The church was crowded; the flowers were beautiful. Brother Ruth of Franklinton sang a beautiful solo.

The husband and family have the sympathy of the people of the entire community. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones.

JONES

Another Elon student has been called from labor to reward. Sister Lucy Jones, at the age of fifty-five years, laid down her earthly task, to take up her heavenly abode.

For years she taught school in Franklin County. True to her trust, sweet in disposition, patient in her calling—a model Christian woman. She was an inspiration to her pastor, even in her afflictions.

Would that we all were like her in our attitude towards our fellow creatures and our God.

She leaves to mourn their loss two brothers: W. R. and W. J. Jones, and four sisters: Mrs. L. A. Holmes, Miss Emma Jones, Mrs. Corinna Ray and Mrs. Annie L. House, and a large circle of friends.

She was laid to rest in the family plot at Pope's Chapel, after funeral services conducted by the writer. Many beautiful flowers covered the grave.

WHITAKER

Thomas H. Whitaker departed this life May 5, 1920, in his sixty-fourth year, after an illness of many months. His family was with him in his last hours.

He leaves to mourn their loss, his beloved wife, Mrs. Henrietta Whitaker, five sons and four daughters: G. T., W. C., L. L., J. H., and V. R. Whitaker, all of Franklin County; Mrs. Mary Smith of Kittrell, N. C.; Mrs. Sallie Moize of Durham, N. C.; Mrs. Mollie E. Young of Henderson, N. C.; and Miss Bessie Whitaker of Franklinton, N. C. Also twenty-one grandchildren, two brothers, J. Y. and W. H. Whitaker; two-half brothers and one-half sister, and a host of friends.

Brother Whitaker had been a very active man all of his life. He believed in progress in State and Church, and was always willing to do his part to help make the world better.

The funeral services were conducted at the home of the deceased by Rev. J. D. Wicker of Sanford, N. C., assisted by Rev. G. J. Green and the writer. He was laid to rest in Franklinton cemetery.

The crowd that gathered and the many floral designs placed on the vault, attest the esteem in which the deceased was held. The true devotion and loyalty of children to father and of father to children was a marked characteristic in the family.

May the Lord comfort this dear people, so sorely bereaved.

BYRD

Mrs. Grace Annie Byrd, wife of L. M. Byrd, died at her home in Portsmouth, Va., June 10, 1920. Mrs. Byrd was the daughter of James M. Bowden of Zuni, Va., and was thirty-seven years, four months and fifteen days old at the time of her death. She was a loyal member of the Newport News Christian church and was loved by all who knew her. She leaves a devoted husband, two daughters, an aged father, four brothers and many friends to mourn her death. The funeral services were conducted at Mt. Carmel Christian church and her remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery, there to await the coming of her Lord. May the Lord bless the bereaved ones, especially the motherless children.

STALLINGS

Riddick P. Stallings, son of Mrs. Etta B. Johnson, died at Oteen hospital, N. C., on May 3, 1920, after a lingering illness of nearly two years. He died of complications following an attack of the influenza.

Mr. Stallings was born on December 26, 1892, and was for some time a popular clerk at the C. & O. railroad, Norfolk, Va. When war was declared in 1917, he entered the service of the United States as a volunteer, and having had considerable experience in railroad work, was at once made chief clerk of pier 9 at the dock of the C. & O. railroad where he remained until his health failed in the spring of 1918. On November 27 of that year he was sent to the U. S. General Hospital at Oteen, N. C., where he remained until his death. His mother, whose devotion to him was indeed beautiful to behold, spent the last ten months with him administering to his every want.

Mr. Stallings was a very popular, congenial and warm-hearted young man and made friends wherever he went.

He had been a member of Cypress Chapel Christian church from boyhood, and died an earnest, devout Christian. The twenty-third Psalm seemed to be his special solace in his last illness. He would quote that Psalm and express a willingness to go since his Shepherd had promised to go with him and lead him through the dark valley of death.

He leaves a mother and four brothers: Captain Stallings of the Virginia Pilots Association, Eddie Stallings of the Daily Press and Times-Herald of Newport News, Floyd Stallings of Philadelphia, Pa., and Arthur Johnson, to mourn their loss. We sympathize with them in their great loss, but their loss is his gain.

A FRIENDCOX

On June 1, 1920, Brother W. O. Cox, son of Calvin Cox, passed from labor to rest, aged fifty-two years, seven months and three days.

On February 4, 1893, he was married to Mattie Dorsett. To this union were born eleven children, three of whom died in infancy. He leaves to mourn their loss a devoted wife, eight children, two brothers, three sisters, and a host of friends.

He professed faith in Christ and united with Parks' Cross Roads church twenty-eight years ago. Since that time he has held some office in the church almost continuously. At the time of his death he was the church's most efficient treasurer. He has been leader of the choir for a number of years. The chair that he filled at the organ will be hard to refill.

Not only has the church lost a valuable member but the community has lost one of its most useful citizens. He was kind and good and gentle to all who knew him. Surely a good man has been taken from us. That is the best that can be said of any man. May God bless the bereaved ones.

A. T. BANKS.

BRADY

Mrs. Pearle Brady was born October 30, 1883 and died May 30, 1920. On November 11, 1907, she was married to Herbert F. Brady. To this union were born four children, Alfred Ferree who died in infancy, Jessie Hampton, and Causey Julian who still survive. The last one sleeps on mother's arm.

She leaves to mourn their great loss, her husband, two children, father and mother, one brother, four sisters and friends of all who knew her.

Sister Brady was active in all the work of the church. In early years she united with the M. E. Church, South, and was a faithful member. After she was married she moved her membership to the Christian church at Ramseur to be with her husband. She was always ready to do her best in anything the church called upon her to do. She was active in the Philathea Class, Ladies' Aid, Woman's Missionary Society and at the time of her death was collector-treasurer for the church.

The loss of such a person cannot be estimated either in the church or community. Her life was a ray of hope and sunshine to all who knew her. She was gentle, kind and full of smiles. It was always a pleasure to be in her presence. Certainly our loss is Heaven's gain in this noble character. God comfort those who mourn.

A. T. BANKS.

PENDERGRASS

On May 27, 1920, Mr. John W. Pendergrass of Raleigh, N. C., was severely burned when his clothing which was partly saturated with gasoline was set on fire by a short circuit in the ignition system of an automobile on which he was working. Hopes for his recovery were held out the next day after the accident. On the second day symptoms of the dreaded complications were prominent, and on May 30, the fourth day of his suffering, he died at the age of twenty-six years.

Brother Pendergrass professed faith in Christ several years ago and became a member of New Elam Christian church to which he was ever loyal. His consistency was noticed and admired even recently when just a few days before the accident which caused his untimely taking off, he motored from Raleigh to be with life-long friends in a service at the old home church.

Rev. O. B. Mitchell, pastor of Johnson Memorial Baptist church, Raleigh, assisted the writer in the funeral service. The interment was with Junior Order honors.

The Lord bless the mother and young wife who survive.

B. J. HOWARD.

RAINS

Decemus S. Rains died April 20, 1920, at the age of eighty years, seven months and seven days. She was married to A. E. Rains, March 22, 1866, who preceded her in death some years ago.

To them were born three children, Daniel F. Rains of Thomasville, N. C.; and Mrs. B. F. Craven and W. A. Rains of Ramseur, N. C., Route 1. She professed faith in Christ and joined the M. E. Church at Concord many years ago at which place she was a member at the time of her death.

She was afflicted for a long time but she patiently endured to the end. Interment at Park's Cross Roads. God bless the bereaved.

T. J. GREEN.

BRINKLEY

Mrs. Sallie E. Brinkley, widow of the late John W. Brinkley of Nurney, Nancemond County, Va., died June 1, 1920. She was forty-seven years of age at the time of her death. Mrs. Brinkley was a good Christian and a devoted mother. Her sorrows were many and her afflictions were great, yet she bore them all with much fortitude, being fully resigned to her Lord. She leaves five children, three sons and two daughters. Her sons are C. W. Brinkley, S. R. Brinkley and L. E. Brinkley. Her daughters are Mrs. R. B. Ashworth and Miss Julia Brinkley. She also leaves an aged mother, two brothers, two sisters and two grandchildren. Her funeral services were conducted at Cypress Chapel Christian church and her remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery. The Lord be with and comfort the bereaved ones.

KITCHEN IDEAS

Baked Liver and Bacon.—Place a layer of thin slices of scalded liver on a greased baking platter, cover with thin slices of bacon and a dash of pepper. Bake in the oven until the bacon becomes crisp.

Egg Salad.—Three hardboiled eggs, mayonnaise dressing, lettuce, two sour pickles. A delicious salad may be made from the above ingredients. Chop into rather small pieces the eggs and pickles. Combine these and salt. Add enough mayonnaise to thoroughly mix the salad. Serve on lettuce leaves. This mixture may be used for filling for sandwiches and is particularly good for this purpose.

A new pocket kitchen which weighs two pounds and is about the size of a kodak, contains a broiler rack with legs which can be thrust into the ground, two frying pans with detachable handles, which may be used together to make a roasting or baking vessel, a kettle for stewing or boiling, two drinking cups, knives, forks and spoons. There is also room in the kit for salt, pepper, sugar, tea and coffee.

HABIT

The only way to get rid of a bad habit is to stop it right off. If you try tapering off, this is the result. You drop the "H," and you still have

A Bit

You think you are getting over it by dropping a little bit of the evil things; so you go on and drop the A, but you still are

That is to say, you are not getting on at all. You are fooling yourself. You are just where you were. You are still bit by the evil thing. However, you think you are progressing, and so you drop the "B." But you are no farther on; you still have

And "it" is the sting of habit; "it" has been the whole trouble all along. You are where you started. Even when you drop the "I" you still have just as you had

This stands for temptation. And temptation is a longer word to get rid of than habit. Better do the thing wholesale and drop all the letters at once.—Exchange.

GOOD-NIGHT PRAYER

Father, now I go to rest
In my safe and quiet nest;
Keep my little heart to-night
Close to thine, till morning light.
Bless my friends, and in thy love
Watch and keep them from above
Till the sunshine comes again,
For our Saviour's sake. Amen.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE AND OUR COLLEGE

With the closing of the Men and Millions Campaign July 1, we feel free to ask pastors and friends to turn their attention to that which should be the desire of the whole Church, namely; that of recruiting the ranks of our college.

In every community there are young people who should attend college, and who would attend if only encouraged a little. The Church needs the enlarged vision that these young people can get by attending college. Their communities need the reaction that will come to them by the new ideas that will be brought back, while these young men and women vitally need the preparation such as Elon can give.

Pastors shepherd their flocks. How splendid the idea! And how beautiful the scene when year by year there is found coming from these flocks "lambs" to enter our college for definite training! We have begun to question the fruits of a pastor's ministry when a year's work will not stimulate at least one young person to attend college. "Where there is no vision the people perish." Our people need vision in these days above all other things. We do not question their sincerity; we do not doubt their religion; we do not discount their willingness. Where we have failed to put over a full and definite program, it has been where the people did not have a vision of the real needs involved. There need to be scattered in every community young people of a larger vision, such as a college training can give. This type of manhood and womanhood cannot go into communities unless they first go out of these communities. Many of them will not go out unless we go in after them.

Elon is our college. We can say "ours" in its broadest meaning, for Elon had no millionaire to found it, has had no wealthy capital to nurse it, and has never drawn its patronage from families of inherited wealth. She has built her equipment and done her educational work at the same time. She has filled our pulpits with men of great minds and they have caught a vision and helped to usher in a new day for the Church and the Kingdom.

It is our privilege to set our hands and hearts to the task of inducing our young people to go to Elon this fall. We can help by sending names of prospective students to President Harper; speaking to and encouraging those who are now receiving literature; by counseling with parents; by inspirational talks and addresses, and finally by translating our interest in Elon into definite service for her.

"Our license to BE is our mission to SERVE."

MEN AND MILLIONS CAMPAIGN ENDS

The Men and Millions Campaign officially ends on July 1. The extension of time has given many churches opportunity to raise their quota and they have done so. Some have not, while a few have not entered into the work. They had their own opinion about it and pursued their own course. However, nearly every church in the Convention entered whole-heartedly into the work and co-operated beautifully.

AMERICAN CLERGY SAIL TO VISIT EUROPEAN CHURCHES

The first of the "friendly visitors" from American churches to the churches of Europe sailed from New York today. Rev. Arthur J. Brown, Chairman of the Federal Council's Committee on Fraternal Relations, will carry the message of American friendship to the churches of France, Hungary, Italy and Switzerland. Mr. Charles V. Vickrey, Secretary of the Near East Relief, sailing on La Savoie, will visit the churches of Armenia, Belgium, Bulgaria, Czecho-Slovakia, Holland, Hungary, Greece, France and England. Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, General Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America also left on La Savoie to visit Belgium, France, Switzerland, Italy and Holland. Rev. William P. Merrill, pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church in New York City, sails on the Adriatic for England, France and Switzerland.

Other prominent American clergymen, on a similar errand, will sail at an early date. The purpose of these visits is to strengthen the ties of international friendship between the churches and to try to restore the shattered confidence of these people in the sincerity of our American ideals.

YOUR PASTOR'S VACATION

Vacation is here and the pastor who has been hard at work during the year is thinking of taking a few days or a few weeks off for rest. Vacations are always worth while, though we have our knowledge from observation and not experience.

"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," and all preaching and no rest and study make a poor preacher. One continual grind soon makes work a drudgery and then it loses its life and interest. Freshness is always telling in work of any kind. A day off gives one an opportunity to get out and find lessons in nature and think new thoughts, take to himself larger ideas and plan for their enlargement.

Vote your pastor a vacation. He will come back a broader man, be a better preacher, a more helpful pastor, and will appreciate your thought of him.

The vote to give him a vacation, backed up with a purse to help bear the expense, would certainly be in order and both pastor and people will get more out of it.

JULY FOURTH

July fourth is a national holiday. The date comes on Sunday this year and July fifth will be celebrated.

Many have the wrong idea of what a national holiday means. Their idea of it is to abuse it by abusing themselves. Instead of making it a day of recreation and enjoyment they turn it into a day of dissipation for themselves and bring disgrace upon our freedom. Freedom is not license to get drunk, to kill and to take the name of God in vain. Freedom is too sacred to be looked upon in that light. It is by freedom that we enjoy the happiness of homes, association of good men and women, have the pleasure and privilege of worship, the protection to pursue the things which make for us happiness and sustain our homes.

Let us keep and celebrate the day with soberness and sincerity. We are considered one of the greatest nations of the world and it is our privilege to continue this great recognition. However, we cannot hope to do it by turning our holidays into that which will bring mourning to our people.

AS THE EDITOR SEES THIS ISSUE

Dr. W. T. Walters favors us with the Christian Endeavor topic for July 4. The Christian Endeavor topic has been absent of late due to changes in the personnel of the Board of Religious Education. We are still short on the comments of the Sunday School lesson, but have had no request for their continuation, or inquiry as to their absence. We understand that the Board has not been able to get any one to undertake the work.

Rev. J. T. Kitchen gives SUN readers another good article this week. Brother Kitchen is musical in his writings and strikes the heart strings of many readers. We hear many good things from our readers about his articles.

The panoramic view shown on page 16 reminds former Elon students of by-gone days, and present students in that institution that a welcome awaits their return. And too, it beckons the prospective student to join ranks there this fall for a larger preparation.

Brother E. T. Cotten calls the attention of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention to some important matters in this issue. His counsel is timely, progressive, and we trust that his message will be read and heeded.

The report from the Orphanage this week will remind the churches that our Orphanage has a class that will and can sing and give entertainments. Write Brother Johnston for a date and get the class to your church.

President Chas. H. Stephenson of the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention is rallying his forces for a great Convention at Elon College, July 13-15. See program in full in this issue.

Pastor and preacher, G. O. Lankford, of the Eastern Virginia Conference, and Layman, J. Byrd Ellington, of the North Carolina Conference, make requests in this issue that should be heeded.

Dr. Staley's "Suffolk Letter" contains a suggestion that other communities could put into practice. The letter speaks for itself and the interested church member will certainly read it.

Recording Secretary Staley, of the Seaside Chautauqua informs us that the annual gathering will be postponed for this year. His official announcement can be found on page 9 of this number.

The children this week, we think, will enjoy "The Original Pollyanna" story given under the heading: "Little Folks."

Mrs. J. W. Harrell gives us a clear-cut article this week and lays the issue before us. Her letter should be read by every woman of the Church—and man, too.

Miss Bessie I. Holt adds to the interest of this week's issue by her splendid article on "Enlisting Our Young People." Let us help her to enlist them.

THE SUN'S front page should deepen our interest in church building and cause us to lift our hats to the hustling little band of workers of the Third church.

Drs. Atkinson and Harper make an announcement for Brother Wellons that will be read with interest by many SUN subscribers.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

PASTORS IN EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

On Thursday, July 22, the second day of our Sunday School Convention which will meet with the Isle of Wight church, our Convention program calls for a recognition service of the young people who volunteered as life recruits during our Men and Millions Campaign. It is earnestly desired that every life recruit in the Conference be present at that time. Now, Brother Pastor, will you endeavor to have your life recruits attend the Convention for that day? We need your cooperation in this matter. We beg of you that you help us without fail.

G. O. LANKFORD,
General Secretary.

EASTERN VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

Although the proceedings of the last session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention were printed and mailed to all the Sunday schools of the Convention within ten days after adjournment, and even distributed among the members of some of the schools Sunday, August 3, 1919, some failed to receive a copy. For this reason we are herein copying a few very important items to be noted in preparation for the coming session of the Convention, Wednesday and Thursday, July 21 and 22, at Isle of Wight Christian church, Isle of Wight Court House, Va.

"It was moved and carried that the schools be requested to send in checks in whole dollars and no cents, hereafter, on account of fractions of dollars necessitating greater work to the tabulating committee.

"The Convention voted to set the membership dues for the year 1919-20 at five cents per member enrolled, and Mission Apportionment at ten cents per member enrolled.

"Constitution and By-Laws.

"Art. IV. Section I.—All elders and licentiates belonging to or working within the bounds of the Eastern Virginia Conference, all superintendents in the schools of the Convention shall be members and each school of 100 members or less shall be entitled to two delegates and one delegate for each additional 100 members, provided that no school shall have more than four delegates, and provided further that at least one-half of the delegates from each school shall be teachers.

"Section II.—This Convention shall include the Christian Endeavor Societies within the bounds of the Eastern Virginia Conference, and these Societies shall be entitled to representation on the same basis as Sunday schools, and shall be required to pay the same membership fee."

We trust the schools will take notice of the above in electing their delegates, making out the annual reports, and sending in checks, for in so doing we help improve the Convention. Last year, on account of rainy weather, nearly half the schools were not represented. Let us plan to have each and every school represented this year at Isle of Wight regardless of weather. With a full attendance, every Department Superintendent rendering a brief written report, and enthusiastic addresses, we can make this one of the best ever held.

E. T. COTTEN,
Recording Secretary.

June 23, 1920.

NOTICE, PLEASE!

If you have an orchestra, or a part of one, please take it with you to the Convention. "Awakening Songs" the song book adopted by the Convention last year will be used. Please bring all you have. The opening session will be at 8:00 o'clock, Tuesday evening, July 13. There will be six sessions of the Convention and we want you to attend every one of them. Get busy and stay busy—talking, preaching, and boosting the Convention, please, until same becomes history.

C. H. STEPHENSON, Gen. Sec'y.

NOTICE

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR JULY 4, 1920

"Our Duty to Our Country."—Isaiah 1:16-20 (Consecration Meeting)

The word duty, when applied to us in reference to our nation, is so closely allied to the words loyalty and patriotism as to be almost inseparable.

We need a larger conception of patriotism or duty. The historian has persistently held up the soldier as the highest type of patriotism and about the only class that was worth mentioning. We would not take one iota of glory from the soldier; his record has been written in privations, in hardships, in sacrifice and in blood. The service he rendered to his country has been great, but others in other walks of life have performed tasks that meant just as much to their fellowmen and some day we shall erect our marble columns, write pages in our histories, and tell our children of our heroes and heroines, who through sacrifice and difficulties wrought for us in times of peace.

Duty to our country may be classed under three heads, viz: Defensive Duty, Passive Duty, Constructive Duty.

1. Defensive Duty—The soldiers who drive back the invading army are rendering a defensive duty. The doctors who told us to kill the mosquito and shut out the fly, to prevent the spread of disease, rendered a defensive duty. The moral forces which stopped the destructive ravages of the saloon and closed up the dens of vice have rendered a service, which in magnitude and far-reaching influence, will parallel the records of any war. Any effort that is put forth to check or stop any evil force is an act of defensive patriotism. He who could today crush out Bolshevism and administer a cure for the state of unrest, would prove a hero of the highest type.

2. Passive duty—Patriotism does not necessarily consist in blowing horns, beating drums, waving banners and making long-winded patriotic speeches.

The great mass of our people, who show their faith in our nation do so by holding up its high ideals and obeying its laws form the strong rock of patriotism on which our nation is founded. Breaking the law is unpatriotic and disloyal.

3. Constructive Duty.—Every organization or movement, that has for its aim the betterment of the race, is a constructive force and he who gives his influence and activities to these forces is rendering a constructive duty.

Christian Endeavorers will find fields for constructive service in the following organizations and movements: Christian Endeavor Society, Sunday School, Church, Temperance Organizations, Child Welfare Work, Social Service, Missionary Societies, School Leagues, Patriotic Societies, Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, Reading Clubs and Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations.

Questions to be Answered in the Meeting

1. What is the highest conception of duty to the nation?

2. What can the Christian Endeavor Society do towards making the nation better?

3. Can a man, who is not a Christian, render the highest patriotic service?

SUFFOLK LETTER

June 20 was Suffolk's greatest Sunday school day. It was parade day by the Sunday schools of the city and Nausemond County. City superintendents had charge of the plans and the parade. Each denomination had a float followed by their respective schools. The Presbyterian school led with a float representing the "finding of Moses," with the Princess, the baby and the nurse; then came Oxford Methodist with a float, "Go Teach All Nations," showing men and women in costumes to represent all nations; Main Street Methodist with a float, "The World is My Parish" with a large globe with map of all nations and John Wesley standing by the globe with open Bible; St. Paul's Episcopal school's float represented the first English church in America in 1607 and Robert Hunt who held the first service; the Christian church followed with float as a boat representing "Rock of Ages" with white cross to which young woman was clinging and angel's standing by and this float was counted the best; and last came the Baptist float representing "A Model Sunday School" with teacher in place and class, with lesson, "Suffer Little Children to Come Unto Me."

The procession was formed in Main Street and headed by Mayor Macleary and Sergeant Baker, followed by pastors, superintendents, Woodmen Band of Portsmouth; Judge J. L. McLemore, Dr. Hugh Knowles of Norfolk, leader of song, and Judge Frank Christian of Lynnhburg; the orator of the occasion. Following the city schools were schools of the same denomination from Nausemond county. The largest attendance of any county school was from Oakland Christian church, and the next largest was from Providence Methodist.

The line of march was up Main, up Washington to Clay, down Clay to Market, down Market to Main, and down Bank to Joyner's Park. Following the floats beginners and primaries were carried in trucks, followed by the schools on foot with their classes by number carrying banners and attended by their teachers.

On the platform in the park were seated superintendents, pastors, Mayor J. H. Macleary, Dr. Knowles, leader of song; Judge McLemore, and Judge Christian.

Music by the Band, "Onward Christian Soldiers," by the throng, prayer by W. W. Staley, Judge McLemore introduced Judge Christian, who made a fine address on "The Dynamics of Teaching." He was listened to with rapt attention and praised by all who heard him. The Judge is himself a teacher of a class of five hundred with two hundred and fifty in regular attendance every Sunday. J. F. Rawles was chairman of the Committee and had charge of the exercises. After music by the Band, and song led by Mr. Jollay, the benediction was pronounced by Rev. Ernest Stevens, pastor of Oxford church. The procession, with four abreast, encompassed two city blocks, and perhaps more than two thousand people were at the park. There had never been such a parade in Suffolk before this, and the Sunday school can claim the first place in the field of public demonstration in this city and county.

This parade was conceived and planned to make a demonstration of the Sunday school forces of Suffolk and Nausemond, to get the schools together in friendly co-operation, and to awaken renewed interest in Sunday school work; and I have written of it to let others see what this community is trying to do in this field of Christian activity.

A CARD OF THANKS

We wish to thank the people of Holland and vicinity for the generous and brotherly spirit in which they ministered to our every need during the illness and death of our darling baby. Nothing seemed to be left undone by these kind hearts and loving hands to render assistance and bring comfort to our stricken hearts. Feeble words cannot express our debt of gratitude; only a loving heavenly Father can render due appreciation for such gracious service, and may He abundantly reward every one with his most precious blessings.

“SUITED”

I was in Burlington a few days ago, when a good looking Brother took me by the arm and led me into Sellars' Store. We stayed there a few minutes and when I came out, I had a nice hat, and suit of clothes, all paid for. These things were given me for which I am very grateful. Yesterday I had on the new suit and hat. The ladies' said I looked like a major general. Two of them asked me where I got my new suit and the price. I could not tell them the price, but told them where I got it. This is the second suit I ever had given me. It is very cool and nice.

J. W. WELLONS.

June 28, 1920.

DANVILLE, VA.

Since the fifth Sunday in May we have had a great time at the Danville Christian church. On the fifth Sunday morning the series of meetings opened at eleven o'clock. After a preliminary service which consisted of a song service, prayer by the pastor, welcome address by Rev. O. W. Guinn of Danville, and a historical sketch of the church by Rev. P. T. Klapp, Dr. J. O. Atkinson preached the dedicatory sermon.

At noon a sumptuous feast was spread which all seemed to enjoy. In the afternoon, Dr. Atkinson made a short address stressing the importance of young people in the church. Following this address Miss Bessie Holt addressed the congregation on "Woman's Part in God's Work." After her address a Woman's Missionary Society and Young People's Missionary Society were organized.

In the evening, Rev. J. G. Truitt preached at eight o'clock. The people of Danville were greatly pleased with the services of the day and wish to thank all who helped to make it a success.

Following the fifth Sunday, a ten days' revival was held. Rev. J. Lee Johnson did the preaching. We feel that we owe God many thanks for the wonderful work done through Brother Johnson. As a result of the meeting about forty-five professed Christ, several consecrated themselves, thirty-two joined the church, and the whole membership was revived.

Our church is moving on fine and has been since the foundation, but we are looking for greater things in the future. Rev. J. G. Truitt will baptize candidates on the second Sunday in July.

It is a great thing to be in the service of the Lord and see the work prosper. Unto God be all the glory.

JOSEPH E. McCAULEY.

ANNOUNCEMENT AND SUGGESTION

Recently our venerable Brother, Rev. J. W. Wellons, now in his ninety-fifth year and for nearly seventy years a minister in our Church, announced in THE CHRISTIAN SUN that he would pray for any who desired it. In response to that announcement many afflicted ones laid their cases before him. It has been a real benediction to Brother Wellons to hold up to the Lord these dear friends. His method is to appoint a time when both he and the sufferer shall pray with faith, nothing doubting.

Many kind expressions of help through this spiritual ministry have cheered his heart and he is willing to continue this service for any who may seek it through faith. Brother Wellons' approach to this sacred method of helping the helpless is thoroughly scriptural. He does not think that prayer will accomplish everything, but he does believe that the prayer of righteous persons availeth much with the Lord, and as we have said, the cheering messages of help received that have reached him encourage him to desire to help others still.

Brother Wellons is now in his ninety-fifth year. Travel is taxing on him, yet he is perfectly willing to go to see any who especially desire a personal visit or to come to congregations as requested for a few days intensive ministry to the afflicted therein whether of mind or body. Some whose malady permitted a personal visit have come to him with excellent results.

Let any who feel Spirit-led write directly to Rev. J. W. Wellons, Elon College, N. C.

MISSIONARY

ENLISTING OUR YOUNG PEOPLE

The most outstanding need of the Church today is that of winning our young people to Christ and the Church. It is a problem worth every Christian's consideration.

Matthew Simpson said, "The Church by its neglect of childhood loses more people to the Kingdom of God than all our revivals are able to bring back." This in spite of the fact that our Savior said, "It is not the will of your Father that one of these little ones should perish." (Matt. 18:14). We admit with shame that our own churches have been too negligent of the youth. That eminent writer was correct who said: "Bringing up the next generation is the biggest job this generation has." It is a job that every Christian is responsible for, and each should have a helping hand in.

We are told that forty per cent of our population today is under twenty-one years of age. Stop dear friends, and think for one moment, what a field we have here for service. In our own Christian churches of the Southern Christian Convention we have 25,000 members. In the homes or in reach of these thousands there must be another 25,000 young people out of the Church who should be won. Just think of 25,000 young people for whom we should be laboring and whom we should be reaching for Christian service!

One of the Bishops of the M. E. Church said, "The conservation of the youth in all lands is the largest piece of conservation we have on our hands." Haven't we as a Church been too conservative on the wrong lines, in regard to our young people?

When Christ was on earth he recognized the youth. He had work for them, He had need for them. When the multitudes were hungry, how important the lad was with his few loaves and fishes! Christ needed just the thing the lad had. He today needs our boys and girls, just what they have and are. We do not find anywhere that the lad reserved any of the loaves and fishes for himself. He gave what Christ wants us today—his all. The tendency today is for both young and old to make reservations in the wrong direction. We need to get our young people to let themselves go for Christ. I have found this one of the great troubles since I have been Superintendent of Young People's work, that our leaders have so many reservations they do not have time for God's work.

For a year and half I have been working as Superintendent of Young People's Work of the North Carolina Christian Conference, and at the last session of our Convention, I was asked to become Superintendent of the Young People's Work of the Convention. I wish that the friends of our Church could realize with me what a wonderful privilege for Christian service this is. And yet what a fearful responsibility. Friends cannot realize how unworthy I am to assume such a task, and how unequal to the great task, I feel, and yet in my feeble way I am not only willing but eager and anxious to do everything within my power to reach for our Master's use the young people of our churches and congregations. I now plead for the prayers, the sympathy, the help, the Christian co-operation of our pastors, leaders, laymen, co-workers. I need and will greatly appreciate help and suggestions from any source.

My desire, and that for which I am willing to spend and be spent, is to line up our young people for Christian service. And my thought is that there is no better way to do this than to organize them into Young People's Missionary Societies. This will give the young people something of their own; something to do in the Master's service, and something worth while to read, think and talk about. "A Young People's Missionary Society in every church of the Southern Christian Convention," is that for which I am longing, laboring, and praying. To this end I am willing to go anywhere, do anything within my reach, as invitation may come and opportunity may afford.

I have just prepared a Text Book on "How to Begin and Carry on a Young People's Missionary Society." This is for free distribution and will tell any intelligent young woman in any congregation just what she may do to have a live and active society. Send for a copy of this book, and let me help you in trying to direct some of the boundless energy of our young people into channels of usefulness and blessing in our Savior's name.

Let us see, dear friends, if we cannot get at least a fraction more than twenty thousand young people of our congregations and communities to become interested and active in the work for Him Who did and gave so much for us.

The Work of Our Women

(All items for this department should be sent to Mrs. J. W. Harrell, Burlington, N. C.)

It is the dawning of a new day for the women of the Christian Church, a day of larger service and greater usefulness, a day fraught with tremendous responsibilities and opportunities. Shall we not thank God that we live in such a day? Service is our watch-word. Our eyes are being opened to the needs of the world. We are getting a vision of the larger task. God's voice is calling in a very distinct way. John 11:28, "The Master is come and calleth for thee." Shall we hear and heed His call; or shall we continue in the old way? No time for His service. No time to think of others and their needs. No time for anything but self and selfish purposes. No time to attend a missionary meeting. But my friends, we do find time for the things we want to do.

Our mission work needs the co-operation of every woman in our Church. The work needs you and you need the inspiration, the joy and blessings which result from such a service. No, we cannot continue in the old self-centered way, because God is pointing us to the wide-open door of service. He is laying upon our hearts the evangelization of the world. There is no greater work in all the world than the carrying of the Gospel to the ends of the earth and every woman should want to have a share in it.

Last week we emphasized the financial and organization goals adopted by the Southern Convention Woman's board. This week we are emphasizing the membership goal, which calls for two thousand new members during the next two years. If each Conference Board and each local Society will assume some definite share in this extension work we shall easily attain this goal. Plan some time during the year for an intensive campaign for new members. Give every woman in your church and congregation an urgent invitation to become a member of the Missionary Society. There are hundreds of our women, young people, girls and boys who have never identified themselves with our missionary organizations. It is only the few faithful ones who are trying to carry forward the work. We need to multiply our workers in order that we may enlarge our work. The needs are imperative. We need men, we need money. We need intercessors. Our workers in Japan and Porto Rico need larger and better equipment. Our Mission Boards cannot meet the demands that are upon them. Appeals for more workers, better equipment, larger salaries; increased cost of living calls for an increase in salaries for our missionaries. Our Boards cannot send out more missionaries and cannot support and equip them unless we enlarge our work on the home base. Our greatest need is more prayer and the teaching of Christian stewardship.

Our Young People's Work

The Christian Church cannot afford longer to neglect the development of her Young People's Department. It is true we have made a beginning, and our faithful leaders have no doubt been untiring in their efforts to start the work. Those of us who have done initial work in the various departments know what it means to create a sentiment and build up a work, this foundation work has been done and now it is time to expand.

Our Corresponding Secretary's report to the Southern Christian Convention Board meeting in Raleigh showed that in the Southern Convention we have thirty-four Young People's Societies, nineteen Willing Workers, thirty-two Cradle Rolls and six Boys' Societies. We have 222 churches in the Convention. We readily see the great need of organization. We have the young people and we have the children. Shall we not begin at once to build up this department?

Surely there is some one in every church who will become responsible for this work. Begin to agitate the subject in your own church. Think and talk about the need and possibilities of a Young People's Society, a Willing Workers' Societies, 19; Young People's Sunday school superintendents, and presidents of Woman's Societies use their influence in behalf of the work. Write to the Young People's Superintendent of your Conference Board and she will gladly help you.

Corresponding Secretary's Report

(Mrs. A. T. Banks)

"Go Forward" is doubtless the motto of the women of the Southern Christian Convention, in regard to our mission work.

It is gratifying to report a large increase in numbers of Societies within the past two years, which readily shows that missionary zeal is taking hold of our women and we see a new day for our work.

Let us look to the day when every church shall have a Woman's Missionary Society, Young People's Society, Willing Workers, Boys' Society, and Cradle Roll.

I report the following: Woman's Societies, 85; Willing Workers' Societies, 19; Young People's Societies, 34; Cradle Rolls, 32; Cradle Roll members, 475; Boys' Societies, 6; Young Men's Societies, 1; Woman's Junior Societies, 1; Missionary Scouts, 1; Home Departments, ———. Total number of Societies, 179; in crease of 42 Societies.

SEASIDE CHAUTAUQUA POSTPONED

At a meeting of the Central Executive Committee of the Seaside Chautauqua held in Norfolk, Virginia, May 31, 1920, with the following members present: C. H. Rowland, D. D., President; S. M. Smith, General Secretary; L. E. Smith, D. D., Assistant General Secretary; and W. W. Staley, Recording Secretary, the following was passed by unanimous vote:

After full discussion of the subject and in consideration of the Forward Movement and the Men and Millions Campaign, and other circumstances, L. E. Smith moved, and it was unanimously approved,

That, as the program has not been completed, the Chautauqua be postponed for 1920, and carried over to 1921; and that the guarantee fund be kept in tact with the hope of a successful session in 1921.

On motion of S. M. Smith, the chairman was requested to appoint a new Program Committee of five at once, and that the Chairman be one of that number; and that they prepare the program at an early day. The Chairman then appointed the program committee as follows: W. H. Denison, W. A. Harper, Heman Eldredge, S. M. Smith, and C. H. Rowland.

Adjourned to meet at the call of the Chairman.

Signed: C. H. ROWLAND, President.

W. W. STALEY, Recording Secretary.

A GOOD SUGGESTION

Tar can be taken off with petroleum.

Tea stains can be taken out with boiling water or glycerin.

Hot milk is better than boiling water for removing most stains.

If, in ironing, you scorch an article, soap-suds and the hot sun will remove it.

Drop a lump of sugar into teapots when they are put away and they will not acquire an unpleasant taste or odor. It is worth the trouble to obviate that musty smell so usual in metal pots kept covered some time.

DEVOTIONAL

LIFE, LIGHT AND LIBERTY

Life very naturally comes first, next light, and then liberty. These three things are enjoyable in the greatest degree, and life would not, and could not, be at its best without the last two mentioned. Every one who has them doubtless does, or ought to, fully appreciate them. What is life? Being full of great deep mystery does not tell what it is. It is sometimes named energy—and is often called spirit. It is vital force that breathes in the animal kingdom and exists in and sustains the vegetable, causing growth and development in both. For without these unseen forces neither could exist or survive. Life is so sweet and dear to all ages and conditions of people, that they love to live it and enjoy it. The breath of life was first breathed into a man's nostrils and he became a living soul. The frame work which God had so wonderfully made was all ready to receive life, and the unseen energy made the self acting body complete with spirit and power. Life, surrounded by so many mysteries, is certainly a most fertile thing for thought and investigation.

Life is an attractive, entertaining reality. The rose—touched with life and blooming into blushing life—is beautiful, fragrant and useful. Each rose has a thorn which adds nothing to its usefulness, in our way of thinking. But the thorn does not have a rose. Roses are pleasing to the sense of smell but the thorns are displeasing to the sense of feeling. There are also many more thorns on a stem than there are roses on it. Life too, has its thorns, and many of us—yes, all have been hurt by them. We have to take the bad with the good things of life—the sour and bitter with the sweet in its practical experience.

Thorns in the flesh will be felt on life's journey, and they are not pleasant to have. Even the great man, Paul, had one, and it troubled him so much that he asked the Lord to remove it. Three times he plead with the Lord to take it out of his flesh. But it still keenly and deeply remained. The blurs, blemishes and bad parts of an individual are seen first. If the imperfect parts were let alone for a while, and in this way of doing things, you may help some one to fall in love with the better parts of his nature and character, and thereby help him so to admire them as to let go the bad habits and cling close to the good ones.

Life is so lovely and dear even if we do have to try to hold it with faltering steps and trembling hands. This natural life is our greatest earthly heritage. The greatest thing the world has given to us and the last thing we want to part from. Springs, rivers, oceans, lakes, islands, mountains have been resorted to and explored for medicine and means to prolong and perpetuate life. Much study, time, patient research has also been given for this same purpose.

Satan told the truth once, and once only when he said: "All that a man hath will he give for his life." He understood human nature very well—he made it a special study—that was his business, and he keeps right on at it all the time. Yes, so valuable and important is life that folks of all sorts will give all they possess for it. Spring sparkling with health and life, ocean trips visiting other countries, ascending mountain heights, are resorted to for better and more life. Life, life, life—how we love to live it! Take good care of it then, and make the best use of it.

Light is one of the principal means by which we see. In darkness the most desirable thing is light. Life first, then comes light—one of the most helpful and healthful mediums by which we live. It comes to our needs with glad relief. Some one has said that it is 95,000,000 miles from the earth to the sun, and that it takes light about three minutes to come that long distance to the earth. That is a wonderful thought to contemplate. Still more wonderful it is that the mind can go and come that great distance in about three seconds of time. O, the world is so full of light if we will just live in it, and enjoy it! Then the light that gleams from God is the light of the world. Why sit in the darkness of sin so long when we can have more light?

Take the light of heaven and walk out of the old, damp, dark prison of sin and have liberty—the liberty of pardon and peace.

You remember that Patrick Henry was very much concerned about the political issues of his day. Speaking then with his matchless and vibrant voice of the liberty of this country in an eloquent flood of thought at Richmond, Va., he said: "Sink or swim, survive or perish, live or die—give me liberty or give me death."

Everything from the lowest to the highest degree of life wants liberty. And you notice that a great effort is being made to get free—to be set at liberty. No nation wants to live in bondage forever, and many nations of the world are getting freedom, and every one of them ought to have liberty. Emperors, kings, queens, and other oppressive rulers are being dethroned, and the last one ought to be. The lion tried twice to put his greedy paws upon the proud, strong eagle of America but the eagle took the lion in his talons and rushed him back. The eagle still soars high over the land of the free and the home of the brave.

HOPE

This world holds perplexities and troubles for us and often we need a word of comfort to help us along. God has set apart a day, Sunday, that we can all come together in His house, and get comfort from His Word. I always look to that day as the emblem of eternal rest. Often the text itself is a help and gives us strength for the days that follow. The lines of a song come to me, "If in your path some thorns are found, oh think who bore them on his brow. If grief your sorrowing heart hath found, it reached a holier than thou."

What shall separate us from the love of Christ? Shall tribulations, distress or persecution? I am persuaded that neither death nor life nor angels nor powers nor things to come. No height nor depth nor any creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus. So when things go against us let us remember that the night will soon pass and morning will dawn upon us.

Our heavenly home is free from sickness, pain and sorrow. We ought to be able to look forward to death as going on a pleasant journey where we will meet our loved ones gone before, but best of all to be with our Savior. Death may be nearer than we think. If we are steadfast, we shall be in the unbroken circle in that world of light.

TELLING JESUS

A dear little girl once said to me: "Every night I tell my papa all that has happened in the day; because, you know, he goes to his work in the morning before I am up, and it is so far he takes his dinner along, so I don't see him till he comes home in the evening. Then, after we have our tea, he holds me on his lap a while before I go to bed, then we have a nice talk and I tell him everything."

I looked at the little one's smiling face, and asked, "What do you tell him?"

She answered: "Oh, I tell him all I said, and what I played, and about the little troubles; and he talks with me about all, and if I have done anything naughty, he prays about it with me; but I always try to be good, because when I must tell him something naughty about myself, he looks so sorry, and it makes me cry."

If our earthly father is so sorry to have his dear children do wrong, then how grieved our heavenly Father must be, Who gave His only Son to die for us, that we might be kept from sin. Let us be very careful never to grieve our Saviour.—Christian Conservator.

Church Construction

DESCRIPTION OF THE PROPOSED BUILDING FOR THIRD CHURCH, NORFOLK, VA.

On the front page of this issue can be seen the proposed building for the Third church, Norfolk, Virginia. The officials of the church have issued a very neat and attractive four page folder containing the cut we are using and giving a full description of the building. We are reprinting the folder in part and feel that SUN readers will be glad to read, and will read, it with pleasure:

Third Christian Church

The building is located in Park Place section, one of the finest residential sections of the City. It faces Llewellyn Avenue, extending from 34th to 33rd Street, the entire East end of the block. It is two blocks from City Park, Granby Street and two blocks from Colonial Avenue, and one block from the main car line of the City. It has every accessibility and yet free from the noise of busy streets. It is accessible to Villa Heights, Park Place, Virginia Place, Colonial Place and Riverview. These sections are connected and lie North of the Norfolk and Western Railroad. There are approximately thirty thousand people living in this part of the City. There are four other most splendid churches located in these sections and are sharing in the joy of administering to the substantial citizens of this community.

We are about two miles from the main business part of the City, the location of the Y. W. and Y. M. C. A., hence it is mandatory on the part of the church to meet the needs of our young people and to help to solve our community problems.

The building will cover a ground space of about 96 x 125 feet in size, and is to be located on the lot now owned by the church on the corner of Llewellyn Ave. and 34th St.

The general style of the building is what is known as perpendicular Gothic, so as to the better adapt it to the special needs of our modern church, as well as to the local conditions as affected by the site, drainage, cost, etc.

The general effect of the building both as to its exterior as well as to its interior will be distinctly that of a church and Bible school combined. In its plan it is a combination of church and school in that the church proper and the Bible school are side by side and separated by a pair of large sliding partitions, made as sound proof as possible and finished and decorated to match the walls.

When, on special occasions, these partitions are shoved back, the seating capacity of the church is practically doubled, and all persons are within easy seeing and hearing distance of the speaker, and also of the choir.

The auditorium, a room 53 x 65 feet, entered through a spacious foyer, having entrances from both streets through the vestibules or enclosed stair halls. In addition to the main entrance from the foyer, there are also minor entrances at each side of the front of the church, thereby not only facilitating access to the auditorium but exit as well.

The main Sunday school room, 44 x 44 feet in size is also provided with a good entrance from each side. Two large school departments on the main floor open on the main room, being separated from it by section-fold doors. Each department is further divided into four class rooms 12 x 22 feet in size.

Beneath the choir loft, and on the same level as the church floor, is the secretary's room, having its main entrance from the ground floor vestibule facing 34th Street, and a few steps up, over the same vestibule, is the pastor's study.

The baptistry is located in the center, back of the pulpit platform. The curb being about eight inches higher than the platform. The baptistry and the space on either side of it is separated from the pulpit platform by an ornamental arcade backed by velour curtains.

The choir loft is located above the secretary's room and baptistry, but as the ceiling height of the above are kept as low as possible, the elevation of the front of the choir is not such as to be at all objectionable, but is just high enough to be in good proportion for a satisfactory chancel. The choir seats are well elevated toward the back so as to make the choir work more effective.

Both church and Sunday school departments have balconies, that of the church extending back over the foyer, so that it really overhangs the seating on the main floor very little.

Back of the Sunday school balcony there are a series of nine class rooms. For the general services of the school the pupils using these alcoves will come forward and occupy seats in the balcony, thus sharing in the services with equal advantage with those on the first floor.

Both balconies are provided with two exits located at their respective ends. On this floor is also located a large room for the use of the choir, and connecting directly with the choir loft. At the front of the building and occupying the second story of the tower is a room 13 x 21 feet that can be used for a class or club room.

The principal features of the basement or ground floor, are the dining and entertainment room 53 x 65 feet, the ladies' parlor 23 x 26 feet, the primary department 22 x 45 feet and

THE ORIGINAL POLLYANNA

To thousands who never met Eleanor H. Porter, author of "Pollyanna," the news of her sudden death will bring deep regret because her pen is stayed in the midst of her most productive years. But to those who knew her in the intimacies of friendship or even in the touch and go of a chance acquaintanceship, a sense of heavy personal loss is joined to disappointment over the earthly termination of so unusual a career in American literature.

Mrs. Porter began writing more than twenty years ago. She placed her stories in a number of periodicals. The Congregationalist, had the pleasure of printing in those earlier days a number of those wholesome, cheerful tales. They showed the marks of careful workmanship and predisposition toward seeing that which is best in human nature.

But Mrs. Porter did not attain fame until she brought Pollyanna into being, the delightful and lovable girl who invented and played the "Glad Game," to the consternation of the Ladies' Aid and in the very presence of her uncomprehending and austere New England aunt. There was something so original and at the same time so irresistible in the child that while you doubted at first whether there ever had been or ever could be such a bundle of sunshine in the world, you were led to believe that she must have had an existence somewhere else than in the author's imagination. Now that she has passed from life, it may be proper to affirm that there was once such a girl and that it was Mrs. Porter herself, though she would be the last person to declare the fact. She did not grow up, to be sure, in the exact surroundings in which Pollyanna moved. The tie between Mrs. Porter and her mother was very close, and the latter's death a few years ago made a large vacancy in the home circle. But those who knew Mrs. Porter in her later years as the gracious, modest, friendly woman who sought to put at ease every other member of the social circle in which she moved, who gave herself so unsparingly to the service of organizations like the Author's Club could easily credit the witness which those who knew her in girlhood brought to her constant embodiment of unselfishness and good cheer.

Certainly Mrs. Porter's Pollyanna stories, which have gone all over the world in book form and whose influence has been still further widened by the transference of the plot to the films and the stage, have sweetened the life of countless homes, made parents and aunts and grandparents more considerate of the little people with whom they deal, and helped children to conquer their moods of selfishness and gloom.

"Just David" added to Mrs. Porter's reputation, for the little violinist was akin to Pollyanna in temper and outlook: "O, Money, Money!" and "The Road to Understanding" showed the working of the same germinal ideas, though they were applied to people in mature life. Her latest book, "Mary Marie," exhibited the author still growing in her art, which she continued to prosecute with unflagging industry almost up to the time when death took her.

Mrs. Porter was a direct descendant of Governor Bradford; she was an honored member of the Congregational Church in her native town, Littleton, N. H., which she joined in her early years. During recent years in Cambridge she attended the North Avenue Church, and her funeral was conducted by Rev. Charles F. Weeden, D. D. Her Christian faith was simple, vital, and constantly outreaching. She lived her religion and was therefore able to put the best elements of it into her books.—Exchange.

COURTESY

A mother had need one evening to pass between the light and her little son. With sweet, grave courtesy, she said: "Will you excuse me, dear, if I pass between you and the light?"

He looked up and said: "What made you ask me that, mother?"

"Because, dear," she answered, "it would be rude to do it without speaking. I would not think of not speaking if it had been Mr. F——, the minister, and surely I would not be ruder to my own boy."

The boy thought a moment and then asked: "Mother, what ought I to say back?"

"What do you think would be nice?"

He studied over it a while, for he was such a wee laddie, and then said: "Would it be nice to say, 'Sure you can'?"

This was mother's time to say: "That would be nice, but would you like to say, just as Mr. F—— would, 'Certainly'? It means the same thing, you know."

That little lad, now a young man in college, is remarked for his never-failing courtesy. A friend said of him recently: "It's the second nature of W—— to be polite."

The mother smiled as she thanked God in her heart for the grace which helped her to be unfailingly courteous to her boy.—Selected.

DRUG HABIT

There appears to be a general impression that prohibition has caused an increase in the drug habit. Dr. George H. Simmons, editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association does not think so. Moreover he has just published an editorial in his journal showing that the restriction of the use of alcohol in Germany during the war was followed by a diminution of the use of harmful drugs. In an interview with Dr. Arthur Dean Bevan, former president of the American Medical Association, he dictated and afterward signed the following statement:

"It is possible that in this transition period a few people cut off from the use of alcohol have restored to drugs as a substitute, but if this is true it is simply a temporary matter and due to this transition from the free use of alcohol to prohibition and the number of these cases is very small compared to the number that were made drug addicts by the free use of alcohol in the past."

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SINGING CLASS GOES VISITING

The Singing Class spent the third Sunday with Brother A. T. Banks' churches at and near Ramseur, N. C.

We gave the concert at Shiloh church Saturday night, at Parks' Cross Roads Sunday at eleven o'clock and at Ramseur Sunday night.

The weather man was against us as it rained much of the time and kept many from church who would have been present had the weather been more favorable. There was quite a storm raging at Ramseur about the time to go to church and it rained till it was too late to go, so our congregation was small. But while no one could cope with the weather man, we were glad to see the rain as we have been very dry for some time and our crops were suffering for rain.

We were very kindly treated by all the good people where we stopped and every one in the Class had a good time and want to go back to Ramseur some time when the weather is more favorable. Brother Banks is greatly loved by his churches and he has a great people to serve. They are big hearted and are prosperous and it is a great community to live in.

We noticed that the wheat crop is splendid in that section, and we just thought how easy it would be for the churches in that section to make up twenty-five bushels of wheat each and send to the Orphanage. What a small sacrifice it would be to the churches but what a great blessing it would be to us in this work! Most any farmer would be glad to contribute from one to five bushels and be the better off by so doing. Why not a number of the churches in the wheat sections do this? Just after harvest is the best time while everybody has plenty of wheat.

We find that there is much fruit this year, too. We want to say we have many glass jars and will be glad to ship a supply to any one who would like to fill some for us. Let us know the number you want and they will be shipped immediately.

LETTERS FROM THE COUSINS

Dear Uncle Charley:—We are enclosing our dues for this month. I wonder if you will come this summer to Liberty and bring Mary and Hattie. They are the little girls who stayed with us. We had such a good time. I wish they would come again. Love and best wishes to all.—Virginia Pearl and U. T. Ayscne.

If we come to Liberty this summer we will bring Mary and Hattie. We cannot get along without them.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley:—Enclosed you will find ten cents for the orphans. I must tell you of the pleasant trip I had yesterday. Papa took mother and six of us children to Union Christian church, in Virgilina, Va. Rev. C. E. Newman preached a splendid sermon, found in Prov. 3:6. We went from church to see mother's aunt. The trip going and coming was nearly one hundred miles. It was a treat to us. Love to all.—Ruth M. Sanford.

You are a bright little girl to remember the preacher's text. You can beat Uncle Charley. When Uncle Charley was a little boy he would go to sleep in church. I wonder if any one accuses him of that now.—"Uncle Charley."

the beginners room 23 x 27 feet in size, and the rooms for the heating and ventilating apparatus. The dining and entertainment room has a large platform at one end and a large well equipped kitchen at the other end.

The ground floor rooms are conveniently reached from the lower landings of the four entrance vestibules. Toilet rooms are provided on both the ground floor and the main floor.

It is planned to heat the building by steam and ventilate the principal rooms by a fan system supplying fresh air.

The ceiling of the main auditorium is arched in a very simple manner and divided into panels by means of projecting ribs. The main Sunday school room will have a flat ceiling and will also be lighted with pleasing ceiling lights with a skylight in the roof above it.

The capacity of the main floor and balconies for general assembly purposes will be about as follows:

Main floor of Auditorium, 650; Balcony of Auditorium, 225; Choir, 50; Total Church, 925. Main Sunday School room, 335; Department rooms, 250; Sunday School Balcony, 225; Total Sunday School for assembly purposes, 800; Total assembly for Special Occasions, 1,725. The capacity of the entertainment room on the ground floor is 575 for assembly purposes and 275 for banquet purposes, without crowding.

STIRRING AND INSPIRING

In "Reconstructing The Church," by Dr. William Allen Harper, we have a forward-looking book by a forward-looking man.

The author got his forward look by looking back to apostolic days, and insisting that the Church be reconstructed in harmony with apostolic teachings and ideal.

The message of this volume is stirring and inspiring. It is in line with what is silently going on today, in spite of great opposition.

It is in line with what must continue until consummation, if the Savior's prayer for His people is to be answered.

JAMES I. VANCE.

Nashville, Tenn.

"RECONSTRUCTING THE CHURCH"

Dr. Harper's book, "Reconstructing the Church," is a readable volume and presents some very timely and interesting thought. The author should not be misunderstood by the term reconstruction, for he does not mean to remake the Church in its divine significance, but rather to reorganize its machinery of operation and mediums of expressing itself to the world.

This volume points out in vivid style certain measures necessary for opening the way to the solving of great problems in Church, State, and social life.

Its thirteen chapters of constructive thought, neatly bound into a volume of 188 pages and bearing Fleming H. Revell's imprint should be its endorsement for entrance into many studies and libraries.

REV. B. J. EARP RESIGNS

Rev. B. J. Earp, who for the past three years has been pastor of the Christian churches in Page County, has resigned, to take effect the middle of August. Rev. Mr. Earp plans to enter Vanderbilt University this fall, and will leave this county about the last of August.

On last Saturday the Pastoral Committee of the Page Valley Christian Pastorate met at Shenandoah, and accepted Mr. Earp's resignation, after first voting their thanks for the faithful service that has been rendered during the past three years.

The committee elected to fill the vacancy caused by this resignation, Rev. R. P. Crumpler, of Varina, N. C., who will begin work about the first of September or the last of August. Rev. Mr. Crumpler is a man of some experience both as a teacher and pastor, having taught school in some of the high schools of North Carolina, also served as pastor in several of the North Carolina churches.—Luray News and Courier.

The National Convention of the Democratic party is in session this week at San Francisco, Cal. At this writing there is much speculation as to who will be named as the party candidate for the presidency. Mr. McAdoo has refused to seek the nomination as once expected.

"If we had what we want we should probably be around looking for some one to help dispossess it."

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

"Success means that you have dared to do something no one else dared to do."

A DISAPPOINTMENT

It is a bit of good logic that it is all right to know the dark side, but poor business judgment to let it be known. Taking this thought for whatever it is worth, we feel constrained, however, to take THE CHRISTIAN SUN family into confidence in a matter, for we are sure that many, if not all, of us are intensely interested in it.

We have been nursing an idea during our four years as Editor of this paper that if it could be made possible for a larger number of our people to read THE SUN, for a while, that they would become permanent subscribers. The means kept us from making the experiment, until the proposal came from the Men and Millions Field Committee. It was decided upon, and 3,600 new names added to THE SUN'S mailing list for a period of three months.

So much for the preface. Just before the three months period ended a well planned "follow-up" campaign was started from THE SUN'S office to enlist these persons, who had received the paper free as regular subscribers. Repeated appeals by letters and other methods brought less than one hundred new names, while more than one-half of the list came in on the third appeal, agreeing to subscribe the remainder of 1920 at a special rate. We felt constrained to make this offer because of the complaint that nearly all the paper was being devoted to the raising of money and we had a desire to show them THE SUN under normal conditions.

A disappointment! Sure, and yet an editor must get used to disappointments, learn how to take all kinds of criticisms and keep sweet.

The poor showing was a disappointment mainly because so many of our closest and most loyal friends have shared the opinion with us that if THE SUN could be placed into the homes for awhile it would be a great help to secure subscribers.

It may be possible that the following reasons will explain the meager response:

1. Many not being sufficiently interested in the Men and Millions Campaign to read the paper, and thus failed to form the habit of reading it.

2. Emphasis being placed on the Movement by ministers and others, the interest of THE SUN was left out.

3. The appeal for subscribers following immediately after the Movement's financial canvass probably failed because of the solicitation of the first canvass.

These are only possible reasons why the very poor enrollment of new subscribers.

However, we have read of this same condition with other Church periodicals. We note that The Herald of Gospel Liberty is experimenting on the same thing, and trust that Editor Kerr and Business Manager Rathbun will tell us how they come out in their efforts.

After all the pastor is the one man who can educate the people to appreciate and support the Church paper. We are creatures of habits. The reading habit must be cultivated and it is difficult to do it in a few weeks. If a number of persons would agree to read THE SUN each week for a period of six months, and then do it, the Church could well afford to send the paper free. The habit would be formed in this time.

Our very worthy predecessor and versatile writer, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, once remarked to us that our mailing list would grow by the process of education and by developing our people to the reading habit. Here is the truth of your sane philosophy, Dr. Atkinson.

"Live—Laugh—Learn—the time will come when you can't."

A BUSINESS MESSAGE

THE CHRISTIAN SUN must meet its bills just as individuals, and it takes money to do so. The subscription receipts for two months have been the smallest in years. Statements from the office have been of little good to the cause. A custom of years has led THE SUN into indulging many subscribers for a while after their subscription becomes due. Oversight and neglect upon the part of many make this a vital problem. The hour has struck when this paper must insist upon prompt renewals, or else the Board of Publication will be called upon to pass a strict rule to give due notice and discontinue on the day the subscription expires. If such a rule were in force today, nearly one thousand names would be cut off—and a very large number of them among THE SUN's longest and most faithful subscribers.

The situation in a nutshell is this: When you allow your subscription to lapse the Convention has to borrow the money to carry your account until you renew. Each subscription during 1920 will cost over $2.50 each, and it does look a little unfair to THE SUN to make its subscription price less than cost (the deficit being borne by the Convention) and then be asked to carry past due subscriptions for personal convenience.

Brethren, look at your label. Looking at the label is not all that is needed—you know what we mean.

If the Church isn't all right, come in and help make it all right. Don't stay on the outside and knock it.

He was a member of the Sixty-first and Sixty-second Congresses from the Third Ohio District. He was governor of Ohio 1913-1915, 1917-1919. Mr. Cox is a member of the Episcopal Church and his home address is Dayton, Ohio.

It is significant to note that both nominees have been active in the printing industry, and that speaks well for that classic art of this day and age.

If the world is bad, who made it so? If the world is to be made better, it will take all of us, so come on.

In the second primary for the nomination for the Governorship of North Carolina held July 3, the Democrats nominated Cameron Morrison of Charlotte, defeating Lieutenant O. Max Gardner of Shelby, N. C.

ANOTHER GREAT MEETING

Rev. E. M. Carter tells in this issue of another great meeting conducted by Brother Lightbourne. Brother Carter adds this in a personal note: "The meeting at La Grange is by far greater than the Lanett meeting. They are having a fine meeting there."

REV. J. V. KNIGHT TO LEAVE GREENSBORO

Rev. J. V. Knight has resigned the Greensboro work and accepted a call to Raleigh. He takes up the Raleigh work November 1.

MISREAD AND MISUNDERSTOOD

Brother J. W. Payne, Wedowee, Alabama, writes under date of June 28: "I notice in last week's SUN that little Ralph Peel O'Berry, thirteen months old, is the youngest subscriber to the Men and Millions Movement, but I suggest that you correct that. I took little Charlie Jones Kirby's subscription, for Rockstand, when he was just nine months old. I took two other subscriptions in this family from members under five years of age, and last Saturday took the father's subscription for THE SUN."

Brother Payne misread the statement. Young O'Berry is the youngest subscriber to the fund from Liberty Spring church. Look up the statement and see what it says. Not the youngest subscriber to the fund, but the youngest from that one church, just as little Charlie Jones Kirby is the youngest from Rockstand.

We print the letter and explanation in case others misread the statement.

TO CELEBRATE THE THREE HUNDREDTH ANNI-VERSARY OF AMERICA'S ORIGIN

(Contributed)

The year 1920 is doubly significant, historically. It marks the three hundredth anniversary of two important events which led to the founding of the Republic of the United States of America. One is the signing of the Mayflower Compact and the landing of the Pilgrims; and the other is the meeting of the first American legislative assembly.

On November 11, 1620, in the cabin of the Mayflower, a tiny bark lying off the Massachusetts coast, a little band of liberty-loving men, from "Brittania," entered into what history has styled the Mayflower Compact. This agreement bound the 41 adult males in the ship's company into a civil body politic for the better ordering, preserving, and furthering of their mutual ends. And it provided for such just and equal laws and offices as should be necessary for the general good of the colony.

Ten days later, so records Dr. Charles W. Eliot's inscription on the Pilgrim Memorial Monument at Provincetown, Mass., "the Mayflower, carrying 102 passengers, men and women and children, cast anchor in this harbor 67 days from Plymouth, England."

"This body politic, established and maintained on this bleak and barren edge of a vast wilderness, a state without a king or a noble, a church without a bishop or a priest, a democratic commonwealth, the members of which were straitly tied to all care of each other's good, and of the whole by every one.

"With long-suffering devotion and sober resolution they illustrated for the first time in history the principles of civil and religious liberty and the practice of a genuine democracy."

Meantime, uninformed of the Pilgrims, fellow-colonists of Captain John Smith had met at "James City" (Jamestown), Virginia for the first American Legislative Assembly. On July 30, 1619, they had thus broken ground for the foundation of the present democratic form of government in the United States.

This year (in 1920) these events are being commemorated in the United States, in England and in Holland. In August, the origin of the Pilgrim movement will be celebrated in England. And early in September, meetings will be held in Holland in memory of the Pilgrims' sojourn in that country.

In September, a "second Mayflower" will set sail from Southampton, England, to follow to the American shore the path taken by the original Mayflower. (But this second Mayflower will be modern, and therefore much more seaworthy than her smaller predecessor.)

This boat, carrying many prominent people of England, Holland and the United States, will anchor in Provincetown Harbor in late September. Its arrival will perhaps mark the crowning dramatic episode of the entire Tercentenary celebrations.

These events will not be celebrated in the United States by the citizens of Massachusetts and Virginia alone. Nor solely by the New England and South Atlantic states. Communities throughout America are planning to take this opportunity to review the "foundation upon which the United States rests,"—and to re-emphasize those principles which these ancestors established, and which their sons, their followers, and their followers' sons have handed down to us through our form of representative government.

America is appropriating, from national and state treasuries, hundreds of thousands of dollars to be used in plans for the commemoration. One plan is to erect, overlooking Plymouth harbor, a colossal statue of Massachusetts, the Indian chief who befriended the Puritan pioneer. Another is to set the Plymouth Rock, which in 1741 was raised above the tide, in its original position.

Seventy American cities, including New York, Chicago and Boston have started plans for their celebrations of the Tercentenary. The Sulgrave Institution and the American Mayflower Council have been active in coordinating these plans.

Community Service (Incorporated), One Madison Avenue, New York, has drawn up suggestions for the use of communities planning to celebrate. These have been distributed for the use of schools, churches, clubs and general community groups throughout the United States and her territories. By writing to Community Service at the above address, individuals can secure valuable information and counsel regarding suitable plays, pageants, tableaux, recitations, ceremonials and music suitable for use in their communities.

LIBERTY BELL

Here are some things about the Liberty Bell it would be well to cut out and past in your scrap-book:

July 8, 1776, the bell was rung for the proclamation of the Declaration of Independence.

On October 24, 1781, the bell rang out for the surrender of Cornwallis.

April 16, 1783, it rang out the proclamation of peace.

September 29, 1824, it rang to welcome Lafayette to the Hall of Independence.

July 4, 1826, it ushered in the year of jubilee, the fiftieth anniversary of the republic.

July 24, 1826, it tolled for the death of Thomas Jefferson.

July 4, 1831, is the last recorded ringing of the famous bell to commemorate the day of independence.

February 22, 1832, it rang to commemorate the birth-day of Washington.

In the same year it tolled the death of the last survivor of the Declaration, Charles Carroll, of Carrollton.

July 2, 1834, it tolled once more. Lafayette was dead.

July 8, 1835, while being tolled for the death of Chief Justice John Marshall, a crack was developed, starting from the rim and inclining in a right-hand direction toward the crown.

Its voice is silent, but its deeds will ring in the hearts of all patriotic people so long as the name of liberty shall last.—Selected.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

A MEMORIAL SERVICE AT BEREA

The first Sunday in June we had a rare treat at Berea. The services opened with a song service by the chorus, after which Rev. A. F. Iseley led the opening prayer. After this we were favored with a selection by four men known as the White Oak quartette. The four men who sang for us were: Messrs. R. E. Loman, W. E. Wyrick, A. P. Jarvis and J. B. Bradley. After this the Scripture lesson was read and an offering taken. We were then favored with a solo by Mrs. William Huff of Gibsonville. Dr. Lawrence then delivered a memorial address on the subject, "Where Are The Dead?" After the address Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson of Elon College played a march by which the children marched to the graveyard with flowers. While the flowers were being distributed we were favored again with a quartette by the same four men. After the distribution of the flowers and the end of the singing, Dr. Lawrence announced the benediction.

The day was pleasantly spent, and many spoke of it as being the most pleasant services held at Berea in years.

A "COTTEN" FIELD

In my pastoral work I have the privilege of driving over many miles of roads through the country, as the four churches which I serve are in various parts of two counties, Nansemond and Isle of Wight, Virginia. This sort of work furnishes plenty of fresh air, views of beautiful nature, of the crops, and splendid association with people. Some Sundays I drive from the service in the morning to dinner, and from dinner to an afternoon service twenty-eight miles distant. On those days I travel sometimes a little too fast to gain many of these attractions of which I mentioned above. However, I noticed that the farmers are wearing smiles and more cheerful expressions than they wore a few months ago. Since the cool spring has made its departure, the crops are giving hopes of a good harvest, and already those farmers who cultivated Irish potatoes are reaping a nice reward. He who sows well, works faithfully, and trusts the Giver of every good and perfect gift, generally reaps his reward.

However, I am more interested in another sort of crop and that is the spiritual harvest in a "Cotten" field. Like the farmers who smile, I too, have causes to be cheerful, for many things have taken place in this field, some of which I shall mention briefly. In the beginning, permit me to say that all the churches in this field went over the top in the Men and Millions Forward Movement, in face of financial obligations already existing and other difficulties, and did it too long ago to write about now.

Bethlehem

Fourth Sunday afternoon, June 27, the Bethlehem church was packed and scores were compelled to remain outside on account of the lack of room. An entertainment by children always draws a crowd, regardless of weather—hot or cold. "And a little child shall lead them." A little over an hour was filled with recitations, exercises, and music by the seventy-five children and choir, which proved to be very interesting as well as inspiring. The recitations and exercises were delivered by both the boys and girls in a very praiseworthy manner. The solos and songs by the little children were rendered in a very creditable manner. The choir had practiced under the leadership of Mrs. E. T. Cotten, and the new songs, which were inspiring, were rendered well. For this Children's Day program much credit is due Miss Elizabeth Taylor for playing the piano, and to the lady teachers of the children's classes. A very encouraging announcement was made to the effect that the Building Committee would meet the contractor Saturday. The members constantly face the need of a new church, class rooms are needed for the many large classes, and with near $18,000 in cash and pledges we are expecting greater encouragement in the near future.

Windsor

Fourth Sunday morning, the pastor preached on the subject, "A Call to Arise," developing the theme under three heads—1. People in Trouble and in Danger. 2. A Call to Save. 3. Deliberation in Obedience to that Call. After the sermon three young men were received into the church, which scene rejoiced the hearts of all present. This makes a total of twenty-five members received into the Windsor church lately. This day happened to be the pastor's birthday, and with such a successful service in the morning and a Children's Day entertainment in the afternoon, it was a happy birthday, indeed. The union prayer-meetings in Windsor have grown in interest and attendance. The attendance has increased from twenty-one to forty-seven within a month. Brother Lorenza Bailey led the last meeting, which was full of interest. Several splendid talks were made, one of which was by Rev. J. T. Kitchen, whose articles in THE SUN we have read. Prayer meetings are very helpful to any church, and union prayer-meetings in a community gives forth a fine spirit of church service.

Mt. Carmel

The first Sunday in last month the people of Mt. Carmel witnessed a "Home-Coming" scene. The weather was not very favorable, but many drove over rough and muddy roads and even a few were present from the city of Norfolk. The pastor preached from the text, "And they returned home," and in this sermon he had occasion to compliment the members of Mt. Carmel Christian church on their home church, for it is a large, comfortably seated, modern country church. The twelve memorial windows show a spirit of respect for those who built the church, and adds greatly to the beauty. The people in this community are quite a church-going people and although the church seats near four hundred, more room is needed. So this year over four thousand dollars has been raised in cash and pledges to add four new class rooms to the building. It was encouraging to all, and especially to the Baraca class, when the first lumber was placed on the ground. To this young men's class is due much credit for starting the class room movement.

In conclusion, let not past success fill any one with too much pride, but inspire and exhort each and all to greater efforts in Christian work and more loyal service for our Master.

GREAT MEETING AT LANETT, ALA.

The Lightbourne-Davis meeting, which we have just closed at Lanett, Ala., was the greatest we have ever held at this place. The preaching of Brother Lightbourne was so clear, forceful and convincing that those who heard him were convinced first of the sincerity of the speaker and of the necessity for a deeper consecration of their own lives. "Sam" is equally as great in his profession. With his manner of performance, the people were held throughout the entire service with rapt attention by the preaching of the Gospel and the Gospel in song and music.

The results of the meeting were: Fifteen accessions to the Christian church, three to the Disciples of Christ, besides the many who reconsecrated themselves and those who decided for a better life. Though, really, the results could not be described at that, but eternity will tell. These men are specialists in their line and their equal has not been in this section.

E. M. CARTER.

IMPORTANT MEETING

Those expecting to attend the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention to be held at Elon College, July 13-15, and desiring entertainment, should notify me at once the day they expect to arrive, and what hour if possible. Since quite a number of our people are away on their vacation, it will be necessary to know in advance those who are expecting entertainment.

WHAT CAN YOU SAY ABOUT FLORIDA?

I make a few suggestions: Write J. A. Johnson, Clerk of Board of County Commissioners, Polk County, Bartow, Florida, and you will get reliable information about the county in Florida for groves. I see from the commissioner's report, that Polk County ships more than one million boxes of citrus fruits each year. It will average two thousand car loads of winter vegetables each season; has more phosphate than any county in the United States. This county is about the center of Florida, midway between the Gulf of Mexico and the Atlantic Ocean. From the same circular we learn that new towns are springing up and the opportunities offered by Polk County are real and substantial.

Many of our Christian people go to Florida every winter in order to spend a few weeks, or months, and escape the vigors of a Northern winter. Others go to make Florida their home for all seasons. With a little concert of action, we might establish a Christian colony in Florida next fall. By going out into the woods of Polk County, where land is cheap, location healthful, fire-wood plentiful, cheap cottages could soon be erected, groves planted, gardens made and a new village started. Some could remain all the time, others return every winter.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR JULY 11, 1920

Christian Brotherhood Among Races and Nations.

Acts 17; 24-28

Three of the great problems confronting us today bear a close relation to our topic. They are: The League of Nations, the social and industrial unrest and missions. Whatever may be the fate of the League of Nations, or whatever may be the character of it, if adopted, it will be a failure, as a preserver of peace, unless it is founded on justice and established in the spirit of Christian Brotherhood.

Whenever we learn to exercise the same spirit of forbearance, and standard of honor, among nations, that a Christian community demands of one man, in dealing with another, a League of Nations that will forever prohibit war will be a possibility. We must get away from the double standard and apply the principles of Christianity to nations as well as individuals.

Among the many factors entering into the present social and industrial unrest, in this and other countries, is the lack of Christian Brotherhood among the races.

All too often has the nation and the Church neglected the alien that came to our shores. We have placed him in the worst sections of our cities, where he is surrounded by the most corrupt influences and then we have left his training, almost entirely, in the hands of the walking delegate, the political trickster and the "red." The result has been, that we have thousands of people living in our country who are not in sympathy with our ideals and institutions. This can be remedied by the practicing of Christian Brotherhood among the races.

The spirit of missions is the spirit of brotherhood and only as we hold up God as the Father of all and Jesus Christ as our elder brother, can we hope to reach the unsaved in heathen lands, and the foreigner within our own country.

Questions to be answered in the Meeting

1. What do we mean by Christian Brotherhood?
2. What is being done for the foreigner in the United States?
3. What is the ideal for a League of Nations?

NO CHAUTAUQUA THIS YEAR

The Central Executive Committee of the Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods in a recent meeting decided not to hold a session this year.

A canvass of existing circumstances showed that conditions are more unfavorable this year than heretofore.

For several months past practically all the ministers and leading laymen, especially in the South, have been giving all of their spare time to the Men and Millions Forward Movement.

Work in the local churches has been neglected. Pastors as well as laymen are far behind with their regular work. All have made liberal financial contributions. Many who have heretofore taken a vacation will not be able to do so this summer. The program committee of the Chautauqua, on account of these conditions, found it difficult to secure speakers for this year.

Taking all these things into consideration, the Central Committee thought it unwise to undertake to hold a session this year.

The General Secretary was instructed to continue the collection of pledges, and to solicit further contributions in order that the Committee may be in position to make next year's session the best yet.

The program committee will begin at the earliest possible moment to secure speakers for the next session. There has been no lack of interest in the Chautauqua this year aside from the fact that conditions make it almost impossible even for its most loyal supporters to give it the support necessary.

It is believed that the action of the Central Committee will be generally approved.

S. M. SMITH,
General Secretary.

FROM OTHER PENS

How Comes It?

How comes it that we, here in America, are so ready to glorify the Irish allies of Germany? Why is it our Congressmen are so ready to vote an endorsement of those allies of Germany, past, present, future, in such wise as to make our own ally, England, an object of international hatred? Is it not a species of apostasy? —Central Christian Advocate.

Not Through With War

We are not through with the war and its consequences. The necessity is still upon us to produce an economize. The old rule which called for plain living and high thinking is still a good rule. It was made by a lofty class of people, and it has always tended to secure lofty successions. Prodigality and laziness never were of any use in the world, and there is no need or room for them today. It is always well to work and to save.—Herald and Presbyterian.

“Don't be a Dancin' Fool”

Uncle Sam recently nailed all over the streets of Birmingham the following card: “Don't be a dancin' fool. Be a man. Help your country by joining the navy.” We pass on our old Uncle's exhortation. It's time the dancing craze was passing. Our young men, whether in the navy or in the army, business or professional life, will not be worth much to their country or anybody else if their greatest accomplishment is found in their heels.—Alabama Christian Advocate.

Salvation

Christian salvation means more than deliverance from future fires of hell; it means putting out the hell-fire of sin and selfishness in human hearts; it means extinguishing the flames of vice and corruption that menace the social order. “The Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil.” And the most dangerous of devilish works are not those that fill the bottomless abyss with burning misery, but those that fill the present life with a consuming conflagration of worldliness and wickedness.—Michigan Christian Advocate.

Saintly Character Silently Built

A saintly character is not built with sound of hammer or ax or any tool of iron, but so silently that those who stand nearest may be unconscious of the noble temple that is rising. The greatest political and social institutions are those which began in a very modest and quiet way, while many others which began with great show and display have shrunk into insignificance and have disappeared. From the very beginning the silent hammer has been the method of building the Christian Church, and to what great size that structure has grown is not recognized even by the people of God until something leads them to careful inspection.—United Presbyterian.

As we go to press this (Wednesday) noon we learn of the passing of Brother O. T. Hatch, Liberty, N. C., which occurred today.

We are unavoidably delayed this week, but trust that each subscriber will get his or her paper not more than one day late.

“No one knows what it is to walk with God in the deepest sense who has not walked with him in the dark.”

“Many a man in seeking to go to heaven buys a ticket that will take him only halfway. Respectability will get him started, but regeneration will carry him through.”

“It is comparatively easy to become interested in the saving of men's souls. If you know Christ in your own personal life, such work as approaching men in the interest of faith will come naturally. You will not need to force yourself into the mold of an evangelist. You will become one if you pray with a desire to be made able to help others.”

MISSIONARY

HOW THE GOOD WOMEN HELP

But for the constant help of good women, what would our mission work amount to? In sending a personal remittance of $10.00 on her mission pledge, Sister J. E. Harris, Suffolk, Va., Route 3, of Bethlehem church, writes: "We had Children' Day 27th. The collection will be sent in shortly. I wish it were more. I had my babies' mite box opening, too, and I feel so thankful. I have $5.15 to send Mrs. Bryant. I only have ten babies enrolled in the Cradle Roll, and this is the most I ever received from them. I feel that the people are beginning to see the need of more mission work. We have a grand Woman's Missionary Society—thirty-six members and not a year old yet. We enjoy the study book so much. We are fortunate in having Sister E. T. Cotton (our pastor's wife) to help us. She is so good and such a help to us in lots of ways. She helps in our choir, in our teaching, in our Society and in many other ways."

When it comes to the monthly Sunday school offering for missions you must hand it to our Sanford school. Burlington and Durham are the only two schools that surpass Sanford. The Sanford collection for one Sunday in June was $13.12.

We have had a standing offer now for some time to this effect: That if any Sunday school will send one Sunday's offering a month to the Orphanage, and one Sunday's offering to Missions and then does not get enough the other two Sundays to pay its current expenses and buy its own literature this writer will make up the deficit. So far no school has called on us, though several have accepted the offer. The result has invariably been an increase and the two Sundays a month kept for self easily paid for current expenses. "As much for others as for self" should be the motto of every school.

Damascus Sunday school, (Orange County, N. C.) has adopted the plan of sending one Sunday's offering a month to the Orphanage, one Sunday's offering each month to Missions. This is in keeping with the decision of the North Carolina Sunday School Convention at its last session, and also that of the Southern Christian Convention. No school can lose, and thus far every school trying it has gained, by adopting this plan. As long as a school spends all its offerings on itself it only gets enough for itself, and hardly that. And it does not deserve any more. Any policy of selfishness prevents growth, development, progress. We certainly ought not to pursue any policy of selfishness in managing the finances of our Sunday school.

Big Oak church, Randolph County, Brother E. K. Freeman, superintendent, joins the growing number of our Sunday schools which give one Sunday's offering to Missions and one Sunday to the Orphanage. All of our schools can do this to the great help of each and the hurt of none. Let the good work go on.

The Work of Our Women

(All items for this department should be sent to Mrs. J. W. Harrell, Burlington, N. C.)

LITERATURE MONTH

(Mrs. J. W. Harrell)

July is Literature Month in our Missionary Societies. If there is a Society that has no Literature Superintendent, we hope you will appoint one at once. The Literature Superintendent of the local Society, or Conference Board, has a great opportunity. If alert and active, willing to put time and energy into her work, she may be of inestimable value to the local Society. If she is willing to do research work and keep in touch with the latest books, periodicals, tracts, and leaflets that are being gotten out in great abundance by our Boards, she may become the greatest educational force in the community. Many of our Societies are willing and anxious to do better work, and the Literature Superintendent has it within her power to put new life into her local Society and church.

People are not interested in missions because they do not know about missions. We cannot become interested in any subject of which we have no knowledge. "The greatest foes of missions are prejudice and indifference and ignorance is the mother of them both." "Study to show thyself approved." If we would become approved, efficient workmen we must take time to read and inform ourselves.

One of the duties of the Literature Superintendent is to secure subscribers to The Christian Missionary. Our goal set by the Woman's Boards of the Southern Christian Convention is five hundred new subscribers to The Christian Missionary during the next two years. We should double this number. This magazine should be found in the home of every member of the Christian Church. It is the missionary magazine of our denomination and the price is within reach of all—only fifty cents per year—the only thing that I know of that has not advanced in price. If you want information about our mission fields—facts concerning the work and the workers, you should become a subscriber. Each issue contains letters from our missionaries—facts fresh from the field and splendid editorials by our Home and Foreign Secretaries. Our Woman's, Young People's and Children's Departments are always interesting. Now we are to have a page for the presentation of our Southern Woman's work.

Our Woman's Boards have designated July as Literature Month. At this meeting the work of this department will be presented and an offering taken in each Society for the Literature Fund.

We are patiently, but anxiously, waiting to receive matter for this department. Not a line from any one yet.

I have secured the reports of our Southern Board officers from the Secretary and I am sure you have been interested in these splendid reports each week.

What has become of the Committee appointed by the Convention to supply this page? Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Mrs. W. T. Walters and myself were appointed with two others to be named by the President. Mrs. A. F. Smith and Miss Bessie Holt were added to this Committee. I understood they were to send me the matter and I was to arrange it for publication. Let us hear from you. We want to make this department count for the work.

LITERATURE REPORT

(Mrs. M. F. Cook)

I regret that I cannot make a very accurate report as I have not had full reports from all the Conferences. Therefore, the work in this department will not show up as well as has really been done. I present the following statistics:

Between six and seven thousand pieces of literature have been distributed; 600 mite boxes used; about 450 subscribers to The Christian Missionary have been secured, and thirteen Societies reporting regular study classes.

The work in this department has been steadily growing each year, and I feel very much gratified with the amount of literature that has been issued since our last meeting. So many Societies have expressed their appreciation of the pamphlets issued by our Woman's Board and use them for study in preference to anything else.

We would urge that all Societies try to get all members to subscribe to The Christian Missionary. We also insist upon a more liberal use of leaflets and the serious and thoughtful study of the mission books. Those of us who have studied "The Crusade of Compassion" have had our hearts peculiarly touched with the appeal for and crying need of medical missions in some heathen lands.

The Home Mission book, "Christian Americanization, a Task for the Church," arouses us to our duty and responsibilities to the unsaved in our own homeland. The Junior books have been especially fascinating. "Mook," a Chinese story, is delightful. "The Honorable Crimson Tree and Other Tales" is a collection of stories about our little neighbors across the sea who are just learning about corn clubs which will help them fight against famine and who are just learning ideas on sanitation which will help fight diseases, etc.

The Home Mission books for Juniors are "Ministers of Mercy," and "A Call to the Colors," which utilize the idea of the Mobilization of Christian soldiers have been so full of interest that I am sure that we shall look forward with eagerness to the new books for another year.

I hope that you will plan to supply every member with a mite box and invite other women, not members to share with you the privilege of making a Thank Offering for special blessings. Right here, I would like to emphasize more activity in the Missionary Home Department. Many women not able to attend the monthly meetings will be glad to sign the Home Department enrollment cards, accept a mite box, and thus contribute to the general work of the Societies.

Mission libraries should be instituted in more churches. Train the young people to make use of them. When once they have cultivated a taste for this literature they will find it so entertaining and full of real life that they will not care for some of the trashy fiction that pollutes the mind and demoralizes the character of so many. Their hearts will be touched by the needs of the people and they will be constrained to lead lives of Christian service.

Methods of securing more Christian literature for the women and children of heathen lands are worthy of time and thought. Something very positive in the way of developing character and moulding the thought of these nations becomes an urgent demand. A new day has come in our history. We must realize that the world is no longer large but that these people are our neighbors and it is our duty to help them in whatever way we can, and that henceforth nations must stand or fall together.

A world vision is making possible for us a world program. Our Conference and Convention Boards, and Men and Millions Committees have made programs that challenged us. We must all go forward together in these great campaigns to bring true peace into the world. We all love our country and we all know she can never be free or strong until the lives of individuals square with the ideals which are called American but which we know to be Christian. Christian Americanization means a benediction to the whole world, thus our business of spreading the Gospel is co-ordinate with that of keeping the home fires burning. The truest American patriot today is not one who would keep liberty and democracy for our land alone, but, as we already know, will fight to "make the whole world safe for democracy." Just so, the truest Christian knows that genuine patriotism comes most effectually by way of the Cross, and is willing to sacrifice all that the whole world shall enjoy the priceless privileges of the Gospel.

When we know that all peoples are begging for that which has enriched us, shall we give them the stone of indifference instead of the Bread of Life? As soon as we seek to give more than we receive, because we desire above everything else others good, so soon do we introduce into human relationship the true Christian spirit.

Two things are essential in the development of this spirit—religion, which is faith and following in the footsteps of the Master intelligence—which means Christian education. How are we to supply these needed re-enforcements?

1. By Prayer. A close study of the history of Christianity shows that nothing worth while has ever been accomplished without prayer. "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." So important is prayer to the accomplishment of what is intended to be the final victory of Christ that the Father said: "Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possessions.

2. By Propaganda. Publish the tidings in the pulpit and the press, so that the people may hear it, read it, and understand it.

How can we hope to accomplish our task when the people are ignorant of the need to haste to obey our Lord's command?

I feel that our Men and Millions campaign is doing more than anything our denomination has ever undertaken to reach the masses of the people and quicken the spiritual life of the whole Church. More of our young people, who had never thought of it before, will consider seriously a life of Christian service. More people will give of their means because of the campaign for tithers, and because of the final financial drive which has given every man, woman, and child an opportunity to help place our dear old Christian Church in the front line of service. I believe the success of this campaign will be largely due to the publicity and literature that has been scattered abroad. Some of our best thinkers have put their ripest thoughts into the clearest and most convincing statements to show our people their duty and given to each one the rare opportunity to use faithfully the talents which our Lord has committed to us in trust.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

LAUNCHED—WHERE SHALL WE ANCHOR?*

P. E. Lindley, A. B., Class of 1920

The designated day has arrived on which we must set sail from these college shores. And it is, I feel, an occasion that holds for us a deeper significance than we shall at the time fully apprehend. Today we experience in reality the actual sensations of that event towards which all former transactions pointed, and one from which all the future dates of our career shall be reckoned.

But this hour alone—within itself—divested of all local associations would be well nigh meaningless. The real significance of the day lies beyond the limits of itself. The particular age of history in which we live lends lasting purport to this occasion. Certain ages preceding us have been conspicuous, it is true, some epochs perilous, others golden periods of triumph—but ours is different and in a way stands out even more spectacular.

The "twenties" especially have always been intensely interesting anyway. Each unreturning century has numbered its "twenty" with befitting prominence and glory. Even before this resourceful continent rose to the knowledge of civilized man the indispensable twenties were making their historical fame.

In 1420 the great Revival of Learning known as the Renaissance became active spreading intelligence among men and restoring culture and civilization to the Christian East. 1520 being a year of extensive exploration, marks the day on which De Allyn touched the Carolinian shores and discovered a home for progressive civilization in this our South. No true American can read the sacred records of 1620 without feeling anew his country's pride, for at that time our Pilgrim Fathers, noble and devout, landed on the shores of Plymouth—established a new order in a new world. And then 1720 speaks for progress and equality particularly in Massachusetts where representative government received the Explanatory Charter from England foreshadowing as it did the full birth of Democracy. Once again, recall the eventful year of 1820. Our Republic then young was growing. Already the nations of the world stood amazed at the bright affluence of her glory. So then in 1820 we reached to the far North took the hand of Maine and led her into the family of states, while at the same time in the extreme South we pushed by the gulf, accomplished the limits by the ratification of the Florida Purchase. But for all that, however great, 1920 which now yields us its favors and fears is, of all twenties, most noted and brings an era before unparalleled.

You, ladies and gentlemen, well recognize the unspeakable condition of affairs today. You can feel the conflicting tendencies that would dominate the universe. Needs are more sorely pressing than they have ever been. Cry for competent leadership is everywhere the normal breath of humanity. Opportunities are liberalized for any student in the highest service of mankind. That's today! Then "who knows but that we are come to the kingdom for such a time as this." Therefore we, inexperienced mariners look far out upon the white capped waves and from this platform today forecast life's voyage, as best we may, like courageous seamen.

And now let us lift our eyes to some of the monstrous tasks that are waiting. There are duties incumbent upon college men and must be performed by them ere the sails are furled.

Ignorance, a ghastly monster, stalks throughout our land and there follows him an army in America today of 15,000,000 illiterates. Twenty millions are strangers to the English printed page. The late selective draft law gathered in 700,000 unable to read and write. On the fields of France alone there were 165,000—one out of every five—who could never know the rapture that accompanies the reading of a message from home. Twenty-three million American youths are in no school, while nine million are not even enrolled. Witness the results of it you slums of decaying manhood; testify again ye unclad families in tears and poverty. Let us open up the pure fountains of knowledge, class-mates, and let its floods roll on 'till they course before everybody's child throughout the land. Let the lamp of learning "shine so bright that all can see to walk in justice, love and peace and glorious liberty."

Furthermore, an education in Christian ideals is positively obligatory to enduring democracy. Herein I fear our country is found wanting. Religious material is legally discarded from the public schools, and there is no fold provided to which the little untaught feet may repair from the cold of vice and materialism of our day. For five days in each week well trained teachers instruct our youth, yet about thirty minutes at best is alloted to the Church school. Religious Education, happily termed "the nation's light," must merely gather the crumbs that trip from the calendar. Catholics provide 200 hours of religious instruction annually. Some Jews 250—we Protestants, only twenty-four hours. Besides, there are over twenty-six million American children in no Sunday school whatever. An explanation, it is of the fifty-eight million Americans with no church affiliation. Children in our native land are waxing strong in heathenism at home. If these three enemy armies, illiterates, non-churchmen and untaught children, formed in double column they would belt the globe three and a half times at the equator. They constitute a triple alliance that threatens the very life of our democracy. Patriotism demands that every loyal American rush to arms and wage a campaign of education and social evangelism and a campaign for the spiritual nurture of childhood. To neglect these children is to furnish a menace to our society and to lose unparalleled opportunities for the conservation of child life to high and useful purposes.

It is sad, too, to witness the inadequacy of physical relief among the suffering in our day. 11,794 persons die in infancy in North Carolina annually. Tuberculosis slew as many during the four years of war as fell in the hour of battle. 270 people pass away in New York city with every setting of the sun. Mind you! That the major portion of this mortality results from preventable cause no one can gainsay. We are doing entirely too little! Hear the cries of the poor and afflicted for more and tender care! Five thousand patients a day are turned away by Protestant hospitals in the United States. Our children's homes refuse ten to one received just for the lack of accommodations. Such are the affairs now, and hence, classe-mates, as we have here assembled to take council together the last time within the venerable halls of Elon,—my parting words are: America needs you!

But should your exploration protract to some land o'er the deep and touch the shores of the "dark sobbing" continent, your destined lot will disdain the powers of human calculation. World evangelism, we shall discover, is still merely an embryo. The voice of the Inter-Church Movement declares that the rate of heathen population exceeds that of Christian forces there. There are more heathen today than there have ever been. Tomorrow will see more heathen than ever lived at any one time. So on many fronts we are waging a losing battle. Sin, ignorance and disease, are raging over continental fields of darkness yonder where millions of our fellows in blood and in tears tarry through the starless night waiting still the very first radiant glow of hope. These are the tasks that all but stupify us.

But we must plant a new society there and elsewhere as best we may, in the principles of the fullest liberty and the purest religion. We must subdue, also, the industrial wilderness that is before us here. Somebody must fill the regions of the great continents that stretch almost from pole to pole with civilization and Christianity. The temples of the true God shall rise where now ascends the smoke of idolatrous sacrifice. Fields, gardens, the flowers of summer, and the waving golden harvest of autumn shall spread over a thousand hills and stretch along a thousand valleys not yet since the creation reclaimed to the use of civilized man. Even from the simplicity of our social unions here there must arise wise and resourceful agencies of human industry and society. And from our zeal for learning here there must come forth institutions that will scatter knowledge to the ends of the earth to guide the pathway of those far scattered and unknown, but who shall with us some day look back to this spot and to this hour with unabated pride and affection. While all the united forces of light, resplendent and pure, shall encircle the entire habitations of man in the great conquest of world freedom and the peace of ages.

*Winning oration in the contest for the Stanford Orator's Medal at Elon's recent commencement.

The contrast between right-doing and wrong-doing opens the door into a large field for study. It might seem a contradiction in terms to say that all evil starts at the top and works downward, and that all good starts at the bottom and works upward; but nevertheless, this seems to be the order of development in good and evil. The tempter of Eve seems to have been the Devil, who was a rebel in heaven and cast out of heaven, when he and his angels rebelled against authority; "and his angels were cast out with him." So then, evil started in heaven among the rebellious angels.

The work of redemption begins with the lost, with sinners. "I am not sent but unto the lost sheep of the house of Israel." "The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." The whole scheme of the Gospel begins with the lowest human condition; and that is in harmony with all benevolent service. Education begins at the bottom of human conditions; medical service begins with the diseased; and charity begins with destitution. The danger point is in prosperity and not in adversity. Solomon was the wisest man and became the biggest fool. Samson was the strongest man and yet he surrendered his strength. His manhood was his temptation.

Scepticisms is born in the high schools. Children have faith. The Christian mother who reads the Word of God and has no higher learning believes more than the Master of Arts. "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Learning built on faith is a great factor in human progress; but learning without faith is a menace to human progress, for "without faith it is impossible to please God."

We sometimes blame ignorance for the unrest and corruption of society; but the evils that curse the race start with some trained mind that insinuates its mischief into ignorant minds. Untutored men are simple in their thought, submissive in their disposition, willing to learn, and believe what they hear or read. What the world needs today is the spirit of the Gospel in the leaders of the world. The common people are disposed to honesty, virtue, neighborliness, and toil; but wealth and learning concoct the plans for excesses, irreligion, and neglect of the Lord's house and the Lord's day; and the people follow the standard set by those who lead.

The nations that have fallen into decay are the nations that grew rich, indulgent, idle, extravagant, and then down the path of social shame. All the arts of advanced civilization have been used to corrupt youth. The films of the present day have the right name. They are the thin veil through which young eyes look into the realms of danger that would never appear but for the art that should be used to dignify life, demonstrate work, and reveal the noblest and best in human character and progress.

W. W. STALEY.

JESUS WITH US

To the Christian it is a blessed thought that there is One Who has gone over the road which He asks us to travel. One Who has gone before strewing blessings all along the way, smoothing out the rough places, straightening the crooked places, removing barriers until the road which had at a distance looked impassible, and the tasks which had seemed impossible of performance, seemed smooth and easy when we reached them. Oh, it is a blessed, joyous thought, that there is a great all-powerful, loving, Hand working day and night filling our pathway with blessings, removing difficulties we never could surmount, shielding us when danger threatens.

But that is not the best there is for the Christian. There is One Who is with the faithful trusting Christian all the time, all the way. "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Sometimes the road seems long, and the upward climb looks very steep. Often we grow foot-sore and weary. He who patiently traveled Judea's hot, dusty roads, slackens the pace to suit our weary, tired feet. He does not go on, leaving us to struggle on alone, but stays with us until our strength is renewed, then keeps with us.

We encounter many a thorn along the way, thorns which hurt, which mercilessly wound us as we come in contact with them. But He Who had the thorn-crown pressed upon His brow said: "Lo, I am with you." If sickness, pain, or intense suffering has come to you, know this, He Who suffered such anguish as no human being ever suffered, said, "Lo, I am with you." Even in the valley of the shadow of death, He Who conquered death is with His faithful, trusting ones there. He never leaves or forsakes the one who obediently walks in the path He has mapped out for that one. If we feel ourselves sinking beneath waves of anxiety or trouble, it is because we, like Peter, have taken our eyes off of Him Who would be the master of our lives. Even then He is within reach and the Hand which lifted Peter up is reached out to rescue us if we will but trust our hand in His.

Realizing the actual presence of our living Lord with us, not only lightens every burden, but it dispels every fear. It is not always easy to witness for Jesus. It is not always easy to teach others to observe all things whatsoever He has commanded, when we have to look into the faces of those who are sneering, who are scoffing at Jesus' own Words. When Jesus chose you and I for His witnesses, He knew there would be men and women who would still meet His commands, His most precious truths with sneers. His "Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace." His "I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee," which was spoken to Paul holds good for you and for me.

Our Lord is not a far off, out of reach Friend, but He is an ever present Friend, ready to share every joy and sorrow of our lives. Walking with every trusting, obedient disciple alway, even unto the end of the world. Are you daily, hourly conscious of the presence of Him Who is alive forever more, walking with you, talking with you alway? Is the companionship of the living Lord growing sweeter and dearer to you day by day? Are the attractions of the world growing less and less for you? Have you renounced all that you may walk closer and ever closer with Him, that you may talk more and more intimately with Him until you go to be forever with the Lord?

Men are convinced more quickly and certainly by what they see than by what they hear. It is not, "Let your lips speak," but, "Let your light shine."—Mattie D. Babcock.

How was iron first discovered?
Fresh.—"I'm a little rusty on that, but I think they smelt it."

"Did you read about the man who swallowed his teaspoon?"

"No; what happened to him?"

"Why, he can't stir."—The American Boy.

The school visitor was asking the class a few questions. "Now, how do bees dispose of their honey?" he inquired.

"They cell it," announced the clever boy of the class.

"Robert," asked the teacher of a small pupil, "how many days are there in a year?"

"Three hundred and sixty-five and a fourth," answered Bobbie.

"How can there be a fourth of a day?" asked the teacher.

"Oh," replied the little fellow, "that's the Fourth of July!"—Olive Leaf.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

PICNIC TIME

Our financial report still grows. It is far ahead of this time last year. We lack just a small amount being to the $16,000 mark for this year.

We hope to break dirt for the Children's Home right soon. The contractors have the plans and are making their figures as to the cost of the building. The Building Committee has not fully decided whether it will contract the building or put it up with day labor, and will not know till it gets figures on the job.

Our object is to do the work at as small a cost as possible for a first-class job.

We want to say to our Sunday school friends that we now have a beautiful grove with a cool well of water and it will be an ideal place to have picnics. A number of Sunday schools held their picnics here last summer and seemed to enjoy themselves very much. It is a treat to our children to have the Sunday schools hold their picnics at the Orphanage. They enjoy mingling with other children and make their acquaintances and form new friendships and get something good to eat, and they do enjoy it to the limit.

We want to extend to you a cordial invitation to come to the Christian Orphanage to have your picnic this summer. It will be no trouble to us but a delight to have you come. A cool and shady grove, plenty cool well water and plenty of shelter in case of rain. Come—you shall be welcome!

Our farmer boys finished their harvest June 30. Our wheat crop is fair and we have thirteen acres in oats. We are doing our best to make all on the farm we can as it cuts down our cost of living. The weather has been so dry that our Irish potato crop will be cut very short and we had planted out the largest crop we have ever planted.

The singing class rendered its program for our Reidsville church on the fourth Sunday and had a large and appreciative audience. The contribution was splendid. The children were sent out to different homes to be entertained for dinner and all had a happy day and hope to go back to visit the Reidsville church again some time.

MARRIAGES

ANDERSON-GARRISON

Mr. W. L. Garrison and Miss Nannie Lillian Anderson were married June 23, 1920, in the Christian church, Haw River, N. C. The church was beautifully decorated for the occasion. Miss Mamie Johnston of Burlington, presided gracefully at the organ and Mrs. W. I. Ward, of Graham, sang a beautiful selection. The impressive ring ceremony was used, the writer officiating. The many friends of the couple wish for them a long and prosperous life.

P. H. FLEMING.

CLARK-THOMAS

A beautiful marriage took place Wednesday afternoon, June 30, at 2 o'clock, at the home of the bride, when Miss Julia Elizabeth Thomas, of near Broadway, became the bride of Mr. H. S. Clark of Durham.

The room was artistically decorated with potted plants and cut flowers.

Rev. T. E. White, of Sanford, read the marriage service, the beautiful ring ceremony being used.

The bride wore a handsome going-away suit of mid-night blue with accessories to harmonize and carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses and sweet peas.

The many handsome and useful gifts attest the popularity of the couple.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Clark left for Wilmington and other points where they will spend their honey-moon. They will make their home in Durham.

Their many friends wish them much joy and happiness in life.

T. E. WHITE.

OBITUARIES

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.—ZIRKLE

Since God in His wisdom has removed from our midst Sister Fannie J. Zirkle who for many years was a faithful member of Antioch Christian church, and the Ladies' Aid Society, we desire to express our love and esteem in the following resolutions:

First. That we humbly bow to the will of Him Who doeth all things well.

Second. That we strive to follow her example by giving our best service to the work she loved.

Third. That we extend our sympathy to her aged husband, and pray God's grace may be given him in this hour of sadness.

Fourth. That a copy of these resolutions be sent her family, that a copy be recorded upon the minutes of the church and Aid Society and also a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

MRS. BARBARA ANDES,
MRS. T. H. SHOWALTER,

KING

Henry Clay King departed this life June 17, 1920, aged 76 years, 9 months and 27 days. He was a live and loyal member of Long's Chapel Christian church, a deacon thereof and had been for a number of years. He was a good citizen, a helpful neighbor, a devoted husband, and a kind father. The church has lost a good and faithful member and the community a true and tried citizen. His place cannot be easily filled. He bore his suffering patiently and trusted the Christ that saved him; and as he grew weaker and weaker, and as the days came and went, was only waiting till the Master said, "Come up higher." When the end came he simply fell asleep. He leaves a wife and five children. The funeral services were from the church, conducted by the writer and Rev. J. W. Holt. Rev. J. F. Apple had charge of the music. The interment was in the Long's Chapel cemetery. We left the grave a bank of beautiful flowers.

P. H. FLEMING.

DUNLAP

Mrs. Mary J. Dunlap died June 13, 1920 at the age of sixty-two years, nine months and twenty-four days. She was married in 1878 to John W. Dunlap and to this union were born six children. Mrs. Dunlap professed faith in Christ and joined the church in 1873. She leaves to mourn her death three boys and two girls, several grandchildren and many friends. Her husband preceded her to the spirit land some years ago. The funeral services of Mrs. Dunlap were held in the home and her remains laid to rest in the home cemetery, there to await the resurrection morning.

W. N. HAYS.

BRADLEY

Sister Mary Bradley departed this life June 28, 1920, aged 77 years, 9 months and 23 days. She was preceded by her husband and one child. She was a faithful member of Mt. Zion Christian church. For the past three or four years she was not able to attend church, being an invalid for nearly two years, but her heart and prayers were there. She bore her suffering patiently, and surely God has called her from a life of suffering to a life of happiness.

The funeral was conducted by her pastor, the writer. A large crowd witnessed the burial. Her body was laid to rest in her church cemetery. We will miss her. A good woman has gone to receive her reward.

J. F. APPLE.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—BRADY

Whereas, our Heavenly Father has been pleased to call home our dear sister, Mrs. H. F. Brady, and whereas, in her going, our church, our Sunday school, our Ladies' Aid and Missionary Societies, as well as the entire community, have suffered an incomparable loss. Therefore, be it Resolved:

First. That we bow in humble submission to the Divine Will, knowing that she has gone to "that Cathedral, boundless as our wonder, whose quenchless lamps the sun and moon supply, its choir the wind and waves its organ thunder, its dome the sky."

Second That we shall strive to emulate her example in simple faith and Christian living, knowing that "here we have no continuing city, but seek one to come."

Third. That we extend to the bereaved husband and children, father, mothers, sisters, brother, and a host of surviving relatives our tenderest sympathy, and bid them look forward to the time when "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away."

Fourth. That we shall present a copy of these resolutions to the bereaved family; that we shall spread a copy on our Church records, and shall send a copy to The Christian Sun and County paper for publication.

MRS. I. H. FOUST,
MRS. C. A. GRAHAM,
MRS. T. A. MOFFITT,
Committee.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—EDWARDS

It is with sorrow we note that the white winged messenger has visited our Ladies' Aid Society and borne from our midst our beloved sister, Fidelia Moring Edwards.

Whereas, Sister Edwards so endowed herself by her courtesy and affability, that her memory will forever be cherished in our hearts.

Therefore be it Resolved:

First. That the Ladies' Aid Society of Durham Christian church has lost one of its most faithful and true members.

Second. That we bow our heads in silent submission to the will of Him Who doeth all things well.

Third. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Society, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication and a copy sent to her family.

TUCK

W. A. Tuck was born February 24, 1840, in Halifax County, Virginia, and died June 6, 1920, aged eighty years, three months and eighteen days. When a young man he married Miss Fanny Sanford of Person County, N. C. After her death he married Miss Ella Allen who died while on a visit in California in 1906. He is survived by six sons and three daughters and a number of grandchildren. In the fall of 1918, Brother Tuck had grown too feeble to look after his farm work, so he disposed of his chattels and went on a visit to his six sons who had settled in Fresno County, California. After being there a few weeks he grew restless for his old home where he had lived for more than half a century. So his son, Marvin, gave up his business and came home with his father. Later Roy, another son, returned and these two young men did what was possible for his comfort till the end came.

Brother Tuck had been a member of Union Christian church, Virgilina, Va., for nearly sixteen years. He lived a consistent life, had the confidence of neighbors and, by hard work and economy, had reared a large family and met all his obligations. He was a man of practical judgment and honest in all his dealings with his fellowman. The funeral and burial were at Union cemetery conducted by the writer who had been his pastor for over twelve years. As he served faithfully as a soldier in the Civil War, so he served faithfully his Maker after uniting with the church and has gone to his reward.

Service of Mankind

FREDERICK LYNCH

JESUS would have us devote our lives to high service of all mankind in His name, and to allegiance to His kingdom. There are many today who put allegiance to their country or race above allegiance to humanity, which is His kingdom. But Christ took no thought of self. He never worried about defending Himself. His chief allegiance was not to Jerusalem nor to the Jewish race. His only thought was the service of His brothers. His chief allegiance was to humanity. Above all nations was the kingdom. Surely He would have us follow Him in a self-forgetful service. Surely He would have us love His kingdom first. What an opportunity to all brave souls to do what Christ would have us do!

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

"There are brakemen enough in the Church to last a hundred years, if we never receive another. They are the men who are afraid the Church will go too fast. What we need is more firemen."

AMONG OUR READING

Reading is one of a man's companions. We pity the person who does not enjoy the reading of good books and periodicals. Sometimes we think that the trouble with an editor is that he has too much reading matter about him. There are exchanges that come to his office and many papers that he must necessarily subscribe to.

The morning assortment is the picking out of the letters from among the papers. Our mail box is full of papers nearly every morning, to say nothing of one of the large dailies. We get accustomed to certain "faces" and look forward to their coming and usually know the day on which they will arrive. Among those that bring information, inspiration, and enlightenment to our sanctum, are the following:

The Herald of Gospel Liberty, Christian Vanguard and Christian Missionary, all of our own denomination. Editor Kerr of The Herald issues a clean, wholesome and handsome paper. He is a good writer and his editorial pages are always sought. The Christian Vanguard brings us the news from Canada, with almost every issue a note from a college room-mate. The Christian Missionary, with its monthly visits, never fails to find a place for careful examination and reading. Then we should mention the Missionary Herald and Christian-Star, issued by our colored brethren. It is always spiey, running over with enthusiasm and sees the bright side. We consider it well named.

Our Methodist Protestant brethren issue some excellent Church publications. Dr. J. F. McCulloch, Greensboro, N. C., editor of the Methodist Protestant Herald, is a hard worker and issues a good paper considering the publishing advantages that he has. It never escapes our attention. The Methodist Protestant, published in Baltimore, and so ably and scholarly edited by Dr. Frank T. Benson, is a valuable contribution to our reading matter and we always seek its pages. The Methodist Recorder, issued from the City of Brotherly Love, is the chief organ of the Methodist Protestant Church and the editor of that paper is a literary artist, whose pen we recognize and whose paper we admire.

Our Presbyterian co-workers issue a number of very handsome publications and we have the privilege of reading the following: Presbyterian Standard, Charlotte, N. C., Christian Observer, Nashville, Tenn., and the New Era Magazine, sent out from the Philadelphia publishing center. All these papers are well edited, neatly printed, and their articles are always uplifting and inspiring.

The Biblical Recorder, Raleigh, N. C., under the able editorship of Dr. Livingstone Johnson, The Christian Index, Atlanta, Ga., under the direction of Rev. L. D. Newton and others, are the two Baptist papers that get a portion of our time. These two papers are strong advocates of the Bible and Baptist principles.

Our Methodist Episcopal brethren have so many "Advocates" that in making a selection of current reading matter from that denomination, it is difficult to decide which to take. However, our choice has been with the North Carolina Christian Advocate, Greensboro, N. C., The Christian Advocate, (New York), and The Christian Advocate (Nashville, Tenn.) The North Carolina paper is more or less local, but is ably edited by Brother Massey and well managed by Brother Blair. The Christian Advocate (New York) is considered in Church journalism as "the literary classic," while Dr. T. N. Ivey, editor of The Christian Advocate, (Nashville), gives his readers a very able and well balanced paper.

Our Disciples Brethren issue many papers, but not having time to read them all, we depend on The Christian Evangelist, St. Louis, Mo., for our information concerning that denomination, and consider it fair, impartial, and for the upbuilding of the Kingdom.

The Wesleyan Methodist, Syracuse, N. Y., is one of the principal papers of the Wesleyan Methodist Church and its weekly visits are always welcome.

The Christian Endeavor World, and Dixie Endeavorer keep us posted on doings of the great Christian Endeavor work; The Christian Work and the Christian Herald inform us of independent and inter-denominational activity; The Manufacturers' Record is our guide in the business world; The Ladies' Home Journal makes pleasant reading, especially the "Office Dog" page, known by all subscribers, while the Progressive Farmer teaches us how to run our garden and is always full of more information than we can translate through the hoe handle or solve by the push of our wheel plow.

We are confident that we have omitted naming several of the smaller publications that reach us, and of course, have not mentioned the many weeklies that we find only time to open and look over hurriedly.

An evening with these periodicals is an evening of pleasure, delight and edification. Some of their editor's we know personally, while others we feel that we know by association of thought.

There is one paper that we have not mentioned. In boyhood days we learned to read it and to love it. As the years went by its attachment grew greater and stronger. Its day of arrival we had numbered on our calendar, and if for any reason that it should be late, its disappointment would be that akin to a child's disappointment. We read it from page to page, over and over, and analyzed its advertisements. We see it no more as we saw it then. Its content comes to us now in many forms and from different directions. We take it piece by piece, make and mend and mar, read, re-read and revise, until we finally say to the pressman, "O. K.—let it go."

How sweet it would be to get away just a few weeks back to a certain hillside, seated under an old oak tree, just above the spring, and have the postman hand us THE CHRISTIAN SUN, not having seen that issue before!

A LITTLE FRIENDLY CHAT WITH OUR CONTRIBUTORS

No paper could desire a better class of contributors than THE CHRISTIAN SUN has. We mean by this that we are never bothered with articles of doubtful character and are rarely ever called upon, or find it necessary to discard an article on account of its content. Articles are some times too long and may not be practical for use.

But that which we desire to counsel about is concerning marriage and obituary notes. Our contributors are complying with fine spirit to our request that marriage and obituary notes not exceed 150 words and be sent within sixty days after date of event. The trouble that some of our contributors give us is the failure to give accurate information. Occasionally we get a marriage note from a pastor which he has clipped from some paper. He may, or he may not, tell us what paper that the article was clipped from. These clippings usually come from some daily paper and the note reads somewhat after this fashion: "Mr. Blank and Miss Blank were united in marriage in this city at 8 o'clock last evening, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Mr. Blank." We may have chance to know what city that "this city" refers to, but but the chances are that we do not. Only a small part of the paper is sent and hence we have no date lines. Fortunately, or unfortunately, so far, we have never been endowed with the ability to read minds, and so we cannot tell what date "last evening" was, or is. For such a note to appear in THE SUN is inaccurate and vague, to say the least. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is printed in Burlington and "this city" would mean Burlington. THE SUN is always dated on Wednesday and to say "last evening" would make it always fall on Tuesday preceding the date of the paper, which would not be correct in any sense. Further suggestions along this line would not be necessary.

But another brother officiates at a wedding and says that "the bride was the accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. So and So." We have no way of knowing that the bride is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. So and So. She may be, or she may not be. If she is the only daughter, then it would be correct to say that the bride was the accomplished daughter. Suppose, however, that Mr. and Mrs. So and So have more than one daughter of marriageable age, then are they not also accomplished? Or does it happen that only one of the daughters is accomplished, and the others are not?

Again, a good and thoughtful pastor conducts the funeral of some one and writes that "Sister Mary Smith was laid to rest yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock." This note reaches us two weeks later. When is yesterday afternoon? And still another Brother says that "Deacon Jones was taken sick on Wednesday afternoon and passed away the next day." What Wednesday afternoon? Here is another: "Sister Smith was buried May 16." And does not say when she died. In some cases it may be necessary to keep the body out of the ground two days. Then the question with us is: Did Sister Smith die the sixteenth or the fifteenth? We have no way of knowing. And finally, a Brother sends in an obituary note and says that the deceased passed away on the morning of June 10. He leaves off the year. A loved one of the deceased sees the note in the paper, clips it out, and puts it in the family Bible. It is a part of the family history. Generations coming on begin to look up family history, and what would they be left to guess if the Editor should fail to insert the year?

A marriage or an obituary note for a Church paper should be written in simple and direct language so that it would make intelligent reading any time when separate and apart from any other part of the paper.

Brethren and beloved, if you cannot pass a fan to your Editor on these hot days—or some such means to help him keep cool—then, please, Brethren, please, write direct, give us the information, and help us to make the tasks and toils of this editorial sanctum lighter.

AFTER THE CONFLICT.

We have had a great conflict in the Southern Christian Convention. Odd way to say it, isn't it? Sure, but that is the way of it. The Men and Millions campaign brought a conflict to many good and great souls. The conflict was with a small program and a large one. The two met. The two had to meet, for the little program had been on duty too long—all too long. It had served its day and could not longer meet the needs and cope with the situation.

Conflict! Sure, but a short one. The old gave away to the new and our people caught a vision of a new day for the service of the Master through the Church. They saw, they looked, they worked—they achieved.

And now the conflict between the small program and the larger undertaking is over. The organized effort has ceased. Back behind the lines the work is yet to be done. What we have achieved is only the start. The life-recruits are to be looked after, the tithers encouraged to continue their practice of stewardship, and the subscriptions collected by the local church or some other organization. The program has just been built; its execution is our task now.

Let us from the smallest organization to the largest; from the weakest church to the strongest, go forth to victory for our Christ through and by the program which we have made by sacrifice and toil.

NOTICE OF INFORMATION.

We have received so many orders and inquiries for Government and Principles during the last few months that we feel that a public statement regarding the revised edition should be given at this time.

Dr. W. W. Staley, Chairman of the Revision Committee, officially informs us under date of July 5, that the Committee will have to have another meeting and that the meeting will be held in August, he thinks, and that the revised edition will be published soon thereafter, if the cost is not beyond the reach of available funds.

We have four or five copies each, of the thirty-five and fifty cent editions. The outlook now is that we will not be able to fill orders for the revised edition soon. We will keep the public informed as to the progress of the revised edition.

ARMY AND NAVY CHAPLAINS.

At the July meeting of the General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains, held at the Washington office of the Federal Council, an outline for a proposed course on the chaplaincy for use in theological seminaries was approved. Copies may be secured from the secretary, Rev. E. O. Watson, Woodward Building, Washington, D. C. The committee voted its appreciation of the steps taken by the Recreational and Educational Division of the War Department in providing for the equipment of chaplains and for making provision to enable chaplains to attend their denominational conventions or assemblies. No recommendation was made regarding the appointment of a Chief Chaplain under the provision of the new army bill.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

SUFFOLK LETTER

The aftermath of the Men and Millions Campaign furnishes a residuum and a precipitate. The residuum is in unread literature, unimproved opportunity, and tasks that remain unfinished; the precipitate is in new ideas of work, new things accomplished, and a new purpose in Christian activity. On one hand was faith and enthusiasm; on the other, doubt and indifference. This was not surprising to thoughtful and prayerful people, because all movements meet these opposites in action. There should be no adverse criticisms nor invidious comparisons, but results should be accepted in the spirit of thanksgiving.

Several things are very plain when one reviews the campaign and its results, and a few of them can be listed. More literature, more addresses, more public meetings and more talk characterized the campaign than any movement in the history of the Convention. More members were added to the churches than had ever been added in the same length of time by personal religious work without revival meetings. More money was subscribed for the Lord's work than was ever subscribed in the same period of time, and the subscriptions were made by more members, than had ever been subscribed by the constituency of the Convention. More tithers were enrolled by voluntary decision than had been enrolled during the entire history of the Convention since 1856. But "there remaineth yet very much land to be possessed;" and this land is to be possessed by continuous, persistent, heroic, and plodding work. Movements are like floods in streams. The river at flood may drown the wheels that turn the mill; movements, for the time, may stop the regular work of the church; but it is the stream that runs all the year that grinds the grain; and it is the people who are regular in attendance, and systematic in contributions, and faithful in prayer, and friendly to all people, who produce results. The floods fill the pond and furnish power for a time afterwards; the movements furnish new impulses to the lagging hearts, and leave the church on higher ground. There are some mills on streams that never grind except when there is a flood; there are some members who are enthusiastic in revivals and movements who are rarely seen in the church at regular services; but putting all the threads together the Men and Millions Movement has set the cause forward, has tested the strength of the Convention, has revealed the thought and spirit of the people and rewarded the workers. It would be a fine thing for churches that have not done their share of the work to look out for a favorable period during the five years and add to what they have already done. It is not too late for churches, that did not have the help they needed during the campaign, to do something during the period of five years allotted to the work.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC, JULY 18, 1920

Why People Are Unhappy: The Cure. Ps. 32:10, 11, Jno. 15:9-14

The Cause

1. Disappointments—The failure to accomplish our desires, the unfaithfulness or attitude of our friends.

2. Worry—Much of the unhappiness of the world is caused by worrying over the things of the future that never happen and over the things of the past that could not be helped.

3. Pessimism—The habitual looking on the dark side of things, always makes us unhappy.

4. Sorrow—The sorrows of life should humble us and bring us closer to God but often times we take the opposite view and our lives are made miserable.

5. Hate—No one can be happy, that carries a feeling of ill will or hate in his heart toward another.

6. Sin—All forms of sin rob us of true happiness. The ideal of both saint and sinner, is a good life and as long as no effort is made to realize that ideal, we cannot be otherwise than unhappy. Man was intended to be in harmony with his Maker and as long as that harmony is broken by the intervention of sin we are unhappy.

The Cure

1. Love—Cherish a kindly feeling toward every one.

2. Optimism—Try to find the good traits in every character, and the bright side to every circumstance, instead of sitting down and brooding over the difficulty, get up and try to find a way out.

3. Service—Make your life useful by rendering service to others as you bring happiness and joy to them the reflex action will bring happiness and satisfaction to you.

4. Faith in Christ—All disappointments, difficulties and sorrows can be borne, if we look to Christ with faith and have a hope in Him for the future.

Questions to be Answered in Meeting

1. What is the true source of happiness?
2. Why does the sinner not know true happiness?
3. What is the secret of my happiness? Answered by three members.

KITTERY POINT, MAINE

The First Christian church at this place is getting more active every day. We are trying to do our part in the salvation of mankind.

The community is taking a greater and more active part in the life of the church than when I first came to this place as pastor, and of course this makes those who are interested in the church work feel that we are making the required progress.

The attendance at our services is on the increase and we as pastor and people are working for the uplift of this community.

The church here is one hundred and fourteen years old and dates from the time that Maine was a part of the colony of Massachusetts. In fact the church organization is fourteen years older than the state of Maine. Thus one can readily see that for over a century it has been shedding its light for the uplift of the place in which it is located. That we may be true to the traditions of a great past and fail not to meet crises of a greater present is our desire.

H. J. FLEMING, Pastor.

HOME COMING.

Sunday, July 4, was home coming day at Mt. Zion Christian church.

Mt. Zion church was organized thirty years ago by Rev. W. R. Knight, who served as pastor for seven years. Brother Knight was present and told us about the beginning of the church at Mt. Zion. There are only two of the charter members living.

Rev. J. D. Elder (deceased) was its next pastor and served as such for two years.

My father, Rev. C. M. Dollar, was its third pastor. He was pastor, I think, about twelve years and was followed by Rev. E. M. Carter, who served them for five years. The writer is pastor at present and is serving out his eighth year.

The work has been very pleasant. Since I have been on the field we have not had any difficulties. Bro. J. S. Sledge, who made us a good talk Sunday, told us that things had gone along smoothly all the while.

The church has not failed in several years to meet the conference requirements. Last fall the pastor's salary was double what it was five years ago. There have been some additions to the church every year since I have been pastor, though some have moved away.

The church has a good Sunday school and prayer meeting at present and we are expecting a good revival in August. Brethren pray for us.

J. D. DOLLAR, Pastor.

REV. H. W. ELDER AND FAMILY BEREAVED.

As we close our forms for this issue we learn of the passing of Miss Mary Elder, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga. We have the following taken from The Richland News:

"Richland has never received a sadder message and our people have never been more heartbroken than on Monday night when the message came from the Wise Sanitorium at Plains that Mary Elder had passed out of this life and entered into the realms Beyond. She had been in delicate health for several months but her condition was not considered serious until just a few days prior to her death, and the sudden fact that she was dead brought profound grief to the hearts of every man, woman and child in Richland. Reared here, everybody loved her and everybody praised her.

"Having finished the Richland Public School course some few years ago she had entered Elon College and would have graduated there in one more year, after which she had prepared to consecrate her life to God as a missionary in the foreign fields. In all her walks of school and college life she was so pure in purpose, faithful in duty, consecrated in faith and devout in her religion that in school, college, home and abroad she was the ideal of her parents, teachers, loved ones and friends, who though grieved at her death, are happy in the fact that she was prepared to go. She was cut down by the grim reaper of death that she might fill a greater mission in Gloryland.

"As a mnte token of the love for her by her hundreds of friends everywhere, the casket which bore her mortal remains was literally covered with beautiful wreaths of flowers.

"Funeral services were conducted in the Christian Church, where she has been a member ever since early childhood. Rev. Victor Lightbourne, assisted by Rev. J. H. Stanford, officiated at the services. Interment was made at Harmony Cemetery Tuesday afternoon at four thirty o'clock."

THE SUN extends deepest sympathy to the bereaved family and assurances that the Brotherhood will pray a Father's blessing upon them.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

God lives and the work of the First Christian church at Washington goes on. Our church observed Home Mission Sunday with a very interesting Children's Day program consisting of songs, recitations and exercises by the children and young people of the Sunday school and a chalk talk by the pastor. The amount of the offering was $23.00. We felt that this was a pretty fair amount for a church just beginning.

We keep adding to our membership from Sunday to Sunday. Two were voted into the church last Sunday and I have sent for the letters of a family of three, who will make a splendid addition to our number.

Next Saturday we hold our Sunday school picnic at Glen Echo Heights. We are planning for a big time.

We are getting anxious to get into our permanent location so that we can really begin to work our field.

Our attendance keeps up well in spite of the fact that we are in the "hot time in Washington" and one has to be in Washington on one of these humid, hot days to fully appreciate what that means. We are visioning by faith a beautiful church structure and a strong, earnest company of Christian workers in the National Capitol in the years to come.

GREAT MEETING AT LA GRANGE, GA.

The meeting at La Grange, Ga., conducted by Rev. Victor Lightbourne, evangelist, and Sam Davis, blind pianist, was a success in every way. The tent under which the meetings were held, had a seating capacity of 10,000, and this would not begin to hold the crowds. We had the greatest meeting that was ever held in La Grange, and we are already making plans to have these gifted people with us again in September, 1921. Many people say that Brother Lightbourne is the greatest preacher that they have ever known, and that the music made by this blind pianist, is the sweetest they have ever heard.

There were more than 500 pledge cards signed and about 350 decisions made during the series of meetings and this shows that we had a great harvest as a result of the evangelistic work. The offerings amounted to $880.90—which is the largest amount ever raised in this part of town for work of this kind. Of this amount Brother Lightbourne received $423.00 and Brother Davis $370.00.

We trust that it may be the Lord's will to send these persons back to us next year.

AN EXPLANATORY LETTER.

In a personal letter to the Editor, Rev. J. V. Knight, Greensboro, N. C., says: "Sometime ago you had an article in THE CHRISTIAN SUN concerning my going into the Christian Endeavor work, and I have been so busy that I have not had time until now to give you an explanation of the matter, and to state why I did not go into the work as outlined in the Convention Booster. My aim was to have gone into the work November 1, but circumstances over which I had absolutely no control, made it impossible for me to take up the work. My resignation went to the committee, and after so long a time, was passed upon, and my successor, Mr. Frank P. Wilson, Due West, S. C., was elected. In the meantime the Convention Booster came out and carried the cut about which you wrote. My plans for the work simply could not be made sufficient for me to take the field without a personal injury to my mother and I laid it down, feeling that that was the best thing for me to do. At present I am settled and will take up the Raleigh work November 1."

‘‘RECONSTRUCTING THE CHURCH’’

The above is the title of Dr. W. A. Harper's new book, just from the printery of Fleming H. Revell Co., New York. First of all the name attracts, and makes one sit up and take notice. Has the church been destroyed that it now most needs be reconstructed? One is inclined to ask as one reads the title. Then the dedication gives further notice that one would better lay the book down at once if one wishes to be undisturbed and go to sleep; ‘‘To the prophets of this and of every age who have dared to speak the truth of God, with never a thought of its consequences to themselves, many of whom the world and the church must have in this day to discern for men the signs of the times.’’ But the author is not assuming that the church has been destroyed. He is assuming and emphatically declares that there are ‘‘some new Christian conceptions,’’ and ‘‘new tasks ahead’’ which the church, to properly function, must adapt itself to and place a different emphasis upon ‘‘worship in the new time.’’

If the church is to have ‘‘Kingdom leaders for the days ahead,’’ then the church must become virile, eager, active in all lines of helpful and uplifting human endeavor. The need for a different emphasis upon ministerial and church activity is expressed in these words: ‘‘There are many churches in our country a century old, and more, that have sent out no ministers to the work of Kingdom propagation. These churches are spiritual parasites, living on that life-giving sacrifice of others. They are sponges that absorb, not stand-pipes that distribute the water of life. There are ministers under whose preaching and tuitions no young man has been led to enter the gospel ministry as a life-work. Such ministers are childless in the larger work of Kingdom advancement.’’ Now an author frankly admits that ‘‘such churches, such ministers need to face the situations anew and to discover the opportunity as well as the responsibility that is theirs to supply laborers for the harvest fields now so white everywhere unto the harvest.’’

And this in brief is what Dr. Harper means by ‘‘reconstructing the church,’’ namely, getting the church to face the situation as it is today and discover for itself the really great and effectual door now open unto it. He contends with characteristic zeal and energy that the church never has had such opportunity, nor yet such momentous responsibility, as it has today, and what the author passionately pleads for is a church around for action, every department athrill with zeal for progress, ‘‘terrible as an army with banners.’’

The author believes with Paul, that, ‘‘The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds.’’ One of the strongholds that entrench the enemies of progress and advancement by the church is sectarianism, the spirit that divides and distracts the churches into various sundry and petty camps. In the days of reconstruction, there must be a united church, a church which faces a common foe with a solidity of front and devotion to its one Leader that knows no such thing as retreat, or even ‘‘halt.’’ A united church, a forward going church, and a church that looks to the saving of the whole man, and the whole world for our Christ is what these bright, thrilling and throbbing pages plead for. One is conscious in every chapter, and at every paragraph, that a virile mind is seeking utterance, an enthusiastic soul is finding expression in a great plea for church union, church strength, church fellowship, and most of all a triumphant church. A great book by a great man that will have wide reading and boundless influence.

WATERWORKS OR ELECTRIC LIGHTS FOR THE COST OF A TEAM OF MULES.

‘‘You can put running water in your home, or put in electric lights, either one, for the price of a pair of mules or a low-priced automobile.’’

So says J. Z. Green, and his statement gives a pretty clear idea of the situation. Roughly speaking, either waterworks or lighting system will cost $400 to $1,000. It depends upon the system selected, the kind of fixtures used and how much of the work is done by the farmer himself.

The wiring for a six-room house should cost around $75. This approximate cost added to the cost of the plant selected would be the total cost for electric lights. Plumbing for the home, including cost of installing, should cost around $300 for kitchen and bathroom. This estimate includes bath tub, commode, lavatory, kitchen sink, and hot water tank. It will also be necessary to have a septic tank, which the farmer himself can build at a small cost. These items would make the total cost of a waterworks system.

If both waterworks and lighting plants are ordered at the same time through the same dealer, the total cost will be still less than here indicated.—The Progressive Farmer.

Four million bushels of wheat have been sent to Europe during the past month.

A negro was lynched in Person county, N. C., last week, being accused of a serious crime. Reports indicate that the wrong man was lynched.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina Conference is in session at Elon College this week.

Do not forget to renew your subscription during this month. THE SUN needs it, and for each subscriber owing the paper to renew will be of great help.

MISSIONARY RALLY DAYS.

Again we call attention to the Program for Missionary Rally Days by Mrs. Fred Bullock. We hope this program will be given by every church. We believe that programs of this type help to create a missionary atmosphere and often impress an audience more than a sermon.

There are many strong missionary pageants which are full of interest and carry such forceful messages which should be given occasionally by the young people. It would be the means of interesting the young people as well as developing their hidden talents.

The missionary play or pageant has an educational value and should be given place in the church program.

We now have a Boys' Department in connection with our mission work. This department should, by no means, be neglected. Often the question is asked: "How can we interest our men in missions?" If we succeed in interesting the boys the problem will be solved for the future.

For the benefit of any one who would like information as to how to organize a Boys' Society I quote from our Missionary Manual: "For boys up to fourteen, use the same constitutions and methods as for Willing Workers' Society. They may select their own organization name." Christian Knights or Missionary Scouts are suggested.

Young men above fourteen should organize along the lines of Young Peoples Societies. Let us plan to enlist the boys in this work.

Mrs. J. W. Patton, Greensboro, North Carolina, is Superintendent of Boys' Department for Southern Christian Convention Woman's Board. She will be glad to render any assistance in this work. Be sure to read her report which follows.

REPORT OF SUPERINTENDENT BOYS' DEPARTMENT

Two years ago when our Southern Christian Convention met in Franklin, Va., it was decided to put forth an effort to interest our boys and young men to form Missionary Societies along the same line that our girls are organized, and thus train them for missions that they may secure an inspiration by the vision of a world of need and their opportunity.

Having secured this vision through their missionary training they will strive to lead others to see the vision which stirs their souls and thus go forward to evangelize the world. John R. Mott says, "The greatest problem of foreign missions is not on the foreign field but it is that of providing adequate leadership—men, money, and prayers, and that we must have a missionary field with the missionary spirit.

With this end in view I have been striving to organize our boys and young men. The response and co-operation has not been what I had hoped, but I believe it has been due to the very thing already mentioned—lack of leadership. Letters will not suffice. I have written to every Conference within the bounds of our Southern Christian Convention and talked with many pastors in regard to this work. Only one Conference has a superintendent of Boys' Department and this is the North Carolina Christian Conference.

For the year 1918 and 1919 I have reports from the following:

Suffolk church reports a Boys' Society with Mr. D. C. Lewis, superintendent. They sent in to the Conference Treasurer last year $16.10.

The John R. Foster Missionary Society of the First church, Greensboro, N. C., Mr. F. M. Clement, superintendent, reported for last year twenty-three members enrolled and $25.00 special raised, besides annual dues. Their goal for 1919 and 1920 aside from dues will be the raising of $20.00 per month to educate a native Porto Rican for the mission field. They are succeeding nicely in this work.

The First church of Greensboro has a second Boys' Society, known as Missionary Scouts, with Mr. C. E. York, superintendent. They expect to raise $25.00 special for 1920.

The Elon College Boys' Society has twenty-six members enrolled. Mr. T. E. Powell is their superintendent. Last year they paid to the Conference Treasurer $25.00 special for missions. They are now paying $5.00 a month to support an Armenian child.

This makes a total of sixty-one boys and young men, aside from the Suffolk organization which is being trained to be large-souled men—men who will think in world terms, who in their own souls and practice we hope will be obedient to the world-wide vision—men with courage who will become leaders for the great movements of our Church.

I feel it will be no trouble to reach our boys and young men once we are able to interest them. This brings me again to the one vital need, that of leadership.

We, as Convention and Conference leaders for our women, must know the various churches with their peculiar needs and dispositions and be able to pick out key-workers for local leadership and develop them by keeping in close touch with them through visits and constant correspondence.

Women of the Christian Church let us not rest content with singing, "This World, Oh Christ, for Thee." Let us know missions in such a way that those we are trying to lead will be able to get the full vision.

I appreciate the privilege of having served as superintendent of the Boys' Department. The growth has not been what I had hoped but I take courage.

MISSIONARY

A DIVIDED AND DWINDLING CHURCH.

I was in a church not long since and made a plea for foreign missions. After the sermon one of the leading members said, "You know 'charity begins at home.' Our church needs painting, we have rickety and uncomfortable pews, the steps are about to fall down, and the doors are almost off the hinges. Don't you think we ought to fix up our own before we undertake to do for others." And that good brother thought he was using logic and following the Bible. He was doing neither. He could not understand that the reason why his church needed paint and was not getting it, should have good pews but did not have, needed better doors and stronger hinges and safer steps and had neither was due simply and solely to the fact that neither he nor his congregation had ever followed God's plan of supporting churches in this world. That church was trying to contradict Christ's teaching and doctrine about life and growth and power—and was properly suffering the fearful consequences. "For whosoever will save his life shall lose it; but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it." That church had through the years sought only to save its own life, take care of itself first, and so was slowly but surely losing its life. I reckon that if there is one bit of Satan's philosophy more deadly than the rest, it is that infamous bit "Charity begins at home." What crimes against man and God have been committed in that name. "Charity begins at home!" Satan never could have slapped the Bible and the teachings of Christ in the face with a more wicked statement than that. And its cruel and killing application has been wicked and ruinous beyond expression. I want to quote a question and a few facts of history as recorded by Trull:

"Is it spiritual and Christian economy to argue that until the local work is well established it is folly to ask the church to give for missions, especially for foreign missions?:"

In 1832 the Baptists of Indiana separated on mission and anti-mission lines, each division numbering about 3,000.

In 1882, fifty years later, the anti-mission Baptists still numbered about 3,000, while the missionary Baptists had increased to 37,000. (And the church houses in which the former worshipped were not to be compared in appearance, comfort and upkeep to those in which the latter worshipped).

In 1836 the Miami Baptist Association of Ohio divided on mission and anti-mission lines. Nineteen churches with 742 members excluded six churches with 441 members for having the missionary spirit.

In 1888, fifty two years later, the nineteen anti-mission churches had decreased to five (one of which has since died), the 742 members had decreased to 151, and not one of these churches had as many members as in 1836. But the six missionary churches had increased to 65, and the 441 members had increased to 7,212.

In 1840 the Baptists of North Carolina separated on mission and anti-mission lines, the missionary Baptists numbering about 24,000 and the anti-missionaries, 12,000. Fifty years later, in 1890, the anti-mission Baptists were still about 12,000, but the Missionary Baptists had increased to 300,000.

