchild.

She was converted and joined Barrett's Christian church when about 18 years old, and remained a member till death. Burial on the fourth Sunday in June at 2 o'clock in the family burying ground on the English farm, by the pastor. She selected text for her funeral occasion: Rev. 14:13.

LEE

Willis John Lee, son of Capt. P. H. Lee and Mrs. Joanna Lee, was born in Nausemond County, Virginia, January 12, 1846, and died at his home, near Bennett's Creek, Nausemond County, Virginia, May 20, 1919, at the age of 73 years, 4 months and 8 days. On May 25, 1869, he married Miss Mary Jemet Jones, daughter of the late William Henry Jones, Sr. This was a happy marriage. Their devotion was tender and beautiful. Brother Lee fell asleep just five days before the fiftieth anniversary of his marriage.

Brother Lee united with Holy Neck Christian church when a young man, and after his marriage, united with Berea, Nausemond, church. He was truly devoted to his church. Punctual and faithful in attendance, active and loyal in supporting the work of the church and the Kingdom. He was generous in his contributions and personal interest in the organization of Memorial Temple, Newport News, Portsmouth and many other Christian churches of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference. He helped many churches throughout the Southern Christian Convention. He was an honored and faithful trustee of Elon College from the founding of that institution till his death. He was also a trustee of the Christian Orphanage, and was one of a committee of three who located the institution at Elon College, N. C. He was a veteran of the Civil War, serving in the Confederate forces, Co. I, 13th Va. Regiment-Cavalry. He was a brave and honored soldier. It would be difficult to give even a synopsis of this useful life. He was industrious and successful as a business man; in the forefront as a progressive farmer; true and faithful as a friend; generous, consecrated Christian gentleman. His was a great, good life. He was modest, humble and deeply spiritual. He is not dead but sleepeth. How beautiful to fall asleep at the end of such a worthy life. He walked with God. His funeral service was conducted at Berea church by the pastor, assisted by Revs. W. W. Staley, C. H. Rowland, W. V. Savage, G. O. Lankford, W. M. Jay and Dr. W. A. Harper. His body was laid to rest in Cedar Hill, Suffolk, Va. His dear, devoted wife and all the other members of his family have the prayers and sympathy of many friends.

I. W. JOHNSON.

RESOLUTION OF RESPECT— STEPHENSON

Whereas, it hat pleased our Heavenly Father to call from labor to reward, Deacon William M. Stephenson, on May 20, 1919; and whereas, Deacon Stephenson has always done his duty as a member and deacon of Isle of Wight Christian church; and whereas, his life of humility and service has been of great benefit to his church and to Christianity, therefore, BE IT RESOLVED:

1. That while we realize our loss and sadly miss him from his place among us, yet we humbly bow to the will of Him Who doeth all things well.

2. That we thus record our deep feeling of gratitude for his life among us, and the Christian example of word and deed he has left for us to follow.

3. That we express our most sincere sympathy to his widow, and to the other members of his family. May the Comforter of man be with them in this, their bereavement.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be entered upon the records of the church, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy sent to the family.

"IN ESSENTIALS UNITY, IN NON-ESSENTIALS LIBERTY, IN ALL THINGS CHARITY"

Deal Directly With Christ

Bishop J. C. Ryle

E that thirsts and wants relief must come to Christ himself. He must not be content with coming to his church and his ordinances or to the assemblies of his people for prayer and praise. He must not stop short even at his holy table. He that is content with only drinking these waters shall "thirst again." He must go higher, farther, much farther than this. He must have personal dealings with Christ himself; all else in religion is worthless without him. The King's palace, the attendant servants, the richly furnished banquetting house, the very banquet itself—all are nothing unless we speak with the King. His hand alone can take the burden off our backs and make us feel free. The hand of man may take the stone from the grave and show the dead, but none but Jesus can say to the dead: "Come forth and live." We must deal directly with Christ.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

ODDS AND ENDS FROM THE EDITOR'S NOTE BOOK

On July 2, Rev. J. E. Franks, the pastor who has never claimed to have finished canvassing his field in the interest of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, sent this office five new subscribers. On July 7, he started another list of eleven in our direction, which makes a total of sixteen to his credit since July 1. Brother Franks has secured fifty-three subscribers for THE SUN since January 1 of this year.

Some of our ministers write that they are unable to get any new subscribers. These letters come from pastors, where, according to our mailing list, the least number of copies of THE SUN go. So far as we are able to say there are more copies of THE CHRISTIAN SUN being mailed to the field of Rev. J. E. Franks than any other pastor in the Southern Christian Convention, no church, city or rural, excepted. This proves to us beyond a shadow of a doubt that there are families in every church that ought to have THE SUN and would take it if the proposition was put up to them.

Let us repeat what we have said before that the way to get subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN (and the pastors who are the most successful tell us that this is their way) is to go to see the people for that purpose only, tell them that it is your only mission on that day, your only business and that you have come in the interest of the Kingdom through the Church paper.

We believe that if each minister in the Convention would give one day's work wholly, without any reservation, in the interest of THE SUN that the list would climb from 2,200 to 3,000. How many will do it?

Prohibition has now become a part of our basic law. That it should fail of enforcement through apathy, or in consequence of the influence of special interests, is inconceivable in a democratic country. Whatever vigilance is necessary to make the law effective will surely not be lacking.

The passing of the saloon which with all its pernicious influences, was yet a social center to a multitude of men, creates a new obligation to replace it with wholesome equivalents. Community centers, the church as a social center, fraternal orders and private clubs, public recreation, education in the use of leisure time,—all these should be developed rapidly and with great power and attractiveness. Especially should our churches be opened seven days in the week, with helpful religious, educational and social activities. But let us remember that the best equivalent is the home, and that whatever makes homes possible and renders them beautiful surpasses every other method.

Possibly the greatest question before the public today is the League of Nations. There are those who oppose it and those who approve it. From an impartial viewpoint, we have reached the conclusion that the main differences center around political parties and principles. We had hoped that the uniting of all forces to win the war would mean the uniting of all forces to preserve peace and protect mankind. We do not say that the present arrangement will guarantee this, for we are not wise enough for that, but as we see it, there is no particular united effort upon the part of our leaders to find the best principle. We are aware of our ground when we speak as we do. Principle is always bigger than a party and the Church will have to show her heroism one of these days to get what the world needs. Differences between men should not become oppressions for all mankind.

Attention is being called to our Chautauqua that is soon to meet at Virginia Beach, Virginia. The Chautauqua is more than a meeting place; it is a place where practical things are talked over and talked about; a place where workers of the Church come together for fellowship, information and inspiration. Such meetings ought to be attended by many more than usually attend. So many of us are so busy with our work that we forget our fellow-workers. And too, we are often in need of new ideas and fresh inspiration that we cannot get from work and books. Human association is the finest in the world, and we entertain the hope that this summer may be signal season for our Chautauqua.

This is the usual revival season and we pray that thousands may be born again and taste of that happiness at heart that only a Christian knows. There are some fundamentals that we ought to remember in connection with those who take upon themselves this new privilege and obligation. It is unfair to the new convert to teach him that he must fight against the world, the flesh and the devil and then not give him something with which to make that fight. It is unfair to him to point out the road to happiness without showing him how to find some unfortunate who is traveling from Jerusalem to Jericho and how to heal the wounds of the traveler. We feel that many have given up the fight for the lack of a job. Goodness alone will not save a world. Happiness is born in work and not idleness. Christianity is active and seeks to do something and the new convert should be given something to do.

Wherever you go during the summer months you find young people who are talking of their educational plans next fall. It is a common scene to visit a home and find a college catalogue on the summer benches in the front porch where young men and women have been reading it. Some young people have their minds made up as to what school they will attend while others debate this question for several weeks. In our own denomination there should be no question as to the best place to go. Our people should attend our own college—Elon. That college is maintained by our own people, fosters the principles of the Church, but above all other things stands for Christian character first and always. Our ministers, we are sure, will lose no time this summer in bringing to the attention of our people the interest of Elon College.

Brother B. D. Jones, Holland, Virginia, sends this message: "I see in THE CHRISTIAN SUN that Brother Chas. D. Johnston offers to raise four subscriptions for THE SUN from his church. I will double that at Holy Neck and make it eight. Any church ought to raise eight new subscribers." Here is a challenge from a layman to a layman. Who will challenge Brother Jones and offer to double his number? Who will undertake to equal what Brother Jones is to do—and what he will do? It would be fine to have a move upon the part of laymen in the direction of what Brother Johnston and Brother Jones have offered to do. Let us hear from others.

A paper in a sister denomination announces that it has lost $48,000.00 in six years—eight thousand dollars a year. Why the loss? This paper goes on to state that in six years it has booked $48,000.00 in accounts that it has failed to collect. Think of Christian people owing that much money—honest debts so far as we know—and then will not pay it! But such is the cry with all Church papers. Week after week we see where some editor has been forced to call attention to just this sort of a thing.

Dr. W. W. Staley never forgets the cooks and those who do the drudgery work of the home. His article on page 12 is a gem and should be read by every reader of THE SUN. We hope that every tired mother will read it, and we especially recommend it to a certain class of husbands. When the world is brought to Christ it will be through efforts and bits of love from the many duties of life. In the kitchen, behind the plow, behind the counter, the desk, at the loom, and in all walks of life the Christian can sing the spirit of the Master and worship Him.

The Commission on the Church and Social Service is projecting the largest mailing in its history. Every Protestant minister in the United States will receive during July a pamphlet containing the Commission's statement on social reconstruction, its Labor Sunday message to the churches, and abstracts of significant social documents. The Labor Sunday message this year is concerned with the principle of industrial democracy. It contains information concerning new and vital tendencies in the industrial world. The churches should plan well in advance for the observance of Labor Sunday which this year comes on August 31.

In Sad Remembrance of

who passed away, officially, June 30, 1919, and left behind no real friends to mourn his going
Peace to his ashes and no return of his spirit

In one afternoon last week three persons came to THE CHRISTIAN SUN office and subscribed to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. These persons were from different pastorates. Their subscriptions made us rejoice, but the thing that bothers us is how these three persons who really wanted to take THE SUN, escaped the solicitation of their pastors. If some one can set us straight as to how these persons escaped it will give us relief of mind. Who will send the solution?

A man is not always wrong when his views fail to coincide with yours. So many of us get into the habit of under-rating our fellow-man just as soon as he fails to go in the direction that we want him to go or do the things we would have him do. Every man is free to act for himself. It is unfair to pass judgment upon our fellowman because his views do not agree with ours. It is not only unfair, but it is un-Christian and is void of the Master's way of doing things.

Brother C. D. Johnston, our enterprising Orphanage Superintendent, is still calling for help to build a home for small children. Let us remember that his pleadings are for the Church and the Kingdom's interest and not for his alone. He is sacrificing in many instances to carry on the work which we have placed upon his shoulders and the Church has no right to ask that his pleadings go unheard. The Church can build that home.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

LETTER FROM OVER THE BORDER

Liberty

Children's Day was observed first Sunday in July. The exercises were very creditable. Miss Elsie Bray and other ladies had well rehearsed the children. The program was used as supplied by our Mission Secretary. An offering was made for missions. The pastor made a short address on "The Duty of the Church to the Child," and the Communion was administered. The Sunday school, Christian Endeavor Society and Woman's Missionary Society are organizations of this church. Dr. W. C. Wicker was in this congregation recently in the interest of the Elon Standardization Fund. He was taken through the community by Deacon J. A. Bray, who is eighty-eight years of age. The people responded in a substantial way.

Lebanon

Children's Day was observed here the third Sunday in June. A large crowd was present and a very interesting and instructive program rendered under the direction of Mrs. John Pointer and others. There was a special offering for missions and an address. Lebanon has a very live Sunday school under the management of Deacon W. L. Taylor, a former Elon student. This is not a wealthy congregation, but very liberal. Besides looking well to the needs at home, these people have contributed in cash and subscriptions, since December 15, 1918, $4,500 to the general enterprises of the church.

Hebron

For several years the church building has needed remodeling. This work was planned but postponed on account of the war. Recently about $1,000 in improvements has been made. This is the congregation that the late Rev. C. C. Peel served for eleven years, and here, if I mistake not, he preached his last sermon. His memory is very dear to this people and it has been discussed to perpetuate the same by a memorial of some kind. The ladies have had a prosperous missionary society and all obligations are promptly met.

Union (Virgilina)

I am serving this church for the twelfth year. The Sunday school under the leadership of Deacon Alfred Hayes is growing. The ladies have a missionary society. Children's Day was observed the fifth Sunday in June. The program was very interesting. The children were well trained by Missess Lucy Gregory and Pearl Tuck. A special offering was made for missions. Brother Nick Oakley of Goshen Chapel united with us some time ago. A citizen of the town is to join next Sunday, July 13.

Dr. P. H. Fleming will be with us in a series of meetings the second week in August. Plans for enlarging our work are being discussed and will be made public later.

NOTICE TO THE ALABAMA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE

My dear Brethren:—

I see in THE SUN a suggestive report of the Committee, that was appointed to consider the question of grouping our churches into pastorates, and as this is only suggestive, I feel at liberty to write not as a dictator but as a servant.

My suggestion is that the churches in the several groups correspond with each other immediately and begin to co-operate now, in order that you may have the business in hand by the time Conference meets. I feel that we can make this system a success by prayerful consideration. Let each church appoint a committee, and let that committee meet at some convenient place and discuss the matter, lay your plans and pray that God may bless you in the effort.

We surely must do something to better provide for our ministry and the support of our dear old Church or else we will still suffer more and more. Remember, my brethren, there is nothing compelling in this move, but only a suggestion.

G. D. HUNT.

HOLLAND AND HOLY NECK

The fifth Sunday was a splendid day with the Holland Christian church as it marked the beginning of the study of missions in the Sunday school as a definite aim. The introduction took the form of a missionary rally with a splendid program.

The principal feature of the program was a missionary episode entitled, "In as Much" which indeed was a very impressive presentation of the need of missionary work on the foreign field and the support of missions at home; also the splendid and stirring address on missions by Dr. J. O. Atkinson.

His subject was the theorem: "If I had all the children of the church before me what would I like most to tell them?" Dr. Atkinson then recited an array of facts, figures and incidents which held the attention of the children and grown folks as well.

The Woman's Missionary Society rendered splendid assistance to the Superintendent of Missions in arranging the program.

The Children's Day services at this place will be held in the new church on the second Sunday night of July.

The first regular services in the new building will be on the morning of the second Sunday and will consist of preaching services, reception of new members, and Communion.

The Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Society met in the basement of the church last Sunday and both services report splendid sessions. A record attendance in the Sabbath school was established. The pastor could not be present at the first session of the Sunday school in the new church as he had to be at his other charge, at Holy Neck.

The service last Sunday at Holy Neck was the annual Children's Day service. It was a hot day and required much fanning but a splendid program had been prepared and it goes without saying that when others fail the children can hold your attention, and you forget all about the weather being hot. The children were well trained and rendered their part on scheduled time and in good order, which reflects much credit upon those who had in charge the training of the children.

Again we were rejoiced to have with us on this occasion Dr. J. O. Atkinson who spoke on the subject of missions, and closed his remarks by introducing a member of the Home Mission Board, Mr. J. M. Darden who had accompanied Dr. Atkinson to Holy Neck. Brother Darden, with his winsome smile, his pleasant look and an earnestness of heart and conviction, succeeded in holding the attention of the vast audience after an extended program and told the people how the Home Missions Board was going to spend the money contributed by the churches.

To the pastor the most impressive scene of the program was the taking of the offering which was handled by four small boys while a little girl stood on the platform, while the offering was being taken, received the offering plates from the boys and gave the offertory prayer.

CENTERVILLE

Centerville Christian church is on the Western border of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference within 18 miles of Petersburg. During the present pastorate there has been no large number of additions to membership but quite a number of heads of families have joined the church. A gradual growth has been the outcome of regular attendance, and reasonable co-operation among the church families and community interest. This is an easy church to preach to, there is but little criticism of the minister's way of preaching. If the member is hit, he takes it for his part, the real truth is that many members of this little church and congregation love plain, practical gospel truth. It is one of the most prompt country churches to pay pastor's salary which the writer has ever served. They have but one collector and he is the church treasurer—Deacon W. T. Gordon is on the job. Our plans for protracted meeting first Sunday have just been broken up and meeting postponed.

DANVILLE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

The Children's Day exercises of the Danville Christian Sunday school were held in the church on the first Sunday night in July and the affair was a great success. The writer has never attended a program of like kind that surpassed it in general excellence. Every member on the program, whether drill work, song, or recitation was presented in a way that would reflect credit on adults, and the children deserve the highest praise for their splendid work. The members of the Committee also deserve special mention in recognition of their faithful and efficient services in training the children, and much of the success of the occasion was due to their efforts. It was a gala night and long to be remembered.

But it is in keeping with the spirit of the Sunday school and the good people of this community for they make good in whatever they set out to do for the Master and His Kingdom. The Sunday school is a live organization and is reaching and gripping both old and young. But there is a large field of opportunity and the school is striving to broaden its activities. Four delegates were elected to the great Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Convention to be held at Shallow Well and they are expected to bring back methods and inspiration that will prepare us for greater undertakings. The church has engaged the writer for three Sundays a month during the summer and there will be regular preaching services on the first, second, and fourth Sundays of each month, which the writer will also remain in Danville so that he may be at the service of his people.

Brethren, pray for the work at this strategic point.

H. S. HARDCASTLE.

Danville, Va., July 8, 1919.

FROM THE FAR SOUTH

I am taking a few moments of this patriotic day to write to THE SUN. I am with Rev. H. W. Elder in a meeting at Ambrose, Ga., this week. We are having a good meeting with fairly good attendance, considering the busy season with the farmers.

We are planning for and expecting some great meetings in the Southland this year. It is true that we have only a few laborers, and those we have are very busy, all this assures me that a great revival is in store for us. The busy pastor and the busy church can always be depended upon to bring things to pass.

I pray that God may bless abundantly every effort to the glory of His name.

G. D. HUNT.

THE LAW OF SUBSTITUTION

The law of substitution is difficult to understand. It is the central thought in the idea of atonement, and the word atonement is used through with propitiatory sacrifices. It means to cover up. We may not know why Christ should die to cover up our sins, but the Word says, "It was expedient that one man should die for the people." This wonderful philosophy gathers all history into one sentence; the tragedy of life in one palpitating line. How could Christ die for all people and for all ages? Christ has quality enough to die for all the world. This mystery we may not be able to fathom, but its results can be felt, its work can be seen, and the eyes of the soul can behold it. There are many things too grand, too sublime, too satisfying for explanation. "Great is the mystery of godliness." Men are not saved because they can explain the mysterious process by which they are saved, but because they believe it. The recipients of this grand vicariousness have a hint of the marvelous work of God, by which His own death in the person of His Son is equal to the death of all who have sinned.

Man's sin created the necessity for the tragical death of Christ. Vice is overwhelmed by virtuous sacrifice. The cleansing of the heart is a heavenly work, wrought through the mysterious process of blood. If man's sin had been trivial and shallow, a trivial and shallow remedy would have been found for him, but man's sin was deep; it penetrated his soul, it collapsed the inner sanctuary of his being, and polluted his heart, therefore nothing can supply man's need but God through the sacrifice of His Son. The body of Christ was merely the symbol of the blood. The sinner is saved by the blood, for without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sin. This is God's compassion expressed through the law of substitution.

In the material world too many claims are placed upon substitutes and panaceas, while in the spiritual world the air is not burdened with these claims. Men reject work and accept leisure, reject comfort and accept pain, reject sound doctrine and accept false teaching. But if a happier life through salvation is the object of the soul's adventure, it will find no substitute for Christ. This is the unchangeable law of God. He inaugurated this law to save the world. This was the only way by which God could fully express Himself to the world. God revealed His infiniteness in nature, His wisdom in law, His likeness in man, and His heart in Christ, God stained the Cross with the blood of Christ for all men, and the only way to know God is to know Christ. For, "Herein is love: not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." This world was marred by sin, and God used this remedy to heal it. This was God's law, and this law was not a fetter upon God, but an expression of His love.

Sin is not an offence against the judge, against the law, against some standard, but against the very heart of God, the tragedy of which we shall not know this side of eternity. Nothing but a heart of love could reach the depths of degredation and bring man to repentance and to a new life in Christ.

It is difficult to see how One could die for all, how the atoning blood of Christ is sufficient to "renew a right spirit within" a man. We may not understand why "He was a man sorrows and acquainted with grief." We may not know why "He was wounded for our transgressions, He was bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was upon Him," but we know this is true, and the sinner who calls upon Him can be saved, and his song will be, "Safe in the Arms of Jesus."

A CARD OF THANKS

To the good women of Ambrose, Georgia, Christian church, and their friends: I desire to express my sincere thanks for the donation sent me for the service rendered you by my husband in your revival. Perhaps you will never know how glad you make hearts at home feel by your thoughtfulness. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." May God abundantly bless all who took part.

CHILDREN'S DAY

During the month of June Children's Day exercises were held at Wakefield, Dendron and New Lebanon churches. The committees had access to the program issued by the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Board. It takes time and persevering effort on the part of those who train the children for these exercises but it is worth while and more of our schools might profit by such exercises. They have an educational value for the children and also for the congregation. An offering for missions was made at the close of each of the aboved named exercises.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the Wakefield church gave an instructive and impressive program the fifth Sunday night. An offering was taken for missions.

WHAT PROMINENT MEN THINK OF THE PEACE COVENANT

B. A. Abbott, Editor, The Christian-Evangelist, St. Louis, Mo.: I do not know of a single argument against the Covenant for a League of Nations adopted by the Paris Peace Conference which I consider good. I look upon it as the organization of international good will, and believe that when it is sufficiently emphasized it will change the hearts of the nations of the earth towards one another. In the past different nations thought of each other as enemies, and this led them to act in education, politics and economies in a selfish manner. But the League of Nations will reveal to us the benefits of international co-operation instead of international antagonism, and we shall find that every good thing in international and individual life will be quickened by it. As a churchman, I consider it the most important step yet made toward the organization of the Kingdom of God on earth.

Grant K. Lewis, Secretary, American Christian Missionary Society: The church ought to favor the Paris Covenant because it seems to present the best practical remedy of the world's unrest. America should not hesitate to sign at this stage of the proceedings. She crossed the Rubicon when war was declared. The Paris Covenant is the fruit of victory won by our men in battle. To refuse to receive it would seem the height of folly.

Thomas E. Cramblet, President, Bethany College, Bethany, W. Va.: I am very greatly interested in the Covenant for the League of Nations, as set forth in the amended form recently adopted by the Paris Peace Conference. From my viewpoint, the principles adopted by the Conference of the League of Nations safeguards, in every way, the highest interests of our own Government and at the same time places the American people where they will be able to render a world-wide service for humanity. The adoption of this League gives every promise of lessening the danger of future wars.

Editorial Note: President Cramblet since writing the above has passed to his reward.—C. B. R.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

AND THE END IS NOT YET

On February 16 the drive for the Elon Standardization Fund in our beloved Church began and it was scheduled to close on June 30, 1919. Well, it did, so far as solicitation is concerned, but the end is not yet. Almost every mail has brought us welcome accretions to the magnificent total, which now soars far beyond the $300,000 mark. A few more have sent us word to withhold the final report till they can be heard from and so we cheerfully refrain. When we do make our final announcement, we are confident a shout of praise will ascend from 25,000 grateful voices, giving thanks to God for His blessings.

I have never for a moment doubted that we should attain our objective in this campaign, nor even the doubled goal, and in this confidence the Drive Committee fully shared. Here is what they said in their initial address to the Church on the eve of the campaign's launching:

"With confidence we therefore address this appeal to our Brotherhood, feeling assured that every Church, minister, layman, lay-woman will respond nobly to our call, which we do not hesitate to assert is imperative in its necessity at this time. The day is past for small things and paltry gifts to our College. It has in poverty achieved recognition, but larger income from permanent funds are unconditionally necessary now in order to retain the standards already won. We feel satisfied that our people will receive President Harper and those associated with him with open hands and glad hearts, ready to respond cheerfully to the necessities of our prosperous and progressive College. We commission him and them to this work of the Lord among us. It is His work and ours, not theirs. They are to be our agents in this forward step. Let us in the speedy conclusion of this drive take the sting out of stingy, by a generosity worthy of our great Church and her liberal principles. Let us rejoice and be glad in this challenge to our faith and our vital Christian character."

This confidence, the fruitful days of February 16-June 30, have abundantly justified and we can all rejoice and be glad in this good hour that our Convention put this challenge up to our faith and by it proved the genuineness and vitality of our Christian character. Never has a people bent its energies spiritually more generously to a task than our Christian Brotherhood did to the raising of this magnificent fund to stabilize our College and guarantee its usefulness in perpetuity. God bless them, every one. They took the "sting out of stingy" all right and with open-hearted liberality went "over the top for Elon" to the tune of more than $300,000.

Suffolk, The Largest Giver

Suffolk, of course, was the largest giver. She always is. The chairman of the Drive Committee was there, and so was Dr. Staley, ex-officio, a member of the Committee and these men guaranteed success there. Suffolk totaled $56,600, which is slightly more than three times her quota.

But Waverly Gets The Crown

But Waverly outdistanced all the churches. Her quota was $2,250 and she gave $10,300, that is four times her quota and $1,300 besides. Elon was a close competitor. She gave four times her quota and $1,100 more. Pleasant Grove, (Va.), and Holland, (Va.) each quadrupled their quotas. Many doubled, but of these a final list will be given in the Drive Committee's official bulletin next spring.

The Finest Fund Yet

The First Church of Norfolk, Va., the church of my childhood days, has done a most splendid deed. Rev. M. L. Bryant burnt out his useful life in arduous service in that church. The church in business session established a fund of $1,000 in his memory, authorizing the treasurer, Brother J. O. Wiggs, to sign it officially for the congregation. This was in addition to what individuals gave to the fund. Is that not fine?

The Only Banner Conference

Every church in the Eastern Virginia Conference gave its quota or more in the drive. $153,000 is officially credited to that Conference alone. It is the only banner Conference. I am glad I was born in the Eastern Virginia Conference. Hats off, beloved, to the Eastern Conference, and breathe a little prayer of thanks to God that we have such a Conference.

More Yet

I hope next week to bring you more yet of good cheer in the final report on our campaign. For all of which let us thank God and take courage. Pray that Elon may be true to her beautiful motto—"Christian character, first and always, at Elon."

W. A. HARPER.

We glean the following note from The Herald of Gospel Liberty: "Rev. O. W. Powers, D. D., who for so many years has been connected with the work in and about Dayton, and who has served so well in so many capacities in the Christian Church, has accepted the pastorate of the church at Lynn, Mass., and will leave in a few days for that place. Dr. Powers has for so long been such a helpful friend to so many of us in this part of the country, as well as a tireless worker and a man of great scholarship, whose knowledge and council was always an inspiration, that his going comes as a real personal loss to many of us. Mrs. Powers has for many years had charge of the literature for the Woman's Boards, and the workers in that department feel most keenly the fact that she will not be able to remain near here and in close touch with them, for she has made a wonderful development of that class of literature and extension of its use in their work. Their daughter, Miss Florence Powers, has been the private secretary of Dr. Burnett and rendered commendable service in that office. The entire family has been putting their lives and hearts into the work here in such a way that they will be greatly missed. We are sure they will soon find a place of equally large worth in their new field."

The New Task of the College*

And He that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new.—Rev. 21:5.

Jesus was no reactionary. The religious stand-patters of His day, the Scribes, the Pharisees, the Sadducees, the Herodians received small courtesy and scant sympathy at His hands. He denounced them with an invective unmatched in any other recorded utterance of man. Jesus was the true, the real, the original progressive in Kingdom affairs. The pregnant word of His thought-conception is progress. Forward is the only direction suitable to His teachings. Change, newness, freshness—these are the engaging charm of His unfolding program for men and society. Every age since His advent has made new, rich discoveries of His deeper meanings and brought forth brilliant nuggets of His ever-advancing truth.

The age in which we live is highly favored by its revelations of spiritual principles and in its opportunities to apply them to new situations. For all time to come men will look back to this day as one richly endowed with spiritual possibility for the Kingdom's growth. There is no doubt the Gospel of Jesus has a message for this hour. Equally there is no doubt that this hour challenges the gospel expositors to reveal to it its inner meaning, to interpret to it its spiritual significance. The church dares not in an hour like this to refuse to adjust herself to the cherished expectations of the times.

In this interpretation of our age to its inner self, the college, the seminary of leadership, the shrine where ideals are forged affecting for good or ill all the life of men,—in this interpretation the college must play a large and important role. Colleges shall never be the same again, as in the days before the World War. Their purpose in the ultimate may be the same, but their whole inner life must be readjusted to meet the crying need of the hour with a leadership adequate to satisfy men's heart-hunger for a full, free, complete self-expression. And in generous, whole-hearted response to that cry the college worthy the confidence of the new day will seek to equip those who resort to it for life-direction with some essentially new ideals for the guidance of their attitude and conduct of life in the unfolding years.

I. The New Brotherhood

And central among these ideals we shall find a new and an enlarged conception of Brotherhood's place in determining the relations of men. This splendid word must become more than a word in the days ahead. Jesus came to teach the Brotherhood of Man. We have said it, over and over again. But we have not acted on it. We have not even lived up to the demands of neighborliness. The Good Samaritan is yet an exalted ideal of the true Christian to most of us. But the good Samaritan, good as he was, is as far beneath the standard of genuine Christian Brotherhood as the priest and Levite were beneath Him in all the essentials of true manhood. A neighbor may content himself to go to the rescue of a fellow who has fallen among thieves, and thereafter minister to him tenderly, with never a thought that he is responsible for the thieves who assaulted him, and with never a thought of bringing the thieves to the bar of justice. Brotherhood can never be satisfied with neighborliness. The Christian man in this new time must be more than a Good Samaritan.

Never can I forget the thrill of horror that surged through my soul when I read President Wilson's Philadelphia speech, in which he said in the event of a future World War no nation could remain neutral. He had just been returned to the highest office in the gift of our people on a peace platform, and yet even before his inauguration he was preparing the nation to take its place in the conflict then raging. My heart sank within me. "What can our President mean?" I said again and again to myself. And then these Scriptures came to me with a new and subtler meaning: "Ye are members one of another," "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ," "Am I my brother's keeper?," and then I comprehended as never before that Brotherhood is more than an American doctrine, that it has universal application, and that I dare not undertake to enjoy any good thing for myself, that all must be shared with my brother-men. From that time on I was sure America would enter the war, that she ought to enter the war, that she would be cursed of God if she did not.

It remains for the college now to interpret to the bright young lives that seek ideals in her borders this spirit of Brotherhood in terms of personal living, so that the young people who go from her walls shall go conscious of the solidarity of the human race and pulsing with desire to invest themselves in speedily realizing it.

II. A New Appreciation of Christian Education

But the college cannot do this unless it makes Christ central in its curriculum. Christian education is the hope of the hour, as Brotherhood is its challenge. Education that essays to leave Christ out of its teaching is fundamentally defective. It will eventually curse the earth. It will not do merely to train men's minds and cultivate their social graces. Germany did that, and behold! the devastation Germany has wrought. No mighty nation has ever fallen so mightily, as has this giant of our day. Germany was the most intellectual nation of the world. Her universities furnished the ideas of the race. It was impossible to be accepted for an advanced degree in any university of America, England, or France unless you could read and understand the works of German authorities in the original. Germany was the intellectual leader of the world. And her culture surpassed that of the other nations in like degree. It is said that of trained scientists per thousand of population the United States had eight, England eleven, France slightly above thirteen, but Germany thirty-four. She was the most cultured nation of our time. And Germany the intellectual, Germany the cultured has cursed mankind as no other nation ever did, crucifying them with inhuman horror upon the cruel cross of her intellectualism and of her Kultur. Why? Because Germany dared neglect the cultivation of the spiritual faculties in her educational program.

Shall America escape Germany's doom? The American college shall answer. We fought in the World War to make the world safe for democracy. Shall democracy degenerate into Bolshevism, into Sovietism, into Anarchy? It shall undoubtedly, if we neglect the heart in our college curriculum. All that we Christian educators have pleaded for since the days of the Renaissance has been justified, vindicated in the sad experiences of our day. We have spilt the sacred flood of our heroes in vain if we fail to make our educational system Christian in its inner life and purpose. Christian character is to be the first and foremost product of our educational system, or democracy will be mankind's undoing.

And this brings me to say that we must devise some plan by which religion may be taught in tax-supported institutions of higher learning. The American principle of the separation of Church and State must be respected, and this makes it impossible for public money to be used to teach religion. Even in wartime the religious welfare of our fighting men was turned over to voluntary organizations. Voluntary assistance in teaching religion must be granted our State Colleges and Universities that they may help us make democracy safe for the world. I do not hesitate to say that the finest mission field in our country for recruiting the Kingdom's leadership is not to be found among the millions of immigrants that flock to our shores nor among the negroes nor among the mountain whites, but on the campuses of our tax-supported institutions of higher learning, where young men and young women are congregated in thousands during the ideal-forming period of their lives. If we fail to reach these promising lives with the Kingdom message, America is to do her part at making democracy safe for the world, if she does it at all, at tremendous odds. The colleges of the Christian type must not only look well to their own curricula, but they must render real assistance to the state institutions, which are handicapped by the fundamental law of the land. We must adjust ourselves to the demands of the hour and find how we can Christianize the American system of higher education in all its departments, for Christian education is democracy's only hope of permanent blessing to men.

III. An Enlarged Conception of Service

But democracy is not an end in itself, and this leads us to declare in the third place that the college must give direction to democracy in terms of service. What does it mean to serve? And what is its scope? We cannot divorce service from religion, for the thought is foreign to any other realm of life. Does the Christian ideal of service need re-interpretation in our day? No, but that of the church does. Too often the church has mistaken Christian activity for Christian service. Too often leaders in the church have busied themselves in maintaining public worship and keeping the local organization's machinery in working order, and thought they had in that completed the circle of Christian duty. Has a church a right to be self-centered and narrow-visioned? Can such a church please God? Can it do the work of the Kingdom? I know a Church with five deacons and three other church officials whose horizon of service is limited to keeping the local work alive. That Church would be blessed to have eight funerals in rapid succession. God cannot let a selfish church live, and conversely He will ever keep alive and in flourishing condition any church that forgets itself in a program of service for the Kingdom's advance.

But what is the scope of service? It must touch every realm of our life. God made man, all of man, and all of him is sacred to God. No one part of our nature can be truly said to be lower than another, and if it should be, that part should receive the greater consideration at the hands of Christian leaders. Colleges must teach the future leaders of the church that all of life is religious, that all of life is spiritual, and that all of life is consequently to be ministered to by a full-orbed church. Men must see that God is present everywhere and they must learn in all the experience of life to sense the fellowship of His presence. We must consciously realize Him in our every department of life. We must recognize that we serve Him in our daily toil, in our public worship, in our private devotions, in our moments of leisure and recreation as well as in the tense and busy activity of our application to our life-work. Such a spirit of service will make democracy safe for Heaven as well as for the earth and is its own rich and fruitful reward.

IV. A New Recognition of Sacrifice's Place

But lest men should serve selfishly, with their eyes on the reward that ever blesses him who serves, the college must equip the leaders of men with the spirit of sacrifice. We must not forget the lesson of sacrifice we have learned in the World War. We learned that lesson in anguish of heart and in bitterness of tears, but we needed to learn it. The magnitude of our sacrifice is the measure of our soul growth. America's soul has been graciously enlarged during the past two years. We have as a nation learned to sacrifice. We entered the war with no ulterior motive. We desired no reward for our sacrifices, not even any indemnity. We were willing to sacrifice our all for the good we could bless our brothermen with, with no thought of reward. It is the sublimest instance of sacrifice on the national scale in human history, and behold! America has become central in the thoughts and affections of mankind. Her voice was the voice of hope for a crushed and bleeding humanity. Her voice is now the voice of authority and leadership in the council-chamber of the nations. From being the most hated of nations, America has become the most beloved, because America has been willing to give herself, her all, for others, without stint or thought of self. It is ever so. The only service worthy the name is based on sacrifice, and selfish service is an auto-poisoning process for which there is no cure but a new birth into the Kingdom of sacrifice, joyous, full, free,—sacrifice that knows no limit.

Why is Jesus the best loved man who ever lived? Is it because he amassed for Himself a great fortune? The Son of Man had not where to lay His head. Is it because He left great works of literature to perpetuate His name among His fellows? Our Master wrote only one line. He wrote it on the ground, with ed woman taken in an awful sin, and the rains of Heaven washed it away. Is it because He came to great preferment by the suffrage and approval of His fellow-men? He was crucified by their suffrage and with their loud approval. Why is Jesus the best loved man who ever lived? It is because as no other man He absolutely gave Himself for others.

And Finally

"For others," Class of 1919, let this be your motto as you pass out into the stirring realities of our troubled and uncertain time. "For others," this shibboleth shall admit you to the realm of the genuine servants of the race. It may bring you to the judgment seat of a Pilate, it may nail you to the Cross, it may send you into the tomb, even as it did our Lord. But why should you fear or falter? For with us as with Him, when we have died "for others" we shall arise in His likeness to a new and rich eternity.

"And He that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new." He has been doing it for nineteen centuries. He is doing it now in accelerated manner. Shall we discern His handiwork, constituting, interpreting anew the fundamental concepts by His finger. It was a sentence of pardon to a wretch—which our life is to be ordered? Do we see His pregnant meaning for Brotherhood, for a true Democracy rendered safe by Christian Education, for a Service that shall embrace all of life and quicken it with spiritual force, for a Sacrifice that shall match His own in its willingness to give all "for others"? Let us be earnest in our sincerity to discern the signs of the times aright. Let us pray that we ourselves as we pass out into active life may be animated by these foundation principles of the new time and let us also pray that our Alma Mater may be crowned with Heavenly blessing in her efforts to instill into those who shall take our places here these same splendid criteria of the Kingdom for men's lives. Such is the new task of the college. Such is Elon's task. May she be true in this crisis time.

MISSIONARY

GROWING MISSIONARIES

We of the Christian Church, since we cannot and must not make missionaries, must by God's help grow them. And where is there a finer field for this growth than our Sunday schools? Our good Doctor J. G. Bishop in a recent cheering letter to the writer says: "I am much interested in your work with missions in our Sunday schools. Surely the Sunday school is a great field that needs larger and closer cultivation, and gives hope of a larger harvest of missionary zeal and power for Christ and the Kingdom. We hope and pray that your successful effort along this line may become contagious." Every Sunday school should have an objective worthy of its pains, its plans and its efforts. What higher objective could it have than that of growing men and women who will go "and teach all nations" the blessed story of our Christ, and of His power to redeem and save?

OUR GREATEST WEALTH

"A nation to be truly great and to be sure of its future development and success must realize that its greatest wealth lies in its children; its highest possibilities are wrapped up in all its little ones; its one hope of the future is in the childhood of the nation."²² We see such a truth frequently reiterated and emphasized. And what is true of a nation is certainly true of a church. Children are not wealth, but well-being, and writers who emphasize the above truth really mean well-being where they employ the term wealth. So in fact our greatest well-being in the future lies in our childhood.

If this Christian Church of ours is to grow in future, and come into its own, it must now give heed to the right sort of childhood. The older ones, the grown-ups, and the fixed-in their habits cannot be expected to change appreciably. But the childhood of the Church is its one hope of a successful future. And so we can never be a missionary people, that is to say a growing and progressive people, until we shall have taught our children to be missionary in spirit and in activity. We must carry home to the child-mind the real facts of a world that is in need of Christ. We must imbed in the child-mind of the church the necessity of carrying out the Great Commission of our Lord, and of what it means to them, and also to those who sit in darkness without Him, to try to carry out this Commission.

I know of one Sunday school teacher from whose class have gone out fifteen missionaries. That teacher had the care of a sin-cursed world upon her heart, and the care for the children who were entrusted to her to teach from Sunday to Sunday. We grown-ups may not have pity, but the children will have pity if they can but know conditions as they are in the world today. It is indeed a pity not to let the children know.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

NOTES

FARMING

This spring has been one adverse to farming in this section. I hardly think I have ever tried to farm under more discouraging circumstances. We have had much more rain and the ground has been too wet to work for ten days at a time; and when it would clear up, the ground would get so hard we could not plough it with horses. But in our distress last week when we were trying with all our might to get our ground ploughed and our Soja Beans in the ground to make feed for our cattle this winter, and the ground so hard we could not make much time, our old friend, Chas. P. Harden, of Graham, N. C., came to our rescue and gladly sent his farm tractor and plough and gave us three days of its use. This helped us wonderfully and we shall always appreciate his big sympathetic heart and are grateful indeed for the help when we need it so much.

We also had a letter from a warm friend of the Orphanage who lives in the State of California, telling me he wanted to be one of the twenty to give five hundred dollars for the Children's Home. Letters like this one make me glad.

I wonder who will be the next one to join the twenty to make the amount needed to build the Children's Home?

Congress began the consideration of the Peace Treaty and League of Nations Monday, July 14.

President Wilson has vetoed the Daylight Savings Bill. That means no change in your watch for the present.

Swat the fly. B. good. N. joy life.

Dr. J. U. Newman is spending the summer in Asheville, N. C., where he is engaged in that favorite occupation of his—teaching.

We have had several callers during the past several days from Alamance and adjoining counties. Come again, brethren. We are always glad to see you.

Prof. A. L. Hook is at Cornell University this summer, and writes that he cannot do without THE SUN while away from home. His address is 308 Eddy St., Ithaca, N. Y.

Brother T. J. Holland, Wray, Georgia, is interested in increasing the circulation of THE SUN and says that he is going to see that THE SUN has a larger circulation in his church.

Practically all this issue was set up and ready for the press by noon, July 10, and that will explain why your article did not appear. We take the "copy" as it comes, unless circumstances demand it otherwise.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is being represented this week at the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina Conference by Miss Bessie Holt, who so efficiently represented THE SUN at several Conferences last fall.

Mr. Ira R. Gunn, Wentworth, N. C., a former linotype operator on THE CHRISTIAN SUN, called to see us one day last week. We are always glad to see Gunn. He is a member of Elon's class '17, and has just returned from service.

Mr. V. P. Heatwole, Dayton, Va., who graduated at Elon College with the Class of '17, and who was once the pressman on THE CHRISTIAN SUN, is serving in that capacity this summer. Heatwole returned from service a few weeks ago.

Just as we go to press a letter is received from Brother T. J. Simpson, Stokesdale, N. C., sending us seven new subscribers to THE SUN and the cash for all. Another layman demonstrating that the thing can be done. Of course it can be done, brethren, and so we wait for the next report.

We note that many pastors write very little for THE SUN during the summer months. This is a privilege all their own. However, our side of the case is that it takes the same work (and a little more it seems in hot weather) each week in the year to produce the paper. We desire to make each issue as original as possible. Let the notes come along, and if the weather is too hot for a long article a short one will do. And what we say to the ministers applies to the laymen. We have too few letters from the laymen of the Church.

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

GET READY TO ASCEND UNKNOWN HEIGHTS

There is yet very much to learn in the schools of Nature and Revelation. Ever learning and yet never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. Present attainments do not, and ought not to satisfy. We are learners, but if we fail to study, not much will be learned. There are great models in Revelation as well as in nature and it is such a delight to think the thoughts of God after Him. So many things demand your life, your care, your all.

Michael Angelo once visited the study of young Raphael. The junior artist was not in, and Angelo departed without leaving his name, but before he left he took a piece of chalk and drew on the canvass beneath the poor and meagre design of Raphael, a bold, sweeping line, and added the word, Amplius. When Raphael came in and saw this he knew at a glance who had been there and at once his style was changed and he became the painter the world calls divine. Let us believe that Jesus comes to us and looking at our imperfect aims and meagre work, He writes beneath our hearts: "Amplius, Amplius—wider and further; more and still more."

In the natural world there is a limitation to growth and development; but in the spiritual the growth or development is illimitable. The clothes I wore when a child would not fit me now. They were discarded piece by piece and year after year for larger garments. This had to be repeated until I was grown, physically. I have lost all the fondness for the toys and playthings of my childhood sunny days. They do not interest me now. But there is still room for improvement of my mind and soul, and I am hoping to ascend even to higher heights in the Christian life. The natural strength will fail, but the soul can grow stronger until the perfect day. It is cultivatable and must be cultivated for the best and happiest results.

We believe that the unknown state will be supremely glorious. If God has made this and other worlds so attractive and useful, how much more lovely and infinitely beautiful must be the heavenly world in which the children of God expect to live!

The soul now blunted and stunted by so many adverse conditions will there be immortalized with continual happiness. The imagination is drawn on very largely for future events and changes, and in our present condition there is nothing better to do.

We look upon life as the most real and profound thing in the kingdom of nature. Oh, how we like life and love to live it! In any and every condition we try hard to hold on to it. Mysterious as it is, it is, nevertheless, sweet and dear to all. When sudden and extreme causes surround us nothing is so helpful as the word live. Even amid the cloudy days of the cold gray, cheerless winter, while trembling or shivering in the cold, you were still looking for sun's healthful rays to shine through the parting clouds to give a thrill of gladness.

Today I heard a despondent one say: "I wish I could get more out of life and enjoy it more fully that I might understand the words, 'Make me to hear joy and gladness.'" Joy and gladness may be heard all about you. Are you listening to hear them? Tune your harp. Sing praises to God, and listen, wait, expecting joy and gladness to come. Will you try at once?

J. T. KITCHEN.

Windsor, Va.

SUFFOLK LETTER

"Sweet Peace.....God's Love"

I passed a residence one day in July and heard a lame woman singing in the kitchen, "Sweet Peace, the Gift of God's Love." I listened as I walked and I heard her sing: "There comes to my heart one sweet strain, a glad and a joyous refrain, I sing it again and again, sweet peace, the gift of God's love." It seemed to come from the heart of the afflicted woman who is shut in, though she loved to go to church. No choir could render more acceptable praise; no soloist could render finer tones. It was not sung for human ears, but it mingled with the songs of angels in the temple where the blood-washed spirits render praises day and night to the Lord of hosts. I felt like stopping and peeping into that kitchen, but I really felt like my presence would be an intrusion. The glory of it was its sincerity. The marvel of it was the happy heart on crutches, and working in the kitchen, and that in July. All of the outward conditions spoke of suffering, of confinement, of labor; but within, there was "peace, sweet peace, the gift of God's love." This the "peace which the world can neither give nor take away," the "peace that passeth understanding."

Peace is the gift of God's love. Environment cannot produce it; education cannot bring it; wealth cannot buy it; nations cannot force it; alliances cannot guarantee it; it is God's gift. Moreover, it is in the heart. It is not in the intellect, but in the seat of the affections, and, therefore, within the reach of all individuals who will enthrone Jesus Christ in their souls. It is, indeed, a "sweet strain" and must be sung "again and again" to fill the heart with "sweet peace." As many beautiful flowers bloom at the base of the mountain, in some nook under a great boulder where cool water oozes out from hidden fissures, so sweet souls sing joyous songs in hidden places, and the kitchen is one of those places. The seat may be hard, the air may not be clean, the odors may not smell like sweet incense, but through the smoky windows, a light shines, and in the room joy sings its song of praise.

Religion is not for the market place only, but for the obscure routine of life. "When thou prayest, be not as the hypocrites; for they love to pray standing in the synagogues and in the corner of the streets, that they may be seen of men." Praise should not be rendered unto men, but unto God; and it may be done in the kitchen as well as in the temple. Kitchen religion is the finest type of religion, because it sweetens the entire home. The cooks represent the largest army in the world. No other like of workers embraces such a large percentage of human race. At least ten percent of the human family is engaged in this necessary occupation; and that means that a hundred and fifty millions of people, mostly women, kindle the fires, scrub the pots, rub the pans, fry the eggs, make the coffee, do the rest, and then wash the dishes; and this three times a day. 450,000,000 of meals are served each day and little thanks from those who eat. No wonder so many people eat their meals without asking a blessing; it do not even thank the cooks. How many women sit down to meals too tired to eat and are happy to see their families enjoy what they have prepared with love for them and love for God. Nothing could take care of the kitchen and prepare our food but love. The incense of the kitchen fills the world with peace; and no sacrifice on battlefields can be compared with the courage of song-filled cooks who make the bread of earth while they eat the bread of heaven. I can see my own mother now flop down at the table when dinner is finished and the family is tempted by odors from smoking dishes which her dear hands prepared. There she sits, tired but happy, because her family enjoys the meal. She rests from her good labors now and sings with the angels the praises which she sang in the kitchen when she was there.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT

Warren H. Denison, D. D., Superintendent

We rejoice to see the splendid success of President Harper as he sweeps on to the $250,000 additional endowment fund. President Hershey and the trustees of Union Christian College have voted to raise an additional $100,000 for Union Christian College. President Caris and the trustees of Defiance College are now raising an additional endowment fund of $200,000 from the Defiance territory in addition to the $100,000 recently raised by the citizens of Defiance county. The Forward Movement bids these great institutions of ours the heartiest Godspeed. We hope all our people will heartily support these institutions with prayer, money, kind words and by sending their sons and daughters this fall to our worthy institutions.

The Eastern Indiana Conference held a very profitable Quarterly June 25 and 26, in Beaver Chapel and the pastors and laymen of that Conference have pledged their heartiest co-operation. Many of the pastors have already taken up a church program built upon the basis of the Forward Movement outline.

Some two thousand, five hundred people from the twenty Christian churches of three counties of the Northwestern Ohio Conference met at the fair grounds at Lima, Ohio June 29 in a Forward Movement rally, and the Superintendent and Dr. O. S. Thomas spoke on the Movement. Great interest was shown. The Superintendent spoke at the Lima church at night.

Rev. E. A. Watkins, D. D., Lima, Ohio; Rev. C. F. Baldwin, Darlington, Ind.; Rev. R. C. Helfenstein, D. D., Urbana, Ill., have been placing great emphasis upon Christian stewardship and tithing recently with large results, for large numbers of their congregations have become titheers.

The time is here for most of our Conferences in the Southern Convention to begin to plan their Conference program. We urge all committees to keep in mind the importance of making the programs in harmony with the Forward Movement. These programs should be built around the five fundamentals of our denominational Forward Movement. This means much more than an address or two and carries with it the idea of building these fundamental ideas of the Movement into the life and plans of every church in the Conferences. The Convention contemplates making these principles a very part of the fiber and life of the church in all its departments. We ask the Conferences to so plan the programs as to help the churches in a most practical way to get the spirit and method of the Movement. The Conferences should lay upon the churches and pastors the importance of making a very definite church program.

In one of our canvasses recently in Indiana a Jew came and of his own accord offered a pledge of ten dollars per year, saying that he was interested in such work as he had heard we were doing and would be pleased to have some part in it. During another canvass in Illinois a man riding along the road saw our committee canvassing and asked if we would accept as small an offering as ten dollars per year from an outsider, and if so he would be glad to give such a contribution of fifty dollars. As we came in from the field the other day where we had been securing pledges there came to our desk a check for five hundred dollars from a party in New York state who had not been solicited.

TWO FRIENDS

"In-a-Minute" is a bad friend. He makes you put off what you ought to do at once, and so he gets you into a great deal of trouble.

"Right-Away" is a good friend. He helps you to do pleasantly and quickly what you are asked to do, and he never gets you into trouble. —Our Little Ones.

HIS CORRECT ADDRESS

A certain man, who had been invited to speak at a lodge meeting, was placed on the list of speakers. However, the chairman introduced several speakers whose names were not on the program, and the audience was tired out when he eventually introduced the last speaker.

"Mr. Bones will now give his address."

"My address," said Mr. Bones, rising, "is No. 551 Park Villa, and I wish you all good night."

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR JULY 27, 1919

Christian Fellowship. Acts 2:42, 46, 47; Philippians 4:10-20.

Golden Text: "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another."

Devotional Reading: I John 1:1-9.

"If we walk in the light, we have fellowship." If, then we insist that we will have no fellowship, by that same token we have no light. People say: "I keep myself to myself. I am a Christian, but I do not care to mix with the other people in the church. I do not find anyone in the community who is my social equal, and I do not mix with them." Then you are walking in darkness. There is no such thing as walking with Christ and walking alone—that is, without effort to bring another with you. "Where two or three are gathered together," said Christ. A Christian alone is only possible on the mission field where none as yet know the Lord Christ, and then, they should be so surrounded with an aura of love from those back home who think of them and pray for them, that they should never need to feel alone. The war has taught us many things about fellowship. The man who has fought side by side with the French, the British, the Italian, the Indian, the African, the negro, who has seen their splendid service, will find it hard, and should find it impossible, to go back to the place where he put a fence between them and himself in his daily life. "One is your Master, even Christ and all ye are brethren."

MRS. FRED BULLOCK.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR JULY 27, 1919

"How do men confess Christ and how deny him? Luke 22:55-61.

The story is told of a young man, a member of the church who was going for six months into the lumber woods of Michigan. "You will have to be careful up there," said his friends, "for those people are heathen. They have no regard for God, and you will have a hard time when they find you are a Christian." Six months later the young man returned, and his friends asked him: "What did they do when they found you were a Christian?" "Oh," said he, "they never found it out." Did this young man deny Christ? If we never ask another to meet our Lord, never talk of Him or about Him, are we confessing Him? Let us read a well-known verse in this way: "He that introduces me to men, the same will I introduce to my Father and the holy angels." Can you see the implication? Heaven will be a new place for all of us. Shall we be strangers there, or will our Lord Himself introduce us to His Father, and the angels, so that we shall at once be at home? Yes, if we have introduced Him to those we met here. "Meet my friend," says the young man as he meets another on the street, with a third person beside him. When you meet a friend of yours who is not acquainted with Jesus, do you say to him: "Meet my Friend?" We confess Christ by our lives, or we deny Him by them, quite as much, more perhaps, than by our words.

MRS. FRED BULLOCK.

English Church Agitated.—The leaders of the English Church are greatly agitated over the proposal of the Bishop of Winchester for the exchange of pulpits with ministers of other Churches. The proposition was not to exchange or unite with them in the regular religious services, but upon special occasions outside the regular appointed service of the church. Several convocations have been held, and the matter has been laid on the table indefinitely. Serious objection was made to asking the ministers of other denominations to pray in their consecrated buildings. Isn't it about time that our Episcopalian brethren would move away from the darkness of the Middle Ages?—United Presbyterian.

EDWARDS-ALBRIGHT

Mr. Robert Edwards and Miss Laura Albright were married July 6, 1919 at 5.30 P. M. at the home of the bride, 110 Bradshaw Street, High Point, N. C. The groom has recently been discharged from service in the United States army where he has been in service for eleven years. Both persons are popular with their associates. They will reside in High Point. May theirs be a happy married life. The writer officiated.

L. L. WYRICK.

BRITTLE-PADGETT

Married at the Christian parsonage, Waverly, Va., in the presence of a large number of relatives and friends, July 3, 1919, 5 o'clock P. M., Mr. John Burgess Brittle to Miss Lucy Padgett. The attendants were Miss Minnie Goodrich with Mr. Alfred J. Brittle, Miss Rebecca Moss with Mr. Percy Carroll.

Mr. Brittle has just returned from the war in which he is credited with going over the top seven times. He goes back to the farm near Wakefield, Va. Miss Padgett is from near Waverly, Va. Thus two farm lives are united.

Ceremony by the writer who always appreciates, and doubly so when both bride and groom seem delighted to begin a new home on the farm. The many friends follow them with all good wishes.

GLOVER-CHANDLER

At the residence of Mr. Thomas Chandler, Virgilina, Va., at 2 o'clock P. M., June 29, 1919, Mr. Henry Raymond Glover and Miss Emmie Chandler were united in marriage. The ring ceremony was read by the writer and interpreted in the sign language by Miss Robina Tillinghast, of Spartanburg, S. C.

Just before the ceremony Miss Lucy Gregory sang, "Somewhere a Voice is Calling." Mrs. Thomas Chandler played Mendelsshon's wedding march as the bride and groom entered the tastefully decorated parlor of the Chandler home. Little Louise Elam, niece of the bride, acted as ring bearer.

The out-of-town guests were: Miss Elmer Glover of Washington, D. C., and Miss Lillian Glover of Columbia, S. C., sisters of the groom; Miss Cora Byrd of Morganton, N. C.; Miss Robina Tillinghast of Spartanburg, S. C., and Mr. Vernal Glover, brother of the groom, Greenville, S. C.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Glover with his sister, Miss Elmer Glover, left for Washington, D. C. They will be at home in Columbia, S. C. after July 7, where Mr. Glover holds a position as a printer.

The bride is the eldest daughter of Mrs. Rosa Chandler and a young lady of splendid attainments and a lovely disposition. Mr. Glover is fortunate indeed to win for a companion one so nearly ideal in her every manner.

The writer joins a host of friends wishing and bespeaking for them a useful and happy career.

OBITUARIES

BEAMON

Sallie Caroline Edosia Costen was born in Gates County, North Carolina, March 24, 1833; married William Beamon December 1856; was the mother of William W., Norfolk, Va.; Mrs. J. H. Seawell, Mrs. J. E. Smith, Sunbury, N. C., and James H., deceased; and died July 1, 1919. Her husband died in 1882 and she remained a widow thirty-seven years. Mrs. Smith and her husband resided in the old homestead where she passed away. She was a sister of the late George Costen.

Mrs. Beamon gave her heart to Jesus Christ in early girlhood, united with Damascus Christian church, and spent her life in useful, exemplary, influential service for seventy years. She was musical, spiritual, and full of good works. Her home was the center of social and religious influence and "her children rise up and call her blessed." She leaves eleven grandchildren and seven great grandchildren.

The funeral service was conducted at the family residence on July 2, Revs. W. B. Fuller, I. W. Johnson, and W. W. Staley taking part. "Asleep in Jesus as a Dream," "Abide With Me," by a quartette, were sung, and Dr. Johnson sang, "No Burdens Yonder," and the remains were laid to rest in the family graveyard. "I Need Thee Every Hour," was sung at the grave.

The old homestead, the great oaks in the yard, the old neighbors, the old colored people, the memories of childhood, the family re-unions, the silence of the parlor where mother lies in her casket, and speaks through mute lips to the very soul of all, is a message from God to mourning and grief-stricken loved ones. Seventy years of service in the home, the neighborhood, and the church, deserve rest, crowned with flowers and a good name.

HOLLOWAY

Richmond Washington Holloway was born May 30, 1893 and died at hospital No. 52 of pneumonia contracted in line of duty. He was buried at Grande Cuchere, Le Mans, Sorthre, France. His grave is numbered 66, in Lot 4, Section 20, plainly marked with a cross bearing military organization. Burial services were held by Chaplain Ross Miller. It was a regular military burial with escort of both French and American soldiers. The band played, "Nearer My God to Thee." The band may not have known it but that grand old hymn was appropriate for Brother Holloway was a good young man. He was a member of Waverly Christian church. The call to the ministry bore heavily upon his mind and heart before he left Waverly, Va., for the war. His wife died about three years ago, and since then his wife's father and mother, Brother and Sister R. T. Harris, with whom he lived for a number of years, have also died—4 deaths in one family! He leaves six brothers and sisters to mourn their loss. A splendid man, a Christian soldier has gone to his reward. Peace to his dust in beautiful France till the resurrection morning.

DREWERY

Gilbert Augustus Drewery was born in Southampton County, Virginia, April 26, 1849, and died June 29, 1919. He spent his life in his native county and Sussex county, where he had resided a long time when death claimed him.

February 15, 1871 he married Miss Martha L. West. To this union three boys and three girls were born. His wife died quite a number of years ago. Miss Mattie E. Drewery died about six years ago. He is survived by the following children: Messrs. Emmett T., James A., and William H. Drewery and Mrs. Annie Sue Cooper, and Miss Fannie May Drewery. James A. and Fannie May still resided with their father. He has been in declining health for two years, but for the past five months he has gradually failed till the end came as the sun was lowering in the West so this story may come down to his grave at 6 p. m., fifth Sunday in June. He was a good neighbor, kind hearted and friendly; lived largely at home. The burial was at Spring Hill in the family plot. The beautiful flowers told the tale of love for the deceased. Burial services by the pastor and writer.

EVERHART

Mrs. Luola May Everhart was born May 14, 1898 and died July 4, 1919, aged twenty-one years, one month and twenty days. She was married to Mr. Percy Everhart May 18, 1918. She leaves to mourn their loss a beloved husband, one child, father, three brothers, five sisters and a host of friends. Her mother and one brother preceded her to the Glory land. She was a loyal member of the High Point Christian church, where the funeral services were conducted by the pastor on July 6, 1919. A large concourse of friends assembled to pay their last tribute of respect. Interment was made in Pleasant Grove cemetery. May God bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

WILLIAMS

Sister Martha Jane Williams passed to her spirit home June 22, 1919, aged eighty-two years, one month and twenty-six days. She had been a member of the Christian church at Damascus since early childhood. She was the mother of eight children, four of whom survive her. At the time of her death she was living with her daughter, Mrs. William Noe, Gibsowville, N. C. Her scripture motto was: "She looked well to the map of her household and eateth not the bread of idleness."—Prov. 31:27. Interment was in the cemetery at Shallow Ford church June 23. Service conducted by the writer. P. T. KLAPP.

Eat Less, Live Longer.—The New York Life Insurance Company has issued a statement that the mortality of the company in Germany during the four years of the war was twelve per cent less than for the eleven years of peace immediately preceding. The company's chief actuary gives as the explanation that it is the result of restriction in eating and in the drinking of alcoholic beverages and the enforced exercise the insured were compelled to take. The actuary gives a prescription for prolonging life: "Restricted diet, total abstinence, and proper exercise." Good.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

"IN ESSENTIALS UNITY, IN NON-ESSENTIALS LIBERTY, IN ALL THINGS CHARITY"

A Call From The Watchtower!

YOU do not appreciate the religious press. You are not using it to the extent you ought to. The result is the enemy are gaining ground on you, for they are sending their sheets broadcast. There is not a form of error in this age that hasn't its printing press, and putting thousands of dollars into it to send forth a propaganda if possible into every heart. Your children are reading it when you do not know it. You ministers have people reading this error when you are not aware of it, and you find them losing interest in your work and in the cause, and you do not know what did it. It is a false press that did it, and if you are to get the work out of the press that you would like, you must come to the support of the evangelical press, that comes to back you up and help to do a work you cannot do, and to spread the influence which you are intensifying and establishing.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

ODDS AND ENDS FROM THE EDITOR'S NOTE BOOK

This is the heading under which the Editor's contributions appeared in last week's issue. It is not our desire to make these notes too brief to be void of interest but trust that they may be helpful and contain some suggestion that will find root. We are of the opinion that suggestions are the greatest producers. Sign boards indicate the way and few get lost who travel in that direction.

"How do you like your work?" we are frequently asked. We have only one answer, and that is: "Just fine." Our work is exacting and never ending, going over practically the same things every day and a job that you must care for each day to avoid accumulation. It is like having a bear by the tail and going around a tree—if you turn loose you are caught. We are writing these notes on Tuesday night, July 15, for the issue of July 23. This week's issue was mailed this afternoon. This explains the bear theory—the printer will catch us in the morning if we are not ready for him.

Teachers and ministers are the guardians of the highest and holiest things in life and yet they receive less pay than the man who guards convicts at a prison camp. The average minister receives less pay for his work than the man who polices the streets of your city. Here is a good query: Resolved, That it is more business like to pay a higher salary to guard the moral interest of the community than it is to guard men after they have gone astray.

The idea of the newspaper has greatly changed in recent years; the ideal of the newspaper has also changed. Twenty-five or fifty years ago the newspaper that could furnish the strongest and ablest editorials was counted the strongest and ablest paper in the country. Papers sold largely for their editorial value. Such is not the case today. A newspaper sells because of its medium of news. The paper that can furnish the most reliable news, and the most of it, is the popular newspaper of today and soon gains prestige in the financial world. We deplore this modern tendency and find very little in the average country weekly except local news items of visiting, accidents, happenings, parties, etc. The community newspaper should be a builder of thought, of principle and should at all times champion the progressive interest of its community and state, regardless of its criticism.

President Wilson's estimate of the church is found in the following quotation uttered by him the other day: "To my thinking, the Christian church stands not only at the center of philanthropy but at the center of science, at the center of philosophy, at the center of politics—in short, at the center of sentiment and thinking life; and the business of the Christian church, of the Christian minister is to show the spiritual relation of men to the great world processes, whether they be physical or spiritual. It is nothing less than to show the plan of life. I wonder if any of you realize how hungry men's minds are for a complete satisfactory explanation of life."

When we attend Conferences and Conventions it is a very easy matter to make a resolution and fail to carry out that resolution. We don't make the failure because we mean to but because we get absorbed in many other things and neglect it. The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina Conference, which closed last week, went on record for many good things, and no doubt there will be an honest effort made to carry out the resolutions and suggestions of that body. Next Sunday will be a good time to begin to carry out these things, if you did not make the start last Sunday. We need better Sunday schools, bigger Sunday schools and brighter Sunday schools. The only way to achieve these three points is to work for them and we express the confidence of the schools of the North Carolina Conference that the Convention ideas be put into practical experience.

In THE CHRISTIAN SUN for July 16 we gave the information that Rev. J. E. Franks had secured 53 new subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN since the first of July, 16 of which he had sent during the last few days. The ink was scarcely dry on THE SUN when another letter from Brother Franks arrived with 13 new subscribers (let 13 be lucky or unlucky, we consider it lucky) and one renewal and a check enclosed for $28.00. Brother Franks made no comment except writing at the bottom of the list, "More to follow." Had he thought of the matter a whole day no message from his pen could have been more interesting or cheerful than the three words, "more to follow." Think of it, more to follow. How many others have more to follow?

Here is a fine estimate of the religious journal which is given out by the advertising clubs of the world: "It has the highest political ideals; it is foremost in promoting good citizenship, education; first, in establishing and supporting philanthropy. Equally true is it that the most worth-while portion of the religious element anywhere is that which subscribes to the religious press."

There is a general criticism that the Church is a poorly organized piece of machinery. We have noticed that those who say this are those who know the least about the Church as an organization. They speak from observation and re-say what some other misinformed and prejudiced persons have said. The Church has always been ready and willing to prove her ability as an organization, though she has never been called upon for just that thing. Every agency for doing good is today depending upon the Church as an organization. And the Church press, why bless your life, dear reader, if you could spend one day in some Church paper office you would be amazed at the requests from every conceivable agency asking for public support in some way. The most useful thing about our desk is the waste basket. We are compelled to use it, not because these calls are unworthy, but because we do not have the space for them.

Upon a hill that overlooks the Holy City, the Mount of Olives, the mountains of Moab, and the hills back of Bethlehem, is the home for children orphaned by the war. The Mount Zion Home was founded several months ago by the American Red Cross Commission for Palestine, but has since been entrusted to the Juniors to maintain. They have adopted the home fully equipped with orphans. The running expenses are to be provided for by the school children of America out of the million-dollar fund which they have pledged to carry on their works of relief this year for children throughout the world. Their little proteges have seen months, even years of hardship, cruelty and fear. But their future will be one of rosy promises, as the dream of their proud American sponsors, the Juniors, gradually unfolds. First, there is the home where they have care and love and laughter that they may become physically normal girls and boys again; secondly, a school and a church where they may study to become powers for good in the world.

Everywhere we hear the cry that the young people are not interested in the Church and its workings. Why? Many of our churches have Children's Day once a year, (some not even this) beyond this there is nothing except the regular Sunday school and preaching services. Is this fair to the children who demand some new activity almost every hour, three hundred and sixty-five days in the year? From some country churches we hear there will be no Children's Day for lack of time to train the children. When children are put off a few times like that, will there be a progressive church in that place twenty years hence? There are other churches in which all the programs, plans, etc., for special occasions are prepared by the older members, even the choir is composed practically of such members. These are conditions that progressive pastors and superintendents should not allow to exist. All should take part, and the young people especially should be given a part.

The attitude of church organizations toward the movement for thrift and savings is well exemplified in a resolution adopted by the Christian Endeavor Union of California, in convention at Long Beach, Calif. recently. The Christian Endeavor organization endorsed the encouragement of thrift as a public policy, and authorized its Citizenship Department to co-operate with the California savings officials to make the 1919 thrift movement a success. The resolution adopted by the convention reads: "Be it recommended by the California Christian Endeavor Union that it fully endorse and urge that, as essential to character formation, to the welfare of the American people, and to the promotion of a national habit, the practice of the national program of thrift instruction, the organization of Savings Societies and the sale of thrift stamps and Savings Stamps become a part of public procedure; and that the Citizenship department of the California Christian Endeavor Union be named to co-operate with each state division of the War Savings Organization for California toward making the government plan of 1919 a success"

The Baptist denomination has set out to raise seventy-five million dollars. Startling! Can they do it? Of course they can—and will. This is a day of big things. We are rising upon our dear selves to things that are higher. The shame upon the Church is that it has not done more in days gone by. We mean all denominations. As an organization the Church has not taught its members to give. We are only in the beginning state of giving. Better days ahead. We are realizing that our business is the Lord's business and what we have is His, and that we are only trustees for it. Of course our Baptist brethren will raise the $75,000,000, and here is every good wish for them.

TO THE PUBLIC

While the horror of the latest bomb outrage is still fresh in the minds of Americans, we would call attention to the menace of the growth of the spirit of violence, bitterness and unreason among our people. We sincerely trust that the criminals responsible for these outrages will be discovered and punished by due process of law. Terrorism must be given no room in our land. But to eliminate this menace it is not enough merely to join in the hue and cry against anarchy and Bolshevism; we must also study the economic and mental factors which make the background for this half-insane type of terrorism. A common resolve to abide by our time-honored principles of free discussion and the regular processes of constitutional government is the need of the hour.

Unhappily violence, recently employed in the name of patriotism has been allowed to go unpunished by the authorities, and has even been praised by leaders in government and in the press. In New York on May Day peaceful meetings were attacked, The Call building was raided, and innocent men and women suffered serious injuries. Many voices openly praised such treatment of "the Reds." But condonations of violence lead to contempt of law and strengthen those who counsel revolution.

To meet the situation we urge:

1. That all men and women of good will set themselves to influence public opinion through every available medium against lawless measures by whomsoever they may be employed.

2. That they resolve to see that fair hearings and just trials are given to men, irrespective of their political or economic opinions, so that it may be said that in America no man's case, be he an I. W. W. or a Bolshevik or the most reactionary conservative, is prejudged by an appeal to popular feeling; and in particular that they set themselves against the counsels of hate, whose effect upon the rising generation can be only to pile up future disaster for mankind.

3. Since, in the judgment of the Attorney General of the United States, existing laws against criminal terrorism are adequate, and since free discussion is essential for the exposure of economic and political errors, that the attempt be abandoned to coerce minority opinion so long as it does not promote disorder, or to defeat social change by repressive legislation.

As ministers of the Christian Church and as citizens of this liberty-honoring Republic we plead for faith in reason, good-will and fairness to oppose the forces of bitterness and violence in our national life.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

NOTICE

To the Church in the South:

Those interested in the building of a church in Richmond, Va., to be known as the Haggard Memorial in honor of one of the pioneers of our Church and denomination will please write to H. J. Fleming, 2314 Roanoke Avenue, Newport News, Va. There are about two hundred members of our Church in the city and they are desirous that the Church at large place in the capital city of the Old Dominion a church named as above. The Rev. Rice Haggard who suggested the name Christian for the denomination once held a pastorate in Richmond and it is no more than right that as a church in the South and the United States see that the movement initiated by the members of our church to secure a building in the city of Richmond, be supported by our financial and moral influence as well. I hope that a great number may become interested in the matter and that before long we shall have the necessary means to push this movement to a glorious culmination. With best wishes for the work.

SOME INTERESTING HISTORY

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention embracing the Sunday schools of the Christian Church in this section will meet with the Oakland Christian church on July 23 and 24. This church is nine miles from Suffolk and about one mile from the village of Chuckatuck, Va., and is in one of the most historic spots of Nansemond County. In the same vicinity the powerful tribe of Nansemond Indians had their headquarters when Captain John Smith sailed up the Nansemond on his first exploring expedition, and found that Indian corn was raised by those Indians in abundance, so that when starvation was facing the Jamestown colonies it was to this place that he repaired and procured food to relieve the situation. In the neck below is thought to have been the first land or farm granted to an individual, and from him it took its name Barrett's Neck. Near here the first settlement in the county was started by John Martin and his associates in 1609.

By 1672 this section had become thickly settled by colonists, and Rev. George Fox of the Friends Church visited Chuckatuck and a Friends church was founded, and was in existence for a great many years. Their record of their meetings is now the oldest records of the county, and is of great interest to the historian.

St. John's P. E. church near here is one of the oldest colonial churches in this section; having a history that goes back beyond 1702. On the establishment of this church the Quakers began to leave the community and a good number settled in the Eastern part of North Carolina, especially in Perquimans County, where the denomination still has churches.

From tradition and contemporary records the County court house was located near here in the early days, and the first mail route in this section passed here.

The first stage route from Norfolk to Richmond, as well as the first telegram line also passed this section. News of the Battle of Lexington passed here on its way South either the last of April or the first of May 1775. General Tarleton's British troops were defeated near here by the American Militia in the closing years of the Revolution, and Lord Cornwallis marched his army through here on his way to Portsmouth, before going to Yorktown in 1781.

The Methodist missionaries began work here about 1774, and the Baptists near here in 1779 or 1780. Revs. Mintz and Barrow, the first Baptist ministers to visit the section, were dipped in the river until they were nearly drowned at Sleepy Hole, yet they soon established churches on both sides of the river. The Masonic Lodge here dates back to 1797.

The Christian Church had an organization near here known as Wills Chapel early in the last century, it taking its name from the Hon. John Scarborough Wills who had been an officer in the American army in the Revolution, and who also represented Isle of Wight County in the General Assembly of Virginia for a great many years. This church had as many as 130 members at one time, but it gradually declined being represented the last time in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference at the session of 1840 by Stephen Smith. From that time until 1872 there was no regular organization of the Christians in the community. At that time Oakland was organized, and has grown until it now reports 272 members, to the annual Conference.

The surrounding country is beautiful, some views not being surpassed by any in this section of the State. The community is progressive and up-to-date, and everything bids fair for this to be one of the best Conventions ever held.

NOTICE

The Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference will meet with the New Hope Christian church, August 14-17, 1919. Those who expect to attend as delegates or visitors should write N. M. Hasler, Harrisonburg, Va., and state when they will arrive and how they will travel. Those going on the train will be met at Harrisonburg.

Following a good year's work by the churches, this promises to be the best and most largely attended conference ever held in the Valley. The following brethren are expected to attend and take part in the proceedings: Rev. W. W. Staley, President of the Southern Christian Convention; Rev. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary of the Southern Christian Convention; Dr. W. A. Harper, President of Elon College; Rev. L. F. Johnson, Mission Pastor, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mr. C. D. Johnston, Superintendent Christian Orphanage; Mr. W. R. Daniels, President Rays Hill and Southern Pennsylvania Christian Conference, and probably one speaker from headquarters at Dayton, Ohio.

All churches are requested to send complete reports and full delegations.

W. T. WALTERS, President.
A. W. ANDES, Secretary.

FROM BROTHER FOGLEMAN'S FIELD

Union Grove

Union Grove sustained a great loss early this year in the death of two of her deacons. Brothers C. A. Byrd and C. C. Brown were elected to fill the vacancy and were ordained by Rev. L. I. Cox.

The Sunday school, under the leadership of C. A. Byrd, is making an effort to increase attendance and improve the singing. We have a growing Sunday school already as a result of the efforts. July 6 was Children's Day here. We are expecting Rev. J. F. Apple to assist in our meeting the third week in August.

Antioch

Services at this place were conducted by Revs. H. A. Albright and W. N. Hayes twice this year. At my last appointment here the township Sunday school Convention was held in the afternoon.

We do not have a very large membership at this church but we usually have a large number of earnest hearers. Rev. J. F. Apple is to help in our meeting the fourth week in September.

Spoons' Chapel

The congregation at this place is usually small; but a few earnest people are always faithful. We are planning to hold our revival meeting here the fourth week in August.

We find it very agreeable to be near all of our churches and to be able to mingle with our people. Our trying to farm has robbed us of needed time in which to visit our members.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

The notice of Brother I. W. Hitchcock recently published in THE SUN concerning the organization of a Christian church in this, the Nation's capitol city, and requesting the Brotherhood to send him names and addresses of any of our people residing here, resulted in the first meeting for prayer and worship being held last Sunday, July 13, at the home of Brother and Sister T. J. Lawrence, 114 Carroll Ave., Takoma Park.

Brother Hitchcock led the meeting and Miss Louise Lawrence read the scripture lesson. Gospel songs were sung and earnest, fervent prayers offered to Almighty God for the success of the enterprise. The spirit of the meeting was excellent and we were indeed grateful for the privilege of being one of the number in attendance.

Definite plans were outlined looking toward the erection of a temporary building for public worship in a splendid, rapidly growing, section of the city in the near future. However, we need the names and addresses of a larger number of our people that we may get in touch with them and hope every reader of this item will appreciate the great assistance they might render at this time by furnishing this information. Simply drop Brother Hitchcock a card addressed to 801 Allison Street, Washington, D. C., giving name and street address of any persons whom you know were formerly members of our church.

SUFFOLK LETTER

Reconstruction is a familiar word in the Southern states, and it is a work that is going on all the time in the world. At the close of the Civil War Congress passed two acts by which the Confederate states might be restored to the rights inherent in the Union. Each state must frame a new Constitution; this Constitution must be ratified by popular vote and approved by Congress; the new State legislature must ratify the fourteenth amendment; when the requisite number ratified this amendment, any state which had fulfilled all requirements should be re-admitted to the Union and entitled to Congressional representation. By 1870 all the Southern states had been re-admitted to the Union; but not till 1871 were all of them represented in Congress. It thus appears that it took five years from 1865 to 1870 to complete this work of reconstruction; and one more year to get full representation in Congress. Jefferson Davis was arrested near Irwinsville, Ga., May 10, 1865, and imprisoned in Fortress Monroe, Va., 1865-67, and was pardoned in 1868. Those were times that tried the souls of men; but out of it all came a new South—a better and a richer South.

The Kaiser's crime is greater than that of Jefferson Davis. Davis was contending for the rights of States; the Kaiser invaded such rights. We are in the midst of reconstruction for the world. Blunders will be made, injuries will be inflicted, rights will be invaded, and individuals will suffer unjustly; but out of it will come a better and more brotherly world. War always multiplies wrongs, blunts consciences, degrades virtue, increases greed, convulses society, generates lawlessness, and leaves religion in a state of chaos. The state and the church must perform the task of integration and this requires time and patience.

The fact is plain that the work of reconstruction is an unfinished task. The work of road-building, of city building, of machinery, of farming, is one endless chain of reconstruction. The salvation of men is a work of reconstruction. "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new." John wrote: "I saw a new heaven and a new earth"; and He that sat upon the throne said: "Behold, I make all things new." The whole process of salvation is a process of reconstruction, of making man over, changing him from a rebel to a son. And this great work is often accomplished through suffering. "Before I was afflicted I went astray; but now have I kept thy word." In the language of the poet:

"Afflictions, though they seem severe,
Are oft in mercy sent;
They stopp'd the prodigal's career,
And caus'd him to repent."

The world was saved by the sufferings of Jesus and "He shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied." Even pain is a friend, for, without pain, we would not take medicine, consult a doctor, or destroy evil. World-travail may mean world-release from world-wrongs. Of course there will be ermination and re-ermination, oppressions and social evils, but out of the tragedy of war and sin will emerge a new world and a new spirit that will set mankind forward in all the departments and interests of the race.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

AND STILL THE VOLUNTEERS CONTINUE

Last week I felt sure I could in this letter announce the final result of our Standardization Drive, but I cannot. I did not know our people's deep and abiding concern for the College. I shall, I trust, be able next week to announce what will be the sum raised.

When I tell our beloved friends that two brethren this week volunteered to give $1,000 each and that another wrote he had been earnestly considering it, but could send only $250, I believe they will patiently wait till one or two others who are considering prayerfully have been spiritually lead to do or not to do their part.

The first fund this week came from Brother Alva C. Richards, Winchester, Va., one of the promising young business men of the Valley Conference. Three weeks ago I announced that Brother Boyd Richards was the first man in that Conference to give $1,000 to any of our Church enterprises. I prophetically said he would not be the last. I did not know who the next man would be, but I am so happy it is his younger brother. Is it not fine for two brothers thus to honor God with their substance? Brother Alva says he hopes later to do more. He will do it all right.

The second fund came from far away Florida. Many years ago one of the leading laymen of Holy Neck church went to the far South. That man was C. A. Howell. He is true to the Church yet and always will be. One of Elon's most talented alumni is his son, C. C. Howell, a leading lawyer of Florida, with offices in Jacksonville. Brother Howell is one of the Kingdom's noble men.

The two hundred and fifty dollar gift came from J. Pettaway Johnson, recently moved to Newport News, Va., from New York City. He is the son of the sainted J. W. Johnson of Johnson's Grove church. His letter expressing his love for the Christian Church is worth more than his generous gift.

First Convention

Last week I attended the first session of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina Christian Conference. It met with the Shallow Well church and was gloriously entertained. I have attended many such Conventions, but none excell this. Forty-four schools were represented and twenty preachers were there. Brother C. H. Stephenson presided and would have been re-elected president, had he not said he preferred some one else be chosen. He was made General Secretary and Hon. S. T. A. Kent elected as President. The Convention next year meets at Elon College. I have but one regret over the Convention. The great speech I had prepared is still in my system. There was no time for it. The people are to be congratulated however.

Twenty-One Years Ago

My heart yearns to go to the Eastern Virginia Convention this week. I may go yet. Twenty-one years ago I attended my first gathering of the Christian church in a representative capacity. It was the Eastern Virginia Convention and it met at Oakland church, where it meets this week. How I yearn in heart to be there! God has been good to me these twenty-one years and so have the brethren. I have no language in which to express my appreciation. I am grateful, but I have not deserved it.

W. A. HARPER.

NOTES

Dr. J. P. Barrett's address to August 10 will be 1315 First Avenue, Columbus, Ga.

Prof. Arnold Hall has been elected Welfare Supervisor for Scotland County. Scotland is wise.

The Virginia Valley Conference meets August 14. The meeting place is New Hope church.

Brother J. W. Winfree, Virginia, Va., has helped us to increase THE SUN's circulation during the last few days. Many thanks.

We are glad to learn that Mrs. J. O. Atkinson, who has been taking treatment in a Suffolk, Virginia, hospital, is improving.

Brother W. C. Hook and wife, Mt. Jackson, Va., we understand, are to return to Elon this fall to pursue their studies. It will be Brother Hook's senior year.

We trust that readers of THE SUN will turn to the notice written by Rev. H. J. Fleming. It seems to us that the undertaking is timely and worthy of consideration.

Wymer W. Manning, son of Dr. J. W. Manning, Norfolk, Va., passed the State Board of Dentistry some days ago and will enter the profession of his father. Young Manning graduated at the Medical College of Virginia, June 16, 1919. Success to his career.

N. C. Riddle, son of Mr. W. H. Riddle, of Shallow Well church, graduated some weeks ago from the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, and last week passed the State Board, ranking second in the class. Young Riddle is a cousin to the Editor.

Mrs. J. B. Vaughan—THE SUN has been coming to my home for thirty-six years, so here is another lifetime member.

MISSIONARY

THE SUPPORT OF ANOTHER MISSIONARY

It was the writer's privilege to attend, last Sunday afternoon, the quarterly meeting of the Tidewater Christian Sunday School Association. The Association is composed of the Sunday schools of our Christian churches in and about Norfolk and the meeting last Sunday was in our Portsmouth church. The several schools were well represented both by the pastors of the churches, superintendents, officers and delegates. Rev. G. O. Lankford is president of the Association. The body is intensely interested in the work of the Kingdom, and besides doing much to promote the interests of its several schools, is thoroughly missionary in spirit and vision. It was voted unanimously last Sunday to support a missionary on the foreign field, each school agreeing to do its part, after excepting Third Church and Memorial Temple because these two schools with their churches have their pastors each on the foreign field. With such a vision as this, and such a task before it, the Association has promise of great things and its influence for good will be mighty in the future.

THE IMPERATIVE NEED OF WORKERS

The salvation of Christian America, and of other Christian countries, depends not upon their material resources or financial prosperity, but solely upon what these Christian lands shall do to help save the non-Christian peoples of the world. Our Heavenly Father gives superior advantages, wealth, blessings, benefits not because He loves some lands better than other lands, or would be better to some people than He would to others. Nay verily. Our God is no respecter of persons, peoples or nationalities. If He seems for a reason to favor any people above their unfortunate brothers, it is only that the more favored may be of service to the less favored. Our country with all its wondrous wealth today is being weighed in the balances to see whether it is itself worthy of being saved. And it is to prove its worthiness in no other manner than by what it gives of its own life and resources for the saving of others. The very salvation of America hangs in the balances today. Will it save itself by losing itself that others may be saved? That alone is the Biblical and the Christian standard of measurement.

After a hundred years of modern missions we have not yet sent to China, India, Africa, Japan, and the other non-Christian lands as many missionaries as would be needed to evangelize and redeem a great city like New York. We Americans are spending more money on Coca-Cola and "soft drinks" than we are to reach the non-Christian lands for Christ. Nothing weighs the character of a people or indicates the love of a people as does the manner in which it spends its money.

If Christian America would in the next ten years spend as much to send the Gospel to those who have it not as it spends for cigarettes, the whole world within that time would hear and know of Christ. As a student of missions I want to assert that the greatest need of our Church today is workers—I mean by that volunteers to go as missionaries to the foreign field.

The Church Missionary Society of England has made it a rule since 1887 never to refuse a properly qualified missionary candidate. "They have never failed to find the money after they have found the man. After what we have seen the past two years will we ever again doubt our ability to get money when young life is involved? Let us find the workers for this great cause and the money will surely come."

I was quoting these the words of a great writer, but the sentiment is thoroughly my own. If twenty men and women were to offer for the foreign field here in our Southern Christian churches within the next six months, the writer believes with all his heart that the money would be immediately forthcoming to support them and to supply their equipment on the field. Brethren and beloved, where are the men and women who will go for us?

J. O. ATKINSON.

HELP TRAIN THE BOY FOR MISSIONS

By Mrs. J. W. Patton

Everything that we learn of young people shows us that they are very near to God. They easily believe in Him and recognize His rightful rule over them.

The energy of youth will spend itself in some direction. Why not direct it toward the greatest of all good works, that of bringing the whole world to Christ? Many of the greatest missionaries of all time, and many of the most liberal givers to missions, received their most potent and lasting impressions in youth.

Our boys must be reached for the missionary cause. They are organized into various other clubs, why not the Missionary Club? It can be called by any name you may choose—Christian Knights or Missionary Scouts.

There is a need for leaders in this work. Men and women must be asked to devote a serious part of life's unpaid effort to this phase of the mission cause. If any are hesitant about their call thereto, let them remember the words of the Master, "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields."

The Church must speak with the power of a great conviction, with the message of a mighty mission. If the boys are trained for missions we will have a Church trained for missions. The need is great. May we have the power to meet that need.

FROM OVER THE SEAS

A LETTER FROM MISS WILLIAMS

This is a rainy Sunday afternoon, and rain in the tropics means that one stays in doors, for in a very few moments so much rain will fall that the streets resemble rivers, but in equally as short a time the water will all run into the sea, the sun comes out brightly and the next day there will be little, if any, mud. So this being an afternoon free from interruptions I have been enjoying the luxury of visiting again, through THE CHRISTIAN SUN, my friends in Virginia and North Carolina. How often as I read THE SUN do I recall the many friends I met at the Southern Christian Convention which met at Franklin, in April of last year, and of the delightful visits I had with the churches in Norfolk, and vicinity, of the evening spent at Suffolk, and later in the day there attending a Sunday school Convention, of my Sunday in Holland, Va., and then of the many friends I made at the Seaside Chautauqua, and my trip from there to Pleasant Grove, Greensboro, Elon College, Graham, and Burlington. Each of these places has a corner in my heart as I eagerly scan the pages of THE SUN for news from them, and more than once I have longed to write a personal letter of sympathy when I read of the sorrow that has come to some, and of congratulation over the joy of others. To me THE SUN has been like a nice newsy letter from these kind friends, who did so much to make my furlough a happy visit to the States and I thank the Editor for his invitation to tell you something of our work in Porto Rico.

First, we have a very especial interest just now in Elon College, because one of our own boys, Victor Rivera has gone there. Oh, if you could have read that young man's letter back to Mrs. Barrett, describing a picnic he had attended, his first picnic in the States, and the enthusiastic manner in which he writes of everything, you would feel more than repaid for your kindness.

Slowly the buildings damaged by the earthquake last October are being repaired. Slowly, because so much material has to be brought by boat; that work cannot proceed rapidly here as in the home land. The repairs upon the church at Salinas have been completed, the interior of the church freshly decorated, electric lights installed and the wood work of the outside painted, so that church presents the neatest appearance of any of our buildings in Christian missions. Last week special services were held in Salinas. Monday evening Mr. Barrett took all of the workers over in the automobile, Mrs. Barrett, Dona Delfina, Pedro Romana, the pastor at Aruz; Mr. Martinez, pastor at Santa Isabel, and myself, and after an hour spent in prayer in the church we went to the home of the native pastor, Rev. San Doval, where his wife had an excellent supper prepared. They are living in the same house that was the home of Rev. T. E. White, and as we sat at the table with the view of the mountains facing us, and the fresh breeze from the sea blowing into the room we felt sure that the thoughts of Mr. White often turned to Porto Rico and that there was a place in his affections for Salinas.

After supper Mrs. Barrett proposed that we all walk around the old corner where the first Christian services had been held and then going on a square further down the street Mr. Barrett stopped and gave out a hymn. The little band of workers formed a circle, a larger circle of people gathered, attracted by the music, and another hymn was sung, a prayer offered and a cordial invitation given to all to attend the services at the church, and a third hymn was sung. I stood facing the setting sun, and I never witnessed a more glorious sunset any where than that one. The purple mountains, the dark green leaves of the palms and the golden glow of the sky, made a picture never to be forgotten, while all around stood the children attracted by the music. We passed on to the hotel and stopping in the street there, another hymn was given out and soon we had a large audience, this time of men, and older boys, and we stayed even after it was too dark to read the words of the hymns, singing songs that might draw some to Jesus until the sound of our church bell called us to service. Our church bell! Oh, how sweet it fell upon the evening air, and only those of us who had witnessed conditions here transformed by the power of the Gospel could realize just what the sound of the church bell means.

Dona Delfina spent the week in Salinas. The second evening Mr. and Mrs. Barrett took over a number of the young men of our Ponce church to assist in the service. One of them Juan Rodriguez, has just recently returned from six months stay in Santo Domingo in government service, and so Tuesday evening was a missionary evening, telling of the need of the Gospel in Santo Domingo.

On other evenings Mr. Barrett went over taking with him different workers of our Ponce church, and the week was not without its results as there were a number of professions of faith.

Returning to Ponce, we passed through Santa Isabel where our new church is so badly needed. The children in the states have already given about $2,000 but fully $3,000 must be in the hands of the Mission Board for the building of that church. I spoke so often in the States of the need of a church at Santa Isabel that I am going to make just one more plea to the children through THE SUN for blocks for this church. Your pastors and Sunday school teachers know all about the block plan and can explain it to you.

Work is to begin tomorrow upon the repairs of our church here in Ponce. The towers fell at the time of the earthquake, and when this work is completed we hope the contractor can start on the church at Santa Isabel.

OLIVE G. WILLIAMS.

VIRGINIA BEACH, NORFOLK, VA., JULY 29-AUGUST 5
 A Glimpse of the Good Things

Mr. W. C. Pearce, Chicago, Ill., International Sunday School Association Field Secretary, will speak four times: 1. Two messages to young people on Christian Leadership. 2. Chautauqua lectures: (a) Religious Education and Democracy; (b) Religious Education and Reconstruction.

Dr. Geo. C. Enders, Defiance, Ohio: 1. A message each day on the Bible. It will be a rich hour of spiritual uplift and vision.

Mrs. Isaac Sewell, Nashville, Tenn., will give the Elementary lesson each day. Mrs. Sewell comes highly recommended by Miss Lewis who has conducted this department two years. Also by Dr. Beauchamp, formerly of Portsmouth, Va. She is the Elementary specialist of the Southern Methodist church.

Mr. Hermon Eldredge, Camp Upton, N. Y., will give three messages on Christian Leadership: 1. The Builder; 2. The Call to Service; 3. An Open Door. Also he will give a discussion on "The Merger Service of the Sunday School and Morning Church Service." He will give an address on "Lessons Learned at the Camp," conduct the Sunday school part of the Sunday morning service, and speak once on the Forward Movement.

Dr. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Va., will be the Chautauqua preacher and will speak on the following great themes: 1. Man and His God; 2. Man and His Man; 3. Man and His Money; 4. Man and His Master; 5. Man and His Mission; 6. Man and His Destiny.

Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, Urbana, Ill., will preach the Sunday morning sermon at the Merger service. He will also speak on the Forward Movement, and deliver one of the Chautauqua lectures on "The Quest of an Ideal." He will

Church; and will also give one of the Chautauqua lectures on "The New Emergence of Woman as Seen by a Mere Man."

Rev. Peter Ainslie, D. D., Baltimore, Md., will give one of the Chautauqua lectures on: "Is Christian Union Desirable?" He is one of the greatest leaders in America on that vital theme.

Rev. J. F. Burnett, D. D., Dayton, Ohio, will preach the Sunday night sermon.

Rev. Wm. Mason Jay, Holland, Va., will discuss the important theme of "Christian Stewardship," one of the great Church problems. The daily discussion of a very practical "Church Problem" will be one of the most helpful themes of the Chautauqua.

Vesper services each evening at the side of the Ocean is a distinctive feature of our Chautauqua. The different speakers will be Rev. B. F. Black, just back from France as Chaplain; Rev. W. P. Minton, the song leader and Foreign Mission Secretary-Elect; Mr. J. J. Pitt, just back from overseas "Y" service; Rev. H. G. Rowe, just returned from overseas "Y" service; Rev. H. J. Fleming, a worker with enlisted men at Hampton Roads.

The Forward Movement Message each day will be given by the Superintendent, Rev. W. H. Denison, D. D.; Rev. Dr. R. C. Helfenstein; Rev. F. H. Peters, and Mr. Hermon Eldredge, the Religious Education Secretary of the Movement.

Mrs. E. T. Cotten, Suffolk, Va., will be the pianist for the Chautauqua.

Christian Union Commissions

The Disciples of Christ Commission on Christian Union and the Commission on Christian Union of the Christian Church will hold a joint session on Thursday and Friday of the Chautauqua. Speakers from these two Commissions will furnish the program Friday from 10 A. M. until 12:40 P. M. The following will likely be the program for that period:

1. "The World-field Demands for Christian Unity"—Rev. Finis Idleman, D. D., New York City.

2. "City and Rural Community Demands for Christian Unity"—Rev. P. S. Sailor, Westery, R. I.

3. "Christian Union and the Conservation Program of the Church"—Rev. F. H. Peters, D. D., Greenville, Ohio.

4. "Necessary Steps to Christian Unity"—Rev. B. H. Melton, D. D., Baltimore, Md.

5. "Danger Points to be Avoided"—President W. A. Harper, LL. D., Elon College, N. C.

6. "Progress of Christian Unity to Date"—Rev. H. C. Armstrong, D. D., Baltimore, Md.

7. "How Near may Disciples and Christians Come Together with Assurance of the Endorsement of Their Constituency"—Rev. E. B. Bagby, D. D., Washington, D. C.; Rev. J. F. Burnett, D. D., Dayton, Ohio.

The School of Methods of the Christian Church is worth your while. You need it and it needs you. It trains you and the workers and officers of your church. It gives vision, uplift, inspiration. It combines recreation and study. It gives power and fellowship.

The ocean beach is fine, and the bathing is a delight to all who go to Virginia Beach. Let Mr. S. M. Smith, General Secretary, help find your accommodations. Write him at Norfolk, Va., Chamber of Commerce Building. Remember that Mr. W. C. Pearce, a great man with a great message will open the Chautauqua Tuesday night, July 29, at 8 o'clock.

WARREN H. DENISON, President.

Mrs. J. C. McAdams—I don't want to be without THE SUN. Dr. Staley's letter in last week's issue is a comfort to me, more so because I am sick in bed.

discuss two of the Church's great problems: 1. The Church for the New Time; 2. The Sunday Evening Service.

Rev. Wilson P. Minton, Defiance, Ohio, will conduct the singing during the Chautauqua and speak at one of the Vesper services.

Rev. J. Vincent Knight, Greensboro, N. C., will conduct three Christian Endeavor periods: 1. Christian Endeavor's New Day; 2. Christian Endeavor and the Forward Movement; 3. Our Christian Endeavor Task.

Rev. H. G. Rowe, Merom, Indiana, will conduct a daily class on Sunday School Organization. His themes are: 1. Sunday School Publicity; 2. Discovering and Training Sunday School Leaders; 3. Workers' Meetings; 4. The Sunday School in Session; 5. Building and Adult Class from 5 to 100.

Rev. E. F. Brown, Durham, N. C., will discuss Christian Endeavor principles in two sessions as follows: 1. The Ultimate Objectives of Christian Endeavor Principles; 2. The Remarkable Power of Christian Endeavor Principles.

Rev. E. K. McCord, D. D., Missionary to Japan, home on furlough will conduct the daily mission class. His themes for discussion are: 1. The Missionary Task; 2. The Missionary Church; 3. The Missionary Process; 4. Heathenism's Response; 5. Our Own Missions.

Rev. G. Herbert Ekins, Norfolk, Va., City Church Federation Secretary, will discuss the problem of the Community

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

THE CHILDREN GO VISITING

Our singing class, composed of ten little girls, was invited to give a song service at Union Christian church, Union Ridge, N. C. on the second Sunday. Brother Fleuning, the pastor, gave us a very warm welcome and the little girls enjoyed the service very much. It was a treat for them to get out from home and sing for those who are aiding in giving them a home here at the Orphanage. The people were very kind to them and the good ladies served lunch on the grounds after the service, and Mr. C. P. Aldridge treated to lemonade which was very refreshing on a hot summer day. A free-will offering was taken and about thirty-one dollars was raised.

If the people enjoyed having the little girls with them as much as they enjoyed being there it was a very happy occasion for both. We hope to go to other churches in the near future. We find that the more we can get this work before the people and the better acquainted they become with its possibilities, the more interested they become in its success.

When you give money for this work it is not thrown away by you—so that you will never hear from it again. Perhaps in a few years it may come back to you in the personal form of a trained nurse, a teacher, a doctor, a lawyer or some other professional person. So if by investing a part of your income in this work you help to train a little helpless boy or girl to be useful and of service to mankind and be a blessing to the community and an asset to society have you not invested your money wisely?

A good lady in the State of Ohio mailed us a check for $25.00 some days ago. I am told that this lady makes her money by running a truck farm and is a hard worker, but she believes in giving a part of her income to the Lord. She has never seen the Orphanage or any of the children. She gives this contribution because she has love and tender sympathy for the little orphans of our Church. We thank God for such noble women.

We have lots of glass fruit jars but no fruit. If any of our good ladies who have fruit will be so kind as to fill some for us, we will be glad to ship any number of cans you want.

HOUSEKEEPING HINTS

Sandwiches and Tea.—Just a hurried sandwich that you can make in a jiffy and then turn to your books again. Simply white bread, nice and moist, the edges trimmed and thrown to the crumb jar for breadings at some other time. Butter the bread after cutting in strips and fill with cream cheese blended with a little peanut butter. Have a tiny bowl of pimiento pickles to nibble. Orange Pekoe tea, plenty of sugar and a slice of lemon.

During damp weather salt shakers will clog on the inner side of the holes. If a few kernels of rice are placed in each cellar with the salt, it will sift better. Cornstarch mixed with the salt will prevent its absorbing dampness. When it is possible during the damp season the salt cellars should be cleaned and freshly filled every day. The latest salt cellar has a glass perforated top, which has two glass prongs, extending down into the bowl. These can be revolved by turning the top.

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

TO PRAY

To pray—not ask an alms of fate,
Nor beg, nor placate, but to bring
An offering, to give myself,
For this is prayer.

To pray—not toward the earth or sky,
But to that Friend within my soul,
To that strong Life I feel so near,
The God in me.

To pray—not for the gain of it,
But for the joy of it. To laugh,
To weep with God, to learn His call,
And answer back.

To pray—to hope, to fear, to fail;
And then when all is lost, save prayer,
O, soul of mine, to pray again,
And then be strong!

—Hugh Robert Orr.

THE PEACE THAT CLINGS

The prophet speaks of the perfect peace that comes to the man "whose mind is stayed on thee." It is not the man whose mind is contented or stationary. That mind may be a stagnant mind. It is like the boulder in the open field. If the rock had eyes it might see; it might admire the field and the sky and the song of birds, but it is a rock without blessing, a rock without helpfulness, a rock without a soul. Winter and summer and cold and heat and day and night it is still a rock, always a rock, and nothing but a rock. The prophet is talking about another sort of peace; the peace of mind stayed upon God. It is that sort of a mind that rejoices in God. To be stayed on Him is conscious strength and constant strength; the consciousness of the strength that has Jesus at the heart of it and also at the circumference of it. It is the one way to be blest, and the one way to be a blessing. The mind that is not "stayed," lacks reliability; it lacks centralization; it lacks unity of action and definiteness of Christlike purpose.

Dr. Matheson once said that peace comes by the thing to which it is fastened, something that is constantly moving. Said he: "What would be the difference between a soul bound to a rock and a soul bound to a star? The soul bound to the rock would be stationary; the soul bound to the star would be ever on the wing. The world's peace is standing still; God's is moving on. The world's peace is silence; God's is a living voice." The inference is therefore plain that "the peace of God descends on every man as it descended on Jesus—in the midst of the waters." When he is resting in Jesus he is doing his best for Jesus. The peace that comes by "staying" is the peace that manifests itself by acting. Lean hard and you will work hard.—United Presbyterian.

IRREVERENCE AND PROFANITY

There is no great gap between the two. The one is the vestibule, the other the room into which it leads. We have more than once called attention to the tendency among clergymen to touch things holy with unwashed hands, and we do so again. We have just returned from a Bible Conference and seen how much levity is mixed up with an otherwise earnest handling of the Scriptures. The ease with which the American mind switches from the sublime to the ridiculous, from the sacred to the frivolous, from the serious to the comical, is directly responsible for the growing spirit of profanity. Who is shocked when boys and girls on the streets use vulgar or profane speech? Who teaches them that some things are holy and other things profane? When they can quote teachers and clergymen as damning things and persons, and consigning them to hell, why should they have reverence and respect for the name of God and for the things made sacred because of that name?

It has come to be the fashion to exploit wit at the expense of the Scriptures. Many a passage is wrenched from its sacredness and made the carrier, not of the truth of God, but of the foolishness of man. Men handle the Bible with a freedom and familiarity that borders on profanity, and it is not to be wondered at that it has been robbed of its power of appeal as the Word of God. We deplore this irreverent handling of the Scriptures, this playing fast and loose with sanctities holy as God Himself and pure and clean as heaven. It is coming to be the bane of pulpit speech. Preachers seem to think that if they would be heard they must descend to street-corner slang, if not downright profanity. Lutheran pulpits are not altogether free of it and that is why we speak of it here. If we wish to lend encouragement to a tendency to abolish the distinction between the sacred and the profane, all that is needed is to excuse or condone such breaches of our Lord's simple and plain command, "Let your communication be, Yea, yea; Nay, nay; for whatsoever is more than these cometh of evil." We challenge any Christian to show that those words have become obsolete.—The Lutheran.

Have not you and I the power to live more unselfishly today because of the unselfishness of the great, monumental lives of devotion?—Phillips Brooks.

THE NORTH CAROLINA CHRISTIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION

The Convention met in first annual session at Shallow Well church, Jonesboro, Tuesday P. M., July 15. President C. H. Stephenson of Raleigh called the Convention to order and after stirring and soul-inspiring music by the orchestra of the Raleigh Sunday school Brother W. H. Lane of the Shallow Well school gave cordial words of welcome and Rev. H. Scholz responded. The business session followed, program for the session was adopted, delegates, pastors and superintendents were enrolled. The enrollment and attendance from the various schools were excellent, I think between forty and fifty schools being represented and possibly two dozen pastors and superintendents were present. Exercises opened at 9:15 sharp Wednesday morning with a concert by the orchestra. Here let it be said that the orchestra was the feature of the Convention and gave life, vivacity, "pep," enthusiasm to all the proceedings. It rendered invaluable assistance and made us have pity for those Conventions that are held without the help and glory of an orchestra.

In the absence of the pastor, Rev. T. E. White, J. O. Atkinson conducted the devotional services.

A business session followed in which many delegates were enrolled and a motion prevailed that the Convention proceed under the rules and regulations previously governing the Eastern North Carolina Convention until the Committee on Constitution and By-Laws should have time to report.

The President's annual address was delivered, subject: League. The points of the address were "L"—League; "E"—Earnestness; "A"—Action; "G"—God; "U"—Unity; "E"—Eternity. It was a superior and timely and comprehensive address, impressively and eloquently delivered. The Convention decided to make the address a part of its minutes, to print it in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and also in tract form and send out a copy with each copy of the printed minutes.

Rev. J. E. Franks moved the Convention to enthusiasm and action on the subject of "Organization and Expansion." He recommended that a thousand dollars be raised for Sunday school missions and that a Sunday school missionary be put in the field. A committee was at once appointed who recommended that $1,500 be raised the coming year by every school's taking one offering each month for missions and that a Sunday school missionary be put in the field for half his time. Rev. J. E. Franks was the man recommended by the Convention and the Committee has every reason to believe that because of his great interest in the work, and his feeling of great need for expansion, he will make the sacrifice and accept.

This was one of the many great forward steps of the Convention. It means that a man is to be sent out who is to find places where Sunday schools are needed and where if planted there will be prospects for churches.

In the absence of Rev. R. L. Williamson, Dr. W. A. Harper was appointed to make report on Teacher Training which he did at a later hour.

Prof. L. L. Vaughan, of Raleigh, most ably led a helpful discussion on "Special Features in My Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society." This discussion gave insight into many novel features in the schools and resulted in Dr. Lawrence's wise plea to every school present to try to excel in some one feature during the coming year.

Rev. J. W. Harrell, D. D., delivered a most wholesome and practical address on "The Sunday School That is Different." This address was one of the features of the Convention and should by all means have a wider hearing and permanent form.

Rev. L. I. Cox delivered a very practical, pointed and powerful address on "The Sunday School and Missions" and on the last day the writer spoke on "Missions In The Sunday School." The missionary note was struck often in the Convention and many are seeing and are saying that we must become a missionary people in school and in church before we can grow and achieve as is our privilege.

Miss May Stephenson presented the report on the "Primary Department," Miss Mary Green that on the "Home Department," Brother George T. Whitaker on the "Adult Department," Mrs. George M. McCullers on the "Cradle Roll," and Brother W. L. Thomas on the "Intermediate Department." All of these reports showed interest and gave valuable suggestions for the good of the work.

Addresses were delivered Wednesday afternoon by Rev. R. F. Brown on "The Sunday School, a Spiritual Force in Reconstruction," Brother P. T. Hines on "The Importance of You and Me," and Rev. J. E. Franks on "A Tithing Sunday School for the New Times." These were all reported to be excellent and helpful addresses, the writer not being privileged to hear them, having committee work at the hour.

Wednesday night Rev. George D. Eastes, the wide-awake and beloved pastor of our Raleigh church, delivered a great and spirited address on, "The Sunday School, An Evangelistic Force," and Ensign W. H. Stephenson spoke eloquently on "What Will We Do With Victory."

Thursday was a busy day and much was accomplished. In a testimony meeting almost every school represented decided to go home and start something that it hadn't had, and try to excel in some one thing. Among the splendid, eloquent and moving addresses of the closing session were: "The Challenge of the New Times to Christian Endeavor" by Rev. J. V. Knight; and "The Sunday School and The Orphanage" by Superintendent Chas. D. Johnston. An offering was made for the Orphanage of $160.00.

The Shallow Well people entertained the Convention with cordial hospitality. Elon College is to have the joy of being host to the Convention next year. Dr. S. T. A. Kent was chosen President; Dr. E. L. Moffitt, Vice-President; Rev. H. Scholz, Recording Secretary; J. Byrd Ellington, Treasurer, and C. H. Stephenson, General Secretary. Brother Stephenson is a live wire in planning and creating a Sunday School Convention and as General Secretary he will give us next year the biggest and best yet.

J. O. ATKINSON.

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR AUGUST 3, 1919

Christian Worship. Matt. 6:5, 6; John 4:1-10, 19-24; Heb. 10:19-25.

Golden Text: God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship in spirit and in truth. John 4:24.

Additional Material for Teachers. Exodus. 34:5-8; II Chron. 29:29, 30; Ps. 84 and 122; Matt. 4:10.

"I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord." Do we have such service that every child can say that? Only recently I went into a Sunday school which is using the Graded Lessons. There is objection, it seems to the children going to their own rooms for opening service, and so they stood there absolutely without a thing to do, except join in the singing. Why? Because the same form of opening exercise was being used, the reading of the opening service in front of the quarterly, which they did not have, and the reading in concert of a lesson which was not theirs. Why not plan to buy some of the splendid books of opening exercises, and have one in which the entire school can join if for any reason it is not considered advisable to let the younger children have their exercises by themselves? Personally, I advocate the latter way, for just teaching the Sunday school lesson is not all that should be taught in Sunday school. We should teach worship. No child should leave our Sunday schools who has not been taught to pray; who has not learned that worship means to do something as well as to be done for? The person who will lead in prayer in a public place is few and far between in any or all of our churches. Why? Because they did not learn to pray when they were children. They are afraid to speak, or testify, because they never learned how, and so our prayermeetings and Christian Endeavor Societies in all too many places, yes and our Sunday school classes, too, resemble old fashioned Quaker meetings. Is this worship?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR AUGUST 3, 1919

Our Relation to Others—Toward Parents and Others in the Home. Exod. 20:12; Eph. 6:1-9. (Consecration).

The last Consecration meeting, we discussed our relation toward our enemies. If we were to listen to the manner in which some of our young people talk to and about their parents, we would have to assume that enemies and homefolks were one and the same. "Oh, Ma's always fussing. She don't want us to have any fun. But we slip out whenever we can," says the girl gleefully, not realizing that when she "slips out" she almost inevitably "slips down" as well. "Pa's old fashioned. He thinks anything he didn't do as a boy is all wrong for us," says the boys, and so he drives the car twenty or thirty miles from home, meets with others whom he would not wish his parents to know, and—is on a road that leads away from home forever. "Old folks are such a bother. They think they ought to have a word in everything, and they are too old to know anything about our ways today," says a thoughtless grandchild, and grandfather or grandmother goes away with their hearts breaking, and praying for death because they are no longer needed. Jesus was obedient unto His parents until He was thirty years old. His last thought for any human being was for His mother. His last conscious cry was to His Father. Can you better His example? Can you imagine Him cross or ungrateful, or disobedient in His home? If you will read carefully, you will find that this oldest Son knew many of the cares of housekeeping; He knew about dishwashing and floor sweeping and bread making, and fire kindling, and He did not consider it beneath Him, nor did He hide His knowledge for fear some one would discover it. Jesus forever ennobled the Home.

APPRECIATES HIS PAPER

Don't stop my paper, printer;
Don't strike my name off yet;
You know the times are stringent
And dollars hard to get;
But tug a little harder
Is what I mean to do,
And scrape enough together—
Enough for me and you.

I can't afford to drop it,
And I find it doesn't pay
To do without a paper,
However others may.
I hate to ask my neighbors
To give me theirs on loan;
They don't just say, but mean it,
"Why don't you have your own?"

You can't tell how we miss it
If it, by any fate,
Should happen not to reach us
Or come a little late;
Then all is in a hubbub
And things go all awry;
And, printer, if you're married
You'll know the reason why.

The children want those stories,
And wife is anxious, too,
At first to glance it over
And then to read it through;
And I read the editorials
And scan the local views,
And read the correspondence
And every bit of news.

—Exchange.

A little girl wrote the following composition on men:

"Men are what women marry. They are more logical than women, also more zoological. Both men and women sprang from monkeys, but the women sprang farther than the men."

A French learning English said to his tutor: "English is a queer language. What does this sentence mean: 'Should Mr. Noble, who sits for this constituency, consent to stand again and run he will in all probability have a walkover'?"

MARRIAGES

WILLS-PORTER

The home of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Porter of Isle of Wight was the scene of a very pretty wedding Thursday evening, June 26, 1919, at six o'clock, when Miss Emily Kay Porter became the bride of Mr. William Edward Wills.

The bride wore a gown of white Georgette and Crepe de Chine and carried bride's roses and sweet peas. Mary Latimer, a cousin of the bride, acted as maid-of-honor, and the groom had as his best man, his brother, Dudley Wills.

Miss Elma Hedgepeth played Lohengrin's wedding march as the couple entered after which the ceremony was read by the writer.

After many congratulations and showers of rice from the relatives and friends who witnessed the pretty occasion, Mr. and Mrs. Wills motored to Windsor and took the train to Norfolk. On their return they will make their home in Suffolk where the groom is engaged in business.

WHITMORE

Ashby D. Whitmore, a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Whitmore, died at Riverside Hospital, Newport News, Va., June 24, 1919, aged 24 years, 10 months and 23 days. On November 23, 1917, he was married to Miss Iola Hargrave. He leaves a wife, one child, Ashby Dee, Jr., parents, one brother, Philip, and one sister, Ivin, all of Newport News, Va., the family having moved from Dendron, Va., last September.

The deceased was a member of the Dendron Christian church also of the Junior Order of American Mechanics. The body was brought to Union Christian church where funeral service was held. Interment was in the church cemetery.

W. D. HARWARD.

ANDREWS

Miss Adlina Andrews was born December 14, 1869, in Surry county, Virginia, and died at her home in Dendron, Va., June 17, 1919.

On January 12, 1887, she was married and cherished and may those of his relatives and friends who are left behind prepare to meet their kinsman in the better world.

and cherished and may those of his relatives and friends who are left behind prepare to meet their kinsman in the better world.

The funeral service was conducted in the home after which the remains were taken to Wakefield, Va., and laid beside her husband who departed this life March 7, 1913.

W. D. HARWARD.

FULGHUM

Sunday afternoon, June 30, 1919, death entered the home of Mr. Charles Fulghum, and bore away the spirit of his beloved companion, Mrs. Fulghum who died at the age of 66 years, one month and one day. At an early age she gave her heart to Christ, and to the last lived a consistent Christian life. She was a member of Antioch Christian church, then moved her membership to Windsor Christian church where she remained till the departure of her life. She was devoted to the work of the church and attended the services regularly, until the paralytic stroke came upon her a few days before her death. In her devotion to her home and church she has left an example worthy of praise. Besides her husband she leaves three sons, one daughter, one step-son, one step-daughter, one half-sister, besides other relatives and friends who mourn their loss. Services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. T. Kitchen, and Rev. N. L. Lewis. Interment was made in the cemetery at Antioch.

BEAMON

The soul of Mrs. Sarah Carolina Endoxia Beamon passed from labor to reward July 2, 1919. Mrs. Beamon was in the eighty-seventh year of her age. She was the daughter of James and Mary Costen and was born January 24, 1833. In early life she married Mr. William Beamon. To this union four children were born—W. W. Beamon, Mrs. James Seawell, Mrs. Joe Smith and Mrs. Pallie Hodges. All except Mrs. Hodges survive her. The funeral services were conducted from the home and the interment made in the home cemetery. Rev. W. W. Staley, assisted by Revs. I. W. Johnson and W. B. Fuller, conducted the service.

Mrs. Beamon was one of the charter members of Damascus church, having been a member more than seventy years. She was as true to its interests as she was to her own people. With her prayers, her purse, and her presence she rendered constant aid. A most beautiful Christian spirit actuated and adorned her conduct in all her relations of life. Meek and unassuming in manner, gentle and lovable in disposition, patient, kind and ever considerate of the welfare of others. Her pastor knew that he could depend on her to support any church institution to the extent of her ability and that a hearty welcome ever greeted him. She kept her face to the future and would not look back. When one administers with a tender hand for the healing of a sufferer, or speaks a word to cheer the heart, such acts live. Like the good Samaritan, who poured oil on the broken body, hers has become a living name. She was greatly beloved by all who knew her. She was especially fond of music. Her home was the musical center of the community. She was a faithful, cheerful laborer in the Lord's vineyard.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

IN MEMORIAN—PAYNE

Whereas, the great and supreme Ruler of the universe has in His infinite wisdom removed from among us a worthy brother, James Asbury Payne; and whereas, the long and intimate relation held with him in the discharge of his duties this church makes it eminently befitting that we record our appreciation of him.

Therefore, Resolved:

That the wisdom which he exercised in the aid of our church by service and counsel will be held in grateful remembrance;

That the removal of such a member among our midst leaves a vacancy that will be realized by the members of this church;

That with deep sympathy with the bereaved relatives of the deceased we express our hope that our loss may be overruled for good by Him who doeth all things well; for,

"Many days he suffered,
And now it is at an end,
And while his body sleeps in death
In Christ he has a friend;"

That a copy of these resolutions be placed upon the church record, a copy sent to the family, and that they be printed in The Christian Sun.

A detective asked an office boy if it was Mr. Jones or his partner who reached the office first as a rule.

"Well," said the boy, turning very red, "Mr. Jones at first was always last, but later he began to get earlier, till at last he was first, though before he had always been behind. He soon got later again, though of late he has been sooner, and at last he got behind as before. But I expect he'll be getting earlier sooner or later."

Mrs. Smith hired a Chinese servant and tried to teach him how to receive calling cards. She let herself out the front door and when the new servant answered her ring she gave him her card. The next day two ladies came to call. When they presented their cards the alert Chinaman hastily compared them with Mrs. Smith's cards and remarked, as he closed the door: "Tickets no good; can't come in."

State Liberty

"IN ESSENTIALS UNITY, IN NON-ESSENTIALS LIBERTY, IN ALL THINGS CHARITY"

The Test

By Mary Ross

Long years ago a poet paused to sing
"One Braver Thing,"

I sing a braver yet,
Forgive—forget!

Give for the unkind word and scornful mien

Let go the darksome fret,
Forgive—forget!

Get for an enemy a thought so pure
That it will cure

His hate, and love will live,
Forgive—forget!

These be life's jewels, scintillant and rare,
And passing fair!

Wouldst never know regret?
Forgive—forget!

This be the testing of us, great or small,
Yea, of us all,

That we, at each sunset,
Forgive—forget!

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

MORE ODDS AND ENDS

This is vacation season, and among those who cannot afford such a luxury, is the Editor of this weekly periodical. "The Editor's Easy Chair" is usually the name applied to general paragraphs in the editorial world. The idea comes from moments of time picked up between regular duties when the editor can write short notes while he would not have the time to write long ones. Hot weather is not very inducive to study as some of our preacher brethren will testify. The presence of these notes on the editorial pages instead of long articles means that the Editor is either fanning between times or watching a shower.

Speaking of education, there are some things about it that have changed along with many other things. During the last few years it has been our pleasure to interview possibly more than a thousand young men and women concerning the matter of a college education. One argument that we have always placed before them is this: That the college trained man has a better chance in life to earn money than the man without a college training. This is only one of the minor reasons for a college education, but it can no longer stand.

The college man is in the rear today so far as earning more money is concerned, unless he ranks in profession either as a general laborer or a professional man of more than average standing. These are abnormal times, and arts, the children of education, suffer in such times. Few men want to serve as an apprentice today because they can go into the ordinary work shop and earn large salaries. Hundreds of young men and women are being deceived by just this sort of a thing and turning aside their educational work for immediate money. A few years from now many of them will be in the non-professional class and too old to begin a solid foundation. Not only that but circumstances and obligations will not permit. The consequence will be that they will have to take the situation as it comes and fight hard on the bread line. Then it will be for the wise young men and women of today who attend college to surpass them—and they will.

"All lines of useful service fall within the center of gravity of every life and the center of gravity is never found to lie within the small circle of selfish gain or glory."

After two thousand years of healing sick souls, the church is again stressing its opportunities for furthering the gospel of public health. In the wake of the great war came national and world scourges that were more frightful than the battles themselves. Preventable disease and infant mortality are among the world's greatest enemies. Six million people succumbed to influenza; two out of every seven babies die during their first year. The complications of living in the present age have made specialists of us all. Each organization has worked more or less apart from other organizations, but that scheme of things is passing away. We do not cease to be specialists, but by co-operating we can the more readily and satisfactorily carry out our works for the betterment of the race—mentally, morally and physically.

A custom that seems to us to be unfair is the matter of placing a person's name on a program without consulting the person. We have seen this done many times but have never approved of it. It is unfair to the person and to the cause to be represented. Many times we receive information in this office from some persons that only through THE SUN did they know that they were on a certain program. We have a letter on file now from a good woman who, several months ago, was placed on a program for a very important meeting. Her first knowledge of this was to see her name in print. She told us confidently that she had to sit up practically all of three nights in order to get up the work assigned to her. Such methods are not business-like; and while it is kind and charitable for persons to accept a place on the program after their names have been placed there without their knowledge, we doubt the wisdom of it and would never censure a person for not accepting.

It was noticed in these columns two weeks ago that Brother B. D. Jones, Holland, Virginia, had challenged Brother Chas. D. Johnston that he would double the number of subscriptions secured by Brother Johnston. On July 21 Brother Johnston sends this note: "I am enclosing five new subscribers for THE SUN from the Graham Christian church, (my church). I have other prospects and hope to send you another list soon. It was very easy to secure these subscribers, and I think when I turn the Orphanage work over to some other person I will apply to you for a job to work for THE SUN. If some one would become interested in this matter in each church I fully believe the desired number of subscribers could be obtained in the next two months. Now, I know that Brother Brock Jones is a hustler, but you may tell him that I have sent in one more than I agreed to and he will have to come across with ten instead of eight." We have written Brother Jones the substance of this letter and know that he will not fall short of Brother Johnston's expectations.

On page 6 of this issue will be found an interesting letter from Chaplain B. F. Black. Brother Black is a man mature in years and habits and has gained a wonderful experience from his work overseas. Black was born with the habit of collecting historical specimens and curiosities. His work for the Elon College museum speaks for that fact. He now offers himself for a few weeks to our churches. He should have calls for as much time as he can devote to this. His message is first missionary, because it gives first-hand information of a country that must be reconstructed, rebuilt and redeemed. In the second place his message is the most accurate history, because what he tells is what he has seen with his own eyes and heard with his own ears. In the third place his message is inspirational, because it is the experienced giving an experience. It is worth while to hear him. He spoke at Elon College last Sunday morning and at Greensboro that night and brought a message to each place that was interesting, and those who heard him counted themselves fortunate. Brother Black offers to go for his expenses and we believe that those pastors and churches that secure him will be doing a thing helpful in many ways for their people.

"The great offerings of this day, if accompanied with grace, will be a great blessing; without grace they will sink the church."

It ought to be encouragement to the whole denomination to know that Rev. J. E. Franks is to become Sunday School Secretary of the North Carolina Conference. We understand that he is to give only half of his time for the first year, but even this will be a forward step in our Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work. We know that it will soon be followed by an all time secretary. The choice of the Convention in selecting a man is a wise one. Brother Franks is in every sense a Sunday school pastor, a Sunday school worker and a Sunday school booster, and fruit will spring up in his footsteps. The step is a forward one, and the only regret that we have is that such a step was not taken many years ago. Here is every good wish to you, Brother Franks, not only our good wishes shall attend you in your labors, but our prayers shall follow you while you labor.

Speaking of secretaries for different departments of our Church work, we deem the time opportune to say a thing which we have felt for several years: We need a Secretary of Education whose business it would be to visit the churches and speak in the interest of Christian education. Our pastors discuss this theme and our worthy president of Elon College never loses an opportunity to appeal to the youth of our Church. These things are well and good, but our pastors, with a multitude of other things to do cannot devote more than one or two sermons a year to the theme, and our president is the first an executive, whose time, every minute of it, is needed for the guidance of affairs at the College. We have already overworked him. He has been instrumental in raising the largest fund ever given for any enterprise of our denomination. The next need of the College is students, students from our own Church that they may be trained and go back to the Brotherhood as leaders in the several walks of life. We need a man whose heart is burdened with the education of our young men and women and will go out with that burden and speak from every pulpit an inspiring message to create in the hearts of our young men and women a desire for a college education.

"Our prison-trained men outnumber our college-trained men more than two to one, as do the men from the jails those from the high schools."

Our dollars given for the cause of Christian education will be in vain if these gifts of ours are not translated into great and living souls for the Church and the Kingdom. The biggest difficulty is over with a young man when a desire comes into his heart for an education, and the same is true of a young woman. The greatest asset to the Church is our young people and we must inspire them to build greater than we have.

If we had a Secretary of Education giving all his time to inspiring and appealing to our people in the matter of giving our sons and our daughters a better education, our College would overflow with students without solicitation. The money that our College has to spend for advertising purposes would be used at home in making a beautiful campus and other needed additions to our College. Is such a move worthy of our consideration, and are we ready for it?

The S. A. T. C. would not mix with the schools, especially the Church schools. Here is the reason: Christian education makes the approach through the soul and not by external force. The best discipline is influence and not force, and two principles of government cannot be worked out in one institution.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR REPORT

Patronize Elon College

One of the many fine things in the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention at Shallow Well was the report showing the work done in Christian Endeavor. In the absence of the committee on Christian Endeavor, that Christian Endeavor enthusiast who has two Societies in each church in his pastorate, Rev. F. C. Lester, of Graham, made up the report. He did it in the right way to bring out the facts, and to get the work before the people in the right way. He is on that Committee for next year.

But this article is to call the attention of churches and pastors to another part of that report, and that is to the effect that the Christian Endeavor Committee will double the present number of Societies in our Convention during the next year or "BURST." Now, Mr. Preacher man, which had you rather the Committee would do? Mr. Sunday School Superintendent, and Mr. church member, what do you say? The Christian Church in the Southern Christian Convention not only needs the Christian Endeavor work, but is suffering for the lack of it.

The Committee was not satisfied to resolve, adopt, and recommend, but it went further and asked the Convention for a Steering Committee on Organization—each member located in a different part of the State—to look after this work. The Committee is: Miss May Stephenson, Raleigh; Rev. F. C. Lester, Graham; and Mr. A. E. Pye, Greensboro. This Committee will work in conjunction with the three Secretaries of Christian Endeavor in this Convention.

Now brother pastor and Mr. Superintendent, you can greatly help us in this work by writing to the undersigned, or any member of the above committee, stating definitely what you wish in this connection. If you do not have a Society in your church, tell us so and let us help you to get one organized. Immediately after my return from the International Christian Endeavor Convention, I shall place in the hands of this Committee all the information needed, for the organization of a new Society—together with a complete outline of the work. Write to me if I can aid you in any way.

The work of the East End Christian church is progressing nicely. A good interest in being shown in the work and I believe that God is blessing our efforts to help further His Kingdom.

A few days ago the Senior Christian Endeavor Society gave a social at the home of Miss Minnie Cole. There were about twenty-five present and a pleasant evening was spent. Officers for the next six months were elected and $10.00 of the State Christian Endeavor pledge of $15.00 was raised and paid in cash.

The Junior Christian Endeavor has been running for nearly a month and the little folks show an interest which is fine and speaks of better things for the coming generation, if they stick to their way of doing things.

A bulletin board with movable letters has been donated to the church by Mrs. R. L. Stringfield's class of young girls who believe in working. Not long since they gave to the church a set of offering plates which were appreciated by the members. We hope to have our new bulletin board up in a few days.

Some much needed sanitary conveniences have been put in at the church thus increasing the efficiency of the plant.

We are trying to do a great work for the Lord at this place and the interest of friends is appreciated. The prayers of God's people are needed for this field as well as others, for the harvest is great but the laborers are not sufficient to meet the demand of a fast growing populace, which to a certain extent everywhere, are not as much interested in things Christian as they could be.

UNCLE WELLONS MAKES A TRIP

To be missionary is supreme purpose of the Church

I started to Creedmoor, N. C., July 12, going by way of Durham. From Creedmoor I went to Good Hope in Granville County. I was met in Creedmoor by Brother Catlett who carried me to his home. Here I met many old friends. On Sunday morning I went to Good Hope, where I began preaching the second Sunday in February, 1863 and continued for fifteen years, after which I was absent for ten years and returned and served five more. A few brethren met at this church in 1847, representing the North Carolina and Virginia Conference and the Eastern Virginia Conference. They organized an association bringing these conferences together in their operations. From that association the Southern Christian Convention was finally organized, resulting in the building of Graham Christian College, afterwards Elon College.

At the close of the Civil War the church building at Good Hope was so delapidated that it became necessary to build a new one. This being just after the war, labor was scarce and the people were unaccustomed to giving to religious purposes. It caused one to have to work hard to accomplish the task of building the church. My recent visit to this church showed marked improvements. There has been an addition to the building and the inside and outside shows a neat appearance.

The agricultural conditions in the community are much improved. New buildings have been established, making the farming interests much greater than formerly. Most of the older people have passed away and their places filled by their children and grandchildren. I met some persons whom I received into the church.

The service here was splendid. I administered the Sacrament to the congregation at the close of the preaching service. I spent a few days in the neighborhood with these dear friends. Brother R. P. Crumpler, the pastor, is looking forward to a great meeting there in August. This is his first year as pastor of this church.

On my return from Good Hope I passed through Morrisville where I inquired of a party as to how Brother W. G. Clements' health is at present. I was informed that he has been able to walk down town a few times, by the aid of his crutches. He is recovering from a fall that he had last year.

The trip was a delightful one and I trust that I may be permitted to have this pleasure at some future time.

J. W. WELLS.

IS THIS THE SOLUTION?

I see that Brother Riddle is asking for some one to tell him why some recent subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, who called at his office, missed the solicitation of their pastors. I thought I would give one answer that perhaps will solve the problem.

Recently at preaching after the sermon and the announcement of the date of the coming revival, our pastor opened a bundle of CHRISTIAN SUNS saying, Brother Riddle asked him to hand them out, and if there was any one present who wished to subscribe to THE CHRISTIAN SUN he would take their subscription, and closed his remarks by saying: "I'm not selling papers though, understand, I'm looking forward to that meeting in _____."

As long as our pastors take no more interest in their Church paper than that, we will not only have sleepy churches and a small circulation of THE CHRISTIAN SUN but we as a denomination will make slow progress. A favorite maxim of The Progressive Farmer is, "The man who leads is the man who reads," and it is no less applicable to our churches. And it is principally up to the pastors to tell their people how badly they need their Church paper.

Now, we love our pastors and will stand behind them and hold up their hands; but please wake up to the needs and possibilities of our people and don't let our beloved Christian Church suffer for lack of knowledge when only two dollars a year will carry us forward.

ONE WHO READS AND LOVES THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

SUFFOLK LETTER

The Christian Sun is your friend

Pure religion is an unchangeable reality, but the interpretation and expression of religion change continually. Light is unchangeable, but the manifestation of light has changed many times. At one time it expressed itself through fire; at another, through grease and wicks; again through gas; and last through wires and globes. It remains for the reader to decide whether light is more universal and more useful today than it was thirty years ago. The great light is the sun and it does not change its manifestation or its quality. Religion has passed through as many forms of manifestation as light. At one time it expressed itself in dogmatic theology; at another time through the persecution of heretics; at another period through great buildings and display in worship; again it took the form of explosive emotion; the worshippers shouted aloud in meetings. Some people look to those seasons when religion expressed itself through emotion as the high tide of spirituality in the church. But it should be kept in mind that religion expresses itself in terms of the dominant idea of the age. When feeling controlled human society, religion was expressed in shouting. At the present time electricity is the dominant force in the world of power, and light expresses itself in terms of kilowatts of electricity. The dominant idea in the world today is business or its equivalent money; and religion is beginning to express itself through money. Money is the great power and religion is beginning to use it.

A glance at what the denominations are undertaking to do in the raising of money within the next five years to advance the Kingdom interests will show that religion is expressing itself through this medium. It is hardly fair to say that the church is losing its spirituality because it is expressing its faith and its purpose through a new medium. It would be a travesty on religion for a millionaire to go to church, get happy, shout in meeting, and then go home. God has given him more than feeling, and the world needs blessings that money can furnish. The world needs missionaries, teachers, Bibles, medicines, doctors, and the rich man's money can help to send all these and more to the ends of the earth. See what Christian literature, hospitals, orphanages, charities have done for the ignorant, the sick, the fatherless, the destitute, and then consider what a shouting church would be worth in the Kingdom at this day. This says nothing against emotion, feeling expressing its faith and joy through a happy shout; it is trying to say that religion is not confined to any one mode of expression; but the emphasis of religious expression is determined by the dominant idea in any one generation. The world is thinking in terms of commerce, of trade, of business, and religion must enter that great idea and spiritualize it; and it can do this no better than by laying out great educational and missionary plans that require large funds and then call upon the people of God to give! give!! To give cheerfully, liberally, religiously, and thereby win the respect of the world in its thought of great enterprises. Benefactors poured into the treasury of benevolences last year millions upon millions and that means that Christians are now giving their money as they once gave their feelings.

W. W. STALEY.

THE UNION OF THE FOLLOWERS OF CHRIST

The secret of progress of the early church lies revealed in the exclamation of the pagans: "Behold how these Christians love one another." Nowadays we have much gush about "love for humanity." It is all right to be "winning victories for humanity," but it is well to remember that it is not love for the community, or love for humanity, but love for one's fellow-Christian by which the door of the world's heart is to be opened. The teaching was plain and the early Christians caught and understood the lesson.

The brotherhood of man, and not the brotherhood of Christians, is the doctrine which our century is ready to hear.

The air is full of talk about brotherhood. New societies are being formed. Badges are worn, grips are given, but real Christian brotherhood does not come by poetic quotations and rhapsodical orating. Brotherhood is a spiritual creation, the work of men who have been re-created in Christ. It is a fellowship of souls based upon fellowship with God's only begotten Son. The redemption of the world is carried onward by the "building of Christian hearts and lives together."

"Blest be the tie that binds."

A WORD FROM CHAPLAIN BLACK

The man who prays is the man who pays

My dear Brethren:—Waiting for a boat in France is some task. We entered the confines of the ancient city, St. Nazaire, on June 23, having evacuated Base Hospital No. 136, Vannes; 50,000 waiting at the gate. Some nerve racking. Sunday, June 29, at 10 o'clock A. M., I talked for the Salvation Army; 300 men present. Many testimonies, many requests for prayer. At 7:30 P. M. a band concert was given in the auditorium, which seats 3,000. At the close of the concert, I spoke to 1,500 men.

My last report to Headquarters shows my meetings averaged 630. Memorial Day, I spoke to 1,800. We put lovely flowers on 105 graves; took pictures of many graves and sent to inquiring loved ones.

I was on my job from the start in 1918 until June 9, 1919, with but 48 hours leave from my work. Had hoped to get a trip to Rome, Venice, Naples and Southern France, but the kick by the Italians on the peace terms cut me out of that trip. All things come to those who wait (?).

On June 8 word came to my hospital to break up. The next day found me on my way to England on my five months overdue, leave. I took in London, saw the country by rail; went to Scotland, then back to France. From Boulogne I went to Calais, on the English Channel; then to Ypres, back to Calais; then to Lille, from there down to Amies; then to Paris.

London, Edinburgh and Paris are some towns. Add to these the coast towns, Brest, Lorient, Quiberon, Vannes and St. Nazaire and Oray, and the inland towns where my work called me often, Reims, Nantes, Angers, Savanry, Tours and Le Mans and you will realize that I have seen some of France. While in Paris, I went to Versailles where the Peace Commission was in session.

President Wilson and the King and Queen of Belgium heard, I suppose, that I was to be in Ypres, so they "blew" in about 2:30 P. M. while I was looking over the once-beautiful city. I rode trains at night and "saw things" at day.

I made notes of all my traveling and have a wonderful collection of post cards and pictures. So think I have a story worth while to tell. I have planned twenty-five distinct lectures for my own Church, when I get one. You see it should be easy for me to entertain and instruct as well, as any crowd for one evening at least.

I will not make public property or merchandise out of the sea accident, which I was in, but will tell the story to my many personal friends. I feel richer in an experience that money could not buy. This experience has given me a new vision of service.

Now that I am home again, having arrived July 23, just one month from the time we broke camp, I feel that my family is due a vacation and real recreation. I hope to be in Eastern Virginia by the middle of August for a month's real joy.

Any pastor or church wishing to hear my story, drop me a line and we will arrange a get-together.

I must have work. Any church needing a pastor and preacher, write me at once. Will be glad to correspond or visit you in person.

Here and now, I desire to thank our many friends for their thoughtfulness as shown in many acts of kindness to my family during my long absence. My daily prayer was that God would give them friends. He did. I am billed to speak for Dr. N. G. Newman's good people at Elon, Sunday at 11 A. M., July 27, and to Rev. J. Vincent Knight's congregation at 8 P. M., and at Franklinton, N. C., August 3.

SWEDEN TAKES IN SUFFERING CHILDREN

At the solicitation of the Swedish Red Cross, four hundred Swedish households have opened their doors to the sick and undernourished children of Germany, Austria, Belgium, Poland and the Baltic provinces. The Red Cross has entered into negotiations with the respective governments and Germany and Austria have already accepted the generous offer of their northerly neighbor. Five hundred children from those countries arrived in Stockholm May 6.

The Swedish railroads lend their heartiest co-operation to the idea, in running special boat trains to meet the children, who are accompanied to their various destinations by Red Cross representatives.

Rev. A. T. Banks, Ransseur, N. C., called by to see us the other day. He had been to Long's Chapel to assist Rev. J. F. Apple in a meeting. Owing to excessive rains, the meeting was postponed until September.

Rev. J. W. Harrell is in Rainey Hospital, Burlington, N. C., for two slight operations. He is doing nicely and will soon be out.

Hats off to President Harper and his Committee. Read his article on page seven for the why.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

$350,000 FOR CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Three weeks ago I predicted that when final announcement had been made concerning the unparalleled generosity of our people toward the endowment campaign for our College, every heart would rejoice and those who had sacrificed to make the grand achievement possible would shout for sheer delight. We then lacked a few thousand dollars of what our leaders felt the Church wanted the grand total to be, and so we just waited and expected and received in answer to our prayers.

I am now prepared to state that the Church has given three hundred and fifty thousand dollars in cash and subscriptions for the cause of Christian Education in our Brotherhood as Elon represents that hopeful guarantee of a democracy that shall be safe for the world. I am glad God has permitted me to live to see this day and to be privileged to make this announcement. I can hear in anticipation the prayers of gratitude to God that will go up from hundreds of sacrificing hearts that this great blessing has come to our College. And as the president of our College, speaking for the Trustees, the Faculty, the Alumni, and the students, I promise under the blessing of Heaven to put forth every effort to collect these pledges and to see that the money is so invested as to produce an income perpetually for the work of Christian Education in our Church. No man's usefulness to the Kingdom, who has given to this cause, shall ever perish from the earth. The fruit of his good deeds joined to the fruit of others shall through the ages ahead yield a harvest perpetually in Christian service.

I call on our people everywhere to pray for Elon, that she may be true and faithful to her great trust.

Who Made It Possible

The man who put it across is one of Elon's splendid sons, living in Tampa, Florida. After two terms at Elon, making 97 on Latin, (for which I am deeply grateful), and 90 on Bookkeeping, S. B. Denton turned his face Southward and began his work in Florida. Being a man of splendid Christian integrity, abounding energy, affable, and of sound judgment, he soon, though poor, won his way into the confidence of men of means. He is now one of Florida's most prosperous lumber manufacturers, with a direct shipping line to Cuba and the West Indies. He has connections too in Chicago, New York, and Philadelphia. I journeyed to Philadelphia to see him, and have never enjoyed a happier fellowship. His gift of $5,000 made up the magnificent total. Elon is proud of her son, and he loves Elon.

Other Funds This Week

A business man whose name I cannot use this week, who is connected with two Alamance county churches, volunteered to give $1,350 to put them on the map. This makes every church in Alamance county, the home of the College, a banner church. Not one of them has fallen short of its quota. How proud we are of Alamance and of this generous business man. May the Lord multiply his kind.

Dr. E. H. Bowling, one of Elon's tried and true friends, volunteered a thousand dollar gift, and Miss Helen R. Steward, our Dean of Women, did the same. Mr. T. W. Chandler, Virginia, Va., son-in-law of Elon and loyal patron, also did likewise.

James Truitt and his Brother, W. B. Truitt, founded a fund in memory of their father, one of the pillars of strength in the First Christian church, Greensboro, N. C. To each of these and the hundreds of others who have made the $350,000 possible, we express devoted thanks and upon each and every one we pray the rich blessing of our Heavenly Father.

This is the final announcement of the Church's generosity toward Elon in this drive. May Church and College and the Kingdom be blessed in the ultimate results!

W. A. HARPER.

WHY PATRONIZE ELON?

Because it is our own college and cannot exist without our support.

Because the courses of instruction are adequate to the needs of our people.

Because the members of the faculty are well equipped for their work and their instruction thorough.

Because the morals of the students are safeguarded as thoroughly as it is possible to safeguard them.

Because the expenses are as moderate as can be found anywhere else in an institution of similar grade.

Because it is our duty and privilege to support our own institutions.

Because it is co-educational, where young men and young women meet on equal footing and thus preserve the natural order of the Divine scheme.

Because Elon graduates are making good everywhere and are a safe index to the character of the college.

COLLEGE TRAINING VS. EXPERIENCE

The passing of a boy from his father's protective care into a free man means new dangers as well as opportunities. A dreamer tears down, remodels, and refixes all that his mind is capable of doing. His success is limited to his natural ability and experience. It may take a life-time to gain what may be had in a few years from the printed page. Colleges form the best channels to the best and richest experiences. Professors are more able to help than even the printed page, and the two together form an ideal place for receiving the best instruction. The college undertakes to point out and show the young man the best things in life. The school experience is to be sought after training and not before.

MISSIONARY

MY PREACHER FRIEND

A book may be as great as a battle

It is not essential for my letter that I tell you my friend's name. None of the subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN have ever met him. So I shall just call him "my preacher friend" and go on with my story. I first met him early in the year of 1902 when he had just returned from America to Japan and was conducting a small independent mission in the city of Tokyo. A few weeks later he became a member of our Church and settled as pastor of one of our churches. A year later Mrs. McCord and myself were deputed to the same city as that in which he had settled, and ever since that time he and I have been yoke-fellows for Jesus Christ. The purpose of my letter is to show something of the sterling qualities of our Japanese pastors, and I have chosen this friend as my illustration. I shall not tell you all about his life—it is too large and rich and full, but I shall hope to lead you into a bond of sympathy and Christian love toward our co-laborers across the sea.

He is, first of all, filled with sympathy and kindness for every unfortunate being about him. Again and again as I have watched him I have thought of the reply which Jesus sent back to John: "The blind receive their sight, and the deaf hear; the lame walk; the lepers are cleansed; dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached unto them." For my friend and his wife, who is as tenderly in earnest about these things as he is, never deny themselves to the unfortunate. I have seen their home so filled with children from the famine district that there was not room enough to move about without stepping over the sleeping bodies that literally covered all the floors. I have seen him standing at the prison gate with a package of clothing in his arms which his wife had gathered together, waiting for a prisoner who was to be released at that time, ready to change his prison garb that he might appear as a normal citizen and have a chance to rehabilitate himself. I have seen their home the abiding place of prisoner after prisoner who had been released, until they could find work by which to maintain themselves. Indeed so good a friend to ex-prisoners has he become that on several occasions the judge of the local court has called him to the court house and bound some offender over to him instead of committing the offender to prison. I have seen him traveling dangerous mountain paths, deep hidden beneath the snow, with a pack upon his back filled with succor for the unfortunates of the mountain districts. I have stood with him in the presence of the civil authorities and heard him plead the cause of the unfortunates. I have sat with him in the sick room and listened to his gentle pleading with the Father for the sick one's comfort. And I have traveled with him over hundreds of miles of country roads and mountain paths, through mud and slush and bridgeless streams, in order to carry the Gospel message to sin-sick souls. But I have never seen him turn away from a call of need.

I have called him my preacher friend, and I have said nothing about a sermon, as we usually speak of sermons. But his life is a living sermon—a living picture of the love and compassion of Jesus. And one of the many rich compensations of my missionary life has been the fellowship of such a friend as this.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Not only wear the cross but bear it

The writer had a very pleasant trip to the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention held at Shallow Well church. The Convention remembered the little orphans very kindly by making a contribution of $72.92 in cash and $89.58 in subscriptions. I was delighted to have the pleasure of attending this Convention and am very grateful for the liberal contribution received.

We are glad that the Convention will meet next year at Elon College when all the members can visit the Orphanage and see our big family. We trust we will get a place on the program for the children to give an entertainment for the benefit of the Convention.

We enjoy having people to visit the Christian Orphanage. We find the more we can get people to visit us, the more interested they become in the work.

We will be glad to have the Sunday schools to bring their picnics here this summer. We will do all we can to give them a good time and will furnish cool water for the occasion.

It is a very happy occasion for the children here when a Sunday school brings its picnic here because they are very fond of chicken and cake.

Don't forget we have lots of glass fruit jars and will be glad to ship them to any one who can fill some of them.

LETTERS FROM THE COUSINS

Dear Uncle Charley: I will send my dime for July. I hope the cousins are getting alone fine. I will be promoted to the fourth grade. I am glad school has closed.—Mills Wellons Staylor.

I guess you are having a good time since school has closed.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: I will send you my dime for July. I have some little chickens that are eight days old. I have a fine little garden. We have snaps, tomatoes, corn, beets and butter beans in it.—Willie Staylor.

You seem to be a good trucker. I will have to get you to come up and farm for me.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: I am a little late, but mother and I have been very busy. I thank you so much for the picture. I hope the little girl may be a nurse if she wants to be. Wish I could see her and all the other little girls and boys. Enclosed find my dime for July. Love to the cousins.—Frances Everett.

You are a good little girl to help mother. You must be good to her; you are more fortunate than many other little girls who have lost their mother.—"Uncle Charley."

HOW CAN PASTORS AND OTHER LEADERS HELP YOUNG PEOPLE TO FIND THEIR LIFE-WORK?

By J. Campbell White

1. By making clear to them that God has a perfect plan for every life. Many young people grow to maturity without realizing this. Is it any wonder that there are so many misfits and failures and so much unhappiness in view of the spirit and method in which many life-plans are made?

2. By remembering that all young people need help in this realm. Not only those who are to give their lives to Christian work, but also those who are to go into business or professional life need guidance. There is no other matter in which young people generally are more deeply interested than in finding their life-work. Approaching them from this vantage-point of interest, many other helpful influences can be brought to bear upon them. They can also be led in this most natural way to an understanding of many of the deepest facts and principles of life. Can anything be more important than helping young people to find what they can do best and can do with largest measure of personal development and happiness? Surely all of this is in the will of God for every life.

3. By recalling the fact that life-choices are often made at a very early age. Though not then made known, very many of them are arrived at between twelve and eighteen years of age. This emphasizes the great importance of bringing proper influences to bear upon young people during this period, as well as throughout the later years of preparation.

4. By providing adequate public and private instruction in the fundamental principles underlying all right choices in life, and by making very clear and emphatic the spiritual conditions under which God's guidance may be expected and secured. This instruction should include an occasional series of sermons, systematic instruction in the Sunday school, periodic discussion in Young People's Societies and Mission Study Classes, the circulation of carefully selected literature among young people and a vast amount of personal conference with individuals.

5. By arranging for systematic, comprehensive and thorough processes of education upon the total task of the Church in this world of need. These should show the wonderful opportunity for the Christian solution to be applied to all problems in our own land and among all the nations of the world, and also the way God uses individuals in expanding His Kingdom.

6. By persuading many bright boys and girls to go forward with their education in a College with a healthy and rigorous Christian atmosphere. This is one of the greatest services that can be rendered both to the young people themselves and to the Kingdom of Christ. One of the chief aims of Christian Colleges is to train an adequate supply of leaders for all kinds of Christian callings.

7. By placing definite responsibility upon some carefully selected individuals in each congregation, who will give special and sustained attention to this matter of helping young people to find God's plan and will for their life-work. These individuals should then be brought together occasionally in District Conferences to share their best experiences with others and thus multiply the number of recruiting specialists and vocational counselors. The Inter-Church World Movement will arrange for such conferences.

8. By following up carefully those who show special interest. This may be done with suitable literature, Bible Classes, Personal Workers Groups, Mission Study Classes, and other forms of Christian education and activity, so that the interest that is once awakened may be fed and developed. Most of this follow-up work can be done only by local leadership, either by the pastor or others working closely with him in these matters.

9. By practicing the habit of prayer for laborers to be thrust out into the harvest fields, and by laying this burden of prayer upon others.

10. By making plain to parents the folly and sin of interfering with God's plan being realized in the lives of their children.

11. By promoting vital religious faith and life in the homes of the people. This may be done in such a way that, from childhood, the young people shall be living in an atmosphere which breathes the habitual prayer: "Thy Kingdom come; Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

J. H. Smiley—I enjoy reading the dear old SUN and hope that it will shine in many more homes.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT

Headquarters 27 C. P. A. Bldg., Dayton, Ohio

You and your Church paper are partners

Prairieville, Indiana, church in the Western Indiana Conference, Rev. U. S. Johnson, pastor, responds to the Forward Movement canvass with $3,091. The church has a small membership with only seventy on the roll and the actual membership is even much smaller.

Six Mile church, near Bluffton, Indiana, Rev. J. J. Beiseigle, pastor, located in the Eel River Conference, responds with $4,275. This church has a roll of about 139 members and is located as in the Prairieville church in the open country.

Rev. D. G. Pleasant, pastor at Versailles, Ohio, sends in additional pledges to the amount of $150, making the amount from that church at this date $5,105.

In all the canvasses so far made by the Superintendent a committee of strong laymen has accompanied the pastor and the Superintendent and it has been a joy to them to be in the canvass. Every committee of laymen, we believe, would be glad to go again on a similar errand for the Kingdom. We have some fine laymen in these Christian churches and our field men who represent the cause will all bear witness to the fact.

Every Conference and Convention of our people that we have heard of which is now preparing its program for its annual session is planning a Forward Movement program in harmony with the Convention's request.

The Superintendent, Rev. W. H. Denison, will be at Virginia Beach, Va., from July 29 to August 5 and mail addressed there will reach him.

The Superintendent will attend the New York Eastern Quarterly Conference at Otego, N. Y., August 8-10.

TITHE GIVING

Mrs. Lois Reed Dunn

The command is that a tenth shall be the Lord's and how few of us heed it! In the olden times, when the people lived closer to their God than our nations do today, they set aside one-tenth of all their money and one-tenth of their crops to go to the glory of the Lord. And the people prospered and were blessed accordingly.

Today, when the world is engaged in the throes of this horrible war, the people seem to be too hurried and too busy to think seriously of their duty and debt to God. The Bible tells us plainly that if we give one-tenth of our earnings we will reap our reward; and it is not as though we were calmly making the gift from ourselves, but one-tenth that we have rightfully belongs to God, and not to give it means a taking for ourselves of something that belongs to another.

You wouldn't think of calmly taking a tenth of your neighbor's corn crop and feeding it to your stock; still, when you refuse to give a tenth of your earnings to God you are stealing from Him. We should consider this tithe as an investment—one that is surer of returns than any first mortgage or stocks or bonds ever given. It is an investment for your soul and a security for your after life. The best way to teach it in the home is through the children—and if there are no children, begin with yourself.

Some people think tithe giving a bit old fashioned. It isn't old fashioned at all—it's merely a forsaken duty. Can you think of any more certain way to support your church, your mission, or your religious obligations than by a definite saving and giving of a tenth? If the passing world is too hurried to pay attention to the tithe giving custom, suppose you work out a plan of your own, and reserve a tenth for Him who has given so much to you.

THE WAR AND STEWARDSHIP

By W. H. P. Faunce, D. D., President of Brown University

The willingness to sacrifice for a brother's need, a brother forever to be unseen and unknown, the cheerful yielding to restrictions inconceivable in days of peace, is a revelation to us all. Food and light and heat, meat and sugar and coal, and a score of things that we have regarded as private property are now seen as part of the common stock of civilization, as physical means to ideal ends. The ton of coal, or the pound of sugar belongs to humanity's great storehouse; it is the possession of all liberty-loving men; and a passage in the New Testament which we have always explained away now suddenly becomes the expression of the national ideal: "Neither said any of them that aught which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common."

What changes shall come to the social order out of the universal reorganization forced by war, no man can tell. We have watched the Russian Revolution with hope and yet with fear. Those who struggle for democracy may get more of it than they want. But they cannot get more than Christianity wants. Already a change of temper, a new scale of values, has permeated civilization. Never again can we return to the old petty individualism and laissezfaire. The new world will be newly organized. The only welcome man will be the man qualified for team-work. "Me" and "Mine" will be small words in a new world which has learned to say the great word "Our."—From "Religion and War."

INTERNATIONAL CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONFERENCE—BUFFALO, N. C., AUGUST 5-10, 1919

Support your church first; your party second

For the first time in four years Christian Endeavor will hold one of its great gatherings for the inspiration and guidance of the aggressive, enterprising young people who are enlisted for Christ and the church.

Two years ago the Convention that was to have been held in New York was postponed on account of war conditions. This year for local reasons New York could not entertain the Convention.

The Place

When the plan for an International Christian Endeavor Conference was outlined, the Christian Endeavorers of Buffalo, N. Y., extended a unanimous and enthusiastic invitation to hold the Conference in Buffalo. The invitation was accepted by the United Society of Christian Endeavor in the same spirit, and the announcement has brought letters of heartiest approval from all parts of the United States and from Canada and foreign lands. A large and representative attendance is assured. On the border line between Canada and the States, Buffalo is an ideal place for an International Conference. The Conference headquarters will be at the spacious First Baptist Church, corner of North and North Pearl Streets, and the evening and Sunday platform meetings in the Elmwood Music Hall, one of Buffalo's largest auditoriums.

The Date

The date selected is August 5-10, 1919, in order to avoid so far as possible conflicting with State conventions and summer institutes. Buffalo by the lake is an ideal place for a Conference in August. The journey will make a fine vacation trip, including Niagara Falls and other places of interest.

The Programme

The mornings are devoted to practical conferences under expert leaders, closing with an inspirational address; the afternoons are given to business sessions of the trustees of the United Society and the field-workers, and the evenings to great platform meetings. New problems that have grown out of the world war and that are now challenging the Christian forces will be considered. Plans for our 1919-1921 Christian Endeavor campaign will be presented and adopted.

Mrs. J. L. Hall—I received the first copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN today. I don't think I will ever let my subscription expire.

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

SOLDIERS OF THE WOODEN CROSS

Address Delivered at the Memorial Services Held With the 305th, 306th and 307th Infantry Regiments, at Chateau
Villain, on January 5, 1919

(By Charles H. Brent, Senior Staff Chaplain of the A. E. F.)

The lips of a British war poet, before they were hushed in death by the battle's stern lullaby, were stung into song in an immortal sonnet:

If I should die, think only this of me:
There is some corner of a foreign field
That is forever England.

Rupert Brooke here gives the keynote of the soldiers who have earned by the supreme sacrifice the highest and proudest of all decorations, the Wooden Cross. Medals that adorn the uniform of courage and endurance and heroism that braved the worst for the cause. Their wearers live to hear the acclaim of their comrades. But there is another decoration, the commonest even though the most distinguished—the Wooden Cross—that is awarded only to the men who have done the greatest thing that man—yes, even God—can do. "Greater love hath no man than this, that he lay down his life for his friends."

Now that "grim-visaged war has smoothed his wrinkled front," we gather to pay simple homage to our comrades who have the supreme distinction of the Wooden Cross. Yonder they lie, along that front where, with face to the foe, they counted not their lives dear unto themselves but bore the standard of liberty onward. Above their graves rise the sheltering arms of the rough-hewn Cross than which no fitter monument ever reared its form over mortal remains.

Our comrades they were. Our comrades they are. Death was powerless in the face of their bold daring to rob us of them or them of us. They are separated now from us, not by the gaping gulf of time but by a veil so thin that at times we almost see their figures through its waving folds. They live—live gloriously in the land of far distances. Death stripped them of nothing essential. In the permanent society of the world beyond this they think and speak and see and love. They are what they were, except so far as the river of death has washed away the dust of earth and left them cleaner and better by reason of this, their last great adventure. They keep pace with us and we must keep pace with them.

One Army of the living God,
To His command we bow;
Part of the host has crossed the flood,
And part is crossing now.

We cannot rehearse the story of each one's going as he went over the top to meet the foe and found his rendezvous with death on shell-scarred slope or battered hill, or in some flaming town or maze of tangled wire. The same dauntless spirit moved them, one and all. There was something dearer than life. To it they gave themselves and their all, and won the decoration of the Wooden Cross. Here, for instance, is a chaplain whose unstudied cry, as the finger of death touched him, was: "Father, I thank Thee for this affliction." Not that he courted pain as in itself a blessing, but as an opportunity to show God and men that he was able in all things to be a super-victor. Now it is not a chaplain but a doughboy that is smitten. "Buddy," says his comrade who holds him while his life rushes out in a crimson flood, "Buddy, have you any message for the folks at home?" "Yes," is the prompt reply of the dying Galahad. "Tell them I went as clean as I came." Again, look at that stiff, silent body, much of the glory of its splendid manhood still lingering behind as though loath to abandon the well-knit form. Death in him is not ugly nor repulsive. His left hand still clutches the bosom of his shirt, which he tore aside in order that his right hand might hold through death his crucifix, the symbol of his faith. He, though dead, speaketh:

Nothing in my hand I bring,
Simply to Thy cross I cling.

These men and a myriad more are calling to us, calling to us and bidding us to carry on. If we would still hold to their comradeship we must display in life the spirit they displayed in death. We must live for the things for which they died. They "went West" beyond the sun. Soon in another sense shall we, please God, go West—west across the sea—to that dear land, America, that is impatient for the pressure of our feet. We must make ourselves fit to meet, with unshamed brow, wife, sweetheart, sister, mother. Our going may not be to lower our sense of service and look for any reward except opportunity to serve again and better. Patriotism finds in war only a starting point for peace. That which we have achieved by victory we must weave into the fabric of the new world and the new age. The Wooden Cross of our dead comrades is for them a glorious decoration. For us it is the banner of our life that is to be. It challenges us to hold more precious than mortal life ideals of honor, justice and righteousness. After all, the Cross that redeemed the world was a wooden cross, too, was it not? It was no toy nor pretty bauble, but a thing of nails and pain and death—and yet a thing of glory. According to its pattern we shape our own cross.—In Christian Advocate, New York.

When you have once carefully decided that a certain thing is right or wrong, let your decision stand as a rule of conduct. Do not reargue the matter every time you come to it.—Queens' Gardens.

A LIVE SOUVENIR FROM VERDUN

By Julian Wadsworth

Help support the Christian Orphanage

While others were bringing away with them bits of shrapnel, helmets and rusted bayonets and buttons and rags of uniforms, and in some grim instances human bones, as souvenirs of the battlefields, may I let you see one that to my mind is far more interesting? It is only a broken bit and the awful marks of warfare are fresh upon it. But it is yet alive and can be restored and again made beautiful.

I refer to a little lad whom I found; so far as I know, the only surviving member of his family. His home village, near Verdun, was completely destroyed. The lad does not even know if another one of its inhabitants remains alive.

The story of Robert Michaud is only one of many which might be told of these orphans, now being picked up all over war-ruined France and being placed in our Foyer Retrouvee (home recovered).

I wish you might have seen the little lad as Private Bateman, of Bakery Co. 311, found him one morning in March on the edge of the camp, alone and friendless, but for the company of a big brown dog, "Un bou canarade," the lad explained. How long the two had been together it was not known, or from whence they had come. The lad was hobbling on one leg and smiling up into the face of the American soldier in a way that wins friends for himself wherever he goes. The dog was not so friendly, feeling his responsibility and showing such jealousy of the Americans that he could not be kept in the camp. Soon the lad had crept into the hearts of the entire company, and the lads would have been glad to keep him, but for the order from headquarters that in preparation for their movement home the camps must let all French children, dogs and other mascots go. "For a time," the captain said, "we allowed the boy to stay, by simply not seeing him. He was so unusually bright and likable." But at last little crippled Robert must be sent again into the world to make for himself a new place and other friends.

Captain West told me his story: In the summer of 1916, when he was then just past eleven, the Germans entered his village. An officer insulted his mother. The father was sick in bed. The lad managed to get a pistol and shot the officer. Whereupon others burst into the room and killed both the father and his mother, and with an axe cut off the boy's right leg. What became of his only sister, who was seventeen, Robert does not know, as he was unconscious, and only remembers being taken in an ambulance and later finding himself in a French hospital. After several months, with others, he was discharged and fell into the friendly hands of the A. E. F. Bakery Company at Saint Florentin. It is supposed that when this company received its orders to move, he and the big brown dog must have been left behind, for they were thus found on the edge of the Bakery Camp at Is-sur-Tille.

Having a feeling that there is exceptional promise in this boy, I was anxious to save him from another chance of being lost, and if possible get him into our Foyer Retrouvee orphanage at Charvieu.

As a secretary of the Y. M. C. A. I had an opportunity to make a four days' visit to the old battle front around Verdun. I took Robert with me, in the hope of finding some persons in the village of Posatdin who might know the fate of his sister, and if possible bring them together. But it was impossible to find a single person who had returned to the village, as yet, so completely was it demolished and the few remaining refugees scattered. Though disappointed in locating his friends, it was a pleasure to have the little fellow with me on this trip. He seemed a part of the whole scene. He "wore well" in the close companionship of the trip. From some source he had gained a refinement of manner that showed good parentage and careful training, as when, at night, without a word of comment from either of us, he quietly knelt by the bed for his evening prayer. He would also positively refuse to receive gifts of money, which was a bit unusual in a boy of his age. But having a 50-centime piece (10 cents), he bought a small book, which he read on the journey.

At length the order came for the camp at Is-sur-Tille to break up, and in due course I brought the boy to Lyons and to the Foyer Retrouvee at Charvieu.

Here we are at the Methodist home at last! I am glad I did not wait for word from the Reception Committee, for it might have been a refusal, since Robert makes the fifty-first child in the family and it seems now the home is full, even beyond its capacity. Being here, they will not turn him out. "Surely we will make room for another bed," they said, "and take him in, though we are so full." Mrs. Haden, the directress, is surely the person in the right place, with her long experience as a missionary in China. Her husband was lost on one of the last passenger steamers that the Germans sunk before we entered the war. She is now about to be transferred to the Methodist house at Chateau-Thierry, where she is absolutely required. At the Foyer one finds himself in the atmosphere of a Christian home, and the more he sees of this splendid plant, with its infinite possibilities, the more he is impressed with the value of the investment in the lives of these boys, made orphans by the war. I feel so thankful for the providence of God that spared the life of Robert Michaud from the hand of the enemy and that shielded him in all the days of his helplessness, raising up for him friends among the American soldiers, and having led out people to provide such a shelter as this for him and others like him.—In New York Christian Advocate.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR AUGUST 10, 1919

Winning Others to Christ. Acts 16:9-15; James 5:19-20.

Golden Text: Ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth.

"Where there is no vision, the people perish." Have you ever seen a vision of the needs of the world? "Oh, they are satisfied," says someone. "We concern ourselves unduly about the heathen." So were the men of Macedonia satisfied. It is noteworthy that no man, only a few women, were even praying, and Paul met no man who cried, "Come over and help us." What then? God saw their need better than they themselves, and it was He who sent Paul, just as it is He who sends you. You owe a duty to the unconverted one of your own household; the one across the street; the neighbor down the road. But your duty does not stop there. These are your Jerusalem folks. But how about the Samaritans?—the ones who live down in the hollow; that "tough" family back in the grove; those no-count folks along the railroads? What about your Judea people?—those perfectly good and respectable people, who are moral, and self-righteous, and don't need to belong to church because they are better now than many of the church people. But shall you stop there? What about the "uttermost parts of the earth"? Did the disciples win all of Jerusalem and Judea and Samaria, before they went further? Nay, they even tarried too long trying to do it, and God sent, or permitted persecution to come that scattered them abroad. If our local church, our denomination, nay if our nation, does not willingly witness we, too, shall be scattered abroad. Will we, as did the disciples, go everywhere preaching the word?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR AUGUST 10, 1919

Speech Wise and Unwise. James 3:1-18.

"Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth." This is as true of the wise as of the unwise speech

A passing stranger's little talk with a shoeman in a store kindled a fire in the heart of D. L. Moody which set the world on fire. A little fire kindled in the heart of a ball player, and America throbs with the words of Billy Sunday. A little fire kindled in the heart of a lad who was laughed at for his club foot, and a fire of hatred grew in the heart of a man who because the South's most bitter enemy during the reconstruction period. A jeering word, turned Byron from a clean living, clean hearted boy to a hater of respectability and a hurter of himself and many others. If your heart is filled with trivial things, bitterness, or malice, those things will come out of your lips. If your heart is full of clean, high thoughts, of love of God, of purity and high resolve and love your tongue will betray that too.

WHY IS THE BIBLE THE BEST SELLER?

In the special Bible number of the World Outlook, March, 1918, appeared the following concise but excellent statement by Dr. Frank Crane in answer to the question, "Why is the Bible the Best Seller?" A careful perusal of the article will strengthen the faith and fire the zeal of God's people for a more careful study of the Bible and for its dissemination throughout the world:

Why is the Bible the best seller? Because it is the most universal in its appeal—it knows no class, race, sect or cult; it is humanity's book.

It is the common reservoir from which all men draw their supplies.

It is the community power house of the spiritual world.

It is read by the white man and the negro, the Oriental and the Occidental, the proletariat and the aristocrat, the college professor and the hodcarrier, the ruddy-cheeked boy in the Sunday school and the pale and wasted old man on his dying bed.

Nobody, no group, no organization has been able to box it or fence it or own it as exclusive property.

Churches are founded upon it, rise, increase, and in time decay; theologians are constructed from its texts, and they flourish and dissolve; it abides as the mountains abide whence flow the inexhaustible springs of human hope.

It is a book that reaches back into gray antiquity, forward to the golden age.

It is like the great tree Yggdrasil, whose roots are in the past and whose branches wave in the sky of the future.

It contains the only program of civilization.

Its principles constitute the only practical basis of commerce; it is the cornerstone of business.

Only by its teachings can we come to the parliament of man, the federation of the world.

It is not the Jew's book, nor the Catholic's, nor the Protestant's, nor the orthodox's nor the heretic's; it is man's book; and wherever a soul is born into the world this book is for him.

It contains the rarest traditions, the noblest poetry, the most convincing preaching; it is the world's greatest literary masterpiece.

It portrays for mankind the Hero of history, the majestic, baffling aluring Jesus, rightly called Wonderful.

A myriad of Magdalenes have wept away their shame at his feet; myriad soldiers have lispd his name with their last breath upon the shotted field.

The Bible utters the soul of man. It is mysterious, as he is full of mystery. To its commands he responds with an instinctive "Amen." To its vision of holiness his heart turns, as a flower to the sun. Its appeal to conscience lays upon him a ghostly, compelling hand.

It restrains crime more than all the police. It solves more problems than all the philosophies. It wins more wars than all the armies. It promotes progress more than all the reformers. It is the terror of the oppressor, the liberator of the slave, the solace of the disillusioned, the morning star to them that overcome, and the cup of comfort to them that fall by the way.

It is the pledge and program of the millennium.

It is the secret source of the world's optimism.

And in that final hour that comes to all men, when the spirit shudders forth into the unknown, this book alone brings the word, like a bell in the fog, of Him who says: "I am the resurrection and the life."

HITS AND HAPPENINGS

Details

"Richard," said the teacher in the language class, "you may write a sentence illustrating the use of the word details."

After some study, he produced the following:

"Details of peacocks are very vain."

Her Unreasonable Request

"Look here," said the indignant mistress of the house to the small peddler, "do you call these safety matches? Why they won't light at all!"

"Well, Ma'am," said the peddler suavely, "wot could you 'ave safer?"

What He Lived On

It was in the poor section of the city and the school examination question was:

"On what continent do you live?"

Little Joseph wrote down his answer very carefully:

"I live on bread, coffee, and potatoes—sometimes beef."

Why He Couldn't Do It

"You claim that you love me," said Gladys.

"And so I do," responded Clarence fervently.

"Do you love me enough to die for me?" she continued.

"Well, hardly that," said Clarence, "because mine, you see, is undying love."

A Proof of True Love

Little Edna one day turned to her mother, who was a widow, and said:

"Mamma, do you really and truly love me?"

"Why, of course, my dear. Why do you ask?"

"And will you prove it to me?"

"Yes, if I can."

"Then go marry the man around the corner who keeps the candy store."

POWELL

Margarete Levister Powell, wife of the late K. S. Powell, was laid to rest on May 25, 1919, in the family burying ground near the Levister home. Though it was an unfavorable day there was a considerable number present at the burying. She was not a member of the church, though she had professed faith in Christ several years ago and just before her death she stated to a friend that she was ready to go. She leaves one sister and three brothers, besides a large number of more distant kin. Service was conducted by the writer. G. J. GREEN.

WILLIAMS

Dorsey R. Williams, son of the late Martin B. Williams, Franklin County, N. C., departed this life June 8, 1919. He was born July 21, 1889. He leaves his mother and three sisters, and a host of friends and distant relatives. The writer heard, at the burying, many words of warm appreciation spoken of him by his acquaintances. The family with whom he boarded at Henderson, spoke in highest terms of his noble purpose and ideals. Evidently he was a man who formed close friendship which is an evidence of trustworthiness and large-heartedness. He was buried at Pope's Chapel Christian church where a large congregation, by their presence, showed their respect for him and their sympathy for the family. G. J. GREEN.

ROWE

Celesta Rowe, wife of C. H. Rowe, was born June 2, 1849 and died June 26, 1919, being a few days past seventy. She leaves her husband and one daughter, another daughter having died about a year ago. The body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Mt. Gilead Christian church where she was a member. She bore a good name in her community which, we are told, is better than great riches. A large audience was present at the burial service which was conducted by Rev. Mr. Morton of Louisville, and the writer. G. J. GREEN.

JONES

The death angel entered the home of Mr. S. A. Jones, Raleigh, N. C., June 19, 1919, and took the soul of Edna Lee, aged thirteen years. She was sick with pneumonia only five days. She was a true little Christian and loved by all her friends and schoolmates. She gave her heart to Jesus one year before He called her home, and was an active member of the Sunday school and B. Y. P. U. She was the oldest of three children and the pet of the family. Father and mother do not see how they can do without her but they know that God never makes a mistake and they are looking forward to that bright home where all is peace and love and there is no more separation. They have the sympathy and prayers of their many friends in this sad hour of bereavement.

MRS. J. L. HALL.

WINDOM

Thomas Windom departed this life June 27, 1919, at the ripe age of seventy-one years. Brother Windom married the widow Julia Davis Patrick about fifty years ago, who survives him, also their only child Ronnie, the wife of James Reynolds. The deceased was converted some forty years ago under the pastoral charge of Rev. W. G. Clements and joined Christian Chapel church. He ever remained a faithful member and expressed himself a few weeks before the end as being prepared and ready to meet his Savior in peace. J. E. FRANKS.