Facts speak louder than words. There is that which holdeth more than is meet, but tendeth to poverty."

The church must follow Christ's plan of growth, power and development, or suffer stagnation, gradual dwindling and final death.

WHY MISSIONS IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL?

By Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Field Sec'y of Missions, S. C. C.

was never more deeply concerned and yet never more conscious of inability in making any address than I am today—I am deeply sensible of a responsibility that burdens me, yet challenged by a faint hope that invites and urges me.

Youth is hopeful. It looks out on life glorious with promise, and happy in the strength of achievement. I speak today to the youth, or the representatives of the youth, of the Christian churches of this conference. With regret and with heaviness I tell those youths that their parents, teachers, church leaders have not been mightily moved by any missionary motive, and are not today wrought upon by any resistless missionary program. I tell these youths farther that God in His wisdom has never yet allowed any anti-missionary or non-missionary church to grow and become mighty as a factor in reaching and redeeming mankind. It is too late now for the mature, the settled, the fixed, to become missionary. The single hope then, of real growth, power and progress in the Christian Church, is in becoming missionary and that for the most part through the medium of the Sunday school. And yet, ours is a Sunday school manned, taught, directed, in very large measure by those who have not themselves heard the Macedonian cry, caught a vision of the Macedonian need, nor been moved by the Macedonian plea. The one hope, then, that our Christian Church shall be missionary in the next generation—as it has not been and is not in this—is that we shall have missions, teach missions, study missions, pray missions in the Sunday school, so that our youth shall catch the missionary vision, see the missionary need, and accept the missionary challenge flung at us from the Mountain of Galilee by the Master missionary of all time; “Go ye unto all the world and preach my gospel to every creature.”

“It is my candid judgment,” declares Marion Lawrance, “that twenty-five years of sane, systematic missionary instruction in our Sunday schools will multiply by millions the money poured into our mission treasuries, and increase ten-fold the number of missionaries who are carrying the Gospel to those who need it in the homeland and foreign countries.” Because I firmly believe that Marion Lawrance’s judgment in this matter is safe and sound, I dare to present three reasons why every Christian Sunday school, should have regular systematic instruction in one way or in another.

I. The Sunday school should be informed about the most important and biggest business of the church.

The Sunday school cannot be interested in any important business unless it is informed about it. “No information, no inspiration.” No Christian needs any argument to show that not only the biggest business, but the one business of the church is to be missionary. Unless a church is missionary in spirit and in activity, it has no right, secular or Biblical, to call itself a church. And it is a church, in the true Biblical meaning of that term, only in so far as it is missionary. Missions is the heart of the church, the dynamic of the church, the one propelling power of the church. Christ founded His church on the flaming evangel of Peter, “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God.” And in cementing the foundation of the Church Christ used Rock, Build, Prevail—militant words, terms which signified that the church would be martial in spirit, the center of storm and stress, and had before it a career of persistence, of power and of conquest. To carry that flaming evangel to all the world, and proclaim it to all peoples, of all nations, that is the great commission, the one important commandment of the New Testament. And from that day till this the Lord God has seen to it that only the church that has been missionary in spirit, power and activity should grow; and the church that has not been missionary shall not grow. The church has always grown, or not grown, solely in proportion as it has been missionary or anti-missionary.

But to be missionary in spirit, power and activity the church must know the missionary needs, opportunities and message, and the Sunday school is the main teaching place of the church. In the one big, vital problem of the church, that of world-wide evangelization, the Sunday school of all forms of church organization, stands supreme and unrivaled in its possibilities of service for finding the solution. The field of Sunday school thought, study, research, endeavor, is the world, and it deals with the most impressionable age in life. Because of the youth that largely constitute the Sunday school, its wealth of life, breadth of opportunity, possibility in resources of gifts and devotion, it stands, I say, unrivaled, unmatched in the religious realm. The reason why the Methodist Episcopal Church (North) today has more communicants than any other evangelical denomination, and missionaries in more parts of the earth, and annually gathers from its Sunday schools and churches and sends out for world-wide evangelization, more funds, than any other denomination in America, is because, fifty years or more ago, that church solemnly voted and declared that henceforth all its Sunday schools should be, or must strive to become, missionary organizations. No wonder that such a church is today preaching the gospel in well nigh every tongue known to man, and has missionaries in every nationality beneath the sun.

Statistics show that eighty-seven per cent of all evangelical church members were trained in the Sunday school. If, therefore, the church of tomorrow is to be missionary, the Sunday school of today must teach the missionary truth and inculcate the missionary idea.

The heathen nations can not only hear the flaming evangel, “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God,” but can be converted to the religion and life of that Christ, in one generation if the church will but rear in faith a generation to do the work. And the one hope of the church in doing that work is the Sunday school.

II. The Sunday school with its wealth of young life, its zeal for activity, its ready capacity for acquiring knowledge, having compassion and showing pity, should have a knowledge of the most helpless, the most needy and the most pitiable people of the earth.

Jesus Christ was an educated Man. He could teach as one having authority, because He was educated. Now His great store of knowledge, as revealed from the beginning to the end of His earthly career, had to do for the most part with the wants, dispositions, needs and conditions of impotent, hopeless, helpless, undone and needy men and women. Christ's method of redeeming and remaking a world was that of helping the helpless, carrying hope to the despairing, strength to the weak, bread to the hungry and the gospel to the poor. When John sent to inquire of His Messiahship here was the proof that He offered, Go tell John that "the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached to them." And He sought daily to equip His disciples with the same sort of education, for when He sent them out as missionaries He said to them, "Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils." They were to put into practice the knowledge gained by studying under and associating with Him. The great outstanding reason why men and women in the church today do not do more to relieve the suffering of mankind and preach the gospel to the heathen world is because in the days of their youth, when their hearts and minds were impressionable, they were not brought face to face with these conditions and these needs. In age we can turn a deaf ear and a hard heart; but in youth we are eager to listen and ready to help in cases and conditions of pity and need. Tell the youth about 26,000,000 widows, or one out of every six women, in India, doomed to a life of drudgery and under a perpetual curse because they are widows; tell them that they have no baby funerals in Non-Christian lands, because they do not esteem a baby of sufficient worth to have a funeral or a burial service for; tell them that they have no children's books, nor Christmas days, nor Sunday school, nor Children's days, nor orphans' homes in Non-Christian lands, all because they have not the gospel of our Christ; tell the youth in the Sunday school these things, give them these gripping truths, and they will have pity and will be moved with compassion, even if we grown-ups will not.

III. The missionary challenge and the missionary triumph appeal to youth.

I am making a plea today for a more active, wide-awake, ever-growing Sunday school yonder in your home church. And this I know we shall have when, and as, we bring to the mind and heart of our schools the challenge of the missionary task, the needs of the missionary fields, and the story of marvelous missionary triumphs. The big things of this world, and the heroic in life, appeal to the imagination and inflame the mind of youth. There is on my desk now a small volume entitled, "Fifty Missionary Heroes." This volume tells briefly of some of the most dauntless and intrepid souls who ever lived and wrought in this world. What such lives would mean, woven into our Sunday school teaching, held up before our Sunday school pupils, eternity alone can tell.

Many of God's bravest and best who went out to make known the flaming evangel to those who were living and dying without Christ and without hope, Alexander

Duff, Fidelia Fisk, David Livingston, Alexander Mackay, Bishop Thoburn, James Chalmers, and others of like heroic mould, received the impression and made up their minds to a missionary career early in life.

In the great commission Christ gave us a program big enough to challenge the most daring, and varied enough to interest the most languid, if that program is given proper place and emphasis amongst us.

We, all of us, want missions in our Sunday schools, and God help us have them there, in prayer and precept and teaching, that our schools may become dynamos of power for God, beehives of activity, in His service, and a consuming fire for the salvation of the lost souls of all the earth.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

RELIGIOUS TENDENCIES.

Being a summer time student at Columbia University I have already been privileged to hear some excellent and up-to-date talks and addresses on the religious qualities and tendencies of the present age.

An interesting contrast in the history of religious consciousness was brought out by Prof. John J. Coss, director of the summer session.

He began by showing how the early religious mind had laid emphasis upon humility. In the first centuries of Christianity the tendency was towards discrediting man's mind by showing his insignificance. Man, the unworthy creature of the universe, according to Saint Augustine, should hold pride as the greatest sin while humility and self-effacement he should claim as the chiefest of Christian virtues.

Prof. Coss showed how a new phase came over the religious consciousness with the beginning of the eighteenth century. Responsibility took the place of humility in the Christian virtues. Instead of men banishing thoughts of their natural surroundings, such as the sky, the fields, and streams, they became workers that helped to take a part of the great work which God had for them.

Continuing further, the present age is found to be more intensely one of responsibility; and with it the softening beauty which came with humility may fade away in the eagerness of people solving their responsibilities and trying to be workers with God.

This change towards man's responsibility which continues in our national and social life, no doubt has caused much of the over-pessimistic spirit which still prevades among many of the most devoted Christians. Sometimes one mistakes it for materialism; but let us not hold it altogether as materialism. Let us hope firmer for a clearer meaning and more definite fulfillment of our responsibilities as Christians; then I believe we will be more optimistic.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

To our joy we passed the sixteen thousand dollar mark in our financial report this week. We are striving very hard to reach the twenty thousand dollar mark before our Thanksgiving offering commences to come in. We hope to make this year the best, as to the financial income, in the history of the Orphanage.

I regret we have nothing to report under the head of the "Children's Home Fund" this week. We have nearly ten thousand dollars to our credit in that fund, but it will take thirty thousand dollars to build and equip the building. How much have you invested in that fund to build a home for the little helpless tots? I feel sure you would not like for this building, which will be a credit to the Church and a blessing to many little helpless children, to be constructed and not have a part in it.

A number of our Sunday schools have failed, so far, this year, to join in the monthly offerings to help support the Orphanage. Now, my dear Superintendent, do you ever ask God to take care of the widows and orphans in your prayers and then fail to ask your Sunday school to give one Sunday's offering to help give them food, clothes, and a home to live in?

If there ever was a time in the history of the Institution that we needed your sympathy, your prayers and your help, it is now. I have never in all my life had to pay such prices for what we buy as we do now. Sugar is so high that I am afraid we will not be able to give the children enough to keep them sweet. Everything else is practically in the same proportion. So we need your help. Will you not put your shoulder to the wheel and give us a push? Did you ever see a fellow in trouble and help him out that you did not have a sweeter feeling in knowing that you had helped the fellow because he needed your help? Give your Sunday school an opportunity to give one offering each month and I feel sure you will feel deep down in your heart a kindlier feeling toward everybody.

We have many fruit jars. We would be glad to ship some to any one who would be glad to fill them for us.

Mr. W. T. Stokes, of Burlington, N. C., called us this week and wanted to know if we would let him give us a good milk cow. We gladly accepted the donation. We hardly have words that would express our thanks to Brother Stokes for this splendid donation. A beautiful pure bred Jersey cow—young and gentle, and worth at least $125.00.

If nothing happens we will soon have a beautiful herd of milk cows and one that we will be proud of.

A person attached to another may briefly define friendship. A sincere, honest, loving attachment is commendable and desirable at any time and in all conditions because it helps you to become stronger and better prepared to do your part more successfully in human affairs. It also gives encouragement and imparts more vigor in the formation and development of good character in the one who aspires after high and noble things. To have true friends as confidants to really trust and believe them is a special privilege to enjoy. When you have one of that kind do your part to hold on to him—never let go the certain and pure for the untried, for some will pretend to be your friends when they are not. There are many who hold people in pretended friendship because of the advantage they can take of them, and the easy, slick way they can deceive them. There is then much admiration because of advantage. As Jude says: "Having men's persons in admiration because of advantage."

If you like a person, you will somehow admire nearly all he says and does; and if you dislike him, you will dislike what ever he does. Nor does it take long for such dislike to grow. Many take out a policy for all they can possibly carry. Come and turn the crank to help grind my sickle, and when it gets dull again, then you will be of much service in turning the crank again helping to put it in cutting order. Turn the crank—help grind the blade for this is about all you can do at present. You cannot dig deep in the mine of literature, nor can you sit in the chair of culture refinement, affluence and society. You are not a good suitable mixer with the great and good ones. You do not possess that ease, grace, polish and tact of entertaining the elite and polite class of society. A few of us, and but very few, can discuss the financial, scientific, political, materialistic, spiritualistic, psychological, metaphysical subjects as they ought to be presented. You might take a back seat and listen, but you must not speak one word of your crude thinking. You must wait until my steel blade needs grinding—then you may come to the front and tell me all you know about it. Not until then can you be my right hand man—my comrade and my friend.

The friendship of many ceased to grow when the tide of plenty did not flow. They never grew tired when money jingled in the pocket—when gold and silver glittered with inviting beauty while passing from hand to hand, and while the attractive silk paper notes rustled in willing and liberal hands. He who has means never gets too old to attract attention and is always a welcome guest. Always in tune, on time, useful and in great demand. An admirable fellow, good and nice, too, while the means last, but when the money gets low and slow coming in, the poor, old comrade is left, often, without attention, tenderness, sympathy and love. Let the law take care of him—it has provided a place for him.

The old—the afflicted, the unfortunate—and the poor have but few friends. They are out of the current of activity and usefulness with faltering steps and slow. So many of their early and late friends have crossed the great dividing line and left them lingering on the shore of time. Many who knew and loved them best are not with them now. Arm in arm and step with step, they walked, the lovely ways of the world, until now it has not the romance, help affection and gladness for them that once it had. In some ways they have lost their attractiveness and are not as winsome and so interesting and entertaining as they were when life was young. It is so very different with them now than it was when the gold and silver coins sparkled in the light of liberality.

Constructive influence in many cases built up an intimate and lovely friendship and it appeared to be united with a seal of permanent strength, but for some cause there was a defect in the construction and destruction rushed in the way like a devastating whirlwind and tore it all to pieces. That friendly construction which had been progressing for some time was in a very short time thrown down in permanent ruin. With what a sudden and terrific crash did it come! Yonder over the way was a fine costly building. It took time, care and much means for its construction, and when completed it was the pride and pleasure of its occupants, but a destructive fire burned it to ashes in a very short time, and like many a friend was forever lost. A true honest sincere, lasting friend is a rare jewel. But there is a Friend Who stays closer to you than a brother, or any one else and He has promised never to leave you. It is a delightfully, comforting thought that He is "the same yesterday, today and forever. Discouraged friendless one, if there be such, who reads these words listen to Jesus Who speaks to you in these loving words, "I will come to you."

For The Rural Dweller

PROTECTION FOR FRUIT TREE BUYERS.

Every farmer who buys fruit trees—and that certainly ought to mean every farmer—is to be congratulated on the fact that steps have at last been taken which should largely eliminate the fraudulent fruit-tree agents who have heretofore swindled so many people.

For years and years the best nurserymen in America have realized that they were suffering because untrustworthy and irresponsible nurserymen permitted or encouraged fraud on the buying public. Consequently, these reputable and honorable nurserymen have at last gotten together and have organized an association which will at once protect both them and the public. This association is known as "The American Association of Nurserymen." It has adopted a trade-mark consisting of a neat design with the words "Trustworthy Trees and Plants."

The members of this association are determined to admit no nurseryman as a member unless he has a reputation for honesty and fair dealing. Every farmer who has to buy fruit trees hereafter will do well to make sure that the nurseryman from whom he orders is a member of this "American Association of Nurserymen" and proves this by use of the official trade mark.—The Progressive Farmer.

GREATEST TROUBLE WITH BEES AN OVERPRODUCTION OF SWARMS.

Seven years ago I began handling bees with only one hive. From that one I now have 15 which yield us a home supply and some for sale. I use the 16-frame hive with comb foundation for starters, both for swarming and robbing. My expense has been small, considering the returns I have obtained.

My greatest trouble has been an overproduction of swarms during the honey flow, which has weakened the hive. I found last summer that by adding supers and giving more room this could be avoided to a great extent. Another method I have practiced in living small swarms is to destroy the queen, and then send the bees back to the old hive from which they swarmed. I never take any honey from swarms the first season unless they are quite early coming out, and then I never molest the under section, giving them the entire room below for brood-raising. My hives have been my greatest cost, and so far I have been able to buy them for $2.50 apiece. I keep them painted and by re-cleaning where the swarms have been destroyed by worms I avoid buying any larger number. I have always fed the weak hives in the spring until the scarcity of sugar compelled me to stop this practice. This fact along with the dry fall last year is putting all bees to a serious test.—L. A. Huffstetter, in The Progressive Farmer.

UNDERWOOD—WINSTON.

On Wednesday evening, June 16, 1920, at the Christian church, Youngsville, N. C., Miss Elizabeth Underwood became the bride of Genaeles E. Winston. Miss Oza Cook rendered several beautiful selections just before the ceremony. Promptly at 7:30, to the strains of the wedding march, the ushers, S. E. Winston, L. E. Winston, R. E. Underwood and H. H. Underwood entered. Next came the bridesmaids, Misses Flossie Noble and Gertrude Winston. Groomsmen, G. D. Underwood and Jack Underwood entered next. Then came the maid of honor, sister of the bride, Miss Eva Underwood, followed by the ring-bearer, Master Claude Underwood. The groom entered with H. E. Winston, as best man, while the bride entered with her father. Immediately after the ceremony the couple left for a short stay in Washington, D. C. The popularity of this young couple is evident from the unusual display of handsome presents. The ceremony was performed by the writer.

ENGAGEMENT ANNOUNCED.

Chapel Hill, July 8.—Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Pritchard announce the engagement of their daughter, Mary Eleanor to Dr. E. Clarence Judd, of Raleigh. The marriage will take place in the fall.

POINTER

Mrs. Cora Foster Pointer, daughter of Richard M. and Mary Ellen Foster, was born August 24, 1881 and died June 17, 1920, aged thirty-eight years, nine months and twenty days. When a young girl she professed faith in Christ and united with Lebanon Christian church, Semora, N. C. She was educated at the public school of her community and Elon College. On Thanksgiving day, 1917, she was married by the writer to Mr. John Pointer, postmaster at Semora. They were devoted and congenial companions and were happy in their beautiful country home.

Sister Pointer, in her community and elsewhere, had the confidence of people for she possessed all of those graces of character that adorn the life of a noble Christian. She was one of the most active and useful workers in her church, Missionary Society and Sunday school. Besides a bereaved husband, she leaves two little boys, one sister and a mother.

Funeral services were held at her church by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Miller of the Baptist church, and Rev. Mr. Clayter of the Presbyterian church, and her body was placed to rest in the church cemetery.

Her husband and other relatives have the sympathy of the entire community as was evidenced by the large number of people at the funeral.

FARMER

Pleasant Grove Christian church lost another of her most consistent members on May 9, 1920 that of Mrs. Serena Farmer, wife of Mr. John Farmer. She leaves a devoted husband, daughter and son, one half sister and four half brothers. She was a model Christian woman, and dear to all who knew her. Would that we all were like her in our attitude toward our fellowmen and to our God. The church will miss her in all of her organizations. Her work is finished. She has gone to abide in her heavenly home. This sacred message she leaves to her loved ones: "It is well with my soul." May they be ever submissive to the will of Him Who doeth all things well.

R. D. FARMER.

JAY

William Mason Jay, Jr., after a few days of sickness, died June 22, 1920, at the age of eighteen months. He was the only son of Rev. and Mrs. W. M. Jay, Holland, Va. We know that it is sad to give the little ones up, but, "He shall gather the lambs with His arms, and carry them in his bosom." No one can tell the influence of a little child in the life and in the home. Tiny hands touch tender cords.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. L. F. Paultette, pastor of the Baptist church at Holland, Va. A great company were present and the flowers were in abundance. May our loving Father comfort the bereaved parents in this dark hour.

C. H. ROWLAND.

DANIEL

Herman Luther Daniel was born in Mecklenberg County, Virginia, April 6, 1898 and died June 11, 1920, aged twenty-two years, two months and nineteen days. He was the son of Brother and Sister George Daniel. In the winter of 1919 he contracted Influenza which was followed by a lung trouble. He spent several months at Catawba Sanatorium, but nothing could be done to check the disease. Besides leaving a father and mother there are three brothers and several sisters.

The funeral was at the home on Saturday afternoon, June 12, conducted by the writer and the burial was in the family cemetery.

May an abiding faith in God comfort the bereaved family in their hour of sorrow.

JOHNSON.

Lynwood David Johnson very calmly departed this life May 28, 1920, at Greensboro, N. C. He was born in Spencer, N. C., March 4, 1906, and lived there with his parents four years. The home ties were broken up early in his life, and he was taken into the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Johnson, of Greensboro, N. C. Though blind to the beauties of this world, he made beauty by the sound of his musical voice, which was very sweet. His body was badly afflicted, though his face was full of sunshine and interest. His fingers were full of music that thrilled his whole body and soul and gave happiness to every one who came under their sound.

He took one year's Kindergarten work, at the school for the blind, Raleigh, N. C., after which his aunt, Mrs. Johnson, taught him at home.

During his stronger years, he enjoyed Sunday school and preaching. He never made a public profession, but he knew no sin. He leaves a devoted mother, four brothers and one sister.

Funeral services were conducted in the home by their pastor, J. V. Knight. Two beautiful selections were rendered by the First Christian church choir. His remains were taken to Salisbury and placed in the Chestnut Hill cemetery. May God comfort his bereaved relatives, for while it is their loss, it is his gain.

A FRIEND.

POWELL.

Edward Powell passed away at his home in Savage, Gates county, N. C., June 24, 1920. He was seventy-eight years, three months and three days old at the time of his death. He was a good man and brave soldier, having passed through four years of the Civil War. Up to the time of his death he was the beloved treasurer of Oak Grove Christian church and was also one of its charter members. He leaves to mourn his death, four sons and five daughters: R. H., W. W., O. B., and G. C. Powell; Mrs. W. C. Beamon, Savage, N. C.; Mrs. W. T. Benton, Gates county, N. C.; Mrs. W. T. Smith, Portsmouth, Va.; Mrs. R. M. Small, and Mrs. J. E. Small, of Savage, N. C. He also leaves a host of relatives and friends.

Mr. Powell was a charter member of Holly Grove lodge of I. O. O. F., also a member of the Grand Lodge of North Carolina.

Funeral services were conducted at his home by his pastor and his remains laid to rest in the family cemetery. We all hope to meet him in the better land.

H. H. BUTLER.

HOOK.

Hazel Luraine Hook was called to rest June 25, 1920, which was her 22nd birthday. She had been a sufferer with heart trouble for several months and the end was not unexpected. Her death is a severe loss to the Winchester Christian church, where she had been untiring in her work among the young people and as a primary teacher in the Sunday school. The influence of her consecrated life will be long felt in the church.

Funeral services were conducted in the presence of a large congregation from the church, by the writer, and the remains were laid to rest beneath a mound of flowers in Mt. Hebron cemetery.

She left to mourn her departure, her mother, Mrs. R. C. Hook, five brothers: Prof. A. L., Rev. W. C., Robert, Paul and Kenneth and two sisters, Mrs. K. H. Sale and Mrs. Perry Miller.

May the Lord graciously comfort the bereaved.

W. T. WALTERS.

PASCHAL.

Harvey Lanier, one of the infant twin sons of Mr. and Mrs. U. A. Paschal, of Burlington, N. C., died June 30, 1920, aged 14 days. The parents' hearts were greatly saddened by the loss of this little jewel, but comforted with the thought that the great Father above had gathered the precious little lamb into his bosom, and he would forever be safe from all harm. God bless and comfort the bereaved parents. The funeral was conducted by the writer from the home and interment made in Pine Hill cemetery.

J. W. HARRELL.

HOLT.

The body of little John Hubert Holt, Jr., the twenty-two months old son of Bro. Jno. Holt and wife, was laid to rest in the New Elam cemetery on June 28, 1920. For several days medical skill fought desperately and loving hands were tireless in ministrations, but the grim reaper had been commissioned to liberate the little spirit that it might return to the God who gave it.

Burial service was conducted by Bro. Ruffin Farrar.

The Lord bless and comfort the young father and mother in their bereavement.
B. J. HOWARD.

GUNTER.

It was a distinct shock to the entire community and to his many acquaintances and friends in other parts of the state, when it was learned that Bro. John H. Gunter had been instantly killed, on the afternoon of June 28, 1920, by accidentally falling upon a fast moving circular saw at a lumber plant near New Hill, N. C.

Bro. Gunter professed faith in Christ and became a member of New Elam Christian church four years ago. He was only seventeen years of age at the time of his death, but was a young man of fine character. I think he was loved by all who knew him. The surviving members of the family are his father and step-mother, three sisters and one brother.

In the presence of friends, numbering far beyond the seating capacity of the church, the funeral service was conducted by the writer, assisted by Dr. Burt, a physician to the family of the deceased, at Bethel church in Wake county.

The active pall-bearers were: Milton Burt, Paul Stephens, Henry Holt, Ivan Holleman, Paul Collins, and Hiram Holt.
B. J. HOWARD.

WICKER.

Mrs. Alberta Wicker, wife of D. A. Wicker, and their infant child were buried in the same grave at New Elam on June 28, 1920.

Mrs. Wicker was the daughter of Bro. Wesley Mann and wife, and had been a member of New Elam church several years.

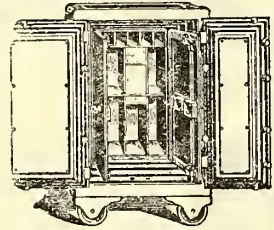

She leaves a husband, one child, father and mother, and one brother. May they ever be submissive to the will of Him who knows what is best, and doeth all things well.

Funeral services by the writer.
B. J. HOWARD.

ELEY.

Mrs. Martha J. Eley, wife of the late Geo. W. Eley, died at the home of her son, John M. Eley, Suffolk, Va., July 1, 1920. At the time of her death she was eighty-two years, nine months and twenty-five days of age. Mrs. Eley was a Christian mother and had been a loyal member of Antioch Christian church for more than sixty years. She leaves to mourn her death three daughters, one son, twenty-four grandchildren, fifteen great-grandchildren, three nieces, two nephews and a host of friends. Her funeral services were conducted in the church cemetery by her pastor, assisted by Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, Va. There she rests to await the coming of her Lord. God bless the bereaved ones.

The Land of Golden Rule

(Folger McKinsey.)

If I were asked what I believed, I could not help but say,
 The gentle and the simple creeds of boyhood's yesterday;
 The tender faith in Bible things, the truth, the way, the right,
 The Golden Rule to live one's life, according to the light;
 And everywhere the thought of God, that we are everywhere
 The children of one Father's love and of His Heavenly care.

If I were asked what I believe, I'd have to say, as then,
 A simpler faith in God's commands, a manlier trust
 'mong men,
 A clear and more abiding course t'ward that which men might call
 The straight-out-from-the-shoulder faith of Peter and of Paul;
 The teachings, most of all, that came to us in Sunday School,
 Way back in little childhood's land, the Land of Golden Rule.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

A COLLEGE CATALOGUE.

A college catalogue is interesting and is not interesting: It is interesting to the young person trying to decide where to attend school and not interesting to the person who does not appreciate an education.

There is something fascinating about a college catalogue to the young person who is really interested in a college career. He or she will read and re-read, and each reading gives the prospective student something of a fascination, something of a charm about the day that he or she is to leave for college.

To the young person who has never attended college, the college catalogue is an odd affair. It tells all about the duties and details of a college; the courses and special departments; about the "elective" and the "required" studies. It has the most big words, and the degrees after the professors names can scarcely be understood.

The college catalogue is full of information, but so far we have never known one to cover all the details and to answer all the questions that prospective students want to know. The office of a college president is a busy place, especially during vacation, answering questions from prospective students. But that which delights the college president's heart most is to answer these questions, because every college president knows that when a young person reaches the place that he or she desires to ask questions, that a good prospect is in sight for some college.

A college catalogue is really a valuable piece of information. It is the charter, the history and the handbook of the institution issuing it. We are of the opinion that many young persons have been inspired to attend college because of the inspiration received from reading the college catalogue.

The issuing of a college catalogue is an expensive proposition. The volume usually covers two or three hundred pages and must bear the marks of good workmanship, as well as be literary in standard.

A college catalogue is one book that the public can get without price. Ask any college for its catalogue and it will be sent gladly, even if you are not a prospective student.

Elon College is now distributing its twenty-sixth catalogue to prospective students, friends of the college, and to all who may desire to have a copy of this handbook of our educational achievement at Elon College. A card addressed to President Harper, Elon College, N. C., with a request for a copy of this book will bring it to you by return mail. Not only will the college send you a copy of its catalogue, but will send you other reading matter and a handsome illustrated bulletin showing the pictures of all the buildings, campus scenes, student activities, and general scenes that have transpired in the making of Elon. Send your name today.

"What shall it profit a church if it gain the whole world and lose its young people?"

A LESSON NOT YET LEARNED.

We have just noticed a press dispatch from Tokio, Japan, saying that the Japanese government has decided to ask an appropriation of nearly twenty-five millions of dollars to be expended in the construction of new warships and other naval requirements for the current fiscal year, as a part of the national defense. We note that the program calls for eight battleships, twelve cruisers, and thirty-seven destroyers, in addition to a number of other pieces of war craft.

It is a sad thought to think that we have not as yet learned our lesson—a lesson that we must learn before swords are beaten into plowshares and pruning hooks; namely, that a nation cannot govern by physical strength alone. The Romans tried it and the Roman Empire perished. And several other nations, all too familiar, went in the same direction, following the same program. Germany's ambition was to rule the world, and she was sure of it. Today she is shorn of her power and stripped of her armor, while all allied nations look upon her with contempt and scorn. Her physical strength challenged the world and the challenge was met.

What this world needs is to learn that the greatness of a nation is not in the number of battleships it controls, nor the number of guns which it owns. The nations need righteousness. "Righteousness exalteth a nation."

"AN ASSESSMENT."

It is a little strange at times that after a thing has been explained again and again that many will continue to misunderstand it. For instance, we were on a train the other day making a trip, when a young man of former acquaintance boarded the train, took a seat nearby and began to speak of things and happenings in our boyhood community. It was not long before he said: "That was a big assessment that they put on us, wasn't it? Don't you think that $80.00 per member is a big assessment, in addition to other things, for church members?"

We were sure that the young fellow was honest and innocent in the matter, and we endeavored to explain to him as we have endeavored to explain to others, that the $80.00 per member in the Men and Millions campaign was simply an average, and that no member of the Church was assessed $80.00—not even eight cents.

Nail a notice on your church door and let it read after this fashion: Some uninformed church member circulated the news sometime ago that the members of the Christian Church had been assessed $80.00 per member in the Men and Millions campaign. Tell your friends that it is false and without foundation. For further information see literature on the campaign.

"Which is more important: To lead one soul to Christ or to train that one to lead one hundred more?"

WAS THE INTERCHURCH A SUCCESS?

That is a question that is going the rounds these days, since the movement seems to be receding. The contributions received amount to about $180,000,000, or about fifty per cent of what was asked for. There were thirty denominations co-operating, but practically all of these had planned their forward movements before they decided to go into the Interchurch Movement. The question then is, How much assistance did the Interchurch Movement give these denominations in their forward undertakings? To say that the Interchurch Movement succeeded in raising $180,000,000, is not an accurate statement.

We desire to be understood, as we have said editorially before, that we are not condemning the Interchurch World Movement, but trying to throw some light on questions that are being discussed—and one of those questions today is: How much did the Movement add to the workings of organized field forces of the different denominations?

MRS. LENA RAGSDALE FONVILLE.

Our pen moves slowly and tears becloud our vision as we write these lines to announce the passing of Mrs. Lena Ragsdale Fonville, the beloved wife of Brother D. R. Fonville, on July 17, 1920, Burlington, N. C.

When we came to the editorial chair of THE SUN, "Miss Lena" was the office secretary of the paper, and remained with us until a few weeks before she was wedded to Attorney D. R. Fonville on June 7, 1917. She was faithful to her trust, systematic, painstaking, and correct in her work. She filled every hour with honest toil and endeavor. Her devotion to her work was a true index to her heart, for she ever proved devoted to all entrusted to her hands.

The husband and young wife turned their faces with eagerness toward the great tasks of life, and the first of these tasks was for the husband to answer his country's call. The bride of a few months said "Go," and Brother Fonville turned his feet from a happy home to the shell-torn fields of France, while the new bride counted the days till his return. Upon his return, they set their hearts and hands to the building of a model house. The task being finished, "Miss Lena's" every fitness for a companion turned that house into a home. Their lives were scarcely fused into a flame of love's holy passion, the bridal wreath barely withered under the touch of time before the hands that clasped so lovingly at the bridal altar were wrenched asunder at the open grave.

The broken-hearted husband is left to listen to the prattle of the infant babe. May the guiding hand of a living Father direct the footsteps of the bereaved husband and motherless son each day of their lives, and bring them peacefully to that haven of rest where love's dream is never ended, and where "The day that hath no evening,

The health that hath no sore,
The light that hath no ending,
But lasteth forevermore."

A DESERVED RECOGNITION.

The Richland News, Richland, Ga., in its issue of July 9, gives special recognition to Evangelist Victor Lightbourne and Musician Sam Davis, who were holding a revival in Richland, Ga., at that time. The News gives front page display to their pictures and says some very complimentary things, among which we quote the following:

"The Christian revival which commenced here Tuesday night with the Reverend Victor Lightbourne preaching and Sam Davis, the blind musician, in charge of the musical part of the services is being attended at each service by large crowds who enjoy the sermons and song services.

Mr. Lightbourne is one of the smoothest speakers that has ever visited Richland and his flow of language is most befitting to the many beautiful illustrations and talks that he is making twice daily. His wording is beautiful, his manner of speaking easy and his method of driving home his points strong, forceful, and very impressive indeed. The praise which has been given him in all the cities along his way has not in the least made him egotistical but like the true man of God that he is, he gives the praise of his success to God Who uses him as an instrument to fulfill such missions as he is now on. Those who have missed hearing him will never realize their loss. He is truly a powerful man in the hands of his God.

"Sam Davis, the blind musician, is a miraculous wonder, to say the least of him. Unable to see a note or key his playing is perfect and memory equally as good. The evangelist only has to name the song or even give the number and the music starts. Mr. Davis has been honored with the world's championship as a blind pianist, this honor accorded him at Chicago in 1914 and his playing is a sight to behold as well as beautiful to hear. He won his championship as a rag time player and since that time was converted and is now using his talent in the service of the Lord. His playing is wonderful; and the manner in which he adds ripples and thrills to the compositions making such unexpected and delightful harmony makes the audiences hold their breath in wonder and awe."

"RUSHING IN WHERE ANGELS FEAR TO TREAD."

(Editor Bridges, of the Presbyterian Standard.)

We belong to the ministry, and have been a member of it for forty years, and we believe that there is no profession comparable to it, whether measured by the good done in the world, or by the subjective effect upon the man himself.

Notwithstanding our devotion to the ministry of every denomination, we are not blinded to their weaknesses, and oftentimes we feel mortified that they present to the world an attitude of infallibility on every subject. Of course there is some excuse for this tendency, because their entire training tends to confirm them in this habit.

The very fact that they can make any statement in the pulpit without fear of immediate contradiction fosters in them a spirit of self-confidence that would be amusing at times, if it were not so sad.

The result of this training is that there is no subject in the heavens above, or in the earth beneath, or the water under the earth, that some one of them does not feel qualified to express an opinion upon.

The most recent exhibition of this spirit was shown in the great Baptist Convention that met in Washington. That it was a Baptist convention rather than the meeting of some other church was merely an accident. It was as liable to take place among Presbyterian preachers as those of any other denomination.

It seems that Vice-President Marshall, speaking before the Virginia Bar Association, expressed the opinion that if the United States Senate had passed on the prohibition amendment by recent ballot the measure would not have received twenty votes. This was the opinion of the chairman of the senate, a man who is presumed to know what he is talking about. Yet for this honest expression, he was censured by the Baptist Association, and one speaker charged him with insulting that noble body of men. Without exhibiting the same spirit that we condemn, we are of the opinion that Mr. Marshall knows more about the views of his fellow senators than any body of men, however pious or famous, who have had only occasional dealings with individual cases.

After a long study of the politician we are convinced that he is apt to vote for a measure more by reason of its popularity than because it is right.

Only recently we have seen two prominent men who were opposed to woman suffrage, suddenly flop over to the other side, giving as their excuse that the people wanted it.

If the preacher, whether in the pulpit or in convention assembled, would confine himself to carrying out the Lord's command, he would find that his influence would be much greater. In matters connected with the Bible or theology he can speak as one having authority, but when he ventures into the realm of politics or science, he is talking about a subject of which many of his hearers have a more accurate knowledge.

After a long acquaintance with the ministry, both of our own Church and of other denominations, we have been impressed with the fact that while individually the preacher tries to let his moderation be known unto all men, in convention assembled he loses his sense of the fitness of things, and imagines that being in a crowd, his part of the responsibility of an act is too small to consider.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

NOTICE.

The time for the meeting of the Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference has been changed this year from August 12, 13, and 14 to August 5, 6, and 7. This change was made to avoid a conflict with a Firemen's Convention in Winchester where the Conference is to be held.

A. W. ANDES, Secretary.

NOTICE.

On recommendation of the Educational Committee and by order of the Executive Committee of the North Carolina Christian Conference, Rev. E. H. Rainey, Newport News, Va., was ordained to the office of the ministry in the Christian Church in the Elon College Chapel, July 15, 1920. The ordaining presbytery consisted of Drs. P. H. Fleming and J. O. Atkinson, and the writer, assisted by Dr. J. W. Wellons.

N. G. NEWMAN,

Chairman of the Presbytery, Acting for Rev. T. E. White, President of Conference.

VALLEY LETTER.

The work in my field is moving along at a moderate pace. Revival meetings have not resulted in any large gatherings this year. I have had nine meetings to hold. Have held six of them myself. Rev. B. J. Earp held a short meeting for me at Bethlehem while I was in a meeting at Woods' Chapel. Brother Earp won the hearts of the people and greatly endeared himself to the people there in the short time he was with them. I hope, by the help of Rev. L. F. Johnson to get in a meeting at Concord yet before Conference. I shall then have had a meeting at each of my churches, except Joppa, and I think they will have to go over until after Conference.

Our Sunday School Convention was held at Concord in May and was one of the best we have had yet. The attendance, interest, and addresses were splendid. Dr. J. W. Harrell, a member of the Board of Religious Education, was present, and added a great deal to the Convention. It was a real treat to us all to hear him. The Convention will meet at Leaksville next year.

We had the annual memorial service at Timber Ridge the third Sunday in June. As usual a large crowd gathered from far and near for the occasion.

Much of my time now is taken up gathering up Conference apportionments, and otherwise getting every thing ready for Conference. Our apportionments are higher this year than they have ever been, and it means for us to get busy to bring them up in full.

Conference will meet in Winchester, August 5, 6 and 7. This is one week earlier than usual, but the change in dates was asked for by the Winchester church to avoid a conflict with a Firemen's Convention to be held in the city at our regular Conference time, and the change was granted by the Executive Committee of the Conference. We are expecting a fine session of Conference. Several of our most prominent men are expected to be with us, such as Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. W. A. Harper, Dr. I. W. Johnson, Dr. C. H. Rowland, Dr. A. B. Kendall, Dr. L. F. Johnson, Rev. H. R. Clem, Mr. C. D. Johnston, and a prominent lady, Miss Bessie Holt. With such a force from outside our own Conference we shall surely not lack anything that goes to make up a good Conference. Our own folks should not miss this feast of good things.

Harrisonburg, Va.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Emotion, devotion, promotion, may represent the development of Christianity among men. Emotion is a sensation produced by an idea and manifests itself in blushing, smiling, weeping. It is the characteristic of children, and tender-hearted people. It has a large place in primitive nations. Religion among new converts and undeveloped Christians is emotional. Shouting, hand-clapping, physical demonstration, noise, are evident in spiritual experience among uncultured people. The genuineness of their faith and experience must not be questioned. The response to such demonstration of religious joy is in all Christians; but it grows less as Christians advance in intelligence and service. The religion that expresses itself in emotion may exist without real service.

Devotion carries the Christian into a higher sphere of religion which may be called piety or worship. It knows more of God in His attributes and His relation to man. The plan of salvation, as revealed in Jesus Christ, may be better understood, and the experience may be more quiet, but no less real. Every step toward perfection is a step toward quiet and less demonstration. This is true in machinery. The more perfect the machine, the less noise it makes. Carry this thought into nature: The storm is an abnormal condition, full of noise and demonstration; but the universe, in its motion, is noiseless. Loudness is no proof of wisdom. It may reach us more effectively, but the "soft answer turneth away wrath." Religion must not be discounted because it is quiet; it may be all the more ardent and sincere.

Promotion is another step up in the scale of religion. It helps to establish the kingdom by giving to its enterprises. It gives thought, time, prayer, money, work, anything that the cause requires. The demonstration here is not in noise or ardor, but in real service. The motive is the same in all these stages. It is a penitent desire to obey God; but in promotion there is a keener sense of duty to God and to men. Religion is progressive, and when it reaches the stage of promotion it becomes more practical and more useful. One might illustrate this truth by parental experience. Parents are first filled with emotion, feeling, toward their children; then they become devoted to them; later, they promote their interest by serving them. The infant relation is lost in their duty to their children. They must be clothed, educated, treated when sick, started in life. Parental affection grows, but it takes on new forms of expression. There is no thought of example for the baby. It is all love and tenderness; but that would not meet the requirements of a teen-age child. There is no place for suspicion between the most primitive emotion and the most advanced promotion in religion. Every congregation has all types, and all stages of progress. That is what makes the family life so dear, and it should add to the Church as a Christian institution. There are babes in Christ and strong men and women, to; and it takes all to make up the Kingdom.

W. W. STALEY.

WINCHESTER, VA.

It was the writer's privilege to worship with the First Christian church of Winchester. It is a source of deep gratitude to know that the work there, which we served ten years, is in a flourishing condition. The bonded indebtedness for which funds were provided on the last Sunday of our pastorate, has been paid. The Sunday school and the mid-week prayer-meeting show a big increase in attendance, and there seems to be a quickened activity along all lines. The church has been fortunate in securing the services of Dr. A. B. Kendall, of Washington, for Sunday evening services.

The church has been without a regular pastor since the resignation of the writer, March 1. The church is facing a great opportunity and should have a pastor, who is qualified to lead it in a larger and greater work for the Master.

I want to express my appreciation for the many tokens of friendship, the untiring efforts, the faith and co-operation of the good people of the church during my pastorate. The task before us, in the beginning, seemed large, but thanks to our Heavenly Father, through prayer, and faith and active co-operation the church has been successfully planted. We owe a debt of thanks to many who came to our aid, for the liberal offerings of people throughout the Conference, and to members of the Christian Church in many sections for sending contributions. We also want to express our appreciation to the Virginia Valley Central Conference, the Home Mission Boards of the Southern Christian Convention and the American Christian Convention and the Christian Missionary Association of the Eastern Virginia Conference for their generous appropriations and the faithfulness with which they stood behind the movement. The work was given up with many regrets and we shall always cherish a warm feeling for the church and the faithful workers who labored with us there.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR JULY 25, 1920.

"Every Christian a Missionary"—Acts 1:1-9. (Missionary Meeting.)

The idea for the Christian Endeavor is to train for Christian service to be doers of the Word and not hearers only, to get action. One of the best ways to get people to doing things is to get them to discuss the thing to be done. If we want to get our people interested in missions, we must get them to talking missions. To help you do this in your meeting we are giving you a number of suggestive questions:

What is a foreign missionary?

What is a home missionary?

What are some of the phases of foreign missionary work?

What are some of the phases of home missionary work?

Who was commanded to spread the gospel tidings? Matt. 28:16-20.

To whom was the gospel to be given? Mark 16:15.

How was the field to be enlarged? Acts 1:8.

How would you interpret Acts 1:8 in relation to the church today?

How are the heathen to be saved? Rom. 10:14, 15.

Why should we pray for the heathen? Luke 11:2.

Why should we give to missions? Mark 15:16.

Why should we give ourselves? Rom. 12:1.

How can the Christian Endeavor movement help missions?

What missionary work can our local society do? Five answers.

What are some of the most inviting mission fields?

In what countries is the Christian church doing foreign mission work?

Why should every Christian be a missionary? Jn. 15:6-8.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR AUGUST 1, 1920.

"Self-Improvement"—Ps. 25:1-12 (Consecration Meeting.)

The law of life is growth. When the grass of the field, or the tree of the forest ceases to grow, it begins to decay. Man must either advance—that is improve—or he will go backward.

You can make this meeting interesting by having three-minute speeches on the daily readings.

Monday, July 26; Daniel, 1:1-4, 17.

Show how the State helps in self-improvement through the school system and the health department.

Tuesday, July 27; Col. 1:9-14.

Spiritual improvement comes through a fuller knowledge of God, a more earnest effort to do His will and a deeper drawing at the fountain of His strength.

Wednesday, July 28; I Kings 3:5-15.

Moral improvement is a result of following Divine wisdom by heeding the voice of our own conscience.

Thursday, July 29; I Peter 2:1-8.

The study of God's Word gives spiritual strength, purer thoughts and a broader vision, and thereby promotes growth.

Friday, July 30; Jno. 8:12, Eph. 5:8-14.

The light of Jesus Christ, through the gospel, has been the great illuminator, that has lighted the way for civilization, commerce, and political and religious freedom, and in its rays have been made possible the moral and spiritual development of the human race.

Saturday, July 31; Acts 22:1-5.

Paul was educated by one of the greatest teachers of his time. A true education is the foundation for a useful life.

Normal self-improvement includes body, mind, spirit.

Questions to Be Answered in the Meeting.

Why is self-improvement a duty that we owe to ourselves?

Why is self-improvement a duty that we owe to our fellowmen?

Why is self-improvement a duty that we owe to our God?

For The Rural Dweller

SUDAN GRASS.

One of the greatest feed crops ever introduced into the semi-arid regions of Texas, as well as into more northern climates, is Sudan grass. This plant was introduced into the United States from north Africa in about 1910 and first brought to Texas in 1911.

The plant is well adapted to the semi-arid belt and very dependable yields are secured with little rain. The writer was in Ohio in the fall of 1918 and a prominent farmer told him that he had had wonderful success with his test plot and that every farmer should have a few acres of it on his place. Ohio is not semi-arid. This shows its wide adaptability.

It is planted for both hay and seed and it makes an excellent quality of hay and is relished by all stock. It can usually be mowed twice a year for hay. In sections where grown extensively, one crop of hay is cut and the second crop used for seed. Where sowed broadcast a yield of three tons per acre may be realized in a season.

Sudan grass belongs to the sorghum family. Where sowed broadcast about 15 to 20 pounds per acres of seed are used, and where drilled about eight pounds of seed are used.

When it was first realized what an important and dependable crop Sudan grass was, the seed reached an enormous price, but the average price for the past few years, has been from 10 to 15 cents per pound. Higher yields of both hay and seed are realized when the seed are planted with drills and the grass cultivated as other row crops.

Care should be taken in purchasing seed. Buy only from the best seed houses using pure seed.

Farmers in regions of less than 25 inches of rainfall should plant some Sudan grass for pasture and hay since it will furnish much pasture in a dry season when other grasses are killed by lack of water.—R. L. Walker, in The Progressive Farmer.

SOME REASONS FOR FAILURE WITH CRIMSON CLOVER.

A reader says that he planted crimson clover and that "it did not do any good. What little did not freeze out is up on a little mound. The land was not inoculated and has not been limed, but has a very good clay bottom."

The failure of the crimson clover may have been due to lack of inoculation, or to lack of lime, but the latter is not very likely, for clay lands will usually grow crimson clover fairly well without applications of lime. The failure to inoculate the land or the seed may have been the cause of the failure of the clover, but this is not likely to be the case in sections where red, white or any of the other true clovers are grown.

From the fact that the only clover that did not freeze out is "up on a little mound" we are inclined to think an excess of water in the soil is more likely to have been the cause of the failure than either lack of inoculation or lime, or than to the fact that it "was sowed in the new of the moon," as some of our inquirer's neighbors have assured him is the true explanation. During a wet season, especially if the land is not well drained, crimson clover or any other fall-sowed crop is much more likely to be winter killed by the freezing and thawing and the resulting spewing of the young plants. In a drier season, or on better drained land the clover might have done well without inoculation or lime, but when one has not previously grown any legume it is always safer to make an application of lime and inoculate either the land or the seed.—The Progressive Farmer.

A CREED FOR FARMERS.

I believe that the soil which God made is our greatest natural resource; that the proper conservation of its fertility and the maintenance of a good home upon it are my most important social services as a farmer.

I believe that work upon the soil is co-operation with the Creator in a complete yet ever continued creation; that it is the oldest, most useful, honorable and enjoyable employment of man; and that when undertaken in the right spirit it calls forth the best that is in him.

I believe that better farming should mean better living; that its most valuable product is the character it develops in the farmer; and that its greatest rewards are the satisfaction it gives.

I believe in a better selection of both plants and animals; in a more perfect adaptation of crops to the soil; in a more rational rotation and diversification of such; and in more effective cultivation and fertilization.—Edward J. Rubiffson.

BURLINGTON YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETY HOLDS MEETING.

The Young People's Missionary Society of the Burlington Christian church held its regular monthly meeting Monday evening, July 6, with Miss Edith Walker. This society, under the efficient leadership of Mrs. Marvin McPherson, president, and Miss Sadie Fonville, secretary, is laying plans to increase its membership and average attendance. They now have thirty-one members enrolled. They are using the standard programs. A native worker in Japan is supported by this society.

If you think of organizing a Young People's Society, write to Miss Bessie Holt, Burlington, N. C., for one of the text books, "How to Begin and Carry on a Young People's Missionary Society." Miss Holt says, "A Young People's Missionary Society in every church of the Southern Christian Convention is that for which I am longing, laboring and praying." Shall we not add our prayers to hers that this may be accomplished?

REPORT OF CRADLE ROLL SUPERINTENDENT TO THE WOMAN'S BOARD OF THE S. C. C.

Your Cradle Roll Superintendent reports the following:

Number Conferences having missionary Cradle Rolls . . . 3
 Number of Cradle Rolls in Conferences 32
 Total number of children enrolled 450
 Number of new rolls gained during biennium 15

The Conferences having Cradle Rolls are the Eastern Virginia, the Virginia Valley Central, and the North Carolina. The North Carolina Conference leads in the number of Cradle Rolls, also in the number of children enrolled, having twelve rolls with 220 babies enrolled.

This Conference also leads in the amount of money raised, which is $104.39. Close behind is the Eastern Virginia Conference with eleven rolls and a total enrollment of 156 babies. The funds reported $46.52.

Your Superintendent recommends:—

- 1.—That we set as our goal 30 new Cradle Rolls next year.
- 2.—That we urge the observance of Cradle Roll Day in all Societies.
- 3.—That we urge all local and Conference Superintendents to send full reports promptly.

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. J. W. HARRELL,
Cradle Roll Supt.

CRADLE ROLL.

This department of our mission work is composed of our very youngest members—children under six years of age. Any baby from one day old up to six years may be enrolled—and the dues are fifteen cents for each year of the child's age. This department is, in many respects, the most attractive department connected with the work and its importance should not be minimized.

In each church or Missionary Society a Cradle Roll superintendent should be appointed. She should have the mother-heart and should love babies, otherwise she will miss the joy of her task. The local superintendent goes into the home where there are babies, secures the names and enrolls them. She gives baby a little certificate of membership which may be framed and hung upon the wall. Then she leaves a little mite box to be filled. (Membership certificates and mite boxes can be obtained from Mrs. Job. G. Holland, Holland, Va., superintendent of Literature and Mite Boxes for S. C. C. Board.)

The Cradle Roll superintendent is supposed to keep in touch with the home. Here is a great opportunity for many parents have been led to Christ and won for the church through the Cradle Roll. It is the connecting link between the home and the church. The home and the church co-operating in the training of the child. "Train up a child in the way he should go—and when he is old he will not depart therefrom," Prov. 22:6. I do not believe we can begin too early to train our children along missionary lines. If we had been trained when we were children our mission work would be going better today. There were no Cradle Rolls twenty-five years ago. Missions was very unpopular then. Our ministers seldom referred to the subject. Today the cause suffers because of a lack of training all along the line.

Cradle Roll Day should be observed during the month of June. This is an annual party for the babies and their mothers. The Cradle Roll superintendent should arrange a suitable program, and a personal invitation should be given to each mother and baby. The mite boxes are opened on this occasion and refreshments served. Plan to make this the happiest meeting of the year. If any society failed to observe Cradle Roll Day in June, be sure to arrange to have it sometime during the summer.

MRS. J. W. HARRELL.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN RELIGIOUS EDUCATION?

(From a Leaflet by Hermon Eldridge.)

It Is Vital!

General education is for the purpose of training the head and hand in order that the pupil may make a livelihood.

Religious education is for the purpose of training the heart and soul in order that the pupil may live a true life.

General education is desirable and necessary.

Religious education is vital and absolutely essential to the welfare of the individual as well as to the common life of the world.

Why?

One may secure a general education in public school, college, and university, and in spite of that be a menace to himself and the world. If a man is a rascal at heart, then education just makes him a smarter rascal. If a man is right at heart, then education adds to his usefulness, whether he is a farmer or a factory hand, whether he is a pork-packer or president.

In other words, a secular education is very desirable indeed.

But a religious education is absolutely vital and is the life-spring of our action.

What?

What we call secular education is found in our public schools and general scheme of colleges, universities, and technical schools.

What we call religious education is found in the home, in the family altar, in the Sunday-school, in classes for teacher-training and missionary education, in denominational colleges and in summer Bible schools and chautauquas where the religious element is in control.

How?

How can we promote religious education in the Christian Church?

The closest and clearest way is in our Sunday schools:

(a) See that we have a Sunday school.

(b) See that it is attended by the children.

(c) See that it has the best teachers. This means that teacher-training classes and "study to show ourselves approved unto God" will come into the reckoning. Teachers should first be Christian. Then they should not only be in the way, but know how to lead others into the same way. That takes knowledge of God and His Word; knowledge of God's children; knowledge of teaching processes; knowledge of the Sunday school and church.

(d) Mission Study Classes. We must get the facts. It has been said by some one that "He who will not study to get the facts has no right to an opinion." The next time any one objects to mission work, suggest that to him.

(e) Summer Schools. A week or two in association and study of God's Word and methods with a lot of God's folks out in God's open country by the sea, or lake, or riverside has made over hundreds of souls—yes, thousands of them.

Such places as the Seaside Chautauqua at Virginia Beach, Norfolk, Va., next July, or Winona Lake, Indiana, next August, or Craigville, Mass., in July, or the short terms of training at Elon College and Defiance next June or July may mean a new vision and a new life to many of our folks.

(f) Our Colleges. Our own Christian Colleges. There they not only give secular education, but create and develop religious life, which is far and away beyond anything else on earth.

Every church in the Christian denomination should have at least one representative in one of our Christian Colleges.

Work for this. Get the literature from the college nearest you. Have a college night and get some college boys or girls from one of our colleges to come and tell you about it. Have a college supper and decorate with the college emblems and pennants and tell the young people about the college. This should be in the spring before school closes. Get college streamers of our colleges on the walls of your Sunday school and Christian Endeavor rooms.

Ask the preacher to preach about the college the Sunday before and after you have the college night.

(g) Christian Endeavor. For thirty-nine years this great organization has been building itself into the life of the church. A very large proportion of the leaders of the church today in the pastorate and pew, as well as in the general councils of the church, acknowledge their debt to Christian Endeavor training in their youth.

We must keep the home fires of Christian Endeavor bright with the enthusiasm and consecration and service of our young life. The average church has about as good a Christian Endeavor Society as it wants to have. Young people respond to leadership and when that leadership is lacking in the pastor and in the thought and sympathy and help of the church—why, young people go elsewhere.

MISS MARY ELDER DEAD.

Every Elon student and faculty member will feel a keen sense of personal loss in Miss Mary Elder's death. Quiet, unassuming, patient, faithful, spiritual—these were some of her characteristic qualities. Miss Mary was a beautiful young Christian and the first of our life work recruits to be called Home.

She was to have graduated next May from Elon, and then to have given herself to Christian service. She was president of the Y. W. C. A. for next year and the last correspondence I had with her was respecting the song books to be used next session. She had already laid her plans deep and strong for a successful year. She always looked ahead, and so death had no terror for her.

The heart is grieved that one so young and full of promise should be taken in the fragrant bloom of sweet youth. But Heaven could not be Heaven without some young people there and so we have sent Miss Mary on ahead to make it real and homelike when we get there in the years ahead. May our Heavenly Father comfort her parents and loved ones and her host of friends who sincerely loved her.

W. A. HARPER,

HOW HAVE MISSIONS IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL?*

Any school that will candidly and honestly seek and find the answer to the question, "Why?" will have but an easy and delightful task in answering "How?" The Methodist Episcopal Church for more than fifty years has used the plan of organizing the Sunday school into a missionary society having its own officers. This plan has worked well, proven successful, and resulted in the Sunday schools of that Church giving more to missions than the schools of any other denomination. This organization instead of being antagonistic to the regular progress of the Sunday school, has proven a natural and stimulating part of it.

I need not say that any school may be missionary in spirit, power, program and activity, whose superintendent is aflame with missionary zeal; whose teachers are acquainted with missionary conditions, and whose officers have caught the missionary vision. If you will lodge somewhere in any school a passionate desire to carry out the Great Commission, I promise you that somehow that school will feel the warmth of that passion and become enanored of that love. One soul, in any school, aflame with zeal for world-wide evangelization will set on fire other souls in that school, and the whole school will ultimately become missionary. I would be most happy and content indeed today, could I but reach for God one soul from every school here, and that soul would vow before Almighty God that with His help and leadership it would never rest until the school of which he or she is a member shall become missionary in motive, spirit and program. It was David Hogg, under whose instruction in the Sunday school that greatest of modern missionaries, David Livingstone, had sat and by whose teachings he was inspired to go out to reach a continent for Christ. Did you know that the great majority of our modern missionaries through whom God has wrought marvelous miracles in our day, received their impression, and made their decision for the foreign field by and through teachers and teaching in the Sunday school? That the great body of these missionaries decided while yet in their teens to become missionaries?

I recently read of one Sunday school class of fifteen in a Sunday school in Mississippi from which eight had gone to the foreign field as ambassadors for Christ. The woman teacher of that class was aflame with a passion for the lost souls in heathen lands. The late B. F. Jacobs said, that which is eternally true, "A Sunday school worker who is not a missionary worker is out of place." How I wish this message of the sainted Jacobs could be burned into the soul of every Sunday school teacher, officer and worker here today. But the missionary message must reach and arouse the missionary worker, before the real effectual work will be done. Our inquiry now is, How shall the missionary message be brought to the school constantly till the missionary workers have been found and aroused? The following are plans which, beyond that of turning the whole school into a missionary organization have been tried, and found practical and worth while. Each school, according to its taste and temper, must make its own choice, and move in the matter until it has found the proper plan and adopted the proper program.

I. A Missionary Superintendent, or Lecturer.

The Missionary Superintendent or Lecturer should be chosen yearly as is the general superintendent or any other officer of the school. Either a man or woman may be chosen and should be given each Sunday at least five minutes of the regular time of the school session. This time is best given just after the regular lesson study and the classes have reassembled for the closing exercises. (Where the Primaries and Juniors meet and have their opening and closing exercises separately, they should have all to themselves an officer who will give them a five minutes story or illustrated talk on missions). The school should furnish this lecturer, or superintendent, such charts, maps and bulletin boards as may be needed.

There is such a wealth of literature on missionary topics that this superintendent need not want for abundant information for talks, and programs, that will interest the school. On one Sunday the life story of some faithful and heroic missionary may be told. On another some epoch-making missionary incident may be related. On another the needs and conditions of some heathen land or religion may be recited, and so on.

Some schools have the habit of taking a missionary offering and yet not hearing anything about what the offering is for. This leaves the impression that "money" is the chief asset in any missionary plan or program. What is needed most of all is to disseminate knowledge about missionary needs, and create interest in missionary work. This cannot be done by simply taking an offering once a Sunday or a Sunday in a month for missions.

The missionary lecturer, or superintendent, can and will keep the school informed as to what the missionary offering is taken for and what good and great things that offering is achieving.

II. Have a Missionary Committee.

An intelligent, consecrated, wide-awake missionary committee of three (or five) can solve the missionary problem, and put life, power and progress into any school. Give such a committee thirty minutes once a month for a missionary program and see what happens:

1. Such a committee will put on a program of such vital interest and concern that the other three Sundays will be not less interested but more interested in the study of the Sunday school lesson.

2. Such a committee will gradually build up in the school a missionary library, collect for the classes missionary maps, charts and bulletin boards, as will help mightily in creating a missionary atmosphere in the school.

3. Such a committee will soon find some boy or girl in the school volunteering for missionary service at home or abroad, and will increase many fold the missionary offering of the school.

4. Such a committee will keep the school informed of missionary needs, and of what the missionary money is being spent for, and will give to the school reports from the missionary activities of the denomination, both in the home land and on the foreign field.

5. Such a committee will now and then, possibly once a year, ask the pastor for the eleven o'clock or evening service and will put on a "Pageant," or program that will make "Missionary Day in Our Church" a real feature of Sunday school and church life. If you have no missionary superintendent or lecturer, who will talk five minutes each Sunday on missions, then let the school superintendent get behind a committee of three loyal and devoted persons in the school who will undertake to put on programs and arouse missionary enthusiasm.

III. Form the teachers into a Mission Study group.

After all the teacher is the real key to the situation. If the teacher knows about missions, has caught the missionary vision, has a passion for world-wide evangelization, the class taught will soon be carrying out, in one way or in another, the great commission. The teacher who knows about missions and really cares for the souls of the lost in heathen lands will have a wealth of illustration and a vocabulary of expression for every lesson taught that the non-missionary teacher knows nothing of.

Bear in mind that the future missionaries are now in the Sunday school classes and it is largely to the teacher in the Sunday school we are to look for that consecration, instruction and information that will bring home to the heart of the young the compelling, moving, deciding missionary message. Of course, whether or not any of the pupils in the class go to the home or foreign field can be safely left to the individual's call of God. The teacher's part is to see to it that none shall fail to recognize the Christian's obligations to world-wide evangelization, and that those who do not engage in it in the capacity of missionaries have as great an obligation as those who do. The Sunday school teacher whose aim is less than this is, as the lamented B. F. Jacobs said, "out of place."

It was the injunction of Von Humboldt, the noted German statesman that "If you wish to introduce any ideas into a nation's life, you must put them in the schools." And we of America know that when the harmful use of alcoholic beverages was introduced as study into our public schools, then the saloon was doomed. "Just as truly," declares Geo. H. Trull, "whatever ideas are to grip the church must be taught in the Sunday school." To reach the Sunday school for missions means to touch the church more deeply than through any other agency.

If then the teachers study and learn of missionary needs, obligations and opportunities, they will carry their message home to the very heart of the church, namely the youth in the Sunday schools.

"The day is coming," declares Charles Gallaudet Trumbell, "when the Sunday school that has not sent some of its members to a home or foreign mission field, while at the same time numbering some others in its membership as volunteers pledged to go, will be ashamed and self-condemned." To keep our Sunday schools from being ashamed and self-condemned, to get them to take a new lease on life, and inject new energy into their activity I am pleading with one and all of them to introduce by some method, if not by the ones here suggested, the study and program of missions into their schools. Let me close this plea with these appalling, these awful facts: One thousand million people in the world are still ignorant of Jesus Christ. Two infants out of every three born into the human family look up into the faces of mothers who can tell them no word about the world's Savior and Redeemer. The reason why so many are not Christians is not because they have wilfully rejected the gospel; for the most part they have never had a chance to accept it. Those who are in the Sunday schools of the present are the world's and heavens hope and dependence of carrying words of life to those who have never heard, but who wait and wait and wait till these are trained and are ready to carry to them the message. "Missionary education is the key," declares Trull, "that will dispel ignorance, remove prejudice, overcome indifference, arouse interest, promote investigation, stimulate prayer, encourage benevolence and provide missionaries." And this education is to be had in the Sunday school or it will not be had at all.

Returning to your homes and your schools, my plea to you, and my prayer to Almighty God is, that you will by God's help work out some way of introducing missionary instruction into your Sunday school. I make this plea for the good and growth of your school, for the sake of the benighted millions who know not God and in the name of Him who still flings His command and His undying challenge from Galilee's mount, "Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel to every creature and if you will do this I will be with you all the way and unto the very end."

Have a missionary library in your school, have missionary maps and charts and pictures there, have missionary teaching, instruction and study there, for as the Sunday school worker that is not a missionary worker is out of place, so the Sunday school that is not a missionary school is disobedient to our Lord's command and has no right to claim the name, "Christian Sunday School."

PRAYER FOR THE WEEK.

We thank Thee our dear Father, for the light and leading of faith. How dark and sad our world would be if Thou hadst not given to us visions born of Thy Spirit. We are deeply grateful that the inward eye can see, above the storm, the shining of the sun, and, under the snow, the blossoming of the flowers. Help us, O God, to develop more and more the power that will enable us to get beneath the transient to the permanent, finding, underneath all, the Eternal Love and Heart. May we also open our eyes to the large side of life, and so become better disciples of Him who endeavored to bring Thy kingdom on earth. Amen.—Samuel Gilbert Ayers in Sunlit Days.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

THRESHING TIME.

The week beginning July 12, was a very busy one at the Orphanage. On July 12, we had our wheat threshing and it was one busy day for the Orphanage boys. Help is difficult to get and threshing wheat in hot weather is hard work. No easy places to find. I asked our little boys to be faithful in their work that day and I am very frank to say I never saw a more faithful crowd of workers anywhere than they were. We worked till we got tired, and then kept working until we got rested. We threshed 238 bushels of oats, 13 bushels rye, 227 bushels of wheat and then helped a neighbor thresh after sundown. During all that day not a single little boy "Niggled" on his job and it was very hot weather too.

We are proud of our boys and they never acquitted themselves better and were never more faithful than they were on that day.

In a few more days, if nothing happens, we will have broken and put in soja beans and silage corn since we cut wheat, more than fifty acres of ground. So you will readily understand that our boys can farm some.

It would not do to praise the boys and leave the girls out for their share. They are faithful, too, in their work. They gave us a splendid dinner for the wheat threshing and had an old time chicken pie like our grandmother used to make and it was fine. They can go in the kitchen and cook as good as anybody and make biscuits fit for a king, and then they can go in the music room and sing like mocking birds. We are proud of our girls.

We had many visitors while the Sunday School Convention was in session here and we are glad so many came over to visit the Orphanage. We find the more we can get people to visit us the more interested they become in the work and the more interested they are the easier it is to accomplish things.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS.

Dear Uncle Charley:—I am enclosing our dues for June and July. I hope your big family is all well. We are real busy now gathering berries, canning fruit, etc. Our revival meeting begins the fourth Sunday in this month. Our pastor, Rev. J. E. Franks, asked us to pray for a glorious revival. Will you please join us. With best wishes for you and the little ones.—Harriet and L. C., Jr., Mann.

I trust that you will have a splendid revival and that much good will be done.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley:—I have not written you this month, so will write today. We are having a great deal of warm weather now. I wish you would visit our church. I go to Oakland church. It is in the country. We have one hundred and twenty on roll at Sunday school. Rev. I. W. Johnson is our pastor. I like him fine. I am sending ten cents for July. Love to all the cousins.—Dorothy Moore.

I have been wanting to visit your church for a long time and hope to have that pleasure some time. I am well acquainted with Rev. I. W. Johnson and know you love him. There are none better than he.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley:—We are two twins, ten years old, who want to join the band of cousins. We want the orphans to visit us again this summer, as we enjoyed their singing so much last summer. You will find enclosed twenty cents, a dime for each of us. Best wishes to all.—Dorris and Morris Ayscue.

We enjoyed our visit to your church last year and hope to go back sometime and sing for you.—"Uncle Charley."

MY DAY'S WORK.

It is mine; therefore, I do more than merely accept it—I claim it. Humble or high, it belongs to me. I need it as truly as it needs me. It is my day's work.

It is only one day's work; hence I can do it. Anybody can do one day's work at a time. And God never asks me to do tomorrow's work today, nor yesterday's—only today's. That I can do.

It is work and not play, but what reason is that for not putting song into it—and smiles?

Hard, it is worthy of me—monotonous. I will keep setting it in a new light; sacred, I must do it to God.

My best effort is quite good enough for my day's work; let me do my best, and not worry.

God is on the job with me.—George Clark Peck.

LITTLE FOLKS' LAND.

A wonderful land is Little Folks' Land,
And full of all sorts of fun;
There are books and dolls and sleds and toys,
There are crowds of little girls and boys;
And romping and games and mirth and noise,
Till long after set of sun.

The people that live in Little Folks' Land
Are busy the whole day through;
There are dolls to dress and tops to spin,
And houses to build and games to win,
And trains to run with whistles and din,
And a world of things to do.

The queen that reigns over Little Folks' Land
Is mother, so sweet and wise;
She kisses the bumps to make them well,
She knows the choicest stories to tell,
And makes the land where little folks dwell
The happiest 'neath the skies.

A MOTHER-MADE MAN.

Dr. Lorimer tells this story of one of our most distinguished men, who was introduced at a great public meeting as a "self-made man." Instead of appearing gratified at the tribute, it seemed to throw him for a few moments into a "brown study." Afterward they asked him the reasons for the way in which he received the announcement.

"Well," said the great man, "it set me to thinking that I am not really a self-made man."

"Why," they replied, "did you not begin to work in a store when you were ten or twelve?"

"Yes," said he, "but it was because my mother thought I ought to."

"But then," they urged again, "your integrity was your own."

"Well, I don't know about that. One day a barrel of apples had come to me to sell out by the peck, and, after the manner of some storekeepers, I put the specked ones at the bottom and the best ones at the top. My mother called me and asked me what I was doing. I told her, and she said: 'Tom, if you do that you will be a cheat.' I think my mother had something to do with my integrity; and, on the whole, I doubt whether I am a self-made man. I think my mother had something to do with making me anything I am of any character or usefulness."—Sunday School Visitor.

UNCLE PHIL'S STORY.

"Tell us a story, Uncle Phil," said Rob and Archie, running to him.

"What about?" asked Uncle Phil as Rob climbed on his right knee and Archie on his left.

"O, about something that happened to you," said Rob. "Something when you were a little boy," added Archie.

"Once, when I was a little boy," said Uncle Phil, "I asked my mother to let Roy and me go and play by the river. My mother said yes, so we went and had a good deal of sport. After a while I took a shingle for a boat and sailed it along the bank. At last it began to get into deep water, where I couldn't reach it with a stick. Then I told Roy to go and bring it to me. He almost always did as I told him, but this time he did not. I began scolding him, and he ran toward home. Then I was very angry. I picked up a stone and threw it at him as hard as I could."

"Oh, Uncle Phil!" said Archie.

"Just then Roy turned his head, and it hit him over the eyes."

"Oh, Uncle Phil!" cried Rob.

"Yes, it made him stagger. He gave a little cry and lay on the ground. I did not go to him, but waded into the water for my boat. But it was deeper than I thought. Before I knew it I was in a strong current. I screamed as it carried me down stream, but no man was near to help me. But as I went down under the deep water something took hold of me and dragged me toward the shore. And when I was safe on the bank, I saw it was Roy that had saved my life."

"Good fellow! Was he your cousin?" asked Rob.

"No," replied Uncle Phil.

"What did you say to him?" asked Archie.

"I put my arms around the dear fellow's neck and begged him to forgive me."

"What did he say?"

"He said: 'Bow, wow, wow!'"

"Why, who was Roy, anyway?" asked Archie, in great astonishment.

"He was my dog," said Uncle Phil, "the best dog I ever saw. I have never been unkind to a dog or any other animal since, and I hope you never will be."—Selected.

ARROW HEADS.

"Training for service and then—SERVICE."

"Opinions are ideas that men hold. Convictions are ideas that hold men."

"When our bullets and bayonets have done their fullest part, there will still be a call for leadership in schools and churches and parliaments of the world. In the world conflict of ideas, the college classrooms are our strategic heights."

"The college man comes to know the best that the world has thought and said and soon as generation after generation kneels and fights and fades; and seizes upon the good, the true, the beautiful and holds to it with the tenacity of faith and casts all else into oblivion."

NOTES

Revival services will begin at Union (Alamance) next Sunday with Rev. W. L. Wells assisting the pastor.

Have you spoken to that young person about attending college? Do so today, and remember Elon in the interview.

Our call two weeks ago for renewals is meeting with a hearty response, and we appreciate it. Note that your label has been changed.

Many write us after this fashion: "Pardon my oversight in not renewing sooner." In each case the "pardon" is granted. But THE SUN needs every dollar that is due it, and if friends desire to show their appreciation of THE SUN, now is a good time to do so by remitting, if they are due to do so.

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina Conference was in session at Elon College last week. We were privileged to attend one day. The spirit was fine, the attendance about as usual, and the outlook hopeful. We had hoped for a complete write-up for this issue from the secretary or the Chairman of the Press Committee, but have not been so favored as we furnish the final copy for this issue. We will endeavor to have it for the next issue.

THE SUN is not the only Church paper that does not meet expenses. The Biblical Recorder, Raleigh, N. C., with a circulation probably three times the size of THE SUN, has sustained a deficit of $329.36 per month during the last six months. The Recorder is sixteen pages in size—the same as THE SUN. The subscription price of The Recorder has been $2 the year for some time, but on August 1 goes to $2.50 the year with the hope of meeting some of the deficit without having to charge this deficit to some other department. However, it should be stated that this deficit has been met by the job department of The Recorder's printing plant. This means that The Recorder has made $1,976.15 during the past six months on its job department that it could spare to aid the paper. This sounds like good business to us, and yet our people are "hands off" when it comes to talking about THE SUN owning its own plant. They seem to accept the philosophy that if you once fail that no other success can ever come to you. Regardless of what you think of the past, our opinion is that THE SUN's greatest need is to own its own plant in a thriving city.

WHAT THINK YE OF CHRIST?

Jesus challenges the attention of the world by his many-sidedness. He meets the needs of all classes and conditions of men. As deep answereth unto deep, so does he respond to the movings of each soul of man.

Call the roll of the world's workers and ask, "What Think Ye of Christ?" Their answers amaze us by their revelation of this manysidedness of our Lord.

To the artist he is the One Altogether Lovely.

To the architect he is the Chief Corner Stone.

To the astronomer he is the Sun of Righteousness.

OBITUARIES

HATCH.

Bro. O. T. Hatch departed this life at his home in Liberty, N. C., July 7, 1920, in his 68th year.

Brother Hatch was twice married. His first wife was Miss Lou Griffin, and to them were born twelve children, seven of whom are living. His second wife was Miss Eugenia Monroe. To them were born two children. His widow and nine children survive him. He had been poor in health for about twelve months prior to his death and when the end came he quietly fell asleep.

He was a member of the Liberty Christian church and a deacon thereof. He was deeply interested in the church and labored very earnestly and zealously for its success.

He would like to have lived, but he was not afraid to die. He expressed himself as ready to go whenever the Master called. He confessed Christ in early life and he found the service of Christ was a delight. To have known O. T. Hatch was to like him.

The funeral services were from his home church, conducted by the writer, assisted by Dr. D. A. Long and Rev. G. R. Underwood. The interment was in Fairview cemetery.

May the blessings of Christ our Lord abide with the bereaved family.

P. H. FLEMING.

RHINEHART.

Isaac Newton Rhinehart, a life-long resident of the Linville neighborhood died June 8, 1920, at the age of 73 years, five months and nineteen days. Surviving are his widow, three sons and three daughters. Funeral services were held at the Linville Christian church June 9, and the body laid to rest in the adjoining cemetery. Services by the writer.

A. W. ANDES.

McCLANAHAN.

Carson Edward McClanahan was born October 7, 1918, and died May 28, 1920, at the age of one year, seven months, and twenty-one days. He is survived by his parents and several brothers and sisters. The family reside in Powell's Fort, near Dry Run, and the funeral and burial service took place near there May 30.

A. W. ANDES.

PIERCE.

Lorraine, the twenty-three months' old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. I. F. Pierce, of Sunbury, N. C., passed away July 4, 1920.

She was ill only a week, but bore her suffering without a murmur, and never at any time refused to take her medicine. Her little life was full of sunshine and she was the light of happiness in her home. Her life on earth was short, but she was bidden on earth to bloom in Heaven. Sad leaves to mourn her death a father, mother, three brothers and many relatives.

The funeral was conducted by the writer from the home and the interment made in the family burying ground.

May God comfort the bereaved family in these dark hours of grief.

W. B. FULLER.

GARRISON.

Anna Elizabeth Garrison, wife of William Garrison, departed this life near Long's Chapel church, July 9, 1920, aged thirty-five years, nine months and fifteen days. She had been in declining health for some time and her death was not altogether unexpected. She was a member of Haw River Christian church and had been since early in life. She leaves her husband, three brothers and two sisters in sorrow, because of her death. Funeral services and interment at Long's Chapel conducted by the writer. May God comfort the bereaved.

THE HIGH COST OF RAILROADING.

"The public knows," says the Railway Age, "that the prices of almost all the things it buys have advanced greatly within recent years. It apparently does not realize that the prices of most of the things that enter into the cost of living of the railways have increased much more in proportion than the prices of commodities in general, but this is a fact, and it is the principal reason why such large advances in rates are necessary. The public knows pretty well how much the railroad payroll has been increased. Here are a few illustrations of typical increases in the prices of things that railways have to buy:

"A locomotive which in 1914 cost $27,876 will now cost $75,750, an increase of 171 per cent. In 1914 a railway had to pay only about 5 per cent interest on the money it invested in a locomotive, while now it must pay about 7½ per cent. Therefore, its interest charges on a locomotive bought six years ago were $1,394 a year, while on a locomotive bought now they will be about $5,681 a year, an increase in fixed charges of 310 per cent.

"An average box car bought in 1914 cost about $1,000, while now it would cost about $3,000, an increase of 200 per cent. The interest on the investment in the car in 1914 would have been about $50 a year, while now it would be about $225 a year, an increase of 350 per cent.

"The foregoing statistics illustrate the advances which have occurred in the prices of equipment and in the interest that must be paid on the investment in it. The increases in the cost of constructing track and bridges have not been so great but they have been very large:

"In 1915 a 90 foot through girder bridge could be bought and installed—not including masonry—for $6,427. It would now cost $15,117, an increase of 135 per cent."

I Thessalonians 5:5-11.

AN we think of a more beautiful figure than this—“Children of Light?” ¶ As I write these words I look out upon a building, every window of which is ablaze with light, every room the home of attractive brightness. And my life is to be like that! ¶ And I look again and I see a lighthouse sending out its strong, pure, friendly beams to guide the mariner as he seeks his “desired haven.” And my life is to be like that! ¶ And I look once more, and I see a common road lamp, sending its useful light upon the busy street, helping the wayfarer as he goes from place to place.
And my life is to be like that!

And if my soul is all lit up in friendly radiance for others, the light will be my own defence. Light always scares away the vermin. ¶ Lift up a stone in the meadow, let in the light, and see how a hundred secret things will scurry away. ¶ And light in the soul scares away “the unfruitful works of darkness;” they cannot dwell with the light. ¶ Light repels the evil one; it acts upon him like burning flame. ¶ Yes, we are well protected when we are clothed in “the armour of light.”

But how can we become “children of light,” holy homes of protective and saving radiance? ¶ Happily, it is not our lot to provide the light, it is ours to provide the lamp. If we offer the lamp the Lord will give the flame.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

"God does not hold us responsible for results, but he does hold us responsible for sowing the seed. Does the butcher or baker you deal with know you have salvation? Has the boy who brings your newspaper to your door ever heard about a Christ who saves from sin? Has your dressmaker ever heard your testimony, and does she believe you have something that keeps you sweet?"

A TEACHER'S SACRIFICE.

We find this on the editorial page of the Youth's Companion: "The schools of America were founded and maintained by sacrifice; only so can they be preserved. The teacher must be so convinced of the value and dignity of his service that he will not lightly abandon it for some other occupation that offers some ease of excitement or money."

We consider The Youth's Companion's position clear, but the philosophy of it, we are constrained to believe, is becoming thread-bare. The Companion must think so also, from these quotations which we find further along in the same article: ". . . the public must stop being niggardly. It must tax itself more heavily for schools than it has been in the habit of doing; and it must pay salaries that do not degrade the teacher in the eye of the community."

So long as those who are entrusted to train our country's youth are haunted with poverty, they will never have that freedom of mind to give them their best opportunity for preparation. It will be a good day in our country when the parents will be so interested in their children and so interested about those who teach their children as to make them inquire concerning the living conditions of those who teach. Who would want a physician to study and diagnose and treat the body when the physical life is at stake, when that physician's mind is haunted on how to meet his grocery bills, his house rent, or some incidental expense? Then, shall we suffer the mental abilities of our youth to be tampered with by those who are forced to seek the wolves from their own door?

Sacrifice alone is not all the making of a great teacher. Sacrifice is not without its place, but just as other things, it has its limitations and also should have its recompense.

WANTING A HARVEST FROM SEED NOT SOWN.

The ills and ails of our country are waiting to be healed. Scientists, philosophers and prophets are offering their suggestions. Out of the multitude of counsel there will no doubt come great things and great undertakings to swing the world back to its equilibrium, for we believe that most of us have agreed that its equilibrium is lost.

A nation that passes through a war has its nerves tried and nothing but quick results will satisfy the average person for sometime. The ideals of a nation are not formed in a day. World conditions are not brought about over night and they cannot be changed with the passing of a month. Reforms work slowly and make progress in proportion to the thought advancement of civilization. There are certain great ideals toward which reformers are endeavoring to bring our country. Some of these would-be-reformers are too anxious to see their principles expressed through humanity's ways. They must not forget that a nation's ideals are built upon a nation's education.

We have not sown the seed in our public schools, or in many of our great institutions of learning, that is to bring the harvest of ideals toward which some of us are striving. We must begin these reforms with the youth of our country. We cannot reap a harvest from seed that we have not sown.

"The man who creates a heaven in his own home never finds it hard to believe in a heaven beyond the stars."

A MASTER MIND IN THE PEANUT INDUSTRY.

THE SUN's devoted friend, Mr. John King, President and Manager of the John King Peanut Co., Suffolk, Va., (who, by the way, is such a splendid preacher-layman that the Eastern Virginia Conference should draft him) recently expressed himself in an article on "What Is the Matter With Peanuts?" which was printed in several papers. Brother King (we came very near saying Parson King) tells his friends why the great slump in the peanut industry in this country. His position, which he very ably substantiates, is that foreign peanuts are flooding this country and the foreign grower is now able to compete with our people. He cites his readers to the fact that China and Japan have developed so well along the line of growing peanuts that we are no longer able to compete with them. Here is a quotation from a summary of his letter: "I am not a politician, neither am I seeking office. I am a farmer, raising peanuts, cotton, corn and tobacco, hogs and hominy, to the extent of five farms, and am in a position to know just where the shoe pinches. I am also supposed to have been a peanut cleaner but China and Japan have put me out of this business."

Farmer King's prediction is that unless a tariff sufficient to keep foreign peanuts from being imported is passed, that the farmers in the very near future will have to stop planting this crop and depend altogether on other countries for the "goober."

A CORRECTION.

Under date of July 7, Rev. Victor Lightbourne, writing from Richland, Ga., says: "Kindly correct a few errors that occurred in the report of my meeting at La-Grange. The tent, when filled to its capacity, seated 1,500 persons. My offering amounted to $423.00, including a gift of $42.00, which was handed to me after the meeting had closed. The entire expense of the meeting, not including my offering, was $370.00. At the close of the meeting a circle of young ladies presented Mr. Davis with a handsome silk cushion and a purse of $37.00."

We are glad to make the above corrections. The report was printed in THE SUN as received, if we correctly read the handwriting.

"A good prayer-meeting always begins before the bell rings."

ANOTHER CHURCH PAPER IN NEED.

The Methodist Protestant, Baltimore, Md., the pioneer paper of the Methodist Protestant denomination, finds itself in need of more funds and announces an increase in its price. This publication states, in making the announcement, that the increased price will not meet the cost, by possibly nearly half.

The following, taken from the editorial page of our worthy exchange, presents a thought worth pondering: "We have never been able to see why every other vital thing in the Church must be included in the budget and the Church press omitted. There is nothing more vital than our papers, but they had no recognition in the million dollar drive, notwithstanding the fact that it could never have been put over without the hearty co-operation of the papers. It seems to us it is about time, when we are so generous with everything else, that we awaken to a generous support of The Methodist Protestant, and to put the paper beyond the peradventure of a doubt in these unstable times."

The editor of that paper presents a thought that our own Church must consider. How could our College succeed with no income save tuition fees and a possible chance of profit on its boarding department? (If memory serves us correctly, the Presbyterian Colleges in the United States receive only 31 per cent of their income direct from students). How could our Christian Orphanage make its own way from its farm alone? Our College and our Orphanage could not exist without large gifts, endowments, and other incomes not earned directly. The Orphanage's appeal is before our people every week in the year and no one objects; in fact, we welcome it. This appeal goes on THE SUN's pages, and thus THE SUN is worth to the Orphanage alone thousands of dollars every year.

From the standpoint of THE SUN's own financial showing, it does not pay. Under present conditions and prices, it cannot pay. It is not in a class to itself—we know of no Church paper that is paying. But THE SUN is the mouthpiece for every department of the church. Without it we figure that the treasuries would show a shortage of fifty thousand dollars or more, in the totals for a year.

A Church paper does pay, and pays in a very handsome way. It is high time that we stop deploring the idea that our Church papers are "losing money," and begin to back them up as one of the biggest enterprises of the Church. There is not a department of the Church that could not well afford to pay the annual cost of THE SUN for what it means to that particular work.

Denominations have stopped decreasing their papers in size, and suspending publication, on account of the cost. They have found that it would be better to enlarge. Thanks to good judgment, most of the papers that have suspended publication during the past two years, have been secular, and not religious.

If a denomination can make its paper meet its bills by some side line, such as a job printing plant, the better, but if it is not so progressive, then put the money up from some source and give its publications their best chance.

A CATHOLIC DAILY.

The first daily church paper to make its appearance is the American Tribune, Dubuque, Iowa. Its first object is to promote the interest of the Catholic church, but also carries secular news and has released wire service.

In this new venture the Catholics have put themselves ahead of their Protestant brethren. While the Protestant forces have been losing their heads over the Inter-church Movement, unionism, etc., the Catholics have been adding to their own holdings—and while the Protestants are lamenting over the outcome of some of their undertakings, the Catholics are rejoicing over the score in the field of Church Journalism. These are facts. They do not sound to us as we would have them, but since we must face them, our knowledge of them will not hurt.

Governor James M. Cox, nominee on the Democrat ticket for the presidency is a divorced man, while Senator Warren G. Harding, nominee by the Republicans, married a divorced woman.

Bryn Mawr College is to put in a department to train women to become supervisors in industrial plants.

AIMLESS PREACHING.

By S. Parkes Cadman.

Every sermon should be preached with a view to the salvation of souls. For what else is the free utterance of clear thinking about the Gospel intended? And why should the asset which is so highly prized in the legal profession be so consistently avoided in the clerical vocation? Thousands of pulpit discourses are delivered weekly without the slightest idea on the part of the preacher that there will be any shaking among the dry bones, and presently the preacher, hardened by custom, settles down in the Valley of Death. It is presumption that we should ask for souls for our hire? How long will Protestantism endure this deferred payment of the preacher? I have studied the legal pleas of superior courts, and found them, as a rule, elaborate masterpieces of argumentation, eloquence and appeal advanced by selected and competent practitioners. They did not learn to think cogently nor to speak with precision and power solely on their own account. On the contrary, they were eager for the causes they expounded and ransacked every precedent that bore upon their contentions, concentrating their gifts with the zeal which puts an edge on thought. Contrast these efforts, made to win a favorable verdict, with those of some contemporary preaching, in which neither the theme, nor the preparation, nor the delivery indicate any intention for immediate effects, and I think you will agree that if the modern pulpit is to repeat the triumphs of the past, it will have to master and present the core of the Gospel in such approved ways that in our advocacy it may flourish again and overcome all opposition by its regenerating life.

The evangelical theory of preaching is not exhaustive; it has some native deficiencies which have to be supplemented by the exegetical and didactic theories. But it is a serious mistake for preachers to commence as flaming heralds and end as pastors who feed a little flock. The work of the evangelist and that of the pastor are parts of one whole, not so different in fact as they are in theory. And many sermons which aim directly at the conversion of souls strengthen the faith and earnestness of religious people. Some ministers retain a semblance of their former ardor by dividing their hearers into the sheep and the goats. The former are supposed to appear at the morning service; the latter to come forth at night. It has been my experience that not all the sinners tarry until evening, and not all the saints are present in the forenoon. The majority of men and women trim their course by the lodestar of a single trait, and can be profoundly moved by elementary exhortations. Do not sacrifice their spiritual necessities to the demands of an intellectual minority. One pregnant truth of the sermon will often act as surely as the reagent which clears a tube of its cloudy chemicals. And so long as your ministry sustains organic relations toward the unfolding lives of sinner and saint, it should be varied in its methods but constant in its aims. Many a theologian versed in the liberalism of our time, which is to be valued for its contributions to knowledge, would nevertheless save his soul alone as a preacher by a fervid evangelism which kindled a minor Pentecost in his church. Do not judge evangelical preaching by its present de-based exhibitions. Revert to those lofty examples of former days, afforded by men of moral elevation and mental culture, whose austere but rich genius in the pulpit wrecked the dominion of sin, rebuilt the kingdom of God, impelled the progress of the faith in all lands, and dictated the theology and the spiritual habits of entire continents. Preaching which adds to the church daily such as shall be saved is the pre-eminent need of the age.—The Christian Work.

NO SHORT-CUT TO SUCCESS.

In the common affairs of secular life, it is those who choose the upward path that ultimately have the best of it. The get-rich-quick and get-rich-easy schemes of the market place fail in the long run. There is no "Northwest Passage" to success. Knowledge is for those who burn the midnight oil and fame for such as keep their eyes aloft.

"The heights by great men won and kept,
Were not achieved by sudden flight;
But they, while their companions slept,
Were toiling upward in the night."

It is written in "The Pilgrim's Progress" that Christian as he journeyed came to a place where three roads met. One was called Danger, and it led into a great wood; another was called Destruction, leading into a wide field, where travelers stumbled and fell and rose no more; while the third was a narrow way called Difficulty, which "lay right up the hill." Christian, after drinking from a hidden spring, chose the narrow way, clambering on his hands and knees, but saying as he went:

"This hill though high I covet to ascend:
The difficulty will not me offend;
For I perceive the way to life lies here."

Difficulty is a challenge to mankind. "He who battles," says Carlyle, "will be found stronger and more expert than he who stays at home from battle, concealed among the provision wagons or abiding by the stuff." The rougher the path, the stronger the appeal to faith; since every spell of fainting stimulates our sense of dependence on God.—Rev. David James Burrell, D. D., in the Presbyterian.

THE FRIENDSHIP OF CHRIST.

On a fine summer evening Bishop William F. McDowell spoke to a large audience in a Middle Western university town on the subject: "Religion as Friendship." The whole utterance was simple and direct, expressed in the curiously vital English of which the speaker is the master, and as the words painted their own pictures in the minds of the hearers there came to all a new sense of what it meant when Jesus said to His disciples: "No longer do I call you servants—but I have called you friends." The whole wonder of the Master's words became once more real, and the sudden glad exhilaration of the disciples became real, too.

There is something about the relation of the Master to the men who follow Him which can only be expressed by that word "friend." The flash of the understanding eye, the grip of the hand of comradeship, the subtle penetration of the voice whose very tones are freighted with a meaning which friendship interprets, the sense of another life moving near to ours.—N. Y. Advocate.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

CHILDREN'S DAY AT NEW ELAM.

Rev. B. J. Howard invited me to the Children's Day exercises held at New Elam, July 18. I accepted the invitation and went with him on Saturday. We found a good congregation gathered on Saturday for preaching and the quarterly conference of the church.

Sunday was a big day for the church. The children did their part well, the congregation was large, the dinner on the grounds abundant, and everybody seemed happy.

The singing was especially fine. At the close of the morning service I presented the claims of our Orphanage, and the offering was $31.50.

I was pastor of this church more than thirty years ago. It was a real pleasure to meet again some who were regular attendants when I was pastor. Many, however, have passed away, and I had to be introduced to their children and grand-children.

Brother Howard is held in high esteem by his church. I enjoyed the day. Just before leaving they presented me with a purse, which was highly appreciated.

WHAT IS THE PURPOSE OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL?

What was your Sunday school organized for? Why do you go to it from Sunday to Sunday? Is it that you may study or teach the Bible?

Is it that you may keep yourself and the children out of mischief an hour or so on the Sabbath? What is the end, what the purpose of your Sunday school? Charles G. Trumbull, editor of The Sunday-School Times has answered this question with such force and directness that I wish all SUN readers may have his answer:

"The day is coming when the Sunday school that has not sent some of its members to a home or foreign mission field, while at the same time numbering still others in its membership as volunteers pledged to go, will be ashamed and self-condemned. The reason why Sunday schools, generally, have not yet reached this high but practicable standard is because most Sunday school workers do not know what the Sunday school is, and what is the real end of its effort. For example, the Sunday school is often spoken of as the church of tomorrow, or the child of the church, or the children's church, or as a branch department of the church. None of these definitions tell the whole truth. All of them are misleading.

Again, the purpose of the Sunday school is commonly spoken of as Bible study, and the great end of the Sunday school is usually said to be soul-winning.

Both of these statements are not only inadequate, but positively harmful in the narrowing, stultifying limitations that they impose. The Sunday school is not the church of tomorrow, nor a branch of the church of today; it is the church engaged in the most important work that God commits to men. As the church teaching, the Sunday school is the church at work in carrying out the the Great Commission: Making disciples, or learners, of all men.

Bible study is, of course, only a means to the end that the Sunday school has in view. And that end is not soul-winning; the church would be a body of babes, untrained and useless, if it were. Soul-winning is vital; the Sunday school that won no souls would be a failure; but soul-winning is the first step, not the last, in Sunday school effort. Soul-winning is the beginning of the actual results that every true Sunday school worker longs to see: God forbid that it should be the end. Yet many a teacher really seems to think that he has done about all he need do for a given class if he has brought the members of that class to an open confession of their Savior! What, then is the end of Sunday school work? Character-training for service in the extension of the Kingdom. Not a selfish salvation, a saving merely of our own self-centered souls; but a salvation for one great purpose only: power to win others to Christ, and to train them up in Christ. This is the end, the purpose, that should be held up before every pupil, young and old, saved and unsaved, in every Sunday school in the world. You are powerless and unprofitable and lost without Christ; you need Christ, not merely that you may be saved, but that you may make your life count for the eternal enrichment of all lives that you touch.

Where, then, does the work of missions come into the Sunday school as this new vision reveals it? Rather, where can the work of missions be left out in such a Sunday school? The true understanding of the church at work teaching makes it plain that the implanting of the missionary spirit so as to give it control of the life of every pupil may fairly be said to be the chief and sole purpose of the Sunday school. Therefore, if a Sunday school fails here, it fails not only as a powerful ally of the great missionary boards, but it fails as a Sunday school. And if the Sunday school is the Church engaged in the greatest and most important work that God permits us to do, and the end of Sunday school is character-training for service in the extension of the Kingdom, then if the Sunday school fails in the proper teaching of missions, the Church of Jesus Christ is failing at its greatest and only commissioned work. That is a strong statement, but can we escape its truth?

RICHMOND LETTER.

Since beginning my work here, March the first, I have had many interruptions that have taken me away from the work, and I have had only a few weeks to devote entirely to the field. These have been spent largely in investigating conditions and making a survey of our strength and resources in the city. The survey reveals the fact that we have lost enough members in Richmond, in the last twenty-five years, to have established a good church; however, not all of them have been lost. The writer has been able to get the names of nearly two hundred, who in some way are interested in the Christian Church. Some of these have joined other churches and will not come back to us, but sixty-five of the number have been placed on our roll and many of the others will follow their example. We have bought three adjoining lots, in a growing section of the city, and the first payment on two of them has been made and we shall be ready for the third thirty days hence.

The pastors and church clerks, throughout the Southern Christian Convention, have been very kind in sending us the names and addresses of members living in the city. We shall appreciate information from any one that will enable us to locate members here.

We have an enthusiastic, active and loyal band of workers with whom it is a pleasure to labor. We have a good Sunday school with an enrollment of fifty-one. There are thirty members in our Christian Endeavor Society, and about that number in the Ladies' Aid Society. The outlook is encouraging and we feel, that through the Lord's help, we shall eventually have a strong church in this city.

On June 25, the monthly meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society was held at the parsonage. The pastor and family were greatly and pleasantly surprised, when the members marched in like a company of soldiers, but instead of carrying guns, each was carrying a package that made the pastor's eyes brighten and his mouth water. The procession halted in the dining room, where the table was loaded down with the packages and in a few well chosen words, Professor P. J. Kernodle explained to us that we had been pounded. To say that we are glad and thankful does not express it. We are deeply grateful for this expression of good will on the part of our people.

FROM DR. D. A. LONG.

Protracted meeting commenced at Mt. Auburn, Warren County, N. C., July 11, and closed Thursday, July 15. As a result of the meeting, two young ladies united with the church. It was an inspiration to meet with the people about Mt. Auburn from day to day. The moral and religious influence of that refined community extends far and wide. They deserve and should have an industrious, consecrated young man for a suited pastor at an early date.

The First Christian church, Raleigh, N. C., has chosen Rev. J. V. Knight, of Greensboro, N. C., as pastor for next year, to begin November 1, 1920. I have been chosen to be supply pastor at this church from this time until November 1. I will continue to preach at Mt. Auburn every second Sunday at 11:00 o'clock a. m., and return to Raleigh in time to preach on Sunday evening, except on the second Sunday when I have communion service at Mt. Auburn.

I will be compelled to spend a part of next winter in Florida. Until then, my mail should be sent to 1609 Hillsboro St., Raleigh, N. C.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR AUGUST 1, 1920.

"David Brings the Ark to Jerusalem." II Sam. 6:1-19; Ps. 24:1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT: Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise.—Psalms 100:4.

We were told by the religious leaders of the world, that at the close of the great world war there would be a great spiritual revival. What are the present day signs? Is the Ark really coming back to Jerusalem?

Are the nations of the world thinking more of the religious or spiritual side of life than they are of material things? The trend of thought and energy seems to be materialistic which only lasts for a time, then perishes.

The Church Militant is praying for a great revival and sitting with hands folded, so to speak, waiting for it to come.

All Israel seems to have suffered, from neglect of spiritual worship, after the Philistines captured the Ark. David, with thirty thousand men, decided to bring back the Ark and by persistent efforts were successful.

In the present day an army of thirty thousand consecrated Christians could bring about a revival such that there would be great rejoicing. In order to bring about this needed revival there must be religion taught in the home. The family altar must be revived so as to train up a generation of Christian men and women for the great task.

Let the Church avail itself of its opportunity and by so doing help to usher in this great revival. And as the people rejoiced at the return of the Ark, so will the Church rejoice at the fruits of its labors, and even the Angels will rejoice.

After the return of the Ark, which symbolizes God, David's great desire was to erect a temple for the Ark of God, but all he did was to gather together the vast treasure out of which it was to be builded and his son erected the temple. There are new temples of worship all over the land, but it seems that the Ark has been taken by an enemy. What the Church must needs do is to first find the Ark and then bring it back to its Jerusalem and then there will be a great revival.

Questions to Look up, Or Think About.

Why is the Church attendance so small at the present time?

Who is responsible for the present condition of the Church?

How can the Protestant Church have a great revival?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR AUGUST 8, 1920.

"Problems of Recreation in Our Community," Rom. 14:7, 13-19.

The desire for play and amusement is one of the natural desires of life. Its fulfillment should not be suppressed or prohibited, but should be regulated and turned into proper channels. It is one of the essentials. The child needs it for his development and growth. As a rule, the child that never plays, will never do much of anything else. The adult needs recreation and amusement for a change. It is a mistake for the church to do, as has been done in some instances, that is, cut its members off from all forms of amusement and entertainment. "Laugh and grow fat" is as good a maxim for the church as for the world. But while these things are essential, we should learn to distinguish between the kinds. Many amusements and forms of recreation are harmful. The pool room and the dance hall never contributed anything toward the development of true manhood and womanhood.

Many schools are now introducing plays that develop the child, and this principle should be carried out in life, and all forms of amusement and recreation, in which we encourage, should aid in developing the best within us.

If the church is to be the strong spiritual force, it should be, it must not try to counteract the influence of outside recreations, but must go further and control them either by censorship or by ownership. Why should not the church furnish that which is essential for the normal development of the child and for the well-being of the adult, by providing its own forms of entertainment and amusement? It is better for the young people to meet under the auspices of some organization of the church and spend the evening in helpful games or entertainments than to have to seek their amusement in public places. The Christian Endeavor Society is the best adapted organization to take the lead in this movement.

The true Christian Endeavor and the child of God cannot afford to attend or engage in that which is questionable. We must not be stumbling blocks in the way of others. We should ask ourselves the question: "What would Christ do?"

Questions to Be Answered in the Meeting.

Why may it be a mistake to engage in something which we feel is no sin for us?

Why should the church control all forms of recreation?

Who is responsible for the class of entertainments that are presented in your community?

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The fifty-first annual session of the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention held a two-days' session in the Isle of Wight Courthouse Christian church, July 21-22. Rev. J. M. Roberts is pastor of the church. The convention in 1917 decided that churches entertaining the body should charge 25c for dinner. By the tickets sold it was revealed that more than two hundred took dinner each day. The dinner was as good and great as the crowd.

The convention was well attended and the interest was tense throughout, though not all of the schools were represented—the 33 schools that were represented sent $787.80, one-third of which is used for convention purposes, and the remainder divided equally between Home and Foreign Missions.

It was decided to increase the allotment to the schools to ten cent per enrolled member for convention, and the Mission per capita allotment remains as heretofore, ten cents. This makes the total asked from the schools 20c per member enrolled for the whole year, which is less than 2-5 of a cent per week. The increase in convention dues from five cents to ten cents per enrolled member was to create a fund to make it possible for the Board of Religious Education to employ an all-time field secretary for Sunday school work. This had been provided for by the Southern Convention upon the condition that the Sunday school conventions raise the money to carry out this provision. It will take a full year, of course, to get this plan in operation, as the money will not come in till the next annual sessions of the conventions.

Splendid addresses were delivered by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Col. J. E. West, Rev. S. K. Emurian and Miss Bessie Holt, in addition to the regular work, and spontaneous discussion of reports and new matter.

A recognition service of the Conference Life Recruits discovered twelve out of the fifty-nine present in the Convention; of the twelve present, five propose to enter the ministry, two Foreign Missions, two Home Missions—mountain work—and three undecided as to line of Christian work. At the close of this service, after a brief talk by Dr. Harper, Miss Bessie Holt delivered an inspiring address on "Enlisting Our Young People." After this Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett, of Porto Rico, made interesting talks and Mrs. Barrett sang a solo in splendid voice. Rev. S. K. Emurian, who is an Armenian and a Presbyterian pastor in Norfolk, sang the Lord's Prayer and the 23rd Psalm very effectively. Rev. D. P. Barrett and family are on furlough in the United States and many people will have an opportunity to hear first-hand talks on that island and its progress.

Taken altogether the Convention was one of the best, and the forward look was manifest in all the proceedings and exercises. Three things stood out boldly:

1. Better equipment and more intelligent conduct of the schools. 2. Deeper spiritual concern for the unschooled and unsaved. 3. More liberal contributions to the support of missions as well as the schools own needs.

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., was chosen president for the ensuing year, the Tidewater Sunday School Association, of Norfolk, extended an invitation to the convention for next year's session and the place of meeting will be the First Church of which Rev. J. F. Morgan is pastor.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL THE NURSERY OF THE KINGDOM.

(Reprinted from THE SUN for August 10, 1910, by Request.)

If no new thing is found under the sun, new forms from old material must be produced and applied to present needs and conditions. And what I have written on this subject may have been said before in substance if not in form, but from the necessity of the case it may be repeated again. Fully realizing that there is but little, if any, originality, it gives liberty to repeat on this occasion.

When Jesus rose from the dead and sat on the right hand of the Majesty on high, then was He most solemnly inaugurated, and proclaimed King of the universe especially of the new testament church, amidst adoring myriads of attending angels, and "the spirits of just men made perfect." The Kingdom of Christ is destined to fill the whole world. Its real subjects are only those who are of the truth; for none can enter but such as are born of the Spirit. So then, the training of subjects to live in this Kingdom is a great and responsible work. This Kingdom that has firm and permanent foundations never changes. It will stand forever, and there will be no change in its government.

Philosophical and chemical changes are being made every day, and they will be repeated as long as time lasts, forming new objects from the same old material which was made in the creation of the world. But new discoveries and inventions working through science have developed many new and useful things. This great world is full of material, and some in every department of human activity have labored skilfully to utilize the means which God has provided for the good of His creation. When God made the world, He did not make boats to float and run on the rivers and across the seas, nor bridges over rivers, nor railroads across continents, nor tunnels through mountains, nor subterranean ways, nor houses, nor a thousand other things, but made man and gave him the mental and physical ability to do those things. They were thought out in the beginning and reserved for a time for development. So then, we are thinking the thoughts of God after Him, and executing some of His plans, for He had thought them all over before the wonderful making of a man. The very same air and water, made in the creation, put in the archives of the ages, and kept in nature's great laboratories, are as good, refreshing and useful today as when first produced. For they are the two main elements which maintain and continue life.

The Sunday school as the primary work of the church, the nursery of the kingdom, is growing in interest, and that, combined with missionary work is the leading factor to evangelize and civilize the world. An interested one said recently, "Without the early training in the Sunday school my life would have run to waste; what I learned there and the love which I formed for the Bible caused me to shun many ways I desired to travel. Jesus was taken as my Guide and Friend and I followed Him in the bright and beautiful way." Each one must depend largely upon his own energy and industry for his success in the divine life. Jesus is the way and every one is invited to follow Him. He can use the means of grace to make himself an eminent Christian or he can embrace the ways of sin and death. Without early and careful training in the Word many would have been a failure and entirely lost.

No one is born with an education—the capacity to receive it has been given—the mind to improve provided, but the individual must cultivate, polish and beautify it mainly by his own efforts. God gives the people and the means for their education, man does the rest, and he may do great things in the kingdom for himself and others also if he will. To have the means with which to do and the ability to perform is certainly a great blessing. To train men for His service and help them to work out their own salvation is the noblest work of life. This is often effectually done by them who do not claim great literary attainments. Have known some earnest ones who have done excellent work in training children for the kingdom of Jesus. Not the most brilliant orator—not the most logical thinker—not the most beautiful speaker is always the most effective—but, he who glows with the love of God and lifts you higher and higher until you can see, by faith, through the gates into the city of God, and helps you climb the golden stairs that Jacob saw in his dream, is the most helpful teacher. A teacher who will have the power and influence like one in the following illustration is worthy of special notice. A girl who was brought into the Sunday school and became a Christian woman, in her last sickness said to her nurse, "When I meet Jesus I want Him to give me two crowns." When asked what she wanted with two crowns, she answered, "I want one to put on my own head and the other to place upon the head of the woman, my Sunday school teacher, who taught me the Bible." When children and old people too are well taught in the nursery of the Kingdom the first principles for right living will be learned. It means so much to begin right, to keep right and end right.

Character building should be the first consideration of every one. A good character is cultivable, and the study and practice of the Bible are the principle means of cultivation, for no one can practice its teachings without becoming better in every necessary qualification. Wealth, prestige and influence are desirable in an honest way, but character formed from the word of God is most vital and essential part of life.

No one can be perfectly and permanently happy without it. It matters not what the attainments are in any field of human progress, no life will be a permanent success without a good character. It will be a failure in the end and a failure forever.

Truth, honesty and purity are three important and essential principles in the formation of character, and without these no life is fit for existence on earth or in heaven. With them a character can be made to stand the use of time and of eternity. These three will adorn any character and make life sweeter and better. Honesty, now at this time, and in every time, is what counts in church and state. No church will stand together long without honesty, truth and purity among its members, and no government can live and prosper without them. They are triplets of honest birth which will never die.

The Sunday school is very appropriately called a nursery for the church and nation. A training place not only for the children but for all classes and conditions of people. For if it is properly considered and faithfully attended, and the lessons earnestly and prayerfully studied in the greatest text book the world has ever known, it will change the lives and form the character of the children of this nation. It is also pleasing to know that more adults and old people attend the schools than ever before. One reason is the continual increase of population, but the main one is the constant consecutive study of the Bible history as related by patriarchs and prophets, by Jesus himself and the apostles. They are getting more interested in it, they understand it better and it is a joy for them to learn the Word which teaches them the way to a beautiful life. Heights yet to ascend in the Christian life which have not yet been reached by many but the great Leader says to each one, I will not leave you comfortless, I will come to you. If you cannot climb as fast and as well as some ahead of you, never keep back, keep right on trying. Once a lady went to an artist and wanted him to show her how to make beautiful curves and lovely pictures like he did. He told her if she would practice eight hours a day for forty years she might be able to reach his standard. So we see it is work, practice, action that gives good results and trains a soul for heaven.

The religious world is looking for greater and better results for bringing souls into the kingdom of Jesus. To us duty clearly and correctly will depend upon how we look, and the color of the glasses through which the view is taken. Through discouragement some are looking while thus engaged cannot see very far away, nor long at a time. These may be called retarders, lookers through blue glasses when they and every object are colored with the "blues." Specks on the microscopic and telescopic lenses prevent them from looking like they ought to look and seeing like they ought to see. There are others looking, seeing and working in and through hope. These appear bright and attractive and the outlook in every direction seems inviting and very attractive to them. Nothing prevents them from climbing over the heights of time and space; telling and singing in loving, tactful words and inviting tones, the everlasting love of God. These see clearly through the bright way of hope, and work with life, zeal and ambition to bring willing subjects into the kingdom of our Lord. An inclination with weak ones is to gravitate toward the sensualist, while very many others are in the realms of pure thinking and living. A teacher therefore should be very careful, gentle and apt to teach, so that the different conditions of his class may be fully met.

The chief aim of every teacher and scholar is to be blessed in teaching and in learning the will of God concerning them. When we get the meaning of His word and better understand its divine purpose the way to duty, holiness and happiness is made plain, pleasant and admirable to every traveler, and he who walks the ways of sin no more is delighted with the journey heavenward. Habit will have much to do with the life of every body; habit, in any thing, gives power—it strengthens by repeated use, and must be had to accomplish any purpose. The power of the will influences to do right or wrong, and the actor is at liberty to exercise the will in any desirable way. The power to do evil will grow, but when its destructive work is done it leaves its victim in devastation and ruin. Then looking backward over the past with a sad exclamation, "I have destroyed myself."

The Sunday school teacher ought to impress his class with the importance of forming the habit of study: study to enter the treasury of the Lord and bring from its profound depth the joy of His salvation. For when they touch the fountain of life they can bathe their tired souls in its refreshing and everlasting flow. A sculptor has been noticed with chisel in one hand and mallet in the other carving an angel, and a painter has been seen with brush and pencil painting a most beautiful picture but neither of them surpassed a Sunday school teacher helping to form a beautiful, lovely Christian character.

When God breathed into man the breath of life, and he became a living soul, it was designed that that soul should form the principles of spiritual growth by using the means of grace and salvation which had been sufficiently provided. To teach children and others in the Sunday school the way to grow in grace and to come to the knowledge of the divine truth is a wonderful privilege and a delightfully pleasant study, the noblest and greatest work of men or angels. The Sunday school, the nursery of the church, is a suitable and most desirable place to begin this work. And it is our glad privilege to know that so many are engaged in it with increasing interest and ability. What a mighty host of men, women and children working in the kingdom of our Lord! It is inspiring to hear them sing and see them work as they move heavenward. No wonder then they have so many conventions to learn what they have done, and are doing, and to see what they can do to accomplish this great work. Toil on, toil on, you noble children of the King, and as you work, watch, sing and pray, expect the blessings of the Lord to flow into your lives.

Three important things are needed to give success, and these three are life, light and liberty. What a great thing is life with all its privileges and great opportunities! It is worth so much to live in this age and enjoy the blessings it offers. Do we understand what it is, and do we realize its worth? What a bright, glad thing is light! the light of nature and revelation causes us to see and understand more of Him who made and controls them. What a great blessing to be free from the bondage of sin! "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free," and let us help all in our Sunday schools, who are in bondage, to be set at liberty. It is your mission to help get them out of the prison of sin, and direct them to find liberty in Christ by coming into His kingdom; for without that liberty they cannot soar above the storm cloud of sin, nor dwell in the realms of purity.

The work is great, the field is inviting and success will bless the faithful. Standing in the dim, cold, gray twilight of a December evening, a very old and faithful Sunday school worker is seen coming down the way to the end of a long and eventful journey with but little means, and few friends, for they have nearly all passed over the great divide. He suddenly stops, puts down his staff and lies down upon the ledge of a rock to die. With a bent form and very weak, his breath short and heavy, but his mind clear and strong, and while breathing out his life he slowly utters with trembling lips, "Is there rest and home in heaven for me?" Then a lovely angel hovers over the dying pilgrim, whispering softly, Yes, there is a home in heaven for you, and I have come to comfort you and conduct you through the gates into the beautiful city.

MISSIONARY

THE DAYS OF MIRACLES.

Miracles as marvelous as those of Bible times and record are taking place constantly on the mission fields. Here is one of many that I read of recently:

When Adoniram Judson went to Burma in 1813 the Kauns were filthy savages, kept in abject serfdom by the Burmese. Like timid rabbits they scuttled to their jungle huts by obscure paths along steep declivities or by the dry beds of mountain streams. They had been so long oppressed that they had become timid, irresolute, servile, filthy, penurious. They numbered about one tenth of the population. They spoke a primitive language which had never been reduced to writing. Now our blessed Christ through the human instrumentality of a few faithful missionaries has taken these least of all, and made of them a new nation. Today he who witnesses their business ventures, sees their splendid schools, attends services in their beautiful churches, hears their wonderful singing, cannot believe they are the grand-children of skulking savages of whom as late as 1851, the Burmese governor said that he would cause to be shot instantly the first Kaun who presumed to learn to read. They now build and support their own schools and churches, they support 600 village schools without any outside help, and besides paying a hundred thousand dollars a year to educate their children in academies and high schools, they now carry on foreign mission work and have mission schools throughout the outlying districts. No wonder the prophet said: "And His name shall be wonderful."

THE "DUNNING STICK."

By Bertha Gerneaux Woods.

"I'm always glad to lend my books, but I do think the girls ought to return them promptly," sighed Bess. "Now Agnes Barlow has had my Blue Fairy Book for six months, and I don't like to go and ask her to return it—she's so sensitive, but I know she must have finished with it."

"Throw a dunning stick into her wigwam," suggested Cousin Rob, playfully.

"A dunning stick! 'Into her wigwam.' What do you mean, Cousin Rob?"

Cousin Rob laughed. "That's the way a certain tribe of Indians do—I was looking at one of their dunning sticks just the other day down at the Old National Museum."

"Then do tell me about it," Bess begged, laughing and forgetful of her grievance over the unreturned book. "What was it like, and what Indian did it belong to?"

"One question at a time, please," said her cousin. "It belonged to a Nishiman Indian from Central California, and it wasn't a real stick, either—or, rather, it was a number of small pencil-shaped sticks put on a string like beads. When an Indian owed a good big debt, and was particularly careless and slow about paying it, the man to whom he owed it took one of these 'dunning sticks' and politely and without comment tossed it into the wigwam of his debtor. It is a very original way of saying what we civilized people do when we write an urgent 'Please remit!' It is a sort of 'song without words,' you might say."

"Well, if that isn't the oddest thing," exclaimed Bess. "There's Agnes coming in at the gate this minute, and with my book under her arm! I don't believe I'll have to resort to a dunning stick!"—Baptist Boys and Girls.

GETTING THE SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT HABIT.

One of the first forward steps in our school improvement was the consolidation of three struggling little schools into one flourishing organization. Good roads, the car, the bicycle and above all co-operation made this step possible. Two lone families that had been the reason for a tiny school down in the piny woods moved up into the village. The chief purpose of this move was to give the children better educational advantages. And when parents put education first, things begin to happen in a community.

Instead of three little one-room houses, we now have a large, centrally-located school building. It is a modern structure, well lighted and equipped with good desks, blackboards, reference books and a growing library. There is an auditorium and a stage fitted with a piano, dressing rooms and curtain.

Consolidation meant more money, and more money meant more and better teachers. We now have four teachers, each one trained to handle certain grades. How much better this is than just having one teacher who has to scuffle madly to handle all grades from primary classes on through high-school work! For even in very small schools there are always many grades to be taught.

Another thing, we now have an assistant to the county superintendent of education. This assistant acts in the capacity of supervisor of the rural districts and travels from school to school seeing that proper methods, books, etc., are in use. On one Saturday in each month, all the teachers have to assemble at the county seat. This gathering is really a sort of school for the teachers. Here they have lectures and instruction that will aid them in their work.

The improvement in our school was a gradual growth, covering a period of more than 10 years. It took planning and work and sacrifices—but it was worth it. More than that, we have got the school improvement habit. Each year marks the addition of some good thing in the educational line.—Mrs. T. E. Lide, Jr., in The Progressive Farmer.

WHAT TO BE.

"What shall I be?" said he to me
The other night upon my knee,
"When I grow up to be a man?"
'Twas plain he wanted me to plan
His life on earth throughout the years,
And cite, perhaps, a few careers
That lead to fame and fortune great
From which he soon must choose his fate.

And so I said: "Let's talk it o'er
And see what really lies before
Each little boy who later on Must do men's work when we are gone.
What is it every one must need
Out there who's eager to succeed?
Let's try to understand and see
Just what it is that you must be.

First keep in mind that this is true:
The kind of work you choose to do
Will matter not, if it's a task
That men of you may fairly ask;
If real service here you give,
No shame can harm you while you live.
But whatsoe'er your post or fee,
There are some things that you must be.

You must be honest—therein lies
The test of men, however wise;
You must be loyal through and through,
Willing to work and cheerful, too;
You must be patient and be kind,
Be big of heart and broad of mind,
And be too manly here to claim
Advantage that is linked with shame.

You must be clean—the world demands
Clean hearts and minds as well as hands;
You must be willing here to bear
Your portion of life's constant care,
And set in every way you can
The fine example of a man.
If these you are, you need not fear—
You shall succeed in any sphere."

LIFE AND THOUGHT.

"Right thinking and right living are closely related, and are mutually dependent. Emerson spoke a truth when he said, 'Our lives are what our thoughts are.' But there is a truth equally important, that our thoughts are what our lives are. Which has the ascendancy in your life? Are you controlled more by thought or act? Noble thoughts do not spring from a life training in the dust of sin and deceit. A clean life compels clean thoughts, and pure thoughts put purity into life. Evil thoughts will destroy the noble life, just as effectively as the evil thwarts the best thought. If both life and thought are kept pure, the result will be happiness and peace."—Selected.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

HOW DENOMINATIONAL COLLEGES SHOULD BE GOVERNED.

Dr. W. T. Wynn, Nashville, Tenn., has been making a careful study of the management of denominational schools and colleges of the Southern states. He studied 253 separate schools, Elon among them, and arrived at the following conclusions. With the exception of the 3-4 clause for members, the whole plan would seem to be that of Elon College. All members of our Board of Trustees must be members of the Christian Church. Our people should be glad that one College is governed so properly.

Dr. Wynn's Fourteen Points.

1. The heads of the institutions should be members of the boards of trustees and placed on important committees.
2. Both ministers and laymen should be placed on all boards of denominational schools.
3. Boards should meet annually, and at call when necessary.
4. Special meetings should be called by the president of the board upon the recommendation, or request, of two or more members when sufficient grounds are given to justify such action.
5. Three or four years should be the length of the term of office, subject to re-election.
6. Conventions, synods, conferences, or some organization connected with the Church should have a part in the selection of boards.
7. Individual members should not have the power to act independent of the board's instructions.
8. Every board should have at least one strong committee with power to act on some matters, and in an emergency.
9. Members should receive expenses incident to the meetings, but not a per diem.
10. From 12 to 24 members should be on a board of trust; however, the size of the board may be increased when there are enlargements made in the territory represented.
11. Church membership should be a qualification in the choice of boards; though it is not necessary that all be members of the church to which the institution belongs, a 3-4 clause might be a safe plan.
12. Institutions should, with few exceptions, be co-educational.
13. More than one-third of the total membership of a board should be necessary to constitute a quorum.
14. The head of the institution should nominate the teachers, and no teacher should be selected without his approval. There should be a committee from the board to advise with him in the selection.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF TWENTY-FIVE.

Appointed at the Educational Conference, May 4-5, 1920.

The undersigned committee was appointed by Governor Thomas W. Bickett at the Citizens' Conference on Education held at the North Carolina College for Women on May 4 and 5, 1920, for the purpose of making a condensed report of the program enunciated by that conference. The committee, basing its conclusions upon the reports submitted by the four sections of the conference (Rural School, Village School, City School and Higher Education) and having in mind the present educational equipment of the State of North Carolina, is firmly convinced that the following is fundamental for the proper education of the people of a great state:

1. The school system of North Carolina should be organized on the basis of the county as a unit of taxation and administration. The state should continue to aid the weaker counties by making the educational opportunities of all children of the state as nearly equal as possible. The local school unit should be made as large as possible by consolidation with transportation of children to the school where necessary.

2. Adequate facilities for the training of teachers should be supplied as quickly as possible by the establishment of additional training schools. The program outlined by the State Superintendent of Public Instruction for training teachers at summer normal schools, at summer sessions maintained by state institutions and departments of education attached to high schools should be adopted until adequate facilities for the training of teachers can be provided.

3. The economic independence of the public school teachers of the state should be assured by the payment of salaries, not merely sufficient for living expenses, but sufficient for professional training and culture.

4. The public school teachers of the state should be employed for the full-year period with salaries on the twelve-month basis. When teachers are thus employed the problems of illiteracy, length of school terms, et cetera, will be readily solved.

5. The community should provide comfortable homes for its teachers.

6. The courses of study in the public schools should be adapted to the needs of the community and the demands of modern life.

7. The health of school children should be properly safeguarded; every child should have a thorough physical examination twice a year and this should be supplemented by physical education.

8. The public school should, wherever feasible, be utilized as the educational, social, and recreational center of the community.

9. An efficient and well-trained man or woman should be at the head of the school system of each county, and this official should be supplied with assistants for school supervision as the need arises.

10. The State of North Carolina faces a real emergency in higher education. The institutions of higher learning are utterly inadequate to meet the demands of the young men and young women who ask for admis-

The Work of Our Women

(All items for this department should be sent to Mrs. J. W. Harrell, Burlington, N. C.)

TO THE SOCIETIES OF THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

Our faces are now turning to the last quarter of this conference year. There is much to be done during these three months. We want to be preparing for our conference, which meets with the Society of Holland, Va. We want to come up to all the goals set for this year and are planning for larger and better things for the next year. We want to pray daily, in our Society meetings, for the success of this meeting. It will depend upon every member in every Society. Can we count on you?

CRADLE ROLL DAY.

The Franklin, Va., Women's Missionary Society had Cradle Roll Service on Monday, June, 28. The superintendent, Mrs. Eure, had the program in charge and had trained the children in their songs and recitations. They reflected much credit on the leader and delighted the hearts of their mothers. Each child had been given a mite box, the total returns from which amounted to $14.25. After having completed their part of the program, the children were taken to the primary rooms to play games, while the W. M. S. had its business session. Refreshments were served by the hostesses, Mrs. Eure and Mrs. Rowland. These Cradle Roll programs are always enjoyable and this year's proved no exception to the rule.

MRS. R.

DOVER, DELAWARE.

Our women at Dover, Del., are doing things, even though they haven't a pastor. Mrs. Massey, the secretary, writes that they had a missionary program and, while they did not have a large audience, they received $22.00 as an offering. They are having their meetings during the summer months in connection with the Wednesday evening services. There are some workers in this church as interested and active as can be found anywhere. We are hoping that they can send a delegate to our Holland Conference.

NOTES.

Mrs. Morrill, in her suggestions for carrying out this program, says, "Make a special effort to have your young people present and be sure to give them a part on the program. They will tell the stories beautifully."

This is a splendid program to use at a mid-week service or on Sunday evening. The leaflet containing these stories is in the "Package of Helps for the Year," which may be obtained from our Literature Department, Room 25, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio, for $1.50. It will be necessary for you to have this package of helps in order to give these miscellaneous programs.

News has reached us that Mrs. Martin, wife of our Brother Martin, missionary to Porto Rico, is not becoming acclimated as she should, and that the severe heat at Santa Isabel is sapping her strength. Brother Martin is a man of deep consecration, an enthusiastic worker, and is already accomplishing great things. I am sure we are all anxious that Mrs. Martin shall be restored to health and strength that they may continue the great work which they have begun. We ask that you pray definitely for Mrs. Martin.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Elon College gave a pageant during the recent session of the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention at Elon. It was very impressive, portraying the experiences of a missionary for a single day. We were made to realize that our missionaries endure many hardships and are constantly face to face with problems which are baffling. Friends are you remembering our missionaries daily in prayer? Their accomplishments upon the field depend, in a large measure, upon the prayers of the people at home.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER.

There seems to be a good crop of fruit this year and the Christian Orphanage has many empty cans that we would be glad to get filled. We will be glad to ship cans to any one. If you want to fill some for us let us know how many to ship to you. One pastor called for two hundred for his churches. How many churches would like to help in this way?

There is a good wheat crop this year and the Orphanage lacked about one hundred and fifty bushels making enough to run on next year. Six churches giving twenty-five bushels each could supply this need.

We are in need of a matron for the little boys department. Have we a lady in the Christian Church who would like to take this position? It is a work of love and sacrifice and if you would like to help the helpless you can find an opportunity here. If you would like to consider the work please write to the superintendent at once.

We have quite a number of the Sunday schools that are not on the list of monthly contributors for this year. We would be glad to have your school make a monthly contribution toward the support of the Orphanage. Give one Sunday's offering for the Orphanage and one for Missions and I feel sure you will be happy and God will bless you in your work. "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver."

DEVOTIONAL

INFLUENCE OF THE FAMILY ALTAR.

A statesman tells the story of a visit which he made to a small town. There were no hotels, and he was entertained in a private home. His mission was not above reproach, and he was anxious to retire to his room to avoid being questioned by his host. The father called the family together, saying: "Our guest wishes to retire, so we will not detain him." He handed the Bible to his eldest son, who read a chapter, after which the father prayed. He prayed earnestly for those in authority, that they might be true to their trust. Then mentioning his guest by name, he prayed that he might have no cause to look back upon his visit with regret. That night the statesman could not sleep. "The whole night through the fight raged in my soul," he said, "and with morning I returned to my home without carrying into effect my plan. That family altar did for me what other things had failed to accomplish. I am now a servant of the most high God."—Exchange.

"Christ Jesus, whom God hath sent forth . . . to declare His righteousness (justification) for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God; to declare, I say, at this time His righteousness; that He might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." (Rom. 3:24, 26).

Righteousness, or justification, means, therefore, not only the sinner's vindication, but God's vindication. It is the divine scheme of mercy and love whereby God can acquit and justify a transgressor, and yet acquit and justify Himself, as having no complicity with guilt or sin or laxity as to His inviolable law.

This side of justification is habitually overlooked. In pardoning sin, the perfection of God is in danger of compromise. In the loose notions of forgiveness now prevalent, there is a tendency to magnify love at the expense of belittling law. Perfect government demands perfect law, and perfect law demands perfect sanctions of reward and penalty. The certainty that every transgression and disobedience receives its just recompense of reward is part of the perfection of God and His government. Laxity of administration imperils the foundations of society. Hence, if God forgives and justifies the sinner, it must be in such a way as to justify Himself. His law must be kept intact and His justice must not suffer for the sake of His mercy.

Here lies the glory of God's justification. It is so provided for as that law and justice and government and the character of God are absolutely safe. Penalty is borne by the innocent Substitute, so that the law is magnified; the hatred of sin is as manifest in the sacrifice of God's dear Son as though all transgressors received their full recompense.—Arthur T. Pierson.

Believe God's Word as it stands; you need not interpret God's words until you have altogether changed their meaning, as some expositors do.—H. W. Webb-Peploe.

Back of many of life's failures lie the motive of selfishness. Jesus served others first, Himself second.

THE INEFFICIENCY OF ONE-TEACHER SCHOOLS AS SHOWN BY THE ARMY.

The United States Army during the war taught us a most valuable lesson with regard to literacy and education. The army didn't call a soldier literate provided he could sign his name and spell out a few words in print. They tried out every man to find out two things about him: (1) Could he read an ordinary newspaper article readily and understandingly? (2) Could he write a passably good letter to a friend or about business?

And judged by those two tests, what did the army find? It found that thousands and thousands of the brave boys turned out by our one-teacher and two-teacher schools here in the South were not literate. Judged by practical results they were illiterate. For it's no use for a man to be able to write a few words if he can't write a letter. It's no use to be able to spell out a few words if he can't read a paper or a book with understanding and pleasure. A long time ago Henry D. Thoreau said something all of us should remember:

"I confess that I do not make any broad distinction between the illiterateness of my townsman who cannot read at all and the illiterateness of him who has learned only to read what is for children and feeble intellects."

As Dr. Charles W. Eliot has well said: "The school must teach not only how to read, but what to read, and it must develop a taste for wholesome reading." This is what the one-teacher school has never done—and can never do. In teaching reading no teacher trying to teach all grades and ages can do more than go through a monotonous drill in pronunciation and punctuation—a monotonous drill which often makes the child hate reading. He thinks of it as a task to be shunned rather than a privilege to be enjoyed. And so on with regard to all other studies.

Our one-teacher schools are not really educating children. It is true that in a one-teacher or two-teacher school a bright boy or girl may manage to educate himself or herself to a degree. But even the brighter boys or girls in most cases will never be what they might have been with better nurture, training, help and encouragement: while thousands and tens of thousands of others will leave school actually illiterate, judged by army tests.—The Progressive Farmer.

We are deeply grateful to little Miss Martha Keith, Addor, Moore County, N. C., for a box of nice peaches. Martha is only ten years old and writes a good letter for a child of that age. We are always glad to hear from the children.

It is only about five weeks until Elon will open her doors for the 1920-21 session. There are many young people in the various communities that should attend Elon this fall. OBITUARIES

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT— POINTER.

We, the members of Lebanon Christian church, desire to express our appreciation of the consistent Christian life and faithful services of our Sister Cora Foster Pointer, who departed this life June 17, 1920, in the following resolutions:

1.—That in her death the community has lost one of its noblest women, and the church one of its leading members and most faithful workers.

2.—That we will pray for grace to be submissive to our Heavenly Father's will and for the guidance of his spirit in following the example of her life as it was lived in the home, community and expressed itself in devotion to every duty.

3.—That we pledge ourselves in an honest effort to carry on the work of the church in a harmonious and loyal spirit as she desired it to be done when with us, and look forward to entering into that rest with her, that belongeth to the children of God.

4.—That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy placed on our minutes and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

T. J. EARP, Secretary,
C. E. NEWMAN, Pastor.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT— PARKER.

Whereas it has pleased God in His infinite wisdom and mercy on June 2, 1920, to call home, thus relieving her of earthly sufferings and afflictions, our beloved Sister and Sunday school teacher, Mrs. Ressie Holland Parker; and, whereas in her going, our church, Sunday school, Ladies' Aid and Missionary Societies, as well as the entire community, have suffered an incomparable loss. Therefore, be it Resolved:

First. That in her death, we have lost a member, full of good works, whose life was an inspiration to us all.

Second. That we offer our heartfelt sympathy to her loved ones, especially to her grief stricken husband, and ask God's richest blessings to rest upon them all.

Third. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to her husband, one to her father and mother, and a copy to The Christian Sun for publication.

A LITTLE FUN.

AMUSING THE BABY.

Another time your smile is pretty sickly is when you are trying to appear amused at the baby nephew who refuses to give up the dollar you let him have to play with. Just by way of joining in on the joke you offer to swap him a nickel for it, but he seems to know that it would be a poor trade. His mamma tries to interest him in something else, but he doesn't care for anything except his "big money."—Kansas City Star.

There was to be a guest for dinner and Bobbie, who is a chatterbox, was promised a penny if he kept quiet.

All went well until he saw that his favorite pudding was being served. Then his excited delight was too much for him. Taking the penny out of his pocket he handed it to his mother with the remark: "There's the penny back, mummy. I'd rather talk!"—The Continent.

SO IT SEEMS.

"I don't approve of this reckless expenditure, Mabel. You should save your pennies—the price of things is going up."

"Then what's the good of keeping them, auntie. The longer I save them, the less I can buy."—Windsor.

A doctor who was superintendent of the Sunday school in a small village asked one of the boys this question:

"Willie, will you tell me what we must do in order to get to heaven?"

Said Willie: "We must die."

"Very true," replied the doctor, "but tell me what we must do before we die."

"We must get sick," said Willie, "and send for you."—London Post.

We don't believe you're truthful, Ouija,
Besides, we haven't time to rija,
And if we did, we wouldn't hija,
So run along, for we don't nija.

"I make it a rule never to speak ill of my neighbors."

"That's right. They probably know as much about you as you do about them."—Judge.

"Rock of Ages" Float

This float was built for the Suffolk Christian church for a parade of the churches of Suffolk and Nansemond County, in a get-together meeting of all the Sunday schools in the city and county on June 20, 1920. The float was designed by Mrs. John King, who may be seen sitting in front with the pilot. The float represents "Rock of Ages." Note the girl clinging to the cross with a small angel at her side; also a guarding angel standing near. A very small miniature organ is in the center and a young lady is playing and singing "Rock of Ages."

"Remember that when you're in the right you can afford to keep your temper, and when you're in the wrong you can't afford to lose it."

ROMANCE IN TEACHING

Somehow there is locked up in the human heart the desire for romance. Writers have found that a good story is sought eagerly by the reading public. Writers use all their powers of imagination in describing something that is typical of life. So wonderful are some of these stories that the reader is moved to action as though the incident were real. Many of the great stories published are patterned after some real undertaking, and they carry the true human element.

If we recall correctly, we learned this definition of fiction at the feet of a teacher in bygone days: "Fiction is a term applied to any product of the imagination and has little to do with facts and realities." Fiction, like poetry, gives a very wide range to the imagination and may be cast in either prose or verse form, though present day teachers tell us that fiction is usually confined to prose form.

But this is dealing with definition, while our thought is in the field, and more particularly in that field of human activity, so beautifully and historically described in the Bible.

We have no desire to dictate to our senior pedagogues, and especially that class who make it their business of teaching children in the Sabbath school, but along the line of romance we desire to throw out some suggestions that may be, or may not be, worth while.

We are confident that there are many prepared teachers for the little tots, but our travel and visitation among the churches have led us to feel the great need of more efficient teachers for the young of our churches. We feel that one of the great needs is for the teachers to be able to present the lesson in the form of a romance so as to catch the ear of the child. The world's students tell us that facts are the most difficult things with which to deal and that the average mind soon grows tired of bare facts unless original or of unusual importance.

The average little tot in the Sunday school is not interested so much about the facts of Biblical history as he is about the incidents that go to make history. The exact location of the town of Bethlehem, its geographical standing, the climate of the country, and all these things are not so interesting to him as the story about Bethlehem's babe. What child would not like to hear the story of the Saviour's birth told in fascinating terms and cast in present day thought? What child would not listen eagerly to the telling of the story of how the little child grew in favor and knowledge? What a beautiful story can be told about His life, from His parent's care to the great scene on Calvary's hill! What led us to tell this story in sad and sanctimonious terms? It is true that it is a story full of sadness, but are we going to interest the child by using the story in this form?

There is the story of David, of Sampson, and others, that can be told in the form of romance by the tactful teacher, and the little fellow hurries home to find more about it. The teacher gives color to the scene by the use of the imagination. The story to the boy is indeed wonderful if he has never heard it in that way before. He hurries home and finds the story in the Bible but it is only a review to him, for the story told him by his teacher is that which makes its indelible impression upon his mind.

Then there are those beautiful characters like Mary, Martha, and others, that the teacher can talk about to her class. The little Marys go home just worshipping the Marys of the Bible and the little Marthas of the class think they have the greatest name on earth.

How long shall we consider a teacher a good teacher for children, who cannot interest them in a beautiful story about some Bible character? How long shall we try to interest little tots by cold facts and figures? How long shall we hold to them time-worn methods of teaching and scold the child for not attending Sunday school?

Tell the children a story; they want to hear it. They will flock to the class when they can get value received. Tell them a story—tell them a story of some Bible character that will send them to search the great Book of books.

GETTING READY FOR CONFERENCE

It seems only a short while since we sat at the Conferences and heard the general routine of work reported. Time has rapidly passed and we are already looking and marking the calendar for the 1920 sessions. Only a few more weeks and the first of our Conferences of the Convention will meet.

We have made great progress in recent years in getting ready for Conferences a little earlier than usual. Some of the churches are a little slow yet in winding up their work for Conference, but, as a general rule, the churches are more forward looking in this connection.

Why should a local church, made up of industrious and busy men and women, lay aside the duties of the year just for a few weeks before the meeting of the annual Conference? As we see it, there is no good reason for such and we are glad to see the slow church gradually moving to the front.

If you put off getting ready for Conference until the last few weeks you will wish then that you had given the work attention now.

A SUGGESTION TO WRITERS

We would be very glad if brethren in the Church, both ministers and laymen, would give us some articles on the following topics:

1. What I would do if I were a layman.
2. What I would do if I were a preacher.
3. Is the long term pastorate best?
4. Perils of the short term pastorate.
5. Should we have Convention headquarters?
6. A plan to subsidize THE CHRISTIAN SUN.
7. What should be the minimum salary for the minister?
8. The necessary qualities of a good Sunday school superintendent.
9. Why all of our Sunday schools are not represented in the Conventions?
10. How long should the preacher preach after he says, "In conclusion?"
11. An original reason why churches should be grouped.
12. Should we have a Secretary of Sunday school and Christian Endeavor?
13. Should there be a limit to the number of committees that a member of Conference or Convention should serve on?
14. How many churches should a ministerial student be allowed to serve before graduating?
15. Should Conferences adopt a uniform parsonage plan?

We have listed above fifteen topics and invite the readers of THE SUN to discuss them. If more than one person should write on more than one topic, that would be all the better because that would give our readers more than one viewpoint on the same topics.

It is our hope that many readers of THE SUN will respond to this invitation and request. We are confident that many will have the impulse to do so, but here is hoping that the impulse will not be all.

NEWS AND VIEWS.

Have you taken stock of your work and life for July? Does your praying exceed your criticising?

William K. Vanderbilt died in Paris, France, July 22. He was the oldest member of the Vanderbilt family.

The Biblical Recorder, Raleigh, N. C., says that its subscribers are accepting the increased subscription price in fine spirits.

We see the statement that 300 daily and 1,200 weekly papers have had to suspend publication during the past three months due to the extreme cost of paper and labor.

The Interstate Commerce Commission has allowed a country-wide increase in freight and passenger rates—20 per cent for passenger fares and from 25 to 40 per cent increase on freight traffic.

On July 24 Franklin D. Roosevelt, assistant secretary of war, tendered his resignation so that he could devote his time to political work. He is the nominee for the vice-presidency on the Democratic ticket.

The prohibition party named Mr. W. J. Bryan as its candidate for the presidency, but he would not accept. Mr. Adron S. Watkins, Germantown, N. C. was named in Mr. Bryan's place with D. Leigh Colvin, of New York, for the vice-presidency.

The Greensboro Daily News, Greensboro, N. C., takes the State to task about its pay of $4.00 per day for members of the legislature. The News takes the stand that under the present pay system no one save the man of wealth can afford to aspire to such a position.

The Superintendent of Public Instruction for North Carolina receives a salary of only $3,500 per year. How long shall we permit a man to do the work required of our state superintendent on such a salary? No wonder much interest is being lost in the teaching profession.

The Wesleyan Methodist announces that it will not issue its numbers for August 18 and 25 on account of the cost that it must meet in some way. This is only another demonstration of the financial need of money by Church papers. The Wesleyan Methodist is an old established paper, five years THE SUN's senior.

Why should a pastor's study look like an owl den, or a waste paper room? We have seen a few of that type. We know by experience the temptation to pile up books and papers. We also know by experience that a strict rule to clear the desk every day and get rid of accumulated papers every week will solve the problem. It is not the amount of work that keeps a man behind with the duties of his office or study, but the system he has. A room full of dusty papers and books is not conducive to study and enjoyment of mental duties.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

DOVER, DELAWARE

Our Dover people are to be congratulated and are very happy. At the regular preaching services yesterday in the People's Christian church it was announced that Rev. Roy Helfenstein, D. D., Urbana, Ill., had decided to accept the pastorate of this church and hoped to move here and take up the work early in September. I regard this a most happy outcome of a very anxious and strenuous effort. Dr. Helfenstein is one of our very ablest ministers, consecrated and scholarly, yet young, progressive and virile. He is a man of initiative and of ideas, wide awake to every interest of the Kingdom, a preacher of eloquence and of power, devoted to the work of the ministry, and a teacher of the Word. Dover will, I have no doubt, come into her own under his leadership, and carry on a program of parts and of progress so wisely begun by the lamented and beloved Dr. A. W. Lightbourne. Dr. Helfenstein will be an enviable addition to our Eastern Virginia roster of able ministers and will add weight, worth and dignity to this strong and progressive Conference. The Conference is to be felicitated, as well as our Dover work, on this happy and fortunate acquisition.

And the Dover work, and workers, are indeed most worthy of a capable and efficient leader. It is wonderful that the work here has kept up so well and the church maintained such prestige in the absence of a pastor. The services on yesterday were largely attended, as I understand they are every Sunday, and that, too, by a band of loyal, intelligent, enthusiastic members and workers. How these Dover saints do love their church and stick to it!! There was a glorious prayer-meeting of the older heads at 10 a. m. Preaching at 10:30. Sunday school at 11:45. Song service at 7:30 and preaching at 8 p. m. And every service was a joyful one because the people had a mind to worship, and manifested a devotion and a longing for spiritual light and power that was beautiful. It is glorious indeed to preach to and worship with our Dover people. How I envy Dr. Helfenstein in the great task and the wonderful opportunity ahead of him here.

At 3 p. m., Sunday, July 25,—yesterday—besides the services mentioned above, I was permitted to join with the pastor, Rev. R. S. Stephens, and dedicate St. Luke's Christian church of Dover. This is a mission which Dr. Stephens carried on for months in small and inadequate quarters, until a sufficient nucleus was gathered with which to move into larger and more comfortable quarters. The present building is of brick, on the corner of North and Governor's streets, admirably located for the work it contemplates, is comfortably furnished and equipped and has cost, all told, nearly six thousand dollars. This band of faithful worshippers has done wonders and is a distinct asset to the city's life and progress.

We have a flourishing church out at Wyoming, some eight miles from Dover, under the pastoral labors of Rev. Wilson C. Moore, who is another of our indefa-tinguable workers, and who is building up the work in other outlying districts from the state capitol. Throughout this peninsula there is a great demand and an open door for our dear Christian Church. We need only to be faithful, enter in and possess the land for our Lord and His Christ.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The following was delivered by Deacon Dr. D. L. Harrell, at Suffolk Christian church prayer meeting Wednesday night, July 28, 1920, and I requested it for this Suffolk letter.—W. W. STALEY.

Gideon and God's Chosen Three Hundred.

Every Biblical record vividly presents wonderful thought pictured in simplicity, rich in justice, with the love, mercy, and power of God woven in, in such a way that the most inquisitive and learned mind is exhausted in effort to apply it with completion. God's mind and purposes are too big to be known to man in full. True it is, the more we study and consider the Word, the more can be seen in it, and the greater our progress and application.

This beautiful story of Gideon is filled with inspiration for one with an open mind. It shows how the Israelites had been reduced to want and destitution because of their sins, and how the Midianites and others from the East, year after year would invade the lands of the Israelites at harvest time, and take possession of their crops, cattle and other possessions, each year invading deeper and deeper in their country. This condition progressed and developed until war was declared. A weak and oppressed people to fight a strong, almost numberless army, fully and well equipped to deal a speedy and deadly blow to such a weak and poorly supplied foe. No doubt the Midianites had wonderful confidence in their success. Why not? When they had at their command, all, and more than was necessary to successfully annihilate the enemy. Their possessions were so overwhelming they felt no necessity to provide for the one essential thing, that alone can carry success to completion.

The Israelites through sin and idolatry had forgotten God and were then worshippers of the Gods of the Canaanites, that were made by man, having been led to believe by them that the sunshine and rain that made the lands fertile, was supplied by these idols. While this was true collectively, there was an exception. We are told the heart of a young man of the tribe of Manasseh, Gideon by name, was heavy and bitter over the oppression of the Israelites, his own people. That there flooded in his soul, with the voice and power of God, the comprehension that it was not God's neglect, but the people's lack of zeal, their moral degradation, their disloyalty to God, which had brought all this suffering upon them. In his own community there was at this time an altar to Baal. He was possessed with the idea that it must be overthrown. And that same night Gideon demolished it and erected an altar to our God and offered sacrifice. The Israelites were furious when they saw what had been done and sought Gideon to kill him, but the shrewdness of his father brought them to the test, when he said, "Will you contend against Baal? If he be God, let him contend for himself. Let Baal strike down the one who insulted him." To them this seemed wise council. They waited on Baal and nothing happened. This with other evidence proved to them that Gideon was God's chosen champion. That Baal was not God. That Gideon was their leader, and the people obeyed his summons to make ready for battle. Gideon first thought that the responsibility and the burden of such a project were greater than he could carry, but God gave him sufficient evidence of his plans and the assurance of his leadership, to make him optimistic. When the army was encamped, the first proclamation given by Gideon was whosoever is fearful and trembling let him return and depart from Mount Gilead. And more than two-thirds of the men took their departure. And Jehovah said unto Gideon, "the people are yet too many." So God dictated the plan to choose the required number from those remaining. Jehovah said to Gideon, "by the three hundred men that lapped the water will I save you." And at God's chosen hour he ordered Gideon to arise, "Get thee down unto the camp of the Midianites, for I have delivered it into thy hand." God further ordered Gideon exactly how to proceed and what physical or material means to carry for the accomplishment of this wonderful and overwhelming victory. The opposing army all asleep in the darkness of the night were suddenly aroused by the blowing of trumpets, by the illumination and glare of torches, by the war whoops from Gideon and his men that had three-fourths surrounded the enemy. Confusion and horror so completely overwhelmed the Midianites they fled in the darkness, destroying one another to defeat. Gideon and his men unharmed. A wonderful achievement, proving to both armies and to us, that Jehovah, our God, is above all Gods and that there is no other beside Him. Many valuable lessons can be drawn from this story of Gideon and his relationship with God. It shows God's supreme power, and Gideon's unflinching faith, also that God continued to give him evidence of his determination to keep his promises and lead the small, destitute, weakling, Israelite army to victory, and more, in a way that no argument could develop as to how and who delivered them. It is common knowledge that successful leaders must proceed, take the initiative, and do things. They do not give orders alone, but are at the front when orders are executed. They use diplomacy and judgment; foretell what the future has in store by shrewd anticipation. Evidently Gideon was chosen by God because God knew he was the best material available.

Gideon's three hundred represented the best men that could be gotten from the thirty-two thousand. No doubt the thirty-one thousand seven hundred men left in the camp and out, who were not acquainted with the intricate plans for the battle, held much discussion and criticized Gideon for his foolish notion and crazy act when they started for the encounter. Just so today when some leader is chosen by God for some definite purpose and act is ridiculed and sneered by some because they have not been questioned or chosen. (The more I observe life, the more I am convinced that there is no just place for selfishness in it.) And while the bulk of the army discussed the procedure, Gideon, by faith, the use of keen intellect and courage, won the battle. How often do we minimize and court defeat for many worthy projects, perhaps God chosen? Because we are not among the chosen three hundred. It is well to remember that many are called but few are chosen. God does not expect all men to be leaders but he does expect those who profess to follow him to be his co-workers. If those of us who attend this prayer meeting possessed the zeal, determination, enthusiasm and co-operation that characterized Gideon and his three hundred, in less than a year this room would not accommodate the people who would come regularly. We are too much like the thirty-one thousand seven hundred that God does not mention except to eliminate. The picture shows what God and Gideon accomplished, and leaves open the question, What have we allowed God to accomplish through us? This is the one great question today. It is probable a full surrender to him will show us a new life, a new future, a new hope, a new inspiration. It has been wisely said: There is but one way man can help God-- that is by letting God help him.

The material things used by Gideon to accomplish his purpose suggest that material things are necessary to save the world from sin. If it is true that we must use fire to fight the Devil. Then it is equally true that a money-crazed world needs money, and more money to save it. This is a shrewd day of commercialism, when men are trained along business lines to anticipate and see the great future, what it holds in store for use. The Christian has some such vision, but such a few have the proper training and experience to bring the religious pressure necessary to accomplish our part of saving the world, comparatively little is done. We hear about saving the world, read about it, and think about it, with a certainty of defeat, in our day. Every Christian has a part, a responsibility in this great project. And no doubt many are falling short of their real duty. The Men and Millions Forward Movement is really the first definite, progressive steps our denomination has ever made, and since it is over, see how very easy it was done. In due time we need to subscribe millions again, that the shrewd business men of the world may be secured and enlisted to give full time to religious work. And while we are waiting for this great day it is the business of the Church to make a specialty of converting these great and master minds for their enlistment to save the world. I believe that the master minds can be enlisted, if we make a special effort of converting certain select men, and let our prayers ascend collectively and individually for this one purpose. It is necessary for religious movements to keep pace with the times. This is a day of specialization. The bird hunter long ago quit shooting at the covey. Why not let the Church single its prospects. If Gideon, working with God, could save his people and country with such a few of his picked best men, then it is reasonable to suppose that the world can be saved by God's direction, if we prepare for the work. What the Church also needs today is master minds as organizers, programs outlined that will give every Christian some definite thing to do. The Master said unto them, "Go ye also into my vineyard and whatsoever is right, I will give you." It is reasonable to suppose that the vineyard was equipped by the Master with leaders who had charge of the work and directed the laborers where to work, and what kind of work to do. We are constantly increasing our membership and but very few of us have any definite position or responsibility in the real work of the Church. The officers, the Sunday school leaders, and the choir. What may we expect from the remaining membership under such management? Exactly what any commercial enterprise would expect under such a regime with an abundance of work to be done and 80 per cent of the employes drifting aimlessly with no definite direction as to when to report for duty, and what will be expected in the way of service. All are on the pay roll, and all expect pay, full time pay. To me the solution of this gigantic question, the greatest that confronts America and the entire world today, lies in the Church awakening to see that we need master minds from every line of human endeavor converted and brought in the Church, then the Church by co-operation should supply adequate funds to secure the full time service of such men, who would outline the great work before us, and thereby utilize the great amount of available material and energy that now goes to waste.

The laymen are helping out in mid-week prayer meetings in the Suffolk church, and I am using the above as my Suffolk Letter. Laymen who are willing to put some work on the meeting can make a great contribution to the service of the King. A hint to laymen to be willing to help.—W. W. S.

A. MUCH ENJOYED OCCASION.

On June 24 it was my pleasure to accept a kind invitation to be present on the occasion of the 78th birthday of Deacon J. F. Coghill. His children had planned a surprise for him in furnishing a barbecue dinner. There were present his five children: James, S. F., and J. F. Coghill, Mrs. J. F. White and Mrs. S. W. Fuller; twenty-six grandchildren, and two great-grandchildren, besides a number of other relatives, the whole number present being more than sixty.

Deacon Coghill is indeed a pillar in Fuller's Chapel. It was through his influence that the new church was planned, and through his untiring energy and financial aid very largely that the work was completed. And even now, though feeble, he rarely misses a service. Because of deafness he cannot hear the sermon; yet it is an inspiration to the preacher to see him in his place. His interest for the success of the Master's cause and in the salvation of souls does not seem to abate with declining physical strength. Added to his untiring zeal in the activities of the church work, is a life that has won the esteem and confidence of the many who know him.

And while I remember Brother Coghill in this note I would not forget the partner of his joys and sorrows, who has gone side by side with him up the often rugged way of life. Since I have been visiting in this home she has done much to make my stay with them pleasant, and I have ever appreciated the many acts of kindness she has shown.

Another member of the home I would not forget, Miss Fannie Bledsoe, who has for years lived with them, and is indeed one of the family and always does her part to make the visit of guests in the home pleasant.

I pray God's richest blessing upon these Godly people and many happy returns of the delightful occasion we enjoyed so much on June 24.

LIGHTBOURNE-DAVIS MEETING AT CRAGFORD, ALA.

We began our meeting at Cragford on Tuesday evening, July 20, and closed it the Sunday evening following. The interest was good throughout, and the preaching and music were the best we have ever heard. There were several professions as a result of the meeting and several additions to the church. We trust that Brothers Lightbourne and Davis may come this way again, for we believe they are the right men in the right place.

Total contributions received amounted to $176.00, of which amount $131.22 was paid Evangelist Lightbourne and Musician Davis.

TWO TYPES OF LEADERS

We clearly see in our congregations of today two types of church members. From these church members we get our leaders in all branches of church organizations. One of these types you will find successful, while the other is lacking. One sings to the time and harmony of the leader, the other is without a leader. One has a mind with correct information, the other is without information, because it is leaderless, thus its purpose is aimless.

The leaders of the successful type of churches fail to get a response from the unprogressive churches, because it considers the leadership too radically different from their progressive way of doing business. There are jars to readjustment in church leadership similar to confusions occasioned by disagreeable marriages. It is none the less the duty of the sympathizers to offer aid to all needy calls.

Our backward churches call for help from our strong churches. They call for sympathizers and they call for leaders. They need stimulation. They need foresight and insight. Our members must see their responsible place and thus spread the Gospel to the needy places of the world.

If God is in our lives, the church will have leaders. We will see all the churches that are in need. Many of our churches have been leaderless. No one would hold our revivals, lead the singing, superintend our Sunday schools, lead the missionary societies, or train our children. Some of the faithful, though unqualified have tried to fill the different places in the church. Many of our young people are in touch with good schools and would make efficient leaders, if converted. Our weaker churches beg for leaders to revive them.

THE ARMENIA AMERICA SOCIETY

There exists in America a great body of people deeply sympathetic with Armenia, anxious that America shall not fail in its duty toward her. So far as food and clothing and temporary rehabilitation go, the Near East Relief accomplishes their desire. But they feel that America has duties toward Armenia that the Near East Relief cannot carry out because they involve government and political action—not necessarily the assumption of an American mandate, but very certainly the assuring that the Armenians shall not be slaughtered and that the new state shall have safety and the best chance possible for success.

A company of men including Hamilton Holt, editor of "The Independent," Dr. Stanley White, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, Dr. Sidney L. Gulick, representing the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and Rev. Ernest W. Riggs, President of Euphrates College, Harput, met in New York July 14th, to organize a society to bring before America these needs of Armenia and to stimulate America to satisfy them.

The new organization takes for its name the Armenia America Society. Its executive committee consists of Walter George Smith, of Philadelphia, chairman; Hamilton Holt, Robert J. Caldwell, a leading New York cotton merchant, Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, Dr. Robert Ellis Jones, Canon of the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York, Dr. Stanley White, and ex-Governor William N. Runyon of New Jersey, with President Riggs as office secretary.

The society puts its fundamental aim as follows: "To unite in co-operation the many friends of Armenia for the purpose of ascertaining the needs of Armenia, of bringing those needs before the American people and of securing the satisfaction of those needs through American assistance." The society announces its immediate purposes thus: "To give as wide publicity as possible to the facts regarding Armenia's present political situation, showing the responsibility of America towards Armenia. To influence our own government, directly in Washington and indirectly by influencing the constituencies of our representatives in the senate and in the house, to the end that: (1) the United States should not remain inactive regarding the safeguarding of the lives of Armenians now defending themselves against massacre in their own homes, but our government should undertake at once some efficient means for saving them from impending atrocities; (2) in marking out the boundary between Turkey and Armenia the president should be free to allow the racial pluralities which existed before the massacres of 1895 rather than be restricted to the vilayets of Van, Bitlis, Erzeroom and Trebizond; (3) the United States should lead the nations in securing safety for the Armenians within their homeland and the establishment of a truly representative government over the territory that shall be assigned to them; also in securing the release from captivity in Moslem homes of Christian women and children and the safe return of the exiles."

The society will enroll members as rapidly as possible. There is no membership fee. Every man and woman in sympathy with the aim of the society should enroll in it. Persons contributing five dollars or more towards the expenses of the society will be voting members.

Dr. James L. Barton, president of the Near East Relief, and the whole Near East Relief Organization is in the warmest sympathy with this sister society, which will complement the Near East Relief work. Mr. Smith and Dr. White were on the original Near East Relief Commission.

Persons desiring to enroll in the society should send in their names to Ernest W. Riggs, Secretary Armenia America Society, 287 Fourth Avenue, New York City.

JUVENILE ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Barefoot Boy (with cheek of tan): "I can pick up a cent with my toes."

Son of the Sportsman: "Well, my dog can pick up a scent with his nose."

A little girl ran over to the neighbor's house, calling: "I've got a new baby brother and he came on his birthday."—Warsaw (Ind.) "3-in-30 Herald."

Teacher (at map of the world): "Johnny, on the left hand we have the far-spreading country of Africa. On the right hand, what?"

Johnny: "Warts!"

"Poor little Fido,
Poor little pup,
He can stand on his hind legs
If you hold his front ones up."

Lady (to sniffing boy): "Haven't you a handkerchief?"

Small Boy: "Yes'm, but I never lend it to strangers."

'Twas a wintry day in summer,
The barefoot boys with shoes on Stood sitting on the grass.
'Twas midnight upon the ocean,
Not a street car was in sight.
The captain climbed a telegraph pole,
And it rained all the next day, that night.

BOOKS FOR EVERYBODY

The Women's Educational and Industrial Union of Boston is sending young women through the rural districts with motor trucks to carry books to the people who have not access to public libraries. Evanston, Ill., has launched a similar project, supported by several philanthropic citizens. The book wagon will visit every street in that part of the city, loaning books, telling stories, and singing to street groups. In this way it is hoped to reach many people who do not go to the libraries and who get their views of life, of politics, and economics from sources that deceive and embitter them.

The Work of Our Women

(All items for this department should be sent to Mrs. J. W. Harrell, Burlington, N. C.)

ABOUT SUPPORTING A MISSIONARY.

We are publishing this week a letter from Miss Martha R. Stacy, written to the Burlington Christian Sunday school. This is just one of her regular monthly letters to the school, and is published without her knowledge or consent. She writes such interesting letters we feel sure our readers will enjoy this one with us.

Miss Stacy, as many of you know, is sent out by the Sunday school of the Burlington Christian church. We count it a great privilege to be able to send out such a splendid worker. You cannot know the joy of our hearts as we gather in our school on Sunday morning, as we realize that we are represented in far away Japan; and as we greet our boys and girls and attempt to teach them about Christ, we rejoice in the fact that our representative is also trying to teach the boys and girls in Japan about the same Christ.

There are many individuals, churches and schools that could easily support a worker on the foreign field. Such a service would renew and transform the life of an individual or church.

The blessing will come back to the church in the measure in which she spends herself in missionary effort, either at home or in far away Japan.

As missionary workers, let us pray that God will lay it upon the hearts of individuals of means, churches and Sunday schools to assume the support of a missionary on the foreign field.

MRS. J. W. HARRELL

Dear Burlington Friends:—

I am sorry to be so late with my May letter that it comes in June, but this has been an unusually busy month. Mr. and Mrs. McKnight with dear baby, Alice, arrived on June 9, and the next week I moved back to our mission home at Kasumi-cho. We are a very happy family together, with Mr. Garman as director and Alice as the center of attraction.

My Wednesday afternoon children's classes are filling up, and I find work with them very interesting, and play, too, for the older children come nearly an hour before their class time and I play with them in the kindergarten playground. This play time together gives a chance I could get in no other way to teach some lessons of co-operation and fairness.

Last Wednesday we noticed one little boy, who was wearing a little fancy bag suspended from his belt. One of the kindergarten teachers asked to see what he had. It was folded very carefully in white tissue paper and just fitted the bag. When unwrapped it proved to be a small piece of polished wood with the name of a god written on it. He was wearing it to help him learn easily in school. The kindergarten teacher reminded him that God gives us minds to think, and that He would help us learn. So many of the children come from heathen families, whose only contact with Christianity is through the kindergarten and my little English and music class.

Last week one of the tiniest kindergarten boys in my class got sleepy and fussy. We were singing a lullaby and I let him hold the doll while we sang to it. When it came time to put it in its cradle, he did it all right, but evidently reluctantly. Then he burst out crying and in quite good English said, "My baby." I did so wish I could give it to him, but unless I had one for every child it would not do. However, it proved to me he had the meaning as well as the sound of the English song.

I do so wish you could look in at that little room some Wednesday afternoon. I go right from school there, and first teach the kindergarten children for twenty minutes. I dressed a doll in long baby clothes and made a cardboard cradle for it, with mattress and pillow and blankets. One child rocks it while the others hush imaginary babies in their arms. I'm going to teach "Here's a ball for baby," next. Probably all you children know it. Such tiny children love motion songs best.

Then come the older children. I am teaching them the beginnings of English, and children's hymns. Last week they learned to count to ten, and most of them know the alphabet already, but not how to write it. That will come later. The children's names interest me and perhaps they would you. They are so pretty in Japanese. Ishigaki means stonewall. Kawatani means river, gorge, or valley. Takahashi means high bridge. Hara is field, and Nahayama means within the mountains. Then I have river bank children and broad bridge children and north ring children. These are all family names. Sometimes the given names are just numbers, but many of them have pretty meanings, too. One little girl is named Flowerchild Rockyriver. She is in the fifth grade at school and is one of my best pupils, though very shy.

I am still working away at the language. We are rushing through the fourth reader at present, getting ready for examinations the last of this month. We have started on learning Bible stories, too, one class a week. We have finished one story about Christ's birth, and now are having one about his boyhood.

Just now I ought to leave this letter and go to studying. I hope you are all remembering to pray that I may be used of God out here in this part of His Kingdom, and that I may learn rapidly and thoroughly so as to be able to work as well as possible.

Yours in Jesus' work,

MARTHA R. STACY.

26 Kasumi-cho, Azabu, Tokyo, Japan, June 1, 1920.

To fill the office of governor of a State must be no easy task. The very nature of his work places him between halting opinions and in divided households. The pardoning power granted a governor is often the means of much criticism. Great pressure is brought upon the governor to act and it takes much hard heartedness to get around some of the pleas presented to him. In this situation a governor many times acts upon his own feelings, thinking that they represent the State. Why not have a pardon board to pass upon all cases? We understand that many States have this method.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

VACATION FOR THE CHILDREN

Our Singing Class sang for Bethlehem Christian church the third Sunday. It was the beginning of the protracted meeting and the congregation was large. The Class had the undivided attention of the audience and the offering was splendid.

Rev. J. W. Holt, the pastor, gave us a warm welcome and we enjoyed the day very much. Brother Holt preached in the afternoon and we do not know when we have listened to a sermon that did us more good. His words were well chosen and they came from a heart that was full of the message.

Special arrangements had been made to entertain the children for dinner, and they certainly did show their appreciation of the kindness of the good people by the way they ate of the good things set before them. We hope to visit the good people of Bethlehem again.

Vacation time for the children is here. We try to give each one ten days during the summer months to visit their home or some friend. Quite a number of the girls have already had theirs, and some of the boys. The farmer boys have about gotten through their busy work and will begin to take theirs next week. All will get a vacation except one girl 14 years of age and one boy about eleven. These live so far from their people that it would be too expensive. The expenses of the vacation is borne by the people they visit and does not come out of the Orphanage funds. We feel that giving the children a vacation has its disadvantages as well as its advantages, but taking everything into consideration we believe it is a help to the children.

We have not received any message from any community that desires to make up twenty-five bushels of wheat to help us tide over next year on our wheat crop. If five churches would do this we would be able to bread our little fellows next year without buying flour.

Don't forget that we have plenty of glass fruit jars and will be glad to ship to any one who wishes to fill some for us. We have no fruit. But we have a young orchard planted and hope in a few years to have fruit of our own.

Who is the lady who would like to be a helper in the work here? We need one more helper very much.

LETTERS FROM THE COUSINS

Dear Uncle Charley:—It is time for us to write again, as we want to keep the corner bright. I wonder if all our cousins know the song, "Brighten the Corner Where You Are." We little folks at Liberty sing it sometimes. We are enclosing a dime each, also our love for our Orphanage cousins.—Virginia Pearl and W. T. Ayscue.

Yes, our little girls sing that song sometimes to keep the corner bright here at the Orphanage. Glad to have your letter this week.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley:—I am sending you some money earned since coming to visit grandfather Newman's, by polishing Joseph's shoes, washing and breaking dishes and keeping house for grandmother.—Oliver E. Young, Jr.

Now you are a smart boy. I would let you shine my shoes, but they are so large you would lose money on the job.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley:—I have not written you this month, so will write today. We are having very much warm weather just now. I go to New Hope church, It is in the country. I wish you would visit our church sometime. With love.—Grace Pearl King.

We have had some hot weather here too. But the last two nights have been cold enough for a blanket.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley:—Here I come, with my dime for this month. We are going to have a Children's Day at Pleasant Hill the first Sunday in August and I wish you and all the cousins would come. With love and best wishes to all.—Vula Fogleman.

I knew our little folks would enjoy being with you, and hear the children sing and recite.—"Uncle Charley."

MAN'S WAY AND GOD'S WAY

The Presbyterian of the South says a very clever thing in a recent issue: "Man often tries to whitewash himself, when God wants to wash him white. Man tries to make reputation, when God wants to make character. The only sensible thing to do is to let God do His job. If man does not interfere, He will make a success of it."

THE FALSE BASIS ON WHICH ALL NEWSPAPERS HAVE BEEN PUBLISHED

In announcing an increase in subscription rates, the Kansas City Star, a leading paper of the West, said:

"Two increases in costs have made this unwelcome step imperative. The Star has just been notified of an increase in the price of print paper to take effect July 1. The amount is staggering. It will mean an added expense of $600,000 a year in producing the Star. This is merely the latest in a long series of increases. In 1916 the Star paid $42 a ton for paper. Now the lowest contract price is $120 a ton—an advance of 300 per cent.

"The second increase in cost is a new advance in postage. It will cost 11 1-2 cents a week, for instance, to mail a copy of the Star into the third postal zone, which includes Eastern Missouri, Central Kansas and Northern Oklahoma; 16 cents a week to mail it to Colorado Springs, in the fourth zone; 18 cents to mail it to points in New Mexico, in the fifth zone; 21 cents to New York, in the sixth zone, and 25 cents to San Francisco, in the seventh. That will be a postage charge of $11 a year to New York City, and $13 a year to San Francisco.

"An advancing scale of postal rates was fixed by act of congress three years ago. Still another advance will go into effect next year."

This brief statement tells only a small part of the hardships of all newspapers under which many must inevitably succumb. Newspaper mortality will be very heavy during the next few years.

Many years ago newspapers added the cost of postage to subscriptions, all bills carrying extra charge for postage. Later on the government reduced the postage rate to 1 cent per pound, and all publishers immediately assumed this charge and thus reduced the cost to subscribers. A few years ago, contrary to all scientific postal management, congress, led by men who openly proclaimed that they wanted to punish newspapers for bringing on the war—and a number of them freely made that statement to the Manufacturers Record—passed a bill for higher rates and for a zone system which has trebled and quadrupled the postage cost to newspapers, and especially to weekly and monthly publications of wide circulation. For instance, the actual postage on a copy of the Manufacturers Record to San Francisco under the advance rates is $3.82, or more than half the subscription price received.

We believe that every publication will be compelled to return to the former custom of adding postage to subscription bills, exactly as merchants add the war tax to all bills, but that will be hard on people living at points distant from the place of publication, as it will heavily increase the cost of their papers to them.

Thus, in its desire to penalize and punish newspapers, congress will have added a burden to all newspaper and magazine readers.

Moreover, the scarcity of paper is one of the most striking phases of the nation's business life, and no publisher knows a month ahead whether he will secure a supply at any price or not. Four years ago the Manu- facturers Record paid 4 cents a pound for paper, and the supply seemed without limit. Today we are paying 16 3-4 cents a pound, and predictions are freely made that the price will go to 25 cents. Even at these prices, no long-time contracts can be made.

We have repeatedly said that the whole newspaper business has always been on a false basis. In that respect it has been unlike any other industry. Publishers have rarely, if ever, charged subscribers one-half the cost of getting out a paper, and few have ever put a fair price on their advertising pages. This point is illustrated in a letter from Mr. Bolling Arthur Johnson, editor and publisher of the Lumber World Review, to the Manufacturers Record, in the course of which he said:

"The business papers of the United States got off on the wrong foot when they began their existence. No business paper in existence today charges more than about one-half what they should have charged when they began business for the advertising space that they have been selling. Remember, now, none of them charge half enough for their space. Up to date my paper stands out above all the rest. Now let me tell you a story at the start. From the beginning my circulation ran all the way from 1,800 to 2,000. I decided to boost the circulation a bit and began spending about $500 a month and ran the circulation up to 2,907, which it was last night. I do not believe in hothouse methods of circulation so far as business papers are concerned, but I decided to go into the hothouse scheme and did. Now, kindly remember that our circulation in the distribution all told of the Lumber World Review is 2,907. We print 24 papers a year, on the 10th and 25th of each month. We get $1,800 a year for a full page each issue in the front part of the paper, and $1,584 for a full page each issue in the back part of the paper—both them publishers' option as to location. We get $200 for our front cover one time. We get at the rate of over $3,000 a year for advertising next to reading matter. We get $150 for each insertion on the back cover. We get $125 for one page one time in the front part of our paper and $99 for one page one time in the back part of our paper. Think it over!

"Any business paper publisher who does not know how to raise his advertising rates or who is getting a lower scale of rates than the ones I have just mentioned well needs to have a 90-day clause in his contracts, and a lot of other things which can bolster up his proposition."

Based on circulation and the frequency of publication, the Lumber World Review's advertising rates are over three times those of the Manufacturers Record and of the general run of leading industrial papers. Unquestionably, the Lumber Review's position is right, and its publisher has done a wise thing in putting his business on a strictly commercial basis, like other business organizations. On his standard the advertising rates of the Manufacturers Record should be three times as high as they are. The subscription price of business papers should also be much higher than it is, and to that they should add the war postage increase or tax, just as all other business interests have done.

These facts bear with equal force upon the entire publishing interests of the country, and sooner or later publishers must have the courage to reshape all their business on this basis. Subscribers and advertisers must come to realize that newspapers have been philanthropists, bestowing their alms upon the country to their own impoverishment. This very fact has weakened the stamina and the independence of many publications, and thus injured the public at large by lessening the stamina, the backbone and the ability of the men engaged in newspaper work. If American newspapers are not up to the standard which the business people of the country feel they should maintain, let these business men remember that the responsibility rests upon them, because they have always fought a decent living rate for subscriptions and advertisements.

ESSAY CONTEST

In the contest for the best essay on malaria written by a school child in eastern North Carolina first prize of fifty dollars is awarded to Miss Rachel Grimsley, of Jacksonville, Onslow County, according to announcement made today by the committee of judges composed of Mrs. Jane S. McKimmon, Dr. E. C. Brooks and Dr. W. S. Rankin.

This contest was inaugurated by the North Carolina Landowners Association which was assisted by the State Board of Health. It was conducted as a part of the general educational campaign against malarial by the two associations. Participating in the contest were the school children of thirty-six counties.

A State prize of twenty-five dollars was offered by the Landowners Association and this was supplemented by twenty-five dollars given by Dr. Clarence Poe, Editor of the Progressive Farmer. In announcing the winner the judges gave second place to the essay written by Bernard McDuffie, of Point Caswell, Pender County. Honorable mention is given the essays by the following: Stella Campbell, Beaufort, Carteret County; Marguerite Forbes, Beleross, Camden County; Bertha Lawrence, Gatesville, Gates County; Lillian Van Leuven, Wilmington, New Hanover County; Zulieme Johnson, Kinston, Lenoir County; Chrystine M. Windley, Swan Quarter, Hyde County; Rose Lee Wynne, New Bern, Craven County.

This contest is regarded by the officials of the State Board of Health as one of the most valuable pieces of educational work along a specific line done in the State. It extended over a period of several months and during that time about one hundred thousand pieces of literature devoted to malaria was distributed to children interested in the contest. County prizes were awarded for the best essays in each county as well as the prize for the best in all counties. The contest made necessary an intensive study of causes and conditions which create malaria fever and was participated in by not only the children of the schools but by the parents and others in the various communities as well. It was conducted in the section where practically all the malaria in North Carolina exists and is expected to result in very much improved conditions.

Malaria control work is now being carried on by the State Board of Health in co-operation with the United States Public Health Service at Goldsboro, Tarboro and Farmville. In addition extensive malaria control work has been done at Wilmington. The problem is that of eradicating mosquitoes by drainage and oiling. It has been demonstrated that this can be done at a cost that is very reasonable when results attained are considered.

From Other Sanctums

A WISE JUDGE

A judge in Middletown, N. Y., had before him two boys, sixteen and seventeen years of age, for the crime of stealing an automobile for a joy ride. On being found guilty the judge's sentence required them not to ride in an automobile for six months and for the same period to attend church services. That is an excellent cure for any crime. It is not always effective. But this is not because of the inadequacy of the remedy, but because the patient refuses to apply it.—California Christian Advocate.

BEAR WITH ONE ANOTHER

Bear with each other's faults. Love one another and help one another. Pity each other. Bear each other's burdens. We are all moving on a great march, a vaster assembly than ever moved through the wilderness of old, and we stand related to him and he to us, and we to each other. We shall therefore look back with unspeakable sorrow at the jars and discords and the uncharities of this mortal life; and for every sweet kindness, for every loving helpfulness, for every patience, and every self-denial or self-sacrifice we shall lift up thanks to Almighty God.—Western Christian Union.

WHERE TO LOOK

People generally look in the wrong direction to get help and blessing. The Psalmist said: "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth." "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." If tempted souls would look up instead of down, they would soon find relief. The Lord Jesus is still the sympathizing One. He still calls to the crushed and burdened: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy-laden, and I will give you rest." He still loves humanity. He knows our sorrows. He was a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." He is "touched with the feeling of our infirmities," for he "was in all points tempted like we are, yet without sin." Let us learn to carry to him our griefs and our sorrows.—Free Methodist.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

A LONG-RANGE DECISION

(The Herald of Gospel Liberty.)

You would be doing those young friends of yours who are about to decide not to go to college a very great service if you could fully persuade them of the extent of the choice which they are about to make. They doubtless have been thinking of it as being largely a matter of the next two or three years, or of their younger days at most. They have been looking at it directly, and weighing and balancing a college education against the next few years of their activities. But they need to be made to understand that the decision to go or not to go is really a long-ranged one. Its greatest force will very likely take effect in middle life and afterwards. What they are to be then, the possibilities of their service, the bigness and significance of their mature lives, is being decided when they make their choice this summer to go or not to go to college.

Almost any young fellow of twenty-five or thirty who has the snap and vigor still fresh can get along in a very respectable sort or way without much educational training. But after that it is different. As he begins to approach forty and is no longer in demand for those positions where youth has the advantage, the uneducated and untrained man finds his line of activities and his fields of service narrowing down more and more. The pull to make a showing in which he can take pride and satisfaction then gets heavier every year. This is the most vital thing about the decision which youth is making today—it is deciding the type of life and the breadth of service and the resources of power and capability which it shall have in that far-away period of middle life and old age. The importance of a collegiate training looks decidedly different and far more worth the cost to the young person who understand it in that way.

Remember that the making of a life may be largely in your hands if a little urging from you can persuade some young person to go to college who otherwise would stay at home. The choice that will be made within the next few weeks will probably decide what the years to come are to be.

"Lessons from the Poets," Ex. 15:1-11. (Daily Readings).

Monday—A Poet of Love, Song of Sol. 7:10-13 8:6, 7. Tuesday—A Poet of Sorrow, Sam. 1:1-11. Wednesday—A Poet of Nature, Ps. 148:1-14. Thursday—A Poet of Pain, Job. 3:1-26. Friday—A Poet of Faith, Ps. 130:1-8. Saturday—Jesus the Poet, Matt. 6:25-30. Sunday Topic—Lessons from the Poets, Ex. 15:1-11.

The historian writes facts, as gleaned from past events; the scientist discusses theories as deduced from certain observations; the novelist portrays character as he sees it, but the poet expresses feelings, as prompted by the desires and impulses of the heart.

Dr. Pearson, president of the Chautauqua Association of Swathmore, Pa., says that we should read a few lines of poetry every day, in order that we might be more cheerful and live longer.

In translating the poetical books of the Bible, it has been necessary to put them into prose, in order to retain the meaning, but they still breathe forth the spirit of the authors. No book in literature portrays more clearly the heights and depths of feelings, the hopes and discouragements of life, the faith and trust in the unseen than does the Psalms of David. The reader will find in them something to meet every mood of life.

It would prove a great help to each of us, to select some standard poet and make a careful study of his works.

Questions to Be Answered in the Meetings

Who is your favorite poet?

What is the difference between the writing in the Psalms and Kings?

Why is the reading of poetry helpful?

Have someone to name the poetical books of the Bible with their authors.

Have selections of poetry read in the meeting.

MARY CONTRARY

On the step of the back porch sat Mary Belle with her doll Nancy in the pleasant spring air, while the sun dropped down in rosy and peach-colored cloud blankets. Mother was cultivating her tiny lettuce plants, and father was setting out tomato plants. When he had finished, there was a little space between the last sturdy tomato stalk and the lettuce bed.

"There's enough room for another bed here," he said.

"Hardly a whole bed," said mother, smiling; "just a little crib."

That caught Mary Belle's ears. She jumped down the stairs calling, "Oh, give it to me, please, for my own little garden crib! Please say it is mine before Curtis wants it for carrots or Helen begs it for more pepper."

"Will you truly try to make it grow something that people can eat" asked mother.

"I truly will," answered Mary Belle, "and I shall have more time, because I go to the kindergarten only in the morning."

And indeed it seemed that when Mary Belle was wanted it was wise to look first for her in the back yard. And every day doll Nancy wore her oldest gingham dress, that she could go out, too, and sit in a grape basket while her little mother watched and weeded the five short rows. The two outside rows and the one in the very middle were going to be beets, as round as a ball and as red as a ripe apple. The two rows in between were to be radishes.

"That's a fine plan," said father, who had thought, there could not possibly be more than two rows of anything in the crib garden. "The radishes will grow quickly and give you something to eat this spring, and they will be gone in time to give the beets more room when they get big enough to need it. And they will give you a crop for late summer."

But there was trouble, too, with that garden crib. Even before the plants were up Dorothy came over from next door with her hand half full of big, flat white seeds.

"I brought them for your garden crib," she said. "They will grow into great big squashes. Let's plant them before school."

"Oh, I wish I could have squashes growing in my garden," said Mary Belle, "but there isn't any space left."

The next week Cousin Beth came over with a pill box full of surprise, more big seeds, which were grey in color. "Even the seeds are good to eat," she told Mary Belle, "but if you plant them they will grow as high as the garage in one summer."

"O, what are they?"

"They are sunflowers," said Beth, "and I brought them to plant in your garden crib."

"Oh, I'm sorry," said Mary Belle, "but I have to stick to the beets and radishes. They take all the room I have."

Beth was not very polite about it.

"You're a regular Mary Contrary about your old garden," she said.

It was a week or two later that Curtis brought home from the grocer's a package with a handsome picture on it of cut-open melons.

"Muskmelon seeds," he said. "I'm going to raise a bushel of melons."

"But your space is given to sweet corn and carrots," said Helen.

"Well, I'll stick them in, any way, and later if it's too crowded I'll decide which I want to pull up and throw away," said Curtis. But he came to Mary Belle with some of the tempting seeds, too.

"You'll let me plant some of my muskmelons in your crib garden, won't you? I'll share up even with you on the melons, and you know how well you like muskmelons."

"But I can't now. My beets are so big and strong!" Mary Belle felt almost like crying. "I wish I had a whole farm full of land; but I can't have muskmelons this year."

Curtis was a good deal disappointed, or he would never have said, "Cousin Beth is right. You ought to be named Mary Contrary."

After that, some of the children picked up the name and used to sing at her, "Mary, Mary, quite contrary, how does your garden grow?" Mary Belle wished she could talk it over with father, but she did not want to tell tales. She did not know that he knew all the time.

Then one day the whole family were out looking at the garden after supper. Mother's rows had all grown very well, and had been giving them many good things to eat. Father's tomatoes were ripening fast, and his string beans had climbed all over the iron fence. Then they came to Curtis' space. It looked like an African jungle, crowded with a dozen new things since he had planted his carrots and corn in the spring. None of the plants could grow well; so there was not anything good to eat either above the ground or beneath it. Curtis just made a funny face and said, "Next year I guess I'll stick to what I choose in the spring."

Then they came to the crib garden, with the forest of tomato plants on one side of it, and, hugging it close, on the other side the salsify that mother had planted after her lettuce was gone. The radishes had been served for breakfast weeks before, scarlet and crisp, but the beets had grown so big that they filled all the space between the rows. Mary Belle pulled up one. It was as round as a ball and as red as a ripe apple. Mother and Helen and Curtis all said, "How fine! How big and red!"

Daddy said nothing for a moment. Then he reached down and took Mary Belle's hand and squeezed it hard as he said, "I wish we had more Mary Contraries in this family. It would be good for gardens and for our country."

And Mary Belle told doll Nancy all about it because she was so happy over it.—Emma Mauritz Larson, in The Youth's Companion.

RECONSTRUCTING THE CHURCH

Any Christian leader interested in the problems which have developed from the World War, and the tasks of the Church for the new day, will gladly welcome the latest contribution by President W. A. Harper of Elon College. His new book is entitled "Reconstructing the Church," and is first an analysis of the present world situation and the opportunity and the obligation of the Church to meet it. Dr. Harper is clearly possessed with the idea that this is the day of the Church and with its present great opportunity comes a supreme obligation to face the facts and to find a way through. He makes a contribution to this end and that contribution is condensed, suggestive, direct, and illuminating. Every minister at least of the Christian Church and every intelligent layman should read this new book from Dr. Harper's pen.

HERMON ELDREDGE.

The church that delays in its payments to the Men and Millions fund will lose some of the real joy.

How about that son of yours? Is he planning to attend college this fall? Then, too, there may be a daughter. Elon is for both men and women.

Superintendent Johnston tells us this week that all of the children of the Orphanage will get a vacation this summer except a little boy and a little girl. Read Brother Johnston's letter and send for one of these little ones to take his or her vacation with you.

NOTES

The next issue of THE SUN will be an Educational Number.

The Virginia Valley Conference is in session at Winchester, Va., this week—the date being August 5, 6 and 7.

THE SUN will appreciate it if the ministers will report their meetings promptly and not wait until several weeks late.

Readers of THE SUN will be gratified in reading Dr. Atkinson's announcement that the People's church, Dover, Delaware, has been able to secure a pastor.

Rev. J. W. Holt reports a good meeting held at Bethlehem, the final service being held on Thursday night, July 22. There were eight professions with four additions to the church. The pastor was assisted by Rev. R. F. Brown, Chapel Hill, N. C.

Rev. C. H. Rowland sends us twelve copies "Government and Principles"—6 copies fifty cent binding and 6 copies thirty-five cent binding—and asks that we sell them and turn the money over to the Orphanage. Who desires the lot, or a part of it?

Elon students of recent years will regret to hear of the accidental killing of "Uncle" Pink Comer at Elon College on Monday afternoon of this week. He was walking along the railroad track near the station and was overtaken and run over by a freight train, death resulting instantly. "Uncle" Pink was the "important" and "prominent" man about the campus and buildings.

It is now costing $3.20 to maintain each annual subscription on THE SUN list. This means that each subscriber pays $2.00 and the Convention $1.20. Will subscribers appreciate this condition and not allow their subscriptions to lapse? Surely no one will allow the office to send a letter or statement, thus increasing the burden of THE SUN.

A subscriber writes: "In reading THE SUN for July 28, I note your comment on the matrimonial career of the Democrat and Republican nominees for the presidency. What about the matrimonial career of the candidate of the Prohibition party?"

The presidential nominee of the Prohibition party is Mr. Aaron Sherman Watkins, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal church and was born November 29, 1863. Before entering the ministry he studied law and Taylor University in 1902 conferred the LL.D. degree upon him. In 1890 he was married to Emma L. Davis, Middleburg, Ohio, and two years later entered the ministry, being ordained in 1895. He held several pastorates with acceptance and later became a professor of philosophy in a university of his State, from this position to vice-president of the university and then to the presidency. He was once candidate for the governorship of Ohio on the Prohibition ticket in 1905 and candidate for the vice-presidency of the United States on the same ticket in 1908.

This gives a brief sketch of Mr. Watkins' life, which information we have secured from "Who's Who in America." We know nothing particular of his matrimonial career.

A NEW PASTOR EVERY TWO YEARS.

The Herald of Gospel Liberty says, editorially, on the topic, "A New Pastor Every Two Years":

"Some time ago we were looking into the record of a little broken-down church which was struggling for its existence and we learned that it had had twenty-six pastors in the sixty years since it was organized. We needed to go no further to find the secret of its weakness and the fact that it had never accomplished anything in the world in which full-sized men and women could be really proud. Twenty-six different ministers in the life time of some of the members of that church! Twenty-six different varieties of ideas and plans, twenty-six different sets of combinations, twenty-six different individuals and their families with which the community had to become acquainted and try to get adjusted, and which had to try to adjust themselves and their methods of work to the community. It would be nothing less than a miracle if a church which had been put through that kind of a process and subjected to that kind of a test would have accomplished anything really worth while. The surprise is not that it has done so little but that it is alive at all."

MARRIAGES

HACKADAY—KNIGHT

A quiet, but very beautiful and impressive wedding took place on the afternoon of July 26, 1920, at 6 o'clock, in the old historic St. John's church of Hampton, Va., when Miss Ethel Hackaday of Newport News, Va., became the bride of the Rev. John Vincent Knight, pastor of the First Christian church, of Greensboro, N. C. The ceremony was witnessed by only a few of the friends of the couple, and the only attendants were the groom's best man, Mr. L. S. Thompson, and the bride's maid of honor, Mrs. L. S. Thompson. Mr. and Mrs. Thompson live in Hampton, Va., and are very good friends of Mr. and Mrs. Knight.

The bride, who is the accomplished and only daughter of Mrs. R. E. Hackaday, and the late Mr. R. E. Hackaday, was gowned in a blue traveling suit with hat and gloves to match, and carried a bouquet of bride's roses. She is an active member of the East End Christian church, Newport News.

The groom is a rising young minister in the Christian Church and has been pastor of the Greensboro church for the past two years.

The words that made the couple one were said by this writer, and immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left on the boat for Washington, D. C., and other points of interest north and west, and upon their return they will make their home in the city of Greensboro, N. C.

J. F. MORGAN.

INGLE—CANTRELL

Mr. Van Cantrell and Miss Della Ingle were united in matrimony July 18, 1920, at the home of the officiating minister, J. W. Holt. Only a few friends were present to witness the ceremony. We wish for them a long and happy married life.

J. W. HOLT.

COLE—CAGLE.

Mr. Hobert Cagle and Miss Blanche Cole were united in marriage on July 18, 1920, at the residence of Mr. J. H. Spencer, in Richland township, in the presence of a few intimate friends. Mr. Cagle is a son of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Cagle, of Seagrove, N. C., and a prosperous young farmer. Mrs. Cagle is a daughter of Mrs. T. F. Cole, of Seagrove. Both are highly esteemed young people and their many friends wish for them a happy voyage across the sea of life.

RESOLUTION OF RESPECT—McCORD.

The Japan Mission of the Christian at the annual meeting passed the following resolution, and asked that copies of it be forwarded to our religious press:

Resolved, That the sudden death of our beloved colleague, Rev. E. K. McCord, D. D., is a heavy blow to our cause here in Japan, and to us personally, the weightiest that thus far in the history of our Japan Mission has fallen upon us. His consecrated wisdom and zeal will long be held in remembrance by us and by our fellow-workers of the Japanese people. We submit to the will of the Heavenly Father, and comfort one another with the assurances found in Holy Scripture. We instruct our secretary to enter this resolution in our minutes.

Governing Influences in Selecting a College

Western Christian Advocate

In the selection of a college, several important questions should be answered before matriculating in any one of them.

What is the atmosphere of the college? Is it Christian? Do the students have a wholesome attitude toward life?

What are the college traditions? What sort of alumni are held before the public as examples of the product forth? What rating has the college in the past history of the state or church? One may be certain that many old traditions will be kept up.

Is the curriculum so arranged as to meet the greatest needs of the student for an all-round development? Is the college attempting to teach too many branches with the equipment and faculty it has? Is the Bible given an honored place?

The faculty ought to be known in some slight way at least. Scholastic degrees are important, but there are other things just as essential. Are the teachers democratic and approachable? Are they bigger than their departments? Are they a shifting lot, or have they stayed long enough to become acquainted with their jobs? What estimate do the alumni place on the leading professors?

What standards of expenditure are the rule? Is the institution catering to the snobbish and aristocratic? What percentage of the students are working their way through school? Must one belong to a fraternity or to a sorority in order to receive proper social recognition? What chances are there for scholarships and other financial help? How far is the college from the home base?

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

"No child should be damned to illiteracy because he chanced to be born in one of the waste places of the nation."

"A religious education should be the heritage of every child. Spiritual illiteracy is the greatest peril of organized society."

EDUCATIONAL NOTES

This edition of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is designed to turn the attention of our people at this season of the year to the matter of education. We have hundreds of young men and women who should enter school this fall and the time is opportune for educational considerations.

There was once a time when it was claimed that every one did not need an education. We do not feel constrained to say that this was true, but certainly no one should make such a claim as that now. The complexity of the race situation is such that every man, woman and child should possess a liberal education. The intelligence of the people is one of the biggest assets to civilization and we cannot maintain a high type of civilization unless we educate the people.

We believe that education in itself is neither good nor bad, but that it becomes one or the other in accordance with its content and the motive of its possessor. Education can be used to make the world worse or better, and it is therefore, very necessary the kind of an education we should seek if we are interested in the kind of character that we desire to produce.

One of the chief objects of the Christian college is to train men and women for Christian leadership. The Church so believes in such an idea that it maintains, at great sacrifice, her educational institutions. Churches have not been able to successfully develop that have not loyally supported strong institutions of learning. The Christian schools are realizing as never before the great demand for their product, and most certainly they should be supported in every way.

For a man to give his money to an educational institution and then send his children elsewhere is only half-hearted loyalty. We have many cases of this kind in the Southern Christian Convention. If the members of the Church are in earnest about the support of Elon they should send their sons and daughters there. The graduates of a college make it great. Money alone will not suffice; and unless a college is able to secure patronage, train its students, and send them out into the world better men and women, its primary object will be defeated.

With a world lying prostrate, nations forlorn and sick, almost every creed conceivable seeking the place on the world's platform, with high-handed radicalism bringing the world to shame and disgrace, all call attention to the fact that we need to educate the heart and not the head only. Surely no man or woman who has been trained in a Christian school could take up the bloody dagger to drive his or her fellowman to misery! Nothing less than a proper education can equalize the world's thought and bring chaos to an organized basis.

"The essential to a Christian civilization is intelligent Christian character and it has been proved that the world's leaders are its educated men and women. Hence it is pre-eminently the duty of the Church to provide a thoroughly trained Christian leadership—men and women who, whether in the ministry, in missionary service, or in any other professions or occupations of life, devote sound bodies and trained minds to the realization of the ideals of Jesus Christ."

The financial support of a college is exceedingly important in these crisis times. We do not have at our disposal a recent report of the Association of American Colleges, but its report of March, 1917, states that a college with five hundred students, to be efficient, should have a plant and equipment amounting to $985,000, with an endowment of $2,215,000, making a total of $3,200,000. The income from student fees and tuition should be $56,000, and from endowment $110,750, making a total of $166,750. We note that this same report says that $166,750 should be the expense for administration, instruction, and maintenance.

One very important factor in education during the past few years is the salary problem. The advance in salaries has not been in proportion to the increase in wages in general industries. According to the figures obtained by the Interechurch World Movement the salaries of professors in American colleges were not increased but about 30 per cent during the past four years, while it goes without saying that the cost of living has far exceeded that percentage. The work of an educator is peculiar and he should certainly have every possible freedom of mind if he is to be expected to produce the largest possible efficiency in his work.

Our thoughts along the line of education should be directed to every school in which we are interested—and that should be all of them. We cannot have young men and women to enter our college unless we first put them through a proper process of high school training. Our college is of great importance, but without the home base we cannot maintain it.

Many sections were unable to have schools last year on account of the shortage of teachers. In North Carolina alone there were 403 schools that could not open their doors for the lack of teachers. Of these 223 were of the white race and the remainder of 180 Negro schools. If these schools averaged only fifty pupils each, that meant a total of 20,150 children who were robbed of the privilege of attending school last year. This is a sad fact indeed for such a thing to occur while the nation is rolling in wealth. It was quoted in THE SUN a few weeks ago that "A nation that rides in automobiles should not permit its children to walk in ignorance." How long shall we be satisfied to train our boys to drive cars and let them grow up in ignorance?

We know of nothing which you can purchase where you get more for your money than in a college education. If each student were required to pay his or her full expenses, a college education would be almost impossible. Thirty-nine per cent of the income of American colleges comes from students; 30 per cent from endowment and 31 per cent from annual gifts. This means that for each 39 cents which a student invests in college, from endowment and gifts he receives 61 cents. How many of us think of it in this light when we figure on the cost of an education? If a college depended upon the income from students for its support it would fall $61 short on every $100 of expense, and the institution would be bankrupt before the completion of its first term.

There are four valuable contributions in this issue of THE SUN on the subject of education. Dr. J. E. Rawles, Suffolk, Va., writes a pointed lay sermon on "Elon and the Laymen of the Church;" Pastor Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C., speaks forcibly on "Elon and the Ministry of the Church;" Dr. J. O. Atkinson cites us to "Elon and Progress in the Southern Christian Convention;" Mr. L. M. Cannon entertains us in a very pleasing manner on "Elon as a Student Views Her," while Dr. W. P. Lawrence writes as a member of the faculty on "Elon As a Faculty Member Sees It." These five papers are fine endorsements of our own college and should be read by our people. May they have such a recognition!

ENDORING THE CHURCH SCHOOL

William Allen White, editor of the "Emporia Gazette," and author of "A Certain Rich Man" and other books, although not a church member, assisted in raising a large sum for a Presbyterian college. When asked why he did this he replied, "No boy or girl is fitted for the finer leadership without a religious education." The denominational colleges are training the future doctors, lawyers, ministers, farmers, nurses, mothers and fathers for "the finer leadership."

Governor Burke, of North Dakota, said: "I am particular in favor of denominational institutions because they not only tend to develop the physical and mental, but the moral man as well."

Mr. Edward O. Sisson in "The Atlantic Monthly," states the situation in America thus: "Increased demand upon character and diminished care for the cultivation of character." He adds this warning, "So far as we know history has no instance of a national character built up without the aid of religious instruction, or of such character long surviving the decay of religion. The final question regarding education is whether it avails to produce the type of character required by the republic and the race."

There is no discounting the statement made by the Department of the Interior: "Army life has demonstrated more clearly than it has ever been demonstrated before that the man who has received higher education, whether it be general or specific, possesses an enormous advantage over his less well trained fellows in the call for leadership."

"It has been demonstrated that ideals for a nation can be conceived by national leaders and then made universally effective within the nation by means of an educational system. The outlook, ideals and ambitions of a great nation can be transformed and made distinctive and dynamic in less than two generations, through a national educational program."—Norman E. Richardson.

"An efficient system of industrial education can accomplish three things: it can raise the general average of intelligence; it can develop specialized talent; and it can offer the opportunity for genius to find itself."—Person, "Industrial Education."

"The administration of American education is commonly democratic and local, by which is meant that ultimate control lies in the hands of representatives of the people, and the units of administration are small rather than State-wide."—Snedden, "Vocational Training."

Testifying In Behalf of Education's Cause

ELON AND PROGRESS IN THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

What the Christians in the Southern Convention needed most of all thirty years ago was a nucleus about which to gather, a center around which to rally, an institution of common ownership and united fellowship. In answer to that supreme need came Elon College. There could have been no happier supply of that need than a Christian College, for this at once challenged the faith and resources of the Church, and began at once to add to the faith and ability of the Church in every way. During the first year of the college three ministers constituted the senior and graduating class and from Elon as a center went out as ambassadors of God and Alma Mater. Since that time it has been perfectly natural and normal for those of our number looking to the ministry to go for their training to their own institution.

Elon then has been a common camping ground for our ministers, a meeting place where strong friendships have been formed, and ministerial ties and associations have welded into bonds of affection, fellowship and devotion that could not be severed. One of the big assets that makes for progress emanating from Elon has been the meeting and mingling and studying together there of our ministers during their days of preparation. Through this medium they have common interests, united objectives and similar ideals.

The College being the first of our institutions or interests owned in common, and sustained by united and co-operative effort and sacrifice, has been coterminous with our progress and development. It unified us for other activities, and solidified our efforts at progress and achievement. Elon was the first part of a constructive program, and has played a leading part in that program for the past thirty years. It blazed the way for other co-operative efforts, and made easy other great tasks of the Church.

Out into the churches, Sunday schools, Endeavor Societies, missionary organizations, have gone hundreds of our promising young people who learned each other at Elon, and obtained knowledge and inspiration there that made them want to see their church go forward in all its tasks and undertakings.

Our best sentiments, our noblest ideals, our holiest aspirations have been cherished and intensified as our young people have studied, labored and learned together at Elon, and progress along all lines of Kingdom service and activity has been experienced and marked beyond computation.

The only reason why more progress has not been made, and a larger service rendered, is because so many of our people have educated their sons and daughters elsewhere than in their own college and so deprived us of that co-operative activity necessary to progress and development. Because of what Elon has done for the Church in the largest and best sense of the word, because of the progress and devotion centered in it, and making it hallowed, and because of the noble sacrifices ever made, and constantly being made, to sustain and secure it, Elon should have the ready patronage and the willing support of all our constituency and fellowship everywhere. A larger, better, stronger Elon means a larger, better, more progressive Church here in the South.

ELON COLLEGE AS SEEN BY A MEMBER OF THE FACULTY.

The College might be spoken of in various ways. I shall endeavor to give my impression of it, not from the point of view of its history or of material equipment or of endowment, or of its future, but from the three standpoints: an institution of learning, a place for character development and finally an opportunity for life investment.

As a center of learning, Elon has striven arduously but successfully for recognition in the world of education. From the standpoint of the denomination, its influence and efficiency have constantly increased until Elon is the educational mecca of the Church that sponsors it, throughout seven or eight states. The College is sensible of the great value placed upon knowledge in society generally. It knows that illiteracy is embarrassed and cowed in the presence of knowledge. It knows that learning opens vistas to the mind and soul totally obscured from human sight by the fog of ignorance. The College faculty is keenly sensible, too, of the limitations of knowledge possessed by a college faculty. No member of a college faculty knows it all, or is universally liked by the students. It is a part of a youth's training to learn to submit to the rulership of one he does not approve in all things. All in all, this faculty member is of opinion gathered by study and teaching in one college and four universities that Elon is filling its mission very well, from the standpoint of education. The teaching is being done well, though the number of subjects taught and the size of the library for research will be greater as the years come and go. The scope of the denomination in all its institutions is widening. The College will be held at high tension to meet ever increasing demands of learning.

As a place for a youth to develop character, Elon is, without doubt, the best educational institution of which I have ever have been intimately acquainted. The institutions alluded to in the preceding paragraph are: Elon, University of Wooster, Ohio; University of North Carolina, Yale, Harvard, University of Chicago, and Oxford. There may be certain points of superiority in any one of these institutions other than Elon, but here there is a combination of favorable conditions as I have recognized nowhere else. Do not understand that I expect every youth, who comes under these influences, to develop a strong righteous character. The facts prove otherwise. Some students turn out to be very objectionable characters. Some will be thieves, liars, foolish. Let the youth look for opportunities for developing righteous character and he will find such opportunities here in abundance.

My final observation here is that at Elon, a faculty member has a good opportunity for investing his life. Here the investment is in a growing institution of learning, that was born with the spirit of faith. (The apostle Paul said faith was one of three great spirits). It is an institution full, also, of the spirit of frugality. Whatever may be any reader's opinion, a comparison with other institutions of like efficiency will convince you. Here a faculty member works more for humanity and less for money, which is a wholesome consideration in any calling. A faculty member may sow here in fallow ground that is yielding bountifully,—in a soil that is most surely to yield abundant fruit in future enlightened Christian society. Who wants to invest his life better?

A FACULTY MEMBER.

ELON AND THE LAYMEN OF THE CHURCH

By J. E. Rawls, M. D.

"You have a dollar. I have a dollar. We swap. Now you have my dollar. And I have yours. We are no better off.

"You have an idea. I have an idea. We swap. Now you have two ideas. And I have two ideas. There's the difference."

The foregoing emphasizes the fact that the material world does not carry us very far in life. It is deceptive—it is misleading. It is the false philosophy of the commercial world of today and is ultimately self-destructive. The quotation further punctuates the life and constructive power of ideas which are parented by the mind. It is important that we get correct ideas as they directly determine the work of our hands and shapen our destiny. Correct ideas of life lead to truth. "Truth is the logic of the universe: it is the reasoning of Destiny: it is the mind of God." This brings us to the subject of education.

Education may be both false and true. The former destructive and perishable, the latter constructive and eternal. True education of an individual is the mediator that stands between his body and his soul. It reaches down into the mire of human weaknesses and imperfections purifies, enhances, and lifts his body up and presents it as a co-worker to his immortal soul. It is the inseparable link that unifies the trinity—body, mind and soul—and makes him a perfect man.

There are institutions such as colleges and universities whose mission it is to educate. Some emphasize the physical, others the mental, while others the spiritual development and training. There is still another class of schools that realize that man is not wholly physical, mental or spiritual but is made of muscle, brain and soul, and to make the most perfect individual one must not be neglected at the expense of the other, but each must be developed to bring about the most perfect and harmonious whole. The Christ was of sound body and mind.

Elon College as an institution believes in the trinity of the individual and thus belongs to the latter class. In emphasizing her athletic sports and mental training she is not forgetful of the spiritual body, of true Christian character. She realizes that the mission of the physical body and mind are to serve as a dwelling place and work-shop for true Christian character. In this way man may become perfected and give Christian service to mankind. This is a noble mission for any institution and from past records Elon has been faithful and served her purpose well. Her future success is primarily determined, as that of the past, by the genuine support of the laymen of the Church—by the services of each individual of the Christian Church. Elon can be no stronger than this support. Her weaknesses, if there be any, are not hers, but ours. She is but a mirror that reflects the life of the Church.

We must support her materially, mentally and spiritually. There are many ways in which we can aid her materially. One of which we wish to emphasize. It is true that money is essential and necessary, but personal patronage is the greater to be desired. It is a reflection upon the institution and a mockery to the public when we lend our support financially and patronize some other institution that does not offer any better advantages and quite frequently inferior. Just why this is we do not understand. If the will or judgment of the parent is defeated by that of the child, then the parent should wrap up in swaddling clothes, lie in the cradle, suck the bottle, allow the unfortunate child to put on parent's dress, sit at the head of the table and govern the home to its inevitable and ultimate destruction. The spirit of such material support says I will feed you from my back door, but you cannot come in the front, and eat at my table. This has a stinting and destructive influence.

We should as laymen give thought to the welfare of the institution. Plan for her advancement and develop ourselves mentally that the institution may grow proportionally.

To these we must give her spiritual power and life. A life brought about by prayer, Christian service and devotion. Yes, may we realize that her blood is our blood, her thought our thought, her spirit our spirit for she is our child.

ELON AS A STUDENT VIEWS HER

For the past three years it has been my privilege and good fortune to have been a student at Elon College. Probably I should say that I have been in attendance there for my professors may object to the statement that I have been a student. But be that as it may I have been there three brief and happy years and when it comes time to say good-bye to my Alma Mater I will be loath to go because I have learned to love Elon.

Students come and students go and many different types of students go to Elon, as is the case with all institutions of learning. Probably there are as many different views held of her, meaning Elon, as there are students in attendance. I have heard many views expressed by different individuals and no two of them will exactly coincide. Yet in the main the great majority are agreed on the more fundamental principles.

There are exceptions, of course. Some students go to Elon occasionally who refuse to accept the standards and principles of the institution. They pull against the established principles and soon find themselves out of harmony with affairs in general. These students, however, are the exception and not the rule.

The average student uses more judgment. He goes to Elon, falls in line with the advancing tide and works in harmony with his fellow students. He does this because he knows a good thing when he sees it. The traditions and principles of the College are for good and naturally this brings a good influence to bear on the students. Now by this I do not mean that all of us are good all the time. In fact, speaking from my own personal experience, I might go so far as to say that possibly there may be one or two little escapades, with which I have been connected, that a fellow would hardly want seen in public print and of which he would have no cause to feel proud.

This may be, and unfortunately, is all too true. Yet the influence that Elon exerts is good and tends to, and lives of the students. It is hard to ignore this influence and so we usually do not. No, all of us are not good all the time but the tendency is for the most of us to be good most of the time.

The social life is democratic. This is a great thing both for the College and for the students. Everybody knows everybody else and all of us have common interests. In some ways it is just like a big family and when I am away from the College and run across another Elonite it is a real joy to my heart. While Elon is not a pleasant place for loafing at all, it offers real enjoyment to the students who are in earnest.

Speaking as a member of the student body I am sure I am right in saying that the average student views Elon as a place of development, opportunity and promise and an institution worthy of our highest and best efforts.

L. M. CANNON.

Victor Cousins, in addressing the French Chamber of Peers, said: "Any system of school training which sharpens and strengthens the intellectual powers, without at the same time affording a source of restraint and counter-check to their tendency to evil, is a curse rather than a blessing.

ELON AND THE MINISTRY OF THE CHURCH

The Christian Church is ministered to by an ever increasing number of men who have received their training at Elon. What has Elon given to the Church through the lives of these men? They have received a college education, a thing whose value is so well known today that it would be presumptuous to attempt to enumerate its advantages. It has done more, however, than to educate these men. It has set an educational standard for the ministry which is accepted by both ministers and laymen of the Southern Christian Convention.

There are, however, other colleges in the South. The ministers of the Christian Church could have received a college education if there had never been an Elon. But they have received at Elon what they could not have received at another college. She has imbued them with the spirit, and the purpose of the Christian Church. A denomination like a person has distinguishing characteristics, the understanding and appreciation of which can only be acquired through personal contact. Elon has focused these characteristics of the Christian Church in an institution. There the ministers of the Church imbibe the spirit of the Christian Church and go out to interpret it to the world.

Elon has also given to the ministry of the Church a common heritage whose influence has enabled them to undertake the task which confronts the Church with a unity of perspective and a singleness of purpose, the value of which it is impossible to determine. If men are to co-operate in a great enterprise they must learn to view it in a similar light. They must have an understanding in common of the purpose of the enterprise. And they must learn to address themselves to the task in a harmonious manner. Elon, through her influence on the ministers she has trained, has given to the Church a unity that would not have otherwise been possible.

Elon has also done much to strengthen the ties of brotherly affection between the ministers of the Church. There is nothing that brings men together so quickly as having labored at the same tasks and passed through the same experiences. If it be nothing more than an operation for appendicitis, two men who have undergone it have much in common, as you will quickly learn if you hear them compare experiences. When two men have spent four years within the walls of the same institution, sat at the feet of the same professors, and caught the atmosphere that pervades that institution, they are quick to recognize their bonds of kinship. This is especially noticeable in the case of Elon men, as I have often heard it commented upon by those who were not members of our Church.

An institution of learning, like a factory, stamps its impress upon the finished product. The men whom Elon has given to the Church bear its trademark. If they endure the test of time: if they measure up to the responsibility that is placed upon them: if they achieve success of which to be justifiably proud, then all honor to the institution that has given them to the world. For more than a quarter of a century ministers who have been trained by Elon, and who bear the stamp of Elon's methods, atmosphere and ideals have been giving their lives to the Church. "By their fruits ye shall know them." And by their fruits you may judge what Elon has contributed to the Christian Church through the lives of the ministry she has trained.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

TWO DISAPPOINTMENTS

Last spring when we were ready to plant our crop of Irish potatoes, we made our calculations to have 150 bushels and thought we would plant Irish Cobblers. We selected ground that had never failed us and bought our seed, but in the lot, part of the potatoes were not Irish Cobblers. But as they were sold for seed potatoes, we thought it would be all right to plant them. Half of our patch was planted in the new seed. This new kind made vines, and we were happy to see how they grew. They looked more vigorous than the others, but when it was time to make potatoes they were not there, and then we were at a loss to know the trouble. We let them grow till the vines died, and then dug them. The Irish Cobblers made eighty-five bushels. The new kind made twenty bushels. It disappointed us to have spent so much work on something that gave us such a small yield.

Our next disappointment came on the first Sunday in August. We had made an appointment for the Singing Class to render a program at Pleasant Hill Christian church and had made arrangements several days before for a machine to take part of the girls. On Saturday night about eight o'clock, we received word that the man had broken his machine and could not furnish it. We then got busy to make other arrangements to get the Class there. We called man after man, but all were engaged for Sunday. Finally, about ten-thirty that night, we found a man who had a machine and who promised faithfully that he would have it at the Orphanage on Sunday morning at eighty-thirty o'clock. We waited till nine-thirty, and went to see what his trouble was. He informed us that he had broken it Saturday night and could not let us have it. We went to work again, determined not to be out done, and get the Class there on time. We called up friend after friend but to no avail. Every man was going to use his machine. We then tried to 'phone the people at the church that we could not possibly get there but the 'phone went "dead" and we could not get through. We tried until we found that we could not reach any one who could make the announcement and gave up, feeling that we had done our best.

I was in a man's office on Monday and noticed this motto on the wall and copied it, so that I could keep it before me:

"It is easy enough to be pleasant when life flows along like a song; but the man worth while, is the one who will smile, when everything goes dead wrong."

CAN YOU PROVE YOUR RIGHT TO VOTE?

The right to vote is only one of many important rights which may be difficult to prove without legal evidence. Because a birth record is the best evidence of age, parentage and citizenship, and because of the importance to the individual and to society of careful birth records, the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor in a pamphlet recently issued recommends better birth registration as the first measure in a Children's Year follow-up program.

Only twenty-three states and the District of Columbia now keep birth records with sufficient accuracy and completeness to admit them to the U. S. birth registration area. These States are California, Connecticut, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, Washington and Wisconsin. They represented, in 1919, 58.4 per cent of the population of the country.

Children now being born in the remaining twenty-five states representing almost half of the population may be seriously embarrassed in not possessing a birth certificate when the time comes to prove that they are old enough to go to school, to leave school, to go to work, to vote, to marry. They may have trouble in proving their title to inherited property in the absence of proof of parentage, and their right to hold public office or receive passports for foreign travel may be questioned if evidence of citizenship furnished by a birth certificate is lacking.

The community also is handicapped in undertaking measures for the protection of life and health if it does not have vital statistics based on satisfactory birth and death records. Important welfare work for mothers and babies is impossible without careful birth registration. The phenomenal growth in "health visiting" of babies in England during the last five years is attributed to the Notification of Births Act of 1915, which made notification within three days compulsory throughout the kingdom.

Vigorous effort for one year, declares the Children's Bureau pamphlet, would place every State in the United States in the birth registration area. In communities in which there is a good law, not sufficiently enforced, a birth registration test is recommended. In States where there is no adequate law, campaigns for better legislation should be waged.

DEVOTIONAL

WHOSE ARMOR ARE YOU WEARING?

When Saul fitted David out with his armor to fight the enemy all Israel feared he did the worst thing he could do to help win the battle against God's chosen people. At one time Saul might have been of service to David. If he had continued to feel little in his own sight. If he had remained a God-fearing king instead of becoming a man-pleasing king.

Like many present day Christians, Saul had become filled with worldly-wise plans and methods. He had forgotten God and Israel had forgotten God. Their power against the enemy was gone. God had warned Israel many times if they forgot Him punishment would follow. They should have known by this time, and we should remember that in perfect obedience only there is safety. But men still forget. They become filled with great worldly-wise plans and schemes, leaving God out. Oh, perhaps they drag His name and the name of Jesus into their plans, but His will is left out and man's will is substituted. Nothing but defeat can follow.

Saul was a worldly man; David was a man after God's own heart. The world's armor never fits one of God's true servants. It can but hinder him in service. David was fighting for the God Israel had forgotten. No servant of the Lord can fight His battles against evil, in the world's harness, or by using worldly methods. Over and over it has been tried, over and over it has failed. As we have seen individuals and churches trying to do the work of the Lord in the armor of the world, trying out one worldly scheme after another, trying by plays, suppers, contests and many other ways, to do what the Word says should be done by prayer, by tarrying until endowed with the power of the Holy Spirit, it has seemed we could almost hear our Lord's "O fools, and slow of heart to believe."

The laws which God laid down for your life and mine, if obediently kept, bring blessing and happiness. Trust in, and obedience to God, means victory over the enemies which beset God's servants. If we, like David, can say, "I come in the name of the Lord," (we cannot come in the Lord's name except we come in the Lord's own way,) then we, too, can say, "the battle is the Lord's." When the battle is the Lord's, He leads to victory. Perfect obedience to Him, complete trust in Him, utter dependence upon Him, and it makes no difference if the enemy is nine or ninety feet high. It matters not how much he boasts or what threats he makes, God will so steady the hand and so direct the aim that the first stone will lay him low. Are you trying to fight your Lord's battles with some worldling's armor on? Are you trying to build up His church by some worldly-wise method? Or, have you put on the whole armor of God that you may be able to stand against the evil one's attacks upon your Saviour. His word and His Church? Have you put on the girdle of truth, the breastplate of righteousness and the gospel shoes of peace? Have you the shield of faith, where-with ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked? Have you the helmet of salvation and the sword of the Spirit? Not the sword which has been so mutilated that its effectiveness is gone, but the sword which has been left whole, whose edge is keen? Then are you praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching with all perseverance? It is only in His armor that we can "be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." If you have not yet put it on, will you do it now?

GENERAL NEWS.

Through former Senator Marion Butler, of North Carolina, Chairman Will Hayes, of the Republican national committee announces that the Southern headquarters of the committee will be located in Washington, D. C.

A throng of cheering Democrats at Dayton, Ohio, August 7, estimated between 30,000 and 75,000, witnessed Governor Cox's acceptance of party leadership in the presidential contest.

On their fourth annual farming tour 153 planters, stockmen, bankers and business men from Arkansas reached Wilson, N. C., August 7. They came to study the methods employed by the farmers of Wilson county in the preparation of soil, following planting and marketing crops that grow to proportional size. It was a red letter day in the history of Wilson and a pleasure to impart the knowledge the visitors sought.

Prohibition has not yet made the journey from Seattle to Alaska dry. Travellers shipping from the former point report that after the ships have cleared, cargoes of whiskey are delivered from tugs, and all this in clear view of passengers and crew. Seattle prohibition officers still have a bung-hole to plug up.

The Home Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions have procured the publication of a book by Rev. William E. LaRue, entitled, "The Foundations of Mormonism." This book is almost solitary in its field. It is not denunciatory, nor alarmist in its utterances, but is addressed to the reason of its readers, and by using the historical method examines the historic sources of Mormonism, in such a way as to convince intelligent minds of the fallacies of the system, and to equip those who combat Mormon teachings with material for use.

Rev. S. Hall Young, D. D., the veteran Presbyterian Missionary to Alaska, whose books on Alaska have made him widely known, sets out in August for a four month's trip in Alaska, for purposes of studying particularly unoccupied missionary fields. He represents two boards of his own church and also the Home Missions Council. He expects to be back in New York about January 1, 1921. His report will be of value to all denominations which are doing missionary work in Alaska.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

CONCORD

The revival meeting began at Concord the fourth Sunday in July, 1920. Rev. C. E. Gerringer of Elon College, N. C., came on Monday and did the preaching until he was called home Thursday, the day when the meeting closed. Brother Gerringer did some good preaching. He delivered some plain, clear cut, straight sermons. He sees the conditions of society and of the church militant and gives the gospel prescription for every sin and disease caused by evil. The congregation heard him with undivided attention. He made a fine impression and the people want to hear him again.

The church was much revived and as visible results, two professions and two additions to the church. The offering was taken on Thursday after Brother Gerringer left, which amounted to $31.50, $25.00 being sent to Brother Gerringer as a meager token of appreciation of his service. All glory and praise to the Lord for that which was done.

The third quarterly meeting of the church which was postponed on Saturday was called on Thursday evening. The floor has been carpeted since the last business meeting of the church. It was decided during the meeting to sell a parcel of land that belonged to the church that it did not need, the returns of which will go to painting of the church building on the outside. The deacons were empowered to make the sale and give the deed. Brother J. W. Massey was made chairman of the committee.

At this sitting the church gave a unanimous call to the present pastor for another year with an increase in salary. May the Lord guide us in the right decision. This is a good people to serve. May the Lord lead them on to do greater things.

POPE'S CHAPEL.

It was the happy privilege of the writer to be with Rev. B. F. Black, in a meeting at Pope's Chapel the last week in July. I was there in a meeting sixteen years ago and it was a great pleasure to meet so many old friends again.

We struck a very busy time with the farmers which cut down the attendance, but the interest was good and the Lord blessed us in the service.

Brother Black has the confidence and love of his people and is doing a great work in his field.

DEEP CREEK AND HOPEDALE MEETINGS

The meeting at Deep Creek began July 4, and closed July 12. As a result ten were converted. The next meeting was held at Hopedale, beginning July 13, and lasted two weeks. Bro. C. Rowland, of Texas, did all the preaching, while the writer did the opening and closing. As a result of this meeting Bro. J. F. Apple received six into the church at Hopedale on the first Sunday evening in August and more have given their names to unite later. I am glad to see the membership of this newly organized church at Hopedale grow. The people of Hopedale made a donation of seventy-five dollars while the Deep Creek donation amounted to fifty dollars.

THE BARETT FAMILY REUNION

One of the most interesting occasions of the year, so far, for the central portions of Isle of Wight County, Virginia, came off on August 4, 1920—it was the reunion of the well known Barrett family. It was held at Antioch Christian church, as no one home could accommodate the large number who were expected to attend.

Away back in the latter part of the first half of the last century, John and Mary J. (Holland) Barrett established their home in the central part of Isle of Wight County and reared a large family. The heads of this family have long since passed away, but the family has continued to grow till now it is probably one of the largest families in Eastern Virginia, numbering now more than two hundred persons, of whom one hundred and seventy-four, by actual count, were present on the occasion of this reunion.

As the family has grown it has become widely separated, geographically speaking. They are represented in the states of Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Oklahoma, Porto Rico and Canada. Of these several sections of the country, there were representatives present from Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Pennsylvania and Porto Rico.

This family gathering came together at 11 o'clock, a. m., on Wednesday, August 4, 1920, when the following order of services was observed:

1. Hymn—Coronation.
2. Invocation by Rev. J. W. Barrett, Norfolk, Va.
3. Hymn by the choir and congregation.
4. The family Poem, by Mrs. Hettie Davis Lewis.
5. Reading of the 103 Psalm.
6. Prayer by Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., Dendron, Va.
7. Brief Introductory Remarks, by Rev. H. H. Butler, Suffolk, Va.
8. Song by the Barrett choir.
9. Five-Minute talks by various persons present in the audience.
10. Solo by Rev. J. C. Barrett, Madisonville, Pa.
11. Address by Rev. D. P. Barrett, Ponce, Porto Rico.
12. Short sermon by Rev. J. P. Barrett, Columbus, Ga.

Then came the closing hymns, after which the formal exercises of the day were dismissed and the entire congregation was invited to the grove in the church yard to partake of an old fashioned country dinner with the Barrett family seated at the head of the first table. The dinner was free to all.

At the close of the dinner, the people lingered in the church yard and in the nearby cemetery, where many of the visitors have loved ones sleeping in their last earthly resting place, till the sun was low in the West. The day was one to be long remembered, both because of the pathetic interest in the occasion and by the further fact that it was no doubt the last time many of this numerous family would meet again as on that day in their earthly pilgrimage.

The occasion of this reunion was the third home-coming of Rev. D. P. Barrett and family from Porto Rico in the last twenty years, where he has served as a missionary. Mrs. Barrett, who was formerly Miss Eva Read, of Norfolk, Va., was present and presided at the organ. The father and mother and their children, sang in the Spanish language.

Though the heads of this large family were plain and humble people, yet their character ideals were lofty and real. In the remarks of several of the impromptu speakers, who had known John and Mary Barrett in the days of their earthly pilgrimage, beautiful tributes were paid to their memory, and also to the memory and high Christian character of Deacon Joseph A. Barrett, their eldest son, who died April 12, 1902.

The occasion was one of more than ordinary interest, and will long mark an era in the history of this family and community.

UNION, N. C.

The protracted meeting at Union, N. C., began on the fourth Sunday in July and closed on the following Thursday. The attendance and interest were good from the beginning till the close. The fellowship was delightful.

Bro. W. L. Wells, of Reidsville, came to us on Monday, July 26, and remained till the meeting closed. His sermons were good. He presented gospel truth in a clean, clear-cut, forceful way.

There were twenty-two professions, thirteen additions to the church on profession of faith and twelve baptisms. There is one other who joined to be baptized.

I know of no community that has so many young people who attend church and they are interested. The outlook for Union is good.

P. H. FLEMING.

KITTERY POINT, MAINE.

The Christian Endeavor Society of the First Christian church of this place held a social at Sea Point July 29. There was a good crowd there and games were played on the beach in the light of the moon. All who were present had a good time and the fellowship of the church was increased by this manner.

On each Tuesday night the Christian Endeavor Society holds its prayer and praise service which is one of the very best meetings of the church. The prayer meeting held by the Society happens to be the only mid-week prayer service held by any church in the town of Kittery Point. There are two other churches, the Baptist and Congregational, but they do not have any mid-week prayer service. This, we think, is a distinction of which the church here might well be proud.

Our work continues to progress and we have several names which we hope to take in as members before many weeks pass. This is a great field for service and it is the present pastor's wish that he may be able to do a great and good work here for the rebuilding of the Kingdom that Christ established by the life that He lived. The prayers of God's people are asked that we may live up to opportunities of the hour and fail not to meet the need of the community in which we reside.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR AUGUST 22, 1920

A Prayer for Pardon.—Psalms 51:1-17.

Golden Text: Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin.—Psalms 51:2.

Additional material for teachers.—II Sam. 11-12; Matt. 18:15-20.

David sinned, and was not enjoying to the fullest extent his kingship. He had indirectly committed murder in the killing of Uriah by having him placed in the front line of battle that he might be killed by the enemy. In his prayer for pardon he acknowledges that his sin is ever before him. His conscience was hurting him, and he cries out, "Deliver me from blood guiltiness, O God, thou God of my salvation; and my tongue shall sing aloud of thy righteousness." God heard and answered David's prayer, so will he hear the backslidden church member when he comes to God in earnest. It seems that sin was never more prevalent than at present. The chaotic condition of the world can only be remedied by the return of the backslidden church to a throne of prayer until God shall hear and forgive it of its sin. It seems that the church militant is seeking more after worldly pleasure and the things of the world than it is after serving God and doing his will. God has commanded us to be obedient and just so far as we heed all will be well. But when we let sin into our lives then God will permit suffering, strife and unrest of every description to be rampant in the world.

Our prayers should be that the sinner may see as David did, the awfulness of sin, until he shall be heard to cry out, "Wash me thoroughly from my sin." The sinner may seemingly prosper for a while, but like David there will come a time when the evil deeds he has committed will be ever before him. God realizes man's weakness and when man is willing to acknowledge all his sin to God he is faithful and just to forgive of all unrighteousness.

Questions to Consider.

Why do the amusements of the world attract more people than the church of God?

What am I to do to make the world better?

If every member of the church did as I do, what kind of a church would our church be?

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR AUGUST 22, 1920.

"Receiving Praise and Giving It." (Rom. 1:8; I Thess. 1:2-10.)

Praise is given to us, not that we may become vain and puffed up, but that we may be encouraged. If received in the right spirit, it will stimulate us to greater endeavor and larger service. Do not give praise too sparingly: Ten are weakened from a lack of it, where one is spoiled by having too much.

Do not save all good things to say after friends are dead; cheer their hearts and brighten their lives by saying some of them to the living. We render a beautiful service by placing flowers on the graves of our dead, but a service that is more beautiful is putting these flowers in their hearts by kind words and loving deeds.

Apply the principle everywhere. If the employe on your farm, in your store, office or shop pleases you tell him so. If you appreciate the friendship of a companion tell him so. If you like the treatment of your employer let him know it. When your pastor preaches a good sermon tell him so.

The Christian Endeavor has a great field for the bestowal of praise, where it will count the most. The praise and encouragement of every effort of the young endeavorer will work wonders in developing a strong working church for the future.

Questions To Be Answered in the Meeting.

Why is it better to praise the living than the dead?

What should we praise in the lives of others?

Why do beginners in church work need to be praised?

NOTES

Rev. L. F. Johnson, a former pastor of the Greensboro church, preached there last Sunday.

Rev. C. A. McDaniel, Milford, N. J., has been extended a call to the Winchester, Virginia, church and has accepted. We understand that he will begin his work about October 1.

The newly organized Christian church, Washington, D. C., was admitted to Conference membership in the recent session of the Virginia Valley Central Conference.

We are grateful to those who have renewed their subscriptions to THE SUN during the past few weeks. The number has been comparatively small, but we are thankful.

Rev. R. P. Crumpler, Varina, N. C., is soon to move to the Virginia Valley Conference and take charge of the field soon to be vacated by Rev. B. J. Earp, who will enter Vanderbilt University about September 1.

Rev. Geo. D. Eastes, Raleigh, N. C., is open for evangelistic work in any community and invites correspondence with ministers of the Christian Church or any other denomination.

Brother C. A. Hines, a member of our Greensboro church and attorney for the Gate City, has formed a partnership with Attorneys Aubrey L. Brooks and Richard C. Kelly, making the firm of Brooks, Hines and Kelly.

Miss Bessie I. Holt faithfully represented THE SUN at the Virginia Valley Conference last week. This was no new work for "Miss Bessie," she having done splendid work for this office before. We are grateful to her and all who assisted her.

We have received a copy of "The Church Bulletin" issued by the First Christian Church, Winchester, Va., and congratulate pastor and officials on their plan. "The Bulletin" is a 6x9 4-page sheet and contains announcements of services, items of interest, among the members, etc.

Rev. G. O. Lankford writes from East Northfield, Mass., under date of August 5: "My people very kindly tendered me a vacation for the month of August, and I am spending the time in New England. Just now I am attending the Northfield Bible Conference. Will be here until about August 15, before visiting other sections. It is a privilege and an inspiration to be here."

The following will be read with much interest by many SUN readers: "Doctor and Mrs. John W. Manning request the pleasure of your company at the marriage of their daughter, Lucile Virginia, to Mr. Fred Fletcher Myrick, on Saturday, August the twenty-first, nineteen hundred and twenty at six o'clock, 4801 Newport Avenue, Norfolk, Virginia. At home after September fifteenth, Elon College, North Carolina."

Through an oversight last week we failed to make mention that the Singing Class of the Christian Orphanage was to visit Driver, Suffolk, Mt. Carmel, Antioch and Franklin churches of the Eastern Virginia Conference on August 7 and 8. These five engagements were filled and the Class reports a good time. Brother Johnston and his assistants accompanied the children. The planning of the trip, we understand, was largely in the hands of Brother J. M. Darden.

THE SUN's editor was privileged last Sunday of having with him Dr. J. P. Barrett, of Columbus, Ga. Dr. Barrett was returning from a trip to Eastern Virginia, where he attended the Barrett reunion and took a part as reported elsewhere in this issue. Dr. Barrett's twenty-four years experience in editorial work—twelve with THE SUN and twelve with The Herald of Gospel Liberty—places him in a position to give some good advice in many directions. It was a source of great pleasure to the Editor and family to have Dr. Barrett make this visit, which he had promised sometime ago to make.

HOW AMERICAN COLLEGES ARE SUPPORTED

From endowment	30%
From annual gifts	31%
From students	39%
Total	100%

What then shall we say if a Church paper does not receive enough from its subscribers (the same as students to a college) to meet its expenses? If we are to maintain colleges when they receive only 39 per cent of their expenses from students, shall we not maintain Church papers when they are able to realize 50 per cent or more from their subscribers?

The Western Indiana Christian Conference for several years has in its annual sessions provided in its program for a number of Bible Study periods, inviting some minister of well known Biblical culture to give these studies. This year they have invited Rev. J. Pressley Barrett, D. D., of Columbus, Ga., to give the course. The subjects for this year are: 1.—"The Gospel Ministry in the Light of Bible Teachings. 2.—"Regeneration the Key-Stone in the Christian Life." 3.—"The Bible the Chart and Compass of the Church." 4.—"The Character of God and His Relationship to His People as Revealed in His Names." These studies will be given in the approaching annual session of that Conference August 25, 26. It might be helpful if many of our Conference in the South were to adopt a similar course of action. The "Old Western" of Indiana is one of our strongest Conferences in the Middle West. We are not likely to give too much attention to Bible study, not even in our Conferences.

REV. AND MRS. D. P. BARRETT TO LOCATE AT ELON

The Woman's Board of the North Carolina Conference should count itself fortunate in having Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett locate at Elon College during their stay in the States. No doubt many of our Missionary Societies will avail themselves of the opportunity of having Mr. and Mrs. Barrett visit them.

THE HOME IN JAPAN

An interesting book for your vacation reading is "New Life in the Oldest Empire" by Charles F. Sweet. This book deals with missions in Japan and gives us an insight into the inward workings of Japanese minds and reveals many secrets of Japanese civilization.

We summarize one of the most important chapters, that upon Japanese homes. The family is the centre of everything in Japan. First is the emperor, as the head of the royal family, and then comes every other family in Japan as bound to the imperial family. The custom of ancestor worship perpetuates this idea of the central significance of the family and unites every family to the central family, that of the emperor.

The fundamental thought of marriage in Japan is that it is an institution for the perpetuation of the family. It is for that purpose that the bride goes into the family of her husband and is adopted by it. If the children of a family are all girls, then some man must be found who will come to that family and be adopted by it, taking the family name, marrying one of the girls, and continuing the family, paying divine honors to the ancestors of the family. The Western idea that marriage is the foundation of a new and independent family is not at all a Japanese idea; in Japan marriage is the maintaining of a family that has been in existence for ages.

Therefore it is the family, and not personal inclination, that determines who shall be chosen for this maintaining of the family. The family is a large group, near and distant, and it is the consensus of the entire group that selects the young man or the young woman for the proposed marriage. Then the "go-between" arranges the affair and all is done as the family decrees. In this way a Christian girl may be married to a heathen man and she will have nothing to say about it. She will be taken to her new home. Her father and mother and all the family in which she was born become to her almost as strangers. She must join in worship of the ancestors of her husband's family and must do just what her mother-in-law bids her do.

The Christian Church in Japan sets itself against these mixed marriages. It also requires before marriage the production of a legal certificate that the registration of the bride's residence has been changed from the home of her parents to the home of her prospective husband. Besides this, Christianity in Japan has to face the question of divorce. Divorce in Japan may be obtained for so many reasons that it practically becomes a matter for agreement. In the United States divorce is rapidly increasing. In 1887 there was one divorce for every seventeen marriages. In 1896 one for every thirteen marriages. In 1906 one for every eleven. In 1916 one for every nine marriages. The corrupt practices in America make the teachings of missionaries in respect to divorce in Japan of very little effect.

The Japanese regard for the family has in it much that is admirable and helpful; it certainly tends toward permanence and aids in maintaining the stability which social institutions so much need today. If thoroughly Christianized, it will be a tower of strength not only in Japan, but to all Asia.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE'S WORK CONTINUES TO GROW

I am convinced more and more each day that which our young people want is a chance. Let us give it to them, dear friends.

I have been out for ten days and organized five Young People's Societies. My! what we could accomplish if all our women were really interested to the extent that they would be willing to do their part in their own churches. Just think of it, dear friends, in these five organizations we enlisted seventy-five young people and all five societies confident they can add many more to their number. I feel this is a great responsibility and I need your prayers and co-operation.

Since writing the above I received a letter from Lanett, Ala., saying they have organized a Young People's Society, with twenty-one charter members and confident they can add many more. I wish more of our churches would do as these good friends have done—not wait for me to come. I have been corresponding with some of their young people and sending them literature and am happy in the result. I hope if any of our young people are interested they will write me as I will be so glad to help. Let us have more Perseverance and Prayer.

BESSIE I. HOLT,
Superintendent Young People's Work, Southern Christian Convention.

The kind of citizens we have are the products of our educational systems. Wheat poured into the hopper of the running mill will produce flour; corn meal can only be the product of corn. We must put into the mills of education the material for the product we desire.

"I have no hesitancy in declaring that the first and foremost duty of society, through the agency of the schools, is to make every boy and girl fit to make a living by means of some special knowledge or skill which society has need of."—Gillette, "Vocational Education."

Rev. J. T. Kitchen, Windsor, Va.

For sometime Rev. J. T. Kitchen, Windsor, Virginia, has been furnishing THE CHRISTIAN SUN with interesting and valuable articles. To many of our readers he is personally known, while others have not met him or seen his face. We are, therefore, presenting Brother Kitchen's face to our readers. He has no knowledge of this act of ours. Your friends greet you, Brother Kitchen.

AMERICA'S WORST DAY

THE CHRISTIAN SUN stands for peace, brotherly love, and carries on its face these words: "In Essentials, Unity—In Non-essentials, Liberty—In all Things, Charity" but the present Editor believes that the worst day that America has seen was November 11, 1918—the day on which the armistice was signed. Germany was on her knees ready to raise her hand in surrender and we let her go. We left her with a chance, but she is using it, not as an appreciation of our mercy to her, but to recover and get revenge. We are still at war and the nations of the earth in a turmoil. Every attempt at peace has been thwarted by some bias-minded politician. Public men are spending our millions and giving us no returns. Both parties stand guilty, and this utterance is for the masses who suffer, and not to defend or condemn any party.

A special session of the Legislature of North Carolina convened August 10. The suffrage amendment is one of the big problems to be considered.

MARRIAGES

HARRIS—EDWARDS.

Mr. Surry Sherman Edwards and Miss Willie Harris, of Suffolk, Va., were married Sunday morning, July 25, 1920, at the home of Mr. Richard Brinkley, Gates Co., N. C. Their many friends wish for them a long and happy married life.

DAVIS—TERRELL.

A very romantic marriage occurred at 2:30 p. m., July 27, 1920, when Miss Pearle Davis became the bride of Mr. Johnnie Terrell. They were married by the writer on the public highway, near the residence of Mr. Ed Boswell. Only a few friends were present to witness the ceremony. They will make their home with the groom's parents.

May their married life be long and happy.

OBITUARIES

BROWN

Brother Atlas Brown, one of our leading members of Pleasant Grove church, Randolph county, N. C., passed away suddenly at his home, July 10, 1920. He was sixty-eight years of age at the time of his death. He leaves a wife, seven children, three brothers and two sisters. Brother Brown will be greatly missed in the church and community. Verily a good man has gone to his reward.

G. R. UNDERWOOD.

KING

Our hearts go out in sympathy to the family of Miss Mattie E. King, who passed away Sunday, July 25, 1920. Miss King had been ill at her home for five weeks.

She leaves to mourn their loss three brothers, four sisters, a host of relatives and friends. Miss King's age was forty-four years. She had been a member of Ebenezer Christian church for twenty years.

The remains were laid to rest Monday afternoon in the cemetery of Mt. Olive Baptist church, a place where her father and mother were buried. The services were conducted by the writer. May the Lord bless and comfort those who are bereaved at their loss.

J. E. McCaULEY.

MRS. D. R. FONVILLE—A TRIBUTE

In the passing of Mrs. Lena Ragsdale Fonville, the wife of our Bro. D. R. Fonville, on July 17, 1920, the Burlington Christian church suffered the loss of a valuable member. Though permitted to labor with us so short a period, she endeared herself to all hearts. She proved a valuable worker, efficient in whatever field she attempted to serve. At the time of her passing her special field of service was the Missionary Society, of which she was president. She proved her ability as an official and wisely led the women in their mission work.

In her home she manifested the same characteristics, a faithful and model companion. During the recent war, when her husband felt called to take up Y. M. C. A. work and thereby contribute his bit toward winning the great struggle, her bravery and devotion to duty was especially evident when she consented for him to go soon after their marriage.

As we stood by with the family and watched this young life ebbing away our tears mingled with theirs, but we sorrow not as those who have no hope. We believe it was but the unfolding of a greater and more glorious day. This beautiful life, adorned with many graces and lovely characteristics will be continued in the Heavenly realm, while the sweetness of its memory lingers with us.

J. W. HARRELL, Pastor.

JOHNSON

Nathan Herbert Johnson died at his home near Antioch Christian church, Isle of Wight County, Va., July 6, 1920. He was fifty-one years and twenty-two days old at the time of his death. He was twice married. His first wife was Miss Mattie L. Saunders, while his second was Miss Laura V. Butler. He leaves to mourn his death a wife, two daughters, one son, two grand-children, two brothers, Geo. G. Johnson, of Buckhorn, Va., and H. M. Johnson, of Zuni, Va., two sisters, Mrs. Annie E. Bradshaw and Mrs. Vivian P. Bennett, and a host of friends.

The funeral services were conducted by the pastor at Antioch church and his remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery. God bless the dear bereaved ones.

RAILWAYS SET NEW RECORD FOR HEAVY FREIGHT MOVEMENT

During the week ended July 6th there were loaded on the railways of the South 127,485 cars of commercial freight, an increase of 10,762 cars over the loading for the same week last year and an increase of 3,981 cars over the same week in July, 1918, when every possible effort was being made to rush war material to France. These figures are taken from the records of the commission on car service to which reports are made by all the large railways.

During the three weeks ended July 16th the records of the commission show that there were loaded on the railways of the South 350,962 cars of commercial freight as against 333,937 cars during the same period last year and 352,183 cars during the same period of 1918.

On the railways of the entire country there were loaded during the three weeks ended July 16th 2,521,263 cars as against 2,455,364 during the same period last year and 2,722,562 during the same period of 1918.

These figures show that the railways of the country are not only performing a larger measure of public service than they performed during similar periods of 1919 but that they are closely approaching the records made in 1918 when every nerve was being strained to win the war and the railways of the South have even passed the high record made in 1918.

The Neglected Foundations of Prosperity

From a Commencement Address at Harvard University, by Calvin

Coolidge, June 19, 1919.

IN our pursuit of prosperity we have forgotten and neglected its foundations. It is true that many of our institutions of learning are well endowed and have spacious buildings, but the plant is not enough. I am directing attention to the comparative position of the great mass of teachers and clergymen. They are not properly appreciated or properly paid. They have provided the foundations of our liberties. The importance of their position cannot be overestimated. They have been faithful though neglected; but a state which neglects or refuses to support any class will soon find that such class neglects and refuses to support it. The remedy lies in part with private charity, in part with government action; but it lies wholly with public opinion. Private charity must worthily support its clergymen and the faculty and instructors of our higher institutions of learning; and the Government must adequately reward the teachers in its schools. In the great bound forward which has been taken in a material way, these two noble professions, the pillars of liberty and equality, have been neglected and left behind. They must be re-established. They must be restored to the place of reverence they formerly held.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

THE PASSING OF A GREAT MAN

Honorable J. Frank Hanly, former governor of Indiana, whose tragic death was mentioned in these columns last week, deserves more than a passing mention. Few men impress their generation as did this Christian statesman, and it is beyond human conception to understand why God calls a great moral and religious force in the noon-day of his work.

Hanly was deprived of the new day advantage of many young men, but where there was no way, he made one. He breathed his first in a log cabin, where his parents found hope in their boy in lieu of any wealth. His toil and study had to go hand in hand. His first impress on the public was becoming "school master" in one of the little backwoods districts of his native State. He had a great mind and literally devoured books. Oratory appealed to him and he was not satisfied until he was an orator. He became a great power in the moral uplift of his State and soon won the hearts of his people. The people of his State called him to be their governor. At all times he remained a true Christian and the multiplied thousands to whom he spoke heard him gladly.

Possibly one of the greatest outstanding things of Hanly's life was his opposition to the liquor traffic. He followed it with a hate and openly condemned it on every hand. He saw its legalized power die and pursued its every form as long as he lived endeavoring to make a really "dry" nation.

The life of this great man should be the model of many young men, and here is hoping that Governor Hanly's kind will greatly multiply.

EDITORIAL BREVITIES

Education should be the center thought of the young men and women of our churches during this month. Our future leaders must come from that class of young people who consider carefully and go forth to pursue their studies.

Recently ten thousand persons attended the funeral of a canary bird in a certain city in the United States. The novelty of the thing was the chief reason for the large attendance, but one cannot help but feel the absence of real thinking among people at times. Foolishness is the absence of definite and serious thought. The process of education helps to shape our thinking, hence the need of proper education.

Keeping humble is one of the graces of the Christian life. The world has always paid respect to humility, and always will. Greatness and humbleness may go hand in hand, but the estimation of greatness must be with the public, while humility must lie in the heart of the person who would be so characterized. Be great—that is all right, but let the other fellow make the discovery.

The booming of the two great political campaigns means the bringing of friends to see things at different angles; and if we see differently, we become different. Men should not allow the narrowness of politics to divide them. Many a man will have occasion to test his religion during the next few months, and here is every hope that it will stand the test.

The news is passing around that A. J. Volstead, the author of the "Volstead Act" has been defeated in the seventh district of his State (Minnesota) for his return to Congress. The statement is true, but Mr. Volstead has contested the primary election, charging that his opponent circulated a pamphlet untruly charging him with things of which he was not guilty. Under the Minnesota law, if it can be shown that a successful candidate circulated untrue statements about the unsuccessful opponent, it becomes a cause for disqualification and for declaring the next highest aspirant as the nominee. This would be a good law for any State, and we commend it to the law-makers of North Carolina, who are in session now.

NOTES

Rev. Geo. D. Eastes will begin a meeting with Dr. P. H. Fleming at Haw River, on the fourth Sunday in this month.

Bro. C. A. Howell, of Branford, Florida, in renewing his subscription to THE SUN says: "I have been reading this fine old paper since I was a boy, it then being published at Suffolk, Va., and edited by Mr. Dunbar. I wish it and the present editor continued success."

Rev. James H. Lightbourne and wife are now located in the parsonage of the Memorial Temple, Norfolk, Virginia, and have assumed the duties of the Temple. They enjoyed a good Virginia pounding on the evening of August 5.

Rev. C. J. Felton, Oshawa, Ont., has accepted a call to the Newport News, Virginia, church. Brother Felton is an Eastern Virginian by birth, an Elon graduate, but has been in Canada for several years. THE SUN extends a welcome to Brother Felton back to the Southern field.

We have on hand a communication written from Garner, N. C., and having no name signed. This causes us to say again that names to articles do not have to appear, but we must know who does the writing before we can publish. Sign your name, and if for any reason you wish us to omit it from the article, advise us to that effect.

It is a very difficult thing to mail several thousand papers every week and not lose any of them. Sometimes things go wrong with this office and sometimes in other offices. But when a thing happens week after week, almost without a break, there must be something wrong. Such is the case in routing THE SUN to Suffolk, Va. We have three or four large packages for Suffolk, and almost every week one or more of these bundles go to Norfolk. We have made repeated complaints, and yet the same thing continues to occur. Special attention has been given to the Suffolk mail in our mailing room for sometime to see that no package goes out without being in first class condition. This does not affect the situation. We are assuming that the train clerks put some of the Suffolk mail in Norfolk pouches and Norfolk clerks cut the wrappers without examining them. If some friend of THE SUN in postoffice employment can suggest how we can remedy this thing, let us have the means now.

FROM BROTHER E. C. FRY

To the Editor of The Christian Sun:

Dr. McCord's sudden death made great and unexpected changes in the affairs of our Japan Mission. For we had relied on him for important services in America up to the end of this year and for sorely needed assistance in Japan from the beginning of 1921. Recasting our plans became imperative. The Fry furlough was due in 1920, but, on account of matters connected with the coming World's Sunday School Convention at Tokyo and for other reasons bearing on the work of our Japan Mission, it had been postponed a year. Under the pressure of new conditions it was decided that the interests of the work in Japan require a reversal of this, that return to the field may come in 1921. There is such congestion of travel across the Pacific that usually passage must be engaged some five months in advance. On short notice I could secure passage for myself alone and not for my family. I am worn thin and need a furlough of regular length. Mrs. Fry wants a shorter one, and prefers it as a six months' summer trip. Accordingly, if a passport difficulty in regard to Maki can be overcome, they will join me in America next April, returning to Japan with me in September, 1921.

I left Japan July 10 by the "Empress of Russia," together with Bro. Garman, who is making a flying trip to America this summer. We crossed in a few hours over nine days;—by far my quickest trans-Pacific passage, and the only one I ever made without encountering storm.

I am writing this at the Oregon home of my mother, (88 years old). After a few weeks spent in rest,—visiting relatives,—I expect to take up the usual "deputation" work of a returned missionary. I know that I need not ask for your prayers for me and mine. We have long been conscious that they are already ours.

E. C. FRY.

Lebanon, Oregon, Aug. 10, 1920.

A SOLID FINANCIAL BASIS FOR THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Everything is at least 200 per cent higher than it was when THE SUN was dropped to $1.50 per year. Add 200 per cent to $1.50 and you have $4.50, but make it $4.00 per year, and you will have a good financial foundation. Then average a sliding scale, so that, when prices drop on the substantial products of life,—drop the price of THE SUN, and when they advance, advance the price of THE SUN.

You may think THE SUN family will not stand for it but I believe that they will, if properly explained. When I commenced taking THE SUN, the price was $3.00 per year. Labor is on an average of, at least, 200 per cent higher than it was fifteen years ago.

Brother Riddle, read and pray over these lines. I expect next week, when I reach home, to send my check for a renewal, at the rate of $4.00 for twelve months.

I am for THE SUN, first, last and always. Best wishes.

W. G. CLEMENTS.

Written from Gibsonville, N. C.

Editorial Note: Brother Clements, as most SUN readers know, is a former editor of this paper. His suggestion is good. As stated two weeks ago, THE SUN is now costing $3.20 per subscription to issue. The present price of printing was fixed when paper was 12 cents per pound. It is now from 17 to 20 cents, and an increase in cost of printing THE SUN, is liable to come any day. Other things being taken into consideration, it looks like THE SUN will be forced to ask subscribers to pay value received. This is Brother Clements' proposition.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

ROANOKE, ALA.

Revival services began at Rockstand Christian church Sunday, July 25, and closed July 30. Rev. H. W. Elder, of Richland Ga., did the preaching, while Mr. S. S. Wier had charge of the music. These two men working together did great good. The services were well attended by all denominations. As a result of the meeting twenty-four members were added to the church. Our people are anxious to have Bro. Elder and Bro. Wier another year.

NEW HARMONY

Our meeting at New Harmony began July 31. Bro. John Taylor was with us in these meetings. Bro. Taylor is one of our young men who is making good in the ministry. Mr. S. S. Wier had charge of the music, and his singing was enjoyed by all who heard him. The meeting was a great success. Six members were added to the church as a result.

OTHER REVIVALS IN ALABAMA

Our meeting at Noonday began on Saturday, July 24, and continued through the following Friday. Rev. P. L. Duke came to us on Monday and gave us some very helpful sermons. He greatly endeared himself to the people and we shall be glad to have him with us again. The ordinance of baptism was administered to thirteen applicants as a result of the meeting.

We held our first service at Mt. Zion on Saturday, July 31. Rev. P. L. Duke also did the preaching in this series of meetings. We found the revival in the hearts of the people when the services began as a result of the interest being taken in the Sunday school and prayer meetings. The meeting was a great success, eighteen members being added to the church. Our people at Mt. Zion are learning to do things. Forty-three dollars were paid Brother Duke for his services and they also remembered the pastor in a very substantial way. May the Lord grant us revivals like these all over our country.

LA GRANGE, GA.

The second Christian church of this place was organized February 22, 1920, by Rev. C. W. Hanson. We now have a membership of twenty-three. Up to this time we have been using the auditorium of the International Club House, but as it is not a very desirable place for worship, we have decided to build a church. Mr. R. L. Render, of the Baptist denomination, has given us a very desirable lot and we hope to start the building at an early date. The building committee consists of W. M. Crowder, as chairman, H. H. Toney, W. H. Kistler and our pastor, Rev. C. W. Hanson. The cost of the church will be about $3,000.00, and it will be a struggle for our small membership. We are praying that God will put it into the hearts of the brotherhood at large to help us. Will you, brother, go to God and ask him what he would have you do in this case? For information write W. M. Crowder, 117 Ware St., La Grange, Ga.

HAYES CHAPEL

The meeting began at Hayes Chapel the first Sunday in August and continued until Friday evening following. The attendance was fairly good. We felt that we had to preach to the church at the morning services and to mixed crowds at night.

On Friday at the eleven o'clock hour I used as my subject, "Bible Religion Put to the Test." I tried to show how the Christians stood the test in the prophetic ages—how their religion counted for something worth while to the world, and stated that the world needed just such witnesses to quiet the people of this restless age and bring us back to righteous living. I then took up the New Testament Christians and tried to show how they stood the test in those trying ages, stating that the world needs just such Christians as those. I tried to use the characters, Paul and Silas, to sustain this proposition and found myself unable to call the name of either. In fact, for quite a while I could not speak a word in our language. I spoke in three different tongues for about fifteen or twenty minutes, accenting every word distinctly. In the midst of this experience only one interpretation was given me—viz, "It Is God." My congregation was considerably excited. Following this there was a glorious presence that swept over the entire audience. For more than two hours we were much exhausted. Among those present were Deacon G. O. Barbee, Squire Johnson, Deacon Wall, and others.

We tell this wonderful experience to the Glory of God. At eight o'clock we had a glorious service when twenty-five or thirty rushed to the altar of prayer and in less than an hour all professed faith in Christ.

Rev. Mr. Johnson of the M. E. church conducted the singing and took an active part in the services. His fellowship was sweet, broad and unselfish.

VIRGINIA LETTER

I have just held the last of my four meetings with good results. There were sixty-five professions of faith and forty-nine have been received into membership. I feel that my churches have all had a revival for which I am thankful.

Liberty (Halifax.)

Rev. O. D. Poythress was with me the few following second Sunday in July. Have never had associated with me in a series of meetings a young man more earnest and enthusiastic to win souls. His sermons drew large congregations and there were fifteen professions and eleven accessions to the church. This church is not ten years old. Began with sixteen members and now number about ninety. In the last few years there have been reverses, but the future is brightening.

Lebanon

Dr. C. H. Rowland was here third week in July and preached able sermons throughout the series. There were fifteen professions and ten united with the church. The membership here is not large, but the most liberal of any congregation I serve. Deacon J. H. McAden has been missed from active service since March on account of a complete physical breakdown, but is now convalescent. The church extended me a unanimous call for the fifth time at an increase of thirty-three and one-third per cent in salary.

Hebron

Rev. R. F. Brown assisted here fourth week in July and did splendid work. Attendance good and everybody pleased with Brother Brown. There were ten professions and eleven were received into the church. Hebron has had many draw-backs, but there are a number of devoted and loyal members. The church is becoming more missionary which of itself means prayers. I have accepted a unanimous call to serve this congregation another year.

Union (Virgilia).

Dr. L. E. Smith was with us here at same time meeting was in progress at Hebron. Brother Smith had been away for nine years. He endeared himself to this congregation for faithful services in meetings of 1910 and 1911. In 1910 the church was at a stand-still till the revival, when some twenty-five united with the church and since that time there has been continuous growth. The congregations were an overflow from almost the first service. People would begin gathering long before the appointed hour. Bro. Smith is, in my judgment, one of the strongest preachers in the Convention. Results were twenty-five professions and twenty-one joined church. About half of these were adults. Several others are to join later.

I have served this church nearly thirteen years and hope I may be permitted to remain with them as long as Dr. Staley has served the Suffolk congregation.

SUFFOLK LETTER

The Valley Virginia Central Conference, held in Winchester, Va., August 5-7, was well attended, the time devoted to real business, and the outlook encouraging. New Ministerial additions to the Conference, Rev. A. B. Kendall, D. D., of Washington, D. C., and Rev. A. C. McDaniel, of Milford, N. J., the newly elected pastor of the Winchester church.

Drs. Harper, Atkinson, L. F. Johnson, of Brooklyn, N. Y., I. W. Johnson and Rev. H. R. Clem, of Springfield, Ohio, and his scribe were visitors, together with Harper and Atkinson's families.

The hospitality of the congregation was spontaneous and liberal. Meals seemed more like country bounty than city dinners. The high cost of living did not seem to enter into the menu.

The Winchester church is a splendid brick building, well furnished, with class-rooms that open into main auditorium, where necessary, and well located. It is now out of debt and the new pastor, Rev. A. C. McDaniel, will enter upon his work with good prospect. The congregation is composed of fine people, willing workers, and sufficient means to go forward.

The Conference outlook is brighter than in previous years and the Convention contributions more than doubled last year's collections. This, of course, was gratifying to the leaders and indicates financial growth in the Conference.

The city of Winchester is an old city of some good inhabitants, located in Frederick county in the great Shenandoah Valley of Virginia, and is the center of the apple belt. A cold storage plant for apples is nearing completion, and its capacity will be, three hundred thousand barrels: and there was already another cold storage plant there for apples. In addition to these provisions for storing apples for market, there is a vinegar plant there which make apple vinegar by the million gallons a year. This plant, of course, uses the culls and bruised apples not good for market. As a rule the city indicates the prosperity of the surrounding country and measured by this standard, that country is healthy, prosperous, and has a good future.

The Valley Conference should grow into one of the strongest in the Southern Convention. The Civil War ruptured the feelings of people along the line of conflict more than in remote sections, and the Valley Conference suffered, beyond explanation, by that unfortunate tragedy; but a new generation and new conditions give promise of welded conditions and Christian activity.

On the first Sunday in August, I was in Dover, Delaware, and preached twice at the People's church and once at St. Luke's. Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., has accepted a call to the People's church and that great church, founded by Dr. A. W. Lightbourne, will again go forward. St. Luke's is a small church, under the care of Dr. R. S. Stephens, that was established to care for a city community that was without church affiliation

NEW YORK LETTER

Columbia's nearly ten thousand Summer Session students are now preparing to leave for their homes far and near, marking the end of possibly the greatest summer's work in the history of the institution in numbers and extensiveness of courses. But this also marks the beginning of work elsewhere which has been planned.

It is, indeed, a great inspiration of its kind to see so many noble men and women together, all striving for the solution of life-problems; tending in their efforts to free themselves from the narrow, selfish boundaries of their lives and to discover new and firmer truths upon which to build and influence other lives. One feels the largeness of the task and the multitude of preparations necessary for its accomplishment.

The separations of this unit mean the building of other units. Men and women cannot always remain here. They become scattered all over the world, some into their own homes, towns, or country-sides in every state, in Europe, and in the remotest countries of the world to do the work for which they have planned.

Perhaps it would interest some readers of THE SUN to learn about students nearer home. Almost one fourth of Columbia's students come from the South. Many of these are accomplished professional and business work, but for the most part, teachers coming from the various schools and educational institutions of the Southern States.

An organization of all these students into a Southern Club as well as the separate state organizations contributed considerably to the cosmopolitan spirit of the University. The Southern Club has grown remarkably in numbers, representing this year, perhaps better than ever, a "true Southern Spirit," both in and out of the class rooms.

Then coming still nearer the home of THE SUN, there are several members of Elon College Faculty and Alumnae here. Dr. W. C. Wicker completes his fourth year of summer sessions. He was last year assistant professor in the Philosophy of Education in Teachers' College, and this year receives his professional diploma. Prof. N. F. Brannock who has been here two summers as a special student in chemistry, is working for his university degree and is Assistant Professor in Chemistry for this summer.

Among other Elonites are Prof. B. W. Everette, Elon's Gymnasium Director for next year, who is taking a course in mechanical drawing and physical culture; Miss A. M. Landis, head of Domestic Arts at Elon, who is doing special work in her department; Capt. J. J. Ingle, Columbia School of Law, and Miss Nellie Sue Fleming, Teachers' College.

CIGARETTES AND TOBACCO

It is with a feeling that I am launching out into deep water when I approach this subject, yet I have such a burning desire to be used of God to help humanity, that I feel I can in God's name, write something against this evil of today. I know there are others who are as much interested in their boys as I am, yet have not had courage and faith sufficient to put their desires and feelings into print. I have put much thought and prayer on this subject and in the name of my Christ you will find me standing against every form of sin.

As I see this great outstanding evil confronting us today, I feel it my duty, as one of God's servants, to send out a word of warning to the people. I hold our young men dearer than my own life, and I am fully convinced the cigarette habit is one of the worst evils they have to fight. Physically, mentally and spiritually, it seems to be a habit, when once formed, is almost impossible to overcome the habit and its intoxicating power. I once had a very earnest conversation with a young man who seemed to have a good feeling for others, but had gone down under the cigarette habit. His case, as he described it to me, was alarming. He plead with me to warn young men never to form the habit. The boys of today are not altogether in the fault. Their parents, oftentimes, set the example by the use of tobacco in some form. Behold the deacon, Sunday school superintendent, and even some of our ministers, use this deadly weed in some form. My God! My God!—how long will it be before the people will realize how great their responsibility is, as to the example they set for those who come under their influence?

I have seen of late some of our laymen and ministers smoking and chewing. I have heard of a minister who, after preaching a strong sermon against smoking, was seen in the yard of the church smoking a cigar. Preacher, I would like to ask in the name of our Christ, what influence do you expect to have with those young men? My honest opinion is that your influence will lead in the wrong way. Not only do you lose your influence but the people doubt your sincerity. They feel that you have not the courage, faith and religion sufficient to overcome this evil in your own life. How a man of God can so defile his life is more than I can understand.

In a conversation with a father, he spoke of his boys and the cigarette. He said that he had always smoked and chewed tobacco, but never failed to warn his boys against the habit. One day he saw his error in a different light. He cried out, "Why am I warning my boys against a habit I have myself?" He promised his God that he would never be guilty of something he wouldn't like his boys to do. If we, as parents, laymen, and ministers would make the same resolution, not only in this matter, but in evils that have to do with our moral or spiritual life, a brighter day would dawn for us.

There are many passages of scripture that teach us we should not use tobacco for the sake of others, especially our young. I refer to Matthew 18-6—"But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were drowned in the depths of the sea." There are none of us but that have some influence. May God help that our influence may be in the right direction.

WILSON ASKS FOR CELEBRATION OF PILGRIM'S DAY

On August 4 President Wilson issued the following proclamation:

"My Fellow Countrymen: December 21, next, will mark the tercentary of the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth in 1620. The day will be becomingly celebrated at Plymouth under the auspices of the Plymouth Pilgrim Tercentenary Commission and at other localities in Massachusetts. While this is proper and praiseworthy, it seems to me that the influences which the ideals and principles of the Pilgrims with respect to civil liberty and human rights have had upon the formation and growth of our institutions and upon our development and progress as a nation merit more than a local expression of our obligation and make fitting a nation-wide observance of the day.

"I, therefore, suggest and request that the 21st of December, next, be observed throughout the Union with special patriotic services in order that the great events in American history that have resulted from the landing of these hardy and courageous navigators and colonists may be accentuated to the present generation of American citizens. Especially do I recommend that the day be fittingly observed in the universities, colleges, and schools of our country to the end that salutary and patriotic lessons may be drawn from the fortitude and perseverance and the ideals of this little band of Church men and women who established on this continent the first self-determined government based on the great principle of just law and its equal application to all and thus planted the seeds from which has sprung the mighty nation.

"In witness hereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed, done in the District of Columbia, the fourth day of August, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and twenty, and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-fifth.

"WOODROW WILSON."

INCIDENTAL—BUT INTERESTING

(From the Syracuse Post-Standard.)

Cox was elected governor in 1912 by 167,000. He was beaten in 1914 by 31,250, the year that Harding was elected to the Senate by 162,000. Cox was elected governor in 1916 by 5,199, while Wilson carried the State by 90,000, and was elected a third time by 12,000.

The Republicans have nominated Ohio-born candidates in all campaigns since 1868 save two—Grant, Hayes, Garfield, Harrison, McKinley, and Taft. The Democrats have never nominated an Ohio man nominees for Vice-President, George H. Pendleton and Allen G. Thurman, were beaten.

Cox's first wife was named Harding, and the candidate he defeated for Congress was named Harding.

While it was his popularity in Ohio and his wet proclivities that accomplished Cox's nomination, Ohio itself is remarkably evenly divided on wet and dry. In 1919 a referendum upon the proposition to define an intoxicating liquor as one having 2.75 per cent of alcohol was defeated 504,688 to 474,907. The same year a referendum upon constitutional amendment went against approval 500,450 to 499,971.

Harding and Cox are personal friends and associates in the Ohio Publishers' Association.

Harding will be in March the age of McKinley when he was inaugurated, Cox the age of Taft when he took the office.

Roosevelt is the youngest man to run for president or vice-president since 1896, when Bryan was nominated at 36 years of age.

The nominees for president are not college men, although Harding was for a little while in Ohio Central College. Coolidge is an Amherst and Roosevelt a Harvard alumnus. The nominees for president are both newspaper publishers, the nominees for vice-president are both lawyers.

The union of Ohio and New York on the national ticket has been a favorite Republican practice—witness Hayes and Wheeler, Garfield and Arthur, McKinley and Roosevelt, Taft and Sherman. The only time heretofore when the Democrats tried it they reversed the order—Cleveland and Thurman.

VALLEY VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

(Winchester Evening Star, Aug. 9.)

The session of the Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference, which met in the Christian Church throughout last week, adjourned on Saturday afternoon, after selecting a place for the next annual meeting, and the election of officers.

The next conference will be held at Mayland Christian Church, near Broadway, Rockingham county, Va., next August.

The officers elected for the ensuing year were, president, Rev. Dr. W. T. Walters, of Richmond, Va.; vice-president, Rev. B. J. Earp, of Stanley, Va.; secretary, Rev. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va.; assistant secretary, Rev. W. C. Hook, Harrisonburg; treasurer, Mr. Samuel Earman, Harrisonburg.

On yesterday a number of the clerical delegates remained over in Winchester and occupied the pulpit of the Christian Church. The Rev. C. A. McDaniel, of Milford, New Jersey, the newly elected pastor of the church here, preached at the morning service, the Rev. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, of Elon College, N. C., preached at the afternoon meeting and the evening service was addressed by the Rev. H. R. Clem, of Springfield, Ohio, president of the Ohio State Association.

A resolution of appreciation to the people of Winchester and vicinity was passed by the conference for their hospitality to the delegates and visitors attending the conference.

At the session of the conference last Thursday afternoon, Mr. Thomas F. Burley, soloist of the Presbyterian Church, sang "Face to Face," with exquisite voice and feeling, and a devotional service was conducted by Dr. W. W. Staley, of Suffolk, Va.

The conference then listened with deep interest to a carefully prepared report of the committee on education.

Three young men were admitted to the Biblical Class in preparation for the ministry and each of these addressed the conference. Dr. W. A. Harper then made a strong talk on "The Four-Square Program of the Christian College."

The report of the Christian Orphanage disclosed a most satisfactory financial and moral condition. The institution is free from debt, with new property purchased during the year and also with $15,000 toward a new $40,000 building soon to be erected.

The session on Thursday evening was given over to the Women's Missionary Board and during the evening a solo was rendered by Miss Stryker, Miss Bessie I. Holt, of Burlington, N. C., made an excellent address, and Miss Mary D. Atkinson and Miss Jennie Willis charmed the audience with a duet.

"The schools in general have occupied an intermediate position between Church and State, responding always to influence from both sides, but affected chiefly in earlier times by ecclesiastical considerations and in later times chiefly by considerations of a political character; and at all times they have been open to influence of a more diffusive sort, economic, literacy, and broadly speaking, social."—Brown, "The Making of Our Middle Schools."

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Our financial report still grows and we are climbing on toward the $18,000 mark for this year. We hope to reach the $20,000 mark by November first, and then make the final dash for the $30,000 mark for this year, and break the record of all previous years.

In our last report we had two disappointments to report. This week we have two pleasant occasions to mention. The brightest sunshine comes after the darkest clouds.

On Friday, August 6, the Union Christian Sunday school came in full force to picnic on the Orphanage grounds. The day was clear and cool and an ideal day for a picnic. The day was spent in the children playing games and men pitching horse shoes. Every one seemed to have a good time and enjoy the day.

At the noon hour the table that had been placed in the grove, was filled to overflowing with good things to eat, like the good ladies of the Union congregation know so well how to prepare. After thanks returned by Dr. J. W. Wellons (the "youngest" man present), the children were invited to help themselves first, and it made us all glad to see them so happy, and they enjoyed it to their hearts' content.

All members of the Orphanage family were invited to join in this splendid event and our little folks were delighted. Fried chicken looked good to them and they helped themselves. We were delighted to have this Sunday school to picnic on our grounds and trust they will make it an annual affair.

Our next pleasant occasion was our visit with the Singing Class to five churches in Virginia on Saturday and Sunday, August 7 and 8. Our good friend, Mr. J. M. Darden, made arrangements for the Class to render a concert at Driver Christian church on Saturday night; Suffolk Christian church, Sunday morning at 9:30; Antioch, Sunday at 11:30; Mt. Carmel, Sunday at 4:00 and Franklin at night.

We reached Suffolk on Saturday evening via Seaboard train and were entertained there for supper and were taken to Driver where the children rendered their concert. After the concert the good ladies had refreshments for the children which they enjoyed very much. We then returned to Suffolk where we were very pleasantly entertained for the night. Sunday morning the children rendered their concert at the Suffolk Christian church and we were then taken to Antioch church where they rendered their program for this splendid people. The Philathea Class of Antioch church had prepared a nice lunch for us, which we carried to Mt. Carmel, where we had a picnic dinner, with watermelons and lemonade added. The children rendered their program at this church at four o'clock and then were taken to Franklin, Va., where the program was rendered at 8:00 o'clock. We were entertained there Sunday night and left for home on the morning train Monday.

No singing class of any orphanage of any denomination was ever treated any better or shown more kindness or appreciation than our Singing Class while in Virginia. The people at all the churches seem to leave nothing undone that could be done for their happiness and comfort. They have never enjoyed any trip more than this one. The congregations at all the churches were large and the offerings splendid.

I want to thank all the friends who so kindly entertained the children while on this trip and assure you that I am grateful.

I want to especially thank Brothers Darden and Crocker, Dr. Rawles and Colonel West and others for their untiring efforts in making this trip so pleasant for the children in carrying them to the different churches on this trip. We pray that God's richest blessing will rest upon each one who had a part. "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these, the least of mine, ye did it unto Me."

REPORT OF YOUNG PEOPLE'S DEPARTMENT TO WOMAN'S BOARD SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

On account of the illness of Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Superintendent, and at her request, I herewith, with the meagre information in hand, submit the following report of the Young People's Department for the past biennium:

Eastern Virginia Conference: Number of organizations (Young People's and Willing Workers), 27; Number of members reported, 464; Amount of money raised, $3,069.42.

North Carolina Conference: Number of organizations, 16; Number of members, 263; Amount of money raised (1919-1920), $575.59.

Virginia Valley Central Conference: Number of organizations, 6; Number of members, 179; Amount of money raised, not reported:

Summary

Total number of Societies, 49; Total number of members, 906; Total amount reported, $3,645.01.

MRS. C. H. ROWLAND.

MEETING OUR GOALS

We are nearing the close of our Conference year. Our Woman's Boards will soon be planning their programs for the annual meeting. Only two months and our treasurers will close their books. Doubtless many Societies will be very busy during these last few weeks. There are goals to be reached and requirements to be met. Are we sure we will meet our share of the extension budget which we have assumed? Shall we not set our faces to the task with a prayer upon our lips and a determination in our hearts that every goal shall be attained and every objective reached?

May the extension of God's Kingdom be to us the most important work in the world. Did you know that two-thirds of the population of the globe today have never heard of the Gospel of Jesus Christ? Oh, that we might get a vision of these Christless souls. Approximately a billion people have no knowledge of Christ because the Church has never become sufficiently interested. Women of the Christian Church, let us pray as we never have before that God will save us from our indifference and that our churches and people may be aroused and may set their faces to a worthwhile program. Did you know that there are actually more people in the world today without Christ than a hundred years ago? We have fewer missionaries than five years ago. We did not send as many men into the field during the war and we have not replaced those who fell from the ranks. Missionaries are constantly face to face with the fact that they cannot cope with the increase in population. Such facts should impress every heart and arouse us to greater activities and a deepening of the prayer life. Prayer releases the power of God. The Church has at its command an infinite and inexhaustible source of power and should make use of it. We are inclined to depend too much upon our own strength. Let us learn to depend more and more upon our Heavenly Father Who is the source of all strength and power. Let us ask Him to lay upon our hearts the needs of a billion souls without Christ and without hope in the world.

MRS. J. W. HARRELL.

TEN DAYS OF REAL SERVICE

On Saturday morning, July 18, I left Burlington for Henderson, N. C. Arriving at Henderson I was met by Miss Margaret Alston. I attended the Saturday afternoon service at Liberty church (Vance) at 3:00 o'clock gave short talk after Bro. Black's sermon. I was notified here that I was to take supper with Mrs. Jimmie Newman and stay for the lawn party which was to be given on her lawn by the Baraca Class of Liberty Sunday school. They certainly know how to entertain. It was one of the nicest entertainments I have attended in a long time. (It was not one of those lawn parties to make money, for cake and cream were all free and in abundance).