RESOLUTION OF RESPECT—EVER-HEART

Whereas, our Heavenly Father has seen fit to take from our midst our beloved classmate and co-worker, Mrs. Ola Everheart, Therefore the Philathea Class of the High Point Christian church offer the following resolutions:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Father Who doeth all things well.
2. That our class has lost a faithful member, one who was always ready to lend a helping hand to all work that led to the upbuilding of her class.
3. That we offer our heartfelt sympathy and prayers to her loved ones, and ask God's richest blessings to rest upon them all.
4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun for publication, one to her bereaved family, and one spread upon the minutes of our class.

MRS. A. E. LUMSDEN,
MISS FLOSSIE MANNING,
MRS. J. W. WHITT,

Committee.

AYSUCUE

Sallie Ann (Rudd) Ayscue, wife of the late Thos. L. Ayscue, was born November 10, 1848 and died July 7, 1919, being 70 years, 8 months and 27 days old. She was laid to rest by the side of her husband in the cemetery at Liberty Christian church where she had been a faithful and attentive member for a number of years. She was modestly disposed but always ready to do her part both in the home and in the community. She was married in early life and reared a large family of children, eight of whom are still living, four dead. She leaves 23 grandchildren and 5 great grandchildren. Both the community and the church have sustained a considerable loss in her death.

G. J. GREEN.

JONES

Mrs. Hattie M. Jones was born March 22, 1840 and died June 29, 1919. She was married in 1864 to Mr. Robert Beale, and to this union there was one son, Mr. R. E. Beale, Franklin, Va. Mr. Beale was killed at the battle of Spottsylvania, C. H., and in 1869 she was united in marriage to Mr. Isaac Jones. There were three Jones children, Baker, deceased; Thomas S., Norfolk, Va.; and Isaac J., Franklin, Va.

Mrs. Jones made a profession of religion at the age of thirteen, and was ever a faithful Christian. She was a charter member of Bethany church, and after Bethany discontinued services she transferred her membership to the Franklin Christian church.

She was a woman of great strength of character, and was loved by all who knew her. She was a great sufferer for many months before her death, but she bore with patience her affliction, and was resigned to the Lord's will, and wanted to go and be at rest.

The funeral services were conducted at the old home at George's Bend, by her pastor, assisted by Rev. Wm. M. Jay, Holland, Va., and the interment was in the family burying ground. A good woman has gone to her reward. The blessings of our Father be upon the loved ones.

C. H. ROWLAND.

HAND

The church at Vanceville, South Georgia, has been sorely bereaved in the death of Brother W. M. Hand, which occurred at his home, Brookfield, Ga.; July 13, 1919. Funeral the following day.

Brother Hand became ill at the church

two weeks prior to his death. He had gone to assist in cleaning off the church yard and improving the ground, looking forward to the revival meeting which was to have been held this week. He was much concerned about this meeting, speaking frequently to family and friends about it, but he was denied the privilege of attending, but no doubt he is attending a more glorious one in the church triumphant.

Brother Hand was more than sixty years of age. He had been married thirty-six years and had served as deacon of his church for thirty-five years. He leaves to mourn his departure a wife, nine children, two half brothers and a host of friends. His going is much lamented by his church but he bow in humble submission to our Master's will, knowing that he is able to fill the vacancy with his presence.

G. D. HUNT.

HOLMES

Priscilla Margaret Holmes was born September, 1849 and died July 17, 1919, being nearly seventy years old. She was born, and lived all her life, near Pope's Chapel Christian church of which she was for many years a consistent and faithful member. She was never married. There were ten of the family of children, she being the youngest. Two sisters and one brother still survive her. She was laid to rest in the Pope's burying ground where a large congregation met to pay their final respects, and to see the body returned to the dust, conscious that the spirit had already returned to God who gave it.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

ARE YOU GUILTY OF THE HABIT?

The Lutheran gives its readers a little sermon on a subject that is timely; so timely that we deem it worthy of reprinting. Here it is:

In one of our up-state towns a harpist had the instrument keyed to a perfect pitch for a special performance. A couple of meddlesome boys, at the last moment, stealthily unstrung it. The result was that when she gave the strings her most magical touch they failed to respond, except with a series of harrowing tones that set everybody's nerves on edge. And they all said, "What a failure!"

There is a parallel case, with a sequel most sad. A minister has heart and mind keyed up for the church service. He has spent an hour or two in prayer and meditation and the thoughtful study of his subject. His soul is filled with sweetest harmonies. But just before he enters the pulpit half a dozen persons thrust themselves upon his notice, each with a tale of woe. Something has gone wrong in one of the church societies; one of the neighbors hasn't acted very nice; the pastor himself has failed in one of his duties; there is trouble in one of the homes. And the minister must know it at once; it won't keep! And so they will station themselves where he cannot escape. And then and there they will pour the unwelcome news in his ears and send him into the pulpit with unstrung nerves. His heart is heavy; his soul has lost its music; the melody has gone out of his voice, and his sermon is a series of discordant thuds, with neither spirit nor life. And, of course, he gets the blame for a lifeless pulpit performance.

The wreckage of the work of thoughtless people—people who even think they are doing God service. If there are things that the preacher should know, there are times and places when he will lend a willing ear to all complaints. But to cut all the music out of his heart just when he has tuned it to the sweetest harmonies, is a cruel performance. As a rule, there are only a few people who do it; but there are enough in every congregation to spoil every sermon, however well the pastor's spirit may be turned to present it. Dear church member, don't touch the strings of the harp when it is tuned to give forth heavenly melodies.

A MISSION FIELD

The University News Letter, a one page weekly sheet issued by the University of North Carolina, always contains some interesting things. It takes a pride in boosting North Carolina when she does deserve it; it speaks the facts. Last week The News Letter carried the following information that was interesting to us, and we believe will be interesting to many others:

A Home-Land Liberia

We have in North Carolina at least three liberias that call for help quite as appealingly as the Liberia across the seas in far away Africa.

Our attention has recently been called to one of these benighted areas by an inquiry from Mr. I. C. Wright of Wilmington. In hunting down the information he wanted, we ran across some astounding facts.

For instance: The negroes in seven counties of the Lower Cape Fear—Brunswick, Columbus, Duplin, New Hanover, Onslow, Pender, and Sampson—number 59 thousand in round numbers. They are a little more than one-third the total population of this area. The negroes of responsible ages, ten years old and over, are 43 thousand, and 33 thousand or 78 percent of these are not on the rolls of any colored church of any sort whatsoever.

Which is to say, seven of every nine negroes of responsible ages are members of no church. It is hard to see how the negro churches of any area could have less influence and exist at all, even in Liberia.

Arranged in the order of negro non-church membership, these counties are as follows:

	Percent
Duplin	94
Sampson	91
Columbus	85

Pender	84
Onslow	83
New Hanover	76

As we have said, the University News Letter gives facts let them be favorable or unfavorable. The above is a serious charge against any State. We have no reason to doubt the statement given. It is time that something be done to better conditions in Eastern North Carolina. We used to hear of the Western North Carolina. If we have that section in good condition let us turn our faces to the shores.

The Government is making an attempt to reduce the high cost of living. Here is every good wish to such a move.

Mexico is still giving trouble to the border sections of the United States.

Cole Blease, the whisky friend in South Carolina, is to make a race for Congress on his own initiative. His party is not backing him—and we think that it will not be long before Mr. Blease will find out that the populace will not support him.

Rev. G. D. Eastes, Raleigh, N. C., was with Dr. P. H. Fleming in a meeting at Union Ridge last week. At this time we have not been apprised with the results.

Brother J. W. Wellous came over from Elón last Saturday and paid us a short visit. He has been busy for some time visiting his friends and preaching. He left an article with us that will appear next week.

Rev. J. V. Knight writes: "Our church conference took up the matter of THE SUN and made arrangements whereby we might canvass the whole field for subscriptions." Good news!

At this hour (Noon Saturday) when we are forced to close the main part of the paper, we have not received the Suffolk Letter and Dr. Harper's letter on Education. We suppose that these brethren have found the waves at Virginia Beach not in accord with the wielding of their pens—and we don't blame them a bit.

Brother Chas. D. Johnston sends other new subscribers and says that he finds the work easy. Brother B. D. Jones, his champion, sends us word that he will stick to his original agreement to send eight new subscribers from Holy Neck. All right, Brother Jones, we shall look forward for their coming.

There was never a time when conditions between employer and employee were so serious. On every hand great strikes are being called, men wounded and killed and strife made more bitter. Something will have to be done. It is far from democracy. We have helped to make a democracy for the world, and now it is a democracy for home rule that we need.

Here is a little story that brings out a fine illustration: A preacher had served a church about a year and had received nothing. One Sunday morning he stated that he was in need of money clothing and food, and the church owed him and had not paid him. One old hypocritical deacon arose in reply and said, "Go on pastor, and preach the gospel; and Paul says, 'They that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel.' The Lord will give you souls for your hire." "Yes," said the pastor, "I know God will give me souls for my hire, and comfort my heart; but I can't eat souls. My family and my hire can't feed on souls and if we could it would take about seventy-five souls of your size to make us a breakfast." The stingy old molecule took his seat, and the brethren paid the debt. How many of these little covetous, stingy hypocrites infest the churches, like moths that eat through the hive, destroy the honey, and kill the bees.

Levi P. Morton, ex-President of the United States, is critically ill at his home in New York State. He is 96 years old.

It would be interesting to know the number of names who do not take THE SUN sent in by pastors. These names, according to the agreement, are heads of families or represent one family. Several pastors have been unable to work up their list in the time allotted, and so we have notified them that the time has been extended to August 10. We trust that all will respond by that time. We shall use the names to advantage, so send them on.

A few days ago Washington experienced a race riot. Several persons were killed and many injured. Just as the thing was about to be written as permanent history, another riot broke out in Chicago, which meant the loss of more than thirty lives and several hundred injured.

Rev. G. D. Hunt and Brother L. M. Veazey, of the church at Vaneeville, Ga., send us $2.00 as a gift, or to be used as best we see fit. In almost the same mail we received a letter from a crippled girl saying that her paper would have to be stopped (some friends had donated her subscription last year) though she is fond of THE SUN. We have used the $2.00 to send THE SUN to this shut-in and know that it will meet the approval of these good hearted brethren.

Pastors will do us a favor by sending a report of their meetings shortly after they are held. Let us have the news while it is news. Then too, by reporting each meeting now it will not crowd us so later.

A GREAT WORLD CONFERENCE

By Larimore C. Denise

The Third World's Christian Citizenship Conference which will be held in Pittsburgh, Pa., armistice week, November 9-16, 1919, will be in every sense a world assembly and promises to do much to aid in advancing the moral welfare of mankind and in bringing to the attention of the governments of the world the necessity for basing national laws upon Christian principles.

Dr. James S. Martin, the General Superintendent of the National Reform Association, Pittsburgh, Pa., under whose auspices the Conference is to be held, has just returned from abroad where he was successful in obtaining representatives to the Third World's Christian Citizenship Conference to the number of eighty-seven from forty-seven allied and neutral countries. Of these thirty-seven, fifty-nine are government officials.

Among those definitely secured are M. Pierre Choteh, Minister of Justice and also of Public Education in Montenegro; Dr. C. Telford Erickson, Alabama; Bishop Nickolay Velemirovich, until recently ambassador of Serbia in London, England; Captain N. M. Bachman, native of Russia, and special envoy of the American peace delegation to Russia for data to be used by the peace conference; Senator Ruffini, Rome, Italy; Dr. Henry Anet, Brussels, Belgium; Bishop Stoelyn and wife, Christiansand, Norway; Dr. J. L. Pierson, Groningen, Holland; Dr. William Thomas, Vaud, Switzerland; Mr. W. J. Hanna, of Australia, for forty years a member of the Public Service Commission of New South, Wales; Paul Bellany, mayor of Nantes, Eugene Reveillaud, serving his ninth year in the French Senate, the distinguished Madame Avril de Sainte-Croix, of national and international fame, and Dr. Andre Monod, Secretary of the European Protestant Committee—all of France; Dr. and Mrs. Danjo Ehiba, Tokio, Japan, both of whom are recognized leaders of the new movement in Japan in favor of industrialism, democratization and internationalism; Ping-Wen Kuo, Ph. D., Nanking, China, President of the National Higher Normal School and also chairman of the Educational Commission, consisting of twenty presidents of Chinese universities, colleges and normal schools to visit European and American educational institutions; Mrs. Theodore Cory, London, England, the distinguished writer under the cognomen, "Winifred Graham," and also a recognized authority on Mormonism; Dr. A. C. Dixon, for the past eight years pastor of the Metropolitan (Spurgo Tabernacl church), London; Henry Peel, Liverpool, England, authority on Mormonism in Europe; Rev. Norman McLean, D. D., Edinboro, Scotland, a noted Scottish Highland orator thoroughly versed on all moral reforms and especially interested in subjects relating to the family; Joaquin Mendez, Uruguay; Policarpo Bonilla, formerly president of Honduras; Antonio Burgos, Minister Plenipotentiary to Spain from Panama and a noted international attorney, who had to do chiefly with the drafting of the constitution of Panama, and whose opinion on international law prevailed on more than one occasion in disputed questions in the peace conference in Paris;

Alexander Hume Ford, of Honolulu, editor of Mid-Pacific Magazine, and an authority on the problems of the peoples of the Pan-Pacific countries.

More than two hundred of the statesmen, Christian thinkers and moral leaders of the world were interviewed by Dr. Martin, who worked chiefly through the peace delegation at Paris. He was met cordially and assured of co-operation by practically all.

This Conference, with the blessing of God, seems destined to be a mighty factor in creating and strengthening throughout the world the Christian moral sentiment so much needed in this hour of world reconstruction. A cordial invitation is extended to all Christian laymen and ministers to attend it. Further information can be obtained from the National Reform Association, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

THE FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH, WASHINGTON, D. C.

The work in Washington is organized. At a meeting Sunday, July 28, 1919, a little group of interested members of the Christian Church gathered and organized and chose the name at the head of this article.

Several weeks ago the movement was started and in the home of T. J. Lawrence, those who had been formerly members of the Christian Church in other parts of the country gathered and held an informal meeting; since then we have met at the home of the writer, adding a few interested persons at each assemblage.

Out here in the northwestern section of the city are the homes of those who have come from different states of the Union to work for the Government and to make their homes in the National City. Perhaps there is nowhere a more cosmopolitan assemblage, Americans all, with the interests and hopes and aspirations of their government constantly before them, with the spirit of America, with the outlook for a bigger and better, and more enlightened nation, in the making of which they are a part.

They want their children to learn something of the principles of Christian living, they themselves want to take positions of responsibility where they can serve their fellowman. They come from all denominations, from all methods and forms of doctrine and belief, and we think because of the absolute freedom to worship God according to the dictates of their conscience they will come to the Christian Church, they will respond to the invitation to cast in their lot with us, their opportunity to work for the cause they love will be at hand and they will embrace it.

The prospects for a church in this section are very good. It is seven squares from the location selected to the nearest church, and the streets are all built up solid in every direction. It is not some outlying district in the woods, but on the main artery of travel from the city to the suburbs, the homes around sell from seven thousand upwards and all the occupants of these houses own them, so they will be permanent, and once reached will become a stronghold for the development of the church here. The city is growing very rapidly.

there is a new section opening immediately adjoining the location of our church, so when it is completed we will be entirely surrounded with the finest homes and the finest people America can produce.

Many of you have friends in this city. Perhaps some of them would be interested to come and unite with us. All the urging necessary might be a line from you to your friends, or if you will send me the name and address we will see what they think about the matter.

When you come to Washington, come out to see us.

At the meeting last Sunday the following officers were elected to take office until the first of October, when we hope to effect a permanent organization:

Those in attendance were: Mr. L. R. Townsend, Mr. R. Lee Klapp, Mr. T. J. Lawrence, Mrs. Lawrence, Miss Virginia Lawrence, Miss Lois Lawrence, Miss Nina Clendenin, Mrs. Bessie Staley Cheatham, Mrs. Hitchcock, Miss Virginia Hitchcock, and the writer.

Miss Clendenin took the minutes of the meeting. A very helpful prayer meeting was held in which most everyone took part, Miss Lawrence and Mr. Townsend favoring with musical selections.

MISSIONARY

ELON CRADLE ROLL ENTERTAINED

The babies of the Missionary Cradle Roll and their mothers enjoyed a delightful afternoon Friday evening, July 24, when the Superintendent, Mrs. N. G. Newman, entertained them at her home. After a splendid program by the little tots the mite boxes were opened and it was found they contained $8.58. Out of the twenty-six babies enrolled, twenty-three were present, when the program was over and the mite boxes opened.

Mrs. Newman, assisted by her daughters, Blanche and Marion Lee, served delicious ice course to the babies and their mothers. Mrs. Newman is doing splendid work with the Cradle Roll.

THE BIG AND THE LITTLE PUSHES

The historian Greene says, "The world is not so much advanced by the gigantic pushes of its mighty heroes as by the little pushes of the multitude of lesser folk." I wonder if that principle is true and will hold? If so, the little pushes of the multitude are needed, and must be made to count now. The heroes on the field of blood and death have made some gigantic pushes lately. Millions of brave men have gone to their graves in the carnage of battle, and billions of money have been consumed in a mighty attempt at world-advancement. Shall we measure up to this gigantic push? Or shall the fruits of a great victory be taken from us? Unless we are now brave for the bigger battle, that battle for morality and spirituality, we shall not be worthy of our boys and brothers who have died before their day "to make the world safe for democracy."

INCREASING THE PASTOR'S SALARY

I have one sure and safe remedy for increasing every pastor's salary in the Christian Church. It is the same remedy that Bishop Phillips Brooks gave the poor country pastor with a meager salary and a big church debt years ago. Mrs. Cronk gives it from a pastor who applied the remedy and tells about it in his own words: "I know of one small congregation in a cotton mill suburb of a Southern city. The members had been given little missionary information. The pastor's salary was far below the 'living wage,' and it was necessary for him to supplement it in many ways. It seemed very evident to the non-missionary contingent that charity should begin at home. However, home charity persistently delayed its beginning until a missionary campaign was begun in the church, during which literature was distributed, addresses were made, and an Every Member Canvass was conducted. The missionary offerings were increased from $39.66 to $183.00 and with the broader outlook the congregation saw their pastor's work in a new light and increased his salary 66 per cent."

When a pastor and his people catch the missionary vision something always happens, and things worth while take place for the Kingdom.

BECOMES INTERESTED IN MISSIONS

I have been a member of the church for twenty-nine years and regret to say that I have never been interested in missions and have never contributed to the cause but very little until recently.

I was awakened to the need of this work by a sermon which I heard in a neighboring church last Easter. It was one that I shall never forget. Never before did I realize what missions really meant. A picture was drawn in words by the minister in which he pointed out how the mothers would look into the faces of their little ones and see them die without hope in their hearts of ever seeing these dear ones again. They could not teach their children about Jesus because they themselves did not know of Him, and of how He died for them to make it possible for them to be with their loved ones again. Oh, the pity of it! It makes my heart ache for them for they do not have the comfort and help that Christ can give to sorrowing hearts, especially when a dear child is taken.

I have often been bereaved and I do not feel that I could bear it without God's help. Dear Christian mothers of America, let us lift our hearts to God in prayer and thankfulness that we live in a Christian land and can teach our own children about Jesus and can contribute of our means to help those in foreign lands learn of Jesus and His great love to his followers.

I am poor and cannot give much but I made a solemn promise to God the day I heard that sermon that I would from that time give all that I possibly could. I have made a few small offerings and have been happier for the last few months than ever before for having done so. Imagine what this world would be without Christ and we can sympathize with our friends in foreign lands. I sometimes wonder if each of us will be held responsible for some poor soul that we could have helped to have some knowledge of Jesus. I pray that God will cause us all to feel our responsibility and that we may help more than we ever have in spreading the Gospel to the heathen lands. I trust that these few lines may cause somebody to make a liberal offering for foreign missions and I would feel that at last I had done something for my Savior.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE—THEIR DECISION

Many an American youth will be concerned with serious thoughts as the hot days become fewer and the finger of father time points to the approach of autumn. Each year this season means a crisis to many boys and girls. This is a time when a choice must be made as to whether or not "Will" or "Annie" will enter college. Thousands are going to make their decision in favor of the negative, and as a result will not make of themselves the men and women that otherwise they might have been. Later in life they will see their mistake when too late, and would gladly give all their fortunes for a college course.

Among the many who decide this question in the affirmative and go to college, a question more serious will confront their mind. "To what college shall I go?" This question is as serious as any that occupies the mind of parent or child. The mere studying text books and reciting lessons is not education. When time and money are to be spent for education the individual should be wise enough to select an institution that will help him in his preparation for two worlds. The youth who prepares for this life only is unwise. The average life here is less than fifty years. The college or institution that fails to throw about its students the pure and wholesome atmosphere of Christian character is a failure. "The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." "Education can furnish you headlight but only the grace of God can help you make steam." Greece of old, believed in education, Rome believed in law, and the Germans are the best (worldly) educated people of our day, but unless Christ is connected to the word educate, and made a part of the life of the individual seeking knowledge, the end will be like Solomon tells us that "Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher all is vanity."

If there is a young person, who, by chance, should read these lines, I want to recommend an institution that stands greatest in the preparation of young people for this life and another. That institution is Elon College. The reason she has had 29 years of such illuminating success, and that her sons and daughters everywhere are in such demand, is that Godly men and women are keeping that college saturated with an influence that is found only through prayer and humility.

B. J. EARP.

AN IDEAL COLLEGE

1. It should be co-educational for the best symmetrical development of the young of both sexes.

2. In location it should be insular. A small city with modern conveniences and without modern vices is to be preferred for the sake of the community life and interest among the students.

3. Its numbers should not exceed three hundred to five hundred students, making possible democratic conditions and intimate acquaintance between faculty and students.

4. Its faculty must be men of scholarly training, with a teaching instinct, and with distinctly Christian character.

5. Its curriculum should combine the time-tried cultural courses in language, literature, history, mathematics, and philosophy, with a thoroughly modern study of the fundamental elementary science. A temperate indulgence in electives should allow for individual taste and intellectual capacity.

6. Its social life should be simple and democratically American, void of snob-breeding cliques, extravagant functions, and silly dissipations.

7. Its physical training should provide for the largest number of students. Its athletics should be sanely regulated and free from even the suspicion of trickery or professionalism.

8. Its literary spirit and religious atmosphere should permeate the entire range of student activities.

9. Its physical plant should be modern and complete in every detail with well-equipped laboratories, with well-selected library, with complete gymnasium, furnished with all modern apparatus, for the development of the physical man, with attractive class rooms and beautiful campus.—Western Christian Advocate.

HEALTH CERTIFICATES FOR TEACHERS

Every teacher in North Carolina schools this year must hold a certificate from a reputable physician stating that he or she has not an open or active infectious stage of tuberculosis, or any other contagious disease. This is in accordance with an act of the General Assembly of 1919 that was fathered by Representative Turner of Mitchell county. The law provides that the teacher must secure such certificate each year before assuming his or her duties, the examination to be made without charge by the county physician.

Congress is not to have a recess now as planned some weeks ago. Too many problems to be solved and settled to take a vacation, thinks President Wilson.

INSPECTING HOTELS

In the endeavor to better safeguard the health of summer vacationists inspectors of the North Carolina State Board of Health this week are making official inspections of resort hotels in the western portion of the State. The effort will be made to reach all points in the mountains, and to carefully examine all places catering to summer tourists.

MISS BEATRICE MASON TO WED

Many SUN readers, and especially many former Elon students, will be interested in the following invitation:

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Columbus Mason request the honor of your presence at the marriage of their daughter, Charlotte Beatrice, to Mr. Samuel Rufus Gay, on Wednesday evening, August the twentieth, Nineteen hundred and nineteen, at nine-thirty o'clock, Methodist Episcopal church, Nashville, North Carolina.

At home after September first, Cumberland, Maryland.

CHILDREN OF THE ORPHANAGE TO ENTERTAIN

The children of the Christian Orphanage have prepared a special play and will render it at Haw River, Dixie Theatre, Wednesday night, August 6; Graham, Thursday night, August 7; Burlington, Municipal Theatre, Friday night, August 8. The Graham date has not been definitely settled at this time (Monday morning) but the date given is very likely.

(Report to August 2)

Supt. Denison of the Forward Movement, says: "Dr. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va., has a pastorate of four churches which he has served successfully for years. The membership of these churches is about 625. These churches of this pastorate are undertaking to give for benevolent purposes for the next five years $5,600 per year or $28,000 for the five years. That is giving several times "as much for others as for ourselves." We congratulate pastor and people on this splendid Forward Movement financial program. We are anxious to hear from other churches and their programs of giving and of work. We have felt for some time that our people would do worth-while things and they are proving it."

The railroad companies are suffering much on account of strikes among their shop workers throughout the country. They are asking for a raise in their wages. Many of the workmen are receiving 68 cents an hour, but demand 85 cents.

WE MUST DOUBLE TEACHERS' AND PREACHERS' SALARIES

(The Progressive Farmer)

There is not much hope for developing a really satisfactory rural civilization in our time unless we actually double teachers' and preachers' salaries.

We say double and we mean what we say. Little piddling advances will not suffice. We might as well face the fact that these salaries must be actually doubled—and the communities that get and keep the best teachers and preachers will be those that have the grit and grace to act first in this matter. And these, too, will be the neighborhoods which will most easily attract settlers and laborers and renters, and where land values will advance most. People worth while will go where they find good schools and churches, good teachers and live preachers. And people will move away from communities where their children must go to school to scrub teachers and where churches and other civilizing agencies are most poorly supported.

In every part of the South our farmers are better able to support school and church than ever before. Yet, as a matter of fact, the average farmer is not giving as much support to these agencies, if reckoned in quantities of cotton, tobacco, peanuts or pork, as he gave ten years ago. We could easily double our present contributions and not feel it, so small is the percentage of total earnings that we now spend for school and church.

In this connection, too, we should like to urge that every man who owns land in a community no matter whether he lives there or not, should be asked to give something for the support of the neighboring church as well as the neighboring school. Even if a landowner thinks of everything in terms of dollars and cents, a contribution to church or school is still worth while. If these agencies of civilization are not properly supported in a community, land values as quickly as anything else, feel the depressing effects.

The SUN'S Editor will be at Mt. Zion next Sunday to supply for pastor, Rev. J. F. Apple.

We were glad to see Brother J. M. Lambeth of Reidsville in our town the other day.

Dr. P. H. Fleming reports a successful revival at Union. Many additions to the church.

Fan, keep cool and watch your label.

President's Annual Address

C. H. STEPHENSON

Before the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina Christian Conference
July 16, 1919

THEME: LEAGUE

My friends, since last we met in a Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention vast changes have been wrought in the world. A year ago today the world was anxious and troubled—torn by the strain of a terrible war. Today this strain has been lifted, and we are privileged, my friends, to live once more in a world of peace.

At a heavy sacrifice of manhood and wealth we have throttled a criminal nation, which in 1914 got loose in the world, and threatened to scotch forever the wheels of progress—until America intervened. And now the nations who made the fight have felt that it was not enough to overcome this enemy of justice. They have foreseen a need for a common arrangement whereby it will forever be impossible again to commit against the people of the earth such a crime as was attempted by the rulers of the German nation. And so a League of Nations has been formed by the Big Four,—has been ratified by Germany and is now pending the action of the United States,—which puts right, and not material force in command of the future.

And these great world movements, since last we met in this Convention, have not been without their effect in the Church, Christian Endeavor Society, and the Sunday School. These organizations have sent their representatives through the Y. M. C. A., K. of C. and kindred organizations into the thick of the fight where they have found a more vital, active Christianity than we have known before.

And in my analysis of this new awakening in the Sunday school, I have chosen the word LEAGUE as a central theme. Today is a day of leaguering the forces of progress together to assure a better future. There is a movement on foot in this country and in England, to establish a World Church Union which shall extend its organization over all the civilized world. The denominations of America have been unusually active during the last few months in the attempt to league up their scattered units in a more centralized Church system. And in this state the same tendency was manifested when the Christian denomination consolidated the Conventions of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, the Western North Carolina Conference and the Eastern North Carolina Conference into this first State Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention. But the tendency to league together all our agencies of right has but begun. It falls our lot to extend it so that Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies not only in every county, but in every community in North Carolina shall be leagued up for the new work that lies ahead of us.

And as the letter L stands for the "League" that we must extend to every community where Christ is worshipped; so the second letter of our theme word stands for "Earnestness" which is the first step toward bringing it about. Earnestness has to do with attitude. And you will agree that the way we go about anything, such as planting a crop, or running a business, largely determines its success. We must have serious intentions before we can raise a good crop, or establish a good business. Just so in the Sunday school,—what we need first of all is seriousness of purpose. This serious, determined attitude as suggested by the second letter of the word league, is but another name for "Earnestness."

Earnestness has been the keystone to all the great world movements of the past. Before our time many treaties and alliances were drawn up between peoples, but none ever proved strong enough to absolutely prevent war. Today the major nations in the world family, after being driven to it by the pain of war, have set about the task with such unprecedented earnestness that it has been a success, and we trust that it is to last for all time. Then will you not take a lesson from this fact, and carry away with you a renewed spirit of Earnestness for the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work, you are doing in your respective communities?

As I have said, earnestness for the right is the strongest single current in the world today; but it has not yet completely won. For there is loose in the world a spirit which is the opposite of earnestness. In government it has cropped out in bomb plots, in politics its expression is the I. W. W. and Bolshevik element, in the Sunday school it takes the form of sectarian emphasis and factional wrangle. Members of this Convention: we have failed if we drive the Hun out of Europe, and do not drive his spirit out of our schools and lives. In the many distractions that flourish in the post-war relaxation of our day, it will be easy enough to swerve from the straight and narrow path, if we do not first fortify our Sunday schools, our Christian Endeavor Societies, and our individual lives with sufficient earnestness to withstand any attack.

You Superintendents, have you not too often let personal inconveniences, and petty obstacles keep you from your obvious duty,—just because you were not earnest enough for the welfare of your school? And, you delegates, how many times have you missed Sunday school, or failed to meet a Christian Endeavor obligation, all because you were not charged with enough of the spirit—I call Earnestness? Then let us take from this Convention, first of all, earnestness of purpose for our individual task, whatever or wherever it may be.

But my friends, we need more than earnestness. We have many times resolved on New Year's day to do things that never materialized. Righteous intentions merely, avail nothing if they are not followed with prompt execution. And so my second step toward a new league in the Sunday school, as suggested by the third letter of the word "League" is: Action. We may be serious about our Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work. We may have a definite purpose in view, but unless this purpose be translated into carrying it out, and seeing it through, we might as well never have purposed at all.

One of the most permanent lessons of the war has been the development of a new active religion by Christian workers, who have carried their standards through an actual "baptism of fire." And you will find no finer illustration of this than the activity of the Salvation Army. Under the gruelling test of war, it demonstrated that religion is an active thing, springing from God, whether expressed in sermons and hymns in our churches or coffee and doughnuts for our soldiers on the battle fields of France. And this was possible because these Christian workers, rising above sectarianism, were guided solely by the light of active service. Delegates of this Convention, look for the light yourselves! Our boys who fought in France felt the power of a more vitally active religion than they had known before. This it was that increased, more than anything else, their love and respect for Jesus Christ. The support of religion by the young manhood of this nation is stronger today than it ever was before, and it rests with us, you and me, my friends, to keep it so. And this is best done by putting our young manhood to work. The business world has urged its men to create jobs for returning soldiers, not merely meaningless clerkships, but real jobs, which are the direct result of business expansion. How much more necessary is it that our superintendents, officers and teachers create jobs for returning soldiers in the Sunday school. A soldier is the most active of individuals, and once you have him in action, you will find that he is not only a good worker, but will bring other men to work for Christ. And I want especially, to emphasize the need of reaching the young people. It was the late Theodore Roosevelt who said: "If you are going to do anything permanent for the average man, you have got to begin before he is a man." The chance of success lies in working with the boy, and not the man. Therefore we must spread the activity of our school to include, and utilize all young people, if we would hold them to the highest standard of Christian respect, and allegiance.

But in religious activity, tremendously increased by the stress of war, and now, I hope, maintained by home service, we must never forget to temper our every act with God—my fourth step toward a new league in the Sunday school. The old adage "Trust in God and keep your powder dry" is just as true now as it ever was. In war however, with its accompanying rush and strain, the tendency was to put more emphasis on keeping the powder dry than trusting in God. Still it was the grace of God that brought us victory. It is the grace of God that has brought good crops, and material prosperity. It is the grace of God that has given us life.

Careful investigation has revealed the fact, that there are in the South today something over four million young people between the ages of ten and twenty, who are not identified with God through any Church, Sunday school or Christian Endeavor Society. And yet the church of tomorrow walks in the boys and girls of today, and never before were the conditions for spreading God's influence so propitious as now. Then let us realize the immediate seriousness of the task before us. The late Edward K. Graham, while President of the University of North Carolina, said: "One great lesson, bitterly hard to learn, but holding the infinite secret of individual and national freedom that we seek, and the great lesson that we learn, is that these streets and stores, fields and banks, factories, school houses, churches and all the rest, are but folds across the face of God," and that Thy will for which we daily pray will be done here and now, or nowhere; and that banking, agriculture, education, freedom, and life itself, are but instruments for finding the common God in the common good, and making through our daily task, His will prevail. God is love, and Jesus Christ was the great Lover. His life shows how self-forgetful, and self-giving one becomes who gives supremacy to God. "Give my love to the world" gasped dying Whittier, who had loved so wisely and so well, that nothing less than the whole world could measure his love's breadth. Then let us not try to build a class, a Christian Endeavor Society, or a Sunday school without God as a serious member of the firm. His resources are infinite—His security is perfect. No human corporation can exclude God and hope to compete for honor in the stock market of Heaven. Listen to the words of the sainted Paul, "For every house is builded by some man, but He that built all things is God."

But after we have earnestly set about with a more active Christianity, to serve God more acceptably we still need to co-ordinate our forces so as to bring them together in a more perfect unity. And by "union" I mean co-ordination. It has been a great fault, not only with our Sunday schools of the past, but with all religious organizations that they inclined too much to carry on their work as separate units; busy among themselves, but having no relation to their sister organizations engaged in similar work. The result is that Christian work has progressed more in some communities than in others according to the effort put forth. The same practice obtained in industry and business before the war, but unusual needs and demands forced business men and government officials to see the necessity of correlating their activity, so as to allow the many to profit by the lessons of the few.

And now in the Sunday schools of the South we are working for precisely the same thing. It is indeed the master purpose of this Convention, namely, so to unite our schools and societies in every part of the State, that they will all profit by the ingenuity of the leaders, so that they will co-operate in the transfer of members who are changing their address, so that they will exchange ideas and experiences, for the mutual benefit of all concerned. For once this correlated union is set up throughout the bounds of the Convention, our Eastern Sunday schools and Societies may have the benefit of new ideas and schemes that originate in the West, and vice versa. In this manner, new methods such as vocational Sunday school classes, special day features, and the solving of reconstruction problems, will rapidly spread to all of our schools and Societies, wherever they may have sprung up. This alone, my friends, is enough to impel us to a stronger centralized union, and especially since this Convention has extended its organization to cover the entire State.

And now, finally, my friends, as the first five points of my theme word have had to do with achieving a new league in the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Society, just so, the last is the reward that follows, once it is achieved. If you only league your Christian forces under the banner of Earnestness, Action, God and Union, then yours is the final glory that rewards every good fight, Eternity,—The Home of The Soul. Be thou, not faithful alone unto death,—but earnest, active, God-like and united, and thou shalt receive the Crown of Life. And how glorious it is to feel that our efforts are not in vain, that our hardships are not without their reward. Without the hope of Eternity, mankind could not persevere the trials of life. Without faith in Eternity he could not persist in the world. Then let us turn our faces toward the beacon light of Eternity as we work. And, in the confidence of eternal life, let us so charge our Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies all over the State, with such Earnestness, Activity, Godliness, and Unity that they will continue to grow, to flourish and accomplish good, so long as God shall rule the minds, and hearts, and deeds of men.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

WHAT THE CHURCHES ARE DOING

Sometimes it puts us to thinking to know just what we are really doing. So in this letter I want to give you a list of the Conferences with the number of Sunday schools giving toward the support of the Christian Orphanage. I am making this list from the Conferences as they were arranged last year:

Name of Conference	No. Churches	Gave Easter Offering	Gave Monthly Offerings	Do Not give
Valley Va. Central	26	16	10	16
Alabama	24	9	4	20
N. C. and Va.	35	32	21	14
Eastern Virginia	41	26	27	14
Western N. C.	38	18	18	20
Eastern N. C.	45	32	27	18
Ga. and Ala.	14	6	6	8
Total	223	139	113	110

You see from the above list that we have 223 churches. 139 churches gave an Easter Offering. 113 are making the monthly offering. 110 out of the 223 churches have not made an offering this year.

Now my dear friends, if you are a member of one of the 110 churches that are not doing anything toward the support of our little orphans who are crying to you for help, do you feel down in your heart that you have done your full duty? If you have just, rest easy. If you do not, then don't you think it is time to get busy and see that your church gets a little more life in it, that your Sunday school gets more enthusiasm in it and that you begin to render some service for the Master's Kingdom? We need your sympathy. We need your prayers. Your sympathy and your prayers are all right so far as they are backed up with your works. But suppose you pray for us the balance of your life and give us your warmest sympathy and never give a penny toward helping to feed and clothe a little child in the Institution, then pray tell me how much you have helped in this great work? The Bible teaches us that faith without works is dead.

We have in the Southern Christian Convention 139 churches that have stood by us loyally as can be and we have a warm place in our hearts for them and only wish we could visit each one and express to them our appreciation in words. Now we have a very great love for the 110 that have not helped us this year. We wish we could visit each one of these churches and tell them of our great need. The golden opportunity they are losing in not lending us a helping hand; of the great pleasure they are denying the little boys and girls in their schools by not giving them an opportunity to give something toward the support of the little children who have been so unfortunate as to lose father and mother. And they will give their nickels and dimes toward the support of the work if they are given the opportunity. I have mailed a letter to all churches not now on my list of monthly contributors asking them to make an offering and get on the list at once. I am real anxious that each church shall have a part.

A CURE FOR SLANG

By Flora Huntley

The boy, a lad of ten, was quick to learn and particularly good in "language," as his report card showed. His vocabulary was not so choice as varied, and the slang of the street was irresistible.

"By heck, I'm cold!" he would exclaim as he came in, and at a request from his mother would inquire, "Who do you think I am?"

She explained to him that these phrases were not used by well-educated people, but he was unconvinced.

"All the fellows talk that way, but I can cut it out if you say so."

But he continued to use the expressions; and, while his mother did not wish to "nag," she felt that she ought to show in some way that she disapproved and that the language was undesirable, even though it was not profane.

One evening, as she was reading aloud from Swiss Family Robinson and noting its formal, precise sentences, a sudden thought came to her. She acted on it instantly, and continued to read.

"'It seems absolutely necessary, my dear wife,' I began, 'to return at once to the wreck while it is yet calm, that we may save the poor animals left there, and bring on shore many articles of infinite value to us, which, if we do not now recover, by heck, we may finally lose entirely. On the other hand, I feel there is an immense deal to be done on shore, and that I ought not to leave you in such an insecure shelter as this tent.'"

The boy raised his eyes in startled surprise, but the mother continued her reading:

"Cut it out. Return to the wreck by all means," replied my wife, cheerfully. "Who do you think I am? Patience, order and perseverance will help us through all our work, by heck; and I agree with you that a visit to the wreck is without doubt our first duty. Come, let us wake the children and set to work without delay."

The boy's face was red with embarrassment, which changed to anger as his sister giggled.

"That isn't there," declared, rather impatiently, but the mother continued her reading, with no comment at all, but she inserted no more slang. She had shown him for once just how the words sounded to her.

He sulked a little during the evening, but was himself at breakfast. And, when his mother asked whether he wished another dish of oatmeal, he cried, "Yes, it's good, by —Yes, mother." He did not overcome the habit at once, but he had become conscious of how the words sounded and in time he succeeded. His mother saw he was trying, and they never spoke of that peculiar page in Swiss Family Robinson.—Christian Endeavor World.

LIGHTNING CALCULATION

The following "short cut" in addition is much used by expert accountants and auditors, also by bank and insurance clerks. The following example practically explains itself:

Instead of "carrying" from one column to another, set down the sum of each column by itself, as shown above. The sum of these smaller amounts will be the total of the whole. The recommendation of this method, where one has to work rapidly, is that if the figurer's attention is distracted in any way, thus causing an error, only the column then being added would be affected, and the mistake could be corrected in a fraction of time.—The Presbyterian.

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

FAMILY ALTAR

We can never be in error in giving our children their religious training at the family altar. We may not, as families, be able to spend as much time together in the sacred work as might be desirable, but we can at least habituate the young people to the practice of recognizing the Lord's hand in all the details of life. Seldom will a boy or girl forget or reject the principles of God's Word as taught at the altar of the hearth.

A young British officer now on service in France, where he has been for two years, in writing to his parents, indicates that years of education and transition had produced a surface disregard for the vital things, but he writes, "underneath all I have never forgotten the things I learned at ———," the reference being to the place of his plastic years. How comforting to a mother's heart to get such a message from the shell swept fields of Europe, for that message came before the war ended.—Rev. Joseph W. Kemp.

HOW OLD ARE YOU?

Time may have plowed long and deep furrows on your face, and with his chisel may have cut up and down across and above your brow, but try to make the best use of yourself in the sunset and twilight hours, and embrace every opportunity to do good. There can yet be many spare moments to improve, and in helping somebody along the way. You will greatly benefit yourself.

Improve the present, and it will help you on to the attainment of greater and better things. Use the advantages that surround you and make life more beautiful by looking at the helpful and beautiful things which God has given us. He supplies our needs and has promised not to forsake us, and never to leave us. Yes, down to the evening time of this earthly pilgrimage He will abide with us. Many a tired one often feels like saying: "Being tired and weary with the journey of life, I want to get home and rest." But don't be in a hurry to go—stay here as long as you can before taking the final flight. Look out and get the abundant life in your soul. Think of and live the abounding, abundant life until you feel like exclaiming: "My wings are plumed, and I am willing and ready to soar in the splendors and happiness of immortality."

Let those who have children to help and bless their homes pray that our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth; and our daughters as cornerstones polished after the similitude of a palace.

It will help the older people to keep in touch with the children all they can, not that they should not associate with their old friends and help them in every needed way, but when opportunity offers be patient, helpful, encouraging to the children. Some children don't like old people because they are too serious, sour and grum. Show a spirit of kindness, love, tenderness and sympathy for them. The old people neglect the children in their Sunday school and church work. They go through the Sunday school lessons, and that is the last of it until next Sunday. They ought to have a short, interesting talk or sermon, at least, some of the time, by some suitable one, and not to let them run out and away so soon from the services.

The old people will have to guard against being too sensitive. They must remember that they have had their time, and that they cannot fill many places in human affairs as once they could. Then too there is a tendency to stop and retire too soon. Of course, infirmity and other causes often prevent them, but let them try to hold on to duty as long as possible, and try very hard to live in the present, in the future too, and not in the past so much. Some of us as we grow old dwell too much on the past, and tell our friends too often that we are worn out.

No matter how much time you have thrown away, begin now to accomplish something. Try not to think that you are too old. Age may mean glasses and stiff joints, but not a dimming of the wind or the capacity for doing good and being happy.

WHICH WAY ARE YOU LOOKING?

Dear reader, pause just long enough to ask yourself this very important question, "Which way am I looking?", then at the bar of your own conscience, assisted by the divine Word, get the answer. Then use the answer in the way that will bring to you the greatest good in this life; then you need not trouble yourself one moment about the other—the eternal life. Upon this answer, and the way you use it, depends your present and future real and abiding happiness.

A man goes the way he looks—the way he faces. If he is looking toward the world, that is all he sees; it is all to him, and it is all he will get. Men of the world who have their portion in this life. He not only loses the best and most satisfying portion in this life, but will have neither lot nor share in the immortal life.

What a man has constantly before him, that which takes his time and attention, fills his heart so that there is no room nor space for any other thing, is what makes him what he is and what he will be. He cannot be anything else while his mind is preoccupied. We grow to be like our ideals. You never knew a worldly man to be anything other than worldly; he has no place for anything else. He can never make his own the best this life can give until he faces about and turns away from the world, and toward the heavenly.

The difference in looking world-ward and God-ward, is just the difference between success and failure, safety and danger, peace and unrest, eternal life and eternal death.

Father's finger-board, His word, not only admonishes, exhorts; it points way—the only one to life eternal: "Looking unto Jesus the author and finisher of our faith;" "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved;" "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ;" "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else;" "Turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?"

Benhadad, king of Syria, looked world-ward, trusted in his power, and he lost; Elisha, the prophet of Israel, looked to God for wisdom and power, and he won not only victory, but peace.

But we need not look to the Bible alone, or wait until the day of judgment for similar instances, we have them here now.

I knew two brothers, young men of more than ordinary ability, with apparently equal chances for a successful life. The older, not forty years old, is dead; he died a drunkard. He leaves a sorrowing widowed mother—a lovely wife, broken-hearted. She could not live with him because of ill treatment. He looked to the world for his portion; he got just what and all the world has to give—death! The younger brother, early in life, like David, faced God-ward. He is a faithful member of the church; has a lucrative position on a city paper; a nice home, a lovely wife and three beautiful children, and a hope that reaches into the life-land. He wins. Here we see success and failure; and the reason why. These are not isolated cases, they are duplicated every day. Dear reader, you are certainly looking—but which way?

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT

Warren H. Denison, Superintendent

Bismarck, Illinois, $5,475.00

Pleasant View church at Bismarck, Central Illinois Conference, gives $5,475.00 to the Forward Movement and there is a keen interest in the work both on the part of the pastor, Rev. Rue Burnell, and people. It rained but that did not stop the canvass and the strong laymen of the church enjoyed the canvass heartily.

Rev. Pleasant, Versailles, Ohio, sends in $150 additional for their Forward Movement fund, making it $5,105.00. He speaks of the value of the campaign in his church and urges all pastors to put on the Forward Movement program and to prepare the church for the larger giving when the canvass is made.

Four superintendents conducted the dedicatory services for the new North Star, Ohio, church on July 20. The former church house burned in February, 1918, and they have built a new building costing $15,000. There was something over $5,000 needed to be raised and some $6,000 were pledged. The day was very rainy but the people were happy in their new building. A splendid spirit prevailed all day.

Special Church Architect

It would be a fine thing if some one in the Christian Church would make a speciality of church architecture. Our people are building many new churches these days and the number will increase as we go forward. Others are rebuilding and remodeling. A real church architect who understands Sunday school departmental work and modern needs in church work could render invaluable service and we believe he would be in demand by our churches. Many of our nice, new, good churches that are being erected are so inadequate to meet the needs of the children and youth of the church. Under the direction of a church architect the thousands of dollars now being spent could count for much more for the Kingdom and for Christian workers. Such an architect, especially fitted, who knows our needs would, in our judgment, make a real contribution to our work.

This book is printed on fine book paper and includes 16 pages of illustrations on plate paper. There are nearly 400 pages, in 31 chapters. The binding is made of fine cloth embossed in gold. Size 5x7 inches.

The price is only $1.50 a copy post-paid.

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR
AUGUST 17, 1919

Christian Missions. Act 1:8; 13:1-14:28.

Golden Text: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to the whole creation." Mark 16:15.

Devotional Reading. Isa. 6:1-8.

"Ye shall receive power—and ye shall be witnesses." Have you received power, and are not witnessing? Then you are like a man with legs who will not walk. Have you not received the power? Then you have not yet put yourself in condition of mind and spirit so that the Holy Ghost may come upon you. A man said concerning a woman who is possessed with one of the new religious fads: "She never goes out without a bundle of literature, which she hands out to everyone." How many of us witness for the old, old story in that way? How many of us have realized that it was for the weaker brother that Christ Jesus gave His life, and it is for the weaker brother that we as a denomination have been giving something like $1.00 a year per member? I have come to doubt whether the Christian was sent to "preach the gospel" primarily for the sake of others. Our Lord wishes you and me to be the best that we can, to have the fullest, richest life it is possible for a human being to have. So He said to the woman at the well, "The water that I shall give you shall be as a well—springing up." Our Christianity must be an overflowing, everflowing stream. Such a stream must have an overflow. If you would have the richest Christian life, it must be an overflowing life, and the whole creation is not too large a place for the overflow. The little spring which runs away in your pasture lot or by the roadside, joins the creek, the creek joins the river, and the river flows into the ocean. So your overflowing life, and mine, expended in service, will join with the lives of thousands of others, until all alike shall reach the boundless ocean, and touch all shores, and they shall say no more, 'know the Lord' for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR

How do men sell their heritage. Gen. 25:27-34.

The same heritage, and the same environment, were around these two brothers, and to the average eye, we may believe that Esau was apparently the better favored of the two. He was "hail-fellow-wellmet", always ready to go somewhere or to do something. Jacob was the stingy, quiet, stay-at-home. We are not concerned today, however, with the sin of the man who buys his brother's birthright, (a sin for which Jacob paid dearly enough) but we are thinking of those who sell their birthrights as lightly as did Esau. A mess of pottage, the gratification of the senses! Men step down lightly from the pedestal of absolute honesty, and before they know it, their birthright is gone. "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches," because it is worth more, but men sell the birthright of a good name for a very few of the paltry dollars, at times. "There is no place like home," but how lightly boys and girls leave home, or older people blast its joys and happiness for the gratification of appetite. Anything which takes away from us the power to be developing into the perfect man, "the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" is taking away from us our birthright by just so much as we fail to measure up.

MRS. FRED BULLOCK.

MISSIONS IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

It has been told in these columns how every Sunday school that cares to do so may have missions studied and taught in one way and another. The approval and workable methods are four:

1. Let the whole school once a month devote the whole recitation period (after the regular Scripture lesson of the morning has been read in class or in concert) to the study of missions.

2. Let every class in school be a missionary class and give, say, ten minutes of each lesson period to mission study and discussions.

the school who will now and then

3. Have a missionary committee in put on missionary programs, secure for the school missionary maps, charts and books, and seek in various ways to increase interest in missions, on the part of the school.

4. Have a mission superintendent in the school who will be given at least five minutes each Sunday morning to the missionary stories to the school, make a talk on missions and bring missionary facts and needs to the attention of the school.

The writer is much pleased to note that two of our very earnest and wide-awake schools, Holland and Holy Neck, have recently elected mission superintendents, and they are doing great work for the most worthy of our causes. Mrs. Chas. Daughtry is the mission superintendent of the Holland school, and Mrs. B. D. Jones of the Holy Neck school. We have already had the strongest sort of evidence that both of these schools chose most wisely, and that the missionary part of the Sunday school program is going to be the most wholesome and helpful of all.

We cannot understand why every school of all our number should not decide to teach and learn something about missions in one of the four ways mentioned. If we are not willing that the school as a whole study missions, secure some one in the school to teach missions in a five minutes talk each Sunday morning.

HENRY YOUTSEY PAYS TRIBUTE TO CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

"If it had not been for the practical help, spiritual inspiration and the sunshine of genuine Christian friendship of Christian Endeavor these last nineteen years would have been unbearable," said Henry Youtsey, who was recently pardoned after serving nearly twenty years in the State prison at Frankfort, Ky., on a sentence imposed in connection with the assassination of Governor Goebel of Kentucky, nearly a quarter of a century ago.

For the past several years Henry Youtsey has been in charge of the night school in the prison and has taught more than 1,000 men to read and write, 125 men have been personally led to Christ as their Saviour by Mr. Youtsey during his prison term.

Instead of whining and grumbling about his hard sentence as so many prisoners do, Henry Youtsey determined to make his life helpful to the men about him while he served what he felt was an unjust sentence. He gave every hour away from assigned duties to the building of Christian character in the men about him. He served six years as Secretary and President of the Christian Endeavor Society in the Prison at Frankfurt.

The Christian Endeavorers of the South are doing a magnificent work for the men and women in prisons, prison farms, reformatories, jails and convict camps, bringing sunshine and cheer to unfortunate folks and giving them a start when they come out to take their places in society once more after their term of imprisonment is ended.

MASSEY

Rufus Massey died at Watt's Hospital, Durham, N. C., June 21, 1919. Funeral service was conducted at the home of his brother, Superintendent Massey of Durham County schools, by Rev. W. G. Clements and Rev. Mr. Johnson of the Baptist church. For a number of years he had been a member of Durham Trinity Methodist church. He was regarded by the business men as honest and truthful. The congregation at the funeral was very large. He was buried at the old home of his father, John Massey, about seven miles South of Durham. Surviving him are four brothers and three sisters. May God bless them all.

W. G. CLEMENTS.

THOMAS

J. W. Thomas, a well known resident of Greensboro, and father of the Thomas Brothers, widely known all over the South in real estate circles, died at his home in Glenwood, July 18, 1919, at 11:45 P. M.

Mr. Thomas was one of the oldest resident citizens of Greensboro, and had a host of friends in the city. He was a Confederate Veteran, and his stories of the war were always interesting. He leaves to mourn their loss: his wife, R. T., C. E., J. C., I. R., and J. R. Thomas, and Mrs. T. L. McLean of the city, and Mrs. Ed Brockman of Asheville, N. C.

Funeral services were held from the home of C. E. Thomas by the writer, assisted by Revs. J. G. Walker, A. W. Plyler. A mixed quartette from the First Christian church, and Mincoia tribe 52, Red Men, and the remains laid to rest in Green Hill cemetery. Blessings upon those that mourn their earthly loss.

TROLLINGER

Benjamin Franklin Trollinger of Graham, North Carolina, died at his home, July 23, 1919, and was buried in the village cemetery, July 24. His funeral services took place from the Presbyterian church, of which he was a member. He was married to Miss Pattie Whittemore in 1881. He left his wife and three children, two daughters and one son. His son is a non-commissioned officer in the United States army. A large number of relatives and friends followed his re-

APPLE-WRAY

A quite but very pretty marriage took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. Wray, 218 East Gaston Street, Greensboro, N. C., Sunday, July 6, 1919, when their daughter, Miss Lottie Wray, became the bride of Mr. Linwood W. Apple, of Win-mains to the grave. There were many beautiful flowers, and sincere tears. 'All of the children were present except the son. He reached the three score. 'Ben,' as he was familiarly called, was an honest, industrious man, and he will be greatly missed in the village where he labored and lived so long.

RESOLUTIONS OR RESPECT—SIMPSON

Whereas, Deacon Haywood H. Simpson, who was born September 25, 1852, came suddenly to the end of his earthly life at his home in Haw River, North Carolina on July 24, 1919 in the sixty-seventh year of his age; and

Whereas, for nineteen years as a member, and for about seventeen years as a Deacon of Haw River Christian church he has proved loyal, faithful and true to his Church and God; Therefore, be it Resolved:

First. That in Deacon Simpson God has given us a noble example of a devoted husband, faithful father, Christian brother, patient sufferer, and loyal soldier of our Lord Christ.

Second. That whereiu he was worthy we emulate his example.

Third. That to his grief-stricken family we offer our sincere sympathy and commend them to God and the word of His grace—the only source of strength in such a sad hour.

Fourth. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be spread on the minutes of our church for permanent keeping.

Ratified by the church and signed by the Deacons:

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—BEAMON

Whereas, Mrs. S. C. E. Beamon has recently passed from labor to reward and

Whereas she has always done her duty as a devoted member of Damascus Christian church, Therefore be it Resolved:

1. That, we record our sincere appreciation of her Christian character and faithful service to the church and the cause of Christ. No woman among us has been more generous and faithful. Her counsel was wise, her example worthy of emulation.

2. That we bow in humble submission to the will of God who doeth all things well. We thank our Heavenly Father for extending her life well beyond three score and ten years and we pray that God may raise up some worthy successor.

3. That we extend to the family our sincere sympathy, and pray that His divine grace may be sufficient in this dark hour.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be entered upon the church records and Missionary Society and also a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

YORK

Henry Garfield, second and infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest C. York, of 1250 Gregory Street, Greensboro, N. C., died July 8, 1919, at the age of 11 months and 6 days. Garfield was a fine picture of health until within five days of his death, the angels carried him home to glory, and has left a vacancy in the home that the world can never fill. A short service in the home was held by Rev. W. R. Cox, following which the remains were carried to Parks Cross Roads where the funeral services were held by the writer and the remains laid to rest in the church cemetery. May God's richest blessing be upon the sorrowing family.

Proof of Heredity

If you do not believe in heredity, read this story that emanates from a public school, and be convinced that there is something in it after all.

A new boy from a neighboring State and just joined the class, and though he was bright, and there was nothing the matter with him physically, still it was almost impossible to understand him.

"Why don't you speak up? Why don't you articulate?" pleaded the exasperated teacher. "Didn't anyone ever try to teach you to speak up so that you and could be understood?"

"They used to," mumbled the boy, "but they gave it up when they found my father was a train announcer and my mother a telephone girl. They said it was born in me."—Times-Star.

Would Leave

"If my mistress don't take back what she say to me this mornin', I'll leave!" exclaimed the irate Bridget to the ice man.

"What'd she say?" he asked.

"Sure, she told me to leave," said Bridget.

It Was Not Auntie

A little girl went to the drug store and asked for some pills.

"Anti-bilious?" asked the clerk.

"No, auntie's all right. It's my uncle," replied the little girl.—Sci.

Tender Hearted

Mr. Miller—My wife is so tender-hearted, she won't whip the cream.

Mr. Smith—That's nothing; my wife won't beat the carpets, and tears come to her eyes when the onions are skinned.—Tit-Bits.

Crisal Days

THese are crisal days with many young men and women. The problem of entering school this fall is before them. Attractive salaries stare them in the face. Their answer depends upon their estimate of the future. Make not the unwise choice.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

LIFE AND LITERATURE

There is a life in literature that all of us recognize. The Bible, the greatest masterpiece in literature, speaks to us in a way that makes us recognize that it contains a certain element of life that grips us. To read the writings of Moses is to hear that great law giver speak; to read the songs of David is to hear the harpist sing; to read of Paul and his initiative work for Christianity is to feel that thrill of life that makes us want to conquer and to overcome.

Aside from the Bible, great mountain peaks of literature stand as beacon lights to guide us. The weary and worn and tired find consolation and comfort in reading "Pilgrim's Progress;" the prophetic in mind turn to Shakespeare to point out the history of the times; the life soon to enter the sunset valley finds joy in reading "In Memoriam" by Tennyson.

The great pieces of literature are those that are filled with life, portray life, and point out things to make life sweeter and happier. The brains of all ages are reflected in thought expressions, and noble emotions have always endeavored to express themselves in printed form.

The thought in every world event finds itself crystallized in art and literature. Flags, guns, and emblems of war have been the foremost things in art and literature during the past four years. The close of the war brought our thoughts to the dead who sacrificed their lives that we might live. In turn we have written into literature and woven into art words and symbols to express our appreciation of them and to console those who mourn. Those who mourn the loss of loved ones have turned to song and other forms of literature and art to find comfort and consolation. There is the quest of satisfaction that their loved ones rest in that eternal resting place.

There is life in literature. A book may be as great as a battle; a picture may change a life, and that life may change a nation, and that nation may change the world. Let the Bible be the standard of all art and literature and your choice will be wise.

We are endeavoring to breathe the spirit of the age and point to the sign board of the future.

TWO METHODS

There are just two methods for industrial conciliation: The rapid reformers, socialistic and pessimistic class, endeavor to bring conditions to a normal state by demanding, rioting, and overthrowing. This class is not represented by the Church. The second method is fostered by Church leaders who endeavor to reconcile normal conditions by the terms of peace, arbitration and reason.

These two methods have almost reached their climax in the present age. Social unrest and individual anxiety are foremost in the activity of the world's forum. They are presenting problems that are world-wide in scope and touch the life of individuals everywhere. There is impatience, unrest, disturbances in all sections of the country. Men are demanding a change and are demanding that change now. Strikes are prevalent and point to the fact that organizations are becoming supreme. The flash-light of the Church is not throwing its rays of activity in the foreground so vividly as these labor unions and other industrial line-ups. But that does not argue that the Church is not alive and active in the pushing of its own program—the program of conciliation by reason and thought and deliberation.

No man among us can fail to see the near approach of these two methods of world readjustment. One is working as hard as the other. One is receiving more publicity than the other, but if we sense the trend of things correctly, they are about on an equilibrium. We are bold enough to assert that the time is not far distant when a readjustment will come. Just which method is to win out we cannot say—we wish we could. The successful outcome of either method will doubtless bring satisfaction to the disturbed hearts and minds of the people, but it ought to be the hope and prayer of every Christian that the method of the Church should win. There is a reason: If the method of arbitration should win it would strengthen the arm of the Church, but if the method of force wins the influence of the Church may be hindered. It ought to be the hope and the prayer of the Christian people that the Church should win because of the conditions to follow after such a winning. When force and might win out it digs a deep chasm between two classes of people and it may take many, many years to abolish this line of separation. The method of the Church heals as it goes, and unites by the tie of brotherly love.

It is the duty and the privilege of every American pulpit to sound the note for cool heads, honest and sincere hearts and deliberation upon the part of our people. It is the duty and the privilege of every American pulpit to lead the people into the right paths in these days of social unrest and industrial activity when a strife is abroad in the land. Will the greatest institution in the world, the Church, fail to measure up to its obligations?

New impulses lead to new thoughts; new thoughts to new actions, and these to service, if properly guided.

CHURCH AND STATE

It furnishes amusing reading to scan the articles of many present day writers because of their estimate of the Church. There are, in every community, those who are stirred "to do something" because of new impulses brought on by changed conditions. There are many classes of these people, but we confine this note to one class only.

The class to which we refer is that group of men who have not identified themselves with the Church sufficiently to know its latitude and the strength of its work. Constantly, earnestly, and sincerely forces of Christianity have gone forward. World movements and world conditions spring up as if by magic. Those who have been the least concerned about the Church and its work are ready in a moment to point out that the Church ought to line herself up with certain present day problems. They forget that the greatest influence of the Church can be obtained only through and by absolute divorce from the State. The method of the Church to purify is not to engage with but to go against. The best illustration that we have of this is the Church in the European countries. The ministers of England own 8 per cent of the stock in breweries of that country. This alone is sufficient proof that the conscience of such leadership is blunted until it loses that fine appeal, and earnest condemnation that causes reaction against immoral tendencies. Two powers cannot unite without a common absorbing influence.

The Church is the searchlight in the lighthouses along the shores of time, carefully inspecting every incoming ship of immorality. When these on-rushing things come she is aloof from their interest and is ready in a moment's time, without condemnation of her conscience and her interest, to summons her forces to ward off the on-slaughts of immorality that impeach the character and lives of her devotees.

Three cheers for America and her Protestant Churches! They are free from the connection of State politics. Our Constitution makers saw the danger and said that the Church and State should forever be separated. If the American Churches should ever find themselves willing to live up as commercial industries the fate of America would be the fate that came to the European countries—the fate of disorder and un-governable outrage.

Let those who see the Church and State too far apart review the ruins of nations that rose to the zenith of their power and crumbled to dust because their moral fibre gave away.

New duties, new dangerous—these are the outposts of civilizations. Our effort is to point them out for the Kingdom's good.

CLEAN SPEECH

The Christian Endeavor topic for August 10 was "Speech: Wise and Unwise." This reminds us of the great tendency towards cheap talk, slang and profanity in this age. Slang seems to be common coin. Slang cheapens the expression, obstructs thought, clouds accurate thinking, and closes avenues to a larger approach on any subject. There is no excuse for slang. We will admit that the English language is not perfect in every respect, but there is a sufficiency of it to aid a man in expressing himself without using slang.

Slang has come into the pulpit, and we believe that every time slang enters it that that much of the true Gospel goes out. We pity the man who has to resort to slang in order to preach the unsearchable riches of Christ. Slang in the pulpit will never convey to the minds and hearts of the people the richest expressions and sentiments of the Christian life. Slang words are not rich; they are poverty stricken, and will never be able to tap the fountains of life.

Cursing and swearing is another uncalled for, unfit, unclean and dirty habit that mortals enter into. God save our youth from such unclean talk! We have driven the bar-room out of our land. Public sentiment has been the prosecuting attorney in this move. We believe that public sentiment will exert itself again some good day and say to slang and profanity that they, too, shall go. When we passed the bar-room unnoticed, and approved of the drunkard by our smile, they were in our midst. When we became deeply concerned about these things the condition changed, and so when we as Christian people become deeply concerned over the sayings of our people, these things, too, will change.

"A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver."—Proverbs 25:11.

OUR PROGRAM

With such a limited number of pages, and with the constant growth of the Church with which to encounter, it is no little problem to figure out a division of space for the proper allotment of each call and need. It is almost impossible for us to get out special editions, or editions that feature special themes. We had hoped to bring out an Educational Number this summer, but we do not see our way clear because these special numbers paralyze our weekly plans for more than a month. We are, however, stressing the theme of education during the summer months, as has already been noticed. We have also invited a number of contributors to THE SUN to let their articles stress education's interest from now until the first of September. Several contributions on education have already appeared and others are to follow. By this method we are endeavoring to emphasize during the vacation season the importance of education. After the first of September we hope to stress more fully the matter of pastors' salaries because we feel that more pastoral changes will be made during September, October and November, and certainly no church will offer to call its pastor for another year, or extend a call to any other pastor without some increase in salary.

During the winter months, when the evenings are long, we hope to be able to stress the devotional side of life, and so on during the various seasons. We solicit the co-operation of the Brotherhood in our program.

Bigness may not be greatness. Deliberation may not be decision. We endeavor to create an impulse to distinguish the difference.

THE WISDOM OF OUR BRETHREN

(Christian Observer):

The denominational college is the great fort of the Church where the freedom of religion will be maintained with the same courage as the freedom of science will be defended in the State institutions.

(Western Christian Advocate):

Unless the salaries of teachers are generally raised, our children will soon be placed under inferior instructors. This vacation is offering to many double what they can get for teaching during the winter.

(The Christian Evangelist):

The public schools are not godless. Morality is taught in them. Honesty, truthfulness, helpfulness, friendship, honor, justice, patriotism, liberty and intelligence are the fundamental considerations in the public schools, and surely these are bed-rock moralities.

(The Herald of Gospel Liberty):

In many a home the future destiny of some boy or girl will be decided within the next few weeks. We cannot believe that any father or mother will permit such a vital decision to rest solely upon the matter of money alone.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

DR. W. J. MCGLOTHLIN

I listened to his course of lectures at Tampa, Florida and learned, in part, the secret of his great power among the Baptist ministers who attended the Southern Theological Seminary. He is justly regarded, by educators of all denominations who know him, as one of the finest scholars and sweetest spirited Christians in our country. No two denominations in the United States hold more divergent opinions about baptism than the Baptists and Lutherans. Yet, The Lutheran, official organ of the United Lutheran Church in America, for July 24, 1919, contains the following able article which is applicable to all the Christian colleges in America:

"The Watchman-Examiner reports the resignation of one of the most distinguished professors of the Southern Theological Seminary, Dr. W. J. McGlothlin. He leaves the seminary to engage in Christian college education. He is deeply impressed with the necessity of this kind of education, and believes firmly that the maintenance of Christian colleges is the only thing that will save us from traversing the road that led to the downfall of Germany. State education must be supplemented by the work of Christian institutions. As President of Furman University, Dr. McGlothlin will have a chance to put his deep faith in the Christian college to active test. In a recent article he said: 'In a large measure education made this war, and education must help mightily to create an international mind that will eliminate war. Ignorance is inefficiency and unimportance; education is power, beneficent or dangerous according to the character of the education. We must neither leave our people uneducated nor suffer them to be wrongly educated. The Christian Church, strong and efficient is a necessity of the future. And now it is the supreme time to endow and equip them worthily. It ought to be done and finished within the next fifteen years. To lose the opportunity that is now open to us will be to doom ourselves to long and painful efforts and long-continued inefficiency.'"

Dr. McGlothlin is in no way prejudiced against the Germans. After graduating, with magna cum laude, from American universities, he studied at German universities and was greatly appreciated and honored. He knows whereof he speaks. Mere intellectual culture never did, and never can, elevate either an individual or a nation, morally or religiously. Greece reached her highest mark in plastic art, under Pericles, yet it was her most corrupt period. Intellectual training in Rome was highest under Caesar Augustus and it was her most degraded, morally. England showed her highest intellectual period under Elizabeth and it was a period of her lowest morals. If we are too poor to aid in giving money we can use what influence we have to heed the bugle calls from Elon College and THE CHRISTIAN SUN office.

Be good for something and not good for nothing

SUFFOLK LETTER

The Sixth Annual Session of the Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods closed on August 5, 1919. It was not largely attended, but it was faithfully attended. The work, taken all together, was the best of any year and the weather was ideal. The guarantors have stood by the benevolent work, and financially, it has been a success. But plans were started that may transfer the responsibility of the Chautauqua to some official body of the Church in order to make it a permanent Church institution; but for the next year it will be conducted as heretofore, financed by the guarantors. Some of those who have supported the Chautauqua by their presence and their money went to Virginia Beach discouraged this year, and returned to their homes with renewed interest and hope.

The program was so full, so completely carried out, so varied and of such high order, that a feeling was created that the attendance must be larger next year; and it will. I cannot give the program nor the names of all the speakers and teachers. It would require too much space; but I may say that the Bible Study, Sunday School in all its Departments, Missions, Christian Leadership, Church Problems, Christian Endeavor, the Forward Movement, Sermons, Chautauqua Lectures, Vesper Services, Intercession, Music, and recreation filled each day to overflowing with the cream of modern progress in the things of the Kingdom. Each day was as long and as full as the above sentence. The faculty consisted of seventeen persons, many of them specialists in the department which they filled.

Dr. Geo. C. Enders of Defiance College, Ohio, full series of morning Bible Studies; Dr. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Va., series of sermons; Rev. E. K. McCord, series of lectures on Missions; Mrs. Isaac Sewell, Nashville, Tenn., series on Elementary Work in Sunday School; W. C. Pearce, Sec'y Interational Sunday School Association; Hermon Eldredge, series on Christian Leadership; Dr. R. C. Helfenstien, Rev. G. H. Ekins and Rev. Wm. M. Jay, series on Church Problems; and thus the reader will see that it was a real school of methods. Dr. Enders took occasion to say in the closing meeting, when President Denison requested any present who desired to say what impressions they had received from the Chautauqua, that the Christian Church had produced the Big Four in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work: Marion Lawrence, W. C. Pearce, Amos R. Wells, and Hermon Eldredge.

In addition to the regular work of the Chautauqua, Commissions from the Disciples and Christians held meetings of interest on church unity and Drs. Peter Ainlie of Baltimore and Finis S. Idleman of New York, delivered Chautauqua lectures. From 10:00 A. M. to 12:45 P. M. of Friday was given over to a meeting and discussion of Christian union by leaders of the Disciples of Christ and the Christian Church. Drs. Armstrong, Miller, and Idleman spoke for the Disciples; Drs. Peters, Harper, and Burnett for the Christians. It was a great meeting and if all of both Churches could have been present union between the two bodies could have been consummated.

The only change in the official Chautauqua is that C. H. Rowland, D. D., becomes President and W. H. Denison, Vice-President. They exchange paces as Dr. Denison is so far away from the center. Prof. S. M. Smith remains General Secretary and W. C. Rawles was elected Treasurer.

THE FUQUAY SPRINGS BIBLE CONFERENCE, AUGUST
31 TO SEPTEMBER 7, 1919

Rev. George E. Guille

Rev. George E. Guille, Extension Worker of Moody Bible Institute, will deliver daily lectures at the Conference. Some of his subjects will be: "The Exaltation and Present Service of Christ," "The Coming of Christ," "The Judgment Seat of Christ," "The Times of the Gentiles and the Predicted End of the Age," "The Holy Spirit," etc.

Mr. Guille is one of the greatest teachers of the Bible in this country, and a rare treat awaits those who will hear him.

Rev. R. V. Miller

Rev. R. V. Miller, Bible teacher, evangelist, and lecturer of wide reputation and of deep scriptural insight, will alternate with Mr. Guille in delivering addresses and lectures on Bible subjects, such as "The Teaching of the Epistles," "Christ in Prophecy, His Coming and Kingdom," "Teaching Concerning Salvation and the Christ Life," etc.

Of him Rev. F. W. Troy, Field Secretary Fulton Street Bible and Evangelistic Movement, New York City, says: "I consider Brother Miller the clearest, sweetest and strongest teacher on prophetic subjects I have ever had the privilege of listening to."

The singing will be in charge of Rev. Charles Butler, whose sweet voice and pleasing personality need no recommendation or introduction to the people of this section. Indeed, such is his own reputation, that but little, if any, additional luster is cast upon his name to say that he sang for Billy Sunday and Doctor Torrey for several years. Everybody knows and loves him here, and the fact that he will have charge of the singing insures a treat for all who attend these daily conferences.

We cordially invite every one to attend every conference.

Are you moving with the Forward Movement?

ANTIOCH, CHATHAM COUNTY, NORTH CAROLINA.

In 1857 I had a church—or rather a school house—in which to preach, and which is now Antioch. In December of that year I attempted to find the school house one Sunday, but it being located in a large body of woods, I failed to find it until about 1:00 o'clock. A few brethren were patiently awaiting my arrival. I told these brethren that I could not accomplish anything with such a building and location. I went to dinner with a very congenial family; and after we had eaten, the good sister of the house felt it her duty to inform me that the people in that community did not need another church. But in good faith I convinced her that there was a large field of usefulness for another church, a Christian church. I took great pleasure in defending my denomination.

In the afternoon I visited some of my little flock and told them that I did not feel that we could accomplish anything in a school house, but that I would visit them during the winter, hold prayer meetings, and look after a location on which to build a church in the spring.

In this community I made many friends and acquaintances of other denominations. There was a good neighborhood where the old church had been, about 300 yards from the public road. I decided upon this place. In March I had an appointment there, and with scarcely any preparation, we assembled. When I arrived Sunday morning the thick woods about the old spot were filled with horses, vehicles and people and we had a splendid service. I preached in the afternoon and a Methodist minister and his congregation went with us, making an immense crowd. I told them that we must have a church at once and steps were taken for its beginning. Many of the brethren had lumber and other material and could commence at once. A month later I arrived to dedicate the church building. Of course we didn't have any painting, ceiling or plastering done. I preached for these people three years, and in the meantime gathered together a fine congregation. Many were members of other churches but assisted me in my work and opened their homes to me. It became necessary to leave the work in the hands of Dr. J. N. Farrell. In 1863 or 64 I attended a Conference at Antioch and I do not recall going back to the church until my recent visit.

July 19, 1919 I started for Antioch. The weather was threatening. When I arrived in Greensboro it was raining hard but I continued my journey and arrived at Goldston. Brother M. O. Dorsett met me. There were other old men at the train who told me that their families remembered me. We started for Brother Dorsett's home, a distance of four miles. I found Brother Dorsett and his little family pleasantly located in a cottage with plenty of room and comforts. Mrs. Dorsett is a most excellent woman, good church and Sabbath school worker. Their daughter, about fourteen years old, is much interested in Sunday school work.

Next morning we started to the church, a distance of two and one-half miles. We had a good Sunday school of about 100 members. They were engaged in preparing for Children's Day the next Sunday. A Mr.

Alexander lives in the community, who recently purchased a farm and brought his children to the country in preference to rearing them in the city. They are members of the Presbyterian Church, but there being no church of their denomination close by, are doing active work with us. I preached especially to the unsaved and I think that I reached the hearts and minds of many. Due to excessive rains and bad roads, none of the old people could get to the church. Not even an automobile could make the trip, and so I failed to have the pleasure of shaking the hands of many old friends. The ground was too wet for me to visit the cemetery.

I returned to Brother Dorsett's. Rev. R. P. Crumpler, the pastor of the church, spent the night with me at Brother Dorsett's. Brother Crumpler was sick and hardly able to attend church. Monday afternoon I returned to the station, Brother Dorsett carrying me in his surry. We reached the station just in time to catch the train. I made the entire trip without being caught in the rain, except as I left the depot on Saturday. I made my way home, having traveled possibly 200 miles, tired but not sick. I enjoyed my trip so much, but regret that the weather was such that I could not see more of my dear friends at Antioch.

I cannot recall names and consequently cannot mention many friends I would like to.

CONCORD

The revival meeting began here the fourth Sunday in July 1919, at eleven o'clock. The weather was fair and a large crowd was present. The church was much revived and was brought closer in fellowship by coming together. The visible results were eleven professions of faith in Christ and four additions to the church. I think there will be more to join later.

Rev. J. F. Apple of Elon College did all the preaching. He brought plain Gospel messages which were inspiring and uplifting. The people were glad to have him again.

On Saturday before the fourth Sunday in August, at 4:00 P. M., the church is to meet for a business meeting and the calling of pastor for another. May the Lord lead in all that shall be done. Communion and baptizing of the candidates on Sunday following.

I was with Rev. J. W. Knight at Smithwood in a very successful revival this week.

NOTES

The Virginia Valley Conference is in session this week.

Rev. J. W. Holt has been called to serve Bethlehem for another year.

Dr. P. H. Fleming is assisting Rev. C. E. Newman in his revival meetings this summer.

We sympathize with Brother T. H. Crocker, Middleburg, N. C., in the loss of his mother, August 4, 1919.

Rev. P. T. Klapp sent this office a list of new subscribers the other day. Brother Klapp has always been faithful to THE SUN.

Rev. H. J. Fleming, Newport News, Va., called in to see us the other day. He goes back to Newport News for another year.

Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., has been elected president of the Chautauqua and School of Methods. Dr. Rowland will fill the place well.

Rev. J. O. Cox changes his address to Lee, N. C., Madison County, near Hot Springs. He is in charge of Spring Creek State High School.

If you are in favor of Christian union, you should read Dr. W. A. Harper's address in this issue. If you are opposed to union, then by all means read it.

Dr. J. W. Harrell is at home from the hospital much improved. He expects to leave this week for Eastern Virginia to spend some time with his father.

Congratulations and best wishes to our good friends, Rev. J. F. Morgan, and wife, who was Miss Lula Bell until July 31. Happiness and long life be theirs!

Rev. B. F. Black went to Camp last week to get his discharge, but failed to get it owing to infected tonsils. He has had an operation and hopes to soon be at home.

Rev. J. L. Foster advertises in this issue a valuable piece of property at Elon College. A good chance to secure a home in the College community and educate your children.

Dr. L. E. Smith is at News Ferry, Va., where he is taking a rest. He will return to Norfolk about September 1. He is to put on a campaign for THE SUN in his church in the early fall.

Misses Edith Walker, Nonie Moore, Sadie Fonville and Nellie Fleming, of our Burlington church, attended the International Christian Endeavor Convention in Buffalo, New York, last week.

The office of publication of The Missionary Herald and Christian Star, the official organ of the Afro-Christian Convention, has been moved from Franklinton, N. C., to Raleigh, N. C.

Dr. J. U. Newman writes from Chicago, Ill., under date of August 4: "This Elon crowd of eight never enjoyed THE SUN so much. Thought it was a good paper when at home. It seems better now."

Last Sunday afternoon the Editor preached for the congregation at Mebane. The attendance was not large, but those present manifested a spirit of loyalty and are deeply interested in the work at that place. We believe that the Mission Board of the North Carolina Conference ought to give this work personal attention and decide the future policy of the undertaking.

The children of the Christian Orphanage gave an entertainment at the Municipal Theatre, Burlington, N. C., Friday evening, August 8. The play was of a high order, well presented and those present counted themselves fortunate. Brother Johnston and co-workers are to be congratulated. If the Orphanage children could go to every church in the Convention and present themselves in the same way as they did in Burlington, the financial problem of the Orphanage would be solved.

We had the privilege of being at Mt. Zion in Orange County last Sunday to fill an appointment for Brother J. F. Apple. The weather was clear, the attendance good, and the occasion much enjoyed. Our welcome was all that could be asked; the hospitality, well, it was 100 per cent. The Lord's Supper was administered after preaching. Many more families in that community are this week to receive THE SUN and we welcome them to the list. We are indebted to Brother Julius Pace for his kindness in "fording" us to and from the station, also to his good wife for a good old Southern country dinner.

The time for the contest for names of non-subscribers has closed. Many have responded. We have not had the time to check up the list and will not for several days. Suffice to say that four pastors furnished a total of more than one thousand names. They certify that these are heads of families or logical persons in the family to take THE SUN. Much work has been done in securing these names. Each list received shows that time was given to it. Just how much service this list will be to this office is yet to be determined, but it substantiates one fact, that when four pastors can marshal a list of their members totaling more than a thousand who do not take THE SUN, there is yet work to be done.

ANNOUNCEMENT

There will be a call meeting of the members of Liberty (Vance) Christian church Saturday, August 16, at 2:30 P. M. Important business. The presence of every member is desired.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

THE CHURCH COLLEGE

It sets the standard of American education and has maintained it.

It is the mother of college presidents and America's most prominent educators.

It is the college which has furnished the church with its ministry.

Its American patriotism has been tested by two wars, and not found wanting.

Its form of government is truly American and free from politics.

It is thoroughly Christian, yet free from bigotry.

Its scientific departments are manned by scholarly, Christian men.

It is free from that irreligious sectarianism which denies a place to the Bible in the curriculum of study.

It believes in a philosophy which holds to a personal God, a divine Christ, an immortal soul, and an imperative duty. It is free from agnosticism and pantheism, the greatest foes to Christian truth.

Fundamentals in its curriculum is love for all truth. It does not prejudice the student against the truth by refusing it a place in the curriculum.

It believes that the formative element in history is Christianity, and that any curriculum is defective which fails to reach it.

It believes that the words of Jesus and Paul should be studied as well as those of Socrates and Plato.

It believes that teachers of youth should know the truth.

It is an institution born of sound doctrine and fostered by those who have a vital faith.

Its educational work has been done for less money than that of any other agency. It is the greatest tax-saving institution in the State.

It gives the greatest return to the country of any philanthropic investment known to Christian men and women.

It is the safest investment of Christian money known to the church.

Its students, coming from the best Christian homes, help to create a clean, strong collegiate life. Its students are taught to live economically, to think rightly, and to act nobly.—Indiana Farmer's Guide.

Come, my way, my truth, my life;
Such a way as gives us breath;
Such a truth as ends all strife;
Such a life as killeth death.

Come, my joy, my love, my heart;
Such a joy as none can move;
Such a love as none can part;
Such a heart as joys in love.

PAINTING!

The Christian Orphanage is dressing out in a new dress. The painters are painting the outside and it makes our building have a much better appearance. This should have been done some time ago but we wanted to wait till we got the Institution out of debt before we began to make improvements. We expect to paint the inside of the building as fast as our bank account will permit. We wish we could spare the money now to go over the entire building and make it all look fresh and new.

Our Singing Class had quite a pleasant trip on July 31. We were invited to attend the Masonic Picnic at Baynes Store and to give an entertainment there. Our children have been very kindly invited out there on several occasions before.

The Singing Class from the Oxford Orphanage attends this picnic when they can make it convenient and gives entertainments for the picnic, and when it is not convenient for them to come, the managers very kindly extend to our children an invitation to go out there and give an entertainment which we are always glad to do. It is a treat our Class looks forward to with much pleasure and enjoy the dinner and the many kindnesses shown them.

MISSIONARY

PASTORS "CARRY ON"

I wonder if the faithful pastors in our Christian churches have fallen into ruts and are preaching in the same old way they did before the war; or are they awake and alive to the wonderful opportunities of this new time, and are atrob with vigor and bigness of this world-wide life into whose vortex we have been whirled in the last few months? I heard of a minister the other day who burned up every sermon-note and manuscript he had made in the past twenty-five years. Trade and commerce and politics and state craft and thought and feeling and endeavor had all taken on world-wide scope of late months, and the provincial, restricted message of the past could have no meaning, and get no results, in this large and growing time. God loved a whole world from the beginning, loved it all so supremely, so devotedly that He gave the best He had to reach, redeem and save it all.

Recently Mrs. E. C. Cronk, of Richmond, Va., that woman of a most fertile and tireless brain who conducts each month "Best Methods" in the Missionary Review of the world, sent this question to a number of pastors who "carry on" and who have done things, and are doing things on a large scale for the Master, "What Are Your Best Methods?" Many of the replies are printed in July Review. They are worth reading, and are suggestive indeed to those who would like to carry on, and undertake things.

One pastor of a small congregation of about two hundred and fifty people who with his Bible classes gave $83,722.00 for missions alone in 1918, says: "Never ask people, but ask God and tell people. We make no appeals, and do not solicit funds, but at church and classes we state the needs, present the opportunities, and leave it to Him whose we are and whom we serve to accomplish His pleasure. Like Manoah and his wife, we look on while He doeth wondrously (Judges 13:19) for He is surely the Doer of it all. The results of this method have been gifts of $1,045,598.65 for missionary work in thirty years."

That pastor has been thinking, acting and "carrying on" in the spirit of this new and world-wide time for thirty years.

WHEN GOD PLEASES TO CONVERT THE HEATHEN

You know some people believe that God will convert the heathen "when He plans to convert them." Also some believe He will convert them "in His own good time and way." This writer is among the number who believe in both the above propositions.

Yes, God will convert the heathen when He pleases to convert them. There is no sort of doubt about that. But in the name of His mercy, goodness and love I declare that He pleases to convert them now—just now—forthwith and immediately as soon as those of His children, whom He has converted, are willing to obey His imperative command and carry the message of His saving love and power to His children who have not yet heard about that love and power. "How shall they believe in Him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?" Our Father who p'ceases to save now gave those stinging questions to us long ago through the inspiration of Holy Writ. (Rom. 10:15, 16.

"And in His own good time and way." Of course, God will only save the heathen in His own good time and way. When is that time and how is that way? The time is now, when His messengers are ready; and the way is through the "foolishness of the preaching" of those messengers. God was ready in 1791 to do the work of redeeming and saving India. (He had been ready more than a thousand years before that) But in 1791 one of His servants over in England—and he just an ordinary shoe cobbler—became willing to obey his Master's command, "Go." William Carey arose in a company of Christians and said he wanted to go and be used of God in converting the heathen. Then it was that a Mr. Ryland bawled out, as many another weak and ignorant professed Christian has cried out since. "Young man, sit down! When God pleases to convert the heathen He will do it without your help or mine." But William Carey did not sit down. By the help of a few of the faithful the shoe cobbler set out on his great task of "helping God convert the heathen," and God has been converting the heathen ever since. And He will keep on converting them, as He keeps on converting men and women, boys and girls in the homeland, by using human and mortal messengers to tell the plain, simple story of the Cross.

God puts tyrants under His feet, abolishes human slavery, overthrows soul-less militarism, and closes up death-dealing saloons only when human beings who believe in Him are willing to obey His voice and go in His name to do these needed things. There is just one reason why the God of heaven and earth did not shut up the deadly saloon a thousand years ago, and left that hell-trap open to catch millions of men before their time, and make millions of weeping widows where there should have been as many happy homes with husbands, and that reason is that God committed this work to mortal men, human beings who professed to love, serve and honor Him. And when these men and women, His human agents, His sole dependents were ready then He was ready. He had been ready all these centuries. But we rebellious subjects stood in His way.

"Wherefore it is not your Father's will that one of these little ones should perish." And yet they do perish, are perishing by the millions without hope in this life or in that to come. God is ready, willing and able to save them—to save the whole heathen world. But we to whom His mercy and wisdom have committed this task are not ready or willing to obey His superlative and supreme command. How long, dear Christian church, before we are ready to do His bidding and enter into His joy through service?

CHRISTIAN UNION*

Dangers to be Avoided

It is said that fools rush in where angels fear to tread. I have never been an angel. I have frequently been a fool. All college presidents are fools. It is said that a man cannot have brains and hair at the same time. I once saw four hundred college presidents in a room together, and no bald heads were there. College presidents have hair, and plenty of it.

I have never carried a red flag before. When President Coffin asked me to speak on this theme, I demurred. He charged it up to modesty. I had deeper reasons. The reds are not popular in America. A red flag shaken in a bull's face provokes a fight. Fat men ought not to shake such emblems in hot weather.

But I believe in Christian Union and even though I do have hair and am a college president and may provoke a fight, and though I am fat and it is hot, I shall lift aloft my red bandana and give the brethren some spiritual advice. I will do anything for Christian union, any where, any time, any how. I have been a party to a union, a minor member of the firm I admit, for twenty years and it has been so gratifying I should like to get married once more and on a larger scale, and so I am going to tell the dangers to be avoided if this second marriage I hope to be party to is to succeed.

And first of all we must avoid the discussion of our pedigree. I was once written to in a delicately tinted and much-perfumed envelope by a lady whose husband's name was the same as my last one to send her my pedigree that we might establish our kinship. I told her I was too busy to climb my ancestral tree, and further I was afraid to because I feared I would shortly encounter a baboon or a monkey. Pedigrees are all right for hogs, horses, and poodles, but we are all children of the King and as such are brothers and sisters, and that ought to be sufficient.

Seriously, beloved, we must avoid historical discussion if we are to get together, as Jesus wants us to do. Recently a minister entertained me for about three hours on the injustices that had been done him. I listened patiently. When he had finished, I told him I was sure he was a very much maligned and persecuted man, and then I asked: "Brother, do you believe in forgiveness?" "Yes," he instantly replied. "And are you ready to practice it?" I asked. He then did what he had argued he could not do because of the injustices he had suffered. When we have forgiven each other, we can answer Christ's prayer for the oneness of His followers and not before.

It is useless to try to unite on the basis of our historical integrity. For nearly a hundred years the two bodies whose commissioners are here courting today (and I regret to say that there are no ladies present in either commission. You can't do much courting without a lady)—well as I started to say, these two bodies of Christian workers have crossed each other's paths a good many times in the past century, and some unpleasant things have happened, some un-Christian things, some horrid injustices have been perpetrated. Brethren, if we do not "let the dead past bury its dead," we shall never answer Christ's prayer for the union of His followers. Any discussion or rehearsal of these old scores will take us back to the old days when public debates, bitterness, strife, and suspicion were the marks of true Christian Knighthood. But thank God! a new chivalry has come to the Church of Christ—a chivalry that essays to excel in forgiving and not in laying claim to its rights—a chivalry based on love and not on ascendancy—a chivalry that is willing to sacrifice all that Christ's prayer may be answered in our day and that we may have part in its answering. If history is keeping the household of God divided, let us burn all our records and pray God to paralyze our historical brain cell that there may be no recollection among men of the things that once were, but that are no more useful.

The second danger is insistence on the distinctive things for which we stand. I crave no distinction for myself, except the distinction of being a child of God. Our Heavenly Father made us different, just as the trees are different from each other. Yet they make one forest. "The things that we peculiarly stand for" we must forget. We must make Christian character the test of genuineness in the individual life. If a belief or practice sets us off from some one else, we may be sure the peculiar thing is not universal and that it is not essential to salvation. If it is not essential, we should not insist on it for our brother and he should not insist that we are wrong in fondling it closely to our bosom. If we are to set out to write a creed that all men must subscribe to in order to enjoy our united fellowship, we have met in vain. There is but one source of all the creeds in Christendom, the Bible. Every bit of truth it teaches is for every man, but not every man can appropriate it all. Let each man interpret it for himself, as the Spirit shall lead, and let no man say "nay" to a brother who seeks fellowship by a different method than the one he has decided on for himself.

What I am trying to say in that we must avoid the theological pitfall. Theology is a voluminous science, but not always luminous. All the good that has ever come of theologic controversy has been to drive the participants farther apart spiritually, and today when men's hearts yearn within them for the oneness of Christ's people, we are kept in divided camps because distinctive differences—God's divine order—have been magnified into underlying characteristics—contrary to God's divine order. God teaches by all the physical universe about us, a beautiful unity amid an endless variety. The universe is one. The Church of the living God is chaos, and the Spirit of the Lord must move over the face of this deep disaster and bring order out of confusion, and crown the spiritual forces of the Kingdom with victory.

*Address delivered by President W. A. Harper, Elon College, North Carolina, before the Commission on Christian Union, Seaside Chautauqua, Virginia Beach, Virginia, August 1, 1919. Printed in The Christian Sun by request of the Editor.

Let the subject of Christian union for any two churches be breached and the result is a thousand little voices begin to croak out how the two bodies seeking union differ. You would never settle a difficulty between two brethren in that style. Once upon a time two brethren had a falling out. After some months the preacher got them together to settle it. The reverend brother knew both sides. He first related one side. Then he related the other. Then he asked them to shake hands, but they were enraged at each other and the meeting broke up in a furor. Two days later, they met and without a reference to the past, took each other by the hand, knelt in prayer, and are good friends to this day. You can never get married by telling each other how you differ. You expect some difference, if a marriage is to take place. Else why should there be a marriage at all?

And then in the third place we must avoid all reference to the attempts that have been made at Christian union heretofore and which have failed, or been costly to us. Every good thing costs us something. Men love their wives most who spend most on them. Where your money is there will your heart be also. Lovers have quarrels, but they refuse to discuss them. They make up by focusing attention on other themes. We have in the Protestant Churches made several abortive attempts to mend our differences in the past, and we have failed. We are still rebellious in our attitude toward our Lord's prayer for the oneness of His people. We are like the man and his wife who had quarrelled. He was a high-tempered man, but of loving disposition. His wife was slow to wrath and equally slow to forgive. She always reminded him of his shortcomings when the fit of his passion had subsided. One day she sought advice of her pastor. He listened patiently and counselled heaping hot coals of fire on his head. "It won't work," she replied. "Why, have you tried it?" he inquired. "No, but I have tried hot water many a time," she said. We must try the hot coals method, since to our sorrow hot water will not work. Let us not despair of success. Marvels have been wrought in our day. The American Republic has participated in a World War. A League of Nations has been provided. Men everywhere else are willing to forget the past and to look to the future. Shall the Churches of God not go and do likewise?

One other danger we must avoid—and that is all thought of property rights and of official positions. Churches need property, but only as a means to insure population for the mansions in the sky. Earthly property is a poor thing at best. It is temporal, but riches eternal are ours in the new Jerusalem. Yet property rights and official positions are doing more to prevent Christian union today than any other causes. But one man went away from Jesus sorrowful, and he was a rich young ruler—he had property and held an office. Property and office-holders ever since, when they have met the demand for self-sacrifice in the call to give up all and to follow Christ, have many times gone away sorrowful.

We preach sacrifice for the individual. Why not preach it for the Church as an organization? Why not preach it for our officers? Why not practice it too? And just as the individual who sacrifices most will be most blessed in his Christian life, just so will the Church which gives and sacrifices most, in order that Christian union may come. Brethren, we can do it if we will. I am one who says, we can do it and we will, and I say so because God's Word teaches me it must be done before Christ's program of world evangelization can be accomplished.

The hour of Christian union has struck. I have said it before. I must say it again. The hour of Christian union has struck. The professing Christian who willfully and knowingly opposes its realization is a traitor to the cause of Jesus Christ. I pity him. May God forgive him! The man who ignorantly opposes it needs enlightenment. Pray for him. Instruct him. Guide him aright. But the men and women who have sensed the spirit of the times and who have dedicated themselves to the realization of the Master's prayer in the union of His children—of such is the Kingdom of Heaven. Such are the salt of the earth. Such are the light of the world. May God multiply their kind.

A LITTLE PRAYER

Where'er thou be
On land or sea,
Or in the air,
This little prayer
I pray for thee—
God keep thee ever,
Day and night—
Face to the light—
Thine armor bright—
Thy 'scutcheon white—
That no despite—
Thine honor smite!
With infinite
Sweet oversight,

God keep thee ever,
Heart's delight!
And guard thee whole,
Sweet body, soul,
And spirit high;
That, live or die,
Thou glorify
His Majesty;
And ever be,
Within His sight,
His true and upright,
Sweet and stainless,
Pure and sinless,
Perfect knight!

—John Ozenham.

THE KEY TO SUCCESS

George Stevenson was a man who accomplished very much during his lifetime. The motto which he had adopted and followed is credited with having had much to do with it. This motto was, "Make the best of everything, think the best of everybody, hope the best for yourself." Such a motto means optimism, charity, and ambition—all of those in their highest character and in their smallest manifestation. It is a motto well worth copying.—Exchange.

Beholding Jesus as the Lamb of God gives us sight with which we may ever afterwards see Him in all the perfection of His character, and "seeing Him as He is" is the means by which the Holy Spirit transforms us into His likeness. Such a vision is the privilege of every Christian and the secret of perpetual joy, and victory is translating the vision into daily experience.—A. C. Dixon.

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

A TRIBUTE TO MOTHER*

Who is the most sparkling jewel in the world's wondrous crown? It's mother. She is humanity's gem. It's our mothers who instill into our hearts the best principles of our lives. It was at mother's knee where we used to rest our weary heads and receive the gentle touch of her loving hands and the benedictions of her kisses and prayers, the worldly wise, the wayward, the business ridden and the prodigal, find the love of mother awaken in their hearts. If God is love, we know mother loves most of any earthly creature. She is the holiest thing alive. She will sacrifice most freely. She will deny herself most cheerfully. She will endure most patiently, labor most resolutely and forgive most fully. She does most for less, hopes even against hope. She toils and struggles, when all others have given up in despair. It matters not how disobedient her child may be, or how deep her son may be sunken in drink, or in disease, she does not see it, for she sees only that which is good. No matter how deep in sin her son or daughter may be, or how many times they may trample the loving words of her advice under their feet, mother is still ready to love and claim them as hers. The secret of her love is fortitude and forbearance, patience and tenderness. The depth, sweetness, holiness and beauty of mother love has been recognized and glorified all down the ages. We all know that her words are comforting, her touch tender, and her sympathy helpful. Thank God that no valley is so deep, no burdens too great and no grief too burdensome to cause her to stop to count the cost of her sacrifices.

Mother is the first word on infant's lips; all the perfumes in the world could not add sweetness to that name; all the gems on earth and in ocean could not adequately crown her; all the angels forget-me-nots in heaven could not brighten her being. "The bravest battle ever fought—shall I tell you where and when? On the map of the world you will find it not, it was fought by the mothers of men." The task of painting the lily's petals or brightening the golden sun, or whitening the untrodden mountain snow, would be easy compared with the task of improving the Golden Rule and yet there is one that improves on the Golden Rule every day. Her name is mother. The best woman in the world is your mother and mine. She's founded an empire in the homes and hearts of our great nation. She's the full blown flower of creation. She who clasped our hands in childhood and guided us over life's stormy way; always giving us good counsel, advice and cheer. She gently smooths the pillow of death; she is the greatest of God's pearls and her love is eternal. A mother's love—it's meaning who can measure? Or who such depths of hallowed mystery sound? Outside the heart of God so rich a treasure, has never yet been found. A mother's face all radiant and resplendent, where memory guards the shrine with watchful care, what master hand o'er wrought with touch transcendent, a thing so wondrous fair. A mother's kiss—oh, it's impress lingers, through all the changes that o'er one's soul may creep; it thrills me now as these poor trembling fingers, the chords of memory sweep. We have reached the point in our civilization where motherhood is enshrined in the hearts of the human race, as in no other sentiment. We have arrived at a destiny which reveals to us the divinity of mother. We have come to appreciate so far as the finite mind can appreciate the blessed sacrifices which she makes, the patience which is hers, the saintliness which she possesses.

The best that is in us we owe it to her. Our dads may have been all right; in fact, as we go most of them were, but they did not cuddle us or soothe our businesses, or pillow our weary little heads on loving hearts to sob away our griefs of the day, or make us forget the fears of the stormy nights.

Poets have sung of it, painters and sculptors have sought unceasingly to transfix its inspiring spirit upon canvass or in wondrous carvings of stone; religion has tried by aid of it to build a ladder to the stars, and yet the divinity of it surpasses our power to express and almost our capacity to understand. What transforms in a few fleeting years the shy and gawky girl of the early teens into that marble of patience, devotion, sympathetic understanding and surpassing courage which unfolds with maternity? Isn't it God once more sending His Spirit to abide among the sons of men? If we are fortunate to have mother with us, let us tell her we love her and in some manner express our appreciation of her. Maybe her mile stones are numbered, the battles almost over, the goals almost reached, her journey nigh ended. She is now bending low, her face is pinched, her forehead is wrinkled, and her head is snowy white,—but her gentle, loving voice and her pleasant smiles are the same today as yesterday. If we are away, let us write her a letter of tender remembrance; though we are grown, we are always little children to her. But alas, if mother is gone, let us meditate upon her teachings. Maybe she has placed some of her curly-headed jewels in God's care to blossom and bloom in the spring time of eternity. Though she be sleeping some where beneath the cold clouds and the mossy tomb. We know that we shall see mother again, for we feel that Jesus and the holy angels would not bar the pearly gates of heaven against so precious a jewel. Though her dear form be lying beneath the daisies, we know that spirit is one of God's most beautiful angels. God grant that her going was as the rod, softly fading through lesser lights of beauty into night universal, or as the morning star swallowed up into white floods of light, or as the dew upon the grass kissed by the morning sun, or as the perfume of flowers wafted from the vase, or the sound of the harp moving and perishing among listening souls.

Her pale withered hands that more than four score years have wrought for others, soothed the hurt of tears, dropped balm of love in many an aching heart, now lies stirlless folded like wane rose leaves pressed; above the snow and silence of her breast, in mute appeal they toil of labor done, and well earned rest that came at set of sun.

What is that wonderful, soul-inspiring, joy-compelling, love abiding sacred place of love and sweetness which is a child's refuge, a maiden's dream, and a man's inspiration? It's home,—but what is home without mother?

Mrs. J. W. Whit—May THE SUN shine forever. I could not get along without it in my home.

FOLLOW THE LEAD OF THE DOUGHBOY!

Wanted: An orphan. Must be a little girl about eight years old with red hair.

"Does that order suit you fellows? Do you consider it specific enough?" asked a doughboy who hailed from Kansas—and, according to the legendary idea concerning Kansas men, he was over six feet tall, had auburn hair, freckles, and smiling eyes.

"Exactly right, I can fairly picture her now—a dainty little French maiden with quaint clothes and a seriously droll expression, but when she smiles—she is the light of the earth!"

"Some poet you are getting to be, Pard."

The four companions of the Westerner assented to his order. It was during the big Orphan Drive in France during the fall of 1918, when soldiers individually and collectively became foster parents of many of the children there. This particular group of five men, belonging to one of our famous divisions, had pooled their contributions for the highly pleasing purpose of sharing an orphan between them.

The order was sent at once to the "Stars and Stripes," the official newspaper for the men of the A. E. F. in France, which in turn gave over all the funds to the A. R. C. for disbursement. This task involved finding orphans to fill orders, and finding orders to fit orphans.

Now the five men are home again, and though widely separated by distance they find their common interest, little Renee Marquard, keeps them in close touch with each other. They have a treasurer and secretary, to whom letters are sent monthly by the A. R. C. concerning Renee's health, her progress at school, and the conditions prevailing in her home. They each possess her picture, and one of them even painted his copy in order to make the red hair more realistic. Best of all are the letters from Renee herself, which are laboriously written and are eagerly answered by every one of her five god-fathers. For Renee, of course, lives in France with her mother, and her small brother. She is learning to speak English, so she proudly reports.

Orphans are in great demand these days. To be up to the minute you must own one. And now the Juniors of the A. R. C. have absorbed this idea so thoroughly that they are adopting orphans by the orphanageful, from Palestine to Antwerp and from Le Havre to the Balkans.

THE SACRIFICE

"She died that we might live," is the epitaph of a little Russian girl, Feodora Hurtat, who saved her younger sister and brother, but in so doing sacrificed her own life. Down through the ages, the supreme sacrifice is repeated again and again. It is, however, for the child heroes and heroines that the heart beats in its greatest sympathy.

A little dark-haired girl with black eyes serious from premature cares, yet retaining their natural fun-loving look, was taking a walk with her brother and sister in town. She became so interested in gathering the pretty flowers along the way that she forgot that danger lurked for the small kiddies strolling on the track. Suddenly looking up, she saw the train approaching; it was nearly upon them. With lightning speed, she raced to save them. She reached them in time and hurled them off the tracks, but could not get away herself from in front of the onrushing train, and was dragged beneath the wheels of the engine. When she was lifted from the track, terribly injured, she was still living, but quite unconscious. The Red Cross ambulance at Vladivostok was rushed to the scene of the disaster, and the little heroine was carried to a white bed in the American Red Cross hospital.

Everyone at the hospital was interested in her case. A special nurse looked after her day and night; her mother was with her constantly; doctors, nurses, orderlies were eager to see her open her eyes and live again. Everything humanly possible was done in her behalf but to no avail. For five days she lay thus, and then slept the eternal sleep.

This book is printed on fine book paper and includes 16 pages of illustrations on plate paper. There are nearly 400 pages, in 31 chapters. The binding is made of fine cloth embossed in gold. Size 5x7 inches.

The price is only $1.50 a copy post-paid

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR
AUGUST 24, 1919

Social Responsibility. Luke 10:25-27; Gal. 6:2, 9, 10; James 2:14-16.

Golden Text: "As we have opportunity, let us work that which is good toward all men." Gal. 6:10.

(For Teaching Points, see Teachers and Officers Journal)

This lawyer was trying to tempt Jesus by asking an answer to an impossible question. There is nothing one can do to inherit for that is a matter of birth. So Jesus said, "Ye must be born again." P. Whitwell Wilson, the author of "The Christ We Forget" has written a little book called "Two Ancient Red Cross Tales." I am sure you will enjoy reading the version there given of this old, ever new story of the Good Samaritan. What is the social duty of the Christian today? What, if any, duty does he owe to his community? Do you think, as you men folks cast your votes of your responsibility before God for those votes? "Oh," you say, "we must not mix politics and religion," but I say to you that if "the powers that be are ordained of God," they are mixed, and the trouble has come because you have tried to separate them. This is not a mixing of Church and State, but it is a putting of your religion into your politics. What about the social life of your town? "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do." Have you tried to be as clever for God as Satan's agents are for him in finding some good thing for the idle times? Any one with a pair of heels and an instrument to make music can dance. It requires neither brains nor ability. Yet in many communities that is absolutely the only form of amusement open to the young life. If we really believe that God made them, we must believe He implanted in them their love of fun, their desire for a good time. Shall we sit supinely by, and allow Satan to turn their good times into bad times? Shall we not be as wise in our generation? Who, then, is my neighbor? He who needs my help of any kind whatsoever.

MRS. FRED BULLOCK.

WE GO FORWARD

The Sunday schools of one of our great Conventions have decided in annual session assembled, and unanimously, to "go forward." Look: Resolved, "That the Sunday schools of this Convention set as their goal the coming year $1,500.00, one-half for Home, one-half for Foreign Missions, and that to raise this amount every school in the Convention give one offering a month." So voted the North Carolina State Christian Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention in annual session at Shallow Well church, July 15-17. Will they do it? Well, just watch them put it over.

Already one school—Durham—is sending in $10.00 a month. If twelve other schools of the Convention were to do as well the goal would be reached, and more. And we have other schools as able and as liberal as Durham. Several other live schools of the Convention have already voted to give one offering a month to missions—Reidsville, Lebanon (Semora), Pleasant Grove and Ingram, Va., Graham, New Providence, Haw River, Catawba Springs, Wentworth, New Elam, Chapel Hill, and maybe others of this Convention, have already voted and the number increases constantly.

We believe that every school in the Convention will ultimately come in, and the funds will grow, as will interest in the one thing for which every school and church exists, namely, missions. If a Sunday school is not to have a part in world-wide evangelization, have a hand in helping reach this world for Christ, why should the school exist at all?

And then the Convention did another great and good thing for itself. It decided that it must have a Sunday school missionary in the field, planting and organizing Sunday schools where there are not any and where there should be both schools and churches. In short the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention has decided to grow—to start something, to "carry on."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR
AUGUST 24, 1919

The Folly of Pride. Prov. 16:1-19.

A poor man watched the funeral of a millionaire. He saw the casket carried out, and then turning to a bystander said, "Well, yesterday, I didn't have a dollar and that man had a million. Today he has not a cent, and I have a dollar." You own nothing that can be taken away from you. You say you own an automobile, but a collision occurs, and all you have is a scrap pile. You own a house, but there is a fire, and all you have is a pile of ashes. You own your land, but who owned it a few years ago and who will own it by and by when you are gone? How foolish then, the pride which rejoices in vanishing possessions. Some have pride in heir learning, but this simply shows how much that one has yet to learn. The one who is really knows enough to see how much is still unknown. "My soul shall make her boast in the Lord." That is the only true pride. All other is the kind that goeth before destruction."

912 NEW CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETIES ORGANIZED IN SOUTH

"In spite of the war, the Kaiser, the Flu and the sleeping sickness we have organized 912 new Christian Endeavor Societies in the South during the last two years," said Karl Lehmann of Chattanooga, Tenn., Southern States Secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor in his report at the International Christian Endeavor Conference in Buffalo, N. Y., August 5-10.

Secretary Lehmann told of the great gains made in Christian Endeavor in the Southern States with the addition of 75,000 new members to the ranks of the organization in the past two years. Four employed Field Workers have been constantly traveling and at work under the direction of the Endeavorers in the South. Karl Lehmann of Chattanooga, Tenn., is the executive in charge of the work and edits the monthly paper, The Dixie Endeavorer, Charles F. Evans of Lexington, Ky., as Field Secretary has brought great blessing and inspiration to the young people of the churches of the South. W. Roy Breg of Dallas, Texas, has been serving as General Secretary of the Texas Union and has just been put in charge of the new Southwestern Christian Endeavor Federation to direct the work in Texas, Oklahoma, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona, and Chien Tsai of Shanghai, China, a native Secretary in China whose salary and expenses are paid by the Christian Endeavorers of the South.

An additional Field Worker will be added to the forces in the South in September.

MARRIAGES

MORGAN-BELL

One of the prettiest weddings of the season was solemnized Thursday afternoon, July 31, 1919, at the First Christian church, Berkeley, Norfolk, Va., when Miss Lula Wilmath Bell became the bride of Rev. Joseph Frank Morgan. The bride is the beautiful and accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. K. R. Bell of Berkeley, and a loyal member of the First Christian church. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph P. Morgan of Spies, N. C. He is a loyal minister of the Christian Church, and enjoys the esteem of the Brotherhood. He is the popular pastor of the First Christian church, Berkeley, where he is loved by all the members.

The church was decorated with ferns and cut flowers. Just before the ceremony Mrs. Edward T. Jones sang, "O Promise Me," accompanied by Mrs. W. J. Spence, who also rendered the wedding march from Lohengrin.

The ushers were Mr. Silas Morgan, brother of the bridegroom, and Mr. W. J. Lewis. The ring bearer was little Miss Katherine Morgan. The bride entered with her sister, Miss Sarah Bell, who was maid of honor. She was dressed in white organdie, and carried pink killarney roses. The bride was attired in a blue traveling suit, with hat and gloves to match, and carried an arm bouquet of brides' roses. The bridegroom entered with his best man, Rev. J. V. Knight, pastor of the First Christian church, Greensboro, N. C., and met the bride at the altar. The ceremony was performed by the writer, in the presence of an audience that filled the church, using the beautiful ring ceremony. Immediately after the ceremony, the happy couple left by boat for Washington, D. C., New York, Niagara Falls, and other points North, on an extended bridal tour. After August 15 Rev. and Mrs. Morgan will be at home to friends at 15 Hough Ave., Berkeley, Va.

The bride was the reception of many beautiful and useful presents. May happiness and prosperity be theirs through life.

NOTES

Congress has taken up the matter of the high cost of living and relief is being sought through the various government agencies.

Miss Hester Stuart, the efficient bookkeeper and assistant in THE CHRISTIAN SUN office, is spending this week in Randolph County. Readers of THE SUN reap many benefits from the labors of those whose names never appear in the paper.

Rev. J. E. McCauley writes: "My meeting at Ebenezer closed August 1. Six professions made and several reconsecrations. Rev. B. J. Howard did the preaching and Brother J. H. Moring conducted the singing. Both did splendid work. The church is much revived."

The governor of North Carolina, T. W. Bickett, paid Burlington a visit the other day. He exceeded the speed limit and was halted by the traffic police and cited to the mayor's court. The officer informed him that the city traffic laws had no reservation for governors.

Recently we stated that Rev. J. E. Franks had been elected Sunday School Secretary of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina Conference. A member of the Convention informs us that Brother Franks is to give one-half of his time as Sunday School Missionary. We are glad to make the correction. After all our work is first missionary.

The railroad shopmen over the country struck last week for an increase in pay. They put it up to the administration that their action is due to the high cost of living and that they want the cost of necessities of life reduced. At this writing many of the shopmen have returned to work. President Wilson advised them through Director Hines that nothing could be done until they returned to their jobs. The matter will soon be settled, it is thought.

Mrs. Mary Bradley, a member of Mt. Zion church, is a cheerful cripple. She is one of the fifteen whom we remember with our Exchanges after reading them. We visited her last Sunday and enjoyed a few moments in her home. She is a loyal and faithful reader of THE SUN. She said that she had imagined for a long time that the Editor was a middle aged man with black mustache and was surprised to see a "boy."

Dr. D. A. Long gives us this information in a personal letter dated at Liberty, N. C., July 30: "While at Salem Chapel the third Sunday I was cared for by Brother Will Strader on Saturday and by Brother J. G. Fynt on Sunday. While at Winston-Salem I called to see Dr. W. T. Herndon. Although feeble, he was able to sit up and converse about old times. . . . Brothers Hatch and Trogden are some better, though too feeble to look after their usual work. Two services here last Sunday; good prayer meeting Wednesday night. . . . I expect to preach at Pleasant Hill once next Saturday and twice on Sunday."

For lack of space, many notes had to be left out this week. They will appear later.

"'Why, no,'" said I. 'Why, no; I see no objection if the undertaker doesn't.'"—

Those Wonderful French

A Chicago boy, who had the good fortune to return in good shape from his thrilling experience with the marines at Chateau Thierry, was prevailed upon by some girl friends to relate his experiences there.

Quite differently he recounted what he remembered of the fighting at the point where he was stationed. "We were having a terrible time," he said, until the French brought up their 75's."

Whereupon one of the girls exclaimed: "I think it is so splendid for men of that age to be fighting, don't you?"—Cartoons Magazine.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

WILL THE CHANGE BE?

Hon. P. P. Claxton, United States Commissioner of Education, has pointed out to college and university presidents the great possibility that this country has in making it take Germany's place in the realm of education. Our people have gone to Europe for advanced study. German universities have been great centers of educational work. But Germany's theory of education has proven futile. Will America become the educational country, and will the day come when the scholars of Europe will come to us for study? The answer is with us.

BEATING THEM TO IT

General Julian S. Carr, and his son, J. S. Carr, Jr., Durham, N. C., are working out a plan of democratic control over the eleven hosiery mills in which they have controlling stock. The plan is to be modeled after the Federal Government—the employees to constitute the house of representatives, the managers the senate, and the owners the cabinet. The experiment is unique and will be watched and studied with interest. This is beating the strikers to it.

WHERE THE POPULACE AGREE

Some of us are Democrats and some of us are Republicans—and perhaps some of us are of some other political faith. We differ in name and disagree on certain principles. We are not so far apart—just enough to keep each other careful while in power—that's all. But while we differ on points, we are all agreed upon one thing: That our law-making bodies lose too much time while the people suffer. The people want relief and they should have it. The cost of living is outrageous. Some one is profiteering and the people want Congress to find the man. That is what the people want most just now.

LEVELING DOWN OR LEVELING UP

Talking about leveling things, it is better to level up than it is to level down. Education levels up, and that is the reason that the "privileged class" is no longer found. The people are becoming an educated people, and education is leveling them up. When the people are leveled down, a few are able to stand above the others, but when all are leveled up, the difference is not so great. Go to school this fall, young man, young woman, and help to level your generation up. Education levels up; ignorance levels down.

HIS EARNESTNESS

"He is not such a great preacher," said a man the other day in speaking of his pastor, "but he is earnest," he continued. So this member puts earnestness before greatness. A good estimation, for we cannot become great unless we are earnest in our task. Sincerity is the key that unlocks the hidden treasure to those who desire to be masters of their work. We must mean well and put forth the right endeavor to win others and win our way. In all things be true. "Truth crushed to earth shall rise again—the eternal years of God are hers."

BANKRUPT CHRISTIANS

A man never becomes bankrupt until his assets become less than his liabilities. A Christian may also become bankrupt in his life by allowing the assets of his Christian life to get too low. He ceases to draw from the fountain of life and the liabilities soon overcome the assets. The Christian life is too free and plentiful for any man to perish his soul and place it upon the bankrupt market.

A LITTLE REASONING

There are a few (very few) readers of THE SUN who do not fully comprehend the situation between the columns of THE SUN and the work of the Church. They expect as much publicity, as much space, as was given five or ten years ago. That long ago we had the same number of pages that we have now. But the Church has grown, more departments have been created, more work undertaken and more work being done. When a business develops it would seem that its publicity should become larger—and it should. But unless the publicity medium becomes larger, such cannot be. On the other hand, it must be less for the amount of space must be divided by a larger number.

PROFITS

Profits is the bone of contention and discussion now in connection with the high cost of living. Congress is endeavoring to regulate profits, and it seems that such a step is about the only way to handle the situation. There are many who have stopped figuring on what is a fair profit, but how much they can get for the article, or how much the customer will stand. If we can get the profiteers—the ones who are able to corner and hold the products—there is much hope in reducing the cost of living. It is a matter in which all of us are concerned.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND CEMETERIES

There are many Sunday schools that are not far from the cemetery. In fact the question with us is: How they have kept out of the burying place these many years? These schools to which we refer are stale, static and stupid. They open the same way they did after the war—the war of '62 to '65 and close—well, some of them don't close; they just quit and go home, announcing that there will be "school next Sunday morning at 10 o'clock." Our problem in the Sunday school work is to make the indifferent school different. What are you going to do with yours?

THIS WEEK AND NEXT

This week and next many decisions will be made by young people about going to college. Numbers of young men and women have already made up their minds as to where they will go and made arrangements therefor. Many have not. Some during these weeks will take the step not to go and such will be a fatal blunder to their life's career. Living is high and many may not feel that they can attend college, but we cannot afford to measure a college training by the yard stick of dollars and cents. Go to college, go this fall—and go to your own college—Elou.

METHODS versus ENTHUSIASM

We believe in enthusiasm, but we believe more in methods. We have heard many great and stirring addresses that set our hearts to a desire to act, but when we went to act we were without a plan and a method. Such is very true in many Sunday school addresses we hear nowadays. They entuse us to do, but fail to show us how to do. What the religious activities of the Church need is plans—practical plans—and demonstrations. It is unfair and unbusiness-like to stir a man to do a thing, and not tell him how to do it. In one case he may be able to do it, but in another he may not be able. An idea ought to be backed up by a plan, and a program. It is not enough to just to speak—we need to outline something in the speech.

FIFTEEN MILLION DOLLARS

The State of North Carolina estimates that it loses fifteen million dollars annually because of the unsanitary habits of the people. The Board points out that if modes of living, and means of sanitation could be brought up to a certain standard that the State's saving each year would amount to this enormous amount of money. There is said to be about four thousand deaths each year in the State, due directly to preventable diseases. From the same source of sickness there is estimated to be thirty-five thousand cases of sickness, the total cost of which, together with the deaths caused by this sickness, cost the State of North Carolina fifteen million dollars. The Church is the one great educational factor in each community and ought to unite with the State Board of Health in preventing this waste of manhood and wealth.

FIFTY THOUSAND NEW C. E. MEMBERS IN DIXIE

Fifty thousand new members to be added to the Christian Endeavor societies of the South this fall is the aim of a great membership increase campaign to be conducted in October for which plans were announced from the Southern Christian Endeavor Headquarters in Chattanooga this week.

Christian Endeavor has made some great advances during the past four years in the South and the leaders are confident that this goal will be passed also.

The Christian Endeavor movement now has 4,000,000 members in 80,000 societies found in churches of 87 different denominations and in every country of the world. The Methodists lead throughout the world, though in this country many of their churches have a denominational society known as the Epworth League.

ANDREW CARNEGIE

Andrew Carnegie, the great steel magnate, passed away at his summer home at Lenox, Mass., Monday morning, August 11. Carnegie had passed his eightieth mile post. He was a great and good man. He came to America when a mere boy, and began his first work in the railroad industry as a telegraph operator. He applied himself well and had a great genius for mechanical inventions. He accumulated a fortune of many millions of dollars. In his late years he used most of this in establishing libraries, endowing colleges and doing general benevolent work. He was a great idealist and was a great advocate of the idea of universal brotherhood among men. He was not a great business man, but a good writer and enriched the world's literature by his pen. His life was simple and his habits few. He was not buried amid pomp and splendor, but in the same simple way in which he had lived. Carnegie had the idea that riches did not constitute greatness, but that he was a steward of his wealth, and proved that stewardship in later years by Christian use of his money.

EDUCATING OUR OWN PEOPLE

It takes leadership to build a denomination and keep it going and growing. Our first effort ought to be to get our own people to attend our own colleges. Elou, the college of our Southern work, ought to be filled to its capacity each year with young men and women of the Christian Church. However, because no larger per cent of our people graduate from Elou is not the fault of the College but of the people. Our people are first in attendance and have the largest per cent of graduates, but the point we make it that it could be made larger and in so doing would be to the interest of Church and its growth.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

WINCHESTER LETTER

We have come to the close of another conference year. We have had a good year from the standpoint of finances, but not a large increase in membership. Eight members have been received during the year and all church organizations are actively at work. The salary and conference apportionments have been paid in full and $1,679.50 raised on the church debt. We shall have regular service next year and we are laying our plans for a larger and more aggressive work.

The writer has tried to serve the churches at New Hope, Timber Mountain and Beulah during the year. We have had very little time for these churches and but little progress has been made. They will all meet all financial obligations and New Hope has installed a new lighting plant. We received two members at Beulah at our last appointment.

It was our privilege to spend ten days with Brother W. C. Hook in a meeting at Mt. Olivet, Greene County. It was a pleasure to be with those good people and the Lord richly blessed us in the service. Brother Hook is held in the highest esteem both by the church and the community. I spent one day very pleasant with Rev. Killis Roach at the High Point church. They are planning for new churches at both these points during the year.

The following is a list of contributions to the Winchester church:

Previously reported, $11,455.05; W. A. Crawford, $5.00; Rev. G. D. Eastes, $25.00; Rev. J. O. Atkinson, $10.00; Ever Ready Society, $42.77; Rev. W. C. Hook, $19.00; W. A. Larrick, $2.00; Col. Robert F. Leedy, $3.00; Ladies Aid Society, $100.00; C. H. Barr, $5.00; I. A. Loyd, $5.00; Alva C. Richards, $110.00; Mrs. Alva C. Richards, $100.00; W. F. Reherd, $10.00; Women's H. and P. Board, Val. Conf., $148.25; A. D. Larrick, $5.00; M. S. Loy, $5.00; Rev. L. F. Johnson, $1.00; C. J. Sibert, $5.00; F. L. Oates, $25.00; Mrs. W. A. McCurdy, $5.00; E. W. Cather, $100.00; Mrs. W. T. Walters, $3.00; A. B. Richards, $100.00; Total, $12,289.07.

We are thankful for this good report.

FROM A CHAPLAIN ON THE GO:

There is an old saying that is true: "You can't always, sometime tell."

Why should we worry? After a whole Sunday in the town of Franklinton, N. C., anyone would forget the worry.

By invitation I spoke to a full house at the M. E. church in Franklinton, N. C., on August 3, at 11:15 A. M., and also at 8:15 P. M. I was privileged to be in the home of Brother Geo. T. Whitaker, also the homes of Brother Allen and Brother Utley. It was good to meet Pastor G. J. Green and his family, where we broke bread and renewed an acquaintance of fourteen years of absolute separation.

Brother Green will teach school the coming year, which leaves a splendid field for someone who is willing to be a pastor and a preacher. If you are interested, write Brother Geo. T. Whitaker, Burlington, N. C.

Franklinton is a coming town. Will the church keep up? Good water, lights, streets and lovely homes. Splendid people live there and the town is backed by a good farming section.

Here I am wandering from the subject. Go back to the first of this letter. I am at Camp Lee, Base Hospital, Petersburg, Va. I came here Monday afternoon, August 4. When I left Elon College, I assured my family and friends that I would return about August 6 or 7. I hope to be back about August 13 or 14. Uncle Sam has a way of looking a fellow over before he says: "Go, my son and live ever happy."

I suffered just a little from the "Flu" but kept "mum" (as good soldiers should do).

The tonsils are now out. I feel sure my big uncle will soon turn me loose. It is a hot sight here. Living on milk is no fun.

FROM THE HOSPITAL WARD

I am thinking not only of my family at dear old Elon; not only of that old mother of mine in her little village home in the valley of old Virginia—that mother of mine waiting for her boy to return and tell her of the second war she has passed through; not only of my many friends in Virginia and North Carolina, but I am also thinking of the world about me. I have met the boys from every clime. Here before me in a little book are their names and addresses. The Indian Captain from out West; the French Canadian lad and all the rest, for we were pals. I am thinking of the Jap, of the boy from the Phillipines, from Porto Rico and Cuba. I am thinking of the English Tommy; of the Scotch and many others.

If I could get in an airship and visit a dozen countries in Europe there I would find a glad hand and hear the welcome: "Hello Padre." "Ah! there Chaplain! Come right in, not as you were but as you like." There are my friends indeed. They are numbered by the thousands and are in far away France. They paid the price, their hands are motionless and their tongues forever silent; yet louder than all the tongues on earth they speak to me and to you. Their offering calls to me to help garner the harvest from the soil enriched by their royal red blood. Oh: I know, for I held their hands in that last moment. I wrote that last letter to the dear ones at home. Some of these letters went around the world. Today these hands I cannot touch, because they were given to the world, and today lie beneath the wooden crosses in "Sunny France" where I was privileged to place the stars and stripes upon their caskets, flowers on their little graves and to place a cross to mark the head of their resting place. I was privileged to give them a Christian burial. Today as I look back it seems like an awful dream, yet my soul is flooded by some mighty tidal wave, some holy desire and some unexplainable inspiration calling me to a greater service. Not in doing the big things, but in doing the little things.

I am trying to think in constructive terms. The challenge of my friends, living and dead, is a call to me; and is some how pleading for an awakening in my own heart. Through the long nights and by the electric light and the candle, I have been thinking of these boys. I have been thinking of the little bundled cot, the Bible in my hand and how we turned to sacred pages from the first Chapter of Genesis through Jeremiah. I am trying to catch the great idea of a constructive program. For two months now I have been a globe trotter. I am trying to pull my own self together. The Holy Christ tells me of the constructive man. The man who built a house upon the rock, where the winds and the storm were defeated in their vandal effort. But there is the beckoning hand of destruction. A man built a house upon the sand, the waves came and the house fell. The Master also spoke of another constructive element—good fruit and evil fruit. What shall our program be? Shall it be constructive or destructive?

There are two classes in the world. One looks into the pit, and the other gazes into the sky. In the quiet of this holy and beautiful Sabbath day on which I write, there comes that call to me: "Look unto the hills from whence cometh my strength." The call of this day and generation is great.

Sure there must come something to us out of the great noise of the battle—empires have fallen and the cry of the unrest is heard. To one it is the sound of thunder; while to another it is a voice from Heaven.

What is our view point of life? Where do we receive help and strength? What are our plans?

We have the privilege of drawing from that fountain which never runs dry. Why feed from crumbs under feet that are unholy, when we can draw from the fountain in our Father's house?

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

ADVOCATES A TEACHERAGE

(An article written for The Burlington News by C. B. Riddle).

I notice in The Burlington News of August 6 that a committee has been appointed to look after homes for the teachers who are to teach in the city schools. This brings to mind several things that are of interest and vital concern.

A few years ago there was bidding for the teachers in any community. Many homes counted themselves fortunate to secure for board the teachers in the community school. This was true in city as well as in rural localities.

Why has such a change come? Changes in the mode of living have come. The automobile is now ready for the members of the family to take a ride after supper and we no longer care to have boarders in our home to hinder us from going at our leisure. Possibly this reason alone counts to a large extent for the reason that teachers find it more difficult to secure boarding places than they once did. The servant problem is another factor, and it would also be unfair to the question not to mention the unsettled conditions of the markets. Today we may accept a boarder at one price basing that price upon the market of today, and tomorrow you have lost. You also know that the teacher's salary remains the same, and it would be your embarrassment as well as hers to constantly increase the amount of her board account.

I believe that the board problem of the school teachers of the country will continue to be a difficult one and become more acute. I have pointed out the problem, now for the solution.

The progressive churches in every city have parsonages and manses for their pastors. These are the property of the churches and the churches could not without them. Following this idea, why not have a teacherage? By this I mean a building owned by the city and used for the purpose of the teachers of the city schools. This home or building would be occupied by the superintendent and his family, and part of his consideration for his services would be the use of this building for his domicile. The building could have ample rooms for the teachers of the school and also provision for the lady members to do light-house keeping, in case they prefer to do. Or the idea could be carried a step further and the school system of the city provide a manager and servants and board the entire teaching corps, letting this consideration become a part of their fixed salary.

We seek the best teachers and are not content without them, but it is unfair to demand the best equipment and not give them the best in comfort and entertainment. We demand of them the best service and yet we ought not to do this unless we are willing that they demand of us a suitable place to live without canvassing the entire city for a place to board while they are engaged in the most important work of the land.

I wonder if some man, or group of men, would not be interested in fathering such a move in behalf of the school system of our progressive city? I send this message forth for consideration because of my interest in education.

EDUCATION FROM DIFFERENT VIEWPOINTS

Does Education Pay?

The title of a little pamphlet issued by the Department of Education of Tennessee, is "Does It Pay?" which proves by statistics that education is a paying investment, even from the standpoint of dollars and cents.

After comparing the nations of the world and showing that education determines the wealth and power of peoples, figures are cited to prove that in the countries having the best educational systems the per capita production of the population is much higher than in those with poor school facilities.

For instance, the annual earning capacity per inhabitant of England, France and Germany, where the educational systems are efficient, is $180, $155 and $125 respectively, while in Sain, Greece and Russia, nations with "inadequate educational systems," it is only $80, $65 and $50 respectively.

The author of the pamphlet then draws the comparison between states of the United States, showing how it pays the state to educate, and cites statistics to prove that the earning capacity per inhabitant is large in proportion to the amount the state spends for education.

As an example, in comparison between Massachusetts and South Carolina the returns upon investment in education are brought out in a convincing manner. Massachusetts gives her citizens 7.4 years schooling and spent last year $26 per pupil or a total of $16,013,000. South Carolina gives 3.18 years schooling and spent last year $1,678,000 on education, or $6.95 per pupil.

The Massachusetts citizen produced $466 per year, while the South Carolina citizen produced only $171 per year.

The statistics on the per capita production in Texas are not available, but the per capita production of this state is doubtless below that of the states spending more for education than does Texas. This state is at the head of the list among Southern states, in amount spent per capita of total population for education, but it is far below some of the Northern states. Massachusetts, for instance, spent $7.35 per capita in 1916, while Texas spent only $4.76. Mississippi with its large negro population, spent only $1.48 per capita.

It is time that there be a general recognition of the fact that the money put into schools is not charity, nor yet simply for broadening the culture of the citizen, however desirable that may be, but that it is a business proposition for the citizen and the state. The money put into education represents an investment that pays big dividends in money. The returns in other ways can not be estimated.—Houston (Texas) Post.

Are You Educated?

A professor of the University of Chicago has evolved a series of test questions for the educated which he avows, are the best evidences of a real education. If you can answer yes to all the questions you are truly educated the professor says. Here are the questions:

Has education given you any sympathy with all the good causes and made you espouse them?

Has it made you public-spirited?

Has it made you a brother to the weak?

Have you learned how to make friends and keep them?

Do you know what it is to be a friend yourself?

Can you look an honest man or a pure woman in the eye?

Do you see anything to love in a little child?

Will a lonely dog follow you in the street?

Can you be high-minded and happy in the drudgeries of life?

Do you think that washing dishes and hoeing corn is just as compatible with high thinking as playing piano or golf?

Are you good for anything yourself?

Can you be happy alone?

Can you look out on the world and see anything but dollars and cents?

Can you look into a mud puddle by the wayside and see a clear sky?

Can you see anything in the puddle but mud?—The Christian News Letter.

What About The Church Colleges?

The Disciples of Christ have recently completed their Men and Millions campaign for millions with which to finance enlarged work at home and abroad. But money will not save this world. We must match our dollars with men and women—Christian men and women of great faith, trained minds, and broad vision, else will our program fail at the most crucial point. The church is calling for one thousand trained workers. What is the source of supply for these workers? It must be our own church school.

One of our great educators recently said: "The success of the Church of Christ itself is dependent upon the Christian college." That is a challenging statement and worthy of serious thought. We believe that to a very large degree it is true. A large majority of our ministers and nearly all of our missionaries have come from our own colleges. State institutions and other colleges are not giving to the Disciples of Christ any number of workers. In its history, Hiram College has sent forth 1,000 ministers of the gospel to serve our churches and nearly 100 missionaries to carry the gospel message to the ends of the earth. Without the support of our churches the colleges will fail.—Christian, Springfield, Ohio.

THIS THING OF GIVING

How few people understand it. The writer knows no more about it than do others. But there is something about giving that benefits us. No one can give, even a cup of cold water, without feeling the benefit of it. We can never give to the point of exhaustion. Those who give most, have most left. No man has ever died of giving away too much. He who gives bread to another never goes hungry himself.

What a spendthrift the American nation has been during the World War! We have been lavishing billions of money in charity, and many billions more for war supplies, and yet we are the richer for it. Of all the people in the world we are in a position to feed the hungry and clothe the naked of the world. We are able to do abundantly above all that a needy world may demand of us.

And is there any reward in this thing of giving? Yes, no one can do a favor to another without receiving a blessing. You give a dollar, and you will get back another, if not in kind at least in richer value. There is no richer privilege than the art of giving.

"Giving—and in the giving live the life a human being is entitled to enjoy. Give—and let no thought of sorrow abide with you, because you did not give. Give—and somewhere, from out the clouds, or from the sacred depths of human hearts, a melody divine will rich your ears, and gladden all your days upon the earth."—The Outlook of Missions.

OBITUARY OF JOHN BARLEYCORN

(By E. F. Leake, in The Christian-Evangelist)

The deceased, Mr. John Barleycorn, was born in the City of Appetite, in the County of Lust and in the State of Degradation. He came to America with the forefathers and did a very profitable business for himself in all the colonies. He has been at one time or another the lawful resident of every state and practically every city and hamlet of the nation.

The subject of this sketch was in many respects the most remarkable man of his age; remarkable in his views, in his attitudes and in his character. The things which decent people naturally love and reverence, these he hated and sought with all his tremendous power to destroy.

He was always to be counted upon to exert his great influence to the utmost against all honest and decent government, though it is due the departed to say that he always claimed to be a patriot and particularly devoted to "personal liberty." His Fourth of July speeches were always upon this favorite theme of "personal liberty." However it should be said that Mr. Barleycorn carried the idea a great deal further than other people. With him it meant the right to do anything he saw fit which might contribute to the success of his own business. It is but just to the departed to say that in respect to this view he always practiced what he preached. With terrible consistency he degraded womanhood; deprived childhood of even the right to be decently born; he robbed the poor without mercy, in numberless instances depriving them of all the ordinary comforts of life; he corrupted courts and legislatures and often made the politics of our cities and states a stench in the nostrils of all decency; filled almshouses, asylums, orphanages and penitentiaries to overflowing. Numberless other mentionable and unmentionable crimes did he commit because they contributed tremendously to his wealth.

In all this, Mr. Barleycorn simply followed out to their logical conclusions his life-long conceptions of "personal liberty," his notion being that in this "land of the free and home of the brave" "personal liberty" under the Stars and Stripes is identical with unbridled license to seek in any and all ways the prosperity of one's own business and the enhancement of one's own wealth. Mr. Barleycorn, because of the unparalleled patience and long-suffering of the American people was permitted to accumulate incalculable wealth. He is reported to have enjoyed an annual income, during the last decade, of something like two billions of dollars. This vast income was no doubt due in part to the fact that Mr. Barleycorn never relinquished any of his money for the support of any of the benevolences and philanthropies of the day as Mr. Rockefeller, Mr. Carnegie and other of our very rich men have done. The license money which he gave, no matter how it was used, whether for school-fund, road-fund or otherwise, was always charged to "operating expenses," and Mr. Barleycorn himself never thought of the matter in any other way, though some of his friends always insisted it was pure benevolence on the part of their rich and powerful friend.

The departed enjoyed a large and more or less intimate acquaintance with many men of eminence throughout the world. Many famous men, in practically all lines of human endeavor, have pathetically acknowledged Mr. Barleycorn's superiority. One of Napoleon's chief concerns in exile was to have "John" with him on lonely St. Helena. "John" seemed to possess a sort of magic power in enabling great historic butchers to temporarily forget their slaughters. Even Alexander the Great died with his hand in the hand of his old friend "John." But why multiply examples? Everybody knows that such was the marvelous power of the departed in this life that until recent years only the most optimistic souls dared to imagine that old John Barleycorn could ever taste of death. But God is no respecter of persons. His mills grind slowly but they grind exceedingly fine. It was written in the good book of a growing American and world conscience that despite his marvelous wealth and power the great and bloated John Barleycorn must die.

And so, in spite of all the shrewdness and skill, defense and protection accorded him by many powerful friends the deceased gradually gave way under the advancing power of right and decency until the end came at twelve-one a. m., July 1, 1919, amid the revelries of some of his drunken devotees the sound of which revelry was soon drowned by the joyful hallelujahs of all lovers of God and home and native land.

Final interment will be made January 16, 1920. The body of the deceased will be placed in a bottomless vault in the great Cemetery of Oblivion. There will be no resurrection. "So mote it be."

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Had you noticed that our financial report still climbs upward and that we just lack a small amount being to the nine thousand dollar mile post since January first, this year? We are happy that our people are taking so much more interest in "our Orphanage work." It enables us to pay all our bills at the end of the month and keep ourselves in good standing with those from whom we buy. It also enables us to help more little children and give them a home here. We are now taking care of ten more than we did eighteen months ago. I truly hope that our income will still increase so we can add ten more to the list we already have. Of course the less number of children we have, the easier it is on the superintendent and the matrons. But our desire is to help as many little children as we possibly can. Nothing gives me more pleasure than to give some little worthy helpless orphan child a home and give it an opportunity to make good in life.

In this work we have our little worries and problems to meet, but after a child spends a number of years here in the Institution and reaches the age limit and goes out in life and makes good, we forget all the little worries it gave us while here and only pray that its life may be crowned with success.

Our Singing Class has had good success so far and the people have complimented very much. We are very proud of our little boys and girls because they are taking a great interest in playing their part. We gave our concert in Burlington on the night of the eighth, and my heart was made glad the next day when one of the citizens of Burlington called me over the phone and asked us if we would come to see him that evening. I went and had a heart to heart talk with him and he asked me a number of questions about our work here and how we handled it and said to me that he saw the concert the children rendered and was well pleased with it and wanted to give the Orphanage $500.00 to help us along in this great work for humanity. This Christian gentleman is not a member of our Church, but is in deep sympathy with our work and wants to help us. I thank God for such big hearted men and men who have such a warm place in their hearts for the little helpless orphans of our land.

THE DENOMINATIONAL COLLEGE NECESSARY

The denominational college fills a vital and necessary need in our modern life. President W. O. Thompson, of the Ohio State University, has expressed the deep conviction that the Church will make a mistake if it loosens its hold on its colleges, or weakens the control which conserves the thing for which these institutions were founded, which assures their loyalty to moral and religious ideals. Dr. Thompson points out that the State starts from the doctrine of duty, growing out of a child's right to an education. On the other hand the Church starts from the Christian impulse—the love of God and of man. To the Church the spiritual ideals are supreme in the busiest and best of worlds. The denominational college is the great fort of the Church where the freedom of religion will be maintained with the same courage as the freedom of science will be defended in the state institutions.—Christian Observer.

ANOTHER SCORE FOR THE CHURCH COLLEGE

Medical schools are poor places for the training of Christian doctors, according to a statement credited to Dr. Salmans in these columns. The Interechurch World Movement is planning an immense advance in the Christian hospital field. Really pious physicians and surgeons will be needed in larger numbers. The Centenary's provision for new medical missions abroad points in the same direction. But a good Christian young man entering the average medical school runs the risk of losing his spiritual life. Unless he is a Daniel, he will come out wise in mind, skillful of hand, but unbelieving in heart. He may have picked up other worse things. The attention of our church leaders should be called to this weak link in the chain of Christian service. There is no real reason why medical schools should not be as much a training for Jesus' work as any other school, for healing was a part of his ministry.—Western Christian Advocate.

MISSIONARY

A QUESTION AND ANSWER

In this morning's mail came this word from the Treasurer of our Woman's Foreign Board: "Our receipts now stand at $8,000. Can we make it $10,000 by September 15?" About five minutes ago the afternoon mail brought the answer—seventy-five signed Intercessor's Covenants from the Greenville, Ohio, Missionary Society, the largest number yet received from one church.

Our Young People's Superintendent is asking, "Will our young people of the South reach $1,000 to finish the Santa Isabel Chapel Fund, and the young people of the North $1,000 for its equipment by September 15?"

With these seventy-five women and the other seven hundred and fifty who have signed this Covenant claiming the promise, "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son," who can doubt that we shall reach our goals by the time the books close?

Dear Intercessors, if I had a stenographer I should write a personal letter to each one of you; but will you not accept this message as just for you? For the next six weeks will you not pray daily for this definite result—that our Woman's Boards may reach their financial goals by September 15?

"If we only had the money
That belongeth to our King,
If the reapers of God's bounties
Would their tithes and offerings bring,
Then the windows of heavens
Would open wide at His command,
And He'd pour us out a blessing
That would overflow the land.

"If we only had the money,
It would give redemption's song
To weary hearts now crying out,
'How long, O Lord, how long?'
And the thirsty land would blossom,
And the waiting isles would sing,
If—we only had the money
That belongeth to our King.

"O ye stewards, get ye ready,
Soon will come the reckoning
When we will answer for the money
Which belongeth to our King."

NORTH CAROLINA WOMAN'S BOARD MEETING

The Executive Board of the North Carolina Women's Convention met in Burlington August 11 and planned the program for the Convention this fall. The time of the meeting was set for November 8 and 9 at Elon College.

The speakers outside the Conference will be Rev. E. K. McCord, Missionary in Japan on furlough at home; Victor M. Rivera of our Porto Rico work; and Toshio Sato San of Japan. A great Convention is expected.

Between now and September 30, the women are to round out their year's quota of $2,000 and raise $350 special to finish paying for the Santa Isabel chapel in Porto Rico. Be sure to hold Rally Day in each church, says the Board. Mrs. W. A. HARPER.

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION MISSION BOARD MEETING

Col. J. E. West, Chairman, has called the annual meeting of the Mission Board at Suffolk, Va., Wednesday, September 17, 1919, at 10 o'clock A. M. Following are the members of the Board:

J. E. West, Suffolk, Va., Chairman; J. M. Darden, Suffolk, Va.; J. A. Williams, Franklin, Va.; Rev. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va.; Rev. G. O. Lankford, Berkley, Va.; K. B. Johnson, Kennebec, N. C.; Rev. J. Lee Johnson, Holly Springs, N. C.; Mrs. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.; W. P. Lawrence, Elon College, N. C.; Rev. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga.

As the Board undertakes to complete its work in one day written facts, data and applications are preferred to personal pleas and representation. Therefore all applications for help the coming year with salient facts and data should be in the hands of the undersigned not later than September 10.

By order of J. E. West, Chairman.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Executive Secretary.

Elon College, N. C., August 11, 1919.

IN WASHINGTON

By invitation of a representative those of our household of faith in Washington, D. C., I came her Saturday night to learn what I might be able to learn about the prospects and possibilities of organizing and building a Christian church in our National capitol. By urgent request, Brother J. M. Darden, member of our Mission Board and one who is always ready to be of service, came with me. We were carried over the section in which the proposed church is to be organized and later met with a few of the faithful in the home of Brother Irving Hitchcock, 801 Allison St., Washington, D. C. There for two hours we discussed the situation. Shall we undertake to build, or not build, in Washington? That is the question. And none are wise enough to answer that question off hand. Our Mission Board meets September 17 and will have such facts and data before it as will, we trust, enable it to decide wisely and well. There are great opportunities here in this thriving and growing National capitol. Should the Christians, along with the other denominations, do their bit in trying to Christianize this center or not? Have we the money, the faith and the men to help in this great task; or shall we leave the task wholly to others who have money, faith and men? It is a problem. It requires thought, wisdom and prayer—much and earnest prayer.

NOTES

Elon opens September 10. Remember the date and have your patronage there.

At the time of going to press we have not received a report from the Virginia Valley Conference.

Two airmen, Davis and Peterson, are said to be held in Mexico at the demand of a ransom of $15,000.00.

Friends interested in building a church in Richmond, Va., should write to Rev. H. J. Fleming, Newport News, Va., who is collecting information as to the outlook for a house of worship in the capitol of the Old Dominion.

We understand that Union, Alamance, has increased the pastor's salary for the coming year $150.00, making the salary $500.00. Good for Union! It is no surprise, however, because we know that the membership of that church know how to spell progress and justice.

The work at South Norfolk, Va., under the leadership of Brother O. D. Poythress, seems to be progressing. This church's quota of the College Endowment Fund was $750.00 and it subscribed $2,025.00, with over fifty per cent of the membership contributing.

At the present the church is planning a building program to extend over a period of five or seven years, looking in the direction of building a $40,000.00 church in the near future. The present pastor has been called to serve another year with an increased salary.

The emphasis of this issue is on Education. The time is now at hand for the final stroke to be made before the opening of the schools and colleges. Let every pastor, every friend of education, and all who are interested in the cause interest some young person in a higher education.

Mrs. Sarah Fix, one of THE SUN's life-long and faithful friends, died at Winston-Salem, N. C., August 13, and was buried in Pine Hill cemetery, Burlington, N. C., on the following day, the funeral being conducted by her pastor, Dr. J. W. Harrell. Mrs. Fix was a model mother, symbol of patience and love, and her friends were numbered by the thousand. She lived a life consecrated to the Master's cause and impressed upon her neighbors the piety of a true and devoted life. She was a sister to Brothers J. A. and W. H. Turrentine and the mother of Messrs. J. M. and W. J. Fix. An extended obituary will appear later.

THE STRANGER

You may not know his name,
 And you may not know his face;
 But go to him just the same,
 He's a stranger in the place.
 Go and stretch your hand to him,
 Have a cheerful word to say;
 For his struggle may be grim,
 And 'twill help him on his way.

There's no need to ask him what
 Is his claim upon your smile,
 Has he ancestry or not
 That will make him worth your while,
 What he's done or hopes to do,
 Is he famous or unknown?
 Speak a cheerful word or two,
 Make him feel he's not alone.

To be strange is not a crime,
 To be lonely no disgrace;
 You yourself may yearn some time
 To hold a smiling face.
 You some day may stand alone
 And know what it is to sigh,
 When with strangers you are thrown,
 And you see them hurry by.

We're too formal. Let us go
 To the stranger who is near,
 And a friendly feeling show;
 Let us speak a word of cheer.
 Let us stretch a kindly hand
 To the brother who's unknown;
 We can make him understand
 That he doesn't dwell alone.

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

SUFFOLK LETTER

Lines of demarkation are growing less distinct in almost all relations. Universal education has broken down the middle wall of partition between literate and illiterate. The wider distribution of wealth has removed the lines that separated the rich and the poor. The interstate and international commerce has reduced the geography that kept states and nations apart. Oceans are not as wide as lakes and rivers once were. "Who is my neighbor," is no longer a question that requires a parable for an answer. We communicate under seas, trade over seas, and the lead the news of the world every day. Lines of demarkation that once were plain have faded from the map of human relations until religion itself has lost itself in a thousand fields of fertile soil. Once a Christian was a conspicuous figure over against profane and godless man. The line that separated the church from the world was as plain as the line marked by a surveyor's axe or stones.

The present day intermingling of the church and the world, the cross-currents of pleasure that obscure pure and undefiled religion baffle the wisest men and the devoutest women. Things once condemned as wrong and un-Christian are tolerated by the church. Evil seems to be subtler, religion seems to be laxer, and the line between churchman and non-churchman seems to be like other lines more difficult to trace. The question of supreme importance is to discover whether religion is making inroads upon the world-life or whether the world-life is making inroads upon religion. The blending of all other institutions and relations would seem to argue that society is passing the grosser forms of evil and that a hopeful friendliness between the church and the world prophesies the permeation of society by spiritual forces. It can hardly be proven that the world is growing worse. Too many great evils are being removed and too many welfare plans are being projected at great cost of money and service to leave any doubt that Christianity is taking root in the thought, life and activities of the world. The abolition of the liquor traffic from this Republic, and the campaign for world-prohibition alone indicates the power of religion not only in church, but in business, and government. Religion is doing pioneer work in felling the forests of evil and pulling up the stumps; the wire-grass and crab-grass work must be done as the spiritual machinery is improved for clearing the field of sin and producing a finer type of Christian manhood and womanhood. The time will come when the dance-hall will pass away as surely as the saloon has passed away. Human feet were never given to sport on the brink of social ruin and a better way will be found for the young. Malaria meets the clean, pure breath of the sea, but it can never contaminate the life of old ocean; the world can never destroy the saving atmosphere of religion, but must some sweet day itself be healed of its sin and shame. Jesus will reveal Himself to the world as He did to the woman of Samaria at Jacob's well and cleanse the world of its old life of shame. The only requisite for the church is to keep itself pure in the midst of a world that is unclean.

W. W. STALEY.

FIRST THINGS FIRST

"Suffer me first to go and" It is not that you desire wrong things; it is not that you desire to avoid right things; but you say, "Suffer me first to do the inferior, and then I shall be ready for the superior. Suffer me first to take care of myself. Suffer me first to take care of my household. Suffer me first to take care of my business. Suffer me first to look after this enterprise and then—" No! This constant habit of humbling the higher, and making it subordinate to the lower; this constant preference of the inferior to the superior, works demoralization. A man does not need to throw away his Bible, nor defy his God, nor sell his soul voluntarily. He needs only to say, "Suffer me first to do this lesser thing." The moment that is done, there begins the wrong emphasis and proportions in life which bring defeat. If we put the inferior duties in the place of higher duties, we will fail at last.—Selected.

GENIUSES AT EARLY AGE

Handel had produced an opera before he was fifteen. Corneille had planned a tragedy before he was ten. Auber wrote an operetta for the stage before he was fourteen. Pitt was chancellor of the exchequer before he was twenty-five. Schiller was widely known as a poet before the age of twenty. Kant began his philosophical and metaphysical speculations before the age of eighteen. Goethe had produced a considerable number of poems and several dramas before he was twenty. Raphael showed his artistic abilities at the early age of twelve, when he was widely known as an artist in oil.—Kind Words.

We reap what we sow; but nature has love over and above that justice, and gives us shadow and blossom and fruit that spring from no planting of ours.—George Eliot.

The truth is pure, and purifying, yet can it not of itself purify the soul, but by the obeying or believing of it.—Robert Leighton.

Delight thyself also in the Lord; and He shall give thee the desires of thine heart.—Psalms 37:4.

Goodness and mercy—do you possess them?

THE NEW ERA

Tables and chairs, chairs and tables. They inevitably travel together. So even in their journey to the home of our French brothers, they will be tied together—three chairs to every table. The great army of boy workers in the schools throughout the land are endeavoring in their own way to alleviate the needs of the destitute refugees across the sea. When the Red Cross offered to assist the French Government in its work of reconstruction, it turned at once to its Junior organization for the fulfillment of the furniture part of the order. And it is with no small amount of enthusiasm that they undertook this seemingly gigantic task of making ten thousand tables and thirty thousand chairs.

When questioned as to whether they preferred to continue their pre-war work in the manual training classes, the boys were, in the great majority, eager to undertake the furniture making. They work exactly according to specifications, without any variations, but even this requires a great deal of ingenuity. The furniture is shipped knocked down, but can be readily put together by anyone who follows the simple directions which accompany each set. Approximately fifteen thousand homes will be supplied by this means with a good start toward home life once more. Many of the schools completed their allotments of furniture before the close of the school year in June but the beginning of work in the fall will start anew the enthusiasm of these eager young world citizens to fulfill their allotments and then clamor for more. Manual training instructors like the work because it brings hearty and enthusiastic response from the students. Every Junior Red Cross boy can aid in the work. Schools can obtain full information and directions from the A. R. C. Headquarters in Washington.

To accompany each table and its three chairs is a letter written in French by a high school French class. This is to convey to the recipients the good will and fellowship which we in America have for them over there.

During the war, nearly ten per cent of the timber in France was destroyed, besides furniture valued at several millions of dollars. France has neither furniture, nor wood to make it with. So in this task of making furniture for France, the Junior Red Cross is putting its energies into a field that will truly aid the French people and will give to the Juniors the great satisfaction of a worthy purpose well done.

ALL WISHES COME TRUE NOWADAYS

“Don't you wish that some of those orphans in Europe could come over here and go to school with us?” asked Joe.

But the practical David was very careful about making wishes. He always considered a question carefully first, thinking it over and over in his mind before discussing it rashly. He looked at Joe thoughtfully as he said, “Joe, those orphans are going to go to school with us after awhile.”

“They are? Who told you so? I can hardly wait! How soon will they come?” And Joe fairly jumped up and down in his excitement.

But again the slow David thought awhile before he spoke. “Of course they are going to school with us—in a way. First of all they are to be given a home right in their own town, and it will be furnished by the very furniture that our Junior Red Cross sent over for them. They are going to learn all about us, what we do and how we do it. And then, we are to learn all about them, too. Because they are beginning life all over again since the war left them homeless, it will be all the more interesting to follow their development, I think. My Dad says it's the best League of Nations there is—this getting the school children of the world to know each other in spirit.”

This book is printed on fine book paper and includes 16 pages of illustrations on plate paper. There are nearly 400 pages, in 31 chapters. The binding is made of fine cloth embossed in gold. Size 5x7 inches.

The price is only $1.50 a copy post-paid.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR AUGUST 31, 1919

Temperance. Dan. 1:8-20; Rom. 14:21; I Cor. 9:24-27.

Golden Text: "Every man that striveth in the games exerciseth self control in all things."

If ever there was a good cause for going with the crowd, or when in Rome, do as Rome does, Daniel had it. Can you imagine the little lonely lad, far away from home and friends, a slave, at the mercy of other slaves? Can you imagine him as he approaches the great city with its lofty walls on which six chariots could drive abreast?; its wonderful palaces, its huge halls, and can you then imagine the strength of purpose which nerved one little lad to stand his ground, and purpose in his heart? We give way and do that which we know to be wrong, many times, because of some one, or two or three who may laugh if we do not, or because we will be lonely and have no fun if we don't go with the crowd. In such times, think of the courage of that little prince of Israel, a prince in heart no matter where he was, who purposed, and kept his purpose.

What can we do for temperance today? If liquor is a medicine, should it be used indiscriminately? Would we think of keeping any other deadly drug in quantities, and using it without a doctor's prescription? Why do people look so lightly upon the breaking of prohibition laws? A story is told of a Spanish priest who wished for money to build a new monastery. Finally the devil appeared to him according to the legend, and offered him the money if the priest would consent to commit just one crime. The priest consented, and then the question arose what the crime should be. "Kill your father," said the tempter, but the priest recoiled horrors stricken. "Strike the abbot of your order," but this was even worse, if possible. "Steal from the baron," but again the priest refused. "Then get drunk," said the tempter. This was an easy sin, and a small one, so the priest consented. He found his money exhausted ere he had full gratified his appetite, and opportunity serving, he stole from the baron to buy more wine. The abbot, indignant at his condition, remonstrated with him, whereupon the priest in drunken frenzy struck him. Turned out of the monastery for this crime, he returned home, and enraged by his father's reproaches in a sudden tempest of wrath, he killed his father. The moral is clear. Alcohol, "Spirit of Evil," as the old Persian word means, still leads to all other crimes.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR AUGUST 31, 1919

The Christian Challenge For Life Service. Matt. 4:18-22. (Missionary vocational meeting. Life work recruits).

One of the posters which was most effective in winning recruits to the British army, was one which said: "Your King needs you." That is the slogan for every Endeavor Society, and the thought which should come home to every young Endeavorer. "Your King needs you." Perhaps you say, "I have no talent to make me fit for service." Read again the call of Jesus to the fishers "Come with me and I will make you—." Never mind what you are; you can become whatever God wants you to be when He has made you. You are just in the process of being made now. Do you want to be great? Then be good. No evil living person is ever great; they may become notorious they are never famous. The call of God is always for great tasks and high positions "ambassadors" for Christ; "kings" and "priests" unto God.

MRS. FRED BULLOCK.

BOARD MEETING

As per adjournment, and by order of the Chairman, Rev. J. W. Harrell, D. D., the Board of Religious Education, Inc. (which Board was created by the last session of our Southern Christian Convention to have the general oversight of our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work), is called to meet at Raleigh, N. C., in regular annual session on Thursday, September 11, at 8 P. M. The members of the Board are:

Rev. J. W. Harrell, Chairman, Burlington, N. C.; Mrs. Fred Bullock, Suffolk, Va.; Brother I. A. Luke, Holland, Va.; Brother C. H. Stephenson, Corresponding Secretary and Treasurer, Raleigh, N. C.; Rev. J. V. Knight, and Hon. C. A. Hines, Greensboro, N. C.; Rev. A. T. Banks, Ramseur, N. C.; Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., Winchester, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, Recording Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

This is to be a most important session. Any suggestions for progress and development in our Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work will be gladly received.

DIXIE WELL REPRESENTED AT INTERNATIONAL C. E. CONFERENCE

There were more than 200 delegates representing the Southern States at the International Christian Endeavor Conference in Buffalo, N. Y., August 5-10.

Secretary of War, Newton D. Baker and William Jennings Bryan were among the speakers who addressed this great gathering. There were delegates and speakers from Canada, England, Ireland, France, Italy, Belgium, Africa, India, China, Japan, Korea and South America, besides the thousands from all parts of North America.

Among the Southerners to address the Convention were: Lieut. Dunean B. Curry of Jacksonville, Fla.; Karl Lehmann, Chattanooga, Tenn.; Chas. F. Evans, Lexington, Ky.; L. C. Little Winnfield, La.; W. Roy Breg, Dallas, Texas; A. Clinton Decker, Birmingham, Ala.; Miss Mary Bullock, Russellville, Ark.; George M. Rusk, Atlanta, Ga.; Rev. W. H. Hopper, Louisville, Ky.; Jas. L. Webster, Shreveport, La.; Rev. John A. Wood, Canton, Miss.; Rev. J. V. Knight, Greensboro, N. C.; Wyatt A. Taylor, Columbia, S. C.; Warren Newsum, Memphis, Tenn.; Rev. J. B. Gonzales, Dallas, Texas; G. E. Miley, Richmond, Va.; Rev. Gilbert Glass, Richmond, Va.; Dr. Jas. Lewis Howe, Lexington, Va.

"HOW TO INTEREST YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL IN MISSIONS"

The above is the title of a book by Mrs. Sue R. Staley, and I wish that some one person in each one of our Sunday schools would buy and read that book—and then get busy, as Mrs. Staley tells them how to get busy, in interesting the Sunday school in missions. The book has 140 pages, is substantially bound in cloth and can be had of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Burlington, N. C., for 75 cents. Take this word from the "Introduction." "Men cannot be enlisted in a cause of which they know nothing. Most men do not know even the primary facts and principles of missions. The young people and the children will not grow up to be missionaries or to support missions, while they know nothing of the great enterprise."

Or take this from the first page of Chapter I: "The Sunday school has an army of fifteen million scholars, from whose ranks we may well seek to organize a world-wide missionary campaign. If every member were trained to give at least two cents a week to missions, it would produce a missionary income of fifteen million dollars annually, and if only one out of every thousand of the members would go as a missionary, we would have fifteen thousand additional missionaries—enough, we are told, with native helpers and the present force, to evangelize the entire non-Christian world."

The writer is of opinion that if one person in a Sunday school will read and carry out the suggestions of Mrs. Staley, the whole Sunday school will become interested in missions.

OBITUARIES

DINGES

John Henry Dinges was born April 17, 1851, and died July 28, 1919, aged 68 years, 3 months, and 11 days. He is survived by his widow, three sons, three daughters, and two brothers. For about 15 years prior to his death he was a member of the Methodist Church. Funeral services were conducted at his late home in Powell's Fort, July 29.

A. W. ANDES.

HOOK

Lycurgus C. Hook was born August 23, 1847, and died at his home at 203's Mill, W. Va., July 3, 1919, aged 71 years, 10 months, and 10 days. He is survived by one son, his wife having died in April, 1909. He was a member of the Christian Church for many years, holding his membership at Timber Ridge. He was a man of prominence and held in high esteem by all who knew him, and will be greatly missed in his community. A large congregation of friends and neighbors gathered at Timber Ridge for the funeral, July 5, 1919.

A. W. ANDES.

CROCKER

Another good woman has fallen. Early on the morning of August 4, 1919, in the home of her son, Mr. T. H. Crocker of Middleburg, Vance County, North Carolina, Mrs. Martha Greene Crocker passed away suddenly and most unexpectedly. She was spared sickness and suffering, being called while apparently in her usual health. Her son, T. H. Crocker, was at her side in death, as he had ever been in life, sustaining her with an unflinching devotion.

Mrs. Crocker was the daughter of the late Stephen H. Turner, a well known and highly esteemed citizen of Warren County. Her mother departed this life when Mrs. Crocker was but a girl.

She professed religion in early life and joined Mt. Auburn Christian church of which she was a most faithful member to the time of her death.

September 29, 1863 she was married to Luther R. Crocker of Franklin County, North Carolina, who preceded her to the Great Beyond by three years. To this union were born four sons: E. L., T. H., S. L., and J. T. Crocker, all of whom survive their mother. Besides these, she leaves to mourn their loss one brother, Mr. Z. T. Turner, a well known and popular citizen of Vance County; one sister, Mrs. Sue Jones of Durham, N. C.; a host of relatives and loving friends.

Mrs. Crocker was a most excellent woman, always bright and cheerful, and never more happy than when surrounded by her four sons in whom her heart delighted and of whom she was proud. She was a devoted wife a kind and affectionate mother, a loyal friend, charitable to those in need, and just to all.

God in His goodness granted her a long life, her eightieth birthday being only two months distant.

She was laid to rest in the Middleburg cemetery beside her lamented husband. Her popularity was attested by a large attendance and beautiful floral offerings.

The burial service was conducted by Rev. W. C. Merritt of the Methodist Episcopal church.

A LIFE-LONG FRIEND.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—WELLS

Whereas, it has pleased Almighty God in His infinite wisdom to call from our midst our beloved sister, Mrs. Virginia Murder Wellons; and whereas, by her death Barrett's Christian church has sustained the loss of one of its oldest members. Her life and service has been of great benefit to her church and to Christianity, therefore, be it Resolved:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of Him Who doeth all things well, rejoicing that our sister was awaiting His coming with a confident hope of eternal life.

2. That the wisdom which she exercised in the aid of our church by service and counsel will be held in grateful remembrance.

3. That we offer her bereaved family, and mourning friends our heart-felt sympathy, and commend the Savior as a comfort and guide for them.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be entered upon our church record, a copy sent to the bereaved family, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Done, by order of Barrett's church, this the twenty-six day of July, 1919, in regular quarterly conference.

A LINE OR TWO O' SENSE

Each small duty is a tiny, steady lamp which the Christian must fill with the oil of steadfast obedience. How the Light of Financial Freedom shines with each War Savings Stamp added to the Thrift Flame!

A silver bell, even when carelessly touched, sends out sweet sounds. A Christian life, to all who meet and touch it, should ring the praise of God sweetly and clearly.

Suspicion is like a fog in which no one can see things clearly. Get rid of the Fog of Waste, Want, sickness, and Old Age by the penetrating Light of Thrift.

Every life teaches something to the onlooker, either of good or evil. Make your life an example of Thriftiness to your neighbor.

You never miss the water till the well runs dry. A financial drought will never come if you keep on buying War Savings Stamps.

Four out of five men when they die leave no estate. Buy War Savings Stamps and be a No. 5.

WHEN DEBTS DON'T COUNT

Having made his payments for Liberty Bonds, war chest, rent, coal, gas, and groceries the poor man was broke. But he needed winter clothes, so he compromised by digging through a closet and unearthing a heavy vest that belonged to a winter suit he had worn last year. He brushed the vest off and felt in the pockets.

Eureka! A discovery!

In the inside pocket of the waistcoat was a war savings stamp certificate with 15 squares filled with savings stamps. Safe to say he bought his winter suit—and then some.

Go To College

THESE are decision days with the young people. Entering college is before them; the time is short, and many have not decided as to their course. Life's future hangs in a balance. These young people are at the place where one road becomes two. Which one will they take? The answer may be with you. Help them to take the right road—the one that leads to college. It may not glisten with shining shekels and be spread with roses, but its course leads to a larger life, to leadership, better citizenship, and to the expansion of the latent powers. Go to college!

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

THE "BEST YET" IN BUFFALO

Christian Endeavor's First International Conference Proves to be The Best Convention of all Its History—A Summary of Its Inspiring Features and Results (Press Bulletin from the United Society of Christian Endeavor, used as an Editorial by request).

Sessions that crowded Buffalo's great Music Hall, the most enthusiastic crowds that Christian Endeavor has ever brought together, a series of meetings unequalled for power, new Christian Endeavor plans unequalled for promise—all this makes the First International Christian Endeavor Conference, held at Buffalo on August 5-10, in reality Christian Endeavor's "best-yet" Convention.

Buffalo the Beautiful

The beautiful city itself with its embowered and superbly paved streets, its palatial homes, and its noble churches, filled us all with admiration. The weather was clear and remarkably cool. The Endeavorers are all ready to recommend Buffalo as a summer resort.

A Conference-Convention

The Conference, with its more than two thousand registered delegates, was much larger than the officers had expected, and crowded the biggest auditoriums in Buffalo. Christian Endeavor could not undertake one of its usual vast Conventions in this year of reconstruction and turmoil; but the Conference that was undertaken, though not in our Convention series, really belongs there in numbers as well as in power and influence.

The Conference Vim

It was a youthful crowd, alert and jovial, sparkling with all of youth's enthusiasm, responsive to all fine impulses, fired with eager resolves, a most lovable and hopeful assembly. The singing, both of the choir and the audience, was superb. The cheers and impromptu songs, of which so much has been made in recent State conventions, burst out irrepressibly whenever a good opportunity was afforded. No one could be in Buffalo and have any doubt of Christian Endeavor's abounding vitality and undying zeal.

They Meant Business

It was a faithful crowd. The Endeavorers did not go to Buffalo to see the sights, though there were many sights well worth seeing, and they came from distant parts of the country. They went there to attend the Christian Endeavor Conference, and this they did with constant and glad fidelity. Not only were the evening mass-meetings all crowded, but so also were the more practical and less inspirational conferences of the daytime. Nor were the Endeavorers satisfied with the crowded Conference programme, but they packed the time between sessions with impromptu conferences on all sorts of helpful themes, till we wondered when they ate and slept.

Leaders That Lead

The Buffalo Conference also brought out in splendid fashion the quality of Christian Endeavor's leadership. It showed for the first time the new personnel of the nation officers, the able and winsome young men and young women who have been drafted during the past two years into the forces of the United Society from the State unions. It also made evident the vigorous and delightful personalities of the State officers, including the constantly enlarging number of field-secretaries. Christian Endeavor has never before been so well manned—and womanned.

The General Secretary Resigns

One of the national leaders, however, presented his resignation, and with reasons which made its acceptance necessary. Dr. William Shaw, after twenty-six years of conspicuously faithful and successful service of the United Society, as publication manager, treasurer, and general secretary, found it necessary, in view of his physical condition, to withdraw from the office of general secretary, the resignation to take effect on the first of next January, by which time, it is hoped, an efficient successor will be found, though no one can take the unique place which he has so long filled. Dr. Shaw, however, is not at all resigning from Christian Endeavor. He has been made a life trustee of the United Society, he will continue to be treasurer of the World's Christian Endeavor Union, and will keep right on in his immensely important work as publisher of The Christian Endeavor World.

Expectant Denominations

The attitude of the denominations toward Christian Endeavor was also well illustrated at Buffalo. An unusual number of denominational leaders were there, especially the denominational secretaries of young people's work. The denominations are trusting Christian Endeavor. They are looking to it for inspiration and help. They are ready in turn to help Christian Endeavor.

A New Commission

To an extent greater than ever before the denominational leaders are willing to enter Christian Endeavor councils and guide the movement,—something for which Christian Endeavor leaders have always been eager. The denominational young people's secretaries are by virtue of their offices trustees of the United Society of Christian Endeavor and at Buffalo the United Society took a long step in advance by forming a Standards and Programme Commission to be made up of the denominational secretaries of young people's work and the executive officers of the United Society an expert body whose task it will be henceforth to determine all lines of work in which Christian Endeavor and the denominations are expected to co-operate.

The New Programme

In the meantime, while this new commission is getting to work, the trustees, executive officers, and field secretaries outlined with care a simple but aggressive and inspiring programme for the next two years. It deals with fundamentals in regard to which all denominations will wish their Endeavorers to advance, and it presents in a strong way some of the most important principles of Christian service. The "goals" of 1920-21 will be more popular and will prove more profitable than any other proposals ever placed before Christian Endeavor.

Standards

Along this same line, the Conference devoted two important simultaneous sessions to consider, under the guidance of experts, the relation between State Christian Endeavor standards, national Christian Endeavor standards, and denominational standards for young people's work. These sessions were clarifying and illuminating.

The Boy Scouts

A formal and definite alliance between the Boy Scouts and Christian Endeavor was proposed at Buffalo, and the first steps toward it were authoritatively taken. The arrangement will be free and flexible, and will be of decided advantage to both bodies.

"C. E. E."

Buffalo made evident, in its Experts' banquet and in many other ways, the strong hold that the course of study leading to the degree of "C. E. E." has upon the affections of the Endeavorers. The Efficiency Charts, and the entire line of varied work which they tabulate, are continued in full force and with new energy. The Conference also gave fresh impetus to the important Junior and Intermediate work, as proved by the largely attended and finely effective Junior and Intermediate conferences, rallies, and banquets.

Not Forgetting Our Work

None of the standard and well-recognized lines of Christian Endeavor activity were forgotten, but all were recognized, stimulated, and developed at Buffalo. The Tenth Legion had a rousing banquet, with a glorious conference on stewardship. The Quiet Hour had constant mention in the meetings, and was illustrated in many devotional addresses, in one of the best open-air sunrise prayer meetings ever held, and in the Conference Quiet Hours. The citizenship and tolerance rally was a rouser. Union work was promoted in many ways, but especially by a new feature, Challenge meetings, in which the various State and local unions "dared" each other to many large undertakings and initiated many contests that will fill the next two years with pep and point.

Old and New

The Christian Endeavor committees, the prayer meetings and socials, were by no means forgotten, but were discussed with zest which proved that the Endeavorers are anything but weary of time-honored methods. Missions were to the fore, as always in Christian Endeavor meetings, and both home and foreign missions were illustrated forcibly in pageant, in stereopticon pictures, and in noble addresses. An entire session, and one of the best, was devoted to the new Interchurch World Movement. The enrollment of Life-Work Recruits was promoted quietly but effectively. Not one of our great Christian Endeavor aims and ideals was omitted from the comprehensive programme.