Sunday morning I attended Sunday school and services at Liberty church again. I talked a few minutes to the Philathea at beginning of lesson, to the Baracas at the close of the lesson period, and to the Sunday school after it re-assembled. Bro. Black was kind enough to give over his preaching hour to me to talk to the young people. The quarterly communion service was held just after a talk by the pastor. I requested all young people who were interested in a Willing Workers' Society or Young People's Missionary Society to remain and about forty remained. I organized a Willing Workers' Society with sixteen members and Young People's Missionary Society, with fifteen members. I want to say, dear friends, that Liberty (Vance) is a thoroughly organized missionary church, has a Missionary Cradle Roll with thirty-three babies enrolled, Willing Workers with sixteen members, (from 6 to 15), a Young People's Society with fifteen and a Woman's Missionary Society with over twenty-five enrolled. Just think of it, a rural church with such organization as this, missions taught from the cradle to the grave. I believe I am correct in saying this is the only rural church in the Southern Christian Convention that is a thoroughly organized missionary church. I can see why Bro. Black is proud of this church. He should be. It is something to be proud of. One of the members told me, on the side that they are thinking of calling a pastor for all time and planning to build new Sunday school rooms. Sunday afternoon Mrs. Newman and Miss Alston took me over to Henderson to talk to the young people in the Henderson church at four o'clock. On account of heavy rain at the hour for service, the audience was not so large as they had expected, but enough for good service. I think these good people will organize a Young People's Missionary Society soon. Sunday evening Mr. and Mrs. Harward came for Rev. and Mrs. Williamson and myself and took us to Fuller's Chapel to a Children's Day service. I certainly enjoyed this. We, who have had the responsibility of training children know how to enjoy and appreciate these exercises more than those who have never had the experience. They gave me a few minutes on this program to talk missions. I announced that I would be out on Monday to organize a Young People's Missionary Society if they wanted one. On Monday it rained and then rained some more. In spite of the rain we had nearly a church full. I organized a Young People's Missionary Society with fourteen charter members. These good people have the reputation of going to church rain or shine, and they certainly lived up to their reputation the day I was there. I spent until Tuesday noon with my good friends Mr. and Mrs. Harward. Spent Tuesday night in Suffolk with Miss Annie Staley. Bro. Cotton came for me early Wednesday morning, taking me through the country to Isle of Wight Court House, where the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention was in session Wednesday and Thursday. This Convention was filled with good things from beginning to end. On Friday Bro. Whitley took me to Windsor to attend the Young People's Sunday School Convention. This was a union meeting of all the organized Young People's Classes of Southampton and Isle of Wight Counties. This was also filled with good things. The Bible contest conducted by Col. Deans was especially interesting. From this meeting I went to Mrs. Rhodes and talked to the Windsor young people at the Christian church. Friday night, partially re-organized a Young People's Missionary Society. Spent the night with Bro. Elisha Bradshaw's family Saturday night. Sunday morning went to Antioch church. Bro. Barrett and his family from Porto Rico, were there, and ters sang to us in Spanish. Bro. Barrett gave a talk. It was so inspiring to hear these consecrated people. I was given time after Bro. Barrett, to talk to the young people and organized a Young People's Missionary Society with fourteen members.

Sunday afternoon went to Mt. Carmel to Sunday school. Was given time here also to talk to the young people. On account of heavy rain at time for service, our audience was not so large as we had hoped for. I feel these good folks will soon organize a Young People's Missionary Society for they are very much interested in work for the Master. Monday morning I left Windsor for Newport News. Bro. Rainey met me in Norfolk and by the time we reached Newport News and had dinner it was almost time for service at church. I talked to the young people at 3 p. m. and organized a Willing Workers' Society with fourteen members. Talked to the young people again in the evening at Christian Endeavor meeting. After having a pleasant evening with Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Baker I left on the early boat Tuesday morning for Burlington, feeling I had spent one of the most profitable and pleasant ten days of my life. I shall ever remember the many kind deeds of the good people too numerous to mention in THE SUN.

From the time I left Burlington Saturday morning until I reached home Tuesday night, I found I had visited ten churches, and made sixteen talks, organized five Young People's Missionary Societies and enrolled seventy-five young people for service. BESSIE I. HOLT,

THE RIGHT TO STRIKE

The rights of the community are always paramount to the rights of an individual. In fact, it is a well-established principle of moral philosophy that the rights of the individual cease just where the rights of the community begin. My right to throw my fist around ceases when its exercise would come in contact with the noses of others who have a right to be in my immediate vicinity. The application of this principle banishes the soap factories, bone mills, slaughter houses, oyster shell lime kilns, and other nuisances to the outskirts of the town, and its proper application would prevent every strike in essential industry where the public are inconvenienced or their rights infringed upon.

The Philadelphia Public Ledger says on the right to strike:

"While the right of every man to be free from involuntary servitude is fixed and forever, it is not true that any man has a right to quit his job at any moment. A man has no more right to abstain from any act, when the failure to act inflicts injury upon another, than he has to commit an act which directly inflicts a similar injury.

"A physician cannot 'strike' in the midst of a major operation. If he does, he ought to be hanged.

"A nurse cannot 'strike' at midnight when in charge of a patient whom it may be death to leave unattended.

"A soldier cannot 'strike' just before he is to go over the top.

"A gang of laborers who have hoisted a safe to a third-story window with a crowd beneath cannot 'strike' without warning and let the safe fall. It would be penitentiary and perhaps 'the chair' for the lot of them."

"A pilot cannot 'strike' just as his steamship enters a tortuous and dangerous passage."

"Plenty of other instances will occur to all of us. Every man has a right to quit work, but no man has a right unjustly to damage another."—Free Methodist.

Miss Kate Wheeler becomes assistant in Physical Culture to Miss Hawk and will give active attention to the conduct of the class work for the ladies.

CHANGES IN PLANT AND CURRICULUM

Italian will not be taught during the session of 1920-21. The demand for it did not justify retaining it in the curriculum.

The first two years of the high school course have been dropped from the sub-freshman department so far as this did not conflict with engagements previously assumed. The subjects dropped this year are Math. A-1 and A, Science A-1, A, B, and C, History A, B, and F, Latin A, English A, and Italian A. It is the expectation next year to discontinue still other courses, till in two or three years Elon will have only college students. This course will inevitably at first reduce the enrollment, but in the long run it will greatly strengthen the College.

Mechanical Drawing is added for the first time as a regular course this year. The work will be under Mr. B. W. Everette.

It has been found necessary to convert the Y. W. C. A. and former infirmary rooms of the West Dormitory into six additional dormitory rooms for ladies.

The West-End Hall has been discontinued as a dormitory for students and is to become a "teacherage" for married members of the faculty and hotel for transients and visitors to the College. The College Dining Hall and West Dormitory will be for students and for faculty members only, who live on the campus. All visitors, it is expected, will find accommodation in the homes of their friends or in the West-End Hall.

Many minor improvements to the plant have been made during the summer.

A six course Chautauqua program has been arranged for the year. Some of America's finest talent will appear in these numbers. The charge will be nominal.

All students living off the campus as also all waiters, power house men, and janitors will be excused from gymnasium and physical culture this year. The College Dean may also excuse others if they hold positions requiring sufficient daily physical exercise. For all the other students these studies will be requisite to graduation as stated in the catalogue.

CHANGES IN RATES—VERY IMPORTANT

LITERARY SOCIETY MEMBERSHIP

Upon a petition signed by representatives of both the Philologian and Clio Literary Societies the Board of Trustees have modified the regulation with reference to membership in these Societies so long as the best interests of the College and of the Societies appear to be promoted thereby to read as follows:

“That all restrictions governing the percentage basis of receiving new members for the school year be removed and further that the earliest date for reception of any member in the year be changed from November first to ten days after his arrival and registration.”

VERY IMPORTANT NOTICE

A paper purporting to be a group of resolutions, bearing on class distinction in the College, passed in a meeting of the men in the four College Classes of Elon College, as of May 18, 1920, having been called to the attention of the Administrative Committee of the Board of Trustees, has been disposed of as follows: the final authority, even in student government, resides in the Board of Trustees. This paper has not been approved officially by the Student Senate and since the Student Senate could not pass on it before the opening, and since further the Board of Trustees cannot approve anything resembling the spirit of hazing, even in an organized form, notice is hereby given that no student should insist on any of these resolutions, except such as may be approved by the Dean and the Student Senate, upon peril of his membership in the College.

S. AND E. AND F. OF P.

“Well,” said Aunt Mary quietly, “what is it now?”

“O, I cannot make this box work right!” exclaimed George rather impatiently. “It wiggles all around and won’t do what I want it to do.”

“Have you tried the S. and E. and F. of P. Cure?” asked Aunt Mary.

“The what!” George looked up in amazement and opened his eyes wide.

“Well, well.” And Aunt Mary laughed lightly. “Haven’t you heard of the wonderful cure for things that do not work right?”

“I never heard of that one.” George shook his head emphatically. “What did you say it was?”

“The S. and E. and F. of P.,” answered Aunt Mary. “It is the most wonderful thing you ever heard of. It does work that a hundred impatient hands could not accomplish. Now let us see how we can work it in this case. What is the matter with the box?”

“Well, Aunt Mary, you see I wish to make this into a cart. I found these old wheels and this piece of iron for an axle, and now the old box will not stay still long enough to put them together right. What shall I do?”

“Why didn’t you get something solid to put the cart on while you pounded the nails down? Or, better still, it might have been the wiser plan to get some straight nails instead of those old bent ones.”

“Well,” and George hung his head a bit, “I was in a hurry and could not wait to hunt up the good nails or something to put the old box on.”

“O ho! So you thought you would save time. You hoped that you would be lucky enough to get it done in a great hurry. Is that it?”

“Y-Yes,” said George. “And, besides, if the box had stayed still, I could have used these old nails all right.”

“We won’t argue that, dearie,” Aunt Mary said in a kindly tone; “but the point is that the box did not do so, and your old nails, weakened by previous poundings, could not be made to go in just as you wished them. Let me see. First, a good, steady prop. Yes, here is one right under our feet. It is part of an old tamping block. Ah! See how nicely the box fits!”

“Why!” exclaimed George. “It does hold better, doesn’t it? Say, that is more like it. And there are some better nails on the shelf up there.” He pointed to the corner where there were a lot of nails and bolts and nuts.

“Yes, these are better,” agreed Aunt Mary. “There are two nuts, too, that go on the end of your iron axle and fit better than the ones you first had. Can you get them?”

“Hold this box and I will,” replied George, “if I can reach them.”

George reached up, but his fingers were not quite long enough to take the tray down. He rolled over an old chopping block and tried to climb up on that, but the block was old and uncertain, and down George went in a heap on the shed floor.

"Have a tumble for a change?" asked Aunt Mary. "Shall we try again?"

"Uh-huh!" answered George, rubbing his shin where he hit it with a stake. "That was nothing; I'll have those things if I fall a hundred times."

I do not think that George really considered that he might fall a hundred times. But what do you think? He got an old keg on which to stand, and out fell the bottom with George and down he went again. This time the tears started; but he looked about, and the next attempt was a success, for he got the stepladder and went up as he should have done in the first place.

"Good boy!" exclaimed Aunt Mary. "That was pluck for you, even if you did not use the stepladder first, and now you have found out what my wonderful cure of S. and E. and F. of P. means. Half the battle is over, and now let us make the cart. O, yes, dearie, I'll tell you what it means when we finish."

And George and Aunt Mary went to work. Carefully they put the iron rod across the bottom of the box, measuring to see that it would not be uneven. Then they bolted it on, for George discovered that there were some holes bored in the rod and by diligent search they found some bolts to fit. Lastly they put on the wheels and turned up the nuts so that George had a fine cart to play with.

"We did not have to jerk it around at all to make it do right," said George as they put the cart on the floor.

"No, we did not," Aunt Mary nodded her head. "And you went at it in real true earnest. When you could not get the things and tumbled down a few times you certainly showed pluck, and there you have what the letters of my wonderful cure stand for: Steady and Earnest and Full of Pluck. Did you ever hear the little stanza about those three?"

George shook his head.

"The man who wins is an average man,
Not built on any peculiar plan,
Nor blessed with any peculiar luck—
Just steady and earnest and full of pluck."

"Well," George said with a grin, "I did not have any luck at all until you came out, that is sure."

"And you will remember S. and E. and F. of P. the next time you get out of patience?"

"Yes, Aunt Mary, I'll try to."—Beatrice M. Parker, in Exchange.

WHAT AMERICA MEANT TO ONE FOREIGNER.

The following illuminating dialogue took place between a student and a Polish native a few years ago in a village in Poland where many of the workmen had been in America:

"How do you like America?"

"I hate your country."

"Hate it? And why?"

"All they want of us in America is our muscle. I hate it."

"Ours is a great country. We have the finest school system in the world."

"That may be. I was never in one of your schools."

"My country, too, is a land of religion, of churches."

"I was never in a church in America."

"Why not?"

"No one asked me to go. I was there six years."

"Well, what do you think of American homes?"

"I was never in an American home. I slept in a bunkhouse, ate at an eating house, and worked all the time. I went to America a strong man; I came back broken down in health. All your country wants of us is our muscle. I hate it."—Expositor.

TESTIMONIES TO THE SCRIPTURES

The first and almost the only book deserving of universal attention is the Bible. The Bible is the book of all others to be read at all ages and in all conditions of human life; not to be read once or twice through and then laid aside, but to be read in small portions of one or two chapters every day, and never to be intermitted except by some overruling necessity. I speak as a man of the world to men of the world, and I say to you, "Search the Scriptures." I have for many years made it a practice to read through the Bible once a year. It is an invaluable and inexhaustible mine of knowledge and virtue.—John Quincy Adams.

It is astonishing how much a man may know of the Bible by learning a text a day and how much he may know experimentally by watching the events of the day and interpreting them in the light of the text. If you cannot retain a short text and be looking out for a commentary upon it, I do not mean Matthew Henry or Scott, or Gill—I mean your own daily experience. Be looking out to see how the Lord translates that text to you by his own providence, and you will frequently see a striking relation between the verse that was given in the morning and the trials or the mercies that are given you during the day.—C. H. Spurgeon.

From the time that, at my mother's feet or on my father's knee, I first learned to lisp verses from the sacred writings, they have been my daily study and vigilant contemplation. If there be anything in my style or thoughts to be commended, the credit is due to my kind parents in installing into my mind an early love of the Scriptures.—Daniel Webster.

THE POWER OF QUIETNESS

A score of years ago a friend placed in my hand a little book which became one of the turning points of my life. It was an old mediaeval message, and it had but one thought, that God was waiting in the depth of my being to talk with me if I would only get still enough to hear him.

I thought that this would be a very easy matter, so I began to get still. But I had no sooner commenced than a perfect pandemonium of voices reached my ears, a thousand clamoring notes from without and within, until I could hear nothing but their noise and din. Some of them were my own cares, some of them my own prayers. Others were the suggestions of the tempter and the voices of the world's turmoil. Never before did there seem so many things to be done, to be said, to be thought; and in every direction I was pulled and pushed and greeted with noisy acclamations and unspeakable unrest. It seemed necessary for me to listen to some of them, but God said, "Be still, and know that I am God." Then came the conflict of thoughts for the morrow, and its duties and cares; but God said, "Be still."

And I listened and slowly learned to obey, and shut my eyes to every sound; I found that after a while, when the other voices ceased, or I ceased to hear them, there was a still small voice in the depth of my spirit. As I listened, it became to me the power of prayer, and the voice of wisdom, and the call of duty, and I did not need to think so hard, or trust so hard, for that still small voice of the Holy Spirit in my heart was God's answer to all my questions.—A. B. Simpson.

"IN LIFE'S SMALL THINGS BE RESOLUTE AND GREAT"

Every action, down even to the drawing of a line, or utterance of a syllable, is capable of a peculiar dignity in the manner of it, which we sometimes express by saying, it is truly done (as a line, or tone, is true), so also it is capable of dignity still higher in the motive of it. For there is no action so slight, nor so mean, but it may be done to a great purpose, and ennobled therefore; nor is any purpose so great but that slight actions may help it, and may be so done as to help it much, most specially that chief of all purposes, the pleasing of God.—John Ruskin.

MADE BUT NOT DRESSED

Little Mary, usually of a rather retiring disposition, was inordinately proud of her new pink stockings. Sunday found Mary dressed for the occasion much beribboned and bestockinged, without doubt the belle of the Sunday school class. At the general meeting of classes the superintendent, beginning his questions at the first row, asked Mary to stand up.

"Now, Mary," he asked, "who made you?"

"Oh," Mary replied. "The Lord made me, but my mamma dressed me and put on my new pink stockings."—Harper's Magazine.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS

Four things a Christian should especially labor after, viz: To be humble and thankful, watchful and cheerful.—John Mason.

I'll bind myself to that which once being right, will not be less right, when I shrink from it.—Kingsley.

Whoever is satisfied with what he does has reached his culminating point—he will progress no more. Man's destiny is to be not dissatisfied, but forever unsatisfied.—F. W. Robertson.

Important Notice

Repeated statements have occurred in THE CHRISTIAN SUN to the effect that the expense of this paper far exceeds its income. It is now costing about $3.20 per yearly subscription to maintain the paper, the Convention being responsible for the deficit.

The Convention does not see its way clear to continue to meet this deficit. More money must come from some source. The Board of Publication is soon to meet to take some steps in the matter. No official voice has been recorded, but members of the Board feel that each subscriber should be willing to pay value received, and that THE SUN is worth $3.00 the year.

When the Board meets the Editor will make this recommendation, and also recommend that the price of $3.00 be made effective September 1. This may seem to be a short notice, if the recommendation is passed, but those whose accounts are passed due are responsible for not having renewed, and a further extension of time certainly could not be expected.

On August 1 there were 873 of THE SUN family who had overlooked renewing. Your label will indicate how your account stands, and whether you are one of this number or not. Prompt attention to the matter may be the means of enabling you to renew at the present price of $2.00.

While THE SUN is not meeting expenses, it is not alone in this respect. We have first hand information that scores of Church publications are in the same conditions, many of them being in more desperate circumstances than THE SUN.

Faithfully and sincerely yours,

August Fourteenth

Self Blame

Lord, enlighten us to see the beam that is in our own eye, and blind us to the mote that is in our brother's. Let us all carry and measure with the false balances of love, and be in our own eyes and in all conjunctions the most guilty. Help us at the same time with the grace of courage, that we be not cast down. When we sit lamenting amid the ruins of our happiness our integrity, touch us with the fire from the altar, that we be up and doing to rebuild our city.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

A REPLY AND A PRINCIPLE

We believe that readers of THE SUN will interest themselves in reading the articles found on pages four and five of this issue. Many articles appear in THE CHRISTIAN SUN expressing things that we do not always agree with and endorse, but since we do not ask the public to agree with all that we write editorially, we do not think it becoming to us to take issue with every little thing that does not exactly coincide with our way of thinking. We, however, ask indulgence for an editorial comment on the article by Brother L. C. Huffines.

Brother Huffines, in speaking of the minister, says: "If you put yourself into God's hands, all you need He will provide." That is granted, but sometimes a preacher gets into the hands of a few tight-fisted fellows instead of the hands of the Lord. Brother Huffines' side is granted, but the other side is that it might be well for some of us who should support the preachers to get into the hands of the Lord ourselves. For that matter God has placed some of His servants into our hands to be used, but the way we are supporting them, He will have to take them out. Surely Brother Huffines does not see the whole ministry as he writes. He must be b'inded by a few cases that have not suited his ideal of the ministry. Knowing Brother Huffines as we do, we assure readers of THE SUN that our good Brother is not wholesale in his accusations against the ministry.

Again Brother Huffines further says: "When I was at Conference last fall I heard a preacher say that he would like to give his whole time to the Church if the people would pay him enough to live on. I heard the same preacher refuse a call because he thought it was not enough money." We confess our inability to see the constituency in these two sentences. Why should the word of the minister be questioned for making the statement? Why should the wisdom of this minister be discounted because he refused the call on the grounds that the support was not sufficient? Did that minister not know what it took to feed and clothe his family? Was he not sincere in saying that he would take full time church work if the people "would pay him enough to live on?" Who is to be the judge as to how much it would take for an adequate support for himself and family? The condition is very clearly stated. Did this minister not have a right to do his own thinking in the matter?

There is a vast difference between God calling a man and a local church calling a man. It is a very easy thing to find those who believe that God calls a man to preach, but a more difficult thing to get these same persons to admit that God calls men to help support those whom He calls into His service. Brother Huffines is a farmer and he knows well that if he were offered only fifty per cent of present prices for all the products of his farm that he could not afford to continue his farming. Brother Huffines has a right to say what he can sell the products of his farm for, and in the same way we deem it consistent for the preacher to say to the people what it will take to support him and his family. We confess, however, that it should not be left for the preacher to say, but when the churches will not, then the voice of necessity must speak.

Brother Huffines again says: "If I were a preacher, I would put my trust in God. I would go where he wants me to go, say what he wants me to say, and be what he wants me to be. The preacher is not practicing what he preaches."

As we have above stated, we know Brother Huffines personally and know him to be an intelligent layman in his community, and have no right to debar his article from public print, but his accusations are wholesale. Does he mean that the minister does not put his trust in God? Does he mean to say that a minister would not go where God calls him if the call should be clearly understood? Does our good Brother say to the minister of the Church that they are not what they should be, without any exceptions? He says emphatically that the preacher is not practicing what he preaches and says so without reservation.

We believe that the insight to our good Brother's article lies in the information given in the Christian Annual in regard to his own church. It has a membership of 106, paid $175.00 for pastor's salary and $20.00 for other purposes last year. Ten years ago this church paid $75.00 a year for pastor, and contributed $21.06 for other purposes, making a total of $96.06, which means that it has not quite doubled its contributions for all purposes in ten years. Five years ago this church paid its pastor $125.00 and contributed $21.37 for other purposes. This shows an increase of only 13 cents to contributions outside of pastor's salary in five years, and an increase of only $10.00 per year, or $50.00 for the period, in pastor's salary. If the farming industry in that and in other communities had gone forward in the same proportion as the financial undertaking of this church, the world would be starving for bread. If that community had advanced in the payment of other enterprises in the same proportion as it has advanced the financial outlook of the local church, it would be the means of comment for every newspaper in the State. But such is not the case. Advancement has gone forward on every hand; the opportunities of education have been multiplied. Old methods of farming have been relegated to the junk heap and acres of golden grain spread themselves out as a ripe harvest to a hungry world, while other crops of a dozen kinds give promise to help feed the world.

And just here is where the critics come in to say that the Church has failed. The belief of some local church leaders that God will in some mysterious way drop meal into the pantry of the poor preacher and provide for him has helped to fossilize many churches. They have forgotten that God is depending upon human beings to help Him keep His promise. They have failed to understand that the laborer is worthy of his hire. They believe that rain will help make a crop, but they equally believe that a little plowing is worth while. But on the other hand, they believe in preaching, but cease to practice their plowing faith.

Just so long as the community rolls in wealth, rides in automobiles, pays a few paltry dollars to the support of a poor preacher and is content to have services once a month, when it could have them more often, just so long will the local church fail to keep step with the onward progress of civilization. We love Brother Huffines and believe that he and a multitude of others are sincere. They have the same right to say that the scales have not fallen from our blinded eyes, and just in the same way we have our feeling about them.

If the plea should come from Brother Huffines' church, or any other church, that it is not financially able to carry out the program that we have suggested, then we venture our answer in advance: $195.00 is but one tenth of $1,950.00. A little figuring will soon reveal how much per capita this is to the earning capacity of a church membership of a hundred or more.

Our comment on this article and the principle that it involves is but to contend for that which we believe is right, just and true, and not in any manner to reflect upon Brother Huffines, or any who share with him his views. It is but the exchanging of ideas that all of us shall merge from the static to the progressive; from points of difficulty to places of understanding.

What would the Master say if He were to come and find us advancing his business but a few pennies a year, and going forward with material things by leaps and bounds. Surely God will care for His own, but are we helping Him? The Kingdom's progress is entrusted to our hands, and not to that of angels.

And finally without any personal reference whatever: We have observed that the most of those who contend that the preacher should go forth to preach and leave the reward to the church are the least and last to pay. The exception is true in Brother Huffines' case, as we know that he is one of the liberal givers of his church. The laborer is worthy of his hire. Who shall determine the hire and who shall pay the hire? Must the Lord send the man and pay the hire too?

There are a number of folks in the Christian Church right now who are doing a good deal of stewing around because their own church cannot find a pastor of the kind that they want and will have, who, if they will only stop to think, will have to confess to themselves the fact that never in all their lives have they spoken a single word or done a single thing to influence any boy or young man of their own congregation towards the ministry. In fact, they have rather "knocked" the calling and spoken lightly of the ministry in the presence of more than one young person. They have no one but themselves to blame that now there is a most serious shortage of ministers.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

AMERICAN STUDENT INFLUENCE

That the American students who go to study abroad have a decided power and influence has recently been well demonstrated in Sweden. Recent issues of the Polstjarnan, official organ of the Swedish Students' Union for Total Abstinence published at Uppsala, Sweden, has carried a series of interviews with the twelve American students studying in Sweden under the Swedish-American Foundation. In each of these, emphasis has been laid on the difference in student life between America and Sweden, and how that difference has, on the one hand, brought about a sentiment in favor of prohibition, and in the other country created an atmosphere of utmost liberality on matters of personal custom. That these American students will make a large impress on Sweden in favor of abstinence and prohibition is certain. Their contribution in such a field will be the result of the "dry" atmosphere which has surrounded the majority of American colleges and universities.

A democratic church should be the most progressive.

There are those whom you cannot love as you do others, but that makes no provision for hate.

CORRESPONDENCE

Explanation: In the issue of The Sun for August 4 under "A Suggestion to Writers," we named a number of articles that we would be glad to have discussed by the ministers and laymen of the Church. The following articles have been received and we thank the brethren for their interest.—Editor The Sun.

IF I WERE A LAYMAN

This writer is awaiting anxiously to see how many will comply with the Editor's request to write on one of the fifteen themes he recently suggested. The first of those subjects appealed to me for I have had, I must confess, a desire to be a layman that I might be a leader in a local church without the handicaps of being a preacher. Folks expect a preacher to be interested in the church, but it is different when busy business men put their shoulders to the wheel. Now, if I were a layman, what would I do?

In the first place, I would attend church. My preacher might count on me being present. If a farmer, as I once was, my team or car would soon find the way to church, and would reach there just a little before time for the service to begin. When there happened to be a service during the week I would just leave the crop to keep on growing while I worshipped in the sanctuary. I would not be afraid of ruining a curing of tobacco by leaving it a little while—especially on the Sabbath day—that is if I could see my way clear to grow the weed at all. It is still easier to get to church in town. No service would pass without my presence, if it were at all possible for me to be present. I should even attend prayer meeting. Many men do not do this, but I think it would do me good to attend, if I were a layman. When my pastor was ready to start any service, I would be in my place—and that is not out on the grounds talking politics, business or farming and perhaps puffing a cigarette or cigar. Yes, I would use a watch, and when the hour arrived I would not wait for the singing to start or for the preacher to come to the door and say, "Brethren, please come in as the time for service has already passed." Folks who can do nothing else can go to church on time and listen. This much I would do, if I were a layman.

If I were a layman, I would get acquainted with my pastor. Of course I would expect him to get acquainted with me by coming to see me and my family in sickness and in health. But, if I were a layman, some cold winter evening when the snow lay thick on the ground and the wind whistled around the corner, or perchance, in the late afternoon of a long summer's day, I would run over to the parsonage and there by the preacher's fire or in the shade of the parsonage trees we would have a heart to heart chat as men used to do. It would do me good—and I believe the preacher would preach a better sermon the next Sunday morning. Then some Sunday morning before the sermon as I clasp his hand a little more closely I would say, "Parson, I am praying for you today." Then some other time when the preacher had striven hard to do his duty, I would say to this effect, "Preacher, that was fine. I think I will be a better man after this." Well, now honest, do you think such things would make the preacher lose his head, run wild and go to the bow-wows? I do not; and if I were a layman, I would try it out on some poor preacher and if it made a fool of him I would say that he was not much anyway and it did not matter much. I would try it out at least three times before I decided the plan was wrong.

If I were a layman, I would learn to do something besides put on brakes. A brakeman is very essential to the welfare of a railroad, but can you imagine a railroad system of brakemen and engineers alone? It would not do much business. Neither will a church do much business with the preacher selecting the good road and opening the throttle while the whole congregation works at the brakes. Brakes are fine on an automobile, but it would be a foolish person who, when he had reached a long hill to be climbed, would shove on his brakes saying "This is a hard pull and we had better no go too fast." Did you ever see the fellow in the church who does nothing but put on brakes? Perhaps the pastor comes in with a new plan—he may have read it or he may have studied it out. However, not many preachers have time to think out many new plans. At any rate, he presents a new plan. Brother So and So arises or twists around in his seat and says to this effect, "Yes, doubtless that is a good thing and I should like to see it done; But—" By the time he is through with all those "buts" even the preacher is half convinced that the plan is not nearly so good as one that might be presented, or that his plan must certainly be postponed until some of the suggestions of the dear brother So and So are carried out. No action is taken. The meeting adjourns. The preacher goes home discouraged, and wishing that he had sense enough to present a plan that would be sound enough for his people to follow his leadership. Now if I were a layman, when my preacher said, "Let's start something," I would buckle right in, and I feel sure that we would not chase many soap bubbles or seek for the end of many rainbows until he would lead me straight to a gold mine.

IF I WERE A PREACHER

If I were called of God to preach, I would go forth, cry aloud and spare not. I would preach to please God and not man. I once heard one of our best preachers say that he found himself frequently preaching and praying to be heard of men; there being men in his congregation whom he especially wished to please. I fear he is not the only preacher who does so, and no wonder that God sometimes fails to answer our prayers. I have often heard people pray and if their prayers had been answered, it would have frightened them beyond words.

The greatest trouble today is the lack of faith. A preacher will not trust God for his living, when he gets a call to preach, the first question is, how much money are they going to pay? God has said, "Go into my vineyard and work, and whatsoever is right, I will pay you." He does not promise anything definite, and when a preacher goes to making his own definite arrangements, he leaves God out. "Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed."—Psalms 37:3.

I will relate a little circumstance that occurred in the mountains a few years ago: An old lady, Mrs. Jones, was an invalid and lived alone in her cabin. A new preacher came to her church. He went to see Sister Jones. As he tapped on the door, a feeble voice answered, "Come in." He found a very feeble old lady, lying in bed. After praying and talking with her, he arose to go. She insisted that he stay for dinner, but he told her that she was not able to prepare dinner and that he saw no one else to do so. She then told him that she had not had any meal or flour in her house for months, yet she had never been hungry. She told the preacher that the Lord knew he was there and would provide for both of them. Just about twelve o'clock a gentle tap was heard upon the door. A lady brought in a well-filled tray of food for two. That is the kind of faith we need. If we put our trust in Him, we will be fed.

I know a preacher who is constantly grumbling that he cannot live on what he is being paid. If that preacher did not get any more temporal food than his hearers get spiritual food, he would have starved long ago. When I was at Conference last fall, I heard a preacher say that he would like to give his whole time to the Church if the people would pay him enough to live on. I heard that same preacher refuse a call because he thought it was not enough money.

I knew of an old colored woman who had a habit of praying for what she wanted. Two mischievous boys, passing her cabin, heard her praying for sweet potatoes. As a joke the boys ran home and brought a basket of sweet potatoes and gave them to her. She said, "Thank the Lord, I knew He would send them." The boys told her she was mistaken as they had brought them. She then told the boys the Lord sent the potatoes, even if the devil had brought them. So if we do our duty the Lord will send us the things we need.

I have been young, now I am old; yet have not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread."—Psalms 37:25.

If I were a preacher, I would put my trust in God. I would go where He wants me to go, say what He wants me to say and be what He wants me to be. The preacher is not practicing what he preaches.

A few years ago, one of our good preachers, in trying to raise money, told his people if they would make their pledges, God would provide a way for them to pay. After service I asked him if he was trusting God for a living or working for a salary, pledged by the church. He acknowledged that he was depending on his salary and not God for a living. Josh Billings once said: "If you would teach others to do right, you must do right yourself." Emerson said, "How can I hear what you say, when what you do is ringing in my ears."

If we farmers had no more faith than the average preacher, we would never plant another crop. We buy our guano and put it with the seed, in the ground, do the work, and trust God for the result. If we do our part He will take care of us.

I would not have you think that I do not want the preachers paid. I think they should be paid well. God is a good paymaster, when we work in the right way. I think the whole system of hiring out to work for God should be abolished and then go back to the plan laid down in the New Testament. I know a preacher who is working on God's plan. He has never allowed a collection taken for him, yet has never wanted for anything.

If you put yourself into God's hands, all you need He will provide. Nothing you ask will be denied. God will take care of you.

BRIEF COMMENTS ON SEVERAL OF THE TOPICS

The long-term pastorate is preferable.

The short-term pastorate means that as the end of the year approaches, the pastor wonders, if the people will invite him to stay, and the congregation wonders if the preacher will stay.

The minimum salary of the all-time pastor should be not less than $2,000.00. I speak, not as a minister receiving a salary of this size, but as a man in the business world. It is not necessary to state why the salary should be $2,000.00.

The necessary qualities of a good Sunday school superintendent should be: A Bible student, well educated, plenty of business ability, unlimited amount of "pep," and in love with his work.

The reason that all of our Sunday schools are not represented in the Sunday School Conventions is for the lack of interest.

The preacher should have finished before he says "in conclusion." It is better to know where to stop than where to begin.

We should have a Secretary of Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor by all means. What is everybody's business is nobody's business.

A STATEMENT

We have also received an article mailed from Merry Oaks, N. C., that should be included under this discussion, but the writer signed his name "A Reader of The Sun," and failed to disclose the real name. We cannot, therefore, reproduce the article here. If the writer will let us know the real name we will be glad to publish and at the same time withhold the name, if requested. However, we feel that contributors should sign their names, especially when discussing topics such as outlined in THE SUN of August 4.

SUNSET REFLECTIONS

He plodded by our window today, that age-worn father whose "baby" boy sleeps in France. Recent sorrow had written new marks on his brow and general lameness made him make an unconscious hop. He told that boy good-bye with a quivering lip and saw the son's manly face the last time through tear-dimmed eyes. He counted the days for his return. He thought of him day by day and dreamed of him by night, for it was his boy—and his baby. He never returned. The father's hopes of seeing his boy's face again are but extended "till the morning breaks eternal bright and fair." That father believes that instruments of war should be beaten into pruning hooks and that nations should love each other. League or no league, covenant or no covenant, this father's heart yearns to see a day of peace—and what is more important to him is that "good and great" men shall cease to fight over the settlement of peace bought at the price of the life of his boy and his neighbor's boy.

He plodded by our window today—that father did—God comfort him.

Going away to college is a common thing in this age. The rich and the poor go—at least the poor. We do not think that many young persons who attend college desire to be recognized as above the average of the community, but a little encouragement is always in place. Speak to those of your community who are leaving for college and encourage them. To be specific, if we were the pastor of a church, we would preach a sermon on education just before the young of our community left for college, and at the close of the service have them all to come forward and appropriate words would be spoken in their behalf. Why not?

The year 1920—how many references will be made to that year history alone will be able to reveal.

Many may point to the year 1920 as the year they started to college or failed to start. And the records of history are being formed during these days. There are those who have already planned and arranged to enter college this fall, while others are hesitating.

The year 1920—May no young person who should attend college this fall look back to that year in days to come and regret it.

Go to college—Go this fall—Go in this good year 1920.

The year 1920—What will be your retrospect of that young man, young woman?

RECENT RESULTS OF PROHIBITION

In Massachusetts the State Department of Public Welfare reports that for the year ended July 1, 1920, alcoholic insanity cases had decreased within the year 4.55% and that the number of patients designated as insane had decreased 6.18% in the same period of time.

Dr. Burdette G. Lewis of Trenton, New Jersey, State Hospital, is authority for the statement that the number of alcohol dementia cases in the first year under the prohibition law decreased 75%.

The Chief of Police in Washington, D. C., reports a decrease in arrests of 58% for the first eight months of prohibition as compared with the number of arrests for the corresponding time one year previous to the prohibition law.

In San Antonio, Texas, the Lone Star Brewing Company has changed its brewing plant into a textile plant employing three hundred more workers than formerly. This plant is a part of the Busch Estate.

A former brewery in Toledo, Ohio, which employed 78 men is now making malted milk and is employing 278 men.

The Police Report for the city of Providence, Rhode Island, shows a decrease of arrests of 31% in the first six months of 1920 as compared with the same period in 1919.

A newspaper in Hoboken, New Jersey, says that the number of ice cream parlors have doubled in that state since the dry law went into effect.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS AGAINST ALCOHOLISM

(Special Correspondence.)

For the first time in America, and the first time ever outside of continental Europe, the great International Congress Against Alcoholism will convene in Washington at the beautiful building of the Pan-American Union under the auspices of the Department of State, from Tuesday noon, September 21, to Sunday evening, September 26, 1920.

Practically every country with which the United States maintains diplomatic relations will be represented by an official delegation. There will be delegates from up under the Arctic circle from Iceland and Finland and Russia. Scandinavia, the land of the midnight sun, will be represented in force. The new republics of Poland and Czecho-Slovakia will answer to their names for the first time. The democratic kingdom of the Serbs, Croats and Slovenes will answer "Here" when "Jugoslavia" is called. The Antipodes will be present, and all of the countries of Central and South and North America. England and France, China and Japan, will be there likewise, while Italy in addition to its formal delegation is sending a commercial representative with an exhibit of unfermented wines to show what can be done with a great native industry if ever there is an 18th Amendment to the Italian Constitution.

The Congress is a governmental body, and is strictly scientific in character. It is in effect an open forum for the free discussion of alcoholism as a disease, and is without prejudice for or against any particular method of dealing with the problem. Because of its scientific and governmental character, the Congress passes no resolutions nor does it commit to a definite policy the official delegates attending it. Its purpose is to meet every two years, listen to the reports of those who are studying scientifically the various phases of alcoholism and leading the fight against it, analyze and discuss their conclusions, and exchange among the delegations world-wide information on this great international topic.

Distinguished scientists, prominent educators, well-known physicians, and men and women who are taking an active part in the public life of two hemispheres, will either read papers or lead the general discussions which follow the papers. They will be present as guests of the United States Government, who is official host to the Congress. Approximately half the program will be given over to the United States, as is the customary courtesy of the Congress to the country which has issued the official invitation. The program, which will be announced soon by the State Department, is divided into three sections, scientific, economic and industrial, and social and historical. A particularly searching examination will probably be made by the Congress into the method and results of Constitutional regulation of alcohol in this country.

This will be the fifteenth session of the Congress since its foundation in 1880, and the first session in almost a decade due to the upheaval of the World War. The last previous Congress met at Milan, Italy, in 1913, and it was at this session that the invitation of the United States was formally accepted. The date was fixed originally for the autumn of 1915, and the American Executive Committee appointed at that time by the State Department to have charge of the details of the Congress has been continued in office by the Secretary of State to direct the meeting which now will take place in September.

MY PRESIDENT

First, I want my President to be a politician of the highest order, one who is versed in the history of parties, understands the laws governing the same, and has a supreme desire to use his party to accommodate and uplift the entire citizenry. When he becomes President I want him to forget that he is a party man. I want his political ideals to be high, his judgments statesman-like, his methods of fulfilling his purposes fearless and clean and open.

Second, I want my President to love his country supremely, even above his own life. I want him to have such faith in American ideals as to believe that here upon his native soil a true democracy is to be evolved that shall serve as the inspiration of the entire world.

Third, I want my President to be something more, something bigger than an American. I want him to possess an international mind and heart. I desire he shall be conscious that we are but a part, a splendid part, of a great world movement from which we cannot be detached. I want him to be so conscious of that vital relationship that he will willingly lead himself to any and all forms of international co-operation that have for their object the strengthening of human ties and the cultivation of interracial amity without compromising our ideals or jeopardizing our national integrity.

Fourth, I want my President to be the flower of American manhood. I want his life to be clean, his personal character above reproach. A political creed is a matter of judgment and can be modified at will or persisted in without reproach. But character is built into a man and is to be attained with supreme effort and suffering. I want no blot upon his escutcheon, no shadow upon his life. I want that manhood to be as big, as virile, as true as God and circumstances combined can produce.

Fifth, I want my President to be at heart religious, to have faith in a God of men and of nations. I do not ask his particular creed; I am not concerned as to his denominational attachments. These are incidentals. But I do insist that he take God into his confidence; that he have faith in an overbrooding Providence directing in the affairs of men; and I want that faith to be a living faith capable of drawing upon source divine for inspiration and guidance in personal living as well as in the leadership of a nation.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

ELON'S THIRTY-FIRST OPENING

Our College is scheduled to begin its thirty-first annual session on September first. The field and office force have done their best to bring a representative group of our young people to this training school of our ministry and laity alike, and in their efforts they have been nobly supported by our ministers, our lay leaders, our Alumni and the Elon student body. To every one who has aided us by spoken word or prayer or in any other way grateful appreciation is herewith spoken. We thank you, dear friends.

On this eve of our opening I beseech our people to pray that the College this year may be directed as never before in all its happy history by the Spirit of God and that our Master may be pleased with all that it may do. Elon needs just this assistance from our friends.

And will every one speak to any prospective young men who are as yet undecided about coming. We have all the ladies we can accommodate, but there are some vacant rooms in the men's buildings.

Remember friends, Elon is the College of the Christian Church. A word for her, a prayer for her, is some such service rendered the Kingdom of God in our midst. And her prosperity means the prosperity of our beloved Church.

W. A. HARPER, President.

MISSIONARY

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND MISSIONS

“Ambrose, Ga., Aug. 17, 1920. Dear Bro. Atkinson: I am sending you check for $3.00, which is for our Sunday school mission funds. Our Sunday school has at last adopted the plan (that our Convention urged all our schools to adopt) of taking one offering a month for our Orphanage and one offering a month for missions, and we expect it to work fine. Yours with best wishes, J. T. Boggan, Sect'y.” All our Sunday School Conventions have now ratified the action of the Southern Convention in asking all Sunday schools to give one offering a month to missions, and we believe the number of schools already doing this will soon be greatly increased in numbers and in strength.

ORGANIZING OUR YOUNG PEOPLE.

Miss Bessie Holt, who was elected by our Raleigh Convention, in May, as Secretary of Young People's Work in the Southern Christian Convention, is deeply interested in the work and is meeting with success and results wherever she goes. She realizes the opportunity for Christian service that has opened up before her and has thrown herself into the work with all the consecrated energy she can command. We will never become a truly missionary people till our young people are reached and aroused to the missionary task, and to reach them for Kingdom service is an opportunity any one may well covet. The Lord seems to be using Miss Holt in this open field with power and efficiency. She visited the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention in July, and organized several Societies on this trip. She visited the Valley of Virginia Conference at Winchester, made several talks there both in the Woman's Conference and in the General Conference, and on Sunday a. m., by urgent request, at the Methodist church. Following the Conference she has spent two weeks in the Valley, going with the pastors to one church a day, two or three on Sundays, and in almost every case organized a Young People's Missionary Society with from 14 to 30 charter members each. Our young people are ready and willing to do Christian service if only urged to do so, shown the way and given a chance. Miss Holt is devoting her time and strength in large measure to the giving of this chance to our young people. The Mission Secretary rejoices that this field of opportunity is being cultivated and trusts that others will be found who will aid in the great work.

AT THE VALLEY CONFERENCE

Winchester church is the result of missionary effort. It was fitting that the annual Conference held there should be missionary in purpose, plan and program. Rev. C. J. McDaniel, the newly elected pastor, secured for the church through missionary endeavor, preached before the Conference on Sunday a. m., a strong missionary sermon; the women put on a strong missionary program and greatly edified the Conference with splendid reports and addresses; and the Mission Secretary was allowed to address the Conference on three different occasions on the subject of Missions. If Winchester church will now become a strong missionary factor it will not be long till it will be one of our biggest and best churches.

One of the most hopeful signs in our Valley Conference is the increasing interest among the women in missions. Mrs. W. T. Walters has been a tireless worker for missions in the Conference and there is now a real awakening. The writer attended the session of the Woman's Conference, held in the Methodist church, and it was full of zeal, interest and enthusiasm. The women of our Valley Conference are beginning to realize the need and possibilities of missionary work, and they are doing things. Miss Bessie Holt spoke at the Woman's Conference and she and Mrs. W.A. Harper, President of the Woman's Board of the S. C. C.; spoke before the General Conference at night much to the delight and enthusiasm of the entire Conference. All the pastors of the Conference are missionary in spirit and in vision and sound the missionary note in no uncertain tone. Dr. W. W. Staley and Dr. I. W. Johnson, of Suffolk; Dr. A. B. Kendall, of Washington; Dr. L. F. Johnson, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Rev. H. Russell Clem, of Springfield, O.; Rev. C. J. McDaniel, of Milford, N. J., and Dr. W. A. Harper, of Elon College, were among the great speakers at the Conference.

MEMORIAL TEMPLE, NORFOLK

Rev. Jas. Lightbourne has moved with his family into the parsonage at Memorial Temple, Norfolk, and has announced to the people there that he has come to stay with them for a season, and to undertake with them a program of progress for that church. Bro. Lightbourne finds an open field for real service, and regards the outlook as hopeful. On the night of August 5 his people gave him a good old Virginia pounding with the result that his “kitchen cabinet and kitchen closet now almost run over with the good things and the necessary things of life.” The people of the Temple are to be congratulated that Bro. Lightbourne has come to stay with them. He plans a strenuous campaign beginning the second Sunday in September. Here is predicting growth, development and steady progress at Memorial Temple in the months to come.

J. O. ATKINSON.

Atlanta, Georgia, has been endeavoring for five years to get a referendum vote to allow the Bible to be read in her schools. She has just succeeded and the new ruling goes into effect this year.

From a standpoint of patriotism, “America First” sounds good, but measured by the ethics of Jesus, it is selfishness.

Christ died that all the world might be saved—not America first, or any other country first.

The Work of Our Women

(All items for this department should be sent to Mrs. J. W. Harrell, Burlington, N. C.)

VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL WOMAN'S CONFERENCE

The recent session of the Virginia Valley Conference gave its session Friday night to the Woman's Missionary work. Mrs. W. T. Walters, president of the Woman's Board from its organization in the Conference, presided and did it well. Mrs. W. A. Harper, president of our Southern Woman's Board, was present and gave an address on the history of the Woman's Missionary work in the South. Miss Bessie Holt made an address on the work of the women and Dr. J. O. Atkinson spoke with great power and effectiveness on God's Benevolence and Ours. The regular session of the Woman's Board held Friday afternoon will be reported by Mrs. Walters.

The North Carolina women will be glad to know that Miss Ito, one of the Japanese girls they are to support in Elon College this fall, has arrived in Seattle, Washington, and will shortly report at Elon College. Mrs. Fry, of the Girls' School, of which Miss Ito like Miss Sato is a graduate, speaks most highly of her promise as a student and Christian worker.

ELON CRADLE ROLL RALLY DAY

The annual Cradle Roll Rally of the Elon College Woman's Missionary Society was held at the residence of the writer on the afternoon of August 2. Thirty-five out of forty-two Cradle Roll members were present, together with most of the mothers. There were fifty-five present altogether. A scripture lesson was read by the superintendent and prayer was offered by the pastor, followed by an interesting program by the children and a solo, "Sleep Little Baby of Mine," by Miss Marion Lee Newman. The exercises were concluded by a prayer by Uncle Wellons, after which the children assembled out on the lawn for games, and a general good time. Later came the refreshments. Ice cream and cake were served to all. The mothers seemed to enter into the spirit of the occasion as well as the Cradle Roll members and all expressed themselves as having had a good time.

The opening of the mite boxes amounted to $12.11, mother's offering, $5.21; total, $17.32.

I feel that the Cradle Roll department can accomplish great good if sufficient effort is put into the work. It is such fine training for the little ones.

MRS. N. G. NEWMAN,
Cradle Roll Superintendent.

STANDARD PROGRAM FOR SEPTEMBER

(Reprinted from the Christian Missionary.)

(An Evening Meeting Suggested)—"The Price of National Unity."

1. Hymn, "Coming, Coming, Yes They Are"—(Processional, if possible.)

2. Scripture, Selections on "The Price of Our Salvation."

3. Prayer, That the foreigner's faith in America be not destroyed; that America's faith in him be justified.

4. —Twenty-minute Review of "Christian Americanization," special emphasis being given to Chapter VI, closing with the reading of the last paragraph of the book.

5. "THE HAPPIEST PLAN"—A Christian Americanization Play.

6. Hymn, "O Zion Haste."

7. Benediction.

Helps and Suggestions

We have come to the last chapter of our book. Has it set us to thinking? Has it, rather set us to doing?

Our program suggests that we have our last meeting in the evening. Some Societies will hold it at the church and on Sunday evening.

1. Hymn, "Coming, Coming, Yes They Are," sung by as many young women as they can get together and drill for the Processional. These young women will be costumed to represent many nations. Those not in foreign costume will be dressed in white. Each will carry a lighted candle. As this opening hymn is sung and the girls are marching in, the lights will be turned off so as to make the candle lights more effective. Seats will be reserved for those participating in the Processional.

The beauty of the Processional is its own excuse for being. Besides that it is an excellent advertising agency. The Processional and the Pageant should insure a good attendance.

2. The President of the Society and the pastor have counseled together and agreed that the President will have charge of this meeting. Either she will read or will select another woman to read as a Scripture Lesson, Luke 10:25-37.

3. Some true patriot, man or woman, will pray that God may speak to men and women through the exercises of this hour and make real to them His fatherhood of all mankind and our one common brotherhood. The pastor has been invited by the President of this one Society, to give the Review on "Christian Americanization." Having been notified weeks in advance he has been able to prepare thoroughly for it, and he hails with delight the opportunity to present Mr. Brook's splendid arguments on the subject.

Other Societies have selected their regular study-book leader to make this final summing up.

4. Still others will follow the suggestions of Mrs. Eva Clark Waid in "The Missionary Review of the World" for January. They will select three speakers to give a resume of the entire book. Three topics will be assigned, Definition (of Christian Americanization), Development and Duty. The points brought out in the earlier chapters will furnish material for Definition and Development. Suggestions for the last topic Duty will be found upon pages 135, 137, 154, 156. These three talks should not occupy more than twenty minutes and are suggested instead of the twenty-minute Review if preferred.

Do have "America the Beautiful" sung at this time. The verses may be sung as a solo with the audience helping on the chorus, or if it has been memorized or the music is available let the congregation sing it all.

5. A Play or a Pageant is always enjoyed when it is done well. The play suggested is not too long and is effective if well rendered. "A Pageant of Democracy" by Katherine H. B. Mullally, is good. All parts are in pantomime except those of Democracy and Christianity.

Any good Americanization Pageant may be used but the one suggested, "The Happiest Plan," seems both appropriate and of the right length.

If this is a Sunday night meeting you will surely want an offering. This might come as the announcements will, before the Play.

Now some Societies will want to have their regular meeting in the afternoon. If it is a parlor meeting, the leader will conduct a Quiz using all of the questions that we have had thus far and adding these five:

1. Upon what facts do you base your faith in the future of America? (Its past history, its present activity, the influence of the church, public school, our faith in men, our belief in Democracy, our faith in God.)

2. Who after all, must Americanize the foreigner? (The answer is obvious by that each one in his everyday life and everyday contacts must Americanize the foreigner.)

3. What basic principles should underlie and determine all methods of Americanization? P. 14.

4. What general responsibility is laid upon the church for Americanization? P. 147.

5. What is your task?

ATHELIA HOWSARE.

Miscellaneous Program for September

"For there is no respect of persons with God."—Romans 2:11.

The African

Hymn—"From Greenland's Icy Mountains."

Quiet Time With the Word. John 3:14-22.

Life of Samuel Crowther.

Reading—"Aunt Zanie's Prayer."

Generation of Freedom.

Franklinton Christian College.

Hymn—"We've a Story to Tell."

Suggestions

This program presents the African in his native country and also in America. The pastor might feature the thought emphasized in the scripture lesson of light shining in the darkness. Draw or cut out and paste on, a picture of a candle in a candle stick, above or on either side write, "A light is for dark places." At the bottom of the poster write, "Come to the meeting on (time) at (place) and learn how you can help it to shine farther."

Nations and people are waiting for the Story we have to tell. A missionary at Chambersburg said: "You have never waited for anything so long or wanted anything so badly as my people have waited for and wanted Jesus Christ."

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

PLEASANT GROVE—INGRAM

A revival meeting was begun at Ingram the fourth Sunday night in July and continued until Friday night of the same week. Rev. H. E. Truitt, Coshocton, Ohio, brother of the pastor, was present and did the preaching. His sermons were spiritual, scriptural and well presented. He endeared himself to his hearers and did a good work for the Master. The church was often packed to its capacity. Twenty-five open professions of one kind and another were made during the meeting.

The evangelistic campaign began at Pleasant Grove the next day after the close of the above meeting. The pastor preached the first three days at which time Bro. R. F. Brown, Chapel Hill, N. C., arrived and assumed charge of that part of the work. Brother Brown is a good preacher, and was at his best at Pleasant Grove. He found his field well organized with a band of intercessors and co-workers realizing fully their task and setting themselves solidly to it. As a result a great time was experienced by many. There were twenty-four accessions to the church, three new deacons were ordained—these being J. H. Farmer, W. O. Farmer, and G. C. Talbert—and the church and community were greatly revived in spiritual things.

This field will need another pastor after the third Sunday in September as the present pastor expects to enter the theological seminary at Princeton the Wednesday following. Here is a great field and I am loathe to go—about 475 members in the heart of one of the best farming districts in Virginia.

DAMASCUS

The revival meeting at Damascus began on the first Sunday in August and came to a close on the following Friday. The attendance, after the first two days, was good and the interest fine. Bro. J. F. Morgan, of the Third Christian church, Norfolk, Va., did the preaching. He gave us ten splendid sermons and the people gladly heard him. In addition to his preaching, he gave us fine singing, which was enjoyed by all. As a result of the meeting twelve professions were made and seven united with the church. Bro. Morgan will always have a glad welcome at this church.

FROM BRO. W. M. JAY'S PEN

At the present time wife and I and little daughter, Virginia, are enjoying a brief vacation at the Buffalo Lithia Springs, and aside from the rest and many new acquaintances, there is the healing and invigorating qualities of the mineral waters here, which makes a visit to this place not only pleasant, but profitable from the standpoint of the physical.

The Sunday schools at both Holland and Holy Neck have held up splendidly in interest and attendance during the summer months, while the attendance at the regular services have only slightly decreased.

The fact of these two churches supporting a pastor for full time will soon become a matter of experience. The Holland church expects soon to be able to make announcement of their new pastor for the ensuing year.

The Lightbourne-Davis Evangelistic meeting at Holy Neck will begin on the first Sunday in September. We are looking forward with great anticipation and in the earnest of prayer, for a sweeping revival of religion in this whole community. We earnestly beseech the membership and all Christians to pray for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit in our midst. May the hands of Brothers Lightbourne and Davis be loyally held up, and their faithful efforts loyally backed up by prayer and Holy works, that Christians may be reconsecrated and renewed in the faith, and the unsaved endued with the power of the spirit and the joys of the new birth.

The church has been recently furnished with a new Willis Light plant, and electrically lighted throughout. Immediately after the meetings the church building will be treated to two coats of paint. The centennial session of the Eastern Virginia Conference will be held with this church this fall and a special Conference program is being prepared.

Rev. R. F. Brown, of the Chapel Hill church, North Carolina, preached a very able sermon at the Holland church on Wednesday night after the fourth Sunday in July. We were glad to have Brother Brown with us.

UNCLE WELLONS' SPIRITUAL BIRTHDAY

The first day of the week and the first day of the month and the first day of the year 1826 I was born, being now in my ninety-fifth year.

On Monday after the fourth Sunday in August 1837 I was spiritually born at Barrett's church in Southampton County, Virginia, this being my spiritual birthday. I am eighty-three years old today, spiritually. That is one of the days that I can never forget—the day when Jesus washed my sins away. My mother did not talk so much about religion, but she lived the Christian life in her everyday walks, and by her example she drew my father and her four children to God. Mother distributed to us all the comforts of life which she enjoyed and we saw that she possessed one thing that we did not possess, and in my eleventh year I saw that I was in spiritual darkness. Eighty-three years ago today I was adopted in God's family. It was one of the greatest changes that ever came over me and the greatest change that I ever felt. Spiritual darkness disappeared and spiritual light took its place and it was a new world to me. It was not a mere profession but a reality and that same life has continued with me thus far in life. I have told of the life so many times and I have seen hundreds and thousands accept that life and come into the ark of God. I have heard them tell of the new life that has come over them. This is the religion that I have tried to practice and preach for these many years.

I have always taught a religion we can feel and tell others about—not merely a profession of religion, but that religion that brings joy to the heart. I feel that the many good seeds that we have been trying to sow have, and are now, still bringing forth good fruit. The new methods have so many changes, but the same heartfelt religion we once enjoyed is the same old profession of religion we now enjoy. We can feel we are standing on the rock Christ Jesus, while we may adopt the new methods. I am not a stickler over methods, but clinging to the old truths as in Christ Jesus.

I have always preached the plain simple truths of the Bible that you must be born again or you will be sure to go to hell when you die, as the rich man who lifted up his eyes in torment. But if you will accept and live the Christ life you will be sure to go to Heaven when you die, there where the pure in heart shall see God—not simply because we are afraid we will go to hell when we die, but because we love God, and religion is love.

I am now not able to do much preaching from the pulpit, but am preaching and practicing divine healing. Some come to see me but a larger number are corresponding with me from different states, cities and countries desiring prayer for the various chronic diseases. I have so many letters telling me of the good results from prayer for the different kinds of diseases. This comforts the heart to know that our prayers are not in vain.

I am still trying to do good for suffering humanity and want to continue until the end comes.

MT. AUBURN

Notwithstanding the rain, a good congregation turned out last Sunday, August 8. The collections for our Orphanage amounted to about twelve dollars. The church building will be repainted at a cost of about five hundred dollars, and ready for services by the second Sunday in September. On Saturday before the second Sunday in September, the children will have a picnic dinner at the schoolhouse near Mt. Auburn. They will meet at the schoolhouse about 9:30 a. m., play ball, jump ropes, roast tender corn, and have other amusements. After dinner, everybody will go to the church, where the pastor, D. A. Long, will review the Sunday school lesson for September 12. Also call on a number of people for short talks to the children. All the white people about Mt. Auburn, of all churches, and no churches, of all ages are invited to take a well filled basket, and spend the day—only let it be understood that the boys and girls are to have the right of way, and they are not to be dressed in their "Sunday clothes," for fear they will get soiled playing ball, climbing trees, jumping ropes, making coffee, lemonade, roasting corn, eating peaches and melons—I'm so glad, I'm so glad, I'm so glad.

D. A. LONG.

PASTOR WANTED

I know of a splendid church, with large congregation and a fine parsonage largely furnished, that will soon need a pastor. He must be a brave Gospel preacher, clear of higher criticism, whose wife is capable of being a leader among women. Anyone interested will please write me at once, enclosing in your letter a two-cent stamp, with endorsement of the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN or from Dr. J. P. Barrett.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

AN URGENT APPEAL AND A GREAT PICNIC

Some weeks ago I looked over the list of Sunday schools and found quite a number that had made no contribution this year. I wrote a letter to all schools not having a credit this year and appealed to them to take an offering for the Orphanage and mail it in so they might have a credit on this year's book. So far I have received three contributions from Sunday schools that had not been giving. This week I have gone over my record book and find that the Conferences stand as follows:

	No. of Churches	Monthly Contributors	Not Contributing
Va. Valley Conference	26	9	17
Ala. Conference	23	10	13
Ga. and Ala. Conference	14	6	8
Eastern Va. Conference	47	26	21
N. C. Conference	118	64	54
	228	115	113

I give this list to let you know just what per cent of the Sunday schools in our Southern Christian Convention are lending a helping hand to support the Christian Orphanage. I have a record book ruled especially for this work and have the name of each school on this book. Some of our schools are just as loyal as can be and have been since I have been in this work. Their contribution comes in each month as regular as the clock ticks. Each monthly space for this year is filled in with a credit. It really looks good on the page to see each month filled in. Some schools send in each quarter and the space for this contribution is filled each quarter. But we have one hundred and thirteen lines on that book which are blank. Blank! Blank!! Oh, how sad.

Dear Sunday school workers whose Sunday school has made no contribution this year toward the support of the Orphanage, Your Orphanage, I want to say to you that the cries of the widows and orphans have never been more touching. Just think—one hundred little children have been refused admittance in the last eight months because we had no room and no place to give them! If friends of the little orphans with the one hundred and fifteen Sunday schools making the contributions monthly, are taking care of sixty children, could we not easily take care of one hundred if the one hundred and thirteen churches that are not helping now would join in and give us their support? I have turned away from our doors ten children this week. I have had to say "no" to two widows this week, appealing in pitiful tones for us to take at least a part of their children. One of them had five children, the oldest eleven years of age, and all dependent upon the mother's work for a living. If you were the superintendent of an orphanage and a widow came to you with five little helpless children who were entirely dependent upon her own wages for support and the prices of everything the highest it has ever been in the history of our country, don't you think it would make your heart sad to tell her that you could not help her in her distress? If I were a member of your Sunday school and it was not making a monthly contribution to help support your Orphanage, I would make this motion next Sunday:

"Moved that we give one Sunday's offering each month toward the support of the Christian Orphanage and one Sunday's offering each month for missions and the other two Sunday's offerings be used to buy supplies for the Sunday school and bear the other necessary expenses." I would make a strong effort to get this motion passed and then see it carried out. I believe in three months you would see such a decided change in the life of your school that you would hardly know whether you were in your own Sunday school or not.

The Durham Sunday school "pulled off" one of the largest picnics here on August 10 that has ever been "pulled off" here. They chartered special cars and brought their school two hundred strong with baskets filled to the brim with everything good to eat that a child with a picnic appetite for a picnic dinner could enjoy. They arrived here on the 11:32 train and marched immediately to the college chapel where a song and prayer service was held and a talk made by Dr. Wellons and then all walked over to the Orphanage grounds, where the day was spent in enjoying a real picnic day. The day was cool and pleasant and an ideal day for a picnic. At the noon hour the dinner was spread on the table that had been prepared for the occasion, but when the baskets were opened we found our table was entirely too short and we had to use our dining room tables to make room for the many good things to eat. After dinner was over, the baskets were stored away till time for the evening lunch when it was spread again and a bountiful supper was enjoyed with ice cream for all.

It was a happy day for the Orphanage children and a real treat indeed and we did our best to make the day pleasant and happy for our visitors from Durham. We believe everybody had a good time and the day was very happily spent by everybody. We hope the Durham Sunday school will make this an annual occasion.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley:—I am a little girl fourteen years old and wish to join the band of cousins. I go to Sunday school at New Hope church and I like it fine. I am enclosing ten cents, my dues for August. With love to all.—Patzy Rogers.

Glad to have you write this week. You are the only little girl we have to bring smiles for the three little boys in the corner this week. You must write often.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley:—I went on your Sunday school picnic and mother said I was a good little boy. Rev. J. F. Morgan was there with his baby and we had a good time. I did not spend all my moneys so will send you twenty-five cents.—Cecil L. Mercer.

You are a fine little fellow to go on a picnic and not spend all your money, but thought of the little orphans. I believe you should be a preacher, what do you think of that?—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley:—When daddy sends in the Sunday school offering, it is time for us to send our dues, which is every third Sunday. We hope you all have plenty of water melons. Our meeting will start before we write again. We expect to have a good meeting. We are enclosing our dues and love for the Orphanage.—Virginia Pearl and W. T. Ayscue.

We hope to have plenty of melons by the first of September. Our melons are late this year.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley:—We are enclosing our dues for this month. We wish the little cousins were here to eat water melons with us. We have such fine ones. Love and best wishes to all the cousins.—Frank and Herbert Burton.

I wish you could see our little folks eat water melons. Why don't you send us eight? That many will make us a mess.—“Uncle Charley.”

The man is supposed to be the father of the child, but it is possible, as we have observed in some instances, for the child to be the father of the man.

A preacher is so often made by his congregation. A preacher's failure may first be the failure of his congregation.

THIS PAPER GETS A LETTER

Dear Sun:—I am very proud of you. You are a faithful “sun” and shine whether you get pay or not. I am ashamed that I have been receiving your beautiful radiance since June first and had not looked at my label. Now you know I have been a busy man. I read your columns each week and ought to have noticed that my subscription had expired but did not. I sometimes think people are careless and unconcerned about their renewals, but perhaps there are others like myself, who have so many things to claim their attention that they overlook it too. I enclose you my check for another year. I could not do without your pleasant visits if you cost twice as much.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON.

MORE ABOUT THE CHRISTIAN SUN

Dear Bro. Riddle:

I see from your notice in THE CHRISTIAN SUN that you are going to recommend the subscription price of that paper to be $3.00 yearly, in advance. I want to second your recommendation. However, I would rather the price be $4.00 yearly. I trust you will ask the Board to request all pastors and laymen to explain to the public that this is done on account of the great advance in everything. I believe there are enough loyal members in the Southern Convention who will gladly endorse the recommendation to put THE SUN on a solid foundation. While the salaries of teachers, preachers, State and county officials are being advanced, do not forget our Church paper.

May God direct the Board and Editor.

THE ETHICS OF DANCING

I have recently read a pamphlet bearing this title. It is from the facile pen of Rev. R. Lee Kirkland, D. D., Flemington, N. J. It is well written and punctures the ball room idea in many vulnerable places. It shows the practice of ball room dancing to be very wrong and injurious, ruining, in many instances, the health, the morals and the spiritual life of people who ought to think too much of themselves to be seen in a dance hall, or to show it any sympathy at all. If you wish to help the cause, send to the author and get a few copies. Read one yourself and then give the others to any one you know who believes in the dance, and may God bless your efforts to do good to others by warning them against the evils of the dance.

NOTES

Dr. W. W. Staley is spending a few days resting at Fuquay Springs.

Elon College opens Wednesday, September 1. Students should arrive August 31.

Bro. R. W. Malone, a member of the Burlington church, for several years assistant cashier of the First National Bank has been promoted to the office of cashier.

We observe from The Siler City Grit that the Singing Class of the Christian Orphanage will be at Pleasant Grove (Randolph) church the first Sunday morning in September and with the Bennett congregation that night.

Among the brethren and friends who have passed through THE SUN's home town during the past few days and called are: Prof. E. O. Randolph, Bryan, Texas; Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Virginia; Mr. F. M. Clements, Greensboro, N. C., and Rev. Jas. L. Foster, Waverly, Virginia. Come again, brethren.

Miss Bessie Holt, following her attendance and talks at the Valley of Virginia Conference, visited eleven churches in that Conference and made addresses pertaining to the Young People's Work, remaining for two weeks among the people and churches of the Conference, trying to enlist our young people for Christian service. She was with Dr. A. B. Kendall and his Washington, D. C., congregation Sunday, August 22. Miss Holt has recently issued a hand book to be used by our young people in starting and carrying on their Societies, and a copy of this Handbook will be sent gratis to any pastor or young person desiring a copy as a help to organizing a Young People's Missionary Society.

The Lutheran Survey, Columbia, S. C., one of the leading weekly papers of the Lutheran Church, on August 4 was forced to change from a weekly to a monthly. The announcement is that nothing except economic circumstances in present-day printing caused the change to be made. This is but another signal to our Brotherhood that the Church papers need the loyal support of every member of the Church. It is a trying time in the field of journalism. The market price of book paper today is just exactly twice the amount that it was this time last year—and we thought then that it was high enough. If there is an editor in the country without grey hair, our advice is for him to leave the chair, if he desires to escape the silvery top. The lack of years must be the only thing that is staying the white threads in this sanctum.

As we prepare to go to press with the second "run" of THE SUN, Brother W. F. Sawyer, of Union Ridge, delights us with a fine water melon. Thank you, Brother Sawyer.

Zion's Watchman, Butler, Ind., in its forty-second year falls to the necessity of financial support and reduces from sixteen to eight pages, and also by smaller in size, in length and width. One by one the Church press suffers for the lack of support and the high price of paper, printing materials, and labor. Conditions are unprecedented.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—FONVILLE

Whereas, Our Heavenly Father, Who doeth all things well, and whose will we are taught to pray may be done on earth as it is in Heaven, did on Sunday morning, July 18, 1920, remove from our midst the beloved and faithful president of the Woman's Missionary Society and member of the Ladies' Aid Society of the Burlington Christian church, and has left her chair vacant and our hearts sad because of her going. Now therefore, be it Resolved;

First. That the above named Societies of the Burlington Christian church, while unable to understand the mysterious workings of an all-wise Father, in thus removing from us a loved one whose life and example meant so much to the church, our community and to everyone who knew her; yet we know that He doeth all things well, and that she has gone to live with Him and to receive her reward. Her blessed memory, her exemplary life, and her beautiful Christian character will ever remain with us in fond memory and be an inspiration to us in our duties here.

Second, That we will strive to emulate the beautiful traits of character so fully exemplified in the life of our departed president and member, and will strive to keep the fires lighted by her own hands on the altars of the Woman's Missionary and Ladies' Aid Societies ever brightly burning, looking forward to the work finished and a happy reunion with our loved one in that home prepared for us after this fleeting, transient life is over.

Third. That we constantly remember the little babe at a Throne of Grace, praying that it may grow in grace, in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; that it may live to be a comfort and a solace to the bereaved father.

Fourth. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved husband, father and mother, and also that a copy be sent THE CHRISTIAN SUN and Burlington News for publication, and a copy be furnished the secretary of the Burlington Christian church to be made a part of the permanent church records.

LONG

Wesley Dace Long, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Long, of Hopedale, died August 8, 1920, aged eleven months and eight days. The funeral services were conducted from the home by the writer and the body of the little one was laid to rest in the cemetery at Graham, N. C. Friends and loved ones banked the grave with beautiful flowers. We commend the sorrowing parents to Jesus, the Healer of broken hearts.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—PILAND

Whereas, by the death of Mrs. Daisy Allsbrook Piland, the Junior Philathea Class of the Suffolk Christian church has lost a valued member; and, whereas, while we mourn her loss, we rejoice to have her sunny presence and enthusiastic interest, as a pleasant memory, and incentive to greater effort on our part. Therefore, be it Resolved:

That we extend our sincerest sympathy to the bereaved husband, the little child and other members of the family. We bid them look forward, as we do, to the glad day of reunion, when "We shall be ever with the Lord."

RITENOUR

Clara Moselle Ritenour was born October 13, 1916, and died July 31, 1920. Her age was three years, nine months, and eighteen days. The parents are natives of Powell's Fort, but were living in Baltimore at the time of the death of their little daughter. They brought the body home for burial. Services were held at Cross Roads Methodist church near Dry Run, on August 2. One little brother yet remains in the home to comfort the sorrowing parents.

Houses and Homes

(James H. Skiles, in Congregationalist.)

The walls of a house may be builded of wood,
Its foundations, of brick or of stone;
But a genuine home is an exquisite thing,
For it's builded of heart throbs alone.

The price of a house may be reckoned at once
And paid with a handful of gold;
But the price of a home very few can compute,
And that price they have never yet told.

The rooms of a house may be stately and grand,
Their adornment, a triumph of art;
But the beauty of home is the final result
Of the toil of an unselfish heart.

A house may be burned, may be sold or exchanged,
Nor the loss of one's peace interfere;
But the loss of a home—how it chushes the heart!
For our homes we all love and revere.

Of houses a man may possess many scores
Yet his poverty lead to despair;
But an honorable man in a home of his own,
Must be counted a true millionaire.

CONCERN ABOUT THE DAUGHTER

At this season of the year when young ladies are going away to college, many mothers are concerned about the welfare of their daughters. A particular interest is usually manifested as to the associates of the daughter, especially if a co-ed school is patronized.

Many fathers and mothers raise objections to the co-ed school on account of what they term as "match-making." Editor Kerr of The Herald of Gospel Liberty writes along this line and his words are worthy of a place here and else where. Read what he says on the subject:

"In almost any community a home or two can be found whose parents decline to encourage their children to go to college on the ground that 'colleges are only matchmaking institutions anyhow!' If this absurd charge against the colleges were true, which every informed person knows is not, we still would be enthusiastically in favor of getting every high school graduate possible into a good one. If they were to go to college simply to find their life-companions, that alone would be a sufficient and justifiable reason for fathers and mothers to make the sacrifice necessary to give their sons and daughters such schooling. For it has been our observation that many of the finest 'matches' that we ever have known are those made between college students. Where else better could your son and daughter likely find companions of culture and refinement and Christian character than in a Christian college? Where else are they more likely to meet and love some one with an ambition and purpose and a preparation that will fit them to be something and somebody worth while in the world?

"Many youth of exceptionally fine merits are being reared in some little community in which there is not a single young person of their own type worthy to become their husband or wife. It is not fair to allow them to be condemned to make their choice of life-companion from such a small circle of acquaintances. Even more than for an education, is it important to get them away into a different set of friends before mating time. It comes as a God-send to such young people to be permitted to go to a college where are gathered many of the very cream of the young manhood and womanhood of the land, there to form their friendships and enter into those associations where the most sacred and potent relationships of life may be developed. If there is anything on earth that is more important and more worthy of a parent's concern and assistance, we do not know what it is.

"For the average home in the average community, the excuse that colleges are a fertile field for Cupid, is one of the best reasons that can be given for getting the children away and into it."

THE SPREAD OF CHRISTIANITY

Some of us who are anxious to see the world evangelized in this generation, as well as the many who are not, often become discouraged at results. We can easily find fault with methods, and wonder why God did not choose more rapid and efficient methods of making known to the world the saving power of His Son, our Lord Jesus.

We really forget, do we not, (to quote a recent item in Home and Foreign Field) that "the most wonderful story, aside from the New Testament, that has ever been committed to language is that of the spread of Christianity. Jesus began with two men as His followers; upon His death there were one hundred twenty; shortly afterward we find a Christian community of five thousand men, to say nothing of women and children; in three hundred years, amid terrible persecutions, Christianity had spread over the then known world, its triumphal march culminating in 313 A. D., in the decree of Constantine, granting to all Christians in the Roman Empire freedom of worship and recognition of State. By the year 1000 it is estimated that there were fifty million Christians; by the year 1500 this number had doubled; and at the beginning of the twentieth century more than five hundred million of the earth's inhabitants professed some kind of allegiance to Christ and His Gospel. At this rate, by the close of the present century, the whole world will almost certainly have been evangelized—that is, the Gospel story, in some fashion, placed within the hearing of every human being.”

A MISSIONARY SHIP

The Southern Baptist Board chartered a ship, “The Empress of Japan,” for use exclusively for their missionaries going to the Orient. The ship sailed on Aug. 17 from Vancouver. In addition to a large number of old missionaries returning with their families to their work, fifty new missionaries sailed also as “Torch Beams” for the Master to the dark lands that know Him not. The same Board will send other missionaries this year to Africa and South America. One reason why our Baptist friends accomplish such great things at home is because they look first of all, to carrying out the Great Commission, “Go ye into all the world and preach My Gospel to every creature.”

MESSAGE FOR LABOR SUNDAY—SEPT. 5

(Contributed.)

The year since Labor Sunday, September 2, 1919, has been one of widespread industrial conflict. It has witnessed the Steel Strike in the summer and early autumn of 1919, the Coal Strike in November, the Railroad Strike,—the so-called Outlaw Strike—in the spring, the Long Shoreman’s Strike in New York City, tense labor situations over the open shop, as for example in Atlanta and Wichita, an antagonism bordering on violence in the states of the Northwest. A well known statistician estimates that during August and September, 1919, the workers lost through strikes $41,272,000 in wages, and employers $4,127,000 in profits. At that rate the cost of strikes for the entire year would be about a quarter of a billion dollars in wages and about $25,000,000 in profits.

Among other results of these conflicts and antagonisms is the defeating of the spirit of brotherhood and co-operation which constitute not only the essence of Christianity but also the strength of society. The church watches the deepening controversy with profound concern. . . . It must bring to bear every ounce of influence which it possesses to bring these contending groups together and to induce them to work out permanent and effective methods of co-operation.

If employers and workers are to work out co-operative relations in industry, which shall put heart and power into production and bring just and balanced returns to the two groups, there must first be a method devised by which they can get together and keep together. If no form of labor organization is permitted and if not only strikes but labor organization itself is fought to a finish, there appears no way out of our troubles but rather a deepening of them. We shall have an autoeratic management of industry on the one side, and either a kind of serfdom on the other or a militant, bitter, and class-conscious organization of labor growing yearly more revolutionary.

Two methods having possibility of immediate applications have been devised to meet this problem: labor unions, for collective bargaining, and mutual shop organization of the workers in individual plants or series of plants. . . . The church must urge employers, especially Christian employers, to work out democratic principles in their establishments with due time for investigation and experiment. Whenever possible, the regular organizations of men should be dealt with.

But the important matter is not just what plan is followed but that a start be made. And is there not something deeper to be considered; namely, the moral principles upon which the employers and workers are to come together and upon which a permanent happy and really productive industrial organization of the nation is to be built?

Our industrial life has been built on wrong and un-Christian foundations and one great task which lies immediately before us is a work of education, to change our beliefs as well as our practices, and put our six working days on the principles which are taught us from the lips of the Master on Sunday.

Is it not our problem to substitute the Golden Rule for our present doctrine of competitive struggle—that competition which has pitted employer against employer, corporation against corporation, nation against nation. This doctrine was responsible away back for the great war with its gigantic economic and human losses. It has pitted capitalist and employer against the workers, and the workers against capitalist and employer in a struggle which threatens another cataclysm and at least the temporary shattering of civilization. The workers have not been considered first of all as human beings, with families and children, men to be given opportunities, to be helped to self-expression, to be inspired by large rewards; but as parts of a mechanism, a terrible, powerful, wonderful mechanism which on the whole has worked them hard, shifted them, often reduced technical skill acquired by years of training to unskilled work by the creation of complex machines. Millions of them, have until lately lived on the borderland of poverty. Many of them, in spite of general wage advance, are still perilously near the poverty line. They have been forced to neglect their children; their homes have been unattractive; they could not pay their way in the church, and the church has neglected them more than it realizes.

Now we want the Golden Rule—“Do unto others as you would have them do unto you,” and Christ’s saying “Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself,” set up in factories and applied to the total personnel, from stockholders, directors and president to the unskilled day worker. We want a concern for the individual life, which is basic in the teaching of Jesus, to have a controlling place in industrial relations.

The Golden Rule applied to a factory means first that management and men shall work out some effective and sincere form of organization mutually satisfactory, which shall give the men self-expression, recognition

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

AN OPPORTUNITY OF THE OPEN COUNTRY NUMBER 1

For nearly six years I have been pastor of a rural community. I have set my heart diligently to the country church problems. Now as I am about to go from it, for a while at least, I should like to set down a few things which I believe I have observed to be opportunities in the open country. I do not propose to write of all these opportunities, nor shall I presume to think myself capable of writing of any one of them.

The church in the country has the opportunity of being a recruiting station for the Christian ministry. Especially is this true of country churches in the better sections of North Carolina and Virginia. I speak of this territory because it is with this territory I am more or less well acquainted. Such churches have not, or should not long have, large fields of opportunity in the winning of new converts to Christianity. Nearly everybody is a church member, and church-going is the prevailing custom. Shall the church in such a community content itself when it has put on an elaborate campaign for receiving the annual inflow of a half dozen children? Shall its three or four hundred valiant soldiers of the King consider a hard battle fought and won when the few children have been so received? Or should not the great shortage in our number of preachers be considered a privilege, an opportunity, a challenge? Last spring the Southern Christian Convention in session was staggard speechless and seemingly helpless as it confronted the tremendous task of solving the problem of recruiting the ministry. Our country churches need the spiritual exercise that setting themselves solidly against such a task would give and the Kingdom needs the recruits.

As to the methods of measuring up to this opportunity I did not set out in this short article to discuss. They may be many and varied. The local church with its local leaders should find it a pleasure to work out a course of procedure. It might here be stated that to "pray the Lord of the harvest" has never yet been brooked nor gainsaid. The calling of a church to definite prayer for "reapers" is no small thing and is worthy of the best within us.

J. G. TRUITT.

VALLEY LETTER

The most notable thing that has happened to us lately is the recent session of our Conference, the Virginia Valley Central, which was held in Winchester, August 5-7. We had a good session, of course. Twenty out of twenty-six churches were represented by one or more delegates. Every church sent in its report, except Bethel. All the ministers of the Conference were present except Rev. Killis Roach.

From outside the Conference we had such able help as that afforded by Rev. L. F. Johnson, D. D., who conducted several of the devotional services using as a general topic "The Prayers of Jesus;" Rev. W. W. Staley,

D. D., who made several splendid talks and addresses before the Conference; Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., who preached an able sermon on Thursday night; Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., who spoke several times in a very eloquent manner on missions; Rev. H. R. Clem, who represented the Dayton publishing house, and made an address on "Our Publications;" Dr. W. A. Harper, who delivered the Annual Address, and an address on Education, both of which were fine; Rev. C. A. McDaniel, who made an address on moral reform and preached on Sunday, and led the singing most of the time during the Conference; Miss Bessie Holt, who spoke several times during the session, and visited a few of the churches since Conference in the interest of Young People's Missionary Societies.

The Washington church, together with its pastor, Rev. A. B. Kendall, D. D., was received into the Conference, and Dr. Kendall made an address on Christian Endeavor. The addition of the Washington church will likely mean much to the strength of the Conference some day, and the addition of Dr. A. B. Kendall and Rev. C. A. McDaniel, the pastor elect of the Winchester church, to our ministerial force also mean much to the growth of the Conference.

Dr. W. T. Walters delivered the President's Address. It was a thoughtful and forceful presentation of the relations and obligations of the Church.

Rev. C. A. McDaniel was elected to deliver the Annual Address next year with Rev. A. B. Kendall as alternate.

The Conference voted to buy 150 annuals at the publisher's price, 50 cents each, and sell them at half price.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Dr. W. T. Walters, President; Rev. B. J. Earp, Vice-President; Rev. A. W. Andes, Secretary; Rev. W. C. Hook, Assistant Secretary; Samuel Earman, Treasurer. Officers for the Woman's Mission Board were elected as follows: Mrs. W. T. Walters, President; Mrs. A. B. Kendall, Vice-President; Mrs. B. F. Frank, Secretary; Miss Verdie Showalter, Treasurer; Mrs. A. W. Andes, Superintendent of Young People's Department; Miss Ella Pickering, Superintendent of Literature and Mite Boxes; Mrs. C. O. Taylor, Superintendent of Cradle Roll. The Conference Missionary Association elected Rev. W. C. Hook, President; Mrs. A. W. Andes, Secretary; Rev. B. J. Earp, Treasurer.

Mayland was chosen as the place for the Conference to meet next year.

The Conference Missionary Association paid over to the Conference Treasurer $187.60 as against $253.98 last year. The total amount received on Conference apportionments this year was $1,504.71, pastor's salaries, $3,770.67, and for all purposes, $9,308.85, as against $1,149.16, $3,372.45, and $8,388.38 respectively last year. Only small gains were made in membership by any of the churches, and some report a net loss. Apparently we need to lay more stress on evangelism this year. Let us strive to make it a better year in every good way than last year.

FIRST CHURCH, NORFOLK, VA.

The services of the First Church have been better attended this summer than during any similar period since the present pastor came on the field, notwithstanding the fact that a large number of our members have been away on their summer vacation. As they are now returning we are expecting great interest in all the services, and a greater enthusiasm in carrying out the plans of the church in the interest of the Kingdom. Our members this summer have visited various sections of the country. Mr. Wiggs, our Sunday school superintendent, has been in Ohio, North Carolina, and possibly other states; Mrs. M. L. Bryant, and Mrs. Geo. H. Frey have been in New York; Mrs. E. T. Jones has been resting in the mountains; Mr. E. H. Everton, our efficient secretary, with his family, rested on his father's farm in the country; Deacon S. W. Pierce took his vacation at home; Deacon J. M. Jones ate ham and rested at the home of his brother, Deacon B. D. Jones and a large number of our other members have had a nice rest at various places that are not known to the pastor. The strength gained from these vacations, I am sure, will put new life into all our services in the immediate future, and we are hoping to do some fine work in the interest of our Lord's Kingdom.

J. F. MORGAN, Pastor.

AMELIA

Revival services began at Amelia Christian church, Sunday, August 8, and closed August 12. Rev. J. F. Apple, of Elon College, did the preaching. He brought us very helpful messages. The congregations were small on account of the rain, but those who came out were greatly repaid. The result of the meeting was not what we would liked to have had. Only one person was added to the church. This conversion, however, may mean a great good to our church in the years to come. We have enjoyed the work here very much this year and feel the Lord has wonderfully blessed us, however, we feel it is best to make a change another year.

G. C. CRUTCHFIELD.

THE WINONA BIBLE CONFERENCE

One of the fine things that came our way during vacation month—was the privilege of attending the Bible Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana—which by the way, has grown to be one of the largest of its kind in America.

It may seem rather strange to those who read this note when they think of newly weds attending a religious gathering such as this, which brought together thousands of men and women from thirty-nine states and five foreign lands, but we felt we could not afford to miss the great opportunity for a course of real Bible study and educational work of the Church.

The part of the conference we enjoyed most was the two weeks given for ministers and their wives. This conference was made up of six hundred and eighty-two ministers from twenty-nine states, most of whom carried their wives. The main faculty was made up of Dr. G.

Campbell Morgan—his three sons (who are all ministers), Samuel S. Chadwick of England, and Dr. Robertson, and Evangelist Richard F. Lyon, of America. These men have mastered their subjects, and each message brought something new, brilliant and very devotional to the hearers.

No creditable estimate can be placed upon the Winona Conference this year. In addition to the faculty mentioned above, we mention the names, Geo. R. Stuart, Ira D. Landreth, Capt. Raymond Robinson, of Chicago; E. R. Roper, Dr. Tindley, Homer E. Rodeheaver, Mrs. Asher, Billy Sunday, and quite a number of other prominent men and women whose names, space will not admit, whose messages gripped the hearers and sent them away anxious to do better service for Christ and His Kingdom.

Now to some of the special features of the session. These special features were mostly put on at the evening hours, and carried plays from Shakespeare, and an occasional picture of some kind, together with out-door sports, Bible contests, musical tests and festivals and other interesting things that kept all hearts and lives anxious.

One great feature of the week was a debate on "The League of Nations," which was held in the new Billy Sunday Tabernacle which seats 8,000 in the clear. (It was named for Mr. Sunday, because he and his wife gave $15,000 of the money to erect the building which will cost $92,000 when complete.)

But more must be said concerning that debate. The affirmative was championed by Senator Hitchcock, of Nebraska, who has been President Wilson's right hand man in the League Championship, and was at his very best. The negative side was upheld by Major Morris, of Kentucky. The Major claims to be first a "Campbellite Preacher," second, a staunch Republican, and a major in the A. E. F. during the war. He might be called an excellent debater from the way he handled his subject, for it took him twenty-eight minutes to clear the deck, and set the big audience of 8,000 to wild cheering, and hissing his opponent on every side. The debate was great and if that audience, representing thirty-nine states and five foreign countries represent the voice of America, even in a small way, the League of Nations will lose out before the next President is inaugurated.

In closing, the evangelistic side should be mentioned. Dr. G. Campbell Morgan preached for the assembly each Sunday. The evening services were evangelistic, and men were being saved in every service which found their climax in the Sunday meetings, which started with Mr. Sunday's lecture on "Safety First," and was in progress when it became necessary for us to leave for the south. Taking the conference assembly as a whole it was wonderful, and is at the beginning of a great future. Dr. Morgan and others claim the session far superior to the Northfield Conference sessions. Here is hoping that it shall be our privilege to spend another summer at Winona.

REV. and MRS. J. VINCENT KNIGHT.

Greensboro, N. C.

WINCHESTER'S NEW PASTOR

(Winchester Evening Star.)

The pastor committee of the Winchester Christian church has announced that Rev. C. A. McDaniel, of Milford, N. J., had accepted a call to the church, and that he would move to the pastorate on or about October 1. The church believes it has made a good selection in calling the Rev. Mr. McDaniel.

The Rev. Mr. McDaniel is a native of Ohio, and the son of the Rev. R. H. McDaniel, the noted hymn writer of the Christian Church. The son is a gifted singer, and will be an asset to the community in the service of song. He is a graduate of Antioch Christian College, with the degree of A. B., and is a post graduate of Harvard University. He comes to the Winchester charge with high recommendations.

For five years he has been the successful pastor of the Milford Christian church one of the oldest and most influential charges in the New Jersey Christian Conference. He has served churches in the state of Ohio, and in the New England Christian Convention.

The Winchester Christian church is to be congratulated in securing the Rev. Mr. McDaniel to serve its growing congregation. The church is one of the latest built in the city, and has been a great success under the pastoral charge of the Rev. Dr. W. T. Walters. It is free from debt and gives much promise of great usefulness.

TWO FORMER EDITORS OF THE SUN AGREE

Dear Bro. Riddle:—

I think Rev. W. G. Clements is eminently correct, in his opinion in last week's SUN, about the subscription price. I presume that when he was editor paper to print THE SUN on could be bought for two and a half or three cents a pound. When I was editor it had crept up to four and four and a half. It is now about nineteen to twenty cents a pound I am told. The price of printing has advanced, I presume, in similar proportions. Moreover, when Bro. Clements was editor it took about two bushels of wheat to pay a year's subscription to THE SUN. Now it takes less than one bushel. Then a man working for wages would have to give about two days for the price of his paper; now he would give about half day's wage. (I heard a wage earner say today he got $5.00 a day; though another said he was only getting $4.50.)

Some time since The Religious Herald (Baptist paper of Virginia), advanced its subscription price from $2.00 to $2.50 a year. It announces that out of its 11,000 subscribers it lost only one on account of the advanced price. The Biblical Recorder (Baptist paper of North Carolina), advanced its subscription price August 1, and says it can go The Religious Herald one better—by which I take it that it has not lost a subscribers on account of the advanced price. If THE CHRISTIAN SUN was worth $2.00 two years ago (and it was) it is now worth $3.00 a year (and it is.)

Most cordially yours for a good, wide awake CHRISTIAN SUN (which we now have) and a self supporting CHRISTIAN SUN (which we have not.)

J. O. ATKINSON.

MEETINGS IN ALABAMA

Our meeting at Pleasant Grove began on the second Sunday in August. Our services were interfered with by much rain. Rev. R. F. Brown, of Chapel Hill, N. C., helped in the meeting and he brought us plain, practical and forceful sermons. The meeting was good, but there were no additions to the church.

Brother Brown also helped in the meeting at Shady Grove, which began the week after the third Sunday in August. Brother Brown's sermons here were of the highest type of Gospel preaching. We had a good meeting though the congregations were hindered on account of very serious sickness in the community. As a result of the meeting two members were added on the church roll and the whole church seemed revived. We shall be glad to have Bro. Brown with us again.

On reaching Noonday on Saturday, August 21, the revival was found to be in progress. We held five services. Ten members were received into the fellowship of the church. Our young people at Noonday are doing a fine work. They have organized a prayer meeting and they are active in Sunday school. We are expecting great things from this church. Brethren, pray for us.

HOLLAND LETTER

I am not much of a writer and hence do not indulge in this valuable field of effort as much as I may be expected to do.

I presume it is the general impression, that the church looks to the pastor to see that the general public is kept informed through the pulpit, the daily press and the Church paper of what is being done locally in the church.

While this presumption may be well taken, it also seems to the writer that it would not be a bad policy if occasionally, some of the faithful and informed laymen of the Church should use their pens and address a few remarks to the press, giving account of special features and certain accomplishments of the work throughout the year. This would give opportunity for publicity of matter, which, because of modesty, the pastor would not feel at liberty to give without fear of meeting the counter-charge of "tooting his own horn."

But we do not mean to discuss this question any further; the purpose of this article is chiefly an appreciation of the splendid and heroic efforts on the part of the Editors of our Church papers.

Speaking from the denominational point of view, as a pastor I should feel greatly at a loss and woefully handicapped without The Herald of Gospel Liberty, THE CHRISTIAN SUN and The Christian Missionary. The minister or layman who would strive to be a representative factor in the work of his denomination and not avail himself of the inspiration and help of his Church publications is certainly making a futile effort. You cannot truly represent a body or any part of it without being in touch with the work and progress of that body. Our Church papers afford us that touch and we don't get it in any other way except in annual or quadrennial doses at conferences and conventions.

I have always been a friend and admirer of The Herald of Gospel Liberty and that admiration grows with the constant progress of the paper.

When I came South I became a subscriber to THE SUN and now realize what I was missing, all the while I should have been taking it and did not.

I particularly refer to these papers because I count them indispensable to me in my work. And I desire to congratulate our Editors, Kerr and Riddle, for the high type of paper they are giving us, and doing it under such adverse circumstances as are embarrassing the general press today.

We regret, with the Editor and others, the necessity of increasing the subscription price of THE SUN, but when a thing is a necessity, who, in reason, can protest?

There are only two popular ways of making a Church paper pay; one is by making the subscription price high enough to make it pay and the other is to increase the circulation sufficiently to counter-balance the increase in cost of producing the paper.

Is not THE SUN's constituency largely at fault for the necessity of this increase?

If THE SUN was given its due and proper patronage the price of it would not only not be increased but could be judiciously decreased from the present price.

Is it not an established principle of business that the greater the number of units produced the lower is the cost of production per unit and the fewer the units produced the higher is the per unit cost of production, because practically the same overhead charges are distributed over a smaller number of units?

If the present cost of producing a yearly issue of THE SUN is $3.20 and should the number of subscriptions be doubled or trebled, would not the cost of a yearly issue be reduced?

Is it not a fact that THE SUN does not reach one-fourth of the families it should? (Perhaps the Editor can give a more accurate estimate.)

If this be true then does it not prove a feeling of disloyalty to our Church and its interests? Is not the necessity of this increase made a necessity largely because of this disloyalty?

After all who is forcing the price of THE SUN to be advanced, or who is it that can prevent it from being advanced? Is it not those who should take THE SUN but do not? But if they do not take the paper they will not read this nor any other appeal that is made to them. "How then shall they hear without the preacher?" Brother pastors whether THE SUN "rises" or "sets" we shall still need the pastor in every home, and much of the responsibility for getting it then will of necessity fall upon the busy pastor. However, it pays, for whenever something big is undertaken by the Church you can readily tell who are readers of their Church paper. Those who read are informed and they do not suspect for the first thing that it is only something for the preacher and deacons to get a big haul. You do not have to begin at A and argue through to Z, and then some, to make your point clear. How strange it was during the Men and Millions Campaign, after three or four months campaigning to find so many who still know little or nothing about the whole matter! They were "agin it" because they had heard some one say that he heard it down street from someone that got it from somewhere that the thing was going to be a rake off for somebody and hence he was "agin it." If he had only read it in THE SUN he could have gotten it first hand.

W. M. JAY.

Editorial Note: We are deeply indebted to Brother Jay for this fine article, and presume that he means for us to answer certain portions of it. We therefore, comment as follows:

1. The price of THE SUN has not been changed. A meeting of the Board of Publication was expected last week to consider the matter, but hindrances prevented the members of the Board from getting together.

2. There was once a time when it was possible to have a subscription list large enough to make a paper pay for itself, but with few exceptions, we doubt such now. Especially do we doubt it where there is not a very large amount of advertising to help.

3. A man once asked us what it would cost to get out a certain job of printing. We replied that it depended upon the number of copies taken, the more being taken the cheaper per number, or unit. The customer immediately asked how many copies would he have to take to reduce the cost to nothing. That is the point—the ratio works to a certain limit and ceases. We can point out to Brother Jay that we have a worthy Exchange that enjoys the handsome list of four times the size of THE SUN owns its own plant, issues a sixteen page sheet, and then cannot get by at $2.50 as its subscription price. There was a time when paper was so cheap that extra copies amounted to a fraction only—not so now. We lack about 2,000 subscribers having a number to make it more economical than it is, but as to making the price less, we would have to leave that to an expert printer.

4. THE SUN list is now a fraction over 2,500 and Brother Jay can figure from that the percentage of families reached.—C. B. R.

MISSIONARY

A MESSAGE FROM THE JAPAN MISSION TO THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH IN AMERICA WITH AN ESPECIAL APPEAL TO THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

In view of recent developments in the Christian Church in America which give promise of enlarged possibilities in Foreign Mission Enterprises—especially the enlarged vision and activity in the Southern Christian Convention and the study now being made by the proper officers of that body as to how best to make effective that enlarged interest and how to connect it with the world task, the Japan Mission of the Christian Church in session at Tokyo, June 22-25, 1920, desires to express to the Christian Church in America, including the S. C. C., somewhat of its hopes and fears relative to this whole problem of Foreign Mission enlargement; to remind the home constituency of the limitations under which their representatives have been compelled to work; to recall to the Church the inefficiency of the work and the glaring inadequacy of the force and equipment to cope with the problems of the field for which the Christian Church has through its Mission Board and by vote of the A. C. C. in quadrennial session, as well as by attempted occupancy, definitely accepted responsibility; to state that the new age just ushered in has multiplied opportunities and accentuated needs to such an extent that great reinforcements and enlarged equipment and a broadening of the very base of our work alone can assure permanence and continuity thereto; to state some of our own long cherished dreams which have arisen out of struggles in this unequal task; and finally to raise the question whether the enlargement of this work in Japan (whose immeasurable influence on the Orient and the entire non-Christian world need not be argued) is not the logical place for the enlargement of effort of the Christian Church and will not give ample scope for the greatest possible expression of her powers for the present and in time to come. We would have you believe as we believe that God has been simultaneously developing a need and a demand along with a new power and a new spirit, and that past history and present fact connect that need in Japan with that spirit and power in America, even localizing the relation to the Southern Christian Convention whose representative first opened our work in Japan.

We believe that it would be a neglect of duty and faithfulness to our task, both to the foreign mission work and to the Church which placed us here, for us to remain silent at this time. Stationed as we are at the gate of the Orient and the non-Christian world and yet in constant touch with the homeland, we have an ideal vantage point from which to view the needs of the one and the activities and potentialities of the other. Therefore we ask the privilege of being heard before any decisions are reached or any advance steps taken in the study of form or location of foreign mission extension.

Unquestionably, the needs of the field should be the determining element in selecting the form and location of any new work. We would therefore petition the proper authorities to send a commission made up of persons conversant with world conditions and especially world missions to make an intensive study of the needs and opportunities of the work which they have established in Japan, magnified as they are by the demands of the new age; the responsibility which is incumbent on the Christian Church by her occupation of the field and definite acceptance of the task of evangelization thereof; and, whether this is not ample task and does not give wide enough range for the expression of the potential missionary interest and capabilities of the Christian Church. We would like to call attention to the following facts about Japan and our work there:

1. The Japan Mission and the co-operating Japan Christian Conference were brought into the world without a proper birth-right. While other churches met the needs of the situation with full-rounded plans for evangelism on a basis of Christian education and invested tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars therein, we have set ourselves to accomplish the giant task by simply planting a little church here and there or the location of a missionary in the midst of one of the most rapidly advancing civilizations known to history. While others have strategically laid out their work so as to take advantage of rapid growth in progressive parts of the country or have thoughtfully concentrated on contiguous territory, we are located almost entirely in a hitherto non-progressive part of the country retarded by occasional famines and are scattered so as to be unable to make unity of effort count for the most. While others early purchased land and acquired buildings while prices were cheap, we have been forced to get along largely by the use of rented land and cheap Japanese buildings.

2. This child of the Christian Church was not only not well-born, but has been constantly under-nourished. Time and again has retrenchment been ordered. Never have the forces on the field been able to make out a budget setting forth what should be done at a given time. Budgets have been made annually, but were based on what we hoped to receive from the home church and not on the needs or what we could use to advantage.

3. The Japan Mission and Church have appealed again and again for backing to overcome the handicaps mentioned above. Especially have we been persistent in our appeal for men and means to establish schools. Argument of the case should not be necessary. If the influence on the Christian Church of Antioch College, Union Christian College, Christian Biblical Institute, Starkey Seminary, Elon, Defiance, Palmer and Jireh Colleges were eradicated, what would there be of the Christian Church today? And if the potential influences were to be removed at this moment, how many of our leaders, lay or clergy, would be content to remain at their posts? Worse than this supposition are the actual conditions in Japan. Ordinary education is not only materialistic and non-Christian, but is fundamentally anti-theistic or atheistic, and in numerous cases aggressively anti-Christian. It is youth who spend their most impressionable years in being grounded in non-Christian thinking and often under the influence of irreligious men whom we are trying to bring under the influence of the personality of Jesus Christ. It is true that conditions are wonderfully helped by the schools maintained by other denominations, and we share largely in their labors; but it is also true that the most promising men and women associate themselves with those churches which emphasize Christian education and we lose the stimulus of capable leadership. Such have been the conditions hitherto, and they will be accentuated in the future by the increase in the number of government schools of middle and higher grades being established to fit young Japan to cope with the demands of the new age, and by enlargements in Christian education by denominations awake to the situation. Our ability to make any deep or lasting impression on the life of Japan and even our future existence depends on our being able to adopt and carry to completion an intensive program established on a much broadened foundation than hitherto has been possible. Financial impossibility has been the ground on which our requested past appeals have been denied. We believe that the ability and temper of our people as manifested at the present day can and will give us an affirmative answer at this time.

4. The program for the Christian Church as drawn up by the forces on the field.

At the suggestion of the Mission Boards of North America, in the summer of 1919 surveys of the entire Missionary World were made by the resident forces in each country. These surveys set forth what the forces, native and foreign, believe can and should be done within the period 1920-25, for the Christianization of each country. Surveys by individual missionaries of each geographical division of the country, surveys by missionaries and Japanese of each denomination, and surveys by such co-operative bodies as the Federated Missions and the Federated Churches were made in Japan (as in each country) and sent to the corresponding Mission Board and to the Survey Committee of the Interchurch World Movement which had been set in motion by the Mission Boards of North America. Thus freedom of individual opinions combined with strength of denominational and inter-denominational planning give value to the surveys made.

The five-year program suggested by the missionaries and Japanese Christians for the Christian Church is on file both at the Survey Department of the I. W. M., where it has met with approval and with the Mission Board of the Christian Church. The Mission Board adopted the first year's program and in accordance therewith sent a missionary family to Japan. A committee was appointed to make a thorough study of the whole program, and Dr. McCord, chairman of the committee, after a study thereof spoke of it in terms of highest praise, expressing a belief that it is of God, and just the challenge which the Christian Church needs. Whether the committee as a whole is conversant with the magnitude and details of the program, we in Japan are not informed.

The 1920-25 program is briefly this: The enlargement of our present evangelistic or general missionary force by five families, two each for our Northern and Middle fields, and one for Oji, the almost untouched industrial suburb of Oji; the doubling of our present corps of pastors; the establishment of a Boy's School and a Girl's School with the necessary missionary and Japanese teachers and the required land and buildings for schools, homes, etc. It is not our thought that the schools can be brought to capacity strength within the period, but the large expense of land and buildings would come at the outset. What we did have the temerity to ask for approaches half a million dollars, and calls for educational and evangelistic missionaries to the extent of 8 families and 3 single women additional to our present force and an increase of 20 families and 16 single women to our Japanese force.

5. The position of Japan in Christian world strategy.

The fact that the Christian Church has accepted and in the eyes of other Churches holds responsibility for the more than a million people in a territory partially occupied by her workers is not the only reason for stressing work in Japan at this time. One of the great lessons which Christians should learn from the world war is the need for Christianizing the impact of Japan on other Oriental countries. It is questionable whether a greater service could be rendered Korea, China and Siberia than so thoroughly imbuing Japan with the Christian spirit and message that all her colonial and international relations would be dominated thereby.

Such in the eyes of your Japan Mission is the "Unfinished Task" and the magnificent opportunity which awaits solution at the hands of the Christian Church.

MR MINTON'S VISIT TO JAPAN

By E. C. Fry.

On the errands of commerce, those who cross the Pacific are many, but the most important of all relations between nations are those connected with spreading the Gospel. The foreign mission secretary is our chief connecting link between the mission fields and the home base. He has to do with a continuously varying set of problems, some of them of the highest degree of importance. It is obligatory on him to post up on these matters as thoroughly as possible. No business firm would think of trusting its affairs to one who had not done so;—and the Gospel is worth more than soap or sewing machines. So, as soon as our Japan Mission knew that a new foreign mission secretary was to be elected, we began sending urgent requests to the Mission Board that at the beginning of his incumbency he be sent to Japan to make a study of our condition, problems, and needs, on the spot, and thus equip himself for his task. All the more is this necessary just at this juncture; for the Forward Movement and Men and Millions Movement are linked up with a crisis in the affairs of our Japan Mission calling for careful study and wise guidance. The providence of God has brought us at last within sight of a rounded out work in Japan that would give us present high efficiency and an assured future. Are we to enter upon it,—and to what extent and in what shape? In general, however, this crisis is handled, it is necessary that the various decisions that must so frequently be made at Dayton should be guided by all the light and leading possible. This includes first-hand knowledge by the secretary. It is but following the custom of all mission boards to send him to the fields. Moreover, such visitors always bring much encouragement and inspiration to the work; in their sermons and other addresses and by their helpful presence in consultations on the field. Indeed, this part of it alone would be well worth the expense,—as was the case with the visits of Dr. and Mrs. Bishop in 1902 and of Dr. Morrill in 1913. (Those are the only ones so far.) A four months' trip gives only about two months in Japan; a short time, but much can be done in eight weeks by a stirring man.

I trust that none of our Brotherhood will fall into the mistake of thinking of this most important journey as in any sense a "junket." Whether Bro. Minton finds the ocean voyage a pleasant relaxation as some do, or the nightmare of suffering that it is to others, no doubt concerns him much, but it is entirely beside the fact that he ought to go. Any keen minded man will enjoy the glimpses of the Orient, the battery of impressions in new surroundings, the awakening of new emotions and new lines of thought by "the call of the East." But all this is a mere incident and is no part of the great objects of the trip:—helping on the work there by his visit, and fitting himself for the effective performance of his duties as our new foreign mission secretary,—a position to which he came through no seeking of his own. It was thrust upon him by the American Christian Convention. Let me beseech you, brethren, for your prayers and sympathy for him, while on this journey in the interests of what is dearer to him than life itself,—the Kingdom of God.

The Work of Our Women

(All items for this department should be sent to Mrs. J. W. Harrell, Burlington, N. C.)

BLUE RIDGE MISSION CONFERENCE

From one who attended this conference, I have gathered a few facts which I am passing on to you.

The Blue Ridge site, where the gatherings are held is admirably adapted for a conference of this kind. There is not a more beautiful spot in Western Carolina than this, situated as it is in the heart of the Blue Ridge.

There were 385 delegates enrolled, a hundred more than ever enrolled at any previous conference. It was by far the best and most successful ever held. There were a number of interesting lectures by returned missionaries from various parts of the world. Hearts were touched and impressions made as one listened to these representatives of the Cross. An especially interesting illustrated lecture was given on Malaysia, one of the strategic points of missionary work.

Just a few of the interesting features of a day's program: "The morning watch on the hills or by the streams; the period of intercession when all hearts were brought in closer touch with the Father; the open parliament at noon giving helpful plans and methods for the work back home; the vesper service on the piazza overlooking the glory of the hills, as the sun was sinking in the West."

MISSION STUDY BOOKS

We look forward from year to year with great expectancy and pleasure to the new Mission Study books. This year we are not going to be disappointed, for we are assured by leaders in mission work that a rare treat awaits all who will avail themselves of this course of study—"The Church and the Community," by Ralph E. Diffendorfer, is the Home Mission book. The Bible and Missions," by Helen Barrett Montgomery, is the foreign book.

If you have not had a Mission Study Class during the past year, do not let the year pass without at least reading those wonderful books—"A Crusade of Compassion," and "Christian Americanization." No one can read "Crusade of Compassion" without having their sympathies stirred. Have we forgotten how our hearts were torn with anguish during the recent war; how our very souls went out in streams of compassion for a stricken world? Sometimes I think we have forgotten those graves in France. And we have failed to learn the lessons which the war was designed to teach us. Do we realize that more appalling conditions and more terrible sufferings have existed all during the centuries in non-Christian lands? "Crusade of Compassion," brings this fact home to our hearts in a telling way and tells us about the heroic men and women who gave up home and native land to go out into the needy fields of earth to administer to the suffering ones.

MISSION CONFERENCES

We would be very glad if some of our people who attended the summer Mission Conferences would write for our Woman's page telling us about those mountain top experiences and the many helpful things they learned. More of our people should avail themselves of the great opportunity of attending these wonderful gatherings. I know of nothing that will give us greater inspiration than to sit under the spell of these great teachers for a few days at least. It is a splendid way to spend your vacation—a wonderful combination of work, rest, study and inspiration. The forenoons are usually for study and instruction and the afternoons for pleasure and recreation. We should begin now to plan for a trip to the Blue Ridge Conference next year.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

In this report we passed the $18,000 mark since the first of the year. We are happy to be able to do this. Now, we want to pass the $20,000 mark by November first. We will have two thousand dollars to raise in two months to do that. Then we want to make a dash for the $30,000 goal for this year. Can we do it? If YOU will do your part, we will. Let us do the part we ought to do.

Two pretty little brunette girls, with pretty brown eyes, came to us this week and wanted a home. They were as bright as new pins. Father and mother both dead. It was that mother's request before she died that they might be placed in the Christian Orphanage. Our rooms are all full to the limit. We lack $25,000 having enough money to build the new building. Shall these two bright girls be turned away and perhaps never receive the training they ought to have, to make them useful women, and be compelled to go through life handicapped, because they were denied in their young and tender years the opportunity they so much needed?

We broke dirt this week to commence the Children's Home and while we lack a good deal of the money to complete this new building, we have faith enough in God and the membership of the Church and the many friends of the little helpless ones to believe we will receive the funds to complete and pay for this building.

The College students made it possible last spring to purchase a "Giant Stride" for the playground set. This is one of the "Fun-Full" fixtures for playgrounds. We got this in last week and put it up and let the children use it the first time this week.

I believe they have more real fun and joy out of this fixture than anything they have ever had. We need several other fixtures for the playground and hope some one will make it possible for us to add another fixture like the "Ocean Wave" which costs about $125.00. It would be very pleasing to the little boys and girls.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS.

Dear Uncle Charley:—I usually write the first of the month, but I have been having such a good time, I have neglected some of my duties. My cousins from Songdo, Korea, have been visiting me. They are in this country on a furlough, but will return in October. They spent three weeks with me and we had a fine time. I noticed in THE SUN last week that there were no letters. What is the matter with the boys and girls? I enclose my dime.—Dorothy Moore.

Our little cousins forgot to write last week, so our corner was blank. Now that was too bad, wasn't it?—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley:—I know you think we have forgotten our little cousins; but we have not. Here is fifty cents for them. Love to all.—Leonora and Lewis Welch.

Real glad to have your letter this week. I hope when the hot weather is over all the cousins will write again.—"Uncle Charley."

of their manhood, self-protection, and a chance to put their thought and power into action productively, and which shall give to capital and management equally just and self-respecting recognition. It means secondly not only living wages but the largest and justest possible return for the work done by the workers, and especially and adequate share in increased production. Returns to capital and management are usually disproportionate, and labor is justly demanding a larger proportionate share in the form of a permanently higher level of wages. From the point of view of the church, this is not only a matter of right, but the necessity of the workers and his family if they are to have good housing, good food, sufficient clothing and recreation, and if they are to be able to educate the children and provide against sickness and old age.

The Christian principle leads to the primary motive of industry. Is the motive of profits which is the primary motive of modern enterprise a Christian motive? And ought not to be supplanted by or rigidly subordinated to, Christ's great motive of service? Here is a world of people, human beings with eternal destinies. They have great needs, material and spiritual; they have to feed, clothe, house, transport, educate and recreate themselves and their families, and to develop the Godlike within them. Everybody who has any part in these processes has a sacred calling, and ought to work with the same motive and spirit as the true minister and missionary who minister to the religious needs of men.....

The problem the nation is facing in the present industrial conflict is difficult and world-wide, but is susceptible of solution. What is needed is faith in God, in Christian principles and in the fairness of employers and workers as a whole. Those extremists who turn to violence and those reactionaries who trust in force are the joint enemies of the public welfare, and of religion and of morality. But the men and women of faith and goodwill, who believe in the Golden Rule, who are determined to use whatever power they have to work out a better industrial organization, based upon the principles of the Sermon on the Mount—they are the hope of the nation.

To educate men's minds, their motives and interests to the necessities of the present situation—here is a challenge to the church.

North Carolina licensed 85 young men and women last week to practice law.

Investigations into the sugar situation indicate no decline in price soon.

Great speculation as to what effect votes by the women will have upon parties is now going the rounds. Some of the leaders seem to be at a loss.

ODDS AND ENDS

WATCH YOUR BEGINNINGS

Everything, be it noble or base, good or evil, great or insignificant, has a beginning. At first it is but a conception in the mind of a person. It develops until it becomes a clearly defined idea. Unconsciously one's muscles put into action what the mind has conceived. Before one is aware of what a single thought has wrought, character is formed.

No one becomes good or evil in a single day. The man who seemingly has gone suddenly wrong has had "wrong" in his mind for years. The defaulter never stole a million the first time. He began with small amounts and increased defalcations as confidence in his ability to succeed increased. The only safe way is never to permit a beginning in evil. Pull it out by the roots and get something clean and wholesome in its place. The harboring of evil or dishonest thoughts is the first step to ruin.—Youth's World.

She's six today. She climbed my knee and twisted her arms about me so
And whispered to me joyously, "I bet you, dad, that you don't know
What day this is." I feigned to think, though well I knew what she would say,
And shammed surprise when she exclaimed, "I'm growing up; I'm six today."
What is it, when the years come on, that holds a man and makes his heart
To soften toward a little child and makes the tears so quick to start?

I had not noticed it before. I did not think until today. Her playroom's strangely silent now, her paper dollies laid away.
The little finger marks we loved are gone from off the window sill.
Beneath the blossomed apple tree the swing I made is strangely still,
And silence hovers round the house, unbroken by her childish glee—
She's six today, and growing up, no more a little babe to me.

You're six today. Come, kiss your dad and hug him, too, you little elf,
And romp with him and play with him, nor ask him why he's not himself.
Just follow him where'er he goes, and let him take your little hand;
Don't ask him what he's thinking of—you wouldn't know or understand.
Let's go together down the lane, a-romping in your child-heart way;
You cannot play like this for long. You're growing up—
—you're six today, —Contributed

FLAVORING FOODS

The art of flavoring food is one which should be learned early by the housewife, and especially by those who incline toward vegetarianism.

There is a vast difference between appetizing seasoning and flavoring and condiments; the latter are often used to encourage an appetite or to disguise strong food stuff, the former to enhance the delicate flavor of fruit and vegetables, also make them satisfying.

Unseasoned food is flavorless and unattractive, and if the variety is limited, the lack of an attractive note is inexcusable. If variety is limited, then well-prepared gravies and juices will aid materially in overcoming the monotony.

Boiled or grilled vegetables and poached fruits are too seldom met, but they are a relief from the too often served plain old way.—Exchange.

SMILES

Once an elderly lady was being shown over Nelson's ship, the "Victory." As the party approached the spot where Nelson met his death, the attendant pointed to the brass plate fixed in the deck and said, "There is where Nelson fell. "No wonder," she said. "I nearly tripped over that thing myself."—Exchange.

"I hear you've had quite a spell, Aunt Jemima."
"Yes, honey; dey done tuk me to de horsepital and giv me a epidemic interjection."—Baltimore American.

Three jovial travelers were dining together at a hotel one day, when it was agreed between them that whichever of them possessed the oldest name should be exempt from paying the cost of the dinner each was enjoying.

The first traveler said, "My name is Richard Eve, and that is rather old, you must admit."

The next man replied, "I go further than you, for my name is Adam Brown."

The third traveler, with a merry twinkle in his eye, took his business card from his pocket and showed it to the other two, who read on it these words: "Mr. B. Ginning."—Exchange.

Mamma—"Willie, where are your manners?"
Willie—"Well, if I waste them now, I won't have any when company comes."—Judge.

THE CHASE

Tell me, how can I ever find out
What the little wind looks like, that hurries about
So quickly and shyly, from place to place,
And why does he always keep hiding his face?

I follow him flying from tree to tree,
And run through the meadow as lightly as he!
For how shall I know what he's like, until He come on him, breathlessly standing still?
—Virginia Woods Mackall, in Everyland for May.

A LAUGH

A laugh is just like sunshine,
It freshens all the day;
It tips the peaks of life with light,
And drives the clouds away;
The soul grows glad that hears it,
And feels its courage strong—
A laugh is just like sunshine
For cheering folks along!

A laugh is just like music;
It lingers in the heart,
And where its melody is heard
The ills of life depart;
And happy thoughts come crowding
Its joyful notes to greet—
A laugh is just like music
For making living sweet!
—Ripley D. Saunders.

A WISH

Do you wish the world were better?
Let me tell you what to do!
Set a watch upon your actions,
Keep them always straight and true;
Rid your mind of selfish motives,
Let your thought be true and high,
You can make a little Eden
Of the sphere you occupy.

Do you wish the world were happy?
Then remember day by day
Just to scatter seeds of kindness
As you pass along the way;
For the pleasure of the many
May be oftentimes traced to one,
As the hand that plants the acorn
Shelters armies from the sun.
—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

THINGS THAT COUNT

It's not so much the things we have, but rather the things we use;
It's not so much the things we see, but rather the things we choose;
And often the things at our very door we neglect for those afar,
But no pretence will ever hide that which we really are.
It's not the things we think are fair, but what we know are true;
It's not the things we dream about, but what we really do.
It's not our takings that bring content, but of'ner what we give;
It's not by words our lives are judged, but by the way we live.
—L. A. W., in Exchange.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

THE RIGHT TO GO TO COLLEGE

(Editorial in The Christian Evangelist.)

One of the inalienable rights of every human being is the chance to make the most of himself.

That implies the right to go to college.

Long ago the church recognized this and founded schools for the making of men.

It was slower to acknowledge the educational rights of women but that, too, has come and most institutions of learning swing wide their doors at the knock of girls and women as well as men.

Following the church, the State organized schools and is pouring out money like water to educate its youth.

Many parents also recognize the rights of their children to go to college and are making sacrifices to send them.

The stern self-denial practiced by some fathers and mothers to keep their sons and daughters in school is real heroism. And their heroism is the greatest investment in the world.

Inalienable rights mean inescapable obligations.

The right to go to college makes it a duty to go to college.

The opportunities of business are many and seductive and the calls of life seem urgent. But in these days when training, intelligence and character are in such demand the voices that would turn youth away from school are siren voices, seeking to lure him into slavery.

A college training greatly enhances one's chance of mastery.

Young men would hurry into life—well and good. The shortest route to a business career is by way of the college and only those who are satisfied with less than the best would willingly undertake a professional life without college training.

More than any other period in the history of the world these uncertain days demand educated men.

And America demands such more than any other country under the sun. A democracy cannot exist unless its members have educated minds and hearts.

Ignorance makes "the masses" which the demagogue exploits.

The churches are helpless without trained leaders.

A Christian college is a factory where spiritual leaders are made for church, school and community.

Without the idealism, given by education, the work of the world is drudgery and there is no bloom or wonder to keep the heart fresh and to make every day a miracle of beauty and the challenge of a great opportunity.

Real education is real happiness.

This autumn should see our colleges with streams of young people entering their doors. Then will home, church, business, State, civilization take new heart. For these are the knights of enlightenment who will fight and slay the monsters of ignorance, superstition, bigotry, selfishness, greed, lust, and war—and guide the people in the way everlasting.

"NEW OCCASIONS TEACH NEW DUTIES"

(Western Christian Advocate.)

The final ratification of the Woman Suffrage Amendment requires that emphasis must now be shifted from woman's rights to woman's duties.

An entirely new responsibility is placed upon millions of women. Christians among them must immediately take the initiative in accepting the added obligation and in pointing the way to a proper discharge of this duty. Not all women are Christians, and it is exceedingly important that the very best womanhood of the nation quickly arise to the opportunity of leadership in the political world opened to them.

There are good women who will be hard to move. They may be elderly, and will hesitate to take up with this departure in life. They may be prejudiced against women suffrage; but, since it is granted, the status is radically altered. They may be "home-bodies" without any special feeling or interest in the subject at all. Some folks are by nature timid and retiring in their temperament and will shrink from the doing of any public duties. But all true citizens, whether men or women, ought to take an active part in the government. We are held responsible before God for our opportunities.

Another class may need a little restraint. Some may be too anxious to get into the center of things before they are fitted. It is not expected that women will become office-holders in any large numbers, but it should be understood that sex is no bar to any position within the gift of the people.

The great mass of interested women who realize the power for good in the ballot will soon learn the art of specialization. Voters generally pick out one or two issues upon which they keep well informed and let the rest go. Even Congressmen find it necessary to become experts along a very few lines of legislation and then they can speak with authority. Our new friends at the polls will therefore do wisely if they select the things of vital concern to themselves, such as the protection of women in industry; proper inheritance laws; child welfare and safeguarding of home interests; better educational facilities; the maintenance of prohibition; abolition of war and militarism; and the infusion of new moral vitality into the life of the body politic.

Civics should be taught in every school of the land. Since the majority of teachers are women, they should study this branch and be prepared to instruct their scholars. The women's magazines will probably take a more active interest in political questions. Clubs may well turn their attention away from Browning awhile until all the members understand their new duties. The women's organizations in the churches can do a large service by leading the fulfillment of this reform.

CHURCH CATERPILLARS

Dr. John Willis Baer, retiring moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, in speaking of pillars of the church says:

Many a consecrated minister, who has financial difficulty in keeping body and soul within hailing distance of each other, has had his spirit chilled by the so-called "leading" elder of his church, publicly, brutally calling attention to the minister's shortcomings.

The irony of it is that the same "leading" elder later on expresses surprise when his own children and the young people of the congregation announce "a new and up-to-date minister is needed."

O you sermon-spoilers! If the silent heart-aches of ministers and ministers' wives could be registered, there are some "church pillars" who would be more properly called caterpillars, because they destroy more than they support.

NOTES

Elon College opens today. Report of the opening will be in next issue of THE SUN.

We are deeply indebted to Rev. and Mrs. Jeremiah W. Holt for a box of nice grapes—the best that we have had this year.

To give room for the Labor Message, part of the editorial matter is left out this week. An editorial on Woman Suffrage will be in the next issue.

We have received a copy of the local paper of Kittery Point, Me., which speaks in complimentary terms of the work being done by Rev. H. Jennings Fleming at that place.

Rev. H. Jennings Fleming, Kittery Point, Maine, will assist the pastor, Dr. P. H. Fleming, in revival services at Pleasant Hill Christian church, September 4-10.

Congratulations are in order for Dean W. P. Lawrence, of Elon College. He was nominated by acclamation on August 21, by the Democrats of Alamance to represent his county in the next session of the State Legislature. Success to his campaign.

HOW DO YOU PAY YOUR MINISTER?

(Exchange)

Not as a church but as individuals. Not how much do you pay but how do you pay?

Church members may, I believe, be divided into three classes: (1) Regular, conscientious givers; (2) Irregular givers; (3) Non-contributors.

Every one knows and appreciates the regular, conscientious giver; no matter how large or how small may be his subscription towards the minister's salary he can always be depended on to pay promptly without any prodding. In many cases his subscription is small, not because he wishes it so, quite the contrary, but he is a man of small means and must make that little go a long way. But he is the man upon whom the church can depend; one of the vast army of small salaried men who do most to uphold and carry forward the work of the church. Without such givers as these, not only the minister, but the entire work of the church would suffer.

Then there are the second class, the irregular givers. They constitute quite a large portion of the membership. They are good people, well meaning. They cheerfully make their pledges and quite as cheerfully pay whenever they attend services. But if anything prevents them from attending church services for one or two Sundays now and then, or if perchance they do not happen to have the exact amount or change, if they forget—well, that is, the end of it. It does not occur to them to pay for the time lost. The Sunday that they fail to pay means a deficit, however small, which must be met somehow or other. If this deficit is met some one else must do it, or the minister's salary must in part go unpaid. If the minister's salary is not paid promptly and in full, then how is he to meet his expenses? He must go in debt, or do without necessary things. To go in debt is an exceedingly bad plan, so the minister usually goes without, thanks to the well meaning but thoughtless, irregular giver.

Then there is the third and last class, the non-contributors. He makes his pledge to the minister's salary like the giver of the two other classes. For a time, perhaps it is a long period, perhaps a short one, he pays well. Then he loses interest, perhaps he doesn't like the minister, so he comes seldom to church, perhaps stops altogether. Then he stops giving. "No," he says if asked for his portion, "I don't go to church and I won't pay. I don't like the preacher." So his pledge means nothing to him. He must be entirely satisfied before he can give. He does not bother about a sense of duty or obligation. He did not make his pledge with the understanding that he would cease to pay when he lost interest or failed to like the minister, but that doesn't bother him. He just stops and that is the end of it. Fortunately this class is in the minority. If it were not the ministers would suffer.

Again I ask, "How do you pay your minister? To which of these classes do you belong? Think it over and join the "regulars." It doesn't matter whether you pay five cents or five dollars each Sunday. Give regularly, give conscientiously, let your church count on you.

Not a minister

PREACHERS AS TITHERS

(Western Christian Advocate.)

Nothing will kill the sense of stewardship among laymen more quickly than to have a stingy preacher as a bad example. Fortunately the number of such unworthy leaders is indeed few.

People are only too ready to slip out of their obligations, and to have a "tightwad" in the pulpit seems to them sufficient cause to let him sleep in his wake. Generous laymen in such a church must suffer mortification under the painful circumstances.

One pastorate of this character will be remembered for years, to the detriment of the work of God. Long after the minister has passed on, his evil influence in this regard will be doing harm.

Specious excuses are not unknown among clerical talkers. Some men have said: "When I am giving my life to the ministry I do not need to give money." Or this has been set forth: "I am not receiving half what I am worth, or what I could get elsewhere. The difference is my contribution to the work of the Lord, and that amounts to a great deal more than the tithe." Such reasoning is false and selfish.

Titling is a universal obligation. Stewardship is a Christian principle of handling one's possessions; and stewardship which means anything will be acknowledged with material gifts. Every man could contrive to fix up some plausible excuse why he should be exempted if the preacher is allowed to go through life without meeting this duty.

Where the minister's tithe should be distributed is a matter for his conscience. Some preachers subscribe heavily to local church budgets. Others give little or nothing to this cause, but pay more liberally on benevolences, special appeals, and use their tithe money for local promotion work not otherwise underwritten. That the minister as well as the layman will tithe is the important concern.

LULLABY.

By Margaret E. Sangster.

The mother bird sits in her nest and sings,
Under the twilight sky;
And her babies cuddle under her wings,
As the night-time breezes creep by—
But I hold you close in my arms, dear heart,
And I sing you a little tune;
And I kiss your cheek that is like a part
Of the pinkest rose of June.
The mother bird sits in her swaying nest,
In the top of a tall old tree;
And her babies cuddle close to her breast—
But, oh, little heart of me,
I hold you tight till your eyelids fall,
And I rock you in a comfy chair—
And, dear, as the evening shadows fall,
I whisper a little prayer.

NUMBER 36

The Ideal Minister

William Jennings Bryan

DESIRE my minister to preach every Sabbath the simple Gospel. The "old, old story" never wearies the average congregation, if it comes from a devout mind, with preparation in the message. My ideal sermon is one which has an appeal to the unconverted and a spiritual uplift for the Christian. I want my minister to be abreast of the times on all new theological questions and research, but I do not want him to bring them into the pulpit. I have formed certain views of Christ, His Gospel and the inspiration of the Bible from a careful reading of that Book of books and of the Shorter Catechism, and it will not make me a better Christian or profit my spiritual life to unsettle these views by a discussion in the pulpit of new theories of Christ and the Holy Scriptures. Finally, I want my minister to act upon the belief that Christ's Gospel is the surest cure of all social and political evils, and that his best method of promoting temperance, social morality and good citizenship is to bring men into the church. In a word, I want my minister to emphasize in his lifework the declaration of the most successful preacher, Paul, "It pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe."

HISTORY'S NEW PAGE

The world's history is crowned with a new page. It is a page made by years of toil and education, enlightenment and emancipation. The savage considered woman inferior. Christianity placed her foot upon a stone, and little by little, Christianity and civilization have given woman a chance.

Jesus met the woman at the well and gave to the world a touch that it shall ever feel. Woman has ever been devoted—the last at the Cross and first at the tomb of the world's Redeemer. She has been patient with her place—possibly too patient. She has been content to give her offspring to the world and trust their protection to the law-makers. A change! Now she shall follow them with her influence in helping to make the world better in which for her children to live—and she can do this by helping to make a clean government.

History's new page is writ large with perils that must be guarded just as in the case of men. But woman's heart has always been closer to the Master's than man's, and so we shall have no fears so long as Christian principles prevail.

The Methodist Recorder in speaking of this achievement in political life says: "When we turn from the past to the future, when we seek to forecast the practical influence of the woman's ballot upon the moral issues of to-morrow, what a vision of hope looms up before us! What unmeasured forces appear in the social laboratory of the world! What legions of re-enforcements hasten to the battlefield of humanity! And yet, with the vision of hope looms the shadow of fear; fear lest the good women of America, those who represent the higher ideals of humanity, those who embody the principles of Christian civilization, will prove indifferent to the glorious task which God has laid at their feet."

This same periodical in summing up the situation puts it this way:

"1. They will seal forever the tomb of the liquor traffic in America, and hasten the victory of prohibition throughout the world.

"2. They will grapple and overthrow, as the Christian Amazons of the age, every organized form of polygamy, with every commercialized vice that threatens the purity of the home.

"3. They will set up the Golden Rule in the world's market place, and work the discomfiture of profiteers in every land.

"4. They will lift up the olive branch among the nations, and hasten the coming of the Prince of Peace, and the final end of wars and rumors of wars."

Governor James M. Cox, in commenting on the ratification of the amendment puts it this way: "The civilization of the world is saved. The mothers of America will stay the hand of war and repudiate those who trifle with great principles."

Senator Harding also agrees with him in the following language: "All along I have wished for the completion of ratification, and have said so, and I am glad to have all the citizenship of the United States take part in the presidential elections."

We believe that the ratification of the nineteenth amendment means the placing in the hands of the women a new weapon for the enforcement of the country's prohibition laws. Any man who thinks that the women of this country are not against blind tigers and block-aders needs to think it over again. The Anti-Saloon League of America has known for years that the women were their strongest allies. The liquor organizations have also known this same thing, and it is a matter of record that during the fifteen years, as an organization, they have been fighting the enfranchisement of women. We earnestly believe that with the privilege of voting, the good women of our land will fight to a finish the terrible liquor traffic.

Woman has always made good in every place that we have entrusted to her care and keeping. Education has found a new impetus under the tutorship of the female mind. By kind words and a fitted disposition she is ruling the school-room with a sweet spirit where years the schoolmaster's whipping lash ruled.

A great many good women will be slow to take up the new privilege of citizenship-obligation. Many perhaps will never vote. Many do not agree that the coming of woman suffrage is for the ethical and moral good of the country. But we must remember that we are creatures of varied opinions. Christians must not lose their mental balance in arguing over the situation. It is a time to keep level-headed, serene and sweet-spirited. We must be willing to give the new privilege and opportunity a chance. We fully believe that the power will be as well exercised as it is in the hands of men. It is true that many bad women may go forth to vote, but it is equally true that many bad men have already gone forth to vote.

Time will tell what history's new page will mean to the nation—yea, to the world. Let us place no shame upon this page and no blot upon its records.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

IMPORTANT NOTICE

To Eastern Virginia Sunday Schools.

The proceedings of the fifty first annual session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention have been published and mailed to each and every Sunday school in the Convention. If any person has failed to see a copy, let him ask the Superintendent or Secretary of his school. If the Convention thought it worth while to spend $100 in publishing the proceedings, it should seem deserving a little interest and time from a few people in each school to read and also to try to put into practice some ideas proclaimed.

In comparing the report of this year with that of the last, we find many signs of progress and increased interest in Sunday schools. There were eleven more schools represented at the Convention this year than there were the last year. The statistical table shows an increase over last year in the number of teachers, number of pupils enrolled, average attendance, almost twice as many conversions, and almost double the number uniting with the church from the Sunday school. There was a big increase in the amount of money raised during the year. Over $1,800.00 more for missions, nearly $1,000.00 more for the Orphanage at Elon College, besides other items, which makes a total increase over last year of $6,860.47. The Convention apportionment for missions this year was higher, the result being $128.00 more sent to the Convention to be used in brightening the heathen lands.

I call attention to two errors made by the printer, only because of their importance. At the bottom of page 8 the following motion was omitted: "It was moved and carried that the Pope's Avenue Sunday school be granted its request to withdraw from the Convention, provided it becomes a union Sunday school." At the bottom of page 12 the date of the next session stands correct, the word "Wednesday" having been omitted in the original print.

We presume the reports of the department superintendents will be read, but we especially point out the report of the Committee on Plans, for that contains the plans whereby our schools are to receive the benefit of the work of a Field Secretary of Sunday School and Christian Endeavor.

May the interest and growth continue along the same lines and also in the way of Teacher Training classes and Organized Classes, as well.

CORINTH

Revival services began at Cornith August 14. Rev. A. H. Sheppard did most of the preaching. He is a splendid preacher and we had a good meeting. Seven members were received into church fellowship as a result of the meeting.

BETHANY

Our regular meeting was scheduled to begin the second Sunday in August but was rained out and we decided to try it over. On Monday, August 23, Rev. H. W. Elder and Mr. S. S. Weir came to assist us in this meeting. With Brother Elder to preach and Brother Weir to sing, we had a revival from the very beginning. Six members were received into the church membership here. Ninety-one dollars were paid to singer and evangelist.

Rock Stand paid singer and evangelist $85.00. Both churches did especially well in this particular.

FROM THE BARRETT FAMILY

Leaving our home in Ponce, Porto Rico Thursday June 24 for San Juan where we boarded the S. S. "San Juan" the following day. Thus began our fourth furlough. After an uneventful voyage we landed in New York July 1.

In Brooklyn we met Dr. and Mrs. L. F. Johnson who did all in their power to make our two days' stay in that city enjoyable. Needless to say they succeeded.

We left New York city Saturday July 3, for Cape Charles where we left the train and boarded a boat which reached Norfolk about seven-thirty.

There awaited us a number of relatives and friends, and it did seem so good to look into loved faces once again.

We were taken to my brother-in-law's home where a bountiful supper awaited us. Later we were taken in autos to a house which we were informed was to be our home while in Norfolk. Loved ones and friends had rented and furnished seven rooms comfortably for us. This was a complete surprise. There were provisions in the kitchen, ice and more provisions in the refrigerator. In the dining room the table was spread and a dish of fruit stood in the center. The bedrooms were also ready for our comfort. All we had to do was to take possession which we did with very grateful hearts. You who have traveled a week or more at a time know what it meant to this family of eight to be so well taken care of.

After a little more than two weeks we went to Isle of Wight Co. to attend the Sunday school convention and visit friends and loved ones in the neighborhood where my husband spent his boyhood days.

We had a delightful stay of three weeks.

The Ladies Missionary Society of old Antioch church gave us another pounding.

After returning to Norfolk they sent a barrel of meat, vegetables, melons, sugar, meal and tea and shipped another barrel of canned fruits to Elon for our use while there.

We stayed in Norfolk only two weeks preparing for our trip to Elon, but during that short time I had another very pleasant experience in a visit from my only brother whom I had not seen for more than seven-teen years.

Last Wednesday we again boarded a train, reaching Elon we found a group of friends awaiting us at the station. They brought us to the house which they had cleaned and furnished for us. Everything possible had been done for our comfort including a well filled pantry and a splendid supper to which we were invited and ate heartily after Dr. Wellons asked the blessing. Such a welcome they gave us! I shall never forget its sincerity. Here we are perfectly comfortable and at home in the same house my husband roomed when he was a student in Elon over twenty years ago and here we expect to remain until our return to Porto Rico.

To the friends in Virginia and North Carolina who have made our stay so very pleasant we are sincerely grateful.

We expect to return to our field the first of December, leaving our two oldest daughters in school here.

Will you not pray dear reader, that our hearts and minds may carry back just what will be most useful in the work and that the work and workers there may be upheld by Him?

THANKS

During the past few months members of the following churches, Reidsville, Mt. Bethel, New Lebanon and Happy Home have kindly remembered their pastor and family with many good things such as butter, milk, eggs chickens, fruits of the choicest kind, melons and vegetables. Many thanks to these good people for their many expressions of appreciation of their pastor. May God richly bless them all in temporal and spiritual things.

MOORE UNION

The revival meeting began at Moore Union Saturday before the third Sunday in August and continued seven days. Rev. J. W. Knight came to our assistance on Sunday and remained with us until the meeting closed. Brother Knight brought us some real gospel messages, and was untiring in his efforts. He is a man of strong faith and presents the Word skillfully.

I cannot give in full the results of the meeting but a great number professed faith in Christ and the church was greatly revived. During the meeting Brother J. W. Lett returned from the hospital in Charlotte where he had undergone an operation. He was very much improved and it is hoped that he will soon be restored to his usual good health.

For all that was accomplished we give honor and praise to God.

HENDERSON LETTER

During the summer many of our people have been out of town on their vacations. Some have gone to the mountains, and some to the sea. Some have visited friends. All report pleasant times of surcease from toil.

Though many have been away at different times there have been enough left to keep the work of the church going, and our congregations have been a little above the general average of the year.

During the months of July and August the churches here united in union evening services. The original plan was to hold these services in the open. But after attempts were frustrated by inclement weather for six successive evenings, it was decided to hold the remainder of the services in the M. E. church, the different pastors preaching in alphabetical order. The services have been well attended and a sweet spirit of fellowship manifested.

On the third Sunday in July Miss Bessie Holt was with us at Henderson for an afternoon service. She also spoke at Fullers' Chapel Monday afternoon. Her messages were heart to heart as well as "head to head" talks full of human interest, information and inspiration, and were very much enjoyed by all who heard her. Because of a storm just at the time for the meeting at Henderson and because of the hour there were not enough interested young people to organize a Society, but we hope to organize soon. A Society was organized at Fullers' Chapel, with Miss Pattie Coghill President.

Following the third Sunday in July we held our meeting at Fullers' Chapel. We expected Rev. O. D. Poythress Monday, but because of sickness in his congregation he did not reach us until Wednesday, remaining until Friday evening. His preaching was clear, forceful and convincing, and was well received. This was his third visit to Fullers' Chapel, and we are sure the vote would be unanimous for him to return and be with us again. A number of reconsecrations and new converts were among the visible results of the meeting, but we trust that many hearts were warmed by the messages and faith and hope and love quickened in many lives.

FIVE REVIVALS

During the summer it has been my pleasure to be engaged in five revival meetings and I trust that much good has been accomplished for Christ and His Kingdom. My first meeting was with the Mt. Bethel Christian church which began the third Sunday in July and closing the following Friday. Dr. J. W. Harrell came to us Tuesday, and he brought to us real living gospel messages and they were well received. Bro. Harrell is a man of deep consecration as well as a strong preacher of the Word.

The meeting resulted in several confessions and reclaimations and nine additions to the church. Bro. J. W. Knight and Rev. H. E. Truitt were with us in this meeting and rendered valuable services. We were glad to have these brethren with us. Mt. Bethel should be congratulated in having given to the ministry more ministers than any other church in the Southern Christian Convention. The number is five. I am glad to have the honor of being pastor of such a church.

The fourth week in July I assisted Dr. Fleming in a meeting at Union Ridge, a former pastorate of the writer, and it was my delight to meet with so many friends and acquaintances, and to work with them in the interest of the Kingdom. We had a good meeting and unto God we give the praise.

The first week in August I assisted Bro. J. W. Patton at Hines Chapel. Here I was glad to form new acquaintances. We had a good meeting, but not what we had hoped for.

The second week in August we conducted a meeting with the church at New Lebanon and was assisted by Rev. J. E. McCauley. Bro. McCauley is a consecrated young man and a good preacher, and his sermons were well received. There were some twelve or fifteen professions and eight additions to the church. The prayer and praise services each day were simply great—I think the richest I have ever experienced. The meeting was a real success. Praises to the Lord.

The third week in August we were engaged in meeting with the Happy Home church. Bro. J. W. Harrell assisted us here. His sermons here were strong and convincing. He was at his best and those who heard him heard him gladly. On account of rain every day, muddy roads and busy farmers, our attendance was not quite so large. There was two reclaims and one addition to the church.

From my observation and experience during the past five weeks I have come to the conclusion, or in other words I am more thoroughly convinced, that we will not have any more real revivals in our churches until the churches shall tarry as it were in Jerusalem, for the old time power and then we will experience the old time revivals. Too many of our church folk have gotten away from the Lord, God is calling them back as He called Israel, but they won't come. They have gone after other Gods, and our God is deeply grieved for "He is a jealous God."

Back to God, if you would have your profession to mean anything to you.

AN OPPORTUNITY OF THE COUNTRY CHURCH

(Number Two)

The church in the open country has an opportunity in setting the standards of community life. I do not mean to say that the city church does not enjoy the same privilege, but I do feel that there is a difference. In the city the more varied organizations, institutions and attractions are bidding heavily for their place in the making and moulding of the sentiments of the community. But I am not in for making comparisons. I am trying to say that a church in the country as well as in the town can find something more to do than to "sit up and sit"—as the thoughtless mother told her restless child. As a rule the leading men and women and boys and girls in a country church are leaders in every other legitimate institution or enterprise in the community—therefore it is entirely possible for them to recognize the church as the great center of community sentiments.

To make a church the center of attraction is not an easy task. It, like recruiting the ministry, is a challenge. It requires a part of the best thought and time of the men, women, and children who constitute the church. It requires life! Not piety alone, but life! It is not enough that a country church concerns itself about the farmer's one day rest out of seven, but it must be vitally interested and concerned about the six days of labor. The school in a community does better than giving its attention to the community one day in seven—and one day in seven is more than a large percentage of the country churches are getting—but it is on duty at least five days out of seven during most of the months of the year. And during those months the school is most often the center attraction. As I have said before the leaders of the school are the leaders of the church. I'm not about to ask that these leaders give less time to the school, for it merits more, but could they not well give more real concern about the things of the church than they sometimes give? I sometimes feel that the churches in the open country are losing their grip on both the young and old—of course there are many exceptions.

But my! It is a challenge! For would it not be ideal for the Church—our blessed Master's Church—to be first in the heart of a community's people? I long to see it directing in one way and another the songs of toil as well as the songs of Zion, leading the social activities of farmers and their daughters and sons, lending a helping hand to those "who labor and are heavy laden" and thereby putting Christ first in the whole of life as it should be lived in the open country.

HANKS CHAPEL

On the fourth Sunday in August I joined Rev. B. J. Howard in a series of meetings at Hanks Chapel. The meeting closed with good results. I was pastor at this church about twelve or thirteen years ago and was glad to return and enjoy the fellowship of the many friends of former days.

Brother Howard is very popular with his people and they would very much regret to give up his services. May God bless both pastor and people.

Christian Knighthood *

Gen. 43:5—"Ye shall not see my face, except your brother be with you."

O age has comprehended the whole of Christian truth. It does not become our age to discredit its predecessors which failed to emphasize the truth we consider essentially fundamental to the Christian program. All the truth that the spiritual seers have discovered in all the generations of the Church is truth still and it is our privilege to enjoy it and more, to practise it in our life. We must not in the ampler joy of our present-day social conceptions of the Christian program forget the truth that elicited the best in men of former generations in which the gospel was regarded primarily as a preparation of the individual soul for the Heavenly inheritance beyond "this vale of tears." For the gospel is both a personal salvation and a social program, a social program because of its boon of personal salvation and as proof of its genuineness.

At this time let us consider the implications, nay the obligations of the social program, with no thought of minimizing the importance of the personal regeneration which is the basis of its hope. Let us pause long enough to say in passing to our general theme that the Christian who professes the regenerating presence of the Spirit and who denies the social obligation its enjoyment imposes is making the victory of the cause of our Christ more arduous and postponing its ultimate consummation. Nay more, he is jeopardizing his own salvation.

It was possible for an age that had not comprehended the social program of Jesus to be saved in the light of the truth it knew, just as it was possible for the Pharisees to be saved by the technical and ritualistic requirements of their law previous to the coming of the Light. But when the Light had come and they still clung to their rules and regulations in desperation, even doing to death the Teacher Who taught the fuller truth, their legalism became a spiritual leprosy without saving influence for the life. So in our day the Christian who refuses to embrace the social program of the Christ with the martyr's devotion and the crusader's passion for service is destined to lose his love for Christ. This law is written in the physical nature of man and exemplified in all the natural world. Faculties which we do not employ atrophy. The fish in Mammoth Cave have no eyes. Whales once had hands, and according to some scientists certain monkeys lost their caudal appendages from sheer disuse as they became men.

We must not then expect it otherwise in the spiritual realm. The primal impulse of the Christian new-birth is to bring to others the joy of salvation in Christ. The Christian is first and foremost a missionary zealot and a soul-winner. Witness the conquest of the Roman Empire in the first three centuries of the faith, glorious days those in which every humblest Christian was a firebrand for the proclamation of the truth. And when the Church lost her missionary zeal she lost her uplifting power in the lives of men. So too, today the individual Christian cannot be content to enjoy his religion alone. He cannot keep it to himself. He must communicate it like a contagion or it will secrete in his own veins a deadly virus of selfishness which eventually will poison the vitals of his own faith. There is no self-salvation. Our program of redemption must include with ourself all mankind or it is fundamentally defective and will lead to our spiritual decay. Do you wish Scripture for it? Then read I Jno. 3:17: "But whoso hath this world's good and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" How? Nohow. It is impossible to continue to love God and not share with our brothers everywhere the joys of His salvation. The finest fruit of Christian character is seen not in the isolated contemplation and personal aloofness of the hermit or the monastery, but in the busy whirl of life in the highways and byways, in the deserts and waste places of the earth, everywhere that our brotherman is found and is not our equal in opportunity to know and understand the will of our common Heavenly Father for him. And the penalty for not accepting the obligation of this Christian Knight-errantry is the loss from the life of the love we have for God.

Note carefully the statement of this penalty. It is not a judgement pronounced on the offender by an angry judge nor visited upon him by an outraged social order. Strictly speaking, it is not a penalty at all, but simply the sloughing off process off a deadly gangrene. The impulse to altruism, to Brotherhood, to sharing our good with our needy brothers, which is the natural impulse of the regenerated soul, is not exercised despite the knowledge the newborn Christian has of his brothermen's needs, and as the inevitable consequence the love he had for God dies in him. It is spiritual suicide we commit when we fail to recognize and to practice the obligations of Christian Knighthood.

Let us do God justice in such a situation. Let us never forget He is Love. No matter how far we may stray from His purpose for us, no matter how deep we may sink in sin and uncleanness. He loves us still and is ever ready to welcome us prodigals back to fellowship and sonship again. We alienate ourselves from him. He never alienates Himself from us. We cease to love Him. He never ceases to love us. And our sins become unpardonable only when we have strayed so far from Him that we have become spiritually blind and incapable of differentiating the deeds of evil from those of good, being so spiritually lunatic that we ascribe to Bellzebub the loving promptings of the Father's heart.

I never like to think on the consequences of failure to do full Christian duty. I prefer to reverse the picture and consider the blessings of such service, for in the spiritual ministration such service involves the deeper joys of the soul are experienced. The Christian life that undertakes for Christ on behalf of brothermen the obligations of the social gospel discovers new vistas of entrancing beauty, inviting to constantly increasing joy. Life is roseate to such a soul and to it the windows of spiritual perception open wide with visions of a new heaven and a new earth adorning the picture on every hand—a new heaven to be achieved by the realization of a new earth here and now, wherein Christian men are to realize that spiritual message to our day of Joseph's word to his brethren "Ye shall not see my face, except your brother be with you," and within they are gladly to accept the obligations such Christian Knighthood involves.

* Address by President W. A. Harper before the new student body, Sunday, September 5, 1920.

What does Christian Knighthood of the 20th Century involve?

It involves first of all the recognition of brotherhood, a brotherhood not of race, nor of color, nor of social status, nor of sex, nor of political or religious sectism, but a Brotherhood as wide as the universe and as allinclusive. In this brotherhood there is to be no distinction of persons nor of sexes nor of nations. It is the very opposite of classism. It is brotherhood we must have in the new day of Christian Knighthood. The torn and baffled world needs to understand this in our day, a day in which classes are arrayed against each other and in which partisan spirit overpowers the saner judgments of the hearts of men. We shall never settle the industrial problem by adjustments of the grievances labor and capital have against each other. Labor and capital must recognize that they are brothers together and that they are both brothers to the larger public vitally concerned in the outcome of their disagreement. But even this is not enough, these three parties must recognize that God too is concerned in the issues involved in their controversy and that the Sermon on the Mount has applications to modern industrial problems. Only in so far as the teachings of Jesus are faithfully applied in the present unrest of the world can that unrest be removed.

I am very happy to report that the world of industry is beginning to see this. This past April, Swift and Co. had a dispute with 550 of the employees of their branch houses. John J. Walsh, a commissioner of the U. S. Department of Labor, sent to arbitrate the case, preached a sermon to them on the necessity of returning to Christ's teachings. The strike was immediately settled. The Ohio Valley Trades and Labor Assembly also last April passed the following resolutions:

"First, be it hereby resolved, that we, duly elected delegates representing all organized crafts of the Wheeling district, do hereby unanimously declare it our belief that the teachings of Christ constitute a program upon which all men can agree.

"Secondly, that we believe they can be applied to modern industrial problems.

"Thirdly, that we will co-operate with those who will join with us in an earnest endeavor to apply His teachings in the Wheeling district."

This is the first authentic instance wherein either labor or capital has gone on record as officially endorsing the teachings of Jesus as fundamental in industry, but it is not the last such instance. Jesus has a message for the unrest of the world, be it in industry, in the home, in political and social quarters, in the international relationships of men and nations, in the choice days of college life, everywhere, and that message is the cheering challenge of our Brotherhood. It is the first involvement of true Christian Knighthood.

And the second is like unto it, the recognition of the obligation of the strong to minister to the weak. You do not find such teachings anywhere except in the gospel. Nature does not help us here. Nature disdains the weak and lets it perish in its weakness. Savages refuse to rear weakly and deformed children and mercilessly kill their aged or leave them in the desert or wilderness to starve. But the glory of the Christian teachings is that these weak ones have claims on the strong and that the strong in meeting these obligations upon their strength come into real essence of Christian satisfaction. We must never use our superior advantages whether of knowledge, or skill, or experience, or age, to the discomfort or the exploitation of our less favored brothers, and we will not if we are truly Christian. Rather we will do all that in us lies to bring these weaker brothers of ours into the state of our strength and we will do this for Christ as well as for their sakes.

How different the philosophy of the world! Its characteristic attitude is selfish. Its big verb is get. Its master passion is to impose its will on others, its goal the extension of its sway over all weaker than itself. "The survival of the fittest" is its choice dictum, and the fittest it interprets to be the strong. But Jesus says, "No so. Lift up the weak that ye may be altogether strong. Ye shall not see my face except your weaker brothers be with you. I gave My all for you. Give yourselves that the weak ones of the earth may enjoy My salvation. Such is the requirement of the Brotherhood My Father sent Me to initiate among men and which I commissioned you to carry to the ends of the earth. And lo! I am with you even until it is accomplished."

Such teaching involves necessarily the dignity, the worthwhileness, the goodness of the individual soul. The program of Jesus is the effervescence of a dreamer unless man is worth saving, is capable of salvation, and is essentially good. Evil is present in the world now, far too much evil. But God made it good. Our straying away from Him has made us evil. He created us good in His own image. He made nature good too. That wizard of Santa Rosa, Luther Burbank, has demonstrated that the thorns and poisonous juices in plants were not there by divine design, but that the hardness of their struggle to live caused them to develop these hurtful things as means of protection against enemies. And so he has taken the thorn out of the cactus and also its poison and given it a mission of service to mankind rather than one of enmity and hate through efforts at self-aggrandizement. What a challenge this to the Christian Knight to redeem the warped and maimed spirits of the race from the thorus and poisons that render their lives obnoxious! And what further challenge to throw around the lives of the young those wholesome and helpful and regenerating influences able to keep them from ever developing thorns and poisons requiring later to be removed!

Which leads us to the third obligation of Christian Knighthood, the obligation to make the conditions of life wholesome, helpful, Christian. The social order must be Christianized and rendered a wholesome place for the development of life. We are learning now that the church is more than a rescue station. We will not abandon our life-saving stations, but we will dredge the rivers, remove the hidden rocks, and faithfully chart every place of danger, constructing the best ships conceivable that shipwrecks of life may be the unnatural and abnormal experiences of living. We will provide homes for drunkards, but we will also banish the saloon. We will erect Florence Crittenden homes, but the White Slave Traffic shall be outlawed. Houses for the cure of "dope" patients we will mercifully maintain, but we will put "dope" dispensers out of business. Jails and penitentiaries we will have, but we will see to it that they are what they were originally intended to be, places where the unfortunate inmates, our brothers, may be brought to penitance for their anti-social conduct and reclaimed to the society of human brotherhood. Institutions for juvenile offenders will be founded as well as for the deaf, and the dumb, and the blind, but we will at the same time adjust ourselves to the study of the conditions producing such dereliction among our fellows and in the end render such institutions unnecessary. By such Christian practice we will Christianize the social order, spiritualize it, until this earth shall become the Kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ.

And this brings me to say in conclusion that the motive principle of all our undertakings in the cause of Christian Knighthood must be love for our brothermen. We are not to serve them or their interests in a patronizing spirit. We are not to do things for them, but with them. There is to be no atmosphere of superiority as we approach the compelling obligations of this new crusade. All that we do will be done as for Christ, in the spirit of Brotherhood and equality. This the welfare workers have not always comprehended. Many a Christian Captain of industry has been hopelessly disappointed to find that his efforts to provide helpful surroundings for the community and social life of his employees were not appreciated. Many a foreman in a shop has been confused to find the men not satisfied with their working conditions, which have met all the requirements for safety and comfort. Why? Because these rightful things, these helpful things, were provided in a condescending spirit. The modern laborer insists on having a voice in all these matters. Industrial democracy he calls it. He does not care for patronizing. It belittles his soul and diminishes his self-respect. He wishes his manhood to be respected and his equality acknowledged, all of which will be fully granted him where love prompts to noble action.

Love—that is what we must have. Love the greatest of the Christian graces, love the noblest of the Christian virtues. Christian Knighthood is based on this hallowing passion, a love that speaks “with the tongues of men and of angels” in the name and for the sake of Christ, and yet is not “as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal,” because it flows from hearts consecrated in Christian Brotherhood; a love that has “the gift of prophecy” for our troubled time, that “understands all mystery,” including the mystery of sorrow and suffering and sin in a world created good and glad, and that has all the “knowledge” necessary to make it good and glad again as God intended because of its “faith” in Him and in brotherman; a love that bestows all its “goods” to feed the poor,” that gives its “body to be burned,” in response to the call of Brotherhood; a love that suffeeth long and is kind,” “that enieth not,” that “vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up,” that “doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil;” a love that “rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth;” that “beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things” for the sake of brothermen; a love that no matter how beset in sin a brother may be nor how entrenched in law or custom a social evil may have become, “never faileth” to believe that the brother may be reclaimed to Brotherhood with man and Sonship with God and that the evil may be destroyed from among man.

In such a love is the hope of Christian Knighthood. To the obligations of this Christian order of service let us devote ourselves and all we have in the spirit of such a love. “And now abideth faith,” faith in the ultimate triumph of the program of Christian Knighthood, “hope,” hope that God will find us willingly serviceable in realizing this program and “love,” love that shall know no bounds in its outreach and its in-take in response to the obligations of this Knighthood, “these three; but the greatest of these is love.” Let it not fail us nor us it in this choicest hour of Christian history. In fidelity to this love, we shall see our Master’s face, for our brother will be with us.

I trust that I will never be without THE SUN in my home.—MRS. BARBARA TATE, Altamahaw, N. C.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

CHILDREN’S HOME SOON TO BE BUILT

Our Institution had a very pleasant visit a few days ago from Mrs. Jas. L. Foster and daughter, Mary Lee and son James Jr. Mrs. Foster holds a very warm place in the hearts of the children here and she always has a warm welcome.

Material is being rapidly placed on the grounds for the Children’s Home. A car load of lime has been slacked and lumber is coming in by the truck loads. We expect to have many of the brick on the ground next week.

This Home cannot be built any too soon. Applications are coming in nearly every day. Had a call from a lady while writing this letter asking that we take four children.

Of course we will not be able to take all who make application when the new building is completed but we will be able to take the most needy ones. We can help a number who are now helpless and pleading for a home.

Two more Sunday schools joined in the monthly contributions this week. We are always happy when another falls in line to help in this great work.

One church has made up more than three barrels of flour for us to help tide over on our wheat crop. How easy it would be for most any church in the wheat sections to do this and we have plenty of men who would be glad to contribute toward making up twenty-five bushels if some one would take a lead in this matter. I expect in a good many churches it could be done in a few minutes. It would make your people happy and would be a blessing to us.

Mrs. Wyrick, the mother of our dear friend, Rev. L. L. Wyrick, called for two dozen cans last week and has returned them filled with nice peaches. We are indeed grateful for kindnesses of this kind and it will be such a blessing to our little folks.

Don’t forget we want to reach the $20,000 mark by November first and then make an effort for the largest Thank offering ever. Let all the Sunday schools that have not made a contribution this year join in now. We need your help. We need your sympathy. We need your prayers. Will you give us the three?

WOMAN'S REALM

(All items for this department should be sent to Mrs. J. W. Harrell, Burlington, N. C.)

MISSIONARY RALLY DAY

With the coming of September we begin to think of Rally Day. Church work begins to take on new life. People return from their vacations and church leaders begin to lay plans for the various departments. Why not the Missionary Society plan for an enthusiastic rally meeting? It would be a splendid way to start the fall work. Send out personal invitations to all members and prospective members. Arrange an enthusiastic, live program. Seek to enlist the interest and hearty co-operation of the people with the opening of the year's work, and if possible keep up the interest. Success cannot be obtained unless there is back of it real interest, enthusiasm and persistency on the part of the leaders. No work is a success without the worker's enthusiastic interest.

LEST WE FORGET

A few days ago I was looking over the goals and objectives of the North Carolina Conference Woman's Board and it occurred to me that it would be well to refresh our memories concerning them. The year is drawing to a close and I am sure every Society will want to meet its share of the budget.

The young People of the Conference are asked to raise $500., Willing Workers $250., Cradle Rolls $150., Boys Societies $150., Woman's Societies $1,450., Rally Day Offerings $1,000. Total $3,500. Objectives: Washington Pastorate $700. Richmond Pastorate, $500. Japan, including Bible Women $600. Porto Rico including Bible Women, $600. Mrs. Fry's School $100. Three Japanese Students in Elon, $400. General Expenses $600. Total, $3,500. Many are wondering how they can raise the amount apportioned them. Have you tried to secure Life Memberships in your local Society? Launch a Life Membership Campaign. There are scores of women and men too who would be glad to become Life members of the Board thereby turning into the Missionary Treasury $10.00 to be used for the extension of God's Kingdom. The Life membership fee is $10.00 and the men, you understand, are to be honorary members. It would be a fine thing to do, to make your pastor's wife a Life Member, or some faithful officer or worker in your Society, You could easily secure individual donations for this purpose.

Let us also keep in mind the Hardeastle fund. The women of the N. C. Conference are creating this to send Mr. Hardeastle to the foreign field as soon as he has finished his course in Yale University. We are endeavoring to raise $1200 a year by personal pledges. Mrs. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C. is receiving these pledges. Many of our women will want to have a part in this most worthy undertaking.

BOYS WORK

Dear Reader:

I wish I could say something that would influence the leaders in our church work, to the end, that they become more interested in helping to organize our boys and young men for Missions. It is the desire of the women in our Missionary Conferences of the Southern Christian Convention that our boys be organized along the same line as our girls, using the same Constitution and methods of work as for Willing Worker's Societies. It has been suggested that men make the best leaders as superintendents for the boys and young men, but I believe our women do equally as well, because our men have not had the Missionary training. The men should be encouraged to become honorary members of the Women's Societies and not only give to Missions but study Missions and thus be prepared to become leaders for our boys and young men. The father is always pleased to have his boy carry on his business.

Listen boys! Suppose your father's business was so broad that he had not only one office, but branch offices in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and even across the sea in Tokio and Canton. If you could travel around the world, how glad you would be to visit them!

When you grow older, if your father should say, "My son, I must leave home awhile; will you care for the business in my absence?" Would you not thrill with pleasure that he trusted his work to you? And later, if the business needed a representative in a distant city, and he should look to you, how eagerly you would cry, "Father, send me!"

But all this is true. Your Father has just such a business. Travel from country to country and in nearly every city you may find it.

From our Mission Offices, the good news is sent out to the people of our land, the rich and poor, the native mountaineer, and the foreigner who comes to our shores; to the people of Porto Rico and to the workers everywhere. We have branch offices scattered here and there and your own church and Sunday school may be termed sub-offices.

A boy who wants to have a part in this great business of his Father's must begin in a small way now, putting himself in training to have a larger share as he grows older.

Reader, who will be the first to report an organized Boy's Missionary Society?

OBJECTIVES OF WOMENS' MISSIONARY SOCIETIES OF THE E. VA. CONFERENCE

The following will answer important questions recently asked the Mission Secretary. The regular dues from the Women's Societies of the E. Va. Conference go half for Home, half for Foreign Missions.

The Specials for the Conference this year are the Rev. H. S. Smith fund (Foreign) and Washington, D. C. work (Home). For each of these the goal is $1,200.00

The Young People's money is used for the Santa Isabel pastor. The Willing Workers support an orphan and are trying to raise $1,000.00 for the mountain work. The goals for the Women's Societies of the N. C. Conference are printed in a leaflet which can be had by addressing request to Mrs. M. F. Cook, Superintendent Literature, Greensboro, N. C. This leaflet also gives amount apportioned to each Society and Cradle Roll. The fall conferences are near by now and the Women and Young People are getting anxious and uneasy. The time is upon us for activity, in His Name.

AGED MINISTERS' RELIEF

Our Southern Convention passed a resolution looking to the relief of our aged ministers that should be considered, and it is devoutly hoped, will be ratified, by all of our Conferences in their forthcoming sessions this fall. The resolution as printed on page 49 of the Proceedings now distributed reads: "That the various Conferences composing this Convention turn their super-annuated funds into a common fund along with a similar fund raised in the Men and Millions Forward Movement to be known as Convention Super-Annuated Fund." When this shall have been ratified the Committee on Super-Annuation elected by the Convention will have the following instructions from the Convention as a basis to start upon: "That at the age of seventy or earlier in case of disability, to be determined in each case by the Board, all ministers who have been actively engaged in the ministry for twenty years next preceding thereto shall receive annuities from this fund as follows: (A) Single ministers, $200 per year, (B) married ministers, $300 per year, (C) widows, $200 a year during their widowhood and membership in the Christian Church; dependents to be provided for in each case by the Board."

The Board to put these resolutions into effect, and provide machinery and detail of their execution are, J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.; W. M. Jay, Holland, Va.; K. B. Johnson, Cardenas, N. C.; B. D. Jones, Holland, Va.; W. K. Holt, Burlington, N. C.

At the earliest possible date after the annual Conferences adjourn this fall, most likely the last week in November or first week in December, this committee will be called together to begin the important and responsible duties put upon it by the Convention. If all our Conferences ratify the act of the Convention the work of the Committee will be made easy, and all our worthy, aged and beloved ministers who have given their best for their Church, and the widows of ministers needing, can and will be provided for to the extent at least recommended by the Convention.

J. O. ATKINSON, Chairman.

PROHIBITION RESULTS

The theory that men addicted to the use of alcohol have become candy eaters since the advent of prohibition is not based on facts, according to Walter C. Hughes, Secretary of the National Confectioners Association.

The statement is made in a letter to Thomas Quinn Beesley, Assistant to the American Executive Committee of the 15th International Congress Against Alcoholism.

The Congress in a scientific body and Mr. Hughes' statement is in reply to a request for advance information to present to the Congress during the convention on September 21-26.

"While I believe that Prohibition has been a benefit to the Confectionery Industry, I do not believe that the industry has been benefited proportionately any more than a number of industries have been benefited.

"In point of benefits the industry has received, we believe confectionery ranks about fifth. The industries who have received greater benefits than our industry on account of Prohibition are the following:

1. Savings banks.
2. Soft drink industry.
3. Ice cream industry.
4. Moving picture theatres.
5. Confectionery industry.

"I think it is an unanswerable argument that some industries have been benefited, but the theory advanced that men addicted to the use of alcohol have become candy eaters since the advent of Prohibition is based entirely upon the wrong premises and is not logical. More candy is being consumed because the people have more money to spend, not alone for candy but for everything else that they want that adds to their comfort or pleasure."

NOTES

Mrs. D. P. Barrett called to see us this week. Her husband is at this writing in Ohio, but is expected to return to North Carolina in a few days.

It has been suggested that we repeat the report of the Men and Millions campaign that no one may overlook it. If conditions are favorable, we will do this next week.

We mourn with Brother J. D. Gunter, Sr., Sanford, N. C., in the loss of his companion today (Tuesday) at the home of her son at Gastonia, N. C. News reaches us just as we close our forms.

As we go to press we have not received an account of Elon's opening, but understand that it is favorable in every way, and presume that President Harper will furnish us a letter for the next issue.

The type for this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN was set by a new operator in the plant that publishes the paper, and we ask the indulgence of our readers in case any gross errors should occur, despite repeated proof-reading.

The annual meeting of the Board of Religious Education will be held at the Hotel Raleigh, Raleigh, N. C., on Tuesday, September 14, at 7:30 P. M. Those having business to go before the Board will govern themselves accordingly.

On September 3 a submarine and crew of 35 men were rescued off the Delaware Coast after being submerged for 44 hours.

Totals For Men and Millions Forward Movement

I had hoped to make this report public ere this, but could not until the captains had reported.

On July first I mailed to each captain a request for checking up, of which the following is a copy:

July 1, 1920.

FINAL REPORT FROM EACH CHURCH

Dear Captain:

The Men and Millions Forward Movement Campaign closed last night. Our hearts have greatly rejoiced over the victories that have been achieved. We now need a final report. Will you therefore answer the questions below at once?

The records in our office show the following facts relative to Church. If they are not correct, will you please correct them?

As Reported Should Be

Life Work Recruits
 Tithers Secured
 Additions to Church During Year
 New Money Raised for M. and M.

Do not include that previously subscribed for Missions and Standardization Fund.

Have you sent the duplicate of the Consecration Week Covenants to Chas. D. Johnston?

Have you sent all other cards to me?

Are your people using the envelopes?

Are they paying up properly?

Are you keeping your record of money paid in the book sent you?

Will you remit at the end of each quarter to Chas. D. Johnston, Executive Secretary, Elon College, N. C.

Do you know anyone who will enter school this fall to prepare to be a minister or a missionary?

Who is it?

Thanking you for your splendid work and praying rich blessings on you, I am,

Sincerely,

W. A. HARPER,

Secretary Organization and Publicity, Men and Millions Movement.

NOTES

We are publishing in full, on other pages of this issue of THE SUN a report by Dr. W. A. Harper, Secretary Organization and Publicity of the Men and Millions Forward Movement. We have used every possible care in the proof-reading to see that the printed figures correspond to the typewritten report furnished. Any error should be reported to Secretary Harper and he will make corrections through THE SUN. We ask this because it is possible for errors to occur between reports of the local captain and the Secretary, and so by reporting direct to the Secretary of Organization and Publicity, the error can be traced—and all records amended.

Many articles had to be left out this week. Several items were left out last week on account of crowded conditions. This, together with the financial report of the Men and Millions campaign, made it necessary to go to press again this week omitting several articles that must wait for another issue.

We congratulate Miss Lucile Johnston, a former employee in THE SUN office, but now with the Standard Realty & Security Co., Burlington, N. C., on being appointed as a Notary Public. Miss Johnston is the first woman in Alamance County to be so recognized in this capacity.

We have received a copy of the proceedings of the fifty-first session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention, and thank Secretary Cotten for the same.

MARRIAGES

FORREST—COTTEN

A quiet, beautiful wedding occurred in the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Forrest, Smithfield, Va., when their accomplished daughter, Hazel, became the bride of Harvey J. Cotten, on Tuesday, July 27, 1920, at 7:30 o'clock.

The bride wore a traveling suit of blue with hat and gloves to match. The ceremony was read by a cousin of the groom. Only the immediate family and a few intimate friends were present. Immediately after the ceremony, the young couple left by automobile for Washington, D. C., and after a ten days' trip returned by way of the Valley of Virginia to Dendron, Va., where Mr. Cotten is engaged in the mercantile business.

E. T. COTTEN.

HAILEY—FAUCETTE

Miss Iosa Hailey and Mr. T. L. Faucette, were united in marriage August 2, 1920, at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. Hailey, Harris street, Burlington, N. C. Both of these young people are residents of Burlington and will make their home here. May happiness and success crown their days. Ceremony performed by the writer.

OBITUARIES

PEELE

The death of Mrs. Charlotte A. Peele, widow of the late Jackson Peele, occurred on Monday, August 23, 1920, at the Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va. After the death of her husband, Mrs. Peele moved to Holland, where she lived until about a year ago, when she sold her property and moved to Portsmouth, where she could be with her niece, Miss Eugenia Peele, whom she had raised, and who was then employed in Portsmouth. Mrs. Peele was able to come on the train to Suffolk on Saturday to take a treatment at the hospital, and on the following Monday she died. She leaves no children and was aged about 69 years. Funeral services were held in the Holy Neck Christian church, of which she was for many years a member. Services were conducted by the writer and interment made in the cemetery by the church. She was a well loved and highly respected citizen and will be greatly missed.

W. M. JAY.

SOLOMON

John Reuben Solomon was born August 15, 1852, and died August 29, 1920, aged sixty-seven years and fourteen days. In early life he was married to Letitia Neal, who died February 16, 1915. Five children were born to this union. They are: Mesdames J. E. Reid and G. E. Vaughn; Messers. F. P., D. O., and J. P. Solomon.

Mr Solomon joined Salem Chapel Christian church at the age of twenty years, and remained an honored and faithful member till death. He will be greatly missed by the members of this church as well as by the many friends of the community.

A FRIEND.

KING

Darius King was born June 12, 1846, and died August 16, 1920, at the age of seventy-four years, two months, four days. He is survived by his only children, one son, Oscar D. King, and daughter, Georgie Mae Holland, and two grand-children, Mildred King and Elizabeth Holland. He was a member of the Bethlehem Christian church and a deacon. Old age and disease which had set in several years ago kept him in very feeble condition for years, but he was a silent sufferer and true follower of his Lord. Funeral services were conducted at Bethlehem church, by the writer, assisted by Rev. H. H. Butler, and Dr. I. W. Johnson. Interment was made in the church cemetery. The grave was thickly covered with beautiful floral designs.

The Lord comfort the bereaved ones.

NUMBER 37

At Sunset

At sunset when I hear the voice of God,
When all my weary lessons have been learned,
When I have done my best and missed the mark,
And failed to reach the heights toward which I've yearned,
When I have groped so blindly for the light,
And sore perplexed have stumbled in despair,
Ah, then my need of Him will touch His heart,
And He will lift the burdens and the care.
When I have tried so hard to do His will,
And somehow failed to understand aright,
When I have searched His word on bended knee,
And asked for faith that I may see the light,
When I have let my life's weak taper shine,
And looked to Him for strength and guiding power,
I know that He'll condone mistakes, and I
Can trust Him at the sunset hour.

IMPROVED CATTLE AND IMPROVED PREACHERS

Not a comparison at all. Here is the point: The other day we rode out a few miles to a neighboring town to look over the exhibits brought together from three counties to make up a fair. Our expectations were more than met. Splendid displays of crops of every description common to the section, with finest selections of cattle. A person in our company remarked: "This is a fine idea. There are people here today who had never dreamed of owning the best of cattle. It is now demonstrated to them that it takes no more to feed a cow that gives five gallons of milk per day than one that gives only two." And among the comments we heard this: "This is the process of education among our churches. There are those who do not understand and appreciate principles, modern methods and progressive undertakings until they see what others are doing. Then it is easy enough for them."

A great principle is involved here. Too many of us are satisfied with doing a thing just as it was done twenty-five years ago. This is not saying that it was not right then, and you do not have to extract truth from anything in order to change its form. There are those who have tried to conduct their churches and Sunday schools on methods used by their fore-fathers. Now those fore-fathers were good and honest men; Christian at heart and no doubt, in many cases, more devout than many of the present generation, but that does not mean that we cannot express the same truth that they expressed; live as honestly and devoutly as they lived, and yet function in different ways and manage by different methods.

REPLY AND COMMENT TO L. C. HUFFINES' LETTER

Our statement in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, August 25, that Pleasant Ridge church contributed only $20.00 in addition to pastor's salary is verified by referring to page 138 of the 1920 edition of The Christian Annual. We admit the $70.00 paid the Conference as the apportionment of that church in full. There are two things that we possibly failed to make clear in our editorial: Failing to refer to the $70.00 and stating clearly what we meant by "other purposes." In reality we meant this: That the church, in addition to its pastor's salary and Conference apportionment, raised only $20.00 to help forward our Father's Kingdom. We are glad to make the correction and say that the church raised $70.00 as its Conference apportionment; $175.00 for pastor's salary, and $20.00 for other purposes.

Brother Huffines refers to the Methodist Episcopal Church concerning its decrease in membership. We took up the statement and figures given with Rev. L. S. Massey, Editor The North Carolina Christian Advocate, Greensboro; Rev. T. N. Ivey, Editor The Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.; and Rev. J. R. Joy, Editor The Christian Advocate, New York City. We have replies from these brethren and they are as follows:

Massey—"The figures are correct, I am sorry to say."

Ivey—"The statement is substantially correct, I am sorry to say."

Joy—"According to the latest Year Books of the denominations in question, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, had an increase of membership amounting to 5,786 in the Conference year 1918-19. The Methodist Episcopal Church, which in your section is sometimes called the 'M. E. Church, North,' has a decrease of 55,881. I am happy to say that the returns already received from the first half of the year now current show a very substantial increase in membership, more than enough to wipe out the deficiency of the previous year."

Editor Joy in some way seems to fail to locate North Carolina, and groups this geographical section as part of the area known as the "M. E. Church, North."

Brother Huffines gives a statement which he received from Rev. J. V. Knight concerning the Presbyterian Church. This statement was referred to Rev. J. R. Bridges, Editor The Presbyterian Standard, Charlotte, N. C.; Rev. David M. Sweets, Editor The Christian Observer, Louisville, Ky., and Rev. Walter Irving Clarke, Editor The New Era Magazine, New York City. These brethren were written the following letter:

We have an article written for The Christian Sun which is pending publication, in which we find this statement: "I heard..... say on last Sunday that the Presbyterians had lost, since their money drive started, 875,000, either from membership or from the active list."

Can you substantiate this statement? Give us a definite answer if possible.

We have received the following replies:

Chalotte, N. C., Sept. 8, 1920

My dear Mr. Riddle:

The statement given in your letter of 6th is new to me. It must refer to the Northern Church, because I know that it is not true with reference to us.

The fact is, I do not believe that the Northern Church has met with any such loss.

I am sorry that I cannot help you in a more definite way.

Yours sincerely,

J. R. BRIDGES.

156 Fifth Avenue, New York City,
September 10, 1920.

Dear Brother Riddle:

I have just received your letter of September 6 asking for information concerning a report that the "Presbyterians have lost, since their money drive, 875,000 either from membership or from active service." This of course is a base libel. Our minutes of 1919 showed a total membership of 1,603,033. Our minutes of 1918 showed a total membership of 1,631,748. The minutes of 1920 have been delayed by the printers and I have not the details at hand, but I am writing to Dr. James M. Hubbert, who is in charge of the office of the Stated Clerk, Weatherspoon Building, Philadelphia, asking him to send you exact information. You can readily see that if we had lost 875,000 in membership we would have lost more than half of our working forces which is of course absurd. The records of the New Era Movement show that churches which put over the New Era program gained materially in membership. I earnestly hope that you will not publish the statement quoted in your letter until you have heard definitely from Dr. Hubbert. To do so would be to commit a great wrong against the Presbyterian Church.

WALTER I. CLARKE.

Clarke also writes under date of September 11 as follows:

156 Fifth Avenue, New York City, Sept. 11, 1920.

Dear Brother Riddle:

Supplementing my letter of yesterday relating to the membership of the Presbyterian Church, I have just received from the office of the Stated Clerk, proof sheet showing that our total membership as recorded in the 1920 minutes is 1,637,105, an increase over the number recorded in the minutes for 1919 of 34,072, and an increase of 5,357 over the number of members recorded in the minutes of 1918. Furthermore, this is an increase over the years 1915, 1916 and 1917.

You will readily see that this completely refutes the accusation that our "money drive" caused a loss of membership of 875,000.

Yours sincerely,

WALTER I. CLARKE.

At this writing we have not received a reply from the Editor of The Christian Observer, and therefore cannot include it in this discussion.

Readers of THE SUN will understand, we are sure, that this correspondence has been carried on to secure facts for the benefit of the public and not for any personal reflections. We feel that it is our duty to say that it is not always a good idea to make statements unless you are positive about them. If Brother Huffines misunderstood Brother Knight, that should be corrected, and if Brother Knight has given this statement in public he ought to look into the origin of his figures and correct his statement. We leave it with the Brethren to get up their proof, if they desire.

We have on file the original letters referred to in the above correspondence and any reader can have access to them by calling at THE SUN office.

BOOKS

(Extracts from an Address by Rev. D. A. Long, D. D.)

Burns wrote: "Some books are lies from end to end; and some great lies are never penned." It is wonderful to notice how many of the great books are essentially constructed on the same ground plan, and how every great writer is an optimist. They go "from worse to better." If they start out with an "unhappy soul," they eventually lead it to happiness. This shows that "man is a progressive being." Job progresses from a shallow, untired service to God, first to doubt, and then to a noble and triumphant faith; the "Pilgrim's Progress," of one who by sheer determined courage, progresses from misery and the "City of Destruction" to salvation and the company of the blessed; "Don Quixote" of one who by a "way sometimes sorrowful, generally humerous, mostly pitiful adventure, progresses from madness and delusion, to "sanity and truth."

"The Arabian Nights" tells us of a smart and beautiful woman, who progresses by way of ingenuity from dire doom, to happiness and honor; "Faust," of a man who "progresses by way of self-sacrifice from kind of damning discontent to happiness and salvation." "Divine Comedy", gives us a soul-stirring account of a man who progresses from sin and wretchedness (hell) to goodness and bliss, "(Heaven)" and sweetest angel in his Paradise, was the object of his early love; the blind old bard, who walked the golden halls of Olympus, in the "Odyssey" "sets out the history of a man who progresses by means of endurance from separation and exile, to renunciation and homecoming" to his darling, faithful wife.

No one has ever written anything worth remembering, in any book, who did not first labor, and suffer it out. David wrote or played the Psalms on broken heart strings; Washington felt the anguish of eight years of war, when he wrote his farewell address; Lincoln felt the pulse of a Nation, coursing through his veins, when he spoke at Gettysburg; Paul felt a thrill of glory in his soul when he wrote his son, Timothy, "I am now ready to be offered." Lee's farewell at Appomattox will be read as long a Liberty lives and heroism has a shrine; Troy may be destroyed, but the land of Priam lives on in song; the temple may be destroyed, but the Psalms will be sung by the angels in Paradise, for they the the songs of God.

The cancellation of orders is said to be working hardships upon many industries.

I do not see how I could do without my Church paper, as it has been in my home a number of years.—
MRS. JOHN ELEY. Whaleyville, Va.

CORRESPONDENCE

BROTHER HUFFINES REPLIES

Dear Brother Riddle:

Please allow me a little space to reply to your editorial in the issue of August 25.

In the first place I have no apology to make for belonging to a little weak church, but I do think we should have credit for what little we do. I herewith hand you a paid check for seventy dollars, made payable to K. B. Johnson, Treasurer, to pay our church assessments in full. The endorsement thereon shows that Mr. Johnson got the money, and why this church has no credit for it I do not know. Please see into the matter. There are members of this church who pay more to other causes than they do on the conference reports.

You admit my contention and then attempt to argue that it is not right. I want to say again that the idea of a preacher saying he is trusting God, and yet when he goes out to work for Him he will not take God's word, but requires some individual or some organization to guarantee the pay. Now if that is trusting God I cannot see it that way. Is not God's word as good as man's? The charge which I make, I hope does not apply to the majority of our preachers, but I mean it for everyone who says he is at work for the Master and yet refuses to preach unless some one will guarantee him a certain amount. The idea of a preacher prying the work he is going to do for the Master, and looking to man for his pay is beyond my conception. Nothing is more ridiculous except the man praying to be heard of men and expects God to answer.

Christ told His disciples to go preach, taking with them neither purse nor script. He did not say take a little money for fear they might get into a tight-fisted crowd, and He is just as able and as willing to take care of His workers now as He was then.

Now as to the preacher refusing the call, I happened to know that the preacher referred to had a good living without that church, and he was simply independent. I have seen the time when he would have been glad to have served the church for half what it now offered him. I heard Dr. Harper say once that he thought it unfortunate for a preacher to get rich (however, not many of our preachers are affected in this way because they get too independent.)

I have contended, and am still contending, that the whole Christian Church (I do not mean our Church alone, but all Protestant churches, preachers and laymen) have gone wild about money, and to show that what I have said concerning their leaving out God and trying to get money is true, I want to quote a few statistics: The addition to Protestant churches in the United States from 1907 to 1917 was an average of 177,000 each year, but in the year 1918 when so many churches started their campaigns for money, only 156,000 members were added; and in the year 1919 when nearly all of the Protestant churches were making their big drives for money, only 56,000 joined the churches. Last year the

M. E. Church South had a decrease in membership of between nine and ten thousand; the M. E. Church North had a decrease of between forty and fifty thousand.

I heard Rev. J. V. Knight say on last Sunday that the Presbyterians had lost, since their money drive started, eight hundred and seventy-five thousand, either from membership or from their active list. Dr. R. H. Bennett, in his recent annual report on Ministerial Supply and Training, says the shortage in preachers continues, and it seems that at the present time all denominations are feeling the need of men for the ministry.

I would like to furnish more figures to show how God's work has gone back while the men who started out to preach the gospel have left the gospel of Jesus Christ and gone out to preach money, money. This proves that in the great rush to get money which has been going on in most of the churches, that the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ has been neglected. I think it high time that we stop preaching money and preach for the saving of souls.

THE PASTOR A LAYMAN NEEDS

The subject "If I were a Preacher" is too much for me. If I were a preacher with the training preachers usually get, I would be just about like the others. However I understand the spirit of our good Editor's suggestion and shall outline some of the qualities at least one layman in the world would like to see in his pastor.

In the very first place this pastor is a professional man. Being a pastor is his job and he sticks to that job all the time. He is up to date on the best methods to be used in his work,— an expert in his line. He loves his work so much that he had rather be a pastor than to be anything else in the world. No one has ever seen him shed salty tears over the time he "shouldered his cross as a minister". In fact I doubt that he can recall any particular date as the time of his decision to be a minister. He is a minister through natural inclination (I have no objection to your calling it Divine) just as a good many other men are in their professions.

This pastor draws a salary. It is not given him; it is paid him out of the free will offerings of the church at regular intervals and in sufficient amounts to support his family, educate his children, and keep him and his wife comfortable in their old age. He has no compunction of conscience for requiring this much because he believes that a real man's work in the world is worth it. And if his services were not so good that his people are glad to pay that much he would know that he had missed his calling and would get into some other profession. In these stirring times when the world is literally pouring out millions for religious work and when men are seeking the truth and paying for it as never before, the pastor who is continually grumbling about his salary deserves to be starved out of the ministry. And it will be a good day for the cause of the Master when such a parasite is dropped from His payroll.

He is a man, a red-blooded man,—not a sanctimonious sissy. He knows some of the problems busy men in other professions have to solve. And he is not so lofty in thought that he can not ask a layman's opinion in some things pertaining to the ministry. He is practical enough to see that the money of the church is put to good use instead of being squandered in dreamy, impractical schemes. He makes a more serious study of Human Nature than of Hebrew or of Greek. And when one visits him in his study it is soon apparent that the preacher is more interested in the service to be rendered in this life than in the torments that are liable to be endured in the hereafter.

As a pulpit speaker he is always interesting. But his best sermon is in the life that he lives. His messages of truth have a direct bearing on the problems of this life. He does not carry in his coat sleeve a collection of ghost stories or accounts of accidents to attempt to scare people out of torment. Neither does he see so much evil in a peek-a-boo waist or a diaphanous skirt as some preachers imagine they can see. Mark the preacher who glories in painting worldly pictures of present day fashions, ball room dancing, and some of the other "pleasures of the world,"—his own mind is more evil than the things he pretends to condemn. The layman knows enough about them without a lot of cheap advertising from the pulpit.

The pastor that the layman needs stands foursquare for his principles in politics. He is a living example of the practicability of carrying religion into politics. And as long as the preacher will stick to principles instead of parties there will be no danger of politics getting into his church. The average layman will respect such a man. But the preacher who can do no more than preach, pray, perform marriage ceremonies, bury the dead, and baptize candidates for membership in his church had as well resign, because his sermons will be ignored by the laity and the prayers of such an indolent specimen of humanity will avail very little before the Throne.

LACK OF RESPECT FOR THE MINISTRY

One of the danger signs of this age is the fact that the minister is not recognized as God's representative, as a God sent messenger, as he once was, nor is he held in the high esteem as he has been in days gone by. The minister himself may be to blame for this, or it may be due to the drift of the world into a cold and non-spiritual condition. Many people who go to church today like to boast of their ability to weigh, measure, criticize, and condemn a minister, as much or more than they would any other man from the President of our Nation to the policeman on the beat. Instead of thinking of the preacher as God's messenger with a message for their soul, many constitute themselves a critic sent to church to see if the minister talks and acts in a way to please them, and if he does not they seem to take great delight in telling other people of the minister's weakness.

This condition has partly been brought about by a teaching, that the minister is no more called of God to his work than is a person who does any other work which he has chosen for himself. This writer believes that such teaching is wrong, and has done a great deal of harm. The true minister has been divinely called of God, and is engaged, not in a profession which he has chosen for himself, but in a calling that has been selected for him by his divine Master, and unless a man is thus called of God, all the college and university training he may take will not make him a successful minister of the gospel.

The lack of respect and esteem for the calling known as the ministry, doubtless has a great deal to do with the present scarcity of ministers. In other days the ministry was held up by parents as the noblest and highest work to which a young man could give himself, and young men listened for the call into this great work, but now parents prefer to see their children enter most any other work than that of preaching the gospel at home or abroad. This fact causes many a young man to turn a deaf ear to the voice of God, when he is deciding his life's work, and go off after the voice of the world.

If we are to have ministers to preach the gospel of Christ in the days that are to come, the sacredness of the calling must be impressed upon the children at home, and earnest prayers must be made that the Lord will send laborers into his vineyard, and our young men should be made to know that they are entering the field of greatest opportunity, and one into which God is calling them, when they are giving their lives to tell the wonderful story of the gospel of Jesus Christ. If we cannot have great respect and esteem for the minister, we must have it for the Ministry as a calling. The minister is human, but the Ministry is divine. We may not have a great regard for the man who is trying to preach, but all of us must have great respect for the calling of God, known as the ministry.

A FRIEND OF MINISTERS

NOTICE

The Alabama Christian Conference will convene at New Harmony church on Tuesday after the second Sunday in October. The nearest railroad station is Cragford, Ala., which is two miles from New Harmony church.

We trust that all the churches will elect a full team of delegates and send them for three days. We are expecting a great conference and the presence of pastors and delegates will help greatly to make it so. We are expecting Mrs. W. A. Harper and Miss Bessie Holt to be present at the Conference, and arrangements will be made for them to hold meetings with the ladies.

EDITORIALS FROM THE FIELD

By Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., an Ex-Editor of The Christian Sun.

THE MORMONS

We do not see and hear as much of the Mormons, and Mormon "Elders," as we did a few years ago in these parts. But they are not dwindling nor "playing out." According to the census they have increased more rapidly, in proportion to their numbers, in the past ten years, than any other religious body in America.

Ten years ago the census gave them 215,000; the last census reports 403,000. This increase may be accounted for to some extent on the ground of big families and the growth of Mormon communities; but is not the great secret of their growth to be found in the fact that they compel all their members to tithe all, and then with this vast amount of "church funds" they are able to carry on a perpetual and aggressive propaganda? They have "the spirit of missions" with so much zeal that they are able to go forward even under heavy handicaps and grow. Even an unholy people with the missionary vision and spirit grow and prosper in the earth.

FUNDAMENTALS

"In God there is a universal will to save. In Christ there is universal salvation. In humanity there is universal need of salvation through redemption. In faith alone is there the condition and the means of appropriation of salvation through Christ. Without faith it is impossible to please God, or approach Him. Without Christ it is impossible to obtain salvation, for there is no other name given in heaven or amongst men whereby we can be saved. If then salvation through His name is for all there must be a mission for all." We are dealing in the fundamentals of the Word when we carry out the Great Commission of our Lord, "Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel to every creature."

"THY WILL BE DONE"

We pray "not our will, but Thy will be done." Christ taught us so to pray, by example, yet when we go to make our "will," do we not make it ours instead of His? How often do people make their last will and testament, and make it solely their will. If we really mean "Thy will be done," should we not include with ours, as well as with us? "When you make your will, don't leave Christ out."

THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

This pact drawn by men may prevent war, but it is not preventing it. If we understand it, some members of the League are now at war and fighting like mad. Missions are doing more to erase racial prejudice and wipe out personal and international bitterness than all non-Christian diplomatic schemes combined, and when the spirit of Christ pervades the hearts of men and nations everywhere, wars will cease and it will be easy to form a League that will stand.

ONE GENERATION OF CHILDREN

D. L. Moody is quoted as saying, "If we can win one generation of children we have put the devil out of business." But are we putting forth our strongest effort to reach and hold the children for Christ? If so, in what direction is our effort being put forth? Are we giving our children something to do in the name and for the sake of Christ? Are we holding up to them Christ as Savior, Friend, Companion, Redeemer? And then what are we going to do to further His cause and build up His kingdom in the world? Have you in your church, community, or Sunday school a "Young People's Missionary Society" in which the need of saving a world is taught and talked about, and in which it is constantly brought out that each one has a part in winning this world to Christ?

FORGING FORWARD

Nothing short of "forging forward" begins to express it, and that in no manner describes the rapidity with which our good women, God bless them, are going forward in their missionary work. It is simply wonderful—the amount of missionary work they are now doing these dear ones of our Southern Christian Convention, in comparison with what they were doing even six years ago. The money raised by no means signifies what is being done, but is an index at least of growing interest and increasing effort. During 1912-14—two years—our women gave through their Societies and regular channels $1,960.25; 1914-1916, $3,116.25, an increase of 60 per cent; 1916-1918, $5,585.97, increase of 80 per cent; 1918-1920, $12,753.35, increase of 130 per cent. And they have set as their goal for the next biennium—1920-22, $25,000.00. And those of us who know how they work and watch and pray have the faith to believe they will achieve this large victory. All of which means more missionary vision, talk, sacrifice, devotion in the home and family.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

The good people of Pleasant Ridge church, Randolph County, were the first to respond to our request for wheat to help us tide over the year with our wheat crop. The following members donated: W. H. Wrenn, E. W. Brown, J. C. Craven, G. H. Black, B. H. Scott, W. E. Allred, J. R. Craven, H. C. Cox, V. M. Cox, Everett Cox, Daught Allred, Hattie Cox, J. L. Bray, S. V. Cox gave one bushel each. W. O. Craven, George McCloud, Mrs. Steel, J. H. Cagle, Mrs. Scott, Carl Brown, Mrs. J. A. Russell—one-half bushel each. Total, 17 1-2 bushels.

We are truly grateful to these good people for this liberal contribution and assure them that it will be a blessing to us.

Why not a number of the churches in the wheat sections follow this good example? Most any church in the wheat sections could make up twenty-five bushels wheat and not even miss what they gave.

Our singing class had a very pleasant trip to Pleasant Grove (Randolph County) and Bennett churches on the first Sunday. We went via of Greensboro and changed trains at Bonlee for Bennett. It was a novel trip from Bonlee to Bennett for the children. The Superintendent of the Bonlee and Western Railway gave us a reduction on our fare to Bennett and got us over there on schedule time. The conductor on this line was very pleasant to us and assured us that he was wishing for us a most pleasant trip. The children rendered their program at the Pleasant Grove church Sunday at eleven and at Bennett at night. The congregations at both churches were good and the offerings were splendid. Offerings at Pleasant Grove amounted to $43.85 and at Bennett $36.95.

The people were kind to us and seemed to enjoy the program very much. Everybody tried to make our visit pleasant and did everything for our comfort and happiness possible. Some of the friends at Bennett carried us across the country on Monday morning to Ramseur so we could get the evening train in Greensboro and get home the same day. Brother G. R. Underwood, the pastor of these churches, is very much loved by his people and is doing a splendid work.

We want to again thank him for his invitation to visit his churches at these points and hope to go again sometime.

A LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley: I was late before but intend to be on time this month. I am enclosing ten cents—my dues for September. We have many watermelons and wish you and the little orphans could help us enjoy them. With love and best wishes to you and the orphan children.—Ruth M. Sanford.

Our little folks are very fond of watermelons and I wish we were near enough to you to pay you a visit. We have had some real nice ones, too.—“Uncle Charley.”

WHO DO THE GIVING?

We are told that the reason the Interchurch Movement broke down was because contributions and support from “friendly citizens” outside the churches failed to materialize. It was believed these friendly “outsiders” would contribute $60,000,000; they contributed in reality a scant three millions. Dr. Frederick Lvnch, an Interchurch leader and editor in commenting on this says:

“It is only Christians who have learned to give. Anyone who has tried to raise money in large sums knows how little to expect from the average good man who is not identified with the church. We know personally dozens of these men, some rich from olden times, some who have grown rich out of the war, who are spending thousands upon thousands of dollars annually upon themselves, spending it unwisely and lavishly as the nouveau riche always do, from whom we would get ten dollars when we asked for money, while his equally rich Christian neighbor would always match this ten dollars with one thousand dollars. The Christian has learned how to give.”

ACTS AND ACTIVITIES--NEWS AND NOTES

OF

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

RECEIVED--WELCOMED--GOLDED

Talk about churches pounding their pastor and making handsome gifts to his wife—none of them have anything on the Greensboro First church.

On Friday evening, September 3, 1920, the Ladies' Aid and Missionary society gave a reception to the church and Sunday school, inviting as honored guests the 100 members received since November 1, 1918, and Mrs. J. Vincent Knight, who came to the work August 20, 1920.

Mrs. J. W. Patton and Mrs. C. C. Johnson had charge of the program, which consisted of several musical numbers by the children, Miss Joyce Phillips and Mr. C. N. Herndon.

Deacon W. B. Truitt was spokesman for the occasion, and reviewed the two years' work of the present pastor in a very highly complimentary and appreciative way, making special mention of the progress of the work and finally turning his remarks to words of welcome to Mrs. Knight. Concluding, he called the pastor and his wife to the front and presented them $100 in gold with the compliments and good wishes of the members of the church and Sunday school.

The gala event closed in the Sunday school rooms of the church where the big audience played a number of games, and had delicious refreshments, and the closing moments came all too soon.

In closing this article, we wish to express our appreciation and sincere thanks to every one who had any part in the above mentioned event; and to go a step further, and again thank our many friends in the church at Newport News, Va., and other places who have so generously remembered us in various ways. We thank you, dear friends, one and all, and pledge ourselves to live more appreciative lives, and to be better servants of our Christ. We shall use every gift and remembrance of any kind for the advancement of His Kingdom, and the Church we love so much. God bless everyone who has had any part in making our lives so happy.

MR. AND MRS. J. V. KNIGHT.

RICHMOND LETTER

The charter of the First Christian church, of Richmond, Va., was closed September 5, 1920. The number of charter members is 83, which is far in excess of our expectations when we took charge of the work March 1. The membership is composed of a representative class, many of whom have been officials and active workers in their home churches. There are a number of others who will join later. Our Sunday school, Christian Endeavor and Ladies' Aid are active working forces. Our Young Men's Bible class is conducting weekly cottage prayer meetings. We are looking forward with interest to our revival services October 3-17. Rev. Victor Lightbourne and Mr. Sam Davis will be with us from October 6 to 17. We are hoping and praying for a great meeting.

We have secured the deed for a church lot with a frontage of 130 feet at Grove avenue and Shepherd street. It is one of the most rapidly growing sections of the city and is within one block of two car lines.

The outlook here is hopeful and with hearty co-operation, I think we shall soon have a good church building and a large congregation.

Please send me the names of all members of our church whom you know are in Richmond.— W. T. WALTERS.

SUFFOLK LETTER

The Suffolk church gave its pastor the month of August as a vacation, but maintained preaching once a Sunday in the forenoon during that time. The following ministers preached on the five Sundays in the order their names are here given: J. O. Atkinson, D. D., E. T. Cotten, J. T. Kitchen, I. W. Johnson, D. D., and N. G. Newman D. D., all of them rendering acceptable service. The church kept up Sunday school and prayer meeting, and the Christian Endeavor society held its regular meetings.

I appreciated my vacation which enabled me to preach in Dover, Del., the first Sunday in August, to visit and take part in the Virginia Valley Central Conference in Winchester, Va. I spent one week in Suffolk, conducted two funerals and then spent 12 days at Fuquay Springs, N. C., where I added twelve pounds to my weight, and gathered some new vigor for the work. I attended Sunday school at Wake Chapel the fourth and fifth Sundays, and had five days in Brother Beale Johnson's pond and at his dinner table. My stay at Fuquay was a real recreation.

The farmers in Wake county were in the midst of tobacco harvest, but the crop was so great that men, women and children could not house all of it. I was in five states during August and crops everywhere were unusually fine. Tobacco and automobiles seem to have the day. I am wondering whether religion is keeping pace with money-making and pleasure. The war turned loose much money and created a craze for dancing. One of the pleasures offered the soldiers everywhere was suppers and dances. The craze has not ceased, and the abundance of money makes leisure and opportunity to keep up this pastime. It is a social current that draws into it innocence and inexperience and ruins many before they understand the danger. Mothers often think the dance introduces their daughters into society, overlooking the fact that many of the dancers represent nothing of permanent worth. The dance represents perilous contact, reduces love for home and church, and turns the heart away from purity and love. Christianity offers something better than pleasure "for a season," and the world needs a higher social standard than the dance hall affords. The Church of Jesus Christ offers the best opportunity for real service, real happiness and real pleasure of any institution on earth; and the world without the Church is heathendom, savagery and ruin. "He that loveth pleasure shall be a poor man." Pleasure is the lowest goal in human life. But there is a higher pleasure than that word usually includes. It is religious pleasure that ultimates in permanent satisfaction. "Thou wilt show me the path of life; in thy presence is fullness of joy; at thy right hand are pleasures forevermore."

W. W. STALEY.

AN OPPORTUNITY IN THE COUNTRY CHURCH

Generally speaking the city church is far ahead of the country church in finances. I think the recent campaigns should awaken our churches in the rural communities to the fact that they too hold vast power within their purses. The church in the open country has an opportunity of developing its strength by demanding full-time and efficient leadership. For instance the Holy Neck church in the Eastern Virginia conference is now doing some real constructive Kingdom work. It is true that is a church with a large membership; but vastly smaller churches could demand much better service than they are getting. The church at Ingram, Va., (and I mention it because I know about it) has committed itself to an annual financial budget of nearly $2,600 and yet it has only 114 members and none of them wealthy. I dare say the same sort of thing is duplicated in many instances by country churches in the Southern convention. Will not this type of church demand better service? The Men and Millions Forward movement shows us what we are capable of. Shall we do less than our best for the Master? The tithe is the financial test. I would like sometimes, somewhere, to see a country church meet it.

Allow me to conclude these three brief articles by quoting the following poem from The Country Church and the Rural Problem:"

"I stand in the fields
Where the wide earth yields
Her bounties of fruit and grain;
Where the furrows turn
Till the plowshares burn
As they come round and round again;
Where the workers pray
With their tools all day
In sunshine and shadow and rain.

"And I bid them tell
Of the crops they sell
And speak of the work they have done;
I speed every man
In his hope and plan
And follow his day with the sun;
And grasses and trees,
The birds and the bees
I know and feel ev'ry one.

"And out of it all
As the seasons fall
I build my great temple always;
I point to the skies
But my footstone lies
In commonplace work of the day;
For I preach the worth
Of the native earth—
To love and to work is to pray."

ANTIOCH

The revival meeting will commence at Antioch Christian church on the third Sunday in September.

We are looking forward to a gracious outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon us at that place. We will have two services each day—morning and afternoon. Rev. J. P. Barrett, of Columbus, Ga., will be with us and will do the preaching. He is one of the finest preachers among us. Antioch is his old home church, and we are all looking for great good to be accomplished. We trust that many souls may be born into the kingdom of God as a result of this meeting. We want all who can to attend.

H. H. BUTLER.

A LARGE APPLE

Miss Drusilla Dofflemyer, one of our students from the Valley of Virginia, brought me an apple, one of the largest I recall ever seeing. It weighs one pound and measures fourteen inches around. I hope its flavor will be equal to its size when I test it.

I find in my room two nice cans of sweet pickle. I do not know when or by whom they were put there. If some one does not call for them soon, I will sample them and not know who to thank for them.

We have a fine opening, possibly more young ladies than we ever had before and I am sure we never had a prettier set. And we have a fine looking set of young men.

AN EXPLANATION

Readers will note that THE SUN this week is not in the usual style. The Company that produces the paper has been handicapped for several days on account of incompetent help on its linotype. The Burlington News and the Burlington Herald came to the rescue of the Burlington Printing Company, but were unable to produce the same measure of type. We ask the indulgence of our readers for the form of this week's paper and extend thanks to those who assisted us in being able to produce this issue.

WOMAN'S REALM

(All items for this department should be sent to Mrs. J. W. Harrell, Burlington, N. C.)

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY MEETING OF THE VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE

The Woman's Mission Board of the Virginia Valley Central Conference met in annual session during the conference at Winchester, Virginia. A meeting was called on Friday afternoon in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and helpful suggestions were given by our Field Secretary, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, and Miss Bessie Holt, Young People's Superintendent of Southern Christian Convention Board. The entire evening session of the Conference was devoted to the women's work and was a meeting of unusual interest and inspiration.

Rev. C. A. McDaniel, the newly elected pastor of the Winchester church, led the song service, and prayers were offered by Revs. B. J. Earp and W. C. Hook. Mrs. W. A. Harper, President of the Woman's Board of the Southern Christian Convention, delivered an address on "The Growth of Our Women's Work in the South." Mrs. Harper's presence added greatly to the interest of our people. We realize more and more the need of information concerning the development of our work, and Mrs. Harper's address not only furnished us information, but her pleasing delivery lent inspiration as well. Solos were sweetly rendered by Misses Marshall Stryker and Mary D. Atkinson.

Miss Bessie Holt delivered an address on our mission work which will be long remembered by all her hearers. Miss Holt is an earnest and impressive speaker and many were awakened to a new zeal for the cause of missions. Dr. Atkinson spoke briefly during the evening and the congregation was thrilled by his powerful message. The offering of the evening was taken for a chapel in Japan, which the women of the Virginia Valley Central Conference are undertaking to build, when sufficient funds can be secured. The meeting closed with the singing of the hymn, "This World for Christ," and the benediction prayer was offered by the Conference Secretary, Rev. A. W. Andes.

Miss Holt also spoke on "Our Young People's Work" during the Saturday evening session of the Conference, and before a class of the young ladies of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Sunday morning. Following the close of the conference, she visited a number of the churches and spoke in the interest of the Young People's Work.

The following officers were elected for the coming year: Mrs. W. T. Walters, President, Richmond, Va.; Mrs. A. B. Kendall, Vice-President, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. B. F. Frank, Secretary, Harrisonburg, Va.; Miss Virdie Showalter, Treasurer, Harrisonburg, Va.; Mrs. A. W. Andes, Superintendent of Young People's Work, Harrisonburg, Va.; Miss Ella Pickering, Literature Superintendent, Broadway, Va.; Mrs. C. O. Taylor, Cradle Roll Superintendent, Linville, Va.

I would like to urge our women to send reports of their work to Mrs. J. W. Harrell, Burlington, N. C., for publication. Every society should be interested in reporting progress or proceedings of their work through THE CHRISTIAN SUN and The Christian Missionary. So why not let each society appoint a reporter for these columns?

MRS. W. T. WALTERS, President.

SPECIALS FOR EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE TO THE WOMEN OF EASTERN VA. CONFERENCE:

At our last Missionary Conference held with Portsmouth Christian church Oct. 1919 we voted to have two specials for the year 1920. One was a Home Mission Special of $1,200 to help with the Washington, D. C. work; the other a Foreign Mission Special of $1,200 for the support of Rev. H. S. Smith, who is preparing to go out as a missionary.

Every Society was asked to double the amount of its special offerings for 1919 and this with a contribution from the East Va. churches having no organized societies would guarantee the amount.

The suggested quota for each church follows, and if your church hasn't already raised theirs, please plan for it before our Woman's Conference at Holland in October.

The great difference in amounts asked for, needs a word of explanation. Some societies were asked for a smaller amount because they had other special work already undertaken.

HAW RIVER

Our protracted meeting at Haw River began Sunday, August 22, and closed Sunday, August 29. Rev. Geo. D. Eastes was with us and did the preaching. His sermons were good and they were well received. Bro. Eastes is at home in evangelistic work for which he is well fitted.

The meeting was well attended and much interest was manifested. Believers were strengthened and souls were won to Christ.

There were thirty-four professions of faith. On Sunday, August 29, in a union decision day in which all the Sunday schools of Haw River co-operated, there were thirty professions.

The offering for Bro. Eastes was $147.80.

Haw River is an excellent church to serve. The membership is not large; but one rarely finds a more loyal and faithful band. Recent improvements to the church building, which improvements are not quite completed, amount to about $600.00.

This church should have full time preaching with a pastor located on the field.

P. H. FLEMING.

NOTES

Reports from Elon say that the opening was fine and that the new student body is representative in every way.

Rev. W. C. Hook changes his address from Harrisonburg, Virginia to Elon College, N. C. where he enters school to complete his college work.

In going to press with this issue we are aware that many articles and items should be included, but we are laboring under mechanical difficulties and hope to be "doing business as usual" by the next issue.

Four important Boards are meeting this week. The Board of Religious Education meets today (Tuesday), the Mission Board meets tomorrow, also the Special Board on the Location of a School in Georgia or Alabama. Friday of this week the Board of Publication will meet. The first named Board meets in Raleigh, N. C., the next two in Suffolk, Va., and the last named in Burlington, N. C.

CHRISTIAN SERVICE

(Christian Advocate)

The greatest need of the world today is Christian service. The most notable thing in the life of Christ when he was on earth was the service he performed. He went about doing good; serving persons of high and low degree; the rich and the poor; healing loathsome lepers by the wayside as cheerfully as he healed the servants of the Centurion; restoring those possessed and forgiving the abandoned woman as readily as the woman who touched the hem of his garment. What lessons he taught, what acts he performed, what words of encouragement he gave, reserving his stinging rebukes for the callous, hard-hearted, self righteous.

MARRIAGES

CARTER-CARR

At the Christian parsonage, Richmond, Va., on August 21, 1920, Mr. Gilbert Francis Carter and Miss Lois Ola Carr were united in matrimony by the writer.

The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. F. Carter and the bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John L. Carr, the former of whom is clerk of the Richmond church. We join with their host and friends in wishing the young couple much happiness.

W. T. WALTERS.

LANGSTON-RAWLES

A very pretty and impressive church wedding was solemnized in the Holland Christian church on Thursday night, September 2, 1920, at 7:30 o'clock. The contracting parties were Mr. Ernest Lee Rawles, formerly of Holland, Va., but now of Gates, N. C., and Miss Mary Aleph Langston of Holland, Va.

The groom is a promising young man of splendid attainments and is at present cashier of the bank at Gates, N. C. The bride, for the past two years, has been the book-keeper in the Bank of Holland and very creditably held that position.

The church was beautifully decorated with ivy, fern and potted plants, the color scheme being green and white.

The bride was dressed in a handsome suit of blue tricotine and a very becoming dovetine hat. She wore a large bouquet of bride's roses. The groom was neatly clad in a suit of dark navy blue.

Immediately after the ceremony the happy wedded couple left on a brief bridal tour to Richmond, Washington, and other points. A large concourse of friends witnessed the ceremony. Miss Lois Holland was maid of honor and Henry Rawles was best man. Little Eloise Holland was ring bearer, and Virginia Norfleet and Dorothy Daughtrey were flower girls.

The bride and groom were the recipients of many costly and handsome gifts. They enter upon their journey together through life with the best wishes of their many friends.

OBITUARIES

JONES

Mrs. Maud Taylor Jones, daughter of Brother and Sister Henry A. Taylor, was born October 15, 1884, near Semora, N. C., and died August 7, 1920, at the Salem, Virginia, sanatorium. She was thirty-five years, nine months and twenty-two days old. Early in life she professed faith in Christ and united with Lebanon Christian church. She was educated at Elon College, finishing her course with the class of 1905. She was a successful teacher for a number of years in the public schools. She was twice married. The first marriage was to John Moyan Smith, a traveling salesman, who died in March 1911. Two years ago she married Dr. J. R. Jones, of Roanoke, Va., who survives her, together with their little daughter about one year old. Besides these there is one daughter, Ruth Scott, by the first marriage, one sister, Larlie Mae Taylor, and her father.

The funeral was conducted by the writer at her church, on Tuesday, August 10, and the burial was in the church cemetery. Loved ones are grieved but find comfort in the hope of meeting her again. Her faith in God was strong, her life beautiful in faithful service to duty. The influence for good of such a life cannot die.

C. E. NEWMAN.

DERROW

Walter Emmanuel Derrow was born March 29, 1897, and died July 22, 1920, at the age of 23 years, 3 months, and 23 days. He is survived by his widow and three small children, and by his parents and several brothers and sisters. The untimely taking away of this young man was very sad. The end came suddenly and unexpectedly, reminding us all again of the Scripture that says, Be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh. Funeral services were held at Lacey Spring U. B. Church, July 25, and burial at Linville Creek cemetery. Services by the writer assisted by Rev. J. S. Roller of the Church of the Brethren.

- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

THE SUN'S INCREASED SUBSCRIPTION PRICE

The announcement on the front page of THE SUN for this issue needs no comment. Statements have been given from time to time that the present cost of THE SUN exceeds $3.00 per annual subscription. The Convention meets the deficit. The increase is a little less than one cent per week and will help the Convention to meet the burden. We feel confident that each subscriber will approve the increase and heartily respond to the new price.

EDITORIAL BRIEFS

(Being thoughts on the Christian Endeavor topic—"Our Church Privileges and Obligations"—for October 3)

There is something lofty about attending the house of worship. It may be made of the same material as any other house, but within its walls we have a feeling at heart that we get in no other place. There is an atmosphere of loveliness that cannot be found elsewhere. "How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of Hosts."—Psalms 84:1.

We believe there is a longing in the heart of every true man and woman to attend the services for our Master's work in the house of the Lord. The attendance may be neglected but deep down in the heart there is a feeling that the Lord's house should be respected. David said that his heart yearned for the courts of the Lord and that his flesh cried out for the living God. "My soul longeth, yea, even fainteth for the courts of the Lord: my heart and my flesh crieth out for the living God."—Psalms 84:2.

There is something about those who attend church services regularly that you cannot find about others. They have a feeling that no one else can share and enjoy. They literally love to dwell in the house of the Lord. David says, "Blessed are they that dwell in thy house: They shall be praising thee." Regular worship is but regular spiritual food and none of us can afford to miss worshipping somewhere each Sabbath.

There are no low places, no small positions, in connection with the courts of our God. In Psalms 84:10 David says, "I had rather be a doorkeeper in the house of my God than to dwell in the tents of the wicked." Every position is a place of service and, if rendered in His name, shall be accepted.

We are getting away from the old idea that the church is a place of duty only, and circumscribed in every direction by solemn obligations. The obligations may be solemn, but instead of being restrained by duties, we are given privileges to exercise and unlimited opportunities for service.

* * *

The prayer meeting is not so much of an iron-clad rule which we must observe as it is the privilege and opportunity that we have in meeting together in prayer for the church's good.

* * *

The supporting of the church, financially, is not an obligation so much as it is a great privilege that we have of rendering unto the Lord a part of our substance for the advancement of His Kingdom here on earth. Tithing is not a duty: it is a privilege. We should not tithe from the view point of Jewish rules, but because it is a privilege that we have of carrying out our Master's wishes.

The church is not a society whose rules are preambled by "cant's." The church is an institution of the "Who-soever" will. We do not believe in making the work of the church so loose that the sinner may get in without first being born again, but we believe that spiritual growth comes from exercise of the Christian life in a free will manner and not because of the "thou shalt not" obligation.

The church was founded for service. The church that does not serve is not a true church. Attending church and preaching are not sufficient within themselves—they are but a part of the program of the church. The real church serves the community in which it is located and not merely offers a few privileges to its members.

There should be no class distinction in the church life. Christ died that all might be saved. The church is not an organization for class distinction. One test of the Christian life is that we love the Brethren.

If we are believers in the church we should be members of the church. The church may not be as perfect as we would desire it to be, but it is a medium through which the spirit of the Master flows and certainly being a member of the church is not a hindrance but rather a help to exercise the Christian life. The late President Roosevelt said: "I advocate a man's joining in church work for the sake of showing his faith by his works."

* * *

The church is one of the greatest institutions of all ages. Christ said that the gates of hell should not prevail against it. The real church is more than human organization and carries forward a work more than human hands can exercise. First be a Christian, then join the church, use the church for Kingdom-service and in turn let the church use you for His glory.

PROHIBITION AND PROSPERITY

The Manufacturers Record, Baltimore, Md., is one of the able papers that comes to this office. The Record, while first in the field of promotion upon the business world, deals in sledge-hammer blows upon moral issues. It is possibly one of the greatest defenders of the cause of prohibition. The following is taken from a recent issue of this splendid publication and deals with prosperity and prohibition. It is well worth your pondering:

"Liquor interests are dying hard. Theirs they know is a losing fight. Every intelligent man, if he is honest with himself, knows that alcohol is an insidious poison which distorts reason, reduces efficiency and leads to utter destruction of body and soul. The testimony of science, medicine and business is not needed to prove it, though it is on record in abundance from the greatest scientists and physicians and business leaders of the world.

"The dire calamities, such as the destruction of business and fall in real estate values, predicted by the liquor advocates if prohibition went into effect have never materialized. Even their personal liberty, the pet phrase they like to roll under their tongue to frighten the ignorant, is inviolate, for they have liberty, but no license.

"Many times in arguments against prohibition you have heard the assertion that prohibition does not prohibit, and that the law does not stop people from drinking. Of course, prohibition and the law enforcing it do not keep some people from drinking intoxicating beverages, neither does prohibition of murder and capital punishment deter some men from killing their fellowmen, nor other prohibitions and laws made for the comfort and safety of humanity prohibit the breaking of those laws. But the most ardent anti-prohibitionist must admit that laws do wield a powerful control, for without some means of protecting society the vicious-minded would run amuck with impunity, robbing and slaying at will until some organized form of control could be established.

"Laws are made for the protection of the majority against the few who abuse their liberty and privilege, whether drug addicts, drunkards, thieves or murderers.

"A mechanic in discussing prohibition said he did not drink much before prohibition went into effect, but that since he has taken a drink whenever he could get a chance because prohibition was made a law without himself and the people having a chance to vote directly on the question. Of all the arguments in favor of the liquor traffic, that is the silliest and most childish, but it is probably heard as much as the one that prohibition does not prohibit. Not all men are so lacking in manhood and moral sense that they willfully break a law made legally for the protection of the public and for their own protection, when some one else is committing the offense against them while they are a part of the public. Then the shoe is on the other foot. This man deliberately condoned lawbreaking because he said he had not voted directly on the question. How many laws made for the protection of the public are voted by direct ballot of the individual? Direct votes are not cast for the punishment of murderers and robbers and other lawbreakers. Possibly you did not vote directly on the prohibition question, neither did you vote directly for the traffic laws against reckless and speeding automobilists, all of which were enacted to protect the people against the few who would be reckless automobile drivers and reckless indulgers in alcoholic drinks.

"Prohibition does not prohibit, say the liquor advocates, but if prohibition does not prohibit, what are the wets kicking about?"

EDITORIAL CHIPS

"The man who does not believe in foreign missions had better burn up his New Testament, for it is a record of foreign missions."

The Northwestern Christian Advocate thinks that the gala display of war trophies will add nothing to decreasing the spirit of war, and that the spirit of war may be kept alive while we satisfy the curiosity of the public.

Local churches should begin to look forward to making out their report to Conference. Some of the Conferences (the North Carolina at least) have set a definite date to close the records so that statistics may be uniform.

"An adult Bible class in a Disciples' Church in Auburn, Nebr., has ten teachers who work on an itinerating plan. The work is laid out in such a way as to give each teacher ten weeks to prepare his lesson. There is a healthy emulation among them. The plan seems to be working well."

Are you going to change pastors this year just to be changing, or to make a step toward progress?

LIGHTHOUSE OBSERVATIONS

J. E. MASSEY

FOREWORD

It is hoped that this page will point out as near as possible some of the pressing problems confronting the Church as a growing organization. Each year the world multiplies in the vastness and complexity of its problems. People, organized and unorganized as the case may be, need the ardent direction of the Church. Consequently the work of the Church is being brought to influence in a more direct way fields hitherto untouched. These lie beyond the physical enclosure and the toll of the sexton's bell. As the world grows and changes its time-worn policies, the Church should also grow and change to meet the world's need of Christianity.

A NEED OF DEPENDENCE

(Fred H. Rindge, Jr., in Christian Advocate)

What we need in America today is a real declaration of dependence, Capital, labor, and the public must realize how impossible it is for one to get along without the other. Our great industrial and social problems will never be solved by legislation alone. In the last analysis we are all forced to recognize the inter-dependence of people and act accordingly. This means, inevitably, the Golden Rule. It is time we stopped looking upon the old Golden Rule merely as a Sunday school preachment and value it as sound common sense and mighty good business. If capital, labor, and the public would treat each other in the way they would like to be treated themselves, more than half the problem would be solved.

The pathetic thing about it all is that these three great forces are not nearly so far apart as they think. When they are frank enough to acknowledge their dependence instead of their independence, they begin to see eye to eye. The points of agreement then seem larger and more vital than the points of disagreement. Distance increases misunderstanding. The "get together" spirit forces understanding.

During the war this spirit of dependence in industry was greater than it is now. Capital and Labor were fighting together against a common foe. If the common foe is all that is necessary to keep them together the "Gentleman" is still with us in the person of Bolshevism and the foe is growing very rapidly. It is the radicalism in the ranks of Labor which is Labor's own worst enemy. The same is true of Capital. There is every reason, therefore, for the best elements of Capital and Labor to get together. They must declare anew their dependence and this will benefit them fully as much as the public.

GOD'S ATMOSPHERE

God's atmosphere is not to be depicted as that in which a man always carries a great pack of burdens upon his back to be spurned and cheated by the unbelieving world, nor is it to be a pious dwelling of saintly monastic seclusion.

Here is the way Rufus M. Jones, of Haverford, Pa., writing to the Homiletic Review, describes it: "One who has never enjoyed the thrill of swimming has no adequate conception of what it means to be immersed in the cool water and buoyed up by its liquid mass. The unpracticed spectator watching the operation thinks of water as something in which you sink if you happen to fall into it. The swimmer, on the contrary, wonders how anybody ever sinks. Water seems to him made to swim in. It feels to him like a life-giving, life-renewing substance in which he finds himself at his physical best. Somewhat so God seems to bathe and refresh the spirits of one who is bold enough to leave the material shore behind and to plunge his deeps where real life begins. No wonder birds sing, 'In profuse strains of unpremeditated art!' They have found their true element. They find the air not only buoyant but invigorating. It raises life for them to its real glory. In God men find, too, their true element and atmosphere. All tired with the heavy efforts of being good suddenly the surge of a new force of life animates the soul, the labor ceases and the refreshed self feels carried on as though by invisible things."

REUNION OF CHURCHES

(Methodist Review)

Everywhere the question of the reunion of churches is in the air. In all Christendom there can not be a church or sect that has not been disturbed by it. In the case of some denominations it may be that the thought of reunion hardly extends beyond the members of a deserted family group. So we have earnest discussions of the problems of Methodist, or Presbyterian or Lutheran Reunion. These various bodies are seeking to heal what they would call their family differences. But it is generally acknowledged that this is for them only "the next thing," not the ultimate goal. Multitudes of Christians are very clear in their convictions that all divisions in the Church are family divisions and that all must be healed.

PROHIBITION IN ENGLAND

Lady Astor, Britain's woman M. P., is a dry, and she predicts eventual prohibition in England. When asked if she thought England would have prohibition soon, her reply was: "The country is not yet ready for it, and if we force prohibition on the people before they are ready there will develop a reaction that would be disastrous. But we have made prohibition a vital thing in the House of Commons. There is a real feeling there."

Much of that spirit in favor of prohibition in the great law-making body of England has been caused by Lady Astor's own influence and appeal; and with the growing influence of such many women of state it may not be long before the whole of Britain will denounce John Barleycorn.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

AN APPRECIATION

On Wednesday, September 8, 1920, I attended the funeral of Mrs. J. D. Gunter, Sr., at Sanford, N. C. There was a large number of friends at the funeral of this dear sister and many tears of sympathy were shed with the dear family. How I sympathized with the dear father and the children. What a power this dear sister was in her home, church and town! How she will be missed.

The funeral services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. T. E. White, and the burial was at Shallow Well Christian church, three miles from Sanford. I have never seen a prettier display of flowers than were placed on the grave of Sister Gunter, by the great number of friends who had gathered to pay the last tribute of respect to one whom they loved.

I preached at Shallow Well church for six years, over sixty years ago but the people who used to attend services are not there now. I saw a few of their children, grandchildren and great grandchildren. I was so glad to shake their hands for the sake of their parents. While I was pastor here a large number of the members at Buffalo Presbyterian church were nearly as prompt to attend my ministry as my own members and so I was just as glad to shake their hands and the hands of their children and grandchildren as the members of Shallow Well.

What a change has been made in the country around Sanford! There were no railroads nor towns when I was there. Now a nice little county has been formed in which all the modern improvements may be found. Sanford has a population of about three thousand and is three miles north of Jonesboro a town of over a thousand people. Both towns have their churches, stores, factories, etc., and railroads leading in different directions, all of which indicate prosperity.

While at Sanford, I visited the family of Rev. J. D. Wicker. I used to visit this family when the children were small. Now they have all grown up and married, the oldest one being Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D. I found the two dear old people with a married daughter, living with them. Sister Wicker is afflicted with paralysis and rheumatism and cannot turn herself in bed. She has been lying on her back for about five years, not being able to turn over or walk a step. She seems to be in perfect health; her complexion is clear; her eyesight very good—can read fine print without glasses; her memory is good and her mind active. While her husband is sleeping on another bed in the room, he cannot turn over or groan without her hearing him. What a lesson I learned from her, of patience, contentedness and humility. May God's blessing continue to be sent upon these two old people.

J. W. WELLONS

PLEASANT HILL

We began a protracted meeting at Pleasant Hill on the first Sunday in September. Rev. H. Jennings Fleming, of Kittery Point, Maine, was with us and preached to good acceptance. His sermons were well prepared and well delivered. He is an interesting speaker. His utterances are often very striking and somewhat epigrammatic. He occasionally deals in terse contrasts that present the truth under consideration in such a way that it almost startles.

Special features of the meeting were the large crowd on Sunday, approaching, so I am told as the old camp meeting days of long ago; the good attendance during the week; the testimonies in the morning prayer meetings; the deepening of the spiritual life; and the souls won to Christ.

Pleasant Hill is one of our old church organizations. It is not far from its one hundredth anniversary. The church is situated in a good community and it is an excellent people to serve.

I desire to thank members of the church who have shown me kindness in special ways during the year.

P. H. FLEMING.

THAT "PROGRAM OF SERVICE"

On page 45 of the Southern Christian Convention proceedings for 1920, we find the heart of the report of our Board of Religious Education, under the paragraph "Program of Service," which was outlined by said Board after much careful study and planning. It is concerning this report, or a portion of it, that this article is written for our Church paper.

This program carries the following items: 1. Organization and Maintenance of Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and Mission Schools within the bounds of the Conference. 2. Training of teachers and C. E. leaders. 3. Equipments for buildings sufficient for the work. 4. Enlistment of the Christian home in this work. 5. Holding Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, Institutes, week day and Vacation Schools for religious training. 6. The enlistment of Life-work Recruits. 7. A program of evangelism. 8. Building and equipment. 9. Cultivation of Missionary Instruction. 10. Study classes.

That the Board was looking far ahead, no one will deny, and the program outlined will do the work, if carried out by every church where such is at all possible. But in most cases if such is possible, it will be made possible by someone in each church getting behind the matter and pushing it to the front. As most of the delegates know, the report was adopted on the Convention floor without even an explanation of any part of it aside from reading it, and it is very doubtful if our churches know anything of it. Note that the same report carried provisions for a full time field man as soon as he can be placed in the field.

But the thing I started out to write about is item 5. of this suggested program. It carries a plea for Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, Week day, and Vacation Schools for training teachers and leaders. That is the

One Thing, our work in the South needs most. I am fairly well acquainted with the situation in other Churches as well as ours, and I know of no Church that has an adequate number of teachers and leaders. It is time our Churches and schools were becoming alarmed over the matter and pushing forward a program of some kind that will train some leaders. The situation in every Church is serious, and very few of our young people taking any course whatever aside from the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor lessons.

A great step in this direction is the work of the Seaside Chautauqua and the Elon Summer School. These have, and will do a great work along this line, but they can never reach more than one-fourth of our church pastors, and leaders. What are we to do with the three-fourths, plus the great mass of the young folk who will never be able to attend a session of either institute? Are we to completely ignore their needs as we have done in the past, or put this program in operation and with it, reach every section of our Church forces? It can be done, and ought to be in operation by March 1, 1921, so that every church could have advantage of these institute programs.

But how shall we go about it? It is easy after the Field Secretary goes on the field to direct it, if those of us who live in strategic points will back him. Suppose for an example we take the following churches: Greensboro, Burlington, Raleigh, Suffolk, Norfolk, Dover-Winchester, Harrisonburg, Lagrange, Columbus, Richland, Roanoke and Wadley. Each of these churches is strategically located in its conference, and furnishes fine locations for these one week institutes. With the young people in these churches and those in near-by fields, fine institutes could be held and no creditable estimate could be laid on the real good done.

I know you are asking, Where is your faculty to come from? I think I can answer that. If an institute is to be held in my church (and with God's help there shall) I should want the Field man to have the general oversight of the whole work, and the pastors and leading workers of every church enroll for his helpers. I should get the very best faculty possible from the workers in those churches, and my friends in the church communities who would assist in the work. I believe we have got to use what we have, and let them develop with the work. Shamgar, had nothing with which to fight but an Ox Goad, but God said go to the battle field, he went, used what he had, and came out a great hero.

As I write these lines I am thinking of the Board of Religious Education which is now in session at Raleigh. In my little family circle, we are praying for that Board, hoping that steps will be taken to place a man in the field, and that this great program of work will soon be in operation, so that in the coming years we shall not have to look back on our work with regret and shame, and grieve over the wonderful opportunities we lost. As I see it, much depends upon the action of this Board, and the follow up work. We are well aware that God is able to call men into his Kingdom, but I find nowhere in my Bible where he has promised to call, qualify and equip these workers without the aid of his Church in the world.

Viewing the work as we do, we believe it is not a responsibility of this Board alone, but the responsibility of every pastor and church in the Convention to get behind the work and make it go. I know the needs of this work, having served on this Board one year, and I am at least dreaming of its great opportunities and its future when we pastors and church forces get behind it and give it our support. These institutes are in need, and in great demand everywhere, and what the writer hopes to do is to cause some one to think of the need in his own field, put the program on, and try it out. Then give us the benefit of your experience.

J. VINCENT KNIGHT

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH IN GEORGIA AND ALABAMA

The recent session of the Southern Christian Convention which was held in Raleigh, North Carolina, April 27-30, 1920, authorized the establishment of an educational institution in the bounds of the Georgia and Alabama and the Alabama Conferences for the training of our young people in that section of the Church. The Convention also elected a Board of Trustees and a committee on site, charter and grade as related to the proposed school.

The committee, which is composed of three members, viz. W. A. Harper, L. E. Smith and G. O. Lankford, met in the initial session in Suffolk, Va., September 14, 1920, for the purpose of deciding upon a plan of procedure, looking toward the successful carrying out of the Convention's desires and instructions in this matter.

As a result of this meeting, the Committee is now ready to open negotiations with any community that desires to have this school located in its midst. It will be necessary, therefore, for each community desiring the school to call its citizens together at an early date, and the sooner this can be done the better it will be, and decide definitely what it has to offer the Committee in the way of site, buildings and equipment, or funds for these purposes.

After a reasonable length of time has been given for such communities as would like to offer a site to take action, thus determining what their offers shall be, and after these bids are in our hands, the Committee will then arrange to visit the communities from which invitations have been received, and will go over the matter with them, before any decision as to a location is reached.

The Committee reserves the right, however, to determine upon a location entirely upon the merits of the community in which no Christian church is located should offer a better proposition than any others received, the Committee would feel impelled to accept the latter, although such action would in no sense dissociate the institution from the Christian Church. Wherever, the school is located it is to be strictly our school.

All who are interested in making the Committee an offer should address your communication to the undersigned.

G. O. LANKFORD,
Chairman of Location Committee
Berkley, Va., R. 3.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

THE EDUCATION FOR THE MINISTER TODAY

By Ellis B. Barnes in The Christian-Evangelist

Let us assume that the minister has been graduated from one of our standardized colleges and is ready for his first charge; that he has been a faithful student, and has been nourished by the finest ideals of the ministry. Let us also assume that he has been taught how to study, how to meet the problems of the age without fear, how to cultivate the open mind, and to welcome new truth from what ever source it comes. To such a man the college is never a finality, but always a door that swings open wide upon the boundless. A great book may do the same thing. Education is a breaker of bonds and a lifter of horizons.

Knowledge of the Scriptures

The minister's education, today, must concern itself with a thorough knowledge of the Scriptures in the college and to the end of his days. To the minister it is the central sun around which other planets may revolve. In all the minister's learning the Bible must be the brightest star that shines. He must know the one Book better than all others. It must be the sea into which all rivers pour their floods. The preacher must find therein his source of inspiration, his comfort, his devotion, his sword when one is needed the light that shines for all the darkness of dreary days.

The talented layman may find an excuse for his blundering knowledge of the Scriptures in the fact that he is a layman; not so with the minister. Ignorance would be fatal to him. It is true that a knowledge of the Bible, word for word, will not necessarily make him an expositor to be sought after, but he can never be an expositor without a painstaking study of the Word. To know its spirit he must know the letter; knowing the letter he will appreciate the spirit more. While I have little respect for authority or tradition, since either may easily be exalted to the place of the most cast-iron creed, unless they command themselves to the conscience, it must be remembered that our fathers made themselves authoritative to thousands because of their knowledge of the Holy Writ. The study and divisions of the Word, the difference between the Old Testament and the New are among the best contributions that the Restoration Movement has yet given to our American Christianity. To us, Disciples, has been bequeathed a holy zeal for the systematic and scholarly study of the Word of God. Mr. Campbell, like Wycliffe and Luther gave to us a translator of the Living Oracles, free enough to be almost a commentary. The historic reformations have been founded upon the Scriptures. It is the noblest form of Protestantism that every man is encouraged to read the Word of God and to be his own authority and interpreter.

Conception of Fundamentals

Broad conceptions of the fundamentals of the faith will make any preacher worth hearing, and any congregation a strong brotherhood. Ministerial education should rest upon secure foundations. The student in the college should be encouraged to meditate upon the Word day and night, and the habit should be followed throughout his life. The greatest preachers have been the greatest expositors of the Bible; the greatest congregations have grown under its teaching. The Bible has been a pioneer and a builder of institutions, a revolutionizer and a stabilizer in one; a destroyer of old civilizations and a creator of new. It is the Book that threads its way among the multitudinous activities of men in ways unnumbered. It is the one continent that no seas can dissolve. The college that trains young men in a wise use of the Scriptures will never want for fame among the churches of the land. The preacher who builds his ministry upon the Bible will leave to the world a treasure that even the greatest might envy.

Educated for the Whole Task

The education of the minister today must concern itself with the Social message. The gospel for the individual will always have its place, but, within recent years, a new world has swung within our ken, and to that new world the Church must turn to do its part. The minister must realize that the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof, and that nothing human can lie beyond the reach of the minister's interest. The ship must be saved as well as the sailor. Men must be saved for earth as well as for heaven. Righteousness and peace must be made the heritage of the many.

It must no longer be charged upon the ministers and the Church that they can influence the religious life of the individual but not of the town or the city. It is easy even at this hour for many ministers to allow the policemen and the city fathers to run the community. The day is upon the Church, even in the small towns, to withdraw from its Sunday aloofness and to plant itself squarely in the market place with its message that it may be seen and heard by men. The light of the educated minister must shine into the dark places of business, into the halls of legislature, into the dens where human beings congregate because of a hereditary twist in the brain, or because of the robbers who, in one way or another, left them for dead upon the highway, and no Good Samaritan hove in sight to help, into stores and mills where the underfed and the underpaid are beating themselves to death upon the remorseless necessities of the hour—wherever, in a word, the odds of battle are going against the unfit.

And this is no easy task for the minister. He will be met by pious poohpoohs, by the indifferent, by the people themselves who need help the most, yet who would be content to wallow in their misery until death stepped in to take pity. The preacher who lives in the terrible furnace of the city knows what these conditions are, how inadequate the Church and ministry find themselves to meet these, and how the necessities are driving the conscientious minister to his wit's end to face problems for which there seems no solution.

Ministerial education today must concern itself with a study of these conditions, a manner of approach that will commend itself to those whom we seek, and an expenditure of money to do this kind of work on larger scale than consecrated money has yet been spent in the history of Christianity. Men must be trained to keep their fellows from lashing themselves to the anchor and going down with the ship.

Must be Trained to Preach

The minister must be trained to preach. Please excuse that absurd and trite statement which is equivalent to saying that the carpenter must know how to drive a nail. But, as with our neglect of Bible study, so with preaching; a multitude of details have arisen in our Church life which make preaching a side issue. Nothing is more frequent in the conversation of ministers today than the remark that "So and So is this, that and the other, but he can't preach."

Preaching tends to find its place, not in the burning splendors of the minister's life, but among the lost arts. So burdened is the preacher with organizations that he must be an organizer first and a preacher afterward. He must be a wheel within the whirling machinery or be thrust out. Congregations are always exacting, and unless everything is done as if there were all eternity to devote to one thing, the rumblings of dissatisfaction are heard. The rank and file want ministers who can preach, but few consider that preaching worthy of the name requires time. As has been rightly observed, "The ambassador of heaven must spend his days in answering the telephone." No wonder that the charge has been made against us that preaching is futile. When all is said and done, according to present day tendencies, how could it be otherwise. What sermons we have are manieured until they have become sermonettes—"grand evening song service with a fifteen minute sermon." shows the trend of the hour. Let us all fervently pray, from plagues, famine, and pestilence, and the sermonette, good Lord deliver us.

When one hears men like Dr. Cadman, Dr. Jowett, Dr. Jefferson, Dr. G. Campbell Morgan and men of their class, he begins to understand why Christ chose to save the world by preaching. To the Greeks it seems foolish, and, no doubt, it was at times just as it is now, but to those who were saved it was the power of God. Of course, not all men can preach like those just named, but it ought to be evident to us all that a revival of heart-searching preaching should be ushered in, when so many influences are at work to turn the preacher from a prophet into a man of innumerable details.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

TWO GOALS TO REACH—CAN WE DO IT?

We have set for our goal by the first day of November the sum of $20 000. Then for the months of November and December we want to raise $10,000, and make the grand total for the year $30,000.

To reach the first goal we will have to raise $1,501.00 and we have just four weeks to get it reported by the first day of November, as the last report for October, which will appear in THE SUN October the 27. will be made on October 20. You see our reports are dated just a week in advance in order to have our book record to correspond with the issues of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. To reach this goal all money will have to be in the office on or before October 20. Now, let us see if we cannot reach this goal. I want to insist that all Sunday schools that have not made monthly contributions this year make a special offering and see if they cannot raise enough to at least make the average $1.00 per month for the past nine months. In other words to raise nine dollars will give you a credit for $1.00 each month this year and if you want me to, I will so credit it on the record book and have each month with a credit for you. To raise this amount will be easy for each school and I do not believe we have a church in all the Southern Christian Convention that cannot raise it. I have that much faith in our churches.

Let all the Sunday schools that are behind with their monthly offerings mail them in. WE WANT TO REACH THIS GOAL.

If we reach this goal of $20,000 by November 1, then we will all be enthused to reach the other goal of $10,000 by the last of December and make the grand total for the year $30,000, and break the record. How many want to help do this thing and be happy?

We laid the first brick for the Children's Home this week.

Rejoice with us. We are doing this in faith and fully believe that God will put it in the hearts of our people to contribute enough money to build this Home and pay for it. Have you heard the cry of the orphan child? If you have, did you contribute anything to help relieve its sad condition? This is a golden opportunity you have to help. Invest in this home and when it is finished and filled with little boys and girls visit us and look at them and if you regret one penny you have contributed I will return your money out of my own pocket. Will you accept this challenge?

JUSTICE FOR LITTLE PEOPLE

I should like to call the attention of parents to the fact that their children who are between four and six years of age are all entitled to the advantages and happy experiences of a kindergarten training of which nearly 4,000,000 of them are now being deprived.

In communities where kindergartens are not a part of the public school system, I strongly advise parents to take up with the local educational authorities the matter of having them established.

Much can be accomplished through united efforts to secure justice for our little ones and at the same time extend an agency which will add to the sum of human happiness, reduce crime, poverty, and misery, and enhance the general wellbeing of our people.

ATTENTION, PASTORS

We note the following recommendation in the report of the Mission Board, Col. J. E. West, Chairman, to the Southern Christian Convention, in recent session: "That inasmuch as our Women's Missionary Societies have proven such blessings to the churches in which they have been organized, that we urge all our pastors to seek the co-operation of the Woman's Board and the Mission Secretary to organize a Woman's and a Young People's Society in each church." We hope that each pastor having churches without missionary organizations will put forth an honest effort to carry into effect this recommendation. The pastor is the key to the situation and no other one can have so much influence in the matter. He knows just who would make good leaders, and who are fitted for the various offices. We are looking to you, brother pastor, to assist in getting the work started in the churches of your charge.

Mrs. Martin, wife of our Brother Martin, missionary to Porto Rico, has been compelled to return to the States on account of her health. The climate proved very trying for her and she has been in declining health almost ever since her arrival on the island. This is a very deplorable state of affairs. The prayers of the people are asked in her behalf. Let us remember our sister daily at the Throne of Mercy.

MRS. HARRELL.

TO THE W. M. SOCIETIES OF E. VA. CONFERENCE

As your president, I am writing to urge you to raise the amounts asked for by the Woman's Board for the Home and Foreign Mission Specials, which are $1,200 for the Washington, D. C., work, and $1,200 for our Foreign Missionary elect, Mr. H. S. Smith. Each Society that contributed for the latter last year is asked to do the same this year and the same amount for the Washington, D. C., work. That is, if you contributed $25 for the Foreign Special last year, do the same, and raise $25.00 additional for the Home Special. This is the last month of our Conference year, and we must be very active during these remaining days if we are to meet our goals. We want every point reached when we meet in our Annual Conference in Holland, Thursday, October the 28th.

MRS. C. H. ROWLAND.

KITCHEN SUGGESTIONS

Spanish Stew.—To make an economical and delicious stew try this idea: Cook half a cupful of rice in boiling salted water ten minutes; add one quart of tomatoes and cook until rice is tender. While this cooks put in 3 tablespoonfuls of fat, fry a quarter pound of very thin beef, one large onion and one green pepper, cut up; add these and one teaspoonful or more of salt and one tablespoonful of minced parsley to the tomatoe; stew all together for fifteen or twenty minutes. Serve very hot in a covered dish. This is substantial and good for luncheon.

Griddled Eggs.—Heat the griddle almost as much as for baking cakes; butter it lightly and range small buttered muffin rings on it. Drop an egg in each and turn as soon as lightly browned. They resemble fried eggs, but are far more delicate.

A delicious Turkish dish can be made from left-over roast beef, tomato sauce and rice. Chop the beef and heat together with the rice and tomato in a saucepan, season with pepper and a dash of curry.

CORRESPONDENCE

A CORRECTION

Dear Brother Riddle:

I am writing to correct the statement made on the editorial page of THE CHRISTIAN SUN and also in Brother H. F. Huffines' letter, in the issue of September 15.

The statement made is a gross injustice to the Presbyterian Church and myself, and I very much dislike to be quoted in arguments for men to carry their points; and especially when it puts me in bad light with the hundreds of my best friends in the Presbyterian Church.

In regard to the statement in your editorial and Brother Huffines' letter I have this to say: I have nowhere, at any time or place, received any such statements from anyone, nor made any such statement, either in public or print. Such a statement is absolutely incorrect and puts me in bad light with my friends in our own Church as well as of the Presbyterian Church.

What I did say was quoted from Billy Sunday's lecture on "Safety First," delivered at Winona Lake, Ind. August 12, 1920. He stated that the whole Presbyterian Church all over the world had lost 875,000 members in the last two decades, caused by the fact that the Church had not made ample preparations to take care of its young people and had forced its young men to other work because of low salaries, etc.

Please give this letter to the public as I do not care to be placed in such light before any people; neither do I like to have such statements referred to other people for correction without my knowledge that such statements are being made.

Fraternally,
J. VINCENT KNIGHT

DOES DEVELOPING THE FINANCIAL SIDE OF THE CHURCH DECREASE MEMBERSHIP?

Dear Brother Riddle:

Our Mr. Clarke of the Department of Publicity has shown me some correspondence that he has had with you and Dr. Hubbert of our General Assembly with reference to the report that the Presbyterians had lost since their money drive 875,000 from their membership or active service. Mr. Clarke has answered quite authoritatively and accurately and I am only writing to confirm what he has said and to add the following considerations:

We have scrupulously maintained that our New Era Movement was not a financial drive. It had its financial elements but it had at the heart of it a great missionary and spiritual appeal. I am sending you a package of our pamphlets and if you have time even to glance through them, I am sure you will see how truly we have tried to maintain our Movement as a great spiritual force.

As a result of our first year's effort, which was handicapped by much opposition due largely to misunderstanding, we were able to report that the toboggan slide upon which our Church had apparently entered in the matter of its accessions and upon profession of faith, was abruptly stopped and that we gained more in the first year of the New Era Movement than we lost in the preceding three years. The accurate figures are for the year ending March 31, 1915, we added upon examination 116,064

1917	96,792
1918	88,521
1919	62,014
1820	our first New Era year.....	99,722

We received upon certificate in that year (1920) 73,779, which was 10,000 more than the average during the preceding five years. Our dismissals were slightly higher and we placed upon the reserve roll possibly 5,000 more than the average during the preceding years. Our net membership has shown a gain of 34,072, now being officially 1,637,105. In addition to these tabulations, we have records of more family alters established, more churches organized to do personal work, more church debts paid, more ministers' salaries raised, and the total contributions as reported in the Minutes of the General Assembly for all purposes, including benevolences, amounted to $43,071,072, as against $32,804,708 the year before. Our congregational expenditures which include pastor's salaries the building of churches and usual running expenses, were nearly five million more than during the preceding year, and the Boards and Agencies of our Church, this last year, received almost three million more than they received during any previous year. As a matter of fact, the level of our benevolent giving was lifted more during the last year, by a million, than it was lifted during the last ten years.

The New Era Movement is a great spiritual uprising in the Presbyterian Church taking its largest effect on our medium sized churches. We have submitted to necessary reorganization, trying to profit by the mistakes we have made in some of our methods which were too hasty and yet which were honestly enough made, and with a reduced budget and a reduced official force, we are going forward whole heartedly into the next year of our enterprise, knowing that it is of God.

With fraternal regards,

Faithfully yours,
WILLIAM HIRAM FOULKES

General Secretary of The New Era Movement of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S.

Dear Brother Editor:-

The able articles of Bro. L. C. Huffines have been read with interest and profit. Bro. Huffines has set forth very clearly his convictions on ministers and money. Now may I request through the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN that he give us his beliefs and convictions concerning The Church member and Tithing, setting forth his interpretation of the Scriptures on this subject and the extent to which it applies to church members.

A Reader of THE SUN

NOTES

Rev. B. J. Howard has accepted a call to the Chapel Hill church for the coming Conference year.

If you feel that THE SUN is worth $2.50 a year, renew now at that price and do not wait until October 1. Look at your label and see how you stand.

If you are going to have a new pastor this year, don't forget that his moving expenses may be rather heavy. The church will be benefitted by meeting this item and the pastor will also be helped. Don't overlook the moving item.

Statistics show that America has developed a "sweet tooth" and that we are using a greater amount of sugar than is best for us. This is evident when we read the following: The consumption of sugar per capita for the years 1918-19 was equal to 82 pounds. From July 1919 to July 1920 the average was 90.6 per capita.

Dr. P. H. Fleming, though a busy pastor and Welfare Worker has found time during the year to take a course in Bible under the direction of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, receiving therefrom a certificate of high merit for efficient work done. The course comprised both the Old and New Testament studies. On two out of five examinations given, Dr. Fleming received a grade of 100.

The Board of Publication in session September 17, 1920, voted unanimously to increase the price of The Christian Sun from $2.00 to $2.50 the year, the same to become effective October 1, 1920. Renewals and new subscriptions will be received until noon, Friday, October 1, at the old rate of $2.00 the year.

There are a number of subscribers of THE SUN who are behind with their accounts. It would be appreciated very much if they will be kind enough to renew at once. Remember that the price goes to $2.50 October 1.—and that is only a few days off.

While we are calling attention to the matter of increase in the subscription price of THE SUN we also desire to remind friends that we are very much in need of their renewals. Renew today. If you desire to make your check for $2.50 and send it before October 1, it will be all right, provided that it is your wish. The new price does not go into effect until October 1.

The formation of a world student anti-alcohol organization is the probable result of the recent international student anti-alcohol conference held at Karlstad, Sweden. Delegates were present from abstinent, temperance, or prohibition student organizations of Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Finland, Germany, Switzerland, Esthonia, and the United States. The American representative was Harry S. Warner, Educational Secretary of the Inter-collegiate Prohibition Association.

Of course you will not stop THE SUN because it has advanced only 50 cents the year. Are you within 50 cents of the loyalty limit of your Church paper? Certainly not. Write us to let THE SUN continue to shine in your home.

In the recent Georgia primaries the nomination for United States Senator came as a shock to many Americans as well as a disappointment. The person nominated by the Democrats for this place was Thomas E. Watson. Mr. Watson was not only disloyal to his country during the World War, which brought serious charges upon himself, but he has never proved himself a Democrat.

On last Thursday, September 16, a great explosion occurred on Wall St. in New York City, near the site where stands the J. P. Morgan and Company banking house. The explosion resulted in the death of 34 persons and several hundred injured. It is a great question as to whether the wreckage was caused by carelessness on the part of persons in transferring explosive material, or whether it was a part of a plot. The latest news received after much investigation by department of justice agents and police, is that no definite clue has been discovered, but that several suspected persons have been arrested.

A SUGGESTION ONLY

We note that the Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention published its minutes, and that now the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina Conference is publishing a separate booklet with its minutes. Why not combine the minutes of the sub-organizations of our Conferences? It seems to us that it would unify matters, save money, and dignify the work more. A suggestion only.

A REASONABLE ADVANCE

The advance of THE CHRISTIAN SUN from $2.00 to $2.50 per year, is we think, a very reasonable one. We hear it practically every day that things have more than doubled in price. A great many articles are selling for three times more than they were a year or so ago. For a number of years THE CHRISTIAN SUN was $1.50 per year. The advance to $2.00 was made on June 1, 1917, and on October 1, of this year, the price will go to $2.50 a year—an advance of only $1.00 since June 1, 1917. One year ago the paper on which THE SUN is printed was costing a fraction over eight cents per pound; it is now costing nineteen cents per pound, which is more than doubled. The subscription price of THE SUN is yet not doubled. Composition, press work, binding, engraving, and in fact all items that go to make up the paper, have advanced several hundred per cent during the last year.

THE STORY OF "TRAMP"

He was just a stray dog when he came one night to the house of some kind people who took him in. Later they had to move away, but they got him a home with his present owners. He had been called "Tramp," which is not a very good name for a dog who has a home. He is of no particular breed, a little bulldog, a little of everything else; in fact, he is just plain dog, but everyone who loves dogs know that it isn't the breed, but the dog that counts.

From the very first he liked to be close by the baby and would sit for hours beside the cradle where she slept, and when she was taken out for a ride, Tramp walked sedately beside the carriage.

One morning both master and mistress went away to do some errands, leaving the baby asleep in its bed, the two older children playing nearby, and, of course, Tramp on guard as usual. Suddenly the two older children, both under seven, saw flames at the head of the stairs, and in another moment the whole upper floor was on fire. They scrambled and ran out of the house, and the neighbors, hearing their cries, came running into the yard. They reached there just in time to see Tramp dragging the baby by its clothing. He came out the back door, then crossed the yard and dropped the child into a snowbank. Brave little dog, his first thought had not been for himself, but for the baby.

JIMMIE'S FIRST MONEY

Jimmie Kay had acted as clerk in a shop for one week, and received five shillings for his pay—the first money he had ever worked for. These shillings made Jimmie a very happy lad, and he wanted to do the best he could with them. So, like a good son, he asked his mother about it.

"Mother, how much do you think I ought to give the missionary collection today?"

"Well, Jimmie, I think your father's rule of giving one tenth a very good one for you to follow. You know we are told to cast our bread upon the waters, and it will return after many days."

Jimmie had a twinkle in his eye as he said:

"Well, mother, I've seen a good deal of casting down, and now I'm waiting to see some of it come back again."

This made his mother feel anxious, fearing that Jimmie, after all, might not want to give any of his money. Then she spoke of the widow's two mites—That she was not content to give a portion of her money, but had given all she had to give—even "all her living."

As they walked home from church, Jimmie said: "Well, mother, how much do you suppose I gave this morning?"

"Why, sixpence," said his mother.

"More than that," said Jimmie.

So his mother went on guessing, adding a little each guess, till she reached one shilling and six pence, when she stopped, saying he must tell her.

"Well, then, mother, I did as the widow did. I cast in all that I had—I gave the five shillings."

You may be sure his mother was very glad and happy indeed to find him so willing to consecrate the "first fruits" of his labor to the service of the Lord, who loveth the cheerful giver.—Selected.

MY SWEETHEART

(A. D. Burkett)

There's a lovely little lassie
Comes to see me every day;
And her heart is oh, so happy—
Sets me singing on my way.

She has hair just touched with sunshine,
And her eyes are lovely blue;
And her hands are full of blessings—
Every day its something new.

And she always comes with laughter
Or a little lilt of song
That just keeps a fellow humming
Or a-whistling all day long.

She is pure and sweet—an angel!
And she's everybody's friend;
But she's given me her promise:
"All through life—unto the end."

Want to know this little lassie?
Really like to know her name?
Well, it's Hope, and she's my sweetheart—
But she'll be to you the same.

THE CATBIRD

The catbird is one of the most fascinating of our feathered singers. Delightful to look upon in its coat of dark gray, it decorates the orchard or grove where, in the heart of the foliage, it thrills its song. It does not seek publicity. The thrush is usually visible as he sings, perched on the extreme top of some exposed limb of a forest tree. Not so the catbird. We connect the song of the catbird in our memory with the dripping of jeweled rain following a summer shower. Then it is his music, bursting from the midst of the apple tree, sounds with richest effect. There is a brilliancy, a scintillation, an abandon about his music that, to our notion, surpasses the more subdued theme of the thrush and quite equals the mocking bird. But he is stamped with a prosaic, almost repulsive name, and that because once or twice in a long time he slurs his song and falls into a peculiar cat call, a whining cry meant, doubtless, for no one's ear but his mate's. Because of that slight and rare slip he bears his unpoetic name. It is hardly fair to so accomplished a musician so delightfully disposed a bird, to deprive it of a name commensurate in beauty with its song.

But it is the old story too often brought to our attention. A fault set amid virtues is revealed far more pronouncedly than a virtue set among faults. The world is only too ready to seize upon the flaw and stamp its authority therewith. A whole month of right living cannot cover up an hour of retrogression. One harsh word, one querulous note, will be remembered above the volume of pleasantries. Human estimates are not arrived at by cancellation. A single act of indiscretion may mark one for life. It is unfortunate, almost cruel, but such is the fact that all must face.—North-western Christian Advocate.

ASPIRATION

I count this thing to be grandly true:
That a noble deed is a step toward God,
Lifting the soul from the common clod,
To a purer air and a broader view.

We rise by the things that are under feet;
By what we have mastered of good and gain;
By the pride desposed and the passion slain,
And the vanquished ills that we hourly meet.

We hope, we aspire, we resolve, we trust,
When the morning calls us to life and light,
But our hearts grow weary, and ere the night
Our lives are trailing the sordid dust.

We hope, we resolve, we aspire, we pray;
And we think that we mount the air on wings
Beyond the recall of sensual things,
While our feet still cling to the heavy clay.

Wings for the angels, but feet for the man!
We may borrow the wings to find the way—
We may hope and resolve and aspire and pray;
But our feet must rise, or we fall again.

Heaven is not reached at a single bound;
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we mount to its summit round by round.

DEVOTIONAL

JESUS' FRIENDS

"Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." Judged by this standard which Jesus has given, would those with whom you and I are coming in contact always think of us as the friends of Jesus? Jesus' "whatsoever" is a very large word. It is so large that it means seeking the kingdom of God and His righteousness, before everything else. It means willing to do His will in everything, every day of our lives.

It is useless to profess love for Christ while we continue to walk in the ways of the world. Jesus is grieved when His followers deliberately turn aside to indulge in some worldly pleasure, or gratify some selfish desire. We do not wilfully grieve our friends if our friendship is true, but we thoughtfully seek to please them. We study how we may bring joy and gladness into their lives, instead of doing the things which will cause them pain or sorrow. If you and I are the friends of Jesus we will keep His commandments, and do the things that are pleasing in His sight. If we do this, not only will Jesus own us as His friends, but the world will have to own we are His friends.

"If ye love me ye will keep my commandments," and "if ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love." If only men and women were willing to abide, not come and go as they may choose, but stay on and on in Christ, treasuring up His words, that they might do His will, that they might keep His commandments. They are all given in love and in keeping them we have the assurance of the love of the Father, the love of the Son and His abiding presence.

Winning a place among those whom Jesus calls friends, costs. To lift you and me out of the bondage of sin, Jesus renounced all the glory He had with the Father. To gain the liberty in Christ which is open to all, He requires that we renounce all. The only sad thing about renouncing our all for Jesus is, so few, comparatively, are willing to do it, and so fail to obtain the liberty in Christ which all might enjoy.

Perfect obedience to the Lord has always meant rest, safety and liberty. When Jesus said, "Take my yoke upon you and learn of me: for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls," He did not invite you and me to a life of bondage. The yoke of submission which Jesus would have us take upon us, frees us from bondage and leads us "from bondage into the glorious liberty of the children of God."

Jesus has made a wonderful promise to His friends. He has given to them a privilege so great, comparatively few have been able to grasp and use it. "Ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." Do you say that? He never intended we should ask Him about all the small affairs of our lives; that He will not do for us what we can do for ourselves. Is there any affair in our lives, any decision to make, which the Lord cannot do better than we can if we only let Him lead? Do not try to read a different meaning into Jesus' own statement, but press on until you have measured up to the standard given by Him, and have realized the height, the depth, the breadth of that great prayer promise given to those who meet the requirements which entitle them to be called the friends of Jesus.

Jesus knows it—you and I know it—the world knows it, if we are not doing whatsoever He has commanded us. We may deceive the world and ourselves for awhile, but we can never deceive the Master. He knows if we are seeking the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, first of all. If "all these things" are not being added unto you, it is evident that you are not in the class which Jesus calls friends. If you feel you are not entitled to that endearing term, friend, as used by Jesus, will you not heed the knocking of His dear nail-pierced hand, and open your heart's door to Him today, bidding Him to come in and make His abode with you here, until He takes you to be with Him forever and forever?

WHERE MAY HAPPINESS BE FOUND?

Many have been disappointed in not finding happiness where they desired and expected it to be. Sometimes it was found where and when it was not expected. All classes of people are looking for it, and they are hoping each day that tomorrow will bring the glad news to them. There are many conditions which may bring temporary happiness, but there are few, if any, that bring permanent happiness.

True happiness is difficult to find, and if found it is not easy to hold, for sometimes it unexpectedly leaves us in a worse condition than before, and we have to grope in the dark hours of disappointment.

It is very apt to be found and enjoyed in discharging the duties which demand the best part of our attention and time. You may not be able to do much either physically or intellectually, but to do a little of some important work will be far better than nothing. By practicing and developing the ability you already have you may greatly enlarge your capacity and reach out after greater possibilities. It is true that affliction and despondency may have greatly hindered your progress in the pursuit of happiness, but try hard to get away from them and enlarge your small circle by more pull in the right direction.

Develop your resources by wisely investing them in a paying way. In a way that will bring you larger and still increasing dividends. Invest in great things. Put your life and the best part of your time in the service of the Lord. Place them in a safe, sure investment that will pay a dividend of endless happiness.

Then, when the joys of youth have all passed away—when the body becomes weak with age—the voice trembling with long use—when all early friends and those who knew you best and loved you most have departed, Jesus will be nearer and dearer to you.

True lasting happiness is found in possessing the religion of Jesus. All others is temporary happiness, and passes away like a morning cloud. That was a happy day when you made religion your choice, and fixed your hope in Him who is able to keep you happy.

FRIENDLY VISITORS OF THE FEDERAL COUNCIL RECEIVED BY THE SWISS CHURCHES AT ZURICH.

(Translated from the Zurich Zeitung of August 26)

The reception of the American Church delegation in Zurich by the Swiss Church Conference and the Zurich Church Council was a significant manifestation of the friendly relations between American and Swiss Protestants. The initiative which the great American Federal Council has taken sending thirty members to Europe to study the position of the Continental Churches promises much for the strengthening of our common Protestantism. The delegation was divided in several groups in order to fulfill its mission in different countries.

At the opening session the president of the Zurich Church Council, Dean D. Herold, addressed his guests first in German and then in English. He recalled the splendid reception accorded the Rev. Adolf Keller as a delegate from Switzerland, among the church circles of America. He brought back with him a valuable library, a gift from America and also two scholarships for Swiss students who were to come to America to study.

"Therefore" said the chairman, "it is a great privilege for us to greet our American guests. During the time of the Reformation our country was a refuge for religious fugitives; later, America took our place. This friendship is also a symbol of the unity of our churches. This is the watch-word of the hour. America with its Federal Council has made a splendid beginning. In Switzerland, also, one finds similar signs. It was noteworthy to see the recent conference in Geneva at which almost all of the churches of the old and the new world, of the Orient and the Occident were represented and dealt one with the other in brotherly spirit. This leads us to hope for a still closer union. On the ruins which the world presents today it is necessary for Christians to rally together in order to unite in the spirit of the Christian belief and the love of God so as to build a new world."

The Rev. William P. Merrill of New York, replied on behalf of the American visitors. He was sorry not to be able to speak German and had to use an interpreter. In a simple but concise way he revealed the motives of the visitors at the conference: It is necessary to hold the world together against the forces of evil. Therefore must the Christian churches and Christian people be leaders. They must see in this their mission from above. The best way to reconciliation is to learn to know one's self. Therefore this visit must only be the beginning of a series of visits from both sides. Just as the soul keeps the body together so must Christianity work as the soul of the world, and it can do so only when it becomes filled with the spirit of Jesus Christ.

With deep interest the audience heard the address on "America and International Responsibility." The subject was treated by the Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, who is the secretary of the Federal Council and plays an important role in American Protestantism. At first he referred to the political situation. He said that in Europe many were discouraged about the American attitude, and asked "Where is the America that so nobly entered the war and in its declaration held up such high ideals?"

Turn the prayer meeting over to the laity, to whom it belongs. The Sunday school is a fair sample of what has been done and what will be done. Give the one-talent servant a chance to untie his napkin. The lack of interest is not chargeable entirely to the lack of ability in the minister. It is dull; it drags with its paralyzing monotony. The preacher is overworked; he gets commonplace; he gets in a rut and does not know it; he repeats and is not aware of it; and mourns over his failure, that his people do not relish "hash."

The price of coal in France has been fixed at $32 per ton by the French government.

ALLEN-FARMER

September 4, 1920 was the day on which a pretty, but quiet wedding was celebrated at the fine old country home of Mr. and Mrs. C. D. S. Farmer, News Ferry Va., when their youngest daughter, Julia Blanche, was married to Thomas Watkins Allen, of Creedmore, N. C. On account of the serious illness of one of the bride's brothers, Pressley, there were no attendants and no music. The souvenir ring ceremony was read by the writer at 7:00 a. m., after which Mr. and Mrs. Allen boarded the train for Richmond, Washington and points north.

The bride is an honor graduate of the class of '17, Elon College. She is well-known and much loved by a large host of friends both in North Carolina and Virginia. Mr. Allen is a very prosperous and enterprising young farmer of the Old North State. May happiness and joy ever be theirs.

JOHNSON

James Thomas Johnson died at his home in Zuni, Va., August 21, 1920, at the age of sixty-four years, three months and twenty-five days. He was a true and faithful member of Antioch Christian church and will be missed in his church, home and community. His sufferings were great, though he bore them with Christian fortitude, being fully resigned to the will of the Lord. He said he was ready and wanted to go and be at rest. He leaves a devoted wife, seven children—three sons and four daughters—one brother, one sister, fourteen grandchildren and many friends. The funeral services were conducted by his pastor at his home and his remains were laid to rest in the family burying ground near the home. We will miss him but our loss has been his eternal gain, and we hope to meet him in the better land.

H. H. BUTLER

LEWIS

Charles A. Lewis of Burlington, N. C., died September 2, 1920, at the home of D. J. Fitch where he had lived for about fifteen years. His wife died about six years ago.

Mr. Lewis was in his ninety-fourth year and was reported to be the oldest Confederate veteran in the county. He was a very quiet and kindly disposed old gentleman. I visited him some time ago and had quite a little conversation with him regarding his hope in Christ. He expressed himself as trusting Christ his Savior.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer at Bethel Christian church and interment was in the cemetery there. Sweet be thy rest, dear brother, till we meet again.

P. H. FLEMING.

HINDERSON

Miss Martha Cornelia Hinderson died at a hospital in Suffolk, Va., August 9, 1920. She was the daughter of the late David Hinderson and was seventy-six years, four months and fifteen days old. She was for years a member of Cypress Chapel Christian church. She leaves one brother, D. W. Hinderson, Nurneyville, Va., and many friends. She was a good Christian woman and will be greatly missed. Funeral services were conducted at her brother's home at Nurneyville, Va., and her remains were laid to rest in the family cemetery.

SMALL

On August 17, 1920 J. E. Small died at his home near Savage, Gates County, N. C., at the age of sixty-three years, two months and fourteen days. He was married twice; the first wife being Miss Ida Arnold. She left five children—one daughter and four sons. The second marriage was to Miss Maggie Powell. To this union were born three daughters, all of whom are living. Besides these he also leaves one brother, two sisters and many friends.

Brother Small was a member of Oak Grove Christian church. The funeral services were conducted at his home and his remains were laid to rest in the family cemetery. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER

THACKSTON

The infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Thackston, South Boston, Va., died at the home of Mrs. Thackston's parents, Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Alderson, Ingram, Va., July 26, 1920, and was buried in the family burying ground the day following. Services were conducted by the writer. May the Master comfort the bereaved parents.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

MURPHY

The seven months old baby of Mr. and Mrs. David Murphy, News Ferry, Va., died almost suddenly, Aug. 17, 1920. It seems strange sometimes that such little children are called to go, but the great Father of all knoweth best. Interment was made in Pleasant Grove cemetery. Services was conducted by the writer. May God bless the bereaved.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

BOYD

Nancy Farmer, the infant child of Mr. and Mrs. Ira Boyd, Durham, N. C. died September 2, 1920 and was buried in the Pleasant Grove, (Va.) cemetery the day following. Services were conducted by the writer. May Christ minister to the grief-stricken family, and they like the others feel that Heaven is the dearer for the contribution made.

JOHN G. TRUITT

WHITLOW

William Truitt Whitlow, the four months old and only child of Mr. and Mrs. William Whitlow, Paces, Va., died August 26, 1920 and was buried in the family burying ground near Ingram, Va. Services were conducted by the writer. May the Lord bless the sorrowing ones, and bring comfort to their hearts.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

ADAMS

Francis Rebecca Adams was born April 27, 1904, near Ingram, Va., and died in the Haleyon hospital, South Boston, Va., September 11, 1920 being 16 years, 4 months, and 25 days old.

She was in her usual health but was at the hospital having a goiter removed from her neck and died under the operation. She is survived by her mother, Mrs. Ida Adams, her half-brother, Sam Adams, Wilmington, N. C., and sisters, Mrs. James Brooks, Petersburg, Va., Mrs. George Orrell, Vernon Hill, Va., and Miss Elizabeth Adams, South Boston, Va.; also by her sisters Mrs. John Whitlow, Ingram, Va., Misses Pattie and Willie and brother Wallace, South Boston, Va.

She was one of the most popular girls in the Pleasant Grove-Ingram pastorate, a member of Ingram and regular pianist there at the age of 12, being perhaps the youngest in the Southern Christian Convention. She was a very talented girl and rendered service in such a sweet self-forgetful way that all who knew her loved her very dearly. A special choir made up of several of the best singers of the Halifax county rendered music for the funeral which was conducted at Pleasant Grove by her pastor. Six of her young men cousins acted as pall-bearers, and twenty-five girls about her age acted as flower-bearers which more than covered the grave. The church could not seat nearly all of the large congregation which gathered. There is no doubt that a talented and pretty Christian girl has gone to God. May He bless the widowed mother and the sorrowing brothers and sisters.

HABIT

It is not necessary for a young American to go to the University of Hard Knocks, to learn the wisdom and necessity of saving money, if he only attends the Grade School of Habit, according to Thornwall Jacobs, President of Oglethorpe University. "The prodigal Son received more considerate treatment than the average spendthrift," said Dr. Jacobs. "As a rule the prodigal has to go on eating husks until he learns how to do something worth while. It takes misfortune to make people come to themselves. How much easier the lesson would be if learned at home in the formative years when the child is building the character of the man or woman.

"Habit is the leverage by which we lift ourselves more easily when once we have begun to try. Habit makes saving easy. If the child is interested in small savings and they are oft repeated the habit forms and finally saving becomes second nature.

"If there is a habit which the world needs just now it is saving coupled with industry. The war has opened a Pandora's box. It seems to have let loose on a troubled world all the ills that flesh is heir to. Industry, saving and the law of kindness are needed to combat those evils."

An aid to these wholesome habits is the purchase of Government Savings Securities which compound their interest automatically which do not fluctuate in value and which may be cashed on short notice.

THE MATTER WITH AMERICA

What's the matter with America these days? Answer:

Too many diamonds and not enough alarm clocks.

Too many silk shirts and not enough blue flannel ones.

Too many pointed-toe shoes and not enough square-toe ones.

Too many serge suits and not enough overalls.

Too much décollete and not enough aprons.

Too many satin-upholstered limousines and not enough cows.

Too many consumers and not enough producers.

Too much oil stocks and not enough savings accounts.

Too much envy of the results of hard work and to little desire to emulate it.

Too many desiring short cuts to wealth and too few willing to pay the price.

Too much of the spirit of "get while the getting is good" and not enough old-fashioned Christianity.

Too much discontent that vents itself in mere complaining and too little effort to remedy conditions.

Too much class consciousness and too little common democracy and love of humanity.—Fargo Forum.

"Which one?"

"Why, the one that was described as overlooking a splendid garden, richly adorned with statutes, in which we would be at liberty to premeditate?"

"I did not," she returned in disgusted tones. "It was a cemetery."

BURLINGTON, N. C., SEPTEMBER 29, 1920

NUMBER 39

The Christian Way

Always be glad in the Lord: I will repeat it, be glad. Let your forebearing spirit be known to every one—the Lord is near. Do not be over-anxious about anything but by prayer and earnest pleading, together with thanksgiving let your requests be unre-servedly made known in the presence of God. And then the peace of God, which transcends all our powers of thought, will be a garrison to guard your hearts and minds in union with Christ Jesus. Finally, brethren, whatever is true, whatever wins respect, whatever is just, whatever is pure, whatever is lovable, whatever is of good repute—if there is any virtue or anything deemed worthy of praise—cherish the thought of those things. The doctrines and the line of conduct which I taught you—both what you heard and what you saw in me—hold fast to them; and God who gives peace will be with you.—Philippians 4:4-9 (Weymouth's Translation).

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

A YEAR OF TRIUMPH

This has been a year of triumph with ministers of the Christian Church. The Conference year was ushered in like a storm whose power could not be judged—and such was true. But the calendar year had its new duties also. January first found the whole Church endeavoring to write a new page in Church action in the Southern Convention. A program that was big, broad, and full, was staged. Almost to a man the ministers challenged it and in our beloved Zion there was a work done without parallel in Church history. No shirking, no slacking, Trojan-like the task was met and the fight kept up till the end.

The pastors have done exceedingly well this year. We are in a position to know whereof we speak. Their work as touching THE SUN office compares favorably with former years. We have had sympathetic cooperation and to all we extend thanks.

In one portion of the Convention the Conference year has closed, while in others it is nearing a close. The pastors are reflecting over the past year's work. From what we personally know, and from reports in THE SUN, these noble men have occasion to be glad.

Pastors, we salute and greet you. Here is our hand now as well as at the Conferences when we meet you.

TOO MUCH EMPHASIS (?)

Note the question mark after the heading. We place it there because we are not fully convinced that the emphasis about what we shall write is best for the Church.

Here is a matter that we have been considering: Has the Church put too much emphasis on the poor boy entering the ministry? It seems that God has always, in a general sense, called the poor to preach His gospel. The records of educational institutions all over the land bear witness to the poor boys who have passed that way, pursuing work looking toward the ministry.

Why not more sons of the rich enter the ministry? Is it because of the nature of their living, the manner in which they are trained, or the result of a wrong emphasis?

We raise the question if the fault of so few rich men's sons not entering the ministry is not due largely to the fact that the average church member does not give more encouragement along such lines to the poor boy than to the rich.

Our observation has been that the average college student takes it for granted that every ministerial student is poor. They no doubt have a right to so think, but this is only another straw to indicate how the world thinks along this line—that only the poor enter the ministry.

God bless the thousands of poor boys who press on to enter Heaven's noble calling. They are of our kind. Our preparation was a struggle, but gloriously enjoyed. For His cause we endured and would endure it again.