A Neighborly Visit

The Conference, of course, visited Niagara Falls, and we held an inspiring outdoor meeting on the Canadian side. In many other ways the International aspects of Christian Endeavor were kept to the fore throughout the Conference.

Great Speeches

Virtually every session was distinguished by at least one great address. President Wilson sent a cordial message. Secretary of War Baker made a remarkable presentation of the war aims and achievements of the nation and of the ideals of the League of Nations. William Jennings Bryan, kept from the Conference by the serious illness of his wife, wrote and sent a noble sermon, which was read by Dr. Poling. Dr. J. Stanley Brown, of the United States Treasury Department, gave a wise address on Christian Endeavor Thrift Clubs. Ira Landrith gave two of his inimitable talks, absolutely unreportable in their wit, force, and fire. Two eminent missionaries, Dr. Hume of India and Dr. Petee of Japan, illuminated the situation in those empires, and Mr. S. R. Vinton gave us a great treat in his world survey with the stereopticon. The quaintly and wisely humorous Dr. J. B. Baker, the statesmanlike Dr. J. Campbell White and S. Guy Inman, the manly and inspiring Dr. John Timothy Stone and Dr. J. T. McCroly—these are only samples of the quality of the programme.

In, 1921

Much interest was shown as always, in the friendly struggle of cities desiring to entertain the next Convention. New York, St. Louis, and Des Moines were in the field, all eager for the honorable service. The trustees were grateful for these three cordial invitations, and hope some day to go to all three cities, but felt in honor bound to go to New York City in 1921, since that city had already made so much preparation for the Convention which was to have been held there in 1917, but could not be held on account of the Great War.

Enter, the Alumni

But if we were asked to name any one outstanding feature of the Buffalo Conference, we should say, the Alumni banquet. The Alumni idea was proved to have such a hold on the interest and affection of the Endeavorers as ensures its permanence, and with it the continued devotion of the old-time members of our society. Thus a strong backing for Christian Endeavor is made certain, a backing of influence as well as of money. The gift of more than $10,000 made by the 800 Alumni at their banquet is an indication of the way in which this Alumni plan will place Christian Endeavor on an adequate financial basis. The moral support of these old-time Endeavorers is equally important and equally prized. In return, their continued association with the ever-youthful Christian Endeavor society will keep them young, and add indefinitely to the joy and power of their Christian life.

REV. J. G. TRUITT ILL

We have just learned that Rev. J. G. Truitt is seriously ill in a local hospital at South Boston, Va., though it is thought that he is past the danger point. He had to undergo an operation for appendicitis and complications set in. The Brotherhood will pray that this useful and talented young man may be restored to health and strength again. Let us pray to that end.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

SUFFOLK LETTER

The Valley Virginia Central Conference convened in New Hope church August 14 and closed with all-day meeting on Sunday, seventeenth.

E. K. McCord, Netum Rothbun, J. O. Atkinson, W. A. Harper, C. D. Johnston, and W. W. Staley were among the visitors who took an active part in addresses and discussions. W. G. Shipley, Presbyterian and Dr. W. H. Weekley, United Brethren, were also present.

The Conference was well attended and the hospitality was unbounded. The work of the Conference year was encouraging and plans were greatly enlarged for the year to come.

Fifteen Women's Societies had raised $492.39 and their plans provide for much larger sum the coming year. How could it be otherwise with Mrs. Walters leading the good women of the Valley? During the woman's public meeting Acting Missionary Secretary, McCord, gave a fine demonstration of what the women of the Church are doing in Japan. Mrs. Walters and McCord representing the missionary and his wife; five preachers representing the five pastors supported; women to represent Bible women; girls the Girl's school; children the Christian Orphanage. When these were all seated near the pulpit, McCord explained as the groups were called, the work being done. In this concrete way we saw the work from the Missionary's home to the Sendai Orphanage, clearly and impressively.

The Conference decided by vote without a negative to comply, fully, with Convention request for increase in apportionments; and, in addition to this, the Conference adopted, after consideration by a committee, a suggestion made by President Walters for a "Bigger and Better Conference;" namely, to put on a five-year campaign to raise $15,000.00, in addition to regular means, for Home Missions and church extension within the Conference. The object is to assist local congregations in erecting churches and parsonages, and a committee was appointed to work out a plan and put it into operation. Throughout the Conference there was a disposition to formulate larger plans and to execute them.

The Conference, through individuals, had already surpassed itself in subscribing $12,500.00 to the Elon Endowment Fund, and a remarkable experience was developed in raising that fund. Edward Herring, a man passed middle life, made a subscription of $225, went to church the same day, made a profession of religion and joined Mt. Olivet church, which was started by Dr. W. T. Herndon, and is now enthusiastic over building a new house of worship and reviving a cold and disheartened congregation; and they are going to do it. New spirit, new hope, and new purpose have entered into that work. This should be a joy to our dear Dr. Herndon, in his feeble state, to know that the little church which he helped to plant in the mountain is springing into new life; and that a man who was not a Christian at that time, but who loved Dr. Her-don and wanted me to convey his best wishes to him and that he is now in that Mt. Olivet church with his heart, his money, and his life:

All the active pastors in this Conference are ELBOU College men, and their salaries the past year averaged more than $1,100.00 each. They have put new service, new visions, new faith, and new liberality into the Conference. As ministers raise more money for the Lord's work, the people raise more money for the ministers. Pastors who do not bring up Conference calls always get poor salaries. Investigate and test this statement. In this Conference the outlook brightens and every prospect pleases.

All the Conference officers were re-elected except Treasurer, Samuel Earman, who was succeeded by his son, Frank Earman.

Delegates to the Southern Christian Convention were chosen as follows: Ministers—W. T. Walters, A. W. Andes, B. J. Earp; Laymen—R. A. Larrick, C. W. Louderback, and J. E. W. Bryant.

Looking backward the Conference can give thanks and looking forward take courage.

Good country, good folks, good roads, good crops, and a good Conference.

W. W. STALEY.

THE VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE

The Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference held its seventy-first annual session at New Hope Christian church, August 14 to 17. The attendance was large and the reports from the churches were good, showing a substantial increase in membership and an advance of over 30 per cent in contributions. Drs. W. W. Staley, J. O. Atkinson, W. A. Harper, L. F. Johnston and E. K. McCord and Superintendent C. D. Johnston were with us and contributed much to the Conference by their splendid addresses and wise counsel.

There is a great need in this Conference for more ministers, for a grouping of the churches and for parsonage. To meet this need the Conference adopted a "Bigger, Better Conference" program, which has as its aim the raising of $15,000 for Conference work during the next five years; the sum raised to be equally divided between Home Missions and Church Extension. The Conference also decided to lay an apportionment on the churches to meet the apportionment of the Southern Christian Convention. This required an increase of 57 per cent. We may not raise it all the first year but the most of our churches will make the effort and I am sure that we shall raise much more for these funds than heretofore.

The work of liquidating the Winchester church debt was discussed and steps were taken that we feel will mean the clearing of the church debt this year.

The Women's Home and Foreign Mission Board set a goal of $300 last year. They found upon coming to the Conference that they had raised about $500. They set the goal at $700 for this year. The organization is doing a splendid work. We believe that our Conference is going to go forward as never before.

W. T. WALTERS.

VALLEY LETTER

The seventy-first session of the Virginia Valley Central Conference met August 14-16 with the church at New Hope. The following ministers of the Conference were present: W. T. Walters, W. C. Hook, A. W. Andes, B. J. Earp. Killis Roach was absent. The following churches were represented by one or more delegates: Antioch, Bethel, Bethlehem, Beulah, Concord, Dry Run, Joppa, Leaksville, Linville, Mayland, Mt. Olivet, (R.), New Hope, Newport Palmyra, St. Peter's, Timber Ridge, Whistler's Chapel, Winchester, Woods' Chapel, thus leaving seven which were not thus represented, although five of these sent in their reports.

Rev. L. F. Johnson, D. D., of Brooklyn, N. Y., conducted the devotional services throughout the entire Conference, giving a series of studies in the book of Acts. These services were very helpful and enjoyable, and the Conference people are under many obligations to Dr. Johnson for his splendid service.

Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., the President of the Conference, delivered the President's Address, in which he outlined a plan and proposed a campaign to raise $15,000.00 within the bounds of the Conference to be used in making us a bigger and a better Conference. Following out his suggestions a committee of five was appointed to manage the campaign. Those appointed on the committee were Dr. W. T. Walters Samuel Earman, R. A. Larrick, C. W. Louderback, and Roy Hosaflook. This campaign, which will be an every-member canvass on a large scale, will be launched as soon as the Winchester church debt shall have been paid.

The Annual Address was delivered by Rev. A. W. Andes.

C. D. Johnston, Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, made two addresses in behalf of the Orphanage. An offering was taken for the Orphanage amounting to $41.51.

The Woman's Mission Board occupied a part of one afternoon, and showed by their reports that they were making rapid progress in the Conference. They raised nearly $500 during the year.

The Conference Missionary Association also made a splendid report showing $253 raised during the year.

Dr. W. A. Harper was elected to deliver the annual address next year, with Rev. W. C. Hook as alternate.

The Conference, by vote, instructed the Apportionment Committee to make the apportionments sufficiently large to cover all the requirements made upon us by the Southern Christian Convention, which means an increase in our apportionments for this year of $625. The Conference Fund was also increased $5.00 to cover necessary expenses. This increase of $630 means an increase of about 57 per cent to the apportionments of every church in the Conference.

The following visiting brethren were present at the Conference and were helpful to it: Dr. L. F. Johnson, Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. W. A. Harper, Dr. E. K. McCord, Superintendent C. D. Johnston, and Netum Rathbun. Dr. Staley favored the Conference with wit and wisdom; Dr. Atkinson thrilled us with the missionary spirit; Dr. Harper enlightened us on educational matters; and Dr. McCord interested and instructed us about mission work in Japan.

The following are enrolled as banner churches by reason of their having paid at least the amount asked for by Conference: Antioch, Bethlehem, Beulah, Christian Chapel, Concord, Dry Run, High Point, Joppa, Leaksville, Linville, Mayland, Mt. Olivet (G.), New Hope, Palmyra, Timber Mountain, Timber Ridge without an apportionment sent up $71.70, Whistler's Chapel, Winchester, Woods' Chapel.

The attendance throughout the session was exceptionally good, and much of the time the house was filled to overflowing. The Conference was live, busy, and interesting from start to finish, and we believe can truly be said to be one of the best sessions we have ever had. There is growth all along the line, and, it appears, especially along financially lines. We shall need to do more in a financial way this year than ever, and I hope we shall more than keep pace along spiritual lines. The discouragement that faces us is that the laborers are so few, but we are spurred on by the fact that the harvest truly is great.

PERSONAL FROM CHICAGO

I arrived here about 5 o'clock on the afternoon of July 21. About the same hour a great disaster occurred, when an airship sailing over the city exploded and crashed a thousand feet or more through the roof of a big bank, killing eleven persons and wounding many others. A few days later a street car strike and a race riot struck the city the same night. You, perhaps, know the rest in the papers you have read. But the papers likely did not give all deaths occurring from the riots. Suffice it to say that the great body of people, both white and colored, who are the responsible citizenship here, deplore such viciousness and the damaging reputation abroad on the good name of Chicago.

There has been a regular colony of the Elon faculty here this summer preparing to give better service in Art Music and in the academic subjects. There were eight of the last year teachers here, viz: Miss Jenkins, in Art; Mr. Betts, in Piano; Mr. Alexander, in Voice; and Messrs. J. U. Newman, Wyrick, Cotten, and also the Dean of Women—all doing academic work. Besides this number, Professor J. M. Barra, who is a graduate student here, has been added to the Elon faculty. Mr. Barra is a native of Piedmont, Italy. He is, from reputation and personal acquaintance, a man of excellent Christian character. He was educated in an Episcopal college in his native land. He has done missionary work among his own people in America until last year, when he taught modern languages in an American college. He speaks fluently, Italian, Spanish, and French. He speaks English so as to be understood. His addition to our faculty brings opportunity as Elon has never offered for our young people to learn the Roman languages, i. e. French, Spanish and Italian.

I have, in recent years, heard the theology of this university denounced. Whatever one's objection may be, I have never before heard such high exaltation given to Jesus Christ as the Son of God, as I have heard here. One of these great sermons was by Dean Willett of the Theological Department.

TWO PICTURES

I see two pictures in the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew—one is sad and the other is glad. There are ten virgins spoken of. Five are wise and are the true children of God. They have their vessels full of oil and their lamps burning and are ready for service at any time. They are always willing to speak, sing, pray, lead, teach, help to lead souls to Christ. In fact they are not ashamed nor afraid to follow anywhere the Lord leads. This represents the glad picture, or the wise virgins. The Holy Spirit dwells here.

The sad picture, or the foolish virgins may be spoken of as church members who want to do the will of God but are afraid to speak and work in church and are ashamed to talk to sinners. They can't lose sight of self, are weak spiritually, and can't see how to walk the narrow way because their lamps are not burning and they have no oil. The Holy Spirit cannot dwell here.

Which of these pictures represents you?

DAMASCUS

The church at Damascus has been without a pastor since last September until I was called the first Sunday in June, to serve until conference, preaching twice a month.

I have never seen a more loyal or better people than those at Damascus. Everything has been done to make my stay with them pleasant.

I found the church with a live Woman's Missionary Society that has been doing a great work. A Young People's Society and a Junior Christian Endeavor Society have been organized with thirty and twenty-two members each, respectively.

Last week we held our revival meeting. Dr. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., did the preaching and won the hearts of the people. His sermons were filled with the spirit of Christ and, as a result of his preaching, between thirty-five and forty professed faith in Christ. Twenty-two united with the church and twenty of that number were baptized Sunday, August 17.

PROGRAM COMMITTEE OF THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE MEETS

The program committee of the North Carolina Conference met in Burlington August 22. The members of the committee are: Revs. G. J. Green, T. E. White, and P. H. Fleming. Brother Green could not be present. Dr. W. A. Harper, Rev. L. I. Cox, and THE SUN'S Editor were invited to sit with the committee. We feel sure that the members of the Conference will be pleased with the program. Later we shall have something to say concerning its plan and purpose.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT

(Warren H. Denison, Superintendent)

The Conferences and the Forward Movement

1. Each Conference should build its program upon the five points of the Forward Movement and provide time for Conferences and informal discussion.
2. The Conference officials should see that the five year program of intensive work is fully explained.
3. All the details of the two million dollar goal should be made perfectly clear to all.
4. It should be made the specific duty of some official to see that each pastor and church work out and put into effect a definite church program in harmony with the general Forward Movement program. The church and pastor failing to do this is the one that needs it most.
5. A strong co-operating and promotion committee should be appointed to encourage and develop the work of the Movement and assist its officials when the special million dollar drive is made.
6. Plans should be made for a strong stewardship educational program in the churches so that when the financial campaign is made by the Forward Movement the people will have been thoroughly informed as to its great need.

Seaside Chautauqua

The sixth successful session of the Chautauqua has closed. By many it was said to be the best yet held. I presume we will never be satisfied until other hundreds of our people realize its importance and avail themselves of its value. It is one of the most far reaching institutions among us. It is permanently fixed in spirit and place among our people. The management has suggested to the Executive Committee of the American Christian Convention the idea of further developing the School of Methods idea and encouraging the establishment of several in various sections of our brotherhood.

The above named officers and Mr. I. A. Luke.

Program Committee

Rev. W. H. Denison, Chairman; Mr. Hermon Eldredge, President W. A. Harper, Mr. S. M. Smith, Rev. C. H. Rowland.

The Woman's Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention held its meeting at the Chautauqua.

The Association for the Promotion of Christian Unity of the Disciples of Christ Church and the Commission on Christian Unity of the Christian Church held joint sessions during the Chautauqua. Some strong messages were given by speakers from both Commissions and a most delightful fellowship was manifested. Our representatives were Revs. F. G. Coffin, J. F. Burnett, F. H. Peters, P. S. Sailer, W. H. Denison and President W. A. Harper.

Plan now to attend the seventh session of the Chautauqua at Virginia Beach next year; and more, plan to see that some representatives are present from your church.

Otego, N. Y., $2,106

The Otego church is a rural church in the hills of Eastern New York Conference and with a roll of seventy-six names and quite a number of them not available but they are interested in the Forward Movement and go over the top and make a splendid record of $2,106. This is the first church in the Conference to make a full canvass and it will be an inspiration to all the other churches.

NOTES

Get ready to attend Conference this fall. See that your church is represented.

The church at Union Ridge had excellent exercises by the children last Sunday night.

The Burlington Sunday school enjoyed a picnic at the Christian Orphanage one afternoon last week.

Rev. J. W. Harrell is recuperating from his recent operations and will resume his duties next Sunday.

It seemed expedient that we leave out our editorial this week and give the room to a matter of news that should interest our people.

Brother B. D. Jones, Holland, Virginia, favored this office with eleven new subscribers last week. Thank you, Brother Jones, thank you.

Brother A. M. Kerr, editor of The Herald of Gospel Liberty is making a most excellent paper. He is due the congratulations of the Church in his splendid beginning.

If there is a church in the North Carolina Conference needing a pastor for the third Sunday during the coming year, a letter addressed to this office will probably be the means of getting that church in touch with a pastor for that Sunday.

Dr. J. P. Barrett is now in Beloit, Wis., 932 Eighth Avenue. Several calls have been extended to Dr. Barrett, but so far as we know he has not accepted any of them. He is desirous of locating where he can be of the largest possible service. Dr. Barrett is a scholar, and a capable preacher and pastor.

MISSIONARY

MINUTES OF THE WOMAN'S MISSION BOARD OF THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION IN SESSION AT VIRGINIA BEACH, JULY 31, 1919

Devotional service was conducted by Dr. W. A. Harper. The text of his discourse was Matt V: "Ye are the salt of the earth."

The minutes of the Woman's Board meeting and Convention at Franklin, Va., 1918, were read as a matter of information. The following officers gave reports which were of great interest:

Mrs. W. A. Harper, President, read a fine paper which appears elsewhere in this issue of THE SUN. Also Mrs. A. T. Banks, Corresponding Secretary. The Treasurer's report showed an increase in funds over the last year's report. Contributions by Conferences:

Eastern North Carolina	$ 255.75
Eastern Virginia	2,713.01
Georgia and Alabama	5.00
North Carolina	302.32
North Carolina and Virginia	428.00
Virginia Valley Central	360.08
Western North Carolina	294.22
Southern Christian Convention Offering	16.00
Total	$4,374.38

Mrs. W. V. Leathers reported that the challenge made to the young people of the Southern Convention by the Northern Woman's Mission Board to furnish the interior of the Santa Isabel Chapel provided the Young People's Societies of the Southern Convention raise the $1,000 still lacking on the building fund, had been accepted and asked that the various Conferences be apportioned sufficient amounts to complete the Santa Isabel building fund. Mrs. Leathers' report was approved and the following apportionment made:

Eastern Va. Young People's Societies.....	$ 600.00
North Carolina Young People's Societies.....	350.00
Va. Valley Central Y. P. Societies.....	50.00
Total.....	$1,000.00

This amount to be raised by the October Conferences. Dr. J. O. Atkinson was present and lent inspiration and enthusiasm to the meeting by his wise counsel.

Dr. E. K. McCord, returned missionary from Japan, spoke briefly upon the outlook of the work being done by the Southern Boards, congratulating those churches that have recently arranged to put missionaries in the field.

Dr. Chas. Rowland made interesting remarks emphasizing the spiritual side of missions.

Rev. W. P. Minton, the newly elected Mission Secretary, was introduced, and set forth the thought that before our people can be really missionary in spirit they must get right with God.

The Board adjourned to meet in the spring of 1920.

MRS. W. A. HARPER, President.
MRS. W. H. CARROLL, Secretary.

President's Address

Mrs. W. A. Harper

It is a real pleasure to greet my colleagues of the Woman's Board in the first session since I was so unexpectedly and unworthily honored with its presidency.

The days since our biennial Convention session in Franklin have been momentous and testing for our work as well as for the world. The epidemic of influenza in the fall necessitated the postponement of our fall Conference Conventions and the closing of the churches to worship hindered the local work. Yet despite these two handicaps, so solidly had our work established itself that we have raised more money than in any previous year and we have met here enthusiastic for larger undertakings. My prediction is that we have but begun the great work we are in the future sure to accomplish.

You have heard the reports of the various officers and of the Conferences affiliated with our Board and have heard the recommendations. This report was written before coming here and it may in places duplicate what has already been said, but does it matter? When we love our work it is sweeter to croon over it again and again.

High Spots of the Year

Aside from the evidence of general advance during the year, we have occasion to rejoice in the sending out of an additional missionary by the Burlington Sunday school in which our women there are foremost leaders, in provision for a further missionary by the Eastern Virginia women, by the decision of the Eastern Virginia young people to complete the raising of the fund for the Santa Isabel work, and in the union of the three boards of North Carolina into one, so making for efficiency. The budget of the North Carolina women for their first year calls for $2,000 in money, besides the Rally Day offerings, for twenty new societies, and for twenty life-members. The prospect is that they will arrive at their objective.

Rally Days

Last summer and again this summer, I have prepared a Rally Day program for July and August rallies in all our churches. These have been sent to the societies and, where no society exists to some prominent local leader in each church, and to ministers. In this way we have not only raised money but we have sown seeds that will render the organization work later easier. The last thing I did before leaving home was to send to a church that has no society a second installment of Rally Day literature the first being lost. I prophesy this church will give the program and there organize a society.

I recommend that the money which comes in through these rallies, be retained to the credit of each Conference treasury to pay the expenses of the Conference Board in its regular and special work. One handicap of our work has been expense money when officers go out to boost our present work or organize new work. This fund will release for the Southern Christian Convention Woman's Treasury all money coming in from societies for dues and other special and supply a basis for internal growth and expansion.

Literature

One of our great needs in the work is literature. I recommend that the President be authorized to have twelve pamphlets written and published the coming year for free distribution and that $500 be appropriated for printing and circulating these pamphlets.

I recommend that we print in THE CHRISTIAN SUN the program from the Christian Missionary every month, so that more of our women may see it.

I recommend that we set our goal to secure 500 additional subscribers to the Christian Missionary before the next session of the Southern Christian Convention and that our Superintendent of Literature be made the captain to make the recommendation effective.

Final Budget

I recommend that we set our goal financially for the period since May 1919 to May 1920 at $8,000 actually sent to Mrs. W. T. Walters, Treasurer, and that it be apportioned as follows:

Georgia and Alabama	250.00
Eastern Virginia	$ 4,500.00
Valley Virginia	500.00
North Carolina	2,500.00
Alabama	250.00

And that each Conference Board apportion its allotment to the departments as it may deem best.

Our Relation to Special Missionary Movements

I recommend that where our societies as such subscribe to any special movement of a financial character; whether primarily for missionary or for other purposes, such money be sent to Mrs. W. T. Walters, Treasurer, and by her paid to the proper authorities, so that our women may secure proper credit for all money raised in the societies.

Recommendations as to Officers

I recommend that our officers be urged before the Southern Christian Convention session of May 1920 to do the following things:

Vice-President, assist the president in her work.

Secretary, collect and print in permanent form the minutes of the next Conference Conventions.

Corresponding Secretary, collect and tabulate on cards all societies, their officers, and other vital facts connected with them, and by installments print them in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. They should also appear in the minutes to be printed by our Secretary.

Treasurer, to get a full financial statement from each Conference treasurer, and to exhibit for the biennium not only all money sent to her, but raised from other sources as well by the societies, and to have a chart prepared for the Convention Hall showing the financial growth of our Women's work.

Superintendent Young People, organize twenty new societies in addition to the work now being done.

Superintendent Cradle Roll, organize thirty new societies and get full report by the Convention's meeting.

Superintendent Boys' Work, organize thirty new societies.

Superintendent Literature and Mite Boxes, send out the pamphlets to be written, the minutes to be printed, and furnish monthly in THE CHRISTIAN SUN a list of good books for all grades of missionary society, as well as a list of literature for full distribution.

Mission Secretary, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, help our officers in the many ways that shall occur to them and to his fertile resourcefulness, but particularly as a Rally Day speaker, society organizer, and pamphlet writer.

I recommend our societies use the regular books for mission study which are for the women, "A Crusade of Compassion for the Healing of the Nations" (Foreign), and "Christian Americanization" (Home).

Report of Corresponding Secretary

Mrs. A. T. Banks

In this time of fast development when nothing seems too great for the mind of man to use as he determines, we find missions fast developing into the church spirit, not because we feel it only a Christian duty to support, but because we are more interested in the welfare of our brother.

The more distant human being has become our neighbor. We have long dreamed of the needs of the sin perishing souls.

The vision is no longer afar off, but so near it seems that daily we feel ourselves in contact with the hungering souls who want the help of the Christian world.

In our Southern Christian Convention the work has gone forward, but yet we must still be busy organizing and getting people to study missions. Without study a society loses interest, and we find, too, that our women are hungry for such literature as our mission literature offers. A number of societies have been organized since the last sitting of our Board. But our aim is to organize where it is possible to reach and to ask pastors to co-operate and ask their wives to organize.

The Cradle Roll is an important feature and there should be one connected with every missionary society. Willing Workers and boys societies should be more emphasized and the Home Department is of no less importance. I report as follows:

Woman's Missionary Societies	65
Willing Workers	24
Cradle Rolls	25
Home Departments	1

Increase of 4 Woman's Societies in North Carolina Conference and 1 Cradle Roll.

Virginia Valley Central Conference, 4 Woman's Societies.

MEANS TO AN END

The Greensboro Daily News of August 13, reports Rev. M. E. Melvin, D. D., to have delivered at Montreat "one of the ablest addresses here before the Conference on Christian education and ministerial relief that has been heard at Montreat on this subject." "Evangelism and education are inseparable," declared Dr. Melvin, "and the church must reach the point of realizing that foreign missions is the end and that home missions and Christian education are the means of leading to the ends as expressed in the great commission, 'Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature.'"

Dr. Melvin's idea, shared so universally by the membership of the great Presbyterian church, of which he is a part, accounts in a large measure for the fact that his church has gone forward with much leaps and bounds the past few years in winning the world to Christ. The church that makes missions an end, and every other agency, institution and organizations in the church a means to that end cannot help but grow. From the time our Savior gave His great commission till now, God has never prospered a church that would not undertake an adequate missionary program, and He never will. God loved a whole world, He does now love a whole world, and is undertaking to reach and redeem a whole world. That church that does not love a whole world, does not undertake to help reach and save a whole world is neither God-like, nor can it expect the power of God and the presence of God in its tasks and undertakings. The fact that Christ said, "Go ye into all the world" is an evidence that we can go if we will, and the fact that we don't go shows our obstinacy and rebellion instead of our trust and faith.

J. O. ATKINSON.

CATCHING MEN AND KEEPING THEM

I was much interested in a statement from one of our best men and deepest thinkers recently: "The Christian Church has produced the Big Four in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work: Marion Lawrence, W. C. Pearce, Amos R. Wells, and Hermon Eldredge." It is glory for a Church to be able to produce such men. A Church that can produce such men must have somewhat in it that is holy, sacred, worth while. But, why can't the Church that produces such men, keep them? Only one of the Four is now, so far as I know, in any way connected with the Christian Church, and the one left, I believe, makes his living in some other way than as an official or an employee of the Church. I wonder if our glory is to be our shame. These men are all linked up for life service with other organizations than our Church. There must be a reason.

Before we condemn these men for seeking active fellowship and their life's work elsewhere, three of them wholly, would we not for the sake of the future, do well to inquire if the fact, if there be any, is not elsewhere than with them—in past at least.

Why can't a Church that can produce such men, keep such men? If these three were all the question might not be so serious. But there are others, scores and hundreds.

I am wondering if there is not something lacking in our program. Jesus our Lord gave a program great enough for the greatest men we could produce. But somehow we have not seen fit to adopt that program even to the extent of our ability or capacity. We have made that program a side issue a secondary matter a thing to be tampered and played with, as children might a useless toy. We have never taken that program seriously. We have never laid the burden of it on our hearts; we have never brought the binding force of it to our hearts and to our consciences. Until we do that we are going to keep on producing men whom we can't hope to keep, nor to employ, because as they grow in vision and in strength they discover that our program is inadequate. The Christian Church has fundamental principles to make giants. But its program has not been adequate to challenge their strength, develop their loyalty, and grip their faith.

Lord Christ, Whose name we wear, gave the program which we are so reluctant to adopt, "Go ye into all the world." And we who bear that name and share its joy have not been willing, even to a tithe of our ability, to make known the name or proclaim its joy to the millions who have never heard the name nor known the joy.

J. O. ATKINSON.

ODDS AND ENDS

Smile when you can. Heaven alone can reveal its worth. Live up to all the light you have and trust the rest to God.

God loveth a cheerful giver. Christians should be the happiest people in the world. There is no reason why we should put on a long face when Jesus takes up his abode in our hearts.

God pity that man who believes his church contains all the good people in the world.

It is not all of life to live. If we fail to properly use the talent which God has intrusted to our care, we have failed to accomplish God's purpose in creating us. Therefore, we have lost all. Why are we so unthoughtful, so unhappy, so miserable? Certainly, we should not be thus. God created us in His own image and has placed all things at our disposal.

O God, I thank Thee that I can see the blue of the ocean, the green of the hills against the sunset sky, the moonlit world, the autumn tinted forests, the courage in a Father's face, the wonders and the glories all around.

I thank Thee that I can hear the singing of birds, the murmur of the tide against the shore, the sighing of the wind among the trees, the laughs of little children.

I thank Thee that I can feel the balmy air, the winter's chill, the rushing wind, the love of my friends, my baby's kisses, the comforts of home, the manifold blessings of life that thou has given me.

I pray Thee that my eyes be closed, my hearing dulled, my feeling lost to enemy, hate, maliciousness, and shame for these are not of Thee. May I show truth and steadfastness when all the way is bright and peaceful and faith when all my life seems dark. Thus may I strive to make myself as thou wouldst have thy children to be.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

SOME LATE NEWS FROM ELON

Elon begins her thirtieth year on September 10. The office force has done its best to insure its being a creditable opening, and despite handicaps of various sorts the prospect looks good. One thing that greatly grieves us is that for many years almost half of our students have come from other Churches than our own. It should not be so. Our young people belong here, and their going elsewhere impoverishes the College and our local churches as well. It is not the case with young people of other churches that come here. The Christians are not proselytizers and Elon returns them prepared to be loyal to their own in their home communities.

Our ministers, alumni, church leaders, and students have a fine opportunity in the few days that remain to bring many an undecided young person to Elon. The Church has liberally given of its money to make Elon bigger and better. This is evidence that the College has firmly justified itself in the minds of the adults of our Brotherhood. But our young men and young women are unable to form their judgment on the College's worth unless these same adult friends shall direct and guide. Money is good, but life is better. Elon can never serve our Church 100 per cent till 100 per cent of our young people come here for life direction and impress. I am calling on the generous friends who made the Standardization Drive successful to rally to her now and fill her halls with buoyant young lives from our Christian homes, the hope and promise of our beloved Church.

Beloved friends of the cause of Christ as the Christian Church represents that cause, this means you.

I call upon our people in their public worship and their private devotions to pray that Elon may constructively serve our Master's cause.

Faculty Additions

Miss Celia Smith, of the New England Conservatory, becomes assistant in piano, voice, and theoretical work.

Miss Anna Mary Landis, of Columbia University, becomes head of the Department of Domestic Science and Household Arts.

Miss Katherine L. Sturm, of the Cincinnati Conservatory and the Northwestern University School of Music, becomes head of the Violin Department and Director of the Orchestra.

Miss Ruth Hawk, of the King's School of Oratory, Pittsburgh, Pa., where for two years she has been a member of the Faculty, becomes head of the Department of Expression and Physical Culture.

Professor J. M. Barra, a native of Piedmont, Italy, and graduate student of the University of Chicago, becomes head of the new Department of Romance Languages. Professor Barra speaks Italian, French, Spanish, and English fluently.

Senor Victor M. Rivera, of our Porto Rico Church, becomes assistant in Spanish to Professor Barra.

Mr. T. E. Powell, Elon '19 and of the Summer School of Cornell University, becomes instructor in Geology and Biology.

Mrs. J. J. Lincoln, so favorably known to all our people, is added to the administrative force and becomes librarian-in-chief. She will be assisted by three young ladies of the student body.

Mr. L. W. Vaughan, Elon '17, becomes College Bursar and will be assisted by Miss Lillie Mae Johnson.

The Staff and The Summer

During the summer two members of the Faculty have taught in Summer Schools of other Colleges, and sixteen have studied in the Summer Schools of the Northern and Western Universities. Soon after the opening we will have a Faculty night and each member will tell his or her Summer School experience. We feel that new life will come to us this year as a result of this migration to the great centers of learning and culture.

Finally

Beloved, remember the days ahead are critical days for many young people, and you may be the one to start some one of them on the road to a larger usefulness in life. Will you endeavor to be?

W. A. HARPER, President.

GO TO COLLEGE

These are critical days for many young people. Just now they are considering the matter of going to college and securing additional training for the work of life. Perhaps there are hindrances, yea even formidable difficulties to be overcome before the wise decision can be reached. Nothing should be allowed to keep a young man or woman from college. The greatest difficulties can be overcome where there is sufficient purpose and effort. That which the heart is set upon can be achieved. All who really desire a college education today can have it. Decide to go to college and you will find the difficulties vanishing one by one and the way opening to larger and better things. There are those who are standing ready to help all who put forth an honest effort. Young man, young woman, be full of courage!

A college education greatly increases a young person's chance for success in life, for doing good, for usefulness and for the living of a life that shall really count. A college education is cheap at almost any price. You can afford to go in debt in order to obtain it. Many of our greatest men left college with debts upon them and not one of them today would tell you that such a debt was a bad thing. They are glad they had the courage to make a debt for such a purpose. It pays to obtain the best training possible for the work of life. The best is none too good for the only life we will have a chance to live upon the earth.

The writer is profoundly grateful that he decided to go to Elon College when he was a young man and obtain training for the work of life. The debt incurred has long since been paid off and the time spent in college was abundantly worth while. The four years spent in Elon College were the best years of his life. The sense of his indebtedness to the institution grows with the passing years.

J. W. HARRELL.

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

I THANK THEE, LORD

I thank Thee, Lord, at break of day,
When all the east is red with sun,
For health and hope and heart to say,
"I would be part of any way
In which the will of God is done."

And though the task that I have sought
Transcends my hands' unaided skill,
I thank Thee for this mighty thought—
That all the wonders to be wrought
Lie hidden in Thy perfect will.

I thank Thee, at the time of rest,
For strength that held the long day through,
Footsore and worn, yet peace-possessed,
I know the honest toil is best
Of him who strives Thy will to do.

DOING TOO MUCH

To do too much is to do less than we ought. Most of us are doing too much; therefore most of us could do more if we would do less. Most of us are giving too much time to activities of various sorts—good activities, of course: doing things that the Lord wants to have done by some body, very likely. But we are giving too much time to such activities, with result that we are not giving time enough to being alone with God in prayer and in feeling on His Word. So our activities are failing to have anything like the effectiveness and the results that they should have. The leader of a great Christian work said, concerning a certain active Christian man: "We need a man, but we hesitate to employ him because he is becoming so busy with such a multitude of things that we fear his time for private intercession and prayer is being crowded out." Evidently that man was doing so much that these leaders feared that he could not do enough in this position of Christian responsibility. It takes courage, and surrender, and faith, deliberately to lay aside some, perhaps many, of our activities in order to have the time alone with God that He says is vital. But would it not be worth while to enter upon a new experience of Spirit-energized service.—Sunday School Times.

HOUSES AND HOMES

When we get down to the consideration of those things which are fundamental to welfare and happiness, we must always find that there is nothing so essential, either for this life or for the life to come, as the establishing and maintenance of Christian homes. No fundamental fact has been more widely disregarded in recent times than this one, and no other disregard for a fundamental fact has resulted in greater misery and greater loss of realities than this one. We invite our readers, therefore, to pause in the midst of their serious considerations of many other problems, which are generally supposed to be more important and more pressing, to hear what Dr. Jowett has said on the difference between a house and a home: "Any one can build an altar; it requires God to provide the flame. Anybody can build a house; we need the Lord for the creation of a home. A house is an agglomeration of brick and stones, with an assorted collection of manufactured goods; a home is the abiding place of ardent affection, of fervent hope, of genial trust. There is many a homeless man who lives in a richly furnished house. There is many a fifteen-pound house in the crowded street which is an illuminated and beautiful home. The sumptuously furnished house may be the very hearthstone of the eternal God. Now the Christian religion claims to be able to convert houses into homes, to supply the missing fire, and to bring an inspiring flame to the cold and chilling heap. The New Testament does not say very much about homes; it says a great deal about the things that make them. It speaks about life and love and joy and peace and rest. If we get a house and put these into it, we shall have secured a home. Here, then, are two houses. In both of them there is no love, no joy, no peace, no rest. There is no flame of genial and radiant hope. Let us bring the Christian religion into one of the houses, and do as you please with the other. In one house the tenants all kneel before King Jesus. They shall be one in common purpose, and they shall strive together with common mind and will. What will assuredly happen? With absolute certainty the house will become a home! That is a glorious commonplace in the history of the Christian faith. When Christ has been enthroned and every member of the family becomes a worshipper, there steals into the common life a warmth of affection which converts even trivial relationships into radiant kinship. What shall we do with the other house? Sin reigns! Passion reigns! Estrangement reigns; There is continued tumult and unrest. What shall we do? Call upon Baal! Call upon 'the god of this world!' It would be a fruitless quest. There is nothing for it but the grace of Christ."—Lutheran Survey.

The book of Jeremiah has the words, "Dwell deep!" What a motto for a life!
"Dwell deep" the little things that chafe and fret,
O waste not golden hours to give them heed!
The slight, the thoughtless wrong, do thou forget;
Be self-forgot serving others' need.
Thou faith in God through love for man shalt keep—Dwell deep, my soul, dwell deep!"

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT ATTENDS VALLEY CONFERENCE

The writer had a very pleasant visit to the Virginia Central Valley Conference, August 14-16 and had the pleasure of telling the people in that section something of the work being done for the Church through the Christian Orphanage.

This Conference has come to the front in the Orphanage work rapidly in the last three years. Three years ago just a few of the Sunday schools (three I think) were making monthly offerings to help support the Orphanage. Now all the churches except eight have made contributions this year.

If we could get in closer touch with the good people in the Valley I feel sure that the response would be greatly enlarged. If it could be possible for the people in the Valley to visit the Institution and see the boys and girls they would get a greater vision of the work and would do larger things for the Orphanage.

As I was traveling through that beautiful section of our great country and looking at the apple trees full of fruit, I thought that if twenty-five persons who have apples would ship us 1 bbl. each, what a small sacrifice it would be to them. But just think what a blessing twenty-five barrels of apples would be to us in this work and how the children would enjoy them!

The people in the Valley are a great people and are able to do great things.

We enjoy each visit to the Conferences in the Valley and hope to be able to attend again next year.

NEEDLES

Needles are of ancient date. Harriette Martineau tells of seeing a piece of darning that had come out of an Egyptian tomb and had the threaded needle still sticking in it after 1,000 years. This one remaining needle of the world of 5,000 years ago of wood.

Before the reign of Queen Elizabeth steel needles were entirely unknown and only bone, wood and bronze ones were used.—Ex.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 7, 1919

The Kingdom of God. Matt 6:10; 13:31-33; 44-50; 18:2-3; Luke 17:20-21; II Cor. 10:3-5.

Golden Text: "Seek ye first his kingdom and his righteousness."

What is the Kingdom of God? It is not meat and drink; it is not riches in this world. "My Kingdom is not of this world." Jesus is not the lord of this world nor its prince. "The prince of this world" is the enemy of our Lord Christ. So, He bids us keep ourselves unspotted from the world. But the day will come when the kingdoms of this world shall become the Kingdoms of our God. What can we do to aid? What do we do to hinder His coming Kingdom? Do we let Him reign in our lives and hearts? Does He reign in our home? Does He, so far as we have the power, reign in our community? D. L. Moody heard a man say it was impossible to tell what God could do with a man whose life was wholly dedicated to Him, and then and there decided that God should have his life with which to demonstrate what could be done. And God did show what He could do when He took an ignorant, untrained shoemaker, and made of him a true Ambassador for Christ. The "Sermon on the Mount" is the enunciation of the laws of the Kingdom delivered by the King, "I say unto you." What has He said unto you? Have you ever listened to hear? What can we do to prepare for the coming Kingdom and the coming King? Are you looking for the coming of the Lord Jesus? Are you doing your best to prepare for His coming? Do you, too, say: "Even so, Lord Jesus, come quickly?" Do you mean it, with all your heart and soul, with all your strength of purpose, of mind and of body, when you kneel and pray, "Thy Kingdom Come?"

MRS. FRED BULLOCK.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR SEPTEMBER 7, 1919

Our Relation to Others (Towards Neighbors and Friends). Phil. 2:1-11. (Consecration meeting).

A story went the rounds some time ago, which ran something like this: "What do you think of my new dress?" asked Maud of her Friend, Belle. "Well, to tell you the truth, my dear," began Belle, when Maud said sharply, "Stop right there; if you are going to be disagreeable, I don't want to hear it." Why is it that it is only disagreeable truths that we are fond of telling? Is it not strange that we so often forget the truthful nice things we could say of our neighbors and friends? Were they dead, what splendid tributes we would pay to their memory, but "a rose to the living is more than bountiful wreaths to the dead." Who are our neighbors? Are they only the good folks in the neighborhood, the ones we like best, who have the best manners, or an auto in which they invite us to ride in? What about the poor neighbor on the back streets whose back yard is neighbor to ours? The Bible laid down rules for those who make a feast, that it should be the poor, those not able to return the kindnesses who should be invited. How about applying the same rule for neighborly kindnesses? Such kindnesses is like bread cast upon the waters, which returns after many days. Deacon West of the Spring Hill Sunday school used to send two carts or wagons to church every Sunday, one for his own family, one down another road to gather up those who had no means of conveyance of their own. His four sons are all splendid Christian workers in our church today. Can you see any connection?

MRS. FRED BULLOCK.

ORIGIN OF THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL

Some years ago the Ohio Sunday School Association instructed an investigator to find out if possible the earliest attempts at the establishment of Sunday schools in America, and after due investigation the following facts were found:

The town records of New Town, Long Island, show that Rev. Morgan Jones established a Sunday school there February 28, 1683, fifty years before Robert Raikes was born. But it is not certain that even this was the first Sunday school in America. A writer in the Historical Magazine, says that in 1674 the Puritans had a Sunday school in Roxbury, Mass. There seems to be, however, no authority for this beyond the mere statement; but the town records of New Town, Long Island, are copied in full in Thompson's History, a very rare book at this day, so there can be no doubt as to the date of the establishment of Morgan Jones' Sunday school.

There is some doubt as to the exact date on which Robert Raikes started his Sunday school in Gloucester, England, but assuming that it was in 1781, then there were certainly five and perhaps more Sunday schools in America before that date, viz.: At Roxbury, Mass., 1674; at New Town, Long Island, 1683; Christ Church, Savannah, Ga., 1736, (started by John Wesley while priest there); at Ephrata, Penn., 1740; at Bethlehem, Conn., 1740; and at Philadelphia, Penn., 1744. The Ephrata school was interrupted after the battle of Brandywine, September 11, 1777 in order that the school room might be used as a hospital for the wounded American soldiers.

The date of the Sunday school in Savannah, Ga., is shown on a bronze tablet which reads as follows: "To the glory of God in memory of John Wesley, Priest of the Church of England, minister to Savannah 1736-1737. Founder of the Sunday school. Erected by the Diocese of Georgia."

The official records of the church show that Rev. John Wesley assumed charge in 1736 and started a Sunday school. Under him Mr. De La Motta, every Sunday morning, instructed the "children of the church." Every Sunday afternoon it was Wesley's custom to meet the children of the congregation before service and hear them recite the catechism, question them as to what they had heard from the pulpit in the morning, instruct them still further in the Bible, endeavoring to fix the truth in their understandings as well as their memories.

This Sunday school was established nearly fifty years before Robert Raikes originated his scheme of Sunday instruction in Gloucester, England. The Christ church Sunday school is still going on.

In order to teach his household regularly, William Elliott organized a Sunday school house in his home in 1785, and this was kept up until Burton Oak Grove church was built when it was carried to the church, and has been in continuous existence since that time. This locality is where Watchaprague now stands in Accomac County, Virginia. William Elliott's Bible containing a history of the organization of this Sunday school is still in the possession of Mrs. Wessie E. Neek Eason, a great-great-granddaughter of William Elliott. The history of the school is preserved in a pamphlet by Mr. L. James Hyslop of Keller, Virginia, Historical Bulletin No. 1, Virginia State Sunday School Association.

In 1786 Rev. Francis Asbury established a Sunday school in the house of Thomas Crenshaw, Hanover County, Virginia, and this became noted in that section.

We can see from the above that there were several Sunday schools in different parts of America long before Robert Raikes took his walk in the suburbs of Gloucester, England, in 1780 or 1781, and saw the wretches in the streets, and employed four women to teach the children on Sundays. It would appear that Rev. Morgan Jones was the originator of the idea long before Robert Raikes, the printer was born, and that America and not England should have the honor of starting this great institution, that now extends over a large part of the earth.

OBITUARIES

FIX

Mrs. Sarah Fix, the daughter of Joan S. Turentine, was born September 18, 1838 and died August 13, 1919, aged 80 years, 10 months and 25 days. She was married to Joseph Fix of Burlington, N. C., October 5, 1857. To this union were born ten children. She is survived by two sons, two daughters and also two brothers. There are thirteen grandchildren and sixteen great-grandchildren.

A mother in Israel has fallen. She was a great and good woman, highly honored and respected by all who knew her. She was the friend of a minister and the servant of all, ever ready to minister. Her joy was found in helping the needy. For a long while she was President of the King's Daughters and faithfully served in that capacity. She met Christ's test for greatness in a marked manner. She will be remembered by the good she has done. Many will rise up and call her blessed.

The secret of this beautiful life is to be found in the fact that she was ever hungering and thirsting after righteousness. Her soul hunger was intense. The more she knew of God, the more she wanted to know. When a girl she united with Providence Christian church and after the organization of the Burlington church transferred her membership. She was faithful to her church and present at all of its services whenever possible. She will be greatly missed. She faithfully cultivated the religious life and kept the fires of God's love burning upon the altar of her heart.

The funeral service was largely attended and the floral offering very beautiful and large. The service was conducted by her pastor assisted by Dr. Wellons.

J. W. HARRELL.

WHITWORTH

George B. Whitworth passed away at his home, 1344 North Main Street, Danville, Virginia, on Saturday night, August 9, after a lingering illness of three months. Death was due to an affection of the throat and lungs. Mr. Whitworth had been a sufferer for several years but his condition became serious a few months ago and since that time he became gradually weaker and weaker. He was very patient during all his suffering.

He is survived by a wife one son, and three step-sons, and also two brothers and a sister in addition to other relatives.

Funeral services were held at the home, interment at Leemont cemetery. The writer had charge of the services.

H. S. HARDCASTLE.

GASKINS

Sallie Grant Gaskins, relict of Walter B. Gaskins, died July 28, 1919, at the home of W. S. Long, in Chapel Hill, N. C. Her husband died about two years previous. Her only child, Vernon, died in December 1918, and a brother Vernon Grant, who had lived in her home, died in January 1919. Thus in a brief period the entire family passed away from the cares, the joys, and the sorrows of this world. With bowed heads and sad hearts relatives and friends placed their bodies side by side in the cemetery in Norfolk, Va. Our sister was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and a devout Christian.

W. S. LONG.

BOYD

About fifteen years ago Brother T. A. S. Boyd died, and August 3, 1919, his widow died in Richmond, Va., and her burial took place in the cemetery of Pleasant Grove church, Va., the church of her youth and of her father's people. Many relatives and friends gathered to show their love and respect. Three of her former pastors attended her funeral: J. W. Wellons P. T. Klapp and the writer. She was the youngest daughter of Archibald Farmer, one of the most useful and substantial citizens of that section, and a sister of Mrs. William Dunn, Mrs. E. T. Pierce, and Mrs. Edward Carlton, all of whom preceded her to the grave. Sister Boyd leaves several children, and many relatives and friends who sorrow on account of the loss they have sustained, but not as those who have no hope for the life and testimony bequeathed them assures them of the rest and blessedness of a dear mother.

It was my good fortune to begin my ministry with the church at Pleasant Grove Va., in the fall of 1860. The next year I baptized two sisters, Ellen and Annie Farmer, and two other sister, Lou and Charlotte Boyd. This was my first service of this kind. They were all good women, and adorned the homes in which they lived and have all died leaving a good record behind them.

W. S. LONG.

IN MEMORIAM—LEE

Whereas, the great and supreme Ruler has in His infinite wisdom called from labor to reward Mr. Willis J. Lee, who from the organization of both the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary and our Ladies' Aid Societies of Berea (Nansmond) Christian church, has always done his duty as a faithful and devoted member. Therefore be it Resolved:

First, that we record our sincere appreciation of his Christian character and faithful service to the Societies and the cause of Christ. No man among us has been more generous and faithful, his example is worthy of emulation.

Second, that we bow in humble submission to the will of God Who doeth all things well. We thank our Heavenly Father for extending his life well beyond three score years and we pray that God may raise up some worthy successor.

Third, that we extend to his dear wife and family our sincere sympathy and pray God to sustain them in this dark hour.

Fourth, that a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of our Woman's Missionary and Ladies' Aid Societies, a copy sent to the family and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

"IN ESSENTIALS UNITY, IN NON-ESSENTIALS LIBERTY, IN ALL THINGS CHARITY"

The Church a Leader

THE church of Jesus Christ was never meant to be a trailer. Neither a greedy capitalist nor a threatening labor group should cause her to change her message of moral authority. She must be the mouthpiece of the Holy Spirit, who convicts the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment. As an organization she may not commit herself to any detailed economic structure of cast-iron quality; but Christian individuals and societies are duty-bound to think clearly, feel nobly, and act the best. Wise men, inspired by God's Spirit through study and prayer, must undertake to blaze the trail through the woods of reconstruction problems. The church must furnish these social prophets and guides. Every Christian man, whether capitalist, laborer, manager, or one dissociated from industry, should use his God-given mind to promote justice as it is brought to expression in actual details of our common life.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

THE TRUE SPIRIT

Did you ever see a person whose conduct, language and ideals were below what they should be? How did you feel when you were in his or her presence? Did you want to get away? Did you have a feeling never to see the person again? If this is the way you felt you did not have the right spirit. Did you long for just the power to lift that person up out of his or her low ideals and place such a one on a plane of higher living? Did you have a desire and wish that you were able to point out to such a person the beauties of a clean and undefiled life, and just long to lift them up to something better and nobler? If this is the spirit you had, it is the right one, and is the spirit of the Master.

CHURCHES AND CRIMINALS

Judges, jurors, attorneys, and solicitors of courts know as few other men the value of moral training. They see and hear things to convince them that the Church has a great influence over life—and we regret that every participant of the law is not a Christian.

Last week we received a letter from a friend, Mrs. S. W. Summers, a court stenographer. It was written from Durham and while the Durham County court was in session. It is part of a personal note, but it would be unjust to the public not to reprint a few paragraphs. Here they are:

"In our court this week no less than eight or ten young boys, white and colored, ages ranging from sixteen to nineteen have been tried and convicted of larceny of automobiles, clothing, jewelry and car breaking,—all of whom stated they did not go to church and Sunday school—and two boys (white) 19 years of age, their parents stated that they had gotten beyond their control—and after Judge Stacey questioned the parents, it was found that they did not send them to Sunday school regularly.

"But such a condition does not exist alone among the boys. Out of a special venire of twenty-two jurors seven of them were not church members and professed no religion. Four of whom were unmarried and the judge stated that they ought to marry and perhaps their wives could convert them."

It is very evident from the above that Judge Stacey takes into consideration a man's connection with the Church. It is interesting to note that he would ask questions of that nature. They are pertinent and to the point. Some of these days a man will have to be a qualified Christian to be a qualified juror. And he should be.

DATE OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE

The Alabama Christian Conference meets with the church at Antioch, Tuesday after the second Sunday in October at 10 o'clock. Rev. J. D. Dollar is president and Rev. E. M. Carter is secretary. Their post office is Wadley, Alabama. Get ready to attend and see that your church is represented.

GEORGIA AND ALABAMA CONFERENCE

The Georgia and Alabama Conference adjourned last year to meet in its annual session at Lanett, Alabama, on Tuesday after the third Sunday in October, which is October 21. Rev. H. W. Elder, Richland, Georgia, is the president of the session and Brother S. H. Abel is acting secretary. J. F. Hill is the treasurer whose address is Phoenix, Alabama, Box 96. Get ready for this Conference. Be on time, stay through the session—and add something to it.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

The Eastern Virginia Conference held its session at Eure's church last year and this year goes to the other side of the territory and meets with the Waverly Christian church. The time of the meeting is Tuesday before the first Sunday in November, which will be October 28. Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., Suffolk, Va., is the efficient secretary while Rev. O. D. Poythress, South Norfolk, Va., is his assistant. Dr. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., is president and Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., is vice-chairman. Plans are being formulated for a great meeting and the churches within the bounds of this Conference are urged to make preparation for the coming event.

NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

The North Carolina Christian Conference meets with the church at Burlington, N. C., on November 11, next, and will be in session to November 14, inclusive. This is the first session of the united Conferences, which embraces the Western North Carolina, Eastern North Carolina, and North Carolina and Virginia Conferences. Rev. T. E. White, Sanford, N. C., is the president, while the record-keeper is Dr. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C. A tentative program is now in circulation and every church, minister and member of this Conference is urged to begin now to make it a star session.

MISSION BOARD TO MEET

The Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention is to meet on September 17. The place of meeting is Suffolk, Virginia, and the hour set for the initial session is 10 o'clock A. M. Col. J. E. West is chairman while Brothers J. M. Darden, J. A. Williams, C. H. Rowland, G. O. Lankford, K. B. Johnson, J. Lee Johnson, W. P. Lawrence, H. W. Elder and Mrs. W. A. Harper are the members. Dr. J. O. Atkinson is the Executive Secretary. If you have any matter with the Board attend to it now and place it in the hands of the Executive Secretary, or the chairman. Send your requests in written form because it is the desire of the Board that personal representation be eliminated.

BOARD OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION TO MEET

On Thursday, September 11, at 8 o'clock P. M., the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention is to meet. The Board is to meet in Raleigh, N. C., and the session is the regular annual. The members of the Board are: Rev. J. W. Harrell, Chairman, Burlington, N. C.; Mrs. Fred Bullock, Va.; Brother I. A. Luke, Holland, Va.; Brother C. H. Stephenson, Corresponding Secretary and Treasurer, Raleigh, N. C.; Rev. J. V. Knight and Hon. C. A. Hines, Greensboro, N. C.; Rev. A. T. Banks, Ramseur, N. C.; Rev. W. T. Walter, D. D., Winchester, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, Recording Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

A CONSIDERATION AND AN APPRECIATION

Many persons who enjoy food and clothing forget those whose hands make these things possible. A suit of clothes may be worn and appreciated and the one who wears it perhaps never thinks of the dozen hands that went to make the fabric possible. From the raw material to the finished product faithful souls worked diligently that every part of the suit might be right and acceptable.

Those who read and enjoy papers so often forget those who make them possible. The name of the editor may be at the masthead of the paper and his name may become a household word, and yet those who labor with him to make possible the publication may never be known to the reading public.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN passes through a half dozen hands before it reaches the post office. Next to the Editor is the faithful linotype operator who sets the type on the most modern and up-to-date type composing machine. The servant of THE SUN in this capacity is Mr. James Marvin Vestal, who has been the linotype operator for this paper practically ever since the present Editor has been in charge. Mr. Vestal is a deaf man but does his work to a great degree of efficiency and satisfaction. He is a good machinist and operator, and is well acquainted with the linotype. The Editor had the privilege of seeing him put the machine up without the aid of an inspector or any other machinist. He was educated at the State School for the Deaf, Morganton, N. C. His education is thorough and practical. He is faithful in his service and miring in his effort to bring THE SUN up to the standard every week. This week he is at Morganton attending the twenty-fifth anniversary of his Alma Mater. He was chosen to deliver the response to the welcome address. We have had the privilege of reading the message which he delivered to his former teachers and friends. Without his consent or knowledge we kept his response, and in consideration of his services to this paper, and appreciation of our esteem for him, we print below his message in full. We believe that it is worthy for we feel that it will reveal to others what it revealed to us—that optimistic look that our unfortunate (?) fellow citizens have:

Response To Address of Welcome

J. M. Vestal, Burlington, N. C.

Former Students, Friends and Associates:

Great and good is this occasion on which I have the honor of thanking you on behalf of your guests, for the kind words of welcome accorded us. We assure you that we are glad to be here—glad to be where we have not been for so long. This is no strange place to us. It has been out of our eye-sight, but not out of our hearts and interest. We are glad to find all the doors wide open to us. We feel very much at home and why should we not?

At this moment, I take great pleasure in telling you that we rejoice to have the privilege of helping you to celebrate the twenty-fifth anniversary of the founding of this school. Our school is among the youngest of its kind, but not the smallest. It is the special pride of the founder, but it is an institution that we all love. And to be here today makes us love her still better. She is nearer to our hearts now than she was yesterday.

We are glad that North Carolina has a school where the Deaf can prepare themselves for useful life. Without this school we do not know where we would be. We are too proud to be pitied. We regret to say that we have heard of persons pitying us, because we are deaf. Very often we find ourselves glad because we are deaf, and while we are deaf we are not dead. Again we have heard persons praise us for doing certain deeds on no other grounds than that we are deaf. We do not want to be praised for that reason, but we want to be praised for the things that we do. And still we have heard persons say that we cannot do certain things, because we are deaf. How mistaken they are! They have forgotten that the tongue and ear do not represent the ability of a man. The trouble is that we have never been given the chance. In most cases we can do nine out of ten things as well, and very often better, than our hearing brothers. So we have reason to be proud of our school and those connected with it. We are happy because our school is rapidly showing the world that the day of the impossible things has passed.

To Superintendent Goodwin is due much credit for his hard and loyal work in building up the school. He has pulled through many hard places where others would have failed. He has reason to be proud of what he has done. His work speaks for him. To the members of the Board we are grateful for their loyal and faithful support. We are sure they acted to the best of their knowledge. To North Carolina and her citizens we are grateful for the purse. She is among the poorest States, but has a big heart for the good causes.

So let me say that this day is a great day, and it is good to live in this generation. The incoming generations will not find themselves wanting. They will look upon the founders with great pride because the way has been prepared for them to have good standing in the elevating forces of life and society.

So accept Sir, our hearty appreciation for your kind words of welcome. We assure you that it is good to be here.

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS—SIX REASONS WHY IT SHOULD BE RATIFIED

Dr. Frederick Lynch, Editor of The Christian Work, gives the following six reasons why the League of Nations should be ratified by the United State Senate:

1. It would delight Germany beyond all measure and encourage the reactionary group to such bold steps as now they dare not dream of. For it would mean to Germany that the Allies had hopelessly disagreed among themselves as to the aims and ends of the war, and it would also establish that belief which evidently is now being deeply grounded in Germany that after all the United States is more sympathetic in the long run with Germany than with England.

2. It might mean that the whole of Europe would soon be plunged into anarchy and chaos. For it is to the United States that Europe is looking for the steady hand. We are the youthful nation and have great resources. Furthermore, we are trusted by the nations of Europe. With us beside them England and France feel that they can handle the chaotic conditions of Europe. With us in the group the numerous nations and races now in turbulent and seething state, with vague aspirations hardly capable of expression except in restlessness, would feel a confidence in the great powers which they will never feel with us outside, snugly sitting at home, having washed our hands of the burden of the world beyond our shores.

3. It will mean that our boys fought in vain. We went into this war "to make the world safe for democracy," to secure lasting peace, to guarantee the rights of small nations, to make it impossible for big powers to do what they pleased in the world. If we withdraw from the community of nations now not one of these things will have been attained. France is powerless to do much for a long time. If we withdraw it leaves only England. But England cannot alone keep the world safe for democracy, cannot alone make permanent peace, cannot alone guarantee the rights of small nations, cannot alone prevent nations from doing again what Germany did, that is, acting as they please.

4. It will mean that everybody in Europe will lose faith forever in the United States. We have been in Europe for three months and most of every day was spent in talking with Frenchmen, Englishmen, Italians, Poles and members of every race in Europe. President Wilson was absolutely right when he said that if the United States fails to ratify the League it will break the heart of the world. It was the United States that put idealism into the war. It was the United States that said the great end of the war was a community of free, liberty-loving, peace-loving nations pledged to live together in peaceful co-operation and maintain such law and order in the world as should make it a safe world for all peoples. The war has merely prepared the way to do this. The League of Nations has been set up purposely to fulfill this task. It is simply the Allies staying together, inviting other nations of like ideals to co-operate with them, to accomplish this task. If the United States leaves the Allies now, refuses to remain in the League, all Europe will look upon her as a deserter, as a nation that puts her hand to the plough and then turns back, as a nation of spent enthusiasm, one which promises big things and then backs out.

5. It would mean not only that all the Tory, Junker, Chauvenist, militarist groups of Europe would rejoice, but that all the Bolshevist, anarchistic revolutionary groups of Europe would rejoice with them. No one can have failed to notice the bitter hostility of the radical groups, even in our own country, to the League. It is intense in the Bolshevist countries of Europe. Why? Because the League is the only promise of law and order in Europe, and law and order are their most hated things, unless it be democracy. But the League is the one guarantee of democracy in Europe. It looks as if the only two choices that confront Europe are these two—democracy and anarchy.

6. Finally, it would mean that the United States threw away its high place of leadership in the world. We had been a provincial nation, living for ourselves alone except that we had touched the world superbly through our foreign missions. When we were suddenly summoned to take our place among the liberty-loving nations in a great, common world cause we acted at once on an international scale, putting our armies in Europe beside those of England and France. We began to think in international world terms. Soon we became the recognized voice of the aspirations of the whole world. The Allies looked to us to state the ideals of the war. We sprang as by miracle into world leadership. That leadership we did not lose at the Peace Conference in spite of what the carpers say. (We dread to think of what might have come out of the Peace Conference had America not been there). That leadership we can still exercise if we will. It is a wonderful opportunity. But if we refuse to enter in this the New Community of Nations, pledged to establish justice in the world, to care for the oppressed of all lands, and to settle all disputes as neighbors cherishing good-will, then we resign our place of world leadership; we have no more voice in world affairs, the great, new world, born out of the war, stumbles gropingly and haltingly on its upward path and we have neither share nor leadership in its holiest aspirations.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

BURLINGTON LETTER

The work on the new church is being pushed to completion as rapidly as possible. If there are no unforeseen delays it will be in readiness for the State Conference in November. We are hoping to occupy the building before that time. We would like to begin our fall work in the new building. Private class rooms are being provided for each class in the Sunday school and there is ample provision for other class rooms as the school may grow. Each of the departments will be properly provided for. If desired the building is so planned, as to take care of a full departmental school.

As is the custom of the church, the pastor was given a month's vacation, which he is now enjoying. The first two weeks were spent in the Rainey Hospital of Burlington, undergoing minor operations. This was not a pleasant way to begin a vacation but we trust it will prove profitable. We are finding it so, only two weeks after leaving the hospital. The latter end of our vacation we are spending at our old home in Nansmond County, Virginia. It is good to go back home and visit the scenes of childhood and cheer the hearts of loved ones. There is no place like home. God established a great institution when He established the home. It antedates all other institutions and in it is wrapped up the destiny of individuals and nations. All that tends to destroy the home is an enemy of human society.

We need in this day a new sense of the value of the Church and its services. The vacation season should help to awaken this sense. The fact that we are deprived of the privilege of public worship in the accustomed place, should awaken in us a new appreciation of its value and its importance. The church service helps us in a way that no other public service can. In the church service we are brought face to face with the eternal verities; we come face to face with God, we worship Him together, we face our common duty and are toned up spiritually and thus better prepared for coming tasks. The vacation season will prove a great blessing to the cause of Christ, if pastors and peoples will now take up the work with greater zeal. Let there be a real purpose to do more and to be more faithful than ever before. There is room for improvement in all of us. We can render better service, if we set our hearts upon it. Greater faithfulness will gladden the hearts of pastors and inspire them for larger service. Every congregation has the power to make or mar the work of its pastor. Be faithful to the mid-week service, the Sunday school, the preaching service and in all the little duties that can be performed by a member. These who are faithful in small things will not be unfaithful in great things.

Let there be an expression of the new sense of value that has come to us during the vacation season, concerning things spiritual.

J. W. HARRELL.

August 22, 1919.

A new age of giving, this is, and the hope of a new day for the Church is here. We have made the Church a "poor house" long enough. God is beginning to get His share of the world's money that the Kingdom's work may go forward.

SUFFOLK LETTER

The odds and ends of vacation make a sort of crazy quilt in one's life. There is nothing as coherent as honest work. When out of regular service everything is disjointed, aimless, and heterogenous. But summer letters are not supposed to be deep, heavy, or of much value. Yet recreation is as necessary as work; for "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy;" and one might coin an expression of his own and say that "all play and no work makes Jack a useless boy."

I have been at "Fuquay Springs" for a week and will leave next Monday, stop over in Louisburg to see the Holdens and resume work in Suffolk the first Sunday in September. Annie Staley, William Staley Cheatham, and Dr. C. H. Rowland and family were here, but they have all gone. Dr. Rowland and I had two fine days on Mr. J. Beale Johnson's pond, with "good luck" as fishermen call it. His kindness and that of his wife linger with us through a whole year. The abandon of a day on a pond is the completest recreation to those who have the spirit of Isaac Walton.

We attended Sunday school at Wake Chapel on Sunday where Dr. Rowland had preached a great sermon the third Sunday. In addition to the regular exercises, they had a missionary program of interest in which nineteen children took part; and at the close, blocks were taken for the Santa Isabel church. The Woman's Board had allotted $25.00 to this church and they had forty-two names at twenty-five cents each, making $10.50. This is a good start and they will get the sum allotted.

Among other incidents in this quiet corner I had a pleasant interview with "Swizzell." Now "Swizzell" is an old bachelor, a local wit, a genuine tar heel, and a good jolly fellow. Dr. Rowland introduced us and we enjoyed his bright sayings. It is impossible to report wit or even to repeat it as the chief thing is "personality" and "spontaneity." The first thing that attracted my attention was while he was seated in front of a store. It is restful to sit in front of a store for conversation, though that good old feature of store-life is fast passing away. Well, a young fellow drove up in a buggy, hopped out and handed "Swizzell" his buggy reins and said, "Hold this for me till I go in the store." "Swizzell" took the lines and said to the boy: "Have you got a nickel?" When the boy returned and took the reins he said, "Thank you," "Swizzell" handed over the reins and replied: "That won't buy anything." I asked him if he were a member of the church. He said: "I am like the drunken man who was standing against a church and a man asked him the same question, and he said: "I am leaning that way."

A man asked him one day why he kept his mouth open and he replied: "The main spring is broken and I can't shut it." On another occasion after a long rainy spell, some one asked him why he kept his mouth open and he said: "I am sunning my teeth for fear they will mill dew."

One day he was driving a cart and an old woman said, "What are you doing, Dick?" and he said: "I am raising nothing and hauling it off as fast as I can." These are a few of his original witticisms.

Soon after the interview I saw him leaving the mill with a sack of meal around his neck. "Dick Smith" is a very clever fellow, full of sunshine and good cheer, harmless and undefiled and the world would be happier if it had more of the real and less of the artificial in life.

In passing I will remark that one mystery remains to be solved. Why does every neighborhood produce a leader of music for the church, a wit, a first class person for every department of life? The distribution of the human race over the whole earth, the distribution of talent where it is needed, and the distribution of the products by nature and their re-distribution by man, equalizes God's blessings and man's use of them so that all men and all ages are on a par. The ratio of human condition is fixed quantity, and the differences are accidental and artificial. When all the subjective and objective human relations are analyzed it will be found human differences are imaginary. The story of the tramp who was refused food at the rich man's door on the theory that the tramp had "appetite and no food," while the rich man had "food but no appetite" illustrates the point. Capital and labor are on the same basis whether they knew it or not.

The Masonic Lodge 614 had a barbecue on the night of the twenty-sixth to which I was invited and I made successful test of what they say of Fuquay Springs, that you can eat all the barbecue then drink Fuquay water and suffer no harm. There was a large company of men and women at the banquet, the provision was super-abundant, and seventeen members came out from Raleigh to help in giving the third degree.

W. W. STALEY.

President Wilson leaves this week on an extended tour in behalf of the League of Nations, the Peace Treaty and his party. A number of newspaper men will follow his trail and undertake to get the crystallized opinion in regard to the present administration.

FROM THE FAR SOUTH

Dingler's Chapel

My first meeting was held with the church at Dingler's Chapel. It began Saturday before the third Sunday in July and continued the following week. Rev. A. H. Shepherd was with us here and assisted in the preaching. Our meeting was not what we had hoped for it to be but we trust much good was accomplished.

Mt. Zion

Our meeting began here Saturday before the first Sunday in August and closed the following Friday. There were seven new members received into the church and it was much revived. Rev. J. H. Hughes was with us here and did some strong, forceful preaching. Mt. Zion is a pleasant place to work and the people are a willing people. We have been with them seven years and have enjoyed our whole stay with them.

Rock Springs

Our next meeting was with our home church at Rock Springs. This was the week following the second Sunday in August. Rev. A. H. Sheppard was with us here and did some good work. His sermons were plain and full of Gospel truths. Our meeting closed here Thursday afternoon with eight additions to the church and the church greatly revived.

Shady Grove

The meeting began at Shady Grove Saturday before the third Sunday in August and closed the following Thursday night. There were twenty-three additions to the church. Brother Shepherd was with us here and did some good work. This is our first year with these good people and we find them pleasant to work with. They are a consecrated people and willing to do things.

On the last night of our meeting here we just merely mentioned the fact that we had some obligations to meet with our Conference in October and in five minutes we had raised our apportionments and a little over. We are predicting great things for the church and people at Shady Grove.

NOTICE

To the churches of the Alabama Christian Conference:

For several years some of our pastors have been over-worked and for that reason churches and pastors have suffered. We now have in our Conference a splendid young minister who is making good as a preacher and we feel he will make good as a pastor. We feel sure that some of our churches will do well to secure his services as a pastor.

J. D. DOLLAR,
J. H. HUGHES.

Mrs. C. H. Wells—It is not our privilege to attend a Christian church, so THE SUN is like a message from home every week—something we do not like to do without.

UNION, (N. C.)

We began our protracted meeting at Union, Alabama, on the fourth Sunday in July. Brother George D. Eastes of Raleigh, N. C., came on Monday and remained with us till the close of the meeting on Friday afternoon. Brother J. W. Holt of Burlington, a former pastor, was with us one day. Brother Eastes did the preaching after his arrival. He is a strong preacher and is especially adapted to revival work. We had a good meeting. The church was much revived, several professed Christ and eight united with the church at the close of the service and were baptized.

Our audiences are growing and the outlook for good progressive work is encouraging. Thanks to members of the church and congregation for kindness shown and special donations made during the year.

P. H. FLEMING.

CONCORD

On Saturday, August 23, 1919, at 4:00 P. M., a number of members met at Concord, Caswell county, for the third business meeting of the year. Since last preaching day a new recess for the pulpit has been constructed. As pastor, I am very grateful it is done. The house looks much better and gives more room inside. It is much more pleasant for the preacher now. A motion was passed in the business transaction to put on the rostrum of the pulpit at once.

In the business meeting the church gave the present pastor a unanimous call for next year and was approved by the congregation on Sunday.

Sunday afternoon, at 3:00 P. M., a large crowd gathered to witness the baptism of the candidates who joined the church during the revival meeting. This took place in the "Old High Mill Pond."

There will be, the Lord willing, all day service the fourth Sunday in September. Come, bring dinner, something is in store for all.

L. L. WYRICK.

Elon College, N. C.

The street car employees in Charlotte last week went on a strike and some of them got struck. The general public and transportation men came in conflict. The State had to send special troops to quiet the situation. Many were wounded while several were killed. Charlotte is called the "Queen City" of North Carolina and queens are supposed to be of a quiet nature, but she rose up in her indignation one time and placed a blot upon her history that a thousand years will fail to erase.

The matter of strikes and riots seems to be an epidemic. Last Sunday in Knoxville, Tenn., a scene of rioting and bloodshed was witnessed. Fifteen persons were killed and a number wounded. A negro was accused of murdering a white woman. The mob battered down parts of the jail, turned out all the prisoners, and looted the sheriff's home. It took eleven hundred of the State's National guard to patrol the streets. The mob spirit is dangerous and all of us are hoping that something may be done to relieve the country of such uprisings.

IN HONOR OF THE RED CROSS NURSES

Among all the service flags flown in America in the past two years, one flag is unique. Upon it burns a single star of blue; the others are all gold, 198 of them.

This flag hangs in the marble building of the American Red Cross national headquarters in Washington. The single blue star represents the 19,877 Red Cross nurses in active duty with the army and navy nurse corps and the Red Cross during the war. The gold stars represents the Red Cross dead.

The first two were sewn on the flag in memory of Mrs. Edith B. Ayres and Miss Helen Burnett Wood, of Chicago, both of whom were killed by the explosion of a defective shell on the Steamship Mongolia in May, 1917, while on their way to France.

The last star on the flag is for Jane A. Delano, the "Florence Nightingale of the war," who directed the American Red Cross Nursing Service and sleeps today with the American dead in the military cemetery at Savenay, France.

The other 195 stand for nurses who rest today in the soils of many lands—America, England, Belgium, France, even Germany, where a white cross marks the grave of Jessie Baldwin, Summerville, Pa., who was cited for extraordinary heroism when her hospital was shelled and later, going with the Army of Occupation, died at Coblenz.

Wednesday, September 17, will be celebrated throughout the nation as "Constitution Day," in commemoration of the Birthday of the Constitution of the United States. This movement is promoted by the National Security League, in association with the other leading patriotic societies of the country, with the purpose of strengthening the people's faith in our form of government and thus combating atheistic Bolshevism.

The Christian Orphanage received a handsome gift last week from the hands and heart of Mr. Lawrence S. Holt, Sr., Burlington, N. C. The gift was a complete office outfit consisting of one $75.00 desk, one desk chair, twelve chairs costing $150.00, one new Underwood typewriter, one typewriter desk, one typewriter table, one sectional book-case, one stationery cabinet, one filing case and one filing-card case, and many other valuable office attachments.

Dr. J. P. Barrett has received and accepted a call to the Columbus, Georgia, church and expects to take charge about the first of October. Dr. Barrett is spending some time with old friends and relatives in Eastern Virginia. His address till October 1 will be Zuni, Virginia.

Dr. J. W. Wellons will preach at High Point, N. C., on Sunday, September 7, at 11 A. M. The church has had posters printed announcing the coming of the oldest minister in the Christian denomination, and possibly in any other denomination.

Elon College opens September 10. Remember the date.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

EDUCATION AND CHARACTER

By W. A. Harper LL.D., President Elon College

Character shall mean in this brief article, character of proper type, Christian character. Does education assist in producing it?

A great many well-intentional saints think it does not. A few years ago a progressive business man said to me he admired the saints of his acquaintance, but regretted their ignorance. He was convinced that ignorance and saintliness are related as cause and effect. He specifically asserted that educated preachers are not consecrated and referred to the twelve apostles as "little ones" and as "ignorant and unlearned."

Were they? They had spent more than three years in the greatest university of history with the Son of God as president and sole professor. With Him they had searched the Scriptures, just as He urged its ecclesiastical high-brow enemies to do and with Him they had tested His wonderful teachings in terms of life. He sent them out in two occasions alone to do reputation work, and marvellous success had attended their ministry. On one occasion nine of them were in dire straits because they had not profited by His prayer-life in the effort to meet a crisis in His absence.

Were these men "ignorant and unlearned?" Their enemies said so but they did not know the standards in the university from which they had graduated. It was not in the list of standard synagogue or rabbinical schools of that day and they held no academic degrees. We must not accept their charge as substantiated unless the work-years of these men warrant and justify their assertion. Did they?

Peter was an alumnus of which any university might boast. He was a man of action impetuous, making mistakes, but this cursing fisherman demeaned himself well on the day of Pentecost and throughout his eventful career in the infant Church. His trainings gave him Christian stability. He became a rock and his impetuosity made him the initiator of the growing Kingdom. To transform a weakness into an excellency shows the value of education, but only Christian education could do that.

It is sometimes said that education develops what is in a man. If that were all it could do, Peter would have been the arch curser of the ages and a veritable dynamite mine as to temper. Secular education would have done that for him. But Christian education transforms the man till he becomes a mighty force for righteousness in the very line of his former weakness. That is why there is more hope of a spendthrift for generosity after a man becomes a Christian than there is for a miser. Peter was more hopeful from the beginning than Judas though Judas was promising enough to become the Bursar of the First Christian University.

John was the real scholar of the school. The philosophy of his gospel and epistles surpasses anything in the history of human thought. Not all students in a college become scholars. John was a scholar. He like Peter had a weakness. He loved. He loved himself and his brother and his own family. Now love and selfishness are very close akin. It is the object loved that marks the difference. John was a self-lover. His course in the university of Jesus did not eliminate his passionate love. It transformed, redirected that passion so as to make his brethren the center of his affection, and we find this splendid fellow in his gospel telling of the love of God (Jno. 3:16) and in his epistle (1 Jno. 3:16-17) declaring that we cannot love God unless we love our brethren, and yet he wanted the chief places in Christ's Kingdom for his brother and himself his mother approving, when he first entered the university. Here is a man of scholarly tastes essentially selfish, after graduation, forgetting self in his love for others and devoting his scholarship to an age-long service to the spiritual life of the race.

James was an organizer and administrator. He would have been a billionaire in this day had he gone into business. He would have been rich in any day. Like his brother he was self-centered. Most business men are. They have an idea business and selfishness are twins. They need a new birth into the spirit of Brotherhood. Business men must learn that labor and capital are partners, not competitors. James did not have this notion. He wanted to organize the Kingdom of Jesus in advance. He wanted John to be prime minister and he would be chancellor of the exchequer. He came out of the university an organizer and administrator still, but he had lost his selfishness. He is now loyal to a cause, and not to himself, and that cause is the spread of the Good News to the ends of the earth, with all the give and take, with all the adaptability that would require. Jews and Gentiles were in the early Church. The Jews wanted the Gentiles to become Jews. They could not distinguish between the essentials and the non-essentials in religion. The situation was critical when the fathers heard the commissioners from the Gentile Church at Antioch make their report at Jerusalem. James took in the situation at a glance. All born administrators have this talent. A new field is to be entered by the business. New methods must be instituted, yet the new field must not split the business into the businesses. He spoke the words of wisdom—this chairman of the Board of Directors of the early church did—calling for concessions, for sacrifices, for unselfishness on both sides, and the day was saved. This man was so prominent as an organizer in the Church that its enemies honored him with the first martyrdom among the apostles. In his Christian education wrought a gracious work.

Matthew was another honored graduate of the University of Jesus. He was a self-server. He sought the office of collecting taxes that he might gain riches for himself and influence with the alien government that oppressed his people. After his graduation he writes the finest account of the finest life ever lived and in its 25th chapter gives us the finest encomium of service as central in the Christian life ever penned. The gospel, according to Matthew, is the Magna Charta of the social program of the Church of our day. In it he is still a server, but his weakness has become his strength.

His impulse to serve is socialized, and he delights to paint his Master as servant of all. Only Christian education could have so transformed this publican.

But even Christian schools fail in some cases. Not all who graduate from Christian Colleges have the spirit of Christ. Jesus had twelve to graduate, while seventy went through the sophomore class, and a great company matriculated only to drop the course. These things are recorded here to comfort the aching hearts of the teachers and administrators of Christian Colleges. One of the twelve failed. He failed in the line of his weakness. The love of money was his undoing. It will ruin any Church. The university had given him a thorough course not only in the dangers of this weakness of his life, but in the proper use of the thing he loved. He simply would not yield and be transformed. Jesus failed to reach him. So Christian Colleges fail today. Judas might just as well have attended a rabbinical school as the University of Jesus, so far as character is concerned.

We have not the time to consider the other seven men. They were marvellously helped by their education. The leadership of the world is now being helped by it. The danger is that the education men get may be the Juda type—such as to develop their inborn qualities, strengths and weaknesses alike, and not have the transforming power which we find in Peter, John, James, Matthew, and other men who became everything else than "ignorant and unlearned" and for whom the phrase "little ones" had no significance, as their powers ripened under the matchless Teacher of Nazareth.

Christian education, the education that puts character first and always, such education is the hope of the world. Without it we perish. Without it, there would have been no Church of Christ in the world today. Without it, the Church we have will lose her spiritual leadership for the race. Without it, the Kingdom cannot come.

The Church must see to it that education and character go hand in hand increasingly. So shall the Kingdom dawn in its radiant glory. In the spiritual realm, education and character are one and inseparable, now and forever.

MISSIONARY

MY FRIEND, THE BIBLE CANNOT

In writing these few letters about certain types of Japanese Christians whom I rejoice to call my friends I am not simply seeking to acquaint the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN with the individuals mentioned, nor even merely with the types produced, but, rather, to place emphasis upon the fact that the Oriental mind and heart are quite as ready in their response to the impact of the Gospel as is the case with the Occidental; and that the impress of the Gospel upon the Oriental lip is as wide and deep and rich as it becomes upon the Occidental lip; and that in consequence of these facts, the evangelization of the Oriental world finds its hindering problems, not so much in the Orient as in the hesitancy of the church at home to carry forward a vigorous program for reaching the whole world with the life saving truth.

Mrs. Watanabe Toki is the widow of one of our earlier Japanese pastors who fell a victim to that dread disease, tuberculosis, about fifteen years ago. During his illness she not only tenderly nursed him and cared for her three small children, but continued much of his work as pastor, even to the extent of going regularly to the surrounding villages to teach the women and children whom he had been wont to gather for Christian instruction. After his death she continued his Christian work, teaching the Sunday school, holding meetings for women, calling on women in their homes, using her own house as a place where the Christians and inquirers of both sexes might meet for worship and prayer; in fact doing practically every item of a pastor's work except actual preaching, and even doing much of that under the more simple terminology of "leading" meetings, etc.

Thus she has continued for fifteen years, and now, with her children grown and away from home, she is living and laboring, as above outlined, in a town in Northeast Japan, somewhat isolated geographically, alone in her home, quite destitute of Christian fellowship save for the little handful of believers who have been won mostly by her own faithful efforts.

In the village lives a half crazed man who has made three unsuccessful attempts to murder her, on account of which we have feared for her safety and have on different occasions urged her to remove to a nearby city she would have a greater abundance of Christian fellowship, be in perfect safety from bodily harm, and at the same time have as large a field of Christian service, nothing would be lost in the sum total of service, and much would be gained in the way of personal safety. Would she go? Not a step! "If I go who will come to this village to teach these people about Jesus?" That was her cry; and there she stays to this day. I wonder if Heaven has an especially bright assortment of crowns for such loyalty and devotion as that? Oh, God! Help us to love that. Help us to see the world's need of Thee as Mrs. Watanabe sees the Inogawa people's need of Thee and help us to respond with the loyalty and devotion and heart love with which she gives her very life to satisfy their great need!

Suggested Sermon Outlines

- I. The increase of knowledge:
 1. Through school instruction.
 2. Through journalism and ephemeral literature.
 3. Through books and lasting literature.
- II. The application of knowledge:
 1. To produce better living and higher standards.
 2. To win men to Christ.
 3. To extend the kingdom of God.

Reaching the World With the Word

1. How foreign missionaries must reduce spoken languages to writing, and create readers and Christian literature—necessity and value.

2. Bible translations and circulation.

3. Religious journalism—denominational and undenominational papers and magazines.

4. Christian text-books and school literature (for Sunday schools and others).

5. How the printing press has thus aided in spreading Christianity—God seems to have blessed the agency.

Materials may be found in the following books: Social Aspects of Foreign Missions, by Faunce; Modern Missions in the East, Lawrence; Educational Conquest of the Far East, Lewis; Rex Christus, Smith; Christian Literature in the Mission Field, Ritson; The Christian Movement in the Japanese Empire. All books can be obtained of C. B. RIDDLE, Publishing Agent, Burlington, North Carolina.

Mrs. A. A. Terrell—I pray that our people may be awakened to a sense of duty to see the need of our Church paper.

We have limped along trying to carry on God's work by taking collections. If we are to win the world to Christ and for Christ we must make offerings. Think of the difference in taking and making, also of the difference between collection and offering. Call it an offering.

High Point, N. C. suffered the shame and disgrace of a strike and rioting last week. Labor and capital seem to have been arrayed against each other and the outcome was rather bitter. Many were wounded and possibly a few were killed. Too bad for High Point. A few more things like this and it will have to change its name to Low Point.

This is a day of service, not only in deeds but in dollars. Dedicate all to humanity's good.

FOR THE BENEFIT OF EVERY CHILD IN THE COMMUNITY

(Burdette B. Brown)

A Program

The following program emphasizes the stress points in the church work of conserving the life and best development of the children.

I. CONSERVATION OF HEALTH BY MEDICAL EXAMINATION AND NECESSARY TREATMENT. This means that every child shall receive a complete examination by a physician at least once each year and if any defects or weaknesses are discovered, that they shall receive prompt treatment until corrected. Sixty to eighty per cent of the child population is physically handicapped. They have breathing defects, enlarged tonsils and carious teeth which have a direct effect upon the eyes, the heart and the nutrition. Neglect of such conditions often results in diseases that kill in adult life. It is a mistake to neglect a child that has some remediable defect until it is seriously ill, the effects of which may be life-long injury. Preventive measures and prompt treatment will usually avoid the illness and save unnecessary expense.

A primary cause of Infant Mortality can be removed if expectant parents are instructed in the proper care of the baby. Community Health Stations and Hospital Clinics are agencies that can make the plan effective. The influence of the church can do much to create right sentiment for their establishment and maintenance.

II. ADEQUATE NOURISHMENT TENDS TO INSURE STRONG VITALITY. Food must be selected that is wholesome in quality and sufficient in quantity and variety, and it must be properly prepared in order to nourish the body. Thirty-three per cent of the children of the United States are estimated to be underweight. In New York City in the third and fourth school grades 120,000 are undernourished. These partly starved bodies cannot support either strong mentality or strong spiritual sensibility and they easily become the prey of disease. The Nutrition Class, Calculation of Food Values and Record of the Children's Diet will interest parents and supply them with instruction which they ought to have.

III. SYSTEMATIC RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION IS ESSENTIAL TO THE HAPPINESS OF MANKIND. In the best sense religious instruction should keep pace with grade work and be reported to parents with equal punctilio. When half our child population is without religious instruction, efforts to provide it should be redoubled. Justice, love, truth, faith in God, in personality and in the spiritual realities are the very foundations of government and order.

IV. ENROLLMENT IN PUBLIC OR PRIVATE SCHOOLS WITH PROVISION FOR REGULAR INSTRUCTION MAKES EDUCATED CITIZENS. The percentage of illiteracy in the United States is discredibly high and constitutes an element of weakness that need not exist. In New York, Chicago and other large cities tens of thousands of children are crowded out, placed on part time or absent themselves from school. Most of these are from homes of poverty or misfortune and need the benefits of the school much more than those who have an uplifting environment. Whether the school be in a fine building or on a park bench is minor in importance to having a teacher and a lesson with regularity throughout the school year.

Personal Hygiene, by which is meant cleanliness and proper care of the body, should be included with play activities in the regular course of instruction.

V. THE HANDICAPPED CHILD SHOULD HAVE AN OPPORTUNITY TO BECOME TRAINED. Those unfortunates whose physical or mental capacity limits their field of accomplishment and who as a result are backward in school, should be taught simple vocations that they may become self-supporting, and those recognized as afflicted with amnesia should have protecting supervision in institutional homes.

If the Church Committee is informed how to place children in private and institutional homes when emergencies arise, it will supply a much to be desired service and save embarrassments.

The supervision of delinquent children, after dismissal from institutions where they have been well cared for, can be rendered by a competent probation officer who may also be a factor in securing enforcement of the Child Labor law.

VI. CO-OPERATION OF ALL COMMUNITY AGENCIES INSURES SUCCESS. The public conscience should be thoroughly awakened to the importance of this work and a general, whole-hearted co-operation in making the program effective should be secured. Private agencies must demonstrate its worth and sustain it for a time, but it is a community responsibility, and full success will be attained when the entire community undertakes the program.

JOINING THE OLD WORLD WITH THE NEW

The children of the world are to know more truly the meaning of brotherhood than has been possible since the beginning of creation. Seas and old landmarks do not have their former prestige in forming barriers; languages, creed and opinions take second place to this newer idealism that is possessing the hearts and minds and works of the school children of America in their solicitude for the children of Europe who have been ruthlessly deprived of all that they really should have. They need everything that makes up the list of the physical necessities of man, but most of all, they need a friend. The Junior Red Cross with the characteristic friendliness of youth has offered its hand, its heart and its activities in assisting the needy ones to a normal plane of living in order that they may have homes wherein is retained that sweet intimacy of family life, its protected seclusion, its playtimes, its chores, its chumminess—and in knowing the joys of all these things, that they in turn may radiate happiness to the whole world.

Rev. B. F. Black has accepted a call to the Franklinton, North Carolina, pastorate. Brother Black says that he wants it written "Franklinton Parish."

We trust that Dr. Harper's article in this issue will have a wide reading, for it deserves such.

Rev. B. F. Black and family are in Eastern Virginia. Brother Black is preaching and lecturing in old territory. He is this week at Oakland in a meeting with Brother I. W. Johnson, and on the first Sunday in September will be a meeting with Brother Johnson at Liberty Spring.

The final call: Elon is our college, built with our money, maintained by our means—and it deserves our support in sending our sons and daughters. All aboard for Elon. That is the next stop, and the date is September 10.

Rev. J. T. Kitchen, Windsor, Va., has very ably contributed articles to our "Worship and Meditation" page. His two articles this week will be read with interest and delight. Brother Kitchen is a sweet spirited man. May he continue these articles.

We have no further news from Rev. J. G. Truitt, but presume that he is recovering slowly.

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

SOME BRIEF PASSING REFLECTIONS

Do not publish the sad, unpleasant things which occur in your experience, but tell the glad, good things that spring into your life, and it may not be best to write and talk too much about gray hairs and the deeply cut furrows on your cheeks and brows, but think about the beautiful and wonderful things of God, and it will help you to look more lovely, refreshed and happy.

If you have not already done so cultivate the practice of speaking kind, tender, helpful, loving words to one another in the midst of discouragement, trouble, cares and great responsibilities. Sweet and inspiring words are a great help to them who are in any adverse condition, and will give a charming influence to every depressed or discouraged heart.

Try to be as happy as you can with present surroundings, and if you have not as much as you desire, do not worry and cause your wife, your husband, your children, and your friends to feel unhappy, but listen to what a great man said about learning to be contented in any condition. He said: "I have learned." Let us try to learn it. Do not fret and blame some one for the present circumstances over which you have no control. Parties have been known to censure one another in times of need and destitution for their unfortunate conditions, when, in truth, they were not blamable, but needed that sympathy and encouragement which the occasion greatly demanded. "Keep a watch on your words, my darling, for they are sweet as the fresh, new honey or like the bee's terrible sting."

By all means try to save the feelings of the depressed and the oppressed ones, and help them to have more self reliance that they may, if possible, rise to better and greater success. It is not always easy to consider the poor and needy when one is possessed with plenty. He often has not the time nor the inclination to consider the condition of the destitute ones.

The one who is healthy, strong and active cannot fully realize the position of the other one who is sick, weak and disabled. But when the reverse condition takes place and the once strong and active body is weakened by disease how marked the change and how different the feelings. Many things have to be learned by experience and observation, and the bitter must some time be taken after much sweetness and luxury have been indulged. And the bitter is more unpleasant after a long time of sweet indulgence. In other words when you have lost what you once had you feel it more keenly and look at things with less hope and more discouragement. When you are gaining and making something you feel happy, but when losing, anxiety and trouble take hold of you and bind you with a terrible grip. Prosperity elates the heart and fills it with gladness, while adversity depresses the spirits and binders the rise of progressive ambition; but this may be necessary to develop the latent powers of capacity and ability in the individual. Necessity has done much to lift from a lower to a higher place in human activity, as many incidents in life have a history in them showing that it is true.

New, fresh, truthful, honest thought is what the current of passing events needs to satisfy the minds of them who have to meet the demands of the times, and to inspire more confidence in them who are afraid of being deceived by those with whom they come in contact. For in some places, so many are being deceived, that others fear to act even when the way before them appears to be inviting. It will take much care, prudence and prayer to steer clear of the breakers of indulgence temptation and sin. Our safe and only hope is in Christ the friend of sinners and the Savior of the world. And if He were to strictly mark iniquity against us, but very few would be saved. But Jesus loves us tenderly and is willing to forgive the humble penitent one who is seeking the joy of His salvation. Every doubting, sinful, polluted one ought to look into Him with new hope and a stronger faith, expecting greater strength and a better development in the Christian life.

J. T. KITCHEN.

DO YOU SMOKE?

Yes or no may be the answer. What I want to say is intended for those who answer yes.

Yonder goes down the avenue of life toward the long, lonely valley of death the pale-faced youth, with hacking cough and hectic fever, the cigarette smoker, with trembling hands and yellow stained nervous fingers, trying to grasp and hold the duties and responsibilities that demand his attention. With haggard looks and faltering steps, caused partly by smoking, and some other causes, he finds himself nearing the verge of nervous destruction. To him the habit, often repeated, is a most pleasant time, but an expensive one to himself and an offensive one to others who inhale the odor of his pleasant perfume.

Look at him in the steel grasp of this useless habit, wanting to be free from it, but feels bound more firmly by repeated practice. Is there no way by which he can come out of this condition? Yes, there is a way to stop its use, consider its effect, and refrain from it entirely before you are in the strong grip of the iron hand of destruction.

But the practicing party may say: "I have a right to smoke if I want to, and it is no one's business to object." Well, the reflecting mind will see that it is a right business to object when a person meets you, or sits near you when he is soaked from head to foot with the essence of tobacco. Some are known who have a pipe, cigar, or some smoking machine in their mouths every time you see them. You can smell their odor several feet away, and it is not as pleasant to inhale as some other perfumes.

I was in a large gathering recently, and on the next seat sat a man whose clothes were saturated with that objectionable odor from his lovable perfume. If there are habits which are offensive to other people, the guilty party ought to get clear of them. Let us try, at least, to be attractive, neat sweet and clean, for a clean body is essential as well as a clean soul. There are many good (?) people who smoke, but it takes their time, retards their energy, dethrones their ambition, quickens the excited action of the heart, numbs the sensibilities, and is a useless, unnatural habit. It will be a good helpful, healthful thing to stop right now. Stop it now. It will be so much better for you.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

There are four days in the year that our children very greatly enjoy: Christmas, when they look for something from Santa Claus; the day of the Board of Trustees meets, when we serve them ice cream; the day on which the Burlington and Reidsville Sunday schools come for their picnics.

This year the Burlington school came on the afternoon of August 21. The time was a joyful one and the occasion a delight to us. We had in advance prepared a long table on which to spread the splendid supper which was so small item in the event.

The Reidsville school held its picnic on the twenty-seventh and spent the day with us. It was a delightful crowd of children and our little folks greatly enjoyed being with them as they did with the children from Burlington. The table was filled with good things to eat and it was a beautiful sight to see how it was enjoyed by all present. After the meal talks were made by Uncle Wellons, and Revs. L. I. Cox and L. L. Wyriek, also Mr. Lambert, Superintendent of the Reidsville Sunday school.

It is a delight to have these Sunday schools come here for their picnics each year. We trust that they greatly enjoy them. We are certainly glad to have them. We welcome any and all Sunday schools to picnic with us. When you bring the children of your school here they mingle with our children and it brings us in closer touch with each other. We have a beautiful lawn and plenty of house room for shelter. The children join me in extending a hearty welcome to all Sunday schools.

Donations

Mebane Bedding Company, two mattresses; Senior Philathea Class, Durham Sunday school, furnishings for one room, consisting of mattress, springs, bed linen and curtains. A Friend, Burlington, N. C., who has a big heart full of sympathy for little orphans, and as has been truly said of him, "A man who scatters his flowers as he goes along," made us a contribution of twenty books, by O. S. Marden. We find these books full of good thought and knowledge that will be elevating to our children. We are grateful for all these contributions.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 14, 1919

The Future Life. Matt. 25:31-46; John 14:2, 3; II Cor. 5:10; I Peter 1:3-5.

Golden Text: "For we must all be made manifest before the judgment seat of Christ." II Cor. 5:10.

We must all wish we knew more of the future life than we do, and yet we have been told a very great deal. We know the conditions for entrance; we know it is our Father's House. We know that Jesus is there. We know that He rose from the dead, and "became the first fruits of them that slept," and we know that because He lives, we shall live also. Phillips Brooks is reported to have said: "Some things I hope, some things I believe, but this I knew," "I know that my Redeemer liveth," said Job. "We know—we have a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens," says the Gospel writer. "I know in whom I have believed." Oh, yes, there are many things we know. We may feel assured, also, that we shall know each other there. If Moses and Elijah, who died nearly five hundred years apart, knew each other; if the rich man recognized Lazarus, may we not feel sure that we, too, shall know each other there. "For whom the whole family in Heaven and in earth is named," says Paul, speaking on another matter, but giving to many a joyful assurance that the family is still whole, only that part are here and part are there. How shall eternity be spent? Not in idleness, we may be sure. "His servants shall serve him," but it will be a work without weariness, a serving that is not labor; a rejoicing without tiring. And best of all, Jesus will be there. We shall see Him as He is. But this is the preparatory place. There are no wedding garments in Heaven, no oil for lamps, no invitations to the feast. These things we secure here, or not at all.

A story is told of a driver of a stage coach in the old days, who cursed and swore at his horses, was surly to his passengers, and drank at each public house he passed. A godly gentleman said to him one day, "I cannot think what you will do in Heaven. There are no horses there; no cursing or swearing or drinking will be allowed. No one could speak in Heaven as you speak here. I cannot think what you would do there." Are our occupations such that they are fitting us for Heaven, and its work and rest, its prayer and praise?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR SEPTEMBER 14, 1919

The Great Companion and How to Live With Him. Luke 24:13-32.

Some suggestions for this topic will be found in the Sunday school lesson for this week. If we do not live with Him here, we shall not do so hereafter. He would be a stranger to us, and we strangers to Him. "Closer is He than breathing; nearer than hands or feet." Do we ever think when we do or leave undone certain things whether our Unseen Companion likes them? A young man will ask a young lady if she objects to his smoking; do Christian young men ever think to ask their Fellow Traveler that question? When you invite Him into your house, do you think whether the house is fit for His occupancy, as you would think if you invited some friend home with you? Are you as courteous to Jesus in consideration of Him in every-day matters as you are to your friends? Think of these things.

HOW TO ORGANIZE A C. E. SOCIETY

Are you interested in a Christian Endeavor Society for your church? If so, look out for the most interested young person you have in the church; one who will be interested in the work enough to push it. Make that young man, or young lady, chairman of the work until you have worked up the crowd so you can organize the Society. Do not give it up because you do not have a large crowd to start with. Remember some of the most important things are done up in small packages. By all means start the work, if you have only a half dozen. If you need further aid, write Miss Mae Stephenson, Raleigh, N. C.; Mr. A. E. Pye, Greensboro, N. C.; Rev. F. C. Lester, Graham, N. C., or the writer. Any of us will gladly help you solve the problem and organize the work.

Organize with president, vice-president, recording and corresponding secretaries, treasurer, and music director. The following committees will be needed to start the work: Prayer meeting, Lookout, Social, Music, and Information. Send to The Dixie Endeavor, 5 Feger Building, Chattanooga, Tenn., for any information needed. Work up a club of subscriptions for the paper, and get at least one copy of the Christian Endeavor World. Remember that all officers of your Society should come from the young people of the church. When you have completed the organization, report it to me if you are in North Carolina giving full names and addresses of your president and corresponding secretary; also, to Miss Eunice Long, Greensboro, N. C., State Christian Endeavor Secretary giving the same information.

Our Christian Endeavor work in Dixie, is booming, and our aim is for 50,000 new members during our fall drive. Large number? Yes, large but we are going over the top. North Carolina must have 3,000 of this number; Virginia, 5,000; Georgia, 2,000; Alabama, 1,000. Will our churches and pastor's in these States see to it that a Christian Endeavor Society is organized in each church in their fields? We must put this program across. We can do it, and we will. Remember the goals set by the Board of Religious Education for the Southern Christian Convention calls for a Society in every church. Let us get busy, and do the work. Who will be first to organize a Society and report it to the Committee? Special recognition will be given. "Come on! Let's Go!"

J. VINCENT KNIGHT.

Greensboro, N. C.

P. S.:—How about a Christian Endeavor Missionary for the Southern Christian Convention? In the last Convention of the North Carolina Union, the young people of the Christian Church pledged themselves to raise $1,000 for special missions during the year. Our young people in Virginia matched it with another thousand. That means $2,000 will be raised for missions between now and next June. This is a part of no fund, but is special. Why not support at least a native worker and give our young people credit for the work? The money is in sight. Who answers this challenge?

L. C. LITTLE OF LOUISIANA NEW C. E. FIELD SECRETARY

The work of the Christian Endeavor Society in the South is growing so fast that it has been found necessary to employ an additional Field Secretary to cover this territory for the great movement.

L. C. Little of Winfield, La., a school teacher and outstanding leader in the Young People's work in the South in the Methodist Protestant Church is the new Field Secretary and will begin his work on September 1.

The five Field workers employed by the Southern Christian Endeavorers typify the Interdenominational aspect of Christian Endeavor work by their own church affiliation, as each of them represents a different church, one is a member of the Presbyterian Church in China, one of the Southern Presbyterian, one of the Christian (Disciples), one Congregational and the fifth is in the Methodist Protestant Church.

Mr. Little begins his field work in the Mississippi State Christian Endeavor Convention in Canton, August 30 to September 1, and on September 2, begins a tour of the State of Kentucky.

MARRIAGES

HOPKINS-TYREE

At the home of Mrs. Carrie V. Coombs, 1253-24th Street, Newport News, Va., on Wednesday afternoon, August 20, 1919, at 5:30 o'clock, Mr. Grover Chandler Hopkins and Miss Margaret Lee Tyree were united in marriage, Rev. H. J. Fleming of the East End Christian Church officiating. The ceremony was performed in the presence of a number of friends and relatives of both parties.

The bride has a pleasing disposition, is attractive and much respected and loved by those who know her. The groom is a trusted employee of the Shackleford Auto Company, and is a man who knows the value of a friend.

They left a short while after the ceremony, accompanied by friends, for Old Point where they took the boat for Baltimore, going from there to New York and points of interest in the East.

The best wishes of all their friends are extended to Mr. and Mrs. Hopkins, trusting they will have a happy and joyous wedded life.

H. J. FLEMING.

OBITUARIES

WALKER

Mary Anderson Walker died at the home of her husband, Levi H. Walker, deceased, near Anderson's store, July 18, 1919, at the age of seventy-one years, one month and ten days. She was married to Levi H. Walker October 16, 1884. To them were born three children: Dr. J. B. Walker, Gibsonville, N. C., Rosa Walker and W. B. Walker, Union Ridge, N. C.

Mrs. Walker was the daughter of Rev. A. G. Anderson of the Christian Church. She was one of the charter members of Bethel church. A large number of friends and relatives attended the funeral service which was conducted by the writer, and interment was made at Bethel. A good woman, loved and respected by all who knew her, has fallen asleep.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep."

MOORE

We wish to express our appreciation of the life, character, and labors of our co-laborer in the ministry, Rev. H. C. Moore. During the years of his active ministry he served to good acceptance several churches in the Virginia Valley Central Conference.

On July 21, 1919, the death angel came to his home in Charlottesville, Va., and called him from labor to reward. We bow in humble submission to this dispensation of Providence, and, knowing that the Lord doeth all things well, we would endeavor to say, in our grief, not our wills, but thine, O Lord, be done. Brother Moore loved the Christian Church devotedly, and stood firmly for Bible truth, and was an able advocate and defender of the same. Though we say he is dead yet we know his influence for good still lives in many lives, and many may strike glad hands with him in the New Jerusalem because of the good he has done them here in the world below.

In giving this feeble expression of our love and appreciation for our dear brother we would not forget to mention also his faithful wife who during a long married life was a comfort, a joy, and an inspiration to him in his work, and who preceded him to the glory land just three months.

We would comfort ourselves and all who mourn the departure of these two servants of the Lord, by calling to remembrance the scripture which says, "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord; * * * that they may rest from their labors; and their works do follow them."

BOYD

This tribute is to the memory of Sister Ann Boyd who passed to her reward July 23, 1919. At the time of her death she was living at Richmond, Virginia. On July 26 her body was placed in the cemetery at Pleasant Grove Christian church, Halifax County, Virginia. This is where Sister Boyd was born and reared. Her body was borne from the church to the grave by her sons and neighbors, assisted by friends.

Sister Boyd was a woman of fine character and had been a faithful wife to her husband, who preceded her to the spirit world a few years before. She was a sweet and loving mother, of amiable disposition and was loved by all who knew her. She had been a faithful member of the Christian Church from her youth. She was about eighty-two years old. Two sons and two daughters are left to mourn their loss. The love and respect for her was beautifully demonstrated by her relatives and friends in the floral offering.

The writer knew her intimately for nine years, as her pastor. To know her was to love her as one of God's dear children. I hope that the memory of her amiable Christian disposition like a guardian angel may hover around her dear children and as they think of her in their hearts they may say:

"Mother, you have left us.

Here your loss we deeply feel.

But 'tis God that hath bereft us.

He can all our sorrows heal."

The funeral and burial service were conducted by Revs. W. S. Long, J. W. Wellons and the writer.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

REV. LENNEOUS ISAAC COX

Many who take the first glance at THE CHRISTIAN SUN this week will be grief-stricken because of the announcement on the front page. "Rev. L. I. Cox is dead," was the message sounded in our ears at ten o'clock on Friday morning, September 5, 1919, he having passed away two hours earlier at his home in Elon College.

Brother Cox was in his usual health. He went to Raleigh, N. C., on the day before his death, returning home late in the evening, retiring as usual and died almost suddenly the next morning about eight o'clock. For some time he had been suffering with high blood pressure and that seems to have been the means that brought on his untimely death.

Brother Cox was in his fifty-first year, having been born November 20, 1868. He united with Pleasant Ridge Christian church in Randolph County at the age of thirteen. At the time of his death he held his membership with the church at Elon College where he has made his home since 1894. He was a student in Elon College during the sessions of 1894-1896. He was licensed by the Western North Carolina Conference November 12, 1896 and ordained an Elder by the same body November 17, 1898.

He was married to Mattie H. Craven March 27, 1894. He leaves the following family: A widow, one brother, Stanley C. Cox, and one sister, Mrs. Romelia Yow, both of Asheboro, N. C.; six sons, Basil S., Elon College, Newman C., U. S. Navy, Lenneous R., Washington, D. C., Walter Eugene, Woodrow Wilson and William Osborne, Elon College; five daughters, Mrs. Stella C. Huffine, Elon College, N. C., Mrs. Myrtie L. Sutton, Lillington, N. C., and Fleta Lawrence, Alta C. and Mattie Moffitt of Elon College and one grandchild, Martha Sutton.

The funeral took place in the College chapel on Sunday, September 7, at 11 o'clock, the pastor, Dr. N. G. Newman having the service in charge, who read a brief history of the life of the deceased. Dr. P. H. Fleming read the Scripture and Dr. J. U. Newman offered prayer. Dr. J. O. Atkinson delivered the funeral oration, which was based on II Samuel 3:38, "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen in this day in Israel?" His message was timely and paid a fitting tribute to the life of Brother Cox.

The large College auditorium could not begin to seat the people. The rostrum, aisles and stairways were filled with weeping friends who had come to pay a tribute to the man of God who had fallen in the midst of his great work. One hundred and thirty-four automobiles, some twenty-five carriages and wagons and other means of transportation brought Brother Cox's friends from several counties. Large delegations were there from Reidsville, Apple's Chapel, Monticello, Greensboro, New Lebanon, Pleasant Hill, Mt. Bethel and other near by churches where he had been pastor in former years. At the time of his death he was pastor of New Lebanon, Mt. Bethel and Apple's Chapel churches, also Executive Secretary of the North Carolina Christian Conference and Treasurer of Elon College. The following churches were organized and built by him: New Lebanon, First Church, Greensboro, Reidsville, Monticello and Hopedale.

The interment took place in the Elon College cemetery. The abundance of flowers laid on the mound in the presence of a large assembly of sorrowing friends attested the high esteem in which Brother Cox was held.

For a quarter of a century Brother Cox has been a leading spirit in his denomination. He was a born executive, a man of keen insight and deliberative judgment. His counsel was always worth considering. His heart was a throb with the spirit of the Master and his energy was unbounded. He was a worker that never tired, a friend that never turned his back upon you. He was a preacher of the first magnitude, a business man of rare ability. He guided the affairs of his household, of his churches, and the things of his community entrusted to him, with a judicious mind and a steady hand. He began life a poor boy and was a great admirer of the man who didn't mind work. He encouraged young men and women to get an education and inspired them first to get wisdom of the Lord. He was intensely interested in the educational work of his town, both the College and the local school. He was a neighbor who neighbored, and a friend who befriended. This we can speak from experience, because for two years we could chat with each other from our porches.

It takes feeling to describe some things, and so here our words fail. If only the reader could have been present at the funeral and have witnessed the hundreds of men and women in a long line, who viewed for the last time the remains of their former pastor, it could have only in a small way expressed the things which we cannot find words to express. Hundreds who had been converted under his ministry came to join each other in paying a final tribute to the great preacher man, while hundreds in other sections could not come but sorrowed in the hour when the final tributes were being paid.

Rev. L. I. Cox was a man of conviction of purpose that was definite and ever had his heart set upon a goal that was high. His community loses a wise counsellor, his home a devoted and diligent husband, his local church a loyal member, his Conference a deliberative and wise adviser, THE CHRISTIAN SUN a most loyal friend, his denomination a preacher of the Word, a real watchman who stood brave and strong and true upon the walls of Zion in the interest of the Master's work. Brother Cox was a man with the constructive mind, having always in mind the matter of building and building well. He was a champion of missions, a disciple of giving, a friend of education, a lover of that which is true and right and honorable and just.

We mourn with his family because of his untimely going, but to them and all his friends we point to that resurrection morn when the dead in Christ shall rise and tears shall be no more; we point them to that fountain of Truth where our beloved Brother drank and was satisfied. May his going be our gain in that our resolves shall be for greater and nobler things, thus carrying out his aim in life.

I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth, and believeth in me, shall never die.—John 11:25, 26.

REV. OLIVER WORDEN POWERS, D. D.

Rev. Oliver Worden Powers, M. A., D. D., was born May 9, 1856 and was promoted to a higher life on Sunday evening, August 31, 1919. Dr. Powers began his ministry in 1877 and was ordained in 1878. December 24, 1824, he was united in marriage to Miss Florence Davis, of Edinboro, Pa., and graduated from Antioch College in 1890. In 1893 he taught in Demorest Normal School in the state of Georgia. He was a successful pastor at Yellow Springs, Conneaut and Columbus, Ohio. At each of these places he served with great acceptance and did a great work for his denomination and the Kingdom. He has also served other churches in New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio. For two terms he was honored with the presidency of the American Christian Convention. For eight years—1906 to 1914—he was Home Mission Secretary, which office he filled with great acceptance and wrought many commendable changes in the administration of his work. Dr. Powers was twice married, his second wife being Miss Emma C. Southward, Yellow Springs, Ohio.

Dr. Powers had been in declining health for some weeks before his passing, but his actual physical condition was known to only a few of his intimate friends. For a number of years he has made his home in Dayton, Ohio, but death took him at Circleville, Ohio, where he had gone for medical treatment. The funeral took place in the College Chapel at Antioch College where he was buried. Rev. McD. Howshare, pastor of the First Church, Dayton, Ohio, preached the funeral, Dr. F. H. Peters read the Scripture, Dr. Warren H. Denison offered prayer and Rev. Alva M. Kerr read an appreciation of his life. Dr. M. T. Morrill took part in the service at the grave.

Dr. Powers was a man of more than ordinary ability. He was a great reader and was in every sense of the word a student. He had made a specialty of more than one subject and kept abreast with the issues of his day, both in the nation and in his denomination. He was deeply interested in education and the upbuilding of his denomination in both spiritual and educational matters.

The Christian Church loses a good and a great man in the passing of Dr. Powers. It is a great challenge to some young man to aspire to fill his worthy footsteps. His faith in God was strong and his loyalty to the Christian Church was unquestioned.

It was our privilege to personally know Dr. Powers and we feel that we speak the sentiment of all who came in contact with him that his leaving is a keen loss to his friends, to his denomination, to his State and to the Nation.

May the Lord comfort his bereaved ones and be their Companion, their God and their Guide.

I know that my redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth; and though, after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another.—Job 19:25-27.

Below Rev. A. T. Banks gives us the news that Rev. Henry Alexander Albright was translated August 31, 1919. This item reached us after last week's paper had been mailed. The announcement of Brother Albright's passing will be read with sad hearts by all who knew him—and that is a great host of friends.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

NEWS ITEMS FROM FIRST CHURCH, NORFOLK, VA.

The First Christian church is putting on new life as her members who have been on their vacation return to the city, and to their post of duty in their church. The pastor and his wife were away only two Sundays, and since their return the services have been fairly well attended. Brother J. O. Wiggs, our lay leader, having had his vacation earlier, was in charge of the services in the absence of the pastor, thus making it possible to keep the church open all the summer. A splendid number of our members have rested in the mountains, others have traveled as far as Niagara Falls, and others have rested at the sea shore, and still others have visited in the homes of their friends in the good old country sections, and when they all return, we feel sure that interest in all our work will be fine.

Three members have been received since the pastor's return, and we are looking for others to join soon. The Sunday evening services of September 7 and 14 will be given over to the young people, and the pastor will discuss "The Ideal Girl," and the "Ideal Boy." A rally will be held in the Sunday school in the near future, and it is hoped to make it one of the greatest rally days our school has ever held.

Mrs. M. E. Nichols, our Deaconess, Brothers J. W. Mereer, and Deacon G. H. Frey, and Miss Elizabeth Brothers, one of our faithful Sunday school teachers, have all been quite ill here of late, but all seem to be on the road to health again now, and it will be a joy to see them back in our services again.

J. F. MORGAN, Pastor.

HENDERSON

During the months of July and August the churches of Henderson united in holding evening services on the Court Square, the pastors of the various churches preaching alternately. These services have been enjoyed very much. They have given an opportunity for the members of the various congregations to worship together and deepen the spirit of fraternity among the denominations.

Our work here seems to be in good condition, though there is at present no distinctively aggressive or progressive movement. Our attendance both at preaching services and Sunday school is slightly larger than it has been. The Christian Endeavor Society, under the leadership of Mr. F. M. Harward, president, is doing good work, and the other auxiliaries are trying to perform the duties pertaining to them. In all of these we have a loyal and earnest band of workers.

Following the Christian Endeavor prayer service last Wednesday evening, a social was given on the lawn, under the auspices of the Social Committee. Refreshments were served and social intercourse enjoyed by a goodly number of invited guests. It was a pleasant occasion, and we hope thereby new interest has been added to our work.

Fuller's Chapel

The second Sunday in July we began our meeting here. Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., came Tuesday, and thereafter did the preaching, and he did it well. All his sermons revealed Brother Fleming's characteristics of deep thinking, beautiful and forceful diction, spirituality and earnestness. We think much good was accomplished. Many, we are sure, would gladly welcome Doctor Fleming back in a similar service, or at any time. The Fuller's people are good people to serve, and while the inconvenience of access has prevented us from spending as much time among them as we had desired to do, we have thoroughly enjoyed our service with them. We hope to spend more time with these good people soon.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

MOORE UNION

We began our meeting at Moore Union Saturday before the fourth Sunday in August and continued for nine days. I quote the words of some of the oldest men of the community who said: "It was the greatest revival that we have seen in twenty years." I know it was the greatest revival that I have seen for a long while. In fact it was a glorious revival, not only for the members of Moore Union church but for the members of other churches. God only knows the results of this meeting. According to the count that some made there were between thirty and fifty who professed faith in Christ, including those who professed reclamation. Several united with the church.

The congregations were very large from the beginning until the close of the meeting and for all this we give God the glory and honor.

If the Lord permits, we expect to conduct a series of meetings South of this church, a distance of ten or fifteen miles, between now and Conference.

WHAT A PITY

A young minister who has been in the service of the Christian Church for only a few years tells me that he will be compelled to resign his work and enter some other field of employment. He says it takes about two-thirds of his meager salary to pay his car fare.

I am reliably informed of another who has been in the ministerial work for several years, and who is a very successful minister, who says he is getting about enough to pay his car fare. He had a bank account when he began the ministerial work. From this he has been obliged to draw from time to time to pay his bills. He too, says he will have to give up his work and engage in some business to support his family.

These two brethren are fair examples of the average minister of the rural church. What a pity it is that during these prosperous times when money is more plentiful than ever before, wages higher, and everything we farmers have to sell more than doubled in price, we seem to have forgotten our pastors. We are driving them out into the world to make a support.

It is time for us to awake. If our services are worth one hundred per cent more than in normal times, and everything we grow on the farm more than doubled in value, certainly our pastors' salaries should be increased also. They must pay higher prices for the necessities of life, and if we do not pay them a living salary it is up to them to engage in other work or starve. (Read Malachi 3:8-12).

Brethren, let us get busy and see that our pastors get a substantial increase in this year's salary.

A LAYMAN.

REV. R. F. BROWN TO LEAVE DURHAM

Rev. R. F. Brown is to leave Durham and accept the Chapel Hill charge, so we are informed from the following taken from a letter from Brother Brown under date of September :

"I have been called to this pastorate again for another year with an increase in salary, but have declined the call to accept a call to the Chapel Hill church. I am making this change because I am so profoundly impressed with the needs of the Chapel Hill church. I will give my full time to this church, if the Mission Boards stand by the work, which I am sure they will do. This is one of the most strategic points in our denomination and I earnestly solicit the prayers of the brotherhood as I undertake this work."

SALARIES OF PREACHERS AND TEACHERS

(Editorial in Biblical Recorder)

We are publishing in this issue two articles from laymen urging the necessity of increasing the salaries of preachers, and one of them includes teachers. One of the articles is clipped from the Progressive Farmer and was written by Dr. Clarence Poe, Editor. The other is an article written for the Recorder by Dr. J. T. Henderson, Secretary of the Laymen's Movement of the Southern Baptist Convention.

Dr. Poe insists that the salaries of preachers and teachers should be doubled. He shows that the little increases which have been made in salaries do not begin to keep pace with the increase in the cost of living. We commend these articles to the earnest and prayerful consideration of our churches and school committees.

Our attention has just been called to an article in the September number of the American in which Dr. Hibben, President of Princeton University, gives some stunning facts in regard to the salaries paid teachers. One of the most startling examples of the niggardly salaries comes from our own state. Here it is:

"Two advertisements were set side by side in the Raleigh News and Observer of January 13, 1919. One of them read: 'Wanted—Colored barber for white trade in camp town; permanent position. We guarantee $25 per week. Right man can make $35 per week. Let us hear from you at once. Fleming and Elliott, 6 Market Square, Fayetteville, N. C.'

"The second advertisement wasted no words: 'Wanted—Teacher of Latin for Lumberton High School, Lumberton, N. C. Salary $70 per month. W. H. Cale, Superintendent.

"Here was a guarantee to a negro barber that he would be paid $1,300 a year, with a good prospect of $1,820, while the Latin teacher, drawing his salary for nine months, would receive $630—less than half of the negro barber's assured minimum."

Two years ago Brother Middleton made a careful investigation and arrived at the conclusion that the average salary of the Baptist pastors in North Carolina was $750. The small increases that have been made since then would, perhaps, run the average up to $840, which would be the same per month as was offered the teacher in the high school. Is further comment necessary? Are our churches and schools satisfied to have colored barbers paid twice as much for trimming hair as is paid our teachers for training the minds of our children, and our preachers for caring for the spiritual interests of those to whom they minister?

We appeal to our business laymen in behalf of the under-paid preachers. If some layman in each church would call the attention of the church to these two advertisements, we believe that many churches would determine to do a better part by the men who minister to them in spiritual things.

BARBER'S SALARY, $1,300!

PREACHER'S SALARY, $840!

THE TEST OF A MAN

Franklin K. Lane

The test is to be in peace what it was in the time of war. Are you fitted for the fight? The man who knew how knowledge could be converted into power was the man for whom there was unlimited call. So it is increasingly to be.

To be useful is to be the test that society will put. Each man's rights are to be measured, not by what he has, but by what he does with what he has. The honors—the Croix de Paix—the richest rewards will go to the capables those who are not standardized into "men machines," those who dare to venture and learn to lead.

But all must work, and this duty to work and respect for work should be the earliest lesson learned. And it should be taught in the school, not as an homily, but in a living way, by tying work with instruction, making the thing learned apply to something done.

I should like to see the day when every child learned a trade while at school, trained his mind and his hand together, lifted labor into art by the application of thought. To be useful is the essence of Americanism, and against the undeveloped resource, whether it be land of man, the spirit of this country makes protest.

The nearer we get to Jesus Christ, the more will our consciences be enlightened as to the particulars in which we are still distant from Him. A speck on a polished shield will show plain that would never have been seen on a rusty one. The saint who is nearest God will think more of his sins than the man who is farthest from Him. So new work of purifying will open before us as we grow more pure, and this will last as long as life itself.—Alexander Maclaren.

North Carolina Conference, and among those who gave the glad hand to a boy who desired one day to become a preacher, was our dear departed friend, Rev. H. A. Albright. That year, and practically all the years thereafter, we were privileged to meet this great man of God at the annual Conference. We look back to those times and feel anew that cordial handshake and hear again that clear voice as it gave words of wisdom and counsel and consolation.

Brother Albright was one of the pioneer ministers of his Conference. He was a man of rare ability and was a citizen with most exceptional qualities. For a number of years he was county surveyor of Randolph County. As an officer he filled well his position and carried the scales of justice in all his work. In the pulpit he was earnest and sincere and gave counsel out of the deep of his heart and the wide experience of his Bible reading and acquaintance with God. His messages were not carried on the wings of polished oratory, but sprang out of a devoted soul for a devoted cause. As a pastor he was a faithful and attentive, ever taking sufficient time to think and visit and care for those under his ministry.

Brother Banks states that Brother Albright was a champion for the cause of prohibition. As we write, there comes to us in a very vivid manner, how he always championed the cause of prohibition, clean speech and clean habits in his address on Moral Reform at the annual Conferences. He was a man who preached these things and practiced them.

Many are the men and women who have been converted under his ministry, influenced by his Godly life and walk daily in life's narrow way because of contact with this rare character whose heart was set upon building up the Kingdom. He is gone; he is not forgotten. May his spirit continue to live amongst us, and may his God call some one to fill his place.

Verily, verily I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God; and they that hear shall live.—John 5:25.

REV. H. A. ALBRIGHT

After an illness of three weeks Rev. Henry Alexander Albright departed this life, at his home, August 31, 1919. He was born October 22, 1836, and was eighty-two years, ten months and nine days old. On September 23, 1866 he was married to Miss Margaret E. Farrell, who preceded him to the home beyond more than two years ago. To this union were born five children: Mrs. Sallie A. Hatten, Seagrove, N. C.; Rufus Lee Albright, Seagrove, N. C.; Joseph Walter Albright, Haleyville, Ala.; William Henry Albright, Thomasville, Ga., and Mrs. Ida Mair Craven Seagrove N. C., and ten grandchildren.

When a young man Brother Albright entered the ministry in the Christian Church and was ordained by Conference when about thirty-two years old. Revs. J.

N. Farrell and J. W. Holt signed the Certificate of Ordination. He was an active pastor until age and health failed him.

As a man he was gentle and kind to all who knew him. He was a devoted husband and father. A man of strong convictions but well balanced in attitude. The cause of prohibition has lost one of its strongest friends and advocates. Conference has lost one of its best and most reliable ministers. As to committee work he is considered one of the most conservative and well balanced men of the Conference and yet willing to undertake and work new plans.

I have been his pastor since last November and I found him true and devoted to his church and denomination. I have never heard any man speak ought against him as a citizen, a minister or Christian. His character was absolutely above reproach. Everything good and nothing bad could be said of him.

His funeral was conducted from Shiloh Christian church, in the midst of a throng of people, by the writer, assisted by Revs. G. R. Underwood, W. N. Hayes, T. J. Green and W. J. Edwards.

May the bereaved ones be comforted by the Holy Spirit is the prayer of pastor and friends.

A. T. BANKS.

And I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: Yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labours; and their works do follow them.—Rev. 14:13.

WILLIS J. LEE—AN APPRECIATION

From time to time, Brother Editor, have appeared in your columns words of esteem, appreciation and admiration for the life, love and labors of Willis J. Lee as seen by friends and associates in church, in community, and in business. I am wondering if a line, by one of his house, will be pardoned and printed, referring to that life as it was lived out in the home and spent in the family circle?

I am constrained the more to offer such a line because only those who knew his family life, that life of the family board and fire-side, could properly appreciate his worth or discover his merits. He was a modest man. That is another way of saying that his great mind expressed itself in deeds rather than in words, and his busy, tireless hands wrought for his loved ones that which his great heart felt, but which weak words could not say. The public called him a timid man; his family knew that he was trusted, tried and true in every circumstance, ordeal and condition of life.—Those who met and mingled with him said he was courteous; the loved ones of his house knew he was as constant as the needle to the north star, as courageous as a lion, as kindly and as considerate as the mother to her first born and as the Master, Whose he was and Whom he served, when he called the little ones, set them in the midst and said: "Of such is the Kingdom of heaven."

They say he was liberal to charity, to church, to community; his family knew that his love for these was large because his love for his home and dear ones was beyond expression and knew no metes nor bounds. Unless one knew the gentle spirit of the house, the considerate heart of the home, the loving hand of the hearth and family circle, one could not appreciate nor begin to estimate the real worth and value of such a life.

The depth of his heart was revealed in friendship; the breadth of his spirit was manifest in the family circle; the real meaning of his great and good life was only discovered by and known to those who lived with him under the same roof, and shared with him the comforts and joys of his household.

This writer knows that his was one of the loftiest spirits that has graced this day and time; and his one of the noblest and most unselfish souls that has ever wrought and labored and loved. This rich, rare, noble life, so suddenly taken from us, on May 20, 1919, has dug deep a wound that is hard to heal; but has wielded an influence and brought a joy that will abide all the time and bear fruit through the endless ages. This then is greatness, to have lived well, wrought nobly, won the undying and ever increasing love of those who knew him best, and having invested his substance and his influence generously and lavishly in the work of the Kingdom, and for the glory of God, sweetly and peacefully falls on sleep.

J. O. ATKINSON.

NOTES

Let the pastors send us a write-up of their meetings. Don't put it off too long.

More good articles next week. We have something in store for you. Look for it.

By the way, don't forget to send that $2.00 for your renewal. It will be WELCOME.

Do you believe in superstition in any form? If so, turn to page 12 and read "Superstition Kills." Read it, for it will greatly repay you.

We regret that we are not able to present the pictures of Brothers Albright and Powers in connection with a note of their life, labors and death.

We mourn with Brother J. G. Flynt, Winston-Salem, N. C., in the untimely death of his six-year-old son, Clarence, who was killed by an automobile last week.

A PERSONAL LETTER

Dear Brother Riddle:—

Many thanks for your favors.

I have been home two weeks but am still in bed. I have had a trained nurse nearly all the time and she is with me yet. I am improving at present, it seems for which I praise the Lord.

I thank you again.

Sincerely,

J. G. TRUITT.

News Ferry, Va., Sept. 6, 1919.

FOUR AND MORE

Four and more is the record of The Dixie Endeavor. This splendid little sixteen page Christian Endeavor monthly bristles with good things every month. It has just completed its fourth volume and starts on its fifth. The indications are that its circulation will soon reach ten thousand. Our friend, Karl Lehmann, is the editor and publisher, and this explains the very large success of this publication.

Live on, Dixie Endeavorer, live on! You are a welcome visitor to this sanctum. The only fault we find of you is that your visits seem too far apart.

WRITE IT RIGHT

We find the following in The Methodist Protestant Herald, to which we add our approval:

"We often hear the expression, 'the past year.' But there are a great many 'past' years. What is meant is 'the last year.'"

"Again, we frequently read in marriage notices: 'The bride is the accomplished daughter of Mr. A. B. Jones,' when Mr. A. B. Jones has other daughters just as accomplished as the one referred to. When there are other daughters or other sons, we should say 'a daughter' or 'a son.'"

"Think before you speak and before you write whether you are following fact or mere habit or fancy, and you will be better able to speak or write correctly.'"

Let us add this, not on the marriage note, but in the obituary: So often we find it in the manuscript written in this manner: "He leaves a host of friends to mourn his loss," when it should be to mourn their loss. There is a difference.

PETS MY CHILDREN HAVE HAD

By Jess Sweitzer Sheaffer

The child on the farm has many opportunities to own pets and to live close to Nature which a child in the city lacks. Nevertheless, there are a number of gentle and very interesting pets which a child in the congested city districts may have.

My children have taken a great deal of pleasure in caring for their different pets—of which they have had quite a variety. The first was a canary. Birds are always a joy, especially the canary, which is quite at home in a cage, and is content with a vessel of pure water and fresh seed each day. His cheery song gives pleasure to the grown-ups as well as to the children.

Then, too, goldfish are a never-ending source of wonder and interest to children. The fact that their environment is so different from our own, and that they live constantly under water will start the child to thinking and asking innumerable questions. The fish need very little care and two or three of them flashing about in a glass bowl are an attractive addition to any room. A small piece of especially prepared fish food broken and dropped into the bowl every other day and fresh water once or twice a week, are all that is necessary for their comfort. Little shells or pebbles which the children may have gathered along the beach in summer can be put into the bowl although they are not essential. A few water plants are also desirable, and help to purify the water. Our goldfish have thrived for more than two years with very little care.

Our family of guinea pigs were unusual, and were the cleanest little animals one could find. "Jack and Jill" were the original couple, but the children were delighted, upon going out to feed them one morning, to find three little baby guineas snuggled down in the hay! They were the tiniest, furriest little babies with the pinkest of pink ears, and just as lively as could be! They varied widely in color, so the children immediately claimed certain ones as their particular property and watched their growth, from day to day, with great glee. Their house in the back yard was a small wooden box, about three feet by four. It was partitioned off and covered with wire netting and one-half of it was sheltered from the storms with a piece of oil cloth. Their snug bed of hay was frequently replenished, for they not only slept and burrowed in it but nibbled at it constantly. They liked cabbage leaves, lettuce, clover and plantain and also relished a cake made of corn meal, salt and bran mixed with water, and baked in the oven till dry.

My children enjoy kittens and Bantam chickens, too, but their favorite pet is a big Scotch collie. He is noble and intelligent, and is their constant companion. A dog not only needs food and water, but also craves kindness and companionship to a greater degree than almost any other animal, and, when he becomes attached to his master, is the most dependable sort of friend.

Help to reach all the parents of the country by cutting this out and passing it on to a friend.

CONSISTENCY

By Sarah G. Simpson

Consistency is one of the fundamental qualities of discipline, and from my own experience I have found it to be most important. It should always be accompanied by kindness. More mothers have trouble with their children because of their own inconsistency than for any other one reason.

Johnnie comes home from school and asks, "Mother, may I go over to Billy Baker's to play?" and Mother, knowing that Billy's influence is not good, refuses. Johnnie displays more or less temper, but Mother is firm, and Johnnie stays at home. A few days later, however, Johnnie makes the same request, and Mother, who is entertaining a caller, lets him go for a little while. This is case of inconsistency, and, in order to save one scene, Mother is laying a good foundation for many more. The probability is that had she replied, "Mother has told you before." The matter would have ended there, or even if he had cried a little and "made a scene," the son would have had a valuable lesson and learned that Mother meant what she said. His love for the moment might have been shaken, but eventually Johnnie would have been a happier boy and his love and respect for his mother would have been greater.

The value of consistency cannot be over-estimated. The tiniest baby should be dealt with kindly, but firmly. A mother can develop the teasing habit in her child while he is still in his cradle if she lack this quality of consistency. At one time when her baby cries she does not pick him up for she says, "It is not good for him and he is forming bad habits." But the next day if she is nervous and unwilling to endure his noise, she yields "just for once." The result is that she gives in to her child more or less through his later childhood.

Again, with an older child, the mother will partially concede, a sort of compromise, and the child is keen enough to know that he has gained his point and each time he will seek to gain a little more, until the mother realizes when it is too late that her problem is great and her word really has very little weight.

My advice is: Be considerate in your requirements of a child and then be consistent in seeing that these requirements are carried out. Irritable, nagging mothers and unattractive, nervous children would be almost unknown if the former could realize the importance of kindness and consistency. Lack of sympathy and strained relations between parents and their older children often spring from habitual inconsistency.

Perhaps the most important thing of all is this. When you make a legitimate request you must know within yourself that you expect it to be carried out. Then if you are disobeyed you must calmly, but definitely and emphatically, see to it that your request is complied with. This method cannot be practiced today and neglected tomorrow, but must be consistently followed.

The future happiness, character and well-being of your little one depends entirely upon firm, wise and consistent guidance. It is these fundamental qualities of mother-discipline that train the strong-willed little sons and daughters into splendid men and women.

Help to reach all the parents of the country by cutting this out and passing it on to a friend.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

THE CHILDREN'S HOME

There are fifty-seven children in the Christian Orphanage, six more accepted and thirty-five on the waiting list to be admitted and pleading to come at an early date.

How shall we meet the need? Build the home for the smaller children is the answer. Shall we as a Church let thirty-five children stand and knock at our doors pleading for a home and something to eat and to wear; pleading for a chance to make good in life, and refuse to help them?

We are now asking for twenty men to give us $500 each to build this home. We are asking for smaller subscriptions to equip this building when completed. We want every member of our Church and all friends of the little children to have a part in this home. So to enable one rich or poor to have a part we will take subscriptions for smaller amounts so you may get on the list and have the pleasure of having a part in this work.

All who give as much as $500.00 can give it in memory of some loved one as a memorial.

If you want to give $500.00 and don't feel able to pay it all in one year, let us have your subscription and pay $100.00 each year for five years. If you want to give a lesser amount you may pay it the same way if it will be more convenient to you. We want you to have a part in this undertaking.

If a church or a Sunday school wants to give $500.00 in memory of some faithful beloved member who has gone to the better world we will be glad to have subscriptions of that nature. We ought to raise enough money by November first to build this home or have it in subscriptions.

The Board of Trustees has authorized us to commence this building as soon as the money is in sight. Let us have your subscriptions right away. You want a part in this work of love and sweet sacrifice.

The heart of the Superintendent was made to rejoice last week when a citizen of Burlington who has a big heart of sympathy for the fatherless ones asked us to come to see him, and we went. He very kindly gave the Orphanage an outfit of furniture for the office consisting of a full office equipment in quartered oak with typewriter and all equipments for same.

This outfit consisted of twelve office chairs, one large desk, one typewriter desk, typewriter chair, one office desk chair, nice druggist and rug, book case, filing cabinet and number of other articles. This donation is very highly appreciated as we were very poorly equipped in this line and I know of no present that would have been more useful to us.

We are very grateful indeed and thank God that He has made such big hearted men who have a heart full of sympathy for His little ones and who are glad of the opportunity to lend them a helping hand.

A LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley: Daddy is back from Germany and we are now in Alabama. I like it, but I miss you all very much. Love and best wishes.—Oliver E. Young, Jr.

Glad your "daddy" is back from Germany, but sorry he carried you so far away. We miss you very much. You must work for the Orphanage in Alabama —"Uncle Charley."

STIR US TO PRAY

Stir me, oh! stir me, Lord—I care not how,

But stir my heart in passion for the world;

Stir me to give to go, but most to pray,

Stir till the blood-red banner is unfurled

O'er lands that still in heathen darkness lie,

O'er deserts where no Cross is lifted high.

Stir me, oh; stir me, Lord, till prayer is pain,

Till prayer is joy—till prayer turns into prayer;

Stir me till heart and will and mind, yea, all

Is wholly thine to use through all the days;

Stir, till I learn to pray "exceedingly,"

Stir, till I learn to wait expectantly.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT

(By Warren H. Denison, Superintendent)

The superintendent has had the privilege of meeting many of our church workers and denominational leaders in a number of Conferences in various states, and has had a hearty welcome at all of the Conference sessions. The Conferences are all alive to the privileges that are offered to the churches through the Forward Movement program and the Conference officers are making every effort to carry the Forward Movement message into the most remote churches in the Conference.

The Western Indiana Conference, the Miami Ohio Conference and others are naming special committees or appointing definite officers whose duty it shall be to see that the work is begun and carried on in the several churches of the Conference. It seems to be in every section their honest effort to place the Forward Movement program in the heart and center of the Conference work and a determination on the part of the officers to see that the work is inaugurated in all of the churches.

The Forward Movement campaign will begin in New England about September 10 and the brethren there are enthusiastic. Our New England church realizes the importance of the Forward Movement and are giving themselves whole heartedly to its plans and work.

Nearly all our colleges are now making a canvass for necessary endowment funds. Elon has just closed her campaign with three hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars pledged. Defiance is in the midst of a three hundred thousand dollar campaign. Palmer college has begun a two hundred and fifty thousand dollar campaign. Union Christian College has a one hundred thousand dollar campaign. Our educational institutions and are deserving of the money and of the young people from the homes of our church.

We hope that all the Conferences of the Southern Christian Convention which will soon begin their annual meetings, will join with the other Conferences in a strong Forward Movement program consisting of addresses round tables and a definite action, making it the duty of some person or persons to see that every church within the bounds of the Conference is reached with its message.

Have you secured "Money, the Acid Test"? If not, we hope you will do soon soon. We wish that book might be in the home of each family in the church. We hope our pastors will call attention to it.

Have you been developing your Sunday school in Worship and Devotion during the months of July, August and September? Many Sunday schools have been laying emphasis upon that particular, in accordance with the Forward Movement program of the denomination. A number of Sunday schools have placed books in their libraries, others have had talks each Sunday on some theme that would help develop devotion in worship. These three months of study and effort on the part of our Sunday school to develop worship and devotion, will bring about an enlarged spirit of worship in our whole church.

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

SUPERSTITION KILLS

(An Editorial in The Christian Herald)

A girl in Kalamazoo read her future in cards and, having turned up a direful black ace killed herself.

It is not the sort of suicide that comes of superstition. Superstition kills something in all of us. It kills something of faith reason, courage and right impulse in each of us.

Who can guess how many possibly great enterprises have aborted because people have feared to begin on a Friday and never found opportunity again?

Who can estimate all the brave hearts that have turned faint, the good purposes that have been blasted, at some "sign" which seemed to foretell disaster?

We may laugh at the simple folks who are thus deluded, but we are apt to forget that superstition in innumerable forms lies at the very base of our moral being, as the blighting worm lies at the root of the rose.

Who knows to what heights, now undreamed of, courage and faith and hope might have lifted the world ere this, had not superstition, through all the ages, shackled mankind with fear and doubt and despair?

Superstition has formed the first filled man with fear and cowardice. It has taken iron out of the blood and fire out of the brain, and curdled in the heart the milk of human kindness.

Superstition has covered the seas with terrors and filled the forests with fearful things before which mankind has covered, and exploration and discovery and development have been delayed for centuries.

Superstition, like the blackness of night, has hidden from the truths of physical science, of religion, of social ethics; and for what little trace he has got of them he has had to grope in doubt and fear.

Superstition caused the world to force the fatal poison on a Socrates, to put a Galileo to the rack, and to crucify the Christ. And just so has it killed out of the human heart much that is good and pure and sweet.

Superstition has been, through all time, the chief weapon of tyrants; it has ever afforded the chief hold for quacks and charlatans of all sorts and all degrees; it has ever made man a slave to the worst within himself and victim to the worst without.

Superstition has made the heart of man a cesspool of evil passions and has filled the world with malice, murders, wars, persecutions, poverty and endless woe and wrong, and has made history a hideous record of cruelties and crimes.

As the youth out in the night whistles and sings to make himself believe he is not afraid, but still starts and trembles at sight of every bush and post, so has mankind come whistling up the ages, but doubting shrinking, trembling, at every mile-post of progress.

Little wonder that these devil's whisperings, which have swayed the world, should prove too much for the reasoning and resistance of a simple girl in Kalamazoo.

There are superstitions also that lead to good?

No!

Nothing that does this is a superstition, but is a part of the eternal verities, a ray of the vital light divine.

Whatever makes the soul of man braver, more hopeful, more cheerful and kindlier has in it a gleam of heaven and the heart of truth, however distorted it may be in form.

LESSONS IN THE SCHOOL OF EXPERIENCE

Formerly Chaplain 133d and 318th Field Artillery, American Expeditionary Forces

(Carlyle Summerbell)

To those of us who have not completed our education, and to whom this world is an increasing revelation of divine wisdom, service in the American army in the great war, especially when we had the privilege of being chaplains, has been of immense advantage. Some of the things which impressed me and, I believe, many others, were the following:

1. A real appreciation of America and of American institutions as never before.
2. Recognizing without the help of the harsh tutorship of death, the great place in our life held by the home folks and the home.
3. The basal unity of the different phases of religion. At my last service with the 318th Field Artillery, Judaism, Christian Science, Catholicism, Protestantism, were represented, and we worked in harmony, as well as worshipped together, I myself have preached in a Roman Catholic church at the invitation of the priest.
4. The feeling that we were a part in the national machinery, and not simply a separate machine.
5. Disgust with men who assume the title of king, prince, kaiser, emperor, or potentate, by birth, and with men who give consideration to artificial titled nobility, who themselves are citizens of a republic. The world should be wise enough to leave princelings and kinglings alone.
6. The joy of being willing if necessary to give all.
7. The comradeship of the great souls who aspire to the highest and best.
8. To understand the truth that he that would save his life shall lose it, and he that would spend his life shall save it.
9. To find the pity of the great God for men in pain, in the delusion of lust, in the false or fool's paradise of drink, and the innate goodness of men in every condition and walk of life in the American army.

And after all, how can you tell which act is small, which great? These measurements are human, not divine. God's standard is very different from ours.—
G. H. Morrison.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

SUFFOLK LETTER

The public schools are opening all over this great country. They can no longer be called free schools. The cost of books, tablets, pencils, and other expenses make the public school a burden on the poor. The publishers of books are largely responsible for the too frequent changes in text books. Books used by older children no longer pass down for use into the hands of younger brothers and sisters. The change requires new books. This creates an immense revenue for book-makers. It should not be so. The public school should teach fewer subjects, use books longer, and be a real boon to the poor. The public school is an overgrown institution and undertakes to do too much for the young. The tendency is toward the State doing all and the individual doing little. The truth is, that these capable of higher education should be under necessity of individual effort. Classics should not be taught in the public school.

Statistics show that there are 24,000,000 pupils in the public schools of the United States. That is nearly one-fourth of the population. There are 700,000 public school teachers engaged in the work of instructing the children and 500,000 of these teachers are females. Only two sevenths of the teachers are males. The question of Woman Suffrage will be settled in the public schools. In this formative period of citizenship women control. The matter of feminine control is inevitable. In the home and in the school woman already has control. Her power is greater than the power of Congress. She bends the twig. She has changed the atmosphere of the public school-room. It is cleaner, it has more flowers, behavior has improved, improvement in manners, and a charm and dignity pervade the whole institution. Man is the fighting human; woman is the refining human. He legislates; she controls. She mothered the world's Redeemer; but He had no human father. Bethlehem set the standard of human supremacy. It was transferred from man to woman; and it will remain in her hands, unless she forgets her Lord. The all-important matter is for the young women, who teach in the public schools, to be genuine followers of the meek and lowly Jesus. Religious character in the public school teachers is a power greater than the Army and Navy; and that army of twenty-four million children may be the conquering army of the world some day. It is easy to see that the women and children hold the future destiny of this nation in their hands; but if God could trust His only Son and the hope of the world to the love and care of a woman, we may congratulate the future upon the great majority of public school teachers being women. There is no higher service, no greater opportunity, and no greater honor, than to be a good young woman engaged in public school work. That position represents more value and gets less pay than any other service.

W. W. STALEY.

PUBLIC WELFARE

The meaning of public welfare needs an immense enlargement in the public mind.

The stupidest man among us must be brought to see that it concerns the curse of illiteracy and near-illiteracy, commercial amusements and wholesome community recreation, preventable disease and postponable death, feeble-mindedness and its causes, insanity, poverty and its manifold relationships, orphan children in poor homes whose fathers are dead and orphan children in unsafe homes whose fathers and mothers are alive, the placing-out of children and their guardianship, wayward children, children maimed and lame in body and brain, the families of convicts in prison, returned convicts, prisoners on parole, men wanting jobs and jobs wanting men; that it concerns jail and chain-gang conditions, poor house and pauper conditions, juvenile courts and the oversight of juvenile probationers, fallen men and fallen women alike, and the whole subject of social hygiene; that it concerns the conditions, causes, consequences, and cure of social ills, of every sort; that it sweeps the whole immense field of social science, theoretic and applied.

To build a meaning of this adequate and needful sort in the public mind, to stir the consciences and wills of men and women into activity and to erect suitable institutions in North Carolina, county by county, is an exceedingly difficult but an exceedingly necessary task.—E. C. Branson, address before the N. C. Social Service Conference.

A PATHETIC DEATH

Sic Transit Gloria Mundi.—What a pathetic description is that of Cardinal Mazarin, rousing himself from his dying bed at Vincennes to take a last look at the treasures which his long ascendancy in the councils of the French Monarchy had enabled him to accumulate. When his nurses and doctors were away he rose from his couch, and with his tall figure, pale and wasted, closely wrapped in his fur-lined dressing-gown, he stole into the gallery; and the Count de Brienne, who reports the scene, hearing the shuffling sound of his slippers as he dragged his limbs feebly and wearily along, hid himself behind the curtains. As, in his extreme weakness, the Cardinal had to halt almost at each step, he feebly murmured, "I must leave all this." He crawled on, however, clinging, so as to support himself, first on one object and then on another, and as at each pause, exhausted by pain and weakness, he looked around the splendid room, he said again, with a deep sigh, "I must leave all this." Then, at last, he caught sight of Brienne. "Give me your hand," he said, "I am very weak and helpless, yet I like to walk, and I have something to do in the library." And then, leaning on the count's arm, he again pointed to the pictures. "Look at that beautiful Correggio, and this 'Venus' of Titian, and this incomparable 'Deluge' of Antonio Caracci. Ah! my poor friend, I must leave all this. Good-bye, dear pictures, which I have loved so well!"—Dean Liddon.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 21, 1919

The Holy Scriptures. Ps. 19:7-14; 119:9-16, 97, 165; Acts 17:10-12; 11 Tim. 3:14-17.

Devotional Reading: Ps. 1.

Golden Text: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." Ps. 119:105.

(For Teaching Points, see Teachers and Officers Journal).

One of the saddest mistakes in life is made when we lead children to believe that the Word of God is a stiff, solemn book, full of "don'ts". It is in reality the most wonderful story book in the world, filled with the most charming stories, the most enthralling romances. It contains some of the best sanitary laws ever written, some of the finest legal advice, and some of the best suggestions on every phase of human life. Recently I read an article on "The most exciting book in the world." One would hardly think that of the Bible, but a young man in a hospital in Paris who had never before seen a Bible, was handed a New Testament by the nurse one morning. He accepted it, with some reluctance, but she had nothing else. The next day she brought him a book of fiction, "Take it away," he said impatiently, "I haven't got through with this yet, and I want to see how it turns out." There is nothing so dear to us when we are away as a letter from home. How we read it for news of the homefolks, of the neighborhood doings. We read thoughtfully and carefully the bits of advice tucked in by the dear homefolks. Perhaps mother or sister has clipped a bit of poetry and added it. But best of all, would be the news tucked in at the end that father or mother or brother was coming to visit us by and by, and that plans were on foot for our own homecoming to which all looked forward so eagerly. The Bible is my Father's letter to me. He has told me of all the "homefolks" and all the neighborhood news and we call that history. He has tucked in so many bits of advice and loving counsel as He went along. He has remembered to clip some bits of wonderful poetry and insert for us.

And then, best of all, most wonderful of all, He has told us of the plans; He is making for our homecoming; He tells us our room is ready and waiting, and that we will be met by friends and relatives when we arrive. He tells us that our Elder Brother is coming soon to visit us, and take us back with Him when He goes, and that never, never again will we be separated. Surely our Father's Letter is worth a careful reading, and a loving acceptance.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR SEPTEMBER 21, 1919

Truthfulness. Eph. 4:25; 11 Kings 5:20-2.

"I believe in telling the truth, and nothing but the truth, but not the whole truth," was a laughing remark made lately. But is that not often the feeling we have about the matter? Why do we take it for granted that the truth must be unpleasant? "To tell you the truth" is a common beginning for an unpleasant statement. But truth is beautiful, and there are few things so disagreeable that some fine thing can not be said for it,—or them. If the truth is necessary, its disagreeableness, however, ought not to keep us from telling it. "He never knowingly spoke or acted a lie," was the high tribute paid to a general in the army by one who knew him well. "Acted a lie"! Many who would not speak a lie, will act one, or evade the truth. "Speak every man truth with his neighbor." How many unfair advantages would be lost; how many unfair bargains would never take place. How much better a world this would be in which to live if all obeyed this first elementary law.

RITENHOUR-FUNK

Mr. Wesley G. Ritenhour and Miss Isabelle Funk were united in marriage on August 16, 1919, at the home of Ernest Spitzer near New Hope church, where the Virginia Valley Central Conference was then in session. These two happy and fortunate young people journeyed from Dry Run church in Powell's Fort to New Hope for the double purpose of attending the Conference and having their pastor tie the knot while there. They are a splendid couple, both are members of the Dry Run church, and have the best wishes of a host of friends. May their wedded life be both happy and useful.

A. W. ANDES.

GAY-MASON

Prof. Samuel Rufus Gay of Cumberland, Md., and Miss Charlotte Beatrice Mason of Nashville, N. C., were united in marriage Wednesday P. M., August 20, 1919. It was a double marriage. Mr. Jake W. Batchelor and Miss Sallie Ricks Boddie, both of Nashville, being married at the same time and at the same altar. The Methodist church of Nashville which had been most beautifully decorated with rare potted plants, ferns and flowers, illuminated with hundreds of candles, was packed from chancel to gallery with admiring friends and neighbors gathered to show the esteem in which the happy couples were held. Eighteen of Nashville's most gifted singers rendered a becoming and appropriate musical program just prior to the ceremony. Mrs. M. W. Linche presided at the pipe organ and rendered thrilling instrumental selections; Mrs. M. A. Ross sang an inspiring solo, and the choir sang "The Bridal Chorus." To the strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March the bridal party entered the church. First the ushers in opposite aisles and in single file, Messrs. D. W. Perry, W. C. Ferrell, M. C. Gulley and Arthur S. Vick. These were followed with bride's maid and groom's man. Mr.

Kenneth E. Bane with Miss Gladys Holleman of Smithfield, Va., followed by the dames of honor, Mesdames W. G. Dozier of Nashville, and C. C. Johnson of Elon College. The two ring bearers, little Rebecca Brooks Dozier of Nashville, and Mildred Taylor of Richmond, Va., were followed by the flower bearers, little Misses Iris Boddie and Erlene Kent who scattered roses in the pathway of the bridal party from church entrance to altar. From the right vestibule door came Miss Sallie Ricks Boddie on the arm of her cousin, Mr. R. T. Vick, and from the left door Miss Beatrice Mason on the arm of her sister, Miss Gertrude Mason, her maid of honor. Near the chancel they were met by Mr. J. W. Batchelor attended by his brother as best man, Mr. Lewis Batchelor, and by Mr. S. R. Gay attended by his best man, Prof. W. C. Whitlock of Charlottesville, Va. Reaching the altar Mr. Batchelor stood beside his bride-to-be, Miss Sallie Ricks Boddie, and Mr. Samuel Rufus Gay stood beside his bride-to-be, Miss Charlotte Beatrice Mason. Revs. L. B. Jones and Oscar Creech of Nashville, and the writer, used the ring and souvenir ceremonies of the Methodist and Christian churches which united the two happy and popular couples. The brides' maids wore pink Georgette and carried white asters; the dames of honor wore white Georgette and carried asters; the maid of honor wore pink Georgette and carried white asters; the brides wore white Georgette and veil of tulle arranged with orange blossoms and carried shower bouquets of brides roses. The gentlemen were in full dress evening suits with white vests and white gloves. Immediately after the ceremony Prof. and Mrs. Gay left on an extended bridal tour to New York and other Northern cities. Prof. Gay is principal of Cumberland, Md. City High School. The bride is an Elon College graduate with host of friends and is herself a popular and successful teacher.

OBITUARIES

SIMMERS

Mrs. Hattie L. Simmers, wife of John Simmers, was born December 14, 1879, and died August 18, 1919, at the age of 39 years, 8 months, and 4 days. Surviving are two sisters, two brothers, her aged father, husband, and an infant son. Sister Simmers was a faithful member of the Linville Christian church. She was a general favorite among a large circle of friends, who deeply mourn her untimely death. This breaking up of a happy home calls forth the deepest sympathy for the husband and little motherless babe. Funeral services were conducted at Linville, August 20, by the writer, assisted by Rev. I. W. Miller of the Church of the Brethren. May the Lord comfort and bless the sorrowing, and prepare us all for a happy home in eternity.

A. W. ANDES.

MOORE

Rev. H. C. Moore was born March 13, 1851, and died July 20, 1919. His age was 68 years, 4 months, and 7 days. He was married to Miss Mary R. Davis in 1869. Was licensed to preach by the Eastern Virginia Conference at Spring Hill, Nansemond County, Virginia, August 6, 1881. He preached at various places in Eastern Virginia, and for several years was pastor of churches in the Virginia Valley Conference. He had about retired from the active ministry, and was living in Charlottesville, Virginia, when death called him from labor to reward. Brother Moore was an honest, conscientious preacher of the Word, and wielded quite an influence for good. His many friends where he lived and labored during his life will mourn his death. His wife's death occurred just three months prior to his. Six sons and two daughters survive. Funeral services were held at the home in Charlottesville, Va., July 22.

A. W. ANDES.

LEWIS

On August 21, 1919 Mr. J. D. Lewis died at Riverside Hospital, Newport News, Va. Prior to his death Brother Lewis had not been well and went to the hospital for an operation and complications arose which caused his death.

He was a member of Antioch Christian church, near Windsor, Va. He was a man of sterling qualities and thoroughly devoted to his wife and two daughters, who mourn the loss of their father and husband. May God's richest blessing rest upon them and may Christ the great Healer be comfort in this time of sorrow.

The funeral was conducted by the writer at the home on Sunday afternoon, August 24, 1919. The interment was in Green Lawn Cemetery.

H. J. FLEMING.

LAWRENCE

Mrs. E. B. Lawrence died at her home in Brickhaven, Chatham County, N. C., July 4, 1919. She was educated at Elon College in the business department and was assistant postmaster at Morrisville, N. C., for about three years. She made friends wherever she went. She leaves to mourn their loss a father, and mother, Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Johnson, Morrisville, N. C., a husband, two children, the youngest being only five days old, four sisters and three brothers. She was buried at the home cemetery. May God bless those who are left to mourn their loss.

IN ESSENTIALS UNITY, IN NON-ESSENTIALS LIBERTY, IN ALL THINGS CHARITY

LET US BE RIGHT

(By Clarence E. Flynn, in The Christian Life Magazine)

Let us be right, though all the world may follow
The broken fabric of some failing dream.
As sounds upon our ears its outcry hollow,
And men lose all for some deceiving scheme,
Let us forsake the gold and tinsel masking,
And live for things enduring and secure,
Whate'er the prize the idle crowd is asking,
Let us be right. The path of truth is sure.

Let us be right, whatever seem our losing,
Some day the tide will turn, and men will know
The thing abiding. Then the common choosing
Will be the substance, not the empty show.
Let us be right. When self's poor plans are shattered
And all the castles lifted mountain high
By evil hand, are broken down and shattered,
The right shall stand beneath the mighty sky.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

FACING THE ISSUE

We are facing the issue—that issue of ministerial help. There is no getting around it. Many churches are without pastors, and many of those who have pastors should have more and better services. This is especially true of the churches in the rural districts. We are in a position to know. This office is reminded of it practically every day and the issue is getting more acute. There must be something done.

We are not criticizing, and if this article is so taken, then, dear reader, give us the credit of offering constructive criticism, for we hope to point out a partial remedy.

The whole system of dealing with candidates for the ministry in the Conferences must be changed. We have taken young men at their word, let them join the Biblical Class, stay in college or out just as they desired. If they wanted to drop out and take churches, all well and good. The Conferences have lowered the standard, or rather they have never put it high enough. We have never favored giving young men churches until they reached the middle of their college course. It may seem cruel, it may seem wrong, but the facts are against such a system. The young men have meant well, the Conferences have meant well, and so have the churches, but the fruit is how you tell about the sowing.

Today we tried to think of the many young men when we have known in Conference and college during the last half dozen years, and only the smaller per cent can we place. Where are they? We do not know. Their names are not on the subscription records in this office; and most certainly if they are doing anything worth while, they would support the Church paper. We turn through the Annual of a few years ago and find many names recorded, and then return to the records of the last two or three years, and these names are not found. Turn to the records at Elon College and make a list of the men of our Church who have matriculated as ministerial students, then check that with the ministerial roll in the last Annual. It will be a discovery worth while.

What has the result been? Young men have taken church work in order to supply the churches without a pastor. By this method they meant well, but there are still more churches without pastors and the number is increasing. Why? With limited education, short experience, and not knowing how to overcome some of the pastoral problems, they have become discouraged and dropped out. They do not represent that type of leadership so necessary for the progress of the work. Their messages have not given that impulse for larger things; their personality has not been strong enough to turn the tide of the "ruts" in the local church and transform a community. They have shouldered a burden too heavy for their experience, while the churches that they have served have gone backward for the lack of a vision.

Is this all? Not quite. The dropping out of the ministerial students, their failure to make good, and their type of work, all have discouraged those who would enter the work and carry it to a successful completion. Men like great and heroic tasks and are always willing to do the thing that the other fellow has succeeded in, regardless of the difficulties.

The Conferences have been looking out that no conscience would be hurt; they have been very careful that no young man would be turned down and "humiliated." Thoughtful, considerate, great. But churches have been "humiliated," the denomination has been retarded and the growth of the Kingdom hindered. The issue is this: The larger or the smaller thing under consideration. The churches, the denomination, or the man? Which is greater?

You say that we must pray the young men into the work. True. And it is also true that we must not be so prayerful as to pray them out. Any real man is ready to prove himself, and that is just what the Conferences need to have these young men do. By permitting a young man to preach his way through college may be the most expensive way after all. It might be better for his Conference to give him the money for his education, and say to him that he must make good during the years of his preparation. He needs the practice, we will grant, but our experience is that practice is easier obtained than training. We have seen the young men side by side in this very thing, and our observation is this: In most cases the young men who preach during their college days preach better for a while after graduation than their comrades, but in a few years the men who placed emphasis on preparation while in college and gave less attention to church work, are those who become the strongest men. There are of course, exceptions to all rules.

No young man should be admitted to the Biblical Class until he has reached his Freshman year in college. (Some of the Conferences are requiring this).

No young man should be given church work until he has completed his Sophomore year, and then not more than one church.

No young man should be ordained until he has completed his Junior year.

No young man should shoulder full time church work until he has completed his Senior year.

These are the remedies that will add to the efficiency of the Church, add to her power, add to her leadership, challenge the young men and help to solve the problem of ministerial supply. We have made the job too little. By so doing we have driven from the ranks some of the best men and wisest heads, the noblest hearts, and we are now face to face with the issue. Can we meet it? Will we meet it? We leave the answer with the Committee on Education in the various Conferences.

The Church of God is still the Church of God, and when we use it otherwise it ceases to be the dedicated temple of the Lord.

"MARY HAS GONE TO COLLEGE"

You have heard of Mary and her little lamb in all its forms, feats and fashions. Mary is popular. The name "Mary" is a household word everywhere. History tells us about one Mary in the Savior's day, and so it is Mary that we want to talk about.

Yes, Mary has gone to college! We don't know whose Mary, but Mary has gone. She packed her trunk one afternoon last week, slept only a few hours that night and hurried away next morning to take the train for college. Station after station she passed, and then the porter called out the college station. What a thrill went through Mary's heart! She sighed deeply, arose from her seat, and soon landed among the talkingest, strangest, laughiest and most gleeful crowd she was ever in. Such names! Why Mary had never heard such names before. And there were so many to help her with her baggage, tell her about the college, about what a good time she was going to have and how glad that they were to see her!

Up to this place Mary has had a good time. She is now settled in her work and has received a letter from home and the homefolks have received one from her. She has told them about the things that she likes and the things that she dislikes. It's a wonderful subject to write on, and it is no trouble to close the letter at a mid-night hour. It is a wonderful world into which Mary has been cast and her experiences are varied.

We are not uneasy about Mary, for she is all right and will soon gain her independence, know how to associate with other girls, and it will not be long before she will fall in love with all the college and surroundings.

Our fears come here: That mother—just that sympathizing mother—will write Mary and agree with her on the things she dislikes, and encourage her to come home if everything doesn't suit Mary. A big hearted mother she is. God bless her and all her kind. But Mary, her only daughter, is trying life alone for the first time and that good mother forgets that Mary cannot always be at home, and so she writes her a letter that is discouraging. She tells Mary all about the young folks and what a good time they have had at the community school, and at the country church. She tells Mary how many young men have called her over the telephone and the papers and other pieces of mail that she has at home that cannot be forwarded; she tells Mary all about the loaded scuppernong vine and how bushels are going to waste. Now, Mary has always had a good time under that vine and her mother's letter makes her feel that something great will happen if she misses the fruit of this season.

Mary gets this letter and she reads it, and she reads it, and she reads it. She tells her room-mate that she believes that she will go home, and the next day on class she doesn't know a thing about the lesson, and she decides that the professor does not know a thing about the subject. The next meal is anything but ideal. Mary hears the sound of a train, and though she was tired from the trip getting to college, and felt that she would never care to ride on the train again, she decides that she wants to go home at once. The president of the college is consulted and matrons are confused. Her friends persuade her but all of no avail. Mary goes home.

Alas, we have called this person Mary, but it can be a Johnny or a Jimmy or a Charley, and too, it can be a father to write such a letter. Too bad!

Next week we will write on what happened after Mary got home and the years thereafter.

Giving is the first essential of getting, and yet we proceed in the capacity of getting and ignore this fundamental thing in life.

"HE CAN LIVE UPON IT"

These are the words spoken by a friend one day when we were talking to him about his pastor's salary. Oh, yes, we agree that he may be able to live upon it, but can he die upon it? That is the question.

In business? Why, then are you just making enough to live upon and laying nothing aside for the family? How about the "rainy day"? How about those children now at your knee, but one day will, or should be, in college? How about the old age when churches will seek younger men? How about the time when you are disabled to preach?

A farmer? Yes, and just meeting expenses and laying aside nothing for the poor crop years? Are you not paying for that piece of land? And if you are, then what for? Of course it is providing for the day when your earning capacity will be less. Do you own your farm, and yet say that the pastor can live upon his usual salary? Then sell the farm and get on a basis with your pastor. Provide not for the days to come.

Come and let us reason together: Poor encouragement it is for the pastor to have nothing left over at the end of the month, or at the end of the year. Poor indeed is the encouragement. One day he must die, and perhaps he will die before his wife does, and is he to leave her with just a week's provision? Is he to leave nothing for the education of his children? Is he to go to his death-bed with the thought that he has advocated peace, prosperity, happiness and the reasonable things in life, and yet leave his family to the cold world. Ah! The thought is too fearful. What a dread it has!

Yes, the pastor lives on his salary, but can he die upon it? If a man who does not provide for his own household is worse than a thief, in the name of heaven tell us how those are classed who force their pastor to be a thief? Pretty plain? Well and good, for that is the way we mean it.

A genuine sacrifice precedes our best joys. Giving of bread to the poor when we have plenty left is far from giving when we have little or none left.

THE BALANCED MIND

This is a time when the balanced mind is in demand. So many things are now before the people that are the fruit of radicalism and extremity that it is so easy to be lead astray by some mind that thinks only on one side of a question. No one thing alone is the cause of social unrest, labor troubles and the general tendency of the present day, and it is unfair to so see the situation. No one remedy alone can cure these evils, and again it is unfair to say that your idea is it above all others.

Study both sides of any question. Be liberal and well balanced in your opinions. Do not let feeling and prejudice interfere with justice. Be balanced in mind, for this age needs you.

A principle is greater and bigger than a creed. A creed is an attempt to circumscribe a principle. A principle enlarges itself to give justice.

RACE RIOTS DISCUSSED

For the purpose of discussing the inter-racial situation in the country as manifested in the Chicago race riots, a representative group of leaders of the Christian Church of all denominations both North and South met in the office of the Home Missions Council, New York City, September 4. Representatives of several philanthropic and sociological organizations were present, the purpose being to secure the widest possible activity in a nation-wide movement for the bettering of relations between the white people and the Negroes and for the development of a satisfactory program to meet the present Negro situation. A committee on pronouncement will report through the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. Bishop Wilbur P. Thirdkill of New Orleans, Chairman of the Committee of Negro Churches of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, presided. Dr. Alfred Williams Anthony, Secretary of the Home Missions Council, was secretary of the Committee. It was the unanimous opinion of those present that the Negro situation in both North and South is critical; that it is no longer a sectional but a national problem and that it is the immediate duty of the churches and of all earnest, patriotic men and women throughout the land courageously to meet the issue.

The present generation brought up on cake raffles, tea parties, toy shows, oyster stews, and the hundred other man-made methods of financing the Kingdom, will produce a generation of church starvers.

INDIAN CONFERENCE

The Central Committee on Indian Affairs announces that the place of the conference on Indian affairs called for September 24-26 has been changed from Oklahoma City to the Hotel Lassen, Wichita, Kansas. The Hon. Cato Sells, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and others from the Department of the Interior will be present and take part in the conference, which is one of the recent-day evidence of co-operation on the part of the Christian Church.

BIBLE SUNDAY—DECEMBER SEVENTH

Let All Unite to Magnify the Word of God

Have you ever tried to imagine a world without a Bible? Suppose, for instance, that by some miraculous means, the Bible and its influence could be erased from the history man. Instantly thousands upon thousands of beautiful churches and cathedrals would become senseless edifices, and the sacred ideals for which they stand, meaningless nonsense. You and I would not know from whence we came, nor whither we were bound, or for what purpose we lived, and death we would regard with a sickening sensation of horror. Much of our finest literature would be no more. The world's most famous paintings would fade from their canvases, and a great deal of its best music be silenced forever. This may seem like a startling statement, but it takes something of the sort to make us stop and think how much we owe to our Bible.

"Oh," I hear you say, "of course I know how much we owe to the Bible." That is just the point; you stated it yourself in those two words, of course. That is just how a great many of us think of the Bible, as a matter of course. Just as a great many families love mother. Of course they love her, but mother has to go away for a visit before sister realizes that the dust does not stay out of the parlor of its own accord. Father finds that the buttons are not irrevocably attached to his clothes, and brother discovers that his shirts do not go to the laundry unless they are sent. Then they begin to appreciate mother, not as a matter of course, but as a real, vital, necessary part of their lives. Is that the way you appreciate your Bible?

You honor your flag, don't you? On Flag Day everyone mentions the fact that this is the day set apart to do honor to the flag, and nearly all of us hang one in the window or wear a bit of flag ribbon on our coats. What do you do on Bible Sunday? Do you mention the fact that this is Bible Sunday at the breakfast table? Do you suggest to your pastor that some special recognition of the fact be made in the morning service? Do you give a special Bible talk to your Sunday school class? Or do you just let it slide by as a matter of course? Is it to you the Book of books, the Companion of your daily life, or is it just something that gives a solid respectable look to the parlor table, and helps to furnish the family pew?

December the seventh, the third Sunday before Christmas, is Bible Sunday. The idea of Bible Sunday is that one and the same day all Christians everywhere shall unite to exalt the Word of God. The necessity for the observance of one special Sunday when the Book of Life shall be the theme of prayer and teaching, the wider circulation of which shall become the zeal of the church, is at once apparent and commendable. There is special value that all unite on one day. An individualistic and scattered cheer would not make much impression compared with the cheer from a thousand throats shouted simultaneously. The Anglican and Episcopal church has for centuries emphasized the Bible on this day. The New York Bible Society, taking this Sunday which is near to December 4, the day on which the Society was organized 110 years ago, has enlisted the endorsement of official bodies of the Presbyterian, Reformed, Methodist and Baptist Churches. The International Sunday School Association has recommended that every Sunday school observe this Sunday as Bible Sunday. The annual observance of this day must result in an intensity of purpose, and a fraternal spirit that will tend to magnify Jesus Christ through the honoring of the Word. The Bible is the Book of Life and power, and there is greater need of emphasizing its value today than ever before. We suggest that you start now to plan in what way you will observe it. Find out what is going to be done in the church service and in the Sunday school. Remind your pastor so he will have time to prepare an appropriate sermon. If more church members asked their pastors to preach on the Bible, fewer of the men in the pulpit would be wandering so far afield. The church that loves the Bible the most is invariably the strongest church.

Literature giving suggestions and information regarding Bible Sunday and its observance can be obtained by writing the New York Bible Society, 675 Madison Ave., New York. John C. West is President; James H. Schmelzel, Treasurer and Rev. George William Carter, Ph.D., the General Secretary.

CORRESPONDENCE

The following letter was received by Captain James A. Turrentine from Dr. W. W. Staley. We have asked permission from Captain Turrentine to publish it, feeling that its message will be received with sincere appreciation by the large number of friends of Mrs. Fix:

APPRECIATES THE LIFE OF MRS. JOSEPH FIX

Capt. Jas. A. Turrentine,
Burlington, N. C.

My dear Brother:

I am writing you, as the representative of the family, to whom I desire to express my appreciation of the character and life of your sister, Mrs. Joseph Fix. I can see them, now, in New Providence church when that church housed the worshippers from Company Shops, Haw River, Graham and a large scope of country besides. She filled out her four score years and then went to rest. "Gathering Homeward, one by one" was a sweet little song we used to sing in Providence Sunday school and is real in human experience.

If you have opportunity extend my sympathy to other members of the family, and believe me to be one of your true friends.

W. W. STALEY.

Suffolk, Va.
September 8, 1919.