Not one star from the poor boy's crown—rather we add another. But there are worthy and Christian young men in other classes. Why not pray the Lord of the harvest that they go forth in His name?

WHERE CITIZENS ARE MADE

We hear much about citizenship these days. It is time that we should begin to talk about it and think seriously about it.

America is no longer composed of American people alone. We are a nation made up of all peoples of the world. Some are here to live, others to make a living, and some to do little of either.

Pure Americanism cannot remain pure with polluted streams flowing into it. A river can cleanse its waters if not polluted by other streams.

The foreign born are not objectionable because they are simply foreign born. It is their ideals that make them what they are. It is just as much the duty of a Christian to help bring a Chinaman to Christ in America as in China. A Christian cannot hate a foreigner here and contribute of his means to send the gospel to the native land of that same foreigner. Such is not the principle of Christ's teachings.

The thousands of foreign born who come to our shores should be taught the ideals of American life. Now, certain ideals are best taught through the language of a people who have those ideals. This brings us to Dr. Staley's position that he has maintained for years, that the right of citizenship to foreigners should be embraced by a compulsion to drop the native tongue and use the language of this country. Dr. Staley is right.

But back to the subject. Citizens are not made by legislative acts. No pledge to support the Constitution will serve a guarantee that it will be supported. Citizens are made in homes, not houses. A good citizen is the product of a good home. A good citizen can come from a bad home, so can a bad citizen come from a good home. But such are considered "accidents", and statistics will not show otherwise.

Citizens are also made in schools—schools of ideals of Christian type. Keep the home pure. Keep the school pure. These are sources of good citizenship. Defend them and you have defended the two principal sources where citizens are made.

TWO PUBLICATIONS

Some weeks ago we received from Rev. R. Lee Kirkland, D. D., Flemington, N. J., two pamphlets. One of these pamphlets is on "The Ethics of Dancing", and the other is "The Four-Cornered Church."

"The Ethics of Dancing" is a 6x9, 16-page pamphlet and contains a very thorough discussion of the dance under guidance of these topics: "The Holy Dance—the Dance that Leads to Heaven", "The Pagan Dance—the Dance that Leads to Fallen Womanhood, Broken Homes, Murder and to Hell." This treatise on the dance, it seems to us, is very thorough, the thought well organized and aptly and definitely put. The author is wholesale in his denunciation of dance and proves in a very reasonable manner every statement that he puts forth. The price is 12 cents per copy.

"The Four-Cornered Church" is a 32-page pamphlet and is treated in five chapters as follows: "The Church and Her Message", "Christ, the Basis of Fellowship", "Our Creed and Name", "Baptism", "The Lord's Supper." This is also a well written message and its price of 10 cents per copy is within the reach of all. Send all orders to Dr. Kirkland at the above given address.

The Herald of Gospel Liberty speaks very frankly to its subscribers in a recent issue, and tells the Church emphatically that the members must stand behind The Herald in its crisis hour to overcome the enormous cost of production.

It is costing exactly three times as much to produce one issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN now as it did four years ago. The price of THE SUN at that time was $1.50 per year. If the increase in subscription had followed the same ratio as the increase in production, the subscription price would now be $4.50, whereas it is only $2.50. We are satisfied that each subscriber fully appreciates the outlay of the Convention in providing money to meet the difference between the subscription income and the cost of producing the paper.

On Sunday, October 3, the Singing Class of the Christian Orphanage will render a religious concert at Hines' Chapel. The Class will also render religious concerts at the following places on Sunday, October 10: Rosemont church at 9:30 A. M.; South Norfolk at 11:00 A. M.; First church, Norfolk (Berkley), at 3:00 P. M., and at Newport News at 8:00 P. M. We entertain the hope for the Class that a large audience will be present at each of these services and that a liberal offering will be made.

THE SUN office will very much appreciate information as to pastoral changes. The whole Church is usually interested in these changes and sometimes we hear rumors of changes that we cannot verify, and for that reason cannot publish. The subscribers of THE SUN depend upon it for information in a very large way, and if pastors will furnish us all items of interest to the paper it will help materially in making a more creditable paper. We make it a point to give such notes of information as we have but we first must get the information for the paper. Let us have the news.

Readers of THE SUN doubtless noticed last week a page under the caption of "Lighthouse Observations", by Mr. J. E. Massey. A page under the same title appears this week and we are glad to announce is to be a weekly contribution. Mr. Massey is a member of our Concord church, in the North Carolina Conference, a graduate of Elon College in the class of '18, and is at the present time taking a graduate course in Journalism in Columbia University, New York City. Mr. Massey is very much interested in Journalism and we have arranged for him to contribute a page to THE SUN each week. We feel sure that his articles will have a wide reading.

Brother W. E. MacClenny, Suffolk, Va., is preparing a brief history of the Eastern Virginia Conference, covering its 103 years of existence. That Conference is to celebrate its hundredth anniversary at the approaching session of the Conference to be held at Holland, Va., beginning Tuesday, November 2, 1920. Our last information from Brother MacClenny was that he would like information concerning this Conference on the following years: 1855, 1856, 1857, 1858, 1859, 1860, 1861, 1865, 1866, 1867, 1868, 1869, 1870, 1871, 1872, 1873, 1879, 1880. The information desired is this: The date that the Conference was held, president, secretary, treasurer, who delivered the annual address and any special features. Any information that the readers of THE SUN can send Brother MacClenny concerning this will be very much appreciated.

LIGHTHOUSE OBSERVATIONS

J. E. MASSEY

A SPIRIT OF CONCILIATION

Behind the storms of industrial indifferences there is growing a better spirit, according to a statement in The Literary Digest, "the advantage and desirability of giving annual vacations to office workers with pay, have long been recognized, and now without any apparent consecrated action, vacations with pay for factory workers is slowly becoming an established practice, and perhaps with regular furloughs the periodic urge to strike will be less potent." Out of 624 establishments from which statistics have been obtained in the last two years, 530, or 85 per cent, give vacations with pay to office employees, according to a writer in The Survey. The present tendency towards accord is doubtless due to the belief that "what is good for the office employee should also be good for the manual worker, and that the physical no less than the mental effort should be rewarded by a rest." This spirit, if kept up will become a deadly enemy to the sentiment for strikes and Bolshevism.

BRITISH PARTNERS RATHER THAN DEPENDENCIES

Though the World War has caused much suffering, out of it there has come a new doctrine which now seems to be accepted. It is that "the British dominions are nations of equal status in partnership founded on consent." In Canada this conception is strongly held and emphasized. Australia too, is taking upon herself a stronger integrity, however cordial she may be with the mother country. In the struggle of the Revolutionary War, America fought for the principle. This shows how times have changed.

THE MACSWINEY CASE

In the case of MacSwiney, the hunger striking Lord Mayor of Cork, public sentiment is likely to lead one astray. There are two sides to the question of his release from prison. The Independent, issue of September 21, presents it in this manner: The Lord Mayor is of his own words justly convicted of treason according to the law of Great Britain. His release is agitated in the severest manner by the Sein Fein element of Ireland, who would overthrow England in their attempt to sever themselves from the Government of Great Britain. In a more modified plea the element represented by the British labor leaders desire his release because they "are convinced that the treatment of the Government has jeopardized the hopes of an early settlement of the Irish question." On the other hand the Government stands upon the ground that MacSwiney's release would mean the supremacy of Ireland's rebel force over Great Britain.

An early settlement of the Irish question is needed, but if the British Government is to maintain its right to curb treason and rebellion, it seems that sentiment should not lead one astray, but that the Government's right be confirmed until better means are obtained.

INDEPENDENT THINKING

Independent thinking should be a goal sought by every citizen, whether man or woman. The opinions we get from others should be carefully weighed before acceptance. Though these opinions may come from a wise father, or a courteous mother whom we love, or a brother, sister or friend, we should not make them our own until we see their truthfulness. In fact, a process or revision often precedes acceptance.

An editorial in The Biblical Recorder strikes very soundly upon the independence of thinking for yourself in politics:

"The writer believes that citizens should have convictions as to questions of public policy, just as they do on religious matters, and as long as men have convictions there will be differences of opinion which will result in different political parties. The sun is too high in the heavens, however, for a member of any political party to be lambasted for criticising a policy which his party may be pursuing. Such a method belongs to the day that is now passed. Free American citizens are becoming more and more to think independently on government questions. No matter how high in authority one may be, or how influential in the council of the party, he leaves himself subjected to public criticism if he cracks the party lash over the head of any citizen who may not agree with him.

"Machine politics, we are thankful to say, is growing very unpopular in North Carolina, and our citizens are becoming too intelligent to have a little coterie of office holders to presume to tell them what they should say and think. We rejoice in this manifestation of independence on the part of our citizens. It augurs well for the future of our State. Those who are in office should be made to understand that office holders are servants, and not masters of the people."

ANARCHY AT LARGE

From the reports and proceedings following the terrific explosion which occurred on Wall Street, New York City, killing thirty-three innocent men and women, most of whom were employees and workers of the City, it seems that we will have to place a strong hand on anarchy prevailing in the United States.

No evidence has yet led to the conviction of these deadly plotters. They are somewhere lurking behind the shadows of an American citizen, probably pretending to uphold America's rights yet, inasmuch as that pretention will deceive and destroy.

There are two main ways of ridding ourselves of such characters. One is to trace them through the Department of Justice and have them deported or convicted by the law. The other way is by establishing a more firmer means of Americanization by educating our illiterate foreign-born and native-born, too, who are most likely to be deceived by anarchical practices as a supposed means of gaining public rights. Through all this, Christian service must be the end of our program before they will have become the truest sort of American citizens.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

NEWPORT NEWS, VIRGINIA CHURCH

The good people (all of them are) of the Newport News, Virginia Christian church have a very unique way of saying "well done". On Monday evening at a Christian Endeavor social held in honor of the pastor, who is leaving that work to enter Yale Divinity School, great was his surprise to receive a handsome purse of about thirty-six ($36.00) dollars given by friends of the church and community. Then when the church treasurer gave the pastor a check for last month's salary an additional fifty ($50.00) dollars was added by instructions from the church.

Now brother pastors, can any of you show evidence of a more generous hearted people who have given about eightysix ($86.00) dollars extra money for three and one-half months' service, besides many other kindnesses too numerous to mention?

For all of this kindness I wish to express my sincere thanks, first to God to whom is due all praise and honor for results obtained, and then to the good people with whom it has been such a pleasure to labor. It is indeed a peculiar pleasure to be thus honored at the close of one's first pastorate.

Brother C. J. Felton is to take up the work at this place November 1. I can only envy him so bright and pleasant future with a church that is organized for service and a church that does things. For instance, the Christian Endeavor Society with only about twenty-five members raised nearly seventy-five ($75.00) dollars for our Orphanage at one meeting, and the young people expect to reach that goal if possible before they stop.

Those who know the president, Miss Mary Robins, have no doubt but that she will reach any goal set. The Ladies' Aid, under the progressive leadership of Mrs. R. L. Stringfield, embraces 95 per cent of the membership of the church who are eligible. During the past year this society increased its members 50 per cent and raised aside from the regular dues, about two hundred ($200.00) dollars. The Woman's Missionary Society, though not quite so large as the Ladies' Aid, is accomplishing great things and we are expecting greater things of it in the future, with Mrs. J. W. Simmons as president. But perhaps the most encouraging feature of all of the church's organizations is the work of the Juniors. There are in this church some of the most eager young folks, ages ten to fifteen years, who are willing to do anything from scrubbing the floor of the pastor's study, to making public speeches for Jesus. These young people are organized in a flourishing Junior-Endeavor Society, under the able leadership of Mrs. M. J. Hackaday, and in a Willing Workers' Society, recently organized by Miss Bessie Holt. Mrs. W. B. Baker is their Superintendent and her past record in dealing with young people insures success for the Willing Workers. Any church that does not have its Junior Societies is missing the largest part of its opportunities. The Sunday school with Brother C. D. West as Superintendent is constantly growing. It goes one Sunday more on the Convention plan, gives one Sunday's offering to the Orphanage, one to general missions and one to the care of helpless Armenian children.

I wish here to express my sincere appreciation for the co-operation and the many kind things done for me while in the work there. May God lead these people into larger and better things and to Him be all the glory, honor and praise.

STANDING COMMITTEES

We are approaching the season when all standing committees may rise—the season of the mushroom growth—when reports are made, read, discussed and passed in a few hours.

I am guilty, and I suppose that is the reason I have thought to make the announcement. But I am trying to give some time for reading and thinking along the educational situation of our Alabama Conference. A great deal, or most all of this is left to the chairman anyway; and while I think of the importance of an educated ministry the argument of some of our folks appears before me. That is; He whom the Lord calleth, he qualifyeth.

There is nothing wrong with the argument—it is the construction that is put upon it. The conclusion is reached too quickly.

The qualification which the Lord gives cannot be had from any other source: A strong will, a strong body and a quickened spirit. This enables him to be brave, apt to discern in spiritual things and willing to sacrifice in his calling. But preparation through education is that which one may do for himself. This helps him to become more efficient through the qualification which the Lord doth impart. So the school nor education—even both of them together are not supposed to make the preacher, but may be the means of developing that which he already has that would enable him to reach the highest attainment of Christian service.

We are expecting some announcements or publicity concerning a school within the bounds of the Alabama and Georgia and Alabama Conferences. This will be done at the proper time and it is my earnest prayer that it may prove a very great blessing to our work.

SUFFOLK LETTER

Is the world growing better or worse? That is a question often propounded, and in most cases a negative answer is given. The question is important and the answer equally important, the answer has been that the good is growing better and the bad is growing worse. The growth of good always makes bad appear worse. Ignorance is exposed by education, and sin is exposed by righteousness. "I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died." Light reveals darkness, and Jesus reveals man's sin. Before the coming of Jesus the church was full of bigotry, Polygamy and hate. Jesus exposed the errors of the old church and the leaders of religion. From that day to this day the church has been improving. Think of the Inquisition. Think of Rome in Luther's day; then think of the reformation and the centuries since that memorable time. The world itself sets up a high standard for the church. One of the criticisms of the world is against the rigid demands of Christianity. "Prohibition is too hard on men. It robs them of their liberty. It takes away their personal privileges." Thus does the world speak of all church teachings. Yet we know that the removal of the saloon is so far in advance of any temperance movement before that comparisons are out of the question. Prohibition has decreased crime, poverty, prostitution, and destitution. It has increased efficiency, prosperity, education and morality. It has improved homes, travel, politics, lodges, churches and schools. While this appears on the surface as a whole, evil men try to make us believe that times are worse. Bad men grow worse as good men improve, because good and bad are relative terms, when most men were profane, profanity did not seem so bad; but when good men do not take the name of God in vain, profanity shocks the moral sense of decent people. A drunken man looks worse now, than when the country was full of saloons.

If the world is not growing better, it is wasting much energy and deceiving itself. The roads are better, the farms are better. The means of travel are better. Houses and barns are better. Schools are better. Churches are better. Cities are better in streets, shops, stores, hotels, hospitals, charities and government. People dress better, behave better, live better, contribute more to all good purposes, and obey the law better than ever before. All these things prove to me that the world is growing better. It may not prove the same to you: but, if it does not, I have this request to make of you: that you try to make yourself better and thus do that much to make the world better. It is easier to find fault with others than to live without faults. The devil is a great fault-finder, but he has never corrected any faults of men nor himself. He is a liar and the father of lies. The devil told the Lord that if he would touch all that Job had, he would curse God to his face; and God gave the devil the power to do all to Job except take his life; and the devil destroyed all of Job's property and his children; but in "all this Job sinned not." The martyr-spirit has been in the church from Job till now.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE

I am a little late reporting my trip to the Virginia Valley Conference. With the monthly, quarterly, yearly reports, appointments, board meetings and other duties, I have been kept so busy the sixteen days I have been home that I have not had time earlier. The Conference, which all know from previous reports in THE SUN, was filled with enthusiasm from beginning to end. I left Winchester Sunday afternoon, August 8, and spoke at Bethlehem that evening. From that evening until the evening of the eighteenth I visited and spoke at the following churches: Bethlehem, Mayland, Concord, Dry Run, Antioch, Linville, Mt. Olivet, New Hope, Mt. Lebanon, Newport and Leaksville. On account of rain at my first appointment, I visited Linville twice.

In this time I visited about twenty-five homes. I wish I had time and space to mention each and every one who was so kind and did so much to make my stay in the valley pleasant. Words fail to express my appreciation. I enjoyed every minute of it and shall always remember this as one of the most pleasant trips of my life.

I arrived in Washington the afternoon of the ninth and was with Dr. Kendall at his morning service the twenty-second. A more hopeful and enthusiastic congregation cannot be found than the Washington folk.

Why this trip? Because I see the need today as never before, of enlisting our young people for Jesus Christ and His Church. One of the most significant things Christ ever did was to sit a little child in the midst of His disciples, saying, "Except ye turn and become as little children, ye shall in no wise enter into the Kingdom of heaven." He made the child the type of Christian discipleship, and again His woe is pronounced upon those who cause one of these to stumble, what is your influence, dear reader, upon these young people? What are you doing daily to help them grow spiritually? It is your privilege, your opportunity and your duty. The fact is this, we are not reaching our young people for Christ as we should. You know the future church depends upon our young of today. It is a well known fact that 85 per cent of our young people are won for Christ between the ages of ten and twenty. Then why are we so careless and unconcerned about our young people? In too many cases the problem has not been fairly faced, except perhaps for an occasional public complaint. Let us stop complaining about the indifference of our young people and put the energy and strength into doing something for them. Are you willing to pay the price and help enlist them for Christ?

NEW HOPE

By special invitation I visited this church the fourth Sunday and preached at 11:00 A. M., and at 7:30 P. M. This visit was one of great pleasure. I had been pastor of this church first and last between fifteen and twenty years. They have a good Sunday school, with Deacon J. B. King, superintendent.

The congregations were large—it was thought that there were five hundred at the evening service. Rev. J. E. Franks is their pastor. They expect to begin their series of meetings the fourth Sunday. May God bless these dear people.

HAW RIVER

We had good services at Haw River the third Sunday. The Sunday school and Christian Endeavor are perhaps larger than any time in their history. Improvements on the church building are still in progress, but will be complete in a few weeks. We have not a large membership at Haw River, but those who work are certainly faithful and true.

In several ways since I have been pastor this church has shown me kindnesses but in a special way they remembered me last Sunday, at the close of the service. Just before the benediction, one of the deacons, W. E. Cook, got up and asked to speak a word. He spoke very kindly of me and my work, and said that he had been requested by the church to ask me to call at the tailoring establishment of Mr. P. S. Dixon, Graham, N. C., on Monday, or whenever I desired, and accept a suit of clothes which the church desired to present to me as a token of good-will and appreciation for faithful and efficient service.

I had been fore-warned, for deacon W. H. Gillispie had asked me a week or two before to step in the tailoring establishment and have my measure taken. The church and the tailor did the rest.

It is needless to say that I called at the tailor's on Monday and received a beautiful suit—Prince Albert design—a gift from the Haw River Christian church. I do not know the exact cost, but I should think the retail price close about $90.00 or $100.00.

A word of thanks is almost superfluous for the church knows that I appreciate their good-will, deep interest, and kindness. Many thanks and may they in their good words and works be blessed and prospered.

The laundry building of the State Hospital for the Insane, Raleigh, N. C., was completely destroyed by fire at an early hour Saturday morning. Many of the patients were thrown into a wild panic but none were injured. The loss is estimated as being $100,000.00. The building will immediately be replaced by a modern structure at a cost of approximately $125,000.00.

The first duty of the woman voter is to register and then cast her vote, at the coming November election, for the dry Congressional candidate.

Rally Day is being held in many Sunday schools and it serves as a good plan to bring out the total enrollment of the Sunday school after the vacation season.

CORRESPONDENCE

BROTHER L. C. HUFFINES WRITES ON TITHING

Dear Brother Riddle:

I had thought that I would not write any more, but I see that some reader is calling on me for my views on tithing and I will endeavor to give them as briefly as possible.

I am a true believer in tithing. The first question arising in my mind is why God calls on us to give one-tenth of our income to Him. I sometimes illustrate it in this way: If I should allow a man to move to my farm and stay there a number of years and did not require him to pay me any rent, and then after he had been in undisputed possession I should go to him and demand rent, he might question my right and refuse to pay. So in order that he might be kept mindful that he owed me something it would be necessary that I collect rent every year. That is, I think, why God demands a tenth of our income—to keep us constantly reminded that all is His and that we should return unto Him that which is His. I am not sure that we have given anything until we have given more than the tenth. When we have given the tenth we have just paid our debt—after that, we commence to give.

Now the question comes up as to where and to whom shall I give this money. I am not bound by sect nor creed. I try to give where I think it is most needed and where I think it will do most good. If we follow the dictates of the still small voice—that little voice that is always telling when we are wrong—follow the dictates of our own conscience, we will find plenty of worthy causes and places. So far as I am concerned I have never had half enough to go around. I know this is not just what some people would like. I frequently have men to come to me and say that I should give this or that. I have never allowed anybody to carry my conscience or my pocketbook. Each of us has our own responsibility. We are responsible to God, to ourselves, and to our fellowmen just to the extent that they are influenced by us.

I want to take issue with you in one of your editorials of this week. In this you state that tithing is not a duty but a privilege. I contend that it is a duty. If it were just a privilege we could practice it, or not, just as we like. To say that we have the privilege to tithe does not make it compulsory but leaves it optional with us. If it is not a duty, why not let it alone? I look upon tithing as a command, and it is our duty to obey that command.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Our financial report is more encouraging this week. Rosemont Sunday school came to our rescue with a check and it makes us believe we will reach the goal of $20,000 by November first. It always makes the Superintendent happy to know a Sunday school somewhere feels interested in him when he is climbing hard to reach a goal, and mail him a check to push him on toward the goal.

We have had a very busy time on the farm for the past week cutting our corn, but the boys worked faithfully and it is all done. Our next hard job is to get our land prepared and sow our wheat crop and gather in the hay, potatoes, etc. The dry weather with a constant dry wind has cut off our hay crop very short. Our potatoes, too, will be cut off but it will all work out right in the end.

The work on our "Baby Home" is moving on nicely and today, September 22, the foundation walls will be nearly high enough for the first timbers. It is a fine time to build, as the weather is dry and nothing to bother.

If our people will come to our rescue and make contributions enough to get this building up and finished and paid for we will all be proud of the undertaking. It will be a splendid building when completed and well suited for the purpose for which it is constructed.

LETTERS FROM THE COUSINS

Dear Ueue Charley: I am late but I have been thinking I would write for some time. It seemed lonesome to see no children's letters in THE SUN last week. I am enclosing 25 cents for the orphans. Best wishes—Johⁿ B. Taylor.

Am glad to have your letter this week. It was lonesome in the Corner last week—no letters to keep things bright. I hope the little cousins will write often.—"Uncle Charley"

Dear Ueue Charley: Well, at last here comes my letter. My mother has been so busy that she neglected writing you for me, but we had not forgotten those dear little children up there at the orphanage. Enclosed you will find my dues for July, August and September.—Mary Louise Snook.

Glad to have your letter this week. I wish you could visit us and see the orphanage and children. We would be glad to have you come.—"Uncle Charley".

MISSIONARY

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

There are signs of promise and progress at Richmond. Dr. Walters, the pastor, began the work there in March. We did not then know how many members of our church, present and past, were there. To date Bro. Walters has secured 220 names of those in the city who have been members of the Christian Church, or who are still members. Of this number 83 have joined, as charter members, the church which Bro. Walters is now organizing as "The First Christian church of Richmond." Three lots in a very desirable part of the city have been purchased at a total cost of $16,800.00. The first payment of $6,800.00 has been made and the three lots, now one, are ample for a commodious church building and parsonage.

Subscriptions of $9,200.00 have been secured from the members of the local congregation there, and the average Sunday plate offering is $50.00. The congregation is fortunate in securing a commodious school building in a most desirable locality in which to hold Sunday school and church services. Bro. Walters and his people are justly delighted and enthusiastic over what has been accomplished in so short a time, and still more so over the prospects for the future.

J. O. ATKINSON

MISSIONS AND THE GOSPEL

A modern writer has phrased the missionary challenge in these words: "I am asked, 'Do you believe in foreign missions?' I answer, 'Do you believe in the gospel of Christ?' For be assured of this, if foreign missions are a failure, the gospel is a failure, if Jesus Christ has no message for the man in Shanghai that is worth giving my life, if need be, to get it to him, he has no message for the man in my community that I need bother about. He is either the Savior of the whole world or He is no man's Savior."

The Jews could not grasp the scope and significance of Christ's gospel. They, like many of our day, thought the gospel was for them only. In this light it is noteworthy that it was not the Jews, but the despised Samaritans who first announced that Jesus was Savior of the whole world. The woman of Samaria at the well became converted to Christianity. She left her water pots at the well and went into the city preaching the gospel of the Messiah. Those who heard her, these despised men of Samaria, came to the Christ and having heard Him, boldly proclaimed, "This is indeed the Christ, the Savior of the world." The Jews had never so regarded Christ, even the converted Jews. He is the Savior of the world, but the world cannot know that fact unless those who have heard Him and received Him go and send out to those who have not heard Him. And His blessings for growth, power and progress have ever been before those who have gone, or sent, to carry that message; and it has likewise been withheld from those who have not gone nor sent.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS OF THE EASTERN VA. CONFERENCE

All our Sunday-School Conventions have now adopted, and called upon each and every Sunday school in the Southern Christian Convention to adopt, the financial program of the Board of Religious Education, and that also adopted by the last session of the Southern Christian Convention. This financial program contemplates two things; First, securing funds with which to put an all-time Secretary for Sunday school and Christian Endeavor in the field, and Second, the taking by each school one offering a month for the Orphanage and one offering a month for Missions. This is a splendid program and will mean growth and progress in our Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies. The program is well outlined in a recent letter of Rev. G. O. Lankford, Corresponding Secretary, to all the schools of the Eastern Va. Convention. The letter explains itself and is as follows:

September 3, 1920

Dear Co-Worker in the Sunday Schools of the Eastern Va. Christian S. S. Convention.

May I call to the attention of your School, or, will you do so for me, the financial program adopted in the annual session of our S. S. Convention at the Isle of Wight C. H., July 15, 1920? As you doubtless know we are trying to co-operate with all the schools of our Southern Convention through our Board of Religious Education in securing a full time Secretary for Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work, and also ratify the action of our Southern Convention in proper Coordination of our Sunday School Mission fund. With this in view a committee composed of Revs. I. W. Johnson, W. W. Staley and W. M. Jay was appointed at Isle of Wight C. H. to work out for the Convention this program. This committee introduced the following which after due discussion and explanation was unanimously adopted:

"We recommend:

1. That each school be requested to pay Ten Cents per member enrolled as a Convention Fee, for the ensuing year in order to provide Funds for Convention expenses, and an all-time Field Secretary of Sunday Schools, as planned by the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention.
2. That the apportionment of Ten Cents per member enrolled, for Missions, be continued for the ensuing year, said money to be turned into the Treasury of this Convention.
3. That each Sunday School be requested to make an offering for Missions at least once per month, and that the schools co-operate, where practicable, with the Sunday School Missionary plans and program of the Field Secretary of Missions of the Southern Christian Convention.

I. W. JOHNSON
W. W. STALEY
W. M. JAY

Committee

You will understand that the fund contemplated in Item 1 is collected as heretofore and sent up by the delegate to the annual session of the Convention: that the fund of Item 2 is to be collected and sent in as heretofore, or as your school may now decide: the fund of Item 3 is to be at least a monthly free-will offering by the classes of the whole school and sent by your Treasurer to J. O. Atkinson, Mis. Sec. Elon College, N. C., who will give your school proper receipt and full information as to how same is being used.

I sincerely trust your school will adapt itself to this program as early as possible and that the coming year shall be the best yet of all the years with you.

Most cordially yours,

G. O. LANKFORD,
Cor. Sec. E. Va. S. S. Convention

AUTUMNAL CHANGES

Autumn, too, has its changes upon the thought of man, aside from the political and social effects of human mechanism. Besides the change of color from green to yellow and brown, followed by crispness and decay, there dawns upon the passing summer mind a responsibility of harvest, of security of food and provisions for the winter. Though one may become melancholy from the death of the vegetation and green, the prosperity and abundance of the harvest consoles one to make it useful for man and beast.

Honor and shame from no conditions rise; act well your part, there all honor lies.—Alexander Pope.

(All items for this department should be sent to Mrs. J. W. Harrell, Burlington, N. C.)

SOME SUGGESTIONS FOR LOCAL SOCIETIES

The Conference season approaches and the year for the work of our Woman's Boards is rapidly drawing to a close. Are the funds in hand for meeting all apportionments? We must not fail in this hour. If each one will do her part we shall most gloriously succeed. We appeal to every one to pray and work and give to the extent of her ability. Let individuals who are trying to decide where they can invest some of the Lord's money to the best advantage, send in their gifts and help the women to reach their goals. Let each local Society put forth an effort to collect all unpaid dues. It may be well to take special offerings to help meet the deficit. Secure as many Life Memberships as possible. I feel sure that no society will fail if each one will do her part.

Local Superintendents and Treasurers will soon receive notices for reports from Conference officials. Let us urge you to collect your data for these reports and send in promptly, so that our Conference Superintendents shall be able to make accurate reports. Have you observed that our Conference and Convention officers nearly always have to say their reports are incomplete because certain Societies failed to report? This is certainly unfair and unbusiness-like. Let us be prompt, business-like and systematic in our methods and we will be able to accomplish more for the cause.

It has been suggested that The Christian Missionary be given a large place at each meeting of the Society, since it furnished the latest news from the fields we are trying to serve. A good plan would be to assign to a different woman each month the task of bringing a ten-minute review of the best things found in The Christian Missionary that month. Call it "Christian Missionary Gleanings."

Have you secured your mission study books and the new programs for the year? If not, you should place your order at once as the new program begins with the October meeting. The books are now on sale at THE SUN office. Mail your order early.

OCTOBER MEETING

Stewardship

You will observe that the October meeting is based on Stewardship. In this meeting we should stress God's ownership and man's stewardship, recognizing God as owner of all things and man the steward or trustee of these possessions and powers.

A Steward is one who is entrusted with the management of estates or affairs not his own—one who manages for another. The possessions or powers which he holds are not his own but are held in trust. A true steward will make the best possible use of that which has been entrusted to him—not for selfish gain but that the owner may receive due increase.

We are the stewards who have charge of our Master's affairs and stores, to care for them and use them in the way which will accomplish most for Him until He comes again. The position is one of great trust and responsibility.

Stewardship is many-sided. It embraces all that we are, all that we do, all that we have. Some people have an idea that it applies only to one man's wealth or possessions. This is erroneous. Man is more valuable to God than his money. We are responsible and must give an account of every power, gift and talent with which we are endowed. Our time is a gift from God. Have we a right to use it as we please? We say these are strenuous times, these are busy days. How are we spending them? Are we devoting to His cause, the time which belongs to him? Our talents are God-given. We shall be held accountable for the use we make of them. Our bodies, minds and all our faculties are given to us by God. Shall we use them for Him? God entrusts material blessings that we as His agents may use the same for His glory.

"The silver and gold are mine saith the Lord" He entrusts it to our care, not to be used selfishly.

The power of money for good was never greater. Someone says fifteen million dollars will stamp out tuberculosis in New York. Think what a million dollars would accomplish in China or India! Never has there been a day in the history of the world when the opportunity for Christian investment was greater. The Church faces a great task as she looks out upon the home as well as the foreign fields. Peoples of every clime and every nationality are coming to our shores. The Church loses her opportunity if she neglects them. Looking abroad we see the door of opportunity swinging wide open. Nations are waiting to surrender to their Lord, messengers at home are willing and anxious to go. Christ's command, "Go ye into all the world", cannot be carried out until we shall release the silver and gold which He has entrusted to us, to be used for this purpose. When He gave the command He provided the means for carrying it out. Our Lord has supplied the means for evangelizing the world. Have we diverted it into selfish channels? Are we using the money which He intended should be used in carrying out this command for selfish purposes? Money is ours only in trust. It belongs to God and we are His. Money is just a part of ourselves which we can set at work in Japan or Porto Rico or Washington. God needs the money for His work.

MISSIONARY PAGEANTS

Realizing that the close of our Conference year is drawing near, I want to urge all our Young Peoples' Societies and Willing Workers to get their special funds ready as well as quarterly dues. I would suggest that if you already have your apportionments, you give a Missionary Pageant in your church some Sunday evening and take a free-will offering for Missions and add this to your fund. You know our Young People and Willing Worker's Societies in the North Carolina Conference are asked to raise $750 this year, but instead of the amount asked for, I desire for us to make it $100. There are three good reasons why I advocate pageants, 1. It gives the young people something to do in a great and good work. 2. It helps the Society, both in raising its money and in inspiring its members. 3. These pageants, as a rule, carry a great truth or teach a missionary lesson in a most helpful manner and make impressions that are never forgotten. There are many beautiful and striking ones published which can be purchased for a small sum. I have a few of these on hand, and if I can be of service in helping you select or secure a pageant for any of our Societies, I trust you will feel free to write to me.

WOMAN'S CONVENTION— NOVEMBER 10-11, 1920 DURHAM, N. C.

I am glad to announce that the Durham Christian church is to entertain the Missionary Convention of our North Carolina women this fall. There are many other churches to which we would like to go, but Durham is so centrally located and so easily accessible that it seems providentially arranged that we gather there.

The Central Executive Committee has prepared a strong program and every Society of every kind in every church is urged to be represented. Also we invite all our ministers to attend and urge every church not having any organization of the woman's work to send at least two delegates. Let's have a great Convention, large in numbers and inspirational in its outlook and plans.

Let all who expect to attend notify Mrs. J. P. Avent, 317 Holloway Street, Durham, N. C., at what time they expect to arrive.

MRS. W. A. HARPER,
Secretary N. C. Woman's Board

DEVOTIONAL

THE CRITIC CRITICISED

(The Methodist Protestant)

Nothing is more common than to hear members of the Church lamenting that the world outside does not attend the worship of God's house. They do not hesitate to denounce the pagan indifference of their neighbors and friends. Chiefly the preacher receives the blame. They speak of his sermons as dull, of his visits as insufficient, of his temperament as cold, and uninviting. They constantly torment him by laying on him all the short comings of the church, and frequently call for a change of preachers in order to attract the outsiders to the church.

Sometimes the preacher deserves all the criticism he receives, but no man engaged in an earthly enterprise for gain, would go out into the world, and run down his business, and expect to have success in it. Even granted that all people say about the short comings of their pastor is true, if they have any concern at all for their church, they ought not criticise him before the world, and expect the world to become attentive to his ministry. There is no more prevalent sin in Protestantism than the almost universal habit of criticising the minister in the home, the church, and upon the streets.

We have written thus much to meet the argument that the minister is responsible for the falling off in church attendance on the part of the outside world, but we want to give another reason, which we think is very much more to the point, which keeps the world out of the pews of the Church. That reason is the very small value which Church members place on the obligation of Church attendance. In this respect people do very much as they please. They stand before the altars of the Church, and take the most solemn vows in regard to attendance upon her services, and afterward disregard their solemn vows with absolute impunity. They even resent any reference to their dereliction to duty, on the part of the pastor. We are not speaking from hearsay, but from actual experience. Most churches have two stated services on Sunday. If we expect the world to attend the services, the members must sustain the services themselves. But this is just what they do not do. Only a small number attend more than one service on Sunday. Even that one service is neglected easily, if some other call is more attractive. The automobile is responsible for a vast amount of unfaithfulness on the part of Church members. Many have no conscience at all about leaving the church to go joy-riding on the Sabbath. How can we expect to magnify the importance of church attendance upon the community when we so lightly regard it ourselves? The reason the community does not go to church is because church members do not go to church with any large degree of regularity. Of course this does not refer to the "faithful few," who are always on hand, and can always be counted upon; but that company is even yet, as in the days of the Son of Man, a faithful few.

There is charm and an attractive power in a house full of people. We try to content ourselves by saying that it matters not to us whether there are a dozen or a thousand at the service, but really it is not so. We can enjoy worship better in a full house. There is a warmth about it, a sense of interest in things that puts us in heart to worship. Empty pews are spiritual depressants. They are cold and challenge our fidelity, or the fidelity of those who are absent. They speak of failure, and not success.

We are crying out, just now, for a world-wide revival, but the revival we need is a common, decent regard for holy vows on the part of members of the church. We cannot conceive that people will be interested in heaven, who finds so little to interest them in the church below, and we do not believe that the people are going to heaven, unless they repent, who make holy promises to God, and then leave His house empty on the Sabbath to become the mockery of unbelievers.

THE UPWARD LOOK

"Don't you ever get discouraged?" I asked of a woman whose tiny house was just outside one of the most dismal villages I ever saw. "It must be lonely sometimes in the little town." I had almost said "hideous little town."

"O, no," she answered, "not now any more since I got to looking up!"

"Looking up?" I questioned.

"Looking at the sky instead of the ground," she explained. "Hadn't you ever thought of it?"

"Why, no!"

"Well," she went on. "this is about the worst-looking town in this section and the dearest. It didn't used to be nearly so bad years ago, but it's running down, and for a while there after my husband died and I was so alone I got clean discouraged looking around me. Especially in winter and when the mud came. One day I was standing right here in this yard looking at the road and wondering how long it would be before I could wade into town, and all of a sudden I looked up! I guess I was the most surprised woman in the world at the moment. I saw the most beautiful sky I ever dreamed of. It was the bluest blue. I just couldn't half tell you about it, and there were the softest white clouds floating in it, all happy and care free. And there it had been all the time right over my head, and I never had the sense to look up. I just went into the house and got down on my stiff old knees and thanked God. And do you know that sky has been right there ever since? Of course it's not always blue—sometimes it's cloudy, and we have storms—but it's always wonderful to watch, never twice the same."—Ella Wister Haines, in Christian Herald.

The Board of Publication in session September 17, 1920, voted unanimously to increase the price of The Christian Sun from $2.00 to $2.50 the year, the same to become effective October 1, 1920. Renewals and new subscriptions will be received until noon, Friday, October 1, at the old rate of $2.00 the year.

HOPE SPRINGS ETERNAL

What mother planned to do during the month:
Read Bergson; everybody else did it years ago, but somehow she never had time.

Catch up on Ibanez and Maeterlick, and read a lot of French for practice.

Take Anne to a really good symphony concert.

Take Dick to "Julius Cæsar" and the Museum of Archæology.

Study Babbington Spruce on "Child Psychology."

Prepare a club paper on "Hyacinths in the Home."

Learn to run the car.

Make one of those dressy little slip-over blouses for herself.

What she really did:

Glanced at the newspapers.

Helped Dick over the shell holes in "omnis Gallia divisa est."

Chaperoned Anne's high-school box party to see "Fluffy Piffles."

Took Dick to the dentist and Charlie Chaplin.

Studied Dr. Sparr on the after treatment of measles.

Read all the "Peter Rabbit" literature five times to Bobbie during his convalescence.

Prepared chicken broth and cup custards.

Ran the furnace that week when every one else had the "Flu."

Darned stockings.

Kept things going generally.—Life.

ADD TRIUMPHS OF SURGERY.

And shall I be able to play the piano when my hands heal?" asked the wounded soldier.

"Certainly, you will," said the doctor.

"Gee, that's great! I never could before."—Boston Transcript.

BLIND TOMMY

From his appearance no one would ever have guessed that Tommy was blind. His eyes were as bright and clear as any boy's could be. He could hit a mark or strike a ball better than any of his playmates. Mother was the one who could tell you most about his blindness, which some folks thought didn't amount to anything. It was quite a serious matter to her.

There was something very strange about it. Tommy seemed to see a piece of pie right through the pantry door or a slice of cake in a tin box that was shut up in a dark closet. He could see the boys playing ball half a mile away; and he could see his special chum, Charley Banks, with a fishing rod over his shoulder, almost before he turned the corner of the street. Yet he never could see the ash pan, set out doors for him to empty, though he stumbled over it half a dozen times through the day. As for the coal bucket, which Tommy was supposed to keep filled for mother—and every boy knows that no mother, with a good, stout boy of her own, ought ever to lift a bucket of coal—Tommy never seemed to see it as it stood by the cellar stairs.

There were other things that Tommy could not see. The garden walks might be green with straying grass or the flower beds with weeds, the lawn might sadly need a shearing; but blind Tommy would go whistling away, and presently his voice would be heard shouting and laughing in busy play with other children.

Queer about Tommy's blindness, wasn't it? Do you suppose any doctor could cure it with some pills and powders or with a pair of spectacles.—Exchange.

HOW PLANTS EAT AND DRINK

When we say that the buttercups and daisies are whispering together because their tops nod back and forth, that is a sort of play talk. We know that the wind is blowing the plants, and that is all; but when mother tells you that your pansies are thirsty, she means exactly what she says.

Plants do get thirsty and hungry too. They eat and drink as we do; but they have many, many hundreds of mouths instead of one.

Whenever you pull a weed up by the roots, you can see some of its drinking mouths; for every root end is a tiny mouth through which the plant sucks up water and other good things just as you drink lemonade through a straw.

As the plant grows larger above ground, it must send out more and more of these tiny rootlets to get enough water to live on. The roots go reaching out so far and deep that you are sure to break off many of them whenever you pull up a plant.

Roots have other work to do besides sucking up water from the earth. They are what hold the plant steady. That is true whether the plant is a little thing no longer than your finger or a great tree whose roots must grip tight into the earth like so many strong hands to keep the tree from blowing over in a big wind. Some windstorms do snatch up the stoutest tree and toss it down with its roots sticking into the air.

Plants drink through their roots, and they get part of their food in the same way. But they eat most with their leaves. The smooth tops of the pretty green leaves on our plants and trees are full of tiny mouths that are busy all the while getting food from the air. We breathe air, and the plants eat it; but they do not want the same part we do.

There is never a quarrel whether you or the geraniums shall have the best air in the sitting room. That part of the air which makes them green and thrifty would give you a headache or make you very tired. So it is kind of the plants to eat it for you, isn't it?—Mary S. Stover, in St. Mark's Outlook,

Announcement has been made that Marshal Foch expects to visit the United States in the near future. He will likely be paid due tribute by Americans, since he is regarded as the greatest hero of the World War.

NOTES

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, Kernersville, N. C. has entered Elon College to further his studies.

Mrs. J. B. Gay, Franklin, Va., is the first subscriber to make her remittance. $2.50—the new subscription price effective October 1.

We understand that Rev. R. F. Brown, Chapel Hill, N. C., is to take up the work of the Pleasant Grove-Ingram pastorate, recently vacated by Rev. J. G. Truitt, who is now studying in Princeton Theological Seminary.

Among the young men who have gone away to do post-graduate work this fall is Rev. E. H. Rainey. He has entered the Divinity school of Yale University. Revs. H. S. Smith and H. S. Hardeastle have also resumed their studies in this institution.

Rev. J. G. Truitt changes his address from News Ferry, Va., to B 36, Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, N. J., where he goes to further his education. The Church will wish for Brother Truitt abundant success in his larger preparation for service of the Master.

Rev. D. P. Barrett spoke to a large and appreciative audience at the Burlington church last Sunday night. He gave a vivid description of Porto Rico, told of the natives, their industries, habits, and of the great work being done on that island by the missionaries.

We have heard only liberal words concerning the increase of the subscription price of THE SUN and feel that our people will accept without any question, the small advance of only fifty cents the year. Several have expressed to us their opinion that the price should have been advanced to $3.00 instead of $2.50.

Rev. B. J. Earp, formerly of Luray, Va., has entered school at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., where he goes to take post graduate work for the coming year. Brother Earp has been making his plans for this step for some time and THE SUN wishes for him great success in this work.

From a letter to the Editor from Dr. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va., under date of September 25, the following is quoted: "Protracted meeting at Oakland last week, assisted by Dr. C. H. Rowland. Twenty-three professions, twenty-one additions to the church. Liberty Spring this week, assisted by Dr. Staley. Eighteen professions, twenty-six additions to the church."

We have a very special desire to call attention to Dr. Staley's "Suffolk Letter" in this issue. These letters are always full of information and show deep thinking, but it seems to us that the Letter this week strikes a very vital point and will probably settle a question in the minds of many. Read it and digest it.

Rev. W. F. Jordan, with his family, for twelve years representative of the American Bible Society in Central and South America, is spending his year of furlough at Elon College. Brother Jordan is one of our able, consecrated ministers and we welcome him heartily to our Southern work. We trust he shall be heard in many of our churches and in all Southern conferences. He is a man of vision, growing out of his long and successful service in the mission field.

Dr. Martyn Summerbell, Lakemont, New York, began his annual series of lectures at Elon College last Sunday. On that day he delivered two discourses—"The Stars Against Sisera" and "Heart Issues", while his themes for Monday and Tuesday were as follows: "England and Her Restless Puritans"; "The Pilgrims in Holland"; "The Mayflower at Sea"; "Early Days in New England."

We have received Volume II-No 1 of Maroon and Gold, the student publication of Elon College. This publication thus starts upon its second year. Mr. L. B. Ezell, Graham, N. C., is editor, and Mr. C. R. Hutchinson, Charlotte, N. C., is business manager. This publication is an eight page sheet and should be in the hands and homes of all friends of the College. The price is $2.00 the College year—nine months.

This is the last copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN to be mailed at the old rate of $2.00 per annum. On next Friday, October 1, the paper advances to the new price of $2.50 the year. If you desire to mail your subscription so as to reach the office by noon on that day credit will be given at the rate of $2.00 the year; but after that date all remittances should be $2.50 for each year's subscription.

Evangelist Victor Lightbourne began a meeting in Graham, N. C., last week and we understand that much interest is being manifested. Evangelist Geo. D. Eastes is holding a meeting in Lowell, Ala., according to announcement in the Roanoke Alabama Leader. Mr. C. M. Daughtery has charge of the music in Brother Eastes' meeting. THE SUN will wish for Brothers Lightbourne and Eastes and their assistants, every success in their undertakings.

Dr. J. P. Barrett, now pastor of the Rose Hill church Columbus, Ga., has been called to serve the Holland, Virginia, church for another year. We understand that Dr. Barrett has accepted and will take charge of the Holland work October 1. Holland finished her new house of worship some time last year and decided upon all time services. Dr. Barrett's experience as preacher, pastor, author, and editor qualify him for a substantial work and we consider that our Holland people have chosen well and wisely.

ABOUT MAKING MONEY

By BRUCE BARTON

It is easy to be hypocritical on the subject of money. We have formed a habit of pretending publicly to despise money, while actually working our heads off to get more of it.

We make speeches to young men advising them to "seek the higher good," and hurry straightway to our offices to make up for lost time.

Let us have done with such hypocrisy.

We are all out to make money; nor is there anything reprehensible in that fact.

Wise old Sam Johnson said: "There are few occupations in which men can be more harmlessly employed than in making money."

It is not "money" that is the "root of all evil," as we often misquote, but "the love of money."

How much of yourself are you willing to sell for money?

The answer to that question is none of my business. It is a personal question—a question for you to ask yourself.

But if you are the sort of person I think you are, your answer will be something like this:

There are some things I am not willing to sell for money.

I will not sell my health. Not for all the money in the world will I die twenty years before my time, as Harriman did; nor spend my old age drinking hot water, like John D. Rockefeller.

I will not sell my home. I will forget my business when I leave my office, where the talk is of nothing but rest and high thinking and peace—not a mere annex to my factory or office, where the talk is of nothing but gains and loss.

I will not sell my honor. I will not engage in any business, no matter what the profit, that does not contribute something to the happiness and progress of the world.

King Midas, in a fit of covetousness prayed that everything that he touched might turn to gold.

And his prayer was granted.

The food he was lifting to his mouth turned to gold; his wife, if he had touched her, would have turned to gold.

There are too many King Midases loose in the world.

They do not have the Midas touch; they have the Midas look.

They see nothing but money.

A beautiful garden to them is merely something that "must have cost a thousand dollars."

They look at their homes and they see, not a home, but an expense of so much a month.

They look at their wives, and figure how much less it cost them to live when they lived alone.

The universe, to them, is a balance-sheet; their minds are adding-machines; their hearts beat in tune with the ticker.

God pity them—the men with the Midas look!

Get money—but stop once in a while to figure what it is costing you to get it.

No man gets it without giving something in return.

The wise man gives his labor and ability.

The fool gives his life.

A Methodist bishop was spending a few days with an old friend in Virginia. The bishop was an early riser, and was very much gratified on the first morning of his arrival to hear some one singing, "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

Upon investigation, he found it was the colored mammy who was getting breakfast ready. The bishop sauntered up to the open doorway of the summer kitchen, and looking in, said kindly:

"Good morning. I am much pleased to hear you singing hymns so early in the morning. Have you experienced religion?"

"'Ligion nothin'," replied the cook. "Ah always sings dat hymn when ah boils aigs—two verses fo' soft, and three fo' hard."—Country Gentleman.

There is only one better man than the man who gets behind and pushes, and that is the man who gets ahead and pulls.

SEWARD-BRITTLE

On the evening of September 5, 1920, at the home of the bride, in Surry County, Virginia, Mr. Beverly A. Seward and Miss Polly Leah Brittle were united in marriage. The ceremony was performed in the presence of a few of the relatives. Then the happy couple motored to the home of the groom in the lower part of the county, where he is engaged in farming. They have the best wishes of their many friends.

OBITUARIES

HUNDLEY

Mrs. Bettie A. Hundley was born June 24, 1874 and died August 1, 1920, at the home of her brother, Urquis Laine. She was married to Lynn H. Hundley February 8, 1890. To this union were born two girls, Thelma and Mary Lee. Besides these she leaves two brothers, Walter and Urquis. She was a sister to Rev. W. J. Laine, who was known to Sun readers. She was a great sufferer in body in her last days and was conscious of her going, concerning which she seemed to be resigned. She was a member of the Ivor Christian church. Burial service was conducted by the writer at the Laine family cemetery where the body was laid away.

W. D. HARWARD

LISKEY

On September 6, 1920 the home of Frank Liskey near Harrisonburg, Va., was invaded by the hand of death, and little Cyrus was taken away. He was thirteen months old. His stay on this earth was scarcely more than long enough to win a large place in the hearts of the parents, and then the little bud was called to blossom in a fairer land. Funeral services were held at New Hope Christian church September 8, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. D. Mitchell of the United Brethren Church. May God comfort the bereaved.

A. W. ANDES.

MASSEY

Mrs. Mary Huldah Massey, wife of T. L. Massey, died near Concord church, Caswell County, on September 10, 1920, aged thirty years, one month and three days.

She was married to T. L. Massey on September 18, 1910. During the past five years she has suffered greatly and expressed her readiness to go when the summons came. She told her loved ones not to grieve for her, saying she would be better off.

She was a faithful wife, a kind mother, and a good neighbor. She leaves a husband and two children to mourn their loss. Service by the writer.

A. F. ISLEY

BEVILL

Our hearts were made sad on September 6, 1920 when the news was received that our beloved sister, Mrs. W. Y. Bevill had died. She was a loyal member of the church at Pleasant Ridge. She leaves a husband, two daughters—Mrs. L. C. Shelly and Mrs. H. A. Bowman—one brother and three sisters. Funeral services were conducted the following day by her pastor, assisted by Rev. Mr. Sherrill.

J. S. CARDEN.

BURKE

James E. Burke passed to his reward on July 17, 1920, at the age of 80 years. He became a member of Hank's Chapel

Christian church many years ago, and was fearless in his denunciation of the wrong, and in advocating what he believed to be right. The host of friends attending the funeral far out numbered the seating capacity of the church. Of him, a comrade said recently, "He was a member of the Chatham Riflemen during the sixties, and no better soldier ever went to war."

He was laid to rest in Hanks Chapel cemetery with services conducted by the writer.

B. J. HOWARD

LETEIN

Little Paul Francis, five months old child of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Letein, Richmond, Va., was buried at New Elam, September 3, 1920.

It was sad to see the young father and mother following their first born to an infant's grave. But who can imagine a world without children and want to be there? So, we thought together of this father and mother as having been called upon to contribute one of the glories, yes, a jewel, for the spirit world.

Little Paul Francis leaves a little twin brother. The Lord spare him to gladden the hearts of the now grief stricken parents.

HOLT

Bro. Wesley Holt, age 73 years, was laid to rest in the New Elam cemetery September 5, 1920.

The death angel came to find no fear nor lack of preparation. Bro. Holt had patiently borne his sufferings for several weeks, often expressing his willingness to abide by Divine decree. He spent the greater part of his last two days on earth praying for the people of his community—that with them, peace and brotherly love might always abide.

New Elam church, of which he was a member, feels its loss in the passing of this good man. He leaves a widow and several married children.

Funeral conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Williamson of the M. E. church.

CLOSE ENOUGH

An Englishman a Scotchman and an Irishman were indulging in reminiscences of sporting occasions:

"The closest race I ever saw was a yacht race," said the Englishman, "in which one of the boats had been recently painted won by the breadth of the coat of paint."

"The closest I ever saw," declared the Scotchman, "was one in which a horse, stung by a bee, won by the height of the swelling on his nose."

"The closest race I ever saw," said the Irishman, "is the Scotch."

How Much It Meant When Mother Prayed

JOHN BALCOM SHAW

IN a meeting of ministers whose intent was the deepening of the spiritual life, one of the members, a veritable modern saint, arose and related this incident of his early life. One night, he said, when he was a boy on the old farm, he went to bed as usual in the garret, and just as he was dozing off into sleep he heard a familiar footfall on the uncovered stairway. He knew quite well who it was, but he thought he would feign sleep and see what she might do. Slowly, on tiptoe lest she might wake him, she went to the end of the long chamber, put her candle down upon the old-fashioned bureau, took a hard-bottomed chair that stood near by and, bringing it to his bedside, knelt down and buried her face in her hands. Never had his heart beat so fast or so loud, he declared as it did that night. It seemed as if he must undeceive her by raising up in bed, reaching his arms around her neck and giving her a kiss that had more love in it than any he had ever planted on her fond face. But he restrained the impulse, and, instead, she arose after the lapse of many minutes and kissed him; and then carried the chair back to its place, took the candle and went downstairs. But he did not go to sleep. It was long after midnight ere his drowsiness returned and all through these long hours, he told us, two great thoughts kept coursing through his mind and heart. The first was, with such a mother praying for me what manner of man I ought to become, and the second, I must see to it that nothing I am responsible for comes between those prayers and their answer. He concluded the incident by saying that the memory of that evening had chastened his whole life and often since entering the ministry the thought of his mother's prayer had proved a source of inspiration and strength.

A RURAL CHURCH PROBLEM

We have heard much during the past few years on the problem of the rural church. Why this talk? Is there a problem, or to pluralize it, are there problems? There are problems, and the Church must face them.

The coming of the automobile has brought one advantage as well as a disadvantage to the church in the open country. There are those who openly opposed the introduction of the automobile but one by one they have become converted and today there is a "flivver" in the hands of practically every rural dweller. The day of the novelty of the automobile has passed. Its experimental state is no longer. It seems to be a public necessity. The automobile industry may have its evils but, like other things, the automobile can be used to the advancement of Kingdom progress, or to encourage the evil of the land. It depends altogether upon our use of the thing whether it is for good or for bad.

But back to the relation of the church and the automobile. The automobile has enabled thousands to attend church at times when without the car it would be very inconvenient and would keep them away from the house of worship. On the other hand, there are those who have used the automobile for social purposes during the hour for worship. Visiting on the Sabbath day is made more convenient through the use of the automobile. Church yards may be filled with machines, but likewise public highways are dotted with these modes of modern transportation. One of the big problems of the rural church is to enlarge its program of work, worship and services so that members, neighbors and all, will come for miles to pay tribute to the house of God. The church has within its power the means of making its services of such a nature and such a character as to interest and attract. But what is to be the nature of this program? It must be a high plane of Christian activity; a program of preaching of the apostolic type. The true Gospel preaching in all its earnestness has never failed to bring men and women together by the thousands and hold them.

There is an educational problem that the rural church must solve as well as to get the best results out of its social problems. The cities have their every attraction—some educational, some otherwise. The open country can afford some of these attractions. The moving picture art can be featured in the rural districts with almost the same degree of success as it can be in the cities, and the wide open opportunity for the country church is to get hold of this very thing before some evil organization gets hold of it. We do not mean by this statement that the Church, as a separate and organized unit, should necessarily start a moving picture show in its midst, but these things should be controlled by Christian influence, directed by Christian men and women. How often do we hear the picture shows abused for some picture presented! The criticism may be just but the Christian people of every community once had an opportunity of starting these things and controlling them, but with eyes blinded they let them get into the hands of other organizations. Now the scales are falling from their eyes and they see that they have the young people. Be it remembered that the art of the moving picture business started with the organization of the Church. The Devil soon got into it and instead of the Church kicking the Devil out, the Devil kicked the Church out. The greatest sermons are those that come to us by picture. To a worshipping world a brighter picture of the Resurrection like that which can be thrown upon the screen—the scene of Calvary's Man dying upon a rugged cross? What orator can surpass in his mental picture the graphic description of Jesus placing a child in the midst to teach the significance of the Kingdom? What inspired preacher of the Holy Writ can hold up to a worshipping world a brighter picture of the Resurrection than mechanical art can throw upon the screen. These, and hundreds of others, should daily be taught where their opposite is thrown before an eager throng. If pictures speak louder than words, and the Church feels it her duty to control words, why not control pictures?

The automobile is bringing good roads. Good roads first lead out from particular populated centers in the direction of the best rural districts. The young people, with the use of automobiles and good roads, will seek the city for their impressions. Why not meet their demands in the rural communities?

A third problem of the rural church is to change its type of ministerial services. People are becoming tired of that monthly service which reaches only one or two homes once a month. They want a servant of God to live in their midst, marry their young and bury their dead. The rural church member is opening his heart to liberality, seeing the vision of a new day, and willing to pay for value received. The young men in the ministry are realizing this thing and are quickening their steps for a larger and more adequate preparation. The rural parsonage will be the realization of no idler's dream. The best educated of the ministry will in no distant day be found in the rural districts living in a parsonage, cultivating a few acres of garden and serving the people in a most acceptable manner. The realizing of this centers about the manner in which our rural church leaders seize their opportunities, for in seizing them and using them their problems will be solved.

A CHILD BEGGAR

A little girl, perhaps seven or eight years old, called to see us the other day. She came in from the street and was dirty, very dirty. Her hair was unattended and her face bore marks of ill-treatment. She was begging—just begging. Her story, committed to an age-worn paper, was that of her mother pleading for funds to assist in rebuilding her house recently destroyed by fire. According to the little girl's story she lived eight miles in the country. Being questioned, she knew no one in her community. She could not give us the name of the nearest church nor where she attended school last. She talked without looking us in the face. She was telling falsehoods, and she knew it.

This was not the first beggar that we ever saw. They come our way nearly every week, but there is pity and pathos in the life of this child-beggar that we are writing about. The things that she told us were not hers; they were the promptings of another mind. This little girl, born in innocence, and was started, according to American interpretation, on an equal footing with other children. Now she is tramping as a beggar-liar. She knows no home, is unacquainted with a decent bath and sleeps on no clean bed. There are no dolls where she sleeps at night, and no whisperings of the comforts of a home. She is living in a land where education is compulsory, but she is neither sent nor carried to school. The world with its growing spirit of brotherly love, freedom and emancipation, is passing her by.

We followed the subject of our sketch to the door and there found leaning against the building a care-worn mother, holding an infant babe, perhaps three months of age. The tragedy is thus thickened. Three souls instead of one!

When will public opinion, laws, and the good will of the people so crystalize as to drive beggars from our streets, place them in homes of reformation and endeavor to make them better citizens? Free America! Sure, it is free, but freedom is not license or even the application for license to degenerate. That mother is perhaps the victim of circumstances, or one of the earth's down-fallen and now down-trodden. But for the public not to snatch from such an environment these little ones, of whom Christ said the Kingdom of Heaven is like, is for someone to fail in duty, in opportunity and in privilege. Are we our brother's keeper?

ARE WE READING?

Are we reading? That is the question that often comes to our mind. Every printing press in the country is busy turning out books and periodicals. Truly the wise man knew what he was saying when he said that "To the making of books there is no end." We are not alone in our complaint that church people order few books from the book store. Recently we noticed this same comment from a book store controlled by one of the largest denominations of the South. But the people are reading. However, we often wonder if they are not reading more fiction and books of a like nature than they are of a more constructive type. A leading student of social conditions in America says that we deceive ourselves if we suppose that the people have ceased reading. We are inclined to think that this man is correct. We have changed the topics in reading. Publishers are very cautious about taking a book of a religious type. Thousands of splendid volumes go unpublished every year because some good man is not able to put up the guarantee to the publisher and on the other hand the publisher is not willing to take the risk. He knows what will sell and you cannot change his opinion and beat him at his own game.

Books have advanced in price on account of the cost of paper and labor, but a good book cannot be measured by the yard stick of the dollar. "He that loveth books will never want for a faithful friend, a wholesome counselor, a cheerful companion and an effectual comforter."

LIGHTHOUSE OBSERVATIONS

J. E. MASSEY

CHRISTIANITY LIBERALIZING JAPAN

Japan may be said to contain more than a million Christians within her borders, according to a correspondent of The Sun and New York Herald. He further writes that "If any one concludes that Christianity in Japan has been a failure, judging by the small number of converts, he makes a grave mistake. In a country like Japan, where the domestic and social customs have long been moulded by Buddhism, people naturally hesitate to denounce it publicly, even if they have already accepted Jesus as the Savior, are sending their children to Sunday school and are regularly attending church. This is pardonable in a sense, since the denunciation usually involves sharp criticism from unenlightened relatives and irksome family entanglements."

Though these Christians are called "informal Christians", they show the wonderful growth and change that is coming over this powerful nation. Such a change does not come over night, but rather comes with the dawning liberal and democratic movement called "Japanese Liberalism". This is which the world is yet to hear, is undoubtedly Christianity incarnate.

CHILDREN LEARN SELF-GOVERNMENT

American relief workers in the Near East Relief orphanages, have instituted a plan for teaching democracy and self-government to children. It is the plan of self-discipline among children which regards their relations and meets out punishment to offenders. So far it has proven successful. It is being applied among approximately 50,000 boys and girls in 219 orphanages in Asia Minor and Armenia. The medium of application is the children's court with native teacher as presiding officer and the children themselves as judges and marshals.

Following up the old proverb "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it," this practice of self-discipline in the early stages of a child's life seems to be wholly consistent in teaching these thousands of unfortunate waifs the principles of democracy. It corresponds in spirit to the Boy Scout movement in America, although it differs somewhat in form. A two-fold value is being proved by this system, says John R. Goshna in The Survey (New York). "Not only is it solving a difficult problem of discipline, but it is inculcating in the new generation or Armenians an understanding of the elements of self-government."

SAFEGUARDING OUR TIMBER

Few people realize that the timber of our country as a whole is being used five times as fast as it is being produced. Americans are careless and extravagant with the beautiful resources of timber lying at their hands, that the amazement with which the Europeans regard it will soon have a turning point so that we will have to regard it as a luxury too. The high prices of lumber are acting as a serious check to some of the main occupations such as farming, stock raising and dairying, thus tending to keep up the high cost of living. Inevitably, this means that Americans having a private or public control of the timbers of the country must have a foresight to guard against unnecessary extravagance and destructive forest fires lest America suffer from a future timber famine.

AMERICA'S LOVE FOR CANDY

An article in The Literary Digest entitled "America Eating More Candy" shows that since prohibition has come into effect, the United States has found somewhat of an outlet for its thirst in eating candy. Approximately 150,000,000 pounds were used for this purpose last year. The most conservative estimates on the subject indicate that the minimum consumption was at the rate of thirteen pounds per annum, an advance of over twenty per cent over 1916. The following conclusion is set forth:

"Prohibition, of course played a leading part in the sale of sweet stuffs. It has long been known that the habitual candy eater is seldom a drinker of fermented liquors in quantity. In fact several of the so-called 'cures' were based on that foundation, and patients were plied with the candy with the idea of overcoming their tastes with potent drinks."

The writer further illustrates that the reason for this departure to sugar is that it is scientific fact that in the process of human digestion sugar changes into alcohol and that a certain amount of stimulant results, particularly when the sugar is taken in excessive quantities.

Then the question arises: What shall we do about this enormous increase in eating sugar-products? Though it is apparently harmless, is it not true scientifically that this increase will ultimate in bad physical effects? Bad physical effects result in bad moral effects. This calls to mind the truth of the scriptures "Be ye temperate in all things," which also applies to eating candy.

PLAY AS A CHURCH FUNCTION

One of the great changes on the part of American Churches is that they are realizing that recreation is one of the functions of the Church. Especially in the case of churches in large cities, where thousands of children need wholesome physical training and intertainment, summer training camps have been established provided with competent directors to look after this training of the boys. Provisions are also made for similar out-door training and play for girls. Then within the church grounds, in many instances, play-grounds and in-door sports are encouraged thus serving a great need. In some cases, as that of the Rochester, N. Y. Brick church an institute was organized in 1910 which put up a new building with gymnasium, swimming-pool, club-rooms, and various recreation and educational facilities. Success attended the venture from the very beginning.

If the Church fails to meet this need and lets play go undirected, a dangerous gap is left open in the training of the material for future society,—boys and girls "who love to play".

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

A GREAT REVIVAL

Rev. P. T. Klapp conducted a great revival here the first week in August. There were twenty converts and reclaimations. Brother Klapp's faithful service and untiring Christian spirit has won for him a very warm place in the hearts of the people here, not only with the members of the Christian Church but with the other denominations of the town. We desire to thank Brother Klapp for his earnest work; also Brother Johnson, pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church for the splendid music rendered during the meeting.

HENDERSON LETTER

On September 16 members and friends of Fuller's Chapel Sunday school enjoyed their annual picnic in the grove near Miss Stewart's and on her premises. Through the kind invitation of the school and the kindness of Bro. W. S. Briggs who came and took us, the writer and wife were among the number of happy picnickers.

During the hours that were enjoyed together the social side of life was in evidence, when young and old met together and talked of things closest to their hearts and uppermost in their minds. Truly the social instinct is a natural one, and one which should not be despised, but should be cultivated and properly directed. There are few influences that are more helpful in restraining selfishness and developing the unselfish nature than coming in social contact with our fellow man in his joys and his sorrows; his pleasures and his pains. Nor can we measure the part the social instinct plays in our religious life.

The play instinct was also in evidence, especially was this noticeable when men of past middle age (one 78 years old) engaged in a game of marbles with as much zest and interest as if they were boys again. The play instinct is also very helpful. Childhood cannot properly develop without it. And there is nothing perhaps that conduces more to longevity and youthfulness in adults. In it we forget our cares and nature is allowed to "knit again the ravelled edge".

And last, but by no means least, we would mention that without which a picnic would be impossible, the dinner. It consisted of barbecue, chicken, and numerous delicacies, and all in such abundance that it was estimated that 150 partook, and yet there were about 100 baskets of barbecue left. I think all present voted it a good time.

SUFFOLK LETTER

The Sunday school lesson on the "Evils of Intemperance" for September 19, 1920, suggests to me a few important things that I have never seen in print nor heard in address. So much is said and written in these days on the subject of temperance, the question of beer and wines, the percentage of alcohol that is harmless in beverage drinks that some seem to conclude that the saloon, whiskey and brandy are the only danger-points in the question. I submit for thoughtful readers the fact that the art of modern distillation of alcoholic beverages came to Europe through the Arabs. "Albucasis, who lived in the twelfth century, is spoken of as the first Western philosopher who taught the art of distillation as applied to the preparation of spirits". It appears, therefore, that the modern art of distillation is only eight hundred years old.

Solomon wrote his wise warning in these words, "Be not among winebibbers; for the drunkard and the glutton shall come to poverty" a thousand years before Christ. Hence his exhortation against intemperance was given more than two thousand years before whiskey and brandy were ever made. The saloon is a United States institution and this nation is not two hundred years old. It is plain that Solomon saw the baleful influence of drunkenness when there was nothing but wine to intoxicate; and yet there are men who think they are wise, that favor wine and beer. So universal is the appetite for alcohol, and so universal is the habit of drink, that American citizens will violate law to make, to sell, and to buy illicit alcohol. The man who buys and drinks illicit alcohol is a lawbreaker as well as the man who makes and sells it. The maker could not sell his illicit product, if there were no buyers. When a man caught drunk is treated as the man caught making alcohol, much of the illicit work will cease.

The old fallacy of revenue deficit, if the saloon were removed, has been exploded by the facts under prohibition. The politician who held that position has his mouth closed by increased revenues and decreased crime. Much of the reports about "so much made, and it is worse than when we had the saloon" is the propaganda of wet interests or sheer ignorance. It is time for sophists to cease their vain efforts to convince an intelligent people that intoxicants have any beverage value for present-day civilization. Safety, efficiency, honesty, social purity, domestic integrity, and religious sincerity, all speak in tones of authority in favor of temperance and law enforcement. The pulpit can take no other position, the schools must teach temperance, great industries must have sober employees, and statesmen must recognize their obligation to stand for a sober nation. Personal appetite has no rights contrary to public safety, prosperity, and righteousness.

HOLY NECK

The evangelistic campaign at Holy Neck conducted by Rev. A. Victor Lightbourne and the blind pianist, Sam Davis, during the days of September 7-19 proved a glorious revival, we believe, not only for the church, but for the whole community.

From the beginning the attendance was good and soon reached the crowded house stage.

Folks came from a distance and brought their lunches so as to attend more than one service per day.

The message of both gospel and song was presented with force, and with the spirit's power bearing convictions in its sway. Forty-five were added to the church on the last Sunday of the meeting, most of whom were children and youths; but herein lies the strength and power of the future church. Aside from the number converted, there were many who came forward and re-consecrated their lives anew.

The offering to the evangelist was $575.00. During the last week of the meetings the evangelist and his player conducted morning services at the Holland church. Much interest was manifested in these meetings and offerings amounting to $100 were presented to the party.

EUROPE'S NEED OF MORAL SUPPORT

(By Rev. Charles S. Macfarland, General Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.)

For an American to be in Europe at this time is humiliating and sometimes almost disheartening. I found the people there confused. They do not know what to make of America's present aloofness. It seems to them in such sharp contrast to our former attitude during the war. Any expression of hope that America ultimately would assume her place in the League of Nations was received with tremendous enthusiasm and with evident satisfaction.

The peoples of Europe as a whole are doing magnificently. They all are setting themselves industriously, seriously to their terrific problems of rebuilding and reconstruction.

While, of course, their economic needs are very great, one of their greatest needs at the present moment is that of moral support and encouragement. They expect this from the great American nation. As they now look across the sea to us and find us engaged apparently in internal disputes, some of which appear to be rather unimportant matters, it looks to them like acting the part of Nero playing his fiddle while Rome burns.

It would be untrue, however, to say that the American nation and the American people, on the whole, had as yet irretrievably suffered in the estimation of the people of Europe. They still believe in us and look to us for help. The feeling was often expressed that if the American people were near enough to see and to hear the needs of Europe, all of us would take the attitude of such representative men as Mr. Vanderlip. On the other side they are still anxiously awaiting the time when the American people will know and understand these needs.

Thoughtful Europeans are a good deal disturbed about one phrase which frequently re-echoes across the sea—the words "America first." To them it sounds just a little like the words which used to come from across the Rhine—"Deutschland uber allies"—not in the same sense of aggressiveness but with something of the same selfishness. If these words are going to continue as a slogan for any large element in American life, they must be explained and interpreted to our friends in Europe for they certainly have a bad sound over there.

It has recently been asserted that faith in the League of Nations has waned in Europe. I think the real feeling is that the participation of the United States is essential to its ultimate success and that its present work cannot be regarded as any kind of test. The general feeling was that with America in it, the future would be full of hope. This feeling of dependence upon the United States is, I believe, as great as it was in 1918 when they awaited the coming of our troops.

NOTES

How about the Men and Millions offerings in your church? Do not make the error of getting behind.

Rev. J. F. Morgan's correct address is 27 Hardy Avenue, Berkley, Norfolk, Va., and not 18 as heretofore.

The Publishing Agent is now ready to make prices on church envelopes. Advise him your needs and get quotations.

Churches in the North Carolina Conference should bear in mind that the Conference year runs from November 1 to November 1.

The Christian Endeavor World, Boston, Mass., advances in price from $2.00 to $2.50, beginning December 1. The Presbyterian Standard, Charlotte, N. C., advanced from $2.50 to $3.00 the year on October 1.

Rev. R. F. Brown, Chapel Hill, N. C., says that we were in error in reporting that he had accepted the Pleasant Grove-Ingram pastorate. We regret the error, but our informant seemed sure.

THANK YOU, AND YOU, AND YOU

We thank you, kind friends, for the words that you have sent us during the past several days about the increase in THE SUN'S subscription price. These letters have been of the highest order, breathing a splendid spirit of genuine cooperation. The chorus has been: "It's worth it—and more". Many did not wait until October 1 to remit the new price, but rather gladly mailed their renewal at the new price.

We thank you, and you, and you.

Rev. E. M. Carter, Wadley, Ala., writes: "I am very much worried these days as I am withdrawing from my regular work. The doctors tell me that I must use my voice less. It is indeed a trying time with me."

The Mission Board of the Christian Church will meet in Dayton, Ohio, October 19. The trustees of the Christian Publishing Association will meet on the same date and in the same place. Both these boards have men on them from the Southern Convention.

Brother J. W. Stout of the Sanford church is custodian of the Men and Millions Fund there and looks after it in grand style. We noticed last Sunday that he was reminding the members as they passed out from Sunday school. Approaching Pastor White, Bro. Stout said: "Any Men and Millions money?" and the pastor smiled and reached for his envelope. He had it, too.

THE SUN'S Editor and family were privileged on last Sunday to worship with the Sanford congregation. The church began its annual revival. Pastor White has been called to that field for another year with an increase in salary of 100%. Brother White is a favorite among his people.

NOTICE

All churches in Eastern Virginia Conference will please send their reports, (but not their Conference money) to me at least one week before the date of Conference in order to give me time to make out my report to Conference.

"A Louisiana lady wrote George Weston, author of 'Mary Minds Her Business,' inquiring whether he was a man or woman. In replying the author wrote: 'I sing bass, smoke a pipe, swear when excited, wear homespun trousers, shave every morning, and find it hard to keep my neck from turning whenever Beauty passes by. I vote for Presidents, like to gossip, buy No. 9 shoes, walk with long strides, wear a mustache, whistle, whittle, sit in the sun, talk politics, and once even tried to chew tobacco, although (I hasten to add) without the least success. I can also walk on my hands for as long as seven steps.' This should have been conclusive."

COME AND BRING

The discovery of a fault in the world does not relieve a man from the duty of making the best of the world as he finds it. To find something one can say in excuse from a duty is not to escape the duty. Not a task in the world is to be performed under perfect conditions, or for masters of perfect justice and kindness. The need of the world is for men who, notwithstanding the hardships of this environment, nevertheless come and bring.—United Presbyterian.

O God, who givest harvest in the souls and lives of men, help us to choose and to prefer the gifts of Thy provision above what we may find or earn alone. Take away from us evil, that Thou mayest replace it with good. Help us to love so purely and sincerely both God and our neighbor that there shall be no room left in our hearts for envy or for hate. Teach us the values of the things which are from above, that smaller things may sink in our desire to their true place; and that all evil, seen in its true nature and proportion, may become repellent. In the name of Christ. Amen.—Isaac Ogden Rankin.

MISSIONARY

GROWTH OF MISSIONARY SENTIMENT

By Rev. J. G. Bishop, D. D.

The following clipping, by Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., is taken from the Herald of Gospel Liberty, of September 12, 1920:

"In her report to the convention the president of the Woman's Board, Mrs. W. A. Harper, showed that during the two years, 1912-1914, the women gave through their societies and regular channels, $1,960.27; during 1914-1916, they gave $3,116.25; during 1916-18, $5,585.97, an increase of 80 percent; 1918-20, $12,753.35, an increase of 130 per cent.

And this does not satisfy. It only inspires these Christian workers to greater vision and tasks. Their goal for 1920-22 is $25,000; new organizations, 50; new members, 2,000; new subscriptions to The Christian Missionary, 2,000."

The above figures, as I see, represents the missionary offerings that the women of the Southern Christian Convention have raised through their societies and other channels during the last eight years. A remarkable growth, which must be pleasing to the Lord, as well as to our Christian brotherhood.

Here I venture to offer a bit of history, which may be of interest to some of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

As Secretary of the Mission Department of the American Christian Convention, the writer used to visit some of the Conferences of the Southern Christian Convention, in the interest of the cause of missions. I remember attending a session of the North Carolina Conference, held at Ramseur. I do not recall the exact date, but I think only some eight, or possibly ten, years before the beginning of the dates mentioned in the clipping above.

At this Ramseur session of the Conference, I found one brother minister who had previously come from another denomination, and had brought with him a good degree of missionary sentiment. He and I planned as to how best to get the subject of missions before the Conference! A resolution was prepared, and we finally succeeded in getting it before the house, authorizing the Conference to create a Woman's Missionary Board. Yes, it was by the way of some woman's society that we could best succeed in getting any practical missionary, especially foreign missionary, sentiment, and work, started in our conferences in those days.

The question was on, and discussed pro and con. The Conference President strongly opposed its adoption! The question was put; and voted down by a majority vote! (This transaction was in the same Conference in which Elon College is located, and THE CHRISTIAN SUN is published. Some progress up to the present time?

Sure, sure, and for this we praise the Lord.) But it did not stay down: "Truth crushed to the earth will rise again." In this case made illuminously manifest by the figures quoted at the head of this article.

Was there any missionary fruit from the Ramseur Conference? Yes, we introduced our missionary magazine, The Christian Missionary and with little effort on our part secured quite a number of subscriptions. Indeed, several came to me, and asked to subscribe, an unusual occurrence.

An incident: At another session, of the same Conference, was it? At Oak Level, near Franklinton, at the close of a missionary address, by the writer, Sister Staley, at once rose to her feet, and handed me a good sized bill for missions. The heaven at work.

Another incident: The scene of this was a session of the Western Indiana Christian Conference, at a country church. I think it was in 1892. The writer, as Mission Secretary, was present, and was given fifteen minutes. At the close of the graciously allotted minutes the President roared out, "Time is up." Some woman requested him to give the speaker some more time, but he was inexorable; they, "had no more time to spare; the Conference must go on with its business." It did go on.

That afternoon the Mission Secretary, with Miss Fena Penrod, and a number of other women, standing around a big stump, out in the church yard, organized the Women's Missionary Board of the Western Indiana Christian Conference.

But seed was sown which has borne good fruit. From that Conference has gone, including wives, eight missionaries: A. D. Woodworth, and wife; Miss Tena Penrod and Miss Susie Gillett, now Mrs. Fry, who established and is carrying on our Girl's School at Utsunomiya, Japan; Brother McKnight, and wife. These six to Japan, and Brother Martin, and wife, to Porto Rico. Quite good so far, for the one Conference, which twenty-eight years ago had but fifteen minutes to give to the subject of missions.

Our women! God bless them! But for them I do not know when we ever would have been able to make a respectful start in our Foreign Missionary enterprise; in its scope and importance, the greatest enterprise of the age.

POINTERS IN HOME MISSION WORK

Tides of Immigration

The flow of immigrants to this country, which was arrested by the war, has recently been resumed in increasing volume. The number arriving in April, 1920, was 40,135; in May, 47,935; in June, 58,823; in July, 66,021; and in August, 73,382. It is estimated that the month of September will show at least 80,000. The largest number is of the Italian race. Then the nationalities represented are in the following order: Greeks, Syrians and Armenians, English, and Belgians. To meet these incoming multitudes, the Committee on Ports of Entry, which was formed several years ago by the Home Mission Council, and now includes in its membership Catholics and Jews, as well as representatives of the Protestant denominations, has increased its missionary workers at Ellis Island from 7 to 15, and is prepared to give adequate assistance in welcoming, as the Church should do, the strangers who seek our shores.

Alaskan Comity

As an expression of comity and cooperation between denominations working in Alaska, The Home Missions Council reports that mission work at Cape Prince of Wales hitherto carried on by the Congregational Home Missionary Society has been transferred to the Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A. This is an adjustment which permits better work by both bodies.

Helping the Country Colored Church

In Trenton, South Carolina, a Southern white layman, Dr. Dillard, of Charlottesville, Virginia, has for several years held an annual institute for Colored preachers. The work is especially for the country preachers, handicapped as they are by narrow opportunities, yet the best leaders the mass of country Negroes have. Over 150 attended the institute this year. White laymen from Virginia and Louisiana gave simple, practical courses in the Bible, and the minister's relations, social and spiritual, to neighborhood life. Dr. Gregg, of Hampton, talked daily on the preparation of sermons; and a capable Colored layman held a class in church records and finances. Other teachers, white and black, covered Sunday school work and home and community needs.

The appreciation of the preachers was inspiring to the men who planned the work, as well as to the local white ministers and laymen who have cooperated in it from year to year. Nor is the giving all on one side. The oldest preacher in attendance was an ex-slave, the Rev. Solomon Simmons, former carriage-driver to Governor Pickens and a preacher for over fifty years. His dark old face is alight with good will to all the world; and one of the white college men who taught the classes writes of him, "It is a liberal education to hear that old man pray."

An Indian Memorial

When land allotments were distributed to the Creek Indians, Eastman Richard was in bad repute with the white government agents.

They thought they were giving him the most barren and worthless land that could be found. After a few years, however, oil was discovered and Richard and his son Samuel became two of the richest Indians in the country, worth more than a million dollars. Samuel went to school at Bacone College near Muskogee, Oklahoma. In his second year he died. His father has for several years desired to erect a memorial to him, and has now contributed $50,000 in liberty bonds to the school for a boys' dormitory to be named the Samuel Richard Memorial Hall. The money indeed comes from the estate of the son. Other Indians are interested in public enterprises among their people. Two of them, Mrs. Polokee and Mrs. Bosen, have within a few days contributed $50,000 for a girls building at the Murrow Indian Orphans' Home near Bacone College. Two others have presented the Orphanage with eighty acres of land for which they paid $12,000. Bacone College is rapidly becoming one of the foremost if not the foremost of our Indian schools. This year twenty-one tribes were represented among the students and scores if not hundreds of students have had to be turned away because of lack of accommodations.

Getting Results in Alaska

In June, a traveller to Alaska reported to the Home Missions Council that the ship on which he was a passenger carried, contrary to law, a large consignment of liquors. Reports were made to the proper officers of the government; an investigation was made; the facts were found to be as alleged; and the violators of law were dealt with. This means that to this extent the natives of Alaska are protected from "fire water" and debauchery.

WOMAN'S REALM

(All items for this department should be sent to Mrs. J. W. Harrell, Burlington, North Carolina.)

MISSION STUDY

We have a growing conviction that the great outstanding need in our mission work is a better understanding of the task which confronts us. It is our opinion that missionary education has a large place in the foundation upon which mission work must be built. As missionary workers, we should use every means of increasing educational facilities among our people. We will never become sufficiently interested in the peoples of the earth, who need our help, until we know the actual condition existing among them. Some one has said, "Know and you will feel, know and you will pray, know and you will help," therefore a knowledge of the needs and sufferings of humanity will move us to action as nothing else.

Mission study is perhaps one of our greatest needs just now.

Programs have been prepared based on the study books for the year. I am sure we have all felt that we do not have sufficient time to devote to our study books, there are so many things to claim our attention at the regular meetings.

We cannot treat these great and vital questions as fully as we should in a program meeting. I do not discredit the plan of basing the program upon the study book, this is good as far as it goes, but in addition to this let us organize mission study classes. Put on five or six weeks of intensive study, meeting weekly. Possibly your pastor would give the hour for the mid-week prayer meeting, so that the men could attend.

In the rural churches where it is not possible to get the people together, you could organize into groups for study or reading circles. It should be our aim to get every woman, boy and girl in our churches to read mission literature and to acquaint themselves with the work of our mission fields. Our children are reading almost every thing they come across today. How necessary that we, as parents, shall put in their way the best of literature. Surely all parents desire the best things possible for their children. In our homes should be found the kind of literature that will help mould character and fashion ideals in this plastic, impressionable age. The mission literature, that is being published today, is among the very best that is coming from the press. Our Study Books are gems of literature, and will be a valuable addition to any library.

Let every Society, wherever it is possible, organize a mission study class during the month of November, using the home mission text-book, "The Church and The Community." Since this book was written for the whole Church—men as well as women, Mrs. Morrill suggests that we urge the men to join us in our study class. "The Bible and Missions" is our foreign text-book.

While these books deserve more than a casual reading, if it is not possible for you to become a member of a mission study class, order a book and read it and place it in your library.

MITE BOX OPENING

The Burlington Missionary Society held its Mite Box Opening September, 29, at the home of Mrs. C. B. Riddle. Mrs. D. P. Barrett was present and gave an interesting address. Mrs. Barrett is an attractive speaker. She gave us valuable information concerning the Porto Rican people and our work in Ponce. At the close of her address, she was told that she was wanted at the door; there she found little Ruth Teague Riddle with an express wagon filled with useful gifts. We are told that several other Societies have "showered" Mrs. Barrett in a similar manner.

Keep evil in check by its opposite. Promote the good in whatever form is possible. Counteract error by publishing the truths it would ignore or deny. Circumvent the baneful and corrupting by planting and watering by its side the pure and blessed. We are far too fond of the violent, and too little inclined to the constructive, which calls for patience and humility. Kill the weeds with flowers, the tares with the corn, for there is an energy in righteousness, truth, love, and beauty which the malignant growths of evil cannot withstand.—W. L. Watkinson.

IDEALS

Not every one who is everlastingly talking about ideals has a worthy one, and fewer still of these professional idealists are following even the small ideal they have. Christ's ideals are so exalted and inspiring they can not be glibly put into fine words. So the man possessing them puts them into deeds, humbly realizing that he is so far short of them he has little to say about them.—Eastern Methodist.

DEVOTIONAL

NEARING HOME

Anything spoken, written or intimated concerning home ransacks our whole nature and fills us with delighted pleasure. The shadows of time lengthen—the world grows old, cold and less interesting and inviting to many—the way appears long and very tiresome—while there is a large class studying with increasing interest in the school of experience and observation; and they are real happy as they move onward to the goal of their anticipation. Nothing impairs their vision nor hinders their progress, because they are looking for a permanent kingdom whose maker and governor is God. Time, space, nor anything else, impedes them as they press their way homeward, looking not at the things which are seen, but to greater things beyond.

Once a patient was exceedingly ill. He did not expect to recover, but with glad surprise to himself and others he did. Many anxious days passed during his sickness and restoration. After showing proper respect and appreciation to the doctors and nurses of the hospital who had given him much careful attention, he paid his bills, began to pack up and get ready to start home. His very looks, actions, and every move he made plainly told that he was so glad of the opportunity of going home, coming out of the sick room and starting again on his way to health and home caused him to look glad and joyful. And, no doubt, as he was nearing home his heart was so full of inexpressible pleasure. So when the poor soul, wounded and sick with sin is healed by Jesus it rises higher with triumphant assurance that it is nearing home. An ingenious sculptor of Brazil, with chisel in one hand and mallet in the other carved out of a rough block of marble from a distant quarry a beautiful statue of a young man nearing home. The features appeared with untold gladness as the white cold, marble stood still and told it all nearing home. That picture was so deeply impressive that the ones who saw it stood, with increasing pleasure, studying it.

The Prince of peace in looking over His work and in contemplating the thought of nearing home—of going to his Father's home where all the redeemed of every world would live, speaks tenderly in these words: I have glorified thee on the earth; I have finished the work which thou gavest me to do. And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self, with the glory which I had with thee before the world was.

There is a great host of marching pilgrims nearing home. They are on the last division of the journey. Having read, heard and sung about the ideal home, and seen it painted in glowing and flowery terms by gifted writers and speakers they are looking anxiously for it, and with glad expectation of enjoying their new home.

It is no wonder the bands on the American battle-ships were playing "Home Sweet Home" on their return homeward from their long dangerous voyage over the way. All on board of them as they came in sight of their landing place were profoundly glad that they had made a safe and successful voyage and were nearing home. No doubt the bands were active playing national airs but none sounded sweeter nor felt dearer to them than "Home, Sweet Home." The very act of nearing home amid thundering cannon, waving flags and a hearty welcome home was a happy time with them.

The thought comes over and over to the Christians that when the voyage of life is over and they are nearing home while the heavenly hosts sing the new song to welcome them, the redeemed ones will join the united symphony until heaven shall be full of His praise.

THE ETERNAL RECOMPENSE

Still in my breast, despite its load of sorrow,

Despite the pressure of o'erwhelming care,
I sense the thrilling joy of a tomorrow

Whose dawn shall lighten up the darkness there.

I sense a moment nigh when, woe abating,

I'll tread the path that leads on to release,
And find a cure for troubles dire awaiting,
Safe in the everlasting arms of Peace.

For life and Love so close are interweaving
That none can live and yet be portionless;
And days must come with hours all retriving
The dreary years of unfound happiness;

And he who shares of Love is not yet ready,

Whose measure of its joy is yet unknown,
Need only keep his Faith both sure and steady

To come sometime, somewhere, into his own!

HE CANNOT BE LOST

How easy it is to crowd Jesus out. The world has always done it. The inn at Bethlehem was not open to his advent. Herod made Jerusalem unsafe for his infancy. Nazareth expelled him as soon as he began to be noticed. Capernaum did not endure him long. He had no place to lay his head. When he healed the demoniac the people of the place begged him please go away. Jerusalem welcomed him for a little and then cried out for his death. But here is the marvel, that though he always goes when people spurn him, they cannot drive him out of the world. In their very refusal of him they are forced to recognize his power and deal with his influence. The more the Christ is buffeted and despised and rejected, the larger and clearer grows his image in the thought of the race. Even when men clamor for the abolition of his Church, they pay tribute to his person.

The unwanted Christ is the unescapable Christ. He is driven out of synagogues only to turn up in market places. When he is denied by a Church, he appears at peace conferences. If a nation legislates his name out of its documents, it finds his cross on its banners. What a blind world it is, that it cannot see its Lord! And what blind followers of his we are so often, that we fear lest he should not win his way!—Exchange.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

PROGRESS ON NEW BUILDING

We are climbing on toward the goal of $20,000 by November first. We just lacked a small amount getting the amount down to $1,000 in our report this week. Just a little over one thousand to raise by November first to make the twenty thousand for this year.

We have received several real encouraging letters with checks from Sunday schools that were behind in their dues, telling us that they had just overlooked mailing in their monthly contributions. We have had several letters enclosing checks from Sunday schools that had not been making the monthly contributions this year. It always makes us happy to have another school to fall in line. If all our Sunday schools would make this monthly offering it would make the burden of this work so much lighter and the two pretty little girls we had to turn away last week, because we had no room, might have a place here where they could be trained and given an opportunity in life. If your school is not making this monthly contribution, join in now. We need your help. We need your sympathy.

Think, dear friends, of the many little homeless, fatherless, and motherless boys and girls who are roaming the streets and drifting, we know not where, that might be helped if your school would lend a helping hand to this work.

Why is it that we are more interested in other things than we are our little helpless human beings? The most precious jewels in the sight of God—made in His own image. Shall we not help them that they may grow more like Him as they grow older?

The work on the "Children's Home" is moving on nicely, and we hope to have this building up and the roof on by Christmas. We lack much of having enough money to complete this building. We are building in faith, believing that God will put it in the hearts of His people to contribute, that it may be completed and the little helpless tots who are waiting for a home with us may be given a place.

Don't you want to make an investment that will take time and eternity to tell what great good it accomplished? If you do, then mail me your check to help complete this building. Then be happy as I feel you will.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: I guess you think I have entirely forgotten you and the little cousins, but indeed I have not. My daddy has been real ill since I wrote you. Mother has to look after him. He is improving some now and has gone to the opening at Elon College. I miss him when he goes away. Grandmother Poythress has been sick and I suspect he will visit her before he returns. I am eighteen months old and am some talker. Enclosed find $2.00. I will try not to wait four months before I write again. Love and best wishes—Olive D. Poythress, Jr.

I owe you an apology for this letter not reaching the SUN office before this date. It got into the package with the bills instead of the letters and I overlooked it. I am always glad to get your letters and hope to hear from you often.—"Uncle Charley"

Dear Uncle Charley: I have been very sick and mother has neglected writing for me, so I will enclose my August and September dues. I hope all the little cousins are well. My brothers have started to school and I have to stay at home with mother.—Cecil Mercer.

I regret that you have been real sick but am glad you are better. I hope to see you while in Berkley the second Sunday.—"Uncle Charley"

Dear Uncle Charley: We are a few days late this time. We have been sick with colds but are better now. Wish you and all the children could come and eat grapes with us. Enclosed find our dues.—Virginia, Pearl and W. T. Ayscue.

Now, I would be delighted to eat grapes with you, but the only way I see for all of us to enjoy them will be for you to send me some.—"Uncle Charley"

KATIE'S TEMPTATION

Katie looked longingly at the package on the library table. She knew what it was—or thought she did. Mother had sent off for Katie's winter coat and hat, and the package looked just as if it held those very things. She could not wait to see the handsome dark blue coat and velvet hat they had chosen, and here they were, just beneath her hands—and mother was out!

"I wonder if she would care if I opened it," thought Katie. "It's for me, anyway. I don't believe she would—"

Her hand touched the string; a pair of scissors lay on the table—how easy. Then suddenly she drew back her hand. "It's for mother; I mustn't touch it."

But she could not help looking and longing until a thought flashed into her mind.

"Lead us not into temptation." She had prayed that prayer that very morning, yet here she was almost ready to yield to the temptation to meddle.

"God doesn't want me to open it. I'll ask Him to help me not to—and I'll go away from the temptation." She put the scissors on the table and ran quickly out of the room.

It was very hard to wait, but running away from the sight of the box made it easier to forget it. Keeping busy helped, too. She practiced a long, hard exercise, and by the time she had finished, mother came home. Then Kate ran to her.

"O, mother, please open the box! I ran away from it."

"Ran away from it?" Mother looked puzzled. "What do you mean, little daughter?"

Then Katie told the whole story of her temptation. Mother looked at the package and laughed.

"My dear little girl, it is well you did resist the temptation to open that package, for you would only have had a great disappointment. That is a box for the Red Cross, and you would have found only sweaters and clothing. I am very glad my little girl has learned the great lesson of how to meet and resist temptation—by prayer for God's help, and to put yourself as far as possible from it. 'Lead us not into temptation' is the prayer for us all, for we are all tempted to sin, and if we try in our own strength to resist it we shall fail.

"And now, in good time, here is your box by the evening mail, and you may open it at once with my permission and approval."

The coat and hat were all that any little girl could have wished, and how glad Katie was now that she had not spoiled her own pleasure by meddling without leave.

WHAT I LIVE FOR

I live for those who love me,
For those I know are true,
For the Heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit too,
For all human ties that bind me,
For the task that God has assigned me,
For the bright hopes yet to find me,
And the good which I can do.

I live to learn their story
Who've battled for my sake;
The patriot crowned with glory,
The martyr at the stake,
Bards, prophets, heroes, sages—
The noble of all the ages,
Whose deeds crown history's pages
And time's great volume make.

I live to hold communion
With all that is divine,
To feel there is a union
'Twixt nature's heart and mine,
To profit by affliction,
Reap truths from fields of fiction
Grow wiser from conviction,
And fulfill God's great design.

I live to hail that season
By gifted ones foretold,
When men shall live by reason,
And not alone for gold,
When, man to man united
And every wrong thing righted,
The whole world shall be lighted,
As Eden was of old.

JUST BE GLAD

O, Heart of mine, we shouldn't Worry So!
What we've missed of calm we couldn't
Have, you know!
What we've met of storming pain,
And of sorrow's driving rain,
We could better meet again
If it blow.

For we know not every morrow
Can be sad:
So forgetting all the sorrow
We have had,
Let us fold away our fears,
And put by our foolish tears,
And through all the coming years
Just be glad.

CONFERENCE CONSIDERATIONS

At the last session of the Southern Christian Convention there were several items adopted in the various reports that should be considered by the Conferences that are soon to meet. We, therefore, submit these items as a reminder to delegates of the Conferences.

Report of Revision Committee

Your Committee held a meeting of nine sessions at Elon College, N. C., August 12, 13, 14, 15, 1918, with all the members present, and Drs. J. W. Wellons, J. U. Newman and W. P. Lawrence, sitting with us by invitation.

The result of that meeting has been published in The Christian Sun, with request for criticism, and none has come to the Committee.

The principal changes include the elimination of chapter IV to end of Part I; all of Part III; and the suggestion that Scripture reference only be printed in the margins.

Nothing has passed without the unanimous vote of the Committee and the approval of others present.

There has been no real demand for the publication of a new edition of Principles and Government, during the biennium, and hence we have waited for the action of the Convention upon what we have done. If you approve what we have reported, we suggest that the Committee be continued that they may review their work, thoroughly, before publication.

We will not ask your time to hear the book, as revised, read, unless you request it.

Sincerely submitted,
W. W. STALEY,

MISSION STUDY BOOKS

The Church and The Community.

"The Church and the Community" is a book prepared for the study of Home Missionary Societies. Many important phases of the church's relation to community life are included in this book of six chapters, which are briefly outlined as follows: I. Community Life, which points out that the growth of the community movement is a challenge to the Church to assume leadership in building up community life. II. Economic Factors, the aim of which is to show that it is the duty of all Christians to understand and be vitally concerned in their tendencies. III. Cooperation, to show that the churches should investigate and understand the growing possibilities of cooperation for advancing the spirit of helpfulness and brotherhood in the community. IV. Homes and Housing, to show that it is the privilege and obligation of the church to help provide a happy and wholesome home life for every man, woman and child in the community. V. Complex Community Problems, deals with the variety and types of difficult and complex situations confronting church leaders. VI. Community Leadership. There is shown in this chapter the responsibility and opportunity of local churches, especially those of home mission agencies, to train for leadership.

The Bible and Missions

"The Bible and Missions" is an illustrated book of 228 pages devoted to the study of Foreign Missions. There are six chapters in the book. Each chapter is preceded by a brief outline of the chapter that is to follow and this enables the Society to study it as a whole or in part.

Chapter I deals with The Missionary Message of the Old Testament, and its aim is to show that the Bible is God's missionary text book.

Chapter II contains a discussion of The Missionary Message of the New Testament and points out the fact that the principles laid down in the Old Testament are fully revealed in the New.

Chapter III, Part Two, sets forth the work of translators through whose labors the Bible has become the possession of the race and has as its caption Every Man in His Own Tongue. It also traces the history of the early translations and versions.

Chapter IV treats of The Travels of the Book and contains an account of how the work of the National Bible Societies have helped the missionary movement.

Chapter V points out the affect of the Bible as seen in Christian nations—also its influence in non-Christian lands.

The sixth and last chapter of the book, under the title The Leaves of the Tree, points out the opportunity and responsibility of the Church, and states in a very definite way means and methods by which a person may help to make the Bible known to those who know it not.

MARRIAGES

SYKES-MELTON

A quiet but beautiful wedding was solemnized at the parsonage of the First Christian church, Richmond, Va., at seven o'clock on the morning of September the 29, 1920, when Mr. John W. Sykes led Miss Fannie Katherine Melton to the marriage altar. They were attended by Mr. R. A. Garnett and Miss Gertrude Williamson. The writer spoke the words that made them one and they left on the early train for a honeymoon trip to North Carolina.

The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. William W. Sykes and is a member of the Richmond Christian church and president of the young men's Bible Class. The bride is the daughter of Mrs. Ida R. Melton. May the Lord richly bless them in their new relationship.

OBITUARIES

BURNS

Mrs. Sarah A. Burns, of Stanley, Va., died suddenly September 24, 1920, aged eighty-one years, eight months, and fourteen days. The funeral was conducted and her body was buried at Leaksville, Va., September 26. She connected herself with Leaksville Christian church early in life, and had been a regular attendant at services of her church until about a year before she died. She is survived by one daughter, four grandchildren, and three great-grandchildren. The funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. A. J. Painter of Stanley, Va.

R. P. CRUMPLER

GUNTER

The Christian church of Sanford in particular and the town of Sanford in general received a severe shock upon the announcement of the death of Mrs. J. D. Gunter, which occurred in Gastonia, N. C. September 7, 1920, at the home of her son. Upon the advice of her physician, she had made a trip to Asheville and was returning when she grew rapidly worse.

The remains were brought from Gastonia to her home in Sanford, and after the funeral, her body was laid to rest in the cemetery at Shallow Well.

She married John D. Gunter in 1881 and was the mother of ten children—Seven of whom are living, and attended her funeral. They are: E. D., of Richmond, Va.; J. U., Jonesboro; H. B., of Greensboro; Charles W., of Gastonia; Miss Ruth, Greensboro; Miss May, of Jonesboro, and Jennie, a student of Elon College. She is also survived by her aged mother, Mrs. E. A. Crawford, of Greensboro; a brother, Mr. W. P. Denny, of Brownwood, Texas; a half brother, Mr. E. A. Crawford, of Mebane; a half sister, Mrs. H. C. Simpson, of Greensboro; a step sister, Mrs. Emma Cheek, of Ore Hill, and ten grandchildren.

Nothing was left undone by her church and the citizens of Sanford to extend to the family their sympathy. The crowd at the funeral and at the cemetery, was immense, and the floral tribute exceeded anything that many had ever seen. It was a great effort to speak the praise of a noble life.

Sanford church feels a loss in all our departments of work because of her death, but there is a feeling of joy that we had so long, such a noble soul, and that she was so good as to be mourned by all.

A LITTLE FUN

Two small boys were conversing, and the smaller of the two remarked, "My uncle has a wooden leg."

"Huh," replied the other, "that's nothing. My sister has a cedar chest."

"Yes," said the storekeeper, "I want a good, bright boy to be partly indoors and partly outdoors."

"That's all right," said the applicant, "but what becomes of me when the door slams shut?"

"When I told the man of your proposal he gave vent to a loud series of equine exclamation."

"What's that you said?"

"I said he burst out in a horse-laugh."—Baltimore American.

Maggie: "Sure, Miss, and it's a hard life I bane living."

Mrs. Smith: "Didn't I tell you, Maggie, 'if you marry in haste, you repent at leisure,?'"

Maggie: "Faith, and I've had no lazure!"—Life.

Mrs. Pilgrim: "Now, these boys air sister's."

The Census Taker: "No; you mean brothers."

Mrs. Pilgrim: "No, sir; I mean jes what I say; they are my sister's. She lives nex' door in the red house."

The Gospel Will Not Fail

The gospel will not fail. The Lord Jesus shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied. The kingdoms of this world shall become the Kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. But the Church may fail, may be set aside for another instrument. Today is the day of salvation for our Protestant churches. If we harden our hearts and close our eyes and refuse the plain call of God, other generations may see in us another Israel whose narrowness of vision was condemned by the very Scripture in which is our boast. :-: :-: :-: :-: :-: :-:

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

DIVORCES

The press of the country is having much to say about divorcees. The increased number of divorcees is only a logical conclusion of some features of the recent war. Marrying in haste is not a safe piece of business in times of peace as well as in times of war. Sweethearts were summoned to defend their country. Floating flags, sounding drums and other emblems of inspiration were the means of much hasty action and much of this hasty action was in the matter of marriage. We heard much about war brides and now we are hearing much about divorcees. Let it be to the credit or the discredit of women, they love a man in uniform. It is often remarked that women go "crazy" about a soldier, many of them did go "crazy" about some soldier and were not satisfied until they got a soldier husband and now they are not satisfied until they get a divorcee. It seems that some of them thought that they were marrying a soldier of peace but from the court records some of them have changed their minds and consider that they married a piece of a soldier.

This article is no condemnation of soldier husbands nor war brides. The lesson is this: The quickening spirit of the war caused many hasty marriages. They were not all by men in uniform. Some war brides are making good wives and are maintaining model homes and some soldier husbands are making just as good men as the world will ever know.

Thirty-three divorcees were granted in two days in a North Carolina court recently. This all happened in one county, while an adjoining county exceeded that record. Such seems to be the program all over the country. It seems to be no trouble to get a divorce. We note that the court in many instances merely hears the record read and divorce is ordered. Divorce is denied in very few cases. So long as the laws of the land are lax, entering into such solemn contracts will also be lax. There was once a time when divorce seemed to be a disgrace, but now the more divorcees that a woman can get seems to popularize her that much more. This is a shame upon American ideals.

There are two principal remedies that must be applied: The home life must be purified that ideals may be higher among men and women, or society must be purified that young people, young men especially, shall not be lead into dens that betray their manhood. We believe that a clean life upon the part of both the bride and the groom is one of the chief essentials of a happy marriage.

A vow taken at the marriage altar is a solemn thing and should not be broken in a little routine in the courts. We want to see the day when greater emphasis will be placed upon clean living, the solemnity of marriage, and the disgrace of divorce. If these things are emphasized and the judges of our courts send a few of these petitioners for divorce back home with a good lecture on right living, we believe that the situation can be amended.

"The years following, being war years, can not be taken as normal. But last year, the first full year of peace, there were 37,583 marriages, while the local judges handling divorce cases estimated there would be between 5,000 and 6,000 divorcees. Taking the mean of these two figures, or 5,500, it would show one divorcee for every 6.83 marriages, or an increase of approximately 23 per cent over the divorcee rate of 1911. Three decades more, at that rate, will see divorcees equaling the number of marriages."

"IS OUR NATION CHRISTIAN?"

The above question is quoted from The Presbyterian Standard in its issue of August 18. It is usually considered that our nation is Christian, but The Standard raises the question as to whether it can be rightly called Christian or not. We quote this from that exchange:

"When President Wilson took office, there soon developed the hope in many hearts that he proposed to administer the affairs of our government on Christian principles, and that he would endeavor to get nations to deal with each other on the high plane of Christian ethics. Why should he not? He is a pronounced Christian, clearly recognizing the obligation of individuals to deal with other individuals according to the moral teachings of Christ. Governments are made up of individuals. It seems perfectly obvious therefore that governments should be guided by the same ethical principles that guide individuals.

"In demanding the repeal of the Panama Canal tolls bill, in his dealings with Mexico, in his calling in council the representatives of the Southern American Republics, and in other matters, it seemed evident that President Wilson was seeking to have nations regulate their intercourse with each other by the high and sacred teachings of the Bible. In the conduct of the war, he persistently and consistently held up as the justification and motive of our government the lofty idealism of Christianity. In the famous fourteen points set forth as the basis on which peace should be made, he evidently meant to embody the requirements of a Scriptural humanitarianism. In his readiness to accept for our government a mandate over Armenia, he could have been actuated by nothing else than a desire to give effect to the altruistic injunctions of the New Testament.

"How far has our Nation shown a willingness to follow his leadership? Until the political parties developed a bitter antagonism, there was wide, if not general approval, of his views. But in more recent times, the interest of party has been the controlling consideration. Take the League of Nations. It contains some elements of distinctly Christian character. It exalts the claims of common humanity; it would have the strong to bear the burdens of the weak; it demands that each nation shall look not merely on its own things, but also on the things of others. Now the significant point is that the fight against the League has centered on these elements that are most Christian. The clamant objections to it, is that it would have us imperil our interests for the good of others. Americanism is the battle cry. As interpreted by a violent partisanship, it means stark, stolid selfishness. It means America first, last and all the time. Americanizing the League means paganizing it, stripping it of every pledge that might possibly mean sacrifice for us, or furnish assurance of help to the oppressed people of other lands. No fraction of sovereignty must be surrendered, and no promise must be given of a response to the cry of distress from beyond our borders. It is claimed in vague and general terms that we can be counted on to fulfill all our moral obligations to the world at large, but we must be left absolutely free to choose our own time and way. We will not put our hand to a contract, binding us, along with other nations, to play the part of the good Samaritan."

CHAPLAINS APPOINTED

(Contributed)

In conformity with the new Army Reorganization Law providing for 240 chaplains, or one to each 1,200 officers and men, the War Department on September 27th announced the selection and appointment of 89 new chaplains for the Regular Army, out of 300 applicants who had served as officers throughout the war. These aspirants were carefully examined by different boards of officers as to their professional, mental and physical qualifications. Those who survived this test were then carefully inquired into from the standpoint of clerical fitness through the various denominational agencies.

The clergymen who were selected have been commissioned with rank from July 1, 1920. They are all picked men with war service, and the Army expects that they will be of the greatest possible help to the young men who will be recruited in the future as soldiers.

After careful study by representatives of the War Department, the proportion of the denominations was tentatively fixed by Secretary of War Baker at 25 per cent for the Roman Catholic Church, 70 per cent for the Protestant Churches, and 5 per cent for adjustments that cannot be made on strictly mathematical apportionment. This conclusion is based on a careful survey of census reports, as well as the religious census of 1916.

Quoting Colonel John T. Axton, the new Chief of Chaplains:

"All of those who were graded 'excellent' by the Board of Review, no matter what rank they attained during the War, seem to have been made captains, and apparently all of those who were graded 'very good' by the Board and had reached the rank of captain have been recommended for retention in that grade.

"I feel that an unusual trust has been reposed in every accepted candidate. Together we must justify the confidence the various boards have expressed in this selected group of men. The opportunity for service is unexcelled. Study and painstaking work will be needed to touch helpfully the lives of many people, and only by doing a forceful work for men can our new Army chaplains retain the fine opinion that the men who recommended them for appointment have expressed. People watch the chaplain, they note his actions and his conversation, and his opinions have great weight and should be carefully arrived at and clearly expressed.

"From the great bulk of men in the service we are getting reports that warm us through and through. Our chaplains are rendering service that cannot be recorded in figures nor incorporated in any statistical report. Influencing men for righteousness, keeping families happy and contented, visiting the sick, calling on the families of the enlisted men, helping men who are in trouble, conducting strong services and Sunday schools; in short, as our Master did, they are 'going about doing good.'

"It is probable that all chaplains will soon be receiving a small monthly allowance from their denomination for the incidental expenses of their work that are not met by the Government appropriation. The War Time Commission of Protestant Churches has recommended it, and many denominations have taken kindly to the idea of an annual allotment of $300."

In a letter to the new chaplains, Col. Axton says, in part:

"I believe in organization; otherwise I should not have accepted the fascinating appointment that has come to me. 'There is no sin in order—there is little virtue in formlessness.' Organization has its limitations, and the success of our work will be dependent upon more than mere form. Individual fidelity, poise of mind, serenity of spirit, a large outlook, patience and good temper, energy and enthusiasm, and above all an overmastering love of Christ, will be essential to success.

"To fashion an office that shall be an agency of service to the Army. To give form and order to our common activities, to join minds in thinking out common practical problems, to inaugurate measures looking toward the stability and larger influence of all agencies in the Army that promote the moral and religious life, to suggest to the craft programmes, standards, and methods, to put the wisdom and resources of the whole fellowship at the disposal of its every member no matter how remote his station; these are some of the aims of the Chief of Chaplains.

"I have no illusions concerning the responsibilities of this office or its delicate problems, and am therefore praying for strength for the duties and for grace that my mind may be so adjusted as to accept justified criticism promptly and wholeheartedly. Should the Chief of Chaplains attempt to dictate what any chaplain should think or say theologically, he would make quick discovery of his limitation. But there is place for kindly advice and suggestions."

WOMAN'S REALM

(All items for this department should be sent to Mrs. J. W. Harrell, Burlington, North Carolina.)

A FORWARD LOOK

With the coming of October, church activities begin in real earnest. The fall programs have been completed and are being put into execution. Rally Day is over and we are pondering the question as to how we may conserve the results of this great day, with all of its inspiration and zeal for renewed activities.

In missionary circles, we are planning larger programs. We are beginning to realize that this is our year of opportunity. We want to do our part in helping to spread the Gospel at home and abroad. We are beginning to realize as we have not in the past that "The business of the whole Church is to give the gospel to the whole world".

It is essential, at the beginning of a season's work to lay plans for the task which confronts us. We will not accomplish much if we undertake in an aimless, haphazard way. When we, as housekeepers, fail to plan our work we see little accomplished when we come to the close of day. Remember, too, that no plan works itself. The success of the work depends upon the effort we put into it. What are your plans for the future? For November, we are, or should be, preparing for the Thank-offering meeting, which is one of the very best programs for the year. Let every Conference President urge the Societies of her Conference to hold a Thank-offering service. Let every local Society plan to give this program. Send out written invitations to each member and put forth every effort to secure a large attendance. Wherever it is possible, give an open meeting at the church. Your pastor will gladly give you the evening service. Keep much in prayer for the success of the occasion.

Our blessings are without number, so let every one bring an offering for the extension of God's kingdom. What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits to me?

The Thank-offering program has been printed in leaflet form and will be published in the November number of the Christian Missionary. You can obtain these programs with help for carrying them out from the Literature Department, Room 25, C. P. A. Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.

OUR CRADLE ROLL

We would be glad to know if our Conference Cradle Roll Superintendents have written to the churches of their conference where there are no Rolls, urging them to start the work. You will have to get busy if you want to include the new ones in your report at the annual meeting. You will find the names of all churches in your conference in The Annual for 1920.

A LETTER FROM THE ELON SOCIETY

Dear Mrs. Harrell:

May I have a short space in your column to tell in a few words something about our Missionary Society at Elon? Its growth, in membership, finances and general interest is manifested by the members. We have about forty members all of whom are always ready and willing to do their part in any manner that is for the good of the Society and the cause we represent. Our Society is a delightful band of workers. We are constantly growing in membership because Mrs. N. G. Newman, who is on our Membership Committee, hardly ever fails to bring us a new member at each meeting. I tell you when she approaches a sister and asks her to join with us, she might as well then and there give Mrs. Newman her name for Sister Newman makes her visits frequent until the new member is presented to our Society. If Sister Newman fails the first time, she will "try, try again." Our Society is not a wealthy Society but each member is always ready and willing to give her part when she is called upon. Now one should not feel like she is not doing her part if she does not give everything, because there is, of course, a limit to the purse. Our meetings are very informal. We like for every member to feel free while in the meetings to discuss any topic that is brought up for the good of the Society. After we have finished our regular order of business we then turn over the meetings to the leaders, who have been appointed by our Program Committee to conduct the lesson for the afternoon. We use, generally, the program that is printed in The Christian Missionary with the aid of the text book. We find these programs very interesting as well as instructive. As to the social feature of our Society, we have each month a social. Our Social Committee at the beginning of each Society year makes out our program for the year in advance. Four members are put on each month to entertain us in any way or manner that they think would be enjoyable. We have had delightful meetings of that kind at these socials. We take our husbands and in that way they get their minds off of their daily routine of work and are thrown together in a social way for a social good time. We have as one of the features for the evening Bible contests and some of us are not through answering our questions when "time is up." Now of course, our preachers are through (?), or we suppose they are. Our Society has been quite fortunate in having Mrs. D. P. Barrett with us in one of our meetings and she made a splendid talk. Mr. Barrett will talk for us at our next meeting. We are so glad to have the Barrett family in our midst for it gives us a rare opportunity of doing for them in person and to be able to talk to them and get information from them concerning our work. We have faithful Superintendents, workers in our other Societies. Mrs. Hook is our Young People's Superintendent, Mrs. Perkins for the Juniors, Mrs. Wicker for the Willing Workers and Mrs. N. G. Newman for the Cradle Roll. I would like to say here that Mrs. Newman had a splendid Rally Day in August, the account of which you read in THE SUN. Mrs. Wicker had her mite box opening a few weeks ago. She gave a splendid program in the chapel, and received a very liberal offering. We hope our Conference that meets in Durham will be well attended. We have such good, faithful members there, and I am sure everybody will enjoy themselves while there, in the meeting and socially.

I am taking up too much space in your column. Please, co-workers, pray for us that we may as a Missionary Society be strong in Faith and Hope and accomplish always the good and the right that our Society now stands for.

SUFFOLK LETTER

Just as I was about to write this letter on "Thinking Back" and "think back", I opened the last number of "World Outlook" and read a page on "Canned Thinking". The trend of that article was a criticism on loyalty to the past as compared with modern ideas, "Cook your own pudding, then you'll know what you are eating." These two sentences sum up Mr. Price's conclusion. Do your own thinking sounds democratic and progressive, but no one mind can think by itself. Thought has parents—a father and a mother. A book may be the father, my mind may be the mother of a new thought. You may present a thought to me and that may suggest a new thought which neither had before. Common law is canned thought, but it is the basis of statute law. History is canned human experience, but it may be as valuable as any new idea. "We need fresh thinking," as Mr. Price says; but fresh thinking is the fruit of what he calls "pickled knowledge". Every new invention is the fruit of "pickled" inventions; both are valuable.

But I intended to write on "Thinking back" and "think back". Thinking back is thinking over the past, whether in human history or personal experience. There is no value in thinking back unless it makes us think for the future. The only value of seed cast into the ground is the new grain produced; the only value of thought backward is the new thought forward. Review of personal experience should provoke improvement for the future. Thinking back inspires thinking forward. Thinking of the cross inspires thought of the crown. Prophecy is pre-history, and will sometimes become past history. Jesus said of Jerusalem, "There shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down". That prophecy became a historic fact, thirty-seven years after it was uttered, when the Roman army under Titus destroyed Jerusalem in A. D. 70. But the main point of this Letter is not in "thinking back", but in "think back", which is the thought in the hearer or reader provoked by the speaker or writer. When a minister is preaching, the audience has no opportunity to "speak back", but there is ample room to "think back"; and it is a good exercise, because it helps the interest. If the hearer agrees with the speaker, it makes a sympathetic listener and that inspires the speaker; if the listener disagrees with the speaker, it amounts to opposition, and makes it hard for the speaker. When the speaker says nothing that provokes agreement or disagreement the audience is listless. A minister need not expect the congregation to accept all that he says; and he should count himself useful if his message causes men and women to "think back" at him; that is the highest point of interest. It is next "to provoke unto love and do good works". To "think back" is in many cases, better than to speak back; it is the quiet and silent debate, the noiseless investigation, the spiritual process by which though, emotion, and conscience, work under the preaching of the gospel. This field is much larger than the outspoken praise or criticism which some ministers love or fear. Jesus could read the reasoning of his auditors, but men cannot; yet it is certain that men and women "think back" as well as speak back, and by this the gospel finds its way to the heart.

BURLINGTON LETTER

The Burlington Christian church has recently enjoyed three inspiring missionary services. On Sunday evening, September 20, the Willing Workers Missionary Society had charge of the service, rendering a splendid program, consisting of recitations and songs, followed by the impressive "Rainbow Pageant". They received an offering of $43.50 for their work.

Sunday evening, September 26, Rev. D. P. Barrett was with us and gave us a splendid message about Porto Rico and the work that is being done in the Island for Christ and His cause. The story of Porto Rico's redemption is going to be a most interesting one. The Christian Church should be glad that it is having a part in that great work. Great changes have already been wrought by the missionary of the Cross.

Sunday evening, October 3, the Young Peoples Missionary Society gave a splendid program. Mrs. D. P. Barrett was present and made an interesting address, showing what it meant to invest a life for Christ on the mission field. At the close of her address she sang a beautiful and impressive solo. Miss Bessie Holt made an interesting talk about our Young Peoples Work. They received an offering for their work of $65.00.

On account of the advanced cost of living in Japan, the Mission Board found it necessary to increase the salary of Miss Martha Stacy $240.00.

A few Sundays ago the Burlington Sunday school voted to assume this additional cost and ordered the amount forwarded to the mission treasury. This makes it necessary for the school to raise $80.00 per month for its missionary.

The offerings each third Sunday for this purpose have been averaging nearly $80.00 for the past six or eight months. Since the school has undertaken the support of a missionary the offering for the Orphanage, taken each first Sunday, has more than doubled. Giving to missions helps every other cause. A vital interest in missions is the great need in every Sunday school and church.

REVIVAL AND POUNDING AT ANTIOCH

The revival meeting began at Antioch the third Sunday in September. Dr. J. P. Barrett, of Holland, Va., was with us in the meeting from the beginning until on Thursday afternoon. He preached with great power, aided by the Spirit of God, and it was good to be there. The church was greatly strengthened and about thirty professions and many renewed their obligations to God. Thirty-two united with the church and more are expected to join later.

I was glad to see this large number coming into the Kingdom of God. Dr. Barrett and the present pastor may rightly call this their mother church—the dearest place on earth to them.

On Saturday, October 2, the pastor baptised fourteen by immersion, and expects others to follow.

The pastor was re-elected for another year and an additional sum of $50.00 added to his salary.

Just before the close of our meeting on Friday, a good sister stepped into the pulpit and asked that I remain at the church a little while after the close of the meeting, stating further that there was a great "stir" at the church. I was, of course, held much in suspense until a good brother and sister took me by the arm and led me to a long table loaded with hams, chickens, sugar, flour, coffee, canned fruit, pickles, etc. They told me that it was all mine and that I should not go hungry, and calling a brother with an automobile said: "Take these things and our pastor and carry him home." The pastor and family cannot express to these good people at Antioch their gratitude for this kindness. God bless them all and may their pastor live by the grace of God, worthy of the tokens of their love for him and his family. I hope that all who gave anything will accept the sincere thanks of their pastor and his family.

LIGHTHOUSE OBSERVATIONS

J. E. MASSEY

VICTORY OF THE TENENTS

Tenants in New York City have won at last. The rent restricting bill which was passed last month by the State legislature is a good indication. Although wealthy powers of the Real Estate Board are attacking the statutes which will have to be tested by the court, there is fair reason to believe that these tenants will triumph.

Since the war their case has been either evacuation or starvation, and many of them have starved. Higher rents have largely been the cause of undernourished children, families ill-supported, divorcees, separations and many other evils. Then it is now indicated that these pitiable victims of the greedy landlords will not suffer needlessly any longer, since in addition to the restrictions of the rent which they will have to pay, a city budget of $530,000,000 has been voted for their use. What a pity the law-making bodies did not see the need sooner!

CENTERING FARM LIFE

Can you think in terms of an apple pie? If so, you can understand what Charlotte Perkins Gilman means in writing about "Applepieville." She sketches the life of an ideal farm-community as being conformed to the shape of an apple pie. The center of this pie is called "Applepieville", and all the community-farms radiate about this little town in triangular prepossibilities. The main reason for this suggested arrangement of the farms was to have all the homes of the farmers near each other, yet losing none of the characteristics of an orderly farm-equipment.

Farmers organizations, schools, churches, and all the necessary means for education, social life, and entertainment would then be easily reached by everybody in the community. The town would be theirs.

Of course this is just an idea. To many, it would be an impractical dream to have "Applepievilles" all over the broad virgin country life of America. But such ideas have a purpose, though apparently impractical. That purpose is to make us think, think of the isolated, unorganized condition of so many American farmers who need to learn the lesson of cooperation in their education and social life; to become less self-centered and more community-centered.

MOSLEM UNREST

Over the whole stretch of country comprising what is known as the "cradle of man", including Egypt, Palestine, Arabia, Turkey and India, there is unrest. And practically all of this unrest is due to the anti-Christian propaganda throughout the Mohammedan world.

The treatment of Turkey subsequent to the recent war has influenced this agitation of the followers of Mohammed; the practical annexation of Mesopotamia and Palestine by the British, and other influences of the French and Greeks have turned the Moslem world against Christendom. It has spread to India where the British control is periled by 70,000,000 Mohammedans and about three times as many Buddhist, hampered less by creed or caste, but intently anti-British. The struggle has developed virtually into one of arms, but these people need practical Christianity more than any thing else. How shall they get it, is the real question?

THE ROAD TO SUCCESS

Many people can tell you how to find success—every one a different way. But no one needs to go to that trouble. Think success, act, and you will reach it. Put every opportunity to some use. That is the philosophy of the modern world.

If one stopped at success—any success, would he attain the desired end? No. Then why not, some may query? Any success will not suffice; it must be that kind which is guided by a spirit greater than that of the modern business world.

NOT CREED BUT CHRIST

John Oxenham has written a beautiful poem "Credo". In this poem he emphasises the need of a Person as the object of belief rather than creed:

Not what, but whom I do believe,
That in my darkest hour of need
Hath comfort that no mortal creed
To mortal man may give.

Not what, but whom,
For Christ is more than all the creeds,
And his full life of gentle deeds
Still all the creeds outlive.

Not what I do believe, but whom!
Who walks beside me in the gloom,
Who shares the burdens wearisome,
Who all the way doth illumine,
And bids us look beyond the tomb,
The larger life to live.

Not what I do believe,
But whom.
Not what,
But whom.

Westcliffe-on-Sea, England.

THE SERVICE OF PRAYER

Really, prayer is an atmosphere rather than an attitude. At its highest, it is conscious of another utterance than that of words. There is union with God in His Spirit, the sense of a real presence of God, oneness with the purpose of God. I have great sympathy with that man of whom it is said that he made his life so constant a service of God that night found him so tired out that his only articulate prayer was, "Lord, all is right between me and Thee." But for the majority of us such an attitude would be blatant blasphemy. The service must be pure and unceasing that earns this right.
—J. C. Mantripp, in Presbyterian Standard.

DEVOTIONAL

THE CALL FOR ADVENTURERS

Jesus condemned the religion of his day because it wasn't real. Sublime truths were lost in elaborate rituals, multiplied regulations, familiar creeds, and failed to inspire in the people any heroic devotion to their professed ideals.

The same charge is brought against religion today. Too many of these who profess faith in the truth and the ideals of Jesus Christ are strangely slow to trust these forces of heaven in the government of their daily lives. The reality of any one's faith is determined by the risks he will take for it. The world claims the right to doubt the earnestness of any Christian profession which declines to travel except where the paths are paved or to venture out of sight of material money bags.

Life at its best is a venture. No mortal comes equipped with blueprints and specifications of a guaranteed career. Daily is man confronted with situations which demand that he dare something and go courageously forward. There is something within man which responds to the challenge of uncertainty and exults in the venturesome.

What a risk every one takes in his daily life! Surrounded by forces infinitely stronger than himself, man matches his God-given genius against nature's blind might and smiles when he wins the struggle.

It is the strange contradiction of our natures that while we are willing to venture much for lesser causes we fear to dare much for the really great things. We surrender to lesser loyalties, but hesitate to follow Christ. Thus Christianity suffers most because of the inconsistencies of its friends. In our selfish days, of sin we trifled with tremendous stakes. For a day's pleasure or a passing selfish triumph or a handful of shining metal, perhaps, we risked eternal life. But after we were graciously admitted into the great kingdom of God, we seemingly became possessed with a strange caution which fears to trust God. We live too much under the spell of the world which will hazard everything for ambition, power, greed, but will hesitate to venture much for the kingdom of God. Those first century conquerors for Christ were witnesses who staked everything on the reality of the Unseen. Donald Hankey's words are immortal: "Religion is betting your life that there is a God."

Our vacillating times call for more great adventures for God, staking all upon the Christian faith and hope, spending life for the high and holy.—Evangelical Messenger.

WENT WITH JESUS

A farmer down in Rhode Island accepted Christ one night during a revival. He had been a rough, bad man, and the next morning he was going down to the village. As he walked he was singing softly a hymn he had heard in the meeting, when all at once he smelled the fumes coming out of a saloon just ahead. The odors came out strong and gripped him. He said he began to wonder how he could go by. Always before he had gone in. "Just then," said he, "I happened to think, and I said, 'Now, Jesus, I am yoked up with you, and you must come and help me by.' " And then in his illiterate way he said, "And he came, and we went by, and we have been going ever since."

FOURTEEN POINTS ON KILLING A CHURCH

(Christian Work)

1. Don't come.
2. If you do come, come late.
3. When you come, come with a grouch
4. At every service ask yourself, "What do I get out of this?"
5. Never accept office. It is better to stay outside and criticize.
6. Visit other churches about half of the time to show your pastor that you are not tied down to him. There is nothing like independence.
7. Let the pastor earn his money; let him do all the work.
8. Sit pretty well back and never sing. If you have to sing, sing out of tune and behind everybody else.
9. Never pay in advance, especially for religion. Wait until you get your money's worth, and then wait a bit longer.
10. Never encourage the preacher; if you like a sermon, keep mum about it. Many a preacher has been ruined by flattery. Don't let his blood be on your head.
11. It is good to tell your pastor's failings to any strangers that may happen in; they might be a long time finding them out.
12. Of course you can't be expected to get new members for the church with such a pastor as he is.
13. If your church unfortunately happens to be harmonious, call it apathy or indifference or lack of zeal, or anything under the sun except what it is.
14. If there happen to be a few zealous workers in the church, make a tremendous protest against the church's being run by a clique.

BLESSED SHADOWS

There are ferns in the garden of the soul as well as flowers. . . . There is the fern of patience, and the fern of long-suffering, and the fern of meekness. And the great Gardner of the soul delights in the ferns, and purposes to save them from destruction by "the garish day," and so He takes us into the shade, the shade of disappointment, or the shade of sorrow, or the shade of seeming defeat. But it is the very blessed shadow, for it is "the shadow of the Almighty." And here the ferns flourish and the cloudy day makes the garden beautiful.—J. R. Jowett,

NOTES

Evangelist Lightbourne and his singer, Sam Davis, are holding a meeting in Richmond, Virginia, under the direction of our new church organization there.

Churches in the North Carolina Conference should not forget that all finances and reports should include the time to November 1 only. This will give uniformity to all reports and be fair to all churches.

In the passing of Bro. Samuel Boggs, Liberty, N. C., THE SUN loses one of its most faithful and loyal supporters. Further notice of Bro. Boggs' passing elsewhere in this issue.

Dr. W. W. Staley was in Richmond last week and preached twice for our Richmond congregation. He makes an encouraging report of the work in that part of the Zion.

Among those attending the Alabama and Georgia and Alabama Conferences this week from North Carolina and Virginia are Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Rev. G. O. Lankford and Miss Bessie Holt. Possibly others whose names we do not have.

Rev. C. E. Gerringer, Elon College, N. C., changes his address to McLeansville, N. C., where he is principal of the high school. Brother Gerringer has accepted Hines' Chapel for the first Sunday and Pleasant Ridge for the fourth Sunday. We understand that Brother Gerringer will consider work for the second and third Sundays.

All churches desiring the services of Rev. A. Victor Lightbourne should communicate with Dr. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Virginia, at once. The Committee is anxious to make all dates for the winter at the earliest possible date. Brother Lightbourne is doing a good work among the churches and should be used all the time.

On Thursday, October 7, 1920, the Ladies Aid Society of the First Christian church, Norfolk, gave a birthday party at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. L. Gartette in honor of Mrs. Mary A. Hozier's 80th birthday. Mrs. Hozier is the oldest member of the First church, and is still able to attend services occasionally. She received many presents from friends, among which was a subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for one year from her pastor and his wife, which will be a welcome visitor to her home for each week of next year.

Brother W. E. MacClenny, Suffolk, Va., very much desires information concerning the Eastern Virginia Conference for the following years: 1861, 1865, 1866, 1867, 1868, 1869. Unfortunately, THE SUN office does not have complete files of THE CHRISTIAN SUN covering these years, and we are unable to serve Brother MacClenny and would appreciate it if any reader of THE SUN can send Brother MacClenny the place, year the Conference met, name of president, secretary, and other information regarding the Eastern Virginia Conference during the above mentioned years.

The Editor left Monday to attend the Alabama and Georgia and Alabama Conferences. The most of this week's issue of THE SUN was prepared before he left. The issue of October 20 will be arranged by the office force, with the exception of the editorials which the Editor has promised to furnish us in an early mail. The Editor tells a story that is worth repeating here: In 1911 he entered Elon College as a freshman and was looking after the details of THE SUN office for THE SUN's Editor at that time, Dr. J. O. Atkinson. Dr. Atkinson went away to the Alabama and Georgia and Alabama Conferences and left the "copy" in the hands of young Riddle and the printer. A minister of the denomination passed away during the time and the office boy tried his hand on a tribute. In the meantime, the news had reached Dr. Atkinson and he sent a note concerning it direct to the printer, and then some other brother did likewise. Three announcements of the same Brother's death appeared in one issue, whereupon, the office was asked if the Brother was really dead, and Riddle replied, "More next week." How bad we may be mixed up on getting out next week's SUN remains for our readers to say, but all we can promise them now is "more next week."

A PRESENT-DAY WEAKNESS

Perhaps the most fatal of our present-day weaknesses is our failure to support our denominational press. I have no official connection with any paper and hence speak freely. Our papers are the bond of vital union, the power house of every enterprise. Somehow the push and pressure of the whole denomination must be put behind these agencies of publicity. Until we solve this problem we fail to solve others. If we remain weak here, we remain weak elsewhere.—President E. Y. Mullins, of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary.

GENERAL NEWS

Several North Carolina banks have been entered and robbed of money, bonds and other securities recently.

A reduction to twelve cents a pound in the price of sugar has been announced by the Federal Sugar Refining Company.

The population of North Carolina has increased 15.9 per cent during the past ten years. She now ranks third among the Southern states in the number of people.

The 1920 corn crop shows signs of being the largest in the history of the nation, according to information obtained from the Department of Agriculture.

The United States army hospital at Oteen, near Asheville, N. C., has been discontinued for hospital purposes and the same will be transferred to the public health service.

According to reports after the fifty-seventh day of Lord Mayor MacSwiney's hunger strike, he is much weaker, being unable to hold conversation with relatives, and is suffering with trouble with his heart.

A part of the City Hall in Cork, Ireland, was destroyed by explosions in the early morning October 9. At this writing it has not been decided whether the damage was caused by an incendiary bomb or the ignition of gasoline.

Many wooden ships which were built by the United States to transport supplies to Europe during the recent war are being allowed to ruin because they are of no longer use to the government and there have been no bids for their purchase.

The great Sunday school hall in Tokio, Japan, in which the eighth World's Sunday School Association was to have opened October 5, was completely destroyed by fire just as the delegates were assembling for the opening session.

Questions have arisen in some sections of the country as to the educational qualifications of the woman voter. The general opinion is that the women who vote in the 1920 elections must meet the same educational qualifications as the men.

The question is being discussed as to whether Congress will continue the same basis of House membership since the increased population, shown by the census of 1920, and thereby increase the membership to about fifty, or whether the ratio will be increased to confine the membership to about its present number.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

You will see from our financial report this week that we have crossed the nineteen thousand dollar mark. Just one thousand dollars more to raise this month, to make the twenty thousand by November first. Can we do it? Will you help me to reach this goal?

You see from the amount to raise to reach it that I need you now. Will you put your shoulder to the wheel and push a little? It will help you and will lighten my load a little, too.

The singing class had a most enjoyable trip to Hines' Chapel last Sunday. It was lucky for us that we were in the program in the afternoon. I believe the old adage "keep to the right," but it certainly did not apply to roads as we got to a certain fork of the road and were not sure which way to go but kept to the right and got lost, and it was nearly the noon hour when we reached the church. The girls enjoyed the fun all right but it was not so funny for the writer to be in a strange community and expecting to have charge of service in a short while and lost and did not know which way to go to reach the church. There was one good sign in that community and that was that everybody goes to church on Sunday or least everywhere we stopped to ask the way there was no one at home.

Brother Patton, the pastor, gave us a warm welcome and the people in the community had a splendid dinner for us. After driving all morning we felt able to do justice to a good dinner which they spread before us. Hines' Chapel people are a splendid people and are very loyal to the Orphanage and have always stood by us.

The children rendered their program and the Superintendent made a short talk and a special offering was made which amounted to $22.00 in cash, twenty-two bushels wheat, several bushels corn, quite a number of chickens and some apples, also $12.00 for the Children's Home. It was a splendid offering and all seemed happy to make it. I just thought how easy it would be for a number of our churches to do the same thing if they could for one time catch the vision and try it.

We had a most happy visit and all the children came home happy.

THE MAGIC WORD

The manager of a certain department in a big store said to one of his aisle managers: "I like the way you keep things running smoothly in your section, Parker. It sets a good standard for those who might not be so particular if your good results didn't keep them keyed up to their own best efforts."

Warmed with these words, the man went about his work with new zest. It wasn't long before he was saying to an alert little salesgirl: "You have a very successful way of handling hard customers, Miss Belle. I'm going to see what can be done for you by way of rewarding such real merit."

Miss Belle flushed with pleasure. She was so happy that she was more successful than ever with the next troublesome, cranky buyer; and when she went out to lunch she just couldn't help saying to the deft girl who served her order: "It's awfully good of you to be so prompt. You must have guessed that I want to take a walk this nice noon hour."

The deft waitress carried the cheer of the friendly words in her heart all the rest of the day. It spoke out when her younger brother settled down to his studies that evening: "It's not every girl who has a brother who stays in at nights and studies and gets ready to make something of himself, instead of running the streets and getting into bad company. I'm proud of you, Jimmyboy. You're my heart's comfort." And Jimmy dug into his work all the harder and put away for good a certain "What's the use, after all" feeling that had been trying to get foothold in his heart of late.

The next day Jimmy said to the teacher who had patiently explained a hard point: "You certainly know how to make it clear to a fellow. I wish I knew as much as you do." And a little nagging imp of discouragement fled from the teacher's tired heart at once.

On her way home the teacher paused to say to the small boy who sold her a paper: "It's nice to know I can depend on finding you here, right on time every afternoon, Billy. You'll make a good business man some day." And she smiled as she paid him.

Billy went home in such a glow of good feeling that he fairly shouted at sight and smell of the homely, substantial dish of hash for supper. "Say, mother, but you're the dandy cook. A fellow can put in his best licks with a supper and a mother like this at home waiting for him." And at the word—the magic word of praise—there vanished endless, endless baskets of clothes to be washed and office floors to be scrubbed; and the world was a good place to live in, after all, when one had a fine boy like Billy coming home nights with his bits of money and his blarney.

Nor did she dream—nor do we dream often—how that magic word has been traveling from heart to heart, touching each with the joy of sincere appreciation, inspiring each to better work and living, before it passed on to repeat its good work.—East and West.

HISTORY OF MARY'S LITTLE LAMB

I am sitting to-night in the Baptist parsonage in the town of Sterling, Mass., about forty miles from Boston. Through about a foot of snow I went down to the barn and wood shed, which in part is made of the old school-house to which Mary's lamb followed her one day. The poem, "Mary Had a Little Lamb," is as familiar to many American children as the letters of the alphabet; and I wish to say there was a real Mary Sawyer, who owned a lamb, which went with her to school in the house which originally stood about two miles from here, but was later sold, removed, and built into the barn above mentioned.

Mary E. Sawyer was born March 22, 1806, and seven years later twin lambs were born to ewe of her father's flock, but the sheep mother would only own one of the lambs; so Mary took the other and mothered it. Seven months later the lamb followed her to school one day, and before the teacher came some of the boys suggested that Mary put the lamb upon her desk, which she did, and the lamb went to sleep. But later it waked up and kicked and scrambled out of the desk. This made all the children laugh, and of course the teacher had to put the lamb out; but she did not scold Mary. She only laughed with her and the other children. The lamb stayed all day and went home that night, never to come back to school again. But fame awaited this little sheep. Several days later a young Harvard student, John Roulstone, who was a friend of the teacher, visiting in the neighborhood and hearing of the incident, wrote:

"Mary had a little lamb,
Its fleece was white as snow;
And everywhere that Mary went
That lamb was sure to go.

It followed her to school one day,
Which was against the rule;
It made the children laugh and play
To see a lamb at school.

So the teacher turned it out,
But still it lingered near
And waited patiently about Till Mary did appear."

Mary's lamb lived only two years and was hooked to death by a cow in her father's barn. The wool of the lamb was spun and knitted into stockings for Mary by her mother; but these stockings were never worn; being kept for years in memory of the lamb. Many years later, when the Old South Church, in Boston was to be sold for debt, Mary, who was then a mature woman, with some other women got up a sale for the Church's benefit. The stockings were unraveled and the thread cut to pieces of one yard in length. Each piece was wound on a card, on which Mary wrote her name, and these were sold for twenty-five cents each. Thus the two pairs of stockings brought $200, and the Old South Church was saved from the sheriff's hammer.

Mary Sawyer married a man by the name of Tyler, and they lived in Somerville, Mass. She died in 1889 and is buried in Mt. Auburn Cemetery, near Boston. Her tomb is beside that of the poet Longfellow. She continued all her life a lover of children and animals, and at her death by her will and that of her husband who had died before her, their home was turned into a playground for the children of Somerville. It is so used till this day.—C. C. Young, in the Baptist Chronicle.

THE LIFTER UP OF THE HEAD

"Thou, O Lord, art a shield for me; my glory, and the lifter up of mine head" (Ps. 3:3). I like that last expression—"Lifter up of my head." There is your child, my good mother, and your child has been bad, and you have chastened it. You have put the poor little bundle of wretchedness and crossness into a corner, and there it is standing soiling its face with hot, scalding tears. Then your heart relents; the extreme of misery tells upon you, for you are its mother. And you come toward the little thing, and it creeps into the corner and hangs its head. And what do you do? Instead of chastising it any more, you come quite close, and with one hand on the little one's shoulder, you put the other hand below its chin, and literally you lift up the little face into the light of your own, and stoop down and kiss it. Did you ever think that that is what God wants to do with the poor, weary sinner who has gone back and done shamefully? When fears are on every side, and awful voices in your heart speak ominously of eternal doom God comes, and with His own gracious hand lifts up your head. He anoints and cheers your soiled face; He lifts up your head, and lets the light of His own reconciled countenance beam down upon you.—John McNeil.

Money alone will not make any kind of religious work successful. Wherever you find a spiritually prosperous church, an aggressive missionary enterprise, the problem of city evangelization, or reaching the neglected classes in the country on a way toward solution, you find that some men and women have been putting their brains, their efforts, their sympathies, their prayers into it.—Watchman.

WEALTH IN CHURCH PROPERTY

(University News Letter)

CAROLINA CHURCH WEALTH

In two and a half centuries we have been willing to invest 28 million 600 thousand dollars in church buildings and parsonages in North Carolina. So read the figures in the 1916 Census of Religious Bodies.

But in ten years we have invested 100 million dollars in automobiles. We are now buying new cars at the rate of 60 million dollars a year. What we spend for motor cars in a single year is more than double the wealth we have accumulated in church properties since William Drummond's day.

It cost a little over 6 million dollars to keep our 10,000 churches in commission in 1916, while we are now spending around 20 million dollars a year to keep our 110,000 cars in commission.

It costs almost exactly as much to support our churches year by year as it does to support our state government. We support the church about as well as we support the state, and we starve them both.

Our investment in church property in 1916 was $26.50 per member, while our investment in motor cars is now $44 per inhabitant, counting men, women, and children of both races.

Where a man's treasure is, there his heart will be also. And it is true, the other way around.

DENOMINATIONAL WEALTH

There are 50 different religious bodies in North Carolina. In 1916 they had 9735 organizations or congregations, 1210 of which had no Sunday school; 9135 church buildings worth $25,523,323; 1322 parsonages worth $3,077,203; and 1,080,723 church members who own most of the billions on our tax books.

Church members are 62 percent of our population 10 years old and over. The people of these ages not on the rolls of any church of any name, sect, or sort, number 648,250. Which is to say, nearly two of every five people of responsible ages in North Carolina are outside the church—within the curtilage of the church, to be sure, but not on the church rolls. See the University News Letter, Vol. V, Nos. 14, 15, 21, and 24.

Only four states of the Union had a larger number of church organizations in 1916—New York, Georgia, Pennsylvania, and Texas, in the order named. Only 18 states had more money invested in church property, three of these being Southern states—Georgia, Virginia, and Texas.

Almost exactly half of all the church members of the state are Baptists of various sorts, white and colored, 540,013 in number, but they own less than a third of the church property, $8,041,448. The Methodists of various sorts are a little less than a third of the total church membership of the state, 343,866 all told, but they own more than a third of the property in church buildings, $8,936,998.

The Episcopal church ranks 8th in the number of members, 18,545 in all, but 4th in church property, $1,406,400, 2nd in per-member church property, and 1st in per-member wealth in rectories.

The Presbyterians rank third in the number of members, 74,415 all told in the four organizations, and third in church property, with buildings valued at $4,050,065.

RANK IN CHURCH PROPERTY

Arranged in the order of wealth in church buildings, the leading denominations ranked as follows in 1916:

1	Methodist bodies: eight kinds, white and colored . . .	$8,936,998
2	Baptist bodies: seven kinds, white and colored . .	8,041,448
3	Presbyterian bodies: four kinds	4,050,065
4	Protestant Episcopal church	1,406,400
5	Luthern bodies: three kinds	812,865
6	Roman Catholic church	397,310
7	Disciples of Christ . . .	339,900
8	Christian church	321,826
9	Moravian church	210,200
	All other denominations: 23 in all, with 33,123 mem- bers all told	1,006,311
	Total	$25,523,323

CHURCH WEALTH PER MEMBER

But the order changes when these figures are reduced to per-member wealth in church buildings, as follows:

1	Roman Catholic church . . .	$79
2	Protestant Episcopal church.	76
3	Presbyterian churches	54

4	Moravian church	46
5	Reformed church in the U. S.	40
6	Luthern churches	35
7	Methodist churches, white..	26
8	Christian church	18
9	Baptist churches, white	18
10	Disciples of Christ	17
11	Negro churches, seven bodies	15
	Average, total membership, white and colored	23

The per-member investment in church buildings in North Carolina is small—only $23. Twenty-three dollars will barely furnish the most modest bed-room in the homes of church members. It would not begin to pay for the furniture in anybody's parlor. The fact is, it will barely buy a single tire for a Ford car. The averages range from $15 for the negro church members—about what a half acre of corn will produce, to $79 for the Roman Catholics—which is less than the price of a tire for a fine automobile. Clearly we are not laying up any great amount of treasure in church tabernacles on earth.

PARSONAGE PROPERTY

The nearly 10 thousand congregations in North Carolina reported only 1322 church homes for ministers—parsonages, pastorioms, manses, rectories, as they are called. They were worth all told $3,077,263.

Arranged in the order of wealth in parsonages, the leading denominations appear as follows:

1	Methodists, white and colored, 695 parsonages, 544 white, 151 colored . . .	$1,328,144
2	Presbyterians, 192 parsonages	616,050
3	Baptists, white and colored, 181 parsonages, 153 white, 28 colored.	487,275
4	Episcopalians, 99 parsonages	282,750
5	Lutherans, 71 parsonages	153,900
6	Roman Catholics, 15 parsonages	54,400
7	Reformed church, 25 parsonages	53,500
8	Moravians, 7 parsonages.	31,000
9	Disciples, 5 parsonages .	14,200
10	Christians, 1 parsonage.	3,500
	All other religious bodies, 22 in number, with 31 parsonages	52,484
	Total	$3,077,203

PER-MEMBER INVESTMENT

But when these figures of personal wealth are reduced to a per-member basis, the order changes; and they serve to indicate the relative concern of the various religious bodies about the comfort of ministers and their families.

1 Episcopalians	$15.24
2 Roman Catholics	10.81
3 Reformed Church	8.76
4 Presbyterians	8.30
5 Moravians	6.85
6 Lutherans	6.72
7 Methodists, white	4.40
8 Baptists, white	1.35
9 Disciples of Christ70
10 Christians20
Negro church bodies, seven in number65
Average, all denominations, white and colored..	2.84

Most of the church homes of the state are located in the towns and cities. There are very few in the country regions. We have never been able to find but 27 country church homes in North Carolina—most of them in the Scotch-Irish and German-Lutheran sections of the state.

The preachers who serve our country churches, with once-a-month sermons as a rule, usually live in towns, commonly in homes of their own or in rented houses. They are absentee preachers, not resident pastors or shepherds of their country flocks.

The fate of our churches, especially our country churches, is directly related to living conditions and living salaries for ministers. Hence the foundational importance of comfortable church homes in larger numbers.

Two dollars and eighty-four cents per church member, invested in parsonages, is not creditable. Three of our leading denominations drop below this average. The negro churches outrank one of these and nearly equal another.

It is pertinent to add that $2.84 falls far short of paying for a single bushel of Irish potatoes, now-a-days

A commodious, comfortably furnished church home with ample space for a garden, poultry ranges, and pasture for a cow, goes far to reconceive a minister to a small salary. Without such a rent-free church home he is forced to 'look after the affairs of his own household', in Saint Paul's phrase, and to get out of the ministry or be 'worse than an infidel'.

AVERAGE CHURCH SALARIES

Speaking of ministerial salaries, the denominational averages in 1916 are appalling. These are doubtless greatly increased during the last four years. If not, our preachers are grazing on mighty short commons, because the cost of living has more than doubled since 1913. As a matter of fact a dollar will buy no more existence necessities today than 45 cents would buy ten years ago. It is well for church members to remember that even the preacher is worthy of his hire.

The average salary of preachers in 13 religious bodies in 1916 follows:

1 Episcopalians	$1632
2 Presbyterian, Southern.....	1351
3 Disciples	1251
4 Baptist, Southern	1072
5 Methodist Episcopal South.	1037
6 Lutherans, United Synod...	932
7 Roman Catholic	838
8 Methodist Protestant	832
9 Christian	776
10 Friends	681
11 Negro Baptist, National Convention	572
12 African Methodist Zion ...	502
13 African Methodist Episcopal	478

NEGRO CHURCHES

The Negroes of North Carolina are almost exactly a fourth of our total population, but their church buildings are more than a third of all the church buildings of the state and the membership of the seven denominations is 322,165, which is nearly a full third of the total.

In a half century or so they have built 2591 churches worth $4,917,613 and 179 parsonages worth $211,281. It is a very remarkable showing. It is largely due to the interest with which they support their church organizations and church purposes. For instance, We found in Orange county in 1916 that the per-member contributions of the negroes to their churches was $2.05, which was exactly the figure for the white church membership of the county. It appears that out of their little they give much, and that out of our much we give little for church buildings and church purposes.

THE 1916 CHURCH CENSUS

These facts are worked out of the two quarto volumes of the Federal Census of Religious Bodies in 1916. These volumes can be had free of charge by applying at once to your Congressman.

They are a mine of exact information about church properties, personnel, activities, and results, and they ought to be in the private library of every church statesman and intelligent local leader in church circles.

MARSHALL-HIGHFILL

On September 30, 1920 in the First Christian church, Greensboro, N. C., in the presence of a few relatives and friends, Mr. J. Allen Marshall of Winston-Salem, N. C., and Miss Gladys Highfill of Liberty, N. C., were united in marriage. The writer officiated. Mr. Marshall is a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Marshall near Walnut Cove. He is also a member of Salem Chapel Christian church. Mrs. Marshall is a daughter of the Rev. Mr. Highfill of Liberty, N. C. Just after the ceremony they left for Asheville and other points for a few days.

Their many friends wish for them a long happy life together. May God let His blessing be upon them.

J. F. APPLE

HOLLAND

Paul Brooks Holland was born September 20, 1902. On September 3, 1920 his young and promising life was transplanted to another clime, where faith, hope and revelation give promise of conditions of happier and more favorable development.

At the age of thirteen he professed faith in Christ and united with the church. His faith in his Savior is the ground of hope that cheers the saddened hearts of loved ones.

He leaves to mourn their loss father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Holland and a sister, Mrs. J. H. Dean; besides many relatives and friends.

Funeral was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. S. L. Morgan. The floral tributes were beautiful and abundant.

May the Lord comfort the bereaved.
R. L. WILLIAMSON

BYRD

Mrs. Anna Malissa Byrd, wife of Jesse Byrd of near Holland, died October 2, 1920, aged sixty-six years and seven days.

She was a woman who was loved by her neighbors and friends, and frequent was the remark after her death, "She was a good woman." Her health was marred by ailments of long standing but her recent serious illness was of short duration.

Very early in life she united with the Holy Neck Christian church and faithfully remained a member until her death.

Besides a husband, she leaves to mourn her loss, two daughters, Mrs. M. D. Britt, and Miss Addie Byrd, and two sons, Larry H. and Jesse Rawls Byrd, and one grandchild, Anna Virginia Britt.

She was laid to rest on Sunday afternoon in the family burying grounds. Funeral services conducted by the writer, assisted by Dr. J. P. Barrett. A large concourse of friends were present and the floral tribute was a rich array.

W. M. JAY

HFDGEBETH

Elisha Hedgebeth departed this life Tuesday morning, October 5, 1920, aged 73 years. According to the inquest held over his body, death resulted from a blow on the head from an unknown source.

The presumption is that he was struck by a train, as his body was found first by the side of the tracks two hours after the train had passed. He was still alive and lived until the early hours of Tuesday, though he never regained consciousness.

He was never married and the only relative living is one nephew, Claude Holland with whom he lived, and six nieces, all children of Elijah Holland who married Miss Emaline Hedgebeth, sister of the deceased.

He was buried in the family burial grounds. Funeral services conducted by the writer.

W. M. JAY

BROWER

Ethel Sheffield Brower was born July 28, 1901 and died September 16, 1920.

She was married to D. L. Brower March 16, 1918. She leaves an infant of two months, husband, two sisters, brother and mother besides other relatives and friends to mourn their loss.

She professed faith in Christ and joined the church at New Castle two years ago.

She expressed her willingness to go and said she was ready at any time.

BOGGS

Samuel Boggs died suddenly at his home at Liberty, N. C., October 1, 1920, aged seventy-one years. He is survived by four children and five grandchildren.

Brother Boggs was a man of sterling qualities. He was one of Liberty's leading merchants until advanced age made it necessary for him to retire to a more quiet life. He was a member of the Christian church at Liberty, and had served as deacon for a number of years. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. G. R. Underwood.

The large concourse of friends attended his funeral and the beautiful floral offerings bespoke the high esteem in which he was held by the entire community.

D. A. LONG

RUDD

One of the saddest funerals of my ministry was conducted Wednesday, October 6, 1920, at the Monticello Christian church near Brown Summit, when we laid to rest the remains of Brother Clyde R. Rudd.

Clyde was a young man—in the thirty-first year of life—and was comfortably situated in a neat little home near the church which he loved so much. His life was one worthy of emulation, having given part of his life to Uncle Sam—later getting his discharge—and settling down with his companion, who was Miss Esther Wagoner, before marriage.

His interest in church, community, and civic righteousness, was unquestionable. At the time of his death, he was the secretary of the local church and superintendent of the Sunday school—and had figured in a large way in the erection of the splendid new church edifice about complete.

Surviving are, his wife, one child, Parrell, father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Rudd, two brothers, J. E. and Hezekiah, three sisters, Mrs. Clara Van Hood (who is a twin sister), Mrs. Fannie Ware of Conyers, Ga., and Miss Myrtle Rudd. All the family reside near Brown Summit, except Mrs. Ware.

The funeral was conducted by the writer who was for three years his pastor, and had formed a close tie of friendship with him. The services were held in the presence of a congregation that filled the house and yard. The floral designs were abundant and beautiful. A good man is gone, and the church, community, and the home has lost a valuable asset. May God's richest blessings rest upon the bereaved ones.

EDITORIAL

A FRIENDLY TALK

It is the privilege and duty of every paper to keep its constituency informed as to its successes, its failures, its new undertakings or whatever the situation may be. THE SUN has always maintained this course. The very difficult times through which THE SUN has passed during the last few years have made it imperative for it to speak freely on several occasions to fully acquaint its readers of the real situation.

It would be a great privilege to the Editor if he could bring together the whole SUN family and say to them a few things that he could better say than speak through the printed page. This however, being impossible, we must resort to this message and pray for it a very careful and serious reading.

We feel that some subscribers have misunderstood the recent act of the Board of Publication in increasing the subscription rate. The increase came at a time when prices seemed to be on the downward trend. Subscriber A makes inquiry why the advance should be made at such a time, while subscriber B says that he takes it for granted that the price will be reduced when the cost of production is lowered. Come let us reason together: One year ago THE SUN was sustaining a deficit, the Editor on a salary far below that of the janitor in the plant in which the paper is printed. The Convention was good enough and kind enough and thoughtful enough to increase the salary, which was, and is, appreciated very, very much. The salary increased is added to the deficit a year ago. In addition to this added expense it is costing nearly $75.00 more per week for the mechanical work. The added fifty cents to the subscription price will not in any means meet the deficit, the the average deficit now, figuring approximately, would average between four and five thousand dollars per year. The cost of issuing the paper would have to be reduced to this figure in order for the income to meet the expense. This brings us to the point to say whether or not that such a decrease can be made.

Can it? We emphatically say NO! We are of the opinion that the paper market will gradually become normal. There is not the slightest indication in sight now, though faint hopes of a small decline in the price of book paper by January 1. The cost of paper is only a small item in the production of THE SUN. The mechanical work plays the big part. Will wages in the printing craft be lowered at any near date? Again we emphatically say NO! There may be a slight remodeling of wages but the difference will be of small import. Why? The answer is very easily given: High wages paid for ordinary work has been the means of young men ignoring the printing craft and following pursuits in which they could make big money on the very beginning. A beginner in the printing craft is scarcely worth his board. The allurements of high wages in ordinary work has caused all arts to suffer, and this is particularly so in the printing craft. This is the status of the situation viewed from the practical business standpoint.

This leads us to say frankly that the price of THE CHRISTIAN SUN cannot, in our estimation, be changed to a lower rate, but it may have to even go higher than it is now. Some have already expressed their opinion that the Board made an error in not placing the price at $3.00 a year. The quota from the Men and Millions fund for publications will amount to approximately twenty-five thousand dollars. In five or six years this will be expended for deficit and nothing will be left save the volumes of the paper to show for it. The Board of Publication seriously considered this very thing. It was the unanimous opinion of the Board that this money should be invested in a permanent institution for THE SUN so at the end of five years there would be a source from which THE SUN could continue to derive revenue. The very logical conclusion was that this money should be invested in a printing plant. We seem to realize that someone is asking where to get the money to pay for the plant. We answer by asking where is the Church going to get the money to meet the deficit?

The day of cheap paper is no more. We will doubtless get back to normal times but we are of the opinion that the country will never know the price of cheap paper any more. The country will soon be back to a normal wage scale but we shall never know cheap wages again in the mechanical industries that represent art and call for thorough apprenticeship. Church papers had just as well to face the situation and provide for an adequate support. The handwriting is on the wall and just as sure as the sun rises and sets, the situation must be met. The leading Church periodicals in the country could not issue another page were it not for their large plants turning out thousands of dollars worth of job work on which they realize a fair and reasonable profit. We must remember that behind every strong Church paper there is a large battery of printing presses that turn out every day hundreds of dollars worth of work to help support the paper.

We were born an optimist, believe in optimism, preach it, teach it, practice it. We claim to be no prophet, the son of no prophet, and have no forefathers that were prophets, but listen to us, brethren and beloved, when we say to you that THE CHRISTIAN SUN must own its own plant or face financial disaster soon or late. We may subsidize it by our Men and Millions fund, by special contributions, but these things will not last unless we continually keep them up. One plan only gives relief until we are forced to try another. There is only one creditable subsidizing for a paper and that is for it to own its own plant, offer its services to the public and make a reasonable profit from job work and turn that profit into the support of the paper.

If we of the Christian Church could destroy our historical cell for one month we could, with our unbounded resources, world-wide principles and declarations that fling themselves out on far battle lines, make progress for the Kingdom that would startle the world. When you talk to a man about THE CHRISTIAN SUN owning its own plant he draws himself up like a porcupine and cites you to some day when the Church did not succeed in such an attempt. If we believe that we rise on our dead selves to greater things, let us bury the past so deep that all the pessimists of the ages cannot dig it up. If you fall, fall face foremost. We place no blame, lodge no criticism nor waste no time rehearsing any thing that has been done. The location of our plant was its failure. The very same plant today is being operated within four miles of where it failed to succeed, turning out thousands of dollars worth of work annually. This thing is being done while we sleep and some of us worry over how to meet the deficit. For His sake, for the Kingdom's sake, for the sake of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, which name all of us love, appreciate and adore, let us seize such an opportunity by the forelock and pursue it like giants and do that which can be done. The present Editor stands willing, ready anxious to spend and to be spent in helping to build such a monument for the Church of his heart and choice. Will the people back him up with their prayers, the Church by some forward step, or shall we plod in the same old way to have our ambitions wrecked upon the rocks of non-progressiveness?

And now you say the burden of this message is for official consideration. But mind you dear reader, that official action cannot precede public sentiment. In the hearts of the people are found the successes and failures of every enterprise. If these facts are worth pondering let us pass them along. If they are worth considering let us stop and think and think and act and act.

A FITTING CLOSE

In the issue of THE SUN for October 6 an article appeared "Nearing Home", which was contributed by the late Rev. J. T. Kitchen whose passing is mentioned elsewhere in this paper. How fitting the article seemed to be, for in reality the author was nearing home! Brother Kitchen has always been a contributor to THE SUN and very active in that line during the last year or so. His article "Nearing Home" was the last to be received in this office. So far as we know this was the last article that came from his pen. He was really nearing home and that article to him no doubt meant far more than to anyone else. It seems prophetic that it was written. Brother Kitchen lived in an atmosphere of devotion and prayer and he knew what it was to be nearing home.

IN THE LAND OF CANE AND COTTON

(Editorial Correspondence)

The click of the typewriter, the gentle rattle of the linotype and the hum of the press hushed to me on Monday night, October 11, when I turned my face from a routine of office work and boarded a train for Cragford, Alabama, to attend the twenty-second annual session of the Alabama Conference, which met at New Harmony church October 12, 13, and 14.

Leaving Burlington at 9:35 P. M., Monday I reached Cragford at 6:30 the next day. The trip was made over the lines of the Southern Railway via Charlotte, N. C., and Atlanta, Ga. In Atlanta I had three hours to get a glimpse of one of the South's greatest cities. From Atlanta I journeyed over the West Point line to La Grange, Ga. There I joined Rev. G. O. Lankford, Berkeley, Va., who, too, was on his way to meet with the brethren in the land of cane and cotton.

One half day's session of the Conference had been held when I arrived. Tuesday night the Christian Missionary Association was in session to take stock of its work and gain new life and make plans to go forward. Suffice to say that it went forward. Brother Lankford and Dr. Atkinson both made addresses which were greatly received by the body. Rev. G. D. Hunt, president, I am told, delivered a great address on the opening day and sounded a great missionary challenge.

Wednesday morning the Conference met promptly with good attendance and the regular work of the Conference taken up. By 10:30 the seating capacity of the house was greatly packed. In fact, chairs had to be brought in in order to accommodate the people. The Mission Board rendered a good report which showed a continued progress in the various missionary activities of the Conference. The work along home mission lines was enlarged for the coming year with greater financial support. In addition to the funds provided to meet this work, a special offering of $135.00 was made for the work in Northern Alabama. Dr. J. O. Atkinson made a great address on "Bible Mission Study."

The sermon of the Conference was preached at the 11 o'clock hour of the second day by Rev. G. O. Lankford. Brother Lankford is a product of the Alabama Conference, a graduate of Elon College and has proven himself a great worker. Brother Lankford once preached and taught in the bounds of this Conference but is now doing a most acceptable work in the Eastern Virginia Conference, having in charge Berea, Norfolk, and Rosemont churches.

A report of the Committee on Education was rendered by Rev. E. M. Carter, secretary of the Conference. Four young men were licensed as probationers and one ordained to the full ministry. Rev. G. O. Lankford, chairman of the Board to locate the recently created school by the Convention to be located within the bounds of this Conference or the Georgia and Alabama Conference, spoke the official message for his Board, saying that several bids and propositions had been made and that the Committee was much encouraged over the interest shown in the location of this new school.

This section of our Church is so far from Elon College that many of our young men and women in that locality fail to come in touch with the institution. I am confident that the locating of this school will mean a new day for our work in that part of the Southern Convention. The program outlined by the Committee at present is to undertake four years' high school work and two years' of college work.

Space and time forbid me to go into the details of the other reports and of the splendid work done. The Conference transacted its business rather hurriedly toward the close and I was not in position to get a definite statement along many lines. The friends of THE SUN kept me so busy taking renewals and new subscriptions that I could not keep an eye on all the details of the Conference. The treasurer informed me that the price of farm products had probably kept the Conference finances from progressing in the usual way, but that the totals would show no decrease.

A series of circumstances every year have prevented me from meeting with the brethren of this Conference. My fellowship with them was pleasant and to meet and greet them was indeed a great joy. The people of this Conference are loyal, hospitable, and wear their hearts on the outside.

The main crop in Alabama is cotton. The farmers are in the midst of gathering it and are not feeling altogether enthusiastic over the present market price. In some sections of that State many gins have been notified to close their doors. These notices seemed to come from some unauthorized source but at the same time some uneasiness is being felt over the situation. Alabama also grows sugar cane but not on a very extensive scale in the section in which I am now privileged to be.

INDUSTRIAL INSTABILITY OF CHILD WORKERS

Within a year after they were legally permitted to go to work, one child out of every four in Connecticut left school for that purpose, according to the report on Industrial Instability of Child Workers made public recently by the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Dept. of Labor. This does not include the large number of newsboys and those engaged in agriculture and domestic service. Three-fourths of the children went to factories, the largest number of boys going to the metal industries and girls to textile and clothing factories.

Following the work histories of nearly 2,500 boys and girls whose records covered 21 to 24 months, the report brings out the fact that girls showed the greater tendency to remain in the first positions which they took, one-third of them remaining with their first employer 21 months or longer. Of the boys 18% left the first job within a month, and more than one-half shifted work before six months. The greatest amount of shifting for both girls and boys occurred in the clothing industry and least in the textile industry.

The greater restlessness of boys is attributed to several causes. Frequently their occupations are different from the occupations of men and their work does not lead definitely to better paid positions. In some cases the work involved is too heavy, also boys have a greater variety of work open to them than girls. As a rule the occupations of the girls do not differ so widely from those of the women and for this reason the girls are less likely to become restless and dissatisfied.

Most of the work in which children are employed is temporary or seasonal. In the first month after starting to work 10 per cent of the boys and 8 per cent of the girls were out of jobs for at least one week. The proportion of unemployment became less as the children became used to industry. Throughout their work histories the boys showed a greater tendency to unemployment than the girls.

THE THANKFUL HEART

Thankfulness comes from the heart, not from circumstances. "In everything give thanks" (I Thess. 5:18). Matthew Henry, the commentator, robbed of his purse, remarked: "Let me be thankful, first, because I never was robbed before. Second, because, although they took my purse, they did not take my life. Third, because, although they took my all, it was not much. Fourth, because it was I who was robbed, and not I who robbed."

A poor cobbler was always praising God, even in misfortune, believing it to be by God's permission. His wife scolded him daily for thanking God for nothing. One day the poor but happy cobbler fell downstairs and broke his right leg. The wife came rushing to the scene of the accident to hear her espoused fervently saying: "Thank God." "Are you fool enough to thank God for a broken leg?" she shouted in vexation.

"Thank God I did not break both legs," was the unexpected reply of the smiling cobbler.—The Armory.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

SUFFOLK LETTER

By invitation, I visited Richmond and preached for the First Christian church on Monday and Tuesday nights, October 4 and 5, as a preliminary meeting of the Lightbourne-Davis revival beginning on Wednesday night, October 6, in the William Fox school auditorium, seating five hundred.

I spent Monday night with Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Pierce. Mr. Pierce boarded in our home in Graham in his twelfth year as a student in the Graham school. It was a real pleasure to be the guest of these good friends. His wife was Miss Dora Covington, grand daughter of my old friend Captain Smith of Semora.

I took tea on Tuesday evening with Mr. Albert F. Franklin, whose wife was Miss Lizzie Jane Long, daughter of Rev. W. S. Long, D. D. They have a family of five children, and Miss Willie Ames was there on a visit.

I spent Tuesday night with Mrs. Lizzie Carr Brinkley and her family. Mrs. Brinkley was a former fine soprano singer in our choir and now resides in Richmond. It was a joy to meet old friends and members of the Suffolk church.

The audiences were not large, but they were united and enthusiastic in the work. If old churches had the same spirit of united effort, as new churches, the work of the Lord would go forward by leaps and bounds. They had a good choir of some twenty voices and were ready to aid the evangelists in the service of song.

Letters of transfer from the Suffolk church to the Richmond church were granted on Wednesday night to Mrs. Lizzie Carr Brinkley, Willie Carr Brinkley, Miss Annie Mary Brinkley, Dr. B. W. Rawles, and Mr. George Bowen. These were all valuable members in Suffolk and will be faithful workers in Richmond.

Prof. P. J. Kernodle and family will add strength and good service to the Richmond church. Dr. B. W. Rawles is a leading physician in Richmond and is good anywhere you find him. I wish I could name all the good people in that determined band, but I think there are over eighty of them; and they all love their pastor Dr. W. T. Walters and his good wife.

The Richmond church begins with three times as many charter members as the Suffolk church had at the beginning in 1860, and it now has over a thousand members. I would love to live to see the First church of Richmond sixty years from this good year of 1920.

If the Lightbourne meeting results as we pray and hope it will give tone and impetus to the work in Richmond. There should have been a Christian church in that city fifty years ago; but it is not too late to plant a great church in this greatest southern city.

They have bought a good lot large enough for church and parsonage, in a good section of the city, and every year will add to the strength and usefulness of the congregation. The names of charter members will go down in history with honor and their works will follow them. The most satisfactory service is what men do in a constructive way; and that is better when done for others; and it is best when done for those who come after us. The name of Jesus gathers glory and strength as the centuries pass. He is better known and better loved today than when He was among men; that was the day of His humiliation—this is the day of His exaltation. Thus it will be with all who sacrifice for Him.

A MESSAGE TO CHURCH MEMBERS

Are we as church members doing our full duty? It is true that we attend the services at the house of God and enjoy the sermons preached, but are we not inclined to think too often that these sermons are for the other person? We sometimes get the impression that the minister is preaching for money and not for the saving of souls. In Matthew 7:5 we find these words: Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam from thine own eye then thou shalt see clearly to cast the mote out of thy brother's eye. This may be applied to the church members today. We have a tendency to criticize our brothers and sisters. May God help us to cleanse our lives of sin and let our lights so shine in the way of sinners that they may be directed in the right way of living.

LENA RAGSDALE FONVILLE— AN APPRECIATION

Lena Ragsdale Fonville, a faithful member and treasurer of Class number Five of the Burlington Christian Sunday school, was called home Sunday morning, July 18, 1820.

In her departure the class circle is broken, the chair is vacant, our hearts are sad, and we are so forcibly reminded that in the midst of life we are in death. May we pause and meditate upon the wisdom of God.

We know not why a life so full of promise, so devoted to duty, and so faithful in the cause of Him Who ever went about doing good, should be removed from our midst; yet this one thing we know, that God the Giver of life, doeth all things well and we humbly bow in reverent submission to His will, knowing that some day we shall understand.

We shall miss her wise council, her optimistic life, for as we knew her in the class circle, her's was a life of vision, a life of service, not an "Eye service as men-pleasers", but with a singleness of heart serving God.

We deeply sympathize with the bereaved husband and babe of tender years, and may He, who alone is able to comfort, shield and protect, be their guide through life.

We request that this appreciation be placed in the class records, a copy sent to the bereaved husband and that a copy be sent to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for publication.

REV. J. T. KITCHEN—A TRIBUTE

I was much grieved to hear of the death of my beloved friend and Brother in the ministry, last Saturday, October 9, 1920. Dr. W. W. Staley called me over the telephone and said, "Brother Kitchen is dead. Died in Norfolk, Va., last night."

J. T. Kitchen, J. P. Barrett, N. B. Munford and the writer entered Suffolk Collegiate Institute in 1872 to fit ourselves for the work of the ministry. I loved him as a brother could only love another. He was a good preacher and a fine writer. He was with me in my meetings at Oak Grove, Gates County, N. C., the week after the second Sunday in September. I never enjoyed his company better, nor did I ever hear him preach with so much spirit and power. His fellowship was sweet and it was good to be with him. We had a good meeting. The church was much strengthened and builded up in the faith of our Lord. Little did I think it would be the last revival of religion we would ever be in together in this life. I shall miss Brother Kitchen, but I expect to meet him in the church triumphant beyond the clouds of sorrow and death.

J. T. Kitchen, as he unbosomed himself to me, was ready to meet the last enemy, and fight his last battle and gain victory, and lay down his weapons of warfare here and go to the home eternal.

GREENSBORO WORK

Up to the present time no one has been secured to serve the First church, Greensboro for another year, and the present pastor and his wife go to Raleigh November 2. The church held a business meeting last Monday night and laid plans that will eliminate former difficulties which have handicapped most pastors of the church.

At this writing the work here is in excellent condition. At the close of the present Conference year the church will have finished one of the most prosperous years of its history, and the next pastor will find the work in fine condition, unless the church is without a man for a number of months. During the year splendid progress has been made in every line of the work, and the future of the work is bright.

During the week from October 3 to 10, the pastor held a week's meeting especially for the church folk which proved to be a great success. Audiences increased from the very first night until the closing service, and interest increased with it. It was a meeting for the church people, and they took great interest in it, and did their part. Only one decision service was held, at which time several came forward and consecrated their lives to Jesus Christ.

The present pastor has been on this field since November 15, 1918, and has followed closely every phase of the work. During the two years, plans have been made to clear the church of all indebtedness. A lot has been purchased upon which to erect a new church building; plans laid to purchase a home for the next pastor; over $50,000.00 raised aside from Conference requirements; the pastor's salary increased from $1,500 to $1,800; two or three of our young people have given their lives to the ministry and mission work; two Christian Endeavor Societies organized and placed in the field, which at present have an average attendance of about thirty members each; a Young Men's Missionary Society organized, which now educates a ministerial student for our mission field; a teacher training class which finishes next Sunday, and has added a hundred members to the church. These figures are given just to show some of the visible results, and not for the purpose of praise of either pastor or church. The church will go to Conference in first class condition.

There is no question about the field here. The work is now getting on its feet, and if a live wide awake man is secured for a pastor, it can be made the strongest work in North Carolina. The increased interest and flourishing condition of the work at this time make it exceedingly hard for the present pastor and his companion to leave the field. Yet, we know it is best, and we are working hard to make it easy for the man who follows us. If you know a real wide awake man who would fit into the Greensboro work, notify Deacon W. B. Truitt, 410 Gorrell St. Greensboro, N. C., who is chairman of the Pastorial Committee.

MISS LUCY M. ELDRIDGE ELECTED FIELD SECRETARY FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR WORK

At a recent meeting of the Board of Religious Education, held at Raleigh, N. C., Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, of Erie, Pennsylvania, was elected Field Secretary. Miss Eldredge is the daughter of Hermon Eldredge and will graduate at Elon College next commencement and then take six weeks' institute work with her father. She is taking a course in Religious Education this year. She is naturally gifted for the work and the Board was fortunate to secure her services.

The work will be taken up about the middle of July. We bespeak for her the prayers and hearty cooperation of the brotherhood.

AN APPRECIATION

BE IT RESOLVED by the congregation of the East End Christian church of Newport News, Virginia, in session Sunday evening September 12, 1920, that our very deep appreciation of the services of Rev. E. H. Rainey, who has so faithfully ministered to this congregation during this summer months, is hereby recorded.

We feel that in his work both in the pulpit and among the members of this church, he has rendered splendid service and that its character will manifest itself in this community in days to come.

We are especially mindful of the very dignified, and yet intensely spiritual bearing and preaching of this Servant of God, and feel that his work has served to elevate us in our relationship to Christian work.

We record our good wishes for him in his further preparation for the gospel ministry, and trust that we may be favored with having him frequently amongst us in future years.

Signed: Church Secretary

DAVID A TYPE OF CHRIST

David the shepherd is the type of the one divine-human shepherd of souls—of the good Shepherd who giveth his life for the sheep—of him who, going before his flock, leads them in the way to heaven. David the warrior represents him who came into the world to fight against the foes of our households, who utterly vanquished them, and who holds them ever in subjection for the safety and defense of all who put their trust in him. David the king foreshadows and signifies the King of kings, whose "dominion is an everlasting dominion, who shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed."—James Reed.

THE HARP ON YOUR WINDOW

One of Frances Ridley Havergal's poems tells us of an æolia harp which a friend sent to her with a letter describing the wonderful sweetness of its tones. Miss Havergal took up the harp and trummed upon its seven strings, but there were no thrilling strains—only common music. She read the letter again and found instructions which she had overlooked. Then she raised the window and put the harp under the sash. Now the wind swept over the strings and the room was filled with melody that no human touch could produce. It took the breath of heaven to bring out the wondrous music. The human soul is so much like that harp. Breezes from the hills of God must sweep its chords. Would you let the harmony be lost by the touch of your unskilled hand? Put the harp in the window of the house where you live. Let zephyrs from the glory land blow over your soul. Then you will hear the music soft and low.—J. Marvin Nichols.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN NOTES

Plant Late Vegetables Now.—The following are some of the vegetables that should be planted in every home garden right now, if they haven't already been planted within the past few weeks: Snap beans, beets, cabbage, collards and (in the central and lower parts of the South) carrots, lettuce, endive, kale, mustard, spinach, radishes—both spring and winter varieties, and (in the Lower South) turnips, tomatoes and rutabagas.

The above is by no means a complete list of vegetables that can be grown in the fall gardens, but is a representative list of what can and should be planted in every home garden in the South, where the climate permits. Some of these cannot be safely planted in the upper part of the South, but practically all of them can be planted in the middle and lower part, and many of them in the upper part of the South.

Get the Strawberry Ground Ready.—There are entirely too many home gardens where there are no strawberries growing. A home garden is not by any means complete without these, and right now is the time to get ready to set some plants. Pick out a good piece of ground thoroughly break it, pulverize it, harrow and reharrow and cultivate until every sprig of grass is destroyed and every clod crushed; fertilize it well with both stable manure and commercial fertilizer and then set the plants during the fall or early winter. In order to get the ground in the best condition the preparation should be started right now.

Try Chinese Cabbage.—The Chinese cabbage is a variety of cabbage that is receiving many favorable comments in certain sections of the country. It is a new vegetable that is said to be most excellent for the making of slaw and salad, and it seems to grow a whole lot better in cool weather than in warm. Therefore, seed of this variety sowed now and transplanted as soon as the plants are large enough should result in the producing of some very satisfactory cabbage. Instead of sowing in a bed and transplanting, many have found it satisfactory, and possibly the most desirable method, to sow the seed right along the row and thin them out from six to nine inches apart. It is said that two or three rows 25 feet long will produce an enormous amount of greens—in fact, enough to do a fairly good sized family during the late fall.—L. A. Niven in The Progressive Farmer.

The friendship of Jesus was a very beautiful thing. It seems to us sometimes wonderful to think that the Master could find in His soul a place for friendship for the human infirmities who made up His following on earth. But He did. He cherished His friends; never betrayed them; always was tender with them; and bound them to Him with links of steel. There is no possession on earth superior in worth to a true and faithful friend. Thank God for your friends and hold fast to them; but above all seek the friendship of Him who "sticketh closer than a brother."—Methodist Protestant.

LIGHTHOUSE OBSERVATIONS

J. E. MASSEY

FIVE THINGS THE WORLD HATES WHICH THE CHURCH CANNOT USE

1. The man who never has an opinion—because he never thinks.
2. The man who is always grumbling—because he chases the smile.
3. The fop—because he is mushy.
4. The man who is always right—because he never knows when he is wrong.
5. The man with a long face—because he is usually out of proportion.

A STRIKE THAT IS WINNING

That strike is the strike of the consumer. The haranguing disputes between Capital and Labor have reached the climax, and now the other party is in the lead. The consumer has been imposed upon long enough, in "footing the bill" for the high cost of living, profiteering, and high prices. Now as a result of the consumer's refusal to buy high priced goods, an extensive wave of price-cutting is on. A twenty per cent decline in the price of over two hundred and forty-eight articles, is the estimate of The New York World. This includes a fall in the price of most farm products, automobiles, textiles, clothing, and foodstuffs.

This change in prices will have a marked influence everywhere. But there is no reason to believe that prices will fall immediately to pre-war level. On the contrary, Secretary Houston points out that this will not be reached until several years, if at all.

Now that the consumer has learned a lesson from wearing overalls, patched clothing, and being less extravagant, he must not rejoice too quickly. The fight is not over. In the downward trend of prices, he will have to still help bear a mutual burden, probably getting less for his products or for his day's work. In other words, the descent of a mountain is sometimes as perilous as the ascent.

GAMBLING IN BASE-BALL

Base-ball, sometimes called the greatest professional sport in the world, is in grave danger. "A flaw is in the diamond," and that flaw is gambling.

Players of the Chicago American League confess that they have received bribes to "throw" games to Cincinnati in the 1919 World Series. And now there is a heated and strenuous campaign being put on among base-ball leaders to rid the game of the gambling evils.

The world demands sport as a recreation, relaxation, and physical upbuilder, and it needs it. But before any game becomes a sport in its truest sense, possessing these qualities, it must be "a clean game", a "fair and square" game. It must be freed of selfish gamblers speculating on public interest.

SAFETY FIRST

But not at all cost. Prudence is far from being the highest word in the vocabulary of the soul. Not a single great undertaking for humanity would have commenced on the principle of "safety first". Life's greatest achievements represent somebody's risk. The last thing that Jesus considered in His ministry of redemption was the threats of His foes. Indeed, those same foes paid Him the highest compliment possible when they said derisively, "He saved others, himself He cannot save". "Safety first" as a caution to travelers by land or sea is well conceived. But "safety first" as a rule for the thoroughfare of life itself may be altogether pernicious. Moreover, one may sometimes need to take risks with his body for the sake of health of his soul.—George Clark Peck in Christian Advocate.

THE CENSUS

Over 105,000,000 people are now living in the United States. This represents an increase of 14.9 per cent in the last decade, compared with a 21 per cent increase in the previous decade.

According to The New York Times, the outstanding feature is the gain of the cities at the expense of the country. In 1910 the country had a larger population by about 7,000,000, whereas at the present time the cities are ahead about 4,000,000.

EVAPORATION CAUSES GREAT GASOLINE LOSS

Steps are being taken by the Bureau of Mines to stop the great loss of gasoline caused by evaporation. According to announcement made by the Bureau of Mines, the total loss of gasoline from evaporation is 600,000,000 gallons annually, half of which could be saved if the proper methods were used. The worst feature of this is that the gasoline wasted is the best quality obtainable. Directions as to how the situation may be remedied will soon be issued to the oil men by the Bureau of Mines.

DEVOTIONAL

A FRIEND WHO IS ALWAYS NEAR

Who can tell of all the glory and goodness of God? Our language and tongues fail. We cannot express the joy that fills the heart when we are saved and made one of God's children. The face may shine, we may try to tell of that love, and as we walk through life, trusting in His grace, we feel the everlasting arms supporting us—yet we cannot tell of all the glory.

Our lives tell when words fail. Our lives are really the true index to our hearts. Words are idle and mean nothing if our acts and deeds do not measure up to what we claim; there is a doubt in the minds of those who know us. If we love God we keep His commandments. We show to the world that we are not of the world. If we have a friend, we will do that for him or her that will give pleasure. A friend is one on whom we can depend and we can always depend upon Jesus and His promises. In all our trials and our sorrows He never leaves us, but is near to comfort and cheer. In death He stands near to lead us gently through the valley of the shadow of death. His angels are there to go with us when earthly friends cannot.

Have you ever stood near the dying Christian and noticed how that person approaches death's door? How peaceful and happy! The face that shines with the glory of Heaven tells the story even when there are no words spoken. We almost see and feel the presence of that Heavenly host that comes to take our loved ones home. No tears or moans of pain—nothing but peace and joy are on the pale face where only a short time ago we saw pain. The King of Glory brings rest and happiness to His own.

MRS. S. A. HATTMAN

A FUNDAMENTAL

The most fundamental element in the Christian conception of the social life is the intrinsic worth of every personality. For Jesus each individual has distinct and measureless value as a child of God and a potential member of His Kingdom. The preciousness of a single life is suggested in parable after parable. The shepherd goes out to seek a single sheep, the woman sweeps the house to find one stray coin, the father yearns for a single wayward son. Nothing in the Gospel is clearer than this view of the sacred worth of all human life. Upon this assumption rests the entire redemptive enterprise of Christianity. Only in the light of this view of humanity can the meaning of sin be realized. It is so dreadful a thing to the Christian just because it is committed by one who is a child of God and destined for fellowship with Jesus Christ, in whom God's ideal for man is realized and made known. This principle of the value of personality becomes, therefore, the central and controlling principle of Christian ethics.

From the Christian estimate of personality it follows that each man has his own distinct place in God's plan, and is never to be regarded simply as a means for realizing the ends of others. Hence all slavery is wrong, because based upon a fundamental misconception of the value of personality. Ignoring the right of man as man to free self-development, it treats him not as a person but as a thing. It denies him his independent and inalienable place as a member of the family of God. And this Christian point of view is inconsistent not only with slavery in the crude form that now has vanished from the earth, but also with any social relationships that prevent full self-development by subordinating one human being to the uses of another and making one man little more than a means to another's convenience or gain. It runs counter to all valuing of people according to their utility to us rather than for their own intrinsic worth. Any individual is, therefore, condemned by it so far as the well-being of the relatively few is built upon the continuing impoverishment of the many.—From the Church and Industrial Reconstruction, issued by the Committee on the War and the Religious Outlook.

THE HIGHLANDER'S PRAYER

A Scotch Highlander, during the Revolutionary War, was brought before the commanding officer, charged with correspondence with the enemy—a capital offense. In vain he protested his innocence. He was promptly silenced and dragged into court. It is Hugh Miller who tells the story:

There was no direct proof against the Highlander. He had been seen in the gray of the twilight stealing out from a clump of underwood in the immediate neighborhood of the British which swarmed with the troops of Washington. He had stolen away from his fellows, he said, to spend an hour in private prayer.

"Have you gotten in the habit of spending hours in private prayer?" sternly asked the officer, himself a Scotchman and a Presbyterian.

The Highlander replied in the affirmative.

"Then," said the other, drawing out his watch, "never in all your life had you more need of prayer than now."

The Highlander, in the expectation of instant death, knelt down. His prayer was that of one long acquainted with the appropriate language in which a Christian addresses his God. It exhibited, in short, a man who made prayer the solace of many a solitary hour, and had, in consequence, acquired much fluency in expressing all his various wants as they arose in his heart.

"You may go, sir," said the officer, as he concluded: "You have, I dare say, been in correspondence with a greater than any earthly power."—Christian Life.

THE SPIRIT AND THE FLESH

A mighty battle is raging at the present time between the spirit and the flesh. On its issue depends the rise or fall of our civilization. Should the material and sensuous prove victorious, the curtain will be rung down on the splendid progress we have made. Should the spiritual prove conqueror, then we will go forward to an era, whose splendor may surpass that of any era that has preceded.—Rabbi Krauskopf.

MISSIONARY

OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS AND MISSIONS

The Sunday schools in the various Conferences are acceding to the decision of the last session of the Southern Christian Convention and also to the vote of the various Sunday School Conventions of the past summer. This is as it should be for it means loyalty to the Convention and developing interest in missionary work. "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also," is as true of a Sunday school as of an individual. As our Sunday schools put money into missions, they will also have some measure of interest and devotion there also. Besides helping the cause of missions, this movement has wonderfully helped and will continue to help swell the monthly offering to our Orphanage. I know of a Sunday school that was taking an offering once a month for the Orphanage. When it was suggested to the school that it also take one offering a month for missions, the objection was raised that this would decrease the school's monthly contributions to the Orphanage. The motion prevailed, however, and the school decided to give one offering per month to missions as it was already giving one offering a month to the Orphanage. The result has been, the pastor tells me, that instead of decreasing the offering to the Orphanage, it has increased it more than 30 per cent and then that which is even better, the offering of the other two Sundays for current expenses brings more into the treasury of that Sunday school than it used to get when it kept the offering of every Sunday for its current expenses. Such experiences have caused this writer to make the proposition to any and every school of our Southern Christian Convention to this effect: that if the school will give one offering a month for the Orphanage and one offering a month for missions, and then does not get a sufficient amount from the offerings of the other two Sundays of the month for current expenses, he will make up the deficit out of his own pocket. He has had this offer out now for several months and thus far, has had the testimony of several superintendents to the effect that since their schools began to give for the Orphanage and for missions as they kept for themselves, their contributions have increased rather than decreased. I mean by that the contribution of the two Sundays for current expenses. My candid conviction is that every school will find this to be true because it is both Biblical and reasonable. Why should not every Sunday school be taught through its gifts to do as much for others as for self, as well as individuals?

The following schools thus far form the honor roll of those who have gone into the plan and we believe that not long hence all our schools will be following this plan. I am sincerely trusting they will at any rate, as I know that it makes for the life of the school and for the advancement of the Kingdom:

Chapel Hill, N. C.; Wentworth, N. C.; Linville, Va.; Lebanon, N. C.; Pleasant Grove, Va.; Parks' Cross Roads, N. C.; Pleasant Union, N. C.; New Elam, N. C.; Reids-ville, N. C.; Beulah, Ala.; Graham, N. C.; Durham, N. C.; Holy Neck Baraca Class, Va.; Haw River, N. C.; Wadley, Ala.; Burlington, N. C.; Ingram, Va.; Catawba Springs, N. C.; New Providence, N. C.; Spring Hill, Va.; Lanett, Ala.; Roanoke, Ala.; Isle of Wight, Va.; Semora, N. C.; Salem Chapel, N. C.; Union Ridge, N. C.; Pleasant Grove, Va.; Holy Neck, Va.; Pleasant Grove, Ala.; Spring Hill, Va.; Ivor, Va.; Shallow Well, N. C.; Sanford, N. C.; Henderson, N. C.; Bethlehem, Va.; Ambrose, Ga.; Christian Light, N. C.; Liberty (Vance), N. C.; Poplar Branch, N. C.; Holland, Va.; New Lebanon, Va.; Raleigh, N. C.; Richland, Ga.; New Hope, Ala.; Ebenezer, N. C.; Oak Level, N. C.; Grace's Chapel, N. C.; Big Oak, N. C.; Damascus, N. C.; Union, Ala.; People's Church, Del.; Zion Grove, Ala.; High Point, N. C.

And this matter of giving only leads to another and a larger matter, namely, the opportunity that it affords of bringing to the schools some information and inspiration on the subject of missions. I know it is the custom of many schools when they take their monthly offerings for the Orphanage for someone to speak about the needs of the Orphanage and the work it is doing. Now the same opportunity is afforded for bringing before the school the needs of the mission fields and the great work that is being done to help reach this sin-cursed world for Christ. It does seem that every school once a month could to the very best advantage with help to everybody and hurt to none, speak a few minutes in hearing something about the needs of the millions of heathen whom we are commissioned to reach in the name and for the sake of our blessed Lord who gave Himself for them as He did for us. I am longing then for the day to come when every Sunday school in the Southern Christian Convention will not only be taking an offering for missions, half of which goes for the home work and half for the foreign work unless especially designated otherwise, but will also be hearing about missions and learning of missions. This is a matter of reaching our young people for a great work.

J. O. ATKINSON

A WORK WORTH WHILE

The Mission Secretary had the privilege on Sunday morning, October 3, of worshiping with our South Norfolk congregation. He had seen the house and the rooms full of busy Sunday school workers and had met the Men's Bible Class which meets in an adjoining hall in a sort of overflow meeting as there is no room for them in the church. The congregation was intelligent, hopeful, inspiring and happy. To the Secretary's right, as he sat in the pulpit, he observed a memorial window on which these words were inscribed: "In honor of Rev. Herbert Scholz, who organized this church, May 29, 1904." After the service one of the charter members told me of the great sacrifices Brother Scholz made while pastor in Berkley, to begin this work and what herculean efforts he put forth to inspire the brethren with a determination to build, and then the pastor added to the interest of the discussion by saying that he was converted under the preaching of Brother Scholz at Damascus, Orange County, N. C. So through the divine service rendered by Brother Scholz, he was permitted to give to the community the church and the pastor. What a great work has sprung up from these sacrificial services on the part of Brother Scholz!

The congregation has outgrown its present house and equipment and now faces the necessity of tearing down or removing the old and erecting a large and ample building. The congregation feels a need of better equipment for Sunday school and church services and under the enthusiastic and devoted leadership of the present pastor, Rev. O. D. Poythress, it feels that it must have larger and better equipment for further growth and development. They contemplate erecting a building to cost not less than $75,000.00. They need it for the indications are that this is to be one of our most faithful and progressive congregations. Their contributions through their Sunday school and church for the Orphanage and for Missions and for the Men and Millions Forward Movement and for other benevolences are indications of what they will do when there is sufficient equipment for further progress and growth. I am very happy indeed that Brother Scholz still lives to enjoy now the fruits of labors so well wrought in previous years and here is hoping that the handsome edifice to be constructed will gladden his heart and that he will not many years hence see the full fruits of his labors of other days.

On another window to the left of the pulpit are the words "In honor of Rev. J. O. Cox," who for some years was pastor and who also made sacrifices that the congregation might be made permanent and start on its upward career of usefulness and service. We never know in this life with what permanence and potency we are working when we give our hand and heart to a cause that is just and righteous.

Brother Poythress is reaping the fruits from labors wrought by others and I have no doubt that others in years to come will also reap the fruits from the sowing of his hand, for he is doing a great work in South Norfolk and the congregation gives promise of great things in the future.

It was indeed a happy day for the Mission Secretary, not merely because of the members at Sunday school and church but because of the enthusiasm and interest everywhere apparent in the work. I do not recall having faced a congregation more devout and more bent upon things of Kingdom interest.

WOMAN'S REALM

(All items for this department should be sent to Mrs. J. W. Harrell, Burlington, N. C.)

THE HEART OF THE PROBLEM

What is the real heart of the missionary problem? Is it a problem of men, or of money, or of prayer? Is it a problem of organization or method? We believe it includes each of these, but it lies deeper than any or all of them. We may render our services, give our money, and offer our prayers without having the real spirit of missions. It is possible that our interest in the cause may be only outward and formal.

Sometimes we attend a great missionary meeting or hear a great sermon that thrills and inspires us and we return to our homes with hearts all aglow with the missionary flame, but all too soon our enthusiasm begins to subside and we find ourselves drifting back into the old life of indifference and self-complacency. Some one terms this "borrowed heat." Our interest in the great vital question was only passing and spasmodic.

We believe that it is a problem of love—personal love for our Lord and savior. Where there is not genuine love for Christ in the heart, there can be no loyalty to him; therefore no abiding interest in the extension of the Kingdom and in the salvation of men.

The real spirit of missions is the spirit of Christ and the spirit of Christ was the spirit of supreme sacrifice.

He has saved us, but it cost Him His life blood to do it. Is he not worthy of our love and should we not be willing to sacrifice for Him? God laid the foundation of the work of world redemption in sacrifice, when it cost Him his only begotten Son. The very soul of missions is sacrifice.

There is need today to emphasize the principle of sacrifice in missions. Self-sacrifice is, by no means, popular today. People are eliminating the spirit of sacrifice and indulging ease and comfort. This tendency is creeping into our churches, our homes and our individual lives. A spirit of complacency is prevailing where there should be a more genuine concern for the great cause which was dear to the heart of our Master. The great commission, "Go ye" has failed to make an impression upon many hearts. There are churches and individuals who would be glad if the nations of the earth could be evangelized, provided it did not seriously disturb or inconvenience them.

More money is being spent today on luxuries than ever before in the world's history. We are wearing more expensive clothes, we are building more magnificent homes and costlier churches and equipping and furnishing them in the most luxurious manner. We are spending more on pleasure and fashion while we are spending our pittance to help evangelize the millions who sit in darkness. Our indifference is appalling.

We must face the fact that our plan of procedure is contrary to Divine law—the law of sacrifice—"He that saveth his life shall lose it; he that loseth his life shall save it." Jesus said, "Except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit."

If we love our Lord and Master as we should we will also love our fellow man to that extent that we will more and more manifest the sacrificial spirit in helping to carry His gospel to the ends of the earth.

NOTES

Again let us call the attention of our women to the need of co-operation in this department. Will you not send us a report of the work in your society? Tell us what you are doing and how you are doing things.

Have you appointed representatives to the missionary conferences which will be held at Holland, Va., and Durham, N. C.? The women of the Eastern Virginia Conference will meet at Holland October 28, and the women of North Carolina will meet at Durham November 13-14. Every society should send delegates and churches having no societies are urged to send representatives.

It was the writer's privilege to attend the regular monthly meeting of the Young People's Society of the Burlington Christian church October 4, at the home of Miss Nellie Fleming. The meeting was largely attended and a good program was rendered. This society has grown very materially in numbers and efficiency during the past year. Following the program, a social hour was enjoyed and refreshments were served.

These young people gave an open meeting at the church on Sunday evening October 3. It was the occasion of their mite box opening. An offering of $65.00 was received for their work. MRS. J. W. H.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

A SPLENDID TRIP

On Saturday morning, October 9, with the Singing Class and its teacher, I boarded the train for Portsmouth, Va., where the Singing Class had engagements to render a religious concert. We reached our destination on time and were met by Brothers Poythress and Morgan and their friends, with machines, and the children were assigned to homes with the members of the First church for the night.

On Sunday morning, October 10, the Class gave its concert at the Portsmouth Christian church at 9:30, and then were carried to the South Norfolk church and rendered the program there at 11:00 o'clock. Dinner was served by the good folks of the South Norfolk church and then we were taken to Rosemont church where the children rendered a program at 3:00 P. M. The Rosemont people then gave us an automobile ride through the city and country to Pine Beach wharf where we took the boat for Newport News, where the concert was given at the Christian church at 8 o'clock. On Monday the good people of Newport News gave us a very pleasant automobile trip to the Langley Fields "Buckree", the Old Soldiers Home and several places of interest which we enjoyed very much. On our return to the city, after dinner was served, we bade our friends farewell and boarded the boat to Norfolk. Here we were met by Rev. J. F. Morgan and entertained until time to take in the concert given by Mr. Rodeheaver, Billy Sunday's singer. We were entertained by the friends of the Third church Monday night.

I believe the children enjoyed this trip as much as any trip they have ever taken. They got to ride on the boat and the captain made them guests of honor and invited them into his tower where they could get a good view of everything they were passing. The trip to the ocean on Monday was another treat as only one of them had ever seen the ocean.

The pastors and people in each church and community did everything in their power to make our visit both pleasant and profitable. We were greeted by a crowded house at each church and the attention was never better and the offerings were excellent. Brother J. M. Darden, who is a member of the Board of Trustees and a great friend of our institution, was with us at three of the services and made talks in behalf of the work. Brother C. D. West, also a member of the Board of Trustees, having been on this Board since its organization, and the superintendent of the Sunday school at Newport News, gave us a warm welcome to the church there and made a splendid appeal in behalf of the orphanage.

We want to thank each and every one who entertained us, and we assure you that we enjoyed every minute of the time and regret that we did not have more time in which to shake hands with the friends of each church and get better acquainted.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: Guess you think I have been on a long vacation. Daddy has been preaching nearly all the summer and mother has been real busy, as I am a little boy yet and require a great deal of attention. Daddy is away now but will finish his revival work this week. I will be glad to have him home again. Find check enclosed for $2.00, my dues for June, July, August and September.—Olive D. Poythress, Jr.

I am glad I had the pleasure of meeting you while on my trip to your city. You are a fine little boy and I fell very much in love with you. No wonder "daddy" thinks you are the only boy.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: It has been a long time since I sent my dues. Not because I forgot the consins, but you know little folks just can't write and grown-ups are always busy—(so they say). Enclosed find $1.00. Will try not to be so late next time. Love and best wishes.—L. M. Veazey, Jr.

I am real glad to get your letter again this week. I was afraid you had forgotten us. I hope you will soon be large enough to write your own letters and then you will have no trouble.—"Uncle Charley."

BEDTIME OF THE CROWS

With most birds the hour for retiring is a quiet period; it is a time when all loud noises are gradually hushed, and when only drowsy chirps and low-spoken good-nights are heard. And at this time their movements are furtively silent, as if they wished to get to bed without letting any one know it. They glide noiselessly to their chosen resting place and settle themselves so quietly that no one is the wiser.

One minute they may be seen creeping through the leaves, and the next, with head tucked under wing; they are fast asleep. No, there is no unnecessary fuss or commotion at bird bedtime—that is, unless the bird colony happens to be of the crow persuasion. Bedtime with them becomes a bedlam, and the simple act of retiring is magnified into a function that requires hours to carry through properly. Each night they act as if that were the first time in their lives that they ever went to bed and that it was something entirely new and unheard of.

In the first place, crows like to spend the night in the company of hundreds, sometimes thousands, of their kind. In fact, the more bedfellows they have, the merrier. We doubt if a single crow ever deliberately went to bed by himself—that is, if it was possible to find a flock of its fellows.

Crows, which range over many miles of territory, always start in time to get back to the home roost by sunset or a little after, though they may have to travel many weary miles to do so.

The roost, as their airy dormitory is called, is usually in some dense pine forest; possibly the protection afforded by the evergreen foliage accounts for their preference for pines over other kinds of trees. When the young crows that were hatched in the spring are fully fledged, the families gather in great flocks, or colonies, and pass the fall and winter months in a constant round of excitement, hubdub, and confusion. It is only when the next mating season arrives that the congregation breaks up.

At the end of a clear, cold winter day, when the last rays of the setting sun touches the tops of the pines with splashes of gold, and when the rising breeze sighs a requiem for the dying day, it is an experience never to be forgotten, to watch a colony of crows clanging home for the night. As they come from all points of the compass, the detachments vary in numbers, ranging from a dozen to two hundred.

Usually about an hour before sunset the silence is broken by the clear bugle calls of a body of stragglers that come drifting slowly in toward the roosting place. They do not alight, but swing low over the tree tops, again and again, as if they want to make sure that the coast is clear and that everything is ready for the night.

After satisfying themselves that all is well, they disappear in the direction from which they came and probably carry back their report to the waiting horde.

Before long the flocks begin to arrive, each division led by some wily old rascal who has probably had more hairbreadth escapes than he has feathers on his body. If the evening is calm, the flocks appear flying at a great height. They keep close together until directly over the home grove, when all at once the mass seems to come to pieces, each separate bird making a descent in a different manner from the others. Some drop down in a straight line, others come swirling through the air in headlong swoops, with twistings and turnings that baffle all description. With much cawing and hawing, they skim above the trees and chase one another with all wild abandon of children at play, and finally wind up their maneuvers by alighting in nearby fields or in the neighboring trees.

All this time they are making all the fuss and confusion possible. And when an acre or so of crows begin their racket, nothing short of a riveting machine or a steam calliope could make itself heard.

The crows that have settled on the ground are evidently not looking for food, as they stand motionless with their heads pointing toward the breeze. They seem to be shouting encouragement to their fellows in the air and making remarks to their neighbors in the same tone.

All this time no bird has settled for the night. They all appear to be waiting for some signal which means "go," when flock after flock rises from the ground, and the seuffle for lower births is on.

By this time the uproar has become deafening, and those who have secured choice positions in the trees are cawing their satisfaction to less fortunate brothers who are still circling above in the twilight. When all are settled for the night, the grove becomes as silent as it was at noonday, the stillness broken only when a few belated stragglers come flopping home.

Crows must be sound sleepers, as no sound is heard among the pines until daybreak the next morning, when the babel of rasping voices breaks out again. The confab lasts about an hour, every crow yelling something at the top of its voice and nobody listening. At intervals small bands of would-be early risers desert their perches and make ready to leave; but when this happens, a great shout of disapproval goes up from the hundreds who are not quite ready to rise, and the early birds reluctantly return to their perches. Things quiet down until another batch make an attempt to leave, only to be called down by the "committee on a little more slumber," and forced to return. At about sunrise what answers in the crow language to revielle is sounded by some weather-beaten old patriarch, and they begin to leave by platoons and detachments. In half an hour's time the roost is deserted, and silence once more reigns in the sleeping quarters of the crows.

Why they waste so much time in what looks like useless preparation for so simple a thing as going to bed and getting up in the morning no one knows.—Charles A. David, in Forward.

OBITUARIES

LINDSEY

Miss Mary E. Lindsey, daughter of the late Shepherd and Betsy Lindsey, was born December 15, 1838 and died August 15, 1920, aged eighty-one years and eight months. Sister Lindsey had the misfortune to fall about eight years ago and break her hip, and since then she has been confined to her bed. She never allowed her physical condition to sever her relation to God, but kept in close communion with Him and expressed a willingness to go any time the summons should come.

Sister Lindsey leaves to mourn their loss, one sister, one brother and a host of friends. In the absence of her pastor, Rev. R. F. Brown, the funeral was conducted by the writer, from Damascus Christian church August 16, and the body laid to rest in the church cemetery beside her loved ones. May God bless those left behind.

C. E. GERRINGER

ROLLINGS

Susan Barrett Rollings, wife of R. H. Rollings, Sebrell, Va., died September 11, 1920, aged sixty-seven years. She is survived by three sons and two daughters—the youngest of whom is Viola Virginia Rollings who graduated at Elon in the class of 1914.

Sister Rollings was a daughter of the late James M. Barrett, who was a charter member and a deacon of Barrett's Christian church. She united with the church in early girlhood and spent a life of active service, being loyal to every cause that arose for the benefit of humanity and God. Not only will she be missed in her home, but in the community at large. May the Lord comfort the bereaved children in this sad hour.

Susan J. Barrett Rollings was born August 27, 1853 and died September 11, 1920. She was married to R. H. Rollings on February 19, 1880 and to this union were born five children: Edwin Mills, Jesse Barrett, Amos Thornton, Lona May (Williams) and Viola Virginia. She is also survived by one brother, Joseph Barrett, Waverly, Va., three sisters, Mrs. Ida Barrett Laine, and Miss Martha Barrett, Wakefield, Va.; Mrs. Lucy F. Spivey, Isle of Wight, C. H., Va.

The deceased had been a member of Barrett's church since early girlhood and was always true to her church. She had been in poor health for some years but bore her afflictions with great Christian fortitude. Truly a good woman has gone to her reward.

The funeral services were conducted at her home near Sebrell, Va., and she was laid to rest in the old Rollings' family burying ground. The flowers were beautiful and abundant. The Lord bless the family.

Robert, aged four, and his sister May, just a year older, were given some candy one day by a friend. May, noticing that Robert had two pieces, while she had only one, complained of the unjust division.

"Well," replied Robert quickly, "break yours in half and you'll have two pieces."

"Say, father," said little Fred, "did you ever have another wife besides mother?"

"Why, certainly not," said the father.

Community Leadership

COMMUNITY organization, industrial democracy, good housing, and cooperative production and distribution of the necessities of life are of prime importance to community welfare, and therefore they are worthy of special consideration. If these ideals could be realized, other attendance and pressing community problems would be more easily solved. Health, recreation, education and cultural and spiritual values would be more easy of attainment. : :: :: :: :: :: :: ::

EDITORIAL

IN THE CITY OF ELMS

(Editorial Correspondence)

La Grange, Georgia, is located seventy-one miles South of Atlanta. The profusion of elms that beautify this city of 17,000 inhabitants makes a delightful place to live. This city was the seat of the twenty-first session of the Georgia and Alabama Conference, which convened October 19 for a session of three days. It was my good pleasure to be there with the brethren.

The Conference convened on Tuesday night, with the enrollment of delegates, ministers and visitors, the appointment of the usual committees, the transaction of miscellaneous business and the deliverance of president H. W. Elder's address. The president's theme was "The Church" which he discussed under three divisions: Its history—Its sacrifice—Its Mission. The message was well received and a great defense of the Church.

Wednesday morning the Conference was in full swing of its work. Pastor C. W. Hanson had a guiding hand and watchful eye of the details of the local situation and saw that comfort and conveniences were meted out to all who were there. The reading of the ministerial and church reports showed a good work done. The shortage of the cotton crop in that section, together with the decreased price of the fleecy staple, no doubt figured largely in preventing the churches as a whole, from raising all apportionments. Some churches came in full. I feel that others would have, had it not been for the scarcity of money at the present time.

The report on education was a central theme for Wednesday morning; and, in the absence of Dr. W. A. Harper, who was scheduled to make an address, Rev. G. O. Lankford, Berkley, Va., made a most acceptable presentation of the new school that is to be built within the bounds of this or the Alabama Conference. As in the Alabama Conference, the brethren are deeply interested in this forward step and they cherish great hope that a school of our control is soon to be located in their midst.

The afternoon session of the first day was the taking up primarily of the subject of missions at home and abroad. Layman T. J. Holland, Wray, Ga., and several others made very interesting presentations of the home mission work of the Conference and definite steps were taken for the enlargement of the work. Miss Bessie Holt, Burlington, N. C., substituted for Dr. J. O. Atkinson, who was scheduled to speak but could not be there on account of having to attend a mission board meeting in Dayton, Ohio. Miss Holt very interestingly presented the work of foreign missions and laid special emphasis on the matter of training our young people to take a definite part in contributing for the work of foreign missions. Others also spoke in the interest of this progressive program of the denomination and every indication points to renewed interest in foreign missions in the Georgia and Alabama Conference.

The night session of the second day was also missionary in spirit, it being the regular meeting of the Missionary Association of the Conference. Rev. G. O. Lankford spoke on "The plan of Financing the Kingdom"; Miss Bessie Holt on "Training Young People to Give." The Missionary Association is active in its work and the treasurer's report showed an accumulated fund to be used by the direction of the Executive Board.

The third day was the completion of the miscellaneous reports and deferred items. Two ministers were received into the Conference—Rev. H. M. Gray of the Methodist Church, by transfer of license, and Rev. H. H. Toney, elevated from the Biblical Class to the office of licensure.

This Conference, as well as the Alabama Conference, took favorable action on the superannuated fund and voted to pool the same as requested by the recent session of the Convention.

No doubt I have omitted many things that could have been spoken of, but have given a brief outline only. The brethren of our two Conferences in the far South know how to exercise good fellowship and to be in their midst and away from the details and grind of an office, is a benediction to be coveted. I turn from the visitation of these Conferences with a larger vision for service and a greater appreciation of the work in the far South.

THERE SHOULD BE NO MISUNDERSTANDING

A few subscribers are remitting at the old rate of $2.00 the year and saying: "This was for last year when the rate was only $2.00." The following notice was repeated in THE SUN for September 22 and 29.

"The Board of Publication in session September 17, 1920, voted unanimously to increase the price of The Christian Sun from $2.00 to $2.50 the year, the same to become effective October 1, 1920.

"Renewals and new subscriptions will be received until noon, Friday, October 1, at the old rate of $2.00 the year."

There should be no misunderstanding. If you owe for the paper last year, it means that through the kindness of the office your subscription was not cut off when out. If you owe for a year it means that the Convention has put up the money to carry that account. It would, therefore, be unfair to accept this and at the same time expect to get renewed at the old rate. Each remittance received is credited at the rate of $2.50 per annum. Two dollars will pay you for ten months and not for twelve months. There should be no misunderstanding.

THE CHRISTIAN ON ELECTION DAY

(Christian Work)

We are told that "our citizenship is in heaven." We are also commanded to pray "Thy kingdom come on earth." No man is a good citizen of the Kingdom of Heaven who is not a good citizen of that kingdom here on earth. When all church members become good citizens, our social and moral ills will disappear. The purpose of our individual salvation is social responsibility. The individual is saved in order that he may become a servant of his fellow-men. He best serves his fellow-men in a democratic commonwealth who is the best citizen of that commonwealth. "Good" people are notorious stay-at-homes on election day. They are not "good" citizens, either of the Kingdom of God or the civil State.

Sometimes the church people forget the fundamental purpose of personal salvation. We have had no adequate job for the regenerated man. The Church in the past has too often been content to rescue men from sin without effectively linking them up with the processes of saving society from its sins. After all, the sins of society are largely responsible for the sins of individuals. The liquor traffic, human slavery, and commercialized vice are institutionalized sins of society. These sins of society can never be eradicated, and in the past have never been eradicated, except through political action—through the franchise of good citizens.

Because it is only through political action that social sins can be eradicated, it is most important that the Christian be a good citizen of the State on election day, and thus show that he is a good citizen of the Kingdom. No man or woman in this age is a full-grown Christian who does not earnestly concern himself with the problems of politics and citizenship. In a democracy, Christianity often has its finest expression in citizenship.

The church member who is so pious that he is not interested in politics, bond issues, initiative and referendum measures is nothing but a pious hypocrite. One may pray for the coming of Christ's kingdom until doomsday, but unless one works and votes for the coming of the Kingdom it will never come. The principles of the Kingdom of God must become the laws of the civil State, and be expressed in the ordinances of the city. Not only individuals, but society, must be saved ere the Kingdom of God can fully come.

Very often the Christian can do more to advance the Kingdom at the political convention than at the prayer meeting. Often the ballot box rather than the prayer booth is the place for the settlement of the problems of the Kingdom. The municipal political campaign is just as vital as the revival meeting—and just as sacred a duty for the Christian as the revival. The man who has gone with Christ into the mount of holy transfiguration must come with Christ down into the valley of every-day sins and distresses and transform this earth into the Kingdom of Heaven. The so-called Christian who stays at home or in the office on election day is a worse hypocrite than the man who stays away from church. Christianity is made effective and becomes operative at the ballot box.

The devil of greed and lust and passion and power cares not for our prayers nor our tears, but he cringes in terror when we vote. The liquor traffic and commercialized vice can bear eloquent testimony to this fact. Only through political action can we eliminate social sins and make constructively effective the principles of the gospel of the Master. Therefore, the true Christian is the one who votes as well as prays; who seeks to make the laws of the State an expression of the will of God. The Kingdom of God will be advanced or retarded in November by the way Christian men vote.

ON THE WAY TO THE POLLS

By Lieutenant Colonel Elijah W. Halford

Marching for ten hours a day, in columns of four, military order, it would require 158 days for the American voters of 1920 to pass a given point.

The movement of voters to the polls on the second of November may thus be visualized. One day for a possible thirty million of soldiers of peace to register the supreme will of the greatest nation on earth. This self-

LIGHTHOUSE OBSERVATIONS

J. E. MASSEY

OUR UNLISTED CHRISTIANS

Churches and religious organizations in America exert an unmeasured influence beyond the numbers of their membership. "Even beyond our denominational dreaming," says a writer in The Intelligencer, "we have before us the consciousness of the great outside brotherhood which is moving forward, it not exactly 'like a mighty army', at least with some of the characteristics of the ancient tribal movements, swarming and stopping, settling and advancing through the years. All of those in the community who are influenced even so slightly toward good, right living, honesty, and all the other things which are found in Christian character must be counted. Influenced by the teachings of religion or by the example of its followers, they are necessarily to be included in the Christian community."

Counting the number of religious organizations in America, according to the Bureau of Census, there are 227,487. These have a membership of 41,926,432. There were at the time of the report, 194,759 Sunday schools, registering 19,935,890 pupils.

Though these figures are numerically great "the whole truth is not told." Organizations like the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., Woman's Christian Temperance Union, American Bible Society, and The American Tract Society, though religious in nature, are not included, because the scope of the report is specifically to organization for worship, having a specific and distinct membership.

In the last analysis, the writer says: "The Christian community includes all those who are not definitely and positively antagonistic to the influence and example of Jesus Christ, and consequently many and diverse elements are to be counted. But who can deny that in this community the real influence and power of Christians are to be found today?"

WORKING THE LEAGUE

Whether the Democrats or the Republicans will be victorious in the present campaign, does not seem to be the whole determination of power of the League of Nations. The League as a matter of fact, is already working. No doubt, it has headed off a war between Poland and Lithuania and seems to have stopped another actually in progress between Sweden and Finland over the Aland Islands.

When the Russian Revolution occurred, the people of these islands voted 95 per cent in favor of a union with Sweden. But Finland has claimed these islands as a part of her own territory. In Sweden's recognition of the independence of Finland there was an implied reservation as to the Alands, and since then the two governments have been growing more and more bitter over the controversy, with actual threat of war. Though at first Finland declined to submit the question to the League, saying that it was a domestic question, it was finally presented. The League decided that Finland's authority had not been established, and that the sovereignty over these islands is an international question. In evidence, Finland has conceded that the claim is open, and a peaceful settlement is in progress.

DISMEMBERED AUSTRIA

It seems that no other country of the war has suffered so much in power and independence as Austria. From the great Austro-Hungarian Empire which contained more than fifty million people at the outbreak of the struggle, the present Austria has only about six million and one third of this number is found in one city, Vienna. She has been shorn of her graneries, Bohemia, and Moravia. Her king has "gone begging" and her once powerful army has vanished. On all sides, she seems to have lost her former glory. What will become of her?

Since Austria is anything but independent as she formerly was, and owing to the fact that most of her people are German in blood, she may join Germany. The present movement in this direction is being bitterly fought by the French. What the outcome will be, is hard to tell. Evidently Austria cannot fare alone as she once did. Millions of her people have been starving on account of ill adjusted conditions. Cooperation on the part of all nations will be needed in spite of the fact that she was once our enemy.

THE COUNTRY COLORED CHURCH

There is a movement in South Carolina to help the country colored church by training better colored ministers. According to the Methodist Protestant Herald, a Southern white layman, Dr. Dillard, of Charlottesville, Virginia, has for several years held an annual institute for colored preachers in Trenton. Simple courses in the Bible and the minister's relations, social and spiritual to the neighborhood life are given by laymen from Virginia and Louisiana. Over 150 attended the institute this year.

For many years the "typical old colored minister" of the country has been an object of "pitiable fun", groping his way in ignorance, handicapped by narrow opportunities. The value of such an institution not only to the colored people, but to the whites as well, cannot be estimated. It is a light illuminating an unmolested darkness of the past.

USING "MOVIES" TO AID THE TEACHER

Biology and geography will be more interesting now, since the pupil will be able to have the additional use of the screen to help him visualize his study. This is the view of the Board of Education in New York State, after having given the moving picture project in class room a thorough test. The Horace Mann school of Columbia University, a pioneer in this kind of teaching, finds that the results of the combined instruction method is wholly satisfactory. Not only in New York State, but in other states as well, schools are using moving pictures in courses of instruction, and find them satisfactory. Of course sensational pictures of the theaters are not used in these courses. Only those scientifically adapted for the work are used.

REST FROM WEARINESS

Even the strongest Christians sometimes grow weary with the exacting cares and duties of this life. Jesus was physically wearied as he sat by Jacob's well when the woman of Samaria came. But his weariness vanished before this opportunity to serve and to save. We grow weary of business, of pleasures, and of life's trival brie-a-brac. Whenever we are wearied with the sorrows and sadness of this world, we may find rest and refreshment, as Jesus did, in telling to others the gracious story of God's love and power to save. The things that wearied Jesus most were the sin, the sorrow, and the indifference of the world. That which brought him the greatest joy and rest was the opportunity to lead a soul into the way of eternal life.—Christian Observer.

WHAT DO YOU WANT?

To a correspondent of the New York Times an Irish leader said: "Irishmen don't know what they want and won't be happy till they get it." It strikes us that a good many of our own countrymen are in just that attitude of mind and would do well to find out just what it is they want, whether it is lawful and profitable for others as well as for themselves and how they are going to go after it.—Congregationalist and Advance.

TO RESPECT THE SON OF GOD

It is still true, whatever a foolish egotism may say, that to reject the Son of God is to lose both our inheritance and our soul. It means the loss of all things worth while. Hear it, ye who reject the offered mercy! Saddest of all facts in human experience is it that he who came to save with bleeding, broken heart because of our obstinate rejection of his love becomes our judge, and from his lips we must receive our just doom.—Methodist Protestant.

TEMPER AND DIVORCE

An English judge is quoted as saying: "You can get a divorce for all sorts of things in America. It seems quite easy. A woman can divorce a man there in some States for such a trival thing as a bad temper." We do not believe in easy divorces. Unfaithfulness to the marriage vow is the only Scriptural ground for divorce. But aside from the question of divorce, how can a learned judge call a "bad temper" a trival thing? What can be more disagreeable, more exasperating than to live with a nagging, quarrelsome, bad-tempered man or woman? Henry Drummond declares that temper is the voice of the virtuous. How many people otherwise above reproach have allowed themselves to become the prey of an evil temper! It is often a fly in the ointment. If there were fewer badtempered people, there would be fewer broken-hearted people, and fewer divorces too.—Watchman-Examiner.

A DANGEROUS BY-PRODUCT

In addition to the nicotine which every cigarette contains, there is formed from the burning of the tobacco and its paper wrapper another poison almost as dangerous—furfural. It is one of the constituents of fusel oil, which is used in the manufacture of poor whiskey and is responsible for the dire results that come from the consumption of such a mixture. The latin for thief is "fur". There seems to be a close connection between that word and furfural. Both take from a man the things that are worth while.—National Advocate.

PURIFY NEWS

It is my own private hobby that the most fundamental thing in making a government democratic is the purification of the news. That is a task eminently suited to the work of the Churches. We suffer today more than anything else from the inability of the public to secure the necessary information on which to act in great affairs. The newspapers require criticism and assistance from outside organizations if they are to reform and improve their practice, and there is no greater work that a Church could undertake than to become again a witness to the truth.—Friends' Intelligencer

TOO MUCH LIKE HELL

A young lawyer sometime ago started for the West. While he was in college he was a blatant unbeliever. He boasted that he would locate in some place where there were no churches or Bibles. He found a place which met his conditions. Before the year was out he wrote to a young minister, a former college classmate, begging him to come out and bring plenty of Bibles and begin preaching, for he had become convinced that a place without Christians, churches, and Bibles was "too much like hell for any living man to stay in."—Missionary Outlook.

ELBERT HUBBARD'S ADVICE TO WORKERS

Elbert Hubbard, who went down with the Lusitania, has given this bit of fine advice to employees: "If you work for a man, in heaven's name work for him. If he pays wages that supply your bread and butter, work for him, think well of him, and stand by him, and stand by the institution he represents. I think if I worked for a man, I would work for him. I would not work for him part of his time, but all of his time. I would give an undivided service or none." If this is good advice for a little institution, it is better advice for a big one, and I maintain that it is thoroughly applicable to the spirit that should fill the hearts of those identified with the greatest institution upon the face of the earth. Let us not at any time disparage the efforts of the past, but let us improve conditions by working harder and by putting in full time. Let it be said of the Christians everywhere that they are the people who found the dynamite in gospel and used it to the glory and honor of God.—Gospel Advocate

NOTES

THE SUN'S Editor is planning to attend the Eastern Virginia Conference next week.

Rev. R. F. Brown, Chapel Hill, N. C., has accepted a call to the Rose Hill church, Columbus, Georgia and expects to enter upon the work there November 1.

Rev. J. O. Cox, Saluda, N. C., and Rev. R. A. Truitt, Mt. Airy, N. C., have transferred their membership from the Christian Church to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Those who are planning to attend the Eastern Virginia Conference, November 3-5, will find some valuable information in Bro. Jay's letter on page 11.

Rev. H. W. Carter, a member of the North Carolina Conference, is teaching English in Rutherfordton College this year. Bro. Carter graduated from Trinity College in the Class of 1920.

We quote the following from Alumni Notes in Maroon and Gold, a publication by the student body of Elon College, N. C.: "Rev. B. F. Black, who served as chaplain in the A. E. F., has been ordered to the U. S. Public Health Service at Greenville, S. C., where he occupies ward No. 1, bed No. 3. He developed a throat trouble while in France from which he has not fully recovered. Here is wishing him every happiness and a speedy recovery."

Rev. C. A. McDaniel, the newly elected pastor of the First Christian church, Winchester, Va., began his work at that place, Sunday, October 17. We quote the following from the Winchester Evening Star under date of October 16: "The Rev. Mr. McDaniel comes to this church from the pastorate of the Christian church at Millford, N. J., which is one of the oldest and most substantial churches in the New Jersey Christian Conference. The First Christian church here is one of the most recently built churches in this city and has made remarkable progress in establishing its influence and work."

GENERAL NEWS

The amount expended by the political parties in the present campaign to October 18, is as follows: Republicans, $2,741,503.34; Democrats, $699,971.61.

The fifteenth International Conference of the Young Men's Christian Associations of North America will be held in Richmond, Va., beginning November 18, 1920.

The production of soft coal reaches 12,000,000 tons weekly and insures against any shortage for the winter supply, according to a statement made by the National Coal Association.

The women of Norfolk, Va., are organizing a bank of their own, which is to be operated exclusively for women patrons. The capital stock is $50,000, and the organization is being effected through the efforts of Mrs. M. W. McIntyre, who was formerly connected with a publishing house in New York City.

Rev. Gilbert T. Rowe, D. D., Winston-Salem, N. C., has been chosen editor and general manager of the North Carolina Christian Advocate, Greensboro, N. C., having succeeded Revs. L. S. Massey and Hugh M. Blair, editor and associate editor and business manager, resigned.

Postmaster General Burleson has stated that an increase in the two cent first class letter rate will not be recommended to Congress as a plan of tax revision, and that the previous recommendation for a one cent local delivery rate will be renewed.

GENEROUS BILLY SUNDAY

When Dr. Billy Sunday had dedicated the Winona Lake Auditorium and had held a week's meeting in it, during which time some two thousand persons renewed their profession or made their first start in Christian life, he was given about two thousand dollars. He refused to take it and turned it into the auditorium fund. This he has done in many of his meetings and is always giving to the cause of Christ. Good men and women all over the land are following the same cheerful rule of generous and devoted dealing with the Church and its noble interests.—Herald and Presbyterian.

ON THE WAY TO THE POLLS

mobilized army of the United States, unofficered and without pomp or circumstance, is to go up the high places to constitute the majority that shall speak with the voice of authority as "We, the People."

Viewed with the spiritual eye and appreciated with the spiritual sense, next election day becomes the world's greatest spectacle. The nations stand at attention, awaiting with interest this unparalleled Sacrement.

The facts of history and the record of experience and observation alike belie the complacent suggestion of milksops that the present crisis may be safely ignored. The world is bleeding. Civilization is imperiled. Admiral Sims says: "The next war is just around the corner." The summons is not "To your tents, O Israel," but it is "To your knees, O Israel."

The powers that be are ordained of God. It is an act of worship to which the voters are summoned. In the spirit of worship the polls should be approached.

For the first time in the history of the country its citizenship goes to the ballot box without distinction of sex. Millions of women hitherto unenfranchised and four millions of young men coming into their majority will cast their first votes.

The ballot is freedom's gift to free citizens and is to be ennobled by a spirit that realizes its cost and meaning.

Lese Majeste in this country is an attack upon the integrity of the ballot. There can be deliberate abuse of the vote, or, what may be worse, indifferent neglect. The one can be detected and punished; the other may even be erected into an affected virtue and apparently go unwhipped.

Free government depends upon the intelligence and virtue of the people. If the vote be ignorant, or be directed by any kind of unworthy motive, it is a dangerous, if not criminal, vote. If the vote be ignored, left unused on any pretext that will not stand the searching of enlightened conscience, it is a cowardly betrayal. "Slackers" are justly held in contempt and in one way or another, soon or late, pay the price.

Individual conscientious study, a determination "to do the right as God gives us to see the right," is the only rule for a voter, and is a guarantee of the permanence of popular government.

A ballot blindly cast, under the spell of mere partisanship, or at the dictate of passion or prejudice, is not the vote of a freeman, but of a slave and a bigot. The seeds of death are in such a ballot.

It is of minor importance who may or may not be chosen for a given office. The government may still live and errors can be corrected or overruled. But unworthy voting, whatever may be its baleful control, and failure to engage in the duty of a blood-bought citizenship, means the decadence of the people and imperil free institutions.

So long as the majority is freely and fully enthroned government of the people, by the people and for the people will not perish.—The Christian Advocate (N. Y.)

LEAVES FROM MY NOTE BOOK

A few years ago, while living in Dayton, Ohio, it was my privilege to hear Dr. S. D. Gordon on the subject, "Swinging a Planet on the Pivot of Prayer". I shall never forget the deep and profound impression this great, inspired man of God made upon my heart and life. From a note book I gather a few thoughts and pass them on.

Dr. Gordon said: "A great sorrow has come into the heart of God. One of His worlds is a prodigal, ours is that prodigal world. God is trying to win this world back to Himself. Jesus died for that purpose, but it is not enough. The prodigal world must be told. Those of us who have been won for God should be the pathway back to God for others. Power will be furnished for the task". He said, "There are five outlets of power. One inlet—the Holy Spirit—He is power. He comes into the life only by invitation. He never comes without our consent. Without the Holy Spirit in control, guiding and directing, life is powerless.

"The five outlets of power are the life, the lips, service, money, prayer. The greatest of these is prayer.

"What is there to be compared with a noble, pure, unselfish life? If the life is in touch with God, power will be constantly, though perhaps, unconsciously flowing out and touching other lives. Yet the power of a life is limited to one spot—just where it is being lived.

"Power through the lips depends entirely upon the life back of the lips. Broken, stammering language is often made eloquent and powerful by the life behind it; while beautiful, smooth, flowing language often has no force or power because of the life back of it.

"Power through service may be great and may touch many spots, yet it is always less than a life.

"Power through money depends upon the motive back of the money. Begrudged money soils the treasury.

"But the power released through prayer is tremendous. It may touch not one spot but wherever in the whole round world you may choose to turn it.

"The greatest thing we can do for God and man is to pray. The truly great people of the world today are the people who pray—those who take time to pray. We do not have time—it must be taken from other things. But there is nothing so important and so urgent as prayer. There are people today who put prayer first and group the other items in life's schedule around prayer. These are the people who are doing the most for God in winning souls, in solving problems, in awakening churches, in supplying men and money for the mission fields, in keeping fresh and strong those who have given their lives in sacrificial service on the foreign fields."

Mr. Gordon says, "It is a wholly secret service". Sometimes we pass a plain looking woman quietly slipping out of church, her gown has been made over a number of times, her bonnet re-trimmed more than once. We pass her by unnoticed. Perhaps she is accomplishing more for her church, for God and the world than a hundred who have greater social prestige and note. All because she knows how to pray. She allows the Spirit to inspire and guide her praying. "Prayer opens a whole planet to a man's activities. One can as really be touching hearts for God in far away India or China through prayer, as though he were there in person." Mr. Gordon thinks the greatest privilege for service is in these darkened lands, where the need is greatest, whose hearts are more eager for the gospel and more responsive to the gospel.

"A man may enter his closet of prayer and close the door and as really spend a half hour in China for God as though he were there in person." Surely you and I should spend more half hours in such a service. By the power of prayer we may encourage some discouraged missionary; we may help him to preach the Word more effectively. A new joy may come into his life, a larger vision, a greater power may come to him because of our prayers for him. By the power of prayer, you may help men and women in China and India, in Japan and Porto Rico to accept Christ. People who are bound by ignorance, superstition, prejudice and evil spirits may be helped to cut off from these powers and, if need be, the giving up of family and loved ones to accept the gospel of Jesus Christ. What a privilege is ours, dear women of the Christian Church! Shall we remember Japan today, Porto Rico tomorrow, China the next day, India the next, then the churches of our own land, our own pastors, the man across the street and the many dear ones who need our prayers? Take time to pray. You will feel that you cannot spare the time, but take it from something else. It will be the best time you ever spent. Its reflex influence upon your own life cannot be measured.

NO FRIEND OF THE TOILER

It is time for pause and consideration. The enemies of liberty from the nations recently warring against civilization have not in force invaded America, but the ideas of Russia—Russia confused and confounded, bringing into civilization a tyranny more to be dreaded than those of the Czar—have invaded America. Is it too much to say that no speaker of seditious sentiment can fairly appeal to this government, under the plea of "free speech," when the object of this speech is the violent destruction of the very government to which he appeals? He is no friend to the toiler who incites to torch and bomb or who apologizes for their use. If society is sanely to work out its tremendous industrial problem in such a day as this, the exhortation must be to judgment rather than to passion. Pity must not be confused with sympathy. There must be no dulling of the moral sense in respect to deadly crime.—New York Christian Advocate.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

SUFFOLK LETTER

A Good Minister Laid To Rest

Rev. John T. Kitchen of Windsor, Virginia, was born in Southampton County, Virginia, in 1845 and died in the Protestant Hospital, Norfolk, Va., October 8, 1920, and was buried from Mount Carmel Christian church, Isle of Wight County, Va., on Sunday afternoon, October 10, 1920. An immense congregation filled the house and the yard. The service opened with "Nearer My God to Thee" and then Rev. E. T. Cotten, pastor, read a lesson from Revelation; the choir sang "Home of the Soul"; Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., read the lesson from I Corinthians; the choir sang, "Shall We Meet?"; Mr. John King read Brother Kitchen's last article in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, "Nearing Home"; and Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., offered the prayer. After this, each minister present made a brief talk, and I quoted II Samuel 18: 27—"He is a good man, and cometh with good tidings", with very brief comments. The service throughout was simple and tender, and the great congregation seemed to enter sympathetically into the spirit of the service. The service in the church closed with "Face to Face", sung as a duet, by Rev. E. T. Cotten and Miss Essie Johnson.

The casket was then removed to the grave and opened so that the vast throng could view the remains. It was a solemn procession, very impressive, and the day was bright like his disposition and life. His body was then laid to rest by the side of his first wife whose maiden name was Bettie Duck, daughter of Maj. I. W. Duck and who was buried there twenty-three years ago.

Brother Kitchen united with Union Christian church, Southampton County, Va., October 13, 1859, sixty years ago, lacking five days. He was ordained to the Christian ministry in 1875. He was of a bright and hopeful disposition, a clever writer, a genial friend, of irreproachable Christian character, and modest in his relation with others.

He was twice married. Both of his companions passed over the river before him, and left him a widower without children. His nearest living relatives are a nephew and niece. But he had a host of friends who were shocked, when they heard of his death, which was a surprise to all.

The loss of his voice, many years ago, stopped him from regular preaching, and he never returned to the active ministry again, though his voice was restored. He spent his time in reading, writing, gardening, teaching in the Windsor Sunday school, and such work as came to him.

The Suffolk church provided for one preaching service each Sunday in August, during the pastor's vacation. Rev. John T. Kitchen was invited to fill one Sunday and preached for us on the third Sunday in that month, exactly eight weeks before he was buried. So far as I know, that was the last sermon he ever preached. I was present and the congregation enjoyed his message.

Many people have told me that they enjoyed his articles in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. His style was florid, his themes were usually of domestic and spiritual type, tinged with poetic coloring. His thought and language appealed to readers because his writings contained a sort of "sunset's radiant glow" that touched the feeling of people. His writing, and his speaking, too, were poetic rather than classic; and there was a spiritual flavor in all his utterances.

He leaves behind him a "good name" which, Solomon says, is "rather to be chosen than great riches". He planted Isle of Wight Court House Christian church, which is one of the good working churches of the Conference. His name bears no stain, his life was a benediction, and his end was peace. Few men lived as long, had as little friction, and ended as quietly as his life ended.

He was pastor of many churches in the course of his ministerial career, and all the congregations regard him as a good man and found no fault in him. His life was a sermon and his death is a benediction.

FOOTBALL

I trust that I am not prejudiced in my mind for or against the game of football. This is the season of the year when the universities, colleges and even the high schools are "going wild" over this game. To use the words very enthusiastic, does not express the feeling around a football game.

Personally I am a football player—or rather I should say that I was "Center" on the Elon College team for the season 1910, if my memory serves correctly. The following spring after I played at Elon the Board of Trustees stopped Elon as a college, from playing this game. Since that time it has been allowed again. Of course the rules of the game have changed. That is true of all games. I wonder if the students of Sociology and those interested in the moral of our nation ever stop to think of what this game really means to the American people. The professor says the boys need recreation, and that is true. The parent says, "If my son can just make the football team it will be such a manly thing." And from a daring point of view that is true. I know through experience. The young lady looks with such great pride upon her "friend" with football in hand who has just made a "touchdown". But after all is not there a sense of measiness about the football player? Of what does true manhood consist? Is it the development of the muscle and not of the heart? Surely we would say that such a man would be one sided. Now in the football game the man learns to stand for his rights. He learns the spirit of "win the game at any cost". Now I cannot harmonize that spirit with the spirit of the Great Teacher who said "Father forgive them, they know not what they do".

As I reach for a conclusion I must conclude that the spirit that was manifested through the life of the Great Teacher and the spirit that is manifested at the football game are separate and apart from each other.

WHAT DO YOU THINK OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL?

The following questions are addressed to the ten thousand church members, within the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention, who do not go to Sunday school:

What do you think of the Sunday school?

Is it worth anything to the church?

Does it benefit the community?

Has it any influence in the saving of souls and building up the Kingdom of God?

How would it affect your church if it were closed?

Is it worthy of your notice and interest?

If it is a good institution, is it not worthy of your cooperation?

How often do you pray for the work and success of the Sunday school?

Have you ever spent fifteen minutes in prayer asking God what He wanted you to do about the Sunday school?

SOME EARLY IMPRESSIONS OF MY NEW FIELD OF LABOR

Having been on the field for seven weeks, I suppose I am in position to give a meager idea of the work of the Page County Pastorate. I find that Brother Earp left the work in a progressive condition. Five of the churches, with the possible exception of one, have flourishing Sunday schools; and the spiritual condition in all six churches appears to be very good. I shall give a report of the work of our Woman's Missionary, and Y. P. C. E. Societies in a later letter. The work, as a whole, is very encouraging; and, ever since I have had charge of the pastorate, I have seen, on every hand, many evidences of the great and lasting work that has already been done here, by Brothers Walters, Williamson, Earp, and others. I esteem it a distinguished privilege to have the opportunity to labor in a field where such able and efficient workers have toiled, and where such solid foundations have been laid.

Furthermore, my wife agrees with me in the opinion that I am serving some of the finest and best people in the world. We had thought that, surely, the people of the Old North State must be the best people on earth, but as greatly as we regretted to leave our many warm friends in North Carolina, we find that there are other good people in America as well as those "down home". These people in the "Valley" have been exceedingly good to us ever since we have been here. Brother Earp had given us a flattering report of the big-heartedness of these people; but we are beginning to believe that "the half has never been told". On the night of September 16, the members and friends of the Leaksville church gave us a "pounding", and such a pounding it was! We began to think, before it was over, that we would not "have room where to bestow all our fruits and our goods". Even before this, individuals had begun this pounding and we have been receiving "individual poundings" ever since. We can truthfully say, with Jacob of old, that "surely the Lord is in this place." Not only have the people been good to us in the way mentioned above, but they have been so considerate of us, and of our needs and happiness, in every way that we feel to be the recipients of far greater consideration than we deserve. For all these things, we are thankful to our Heavenly Father and to these good people.

We shall begin our first revival meeting of the present Conference year at Bethel Christian church near Elkton, Va., on Sunday, October 31. Beginning with that one, we expect to hold evangelistic meetings in all six of the churches of the pastorate before Christmas. I shall give a report of the results of these meetings through the columns of THE SUN later.

Brethren pray for us.

HOWARD'S CHAPEL

A series of evangelistic services began at Howard's Chapel October 10, 1920, at 11:00 A. M., and closed on Friday night following. There were two services on Sunday with dinner on the church ground. Sister Ware of Reidsville, N. C., kindly consented to preach for us in the afternoon service. Her message was practical and inspiring to every Christian and full of hope for all who desired to become a Christian. She used as a text John 14:14.

The exercises following Sunday were held in the afternoon and at night. Every service was well attended, especially at night. There was good conduct throughout the meeting. A fine spirit of unity prevailed within the church itself and an excellent spirit of cooperation was manifested by sister denominations. All of this we appreciate.

Rev. J. S. Carden, Durham, N. C., came on Monday and did the preaching the remainder of the evangelistic campaign. Brother Carden was at his best. His messages were plain and uplifting to all who love the Gospel of God. He was heard with rapt attention. His coming inspired us and we hope he can come again. May the Lord bless him with good health and strength in his work elsewhere.

It was a great meeting—the best since I have been pastor. Some one said that it was the best in ten years. Earnest prayers and faith in God prevailed against the confusion and disturbance caused by Satan. All glory and praise to Him who died for the sin of the world.

As to the results there were ten professions, two reclamations and two additions to the local church. I think there will be more to join at the next service. The church was revived much and filled with greater hope for usefulness in the community.

The last quarterly business meeting of this Conference year will be held on Saturday before the second Sunday in November at 3:30 P. M.. Let all who are interested come.

POUNDED

A pleasant surprise come to me on Saturday before the second Sunday in this month, when at the close of services at Wentworth, the people of this church, and not of this church, began to fill in between the seats of my Ford, well—just the kind of good things that a preacher usually gets when pounded were given to me then and my family and I enjoyed them to the full. I appreciate these good gifts that come from such a generous people and hope to show my gratitude in real service. Brother Sam Rowland of Plymouth church added to the pounding by giving a nice middling of meat which has been making delicious breakfast strips.

Besides pounding, Wentworth on the same date had more than paid their pastor's salary for this conference year.

HOLY NECK BRIEFS

The church at Holy Neck began its new year October 1, with a most promising outlook.

It has called its pastor this year for full time service, paying just double the salary that it paid last year, and purchased the half interest in the parsonage property owned by the Holland church.

The church building has just recently been painted and various other improvements have been made.

Sunday, October 31, is Rally and Promotion Day in the Sunday school, and a special program with the missionary emphasis will be rendered. We are looking for a great day in the Sunday school.

The Ladies' Aid and Missionary Societies which hitherto were two separate bodies, but which met on the same day, at the same place, one meeting immediately following the other, and with the same president, have recently merged into one organization known as the Missionary Aid Society. The membership of both societies was composed of practically the same personnel and hence the dues were just combined, the new society assuming all the duties and obligations of the two original societies.

It is with great pleasure that the church and community looks forward to the coming session of the Eastern Virginia Conference, which will hold its 100th anniversary session with this church. The program that has been arranged is of a high order, and especially let me call attention to the special centennial session to be held on Thursday night. It will be interesting history to you which you can hardly afford to miss. In providing suitable accommodations for the delegates and visitors we desire to solicit these friends in advance for their hearty cooperation. In the first place Holy Neck church is situated about five miles from Holland where most of the delegates will arrive by train. The trains on the Southern arrive at Holland from Franklin and points west at 6:45 A. M. and 2:50 P. M.; from Suffolk and Norfolk the trains arrive at 8:50 A. M. and 9:25 P. M.

Those who are unable to make connections in Suffolk in the morning from the N. & W. to the Southern can take the Seaboard which leaves Suffolk at 9:46 A. M. and will be met at Carrsville, 10 miles from the church; but in such cases parties should notify the pastor or J. E. March, chairman of the transportation committee, in advance of coming as otherwise Seaboard trains will not be met.

All other delegates will be met at Holland and the chairman, J. E. March, Holland, Va., respectfully requests all delegates and visitors who are coming by train to advise him by card or letter in advance. This is to improve your accommodations; we want to serve you well and your cooperation will very materially aid in this respect.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

WE REACHED THE FIRST GOAL

You will see from our financial report that we reached the first goal we were striving for. It is grand to have the Sunday schools and churches to be so loyal. I know there is not a Sunday school but what rejoices with us, and is glad to have had an opportunity to help us reach the first goal for this year. We are proud of you. Only wish we could visit and shake hands with each of you.

Now, our next goal is to raise ten thousand dollars ($10,000.00) by the end of the year. Can we do it? If you will push as hard and be as loyal as you have been in reaching the first goal we will reach it.

To reach the next goal we ought to raise eight thousand dollars for our Thanksgiving offering, and surely we can raise two thousand dollars from Sunday schools and other offerings. Begin now to plan your Thanksgiving offering and then work your plan. Set your goal high and then ask your people to reach it. You will be the happier. NOW FOR THE LARGEST THANKSGIVING OFFERING WE HAVE EVER RAISED. GET BUSY. MAKE YOUR CHURCH ONE OF THE BANNER CHURCHES.

Our good friends from Hines' Chapel church paid us a very pleasant visit on Saturday, October 16. They came in automobiles which were loaded with something good to eat. The following joined in this contribution:

T. R. Little, one bushel wheat; Mrs. Susan Waynick, one bushel wheat; H. S. Lowe, one bushel wheat; R. R. Waynick, one bushel wheat; O. W. Hines, two bushels wheat; C. C. Toler, one bushel wheat; D. L. Smith, one bushel wheat; C. L. Carter, two bushels wheat; H. B. Smith, one bushel wheat; E. F. Smith, one bushel corn; C. H. King, one bushel corn; A. E. Anderson, one bushel wheat; P. W. Isley, five bushels wheat; Mrs. P. W. Isley, five chickens; Mrs. J. H. Fryar, dried fruit; Mrs. R. R. Wyrick, two chickens; Miss Fannie Howerton, one chicken; Mrs. E. F. Smith, one chicken; Mrs. E. L. Carter, two chickens; Mrs. E. A. and Fannie Howerton, one jug molasses; Chas. V. Howerton, one jug molasses; Mrs. A. E. Howerton, one chicken; Mrs. L. E. Howerton, two chickens; Mrs. H. B. Smith, one chicken; Mrs. E. A. Howerton, one chicken.

You made us happy dear friends, and we hope you will come to see us again. Many thanks to you all.

The good ladies of Spring Hill church, Va., knew winter with its cold nights was coming, and the little tots would need to be wrapped snugly in bed, so they sent us a nice quilt to help keep them warm and comfortable.

Our loyal friends, Holland and Beamon Company, of Suffolk, Va., who have for a number of years had the pleasure of keeping our building warm and comfortable, realizing winter was creeping close by, shipped us a car of coal to make the building warm and pleasant for the winter and the little fellows comfortable. This is a splendid contribution at this time when coal is so high and I do not have words that would fully express my appreciation.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: I have had a nice time playing this summer. I hope the little ones at the orphanage have enjoyed the summer too. Enclosed find my dime for October. Love to all the cousins.—Lester B. Frank.

Our little folks have had a good time, too, this summer. They now have a beautiful grove to play in.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: I am late but I have been thinking I would write you for some time. It seemed lonesome to see no children's letters in THE SUN last week. I am enclosing twenty cents for the orphans. Best wishes.—Gracie Pearl King.

You are a good little girl to write me this week. You must write often.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: I did not write last month. I was so busy going to school and the days went by so fast that I did not get time to write. My school began September 9. I am in the sixth grade. I like my teacher very much. Her name is Miss Johnson. I am enclosing twenty cents—ten cents for last month and ten for this. What is the matter with the girls and boys now? I hardly ever see a letter in THE SUN.—Dorothy Moore.

Glad to have your letter. I know you like your teacher because her name is "Johnson". You must write often.—"Uncle Charley".

The desert road we travel may be less of a desert for those who come after us if we try to improve it as we pass.—Firelight.

TWO KITTENS

Kitten Fluff and Kitten Bluff went out to call one day upon their cousin, Kitty Puss, who lived not far away.

"Now mind your manners and be good," said mother Tabby cat. "Some kits are very impolite; you mustn't be like that. Don't fuss or fret or giggle or spill your catnip tea, but always try to act just as politely as can be. Don't try to cross the pasture field, but walk along the lane; and don't forget one word I say, or you'll not go again."

So Kitten Fluff and Kitten Buff both promised to obey and started on their visit feeling very glad and gay. They scampered all along the road and laughed at all they saw, till out of breath and then they walked sedately, paw in paw.

Miss Kitty Puss was glad to see her cousins come to call. She said: "I'd just begun to think you'd never come at all." She gave them ginger cookies and cups of catnip tea; and they all talked about how scarce the mice had come to be.

At last they said: "We'll have to go; the night will soon be here; we've had a very pleasant time. Now come and see us, dear."

And so they trotted down the road, just at the close of day, till Kitten Fluff said: "Here's the path. Why not go this way?"

But Kitten Buff said: "Better not, for mother Tabby cat said we must walk along the lane, not do a thing like that."

But Fluffy coaxed till Kitten Buff had scrambled through the stile; and then they romped and frolicked in the pasture for a while. They caught the dandelions, chased each other round a tree; until at last they felt as tired as kittens well could be.

Down by the brook they stopped to play, and Kitten Fluff fell in, while all the minnows shouted and waved a happy fin. "My, what a silly cat!" they cried, "just come and take a look. She must be careful or we'll have some cat tails in the brook."

Poor Fluffy was so wet and cold she was a fearful sight. She said: "We'll have to hurry home, for it will soon be night."

Just then Buff saw a funny bird that sang: "Buzz, buzzy, buzzy!" She said: "That is the strangest bird that surely ever was. I'll just slip up behind it and catch the funny thing." She tried it, and, O goodness! she got a dreadful sting.

Then Kitten Fluff and Kitten Buff both felt so very sad, they said together: "How I wish I hadn't been so bad. Next time I'll mind my mother and do just what she said: but now I guess I'll just run home and hurry off to bed."—Junior Herald.

HOW A BABY ELEPHANT WAS TAUGHT MANNERS

In a recent exchange it is stated that elephants are amazingly like human beings in the way they discipline their young. In proof it tells an amusing incident seen by a French traveler in an extensive lumber yard in Burma.

While the adult elephants were faithfully at work, the youngsters played about the yard. The elephant that attracted the traveler's particular attention was hauling, in her chain harness, huge tree trunks from the bank of the river. She had a heavy load, a fact that her offspring did not realize. Bent on playing a prank, he wound his little trunk about one of the chain traces and pulled with all his strength.

Conscious of the suddenly increased weight, the mother stopped and looked around. She saw the youngster back there and shook her head solemnly; but, paying no further heed to his teasing, bent again to her work. Meanwhile, however, the little rascal with his mischievous trunk had loosened the ring that fastened the traces to the load.

While the mother was straining to set her burden in motion again, her rascally son pulled with all his might against her and pulled so sturdily that she was quite unaware that she had been disconnected from her load. Then suddenly the youngster let go. Naturally enough the mother was thrown to her knees, and her driver hurled in a wide circle from her back.

The culprit sought a huge wood pile that seemed to offer him at least a temporary protection. His mother, however, was soon in pursuit, and he had to flee. Round and round the wood pile he dodged; but his mother, with her iron harness clanging noisily behind her, kept close at his heels.

Although the little one's greater agility gained some space for him at the corners, his mother eventually overtook him. The first blow of her trunk drew from him a bawl of pain. At the second he sank, quite humbled, to his knees; and then he endured without a murmur, although with many tears, a sound thrashing. Finally the mother let him up. With tears still streaming and with drooping trunk, he took his disconsolate way out of the yard.

The little fellow had won the complete sympathy of the observer. Consequently he was overjoyed to witness during the noon hour a touching reconciliation. The mother did all she could to comfort the penitent little sinner; she caressed him with her trunk, cuddled him up against her, and looked at him as if to say: "You still have a mother who loves you."—Our Dumb Animals.

TEACHER AT FAULT

Mother: "Did you break any of the rules today, Tommy?" Tommy (first day at school): "No'm; I was a good boy. Teacher broke two, though—one on little Harry Fletcher and another on me."—Exchange.

DEVOTIONAL

THE MASTER'S TOUCH

No wonder those who saw Jesus at work said: "We never saw it on this fashion." Never had they seen such power in a touch. One touch from his hand, and eyes which had always been blind were immediately opened. Just a touch of His fingers upon ears which had always been deaf, and straightway those ears were unstopped. Just one touch of Jesus' hand and immediately the leper was freed from his loathsome disease. At His touch they saw the fever subside. At the Master's touch they saw all manner of disease and all manner of sickness healed. Even greater power than this had they seen in His touch, for at a touch of His hand they had seen death give way to life.

The life which comes in touch with His is completely transformed. The sin-stained life is cleansed, it is made every whit whole. His touch is a sin cure. Sin gives place to a new life in Him, for Him. The life which has submitted to Jesus' touch finds joy complete in His service, in His presence. The feverish restlessness which at times takes possession of us subsides, quietness takes its place, and we are ready to minister to Him.

His touch always wrought an immediate cure, a cure so complete others were compelled to acknowledge the change which Jesus' power had made in the life touched by Him. Immediately, straightway, forthwith, are the ways He acted in answer to each and every appeal which was made to Him for help. There was no putting off until a more convenient time, it was without delay He acted. When He calls us to service we are not to persuade ourselves some other time will do as well, but we are to act at once, serving in His name and all for His glory.

Prayer is the live wire which brings us in touch with the Master, and by which our lives are filled with the power of the Holy Spirit. Are you keeping the line busy by day and by night? Or is there trouble on the line that you are not getting through? If there is, you may be sure the trouble is at your end of the line. At a touch the Master can remove the difficulty and make the connection good. Will you let Him do it for you?

Blessed Master touch our blind eyes that we may see something, someone besides self. That we may see ourselves just as Thou dost see us; that we may see Thee as Thou art, and that we may see clearly the way Thou wouldst have us take. Touch our deaf ears that we may hear what Thou art trying to say to us. That instead of thinking things out for ourselves and acting upon our beliefs, our plans, we may listen to Thy voice which is continually speaking to us through Thy word and let whatsoever "thus saith the Lord" govern our lives. Touch our palsied feet, our helpless hands and make them swift to serve Thee anywhere, in any way Thou dost choose. Loosen our silent tongues and make them free to tell of all Thy love, Thy goodness, Thy pardoning grace, and may they ever be busy telling others of the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. Blessed Lord when Thou hast touched our blind eyes, our deaf ears, our palsied feet, our helpless hands, our silent tongues, may we remember that it makes a difference to Thee how we use them, that they are no longer ours to use as we please. May we ever remember that Thy touch has made them Thine forever and that they are to be used always, only for Thee.

WE MAY TRUST CHRIST

A good many Christians are kept back from wholly surrendering themselves to God from fear lest He will ask them to do something hard and disagreeable. They think that there will then be no knowing what He may do with them, or what their friends may think of them.

Suppose that a child who had been wayward and wilful were to come and say to a wise and loving parent: "Father, from today I will let mother and you choose my life you shall choose my companions, my amusements, and my books." Would that father say "Now, does she detest, what companions does she hate, what books does she eschew? Let us select these and pile them into her life." Of course, he would not; he would only take from the child the things that were really cursing her, as a cancer might curse a healthy body, and then he would crowd her life with all that would make it one long summer day of bliss. Will Christ who died for me, do worse?

Friends, you may trust him. He means to do the best for you, and the only thing which can curse and blast your life is to get out of God's hands. When George Stephenson was trying to pass his bill for railroads in England, a peer said to him: "Suppose that a cow were to get on the line when one of your new fangled engines was on the road?" "So much the worse for the cow!" said he. If you get into collision with God, it is so much the worse for you. "Woe to the man that striveth with his Maker!" Do not let the devil cheat you out of your inheritance.—F. B. Meyer.

LOOK OUT FOR YOUR FACE

"My boy," said a wise father, who knew how to play and be a chum with his 12-year-old lad, "you do not own your own face."

The boy looked puzzled. He had come to the breakfast table with a frowning, clouded countenance, and had started moodily to eat his food. Everybody felt the shadow of his ill spirits evident in his looks. His father's unexpected words brought him back to life, and he looked up with a half-guilty expression, but did not understand what was meant.

"You do not own your own face," his father repeated. "Do not forget that it belongs to other people. They, not you, have to look at it. You have no right to compel others to look at a sour, gloomy and crabbed face."—Christian Herald.

THE VOYAGE

Whichever way the wind doth blow,
 Some heart is glad to have it so;
 Then, blow it east or blow it west,
 The wind that blows, that wind is best.
 My little craft sails not alone,
 A thousand from every zone
 Are out upon the thousand seas;
 And what for me were favoring breezes
 Might dash another, with the shock
 Of doom, upon some hidden rock.
 And so I do not care to pray
 For winds to waft me on my way;
 But leave it to a higher will
 To stay or speed me, trusting still
 That all is well, and sure that He
 Who launched my bark will sail with me,
 Through storm and calm, and will not fail,
 Whatever breezes may prevail,
 To land me every peril past,
 Within his sheltering port at last.
 Then whatsoever wind doth blow,
 My heart is glad to have it so;
 And, blow it east or blow it west,
 The wind that blows, that wind is best.

HE KNOWETH ALL

The twilight falls, the night is near,
 I fold my work away,
 And kneel to One who bends to hear
 The story of the day.

The old, old story; yet I kneel
 To tell it at thy call;
 And cares grow lighter as I feel
 That Jesus knows them all.

Yes, all! The morning and the night,
 The joy, the grief, the loss,
 The roughened path, the sunbeam bright,
 The hourly thorn and cross.

Thou knowest all—I lean my head,
 My weary eyelids close;
 Content and glad awhile to tread
 This path, since Jesus knows!

And he has loved me! All my heart
 With answering love is stirred,
 And every anguished pain and smart
 Finds healing in the Word.

So here I lay me down to rest,
 As nightly shadows fall,
 And lean, confiding, on his breast,
 Who knows and pities all!

—From "The Shadow of the Rock."

MY PRAYER

AMOS R. WELLS

I do not ask, my God, for mystic power
 To heal the sick and lame, the deaf and blind;
 I ask Thee humbly for the gracious power
 Just to be kind.

I do not pray to see the shining beauty
 Of highest knowledge most divinely true;
 I pray that, knowing well my duty,
 This I may do.

I do not ask that men with flattering finger
 Should point me out within the crowded mart,
 But only that the thought of me may linger
 In one glad heart.

I would not rise upon the men below me,
 Or pulling at the robes of men above;
 I would that friends, a few dear friends, may know me,
 And knowing, love.

I do not pray for palaces of splendor
 Or far among the world's delights to roam;
 I pray that I may know the meaning tender
 Of home, sweet home.

I do not ask that heaven's golden treasure
 Upon my little blundering life be spent;
 But, O, I ask Thee for the perfect pleasure
 Of calm content.

LET US HELP EACH OTHER.

We should love and help each other day by day
 We should ever scatter sunbeams on the way.
 For the road is rough at best;
 As we count each weary mile,
 Let us cheer the faintest breast
 With a tender word and smile.

Let us go in scenes of sorrow undismayed;
 Trouble's hand on us to-morrow may be laid.
 Let us help while now we can
 Every burden to relieve;
 As we bless our fellow man,
 So a blessing we'll receive.

How the hand of love can lighten all our woe;
 How the gleam of hope can brighten all below;
 Let us do the kindly deed,
 Let us speak the lovely word;
 They will spring like precious seed
 In the garden of the Lord.

—Palmer Hartsough.

"Let me go! O, do not hold me.
 They are dying. Can I stay?
 I must go, for He has called me,
 And I must my Lord obey."

"If you believe that you can do no wrong, you are wrong at the very start."

Traffic Cop: "Come on! What's the matter with you?"
 Truck driver: "I'm well, thanks, but my engine's dead!"—Exchange.

TO THE WOMAN VOTER

Your first duty is to register. In some States this is no longer possible, but most women will still be able to have their names placed on the voting lists. It is to the shame of some men on election day that they lose their vote because they have failed to register. Let no woman allow the newly opened door of suffrage to be slammed in her face through her own negligence.

Register in season for the Congressional primaries which are now going on in many States. The choice of a dry Congress is of more importance than the election of a dry President. The liquor people have been noisily exultant because they interpret one of the Presidential nominations as friendly to their cause. But their chief effort in the campaign is for the election of members of the House of Representatives who will vote to modify the terms of the Volstead Act. Wherever an uncompromising dry has been nominated or renominated the saloonists are backing a candidate whom they can trust.

This is the chance for women. They should cast their vote in the primary and at the November election for the dry Congressional candidate and for no other. The saloon knows no party and the enemy of the saloon should know none until this fight is finished.

By a bare majority a wet Congress can undermine the enforcement act and open the way to the manufacture and sale of beverages of low alcoholic content. This can be done without the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. This is the aim of the brewers. They are now on a still hunt for votes for their candidates. Find out who these are, and then vote for the other man!—N. Y. Advocate.

NUMBER 44

TO THE PURITAN, man is naturally a great person; with great powers for discerning the world; constitutionally affined to injustice; on a solemn and divine errand in the world; constitutionally affined to invisible spheres and to Him who is supreme amid them; not far beneath the level of celestial intelligences; to whom it is natural that there should come divine teachings, and even present divine impulses; for whom no miraculous intervention is too amazing to be believed; before whom arises the Great White Throne. . . . The personal soul, in castle or cabin, in palaces or chains—that is the supreme thing on the planet, for which indeed the planet was builded and is maintained; by the presence of which the earth becomes a vital and significant part of the universe. . . . For this the Cross was set, under shadowed heavens, on the amazed and quaking earth. Above this are opened to the gates of light.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

WHAT OF THE COUNTRY CHURCH?

What of the country church? Is its future safe? These are two questions that present church leaders must consider. The change of educational, social and economic conditions has presented a problem to the average church in the rural districts.

A physician should not, if he can avoid it, say that a patient is sick and not prescribe some remedy for relief. To say that the country church confronts a problem is to tell of a danger, or to suggest a possible sickness of the patient. Shall we say what the trouble is? Here is an attempt—others may call it by another name: Mediocrity. Webster in defining mediocre or mediocrity gives several definitions, one of which is "indifference." That is the definition to suit the thing that we are trying to express. The average country church is indifferent to the larger program of work and service. It is at ease in Zion, and world conditions have outmeasured its pace.

There was a time when no church found it difficult to secure a pastor. Can that be said now? Not by far. Instead of a full supply of ministers there are thousands of rural churches in the United States that have closed their doors for the lack of pastors.

Let us bring the discussion home. We could give a long list of rural churches in the Southern Convention that have no pastor for another year. Here is much hoping that these churches will be supplied, but as yet we know not how. There is a reason why they are without a pastor. The older pastors have given up work or have died. The younger men are not satisfied to continue the work in the same way—with a mediocre program. While the churches in the country have increased the salaries of their pastors, pace with other conditions have not been kept. The pastorate of four or five churches has not made it possible for the average pastor and his family to live as they should. If the financial strains of the pastors of the Southern Convention could be removed today, a shout of hallelujahs would be heard throughout the Brotherhood. And we are thinking the best sermons of all history would be preached next Sunday. Being in debt, and unable to pay, will rob a man of the song of his heart as nothing else will. Some of our pastors have been accused of dying mentally. To live forever on a hand-to-mouth salary is enough to destroy a man's mental ambitions.

Many of the rural churches have refused to form a pastorate. Not so much a refusal as a matter of indifference toward the plan. Result: Continued isolation. Such a church must, eventually, find itself without service. And can a pastor be a real shepherd to such a church? A shepherd stays with his sheep and, if you call seeing a flock once a month real shepherding, then you have strained the term.

The remedy: Churches must be grouped. There is no other practical way out of it. And when they are grouped, the pastor must live with the people. This thing of visiting a church twelve times a year and calling it preaching and pastoring is a dead issue.

Some of our readers may not so agree, but the morning light is breaking and soon these words will be true.

Money, money, money, you say that it is money that we are pleading for, for the preacher. Exactly so. We do not evade the issue. When the cause is suffering for the lack of it; when the laborers, who are worthy of their hire, and in need of it, it is our duty to make the need known. We could name several men, especially in the North Carolina Conference, who have been forced to divide their time to support their families. Some of them are teaching, some farming and some doing other things that they may be able to meet the needs of their homes.

The churches are needing all their time, and it is suicide to the cause for these men not to be wholly engaged in the work. They are not to blame. A man is but a half preacher who would see his family suffer and not provide in some way.

We believe that each Conference should have a Rural Commission composed of busy laymen whose duty it would be to study, visit, and negotiate with country churches until they are economically grouped and adequately supported by finances and more and better services.

SETTING A GOAL

To many churches and pastors this is the beginning of another Conference year. The records for last year have been written. Few of us are satisfied with the tasks performed, but all have that consolation that it was a good year.

The mindful church will set a goal, so will the pastor. Setting a goal is easy; reaching it is where the difficult part comes. But because the reaching of a goal is difficult is no reason why a goal should not be set—and reaching a goal is no reason why it should not be passed.

It is better to set a standard and fail to reach it than to have no standard. Just plodding along and doing the best you can is not good business. Set a goal and then set out to reach it.

MAKE A WILL

There are those who do not approve of the plan of making a will. The making of a will is following wisdom's plan, and serious thinking on the subject will lead thoughtful men to make a will. The making of a will is to educate the public along the same line and relieves many family troubles, and often court trials.

This reminds us to say that we believe the time is here when the name of the rich man who fails to leave a part of his wealth for the good of humanity will be a reproach.

It is strange to say that so far as we know no one has ever remembered THE SUN in his or her will. The College, the Orphanage, and other enterprises of the Church have been remembered, but THE CHRISTIAN SUN, which week after week blazes the way for all departments of the Church, has never been remembered in a will. But we believe that a new day will dawn some time for THE SUN. Reader, this new day may be depending upon you in some way—and that way may be to remember THE SUN in your will.

The most important work comes after the meeting of your conference. To follow the lights that have been thrown down the trail of time is a bigger job than answering "here" to the roll call.

Seeing visions and dreaming dreams is not enough. Getting these into operation is our task.

Rev. R. L. Williamson informs us that a great meeting is in progress at Henderson under the direction of Bro. Victor Lightbourne.

Rev. J. V. Knight preached his farewell sermon to the Greensboro congregation last Sunday night. Dr. Atkinson preached at the morning hour.

The Eastern Virginia Conference is in session this week with the church at Holy Neck. The Editor is attending and will give a report of the Conference in next week's SUN.

An automobile accident occurred at Henderson, N.C., one night last week in which a Mr. Watkins was killed. Watkins was taking Sam Davis home from an evangelist service held by Victor Lightbourne when he (Watkins) was struck by an automobile.

President Harper visited Carroll County, Virginia last week in the interest of the proposed school and missionary work there, now being started by Miss Iola Hedgepeth. The following is a condensed statement of facts given us by Dr. Harper:

In the district four by five miles in Carroll County, Virginia, seventeen miles from Mount Airy, N. C., on Fancy Gap Mountain, there are thirty-eight families, with heads of families living, in each case, and not a single divorcee. These people are among the original American stock. One hundred and twenty-eight of the children are of school age—fourteen of adults are able to read and write, only one of these being a woman. Five of these persons are members of the church, and two are professors of religion, but have not joined the church because there is no church there. No minister resides in this community; no church and no usable public school house are here. Eight of the families are destitute and twenty-eight children in these families with no clothes to go to school.

Miss Iola Hedgepeth, the missionary in this district, is teaching in a delapidated building that has been condemned. Twenty-three of the children who are attending this school did not know A from B when she began two weeks ago. There are no windows in the building in which she teaches; no chair for the teacher's use, and the children sit on saw-mill boards placed on wooden blocks, with no back to them.

Miss Hedgepeth's address is Fancy Gap, Virginia, c/o Washington Edwards.

The net estate of Andrew Carnegie is valued at $23,247,161. Of this amount his widow's share is $11,338,847.

LIGHTHOUSE OBSERVATIONS

J. E. MASSEY

APPROACHING THE ELECTION

Election day is almost here. From all over the United States reports and prospects of the political candidates for that day fill column after column of the daily papers. Many other incidents including the speeches, gatherings and tours of the various political leaders, ranging from presidential candidates to smaller town and county candidates, indicate the unquestionable importance placed in this day. The election of the right kind of leadership for the country should certainly be important, for upon it greatly depends the co-working elements of the Church and our social welfare. In our country, great and large as it is, it is found that no one element can do without the other. Men may condemn the political parties and their method of electing officers, and some may even declare that they will not vote at all; but that does not help elect the right governing powers. Why should it not be as sacred a task to pick out and elect officers for our State as to perform any other duty, in spite of imperfections?

FUTURE PETROLEUM SUPPLY

At the present rate of using gasoline, oils and other petroleum products, there will be a petroleum famine in eighteen years, according to United States expert geologists. Their conclusions are based upon investigations made throughout the whole petroleum producing regions of the country. It is not a recent discovery, but a fact which the public has been reluctant to recognize. All of the older oil fields have been gradually exhausted, in fact, almost all oil wells begin to diminish in supply shortly after being sunk. In Pennsylvania where the first oil wells were sunk in 1859, which once produced hundreds of barrels per well, now produces on an average of only 0.2 to 0.4 barrels per well. Discovery of the product spread westward; oil speculation, "get rich quick" schemes, followed too, and now practically all of the oil regions have been sounded and the future supply measured. Texas, Oklahoma, and California are the most abundant in supplying oil at present, but in these states wells become inactive daily, and other wells have to be dug in the parts unused thus far.

Of course it is difficult for the geologists to make exact conclusions. It is altogether probable, according to Mr. David T. Day of the United States Bureau of Mines, that oil will be available for many many years, but that the great quantity of available petroleum will soon be used, they are sure, whether it be eighteen years, fifty years or seventy-five. After this the United States will make gasoline and oil products from "oil shales", the old product which was used before the discovery of petroleum, and which is used in limited quantities now. Also, it is suggested that petroleum will be imported from Mexico and South American countries. The world's supply of petroleum, it has been estimated, will last from two to three hundred years.

THE "RED" SHADOW FADING

Since the Polish victory, the Russian Soviets seem to be stalled in their invasion into western Europe. Though the present halt may be only a "breathing space between wars" as The Literary Digest suggests, the "Red" menace seems to weaken while Poland becomes the strong arm against further invasion. Some magazines say that the "Red" defeat in Poland may prove to have been a turning point in history, for upon the Bolshevik success there was based a "grandiose plan", carefully timed and coordinated. The two parties among the Soviet authorities have both recognized that the downfall of the Soviet regime was imminent. Now and then Trotzky or Lenin are heard to rally in an effort to continue the struggle. But on the whole this gives the impression of the last kick of a dying man. How long the "kick" will last, is hard to tell. No doubt Bolshevism will continue in some form or other in most all countries until a better solution of the social problems is found.

THE GATEWAY TO AMERICA

Ellis Island is the first landing place of foreigners in coming to America. The little island, scarcely more than the space of the average block of a city, lying out in New York Bay, is surrounded by the outskirts of the Great City. Here the foreigner seems to be almost penned in by the high-pointing structures. What an impressive view he gets of the city, yet what a limited view of America. There is nothing that reminds him of the broad prairie fields of the West, the wasted farm lands of Vermont or the South. His is a view of commerce and industrial enterprises. Nothing else seems to fall to his lot but to congregate in an overcrowded city life, and in nearly all cases he does. If he could only get a more comprehensive idea of America in his first landing no doubt big cities would not be colonized so much with foreign population, farm land would not be wasted as much as it is, and Americanization would take place sooner.

THE BRITISH COAL STRIKE

England has been in the turmoil of a big coal strike. More than a million men have struck, almost completely tying up the coal output of the country. Plans have also been made for a sympathetic strike of the railroad men tending to make a still graver crisis, but this has been delayed with the hope of a possible settlement of the entire trouble. Thus far all propositions have been rejected by the union leaders. If the striking troubles do not abate soon, England will possibly see bloodshed, since she has now gone on a war basis and soldiers have been ordered to help handle the situation.

The truck owners in New York City have called upon their drivers to operate on a ten hour day instead of nine at the same wages now paid for nine hours, so states The New York Times. The truck owners stated that this is the laborer's just share in the effort to reduce the cost of living.

THE PILGRIMS AND BIBLE SUNDAY

November 28, 1920

BY CHARLES A. McALPINE

Executive Staff, American Bible Society

Suppose the Pilgrims had landed at Rio de Janeiro instead of at Plymouth, and Massachusetts had been settled by Portuguese criminals; what would have been the differences in the history of North America and South America?

Such a question is a speculative one, of course, but it is a fair one, especially if it helps us to appreciate something of the debt which we owe to the Pilgrims. It is not a wild guess that South America would have had a development not far behind that of its northern counterpart. Certainly the climatic conditions would have been less strenuous for the Pilgrims and many of the obstacles which they had to overcome would have been avoided; nor were the opportunities for quite as wonderful development lacking in our southern continental neighbor.

As a matter of fact Brazil was colonized by men who were not seeking first the kingdom of heaven and opportunity of freedom of worship; they were seeking their own kingdom and freedom from worship. Up to recent years the handicap of the influence of these colonists had to be overcome.