The letter printed below was sent to THE SUN office by a member of the mechanical force, Mr. J. M. Vestal, and we deem it worthy of publication. Mr. Vestal is a member of the Baptist Church, but possibly knows more about the details of the Christian Church than many of our members who are considered church leaders. His privilege of reading in detail every item of news printed in THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Christian Annual gives him opportunity for constant study of our Church and its work:

APPRECIATES RECOGNITION

Rev. C. B. Riddle,
Burlington, N. C.

My dear Mr. Riddle:—

In your issue of September 3, I was surprised, but very glad, to find an article under the caption of "A Consideration and an Appreciation," which speaks of me and my work as a linotype operator, and which also carried my response to the address of welcome delivered to my former teachers and friends at Morganton, N. C.

Through the columns of your excellent Church paper I am trying to express my appreciation for the good and kind words spoken of me, and to say that I appreciate it so much is only putting it mildly. Perhaps our English language is below par for I find myself in the same position as the poet who rarely, if ever, can put on paper that which he feels.

I am so glad that you thought my address worthy for public reading and it has greatly encouraged me. With some more such public sentiments, we deaf people would feel that we are crawling out of the harness of pity which has held us for so long.

You may not know it, but I have learned a great deal from your good paper, Your editorials, along with a good many other articles, never fail to give me light on many subjects. I am violating no confidence when I say that you are among the leading editors of this country, and your Church is fortunate in having you at the head of its paper. Your linotype operator knows whereof he speaks for he knows what it takes to turn out a good paper.

Again thanking you for your favors in words and deeds, and whenever I can be of service to you, command me.

Very Sincerely yours,

J. M. VESTAL.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

AMONG MY CHURCHES

(Plymouth)

When, on last Saturday afternoon, I started into the pulpit to preach at Plymouth church, I found the pulpit partially filled with packages of various sizes and shapes. On inquiring as to what that meant, I was informed that it was a "pounding" for the pastor. However, when I reached my home Monday morning with Mr. B. N. Ferrell's Dodge car almost loaded down, a visiting lady at the house remarked that she thought it was a "busheling" instead of a pounding.

There was something like sixty pounds of flour, one and one-half bushels of sweet potatoes, more than five pecks of apples and pears, three young chickens, about three pecks of corn meal, as well as Irish potatoes, bacon, coffee, oatmeal, preserves, jelly, molasses, dried apples, laundry soap, baking soda, lard, canned tomatoes, salmon, sausage meat, and some cloth. Little Miss Evelyn Partin also give me a dime as her part in the pounding. I was filled to full of the sense of gratitude and a feeling of my unworthiness to express, in words, my thanks and appreciation to these good people as I wished to.

This is my second year as pastor of Plymouth church; these good and appreciative people have long been very dear and sweet to me. I am much encouraged about the work here.

We held our annual memorial services the first Sunday in May of this year.

We held our revival, here, during the week following the first Sunday in August. Rev. W. L. Wells did the preaching, during this revival, from Monday afternoon until Thursday night. His preaching was able and effective; and our people were simply "carried away with him." Brother Wells is not only a good preacher, but is an exceptionally good personal worker. As direct result of this revival, there were three additions to the church at the close of the meeting. Three more united with the church last Sunday as a direct result of revivals in M. E. churches in the community. One of these new members is a wife and mother. The other five are grown young people—or, practically grown.

We are planning to repair and remodel our house of worship at Plymouth this fall. The work of raising the necessary funds and of deciding on the changes to be made is already under way.

Last Sunday this church extended me a call to serve another year. While the matter of acceptance is still under consideration, I should feel loathe to say "No" to them. I have long since learned to love the members very much; and feel that I can never do enough for them. My family joins me in thanking them for the very liberal "pounding" in a time of need.

SUFFOLK LETTER

A man said to me the other day: "I do not measure a Christian man's honesty by his meeting his commercial obligations, but by his payment of his church obligations;" for, said he, "if he pays his church obligations regularly, he will meet his commercial obligations." If that view is correct, one can see that the systematic habit of paying church dues, and more, the habit of all church members paying regularly their church dues would save much commercial trouble with little accounts which so often are unpaid. It may seem a small matter, at first thought of it, but a more thoughtful consideration of the subject will make it clear that church obligations include commercial obligations because our first duty is to God and our second duty is to man.

The apostolic rule was, "upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God has prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." I Cor. 16:2. There are four things included in this rule: 1. Weekly system—first day of week. 2. Every one of you. Every member should make a separate contribution every week or every month as the meetings may be held; but it should be laid by in store every week. This habit is educational and begets thoughtfulness. 3. According to prosperity—"as God has prospered him." When people earn more, they should give more. To maintain that habit would fill the Lord's treasury, and develop his followers. This rule, if obeyed, would make the poor give more than they do, and the rich give abundantly. 4. To prevent the day of worship from being a day for trying to raise money. It should be already in hand and ready for the treasury. The cultivation of this four-fold rule would keep money in the treasury, so that the church would not have to devise means for raising money, but the committee would simply have to appropriate money; and that would be a delightful service. As it is, in most congregations, the task is to raise money. It should not be so.

Such a system, wrought into a fixed habit, would develop such a spirit of religious and commercial honesty, that commercial obligations would be met without trouble or criticism. The outsider usually gets his idea that church people do not pay their bills any better than non-church people from those church people who make no systematic contributions to their church. Consider church members who make weekly and liberal contributions to their church and find out whether they pay their grocery and other bills. By this standard judge the church on the financial line. System is the word for church finance. The Postal Department if Government may illustrate system. Each letter costs only two cents; but every person who uses the mail pays the two cents. Every person who is a member of the church should make regular offerings; five cents a week would probably be the smallest offering; then ten cents, fifteen cents, twenty cents, twenty-five cents, fifty cents, one dollar, and on up according to personal property. Some rich people prefer to wait for months and then give check; but they lose the benefit of thinking of it weekly, and others lose the benefit of their example putting in the envelope every Sunday.

I overlooked, somehow, Rev. L. F. Johnson, D. D., of Brooklyn, N. Y., who delivered a very helpful and delightful course of lectures on the Acts of the Apostles at the Valley Virginia Central Conference, and thereby made a spiritual contribution to the excellent business session of that body.

NOTES

Rev. J. L. Foster was in this section last week for a few days rest and in the interest of some property.

Rev. W. G. Clements, Morrisville, N. C., sends greetings to all the brethren and sisters. We miss Brother Clements' occasional visits since his impaired health.

We are informed that Dr. D. A. Long will not return to his present field another year. He is serving Pleasant Hill (Alamance County), Liberty, N. C., and Salem Chapel.

The church at Burlington is nearing completion. The total spent to date is a little over thirty-five thousand dollars, and the estimate to complete it is about ten or twelve thousand more.

The Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention was in session at Raleigh, N. C., on Thursday night, September 11. At this writing we have no report as to what was done, but presume that a full report will be furnished for next week's paper.

Brother E. L. Aldridge, Altamahaw, N. C., R. F. D. No. 2, and a member of Concord church, was in to see us the other day. Brother Aldridge says that he once thought that he was not able to pay for his Church paper, but now since he wants it, that such an idea seems foolish.

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell has recently received his discharge as a Chaplain and is now in a position to consider a call to some church or groups of churches. Brother Harrell is a young man, well educated, having served as pastor several years. Some church in need of

HELPING WIN THE WORLD FOR CHRIST

July 8 to August 1 the Methodist Episcopal Church held a training Conference at Evanston, Ill., for its newly appointed missionaries. Over one hundred were present, and immediately after the Conference the entire number left for their appointed fields in various parts of the world. Happy indeed is that Church which can send out at one time over one hundred new recruits to help win this world to Christ in those regions where our blessed Gospel has never been known, and so has had no chance. A people who have for more than fifty years turned every Sunday school class into a missionary class may expect to raise over one hundred million dollars for missions in a few months and then may expect men and women to volunteer by the hundreds to go into all parts of the world for Christ.

The Presbyterians who are also busy raising a new era fund of millions are sending out one hundred and ten new recruits to various foreign fields and the Reformed Church is sending out twenty-two new missionaries. Our Father in Heaven, in His wisdom and discretion, has never yet let a church grow at home and become powerful in winning souls here until that church has become willing to send missionaries abroad, and seek to enter into His program of winning the whole wide world for Him.

Our dear Christian Church will grow and become powerful in the world one day; but under God's wisdom that day will never dawn until we become world-wide in vision and give our supreme effort to helping win a whole world through and by a whole Gospel.

CRADLE ROLL DAY

Quite a number of our women are making the children happy by having a "Missionary Cradle Roll Day." Mrs. A. T. Banks writes of such a day, in her church: "The Missionary Cradle Roll Day was observed in Ramseur Christian church first Sunday in July. An interesting program was carried out by the children. The offering received was $7.79. Mrs. I. H. Foust is the efficient superintendent of this work. The following Wednesday the mothers and babies were invited by the Woman's Missionary Society to its regular meeting at the home of Mrs. Foust, after which an afternoon of social pleasure was enjoyed. Ice cream, cake, lemonade and fruit were served by the Society in honor of the visiting guests. The mothers were delighted and the babies had a good time. I believe the meeting will mean much for our mission work here." Of course, it will mean much. That which is done in the Master's name to help kindle interest in the souls of the unsaved millions in pagan lands who have no opportunity of knowing of our Christ and His blessed Gospel always means much. If we had women like Sister Banks in every church and congregation, it would not be long before our dear Church would be awake to our duty and privileges in the mission field. May the good work continue.

OUR RESPONSIBILITY AS A MISSIONARY PEOPLE*

Since time began there has never been anything to compare to the position which America now holds in the world. For the first time in all history one nation is looked upon by all other nations as the unselfish and universal friend of all, leading out into a new day of international brotherhood.

Will it be possible now for America to transform that patriotism to a larger morn until its loyalty and its fervor shall be as intense and unselfish for the flag of the Cross in world dominion in the days of peace as it was for "Old Glory" in time of war? Will men and women continue to pour out their money with generous prodigality for the weak and defenseless, and for the finer services of humanity? Will our young men and young women be as ready to put something big and fine and wonderful into the world life by their living and giving day by day as they were ready to die for these things on the field of battle? In this new and more difficult undertaking, whatever may be the tasks of the Government and of industry, the larger responsibility will fall upon the Church of Christ.

The conflict is ours. We of the Christian Church must shoulder our part of this great responsibility and obey the Master's call: "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel," which was not spoken in a faraway sense alone. It included the land of Jesus' own sacred presence as well as the uttermost ends of the earth. Home Missions are building the base behind Foreign Missions. We now have Home Mission churches in twenty-four towns and cities in the United States and Canada and mission work is being done in Northern Alabama, Eastern New York and Eastern Wyoming. There are fifty million people in America unaffiliated with any religion. There are said to be one and a half million Latin Americans (most of whom are illiterate) in the Southwestern part of the United States. More than half the population of El Paso, Texas (a city of 60,000 people) is made up of refugees from Mexico.

There is a call of the West today, by Rev. W. S. Alexander, for workers. The majority of the "Loggers," as they are called in the West, were of a rough class. But gradually a better class began to come, more stable in character and purpose. They bought homes; saw the danger lurking in the cities and began to "clean up;" they closed the bar-rooms and dance halls, and in 1912 the loggers and the women united forces and have voted the coast countries dry. The "logger" has good roads, cleaner camps, reads more, work eight hours a day, where before he worked from day light until dark, Sunday included. Yet with all his material advancement, he has not been drawn to church. He needs to have Jesus Christ taken to him, in his camp, on week days as well as on Sundays; he needs wholesome Christian literature, for he now has time for reading. The West's greatest need, says Mr. Alexander, is religion, and no other organization has anything better than the Christian Church. The ringing call sounds forth. We are responsible to the degree of our power. Great changes are taking place. Characteristic qualities necessary to win are: A clear vision of future possibilities; willingness to assume our full share of responsibility; wisdom to embrace our opportunity; persistence; moral courage; self-sacrifice and endurance to push to a successful conclusion the work needed. The fight is on, whose will be the victory? All things are possible with God.

MISSIONARY INTEREST

Dear Friends:

You all know from a previous article in THE CHRISTIAN SUN that working and pleading for missions is new to me, and that probably it would not last long, but the missionary spirit has not died out in my heart yet, and if anything it gets stronger every day. I feel like I want to divide every dollar I have, and would if I could. I feel like the best part of my life has been spent, or at least the most number of years. But with God's help not the best years, for I expect to help in the Lord's work all I can from now on.

Let me tell you about a sermon I heard the first Sunday in March in a church in this neighborhood. The text was Ephesians 6 chapter, and a part of the 20th verse: "An ambassador in bonds." When I heard the text I wondered what kind of a sermon could be preached from that text. It was just splendid, and so plain and helpful. The minister explained what an ambassador means—that it means to be a messenger for Christ. It was a most earnest and touching sermon. He defended our Savior with such force and power as I never heard before. Anyone hearing him could say that truly Jesus is his Lord and Savior. When the minister portrays his Master it is not the word painting, the beautiful coloring or the wonderful power of the speaker that thrills you, but the perfect image of the Lord Jesus Christ. That will ever remain engraved on the memory imprinted on the heart. A God of love of mercy of forgiveness sheds His kindly light for all and steadily leads to the higher life, and makes us want to sing, "Oh for a thousand tongues to sing my dear Redeemer's praise."

Now all of us cannot be preachers; cannot be messengers for Christ in this country nor missionaries in foreign lands, but we can give of our means to help send the message to those who do not know about Jesus. I want to ask all who read this article, for my sake, who are new in the experience, and for the sake of the One who died for you, to make a contribution to missions. If you are a regular contributor, or have never given anything before and if you cannot give more than ten or twenty-five cents, that will count greatly, for I guess THE CHRISTIAN SUN has many readers. You will experience more joy and pleasure than from anything else you ever did.

We can be His messenger in many ways. If we do not have the courage to speak about the best friend we have in the world we can write to our friends. There is power in the written word sometimes, and above all, try to live as Christ would have you live in your homes. Religion in the home is what counts most with the unsaved.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

ELON OPENING

The thirtieth annual opening of Elon College on September 10 was the largest in the history of the institution, excepting the abnormal conditions produced by the S. A. T. C. last autumn. Both the ladies' dormitories are crowded and the Board is called to meet Tuesday, September 16, to consider the enlarging of facilities.

The spirit of the campus, always fine, is unusually inspiring. The strenuous and successful campaign for the Standardization Fund, the special courses of summer study by sixteen of the professors, together with the addition of new members to the faculty, have created a new spirit of optimism and enthusiasm. We are confidently expecting the best session in our history.

A feature of the opening day was an assembly of the students, faculty and citizens in the auditorium at which time President Harper called on the professors who had been at the different universities to relate some of their experiences. This brought forth sufficient jokes and general fun to enliven the weary and dispel all home sickness.

N. G. NEWMAN.

ADDITIONAL ITEMS

A most pleasing feature of the opening days of the college in the way of social activity was a reception at the home of President and Mrs. Harper Friday evening for the new members of the faculty. The new members were greeted by the old members of the faculty and their wives, and an enjoyable evening was spent by all. Mrs. Harper was assisted in the serving of refreshment by Mesdames W. P. Lawrence, J. O. Atkinson, J. R. McNally, and Misses Susie Riddick, Lila Newman, Annie Watson, Mary D. Atkinson, and Marion Lee Newman.

Another pleasing feature was the annual opening reception given by the faculty to the students, which occurred on Saturday night in the parlors and halls of the West Dormitory.

It has been recently announced on the Hill that the college has acquired a thirty-four acre tract of land just south of the college, and convenient to the college campus, on which is to be constructed a modern athletic field. This addition to the equipment of the college will mean much in the development of the athletic life here.

SUNDAY EVENING SERVICES AT ELON THIS YEAR

The Sunday evening services at the College this year will consist of a varied type of message. Experts in many fields of life activity will be invited to give the messages closest to their hearts. The speakers and their subjects will be announced for a month in advance.

The speakers for the remainder of September will be Dr. N. G. Newman for the second Sunday whose subject is "The Changing Time and the Unchangeable Christ." Dr. J. O. Atkinson will speak on the third Sunday on "Christian Service as a Life Vocation." Chaplain Black will speak of his war experiences on the fourth Sunday. Dr. N. G. Newman will preach each Sunday morning and is Chairman of the Committee to arrange for the evening services.

W. A. HARPER.

CONCERNING OUR SOLIDARITY

Referring to the call issued by certain brethren to come to the rescue of the Restoration Movement for which we do not tremble in the slightest degree, our good friend, The Word and Way, Baptist, Kansas City, Mo., among other comments, makes the following:

There is, perhaps, no religious body that has less solidarity, coherence, consistency and harmony than the Disciples denomination. These people are famous for their contention for union, and they promise to be quite as famous for contention, discord and division. * * *

The transformation, disintegration and decay of the Disciples denomination are a proof of the folly, inconsistency and futility of their "plea" for union.

To which we reply: Dear Friend, you do not understand. We hereby extend you a sincere and cordial invitation to come to our convention in Cincinnati, October 13-20, and see for yourself. We will welcome you as a fraternal delegate and extend you the privileges of the floor. We will let you hear and read our reports and we promise you a season of the warmest fellowship you have ever experienced. You will be among fifteen thousand delegates and never in your life have you witnessed as much good nature, "joyful visiting," and glad handshaking as you will see there. You will note that there has been growth in every department of the work and big growth at that.

We do not blame you for being mistaken about our "divisions." From the first we have discussed in the open and we are free to take up any question we please. The truth is, we rather like to "discuss." But dividing is another question. We refuse to do that. If you come do not wait around hoping to gather up the fragments. "There ain't goin' to be any." We have always welcomed differences in opinions. It keeps off crystallization and steers us clear of the dead line. And we thrive on it, for we have been that way from the first and yet we have grown into the millions and planted churches all over the earth. We have always held that we had a right to differ, but not to divide—and that very idea is a big contribution to the Christian union problem.

Come over to our convention. Brother Word and Way, and we pledge you beforehand that you will not have to become unclean by touching a corpse.

NOTE: The above was found in The Christian Evangelist, and we believe it will interest our people in view of the fact that union negotiations are on foot between the Disciples and our people.—Editor.

Rev. L. J. Wyriek, Elon College, N. C., has the second Sunday open for the coming year if any church is in need of a pastor for that Sunday.

a pastor will do well to communicate with Brother Harrell. His address is Suffolk, Virginia.

The trustees of the Burlington Church have been instructed to offer the old building and real estate for sale. The location of the property is ideal and in a few hundred yards of the very business of the city. Only the street divides it from the new church lot and building. Brother D. R. Fonville is chairman of the trustees.

Sunday schools and churches should elect superintendents, secretaries and other officers now so that their names can be included in The Annual. So often names of officers are reported to Conferences, and immediately after that time these officers go out and new ones come in. In this way the departments of the Church do not have a correct list of these officers. The list included in The Annual should be the officers for the coming year so that when some one desires to write some Sunday school superintendent or church secretary that it will be no trouble in getting the letter into the hands of the right party.

One of our very able Exchanges has discontinued the use of the Sunday school comments so that the space may be given to other matters. We quote this from the announcement: " * * * Then we cannot close our eyes to the fact that literature upon the Sunday school lesson is abundant and easily accessible. We do not presume to think that we can improve on that which is already furnished by the Church." We pass this along for what it is worth, and ask these questions: Is the Sunday school lessons furnished THE SUN an improvement upon our regular literature? When we are asked to see the Officers and Teachers' Journal, what good does it do if the reader does not have that Journal? If he had the Journal, would he not use it anyway without being cited to it? For what other purpose would he have it? These same questions apply to the Christian Endeavor helps, for instance, if a man takes The Christian Endeavor World, would he have to be reminded that such a paper would be a good place to find help on the topic? If he didn't have this paper, would the reference help him?

Last week the Board of Religious Education met in a commercial hotel at Raleigh, N. C. We were just wondering how much better it would have been if the Convention had some official headquarters for this meeting. Last year the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention met at Elon College, and this week it is in session at Suffolk, Virginia. We were just wondering that if the Convention had some regular headquarters that the satisfaction and dissatisfaction about the better place to meet would not be settled. The Field Secretary has his office located in his own home, sacrificing the room of his library for it. We were just wondering how long the Convention would be satisfied in keeping the office under such an arrangement. The Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention is incorporated, and each corporation is required to hang out a sign indicating the official location of its office. We notice there is no sign in the front of the home of our Mission Secretary. We were just wondering how embarrassing it would be to him if he should be forced to carry out that requirement. In the meeting of the Board of Religious Education last week steps were taken looking forward to employing a man for all his time for the work of Sunday school and Christian Endeavor. We were just wondering where this man would be located. One of these days we are not only going to have a Secretary of Missions, but we are going to have Secretaries—one for the home work and one for the work abroad. We were just wondering how nice it would be to have these offices located at the same place. One of these days we are going to have a Secretary of Education, whose business it will be to travel throughout the length and breadth of our Convention and speak to the young people about their educational career. We were just wondering if the office of this man would be isolated from the other Convention offices. The Editor of THE SUN owns a little stock in a printing plant, and because of his connection he has mutual arrangements to have an office in the same building, and therefore, saves the Convention a monthly expense of not less than $25.00. We were just wondering that if the Editor should sever his present connection with the printing business what effect it would have on the THE CHRISTIAN SUN, since THE SUN has no home of its own. In the stock room section of the Burlington Printing Company the files of THE CHRISTIAN SUN during its entire history, are lying in a pile in the form of junk. The building is protected by insurance but not a penny of the insurance would go to THE SUN in case of a fire, and certainly the records could never be duplicated. We were just wondering if the Church has enough of interest and pride to inquire into this and make some provision for these records to be placed in a safety vault. The first volume of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the entire monthly issue (for then it was a monthly) of 1844, is locked up in a fire proof safe, but that safe is not the property of the Church. We are just wondering that if for any reason this accommodation could not be longer continued where this valuable volume could be kept. So often some important item is known by the officers of the Convention and should get in the next issue of THE SUN, but for the lack of proximity of THE SUN to these places of activity the paper often goes to press without a knowledge of these items that should not wait. We were just wondering when the light breaks upon the Convention to do these business-like things and establish Convention headquarters, where such headquarters would be.

Well, we were just wondering, that's all.

The manufacturers and employees in the city of High Point have been at variance for several weeks. Governor Bickett was called in last Saturday and continued a conference through part of Sunday, which succeeded in getting the two factions together. Work in the High Point shops will be resumed September 17.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

We are very happy to pass the $10,000.00 mile post in our financial report for this week. The churches and Sunday schools have been very loyal this year and have made it possible to reach this amount at this time. If we have no 'Flu' this fall and our churches do as well as they should do in the Thanksgiving Offering, this year should far surpass any year yet in the history of the Orphanage.

The writer had a very pleasant visit to Catawba Springs on the second Sunday. Brother B. F. Branch met me at the station and carried me to the church, entertained me for dinner and delivered me at the station in time to catch the evening train for home. While Brother Branch could not get his "blaek mule" to go as fast as our Ford, yet I enjoyed the ride splendidly. It reminded me of days gone by when I was a boy on the farm and had the pleasure of driving a blaek mule, and on some occasions I persuaded the mule to go as slow as possible as we wanted to say all the nice little things we knew how to say.

Brother J. Lee Johnson kindly gave me an opportunity to make a talk in behalf of the Orphanage work and an offering was taken. We also received several subscriptions for the Children's Home. Brother Johnson preached a splendid sermon, and we thought it well worth our trip to Catawba Springs just to get to hear him preach again. The Catawba people are very loyal supporters of the Orphanage and we expect a number of subscriptions from that church yet for the Children's Home.

Some of our Sunday schools have not gotten on the list of monthly contributors for this year. I want to insist that if your school is not on this list that you see to it that a contribution is made in your school and mailed in. If you read this letter and know your school is on the delinquent list, get busy and don't rest or let your school rest till it gets on the "banner" list.

I am anxious to have each school on the list by Conference. It will do your school good to get on this list, it will make your little children more interested to help the little orphans. Let us hear from your school in the next few weeks. You must help others if you want to grow. We will find the more you give for the support of the Orphanage and for missions, or for any other cause for the Church's good, the more you will want to give.

Get in the habit of giving and you will enjoy it. When you lend a helping hand to the helpless it makes you better. Did you ever do a kind deed that helped some one else that you did not feel better by the doing?

I hope you have had a good time this summer. I am glad you have not forgotten the corner.—'Uncle Charley.'

CALEB COOKSTOVE'S COUNSEL

(By Marian Churchhill Graves)

"O dear, O dear!" sighed Billy Broom. "Will this sweeping housecleaning never end? I've swept and I've swept all day long until I'm so tired I can't sleep a wink."

"You can't be any more in need of a rest than I am," rattled Delia Dishpan from her hook by the sink. "I'm so tired of dishes that I'm planning to spring a leak so I can be thrown on the ash heap. At least that would be a change from dishes three or four times a day."

"I think it's change I need, too," crackled Billy Broom. "If I could have Felicia Feather Duster's place and dust now and then, I'm sure I shouldn't get so tired of life."

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

MEMORY

(Rev. J. T. Kitchen)

Do not let memory linger too long lamenting over the days which are gone. The unpleasant things will do you no good to recall, and the pleasant ones will only give transient joy. Imitate much as possible one who expressed himself in so many admirable, beautiful ways. One of which is: "Brethren,, but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

The real, living, active present surrounds us. Let us grasp it with a steady purpose looking with confidence for the best results. We can take a bundle of arrows from the quiver of truth and have them ready to speed their way to the mark. Many, too many, never say much except in the past tense, and the flight of years has a special charm for them which the present and future do not give. It is very hard to prevent the mind from running backward and dwelling upon the eventful past. Very many delight in telling what they did, where they went and how they felt, but it is better to tell where they are from—what they are doing, and how much gladness they get out of life. The happiness is in us, and we can and must bring it out and give it to others.

The pleasure which memory gives cannot be told—it is to be felt, but too profoundly great to tell, and the heart which feels knows better than tongue or pen can express or describe. Some of you as you meditate upon a long, long past will have many mingled remembrances of it. Some will have sad remembrance of an unhappy past, while a few others will have glad remembrance of a happy past. What intense feelings and great emotions tremble in the heart and quiver on the lips for deliverance and utterance as they feel like saying: "Bring back to me the simple joy and youthful glee that once pervaded the entire being, and sent a thrill of transport to the heart. Give them back to me for a while, and let me live over my life again in its fading twilight before the curtain is rolled down and the dark night surrounds me."

But do not linger too long on the dim, distant past. Only this very time is yours—use it then in the very best way, for tomorrow, yes, tomorrow may never come to you. Today is yours; today, today. To grasp the present situation, rightly, rise and improve it is the duty of all.

The seams of years may be deeply impressed on your carded, honest face, but the remembrance of honesty and truthfulness in your character will give a hopeful inspiration to your looks and a touch of polish and brightness to your whole being which wealth, prestige and honor without them could never impart.

All these subjects have been thought, talked and written over and over so many times; every phase of thought has been produced and expressed in the most lucid, beautiful and logical way, but when memory, precious memory surveys the past, it is forever new, bright and fresh, and still lends a pleasing charm to the imagination.

Up and down the ways of life, it has traveled with untold, unmeasured, and unknown swiftness over life's eventful ways, and is still ready to scale the heights of time in searching for and contemplating the great and the good.

Do you remember? Yes, you remember pleasantly when you did right, and you also remember sadly when you did wrong. There was a continual conflict in your life between right and wrong—each wanting to gain the victory over the other. With tear-dimmed eyes and tear-bathed cheeks there are so many regrets to remember. So many remember how they grieved that dear mother who had been the support and joy of their life, and since she parted with them for a clime when they never change nor get old they can almost hear her sweet voice saying: "Come, and live with me for it is so peaceful, lovely and beautiful up here." That home is fairer than day with no clouds and no night.

Memory, precious memory, we love to think of its boundless ways, and recall with much delight its pleasant, happy past. That sweet dream of life is a bright star in memory's fadeless crown and we will wear it proudly and gladly as the imagination ascends and brings back to us beautiful and pleasant thoughts.

It would be a blank, dark existence if we had no memory. If it could not survey the places and things of early and later times how terrible would be the condition. But memory still retentive and active like a bright star of hope gleams over the way and gives inexpressible pleasure to the mind. The pleasant events of life would not be appreciated so much if we did not remember the unpleasant ones with which to compare them. After many days of suffering in untold ways, one bright, glad, sweet day of happiness may more than compensate for all of the adverse conditions, when memory shall be so full, that the soul will be overflowing with supreme gladness.

NOT THAT

The call of the tithe is not a call for relief to some struggling church. A rich church should tithe as well as the poor church. The poor man should pay his tithe as well as the rich man, for it identifies man with God. Money getting is not the object; man getting and soul getting—these are the things that grow out of partnership with God.

LITTLE FOLKS DEPARTMENT

"And I've always felt that I'd like to be Eva Egg Beater," confided Delia Dishpan. "She doesn't work all the time, but what a lively time she has when she does work, hopping and dancing about and singing at the top of her lungs."

"Miss Egg Beater is too noisy for me," remarked Billy, "I like quiet folks better. That's why I should choose Miss Feather Duster's lot. But of course I'd prefer to be myself some of the time. It would grow just as tiresome to do nothing but dust forever and ever as it does to sweep, sweep, sweep, until I feel as if every bristle I have is loose."

"You speak the truth, Billy," agreed Delia Dishpan. "I believe that no one who does the same thing day in and day out can ever get far ahead in the world."

Caleb Cookstove creaked and groaned in an effort to make himself heard: "See here, see here, what do you young folks think of me?" he rumbled. "I'm the oldest inhabitant of this kitchen, and I've done the same thing day after day for thirty days. The only rest I ever have is during the hottest weather of the summer, and then I'm not expected to move from my place."

"Yes, and where has work put you?" snapped Billy Broom. "Are you any better off in the world for doing the same thing over and over?"

"Don't lose your temper, my friend. I'm the one who should get hot," answered Mr. Cookstove. "I am growing old now, but I know that I am of more use to the lady of the house than I was when I first came here, for I've tried to do my work better each day and she has found that she can depend on me. She wouldn't trade me for a new stove, and it's all because I've learned to do my work well by doing it over and over. But if I had felt as you do, Miss Dishpan, and tried to make myself useless, I should now be sold for old iron and be of not much use to any one. Why don't you brace up and learn how to do your work better? And when you prove that you are worth it and are not likely to spring a leak at any minute, the lady of the house may use you to hold her embroidered napkins while she boils them. And you, Billy, should be ashamed of what every one says about you: 'A new broom sweeps clean.' Get a little ambition and show that you can do better as you grow older. I tell you, my friends, the folks that amount to the most in the world are those who do about the same thing day after day and do it better each time."

"Perhaps you are right, Mr. Cookstove," said Delia Dishpan. "I believe I'll try your way, anyhow."

"And so shall I," said Billy Broom. "You make me feel ashamed of my complaining."

"That sounds more hopeful," said Mr. Cookstove. "I must settle down for my night's rest now, or I won't be ready to make up when the master shakes me down in the morning. Good-night, my friends."

"Good-night," rattled Delia Dishpan.

"Good-night," creaked Billy Broom.—In Child's Hour.

THE COW'S CONTRIBUTION TO ART

"Why do you clip the cow's ears?" asked an interested observer of an employee in a large meat packing establishment. The plant was a model of cleanliness and great care was exercised in handling the meat, but in what way the clipping of a cow's ears could aid in maintaining sanitary conditions was a mystery to the onlooker.

"That," said the worker as he snipped the hair from the inside of an ear, "is the cow's contribution to art. Until recently when some one discovered that the hair in a cow's ear is the most delicate, yet strong and soft hair known, it was believed that the best substance for the making of high-grade brushes for water-color painting was camel's hair.

"And so," said the man as he passed on with his shears, "practically all the 'camel's hair' brushes are now made from the hair of cows' ears, and they are said to be better than those made of real camel's hair."

The scarcity of camel's hair, due to the difficulty of importing it, brings to mind the fact that shortly before the Civil War an attempt was made to introduce the raising of camels in the southwestern section of the United States and using them for transportation purposes in the deserts of Arizona and New Mexico.

Jefferson Davis, then Secretary of War, secured an appropriation of funds for this purpose and two herds of camels, numbering about sixty animals, were brought here from Algeria, but, after having proved their usefulness during the period of unrest at the time of the Civil War, they were allowed to perish at the hands of Indians and Mexicans or became the victims of wolves, cougars and rattlesnakes.

It is possible that a few wild survivors of the two herds still exist in northern Mexico, but the belief is based on nothing more definite than the tales of prospectors who, in their search for gold, frequently are rendered somewhat visionary through suffering for the want of water.

Besides supplying a substitute for camel's hair brushes, other "waste" portions of slaughtered cattle furnish material for many useful articles. It is, of course, well known that cowhide makes a very durable leather. The hair which is shaved from the hide is used in wall plaster. Some portions of the bones and horns are used in the manufacture of brittons and the remainder is ground and used as a fertilizer, as is also the blood after it has been dried.—A. H. Dreher, in Kind Words.

Necessity is not only "the mother of invention," but it is the father of industry and the grandfather of prosperity.—Exchange.

We have had occasion to talk with many persons who have been connected with large financial campaigns for churches and schools, and are informed that those who tithe can always be counted upon to do their part in such campaigns.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR SEPTEMBER 28, 1919

Review: Jesus our Savior and King.

Selection for Reading: Matt. 21:1-9, 15, 16.

Golden Text: "Hosanna to the Son of David; Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; Hosanna in the highest."—Matt. 21:9.

The Church of Jesus Christ (Lesson I). Has our local church, our denomination, performed the duties God has given it to do? Are we willing to inquire of the Lord "what wilt thou have me to do?" in our church, or do we say: "What does Mr. Biggest Payer want done?" or "What will Mrs. Church Worker say about that?" "The trouble with most of our churches," says Rev. B. B. Sutcliffe, "is that so many are church workers, not Christ workers. Church workers are always looking for reward, and are always in trouble. Christ workers know that their reward is in Heaven, and they strive to please their Lord." Baptism—the "answer of a good conscience toward God," the act by which we announce to the world that we "have put on Christ" is a sacrament of the church instituted by the words of Jesus Himself (Lesson II), while the Lord's Supper (Lesson III) is the time when those who love their Lord join with their brethren in closest communion with Him, and in this and other acts of Christian Fellowship (Lesson IV) we prove that "we know that we have passed from death unto life because we love the brethren." Who would not worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness, He who has done so much for us? If we would worship more in our churches, we would not have so much time for criticizing the preacher, and we would prove to the world that the statement made in a comic journal lately that "A Christian is one who goes to church on Sunday to obtain forgiveness for the sins he committed on Saturday and expects to commit on Monday" is a lie and no truth. (Lesson V). Could we but so live, there would be no question of our winning others to Christ (Lesson VI), and instead of a pitiful bit of money once a year to Christian Missions. (Lesson VII), we would give of our best to the Master, our sons and our daughters, and His share of our increase. What responsibility has the church for the young, and for their amusements? Whose fault if "politics are rotten"? Who is to blame if things are wrong? Who is the neighbor to whom we are to show mercy? Who is he not? (Lesson VIII). What shall we do about the temperance laws? Do we owe any duty to our neighbor here? If we can keep liquor in the house without over indulgence, or use it to flavor cooking, shall we lay a stumbling block in the way of our neighbor, and cause him to stumble? (Lesson IX). "Thy Kingdom Come. (Lesson X). It has not come yet; this is the period of grace, not of rule, but should not we love Him, pray for the time when He shall reign? (Lesson VI). If—and when—His Kingdom comes, what part shall we have in it? It is only the Scriptures which tell us of the way to the City and the welcome which awaits us there. (Lesson XII), but if we study them they are able to make us wise to salvation, if we are willing to accept Jesus as our Savior and King. (Lesson XIII).

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR SEPTEMBER 28, 1919

The Christian Athlete and His Training. I Cor. 9:19-27.

"Training for service." "He that striveth in the games." Have you ever noticed how many words there are in the Bible that signify effort. "Striveth," "exerciseth," "fervent," "red-hot glowing; "fight;" "compel." This is no passive war of non-resistance. It is a contest between trained gladiators, fit in body mind and soul, one to work the works of evil, the other "the works of Him that sent me." "I am not here to dream, to drift," but to keep myself in condition in every sense, and "having done all—to stand, not supine, but alert, thoroughly armed for an offensive as well as defensive warfare, "against principalities, and powers and against spiritual wickedness in the heavenly places."

MRS. FRED BULLOCK.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS 'CARRY ON'

One of our good Sunday school superintendents writes: "Our Sunday school has started something." Now isn't that fine? So many of our schools are willing just to keep on in the same old way from year to year. If a farmer were to farm that way, or a merchant were to merchandise that way, both would be out of date and go broke in a few years. Truly the Word says: "The children of this world are wiser in their day than the children of light." Some of the hardest things you can say about some people, and some Sunday schools, and some churches, is to tell the naked truth about them. That was what the Bible was doing in the above declaration about how stupidly unwise the children of light are. They know better, for they have the light; but they are then not as wise as the children of this wicked world. What if the church and the Sunday school were to become as wise and shrewd and active and vigorous for the Kingdom as are the people of the world in business and professions and politics! My! how soon this whole wicked world would be won for Christ.

But we are content to drag on in the same old way. The world is forever starting something. Why not the Sunday school? The world all around us has decided to "carry on." Why not the church and Sunday school?

This particular school decided to take one offering each month for missions. (It was already taking one offering a month for the Orphanage). Any Sunday school that hasn't the faith to give as much to others as it spends on itself hasn't enough faith to achieve anything worth while, and is selfish rather than unselfish in its conduct. It requires faith to achieve things worth while in this world; and if some of our schools will exercise more faith they will do more work both for themselves and for others. Get your Sunday school to "carry on," start something, and see if a new source of life does not spring up within it.

Our mission church at Danville, Va., has started the monthly missionary offering and sends $10.86 the first Sunday's offering. How is that for a struggling mission point? Ebenezer Sunday school (Wake Co.) decides to send a missionary offering once a month, and sends $4.00 as a starter. Here are the schools, with amounts sent in, for missions from these schools in August: Lebanon (Semora), $1.88; Durham, $10.00; Holy Neck (a class), $1.66; Isle of Wight C. H., $2.50; Ivor, $2.00; Pleasant Grove (Va.), $3.00; Wentworth, $1.38; New Lebanon, $1.81; Wadley (Ala.), $2.00; High Point (Va. Valley), $2.00; Holy Neck S. S., $20.30; Pleasant Union, $1.20; New Providence, $1.91; Beulah (Ala.), 98 cents; Reidsville, $2.29; Parks Cross Roads, $1.50; Ingram, $3.00; High Point (N. C.), $3.72; Sanford, $5.78; Linville, $2.00; Lanett, $2.30; Catawba Springs, 95 cents; Ebenezer, $4.00; Mt. Zion (Ala.), $1.05; Danville, $10.86.

Other schools than these are contributing but some send in once in two or three months. These are the offerings sent to the Secretary in August; and the number increases. Here is hoping and praying that all our schools will before long have a care for the unsaved millions if they would and will make an offering for their salvation.

Miss Myrtle Ward, the daughter of W. S. Ward of High Point, N. C., was married to Charles A. Bost of Salisbury, N. C., on Wednesday evening, August 27, 1919, at the home of Rev. P. D. Brown, on English St., High Point, N. C., at 7:30 P. M.

Mr. and Mrs. Bost will make their home in Salisbury, N. C. Mrs. Ward is a member of the Christian Church and her many friends wish her aid and her companion a very happy life.

R. C. BOYD.

OBITUARIES

BROWN

Sister Minnie Brown, wife of W. W. Brown, was born October 16, 1881, died August 21, 1919.

Sister Brown had been a member of Union Grove Christian church for about fifteen years, and a model Christian she was, loved by all who knew her.

She leaves to mourn their loss a husband, three little girls: Allie, Ruth and Lois, a father and mother, four brothers and four sisters, besides a host of relatives and friends.

May they be comforted at the thought of meeting again to part no more.

T. J. GREEN.

BOONE

Henry Milton Boone departed this life at the Old Soldier's Home, Raleigh, N. C., September 3, 1919, aged seventy-seven years, eleven months and three days. He was one of a family of fifteen. He came to Alamance County from Guilford about forty years ago. He served as a soldier in the Civil War with the Guilford greys of the 47th Regiment. He was a good soldier, a good citizen and a kind husband and father. Three children survive him: Mrs. E. M. McDade, Memphis, Tenn.; Mrs. J. U. Faucette and Mrs. H. C. Hall, Burlington, N. C. He leaves six grandchildren. He was a member of Union Christian church in Alamance County where the funeral service was held, followed by interment in the cemetery at that place. The service was conducted by the writer.

J. W. HOLT.

BOSWELL

Mrs. Margaret Frances Boswell died at her home, 940 Adams Street, High Point, N. C., at 11:00 P. M., Tuesday night, September 2, 1919. She was fifty-seven years old. She leaves to mourn their loss a devoted husband, five children, two sisters, two brothers and a host of friends.

Mrs. Boswell was a woman of excellent traits and was loved by all who knew her. She was an invalid for nineteen months, which affliction she bore most patiently. She was a member of Hillsdale Baptist Church for fourteen years. She was loyal to her Christ and Church.

Funeral services were conducted from her home on Thursday morning and interment took place in Hillsdale cemetery.

May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

TUCK

Little Edith Tuck, the bright and interesting little girl of Brother and Sister Hosea Tuck of Virgilina, Va., was accidentally scalded on August 7, 1919 and died from the effects of the same on August 9.

The little one's body was laid to rest in Union cemetery on Sunday afternoon, August 10. Edith had been in the home just twenty-two months. The parents are deeply grieved but find comfort in the promise of seeing their child again.

C. E. NEWMAN.

TUCK

Riley Dunberry Tuck was born in December, 1856 and died July 19, 1919, aged 62 years and seven months. In 1884 he married Miss Flora Tuck who survives him together with seven sons and one daughter.

Brother Tuck was a most energetic farmer and thought well of by all who knew him. The burial services were conducted at the grave in Union church cemetery, near Virgilina, Va., on Sunday afternoon, July 20.

May a strong faith in God's providence comfort the bereaved widow and guide the fatherless in all the affairs of life.

C. E. NEWMAN.

TAYLOR

Mrs. Scenorra Stella Taylor, daughter of James M. and Caroline McAden, was born March 20, 1871, and died August 18, 1919, aged 48 years, four months and twenty-nine days. When a young girl Sister Taylor professed faith in Christ and united with Lebanon Christian church where her membership remained till her death.

On December 13, 1893 she married Mr. W. Scott Taylor of Semora, N. C. The husband, two sons, Scottie and Morris one daughter, Mrs. Clyde Allen and one grandson survive her; also three sisters and one brother. The sisters are: Mrs. J. H. Yarboro and Mrs. Bettie Wells of Semora and Mrs. Kate McKane of Newport News, Va. The deceased was the sister of J. H. McAden of Semora.

Sister Taylor was an excellent Christian woman, a faithful wife and mother. She loved her church and all its enterprises. She bore her sufferings during months with a submissive and resigned spirit. All that medical skill could do was done for her recovery, but the summons came and she entered the rest of the faithful.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—FIX

Whereas, it hath pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our midst one of our best loved members, Mrs. Sarah Fix and

Whereas, by her death the Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., has sustained the loss of a consecrated, faithful, loyal member, one who was ever ready to lend a helping hand, contributing liberally of her means, her time and energy to the church and the advancement of Christ's Kingdom, Therefore, we, the members of the Woman's Missionary Society, desire to express our love and esteem in the following resolutions:

1. That we bow in humble submission to the will of Him Who doeth all things well, realizing that our loss is Heaven's gain.

2. That we seek to emulate her example by rendering our best service to the work she loved. We are grateful for her beautiful Christian life and we do feel keenly the loss of this most loyal and faithful worker.

3. That we extend our sincerest sympathy to her bereaved family, assuring them of our prayer that His grace may be sufficient in this hour of sorrow.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to The Christian Sun and the Burlington News for publication, that a copy be sent to the family of the deceased and that a copy be spread upon the minutes of our Society.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

THE CONFERENCE YEAR

Since this scribe has been attending Conference a lax method in regard to the Conference year has prevailed. Some church letters date from one time and some from another. Not only this, but many pastors date their reports from different points on the calendar. A rather unbusiness-like arrangement, it seems to us.

With the average local church, the Sunday before Conference is usually the end of the Conference year. This means at least four different dates used in all the churches. Each local church is a unit of the Conference in which it is located. The records of all the churches in one Conference constitute the records of the Conference; and it is the Conference and not the local church that is looked to for final reports.

The Convention has the power to set a date for the official year of the churches to close, but it has never done this. We presume that on account of the Conference meeting at different times, that the Convention has had a hesitancy in doing this. Each Conference should set its own date to close the official year and each church in that Conference should conform to this. Such a date should be set well ahead of the Conference date so as to give ample time for any church liable to miss a service to close up its work.

Put this in your hat, Brother Delegate, and if it is worth while, bring it before your Conference.

"MARY HAS GONE TO COLLEGE"

Part II

Now, Mary got home all right and was just as happy as a lark. If you could have heard her telling father and mother about the things at college that were not just up to the standard (in her estimation) it would have been a charming story, indeed. Of course father and mother agreed with her, petted their only daughter, and assured her that she could stay at home the remainder of her days. At that time Mary thought that she wanted to stay at home the remainder of her days, but a day came when she could not stay at home because father and mother passed away and Mary had to look out for herself.

Mary thought that the girls at college were having a hard time and that hers was an easy one—and it was for a while. The girls left at college continued their studies, returned to their homes better equipped for life, and in all the days to come had every advantage over Mary. For a long time Mary could not see this, but others could, and one day Mary realized it, too.

Not a long story, you say. Well, the story is longer than here told. Go on in your mind and compare Mary with her lost opportunities and with the girls who seized theirs. You have seen it, and are now seeing it every day.

Keep Mary in College. Every crown has its thorn. Mary is your girl, and so love her to the extent of obedience and do not stop with her childish desires, for they are but for a day.

BE PATIENT

Again we ask our friends to be patient. We are writing this note on Wednesday afternoon, September 17, and most of THE SUN for September 24 is in type and enough copy on hand to finish the issue and part of the issue for October 1. Your article will appear. Write often, be brief, say what you have to say with preliminaries, and stop when you have finished. Each week our problem becomes more difficult—the problem of serving a Church, doing three times the work that it once did with the same number of pages in the official organ. Be patient, or give us the means for a larger paper. The latter will suit us better.

THE CALL OF OUR ORPHANAGE

Our Orphanage is calling for a very special help and the Church should, and will, respond to the call. That call is for funds to build and equip a building for the small children who seek admittance to that institution. The call is worthy, deserves our every consideration and the Church will meet the call and meet it gladly. Send a contribution today to Superintendent Chas. D. Johnston. It will give him a glad heart, cheer him in his endeavors and help you in a way that will bring joy and gladness to your own heart.

A GOOD SIGN

We see in the press notes that all schools and colleges have had a good opening. A good sign that the people are acting wisely regardless of high prices for provisions and attractive wages. We understand that Elon is taxed to its capacity. We are delighted and wish for her and her sister institutions a most successful year.

HAS YOUR CHURCH ADVANCED ITS PASTOR'S SALARY?

The Editor of The Herald of Gospel Liberty is endeavoring to get the name of each church in the denomination that has advanced its pastor's salary during the past year. We fully believe that a very large per cent of the churches has advanced the pastor's salary, but the failure to report this gives The Herald in its efforts, a very poor showing. We note that less than fifty have reported and we know that this is only a very few of the churches that have added to the pastor's salary during the past year. In behalf of The Herald we call upon our people to make report at a very early date. Just drop Brother Kerr a postal card and tell him how much advance you have received, Brother Pastor, and give him the name of your church. Do this and do it today.

WHY AND HOW MISSIONARIES ARE BORN

We have just finished reading a somewhat personal editorial in The Watchword, a publication of the United Brethren Church. We quote from this editorial the following note that will be of interest to many and presents a point worthy, we think, of the heading that we have seen fit to place above:

One-day, during the Christian Endeavor Conference at Buffalo, Secretary O. T. Deever and the editor had the inspiring privilege of spending the lunch hour at the table with two big-minded veteran missionaries. One of the helpful privileges of the International Christian Endeavor conventions is fellowship with strong men among the kingdom builders.

On this day we sat with Dr. Robert A. Hume, of Ahmednagar, India, and Dr. James H. Pettee, of Japan.

The conversation ranged from the care of babies to the League of Nations. I do not know just how the first topic was introduced. But Doctor Hume said that he had been a foreign missionary for seventy-two years—at least, he said, he had first raised his voice in India seventy-two years ago. Doctor Pettee has been a missionary for forty-five years.

The robust Doctor Hume was born in India; that is how he came to lift his voice in a foreign land so long ago. His father was taken ill and it became necessary to return to America. As the vessel was passing through the Indian Ocean, the spirit of his father took its flight and his body was buried in the sea. He did not know it at the time, but among the last prayers of his father was one that baby Robert might be a missionary. The boy knew nothing of this prayer, but after receiving his college education the call of God seemed clear to him, and he has spent many years in India as a missionary of the American Board of Foreign Missions. To add to his joy and his usefulness, five of his seven children are missionaries, the last of the five now under appointment to go out to India in the near future.

Doctor Pettee's call to the mission field came simply and naturally during the process of his course in education and during his college course. He was a classmate of Dr. Francis E. Clark, the two graduating fifty years ago.

Do not mistake personal convenience for personal guidance. So often we are inclined to let convenience suit our giving. We should seek guidance of the Holy Spirit and not convenience from self.

The Methodist Church lays great stress upon stewardship. Recently it completed its largest financial undertaking. Stewardship was given much attention, while about 35,000 tithers were enrolled. Plans give strength. God's plans give aid to worthy causes.

* *

Some claim that they do not know what one-tenth of their income is, because of the miscellaneous incomes. To those who think so we ask them if they have ever rightly endeavored to figure their tenth out?—and we further ask: Do they really want to find out?

NOTES

Rev. G. J. Green changes his address from Franklin, N. C., to Stem, N. C.

Rev. J. G. Truitt writes that he is now able to be up. His friends will rejoice to hear this.

As usual Elon has had a great opening. Congratulations to friends and the administration.

We have received from Secretary E. T. Cotten the proceedings of the fiftieth annual session of the Eastern Virginia Sunay School Convention.

Rev. A. Victor Lightbourne has returned from overseas where he served as Religious Divisional Director at Chaumont, the headquarters of General Pershing. Brother Lightbourne sends, through this office, greetings to the Brotherhood. He is open for evangelistic engagements.

Let us have your co-operation at all times.

Building a Church, or Churches

(An editorial in The Herald of Gospel Liberty)

There is no more important question, apart from those touching the spiritual life, for the ministers and laymen of the Christian Church to ask themselves just now than whether or not we all together are building a church, or whether we are simply building churches—here a little group and there a little group making the largest object of their Christian activity to bring their own church in its own little field up to its largest local effectiveness. For the question is fundamental and primary. It touches the very life-sources of our denominational existence. It embraces the very possibility of there being any real organic usefulness and leadership for the Christian Church as a whole at all. Upon its answer will depend our future as a people, even as the way in which it has been answered shaped the history of our past. For it is simply impossible to build up any large and potent force out of separate church units which think of themselves as the real end of their endeavor.

As we interpret the history of the Christian Church, we feel sure that the greatest weakness of its past was that its pastors and people were busy building churches, and that they had little real consciousness of being engaged together in creating a great church, the united power of which should become a mighty force for the Kingdom of God in His world. As we have read of those days, and especially as from the lips of our older men we have learned that more personal and intimate story of the past which never finds its way into the printed page, we have been impressed most of all with the patent fact that they were days of splendid achievement, and many of them of romantic interest, so far as individual preachers were concerned; but there was an absolute dearth of organic accomplishment to stir our admiration and applause.

They were days of great preachers, men who were vibrant with the spirit of freedom and who dared at the cost of persecution and ridicule to be pioneers in the way of religious liberty. They went everywhere preaching their new gospel, and at a cost to themselves of financial remuneration and personal comforts that bordered on the heroic. But as we look back over those years, it is hard for us to place our finger on any specific and definite fruit of their labor. They were busy, slavishly busy, preaching to churches—sometimes making it a point of satisfaction that the number to which they preached were so many; but there is little to indicate that those great preachers gave any real and purposeful thought to the building up of the Christian Church as a whole. The consequence was that there was no vessel, as it were, to receive and conserve their efforts; there was no organization with clear objective and determined purpose ready to pick up their work and carry it on when they must lay it down. So all of their tireless labor and their touching sacrifice slowly disappeared with the dropping out of their converts, and there is scarcely a thing that is tangible now to show for all of their strenuous personal endeavor.

Every young preacher in the Christian Church today should be keenly conscious of the fact that he stands to have his life-work evaporated like that if he is simply touching folks, and is not interweaving much of his toil and energy into the fabric of some great organization. For organizations of men and women are the only permanent things in this world. And even organizations must be of greater than neighborhood significance in order to be permanent. Your individual converts will die, the homes to which you minister will soon be gone, and with the passing of a generation the influence which you have left in the world will have dwindled down to such homeopathic measure that it is invisible and uncertain—if you have been satisfied to wear your life out simply in serving folks. You have a duty to make your ministry more permanent than that. You owe it to yourself and you owe it to your Christ to so build it into His church that even through the centuries much that you have done shall remain.

Those days of the past were days of great churches as well as of great ministers. From our older men we have learned of many churches, some of them in the cities, but most of them in towns or the open country, which two score of years ago or more were crowded with communicants and apparently filled with a spirituality and power which must endure. Yet to us, those churches are mostly only names and a memory. In large part, they have passed away entirely. A few remain, but with old and dingy buildings and a little handful of people who compose a struggling and discouraged congregation. Almost without exception, we think, wherever any of those local churches are at present a strong and vigorous and admirably going concern, it is the result of more recent renewal and reinvigoration by some of our present preachers—and not the accumulated power and glory of the past handed as a rich heritage to our present generation. It all seems a pathetic and dreadful loss—a loss that would discourage Christian service and sacrifice if we were not wise enough to analyze its history and learn the reason. No man or woman would want to give large sums for the erection of a church building in their community, if such is to be the inevitable, or even the likely, result. No real Christians would be satisfied to wear their lives out to build up their church and Sunday school if they felt that these were to be of such short duration—and that a single generation might see them become only a shadow of their former usefulness, or even disappear altogether. No preacher who has in his heart any real concept of his commission as a minister of the gospel of Christ could for a moment be content to spend any part of his life in an effort so transient and evanescent.

We ask a most studious reading of this long editorial only because we feel that the subject is primary to all that the Christian Church can ever hope to be or to do as an organization. Too few of our pastors have seemed to realize that it is basic, and vital to their future as well as to that of the Christian Church.

Yet it is to this very gloomy outlook that every minister and every layman is doomed as they meditate upon the final outcome of their Christian service, if they are engaged in simply building up local churches. If the object of their endeavor is only the particular church of which they happen just now to be the pastor, if their time and thought and energy are lavished upon it as an end within itself or even as the instrument of Christian ministry in that local community, then there is nothing in the history of such churches to warrant a pastor in expecting anything really permanent either for that community or for the world to come out of his ministry. The experience of every denomination has been just to the contrary; for it has shown how vain and unprofitable a thing local church ambition and selfishness is. Every man and woman who is a member of a congregation ought to be made to realize this. They should understand from the very first that any church that lives just for itself and for its own community will afterwards die—that there is no power of finance and no amount of spiritual ardor that can preserve its glory for any long number of years. They should be made keenly to feel that all of their gifts and all of their sacrifices and all of their labor for its upbuilding are very transient things, the fruits of which may pass away with their own generation. How true this is, we every one know if we stop to think. Many a person who has given liberally to the church in his own community in the days of its vigor has lived to see it go out of existence, or to become a decadent and ineffective institution. For it is an eternal law of God that individual churches cannot long be self-sustaining and continue an independent existence. They must either be an organic part of some larger and more permanent organization, or they will perish.

Yes, those were days of great churches—but they were not the days of a great church. Those local units had no impelling aspiration larger than their own community existence and success. It was very rare that any of their pastors even tried to make those churches feel that they had a ministry just as definite and just as imperative to perform for the Christian Church at large as they did for their own home neighborhoods. Indeed as we know the history of these men, and as we know the men of our ministry today, we doubt very much if those pastors felt that they themselves had any definite and binding obligation to the denomination. They were absorbed in their little local church work, and gave little time or thought to the building up of the Christian Church. They and their membership were trying to build churches, and not to build a church.

The result was inevitable. After while that strong pastor left that strong church, and slowly through the years it disintegrated. The conferences were too loosely builded together to conserve and care for that which its great preachers left behind. But worse than that: The strong churches really competed with each other and with the weak churches to secure the few able preachers. The struggling mission points, which might have been nurtured by the combined effort of the churches into great city organizations, were left to struggle along the best they could with the weak and indifferent type of preacher which was the only kind they had money enough of their own to hire. It did not take many years of such a process for the larger part of the conference to die out. This left the big church or two isolated and alone. Such isolation means extinction for a church—and in every case it proved so. Thus have whole conferences gone out of existence. Hence these local congregations defeated their own selfish purposes. Trying to get for themselves the best obtainable preachers—regardless of how much those men were needed at the strategic points or in the general work of the denomination—they came afterwards to stand so isolated and alone that no strong man cared to minister to them. The whole condition was also conducive to an inefficient type of minister. There was nothing in it to challenge the best blood of youth—and scores of young men of finest caliber in the membership of our churches in those days found nothing in such a condition to win them to the ministry as a life-work.

If the churches defeated their purpose, even so did the pastors who devoted their lives to building up these local fields instead of the Christian Church. As they grew older, there was no advancement for them—and some of them passed away in obscurity and poverty whose old age would have been fruitful and glorious if they had labored to larger and more permanent purpose. Nothing else could have been expected. And nothing else can be expected now if our preachers and our laymen are busying themselves with building churches. If their thought and their motive and their interests and gifts are circumscribed to their own local community, the Christian Church as a whole and in its parts is doomed.

It is not a principle which can be fulfilled by tacking on the conference and denominational interests as a subsidiary and after-thought. It is a law of life which is far more primary than that. It requires that the church at large shall come first and be the real object of our endeavor. The aim and ambition and purpose of the preacher and of the layman must come to be that larger ministry to the world which can be given only as our local churches are builded into the organization that is spending itself for these broader interests of the Kingdom.

When you have thought it through, you will agree with me that it is primary, and that the whole tenor and impress of our lives will be decided by whether or not we are endeavoring to build a church, or whether we are frittering our lives away on building churches!

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

SUFFOLK LETTER

There are two classes of human beings that are to be pitied rather than blamed: they are myopes and hypermetropes, near-sighted and far-sighted people. The myopic person sees the things near, close at hands; the hypermetropic sees the things that are far away. This, so far, has reference to physical vision, seeing material objects; but there are mental myopes and mental hypermetropes: persons who are questions in one or the other of these two extremes. Such persons are in society, in business, in the State, and in the church. In the church there are some who see nothing beyond their local congregation and its work at home. They might be called near-sighted Christians. Their spiritual world is a single neighborhood, a few neighbors, a small Sunday school, and Saturday and Sunday preaching once a month. They do not attend the Saturday service; but "we pay him to preach on Saturday, and we expect him to do it." Now "Saturday preaching" was useful in by-gone years; but that day has passed away with the piteher of water on pulpit and the spittoon on the floor of the church, and in the pulpit. The congregation, in these days, should spend Saturday in closing up the work of the week and preparing to give Sunday to the work of the church.

These myopic or near-sighted Christians believe in home missions only, if they see far away, to believe in missions at all. They believe in saving the "heathen at home." Tears of sympathy for people who live close to the church, but never attend, flow from myopic eyes; but they have not seen their duty in trying to save those near by their own door. They are so narrow in their vision that they see only their own officers and even the "home church" gets very little of their thought, their presence, their money, or their prayers. I saw the limb of a Spanish oak once that grew out and then back into the trunk, but it grew no leaves and no fruit. Myopic people see very little beyond themselves and then turn their eyes back into their own little world of self-interest.

The hypermetropic people are of the opposite type; they see things far away. They see just what others should do in their homes, and neglect their own. They believe in foreign missions, in great schemes, in world-reforms, in public sanitation and good roads. They read great books and neglect small duties. They tell you how to farm, but neglect to plow; they lecture on sanitation and fail to remove rubbish from their back yards. They plead for woman's rights while their children cry for maternal attention. Public welfare is in their broad vision, while home suffers for the use of the broom. The club rises above the kitchen, and the public meeting fares better than the husband at home. They tell us how to bring up children while they neglect their own. Visions of great things loom up before them while small duties lie at their door crying for help, "If the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldst thou not have done it? how much rather then, when he saith to thee wash, and be clean." Jesus made Himself the world's great example by serving in small things while He planned for great things.

Choosing between the near-sighted Christian and the far-sighted Christian, between the myopic and the hypermetropic, I would choose the far-sighted as he might give others a vision of something worthy to be done; but there is a normal vision that sees little things and great things in right relation, and embraces Home Mission and Foreign Missions, local needs and benevolent obligations on a large scale.

NEWS FROM REV. G. D. HUNT

I am at Lanett, Alabama, assisting Rev. E. M. Carter in a meeting. We are having good attendance and expect a good meeting. I have had good meetings at all my churches and some have been very fine but no great ingathering.

I have been in revival meetings since the last of June, with the exception of a few days. There remains only a little more than five weeks before conference meets and we will now bestir ourselves to get ready for that occasion. The writer expects a great meeting and hopes to be ready when the time comes. Our conference will meet at Antioch, three and one-half miles South of Roanoke, Alabama, Tuesday after the second Sunday in October. Let all who desire to come take notice. There are some very grave questions that will present themselves at this session of our body, and therefore I beg of you to send a full delegation of the best you have, and let us do business for God on a larger scale than before. By the help of the Lord we must provide for our work. Our ministry needs to be better cared for, our local churches need to be better provided for and our general missionary work needs provision in some substantial manner. Let us not be in such a hurry but come determined to attend the Lord's business in a business way.

UNION (SOUTHAMPTON), VA.

The second Sunday in September was appointed for the protracted meeting at this church. I went over Saturday before, and remained a few days. Brother H. H. Butler, the pastor, filled his appointment Sunday but had to return home the same day on account of illness in his family. He secured the service of Brother W. W. Staley to conduct the meeting in his absence. He came Monday and did the preaching the remainder of the week. Everything seemed to be favorable for a good meeting.

While there I stayed at the pleasant home of Brother E. L. Joyner who is one of the oldest members of the church. He has been a faithful and useful member. He, his helpful wife, the kind, polite entertaining boys and girls did everything to make me pleasant and at home. Indeed, I have been in this delightful home so much that I feel at ease and happy whenever I am there. I hope I will never forget them for their many acts of kindness to me. May our Father bless them greatly, and give them the victory through Jesus.

AMONG MY CHURCHES

(Good Hope)

I took charge, as pastor, of this church last January. Bad weather and Spanish Influenza caused our congregations to be small the first three appointments. We had a large congregation the second Sunday in April, however; and the congregations have been still larger ever since. A cemetery having been started on the church grounds in April, we held the first memorial services at Good Hope church on the second Sunday in May. The building would scarcely hold all of the people who attended the services.

We held our Children's Day exercises here, the second Sunday in June. There were more people on hand for this occasion than the church could seat; but many of those who saw and heard the exercises, told me afterward that they thoroughly enjoyed them. This was the first Children's Day exercises that Good Hope Christian church ever held.

The second Sunday in July was another gala day for Good Hope; for it was on that day that "Uncle" Wellons preached so ably and so timely a sermon to one of the largest congregations that have attended this church in many a day.

Our revival here this year began on the second Sunday in August, and closed on Friday of the same week. Rev. B. J. Howard came to our assistance on Tuesday, and did the preaching the remainder of the time. We received three members into the church as a result of this meeting. Not only our own people, but also our Baptist brethren of the community were very highly pleased with Brother Howard and with his preaching. Several voluntarily told me that they thought I got the right man to assist me in this meeting. Brother Howard is a good preacher. The Spirit was certainly with him during the entire series of meetings. We feel that the spiritual condition of the church was considerably bettered by his preaching and other efforts.

Our people here, as well as at Plymouth, are planning to make some necessary repairs on the building this fall, and to put better furniture into it, (seats and pulpit chairs). Furthermore, our wide-awake Sunday school here, as well as the one at Plymouth, has voted to give the offering of one Sunday in each month to the Orphanage, and one Sunday's offering in each month to Sunday school missions. We have a flourishing Sunday school here.

This church has called me to serve as its pastor for another year. Thus far, three of my churches have called me back for another year: Youngsville, Plymouth, and Good Hope. My definite reply to these calls must be given very soon. I am very thankful to God for the privilege of serving, feebly though it has been, all four of my churches this year.

UNCLE WELLONS VISITS HIGH POINT

On Saturday, September 6, in company with Rev. L. L. Wyrick and wife, I started on a trip to High Point. We arrived there that afternoon and the night was pleasantly spent with Brother J. G. Albright, the grandson of Rev. Joseph Albright, of my early association. Brother Albright has a pleasant family and is living with his third wife.

Next morning, Sunday, I went to the church where they had a splendid Sunday school under the direction of the faithful superintendent, Brother R. C. Boyd. At 11:00 o'clock a very large congregation gathered and the children remained for preaching. I preached, using as a text, "Prepare to Meet Thy God." I addressed myself mainly to the old and unsaved, and at the close of the service several old people, by invitation, came expressing a desire for prayer. It was a great pleasure to see these aged persons coming forward asking for prayer.

It was a great joy indeed to spend this day with High Point church. I took dinner with Brother M. L. Boswell and had a pleasant rest there. Brother L. R. Gibson took me to Brother H. T. Moffitt's, where I spent the night. I met Alpheus and Hugh, the two sons of Rev. H. T. Moffitt, deceased. Sunday night I attended the Methodist Protestant revival. The service that night was conducted in the Methodist Episcopal church in order to hold the large congregation made up of the two churches that were worshipping together at this service. Monday morning I visited the Methodist Protestant Orphanage near High Point. Superintendent Garrett and his wife made my visit pleasant and profitable, gave me a good dinner and an opportunity to speak to the children. I reached home in the afternoon, after seeing and shaking the hands of so many dear friends.

As the weather grows cooler it will be a pleasure to visit some other churches that have in their congregations old and unsaved persons, if they will command me.

THE EMPTY HOTEL

A traveller drew up at a country inn. But when he asked for oats for his horse he was told by the landlord that he "didn't keep oats." When he asked for hay the reply was that he "didn't keep hay." It was the same when he asked for ham and eggs for himself. The landlord didn't keep ham and eggs.

"But, landlord," cried the exasperated tourist, "what do you keep?" "Well, sir, I want you to know I keep this Hotel!"

A writer in the Philadelphia Presbyterian uses this story to illustrate his own experience when he listened to the "constitutional questions" put to a young candidate for Presbyterian ordination.

The young man didn't hold to the inspiration of the Scriptures, the Fall of Man, the Virgin Birth of Jesus, or His bodily Resurrection; but still he insisted he "kept the fundamental doctrines of Presbyterianism." He kept "this Hotel" all right but the trouble was that he kept nothing in its cellar, its pantry or its barn.

It is a sad experience when hungry travellers come on Sunday to the church inn, one of its resting places on life's way, and are sent away hungry.—Presbyterian Record.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

OUR PUBLIC SCHOOLS

A Bird's-eye View of One of the Greatest of American Institutions

One of the biggest tasks that the United States has on her hands is the work of educating the nation. In public and private schools and colleges in 1915 (and the figures of today do not materially differ) there were 23,113,931 scholars. Of this immense number 19,990,316 were in elementary schools,—kindergarten, primary, and grammar; 14,841,028 were enrolled in high schools and academies; 80,944 in primary departments of higher institutions; 237,168 in universities and colleges; 66,065 in professional schools; and 100,325 in normal schools. The task of providing equipment and teachers for this great army of youth is truly gigantic.

Every State in the Union has on its statute-books some kind of compulsory attendance law, but there is no uniformity either in the laws themselves or in their enforcement. There are multitudes of children in the United States who somehow escape going to school. This is shown by the fact that of children between 14 and 16 years of age to whom Federal certificates are issued under the Federal Child-Labor Law of 1916 one-fourth were unable to sign their names legibly. A yet greater number do not take the full course even in the grammar school, only 1.3 per cent of those in the primary school succeeding in passing the eighth grade.

The matter of educating the children of the country is left to the States, although the Federal Bureau of Education is working hard to raise the standard. There are some States (few, to be sure) that have no standard at all and present no education requirement. New York, which has a high standard, calls for schooling for nine years, and insists that illiterates between 16 and 21 years old shall attend night school. Children of 14 may leave school if they have an eighth grade certificate; or a sixth grade certificate if they are 15, and then they must attend continuation classes.

There are States, on the other hand, whose standard is very low. The period of school attendance required in Mississippi is only 60 days a year, and the minimum session required in Arkansas, Oklahoma, and South Carolina, is three months, or 60 school days, a year. A Federal standard for school attendance should be fixed, probably at least eight months in the year.

From tables published by the Bureau of Education it is made plain that only 117 out of every 1,000 pupils who enter the first grade in school graduate from high school.

Almost 58 per cent of the school population in the United States is found in rural communities—a rural community being defined in government tables as the population outside cities of 5,000 inhabitants.

The total number of common school teachers in 1916 was 622,371, and this number is probably slightly higher today. In 1870 there were only 200,515 common school teachers engaged in the various States. In 1890 there were 363,922; in 1910 there were 528,210; and in 1915 there were 604,301. Of the 622,371 teachers employed in 1916 no fewer than 499,333 were women.

In 1916 there were 1,229 cities of more than 5,000 inhabitants in the United States. There cities had a combined enrollment of 7,173,112 pupils and an average attendance of 5,762,197. They had 194,449 teachers and 13,269 supervising officers. The cost of running the schools in these cities was $256,941,963, not counting more than $58,000,000 for new buildings and equipment. Of public school teachers 33 per cent arc in the cities, and they receive about 51 per cent of the salaries paid to teachers; the running expenses of the city educational systems amount to about 48 per cent of such expenses for the whole of the United States and their outlays for buildings, sites, equipment, and so on, reach 57 per cent.

The average monthly salary of male teachers is only $85.36, and of female teachers $66.88, the annual average salary of all teachers, male and female, being $63.08. Of course the rate of pay varies greatly in the different States. Taking the pay for male teachers, the average in New Hampshire is $116.39 a month; in Maine, $83.26; in Vermont, $90.39; in Rhode Island, $142.03; in Connecticut, $127.03; in Pennsylvania, $68.63. Salaries are lowest in Delaware, where the average for men is $57.06.

It is evident that public schools will do little good if the children are not kept in them. In view of the fact that nearly sixty per cent of the school children live in rural communities, it is strange that one-third of the States actually exempt from school attendance children who live at a distance from school of from two to ten miles, unless transportation is furnished them. At the same time only a half a dozen States actually furnish the necessary transportation.

When some of our States passed child-labor laws they evidently forgot that they had compulsory education laws on the statute-books. At least, no attempt was made to reconcile the two classes of laws. The Oklahoma public school law, for instance, exempts, for employment purposes, no children under 16 years of age, but the child-labor law permits them to go to work at 14. Minnesota has a school law that exempts children of 1 from school duty4 between April 1 and November 1, if they work at home; but the child labor law permits the boys and girls of this age to work all the year round in factories. In Texas children must go to school until they are 14 but they cannot go to work until they are 15. In Montana they may leave school at fourteen, but may not work until 16. What a paradise for youth!

The Federal Bureau of Education is working toward better educational facilities in all States, and progress is being made. Many States supply free textbooks to the scholars, and a few States supply even clothing to poor children.—Christian Endeavor World.

Large salaries are making great inroads upon the minds of the young people, and in many cases causing them to leave school. No thoughtful parent will permit this.

WHAT NATURE TEACHES ABOUT GOD

A Campus Address to Elton Girls

(Mrs. W. A. Harper)

The subject which you have chosen for this occasion, assembled as we are around the arching doom of the sky is, it seems to me, most appropriate; for here on this campus embellished by the art of man, rich in native splendor and simplicity, God and nature have met.

We want to consider together the characteristics of God which our campus teaches us. And first among these I think we should observe that he is a God of beauty, for not only has he furnished us with beautiful trees and undulating surface, but he covers every barren spot of that surface with a shining coat of green, by unanimous consent, the color most pleasing to the esthetic sense unless it be brown, in which he gloriously robes the autumn leaves and all nature in the wintry months.

But our God is a God also of generous loving heart, and this too is taught by the natural aspect of our campus. For on this campus God has lavishly provided large trees for our shade and comfort, and glorious birds for our delight and challenged us to sweet meditation.

He is in the third place the God of life. With each recurring spring nature gives abundant proof of the quickening into newness of life of all things in accordance with the life loving program of our Creator. It seems to me that this campus has become a special object of His life-loving nature. We read in the papers where death has invaded the sacred precincts of student life on other campuses round about us, but for thirteen years the hand of Providence has granted immunity from death to every student* of this our Alma Mater. So that when I say our God is a God of life, how grateful we should be of the abundant evidence of it in our own midst!

But I would go a step further and would add that God is not only the God of life but of everlasting life. He has not made us tenants for a day nor even for the three score years, and ten said to mark the limit of the normal man's pilgrimage, but he has provided for us "through the Resurrection and the salvation of Jesus that for which the human heart has always longed, the sure possession of everlasting life."

And now may I not also have a little heart to heart talk with you in this connection in regard to your relation to college, because the God of nature through his kind providences has made possible for you the splendid privilege you now enjoy of being college girls?

The college drill you are getting will be a means, a method of force through which you will be given a vision of the possibilities that lie within you. It will open the windows of your soul, and the air of human life will sweep in to make you a sturdy and fine character if you arise to your opportunity. Then, too, I would have you look beyond the college walls. A college education is not the all, the be-all and end-all of life, but always a means for a larger vision, a method for better service and a force for greater power. Then, too, your parents sent you to college that you might be prepared to live at home. They would have you become wise and larger minded in order that you may bring a new strength and an earnest appreciation into the home which shall be loyal, rich and fine; that you may become great in heart and strong in will in order to bring into the home a gentleness which is sympathetic, loving and true.

I would have you lay a great deal of stress on the value of your health. Physical soundness gives great aid in getting hold of and holding sound views of life. Life is a mirror. One smiles into it and it smiles back, one frowns into it and it frowns back. If one is sick all life is sick. What ails you ails most folks in this world. Now all life is not well, sound and vigorous but if you yourself are, you can help to transmit that vigor and life into some one else. If we would only open the doors and windows of our hearts and souls in the presence of a strong, vigorous, happy person, we would just as surely catch that disease as we would smallpox from one infected with that disease.

At the age of thirty-two Robert Browning fell in love with Elizabeth Barrett. At that same period his headaches began. Up to that time he had been free from such symptoms. The relation between the head and heart may be close. The college girl should keep herself free from suffering and incapacities. She should not be plagued by headaches, heartaches, nervousness and indigestion. Therefore, I would caution you to be careful—very careful of your health.

Then I want to say get the very best for yourself from college. That may sound a little selfish but wait a bit and let me emphasize for yourself. For do you know what may be good for one may not be good for another? Try to find in college the supplies for your dire and direct wants. No gardener tries to raise cabbage from cucumber seed. You might wish you had more and better stuff in you, but you are what you are and education must educate that individual and individuality which God in nature out of all his material made you. In getting the best for yourself, let one element of that best be appreciation. In other words a love for the best. I want you to be able to know, just what is best, then love that best and then make that best a part of yourself. Perhaps you have already found that your teachers are nearer perfection in some lines than others. What I would have you do is to take each at his best and think as little as possible about his not best.

Cultivate an appreciation of the best books. Perhaps books have been so common a part of your furniture and homes that you may not know that some books are good, some better and some best. Be able to know the best books and make them a part of your life. I would like to say the same about music, hear the best music. Also about art, study the best pictures and paintings you can. By studying the best in nature, the God in nature and in art, you will know the best. By knowing the best, you will love the best. By knowing and loving the best you will become a part of the best.

This same rule holds good in forming friendship. Do you know the way for getting the very best friendship? Of course you do. It is to give the best of yourself. And do you know the surest way of giving the best of yourself? Of course you do. It is to find the best in the other girl. She has her best and not best just as you do. Find her best and help make it better. By so doing you will find yourself lifted, enlarged and inspired and the best of friendship formed.

I want to say one thing more, perhaps it is most important of all. Get the best and most out of your religion. The relation one bears to the Supreme Being is the most important. Many people do not get much out of their religion and certainly religion does not get much out of them. Emerson says somewhere every man must pray. The mood of prayer and the act of prayer belong to the devout soul. Keep up your church life. If the church is poor and the preaching uninteresting make the service of the church worship even if you cannot make it instruction and inspiration. Many girls and boys think they have to study on Sunday. It is very foolish. Use Sunday for a time of interpretation, reflection and inspiration. Make each day, too, like George Herbert's Sunday, "The bridal of the earth and sky," then your own intuitive good judgment will make you the real women of your mother's aspirations and prayers.

MISSIONARY

THE ONE FOLLOWS THE OTHER

The Methodist Episcopal church set out to raise $85,000,000.00 for missions throughout the world and easily went over the top and raised $112,000,000.00. That is testimony to the material possibilities of the Methodist church, and means service and sacrifice. Now the Committee on Findings for that church has adopted the following: "We recommend that we have a campaign of evangelism that shall occupy the pre-eminent place in the conservation program of the Church, and that the goal shall be at least one million souls won for Christ by June 1920."

This will call for an awakening of spiritual fervor and will no doubt result in winning hundreds of thousands, let us hope, even a full million souls to the blessed Christ within a year. They are ripe and ready for spiritual zeal and fervor who have been brought to the point of sacrificing material resources on the altar. The church that undertakes great things for Christ may expect great things of Christ. Any adequate program for a working church must be big, must be built on faith, and must challenge to sacrifice and evoke earnest effort and much prayer. We congratulate our Methodist brethren on a big program and a great vision for Christian service and conquest. God speed them.

WHEREIN IS POWER?

Are you surprised that students, teachers and workers of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, Ill., won 7,600 souls to Christ last year through personal effort and evangelistic endeavor? This writer is not. That Institution trained and last year sent out to foreign fields in various corners of the earth 120 missionaries. When an Institution, like a Church, catches a vision of world conquest for Christ, and undertakes to live up to that vision miracles take place and marvelous things happen.

IMPORTANT NEWS FOR ALL WOMEN OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH, THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

1. Our Convention

We women are to hold our first Missionary Convention for the three former North Carolina Conferences at Elon College, November 8 and 9. You will find the program printed below—a great one I am sure you will agree with us.

We want every missionary organization in the Conference to send at least two delegates. We want every church not having a missionary organization to send at least two women delegates. The Elon women will give the best entertainment they can and will not be satisfied unless full delegations come. They are preparing for them. Send names of delegates to Mrs. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.

We want you to make it impossible for your pastor to fail to be present. Some of us women feel our pastors do not aid us as they might. Get yours to come and it will help matters.

2. Santa Isabel Chapel Fund

Our Conference is asked to raise over and above its regular apportionment $350 to complete the Santa Isabel Chapel. You are requested to raise ten dollars at least and forward to Mrs. W. R. Sellars, Burlington, N. C., at once and to state it is for this purpose. We must have this at once for our Porto Rico work.

3. Dues and Regular Apportionments

All the regular societies have been asked to raise a certain apportionment besides dues. We urge that this matter be attended to immediately and the money forwarded to Mrs. W. R. Sellars, Burlington, N. C., stating clearly what society is to be credited and what goes to dues and what to the apportionment. We lack $1,500 now of raising our quota for this year, and must raise it by September 30.

Churches that have no missionary society have been asked to send at least ten dollars as an offering to the women's work. We want this in addition to the special offering asked for Santa Isabel.

4. Rally Days

All money raised in July and August Rally Days is to be kept separate from dues and apportionments. It will be used for literature. We expect to publish 12 pamphlets the coming year and will send them out free. Send your Rally Day money, properly marked, to Mrs. W. R. Sellars, Burlington, N. C. immediately.

5. Finally

Finally, won't you pray for the Women's Missionary Work of our Church? More things are accomplished by prayer than this world knows of. Won't you pray for the work?

MRS. W. A. HARPER,

Secretary N. C. Women's Missionary Board.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

A TRIP WE ALL HIGHLY ENJOYED

Some time ago we were invited to take our Singing Class to Liberty church, Vance County, N. C., and give a song service. We gladly accepted the invitation and also made arrangements to visit Fuller's Chapel and our friends at Henderson on the same trip. On Saturday, the thirteenth, of this month we bought tickets to Henderson, N. C., and were met there by friends from Henderson and Liberty churches who gave us a warm welcome. We were entertained Saturday night by the good people of Liberty church and gave our song service there Sunday morning at eleven o'clock. We were met there after service by our good friends of Fuller's church and entertained for dinner by them and gave the song service at Fuller's at three o'clock in the afternoon. At the close of the service we were then carried to Henderson where we were entertained Sunday night and gave our service there.

We have never enjoyed a trip more anywhere than on this occasion. The people at all the churches did all they could to make our visit pleasant and showed us every courtesy possible. The warm welcome we received inspired the children to do their best in rendering the song service and we trust that they, through this service of song, carried the gospel message to those who were present.

Mrs. Effie Wicker, the teacher, who has trained the Class and has it in charge and plays for them, joins me in expressing our sincere appreciation of the warm welcome extended to us and the class and the many kindnesses shown us while on this trip.

The free-will offering at Liberty church was $50.61 and the subscription for the Children's Home, $405.00.

The free-will offering at Fuller's church was $27.22 and the subscriptions for the Children's Home, $230.00.

The free-will offering at Henderson was $123.28 and the subscription for the Children's Home, $525.00.

CORRESPONDENCE

AGED BIBLE WOMAN DIES

To the Editor of The Christian Sun:

I certainly appreciate the privilege you offer me of getting more directly into touch with the readers of The Sun through its columns.

The most recent event with us here in Japan was the very sad one of the sudden death of Miss Hamaguchi, our oldest Bible woman, at the comparatively early age of 50. As the funds for her support were for quite a while specially provided by people in the Southland, there are no doubt those among your readers to whom notification should be sent. Will they kindly accept this as such?

While of a quiet disposition, Miss Hamaguchi was a great force for good, and she will be sorely missed. Entering our work from what was very nearly its start, at one time and another she has been quite closely connected with all of our lady missionaries.

The workers die, but the work remains and institutions persist. In every way we give thanks to God for the advance which is making toward the building up of Japanese Christian Churches to continue the work of the Lord here after all the present workers have passed on.

We are looking forward to the World's Sunday School Convention which meets in Japan next year, as destined in the good providence of God to be one of the great landmarks of progress. I trust that many, both there and here, are already praying much for its success.

A TROUBLED MOTHER

I have the following question from a heart-broken mother: "I am writing you about something that has grieved me because I cannot fully understand. It is about God answering prayer. I thought possibly you could explain in a way that would ease my poor aching heart. I love my Savior, and am trying to live nearer Him every day. I had two sons to go into the war. The younger went in May, 1919, the older in June, 1918. My older son was wounded on November 4, and died November 8. My younger one was spared. They both were in the last hard battles. My younger did not get a scratch, and is home now. I am thankful, Oh so thankful, that he was spared to come back, but my heart aches for the one "over there." I can hardly bear the thought that I shall never see him again on this earth. I used to bow my head before their pictures every morning and plead with my Heavenly Father to spare them and let their poor mother see them once more, but that if it were His will that they would be killed that they might be prepared for death. When the older sailed for France, he wrote a letter telling me that he was going to live a better life and sent a card signed pledging his allegiance to Christ, and the card allied him with Y. M. C. A. Now, my question is: Have I the right to believe that God did answer my prayer in behalf of the one that was killed as much so as did He in behalf of the one that returned safely?"

I am of the conviction that this mother has every right to believe that her prayers were answered in both instances. Our prayers are often answered for us far better than we ask or at the time can know. The fact that the older son did not return is no evidence whatever of our Father's cruelty or unkindness to Him any more than to the other. Time will reveal all things and some day we shall understand but this we may know and be assured of; at all times, namely; that God hears and answers prayer. He is too wise to err, and too kind and loving to do any cruel thing. Blessings upon this broken-hearted mother. J. O. ATKINSON.

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

THE PHILOSOPHY OF CRUCIFIXION

(Rev. R. F. Brown)

Religion must be established before the religionist, crucifixion before philosophy, the birth before the birthday. Every great movement has its birthday. It must undergo the trying ordeals of incarnation. And, what is more, it cannot get into the world without a great man—a great leader. There is no such thing as painless birth; but associated with every great movement worthy of acceptance there is found one who has paid the price for its existence. With this price is associated the fact of crucifixion. There is no adequate expansion without proper nourishment, safe and sane management, and devout loyalty. Neither is there perpetuity without true and tried principles.

Crucifixion is the result of loyalty to principle. This is not a new doctrine. Its origin runs back to the days of ancient thought and finds favorable comment in the modern world. It has been preached and practiced by individuals of varying conception and personality. The road is no new one. It has been beaten and blazed by other travelers in order that they might give expression to their profound feeling of love and devotion to a principle that was near and dear to their hearts. To crucify self was the noblest act, the highest embodiment of a desire to reach an end, which end would be the culmination of their glory, the final goal of their weary struggle. Abraham is an example of this same principle. He was willing to crucify his son that he might prove his loyalty to God, his willingness to put God first, since he loved God supremely. This was not only an act of sacrifice, but an act of service. Abraham crucified his own will, his personal desires, his selfish motives, and his fatherly ambitions in order that God's demands might be accomplished.

The Hindoo supported this same doctrine of crucifixion. In their "Doctrine of Progress," they laid peculiar stress on the fact that there must be a definite restraint of the senses in order to experience the joys of temperal and spiritual blessing and achievement. To them the senses proved to be mysterious and molesting tyrants. They seemed to think that if they were to depend upon their senses that the eye might guide them in the wrong direction, the ear might convey the wrong message, the feeling might prove to be a traitor and thus upset and forever hinder their peace of mind and banish their hopes of the future. Therefore they found great satisfaction in crucifying these senses. In every life there are deep feelings of devotion and reverence, keen desires for better things to satisfy the longing of the subjective man.

Gautama, the Buddha, tried to find satisfaction in crucifixion. But to him this proved to be a false philosophy. It was his notion that man could secure peace only in practical oblivion. He thought that the final extinction of all desire aspiration and effort, and even of personality itself, was the only worthy goal of the faithful. This course of action by Gautama was caused by the suggestion of the priest. The priest insisted on Buddha crucifying his whole physical being in order that he might obtain salvation. But after he had gone through with all the processes and experienced all the excruciating pain, the weakness of the theory was evidenced by the absence of the thing for which he was striving. He and Luther had a similar experience in this respect, so they worked out a new theory, and set about the task of accentuating the doctrine of the new philosophy, which with some it was received with favor, while with others it met with stern opposition.

Men ignored and opposed the ideal for which Christ died. But He never could have taught the world in things of life and eternity had He not had grace to look over and rise above the things of the world. If crucifixion is to become a reality there must be grace, resignation and obedience. Thus adhering to these three things, devotion to principle and loyalty to truth are displayed to the admiration or utter dismay of men and angels.

Crucifixion is a terrible thing, but it may be, and frequently is, the best policy and the best adopted course for obtaining the blessing for one's self, or another. This was certainly the best plan for God to reveal Himself to the world, and shows the infiniteness of His love. No other act could have borne testimony to the love of God so completely as the act of crucifixion. This is not only true with God, but it is equally true with reference to man. It is evident that the efforts of man are well nigh exhausted when he appeals to the transaction of crucifixion to bring to pass the results which his feelings so crave.

It is obvious that no one would resort to crucifixion in order to obtain certain results unless there is a dislike for present situations and a hatred of the subsequent responses. It was because Christ hated the existing conditions of the world that He allowed Himself to be subjected to such an act of self-denial and shameless death. Buddha was seeking to better his OWN conditions and thus give the world the benefits of said betterment through the form and medium of crucifixion. Luther was seized by the same thought when he searched for satisfaction through the act of crucifixion.

The events of Christ's crucifixion serve as an illustration to all the world. By this act our sins and innumerable transgressions have been expiated, by this act the reconciliation of hand, head and heart is perpetrated. It is on the cross of crucifixion that peace of conscience is obtained. On the Cross the handwriting of other days is cancelled. On this same Cross we ascend the other heights, and experience the joys of promotion into other environments, in Kingly company, where the soul finds refuge and repose.

Durham, N. C.

If the getting of money alone was all the benefit that would come to the Church by the method of tithing, it would be a failure. But when a man recognizes God by paying his tithe, he acknowledges God in other ways and God will soon have his life. A man's treasure and his heart are inseparable and where you find one you will find the other.

Some men pray that God may send some one to do a thing, while perhaps what God wants is for them to go. Others pray that some way may be opened, while the way may be in their purses. Take out your pocket book and pray for the Lord to its contents. We must open our purses as well as our mouths.

Trust in God as well as in gold.

A MODEL LIFE

When you think, when you speak, when you read,
when you write,
When you sing, when you walk, when you seek for delight,
To be kept from all harm when at home or abroad,
Live always as under the eyes of the Lord.

Whatever you think, never think what you feel
You would blush in the presence of God to reveal;
Whatever you say in a whisper or clear,
Say nothing you would not like Jesus to hear.

Whatever you read, though the page may allure,
Read nothing of which you are perfectly sure Consternation at once would be seen in your look
If God should say solemnly, Show me that book.

Whatever you write, though with haste or with heed,
Write nothing you would not like Jesus to read;
Whatever you sing in the midst of your glee,
Sing nothing that His listening ears would displease.

Wherever you go, never go where you fear,
Lest the great God should say, How earnest thou here?
Turn away from each pleasure you would shrink from pursuing
If God should look down and say, What are you doing?

OUR ALL THE YEAR ROUND GARDEN

By Ellen Eddy Shaw, Brooklyn Botanic Garden

The best behaved fall garden child I know is Daffodil, and next to her, her little brother Jonquil. Sometimes great big fat Hyacinth behaves, but small, brown-coated, smooth-looking, long-nosed Daffodil is quite the nicest. So buy a few daffodil and jonquil bulbs and get acquainted with these two good children.

I would let our new friends stay on the table for several days before I planted them, so that we might get to know them by sight and by name, as we learn to know real flesh-and-blood children. But I would be very careful to place these little comrades so that the rounded part or base was down and the pointed face sticking up, and I would never squeeze their noses!

By and by the day will come when Jonquil and Daffodil must be planted. There are several ways of doing this. Suppose we use a glass jar first. It may be a little fern bowl, like the one in which partridge berries are sometimes planted. We fill the bowl almost full of fine white sand and if we have no sand we take some baskets or our little carts and go to a house that is being built and ask the builder if he will give us just a little sand for our garden. Into this bowl full of sand we plant our daffodil or our jonquil bulbs. They must nestle down so that only a little bit of their noses stick out. Two bulbs must never touch each other. They would not be comfortable that way. Two little girls would not like to sit so close to each other at the breakfast table that neither one could move.

Next, give the bulbs a big enough drink to soak the sand thoroughly, but not enough to have water standing on the surface. Now put the bowl away in the dark. The place need not be cool, but every little while the sand should be moistened.

In about ten days or two weeks, lo and behold, you will notice long white roots struggling all around and through the sand close to the glass where you can see them, and the noses have put forth some white leaflike shoots. It is now time to bring our little garden to the light. Then in just a few days a miracle takes place. The roots have shot back into the sand; they do not like the light, and want always to remain cool and covered. The noses have turned green. And within about three weeks Daffodil and Jonquil blossom!

Sometimes instead of using the sand, place some small stones in a low, pretty bowl and arrange the bulbs on top of them. This bowl should be put away in the dark for about ten days or two weeks and then brought out into the light. There should always be enough water to touch the base of the bulbs, but never to come around them. This, you see, is just the way we start Chinese lily bulbs, but Daffodil behaves better than the Chinese lilies because her blossoms rarely blast.

If you like, Daffodil and Jonquil may also be planted in a pot or soil. Even so, leave their noses sticking out and you must put them in a dark, cold place for five or six weeks. It is better, I think, to use the sand or the stones with Daffodil and Jonquil because then you don't have to wait so long for them.

After you have planted your first two or three daffodils and find out just how long it takes in your home for them to blossom, you could start some for Father's birthday, timing them just right. Of course, it is understood that Father will be kind enough to have a birthday this fall. If he will not, then Mother or Grandmother or Baby surely will. I cannot imagine a family without at least one birthday in the fall or early winter.

To the parents: Just what does a child get out of this little garden? One lesson is a lesson of observation, and another is one of care; careful watering. The greatest lesson is the lesson of life: how out of something apparently lifeless there springs into being something living, beautiful and sweet. It is a great revelation to anyone, young or old, to handle life and to be able to produce something living, to care for it, and to make it comfortable and happy. And then, you can have such fun planting bulbs.

Of course, there are other bulbs one may plant, but I am choosing two perfectly satisfactory, absolutely responsible ones. I believe that in work with children one should rarely choose what may be a failure. So, in our all-the-year-round garden we pick out successes. Do not forget the names of our fall children, Daffodil and her little brother, Jonquil.—In The Christian Advocate (New York).

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor

Editorial Note: At this writing (Wednesday, September 17) when we are called upon to supply the matter for this page, the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor topics have not reached us.

MEETING OF THE BOARD OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

This Board which has charge of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work for the Southern Christian Convention met in annual session at Raleigh, N. C., September 11. Members present: Rev. J. W. Harrell, Chairman, Burlington, N. C.; Rev. A. T. Banks, Ramseur, N. C.; R. C. Boyd, High Point, N. C.; Rev. J. V. Knight, Greensboro, N. C.; C. H. Stephenson, Raleigh, N. C., Secretary-Treasurer; Rev. W. T. Walters, Winchester, Va.; Mrs. Fred Bullock, Suffolk, Va.; I. A. Luke, Vice President, Holland, Va.; J. O. Atkinson, Recording Secretary, Elon College, N. C. Absent: Hon. C. A. Hines, Greensboro, N. C.

A Committee from the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention, under appointment of its recent session was present, consisting of Drs. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va.; C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va.; L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Va.; and these brethren were invited to sit and to counsel with the Committee.

The meeting was opened with prayer led by Rev. W. W. Staley. Treasurer C. H. Stephenson reported expenditures for the year of $108.21, also a loan to the Board from the Mission Board of $200.00 and a check from the Recording Secretary, J. O. Atkinson of $116.54 by offerings on Children's Day.

It was decided that Children's Day be observed annually hereafter in all our schools on some Sunday in June and that on that day an offering be asked by the Board for the promotion of Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work.

It was voted unanimously that all our Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies be asked to make a monthly offering to the mission cause, one-half for home missions, one-half for foreign missions, and that it be the sense of this Board that the half for home missions be turned into the Board, and the half for foreign missions to the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention, and that the same rule be applied to Christian Endeavor Societies.

After such discussion and consideration it was moved and carried that a Field Secretary for Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work be employed for full time provided that the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention turns the Sunday school home mission funds and those of the Christian Endeavor home mission offerings into the hands of this Board, and that the election of the Field Secretary be left to the Executive Committee.

The request from the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention that Rev. J. E. Franks be put in the field for half time in the coming year to do work as Sunday school missionary was unanimously approved, and the Home Mission Board of the North Carolina Christian Conference to whom properly this work belongs was asked to finance and have oversight of the same.

It was voted that the Southern Convention at its next session be asked to revise its church letter blank and that a member of the Board be placed on the Revision Committee so that there shall be ample space for getting essential Sunday school statistics. Mrs. Fred Bullock of our Board was elected to represent us on the proposed Revision Committee.

A sub-committee of three was selected to shape the policy of the Board, and submit the same to the members thereof for ratification and the same when ratified be presented to the next session of the Convention. Revs. Harrell, Knight and Atkinson were named on this sub-committee.

It was voted that Mrs. Bullock be elected to furnish the Sunday school matter for THE CHRISTIAN SUN the coming year and that Rev. J. V. Knight be elected to furnish the Christian Endeavor matter, and that one-half of the space allowed be given to the treatment of the topic and the other half to Sunday school and Christian Endeavor matters.

The meeting time of the next annual session is Thursday after the first Sunday in September, 1920, and the place, Raleigh, N. C.

It was voted that we approve the Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods and the proposed Religious Institute to be held at Elon College next summer, and that we co-operate in any way we can for the success of both.

The counsel and presence of Dr. Staley, Dr. Rowland and Dr. Smith added much to the interest of the meeting and the Board was greatly aided in its work by their wise counsel.

The feeling prevails that we are continually working toward a policy which shall vitally effect the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work throughout the Convention.

J. O. ATKINSON,

Recording Secretary.

JUST COUNT ON HOLY NECK

It is a principle of missions, as it is of the Kingdom, that where you have just one person with zeal for a good work others catch fire and the flame spreads. Holy Neck Sunday school has such a person in Sister B. D. Jones. And things are taking place in the Kingdom there. She is Missionary Superintendent in the Sunday school. I received this morning this letter from Sunday school Treasurer C. A. Piland: "Holland, Va., September 12. Dear Brother Atkinson: Enclosed you will find check for $13.55. Mrs. B. D. Jones raised $11.50 on the fifth Sunday in August. They had a real nice missionary program that day and everybody enjoyed it. The Sunday school sends $2.55, its regular missionary offering."

(A former Missionary Day netted $20.30 which Brother Piland sent in August).

Somebody told the writer not long since that some of Sister Jones' five minutes Missionary stories and talks to the school on Sunday mornings were wonderful, in fact the feature of the Sunday school. Here is prophesying, on a basis of past facts, that if this work is kept up in a few years Holy Neck Sunday school and church will not only have their missionary in the field, but some of their sons and daughters volunteering to go as missionaries to carry the message of our blessed Christ where that message is needed most. Just count on Holy Neck. Our Father's blessings upon Sister B. D. Jones and the good work she is doing there.

J. O. ATKINSON.

ONE BY ONE

The Sunday schools are falling in line one by one in the matter of teaching and studying missions and giving one offering a month to missions. The North Carolina Christian Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention unanimously voted in annual session at Shallow Well last summer that all its schools should do this good thing, and the schools are proving their loyalty by doing so. This week comes a check of $3.36 from Treasurer W. S. Ayseue of Liberty (Vance County, North Carolina) stating the school had begun the missionary offering first Sunday of September. Good! The list of missionary Sunday schools is beautifully enlarging itself. Our schools are deciding to start something, to "carry on."

THE TRUE HOME

(John Ruskin)

This is the true nature of home—it is the place of Peace; the shelter, not only from all injury, but from all terror, doubt and division. In so far as it is not this, it is not home. So far as the anxieties of the outer life penetrate into it, and the inconsistently minded, unknown, unloved, or hostile society of the outer world is allowed by either husband or wife to cross the threshold, it ceases to be home; it is then only a part of that outer world which you have roofed over, and lighted fire in. But so far as it is a sacred place, a vestal temple, a temple of the hearth watched by household gods, before whose face none may come, but those whom they can receive with love—so far as it is this, and roof and fire are types only of a nobler shade and light,—shade as of the rock in a weary land, and light as of the Pharos in the stormy sea;—so far it vindicates the name and fulfills the praise of home.

And wherever a true wife comes, this home is always round her. The stars only may be over her head; the glow-worm in the night-cold grass may be the only fire at her feet; but home is yet wherever she is; and for a noble woman it stretches far around her, better than ceiled with cedar, or painted with vermilion, shedding its quiet light far, for those who else were homeless.

BROWN

Mrs. Minnie Brown, wife of W. W. Brown, was born October 16, 1881 and died August 21, 1919, at the age 37 years. Surviving are four sisters, four brothers, father and mother, husband and three daughters.

Sister Brown was a faithful member of Union Grove Christian church. She was a general favorite among a host of friends who deeply mourn her untimely death. This breaking up of a happy home calls forth the deepest sympathy for the husband and motherless children.

Funeral services were conducted at Union Grove, August 23, by Rev. T. J. Green, assisted by L. W. Fogleman and R. O. Smith. May the Lord comfort and bless the sorrowing and prepare us all for a happy home in eternity.

SMITH

Joseph Eldredge Smith was born January 29, 1864 and died August 23, 1919, aged fifty-four years, six months and twenty-five days. He is survived by his wife and daughter, Mary Elizabeth, Sumbury, N. C., and two brothers, R. B. Smith, Meldrin, Ga., and J. A. Smith, Dendron, Va.

Brother Smith had been away from home about six weeks, working as a Sawyer at Jacksonville, N. C. It was at this place that he was instantly killed, the carriage passing over him. It was a great shock to his family and many friends.

The deceased was a member of Damascus Christian church. He was a devoted husband and an affectionate father. Many grief-stricken friends gathered at his home on Sunday afternoon, August 23, 1919, to pay their last tribute of respect. Funeral service was conducted by the writer and interment was made in the family burying grounds, being in charge of the Masonic Order.

May God comfort the grief-stricken hearts.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

AN EXPLANATION

For several weeks we have been overrun with "copy" and we have hoped that each week's issue would give us relief, but instead of finding relief we have found more and more accumulated matter awaiting publication. When the issue of September 10 went to press we had enough matter on hand that we were forced to carry over to make practically all the issue of September 17; and before the issue of that date was in the post office, practically all the regular issue for this week was in the form. When the issue for this week was ready to mail we had twelve pages left over for the issue of October 1, and enough manuscript on hand to more than make out the sixteen pages.

By turning to the front page you will find that you have in your hand a "Relief and Business Number," and we hope that this extra issue will serve our purpose in three ways: (1) Help us to catch up with our accumulated copy. (2) To educate our readers a little more fully along the lines of the business end of the publication and thus seek their further co-operation. (3) To set forth the accommodation of the office in regard to books, Bibles and church supplies. The second and third items we had hoped to feature in some edition during the latter part of this month or the early part of October, but with the constant accumulation of articles we foresaw the impossibility of being able to do these things. We have, therefore, condensed what we had hoped to say in combining the two ideas in this issue, and in the meantime, publish along with it a reasonable amount of matter we have on hand, the most of it being crowded out material of the last two editions of the paper.

So far as we know, we are breaking a precedent in issuing this extra edition of THE SUN, but it is a day of precedent breaking and there just as well to be something new in a church journalism as in other things. The thing which we are seemingly forced to do this week is another strong indication that we are unable to serve the Church as it should be served with our limited number of pages.

We send this issue forth to our readers with our usual prayer that it may bless, benefit and brighten as it goes. If we are co-operated with as we suggest and ask, this extra work will be worth its cost, otherwise it will not. We trust its future into the hands of our kind and good and generous friends.

ON THE FIRST DAY OF SOME MONTH

Readers of THE SUN will note that the middle figure on the label is always 1. This means that the subscription expires on the first day of the month. All subscription accounts of THE SUN are placed on the first of some month. There is no expiring of a paper on the tenth, thirteenth, twentieth or twenty-fifth of the month but always on the first day of some month. By this method our accounts are divided into twelve divisions and in the meantime saves considerable amount of time in posting and crediting subscriptions. It has been one of the most satisfactory changes that we have made and seems to be universally approved.

If we receive a subscription between the first and tenth of the month we begin the account on the first of that month, provided we can supply any numbers of the paper that have been issued during the month. If we cannot do this the account is run up until the first of the next month and the remainder of that month sent without charge. If the subscription reaches this office after the fifteenth of the month the account is placed on the first of the next month, unless we are otherwise instructed and can supply numbers so as to date back to the first of the month on which the subscription is entered.

The first figure or figures, on the label indicates the month in which the subscription expires—that is, 1 means the first month, or January; 5 means the fifth month, or May, and so on. The last figure, or figures, indicates the year—that is, 9 means 1919, 20 means 1920 and 21 means 1921.

We admit that this is a simple matter to be writing about and yet our experience leads us to know that a very large number of subscribers do not seem to know how to reckon their time.

TYPEWRITERS NEEDED

An editor appreciates the man who has a typewriter and can use it. Our predecessor, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, if we correctly recall, offered to raise a fund once for the benefit of a few of his contributors. We recall that in the list Rev. C. E. Newman was to have a machine. Now, we would like to renew that good work and not only add Brother Newman to the list but also Dr. Atkinson. Dr. W. A. Harper's friends used to insist that he use his typewriter more. We are not exactly including the Doctor in the list of those who need to use one, but perhaps it is because of our several years of experience in reading his handwriting. At any rate, the typewriter helps the work of an editor. We commend the use of this modern piece of machinery to our brethren who do not have one and have never taken lessons in writing.

OUR SUBSCRIBERS WHO ARE NOT MEMBERS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

THE CHRISTIAN SUN appreciates the fact that it has a number of subscribers who are not members of the Christian Church. Just how many we are unable to say because of constant discovery of different ones who are not members of the Christian denomination. We heartily and sincerely appreciate this recognition and assure them that we are glad to have them.

ERRORS IN A PRINT SHOP

Errors in a print shop are almost unavoidable. Perhaps we should say unavoidable and leave out almost. We make this statement because we find errors every week in every exchange that we read. For instance, we have just noticed an error in The Herald of Gospel Liberty which was caused by two corrections having to be made in one paragraph, and the corrected lines being put in the wrong paragraph. By the mix-up the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is credited as one of the trustees of the Christian Publishing Association, has undergone a successful operation in a Western hospital—supposedly in Toronto, Canada—and possibly a few other things, all unknown to us. We can readily understand it. But of course something must happen so that the editors will get an extra number of "blessing outs."

EDITORS OF THE CHRISTIAN SUN

The editors of THE CHRISTIAN SUN since its beginning have been as follows: D. W. Kerr, H. B. Hayes, W. B. Wellons, J. T. Whitley, W. T. Walker, D. T. Dunbar, J. P. Barrett, W. G. Clements, E. L. Moffitt, J. O. Atkinson, C. B. Riddle.

A PRINT SHOP "PI"

Occasionally some contributor gets worried because his article is "pied." We shall explain what a "pi" is. The type is cast in lines on a linotype, and should these lines get mixed up by some disorder, the mix-up is called a "pi." One of our exchanges recently pied an article and from it we quote the following items:

"Mr. Hirman Smith, a soldier just back from France, was disposed at public auction last Sunday by Penny Brothers, world's original twin auctioneers, to Miss Carrie Huggins, on my farm, one mile East of Fairplain, rain or shine, in the presence of seventy guests, including the following to wit: Two mules, thirteen pigs, one feed grinder, * * * etc.

"Just before the ceremony was pronounced Mendelssohn's inspiring wedding march was softly rendered by Live Wire Band, carrying a bunch of flowers in her hand and looking charming in a gown made of a light spring wagon, a box of apples, six stacks of hay, one grind-stone."

Sometimes we make errors but not as gross as the above. We dedicate these quoted paragraphs to any contributor who might become incensed of any mix-up that we might have with his or her article.

HOW LONG HAVE YOU BEEN TAKING THE SUN?

We are anxious to secure the names and addresses of all those who have been taking THE SUN twenty-five years or more. Drop us a card today. Mention this to your friends as a reminder. Don't forget it. We want the list.

SHE WANTED THE SUN A WEEK

A former editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN tells a rich thing that happened in this way: Some one was pleading for THE SUN from the pulpit, and calling attention to the fact that three cents a week would pay for it. (It was $1.50 the year then) and after the service an old lady came up and said she had decided to subscribe for it a week.

OUR JOKES

We are of the opinion that the average man enjoys a good joke and that the "Smiles" we print on the back page furnish material for many good laughs. A family quarrel is often averted by something to laugh about; a sad mood is often banished by a real joke; a laugh is good for the digestion. We believe in laughing. Don't you.

Miss Hester Stuart, THE SUN's efficient book-keeper and stenographer supplies the material for our "Jokes." She gives credit whenever the origin is known. She also endeavors to see that no "Joke" is repeated; and if she ever repeats one, don't think it is an oversight, for you know some things are worth telling twice.

A WORD ON ADVERTISING

Some good friend of THE SUN is constantly reminding us that we need more advertising and that it will pay. We always appreciate these suggestions, but to be kind and candid about the matter, our experience, as well as the experience of other church papers of a small circulation, is that these friends mean well and will probably hold their present opinion until they have been through the "mill" and found out otherwise. A church paper with a small circulation cannot even attract large advertisers. Practically all reputable advertising is handled through advertising agencies, and by the time these agencies subtract a big commission for their work there is nothing left for the paper with a small circulation. Not only is this true but there was a time when you could get a man to set and distribute advertisements on a paper for $12 or $15 a week, whereas now a good man will cost about $30 a week. There is also another reason why THE SUN cannot carry so much advertising, even if it had a circulation large enough to demand a high rate, and that is this: The first function of a Church paper is to serve the Church and we do not have room enough now to render the service that we need to render.

OUR EXCHANGES

This office is favored with a very excellent list of Exchanges which we read with a great deal of pleasure and profit. If we have not overlooked any, the following is a complete list of the papers that we read and enjoy each week:

Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, Ohio.

OUR NEIGHBORS

Our neighbors in the newspaper craft are The Burlington News and The Burlington Falcon. The Burlington News is under the editorship of our friend, O. F. Crowson, who furnishes the public a good weekly paper. This paper appears every Wednesday in the form of from eight to twenty pages. It is possibly one of the largest weekly papers in the State. The Burlington Falcon is under the editorship and direction of Mr. S. F. White. The Falcon is a six column, eight page weekly. Our friend White is a newspaper man by birth and experience and furnishes his readers a very worthy publication.

OUR OFFICE ACCOMMODATION

We want to assure SUN readers again of the office accommodation which they have. Our office is open from 7:30 A. M. to 6:00 P. M. Our office is never closed at the noon hour. Mail is promptly received after the arrival of each train, and such as requires answering, is given prompt attention. All subscription money is carefully and accurately handled. Our bookkeeper is accurate and is a master of details and it is a rare exception when anything escapes her attention. Do not be uneasy about your remittance, for if it reaches this office it is safe. Labels are changed just before each issue goes to the press. We invite our attention being called to any error or oversight that we may make.

HOW THE EDITOR SPENT THE SUMMER

You hear much talk about vacations and read what others say about some vacation that they have had. The Editor has had no vacation this summer, in fact he has never had such a treat. His work this summer has been more exacting than any summer in his life. He has spoken once or twice practically every Sunday since last March. This service has not all been rendered to congregations of his own denomination but other denominations, community Sunday school work, rally day assemblies and many other occasions. If any reader has made up his or her mind that the Editor has an easy job just let such a person drop into this sanetum and stay awhile. The Editor's office hours are from 8:00 A. M. to 1:00 P. M., and from 2:00 P. M. to 6:00 P. M. These hours added to his public service on Sundays, together with many other duties that must be performed each day, make him a fairly good week's work. He seems to be thriving on it and weighs fifteen pounds more than he has ever weighed, bringing his avoirdupois up to 160.

REV. A. W. ANDES WINS THE PRIZE

Some time ago THE SUN offered a prize of $25.00 in gold to the pastor sending the largest list of persons (members of the Christian church and heads of families, or logical persons to take the paper) who do not take THE SUN. We have been delayed in announcing this prize owing to pressure of work in the office. We have checked up all the lists sent in and find that Rev. A. W. Andes has a total of 401 names to his credit. Rev. T. J. Green stands second; Rev. B. J. Earp third, and Rev. J. L. Foster fourth. These constitute the pastors whose lists totaled more than 100 each. For lack of space we are not giving the remainder of the list but suffice to say that the total number received is so alarming that we are ashamed to announce it. Only a small per cent of the pastors participated. Had all complied with the request it would have given us a list running into many, many thousands.

ADDITIONAL PERSONAL MENTION

Dr. D. A. Long and Rev. J. V. Knight are holding a revival at Salem Chapel this week.

We learn that Rev. G. D. Eastes, Raleigh, N. C., is sick and that the revival in progress in the Raleigh church had to close on account of the pastor's illness.

Rev. T. J. Green was a caller at THE SUN office Monday. He was in company with Brother J. F. Apple and they were on their way to Long's Chapel to begin a revival meeting. Brother Green is pastor of five country churches and is doing a splendid work. He is a consecrated man of God and is appreciated and loved by his people. He tells us that his salary for three years has been far below what it has cost him to live, and that he does not feel that he can continue to make the sacrifice. He has a good farm a few miles from Ashboro, but for the benefit of his churches in the way of a convenience, moved to Ashboro a year or two ago and rented a home. He has been able to meet the sacrifice by the products of his farm but finds that a continuation of such a sacrifice would some day be more than he could continue. He is giving up his churches and will move back to the farm. This is only another case of which the Church must deal. The minister is worthy of his hire and cannot be expected to work for less than it costs to live.

ENDOWMENT OF CHURCH PAPERS

(Editorial in North Carolina Christian Advocate)

Among the institutions of the church there is nothing now subject to more serious peril and sore trial than the Church paper. The periodical must appear just as often and must maintain just as attractive form in its dress of paper and type as when conditions were normal. This, of course, cannot be done unless the income can be increased. To expect it would be to expect ordinary mortals to perform miracles. A paper has but two sources of income, subscriptions and advertising. It is exceedingly difficult to increase the former; the latter is a constantly decreasing item for the reason that public opinion demands a more and more careful censorship. There is now a very small field for the advertiser in the religious press. The scent for fraud is altogether too keen now in the church to tolerate even the moderately extravagant language used by the average vender of wares or remedies.

The time has come when the Church must consider how this important and essential arm of our educational work is to be maintained. It can not be dispensed with, and it must be made even more attractive and efficient than ever before, for the reason that we have an ever-increasing constituency of intelligence. They will not be satisfied and can not be benefited by a sleazy and slipshod periodical literature.

It will do no good to heap ridicule and contempt upon the press that we have. Men who have been required to make brick without straw deserve at least the sympathy of their fellows, unless it be clear that they have shown too great eagerness to rush into a hapless enterprise. The attitude of the Church at large must be changed from a contemptuous indifference or mere tolerance to that of intelligent and sympathetic co-operation in the effort to make periodicals that will appeal, both because of their literary merit and of the attractive style of the printer's art in which their menu is served.

Our schools are no longer housed in log cabins or old barns, nor are they served by faculties whose support comes from the income from tuition. They must either have an income from endowment or they must have a conference subsidy. This subsidy may not be continued as a settled policy, but it will have to be continued till the schools have sufficient endowment to meet the demands or else many of our educational institutions will have to be abandoned. It is a fortunate thing that our people are beginning to realize that our schools must not be commercialized. Why should they expect us to commercialize our press? The answer to this question is that heretofore our people have not classed the church paper with the educational institutions of the church. We will all get right on this subject when we awake to the fact that the church paper is vitally related to both our educational and missionary work.

One of our Northern religious exchanges, in a recent issue, has the following on the subject:

"Religious journalism has been passing through its Gethsemane, and in every denomination, as I meet and converse with some of the recognized leaders, Baptist, Congregational, Lutheran, Presbyterian, and Protestant Episcopal, they do not hesitate to speak of the difficulties of the editor and the publisher, in these days of increasing costs and oftentimes decreasing receipts. If the Rockefeller Foundation feels justified—as it certainly does—in augmenting the endowment of colleges and universities of all denominations, why should it not consider the wisdom of setting apart from its princely principal, equally generous amounts for the endowment of some of our great religious weeklies which cannot look to any church funds to supply deficits or to supplement salaries in such trying times as these? Cannot some layman be found who will endow the editorial chair?"

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

PLEASANT HILL CHRISTIAN CHURCH

The protracted services began on Saturday before the first Sunday in September, 1919, and continued until Thursday afternoon, following. There were six accessions to the church. There will be baptisms, in some stream, near the church, immediately after preaching, 11:00 o'clock A. M., the first Sunday in October.

Brother L. W. Fogleman preached a very helpful sermon on Monday.

Brother J. W. Holt, a former beloved pastor at Pleasant Hill, came to our assistance and preached to attentive congregations with marked ability, and to the delight of his old friends. Brother Holt will remain a student to the end of life's journey.

The church gave me a unanimous call for another year. I regret that I cannot see my way clear to accept. I want to aid Pleasant Hill, Liberty and Salem Chapel to find pastors. No man ever served a kinder people.

I preached a sermon in memory of Brother L. I. Cox, at 11:00 A. M., the first Sunday in this month. He preceded me as pastor at this place. Zion mourns her heroes fallen. Henry Albright was my cousin. Boarded at my father's sixty years ago, when he attended Graham Institute. Oliver Worden Powers and wife were students at Antioch College. I handed him his diploma. I officiated at his marriage. My pen drags heavily as I write about Albright, Cox and Powers. I drop a tear at their graves. I take fresh courage from the inspiration of their lives.

DANIEL ALBRIGHT LONG.

September 17, 1919.

JUST A THOUGHT

It has been said:

"If you would be an author sage,
Think a volume write a page,
And frame every page of thine
Publish but a single line."

We cannot, or do not, avoid speaking the thoughts of some one else. Being, mainly, copyists. All our knowledge has been acquired from the production of others. If we were not taught by others, competent to give instruction we would know comparatively little. What some of us do undertake to speak or write is full of redundancy and tautology that we are almost ashamed to see it in print. Perhaps every writer sometimes sees his mistakes or faults. Often he does not see them but others, better informed, and having a critical eye, see them plainly. Our educational acquirement and our environment have very much to do with what we think and say. Therefore, we ought to get all the education we possibly can, and be surrounded by the very best conditions which will enable us to be more careful and correct in our department, whether it be active or silent. Some of us are very wordy speakers and writers have more words than extra, fine logical thoughts.

But Paul, the great missionary, teacher and preacher, made some mistakes in style and composition. He very often turned from one subject to another without thoroughly discussing it, because he had so much to say, and said it with such impassioned zeal, that he lost sight of some minor points. When before Agrippe and Festus in his masterly defense, Agrippe answered him cordially: "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." If we can persuade somebody to be a Christian we will have accomplished great good.

J. T. KITCHEN.

FROM DR. D. A. LONG

The Christians (Disciples) at Farmville, N. C., gave me a special invitation to preach for them last Sunday, September 14. Mrs. Long and myself enjoyed the kind hospitality of Brother and Sister A. J. Moyer.

I find that the Christians in Eastern North Carolina confidently expect President Harper to attend their meeting at Columbus, Ohio, that is soon to meet.

The beloved pastor of the First Christian church, Raleigh, N. C., is conducting a protracted meeting at that place. The Lord appears to be with him and his people in power. I attended two very impressive services.

D. A. LONG.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

To Pastors Particularly and Others Generally:

Will any one who reads this, and all who read it, do the writer a favor and the church a real service? Very well. If you know of any one in Richmond, Va., belonging to the Christian church, or who was a member before going to Richmond and still resides there, will you please send his or her name and address to the undersigned? Please do. We want to organize and build a Christian church in Richmond. Your compliance with this request now will help determine whether we shall undertake such a work, or keep on deferring the matter. Let every SUN reader who knows a Christian church member in Richmond, Va., send me, please, the name and address at once. Thank you, dear friends.

Yours to serve,

OFFICE NOTES

Start a Teacher-Training Class in your Sunday school. Write us for suggestions, book recommendations and price.

We are now ready to furnish prices and samples of offering envelopes. Write us your needs and get full information. Correspondence solicited.

What kind of a Bible are you looking for? Describe to us in a letter, and if we do not have it on hand, we can get it for you if it can be had.

The season of the year is now at hand when we try to collect as much money on the paper as possible. Will you, dear subscriber, send your renewal without having us to send statement? It will save time and money. Just look at your label, and if your time is out, remit promptly. It will be appreciated.

The trade house that furnishes Communion sets has just issued us a beautiful descriptive catalogue, a copy of which we shall be glad to send to any Church thinking of making a purchase.

We are informed from two or three sections that THE SUN issue of September 3 failed to arrive. We cannot account for the trouble and trust that only a few missed the paper that week.

The new mission study books are the "Crusade of Compassion" (foreign) and "Christian Americanization" (home) and can be secured from THE SUN office. State in ordering whether you desire cloth or paper binding.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES*

Matt. 16:3—Can you not discern the signs of the times?

In a sense, a real sense too, every age is new. But a period following a world war may be justly said to be new in a vitally different sense. We need only to look out upon the life of our day to realize that we have made great strides in social and political progress during the past five years. Who could have dreamed of a League of Nations five years ago? Who could have dreamed of organized labor issuing an ultimatum to the American people five years ago? And what shall we say of Woman Suffrage and National Prohibition? Of World Prohibition? Ours is a new day.

I regret to see that many Christian leaders have not discovered this. In this respect they are unlike the Master. He was expert in discerning the signs of the times and found fault with the religious leaders of His day for being adept in reading the weather signs in the sky, while they were blind to the vocal signs of spiritual change all around them. They were ritualists. He was not. They were legalists. He was not. They were traditionalists. He was not. They were reactionaries. He was the original progressive. They dubbed Him a devil and a blasphemer. He replied by styling them whited sepulchers, ravening wolves, hypocrites. They would not understand Him and so He had to reject them.

Let us pray that those who lead in the Kingdom in our day may not be so blind to the new spirit of the times and that with open-mindedness they may discern the signs that redden the sky of our day with radiant hope, that beckon with inviting charm to a larger service. Out of the upheaval of the world cataclysm we have acquired a new interpretation of spiritual values, a new fulfillment of Kingdom hopes, a coterie of new conceptions for the Christian life. It is at these we should look with that enthusiasm which has through the ages characterized the prophetic spirit of youth.

I. A New Loyalty

And first among these new conceptions let us place that noblest element of the moral life—loyalty. We have learned the new and deeper meaning, the full meaning of loyalty in our day. We have always been proud we are American citizens. We have loved our country in a way, and we fancied we were truly loyal to it. But we have learned in the service and sacrifice of war what loyalty is. When the call of country came, as one man our nation arose in her majestic might to the demands of loyalty. The Selective Draft Act called our noblest young men from professional offices, from business and industry, from farm and college. They answered like the heroes they were and forever broke the power of autocracy. And those of us who stayed at home were loyal too. We did our best to quicken industry, even though our best workers were gone on a stern task. And our women, God bless them, by their tireless fingers and countless deeds of mercy and sacrifice, added a new halo of glory to the diadem that has ever crowned the loving heart of womanhood. There has never been enacted in human history such a magnificent pageant of loyalty, and out of it and in consequence of it, America has been exalted to world leadership.

Shall we who love the Kingdom not profit by this display of loyalty to our country? Shall we be content to give more and do more in response to country's call through her Selective Draft Act than we shall undertake to do in response to our Master's Universal Service Act? Let us not forget that nearly two thousand years ago Jesus enunciated this act. "Go ye into all the world," He said, "and preach the Gospel to every creature." This act has never been repealed. It never will be, and yet after these twenty centuries barely one-third the earth's population has been reached by us Christians and those who have been reached are far from the representatives of Him they ought to be.

Churches floated their service flags proudly during the war, with stars for each noble son who had gone to the colors. But how many of these churches can duplicate that flag with Christian workers dedicated to Kingdom service? Are churches founded to win wars or to win a world for Jesus? Ought not our churches to institute methods of recruiting the army of the Kingdom? Ought they not see to it that the fields white unto the harvest are supplied with workers, even as they threw the weight of their influence to the winning of the war?

And no banners floated more gloriously in our colleges than the service flags showing the number who had gone to the redemption of the race from the iron heel of Prussianism. Elon counts it a splendid distinction to have sent 601 to this grand crusade, fifteen of whom paid the supreme sacrifice. But Elon is a Christian college, at least in purpose and hope, and she owes a duty to the Kingdom in this hour. She owes it to herself and to the splendid young men and women who have entrusted their lives to her to hold up the first claim of the Kingdom on every life. It has been said: "Do not give yourself to the ministry or to other Christian service if you can help it." This is not the teaching of Scripture. We must put the Kingdom first. We are all priests unto God. We must all give ourselves to Kingdom service definitely, unless we can satisfy God in those moments when we have been deeply conscious of His presence that He can not use us in His work. We dare not choose our own career. We must seek His will and win his approval to the designs and purposes of our hearts for our life-work. And in this opening service of the college year, I call upon every young life here to face this issue honestly, squarely, reverently, and then to act as God directs. The Kingdom, young friends, must have recruits and Elon must not fail to furnish her quota. Let her answer this call with a loyalty as genuine and as sincere as she did the call of country in the World War.

II. A New Meaning of Salvation

The second sign that reddens the horizon of our day spiritually is a new meaning for salvation. We must be born again, all right. But spiritual birth is but the beginning of salvation. Salvation is a constant process, a constant growth, an unending development. It is not a once-for-all affair. It is a daily ration. It is to the soul of men as the manna of the Wilderness. We get a sufficiency for the day only and we cannot store it, or it will petrify. It is a life-principle, a ripening experience, a passport not into a finished city, but into a vast forest, where trees are to be felled, roads laid out, farms cultivated, homes constructed, cities builded, and the work of the Kingdom wrought out. How happy we should be to have part through the blood of Jesus in a work like this!

Salvation is personal? Yes, but it is also social. Jesus did not come to save me. That is a partial statement of a great truth. Jesus came to save me that I might be the means of saving others. That is the whole truth. We are brothers whether we wish it or not. The social fact of salvation confronts us on every hand. We may shut our eyes to its call and deafen our ears, but that cannot change the fact. We may erect us a mansion and equip it with every convenience and elegance, and in our snug security disdain to do a brother-er's part by our poorer neighbors. With what result? With the result that direful diseases will germinate in his unsanitary quarters and be wafted on the wings of the common air we breathe with him to our palatial residence, and we shall die. Whether we wish it or not, we must recognize the social obligation of salvation. But if we have become thoroughly saturated with the spirit of salvation, we shall rejoice that it is social and that we can bring its comforts and inspirations to our brothers. For myself, I have reached the point in my Christian life, where if I am to be the only person saved, I would rather go to Hell with the rest of the folks. And does not the doctrine of the Holy Trinity teach me that my heart is right in its feelings? Even God is social.

Salvation is personal? Yes. Salvation is social? Yes. But it is also societal. It cannot content itself with reaching the lives of the individual men and women of the race with its message and words of purification, cleansing and uplift. It must regenerate the institutions and organizations that minister to the life of men. "The Christianization of the Social Order"—the dream of an idealist? Not so, but the unyielding purpose of the saved life on fire to rescue the world. We cannot save men out of society. Monasticism and asceticism and cynicism have taught us that. Men must be saved in society, and the only way to make their salvation sure and effective is to save society too. It is useless to call men from a life of sin and dissipation, if all around them when they leave the altar for their homes the red flags of vice flaunt themselves shamelessly in their faces. We have removed the saloon and the brothel. Every cesspool of vice must likewise go, and in their places institutions that minister helpfully and wholesomely to the Christian life must be created, so that righteousness with its beauty shall gladden the heart even more than sin with its siren deadened the nobler impulses of the soul. Even more, we must Christianize the institutions we do not and cannot supplant. We are Christianizing the governments of men by the League of Nations, to oppose which is to advertise you are a pagan and not a Christian, and we must do the same for every industry by which men live, for every college in which men learn to aspire, for every amusement that delights their leisure, for every institution everywhere that even most remotely touches their life. Such is the new conception of salvation that has come to us in the new day in which we live.

III. The Necessity For Christian Union

But we shall not be able to meet the demands of Christian loyalty nor appropriate the blessings of the full salvation Jesus taught unless we shall be able to discern a third sign written large in the spiritual horizon of these times. This is Brotherhood's day. Fraternity is in the very atmosphere we breathe and the hour of the Christian Union has struck. A divided Church, a Church hampered by denominationalism can no more meet the responsibilities or discharge the obligations of spiritual ministry in our day than a world cursed with nationalism could serve its economic and political interests. The shame is that we who love Jesus and profess to be willing to do His will have permitted the nations to anticipate us in reacting favorably and constructively to the tide in men's hearts that runs towards Brotherhood. The League of Nations is not only a rebuke to a divided Christendom. It is the handwriting on the wall announcing the speedy dissolution of a caste that has belittled Christ and condemned His Kingdom to defeat all too long. It is high time that we who hope to dwell together in eternal bliss in the future life should begin to practice living together in this present life and especially so since our 183 divisions of "sects and insects" spell failure for the cause so dear to our hearts.

Let us learn the lesson of union from the World War. The horror and dread of those fateful days in the spring and summer of 1918 hang like a frightful nightmare in memory's gallery now. The Hun was making his last desperate drive for Paris and the channel ports. The Allies on four different fronts were doing their best to stem the onrushing tide of death and destruction to all the things free men have ever cherished. But the Hun kept plunging on. The Italian supreme command, the English supreme command, the French supreme command, and the Americans under General Pershing were resisting titanically but steadily onward rolled the frightful Hun. It looked as if God had deserted us and that victory would come, if at all, only after many years of long-drawn-out struggle. In this dramatic and tragic moment, something happened. It should have happened before, but it took impending defeat to bring it to pass. What happened? The Allies got together and made Marshal Foch supreme commander for the allied nations, and from that day till November 11, the day of the armistice, the Hun never advanced another inch on any battle front except in the direction of Berlin. And in that united victory, there was victory for Englishman, there was victory for Frenchman, there was victory for American, there was victory for Italian, there was victory for the cause of right, which had come so near to defeat. In union there was strength and there was victory.

Let the divided household of the Christ practice a similar strategy. Let each of the competing bands bring its quota of fighters and its ammunition of truth, and a glorious victory will crown the Kingdom in our day. And in that crown of victory, there will be glory and victory for Methodists and Baptists and Presbyterians and Episcopalians and Catholics and Disciples of Christ and Christians and all the rest, and best of all there will be glory and victory for Christ.

All the more should the churches unite because our Master prayed that we should do it. "That they may all be one," He prayed to His Father and ours on the eve of His crucifixion, "even as we are one." And then he foretold the doom of denominationalism, its inadequacy, its failure, when He gave as the reason for the oneness of His followers, "that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." We are Christians. We love Jesus. We desire, we pray, we labor that His cause may triumph in the earth, and yet we tolerate the petty divisions of His cohorts which make all our hopes impossible of realization. Was ever there such tragic folly in a cause affecting the salvation of the race of men and the fruition of the Kingdom of God?

Let each of us give heed to these heartening signs of the times. Let us face in the moment of conscious fellowship with our Father the requirements of loyalty to His Kingdom upon our lives. Let us consider what salvation involves and be ready to render becoming response to its every claim upon or challenge to us. And let us not disappoint the hopes of men in this splendid hour, clamant with the thrilling appeal of Brotherhood's claims and privileges, and prophetic of hope and salvation for the race through the coming fully of the spiritual Kingdom Jesus came to found, delayed in its fruition by the disunion of His followers, for whose union He devoutly prayed. And let us looking to Him for wisdom and strength devote ourselves and all we hope to be in these splendid behalfs.

Mrs. Sallie A. Hatman—I have read THE SUN all my life and want to keep it always.

Mrs. J. W. Freeman—I wish you all success with the work of our dear Church paper.

LIFE, THE SCHOOL OF GOD

(A Story)

Long ago there came into the world two little babes whose names were Patience and Impatience. The mother, with eyes full of love, looked into their innocent faces and wondered what they would be or what good they would do. Mother's care and watchfulness often kept the children from falling, but when they did she kissed the bruises. The children have great faith in mother's love.

There came a big day in their lives, the first day at school. Mother went with them but left them in the teacher's care, and the teacher, how kind and gentle, how loving and patient, and yet how firm and unyielding towards the wrong-doer but how forgiving when asked! Patience and Impatience learn quickly because mother helps them with the difficult tasks and they loved their teacher.

Now, what is wrong? Teacher has given a lesson a little harder than usual. Patience listened closely and tried cheerfully to do her best. But Impatience! Her book is thrown aside and a frown had chased the sunshine from her face. She had not listened closely but the teacher patiently helped her over the difficulty.

A holiday came and teacher went with them for a walk. Impatience ran ahead to pick the pretty flowers. Patience walked by the teacher's side and listened while he told her how the birds were protected and provided for and why they never complained when compelled to work in sunshine or rain, and how the flowers get their sustenance from the earth yet they never fail to send their fragrance or praise heavenward. When they reached home Impatience chided Patience because she didn't have outward tokens of her trip but Patience smilingly reminded her that her flowers had faded already. Teacher smiled as he left the sisters.

They left primary school and their greatest joy in grammar school was that teacher went with them. When he gave them a task Impatience was sure to claim the reward and just as sure to deserve it as little as possible. Patience was thorough, and if she could not finish or did not understand her work, she went to her teacher for help. By so doing she made her final tests easier. Impatience hurried over her task or asked someone to finish it for her, thereby losing golden opportunities. She was too much occupied with her own pleasures to care.

One Sunday morning teacher went with them to church, as the church was strange. Impatience was concerned about her personal appearance, wondering if she looked well. Patience thought how kind her teacher was to have time to go, but she wondered if she would hear or see anything that would help her. They left the city before they came to the church. With wonder and surprise the girls were led by their teacher into God's great cathedral. The pillars at the door were giant oaks, the carpet soft green grass, the organ the great trees, the musicians, the wind playing upon the leaves, the choir, the birds flitting through the leaves or resting upon the branches, the congregation, whoever wanted to go, the minister, God Himself. The sermon that day was: "Strength and Trust." This is the sermon: Look at the mighty oak. The wind tosses its branches, bows them, bends them to its will and the tree raises its arms to Heaven for protection. Never so strong that we do not need God's care. The little vine springs up, trustingly puts out its tiny little tendrils which catch a cling to whatever they touch. It seldom clings to the underbushes but constantly climbs upward. Now it has dared to climb upon the mighty oak. With trust and faith we may dare to do great things for God. How did the girls like the service? Impatience tossed her head and thought her time had been wasted. No one saw how carefully she had been dressed, but Patience went home happy with a new light in her eyes and joy and thankfulness in her heart.

Are they happy girls? Yes. Are they ever punished? Yes, their teacher would not be just to them when he saw them doing wrong and did not tell them of it. Patience took her punishment humbly and thankfully because she knew that teacher did it for her good. But Impatience used angry words and acted very ugly indeed to her teacher, although she knew all the time that he loved her even when the punishments were most severe. Her heart grew harder instead of kinder. Impatience always had to have the prettiest clothes, she teased her father to give her jewels, all that valued peace had to do as she said. She was always too busy to help with the household duties. She was the happiest when going to some social function. Did Patience ever wish for these pleasures? Yes, but father told her that she would have them by and by. To her lot fell the duties of helping at home, but these were love tasks and not duties. She had a smile or a kind word for all.

But when discouraged or blue she went to her teacher for comfort and cheer. She was not complaining to him. He talked to her of the wonderful country that he had spoken of to his pupils. It was a place where no tears are ever shed, no aches, no pain, no sickness, no deceit, no parting from loved ones or friends because there are no good-byes ever spoken, all sing and praise the King. The inhabitants of that country are dressed in wonderful clothes that show the beautiful soul as well as the beautiful face. What need did she have for Impatience's poor worthless things when she had the promise of such joys? Not so with Impatience. She thought these promises well enough, but she wanted her joys now.

Examinations came, they passed from grammar to high school. Their examinations were upon Kindness, Humility, Truthfulness, Forbearance and Godliness. Both passed, Patience with honor and Impatience just making the mark. She did not care as long as the world did not know the truth but teacher with a wounded heart understood.

They are very happy in High School. True their tasks were harder but they were prepared. Mother was proud of her girls but hurt that the social world had such strong attractions for Impatience. True the world threw attractions and temptations into Patience's way but she had some task to do for mother or an errand to run for father, or a broken toy to mend for little sister, or some task for others outside of home. Besides she had her own lessons to learn. Does Impatience have time to mend little brother's or sister's toy? No, she has an engagement with the social world and wants some one to help her get ready. Her time is spent in selfishly letting others do for her and neglecting her lessons.

Time passed all unheeded and testing time came. Impatience began to be uneasy. Her teacher's face has been very grave and this was the cause of her uneasiness. No one could help her now, she had spent her time in worldly amusements and had little or no time to get her lessons. But look at Patience! Joy radiating from her face kindled hope, joy and love in other hearts. She was ready and willing for her tests.

The tests were given and they received their diplomas. The teacher arose and with a wonderful, heavenly smile upon his face, held out his arms to Patience. She rose, having a wondering smile upon her face at receiving so much honor. The teacher said, "Take your diploma, it entitles you to a home forever in that beautiful country." She thanked him and still wondering read, "Well done, thou good and faithful student, you have been faithful in little things, now be ruler over great." Was not that a diploma well worth working for? Impatience turned to receive her diploma. The teacher turned to her and with a wounded, grieved look said, "You were given a fair chance, yet you thought more of your pleasures than you did of your lessons. Now you stand alone, pleasures, jewels, friends are all gone. You have failed to do the things worth while and to take the joys that do not fade away. Here is your diploma;" and with a stern look he left her to read: "Depart from me thou faithless one, into the land prepared for those who have failed. Your pleasures and joys were worthless because they were not the curing of the sin-sick souls or ministering to my perishing children."

The school that those girls attended is Life. The primary school is childhood when mother is greatly responsible for our lessons. Grammar school is the early matred years. High school is the full matred years. Our teacher is Jesus. The tests are the afflictions God sends. The final test is death. Our diploma, if faithful, is a home in Heaven. This is a school that all attend and the success depends upon us. Are we learning our lessons faithfully? Are we grieving our Teacher because we fail in our tests? Are our joys, the joys that last? Are we wasting our time or spending it ministering to the million perishing sin-sick souls? Do we receive our punishments with cheerfulness or wonder why God is so cruel? The Teacher punishes children because He loves them and wants them to do right. Which diploma do you want to receive? It is in our power to receive the one which is a pass to the beautiful country or the other. When the test comes which will we receive?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR, A SPIRITUAL FORCE IN RECONSTRUCTION*

No one needs to be told that Christian Endeavor is a mighty spiritual force in reconstruction. We are of one mind when we say that life is not four-square in its finality until it is spiritual; that force is a positive power that must be reckoned with; and that the challenge of peace brings its responsibilities. These terms are vital to life and organization. Christian Endeavor is organized man-power, consciously co-operating for a single objective, which is the formation and development of Christian character. Spirituality is the whole human structure in close relation to God, consciously co-operating toward a single objective, that of enriching the inner sanctuary of man. Force is positive and active power, consciously or unconsciously co-operating by means of artificial devices, toward a single objective, that of changing the position, purpose, and plans of things that be. Reconstruction is the organized physical, social, political, and spiritual efforts of men consciously co-operating toward a single objective, that of directing the motives and conduct of men, so that their lives may become normal and happy. If these terms are adequately applied and properly heeded, nations will be born in a day and the ideas of Jesus will become sacred to all men. As Prof. Barton puts it: "When these ideals control the peoples of the world, wars, oppression, crimes, and international injustice will vanish from the earth and there will be an era of international, industrial, and social peace."

"Those who have caught the spirit of Jesus and would strive to lift the world to His ideals are faced in both fields with appalling difficulties. The difficulties are, however, no excuse for not making the attempt. That transformation which is bringing in the Kingdom of God will not come by miracle or magic, it will come only by the process of spiritual regeneration and evolution social and international." There is not much in the way of transformation that a man can effect with his fist. Men as well as nations will not submit to being held by the throat any longer than they can prepare to take revenge. Transformation through physical force is not of an enduring kind. Such conquests of force often end in failure. But that there is force somewhere and of some kind that controls and limits us, that expends and readjusts, that refines and elevates, is undeniable. This force is God. His chief weapon is the Spirit which calmly works, and waits.

To say that Christian Endeavor is a might force in the formation and development of Christian character is saying something that we have all taken for granted, but because we have taken it for granted it is my purpose to call our attention to that phase today.

The Jews were a chosen people, but they were chosen that they might be the messengers of God to the rest of the world. There was a time in their history when they looked to God for everything, even food and water were given, one day's allowance at a time. But when the Prophet Jeremiah lived they had become a mighty people and were forgetting God. Jeremiah is sent with a message to his people, the message is one calling them away from the world back to the God whom they had forgotten.

"Thus saith the Lord, let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches, but let him that glorith, glory in this that he understandeth and knoweth me that I am the Lord." Likewise it seems that Christian Endeavor is an organization born in due time to be a messenger of God to the nations of the earth. The influence and power of Christian Endeavor principles has radiated from the Williston church to the four corners of the earth. It has increased in numbers. Instead of conitng its force with two numbers one must employ seven. These millions of men and women, boys and girls are emphasizing anew the message of the prophet. This message is timely and applicable in our own day. The Endeavor Society is mighty, rich, and wise in peace as well as in war. It is based on democracy and the American democracy is altruistic. The people of every land are saying that it was the might of the American forces that brought the war to such a successful end and did it so quickly. The world has come to see that with resources almost inexhaustable, with the advantage of two oceans, and a canal to connect them, and a strong, freedom, loving people, we are a force to be reckoned with. We could glory in that and I sometimes fear that we are doing so. Although the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior, said in his address at the Stato University, June 18, 1919, that the wine of military glory had not gone to our heads. Perhaps he was right, but I fear it has gone to our hearts.

We are not only powerful but we are a rich people. New York has become the banking center of the world. The nations of Europe are looking to us for credit to rebuild. We speak in terms of billions as if we know just what that means. The Government can raise six billions in a very few days.

Even our wisdom would come in for a shower of the glory if changing the center of learning from German to American universities means anything. The delegates at the Peace Table in Paris seemed to wait for the American statesman to speak first. But if we do have priority in might, riches, wisdom, and the confidence of the whole world, splendid as these things are, our powers as a nation does not lie in these things. You will recall Burns' poem, "Scotters Saturday Night," it is the picture of a very simple home, the wants of the family are few, the living is marked by simplicity, but the members of this family are in love with each other and they love God supremely. Before they retire a part of God's Word is read and prayer and thanksgiving are offered. Then the closing lines, "Its scenes like these old spotters grandeur lies!" We will well remember that in scenes like these the foundation is laid for all the things in our nation that are to abide.

It is Christian Endeavor, however, that we have in mind today, and it too is mighty, rich and wise. In a very telling sense Christian Endeavor is felt as it spreads its pinions to pursue its appointed mission and reach the objective for which it was designed. For example, is there anything in your community that the adherents to Christian Endeavor could not do? With Christian Endeavor working as a unit you can carry an election for anything you want. How many of the biggest, the brightest and best men, women, boys and girls in your community who are not affiliated with Christian Endeavor in some way? Might it be good used right, but we cannot depend upon that.

One can make liquor laws with mighty teeth, but no law will make a man sober. We can drive out the harlot with law, but that will not make virtuous men. A snake in the flower garden is no less a snake because of his environment. I cut and out for any program that makes for increased knowledge of God, rehabilitation of devastated lands, the elimination of decorated debauchery and the betterment of man, provided first things come first. If what we have in mind is only to better the conditions of men, then I agree they may play a cleaner game in the Christian Endeavor rooms of our churches than in the dirty smoke shop. They might even dance with less bad effect under the direction of a Christian Endeavor (?) dance master. But the Gospel that is taught, practiced and treasured in the Christian Endeavor Society warns people against wrong doing and ultimately makes new creatures of men, and that is not alone by might, riches, or wisdom, but by the power of Almighty God. "For the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

Then the Christian Endeavor is rich. The time was when we could plead poverty, but that time is gone. The Christian Church through its prayers and gifts has effective Christian Endeavor Societies in Japan and Porto Rico, that are teaching the principles of Christianity and moulding Christian character. It is doing a fundamental work, and its influence is being felt by tens of thousand. Our own Church is looking to the raising of two million dollars within the next few years. The most optimistic and far-seeing among us did not dream a few years ago of these great amounts for which we are asking. We are coming to our own as a denomination. We are rich as Endeavorers. The Christian Endeavor, through its leaders, is adding the pluck and push to the campaigns which have worked such wonders among us and which hold out such hope for the future. How could it be otherwise when these very principles are taught in our Christian Endeavor? We should not forget nor allow our people to forget that we may be as rich as the church at Leodicea, as mighty in strength as Sampson, and as wise as Solonon at the same time be wretched miserable, blind and naked. We shall be much poorer with these large sums of money if in the getting them we impoverish our spiritual life and glory in our financial achievements.

There are many evils which have been encouraged by the war and our modern times, and which have made great progress in recent months. God's day has been almost entirely disregarded in army life, and many of our war-time activities seemed to demand seven days of the week for their successful prosecution, and Sabbath desecration has become so common as to become well nigh universal. Many of our soldiers are coming home from the army with new ideas of religion, "The Attouement of the Trenches" as it is called, having taken strong hold upon them. On every hand they have been hearing the false teaching that if a man is brave and heroic, and gives himself for the salvation of the oppressed, he thereby atones for his sins, however many and great they may have been. Thus they have been taught to depend upon themselves and their own suffering and sacrifices rather than the blood of God's own Son for their sins.

The Word tells us that, "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin," that with the heart man believeth unto righteousness and with mouth confession is made unto salvation; and "except ye repent ye shall likewise perish." Jesus is the way of salvation and not by the way of the trenches, noble and splendid as the sacrifice is. I know the advocates of "The Atoning Blood of the Trenches," will tell you that Jesus died to save me, This I grant, but it was not a physical salvation, which He wrought, but a spiritual salvation. He did not die to save their lives but to save their souls. But your advocate would say that the Book says, "Greater love hath no man than this that a man lay down his life for his friend," and this too refers to the physical salvation of man. When a man dies for another he indicates his love for humanity, and he goes to the length of his life to save his friend. This is all he can do. But this sacrifice of man for man does not effect the soul of either, "For the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Many of our boys will have new ideas of Christian Endeavor and of what it ought to do and what it ought to be. It is for the Christian Endeavor to so plan its program as to be able to tell the boys what they ought to be and what they ought to do. It must hold out for them a new objective.

Christian Endeavor must not only strive to reconstruct lives and lauds, perfect programs in training boys and girls, but it must work out the problems which go with a recruiting station. Christian Endeavor needs more men of vision. A vision is an architectural design of God given to man. It is the lens through which man looks into the future and reads the actions of peoples and things. Such men are useful. The world wants their message. A crusade of righteousness is now in order since peace has come. England wants prohibition. I heard an eminent Londoner say recently in a speech: "Send some of your most pious, your most religious, your most thoroughly trained men to England that they may teach us the value of prohibition." France wants us to come to her land and help heal her sores and soothe her sorrows. Belgium also needs comfort. This awful war has cost the struggling nations of the world 221 billions of dollars, has slain 8 million men in battles, besides the other millions named for life, and it has orphaned 20 million children. It has paralyzed industry and trade, and devastated and turned into desert or a wilderness millions of acres of once fertile farm lands. France alone has lost two and one-half million of her heroes dead or maimed for life, one fifteenth of her effective population. The widowed mothers and millions of fatherless children must be cared for. Hundred of hamlets, towns and cities are to be rebuilt and equipped for every kind provided. Ten thousand square miles of devastated farm lands must be cleared of debris, leveled, plowed and prepared for cultivation again. France, the land of LaFayette, lies in ruin and cries to us for help. She has fallen among the thieves who have robbed, stricken, wounded and stripped her beyond expression. What can man who has been trained in Christian Endeavor do?

If our churches and Christian Endeavors are to spend millions of dollars on reconstruction and missionary programs then hundreds of young men must lay their lives on the altar of service to spend this money. In the Christian Endeavor room is a good place to secure these recruits. There is one method of getting these recruits and that is to pray th Lord of the harvest that He send forth the laborers in His harvest. In an address by a missionary secretary of the northern Presbyterian church some months ago this statement was made: "I have five men who have asked me to get them a missionary of their own. I have the money ready but have not found the men." There are some things, thank God, that even money cannot do.

Christian Endeavor is wise as men count wisdom. It has ever stood for training, progress and education. Many of our great leaders in church and nations are men who have been taught in Christian Endeavor principles. It is a splendid place to get a knowledge of God to learn the Bible. We have learned the Bible until we can, or at least we think we can analyze it like a school boy would a simple sentence. Our education is even accused of having put God in practical eclipse so that He has no practical significance, for a large part of the modern world. "The wealthy think Him unnecessary and the poor think Him useless; scholars have put Him out of their thinking, and the ignorant out of their lives. Thus among the learned the substance of things hoped for have passed off into notions, for the unlearned the notions of things have become the substance."

No matter how wise men become they cannot by wisdom find God. True knowledge of God is by revelation, and revelations are only made to listening spirits. Christian Endeavor ought to be an authority here and if we as Christian Endeavorers cannot speak with authority here, we speak with false authority on every other subject. Instead of being conformed to the world about us, we as Endeavorers must be agents in God's hands to transform the world. Our ability to do this will not depend upon our might or riches, or our wisdom, but upon our knowledge of Almighty God. The secret of Paul's power, Bushnell's power, Philip Brooks' power, was in the fact that they knew God rather than they knew anything else. Everything depends upon this. You remember Amos said there would come a famine in the land, not a famine of bread nor of thirst for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord. That time cannot come until men cease to know God, and they will not cease to know God until they cease to attend His word. To me this is the peril of our time.

If I am to judge the church auxiliaries by some I know best, then the first test in carrying out any constructive program is to get our people filled with a knowledge of God and a love for men. I presume it is no secret with us that the only time we count some of our people is when we give the number on roll. When there is a work to do that calls for consecration and sacrifice that can only be done by men of God we are forced to count out a large percent of our people.

One thing is sure and that is there are enough men and money to do the work that God wants done if we can command them. No amount of schemes or movements or devices will get our people to make the sacrifices that are necessary until they see the glory of the Lord fill the Temple and in that hour hear the call, "Who will go for us?" Dr. George Adams Smith while traveling in the Alps reached a very high peak and the guide cried: "To your knees, to your knees; it is very dangerous to stand up at this height." Christian Endeavor is today standing at the very highest peak of opportunity, and it seems to me that we can best stand here upon our knees.

NOTES

Rev. A. B. Kendall is to take up the work in Washington, D. C., under the direction of the Mission Board.

The Editor was in Lee county last week, and while it was not his privilege to conveniently visit any of Brother White's churches, we heard only good things about the work in that part of Zion.

Brother D. E. Michael, of Apple's Chapel church, called to see us a few days ago. Brother Michael is one of THE SUN's best friends and we appreciate him and his kind.

Rev. G. R. Underwood has given up the work at Ashboro, N. C., sold his home there and bought a small farm in the Pleasant Grove community near Bennett, N. C., and will move there within the next few weeks.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson's note elsewhere in this issue is worthy of the attention of all who may be able to assist him in the matter of information. Turn to another page and read what he says, and if you can assist him, do so, and do so now.

Superintendent H. A. Garrett of the Methodist Protestant Children's Home, High Point, N. C., was a pleasant caller at THE SUN office this week. Brother Garrett is to speak before the North Carolina Conference this fall. Our people will be pleased with him.

Mr. G. C. Crutchfield, a second year student in Elon College, and a ministerial student under the direction of the North Carolina Conference, offers himself to any church or churches needing a pastor for next year.

Mr. G. D. Lambeth, a son of Brother J. M. Lambeth, Reidsville, N. C., but who makes his home in Burlington, had the misfortune a few days ago of breaking his leg by falling while playing with one of his children. Brother Lambeth is now in Rainey Hospital, Burlington, and is resting well. His father was over to see him a few days ago, and while here called at THE SUN office. We are always glad to see Brother Lambeth.

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor

THOSE CONFERENCE CHALLENGES

One of the new ideas brought forth at the Buffalo Conference was the plan of challenges issued by one State or one union to another State or union to a contest along different lines. For instance, one state union might challenge another to a contest along three different lines of increase. First. The largest net increase in membership. Second. The largest increase in the number of tithers. Third. The largest increase in mission study classes. The challenge might have been along the line of increase in comrades of the Quiet Hour; new Alumni Associations; Life-Recruits gained; new societies formed; money raised for missions; or Christian Endeavor Experts.

At our denominational rally it was the unanimous opinion that it would be a good plan for our Conferences to issue challenges to other Conferences along these lines. It would not be necessary to confine the challenge to our Conference alone. For instance, one Conference might be challenged to a contest for increase in Tenth Legioners, another to increase in Comrades of the Quiet Hour, another to increase in Christian Endeavor Expert, etc.

To carry out this plan it would be necessary to set the date when you were to begin the contest; then having received an acceptance to the challenge, notify all societies in the Conference of the contest and urge them to do their part to help win.

Write me telling the terms of the contest and who the contest is between and then have each of the contestants inform me of their gains each quarter and I will publish the standing of the contestants in The Herald of Gospel Liberty, The Vanguard and THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Make the contest for at least two years closing, say the first of October or November.

It would be the duty of the Christian Endeavor Conference Secretaries of the different Conferences to obtain the facts with regard to the progress of the contest at the close of each quarter and report to me. To illustrate, if the New York Eastern Conference should challenge the Eel River, Indiana Conference to a contest along the line of increase in Christian Endeavor Experts and the Erie Conference to a contest for new members it would be the business of the Christian Endeavor Secretaries for these different Conferences to inform the different societies in their Conference of the contest and obtain from them their report at the end of each quarter as to gains made and then report to your A. C. C. Secretary of C. E., your humble servant.

I would like to hear of a challenge from every Conference or Convention.

A. B. KENDALL.

HE SMILED

(Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.)

HE smiled. And his home was a little heaven on earth. He smiled. And children loved him and ran along the way with him as he passed going to and from his work. He smiled. And the office force loved him and said they worked better in the atmosphere of his smile than they could work anywhere else. He smiled. And those who had business dealings with him always had a kind word to say about him. He drew patronage for his firm. He smiled. And people liked to enter the church at the east door because he was always there and greeted them so friendly. They said they got more out of the church service after he smiled in greeting them. He smiled. And the sorrowing and those who were carrying heavy loads were cheered and comforted. He smiled. And the hearts of those who were growing dissatisfied with the world in general took courage and felt that all the sweet was not gone out of life. He smiled. The years rolled by, and he grew old, but he smiled. Death came, but he smiled. The eyes were closed, but the smile was still there as the thousands looked into the marble face for the last time as they passed through the church where the casket had been placed to make it convenient for his friends to see his face in death. He smiled. The body was tenderly laid away, but great is the multitude of those who remember that he smiled. He smiled.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

AN ADVERTISEMENT

We have just finished a study of an advertisement issued by the General Board of Education of the Presbyterian Church in the United States. The advertisement is headed: "Wanted more and Better Trained Ministers." We note the following significant facts:

- (a) 54 fewer ministers were licensed last year.
 - (b) 35 fewer licentiates were enrolled last year.
 - (c) 192 fewer candidates were enrolled last year.
- (This comparison is based on figures six years ago).

Such conditions are not only true with the Presbyterian Church, but with other Churches. From all denominational headquarters similar statements are being issued. There must be a cause for this condition, and if the cause can be found, a cure should also be found. Let us consider the case for a few moments, first taking into consideration the cause:

1. Material progress during recent years has eclipsed the larger callings in life. Literature of a very light nature has crowded out the masterpieces that stir men's souls to a fervor-for larger and holier tasks. Secular schools have played a large part in forming character, and too many times not inductive to the the Gospel ministry. Lighter subjects have been offered in many schools, and in so doing, some of the fundamentals have been omitted. The Bible has been debarred from the public schools in many states, and this alone is having its effect upon the young mind. These are only a few of the things that have directed the minds of the young away from the ministry.

2. The remunerative side comes in for a serious consideration and is to be reckoned with in changing the situation. The minister has too long been the object of charity. In literature, in the movie, and on every hand the minister has come in as to the man of charity in the many cases. This has fastened itself firmly upon the plastic mind; and it is not American-like to aspire to positions of that kind and character. Gifts are always in place, but where we have made the mistake is considering these gifts as a part of the pastor's salary. Gifts should not be so considered, and so long as they are, the minister will be held up as an object of charity. Aside from this the business world has placed a premium on preparation and has rewarded accordingly. The pew has always had a premium on preparation, but with few exceptions, has not rewarded accordingly. The keen mind has sensed the difference—a difference in health, happiness, comfort, and respect—and acted upon its judgment. The pulpit and pew have suffered; the business world has prospered.

With these things as suggestions only, the remedy can be very easily seen and applied. The remedy is too plain to point out. Is this not true?

It would be unjust to the subject not to point out the deeper spirituality that must come into the American homes that preaches may be born. The home is the base. There we must begin, but what of the beginning, if we fail to care for the growth and the harvest? The answer to this is also too simple to state. Do you say that we must pray that the Lord of the harvest may send helpers? Let us ask this question: Have we cared for all those whom He has sent? We must pray and we must provide.

"Evil is the exception and not the rule and attracts more attention simply because it is unusual and not the general fact. Let one man beat his wife and the whole neighborhood will quickly resound with the sensational tale, while no notice will be taken of the hundred exemplary husbands that treat their wives with most praise-worthy propriety. A spot on the sun will attract thousands of observers, while its steady shining occasions no remark."

"BUILDING A CHURCH, OR CHURCHES"

Under the above heading Editor Kerr of The Herald of Gospel Liberty in a recent issue wrote editorially along a line that is pertinent to the whole Church. We have not read an editorial in any paper that sounds the keynote like the one we have referred to. We consider it GREAT, and so great do we consider it that last week we gave two pages to reproducing it. If there is a minister in the Southern Christian Convention who has not taken the time to read that editorial, or will not take the time, we feel that he is unfair to his calling and the denomination he represents. We ask for it a careful reading by all CHRISTIAN SUN readers.

But now to the object of this article. There must be an answer, or rather a cause, why we have been building churches and not a Church. All this is read between the lines in Brother Kerr's editorial, and yet, we must seek to find the way to building a Church—a denomination—and not churches—local churches alone. The editorial referred to has opened up the way, in thought, for us to say that which has been our conviction for a long time.

In a recent editorial on "Facing the Issue," which article brought many favorable comments, we endeavored to point out some of the weaknesses in our educational work as it is related to the candidates for the ministry. We believe that a change will come in all parts of the Convention, and we look forward for such a change, at least in part, this fall. We make this statement not because of what has been said in these columns, but because others have seen the issue just as we have seen it, and so see it. A strong ministry cannot be developed when the educational bars are too low; and without a strong ministry a strong denomination cannot be built.

We have been wondering why it is that the masses of the people are not more fully educated along denominational lines than they are. Is it for the lack of interest upon the part of the people? We think not. Is the matter altogether with the ministry? We think not. Is the matter with our system? We think so. And now why? Let us consider for a few moments.

We hold our Conferences. We adopt and seldom adapt. We resolve and rest; we make motions and stop the motion. We go back to our fields to carry out the plans. Are they carried out? Most of them. Then where is the trouble? As we see it, here it is: Our plans are all too local. They concern themselves with churches and not a CHURCH. They concern themselves with the Conference and not enough with the larger things of the Kingdom. And when we center our work upon ourselves, thus making it selfish, the measure of our progress is then taken. We have concurred ourselves too long with affairs that are local and have not gone out to the larger things. We are, however, slowly emerging from this state of affairs through missions, education, and other enterprises of the Church, but where we are going forward there can be found plans that are large and take in a situation not local.

The pastor is too busy with local affairs to educate his people very largely upon things of his denomination (unless he is able to get them to read the Church papers) and so the responsibility goes beyond the pastor and is a matter with the larger bodies of the Church.

In each Conference there should be an Executive Secretary whose business it would be to line up the people with the larger things such as denominational enterprises, state and world movements, etc. He should be the custodian officer of the Conference's plans. There is no use trying to carry out plans, except local ones, with each pastor responsible for his part. It will not be done in any creditable manner. Other denominations have found out just this thing and they have acted as we have suggested and have their field men, each man for a special work. We, too, must come to it. Don't have the money? Why bless your life, we do have it. Our problem is getting it turned loose.

And what about the Convention? Who goes down from the Convention to the local churches to carry the plans and actions of that body? How far does the work of the Convention's Secretary reach? Just as far as we have commissioned him, and that is to keep the records, call the roll, be on time, have the minutes printed, and be at the next session? How about the President of our Convention? The office is practically honorary, with an emolument of fifty dollars a year for stamps and stationery. Does he do what we require of him? Certainly and more. He is a part of our system, is on time, presides well, and does exactly what we ask of him. He is a man of affairs, a preacher entrusted with a large and growing city church, and so he cannot reach the local churches, except through a few members at the Conference that he is privileged to attend. But this is speaking of the present President, while what we mean to say is about the office and not the officer.

Has the time not come when either the Secretary or the President of our Convention should be a salaried man and give all his time to the field in building a great system through which the Kingdom may go forward more rapidly? Is it not time? From the Convention should go out a representative to keep before the local churches the larger things of that body. The pastors have jobs of their own. Our Mission Secretary has a job. All others who go into the field have jobs, and so each man is doing his work; each man is representing a branch, but we are allowing the tree to die. We are building the branches, the local churches, but not the main tree, the denomination. It is through the denomination that we must function. This does not mean denominationalism—far from it, for those denominations that do the largest amount of inter-denominational work are the ones that have a strong base of supplies, and that base is their coherent denomination.

Will our Convention continue to be a body to meet and turn the general plans over to all? What is every man's job is no man's job. Is it worth while? Shall we build locally only and not organically? Shall we continue to exercise "liberty" until liberty will keep us from becoming great. Liberty is not license and we should not expect liberty to do all things.

The hour has struck for larger things and we must meet the demands of the hour. Our principles are great; some of our practices are poor. Our willingness is all right; our ways we must change.

"Humanity does not march with steady onward steps; at times it halts, breaks and falls back; but we should measure its movement not by its slips and falls but by its forward strides."

ARE YOU SATISFIED?

Are the readers of THE SUN satisfied with the paper that we are giving them? When you go to a hotel and make no complaint of the service, the proprietor takes it for granted that you are pleased. When you buy a pair shoes, and the next time you need a pair, buy from the same store, the dealer understands that you like his brand of shoes. We hear no complaint, and yet we may have readers who do not like the paper. We are honestly and earnestly doing all we can to make it the real mouthpiece of the Convention and to reflect the work and undertakings of that body. We seek no praise; we dislike it. If we should fail at any place or point, we have the confidence in the leaders of the Church to think that they will tell us where we fail. Their silence gives us courage, and upon this we press forward. THE SUN is the paper of the people and we ask that they speak when they do not approve of the work we are doing. A pastor can tell by the look upon the faces of his auditors whether his messages are sanctioned or not. The editor cannot; his work is without public inspiration. Four walls, a telephone, desk, chairs, papers, books, the hum of an electric fan, Ah! these constitute our visible congregation. Tell us when we are wrong; we are brothers.

“The chief line of progress in the Church and Christianity of our day is that it has shifted its chief emphasis from DOCTRINE to SERVICE. Doctrine has not been discarded or even depreciated, for it is still and ever will be the necessary root of all duties and deeds. Yet doctrine is no longer simply proved as an abstract theological proposition, but is planted as a living root to sprout and blossom and bear fruit.”

INCENTIVES FOR GIVING

By Rev. W. B. Gray, D. D.

1. Because God demands that every one should give. Deut. 16:16-17.
2. Because our ownership of what we call our own is not absolute, only relative. We are stewards, and the word means, “Keeper of the sty.” I Peter 4:10.
3. Because we will be called upon to give an account of this stewardship. Luke 16:1-2.
4. Because money given to God is seed of a glorious and bountiful fruitage. II Cor. 9:6; Mark 10:29-30.
5. Because all that we have comes from God, and by using it for Him we become workers together with Him. I Chron. 29:14-17.
6. Because we can thereby share in the glory of sending the light to those who are in darkness. Romans 10:15.
7. Because by giving we can send treasure on ahead and thus be rich after the period of our stewardship is over. Matthew 6:19-21.
8. Because by giving we may best be able to save ourselves from drifting into currents that have drowned so many. I Tim. 6:9.
9. Because God’s fierce denunciation awaits all those who spend money in selfish gratification. James 5:1-5.
10. Because our Lord and Master is concerned about what we do with the money we hold. Mark 12:41.

NOTES

The Mission Board of the North Carolina Conference meets at Elon College today, Tuesday.

We understand that Rev. George D. Eastes is still quite sick and is unable to meet his appointments.

Rev. J. W. Holt, Burlington, N. C., has the first and second Sundays open for the coming year if there are churches desiring his services on these dates.

Just as we go to press a letter is received from Rev. J. V. Knight—and it is more than a letter. Ten new subscribers to THE SUN and the cash for all. Thank you, Brother Knight. Who will be next?

We have received the Sunday school notes for this issue, but no Christian Endeavor topic. Wanted: A Board that will see that we get this material on time. Reasonable appreciation for the right party.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson furnishes for this week’s issue the proceedings of the Mission Board meeting recently held. It reveals several interesting items. Note that the goal has been set at $500,000. Of course it will be reached. The greatly increased work of our Mission Board is due largely to the fact that the Convention put a man in the field. This ought to be a great example for other departments of the Church. There is no use trying to do things by old methods. The work of our denomination must be carried to the people by representatives for the different branches of the work.

We understand that a religious census was taken at Elon College last week. We trust that President Harper, or someone, will furnish THE SUN an article giving the facts concerning this census. We would be particularly interested in the following items: (1) Per cent. of student members of the church. (2) Per cent. of our own denomination. (3) Number of ministerial students. (4) Number of ministerial students in each Conference in the Southern Christian Convention. (5) Number of ministerial students to graduate in 1920, 1921, 1922, 1923 and 1924. We believe that these facts would be of great interest to the Brotherhood and trust that they will be furnished for publication.

Mr. H. M. Neese, well known to many SUN readers and former Elon students, was instantly killed on his farm, five miles South of Burlington, Friday afternoon, September 26. He was engaged in operating a hay rake when his team became frightened, threw him from his machine and inflicted two fatal wounds upon his head, this causing instant death. He was familiarly known as “Mac” Neese, was a licentiate in the Methodist Protestant Church, and intensely interested in the moral welfare of his community. He was never married and lived with his mother and two sisters. To them he was devoted and lived in the hearts of all who knew him. The funeral took place from Belmont Methodist Protestant church on Sunday, September 28. His pastor, Rev. J. A. Burgess, conducted the service, which had to be held in the church yard to accommodate the more than 2,000 people who assembled to pay their respects to a man who was a friend of all. Tributes to the life of the deceased were paid by Dr. W. A. Harper, Dr. T. C. Amick and THE SUN'S Editor.

IN BROTHER CARDEN'S FIELD Auburn

We began our revival meeting at Auburn the second Sunday in August and closed the following Thursday evening. We experienced a great revival with several conversions.

Bethel (Caswell Co., N. C.)

Our meeting was held here the first week in August. God gave us a good revival. Several professed faith in Christ and two joined the church. The church was greatly revived.

Pleasant Ridge

The meeting at Pleasant Ridge began the third Sunday in August. This was a great revival with several professions. Revs. L. L. Wyrick and S. S. Higgins assisted me in this meeting and preached very fine sermons. The writer was unable to aid much in the meeting on account of sickness. I was not able to fill my appointment the fourth Sunday in August but was able to go to Lee's Chapel the fifth Sunday. We had a successful meeting, several professing faith in Christ.

ZION

Brother Neal Roland assisted me in the meeting at Zion, which was held the first week in August. God gave us a great meeting at this place. Ten new members were received into the church.

J. S. CARDEN.

Durham, N. C.

FROM THE FAR SOUTH

We began a tent meeting at Lowell Sunday, September 7, and closed it Thursday night, September 18. We had a great meeting. The meeting was a union meeting of three denominations, Methodist, Baptist and Christian. There were about forty-five additions to the three churches.

The thing that the Christian church needs in Roanoke is a house of worship—a place we can call our own. When we get a building of our own we can build up a strong work. We want to undertake to build soon, and desire to ask the good people of the Southern Convention to help us. We want this building to be a credit to our denomination.

"IN GREEN PASTURES"

On the fourth Sunday in July I was hurried off to the Halyon hospital in South Boston, Va., to undergo an operation for appendicitis. At eleven o'clock, surrounded by nurses and physicians, I faced an ordeal entirely new to me. The operation was very successful and after ten days I was beginning to think of returning to my field of work when suddenly one morning I was overcome in a complete faint to awake with an acute pain in my right shoulder which finally reached the lung and proved to be pneumonia and pleurisy. For several days I was critically ill.

But why "In Green Pastures"? For two years I had been principal of a high school with a nine-months session, and pastor of two rather large country churches. I was going at full speed. I was scarcely taking inventory. My tasks were so exacting I was missing some of the finer things of life, but in the midst of it "He made me to lie down in green pastures," for scores of friends came to bring their love, their most heart-felt sympathy, and their tenderest words in that quiet time. Mother, father, sister, and a brother sat by that bedside and a new interpretation of the light in their eyes flooded my soul. The untiring, never-ceasing, and sympathetic attention of Mr. and Mrs. D. Jennings Sipe, and Miss Lydia Dunn is "a thing of beauty" in the green pasture in which I was lying,—morsels of fragrant grasses never to be forgotten. Indeed I was uplifted spiritually by the devotion and anxiety of my churches; the prayers of the sister churches of other denominations and their pastors; the service rendered by Rev. L. E. Smith in conducting the Pleasant Grove series of meetings; the kindness of my surgeon, Dr. H. S. Belt, and my physician, Dr. S. T. A. Kent; my special nurses and many others. And the Shepherd, the blessed Christ was there to Whom be all praise forever!

JOHN G. TRUITT.

AMONG MY CHURCHES

(Antioch, Chatham County)

I began serving as pastor of this church in July of 1918, completing the unexpired term of R. S. Stephens. At the conclusion of that term, the church extended to me a call for the present year. The work here is rather encouraging to us. There are a large number of children in the community; and all these attend our Sunday school at Antioch regularly. The Sunday school at this place is very promising indeed.

The annual memorial services were held at Antioch, this year, on the third Sunday in May. A large congregation attended both services—in the forenoon and in the afternoon. "Uncle" Wellons was with us and preached for us the third Sunday in July. Owing to the very rainy weather at time, however, as he stated in his letter, the congregation was rather small.

The Antioch people held their Children's Day exercises, this year, on the fourth Sunday in July. These exercises were pronounced the best of the kind this church has ever had.

Our protracted meeting at this church began, this year, the third Sunday in August and closed on Thursday afternoon following. Rev. Geo. D. Eastes of Raleigh, N. C., did the preaching for us after Sunday. Some able preachers have conducted revivals at Antioch in former years; but the people, up there, pronounce Brother Eastes the best yet. All of us are very proud to know that the Christian Church, South, has such an able preacher and revivalist. He did some excellent work at Antioch; but, just as a real interest in salvation began to be manifested, we had to close in order to commence our revival at Youngsville the following Sunday.

I have greatly enjoyed my work here the past year.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

SUFFOLK LETTER

There is so much spoken and written in these days about the rearing and training of children that one wonders how they came to manhood and womanhood in past years. It seems to be in the minds of many gifted and good people that the whole matter of human upbringing can be accomplished through social activities. It seems to me that the main question lies back of all this widespread teachings in the home.

The original method among religious peoples was to train children in the home. It was so among the Jews; and whatever else may be said about the Jews, they have maintained their religious characteristics and race identity better than any other people. No climatic, governmental, or social conditions have changed the Jew. In all lands, among all conditions the Jew remains a Jew. He did not learn his lesson in the school, but in the home. More than fourteen hundred years before Christ the Jews were commanded to teach the words that were to be in their hearts: "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up." That was a home school in which the best instruction was given by the best teacher. Instruction that comes from the heart is the best lesson ever learned; and no teacher loves the child as mother loves. Love is always a good teacher, because love is wiser than intellect. To say that "God is love" is to include all the attributes of wisdom, goodness, holiness, justice, mercy, and truth that belong to God's moral nature. The safest thing on earth is real love. The child is safer in the care of mother-love than in any school in the State or the Church.

I have a letter only three days old telling of a family of eleven, the last one dying, as the letter was written, at ninety-four; and all of them consecrated Christians, and, as the letter said, thankfully, "all left the assurance that they were going home—a family re-united." It was the daughter of Rev. H. A. Albright, who died August 31, 1919, with visions of angels before him, that wrote the above. No modern school could improve on such a family record. The father of that large family was Rev. Joseph Albright, a Christian preacher. His greatest sermon was his life in the home.

The danger in these times is the surrender of this God-given obligation and privilege to the Sunday school and the day school. These are fine institutions, but they cannot substitute for the home-school. The home is the essential human institution for the church and the State. It is the oldest, purest, wisest, the best. If the home were to die it would wreck the world. If virtue fade from the home, the world would be a Sodom. If wisdom were to perish in the home, schools could not save the race. If home were to become a bad place, there would be no need of hell. The sweetest thing that can be said of heaven is that it is a "home." It is a house with "many mansions" and that home is a "temple" where Jesus dwells. "Hear thou from thy dwelling-plaae, even from heaven" is repeated in Solomon's prayer at the dedication of the temple. As so much is written on "Back to Christ," may it not be well to write "Back to the Home."

W. W. STALEY.

FROM THE RAMSEUR PASTORATE

We began our meeting at Shiloh the second Sunday in August. Rev. J. F. Apple assisted and did all the preaching. His sermons were of a high order and well delivered. The congregations were large at all the services.

There was considerable interest on the part of both the church people and unsaved, but there were only a few unsaved who attended the meeting. As a result of the meeting three united with the church.

The work here has been a pleasure this year. There are some evidences of progress. The church has made the every member canvass to install the envelope system next year. I feel sure that Shiloh will send up to Conference a full report this year. I am looking for better things next year.

Park's Cross Roads

We began our revival meeting here the third Sunday in August. Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., came to our assistance Monday afternoon and did the remainder of the preaching to large and appreciative congregations.

The meeting continued until Friday afternoon with an increase both in interest and congregation. The services reached a climax Friday afternoon when there were more than a score of professions and reclamations. It was as fine a service as I was ever in. I have seen services with as many professions but the character of it was just a little different from anything I had seen. It was a joy to be there. At the close of the service sixteen united with the church.

We have also made the every member canvass here to install the envelopes next year. There are also signs of progress here and you may expect some great things from the Cross Roads next year.

Pleasant Ridge

We began our meeting here the fourth Sunday in August. Dr. Johnson remained with us and did all the preaching here, and did it with acceptance. While there were large congregations all the week and a number of unsaved yet it seemed impossible to reach them, save three young girls. I do not understand the conditions here. There is no friction in the church and the church seems interested but we failed to reach a number of fine young men. However I trust that much and lasting good may have been accomplished.

We have also made the every member canvass here to install the envelope system. I believe it will mean much for the progress of the church. There are signs of progress in all my work. I am expecting to go to Conference with a full sheet. The help that I had in these meetings was all that I could wish for I am sure the churches would be glad to have these brethren with them again.

ELON NEWS

The Executive Board of Trustees met on Wednesday of last week, and spent a busy afternoon. The spirit was fine and many important measures were disposed of. The Board of Trustees evidently have it enshrined in their purpose as a sacred trust to make Elon College a truly Christian institution. It is a great inspiration to be associated with such a capable body of men.

The overcrowded condition of the ladies' dormitories led them to add the residence erected here several years ago by Prof. P. J. Kernodle and which the College acquired two years ago to the dormitory system permanently. It will be steam-heated, have a matron, and accommodate 28 young ladies. It will undoubtedly become a very popular dormitory.

The death of Rev. L. I. Cox, Treasurer, gave the Board a serious problem in locating the right person as his successor. Rev. L. I. Cox did everything he undertook with such thoroughness and satisfaction that the College would suffer unless the right man could be found. The selection of Dr. Thomas C. Amiek was commended itself to all here and will to all who know his sterling worth and tireless energy.

Dr. Amiek's acceptance of the treasurership vacated the office of Dean of Men. This too is a position requiring rare tact, modern spirit, and sympathy with young life as well as devotion to the ideals of the College. The selection of Dr. W. C. Wicker to this high responsibility will command itself to all.

The College farm is to be equipped with a barn and cattle for a dairy and Brother W. M. McCauley and his family will take charge of it. This ought to be an important asset to the College Boarding Department. We feel that Brother McCauley will make it a success.

The Summerbell Lectures

Dr. Martyn Summerbell will reach the College Sunday morning, October 5 and will preach twice that day and lecture twice for Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday following. We trust many friends can attend these lectures.

The subjects announced are:

Sermons

Sunday Morning—The Victory of Democracy.
Sunday Evening—The Sacrifices of Love.

Lectures

Monday Morning—The Dark Ages.
Monday Evening—The Middle Age and Feudalism.
Tuesday Morning—The Rise and Influence of Chivalry.
Tuesday Evening—Peter Preaching the Crusade.
Wednesday Morning—The First Crusade.
Wednesday Evening—Godfrey and the Kingdom of Jerusalem.

First Recital of Year

The Expression and Violin Departments gave the initial recital of the year on Friday evening, last. Miss Hawk as reader and Mrs. Sturm as violinist were happy in their respective numbers and competent judges considered the College had been wisely guided in their choice as the heads of these departments.

The program rendered was as follows:

Program

The Cabin is Empty Again.....	Lloyd
MISS HAWK
Fantasia Appassionata
Allegro Moderato	Vieuxtemps
MRS. STURM
The Bride at the Butcher's.....	Fiske
My Mother's Song	Byron W. King

POUNDED

On Monday night, September 15, I responded to the call of the door bell, and when I did I was informed by one of the faithful members of the Christian church that they had come over to give me a pounding and they certainly did, for they were soon in the act of unloading the truck and filling up our pantry. After they were gone, Mrs. Wells and myself began to take an inventory of what was left us, and we found flour, meat, lard, coffee, sugar, oatmeal, corn-flakes, jelly, honey, tomatoes, corn, and money. And we are still being remembered by others who did not have a part in the bountiful supply on the night of the fifteenth. To be remembered in this way by the good people whom we are trying to serve helps wonderfully in a temporal way in these days when the cost of living is high, and it helps us to feel our obligation to serve better those who have remembered us so bountifully. Mrs. Wells and myself cannot find words to express our sincere thanks and appreciation for being so kindly remembered. The members of our Reidsville church know how to make their pastor's heart feel glad, and may God bless and prosper them all, is my prayer.

W. L. WELLS.

DATE OF THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE

The Alabama Christian Conference meets with the church at Antioch, Tuesday after the second Sunday in October at 10 o'clock. Rev. J. D. Dollar is president and Rev. E. M. Carter is secretary. Their post office is Wadley, Alabama. Get ready to attend and see that your church is represented.

GEORGIA AND ALABAMA CONFERENCE

The Georgia and Alabama Conference adjourned last year to meet in its annual session at Lanett, Alabama, on Tuesday after the third Sunday in October, which is October 21. Rev. H. W. Elder, Richland, Georgia, is the president of the session and Brother S. H. Abel is acting secretary. J. F. Hill is the treasurer whose address is Phoenix, Alabama, Box 96. Get ready for this Conference. Be on time, stay through the session—and add something to it.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

The Eastern Virginia Conference held its session at Eure's church last year and this year goes to the other side of the territory and meets with the Waverly Christian church. The time of the meeting is Tuesday before the first Sunday in November, which will be October 28. Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., Suffolk, Va., is the efficient secretary while Rev. O. D. Poythress, South Norfolk, Va., is his assistant. Dr. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., is president and Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., is vice-chairman. Plans are being formulated for a great meeting and the churches within the bounds of this Conference are urged to make preparation for the coming event.

NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

The North Carolina Christian Conference meets with the church at Burlington, N. C., on November 11, next, and will be in session to November 14, inclusive. This is the first session of the united Conferences, which embraces the Western North Carolina, Eastern North Carolina, and North Carolina and Virginia Conferences. Rev. T. E. White, Sanford, N. C., is the president, while the record-keeper is Dr. W. A. Harper, Elou College, N. C. A tentative program is now in circulation and every church, minister and member of this Conference is urged to begin now to make it a star session.

NOTICE!

On October 15, 1919—at 7:30 P. M.

MISSIONARY

NOTICE

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference meets with the Portsmouth-Christian church, October 23, 1919. We are anxious to have a full attendance and all of our churches represented. An interesting program has been prepared; we want to make this our best meeting. We are asking that all societies which have not yet sent in apportionments on the fund for the support of a missionary, send them to Mrs. M. L. Bryant, not later than October 15. We want to have the full amount in hand when we meet.

Mrs. C. H. ROWLAND, Pres.

MISSION BOARD MEETS

The Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention met in regular annual session at Suffolk, Va., Wednesday, September 17, at 10:00 a. m. Members present: Col. J. E. West, Chairman; J. M. Darden, J. A. Williams, W. P. Lawrence, K. B. Johnson, Revs. H. W. Elder, G. O. Lankford and C. H. Rowland. Absent: Rev. J. Lee Johnson.

Chairman West called the meeting to order and Rev. H. W. Elder led the devotional exercises. Minutes of last session, also minutes of intervening executive sessions were read and approved. The report of the Secretary and Treasurer was read. Dr. J. W. Harrell of Burlington, N. C., was invited to sit with the Board as a deliberative member.

A delegation from Third church, Norfolk, Va., asked to be heard for fifteen minutes and the request was granted; Dr. L. E. Smith spoke for the delegation and was followed by Dr. J. W. Manning and Brother Walter Rawls. The delegation was willing to labor under the auspices of the Board and build as directed by the Board. Three months ago it was thought a suitable church building could be erected for $125,000.00, but prices had advanced and such a building as was needed and desired would cost $150,000.00. The delegation was of opinion that the church membership would give $85,000.00 on such a building; that $25,000.00 could be secured from friends of the church in and outside of Norfolk, and it was desired that the Board donate $40,000.00. Dr. Smith was of the opinion that this would not be a donation, but an investment. Dr. Manning speaking for the church declared that if they could get proper help they could build large, if not, they would have to build small; and that the appropriation asked of the Board would amount to more than its face value would indicate, because it would inspire the church to do more than it would if it had to go alone in the matter. Dr. Smith was of the opinion if this Board would appropriate $40,000.00 the church and its friends outside would put up $110,000.00, and would more likely put up $125,000.00 before the task was complete. Later in the proceeding the matter was discussed by the Board and the request was granted practically as made. Third church is in a growing and rapidly developing section of the city, and there is great opportunity for our work. The church has some of the most active and loyal and consecrated members to be found anywhere in all our Zion.

Miss Iola Hedgepeth, a member of Barrett's church, was present by request of the Secretary and was requested to tell of her work the past summer in the mountains of Virginia. Her work of a volunteer character was done last summer in Franklin and Patrick counties, the latter supposed to be the poorest in the State. She told a remarkable story of ignorance, immorality and irreligion in many districts far back in the mountains. She made an appeal for the Southern Christian Convention to establish a training school to help educate and Christianize these people who have not had advantage of schools and churches.

A motion was made and after discussion was unanimously adopted that the mission funds raised by the various missionary units and organizations be correlated, and that our goal be set at $500,000.00, including what has been subscribed and collected, by September 1, 1922. The Board first set its goal at $50,000. This was later fixed at $100,000; then later at $125,000. We had not sufficient faith in the task and in the people. Our people have been more willing and anxious than any had anticipated. It was the unanimous opinion of the Board that a half million dollars for the five years beginning September 1, 1917 is not too much to expect of our people who are anxious to undertake great things for the Kingdom.

Among the appropriations made by the Board were $700.00 to Columbus, Ga., work (Rose Hill church.) Dr. J. P. Barrett is to be the pastor and is to begin his pastorate October 1. Lanett, Ala., was given $200.00 to enable the pastor to live there and give two Sundays of the month to this church. The church at Vanceville, in South Georgia, was given $100.00 to help pay off its indebtedness. Winchester, Va., was voted $550.00 on salary and an appropriation of $2,000.00 provided the church liquidate its indebtedness. Chapel Hill, N. C., was given $600.00 on condition that the pastor reside there and give all his time to the building up of this work, he being allowed to serve Damascus on third Sun days. Reidsville, N. C., was given $600.00; Lamberts Point $250.00 to liquidate its indebtedness and $100.00 on salary; South Norfolk, Va., $300.00; Franklinton, N. C., to join with the Mission Board of the North Carolina Conference mutually in giving $5,000.00, provided Franklinton church and town people give $5,000.00; and $5,000.00 is given by friends outside—on a building to cost $15,000.00. Portsmouth, Va. church was voted an appropriation of $200.00. The Field Secretary is to visit and investigate prospects for beginning a work in Richmond, Va., and report his findings to the Executive Committee who has power to act. Lumber City, South Ga., is given $2,000.00 on their contemplated $6,000.00 building, or one-third of total cost not to exceed $7,000.00, provided this clears same of debt.

A work in Washington is to be begun, the Board paying the pastor's salary, but ask the Woman's Con-

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

WHEN THE GIRLIE GOES TO COLLEGE

By Mrs. W. A. Harper

You have often heard it said that a woman without a child can tell you better how to rear one than a mother of six can. Whether or not this is the reason that I am writing out what I should tell a daughter of mine going to college I do not know. I haven't a daughter, but if I did these are a few of the things I should tell her.

Any way the first thing I should do would be to try to impress upon her mind what a college education means. I should want her to value her college course in the fullest and not consider it of slight consequence, a mere incident, or accident. The college will be a means, a method or force through which she will be given a vision of the possibilities that lie within her. It will open the windows of her soul and the air of human life will sweep in to make her a sturdy and fine character if she arises to her opportunity. Then too I would have her look beyond the college walls, a college education is not the all, the be-all and end-all of life, but always a means for a larger vision, a method for better service and a force for greater power. All this I would tell her.

I should tell her also to remember home; that we were sending her to college in order that she might be prepared to live at home; that I desired her to become wise and large minded in order that she might bring a new strength and an earnest appreciation into the home which shall be loyal, rich and fine; that she was to become great in heart and strong in will in order to bring into the home a gentleness, which is sympathetic, loving, and true.

Then I should lay a great deal of stress on the value of the girlie's health. Physical soundness gives great aid in getting hold of and holding sound views of life. Life is a mirror. One smiles into it and it smiles back. One frowns and it frowns. If one is sick, all life is sick. What ails you ails most folks in this world. Now all life is not well, sound and vigorous, but if you yourself are, you can help to transmute that vigor and life into someone else. If we would only open the doors and windows of our hearts and souls in the presence of a strong, vigorous, happy person we would just as surely catch that disease as we would smallpox from one infected with that incubus.

At the age of 32 Robert Browning fell in love with Elizabeth Barrett. At the same period his head-aches began. Up to that time he had been free from such symptoms. The relation between the head and heart may be close. The College girl should keep herself free from sufferings and incapacities. She should not be plagued by headaches, heartaches, nervousness, and indigestion. I would caution her to be careful, very careful, of her health.

I would in perfect privacy put my arms around her and say: "I want to say to you, my daughter, as you go away from home, get the very best for yourself from college. That may sound a little selfish, but wait a bit and let me emphasize for yourself. For do you know what may be good for one may not be good for another? Try to find in the college the supplies for your dire and direct wants. No gardener tries to raise cabbages from cucumber seed. We might wish you had more and better stuff in you, but you are what you are and education must educate that individual and that individuality which nature out of all her material made you. In getting the best for yourself, let one element of that best be appreciation. In other words, a love for the best. I want you to know what is best. I want you, then, to love this best and then want you to make this best a part of yourself. Now you will find your teachers in college like teachers in schools everywhere, and like all other folks, having a great variety of abilities. Perhaps you will have the idea that each professor is pretty near perfection. Well, go on thinking so until you have to think otherwise. But you will soon find they are a bit nearer perfection in some lines than others. What I want you to do is this: take each at his best and think as little as possible about his not best.

"I want you to have an appreciation of the best books. Books have been so common a part of your furniture and of your home, you may not know that some books are good, some better and some best. What I want you to do is to be able to know the best books and make them a part of your life.

"I would like to say the same about music. Hear the best music. Also about art. Study the best pictures and paintings. By studying the best in nature and in art, you will know the best. By knowing the best, you will love the best. By knowing and loving the best, you will become a part of the best.

"Apply this same rule in forming your friendships. Do you know the way for getting the very best friendship? Of course you do. It is to give the best of yourself. And do you know the surest way of giving the best of yourself? Of course you do. It is to find the best in the other girl. She has her best and not best just as you. Find her best and help make it better. By so doing you will find yourself lifted, enlarged and inspired and the best of friendships formed.

"I want to say one thing more. It is perhaps the most important of all. Get the best and most out of your religion. The relation one bears to the Supreme Being is the most important. Many people do not get much out of their religion and certainly religion can not on that account get much out of them. Emerson says somewhere that every man must pray. The mood of prayer and the tact of prayer belong to the devout soul. Keep up your Church life. If the church is poor and the preaching uninteresting make the service of the church worship, even if you cannot make it instruction and inspiration. Many girls and boys think they have to study on Sunday. It is very foolish. Use Sunday for a time of interpretation, reflection and inspiration. Make each day too like George Herbert's Sunday, 'The bridal of the earth and sky.' If you will follow these simple principles, your own intuitive good judgment will make of you the real woman of your mother's aspirations and prayers."

And now as to her relations to the opposite sex I know of nothing to tell her that would convey to her my feelings more than the story of that young girl whose mother told her to always keep her person sacred, never to allow a young man to touch her more than to catch hold of her arm to assist her when assistance was needed and if she ever did contemplate doing otherwise to first take a knife and cut her throat from ear to ear that she might die believing in her innocence rather than live and know she was guilty.

ADDITIONAL NOTES

Roger M. White, a former Elon student and known to many SUN readers, died September 22.

Miss Annie Simpson and Miss Minnie Gibson of the First Church, Greensboro, N. C., are due the thanks of this office for securing the new subscribers mailed us by Rev. J. V. Knight. We are deeply indebted to these young ladies for this splendid work.

Rev. T. E. White, Sanford, N. C., has organized a Christian Endeavor Society in the Sandford Church with twenty-one active members. We also understand that Brother White has organized a Teacher-Training Class.

We have the mission study books on hand. The book for the home study is "Christian Americanization," and the foreign study is "Crusade of Compassion." Send your order early. Bill will be sent with books.

For the many kind and appreciative expressions of our "Business and Relief Edition" of THE SUN we are grateful. We also record our thanks for the new life that it has put into the financial side of our work.

OF GENERAL INTEREST

England is suffering the result of a railroad strike.

All high schools and colleges report crowded conditions.

The great steel strike in parts of Pennsylvania is reported to be somewhat quieted.

Omaha, Nebraska, was the scene of a riot and lynching Monday. The city jail was partially destroyed by fire.

Editor Bok, of The Ladies' Home Journal, has resigned to take effect January 1, next. On that date he will complete his thirtieth year as editor of that paper.

President Wilson has had to abandon his trip on account of a break-down in health. He has been compelled to return to Washington. President Wilson has stood the hard fight for a long time and a collapse in his health is no great shock to the people.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Methodist Centenary enrolled 193,210 persons in its Tithers' League.

Those who tithe their income should be careful how they spend the tenth. Remember that it is the Lord's and that we are to administer it for Him. Seek the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and where you are in doubt, let the doubt rule. Make a discrimination.

The Sunday school is a good place to teach tithing. Get the children interested in the subject, and encourage them to begin. They will grow up to regard it sacred, and will in the meantime form the habit. Begin early, begin in the Sunday school.

There is a decided difference between tithing and Stewardship. Tithing is the principle of paying to God what we owe. Stewardship embraces the principle that we are only stewards of what we have, and that we are trustees only and not owners.

GIVING AND HAVING MORE

Giving and yet having more. Isn't that strange? That is what the Bible teaches and again and again men have proved it.

*"A man there was, some called him mad
The more he gave away, the more he had"*

says Bunyan, and that spoken years ago. Some men today will tell you that so and so is foolish because he gives his money freely. The critics of such persons have not understood how it is that a man may sow and reap not; how a man may scatter and fail to gather—if the sowing and scattering is not of God.

WHAT THE LATE CARNEGIE HAD TO SAY ABOUT STEWARDSHIP

"The duty of the man of wealth is to set an example of modest, unostentatious living, shunning display or extravagance; to provide modestly for the legitimate wants of those dependent upon him, and after doing so to consider all surplus wealth which comes to him simply as trust funds which he is called upon to administer in the manner which in his judgment is best calculated to produce the most beneficial results for the community. There is no mode of disposing of surplus wealth creditable to thoughtful and earnest men save by using it year by year for the general good * * * The man who dies leaving behind him millions of available wealth which was free for him to administer during life, * * * dies disgraced. Such, in my opinion, is the true Gospel of Wealth."—Andrew Carnegie.

The Burlington Sunday school had a rally day last Sunday.

We are making October pay-up month. If your subscription is out, please let us have remittance. THE SUN needs the money to meet its accounts.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

In the Orphanage work we have many things to make us happy and the work pleasant. We received a little package this week that brought with it a pleasure that was a joy. The Sunbeam Workers Society of the Graham Christian church sent to us a package of stockings for the children.

I have been informed that the good lady who is teacher of that class of little girls asked them some time ago not to go to the "Movies" for a certain length of time, and keep the money that they would spend in going to the "Movies" and buy something for the little orphan children.

The package of stockings was the result. This brings us a sweet pleasure because we know if there is anything that is a sacrifice to a little girl, or at least many of them, it is to refrain from going to the "Movies." They enjoy it. It is a great pleasure to them. Now, if little children are willing to make a sacrifice that is so great to them, how much more ought we grown-up folks be willing to make?

Then too, we have something to come along sometimes that is really discouraging. It makes our heart ache and we cannot see just why people can feel so little interested in this work realizing that more than forty children are knocking at our doors pleading for a home—little children who are worthy of the love and sacrifice of our people. I have this instance in mind: I remember sometime in the past that a church sent us a check for less than one dollar for a monthly contribution. I happened to know a large percent of the membership of that church. I know that church has more than two hundred members. The wealth of the membership is, in my opinion, not less than one half million dollars. I know, too, that there are at least thirty members in that church who could give as much as $1.00 per month, or $5.00 per month each, and be the richer.

No better community exists anywhere. No better people live than these dear people. Have splendid homes; fine horses and cattle; costly automobiles. Sixty little orphans in the Christian Orphanage to feed, clothe, train and educate. Forty little homeless boys and girls with bright minds and strong bodies knocking at our doors pleading for an opportunity to make good citizens and are denied this opportunity and are turned away because our Church has not made provisions for their care. Turned away to drift, oh where! Turned away to be subject to all the temptations the world has to offer. It is not the small amount of the offering that hurts. We would be grateful if it had been only a dime. But it is the lack of interest in God's work, and in lending a helping hand to the helpless, that made our heart ache.

The following has been sent in since our last report: B. A. Sellars & Sons, Burlington, N. C., one box containing dresses, coat suits, etc.; Ladies Aid Society, Dendron church, Va., one counterpane, one pair pillow cases; Mrs. Fannie Brickhouse, Norfolk, Va., two packages books, one package of games for the children, one quilt.

A LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley: It's so hot in Alabama that I would enjoy being at Elon today where it must be cool. I am walking now, and find it a better way to gain my wants, although I have many a tumble and fall. Love for all.—Oliver E. Young, Jr.

No, my little man, it has been very warm up here. We were thinking perhaps it was cooler in Alabama. Glad to have your letter this week. It keeps the "Home Fires" burning in our corner.—Uncle Charley.

"I believe that every man is entitled to an opportunity to earn a living, to fair wages, to reasonable hours of work and proper working conditions, to a decent home, to the opportunity to play, to learn, to worship and to love, as well as to toil, and that the responsibility rests as heavily upon industry as upon government or society, to see that these conditions and opportunities prevail."

"I believe that the application of right principles never fails to effect right relations; that 'the letter killeth but the spirit giveth life,' * * * and that only as the parties in industry are animated by the spirit of fair play, justice to all and brotherhood, will any plan which they may mutually work out succeed."—Jno. D. Rockefeller, Jr.

"The brotherhood of mankind must no longer be a fair but empty phrase; it must be given a structure of force and reality. The nations must realize their common life, and effect a workable partnership to secure that life against the aggressions of autocratic and self-pleasing power."—President Wilson.

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

A STARLESS CROWN

This world is so full of beauty for every one who will look, listen and admire. Even the least observer admires its lovely and wonderful things. The starry realms of unknown worlds glittering with star light splendor form a crown of surpassing grandeur to identify and adorn our world. With glad hearts and delighted vision we look upon this crown of beauty with almost perfect delight. When the sun is set and its departing rays flame against and paint with matchless coloring the golden draped curtains of the east which are rolled down for the return of night the light of the stars is like candles blazing in the sky. All these lights turned on from the great power and lighthouse of God flash in quick succession from star to star until uncounted worlds praise Him with their light and brightness.

There is a great difference between a starless and a fadeless crown. A crown without stars is not so beautiful nor attractive as one which is well decked with them. There was a person who once dreamed he went to heaven to wear a crown but there were no stars on it, and his expectation was disappointed at receiving a starless crown, so that it troubled his waking thoughts. How very much we love to sing and hear sung the words: "Will there be any stars in my crown?" We want to wear the brilliant star-decked crown of righteousness in the kingdom of our Father, and many will be greatly and sadly disappointed if they do not. The more stars a crown has to adorn it, the more lovely and admirable it is. To wear a star spangled crown in heaven is surely worth contending for—is worth laboring for. Jesus the judge the worlds with His own cross-scarred hands will give a fadeless crown to every faithful one, and it is to be worn all through the realms of infinite day.

Surpassingly beautiful will be that life of rapture and endless joy. With white robes, palms of victory and starry crowns glittering with the brightness of heaven, how beautiful will be the scene and how glorious the enjoyment for the saints of the Lord!

Gaze upon this astronomical scene which crowns this world with a cap of superlative beauty and look at it a thousand times, and it appears more wonderful and attractive each time you turn your eyes upon the scene. It is always new, inspiring and interesting, and the eye never tires looking upon such elevating scenes. What a wonderful crown is the canopy of the sky! And as it is admired by millions in every age and in every clime under the sun, so will the heavenly crowns be admired by the great throng of the tribes and nations of the congregated worlds who will be permitted to wear them in the saints everlasting rest. There in that state of life, light, love and liberty they will lose their national or worldly identity and be the heirs of God to the heavenly inheritance and wear as victors over sin, crowns of glory.

No literal crown is meant or expected but a crown of glory and spiritual blessings to adorn and beautify the soul through eternity; and to be crowned with immortal life, with a deathless life is great and grand to contemplate. How we look for the happy day of eternal rest. Oh, may we reach the prize and wear the crown!

ferences to make this salary their Home Mission special. Rev. A. B. Kendall was unanimously chosen pastor to begin the work, and all moneys raised by him from the local membership is to be applied to paying for lot.

Rev. T. E. White, Sanford, N. C., has visited Sanatorium, N. C., the state tuberculosis institution, and held religious services there once per month, the Board bearing his expenses for the same. This is to be continued another year if Brother White can do the work. The Board voted $300.00 to help finance the Board of Religious Education till Convention meets, and a definite policy has been worked out by and for that Board.

After paying expenses and appropriations the past year the Treasurer's report showed total assets on hand of $25,170.68 for both Home and Foreign Missions.

When the Board began aggressive work two years ago there was available in the Convention about $1,200.00 for each Home and Foreign Missions. In next week's Sun the vital matters attended to by the Foreign Board and the appropriations made will be given.

MR. GLADSTONE ON GIVING

Mr. William Gladstone is quoted by his biographer as follows:

"In regard to money as well as to time, there is a great advantage in its methodical use. Especially it is wise to dedicate a certain portion of our means to purpose of charity and religion, and this is more easily begun in youth than in after-life. The greatest advantage of making a little fund of this kind is that when we are asked to give, the competition is not between self on the one hand and charity on the other, but between the different purposes of religion and charity with one another, among which we ought to make the most careful choice. It is desirable that the fund thus devoted should not be less than one-tenth of our means; and it tends to bring a blessing on the rest."

A principle is greater and bigger than a creed. A creed is an attempt to circumscribe a principle. A principle enlarges itself to give justice.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES FOR

OCTOBER 12, 1919

Fishers of Men.—Mark 1:14-20.

Golden Text: Jesus said unto them, Come ye after me, and I will make you to become fishers of men. Mark 1:17.

Be sure to use additional material on this lesson as you study it. See for yourself the "Ways of Winning Men for Christ" (Senior and Adult Topic). Know the "Work of a Disciple" (Intermediate Topic), and be prepared to show the Juniors how "Peter and John Became Disciples of Jesus," and teach the Primaries how they, as well as others may "Help Others to Know Jesus."

The keypoint of this Lesson is found in the Golden Text, "Come with me, and I will make you. . . ." It does not matter how unpromising the material. Jesus can "make" us what He wishes us to be. A little booklet, costing five cents, I think, written by Ridgway, "The Iron Man," may be secured from the Sunday School Times, showing that practically every big business in America has among its leaders, men who are strong workers in the Kingdom. One needs not to be a minister to be "made" by God. Exodus 31:1-5 tells how God "made" artisans for His Tabernacle. 1 Chron. 4:24, in the midst of a long genealogical table, gives us a hint of how they are made. "They dwelt with the King for his work." God can make us what He wants us to be if we are willing to be made. He will put us where He wants us if we are willing to be pleased. The first Psalm tells us "and he shall be like a tree—planted." Planted trees are where the Gardener wants them. What can be finer, more joyful, more secure? "Come ye after me, fishers of fish, and I will make you to become fishers of men."

Mrs. FRED BULLOCK.

THAT OPENING SERVICE IN YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL

I wonder what you do in the opening service. I think I can pretty nearly tell you. Doesn't your program run something like this?:

Song (any one of about ten hymns). Prayer.

Song (another one of same ten; never a new hymn; not much if any regard as to whether it fits the Lesson or not).

Reading of opening exercise in front of quarterly (both of them).

Reading of Lesson.

Teachers take charge of classes.

How much more do your children know of the Bible, or about the Bible after a year in your school? Why not take part of this time to learn some of the great Bible verses, and some of the Bible truths? There is a splendid little book "Manual of Bible Drills" I think is the name, which the Publishing Agent will secure for you. It costs 50 cents and has enough material in it to supply you for a couple of years. You would find that it would assist you in really having Bible "Scholars" in your school. Why not learn some new songs? Never mind if you cannot get the choir together to practice. Learn them right in Sunday school.

Mrs. FRED BULLOCK.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR AND THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Ever since I learned my first lesson in Christian Endeavor work, I have wondered why the Christian denomination did not have a Society in every church. The principles of the Christian Church are open to the Christian Endeavor work and the principles of Christian Endeavor are so closely associated with the doctrine of the Church that an outsider would

"FINEST OF FINE ARTS, OR HOW TO BE ALWAYS HAPPY"

By Dr. Chas. E. Barker

1. Cultivate the habit of always looking on the bright side of every experience.

2. Accept cheerfully the place in life that is yours, believing that is the best possible place for you.

3. Throw your whole soul and spirit into your work, and do it the best you know how.

4. Get into the habit of doing bits of kindness and courtesies to all those who touch your life each day.

5. Adopt and maintain a simple, childlike attitude of confidence and trust in God as your own Father.

think that the same master mind had moulded the two. Now, since I have tried to study my second lesson, I still wonder why our Church as a whole has not made Christian Endeavor a practical thing with us. Why is it that a Church as large as ours, standing as it does for Christian union, open fellowship and cooperation with all God's people, has so few Societies among us? Whose fault is it?

Christian Endeavor stands for loyalty to Christ and the Church; for training our young people for Christian service; for interdenominational work among the followers of Christ; for Christian Union among his people, and carries a program of service backed by more than thirty of the leading denominations of the world, and a score of the world's best and greatest Christian statesmen. What is the trouble with us? Is the Christian Church too conservative to put on a program big enough to save the young people of the Church?

It seems to me (and I am not knocking) that the trouble lies in the fact that no one has ever undertaken the work. Every great work must have a leader. As I see it, we need two things. One is a secretary who will give three hundred and sixty-five days in the year to this work, and line up the different Conventions in our Church for the work; and second, each of these Conventions should have a secretary who would line up the work with the State and field secretaries and the big program they carry, and help our people get some first-hand information on what Christian Endeavor really means to the Church. I am not referring to the ignorance of any one in that last sentence, but the fact that there are nine letters on my desk from young people saying they have tried to organize Societies and could not on account of opposition on the part of their pastor and church leaders; led me to write it that way. What is to be the remedy? I pray that somehow, God will lay this matter on the hearts of the leaders of our Church everywhere, and that within the next year, our Societies will double in number.

OBITUARIES

TILLOTSON

Martha H. Tillotson, daughter of William and Nancy Clark, Granville county, N. C., was born May 10, 1843, and died at her home near Buffalo Junction, Va., September 14, 1919, aged seventy-six years, four months, and four days. Early in life she professed faith in Christ and united with Hibernian Christian church. In 1866 she was married to William Rufus Tillotson, who preceded her to the Spirit land four years ago. There are six children: Mrs. Hurley Person, Oxford, N. C.; Mrs. James Paryear, Virgilina, Va., and Mrs. R. C. Overby, Mecklenburg County, Va. The sons are Lee and Hammet Tillotson of Buffalo Junction, Va., and Ollie Tillotson, who has served in the U. C. army for twenty-seven years. He has recently returned from overseas service and is now stationed in New York City. There are forty grandchildren and one great grandchild living.

The funeral was conducted from the Tillotson home by the writer on the afternoon of September 16, in the presence of a crowd of relatives and friends, and the burial was in the family cemetery.

TATUM

Mrs. Irene E. Tatum, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Paine, was born May 5, 1887 and died August 17, 1919, aged thirty-two years, three months and twelve days. In 1913 Sister Tatum professed faith in Christ and united with Centerville Christian church, where her membership remained until her death. On February 22, 1905 she married Mr. W. A. Tatum of Sussex County, Va., The husband, four sons, and one daughter survive her; also two sisters, four brothers and a mother.

Sister Tatum was an excellent Christian, a faithful wife and mother. She loved her Church and all its enterprises. She bore her sufferings with a submissive and resigned spirit. All that medical skill could do was done for her recovery, but the summons came and she entered the rest of the faithful. May the memory of her amiable Christian disposition like a guardian angel hover around her dear husband, and children and as they think of her in their hearts they may say: "Wife and mother, you left us here, your loss we deeply feel, but 'tis God that hath bereft us. He can all our sorrows heal."

The funeral was conducted by Rev. W. W. Edward at the family burying ground. May God comfort the grief-stricken hearts.

MRS. G. W. BAIN.

MOFFITT

John Thomas Moffitt, the eldest son of the late E. A. and M. A. Moffitt, died September 17, 1919 at the age of fifty-two years. Although he was an intense sufferer for about twelve months he was never known to murmur or complain, but was patient and submissive to the Lord's will, and he died trusting in his Savior.

He leaves to mourn their loss a widow, two sons, Herndon Moffitt of High Point, N. C.; John T. Moffitt of Petersburg, Va., and one daughter, Miss Mary Moffitt of Ashboro; two brothers, Dr. E. L. Moffitt of Ashboro, and Herbert Moffitt of Winston-Salem, N. C.; and three sisters. Mrs. E. H. Morris of Ashboro; Mrs. J. Rankin Parks of Greensboro and Mrs. C. C. Howell of Jacksonville, Fla., and his mother, who lives in Greensboro.

The funeral was conducted from the Ashboro Presbyterian church, by the writer. The music by a selected choir was sweet, and the floral offering was beautiful.

May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved family.

G. R. UNDERWOOD.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—COX

Resolutions of Executive Committee of Board of Trustees of Elon College adopted at a meeting September 24, 1919, are as follows:

Whereas, death has claimed our dear brother and faithful co-worker, Rev. L. I. Cox, Treasurer of Elon College, and whereas, his life was an inspiration because of its faith, its vision and its untiring energy for those things that build wisely the cause of Christian Education and of our beloved Christian Church.

Be it Resolved, that we mourn his death and miss his counsels; that we express to the family of the deceased our sympathy and sorrow at his passing; that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to The Christian Sun, and a copy to be spread upon our minutes.

A New Song

Christian Guardian

 HE Psalmist tells us that the Lord had put a new song into his mouth, even praise unto our God. Probably that would be a new song to many of us too. We are interested in patriotic songs, in sentimental songs, some of us even have a fancy of comic songs, but that song of praise unto our God is not quite as popular as it might be. Suppose we cultivate it a little; or perhaps some of us would have the Lord do for us, what He did for the Psalmist, teach us the song from the beginning. There are many reasons why we should sing it. He has been very good to us in very many ways and life has had very many blessings that must have come from His gracious and loving hands. Yes, even though we may not make much of a hand of it at first, we ought to try to sing that song a great deal more than we do. And trying to sing it there is no doubt that He will help us until it will grow into a hymn of joy and praise that will fill our own souls with rapture past anything we have ever known.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

OVERLOOKED

There is no end to the social service organizations these days, and to all we send best wishes and congratulations. They are doing a long needed and neglected work. Possibly the late war had much to do with bringing this situation to pass; arousing the public conscience. So far as we can, these organizations will have our support so long as they undertake to make society a better place in which to live. Our only criticism is this: Some of these organizations are hurling stones against the Church and saying that it has been asleep and should have undertaken such a work years ago. We will not enter into the reasons for or against, but stop to remind those who bring such an accusation that had it not been for the Church the way would have never been opened up to such a work as social welfare. Social welfare work is just a big part of the program of the Church, and for centuries the Church has been educating the public conscience to do what it is now trying to do. These social organizations outside of the Church are just co-operating with the Churches. To the Church they are due their thanks for making such a work possible. They have overlooked this; here is a reminder of it.

PASTORLESS CHURCHES

We have in our possession a list of twenty churches, so far as we know, without a pastor for the coming Conference year. It may be possible that such a shifting can be made so that these churches can be supplied. However, we know that some of them have been making efforts to secure a pastor and has so far failed. The question is vital and concerns the whole Church. As it looks to us, some of the Conferences have some big problems on their hands this fall, and one of the problems is to see that all churches get some kind of service for another year.

ONE ON THE LEADERS

That is just an everyday way of expressing it, but for years some of our leaders have been saying that if the people would do so and so that such and such could be done. The problem has been this: That the leaders in church activity have not made the task big enough. A real man wants a man's job. The average fellow is not willing to undertake a child's play, and so our work has been too often held back for the lack of plans large enough to challenge the best in our people. Is this not true? The leaders are learning all right—and learning that they had not discovered all.

OVERBALANCED

There is great danger in a time like this when organization seems to be foremost and expansion the goal that men may lose their religious equilibrium and become overbalanced, thus failing to enjoy some of the finer things in life. The present methods of living make a great drain upon one's time for devotion and meditation, and yet we should do more of it now than ever before. There is a danger zone which so many of us reach. We should be careful and see that our devotional life is well cared for and not overbalanced by the business or commercial activities.

A CHANCE TO HELP

Brother Johnston in his report for the Orphanage this week opens up to us an opportunity to be of real help to that institution just now. Note that he is very much in need of clothing for the boys and girls. It would be great indeed if Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, churches, and individuals would come to the rescue of our Orphanage Superintendent just now and help him meet the situation. This is not the best part of it. It would help those who help. If you want some real joy to come to you, do something for some one else.

DELEGATES TO CONFERENCE

There is a custom in many churches to elect the delegates to Conference the Sunday before the Conference meets. We trust that no church will be that slow this year. Elect your delegates as far in advance as possible. Remember that people have plans, and often short notice is not sufficient to change some plans. It is, too, business to look after a matter so important well ahead of time. After you elect your delegates see that they attend. Once more. Insist that they stay until Conference adjourns.

SELF- DETERMINATION OF COLLEGES

(The Presbyterian)

The mandamus action of the Norristown, Pa., court asking the re-instatement of a student at Bryn Mawr College, is attracting attention. Miss Taft, acting president of this college, is away, and for this reason the trial has been postponed. In the meantime, opinion is being freely expressed. There seems to be a general consent to the conclusion that, generally speaking, the question of admission and demission should be left to the faculty, acting on common principles and rules, without arbitrariness and without partiality. It will also be conceded that faculties are human, and there may be some disposition to regard theirs as the "infallible profession," yet they must submit to law and right as well as all others. If a faculty or majority thereof, or an officer thereof, passes unjust judgment, or does injury to the rights of a student, there should be the means of appeal from such judgment as much as there is an appeal from the judgment of a lower court to a superior court or supreme court. Arbitrariness and the profession of infallibility anywhere is undemocratic, and must lead to demagoguery and injustice. There are records of marked discriminations and some injustice upon the part of faculties or their agents, and these should no more be tolerated or sustained than would like actions be approved in any other connection. We pass no judgment upon the particular case, but only upon the general principles involved.

AN ANGLICAN NOTE

(Northwestern Christian Advocate)

One hundred and thirty Anglicans of high standing in England, including two bishops-designate and nine deans, have signed a memorandum to the archbishops and bishops on "the sin and folly of the present discussion among Christian people," and urging unity. The signatories state:

"While we are convinced that episcopacy is demanded both by history and by needs of ultimate unity, we recognize that the main communions of non-episcopal Christians are true parts of the one church of Jesus Christ and their ministry, in and for their own communions, is a true ministry of the Word and sacraments. We believe, therefore, that the issues which divide us are questions rather of order than of grace; in other words, that the ministry and sacraments of non-episcopal churches are not inoperative as means of grace, but irregular from the point of view of historic Catholic order."

The foregoing statement gives clearly the seemingly insurmountable difficulty in the way of union. But there is a strong party of Anglicans, the prevailing party, who insist that the question of order is primary. Not until the Anglican Church of England and the Protestant Episcopal leaders on this side of the water recognize the order of the humblest Wesleyan or Methodist minister, will any discussion of the subject of church union bring forth fruit.

LEAVING THE PULPIT TO ENTER THE MINISTRY

(United Presbyterian)

"A prominent clergyman of New York recently surprised his congregation by notifying it that he was 'leaving the pulpit in order to enter the ministry.'" He was going into humanitarian work. We were startled at the announcement until we discovered that he was a Unitarian. He had no gospel to preach. He who has not a gospel that can meet the problems that men are thinking about and give power to overcome sin and rise into a higher life, should to some other line of service. The gospel that saves is more than one that presents merely an ideal to be attained. It must carry with it the power to reach the ideal proclaimed. He who has such a gospel has not to leave the pulpit in order to enter the ministry.

METHODIST UNION IN GREAT BRITAIN

(New York Christian Advocate)

While Methodist union or unification—whatever the difference may be—halts upon its thigh in America it seems thus far to have run well in Great Britain. The Primitive Methodist Conference, the first of the three major bodies to receive the report of the joint committee on union, has adopted the resolutions with unanimity and enthusiasm. Should the conferences of the Wesleyans and United Methodists concur as heartily, the measure will proceed to the constitution making stage. We have been too close to similar proceedings in America to be absolutely sanguine of success until the pact is signed, but those who prophesy in such matters are foretelling that when the next (fifth) Ecumenical Conference convenes in England, in October, 1921, the divided Methodism of America will find but one solidly united body of Methodists in England.

WAGES AND WITS

(Collier's Weekly)

The curious part of it all is that in most discussions of wages, what the man does for a wage is seldom considered, while page after page of testimony is taken as to how much it costs to live, although it must be self evident that as long as we work under a wage system, if production be not returned for wages, then a living wage can never exist. Inevitably a wage paid which is not wholly earned must be added into the price of finished product and eventually raise the price of all products, so that when the wage earner goes to buy he is bound to find his money insufficient.

NEW PARTY

(Herald and Presbyter)

The liquor element is announcing that it will start a political party to devoted to the task of getting the saloon back into its old place. What a rare collection of worthless and abject material might be gathered together for this detestable purpose! Having tried to degrade each of the existing political parties to their use for these many years, and now, being offcast and outcast, the old longing for power through politics still clings to the vicious crowd. No political party thus formed could thrive or even live. Vice can conspire.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

YOUNGVILLE

I suppose the work of the Youngville Christian church this year is progressing "about as well as can be expected under the circumstances." Our membership there is small. Practically everybody in Youngville belongs to some church with the exception of a few middle-aged and old people of the case-hardened kind. Our Sunday school there is small, also—having an enrollment of twenty-two. This Sunday school voted, the fourth Sunday in September, to give one Sunday's offering in each month to Sunday school missions. It has, for sometime, been sending one Sunday's contribution in each month to the Orphanage.

Our series of meetings at Youngville began, this year, the fourth Sunday in August and closed on the fifth. Rev. George D. Eastes of Raleigh, N. C., did the preaching for us, with the exception of a mighty good sermon that Dr. C. H. Rowland preached to us on Wednesday night. Brother Eastes delivered thirteen as able and as timely sermons as we have ever heard. Prof. C. O. Lehmann of Berne, Indiana, conducted the singing for us. This energetic young man has rare ability as a soloist; and is an exceptionally good choir leader. He got the Youngville people to singing as we have not heard them sing before. Yet, with all of Brother Eastes' good preaching and all the good singing, as was the case in my other meetings, our meeting at Youngville closed just as a real interest in salvation was beginning to be in evidence.

As has been mentioned in a previous letter, the Youngville brethren have called me to serve them as their pastor for another year.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

THE BIG BRANCH MEETING

This meeting began the third Sunday in September and continued until the fourth Sunday evening. We were invited by the Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians to conduct this series of meetings. The congregations were large throughout the meeting. Quite a number professed faith in Christ and more than a hundred said that they had been greatly benefitted by the meeting, and promised to live more useful lives. It was considered by all as being a good meeting, and to God be all the praise, honor and glory. During the meeting we had at our services two Baptist brethren, Revs. Baxley and Walker.

The meeting was held in a large academy in Harnett County, near the line. The interest of the meeting was such that ungodly men ask if it could be continued another week, but I had to leave.

P. T. KLAPP.

HOLY NECK

Sunday, September 21, was a great day at Holy Neck. The pastor preached on the subject of Christian Stewardship and at the close of the service asked all who desired to take the Lord into full partnership and return to the Lord his Biblical share, to come to the front and give their hand in token of their pledge to do this. As a result six deacons, three deacons' wives and two others came forward and took the pledge.

After the service two young ladies added their names to the list, the one having been a tither for some time.

This service was as impressive to the pastor as extending the right hand of fellowship, receiving so many into the church.

The last Quarterly Conference had adopted the budget system for the coming year. This was explained in detail to the whole church and on Monday, September 29, the canvass to raise the funds began, although some work had been done at odd times the week previous.

The church area is divided into four districts and one or two influential laymen in each district were selected to go with the pastor to make the canvass. While this meant from one to two days work for each man it meant five solid days riding for the pastor but it paid wonderfully. It gave the pastor an opportunity to visit more homes and talk personally to more of his members about the work of the church and their Christian duty in supporting it than he could have done otherwise in many months.

It was hard work but it was a pleasure. We found the folks usually busy with their cotton and peanut crops but we were everywhere cordially received and given hearty response. Hearts that heretofore were almost closed to the spirit of giving to the Lord's work opened wide and gave liberally. Many are deserving of personal mention but that would not be wise here. A few will share this word of praise and appreciation who deserve it not, but that number is few when you think of a membership of 500 to be reckoned with.

We can now say, with a few distantly located members yet to be heard from, the budget is assured and provision is thereby made for every worthy cause the church has in the past supported with a liberal amount provided to take care of unexpected calls and expenses.

This is understood to eliminate all public appeals for money at church services except emergency cases, which are becoming a bore to many of our churches.

I am fully persuaded that our people are willing and ready to liberally support all our church enterprises when approached in the right manner. This has been amply demonstrated by the recent campaigns of Drs. Harper and Atkinson and other campaigns now in progress.

I am also of the opinion that constant and frequent appeals for funds in small amounts and for divers causes, have a tendency to chill and check the giving spirit of the average church member, and the results obtained in this way are far less than when you present the task of supporting the church in a business way as one of the greatest obligations and responsibilities resting upon the people of God.

W. M. JAY.

Holland, Va.

PAGE VALLEY, VIRGINIA

Our annual conference closed the third Sunday in August. It was the general sentiment that this session was the "best yet." Since this time the pen of this scribe has been idle but his tongue not silent, as we have held a revival campaign in three of the churches of this pastorate.

The first meeting was at Mt. Lebanon and lasted a week, resulting in one member being received into fellowship. I feel like there is a brilliant future for this church. We have just completed a nice new church in the same spot where the old one stood. Thirty-six members have been received at this place since we have been pastor.

The next campaign for members was at East Liberty church. This revival lasted a week and resulted in the addition of three members.

Last week we conducted a revival at St. Peters church and as a result two members were added.

In the other three churches of the pastorate the work is going along nicely. No special features have taken place.

ARE CHURCHES DISHONEST?

I pass this sentence on to SUN readers for what it may be worth from a page in Dr. Cortland Myers "Money Mad." If churches are dishonest, maybe that accounts for the fact that so few young men are entering the ministry. At any rate read what Dr. Myers has to say: "A great many churches are dishonest while they think they are honest. They are dishonest with the minister: sometimes and dishonest churches are cursing this land by keeping the minister on starvation wages and some of them do not even pay the small salary they pretend to pay. A church ought to give the minister a large salary, the larger the better. If any man in this world ought to have money to give away it is the minister of Christ. I tell you a church can pay a large salary a good deal easier than it can pay a small one. That never fails in church or business. Let a church try to be miserly and mean with all its methods and that church goes rapidly down and God marks it the same as He would mark a business man who is dishonest. I am writing for the young men and women growing up in the church. Just as sure as you are dishonest, your young men will not go into the ministry and your churches are going to fail. The real crisis in the churches is that which they have brought upon themselves because they have been niggardly with the ministers and in reality dishonest.

"I can hardly believe this is true that the average minister's salary in America now, with the high cost of living, with his good clothes that he must have, with his family, with his books, the average salary is only $600.00 a year. And yet we expect young men to go into the ministry. Every hod carrier, mason, ditch digger and everybody else gets more than that. I am speaking of something which is of tremendous importance, for this great principle of real honesty goes to the bottom of human life and human society and the church of Jesus Christ is in it and ought to be the real example and not try to get the best of everybody and not pay its minister what he is worth."

Dr. Myers makes a hard claim against the church. Is he right?

J. O. ATKINSON.

SUFFOLK LETTER

Judge Richard Henry Rawles died in Suffolk on September 26, 1919, after a lingering illness of several months. He was the son of Henry A. and Annie Eley Rawles of Holy Neck, Nansemond County, Virginia, and was born September 15, 1850. He united with the Suffolk Christian church on March 5, 1875, the year he began the practice of law. On January 7, 1880, he was married to Miss Mary Woodward who survives him.

From 1879 to 1883 he represented this district in the Virginia Senate; and from 1883 to 1887 he was Judge of the Nansemond County Court. From 1887 to 1919 he practiced his profession of law in Suffolk and, at his death, was the senior attorney of the city and, one might say, the dean of the bar in Suffolk. He was President of the Suffolk and Nansemond County Bar Association, and held in high esteem by the profession.

Judge Rawles was local counsel for the Atlantic Coast Line and Norfolk and Western Railways, and was connected with some of the most important cases in this part of Virginia. He was the best trial lawyer in this city of seventeen men of the legal profession.

His professional life was conspicuous in the range of his attention to clients. He would give the most painstaking attention to the humblest client's small case as to the most important case where much value was involved, often rendering gratuitous service to the poor and ignorant, because it was an opportunity for helping others. In any public service he was willing to do his part without regard to remuneration. He was so thoroughly courteous to his brothers of the same profession as to win their confidence and good will. He was not jealous of young members of the Bar, but helpful to them to the extent of opportunity.

With a fine practice for more than forty years he did not leave a fortune, but was content with a competency for his own life and his companion after him. He was, in a sense, as he has told me, a protegee of Rev. Dr. W. B. Wellons, who took special interest in his education and his entrance upon the practice of law. The memory of that interest which Dr. Wellons took in him as a young man was never forgotten or undervalued. So often have I met with men who had received and appreciated the kindness of others as a great factor in successful careers.

His domestic life was as thoroughly happy as his professional life was successful. His office for work; his home for rest; and he was devoted to both. His mother died when he was a little child, he had no children, and hence his wife had a double portion of his love. His affection for other members of his family was constant and sincere; one brother, J. T. Rawles of Holland, survives him.

The funeral on Sunday afternoon was simple and held at the grave. A mountain of flowers made the grave a garden of beauty and sweetness. Four nephews of his own and four of his wife bore that sacred casket to its resting place in Cedar Hill, while sixteen lawyers attended as honorary pall-bearers. His pastor was assisted by Rev. J. F. Coleman, the Episcopal Rector, who read Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar," and the Odd Fellows, also, held service at the grave.

W. W. STALEY.

INHERITED MONEY

Many of us poor, short-sighted mortals toil our days out seeking by every rigid economy to accumulate money to leave our children so they will not have to work as hard, and fast as badly as we have. On this point Dr. Cortland Myers in his "Money Mad" has some very pointed words to this effect, "Remember God expects you to teach your children how to make a good living and to set them a good example but not to save money by rigid economy just to have them live in luxury and then go to ruin. Inherited money has damned more people than we can ever imagine; that is not Christianity. People are hoarding their money so as to have their children fight over it and distant relatives go to the courts after it." Many a man has missed the real joy of living and ruined his children under the vain delusion of trying to provide that his children shall not have to work as hard as he did—as if work were a crime and a disgrace. J. O. ATKINSON.

NOTICE

All persons who expect to attend the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference which convenes at Waverly, Virginia, on October 28, 1919, will please notify the undersigned at their earliest convenience, stating what day they expect to arrive in Waverly and whether they will come by train or private conveyance.

R. T. WEST, Secretary.

A FORGED LETTER ASCRIBED TO CHRIST

(Methodist Protestant Herald)

Three persons at considerable intervals within the last fifteen years have each sent us a copy of a letter purporting to have been written by Jesus Christ, and requested us to publish it in the Herald. The last request came a few days ago.

With all respect to the person making the request, we must again decline to publish the letter. It is a fraud on the face of it, and we would feel that we were dishonoring Christ to publish this letter and ascribe it to Him.

It is said to have been written by Jesus "just after his crucifixion," and signed by the angel Gabriel 99 years later and deposited under the stone at the foot of the cross.

What a collection of absurdities!

The letter contains threats against those who refuse to publish it, and promises "good luck" to those who keep a copy of it in their houses. We presume this explains why so many people go through the labor of copying all its eight pages. But it can appeal only to the superstitious.

It is true it encourages Sabbath observance and industry and plain living, but it contains much that in letter and spirit is very unlike the teachings of the Jesus of the Gospels.

The next time you run across the letter in your secular paper, pay as little attention to it as possible.

(We say Amen! to the above. We have had this same thing to contend with. When you see or hear of a copy, pay no attention to its statements.—Editor)...

NEWS OF INTEREST

Norway is considering the matter of national prohibition.

The candy makers of the country, it is said, have an abundance of sugar on hand.

The Turkish cabinet has resigned, and the resignation of each member accepted.

A mob lynched on October 6 two negroes near Lincolnton, Georgia.

A strike of great importance occurred in Gary, Ind., on October 4. Much fighting was done and hundreds were injured.

Continued discussion about the Peace Treaty and the League of Nations goes on in Congress, but little action seems to be in sight.

There is this week in session in Washington, D. C., a conference between representatives of capital and labor. An effort is being made to come to some agreement as to the work of each.

That which is of much concern to the country just now is the illness of President Wilson. His condition is reported to be more favorable. His physician says that a complete rest must be taken.

An item of interest is that of a trial ending this week in Christianburg, Va., in which a college hazing case was the point at stake. John Fox, a Freshman at the Virginia Polytechnic Institute last spring was hazed and it resulted into an assault. Benjamin Seigel, the leader in the hazing, was sentenced to serve one year in the penitentiary. Robert W. Ware was sentenced to six months in jail, George W. Botts, Jr., drew a sentence of 30 days in jail, and Albert G. Copeland was fined $50.00.

NOTES

Rev. B. J. Earp has organized another Teacher-Training Class in his field.

Rev. H. S. Hardeastle changes his address to Box 1183, Yale Station, New Haven, Conn.

We understand that the revival meeting will begin in the Sanford church next Sunday, October 12.

Dr. J. P. Barrett has taken up the work at Columbus, Georgia, having started October 1. His address is 2605 Jones Street.

Miss Hazell McFarland, Greensboro, N. C., has given aid in increasing THE SUN list by personal work. Many thanks.

We are indebted to Mrs. M. S. Coles, Portsmouth, Va., for securing a list of new subscribers for THE SUN. Sister Coles is a faithful friend to THE SUN.

Rev. J. S. Carden, 906 Shepherd Street, Durham, N. C., is open for work on the fourth Sunday for the coming year.

We are pleased with the results, so far, from the "Business and Relief Number" of THE SUN. It is proving to be one of the best means that we ever used to strengthen the co-operation of THE SUN's friends.

Dr. W. W. Staley's "Suffolk Letter" this week will bring regret to many readers of THE SUN. The passing of Judge Rawles is a distinct loss to the Church and the nation. In his death this office loses a friend.

How long have you been taking THE CHRISTIAN SUN? In our extra edition we asked for the names of those who have been taking it for twenty-five years or more. Many have responded. Let us hear from you.

Miss Bessie Holt, Burlington, N. C., has accepted work as an assistant to Dr. Atkinson in raising the mission budget of $500,000.00 and has entered upon her work. Miss Holt is deeply interested in the mission work and will give valuable assistance to Dr. Atkinson.

Readers of THE SUN will note that Rev. J. V. Knight contributes the Christian Endeavor topic this week. Brother Knight will have this in charge from now on, and we feel that the people will be pleased with his comments.

Dr. Martyn Summerbell is giving his annual lectures at Elon College this week. His subjects are: The Victory of Democracy; The Sacrifices of Love; The Dark Ages; The Middle Age and Feudalism; The Rise and Influence of Chivalry; Peter Preaching the Crusade; The First Crusade; Godfrey and the Kingdom of Jerusalem.

On October 3 the business men of Burlington gave a dinner in honor Dr. P. H. Fleming, Superintendent of Public Welfare of Alamance County. The chief speaker was Mr. R. F. Beasley, Commissioner of Public Welfare in North Carolina. Short addresses were made by Mr. W. E. Sharpe, C. P. Albright, J. L. Scott, Dr. W. A. Harper, Rev. J. E. Pritchard and Dr. P. H. Fleming. Mr. D. R. Fonville was toastmaster.

A recent issue of THE SUN carried an article furnished us by the United States Government on the subject of home training for the children. "Consistency" is the article referred to. Brother W. G. Clements says that the article is one of the best things that he has seen in a long time. And so interested is Brother Clements in spreading the truths in this article that he has had 500 copies printed on card board and arranged for hanging in the home, the church, or Sunday school class room. We have them on hand and can be had for the asking. State number of copies wanted.

WILL THE EPIDEMIC RETURN?

Will the epidemic of influenza return this fall? is the question before many just now. We note that the State Boards of Health in different states say that it is probable and that proper prevention should be exercised. It seems to us that the issue is one that should have attention in a marked degree. Churches greatly suffered last year, and show ear marks of the epidemic yet. Such a scourge cost us too much in dollars and lives not to be deeply and vitally interested in every possible measure to ward off such a disaster to public good. We speak in behalf of all organizations and effort to fight the disease and trust our readers will so approve and act when opportunity is afforded.

MISSIONARY

MISSION BOARD MEETING

In last week's SUN the items relative to the home work, and appropriations therefor, were noted.

The Foreign Board, among other items, adopted the following: One of our volunteers, Miss Annie Floyd, Abanda, Ala., died during the year, and the sorrow of the Board at her untimely taking away, was expressed in resolutions to her mother.

Rev. H. Shelton Smith, now in Yale University, was enrolled as a volunteer for the foreign field. A most interesting letter containing much information and inspiration, was read from Brother Smith. Letters were also read from volunteers, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, now also in Yale University, and Rev. F. C. Lester, Graham, N. C. These volunteers were assured of the Board's hearty support, and prayerful interest, and the Secretary was instructed to write them of our deep concern in their preparation for the important work of the foreign field.

It was voted that the Boys' Missionary Class of Greensboro, N. C., be commended for their willingness to provide for the education of a young minister in Porto Rico, the Board agreeing to stand by this Class in this worthy effort.

Voted to appropriate $3,500.00 for the purchase of the property adjoining our Ponce church in Porto Rico.

The Board decided to build a missionaries' home in Tokyo, Japan, now so much needed by the Germans. To this enterprise the Board gave $2,500.00 one year ago. It now appropriates $5,000.00 additional to go forward with this long since and very sorely needed enterprise.

A motion prevailed commending most heartily our Burlington Sunday school, the Tidewater Christian Sunday School Association and the Woman's Board of the Eastern Virginia Conference for their undertaking to provide for the support of a missionary each, each of these organizations being asked to send these funds to the Treasurer of the Southern Christian Convention Board who is hereby instructed to make disbursements of same as necessity may arise. We also commend the Young People's Missionary Societies of the Southern Christian Convention for their heroic and splendid work in completing the fund for the Santa Isabel Chapel in Porto Rico; and the Young People of Catawba Springs church, N. C. Conference, in their desire to build a chapel on the foreign field, suggesting that the details of this matter be left with the Mission Secretary. We heartily commend the women of the Virginia Valley Conference in their desire for a special in the foreign field covering a period of five years and to cost one thousand dollars. The item for this "Special" is to be suggested by our Mission Secretary.

C. H. ROWLAND, Chm.,

G. O. LANKFORD, Sec.,

Foreign Board of Missions, S. C. C.

Withal, it was the most forward looking program our Board has adopted, and there was never so much as now to encourage and inspire the Board to energy, endeavor and activity.

The raising of $500,000.00 for missions within the five year's period from the beginning, (two years ago) ought to be easy and will be if we can have the united sympathy, co-operation, prayers and support of our pastors and people.

J. O. ATKINSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., RICHMOND, VA.

The Mission Secretary has just concluded a visit of survey and investigation of Washington and Richmond relative to beginning a work on behalf of our Church in both these important points. Twenty-two members were readily located in Washington and about thirty in Richmond. Now, if it were a matter of saving this number only to our work, and the cause we represent, we might well question the economy and propriety of beginning churches here. But that is among the minor considerations.

If our dear Christian Church is worth while, (and it is), and has a real mission in the world, (and it has), then it is equally worth while to stop, as far as possible, the leaks and drains upon its strength and its numbers. Washington and Richmond have both been constant drains upon our numbers, and perpetual leaks to our strength and resources through the past half century, and will continue so, with increasing volume, for the centuries to come, unless we proceed to prevent the drainage and the waste. These two cities, both vital to our work and growth, ought to be helps and assets to our Church; at present they are sources of increasing loss to our work and liabilities to our Church. Our people will continue to go to these points in increasing numbers. And going there, they will either find church homes elsewhere, or, that which is less desirable and more deplorable, drop out of church work altogether and lose interest in their spiritual welfare and church relationship altogether. Some of our members residing in these cities, (and the writer has no idea he located one-half, maybe not a fourth, in either place), do not now care whether we begin a church work. They have found a church home elsewhere and are content. It will be so for fifty years to come, unless we act.

Others care little about a work of their own, because they belong back home and wish to be carried back there to be buried, (grave yard Christians, Dr. Archibald Johnson used to tell his Baptist brethren), and can hear good preaching in the great cities at very little cost to themselves.

But in each place there are those who believe with all their heart, soul and strength in the principles, polity and mission of our dear Christian Church; and these will form a nucleus for the planting and development of a great work. Our Board is anxious to act now and stop the leakage and the drain.

J. O. ATKINSON.

THE FORWARD MOVEMENT

Warren H. Denison, Superintendent

The New England Campaign

The New England Educational Campaign preparatory to the financial campaign is being conducted from September 4 to October 16. During this period all the New England churches are visited and the Forward Movement message, plans, and vision are presented by a chosen speaker to the congregation. All the five conferences of New England hold their annual sessions during this time and all the programs are Forward Movement programs and that is the one outstanding theme of all the Conferences. The New England men assisting in the church visitation are: Revs. W. G. Sargent, W. J. Hall, R. G. English, D. P. Hurlburt, P. S. Sailer, E. D. Gilbert, H. M. Hainer, P. W. Caswell, J. W. Reynolds, E. R. Caswell, A. H. Morrill. Those from without New England in the educational and spiritual campaign are: Hermon Eldredge, Dr. E. K. McCord, Dr. F. H. Peters and the Superintendent. During this campaign a few financial canvasses are being made at Franklin, N. H., Lubec, Me., Eastport, Me., Aroostook County, Me., Woodstock, Vt., Haverhill, Mass., Fall River, (Franklin Street), Mass., Pottersville, Mass.

The financial canvass in all the other New England churches will be made in the two weeks, October 29 to November 11. There is a New England Forward Movement Committee and this Committee helps to arrange the itinerary and select speakers. The goal for the New England churches is $100,000.00 as a minimum. It is hoped that they may exceed this. In addition to the presentation of the Forward Movement messages at the Conferences, and by the special speaker sent to each church, the pastors are all speaking and preaching on it from Sunday to Sunday so that the program may be woven into the life of the churches.

At this date, September 30, the canvass has been made in the most Eastern section of Maine, the extreme eastern points of the United States.

Eastport, Me.

This is not a strong church; indeed, for some years it was closed, but some life remained and recently it was opened and they have been holding regular services, repairing, and have received some few members. Rev. Thomas Lambert is the pastor. This church responded to the message and gave $1,610.

Lubec, Me.

has a pastor of another denomination in charge temporarily. Its extreme eastern location has prevented it from being very closely linked with our church activities and yet they responded with $3,175.00, the largest benevolent work in its history.

Aroostook County, Me.

This is the most northeastern county of Maine, a great potato country. We have some four churches there but they need leadership. One of the churches has had no services in over four years, one has but nineteen members on the roll and is less than a year old, starting with five members. The others are ministered to by farmers who preach some on Sundays. There are large possibilities in this great territory when they can be furnished leadership out of our life recruits. This little group of pastorless churches caught the vision and responded with $2,120. If all our churches would do as well there would be great things happening in our fields.

Franklin, N. H.

The New England financial campaign opened at this church. They built a new church for $45,000.00 and some eleven thousand of it has not been paid for yet. This church gave $6,750.00 for the Movement, surpassing their fondest expectations. At the night at the close of the canvass the pastor had called a meeting of the Executive Committee of the church to look after some business matters but the whole evening was given to prayer and praise for the work of the day. The pastor says that his people were thankful for the result. Rev. W. J. Hall is the splendid pastor. He is a member of the general Forward Movement Committee.

The York and Cumberland Conference at Lowell Center, Me., after the continued presentation of the Forward Movement at its sessions broke out in its closing session in a revival meeting and twelve persons confessed faith in Christ. We are expecting that a gracious revival will result from the Forward Movement spirit in the whole brotherhood. Let us expect and pray to the end that a real revival may come to our whole Church.

Woodstock, Vt.

Rev. W. E. Baker has just sent in fourteen signed Prayer Covenants. This is one of the vital works in the Forward Movement. Have you presented the matter to the members of your church yet, Brother Pastor? Thousands of our people will thus pledge themselves to definite prayer if you will present it to them faithfully.

Our people are ready to do far beyond what our leaders have ever asked them to do in almost any phase of Christian work.

Many of our people are purchasing the book, "Money, the Acid Test." Interesting stories of its effect upon lives are constantly coming to us. We urge every family to get it. Its price is only seventy-five cents, and is for sale by your publishing agent, C. B. Riddle, Burlington, N. C.

IS THERE A REMEDY FOR STRIKES?

(E. Guy Talbot, in the Christian Work)

Everybody is doing it. Doing what? Striking! That is, everybody except the preachers, and even the preachers are being advised to form their unions and demand living wages. The strike method, formerly employed only by industrial employees who are manual workers, is now being used effectively by other classes of workers. For example, teachers' federations, fire-fighters, policemen, actors, bank clerks and many other groups of employed people are today organized and are using strike methods to enforce their demands.

The fundamental principle in any labor organization is that of collective bargaining. This principle is recognized by the Federal Government, particularly by the Railroad Administration, and by most of the great industrial corporations. The purposes of a strike are twofold: First, the forcing of employers to recognize the right of collective bargaining, through recognition of the union of employees; second, the securing of higher wages, shorter working time and better working conditions. Then there is the sympathetic strike, which is based on the class consciousness of either all workers or of allied crafts.

Manifestly the strike is an extra-legal means on the part of labor to enforce its demands on capital. Similarly the organizations of capital use extra-legal means of throttling competition and controlling prices. Since labor union strikes and capitalistic profiteering both seriously affect the public at large even more than the groups directly concerned, is it not necessary to substitute some legal means of controlling the relations between capital and labor and of controlling their methods of enforcing their demands? The public has more at stake than either party to the industrial dispute, yet the public must suffer while strikes and profiteering go on. There is no adequate remedy for strikes unless there is at the same time a real remedy for profiteering.

Both in Europe and America many remedies have been proposed, especially since the war. But strikes continue and profits mount all the time. Responsible labor leaders and the more sensible captains of industry are both saying that the only permanent solution of the problem of constant strikes and excessive profits is to apply the principle of democracy industry. This, of course, means a fundamental change in our whole industrial system from the competitive to the co-operative basis. Any thorough-going industrial democracy means that the workers are joint owners and controllers and sharers in the industrial process. This might mean less profits to capital, but it would mean increased production and greater efficiency in the conduct of industry. It would at once eliminate strikes and profiteering.

It would eliminate strikes because the workers would have everything to lose and nothing to gain from a strike. It would tend to stabilize returns on invested capital and at the same time curtail excessive profits. Industrial democracy would mean partnership instead of partzanship in industry. The methods for bringing about industrial democracy are many and varied. Unless it can be done by legal means, that is, by appropriate legislation, then it may come as a result of concerted economic or physical pressure. Congress seems to be afraid to enact any means of bringing about even a moderate degree of industrial democracy. It seems to prefer to leave matters as they are, with strikes, profiteering and general industrial chaos.

In the interest of the entire public the extra-legal methods of both labor and capital in securing their ends ought to be brought to a stop. Chaos and disorder growing out of strikes, and discontent and extreme suffering growing out of excessive profits, tend toward revolution. Some real remedy must speedily be applied if disaster of a national character is to be averted.

TENTING BY THE CROSS

By Campbell Coyle

The times are full of theories, full of nostrums, and of cures,
And the times in avalanches are fast yielding to their lures;
Men would heaven win with goodness, and the gold of kindly deeds
Dugged by them in mines of service, whereso'er that service leads;
Men would alone restore the temple, the temple of the soul
That God's skillful hand hath builded, and presume to make it whole;
But conscious of my ill-desert, my deep-seated sin and dross,
I have traveled back to Calv'ry and I'm tenting by the Cross.

Beside the Cross I'm tenting, and I feel a Presence there
That touches me with rapture, and heals all my pain and care.
The crimson stream flows over me, it covers all my sin,
And my soul is filled with glory that my soul and Christ are kin;
No gold have I of goodness stored eternal life to buy,
And to purchase at such empty price I've long since ceased to try.
My hope is built on better ground, for human world is dross;
I have traveled back to Calv'ry, and I'm tenting by the Cross.

Beside the Cross I'm tenting, and aye by the Cross I'll bide,
And in the shelter of my Savior's love forevermore shall hide.
There no present storm can harm me, and no storm of time to come,
For His dear Presence will protect me, and bring me safely home.
He dwells with me on the Mountain, He whose blessed name is Christ;
And with Him, until He calls me, I will evermore keep tryst.
The times may have their nostrums—I count them all but dross;
I have traveled back to Calv'ry, and I'm tenting by the Cross.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

AN IMMEDIATE NEED

The fall of the year is here and winter following close on its heels. That means much to the Orphanage family and adds to the burdens of the Superintendent and the Matrons.

To see that clothes are prepared for sixty children and to buy the material to make much of their clothing and buying shoes and hats for the girls and boys at the present prices makes one feel that he is almost helpless.

Thirty little suits of clothes to buy for the boys. Dresses to buy for thirty girls. Sixty hats to buy for the boys and girls. Sixty pairs of shoes to buy. Oh, how would you like to have the job? Suits I could buy three years ago for five dollars now cost twelve to fourteen. Shoes I could buy three years ago for three dollars now seven. Just think of it!

Shoes, hats, caps, suits for the boys and dresses for the girls are all the go from now till all are supplied.

How easy this great need could be supplied by our people if they could realize what a small sacrifice it would be to them and what a great blessing it would be to us. We have four boys six years of age, four nine years, four ten years, four eleven years, two twelve years, one thirteen, three fourteen years, one fifteen, one sixteen and one seventeen years of age.

Suppose each Sunday school class, or Baracca Class, or Ladies' Aid Society should get it on its heart to lend me a helping hand to supply the many needs and just buy one boy a suit of clothes and a pair of shoes with hat and shirts; and you can buy by the ages given. How quickly all these boys could be fitted out for the winter and this great burden would roll off the shoulders of the Superintendent so easily and our bank account would still be intact to meet the increased winter expenses.

And suppose the same thing about the thirty girls. They need shoes, hats, dresses, etc., for the winter and how happy it would make you feel to know that you had contributed your part to keep some little boy or girl warm and comfortable through the cold winter weather! When you are sitting in the corner this winter, when the winds are whistling around the house, just as snug and warm as you can be with every blessing to make your life happy and pleasant, remember, dear friends, that all people in the country have never been so richly blessed as you have. Remember there are unfortunate ones in your midst within the bounds of the Christian Church—your Church, the Church you love so well—whose corner is not so bright as yours, who have been denied the rich blessings you have received, whose lives are not so happy because want stares them in the face.

Remember the thirty boys and thirty girls at the Christian Orphanage, an institution of the Christian Church, the Church that is so close to your heart. These boys and girls are your boys and girls. Can you rest till you know they are comfortably provided for? Will you say to yourself that some other church will look after them and excuse yourself from the duty you have to perform and the splendid opportunity you have to lend a helping hand to fatherless ones?

Some time ago I wrote to nine fertilizer manufacturers and asked them to supply a need of forty bags of fertilizer, giving five bags each, eight out of nine gladly shipped us the fertilizer we need. I do not know that a single one of these people are members of our Church, but they gladly gave to help the fatherless ones. Will you who are members of our Christian Church come to my rescue so quickly and so gladly?

OBJECTIVES OF THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Here are some of the objectives of the Presbyterian Church for its new era movement:

Of Possessions:

Preached annually in 5,000 pulpits
Studied in 10,000 groups
Practiced by 1,000,000 members.

Of Life:

4,000 volunteers for the ministry
3,500 for other whole-time Christian work
Laymen enlisted and trained for Special Work.

A DAY OF CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP

This is certainly a day of Christian stewardship. We cannot live apart—we have found that out long ago. We are our brother's keeper, and we are His trustee. God has given all to use and devote to the progress of His Kingdom—and that means to make all things and peoples better. We cannot live alone. We cannot die alone. A new day it is for many of us, and yet the things we are being taught to do are not new. We have been educated to them, and just now coming into a full sense and appreciation of our privilege and duty. We possess; we do not own. God is the owner of all; we are His trustees—His stewards. What will our accounting be?

Note your label and if your subscription has expired, or is soon to expire, renew promptly.

GOOD-NIGHT, MOTHER

Good-night, mother, close your eyes,
 Sleep the sleep deserving;
 Finished now life's fabric lies,
 Gone the hours of serving.
 Good-night, mother, though you sleep
 Love shall not forsake you;
 We, who watch alone, shall weep,
 But we would not wake you.

Good-night, mother, it is night
 To the hearts that love you,
 But the day eternal's light
 Marks the patch above you.
 Good-night, mother, in the dawn,
 Now the sky adorning,
 Angel voices beckon on,
 Singing, "Soul, good-morning!"

CHILDREN'S SERMON

"And He arose, and rebuked the wind, and said unto the sea, Peace, be still."

"Oh, look! Look at the wind coming through the tree tops!" cried Mary, "and the Lake is all fizzing up like soda water!"

"Yes," said her father, as he quietly cast in his line again, drawing it gently over the surface of the water which a few moments before was as smooth as glass but was now covered with "fizzing" wrinkles and tiny tossing waves. "Yes, the winds come up very quickly on the lakes. See! the Storm King is chasing the sun under that big, black cloud and the white, fleecy clouds are running before him in dismay. But old Mr. Sun will win out in the end today, for the wind is due west, little daughter Mary, so we will fish on and, unless I am very much mistaken, will soon have some nice trout for dinner."

"But I don't like it out here on the water when the sun doesn't shine. Let's go in. It's cold and the water looks awful cross," said little daughter Mary anxiously. "Why, it's as black as black can be right there under the trees!" and she snuggled up close to her father, who laughed, as he put his free arm around her, saying:

"Why, little daughter Mary, the sun is there just the same even if you can't see it, and if you are cold put on your jacket, and see!" Here he stopped suddenly, drawing his arm away and beginning to reel in swiftly.

"Oh! You've got one! You've got one!" cried little daughter Mary, forgetting the wind and the clouds and the gathering shadows. "Oh, pull it in quick!"

"Not too quick," said her father, playing the fish skillfully, "or we will lose him. There—there he comes," and he leaned over with the short-handled net and scooped a shining speckled trout into the boat.

When it was safely landed Mary gave a sigh of content, and said:

"Now we'll have one fish anyway for Mumsey's dinner, and she does like them so well. And see! the sun is shining! Oh, how lovely the trees and water are now with golden crinkles and smiles all over, and the water is clear blue, just like the sky!"

"Yes, little daughter Mary," said her father, as he cast out his line again, "the water is clear blue like the sky and the trees are green and the air is warm and soft, but don't forget, little daughter Mary, that it is the same woods, the same water and the same sky that you didn't like a few moments ago. If we had gone in because old Mr. Storm King covered up the sunshine for a few minutes we wouldn't have had the fish for Mumsey's dinner. The world is just like that, little daughter Mary. When the sun shines we are apt to be happy and gay, but the minute the wind springs up, or things don't go just as we want them, we wrap ourselves up and growl and say: "Oh, I can't stand this at all!" forgetting that the sunshine of God's love is always shining on us in dark and stormy weather just as on the bright days, up there beyond the clouds, and that we can forget the cold and the darkness if we keep right on doing just as we would if the clouds had not gathered; and sometimes the best things come to us in the shadows, like the fish for Mumsey's dinner. Do you know what I mean?"

"Yes," said little daughter Mary softly, as she paddled her hands in the water over the side of the boat. "It's like Jesus saying 'Peace be still' when the storm arose—isn't it? I s'pose if our hearts were peaceful it would seem just as if the sun was shining, even if it wasn't, wouldn't it?"

"You are right, little daughter Mary. The world is very often like the lake—smooth and calm and beautiful to us until the wind rises and the Storm King of discontent and selfishness drives away the sunshine from our hearts; and only when we look up past the clouds into the sunshine of God's love and hear His gentle 'Peace be still' will we feel again content and happy. Never mind the old Storm King, little daughter Mary. He will come often into your life and mine, but remember the same sun is shining behind the clouds summer and winter; in bright days and dark days, and if you listen closely you will hear in your own heart 'Peace be still' and you will have no fear—only joy and gladness always.—By J. C. B., in Christian Work.

HELP SOMEBODY TODAY

Some years ago there was a robust, fine looking preacher who then appeared to be in good health. He seemed to be useful and popular. A few years later he moved to a state adjoining this, having practically retired from the active work of the ministry—but was useful, now and then, as opportunity offered. He fully realized that he was in the sunset hours of his life, and that the long and eventful journey was nearly finished. His wife and other loved ones had long before passed over the way before him leaving him lonely and partly in destitution. So he had to live single-handed and alone the later part of his earthly pilgrimage. Then disease intruded itself upon his once manly form and took from his the picturesque splendor which but a few years before adorned his manhood. He lingered for a few years trying to regain his health. While in this sick, sad, lonely condition, he wrote several short letters to his church paper telling its readers of his affliction and needs. He wanted to get medicine to heal his disease, but from what I saw through his letters but a very few responded. It is practicable to think, that the churches he had tried to serve so faithfully, would have acted at once, in his imminent condition, but so many of his former members put it off—forgot it, neglected it, and lost the last opportunity of helping him. Just a few visits, just a few kind, sympathetic words, just a few noble acts of liberality would have cheered his heart, and been a helpful blessing to the givers and to the receiver.

O, let us try to help some one before it is forever too late! Neglected opportunities, lost opportunities never to return. They have been all about us waiting to be used. "As we have opportunity let us do good toward men."

I have been sorry many times that I did not try to help this preacher about whom I have been writing—but did not; waiting for some one nearer him, and for some one more able to help him. Some sweet, kind, thoughtful, comforting, encouraging, tender loving words from his brethren in the ministry might have helped him; some short prayerful, helpful visit from them would have cheered him before he took that walk through the valley just a little way before him.

I do not remember that any one of them responded to his helpless call. A very short time after that his church paper stated "Rev, D. D. is dead."

Then another preacher was known who was not so old as the one mentioned above; he did not emit as many sparks from the anvil of thought as a great trio of brilliants could have sparkled, but he was a very good thinker and talker. He too, had an affliction which kept him from preaching. But he wanted to be useful in trying to help others, and he published a little book which he was trying to sell, as he had but a small income; he was anxious to help himself without being on the charity list. He travelled mainly among the people he knew and to whom he preached in other years. He sold many copies. Some bought them through sympathy for him in his affliction, and for that reason alone helped him. He sold without molestation or objection from any one until he went to a certain town in which there lived a minister of the same denomination to which he belonged, who approached him, and said frankly: "I rather you would not sell your books among and to the members of my church, as they have money to raise for our Conference funds, education and missions, etc." That appeared to me like a very little request from one of the followers of Jesus. Help some one today.

Nor would I forget to mention John Bunyan, the immortalized writer of that splendid Christian allegory named "Pilgrim's Progress." In Bedford jail he wrote it under the most trying and adverse conditions. Put in prison, stoned, beaten for preaching the Gospel. In his day, ministers had a hard time. Today they have a good, easy time, telling people how to live, and how to slay the lions that prowl in the way. Yes, an easy time comparatively, and especially so when they are filled with the abundant life which freely gives light and liberty.

When Bunyan got out of jail he published his book, and went about selling it with some degree of success. One day he met one of those smart fellows, we sometimes see, and this man said to Bunyan: "Who are you any way? Are you a run-away, a peddler or a tinker?" Bunyan replied with this suitable and brilliant repartee: "I am all three, sir. I have run away from the devil, I am peddling upon a book I have written, and I am tinkering down upon sinners."

Many a poor, tired one struggling on the road to success, has failed in his life work, partly because he did not receive the proper encouragement. Some people like the eagle rise above the clouds of opposition, the lightning flashes vividly about them until it explodes with terrific thunder, but they soar above it in the great realm of industry. A few are like the kite which rises only above a headwind; while there are others not so brave. They are timid, and need gentle words of encouragement. They are the ones we ought to help catch up. Help form the circle and circuit by taking hold of the weak ones with willing hands, until the current of human kindness touches and thrills each heart. O, for thousands of willing ones to make millions of happy souls today!

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR OCTOBER 19, 1919

Jesus in Peter's Home.—Mark 1:29-39.

Golden Text: Jesus said unto him, Today is salvation, come to this house.—Luke 19:9.

Beginning with the Primary Topic, "Things to do on Sunday;" the Junior, "A Sabbath Day in the Life of Jesus, through the Intermediate;" "Ways of Spending Sunday" and up to the Adult Topic, "Christ in the Home," this is a most helpful lesson, rich in great spiritual truths. When Jesus comes into the home, then indeed, is salvation come to that house. But first of all, He went to His father's house as his custom was. What an answer to all the cavillers who do not go to church, because they don't like the preacher, who stay away from Sunday school, because the Superintendent is no good, or the teacher is so poor. Who refuse to work with the church because there are hypocrites in it. No hypocrite today can be greater than were the Pharisees; no preacher more ignorant than the priests who refused to listen to Jesus; no man surely needs the teaching of God's word less than He who was the Word. Yet Jesus made a habit of going to church. And He went home with those who were at church with Him.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 19, 1919

Our Pledge and How to Keep It.
—Exodus 19:1-8.

A pledge is a token or a surety of our willingness to do a thing. Aside from this lesson, the Old Testament presents three other passages concerning a pledge, and in each case they refer to a pledge made as a token of willingness to obey a command or an entreaty. You will find the passages in Gen. 38:17-20; Ex. 22:26; Dent. 24:10-13. In the passage from which our lesson is taken, there are two pledges and each are promises. The first is made by the Lord Himself, and the second is made by Israel.

In verse 5, God pledges to make Israel a "peculiar treasure" unto Himself, on condition that Israel keep her Covenant. Follow the work covenant and you will find back of it another covenant God had made to the same people. He had promised to make them a great people, and the pledge was based on the fact that Israel must meet conditions. So are His pledges to us. The second pledge is made by the people. "All that the Lord hath spoken will we do." Verse 8., and this was a great pledge. It was made under the fifth dispensation of law, and extended from Sinai to Cavalry. Israel smashed pledges, broke laws, sinned and committed crime while in the wilderness, but through God's pledge to them we may look far into the future and there see the Cross. He had the future of His people in mind, and kept his pledge.

Our Christian Endeavor pledge is more than great. It has stood the test of 38 years without the change of one single phrase. It is a promise made to Christ, and that on condition that He gives strength to keep it. No one has a right to break that pledge until Christ breaks His. He has pledged Himself to "hear our petitions—give when we ask of Him in faith, to keep us from temptation and to go with us always, even unto the end of the world," and in this meeting each Christian Endeavorer should resolve never to violate one part of the pledge until Christ breaks His. Keep your pledge card in your bedroom, and your pledge in your heart. Memorize every word of it, and then take up the card as a gentle reminder. Remember, making the pledge is nothing, unless we keep it. Strive to get every member to live closer to the pledge, and those who have not done so to sign one, for it's better to try and fail than never to try at all.

Suggestions For The Meeting

Have a memory meeting. Ask every member one week ahead to memorize the pledge. Divide your Society into two equal parts, and see which side has the greatest number who have memorized the pledge and will speak on some part of it. Have a testimony meeting, giving any member who will an opportunity to speak two minutes, telling what the keeping of the pledge has meant to his or her life. Select hymns that contain some pledge to Christ and the Church, such as "If Jesus Goes With Me I'll Go." Write out the pledge on the blackboard, and discuss it by phrases, asking a separate member to discuss each phrase. Ask your pastor to speak five minutes on the pledge, and if he will to give the evening hour to a special sermon on the value of a pledge. Close with a prayer by your president for strength to keep the whole pledge.

HOW CAN WE TEACH THE GRADED LESSON IN A ONE-ROOM SCHOOL?

This has been the greatest objection we have had to meet in regard to the Graded Lessons. So many of us have only one room in our schools, and we feel we can have only one program. The school is not large enough to divide, and how can we arrange it? If we must all be together for the opening exercises, and the closing exercises, as we must, in a one-room school, why not plan such a program that it shall be of interest to all? As I have pointed out, even if you are using the Uniform Lesson, all the children are not reading the same text, nor learning the same Golden Text. Why not dispense with the reading of the lesson in concert and replace it a Bible drill, or endeavor to have the pupils bring their Bibles with them, such as can read, then use one of the devotional Psalms? But for the class period, Can you not plan curtains which shall divide the classes? They are not so very expensive; they need not touch either ceiling or floor; if they are three feet above the tops of the benches, and six inches below the top, that is sufficient. You would be surprised how much sound they break. And, too, most of us hear a great deal with our eyes. That is, if we do not see the speaker, or the noise maker, it does not trouble us nearly so much. A curtain which breaks our view protects our ears as well. Back of these curtains the Graded Lessons can be taught, almost as well as in a special room.

CAN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TAKE THE PLACE OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR?

Now and then we find men and women who think the church is organized to death, and that we need to adjust matters by cutting out something. Naturally, the first thing to cut out is the young people's work of the church, and the result of the operation is a dead church. This spirit exists more or less in every denomination; and those who have tried it out, say they find absolutely no substitute for Christian Endeavor work in the church. The Sunday school is the mobilization station of the church, and is doing a most wonderful work along this line, as seen from the fact that 96 per cent of the church members come through the school. And Mr. Lawrence says the only regrettable thing about it is that 50 per cent of the Sunday school never joins any church. What a great work can be done in reaching those who never join the church anywhere! After considering the inefficient side of the school, we are tempted to ask the question, What would the church be without the great influence of the school? No doubt many of them would be very weak. Too much stress cannot be laid on the efficient Sunday school work.

But the Sunday school with all its organized classes, clubs and departments can never take the place of the Christian Endeavor. Why? Because Christian Endeavor is the training station of the church. Here, the boys and girls learn to express themselves, and to put into practice things learned in the Sunday school and church services. Dr. John R. Mott tells us that 98 per cent of all life work recruits come from the Young People's Societies of the church. And still, our own beloved Zion cannot supply her pulpits on any Sunday. The thing we need is to train men and women for this work, and the Christian Endeavor Society is the place to do it. I know God calls men to the Gospel ministry, but listen! Jesus said, "Pray the Lord of the harvest that he will send laborers into his vineyard." But how can we pray for a thing we are not willing to take off our coats and help answer? It is foolish. We cannot place the young people in the ministry, mission fields and so on, but we can train them in the societies and work of the church so they will have a mind to do that kind of work, and when we do so God will take care of the rest.

The one great outstanding need in the Christian Church, is more ministers, and mission workers. How are we to get them? Here is the way: Organize a training school in your church—go into the Sunday school and get the raw material, and train the boys and girls for service in the Kingdom, and within the next few years, you will see the answer to your prayer and our work will go forward.

J. VINCENT KNIGHT.

FROM THE STATE QUIET HOUR SUPERINTENDENT

In a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN I read a letter written by our State President, Rev. J. V. Knight. He was wondering why there was not a Christian Endeavor Society in every church of our denomination.

The writer knows of one instance where a Christian Endeavor Society was organized, flourished for a while, and soon failed to exist. Why? Because they failed to operate this Christian Endeavor Society on Christian Endeavor lines.

This Christian Endeavor Society was organized and failed in one of the leading churches of our denomination. All they needed was the right kind of leadership. They needed to plan the work, and then work the plan.

Now just a few lines to those of our denomination who are engaged in Christian Endeavor work. Every Christian Endeavor Society has its own problems to solve. Every Christian Endeavor Society at some time seems almost a failure. The question is what are you doing to better the work?

The trouble in nearly every Society is lack of knowledge on the topics which we study. The secret of successful prayer-meeting lies in having every member, or a large majority, comrades of the Quiet Hour.

A comrade of the Quiet Hour is a person who has signed the Quiet Hour pledge, agreeing to read his Bible every day, and to engage in prayer every day. The best time to engage in the Quiet Hour is early in the morning while our minds are fresh.

Now, let us all get busy. If we have not brought this important part of the Christian Endeavor work before our Society, let us do so at once. Then watch your Christian Endeavor Society grow. Kind reader, I will now appoint you as the one to see that this important matter is brought before your Society.

I wish to ask that the Secretary of each Christian Endeavor Society report to me at an early date just what has been done on this subject. If you have the Quiet Hour Covenant in your Christian Endeavor Society, please let me know just how many members you have, both in the Society and in the Quiet Hour Covenant.

OBITUARIES

A MEMORIAL—REV. L. I. COX

God in His infinite wisdom has taken from us one of the best and most dearly loved ministers of our Church, Rev. L. I. Cox, and has transplanted him near His throne in that beautiful home where joy, peace, and happiness forever reign.

Amid sorrows he was a cheerful associate, ever bringing joy and gladness to those with whom he came in contact. He was a welcome visitor into the homes of his members, always carrying a beam of sunshine to those who dearly loved him.

His interest in the church and the work of the Kingdom was done with zeal and happiness, bearing the burdens which often weighed heavily upon him with a strong and determined will.

Therefore, New Lebanon church, which Brother Cox built and has served as a faithful and consecrated pastor since its organization, would express its love and adoration in the following resolutions:

First. That in our beloved pastor God has given us a noble example of a self-sacrificing man, a patient worker, an inspiring companion and a loyal servant of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Second. That we bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father's will, Who doeth all things well. We thank God for the privilege of having such a true, consecrated man as our pastor for twenty-three years, and pray that God may raise up some man worthy to carry on the work so nobly begun.

Third. That to the bereaved family we extend our sincere sympathy and commend them to the work of God, and the divine guardian of the Holy Spirit for comfort and cheer in this sad hour.

Fourth. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be recorded on our Church record, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

"IN ESSENTIALS UNITY, IN NON-ESSENTIALS LIBERTY, IN ALL THINGS CHARITY"

What Harvest?

(President W. H. P. Faunce)

GREAT changes are coming either through the Church or in spite of it. We live in a moving world, and Christian men are not afraid to have it move. Either by the orderly processes of growth, by the give-and-take of reasonable men, by negotiation and concession in the presence of a common need or else by volcanic eruption and upheaval, changes must come. Alas for those—whether demagogues or Bourbons—who cry "Peace, peace!" while they sow the dragon's teeth and ignore the sure crop of armed men. America has no sympathy with anarchy. Revolution is foreign to our temperament and not to be endured in a free land which floats the stars and stripes. But we must not imagine either that the "old time religion" is good enough or that the social status quo is the kingdom of heaven. The things that are wrong have got to be righted by Christian men or they will be righted by anti-Christian forces. The open mind must come before the helping hand.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

FOR THE GLORY OF GOD

Among the new impulses that has, and will, come out of the shell-torn world is a revival of that impulse and injunction that we should do "all to the glory of God." In some way too many followers of Christ have gone through life making the Christian life a side issue. Too long, and too often, have we thought of our Father's business as something aside from our usual business, occupation or profession.

We are stewards of time, of conduct, and of possessions. Our business is our Father's business. On this same thought we find the following in The Christian Work from the pen of T. Rhondda Williams:

"Religion is not something to be practiced on a sidewalk in the twilight hours, or on the seventh day, but on the main lines of life in the morning's activities, and in the strenuous labor of the afternoon. Justice and the spirit of common service must consecrate to God the mind and the factory, the merchant's desk and the carpenter's bench, or religion is not doing its work. It is with these ideals that the Father himself ever works to inspire His children and stands ever ready to help us all in the great achievement."

REPEATING—THAT'S ALL

The Conferences are now meeting. They have questions before them of vital interest. Will they rise to the situation and meet them? Will the leaders have vision—divine vision—and stand for its interpretation? Will the reports and resolutions be duplicates or copies of which have already been offered? Last year we read the "copy" and proof on the Christian Annual in a comparative way and found many reports as rehearsals of the Annual the year before. Some were almost word for word. Shall we keep repeating? That may be the way to get the things done—just keep on repeating. Here is the point: Let us first decide to do a thing, find out if we can do it, and then do it if we agree to. Let us repeat our work and not our resolutions.

CHRISTIAN UNION NUMBER

The Herald of Gospel Liberty last week came out as "A Christian Union Number." Dr. F. H. Peters contributed on "Christian Union and Conservation;" Rev. P. S. Sailer wrote on "Community Demands for Union;" President Harper addressed the Church on "Dangers to be Avoided;" Dr. E. B. Bagley (Disciple) and Dr. J. F. Burnett (Christian) spoke on "What Really Can Be Done," while Editor Kerr contributed on "The Disciples and the Christians." We glean the following excerpts from Brother Kerr's pen:

"The Disciple Church and the Christian Church have placed themselves on a pedestal among the other denominations long enough, and been all too free to assume to themselves a peculiar virtue above these others in the desire for union and in the freedom from guilt in the matter of sectarian division. It is time now that they be brought into the court of the world and be made to show cause why they themselves are identical in profession and separate in existence, and be given to understand that they must either live up to their profession or become silent about it. The rest of the world grows tired of hearing the Disciples and the Christians say so much about union, and they want to know now whether these Churches have in fact any more spirit and desire for union than do the Presbyterians and the Congregationalists and the rest of them. * * *

"The Disciples and the Christians can not be fair to the rest of the Church nor fair to themselves if they longer evade that question. Either there is no forgivable reason in such a day as this for them to be apart, or else they are not sincere and genuine in their basic professions. Which is it?

"They both profess to take the Bible as their only creed. It is their only written one. But there are those in both Churches who hold unwritten ones by which they individually try their fellow Christians for heresy as much as ever was done in the creed churches—with the added injustice of not giving the accused a public hearing and a fair trial.

"They both profess to grant the right of individual interpretation; and yet there are those in both Churches who insist on immersion for baptism, no difference how the candidate believes about his Scripture and his God —and the Methodists and others are far more true to the principle of individual interpretation on the matter of water baptism than are the majority of the Disciples and many of the Christians.

"They both profess to have the union of all of the followers of Christ as their mission and their all-absorbing purpose—and yet there are thousands of both Churches that would rather see one of their own Churches dwindle away and die and its membership become un-Churched and un-Christian, than to see it unite with some other Church for the sake of the Kingdom in that community. * * *

"They both profess to have no other leader but Christ. But we wonder if we have not deceived ourselves in this, and if the spirit of other men have not dominated us far more than has the spirit of Christ.

"It is a day of terrible testing and crises in the life of the Church as well as in world affairs. Above everything it demands of every organization and association of men that make any pretense to being moral—let alone Christian—and that presume to offer themselves for leadership, that they be both genuine and sincere, and that they be in heart and purpose what they profess to the world that they are. It is a demand that can not be longer evaded. It is a demand that is stripping every denomination bare to the soul of it—and many of them already stand humbled and ashamed. The Disciples and the Christians can be no exception. They, too, must lay bare their soul to the light of this day. Their own young people demand it, their missionary and forward movement forces demand it, the world demands it, and the Church of Jesus Christ demands it. For either one or both of these Churches which stand on identical professions are deceiving themselves, or they are trying to deceive the rest of the Church and the world—in that they are not genuine and true to the position and the aspiration which they profess; or else there is no forgivable excuse in such a day as this for them to be two instead of one."

WHAT ABOUT THE CONFERENCE YEAR?

We called attention a few weeks ago to the matter of having a definite time for the churches in each Conference to close their work for the year. We would be pleased to have the Conferences take up this matter and at least find out how far apart the different Churches are on the matter of closing their reports for Conference. Why not have a definite date? How many ministerial reports, Brother Conference Secretary, are dated same? Is the suggestion worth while?

WAR RISK INSURANCE

The Bureau of War Risk Insurance wishes to emphasize the importance to service men of one of the provisions of the War Risk Insurance Act upon the fulfillment of which may depend the validity of their claim to compensation under the Act.

The War Risk Insurance Act provides that "No Compensation shall be payable for death or disability which does not occur prior to or within one year after discharge or resignation from the service, except that where, after a medical examination made pursuant to regulations, at the time of discharge or resignation from the service, or within such reasonable time thereafter, not exceeding one year, as may be allowed by regulations, a certificate has been obtained from the director to the effect that the injured person at the time of his discharge or resignation was suffering from injury likely to result in death or disability."

Many discharged men are not familiar with or are inclined to disregard this provision of law and are allowing their rights thereunder to lapse.

Request for the certificate mentioned above should be made to the Chief Medical Advisor, Bureau of War Risk Insurance, Washington, D. C.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

HAPPY HOME

This year it has been my privilege and pleasure to serve Happy Home Christian church on the third Sunday of each month. I find the people of this congregation appreciative of their pastor, true to their Church and loyal to their God. The third Sunday in August we began revival services and continued until the following Thursday. Good interest was shown from beginning to end. We had conversions in nearly every service. On the closing day of the meeting we had quite a large number of conversions and recommitments. During the meeting there were possibly 25 or 30 who professed faith in Christ and resolved to live a better life. It was considered by many who were there as being a most wonderful revival. Eleven united with the church at the close. These were baptized at our last appointment. The church at present is in splendid working condition. The ladies have raised enough money to purchase an individual Communion set, and it has already arrived.

Recently the members and friends of this church have very kindly and substantially remembered their pastor. It was Saturday before the fourth Sunday in September when Brother J. H. Richmond and one other of the members came to my home with a Ford car loaded with good things to eat, such as the country people have. After the car was unloaded Mrs. Wells and I were eager to see what was left us, and we found a crate of chickens, flour, sugar, potatoes of both kinds, apples, pears, onions, money, preserves of different kinds, canned peaches, canned cherries, and canned goods of other varieties, soap, pepper, butter and other articles of usefulness. It was an old fashion pounding, just like our Editor has been talking about. To each and every one who had a part in this bountiful supply, Mrs. Wells and the children join me in extending sincere thanks. Such expressions of appreciation like this bind the pastor and people closer together, and too it makes a pastor feel good to know that he is loved and appreciated. Not only is that true of a pastor, but it is true of every life.

DR. SUMMERBELL AT ELON

Dr. Martyn Summerbell delivered his annual course of lectures here October 6-8. The themes were: "The Dark Ages," "The Middle Age and Feudalism," "The Rise and Influence of Chivalry," "Peter Preaching the Crusade," "The First Crusade," and "Godfrey and the Kingdom of Jerusalem." In addition to these the Doctor preached from the college church pulpit Sunday, October 5, both morning and evening, and was attended with the usual interest and pleasure.

The lectures were characteristic of Dr. Summerbell—not popular lectures, but scholarly ones, representing patient and faithful research. They were a feast of good things to all real students and lovers of history.

Any one who had passed through volumes in search of these facts could but feel a debt of gratitude to the Doctor who had collected in brief space and in logical order these important truths of history. These lectures have a literary finish and would make a worthy contribution to the literature on the Middle Ages. We welcome Dr. Summerbell, not only for his scholarly messages, but also for his delightful fellowship, and look with pleasant anticipation to his return.

N. G. NEWMAN.

SUFFOLK LETTER

We returned Chaplains of the Christian Church here recently spoken for us in Suffolk. Rev. B. F. Block on Sunday evening, September 7, and Rev. Stanley C. Harrell on Sunday morning, September 21. Both of them spoke out of their hearts from experience in service overseas. Their addresses were interpretations of what they had seen and felt while in France. Their messages were as distinct as their own temperaments; in fact, that illustrates personality and the coloring that evidence receives in passing through human experience. Light is composed of seven colors and these colors are separated by passing through different mediums; so truth is broken up into parts as it passes through different lives. Religion itself is not the same in form in different lives. The many religious denominations are witnesses to this fact. No one denomination presents all of truth, but only certain phases of truth; and perhaps all of them do not present all of truth. The messages of these ministers were greatly enjoyed by the congregation and no less so by the pastor who is this scribe. We will all rejoice when these returned Chaplains are in place again, as pastors, weaving into pastoral service the larger and more real experiences of service among men in real battle for the liberty of mankind. No doubt they will put into their congregations the militant spirit against the wrongs of the world. Life to them and service to them are more serious since they have prayed with the wounded and buried the dead in a foreign land.

The Christian life is really a fight and Paul calls it "the good fight of faith." The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but spiritual; the battle is not for temporal power, but for eternal life. Much has been said about the ruthless Hun, much more might be said about sin. It seeks the innocents for its victims and crushes out all aspirations for good. Following in the victory of temperance over the saloon as an institution is an army of law-breakers who persist in making and trading in illicit intoxicants. That army can be conquered by winning them to Christ. Fines and imprisonment may check such violations, but nothing will end it but conversion to law-abiding citizens. To conquer evil and to produce the reign of righteousness is a "good faith." It takes the whole armor of God to equip a good soldier of Jesus Christ. "Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, having on the breast-plate of righteousness; your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; the shield of faith; the helmet of salvation; and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God; praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication with all saints." It is no small matter to equip an army to fight for the Kingdom of God; and no half-hearted service can win the battle and the Crown. Immorality parades with brazen effrontery in these days of prosperity, rides in automobiles, sits in the boxes at theaters, bathes in the surf on summer days, surfeits in luxuries and neglects God and the heroic in life. The fight for virtue and social purity is a great fight. Its first battle is within the domain of self; that once conquered, the individual Christian is ready to join in the fight for social purity and domestic peace. Religion is no mean business, no small matter; it is the greatest work of the world. To succeed here is to win a crown of life.

JOHN G. AND JOHN B.

Used to live side by side—John G. and John B.—fifty years later they are separated by an impassible gulf.

John G. rides to his office in a 1919 model auto that purrs softly through the streets. John B. rides to the factory on a rattling 1908 bicycle while John G. is still asleep. When John G. takes a trip, his secretary lays his ticket and drawing room reservation in front of him along with a reply wire from the best hotel. When John B. goes on an outing he fights his way up the gang plank of a crowded excursion steamer, a baby on one arm and a lunch basket on the other. John G.'s son is at college and John B.'s son has been in the shop since he was fourteen. A wide gap? Yes. Yet they started at the little red school house with the odds in favor of John B. He used to spell John G. down and help him with his sums.

The neighbors said then that John B. would be president yet. And John B., always expecting to strike it rich put nothing by for the future. He never made that lucky strike. John G. was plodding but kept moving up the line. Part of his hard earned money was always put where it would earn more money. And finally the day came when he bought a partnership in the business. He still keeps his dollars working for him but now at sixty his income is sure whether he works or not.

Where will you be at sixty? Today is the time to find out. Can you keep a dollar? Have you the backbone to take the price of a Thrift or a War Savings Stamp out of your pay envelope according to its size? If you have there will be no lean years. If you can't save, make up your mind right now to the bitterness of a penniless old age. You don't have to guess about it, nothing added to nothing makes nothing.

Mrs. W. J. Fleming—We wait eagerly for THE SUN each week.

Occupation of Fiume by Italian regular troops is suggested by the Italian council of ministers, pending a decision by the peace conference as to the disposition of the city.

DANVILLE, VIRGINIA

I am serving this church the last three months of the year, filling the unexpired term of Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, who is at Yale University. I was here the first Sunday and the congregation at the evening service was large. After service we held a call meeting and elected delegates to Conference. In less than twenty-five minutes the Conference apportionments and several dollars over were raised. This little church has a few faithful workers.

These people are without a pastor for the coming year. I hope and pray that God will give them the pastor that they need. They have a fine Sunday school and it keeps more money in its treasury than any school that I know of, especially when we consider its financial and numerical strength. God bless this little band of workers.

P. T. KLAPP.

MOORE UNION

The writer is serving this church again this year. I intended to have taken this year off but after an urgent request, consented to serve another year. Looking at this church from my view point its condition is encouraging. First, because they have had a great revival; secondly, because they received a number into church membership; thirdly, they have money on hand for Conference apportionments and their delegates to Conference have been elected. Deacon J. W. Lett has had the church painted inside. The outside was painted just after the house was finished. The pastor's salary is almost paid in full and has been increased to almost double the former salary. The church pledged more for endowment fund for Elon College than it was asked to give.

God bless this church and to Him be all the praise for what has been done.

THE RED CROSS AT CORPUS CHRISTI

By Walter R. Brooks

When Corpus Christi, the big seaside resort on the Gulf, was wiped off the map of Texas last month by a terrific hurricane and flood, the American Red Cross at once mobilized all its resources for disaster relief and brought them to bear on the chaotic conditions left in the wake of the storm.

For twenty hours a furious gale blew from the north, driving a ten foot tidal wave in across the low beaches to the heart of the city. The heavy surf pounded the hotels and cottages on the beach front and filled the streets of the business section with debris. During a lull in the storm the Corpus Christi Chapter of the Red Cross organized a committee and extended aid with what facilities were at hand to those who had escaped from their threatened homes and come up into the town. There was no gas, no electricity, no drinking water. Communication with the outside world was completely broken. Conditions, when the tornado had finally blown itself out and it was possible to ascertain them, were found to be frightful. Virtually every frame building on the beach front was battered to pieces, and Neuces Bay was dotted with wreckage and the bodies of those who had been washed out by the waves. The work of recruiting those who were still alive was being carried on by the few boats that were left undamaged. Five hundred people had lost their lives, 4,000 were left homeless, and it is now estimated that the property damage will run well up to $20,000,000.

Meanwhile, the whole machinery of the Red Cross has been set in motion. The manager of the Southwestern Division wired the Governor of Texas, placing his entire facilities at the disposal of the flood victims. The Director of Civilian Relief in St. Louis was ordered to the scene, and workers at Laredo and San Antonio received telegraphic instructions to accompany relief trains being made up at these points. Before wire communication with the outside was re-established these trains loaded with food, clothing and medical stores, pulled in to Corpus Christi, and the Red Cross workers flung themselves immediately into the task of dispensing relief. Headquarters were established in the Presbyterian church, which had remained undamaged, and within a few hours the three canteens were feeding 4,000 people at each meal.

At Galveston the Red Cross obtained permission from the federal authorities to charter a government vessel, which lay loaded with a hundred tons of supplies, and steamed off to the relief of several small towns, completely cut off from the mainland by the high water and the lack of boats. In co-operation with army officers, the Red Cross shipped 25 cases of clothing from Galveston, and from Houston and San Antonio and St. Louis help came pouring in.

Within a few days trains carrying refugees began to arrive in San Antonio. Red Cross workers met them at the station and served them with coffee, sandwiches and pie. Three hundred homeless Mexicans who came in on one train were housed in the nearby barracks of Camp Travis.

All Red Cross activities are being directed from St. Louis, the headquarters of the Southwestern Division, whose chapter has donated $5,000 for relief. A general committee has been formed of state and Red Cross officials, and the Director in charge of the flood swept district has completed a survey of the damage and of the most effective scheme for rehabilitation.

The story of this terrible disaster and the prompt relief which a fully organized and existing Red Cross personnel were able to concentrate immediately on a small coast town, bringing order out of chaos and saving many lives and incalculable suffering, emphasizes the importance of the work which the Red Cross has to carry on, in peace as well as in war. The desire for service, the spirit of sympathy, the sense of human brotherhood are still alive in the world. But the world is so big; they so often miss their goal. It is the aim of the Red Cross to organize these sentiments so that they may be practically effective—to bring them together, concentrate and focus them on a practical object. The campaign which the Red Cross has recently announced against preventable disease, for better public health condition, and for prompt and efficient service in just such disasters as this at Corpus Christi, needs and deserves the support of every loyal-American who believes in extending the hand of fellowship to those who are in misery or want throughout the world.

Mrs. A. A. Terrell—I have been taking THE SUN for years; it wouldn't be home without it.

Germany is asking the United States for a loan amounting to 15,000,000 marks.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. N. G. Newman and Miss Besie Holt are this week in the far South attending the Conferences in that section.

NOTES

Rev. H. Shelton Smith is now located in Fairfield, Conn., where he is assistant pastor to Rev. F. S. Child. Brother Smith is also pursuing his studies in Yale.

We are very grateful for the continued interest that friends have in helping to increase THE SUN's circulation. New names are being added each week. Let the good work go on, kind friends.

Dr. Martyn Summerbell came over from Elon last week and gave us a pleasant call.

We are indebted to Brother W. A. McCauley of Union Ridge church for a half bushel of nice sweet potatoes. Brother McCauley is one of THE SUN's loyal friends.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Burlington church held a memorial service Monday afternoon in memory of Mrs. Joseph Fix.

Dr. F. G. Coffin changes his address from Albany, N. Y., to Albany, Mo. He becomes president of Palmer College.

Burlington is soon to have a daily paper. Editor Crowson of The Burlington News is soon to install machinery for the new periodical.

Delegates and visitors to the Eastern Virginia Conference will take note of Brother West's notice on another page and govern themselves accordingly.

Dr. D. A. Long preached for Pastor Eastes at Raleigh, N. C., last Sunday.

We were privileged on last Sunday to hear President Harper speak to the congregation of the Burlington M. E. church. His message was timely and the people were edified by hearing it.

We now have on hand Peloubet's Select Notes on the Sunday school lesson for 1920, also Tarbell's Guide. The price of each is $1.60 postpaid, or $1.50 when delivered at this office. Send your order now. We will be in position in a few days to supply Arnold's Notes, also Torrey's Gist of the Lesson.

Brother W. A. King, a member of the Suffolk, Virginia, church and a faithful subscriber and friend of THE SUN, passed to his reward on Sunday night, October 5. Dr. Staley will give a more complete account of Brother King's life and death next week.

Rev. D. F. Parsons changes his address from Chattanooga, Tenn., to Nashville, Tenn. He is at Vanderbilt University.

Rev. P. T. Klapp has three Sundays open for the coming year. Brother Klapp is a safe man and churches without a pastor will do well to write him. His address is Elon College, N. C.

Pleasant Grove and Ingram have formed a pastorate. Pleasant Grove is to pay $800.00 and Ingram $400.00. Brother J. G. Truitt continues to serve them and will give his entire time to the work.

We quote the following from The Sanford Express of October 10: "Evangelistic services will begin at the Christian Church next Sunday evening. Rev. B. F. Black, who has seen service overseas, will conduct the meeting."

We invite the attention of church officials and committees to the price list of offering envelopes shown on page 16 of this issue. Send your order early and avoid the fall rush. Remember that the work will have to be done after your order is received; also bear in mind that other orders may be ahead of yours. Work and satisfaction guaranteed.

On September 13, Miss Margaret E. Benson, a member of the People's Church, Dover, Delaware, and Rev. James H. Lightbourne of Indiana, were married. The ceremony was performed by Rev. A. Victor Lightbourne, brother of the groom. The bride is of a beautiful Christian character, a woman of fine executive ability and a splendid musician. Her husband saw service in France as a private and recently returned to this country and took up his ministerial labors. Congratulations and best wishes.

Brother W. L. Wells, Reidsville, N. C., writes under date of October 10: "We are in the midst of a revival meeting. Rev. R. F. Brown is doing the preaching."

Rev. J. V. Knight was called to his home in Alabama on October 7 due to the critical illness of his father.

Dr. J. P. Barrett, writing under date of October 9, gives us the following information worth recording, for which we thank him: "I see you made a mistake in your note naming THE SUN's editors. Major D. B. (not T.) Dunbar was never editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. He was for many years foreman and for a while wrote up local items for its local department. I came in as successor to Rev. J. T. Whitley. I was succeeded by W. T. Walker and then I succeeded Brother Walker in my second term. I mention this item as to Major Dunbar simply for the sake of accuracy in history of our work as a people."

The Burlington congregation is to worship in the new church the first Sunday in November.

The North Carolina Conference meets with the Burlington church November 11-14. Mr. J. P. Montgomery, Burlington, N. C., is Chairman of the Entertainment Committee whom delegates and visitors should notify.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

A PLEA FOR THE KINDERGARTEN

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR BUREAU OF EDUCATION

The great world war will be followed by years of agitation and change in which all institutions of government, including our own, will be tried and tested severely, is already evident from what is now taking place both in Europe and in America.

Intelligent democracy is the only protection against reaction toward autocracy on the one side and class rule, disintegration, and anarchy on the other.

Our American democracy, the hope of the world, demands universal education of the best type—education of all for freedom, initiative, self-restraint, co-operation, and obedience to law. In this education the kindergarten has a very important place. Its spirit is that of democracy, and tends toward freedom, initiative, self-restraint, co-operation, and obedience to law.

It is significant that the kindergarten did not receive governmental approval in Germany, because of this very fact of its spirit of democracy, and that Froebel looked to America for the attainment of his ideals in education.

For all our young children, both of native born and of foreign born parentage, and especially for the latter, kindergarten schools should be provided, either by public or by private support. Our millions of children of kindergarten age should no longer be deprived of the training which the kindergarten gives in industry, loyalty, patriotism, and the social, and industrial democracy.

I should like to urge all school officers and all citizens who are interested in the welfare of the people and in the permanency and fullest development of our democracy to use their influence for the establishment and maintenance of kindergartens for all children.

P. P. CLAXTON,
Commissioner of Education.

Washington, D. C.

THE JUVENILE COURT

By Roland F. Beasley, State Commissioner of Public Welfare.

The juvenile court is the means whereby it is found that dependent, neglected and delinquent children can best be saved from lives of failure and disaster and made to grow into useful and law-abiding citizens.

This is very good for the child; all will admit it. It is equally good for society. Paupers and criminals are liabilities to the taxpayers. Law-abiding citizens are an asset.

The juvenile court principle is now being applied all over the United States and in foreign countries. It is one of the great forward steps of the age, and the most important advance in court methods in many years. It can no more be checked than the public school. It is here to stay and to be improved.

The juvenile court can't save every child. But it has been proven that when the system is properly carried out it will save seventy-five per cent of them. That is more than worth the money.

It costs the taxpayers ten times more to capture, try, punish, and maintain an adult criminal than it does to save a juvenile delinquent.

All the children in North Carolina under sixteen years of age who are delinquent, neglected, or dependent, are under the jurisdiction of the juvenile court.

Every juvenile court has a probation officer whose business it is to investigate every case of such children, lay the facts before the judge, and then carry out the decision of the court. This is called probation work.

The court stands in the relation of parent to such children, and will discipline, guide and control them through probation, just as a wise father would.

The court may punish a child if it is necessary, but wayward children are more in need of wise guidance and just discipline and friendly help than of punishment.

The judge is the kind and wise father, the probation officer is the big brother of the boy who is about to be lost. Both are studying ways and means to make a man of him.

Do you believe in saving boys and girls whose parents let them go astray or who have no parents?

If you are a Christian, you certainly ought to pray for and encourage this work, for it is Christ's work.

If you are a good citizen you ought to help it, for you believe in having good citizens and not bad ones.

If you are a taxpayer you ought to stand by this work, because it is cheaper to save a boy than to maintain a lifelong law-breaker.

If you are a mother you ought to help, because every wayward child is a burden to some mother-heart.

If you are a man you ought to help, because this is a practical application of the brotherhood of man.

The juvenile court is really a part of the educational system. It carries opportunity to children who otherwise would not have it.

The juvenile court does not ask what can be done to a child, but what can be done for him . . . to make a man or a woman instead of a human wreck.

The people who do not believe in human wrecks have risen in their power and wiped out the whisky traffic. They are now preparing to wipe out the other influences that make wrecks of young and helpless children.

This is a job for God's noble men and women. Such men and women are putting their hands to the plough in every community in North Carolina. They are already tasting the joy that comes from it and have no desire to look back. If these words meet your eye, you are invited to come in with us.

Write for information and literature on child-saving to The State Board of Charities and Public Welfare, Raleigh, N. C., or to your own county superintendent of public welfare.

Mrs. S. F. Coghill—I like THE CHRISTIAN SUN fine and expect to take it on from time to time.

Let us have your renewal during this month.

MISSIONARY

DR. KENDALL GOES TO WASHINGTON

The following explains itself and will be read with deep interest:

"Ravena, N. Y., Oct. 8, 1919.

"Dear Brother Atkinson:

"I will, the Lord willing, begin our work in Washington, D. C. the first or second Sunday in November. I accept the call and terms of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention. I wish to say that I feel very heavily the burden of the task laid upon me and I am free to confess it is with many misgivings as to my fitness for the task that I take up the work, but as you brethren seem to feel that I am the one for this work I am willing, God helping me, to undertake it. I covet most earnestly your continued prayer for me that I may have the physical and spiritual strength needed for this work.

"Yours fraternally,
"A. B. Kendall."

I am sure our people everywhere will rejoice that we are at last taking steps to organize a church in our national capital, and that the Board was fortunate enough to secure Dr. Kendall to lead us in this important undertaking. The Lord willing we will organize and in due time build a church in Washington worthy of the great work and cause we represent.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Miss. Sec. S. C. C.

A PLEA FOR THE USE OF MORE MISSION LITERATURE

A simple definition of missions is "helping some one," therefore, cannot we, whose hearts are aglow with the spirit of missions, seek to lead others to see the vision of a world of need and opportunity which stirs our own souls? We can do this by living Christ, teaching Christ, and preaching Christ—all for one purpose to show the people the character and service of the blessed Master. He was always "helping some one" as He went about doing good. He came to seek and save all men of all nations, and it should be the purpose of our lives to obey His command to carry the blessed gospel to all lands and to all peoples. It is our duty to study how to carry this out most efficiently.

We wish to emphasize some of the goals in which our Woman's Boards have lined up with the Forward Movement. In the goal for Evangelism: (a) 100 new missionary societies; (b) 2,000 new members in the societies.

In order to accomplish this we must educate the people. How shall we go about it? By adopting and pushing forward the goal for Religious Education. (a) Get every society in the Southern Christian Convention to studying the Home and Foreign Mission study books each year. (b) To secure every member of every society as a subscriber to The Christian Missionary.

Some societies have already studied "The King's Highway" and "Western Women in Eastern Lands," "The Path of Labor" and "Women Workers of the Orient," and we know they will look forward with pleasure to the study of the new books, "A Crusade of Compassion" and "Christian Americanization."

The monthly programs in the magazine will be based on these two books. Please don't lose a treat by failing to get them. There are many bright, helpful leaflets published that do much good, so don't fail to scatter them.

The young people will also enjoy "Around the World With Jack and Janet," "Jack and Janet in the Philippines" and "Mook." "Everyland" is a fine little magazine for Juniors of S. C. C. We will be glad to furnish leaflets and workers supplies if you will let us know your needs.

If any societies do not have a literature superintendent please appoint one right away as I should like to meet with all those of the North Carolina Conference at Elon College, November 8. Also send me a literature report before that time if possible.

PERSONAL MENTION ABOUT MISSIONARIES

After considerable delay in the sailing of the vessel on which she had booked passage, Miss Martha Staey, living link missionary of the Burlington, N. C. Sunday school, sailed from Vancouver at midnight of September 29. We will next hear from her from Japan, as there are no stops by the way on that route.

When her ship reaches the one hundred and eightieth meridian she will drop a whole day out of her life in the process of "crossing the line." This will probably happen about October ninth. In all likelihood she will retire on Wednesday night, Oct. 8, and awake next morning and find it to be Friday morning, the tenth. But let us not be alarmed. She will only have been trying to catch up with the sun, which is twenty-four hours faster on the other side of that line than it is on this side, and when she returns to America a few years hence on her first furlough she will find that day patiently "hanging on the line" waiting for her, and she will pick it up again, retiring some night only to awake the next morning to find yesterday still awaiting to be lived over anew.

Dr. A. D. Woodworth and Mrs. Woodworth, who sailed for Japan, via Australia on September ninth, send back a delightful letter from Honolulu to say that God is good to them as they are out upon the great deep. They will probably have reached Australia before this is in print, and will spend a few weeks with their daughter there before finally turning their faces toward Japan. It is a life of triangular interests which they are living. America—the land of their birth, with a multiplicity of heart interests; Australia—holding all that is nearest to them in human relationship in the person of their only child and her family, including two wonderful grandchildren whom they are now to see for the first time. What a meeting that will be! And Japan—the land of their adoption because of its heart-rending need for the Gospel.

But regardless of the heart-tuggings of human relationships Dr. and Mrs. Woodworth have never wavered from their intense loyalty to the call of God for overseas service. There have come to them peculiar difficulties and a peculiar sadness in their devotion to their chosen work in life, but they have never wavered.

Soon we will have re-enforcements on the way to our Mission in Porto Rico. Times innumerable I have thought about Rev. and Mrs. Barrett, and the frequent intervals when they have been left without co-laborers from America. Others have gone and stayed a few years, only to be called away by the force of unavoidable circumstances, and each time one of these has faced homeward there has come stealing into the hearts of the Barretts an unutterable sense of loneliness and discouragement.

They have not told me so—they have not murmured—and I have never met them, but I know how they have felt at such times.

Our Japan Mission has met with a very great loss to its working personnel in the death of Miss Ren Hamaguchi, a most faithful and loyal Bible woman, who had been in the service of our Mission nearly thirty years. She was a woman of extraordinary faithfulness and devotion to her task. Rev. Kitano Takaya, pastor of our church in Sendai, Japan, says in a recent letter: "I do not know whether we can ever secure so good a Bible woman as she has been or not." She had the unquestioned love and respect of all who knew her.

IS OUR FAITH TOO LARGE?

One half million dollars for missions! Is that too much? The Mission Board, made up of as sensible, wise, faithful and loyal people—nine good men and one worthy, capable good woman—think that the sum is not too much to ask or expect of our people, if we want to come into our own, and see our dear Church go forward in the Kingdom's work. At first, two years ago, the goal was fixed at $50,000. Not long and it was seen that our aim was too low and the goal was set at $100,000. Not long after the discovery was made that we had underestimated the needs of our work and the ability of our people. The goal was set at $125,000. And now all of us know that such a sum is inadequate. And the Board has fixed our goal at half a million, including what has been pledged the past two years, to be pledged by 1922—within five years from the time the work was begun.

Brethren and beloved, shall we do this great and good thing? Is the burden of world-wide salvation on our hearts heavy enough to send us to our knees for this sum, a gift of God through His devoted and willing subjects in the Christian Church here in the South, and their friends? It is a matter of burden and of need. God has never denied a people a real need, when that need meant the enlargement of His Kingdom, and was in keeping with His will. The Mission Board at its recent session took the most forward-looking steps yet undertaken, and mapped out for us a program of great and good things. May our heavenly Father help us to feel the need and bring us to our knees for His cause.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S NOTES

Our little children were made happy on Saturday, October 4. The New Lebanon Sunday school, Rockingham county, N. C., came to see us on a picnic and brought dinner for all our children.

It was quite an undertaking for a Sunday school to prepare dinner for their picnic and sixty orphan children too, but those good ladies in that community know how to do things and they did a fine job too. The table was filled to the limit of its capacity and the children had a sumptuous dinner and enjoyed it very much.

We are always delighted to have the Sunday schools picnic here on our grounds. It is a delightful place, nice lawn, good water, and in case of rain, plenty of room in the building to shelter.

Don't forget that winter is close here and we have sixty children to clothe for the winter. Shoes to buy, clothes to buy. All necessaries to make them comfortable and happy. If you have had any experience lately in buying I presume that you well know that prices are high. If you have any shoes that you cannot use, and not worn too much, or any clothes too small for your children in good wearing condition, or any suits of clothes or dresses that you cannot use, put them in a bundle and ship to us. We can make use of them to good advantage. I know a great many people have garments that their children have outgrown and the garments in good wearing condition and perhaps shoes too small and are no use to the family. Send them to us by parcel post. Good second hand shoes will help us now while prices are so high.

Perhaps some of the Sunday school classes want to make a special contribution of this kind and want to buy new stuff for us. In that case we will be delighted.

If all will help a little it will make the work lighter. You have been real good to us in this work and have always come to our rescue.

Don't forget we want to build a home for the small children. How much do you want to invest in that home? Write to us for a subscription blank. We want YOU to have a part in it. It will make you more interested.

FROM THE COUSINS

Dear Uncle Charley: September days in Oklahoma make one think of autumn, even though it has not been cool enough for frost. Enclosed please find my dues for September and October. With lots of love for the little cousins.—Lester B. Frank.

We have had no frost, but have lots of dry weather. We cannot plough for the ground is so hard and dry. We hope to have rain soon.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: Am sending 25 cents for the orphans. Don't want you to pardon me for waiting so long. I wonder why we children don't write you often. Best wishes.—John B. Taylor.

I wish the little cousins would write often. Sometimes when we are kinder blue the little letters bring sunshine to us.—"Uncle Charley."

CHERRIES FOR THE BOY WHO RODE

Everybody worked on the farm where Roy Anderson lived. Roy himself brought in the kindling, gathered the eggs, and helped to feed the chickens and water the garden.

Now that it was cherry time Roy climbed far 'up in the big trees to pick the fruit that grew too high for heavier people to venture after. Of course every boy likes to climb trees; but lately Roy had got to thinking that he worked too hard, so he even grumbled about picking cherries.

This afternoon he had climbed to the top of the very tallest cherry tree on the place. Roy didn't admire the fine view or the thick clusters of luscious ripe cherries that hung all around him. He was watching a boy in a pony cart who was riding along the road.

"That boy doesn't have to pick cherries or do any other kind of work. I've seen him 'most a dozen times now," muttered the cross little cherry-picker. "He just rides and rides and rides anywhere he wants to in that cute brown pony cart with the jolly-looking black boy to drive for him. He can keep his hands clean."

Roy's own hands were brown and scratched and a little stiff now and dirty looking where they had clung to the rough bark of the cherry limbs.

"I say, Roy, can't you break off that long branch that hangs so full?" called his father. "I'd like to have you bring it down carefully and take it out to that boy in the pony cart. Stay and visit with him a while if you want to."

The jolly-looking black boy saw Roy coming and stopped the pony. He and the other boy both smiled and stared at that limb of great, black cherries.

"O, but those look good! I've seen you when you were away up in the tree. It must be great fun to pick cherries and climb about like that," said the little white boy. "My name is Donald, and this is Chester," he added.

Roy bowed shyly. "It is sort of fun to pick cherries, and they taste lots better when you eat them up in the tree. Don't you want to get out and go up there with me?"

"Yes, I want to," said Donald, with a funny, twisty smile. He jerked the dust robe from his knees, but he didn't start to climb out of the pony cart.

"Oh," was all that Roy could say, but he thought a great deal. It looked as if the queer steel box on one of those thin legs must hurt. Anyway, it didn't let a fellow climb trees or run or do any one of the dozens of things that Roy could do any minute.

"The rest of me's pretty much all right," spoke up the boy in the pony cart cheerfully. "I can do lots of things with my hands."

"That—that's good," said Roy. He couldn't make his voice sound very hearty, because even Donald's hands looked thin and weak beside his own sturdy brown fists. "You stop next time you come by, and I'll bring down another branch of cherries," he said slowly.

"Thank you, we will," promised Donald gayly. "Maybe I can stay and watch you for a while if we don't take such a long drive next time. We've been clear to the river today."

Roy hadn't been to the river for more than a month, but he felt no envy of the boy who had been there today. "He gets tired just from riding!" was what Roy thought as he clambered back to his tree-top.

That night Roy Anderson surprised his mother by something new that he put in his prayer. He said: "Dear God, I thank you for good hands and feet."

"That is a wise, true prayer, son," said his mother. "It is going to take a whole lifetime for you to learn how wonderful your hands and feet are. They ar four priceless gifts.—Sunday School Times.

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

IT IS YOURS

Not long ago I visited a fine home and a well kept farm. It was pleasing to see everything so carefully, conveniently and tastefully arranged. Gorgeous landscape views, a lovely, rich inviting valley, picturesque mountains, thrifty orchards of the best peaches and apples, all conspired to make a picture attractive and beautiful. Standing and looking at this scene with perfect delight, and perhaps with a great desire to own this home, the thought quickly and gladly came: This splendid home and all as far as can be seen, is mine. It cost me not a dollar and have no deed for it, but will when leaving here, carry it away in the mind, because it is mine. Having been impressed on the mind, it is mine, and it is there to stay. No one can prevent the possession, nor deprive the newly made owner this right of ownership. When stating this to the legal owner, he smiled and said: "You are welcome to it that way."

You don't have to buy the water, the air, and the sunshine which you use. If you had them to buy, they would cost you right much in this day when many things you have to purchase are expensive. They are all free. They are yours—all are yours. Then use freely and wisely these triple blessings, and you will be healthy, happy and strong. Use plenty of water for drinking and bathing—and use it freely for other purposes when needed, for it is yours. Don't be too stingy with it when it flows so freely from rivers and oceans, and gushes clear, sparkling and cold from the rocky glen. Come on all you thirsty ones, fatigued and worn out with the long journey, dip your cups into the water, drink and be refreshed. It is yours, and all are yours. The air, the air filled with life-breathing power. Inhale it; fill your lungs full, repeat the process often, over and over again. It will help your depressed feelings. It is free. It is yours.

The great park conservatories, and all the admirable scenery spread upon the screen of nature invites you to look, love, praise and adore Him who caused these things. Come on and in without money. Enjoy life. But use the world as not abusing it. It is yours. Given to you to study in—to learn in—to work in, and in which to prepare yourself for a more beautiful and enduring world where you can live in immortal youth, unhurt amid the war of elements, the wreck of matter and the crash of worlds. Use the means at your command—practice economy and industry, and live—live upon the great and wonderful things provided so wisely for your happiness.

Do not glory too much in men. Let there be enough of that kind of honor, namely, Christian courtesy, fellowship, friendship and love. These things ought to be cultivated more by many of us. Some great teachers of Christian ethics are deficient in their practice. "Let no man glory in men: for all things are yours; whether * * * the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours, and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's."

J. T. KITCHEN.

PROCRASTINATION

(V. May Dorman)

"Late, late, so late! and dark the night and chill!
Late, late, so late! but we can enter still.
Too late, too late! ye cannot enter now.
Have we not heard the Bridegroom is so sweet?
O, let us in, though late, to kiss his feet!
No, no; too late! ye cannot enter now."

—Tennyson.

"Time there was, but it is gone;
Time there may be—who can tell?
Time there is to act upon,
Help me, Lord, to use it well."

—Augustus J. C. Hare.

Man is born to die, but to see him live one would think he could wheedle Death, and like Tennyson's brook go on forever. He hears with complete indifference when spoken to, or with fixed, far-off attention. One wonders at his nonchalance and dullness and unresponsiveness of soul. But to him the peril is remote, and on he goes, hoping in the tomorrow which never comes.

Why is it that the soul hearing, seeing, and knowing is unheeding? Why it that reflecting on a lost Christ, a lost heaven, and the prospect of outer darkness, we hesitate and waver and wait? We hear over and again, until we can hear no longer. We see, but "film the eyes in dreams again" until we become "too blind to have desire to see." We comprehend, but scorn the inward meaning until there is no more power to comprehend. Without the power to hear; to see, or to know, there can be no desire, and without desire, there can be no final redemption. One when dying said, "What shall I do? I am lost; I see it well." Vision came again, but it came in the hour of death. And so it will come to us, a vision of truth seen too late. That we were forewarned with Truth, pure and simple, and forearmed with the means of prevention, leaves scant evidence in favor of our defense.

Let us not become so wholly absorbed in the present, as to invite or bring upon us, a severe letting alone.—
The Christian Witness.

The prohibition bill has been completed by Congress and is soon to be submitted to President Wilson for his signature.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR OCTOBER 26, 1919

(Mrs. Fred Bullock)

A Lesson in Trust. Matt. 14:22-23.

Golden Text: I believe; help thou mine unbelief. Mark 9:24.

This is a wonderful story of Ever-present Help. Jesus saw them struggling. He did not need any light of moon or stars. He who can see us from Heaven could surely see through a few miles of atmosphere. Jesus said, "Be of good cheer." What a homely, cheerful phrase! "Cheer up," we say. Notice how many times, and under how many different circumstances, Jesus said, "Cheer up" to His friends. Surely when we too strive in the midst of the sea with contrary winds, and no land in sight, He is not so far away from us, but that He can see us and help us; not so far, but if we listen we can hear His tender voice saying "Be of good cheer." See how quickly help came to failing Peter. "Immediately" Jesus stretched forth his hand. Many a failing faith has felt the immediate answer of the Master when he cried "Lord, save me." An old-time saint on a stormy voyage was tossed far out to sea. "There is no help; the way is closed," cried his despairing disciples, as the waves rose above them. "The way up is always open," answered the saint.

"No storm above our heads in wrath shall break,
And shut the heavenward path of love and prayer."

Ours is a ship on a voyage, not a ship in harbor; we are going "to the other side." When He is with us, no storm can destroy, no wave overwhelm, and we shall reach our harbor safe at last. "Our hope is not in the absence of danger, but in the presence of Christ."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR OCTOBER 26, 1919

(J. V. Knight)

Christianity and the Health of China. Luke 4:16-31.

China is the world's newest and largest republic. America has transported every commodity she has to this great republic—even her whisky and things detrimental to the good of her people. Now, we must face the task of transporting the Christian religion in large enough quantities to save the Chinese people.

The population of the Chinese Empire is 435,500,000 with an area of 4,277,170. Omitting India, you find more non-Christians here than in all the rest of the world. There are at present 4,225 missionaries on that Empire, which gives 103,767 people, and a parish of more than a thousand square miles to each missionary. Compare this with figures and facts in our own country. Have we given China a square deal? Remember that of every 4,000 Christians, 3,399 of them live on American soil.

Wherever sin is found disease and death follow. China is seriously ill, and verse 18 of this lesson furnishes her only hope. But she cannot reach this Physician. A reformation and civilization may bring health of body, but China has a sin-sick soul. Her only hope is in Christ, and how shall she be healed unless the Church for which Jesus died gives the gospel to her? One of her greatest needs is physicians and nurses who are Christians and know how to administer to all her ills of life. They are waiting by the pool; the water is troubled, and who shall place them in the healing streams before it is too late?

Suggestions for Meeting

Use a black-board. Draw a map of China. On the map show the location of China's 1,850 villages and cities. Show her 108 walled cities, and note that only 26 of these cities have missionaries. Show the three large towns that have missionaries, and from it all observe that only 29 places of the 1,850 are touched by a missionary. Close with a prayer for our Chinese missions.

WHAT IS A STANDARD SCHOOL?

There appears to be considerable misapprehension about what really constitutes a Standard School. Not many of our schools have qualified, or, if qualified, they have not so notified the Sunday School Board and received their diploma of recognition. This holds our denomination back in a comparison of statistics with other denominations, and lowers us in their eyes. "Oh," someone will say, "what difference whether we get credit or not, just so we have these points?" You might just as well say, "What difference whether we eat our meat for dinner, so long as we have bought it, we are all right." No one is stronger for uneaten meat, and no denomination is "stronger" when some school has the "meat" and keeps it to itself. On the back cover of the Teachers and Officers Journal, you will find a list of the Ten Points which make a Standard School. These ten points are recognized in the Christian Church, in all denominations and in the International Sunday School Association as the ten necessary points for a Standard School. We will take up the points, one at a time from week to week.

MRS. FRED BULLOCK.

DOES CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONFLICT WITH THE MISSION ENTERPRISE OF THE LOCAL CHURCH?

Since Christian Endeavor begins with the Cradle Roll, and ends with the Alumni Association, one might at a glance think there would be a conflict in the work. In fact the question has been raised in some of the conference meetings. Let us see if there is: For an example of this, I use my own field. This church has a Young People's Society, a Junior Christian Endeavor, and we hope to have an Alumni fellowship soon. On the other hand it has a Woman's Missionary Society, a Young Men's Missionary Society and a Junior Missionary Society, and all of them are alive. Those who are active in one are active in the other, and there has never been the slightest conflict, or even a spirit of unfriendly rivalry. All are united in one effort for one common cause, and co-operate beautifully in their routine of work. The fact that your church has a Missionary Society does not mean that you cannot maintain a live Christian Endeavor, for one will help the other along. In the Society we are studying every phase of the mission field of service, and in addition, we are calling for life work recruits for every field of service in Christ's Kingdom.

In conclusion this series of three articles on Christian Endeavor work, I am going to speak my sentiments on the question. The problem of the Church today, is the winning of its young people. The Church that fails here, must die tomorrow. And the fact that a young man or woman has made a public profession of Christ does not mean that he or she is saved. He may be saved for the present, but what about keeping saved and being saved for service? The Church that holds its young will be the Church of tomorrow. And watch that Church, if it holds the young, it will also hold the old. Our own Church is falling short of her great opportunities, because we are neglecting the young people of the Church. Too many of our young people are straying away, who ought to be in our own institutions of learning preparing for Christian leadership. What is the trouble? There is a wrong somewhere that must be righted. Where, is it? Look at the machinery of the Church, and the few methods employed for the keeping of our young people in the Church work, and you will find the great trouble. Not God's fault, but ours.

My final plea, and entreaty is that every pastor and church lay plans, more plans, and bigger plans for taking care of our young people. Drop your prejudice, and biased opinions, if you have any, and line up the young folks in your field for Christian service and in the coming days you will have a strong Church that will carry the Gospel message to a lost world.

J. VINCENT KNIGHT.

THE IMPROVED UNIFORM LESSON

I trust that many of our schools are adopting the Graded Lessons. Now as you come back from vacations, and gather up the scattered Sunday schools in an earnest effort for splendid work during the fall and winter, is the time to commence them. All the Graded Series Lessons are planned to begin with the first of October, and the lessons are so arranged as to come at the proper periods of the year, Thanksgiving Lessons at Thanksgiving, Christmas Lessons at Christmas, etc. You can secure them just as you secure your other Sunday school supplies, sending in all your orders together, as you have always done. For such as do not use the Graded Lessons, I beg to call attention to the new Improved Uniform Lesson.

MRS. FRED BULLOCK.

WILLIAMS-BROWN

On October 28, 1919, 10 o'clock A. M., Mr. H. O. Williams and Miss Beulah Brown were united in marriage by the writer at his home in west Ashboro, in the presence of many friends and relatives.

Mr. Williams is a son of Mrs. Vida Williams of Ramseur, N. C., Route 1, and Mrs. Williams is the daughter of Mr. John Brown of Kemp Mills, N. C. Both are very popular young people and their many friends wish for them a happy wedded life.

T. J. GREEN.

SCOTT

Maude Scott, daughter of W. H. and Martha Jane Scott, was born March 15, 1903 and died September 30, 1919. She was a member of Needham's Grove Christian church and a good girl. The writer had the pleasure of receiving her into church membership. She was loyal to her church, being one of the collectors. She will be missed in her home and in the church.

In the absence of the writer, the funeral service was conducted by Revs. J. R. Comer and W. N. Hayes.

May God bless the mother, father, brother, sisters, relatives and friends and may they all live so as to meet her in that Glory Land.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised, by all.

EDITORIAL

WHERE ARE WE?

"This enlightened generation" says the orator as he sways his audience. How often have you heard it. How grateful are you for it! A great (?) civilization! Orators, poets, statesmen, historians, and artists have reminded us time and again by their products that we have trampled the wild man underfoot, left in the jungles the savage, and turned man's activities to higher and better and nobler things. All this we admit, and yet we are often reminded to ask, Where are we? How far from these ancient days are we?

Here is the point: Fourteen hundred policemen, men under oath to support the law, went on a strike and left the city to the gamblers, the hoodlums and the thieves. What happened? In fair Boston, a city of culture and refinement, where all this happened, hundreds of homes were endangered, hundreds of shops and stores were looted and robbed, men were held up in broad day light and relieved of their possessions, fronts were knocked out of beautiful stores and clerks were helpless in the face of a mob that acted like beasts from the jungles of Africa. From unsuspected corners devil-filled humans took the law in their own hands and turned a city of order to a city of disorder; turned a city of schools and churches into a city of mob rule and thievery.

What lesson does this teach us? (There are certainly many lessons to be learned from it.) Let us take this one: It shows how it is possible for churches to be built up in every section and fail to reach the hearts of the people. What a call and challenge for home mission work!

The Church paper is the one institution that must blaze the way. Its mission is Christian progress, and nothing less will justify its existence.

FOR MINISTERS ONLY

For ministers only is this note written. It is personal to our brethren in a like calling and written with the greatest respect and deepest appreciation.

We have been led to believe that only a few of our ministers are real students. And what we say of our ministers we have reason to think the same of some ministers in other denominations. There is a sort of a sameness in our Church work that leads us to make this statement; and if we are mistaken (and we hope that we are) no one shall rejoice the more than this scribe.

If you are, dear reader, in doubt as to what we mean by saying that we are led to believe that few of our ministers are real students, we pass along these questions to be answered:

1. Do you read every issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN?
2. Do you read The Herald of Gospel Liberty?
3. Do you read The Christian Missionary?
4. Do you read other publications issued by our people?
5. What publications of other denominations do you read?
6. How many books a year do you read?
7. Do you read a daily paper?
8. What magazines do you read?

If we were called upon to draft a list of questions to ask a minister as to his study, the eight items above would be the first to be included. It is taken for granted that a minister is a student of the Bible and other biblical literature.

But are you a real student, brother pastor? Your answer to the eight questions above will about tell the tale. How wide is your horizon? Is your denomination the only household of faith known to you, except in a general way? Do you use the same sermon until it is worn into a memory speech, or do you dig deep into the issues of the day and into the depths of life and go before your people with a message of the hour? It may be that there is a reason why the church, or churches, you are serving do not go forward. How many young men and women do you lead to high school and college each year? The touch of a real student will bring young men and women flocking to college when all other persuasion fails.

The demands of the day are upon us. They challenge the best within us, and unless we are real students, these issues will baffle us and young lives, as well as old ones, will seek other sources of information and inspirations. Shall we as ministers tap the fountains of knowledge and drink daily and be refreshed, or shall we close our ears to an enlarging world of thought, dry up and let our followers perish?

These are days of conferences, plans, programs and undertakings. The highest hope of our utterances is that we shall rise to higher things and meet the challenge of the day.

GUARDING TIME

Time is money—money value, and it is just as essential to save time as it is to save money. A man who will waste time will waste money. Busy men often guard their time with greater care than they do their bank account. It is often easier to get a busy man to give five hundred dollars or a thousand dollars to a good cause than it is to get him to give a week's work. Make every hour count as the way to push your work instead of allowing your work to push you.

We wonder how many of us have a system of getting our work done. Do we break up the day into odds and ends, or have a program? The man with a system for his work will usually find more time for rest than the man without any particular plan by which he works.

If we are stewards of what we possess, we are also stewards of our time, for God gives that to us to use just as He does wealth.

Time! Time!! How we need more of it! Do we? Or do we need to know how to use that which we have? Which?

Construction and reconstruction are the foremost words around which we are endeavoring to build our editorials during these weeks when the local churches are coming together for counsel and for consideration of Kingdom interest.

A DISHONEST CHURCH

Can a church be dishonest? It certainly can, and in more than one way. We limit this note to only one of the ways in which a church may be dishonest—and that is about the matter of paying the pastor.

A church calls a pastor at a certain salary. At the end of the year all the salary is not paid. Is that church dishonest? Just as much so as the man who buys groceries on a credit and fails to settle the account. The promise of a local church to pay a certain salary should be one of the most binding obligations—and it is. If your church owes former pastors for balances on salary it is in debt in the sight of God and man. Calling another pastor does not exempt a church from paying the former pastor what was promised him. A church that fails to meet its pastoral obligations can no more prosper than an individual who will not pay his honest debts.

Talking about revivals in the church, if some of the churches would turn to their records and settle with former pastors in full, and add interest, a revival would come all right—and it would not take so much preaching to bring it.

Pay your pastor what you owe him. If you want to change pastors, that is the business of the church, but pay your pastor, pay him in full, for the amount is small enough without deductions.

Thousands of homes in this Christian Church of ours never get a visit from a pastor, never see the Church paper, and never have the Church's ideals placed before them. "Our one great—The Christian Sun—in every home."

A LITTLE SHOP TALK

We are coming into that season of the year when we enlarge our stock of books, Bibles and church supplies. Already our fall supply of these things is arriving. Though it is nearly three months before you will need the Sunday school helps, our shelves are laden with Tarbell's Guide, Peloubet's Notes, Torrey's Gist of the Lesson and Arnold's Notes. Bibles and Testaments of most any description can be secured from this office. There was once a time when our customers had to wait to get an order filled; and while it is almost impossible to have on hand everything that calls are received for, we are usually able to ship the same day and by next mail.

Many of the local churches have purchased Communion sets and all are pleased. We can supply you with a Communion set at the same price you can get it for. The commission we get for handling the order goes back to the Church, and in so doing you help a good cause.

At this season of the year churches are thinking of their offering envelopes for another year. We invite the attention of church officials and committees to the prices indicated on page 16 of this issue. We offer an absolute guarantee that if you are not pleased, your money will be refunded without dispute.

Whatever you need in the line we carry, let us know and place your order here. All correspondence will be handled promptly and every courtesy shown.

Forty-six ministers in the Southern Christian Convention are readers of The Herald of Gospel Liberty. Sixteen ministers in the American Christian Convention are readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Whether this is a compliment to our ministers or to The Herald is not for us to say. The Herald being the official organ of the Church does, no doubt, count for the difference to an extent. The thing that grieves us is that every minister in the Southern Christian Convention does not take The Herald.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

HOLLAND, VIRGINIA

Speeial revival meetings were held with the Holland Christian church beginning on Sunday night of September 21 and closing on Sunday night, September 28.

Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor of First church, Berkley, Va., did all the preaching from Monday till Saturday night inclusive; and Rev. O. D. Poythress, pastor of South Norfolk Christian church, had charge of the singing.

The pastor takes pleasure in saying, if he is any judge at all, that no two men ever consecrated themselves more to a task than did Brothers Morgan and Poythress in these meetings. The messages of Brother Morgan were deeply spiritual, thoughtful and logical; they were wide sweeping in their reach, and the familiar word was often heard that he missed no one.

Brother Poythress aside from being a preacher himself possesses rare talent in the leadership of music and solo singing. He got the folks to singing and had them in a splendid mood for the message to follow.

At first the meetings were poorly attended and the indifference of the membership was glaring. By Wednesday the crowds began to come. The rain on Tuesday, so much needed, accounted somewhat for small attendance on that day. By Thursday night the large auditorium and gallery were filled to capacity.

At first the prayer meetings were limited to the preachers but these were soon thrown open to all who would come fifteen minutes before each service and herein was a source of power.

The spiritual indifference began gradually to give away and the religion of Jesus Christ had its way. The congregations responded well to the requests of Brothers Morgan and Poythress. About twenty-five decided to accept Christ, mostly young people. There were many reconsecrations.

On Saturday afternoon Brother Morgan conducted his service of "Breaking the Alabaster Box." The request was made that all who were present who had been the recipient of any kindness or favor from another present he should go to such a one, shake hands and thank him. It was a most impressive service and very successful.

The meetings were only marred by the existence of long standing feuds among the membership. Revival meetings come and go and of course do great good, pastor preaches and prays and intercedes but the old feuds go on forever.

The every member canvass is now in progress and the budget of $2,500 for the year bids fair to be covered by pledges.

Immediately following the meetings it was decided to continue the campaign to raise the full amount of the building fund for the dedication of the church this fall. The amount yet to be raised is about $8,000.00 and already several have responded with representative gifts; other gifts are soon to be made. Nothing but the Spirit of Jesus Christ will tie a man to his Church as will a good liberal gift in its construction and their continued support afterwards.

On last Sunday afternoon baptismal services were conducted by the pastor in the church. Nine were baptized by immersion and the same number by sprinkling.

W. M. JAY.

FOUNDED

On Saturday evening, October 11, at the close of our service at Wentworth Christian church, the good people of that church and other churches, began to drop packages, sacks and jars into my Ford until I was almost compelled to go home and unload rather than spend the night with some of them. The pounding contained: flour, sugar, syrup, canned fruit, soda, salmon, soap, chicken, rice, coffee, mustard, pound-cake and money. We have been fareing "sumptuously every day" since, but have endeavored to give God thanks rather than take it in the spirit of the rich man. We thank this splendid people more than we can express and only hope to prove our gratitude by more efficient service. May God's richest blessing rest upon these people and reward them for "every good word and work."

I might also state that the salary for the year was also paid in full at the same time of the pounding and a splendid purse over and above salary was given on Sunday with these words: "more to follow." Of course it makes our hearts rejoice.

Another thing of real interest at Wentworth is this: Brother S. C. Hobby, of Raleigh, on last Sunday, presented the church with a beautiful individual Communion set that cost $65.00. The gift was highly appreciated by pastor and people and the first use of it made a very impressive service. May God bless the giver and make us to see more clearly the all sufficient gift of His Son for the redemption and safety of those who love Him.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

SUFFOLK LETTER

W. A. King, City Treasurer of Suffolk, Va., died at his residence on Washington street, on Sunday night, October 5, 1919, after a two months' confinement with heart-trouble. He was the son of John G. and Martha Anne King of Nansemond County, and was born February 12, 1853.

He married Etta M. Riddick, daughter of James Edward and Deborah Riddick, thirty-eight years ago. His wife and four daughters survive. The daughters are: Mrs. Finch G. Moseley, Mrs. Robert Holton, Mrs. Otis Smith, and Inez. He leaves three brothers: J. W., E. A., and F. C. King.

He was a faithful member of the Suffolk Christian church and was Secretary of the Sunday school for many years.

He was deputy Treasurer of Nansemond County for some twenty years and, when Suffolk became a city, was deputy city treasurer to N. S. Boykin, until Col. Boykin's death, when he was appointed to the office of treasurer, January 31, 1913, to fill the unexpired term.

At the regular election he was chosen treasurer which office he held in a second term up to the time of his death. His books were always adjudged by the State examiner as among the best kept books in the State.

He was a member of the Elks, Woodmen of the World, Pythians, and Masons. The Masons conducted service at the grave. These orders, and the entire city officials, were represented at the funeral. The floral tributes were many and beautiful. The service was simple, "Safe in the Arms of Jesus" and "Sometime We Will Understand" being sung by the choir, with scripture lessons and prayer by the pastor.

Human life is a link in an endless chain, and links are constantly passing out of sight, and will not appear again until we pass ourselves to the other side. Out of sight, but not out of memory, our loved ones wait for us in that house with "many mansions." "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." "But God hath revealed them unto us by His Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." That is the source of comfort to Christians. God reveals to believers the hopes that inspire faith in the future life of bliss and re-union. The Christian life is nothing if it does not furnish hope for the future; for, "if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable."

Mr. King's life justifies this hope and this is a great comfort to his family and his friends. He was faithful in all the relations of life and his home-life was happy. He allowed nothing to interfere with his private or public duty. He will be missed in the home, the church, the office of treasurer and the city.

W. W. STALEY.

TRUTH OR OBEDIENCE?

I have read the Christian Unity Number of The Herald of Gospel Liberty with keen relish. I had listened to all the addresses printed therein, but it was worth while to read them again. I am particularly grateful for the Editor's great editorial. Who knows but that Dr. Kerr has come to the tripod for such a time and for such a cause as this? God knows, and the hopeful ray pray that it be so.

But I write not to praise Editor Kerr. His own utterance is his praise. I write to call attention to a point of view expressed in two of the papers printed in the issue that to my mind needs careful examination. I refer to the papers by Drs. Bagby and Burnett. These beloved brethren refer to truth as conditioning union. Ought it?

But first hear what they say. Dr. Bagby: "Truth first, union afterwards, and union only in truth." Dr. Burnett: "Truth is more desirable than union. A union without truth would be a house of rotten straw in which would dwell all manner of impure things and crawling serpents." It is only fair to say that Dr. Bagby is speaking for the conservative element of the Disciples. Dr. Burnett speaks for our whole people.

Now it is bold for a layman to challenge the position of leading ministers in any Church, and particularly in his own Church, and yet I invite our Brotherhood to a careful scrutiny of what Secretary Burnett says, and let each reader ponder these questions as he thinks.

1. Who is the judge of truth?
2. Has division fostered truth?
3. How is the Christian to be led into the truth?
4. What is the difference between truth and "interpretation"?
5. What has divided the Church?
6. Is truth an insuperable barrier to union?
7. Is truth more likely to be attained by sectarianizing it or by a wholesome testing of it in Christian Union?

8. Since our Master prayed for the union of His followers, has the Church any right to erect barriers of truth rendering such union impossible?

9. Which is preferable—truth or obedience?

I shall not undertake to answer these questions. I shall be satisfied if our brethren will think these queries through for themselves. We should be anxious in this hour to know the mind of Christ for His Church. It is time for us to learn why our plea for Christian Union has fallen flat and to discover the method of doing the thing we have announced to be our ultimate purpose from the beginning.

Have we been searching for truth and failed to obey? Does Secretary Burnett represent our Church in this matter? Does our Church represent Christ in this issue, or must He look for another?

WITH BUSY PASTORS

It was a great pleasure, as well as privilege, to spend a Sunday recently with Brother A. W. Andes. He had three appointments for the day, Bethlehem, Concord, and Antioch, and these churches are several miles apart. Brother Andes has three appointments every Sunday. The strain on him and his Ford is immense. But both seem to not only stand up under it, but to thrive on it.

Brother Andes says, however, that such strenuous work gives him little time for his study, that he and his study have almost become strangers. It is a deplorable fact that so many of us preachers are so rushed in meeting and filling engagements that we have only the most meager allowance of time for study, meditation, reading, preparation. Dr. Staley says, in illustration of this sad fact, that you cannot continually draw water out of a pipe unless you continually pump water into the pipe, and that it is as necessary to keep water in the pipe as it is to draw it out for that which came out could not have come unless forced out by that which remained in. I recall another philosopher has somewhere said that we do not and cannot teach that which we have learned and stored up; we can only teach that which we are learning and are acquiring.

Brother Andes has a large and responsible work, and he is giving it his best strength and noblest endeavor. A day's fellowship with him and his good people was a real joy; and $650.00 was either given or pledged for our mission fund. It was indeed a regret that the writer could not remain even for a day longer and give the people a real chance at this great and good thing we are all so much interested in.

Last Sunday, October 12, was spent with Rev. W. L. Wells at Reidsville and an afternoon service with Rev. L. L. Wyrick at Howard's Chapel. Brother Wells is much loved in Reidsville and is building up a substantial and splendid congregation. He and his people are laboring to clear their house of debt and dedicate next spring. This is a great and most worthy undertaking and only by pulling together and all doing their best can the task be accomplished.

The people out at Howard's Chapel are liking Brother Wyrick, say he has improved wonderfully and is gaining in influence and in usefulness around his people. He is faithful and loyal and devoted to his work, and all that counts mightily for success. It was a real joy to be with him and his people in a service.

Our pastors are a hard working, non-complaining, self-sacrificing, hard working class of people. It is a genuine joy to be associated with them and to hear the good things their people say of them and see the real and lasting good they are doing in the world.

VIRGINIA LETTER

My excuse for sending no news from my field in such a long time is not because of a dearth of the same. Much has taken place of both local and general interest.

Hebron has undergone considerable repairs, amounting to twelve hundred dollars, and is now both neat and attractive. We had no protracted meetings here this year on account of the repairs being in progress at the appointed time.

Lebanon held a series of meetings the third week in July. Dr. P. H. Fleming did the preaching. The rainy season interfered and yet no services were missed. While there were no accessions to the church, some of the leading members pronounced it a good meeting and I trust the church is strengthened.

Liberty was also favored with the assistance of Dr. Fleming. Congregations were good. There were many professions and eight united with the church.

Union (Virgilina) had a good revival the second week in August. Immense crowds day and night came to hear the strong sermons of Brother Fleming. There were a number of professions. This church has received over a hundred members in the last five years. A campaign has been on recently for a new church building, resulting in subscriptions to the amount of over eleven thousand dollars. We have purchased six beautiful lots nearer the center of town than our present location, and will, after January first next, turn our attention to planning and erecting a handsome brick house of worship suitable to our needs and present day demands.

C. E. NEWMAN.

The rich ruleth over the poor, and the borrower is servant to the lender. Prov. 22:7. Own some W. S. S. and borrow from your own capital.

UNION GROVE

Our meeting began at Union Grove the third Sunday in August. Rev. J. F. Apple did the preaching throughout the meeting. There were twelve professions. Four joined the church and two were baptized by Brother Apple. Prayer meetings are being held on Sunday evenings since a while before our revival. Several ask for prayer at our prayer meetings and members of the meeting say they wish to keep warm all the year. Cottage prayer meetings are held in the community on Saturday evenings.

Spoon's Chapel

Rev. W. N. Hayes assisted me in the meeting here which began the fourth Sunday in August. There was no outward evidence in this meeting.

Antioch (R)

Our meeting began here the fourth Sunday in September. I was unable to secure pastoral help for this meeting. We have had good congregations throughout the year but no conversions during the revival.

The writer assisted in two meetings—one at Brown's Chapel, there being twelve conversions, and the other at a school house, within four miles of which there is no church. There were six professions here.

GOOD HOPE

I filled my appointment at Good Hope Saturday and Sunday. Although we have one more appointment there before Conference, we elected our delegates and alternates to Conference and to the Woman's Missionary Convention, November 9 and 10, and raised our Conference apportionments in full last Sunday. We learned, last fall from the "Flu" and previous years from rainy days, not to put so important a matter off until the last moment.

By the way, how many delegates is each Church entitled to this year? We elected two to represent Good Hope.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

ANSWER

In answering Brother Crumpler's question, we quote the following from a letter sent out by the Secretary of the North Carolina Conference on October 15: "Each church may send two delegates and one additional delegate for each fifty members up to 200, but no church can send over four delegates."

NOTICE

All persons who expect to attend the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference which convenes at Waverly, Virginia, on October 28, 1919, will please notify the undersigned at their earliest convenience, stating what day they expect to arrive in Waverly and whether they will come by train or private conveyance.

R. T. WEST, Secretary.

Waverly, Virginia.

Let us have your renewal during this month.

NOTES

Rev. G. R. Underwood changes his address from Ashboro to Bennett, N. C.

Rev. C. E. Gerringher has accepted work at Richland, Ga., and is now at that place.

The Georgia and Alabama Conference is in session this week with the church at Lanett, Alabama.

Brother W. B. Fuller writes that he has had a great summer laboring in the Master's vineyard and that he has been richly blessed.

Rev. J. W. Harrell left Monday morning for Dayton, Ohio, to attend the Mission Board meeting in session this week.

Brother J. W. Lashley, Durham, N. C., paid us a visit the other day. We are always glad to see our friends.

Brother A. G. Apple, a member of Apple's Chapel church, came in Monday and renewed his subscription. He is one of the few in that church who take THE SUN.

Last Saturday morning we had a short, but pleasant call, by Mrs. J. P. Barrett. She was enroute to Columbus, Georgia, to join Dr. Barrett in their new field of labor.

The Woman's Missionary Conference of the Eastern Virginia Conference will be in session at Portsmouth, Virginia, October 23. Blessings of the Father be upon the work done.

The Burlington congregation is to open its handsome fifty thousand dollar house of worship the first Sunday in November. Dr. C. H. Rowland is to be the speaker at the eleven o'clock hour and Dr. J. O. Atkinson at night.

Brother P. T. Hines, of Raleigh, N. C., called to see us the other day. Brother Hines is connected with the executive and editorial work of The Progressive Farmer and is making good.

No comments on the Sunday school lesson this week. We received the material on Saturday afternoon when the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor page had already been closed for the press. We have repeatedly reminded the contributors of this material that it must reach us by Wednesday. We are not at fault.

Speaking for the Entertainment Committee of the North Carolina Conference we want to say that homes have been secured for the delegates and that delegates and visitors are urged to comply with the notice in this week's SUN—and do so at once. Don't put it off till the last hour.

WORLD MOVEMENTS

On October 16 the first train from Berlin to Paris since the war made its trip.

President Wilson is reported to be steadily improving. He is, however, still confined to his room.

Dr. Lansing Burrows, aged 77, Americus, Georgia, died October 17. For thirty years he was Secretary of the Southern Baptist Convention.

The Federal Government has indicated that it will take over the coal mines and operate them in case of a strike of any duration of time.

Sunday morning, October 26, at 1 o'clock A. M. the time of the nation will be turned back one hour. Thus will end the Day Light Savings Law.

On October 16 the Senate finally took a vote on the Amendment to the Peace Treaty, which Amendment was to give Shantung to China instead of Japan. The Amendment was lost by a vote of 55 to 35.

One day last week 62 aviators started a coast to coast flight. Ten of the 62 were killed. The distance of about 5,400 miles was made in 25 hours. Lieutenant B. W. Maynard, of Sampson County, N. C., seems to be the hero of the "air birds" and has won for himself much recognition.

Action on legislation to remedy the present sugar famine is planned by the Senate Agriculture Committee, which expects to report out the bill authorizing President Wilson to continue the sugar equalization board during 1920 and giving the board power to purchase Cuban sugar.

ACCIDENT PREVENTION DRIVE

Two million railroad employes throughout the United States entered Saturday mid-night upon an intensified campaign against accidents—the National Railroad Accident Prevention Drive. For two weeks, ending at mid-night Friday, October 31, caution and care will fight for a record clear of injuries and fatalities, which might have been avoided, on every railroad under government control.

The purpose of the drive is to eliminate so far as is humanly possible the avoidable accidents which constantly take a distressing toll of life and limb on the railroads, and thus to demonstrate what caution would mean if practiced day in and day out in the operation of the railroads. Previous campaigns conducted in regions and on individual railroads have given an idea of what can be done. The great nation-wide movement is designed to produce a more forcible demonstration, and, with the co-operation of industries along the railroads, shippers, State and municipal authorities and the public generally, to bring the lesson home to everybody.

Many thanks to our friends for many renewals.

THE LITTLE ECHO

We have an echo in our house,
An echo three years old,
With dimpled cheeks and wistful eyes
And hair of sunny gold.

This little echo, pure and sweet,
Repeats what others say,
And trots about on tireless feet
Upstairs and down all day.

It makes us very careful not
To use a naughty word,
Lest in the echo's hisping tones
It should again be heard.

Which would be such a dreadful thing,
As any one may see,
Who has an echo in their house
A little over three.

LIKE CANDY?

Willie's mother was horrified to see her son so neat. He used soap lavishly, even washing behind his ears; he shone his shoes daily; he studied his lessons most thoroughly. It is not the custom in Montenegro to use water very plentifully, even among parents. Therefore Willie was not only a puzzle, but a worry to his mother. Perhaps she feared too much cleanliness spelled saintliness, and Willie had never shown any of the known traits of a saint as the term is usually understood.

Even at the end of a week the enthusiasm had not diminished one bit, and Willie went on with his neatness in the face of violent protests from his mother, his father and his elder brother. They could not understand the docile Willie. He had suddenly developed a mind of his own, they were sure, and that is a fatal error in one so young, for Montenegrins obey their parents without a question as a rule. Willie must be subdued. But how?

It was a radiant boy who came home from school a few days later, bringing a bag of candy, a chocolate bar and several sweet cakes. When he had finally explained to his mother that he had won this as a reward for being clean she was pleased that her son could keep up with the best of them, even if he had to go so far as to disgress from the faith of his father in the matter of soap, water and industriousness. It was also a matter of no small interest to the whole family that it was the American Red Cross nurse at the school who had awarded the candy. Therefore Willie's mother was eager to have him keep clean, for to her American ideas were the acme of all that is good.

FROM ME—TO YOU

"Dear American Children, I wish I could go to see you, but that can never happen. Will you come and see us next Christmas?"

Such engagingly intimate messages as this one accompany the hand-made gifts which the children of Archangel have sent to the American children as an expression of their appreciation for the lunches that were given them in the schools by the American Red Cross last winter. Hundreds of little Russian children were helped through the perils of hunger by this small attention.

They show a very eager interest in the children of the new world. They have made laborious pencil drawings, colored pictures showing the land-scapes of north Russia, and sea views with blue water and bright red boats. The little children of the "Dom Trudolubia" orphanage have spent many joyous hours fashioning these gay presents and talking about the far-away children in the land that has sent the American Red Cross to them. It is natural that their thoughts should turn to the Juniors of the organization which has befriended them. They cannot let their thoughts and words suffice—their interest does not cease there. They feel that they are now personal friends of the Juniors and that they must express their friendship in a befitting concrete form. Hence the gifts.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

We were made glad on Sunday, October 12, when the clouds gathered thick and black and rain began to fall and continued throughout the night. It was the first rain we had had for weeks and the ground was dry and hard. We had begun to think we would fail to get our wheat crop in, but it was a splendid season and the ground is now in fine working condition and our teams are busy at work, and we hope, though late, that we will get all the wheat and oats in the ground that we intended to sow.

Our singing class had a splendid trip to Long's Chapel on Sunday, October 12, and gave a song service there. There was no preaching but the crowd was very good and the offering amounted to $20.05 and more than $200.00 in subscriptions for the Children's Home. Our little folks, the matron and the writer enjoyed the day very much. It was a pleasure to mingle with the good people of Long's Chapel. The Orphanage has some very strong friends in that community. It is always a pleasure to the writer to go there as it is his old home church and the community in which we spent our boyhood days. It brings back sweet memories of the past, and we often think of the many pleasant days spent in the Sunday school and church there.

We want everybody to have a part in building the Children's Home. Don't wait to be asked to help in this splendid work, but just mail me a letter stating how much you want to give and we will fill out your subscription blank and mail it to you for your signature. Every man, every woman, every boy and every girl should want to help in this undertaking. We are going to build this home and the money will be raised. The question is, Will you have a part? Of all the different calls for charity, missions, college, or any other cause, this is one that I hardly see how a member of the Christian Church can let pass without making a contribution.

"If we work upon marble, it will perish," said Webster; "If upon brass, time will efface it; if we rear temples, they will crumble into dust, but if we work upon immortal minds, we imbue them with principles, with the just fear of God and love of our fellow men; we engrave on those tablets something which will brighten through all eternity."

LETTERS FROM THE COUSINS

Dear Uncle Charley: I hope the little cousins are enjoying these fall days as much as I. I keep grandmother Young's chickens on the go all the time and prefer spending my time with the cows and pigs. Love for all.—Oliver E. Young, Jr.

You must be careful with grandmother's chickens. I knew a little boy one time who got among his mother's chickens with a stick and killed six at one liek. His mother then had a settlement with him.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: We are two little boys three and six years old, so you see papa is writing for us.

We are sending the orphans five cents apiece. Next time we will tell you about mamma going away from home for her health and about how sad we were.—Bea-nette and Allen Roberson.

You are fine little boys. I hope your mother will soon be well again. Home is not much of a home when moher is gone.—"Uncle Charley."

PRESERVING HISTORY

The North Carolina Historical Commission is canvassing the entire State for letters, diaries, pictures, newspaper clippings—in fact, all materials of any nature that throw light on North Carolina in the World War. R. B. House, Collector of War Records for the Historical Commission, is conducting this canvass by going to the sources of such official records as Red Cross Chapter Histories, Local Board reports, etc., by organizing volunteer committees to assist him in the various counties, and by going himself from community to community all over the State.

These materials canvassed for, valuable as they are, will perish very rapidly unless they are stored where fire, rats, and other destroying agencies cannot get at them. Practically the only safe depository for such things is the fire-proof Hall of History in Raleigh, built to preserve just such things as these.

Realizing the necessity of preserving these valuable records, the last General Assembly appropriated money for the work, and directed the Historical Commission not only to collect all data possible about North Carolina in the World War, but to prepare a complete history of the State's life in that great event. By this act the General Assembly placed North Carolina among the most progressive States in the Union, for North Carolina was one of the first States to inaugurate a work that all the other States are now taking up.

The General Assembly realized that history is essential to a commonwealth, and therefore placed this work on a stable foundation. The General Assembly but expressed the will of the State, and, since this will is so wisely recorded in the establishment of this work of collecting war records, it is the presumption of the Historical Commission that the people of the State are going to give the materials essential to history.

The fine success already attained by the public spirit of individual donors of material shows that North Carolinians want their State fully represented in history.

Almost every person in the State has a letter, a picture, or something that would be of value. Whatever he has, he should communicate information about it, or send it to R. B. House, Collector of War Records, North Carolina Historical Commission, Raleigh, N. C.

"FOLLOW THE GOOD IMPULSE"

A friend of both men tells me the story. Walter H. Page, our Ambassador in England, said to Edward Bok several years ago: "Do you ever write a letter to a man who does a conspicuously meritorious thing?" On the spot they entered into a compare to try it. At a famous New York church Mr. Bok heard a sermon that stirred him. He promptly wrote to the pastor telling him so. About six months later he went to the same church again. An official met him. "Are you Mr. Bok, of Philadelphia?" "Yes." "Well, sir, I want to tell you about the letter you wrote to our pastor. As it happened, it reached him on a 'blue Monday.' He was sitting in his study discouraged. He had almost reached the conclusion that his ministry was a failure. Your letter came, and it changed not merely his day, but his decision. It gave him a new heart of grace to go on."

Said the man who told me the story: "Both Mr. Page and Mr. Bok have derived incalculable happiness from their plan. The results have more than justified it. Never frown down a good impulse. If you fail to act on it at once, it may tantalize you for months."—Public Ledger.

NOTICE! NOTICE!

The Committee on Home Assignment for the North Carolina Conference, which meets with the Burlington Church November 11-14, is now ready to receive a list of delegates and visitors from each church. Give the following information when you report: 1. What church you represent; 2. On what day you will arrive; 3. How you expect to come, whether by private conveyance or train; 4. How long you will stay, unless you expect to attend the entire session, which we hope you will.

Trains arrive in Burlington as follows: Going east, 8:10 and 10:08 A. M.; also 4:55 P. M. Trains going west arrive at 5:32 and 11:20 A. M.; 6:30 and 9:23 P. M.

Everything possible will be done to give each visitor and delegate a good home, but we ask that the Committee be notified in due time. Notify the undersigned today.

THE SUN'S ASSISTANT EDITOR

The other day THE SUN'S Editor was in his study at work when his baby, Ruth Teague, came running in with a piece of paper and pencil, saying: "I've got to work," and pushing her chair up to another to form a writing place, continued, "I am writing editorials." She will be two years old November 4 and so her editorial career looks hopeful.

We believe that this personal note will not be out of place.

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

FAITH

(Sermon delivered in the First Christian church, Raleigh, N. C., October 12, 1919, by Rev. Daniel Albright Long, D. D.)

As I walked the streets of Jerusalem a few years ago, I thought, within myself, why is it that the land where Christ and the standard bearers of the Cross preached, should now be land for the Christian missionary? Certainly the candlestick of the Lord is a movable thing. The Union Jack now waves where the Crescent then stood. Terms of Peace and Leagues of Nations claim the attention of statesmen and lawmakers. Yet, all nations are discordant, and belligerent. The heart of humanity yearns for "peace on earth and good will to men." There can be no permanent peace in any heart, or nation, without the spirit to "do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly with God." All mobs, all wars are simply explosions of sin. The highest liberty, in any nation, is the reign of law. To live, and let live, is not Christian. It should be, to live and help to live. An organization to get the most work for the least pay is only organized selfishness. An organization to get the most pay for the least work is only organized selfishness. Faith in, and practice of, the Golden Rule would bring peace, happiness, and prosperity to all men. With all the preaching, and teaching in our land, much of our literature is tainted with rationalism, and saturated with infidelity. Unless the followers of Christ bestir themselves, the pleasant gardens of our prosperity will be uprooted by the whirlwinds of bolshevism, or iron bound by the polar frost of despotism, and these United States become land for the missionaries. For this reason, I propose to speak to you, this morning on FAITH, and the dangers of rationalism, in order that you may go away more determined, if possible, to put you trust more implicitly in the world's Redeemer.

Locke defines faith as "Assent to any proposition, which is not made out by deductions of reason," "As coming from God, in some extraordinary way of communication." Paul said: "Now faith is the assurance of things hoped for, the proving of things not seen." Revelation teaches us that "things which are seen were not made of things which do appear."

Rationalism, or adherence to reason as distinct from revelation, is opposed to supernaturalism. It rejects the miraculous in Christianity, disbelieves in revelation and thinks that all the knowledge we have of true religion is derived from unassisted reason. Then the Pantheistic Rationalists, like the disciples of Hegel, resolve Christianity into a metaphysical speculation, of which the gospel history is a loose, popular, mythical equivalent.

Why should Rationalism be so much opposed to mysteries in religion? Even the boldest materialist must acknowledge that his own existence is a mystery. How often has it been imagined that the power of Christianity was to be increased by getting rid of truths that baffle the attempt at precise definition, and shade off into mystery! Drs. Channing and Gannett honestly and ably predicted that what they termed "liberal Christianity," would prove a great bulwark against infidelity. The new era of faith has not sprung from Liberal Christianity. Never has it proven to be the solvent of unbelief.

There are those who appear to think that Rationalism must triumph and Supernaturalism must be destroyed. On the other hand the Supernaturalist appears to think that the Christian religion will be destroyed if Rationalism is not annihilated. Let us try and take an unprejudiced view of the subject and see if both Rationalism and Supernaturalism have not found that both were at least partially right and partially wrong. Look at Supernaturalism among Protestants. They held to the theory of an infallible Bible. They held the Bible to be inspired both as respects consonants and as respects vowels. It is hardly necessary to say that the number of chapters, verses and punctuation points are not looked upon as inspired by any man who deserves the name of theologian. The next mistaken phase of Supernaturalism was the theory of an infallible Church. This was thought to be necessary, in order to guard against mysticism and rationalism. And what was the logical climax of this assumption but an infallible Pope. This saves time, of course, as it excludes all historical objections against the dogma. "It dispenses with the necessity for their detailed refutation by investigation and argument." Even Cardinal Newman has "offered the absolute need of such infallibility as the strongest argument for the fact of its supply." This, you see, would give the Church rest. Your faith would be settled exactly right. You would be in the majority, and you could shear off all troublesome thinkers and sing "stagnant hallelujahs." This would be false conservatism. It would make us, like the Pharisees, who would not acknowledge the "signs of the times," either in John the Baptist or Christ. It was not the men of progress, but the Conservatives, who crucified Christ. It was the Conservatives who introduced the Inquisition, burnt John Huss, and excommunicated Luther. It is true that "all change is not improvement, and all motion is not advancement." But it is equally true that continued growth and regeneration are the imperative conditions of every spiritual life, which will not succumb to death. And would you let everything remain as it is, and say you had infallible authority for so doing? To let everything remain as it is, is just not to let it remain as it is, not to preserve it as a living thing. And if, in the Conservative interest, one would keep watch by a corpse, even there all would not continue to be as it was. However, all genuine progress has its basis in a true Conservatism. According to the Rationalists, the whole Bible must be tested "by reason alone." The wonderful growth of rationalism is due to an abuse of the great Protestant right of private judgment. Having rejected the Pope and the Church in interpreting the Bible, the emancipated intellect could then proceed to reject the authority of the Bible itself. Even Luther rejected the "Epistle of St. James as a mere Epistle of Straw." Hobbes, the deist, denied that Moses wrote any part of the Pentateuch; Spinoza, the Spanish Jew, with more critical knowledge, discarded the entire Bible as inconsistent with his pantheistic views of miracle and inspiration.

The next stage of rationalism was "exegetical." It said it is our duty to save religion from Protestant mysticism, as well as the Catholic traditionalism. Semler, in his "Apparatus of Liberal Interpretation," devised the famous theory of accommodation, according to which Christ and his apostle are supposed to have adapted their religious teachings to the prejudices and superstitions of their contemporaries concerning angels, demons, the Mosaic system, the Messiah, and the judgment. Then it treated the Old Testament as Hebraic Mythology. Gradually the books of the New Testament were claimed to be largely mythical by Gabler, Sieffert and others. The first thing assailed was the birth and childhood of Jesus, then the miracles of his public ministry, resurrection and ascension. And what was left of the Savior of the world by the Rationalist? The historical Christ, with His discourses, alone remained, but without supernatural halo or divine authority. And what is the present stage of rationalism? It is dogmatic, having shown the world that the Bible miracles are myths, it demands the surrender of orthodoxy of every tongue and color. It looks upon its apostles as men of science, advanced thinkers, bold and brave. It regards every man who rejects the supremacy of rationalism, as being about eighteen hundred years behind the times, cowardly and ignorantly floundering about in the great sea of inquiry, without chart or compass. When it reaches its goal, in any community, it wholly supersedes revelation. We said the conservatives, with false notions of improvement, crucified Christ. All violent attempts of the conservatives to defend the faith, have resulted in great injury to the faith. All the attacks made on religion itself by men of science, from Celsus to this day, have not done so much to bring religion into contempt, as a single persecution for witchcraft, or a Bartholomew massacre of seventy thousand men, women, and babes, in the name of God. What about those radicals, or men of progress, with false notions of improvement, in every age? They simply crucify Christ anew, and desire that Barabbus should be released, tread the cross under foot and set themselves up as those who look upon all men as idolators who make a Savior of Jesus Christ who was not able to save himself. The men of progress took the place of the Jesuits, but introduced the Jacobins with their bloody republic. In place of the heretics fire and stake, they set up the guillotine, and with unspeakable terrorism and fanaticism persecuted all who would not receive their mark, and fall down and worship the new-born spirit, pure reason personified by an harlot, while they wrote upon their door-posts that the Bible was a fable, Jesus Christ an imposter, and death an eternal sleep. After a sufficient amount of blood was shed, the sash was restored, and the Nation swung to the other extreme, and caused the Emperor to bow before an infallible Pope. There is a happy medium between rationalism and supernaturalism. Revelation is largely natural and rational. In another view, revelation is a universal phenomenon. God is not revealed alone in one Book, or many books. The Creator is everywhere a revealer, and the whole creation, radiant with his intelligence. The migrating birds are moved by the Holy Ghost no less than the nomadic peoples. The bee is inspired to build her cell as well as the artist to mould the statue, or frame the temple. Whether Isaiah or Milton sings, whether Paul or Plato reasons, it is the inspiration of the Almighty which giveth them understanding. Holy Scripture itself is but the crown and compliment of the whole theophany of nature, and divine revelation only the last and highest expression of the Absolute Reason.

The pessimist regards the world "the worst possible." This opinion is of ancient, as well as of modern growth. The Hindoo mind, for ages "looked upon existence itself as guilt, upon the universe as an illusion or abortion, and upon reabsorption in Brahma or annihilation in Nirvana, as the only boon of mortals, to be reached after thousands of successive births and deaths." The Greek and Roman Epicureans endeavored to drown the thought of a causeless and purposeless universe in sensual pleasure. It is claimed by modern pessimists, that the highest wisdom of the Hebrews was expressed in the dirges of Job, and Solomon, on the misery and vanity of life; and that Christianity itself, through its doctrine of sin, had produced a breach between God and the world, requiring the destruction of the latter as vain and worthless. And though the fathers, excepting the Manicheans, had taken a more optimistic view of the origin and object of creation, yet among the scholastics and reformers, the gloomier dogmas of the Church were sometimes pushed toward that pessimistic extreme which the skeptical literature and poetry have since developed. Voltaire opened the movement with his "Satire upon the optimism of Leibnitz." Byron gave voice to the rising tendency in his "Childe Harold" and "Cain;" Shelley in his "Queen Mab" and "Prometheus;" Goethe in his "Faust." It has been echoed in "Lucretius" of Teunyson, the "Empedocles" of Matthew Arnold, the "Vanity Fair" of Thackeray, and consciously uttered by the Italian poet philosopher, Leopardi, in his passionate dirges upon the disappointments and miseries of existence.

The periodicals of this day are filled with the teaching of the two rival schools of the Naturalists and Supernaturalists. German naturalism explains away the supernatural element altogether. After "Edelman, Bahrdt and Basedow had championed the foreign deism with frivolity and coarseness, and Mendelssohn, Lessiu and Reimarus had arrayed it in literary graces, it found more native expression in learned divines and biblical critics who sought to render it exegetically consistent with the sacred writings. Eichorn, whilst respecting the Bible as a religious and moral classic, treated the story of creation as an historical allefory, and the prophecies as poetical rhapsodies. Paulus, assuming Jesus to have been a pure theist and reformer of Judaism, explained his miracles as mere remarkable coincidences or popular illusions, DeWette, Sieffert, and Gabler found numerous traces of the ancient legend—making faculty in both the Old and New Testaments, without accusing either the apostles or the prophets of imposture. And then Strauss, massing together all previous forms of naturalism, simply voices a growing opinion of the learned world, when he expounded Christianity as mythology.

From Germany, naturalism returned to France, where Renan depicted Jesus as a romantic young Hebrew Enthusiast, defied by His followers and invested with thaumaturgic powers which modern science discredits. In England the author of Evee Homo has revived it in the form on naturalistic Christianity and enthusiasm for humanity; Sinclair has distinguished its classic humanities from Hebraic barbarism and Pauline bigotry; Matthew Arnold opposed its literary sweetness and light to dogmatic harshness and austerity; and Mrs. Humphry Ward depicted its sentimental hero in Robert Ellsmere. In this country it was echoed in the blasphemous wit on Ingersoll. Naturalism largely pervaded our lighter literature, treating Bible stories as myths and stigmatizing reverence for a supernatural religion as ignorance and superstition. There should be no fear for results when truth and error grapple. Yet we see the disciples of Rationalism in the pulpits of our so called orthodox denominations, with cultured tongues, immaculate linen, graceful manners, telling a lost and ruined world that it is not essential for a man to either teach or believe in the physical death of Lazarus, the Virgin birth of Christ, or any of the oriental myths, called miracles, recorded in a certain old book that grandmother called "the Sacred Bible"—God bless the dear old moth eaten Saint. Her ignorant pastor gathered superstitious women about the stagnant pools of theology and taught them to sing those foolish old hymns of Watts and Wesley, but we know better now.

The waves of the coming conflict which is to convulse Christendom from her centre are "beginning to be felt." All "the old signs fail." God answers "no more by Urim and Thummin, nor by dream, nor by prophet." Thunders begin to "mutter in the distance." The winds are "moaning across the surging bosom of the deep." Everything betides the rising of that storm of divine indignation which shall sweep away "the vain refuge of lies."

When the Lord "shall cause His glorious voice to be heard," and shall show the "lighting down of his arm," with the indignation of his anger, in that day, what shall save us? For "judgment will begin at the house of God." Put your trust, neither in worldly learning, nor worldly riches. Put your trust in Him "whose eyes are as a flame of fire, on whose head are many crowns," who is "clothed with a vesture dipped in blood; his name is called the Word of God." For, "Behold, a King shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment. And a man shall be as a hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land."

Man seeks rest for his yearning heart in something higher and better than himself. The soul can only rest in that which is at rest. The ocean, air and planets never rest.

May your careers ever be onward and upward. Cherish in your souls, these my parting words: You are children of immortality, and citizens of the universe. So live that you may never become afraid of yourselves here, and you will have no fear about meeting your records hereafter.

MISSIONARY

HALF MILLION FOR MISSIONS

The goal for the peoples of the churches composing our Southern Convention has been fixed at half million dollars for missions to be pledged within the next three years, and paid within five years from date of signing the obligation. Will our people give this amount for world wide evangelization, one-half for home, one-half for foreign missions? There is every good reason to believe they should and they will. Suppose, for instance, the people of our churches could become as eager to save men for Christ as they were to kill and be killed, in the recent war, for country and native land? Suppose we were to become as eager to save as we were anxious to destroy during the war? Suppose we were to give as much the next five years to preach the gospel of peace, truth and righteousness, as we had to give the past three years to kill and to be killed on the field of battle, blood and destruction? Then we should easily give not a half million, but several millions for missions at home and abroad.

Some one has estimated and publicly proclaimed that the recent war cost thirty-seven times as many dollars as have been contributed since Christian missions began toward teaching and spreading the gospel of peace and of Christ among men. What do you think of a world in a frenzy of madness, carnage and blood-shed spending thirty-seven times more money in three years to tear down, kill and destroy than it contributed in nineteen centuries to make known the gospel of Christ and save this world from sin?

It is not, therefore, a question of ability; it is a question of will-ability; not a question of can we, a question of will we. If we really desire to do this much for the advancement of the Kingdom, then we shall do it by our Heavenly Father's help.

The war has resulted in putting untold and increasing riches in the hands of the American people. The people have been called upon to give and give again to church, charity and benevolence. Yet they have not given even as they have received, and with all our gifts deducted we are richer by millions than we were before the war began. What are we to do with this great surplus of blood-money? Are we to spend it in waste, luxury and extravagance, or are we to use it to help advance the cause and Kingdom of our Lord?

There were never such calls, such needs, such opportunities for Christian service as today. We Christians of the South are just awakening to our obligations and needs and responsibilities. Long ago we should have had churches in Richmond, Va., Washington, D. C., Atlanta, Ga., Winston-Salem, N. C. These and other growing cities about us have been, and still are, sources of constant drainage and increasing weakness to our Christian churches elsewhere. At last we are moving to stop the loss and increase our members and our strength in two of these centers, Washington and Richmond. It is going to require increasing funds with which to build in these places. A dozen other points in the home field, to say nothing of our increasing demands and opportunities in the foreign field, are claiming our means, attention and efforts.

A long time ago, our Savior realizing that all power had been committed unto Him, all power in heaven and in earth, said, Go ye into all the earth and make disciples of all the nations. In proportion to the zeal, the willingness, the effort, on the part of any people to carry out that command, has been the growth, strength and power of that people. As a people seek to finish His unfinished task and carry on the work He began, they receive and share that power which was given Him. Giving half million dollars within three years with which to carry on the work of our Lord will not impoverish, but will enrich us, and will not deduct from but add immeasurably to our power, prestige and influence in the world, in doing our Master's work.

And if we get beneath this task with our prayers, our fears and our faith, it will come to pass, and we shall see our dear Church go forward in its great work of helping to redeem and save this wicked and sin-cursed world.

Standing For God and the Right.
—Kings 18:17-24.

(J. V. Knight)

Too often our consecration services are meaningless. They are much like the testimony of a man who testified in a meeting that he had more ups and downs than any man in the world, and closed by asking the people to pray that he might hold out faithful. Simply holding one's own is by no means sufficient.

The Christian life is a matter of growth and development from the day of one's spiritual birth until he reaches the great climax in Christ. There can be no standstill. We are growing weaker or stronger, and that in proportion to our attitude toward God and His kingdom work. We grow strong by holding on to God's Word—the devotional life and by putting in practice the religion we claim to possess. Standing for God and the right does not always make one popular, but it does make him safe. Elijah found his strength increasing as he stood firm for the right.

To consecrate ourselves to the same thing every month is doing little to aid us in Christian development. What we need is to consecrate ourselves to some larger things we wish done, and not be afraid to do it. Let us center our minds upon one thing: Consecrate everything we have to that end. Go about it in the Spirit of Elijah, a Daniel, a Gideon, a Paul, or Christ Himself, and know that standing for God and right is better than the riches of the world and is the only thing that safeguards life.

Suggestions

Christian Endeavor in Dixie has a large task to perform. Let each Endeavor consecrate his or her life to some of the following things:

1. Help the 8,000 churches in Dixie that have no Young People's Society of any kind.

2. Seventy-five per cent of the churches in Dixie have only one service per month. Help them by consecrating your own life to full time service for Christ.

3. Help your denominational missions. And give your own Church a chance to grow.

4. Help your own society by volunteering to be a leader, teach a Sunday school class, lead a mission study class or be a junior superintendent.

THE HONORABLE CRIMSON TREE

Suppose you had never seen a tree in all your life? Suppose a foreign woman were to give you two or three little seeds that a little boy far across the ocean sent as a gift? Suppose that the whole village united in planting the tiny tree that had grown from the seed, on a specially prepared mound, do you think you would

SUMMER IS DYING

Ah! 'tis a melancholy hour
When fades the fragrant Summer flower,

When through the woods and meadows dry

The thistle-ghosts go drifting by,
While soft and solemn winds seem sighing,

"Summer is dying."

Ah! 'tis a melancholy scene
When fields no longer smile serene

With waving grain, when birds have flown,

And gladness seems to sadness grown,

When reminiscent winds seem sighing,

"Summer is dying."

Ah! 'tis a melancholy sound

When leaves begin to rustle round,
When crickets chirp their lonely lays

In tune to thoughts of bygone days, While restless, plaintive winds seem sighing,

"Summer is dying."

Ah! 'tis a melancholy air
That nips the heart with withering care;

But bird-like, let our minds take wing

To soulful southlands, there to sing
Beyond the chill winds that seem sighing,

"Summer is dying."

—Arcanus in New York Times.

consider the tree precious enough to almost give your life for it as little Lin did in the village of the Crimson Fish, and when the little leaves turned crimson in the fall, if you had never seen a maple tree, would you fear it was going to die, and lose all desire for life yourself?

Or suppose you were a little girl and had been taught that girls could not possibly learn anything? Suppose that you were so anxious for even the tiniest bits of knowledge that you would climb up on your stilts and listen through the oil-paper windows of the school? How would you feel to hear that girls could really learn something; that a woman teacher was coming to the village, who would teach you of the Jesus religion that said even girl babies were worth while, and that little girls could go to school?

Or again if you were a little boy whose corn that he was so eagerly watching because he belonged to a Boys' Corn Club had been cut down by an angry father, do you think you would run ten miles at night to save the corn of the other boys?

All of these stories, and five others which the children will thoroughly enjoy are told in "The Honorable Crimson Tree," a book of Mission studies, especially prepared for use in Sunday school classes or Willing Workers Societies. They are stories which can be read or told to children, while the many illustrations make the book especially interesting. Get a copy now and use it alternate Sundays in your class. The cost is slight, 40 cents in paper, and 60 cents in cloth. It can be purchased of the Missionary Education Movement, Fifth Avenue, New York City. C. B. Riddle, Burlington, N. C., will secure it for you. If you want to use it with helps to make it more realistic, add ten cents for a pamphlet telling you how to do it.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT— HOLLAND

Since it has pleased God in His infinite wisdom to take from our midst, Mr. Joseph F. Holland we feel our Society has lost one of its loyal members. He was a good and kind man, Be it Resolved:

1. That we bow in submission to the will of God Who doeth all things well.

2. That we offer his bereaved family and friends our heart-felt sympathy and commend to them the Savior as a Comforter and guide.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be entered upon our Society records, a copy sent to the bereaved family, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

MRS. NOVELLA HOLLAND,
MRS. E. M. TILGHMAN,
MRS. CHAS. DAUGHTRY.

SHARPE

Jesse Boon Sharpe died at his home near Haw River, N. C., October 11, 1919, aged 51 years, 4 months and 1 day. He leaves a wife and six children. His wife is a daughter of Anderson Thomas and a relative of Joe Thomas, "The White Pilgrim."

Mr. Sharpe was interested in the church and other things pertaining to the Kingdom of Christ. He was a member of the Junior Order and representatives of the Order were pall bearers and took part in the committal service at the grave.

A friend of his said to me, "A good man has gone." It was a beautiful tribute from one who knew him well.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer at Long's Chapel in the presence of a large audience. The interment was in the church cemetery. May the dear Master comfort those who mourn.

P. H. FLEMING.

BRYANT

John N. Bryant was born in Southampton County, Virginia, in 1842 and died at his home in Isle of Wight County, near Zuni, Va., October 2, 1919, being in his seventy-seventh year. The funeral service was conducted at his home by Rev. Mr. Brooks, pastor of Black Creek Baptist church, of which he was a member, and his remains were carried to Southampton for burial.

Mr. Bryant was twice married. His first marriage was to Miss Eliza J. Camp.

To this union were born seven children; four sons and three daughters. His second marriage was to Miss Anna Hatfield. To this union were born six children; three sons and three daughters, all of whom are living. "Asleep in Jesus, Blessed Sleep." We miss you father, but our miss is your gain.

M. T. BARRETT.

CANNADA

Mrs. Margaret Cannada was born in 1844 and died September 13, 1919. She leaves three step-children and five children of her own: Mrs. A. M. Culberson, Durham, N. C.; Thomas C. Cannada, Durham, N. C.; Mrs. Jennie Partin, Chapel Hill, N. C.; C. W. Cannada, St. Augustine, Fla., and B. C. Cannada, Durham, N. C. The step-children are: Mrs. J. W. Lashley, Durham, N. C.; Mrs. D. A. McLennan, Chapel Hill, N. C., and Mrs. Salima Morgan, Chapel Hill, N. C.

For many years Mrs. Cannada was a faithful member of the Christian Church. When the end came she expressed her readiness to meet God.

The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. B. J. Howard and the interment was made in the Damascus cemetery.

May the Spirit comfort the loved ones.

R. F. BROWN.

LINDSAY

William Leonard Lindsay, son of W. E. Lindsay of Chapel Hill, was born January 15, 1899 and died October 12, 1919, aged 20 years, 8 months and 27 days. He professed faith in Christ in his thirteenth year and united with the Christian Church. He lived a consistent Christian life and was loved by all who knew him. In the community, in the athletic field, on the University campus and in the Church and Sunday school he was very active until about a year ago when he was taken sick. Since that time he has been to a number of places trying to build up his shattered nerves which the influenza upset about a year ago. He was a brilliant young man, and but for his sickness and untimely death he would have graduated from the State University by the time he was 21 years old.

The funeral was conducted from the Chapel Hill Christian church of which the deceased was a member. The writer was assisted in the services by Rev. Mr. Baskin of the Baptist Church. The interment was made in the Chapel Hill cemetery. His grave was covered with beautiful flowers, and sprinkled with the tears of many relatives and friends.

May the Holy Spirit comfort the bereaved ones.

IDENTIFIED BY BIBLE

Many a man has found himself through his Bible. A striking instance of the establishment of the identity of a shell shocked soldier by means of his Testament was recently disclosed by a Red Cross worker.

A letter came into the Bureau of Communication at Washington, from an anxious mother in Oklahoma begging for information regarding her son, of whom she could learn nothing except that he was in some hospital in this country. Careful searching of the records of various army hospitals did not reveal the name of the soldier. At length a Red Cross visitor was dispatched to a hospital where mental cases are treated. A man by the surname of the soldier sought was discovered, and although the first name differed the searched decided to see him.

Tall, blonde and clean cut, the youth who was ushered into the receiving room at first appeared quite normal, but upon conversing with him the visitor discovered that his mind wandered perceptibly and he could give little definite information about himself. Collecting his possessions to show his caller, the boy brought forward, among other things, a well worn Testament. On the fly leaf was a name identical with that of the soldier sought.

The Red Cross worker begged the young man to loan the Bible to her, and he willingly complied with her request. She immediately dispatched the precious packet to the mother, asking if it belonged to her son. By return mail came a letter full of thanksgiving and praise of the Red Cross. The Testament was one which the Oklahoma boy had treasured from early childhood.

There was once a gentleman who wired a book concern for a copy of Murray's "Seekers After God." The answering telegram said, "No 'Seekers After God' in either New York or Chicago. Try Cincinnati."

Johnny: "Dad, there's a girl at our school whom we call Postscript."

Dad: "Postscript? What do you call her Postscript for?"

Johnny: "Cos her name is Adeline Moore."

Johnny came home from Sunday school quite thrilled by the lesson. "It was all about the Midnights," he said.

"The what?" asked his father. "The Midnights," repeated the boy. "The teacher told us how Gideon fought the Midnights and knocked the daylights out of 'em in no time."—Boston Transcript.

Take Note

The following points should be taken into consideration in placing an order for church offering envelopes:

1. A set means 52 envelopes, one for each Sunday in the year.
2. When cartons are ordered the sets are arranged in their logical order, thus making it convenient for the member. We suggest the use of cartons because of the convenience.

3. If you desire monthly, double or single envelopes, without cartons, 1-3 the price of the same number of weekly sets. Cartons 3-4 cent each.

4. Semi-monthly, double or single, in cartons, 2-3 the weekly price; without cartons 3-5 the weekly price.

5. When ordering state what Sunday that your church year begins, and whether you want the dates on envelopes or not.

6. Indicate the wording that you want placed on the envelopes or leave the same with us. Samples sent upon request.

7. Allow ten to fifteen days for delivery. Order early.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN

IN ESSENTIALS UNITY, IN NON-ESSENTIALS LIBERTY, IN ALL THINGS CHARITY

Is Man Progressive?

PROGRESS cannot come without a change. A change is not forsaking the old for new, but building upon the old, enlarging the old, and making it serve greater and better. A tree is beautiful because it develops. A flower is admired because it grows into loveliness, and a child is the favorite of parents because it grows into manhood or womanhood. The physical world is admired by more people than the mental world, and there is a reason. The physical world automatically changes and the mental world is at the mercy of mankind. Then, is man progressive?

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

"THOSE OLD TABLES"

We quote these words because they are what we have so often heard from printers when the tables on the Christian Annual had to be set (we have also heard other things not suitable to quote here—or elsewhere). We have seen the best linotype operators work for a whole day on setting the type on one page of this complicated matter. Then we have seen the hand compositor work for hours trying to get the figures to "line up"—and then when he felt sure that it was right, find that he was one line "off" and the whole thing had to be gone over. Was this the end of the trouble with "those old tables"? No. After hours of reading and comparing, space could not be found for the changes, and then back to the linotype operator, the make-up man and back to the proof reader for more long hours of tedious reading.

Expensive? Sure, and but few printers desire this class of work at any price.

Can there be any substitute for this Chinese puzzle and expensive work in a time like this when labor is scarce and wages high? Let us see if a change cannot be made, and how, and how to begin.

Let us take the Apportionment Table of Eastern Virginia Conference, since we have the Annual open on that page. This Conference apportioned for its churches last year $7,500.00. It took the setting of 1,587 separate figures to set the type in addition to the names of the churches, the funds to be used for, etc. Could this table have been condensed and served the same purpose? Here is the answer to it:

APPORTIONMENTS—1918-1919

CHURCHES:

Antioch	$ 235.00	Lamberts Pt.	51.00
Barrett's	37.00	Mt. Carmel	133.00
Berea (Nand.)	337.00	Mt. Zion	45.00
Berea (Norfolk)	157.00	Memorial Temple	388.00
Berkley	170.00	New Lebanon	97.00
Bethlehem	299.00	Newport News	106.00
Burton's Grove	51.00	Oakland	177.00
Cypress Chapel	215.00	Oak Grove	61.00
Centerville	58.00	Portsmouth	127.00
Damascus	202.00	Rosemont	100.00
Dendron	116.00	Salem	38.00
Eare's	131.00	South Norfolk	72.00
Franklin	200.00	Spring Hill	59.00
Holland	336.00	Suffolk	1,800.00
Holston	32.00	Third Church	154.00
Holy Neck	435.00	Union (South)	82.00
Isle of Wight	110.00	Union (Surry)	76.00
Ivor	34.00	Wakefield	68.00
Johnson's Grove	73.00	Waverly	283.00
Liberty Spring	241.00	Windsor	76.00

Total $7,500.00.

Here are forty churches listed in a space of about one-fourth the size of the original table, and set in one-fifteenth the time.

This gets by with the list of churches and the total each one is apportioned, also the total amount asked of the whole group of churches. How can we indicate to each church what its apportionment is to go for? This question will have to be answered, and so let us do it by first asking another question: Are the local churches not generous enough to let the Conference make out its budget and designate this on a percentage basis as to its use? What we mean is this: The churches above listed were asked to raise $7,500.00—and each church told what its part was to be; and what made matters complicated was the setting forth in tabulated form how this was to be divided with each local church. Why not, on a percentage basis, indicate the distribution of the $7,500.00 and let the local churches understand that the basis on which this is distributed would constitute about their per cent proportion to each fund? Concretely here it is:

Total Conference Apportionment—$7,500.00

Funds:	Per cent
Home Missions	23
Foreign Missions	19
Education	3
Superannuated	2
Conference	8
Convention	10
Elton College	20
Convention Missions	20
Total	100%

(Note that the above percentages do not exactly tally with totals given in the Annual, but are approximate and indicate what we mean).

The above, together with the names of the churches and the amounts they are apportioned, is all that is required in mechanical work for the table, and at the same time simplifies the matter for the local churches.

This does not, as you have observed, provide for the general table showing what each church actually paid. If the apportionment is arranged as we have suggested, the next year will provide for that. For instance, a church is apportioned, say $233.00, as the first church in our list was apportioned, you will have:

Churches	Apportioned	Paid
Antioch	$233.00	$248.50

Your argument may be that if the local church is apportioned a fixed sum, that it should know where and how that the amount is to go. Very well, but as stated above the local churches must know this—that about the proportional percent division of the sum total will be their basis of paying to each fund, and that the Conference should be wise enough to make the proper distribution. And does the Conference not make the division anyway when it fixes the apportionment?

What advantages will come from this new arrangement? Here they are:

1. It will lessen the task of the Apportionment Committee.
2. It will simplify the Conference work.
3. It will take details off your Conference treasurer.
4. It will lessen and simplify the work of the treasurer of the local church. He will not have to keep separate all the funds.
5. It will save money and conserve labor, two things the Church advocates.
6. It will educate the local churches to see that they are building into a unified program, and that the Conference is their servant.

The table giving the church officers, pastors, etc., is very simple as it is, though it could be remedied. However, we will leave that for a later discussion and await the consideration of the brethren on what we have already suggested.

"The only real heretic among ministers is the man who refuses to do anything for himself. But if he thinks wider than the Church or in advance of it, nothing more is demanded of him than that he prove by his clear reasoning and his unimpeached character that his conclusions are worth while."

NOVEMBER EIGHTH-NINTH

We feel that November 8-9 will be a period of worth while history making for the women of the North Carolina Conference. This date is to be the time for the meeting of the first united session of Woman's Missionary Societies of the Eastern, Western, and North Carolina and Virginia Conferences. The Societies in the three former Conferences have had the same objectives, plans, purposes and programs. Leaders from one section have often inspired and encouraged workers in another section. They have now come together for greater encouragement, more inspiration and wiser counsel. We entertain the hope that every church embraced by the North Carolina Conference will be represented by at least one delegate. Whether your church has a Missionary Society or not, it would be a fine idea to send a representative woman to investigate and see if a Missionary Society is not worth while.

The officers have planned, prayed and sacrificed that a GREAT session may be possible, and we feel satisfied that the churches will meet this challenge by a full representation. See notices in this issue of THE SUN and heed the call. It is worthy.

"Small men are not sufficient for the Christian ministry today. The world has thrown down the challenge to the Church, and the Church must respond with men big enough to grapple with the world and subdue it to the dominion of Christ. The ministry is the big opportunity for the man who is big enough to grasp it."

A QUESTION FOR THE HERALD

Speaking for ourselves and many others, we question The Herald of Gospel Liberty why it does not publish the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor topics one week earlier? We presume that the majority of Herald subscribers get the paper in time to use the comments, but often The Herald does not reach this part of the Brotherhood until Saturday and sometimes Sunday. At any event the material on these topics must be used at the last moment.

We have too much "on the spur of the moment" preparation for Sunday school teaching to say nothing of those who are taught. A prepared class develops a prepared teacher.

Why not The Herald serve all of its constituency with its able comments on the Sunday school lesson and Christian Endeavor topic? Will Editor Kerr tell us?

THE SOUL OF THE INDIAN

In discussing "the Soul of the Indian" at the conference for Christian workers among Indians, held recently in Wichita, Kansas, under the auspices of the Joint Committee on Indian Missions of the Home Missions Council, the Right Reverent Hugh L. Burleson, D. D., Bishop of South Dakota, said: "The American Indian is a natural poet and philosopher, a mystic and dreamer. He is more naturally religious than the white man, he has a sense of the Divine Presence. He has a craving for guidance. He is not stolid; he only wants you to show that you care. He has a social concept of life; he thinks in terms of the group. Even his thriftlessness and his lust for blood revenge spring from his identifying himself and others with the group. The Indian problem is really the problem of the white man to get him to treat the Indian with due regard for the latter's soul and personality."

Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings, he shall not stand before mean men. Prov. 22:29. It is the moral support of capital back of him that gives the diligent man dignity in the presence of the king.

ANOTHER INCREASE

The Christian Observer, Louisville, Ky. was once two dollars the year and then went up to two and a half. It now announces to its readers that the price will soon go to three dollars the year. We feel safe in saying that the advanced price will not much more than pay actual expenses.

This is only another reminder of the problem that is before THE SUN. It is now costing about two and one-half dollars per subscription per year to issue THE SUN and it is being sold at two dollars the year. The difference is made up by the Convention, and this means that no subscriber pays for all he gets, though two men (and one woman) have written during the last three years that the paper is not worth the price.

The paper on which THE SUN is printed is costing three cents more per pound than it did four months ago, and one and one-half cents more than it did sixty days ago. This means that THE SUN is to cost more each week than it did a few weeks ago and the price to remain the same. Slowly we are adding on a few more subscribers which will also increase the cost per issue, though the additional income will help to offset this.

As a matter for Conferences and the Convention members to consider is this: No man can continue to edit THE SUN on the present salary, unless the Convention can find a man who has the time to sacrifice and can live from some other source. If the work is worth placing on par with a good pastorate (and if working ten hours a day, and seven days to the week is any comparison, it is) then the extra cost is to be realized from some source. The Convention is to provide for that source, unless it can operate THE SUN without it.

This message is not out of season. It will suffice for the time to say it on Conference floors. It will be an advanced notice of some of the things that delegates elected by present Conferences will have to consider at the next Convention. And let it be remembered that we are not speaking for the present incumbent but for the benefit of the Church.

This one another thought: Not only will the Convention have to provide for an adequate salary, but a supplement fund to meet incidental expenses. The present plan does not provide for that, and too often must the Editor meet expense that he cannot avoid and get by with decent treatment to the public.

Of course the Convention will provide, but this note is to inform the people so that what they are called upon to do will not be foreign to them.

"God wants a man to preach the Gospel. If I am that man how can I justify myself before Him if I evade this work?"

HELP THE ORPHANAGES

We present in this issue of THE SUN an appeal from the Publicity Committee of the North Carolina Orphanage Association. The appeal is worthy of a place in this paper and the institutions of North Carolina that are doing so much for the homeless children are worthy of your consideration. These institutions depend, largely, upon the free-will offerings of the people. The money is wisely expended and goes to help those who cannot help themselves.

Set aside the earnings of one day's labor and send it to whichever orphanage you desire. You will be richly blessed by the act, a good cause helped and some child given a better opportunity. Don't forget it. Put it on your note book. Put it on your heart.

"There is hope for the world and for the Church when so many young men deliberately repudiate careers that appeal directly to self-interest and turn to careers that mean sacrifice and service."

HAVE YOUR CHURCH REPRESENTED

The North Carolina Conference is soon to meet. Will your church be represented? This is the initial session of the united Conference and it is the privilege of every church to be well represented in this session.

Whether you believe it or not, a new day of opportunity for service is upon us. Great things are in store for the churches of the North Carolina Conference. Local churches must see that the best plans are laid, the wisest steps taken and the Kingdom's work enlarged. These are the things that challenge the churches of the North Carolina Conference.

We pity that church that does not have leadership and pride enough to be represented at the annual Conference. What is the answer of your church to the call for delegates? Will the answer please the Master? See that your church is represented. See to it at once.

"World forces are struggling now to decide the destiny of all humanity for generations to come. The time has passed forever when the Gospel can be preached only in terms of local needs."

YOUR WINTER'S READING

The long winter nights are approaching and many of us will have more time for a wider reading. The time is now at hand when we should select several good papers for that purpose. It is a tragedy for the members of the family to have no more to do than to idle away time after the evening meal. Each member of the family capable of reading should have suitable pieces of reading matter. The children should have good books and papers, and the older members something to please and satisfy them.

What are you going to read this winter? How do you plan to spend the winter evening? If this paper can serve and assist, call upon us.

"The Church needs ministers, more of them and of a better sort."

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

The North Carolina Conference, representing the former Eastern, Western, and Carolina and Virginia Conference, holds its initial session at Burlington, November 11-14. Each church is expected to send at least two delegates. Churches with 150 members may send three, and those with 200 or more members, four.

Church letters and the tentative program and other literature has been sent to every church and we hope for a blessed session.

Let us pray for the Conference and for a full representation.

W. A. HARPER, Secretary.

NOTICE! NOTICE!

The Committee on Home Assignment for the North Carolina Conference, which meets with the Burlington Church November 11-14, is now ready to receive a list of delegates and visitors from each church. Give the following information when you report: 1. What church you represent; 2. On what day you will arrive; 3. How you expect to come, whether by private conveyance or train; 4. How long you will stay, unless you expect to attend the entire session, which we hope you will.

Trains arrive in Burlington as follows: Going east, 8:10 and 10:08 A. M.; also 4:55 P. M. Trains going west arrive at 5:32 and 11:20 A. M.; 6:30 and 9:23 P. M.

Everything possible will be done to give each visitor and delegate a good home, but we ask that the Committee be notified in due time. Notify the undersigned today.

SUFFOLK LETTER

For many years I have held the opinion, and several times have written that the United States should require aliens, who come to this country to reside, to drop foreign languages and learn American English; that newspapers should not be printed in alien languages; that ministers should not preach in a foreign tongue; and that we should have "one country, one language, one flag." This conviction grows upon me in the light of current events. There can be no coherent nation without unity of language. European nations are groups of human language. People who speak the same language, think in the same terms, are united in purpose and life.

The Lord said of those who began to build a city and a "tower whose top may reach heaven," "Behold, the people is one, and they have one language; nothing will be restrained from them, which they purpose to do." "Let us confound their language, that they may not understand one another's speech." "So the Lord scattered them upon the face of all the earth; and they left off to build the city." It was the confusion of tongues that stopped the work. It will stop good work as well as evil work. A conference of many languages would reach no conclusion without an interpreter to reduce the languages to one language. They called the name of this tower "Babel," because the Lord did confound the language of all the earth. That confusion of tongues to prevent united and converted evil divided the human race; hence the division is language division. The race seems to have been united until divided language came.

In ancient Greece where learning reached the climax, the nation was divided by dialects, and those dialects were always at war with one another. So vital is the matter of language in the unity of the race and the welfare of society, that degrees of education and character separate men into groups on the principle of "birds of a feather flock together." There are intellectual groups or clubs, moral and social groups or clubs, based on the language they use in ordinary conversation. University men and illiterates do not associate on intimate terms, though they speak the same language; all greater difference between people who speak a different language. Men of vulgar speech and men of chaste speech do not group; the language of character keeps them apart. Language is a divider or unifier. A democracy cannot exist in safety in the midst of divided language. America must maintain her own language or lose her own freedom. It is even folly to teach modern languages in the schools. It is a vulgar truckle to another language to put social cards and hotel menu cards in French. If our language is not good enough for our use, let us make it better or move to a foreign country. Patriotism is locked up in language. The man who does not love our English does not love our flag. We have the best flag on earth. We have the best language on earth. We have the best government on earth. We have the best people on earth. But they could all be made better, if we had one language. Silence alien speech; beat out alien print; close alien schools; expel alien plots; unify the hundred million souls in the United States, then Christianize the hundred million souls, and it will be a nation invincible, a nation whose God is the Lord.

PLEASANT GROVE—INGRAM

Rural conditions are such that country churches can no longer hope to thrive in a passive, inactive manner. Times were when church services were a natural thing coming for country folks as regularly, irresistibly, monthly as for the moon itself. That time has passed. Just as has the incandescent lights robbed the country moon of some of its glory just so has modern travel, communication and attraction won large masses away from the old type of country church. The modern newspaper makes the one time popular long "talk" by the minister before he begins his discourse unnecessary.

The printed page has changed the preacher's possibility of holding an audience for two and a half hours. The farmers' systematic book-keeping, systematic banking, and modern methods of making their crops have revolutionized their ideas of what every other institution or enterprise with which they come in contact ought to be. The farmer is no longer a "hay seed" if he has ever merited the title. His is a business. Crops no longer come inadvertently, but by thoughtful and pains-taking planning along with the laboring. The farmer is no longer ignorant of the methods of insurance and banking houses and he has now to actually cope with the industrial establishments. He demands, therefore, that his church be no longer a passive, inactive institution in his community.

The writer is fully aware of the fact that these are not entirely new ideas. It does not take a prophet to see them for the things mentioned are already material of historians.

Pleasant Grove and Ingram, striving ever to keep abreast of the times, have employed their pastor for his full time. His salary is adequate, and they expect him to be a student of the country church problem. For a country pastor to be a real pastor he must study his Bible and his particular field. In my study I have found the following books of great value: "The Challenge of the Open Country," by G. W. Fiske; "The Making of a Country Parish," by Harlowe S. Miles; "The Church of the Open Country," by W. H. Wilson; "The Country Life Movement," by L. H. Bailey; "The Country Church," by C. O. Gill and Gifford Pinchot; "Modern Methods in the Country Church," by M. B. McNutt; "The Rural Church," by Henry Wallace; "The Country Church and the Rural Problem," by K. L. Butterfield; and "The Country Church in the South," by Victor I. Masters. But for the actual study of your own parish I have found nothing better than the method and outline of a country church survey prepared by Ralph A. Felton and published by the Missionary Education Movement, 156 Fifth Ave., New York. It contains blank spaces after 47 questions concerning each individual family in a community. It is a complete and neat volume and is well bound. It is entitled "The Study of a Rural Church."

SINGING CLASS MAKES TRIP

On the third Saturday morning our singing class boarded the East bound train for Eastern Virginia with Franklin, Va. as our destination. We reached Franklin about seven o'clock P. M., and were met there by Brother B. D. Jones and two of his friends, and they carried us out to his home for supper. After supper our little folks were carried to the homes where they were to be entertained. On Sunday morning at eleven o'clock the class rendered its song service at Holy Neck church, and at four in the afternoon at Liberty Spring and at Holland at eight o'clock at night.

We had a splendid audience at each church and the interest was fine. Our little folks did their best and we trust they made a favorable impression on those who heard them.

The people did all in their power to make our visit pleasant and happy and showed us every kindness possible. There are no better people than the people of Eastern Virginia and their homes are your homes while with them.

Brother J. M. Darden, of Suffolk, Va., was with us at all three services and made very impressive talks in behalf of the Orphanage work. Brother Darden is a very warm friend of the Orphanage and the little children here have a very warm place in his hearts for him.

We want to thank each one who so kindly conveyed the children from place to place and assure them that we are very grateful for each act of kindness shown.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: I will write and send my dues for September and October. I hope all the cousins are having a jolly time. It is cold and rainy today so I can't go outside to play. I can have a good time playing with my dolls anyway. Love to all the cousins.—Irene Patton.

It is a smart little girl that can make herself happy all the time whether it is sunshine or rain. I love little girls like that.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: I will send my dues for September and October. It is not long until Thanksgiving Day. Hope the little cousins will have lots of good things to eat that day, and I hope I will too. Lots of love to you and the cousins.—Pauline Trotter.

One man has promised us a turkey for Thanksgiving and I know the boys will eat an opossum and will dig our potatoes by that time. We hope to have a good dinner.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: Here I come with my dues for September and October. Hope all the cousins are well and having a good time. I am going to school now. With lots of love to you and the cousins.—Richard Bost.

You must study hard in school and make good grades and stand at the head of your class. Always set your ideal high and then strive to reach it.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley: Here I come with my dues for September and October. It is only a short time until Christmas. I am looking for Old Santa Claus then. I hope he will find the way to the Orphanage and give each child something real nice. I hope he won't forget me. Enclosed please find twenty cents. Love to all.—Lois Stout.

I truly hope “Old Santa” will visit you and the orphans Christmas.—“Uncle Charley.”

REMEMBER THE ORPHANAGES THANKSGIVING

The managements of our charitable institutions are making patriotic efforts to adjust their work to the demands of changed conditions which have added materially to and made more essential most of the normal demands upon their resources. Some of the orphan homes are finding difficulty in continuing their splendid work, even on the same or a reduced scale, with applications for admission accumulating that must, of necessity, be declined for lack of facilities to warrant reasonable expansion.

It is no small task even in normal times to secure sufficient funds for the maintenance of the orphanage work, and important departments in a number of the orphan homes have been handicapped on account of this state of affairs. The talk about the needs of these institutions may become tiresome to some, but if the people are to sustain them they must know something of existing conditions. During the present abnormal times, with increasing demands of every sort which the war has made on philanthropy, it becomes necessary to keep our orphanage work before the people. Hitherto the editors of the State have cheerfully co-operated with the committee in bringing to the attention of our charitably inclined people the imperative needs of our homes for dependent children. We again, and most respectfully, ask this favor.

The suggestion of one day's income is reasonable. Not one person in a hundred is unable to contribute of their income to that extent—and all can assist in bringing the matter to the attention of the people.

The Publicity Committee therefore makes its appeal—

1. To the prince of business to give out of his abundance the actual or estimated income of a day.

2. To the landlord and money-lender to give one day's rent of his houses and land, or one day's interest on his money.

3. To the professional man to give one day's earnings, specifying the day, or taking the average day.

4. To the salaried worker to give his or her salary for a day.

5. To the laborers, with only pick-up jobs, to devote some special day to this cause.

6. To the good housewife, with her ingenuity and devotion, to set apart the expenses of a day.

7. To the boys and girls, with no regular income, to find work after school hours, or on some Saturday, and give the proceeds to the orphans.

8. To everybody, old and young, rich and poor, learned and unlearned, we appeal to join heartily in this holy movement to visit the fatherless in their adversity.

We call upon the editors of our papers, daily and weekly, secular and religious, to give the widest publicity to this movement, which is philanthropic in purpose and state-wide in extent; we call upon all church leaders of all denominations, including pastors, Sunday school superintendents, women workers, and others of influence, to urge in their respective congregations the giving of a day's income at Thanksgiving to the orphanage of their choice.

We call upon State and county officers and the officers of the various fraternal orders to bring this movement to the attention of their official families and the members of their respective organizations and enlist them in this extra offering. We admonish teachers, doctors, lawyers, merchants, manufacturers, and all others with local following and influence to induce their friends to unite with them in giving, at next Thanksgiving, a day's work, or wages of a day, to the needy orphan children of North Carolina.

Each of the twenty child-caring institutions in this State is worthy of all the encouragement a generous-hearted people may feel disposed to offer, and we will not realize the full delights of service to humanity until we provide adequate protection for those bereft of parents and denied the comforts of happy home. It was the Master who said: “Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven.”

Men and women of North Carolina, will you suffer them? Answer during the Thanksgiving season by forwarding the income of a day to the orphanage of your choice, through your church, your Sunday school, your lodge, or direct.

The call is urgent. It is our hope that few, if any, will hear it in vain, but that thousands of big-hearted North Carolinians may respond cheerfully and generously at the appointed time.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

WHY YOUNG MEN SIDE STEP THE MINISTRY

Three Objections in the Light of the Big Challenge

By A. M. Trawick, in Epworth Era

Conferences and private interviews with young men during the past ten years have disclosed three leading objections to the Christian ministry as a life calling. They are:

First, the belief that other forms of service are more congenial to men who believe in the social mission of Christianity than is the ministry.

Secondly, the conviction that the ministry is so restricted by tradition and authority that it does not offer opportunity for the development of independent manhood.

Thirdly, a cordial dislike of certain types of ministers and mannerisms that seem to be invariably associated with this calling.

It is distinctly creditable to young men that in such large numbers they are moved by appeals to unselfish service. There is hope for the world and for the church when so many young men deliberately repudiate careers that appeal directly to self-interest and turn to careers that mean sacrifice and service. If any man has definitely decided that he can serve God and humanity best by entering upon the work of social settlements, charity organizations, labor adjustments, race relations, or any other useful occupation, we would not by any word of ours discourage him or seek to turn him aside from his chosen calling. But we should like a definite word with a man who is undecided and who thinks the ministry does not offer him a full opportunity for social service.

The church is not wholly lacking in a great social passion and in social effort. Witness its tremendous influence in the prohibition movement, the missionary movement, the Centenary campaign. It will soon be ready to throw the full weight of its collective conscience into other unsolved social problems, such as industrial readjustment, race relationship, and sex education. The church will ultimately have more to do in giving a correct interpretation to the Industrial Workers of the World and Bolshevism than any other agency in the world. The church will give the final guarantees of a world peace, otherwise lasting guarantees will never be found.

Many ministers and strong leaders in the church, we frankly admit, attempt to draw a sharp distinction between what they call an individual gospel and a social gospel, and discredit the one in favor of the other. All such distinctions are largely matters of emphasis upon different aspects of the same gospel. The church must put its emphasis upon both aspects of the gospel, and there is every indication that the church is friendly to any man who comes with a sane, all-round interpretation of the spirit of the greatest social Teacher, Jesus Christ. A Christian minister with a passion for social organization and service can do more than any other man to destroy snobbery, caste, and autocracy in the church. He can direct the group instincts of men into their highest spiritual development, and he can help the church escape the spiritual tragedy which overtakes it when it thinks more of its own life than of the broader life of the kingdom of God.

A keen social vision and social passion are not, therefore, a sufficient reason why men should turn aside from the Christian ministry. It is, on the contrary, a strong reason why they should examine the ministry in the light of its larger opportunities to do work that shall have permanent meaning for the whole of society.

A second group of men object to the ministry on the ground that it is so hedged about with traditions and obedience to authorities that it fails to grant the fullest freedom of self-development. The objection is expressed in such words as these: "I do not believe everything the church teaches. I am not willing to let some other man determine what I shall think and what I shall preach. My life is my own, and I must live it without arbitrary restraint and limitation." If the church undertook to limit a man's thinking to what had already been thought by the authorities, alive or dead, there would be force in this objection. But the church undertakes no such thing. The intellectual life of the ministry is embraced in the motto, "Think and let think." The only real heretic among ministers is the man who refuses to do anything for himself. But if he thinks wider than the church or in advance of it, nothing more is demanded of him than that he prove by his clear reasoning and his unimpeached character that his conclusions are worth while.

The law, medicine, politics, business—all are hedged about by tradition and inherited beliefs, yet all of them afford an opportunity for the display of independent character. The Christian ministry is not less friendly to men of aggressive leadership into new realms of thought. The ministry offers one of the best opportunities in the world to test the character-making value of a new truth. If any man has discovered a new truth or a new application of an old truth and can demonstrate its power in building up human life, the church will hear him. But it is useless to parade an old error that has already been outgrown.

The objection we are now considering is based ultimately upon a misconception of the purpose of the ministry in the church. The church sends out its ministers not to set up the final boundaries of human thinking, but to keep alive the soul of man in the midst of the world. How the spirit of men would shrivel and crumple up if some one did not continually preach the eternal word of God in the midst of human affairs! In spite of all its limitations, this is what the church wants its ministers to do. It has a message from God to the world, and this message it must deliver by the human voice into human ears. In spite of all their dullness and bewildering half light, this is what Christian ministers really want to say to the world. The spirit of man is a priceless treasure, and the ministers are God's agents in safeguarding it.

It is a trivial matter to charge that the ministry is surrounded by tradition and the opinions of dead masters. The ministry is not hampered by much excess baggage of this kind. Just enough burden of this sort is put on a man to help him keep his feet on the ground. The church leaders do not claim any inside information touching the mind of God which is not open to any honest inquirer. The ministry offers every devout man an opportunity to think to the bottom of every proposition relating to God and humanity, and a spirit of vantage from which to speak his conclusions.

Increasing numbers of young men side-step the ministry because they dislike certain manners and customs which they have seen in ministers. A catalogue of their objections would embrace the following items: The "holy tone" adopted in prayers and public speech; a peculiar style of dress; the title "Reverend"; private graft in the form of special railroad rates, reduced tuition at college, marriage fees, poundings, and the like; isolation from a real man's life in the community; the easy assumption of superiority in matters relating to the spiritual life; the preacher's terrifying solemnity when some one addresses him as "Doctor." And much more of the same sort.

There is no reason in the world why young men should not heartily dislike all these things in a minister's life. This is part of the junk which ministers have inherited and acquired, and all of it can be swept away as rubbish. But there is no reason why we should sweep out the preacher with his rubbish. Many preachers have already freed themselves of their junk. It is wise to think of the ministry in terms of its ideal, not in terms of its non-essentials.

None of the objections men bring against the ministry or the ministers touch the vital core of the question. It is God's will that men should preach the gospel. Some men must do it even at the peril of their lives. If any one man has the right to dodge this solemn obligation, why has not every other man the same right? What, then, becomes of the spiritual life if a man can obey the will of God or not, just as he pleases? Young men must face this issue without finching: "God wants a man to preach the gospel. If I am that man, how can I justify myself before him if I evade this life work?"

If a man recognizes the voice of God calling him to this work, why should he want to get away from it? It is a life work full of marvelous opportunities. Dealing with the spiritual facts of life becomes the minister's one occupation. Pointing out the ways of God to a half-blind world becomes his daily task. He is God's messenger to the sorrowing, the weak, the failing, and the strong. He deals with men and groups of men with communities, nations, races, and world-wide humanity. There is joy in a minister's life, rich compensation for all the limitation he endures, constant growth in the unfolding of ways to serve men. The attraction of the ministry is the opportunity it puts in a man's hand for multiplying himself a thousand times over to do good in the world.

The church needs ministers, more of them and of a better sort. There are in the United States literally hundreds of small towns and villages that have no preaching in them and millions of people who have never had the Bible taught to them. Still more millions in non-Christian lands are waiting to hear for the first time what the will of God means for them. But preaching in new and forgotten fields is only a small part of the minister's privilege today. Men need a gospel that is as big as the critical times through which they are passing. World forces are struggling now to decide the destiny of all humanity for generations to come. The time has passed forever when the gospel can be preached simply in terms of local needs or of national life. The church must have ministers who can preach a big gospel, a gospel as big as the problems of the world. Small men are not sufficient for the Christian ministry today. The world has thrown down the challenge to the church, and the church must respond with men big enough to grapple with the world and subdue it to the dominion of Christ. The ministry is the big opportunity for the man who is big enough to grasp it.

HOW GOD CALLS TO THE MINISTRY

By Rev. W. E. Snyder, D. D., in The Watchword.

Just how God calls we cannot always tell, for he deals in different ways with different personalities. But one thing is certain in every case. The individual has an inner consciousness that God is dealing with him or her, a spiritual conviction that God wants him or her to do a certain thing. That matter must be settled between the individual and God alone.

Then, "there is a human side to a divine call. God calls and man calls out. It is doubted whether there is a preacher or missionary in all the world who was not influenced by some word of some friend or loved one at the time of his surrender to God's will."

God works through individuals and agencies in fulfilling his purposes. There are three agencies which he especially uses in securing recruits for his work, and these should be as one in their relation to the kingdom.

1. The home. Ministers and missionaries almost invariably come from godly homes; seldom if ever from homes of worldliness or wealth.

2. The Christian college. Church schools must supply kingdom leaders. Not one minister or missionary in fifty is the product of a secular college. One of the best services a person can render to the cause of Christ is to support Christian colleges and turn young people to them for their education.

3. The church. To do its duty fully the church must be spiritual and evangelistic. Life Work Recruits are usually born in revivals, and invariably in a spiritual atmosphere. There is something vitally wrong in a church that is not sending its proper quota of recruits into the kingdom as well as winning souls to Christ.

Then, underlying all this, whether in the home, college, or church, is the spirit of prayer. Christ's formulae for securing recruits is: "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into his harvest." It was when the church at Antioch was fasting and praying that the Holy Spirit said, "Separate unto me Saul and Barnabas for the work whereunto I have called them."

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

ROOM UP HIGHER

In cities, it often occurs, where land is valuable and much needed space is desirable, they dig down deeply, lay solid foundations and build houses many stories high to make more room above. On and on, up and up they continue to work to make more room above until structures strong, grand and imposing are completed with ample room to accommodate the increasing population.

When Daniel Webster was a young man he went to Boston to practice law, and he inquired of some of the older lawyers of the city if there was any room for a young lawyer to begin his practice. The answer from all he consulted was: "There is no room—the place is full of great lawyers already." "Well," said Webster, "there is room up higher, and I will try to go up." He rented a place, put out his sign, and went to work. Being a man of fine personal appearance, full of energy and industrious, he very soon commanded respect and attention and from the start did a prosperous business as a lawyer.

When Bunker Hill monument was dedicated, Webster was invited to deliver the address. He accepted the invitation and prepared himself for that memorable day, and when the hour came he was in place and ready to deliver it, but the great crowd of people obstructed the place set apart for the different orders to take part in the exercises, and the man who was master of ceremonies said, "It is impossible for these orders to perform their duties when all the space set apart for that purpose has been filled." Then Webster arose, saying with his magnetic look and intense earnestness, "Ladies and gentlemen, fellow citizens of Boston, please move back and give us a little more room; for there is nothing impossible with the American people." They could not refuse his eloquent request and moved back at once, making the needed room. Then Webster proceeded with his matchless oratorical ability, and delivered one of the greatest addresses of his life, which charmed and thrilled the large audience assembled to hear him. On that glad day he made room up higher for himself, and continued to go up into the upper stories of thought and action until he soared higher above some of the lawyers who tried to discourage him when he needed their encouragement and sympathy. That great ambition which he so nobly demonstrated greatly helped him to hold on to the rungs of the ladder of industry by which he climbed to almost great heights of literary distinction and eminent statesmanship.

There is room above in every department of human progress, and it matters but little where your work is, nor what it is, there is room for improvement. It will cost you time, energy and some means in many ways, but keep going, and keep right on until the tip top is reached and the cap stone put on with your work completed.

Not long ago in one of our large cities fire flamed out in a high story of a great building. All the family had escaped except a little boy. The fireman started up the ladder as a last resort to bring him down, but the smoke and fire were too much for him; the dense smoke and the long, red tongue of fire forbade his going up, but a voice in the crowd below said: "Let us cheer the fireman." Then at once came the shout from a thousand anxious ones: "Go up and in and bring down the boy." At this cheering burst of encouragement, he went up and brought him down to the admiration of all, and to the loving embrace of his dear mother.

In life there are dangerous, difficult ways to travel, and it will take a brave, true heart to pass them, but when a man of the moment steps to the front amid the cheers and encouragement of his friends he goes proudly on to success. Don't forget there is plenty of room up higher.

THESE FINE OCTOBER DAYS

During these supernal Indian summer days of gladness and etherial mildness many thoughtful ones have been drawn nearer to God in earnest contemplation of His goodness and loving kindness to the children of His creation. Our minds, in passing out beyond the sunlit blue, the star-lit blue, the moon-lit blue, beyond the far away blue searching after God, came back to us through unmeasured space with this anxious four worded question: What has God wrought? Surrounded by the constellated beauty of so many distant, mysterious shining worlds the eloquent and sublime question, so full of interest may be repeated by the angels as they wing their way, with unbroken praise, from star to star, and through still brighter, silent worlds: What has God wrought?

These lovely autumn days and scenes, admirable and delightful. Seen, felt and greatly enjoyed by so many delighted ones. Many will have something to say about this beautiful pleasant October weather, and poets will try their smooth numbers of praise. Songs, high and low, short and long will be heard as they are sweetly sounded by voice, keyed and stringed instruments and blended into lovely strains of universal admiration and praise of these incomparable days.

The sun never shone with more brightness nor its flash of light more full of boundless profusion. Yes, even in the sun-set hour, the evening twilight and the aurora of the morning light, all are worthy of our dearest admiration and profoundest love.

These mild, calm, soft autumn days when religious and love songs are sung and heard by listening and delighted multitudes while all nature, arrayed in such wonderful beauty, smiles and helps us to move on with glad hearts through dominions, empires and quick moving worlds, the imagination and the realization are greatly helped with such contemplation and scenes.

When God made the stars and suspended them in space with the tips of His fingers it was at once a work of perfection. The work of His whole creation needed no finishing touch; no repairing or remodeling. It was at once a perfect work—a product of His great wisdom and power. A most inconceivable work, yet it is true. We do not doubt it; it is before us, plainly seen and fully realized. We live, think, move and act, playing our little part each day upon this mysterious stage. Some of us know so little about even this world, our present home, that we cannot say much about it. But we can admire, praise and love this great exhibition of God's providence.

Some might be inclined to think His works would wear out, but they will last forever. The world has revolved on its invisible axis for unknown centuries, and it moves as fast, steady and noiseless today as it ever did. God's works need no patents as do the works of men. They need no touch of the artist's brush—they lack nothing. He made and gave to His world's perpetual motion, and they have been running all the time since. Science has tried hard and long to discover perpetual motion, but failed to find it. When God said, "Let there be light," He touched something connecting His extensive works and light flashed with electric swiftness and divine radiance from world to world.

As we look out upon the unbounded blue we are lost in thought, wonder, love and adoration. The forest looks somewhat like it is blazing with the fire of an October sun, and the trees which rustled in their green summer dress are changing into russet and many other attractive colors. They appear so lovely as they wave their last farewell to summer. They never attire themselves in black mourning costume, but even to the very last present a cheerful brightness to an admiring world. That is the best way for them to dress. It makes us feel better in their elegant styles with no mourners in thin black dresses to trail in sad remembrance of a glad or unhappy past.

Painter's brush and sculptor's chisel may paint and carve, pen may write; oratory, romance, and poetry may tell with amazing description, but none except the eye which sees nature can fully appreciate its beauty.

I dare not tell how high I rate humor, which is most fruitful in the highest and most solemn spirits. Dante is full of it; Shakespeare, Cervantes, and almost all the greatest have been pregnant with this glorious power. You will find it even in the gospel of Christ.—Tennyson.

NOTES

The Editor is this week at Waverly, Virginia, attending the Eastern Virginia Conference.

We have been calling upon the people this month to renew their accounts and the response has been beautiful. We appreciate the co-operation.

On Wednesday, October 15, Mr. Reps Williamson, Sr., Driver, Virginia, father of Mrs. J. O. Atkinson, passed to his reward. An obituary, we presume, will follow.

Brother John King, Suffolk, Virginia, surprised us one day last week by a call. He was enroute on auto from Georgia and stopped. Brother King is one of THE SUN'S life-long friends. It was a genuine pleasure to see him.

Karl Lehmann and Chas. F. Evans, Christian Endeavor Specialists, paid us a short visit last Saturday. We showed Lehmann an advanced proof of the article about the tables in the Annual, and he said: "That's the thing." (See page 2).

We clip the following from The Sanford Express dated October 23: "The series of meetings which were held at the Christian church last week conducted by Rev. B. F. Black, closed Sunday night. As union services were held at the Christian church, all denominations joining in, there was no preaching at the other churches. Mr. Black delivered a most interesting lecture to an appreciative audience in the Auditorium of the West Sanford Graded School Monday night on his experience and observation while a chaplain with the Expeditionary Forces in France. He also lectured on the same subject at Shallow Well Tuesday night."

MISSIONARY

NOTICE—IMPORTANT

The Woman's Missionary Convention of the North Carolina Christian Conference convenes at Elon College, N. C., November 8-9, 1919.

It is earnestly desired that every Missionary Society be represented at this Convention, and in churches where there are no missionary organizations the pastors are requested to appoint some one to attend.

Let us be much in prayer these last few remaining days that the presence of the Holy Spirit may be with us, to guide and direct in all our deliberations and grant success in all our plans and purposes.

MRS. W. H. CARROLL.

WOMEN'S MISSIONARY MEETING, ELON COLLEGE, NOVEMBER 8-9, 1919

Don't forget the Women's Missionary Conference for the State of North Carolina to be held at Elon College, November 8-9. The churches in Virginia too that belonged to the North Carolina Christian Conference will please send delegates. We hope every church will send at least two women whether it has a society or not.

A splendid program has been arranged and we are confidently expecting a great and helpful Conference.

We invite our pastors too to come. We women are said to be good helpers of our pastors. We want them to show their appreciation by attending our Women's Missionary Conference.

All who can come will kindly notify Mrs. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.

MRS. W. A. HARPER.

REQUEST RENEWED

A few weeks ago the writer asked that if any of our people or pastors knew of persons, members of the Christian Church, present or past, who are living in Washington, D. C., or Richmond, Virginia, that same be sent to him. Many have responded and the list is increasing. May I repeat this request? We are anxious to get the names of all our people who live either in Washington or Richmond, that the same may be turned over to the man who will undertake the work of organizing there. It will be a great help if the brethren will give heed to this request as every name obtained now will give inspiration to the work.

J. O. ATKINSON.

GETTING MISSIONARY IDEAS

The people of the Christian Church will do as much for missions as other people do when they learn as much about missions as other people have learned. Our people are no more averse to doing and daring and undertaking great things for the Kingdom than other people when they see and feel the need.

The writer has never desired missionary zeal beyond that required to meet missionary needs and he has always believed that missionary information of facts and conditions as they obtain leads to the safest and sanest missionary inspiration. We will get the inspiration and we will do the divine task only as we learn and realize the facts as they are, the needs as they exist and the privileges as they are presented.

It ought to be sufficient for us that Christ commanded us as the most imperative command of all His earthly teaching to be missionary, home missionary, foreign missionary, missionary in effort, missionary in vision and missionary in gifts. I say this should be sufficient because loyal soldiers always obey their Captain's command. How any Christian can stand up in the face of what Jesus Christ said namely: "Go ye into all the world," and say he does not believe in foreign missions is more than I can understand. I am persuaded that the only reason is that such a person does not stop to think and is ignorant of the facts as they exist.

As I see our people getting the vision and trying to learn the facts, it rejoices my heart. I do not wish the people swept off their feet by any sort of fervor. Neither do I desire that any sort of feeling shall lead us to do that which we should not do. But I do desire that the facts of the mission fields shall become known among our people. I am pleased on this account whenever I learn that a Sunday school has decided to study missions. I hold in my hand now a letter from the Secretary of the Rosemont Sunday school, Norfolk, Va., from which letter I take these words: "On the third Sunday of each month we devote thirty minutes entirely to a missionary program with the idea of teaching and encouraging missionary zeal. We are writing to ask you to enroll us as a missionary Sunday school." In the years to come something will take place in Rosemont Sunday school that will be a blessing and a benefit to the whole Church. I also hold in my hand a letter from Miss Bessie I. Holt, Burlington, N. C., under the date of October 8, saying: "Graham Sunday school has decided on one Sunday a month offering for missions and has also elected a Mission Superintendent. I also visited the New Providence Sunday school and find that they had just decided to give one Sunday a month offering, that they have a live Woman's Missionary Society on the way; that a Committee of three was appointed to nominate officers, and work for more members;—and I feel that we will organize with at least twelve or fifteen members." Miss Holt expects also a live Young People's Society for this church. The work is growing and should be carried into the Sunday school and to the young people so that the rising generation in the Christian Church shall have the same opportunity to know and to do for missions that the young people of other Churches have had.

J. O. ATKINSON.

We call the attention of our readers, and especially those in Alamance and adjoining counties to the advertisement of Mr. G. A. Nicholson on page 16. We know Mr. Nicholson and take pleasure in commending him and his business.

We understand that Rev. Stanley C. Harrell has accepted the Durham church.

This is NOT the Editor's picture, but just to demonstrate how proud he would look if he were privileged to visit each home that is taking THE CHRISTIAN SUN. He thinks that when he tapped on the door that he would hear a gentle voice say, "Come in" as well as a friendly greeting and a genuine old time handshake.

And this may, or may not, resemble your home, but it brings to the Editor's mind the loveliness and coziness of many homes where THE CHRISTIAN SUN goes and where he would greatly enjoy going.

But what would the Editor say if it were possible to call for only two minutes in each home taking THE CHRISTIAN SUN? He would express his appreciation of the loyal and liberal support given him, and what a great pleasure it is to serve a constituency so faithful.

The Editor would, however, in the homes where he went in which the subscription account was not paid in advance, hang a card like this on the door knob as he said good bye.

How To Avoid Failure.—Josh.
1:1-8.

One of the things we should fear most is failure. If you are a business or professional man you know what it will mean to you and your family if you fail in your work. The same thing should be brought out in the lives of Christians. To fail not only affects you, but those who are about you. One man fails in business and a thousand men feel it. A Christian fails in his Christian life and a thousand may suffer. We are our brother's keeper and none of us live to ourselves or die to ourselves, and this failing business is something each of us cannot watch too carefully. We hate the reproach, humiliation, and shame of failure and yet, hundreds are on the road to failure because they are content with only partial success.

How are we to avoid failure? There are many ways, but space will not permit us to enumerate but a few. First, we should have one great ideal. We cannot be master of everything. If you will notice the lives of the most successful men, you will find they have one ideal and follow it out. "This one thing I do," said Paul. He knew the only way to keep down failure was to try one thing and do it well. Second, work at it. A little girl was once asked if her mother was a Christian, to which she replied "Yes, but she is not working at it." The man who would avoid failure must work out his soul salvation with fear and trembling. If we are successful in life, we must know that an opportunity to serve comes once in a lifetime. Third, don't be a pessimist. The pessimist fails before he begins, and that because he is afraid to tackle the job. How easy it would have been for Joshua to have said, "I can't." Probably he was a bit shaky about undertaking such a task, but when God said, "Be not afraid. . . I am with thee . . . and thou shalt have good success"—Joshua at once assumed command. The same promise is made to you and why think you can't do anything for God? Drop your pessimism or you will always be a miserable failure.

Keep up courage. An honest failure is no disgrace to one who had done his best. Columbus failed to find the route to India but he discovered a new country far more important than what he searched for. Mistakes are common, and are not always signs of failure. Never give up. "If at first you don't succeed—try again."

THE ORGANIZED CLASS AND SERVICE

How can an organized class serve? Well, there are many ways. After your organization is complete; after

HYMN FOR THE WEEK

Tunes, "St. Joseph," 8.8.8.4.
Father of all, from land and sea
The nations sing, "Thine, Lord, are we,
Countless in number, but in Thee
May we be one.

O Son of God, Whose love so free
For men did make Thee man to be,
United to our God in Thee
May we be one.

Join high and low, join young and old
In love that never waxes cold;
Under one Shepherd, in one fold,
Make us all one.

A DAY

I'll tell you how the sun rose—
A ribbon at a time.
The steeples swam in amethyst,
The news like squirrels ran.
The hills united their bonnets,
The bobolinks begun,
Then I said softly to myself:
"That must have been the sun!"

But how he set I know not—
There seemed a purple stile
Which little yellow boys and girls
Were climbing all the while.

Till when they reached the other side,
A dominic in gray
Put gently up the evening bars,
And led the flock away.

—Emily Dickinson.

the officers are elected, it is wise to have an early meeting and plan some real service. One of the things an organized class can do by these business meetings is to promote the social welfare of the community. An after meeting can be held which may be given over to sociability, and thus knowing our brother or sister, as the case may be, we are better able to sympathize with him, and to rejoice with them that do rejoice and weep with them that weep. In this day, when the world offers so many social pleasures to the young, it is wise to have something of this kind where Christian youth can meet and spend a social hour.

Then an organized class can undertake some definite service that would never be carried to a successful end without an organization behind it. For instance, a number of organized classes are clothing, or partly clothing, orphans at Elon; other organized classes are helping to support missionaries or Bible women. There are yet others who undertake to send little city children into the country in the summer time; to provide a baby with clothes; a sick child with dainties; to furnish flowers to the sick. Oh, there are no ends to the ways in which an organized class can help. But the particular work your class can do, will depend upon where it is situated. A class of country boys split and corded the wood for an aged widow one winter, while a class of girls made jellies and preserves for a childrens hospital, to which another had contributed scrap books and toys. The only limit to the work of an organized class is the willingness to serve.

How is the money raised? Most classes have regular monthly dues; and in addition, it is a usual custom for such classes to give one-half of their Sunday offering to the Sunday school, retaining the other half for the special work in which they are engaged. Several classes have a "mite box" into which special offerings can be dropped, and these are used for whatever purpose the class has decided by a general vote, is the work for which they most desire to give.

MARRIAGES

PRUITT-WOMACK

On Wednesday, October 15, 1919, Miss Nellie Pruitt became the bride of Mr. James Womack at the bride's father's home near Vernon Hill, Va. The writer officiated.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

GREENWOOD-FIRESHEETS

The beautiful country home of Mrs. Lelia Greenwood was the scene of the wedding of Mrs. Greenwood's oldest daughter, Edna, to Mr. Norman Firesheets. They were married on Wednesday, October 8, 1919, at two o'clock P. M., and boarded the north-bound train at Paces, Va. The writer officiated.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

MARLETTE-BOSWELL

On October 11 1919, at 5 o'clock P. M., Mrs. Annie Marlette and Bedford Boswell were united in marriage at the Christian parsonage, Burlington, N. C. The writer officiated. They will make their home in Burlington.

Their many friends wish for them much joy and happiness.

J. W. HARRELL.

YEAMAN-WILKERSON

At South Boston, Virginia, on October 16, 1919, the writer united in marriage Mr. William M. Yeaman and Miss Mattie V. Wilkerson of Nathalie, Va.

The groom has recently received an honorable discharge from the U. S. Navy. The bride is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Wilkerson and has for several years been organist in Liberty Christian church and active in all the organizations of the church.

Mr. and Mrs. Yeaman will locate near Blackstone, Va. May blessings attend them.

C. E. NEWMAN.

HAYES-DESHAZO

A quiet but pretty marriage was solemnized at the home of Dr. J. Beverly Deshazo, Ridgeway, Va., on Saturday, October 4, 1919, when Miss Blanch Deshazo became the bride of Mr. Frank Hayes of Wendell, N. C. The writer performed the ceremony in the presence of a few friends and relatives, using the souvenir ring ceremony.

The bride wore a brown traveling suit with accessories to match and carried a shower bouquet and swan-sonia. Mrs. Jones played Lohengrin's wedding march. Immediately after marriage the happy couple motored to Danville, Va., a distance of forty-seven miles, where they left on a North bound train for a short bridal trip.

The bride is the only daughter of Dr. and Mrs. J. B. Deshazo of Ridgeway, Va., and is a graduate of Virginia College, Roanoke, Va. The groom is the youngest son of Deacon Alfred Hayes of Virgilina, Va., and has made a splendid career in his chosen business as a tobacco auctioneer.

Mr. and Mrs. Hayes will reside at Wendell, N. C. Their many friends wish for them a happy and useful career.

C. E. NEWMAN.

MALONE-WHITE

Thursday morning, October 16, 1919, at 9 o'clock, a beautiful marriage was solemnized in the new Christian church, Burlington, N. C., when Miss Mamie Malone, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Malone, became the bride of Mr. James I. White.

The church was lovely in its decorations of white and green. The altar was draped in white and banked with ferns.

Prior to the wedding, Miss Georgia Hatch sang "O Promise Me." Miss Hennie Malone, accompanied by Miss Allie Malone with violin, rendered the wedding music.

To the strains of the wedding march from "Lohengrin," the bridal party entered. David Curtis and Sam Bason, ushers, followed by little Miss Louise Horne, daintily dressed in white organdie, carrying the ring in the heart of a rose. Next came Miss Sallie Patterson, maid of honor. She wore taupe georgette and carried pink roses. The bride entered with her father and was met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Dunlap White. The bride wore a traveling suit of midnight blue with grey accessories and carried bride's roses. The writer officiated.

Immediately after the ceremony the couple left for a northern tour.

These are popular young couple. Mrs. White is a graduate of the Woman's Hospital of Philadelphia, and Mr. White is manager of the Burlington Drug Co. They have the best wishes of a host of friends.

OBITUARIES

BROWN

Brother Charlie C. Brown departed this life October 16, 1919 at the age of 46 years, 8 months and 28 days. He is survived by his wife and eight children, all girls. He was a son of the late Deacon D. C. Brown of Union Grove Christian church and he himself had also been elected deacon to succeed his father. He had been a life-long Christian and beloved by all who knew him. He was a good man and will be missed much in his home and community.

God bless and comfort the loved ones.

T. J. GREEN.

AN APPRECIATION—BOYD

It is almost an undisputed fact that the meeting house which finally became to be Pleasant Grove Christian church was established about 112 years ago. In that same year was born Archer A. Farmer. From his youth until the end of his life he was a faithful member of the Christian church. In early manhood he married Lydia Carlton and established a home of piety, peace and abundant hospitality. To this home came the subject of this sketch,—Mrs. Missouri Eugenia Boyd. She was the fourth and last of the children who lived to maturity, the others being Mrs. Sarah E. Dunn, Mrs. Martha E. Pierce, and Mrs. Mary Ellen Carlton. Each of these women were mothers in happy homes. Mrs. Dunn died in 1876 at the age of 40, Mrs. Carlton died in 1914 at the age of 74, Mrs. Pierce died in 1918 at the age of 80, and Mrs. Boyd died August 3, 1919 at the age of 77 years.

Missouri Eugenia married Mr. Scott Boyd and to them were born Myrtle Lydia, who is now Mrs. L. E. Carlton; Archer Wellons, Ira Willingham, and Sarah Eliza all of whom are living and are members of Ingram Christian church, of which Mrs. Boyd was a charter member.

In her youthful days she was a student of Graham Normal College in North Carolina, and although she was a woman of intellectual culture the culture of the Christian graces was foremost in her life. She taught her own children of the Christ-child, and to love and serve the church and the ministers of God in the old time way. During her married life she read widely and yet never failed to read most devotedly the Word of God and her church paper, The Christian Sun. I loved her, as did both rich and poor, and found in her a tender and affectionate friend. She loved her church, and was a most ardent devotee of the Christian Orphanage. Never a year passed in which she did not send the Orphanage some of the gleanings from her own hand. A true mother she was and religious after the good old time type, and yet, even in her advanced years, she was the center of attraction in large groups of young merry-makers who frequented the Christian home of which she was the enthroned queen. Her sons, and daughters, and grandchildren, her relatives and all may well hallow the memory of "Cousin Ann."

JOHN G. TRUITT.

WHITE

Roger Mills White was born October 6, 1895 and died September 22, 1919, aged 23 years, 11 months and 16 days. He was the son of Eddie Mills White and Alice E. White. He was the last member of the family to die. He was preceded in death by a little sister and little brother, also father and mother. Roger was an ambitious orphan boy. He so used his time, and the strength of his mind, and the eloquence of his tongue that already he had achieved victories in speech, in debates and in education.

He graduated at Waverly, Va. high school; spent three years at Elon College, and spent his Senior year at Washington and Lee University where he graduated in 1917. Later he volunteered to the Navy where he served till January, 1919 when permission was given him by the Navy to attend Washington and Lee University to study law. He began his law course, but soon had to give it up on account of sickness. He had a severe case of Influenza the last of 1918 from which he never fully recovered.

Last spring the officials of the Navy had him placed at Catawba, Va., for special treatment, where he remained till his death. He was still held under Naval authority. He professed religion and joined Spring Hill church when about 12 years old, and remained in the church till death.

Thus an ambitious life, a brilliant mind, and a ready tongue have passed away.

May each have cast its influence on some other life. He was buried at Spring Hill cemetery in the presence of many loved ones, friends, and acquaintances. The beautiful flowers and the large number present showed the high esteem in which this young man was held.

Take Note

The following points should be taken into consideration in placing an order for church offering envelopes:

1. A set means 52 envelopes, one for each Sunday in the year.

2. When cartons are ordered the sets are arranged in their logical order, thus making it convenient for the member. We suggest the use of cartons because of the convenience.

3. If you desire monthly, double or single envelopes, without cartons, 1-3 the price of the same number of weekly sets. Cartons 3-4 cent each.

4. Semi-monthly, double or single, in cartons, 2-3 the weekly price; without cartons 3-5 the weekly price.

5. When ordering state what Sunday that your church year begins, and whether you want the dates on envelopes or not.

6. Indicate the wording that you want placed on the envelopes or leave the same with us. Samples sent upon request.

7. Allow ten to fifteen days for delivery. Order early.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

RETIRING GRACEFULLY

There comes a time in the life of every man when he must begin to hand the palm of his calling or profession to some other man. This is true of the ministry as well as in other callings and professions.

There are two principal points that make their appeal in the life of the senior brother who gracefully yields his work to his junior brother. They are: Admiration of the public for the older man and appreciation of the younger comrade for his senior friend.

Ministers in declining years do not always retire gracefully to the young men. So often do we hear the young man's imperfections catalogued and his praiseworthy points go without mention. This has its effect in two ways: It causes the young man's friends to lower their estimate of the senior minister and creates a grief between the older head and the younger heart that drives away counsel.

If we expect young men to flock to the ministry, the older ministers must encourage them and retire gracefully.

And did you know, dear reader, that years of experience gives no man a monopoly upon his class of work?

"Salary and soul have a distinct relationship. It is not that the soul depends upon the salary for noble emotions, high ideals or sublime purposes. In fact it is possible for a preacher to become water-logged with too much salary. We do not remember more than two or three ministers spoiled by having too much salary."

MINISTERIAL STRIKES

Who ever heard of such a thing? A walk-out of the ministers? Not just that but this—the ministerial timber is not walking in. And that is where the ministerial strike comes in. In other strikes the men are of a trained class, but with the ministry the strike comes before they are trained.

Carpenters, masons, teamsters and other common laborers, who have but little responsibility, are getting more than the average minister. This class, as well as other classes, knows that many men in the ministry are underfed and paid, have families that must go in decent style, be educated, meet their bills and shoulder the "slams" and "bangs" of the local church, move when they are not liked, yet be a leader, and so many young men strike before they get in. You say that this class should strike, and your opinion we grant, with this rejoinder: The Gospel is a message of freedom, of comfort, of heart-ease, and it is hard to reason with a man that he can be free with financial ends that will not meet; that he can make his family comfortable without sufficient means, and that his heart can be at ease with the collector ringing the door bell. We rest the case.

"A preacher may be so limited in finances that he will be under nervous strain all the time. This eventually destroys his soul power. Again there is a terrible reaction of physical status on spiritual conditions under certain circumstances. There are literally many underfed preachers—so much so that they lack physical strength to perform the hard and exacting work of their pastorates. A man with weak legs cannot do pastoral work. Can a man with weak knees pray properly?"

WHAT MADE THE SMILE

It was late this afternoon, October 25, that our congenial Orphanage Superintendent, Brother Chas. D. Johnston, came by THE SUN office. He was wearing a smile, a happy smile; a smile that even the threatening weather could not banish. He handed out two pounds of nice honey to the Editor (think of an orphanage superintendent pounding an editor—marvelous!) and continued to smile. He told us about "taking" 67 pounds of honey today and this was our solution for the extra smile.

Was it? Brother Johnston reached for the crank on his Ford, and as he set the motor to a-buzzing, he said: "A man sent me $100.00 today to help buy winter clothing for the children"—and then we too smiled an extra. Our faithful Orphanage Superintendent sped away while we turned to completing the odds and ends of the day, and all the while thinking how many, if only they would, could send along a little extra help for winter clothing for the children and keep Brother Johnston a-smiling.

"A meager salary may react upon the soul in the form of small ideas. The minister who is inadequately supported will not be able to take part in public movements, and the spirit of timidity will possess him until all the elements of leadership will be crushed out. He will form the habit of thinking of his soul and his work in terms and measurements of his salary."

CATCHING FLIES WITH VINEGAR

We asked a brother minister of another denomination the other day how the revival in his church was progressing, and his reply was: "Good and not good"; and then he added: "The attendance is poor and Brother _____ (naming the evangelist doing the preaching) fusses at those who do attend about the small congregations until it is unpleasant to us."

That brings up a point—should the minister "fuss" about those who do not attend to those who do? "You can't catch flies with vinegar," our philosophy teacher used to say in discussing the philosophy of winning men—and women. You cannot force men to be good; you cannot force men to worship.

We have always had a notion that if the revivalist were to preach the riches of the Kingdom while he was scolding those who are not there, that his chances to get the non-going church man would multiply and that those present would be inspired to induce others to go.

This is our thought in theory and perhaps those who do more preaching than we do know better as to whether flies prefer vinegar to honey.

"It is increasingly necessary, in these days when large wealth abounds, and a goodly amount of it is in the church, that the preacher should know the meaning and worth of money. He ought to have ideas and experiences that will enable him to speak with confidence about the big things that consecrated money can do. How can he do this when the congregation keeps him on pin money instead of a man's salary?"

THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

The Editor was privileged last week to attend the Eastern Virginia Conference which met with the Waverly, Virginia, church. We reached Waverly Tuesday night, and thus failed to get Tuesday afternoon's part of the program. In fact, we might say our work for THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Book Depository kept us from hearing many of the splendid reports and addresses. We asked Dr. W. W. Staley, who always sits in the "Amen Corner" with a note book, to make his "Suffolk Letter" to the Conference. That is before us and appears on page 7. Dr. Staley covers in brief the whole of this great Conference. In any way you put it, you would have to be brief, for this whole issue could be used in saying much in the favor of the Conference's work.

The Conference was well attended, the spirit was fine, and the hospitality of the true Southern type. Judge West and others did all that could be asked in making the comfort of the people up to the best. Many SUN readers whom we had never seen before, their faces we were glad to see, and whose hands we were glad to grasp.

Th most of this issue was being prepared while we were away, and space forbids us to speak further. Read Dr. Staley's letter. A great Conference, we think.

"The average minister is a strong man who lives with a moral heroism that puts him above the weakness of self-pity and the worldliness of self-seeking. It may even embarrass him that we have made this plea for him, but he deserves the best the people can afford and we are persuaded that he will get it when the churches are really brought to think on these things."

BURLINGTON OPENS HER NEW CHURCH

Last Sunday was a red letter day for the Burlington congregation, it being the opening day for the new church. Preparation had been made for the occasion. The magnificent building's doors were thrown open Sunday morning and a great concourse of people came to worship and to witness. The music was fine and the selections timely. Pastor Harrell was master of ceremonies; Dr. P. H. Fleming, the pastor who served the church for the longest term, led the morning prayer; Rev. Jeremiah W. Holt, the founder of the church, gave an interesting talk on the organization; Attorney D. R. Fonville gave a history of the church, and Mr. W. K. Holt, Chairman of the Building Committee, gave an interesting and encouraging report of the new building. Prof. Floyd Alexander, Elon College, sang a solo, and Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., Franklin, Virginia, brought the people a message that inspired and electrified the attentive congregation. "I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts" was his text. The people are still talking about the message and the messenger.

The evening service, like that of the morning, was beautiful. Special music was rendered; THE SUN'S Editor led the prayer; the singing class of the Orphanage delighted the filled house with two fine selections, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson, the chosen speaker of the evening service, based his remarks on the theme "Church," and for forty minutes held the vast audience with words that edified, enlarged visions, and found their way to every heart. Dr. Atkinson was at home with the subject, speaking to home folks and home folks heard him gladly.

The church was organized February 16, 1884 with eighteen charter members, and the old building was dedicated in 1893. The present membership is 379. The new building will cost about $60,000.00 when the final work is done about the Sunday school rooms, basement, and the grounds beautified.

We stop the press this (Tuesday) morning to announce the sad news of Capt. Jas. A. Turrentine's passing last night at 12:15. He met with an accident some days ago by falling from a wagon and never recovered.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

FOUNDED AGAIN

Saturday night, October 25, just before bed-time, I was called from the home of one of Pleasant Union's members to go to the church. When I went into the church what should I see but a grocery store opened up on the pulpit! But, as there were no sales going on, I did not say, "You have made my Father's house a house of merchandise." No, it was rather a gift out of the hearts of this splendid people to their unworthy pastor. I cannot describe how little I felt, and how little I felt that I deserved this kindness from them.

I mention some of the articles given and many of these were in abundance: Coffee, canned fruit, dried fruit, pickles, grape-lade, lard, rice, flavoring extract, coconut, pineapple, pepper, salt, sugar, soap, gold dust, matches, soda, cornflakes, oatmeal, butter, cakes, starch, flour, crockery, towels, handkerchiefs, pins, garters, socks, etc. Just one month before one of the deacons gave me one-half bushel of fine sweet potatoes. This was the largest pounding this pastor ever saw and I only hope and pray that I can prove my gratitude to the people and my Heavenly Father by more efficient service.

But that is not all. This church had promised their pastor $275.00 for this year, but they would not stop until they paid him $325.00 (lacking just a few cents). Think of it, $50.00 above salary and a pounding that amounted to half that much and more! May God's richest blessing be upon them and richly reward them for their gift. Come to see me brethren in the ministry and brother editor and friends. (Coming! C. B. R.)

CONCORD

October 25, 1919, was the time appointed to hold the fourth quarterly meeting at this church but on account of inclement weather there was no meeting held.

After the preaching service on Sunday following, the church was called to order to transact the business of the last quarterly meeting of this Conference year. Officers were elected for the ensuing year and delegates were chosen for our Conference. The apportionments were practically paid in full. I think this church will be a banner church at Conference.

Since the third quarterly meeting a pulpit recess has been built. This is a great improvement to the church and better convenience for the preacher. A committee to raise funds for the purchase of a carpet is at work.

The present pastor has been called and has accepted the work for another year.

Howard's Chapel

The revival meeting was to have begun here the second Sunday in August but no ministerial help could be secured for that date. It was postponed until the second Sunday in October.

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, Field Mission Secretary, came out from Reidsville and preached for us on Sunday afternoon. It was a pleasant surprise to have him with us. We heard him gladly. His message was based upon these words: "There was a man sent from God whose name was John."

Rev. J. S. Carden, Durham, N. C., came on Monday, but on account of rain no service was held that day. Brother Carden brought some simple, plain and forceful messages. The audience listened attentively and gave good response. He endeared himself very much with these people and we hope that he can come again. The church was very much revived. Several requests were made for prayer, one conversion and one addition to the church.

On Saturday afternoon before the second Sunday in November, we are to hold our last quarterly business meeting of this year. The meeting will convene about 4 o'clock.

FOUNDED

On Saturday afternoon before the first Sunday, just before sunset, the people of Park's Cross Roads church began to gather at my house. I was away from home at the time, but when I came I saw people on the porch, some in the yard and others coming, I could not imagine what was the trouble. At first I thought some one was to get married. However, I had not been in the house long before it was revealed, that these good people had a big pounding for the preacher and his good wife.

Well, it was flour, sweet potatoes, apples, pears, sugar, coffee, salt, canned fruit and vegetables, honey, syrup, chickens, lard, 2 bushels of wheat and possibly some other things. All of these things were in no small quantities. It was the biggest pounding ever given to us. It is always a joy unspeakable to be remembered, but this was especially so this time when the fact that this was the first time Park's Cross Roads ever pounded their preacher. However, they did it as if they had been used to it. They laid up much goods for us for many days.

God bless these good people, that they may be the richer because of their good works. Mrs. Banks and I give thanks to all.

HENDERSON LETTER

Following the second Sunday in September I assisted Rev. G. J. Green in a meeting at Mt. Gilead. It was my first visit to that church, and thoroughly enjoyed the stay among those good people. They treated me with every kindness and consideration. I very much appreciate their unstinted kindness and hospitality. Likely there are, as in all churches, the indifferent, but I was impressed with the number who seemed earnestly and prayerfully engaged in the Master's service. The music was good, the prayers offered earnest, and the attendance, especially at night, large. They also gave heed to the Word; at least they seemed to be attentive.

I was called home Thursday to attend a funeral, and did not get back to the meeting. The Master's blessings upon His cause there.

The Baptists and Christians of New Bethel and Liberty churches held union services beginning the third Sunday in September. The services were held in Liberty church, and the pastor of New Bethel church, Rev. John Michener, did the preaching after Sunday, the pastor of Liberty church, Rev. G. J. Green, preaching at the Sunday services. Because of his work, Brother Green could not be in the meeting after the third Sunday, so asked me to represent him in the work. Thus I had the privilege and pleasure of attending most of the services.

Brother Michener's sermons were plain and earnest presentations of sin and the sinner's doom without salvation; and Jesus the sinner's only hope of salvation and eternal life. Large congregations attended all the services, and at the evening services the church was crowded to the utmost. Many were turned away. There were many reconsecrations and renewals of vows to God, and many decided for Christ for the first time. Liberty received 21 into fellowship, and New Bethel 12; others will probably join later.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT

We would hereby express to the kind people of the Epsom community our appreciation of the kindness shown us while there. At church, in their home and wherever we saw them they seemed anxious to do everything possible for our comfort and pleasure. It was a joy to us to be among those good people. While we would not forget the kindness of any, and feel only deep appreciation for all expressions of fellowship and friendship, we would especially acknowledge the gift by Brothers E. M. and J. E. Newman of six fine Rhode Island Red chickens.

R. L. WILLIAMSON & WIFE.

AN IMPRESSIVE SCENE

One of the most beautiful and impressive scenes the writer has ever witnessed was when Rev. John Michener, pastor of New Bethel Baptist church, who had done most of the preaching during the union revival services conducted by New Bethel and Liberty churches, in company with the writer, led the candidates for baptism into the water. The ministers alternated in saying the ceremony and each baptized a candidate at the same time. This was but the carrying out of the spirit of union that had existed during the united revival effort when all were of one accord in purpose and effort for the salvation of souls and the upbuilding of the Master's kingdom, and was to me a foretaste of the blessedness of the time when all shall be gathered in the presence of the great Shepherd into one fold.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

NEWPORT NEWS, VA.

On October 22, 1919, the series of meetings which were being held at the East End Christian church closed.

The singing was led by Mr. W. T. Baker, church chorister, who did valuable work and was of untold help to the pastor in the services. The preaching was done by the pastor and plain gospel messages were his aim, believing that the power of Christ's life is powerful enough to reach the vilest and save the most unworthy.

The attendance was good and the spirit of the folks who came was of the highest order. The church is very much revived as a result of the meeting. With few exceptions all the folks who came felt the claim Christ has upon their lives. During the services one hundred and thirty-five people consecrated their lives and their talents anew to the work of God. Sixteen young people gave their hearts to God and all of them joined the East End Christian church. There are others in the city who are members of the Christian church elsewhere whom we hope to get linked up with the local church work.

God has blessed us, we believe, but we take no credit to ourselves for He worked through us to the accomplishment of a glorious end. Without Him with us it would have been impossible to have won men and women from the ways of death and hell.

Now that the meeting is over we are going to bend every effort to have the best year in the history of the work here. Before long we are going to start a campaign to build a new building in order that we may more effectively serve the people of the town in which we are called to do the Lord's work.

H. J. FLEMING, Pastor.

THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE HOLDS A GOOD SESSION

The Alabama Christian Conference met with the church at Antioch on October 14. The weather was fine and every church was represented, except New Home and Sand Hill. However, the latter sent report.

Rev. J. D. Dollar was elected President; Rev. E. M. Carter, Secretary; and J. W. Payne, Treasurer. There were three items that claimed special attention: That of grouping the churches into pastorates, education, and missions. The report on grouping the churches was referred to the churches with a request that they form the groups, having respect to those mentioned in the report.

On account of conditions over which we had no control the matter of building the proposed school in our section was postponed. We feel that the churches are more interested in this cause than ever. And, that one of the objects of our prayers, this year shall be, that the Lord may send laborers into His vineyard.

Immediately after Conference adjourned the Mission Board met and employed Rev. J. W. Elder for all his time for the North Alabama work. This field is very hopeful.

While a few of the churches did not raise all their assessments, when the total for this purpose was made, it was found that just a few dollars more that was apportioned was in hand. The Apportionment Committee provided for the quota asked by the Southern Christian Convention for this year. All the pastors were better paid than ever before.

The sad features of the reports were regarding church membership, which decreased from 1771 last year to 1728; and, the total of the Sunday schools from 1233 to 964. Two of the churches a year ago reported "no school" while five made such a report this time. It is hoped that the Sunday School Board, under the supervision of J. W. Payne, Chairman, will have the co-operation of the churches and pastors and that this condition may be much improved during the year.

We were very glad to have Drs. J. O. Atkinson, N. G. Newman and J. Pressley Barrett with us, as well as Miss Bessie I. Holt. These added inspiration to our work and we want them to come again.

RELAXATION

Some time ago the writer read a timely article on, "What the Call of the Ministry offers to Young Men," and a number of reasons for the shortage of ministers were given. It is not my purpose to take issue with the writer, but simply to discuss the question from another angle.

Why the shortage of ministers in every denomination? Has the question not grown serious? Has the Church lost her charms, and attractions for the young men of today? Does it no longer appeal to broad-minded young men with vigor and enthusiasm enough to do the work? These are broad questions, and I dare not claim to answer either correctly, but one thing is certain, the situation has become alarming, and especially here in the South where more than seventy-five per cent of the churches have only one preaching service per month, and not much preparation being made for more services.

It seems to me that we have come to a period of relaxation. Once upon a time the Church had men to fill her pulpits, but now no denomination in the United States, Canada, or the kingdom of Great Britain has enough ministers to supply its pulpits a single Sunday. Relaxation? Yes, we are in that state and the question has come to be more than serious. Just a few years past our colleges and seminaries had double the number of young men preparing for the ministry that they have today. What is the cause and reason for the decrease? Are we not in the relaxation period when men are at ease? But there are reasons for it, and I mention only a few.

First. The ministry as a profession, or vocation has lost its appeal. Men no longer look upon the ministry as an easy job or task. Some may, but that is caused by the lack of proper intelligence, of what the work of the minister is. Men have learned that to be pastor of many of our churches of today means to be everything from janitor down, and that the work of the minister is by no means an easy job. You may not agree, but take a look at his hours. What are they? They run from about 8:00 A. M. to 10 and 12 P. M., seven days per week for a pastor of a city church, or about ninety-eight hours per week. Of course the young man no longer expects anything but hard work in the ministry, and naturally the professional idea loses its enticing charms.

Second. His living expenses. No man can live decently on the salary of the average minister. The high cost of living makes it impossible for a man to give himself over to the gospel ministry, for where is the minister who is not carrying a heavy financial burden? And where is the preacher who has a family of as many as one besides himself, who can live on the salary he receives? I ask that question, knowing that the average salary paid by the city parish is $1,000.00, and that of the town village and country less than $600.00, which makes the average for both just a bit over $600.00 per year. Who can live and support his family on a salary like that? Is a strike in order?

Third. Disobedience to Christ's command. The greatest cause for this relaxation is disobedience to Christ's command on the part of the Church forces. Listen: "Pray ye therefore, the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest."—Matt. 9:8. But what is the use? I mean what is the use to pray, unless we are willing to help the Lord to answer our prayers? Why ask for a man in the harvest, and then push him back to the farm, shop or to the office by starvation wages? Christ also said: "The laborer is worthy of his hire." One of my college chums told me the other day, that he must go to the farm in order to support his family. He leaves four churches in his denomination without a pastor. Justifiable? A thousand times, yes. If we of the Church expect God to call young men into the ministry, then we must make preparation to take care of them, and the work they are to do. And, too, we must take care of those who have given their lives to the work, and have now had to cease from active service. We shall do that and more when we are willing to obey every command of the Master.

SUFFOLK LETTER

The ninety-ninth session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, held at Waverly, Virginia, October 28-30, 1919, has now become a part of her history. The Waverly church is one of the young and growing congregations of the Conference. Rev. J. L. Foster, with a real preacher's wife, is the zealous and useful pastor.

The welcome by the Mayor, B. E. White, for the town, J. F. West, Jr., for the church, was gracious in spirit and address.

The weather was ideal, the hospitality was royal in its spirit and great dinners. The attendance was large, the work of the Conference was earnest and business dispatched by President C. H. Rowland by the clock. There was no idle or waste time in the three days of the session.

Collections reached the sum of $7,359.36 on apportionment of $7,500.00; and this deficit was caused by some churches reading the wrong table of figures. All the churches sent in their check as they had read the tables.

Three new ministers were received into the Conference: Revs. H. J. Fleming and W. B. Fuller by letter from the North Carolina Conference; and Rev. Dr. L. E. Smith from the Eel River Conference, Indiana. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, our missionary leader; C. B. Riddle, THE SUN's genial Editor; C. D. Johnston, the beloved Superintendent of the Orphanage; Dr. P. H. Fleming, the product of "Mother's Answered Prayer"; and James W. Wellons, the patriarch of the Southern Convention, all honored the Conference with their presence and their wisdom.

Two sweet fellowship meetings were held by some twenty ministers from 9 to 10 a. m., Wednesday and Thursday. Rev. A. Victor Lightbourne preached a great sermon on Tuesday night, and Rev. H. W. Dowding gave another great message on Wednesday night.

The reports this year were prepared with care and contained a Forward Movement spirit and the discussions and addresses accompanying the reports were thought-provoking and inspiring.

The report of the woman's work by Mrs. C. H. Rowland showed that they had passed their goal of $4,000.00 the past year, and had set as their goal $5,000.00 for the coming year. They have planned to carry $1,200.00 of the Washington, D. C., work for the next year. The ministers present pledged themselves to stand by the women in trying to organize a Woman's Missionary Society in every Church in the Conference.

Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Benson of the People's Church, Dover, Delaware; Rev. R. S. Stephens who has organized another church in Dover, and Rev. A. Victor Lightbourne and wife, were present to represent the Dover work. Mrs. Lightbourne sang several fine solos, and this added to the splendid musical work of the Waverly choir.

The Conference sends to W. C. Wicker, Treasurer of the Southern Christian Convention, this year, the exact sum which the Convention asks of this Conference, $5,250.00; Foreign Missions, $1,750.00; Convention Missions, $1,400.00; Convention Fund, $700.00; Elon College Fund, $1,400.00.

The delegates remained to the close of the session, this year, better than at any previous Conference. The interest was unbroken to the close and the vision of obligation broadens with the years; and the people seem to take more interest and look more to helping others. Miss Iola Hedgepeth made two touching talks about her work in the mountains of Virginia, and the women have undertaken her support in the great work which she has undertaken among the mountaineers.

The Conference goes to Holy Neck next year, and it will be the centennial of this Conference. Holy Neck is a historic church and the Centennial Conference will be a great occasion among us. Plans have already been started for a program to fully represent the century in ways that will be of interest and permanent historic value.

W. W. STALEY.

MONUMENT FOR REV. L. I. COX

The churches of which Rev. L. I. Cox was pastor at the time of his decease have decided to erect a tombstone at his grave. As the money is sent in, I will report the same in THE SUN.

So far New Lebanon only has sent in its money, amounting to $117 as follows:

J. T. Bason, $5.00; Jesse Comer, $5.00; S. A. Harris, $10.00; F. F. Sharpe, $10.00; Peter Strickland, $5.00; J. S. Sharpe, $10.00; H. P. Moore, $10.00; W. G. Sharpe, $5.00; C. E. Sharpe, $10.00; Laura Sharpe, $5.00; W. M. Suits, $5.00; C. C. Griffin, $1.00; J. I. Sharpe, $5.00; W. M. McCollum, $1.00; P. R. Griffin, $5.00; Mrs. Numa Comer, $2.00; W. T. Moore, $5.00; Jas. N. McCollum, $5.00; J. T. Moore, $2.00; Stella Sharpe, $1.50; Ellen Sharpe, $1.00; Mrs. J. T. Moore, $0.50; Mrs. G. C. Moore, $1.00; G. C. Moore, $1.00; Carrie Sharpe, $1.00; Clyde Sharpe, $1.00; James Sharpe, $1.00; R. E. Sharpe, $2.00; W. P. Strickland, $1.00. Total, $117.00.

As the other churches remit, report will be made, and when all is in the tomb-stone will be erected. It is beautiful for these churches to honor themselves in this way.

W. A. HARPER, Treasurer.

A TRIP TO DURHAM

I made an appointment to preach to the old, unsaved people at the Durham Christian church a few Sundays ago. We had a delightful service, though there were but a few old people present. The church was filled and the attention splendid.

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell delivered an interesting sermon that night, telling his experiences as a Chaplain in France. The weather was very unfavorable but a large congregation was present.

It was a great trip for me to visit the Durham church, after having served as pastor there nine years. I visited several families and enjoyed mingling with friends.

The present pastor of the Durham church is very much devoted to his work, but feels that he is called to another field.

MISSIONARY

THEY GO FORWARD

The Woman's Missionary Conference of Eastern Virginia met in annual session at the Washington Street Christian church, Portsmouth, Va., Thursday morning, October 23. This was the best and most enthusiastic of all the sessions of this wide-awake Conference yet held. The delegation was large, almost completely filling the large auditorium of our ample church. Because of a belated train the president, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, was absent at the opening; but Mrs. R. B. Wood, acting president and Mrs. I. W. Johnson, secretary, had the Conference going almost exactly on time, and the schedule of busy activity was kept up at a rapid pace till adjournment at 5 o'clock P. M., when all business had been completed. What a day! And how our women do put us men to shame by the rapid and thorough manner in which they do things. What the women wish, they go and do. We men talk many of our best plans to death before they are well born.

Among the monumental things of the day, either already done, or planned were: The Treasurer's report by Mrs. M. L. Bryant showing the following collectives for the year:

Woman's Societies	$2,565.02
Young People's Societies	1,462.43
Willing Workers Societies.....	241.55

Total raised for the year...$4,269.00

The goal for the year was $4,000.00.

They went over the top by $269.00.

The goal was set for next year at $5,000.00.

It was decided to have a "Home Mission Special" equal in amount to the "Foreign Mission Special," and that this "special" be for the support of our Washington, D. C. pastor. The goal of the Young People was fixed at $1,000.00 and this is to be used in prosecuting our mountain work as the Mission Board may direct. The young people of Portsmouth church gave a most impressive and suggestive program in panorama of the need of foreign mission work.

Miss Toshio Sato San, our Japanese pupil at Elon, gave a very touching and beautiful and inspiring talk on "My Own Japan." The Conference was mightily moved by this stirring address. The President, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, brought a thrilling and forward looking message entitled, "That We Go Forward." Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson read a very helpful paper on "Missionary Heroes and Heroines." The reports by Mrs. W. V. Leathers for the Young People, Mrs. W. D. Harward on Literature, Miss Mary Andrews on Cradle Roll, and Mrs. I. W. Johnson for the Woman's Board were all pointed, helpful, exceedingly interesting. The writer counted it a great joy and privilege to be allowed on the program in trying to present "The Challenge of a Great Task."

The Portsmouth church ladies served a beautiful and substantial luncheon at the noon hour, and the welcome at Portsmouth was cordial and most happy. The women of Eastern Virginia are doing great things for the Kingdom. Rev. H. Shelton Smith now in Yale, is to be sent out and supported by this Conference, as soon as he is ready to go. The Conference's motto was, "Anywhere, Provided it be Forward."

INTERESTED IN HELPING OTHERS

Dear Editor:

Since I sent in the last article for THE CHRISTIAN SUN I have been very ill. I am just back from the hospital but am still in bed, wishing and praying that I could do something worth while for he Lord Who has done so much for me. Sometimes the bed of affliction reveals to us friends whom we did not know we had and proves to us a blessing.

After a life of forty-four years spent without being interested in missions, I have become deeply interested in the subject. My thoughts night and day are as to what I can do. I can neither go to Sunday school nor preaching now but will try to wait and be patient and pray that God will bless what I try to write and may I be a help to someone through writing.

When we are sick we often think of much that we have left undone and resolve to be better Christians if we are spared. I want to quote a few sentences from a book, which was loaned me by a friend, entitled "How to Interest Your Sunday School in Missions." "An old Chinaman at the age of eighty said: 'Can it be possible that God's people have known of this wonderful Savior all these centuries and I have never heard of him till now? Why did you not come to me sooner?' We have no words to answer that pathetic question. We cannot recall lost opportunities. The spirit of Missions is the spirit of the Master. Let me fail in trying to do something rather than to sit still and do nothing. Shall we not pray for the same Lord who anointed the eyes of the blind and gave sight to come now and anoint the eyes of our people for spiritual blindness, giving them power to see the souls that are passing out into eternity?"

The following lines quoted from The Christian Herald have proven a blessing to me in times of trouble:

"There never were words that were sweeter,

There never was promise more dear,

Than this message God gave to His children

Bidding them trust and not fear.

'Surely I will be with thee

Yes, ever your footsteps I'll guide,

And the storm-clouds shall not hide me from thee,

For I will be close to thy side."

NOTES

Rev. B. J. Howard changes his address from Chapel Hill, N. C., to Route 2, Jonesboro, N. C.

Rev. W. S. Long changes his address from Chapel Hill, N. C. to Whiteville, N. C., Box 26.

Don't forget that the Woman's Missionary Convention of the North Carolina Conference meets at Elon College, November 8-9.

Bro. J. B. Watson, Jonesboro, N. C., writes: "The church at Shallow Well will go over the top in all her finances this year. I say, hurrah for the pastorate system!"

A friend of THE SUN—a lady—renews her subscription and adds $5.00 as a "pounding" for the Editor. We are grateful and highly appreciate the gift.

The Third church, Norfolk, Va., has voted to pay the salary of a worker in Japan. This church also pays the increase made by the Mission Board in Miss Williams salary from the time it was increased.

We note that the Brotherhood Bible class, Third church, Norfolk, Va., is doing active work among men. They are making a house to house canvass in the interest of their work.

Brother F. T. Banks, Montgomery, Ala., sends this message: "Please accept my check for the sum of $2.00. I am not a member of the Christian Church but I enjoy THE SUN. Having been at Elon four years, I still love my College and enjoy the Church news."

A good sister writing from Harrisonburg, Va., and signing her name "Constant Reader," sends $3.00 to be used in sending THE SUN to some worthy person. The amount will be properly applied and we thank this unnamed friend.

Mt. Bethel church, Rockingham county, North Carolina is in need of a pastor and desires to get in touch with some one who can serve them for another year. Miss Ethel Friddle, Stokesdale, N. C., is secretary and would be pleased to hear from any pastor who can serve.

Rev. John G. Truitt, News Ferry, Va., has been stirring up the brethren of late, concerning THE CHRISTIAN SUN. He has been sending renewals and new subscriptions at intervals for some time. Last week he sent sixteen new subscribers in one list, together with two renewals, enclosing a check for $36.00. Who will do likewise?

We are informed by Brother J. P. Montgomery, Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, of the North Carolina Conference, that many churches have not as yet sent the names of their delegates. Attend to the matter now. Write J. P. Montgomery, Burlington, N. C., if you are going to attend the Conference and want a home.

As we supply the final copy for THE SUN this (Monday) morning, we hear of the passing of Dr. W. T. Herndon at his home in Winston-Salem, N. C., November 1. His body was brought to Elon this morning and the funeral will take place this afternoon from the College chapel. A good and great man has gone home. A more extended account of his life will appear next week.

THE SUN has said about ten thousand times during its history, that if you want an article published, sign your name to it. That does not mean that your name has to appear, but that it will appear unless you otherwise instruct. A letter mailed at Phoenix, Ala., telling of a meeting at Beulah church, and signed by "A Member," was received a few days ago. We cannot print this, or any other article, without the name. Sign your name, sign your name, sign your name.

We have just received a new subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN SUN that came in this way: The carrier on a R. F. D. route put a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN in the wrong box. The lady of the house took the paper out and read it and became so interested that she sent her subscription. This demonstrates the fact again that there are thousands of homes, in our Church, that would gladly take THE CHRISTIAN SUN if only they had a fair introduction to it. If you believe in THE CHRISTIAN SUN thoroughly, do a little missionary work for us.

Many CHRISTIAN SUN readers, especially in North Carolina, will recall the name of Rev. Luther L. Folger, evangelist of the Wesleyan Methodist Church. In scanning the pages of The Wesleyan Methodist, Syracuse, New York, the other day, we found this note: "The Rev. L. L. Folger, of the Illinois Conference, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Wesleyan Methodist church at Central, S. C., where he and his wife, Sister Anna Kirk Folger, will receive their mail from this date, as they arrived in Central the third of this month."

We quote this from the Biblical Recorder: "We happened to be on the same train with our good friend, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, of Elon College, Mission Secretary of the Christian Church, and received some encouraging information as to the doings of the denomination which he represents. His territory covers Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama. They have fewer than three hundred churches, but they are doing great things. Within three months this year they raised $300,000 for Christian Education, under the leadership of Dr. W. A. Harper, president of Elon College, and Dr. Atkinson is launching a campaign for a half million for missions, and is confident that he will secure it."

WORSHIP AND MEDITATION

LOOKING FOR SOMETHING BETTER

(Rev. J. T. Kitchen)

"I am all the time looking forward for something better—for better and happier days." These words were recently spoken to me by one who had passed in and through the depths of poverty, sorrow and suffering, and I was deeply impressed with their simplicity and beautiful sentiment as never before. To meet any one so bright, cheerful and hopeful considering their condition ought to help everybody to throw away despondency forever and to make the passing time brighter and more helpful to somebody. Little acts of kindness, loving deeds, pleasant and encouraging words have a charm to impart to every one which nothing else can. Certainly it will take time, tact and study to accomplish the best results but the happiness derived from such, helpful and pleasant exercise will fully compensate for everything spent in the accomplishment. We do not always find that for which we look, but an honest, earnest effort will often bring success. The reason why many do not succeed is because they do not try. They do not look, see, nor grasp the opportunities which present themselves. Fear, doubt, timidity and some other causes stand in the way of success; and amid the war of antagonism and conflicting elements they eringe in despair and hide in the darkness of fear.

There is so much to see and think about in the long ago that the very soul is overwhelmed in contemplation as the mind roams and strolls over eventful and familiar scenes of early days when life was fresh and new. When the mind takes such wonderful and unlimited excursions through and over vast empires and beautiful worlds, it gladly returns refreshed and invigorated by its splendid and matchless journey. Then in the stillness and quietness of reflection it lives life over again as it contemplates the illimitable height and the unknown distance it has traveled. And when moving on the verge of time looking down the gray, dim, dark vista of the future, swelling emotions of the tenderest nature pervade the whole being as you stand amazed with such hopeful aspiration. You did not—you could not, you would not listen to the silent voices of the past as pleasant memories lingered over the way and caused you to survey with inexpressible delight the pleasant emotions which trembled in the heart. Look away as much as possible from the sad things of life and fix the mind upon the scenes of immortal beauty and perpetual joy. Picture all you can an ideal life, and try to feel, that if you could prevent it your pen should never, no never, write another sad, discouraging thought, nor your tongue give utterance to another depressing, sorrowing word, but speak beautiful, encouraging, glad words and stretch them across the sky in golden letters as bright as the sun.

There are some things it would have been best not to have heard nor known them, but since you have, try to look for the good and pleasant things. Earnestly, diligently look for the beautiful, the good, and for the best things, and life will be sweeter and more attractive every day. And in contemplating and searching after the ideal life it will keep the mind from dwelling so much and so long upon the impure, imperfect and the unpleasant things.

Life is a great and wonderful thing and we are enjoying its blessings and trying to solve its rich and profound problems, which in many cases, are too deep and mysterious for us to understand. It is so strange, however, that a harp with a thousand strings should stay in tune so long, but the tunes it played were not always pleasant nor in harmony. There was some discord, and the strings were not always touched by angel fingers, but sometimes a fallen angel seemed to get hold of them. So many tunes have been played upon these harp strings that one would think they would be worn out before this time. Tunes of gladness and sadness, joy and grief come after each other in rapid succession. And they have also had to stand the strains of love and hatred and all the good and bad emotions which have swept through the soul, until tired and weary, sad and lonely has been the often repeated refrain. But in the midst of all these adverse conditions you have looked for glad, bright, better days until your harp strings have trembled with happiness which was inexpressible and full of rapture. O, the joy which clings close to the heart as it realizes these happy moments! Joy, joy is coming soon to many hearts. Let us look for and expect it to come every day. For no more important event can you look forward to than the coming of gladness. The poorest and the most humble may share in the great, rich blessings that happiness has for them. And often they enjoy it more abundantly than the rich and more fortunate ones.

Looking away from self and getting out of ourselves watching for an opportunity to help somebody, to make somebody happy is truly a grand thing to consider and to do. Living in ourselves and for self only has a great tendency to make us narrow, contracted and selfish. Yes, looking for something better is my theme, and let us practice with patience so as to perform our duties pleasantly and realize the blessings which we seek. Hold up the standard of industry, honesty and truth until they shall be seen and better understood by all who are aspiring after goodness and noble characters. To have greater and still higher ambition to reach the topmost height of success should be the constant desire of every one. So many there are who miss the prize because they fail to grasp the opportunities which are within their reach.

THE STORY OF THE LOAF

Mary was standing by the kitchen table watching her mother deftly knead bread. "May I make a loaf all by myself some day?" she asked.

"Do you think you could make a loaf of bread all by yourself, darling?" was mother's reply.

"Why, yes, mother!" said Mary. "I've watched you so often I know just how to do it, and I am nearly nine years old, you know."

"Very well, daughter, some day you shall try to make a loaf all by yourself."

A few weeks later a letter from grandma called mother away from home for a day or two, and Mary became a proud housekeeper. "Now," said she to herself, as she hung up the tea towel after wiping the cups, "I'll make a loaf of bread and surprise father."

But when she went to scoop some flour out of the flour barrel she found it completely empty. There was nothing to do but to go to the grocer's.

"Good evening, Mr. Smith. Did mother order flour?" Mary inquired as the grocer turned to wait on her.

"I'm very sorry," replied the grocer, "but I'm just out of flour. I won't have any until the miller sends it."

Mary looked quite crestfallen as she walked up the street. She did so want to make a loaf of bread. But presently a light sprang into her eyes, and she quickened her steps, saying: "I'll go to the miller and get some flour from him."

She knew exactly where the tall mill stood on the outskirts of the village, for she had often watched the dusty millers throwing the bags of flour into the big trays or loitered to listen to the noisy machinery inside. But today the wheels were still and the usually busy miller stood with arms folded in the big doorway. "Good evening, Mr. Miller," said Mary. "I've come to see if you will sell me a little flour. The grocer has none, and I want to make a loaf of bread."

"I'm very sorry," said the miller, gazing curiously into the eager little face, "I have no flour, and I can't make any until the farmer brings me some wheat to grind."

After thinking the matter over for a few seconds Mary looked up brightly and asked: "If I get some wheat from the farmer and bring it to you, will you grind it into flour for me?"

"Indeed I will," said the miller.

But the farmer had to refuse her also. "It's too bad," he said, "I have no wheat ready to be ground." And pointing to a field near by, he added: "The wheat will be ready in a few days, but it must drink in more sunshine and rain before it will be ripe enough to cut and thresh and be ready for the miller."

Mary turned toward home, a very disappointed little girl. "What a lot of people have to work together, and how long it takes just to make a loaf of bread!" she thought.

As she was passing the miller's cottage, which stood in a pretty garden just opposite the mill, to her surprise the miller's wife appeared at the door and called out: "Are you the little girl who came to the mill to buy some flour?"

"Yes," said Mary; "I wanted some to make a loaf of bread to surprise my father."

"Well," said the kind woman, "I have a little flour left in my barrel and will give you enough to make a loaf."

(Report to November 3)

Mrs. W. E. Wills, Suffolk, Va., ordered a Bible from us the other day, and upon its receipt, here is the testimony she sent: "The Bible received today. Husband and I are very much pleased with it. We thank you for the prompt attention given."

The great strike now on by the coal workers is trying to be avoided by the Government, but the outlook is not hopeful at this time.

Secretary E. M. Carter of the Alabama Conference says that the churches of that Conference raised last year, including salaries of pastors, $4,282.77 against $3,247.58 the year before. Hats off to the Alabama Conference! It is finding itself.

"O, thank you!" cried Mary. "I'll return it when we get ours." And her feet fairly danced along the road as she carried home the coveted package.

At luncheon next day when father helped himself to a slice of fresh bread and exclaimed, "Fresh bread and mother away! Where did it come from?" Mary's face was a picture. "Guess, father," she said. After mentioning several of the neighbors, "Surely you didn't make it!" he cried.

"Yes, I did," replied a joyous little voice.

"All by yourself?" questioned father.

"No-o," said Mary. "I used to think I could do it all alone, but now I know I can't. The grocer and the miller and the farmer, and O, so many more people, as well as the sunshine and the rain and the wind, have to help."

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

THANKSGIVING OFFERING

Thanksgiving Day will soon be here. It comes at a season of the year when most of the year's work is in the past and we are gathering in the harvest from our labors. It is a time when all hearts should be filled with gratitude to God for His wonderful blessings bestowed during the year. It is a time when each and every one should want to make an offering to show their appreciation for the many blessings they have received during the year.

I hardly think there is a time more appropriate than on or near Thanksgiving Day to remember the little helpless children who have been unfortunate and have lost father and mother, and are dependent upon charity and free-will offerings from those whom God has been good to, for support. It is a time when you should open your hearts as never before and give as the Lord has prospered you, that your offering may help to give some little boy or girl a home in the Orphanage where they can be trained and cared for and given an opportunity to make good in life.

There are a great many children within the bounds of the Christian Church who, through no fault of theirs, are growing up in ignorance and sin. Children who are bright, and, if proper environments were thrown around them, would grow up to be useful citizens of our great country and for the Kingdom. Without this care on the part of the Church they will perhaps drift and yield to the many temptations the world has to offer them.

The mission of the Christian Orphanage is to reach and help this class of children, and while we may not see the results of the great work an institution of this kind may be doing now, who can tell what results the future may reveal? If the institution should only save one child—just one—who could value the worth of that one soul?

Perhaps it may never be convenient for you to make the sacrifice to be the Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage or to have charge of the work in person, and never be able to render service of this kind, but you have a part that God has given you that you may lend a helping hand in this work. He has blessed you bountifully. He has not suffered you to be in need or want. A good home has been yours. Food and clothes to keep you comfortable. Father and mother to train you while young. Good health has been granted you; this world's goods a plenty, and to spare, and while the Christian Orphanage is now taking care of sixty little ones, you are suffering forty to be turned away from its doors for the lack of room. What part can you take in this great work for the Master's Kingdom? You can make a sacrifice of a part of that which God has given you to help in this work. Give at least the value of one day's wage.

We appeal to you from our heart to plan now what you can do for the coming Thanksgiving offering. Pray for the success of the offering, and may each of us do our full duty in regard to it. Let us perform the work and leave the great results to Him Who is good and whose mercy endureth forever.

With no "flu" and no war to hinder this fall, and no scourge of any kind to keep our people from church as we had last fall, our Thanksgiving offering should be the largest in the history of the institution. See that the offering from your church is more than last year. Six thousand dollars for the Thanksgiving offering is our goal and we must reach it. If you do your part we will reach it. Don't let us be disappointed because you failed to do your part. You are a link in this chain. Be a strong and worthy link. Let us do things and not dream them. I pray that God will show you your duty and may you do your duty.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: I am a little boy just eight months old, weigh twenty-one pounds, and have two teeth. Now, don't you think that is fine? I am a preacher's son and my name is Olive D. Poythress, Jr. Enclosed find 50 cents for the cousins. Best wishes to all the dear little boys and girls.—Olive Daniel Poythress, Jr.

I am very proud of our new little cousin. We give you a warm welcome to the Corner. We hope you will write often. You are a smart boy to weigh twenty-one pounds and have two teeth at eight months of age—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: I guess you think we are not going to write any more. Enclosed find our dues for June, July, August, September and October. We haven't paid since May. I am going to school now. When I learn to write you will hear from us more often. With love and best wishes to you and the little orphans.—Edward and Elizabeth Jones.

I am glad to get your letter today and to know you have not forgotten us. Always glad to have you write.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: We are sending you $1.00 for the orphan babies. Hope they are all well. Love to all.—Lenora and Lewis Welch.

You are splendid little folks. Glad to get your letter with one dollar enclosed. Write again.—"Uncle Charley."

LOST BAGGAGE OF RETURNED SOLDIERS

The American Red Cross notifies us that there are 150,000 pieces of lost baggage that have been stored at the Government Docks at Hoboken, N. J., made up of 20,000 trunk lockers, 15,000 bed rolls, 5,000 suitcases and 110,000 barrack bags which have come from overseas and remain unclaimed by their owners.

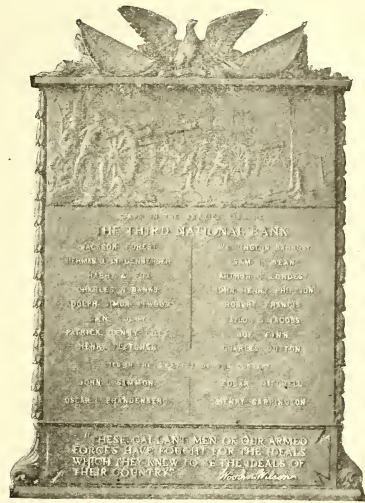

Most of this baggage is marked with names only and cannot be forwarded to the owners. In all cases a new shipping address is required. All owners of lost baggage should forward their claims and present addresses to the Lost Baggage Branch Pier No. 2 Hoboken, N. J., with an accurate description of the missing property.

A complete card index permits prompt identification and the baggage will be forwarded by express at the Government expense if on hand at Hoboken.

The Red Cross desires to assist each man from overseas to recover his lost property as well as to help the Government to dispose of this enormous accumulation.

He who would be no slave must be content to have no slaves. Those who deny freedom to others deserve it not themselves, and under a just God cannot long retain it.—Abraham Lincoln.

HAVE YOU HEROES?

Have you been associated with men who have served their country, and whom you are now anxious to welcome home? Have you a friend or relative who has done Military Service of any kind, because of the War?

Have you men in your employ who have sacrificed career, prospects, income, and family ties, and risked Life itself, to Serve Their Country?

Do you want to immortalize the names of these men, that those who are to come may do them honor?

A Liberty Honor Testimonial

will hold these names in the embrace of imperishable metal—the very walls of the structure on which it is erected, will crumble to dust, while these names are still as clear as the day they were cast.

For churches, schools, lodges, banks and other institutions.

In all former Wars, it has been, with but few exceptions, the names of only the commanders, who have been honored. Through the country, there are scattered the statues of Generals, on horse and afoot, with field-glass and with sword, but always the common soldier—the FIGHTER—has been forgotten.

It must not be so in this War—this democracy must pay its tribute to the actual men behind the guns.

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR NOVEMBER 16, 1919

(Mrs. Fred Bullock)

J. Vincent Knight

Witnesses of Christ's Glory.—Luke 9:28-36.

Golden Text: This is my beloved Son; hear ye him.—Mark 9:7.

Additional Material For Teachers.—Matt. 17:1-8; Mark 9:2-8; II Pet. 2:1-76.

In this lesson we go up "With Peter and John on the Mountain" (Junior Topic) to see "The Glory of Jesus Christ" (Intermediate Topic), and gain for ourselves some "Mountain Top Experiences" (Senior and Adult Topic).

And Mountain top experiences are something we all need. Our road seems to lie so level, so flat, unchanging; we can look ahead for days and weeks and months, and there is no variation, no change, and then, some way, somehow, we come to a mountain, and from the mountain we secure a new view, a new outlook, as did Pilgrim on the Delectable Mountains. We look across the hills and valleys, the sorrows and hardships, and there, at the end, we catch a glimpse of Heaven's own glory.

Had Peter and John never had this glimpse into the unsearchable riches of the glory of Christ, there might be times when they doubted the quiet man who walked in Galilee, Who "went about doing good," but never compelling the worship or obedience of men. "Whom say ye that I am?" He asked in His dusty wayside garments, and the proof that their revelations were correct was seen when He "was transfigured before them." We may not doubt that ever true believer in the Lord will have some time this experience; the soil will drop away, the grey will turn to white, the shining soul will leave visible impression on the face, and looking up, seeing Jesus only, they will be like Him, because they will see Him as He is.

It is easier to go back to the humdrum valley tasks; it is easy to cure the sick and cast out devils when we have had a mountain-top experience; God pity those who have had no "mountain-top" in their lives.

"Co-operation in Christian Service." John 17:20-23; I Cor. 3:5-10.

One of our greatest needs is to see the importance of co-operation in Christian service, for one of our biggest blunders has been the division of our Christian forces and planning to make an individual Church grow instead of looking after the larger things of the Kingdom. It has taken the bloodshed of millions of the world's best to pay for our folly as a people, for if we had spent one-fifth of the money wasted in one year of the war, for Christian missions and Kingdom extension, we never would have heard of a world war.

Yet, it has taken the most horrible war in the history of the world to convince us that we must unite our forces if we win for Christ. Our men who faced the shot and shell never stopped to ask who were Democrats, Republicans or Progressives. Humanity came first. So must we lose sight of the fact that we are Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Christians, etc., for the larger interests of the Kingdom. The world will no longer recognize a divided Church, nor will it recognize the Church forces unless we join hands in the great work of the Master. United we stand, divided we fall.

Take a look at the organizations that have served as a means of bringing our Church forces together and have helped us to co-operate. The Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., the Red Cross, Church federations, and Christian Endeavor. All these have been a mighty power in pulling down the division walls, and have wielded a mighty influence for God, and the right. Through these influences the day is not far hence, when we shall have a united front for God. But externally speaking, the Church will never be united—the work must be done within, for nothing except the love of God in the heart, the greater needs of the Kingdom, and a larger vision of the great work of our Christ will make us co-operate in the work.

All Christians can co-operate in breaking down sectarianism, strife and divisions. In enforcing Sabbath observance, law enforcement, and law observance—in pushing out the liquor traffic, and other evils of the present day. One thing our young people should co-operate in is the driving from our cities and towns the public dance halls, street dances, and gambling places where our people learn to take their first chance. Then, write to your representative at Washington, and thank him for the action he has taken in pushing the whisky from our country, if he did not, then cast your vote against him the first opportunity. If we win for Christ, we shall do it through the mobilizing of every force for His work.

ORGANIZED CLASS IN BOTH YOUNG PEOPLE'S AND ADULT DIVISION

This is the third point of the Standard School. What is an Organized Class? is a question asked again and again, for while we have many classes there are many, still who do not understand the work of an organized class. Briefly, an organized class is a class having a president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer. To this should be added lookout and social committees and as many more as may be needed by the size of the class. We have outgrown the idea that the teacher should do everything and be everything in the class. We are beginning to realize that we are training men and women for work in the Kingdom, not helping them to pass an hour on Sunday by delivering a lecture half an hour, or forty minutes in length. Someone has characterized such teaching as "a sermon by a layman at 10:00 A. M., and a sermon by a preacher at 11:00 A. M."; there is often too much truth in this statement. How shall our boys and girls learn to do Kingdom service unless we give them an opportunity to learn? How shall our men and women exercise their "spiritual muscles" unless somewhere, somehow, they are given something to do that will provide an outlet for their spiritual energy? "Pastor", said the deacon, "Doesn't the good Book say, 'Feed my sheep?'" "Deacon," said the pastor, "We have too many stall-fed sheep now. What you need is not more feed, but more exercise.' It is this exercise the organized class is intended to offer. A class which simply "organizes" and then does nothing with its organization is no better than an unorganized class. First of all, the class should be organized, and then it should be organized for service. People are not only saved when they have found Christ, they are saved to serve. Christ's word is, "Come" until we have found Him, but immediately after a tarrying for power, it is "GO."

PROHIBITION ACTIVITIES

In a campaign conducted jointly by the Anti-Saloon League of America and the League of the state, 300 meetings in the interest of Prohibition law enforcement and world-wide drouth will be held in North Carolina, beginning November 2 and closing December 21.

Speakers in the North Carolina campaign will be M. R. Patterson, former Governor of Tennessee; Rev. J. D. McAlister, Superintendent of the Anti-Saloon League of Tennessee; George W. Morrow, former Superintendent of the Michigan League; Joseph G. Camp, Atlanta orator; Rev. David Hepburn, Superintendent of the Virginia League; Congressman W. D. Upshaw, of Georgia; Robert Lee Davis, Superintendent of the North Carolina League; Rev. Dr. Charles O. Jones, Superintendent of the Georgia League, and Wayne B. Wheeler, Washington, D. C., Attorney and Counsel for the national organization.

The Anti-Saloon League, it is announced, is pursuing the plan of holding a series of meetings in practically every state. The Prohibition Amendment and enforcement law will be explained, and the people will be urged to demand strict enforcement not only of state and local laws, but also of Federal enactments. Election of officials favorable to enforcement will be insisted upon.

World Prohibition as the next step in reform also will be brought to the attention of the people. It will be explained that the League is a constituent of the World League Against Alcoholism recently organized in Washington.

MARRIAGES

WELDON-WINN

On September 21, 1919, in the presence of a few friends, Miss Pattie Jones Winn became the bride of Mr. James D. Weldon. Mr. Weldon is a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Weldon, and Mrs. Weldon is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Winn. They will reside near Epsom, N. C.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

WELLS-WICKER

Mr. Willard W. Wells and Miss Helen Wicker were, by the writer, united in marriage on October 7, 1919. Mr. Wells is a son of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Wells. Mrs. Wells is a daughter of Mr. R. B. Wicker. Their home will be in Akron, Ohio, where Mr. Wells has a position.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

BARTHOLOMEW-WINN

On October 22, 1919, the writer united in marriage Mr. Joseph J. Bartholomew and Miss Lizzie Winn. Mr. Bartholomew is a son of Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Bartholomew. Mrs. Bartholomew is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. G. Winn. Their home will be near Epsom, N. C.

The above young people are of well known and highly respected families, and their many friends join the writer in wishing for them the greatest degree of happiness and prosperity, and always the smile of the Father's blessing.

NEWMAN

Mrs. Lizzie Newman, wife of Mr. K. H. Newman, passed from labor to reward September 16, 1919, in her thirty-fifth year. For more than a year she had been in failing health, but hopes were entertained for her recovery until about a week before her death. She was a devoted wife and loving mother. Her home was a realm in which she reigned in wifely affection and motherly grace and love. She had been since early girlhood a consistent member of the church, and a follower of the Lord whom she loved and served. Besides her husband, she leaves to mourn her departure her mother, Mrs. Hudson; five brothers and a sister; five children: Lizzie Bell, Pearl, Lula May, Cathreen, and William Hurley.

May our pitying Father and compassionate Savior bless and comfort the bereaved.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

TAYLOR

A. B. Taylor was born July, 1852, and died October 20, 1919, aged 67 years. He was a faithful member of the East End Christian church, Newport News, Va., and one of the ablest men in the church. As a man he was liked by all who knew him and those who knew him as a friend valued his companionship highly. A man of sterling qualities and Godly life has passed to his reward.

Prior to his death he was confined to his bed for five weeks and four days. He was a patient sufferer and one who longed to get well, but God called and he answered.

On November 14, 1906, he was married to Miss Mary S. Andrews who is left to mourn the loss of one who was husband and companion. May God's richest blessings be with her in this hour of bereavement and may the Great Shepherd be her comfort. May God extend to the members of the family His loving kindness and may their hearts be filled with joy for Christ.

The funeral services were conducted by his pastor, assisted by the Order of Maccabees. On October 21, we laid him to rest in Greenlawn cemetery to await for the resurrection of the body. Rarely has it been my privilege to help at the funeral of one who was so well respected and loved by all who knew him.

To those who miss his companionship Christ says with outstretched arms, "Come unto me and I will give you rest."

H. J. FLEMING.

HALL

Mrs. Mary Ann Gales Hall was born in Marion County, South Carolina, June 20, 1833, and married Hanson K. Hall, January 5, 1918. Her husband preceded her to his Heavenly home, only a few months ago. Their devoted Christian lives were an inspiration to their children, grandchildren, and all who had the pleasure of knowing them.

The cure of heart trouble is faith. Christ discloses the blessed life of which the present is the vestibule. "Let not your heart be troubled." He says, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." He discourses of the "Father's House." The Home of the soul. Home: What a magic word! As the boys lay in the trenches, the bands played, "Home, Sweet Home," and a great sob went through the army.

"Home's not merely four square walls,
Though hung with pictures nicely gilded;
Home is where affection calls,
And filled with shrines the heart has builded."

The best of all, in that beautiful home, to which so many happy pilgrims are going day by day, will be the Lord's presence. "Where I am, ye shall be also." Then, too, what a glorious thought, He will come "to receive us."

Take Note

The following points should be taken into consideration in placing an order for church offering envelopes:

1. A set means 52 envelopes, one for each Sunday in the year.
2. When cartons are ordered the sets are arranged in their logical order, thus making it convenient for the member. We suggest the use of cartons because of the convenience.

3. If you desire monthly, double or single envelopes, without cartons, 1-3 the price of the same number of weekly sets. Cartons 3-4 cent each.

4. Semi-monthly, double or single, in cartons, 2-3 the weekly price; without cartons 3-5 the weekly price.

5. When ordering state what Sunday that your church year begins, and whether you want the dates on envelopes or not.

6. Indicate the wording that you want placed on the envelopes or leave the same with us. Samples sent upon request.

7. Allow ten to fifteen days for delivery. Order early.

A GLORIOUS COUNTRY

The Wild Onion school-teacher lectured on the United States a few nights ago to a large audience, reports the Frog Hollow Kentuckian. In the course of his remarks he paid a glowing tribute to our country, and it is regretted that everybody in the United States was not present. "One reason we keep so far ahead of the other nations," said he, "is because we are getting up and going to work every morning while the folks around the other side of the world are just going to bed."—Providence Journal.

BEGAN EARLY

A company of people were waiting in a railroad station, and fell to relating at how early an age each had chosen his vocation. A farmer had been stimulated at twelve by a plot of ground given to him to cultivate. A preacher said that at the age of seven, in church, one day, he had resolved to enter the ministry. Thus several men spoke; but a sign-painter, present, antedated them all by remarking: "I started in my business before any of you. Why, before I could talk, I made signs."

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

ON BUSINESS FOR THE KING

About two hundred delegates and visitors attended the Woman's Missionary Convention at Elon College, November 8-9. The gathering was the initial session of the united forces of the three former conferences that embraced the churches of our denomination in North Carolina. Preparation had been made upon the part of the local organization and the officials of the Convention. Business-like, to the point, to the place, and on time the Convention took up its work—its business for the King.

Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, N. C., President of the Convention, inspired the Convention by her address. Her message had to do with goals of the past and the future. The various officers of the Convention made complete and satisfactory reports, which showed progress in every department, as well as missionary interest and activity. Mrs. W. A. Harper, President of the Woman's Board of the Southern Christian Convention, brought a message that inspired and uplifted. Her theme was: "Jesus and Women." Rev. E. K. McCord, missionary to Japan, addressed the body telling of the need of investment in human life in the heathen countries.

Part of the afternoon of the first day was given over to general discussion, led by Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, Raleigh, N. C. The interest taken in this fully demonstrated that the women were on business for the King. Senor Victor M. Rivera, Toshio Sato San, students from our mission fields, spoke interestingly and entertainingly of their native lands. Prof. Barra, of the department of Romance Languages of the College, delighted the Convention by his very earnest and impressive talk, which deepened interest in the missionary enterprise. Rev. George D. Eastes, scheduled to address the Convention on "Women and the Kingdom," was unable to be present due to ill health. Dr. Atkinson took the subject and his message was heard gladly.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the Burlington church gave a pageant at the evening session, entitled "Sunlight or Candlelight," which greatly edified and enlightened.

On Sunday morning Dr. Atkinson preached a great missionary sermon from the text: "The love of Christ constraineth us." Mrs. E. K. McCord, in the afternoon service, spoke of the work in Japan, also the Japanese customs, and reviewed the outlook for Christianity in that country. Closing her message by allowing questions to be asked, brought forth many interesting questions, all showing that delegates really wanted to know of the mission fields. Dr. J. W. Harrell spoke on "Our Women and the Future." His message was optimistic and prophetic, prophesying great things for our women in the near future.

Sunday night, Rev. E. K. McCord, preached a special missionary sermon that enriched the thought, and added to the missionary knowledge, of those who were privileged to hear him.

Mrs. A. F. Smith, Mrs. W. J. Pierce, Mrs. A. T. Banks and Mrs. Charles R. Clark, conducted the devotional during the Convention.

Space forbids the mention of the many great things undertaken. However, it will be of special interest to state that Rev. H. S. Hardeastle was adopted as missionary of the Convention when he is ready to take up the work. Appreciation of the life and labors of the late Rev. L. I. Cox was tendered by the Convention.

Officers for the ensuing year are as follows:

- President—Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, N. C.
- Vice-President—Mrs. A. T. Banks, Ramseur, N. C.
- Secretary—Mrs. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.
- Treasurer—Mrs. W. R. Sellars, Burlington, N. C.
- Superintendent Literature and Mite Boxes—Mrs. M. F. Cook, Greensboro, N. C.
- Superintendent Young People's Work—Miss Bessie Holt, Burlington, N. C.
- Superintendent Cradle Roll—Mrs. N. G. Newman, Elon College, N. C.
- Superintendent Boys' Work—Mrs. J. W. Patton, Greensboro, N. C.

The place of the 1920 meeting is to be announced later.

DR. W. T. HERNDON

Dr. William Thomas Herndon, the last grandson of James O'Kelly, fell on sleep November 1, 1919 in the seventy-ninth year of his sojourn here. This ended a useful and active life of a man who had been a modest and model character. In early life Brother Herndon was an active and successful physician, and gave up a large and increasing practice to devote his life to more direct and active ministerial work. He was a pioneer and blazed the way in many directions for his denomination that the Kingdom on earth might go forward.

In the crisis days of Elon College Dr. Herndon gave up his pastorate and devoted all his time and strength to the financial interest of that institution. He was a friend of education and a strong advocate of its every need. He was also a champion for the cause of prohibition, and in the early days of the fight against King Alcohol, Dr. Herndon was a stump speaker for the cause of prohibition. To challenge the liquor traffic in those days was an unpopular issue, but our deceased Brother stood with others and lived to see the full fruitage of his labor in this noble work.

Dr. Herndon is survived by his wife, who was Miss Clara A. Edwards. Six children were born to make the Herndon home real. Two of these also survive—Mrs. Myrtle Moffitt, Ashboro, N. C., and Mrs. Gertrude Scott, Winston-Salem, N. C. In recent years Dr. and Mrs. Herndon lived with Mrs. Scott, in whose home the summons came.

The body was brought to Elon, the funeral service being conducted from the College chapel. Dr. J. O. Atkinson preached the funeral, assisted by Drs. N. G. Newman, J. W. Harrell, J. U. Newman, and P. H. Fleming. The interment took place in the village cemetery, witnessed by a host of sorrowing friends.

A GOOD MAN PASSES

In the passing of Captain James A. Turrentine, as noted in last week's issue of THE SUN, the Church loses one of its most loyal members. Captain Turrentine served well and faithfully in various capacities. He loved truth, honesty, and was a champion for progress. THE SUN and THE SUN'S Editor had no truer friend. Young and old loved and respected him. He was a Christian gentleman, rich in spirit, brotherly in conduct and noble in character. He was wise in counsel and generous of heart. No pen, page, or pages can do his life justice.

The funeral was conducted from the Burlington Christian church by Rev. P. H. Fleming, D. D., assisted by Pastor Harrell, Rev. J. W. Wellons, Rev. J. W. Holt, and Dr. W. W. Staley. Dr. Fleming's tribute to the deceased was beautiful and timely. "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen in Israel this day" (II Samuel 3:38) was the basis of Dr. Fleming's remarks.

Long live the memory of departed Brother.

C. B. R.

JAMES A. TURRENTINE

James Alexander Turrentine, was born in Orange County, now Alamance, November 19, 1835 and passed from labor to reward in the early morning hour of November 4, 1919, aged 83 years, 11 months and 15 days.

Brother Turrentine was twice married. His first wife, Miss Martissia Scott, lived only a short time—about a year. His second wife was Miss Louisiana Kilby of Suffolk, Va. To this union were born eight children, five of whom are living: Virginus L. of Kingston, N. C., Darius H. of Norfolk, Va., Mrs. J. P. Montgomery, Mrs. W. T. Stokes and Miss Mary Turrentine of Burlington; also one brother, W. H. Turrentine, Burlington, N. C.

In early life he united with the Christian church and was ever devoted to its interest. He was at one time a member of New Providence Christian church, Graham, N. C., and a charter member of the Suffolk Christian church, and at the time of his death he was a member of the Burlington Christian church, and had been for a number of years. He was senior deacon and as a member and officer he took an active interest and part in the work of the church and its progress, and, though unable to hear much that was said, he attended services. He wanted to be there.

He was treasurer of the Western North Carolina Conference for a number of years and gave up the work only when advancing years made it unwise for him to be away from home during the winter. In this office he served faithfully and efficiently and would doubtless have served on till death but for the fact of age and inclement weather which often came about conference time.

He was in the railroad service of what is now the Southern, for a number of years, first as conductor and then as agent. He represented Alamance County in the State Legislature three times—twice in the House and once in the Senate. In county affairs he has served as County Commissioner, on the Board of Charities and the Board of Pensions, and was Mayor of Burlington for several years. He was a Mason tried and true. He leaves a host of friends and relatives who mourn his death. They will miss him. His seat will be empty. He left an impression wherever he went and in every capacity he served.

SOLVING THE PROBLEM OF HIGH PRICES

There are a few fundamental facts that must be reckoned with in lowering the high cost of living. Production cannot be increased by shorter hours. The law of supply and demand controls prices, and you cannot lower the cost of things until you can regulate the supply. You cannot sell an article for less than it costs and continue to do business. The labor item is the one important thing in finding the cost of an article. High labor forces the manufacturer to increase the cost of his products. Each advance in labor is an advance in the cost of the market's wares. Each hour less per day

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

INGRAM—PLEASANT GROVE

This pastorate is beginning to put on its program a campaign of intensive, systematic work. The pastor is visiting every home and taking a careful and thorough survey of general conditions. Within the last five weeks I have visited over a hundred families. I have talked with them face to face, and heart to heart about repentance, salvation, prayer, faith, works; about better homes, better fences, better fields, better roads; about churches, schools, and Sunday schools; and the hospitality and response have been gratifying.

Often times it is necessary for pastors to teach school, or engage in other pursuits to gain a livelihood, but such a proceeding is certainly handicapping to them in their pastoral work. I speak from experience. For two years I tried the patience of a great people. The survey which I have been making clearly reveals how great their patience was, but I trust it is henceforth impossible for a pastor to serve this pastorate with less than his full time.

There is a drought of candidates for the ministry. The crop is short. But if every minister who serves in country pastorates will but carry the love of the Christ direct to the homes of the laids whom they have taught to love them something good and great is going to happen. The crop of candidates for the ministry must be increased, but before the crop is increased we must awaken ourselves to some fundamental changes in the methods of country church management. Country churches must be educated to the place where they will take and read THE CHRISTIAN SUN. They must be brought to the place where they will provide Sunday school rooms an up-to-date methods in their Sunday schools. They must have their minister constantly in their midst. He must himself be wide awake to the demands of his community and love it with an untiring and consecrated love. With such a love he will see the leaks and will be the better able to make his community safe for Christianity.

J. G. TRUITT.

FRANKLIN, VIRGINIA

The Franklin Christian church has experienced a revival of deep spiritual power. The special services began October 12, and continued until the 22. Rev. A. Victor Lightbourne of Dover, Delaware, was present from the first, preaching twice each day. His messages were clear, forceful and convincing and under the direction of the Holy Spirit. They had convincing and converting power. Each day for a week prior to, and during, the meetings, prayer meetings were held in homes in the town, two or three each day. There was great interest in these and they were sources of great blessings. The church was stirred and moved into a nearer spiritual relation to the Lord. This was evident in no mistakable way. Every department of our church has been made to pulsate with new life. There were over forty professions of faith, and numbers of reconsecrations. Twenty-nine have united with the church to date.

Brother Lightbourne is pleasing and attractive as a preacher, but it is the power of God working through the man that is the great secret of his success. He has felt the saving power in his own life and this has given him a love and passion for the souls of others. He is sane and safe in his methods even the most conservative could endorse. In the field of evangelism, he easily ranks first. His oversea service and his labors in the pastorate, have deepened and sweetened his experience and have tended to make him more effective and fitted him for more efficient service. Through his labors with us he has greatly endeared himself to the people of Franklin and our prayers follow him.

Mrs. Lightbourne joined Brother Lightbourne at the close of the meeting, both of whom were with us on the following Sunday evening, he preaching to an overflowing house and she delighting with the Gospel in song.

C. H. ROWLAND.

CATAWBA SPRINGS

Sunday, November 2, was a good day at Catawba Springs for several reasons. It was the first regular church service since the hot air heating system had been installed. This was planned, money raised, and installed in less than thirty days at a cost of $350.00. It works fine.

The church promised to pay the pastor $200.00, but before he left the church the collection paid him $100.00 extra, a total of $300.00. Of course, it makes a pastor feel good when such appreciation is shown. I know our Lord will reward them and I pray that He may do it through me, making me a more efficient servant.

Dr. Atkinson was there also and preached a strong sermon on missions, which I am sure the people enjoyed. We like to have him come to Catawba. He secured some pledges for the mission work and I believe more will follow. The Sunday school is giving one Sunday's offering per month to build a church in some foreign field. The new church will be also named Catawba Springs. The first offering amounted to $34.20, but they did not wait for the regular day for this offering before they added $10.00 more to it. I never had a more pleasant place to work. May God make us fruitful in every good word and work.

NEW ELAM

The congregation of New Elam church has outgrown the present church building. At the annual revival, and on all other extra occasions, we have an overflow. A building committee was appointed in August to make plans and to decide on size of addition to the building. The Committee made its report in September and we quickly raised the required amount estimated by the Committee. The Committee proceeded to get material together, and I trust before winter the addition to the church will be completed. I offered my resignation to the church and Rev. B. J. Howard has accepted a call. At my request the church voted a raise of $100.00 in salary. The church wanted to make him feel good before he got there.

SOME THINGS TO BE THANKFUL FOR

Harvesting time is over and God has blessed us with plenty of this world's goods. Let us all be thankful and much in prayer and praise for His goodness, and let us not forget to render unto Him His part. We must remember that there are many who do not have bread and clothes enough to be comfortable. Of course, we can pray for those, but we ought to do even more.

Let us think of the many precious souls that ought to be saved before another harvesting time and if we are busy let us say: "Somewhere, some way, some time each day, I'll turn aside and stop and pray." I believe in much praying. I don't believe that Jesus ever made a choice without prayer. Can we afford to do so? The poverty of our prayer life is due to the poverty of our friendship with our Lord. We should read a part of God's Word daily. Let us start our day's work with prayer and praise and we will do more and better work. Remember the many young people who are starting homes of their own. Some are Christians and some are not. Let us pray that they may start with Christian homes and let Christ be the ruler. Those who welcome Jesus into their homes find that He brings many wonderful blessings with Him.

Dear friends, those of you who have Christian homes remember those who have not. Remember those who have loved ones without a Savior who are dearer to them than their own lives. I have a special request that I carry to God each day until I think He must be weary of listening to me. Sometimes I think that if He were to answer that one prayer I would not have anything else to wish for I would be so happy, but I know He will answer it in His own good time.

Let us not forget to pray for those who are sick and in trouble. I believe that if we could not go to see them and would remember them in prayer God would bless them with the consciousness that somebody cared enough for them to be praying for them while they were suffering. Prayer brings us closer together and binds our hearts in Christian love as nothing else can do. True prayer leaves all to God. It is a privilege to ask largely of God and victory comes when we can say, "Thy will, not mine, be done."

A PERSONAL LETTER

We have had an opportunity of seeing the following letter sent Dr. W. S. Long by Dr. W. W. Staley and take pleasure in reproducing it:

My dear Dr. Long:

Upon making an entry today, I was reminded of your birthday, and hence I write to congratulate you upon the time in which you were born, the history through which you have lived, the service you have rendered to your generation, the happy domestic relations you have enjoyed, the good children you have reared, and the parents from whom you sprang.

I also congratulate you upon your clean record, your good health, and your reputation as a man, as a Christian, and as a minister. Few men come to four score with the vigor and looks which you enjoy, and I rejoice with you and your dear wife in this greatest of blessings on earth.

Very sincerely yours,

W. W. STALEY.

SUFFOLK LETTER

I am thinking of those who milk the cows and those who produce the butter and cheese of this country. Government estimates the number of milch cows in the United States at 22,000,000, and the annual milk yield at 86,000,000,000 pounds, which is equal to 10,000,000,000 gallons. The wholesale market value of milk is 30 cents per gallon, which would be $3,000,000,000.00. This sum is more than the cotton crop of the South at the present price. If one person milked ten cows it would require 2,000,000 persons to do this seven-day work. The magnitude of the dairy business is enormous in size, immense in value, and of incalculable benefit to the hundred million of people in this country. To care for these millions of cows, to provide food for them, and to milk them, and then market the milk, to say nothing of factories for producing condensed milk, cheese, cream, and other products. The manufacture of casein from skim milk and buttermilk, to be used in paper industry and waterproof glue, used with plywoods for aeroplane construction, extends the use of milk beyond its food value.

Think of the people who carry on dairy farms near towns and cities. They rise early, milk the cows, bottle the milk, and then hurry up and down streets to deliver the milk to customers. It is no easy service, and it is no ordinary service. It is essential to the life of the community. Children live upon it. Adults are nourished by it. Luxuries are enriched by it. The sick are fed upon it. Apart from its necessity and its usefulness, the milk-pail might be a hardship; but when one milks a cow with self-abandon and cheerfulness the work becomes a pleasure and a benevolence. The milk-man comes, no matter, how cold, how hot, or how rainy the morning. He is an angel of mercy, a supporter of life, a friend of children, a helper to cooks, an unseen bearer of good to the household. He picks up the empties, places the white liquid at the door and passes on in a hurry. Whoever thought of thanking the milk-man

NEW MISSIONARIES URGENTLY NEEDED

The Mission Boards of the various denominations in the United States and Canada have united in sending out the following appeal, which appeal should be read and taken to heart by every member of our Christian Church, because, of all churches just now, it seems to come most appropriately from our own and apply most appropriately to our needs and conditions. The appeal is as follows:

"The need for recruits for foreign missionary service eclipses all other needs." The war is over. The battle for the ideals of righteousness, justice, and truth has been won. The victory has cost enormously in money, suffering, sorrow, and life-blood. Men have willingly sacrificed everything, including life, rather than yield their principles. They have left a legacy of heroic service that must be neither forgotten nor lost. The banner they have carried forward in war must be held high in the days of peace.

This privilege belongs peculiarly to the young man and woman of this generation. The new task will be harder than the old, for it will be shorn of the glamour, the excitement, and the pageantry of war.

The war was won with armies. It will need more than armies to keep it won. It will require men who have the power to see and follow ideals when the world has lost sight of them; men who have the capacity to draw their motives from unseen and hidden sources; men who have wills strong enough to remain faithful and patient when God is working in His ordinary and more deliberate ways.

The Christian Church must accept this challenge. Upon the ministers at home and missionaries abroad will devolve the leadership.

Our appeal is to those who have heard the call of War. The call of Peace is even more arresting. The war must be interpreted to the nations of the world. They must realize that spiritual forces are more powerful than material, that righteousness exalts a nation, that Brotherhood and not rivalry must determine international relationships, and that sacrificial service is essential to the world's well-being. These truths are at the heart of the missionary message. They must be carried to the ends of the world.

The welfare of the world will depend upon men who have incarnated these truths in their lives and are willing to live for them.

The Mission Boards of all the churches in Canada and the United States have consecrated themselves to this task. They need men and women in larger numbers than ever before. Every phase of the work needs strengthening. The strongest and finest qualities of brain, heart, and hand are required. The demand is for ministers, teachers, physicians (men and women), nurses, agriculturists, technical workers, business men. God can use every talent a man possesses. This appeal is to you. We are face to face with a great crisis.

It is the day of opportunity for young men and young women. Again can it be said Christ has gathered His disciples about Him and with greater intensity than ever before is saying:

Go ye therefore to all nations, teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

I sincerely trust CHRISTIAN SUN readers will take this message seriously and consider its significance to us. Think: We are more than one hundred years old as a denomination, and so far we have not sent out one medical missionary to help heal "the open sore of the world," or stay the hand of disease so rampant and so deadly among the nations that know not God. We think it appalling that ten out of every hundred children in New York City die before they are five years old. This is because there are unsanitary conditions, a congested population, wicked, Godless, unconcerned people in that great city. But what about China where we are told that half the children, fifty out of every hundred, throughout that vast empire, die before they are two years old. "Wherefore it is not your Father's will that one of these little ones should perish." Yet they are perishing by the millions, not because it is God's will that they shall perish, but because we who have been entrusted by Him with the commission and the power to go and save them will not do so. The mothers in their ignorance and superstition do not know, and often do not care, and we who do know and should care are doing almost nothing to help and to save. How much longer shall the ringing, urgent, imperative command of our Savior and Redeemer go unheeded? We often wonder. How long?

J. O. ATKINSON.

KENDALL IN WASHINGTON

Your subscription to the funds for home missions has made possible the beginning of active operations toward the establishment of our church in Washington. The little group of interested persons who have taken the initiative and started the ball a-rolling would be up against a stiff proposition but for the support which you are giving the work. In your Sunday school and church you are educating boys and girls to know and follow Jesus Christ. When in the course of human events they board a train and come here to work for the Government, or engage in some private employment, they will find ready to receive them, with a warm welcome they will understand, a small body of earnest men and women who will make it their business to see that your boy or girl finds a good home and an association with clean, upright, progressive people.

Dr. Atkinson, bumping around over the country in day coaches late into the night, getting a bite at a lunch counter here, traveling out into the country making appointments at two or three churches a Sunday, often located miles apart, eating, sleeping and being entertained in different homes, or none at all, working for the cause of Christ in trains, automobiles, by the roadside, in churches, and homes is reaching out after the foundation upon which all enterprises must rest—money.

The money you give him is not used for luxury, nor is it wasted in paying princely salaries to men who do nothing. That which your Board is spending in Washington in the employment of a pastor to give his whole time and interest in the establishment of a Christian church at the National Capital will make possible the assembling of a group of interested believers in the Gospel of Christ who will give of their means, their time, their interest upbuilding the truly great mission of the Christian Church.

This city is the common meeting ground of all Americans; they come from the South, East, North, and West to work for the Government. They come from the best homes, have had the best training the schools and churches and community interests could give them; their coming to Washington is to find a large opportunity for the development of the ideas with which giant brains are teeming. Others come hoping to connect up with the Government pay roll, a fat salary with nothing to do. These two elements of society are here. The brave, the courageous, the ambitious soul is sorely tried when he finds his opportunities thwarted by some lazy individual with more "influence." A discouraged person is easily defeated. Evil persons are looking for "easy marks," and find them among the defeated, the discouraged.

We want to establish an oasis of spiritual uplift here in this busy Capital City. A place for the lonely, the fellow who is looking for a friendly face, the girl who wants to find companions of the right sort. The money you have given to Dr. Atkinson has made this possible.

Dr. Arthur Burton Kendall is just the sort of man to fill such a place. He has had experience in the South, the West, the North, in social settlement work in Chicago, in Y. M. C. A. work, in colleges, and in the open country districts. He was born and grew as a boy among the hills of Northwestern Pennsylvania. The book of nature has opened her interesting pages to his watchful eyes, and he has made himself familiar with the technical names of flowers, birds, and trees. To take a walk with him into the country is an educational treat for those who are with him, for he sees everything, hears everything, and calls attention to the beauties and oddities of the things about him.

He is especially competent as a teacher of the Bible, which he has made his own, in which he has searched for hidden treasure and found it, and the ease with which he imparts the knowledge he has found is an inimical style peculiar to himself and pleasing to all who listen.

We have not secured a location for meeting as yet, but that will follow soon, and the church which you have given to Washington will be waiting to receive you as their guest when you come to the Government's big town.

IRVING W. HITCHCOCK.

Principles and Government of The Christian Church

(The Franklin, Virginia, session of the Southern Christian Convention ordered that the Principles and Government of the Christian Church be revised and that a committee be appointed to make the revision. The following members of the Convention were appointed to do the work: Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., President; Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., and W. A. Harper, LL. D. Some weeks ago the committee completed its work, and we are privileged to print, in serial form, the Principles and Government as outlined, subject to ratification by the next session of the Convention.—Editor).

CHAPTER I

THE CHURCH

The Church is composed of all who exercise repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ.

The Saviour came into the world to establish one Church, the members of which belong to various denominations, differing widely in doctrine and government, yet they form but one body, of which Christ is the head.

All the redeemed are brethren, and members of the Church. The Church is spoken of in the Scriptures as a family, of which God is the Father, and as a household, which should not be divided against itself.

All the principles, operations, and officers of the Church ought to harmonize in the administration of the Redeemer's Kingdom on earth, to the end that all the members may be brought into fellowship and communion with one another.

CHAPTER II.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

The Christian Church may be composed of any or all who constitute the body, of which Christ is the Head.

But at present it embraces only a part of those who desire the reformation of the wicked, the spiritual worship of God, and the union of the great Brotherhood of Christians.

It is opposed to contentions and schisms in the body. Envy, strife, and divisions are hurtful to the Church, and antagonistic to the teachings and spirit of Christianity.

Its purpose is to propagate the fruit of the Spirit, and to cultivate brotherly love.

It fosters the essential doctrines of evangelical Christianity, by which the Church has been established, and maintained.

It remands to private judgment the peculiar doctrines and tenets which have confused and divided the Christian world, and hence they cease to be matters for debate, when such debate tends to strife.

It requires no compromise of faith on the part of any follower of Christ in order to communion or fellowship but denominational distinctions cease to exist and Christian love binds the Brotherhood together.

His mission will be consummated in the conversion of the world, the union of all the followers of Christ, and His reign in human society.

CHAPTER III

PRINCIPLE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

The Scriptures contain an abundance of indisputable truth sufficient for the moral guidance and spiritual enlightenment of man, and adapted to the comprehension of all. The Christian Church, therefore, remands to private judgment those doctrines and tenets which divided the followers of Christ, and takes the following cardinal principles as the ground-work of organization:

(1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the church.

(2) Christian is a sufficient name for the church.

(3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.

(5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

PART II

GOVERNMENT OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

CHAPTER I

SECTION I

A CHRISTIAN CHURCH

A Christian Church is an autonomous body of the followers of Christ, organized for religious instruction, spiritual improvement, the worship of God, and the propagation of the Gospel.

SECTION II

ORGANIZATION OF A CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Those wishing to organize a Christian Church shall enter into the following agreement:

We, whose names are hereunto annexed, members, as we trust, of the body of Christ, having exercised repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ, being desirous of associating ourselves together as a church, agree to be governed by the following principles:

(a) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only head of the church.

(b) Christian is a sufficient name for the church.

(c) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

(d) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of church membership.

(e) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

Those who have signed the above agreement should elect a Secretary, a Treasurer, and other officers or committees, as may be necessary. They should also elect two, or more, Deacons. Respecting the election of Deacons time should be had for consultation, reflection and prayer that the choice may fall upon those best suited to the office.

After organization, members may be received from any Christian Church, or other evangelical denomination, by letter, or other evidence showing their full connection therewith, or by exercising repentance and faith.

SECTION III

DUTIES OF A CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Every Christian Church should procure a pastor for full time, or associate itself with other contiguous churches in the employment of a pastor. The call should preferably be for an indefinite period, and when a change is desired by either party, three months notice should be given.

The Church should faithfully teach the duty of Scriptural giving that it may provide for the liberal support of the pastor, current expenses, and the general work of the Kingdom.

It shall be the duty of every church, as early as practicable after its organization, to unite with the conference in whose bounds it may be located, and to comply with all requests of the conference to which it may belong.

Every church should celebrate the Lord's Supper at least four times a year, and hold four conferences for the transaction of business.

The church should observe the ordinances and maintain gospel worship in its purity and simplicity.

SECTION IV

DUTIES OF MEMBERS

1. It is the duty of every member of the church to give of his substance to the support of the church and its enterprises as the Lord hath prospered him.

2. All members should attend, if possible, the stated meetings of the church, especially every church session, or quarterly conference, and identify themselves with the Sunday school.

3. They should read the Bible and engage in private devotions daily, visit the sick, and minister to the needy.

4. The members should earnestly endeavor to keep peace and unity in the church.

5. They should bear one another's burdens.

6. They should endeavor to prevent one another's stumbling.

7. They should steadfastly continue in the faith of the gospel and the worship of God.

8. They should pray for and sympathize with one another.

CHAPTER II

SECTION I

OFFICERS OF A CHRISTIAN CHURCH

The necessary officers of the church are pastor, deacons, secretary and treasurer.

SECTION II

DUTIES OF PASTOR

1. The pastoral office is the highest and most important in the church, and the person who holds this office is, in the Scripture, charged with various duties.

2. It is his duty to be a member of some Christian Church and of the Conference in which he labors.

3. It is the duty of the pastor to give himself continually to prayer and the ministry of the Word, and to study to show himself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed.

4. It is his duty to see that the churches to which he ministers, and also the members thereof, discharge the obligations imposed by the Holy Scriptures and by the church government.

5. It is his duty to comply with all the requests, and to execute to the best of his ability all the orders of the conference.

6. It is his duty to be present at every annual meeting of the conference and submit a written report of his labors. If prevented from attending he shall report by letter.

7. It is his duty to promote the peace and unity of the church, to study its interests, and labor for its prosperity.

EDITORIAL

that man works, lessens production that much and you are thrown back on the law of supply and demand.

Legislation cannot force prices down, nor up. It may help in spots and instances, but there can be no law made, without changing the Constitution, to force a man to sell below the cost of manufacturing.

If this country is short in man-power, as it seems to be, then some sacrifice must be made and work longer hours and help to supplement for the shortage until production has been increased. It is a matter of suffering from high prices or sacrificing more time for production. This does not mean that man-power must work longer hours for less pay or for the same pay. The pay can be in proportion and at the same time it will increase production.

Some of the experts figured out how much time the Day Light Savings Law saved. Here is one for them: If each working man in the United States worked one hour more each day for sixty days, how much would it increase the nation's supply of materials?

Let the nation have a production week, or month, and let all of us get down to a little sacrifice and increase production. We had to sacrifice to win the war, so why not all get together and sacrifice to win normal conditions?

OHIO VOTES "WET"

The latest word from Ohio by telephone and telegraph indicates the defeat of the Prohibition Repeal and Two and Three Quarters Percent Beer proposals of the liquor forces by substantial majorities. The returns also show the defeat of the Crabbe Enforcement Act passed by the last Legislature and referred to the people. The endorsement of the Act of the Legislature in ratifying the National Prohibition Amendment is in doubt and conflicting claims are made. If it is carried, that of course ends the matter, for the referendum was invoked by the liquor crowd; if it is defeated, our people will naturally contest the validity of the whole proceeding, for we have consistently claimed from the beginning that the Federal Constitution itself specifies the mode of its amendment and no State can add to or take from the conditions specified therein.

The statement is made, however, that prohibition may be delayed if Ohio has voted against ratification, provided the Federal Courts do not decide against the applicability of the referendum to the action of State Legislatures in ratifying Federal constitutional amendments. Such delay would not result. Nebraska was the thirty-sixth State to ratify the 18th Amendment, and she did so on the sixteenth of January. Later on the same day Missouri and Wyoming also ratified the Amendment. Even if Ohio should be counted out, therefore, the Amendment was still adopted on the sixteenth of January by thirty-seven States, or one more than the constitutional requirement. Two more States ratified on the seventeenth of January and by the twenty-ninth of January—the date on which the Acting Secretary of State issued his proclamation as required by Section 205 of the Revised Statutes—forty-four States had ratified the Amendment.

DAUGHTERS OF CONFEDERACY TO ESTABLISH BED

The North Carolina Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy, is preparing to establish a bed at the State Sanatorium for the treatment of tuberculosis. A special committee for this purpose was appointed at the recent annual meeting held in High Point and the president, Mrs. C. F. Harvey, of Kinston, has officially advised Dr. L. B. McBrayer, superintendent of the State institution, that the committee is ready to begin functioning.

It costs each patient one dollar each day at the State sanatorium, with a slight addition for incidental expenses, the remainder of the cost of maintenance being borne by an annual appropriation from the State. All told it costs the individual patient about $425 for a year, and it is understood that the Daughters of the Confederacy will make provision for an annual income that will maintain a patient.

AN INVITATION

We take pleasure in inviting delegates and visitors of the North Carolina Conference to visit THE SUN office while in Burlington. The office is in sight of the Burlington Christian church, only one block away, and on the same street. Come in and see where THE SUN is printed. We welcome you.

We lament the passing on November 8 of Miss Julia Marshall, a member of Salem Chapel church. Miss Marshall has been sick for some months. She had been contracted with to teach in the Christian Orphanage and was taken sick a few days before she was to enter upon her duties.

As we go to press the delegates of the North Carolina Conference are arriving. A great session is anticipated.

THE TOUR OF A SMILE

My papa smiled this morning when
 He came downstairs, you see,
 At mamma, and when he smiled, then
 She turned and smiled at me;
 And when she smiled at me, I went
 And smiled at Mary Ann
 Out in the kitchen, and she lent
 It to a hired man.

So then he smiled at some one whom
 He saw when going by,
 Who also smiled and ere he knew
 Had twinkles in his eyes;
 So he went to his office then
 And smiled right at his clerk,
 Who put some more ink on his pen
 And smiled back from his work.

So when his clerk went home, he smiled
 Right at his wife, and she Smiled over at their little child
 As happy as could be;
 And then their little child she took
 The smile to school, and when
 She smiled at teacher from her book
 Teacher smiled back again.

And then the teacher passed on one
 To little James McBride,
 Who couldn't get his lesson done,
 No matter how he tried;
 And Jamesy took it home and told
 How teacher smiled at him,
 When he was tired and didn't scold
 But said: "Don't worry, Jim."

And when I happened to be there
 That very night at play,
 His mother had a smile to spare
 Which came across my way;
 And then I took it after a while Back home, and mamma said:
 "Here is that very self-same smile Come back with us to bed."

—Selected.

THE REASON WHY

How Did Shaking the Head Come to Mean "No"?

The origin of this method of indicating "No" is found in the result of the mother's efforts in the animal kingdom of trying to feed her young. A mother animal would be trying to get her young to accept the food she brought them and tried to put it in their mouths. Perhaps, however, the young animal had had sufficient food or did not fancy the kind of food offered. The natural thing to do under the circumstances would be to close the mouth tight and shake the head from side to side to prevent the mother from forcing the food into the mouth. Thus we get the closed lips and the shaking head from side to side to mean "No." In other words, that kind of a way of saying "No" came from an effort to say "I don't want any."

How Did a Nod Come to Mean "Yes"?

The idea of nodding to mean "Yes" comes from the opposite to the action which, as just described, indicates a "No."

When the young animal was anxious to accept the offered food, it made an effort to get at the food quickly. Hence, the pushing forward of the head and the open mouth (always more or less opened when you nod to indicate "Yes") and an expression of gladness. You will notice if you see anyone nod the head to indicate "Yes" that the lips are open rather than closed, and that there is always a smile or an indication of a smile to accompany it. In other words, the nod to mean "Yes" is only another way of saying "I shall be pleased."

Why Does a Pencil Write?

You can use a pencil to write with or to make marks, because the pencil wears off if you are scratching it on a surface that is rough enough to make it do so. Writing, you know, is only a way of making marks in such a manner as to make them mean something. You cannot write with a pencil on a pane of glass, because the glass is so smooth that when you move the pencil over its surface, the pencil will not wear off. To prove to yourself that the tip of the pencil constantly wears off when you write, you have only to recall that when you write with it a pencil keeps getting shorter and shorter. A slate pencil will wear down shortly by merely writing with it, but a lead pencil must be sharpened—that is, you must keep cutting away the wood in order to get at the lead inside.

Why Can't I Write on Paper with a Slate Pencil?

You cannot do so, because it takes something with a rougher surface than paper to wear off the point of a slate pencil. A slate is used to write on with slate pencils, because slate wears off the end of the pencil easily, and also because you can rub out the writing on a slate with water. Lead pencils are used for writing on paper, but you must have a rough surface on the paper to write on even with a lead pencil. Some kinds of papers have such a smooth surface that you cannot write on them with a lead pencil.

How Does a Pen Write

Writing with a pen, however, is quite different from writing with any kind of pencil, because in writing with ink we do not wear off the end of the pen, but have the ink flow from the pen. For this purpose we must have a surface that will absorb the ink from the pen and make it flow. A slate has no power of absorption and therefore cannot draw the ink. A piece of blotting paper is the best kind of paper for absorbing the ink, but it is too much so for writing purposes.

Where is the Wind When it is not Blowing?

The answer is, of course, that there isn't any wind then. To understand this perfectly we must study a little and find out what wind is. In plain words it is nothing more than moving air.

If you make a hole in the bottom of a pail of water, the water will run out slowly. If you knock the whole bottom out of the pail filled with water, the water will rush out before you know it.

That is about what happens to make the wind. The air is constantly full of air currents, like the currents you can see in a river. Down the middle of the river you may notice a softly flowing current going straight. Along the shores there will be little side currents going in all directions, and you may find some little whirlpools. That is exactly what we should see in the air if we could see air currents.

Where Does the Wind Begin?

The movement of these currents of air leaves many pockets of space where there is no air, and when one of these is uncovered the air rushes in and creates a wind in doing so. These air currents are continually pressing against each other to get some place else. They change their direction according to the pressure that is being applied to them. Sometimes the pressure will be very light in one part of the air, many miles away, perhaps, and then the air in another part, which is under great pressure, will rush with great force into the part where the pressure is light, and thus form a big wind. When the pressure stops the wind stops.

We have probably felt the wind which comes out of the valve of the automobile tire when the cap is taken off to pump up the tire. It is a real wind that comes out. The reason is that the air in the tube of the tire is under great pressure, and when the opportunity is given to get where the pressure is light it starts for that place with a rush and comes out of the valve a real wind.—*From the Book of Wonders, Published and Copyrighted by the Bureau of Industrial Education, Inc., Washington, D. NOTES

Rev. C. E. Geringer informs us that he will be open for work in the North Carolina Conference January 1, as it is his intention to return to North Carolina at that time. His address is now Richland, Ga.

Last week we had visits from Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., and Mr. J. C. Madison, Wentworth, N. C. We are always glad for the brethren passing to call in.

We have just received a new supply of "Holy Ordinances of Marriage" and can now supply the public. The price is, however, $1.00 instead of 70 cents as formerly.

We have been privileged to secure a Bible that will, we think, greatly please our trade. The print is reasonably large, the binding good, and contains all the helps etc. The words of Christ are printed in red. This Bible is No. 830 R. L. and the price is $5.00 postpaid. Sent on approval, if so desired.

HAVE YOU HEROES?

Have you been associated with men who have served their country, and whom you are now anxious to welcome home? Have you a friend or relative who has done Military Service of any kind, because of the War?

Have you men in your employ who have sacrificed career, prospects, income, and family ties, and risked Life itself, to Serve Their Country?

Do you want to immortalize the names of these men, that those who are to come may do them honor?

A Liberty Honor Testimonial

will hold these names in the embrace of imperishable metal—the very walls of the structure on which it is erected, will crumble to dust, while these names are still as clear as the day they were cast.

For churches, schools, lodges, banks and other institutions.

In all former Wars, it has been, with but few exceptions, the names of only the commanders, who have been honored. Through the country, there are scattered the statues of Generals, horse and afoot, with field glass and with sword, but always the common soldier—the FIGHTER—has been forgotten.

It must not be so in this War—this democracy must pay its tribute to the actual men behind the guns.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR NOVEMBER 23, 1919

Jesus Corrects John's Narrowness.
—Mark 9:33-42; 10:13-16; Luke 9:46-56.

Golden Text: Grace be with them that love our Lord Jesus Christ with a love incorruptible.—Eph. 6:24.

Additional Material: Matt. 8:5-13; John 10:16; I Cor. 3:1-23; Eph. 2:11-22; 6:24; II John 2:10.

For Teaching Points, see Teachers and Officers Journal.

How easy it is to see the mote in our brother's eye; how hard to see the beam in our own! We feel that we have perfect vision because we have never seen without our own pet beam. We are sure we are right, because we have never looked at any other side than our own. So the disciples who wanted to be made rulers had not enough true greatness of character as yet to be willing for another to follow Jesus in any other way than their own "We forbade him, because he followed not us." This is different from "following not Me" whom Jesus had condemned; this is the spirit of sectarianism. "You must follow as I follow; you must believe as I believe, or you are not following after Jesus at all." See how quickly and emphatically Jesus corrects this impression. There are many to-day, outside of churches, who are doing great things for the cause of Christ and in His name; we cannot but wish they were working with us, but we dare not say they are working against us.

See, too, the latter part of the lesson, we think sometimes that James and John were disciples of peace; we forget the surname which Jesus Himself conferred on these two brothers "Sons of Thunder." Here, perhaps is one of the times when they well deserved their name. Calling down fire, is the way some good people think they can convert the world, but the judgment is for the angels, impartial messengers of God, who can do His will without bias. The longer I live, the more glad I am that God does not ask me, who can see only the outer appearance, to judge my fellow men, who can only be truly estimated by the impulses of their heart, seen by God alone.

WHEN FROST IS ON THE PUNKIN

When the frost is on the punkin and the
fodder's in the shock,
And you hear the kuyouck and gobble of the strutin' turkey cock,
And the clackin' of the guinacas, and the cluckin' of the hens,
And the rooster's hallylooyer as he tiptoes on the fence;
Oh it's then's the time a feller is a feelin'
at his best,
With the risin' sun to greet him from a night of peaceful rest,
As he leaves the house, bare-headed and goes out to feed the stock,
When the frost is on the punkin, and the
fodder's in the shock.

They's something kind o' hearty-like about the atmosphere
When the heat of summer's over, and the coolin' fall is here—

Of course we miss the flowers, and the blossoms on the trees
And the mumble of the hummin' birds and buzzin' of the bees;
But the air's so appetizin'; and the landscape through the haze

Of a crisp and sunny morning of the airy autumn days

Is a pictur' that no painter has the colorin' to mock—

When the frost is on the punkin and the fodder's in the shock.

The husky, rusty russel of the tassels of the corn,

And the raspin' of the tangled leaves as golden as the morn;

The stubble in the furries—kindo' lon-somelike, but still

A preachin' sermons to us of the barns
they growed to fill;

The straw stack in the medder, and the reaper in the shed;

The hosses in theyr stalls below,—the clover overhead!

Oh, it sets my heart a-clickin' like the tickin' of a clock,

When the frost is on the punkin and the
fodder's in the shock.

—James Whitcomb Riley.

RUSSELL-CAGLE

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mrs. Emma Cagle, on October 28, 1919, when her daughter, Maggie, became the bride of Mr. Ernest C. Russell.

The contracting parties were both formerly of Seagrove, N. C. Mr. Russell has of late made his home at Lecompte, La., and there they expect to make their home after spending some time on the way at Little Rock and Hot Springs, Ark., for which places they immediately left followed by the best wishes of many friends and relatives who were present to witness the marriage.

WILKS

Mrs. Lucinda Wilks was born July 10, 1876 and died October 19, 1919. Her maiden name was King of a large family of Kings that have been very active in New Hope church. At the age of nine years, Mrs. Wilks joined Beulah church. She married Lea Wilks in 1894 and then transferred her membership to Good Hope. A few years later she moved her membership to New Hope. Thus for thirty-four years she kept her membership with her that she might be a regular member and faithfully attend the services of her own church. A faithful husband and eight dear children are left behind. A wife's counsel and a mother's prayers will not be forgotten. Sister Wilks suffered and died from the effects of cancer. I have never seen a more patient and resigned sufferer, nor one who died a more triumphant death. Funeral services by the writer.

ROGER MILLS WHITE—AN APPRECIATION

We at Elon were much grieved to learn of the untimely taking away of Roger Mills White on September 22, 1919. His pastor, the Rev. J. L. Foster, has given through The Sun the data of his all too brief history, and I am writing this line as a friend and as one who learned to love him while at Elon and now deeply mourns his going.

Roger was of an amiable disposition, big-hearted, whole souled and of a most unselfish disposition. He had high aspirations for service in life and to these aspirations gave his unstinted energy and enthusiasm of a vigorous and virile young manhood. He was marked as a public speaker and had he been permitted to live and display his talents in this direction, no one who ever heard him can doubt but that he would have arisen to eminence and fame in the world in the mastery of assemblies. He loved the combat of the forum and was an advocate of more than ordinary ability of whatever cause he championed. He was fluent of speech, vigorous in thought, enthusiastic in effort and convincing in logic. I had hoped that it would be our Father's will to call him to the ministry, for which his broad idealism seemed to fit him, and to which he seemed by nature and achievement well adapted.

His brief life was long enough in which to win friends and who will never forget him and to inspire those nearest to him to more zeal, interest and enthusiasm in efforts for achievement and success. Scarcely twenty-four years of age, cut down in the vigor of rapidly developing manhood, we mourn his going but realize that our Heavenly Father knows best and had a higher purpose for him in that world. He knew how to be a friend and so made friends by the score and these are the better for knowing him and in that land where friendship is complete, we shall hope to join him by and by.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT
W. A. KING

Your Committee, to whom was referred the duty of drafting resolutions of respect to the memory of our friend and member, Brother W. A. King, who died October 5, 1919, begs leave to ask your approval of the following:

1. That Brother W. A. King was a Christian gentleman who merited our respect and Christian affection. His vacant seat in the church reminds us of his faithful attention upon worship.

2. That, as a member of the Union, he was loyal, faithful, and useful; always ready to assist us in worthy undertakings, and to give us the support of his sympathy and help.

3. We, therefore, recommend, that the L. B. and S. Union tender his grief-stricken and bereaved family our heart-felt sympathy in this time of sorrow, and our sincere prayers that the All-Father will prove to them that "His grace is sufficient" for them.

4. That, these resolutions become a part of our records, and that a copy be sent to Mrs. King and her family, and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

Take Note

The following points should be taken into consideration in placing an order for church offering envelopes:

1. A set means 52 envelopes, one for each Sunday in the year.

2. When cartons are ordered the sets are arranged in their logical order, thus making it convenient for the member. We suggest the use of cartons because of the convenience.

3. If you desire monthly, double or single envelopes, without cartons, 1-3 the price of the same number of weekly sets. Cartons 3-4 cent each.

4. Semi-monthly, double or single, in cartons, 2-3 the weekly price; without cartons 3-5 the weekly price.

5. When ordering state what Sunday that your church year begins, and whether you want the dates on envelopes or not.

6. Indicate the wording that you want placed on the envelopes or leave the same with us. Samples sent upon request.

7. Allow ten to fifteen days for delivery. Order early.

WHAT CAN I DO?

What if the little rain should say,
"So small a thing as I
Can ne'er refresh the thirsty fields,
I'll tarry in the sky?"

What if the shining beam of noon
Should in its fountain stay,
Because its single light alone
Cannot create a day?

Does not each rain-drop help to form
The cool, refreshing shower?
And every ray of light to warm
And beautify the flower?

—Anon.

IS IT NOT BEST?

Just what awaits those who pass squarely through
The tests and measurements for souls ordained
Is the great mystery. Only One knew,
And almost spoke it out, but still refrained.

Should those who have obtained through death the seal
Of high approval, having won their quest,
Also refrain from things they might reveal
That we may walk by faith, is it not best?

AROUND THE THANKSGIVING FIRESIDE

How great is the nation whose chief magistrate calls the people together for a day of Thanksgiving!

—Thanks—

Last year we rejoiced because the world war had ended. We can rejoice this Thanksgiving because our boys are back at home—those of them who were not killed.

—Thanks—

“Another year of sun and rain,
Of singing birds and summer flowers,
Brings us this hallowed day again
With joy that life's great gift is ours.”

—Thanks—

The past year has been a trying one—a year filled with uncertainties—and yet the people have wonderfully prospered. Their thanks to God on Thanksgiving Day should be a token of their appreciation.

—Thanks—

Shall we turn the day of Thanksgiving into a day of feasting and gluttonous eating? Let us acknowledge the providing hand and turn our thoughts upward on this day.

This scribe is thoughtful, among the many other things, for the loyal and unstinted support he has received at the hands of CHRISTIAN SUN readers during the past year. A good, great, and loyal people to serve.

—Thanks—

As we write we think of the lines by Francis H. Lee, and feel that they express a thought for thousands:

Our thanks go out, O God, to thee,
For all thy blessings manifold;
Then grant us, Lord, those things to see
Which finite minds oft leave untold.

Thank God for what has been denied;
Thank God for end of present ease
That sees our uses multiplied;
Thanks for th' eternal verties.

Thank God for the incentive new
That makes for work and sweeter life;
Thank God for friendships tried and true,
The ennobling toil of honest strife.

Thank God for trials and “mistakes,”
That blessings are, could we but see;
Thank Him for everything that makes
For truth and higher destiny.

—Thanks—

That men say the world is becoming more pagan does not make it so; and that men are less appreciative does not make that so. We believe that more people will breathe a prayer of thanks this season than ever before.

—Thanks—

Don't be a pessimist because the world is out of joint and fail to be thankful. Times will be better bye and bye. Life is not all smooth sailing whether with an individual or a nation.

—Thanks—

Be thankful that men have seen a new vision of their duty and obligation toward God and His Kingdom as it relates to wealth. Be thankful that God prospers you, and thank Him for a medium of giving.

—Thanks—

Be thankful for the heat, the cold, the dry seasons and the wet; for the sun and rain, the moon and the stars. Be thankful for friends and foes, and for love, for life, for hope, happiness, home, health, and most of all for the Savior Who died that you may be saved.

BEGINNING THE CONFERENCE YEAR

With many churches the Conference year is just beginning. New tasks are to be tried. New problems to be solved and new undertakings to be worked out. The attitude with which pastor and people undertake these things will depend largely upon the result at the other end of the line. No half hearted program will suffice and no half hearted undertaking will carry out the full program.

Will the pastor say to his people that the things can be done, or will he begin with a compromising attitude that they will try? Will the pastor apologize to the church for the Conference apportionment and say that it is too high? Will the churches be satisfied with what they did last year? Will pastor and people stand for growth or decide to decay?

Put life and hope into the beginning of your Conference year. Your work is the Master's work and to say that you cannot do certain things is to deny His power and strength.

A PSYCHOLOGICAL EFFECT

That reminds us, speaking about the apportionments of the Conferences that a man will never become rich as long as he is reminded that he is poor. More men go forward to greater things because they are encouraged rather than discouraged. To be continually telling a church that it cannot raise a certain sum is to help defeat the church in its own mission. When a pastor has to work as hard as grubbing in a new ground the whole Conference year to keep the lines on the church letter from being blank, something is radically wrong. Wrong with whom? Something wrong with the pastor and the people. They may be trying to pull the same load, but they are not pulling at the same time; they are not working at the same time; they are not praying at the same time, and most certainly they are not paying at the same time.

And one other thing, brethren: It is the big task that enlists the big things in us all. We wonder if the pitiful, puny, penurious, little sums that some of the churches are asked to raise are not too small to enlist the interest of the people.

The pastors have been writing about poundings, and it has all been dry reading to the Editor. Now, brethren, we shall read your articles with a keener sense of appreciation. The Editor pounded? Yes, sir. Brother M. L. Staneil, Raleigh, N. C., No. 3, sent us a nice supply of large potatoes by his father-in-law, Brother S. M. Rowland. That was the day before the North Carolina Conference convened. The next morning, Brother Julius Paece, a member of Mt. Zion church in Orange county, came to Conference and brought a bag of nice potatoes to THE SUN office. That day at noon Brother B. S. Moffitt arrived from his home in Randolph county and brought a large box filled with potatoes, both kinds, butter, fruit, meat and other good and valuable things. This box came from the hands of his good wife, and Mrs. M. A. Moffitt, both members of Shiloh church. The box was accompanied by this note: "We thought of you, and thought that you would like to be remembered during Conference by some of the Shiloh people. So here is a box for you. We are constant readers of THE SUN." The Lord richly bless the acts of these kind friends. Our companion joins in these thanks.

We take pleasure in presenting this week the address of President T. E. White of the North Carolina Conference. This address should have preceded in publication any other address of the Conference, but we could not get it last week in time for use and had another address already in type.

In a recent issue of THE SUN mention was made of Dr. W. T. Herndon as the last grandson of James O'Kelley. It should have been the last great grandson. We are glad to make the correction.

Dr. J. P. Barrett writes: "I sorrow because I shall not see my old friends, Rev. W. T. Herndon and Capt. J. A. Turrentine in the flesh again. Peace to their ashes and may love garland their graves."

Pastorless churches in the North Carolina Conference are requested to notify the Home Mission Board, J. A. Diekey, Executive Secretary, Elon College, N. C., giving him as full information as possible as to preaching Sundays desired, salaries paid, etc. Please do this now.

(Report to November 22)

We are indebted to Mrs. W. A. Hand, Tifton, Ga., and Mrs. W. A. Smith, LaGrange, Ga., for sending us new subscriptions to THE SUN. Many thanks to these good ladies.

Eleven States have ratified the Federal Woman Suffrage amendment. Maine was the eleventh.

President Wilson is materially improving, but his physician says that it will be some time before the President can be out.

Twenty-five women were killed as a result of a fire in a dance hall in Ville Platte, La., November 2. It is reported that among the number dead were several mothers who chaperoned their daughters to the dance.

Settle that Christmas present proposition by giving a copy of Peloubet's Select Notes or a copy of Tarbell's Guide. Either of these books will make a handsome gift to any teacher and be useful all the year. Order now.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

We closed our Conference year at Union with the work in good shape. The church letter showed all apportionments paid and money in hand to settle all bills. We start off this conference year, not behind but a little ahead.

The church uses the Duplex envelope system and they were on hand and ready for distribution the last Sunday of the Conference year. The treasurer and the deacons have the distribution of them in hand.

The church not only paid the pastor in full, but members and friends of the church during the year very kindly remembered the pastor and family by donations, and at the close of the year gave him a nice pounding in the way of provisions and cash. On November 10, Brother W. J. Graham and wife drove up in front of our house and began unloading good things for the pantry and kitchen and handed to me a cash donation; and on the next day Brother G. R. T. Garrison called with a cash donation from some who did not get in on Monday.

We appreciate the donation and thank the donors. The spirit and the good-will which prompted such an act doeth the heart good and strengthens one for better service.

We are planning for a great year's work. I pray the Lord of the harvest for wisdom, grace and strength to sow wisely and bountifully and that the harvest may be a great and glorious one.

P. H. FLEMING.

HENDERSON MEETING

It was my privilege to assist Rev. R. L. Williamson in a meeting at Henderson, N. C., from November 3, to 9. The meeting was very good, and the only trouble was we had to close too soon on account of the North Carolina Conference which met on November 11.

It was a great joy to be with Brother Williamson, and his good wife in this meeting. I was entertained in their home while there, and no one ever made a visit more pleasant than they did mine while in Henderson. I am deeply grateful to both of them for their many kind favors while in their midst, also to the members of the Henderson church for their splendid co-operation in the meeting.

The Henderson people love Mr. and Mrs. Williamson, and they are doing a good work there. They are serving a loyal and an appreciative people, and I am expecting great things to be done there for the Master.

May the Lord richly bless both pastor and people in all their undertakings for good.

BURLINGTON LETTER

The Burlington Christian church has just closed a splendid year. It was in fact a year of real achievements. The new building was opened the first Sunday in November and the State Christian Conference was entertained by the congregation the week following the second Sunday. It was a pleasure to have the first session of the united conferences in the new church. The Conference was characterized by largeness of vision, plan and purpose and was filled with inspiration. It was a great conference. It will go down into history as such.

The Sunday school decided to undertake the support of a missionary in February and has since that date been faithfully working at this new task. This has proven to be a joyful task, as well as profitable. Miss Martha R. Stacy is now in Japan as our missionary and we are glad. The Burlington Sunday school has a new and growing interest in far off Japan and will not only more largely support the work, but will more earnestly pray for the work and the workers. It is abundantly worth while to undertake definite missionary tasks for Christ in both home and foreign lands. It gives us a new sense of the value of life.

The reports from the different departments make splendid financial showing for the year. The church raised through regular channels $3,380.67; Sunday school $1,341.73; Building Fund $15,362.64; Ladies' Aid Society $379.33; Woman's Missionary Society $410.53; Young People's Missionary Society $146.52; Christian Endeavor Societies $102.10; special missions fund and Elon College $1,302.50. This makes a total of $22,426.02 raised during the conference year.

With the new and larger equipment we are trusting that this year will be the best year we have yet had in the Master's service.

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

Official Announcement

Through Secretary Professor L. L. Vaughn, the Raleigh, N. C., Christian church has extended a cordial invitation to the Southern Christian Convention to meet at their guest in the next regular session. This will be the twenty-fourth regular session and will met on Tuesday evening before the first Sunday in May, 1920. Rev. George D. Eastes is pastor.

The Executive Committee is pleased to make this announcement, and will be very glad to have any suggestions for the program, which must be framed in advance of the meeting.

SUFFOLK LETTER

The Manufacturers Record of Baltimore, was kind enough to quote part of "Suffolk Letter" of October 29, and to make favorable comment on what was written on "One Country, One Language, One Flag." I thank this great paper for taking notice of the Letter, because the subject is of incalculable importance to this great nation.

Later I received a long pen-written letter from J. P. Holm, Editor of Collinwood Pilot, Collinwood, Tennessee, in which he says: "You made a big mistake writing as you did in The Manufacturers Record. Presume you don't know, understand from own experience much about it." Then he gives his idea about many things and seems to have misinterpreted what I had written." He says he came from Denmark and loves that country.

Still later, I received a marked copy of the Florida Times-Union of Jacksonville, Florida, which had copied from The Manufacturers Record what that paper had printed of "Suffolk Letter," and then makes this comment: "We have quoted the above from Dr. Staley, though most of what he said is pure flap doodle because a part of it is true and important and the idea pervading the whole of it—that we ought to attempt to unify our people instead of encouraging permanent divisions—is entirely right and of very great importance." The editor is very kind to admit that the idea is "entirely right."

As to his objection to the proposition to prohibit the teaching of foreign languages in schools, printing newspapers in alien language, and preaching in a foreign tongue, perhaps I should have been more explicit in "Suffolk Letter" in THE CHRISTIAN SUN; but I took it for granted that readers would understand that such a radical condition could not be made in a day. It would require at least a generation. Then the new generation would be speaking American English, and the gospel could be proclaimed in our own tongue. It would be a gradual process, but it ought to begin. It has been neglected too long and to the injury of the Republic.

It never occurred to me that foreign languages should not be cultivated by a few for trade and diplomatic purposes; but trade and government do not require, among the multitudes, foreign speech. It was the schools, not a few universities to which the "Letter" referred. Language is at the bottom of unity, and unity is the only hope of civilization and democracy. Colloquial language is one thing; literary language is another thing. The thing for which this language plea is made is that the common American citizen needs no language but his own; but unity of language can never come in this country with schools, newspapers, and pulpits perpetuated in foreign tongues. It is high time the American Republic was beginning to build a unified nation, and it can never be done with divided speech.

I have no prejudice against aliens. I could not have and be the Christian I strive to be; but I want aliens who come here to live, to grow rich, and become influential, to adopt our language, our laws, and our customs—to be Americans in peace and in war.

I hope that other pens more gifted than the pen of the "Suffolk Letter" will write the mind of this nation on "One Country, One Language, One Flag," and that union forever will be the fruit of one language.

Mrs. R. A. Garrett—I trust and hope the paper will go into many new homes. I think it is such a good paper.

THE NEW PROGRAM FOR THE OLD TASK*

Out of the terrible struggle of a war in which three-fourths of the human race were involved, the Church of Jesus Christ has emerged with a clearer vision, an enlarged faith, and a stronger determination that "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of our Christ, and that He shall reign forever and ever."

It is our privilege to live in this new age. "In an age upon ages telling when to be living is sublime." And in this new age the Church must be exalted to her true and proper place. The Church is the body of Christ. He is not only at the right hand of the Father, but He is also in the Church. He is not an absent Lord, but a present Lord. And those who are spending all their energies in looking for His return, and the establishment of a millennial reign, should give heed also to His words: "Lo I am with you always even unto the end of the age." When you touch the Church, you touch Jesus. Paul verily thought it a light thing to persecute the Church, but he afterwards found that instead of persecuting the Church, he was persecuting Jesus. What strange words he heard on the road to Damascus! He thought Jesus was dead and out of the way, and that the Church by his plan and persecution would also disappear. But to his astonishment the voice which he recognized as the voice of the Lord, responded: "I am Jesus whom thou persecutest." Whether, therefore, you speak lightly or well, whether you hinder or help, whether you dishonor or honor, whether you blame or bless, whether you withhold or give, whether you condemn or commend, whether you scold or praise the Church, know this, that you are doing the same unto Jesus. Jesus needs our gifts, our praise, our love, our devotion, our service. The task of Jesus is the task of the Church. Jesus and the Church are one and inseparable. Small wonder that He said: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of these my brethren ye have done it unto me."

The task of the Church is not new. Owing to the prevalence of evil in the world in its multiplied forms, there are new complications; but there is just one real task. The place is in all the world; and the task is making disciples of all the nations. It is a bigger job than getting men to make a mere profession of faith in Him or to receive baptism. It is to teach them to observe all things which He commanded. It means the feeding of the hungry, clothing the naked, giving sight to the blind, educating all children, and healing all diseases. The task which Jesus had is our task. In Nazareth He outlined His task: "The spirit of the Lord is upon me because he hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised; and to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." To accomplish His task He gave Himself, and it will cost the Church her resources of men and money to save the world.

In the accomplishment of the super-human task of giving the gospel to all the world we need to keep three things constantly in mind: First, the great need of the world is Christ, and the Church is the only agent through which He may be given. Other religions, philosophies, and commerce have had a chance and have failed. Confucianism and Buddhism are older than Christianity and have had a chance. Mohamedanism has had a great political power and a large opportunity. It, like the others, failed. With all their opportunities two hundred millions are hungry and one hundred millions have no shelter at night. Who can paint the picture of pain without a physician, of hunger without food, and of supersition without knowledge, existing everywhere in non-Christian lands? Yet a billion souls in non-Christian lands in all their poverty and wretchedness are human beings for whom the Christ died. Think too, of the incalculable loss of the rich harvests that might have been gathered to the enlargement and enrichment of the Church, but which, alas, have rotted and wasted to our poverty and shame, Christianity is the one panacea for all the ills of humanity and the Church is the only agent through which it can be given.

Secondly, we need to keep in mind that the task has been committed to the Church alone because of the Master's great faith and confidence in us. Jesus loved us. He has faith and confidence in us. His death not only manifested his love for a world, but also His faith in a world. When an employee receives a larger and a more responsible position in a concern it is because his employer has faith and confidence in him. A great task has been given the Church because our Christ has faith in us. Let us not disappoint Him.

A third thing we need to keep in mind is the fact that we can preach the gospel to all the world in this generation, and this for three reasons:

First, Christ, I know, wants it done; and He has all power. Did He not give the task because of this? "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth, go ye, therefore, into all the world, etc." For the accomplishment of this task the resources of heaven and earth are at our command.

Secondly, other things both good and evil during a generation have gone into all the world. They tell me the Singer sewing machine has gone into all the world; that the sound of the phonograph has girdled the earth; that it is known throughout the world that beer made Milwaukee famous. If manufacturers can place their goods in all parts of the world, during a life time, why has not the Church extended herself also? I believe the answer is plain: The one set themselves to a world task and with a world program; the other has been content with a task embracing only Jews and a program including only Jerusalem.

Third, we can because we have the men and we have the money. In 1900 John R. Mott estimated that 200,000 men and women from the colleges and universities of Christendom would be required for a period of 20 years to evangelize the world. Now let us consider the fact that in the world war many times the number estimated by Dr. Mott were taken from the colleges and universities. Germany took more than twice the number from her universities. Twice the number went from American colleges and universities. It is further estimated that two universities, Oxford and Cambridge, contributed more men to win the war than Dr. Mott estimated; and this, mark you, in a period of a few years. Now, it has been estimated that only one in 20 of the Christian students in our country, Canada and Australia would be required to save the world in 20 years. We have the men. The question is, shall we be more loyal to the call of our country than we are to the call of our Christ?

Then, too, we have the money—plenty of it, and we are getting richer every day. Money is a great power. "It answers all things." It will feed the hungry. It saves life. It won the war; and if rightly used it will win the world. We have it. Church members have it, $15,000,000,000 of it. During the war we spent $50,000,000 per day. We spent enough in a month to finance a missionary campaign for twenty years that would evangelize the whole world. The commander of the British fleet was right when he said: "If half of the zeal and passion, half of the outpouring of life and treasure or organization and efficiency that the state has put into this world war could be thrown into the cause of the Kingdom and of the eternal verities, the world would soon be won."

Big as the task may seem of winning the world it is easier for us than for any preceding generation. Let me be content to simply name some of the reasons. (1) Inventions, (2) Opposition overcome in regard to world evangelization, (3) Missionary literature, (4) Rich missionary experience gathered from all lands and peoples, (5) Powerful missionary activities—such as Laymen's missionary movement, etc., (6) The Bible translated into 600 languages and dialects, (7) 25,000 missionaries already on the field, 109,099 native preachers and helpers, 26,210 native churches with more than two million members, (8) Many colleges and schools, orphanages and hospitals, (9) An awakened Church. An impression has already been made on the world, and the fields are white unto the harvest.

II The Program

The world war made its impression upon the world. It taught the Church valuable and needed lessons—lessons of loyalty, devotion, economy, thrift, service and unity. It compelled us to think in world terms. It revived and made real the brotherhood of man. Before we knew it an international spirit was possessing us. It greatly enlarged and multiplied our prayers. It broke the strings of our purses and made it possible for millions to be spent in relief work beyond the seas. We discovered ourselves and our ability to do big things. We saw and felt the result of a well-prepared program on the part of our enemies; and we met that program with a still better prepared and bigger program.

To elevate the program of the Church to a war basis, calling for a new scale of idealism and sacrifice of determination and energy is the need of the hour. We must do the extraordinary thing in this extraordinary time.

Our Saviour said: "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." This has been true of the Church, but it need not be so, it should not be so; and if the Church will arise to her opportunity it will no longer be so. There is abundant evidence, too, that the Church is going to adopt and carry out a program that will mean the evangelization of the world in this generation. Great drives in many Protestant bodies where millions instead of thousands of dollars are being raised, tell the story. Better still the splendid number of Christian statesmen who are devoting their energies to the task, and the great "Inter-Church World Movement," the aim of which is to demonstrate that spiritual purpose and business efficiency can go together. It is with this end in view that the organization has been built up. Its purpose is to present a unified program of Christian service in all the evangelical Churches of North America. Great surveys are to be made. All the needs are to be discovered, and the program provides a plan for meeting those needs and to assist every Church in doing its full share of the work of world evangelization. It will enable us to know the number of men and the amount of money needed. It is a program world-wide in its scope, and promises to bring to fulfillment the prophecy of the hymn: "Like a mighty army moves the Church of God. We are not divided, all one body we." It is a splendid aim for unity. Not union of denominations, but unity in service. It will elevate the Christian forces to a war basis. And, why not? We united our forces during the war, and won. It did not make Frenchmen of Americans nor Italians of Englishmen, but it won the war. And the new program for the world task does not mean the making of Baptists of Presbyterians nor Methodists of Lutherans, but the winning of the world for Jesus. Shall we enter upon this world task with this world program? I believe we will.

Our government during the war took every precaution in carrying forward her program. Both press and speech were censored. This was necessary. We must not forget that in carrying out this new program, there will be the slacker and pessimist. We must quarantine and cure them, or they will frustrate the Kingdom of Christ. What to do with the pessimist has been a problem from time immemorial. Back yonder in the days of Moses they were a serious problem and menace to Israel. Ten pessimists in spying out the land contracted a terrible disease; for lack of a better name I have called it "cants." It is dangerous for it is deadly and contagious. They said, "we can't possess the land." And they didn't, because they said they couldn't. Unfortunately they were not quarantined when they returned to the camp, and soon the whole army was prostrated with the disease, and all said, "We can't possess the land." Now, this disease, like many others, if let alone develops into something still worse. "Can'ts is followed by "won'ts". This is exactly what happened with Israel. First, they said we can't and afterwards they said, "We won't. Let us make a captain and go back to Egypt."

Bad as is the disease, "cants," it is not incurable. It arises from a lack of faith in God and ourselves. Those afflicted need to be pitied, not blamed. Large doses of the missionary obligation, mixed with the promises of God when we undertake His program with cupfuls of the latest missionary news, is the best remedy. One of a hundred missionary books, a year's subscription to our magazine, or a visit to our woman's missionary meetings, is highly recommended. The Inter-Church World Movement will soon have sanatorium provided for all these unfortunates who will receive free treatment at the hands of specialists.

Seriously, we must be optimistic. The pessimist looks at the task and then to God, and says I can't. The optimist looks first to God and then to the task and says with an inspired apostle, "I can do all things through Christ Who strengthens me."

"REMEMBER THE WORDS"*

Saint Paul was a master in choosing material for a climax. It was a momentous event both in the life of the great missionary and in the history of the Church at Ephesus when he said his farewell words to this people. The few extracts from the sermon of the occasion that have been preserved indicate the heights which his eloquence touched. Though he was to "go bound in the spirit unto Jerusalem, not knowing what was to befall him there," he could look down from the Alpine peak of his faith and experience and say, "But none of these things move me."

While apprehensive as to his own future, his chief concern was as to the seven churches, of which the one at Ephesus was by no means the least important. The city was one of the oldest and most renowned to which Paul had carried the banner of Christianity. Here was the famous temple of Diana, one of the seven wonders of the ancient world. Several races mingled in its market places, and no doubt nearly all of them were represented in the church established there. His congregation included persons of the highest learning and attainments. The sermon just spoken of and the epistle to the church would not have been addressed to a people that was ignorant. He declares in closing his sermon that he has "showed them all things" and then dramatically concludes: "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how He said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'"

(Acts 20:35).

From the wealth of matter that Christ had left, Paul chose these words as the message he should impress upon the memories of this congregation, and thus he concluded with them and used them so as virtually to burn them upon the hearts of a people that loved him and clung to him at the close of the discourse. It is then the message of the Great Missionary to the Gentle World.

In no other place in the Book is there an injunction to remember particular words, unless it be "to remember the commandments." Among all the words of Christ there are none save these that the Great Apostle urged upon the memories of his churches. There is a simple reason for this—the phrase epitomizes our religion. All of the New Testament characters emphasized giving; Christ, his disciples, the early missionaries and their helpers gave their all—gave their lives. "To give" is the dynamic element of Christianity. Without the gifts of lives and means that have been made from the time of Christ until this good hour the religion that the Master preached would be a forgotten story and the gift of Heaven's most precious jewel to the world an unremembered event.

The phrase that is especially urged upon our memories involves three simple and elemental ideas: (a) to give, (b) to receive, (c) blessings. It is a blessing either to give or to receive, but of the two the former is the more blessed.

No one questions the fact that the words of Christ are just as applicable to the church of today as to the band of followers at Ephesus nearly nineteen centuries ago. His words are universal—not only with regard to races and regions, but as to ages and eras. We accept, as an abstract principle, the statement Paul quotes, but in practice we do not seem to put it into practical use. This is too often our treatment of great and fundamental truths.

Giving has received a too elastic construction, or definition. It is not a synonym for contributing. The parent who puts money into a local fund for a school house or Y. M. C. A. building may expect more than his money's worth in return. The large property owner is set down for a handsome donation to some quasi-benevolence, and is given credit for being a philanthropist, when he has in his selfish mind forecasted dividends upon what he secretly regards as an investment. The industrial corporations find it to be "good business" to provide parks, playgrounds, club houses, schools and churches for their employes. While all of these are proper from a business standpoint, they are not giving in the truest sense of the word. The right hand merely lets go while the left hand is extended to receive more in return. It is very questionable whether a subscription or donation to the church in which the contributor worships is a gift. Surely one does not give to himself.

True giving—the giving for which a blessing is promised—means an offering upon the altar, for God's work, where the only return that can come to the giver is the promised blessing of the Master. It is not a gift unless the thing is given without hope or expectation of return or compensation. That is why so-called giving at Christmas time has become a sort of barter. When Livingstone went into Africa he expected nothing for himself. When Paul went into all the known world of his time he wanted nothing "but to finish his course with joy." When a man today sends a missionary to the foreign field, both the man who supports the missionary and the preacher himself are giving, in the highest sense of the term. Neither looks for aught for himself in return.

Many a man who thought he was giving—when he was merely making an investment for himself—has been disappointed because what he thought was a gift has not been blessed. Giving involves sacrifice and unselfishness. It also includes love and gladness. Those who "contribute" to all causes for which aid is asked merely to get rid of the "campaigners" have not given—they have contributed. The man who really gives does not pay money to get rid of solicitors. The true giver informs himself as to the objects of his bounty. Convinced that a thing is worthy, he gives liberally, cheerfully, ungrudgingly, uncomplainingly. The "contributor," on the other hand, has a horror of campaigns and solicitors. He does not try to inform himself to any great extent as to what the cause is, but merely "contributes" in order to get rid of the subject. He thereafter has no interest in the cause of his contribution. How would any blessing follow? There is no promise that the Lord loves a "contributor."

These observations lead me to the point of making a few suggestions. The members of our Church should be informed as to the objects of our benevolences. We find that the Orphanage has one of the strongest appeals to our people. Our college is well supported. One can go into this Conference and raise more money for a church at some particular point—say Raleigh—than he can obtain for "Home Missions," though the latter subject might include several new church enterprises. There is more of the element of giving present when the donor is aware of the exact use of his money. Many churches that would with difficulty "raise" $250.00 for "Foreign Missions" might with comparative ease "give" $2,000.00 to support a missionary at a particular point in Japan, if sufficient evidence was kept before the church of the activities and success of the missionary.

We are moving in the direction of these suggestions. I am telling you what you already know to be cold facts. But my reminding you of them may assist in getting something of the kind actually done.

It is imperative that action be taken to prevent so many organizations outside of the church from making calls upon our people for funds to be used in enterprises of doubtful character. They not only misled people who believe that they are "giving" when they are either "contributing" or are being imposed upon, but they cause many to question the whole system of campaigns and organized benevolences. It is also very important that the Church should so relate its work as to prevent overlapping. The calls should be reduced to as few in number as possible. Churches and individuals should have the opportunity of giving to special objects, but the local church should be given credit for such gifts. To illustrate: If ten men in the Burlington church give $10,000 to Elon College, five men give $5,000 to Foreign Missions, and fifteen give $7,500 to Home Missions this year it should be certified to the church treasurer and the reports of the latter account for it. It is a false pretense for the Conference minutes to show that a church gives $50 for Home Missions, $75 for Foreign Missions and $100 for Christian Education when probably one man has given through another channel authorized by the Conference more than these amounts. Let's get our financial system into better working order, and our records so they will speak the truth instead of belittling us. It will encourage men to give, whereas the present arrangement tends to discourage.

With these suggestions observed, one can now go to the membership of our churches and find a response to calls that could not have been found five years ago. The recent world war enlarged the heart of the American giver. You have but to show him that the object is worthy, that his money will be used in the extension of the Kingdom and that the plan and the place of its use are definite and deserving. The dollar-a-year member of the church will soon be an unknown person, let us hope.

The world is to be blessed both on account of giving and on account of receiving. Within the next few years we expect the banner of the Cross to be carried to the farthest-most parts of the earth. What a great blessing it will be to many of those lands! But they will not be as fortunate as our own land and our own people, for we are to be the givers. "And remember the words of the Lord Jesus Christ, how He said: 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'"

"Out of the darkness of night
The world rolls into light
It is day-break everywhere."

Principles and Government of The Christian Church

(The Franklin, Virginia, session of the Southern Christian Convention ordered that the Principles and Government of the Christian Church be revised and that a committee be appointed to make the revision. The following members of the Convention were appointed to do the work: Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., President; Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., and W. A. Harper, LL. D. Some weeks ago the committee completed its work, and we are privileged to print, in serial form, the Principles and Government as outlined, subject to ratification by the next session of the Convention.—Editor.)

SECTION IV

BUSINESS OF CONFERENCE

1. Conference shall meet annually for the transaction of such business as may advance the interest of the church and the cause of God.

2. Business shall be transacted in the order of time in which it may be presented, or in accordance with a program previously arranged under the direction of Conference, except a matter that is made the special order of the day.

3. Conference shall appoint the following standing committees: On Education, Home Missions, Foreign Missions, Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor, Evangelism, Social Service, Religious Literature; and on other subjects when deemed advisable.

4. The Committee on Education shall be composed of Elders; all questions and matters pertaining to education shall be referred to them; all candidates for the ministry shall be under their charge; all applicants for licensure or ordination shall be examined by them; and all ministers applying for admission into Conference shall be referred to them. They shall also report upon the general educational interests of the Conference.

5. The Committee on Home Missions shall have charge of all matters pertaining to Home Missions within the bounds of the Conference.

6. The Committee on Foreign Missions shall keep in touch with and report upon the Foreign Missions interests of the Christian Church.

7. The Committee on Sunday Schools shall report the general condition of Sunday school work, and make recommendations for its development.

8. The Committee on Christian Endeavor shall have the general superintendence of the Christian Endeavor work in the Conference and strive to make this organization for Kingdom training effective in all the Churches.

9. The Committee on Evangelization shall endeavor to intensify the spiritual life of the churches, to awaken a general evangelistic spirit among them, to furnish evangelistic information, and to suggest a program.

10. The Committee on Social Service shall suggest service programs for the churches that the Church may be the community center in ministering to the whole life of the membership.

11. The Committee on Religious Literature shall assist in circulation of the Church organ, denominational publications, and recommend the best literature for the people.

12. An Executive Committee of three, two of whom shall be Elders, the President of Conference being Chairman, shall be appointed to transact necessary business between sessions of Conference.

13. Conference shall require every minister to make a full report in writing of his ministerial labors during the year; and, if he neglect to make such report for three consecutive years, his credentials shall be revoked.

14. Conference should provide for the support of aged and infirm ministers.

15. If deemed advisable, the above Committees, one or all, may be incorporated as Boards, in which case they should be elected. Such Boards are competent to transact the business specified in their charters, to which Conference must first assent.

CHAPTER V

CONVENTION

SECTION I—MEMBERSHIP

1. The Convention shall be composed of representatives from all the Christian Conferences admitted into membership, and shall bear the title of the Southern Christian Convention.

2. The Convention shall consist of an equal number of Elders and Laymen, chosen by the Conferences in annual session, in the proportion of one delegate to every two hundred members; but every regularly organized Conference shall have the right to send two delegates—one Elder and one Layman. The delegates shall be elected for two years.

SECTION II—ORGANIZATION

1. The regular meetings of the Convention shall be biennial, at which a President, a Vice-President, Secretary, Assistant Secretary, and Treasurer shall be elected, whose term of office shall continue for two years, or until their successors are elected.

2. One-third of the members of the Convention, half of whom are ministers, having met at the time and place appointed, shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business but a smaller number shall have the power to adjourn to some future day.

3. At every biennial session each member shall furnish the Secretary with a certificate of his election, signed by the Secretary of his Conference.

5. At the opening of every regular meeting of the Convention, a sermon, or address, appropriate to the occasion, shall be delivered by the President.

6. In cases of emergency, the President may call an extra session of the Conference; and it shall be his duty to do so when requested by one-third of the members of the Convention, half of whom are ministers.

7. Three months' notice shall be given through the public press of any meeting of the Convention in extra session unless such meeting shall be agreed to by the body on adjournment.

NORTH CAROLINA WOMEN'S PLANS

The Executive Board of the North Carolina Women's Missionary Conference met with Mrs. W. H. Carroll, president, on November 19. The following plans were made to accomplish the goals recently adopted by the Convention at Elon College:

Mrs. W. H. Carroll is to secure 50 Honorary Life Memberships among the men at $10.00 each.

Mrs. W. R. Sellars is to secure 50 Life Memberships among the women at $10.00 each.

Mrs. W. A. Harper is to secure 120 sustaining subscribers to the Harcastle Fund at $10.00 each.

Miss Bessie Holt is to organize at least 20 new Women's and Young People's Societies in a selected list of churches and to re-organize and get on a working basis nine formerly active societies.

Mrs. N. G. Newman is to organize ten new Cradle Rolls.

Mrs. J. W. Patton is to organize 5 new Boys' Societies.

Mrs. M. F. Cook is to secure at least 250 new subscribers to the Christian Missionary.

Each new organization is to be apportioned $10.00 besides dues.

All money paid in on the Harcastle Fund is to be placed on savings account, the certificate to be taken out in the name of Mrs. W. T. Walters, Treasurer, to the credit of this fund. The certificates are not to be cashed till ordered by the Board.

It was decided to print the goals in pamphlet form for wide distribution.

Let all our women, and pastors too, pray earnestly for these workers as they undertake these large things for the Kingdom.

We hope during 1920 to go over the top as in 1919. Prayer will put us there.

MRS. W. A. HARPER,
Secretary N. C. Woman's Board.

MISSION BOARD MEETING

The Mission Board of the North Carolina Christian Conference met in the office of the Mission Secretary of the Southern Christian Convention, First National Bank Building, Burlington, N. C., November 18, 1919. The following were present: T. E. White, J. O. Atkinson, W. K. Holt, K. B. Johnson, and W. P. Lawrence. Retiring Secretary-Treasurer, W. A. Harper, and J. A. Dickey, Executive Secretary-elect, were present. The latter accepted the position to which he had been elected, and his duties were outlined. These are, first to bring pastorless churches and churchless pastors together; secondly to aid delinquent churches in putting into effect the every-member canvass, and in otherwise marshaling their full strength in the work of the Kingdom; and thirdly, to put on the most effectual conference mission propaganda the time and means at hand will permit.

Rev. T. E. White was elected President of the Board with W. P. Lawrence Secretary-Treasurer.

The following were constituted an Executive Committee: W. P. Lawrence, J. O. Atkinson and W. K. Holt. The following members were appointed a Committee to make a tentative grouping of the churches of the Conference and report to the Executive Committee by January 1, 1920: T. E. White, W. G. Clements, E. L. Moffitt, and J. O. Atkinson.

W. P. LAWRENCE,

SHOULD MEN STUDY MISSIONS?

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, during the recent session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference at Waverly, Virginia, raised the question as to whether there were any Men's Missionary Societies amongst us. Brother Harrell further inquired as to why there should not be Men's Missionary Societies since missions is the biggest business of the Church and that for which the Church exists. None present in the audience at the time seemed able to tell Brother Harrell whether a Men's Missionary Society had ever been heard of.

Now, it comes about that Brother Harrell is not the only man who is thinking along the same line. In his leading editorial entitled, "The Study of Missions," for his issue of November 6, 1919, I notice this paragraph from the versatile pen of the distinguished editor of the organ of the Methodist Church in this State:

"Why should mission study classes be confined to the women of the Church? Can anyone give a valid reason? If it has proved so advantageous for the women to get detailed information about the missionary work of the Church, will it not also be helpful for the men to get that information? To ask the question is to answer it. There is no other foundation upon which our missionary work can rest. No one can continue to give any heartfelt support to a work about which he knows nothing, or of which he has only a vague and general knowledge. And there is no miraculous way by which we can inform ourselves about mission work. We must study it. We must take the time and put forth the effort to read about the transformation our Christ brings about in the life of a Chinese, or a Japanese, or an African, or any of the rest, and the changes for the better that it brings into the communities of these people. In this truth is found the secret of missionary zeal and enthusiasm.

"You cannot beget interest apart from information. The surface emotions may be stirred for a time from without, and a temporary response may be secured; but the impulse soon passes away and the re-action comes. But when the soul is stirred by information that is imparted, when the enthusiasm is aroused by knowledge that becomes a part of himself, then you can count upon the interest being permanent. It springs from a source from within and is a healthful enthusiasm that burns and glows with the passing of the months. Shall not this Centenary movement that has so stirred the Church result in a great increase in the study of missions on the part of our people—men as well as women? Nothing less than this can make permanent the great advance that has been made. When an army makes a dash forward against the enemy, its next job generally is to fortify itself in its new position. This study of missions is the fortification of the Church in her new advanced position."

We wonder with Brother Harrell and with Dr. Massey as to why mission study classes should be confined to the women. Certainly men could give themselves to no better task than to learning of the world's needs of Christ and the opportunity of supplying this need.

LITTLE ACTS OF KINDNESS

Some time ago we wrote to ten fertilizer manufacturers and asked them to donate five bags of fertilizer each for our wheat crop and all gladly donated.

Miss Vera Strader, Burlington, N. C., kindly gave one of the girls a pair of shoes. Mrs. Farrell, who lives at New Providence, Graham, N. C., contributed 30 yards of gingham to keep our little girls looking good and happy. Miss Pearl Smith of Haw River, who is the popular millinery lady of that city, donated six nice hats for the girls. Holland & Beamon Company of Suffolk, Va., believe in keeping the little fellows warm and comfortable and for that purpose they donated a car load of coal.

The Ladies' Aid Society of Asheboro, contributed one nice quilt to make one of the beds look pretty and also comfortable.

Mrs. C. P. Harden donated clothing for some of the children. Mr. R. B. Tate and a number of others who have charge of the finishing plant at the Travora Cotton Mills, Graham, N. C., got together and donated two bolts of cotton flannel to help out in the work.

Mr. N. H. Holt, Machais, N. Y., contributed one full suit for a boy.

For all these contributions we are very grateful. It helps us wonderfully in the work and saves our bank account.

Thanksgiving Offerings

The Thanksgiving offerings are beginning to come in and we trust that they will continue to come till our goal is reached. We have reached every goal set since we have been on this work and do not want to fail in this the last one we have set. We must reach the six thousand dollar mark.

How many churches will raise us $100.00 or more? We would like to see twenty churches send in $100.00 and we have more than that in our Southern Christian Convention that could easily raise that amount. Let all the churches put forth the biggest effort ever to make that goal.

Our Burlington Sunday school broke the record of all Sunday schools the first Sunday in November when its monthly contribution was $56.71. In fact, the Burlington school has led all the Sunday schools in the Southern Christian Convention this year in monthly contributions. The general average has been more than $36.00 per month.

Brother B. D. Jones sent in more than a $1,000.00 in subscriptions to the Children's Home this week from Holy Neck church. That is fine. Brother Jones is one of our Trustees and has a big heart full of love for the little orphans. His church is one of our loyal supporters in this work and when it comes to doing something for the Orphanage they always do something to make us happy. How many churches will do likewise?

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: I can say "da, da" and "ma, ma" now and my gums are giving me lots of trouble, but I guess after the teeth get through I will feel lots better. Enclosed find 50 cents for the cousins for November. Hope all the girls and boys will have a glorious Thanksgiving. Love and best wishes to them all.—Olive D. Poythress, Jr.

Sorry your gums are giving you trouble. Be patient. The teeth will get through soon and then you will be all right.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: I am sending my dime for this month. I am a little girl ten years old. I am going to school and am in the third grade. I like my teacher. Her name is Miss Annie Corbett. Love to you and the cousins.—Rachel R. Hofer.

Glad to have your letter this week. Hope you will make your grade all right this year. I give my little girls a dollar when they get on the honor roll.—"Uncle Charley."

DADDY'S MONEY

Sometimes my daddy likes to tease,
And takes me by surprise;
I cannot always tell his jokes,
Unless I watch his eyes.

The other day he said, "My boy,
Where did you get those clothes?
Who bought that hat that you have on?
Who gave you shoes and hose?"

"Who bought the food that gives you life?
Who bought this house and lot?
Who paid for furniture and rugs?
Who gave you your little cot?"

"Why you did, daddy," I answered back,
"You bought it all—and more."
"Then—don't you love me better'n mother?"
But I looked down at the floor.

Then I looked up at mother,
And she looked back at me;
And, somehow, before I knew it,
I was upon mother's knee.

And daddy's eyes just crinkled up—
I saw he would understand—
'Cause he had a mother once, himself;
He ain't always been a man.

Course, I don't love my mother best;
I love them just the same.
But there's something 'bout a mother
That a boy just can't explain.

It's something sorter tender—
You can't tell it if you try.
It's things that mothers do for boys
That daddy's money cannot buy!

—Anna Kilpatrick Fain, in Presbyterian Advance, May 1, 1919.

THE FLYING FROG OF JAVA

The Javanese frog is a creature measuring between fifteen and twenty-five inches. The skin of its back is pale blue and by night looks dark green or olive brown. The frog remains motionless during the day, with eyes sheltered from the light and with belly up, clinging to its support by adhesive cushions and by its belly, which is provided with a sticky covering, and it is hardly distinguishable from the objects that surround it. At nightfall it begins its hunt for the mammoth crickets on which it feeds, making leaps covering seven feet of ground. During the leap the play of lungs filled with air swells its body. To descend from a height it spreads wide its claws and, dropping, rests upon its feet.—

Leslie's Weekly.

BAKING DAY

When I go down to grandma's,
I always help her bake.
I like the best of all, though,
When she starts to make a cake.

She beats it in the yellow bowl,
Her spoon goes "Clap, clap, clap!"
She beats it so hard that sometimes
I'm afraid her arm will drop.

And when she turns it in the pans,
I watch her, and I wish
She wouldn't scrape so much out,
'Cause I want to lick the dish.

And then she hands the bowl to me,
And says: "Now run outdoors;
I've got to get my baking done
And then scrub all the floors."

One time my father saw me there.
He laughed and said: "I wish
I was a little tad again,
A-lickin' out a dish."

—Ellen Curtis.

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR DECEMBER 7, 1919

(Mrs. Fred Bullock)

Peter and John Asleep in Gethsemane.—Mark 14:12-54, printed portion Mark 14:32-42.

Golden Text: Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation.—Mark 14:38.

What a sad commentary on human nature in this lesson! Only a few short hours before these men had been quarrelling over who would be greatest in the Kingdom, yet now, when their Lord bids them stay awake past their usual hour, the excitement and the stress of the last few days have been too much for them, and they fall asleep. Yet they had thought themselves sufficiently strong to support the cares and burdens that fall upon officials of State. Well for us that He who made us knows us better than we know ourselves, and will not allow us to be tempted above that we are able to bear. The Intermediate Topic in this lesson, "Sleeping on Duty," suggests to our thoughts how comparatively easy it is to be drowsy-eyed in the line of duty. It is easier to sleep than to work. We must work out our salvation; we must bear burdens for others; we must labor in the vineyard. But the state can be lost, the church can be lost, the world can be lost, our own soul can be lost by doing—nothing. Many refuse to work because they claim to see no need. They are asleep at the post of duty, and have never lifted their eyes to look and behold the fields already white unto harvest.

"Jesus' dependence upon His Disciples." Long ago the Psalmist cried out that when he considered the Heavens, the work of God's hands, and the earth which was His footstool, he could but stand aghast and cry "What is man that Thou art mindful of him?" And we, sensing Christ's need of us, must need question ourselves again, "What am I, that Thou hast need of me?" Paul says, "Now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be." What then, when Jesus asks us to watch with Him; when He shows us that He needs us, shall we refuse to answer? Shall we so strain ourselves for the things of the world that we cannot remain awake to the call of Christ? God forbid!

GRADING THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

(Mrs. Fred Bullock)

I have often been asked, "Do you believe in grading the Sunday school?" "Do you think we ought to grade our Sunday school when it is only a little one-room school?" I wish to answer: First, yes, I do believe in grading the Sunday school. Second, no, I don't think you ought to do it for you cannot, but I do think you ought to recognize what the grading God has already done for you. You know, without my telling you, that if you have children of varying ages in the home, they cannot understand the same lesson if told in the same words. You must, whether you will or not, "grade" your teaching in order to meet the intelligence graded by the divine will and word of God. It means, then, in the Sunday school, that if a teacher has a child of six and one of twelve in the same class, one or the other of these children is getting little or nothing out of the lesson, and this through no fault of the teacher, or the lesson. Why not allow God's gradings to be recognized in your Sunday school by dividing the children somewhere near to their ages, so that they may profit fully by the lessons taught then?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR

DECEMBER 7, 1919

(J. Vincent Knight)

"Truths That Jesus Taught"—Matt. 5:3-12; John 21:25. (Consecration Meeting).

In the teachings of Jesus we find every phase of life mentioned. No other teacher in the world's history ever touched the main characteristics of life as did the Master teacher. In His teachings, he set up a standard for all life, by which and on which all teachers of the ages, past, present, and to come may successfully base their doctrine. But the things He taught mean little or nothing to us unless we are willing to study His Word, and know of His doctrine. Notice some of the things He taught, that are essential to all young lives.

First, He taught that the best time to surrender life to Him was in early youth, and that other things could come as needed. (See Matt 6:33). Second, that humility is the great cure for egotism, pride, haughtiness, self-righteousness, and leads to a life of happiness and peace. (Matt. 5:3). Third, that the only life of divine contentment is found in Christian service. (John 21:15-25.) Fourth, that the ultimate objective of all Christ directed service is the salvation of the whole world. (John 3:16; 10:22-42). These four facts ought to furnish ample information for a live meeting, for each one appeals directly to the young, and these must be mobilized for Christian service.

Mentionings

The North Carolina and the Virginia Christian Endeavor Unions are formulating plans to place a Field Secretary in these two States for full time service for the next Convention year. The Virginia Union has 262 Societies. The North Carolina Union has 358 Societies, with a membership of 10,740. Pray for the development of those plans.

The last of the Christian Endeavor Institutes for this State will be held in Greensboro, N. C., Monday, December 1. You should attend this Institute. It will be conducted by Karl Lehmann, of Chattanooga, Tennessee, and Chas. F. Evans, of Lexington, Ky. The registration Committee proposes to register 800 for the Institute.

The third all-South Convention will be held in New Orleans, La., July 8-11, 1920. Send your registration fee to Karl Lehmann, Chattanooga, Tenn., and "the sooner, the quicker." (Registration fee, $1.00).

Young people of the North Carolina Christian Conference will be glad to know that the Christian Endeavor work of this Conference for next year is in the hands of a Secretary who is to take up the Christian Endeavor work with all pastors and churches, organizing new Societies. His expenses will be paid by the Conference. Fine, let us back him with our best support.

MEDLIN-CARPENTER

Mr. William Medlin and Miss Lelia Carpenter, both of Morrisville, N. C., were united in marriage at my home, November 2, 1919. Best wishes.

W. G. CLEMENTS.

WHITSEL-SILER

Mr. Albert Whitsel of Burlington, N. C., and Miss Alice May Siler of Siler City, N. C., were united in marriage by the writer at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. S. W. Caddell, Elon College, N. C., November 5, 1919. Only a few relatives and special friends were present. May happiness and success attend their wedded life.

N. G. NEWMAN.

KING

John Preston King of Burlington, N. C., departed this life, November 10, 1919, aged 69 years, 2 months and 16 days. Brother King had been twice married. His first wife was Miss Emma Graham who died about forty years ago. His last wife was Miss Lizzie Faucette who died a few years ago.

He leaves five living children. Two children preceded him to the grave.

Brother King confessed Christ about fifteen years ago and united with Union Christian church of which church he was a member when death came.

He was blessed with a good voice which he was fond of using in singing the praise of God.

The funeral service was conducted by the writer, assisted by Brothers Holt, Harrell and Kirk. The interment was in the cemetery at Union church, Alamance county, N. C.

May the dear Master bless and comfort the bereaved.

P. H. FLEMING.

"We said we could, if we would;
We could, and so we did."

The Cause of Christian Education is set forward a half century in our Church by this great achievement.

THE DRIVE COMMITTEE EXPRESSES APPRECIATION

We wish to express our sincere appreciation of the generous response of the friends of Christian Education in the Christian Church to our appeal for funds for Elon. We had faith always in our people. We knew none are more generous, none more anxious to respond when merit claims support. We trust that every donor will consider this expression a personal word of appreciation.

WE WERE DIVINELY LED

Your Committee cannot but feel that our people were divinely led to oversubscribe the original goal we had set. We asked for a minimum of $125,000. They gave us $375,000. When our drive was launched educational authorities had set $200,000 as the minimum endowment for a Standard College and $300,000 for plant and equipment. Since it closed another basis has been arrived at and now the minimum endowment is $403,200 with a plant valued at $350,000. We can therefore, as we have said, but conclude that our people were divinely led to subscribe a sum sufficient to enable our College to meet the new requirements in advance. We give praise to Him.

INVESTMENT OF THE FUND

Every dollar of this fund is to be perpetual capital for Christian Education in the Christian Church. Its income only will be used to provide the means of instruction for Christian ministers and lay leaders, both men and women, in the Church. Even the expenses incurred in raising the fund are not to be charged against it. The College carried this item in its current expense account. We are sure our decision on this point will greatly encourage each donor to rejoice in the perpetuity of the good his money shall achieve.

A FINAL WORD

And now we call upon each subscriber to pay promptly when notified by the President of the College. Promptness will add greatly to our gifts. It costs money to write letters, in postage, stationery, stenographic and other office help. We are told in Holy Writ that the Lord loveth the cheerful giver. We know also that He prospereth the prompt payer of pledges to His work.

It will be five years before all this fund will be in. If our subscribers will pay promptly in this five years our College will have saved many thousands of dollars. Are we not willing to make this larger gift to the institution we have made safe for our Christ by our great liberality? We believe we are. Let us do it.

One more word. Several have already paid their pledges in full. One five thousand dollar pledge has been paid in full; several thousand dollar ones, and a great many one hundred dollar ones. How greatly we would help our College now if those of us, who can, would strain a point and pay our subscription in full when the first payment comes due! We do not ask it, but we suggest it and we believe the same Father Who touched our hearts to liberal response in the subscription of the drive would bless us abundantly for doing even more than we promised to do. In such generosity we shall learn the blessing of "the second mile." We believe many whom God has prospered will gladly do this. Then their money will begin at once to aid our College and they can see for more years than otherwise the fruits of a generosity that shall bloom and ripen through the unfolding years.

With sincere appreciation to each and all, we are, for the Board of Trustees of Elon College and for the Southern Christian Convention.

Your grateful servants,
J. E. WEST,
K. B. JOHNSON,
R. M. MORROW,
Drive Committee.

He Was The Man

As usual, the Yankee was drawing the long bow.

"On one occasion," he said, "I shot nine hundred and ninety-nine snipe."

The Englishman looked incredulous.

"You might make it a thousand while you're about it," he sneered.

"No," answered Uncle Sam's offspring righteously, "it's not likely I'm going to tell a lie for one snipe."

The Englishman determined not to be outdone and began to tell a story of a man who swam from Liverpool to Boston.

"Did you see him yourself?" inquired the Yank.

"Why, yes, of course I did. I was coming across the water and our vessel passed him a mile outside of Boston harbor."

"Well," retorted the Yankee, "I'm glad you saw him, stranger, 'eos you're a witness that I did it. I was that swimmer!"

The Englishman said no more.—Selected.

A Perfect Gentleman

The civie car had stopped at the end of the t. Clair line and many passengers had alighted. Liza Jones was one of them, and as she walked across to take the suburban she turned towards her companion.

"Say, Bill, did you see that bloke that was sitting next to me in the car?" she asked.

"Yes," replied Bill.

"Well," he was a perfect gentleman, he was. aw I looked tired so he made his missus stand up and give me her seat."—Selected.

Truthful at Least

A man was found by a policeman one evening investigating a Yonge Street building somewhat closely. "What are you doing?" asked the policeman. "Nothing," replied the man. "I am thinking of opening a jewelry store here and I thought I would look it over," and so he was allowed to remain. The next morning it was reported that the jewelry store had been robbed, the policeman seratched his head and finally said: "Well, that man may be a thief, but he's no liar."

His First Shave—Nearly

For some time Jones has suspected, when he stroked his chin, that there was something there, and now he was certain of it, so fearfully he hid himself to the Press barber's shop, and breathed again when he found he was the only customer. Calmly he took possession of the operating chair, and the towel had just been placed below his chin when—horrors!—the door opened, and in stalked three of his office colleagues. "Shave, sir?" said Bill to the horror-stricken Jones. "N-n-no," blurted out the unfortunate youth in desperation; "f-face washed, please."—Selected.

Thanksgiving!

(Abstract of Governor Bickett's Thanksgiving Proclamation)

THE Lord of the Harvest has been good to us. Our fields have yielded bountifully. Prosperity has smiled on farm, factory, bank and store. There has been a mighty triumph of spiritual forces in our midst. The fruits of this victory are seen in the great forward movements of all the churches, finer educational advantages enjoyed by all the children of the State. God has given to men everywhere a bigger, broader conception of Christian service than they ever had before. We should be deeply thankful for the spirit of friendship and good will that prevails among us. Let us pray for absolute justice for all, by which alone this spirit may be strengthened and maintained.

EDITORIAL

THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

(Editorial Note: During the session of the North Carolina Conference last week The Sun's Editor was empowered with the duty and privilege of making reports to the daily press. A copy of these reports was kept and we submit a part of the same as our editorial contribution this week.—C. B. R.)

Burlington, North Carolina, November 11, 1919.—

The first session of the North Carolina Christian Conference, Incorporated (being the ninety-fourth session of the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference, the fifty-third session of the Western North Carolina Conference, and twenty-sixth session of the Eastern North Carolina Conference uniting to make this one) met at 9:00 o'clock this morning with Rev. T. E. White presiding. Mr. W. M. Brown spoke the words of welcome and greeting, and Mr. George T. Whitaker, Franklinton, N. C., responded.

During the morning session reports were made by the Executive Committee, the program committee, and the treasurer of the Conference, Hon. K. B. Johnson, Cardenas, N. C. The treasurer's report showed that practically every church of the denomination in North Carolina had come forward in financial developments, and that the churches as well as business enterprises are going forward and that the local congregations are taking on new life and supporting in a more loyal way the local institution.

Special committees were appointed as follows to serve during the week:

Nominations—Dr. N. G. Newman, Dr. E. L. Moffitt, Rev. J. Lee Johnson; Finance—L. M. Clymer, A. F. Smith; Enrollment—J. P. Montgomery, Miss Nonie Moore, Miss Bessie Holt; Collectors—Dr. W. P. Lawrence, Mr. L. D. Stephenson; Press—C. B. Riddle, President W. A. Harper, and Attorney C. A. Hines; Resolutions—Dr. J. W. Harrell, Rev. J. G. Truitt and Rev. J. V. Knight; On Place of Meeting—Rev. J. W. Patton, Rev. G. R. Underwood and Mr. J. Byrd Ellington.

President White had for the subject of his annual address, "The New Program for the Old Task." In speaking in a preliminary way concerning the united and enlarged conference, the President said: "It is not without a passing significance that the first session of our united conferences begins on the first anniversary of the signing of the Armistice. Out of the terrible struggle the Church comes with enlarged faith and vision, having learned the most valuable lessons which she will incorporate in a world program of conquest for Christ which will bring to pass the saying that is written. The Kingdoms of this world may become the Kingdom of our Lord and his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever."

President White's message was heartily received. It was punctuated with words of wisdom. "When you touch the church, you touch Jesus," was a sample of his striking sentences that went to the hearts of those who were privileged to hear him.

At the close of the morning service the Lord's Supper was administered by four Elders of the Conference.

In the afternoon Rev. J. V. Knight read the report on Christian Endeavor which embraced practical plans to be undertaken during the coming year. Mr. C. H. Stephenson of Raleigh, North Carolina, rendered a report on Sunday schools which incorporated large and progressive plans. One of the important steps taken was setting aside one week in each year to be known as "Sunday School Week" in all churches and that no other activities interfere. The Conference is looking forward to the putting on of a regular secretary to handle the work of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor matters in the North Carolina Conference.

Addresses on these reports were given by Rev. W. L. Wells, Pastor of the First Christian church, Reidsville, N. C.; Rev. J. V. Knight, Pastor of the First Christian church, Greensboro, N. C., and Prof. Herbert Scholtz, Macon, N. C.

The theme for the afternoon session was "Missions." Victor M. Rivera and Toshio Sato San were the two interesting speakers. Mr. Rivera is from Porto Rico and Miss Toshio is from Japan. Rev. O. S. Thomas, Dayton, Ohio, Home Mission Secretary in the American Christian Convention, and Rev. E. K. McCord, a Missionary to Japan, both addressed the evening session.

Mr. Thomas used as his theme, "The Challenge of Missions," while Mr. McCord's theme was "The Dynamic of Missions." Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Field Secretary of Missions in the Southern Christian Convention, spoke on "The Reaction of Missions."

The theme for consideration tomorrow morning will be "Stewardship," the afternoon theme will be devoted to missionary work as it is related to our helpless ones—the orphans.

Tomorrow afternoon the theme for discussion will be "Training Christian Leaders."

At this time your correspondent is unable to report the number in attendance. The entertainment committee is over-run and behind with its report.

Burlington, N. C., November 12.—The second session of the North Carolina Christian Conference opened this morning promptly at 9 o'clock. The theme under discussion continued from last night was "Missions."

The report of the Home Mission Board was rendered by Rev. T. E. White, Chairman, Sanford, N. C., and was comprehensive in its scope and business-like in its program. The report lamented the fact that many churches are without pastors and urged the people not only to build churches but to support them. Rev. W. L. Wells was approved as pastor of the Reidsville church and the Board made a favorable report in behalf of the work there. Danville, Virginia, another very important mission point had due consideration. Franklinton, High Point and Mebane, New Hope (Randolph), Lucama, Hopedale, other mission points, were favorably commended of, the work ordered to go forward. The report recommended an Executive Secretary to take charge of the Home Mission work in the Conference.

Mrs. E. B. Huffines rendered a report of the late L. I. Cox, Home Mission Secretary of the Conference. Secretary Cox passed away September 5, and his office has been left open since then. Mrs. W. H. Carroll presented a report of the Woman's Board of Missions, which was favorably received and showed splendid progress in various directions. Promptly at 10:30 A. M., the theme of "Stewardship" was taken up and discussed by Rev. J. E. Franks, Cary, N. C., Dr. W. P. Lawrence, Elon College, N. C., and Attorney C. A. Hines, Greensboro, N. C. Mr. Hines was unable to be present but sent his address. All of these addresses placed a new emphasis and a new meaning upon money and the members of the Conference were greatly edified and enlightened by the splendid and scholarly addresses given by the speakers upon this theme.

The one important thing presented at the beginning of the afternoon session was a report by the Committee on Education which was read by Dr. N. G. Newman, Elon College, N. C. Robert Herbert Coble, Burlington, N. C., Route 5; Dallis Theaton McKinney, Lillington, N. C.; E. H. Rainey, Garysburg, N. C., and William Gaither Crutchfield, Guilford College, N. C., asked for licensure and the committee recommended that they be licensed. The licentiates of the Conference—R. O.

Smith, J. E. McCauley, L. W. Fogleman and B. J. Howard applied for ordination and the committee recommended that the same be granted.

Emphasis was made upon the scarcity of ministers to man the field and the Conference was asked to pray earnestly that more men might be sent into the needy fields.

The Board recommended the steps as taken by the Board of Education in the American Christian Convention, that scholarships be granted only to young men and women who declare their purpose to complete their college course and take at least one year's work in some theological seminary; also that any student preparing for the ministry in the Christian denomination, and maintaining an average grade of 80 per cent in his literary subjects during his freshman year be awarded a cash scholarship of $100.00; provided, that the student is not to take regular preaching service during the school year and that he is to carry full school work. This recommendation also carried that any ministerial student in the sophomore year of college who maintains an average of 85 per cent in his literary subjects be awarded a scholarship of $100.00 on the condition that he is not to accept regular preaching appointments during his school year, and that he is to carry full work. The ministerial students in the junior and senior years of college who maintain an average of 85 per cent in literary subjects are also to be awarded a cash scholarship of $100.00 on the condition that only half time be given to pastoral work.

These recommendations are based on a graduating scale, and so the ministerial students who graduate from college with an average grade of 85 per cent will be awarded a scholarship of $200.00 for the first year in a first class seminary.

The theme for the latter part of the afternoon service was, "Helping the Helpless." Dr. P. H. Fleming, Burlington, N. C., Superintendent; H. A. Garrett, of the Methodist Protestant Children's Home, High Point, N. C., and Chas. D. Johnston, Supt. of the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C., addressed the Conference and brought messages that were gladly received.

Dr. N. G. Newman, Dr. W. C. Wicker and Dr. W. A. Harper of the Elon College Faculty, addressed the Conference tonight on the subject of "Training Christian Leaders." Dr. Newman's subject was, "Problems of Kingdom Leaders," while Dr. Wicker spoke on "The Fundamentals in Christian Education," and Dr. Harper's theme was "The New Service of the Christian College."

Burlington, N. C., November 13.—The third day of the North Carolina Christian Conference in session at this place was taken up this morning by a report on "Superannuation" by Hon. K. B. Johnson, Cardenas, N. C. The report was new in that it took forward steps looking to a larger and better support for aged ministers and the wives of deceased ministers. The report included five per cent of the Conference funds to be used for this purpose. The report was passed without a dissenting voice. Rev. C. B. Riddle, Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, rendered a report on religious literature. One of the recommendations made was that ministers not only read publications of their denomination, but of other denominations that they might keep in touch with what is being done throughout the Christian world.

Rev. J. F. Apple, Elon College, N. C., Mrs. E. K. McCord, Dayton, Ohio, and Rev. C. B. Riddle, Editor THE CHRISTIAN SUN, addressed the Conference on themes related to church publications and religious books.

In the afternoon the spicely and important part of the Conference was on "The Best Thing my Church did this Year," by the delegates. Following this the theme was "Evangelism." Chaplain Stanley C. Harrell, Suffolk, Va., Dr. W. H. Denison, Dayton, Ohio, Rev. F. C. Lester, Graham, N. C., and Rev. J. G. Truitt, News Ferry, Va., spoke on topics relating to this subject. The addresses showed much preparation and struck a high note on the important subject of evangelism.

Tonight Dr. George J. Ramsey, Raleigh, N. C., Dr. R. M. Andrews, Greensboro, N. C., Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., and Dr. F. Paul Langhorn, New York City, addressed the Conference on the theme of "Christian Union." The addresses were of a very high order and were gladly received by the vast audience present to hear these specialties on a theme so important in an age like this.

Burlington, N. C., November 14, 1919.—The ninety-fourth annual session of the North Carolina Christian Conference which has been in session at this place during the past four days came to an end tonight.

During the morning session many items of business were dispensed with and the following addresses heard: "The Gospel of Comfort" by Rev. J. W. Patton; "The Gospel of Service" by Rev. A. T. Banks, and "The Church Ministering to All" by Dr. N. G. Newman.

In the opening of the afternoon session the report on apportionments brought some interesting and lively discussion. The report, however, was adopted, carrying with it 25 per cent increase. The conference also went on record favoring churches rapidly raising the salaries of the ministers. The laymen took a very active part in this, and it was very clearly seen that this matter, as well as other matters of a financial nature appealed to men when such was on a progressive scale. It was the unanimous conviction of the body that men despise small tasks, and that churches prosper when they undertake big things. The amount to be raised by many of the churches has been so small that it did not attract and call out the best in the membership.

Possibly one of the most forward addresses made during the conference was made by Mr. J. U. Gunter, Sanford, N. C., on the "The Need of Pastorates." The address was ordered printed for free distribution. Rev. R. F. Brown addressed the conference on "The Opportunities of the Ministry."

At the final closing session Dr. C. H. Armstrong, Baltimore, Md., Secretary of the Committee on Christian Union of the Disciples Church, brought a message that was gladly heard, while Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., President of the Southern Christian Convention, preached the ordination sermon of the conference. Dr. Staley was practical in his presentation, clear in his statements and definite as to what constituted a real minister.

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION

November 27, 1919

By the President of the United States of America.

The season of the year has again arrived when the people of the United States are accustomed to unite in giving thanks to Almighty God for the blessings which he has conferred upon our country during twelve months that have passed.

A year ago our people poured out their hearts in praise and thanksgiving that through divine aid the right was victorious and peace had come to the nations which had so courageously struggled in defense of human liberty and justice.

Now that the stern task is ended and the fruits of achievement are ours, we look forward with confidence to the dawn of an era where the sacrifices of the nations will find recompense in a world at peace.

But to attain the consummation of the great work to which the American people devoted their manhood and the vast resources of their country they should, as they give thanks to God, reconsecrate themselves to these principles of right which triumphed through His merciful goodness. Our gratitude can find no more perfect expression than to bulwark with loyalty and patriotism those principles for which the free peoples of the earth fought and died.

During the last year we have had much to make us grateful. In spite of the confusion in our economic life resulting from the war we have prospered. Our harvests have been plentiful and of our abundance we have been able to render succor to less favored nations. Our democracy remains unshaken in a world torn with political and social unrest. Our traditional ideals are still our guides in the path of progress and civilization.

These are great blessings, vouchsafed to us, for which we devoutly give thanks, should arouse us to a fuller sense of our duty to ourselves and to mankind to see to it that nothing we may shall mar the completeness of the victory which we helped to win.

No selfish purpose animated us in becoming a participant in the world war, and with a like spirit of unselfishness we should strive to aid by our example and by our co-operation in realizing the enduring welfare of all peoples and in bringing into being a world ruled by friendship and good will.

Therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, hereby designate Thursday, the twenty-seventh day of November, next, for observance as a day of thanksgiving and prayer by my fellow countrymen, inviting them to cease on that day from their ordinary tasks and to unite in their homes and in their several places of worship in ascribing praise and thanksgiving to God, the author of all blessings and the master of our destinies.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia, this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and nineteen, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-fourth.

WOODROW WILSON.

By the President:

ROBERT LANSING, Secretary of State.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

HOLLAND, VIRGINIA

Yesterday we received one member into church by letter.

It was Ladies' Aid Day at the church service, and the Society was there in a body. The occasion was the presentation of the newly installed pipe organ by the Society to the church.

The presentation was made by Mrs. Job. G. Holland and the address of acceptance on the part of the church was made by J. P. Dalton, one of the trustees of the church. The organ was purchased and paid for by the Ladies' Aid Society at a cost of $1,800.

It was also decided by the church to proceed at once to raise the balance of the indebtedness on the church and the second Sunday in December was set for the day of dedication. The dedicatory services will be in the afternoon at three o'clock. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C., was selected by the church to preach the dedication sermon. The new building is constructed of pressed brick and stone trimmings. It has electric lights, a water system, and hot air heat. The main auditorium and gallery will seat approximately 600 people. The pastor's study, neatly equipped, is located close by the pulpit. The Sunday school department is in the basement with a splendid auditorium, six classrooms and a kitchen. The building and equipment has cost approximately $30,000.

A joint committee from the two churches, Holland and Holy Neck, has decided to wire the parsonage for electric lights. This generous act of the pastorate is much appreciated.

W. M. JAY.

SUFFOLK LETTER

The nation is full of clamor for the lowering of what is called the "high cost of living." From Washington down to the smallest village remedies are suggested. Even government, national, state, and municipal, would compel reduction in prices, and thus help the consumer; but the more the agitation, the less is accomplished.

The whole matter comes in as one item in the aftermath of the war; and is a necessary result of the war-spirit. When the war ends at the front, it re-acts at home. The spirit that fought in the line of battle at the front comes back home after the last battle and works among the people. That spirit operates in politics, business, social life, and even in religious organizations. Wild plans and selfish interests propose all sorts of new undertakings, and almost everything is up in the air for years.

The armistice is not an agreement for peace, but a cessation of hostilities till peace terms can be agreed upon by the belligerents. Men talk about peace, but there is no peace till the League of Nations can secure peace. The slow process of dealing with the League of Nations in our own Congress shows that peace terms are not so easy of adoption. While this spirit is at work over the world, with all sorts of disturbances in great centers, it is to be expected that excitement will enter the markets and financial war will rage throughout the country.

But one thing should be kept in mind that "prosperity" and "high prices" always go together; and that "low prices" and "adversity" are discouraged companions. It is true, perhaps, that prices will never reach as low a level as they did before the war; but prices will drop some day to a new normal. But when prices begin to drop business will decline, discouragement will seize investors, retailers will not be able to sell over their counters, failures may become epidemic, and the "low cost" of living may be worse than the "high cost of living. It is easy to sell while prices are rising, because customers fear prices will go higher; but when prices go downward, customers hesitate to buy hoping that prices will go lower. Then business lags, people become discouraged, and hard times begin. It would be a calamity for prices to drop suddenly. When tides are low boats cannot go up the small rivers and into the small places; but when tides are high, they go into all markets. The little business and the little people fare best when prices are high; big business and big people can stand the strain of hard times better and longer. People need not worry over "high prices" while general prosperity prevails throughout the land, and religious enterprises share in the spirit of liberality in the glow of the heat of widespread activity.

W. W. STALEY.

ABOUT OUR FRIENDS

Our friends came to see us last week. They came in large numbers and we are glad to have them. We dare not mention names for fear that we should have a list far from being complete. Our friends came. Come again. A welcome awaits you.

AN EXPLANATION

This issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN was scheduled to be a regular Thanksgiving Number, but circumstances over which we have no control make it impossible for us to render that service this year. Our editorial pages are laden with messages from the North Carolina Conference, while general matter is rapidly accumulating. Recent Conferences have voted to have several papers printed and they are now coming in. To give this issue Thanksgiving messages would make it very difficult, and so we offer this word of explanation and ask friends to bear with us.

AN APPRECIATED GIFT

When a church loves its pastor, and the pastor loves his people, there is no sigh of relief when the last dollar on salary is paid. Rather there is an appreciation that goes out of the hearts of the people as a free-will offering. Such was the case the other day with the Sanford church and its beloved pastor, Rev. T. E. White. He received a check for $75.00 as an overplus of what they had agreed to pay him. His heart was made to rejoice, but the people received the greater benefit. Now, Brother White didn't tell us to write this, neither did any member of the Sanford church, but we got the news and have told it. Some other church do likewise and send a half-paid pastor away with a smile.

AMONG THE WORKERS

This splendid word comes from Dr. L. E. Smith, Third church, Norfolk, Va.: "The way things are moving is simply wonderful. Had 502 at Rally Day Exercises Sunday morning, and at least 400 present for the evening service. The time is indeed ripe for Third church." This church under the leadership of Brother Smith is moving in such a way as to inspire all of us. Its membership is rapidly increasing. Its church Sunday school attendance multiplies, and many are eager for the building program to begin. Here is hoping that these progressive friends will build while conditions seem so favorable. A church costing not less than $150,000.00 and ample for all purposes in Park Place, Norfolk, would be a source of great inspiration to all our work in the South and we are depending on this church with its superior opportunity and privilege to lead us on to great things.

A happy Thanksgiving is the wish of the Editor to all CHRISTIAN SUN readers.

MISSIONARY

MINUTES OF THE FOREIGN MISSION DEPARTMENT OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

The Foreign Mission Department of the Mission Board of the Christian Church met at Dayton, Ohio, Tuesday evening, October 21, and adjourned Thursday evening, October 23, 1919. All members were present with the exception of Rev. W. P. Fletcher, from whom a letter was read. Rev. E. K. McCord, D. D., Acting Foreign Mission Secretary, was asked to meet regularly with the Board. The following visitors were present at various times: Miss Carrie Robison, Rev. E. B. Flory, Rev. and Mrs. W. Q. McKnight, Rev. W. H. Martin, Rev. William Williams, Mrs. Carrie Beaver, Mrs. E. K. McCord and Rev. J. W. Harrell, D. D.

The newly qualified board elected the following officers:

President—Rev. Warren H. Denison, D. D.

Secretary—Rev. Wilson P. Minton.

Treasurer—Rev. Omer S. Thomas, D. D.

Mission Council—Denison, Winters, and Minton.

An appropriation to the Headquarters Building expense of the Committee on Reference and Council was allowed in the sum of $50.00.

Foreign Mission Secretary Minton was named to succeed Dr. M. T. Morrill on all co-operative committees and Acting Secretary McCord was asked to place the name of the Secretary in nomination to fill such vacancies as were created by the retirement of Dr. Morrill.

The Committee on Co-operation in Latin America was voted the usual apportionment of $200.00.

It was decided to create a fund for the building of homes for our Foreign Missionaries and the Secretary was authorized to encourage gifts for this purpose.

A special committee consisting of Acting Secretary McCord, Secretary Minton and Mrs. M. T. Morrill was asked to make a thorough study of the Interchurch World Movement program for Japan and if necessary, to call the Board together to hear and act upon their recommendations.

The Secretary was requested to send suitable greetings to the Japan and Porto Rico Missions.

Japan

The request of the Japan Mission for an additional fund for the Kannari chapel was referred to the Woman's Board.

The action of the Japan Mission relative to the Narugo district was approved and the matter referred to the Woman's Board.

A year-in-grant of $250 was allowed the Garman's for the year, 1919.

A grant of $25 was allowed toward the purchase of an organ for Utsunomiya, the balance to be raised by that church.

The requested grant for the building of the Naka Shibuya church was ordered delayed owing to lack of proper funds.

A grant of $50 was allowed Miss Martha Stacy for language study.

It was voted that the money received for the temporary rental of the mission home during a short period in the summer be retained by Brother Garman.

Foreign Mission Secretary Minton was asked to visit the Japan Field as soon as possible, preferably during the year, 1920.

The matter of the unpaid balance for the Dogenzaki lot was referred to the investment committee of the Mission Board.

The Acting Secretary was authorized to call for funds to provide buildings for the Night School, Kindergarten and the pastor's and teacher's residence on the Dogenzaki lot in Tokyo for which $10,000 is needed.

The Japan budget was voted in the sum of $20,675.

Porto Rico

The Porto Rico budget was thoroughly considered and voted in the sum of $9,540.

The salary of Rev. D. P. Barrett was fixed at $1,700, including children's allowances.

Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett were voted a furlough, the same to be taken next year.

It was decided to begin the erection of a chapel at Santa Isabel at the earliest possible date.

It was decided to purchase an available property for a parsonage at Arus, and that some church or individual be given the privilege of assuming that obligation, the minimum price having been set at $750.

Acting Secretary McCord was instructed to inform the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention that the property in Porto Rico for which said board has appropriated $3,500 cannot be secured and that he ask the board to assist in buying another home for Miss Williams instead in an amount not to exceed $5,000.

Missionaries Appointed

Rev. W. H. Martin, Mellott, Ind., was placed under appointment as missionary to Porto Rico, the details of his sailing to be worked out by the Acting Secretary.

The privilege of undertaking the support of Brother Martin was left open for some church or Sunday school to assume.

The appointment of Rev. W. Q. McKnight was transferred from Porto Rico to Japan, with instructions to sail at the earliest moment.

Resolutions

That we commend the action of the American Christian Convention at its latest session in authorizing a deputation to visit our mission field in Japan; and we call the attention of its Executive Board to the fact that the gathering of the World's Sunday School Association in Japan will provide an opportune occasion for such a visitation.

That we express our hearty appreciation of the splendid work done by the Woman's Foreign Mission Board in exceeding their goal during the past year and that we request them to continue the support of the Sendai field.

That we learn with pleasure concerning the increasing interest in and giving for missionary work by the Southern Christian Convention as evidenced in the new and larger goal just set by our missionary workers there, viz.: $500,000 to be secured in cash and pledges within three years from this date for home and foreign missions. We hope this faith and vision may be not only blessed of God and that this goal may not only be reached, but that in so doing it shall be an inspiration to every other section of our brotherhood.

That we express our hearty appreciation of the devoted leadership of Miss Carrie Robison, and the untiring efforts of our young people in providing for the chapel at Santa Isabel.

Resolved, That it is with regret that at this session of the Mission Board we lose from our membership and official service, Rev. Milo T. Morrill, D. D.

Dr. Morrill has been a member of the Mission Board of the Christian Church for twenty years and his service has been faithfully and unselfishly rendered. Of this time he has been Foreign Mission Secretary for more than twelve years, and President of the Mission Board for several years. In all of these positions he has rendered most valuable service to the Kingdom and to our church.

We desire to express our appreciation of him as a man and a Christian and as an efficient and conscientious official. His administration has been characterized by his splendid statesmanship.

We congratulate Defiance College and the Christian Divinity School in securing his valuable services and wish him splendid success in this new relationship.

All matters of unfinished business at the close of the session were referred to the Mission Council.

W. P. MINTON, Recording Secretary.

Members Foreign Department Board

Warren H. Denison, D. D., Mrs. M. T. Morrill, Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., Rev. W. P. Fletcher, Mr. J. O. Winters, Rev. W. P. Minton.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: Today is Ben T's birthday. He is three years old. My birthday is the twentieth of this month. I will be six then. A week from my birthday is Thanksgiving and I hope all of us will have a happy time and that you will get more money for the orphans that you have asked for. I am sending our offering in this letter—$5.00 for mother, $2.00 for Ben T., $2.00 for myself and $1.00 for Rebecca Ann. Love to all the cousins.—Florence P. Holden.

You are a fine little girl and a good helper. I am proud of you.—'Uncle Charley.'

Dear Uncle Charley: I am sending $1.00. Fifty cents for the Thanksgiving offering and fifty cents for dues as I haven't sent any since last June. I enjoyed the singing so much when the girls came to Holy Neck. Hope the cousins will have a good time Thanksgiving. Love to all.—Frances Horne Everett.

Glad to have your letter this week. We are always glad to have the children write for the Corner.—"Uncle Charley."

FOR THE MASTER'S SAKE!

The mother was dead; perhaps the father might better have been. The two children were oh! so little, so little, so dirty, so world-wise, so starved for happiness, so manifestly destined to become all that Jesus Christ died to save them from becoming, that it really would have broken your heart could you have seen them.

They were children of poverty and neglect, children with but few illusions as to this world and probably with none as to the next.

The boy, in the course of time, would become an associate of criminals.

The girl—

God help us all and have mercy on our souls!

And yet there are homes for just such children as these poor castaways—these future threats to your own girl's happiness and your own boy's safety. There are homes where these forgotten bits of humanity may know what a bath means—clean clothes, abundant food, education and training for useful lives, and—greatest boon of all—where they may learn what Jesus Christ means in this world where we stay but a short while and in that other world where we shall live a long, long time.

And it requires so little—so pitifully little to take these waifs from the high road to ruin and set their little feet firmly upon a path leading to other things—to high attainment, perhaps to complete happiness and eternal salvation. So little, indeed, that hardly can there be a man or woman in North Carolina but is able to aid in saving these children from all that is vile, and in saying to God: "This I do in Thy name." Be sure the Recording Angel will note carefully the act, and on that great final day of all time will be counted to your credit.

And so you, a father or a mother with children of your own who are not in the streets, you are asked to contribute one day's income to aid in placing the waifs of the State in any one of the orphanages you may yourself select. But one day's income, mark you.

And you, a husband or a wife whose home God has not blessed with children, are asked to contribute one day's income to aid in giving a home to some unfortunate child without mother or father.

The North Carolina Orphan Association asks the business man, the professional man, the laborer and the salaried man, the farmer and the shop worker, the boys and the girls, to devote but one day's income to a cause approved by the Master, who charges you, personally, to care for the fatherless ones. There are many orphanages in North Carolina and there are countless North Carolina children without other hope of home than these orphanages.

"And what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?"

Are you doing justly unless you aid in saving these children who come into the world through no will of their own and who can never make a safe harbor without your aid?

Do you really love mercy unless you show mercy to these tots without homes, without friends, without food, without knowledge of God's Word?

And do you walk humbly with thy God unless you carry out His command: "Even so, it is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones shall perish."

And perish they surely must unless you are merciful and give of your abundance—give one day's income if you will, more if you can, less if need be. But give—give for your own children's sake, be they living or dead, and give for Jesus Christ's sake, that He may not have died in vain for such as you and I—and these street waifs.

Let this offering be given with a heart filled with gratitude, and joy, that you are privileged to serve your God and humanity in so acceptable a manner. Let it come, as is most fitting, on or near Thanksgiving Day.

The need is urgent, and the cry of the orphaned child rings loud and insistent. You cannot shut your ears to that cry. Should you try and do so, should you fail to accept this opportunity of rendering service to these helpless ones most needing it, to these innocent ones most deserving, perhaps in years to come that cry will still ring in the secret chambers of your heart, and when the long journey begins you will see that inspired text written in letters of fire—"Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these—"

For our Master's sake—GIVE!

Congratulations and best wishes.

*Principles and Government of
The Christian Church*

SECTION III

DUTIES OF DEACONS

1. It is the duty of the Deacons to minister to the needs of the poor, and to have charge of the temporal affairs of the church.
2. They should make suitable arrangements for, and assist the pastor in the administration of the ordinances.
3. One of the Deacons, in the absence of the pastor, should preside in all business meetings of the church, and conduct the public worship of the congregation, when desired to do so, by reading the Word of God, singing, prayer, and exhortation.
4. They should counsel with the pastor in the government and spiritual affairs of the church.

SECTION IV

DUTIES OF THE SECRETARY

1. The Secretary shall record all the transactions of the church, whether at stated, or called sessions or conferences thereof.
2. He shall record all admissions into the church, and state whether they be by letter or upon profession of faith; if by letter, state from what church or denomination the applicants came, always affixing the date.
3. He shall keep an account of all deaths, change of name by marriage, dismissals, suspensions, and expulsions, with marginal remarks on the church roll, and by order of the church shall issue the following letter of transfer and commendation:

CERTIFICATE OF MEMBERSHIP AND COMMENDATION

.....19....
 This certifies that is a member, in good standing, of.....Christian Church, Conference, and is, at own request hereby dismissed from this church to unite with church, and when so received responsibility to this church will cease.
 Done this the day of19....
 Secretary. Pastor.
 4. He shall attest all the acts and proceedings of the church.
 5. He shall have in charge and carefully preserve all the records of the church, which shall be open to the inspection of the pastor and the church, and which he shall deliver to his successor in office.

SECTION V

DUTIES OF THE TREASURER

1. The Treasurer shall receive the dues of the members of the church, and the contributions of the friends.

He shall keep a full account of all moneys received and paid out by the order of the church, to whom paid and for what purpose. He may serve also as collector, to whom the church may appoint one or more assistants.

2. He shall report in writing, quarterly, or as often as the church may require, all receipts and disbursements.

CHAPTER III.

MINISTERS

SECTION I
CANDIDATES

1. A candidate for the ministry in the Christian Church shall make application to the Educational Committee of the conference to which his church belongs.
2. Such candidate shall be of approved moral character and religious experience, shall give promise of ability to make suitable preparation, and shall be recommended by the church of which he is a member.
3. The Committee on Education shall examine him as to his fitness and qualifications, and, if admitted to the class, shall have oversight of his training and preparation; and he shall report annually to the committee. Failure to report himself or to make satisfactory progress shall be sufficient ground for dismissal from the roll of candidates.
4. All applications for aid from the Conference shall be through the Committee on Education.

SECTION II

LICENTIATES

1. A licentiate is one authorized by the conference to preach the gospel as a probationer until he shall give proof of his ability to teach efficiently the great doctrine of salvation.
2. Special care should be taken that candidate for licensure possess the moral, religious and literary qualifications necessary to fit him for the responsible position to which he aspires.
3. He shall, therefore, be a man of unblemished Christian character, have a good English education, and be recommended by the church of which he is a member.
4. That there may be no doubt of his qualifications, he shall be carefully examined by the Committee on Education as to:
 - (a) His religious experience, and his call to the ministry.
 - (b) His knowledge of the Principles and Government of the Christian Church.
 - (c) His knowledge of the Scriptures, and of the leading doctrines of Christianity.
 - (d) His knowledge of Arithmetic, Geography, English Grammar, History of the United States, Physiology and Elements of Rhetoric.
5. The committee shall report to the conference as to the qualifications of the applicant, and his fitness for licensure.
6. The Conference, being satisfied with his proficiency, shall provide for his licensure during the session of Conference or some subsequent time and shall issue a certificate of licensure, signed by the President and Secretary.

7. When a licentiate shall have preached for a reasonable length of time, and his services do not appear profitable to the churches, the Conference should revoke his license, and demand the return of his credentials.

SECTION III ELDERS

1. The importance and responsibility of the office of an Elder require that the incumbent possess an unblemished Christian character, a good education and a ready capacity to teach.

2. Every candidate for ordination shall have preached a sufficient length of time to give ample evidence of usefulness to the church, and be recommended by one or more of the congregations to which he has ministered.

3. He shall also be carefully examined by the Educational Committee of his Conference upon the following three years' course of study, the examination to be held at each successive Conference until the course is satisfactorily completed:

First Year.—(1) English and American Literature, (2) General History, (3) Church History, (4) Theology—Revealed, (5) Homiletics.

Second Year.—(1) Physics, (2) Mental Science, (3) History of the Christian Church, (4) Biblical Literature, (5) Theology—Pastoral.

Third Year.—(1) Higher Rhetoric, (2) Astronomy, (3) Geology, (4) Moral Science, (5) History of the Protestant Reformation, (6) Theology—Natural.

4. Those who have certificates of satisfactory examinations on the literary studies of this course, or have a diploma from a college of recognized standing, will be required to stand examinations only on the theological studies of the course. If the candidate can stand these examinations satisfactorily in less than three years, he will be permitted to do so.

5. When the course of study shall have been completed, the Committee on Education shall report to Conference with recommendations as to ordination.

6. Conference, being satisfied with the qualifications of the candidate, shall appoint an ordaining presbytery of three elders to set him apart to the sacred office of an Elder in the church. Persons so ordained become thereby members of the Conference.

7. Ordained ministers of other evangelical denominations may be received as elders, without re-ordination, provided they pass an approved examination, and show satisfactory knowledge of the Principles and Government of the Christian Church and are recommended by the Committee on Education.

CHAPTER IV CONFERENCE

SECTION I MEMBERSHIP

1. A Conference shall be composed of all ordained ministers and all churches organized upon the cardinal principles of the Christian Church, within certain specified bounds.

2. Every church shall have lay representation, and each conference shall fix its own ratio. Provided, that each church shall have at least one delegate and that no church shall have more than four.

3. One-fourth of the ministers belonging to the Conference, and as many delegates as may be present having met at the time and place appointed, shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

4. Ministers and messengers from sister conferences and representatives of church institutions shall be entitled to seats as deliberative members, but may not vote. Ministers in good standing in any other evangelical church may be introduced to Conference as visiting brethren.

SECTION II ORGANIZATION

1. Conference shall meet on its own adjournment, and be called to order by the President; or, in his absence, by the Vice President. Then shall follow religious exercises.

2. The Secretary (or, in his absence, any one invited to act pro tempore) shall then proceed to read the roll of ministers and churches belonging to Conference, and if a quorum be present the fact shall be announced and the organization completed.

3. A President, Vice-President, Secretary, Assistant Secretary and Treasurer shall then be elected in a manner approved by Conference; after which an appropriate address or sermon should be delivered by the President.

4. All officers shall be elected for a term of one year.

5. Conference shall be governed by such rules as usually govern deliberative assemblies; or it may adopt such rules and regulations as appear best suited to its needs.

SECTION III DUTIES OF OFFICERS

1. The President shall call the Conference to order, sign all the proceedings of Conference, and perform such other duties as his office may require.

2. In the absence of the President, the Vice-President shall perform the duties of the office.

3. The Secretary shall have charge of, and preserve all the books and records of the Conference, attest all its proceedings, and see that they are duly recorded, and do whatever else may be imposed on him by the duties of his office.

4. In the absence of the Secretary the Assistant Secretary shall perform all the duties pertaining to the office.

5. The Treasurer shall have charge of, and safely keep all funds belonging to the Conference, and shall invest, dispose of, or pay out these funds only on order of Conference.

Drastic measures are being taken against the Industrial Workers of the World. It seems that the country must get rid of these I. W. W.'s.

CHRISTIAN HOME TRAINING*

The home is the storm center of God's blessings or curses. All life is in debt to the home. The beginnings of every honored institution have been in the home. Every valued form of activity may be traced to its source within these walls. Here the seed of every bit and kind of human organization has first sprung up into strong life. It is the dearest and most sacred spot on earth, a spot around which cluster the sweetest associations and the most precious memories. The home is the holy of holies of a man's life. There he withdraws from all the world, and, shutting his door is alone with those who are his own. It is the reservoir of his strength, the restorer of his energies, the resting place from his toil, the broadening place for his spirit, the inspiration of all his activities and battles.

The home was the earliest and simplest and yet most perfect form of organization. It is probably no exaggeration to say the world's life has never known such perfection of organization, and such stupendous achievements of organizations, as in our day, and it all grew up out of the home.

Christian Home Training is the most imperative need of our land. Our greatest demand of today is not upon our National Government for a better form of government, or upon our law making bodies for more laws and the enforcement of law, but our most vital need and greatest demand is for Christian training in the home, and of course before a home can give Christian training, it must first of all, itself be Christian, for Christianity begins in the home. If not there it is nowhere. We may attend meetings, and sing hymns and join devoutly in prayer, we may give money to the poor, and send missionaries and Bibles to the heathen, we may organize societies of every description for doing good, we may get up church fairs, and tea-parties and picnics, we may in short, devote all our time and all our means to doing good and yet not be true and earnest Christians as we ought to be after all. Nothing is more important than that our homes, which are as truly divine as is the church, should be saturated with the mind of Christ. The husband and father as well as the wife and mother, should possess the spirit of the Master. It is not enough that one of them have faith. A godless husband may and often does utterly nullify all the efforts of a devout wife, and a godless wife may destroy the wholesome influence of a devout husband. Co-operation is necessary, unity of heart, of hope, of aim, mutual love and companionship. The home is brightened and beautified where the members are living Christians.

Joshua declared, "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord." (Joshua, 24:14). How many parents can speak for their homes as Joshua did for his? The decision had been made in Joshua's house and he did not allow public cares or pleasures to interfere with the duties he owed to his family.

In many so called Christian homes are putrid spots, cankered lives, inflamed wounds, all because Jesus is not enthroned. Jesus is love, and He makes every home lovely where He abides, without a home Himself Christ guards the home life of the world, but if Christ is not allowed to abide in the home it is empty and meaningless.

As we study the Sacred Record we find God has His perfect plan, which if wholly carried out by the parents and children, will bring to each home a Divine benediction and blessedness. "And it shall come to pass if ye shall hearken diligently to love the Lord your God, to serve Him with all your heart and all your soul, that your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children as the days of heaven upon the earth." (Deut. 11:13).

How grand and beautiful that our Heavenly Father should make an adequate provision for just such regulations in this life, placing it within the range of possibilities where the conditions are not on the human side. But we fear comparatively few take the chart of life, God's Holy Word, and go through it from Genesis to Revelation to ascertain the mind and will of God concerning the Heavenly plan for building a home and rearing children. Yet the fundamental principles are clearly defined, "But seek ye first the Kingdom of God, and His righteousness," (character) for each member of the family. This is the bed rock on which to build a beautiful, happy home. Any other foundation than this will fail when the temptations, trials, sorrows and bereavements of life come, as come they will sooner or later. The inspired writer says, "Out of the heart are the issues of life." So out of the homes are the characters of life.

As the home life is, the child life will be with but few exceptions. Make the tree good and the fruit will be good, for the tree is known by its fruit. You may bend the twig but not the tree.

Again, the church life will be as the home life is, and as we look over the church membership we find nearly, if not quite seventy per cent, are women, and the great problem is, how to save the young men. For while we have superb young men in our churches, but alas! the great masses are on the outside, drifting with the tide toward the world. How true is the Spanish proverb, "We sow a thought and reap an act; we sow an act and reap a habit; we sow a habit and reap a character; we sow a character and reap a destiny." This is done in very early life, and many parents, we fear, do not seem to realize that every day they are forming character and fixing destiny for time and eternity. And is there not great cause for alarm, that Christian virtue is being lost when there is no daily recognition of God, no family altar, or teaching of Scripture, in the large majority of Christian homes. About ninety per cent of so called Christian homes have no family prayer and no direct daily teaching out of the "Book of Life."

The Word is the "Lamp" and the Holy Spirit is the "Light" and without the lamp there is no light. Where the "Lamp" has not gone is total heathen darkness and just in proportion as the lamp is hidden or obscured, to that degree do we prevent the Holy Spirit from revealing Jesus as Saviour to the hearts of the children.

Oh! if we ever see the might, power and glory of God we must see it in the Word for on every page is the image of the "Man Christ Jesus." Will the parents follow out the instructions and put the Word in the hearts of their children? (Deut. 4:5; 5:29; 6:4-9; 7:9).

This is among Moses' last inspired utterances to the children of Israel and one of the most pathetic scenes in Old Testament history. He was the "grand old man" of Israel, the great leader, general-in-chief, statesman, law-giver and saint. One hundred and twenty years he had lived and toiled and suffered, yet his eye was not dimmed, nor his natural force abated. Close to heaven, yet never to pass the Jordan into the land of Canaan where his heart had been so long. About to transfer his trust to Joshua, he makes his last appeal to Israel, warning and beseeching them by every appeal that can command the reason, warm the heart, stir the conscience and fortify the will. Oh! how his great heart was stirred as he placed before them the supreme importance and necessity of teaching their children all the Words of God. And who were the teachers? Fathers and mothers. The responsibility rested upon the parents themselves. What was true then is true now. God lays this duty upon the parents and they dare not ignore it. Parents are God's appointed teachers and nothing can take their place in reaching the heart of the child in its formation period. They have the advantage over all other teachers.

The teaching and training should begin at the altar, should develop in the Sunday school, and blossom first in its perfection in the house of God.

The highest accomplishment in this world for usefulness and happiness is to become intimately acquainted with God and his Word. We know that piety cannot sanctify stupidity but we know also that piety glorifies culture. Piety without culture is robbed of her highest influence for good, and culture without piety is stripped of her noblest charm.

Having clearly seen the Divine arrangements for the home, let us ascertain His mind for the building up of the Church. And now I shall make a startling statement, but alas too true, namely: that the majority of Christian parents are by actual experience training their children directly away from the house of God. Listen, parents, God says, "Those that he planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God." They shall bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing (Psalm 92:13-14). We do not plant old trees, we plant the young. And God means that children while young shall be "planted" and trained up in the sanctuary. Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it. (Prov. 22:6).

It is recorded of Jesus, the great Teacher, that "He went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day as was His custom." Indeed many children of Christian parents scarcely ever hear the gospel preached from one end of the year to another. They attend the Sunday school but not the church service. This is the most important period of the child's life, when habits are fixed and character formed. Oh! if there is one word that needs to be written in letters of fire over every door, if it were possible, it is the word "Habit." What is the habit of your children? Is it to attend the sanctuary on the Lord's Day? Or is it simply to go to Sunday school and then to stay away from church services? The latter is lamentably true. And especially if not early brought to Jesus and held to the church when the dangerous period of life comes. Along from fifteen, or earlier, to twenty years of age, they usually feel too big to go to Sabbath school and in their opinion have graduated from it, and as they have never cultivated the habit of going to church, it was not in the warp and woof and make-up of their being, so they are out of Sunday school and church too.

What a beautiful sight to see a whole family on the Lord's day regularly attend church and participate in Divine Worship. Oh! that God's plan might be carried out to insure His blessing on home and church, likewise the Nation; for as the home life and church is, the National will be. For the Christian homes of the Nation are the strongest forts. Undermine these homes and our Nation becomes a stranded hulk.

We look to the Christian homes to send out honest, sturdy Christian men to battle with National problems. "For righteousness exalteth a Nation, but sin is a reproach to any people." Goethe, the universal genius of Germany, and one of its greatest authors, says, "The destiny of any Nation at any one time is determined by the sentiment of the young men of that time." What is the sentiment of the young men of our time? If the Christian is taken as a standard of judgment, the young men are left out as factors, as the great multitude are drifting away from Christian virtue. If our young men are the hope of the Church and Nation, then the appalling fact stares us in the face, viz.: that not over ten per cent from sixteen to thirty-five years of age are members of our churches. Twenty per cent more occasionally attend, but some seventy per cent scarcely ever cross a church door,

A weakened home means a weakened people. It should be keenly noted that nothing else, absolutely nothing else, can take its place. A weakened home means a weakened church, a weakened Nation. It puts a greater task upon the educational institutions, and yet, however strong and able, these can never do the home's work. A father and mother living together with their children, tender in their love, pure in their lives, strong in their convictions, simple and orderly in their habits, do infinitely more than presidents and governors, legislators, educators and clergymen can do in making a strong Nation.

Susan Ann Wesley was mother of 19 children and she held them all for the church and for God. When asked how she did it, she replied, "I got a hold of their hearts when they were young, and I have never lost my grip."

Train up the children to love the Word of God, church and their God, and when they are old they will not depart from it.

*Address delivered before the North Carolina Conference, November 11, 1919, by Rev. W. L. Wells, and printed by request of that body.

GETTING SERMONS DOWN

Dr. Staley makes the remark that most ministers talk about getting sermons "up" when they should say getting them "down." He means that a minister should get his sermon from the Father's house; should pray it down, and not work it up. We commend the thought.

Rev. O. D. Poythress, the aggressive and energetic pastor of our South Norfolk church, writes this favorable note: "Many of us feel that this is the opportune time to build a suitable and ample church at South Norfolk. Our congregations have outgrown the capacity of the present building which is quite inadequate for present purposes, to say nothing of future prospects. Our membership here favors building and we should begin to do so at no far distant date." The growth of this work since Brother Poythress went to South Norfolk has been remarkable. Col. J. E. West, Chairman of the Home Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention, declares that the church was at a very low ebb when he urged Brother Poythress to go from Elon College to take up the work there. The prospects for a great church in South Norfolk are brightening with the passing years and we believe it will not be long before this congregation will rise and build in a way and manner becoming their increasing numbers and opportunities.

Rev. H. W. Dowding, Pastor of the Washington Street Christian church, Portsmouth, Virginia, writes November 14: "We are in the midst of a great meeting with church and Sunday school rooms crowded most of the time and a deep spiritual interest in church and community. I believe that God has a great awakening in store for us as the meetings progress." The Portsmouth church is progressive and is doing great things and in this we rejoice.

We are compelled to leave out many items of personal mention this week due to so much matter on hand.

THE ANNUAL PROTEST

Huh! What? Vacation's over with,
 I got to find my books?
 W'y, ma—w'y, me an' Willie Smith
 Just got some more fish hooks!
 W'y, we'd made up to catch that bass
 Down in the willer pool!
 I don't care who will head my class—
 Aw
 Pshaw,
 Ma!
 I don't wan' tuh go tuh school!

I'll bet th' teacher will be mean;
 I know just what she'll do—
 She'll say my han's an' face ain't clean
 An' make me wash 'em, too!
 I'd heap ruther not go.
 I'll not grow up a fool!
 Aw, shucks! A boy don't have no show,
 Aw
 Pshaw,
 Ma!
 I don't wan' tuh go tuh school!

What? Got to carry all them books?
 They're awful heavy, ma.
 I'm sick! You'd know it by my looks.
 I don't care! Just tell pa!
 I don't want to be a president—
 Ain't stubborn as a mule!
 You'll whyp me! I don't care a cent.
 Aw

WHY THEY CALL IT PIN MONEY

This expression originally came from the allowance which a husband gave his wife to purchase pins. At one time pins were dreadfully expensive, so that only wealthy people could afford them, and they were saved so carefully that in those days you could not have looked along the pavement and found a pin which you happened to be in need of, as you can and often do today.

By a curious law the manufacturers of pins were allowed to sell them only on January 1 and 2 each year, and so when those days came around the women whose husbands could afford it secured pin money from them and went out and got their pins.

Pins have become so very cheap in these days that we are rather careless with them, but the expression has continued to live, although today when used it means any allowance of money which a husband gives a wife for her personal expenses.

Pins were known and used as long ago as 1347 A.D. They were introduced into England in 1540. In 1824 an American named Might invented a machine for making pins which enabled them to be manufactured cheaply. About 1,500 tons of iron and brass are made in 10 pins every year in the United States.—From "The Book of Wonders." A VERY GOOD GOOSE Geese are always thought to be very stupid creatures, but perhaps they are so because they never had the chance of going to school!

There are some geese that have been taught to do things, however, and they do those things in a very clever way, so that makes me think that if every goose had the chance of going to school no one would call geese stupid any more.

Just to show you how clever a goose can be, I will tell you a story of one that lived in France. Every Sunday, when an old blind woman wanted to go to church, the goose took hold of her dress in his beak and pulled her gently along the road to the door of the church. Then, when the old woman was inside, the goose spent the time in strolling about the churchyard. But when the church service was over the goose was always waiting at the door until the woman came to be taken back.

Once a gentleman said to the old woman's daughter: "Aren't you afraid to let your mother come alone?" "O no, sir," said the daughter; "we are not afraid, as the goose is with her."—Exchange.

SUN readers will rejoice to learn that the pastor, Rev. A. B. Kendall, D. D., has begun active work in Washington and is busy there now getting together members and friends of the Christian Church whom he hopes to organize into a band of workers and into a Christian church at an early date. The present program is to occupy a rented hall in a district until location can be decided upon and a temporary building prepared. If there are SUN readers who know of members of the Christian Church, past, present, or prospective, in Washington, D. C., will they not kindly send their names to Rev. A. B. Kendall, D. D., 801 Allison Street, Washington, D. C.?

Senator Martin, of Virginia, died November 12. Carter Glass, now Secretary of the Treasury, will succeed the late Senator.

Congress has decided to limit the debate of the Peace Treaty and try to do something with the measure at an early date. Article X, it seems has been eliminated. This takes the heart out of the treaty, according to President Wilson.

The coal strike is still unsettled, both sides being hopeful for victory.

Bodies of some of the American boys who died in France are now reaching this country.

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR
NOVEMBER 30, 1919

(Mrs. Fred Bullock)

Jesus Teaches Peter True Greatness. John 13:5-16, 36-38.

Golden Text: The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life for a ransom for many.—Matt. 20:28.

Additional Material: Matt. 20:20-28; 26:31-35; Mark 14:27-31; Luke 22:7-34.

For teaching points, see Teachers and Officers Journal.

We see in this lesson, "Jesus taking the part of a servant" (Junior Topic) that He might show to us "The Dignity of Common Tasks" (Intermediate).

It is so hard for us to realize that there is real dignity in the common tasks of every day. We think if we had some big, outstanding talent, if we were rich, or great, or learned, we would be able to do great things for God. But Jesus taught greatness through little things; the grain of wheat, the mustard seed, the measure of meal, the one lost coin or lost sheep, and in this lesson, through the faithful performance of a lowly, menial duty. Longfellow tells us in a poem of a monk praying in his cell, who is rewarded by a vision of an angel. Even as he gazes in adoration, the ringing of the Convent bell reminds him that it is time for the daily dole to the poor, and it is his hand that must attend to their needs. Torn between desire and duty, he yet obeys the call of duty, and, leaving the angel, goes to his task. His joy is better imagined than described when, on his return, he finds the angel still awaiting him. "Hadst thou stayed I must have fled," says the angel, smiling at him as he once more kneels in prayer.

No matter how simple the task, if it be done "as unto the Lord", it is done right. "Who sweeps a room as unto the Lord, makes that and the action fine." God called carpenters and artisans and filled them with His spirit in order that the temple might be built. The forty thousands fighting men who "were not of doubt hearts" and who could "keep rank" won the throne for David. These are what God asks of His workmen, spirit filled men and women, who, with singleness of purpose, keep rank in the mighty army of God. It is these alone who are truly great, and they are great, no matter what their seeming station in life may be.

TEACHER TRAINING

Have you planned for your Teacher Training Class as yet? I hope so. The Sunday School Board of the Christian Church has approved the Pilgrim Training Course for Teachers, and we are hoping that many new classes will be started during the year. Do not get old books if you are starting a new class. This is the reason: If you study Oliver's, Hurlbut's, or any of the old books, you can, it is true, secure a certificate for your one year of work, but you are not going to be content with one year of training. You will want to go on, and complete your three year course, which will alone entitle you to a diploma. certificate given for work with the old books will not apply toward a diploma. If your class feels as some do, that they are not getting enough Bible study. Then secure some good Bible outline work, and take fifteen minutes for Bible drill work prior to your regular lesson. But take a course of study that can be applied toward a diploma, and plan to eventually finish the three years of work, with its one year of specialization for the department in which your service is given.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR
NOVEMBER 30, 1919

(J. Vincent Knight)

Christianity and the Health of America. Missionary Lesson. (Ezek. 47:1-12).

Three main essentials to a successful life are: A strong body, an alert mind, and a fat soul. Healthy bodies and clear minds are impossible without a healthy soul. If the soul is sick, the other two members will sympathize with it, and the result will be a life whose best energy and influence is forever hampered. The world about us is sick. It is looking toward America for a physician. Our country must furnish the cure for the ails of the world, but how can we do it unless we use the Sanitation laws—the laws against crime, diseases of a contagious nature, and the healing resources we have at our command?

One great disease in our country that demands attention is that of "Morbus Sabbaticus." Sunday sickness. It is peculiar. Those who are afflicted with it have it only on the Sabbath—they never call in a physician, nor a nurse. They are well all other days, and do not even confine themselves in bed, but go to work on Monday. It is dreadful in its results for it destroys the soul. Christianity is the only application needed, for Christ is the one and only Physician. Our Christian Endeavors need to watch this disease, and to fear its results for the world is dying for the great healing power of Christ, and we should always be on the alert—ready to help carry the Gospel of power to those who are ill, and need the cleansing power.

November is mission study month. Have you a missionary study class in your Christian Endeavor, Sunday school, or church? If not, get busy and organize one. If your church or school has one, get every member of your society to join.

MARRIAGES

HESTER-WYATT

Miss Daisy Wyatt became the bride of Mr. Willie Lee Hester on November 12, 1919, at the home of Rev. J. W. Holt. They went from the Christian Conference in session at Burlington, and, in the presence of a few invited friends, solemnly assumed the vows that linked them together in holy wedlock. The writer performed the ceremony.

J. W. HOLT.

REED-KERNODLE

Mr. William Lacy Reed and Miss Margaret Jane Kernodle, Altamahaw, N. C., were married at the home of Rev. J. W. Holt on the evening of November 12, 1919. Only a few friends were present to witness the ceremony. The writer officiated.

J. W. HOLT.

OBITUARIES

HORN

Mr. John Robert Horn departed this life at his home, Zuni, Va., on October 24, 1919, aged sixty-nine years, five months and nine days. He was a good man and will be greatly missed in his home and community. He was true and faithful in the duties of life and had many friends. We have sustained a great loss in his death, but our loss, we trust, has been his eternal gain. He was the father of Mr. Robert A. Horn, President of the Bank of Zuni, Va. He leaves one son and two daughters: Mr. Robert A. Home, Mrs. J. M. Clayton and Miss Mattie Horn of Zuni, Va., two brothers: Mr. George W., and Mr. J. H. Horn of Ivor, Va., three sisters: Mrs. John R. Edwards, Mrs. J. T. Johnson and Mrs. Charlie Freeman, and a host of friends.

His funeral services were conducted by the writer, at his home and his remains were laid to rest in the old family cemetery.

H. H. BUTLER.

ELLIS

T. J. Ellis died at his home, Nurney, Va., October 26, 1919, aged sixty-six years, nine months and eighteen days. He was a most excellent Christian man, a true and faithful member of Cypress Chapel Christian church and will be missed in his home, community and church. He leaves a devoted wife and twelve children, eight daughters and four sons. Several grandchildren and a host of friends also survive him. His funeral services were conducted by the writer at his home, assisted by Rev. J. M. Roberts, Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., and his remains were laid to rest in the old family cemetery.

God bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER.

MARSHALL

One of the saddest funerals of my ministry was held at Salem Chapel church Sunday, November 9, when the remains of Miss Julia Victoria Marshall were laid to rest. The deceased was a beautiful young woman—possessed of many attractive charms, and a strong winning personality that won for her hundreds of friends who taxed the standing room of the house and yard to attend her funeral.

Miss Julia was a girl of rare ability, and whose life was marked by its deeds of kindness and service to others. She sacrificed her pleasure to make her Sunday school and church a success. She had planned to go to the Orphanage at Elon College to teach and assist Superintendent Johnston in the work there, but her illness on the first of September prevented. She was never well again, but "All is well now." Previous to her illness, she had requested her sister, Miss Lena, who is soloist for the Centenary M. E. Church, Winston, to sing, "In That Beautiful Land," at her funeral if she died first. Her request was granted, and I doubt if the soloist ever sang sweeter than she did at her sister's funeral.

Julia has gone to rest. She passed at the age of 22 years. She leaves behind: her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Marshall; four sisters, Selma and Lena of Winston-Salem; Frances and Hadie, who remain in the home; three brothers, Allen of Winston-Salem; James and Edward who are in the home, and a great host of friends who will sorely miss her.

The funeral services were held in the Salem Chapel church, near Walnut Cove, N. C. by the writer, assisted by Rev. C. H. Kegerise, of Winston-Salem, using for the occasion the words of Job who said: "My purposes are broken off," for such was true with Julia. God bless the sorrowing relatives.

J. V. KNIGHT.

FRAZIER

James K. P. Frazier was born October 19, 1849 and died at his home near Elkton, October 11, 1919, at the age of 69 years, 11 months, and 22 days. He was a man of happy disposition, a good neighbor, and a kind husband and father. He leaves to mourn his departure a widow, seven children, all grown to manhood and womanhood, one brother, and one sister.

Funeral services were held at the home, October 13, 1919, and the remains laid to rest in the cemetery at East Point.

A. W. ANDES.

FULTZ

Mrs. Virginia F. Fultz was born October 17, 1854, and died November 1, 1919, making her age, therefore, 65 years and 15 days. She was the wife of Lemuel Fultz and lived near Edinburg. She is survived by her husband and many other relatives and friends. Mrs. Fultz was held in high esteem by all who knew her and will be greatly missed in her neighborhood. She was a woman of splendid character, kind-hearted, and industrious. Her death breaks up a pleasant home, and leaves a vacancy there that could not well be filled. The funeral service was held at the United Brethren church at Hawkinstown, November 3, and the remains laid to rest in the adjoining cemetery. A large congregation attended the service, thus paying a tribute of respect to a departed friend and loved one.

A. W. ANDES.

CAMP RUFFIN, UNITED CONFEDERATE VETERANS

James A. Turrentine

Nature has again issued her final decree in equity. The Master Builder has invaded our field of civic righteousness and taken unto himself a knightly, gentle, saintly soul—James A. Turrentine is dead.

This entire community reverently paused in its varied activities and paid its tribute of respect, and affection for the fallen hero, distinguished citizen, and Christian leader. Camp Ruffin, United Confederate Veterans, cannot write a canotaph that will be as beautiful and as enduring as has already been written in the hearts of all who knew Captain Turrentine, and his consecrated Christian life.

He was a soldier as we were. Was as gallant, as dashing, and courageous as the bravest. His loyalty to the Confederacy was consistent beyond doubt or criticism. After we had lost, the true test of his citizenship was exemplified in, his devotion to another flag than the love of his young manhood. His heart was too tender, and his hands were too open for large accumulation; but his influence, in his daily walk and conversation, on the people with whom he came in contact, and through them on the community at large, was far more exceeding value than all the fine gold.

Camp Ruffin reverently bows in humble submission in its great grief at his taking away.

W. A. HALL,
Adg't.

SIMPSON

B. L. Simpson, son of Lemuel Simpson, was born September 30, 1855 and died November 9, 1919, aged sixty-four years, one month and ten days. He was married to Huldah B. Iseley on May 5, 1877. To this union were born six children—three boys and three girls. Two preceded him to the great beyond. The widow and four children survive; also five grandchildren, five brothers, and one sister. Funeral services were conducted by the writer at Bethlehem Christian church. May the Lord comfort the bereaved.

Reason For Weeping

The young Shah of Persia is fond of telling the following story concerning his great grandfather, the famous Nasr-ed-Din.

In his old age this ruler lost his good looks—a fact which troubled him greatly.

One day he studied his features in a glass attentively for some time and then dismayed by his ugliness, began to weep.

At once the Court Fool began weeping also, and even when, after lamenting for two whole hours, the Shah dried his tears the Fool continued weeping more violently than ever.

Nasr-ed-Din looked at him in astonishment, and asked him the cause of his sorrow.

"I wept with reason," he said, "at beholding my ugliness—I, the Lord of so many lands, the master of countless slaves. But I do not understand why you should thus despair."

"If you, my Lord," replied the Fool, "wept for two hours after seeing yourself in the mirror for but an instant, is it not natural that I, who see you all day long, should weep longer than you?"—Selected.

Take Note

The following points should be taken into consideration in placing an order for church offering envelopes:

1. A set means 52 envelopes, one for each Sunday in the year.
2. When cartons are ordered the sets are arranged in their logical order, thus making it convenient for the member. We suggest the use of cartons because of the convenience.
3. If you desire monthly, double or single envelopes, without cartons, 1-3 the price of the same number of weekly sets. Cartons 3-4 cent each.
4. Semi-monthly, double or single, in cartons, 2-3 the weekly price; without cartons 3-5 the weekly price.

5. When ordering state what Sunday that your church year begins, and whether you want the dates on envelopes or not.

6. Indicate the wording that you want placed on the envelopes or leave it the same with us. Samples sent upon request.

7. Allow ten to fifteen days for delivery. Order early.

"Money is"

MONEY is influence; it is power; it stands for toil and sacrifice; it is the blood of toilers changed into the permanent coin of the commonwealth. It has cursed some people, it has blessed others. But when we shall learn its Christian use, the curse will pass away. It will no longer be "filthy lucre," but a sacred instrument which may exact the soul of its possessor, increase the happiness of mankind and extend the kingdom of God on earth.—The Christian Evangelist.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

CHURCH JOURNALISM IN THE NEW ERA*

HERE is no getting by the question that the Church is face to face with new issues, being born with new ideals and must greatly enlarge her program to meet the demands of the day and rightly function in carrying a gospel message.

Church journalism is definitely ministerial, and were it not, I could not consent to have my lot cast there and hold to my present conviction. Just as other parts and programs of the Church have had to be revised and must be revised, so must Church Journalism. The primary object of a Church paper was to give news and too long has Church Journalism been bound to tradition by that primeval idea. There was a time when the primary object of a Church paper was to give news, but not so today. The weekly newspaper established in every hamlet and city, and sandwiched with the daily press until the reading public no longer depends upon the Church paper for a medium of news. Then there must be a definite function for the Church paper aside from giving news. The Church paper is pioneer in the field of education. It is a watchman set upon a hill who should see far and wide and hear from a distance on every side. The Church paper is constantly hearing that call "Watchman, what of the night?", and it is difficult to interpret for the people the signs of the times. Church Journalism in this new era of ours must strike, and will strike, a new chord. It is ridding itself of traditions of being merely a newspaper and must be the bulletin board for the whole Church. It must be a place, a public forum as it were, where the vital issues of the Church are laid bare for the consideration of every member and the world at large. The editorial task of every man who stands at the tripod of the Church paper is becoming more complicated. The editor must be misunderstood at times because the questions that he is called upon to present to the people are not always settled questions. They are questions that need debating, need careful and prayerful consideration. Church Journalism in this new era of ours stands to evoke thought and not to stir up controversy. The day has passed when argument for argument's sake can be admitted to the sacred columns of the Church publications. The editor, therefore, must guard the sacredness of his columns as the minister guards the sacredness of his pulpit. With thousands of publicity bureaus in all parts of the world endeavoring by mighty strides to foster their own interests, the editor finds his mail flooded with pleas, requests, and canned editorials. To personify the situation may I say that never in the history of Church Journalism are there so many mysterious creatures that come hopping along on the editorial table. I challenge the man to say that the censorship of this conglomeration is not a difficult task.

The official organ of the Church, or a group of any Church, must in this quickened age be larger than that Church or a group of that Church. I mean by this that when the message in the columns of a Church paper extend no farther than the borders of the denomination represented by that paper, the constituency of that publication will never know anything save narrowness and littleness and stinginess. They will never know the bigness of the Kingdom's work, or the greatness and the vastness of the Master's program. Not only must a Church paper be bigger than its own denomination, but it must be bigger than any man or set of men. No editor can afford in a time like this to let the mind of a few men rule him, if indeed the heart and mind of that editor is set on the Kingdom's interest. Narrowness not only defeats its own purpose but breeds autocracy, a sample of which this world has sufficiently tasted.

A Church paper is first and last missionary. It spreads the glad tidings of the Kingdom. Advertising goodness is a part of the mission of the Church paper. The letters of Paul constituted a form of early Church journalism. They conveyed religious inspiration, set forth reports and plans and defended the teachings of the early Church. Church journalism is not only missionary in the field of Christian activity but it is missionary in social and economical conditions. It transmits plans and purposes of peoples to every part of the globe. It wings its way to every clime, and wherever the seed of the Church paper is sown the spirit of the Church will rise up to save and to satisfy.

There was once an idea that the Church paper must be a medium of advertising as well as giving news. I challenge the idea by calling upon the Church to show wherein that the object of the Church paper is to make money. And if the Church paper is not destined to make money I question the wisdom of selling space when it should be conserved for a larger program of the Church. I met the editor of a secular paper on the street the other day and he told me that he has been severely criticised by a minister of his town because his paper had admitted to its columns the advertising of a carnival. The editor said that his one and only reply was this: "The space in my paper is open to you, to your church and to the Church at large. It is open without price and yet you have not availed yourself of this opportunity. How then can you criticise me for giving space in exchange for money when you could have received it free?" I emphatically say that it is a stigma upon any denomination that prefers to use the columns of its paper for commercial advertising rather than advertising for the Kingdom. There are thousands of men who share this thought with me, and yet they are at the head of papers filled with advertising. Why? Only because the Churches represented through and by these publications have not awakened from their primeval slumber. When all of the interests of the Kingdom have been sufficiently carried forward and need no longer to be carried before the people, then and not until then does the Church paper have space to sell to commercial advertising.

I do not mean by these statements that some advertising is not all right. Advertisements of church bells, pews, communion sets and modern equipments for the Lord's house are all right. I am referring to the general plan of getting any kind of advertising available to make money.

Church Journalism in this new era of ours cannot go forth on its new mission on the same kind of support that it received in the days gone by; and I am happy to say that there is a new sense of appreciation prevailing in all parts for the Church paper on the same ground as they do their obligation to their pastor because the Church paper is his assistant, and I ought to say in some cases the pastor is the assistant to the Church paper. I make this last statement because the pastor in many communities makes at his best twelve visits a year and the Church paper fifty-two.

In our own Church I see a new vision for our publications. I feel a new thrill. There is to my mind the finest spirit of co-operation. We are pulling for one purpose and toward one goal. The circulation of our Church papers is steadily and gradually growing. The people are co-operating beautifully. I express the appreciation for this not only in behalf of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, but in behalf of The Herald of Gospel Liberty and The Christian Missionary, as well as other publications of our denomination. The destiny of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, as well as other publications of our Church, rests with you. A paper is not its files and forms, its office and its equipment. A Church paper is an ideal worked into a visible form. The spirit of THE CHRISTIAN SUN cannot be destroyed with flames nor washed away with sweeping flood. Its every page so far printed could be obliterated, but in your heart and in mine there is that living ideal built up week by week; that ideal that shall live, and without copy or precedent a new paper in mechanical form could spring up but in its final analysis it would be THE CHRISTIAN SUN, born of a need and often issued under struggle and strain. There would still be with it the spirit of Daniel W. Kerr, the founder of our paper, and the pioneer of religious journalism in the Southern Christian Convention. Blessed be his memory. "Long live THE CHRISTIAN," for I quote these words from thousands of letters that come pouring into my little sanctum, where I am endeavoring to serve you and the Kingdom through the tasks you have placed upon my shoulders, which tasks I could not perform were it not for my Heavenly Father and for the prayers that go up from your hearts and your homes.

We have had a good year so far as THE CHRISTIAN SUN is concerned. We are pleased with the co-operation that we have had. We appreciate it more than words can tell. The year is drawing to a close and we want to round out 1919 with the biggest and best financial showing that we have ever had. Friends have responded to statements in a very loyal and liberal manner. There are a few, however, that have not given heed to past due subscriptions. Will you, if you are one of these, look after the matter today? We need the money and need it now. It has been neglected because you have not renewed. You have not meant to do it, but just kept putting it off. Don't put it off longer, dear reader, if you are behind, but remit today. We thank you in advance.

Third church, Norfolk, is going forward. Brother Smith writes of the work there: "Things are moving in great shape at Third church. Sunday a week ago was Rally Day; had 502 present for Sunday school. Daniel Poling spoke for us. Church was well filled for the evening service. I gave the first sermon in the series on 'The Ideal American Home.' There will be five in the series. Last Sunday we had about 370 for Sunday school and the Church was completely filled for the evening service. Our church, since it has been enlarged, will seat 512. We have that many seats. We are trying to get things ready for the Sunday Evangelistic Campaign which begins January 4, 1920."

We understand that Rev. J. E. Franks is to take up the prospective work at Lucama and West Clayton, N. C.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

AN APPRECIATION FROM AN OLD VETERAN

I am an aged Confederate Veteran and was seventy-five years old on October 29, 1919. I served nearly four years in the army and never missed a roll call except when on duty; never was put in the guard house or never had a furlough, though I had two chances for furloughs but each time yielded to a comrade who had a family at home that he was anxious to see.

I have been a soldier of the Cross for fifty-two years. I love to read THE CHRISTIAN SUN and keep in touch with what my Church is doing for the Kingdom. THE SUN comes to my house through the kindness of my family physician, Dr. Job G. Holland.

Through the columns of THE SUN I wish to thank my friends who have been so kind to me during the period of my helplessness. They have visited me and ministered unto me in temporal and spiritual things. The Sunday school class of juniors taught by Mrs. Dr. Holland have visited me on various occasions and brought happiness and sunshine into our home by their little songs, and prayers and the errands they have done for me.

The prayer meetings held by friends and the visits of my pastor are a great delight to me.

My affliction is the result of a fall which broke my leg and hip and put my knee out of joint. It has made me practically an invalid on crutches, getting away from home only as friends come and take me.

My faithful wife, now aged and infirm also, is a dutiful companion and we together appreciate very much these kindness shown by our friends.

It is my desire to be able to attend the dedication of my church at Holland on the second Sunday of December.

OLD AGE AND LIFE

An Appreciation of Drs. Wellons and Staley

Why grow old, grouchy and indifferent in this life? God has given us the best world He could make for us; has given us a happy existence, and a glorious environment, which makes it possible for us to be happy if we only use the things He gives to us. Yet, with all the good things God has given us, we can look on the dark side of life until we rob it of its best joy and most noble thoughts of human betterment, and in so doing make it one round of worries after another. In other words, it is our privilege to make it a torment or a paradise.

As I write these lines I am thinking of the many young men who are giving their lives to the ministry. We are creatures of habit, and likely to pattern after some man who is a hero in our eyes, and I see nothing wrong in that, provided we follow the lives of the very best men on the field, and let the great pattern be Jesus Christ.

I am thinking of two men who were in the recent session of the North Carolina Conference. I have no apology to offer for this note, for I know no man or men whom I admire more. They were Dr. W. W. Staley and Dr. J. W. Wellons. Both are growing young. They were present during the whole session, and the thing I am trying to say is this: I watched them, and every forward step the Conference proposed, these men were among the very first to express themselves in favor of it, and in every speech I heard them make they were looking forward to something greater, bigger, and better than ever before.

It is nothing less than wonderful to be growing old in years, and young in life and service. It seemed to me that the lives of these men are so absorbed in the affairs of the Kingdom, that they have forgotten self. And the best interest of the Church is the one vital thing in their lives, and that thing keeps them young. God bless and spare them for many more years of efficient service in His Kingdom, and may the sessions of many more such gatherings be graced with their timely counsel, prayers and presence.

POUNDED AGAIN

We have read of different great and good poundings of the various pastors, but I believe I have them all beat. Did you ever hear of a single church giving its pastor two poundings within two months?

On Saturday night before the first Sunday in October a number of the membership of Park's Cross Roads church gave us a rich pounding which I gave account of sometime ago. On last Saturday, November 22, a number of members of the same church did the same thing. It happened so they could not get here at the first but said their time would be next. Well, it was fine that it happened that way because there was so much that we could not have taken care of it at one time. Well, they brought us, last Saturday night, two pounds of butter, several pounds of sausage, one dozen eggs, several cans of fruit, pepper, soda, baking powder, pop-corn, peanuts, jelly, cakes, one chicken, and a large quantity each of sweet potatoes, Irish potatoes, corn wheat and six dollars in money. Just think of that? Who can beat this? God bless these good people. Thanks to one and all.

BUGLARS (?) ENTER PARSONAGE AT NORFOLK

Last Monday evening while Mrs. Morgan and I were quietly resting in the beautiful home which our church has provided for us, we were aroused by a knock at our door. Mrs. Morgan arose, and started to the door to let the company in. The company, however, did not wait for her to open the door, but came in the house without permission. The first one that came in was little Cecil Mercer in the arms of his brother, Ashburn. Of course I had to greet this fine youngster, and when I lifted my eyes from him, I beheld Master Maxwell Jones with a half bushel of sweet potatoes. I looked again and behold the hall was full, and the parlor door was opened, and in less time than it takes to tell it our home was full of good friends who had their arms full of good things to eat for the pastor and his wife. Then Mrs.

Morgan and I realized that we were in the hands of our friends who had come to pound us. It was a great sight. In the audience were members of our Cradle Roll, members of our Junior Christian Endeavor Society, members of our choir, Official Board, Young People's Auxiliary, Ladies' Aid, Sunday school, Missionary Society, Board of Deacons, yea of every organization of our church. There were more than fifty of these good people who came to pound their pastor and his wife, and the only thing we could do was to surrender, and for the time being let them take charge of the home. They brought us everything that was good to eat. There were more than forty different kinds of articles, such as Old Virginia ham, flower, sugar, and so many other things that we will not take the space to mention.

Mrs. Morgan and I tried to tell these good friends, and members of our church, how much we appreciated their great favor, but we could not, for lack of words to express the great appreciation of our hearts. We will try to be more faithful in our service for our Master, however, and in this way continue to let the good members, and friends of the First Christian church know how much we do appreciate the great favors they confer upon us.

May the blessings of our Heavenly Father rest upon all these good friends of our prayer.

MR. & MRS. J. F. MORGAN.

A THANKSGIVING POUNDING

The members and friends of Youngsville Christian church again manifested their love and sympathy for their pastor on Sunday, November 23, by giving him a "Thanksgiving pounding." Among the different things contributed, were: Coffee, butter, hominy grits, jelly, salt, soda, soap; and such canned goods as pineapple, corn, beans, and tomatoes; also sweet potatoes, a fine chicken, and fourteen and one-half dollars in money. Several of the brethren said they thought their pastor could carry the "cash" home with him on the trains more easily than he could flour, and such articles. Two weeks before this, Mrs. J. L. Brown gave her husband's pastor two very pretty young chickens.

For all of these things, the humble pastor and his family are indeed grateful to the dear people for giving them; and to our Heavenly Father for prompting the giving.

We are also very grateful to our Wake Chapel friends for so kindly remembering us, as they have ever since we have been living at Varina, with such things as potatoes, turnips, butter, chickens, sugar, flour, and other good things to eat.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

PASTORLESS CHURCHES

Three churches failed to report to the North Carolina Christian Conference: Center Grove, Goshen Chapel, and Keyser. Immediately upon adjournment of Conference I wrote to these three churches, but they paid no attention to my request for information.

Also immediately after Conference I wrote to every minister whose field of labor I was not acquainted with to let me know what churches he would serve next year. Our Annual ought to show the pastor for the coming year in the Statistical Table, as it does the pastor of the past year in the "Abstract of Ministerial Reports." The Church Letter, however, does not ask this question. When it is revised, it ought to do so. It is therefore necessary for the Secretary to get this information from the ministers.

The following churches have not been reported so far as having pastors: Antioch (R), Asheboro, Center Grove, Christian Union, Danville, (Va.), Goshen Chapel, Hanks' Chapel, Hopedale, Keyser, Martha's Chapel, Moore Union, Morrisville, Mt. Pleasant, O'Keely's Chapel, Pleasant Grove (N. C.), Pleasant Ridge (R), Pleasant Union (R), and Spoon's Chapel, 18 in all. If any of these churches has a pastor, I would like to know it at once. The Annual has already gone to press, but I will try to get the information in the proof. I have also written these churches direct for the information necessary for an accurate Annual.

The following ministers have not answered my letter: L. W. Fogleman, W. N. Hayes, B. J. Howard, P. T. Klapp, G. R. Underwood, W. C. Martin, D. T. McKinney. I wish they would write me at once, and if any minister who has already reported makes a change in his work, I wish too he would notify me at once.

It is true that both churches and ministers in the Christian Church are free to neglect such matters, but when they do our records are necessarily incomplete.

We face what purports to be a good new year. Let us labor and pray that it may result in decided advancement in all lines of Christian progress.

W. A. HARPER,
Sec. N. C. Conference.

SUFFOLK LETTER

On Sunday, November 23, 1919, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Darden, Mrs. W. H. Andrews and Mrs. I. W. Johnson, all of Suffolk, went to Antioch church of which Rev. H. H. Butler is pastor, where Mrs. Andrews organized a Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society; Antioch is her girlhood church.

Immediately after their Sunday school Superintendent Elisha Bradshaw made an interesting introductory address, expressing how glad he was that Antioch was about to line up in the Missionary work. Mrs. Andrews presided, and made a talk, telling how glad she was to be at her old church to help them organize a Missionary Society. She took her Scripture lesson from texts that explain what the initial letters of the Society mean. With a prepared chart, she explained the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society as follows:

W—Wholly Consecrated, I Tim. 4:11-16.

H—Hearers and Doers, James 1:22.

F—Fruitful Workers, Gal. 1:10.

M—Messengers of Good News, John 20:21.

S—Students of Missions, II Tim. 2:15.

Then she asked:

"As individuals, can we measure up to the standard of our letters? We certainly can, and if we will our goals will be reached. God helping us, we will."

Mrs. Andrews, also, referred to the fact that Rev. D. P. Barrett, our Missionary in Porto Rico, went from Antioch. Then Mrs. J. M. Darden sang: "Down in Porto Rico," which was written by Dr. J. P. Barrett, and Mr. Darden led in a feeling prayer.

Mrs. I. W. Johnson explained the financial obligation of Christians to Kingdom interest, after which Mrs. Darden sang: "There is a Green Hill."

Mr. Darden made an address explaining the Washington City work in a growing section of the capitol of our nation. Mr. Darden went with Dr. J. O. Atkinson to make the survey of that field and could give a full explanation of the work.

Names were then taken for membership, and twenty-eight women and twenty-two men and boys were enrolled, making the charter membership fifty. The following officers were elected:

Mrs. Dana Saunders, President; Mrs. W. C. Andrews, Vice-President; Mrs. R. O. Butler, Recording Secretary; Mrs. William Garrison, Treasurer; Mrs. Cleo Clements, Organist.

It was a great day at "Old Antioch" and not a "preaching day." Nobody dreamed when Janie Marshall, as a little country girl, professed religion and united with Antioch, that she would return some day, with such well-chosen helpers as Mr. and Mrs. Darden and Mrs. Johnson, and organize a great Missionary Society; but she did; and all of them came back to Suffolk happy because they had done a good day's work for the Master. "If ye know these things, happy are ye, if ye do them."

This is not all the good work done since the Annual Conference at Waverly. On the first Sunday after Conference, a Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary was organized at Oakland church, of which Dr. I. W. Johnson is pastor, with a membership of twenty-two women and seventeen men, a total charter membership of thirty-nine.

Then, on the second Sunday after Conference, a Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society was organized at Bethlehem church, of which Rev. E. T. Cotten is pastor, with seventeen charter members. Thus the good work among the women grows while the older Societies continue their work with increased efficiency and zeal. The women grow with their work, and one may doubt whether a Christian can grow without work for the Lord.

W. W. STALEY.

SPECIAL EDITORIAL NOTE

After going to press with page 6 we are informed by Dr. Harper that the following ministers and churches have been heard from since writing his article: Churches: Long's Chapel, Antioch (R), Morrisville, O'Kelly's Chapel, Pleasant Grove (N. C.) and Martha's Chapel. Ministers: L. W. Fogleman and G. R. Underwood.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

A CENTRAL FLAW

(Dr. Robert E. Spear)

The war has revealed to us the magnitude and gravity of our whole problem of education. A democracy is not safe with such a mass of illiteracy as the war has uncovered. But the problem is not solved simply by decreasing the percentage of illiterates to the total population. We need not simply education, but Christian education—training that issues in religious conviction and Christian personality.

Among all the things that the chaplains and others who have been in touch with the religious side of the Army have revealed to us, few are more appalling than the lack of comprehension of the meaning of Christianity and the elements of religious faith, which were found to be characteristic of great masses of our men, side by side with a widely prevalent and child-like religious instinct.

Such ignorance is a central flaw in a self-controlled and self-governed nation. Our strength lies in the intelligent religious convictions of our people.

In the more comprehensive sense of the term the whole problem of the church is now more clearly seen to be one of education. We have to bring every available resource to bear to make the pulpit, the Sunday school, the day school, the university, the theological seminary, all our educational factors, efficient in carrying out the great task of the church of training men and women in Christian character.

THANKSGIVING AT ELON

A genuine Indian Summer, a large company of friends, and good fellowship made Thanksgiving at Elon memorable for 1919.

The usual exercises took place, but not in a usual sense. On Sunday evening preceding, the Orphanage Singing Class gave a splendid exercise and our offering will, when completed, be at least $100.00, our best yet.

On Thanksgiving Day the illness of Pastor N. G. Newman was very regrettable. Dr. Atkinson, however, made a thrilling address, showing why the nation as a whole and our Church in particular should be thankful.

Two excellent college functions were staged. The Junior-Senior Debate on Wednesday night was the first, and the annual celebrating of the Philologist Society on Thursday night the second.

The Junior-Senior celebration was a debate only. The query was, "Resolved, That the employe in the United States is more responsible than the employer for the high cost of living and the industrial strife of today." The seniors championed the affirmative and were represented by Messrs. J. L. Floyd and E. H. Rainey, who argued their side well. Miss Jessie Sharpe and Mr. L. B. Ezzell spoke for the Juniors and won a unanimous decision.

On Thursday evening the Philologist Society presented a more varied program indicative of the regular work of their society. Mr. C. M. Miller gave a passionate oration on "American Patriotism." Having been in the army and having lost a brother in the service, his words made a wholesome impression. Mr. J. W. Fix read an original humorous burlesque depicting the superstition and the call of the wild to the old-style darkey. Mr. L. R. Sides rendered a fine trombone solo, accompanied on piano by Mr. P. E. Lindley. Mr. R. O. Smith conducted the regular religious service, which is a part of every session of the society.

The concluding number was a debate on "Resolved, That Industrial Democracy is the best solution of the labor problem." The affirmative speakers were Messrs. E. S. Johnson and W. R. Thomas. The negative cause was maintained by Messrs. H. W. Johnson and H. G. Self. The affirmative won a hard fought battle by a unanimous decision.

It is worth while to note that both these debates concerned themselves with the labor problem. The first treated it as to cause and the second as to remedy, and in both cases the decision was unanimous in labor's favor. Surely we live in new times.

Other Items

Many of the Faculty members attended the North Carolina Teachers' Assembly in Raleigh during the Thanksgiving season.

Prof. Betts, Mrs. Sturm, Miss Fisher, and Miss Hawk gave a joint recital on November 26 at the Cary (N. C.) High School.

Prof. Alexander is scheduled to give a recital at Erskine (S. C.) College on December 5.

The new Kimball Pipe Organ is installed and will be played Sunday, November 30, for the first time. It is a rarely sweet-toned instrument.

General Julian S. Carr, Durham, N. C., is to speak on "The Democratization of Industry" at the Sunday evening service, December 7. General Carr is the apostle of Industrial Democracy in North Carolina and is always heard profitably on any theme.

The Faculty Music Recital is to be given on the evening of December 2. The public is cordially invited.

W. H. Joyner—I enjoy every copy of my Church paper.

Negotiations are now being carried on between the United States and Mexico regarding the arrest and imprisonment of citizens of the United States.

A sum of over one hundred thousand dollars has been raised by the memorial fund committee of the University of North Carolina toward the contemplated student activities building at the University in memory of the late president, Edward Kidder Graham.

The shortage of fuel seems to be a matter of great concern for the nation. People are asked to submit themselves to war-time regulations. Many offices are being closed after four o'clock P. M., and not opened till nine A. M. At this writing there seems to be no definite plan formulated.

Cotton has reached the point of nearly 39 cents the pound.

A new shipping line has been established between Norfolk and Havana, Cuba, operations to begin December 12, 1919.

Three thousand textile workers are on strike in Fall River, Mass.

Washington is still wrangling over the Peace Treaty and nothing is being done that looks toward permanent peace.

In London the infant mortality is 90 to 1,000. In New York it is about 100 to 1,000, and this is constantly being reduced,—that is to say 100 children born in New York out of every 1,000, or one in ten, die before they are five years old. We have it on the highest authority that all over China, more than half the children die before they are two years old. In Syria three-fourths of all the children die before they are two years old. And in Persia 85 per cent. And they die from two causes: First, because their parents do not know how to nourish and to care for them. Second because, particularly if girls, their parents do not care if they do die.

The Constitution of the United States requires that a census of the United States be taken every ten years. It is by this means that the apportionment of members of the House of Representatives is made as to states.

We advise those who expect to order books or Bibles for Christmas presents to do so now. Many numbers cannot be secured. We have in stock about all the available numbers that we have been carrying, but have a low stock in many instances. Order now. We also call the attention of those who want names placed on Bibles or Testaments. It takes about ten days or more to fill such orders. We would not advise such orders after December 12. We are anxious to serve, but cannot on short notice.

THE CHURCH WINNING THE YOUNG*

In our own country there are about half of the children who have no opportunity whatever of knowing the value of Christian training in the home. These must depend upon some one other than parents for a knowledge of God's Word and things pertaining to the Christian life. Two-thirds of the population of the world is outside the Sunday school, and the school loses fifty per cent of all those who enter the school from the church. They either leave the school during the intermediate period, or never join the church at all. It is in behalf of these that I am to speak today. If they are to be won to the church it must be done by some other way than the parent, or the school, or by first reaching the parent and the school for Christ.

The Bible is a Book of revelation. It reveals man, and God, and God's will concerning man. It also reveals Christ and His great commission to the world. When He gave the Commission to the Disciples, He made it broad enough in its scope to take in all humanity. He died for the world, and sent the disciples to tell the world of His death, and no tongue can tell all its meaning to the world. The commission has been extended through the centuries down to the church of today, and yet three-fourths of the world is still in sin. If the church wins the world to Christ it must win the youth of today and mould them into lifework recruits, and this will call for three definite things.

It calls for a constructive program of evangelism. A man is not saved by the simple act of professing religion. Thousands profess to know Christ every year, and yet they never mean anything to the church or to Jesus Christ. A mere profession, does not satisfy the demand—for a profession without a possession is nothing. Neither does joining the church always mean that the individual is won to Christ. For on every hand there comes the sad news from the church that it has lost some of its members, and dozens are inactive, and some never attend even a single service during the year. They are dead, and the only surprising thing about it is, they do not seem to know it. A man is won to the church and to Christ when every fiber of his life and all the energy he possesses is consecrated on the altar of service. He may claim to have the faith of Abraham, the vision of Isaiah, the love of John, and the ambition of Paul, but unless he proves his faith by his works the world never recognizes the fact that he is a Christian. Jesus saves, not to keep men from going to ruin alone, but He saves men that men in turn may save others and bring them to the knowledge of the truth. He saved Andrew—and he was instrumental in saving Peter, and he in turn swayed the Multitude at Pentecost and thousands were saved.

Again, it calls for an increase of workers. There has never been a day in the history of the world when workers were needed as they are today. On every hand there comes the call for more workmen. Note the condition in our own church. A few years ago our institutions had more than a hundred students preparing for the ministry, and now they have less than forty, and still the need is greater. Why the loss? I leave you to answer the question. In our own beloved South land of which we boast so much the conditions are far from satisfactory. Look at conditions as they are. Ninety-five per cent of the churches in the South have no Society of any kind for training the young people and seventy-five per cent of them have only one preaching service per month and not much preparation being made for more. Then, take a third look if you please, and see the great need in the world about us. Through science, and the revelation of Jesus Christ the world has grown smaller and smaller until the work is brought home to the doors of the church. Think of the need. No pen however skillful, nor tongue be it ever so eloquent can estimate the need about us, and the bigness of the call that comes. Once our churches could supply their needs but how is it now? No denomination in the United States, Canada, or the united Kingdom of great Britain can supply its pulpits on a single Sunday. The question grows more serious every day, and our only hope lies in the fact that we must pray mightily for more laborers, and then take off our coats and go after them. God's part is already done when we are ready to meet conditions. 'Pray ye the Lord of the Harvest that he will send labourers into his harvest,' but what is the use? I mean what is the use to pray for men and then drive them by starvation wages back to the farm and shops for support?

Finally, it calls for a program of enlargement and enlistment. When our country had a big job to do, it called upon the youth of the land and enlisted them by the millions. They responded and did a decent job for Uncle Sam, and made the world proud of them. In like manner will they respond when the church is ready to place a program large enough to interest them. Line up the young for service and stop your knocking. During all my ministry, I have never yet called upon a young man or a young woman to do something for the Church but what they tried to do it. The thing we want to do, is to place the youth of our Church in the training Societies and train for service. One can lead a hundred, but it takes a hundred to drive one. We must train, train, train and keep on training for the work of the Kingdom demands it. Let us emphasize the vast importance of our summer training schools, and chautauqua work for there are hundreds that have no other opportunity for the Christian training. Think of the twelve million girls, and the nine-million boys in the world today, who never go to college, or have a debut of their own but go to work as soon as the laws of their countries will allow. These are dependent on the Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, and the church as a whole to train them for service. Shall we leave them go until sin has ruined their lives, and Satan has destroyed their vitality and ambition for service?

Our churches must line up with the enlarged programs of the church as a whole. I am glad the day has come when we are to lose our denominational prejudice and launch out into one enlarged program for the cause and Kingdom of Jesus Christ. Our big business is to co-operate with the allied forces of the Kingdom for the salvation of the whole world, for the ultimate objective of Christ's coming to the world was to bring salvation to it. But saving one here and there is not half enough—we must save, train and serve, for if we would conserve our energy and do the work of our Christ we must make one united drive for the church of God, for through the church we shall win the world to Christ. Our money and means are nothing, as long as the energy of the youth of our church is latent. We need a thousand men to enter the field tomorrow to champion the cause of our Christ, and how shall we get them? By enlisting the youth of today, and enlarging the program of the Kingdom until we shall reach all the ends of the earth with the message of our Christ, and bring every soul under subjection to him.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley:—We are sending five dollars which is ten cents apiece for each month this year and five cents over because we are so late. We were glad you and Mrs. Wicker brought some of the children to our Sunday school this year and want you to be sure to come again and bring all the children you can.—Erma Jean, Doris, Lorraine and Eris Whitaker.

We all enjoyed our visit to your Sunday school and want to come again next year.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley:—Here comes two little girls to join the Corner. We go to school and like our teacher fine. We are having our meeting at Ingram this week. Mr. Brown is helping Mr. Truitt and we like him very much. Enclosed find 10 cents from each of us.—Irene and Elizabeth Dunn.

We give you a warm welcome to the Corner. We hope you will write often.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley:—I am a little boy twelve years old. I want to join the Corner. I go to school every day and I like my teacher very much. Enclosed find ten cents for the cousins. As ever.—James Dunn.

You are a splendid little man. I trust you will make good grades in school.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley:—I hope you and the cousins will have a happy Thanksgiving. I am wishing I were big enough to eat some turkey, still Christmas comes soon and I can enjoy that.—Oliver E. Young, Jr.

A friend gave us a turkey and we bought one, so our little folks will have a turkey for Thanksgiving. Wish you could be with us.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley:—I am a little girl nearly three years old, so I want to give a Thanksgiving offering to the little orphans. I am sending three dollars.—Margaret Earp.

I think you are the little girl I feel in love with at the Valley Conference. I know you were a good little girl. It is so good of you to remember the orphans.—“Uncle Charley.”

ENCOURAGING REPORT

Our Thanksgiving offerings are coming in nicely and we are very happy that our loyal friends are going to make this one of the largest Thanksgiving Offerings we have had in the history of the Institution. Wake Chapel church sent us one full suit of clothing for a boy. Virginia Cotton Mills, one bolt nice dress goods. Jas. N. Williamson & Sons, 100 yards of nice outings. Proximity Manufacturing Company, 300 yards of blue Denims for overalls. Dr. W. T. Walters, two barrels of apples. Elmira Cotton Mills, 202 yards of dress ginghams. Glen Raven Cotton Mills, 128 yards of Denims for overalls. Gleneoe Cotton Mills, 202 yards of niee dress outings. Lakeside Mills, 120 yards heavy goods for shirtings. E. M. Holt Plaid Mills, 87 yards of niee dress gingham. Sidney Cotton Mills, 150 yards of plaids for aprons. Durham Hosiery Mills, 4 dozens of hose for the children. Ladies' Aid Society of the Graham Christian church, 22 cans of fruit, three bushels of potatoes, three pecks of apples, two gailons of molasses. Sunbeam Workers Society of the Graham Christian church, one cake for the little girls' Thanksgiving dinner. The Ladies' Aid Society of the Bethlehem Christian church contributed the following: Mrs. J. W. Holt, one quilt; Mrs. John Ward, one sheet; Mrs. I. N. W. Garrison, one hat; Victora Troxler, 3 yards of gingham; Mrs. E. F. Lowe, one blouse; Mrs. W. T. Warren, 3 yards of gingham; Mrs. L. D. Rippy, 5 yards of gingham; Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Thompson, one quilt; Mr. and Mrs. N. E. A. Thompson, one quilt. Mrs. R. L. Hendrickson, Lincoln, Kans., one quilt; Mrs. L. L. Lassiter, Suffolk, Va., one quilt and one dozen cans of fruit. Rev. P. T. Klapp, one and one-half barrels of corn. The Graham Graded School, one earload (Ford ear) of apples, potatoes, canned goods, coffee and many other articles too numerous to mention. The Ossipee Graded School, one barrel of apples, potatoes, canned goods, etc.

For all the above we are truly thankful and it will be lots of help to us in this work.

Our Singing Class had a very pleasant trip to Berea church near Ossipee two weeks ago and rendered its program there. The congregation was very good and gave the children splendid attention and we hope they enjoyed the program.

The Singing Class also visited the First Church, Greensboro, on the fourth Sunday and rendered its program. After the close of the service Rev. J. V. Knight, the pastor, said that Brother H. C. Simpson had something to say to the congregation and he took the floor and said that he thought after hearing the program rendered by the children that they ought to contribute $500.00 for a Thanksgiving offering. In his quiet and calm way he, in a few minutes, raised $450.00 and assured me that they would make it five hundred before they sent in the offering. Brother Simpson is small in stature, but big in heart when the cause of the little orphans is presented.

Brother J. V. Knight, the beloved pastor, of that church, kindly turned the service over to the class and we are very grateful to him for the kindness shown us on this, our first, visit to his church. Brother Knight is an untiring worker and is doing a great work in our Greensboro church and we look for greater things from that church in the future.

"Now for the biggest Thanksgiving offering ever." See that your church does its part in the great work. Sixty-one little fellows to love and care for.

NOTES

Rev. J. W. Holt, Burlington, N. C., tells us that he has the first and second Sundays open if churches are in need of his services for these dates.

We have received the following that will be of interest to many SUN readers:

"Mr. Samuel McPherson requests the pleasure of your company at the marriage of his daughter, Bessie Lee to Mr. Ralph Mahoney Harris, Tuesday morning, the ninth of December, at ten o'clock, at home, Liberty, North Carolina. At home after December twentieth, Oriental, North Carolina."

Best wishes and congratulations.

It will be personally appreciated by the Editor if all contributions sent THE CHRISTIAN SUN from now until December 15 be as brief as possible. Pastors will do us a great favor by keeping marriage and obituary notes below the limit. We go to press this week with enough matter on hand for the issue of December 10.

While we are able to send most any Bible ordered direct from stock, it sometimes happens that we must have a Bible sent direct from the manufacturers in Philadelphia and this takes longer to fill the order. We have on hand several orders of that kind now, and in two or three cases, the number ordered is out of stock for a few days. Be patient. You will have your order filled.

A MESSAGE FROM DR. DENISON

Dr. W. H. Denison, Superintendent of the Forward Movement of the Christian Church writes as follows about places and institutions in the Southern Christian Convention:

"It was a great pleasure for the Superintendent to be present at the North Carolina Conference and speak on one phase of the Forward Movement—Evangelism. The new united Conference promises large things for our North Carolina work. It was a pleasure to spend a few minutes at Elon College and see a few of the young people there preparing for life's larger work. The privilege of speaking at our Franklin, Va. church on the Forward Movement and greeting the splendid people of Dr. Rowland's congregation was a pleasure. We had the opportunity of preaching at the Union church also and helping in the raising of the Thanksgiving offering for the Christian Orphanage. Our stay in North Carolina and Virginia was short and very busy but a great delight. We were pleased to be present at the Women's Mission Thank-Offering services both at Franklin, Va., and at Memorial Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va. Everywhere we found our people interested in the Forward Movement program and standards."

Let us get up that Bible for that Christmas present now so as to insure your getting it.

MISSIONARY

AMONG THE WORKERS

A good sister in sending her subscription to our $500,000.00 Mission Fund, adds this note: "I have been praying every day for several years and am still praying daily that my boys may give themselves to Christ's cause and that at least one of them may be a foreign missionary. Will you pray with me for this? I am praying for you and the work you represent, and I am glad whenever I can help in any way."

The good ones of this type move forward this campaign for a half million dollars for missions and encourage the work which we are trying to do. If our mothers shall pray as this good woman is, for their own children to be missionaries, it will not be long until the volunteers will spring up from many homes. Our Saviour said, "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into His harvest."

Our Washington congregation began right. An offering was taken at the first service after the pastor, Dr. Kendall, arrived, and amounted to $29.85. That is a beginning and amounts to more than the usual offering of some of our well established congregations. Wherever the writer has been he has heard nothing but words of approval of beginning the work in Washington, and of getting Dr. Kendall to lead and develop the work there. All who know Dr. Kendall feel that he is the very man for the place so far as this writer has heard any expression.

Rev. D. Clay Lilly truthfully writes, "Men (and women) cannot be enlisted in a cause of which they know nothing. Most men (and women) do not know even the primary facts and principles of Missions. The young people and children will not grow up to be missionaries, or to support missions, while they know nothing of the great enterprise."

And this by Sue Reynolds Staley, "The Methodist Episcopal Church has for fifty years had its Sunday schools organized into missionary societies, having their own scholar-officers. This method of organization has proved in no way antagonistic to the other departments of the Sunday school, but rather a source of stimulation and helpfulness. As a result of this organization, the gifts to missions of the Sunday schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church are larger than those of any other denomination."

This explains why the M. E. Church put on a Centenary Campaign for $80,000,000 for missions, and then went over the top with it. For fifty years they had been teaching their children missions in the Sunday school. Give the children of your schools a chance.

Says Sue Reynolds Staley: "The force and strength of the Sunday school has hitherto been expended on itself. When once this giant is awakened to the world vision of missions, the entire world will receive the knowledge of Jesus Christ." George R. Trull says:

"In the hands of Sunday school superintendents and teachers lies the real solution of the missionary problem. They hold the key to the whole situation, and if they improve their opportunity, within a generation, there will be a church whose intelligence about missions and zeal for them have never been equaled in the world's history."

FROM OVER THE SEAS

MISSIONARY FROM BURLINGTON SUNDAY SCHOOL WRITES

*Canadian Pacific Ocean Services Ltd.,
R. M. S. "Empress of Japan,"
Sunday, October 12, 1919.*

Dear Burlington Friends:—

This is my last day on shipboard, I expect, so I am writing to mail this when I land. It has been an unusually rough voyage, so those say who have crossed several times. But these last three days have been beautiful, smooth and sunny days.

There are over fifty missionaries on board, going to Japan, China, Korea, India, and the Philippines, also a party of Y. M. C. A. men going to Russia. One night we had a missionary meeting on board, with four speakers, Mr. Reynolds of Korea, Mr. Garrison of India, Dr. Chen of China, who has been to college in our country, and Bishop Bannister of the Anglican Church who has been in China thirty-nine years. The subject of the evening was "The Progress of Christianity in Asia," and the speakers were all very good. Mr. Garrison was especially interesting. He is a member of a missionary family, third generation in India, I think, and he has with him two little boys who were born in India, and a baby born while they were home on furlough.

The long delay of this boat in Vancouver was caused by the fact that they were waiting for Chinese coolies returning from their work behind the lines in France. There are about twelve hundred of them in the steerage, more than all the first and second class passengers together. One night last week at our dinner time a most terrifying howl arose from their quarters, and then for about five minutes such a noise as I never heard before. We learned afterwards that they are supposed to keep their own deck and sleeping quarters clean, and because they were not cleaned to pass inspection that day the poor coolies had been given no supper at night. No wonder they howled!

Another interesting party on board are some French officers going to Russia on some mission which they claim not to know all about themselves. They have with them one young man, just a boy away from home for the first time, too young to have been in the war. He is the only one among them who speaks English, and I suppose he is with them for that reason. He is a general favorite on shipboard, and the whole party in their bright blue uniforms certainly have added interest to the scenery.

Another passenger who has been very interesting to me is a Japanese lady who is returning to Kobe. She is working under the Methodist Board in a girls' school, and has been in this country (I mean America, of course) for special work in dietetics at Battle Creek, Michigan. Unfortunately she has been very seasick most of the time, so I have not been able to learn as much from her as I might have if she had been able to sit up on deck. We have also some members of the Chinese Peace Commission who are returning from Paris.

With so many missionaries on board I have been disappointed not to have more religious services than have been possible, but the boat has been so overcrowded it was hard to find a place in which to hold services, and seasickness has been so general up to the last three days that it was also hard to find anyone to conduct services. Though I have been a bit seasick, I have been very fortunate compared to some, as there has not been a day when I was not on deck part of the day, and only two days when I suffered much from the motion of the boat. One of those days, I think, was imitating a rocking horse.

I am looking forward to hearing from some of you.

Sincerely yours,
MARTHA R. STACY.

SOME CHRISTMAS SUGGESTIONS

CHRISTMAS BOOKS FOR CHILDREN

We list below a supply of books which we have purchased suitable for Christmas presents for the children. For the lack of space we cannot tell what each book is about, but we have exercised the very best care in the selection, to see that all stories are helpful and interesting:

The Thorn of the Fortress	50 cents
Matt of the Waterfront	50 cents
The Other Side of the Rainbow	60 cents
Bantern Stories	60 cents
Billy and Bumps	35 cents
Good Night Stories	60 cents
The Jim Family	25 cents
Little Folks of the Bible	30 cents
Sunny Hour Books	15 cents

(Little Folks of the Bible can be had in books I, II, III, and IV. Books I and II are for boys and books III and IV are for girls. We will send any four books of this title for $1.00.)

(Sunny Hour Books are made up of 14 different titles. The price is 15 cents for each title, any two for 25 cents; four for 45 cents and all over four at 10 cents per volume.)

All the above named books are suitable for children 8 to 14 except the "Sunny Hour Books" which are for little tots that cannot read or are just beginning to read. "Sunny Hour Books" contain an abundance of pictures and are bound with colored cloth and stamped with an appropriate design.

Add 4 cents per volume for postage when only one copy is ordered, and 2 cents per volume for postage in lots up to ten; all over ten volumes add 1 cent per volume for postage.

CLEARANCE SALE OF CHILDREN'S BOOKS

We make it a rule in December of each year to buy the closing out stock of several suitable books for children. By buying the closing out stock, we are enabled to get a better price and make the books within the reach of all.

We have been able this year to buy the complete stock of the following 50 cent sellers, and offer them at prices indicated:

Blazing the Way	$.25
Bright Side and Other Side25
Crown Jewels20
From the Thames to the Toossachs25
Up the Susquehanna25

(This price is postpaid)

The following reductions will be made in lots: Any two copies, 45 cents; three copies, 60 cents; four copies, 75 cents; all over four copies at 17 cents per copy.

The supply is limited and we advise you to order early. If any title has exhausted when your order is received, we will substitute unless otherwise instructed.

These books are all well made and handsomely bound.

Make some child's life happy by presenting one or more of these books. Invest a few dollars to make the little tots of your class happy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR DECEMBER 14, 1919 DECEMBER 14, 1919

(Mrs. Fred Bullock)

At the Trial and Crucifixion of Jesus.—John 18:15-27; 19:25-27.

Golden Text: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life."

How easy to falter in loyalty. How hard to remain firm. Peter, the "rockman," Peter who had declared that though all others should forsake Jesus, he would be true, to be driven from his allegiance by a servant girl! Was he afraid for his life? Perhaps. He had never learned to make a great resolve and stick to it. One day he says: "Thou art the Christ of God," the next he is ready to rebuke this Christ, and teach Him what to say and do. One day he loudly declares his loyalty, one night he cannot even stay awake. He seizes his sword, with the valiant intent to cut off a head, and—snags an ear. And now, a sneer, a laugh perhaps, from the servants gathered around the fire, and Peter is consumed with fear. One of the devil's best weapons has always been a laugh. Many a one who would have dauntlessly faced a sword has fled from a laugh. What Peter missed, and what he received He missed the nearness to His Lord, His final words, His last commission; he received a look—a look which broke his heart, and his pride, a look which we may believe, completed his education, hardened his rock-mass into a solid concrete, as it were, and made him fit for a stone in the Temple of God. John, quiet, dependable, loving, whose fiery temper had fused every element of his nature into a burning crucible of love for Jesus, so soon as he knew Him, John makes no boasts, but he stands by, too close to Jesus to meet the sneers, or to heed them. He goes with Him all the way, and when the spirit departs from the divine Body, it is into the keeping of John that Jesus bestows His dearest human possession, His mother.

"How to Use The Bible."—Psalms 19:7-11, Matt. 4:1-4.

There are many ways in which the Bible is used. Some people use it roughly; use it as a dust pad, a relic, family record, or never at all unless the preacher comes. I know a woman who once brushed the dust from her Bible with her apron and handed it to the preacher. It opened seemingly of its own accord at the 23rd Psalm. Why? One year previous to that time she had lost her glasses, and had searched the place for them with no avail. "O my, there are my glasses right where you left them last year," and when that was said she revealed two things. First that she had not used her Bible for the year, second, that no preacher had used it for her in a year. I know another family who lets the baby play with the Bible to keep it quiet. Fine toy! Much better is the Bible than a pack of cigarettes, or a Prince Albert box.

To use the Bible right, we should use it daily, for we need its daily message. The best time is the morning hour, before our minds are crowded with the affairs of the day. If we cannot use that hour, we should never let a day pass without using it, for when we do, God is speaking to us. Then, we should use it in a practical way. Simply reading it is not sufficient. We should practice it in ourselves and others. Then too, we should use it in cases of emergency. A man once said, "The biggest blunder America ever made was when she sent missionaries to Japan." His daughter heard his words, and quoted Jno. 3:16, and Mark 16:16, to which he never replied.

Suggestions

A fine meeting for the Comrades of the Quiet Hour. It should be lead by that Committee, and special work assigned to each. Have a contest, and call for Bible quotations, and help the members get the habit of memorizing the Scripture. Form a memory club, and let the juniors and intermediates into the club.

Some Questions

What value is Bible study in one's business or professional career? What influence does Bible study have on the student life of our own country? Why should we memorize Scriptural passages each day? Is it right to study the Bible for argument's sake?

GRADED INSTRUCTION

It is not possible to make your school a Standard School if you have no graded instruction. By graded instruction, is meant using the Graded Lessons in at least the Primary and Junior departments. It means having a lesson suited to the needs of the child. All of the Scriptures are suited for instruction, all are necessary, but all are not possible of understanding at every age. Our Father, when He wished to reveal His truth began with simple facts, with definite "Thou shalt's," and "Thou shalt not's." You will find little of explanation, or of reasoning in the early books of the Bible. You will find much of illustrative material, showing by a life, rather than by a precept, the right and the wrong way. Consequently, the early stories of God's dealing with His people, and the story of the greatest life of all, are most fitted for the comprehension of a child. It takes an adult mind to understand the teachings of Paul, which even Peter admitted were "hard to be understood." When we try to teach them to children, simplify them as we may, we find ourselves in deep waters.

The Graded Lessons, then, are simply a series of lessons prepared by those who have made a study of children of various ages, and have selected from God's Word, the parts best fitted for the comprehension of the child at various ages, and have planned for the teacher a method of telling this lesson story in such a manner as to best present it to the mind of the scholar. Why not give them a trial in your school, help the child to love the Word of God, aid the teacher in preparing her lesson, raise the standard of your school, and meet the requirements of the Sunday school department of your church?

OBITUARIES

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—TAYLOR

God in His infinite wisdom has seen fit to take from our midst our beloved sister, Mrs. Martha Taylor, removing her from this world of sorrow and suffering to a place of eternal joy and peace.

Her quiet fortitude in the midst of her suffering, and the calm acceptance of the Master's will, expressed a sincere devotion to her Creator. She was at all times interested in the Church and its work, and it was her earnest desire to be of help.

Therefore, we, the Ladies' Aid Society and the Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Portsmouth, Va. Christian church do hereby offer the following resolutions:

1. That by her fortitude and courage she has set us an example by which we shall be enabled to do more and better work for the Kingdom of God.

2. That we have been blessed by having her with us, and her Christ-like life shall ever be, one of our sweetest memories.

3. That we extend our sincere sympathy to the bereaved family and commend them to the all-wise Father for comfort and consolation.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be spread on the records of our Societies, and a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

WILLIAMSON

Reps Williamson, Sr., son of Edward Franklin and Martha Ann Williamson, was born in Nottaway County, Va., February 22, 1855, and died at his home in Nansemond County, Va., October 15, 1919, at the age of sixty-four years, seven months, and twenty-one days. On April 29, 1874, he married Miss Adelia Jones, who survives him. Unto them were born nine children, six of whom are living: Mrs. Martha Emma Atkinson, Elon College, N. C., William Thomas Williamson of Norfolk, Reps Williamson, Jr., Norfolk County, Mrs. Mary Regina Warrington, of Driver, Va., Fred Connelly Williamson of Georgia, and Mrs. Janet Adelia Savage of Norfolk, Va. There are six living grandchildren: Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson, Miss Mary Adelia Atkinson, James Osear Atkinson, Jr., Emma Williamson Atkinson, John Hall Williamson, and Ada Thomas Williamson. Three sisters also survive him: Mrs. Luey Darden, Mrs. Mattie Harrell, and Mrs. Annie Whitley.

Brother Williamson was a faithful member of Berea (Nansemond) Christian church. He served as treasurer for a long period of years. He was especially fond of music. Partial deafness gradually deprived him of this pleasure for several years. During the last few months he frequently went to church without hearing a word during the service. He was a man of many friends, and it was a great loss to him when he could not freely have conversation as in former years. He was stricken with paralysis just a few days before the end came. He regained consciousness, and talked freely about his willingness to submit to the will of God. He expressed himself as being ready for his departure. The funeral service was conducted at Berea church, and the burial made in Cedar Hill cemetery, Suffolk, Va. He was a man whose presence will be greatly missed, in many fields of civic and religious, as well as social activity. His life was a personal contribution of good cheer and uplift to many friends.

I. W. JOHNSON.

DAUGHTREY

Allan Daughtrey, son of Joshua and Priscilla Daughtrey, was born in Isle of Wight Co., Va., September 15, 1840. He was twice married, first to Miss Martha E. Norfleet, on June 13, 1867. Unto this union there are five surviving children: Mrs. Eva L. Daughtrey, Mrs. J. D. Johnson, Miss Lydia Daughtrey, W. A. Daughtrey, and J. O. H. Daughtrey. His second marriage was to Miss Sarah Cornelia Rawles, on March 6, 1889. One son survives this marriage: Braxton R. Daughtrey. He leaves besides his widow and six children, fourteen grandchildren and nine great grandchildren. He volunteered and joined Barham's Cavalry in the Confederate forces during the Civil War. In 1865 he united with Hebron Christian church, in which he was elected as deacon and served as secretary for many years. He was a member of the Committee which moved the church to Holland, and remained an active member and deacon of the Holland church until his death. He never missed but one quarterly conference of his church in a period of fifty years. He died in Franklin, Va., November 20, 1919, at the age of seventy-nine years, two months and five days. The funeral was conducted from the residence on Friday, November 21, 1919, by Rev. I. W. Johnson, assisted by Revs. J. L. Lawless, and W. M. Jay. He had a large circle of friends who admired his sterling character and devoted Christian life. One sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Norfleet, and one brother, Ely Daughtrey, also survive him. A good man has gone to his reward.

I. W. JOHNSON.

INGLE

Mrs. Elizabeth Ingle departed this life at her home near Burlington, N. C., November 25, 1919, in her eighty-fifth year.

Mrs. Ingle was twice married; Her first husband was Daniel Sharpe; her second was Mebane Ingle; both of whom preceded her to the grave.

She leaves one daughter, Mrs. E. J. Bryan, six grandchildren, and nine great-grandchildren.

She was a member of New Providence Christian church and had been for about fifty years.

The funeral services were conducted from the home of the writer and the interment was in Pine Hill cemetery, Burlington, N. C.

May the dear Master comfort those who mourn.

WISE AND OTHERWISE

Just Good Enough for the Editors

A good old scout living north of town came in Saturday and handed us a dollar for his subscription. "Take it," he said, "I can't buy anything with it any more."—From the Siloam Springs Herald.

"Yes, they sometimes launder the soiled money at the treasury." "Can you tell me where they hang it out?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

"I understand that Mrs. Sharp was not satisfied with her doctor's treatment." "No; so when he asked to see her tongue, she gave him a piece of it."—Baltimore American.

Mrs. Brown was at the back of the church, waiting to have her baby Christened. Baby was getting restless, so she beckoned to the verger. "Is the sermon nearly finished?" she whispered. "No, mum," replied the verger, "another half-hour of it yet. He's only on his 'lastly.'" "Bust," said Mrs. Brown, "will it take him half an hour to get through his 'lastly'?" "No, mum," was the demure reply, "but there's the one more word and I'm done," and the 'finally,' and the 'in conclusion' to come yet. Don't be impatient."—London Tit-Bits.

"Come upstairs and let me wash your hands," said mother. "I don't want to go," wailed Alice, aged three. "Let her wash them down here," called grandma; "she can do it here just as well." "No," her mother said firmly, "I want her to come up with me." Alice came as slowly as she could. "O," she howled, turning a wrathfully, tearful face to her mother, "why don't you obey your mother?"—Harper's Magazine.

First Citizen—"You can't stop a man from thinking!" Second Ditto—"No, the difficulty is to start him!"—Chicago News.

"When water becomes ice," asked the teacher, "what is the great change that takes place?" "The greatest change, ma'am," said the little boy, "is the change in price."

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

EDITORIAL JOTTINGS

These are days when things are overflowing. Money is plentiful, work is abundant, and resources unlimited. Not often does the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN have an overflow of editorials to suit his convenience, for the lack of time to prepare them. He does, however, have an inconvenient number of topics on his note book for comment. Occasionally he must have a "closing out" season and begin a new page. Such is the case with us now. We have more topics than we have space to treat them, and so we take this issue to give a few side-lights on things and jottings that we have made note of, but cannot go into detail about.

It is noticeable that certain words do not please the ear of the true worshipper. "Drive," "Campaign," "Over the Top," and such expressions have come into a very prominent place in our language through wartime measures and methods. These words have found their way into church activities and, at first, were popular. We note that deep spiritual thinkers are protesting against their usage too much, when in connection with the church.

We note in modern church architecture that the bell is being omitted. We have no definite reasons for this, but presume it is being considered that worship should be so much a part of a man's life that he should know the hour for worship just as he knows when to go to his office, place of business, or farm. If this line of thought be the right one, it seems plausible, and we endorse it. On the other hand, we like to hear the sound of the church bell. It reminds us of our privilege and duty; it reminds the non-church goer that religious services are to be held; it is a reminder that God's institution is set up in our midst. "Ding-dong." Give us the bell.

A woman has been elected to the Parliament of England, and New York is honored with a woman judge in her courts. Public opinion approves and the cause of Woman Suffrage goes on to victory. All of us do not see alike about this cause, but woman is coming into her own; and as she comes she is demonstrating her worth.

We wonder at times if it is best to always be talking about a "new age," for while we can rightly call it a "new age," it is only an advanced age. To call it a "new age" is to leave the thought that the past age is separated from the present, whereas to say advanced age leaves the idea of constant growth and not separation.

Many persons are now worried over the condition of the country and think that the devil is dragging the world to hell. As we see it, the pessimistic see the situation this way. God is ruling and things will come out all right. Don't worry.

It is fitting that the first week in each year is Prayer Week for the nation. It is a consoling thought that this nation of ours, though imperfect, is uniting for larger and greater things for Christ. When you discuss the query: "Resolved, That the world is growing better," put us down on the affirmative.

We hear much about "waking up" about things these days as if we have been "asleep" on certain things. "There is more truth than poetry" in these expressions, and we really wonder how we once got along with former methods. "Our one great need—THE CHRISTIAN SUN in every home," has behind it this fact and idea: where the largest circulation of the Church paper is found, there the Church as a whole receives its best support. The first Methodist area to raise its quota of the $80,000,000 fund was where the leading paper of that denomination had the largest circulation. If we had a pastorate and wanted to get the salary raised, we would get the Church publications into the homes; if we wanted to increase in any direction this would be the method.

Labor seems to be in the saddle these days, but we fear that it is riding too fast. Labor has an opportunity of gaining prestige, but if it keeps on it is going to bring disgust and retard its own progress many years. It is getting to be radical. We deem that a man is within his own rights to stop work, but he has no right to prevent another man from working. Labor and capital must get together—and they will.

As the Christmas season draws near, the wheels of progress speed up and time is marked by the Christmas date. No event in the world's history has ever been able to have the same effect on the nations of the earth—and no event ever will, at this season of the year. We do not say so many days till the end of the month, or the end of the year, but so many days till Christmas. The date is greater than any month, year, or the beginning of any year. The way and manner in which we recognize the date is the greatest testimony of what Christ really means to the world.

* *

World events are happening so fast that it is a problem to make any definite statement for fear that the statement will be changed before you have put it into form. We have found it difficult to write up the events of the day as they happen, because the next day's events would change what we had written. For this reason general notes have been scarce in these columns of late.

Holland's New Church Building

DEDICATION OF HOLLAND CHRISTIAN CHURCH,
SUNDAY, DECEMBER 14, AT 3 P. M.

(Reprinted from Suffolk, (Va.) Herald)

The Holland Christian Church is an outgrowth of the old Hebron church, formerly located at Carrsville, in Isle of Wight county.

A committee consisting of Allen Daugherty, Eli Daugherty, Jas. H. Butler and Rev. R. H. Holland, was appointed at the September conference of the church 1890 for the purpose of choosing a suitable location.

Holland was the choice of the Committee which reported October 27, of the same year.

The building at Holland was erected out of the timbers of the old Hebron church; Mr. J. E. Daughtrey, a member of the church being the chief carpenter and builder.

The late Rev. R. H. Holland, father of Dr. Job G. Holland, now a resident of this place, was the founder and organizer of the Hebron church and served its pastor from the date of organization 1853 to 1877.

He was followed by Revs. C. J. Ralston, J. T. Kitchen, W. M. Butler, H. C. Moore, R. A. Ricks, and C. C. Peele, when Rev. R. H. Holland was again called as pastor in 1890, the year before the removal of the church to Holland. He served the church at Holland till March 1892 and was followed by the Revs. R. D. H. Demarest, J. W. Rawls, W. S. Long, D. D., W. J. Lane, I. W. Johnson, N. G. Newman, B. F. Black and W. M. Jay, the present pastor, who was called to this field September 1, 1918.

Dr. I. W. Johnson, of Suffolk, Va.; Dr. N. G. Newman, of Elon College, N. C.; and Rev. B. F. Black, of Franklinton, N. C., are the only living ex-pastors. All three are expected to be present at the dedication services. Dr. Newman will preach in the morning and Dr. Johnson will preach at night.

The dedication sermon will be delivered by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, of Elon College, N. C.

The building was started under the labors of Rev. B. F. Black who resigned to go to France as an army chaplain.

R. H. Reidel, master carpenter and builder worked faithfully at his task and had the building ready to be opened for worship on the second Sunday of July, last.

The building is a credit to the town and community and in keeping with the spirit of progress and desire for the best, characteristic people of this thriving little town.

The building is of pressed brick on all sides with stone trimming. The Sunday school apartments, kitchen and furnace room are below; above are the main auditorium, seating about 500 comfortably, a gallery, pastor's study room, choir room and other modern conveniences.

The pipe organ was purchased by the Ladies' Aid Society and recently presented to the church with appropriate ceremony.

The entire indebtedness of the building has been securely underwritten.

The dedication services will be held Sunday, December 14, at 3 P. M. The public is cordially invited.

REV. A. T. BANKS MEETS WITH ACCIDENT

We learn that Rev. A. T. Banks, Ramseur, N. C., met with a painful accident December 3 by getting shot in the arm. He was out hunting when the accident occurred. We understand that no bones were broken. We hope for Brother Banks a speedy recovery.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

FROM BROTHER H. H. BUTLER'S FIELD
Union

Owing to sickness in my home, my little granddaughter, Sarah Butler Saunders, being confined to bed for two months or more with typhoid fever during my revival work, I could not be at Union. Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, Va., who is really a great preacher as well as a great and good man, held the meeting for me, and God blessed his work. There were many conversions and fifteen united with the church. They are good working people at Union. May the Lord continue to bless those people of that dear old church.

Antioch

The work at Antioch is progressing well. I could be there only a few days during the revival meeting. We had a fine meeting, thirty or forty conversions and renewals. Thirty-two united with the church. Dr. C. H. Rowland, of Franklin, Va., who is a fine preacher, and greatly beloved by all who know him, conducted the meeting. God blessed his work abundantly and the old church was greatly strengthened. God bless Brother Rowland and may he live many years to preach the gospel of our Lord Jesus. May the Lord continue to bless us at this grand old mother church. It was there the pastor was born and from that old church many have gone out to preach the blessed Christ. May God help the people and pastor to live nearer and to do more for the building up of the Kingdom of the blessed Christ.

H. H. BUTLER.

INGRAM—PLEASANT GROVE

We are beginning our new church year in this pastorate by giving thanks for the old year and its great blessings. The members and pastor have much for which they may give thanks. Even the errors we have made and the disappointments we have had may, by giving heed thereto, be turned into channels of blessings. Taking all things into consideration, the year's annual yield has been abundant. And each of us must realize that a full hand is often as great a test of our goodness as one that is almost empty.

The young men of Pleasant Grove have organized for the purpose of developing themselves socially, mentally, and spiritually. They are undertaking to do something worth while for themselves and for their church, to which they are all devoted. Brother P. W. Farmer has offered his parlor as a place of meeting and Mrs. D. Jennings Sipe furnished it with chairs, tables, etc. Meetings are held every Friday evening at 7:30 under supervision of the pastor.

Rev. R. F. Brown assisted the pastor and people of Ingram church and community in a series of evangelistic services. His messages were foreful, spiritual, and thoughtful. At the close of the meeting three members were received into the church. The meeting was of such a nature as to give us a good beginning for the present year.

The Thanksgiving services—at Pleasant Grove in the forenoon and at Ingram in the afternoon—were more largely attended than usual. No less than five denominations participated actively in the services at Ingram. Pleasant Grove is to have another special service tomorrow—the fifth Sunday—at which time the offering to the Orphanage will be made.

A WORD FROM WASHINGTON

Rev. A. B. Kendall, D. D., the pastor of our Washington congregation, writes under date of November 25 of the work in Washington most hopefully. Among other items from Dr. Kendall are these:

"We have some very fine people here with whom I have come in contact since my arrival. If we can line them all up with the church, we shall have a corps of workers of which any man may be proud. We had twenty of our people out at our first public service, three of whom were visitors. Last Sunday we had nineteen, but some were ill and some were out of the city over Sunday, so that we felt it was a distinct gain. We have organized our Sunday school with Brother Irving Hitecock as superintendent. At present we are holding our meetings in Perpetual Hall down town, meeting at 10:30 A. M., with the Sunday school in session and merging into the preaching service at 11:15. The leading members here seem anxious that a temporary building be erected at once. This would certainly have many advantages as we would plunge at once into a campaign in the community where we expect to do our work. We have not really organized the church as yet, as I thought it best first of all to get as many of our people as possible to sign a covenant that we might know who our members really are. We are still receiving names of our people, four having come in within a week. We have at present just sixty names of people who ought to be identified with our work here. At last I have found a place in which to live, and a very satisfactory one for the time being at least."

If any readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN know of members of the Christian Church, past, present or prospective, living in Washington, will they not kindly send same either to this writer or to Rev. A. B. Kendall, D. D., 801 Allison Street, Washington, D. C.?

The pity is that we did not begin to work in Washington years ago but now that we have begun we shall hope, labor and pray that the Christian denomination will do the right, the good and the great thing in our national Capital. The city is growing very rapidly and it is as much the duty and the privilege of the Christian Church to have a part in the religious activity of the great center as it is that of any other evangelical Church.

J. O. ATKINSON.

HIGH POINT

Promptly at 10:00 A. M., Thursday, November 27, 1919, the congregation of the High Point church gathered for a Thanksgiving service. Everybody seemed to be happy and thankful for the blessings of the past and glad of the opportunity of assembling for a Thanksgiving service. Each one present gave some expression of gratitude to our Heavenly Father.

The envelopes for the Orphanage Offering at this appointed time had been previously distributed. During the closing part of the program this offering was taken which amounted to $34.50 and perhaps more to follow.

L. L. WYRICK, Pastor.

FOUNDED

After the Thanksgiving service at High Point, Brother R. C. Boyd requested everybody to go to the Sunday school room that the members wanted to see the pastor and his wife there. To our great surprise there was a large pile of packages of various sizes. Brother Boyd acting as toastmaster presented the packages in behalf of the church as a pounding for us.

In the midst of unspeakable gladness we tried to utter a few feeble words of our appreciation for this great kindness to us on Thanksgiving Day. We were overwhelmed because of joy. It was good to be there. This we shall long remember being the first "pounding" and May God bless each one who had a part.

The items were: Meat, flour, sugar, coffee, jelly and preserves, sweet potatoes, apples, meat, canned corn, syrups, kraut, raisins, candy, soda, cocoa, butter, canned tomatoes, cereal, cheese, canned fruit and many others. We are indebted to Brother J. E. Bost and wife for bringing the "pounding" and us home in his car.

This is a good people to serve. May the Lord make us more efficient for service and help me to be a better pastor. Thanks many times to one and all. To the Lord belongeth all the praise and glory.

SUFFOLK LETTER

The country home is the unit of the nation, the citadel of American democracy. Its individuality, its separateness, its independence, is its power. It represents government, business, society, and religion. It is simple, to be sure, but it is genuine. There is less of the conventional and artificial, and more of the real in thought, sentiment, service, and character, than anywhere else among men. There is more time for brooding over great questions, more opportunity for personal characteristics to develop than in the centers where time is lost in activity and individuality is lost in the community.

The tendency, in these days, is away from the country into the towns and cities. The soil no longer appeals to the young. The young men seem unwilling to follow the plow and the young women seem unwilling to keep a country home. This is unfortunate for the future of the state and the church. When Jesus "held the city He wept over it," and well He might, for it was the city that rejected Him and crucified Him. The peril of human society and civilization had always been the city. Babylon, Jerusalem, Rome, are witnesses to the tragedy of fallen civilizations. Scientists have worked out the alarming result that the family life is unknown in the city after the fifth generation. The blood of the city, if that is true, must be supplied by the country. Whatever ministers to rural life ministers to the welfare and destiny of the nation. The hope is that good roads, good schools, good churches, good prices for garden, orchard, and farm products will preserve the love of Americans for the country, because democracy cannot thrive in great cities. The few rule in great cities, no matter what form of government exists. Democracy has its seat of power in the thinking people of the country. The multitudes have no time to think for themselves in great cities. In the great stores, the great factories, the great hotels, the great offices, perfect organizations locate the thousands in their places as parts of great machines. There is no necessity for individual thought—the thinkers think for all. In the country it is not so. Individuals think in the country. The leaders in the cities grew up in the country, formed habits in the country, cultivated aspirations and ambitions in the country, and then developed their places in the cities.

The relation between the city and the country should be such as to maintain justice and reciprocity between the two, and not to build up the one at the expense of the other. Cities have been too much disposed to exploit the tillers of the soil by controlling markets in the interest of traders. Rural delivery, automobiles, larger intercourse, and new conditions have corrected, in some measure, this injustice and rural population is coming more into its own. Many inventions adopted to country conveniences have also added to the comfort of rural life. The time will no doubt come when electric wires will be within reach of the average country home for lights in house and barn, with power enough to saw wood, cut feed, churn milk, iron clothes, and render work a pleasure instead of a burden. Then country life will be the luxury of society and the haven of happiness. I almost envy the farmer in the next generation going to an electric-lighted, electric-heated church, in an electric-motored machine. This and more will come, if this generation hold fast to God and maintain, with increasing interest, the cause for which Jesus died.

W. W. STALEY.

WHEN IT RAINS IT POURS, SOMETIMES AT LEAST

When I was in Columbus, Ga., last summer, I noticed that the church pulpit had only an Oxford Teacher's Bible. There was no objection to that in itself, but it seemed to me that a pulpit Bible was needed. During September I was in Virginia, and chanced to speak of the fact in the presence of some friends, when Mr. E. L. Everett of our Berea (Nausmond County) Christian church, asked me how much I wished I told him. He immediately handed me the money with which I should purchase a pulpit Bible for the Rose Hill Christian church in the City of Columbus, Ga., for which he has the thanks of both pastor and people.

A little later, I received a notice from Brother Jas. H. Blanchard of our Third Christian church, Norfolk, Va., saying that he had ordered a fine pulpit Bible to be sent to the Rose Hill Christian church from the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio. A few days later that, too, came and it is indeed a fine Bible and also just suited to the needs of the pastor while he is in the pulpit. It is printed on India paper and handsomely bound, very light and handy. I found inscribed on the fly-leaf of this Bible the following:

Compliments of the Third Christian Church, Norfolk, Va. A Gift to the Columbus (Georgia) Christian church, as a token of esteem for their pastor, Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., and in recognition of the good work our brethren are trying to carry on.

Both pastor and people highly appreciate these valuable gifts and send most hearty thanks to these dear friends.

At the Rose Hill Christian church, Columbus, Ga., on the evening of November 27, 1919, we took a Thanksgiving offering for the Christian Orphanage at Elon College, N. C. Though the church is both young and poor, it gave for that good work the sum of $112.05, and it did it with such a hearty good will that every one present seemed happy over the gift for the good work in which our brother, Mr. Chas. D. Johnston, is leading so well. The Columbus church really enjoyed giving to this good work.

MISSIONARY

MISSIONARY NOTES

China and India and Africa are poor, and their people do perish from hunger, poverty and want by the millions. All this because we have not made known to them their legacy. We keep them poor. Our Christ left a legacy that would have made them great and wonderful and rich. But we Christians withhold that legacy from them. Christ said "Go tell." But we neither go nor tell; as is our duty and our privilege.

General S. C. Armstrong once asked this pointed question: "What are Christians in the world for but to achieve the impossible by the help of God?"

Who can answer that question?

Missionary Sunday Schools

The number of schools entering the missionary column increases with the weeks. I am just in receipt of a letter from which this is taken:

"You may put Bethlehem (Nansemond County, Virginia) Sunday school down as a missionary Sunday school. We have decided again to give a portion of our collections for missions. I was elected Mission Leader to give a four-minute talk on missions every Sunday morning. I want you to pray that I may be able to do or say something that will make our people at dear old Bethlehem see the need of more mission work and that they will give more to send the gospel where it is needed.

"At our last Ladies' Aid, after much thought and prayer, we decided to have a Woman's Missionary Society. We have organized with eighteen members. I beg you to pray for us to be a real Missionary Society in work and in prayer. We have started this great work and I am praying it will do great good."

This is from Sister J. E. Harris, R. F. D., Suffolk, Virginia, and it means that missionary interests will grow in the Bethlehem church. It was a man of wide observation and experience who wrote that it only required one heart aflame in a community with missionary zeal to kindle the missionary fire in any Sunday school, church or community. Sister Harris is deeply interested, as many others of our women are coming to be in the various Sunday schools, churches and communities.

Inspiration

Our General Mission Board in annual session at Dayton, Ohio, adopted the following which is very much appreciated and which ought to serve as a source of inspiration to the brotherhood of the Southern Convention:

"Resolved: "That we learn with pleasure concerning the increasing interest in and giving for missionary work by the Southern Christian Convention as evidenced in the new and larger goal just set by our missionary workers there, viz: $500,000 to be secured in cash and pledges, within three years from this date for home and foreign missions. We hope this faith and vision may be not only blessed of God and that this goal may not only be reached, but that in so doing it shall be an inspiration to every other section of our brotherhood."

J. O. ATKINSON.

SUNDAY SCHOOL MISSIONARY WORKERS

It rejoices this writer very much to learn that a number of our teachers in the Sunday schools are creating interest in missions among their pupils. We are told that the reason why the Methodist Episcopal Church was able to put on a campaign for $80,000,000.00 mostly for missions was due to the fact that that great body of religious workers resolved fifty years ago that every Sunday school should be a missionary society. This is not a bad resolution and one which it is devoutly hoped may be adopted by every Christian Sunday school in the land.

We note with pleasure that Mrs. H. E. Roane, formerly Miss Sallie Morrison, has charge of the missionary work in the adult department of the Rosemont Sunday school, and that Sister O. S. Mills has charge in the junior department of the missionary work. We predict now that the Rosemont Sunday school will be heard from as a real missionary factor in the future.

We were in Dover, Delaware, Sunday the 30th ult., and Miss Helen A. Wise was elected Superintendent of Missions for their Sunday school and we were assured that Miss Wise would do her part in making the Delaware school a real missionary factor. This school also decided to give one Sunday a month offering for the Orphanage and one Sunday a month offering for missions; a program which many schools are adopting and which seems to us most fitting indeed.

J. H. Fogleman—THE CHRISTIAN SUN is fine and I enjoy it very much.

ENFORCING PROHIBITION

To the People of North Carolina:

The undersigned having been appointed Director of North Carolina under the Act of Congress to provide for the enforcement of Prohibition, desires to make known to the people of North Carolina his purposes and plans, and to appeal to them for the co-operation, sympathy and support without which he cannot reasonably entertain hope of success in the performance of the great task that he has undertaken.

In brief my task is to bring about, in connection with others hereinafter indicated, an end to the making of and the sale of intoxicating liquors in this State. This, I realize, is a great task, but it is not impossible of achievement. We are supported by the law of this State, and by the law and the Constitution of the United States. We have the expressed will of the people to rely upon. If we fail, our failure must be interpreted as the failure of the supreme law of the land. If we lose, the victory will be the triumph of the lawless over the State, the Republic and the Constitution; of the minority over the majority. We cannot afford to fail. Regardless of our views as to intoxicating liquors, all good citizens must agree that the law must be maintained and the Constitution kept inviolate. If we cannot maintain the Constitution, we cannot maintain our Republic.

I realize, and the Bureau of Internal Revenue realizes, that we cannot succeed in the above by the activity of Federal Officers. We shall not undertake to do so. We shall do all we can do, but we are ready to co-operate with the State and local officers and with all good citizens; and on the other hand, we feel that we are entitled to the co-operation of the State and local officers and all good citizens. One of my first endeavors will be to effect practical co-operation between the general public, the State, county and municipal officers, and the Federal officers. The task is too great for the Federal officers alone. We shall have about forty men operating in the State, under the supervision of S. R. Brame, Supervising Federal Prohibition Agent, Richmond, Va., but these forty men will have to depend upon the police in the towns, the sheriffs, the constables and deputy sheriffs, the State authorities, the Judges, the Solicitors and the Court; and also, and in no small measure, upon the good, patriotic men and women of the State. We shall seek the co-operation of the organized opposition to liquor business, the Anti-Salon League, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and other Temperance or Prohibition organization. And last, but by no means least, of the Churches, the ministers, the church members, the newspapers and of every man or woman who believes in the majesty of the law and in the duty to enforce it.

We all must recognize that the condition in North Carolina is bad; it has been growing worse rather than better for two years; but it is not hopeless. On the other hand, I am encouraged to believe that by means of active public sentiment, a wholesome regard for the law, and the earnest co-operation of the great body of law-abiding people, we can win our war against the distiller and the liquor-seller within two years. All will depend upon the earnestness with which the rank and file of our people throw themselves into this cause. I ask the people to demand that any officer, whether Federal, State or local, charged with the maintenance and the enforcement of the law shall fully perform his duty. We must catch the distillers rather than their stills. We shall tolerate no half-dealings, no slack conduct, no questionable causes by the Federal officers. They are appointed on the merit system. They must make good or be cut off the pay-roll. Their records and their conduct will be the test by which they will stand or fall. I ask the public to judge them by their records.

Information as to sales of liquor or the operations of distillers may be sent to me, at my address given below. Or they may be sent to Mr. S. R. Brame, Supervisor for this District, Richmond, Virginia; or to the squad leaders nearest you, of whom they are four, as follows: J. F. Lifsey, Norlina; H. G. Gulley, Raleigh; P. E. Daney, North Wilkesboro; J. H. Reed, Asheville.

But I do not want you to send for Federal men, if your local men are doing their duty. They must not be slighted or offended. I know that many of them are diligent and trustworthy. I want you to try first the men directly responsible to you—your police, constables, sheriffs, and deputy sheriffs; and let them seek Federal assistance if they think it necessary.

Finally, I shall request the Judges and Solicitors to put the heaviest penalties compatible with justice upon any offender convicted, whether in State or Federal Courts. Heavy penalties are required by the conditions—the rapid spread of distillers and their increase through the State have shown us that penalties heretofore imposed are not sufficient.

I have great confidence in the people of North Carolina. The great majority of them believe in upholding the law and the Constitution. I shall rely upon them to give unreserved support to the object of this announcement. I shall look to them for information as to violations of the law. I shall respect their confidence, divulging no names without permission. I shall expect them to demand of the Federal Deputies and of County, State, and local officers the strictest account of their responsibilities. I have labored many years in the practical work of enforcing Revenue and Prohibition laws. I am entering upon my new relation in the earnest hope that I shall live to see this State free of the blight and the stigma, the disgrace and the demolition of the distilling and the selling of intoxicating liquors. And if I have a man's part in the achievement of this end, I shall ask no more. I shall be satisfied that my life has been justified by its fruits.

Respectfully,

T. H. VANDERFORD,

Federal Prohibition Director.

The second industrial congress is in session at Washington this week and it is hoped that something may be done to harmonize the situation between Capital and Labor.

THE UNSEEN, THE UNHEARD, AND THE UNKNOWN

(Rev. J. T. Kitchen)

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."—I Cor. 2-9.

If some one were to give you a good home far away and you were about to move there to live, the mind would be busy and the imagination very active thinking of the place, its location and surrounding. The imagination would be induced to paint a suitable location and surpassingly beautiful scenery until you would be charmed with such delightful contemplation. Your heart would beat with glad expectation, and swell with inexpressible delight and gratitude to him who made the gift, that he would be held in loving remembrance by you. Towering mountains fertile valleys, rushing rivers, extended plains, charming landscapes, and large forests are ahead of you as you think of the way lying so beautifully before you. With these attractions you are freely and pleasantly invited onward to your new home. With all this under consideration with the imagination playing a most lovely part in the act, the fatigue and danger incident to the journey are lost in the happiness which overflows the soul.

Jesus has provided and given you a home in His Father's house, and He invites you to live with Him there when you leave this world. It is no wonder that so many sermons are preached about this home of the soul; it is not out of place to hear so many fervent prayers offered to the Lord to help you on to this new home, nor is it strange to hear so many thrilling songs about it. The home which has been so beautifully described by many in all ages of the world—that home which has been the great theme of so many anxious ones; that home which has been so tenderly and lovingly described in the Bible itself, and that home which has inspired multitudes of wandering pilgrims. All the beauty and happiness of that home has never yet been told.

Before taking a long expected journey the mind and body had been actively engaged in surveying and preparing the way, and the imagination had been playing so delightfully pleasant as it ran over the way before you. The realization of heaven will be surpassingly greater than the imagination has pictured it. To imagine a stroll through flower gardens of rare beauty is pleasing to every one who dwells on these beautiful thoughts, but when the flight, the ramble, has been made and the imagination returns to you with no real flowers to inhale and no beauty to behold it is somewhat disappointing to you. But when you enter a conservatory or garden and look with eager attention at the different colored beauties which perfume the soft morning breeze, causing feeling of peaceful delight to completely possess your whole being, the experience gives inexpressible happiness. And just somehow in this way will heaven unfold to us as we may enter to gaze upon its unfading splendor, and to enjoy the music of the new song chanted forth in strains of eternal joy. We shall be like Him and see Him as He is.

This leads us to notice that, "Eye hath not seen." The human eye, what an interesting study to the specialist, and to all who think about this great provision and helpful privilege. It has its lenses, intricate and complicated parts designed and made for us to see what God has so wonderfully made and placed before an admiring gaze. Just think for a moment what a great, happy privilege it is to see, to use the eye at will, and it is always ready for our use. It is both microscopic and telescopic and adjusts itself in quick succession as the needs and conditions demand, contracting so as to see the very smallest things, and then expanding to take in extended views and distant worlds. That which the eye has seen has so often filled the soul with intense delight and inexpressible joy. The gift and provision for seeing, who can estimate its value? How many appreciate to its fullest extent this one of God's greatest blessings to the children of men? To gaze upon the green fields; to take a look at the majestic forests; to behold lofty mountains; to gaze upon the ocean with its rolling waves dashing themselves to pieces on a rocky shore, to scan the starry sky, and to view nature with her loveliness, beauty and attraction is a splendid thing for any one to enjoy. When you see the blind your sympathy is drawn toward them at once, and you feel, what a great pity it is they cannot see the beautiful things spread out before them. You who can see are blessed with one of the greatest privileges of life. The writer of these thoughts once dreamed that he was blind, and that dream gave him much concern while dreaming it, but he received some comfort from the experience of having committed to memory many parts of the Bible, even whole chapters, and that helped relieve the sadness of the dream.

The eye is often very active for a whole day—even into night without resting—without closing itself to sleep. The intelligent eye, the active eye and the watchful eye, are seen and much admired. So closely connected with the brain that the thoughts and emotions which tremble within sparkle and flash quickly through this wonderful means of seeing. It is important, therefore, to cultivate purity, honesty, truthfulness and every other equality that is good so as to be seen and read by others while passing over the way.

While every many things of the world have been seen, there are things "which eye hath not seen." "For the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." While it is but natural to look at the things of earth, try to look upon and see by faith the things of fadeless splendor in the immortal state. Eye has not seen the beautiful city of God; it has not seen the shining streets; it has not seen the towering walls; it has not seen the great white throne, nor looked with delight upon Him who sits upon the throne; it has not seen the twelve gates; and it has not seen the bright convoy of angels flying with cherubic and seraphic beauty through the heavenly city. In visions of rapture the soul has often been delighted. By faith and imagination it has hovered near the throne, but the natural eye has not been permitted to look upon the things of that bright home.

Age and disease dim the eye, and the keen sight is often put out by different causes. When your grandmothers' eyes were dimmed, they could not see so well to thread the needle to sew and darn for you as once they could, and some of you remember how you used to thread it for them and how it pleased you to help them in this way.

The eyes which are dim and sightless here will see perfectly clear on the other side; for they shall see with undimmed beauty and with cloudless splendor "the things which God hath prepared for them who love him." Yes, the eye which saw so much to love and admire on earth—which gazed upon so many temporal things will see with greater clearness in the eternal life. Over the extended scenes of eternity it will forever look upon the bright mansion of light.

Now, turn your attention for a while to the listening ear. But while listening we notice that part of the text which says, "Nor ear heard." The ear has already heard much, in many places, of the music of nature, it has listened to many of its tender and loving strains. The ear is a great and wonderful blessing made by our Father for the happiness of His creatures. It is a very delicate, but a most serviceable organ—the organ of sound made so as to catch the lowest whisper as well as the loudest sound and communicate it to the brain. When hearing glad or sad news how soon it changes the looks according to the nature of the message received thus touching the emotions at once with joy or sorrow. See that drum so finely constructed and surrounding the delicate internal structure to take in and hold the sounds as they surge and roll and waft into its chambers. How the joyful sounds light up the face with inexpressible emotions which gather in the soul! When the air rings with harsh unpleasant sounds how it scowls the face and perverts the features.

Listening ones, have you heard the voices of nature speaking and singing to you in their fullness and power? An answer from millions of glad voices may roll down the ways of time saying with deep heartfelt interest: "We have enjoyed the music of nature in a wonderful way." The thunder rolling quickly through space, and from cloud to cloud, charged with electric power, and bursting with awful grandeur, is one of nature's loud voices. When the ground has been so dry for a long time when no rain has fallen for weeks, how very glad our ears have made our hearts, as they heard the first distant sound. It was a welcome messenger, forerunner of refreshing showers.

The voice of nature speaks to us in the breathing, whistling, singing wind, and even amid its terrific power we have often been made to fear and tremble. The voice of nature speaks to us in the dashing tones of the waterfalls as it pours its water over them with ceaseless grandeur. And it is also heard in the bounding waves of lakes and oceans. The stern rock-passengers of the ocean have heard its voice as they moved over the deep way. Then in fearful agony many minds turned to the Old Book where it says: "God is our refuge and strength, * * * though the waters thereof roar and be troubled." Amid many of the revolutions and evolutions of nature, in times of great distress when whirlwinds swept things in their course, and earthquakes excited, the people, the ear listened and heard the noise of these mighty forces. Then after hearing some of these things, this part of the text tells you that "Ear hath not heard." It has not heard the names of all the things which God has prepared for His faithful, loving children. It has not heard the song of the angels nor the splendid refrain of that new song.

You have friends who are very deaf—some of them cannot hear at all—and they have your sympathy. Some of them cannot talk—they have not had the privilege of expressing themselves in telling how glad and happy they were with profound emotions which filled their lives. They have not been permitted to hear the music of earth, nor to express the rapture it gives.

Listen now and notice that, "Neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him." The heart, the great life pump of the body, causing the life giving blood to flow through it at every throb, thus causing us to move among the scenes of time. It has also been called the place of the affections, for how often have expressions like these been used: "Glad heart," "Sad heart," "Tender heart," "Loving heart," "Pain heart." The heart is often filled with gladness and sadness, sometime too full to tell, and the feelings can only be told by the looks as they appear on the face or in the eye. Take good care of the heart, for out of it are the issues of life. It is so often touched with many different emotions which either give it strength or weakness. The heart is a wonderful provision to give and perpetuate life. The things which God has prepared for them that love Him have not yet fully entered the heart—they are too great for it now; it must be trained, used and developed here for greater, fuller and complete blessings. O, yes, the things, the things which God has prepared for them that love Him! The things. What are they? The text does not tell us what they are, they have not yet been told, because they are too many for it now, they are too large for it now, they are too glorious for it now, and they are too heavenly for it now.

No, no, it has not entered into the heart of man, the things which our Father has so abundantly prepared for them that love Him. "The things." What are these nameless things? O, I do not know, but believe they will be things of joy and blessing forever. It may be fully believed that one of them will be a beautiful, everlasting home. A home in heaven is a most joyous thing to expect. I knew a poor sufferer who was confined to his home for twenty years. He selected the hymns and the text he wanted to be used at his funeral. The text was: "This poor man cried, and the Lord heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles." In his affliction he was pleasant and patient, talking much about Jesus and his home in heaven. He lived in a humble home here, but now he has gone to his final home—a home where poverty and sickness will never come. O, the blessedness of a home, the comfort and ease and joy in a good, peaceful home! Every one who has such a home here knows what it is. It is home, home, home. To feel that you have a home in your Father's house is a great, good thing; and it is comforting experience to be an heir of God, and hope to possess and live in this home. So many homeless ones I see and hear of in this land, our sympathy is drawn toward them, but when the thought of a free and permanent home dwells in the mind, it ought to be very helpful to them as they journey on the way to it.

The next best thing which God has prepared for those that love Him will be health. This is not a healthy world. Disease, sickness and death take hold of all conditions of people; and they all enter the homes of plenty as well as those of poverty. Over this world many sick and suffering ones may be found, and they are trying hard both by faith and works to get well, strong and active again. To be so is their chief desire. They want to get out of that pale, emaciated, bent, withering and weak state, and to come into vigorous and healthy activity. All they possess would be freely given could they just get health and strength again. If they could get to some fountain which gave lasting health they would spare no time nor means in getting to it, and would remain drinking until made whole. How the encouraged face would brighten under the touch of such joy and inspiration, and what a life of hope would fill the soul every day!

Another of these things will be happiness. Happy, forever happy. You may know by a short experience what a little happiness means here—what it is to get a foretaste of its matchless feeling. How it fills you with transport and inexpressible delight as you run up the enchanting way which invites you onward. All classes and conditions of people are looking for happiness in life and they expect to realize it some day, and they are very anxious for the time to come when they can exult in the long expected joy. Even life here would be weary without the hope of happiness. "If in this life we only have hope in Jesus, we would be most miserable," but it extends beyond the vista of time and looks over into the realms of eternity.

Those who love God are promised great things. They have not yet entered into the heart of man—those wonderful and eternal things. Do you love God? From millions of voices may be heard the joyful answer: "We love Him now, and we will love Him forever."

Principles and Government of The Christian Church

(The Franklin, Virginia, session of the Southern Christian Convention ordered that the Principles and Government of the Christian Church be revised and that a committee be appointed to make the revision. The following members of the Convention were appointed to do the work: Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., President; Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., and W. A. Harper, LL. D. Some weeks ago the committee completed its work, and we are privileged to print, in serial form, the Principles and Government as outlined, subject to ratification by the next session of the Convention.—Editor.)

CHAPTER V SECTION III DUTIES OF OFFICERS

1. The President shall preside at all the meetings of the Convention, sign all the proceedings of the body, visit annual Conferences, and confer, counsel and advise with the brethren, and perform such other duties as his office may require. The Vice-President shall perform all the duties of the President in his absence or in case of death.

2. The Secretary shall duly record all the proceedings of the Convention, attest all its acts, take proper care of all documents, records, and writings belonging to the body, countersign all drafts on the Treasurer for the payment of money, and publish the time and place of meeting when directed to do so by the President.

3. The Treasurer shall receive all moneys for the Convention, keep an accurate account of all receipts and expenditures, pay money only on orders drawn by the President and countersigned by the Secretary; and at every regular session of the body make a full report in writing of all assets, receipts and expenditures.

SECTION IV BUSINESS OF THE CONVENTION

1. The Convention shall have the supervision of all the general enterprises of the denomination within the bounds of the Conferences of which it is composed.

2. The Convention shall appoint a Board, consisting of five, on Publications, whose duty shall be to provide suitable matter for reading and religious instruction, carefully examine all manuscripts and other matter designed to be published by the Convention, provide for the publication of a religious newspaper, to be issued weekly, as the organ of the Convention; provide suitable Sunday school literature, and shall be governed by such rules and regulations as the Convention may prescribe. The Board shall continue in office for two years, or until its successor is appointed; and shall make a full and complete report in writing, at each regular session of the body. The Convention should place at the disposal of the Board sufficient means to give success to the publishing interests of the Convention.

3. A Board of Education, consisting of five, shall be appointed, whose duty it shall be to examine all plans and projects for the establishment of schools and colleges, and to devise means and suggest ways by which the educational needs of the Convention may be supplied. This Board shall be appointed for two years, and be governed by rules and regulations prescribed by the Convention, and report in writing, at every regular session of the body.

4. A Mission Board of ten members shall be elected, five to represent Home Missions, and five to represent Foreign Missions; this Board shall have charge and control of the Home and Foreign Mission affairs of the Convention, and make a full report of their work to the Convention in its regular sessions.

5. Standing Committees shall be appointed on Evangelism, Social Service, and other subjects that require mature deliberation, with such duties as the Convention may prescribe.

6. The Convention shall elect a Board of ten members on Religious Education, five to represent the Sunday School Department and five to represent the Christian Endeavor Department; and this Board shall have charge of the Religious Education of the Convention.

7. The Convention shall have an Executive Board, of three, consisting of the President, who shall be Chairman, ex-officio, and two other members, elected by the Convention, to whom shall be referred all matters of business which require attention between the sessions of the body. This committee shall report in full its work biennially.

8. The Convention shall devise plans for raising funds to prosecute successfully the various enterprises under its control.

9. All difficulties arising in the local Conferences may be carried, by appeal, to the Convention, whose decision shall be final.

10. The Convention shall determine the boundaries of the local conferences.

11. For the division of existing conferences, or the formation of new ones, application shall be made to the Convention; and when the good of the cause demands the division of an old conference, a division may be ordered, or a new conference may be formed, when a number of ministers and churches, sufficient to give influence and perpetuity to the cause, are widely separated from any other Christian conference.

(To be Continued)

The fuel situation continues to be critical. Both sides are contending, while most of the mines are idle. War-time restrictions are being put into operation for the conservation of coal. Railroads are cutting off many trains and the general public is being greatly inconvenienced.

The Department of Agriculture assisted the Census Bureau in preparing the list of questions to be asked of every farmer at the coming census.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Our good friends are very kind to us and are lending us a helping hand in the work.

Zion Sunday school, Moncure, N. C., one box containing towels, soap, gingham, one counterpane, and one quilt. Pilot Cotton Mills, Raleigh, N. C., 64 yards of Chambrays. Mrs. Ed Smith, Clayton, N. C., 6 yards of gingham, two towels, one pair of shoes. White, Williams & Company, 390 yards of gingham. Mrs. L. D. Pierce, Frankfort, Ind., one box of nice clothing for the children. L. Banks Holt Manufacturing Co., 120 yards of cloth for shirts. Mildred and Kate Baldwin, one quilt. Women's Missionary Society, Ingram Christian church, (Va.), one box containing clothing, gingham, hose, quilt, two pillows and sheets. Miss Rosa Best, Haw River, N. C., two dozen pair hose. Mrs. M. L. Bryant's Sunday school class, one box clothing for little girl.

Our Singing Class rendered a program at the College the fourth Sunday night to a large and appreciative audience and a splendid offering was made. They went to Durham on November 30, and rendered their program at the 11 o'clock service and had a splendid audience and the offering amounted, in the Sunday school and church, to about $240.00. The people were very kind to us and showed us every courtesy possible and the children were delighted with the trip.

Let all the churches do their best in this Thanksgiving offering. We need the money to feed and clothe and care for the sixty-one children in our care.

Don't forget our little children when you are making up your Christmas presents. Remember they are just as anxious for "Old Santa" to come as any other child. They have no one to buy for them to make them happy on Christmas morn.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

CHILDREN'S LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley: It has been some time since we have written to the Cousins. Hope they are all well and had a fine Thanksgiving. We have pieced a quilt for them and are sending it.—Mildred and Kate Baldwin, Ages 9 and 12 years.

We have received the quilt and it is very pretty indeed, and we thank you.—"Uncle Charley."

THE SLEEPYTOWN EXPRESS

Just beyond the rainbow's end a river ripples down
Beneath a bridge, around a bend, and flows through Sleepytown—

Through Sleepytown, where goblins toil to fashion wondrous toys

And make up fascinating games for little girls and boys.
And automobiles, just the size for little hands to drive,
Await to whirl you all about as soon as you arrive.

But no one is ever allowed in Sleepytown, unless
He goes to bed in time to take the Sleepytown Express!

I know a foolish little boy who always starts to whine
When he is asked to trot upstairs before it's half-past nine,

And often he will stamp his feet and shake his tousled head

And make a racket, even then, when he is sent to bed.
Of course when he has said his prayers it always is too late

To catch the Sleepytown Express; it starts at half-past eight.

And so, in all his long, long life—he's five years old this fall—

That little boy has never been to Sleepytown at all.

But other wiser little boys, and little girls as well,
As soon as eight o'clock has struck rush right upstairs,
pell-mell,

Get off their clothes and say their prayers, just of their own accord;

And when the train comes rolling in, they're there to climb aboard.

Then, through a long, delightful night they wander up and down

And have the most exciting time in queer old Sleepy-town.

And not for eake or anything that children could possess

Would any of them ever miss the Sleepytown Express!

—Kansas City Star.

THE STORY MOTHER TOLD

This is a true story about when grandmother was a little girl. Her name was Carolina. It is about the Indians, too, so, of course, you will like it.

It was the year when great-grandfather sold all his corn and made enough money to buy a set of mahogany chairs for the parlor, upholstered with horsehair. The chairs had to be bought a long way from where grandmother lived, so great-grandfather hitched the pair of grays to the farm wagon, and he said that great-grandmother and Caroline might go, too.

It was a pretty ride in the early morning. There was no one out except the birds and the wild rabbits and a fox or two. The sleepy flowers beside the long road were just beginning to open their eyes, and Carolina thought that she had never felt so happy in all her life.

They came to town at last and ate their luncheon on the common, and then they bought the beautiful mahogany chairs, upholstered with horsehair, for the parlor. It surprised great-grandfather very much indeed that he had some money left over.

"O, see, father," Carolina said as she ran to the back of the store, where there was a little wooden rockingchair painted yellow. Then she sat down in it and began rocking. "It just fits me," she said. "How nice it would be to sew my patchwork squares in it!"

Great-grandfather smiled, and then whispered to the shopkeeper, who smiled, too. When they started home the six parlor chairs were in the back of the cart; and grandmother, in her pink calico dress and sunbonnet, was in the back of the cart. She sat and rocked in the little rocking-chair as the cart jogged on.

Before they reached home it began to grow dark.
The trees beside the road made long, black shadows, and it was very still.

"I wonder if the Indians have been seen about here lately," great-grandmother asked.

Great-grandfather did not answer, but he urged the horses on. Just then a great figure in a blanket and feathers rose in the road in front of them. Behind him were others. They were Indians, and they wanted the farm wagon and the horses.

But just as the Indian chief started to lay hold of the bridle he saw great-grandmother in the little yellow rocking-chair in the back of the wagon. "How!" he said in great fear, and then he turned and ran back into the woods, followed by all the others. The Indians had never seen a rocking-chair before, and it frightened them.

So grandmother reached home safely, and she sewed a great many patchwork squares as she sat and rocked in her little yellow rocking-chair.—Caroline S. Bailey,

If you plan to get a Bible or Testament for a Christmas present, we suggest that you place your order now.
Stock is short in many numbers and labor scarce.
Then, too, remember that transportation is very much torn up during the holiday season. Correspondence solicited.

We advise those who expect to order books or Bibles for Christmas presents to do so now. Many numbers cannot be secured. We have in stock about all the available numbers that we have been carrying, but have a low stock in many instances. Order now. We also call the attention of those who want names placed on Bibles or Testaments. It takes about ten days or more to fill such orders. We would not advise such orders after December 12. We are anxious to serve, but cannot on short notice.

Mrs. C. R. Moon—I wish for you and THE SUN great success.

SOME CHRISTMAS SUGGESTIONS

CHRISTMAS BOOKS FOR CHILDREN

We list below a supply of books which we have purchased suitable for Christmas presents for the children. For the lack of space we cannot tell what each book is about, but we have exercised the very best care in the selection, to see that all stories are helpful and interesting:

The Thorn of the Fortress50 cents
Matt of the Waterfront50 cents
The Other Side of the Rainbow60 cents
Bantern Stories60 cents
Billy and Bumps35 cents
Good Night Stories60 cents
The Jim Family25 cents
Little Folks of the Bible30 cents
Sunny Hour Books15 cents

(Little Folks of the Bible can be had in books I, II, III, and IV. Books I and II are for boys and books III and IV are for girls. We will send any four books of this title for $1.00.)

(Sunny Hour Books are made up of 14 different titles. The price is 15 cents for each title, any two for 25 cents; four for 45 cents and all over four at 10 cents per volume.)

All the above named books are suitable for children 8 to 14 except the "Sunny Hour Books" which are for little tots that cannot read or are just beginning to read. "Sunny Hour Books" contain an abundance of pictures and are bound with colored cloth and stamped with an appropriate design.

Add 4 cents per volume for postage when only one copy is ordered, and 2 cents per volume for postage in lots up to ten; all over ten volumes add 1 cent per volume for postage.

CLEARANCE SALE OF CHILDREN'S BOOKS

We make it a rule in December of each year to buy the closing out stock of several suitable books for children. By buying the closing out stock, we are enabled to get a better price and make the books within the reach of all.

We have been able this year to buy the complete stock of the following 50 cent sellers, and offer them at prices indicated:

Blazing the Way	$.25
Bright Side and Other Side25
Crown Jewels20
From the Thames to the Toossachs.....	.25
Up the Susquehanna25

(This price is postpaid)

The following reductions will be made in lots: Any two copies, 45 cents; three copies, 60 cents; four copies, 75 cents; all over four copies at 17 cents per copy.

The supply is limited and we advise you to order early. If any title has exhausted when your order is received, we will substitute unless otherwise instructed.

These books are all well made and handsomely bound.

Make some child's life happy by presenting one or more of these books. Invest a few dollars to make the little tots of your class happy.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR DECEMBER 21, 1919

(Mrs. Fred Bullock)

At the Empty Tomb and with the Risen Lord.—John 20:1-21:25.

Golden Text: "He is risen, even as he said."—Matt. 28:16.

Alternative Christmas Lesson

The Prince of Peace.—Isaiah 11:1-10; Luke 2:8-14.

Golden Text: "Thou shalt call his name Jesus: for it is he that shall save his people from their sins."—Matt. 1:21.

There are two lessons offered for today, and while the children will undoubtedly wish to study the Christmas lesson, yet it would seem to be wise for those who are following this series of studies in the lives of Peter and John to continue this study, unbroken. There is no reason why the thought of this Christmas time should not cover both the birth of our Lord and His resurrection. The one would have meant little without the other. So, in the study of these two great disciples, their birth or life would have meant nothing at all to us, had they not been born again into newness of life in Christ Jesus. The thing that makes their lives a worthwhile study for us is the fact that these lives were hid with Christ in God.

It is worthy of note that Peter, self-sufficient Peter, whom we last saw turning away to weep bitterly, is with John when the message of the Resurrection reaches them. Had he found courage and strength and promise of forgiveness in communion with the best loved disciple and the mother? We may well believe so. Younger John outruns Peter, but Peter does not hesitate at the mouth of the tomb; he goes in, and John, following, and seeing the linen clothes lying, still in the shape of the body they had covered, stuffed with a hundred pounds of spices, and the napkin which had covered the face, still wrapped together the space of the neck from the rest of the wrappings saw and believed. No grave clothes here to be loosed to let Him go. No grave could hold Him. This they knew as surely as when He stood with them that later day on the shores of Galilee, and gave His last Commission.

And as the year draws to its close, we may think we hear with Peter, "Lovest thou me? Go and work for me." "Lord, what shall this man do?" "What is that to thee? Who art thou that judgest another man's servants? To his own master he standeth or falleth. It is not him that thou art to follow. Follow Thou Me."

CHRISTMAS IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

"Putting Christ into Christmas," said a speaker some time ago, referring to the "White Gifts" Christmas; Santa Claus, and good times and first thought, but is there not a real need for this, after all? We have put so many other things into Christmas; Santa Claus, and good times and big dinners and merry making, and gift giving, all good and pleasant and proper in their places, but have we not almost forgotten that this is the birthday of the King? That we are gathering together to celebrate the birth of the Prince of Peace? Yet people often talk as though it were a wrong to the children to suggest the idea of giving to others at Christmas time. When my birthday comes, I want my presents myself, don't you? Then when Christ's birthday comes, shall we refuse Him a gift? How shall we make Him a gift? Listen to His own words, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto me." And listen, children, above all others, if given the opportunity, prove for themselves that it is more blessed to give than to receive. If there are poor children in your school or church, see that they are remembered, but make some plan, somewhere, so that every child may bring a birthday gift to Jesus. It is not the size of the gift, but the heart thought back of it.

MRS. FRED BULLOCK.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR DECEMBER 21, 1919

(J. V. Knight)

The Christmas Message and the Christmas Spirit.—Luke 2:8-14; Matt. 2:9-11. (Christmas Meeting).

It is impossible to think of Christmas without thinking of a gift, for it would be a poor Christmas without a gift. Most of us expect also to receive a gift of some kind. What is a real gift? Is it not the gift we make expecting nothing in return? If we give to a friend and that friend in return gives to us, we have simply made an exchange. The Christmas message carries the idea of a real gift, for we know that God gave in order to bring it about. John 3:16.

Every year thousands of gifts are exchanged between friends, and the mail is loaded with Christmas packages until the congestion is terrible. Wonder what Jesus thinks of these costly exchanges as He looks upon the millions who stand by in need of food and raiment? Surely the great heart of God must grieve as He sees conditions as they are.

Let us exemplify the Christmas spirit by looking out for those who are poor, the blind, the lame, the unfortunate and those who are unfortunate and helpless, and bestow a gift upon them that will bring a real blessing upon them and a real joy to our lives. The spirit of Christmas is the Christ-like spirit. He gave His life for others, and our lives will never find the real joy coming to them, until we have given something that will help others to a better life.

A story is told of a little boy whose parents gave him a bicycle for a Christmas present. The very next day he rode it down the street and sold his bicycle, and bought magazines, chocolates, and various things and made his way to the hospital ward where there lay hundreds of wounded soldiers, and gave each of them something to read and eat. In that way he carried out the spirit of a real Christmas for Christ. If you would have a merry Christmas, "Go thou and do likewise."

Notes

December and January are to be devoted to better prayer meeting months. December will be given to better attendance, music, and the development of the quiet hour. January to public testimony, and personal work. Get the little book, "How to Bring Men to Christ" (by Torrey from THE CHRISTIAN SUN, or the C. P. A., it costs about twenty cents.

This is the book other Christian Endeavorers will use. Ask your pastor to give his Wednesday night messages to this work.

How about a question box for January? Do you have any problems to face in your Society? We shall attempt to answer any question you send in between now and the last week in January in the space given for the notes. Let them come. Who has the first one? The questions must be such as will be interesting to others as well as your own local society. No name will be given with the answer unless you request it for we have only so much space.

MARRIAGES

KLINE-DUSING

At the Christian Parsonage, Winchester, Virginia, on October 25, 1919, Elmer Kline and Pearl May Dusing were united in marriage by the writer. We wish them much happiness.

W. T. WALTERS.

GOOD-LARRICK

Rufus Clayton Good and Pauline Mary Larrick were quietly married at the Christian parsonage, Winchester, Virginia, November 19, 1919. The contracting parties are popular young people of Roek Enon, Virginia and we join with their host of friends in extending them our best wishes.

W. T. WALTERS.

LONAS-BROWN

A Thanksgiving wedding was celebrated at the Christian parsonage, Winchester, Va., when Isaac C. Lonas led Mrs. Mattie E. Brown to the marriage altar at 4:30 in the afternoon. The bridal couple are well known in Winchester and we join with their friends in wishing them much happiness.

W. T. WALTERS.

JOHNSON-GREEN

Miss Mary A. Green became the bride of Mr. Alton G. Johnson on November 25, 1919, at the Yarbrough house in Raleigh, N. C. Mrs. Johnson is the attractive daughter of W. A. Green of Pleasant Union Christian church, near Lillington, N. C. Mr.

Johnson is the son of Archie L. Johnson of Lillington, and is also one of the United States noble soldier boys. Their home will be in Lillington and we predict for this fine couple a happy home. Only a few of their friends witnessed the ceremony which was performed by the writer.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

PARKS-BORROUGHS

November 26, 1919, Mr. June L. Parks and Miss Leta M. Borroughs were united in marriage by the writer at his home in Asheboro, N. C.

They were accompanied by Mr. Charles F. Cole and Miss Allene King of Seagrove, N. C.

Mr. Parks is a son of Mr. Lewis Parks of Seagrove and is now the popular mail deliveryman of Route 2 of that place. He has seen service overseas, being a member of the famous "Co. K," and was twice wounded. Mrs. Parks is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Borroughs of Aldridge, N. C.

They left immediately for Asheville, N. C. They will make their home at Seagrove, N. C. May happiness be theirs.

T. J. GREEN.

JAMISON-PERRY

On November 26, 1919, at the home of the bride, near Youngsville, N. C., Mr. David F. Jamison of Summerville, S. C., and Miss Minnie Mable Perry were united in marriage by the writer. Mr. Jamison is a prosperous young business man and Miss Perry is the beautiful and accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Perry.

The ring ceremony was used. The brother of the groom was best man and the only sister of the bride took the part of bride's maid.

Many friends were present to wish a good voyage to the happy couple. The wedding party motored to Raleigh, N. C. Mr. and Mrs. Jamison will be at home to their friends at Summerville, S. C. on their return from their honeymoon.

May their years be many on earth, filled with service and joy.

B. F. BLACK.

OBITUARIES

WOODLIEF

Deacon W. B. Woodlief of Mt. Carmel Christian church, departed this life on November 17, 1919, at the age of 90 years. Funeral services were conducted by his pastor, the writer.

For many years Brother Woodlief was a faithful officer of his church. A good man of ripe years and varied experience has gone. He leaves to mourn their loss: his beloved wife, Mary G., four sons, and three daughters. Thirty-five grandchildren and thirteen great-grandchildren and a host of friends. He was laid to rest in the home burying ground.

May the Lord comfort those left behind. Surely a good man is gone to his reward.

B. F. BLACK.

HALL

Mr. Henry Hall departed this life at his home in Burlington, N. C., November 28, 1919, in his eighty-third year.

He was united in marriage to Miss Kizziah J. Jeffreys, March 14, 1867, and to them were born eight children. His wife and six children survive him.

He was a Confederate veteran. He volunteered and joined the first company that left Alamance county for the field of conflict. The Confederate veterans who followed his remains to the grave attested his faithfulness as a soldier.

He united with Long's Chapel Christian church about thirty years ago of which church he was a loyal member till death called him from labor to reward.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer from Long's Chapel, assisted by Brothers Holt, Harrell, and Apple. The interment was in the church cemetery.

A loving husband, a kind father, good citizen, friend and neighbor has fallen asleep. The Lord bless and comfort the bereaved.

P. H. FLEMING.

CAPT. J. A. TURRENTINE—AN APPRECIATION

There is nothing grander than the home-going of one who has lived nobly and served faithfully his day and generation. We wish to express our appreciation of one whom we believe attained that distinction. In the passing of Captain James A. Turrentine the Burlington Christian church has lost a most faithful member, the town a valuable citizen, the home a kind and loving father. Perhaps no man in our city commanded greater respect, more love and admiration than our brother. His faith in God was strong, and his loyalty to his church was unquestioned. He was keenly interested in all the activities of the church and at the time of his passing he was our senior deacon.

As a man he was gentle, courteous and kind—a staunch friend, wise counselor, very energetic. He was a man of broad vision and broad sympathies. He wrought well, filling positions of honor and trust in both church and state and interested himself in many good causes. It was frequently my pleasure to listen to his narratives of the civil war. He was a good conversationalist, with a sense of humor and could relate incidents in a most interesting way.

Advancing years necessitated his giving up official duties, but his faithfulness to the end is most commendable. Of late years his hearing was very defective; many times he could not hear the sermon, but he was faithful in giving his presence, which means a great deal.

Last August we buried his sister, Mrs. Sarah Pix, a saintly character. In the home-going of these two most loyal members our church is poorer, but heaven richer. We count it a great privilege to have numbered them among our friends. To remember them will always be a pleasure. Their seats in the old church are vacant, but their influence lives on in the hearts and lives of men.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

CHRISTMAS MESSAGES

"Christmas will soon be here," we heard a child say over two months ago. How long the time seemed to us then, but oh long it seemed, and was, to that child! Really, to us it was short and only seemed a long time because of the many things that had to be done before the coming of the good and happy day. The child was ready—and waiting for Christmas; we were not.

You cannot get away from the thought of the child when you think of Christmas—we say that you cannot. It was a Child who made the event, and though He grew into manhood, the world has kept the day of His coming day of His life. He himself loved childhood, held it up to His disciples as a model, and punctuated His messages with the spirit of a child.

Then we wonder how great a time we would have, what a "good" Christmas we would have, if all of us could, as children, enjoy Christmas. We rush and push to get ready for Christmas, while the child just waits (anxiously) for the day to come. The over-work breaks us down; the child's life is sweetened by the expectations.

Late trains, crowded trains, congested traffic, and a thousand other abnormal conditions remind us of how the Christmas date stands out on the calendar, and how we let that day be the greatest of the month and year. The birthday of no man has ever meant so much to the world; no man, save Jesus, could mean so much. Let skeptics speak; let those who may deny the Christ, but this great surge of traffic we hear, the tramp of millions of feet Christmas shopping tell us a story that no myth can compete and no human heart can fully appropriate to its full and final meaning. When those who do not believe in Christ, explain and do away with the Christmas, then we will take cognizance of their message and theory.

Getting and giving during the Christmas season are two words often used. Selfishness wants to get; unselfishness wants to give. God gave His Son to the world to redeem and save it. God gave His Son because He loved the world, and when we give we should do so because we love, and not because of custom. Give in the spirit—and let that spirit be the spirit of the child of God, Jesus the Christ.

What a beautiful scene! We imagined ourselves peeping in through the window where all the family had assembled on Christmas eve night. The son from afar, the married daughter from a neighboring town, and all were there. An open fire to warm the house and to light it. Happy place! The children had returned and parents were happy, happy. And such will be many scenes this year. If it is so you can, go make the old home fireside ring with childhood laughter again.

James Whitcomb Riley, the Indiana bachelor poet of sainted memory, said something familiar in his "The Christmas Long Ago." What a picture appears when he says:

Come, sing a halo Heigh ho
For the Christmas long ago!—
When the old log-cabin homed us
From the night of blinding snow,
Where the rarest joy held reign,
And the chimney roared amain,
With the freight like a beacon
Through the frosty window-pane.

Ah! the revel and the din
From without and from within,
The blend of distant snow bells
With the plinking violin;
The muffled shrieks and cries—
Then the glowing cheeks and eyes—
The driving storm of greetings,
Gusts of kisses and surprise.

"One half of the world does not know how the other half lives," goes the old saying, and then let us add this: One-half the children never know how the other half spend Christmas. Today we were thinking of the poor, the destitute, and of the thousands of children who will not be visited by Santa Claus and know not the joys of toys, fruits, and other things. We were also thinking of the children whose fathers are confined in some prison, some penitentiary, for crime. The children are not responsible for this, and yet they suffer the sadness of a lonely home. No one save the Christ could bear the heart-aches of this world.

And wouldn't you like to have the names and addresses of all the children who are deprived of the Christmas, and were able to send each of them a box filled with nice things, and have it reach them early Christmas morning? Too ideal, and yet it has in it the balm of happiness. But while you cannot give to all, you can bring a little sunshine to a few, and so do that.

* *

As the big SUN family this 1919 Christmas enjoy, this scribe will be wishing for each member a happy, wholesome, and joyous good time.

NOTES

We understand that Rev. A. T. Banks is doing nicely with his wound received a few days ago by accidental shooting. Dr. D. A. Long preached for Brother Banks the first Sunday and Dr. Wicker the second.

Brother Chas. D. Johnston, Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, informs us that he is in need of a head matron for the institution and would like to get in touch with some suitable person. He prefers applications from members of the Christian Church.

Give THE CHRISTIAN SUN as a Christmas present. We will mail copies of all the December issues in time for Christmas, also send a letter for you. THE SUN will be a weekly reminder, for one year, of your love and esteem.

We call attention to Brother L. M. Clymer's advertisement on page 15. Brother Clymer is a member of our Greensboro church and is a mechanic of the first magnitude. His service is used by the Southern Railway and other big industries. We commend him to our readers.

We have received the following announcement: "Mr. and Mrs. J. Frank Savage announce the marriage of their daughter, Gladys Porter, to Mr. Lloyd Charles March on Saturday, November the twenty-ninth, nineteen hundred and nineteen, Norfolk, Virginia."

Long and happy life be theirs is the wish of this office.

We are glad to report that the work on the Christian Annual is progressing, and by the time this note reaches the public, practically all of the copy will be in type waiting for the proceedings of the Christian Missionary Association of the Eastern Virginia Conference, which met December 9. Of course, the work is not half over when the type is set, but we hope to have the Annual ready by the last week in December.

The Annual this year is to cost much more than the income. If the Conference treasurers will send check to cover the allotment of each Conference, we will endeavor to get some cash discount. Will those interested be kind enough to co-operate?

A GREAT ADVANCE IN BIBLES

Since the last issue of THE SUN went to press we have received a letter from the Bible publishers stating that great advances in prices have been made. Later we received new price list with instructions to govern ourselves accordingly. We have seen many advances in Bibles, but think that the last advance is the greatest that we have ever seen. Many numbers have advanced more than $4.00 each, whereas other advances have been from one dollar upward.

Two months ago we bought the largest line of Bibles and Testaments that we have ever purchased and have decided to sell what we have on hand at the old price. For instance: Bible No. 2014 has been selling for $4.50, and the new price is $6.50. We have about fifteen copies of this on hand and will sell for $4.50 the copy. This Bible is large type, soft binding, and very suitable for old people. A very handsome gift.

It is not practical for us to list all the numbers we have in stock, but if you plan to buy a Bible any time soon, we advise you to do so now, and we are going to make the following offer: If you want a Bible, give us the following information: 1. General description; 2. About what price; 3. For what age person; 4. For lady or gentleman. With this information we will send you as near the description as we have, and if it is the Bible you want, send us the price, otherwise return the Bible. The cost of returning will not be over ten cents. Your credit is good. Order today. The Christmas trade is rapidly taking up our stock.

We have had a good year so far as THE CHRISTIAN SUN is concerned. We are pleased with the co-operation that we have had. We appreciate it more than words can tell. The year is drawing to a close and we want to round out 1919 with the biggest and best financial showing that we have ever had. Friends have responded to statements in a very loyal and liberal manner. There are a few, however, that have not given heed to past due subscriptions. Will you, if you are one of these, look after the matter today? We need the money and need it now. It has been neglected because you have not renewed. You have not meant to do it, but just kept putting it off. Don't put it off longer, dear reader, if you are behind, but remit today. We thank you in advance.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

MOORE UNION

We met our first appointment after Conference at this place on the fifth Sunday. The congregation was large. The first thing we did, was to tell them of the interesting session of the Conference, and of its larger plans for the future, and as a local church we must get a larger vision of our responsibilities. That we must live better, do more work, and raise more money than in former years for the extension of our Master's Kingdom. We received two members. Brother B. J. Howard was present and took part in the services, and made some timely and appropriate remarks. We are anxious for this church to go ahead of anything it has ever done in any previous year. This is the church where the first money for Foreign Missions in the Christian Church was ever given—the nest egg. With this beginning the Christian Church has grown as it never had. Since this time the Christian Church has gained nearly one hundred per cent. She has now many equipped colleges, has two foreign fields established, with a church membership of more than one thousand, with schools, and creditable church buildings.

AN APPRECIATION

I noticed in the issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN under date of November 12, that a pastor had been visiting the homes in his community—he said that he had visited over a hundred families in five weeks. I think that it cheers most families for the pastor to visit in their homes. It puts them on friendlier relations and when all are visited none feel neglected.

A pastor never knows how much he has helped some one by his friendly visits. I don't suppose this pastor realized that he visited one home, at least, of twenty-seven years duration, in which he was the only pastor of any denomination that had ever been in the home and read a part of God's Word and offered prayer that God might bless that family. Much sickness and several deaths have occurred in that home; yet this is true, and I think that God's blessing will surely rest on pastor and people when they meet together in the homes for a word of prayer and praise to the Father above, the Giver of all good gifts.

A FRIEND.

FOUNDED

At my last appointment at Ether, N. C., for the Conference year, just before leaving on Monday morning, was notified, over the telephone, that I was wanted at the store of Brother H. Freeman. Upon reaching that place I found nearly all the ladies and a number of the men of the village, had gathered there and the next thing I knew, we were receiving a severe pounding, in the way of flour, corn, potatoes, sugar, coffee, canned goods of many kinds and other good things to eat too numerous to mention; also many pieces of wearing apparel. In addition to this a nice purse was given Mrs. Underwood as her "pin-money."

This little church had already made my salary more than it promised and sent up all asked for to Conference.

Indeed it is a pleasure to serve such a people.

May the dear Lord bless them in their New Year's work.

HENDERSON LETTER

On the first Sunday in November we began revival meetings with the Henderson church. Rev. J. F. Morgan, of First Christian church, Norfolk, Va., came Monday following, and did the preaching thereafter. There was a good congregation Monday evening, and the interest and attendance increased from service to service. In his usual plain and earnest style Brother Morgan delivered strong appeals for purity of life and earnestness in service on the part of church members, and a definite decision for Christ on the part of the unsaved. His solos were an effective and pleasing feature of his work with us. He sang the gospel message with great earnestness, and we think many hearts were stirred to greater love for the Savior by these messages of song. There was a number of renewals of faith and loyalty to Christ, and several yielded for the first time to the entreaties of love and mercy. There were five additions to the church. Brother Morgan, in his short ministry with us, won the love and esteem of many who will be glad to have him come again. We believe also by his coming the cause of the Master was furthered and His name magnified among the people. We should add that because of the approaching session of Conference we closed the meeting when the interest was fine and the prospects good for great results if the work could have been continued through another week. We regretted very much the necessity of closing when we did, but we hope to continue the work at an early date.

PLEASANT GROVE—INGRAM

Brother George C. Talbert, the teacher of the Bible class in the Pleasant Grove Sunday school surprised me yesterday by handing me $34.00 as an expression of appreciation from the people of the community, which when added to what my parents and other persons in my pastorate have given me brings the total up to $94.00 besides many profitable gifts. Many thanks are hereby tendered all these gracious friends and may the bounty of the Father abide with them.

Just a word here to the people of this pastorate and others to whom it may apply: Do, please, continue your attendance on church services during the winter months.

The good old days of sumptuous dinners in country homes have not past. Being as I am the pastor of nearly five hundred country church members and living continuously with them I should be able to say whether or not the dinners of "ye olden days" have ceased. Having been to nearly a hundred special dinings in the last twelve months I should be able to appreciate the real country dinner. On spotless linen, in bright, airy dining-rooms, dishes of turkey, turtle, and 'possum; mutton, beef, and pork; vegetables innumerable, chickens incalculable, eggs inestimable have graced the boards of small and great alike. Wild game, fresh fish, and delicious oysters were served in season; pies of every fruit and flavor have been in abundance; the daintiest of sweets, the sourest of pickles; and cakes the pride of an hundred cooks have been served with ices, salads, and sauces in season and out of season. The words of the hosts, the smiles of the hostesses, and the cheer of the children added to the liquid goodness of the steaming, hot coffee as the tales of merriment went around.

NOTES FROM ELON COLLEGE

The students of Elon College have undertaken the publication of a weekly newspaper to be known as "Maroon and Gold." The first issue is to appear on Wednesday, December 10, and it will be issued each week on this date of publication. The subscription price is to be $1.00 a year. The students have rallied to the new publication with characteristic zeal and a strong appeal is to be made to the alumni also for subscriptions. It is confidently expected that the paper will be self-supporting from the beginning. The officers are: P. E. Lindley, Editor-in-Chief; L. B. Ezell, Assistant Editor; L. M. Cannon, Business Manager; C. M. Cannon, Advertising Manager; H. W. Johnson, Circulation Manager. Miss Mary D. Atkinson and Miss Lucy Eldridge with Watson D. Lambeth and the officers of the staff constitute the Board of Directors. The consultation editory representing the faculty is Prof. F. F. Myrick.

Professors Betts and Alexander of the music faculty have just returned from a trip to South Carolina where they gave a recital in voice and piano before the faculty and students of Erskine College of Due West, S. C.

The fall term recital of the faculty of music is to be given December 11 at 7:30 P. M. Professors Betts and Alexander, Mrs. Sturm, Miss Fisher, and Miss Smith will appear in this recital.

The new pipe organ which has just been installed will be used for the first time in the faculty recital.

Elon will send five student representatives to the Student Volunteer Conference to be held at Des Moines, Iowa, during the Christmas holidays. Two young men will represent the Y. M. C. A., and three young ladies the Y. W. C. A. The Y. M. C. A. representatives are J. E. McCauley, Chapel Hill, N. C., and H. W. Johnson, Cardenas, N. C. The Y. W. C. A. representatives are Miss Juana Pinnix, Kernersville, N. C.; Miss Janie Angel, Greensboro, N. C., and Miss Maude Sharpe, Burlington, N. C.

BROTHER EDWARDS REPORTS A GOOD YEAR

My past year's work has been a pleasant one to me. I have had several conversions at my monthly appointments. On last Sunday we had a sweet service at Randleman. Twenty, or more, young men gave their hands for prayer. One old man, sixty years old, was converted on Sunday of the revival meeting at this place. Some asked for prayer, some came to the altar weeping and confessing their sins. There has been some move on the part of the unconverted in every service since June, except five. Some were backsliders, some church members reclaimed, some were not Christians at all. The Lord has wonderfully blessed my work this year.

My churches are looking forward to greater things the coming year. Brethren pray for me that the Lord may use me in the salvation of many souls. May the Lord bless our entire Conference. May our College send out many laborers for the Master. "The harvest is ripe and the laborers are few."

W. J. EDWARDS.

Coleridge, N. C.

FROM THE PORTSMOUTH CHURCH

The special services just held were marked by great success and blessing, not only to the Christian church but to the city at large. Rev. Luther B. Bridgers, a native of Portsmouth, is a man of large resources and power, not only as a preacher, but as a singer of gospel solos and a leader. Many of his sermons were masterpieces of pulpit oratory, others were clear and convincing expositions of fundamental doctrines. A mass meeting for men resulted in about five hundred men from all parts of the city coming together, fifty of whom took a stand for Christ. During the revival more than one hundred and fifty expressed a desire to live a Christian life, and have gone into different churches. Many old fashioned revival scenes were witnessed and on Sunday nights it was estimated that a thousand persons were crowded into the church and other rooms. Many others were turned away. The church is greatly refreshed and has demonstrated that there is no risk in undertaking a great revival and meeting the necessary expense without difficulty when the man who comes and the people who receive him are in the attitude of prayer and expectancy.

The Billy Sunday campaign, which is to open in Norfolk, Va., the first of the year, is receiving the co-operation of many of the churches of Portsmouth. This church has been requested to furnish twenty singers, six ushers, twenty other workers and about two hundred dollars as its share of the campaign.

Our church has suffered a great and inspeakable loss in the removal of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Wood and family from our church. Their services to the Portsmouth church and other activities of the city cannot be estimated, their service of time, money and energy to say nothing of their personal influence, deprives us of a working force difficult to replace. Our love and best wishes go with them.

HENRY W. DOWDING.

SUFFOLK LETTER

It is one thing to be ignorant; it is another thing to ignore. The former is a blessing; the latter is almost a crime. The one is a state in which the person is not informed; the other is the spirit that passes by as "unworthy of notice." They are as far apart as the poles. Without ignorance society could make no progress; with the spirit to ignore, progress would be impossible.

A state of perfect knowledge would mean a stagnant world. It is the unknown that lures men, keeps men active, and develops the race. Ignorance must remain among men as the latent resource for activity and progress. It is the ore in the mine, the power in the air, the work in electricity, the water in the earth. "God saw that everything that he had made was very good. Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them." There was nothing more for God to do in the physical universe. It was a finished universe, set in motion under fixed laws and moves on till this good day. If all human conditions were perfect, if all human beings knew all there is to know, the day of human development would be at an end. There would be no need for schools. There would be little need for books. There would be no need for physicians. There would be no need for lawyers and courts. The ignorance of the race makes universal and perpetual field for development and activity. If the atmosphere were always just suited to human comfort, the four hundred thousand coal miners would never strike; but the necessity for mining coal opens a great field for service, not only in mining the coal, but in determining human relations, individual and corporate rights. The ignorance of the race has created the great schools; and sickness and accident, the great doctors and surgeons. Not only so, but the great problem of the world today is not ignorance, but learning. Man knows too much to be good. His knowledge made the world-war, and all the infernal weapons used in that war. It is easier to inform the ignorant than to convert the wise. There is such a state as ignorance of God as well as ignorance of science and art, of business and law. With a generation born again, the world and the race would furnish an endless opportunity for improvement and growth. Inventors develop in the field of ignorance—in the field where men do not know. There is absolutely no end to the unknown, and in that field is the new and the better day. All finished things grow old and die. The museum is the graveyard of the mechanical world. It is the cemetery of things passed out of use. The living improvements are constantly burying the outworn and the dead that were the best in their day. The stage coach is mummy beside the automobile; if the stage coach had been the last possible in vehicle the automobile would not be. The ignorance of our forefathers makes possible the progress of the present time; and our ignorance will leave ample room for improvement in the time to come.

The field of missions is the boundless field in which Christianity can live and grow. It will die, if it remains at home. The great drives for money and spiritual life in the churches reveal a new objective in the purpose of Christianity. The pressure of great movements among the denominations bears mightily upon the thought and conscience of the followers of Christ. There is no end to this outworking of the Christian motive for the salvation and edification of the world. If I may be permitted to coin an expression in line with all the forward movements for more liberal contributions to Kingdom work, let it be that, we put up or give up; put up men and women, put up money, put up ourselves "in His name."

W. W. STALEY.

AMELIA

I made my first trip to Amelia the first Sunday in December. I had a very pleasant visit considering the day. After service the church held a short business meeting for the purpose of calling the pastor for the coming year. The call for me was unanimous and I am to preach two Sundays in each month. The pastor's salary was doubled.

The church seems to have the spirit of true worship. I feel that the Lord will be with us during the coming year and that we will have the best year that the church has ever had. I find the people beginning to awaken to the Master's call: "Go ye into my vineyard and work and whatsoever is right I will repay thee."

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Our Thanksgiving offerings are coming in nicely and many of the churches have more than doubled over last year. We have already past the half way mark to our goal. We have faith enough in our Church to believe we will reach the goal and go over the top.

Let every church have a part in this the largest thank offering ever raised for the Orphanage.

Our friends are good to us and we are glad to report the following:

Mrs. Alice Kimbro, Byromville, Ga., one pair blankets, one quilt one pair towels, two sheets, two pillow cases; Ladies' Aid Society, Chapel Hill church, one box containing quilt, sheets, shoes, dresses, towels, hose, etc.; Antioch church, Valley Va., one box containing four quilts, two counterpanes, six sheets, towels, hose, etc.; Ladies' Aid Society, Franklin Christian church, Franklin, Va., one box containing clothing for the children; Foster and Cavness, Greensboro, N. C., two boxes oranges; Ladies' Aid Society, Pleasant Hill church, Albion, Ill., one box clothing for the children.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

LETTERS FROM THE COUSINS

Dear Uncle Charley: I am a very rude little boy, about three years old. Am sending fifty cents as my Thanksgiving offering to the little cousins. Mamma gave me this money to stay home with her for company for sisters and brother to go to school. Love to all the cousins.—Phillip Harrell.

You ought to see my little boy. He is rude too. He likes to tease his sisters the best of all.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: We are sending you $1.00 as our Thanksgiving offering. We picked cotton for daddy to get this money. Love to all the cousins.—Mary and Fleeta Harrell.

You are smart little girls to pick cotton and give your earnings to help the orphans. I hope to see you sometime.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: I spent Thanksgiving with my aunt. We had lots of good things to eat, and hope the cousins did also. Enclosed you will find a dime. Hope I will be on the honor roll. I wish you all a Merry Christmas.—Rachel R. Hofler.

Our little folks are looking forward to Christmas with a great deal of delight.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: Enclosed you will find check for $2.00 as a Thanksgiving offering for Helen and me. On the sixth of October a sweet little sister came to live with us. Her name is Mildred Charline. I can hold her and sing to keep her from crying when mother is busy. Love to all the orphans.—Maurine Nelson Isley and Helen Elizabeth Isley.

You must be good to little sister. She will keep you company and play with you.—"Uncle Charley."

THE SECRET CHAMBER

Into the secret chamber of my heart,
Wherein no mortal enters, Lord, come Thou,
And make Thy dwelling-place ere day depart.

Even now the clouds are golden in the west;
The long, slant shadows creep across the way;
The glory fades on yonder mountain crest.

It will be nightfall soon, for faint and far
The pallid moon, a silver crescent, hangs
Above the low reach of the horizon bar.

The night is lonely and beset with fears!
Come Thou, O Lord, come in and dwell with me
Through the long darkness till the dawn appears.

O Thou who didst create the human heart,
Didst Thou not make one sure place for Thyself?
It is high sanctuary where Thou art!

Thou knowest, ah! Thou knowest! Words are weak!
When the tongue falters and the lips are dumb,
Thou knowest all the yearning heart would speak!

The muttered prayer Thou hearest. Lo! the shrine
Waits for Thy presence! Ere the day be done,
Take Thou possession, O Thou Guest Divine!

PAULINE'S POVERTY CHRISTMAS

Mary L. Stetson

Three dollars! Why, that isn't enough to get what I'd planned for father himself." Sorrowfully Pauline fingered the crisp bills, her Christmas money, which father had just given her, and two big tears rolled down her cheeks. "Oh, dear me," she sighed, "if we'd ever got to be poor, I wish we'd always been poor. It wouldn't seem so hard then."

A knock sounded at the library door, a secret knock known only to Pauline and her most intimate friend.

"Come."

The door flew open, and Theda Marston danced into the room, but stopped short as she noticed the expression of dejection on Pauline's face.

"Whatever is the matter, Pollykins?" she asked.

"Draw your chair up here by the fire, and I'll tell you."

Theda obeyed and listened attentively to her chum's tale of woe. When it was finished, however, the least little twinkle lurked in her brown eyes as she exclaimed, "Oh, Pollykins, aren't you the lucky chick!"

"Lucky?"

"Yes. Why, I never had three dollars given me to spend for Christmas, never in my whole life. Last year I did manage to save two from my strawberry money, and I felt rich, I can tell you."

"Why, Theda Marston, how do you give so many presents, then?"

"Make 'em mostly," was the brief reply.

"But I can't sew."

"There isn't any such word as 'can't,' or if there is, there ought not to be. Of course you can sew if you try. Say, have you anything on the docket for this morning?"

Pauline shook her head.

"Neither have I, as good luck would have it. I'll run over home and get my sewing, and you—Oh, Pollykins, where are those lovely pieces of silk you were showing me the other day? If you don't need them for patching, they'd make the dandiest sewing-bags," and like a flash, Theda was gone.

When, in a remarkably short time, she was back in the Varnum library she was pleased to find that Pauline had already collected, not only the pieces of silk, but also scraps of linen, laces, and the like.

"Sakes, what a lot of Christmas presents you can get out of all this!" cried Theda. "That linen will make the dinkiest little jabots, and here's a thin piece just right for a handkerchief."

Both girls were soon hard at work. By luncheon time, Pauline's plans for Christmas were nearly completed, and several of the gifts were well under way.

"Aren't those bags going to be just too dear!" exclaimed Theda. "We'll have to call in at Woolworth's the next time we're down town, for the brass rings and the ribbons. Then you can finish them in a jiffy. I think mine's the loveliest of all, and I'm glad I know beforehand that Santa is going to bring me one thing I need most awfully."

During the weeks that followed, Pauline Varnum learned the happiness that comes to those who make some real effort for their friends, a happiness that had never been hers when she could have all the spending money she wished merely for the asking.

Several days before Christmas the little gifts were wrapped in white tissue paper, tied with red ribbons, and carefully laid away in Pauline's top bureau drawer. There, too, was a pack of Christmas postals, every one of which had been selected especially for the person to whom it was addressed. Every card was stamped ready to go in the mail when the proper time should come.

And a dollar and forty-two cents still remained.

"I hardly know what to do with the rest of this money," Pauline remarked to Theda. "It seems silly to give two presents to one person, even if the presents aren't very big."

"I thought you were the girl who couldn't begin to buy your Christmas presents with only three dollars," smiled Theda. "But I'll tell you what, Pollykins. You know those Petersons that live down on French Alley, don't you?"

"Never heard of them."

"Well, anyhow, they go to our Sunday school, and they're awful poor. Let's get 'em up a Christmas box. I'll cook something, and that money of yours is enough to buy mittens for Mary and Jamie and Georgie; their hands were just purple last Sunday, poor kiddies! I shouldn't wonder if we could save enough for a doll and a book and a drum, besides."

"That's a grand idea, Theda. We'll do it. I'd like to know, though, how you come to call those children all by name, when I've been to the same Sunday school and never even heard of them."

The box for the Petersons was filled to overflowing, so that when the time arrived for the delivering of the Christmas gifts two of Theda's young brothers had to be pressed into service.

Christmas Eve father's and mother's gifts alone remained in the top bureau drawer. Pauline locked her chamber door, took out the two heriboned packages, and opened them. The collar box, covered with some of her own needlework, was hardly as fine a gift as the sectional bookcase she had planned to buy for father, nor was the soft linen handkerchief with its narrow edging of laee half as nice as the mahogany writing desk, that had long since been selected for mother.

All of a sudden, in spite of the work she had put into these gifts, they seemed so mean. Father and mother deserved so much more.

Then a happy thought came to her, and she smiled through her tears.

When, next day, Pauline's parents received the only gifts their daughter had ever made for them with her own hands, each found attached a little note. Father's read:

"I'd like to have got you, if I could,
A splendid present of glass and wood.
On a little card in the box you'll see
A picture of what my gift would be.
But since I couldn't buy that this year,
I've worked lots of love into this, daddy, dear."

And mother's read:

"This isn't the desk of mahogany fine
Which I meant to give you, dear mother mine!
In Palmer's window, that's waiting still;
You may look for yourself whenever you will.
This gift is a small one, but each stitch made for you Brings love and best wishes from a heart that is true."

Other Christmases, father and mother had smiled and said, "Thank you, dear," when they had received Pauline's gifts, but this year they said nothing at all for as much as a minute. Meanwhile, father coughed and blew his nose very hard, and mother put her handkerchief to her eyes. It wasn't the Christmas handkerchief, though. That was too precious to be used even for tears of joy.—Exchange.

THE CHRISTMAS BAKING Christmas Gingerbreads

Beat two cupfuls of molasses and a cupful of softened butter in a bowl until they are well blended. To this add a cupful of sour milk; stir in also a quarter of a cupful of hot water, in which a level tablespoonful of baking soda has been dissolved. Add the grated rind of a lemon, a tablespoonful of cloves and ginger to taste; then stir in enough flour to make a stiff dough. Roll the dough very thin on a molding-board and cut it into the desired shapes, such as toys, trees, Santa Claus, bells, stars, or stockings. Put the pieces in a well-floured dripping-pan and bake in a moderate oven. When the cakes are done, before they are altogether cold, frost lightly with pink or white frosting or add the tiny pieces of candy which are made for this purpose.—The Mother's Magazine.

Principles and Government of The Christian Church

(The Franklin, Virginia, session of the Southern Christian Convention ordered that the Principles and Government of the Christian Church be revised and that a committee be appointed to make the revision. The following members of the Convention were appointed to do the work: Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., President; Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., and W. A. Harper, LL. D. Some weeks ago the committee completed its work, and we are privileged to print, in serial form, the Principles and Government as outlined, subject to ratification by the next session of the Convention.—Editor.)

CHAPTER VI DISCIPLINE

Section 1. (a) Local churches have jurisdiction over members and should deal with offender in the light of Gal. 6:1 and Matt. 18:15-17.

(b) Caution should be exercised in receiving accusations against members, and investigations should be conducted with a view to restoration.

(c) If an accused person is unable to represent himself before a Committee of Investigation, he may request a minister or a member of his own church to represent him.

After due citation of the parties, trials shall be impartial, and in the spirit of affection.

Section 2. (a) Conferences only have jurisdiction over ministers. They are ordained by conference, amenable to conference, and from the decision of conference there is no appeal.

(b) Charges against a minister can be preferred only by two ministers, a church (I Tim. 5:19), or by common fame. Prosecutions can be made only by a minister or by a committee from the church preferring the charge. Parties prosecuting a minister should be warned that failure to sustain the charges will subject them to censure.

(c) Accused ministers shall be furnished with a copy of the charges, the names of the witnesses, and allowed twenty days to prepare for trial. The investigation shall be conducted by all the ministers present at conference, or by the Executive Committee and the ministers of the conference ad interim; and, in either case, the findings shall be reported to conference for final action.

(d) All trials shall be conducted in the light of Matthew 18:15-17, and the decision of conference is as final in the case of a minister, as the decision of a local church in the case of a member.

Section 3. (a) Charges against a church for neglect of duty or violation of church government may be preferred by a sister church or two ministers; and, in either case, the charges must be prosecuted in the name of the party preferring the charge. The same caution and good spirit should be exercised in the trial of a church as in the case of a minister. The investigation may be at its own place of worship, or at some other place, through a committee appointed by conference, or the Executive Committee.

(b) A church found guilty of charges may be admonished, censured, or cut off from conference; but sentence against a church should not involve members who protest against the offense with which the church is charged. A church cut off may be restored by repentance and application.

The competency of witnesses shall be determined by the court of trial in all cases.

CHAPTER VII

All amendments or changes in the Principles, Government, Directory for Worship, or official forms and ceremonies shall be authorized by the Convention; and all motions and resolutions for this purpose shall be published in the church paper three months before the session at which the subject is to be considered, and all changes may be determined by a two-thirds vote of the Convention.

PART III

CHAPTER I OFFICIAL FORMS AND CEREMONIES

RECEPTION OF MEMBERS

1. Persons desiring to unite with the church upon profession of faith shall present themselves before the altar, while a hymn is being sung. Candidates should be previously instructed by the pastor or deacons, as to the qualifications and duties of church membership.

HYMN.

The minister shall examine the candidates in the presence of the congregation as follows:

- (1) Have you sincerely and heartily repented of all your sins?
- (2). Do you believe in the Lord Jesus Christ as the Savior of the world now as your personal Savior?
- (3) Is it your purpose through grace to live a godly life?

These questions being answered in the affirmative, the minister shall declare the fact to the congregation, i. e., the members of the Church. The name shall here be announced, and the question asked:

You have heard the answers given by Brother (or Sister) to these questions. Is there any objection to receiving this brother (or sister, or brothers and sisters) into full fellowship in this church? If there is any objection on the part of any member of the church let it now be stated.

If there is an objection, the case shall be referred to a regular or special Conference of the church for investigation. If there is no objection, the minister shall proceed to receive the applicant (or applicants) into full connection with the Church, saying:

On behalf of the church, I extend to you the right hand of fellowship and welcome you into this church, and to all its privileges. May you be a blessing to the church and the church a blessing to you, I commend to you the Holy Bible as a sufficient rule of faith and practice in the church, and enjoin upon you to study it carefully and prayerfully, and to obey its precepts according to the best of your understanding and ability.

PRAYER.

2. Applicants may be received into the church in like manner by the Deacons, when the services of no higher officer can be procured.

3. Members may be received by transfer from any evangelical denomination, and such letters of transfer shall be read before the church by the pastor or one of the deacons.

CHAPTER II

ADMINISTRATION OF BAPTISM

The mode of baptism is optional with the candidate and should be administered by an Elder.

During the singing of a suitable hymn the candidates should present themselves.

HYMN.

The minister should then read from these Scriptures or other suitable lesson:

Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them. And when they saw him, they worshiped him: but some doubted. And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen. Matt. 28:16-20.

An appropriate prayer should then be offered.

PRAYER.

After which, the minister shall proceed to administer the ordinance, saying:

In obedience to the command of my Lord and Master, and upon the profession of thy faith, I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Amen.

The services will then proceed as usual, or close with suitable exercises and benediction.

THE STORY OF ST. NICHOLAS
Legends of the Popular Christmas Saint

Father Christmas has a strong competitor in good St. Nicholas, whose "day" falls on December 6. In some countries, Belgium, for instance, Christmas is not celebrated socially at all, except in individual cases and as a result of contact with Germany, and St. Nicholas's day is the great day of the year for the little folks. It is from him that we have borrowed some of the most memorable customs of Christmas, the stocking-hanging at the ingle, and Santa Claus, which is simply a corruption of his name.

Who was St. Nicholas? He is said to have been bishop of Myra in Lycia, Asia Minor; but his story, as it has come down to us, is purely legendary, and not a single fact of his life can be historically confirmed. If we accept the legends, he was bishop of Myra in the days of Diocletian, in whose reign he was not only persecuted but tortured. He lay in prison, like many others, until Constantine came into power. He was present, it is said, at the council of Nice; but this statement rests upon popular legend, and the presence of St. Nicholas at that council is not mentioned by the historians of the period. St. Athanasius, who knew all the bishops of his day, never once refers to St. Nicholas.

It is hard to imagine, however, that he was a purely fictitious person. Obscure he may have been, but the story of his life evidently gripped popular imagination, and legends began at a very early period to accumulate about his name. In those days, when biography passed from man to man by means of story-telling, it was natural that stories about saints should grow in wonder. It was a credulous age. Miracles seemed a part of the normal life of man, and so no one had difficulty about believing the most marvellous wonder-tales about the servants of God.

The earliest monument to the cult of St. Nicholas is the Church of St. Priscus and St. Nicholas, which was built at Constantinople by the Emperor Justinian. By the ninth century St. Nicholas appears in martyrologies in the West, and in the eleventh century churches were frequently dedicated to him. In the year 1087 the inhabitants of Bari, in southeastern Italy, organized an expedition, obtained the saint's body by means of a ruse, and carried it to their town, where they buried it in triumph. Since then pilgrimages have been steadily made to his tomb, and are made to this day.

More churches have been dedicated to St. Nicholas than to any saint except those of apostolic times. In little Belgium more than 100 churches bear his name, and in England more than 400. St. Nicholas is the patron saint of Russia, and he is the especial protector of children, scholars, merchants, and sailors.

Artists have presented St. Nicholas with three children standing in a tub by his side. This refers to a legend which tells how he miraculously restored to life three youths who had been murdered, cut up, and concealed in a salting-tub by an inn-keeper in whose house they had been lodging.

The legend, however, whose influence reaches down through the years to our own day, is one which tells of how the saint surreptitiously gave gifts of gold to three maidens who could not be married because they had no dowry, and whose father was about to sell them to a life of shame. This story was perpetuated by means of pictures which show the saint outside the house secretly casting his gifts through a window. It is said that this legend is responsible for the custom of giving presents at Christmas time, or on St. Nicholas Day, December 6; and the secrecy of the saint's act is kept up in the attitude of our own Santa Claus, who is never seen, but whose gifts nevertheless reach all good children.

St. Nicholas is often called the boy bishop. Legend has it that when the former bishop of Myra died, a certain bishop dreamed that the first person named Nicholas that came to the church doors was the person God had selected to be bishop of the church. The doors were carefully watched, and in the early morning, long before ordinary worshippers appeared, the boy Nicholas came to pray. The bishop asked him his name, and when he learned it insisted that he be made bishop. Modestly he accepted. "He woke in prayer and made his body lean," says the chronicler; "he was humble in receiving all things, profitable in speaking, joyous in admonishing, and cruel in correcting."

In parts of Europe to this day Nicholas is revered, and simple-minded peasants believe that he still gives gifts and cures disease. In Belgium and Holland he reigns supreme as Father Christmas does in other lands. It is Nicholas that rides on his ass, over the housetops, and that brings good things to the little folks. He is still a strict disciplinarian, however, for he has always with him a rod to remind the children of what to expect when they are bad.—Christian Endeavor World.

THE HISTORY OF THE CHRISTMAS TREE

Jane A. Stewart

The bright and beautiful Christmas tree, with its attractive gifts, is naturally looked on as an essential part of the Christmas festivities. No celebration is quite complete without it.

To whom shall we credit its institution?

To attempt to locate the original source of the idea is a fascinating bit of research.

If we look for the origin and first introduction of the Christmas tree we find it reaches far back into the night of time. Indeed, so hazy is the record back of the brightly glowing Christmas tree that it is quite impossible to tell where or by whom it was first originated. Antiquarians are prolific in suggestion on the subject. But the clues afforded immediately lead back to the dubiousness of fable and tradition.

Nearly every country has its legend claiming for its own this popular feature of modern Christmas observance. In Scandinavia the Christmas tree is said to have sprung from a "service tree" which germinated from the blood-soaked soil where two lovers met a violent death. This claim is substantiated by the statement that at the Christmas-tide inextinguishable lights gleamed from the branches.

In a French romance of the thirteenth century a great tree is described whose branches are covered with burning candles, and on whose top is a vision of a child with a halo around his curly head, the tree representing mankind, the child the Saviour, and the candles (some of which are upside down) good and bad human beings.

Some old writers would have us believe that it may be Saint Winfrith (afterward called Boniface, the name given to him when he became a missionary), who deserves the primary honor of giving the Christmas tree to the world, as narrated in a charming, suggestive story illustrative of the displacement of heathenism by Christianity.

Saint Winfrith, the story goes, leveled a majestic oak which had been worshiped by his Druidic converts, and immediately a stalwart young fir sprang up in its place.

Addressing the company of newly enlisted Christians, Saint Winfrith said:

"This little tree, a young child of the forest, shall be your holy tree tonight. It is the wood of peace; for your houses are built of fir. It is the sign of an endless life, for its leaves are green. See how it points upward to heaven. Let this be called the tree of the Christ-child. Gather about it, not in the wild wood, but in your own homes. There it will shelter, not deeds of blood, but loving gifts and rites of kindness."

That is an interesting story which attributes to Martin Luther the inauguration of the Christmas tree. A favorite engraving represents him sitting in his family circle with a lighted Christmas tree on the table beside him.

The story goes that the idea came to Luther when he was traveling alone one Christmas eve. The snow-covered country, the trees, the sky with its gleaming points of light, made such a deep impression on him that he could neither shake it off nor express it. After he reached home he went into the garden, cut a little fir tree, brought it into the nursery, put some candles on its branches, and lighted them. Affectionate regard for the great religious leader has fostered the desire of his followers to associate his name with the popular and kindly custom. The story has wide acceptance.

There is considerable ground, too, for the suggestion that the famous tree "Igdrasil," of Norse mythology, may be the original progenitor of the modern Christmas tree. The pine trees of the Roman saturnalia have also claim to be regarded as prototypes of the Christmas tree. They were decorated, not with toys and gifts, but with images of Bacchus, as described by Virgil in the Georgics. The practice of burning Yule logs was a reminiscence of the days of those wanton winter festivals.

The Egyptians may have originated the idea in their practice of decorating their houses at the time of the winter solstice with branches of the date palm, which they regarded not only as an emblem of immortality, but also of the star-lit firmament.

The first authentic account of the Christmas tree is dated in the seventeenth century. The manuscript is in a private collection in Friedberg, Hesse, and is dated 1608.

The world-wide adoption of the Christmas tree began at the opening of the nineteenth century. The introduction of the Christmas tree into England occurred after the marriage of Queen Victoria to a German prince, which brought German customs to England.

Holland is indebted for the Christmas tree to Queen Caroline, who introduced it in 1830. Ten years later the French were shown Christmas-tree customs by the Duchesse Helene at the Tuileries, and at first the tree was disliked. In France the Christmas tree, root and all, is planted in a tub and kept fresh until New Year's, when its beauty and its gifts are to be enjoyed.

The foreign immigrant who brought the Christmas tree to America did more perhaps than any other to give us the happy home festival which we now enjoy.—Western Christian Advocate.

CHRISTMAS QUESTIONS

E. E. Longnecker

Would you like to think, as you hurried by,

Planning for those of your own,
That the echo of your Christmas bells

May be a childish moon
Wrung from the heart of some little one
Who has had no Christmas day,
Who must look on the joys of the other kids
With a heart too sad for play?

Would you care to witness the childish grief
And the struggle not to cry—
Then the bitter tears of some little tot
Whom Santa Claus passed by,
Who can't understand why he was missed
When all of his friends fared well,
Who manfully struggles to hide all trace
Of the tell-tale tears that fell?

Have you heard the shouts of boundless joy
Of the kids on Christmas day?
Have you ever seen the eagerness
With which they start to play?
Have you seen their faith in Santa Claus,
His reindeer and his sleigh?
It's seeing things with the eyes of a child
That brightens your Christmas day.

Have you seen the light in a youngster's eyes
When he first beholds his toys
In the early dawn of a Christmas morn?
Then you've seen the joy of joys.
Is it worth your while to know that you,
On whom good fortune smiled,
Have done your part to gladden the heart
Of some unfortunate child?

—Toledo "Blade."

SOME CHRISTMAS SUGGESTIONS

CHRISTMAS BOOKS FOR CHILDREN

We list below a supply of books which we have purchased suitable for Christmas presents for the children. For the lack of space we cannot tell what each book is about, but we have exercised the very best care in the selection, to see that all stories are helpful and interesting:

The Thorn of the Fortress	50 cents
Matt of the Waterfront	50 cents
The Other Side of the Rainbow	60 cents
Lantern Stories	60 cents
Billy and Bumps	35 cents
Good Night Stories	60 cents
The Jim Family	25 cents
Little Folks of the Bible	30 cents
Sunny Hour Books	15 cents

(Little Folks of the Bible can be had in books I, II, III, and IV. Books I and II are for boys and books III and IV are for girls. We will send any four books of this title for $1.00.)

(Sunny Hour Books are made up of 14 different titles. The price is 15 cents for each title, any two for 25 cents; four for 45 cents and all over four at 10 cents per volume.)

All the above named books are suitable for children 8 to 14 except the "Sunny Hour Books" which are for little tots that cannot read or are just beginning to read. "Sunny Hour Books" contain an abundance of pictures and are bound with colored cloth and stamped with an appropriate design.

Add 4 cents per volume for postage when only one copy is ordered, and 2 cents per volume for postage in lots up to ten; all over ten volumes add 1 cent per volume for postage.

CLEARANCE SALE OF CHILDREN'S BOOKS

We make it a rule in December of each year to buy the closing out stock of several suitable books for children. By buying the closing out stock, we are enabled to get a better price and make the books within the reach of all.

We have been able this year to buy the complete stock of the following 50 cent sellers, and offer them at prices indicated:

Blazing the Way	$.25
Bright Side and Other Side25
Crown Jewels20
From the Thames to the Toossachs25
Up the Susquehanna25

(This price is postpaid)

The following reductions will be made in lots: Any two copies, 45 cents; three copies, 60 cents; four copies, 75 cents; all over four copies at 17 cents per copy.

The supply is limited and we advise you to order early. If any title has exhausted when your order is received, we will substitute unless otherwise instructed.

These books are all well made and handsomely bound.

Make some child's life happy by presenting one or more of these books. Invest a few dollars to make the little tots of your class happy.

Sunday School and Christian Endeavor

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR

DECEMBER 28, 1919

(Mrs. Fred Bullock)

The Training of Peter and John.

—Review John I 1:1-9.

Golden Text: "Ye shall be my witnesses."—Acts 1:8.

For three months we have thought and studied about these two great men. What have we learned concerning them? What do we know of them any more than we did when we began this study? Have you ever made a list of the facts concerning these two men? Perhaps such an outline will help you.

Peter: First known as Simon, surnamed Peter by Jesus. A son of Jonas, a native of Bethsaida. No mention of parents, one brother, Andrew, married, and probably having at least one child. His brother and mother-in-law appear to have lived with them. By occupation a fisherman and sailor; goes to Judea to hear John the Baptist and is there introduced to Jesus by Andrew. A rough, uncouth swearing, cursing, fisherman, unstable, hotheaded. Can you add any more?

John: A son of Zebedee, of well-to-do parentage (his father kept servants; John had his own home, and was known to the priests family). He with his brother, James, had also gone to Judea to hear John the Baptist, and there is one of the two to hear John's proclamation of the Lamb of God. He was of rather arrogant disposition, very quick tempered, so much so that Jesus surnamed him and his brother "sons of thunder." He was ready to demand the best and highest seat for himself, and to call down fire on Samaritans who refused to receive them. Probably the youngest of the disciples, and the best beloved by his Lord.

What made these men, the great men the shining lights in the gospel ministry? You will find it in the words of Jesus, "Come with me, and I will make you. . . ." He wanted just what they had, but He wanted it put to different uses. He did not make Peter like John, or John like Peter, or either like James or Andrew. He wanted their talents, their abilities, and He wanted them used for the Kingdom. Perhaps that is the best message of the New Year to all of us. "Just as I am" is the way Jesus wants me. He will do the refining, the changing. He will make me what I ought to be. All I have to do is to forsake my nets, whatever those nets may be, and follow Him.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR

DECEMBER 28, 1919

(J. Vincent Knight)

"Make Next Year Better."—Ps. 90:1-17.

Life is a busy school. We are students, and time marks the progress of every one. Year by year we advance in age, and how happy we are if we have learned to use the fleeting years well. As we develop physically and mentally, our spiritual lives should also develop into strong men and women for Christ and His Kingdom. It is our privilege to make every year better than the preceding one, and if we stop to think that we have Christ on our side we will. The young man or woman who does not make a better man or woman than father or mother, has missed the mark. Why? Because the parents' life, influence and guidance were there for an example, and what a great pity it is that so many young people never think of this until it is too late. With the influence of godly parents, and the help of Jesus Christ it is easy to do the right thing and to make a decided success. Yet, one great hinderance to the human life is the waste of time, for he who completes his work in the great school of life must use the time God has allotted to him.

This year has been great, regardless of its difficulties. True it has been marked here and there with many difficult problems, hardships, strikes, blunders in governmental affairs, restlessness on the part of capital and labor, war among ourselves over problems of no concern, and many other things too numerous to mention. Yet in spite of it all Christianity has taken a great forward step, and our people have not failed to take advantage of the opportunity to help in the work. Out of the great struggle has come an awakening on the part of the Church, and none of the past years have been blessed with richer rewards than has 1919.

Yet, we must not be content with past or present achievements. We must make 1920 the best yet. How can we do it? We can do it by making it a year of prayer, self-sacrifice and service. Let each Endeavor resolve to concentrate all his power of purpose upon one great ideal in life, and be faithful to the trust committed to his care. The secret of the successful life is found in that attitude toward the work of the Kingdom. All the evangelical churches have had a great drive for finances, and now the one great call and need is for more men and women to do the work. Make next year better by adding hundreds of new lives to the working forces of the Kingdom. Let me challenge all who read these notes to the task before us, for nothing will put more life into your Society, school and church than for some of its members to dedicate their lives to full time service for the Kingdom. Remember our motto is: "For Christ and the Church," and we ought to make next year better by "Doubling Everything." Your church attendance, mid-week service, Sunday school and your Society needs your best service.

Suggestions For The New Year

Start something! Better have a house party for your young people to get together than nothing. Organize a new Society. Organize a "Fill the pew Club," and fill your church with youngsters. Give your young people a chance. Don't expect a house full of folks for the first meeting. Better have a Society with three active members than one with fifty dead ones. One society in Greensboro with four active members supported an orphan, and contributed $75.00 to foreign missions last year. If they did it, (and they did) you can too. Come on, and let us place a Society in every available Christian church during 1920. What say you young people? Hands up everybody who think we can! Now, then, let us get busy and do it.

MARRIAGES

POYTHRESS-ROGERS

On November 2, 1919, Mr. Arthur H. Poythress and Miss Annie Rogers were, by the writer, united in marriage. The couple were accompanied by a few friends who witnessed the ceremony that gave the legal and religious sanction to the union of their hearts and lives. As another home is established and they begin the journey of married life together, the prayers and good wishes of many friends follow them into their new home.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

WALLACE-ALLEN

At the home of Mrs. N. A. Allen, on the evening of November 5, 1919, at 7 o'clock P. M., Mr. E. B. Wallace and Miss Mollie Allen were united in marriage, the ceremony being performed by the writer, in the presence of a few intimate friends. Mr. Wallace is a very successful business man of Troy, N. C., and Mrs. Wallace is the accomplished daughter of Mrs. N. A. Allen of Martin's Mill, N. C. Immediately after the ceremony the young couple motored to their new home at Troy, N. C., accompanied by the best wishes of a host of friends.

OBITUARIES

CAPT. JAMES A. TURRENTINE—AN APPRECIATION

Captain James A. Turrentine, the beloved senior deacon of the First Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., was translated to his rich reward November 4, 1919. To the membership of this church his life was like an autumn all aflame with crimson gold. He came to his mature life with an increasing number of friends. He grew into the sunset of life gracefully. He maintained the gallantry of a young man, the kindness of a youth, the affection of a child, and the grace and ease of middle life. To know him was to love him, and once you met him you knew him and he knew you.

Brother Turrentine's unscarred record as a member of this church stands out as a beacon light to those who travel in the direction he has gone. He was a Christian gentleman, rich in spirit, brotherly in conduct and noble in character. He loved his church and took great pride in the achievement of the church. He was ambitious for the best possible progress of his local church and for the denomination. He was wise in his counsel and generous of his means. He hated littleness and took pride in the big and progressive things of his church.

We, therefore, the members of Burlington Christian church, desire to place on record this expression of our appreciation and gratitude to God for the noble life, character and conduct of our deceased brother.

We further express our appreciation by recommending that a copy of this testimony be sent to his brother, to his sons, his daughters, to the Burlington News and The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy made a part of the permanent records of this church.

POWELL

Mr. Augustin Powell died November 20, 1919, at the age of fifty-seven years, seven months and eight days. He had been in declining health for some time but had been confined to his home but a few weeks. He leaves to mourn his death, a wife, eight children, three brothers, one sister, and a host of relatives and friends.

Brother Powell had been a member of Mt. Hermon church a number of years. His presence was greatly missed during his illness, and his aid will now be missed as well. He was buried at Mt. Hermon, Friday Afternoon, November 21, the funeral services being conducted by the writer. Many will miss him as a church member, a friend and neighbor, as well as in the home, but may we all be able to say like Job of old, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord."

A Fatal Defeat

Hans, the ruralist, was in search of a horse.

"I've got the very thing you want," said Bill Lenox, the stableman, "a thorough-going road horse. Five years old, sound as a quail, $175 cash down and he goes ten miles without stopping."

Hans threw his hands skyward.

"Hot for me," he said, "not for me. I wouldn't gif you 5 cents for him. I live eight miles out in de country, and I'd haf to walk back two miles."

"Smart as a Philadelphia Lawyer"

The following is told of a late rail way magnate and a prominent Philadelphia lawyer:

Said the magnate to the lawyer, "I want you to show that this law is unconstitutional. Do you think you can manage it?"

"Easily," said the lawyer.

"Well, go ahead and get familiar with the case."

"I'm already at home in it. I know my ground perfectly. It's the same law you had me prove was constitutional two years ago."—Lancaster News Journal.

An Editor's Duties

Most any man can be an editor. All the editor has to do is to sit at his desk six days a week, four weeks a month and twelve fonths in a year, and edit such stuff as this:

"Mrs. Jones of Cactus Creek let a can-opener slip last week and cut herself in the pantry. Joe Doe climbed on the roof of his house last week looking for a leak and fell, landing on his back porch. While Harold Green was ecorting Miss Violet Wise from the church social last Saturday night a savage dog attached them and bit Mr. Green on the public square. Mr. Fang, while harnessing a broncho last Saturday, was kicked just south of his corn crib."—Yarmouth Light.

The following points should be taken into consideration in placing an order for church offering envelopes:

1. A set means 52 envelopes, one for each Sunday in the year.
2. When cartons are ordered the sets are arranged in their logical order, thus making it convenient for the member. We suggest the use of cartons because of the convenience.

3. If you desire monthly, double or single envelopes, without cartons, 1-3 the price of the same number of weekly sets. Cartons 3-4 cent each.

4. Semi-monthly, double or single, in cartons, 2-3 the weekly price; without cartons 3-5 the weekly price.

5. When ordering state what Sunday that your church year begins, and whether you want the dates on envelopes or not.

6. Indicate the wording that you want placed on the envelopes or leave the same with us. Samples sent upon request.

7. Allow ten to fifteen days for delivery. Order early.

- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

THE CHURCH A LEADING FACTOR

We read with interest the other day a note written by Mr. R. W. Scott, a prosperous farmer of Alamance county, to The News Letter, a weekly publication issued by the University of North Carolina. We take pleasure in reproducing the letter here:

"The News Letter" item about the Pleasant Garden School and Community suggests to me a few words about the Hawfields Community in Alamance county. It has one of the best country brick churches in this section. Near the church is the cemetery, one of the best kept in the State. An endowment fund of $3,500 was raised and invested in Liberty Bonds. Only the interest is used for the upkeep of the cemetery. The minister lives in the manse, one of the best residences in the community. With the manse is thirty acres of land, enough to supply wood, pasture, and garden.

The school was established in 1902 by voting a local tax. Some years later it was made a state high school, and now it offers courses in vocational agriculture.

Boys who will never go to college are being taught agriculture, and they will go back to the farms with knowledge and pride in farming. We know that few college graduates in agriculture go back to the farms.

At one time this school furnished more teachers in the public schools of the county than any other school. Students have gone direct from this school to Davidson, University of North Carolina, Elon, the A. and E. College, and North Carolina College for Women. A boy from this school went to Davidson and made the highest grade that ever was made there and then at the Union Theological Seminary made the highest average that had been made in twenty-five years. One student at the A. and E. taking the agriculture course won the Inter-College Debate medal, Oratory medal, Track medal and Loving Cup for track athletics.

Best of all, boys that are graduates are returning to their old homes to farm, one from the Mississippi Agriculture College, one from the A. and E., and one from the University. This community furnished the young man who cared for and fed the Jersey cow that made the highest record of any cow in the South.

Hawfields has not only in the past held very creditable community fairs, but this year contributed to the Mebane fair, bringing home the first prize of $100 for the best exhibit. It also made a fine display of poultry. Not only this, but the community contributed most of the county exhibit that went to the State fair.

There is no community where greater harmony, and good feeling and less jealousy exist. There never has in the history of the school been any division among the trustees, teachers, or parents.

There is much to do yet on roads, soil, and in farm improvements. Conveniences in the homes will have to have attention in the future. Can any community in the State equal or better this? And this has all been accomplished by people in very moderate circumstances and in a community where neither tobacco nor cotton is raised.

Note that Mr. Scott begins his article by referring to the community church, which reminds us that no community can be a real place to live unless it has a church. This community of which Mr. Scott speaks can also pride itself by saying that the church was one of the first institutions to be placed there. The church is always the leading factor in the community, whether you see it this way or not. The influence of the church is the stabilizer of all good things; and all things worth while are centered around the work of the church.

There are many other communities just as good as the one about which Mr. Scott speaks, but the thing that we much hope for is that many other communities not so far advanced will note the advancement of this community and go forward. Rural life is the real life, and unless we have good churches and able pastors, good schools and other accommodations we cannot hope to hold the boys and girls. While you are lamenting the fact that the boys and girls of your community are leaving, you might also set about to investigate the why. You may find it in the absence of the things that Mr. Scott's community has.

OCCASION FOR REJOICING

We are sure that all readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN will rejoice with the Southern Baptists in the great success of their wonderful campaign for $75,000,000.00. People who do such things are a blessing and a real asset to our civilization. For be it said that the only hope for this wonderfully prosperous and extravagant age is to increase the tide of benevolence through the channels of the Church. Unless the Church can prevail upon the people to increase, and very largely increase, their gifts and their donations to the work of the Kingdom, there can be no other destiny for our civilization than that which befell Babylon and Greece and Rome and the nations who in the past have perished, not from poverty, but from indulgence, material prosperity and greed. Our age is absorbed in the topic of money getting and money spending and unless we can imbed deep into the thought of the time, the fundamental fact that the Lord must share in our gettings, and expenditures, and that we are His stewards, a crass materialism will overtake us and we shall forget God who is the Giver of all good.

But we had started out with a word of appreciation and gratitude to the great Baptist hosts who have done such a wonderful work for the Kingdom. We wish in this connection to quote a paragraph from The Biblical Recorder which sets forth a truth sometimes overlooked by the casual observer:

"Perhaps the greatest blessing that has come from the Campaign is the spiritual awakening among our people. There have been many reports of conversions; and thousands have enlisted for special service. There will be recruits for the foreign field and many workers for the home land as a result of the Campaign. There is a spirit of co-operation among our people that we never knew before."

We feel that we Christians need this same benefit. We are sure that when the people are awakened to their financial obligations there will come a spiritual awakening such as we have not witnessed in years. "For where your treasure is, there will your heart be also," said our Lord. We are not surprised that the Baptists have already chartered all the space on a large Pacific liner next summer to carry missionaries to the foreign field. They are getting recruits for the foreign field by the hundreds and men are being called to the ministry and to Christian service in great numbers, which facts, of course, follows as the day the night, the great activities which were necessary to secure such a large sum for the Kingdom. Why should we Christians not undertake a similar campaign whose design shall be not to impoverish anybody in the Christian Church, but to give every individual in every church a chance to do something for the Master in these perilous and wonderful times?

SUFFOLK LETTER

The approach of Christmas suggests a world of thought and creates an atmosphere of "good will." That multitude with the angel praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will," made no mistake. There is no day in the year so full of "peace and good will" as Christmas day. It is the one day for family reunions. It is the one day that home is "sweet home." It concentrates the joys of a whole year. It reminds us of the Babe of Bethlehem, the angels' song, the visit of the shepherds, and the adoration of the wise men, with their "gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh. That was a "Holy Night" and its song will never die out of the human heart.

It is wonderful that the birth of a peasant changed the calendar of time. The calendar is based on great events and it has had three foundations. The first was the creation of the world. That was a great fact. God created the heavens and the earth. Men reckoned from creation: anno mundi. Then Rome was built and dates were reckoned from the founding of that great city and Rome became mistress of the world. But both of these yield to anno domini, the year of our Lord. This peasant has, also, changed the thoughts and work of the world. He made the workshop the place of honor and usefulness. The man who is ashamed to work is ashamed of Jesus. His life is an example in obedience to parents, honest work, faithful attendance upon worship, and self-sacrifice for others. He opened a new world for children, for sinners, and for the sick. And Christmas should honor Jesus because He made this joyous time for the nations.

Christmas makes business on such an immense scale as to deserve the thanks of men. The stores are crowded with shoppers. The windows are decorated with rare skill. Gifts are sent in every direction. Carriers are busy. Almost every line of trade is at high tide in and around Christmas. The markets of the world are thronged with buyers. The world is busy and hopeful. To subtract Christmas trade from the world would be to impoverish business. Millions on millions are spent for Christmas. Babyhood becomes the object of thought and purchase. The toys for Christmas! Almost everybody on the street and the train has bought something for children. "A little child shall lead them." Jesus put a new spirit in the human family and it is the spirit of kindness. What would life be to the child without Christmas morning? What was life to childhood before Jesus came into the world? To recognize Christmas is to recognize Jesus, for it celebrates His birth in Bethlehem. No wonder the shepherds left their flocks to see what the Lord had made known unto them; no wonder the wise men came from the east to honor Him. Let the busy world close its stores and shops and spend the Christmas day in the home where feast and joy fill the house with gladness. "Hang up the baby's stocking," and fill it with love and good things; then wait for Christmas morning. Listen at the bare-feet on the hard floor; hear the shout of infant joy as they pull out that which Santa has put into their stockings. It is worth a year of toil to see the children in their glee and to hear them tell what Christmas has brought to them. It is akin to the morning when "the morning stars sang together and all the sons of God shouted for joy." This would be a happy world all the year round, if we loved Jesus as we ought, and loved one another in Him. "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye cannot see the kingdom of God." The child-spirit is what the world needs; the spirit that is happy with small gifts, and that loves the unseen, with a faith that is strong and beautiful.

EXTRAVAGANCE NOT OF THE KINGDOM

In the old "green goods" days, the man who bought a gold brick did not usually advertise the fact and brag that he had been duped. He was trying to get something for nothing and when his efforts reacted to his own loss he usually kept his mouth shut. Now however, the American people are falling over themselves in their eagerness to spend something for nothing. And they shout the fact that they are being bilked from the housepots with pride.

The facts and figures both collective and individual showing that the high prices of necessities and non-necessities are due to reckless spending extravagance and waste speak for themselves in no uncertain terms. The Massachusetts Commission investigating the high cost of necessities recently made public some significant findings. One of the largest retail dry goods dealers in Boston told the Commission that he put on sale a lot of shirt waists at $2.50 and $3.00 but that there was no sale for them as his customers would only consider higher priced articles, and he was obliged to take the low priced goods out of his store and turn them off some other way.

A provision dealer ground up Hamburger steak. Part of it he marked twenty-eight cents a pound and the remainder forty-two cents. At the end of the day all the forty-two cent Hamburger had been sold and not a customer bought at twenty-eight cents although the meat was absolutely the same. Commissioner J. H. Sherburne said that New England people refused to buy good fresh fish caught but two days before off the New England coast at eight cents a pound but that there was a big demand for halibut caught six weeks previous in the Pacific, carried across the country and sold at forty cents a pound. Meat men report there is an unprecedented demand for the most expensive cuts and little demand for cuts for stew. Although the price of hogs in Chicago fell off at fifty percent, there was no decrease in the retail price obtained for hog in New England because of the demand at high prices for choice loins. General Sherburne said that there was a tremendous demand for four dollar silk stockings which were inferior in quality to those which formerly sold at one dollar.

Fancy shoes and expensive shoes are in tremendous demand. Manufacturers estimate that each shoe worker produces only 662 2-3 as much as in 1913. They estimate that the reduced production amounts to approximately 3,000,000 pairs of shoes per annum yet with cheap shoes urgently needed the demand for the expensive grades and freak styles keeps production devoted to those classes of goods.

Here is what London says of the buying habit in America: "America continues to be the world's great treasure chest into which is being poured millions of dollars worth of precious stones and art treasures." For the first nine months of 1919 $27,568,128 worth of precious stones passed through London for American buyers as against $12,000,000 for the same period of 1918. The value of art object sent to America through London alone for the same time exceeded $4,000,000.

America has paid a huge price in Europe for furs in the last nine months the total amount being declared as $10,354,582 or double the amount for last year. The last of the $7,000,000 worth of furs recently sold at auction in New York have just been removed from the warehouses for manufacture. These figures do not take into account the sums paid at the auction sales of furs in St. Louis and other wholesale markets.

The jeweler, the pawnbroker and the furrier have no hesitancy in saying that these luxuries are not destined for old millionaires or the new rich. They are demanded by the salaried people and wage earners who are squandering on them the savings piled up during the last few years.

One chain of drug stores alone sold $6,000,000 worth of perfumes and cosmetics during the year. It may be highly enjoyable to smell like a sweet scented geranium but the odor of $6,000,000 bearing interest in safe and profitable securities is not objectionable to the nostrils either.

It is undeniable that so long as extravagance and waste, reckless spending and dissipation of savings continues as a national habit prices will continue to remain at or above the present level.

Americans have enjoyed for over a century the reputation of being a race of hard headed, sensible, clear thinking, shrewd business men and women. They are not living up to that reputation when they fail to save at least a part of their incomes and invest it wisely.

The principles of Christianity guard against extravagance, and the saving of part of the income for the Lord's work will, as nothing else, do more to bring us to a sense of obligation that we are stewards for the Lord. Can we waste when what we have in our possession that belongs to God? Would Jesus be extravagant if He were here? Shall we dissipate our wealth or use it for the bringing of the Kingdom into the hearts of men?

"MODERN PAGANS"

"Modern Pagans." by Chas. M. Sheldon is the title of a new book which we have added to our stock. The Wallaces are a typical American family—wholesome, hearty, and honest, interested in sports and society, in politics and business. None the less, they are practically pagans, enjoying the blessings of a Christian civilization, but accepting none of its duties and responsibilities. The story of the transformation of these modern pagans into active and aggressive twentieth century Christians is told by Dr. Sheldon in picturesque and compelling fashion. How was it accomplished? That is the story. Read it and see. Price 50 cents, net.

The Bureau of the Census is a part of the Department of Commerce. It was established as a permanent Bureau in 1902. Prior to that time the census work was done by a temporary organization known as the Census Office.

The Fourteenth Decennial Census is to be taken during the month of January, 1920.

OUR "ANCIENT" CONTEMPORARIES

THE MOUNTAINEERS OF THE SOUTH

By Victor I. Masters, Baptist Home Mission Board, Atlanta, Ga.

There are about 4,000,000 mountain people in the Southern States east of the Mississippi. The mountain folks live in about 178 counties and in an area of 75,000 or 80,000 square miles, and make up a part of the population in each of the States in the Old South, except Mississippi and Florida.

Though the Southern population is more than one-fourth Negroes, only about ten per cent of the population of the Highland region of the South is black. In a number of mountain counties there are fewer than 100 Negroes. These Highlanders are pure-blooded Anglo-Saxons to a degree unequalled elsewhere in America. That needs to be remembered.

Another thing is worth putting down; the white population in the Southern Highlands, by the census of 1910, was thirty-nine per square mile, while the extra-montanic regions of the States which were partly mountains and had only twenty-seven whites per square mile. The isolation of the Highlander is conditioned by the height of the mountain and the badness of the road, and not by his lack of neighbors. The greater density per square mile of the white people in Highland regions, as compared with the lowland regions of the South, may be surprising, but it has a definite bearing. There are more native white people per square mile to be helped by missionary effort and educational effort in the mountains than there are in any other region of the South, or of the nation. And these people are less spoiled than others by some perverse currents which have conditioned modern life.

The Religious Census of 1906 showed that the religious bodies in the Southern mountain regions had the following membership: 463,200, or forty-eight per cent, were Baptists; 304,900, or thirty-one per cent, were Methodists; 56,400, or about six per cent were Presbyterians; membership. In the 178 counties surveyed, 143 did not report on Roman Catholic. This great region is freer from Romanism than any section of America. 48,900, or five per cent were Disciples; all other religious bodies had ten per cent of the If the Romanists in the mining region of Alabama and around Chattanooga are omitted, there are only about 3,000 Roman Catholics in the entire mountain regions of the South. This survey does not include West Virginia.

The special need of the Highlanders for Christian work grows out of their quaint and primitive civilization. They have been called our "contemporary ancestors." Like the pioneers of one hundred years ago, their economic life and their social contacts are still largely confined to the community. They provide for their own simple wants, not only raising their own food but making their own clothing, candles, and many household and farming utensils. Their religious life is of the pioneer variety. Their churches are of the once-a-month order, enjoying one or two sermons on a given Sunday each month and closing up until the same Sunday in the next month. Many of these churches are without a Sunday school, and few of the preachers have had educational advantages.

The mountaineer has reverence for God. He believes his Bible and is not troubled over the imaginings of rationalistic theological professors and scientists. His religion is an individualistic matter with him, just as his life is. He does not pay much in money for the material bases of living and exhibits an equal reluctance toward paying anything to the support of his preacher. This is one thing that has fixed on him the incubus of the outworn once-a-month sermon, by which device he manages to keep only a modicum of life in his oak-embowered church by the roadside.

Many evangelical bodies, among whom Northern Presbyterians deserve the credit of priority, are now conducting systems of mission schools among the Highlanders of the South. In addition, there are some individual institutions maintained by certain benevolent organizations. Among the other denominations doing large work in the school field for mountain folks are the Southern Baptists, the Southern Presbyterians, Northern and Southern Methodists. The Disciples, Congregationalists and Episcopalians have also touched this field of effort. The Baptists have between 5,000 and 6,000 in attendance on their schools, the Presbyterians perhaps an equal number and the Methodists a smaller number.

Christian statesmanship has reached a consensus of judgment that the institution best fitted to help the mountaineer to adjust himself to twentieth century conditions is the Church, and the method by the Church must be quickened for the task is educational. It was not chance that led each Christian body which has entered this field to establish a system of secondary schools under Christian control. No other method of service has been found so full of promise.

You must vitalize the mountaineer's church through these schools. Not only are the schools now training scores of young men and women for lives of high service in the outer world, but they are sending hundreds of the mountain youth back to the coves and valleys trained to lead their communities and churches into a larger outlook on life. Vocational training is preparing them to improve living conditions in the mountains. Some are prepared to teach and others to preach and to lead people within the churches forward to larger contacts in Christian service.

The aptitude of mountain boys and girls for grasping high and worthy ideals of life deserves special emphasis. In a day of alarming materialism, these young dreamers in the quiet and immensities of the mountains are not infatuated with the glint of the dollar. In an exceptional degree they are ready to respond to the opportunity and appeal of the life of service to their fellows in some field where spiritual uplift is the frankly avowed purposes.

A large percentage of the ministers in some denominations in the South is coming out of these mountains, and an equally impressive number of the students are going into other uplift vocations. The mountain schools of the Baptist Home Mission Board during the ten years preceding 1916 sent out from its schools 350 preachers, 200 lawyers, 225 doctors, 30 trained nurses, 30 missionaries and 2,500 public teachers. More than 3,000 had returned to the farm, 900 were engaged in commercial pursuits, forty were in banks and eighteen were members of State Legislatures.

In these Highlands are vast human resources waiting the touch of Christian culture for their releasement. There is no such other field in America. But not even this field will wait long on our tardy lack of understanding. The railways are breaking through the great ramparts by which the silent giants of the Highlands seek to keep out the irreverent hand and the impertinent curiosity of modern civilization. Wherever one of these railways gets through, wherever the modern campaign for highway improvement makes another hard and safe road through the mountain sections, the primitive economic scheme of the mountaineer's life has to give way to that in which everything is valued by the dollar mark.

There is pathos in it. We must either strengthen the mountaineer to play his part well under the new conditions, or the tearing up of the quaint and beautiful but outworn pioneer system of life will be his undoings. In proportion to the effort which has been put forth in this field of service by different Christian groups, the rewards have been great. They will be still greater if we shall put forth adequate effort.

There are about 200 mission schools now in the Highlands. They are probably educating 20,000 to 25,000 youths. The work should be increased five-fold or ten-fold. To do this would draw out and train more young men and women for the great tasks of constituted Christianity in the generation just ahead of us than we can hope to obtain from any other field.—Missionary Review of the Word.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

CHURCH DEDICATION

I had the privilege last Sunday of rejoicing with the good people of Holland, Va., on the occasion of their church dedication. Rev. N. G. Newman, a former pastor and much beloved by all the community, preached at the 11 o'clock hour to the delight and joy of the entire congregation. In the afternoon at 3 o'clock the house was formally dedicated, with appropriate musical selections and the services fitting such an occasion. The beloved pastor, Rev. W. M. Jay, was wreathed in smiles as were also the members of the Building Committee, the members of the church and their friends and it was fitting that they should be. I feel that they have builded better than they knew. The edifice is a real temple of worship which would do honor and great credit to any people of any community. The structure is of brick, the four sides of a pressed brick with imposing colonial columns, and spacious cathedral windows on the front. The basement or first floor is ample for all Sunday school purposes with many Sunday school rooms adjoining the main auditorium and a seating capacity of 400. The floor above, or second floor, is the main auditorium and is elegantly arranged and equipped. The acoustics are well nigh perfect. The furnishings are of heavy oak. The pastor's study is to the left of the pulpit; the choir with ante-rooms to the right. The pipe organ, a gift of the Ladies' Aid Society, is a joy forever, both in appearance and in melody. The building, whose material was purchased prior to the present high prevailing prices, cost in round numbers, $30,000.00 and is equipped with its own heating and lighting plants. In three of the cathedral windows are paintings in life size from incidents of the Christ life and are exceedingly appropriate and impressive, the highest artistic taste being displayed in their selection and appointment. The main auditorium with the ample gallery has a seating capacity of 600. The house has been erected and paid for so readily and joyously that it is difficult for one to realize and certainly the Holland people themselves have not realized what a great, good and unselfish thing they had done. The church is a distinct contribution not only to the moral and spiritual life of the community but to the architectural and civic life as well. Such an imposing structure in itself is a blessing and a benefit to any community as it sets silently a noble example of the builders art and profession. The Holland people are thrifty and energetic in their daily industrial pursuits, prosperous and happy in their financial achievements, all of which they turn to good purpose, dividing up liberally with the work of the Kingdom. It was a great day not only for the church but for the community when this house was given to the Lord and it was certainly a great privilege and joy for the writer to be present and rejoice with these good people. God's blessings upon them as they meet from time to time to worship in the splendid temple which they have so unselfishly built and dedicated to the service of their Lord.

A FEW THINGS ACCOMPLISHED BY THE FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH, RALEIGH, N. C., IN THE PAST TEN MONTHS

Numerical and Spiritual

1. More than fifty adult additions to the church membership during the year.
2. Mid-week prayer services started and maintained for the ten months with average attendance of fifty-four.
3. Large permanent increase in the Sunday school.
4. One hundred per cent increase in attendance at preaching services (capacity houses frequently the case).
5. Woman's Missionary Society organized with forty-one members and maintained with average attendance of twenty-one.
6. Increased missionary interest and deepening of spiritual life in all departments.
7. Present membership 150 with about 100 prospectives.

Financial

1. Duplex Envelope System installed with 600 per cent increase in pledges for missions and benevolences. (Total pledges in first canvass approximately $600.00).
2. Congregation becomes self-supporting with increase of 92½ per cent in pastor's salary, over amount it paid the Conference year just closed. (33 1-3 per cent increase over total amount paid to pastor by both the congregation and Home Mission Board combined).
3. Approximately 100 per cent increase in current finances.
4. $4,750.00 pledged for Elon College Endowment. ($3,000.00 asked for).
5. $2,350.00 raised in cash to pay debts and purchase added necessary interior equipment.
6. More than $200.00 given the Christian Orphanage in cash.
7. $500.00 in pledges and cash to Anti-Saloon League work.
8. Purse of $100.00 presented to pastor and wife in appreciation of their services.
9. Parsonage purchased at cost of $7,000.00. (Not yet paid for but plans being worked out to pay for it.)
10. We have found it necessary to have a professional music director which we have obtained on a salary by the year.

General Statement

Everything looks encouraging. Church located at strategic center of city, and on the Capital city's best resident street. This is also, in our opinion, the logical central geographically and otherwise for denominational headquarters of the Southern Christian Convention. (Look it up and see for yourself). The Convention should have headquarters and why not make this the place?

A general feeling prevails that we must have a new and representative building to continue our growth in this, one of the most beautiful cities of the South, and one of the few Capital cities in which the Christians have a church. The building is sorely needed and must come.

The Brotherhood is asked to pray for our work here.

W. C. ADKINS,
Chairman of Committee.

UNDER THE HOLLY BOUGH

Ye who have scorned each other
Or injured friend or brother,
In this fast-fading year;
Ye who, by word or deed,
Have made a kind heart bleed,
Come, gather here.

Let sinned against, and sinning,
Forget their strife's beginning,
And join in friendship now:
Be links no longer broken,
Be sweet forgiveness spoken,
Under the Holly Bough.

Ye who have loved each other,
Sister and friend and brother,
In this fast-fading year:
Mother and sire and child,
Young man and maiden mild,
Come, gather here;

And let your hearts grow fonder,
As memory shall ponder
Each past unbroken vow.
Old loves and younger wooing,
Are sweet in the renewing,
Under the Holly Bough.

Ye who have nourished sadness,
Estranged from hope and gladness,
In this fast-fading year;
Ye, with o'erburdened mind,
Made aliens from your kind,
Come, gather here.

Let not the useless sorrow
Pursue you night and morrow.
If e'er you hoped, hope now—
Take heart—uncloud your faces,
And join in our embraces,
Under the Holly Bough.

—Charles Mackay.

THE SHORTEST NAME

Among the names of $4,500,000 soldiers, sailors and marines recorded in the files of the War Risk Insurance Bureau at Washington, the shortest family name was "Ii", borne by two soldiers who were natives of Hawaii. Their name consisted of two letters, but it was pronounced in two syllables.

MISSIONARY

A CHRISTMAS GIFT FOR MISSIONS

The writer is thinking of the happy Christmas time in all Christian lands and among Christian people. It is the happiest, the most joyous of all good seasons as it should be. During these days we celebrate the greatest event since the day dawn of creation. Millions of money will be spent for gifts to make glad the members of our own homes and the friends round about us in order to make the season more happy than it otherwise would be.

But they have no Christmas in non-Christian lands and the million of children whose parents know nothing of the Christ will have no glad Christmas morning and no happy Christmas gifts nor joyous Christmas bells. They know not our Christ and the blessings he brings to hearts and homes. A good and noble Christian woman asked the other day: Why should not we Christians make Christmas gifts of our money that the gospel of our blessed Christ might be carried to non-Christian lands so that the peoples there might come to know Christ and His Christmas? (And she handed me a dollar as a Christmas gift to missions.) We are so happy ourselves on Christmas Day that it is easy for us to forget that the big majority of the human race will know nothing of the day because they know nothing of Him in whose name the day is observed. The Mission Secretary would rejoice to receive Christmas gifts for missions and would see to it that such gifts go to the right place in carrying the blessed news of Him at whose advent the angels sang: "Peace on earth; good will to men." If we of Christian countries would give half as much to spread the gospel as we spend in gifts among ourselves to celebrate the Christmas season, it would only be a few years till all nations of the earth would celebrate with us this great and happy season. Why should we not do our part to make the whole world safe for Christmas and this we can do by making known to the whole world. "Christmas gift for missions" is by no means an idle phrase, but is worth considering and would certainly be a most fitting thing to do.

BEWARE! ! A MESSAGE FOR THE DAY OF PROSPERITY

God sent us the message through His servant, Moses. It is practical, pointed and brief. Read it from Deut. 8:11-14: "Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his statutes, which I command thee this day: lest when thou hast eaten and art full, and hast built goodly houses, and dwelt therein; and when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied: then thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God."

AMERICA'S PART THEN AND NOW

In some carefully limited sense it is true that America won the war, the same could be said of England or Belgium or France. It was a united victory. Yet it is correct to say that, when the armies of the Allies were in dire need, it was given to America to hurl against the enemy her fresh, brave forces, and to turn the tide of conflict. Much more is it true that, while our sister churches in Protestant lands are depleted of men and of money, it is given to the American church with her unbounded resources, now to move forward with triumphant confidence, to unite the followers of Christ and to achieve the evangelization of the world, so writes Dr. C. R. Edman in the Missionary Review of The World. And he sounds a true note.

J. O. ATKINSON.

SOME CHRISTMAS SUGGESTIONS

CHRISTMAS BOOKS FOR CHILDREN

We list below a supply of books which we have purchased suitable for Christmas presents for the children. For the lack of space we cannot tell what each book is about, but we have exercised the very best care in the selection, to see that all stories are helpful and interesting:

The Thorn of the Fortress	50 cents
Matt of the Waterfront	50 cents
The Other Side of the Rainbow	60 cents
Bantern Stories	60 cents
Billy and Bumps	35 cents
Good Night Stories	60 cents
The Jim Family	25 cents
Little Folks of the Bible	30 cents
Sunny Hour Books	15 cents

(Little Folks of the Bible can be had in books I, II, III, and IV. Books I and II are for boys and books III and IV are for girls. We will send any four books of this title for $1.00.)

(Sunny Hour Books are made up of 14 different titles. The price is 15 cents for each title, any two for 25 cents; four for 45 cents and all over four at 10 cents per volume.)

All the above named books are suitable for children 8 to 14 except the "Sunny Hour Books" which are for little tots that cannot read or are just beginning to read. "Sunny Hour Books" contain an abundance of pictures and are bound with colored cloth and stamped with an appropriate design.

Add 4 cents per volume for postage when only one copy is ordered, and 2 cents per volume for postage in lots up to ten; all over ten volumes add 1 cent per volume for postage.

CLEARANCE SALE OF CHILDREN'S BOOKS

We make it a rule in December of each year to buy the closing out stock of several suitable books for children. By buying the closing out stock, we are enabled to get a better price and make the books within the reach of all.

We have been able this year to buy the complete stock of the following 50 cent sellers, and offer them at prices indicated:

Blazing the Way	$. 25
Bright Side and Other Side25
Crown Jewels20
From the Thames to the Toossachs.....	.25
Up the Susquehanna25

(This price is postpaid)

The following reductions will be made in lots: Any two copies, 45 cents; three copies, 60 cents; four copies, 75 cents; all over four copies at 17 cents per copy.

The supply is limited and we advise you to order early. If any title has exhausted when your order is received, we will substitute unless otherwise instructed.

These books are all well made and handsomely bound.

Make some child's life happy by presenting one or more of these books. Invest a few dollars to make the little tots of your class happy.

DID YOU EVER SEE IT?

Did you ever see a copy of Torrey's Gist of the Lesson? Vest pocket size, handy, and convenient. Send 30 cents and let us mail you a copy.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Our Thanksgiving offerings are very encouraging and we are now nearing the goal. The Thanksgiving offerings to date amount to $5,568.66. Let us rush it up to the goal in our next report.

We have two hundred and twenty-two churches and ninety churches have made and sent in Thanksgiving offerings to this date. We still have one hundred and thirty-two to hear from yet. I truly hope that the pastors will see that their churches make and mail in this offering. I want to have the pleasure to report to the Board of Trustees at its next meeting that each church in our Southern Christian Convention made a Thanksgiving offering to help the little orphans.

I appeal to the Sunday school superintendents to see that your Sunday schools make this offering too. Your year's work will not be complete or finished till you make this offering. If you are late that will not debar you and the door of the Orphanage will be wide open to receive your offering with a warm welcome. Let it come along.

I asked twenty churches in the beginning of this campaign to make an offering of $100.00 or more. Thirteen churches have answered this request with that amount and more. I believe that out of the other churches yet to report that we will get the other seven. Must have them. I know that all the churches that have contributed $100.00 are proud of the act and rejoice with us in the undertaking. If your church has not taken this offering will you make it $100.00?, or more, if you like.

Friends of the little orphans are still very kind to us and have sent in the following:

Farmers Cotton Oil Co., Wilson, N. C., 20 bags (one ton) cotton-seed meal; Farmville Oil & Fertilizer Co., Farmville, N. C., 300 pounds cotton-seed meal and 700 pounds hulls; Woman's Missionary Society, First Christian church, Urbana, Ill., one box clothing for the children; Willing Workers, First Christian church, Goshin, Ind., one box clothing; Ladies' Aid Society, Pleasant Hill church, Albion, Ind., one box clothing; Miss Alnetta Kernodle, Altamahaw, N. C., one pair pillow cases; Salisbury Cotton Mills, Salisbury, N. C., 68 3-4 yards of cloth; Miss Annie Staley and others, Suffolk, Va., one box toys for thirteen small children.

Our singing class had a very pleasant trip to Raleigh, Catawba Springs and Fuquay Springs on the first Sunday. The children rendered their program at each place and the contributions were splendid. The people were very kind to us and we enjoyed the trip more than words can express.

I want to correct an error, made in the last issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The offering sent in by Shallow Well church should have been reported as Thanksgiving offering from Jonesboro Jr. O. U. A. M. Council 148. They had Thanksgiving service at Shallow Well church, and this offering was taken. I am glad to make the correction.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley:—I was ten months old yesterday. Don't you think I am getting to be quite a big boy? Daddy and mother think I am the sweetest boy in the world. Daddy bought me a nice new go-cart today. I like it fine. Guess Santa will bring me some play things, but a go-cart is the best thing for a little boy like me. Enclosed find check for 50 cents—my dues for December. Love and best wishes to all the cousins, and a merry Christmas.—Olive D. Poythress, Jr.

Of course "daddy" and "mother" think you are the sweetest boy in all the world. They could not help but think it of such a fine little fellow as you. As the one who has been telling "Santa" my needs at Christmas time is in the better world I will be lonely on Christmas morn.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley:—Here comes a little boy to join the Corner. I am going to school and like my teacher fine. Enclosed find 10 cents for the cousins.—D. B. Spivey.

We are delighted to give you a warm welcome to the Corner. Glad you joined before Christmas and hope "Old anta" will be good to you.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley:—Enclosed find $1.00 for my Thanksgiving offering to the little cousins. I am a little girl seven years old. I want Santa Claus to come to see me and I hope he will go to see all the little children.—Jean Simpson.

Our little folks are looking forward to the coming of "Old Santa" with a great deal of delight.—"Uncle Charley."

LISTEN TO THE BELLS!

What do the bells say to you, as they peal their clear, sweet music through the early, snowy dawn of the Christmas morning?

Only a few more days, and Christmas time will be here again. Christmas time; giving time; gladsome time! And when, on that early morning, you awake to the sound of pealing, joyous bell-music, lie still for a moment in the warmth of your comfy bed, and listen to those bells—listen carefully.

For they have a story to tell of little children across the ocean; little children and tiny helpless tots, fatherless, motherless, homeless; children who will know no Christmas tide; who ask no gifts of glittering tree and shining toys, such as you will find on Christmas morning. They only ask the gift of life; the gift of mothers, of homes, of clean clothes and food.

And the bells tell us a story of America; of the poor, the sick, the weak and the helpless little ones—all waiting the coming of gifts of life and hope.

That is the story of the Red Cross bells. They must be Red Cross bells, for they tell the story of service, and Red Cross means service. The Red Cross Juniors are going to answer the call of the bells. They are going to send the cheer of Christmas time to nations over the sea, and to the people of our own country. And the cheer they carry will not be the cheer of a single day—but the cheer of a whole life-time!

Listen to the bells. They have a message for every boy and girl in America. Can you hear it?

THE LAND OF TOYS

Little wooden fishes that swim right-side-up, life-sized baby elephants, bears, stags, horses and rabbits—all the animals that ever entered Noah's peak-roofed ark are there! And with them are quaint, fat little peasant women, in flaring dresses, tiny poppy-ball huntsmen, with arrows of bent twigs, green forests of cone-fashioned trees and pebble lined brooks, and cunning little villages, with real thatch-roofed huts.

The land of toys is where you will find them. And that land lies far away from here, across the sea, tucked snugly away in the heart of the Slovakian Mountains. Everyone in that far-away little country makes toys, from the wrinkled great-great-grandmother to the tiny tots of four and five years. And in the home where crippled children lie, even there small hands are busy fashioning these toys of fairy-land from cones, burrs, acorns, twigs and poppy-balls, gathered for them in the summer woods—poor little cripples of Czecho-Slovakia passing the dreary hours of patient waiting!

Santa Claus has not yet seen that wonder land. But he is going to, very soon, for the American Red Cross workers have written him a long letter telling him all about these newly discovered playthings, that would like so very much to cross the ocean and visit the nurseries and the playrooms of the boys and girls of America.

But Santa must take with him the money to pay for these toys. And it is to the Junior Red Cross members that Santa is looking for that sum. For the money that the Juniors send will make it possible for many more little girls and boys of that war-swept, out-of-the-way, mountain land to get the care and the treatment that will give health and strength to weak and crippled little bodies; that will mean food and rest for hungry, over-tired peasants.

And when Saanta comes back with his bulging pack of toy wonders, you, too, may, some Christmas morning, find tucked away in the back depths of your stocking, a quaint little peasant woman, come to you all the way from that wonderful land of toys!

AT RANDOM

A barrister, not so discreet as he might have been in the expression of his ideas, was engaged on a case concerning some pigs. "Gentlemen of the jury," he began, "there were twenty-four pigs in the drove, just twenty-four, exactly twice as many as there are in that jury box."—Exchange.

"It says here that blind people can be taught to distinguish colors by the sense of touch," said the Fat Man.

"Well, that isn't surprising," replied the Thin Man. "A fellow always knows when he feels blue, doesn't he?"—Cincinnati-Enquirer.

Edgar, aged five, was driving from the station on his first visit to Maine. His mother, noticing a troubled look on his face as he looked about, said: "Whats the matter, Edgar? Don't you like the beautiful country?" "Yes, mother, but on my map Maine is red!"—The Moderator.

THE NEED OF PASTORATES

(Address delivered before the North Carolina Christian Conference, by J. U. Gunter, and ordered printed in The Christian Sun; and also published in pamphlet form for distribution.)

HE subject assigned me is the "Need of Pastorates," and while I did not confer with the program committee, I presume that it is a foregone conclusion that we need to form our rural churches into pastorates or groups. But for fear that there are some who do not recognize the proposition as a need, I shall endeavor to convince all such that it is one of the church's needs. From the tone of the addresses we have heard since we have been assembled here and the information we gather as we read expressions from the master minds of the world today, I think we will all agree that this is a new day in the church's history. It seems that there are different methods used in practically every line of industry and in every government. In other words, different methods are being used to bring about the same vital principles that have always been used in good business or good government. For instance, take the method of communication. It was the custom, years ago for men to discuss important matters face to face, later it was done by written correspondence, then came the telegraphic method, then the telephone, then wireless telegraphy; but now it is entirely practical for a man just outside the city of Washington to talk with a man in Honolulu over the wireless telephone. The principle of communication is the same, but the methods employed are different and better.

When men first fought or went to war, they used as weapons, bows and arrows, the sling-shot and spears. Later they used muzzle loading guns, rifles and light artillery; but today we have the big Betsy which will shoot for seventy-five miles. Warfare has kept abreast of the times and has made progress.

Many years ago we walked to church, later we rode in dog carts or wagons, then came the buggy and surrey. Now we drive up in a handsome automobile. The purpose of our going to church is the same, but the method of getting there is far different and better.

Now the great question confronting us, Have we in our churches made the same degree of progress as has been made in other lines of established business? I want to be thoroughly understood in this matter, and desire to impress upon your minds that I am not advocating any change in the well established principles of Christianity. I realize full well that I could not do this, even if I should choose to try. We worship a God, who is the same yesterday, today and forever, and whose plan for the salvation of man was first conceived in His great loving heart; it was extended to the manger, followed its course to Calvary and reached its climax at the empty tomb. We would not change these precious principles if we could. But how about the methods we are employing in letting the folks know about our Christ? Are you satisfied with our present form of Church government? Do you not think that the liberty, of which we boast, in our local church government is really detrimental to our growth and development? Can we hope to make any great degree of progress with our present system?

We are all agreed that the business of the church is the greatest business in the world today. Don't you believe this to be true? I think so, in fact, I know it is true. I know it is far larger than the little sash and blind factory that I am trying to run down in Lee County. But with all the insignificance of the little sash and blind factory, I am frank to say to you that I would not employ a man living in Elon College to take charge of the little sash and blind mill down in Jonesboro, unless he would agree to move to Jonesboro where he could give the business the attention it must have in order to be successful. What man here today would be willing to run his own business with the same methods that you are trying to run your church? How would you feel to have the superintendent of your farm live fifty or a hundred miles away, and run over and talk about the crop twelve times a year? And on the other hand, what kind of a superintendent would you expect to get for the salary you are paying your pastor? Do you think it is good business for a church up near the Virginia line to employ a preacher living in Greensboro, let him spend about 30 per cent of what you pay him for railroad transportation to and from the church, reaching there late Saturday and leaving early Monday? You do not have him on hand to Christen your babies, marry your young, or bury your dead. On the other hand, what do you think of a preacher who will accept work of this kind from a church with anywhere from 100 to 350 members and agree to serve them for $175.00 to $350.00 per year? Can we expect any progress with this kind of service? Do you think it possible for a minister to accomplish anything with that kind of encouragement? Would you expect your business to prosper under similar circumstances?

Now, brethren, it is an established fact that circumstances such as I have just enumerated are prevalent in over 50 per cent of our churches today and they have been this way for the past fifty or hundred years. Are you satisfied with the methods employed? Do you believe with our present church government, it is possible to attain the highest efficiency? I for one do not think it possible. But on the other hand, just let some fellow who has the interest of the church at heart and who wants to see it progress, stand up and insist that we group our churches and have a resident pastor, and he will meet with opposition by quite a number who will say that we are drifting back to the methods of the church we left a hundred years ago. I am persuaded that we had better get back or get somewhere to the point where our churches will be run with some degree of efficiency. And when you say to me that we are drifting back to the methods of the church we left, I find it my unpleasant duty to ask you to compare the progress of that church with that of our church today. They have it on us from nearly every point and their form of government, whether you approve it or not, has the reputation of having no pastorless churches, several times more members and organizations and a better what paid ministry.

We are face to face with the situation. I do not lay all the blame on the founders of our church, nor the preachers nor the laymen, but I charge that all of us need to face about and get in line for action. I do not come to you with a panacea for all ailments, neither would I undertake to direct the course of the church nor dictate its policies, but I come to you today with a practical solution for a part of our short comings. It is the Pastorate Plan. It is something that has passed the experimental stage in some sections of the North Carolina Conference, and I am going to ask your indulgence for a few minutes while I give a brief history of the Christian Church Pastorate of Central Lee County. At the third quarterly meeting of the Sanford Christian church, a little over two years ago, the matter of selecting or electing a pastor for 1918 came before us. Prior to this time when the matter of selecting a pastor would come before us, sometimes a half dozen names would be presented and the church never knew whether or not any of them would consider the position if elected. Quite often we would have to hold three or four elections on account of different pastors not accepting the work. And generally before the matter was definitely settled there would come into existence factions and dissatisfactions which would require months to overcome. But at the third quarterly meeting in 1917, a proposition was made that we appoint or elect a nominating committee whose business it would be to get in touch with available pastors so that no name would go before the church unless we had some assurance that the call would be considered in the event of an election. To my great joy a motion prevailed and Mr. K. B. Way, Mr. J. W. Stout and myself were put on this committee. A few days after this some of us had talks with some of the representative members of Shallow Well, Grace's Chapel, Turner's Chapel and Poplar Branch churches, and we all agreed that we would have our churches meet and discuss the Pastorate Plan. Happily all the churches were favorably impressed with the proposition and each church elected delegates to the Pastorate with full power to act for the churches. We formed a permanent organization, elected officers, adopted by-laws and got down to business. Now here is something that will prove that the Pastoral Plan is a success. We took an inventory of what each church could pay toward the pastor's salary and after it had been tabulated, we found that it amounted to only $725.00. Next in line was to secure a pastor who would undertake to look after the field for that pitiful sum. But the Lord had put it into the heart of one of the best men it has ever been my privilege to meet, and the honorable president of this Conference agreed to consider a call, provided it was unanimous. The name of Rev. T. E. White was the only one placed before the committee and he was unanimously elected and accepted the work. At the end of the first year, it was an easy matter to increase his salary to $1,000.00, and we have just elected him for the third year at a salary of $1,200.00, and an automobile and he has accepted the call for 1920. Now, I don't want you to think for a minute that I consider $1,200.00 a good salary, for it is not to be compared with the real worth of the pastor, but I mention it in order that you may see the substantial progress being made from year to year.

It is my firm conviction that within the next two years, we will be able to divide the pastorate and have the Shallow Well Pastorate and the Sanford Pastorate. Each of the stronger churches will take a part of the weaker and give the whole field the active services of a real pastor. You cannot estimate the value of a resident pastor. Its worth is not to be measured in dollars and cents.

I believe that the more progressive members of the Christian Church would be favorable to the Pastorate Plan, and I commend it to you as the best thing the Sanford church has ever undertaken in the way of local government. I also believe that the majority of our folks are progressive, if given a chance. I am led to this conclusion by the recent campaign conducted by Doctors Atkinson and Harper. You will recall that the committee instructed Dr. Atkinson to raise $50,000.00. He had been out for only a short while, before he was compelled to go back and get permission to raise $100,000.00. Now, I believe the bars have been entirely lifted and he is now at liberty to raise half a million, and there will be no questions asked.

You will also recall that Dr. Harper and his able assistants started out to raise for the Standardization Fund $125,000.00. Before the field was half covered, he found that in order to give all churches a chance at the blessing, he would of necessity have to raise $375,000.00.

I am here to tell you that our people have never had a real chance. We have spent too much time discussing a well worded report on moral reform, which nine-tenths of our people never see or hear about. We make every year beautiful reports on Christian Literature, and then go home and forget to urge upon our people the value of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and Herald of Gospel Liberty. The same applies to Christian Education, we do not push our College enough when we go home from the Conference. I say, let's give the folks back home a chance.

Now in conclusion, I want to say that to organize a pastorate will require patience, prayer and work. It will necessitate the liberal spirit of give and take in non-essentials. It cannot be accomplished in a day and I think the best way to make a start is for some of the leading laymen in the churches to agitate the movement and keep it before the people; get the pastor to help you by making a talk on organized effort emphasizing the value to the whole church of the Pastorate Plan. By all means make the effort and if you are successful, and I feel sure you will be, it will be one of the greatest days in the history of your church, and your personal reward will be the eloquent expression from the inner life that you have had some part in furthering the kingdom of our Lord and His Christ.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TOPIC FOR JANUARY 4, 1920

Peter Preaches at Pentecost

Lesson Text, Acts 2:14, 22-24, 32-42.

Golden Text: Whosoever shall call on the name of the Lord shall be saved.—Acts 2:21.

In this lesson we have given the outlines and salient points in one of the world's very greatest public utterances, so far as thrilling rhetoric and convincing oratory are concerned. Peter's heart was on fire, and his soul was being consumed with a passion for the unsaved of the house of Israel. His old nature of fear and denial and cursing and trembling has been washed away in his bitter tears of repentance, and here we have Peter at his best, fiery, eloquent, bold, fearless as a lion. It is a great utterance and every Sunday school pupil should study it with care.

MRS. BULLOCK RESIGNS

SUN readers will regret that Mrs. Bullock has resigned as editor of this department and the Board has accepted her resignation with reluctance. Brother C. H. Stephenson, Raleigh, N. C., Corresponding Secretary-Treasurer of the Board of Religious Education, has been elected to use the space as he may deem wise to the best interest of our Sunday schools. Brother Stephenson is a live wire in Sunday school work, and we are sure he will make this department of deep and helpful interest to our schools, and to SUN readers generally.

J. O. ATKINSON,
Secretary.

The Senate is endeavoring to revise the Peace Treaty again and the outlook is hopeful at times for its definite reconsideration.

The Government announces that bodies of American soldiers buried in France will be returned at an early date. No private conveyance of bodies will be allowed. The Government is to bear the total expense of the removal and have the same in charge.

MEDLIN-MATTHEWS

At the home of Mrs. T. I. Mawyer in Sanford, N. C., a beautiful wedding took place Thursday, December 4, when her daughter, Miss Lillian Matthews, became the bride of Mr. Haywood Medlin, of Moneure, N. C. Immediately after the marriage the bridal party motored to the home of the groom where a sumptuous supper was served.

Mr. and Mrs. Medlin will reside in Sanford. Their many friends wish for them much joy and happiness. Only a few of their friends and relatives witnessed the ceremony which was performed by the writer.

T. E. WHITE.

UPCHURCH-CHURHILL

Miss Florine Belle Churchill and Mr. Clarence Upchurch, of Morrisville, Wake County, N. C., were married at my home on December 11, 1919. The writer officiated.

W. G. CLEMENTS.

MILLER-HOOK

A beautiful wedding was solemnized at the home of the bride's mother, Mrs. R. C. Hook, December 9, 1919, at 8:00 P. M., when her youngest daughter, Miss Iva Elizabeth, became the bride of Mr. Perry Dewey Miller. The ceremony was performed by Rev. W. C. Hook, brother of the bride, assisted by the writer.

The following were the attendants: Mr. Percy Stine and Miss Mary Miller and Mr. R. O. McDonald and Miss Hazel Hook. Quite a number of guests were assembled to witness the ceremony.

The groom is a successful young farmer. The bride is a former Elon College pupil. The young people have our best wishes for a happy married life.

Secretary of State, Franklin K. Lane, has resigned his position because he cannot remain in public office at his present salary.

A TRIBUTE TO A GOOD MAN

(From remarks of Dr. P. H. Fleming at the funeral of the late Capt. James A. Turrentine).

"Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen in this day in Israel." II Sam. 3:38.

These are the words of king David regarding Abner, a man that he knew well, and for whom he wept and whose bier he followed to the tomb.

This man Abner for whom David wept and of whom he spoke, was not a perfect man. He had his foibles. He was human. But David knew him and he judged him to be a prince and a great man in Israel and so declared him to be.

Whatever Abner's past may have been he was doing at that time what no other man in all Israel could do to end civil war and establish the throne of David. He was on the eve of negotiating a peace when he fell with the tribes of Israel that stood aloof from David.

I come to speak to you my friends, today of a man who was not perfect—there has never been but one perfect man, and that was Jesus Christ whom this man of whom I speak loved and followed.

I knew the man of whom I am speaking, and I declare unto you in the language of king David, that a prince and a great man has fallen this day.

Time and words would fail me to tell of the fields wherein he wrought and the valiant deeds done in home, church, civil and military life.

In the home he was kind and loving. He was a devoted husband and a kind and considerate father.

In church he was a prince among men in his love and devotion to the cause of Christ and his duty to God and man.

In civil life he held many places of trust and honor. He was a good citizen and a friendly neighbor. He delighted to "dwell by the side of the road and be a friend to man."

In military life he was a brave and good soldier. He fought on the side of the Southern Confederacy; but when the "Stars and Bars" waned and fell at Appomattox, and the "Stars and Stripes" again waved over a united people, he proved true to his flag—the flag of his country; but he never lost his love for the "Lost Cause" for which he fought so long and bravely.

But it is not his achievements in the home, nor in civil life nor in military life, that I wish to speak to you, though they are worthy subjects and fields in which he wrought well.

If he could speak to me today, and does he not? Would he not say to me, "Brother Fleming, tell them about the kingdom and the Christ that so wondrously saved me a sinner by His grace."

He and I have often walked and talked together. His presence and his prayers during my nearly sixteen years of service as pastor of this church helped me as pastor and preacher.

He was great in faith. Into his life came many clouds and much sorrow; but to him and for him, behind the clouds the sun was always shining.

I was with him when his son, Spotswood, died; I was with him when his devoted wife, Lou Kilby Turrentine, fell asleep. I wept with him then. Today I weep for him because I shall see him no more on this earth; but to him and to us all behind these clouds of sorrow the sun still shines.

To him each tomorrow held something better than today. To him every cloud had a "silver lining;" and thus he marched on toward the sunset hour with a firm belief that in the evening time it would be light and that beyond the darkness and the blackness of death, loomed eternal light and life.

Who did not love him and whom did he not love? To the county home, the jail and the convict camp together we have often gone on mercy and love's errands. Into the home of sickness and death together we have stood. But it mattered not where nor on what errand bent, there was always love in the heart and in the deed. There was "no mourning of the bar" when he "put out to sea."

As he grew old and feeble, I have watched his steps and I have often met him here and there and paused for a word. We were loth to part. I noticed that he was bending physically before the storm, and I knew that autumn must be near. And as he older grew, I saw another thing, that he grew more like a little child in sincerity, simplicity, faith, hope and love and trust—more like the Master—and I said he will soon be going home—and he has gone. Gone to be with God—the Father; gone to be with Jesus the blessed Saviour who saved him from sin and whom he loved and served; gone to be with the Holy Spirit, the Guide and Comforter; gone to meet and be with the loved ones who have gone before; gone to the blessed Spirit land where cometh no night and no death.

PERSONAL MENTION

(Condensed for lack of space)

A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year to all readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN!

Third church, Norfolk, Va., has issued a neat and useful church directory.

Dr. W. S. Long informs us that he will be in Chapel Hill permanently after Christmas.

Dr. W. T. Walters, Winchester, Va., has resigned his present pastorate to take effect March 1, 1920 and will take up the work in Richmond, Va.

Be patient with us, dear friends. Because your article has not appeared does not mean that we cannot use it but only means that the nature of it was such that it would do to hold. The best of things keep the longest.

The students at Elon College have started a college publication, the title of which is Maroon and Gold, the college colors. It is a 4-column, eight page paper and is to be issued weekly. The price is $1.00 per year. We will have more to say about it later.

Dr. J. P. Barrett's permanent address is 1020 Park Place, Columbus, Ga. This is the parsonage location. Dr. and Mrs. Barrett were pouned December 11, the date of their occupying the parsonage.

Pastors will do us a favor by being brief with their marriage notes during the holidays. We are crowded for space. By the time this issue reaches the public we will have more matter in type and on hand than we can possibly use in the first issue of the New Year.

Many articles had to be left out this week. We had more matter than we had space, and have had for some time. Part of this issue was printed December 17. We had to sacrifice many things we wanted to get in but did the very best we could under the circumstances.

The Editor will take one day for Christmas only, and will spend the remainder of the time working on the Christian Annual, and checking up preparatory to the New Year.

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK

There will be no issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN next week. Readers will note that this is number 52, and adding to it number 31 1/2, our special issue of September 24, gives our readers for 1919, fifty-three issues, one for each week and one over. It happens that 1919 has fifty-three Wednesdays, the issuing day of THE SUN. Our next issue will appear January 7 and the most of that issue is now already in type waiting for press day.

Calendar 1920 grid showing months from January to December with days of the week and dates.

We covet the confirmed co-operation of our subscribers during 1920.