On the other hand, our country had not a handicap to be overcome, but an inspiration to be responded to.

Out of the many tercentenary celebrations carried on this fall there should be a new emphasis developed on the forces which the Pilgrims set at work in the beginning of our nation.

Among these influences a primary place should be given to the supremacy of the Bible.

The observance of Mayflower Universal Bible Sunday on November 28, 1920, ought to be made the most significant single event of the whole series of Pilgrim tercentenary celebrations. The supreme place of the Bible in the Pilgrim life and program makes the observance of the day most appropriate; the supreme need of Bible ideals in the life of 1920 makes the observance most opportune.

To assist pastors and churches in realizing the fullest value from this day, the American Bible Society, co-operating with the American Mayflower Council, the Federal Council of Churches, and with the sanction of several leading denominations, has prepared the following helps:

1. "In the Name of God, Amen."

This is a booklet written especially for ministers who will preach on the Pilgrims and the Bible. It is written by Mr. Charles Stelzle. It contains many original drawings and photographs, besides fresh data on the problems that confront America today. Mr. Stelzle has spent several months making a search of source material dealing with the Pilgrims and their times, visiting places in New England made famous through Pilgrim associations, searching for fresh human interest details, and interpreting these in connection with the history of the struggle for democracy and the conditions which obtain in our land today.

2. "A Little Journey to Plymouth."

This booklet is also by Mr. Stelzle and is intended for general distribution. It aims to present in a popular way the main lessons of the Pilgrim movement as related to the Bible.

3. "The Pilgrim and the Book."

This is a very high class dramatic service prepared by Percy MacKaye, one of the foremost dramatists of the day. It is intended to be used in churches at one of the Sunday services, preferably at the evening service. The length of the service will be about an hour, and it is designed to be used in the churches with the simplest, as well as the most elaborate, equipment.

Its theme is the power of truth, as revealed in the Bible, to set free the human soul. The two parts of the service are dedicated to the Old and New Testaments. The former is represented through groups by the Law, the Psalms and the Prophets, whose individual spokesmen are Moses, David, and Isaiah; the second through groups by the Shepherds, the Disciples and the Apostles, whose spokesmen are the Angel of the Star, Saint John, and Saint Paul. These take part in speech from the Bible itself, and in song for familiar hymns in which the congregation joins.

The service requires no scenery or setting other than the church itself, and may be given on a scale small and simple, or large and more elaborate. Indeed, it is a service which can be read by the pastor himself where it is found impracticable to secure persons to take the various parts or to give time to rehearsals. Undoubtedly many pastors will avail themselves of this help, which could profitably take the place of an evening sermon.

The suggestion of the American Bible Society is that pastors preach in the morning on some appropriate theme, from which material may be gathered largely from the booklet by Mr. Stelzle, and that the dramatic service be presented in the evening. Other suggestions are also made for the most effective way of observing Mayflower Universal Bible Sunday, in Mr. Stelzle's booklet. Send requests for literature to American Bible Society, Bible House, New York City.

If your church cannot observe November 28, let some convenient date be chosen. The date of the celebration is not so important as the fact.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

AMONG FAMILIAR SCENES AND FACES

On Monday morning, October 11, I boarded the Seaboard train in Portsmouth, Va., bound for Cragford, Ala., a distance of seven hundred and twenty-two miles from my present home, that I might be present at the annual session of the Alabama Conference which was held at New Harmony that week, and also that I might attend the Georgia and Alabama Conference which was in session at La Grange, Ga., the following week. After traveling for almost thirty-six hours I arrived at Cragford on Tuesday night in time for the program of the evening.

To have the privilege of being at New Harmony, the church that was entertaining the Conference, was a real joy, for I was pastor there at one time for a period of three years, and to be there for an annual session of the Alabama Conference was a joy unspeakable and full of inspiration. It was at the hands of this Conference that I received my license and ordination as a minister in the Christian Church. It was here that my friends prayed for me in my weakness, and bore with me in my failures as a boy preacher. To look into their faces, to strike hands with them, and to engage in worship and service with them again was an indescribable experience to him who pens these lines.

After the close of this Conference it was my happy privilege to spend a few days with friends and relatives before passing on to La Grange, Ga., for the Georgia and Alabama Conference. Among those visited were Mrs. Lankford's parents and my own parents. Upon the faces of these four persons time has already written in an indelible way word of which I do not like to think. But in spite of the approaching evening of their life's day, I found them all enjoying health and strength and active in the performance of their daily tasks. The little while spent with them was like an oasis in the desert, for it was here that I was welcomed only as loving parents can receive the child when he returns home after a long absence. Again I was reminded that while faith, hope and love abide, "the greatest of these is love."

Tuesday evening, October 19, at eight o'clock found me at the Georgia and Alabama Conference in La Grange where I remained until Thursday morning. Like the Alabama Conference, in the Georgia and Alabama, I met and had renewed fellowship with friends of a few years ago. I was pastor in this Conference for three years, and during that time formed many friendships which have continued until today. It was a pleasure and an inspiration to meet them again, and to labor again with them in the Master's service.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson was present at the Alabama Conference and stirred the hearts of those who heard him with his masterly missionary messages. Miss Bessie Holt, Burlington, N. C., was present at both Conferences with her timely, soul-stirring utterances in the interest of our women's and young people's work. Present at both Conferences also was the genial, wide-awake editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Rev C. B. Riddle. Brother Riddle added much to both Conferences by his ready, cheerful counsel in the King's business.

I attended these Conferences not only as a visitor, but also in an official capacity as a member of the Location Commission for the proposed school for that section of our work. A deep interest was manifested on the part of each Conference in this project, in spite of the financial depression that has so keenly affected the cotton belt in recent weeks. Notwithstanding financial disturbances, a number of communities are interested to the extent that they are planning now to make definite generous propositions to the Commission on Location at an early date.

All in all this visit to Ala. and Ga., was a feast of good fellowship in the service of Christ. And now that the privilege of being again on the old camping ground and in familiar places and among friendly faces of other days has come and gone, the call of the home task is felt with more intensity and with the sense of that utter consecration of time and talent that should underlie every endeavor and service in the name of our King.

MRS. DOVEL CELEBRATES 101ST BIRTHDAY

Mrs. Dianna Dovel celebrated her one hundred and first birthday Sunday, October 17, 1920, at the home of her daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Huffman, near Honeyville, with whom she has made her home for about thirty-five years.

She is enjoying reasonable health and is quite active and seemed to enjoy the occasion. All her living children were present on the occasion—A. L. Dovel, of Harrisonburg; A. B. Dovel, of Shenandoah; Mrs. Allen Kite, of Waynesboro, Va.; and Mrs. Sue Kern, of near Sperryville. (Mrs. Jane Dovel who was present at her 100th birthday having died since at the age of 82.)

Her only living brother W. D. Shuler, of Hutchinson, Kansas, was present one year ago, but could not be present this time. He is 88 years old. The day being an ideal one, dinner was served on the lawn of the Huffman home, many of the 60 guests bringing picnic dinners with them which was enjoyed very much by all. After dinner was over numerous pictures were taken, including one of the five generations present. Grandmother was the recipient of many gifts of remembrance and birthday cards galore which continued to come for several days.

After talking over older days and acquaintances the guests departed for their homes, wishing her many more happy birthdays.

By her grandson, S. M. Huffman.

Editorial Note: Mrs. Dovel is a member of East Liberty Christian church, Virginia Valley Conference. The above article was taken from the Page News and Courier by Mrs. Dovel's pastor, Rev. R. P. Crumpler, and mailed to THE SUN.

SUFFOLK LETTER

Conferences are the harvests of the year in the local churches. Reports, discussions, comparisons, interchange of ideas and plans, all made up the harvest of the year.

This year of 1920 will probably show the largest results of any year in the history of the Southern Convention. The Civil War interrupted the educational activities of the Convention and it was not until 1890 that the Graham and Suffolk schools culminated in Elon College. The growth of the public schools would have supplanted those schools, so they suffered no loss by the founding of the College. Since Elon has been in operation the Church has made creditable progress. Many of the most effective ministers now in service were educated at Elon, and they bring a new spirit and a new vision into the work. Their education has not decreased their disposition to work, but has taught them how to work toward some real objective. The college has, also, sent a large number of lay-workers into the local churches and conferences. A majority of the conferences are manned by Elon graduates. "Other men labored, and they enter into their labors." No sign of progress is a reflection on the faithful who went before us, but the fruit of their labors. The pioneer is always an essential factor in human progress. I wonder, sometimes, how the pioneers in the early days of the Republic, endured the toil and hardships of founding homes in the primal forests. The tilling of the soil is now an easy task compared with felling the trees, erecting houses, and creating trade, and building churches.

We will have to improve our churches and our work if we equal our forefathers. It is hard to improve on their stable character, their implicit faith, their heroic service, and their patient endurance. Prosperity has robbed us of our heroic endeavor, inspired us with the love of ease, and reduced our faith to a demand for proof of spiritual propositions. If the conferences could put into us the old spirit for the new times, the harvest would be great. The day of sacrifice has departed, and we do what is convenient. How many people make church-going a real part of their religious obligation? How many deny themselves to care for the Lord's work? We give more, it is true; but do we give more compared with what we spend on ourselves? Do we really give "as the Lord has prospered us?" The conferences should endeavor to inspire ministers and churches with the most liberal ideas. The old theory of giving "till it hurts" is erroneous; giving very little hurts some people. The proper theory is to give "till one enjoys it," and that requires systematic and generous giving. The Men and Millions Movement will lose its value unless it leaves a disposition to fix a permanent and systematic habit in the congregations. When that day comes the conference harvest will be a feast and a joy to all who have charge of Kingdom interests

A VISIT TO UNION (ALAMANCE)

The fourth Sunday in October I had the pleasure of attending services at Union (Alamance). I heard an excellent sermon by Dr. P. H. Fleming, the pastor of this church. I once attended services here sixty or seventy years ago, and was present at the organization of the Southern Christian Convention in 1856. I inquired during my recent visit at Union, if there were any there who were present at this organization, and one man, Brother George Maynard, said that he was there. It was exceedingly gratifying to be there and shake the hands of the children of the parents who were there in my early ministry, but who are now gone. I spent a short time looking over the cemetery at Union and found where many of my older friends were sleeping.

This was a grand old church in former days and there is still a fine house in which to worship, a fine congregation and fine preacher. I promised them, that, if I am permitted to do so, I will go over there sometime and preach a sermon especially for the benefit of the older people.

DEVOTIONAL

FOR ALL THESE

I thank Thee, Lord that I am straight and strong,
With wit to work and hope to keep me brave;
That twoscore years, unfathomed, still belong
To the allotted life Thy bounty gave.

I thank Thee that the sight of sunlit lands
And dipping hills, the breath of evening grass—
That wet, dark rocks and flowers in my hands
Can give me daily gladness as I pass.

I thank Thee that I love the things of earth—
Ripe fruits and laughter lying down to sleep,
The shine of lighted towns, the graver worth
Of beating human hearts that laugh and weep.

I thank Thee that as yet I need not know,
Yet need not fear, the mystery of the end;
But more than all, and though all these should go—
Dear Lord, this on my knees!—I thank Thee for my friend.

THE BREAK-DOWN OF FAITH.

Our trust in God is all too frequently of the fair weather sort. We have been reared in Christian homes, trained in Christian schools, and nurtured by the Church. All has gone well with us. We have had no great trials. But a day comes when our house of life is smitten by the tempest. One in whom our hope and love have centered is taken from us, and we are left bewildered. A mighty strain is put upon the hope of immortality which we have cherished, and in not a few cases it fails to stand the test. Every pastor knows Christian people who have gone on year after year in confidence, doing their part in Christian work and worship, but who, under the force of a great sorrow, have lost their grip on the great truths of our religion and are drifting helpless on a sea of doubt. It is one thing to trust God in the sunshine and another to trust him in the storm.

Where we can see the way, when everything is as we would have it, when our loved ones are with us, and all that we undertake prospers, little or no demand is made upon our trust in God. In such days it is easy to speak of our confidence in his wisdom and loving-kindness. It is when our dearest plans stop short of fruition, when we sigh for the "touch of a vanished hand or the sound of a voice that is still" that faith finds the occasion for its real victories. As the night brings out the stars, so trials reveal our trust in God—if we have it. Unless we are able to trust him where we cannot see, our so-called trust is largely fictional.

The collapse of faith arises in part from the assumption that if we are obedient children of God we ought to be exempt from the trying experiences of life. How often do we hear it said, "He is a good man; why does God permit him to suffer"! It is assumed, contrary to experience and to the teaching of God's Word, that because one is a Christian he ought not to be allowed to suffer from the ills incident to human life. Jesus declared to his disciples: "In this world ye shall have tribulation." James exhorted his brethren to "greet it as pure joy when ye come across any sort of trial." The Christian who makes an unwise investment will suffer loss as surely as the most hardened sinner. The typhoid fever germ is no respecter of moral qualities, neither does pneumonia select only the ungodly for its attacks. We are living in a world of law—God's law—and saint and sinner alike suffer from violation of it.

An erroneous conception of prayer often results in the wreckage of faith. A girl who had been taught that whatsoever she asked in faith, believing, would be given her, prayed for recovery of her little sister from a critical illness, never doubting that her request would be granted. When the little one died, the girl said: "I will never pray again." If she had known the totality of Jesus's teaching about her prayer, she would have escaped this collapse of faith. To ask in his name means more than using a form of words. It implies sharing in his purpose and spirit and likeness to him in fundamental character which is not easy to attain. His own experience in the garden of Gethsemane makes it clear that all prayer is to be in submission to the will of God. To fail in thus conditioning our requests is to assume that we know what is for our good better than God does, or that because of our importunity he will give us what we ought to have.

It is not easy to trust God at all times. Comparatively few are able to make the great declaration of Job their own and say: "Though he slay me, yet I will trust him." But for those who have come to the place where they can honestly declare, "I would rather walk with God in the dark than walk alone in the light," there is great satisfaction. Those who can trust God at all times find help and comfort which can come from no other source. They "mount up on wings like eagles, run and are not wearied, walk and do not faint."—Baptist.

THE TRANSFORMING POWER OF FRIENDSHIP

The very best thing in good talk, and the thing that helps most, is friendship. How it discloses the barriers that divide us, and loosens all constraint, and diffuses itself like some fine old cordial through all the veins of life—this feeling that we understand and trust each other, and wish each other heartily well! Everything into which it comes is really good. It transforms letter-writing from a task into a pleasure; it makes music a thousand times more sweet. The people who play and sing, not at us, but to us—how delightful it is to listen to them! Yes, there is a talk-ability that can express itself even without words. There is an exchange of thought and feeling which is happy alike in speech and in silence. It is quietness pervaded with friendship.—Henry van Dyke.

MISSIONARY

HOW A MISSIONARY PASTOR WOKE UP A COLLEGE COMMUNITY AND SECURED AN HONOR GRADUATE

(From "The Why and How of Missions in the Sunday School," by William A. Brown.)

"The pastor of the college church had seen service on the foreign field, and his heart was all aglow with the passion of Christ for the winning of the lost. Yet the life of the college church was purely formal. Nothing ever happened. The Sunday-school and the church services were alike uninteresting. The meetings of the young people were spiritless, and for testimonies the members of the society were giving select readings depicting the experiences of other Christians, because they had no experiences of their own to tell. Then the missionary pastor made a discovery. Some miles away over the hills bordering along the river bank lived a small colony of river rats. They lived in log houses partly built out of the driftwood which came down the big stream at flood time. They lived precariously, existing mostly by fishing and by following the uneven life of the river trades. The clearing in the timber had grown and other families had come, and now quite a collection of house-boats and log huts were huddled together in the bottom lands. Yet the people in the little settlement were "across the river" from everything, and "beyond the hills" from everybody. No religious services had ever been held in the neighborhood. And one Sunday afternoon the pastor took a sleigh load of young men to a meeting for praise and prayer in a roughly-built cabin down among the river rats. The young men took part in the meeting there, and later they set the young people's meeting in the college church on fire as they told the story of their experiences among the people who lived such lonely lives down in the flats. Others now were eager to go, and thus regular services were held and a Sunday school was organized. Then God honored the teaching of His Word in such a gracious revival that enough of the river rats were born anew of heavenly grace to found a church. But an even greater revival came to the college church on the hill, for all they who worked in the mission in the river flats were burning brands that kindled flames of fire in other lives. And a few years afterwards the college president gave a diploma to the honor student of the senior class—and that honor student was the first boy converted in the log cabin mission down among the river rats."

Phillips Brooks, who cared for poor little children in tenement houses in the same spirit as he preached to great crowds in his fine church, said, in one of his sermons: "This truth comes to me more and more the longer I live: That on what field or in what uniform we do our duty matters very little, or even what our is, great or small, splendid or obscure. To find our duty and do it faithfully makes us good, strong, happy, useful men, and tunes our lives into some feeble echo of the life of God."

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

THE RIGHTS OF CHILDREN

(Contributed)

Twenty-one years ago the relation of the father to his child partook of the nature of a property right. The courts could enforce this right, but on the other hand they were often powerless to enforce the duty of the father to his child. Since 1899 every State in the Union has passed juvenile court laws except Connecticut, Maine and Wyoming, and these three States have passed laws dealing with some of the problems usually included in the juvenile court law itself. The extensiveness of this legislation is the best evidence of the previous unsatisfactory viewpoint of the law. How far the States have gone in modernizing their attitude towards the delinquent and the neglected child is shown by the bulletin made public recently by the Children's Bureau of the U. S. Department of Labor, entitled "A Summary of Juvenile-Court Legislation in the United States."

Juvenile court legislation deals with a complicated group of problems; that of the child accused of breaking the law; the adult offending against the child; the neglected and degraded parent; the incompetent and unfaithful guardian; and the family that is simply poor.

Under the law the delinquent child was dealt with in the same manner, with certain restrictions of age, as the adult offender. He was tried before a criminal court with all the formality and notoriety of a jury, sworn testimony, and confronting witnesses. If found "guilty" the child suffered the penalty. If "not guilty" he went free. In no case did the law extend any constructive help.

Of recent years, however, the law has recognized the right of the child to a reasonable minimum of care, of decency and of well-being. Consideration has been given to the natural impulses of youth and to the adverse conditions under which the child may have been brought up.

Because of the difference in the structure of their judicial systems, the States have had to meet the problems by various methods of legislative attack. In every State, however, the attempt has been made through legislation to solve the difficult problems involving the unfavorable conditions—domestic, social and economic—under which children are living and developing today.

The present summary embodies analysis of the legislation in force at the beginning of 1919, with an appendix giving additional legislation and amendments enacted during 1919.

The Christian must stand upon the earth, in the midst of earthly affairs, interests, duties, ambitions and pleasures, and yet must somehow find a pathway clear and open to things above the earth, to joys that do not perish, to hopes that do not die, to faiths that do not fail.

NEW SOCIETIES ORGANIZED

Miss Bessie Holt has organized twenty missionary societies within the last few months. These new organizations represent a total charter membership of 282. Seventeen of this number are Young People's societies. The fact that so many young people are entering our ranks and enlisting for service is a most encouraging feature. Letters have been received by Miss Holt from a number of these new societies saying they have doubled their membership since organization.

CHRISTMAS PACKAGES FOR OUR MISSIONARIES

Are there individuals or societies who are planning to remember our missionaries at Christmas time? If so it is time you are getting your packages off in order for them to reach their destination in due time.

Sometime ago I saw a list of things that would be appropriate for a missionary—things that cannot easily be procured on the field.

"For general missionary work, a folding camera is indispensable, as it adds to reports and letters to have pictures.

Fountain pen, a wrist watch, a compact toilet case and writing pad. These are necessary in frequent long journeys: bicycle, typewriter. Money is perhaps more acceptable than the average selection of gifts. Nearly every thing can be bought cheaper locally, especially if one considers the shipping expense."

A surprise bag—this could easily be gotten up by giving a miscellaneous "shower" for one of our missionaries. I belonged to a society once that sent a box to some missionary family each Christmas. We usually gave a miscellaneous "shower" including gifts for each member of the family. We enjoyed it and it brought joy to the home and hearts of our missionaries.

LEAVES FROM MY NOTE BOOK

Last week we tried to give an extract from an address by Dr. S. D. Gordon, on the subject, "Swinging a Planet on the Pivot of Prayer." This week we want to continue by giving his explanation of "The Spirit Switch-board." Mr. Gordon spoke of the mysterious power of electricity. "No one understands it. We have learned some of its laws and its marvelous power has been harnessed for man's use, but we simply cannot explain it. Who knows if the fluid passes through the wire or around the wire, or is it a fluid at all. It seems to have properties of the spirit world, a blending of the physical and the spiritual. It is secret service; a very quiet service so far as man can observe.

In the power-house where electricity is being generated is a switch-board. In a large city plant a man may turn a switch; move a handle, which is a simple act requiring no strength, and by this act he releases power to light a city a hundred miles away, or start the cars and factories going.

In the spiritual realm, ones prayer-room is just such a switch-room. Every one may have such a switch-board. There he may go and release the power of God where he wills, in China, Japan, India, Korea, Porto Rico or the needy fields here in our own country.

Unskilled hands are not allowed to operate the electrical switch-board, so the spirit switch-board does not yield to the unskilled touch, sometimes there is much tampering, because of unselfish desires, to turn the current to personal advantages only. It requires skill, yet according to God's plan, skill may come to any one who is willing."

We cannot explain how a man, by the simple act of turning a handle, may start great wheels revolving, machinery to humming and factories to operating hundreds of miles away. Neither can we understand how, by the power of prayer, conditions may be changed in distant states or countries. But we have thousands of testimonies to the fact that God hears and answers prayer in behalf of our missionaries and the work intrusted to their care. The advancement of God's Kingdom depends upon the prayers of His children. Mr. Gordon told the story of an Iowa Congressman:

He was a skeptical man. Gave no time or thought to spiritual things. He was very busily absorbed in Congressional affairs. One day as he sat at his desk in Washington, he was strangely moved. He thought he was overworked. To get away from the strange apparition, he put on his hat and went for a walk. When he returned he was still under the spell, unable to throw it off. God was speaking to his heart. The power was impelling, irresistible and the result was that he yielded and gave his heart to God. A few weeks later, he visited his family, fifteen hundred miles away. His wife inquired about his spiritual condition, and he told her the whole story. Then she explained to him that it was in answer to prayer. She said there was a great revival on in her home church. She with two others, covenanted to pray for the Congressman's salvation, though he was hundreds of miles away deeply absorbed in political affairs, atheistic in his views and was seemingly an impossible case. She said that in her special petitions God had spoken very definitely to her asking if she were willing for Him to have his way with her husband. She prayed on and on; she yielded, victory came. The result was the Congressman became a minister of the gospel.

TWO GREAT NEW BOOKS

I have recently read, with much pleasure and more profit, two great books: Christ in Word and Work, by Martyn Summerbell, LL.D., president of Palmer Institute-Starkey Seminary, Lakemont, New York; Reconstructing the Church, by W. A. Harper, LL.D., President of Elon College, North Carolina; both copyrighted this good year of grace 1920.

I may compare these great books to sunset and sunrise. Summerbell's book seems to concentrate the light and glory of Christ in a finished picture of His Word and Work, as the evening condenses the whole day into the glory of sunset. The light, touch with the world, the reflection of all the wealth and glory of the day are seen in the quiet of the sunset, leaving a splendor of indescribable beauty in cloud, horizon, and landscape, with the promise of a new day.

Harper's book opens as a "morning without clouds," the infant of a day full of light, beauty, and life. It makes the reader look forward with a new vision and a new hope. Its pictures reveal activities, growth, and victories. It looks forward through the increasing light to a greater day and a greater Church, and all built on Christ. Every line is a ray of light, and every page glows with a new vision rising toward a noonday brighter than the world has ever seen. The sun of Rightousness rises into a splendor that fills the heart with hope, and follows the gospel day till the whole world is flooded with light.

To read these books is to get a new and clearer vision of Christ and the Church, the one working in the past and present; the other in the present and future.

A WORD OF EXPLANATION

(Presbyterian Standard)

In mingling with the brethren an editor often gets a glimpse of what his subscribers think, and is thus enabled to get their point of view.

It often happens that their point of view is based upon misinformation, so that it becomes our duty to give them our side of such questions.

The idea most prevalent is that a Church paper ought to be able to run on the proceeds of its subscription list and advertisements, and that if it does not, it must be because we are not good managers.

They also think that we carry too many "dead heads" on our mailing list and the names of those who are several years in arrears.

In order to clear up such misunderstandings, we propose briefly to lay before our readers certain facts.

1. There are very few, if any, Church papers that are self-supporting, especially during these days of the high cost of material and labor.

We know of one paper with a circulation of over 30,000 subscribers, whose editor stated publicly that for two years they had been using up their surplus.

There is not a paper published, either North or South, of any denomination, that was not losing money, according to their own statement, with the result that they had to increase their rates.

2. We seriously doubt whether there be a paper in this country with a cleaner mailing list than we have. We are collecting in advance, and we have cut off all "dead heads," and we have made a separate list of those in arrears, who are dropped one by one, if they do not pay after one or two appeals.

3. Our increased rate is due only to the increased price of paper, over 100 per cent increase, and to the high cost of labor.

4. The increase will not bear very heavily upon any one, as it is less than a cent a week, while ministers are charged only $2.00 a year.

We trust that our readers will carefully consider these four facts.

YOUR PASTOR'S WIFE.

Has your pastor a wife?

If he has, do you think what you owe her?

In one way she is more dependent upon you than he is. Like himself, all she has comes from the ones for whom they jointly labor.

There is an unwritten expectation among the membership of the church that the wife must be a paragon among women, a model par excellence, without a flaw in life, word or temper, and that no matter what occurs, when or where, she is to be unalterably and forever the same. Grant it. But how can she become and remain so? She is a woman of like passions as yourself; she has her duties perplexing, her cares and her trials. She is placed before the community in such a public way that her womanly nature shrinks from the "ordeal of eyes" through which unprotected she must pass. For that reason she wants sympathy. She desires to see persons who "do not see" her.

She needs public as well as private sympathy. She needs that public prayer shall be made for her as well as for the pastor. How often have we known the faithful parsonagekeeper whose very life was, under God, the key to all the success of the pastorate, ignored in public prayer from one year's end to the other!

Pray for her in private and in public. Speak to her of the solicitude you have for her in the home (the parsonage is often almost as public as a hotel), look after her little needs; see that the carpets that are worn out, by your own feet partially, are replaced; that the furniture you have helped deface is renewed. All this falls more upon the wife than upon the pastor, for the world, and often the church, judges the woman by her house-keeping.—Dr. Scholae, in Central Advocate.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Some days ago Brother L. L. Wyrick invited us to take him and his wife out to his father's home to get some apples, and of course we could not refuse. We "hitched up" our Ford and made the trip. We found the apple trees full and the ground covered with red apples. Mrs. Wyrick filled all the bags we carried and packed our machine full. We have always had much confidence in our Ford but we had never had it loaded with apples before and when we started home we were not sure whether the Ford would land us safely there or not, but we reached home late in the afternoon all right and had lost none of our apples. I think the saying "It takes you there and brings you back" is a true one and was especially true in this case.

Our Singing Class had an enjoyable trip to the Haw River Christian church on Oct. 21. The Class rendered its program to a packed house and the special offering amounted to $43.80. Our Haw River people are good folks and have an interesting and progressive church there.

The work on our Children's Home is moving on nicely. The masons have the walls up to the second story. As soon as the timbers are put on they will run up the next story. We hope to get the brick work done in the next two weeks if the weather continues fair. It will be a splendid building and one that the Church can well be proud of when it is finished. We need money to complete the building and get it ready for the children. It is a splendid investment and one that we ought to be glad to have a part in.

We want each church and Sunday school to commence laying plans for the Thanksgiving offering. I want to suggest that it be taken on or near Thanksgiving, as later on the weather gets cold and probably rainy and many who would likely be glad to contribute to this offering are kept away from church. Each year since I have been your superintendent you have increased the Thanksgiving offering. This year we want to make it more than last year. In fact we want to raise the largest offering we have ever raised. We will need the money to complete our new building and for running expenses. Let each church set a goal several weeks before the offering is taken and set it high enough so you will have to put forth some effort to reach it and then get up to the goal and you will feel proud of yourselves. Let each pastor, each Sunday school superintendent and each teacher talk the Thanksgiving offering. Interest begets interest. Let every one get the spirit and you will have a splendid offering.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: I suppose all your little folks are going to school again. I am going and I love to go, but W. T. doesn't like for me to go and leave him. He is lonesome. I will be glad when he gets old enough to go too. I will be eight years old next Saturday (October 23). We enclose our love and dimes for our Orphanage.—Virginia Pearl and W. T. Ayscue.

You can send W. T. up here and he will have plenty of company.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: I missed the letters in the corner last week and thought I would write one myself and send my fifty cents which mama gave us for picking dried beans and fifty cents which grandma Yarbrough gave us to send to help build the Children's Home. Am in hopes you will soon have the home ready for the children.

Elinor and myself go to school and Annie and Robert Henry want to go, but they are not old enough. Love to all the cousins.—Virginia, Elinor, Annie and Robert Henry Wells.

We are glad to get your letter this week. It always makes us happy to have the cousins keep the corner full.—"Uncle Charley."

When you and I are weak, Christ in a true sense owns the claim of our weakness and comes to serve us with his love. Behold, how this transfigures life! The times that make us weakest, and that force our weakness most upon us, and make us most to know how weak we are, those are our coronation times. The days of doubt, days of discouragement, days of bereavement and of the aching loneliness which comes when the strong voice is silent and the dear face is gone, these are the days when Christ sees most clear the crown of our need upon our foreheads.—Phillips Brooks.

Members of the North Carolina Conference who expect to attend should observe notice in this week's issue and advise the committee on arrangements.

TAM'S PLACE

Margaret nibbled daintily at the walnut on the little frosted cake. Then she sighed.

Daniel finished the fourth slice of bread and a generous allowance of raspberry jam. Then he scowled.

"Are you sick?" demanded father.

"I was just thinking," said Margaret, "that there wasn't really room for another place at this table.

"So was I," Daniel chimed in hopefully.

The twins' faces fell as mother answered cheerily: "Father and I must put in another leaf tomorrow. It will never do to crowd Tam when he comes to live with us."

Then mother rose to her feet and the twins deftly assisted in clearing away the tea things and washing the gold and white china dishes.

When their father had laid his paper aside, Margaret fluttered to the right hand side of his armchair while Daniel perched on the left-hand one. Father was full of stories that night. Burley Saint Christopher, Una and the lion, and last of all David and generous Jonathan were listened to approvingly. As the children were tearing themselves away, suddenly Margaret nodded gravely to Daniel, who scowled and nodded, too.

But mother seemed to look away down into little people's hearts. "I'll have to hunt for grandmother's green hassock tomorrow, so Tam will have a place at story time."

The twins grew very red and hung their heads, for they had been thinking they were glad that father's chair had only two arms!

In the morning, Cousin Tam came—twenty-four hours earlier than he was expected. Father had to drive over the mountains to call on an old lady that had rheumatism and mother had promised to go to the city with some other ladies to buy a carpet for the church.

"This will be a fine chance for all of you to become acquainted," mother said in her calm, silvery voice, but she held Margaret off at arm's length and looked for a minute into a pair of cloudy blue eyes. "You shall be little mother today," she said as she kissed her.

"We'll go to the croquet ground first," announced the reluctant little mother, when they were left alone. "We only have two good mallets left, so only two can play at once."

"Do you know how to play, Tam?" asked Daniel. Tam nodded without speaking and walked over to the box where the mallets and balls were kept. Margaret's conscience pricked her. "You boys play the first game and then I'll play the next time."

"No," Tam spoke suddenly, "I want to look at this mallet. I'll play after you have had a game or two." He pulled a bit of wire out of his pocket. He had his knife already in his hand. Daniel and Margaret slowly began to play, but they left off before the game was half over to admire the mallet that Tam had skillfully mended.

"If you cut off the ends of these we could make two short ones," Tam proposed briefly: "some of the fellows like to play with short mallets."

"Let me do one," Daniel begged, and the two boys were soon hard at work.

"I'll skip over and get the Ewarts," Margaret said joyfully. When Harry and Ethel Ewart came there were mallets for every one and the children had a merry game. Tam wasn't used to the sloping ground. At first he was greatly at a disadvantage, but as he learned to reckon on the distance the balls rolled, he beat the other players.

"This isn't a suitable place for croquet," apologized Margaret. "You see, Tam, we have only lived in this house a little while. Next summer we are going to have the grounds graded and then mother can have her flower beds near the house. This year we will have to plant them away down at the end of the garden. We'll have to walk about a mile to get a bowl of nasturtiums."

"Too bad," said Tam in such a nice voice that Margaret wondered if she was going to like her new cousin after all.

The Ewarts went home for dinner. In half an hour they came trooping back, ready for more croquet. But Tam had other plans.

"Who owns that old boat in the barn?" he asked.

"It's mine," Dan said promptly. "Uncle Elmer gave it to me to play in.

Tam hesitated. "If it was my boat," he said at last, "I would fill it with good earth and plant flowers in it."

"And you let vines trail over the side," explained Ethel Ewart. "I know a lady that had one at Silver Lake, and it was pretty!"

"Huh!" said Dan, "it isn't as pretty as ours is going to be. Tell us what to do, Tam."

"I love to garden," Ethel Ewart laughed, quite ignoring Dan's challenge, "and I'll help!"

"Me, too," put in Harry. "I won a prize for corn last year."

"All right," approved Tam. "Go home and get your shovels and wheelbarrow."

Off rushed the Ewarts while Tam, Daniel and Margaret cautiously dragged out the old row boat.

"Now we'll dump some earth in." Daniel sang out as the boat was put in a sunny spot.

"Pebbles for drainage," protested Harry, the corn farmer.

By the middle of the afternoon the five had started upon the tremendous task of drawing up the loads of good soil. Although they were hot and tired, no one mentioned giving up. Just at sunset the old boat stood ready to be filled with seed and roots of vines.

Five dirty but jubilant gardeners shouted hoarsely as father and mother arrived at the same moment, "Look at the garden boat!"

"Well, well," father laughed, but mother was too happy looking into the twins' faces.

"Tam showed us how," declared Daniel.

"Three is better than two," said Margaret wisely, "only we didn't know it."—The Congregationalist.

GENERAL NEWS

King Alexander of Greece, who was bitten by his pet monkey on October 2, died on the evening of October 25. At this writing it is believed that the king's young brother, Prince Paul, will be his successor to the throne.

Governor Parker of Louisiana has appealed to the cotton ginners of the South to close down for at least thirty days in order that a fair price may be received for the product.

Many states have adopted the Daylight Saving Act, turning clocks back one hour, and a resolution for the introduction of a bill in Congress, making daylight saving uniformly operative next summer, has been proposed.

The latest census report of the Methodist Episcopal Church shows that there are 36,622,190 Methodists in the world, the increase during the last nine years being 3, 935,341.

Patrick J. Hanley, a convict in the state prison, Boston, who for ten years has refused to utter a word, was released October 27, having served his sentence. Since being put into prison he has communicated only by signs and writing.

One million weddings were celebrated in the United States in 1919, but only 70,000 new homes were erected, so stated T. Roger Miller, Secretary of Chamber of Commerce, Macon, Ga., in an address on "The Solution of the Housing Problem."

WHAT KIND OF WATCH

"God watches over us every day," said the teacher. A small boy answered half resentfully: "I don't like to be watched." The statement and the reply embody the entire difference of feeling between those who think of God as a Father and those who fear him as a Censor and Judge. The watchful oversight of love, with its tender interest and its readiness to help, is not that of the probation officer on the lookout for transgressions. The little boy knew both kinds of oversight; but through some strange mistake in the teachings that had been given him, he had learned to think of God as One who was watching him to account for wrongdoings rather than to provide for his safety and happiness. False religions have avenging deities in plenty, but only one religion claims the oversight of a Father's love. And the soul that never has known the sweetness and comfort of the latter relationship, that depends on his own efforts to be saved, is practically a heathen soul.—Forward.

COULDN'T BUY THE FEATHER

The feather had been made into a quill pen. And it transpired that when a political group wanted to buy the Providence Journal, the purchasers expected to purchase the editor, James B. Angell, also, along with the paper. The young man held up his quill pen and said: "I presume you can buy the Journal, but you have not enough money to buy this quill." This young man became president of the University of Michigan, minister to China, president of the American Board of Foreign Missions, a pillar in his nation and in the civilized world. The politicians could buy the Providence Journal, but they couldn't raise money enough to buy James B. Angell's pen. This is the need of this hour, voices that cannot be silenced by pressure, mandates of conscience that simply will be heard, no matter what the cost. We need such characters as James B. Angell everywhere today. God raise them up!—Central Christian Advocate.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR POINTERS from the

United Society of Christian Endeavor, 41 Mt. Vernon St., Boston, Mass.

From the General Secretary of the "Union Nacional Mexicana" (National Christian Endeavor Union of Mexico) comes the cheering word that Christian Endeavor in his city (Mexico) is making good progress and he hopes to be able to report many new matters of interest, before long.

The societies of the Birmingham Christian Endeavor Union, Alabama, in rotation, conduct meetings at the Tuberculosis Camp, the Old Ladies' Home, a school for girls, the Pisgah Home for Women, and four other places outside of their own churches. The program for Christian Endeavor Week was carried out by practically every society in the Union, the first time that such concerted action had been taken by the Union as a whole. The Union also successfully entertained the largest State Convention ever held in Alabama.

Los Angeles County, California, assists in the support of chaplain at the County Hospital, and cooperates in the Floating Christian Endeavor work done at San Pedro Harbor. Last year they conducted a three months' evangelistic campaign, during which 1,000 decisions for Christ were made. The County plans to take up Christian Endeavor work among the Spanish people this year. The Evangelistic Superintendent of the Union, who did unusually good work in preparatory and follow up work as well as during the evangelistic campaign, also prepared the best Christian Endeavor booth exhibit ever seen, at the county convention.

At Christmas time the New Britain, Connecticut, Union holds a Christmas Giving Rally, to which each society brought gifts of food, clothing and toys. These are distributed to the needy people of the city and vicinity. During Christmas Week last year they also entertained all the children from the Childrens' Homes of New Britain, about one hundred in number. Games were played, refreshments served and each child was given a present and a bag of popcorn. The Union holds services at the Town Home for the poor every Sunday afternoon, and a service at the Erwin Home for aged women every other Tuesday evening. For six weeks during the summer the Union held open air Sunday services at six P. M., in a park not far from the center of the city, where many of the city people spend their Sundays. This custom the Union has followed for several years and they reach a large number of young people who do not attend any church.

The New Haven, Connecticut, Union held a sunrise service on Sunday morning, June 13th, at the Soldiers' Monument on top of East Rock, 400 feet above the level of the city. A number of young people came by automobile a distance of ten to fifteen miles, to attend the service. The Union is also interested in conducting fresh air work and hospital work.

The Worcester Local Union, Massachusetts, has charge of the Bethel Mission one night a month. The Lookout Committee of the Union has canvassed and tabulated all churches in the district, in a campaign for new societies. A flying Squadron had been organized to visit all the societies and "boost" Christian Endeavor in all departments of the work.

RICH FRUITS OF AMERICAN INVESTMENTS

There is abundant evidence that it is worth while for America to extend the helping hand toward Armenia. The existence of Armenia today is due to American intervention; not political, but philanthropic intervention. The basis of this statement is found in the report of Mr. Charles V. Vickrey, secretary of the Near East Relief, who has just returned from a personal inspection of the work that the organization is carrying on in afflicted Asia Minor. Mr. Vickrey says:

"The best estimate that I could secure from Armenian, semi-official sources, indicates quite clearly that not less than 500,000 persons are living today who would have perished had it not been for the relief sent from America. Perhaps I can best visualize this for you by picturing one scene in Erivan on August 19 of the present year, typical of the experience I had in practically every city that I visited in Armenia:

"We were seated at luncheon in the Near East Relief headquarters when we heard a brass band in front of the building. At first we paid no attention to the music, but a delegation entered the house and asked if we would not come to a window in the front of the house. Going to the open French window we found that the street in front of the house was filled, as far as the eye could see, with people. The spokesman of the delegation mounted the steps of the house and addressed the board of trustees of Near East Relief and the Armenian people through me, in substance as follows:

"A little more than a year ago the streets in which we are now standing were strewn with our fellow-citizens, dead, or dying of starvation. At that time we were carrying from these streets 150 to 200 bodies per day, victims of starvation from among the homeless refugees, exclusive of citizens who died in the shelter of their homes. That we who are standing in these streets today did not also die is due to the relief that came from America in time to save us. We have assembled here today for the purpose of asking you to take back to America, assurance of our deep appreciation of all that America has done for us and for our country."

"That this statement, made in the presence of hundreds if not thousands of his fellow-citizens, was something more than the impassioned utterances of a street orator, is perhaps indicated by the more official utterances of the following day.

"The Premier-President was giving a dinner to which were invited members of his cabinet, heads of departments and all the leading officials of the Armenian Government. In the course of his speech at this dinner the President used these words: 'These people would not be alive today had it not been for American relief,' and practically every speech made at the dinner that day by various cabinet members and other officials in some form reiterated the same fact and expressed appreciation.

"Since returning to New York I have received an autograph letter from Dr. H. Olandjanian, the Premier-President of the Republic in which occur the words: 'America literally saved us from starvation.'"

Thousands upon thousands of women and children are living today who would not have been living had it not been for this investment of American philanthropy.

SAVING THE ORPHANS OF ARMENIA

Miss Emma F. Colby, of Natick, Mass., a member of the Congregational Church at that place, and a graduate of Wellesley College, has just returned to the United States after a year of overseas work with the Near East Relief in the Syria area. She says that American philanthropy has achieved great things for the afflicted people of that region. Relief activities have so improved the condition of the natives in Syria that the industrial work, which for a long time was essential in order to keep them alive, has been discontinued, so that energies may be centered on other work and other districts that are more in need of attention. The greatest problem is to care for the thousands of starvation-made orphans who have been committed to the care of the organization. A large sum of money must be obtained to do this.

TURKS HOLD THE HIGHWAYS

Dr. George C. Doolittle of Cincinnati, director of Near East Relief at Aleppo, reports that all the roads in the Aleppo-Aintab-Urf-Marash district of Asia Minor are in the hands of bands of Turkish Nationalists, and it is not considered safe to send either American relief workers or supplies intended for Killis, though there are 1000 Armenian refugees in Killis without food, and in a pitiable condition. No Christians are allowed to leave Urfa. Dr. Doolittle reports, though Arabs pass through the Turkish lines freely.

HOUSEKEEPING HINTS

When cooking hot cakes on a griddle, tie three tablespoonfuls of salt in a strong white cloth. When the griddle is hot, just before pouring in the butter, rub the salt bag over it and the cakes will not stick and there will be no smoke.

Use charcoal freely in the refrigerator, as it is a safe and simple sweetener and disinfectant.

Separable saucepans are a gas economy, as three foods can be cooked at the same time over one burner, instead of just one, as is the case with the ordinary shaped saucepan.

If the cut end of uncooked ham is rubbed over with vinegar, it will not mold.

LUNCHEON POTATOES

Boil the potatoes, remove the skins, and chop them. To four cupfuls of the chopped potato add one-half cupful grated onion that has been heated in one-half tablespoonful of butter or substitute. Season this with chopped parsley, salt and pepper. Mix well. Place this in a buttered baking dish, smooth the top and pour over it one-half cup of milk. Place in a hot oven and bake till brown.

JOHNSON

The wife of Bro. Lynn Johnson of Lillington passed into the beyond, October 20, 1920. She was between 60 and 70 years of age and for a long time had been a member of Pleasant Union Christian church. The husband and several children are left on the earth to miss her, and may our heavenly Father bring them together again where there will be no more parting, neither sorrow nor crying. The body was laid to rest in the cemetery not far from Pleasant Union church. Services by the writer and Bro. Kirkpatrick of the Presbyterian church.

GETTING IN TOUCH WITH THE BEST

Edward Everett Hale used to counsel young people to converse every day with some one older, better and wiser than themselves. We cannot all do that, but we can do the next best thing: we can get in touch with them through the printed page and enjoy the fruits of their wisdom and experience. Probably no publication contains so much from the writings of men and women distinguished in many ways as The Youth's Companion. A constant reading of the paper is a liberal education of mind and heart.

The Companion has no age limit. Professional men, business men and busy women prize it as highly as the young folks.

The 52 issues of 1921 will be crowded with serial stories, short stories, editorials, poetry, facts and fun. Subscribe now and receive:

EDITORIAL

A GREAT CONFERENCE AND A GREAT PEOPLE

(Editorial Correspondence)

No visitor to the Eastern Virginia Conference could, I think, sum up the meeting of that body which convened with Holy Neck church, November 3-5, better than to say that it was a great Conference by a great people. It was great.

Arriving in time for the night session of the first day, I am at a loss to give a creditable account of what happened before my arrival. In fact, about half my time while there was taken up with business matters in connection with THE SUN and I did not have the privilege of hearing all the deliberations of the second and third days.

Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., the president, presided over the sessions of the Conference. Dr. Rowland refused to stand for re-election, and a very worthy successor, Rev. G. O. Lankford, was elected to succeed Dr. Rowland. Brother Lankford's work, however, began at the close of the Conference.

The president's message was based, I am told, on the matter of having a spiritual basis for church work and, in keeping with the addresses delivered in the seven previous years of Dr. Rowland's administration, it was up to the usual high standard. Among the addresses given the first day were as follows: Welcome—J. T. Rawles; Response—L. P. Holland; "The Bible and Missions"—Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D. We name these addresses from the program and understand that each was given.

The first item that it was my privilege to hear was an address by Superintendent Chas. D. Johnston, of our Orphanage. Brother Johnston had his address well prepared and he delivered it well, making a fine impression upon the Conference. Following this address Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne, pastor of Memorial Temple, Norfolk, Va., delivered a splendid sermon using as the basis of his message, "The Head of the Church." (Col. 1:18). Brother Lightbourne is a brother of Rev. Victor Lightbourne, and this was his first message before the Eastern Virginia Conference. Suffice to say that it was a message backed up by preparation and well received by the Conference. Brother Lightbourne will make a splendid addition to that assemblage of our Brotherhood.

The first report on the morning of the second day was that on Education, rendered by Dr. W. W. Staley. President W. A. Harper, of Elon College, addressed the Convention on "Protestantism's Weakest Spot." The message evoked approval discussion. The speaker pointed out that Protestantism's weakest spot is that of the lack of Christian training. Among many facts, he cited that well known one of the great difference between the amount of religious instruction given the Protestant child and the Catholic child. It is certainly a thing that the world must recognize. President Harper took the Sunday school as the primary department in the school of Christian education, and pointed out very definitely and conclusively that the well-rounded man begins his educational work in the Sabbath school and completes it in the Christian college.

The Conference voted with other Conferences already met, to pool its educational fund to create a centralized fund. This was a result of a resolution from the recent session of the Southern Christian Convention, and the basis of it being the wisdom of using the educational funds of the different conferences in a more economical way. Occasionally a Conference has money but no ministerial students, and then a Conference may have ministerial students and no fund. By combining the funds someone will always be benefitted, but of course upon recommendation of the Conference Boards.

Rev. W. H. Denison, D. D., Dayton, Ohio, Superintendent of the Forward Movement of the Christian Church, very ably presented the five point program that is being initiated into all quarters of the denomination. The Forward Movement program being familiar to our people, a digest of it is therefore unnecessary here.

Dr. Atkinson was at his best in bringing before the Conference a very able address on "The Church and Missions." The Eastern Virginia Conference is emphatically missionary, and the address was in keeping with the forward march of missionary work in that part of our Zion.

The benediction of the final part of the second day's session came when "Uncle" Wellons addressed the body. Nearing his ninety-fifth birthday, and being too weak to stand, he seated himself, like a patriarch of old, and delivered his message. I have been hearing "Uncle" Wellons address the different conferences for the past several years, but never have I heard him equal his message on this occasion. While the message was reminiscent in outline, it was punctuated with sentences that made one weep, and then with sentences that made one laugh. It seemed hard to realize that one who had done so much pioneer work was still in our midst. The Conference rose to its feet in great appreciation for Brother Wellons, and honored him with the Chautauqua salute and a handsome cash offering. May the guiding hand of a loving Father continue to lead this venerable Christian as he looks toward the sunset valley. While the shadows of life creep around, may the illuminating presence of Christ be his continuing comforter.

The afternoon session of the first day I was not permitted to hear in full. Rev. O. D. Poythress, pastor of the South Norfolk church, enthusiastically presented the claims of the Christian Missionary Association. The usual increased interest was manifested in this work. That prince of laymen, and zealous church worker, Col. J. E. West, delivered an inspiring address in behalf of the missionary work of the denomination, and especially in the Eastern Virginia Conference. Rev. O. D. Poythress also delivered an address. Rev. J. M. Roberts presented the report of Moral Reform, and Layman J. O. Wiggs, of the First church, Norfolk, delivered an address diagnosing some of the causes for divorce.

The session of the Conference was a centennial one, and special recognition to this was given between the hours of seven and ten P. M., of the second day. Historian W. E. MacClenny, Suffolk, Va., presented a concise and well prepared history of all the churches in the Conference; Dr. W. W. Staley read a chronological and alphabetical list of all the ministers of the Conference since its foundation; Col. J. E. West spoke in regard to the financial history of the Conference and presented some very interesting facts.

The centennial period of the meeting cannot be full treated here. Plans were taken to further the research of the work and steps taken to place the investigation and compilation in permanent form.

Two papers prepared for this part of the Conference were not read for the lack of time. These were "The Relation of the Conference to Modern Conditions", by Rev. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Va., and "The Outlook for the Future", by Rev. Jas. L. Foster, Waverly, Va.

The work of the third day consisted of deferred and miscellaneous business, the report on Foreign Missions, the report on Religious Literature, the report of the Woman's Board, the report of the Tabulating Committee, the report on Apportionments, the reports on Memoirs and general miscellaneous items.

The report of the Tabulating Committee showed a total of 47 churches, with a membership of 8,756, with 6,105 enrolled in the Conference Sunday schools. The various churches of the Conference were apportioned for the past year $7,610.00 and the total collected and brought to Conference amounted to $7,314.00. The total apportionments for the coming year are $8,600.00.

This brief mention of a great Conference by a great people does not, in any way, portray to the reader the magnitude of the body. I consider it the best session of the Eastern Virginia Conference that I have ever attended. The capacity of the church was more than taxed—many having to remain standing at most of the session. The hospitality could not be excelled. The long tables loaded with good things to eat, too numerous to mention, was a sight to behold. The church is located in one of the best sections of Virginia and is backed by an ancestry always known for good citizenship and hospitality.

My space is now about taken but a word should be said about the Holy Neck church. The first building was erected in 1747, but at that time was an offspring of the Parish Church at Suffolk, Va. The Parish Church went out of existence and James O'Kelly organized a Christian church about the year 1800. In 1835 the house was replaced by a larger building and in 1870 again replaced by a more commodious house. This building lasted until 1915 when a handsome building was erected. The property is worth between ten and fifteen thousand dollars, is centrally located in the community, equipped with the most substantial and modern church furniture and lighted by electricity, the same being generated in the basement of the church. The building is heated by hot air system and affords the worshippers the same accommodation as received in the city church.

My space is now taken up. I am conscious of the fact that my report is all too meagre and many important things not mentioned. I have asked others to give expression to this great Conference also and hope to have the same in hand for publication next week.

The Conference decided to meet with the People's church, Dover, Del., in its 1921 session.

LIGHTHOUSE OBSERVATIONS

J. E. MASSEY

EUROPE'S STARVING CHILDREN

Again the starving children of Europe are calling to America. The approach of winter has brought nearer than ever to us the fact that these innocents are facing a life and death struggle. During the past few years America has been attempting to feed many of them. Some six million waifs were fed through the first winter after the war by American Relief Administration. Though conditions have improved remarkably within the last year, there are more than 3,500,000 of these undernourished and orphan children to be fed over the coming winter.

In his letter to the Literary Digest, Mr. Hoover says twenty-three million dollars must be raised immediately to supply the children of Poland, Latvia, Esthonia, Hungary and other countries in central and southeastern Europe. He believes that the same responsibility rests upon the American people in the present need as in the relief of the Belgians in 1916, and he is beginning an energetic campaign to raise this amount. Certainly there is not available food and clothing to feed and clothe the children in their own lands; and at their present low ebb of finance and exchange, none of the other European countries are capable of contributing very much to the needs of the children. "America" is the word lingering on the lips of the starving millions. In her, their hopes are centered. Shall they go still further in undernourishment, inhibit consumption, starve and die for want of things which Americans can afford to give; or shall we be their brothers across the ocean and send them food and clothing before it is too late?

FARMER'S SIDE OF FARM PRICES

In the present trend of falling farm prices, the farmer seems to have the least prosperous side. Undoubtedly this is due to the fact that farmers have to pay more than twice as much for labor as in 1914; also that there is a very marked reduction in some of the main farm products such as wheat, cotton, corn, wool, tobacco, and live stock. Then, too, the farmer reasons that he can never fall back to the old pre-war prices even if he does not have to pay the present prices of labor. He feels that here-to-fore he has been grossly underpaid, and that for the last two years, he has been growing into a new day, his own day of higher prices for his products.

It is hard for him to see the wheat which he sold last winter at $3 per bushel sell for $2 this winter; or for his cotton which formerly sold for forty-two cents a pound sell for twenty-five cents, or less, now. In fact, it has wrought such a change in his situation that he has almost lost control of himself. In some cases he has resorted to "night-riding" cotton-gin burning, and other drastic and unthoughtful means of trying to keep prices of his products from falling.

Of course it is not the duty of this page to say what prices farmers should receive for their particular products. The law of supply and demand will better determine that. It is quite evident, however, that the farmer must expect a reasonable reduction in prices. He must not forget that he has in hand the basic output of products which are turned into food and clothing, and that if he withholds these to the hurt of the consumers, he is falling short of his duty. No right-thinking farmer will resort to burning up his neighbor's barn, or raid property and destroy it for a selfish end. Patience and reason are by far, better and more Christ-like, and will result for him a fundamental solution in the final adjustment of prices.

HUDSON STUCK, THE ALASKAN MISSIONARY, DIES

Hudson Stuck, a great Alaskan missionary and explorer has died. In the sense that we call David Livingston, the religious champion of the dark continent of Africa, Hudson Stuck is called the champion of the Frozen North. His name is best known to the public as that of the first explorer to set foot on top of Mount McKinley. But to the Indians and Eskimos, he was the "good man of iron endurance". His life of missionary work in Alaska was a long record of daring travel and hardship. Over a vast parish, driving thousands of miles to and fro, he labored in the cold, sparsely settled country where few men dared to go. He knew the Indian and Eskimo just as the country clergyman knows his parishioners, and he helped to fight their worst enemy, whiskey and tuberculosis. The Outlook has well said of him: "The church work he built up in the far North is his best memorial."

TIME ENOUGH

Says a wise proverb, "Time enough always proves enough". I suppose there is always time enough to do the things that God requires. God is never a task-maker. He asks nothing beyond our ability as augmented by His. He never lays upon us unreasonable demands. Every divine requirement is rooted in fairness. 'Tis our fellows who confuse us with commandments. There is always time enough to do the things which God requires—if only we could be sure what His asking is. Sometimes, the things He asks looks smaller than the things we want to do. Sometimes His errand seems an interruption of an important program. Sometimes the face in which He comes to us seems forbidding or unwelcome. Often we are obsessed with the imperative of the program we have built for ourselves, we cannot raise our eyes to meet the look of a more important duty. We are too busy as we say we have no time. But there is always time—plenty of time—for the thing which God requires.—George Clark Peck in Christian Advocate.

In a national typewriting contest held in Philadelphia recently, George L. Hossfield, of that city, won the championship title by writing one hundred and thirty-one words a minute for an hour.

THE JUSTIFICATION OF PLAY

By O. F. Lewis

A noteworthy thing is happening, these days, all over our country. People are discovering a new continuing element in life—or rather, a new application of an old element. The element of play, or a “good time.”

High authorities are quoted. Theodore Roosevelt is cited: “He is not fit to live who is not fit to die, and he is not fit to die who shrinks from the joy of life or from the duty of life.” And there are today organizations, like Community Service, Incorporated, and the Playground and Recreation Association of America, proclaiming persistently the importance and necessity in life of recreation and play. The movement cannot be ignored. That life which is “all work and no play” is publically challenged.

Earl Grey, who was Secretary of Foreign Affairs in England when the War broke out, has just written a treatise on recreation as an essential in the rounded life. Edward Bok, the noted editor of the Ladies Home Journal wrote in the Atlantic Monthly for September the reasons why he had resigned from the important work of editing, to play for the rest of his life. Not “play” solely in the simple sense of physical sports and games, but play also through diversions, and hobbies, and cultural satisfactions.

What does this “play movement” mean? What significance has it for the church? How much play should there be in life? Let us quote Earl Grey:

“I do not recommend recreation as the most important thing in life. There are at least four other things which are more or less under our own control and which are essential to our happiness.

“The first is some moral standard by which to guide our actions. The second is some satisfactory home life in the form of good relations with family or friends. The third is some form of work which justifies our existence to our country and makes us good citizens.

“The fourth thing is some degree of leisure and the use of it in some way that makes us happy.

“To succeed in making a good use of our leisure will not compensate for failure in any one of the other three things to which I have referred, but a reasonable amount of leisure and a good use of it is an important contribution to a happy life.”

In short, Earl Grey says: “Religion; family; work; leisure”. And the thread of recreation running through life, and manifested particularly in the leisure time.

The experience of our country in the Great War was the chief impetus to this new social problem—the problem of the good use, by all the members of the community, of their leisure time. Everyone remembers that in the communities around the hundreds of camps, the millions of our boys in khaki and blue could find wholesome, clean recreation provided by the citizens. We sent to France the cleanest, most socially-minded army that ever went to war. And it was the decent recreational opportunities of their free time that helped greatly to bring this about. Probably every reader of this article contributed in some way to make a soldier's or sailor's off-time more interesting and pleasanter, during the war.

What was good for the millions of fighting men now strikes this country as good for all of us! Recreation, play—in their proper places, and for proper ends. We have as a nation thought of play heretofore largely as belonging to a child life. But even there the Scriptures seem to insist that the spirit and habits of childhood should be in some respects our guides to the righteous life. Unless we become as little children, we shall in no wise enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. And for little children, play is life.

It cannot be so for us adults, but play, diversions, recreation, amusements can be profitably admitted to most people's lives in much greater quantities than they now are. So says Community Service, the organization that has assembled the countless recreational experiences of the war. And it draws many of its arguments from what churches did during the war and are now doing, to establish, develop or continue the wholesome and entertaining recreational work that is often spoken of by the one word: “Play”.

For instance: Community night was started in one of the churches of Bridgeport, Connecticut. It brought community singing, story telling and violinist. Result, the petitioning to the school authorities for community features in the neighboring school. At a joint meeting of the governing bodies of two churches in Buffalo, a budget of $13,500 for moving pictures and other activities was voted.

In the Mormon Church in Salt Lake City there was planned a community-service hour in each ward meeting house once a week, meaning forty-two hours per week of community endeavor, with participation of 8000 or more people. A recreation center is being organized in a church in San Francisco. In Seattle, one of the churches is planning to affect the recreational activities of the neighborhood through previous study of the lessons of the war and armistice period. Citizenship lectures are being instituted in an industrial suburb of Buffalo by a pastor. In one city a disused church is being made over by church authorities as a community center. Parish houses in many cities are being opened for neighborhood and community activities, and not alone for the activities of the parish members.

In Michigan the Lake Superior Presbyterian advised all the Presbyterian churches and pastors within its boundaries to extend their help to further the high ideals outlined by the Michigan Community Council Commission. A “hospitality week” in Flint, Michigan was opened with a “Go to Church Sunday”. A men's Bible Class at Mt. Clemens, Michigan held a social evening at the community house with games and an old-fashioned spell-down. On May Day, in Fredericksburg, Va., all the churches were open to help inaccommodating the hundreds of out-of-town visitors who came to join in the festivities of the day. Some of the Baptist church grounds were loaned in June for playground recreation.

Citations of the activities of churches throughout the country might be given by the hundreds, and each day many reports come to the headquarters of Community Service, at One Madison Avenue, New York, of most varied developments of the community spirit in church life. The words of Theodore Roosevelt gain daily a greater significance, as this movement grows stronger throughout the country:

"This country will not be a good place for any of us to live in unless we make it a good place for all of us to live in."

The writer has seen in Brooklyn a large basement room of a church made over into a most delightful club center for the boys and girls of the parish, who may invite their young friends as guests to the many functions held there. Equipped with games, and with opportunities for the normal, vigorous sports of youth, the room served first during the war for young men in khaki and blue, and now for the peacetime recreational life of the church. The adults join with the children at times in their jollifications.

One might paraphrase the famous verse, as follows:

"Breathes there a man with soul so dead,
Who never to himself hath said
* * * I'd like to play!"

In the larger sense, the desire to play and have recreation is but a part of the very serious problem of proper use of the leisure time of life, as Earl Grey has said. There is going to be so much more leisure time in life for most people than there used to be. Higher wages, shorter hours of labor, and indeed, the determination in the hearts of even millions of people that life shall not continue to be or to seem as hard as it used to be, all mean that people everywhere are bound they will have a good time in life!

Is that not the very core of the problem, today? How shall the leisure time of life be spent by communities, nations, the world over? Shall it be spent destructively, in dissoluteness, debauchery, gambling, immorality, extravagance, and in all the vicious activities that make a nation worse? Or shall the increasing amount of leisure time in people's lives be spent profitably, for the making of better citizens, for the development of a more rounded and finer life?

Churchmen and churchwomen will answer this question in only one way. The leisure time of life should become a great national asset to our country, not a great liability. But how?

By helping to provide means whereby people may profitably spend their leisure time. And we shall find we mean by "profitably" not alone study, and educational classes, and individual betterment along cultural lines, but also profitable amusements, recreational games, and sports.

Is it not time, in the year 1920, that we finally recognize that the determination to be amused and to have fun cannot under any conditions be eradicated from the human heart. Indeed, commercial amusements, like the movies, the theatre, and all amusement parks and other undertakings to get people's money in return for amusements are perhaps, in their totality, the largest industry in the country.

What is the answer? The development, in our own home communities, for all of us, and particularly for those who have few chances to choose their own amusements, of wholesome, simple, interesting amusements, that will create neighborliness, a better community spirit law-abiding dispositions, and will lead to the desire for higher and better things.

The church is already vigorously entering upon the problem of adequate, sound recreation as an essential part of life. It is powerfully affecting its neighborhoods. Community Service, Incorporated, stands ready to assist, counsel, place its great experience at the service of church organizations. Shall there not be herein a practical example of co-operation for the common good?

AS YOU VALUE THE BLESSINGS OF HOME, CONSIDER THOSE WHO ARE DEPRIVED OF PARENTAL LOVE AND CARE

A beautiful custom in which practically every person in the State may participate with little inconvenience or sacrifice is that of contributing the income of a day to the support of our fatherless and motherless children. And the Thanksgiving season is a most propitious period during which the charitably inclined people of North Carolina may show their appreciation of the meritorious service the twenty-one child-caring institutions are rendering in the care, protection, training and education of helpless children who might otherwise become a menace to society and objects of scorn on the face of the earth.

That the present wards of these homes will continue to receive proper care and attention there is little reason to express the slightest concern. But there are literally thousands of bright boys and girls out on the highways and in the by-ways of the State who cannot be admitted into either of these homes because THERE IS NO ROOM FOR THEM! It is this class of children that the people of the State should interest themselves in to the extent of contributing the earnings of a day at Thanksgiving, so that the management of the homes may be provided with funds to warrant reasonable expansion.

Let it not be said of North Carolina that they neglected, at any time, the care and protection of helpless little children right at their own doors. It should be borne in mind that our charitably inclined citizens, both men and women, really constitute a great corporation, organized for the purpose of relieving the distressed, burying the dead, caring for the widow and educating the orphan. Every member is an equal shareholder, and all members are directors, with the same powers. Its dividends are not recorded in dollars and cents, but are set aside as treasury stock, which is held in the hearts and affections of the beneficiaries. The larger the dividends, the greater will be the reward for duty well performed. In the race between the child and the dollar the interests of the child should blend easily in our humanities. In our fullness of heart we hear the tender words of the Master: "Suffer little children to come unto me, * * * for of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

It is the duty of today that we should be most concerned. Tomorrow the sun will either rise in splendor or behind a mask of weeping clouds. Consciousness of duty well performed is the source of all happiness. Remorse comes for something that happened yesterday, or the dread of what tomorrow may disclose. But let us remember that the same love and patience that are anticipated for the morrow will shine with tender promise into the heart of today. Then let us journey one day at a time, laying aside as we go along the income of a day to be forwarded to the orphanage of our choice when we reached the glad morn of Thanksgiving. By so doing we shall comply with the imperative command to protect and educate the orphan.

In no other one channel of effort is our mission so vividly and practically exemplified as it is in the work of the orphan homes. Here are gathered the fatherless and motherless children of the State, where thy find fostering care and protection throughout the years of their youthful development. Here they are given the education and training so essential to their success when they go out to battle for themselves in this heartless world of ours. It is to one of these splendid institutions that every man, woman and child in North Carolina, who is blessed with earning capacity, is asked to contribute the amount of ONE DAY'S INCOME during the Thanksgiving season. This is a reasonable request, and should meet a liberal response. Not one in a hundred is unable to set aside the income of one day in 365 to a cause so worthy. This appeal is to all classes and conditions, and those who respond are asked to forward the amount they may wish to contribute to the orphanage of their choice. The Publicity Committee handles no funds.

And while we are assisting in providing the comforts of life to the little ones bereft of parents and the comforts of home, "let us forget the past with all its cares and frets, with all its pains and aches—all its faults and mistakes. Every act we have wrought, either for good or for evil, is in the hands of the Mighty Love that is capable of bringing honey out of the rock and sweet waters out of the bitterest desert—the love that turns weeping into laughter, woes into joys, and gives the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness. Only for the beautiful memories, sweet and tender, that linger like the perfume of roses in the events of the days that are gone will thoughts of yesterday serve and good purpose. Leave everything to the love that is higher than the stars, wider than the skies, and deeper than the seas; the love that holds for all, and the treasures for the days that are gone."

"Leave not until tomorrow things that should be done today." Men and women, boys and girls of North Carolina, discharge your duty to the State and society by sending the earnings of a day to the orphanage of your choice on, or near, November 25th, the day on which all the people of this great and glorious country of ours shall return thanks unto Him who doeth all things well.

The call is urgent. Let no one fail to respond.

DEVOTIONAL

MY PRAYER

To grow a little wiser day by day;
 To school my mind and body to obey;
 To keep my inner life both clean and strong;
 To free my life from guile, my mind from wrong;
 To shut the door on hate and scorn and pride;
 To open then to love the windows wide;
 To meet with cheerful heart what comes to me;
 To turn life's discords into harmony;
 To share some weary worker's heavy load;
 To point some straying comrade to the road;
 To know that what I have is not my own;
 To feel that I am never quite alone—
 This would I pray from day to day,
 For then I know my life will flow
 In peace until it be God's will I go.

DIGGING AT DUTY.

Many a man now eminent in his trade or profession has begun in a humble way, as an apprentice or novice, and by sheer resourcefulness and downright hard work has beaten his way to success. A former superintendent of motive power on the Pennsylvania lines thus described his rise to his important position: "I got in there (on the system) and was given a chance to dig, and I dug!" Another official of the same road once sized up the human power situation in this fashion: "The fellows learn that the longest poles knock the most plums." When a young man is given a chance to do even the humblest work, the only way to begin is to begin. If he is afforded an opportunity to dig, let him dig in! There is a man in Scripture who weakly declared: "I cannot dig." That was pretty bad, although he had grace enough to add: "To beg, I am ashamed." Not every man indeed can work as a day laborer. There are still those, plenty of them, who even these days of steam shovels and electric motors sell their muscles or bend their backs literally in aging toil. But most people today, while engaged many of them in manual employments, must use their wits to spare their backs and strive to attain a skill which will relieve toil of its most tiresome forms of drudgery. Yet, however we may arrange it, there will nevertheless remain a certain amount of downright demand which can be met and countered only by digging in. The practice that makes perfect is often a laborious calculation, an intense application of brain power, an unsparing devotion, or an emotional strain which leaves the subject of the process the worst-tired man at the end of the day that there is to be found anywhere in town. Especially when the feelings and sympathies, as well as the mind and muscles, are strained is the tire intense and persistent. Nevertheless it is only by toil and sacrifice and perseverance that life's highest prizes are won. It rests with us to determine, when confronted with any unfamiliar yet promising situation, whether we shall "give it up" before we try, or try with a vehemence of zeal, a resoluteness of purpose, and a persistence of activity which simply wring prosperity out of poverty, and conquer circumstances by sheer force of character. "I cannot dig!" "I dug!" Here are two types of men, one a failure and the other a force. Which type are you?—Zion's Herald.

GRUMBLING AND COVETOUSNESS

We have too many grumblers in the world. Grumbling is bred of covetousness. We all ought to be too busy cultivating what we have—our own home-patch—to waste time on speculating and grumbling about what other people have, or what might have been. Ask an up-to-date doctor and he will tell you that half the ailments of human life are caused by worry. What can spoil God's image more than a sullen, covetous temperament? It is not the amount of our possessions which will make us happy, but the quality of our perceptions about them. We do well to remember that it is not enough to have lofty ambitions and beautiful ideals, if we do nothing to attain them. There is neither injury nor mistake that cannot be outgrown; and we all know men without sight and bed-ridden people who are far happier and much more highly developed than most of us who have our sight and are in apparent health. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" Everything that is born of envy, fear, ignorance, worry, is bound to stop growth.

Of course, it must be conceded that hopefulness and buoyancy may possibly lead to building air-castles, to dreams of Utopia, to counting on the millennium, to living in a fool's paradise. But that is optimism in excess. To look for the sunny side of things, to be of good heart, to keep one's spirits up, and, above all, to see the humor that lurks in the blackest situation—all this is to cheer oneself, and also to encourage the faint-hearted. Lack of hope implies lack of imagination. It was not by accident that Hope was placed at the bottom of Pandora's Box, yet in these days Mrs. Gummidge's descendants seem as the sands of the sea for number. Croakers are always interesting in their unconsciousness of stupidity. Hope requires cultivation and denotes the reposing of the mind on the future. Anticipation of the future is tinged by temperament, digestion, conscience, the state of the liver, and the amount of exercise given yesterday to body and mind. Sound sleep o' nights is the raw material of optimism. Sages have noticed, throughout the ages, that the people who sing at their labor are the people who work hard, sleep soundly, live sparsely.—Presbyterian Examiner.

To be glad of life, because it gives you a chance to love and work; to play and to look up at the stars; to be satisfied with your possessions, but not contented with yourself until you have made the best of them; to despise nothing in the world except falsehood and meanness; to covet nothing that is your neighbor's except his kindness of heart and gentleness of manners; to think seldom of your enemies, often of your friends, and every day of Christ—these are little guide-posts on the Footpath of Peace—Van Dyke.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

A SUCCESSFUL REVIVAL

The union meeting conducted at Lowell, (Alabama) by Evangelist Geo. D. Eastes, Norfolk, Va., and singer Mr. Daughtery, Indianapolis, Ind., was a grand success. The sermons of Brother Eastes were logical, forceful and powerful and found a place in the hearts of his hearers.

The seating capacity of the tent was too small for the crowds that came from far and near to hear the gospel by Brother Eastes. The pastor and people of the First Methodist church cooperated in a splendid way and as a result several members have been received into that church. Several people from the First Baptist church of Roanoke attended and helped in the meeting.

There were about 140 cards signed by persons—some for reconsecration and others for membership in the different churches in the town.

The expense of the meeting, including railroad fare of singer and evangelist, also the singer's salary, was paid by the middle of the first week of the meeting. This amount was $440.00. The free-will offering for the evangelist at the close of the meeting amounted to about $433.00.

Any church is fortunate in securing the services of these two brethren. Mr. Daughtery is a great singer and is worth the cost to any community, because of his work with the children, in which he is especially gifted.

RACE PREJUDICE

One of the main things that the people of today must guard against and overcome is race prejudice. Its day is passing away, slowly, but I trust, surely. Now in many respects I believe that it has been a good thing in the past, and there are sections of our country that for a while yet race prejudice may be for the best. But in this new day that is dawning, and surely one has dawned, we must lay aside many of the feelings and customs of the past. I heard a man say the other day that he loved Germany. At first I marveled to myself. And again after serious thought decided that I love Germany too. I love France and England better than I did two years ago. Somehow we seem nearer together. Perhaps the going through blood and fire caused us to feel nearer each other. Then the war did good. It is my opinion that Germany thinks more of, and has a higher respect for America today than any other nation. Not because we with the Allies defeated her in conflict, but because we have taken the stand that "Righteousness makes right, and not might." Now if Uncle Sam will continue to play the part in this new day that I believe God wants him to play, he will not show himself above other nations, nor allow prejudice to keep him from holding up the true teachings of the Master mind Who is no respecter of persons.

It is not altogether National prejudice alone that stands in our way. There are communities and districts here in Uncle Sam's territory that feel themselves a little better than other people, and they may be more civilized, in fact are. But let us be fair. Let us draw our conclusion by the teaching and character of the great Teacher. He found the fishermen mending their nets, and said "Follow Me". When the ruler came with all his wealth, seeking Jesus, Christ said unto him: "Follow Me". The condition was the same. The rich must take his place in the same company; he in the same crowd the same society as Peter and John, however in his case he must give up his wealth, perhaps "haughty prejudice" played its part in keeping him out of the Kingdom.

As we observe the sayings, teachings and miracles of Jesus as they really are, we must conclude that race prejudice and unsocial friendliness do not harmonize with

SUFFOLK LETTER

The eighth annual session of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference was held in the Holland Christian church on Thursday, October 28, 1920, with forenoon and afternoon sessions, Mrs. C. H. Rowland presiding and Mrs. I. W. Johnson in the Secretary's chair.

It was a rainy morning, but one hundred and forty-two registered. Local persons and late comers were not counted; but at least two hundred partook of the well-prepared and well-served dinner of Smithfield ham, chicken salad, creamed potatoes, bread, crackers, pickles, celery, coffee, ice cream, and cake; one hundred being seated at a time at tables in the main Sunday school room. The church building is modern and the pride of the congregation. The welcome and hospitality were evidently Christian.

Devotional services were conducted by Mrs. J. P. Barrett, wife of the pastor.

The treasurer's report showed that there are in this conference of forty-seven churches, twenty-seven Woman's Societies, sixteen Young People's Societies, eight Willing Workers Societies, and seven Cradle Roll Societies, making fifty-eight in all. The sums raised by these four groups were as follows: Women, $3,563.72; Young People, $1,278.13; Willing Workers $250.75; Cradle Roll, $90.66, making a total for the year of $5,183.26. Some societies had not sent in their reports when this report was made.

The total sent in to the Annual Conference last year from the churches was only $7,610.00, which is only $2,426.74 more than these societies raised during the year; and they are only 8 years old, while the Conference is a hundred years old. It shows what faith, organization, work, and many giving littles can accomplish. The Christian work of these women is not the least of the year's achievements. All of this, it must be remembered, is for missions. I would like to be present at the Centennial Celebration of the Woman's Conference; but I am doubtful, unless I am present in the upper temple when the angel brings in their report in the year 2020. They had set for their goal last year $5,000.00 and went beyond it. The Young People set for their goal last year $1,500.00 and went beyond $1,600.00. They have set for their goal the coming year $1,800.00, half for Home and half for Foreign work.

A recognition service for Life Work Reeruits was conducted by Rev. W. M. Jay, and an address was made by Mission Secretary, Dr. J. O. Atkinson. Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson read a fine paper on "Our Young People and Missions", which was requested for publication in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

Mrs. D. P. Barrett, wife of our Porto Rican Missionary for twenty years, was present and touched a tender chord in the hearts of the audience as she portrayed the conversion of a young woman and her subsequent experience. At the suggestion of president, Mrs. Rowland, one hundred dollars was raised and presented to Mrs. Barrett in the form of a check from Mrs. M. L. Bryant, Treasurer, as a personal gift expressing the love, confidence, appreciation, and prayers of the Woman's Conference for Mrs. Barrett and the work. The incident was so unexpected, so genuinely sweet, and so deserved, that the recipient was overcome and sat down in tears. The silent joy of the donors was felt by all present.

The officers elect for the ensuing year are Mrs. C. H. Rowland, President; Mrs. L. E. Smith, Vice-President; Mrs. W. D. Harward, Secretary; Mrs. M. L. Bryant, Treasurer; Sup't Young People, Mrs. W. V. Leathers; Sup't Cradle Roll, Miss Mary Andrews.

After the meeting, the Conference adjourned to meet with Damascus Christian church, Gates County, N. C., on Friday before the Annual Conference in 1921.

W. W. STALEY

RICHMOND LETTER

The Lightbourne-Davis meeting, held for the First Christian church of Richmond, closed October 17, 1920. Dr. W. W. Staley preached two preparatory sermons much to the delight of our people. They were strong messages and full of food for thought and especially adapted to the preparation for the revival.

Rev. Victor Lightbourne and Mr. Sam Davis came October 6, and took charge of the services. We had to run in opposition to the Virginia State Fair, which was open every night, and our congregations were small in the beginning, but through the interest of those who came, much personal work by the members, and a great deal of advertising, the congregations grew from night to night until the close, when they were coming by the hundreds to almost every service.

Mr. Lightbourne is a great preacher and has a strong earnest message that grips and holds his hearers. He made a deep impression and the meeting will long be remembered in Richmond. Mr. Davis is a wonder as a musician and added much to the interest and attendance.

Our local choir was augmented by a number of singers from the Billy Sunday Choir, forming a chorus that rendered splendid music. Mrs. Jarvis and Mrs. Dixon, from the Third church, Norfolk, were with us a few nights and inspired us with the singing of duets,

Mr. Woodard and Mrs. Price of Richmond, rendered a beautiful duet the closing evening of the service. The Steiff Piano Company very generously placed a Baby Grand Steiff in the school building for our free use throughout the meeting. The meetings were a wonderful help to the church, in making us known throughout the city.

The total amount raised for evangelistic party, including traveling expenses, hotel bills, and a separate purse for Mr. Davis, was $389.22; for other purposes, $215.83, making a total of $605.05.

FROM REV. W. J. EDWARDS' FIELD

My revival meetings are over and the following statements show some of the work being done in my field:

NEEDHAM'S GROVE

The meeting began here the first Sunday in August. Rev. J. C. Edwards, a nephew of the writer, assisted in this meeting. There were ten conversions and eleven additions to the church.

We have made some improvements on the church building. New windows have been put in and we are getting ready to paint the church. This church is ready for Conference.

PATTERSON'S GROVE

The work here is moving along nicely. The meeting closed at this place the third day of the week. On account of inclement weather I have resigned the work at Patterson's Grove and have accepted a call to New Center for the coming year.

RANDLEMAN

The meeting at Randleman was a successful one. Rev. T. J. Green assisted the pastor in this revival. Eighteen conversions and five additions to the church were the results of this meeting.

May God bless our Conference and may we all go forward in the work and accomplish great things during the coming year.

One more Conference of the Convention is to meet this year and that is the North Carolina Conference which convenes with the church at Parks' Cross Roads November 16.

Brother A. L. Allen, Franklinton, N. C., in a letter under date of October 30, makes the following encouraging statement: "After more than forty years of unbroken visits to our home, THE SUN seems brighter and more helpful."

The Woman's Missionary Society of the Burlington church had charge of the services last Sunday night and rendered an excellent program. The meeting was in memory of the late missionary, Rev. E. K. McCord. The address of the evening was made by Dr. Atkinson.

The Editor is in receipt of a history of the Southern Ohio Christian Conference, from the author, Rev. J. F. Burnett, D. D. MUSIC RECITAL AT ELON

The annual recital of the Elon College Music Faculty took place on Friday evening, November 5, in the college auditorium. This, the event of the fall term, always brings out a large crowd, and Friday was no exception, there being many visitors from the surrounding towns, and the student body turned out en masse.

The program opened with the well-known "German Dances" by Beethoven given a very scholarly reading by Mr. Betts. Miss Fisher, who has an unusually sympathetic voice of wide range was in fine voice and was at her best in the "Chanson Provencale" by Dell, Aequa.

The "Rondo Capriccioso," Mendelssohn, as played by Miss Smith left nothing to be desired, there being a lightness of touch displayed which was charming.

Mr. Alexander's full and resonant baritone voice showed to good advantage in all three numbers, the "Pilgrim's Song," Tschaikowsky being exceedingly well done.

The violin numbers, as played by Mrs. Sturm were interesting. She has a breadth of tone and a technic adequate to bring out the beauties of the compositions. She responded with the popular "Perpetual Mobile" Bohn. Miss Fisher and Mr. Alexander, whose voices blend so well, sang two duets in an artistic manner.

The program closed with the Demarest "Fantasie" for piano and organ, which brought forth a storm of applause.

GENERAL NEWS

"School Week" will be observed throughout the nation December 5-11, at which time the importance of education should be emphasized.

Warren G. Harding was fifty-five years of age November 2, 1920, the date of his election to the office of President of the United States.

Mrs. Ruth Watson, Rutherfordton, N. C., cast her ballot in the presidential election November 2, at the age of 105 years.

Terence MacSwiney, Lord Mayor of Cork, who was found guilty of sedition on August 12 and sentenced to two years' imprisonment in Brixton Prison, London, died on October 25, following a hunger strike lasting seventy-three days.

The fourth Red Cross call will be held from Armistice Day, November 11, to Thanksgiving Day, November 25. The membership dollars will be used to further the peace-time activities of the organization. One dollar entitles a person to membership one year.

In a letter from Herbert Hoover to The Literary Digest, he summarizes what the American Relief Administration has done for Europe and what still can be done. The resources will be exhausted in January and contributions are being asked toward a fund of $23,000,000.

The Northwestern District of the North Carolina Christian Endeavor Union held its annual session at Elon College November 6 and 7. Among those appearing on the program were: Mr. H. L. Scott, Dr. W. A. Harper, Field Secretary F. P. Wilson, Mrs. J. E. Pritchard, Rev. J. E. Pritchard, Rev. C. G. Lynch, Mr. J. O. Corbett, Mr. P. S. Dixon, Miss Annie Clapp, Dr. N. G. Newman, Rev. F. C. Lester and others. The sessions were forward looking and marked progress in the Christian Endeavor work in North Carolina. The 1921 session of the Convention will be held at Asheboro, N. C.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

A THANKSGIVING APPEAL

We have mailed out this week a letter to each pastor in the Southern Christian Convention and also a letter to each pastor in the North and West asking that each one make an appeal to their churches on or near Thanksgiving in behalf of the Christian Orphanage.

We have also written to each Sunday school a letter to be read to the school.

We will mail to the Secretary of each Sunday school next week envelopes for the Thanksgiving offering. We truly hope that the pastors, Sunday school superintendents and the teachers will do all in their power to get our people interested as never before in this offering as we want to raise the largest Thanksgiving offering we have ever raised in the history of the institution. If we all work together it can be done.

Talk the Thanksgiving offering. Ask your friends to join you in making the offering from your church the largest in its history. The Orphanage needs the money to meet its expenses and to help in paying for the splendid home we are erecting for the little fatherless ones.

Begin now in your church to organize for the Thanksgiving offering and lay your plans and then work as you have planned.

If some energetic person in each church would look after the offering and work up the interest, I feel sure that you would go over the top. I know two little girls who felt such an interest in the little children here a few years ago that they got a Thanksgiving envelope and worked for the offering and raised more than $15.00 for the offering. They were two little tots but they had the orphans at heart and demonstrated how much a little child can do.

If every man, woman and child, in the Church would give the value of one day's work to this cause we would be able to complete our new building and pay for same and be ready to open the doors for the admittance of children in the next few months. Could you not give just the value of one day's income out of the three hundred and sixty-five for the benefit of the little helpless children who are asking you for a home and an opportunity in life? Just the value of one day's work! More if you feel like it. Think about the value of one day's work. Make up your mind that you will do it. I feel sure you will be the happier.

"PIPE YOUR OWN SMALL BLAST"

"It will be twenty-nine years next fall since they brought me into this room and I've not been out of the room since. Quite some time to stay in one room. Well, it's a world of compensation. I haven't had to go room-hunting, and they say it's dreadful hard to get rooms now. It's a real pleasant room, isn't it? Of course it would be pleasanter if I didn't have to keep the shades drawn so low. The full light of the sun hurts my eyes and my head so I have to keep the shades drawn all the time. More compensation. The carpet doesn't fade."

She gave a whimsical little laugh, the small, pallid little woman lying on her snowy pillow with a serene look on her face. It was a face that had often been drawn with pain in all the twenty-nine years she had been lying in the little white bed, and her dark eyes had a look in them that comes only into the eyes of those who have suffered much, but her lips had been free from complaint all of these weary years. Often she had greeted her callers with a smile and a cherry word when the pain was racking her and weaker natures would have made it a burden of their talk. She never spoke of it unless one asked her if she suffered. Then she would say:

"Why, yes, I do—some; but again I am almost free from pain for three or four days at a time. I have heard of some who never knew what it was to be free from suffering."

One day when I went to see her, her dark eyes were unusually bright and her pallid face seemed radiant. She picked up a little card lying on the bed by her side and said cheerily:

"My friends are always bringing me cards and all sorts of little things. Such sweet verses as I find on some of the cards. I commit some of them to memory and say them to myself in the many hours when I am all alone here. I have learned the verses on this card and they help me to 'pipe my own small blast,' as the card says. You read them out loud for me."

I took the little card and read these lines by that sweet singer whose lute is silent and whose voice is still, Paul Laurence Dunbar:

"Just whistle a bit if the day be dark
And the sky be overcast.

If mute be the voice of the singing lark,
Why, pipe your own small blast."

"And it's wonderful how o'er the gray sky-track,
The truant warbler comes stealing back.

But why need he come? For your soul's at rest,
And the song in the heart,—ah, that is the best."

"That's it!" she said gaily as she clapped her small thin white hands together. "The song in the heart! When you have that you can truly 'pipe your own small blast' and that's what I have been doing all day. I mean to keep it up."

"I think you have always kept it up," I said.

"No, not as I mean to hereafter. I love music and sometimes a young fellow I know brings his violin and plays for me, and some girls come and sing for me now and then, and if I leave my door open I can hear when the piano is being played downstairs. It all sounds sweet and lovely, but, after all, it's the song in the heart that's best. It's a kind of divine melody isn't it? Sometimes in the dead of the night I hear it as if it were a kind of faraway melody from the land 'where all sweet measures are.' It's a kind of music that the sweetest-toned instrument ever made by human hands can't play and no lips can sing it. It has a kind of an uplift for you that no other music can have. The song in the heart! Isn't it fine and beautiful?"

I went away from the darkened room with a spirit of self-reproach that I who walked the world unfettered by disease, unhindered in my going or my coming by the things that held her close to one little darkened room, I who was free to walk daily in the sunshine amid all the summer beauty of the world and its joys mine for the asking—all this was mine and yet there were times when there was no song in my heart and none on my lips. My own small blast should be heard loud and clear in my own heart and in the hearts of thousands into which it never comes.—Jefferson L. Harbour, in Zion's Herald.

A LITTLE GIRL'S VICTORY

Two little girls were playing together. The older one had a beautiful new doll in her arms, which she was tenderly caressing.

The younger one crept up softly behind her, and gave her a sharp slap on her cheek.

A visitor, unseen and unheard, was sitting in an adjoining room and saw it all. She expected to see and hear another slap, a harder one, in retaliation. But, no; the victim's face flushed, and her eyes had a momentary flash of indignation. She rubbed her hurt cheek with one hand, while she held the doll closer with the other. Then, in a tone of gentle reproof, she said,

"Oh, Sallie, I didn't think you'd do that!"

Sallie looked ashamed, as well she might, but made no reply. "Here, Sallie," continued the elder girl, "Sit here in sister's chair. I'll let you hold dolly awhile if you'll be very careful."

Sallie's face looked just then as if there were some "coals of fire" somewhere around, but she sat down with the doll on her lap, giving her sister a glance of real appreciation, although it was mingled with shame.

The hidden looker-on was deeply touched by the scene. It was unusual, she thought, to see a mere child show such calm dignity and forgiveness under persecution. Presently she called the child and questioned her. "How can you be so patient with Sallie, my dear?"

"Oh," was the laughing reply, "I guess it's because I love Sallie so much. You see, Sallie's a dear girl," excusingly, "but she's got a quick temper, and—Sallie forgets herself sometimes. Mama said if Sallie should do any angry thing to me, and I should do angry things to her, we'd have a dreadful time, and I think we would. Mama said I should learn to give the 'soft whisper,' and I am trying to."

The lady took her in her arms and kissed her. "My little dear," she said fondly and earnestly, "I think you have already learned the lesson."

"He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city."

YESTERDAY'S TROUBLES

Teddy didn't have any heart to play that afternoon, and Flossie couldn't understand why. It took a great deal of coaxing to get at the secret, but out it came at last. "Nellie was cross when we went out to walk. She yanked my arm."

"But that was yesterday!" exclaimed Flossie, opening her eyes.

"I know it was yesterday. What difference does that make?"

Flossie thought it had made considerable difference. "I don't ever remember crossness at night", she explained, wisely. "'Cause there's always so much nicer things to remember, you know."

Which of these children was the wiser, do you think? The boy who kept himself unhappy by the remembrance of an unkindness which was twenty-four hours old, or the girl who washed the slate clean every night, as far as her troubles were concerned, and remembered only the pleasant things?—Selected.

THANKSGIVING

Once more the glad Thanksgiving season approaches and we are reminded of all the blessings and benefits of our loving Heavenly Father. There is a tenderness, a sweetness and a peculiar charm about the observance of Thanksgiving for all who catch the spirit and realize its significance. Our gratitude finds expression in the home in the sanctuary, and in the press.

With the Psalmist we exclaim, "O Lord, how manifest are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all; the earth is full of thy riches." The fruits of the fields, the wealth of vineyard and orchard, the golden grain from hillside and prairies are but expressions of our Father's bounty. We have planted and God has sent his sunshine and showers; now we are reaping and gathering in the fruits and grains which will nourish our bodies, sustain our lives and gladden our hearts. How wonderfully God has planned it all!

We of this age have unnumbered reasons for gratitude in the possession of wealth, privileges, opportunities and power such as no previous generation ever dreamed of. God is always giving. He is the source of a ceaseless stream of gifts. Into the life of every one comes unmerited blessings.

"A thousand blessings, Lord, thou dost impart, Grant us one more—a grateful heart."

Let us be thankful for the sunshine and for the shadow, for prosperity and adversity, for joys and for sorrows, for darkness and for light. Some one says, "If I were to choose one sentence to serve as an expression of my life, either in despondency or elation, I should not hesitate a moment in making the selection. I know the sentence which can make burdens lighter and joys more abiding. It is, 'Giving thanks always.'" These words have a message for the prosperous, the healthy, the well-fed no less than for the sick, the discouraged and despondent.

God cannot work in a thankless heart. Sometimes the greatest blessings of life slip away from us and are lost forever because we forget to be thankful. Are we lacking in the spirit of gratitude or have we lost it because we failed to exercise it?

We recall just here the refrain of Kipling's Recessional, "Lest we forget, lest we forget". Have we forgotten past blessings? Have we simply accepted the manifold blessings of life as commonplace? Just take them as a matter of fact and they mean little to us. Let us forget not all His benefits. We realize that we are in the midst of great turmoil and strife and possibly our greatest danger lies in our prosperity. Often have we been told that the testing time of an individual or a nation is not adversity but prosperity. There is the tendency to abuse the blessings which God has so generously bestowed upon us. Our country is facing this issue today. America is the richest nation on the globe today, though she is the youngest. Within two generations, statistics show, that our per capita wealth has increased from less than $300 to over $3,000. We have seen the aggregate national wealth grow from about eight billions to over three hundred billions. God has blessed America that she may be a blessing to the world. No individual or nation is to be a terminal for God's blessings. We are to be channels. Like Abraham of old, God blesses us that we may be a blessing.

"What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me?" In return for His benefits to me I can give him a life of grateful service. My gratitude shall express itself in some practical form of service, such as ministering to the needs of others, in giving the cup of cold water. We show our gratitude when we are feeding the hungry, clothing the poor and comforting the distressed; by giving of our time, strength, talents and substance to help carry the gospel to the ends of the earth. The women in Christian lands should be especially thankful for happy homes and devoted companions. Contrast our conditions with the degraded, suffering conditions of women in heathen lands. How thankful we should be that our lot has been cast in a Christian land where the gospel of Christ has exalted womanhood to her rightful sphere.

The women of the Christian Church are going to have the privilege of expressing their thanksgiving with a thank-offering during the month of November. From the very dawn of creation God has taught us to worship him with offerings. "Bring an offering and come into His courts", says the Psalmist. "Every one shall give as he is able according to the blessings of the Lord which he hath given thee."

As women, let us prove our gratitude in this thank-offering service by bringing a generous offering to help better conditions of degraded womanhood in non-Christian lands.

MRS. J. W. HARRELL

THANK-OFFERING SERVICE

The program for November calls for the Thank-offering service. Let every Missionary Society within the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention observe this service, and let every member of every society, both Woman's and Young People's, bring an offering to be used for the extension of God's Kingdom. Churches having no missionary societies should hold Thank-offering services that men and women, boys and girls, who are not identified with the work may bring their offerings. The needs are great. Your blessings are without number.

"Count your many blessings,
Name them one by one,
And it will surprise you
What the Lord hath done.

"Lord what wilt thou have me do?" "Now ye have consecrated yourselves, come near and bring sacrifices and thank-offerings."

MARRIAGES

MORGAN-BAXTER

On Wednesday afternoon, October 20, 1920, at three o'clock, one of the prettiest weddings of the season was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Baxter, Rosemont, Va., when their daughter, Grace Thelma, became the bride of Joseph Patrick Morgan.

The ceremony was performed by the bride's pastor, Rev. O. D. Poythress, of the South Norfolk Christian church, under an improvised arch of evergreen and roses.

The rooms were attractively decorated with palms, cut flowers and potted plants. Preceding the ceremony, Mrs. Herbert Drewry sang "I Love You Truly". The wedding music was rendered by Mrs. Travis Etheridge.

The bride wore a traveling suit of blue tricotine with hat and gloves to match, and carried a bouquet of American beauty roses. The bride received many beautiful and valuable presents, among them being a diamond brooch inlaid with pearls, a gift from the bridegroom.

Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for an extended northern tour and will be at home to friends after November 1, at Shawboro, N. C.

The bride is the beautiful and accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Baxter of Rosemont and is well known in Eastern Virginia, where she has a host of friends. The groom is a prosperous farmer, of Shawboro, N. C., where he is held in high esteem by his many friends.

May heaven's blessings rest upon this union.

OBITUARIES

HOLLOWELL

James David Hollowell, son of the late Armistead and Mary Hollowell, was born November 2, 1863 and died October 19, 1920, aged fifty-seven years, eleven months.

Brother Hollowell was sick for a very few hours. He left his grocery store at 6 o'clock P. M., leaving his son to close the store at 8 o'clock. He complained of not feeling well and retired, dying at 7:45 P. M. He was a devoted husband, a loving father and loyal member of the South Norfolk Christian church. He leaves to mourn their loss, a wife, four boys and three girls.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer. May the Lord comfort and cheer the bereaved family in this sad hour.

O. D. POYTHRESS

COTNER

Owen Cotner, aged eighty-three years, four months and three days, departed this life, October 26, 1920, at his home near Liberty. He was united in marriage to Mary Henshaw, March 17, 1861 and to them were born three daughters and five sons. His widow, one daughter, and four sons survive him.

Brother Cotner professed faith in Christ in early manhood and united with the Christian church of which church he was a member when death came.

When he was able to attend church he was especially interested in the Sunday school. People speak of him now as having been an excellent Bible class teacher.

He was a devoted husband and a loving father.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer from Pleasant Hill church and the interment was in the church cemetery.

May the dear Master bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

P. H. FLEMING

GILLIE

Mrs. Bettie A. Gillie was born October 19, 1876 and died October 27, 1920, aged forty-four years and eight days. She was married to E. B. Gillie October 18, 1893 and to this union ten children were born, eight of whom are living—three boys and five girls. A husband, four brothers and two sisters also survive her.

Sister Gillie professed faith in Christ in early life and united with Mt. Carmel Methodist Episcopal church and was a consistent member of that church until a few years ago when she transferred her membership to Happy Home Christian church where she remained a faithful member until death. She was a good woman, a devoted wife and a kind mother. Her going was a surprise and great shock to the entire community. Everything was done for her that human hands and medical skill could do, but all was in vain. God saw best to take her and some day we will understand.

Funeral services were conducted at Mt. Carmel M. E. church by the writer, in the presence of a large concourse of sorrowing friends and relatives, and interment was made in the church cemetery. May God richly bless and comfort the sorrow stricken husband and children in their deep sorrow.

MAKING FRIENDS

Unless we are capable of being true friends ourselves, it is impossible to have true friends. It is only selfish to imagine true friends should be ours when we do not make ourselves worthy of their friendship.

Just as the wayside wild flower very often exhales a rarer fragrance than the more beautiful hothouse flower, so, too, very often the little things of life cast more sweetness into it than the greater ones. A pleasant greeting; a few timely words of congratulation or sympathy; a few flowers sent to the sick or distressed, and desire to make others feel the kindly helpfulness of one's company, are the little, common, every-day things which not only gain friends, but make one truly loved. A thoughtful, refined mind is never oblivious to the feelings of others; but, on the contrary, is ever solicitous to make them happy. Such a mind is doubly repaid in its own beautiful, priceless possession.

Beautiful characters are acquired, not by life dealing more kindly with them, but in their dealing more kindly with life. There is an old saying, "Life is what we ourselves make it." If we are easily dissatisfied and always on the alert for slights, if we deem kind words valueless and cultivate haughtiness, it is not surprising that happiness should hold itself aloof from us, and that our society be neither sought for or desired.

In making friends, kind words are worth much, and they cost little. They prevent a great deal of that perverseness which censorious usage often produces in otherwise generous mind. Goethe says, "Kindness is the golden chain by which society is bound together," and Lamartine tells us, "Kindness is virtue itself."

True friendship is born from true character. He or she who is true to self is true to everybody. Those who prove themselves to be always loyal, always true, frank and upright toward us, yet kind—not afraid to compliment us and not afraid to reprove us for our own good—are what Alcott beautifully terms them, "The leaders of the bosom, being more ourselves than we are, and the compliment of our affections in theirs."

Love is the synonym for God, and friendship is so closely akin to it that love clothes it in its own beauty. If we were more earnest in exercising the true spirit of religion, true friendship would not be such a rare thing, and the world would be made the brighter and truer.—Julia Theresa Butler.

A LIFE OF PRAYER

From Bethlehem to Calvary, the Savior's journey lay;
Doubt, unbelief, scorn, fear, and hate beset him day by day,
But in his heart he bore God's love that brightened all the way.

From Bethlehem to Calvary the world still follows on Even as the halt and blind of old along his path were drawn;
Through Calvary's clouds they seek the light that led him to the dawn.

BY HEART AND HAND

A prayer without a deed is an arrow without a bowstring;
A deed without a prayer is a bowstring without an arrow.
The heart of man should be like a quiver full of arrows,
And the hand of man should be like a strong bow strung for action.
The heart of man should keep his arrows ever ascending,
And the hand and mind of a man should keep at a work unending.

THE RIVER

The beautiful blue river flows quietly along,

So playful and so gentle, although it is so strong!

And as it flows it murmurs this kind and happy song:

"Come, little boats—I'll float you wherever you would go;

Come, stately ships—I'll bear you so lightly to and fro;

Come, all who need my helping—'tis joy to help, you know!"

O fair and gracious river, flow on, with gentle might,

Unresting and unwearied, through sunshine and through night—

Your sweet and generous spirit makes all your burdens light!

A Higher Power Insures The World

(The Orphans' Friend And Masonic Journal)

A LONG comes a good soul every now and then to deplore the loss of something they had in the good old days. A nervous, irritable, somewhat selfish world, contrasts unfavorably with serene, more settled recollections of the past. Livers in the past fear that the world is rushing to destruction. Facts, however, do not bear them out. The world is menaced from every direction. There is a high carnival of selfishness, but deeper down the good is here. The few showed up to fine advantage in days ago, but how about the many? When you take society as a whole, the advantage lies with the present. There may be plenty of rascality and evil, but the average man is better than he ever was. The lowest stratum of society is vastly improved. Education and culture are prevailing all ranks, whereas formerly the world was populated by a few rich and cultured and hosts of ignorant, ambitionless, unthinking carriers and fetchers. What we deplore in the present is merely a mile-stone of progress. Out of the chaos will come a stability. No human agency or diabolic influence can stay the power of progress. The world must pay for its meanness and criminal ignorance, but it learns and improves as it pays the penalties.

EDITORIAL

THE CHURCH'S MAJOR GENERAL

This is a day of big things for the Church. The King's business is big and mighty and has ever been demanding a program of the first magnitude, though not till in recent years have leaders fully comprehended the greatness of the work.

Likewise the Sunday school, a counter-part of the church, is coming into its own and striving to meet the demand upon it. The Sunday school superintendent is finding his rightful place in the big program of church work. The wide-awake superintendent has already found that his part is not to call the school together, dismiss it, etc., but to think ahead of the school, plan and pray for it. The Sunday school superintendent is the Major General, and that means that his position is not an easy one, but a place where duty is found and must be met.

THE WINTER EVENINGS

The winter evenings are here. The fire glows and again we are hovered around the fireside—a good place for the family to get together. But how will these evenings be spent? In talking or in reading? It would be pathetic and unwise to spend all the time in either way. The average family is not gathered together often enough. Sometimes we know a friend better than we do a brother, who is more than a friend. We need to talk over the joys and sorrows of life; we need to mingle together that family ties may be strengthened and friendship cemented; we need to know each other and to love each other more. There is no better place to accomplish these things than around the fireside of the home.

But is this all? May it not so be. A part of the long winter evenings should be spent in reading. Reading to ourselves and reading aloud to other members of the family. Form a little reading circle around your fireside and see that it is carried out. It can be regulated not so much by any form of compulsion as from a standpoint of love for reading and what is obtained by reading. These are only suggestions, but mediums to avenues for self-education, information, inspiration, social, and moral uplift.

THE END OF THE BENCH

Did you ever take note how we act in church sometimes? Did you ever see a fellow take a seat on the end of the bench when he was the only person on it? What do you suppose that he (or she) could be thinking about? Do you suppose that such a person thought that the audience would be so small that each person present would have a whole pew to himself, or to herself? That must be it.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, retiring President of the Eastern Virginia Conference, remarked in the last session of that body that he had been trying to invent a church pew so that everybody could get a seat on the end. A good invention; here is hoping him success in the venture.

After all is it not for the lack of little thinking that we do these silly things? That is about it. Just think a little and remember how inconvenient it was for you sometime when you had to push your way into a vacant spot in the middle of the pew because some fellow had the place next to the aisle and refused to move. Let us be courteous in the house of God, add dignity to the occasion, and make everything just as delightful as possible. All together.

NO ABIDING PLACE

This office, a few days ago, received an article from a very intelligent family of the Christian Church, but that article was addressed to Greensboro, N. C., once the seat of publication of THE SUN. The postmaster at Greensboro forwarded the letter to Elon College, and then it was forwarded to Burlington. Of course the writer of the article was looking for its appearance in print by the time it finally reached this office. Some information about the place of publication, you say. Sure! Here is one that beats that: Sometime ago a subscriber mailed his check to Raleigh, N. C., and of course the letter had to go its usual route to get to us. Ignorance you say. Not so much so as a fault of the Church in not coming together with a plan and program big enough to establish THE SUN that it may have a regular abiding place. We have moved all too many times. How long will the investments of THE SUN be so small that it will have no abiding place? How long?

The College, the Orphanage, missions, and in fact every department of the Church, are all coming into their established ways. The next in line is THE SUN.

A SUGGESTION

The recent session of the Eastern Virginia Conference revealed a suggestion that should, we feel, be passed along to the Church for consideration. That Conference had a centennial session and the history was interesting and worthy of a place in the annals of the State and Church. The Conference was asked to place the accumulated information in permanent form. Other Conferences have similar history and it would be from a standpoint of economy for the Conferences to combine on a history rather than for one Conference at a time to undertake such a step. That splendid historian, Bro. W. E. McClenny, Suffolk, Virginia, pointed out to us months ago that the time had arrived, he thought, when a history of the Southern Convention should be written. A good suggestion, and with a little more work the whole territory can be included, thus placing emphasis upon all the work in this part of the denomination rather than to emphasize certain parts, regardless of the outstanding features of those parts. Why not a history of the Southern Christian Convention?

TEACHING THE GOVERNMENT AND PRINCIPLES OF THE CHURCH

Dr. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Virginia, has suggested that a good way to teach the Government and Principles of the Church is to have them printed on a small strip of paper and pasted in the Christian hymnal, and substitute them occasionally for the selected devotional reading. A good suggestion and one that is practical and easily carried out. All too many of us are wholly ignorant of what the great principles of the Church mean and stand for in the religious world. There should be a renewed interest in knowing the Government and Principles of the Church. The Conferences enjoin us to read and know them, but so far we have seen no practical suggestion as to how best to get the people to carry out these resolves. Dr. Smith's plan may not be the solution in getting the whole membership of the Church to review the declarations of the denomination, but is a step in the right direction and we trust will be heeded by many.

A CORRECTION—A REGRETFUL OMISSION

The Editor's brief sketch of the Eastern Virginia Conference given in last week's CHRISTIAN SUN had to be written hurriedly and there was no time for special review after the article was prepared. In looking over the paper after it came from the press, we found that we had omitted mention of Dr. Barrett's splendid exposition of the name "Christian" at the centennial session of the Conference. We desire to say here what came into our mind at the time that it was being delivered: That it was one of the finest treatments of the subject that we had ever heard. We regret the oversight. However, Dr. Barrett having had twenty-four years' editorial experience behind him, knows as few other men, how things of this nature occur, and how they to forgive.

The message referred to was ordered published in THE SUN, if memory serves us correctly, and we hope that Dr. Barrett will soon forward us the manuscript.

DR. J. W. HARRELL TO LEAVE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Rev. J. W. Harrell, D. D., who has been pastor of the Burlington Christian church for the past four years, closed his work with that congregation on last Sunday. It has been understood by THE SUN for sometime that Dr. Harrell would close his work with this church on November 15, but we have withheld announcement until this time. The Burlington church has done a great work under Dr. Harrell's administration. The handsome new building has been erected, 115 new members received, and all departments of the church greatly enlarged. Dr. Harrell leaves the work with a good record behind him and with best wishes of his many friends.

Dr. Harrell not only leaves the Burlington congregation, but severs his connection with the denomination and will this week transfer his membership to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, joining the North Carolina Conference of that denomination in session at Rocky Mount, N. C., this week. THE SUN records with sincere regret Dr. Harrell's withdrawal from the Christian Church. He has held some of the largest pastorates of the denomination and his going will be our loss. His membership in the Methodist Church will be an addition to that body. Our best wishes go with him.

The North Carolina Conference is in session at Parks' Cross Roads, Randolph County, this week.

Churches desiring offering envelopes will find detailed price list on page 16 of this issue.

Rev. E. C. Fry, one of our missionaries on furlough, will preach at the Burlington church next Sunday morning.

The Woman's Missionary Board of the North Carolina Conference, was in session at Durham, N. C., November 13 and 14. Full report next week.

Mr. A. L. Davis, acting vice-president of the First National Bank, Burlington, N. C., died on Sunday, November 14. Mr. Davis was one of the foremost business men of Burlington, and a leading layman in the Methodist church of this city.

Borrowed Editorials

Let the Boys Sing

Methodism seems to have omitted the boy from the musical possibilities of the Church. A correspondent to the Methodist Recorder wonders why. "Nothing matches the exquisite timber of a boy's voice. Women always sound wooden and heavy beside them, but far more important is the effect upon the boys. Get the impress and the atmosphere of the Church into the minds of two dozen youngsters, and you get twenty-four small missionaries in the homes." The idea is worthy of our consideration, but the man with the music in him, plus the patience necessary for the task, is hard to find.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

Giving

To give is as spiritual a thing as to pray. Of course, everything depends upon what is in the heart. A prayer which is merely an unrealized form of words has no religious value, nor has a gift which is given merely for the purpose of display or because it is the fashionable or popular thing to do. But giving which is prompted by feelings of loyalty, of gratitude, of love is acceptable to God and a means of grace to the giver. God values our gifts not for themselves, but as an expression of our love. It is ourselves he cares about, not our possessions. And in our relation to those whom we seek to bring to God that fact must always be remembered.—Christian Observer.

Good Citizenship Means Service

Salutary results are sure to accrue to the boy or girl who at school and at home has held before him the ideal of service as that which should dominate his life, and who is accustomed to perform everyday tasks of service. This is the best possible training for Citizenship. In too much school and home training stress has been laid upon the importance of successful acquisition rather than upon that of using the fruits of acquisition for the benefit of others. Boys and girls are learning through this means to be more thoughtful, kind, and generous. They are learning also to deal directly with the problems and needs of life.—Acton (Canada) Free Press.

Alone

While the Master was often in the crowds he was often alone. We read that he went up into the mountain to pray, and "he was there alone." Sometimes life is so driving that the thoughtful man longs to be alone. On the other hand there are plenty of ideals in life for which, if we struggle, toil, and sacrifice for sufficiently, people will leave us alone. But it is worth while to have some ideals of sufficient merit with which one can afford to be often alone. They are always seeking the crowd. It makes little difference what calls the crowd together—some silly show, a dog fight or degrading pugilistic encounter. Just to be in the crowd in order to be away from one's self seems to be a desire which is almost epidemic at the present time. We would not belittle the social instinct. It has its place and should be carefully used, but he who can wisely use the social hour must be one who is sometimes alone. Every one needs the quiet hour to think. The Master was alone in the preparation for the greatest crisis in his life. He went apart from his most intimate disciples. He was alone in prayer.—California Christian Advocate.

Why Worry?

Two brothers had quarreled over their father's estate, and one of them brought his trouble to Jesus. Instead of attempting to settle the question at issue Jesus warned him of the danger of covetousness and told him a story of a rich man who thought he could feed his soul on corn. He was trying to save this man and others who had gathered round from excessive greed for perishing things. But Jesus was too wise a teacher to leave the matter there. He made it plain that he recognized the urgency of their material needs, but he also emphasized the fact that an all-loving and all-wise God could be trusted to satisfy these needs. In the ceaseless struggle for food and clothes and shelter we worry and fret, but Jesus declared that there is no ground for fear or apprehension.—Watchman-Examiner.

Negroes in the North

The immigration of the negroes to the North during the last five years has created a grave problem in many cities. In New York the negro population has grown to 280,000—the largest number of negroes in any city of the world. Only 80,000 of this number are connected with and Church. The Congregationalists of Brooklyn are trying to assist in the solution of this problem. They propose to erect a great church or community center which will cover an entire block. One feature will be an auditorium for worship. They hope to make provision for 6,000 worshippers. The work will be in a district of 60,000 negroes. A highly trained staff of executives and directors will be assisted by young business men. It will be one of the most comprehensive attempts yet made to assist the negro people.—United Presbyterian

Joy in Human Service

A professor in Northwestern University, in the mood of Prof. George H. Palmer's famous remark, said recently: "I feel almost ashamed to take my salary, for the joy of my work seems reward enough." "It must be that you flunk the poor students right and left, suggested a rather cynical business man in reply. He did not understand a point of view which refuses to consider the rewards of toil in terms of dollars. More than one minister has left his pulpit for business. Successful in making money, he finds himself longing for his pulpit again. Not often has such a man been able to come back, for preaching is like piano-playing, it can be kept only by constant practice. A Y. M. C. A. man spends a year in business and finds he can succeed, but he is incurably unhappy. The role of an occasional worker at religion does not satisfy him. He gives up everything and goes back to the "Y" work, even though it takes him to a distant state. With only one life to live, any man defrauds himself who does not do the thing which God intended him to do.—Christian Century.

The Saddest Waste of All

We look with pitying eye and heart moved with sympathy on men who are paying the penalty for having broken the law of sobriety, friendship, health, and integrity; but what shall we say of those who are wasting their substance of opportunity to make peace with God and their own souls by obeying the gospel and who, refusing his offers of mercy, are hastening on toward eternal night? And what shall you say of yourself, of, knowing your duty and aware of your privilege to obey Christ, you refuse to use it? You must say something like Oscar Wilde wrote in his prison book, "De Profundis": "I must say to myself that I ruined myself . . . I became the spendthrift of my own genius, and to waste an eternal youth gave me a curious joy." Such a testimony is indeed unworthy of any man's emulation. My heart reverts to another prodigal. I hear him cry: "I have played the fool. I have wasted my father's money; I have lost a golden opportunity; I have misspent precious hours; I have brought on poverty and degradation; but even now there is bread enough and to spare. I shall go to my father's house."—Gospel Advocate.

Seek Them Not!

There are no things in this life of great enough value to tempt a man who knows God's program. The word of Jehovah which came to Baruch, the scribe of Jeremiah, in a time of discouragement is a word of vital import for the servants of God today: "And seekest thou great things for thyself? seek them not." Then God gives the reason for the folly of seeking for great things in this world: "For, behold, I will bring evil upon all flesh, saith Jehovah." Baruch had written and read the prophecies of Jeremiah predicting utter ruin upon the land, for the judgment of God was soon to fall. Then the Lord adds for Baruch the same promise he had previously given to Jeremiah (Jer. xxxix. 18) as a reward for the prophet's trust in him during the dread days of judgment: "But thy life will I give thee for a prey in all places whither thou goest" (Jer. xlv. 5). So today we may take joyfully the spoiling of our possessions, "knowing that ye have for yourselves a better possession and an abiding one" (Heb. x. 34). With our eyes on the eternal and priceless inheritance reserved for us, we may be saved from the lure of seeking great things for ourselves, as the world counts greatness.—Sunday School Times.

LIGHTHOUSE OBSERVATIONS

J. E. MASSEY

AFTER THE ELECTION

Election time is over; Warren G. Harding is to be or next President. A comparative calmness reigns, while the United States faces another four years in the trust of the leaders which she has chosen to conduct the affairs of state. Sharp party criticisms and political hobgoblins become things of the past, so far as the mass of working and straight-forward Americans are concerned. In a time like ours, very little is gained by looking backward, except that it be for something constructive for the future. With such an unprecedented majority, unquestionably the people's opinions have been expressed as near as it is possible under the present method by vote. Our efforts now should be to help make our leaders more competent and worthy in performing their task than any we have ever had, for the governing of the nation has become a bigger and bigger task, and the gravity of present problems of reconstruction cannot be over-estimated.

Many people were no doubt disappointed in not having Governor Cox elected, in hopes of getting the League of Nations. The League, unfortunately seemed to be the main issue stressed by the two candidates of the two parties. Really, it should have been a national, rather than a party issue, if we think in terms of ultimate purpose; for both parties expressed the need of a national court or tribunal. The international idea cannot die. If it is not carried out in one way, the forces for the idea will resort to, or have it expressed in another. The United States will not and cannot live alone, with so much of the world depending on her cooperation both in means and in spirit. Every citizen has before him or her the solemn but hopeful task now of helping to make the Nation a constructive rather than a destructive force for civilization.

ISLAM TURNING TOWARD CHRISTIANITY

"Moslems are welcoming the gospel of Christianity", says Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer in his writings from Cairo to The Intelligencer. He says that the political unrest in the Near East is not due so much to political reasons as it is to "a deep religious dissatisfaction." The war has served as a kind of uncovering of their state of mind, and has shown Moslems that Allah is no longer fighting for Islam as he once did. Consequently there has been a tendency to know more about Christianity. Moslem scholars are making critical studies of the two leaders—Christ and Mohammed, and from their commentaries it can be seen that Christ is gaining their favor more and more. "Officially, the Moslem creed still denies the atoning death of our Savior", says Dr. Zwemer, but the Moslem's attitude has changed. Where once the Christian wayfarer endangered his life by proclaiming his Christ, he can now maintain the friendship and good will of those who were formerly his antagonists. Their standards of life are undergoing a change. Slavery has gone, and the veil is going, and polygamy is impossible under the new conditions. Dr. Zwemer believes that the people are ripe for friendship and a message of hope from the Christian world. The opportunity must be seized while it is at hand.

CAN LEPROSY BE CURED?

Molokai, the island leper colony in Hawaii, is no longer the "valley of the shadow of death," inasmuch as the lepers are concerned. The success of the treatment of leprosy with caulmoogra-oil has produced a different attitude toward this, the most dreaded of all diseases. Inhabitants of this little island are thrilled with the news that a probable cure has been discovered.

"Through the efforts of Honolulu physicians," says the Star Bulletin, "the University of Hawaii and the local scientific investigators, these men and women have been pronounced cured." They are in every way apparently well, and no one can gainsay that they are not actually well from the disease. Dr. Dean, president of the University and one of the principal discoverers of the medicine which has brought about a cure is reluctant in saying that the accomplishment is final. He believes that it will take several more years to determine whether the lepers are completely rid of such a deep-rooted and tenacious disease, but so far as the feelings and activity of the patients who enter into the cure, their leprosy has vanished. The experiment of the Honolulu doctors has been a means of getting leprosy under control, at least, if not of final cure.

BIBLE PRINTED IN NEWSPAPER

One of the striking features of The Herald, Washington, D. C., is that it prints a chapter of the Bible every day. This is not done as a paid advertisement, as in some parts of the country, but as an element in the editorial policy. The managing editor of this paper has brought out the gospel of St. Matthew printed in modern style for the usage of the readers who cannot get on well with the archaic make-up which still characterizes the printing of the Bible in bound volumes.

ENGLISH GOOD-WILL IN MAYFLOWER CELEBRATION

English celebrations of the tercentenary of the sailing of the Mayflower has been a surprising proof of the good-will of that country toward us. It has even surpassed anything that we have so far done in the way of celebrating the event. In spite of the tangling interference in the Irish question on the part of some Americans, there is a wide-spread feeling in the English that the future peace of the world depends on Anglo-Saxon good-will. To this end of establishing a more cordial relation between the two great powers, Great Britain and the United States, the English are trying to do their part. Historical questions and events that were once too embarrassing to be discussed, are now seen from a sense of unselfish pride by the two people.

DEVOTIONAL

LOOKING UPWARD

"I will look unto the hills whence cometh my strength" says the King James authorized version in translating the 121st Psalm. There is a tradition that the hills produce strong and virile manhood and womanhood. The idea was prevalent in Judea, and Jerusalem was chosen as the seat of the Jewish government because of its situation among the hills which afforded natural protection and safety from ready invasion. It was very natural that the Psalmist King should look out to the hills and consider their place in his country's strength.

But David was a keen-visioned man and it is a pity that the translators missed the real heart of his utterance in this psalm. The proper translation here is: "I will look unto the hills", the hills in their majesty towering over the plain, affording security to any nation, great hills, friendly hills. As the Psalmist King thus viewed the landscape he fell into a meditative mood and asked himself the question: "Whence cometh my strength?" This point is wholly missed in the authorized version, which makes him say that his strength comes from the hills. "Whence cometh my strength?" he inquires. Whence? From these hills, stretching out in majestic mass before me? "Nay, not so," we hear him declare, "my strength cometh from the Lord." With this sentiment of the Psalmist we most heartily agree. Our strength cometh from the Lord. We must look to Him, we must look up to Him.

And yet—and yet, our upward look is conditioned on our attitude to our brother men. Our spiritual vision can ascend no higher upon the perpendicular, that is, toward God, than it goes out on the horizontal, that is, toward our brother men. If we do not love our brother men whom we have seen, how can we love God whom we have not seen?

What is religion anyway? Is it a personal relation between God and the individual human soul? Is it completely to be comprehended by looking up to God and being conscious of His presence and of His love for us? There are those who think so. The Church for a long time thought so. According to this view, religion is a sort of paid-up life insurance policy, a sort of through ticket to Heaven with pullman and dining car privileges all arranged in advance, a sort of fire escape to keep the believer out of Hell. This view of religion fixes its eyes on the measureless worth of the soul. "What is a man profited," it asks, "if he gains the whole world and loses his soul?" Jesus taught the value of the soul. The defect in this view is that it forgets that there are other souls just as valuable as my soul and just as dear to Jesus.

The personal view of religion is not satisfying. Religion is more than a personal relation of the individual soul to God. It is this, but it is more. It must, to be pure and undefiled before God the Father, include our relation too to our brothermen. Religion is not represented by the perpendicular line extending straight up from my soul to God. It is triangular, extending from my soul to God, from my soul to my brothermen, from them to God. Along the sides of this triangle the saving influences of the spiritual life may safely travel.

Religion is unselfishness, I mean of course the Christian religion. It is love, a social passion, or it is nothing. Any attempt to approach God in isolation is futile. Jesus came not to save me, but to save me as the means of saving someone else. We cannot enjoy our religion alone. Any attempt to use it for self alone will result in its dissipation and loss. It is a passport to service. It is an admission to the forest of life, where trees are to be felled, roads constructed, farms laid out, homes erected, and work of the Kingdom progressively and devotedly undertaken.

It is more than good Samaritanism—good as that was. It will aid the men fallen among thieves. But it will also punish thieves, aiming to win the thieves so punished to right relations with their brothermen. The religious man will recognize his brotherhood with the thieves and outcasts of society. What right have we to punish evil doers any way? Not because they deserve punishment. "Vengeance is mine. I will repay saith the Lord." What right then have we to punish evil doers? That we may win them to brotherhood's standards again. Reformation, not vengeance is the only ground for courts, juries, jails, and penitentiaries. Our brothers in bonds are our brothers still and we owe them the ministry of reclamation of reconciliation, of love.

But our subject is "looking upward." Let us resolve to do it in the only way we can—by looking out toward our brothermen while we look up toward God.

HOW TO BECOME A CHRISTIAN

Accept Christ as your Savior from sin, and publicly confess him as such by joining the Church of your choice. Begin the Christian life in a humble way, as the child begins with the alphabet at school. Don't look for marvels. Don't ask for raptures, but trust expectantly for power to live in a way to please God. Believe that the Spirit of Christ will come into your heart and cause you to love God, and make you want to do his will; not because you may feel happy, but because you are definitely trusting him to do what he has promised to do.

If you confess and forsake your sins, and ask forgiveness, he says that even though they may be as scarlet he will blot them out, and remember them against you no more forever. Believe it, and accept salvation as God's free gift. He says he will enable you to live as a child of God should. Believe him and undertake it. He says he will help you to bear your troubles. Trust him and try him. He says he will give you strength for every duty; power to resist temptation, and grace sufficient for every day. Take him at his word and you will soon know for yourself how blessed it is to trust and obey.—Elijah P. Brown, in Epworth Herald

FOREIGN MISSION BOARD MINUTES

(Special Meeting, August 4 and 5, 1920)

The Mission Board met in special session August 4 and 5, 1920. All members were present as follows: Foreign Mission Secretary, W. P. Minton, Dayton, Ohio; Rev. W. H. Denison, Dayton, Ohio; Mrs. M. T. Morrill, Defiance, Ohio; Rev. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Va.; Mr. J. O. Winters, Greenville, Ohio; and Rev. W. P. Fletcher, Toronto, Canada. Also Rev. C. P. Garman, Missionary to Japan; Rev. J. G. Bishop, Dayton, Ohio, and Rev. W. J. Hall, Dayton, Ohio.

The following actions after careful consideration by the full Board were adopted:

That because of the acute situation just at present in Japan resulting in an alarming increase in the cost of living, and since practically every other board operating there has had to do likewise, a straight year end grant of $500.00 be made each missionary family in Japan and $240.00 to Miss Stacy for the year 1920, with the understanding that a new permanent salary schedule shall be arranged following the visit of the Foreign Mission Secretary to the field. The $500.00 grant is understood to include special grants of $100.00 to Mr. McKnight and $300.00 to Mr. Garman already made.

That the allowance for children of missionaries in Japan be increased by $50.00 for each child retroactive to July 1, 1920; that is $25.00 for each child for the balance of 1920.

That Dr. L. E. Smith and the Foreign Mission Secretary were constituted a committee to report at a later meeting on the status of our work in Porto Rico, especially covering the salary question and the program of work.

That the request of the Japan Mission that the medical bills of the Garman family in America be paid by the Foreign Mission Department extra to the Japan Appropriation be acceded to and that the Foreign Mission Department also assume the expense for special care of Phillips Garman in the sum of $120.00 per year and rent for the family not to exceed $50.00 per month. This is with the understanding that Mrs. Garman is to send monthly statements to the Foreign Mission Office covering the item of medical expense and rental.

That the five year program outlined by the Japan Mission and presented at the last October meeting was again discussed and a communication from the Japan Mission to the Christian Church in America with an especial appeal to the Southern Christian Convention was read.

That the message of the Japan Mission be received and offered to our Church papers for publication and that a committee of three be appointed to meet with the members of the Foreign Mission Committee of the Southern Christian Convention to confer as to an enlarged missionary program for the Christian Church; said Committee to be L. E. Smith, W. H. Denison and J. O. Winters.

That a lengthy report by the Committee on the Most Profitable Use of the Missionary's Furlough, under the Board of Missionary Preparation, was read dealing particularly with the plan to make use of the new missionary's first furlough as the time to give him the special training needed for his life work. The report was endorsed and the Secretary instructed to notify the Board of Missionary Preparation and the Japan and Porto Rico Missions of the action.

That it be the policy of this Board where missionaries desire special college help during their furlough the Board will make special provision for such cases.

That during the absence of the Foreign Mission Secretary the president of the Woman's Foreign Mission Board be requested to arrange the deputation work of the missionaries on furlough.

That Mr. Garman's furlough be set for 1921 with the understanding that he do some school work while on furlough.

That the additional $100.00 for the School for Foreign Children in Japan be granted.

That Dr. M. T. Morrill be asked to find from other Boards what policy they follow in regard to families of missionaries who die in the service.

That the Foreign Mission Department stands ready to pay its share of the underwritings of the American Christian Convention to the Interchurch World Movement and authorizes the payment of the same when notified by the Convention Secretary.

That we express our pleasure that our Foreign Mission Secretary has completed his college course and is now giving his whole time to the duties of his office. We congratulate him on the splendid way in which he has taken hold of the Foreign Mission Secretaryship under the difficult circumstances occasioned by the sudden death of the Acting Secretary, Dr. E. K. McCord. As he is now about to leave for an official visit to our Japan field we wish him Godspeed and hope that the visit will be very helpful to the work there and a splendid guide to the whole Board in preparing for our enlarged program of mission work.

That we express our gratification of the splendid response of our people to the Forward Movement Program, where the appeal has been made and that we call upon every member of the Church at large, who has not already subscribed, to subscribe liberally in view of the enlarged expense which our future program necessarily demands.

W. P. MINTON, Secretary

REGULAR ANNUAL MEETING, OCTOBER 19-21, 1920

All members of the Board were present except Foreign Mission Secretary, W. P. Minton, who is in Japan making a thorough study of our Japan work and needs. Rev. E. C. Fry, missionary to Japan, home on furlough; Rev. D. P. Barrett, missionary to Porto Rico, home on furlough; Rev. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary of the Southern Christian Convention, and Prof. W. P. Lawrence of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention were present at the Board Meeting. Many other brethren sat with the Board from time to time in its deliberations. All matters coming before the Board were carefully considered but final action on a number of matters had to be deferred until the return of Secretary Minton from his study of the field in Japan.

The following actions were taken:

The minutes of the Mission Council and of the special August session were read and adopted. Rev. W. P. Fletcher was elected Secretary pro tem.

Dr. L. E. Smith reported for the committee appointed to interview the Foreign Mission Committee of the Southern Christian Convention as follows:

Your Committee, Dr. W. H. Denison, Mr. J. O. Winters, and L. E. Smith met with the Mission Board of the Southern Convention in annual session at Suffolk, Va., September 15, 1920, and laid before the Board the request of the American Christian Convention for co-operation in a larger program of missionary endeavor. In response to the request the Southern Board appointed Dr. J. O. Atkinson and Prof. W. P. Lawrence as a committee to present to the American Christian Convention Mission Board in person their reply to the request.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson and Prof. W. P. Lawrence were heard in behalf of the Foreign Mission Committee of the Southern Christian Convention. They presented the following resolution:

That the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention believes that the best interests of the Kingdom would be served by the opening of a new mission in China, and that the responsibility of caring for and fostering such mission be laid upon the Southern Convention; this work to be done nominally through the American Christian Convention Mission Board. The Southern Christian Convention Mission Board, therefore, requests the American Christian Convention Mission Board to lay this proposal as a challenge of the Kingdom upon the Southern Christian Convention.

After thorough discussion the resolution was unanimously adopted, and it was voted that W. P. Lawrence and J. O. Atkinson attend the next regular meeting of the American Christian Convention Board at Dayton, Ohio, and lay this matter before said Board.

In regard to the request presented by Prof. W. P. Lawrence and Dr. J. O. Atkinson, the following action was taken:

That we express our great appreciation of the most splendid work that is being prosecuted by our Southern Convention and that we recognize the unusual missionary zeal and liberality in men and money demonstrated by our brethren of the South, and that we further commend them in their determined desire to undertake a work carrying with it tremendous responsibilities.

That we receive the request from our Southern Board presented by their Committee and assure them of our sympathetic attitude toward their desired program.

That we regret the absence of our Secretary, Rev. W. P. Minton, which, according to his request before leaving for Japan, prevents any definite action at this time.

Pending the return of our Secretary from an extensive survey of the Japan field, we ask that a joint committee of two from each Board, and in addition thereto, W. P. Minton and J. O. Atkinson, make an exhaustive investigation, assembling all facts as to cost and possibilities in beginning an adequate educational work in our present Japan field and in the proposed Province in China, and that when the facts are assembled the joint committee bring these facts before the American Christian Convention Mission Board to determine the course of procedure at which time the Southern Board be asked to attend.

That we assure our Southern Convention that they shall have a task that will challenge the best that there is in them.

Upon motion Drs. Denison and Smith were appointed our representatives in addition to Rev. W. P. Minton on above mentioned investigating committee.

Miss Williams' and Mr. Martin's reports of their work in Porto Rico were presented and Mr. Barrett was present in person and read his report and answered many questions. Upon motion it was decided that the furlough of Rev. D. P. Barrett and family be extended to February 1, and that in the meantime he be asked to spend his time in deputation work, in whatever school work he may be able to do.

Upon motion it was resolved that it be the policy of this Board that in fixing salaries or making other appropriations in which any missionary personally shares, the Board shall take such action with the missionary affected thereby absent.

That $200 a year be granted to each child of a Porto Rican missionary sent to America for schooling and that this action be retroactive to October 1, 1920. That a bonus of $400 be granted to Rev. D. P. Barrett for the calendar year ending December 31, 1920, $300 to Rev. W. H. Martin and $150 to Miss Olive G. Williams.

Rev. D. P. Barrett was heard in regard to the askings of the Porto Rico Mission and his suggestions were attached thereto. Then upon motion it was decided to defer making appropriations until a special meeting of the Department, to be called as soon as practicable upon the return of Rev. W. P. Minton from Japan.

Upon motion the following special appropriations were made:

Committee of Reference and Counsel	$78.75
Committee on Cooperation in Latin America	250.00
Headquarters Building	45.00

Dr. M. T. Morrill reported, as per our request at our special meeting, as to the policy of other boards in regard to families of missionaries who die in the service. He finds that there is no general policy but that each case was settled upon its merits.

Upon motion it was decided to make the following appropriations for Mrs. McCord: $720.00 for the year and $200.00 for Gladys, the same to be paid monthly.

Reports were read from Dr. A. D. Wodworth, Rev. E. C. Fry, Mrs. E. C. Fry, Miss Martha R. Stacy and Rev. C. P. Gaman.

Upon motion it was decided that the Bartlett Legacy of $500.00 be given toward the purchase of a combined church and parsonage at Tsukidate, Japan.

It was decided to ask the chairman of the Foreign Mission Department to write to Mrs. W. H. Martin, Christian greetings and to express to her our gladness in hearing that she has already begun to improve in health and that soon she may be able to rejoin her husband in the work dear to her and him.

The following officers were elected:

Chairman,	Rev. W. H. Denison, D. D.
Secretary	Rev. W. P. Minton.
Treasurer,	Rev. O. S. Thomas, D. D.

Mission Council:

W. H. Denison,	W. P. Minton,	J. O. Winters.
W. P. FLETCHER, Secretary Pro Tem.

ACTIONS OF THE HOME MISSION DEPARTMENT

The Home Mission Board for the coming year has a greater opportunity for aiding churches than it has ever had before, because of the much larger income as a result of the Forward Movement. At this meeting the following churches were given aid: Bangor, Maine; Vanderveer Park, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Church of the Evangel, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Crown Point, Dayton, Ohio; Lynn, Mass.; Muncie, Ind.; New York Eastern Conference, Olney, Ill.; Church and Parsonage, Toronto, Canada; Washington; Wyoming; Albany, Mo.; Palmer College Ministers' School; Danville, Ill.; Urbana, Ill.; Community Center, Haverhill, Mass.; Lima, Ohio; Defiance, Ohio; Shiloh Springs, Dayton, Ohio.

Because of the $25,000.00 received from the Forward Movement it was decided to enter upon some forward steps by this department. There has been a desire on the part of the Home Mission Board to do some demonstration work, especially as to the possibilities of institutional church work in certain centers. The way open to take up a proposition of this kind is found in the church at Urbana, Illinois, where is located one of the largest universities in the United States. The church at Urbana has been planning for some time to build a community house in connection with its church building, in which the plan is to serve the social needs of the community as well as the religious educational needs. There are constantly a great many students in the university from sections of the state where our churches are located, and these students can be used by the pastor of the church in a great many ways along religious educational lines social lines and the work of physical culture. Therefore, the Home Mission Board is cooperating with a large appropriation in aiding this building.

Another demonstration work is to be put on in Haverhill, Massachusetts, in the work among foreigners there. An appropriation was made to aid in remodeling the church building for the institutional work of free clinics and a moving picture apparatus, which has already been donated by the Federation of Churches of the City of Haverhill. Miss Frieda Kirkendall of Huntington, Indiana, a graduate of Defiance College, and a volunteer for Home Mission work has received and accepted a call to become an assistant to Rev. Carlton Easton in the work there. Miss Kirkendall will very probably have charge of the religious educational work for foreigners, and will do a great deal of home building demonstration.

The Forward Movement funds are to be used also in the work of Church Extension. It is planned that during the campaign $50,000.00 shall be set aside for a Church Extension Fund to be loaned to new church projects to aid in building

It is also planned by the Home Mission Board that where churches need parsonages and financial assistance in building them, that the Board offer to loan one-third of the purchase price or the cost price of the parsonage at a rate of three per cent interest payable within five years or less. These loans are to be made at the discretion of the Home Mission Council. The amount to be loaned has been limited for the first year.

Field men are to be partially supported by the Home Mission Board in Maine, Ontario Conference and the Western Christian Convention. The secretary has also been granted a substantial sum of money to be used for the purpose of extending the field work, as it is the desire of the Board to assist as largely as possible in taking care of the pastorless churches.

The Home Mission Board is planning to cooperate with the Board of Education and the trustees of Jireh College in reopening the school and the mission work at Jireh as soon as possible, providing an agreement can be reached as to this cooperation, the decision of which will not be reached until further correspondence with the trustees of Jireh College.

The work in Western Washington has received a larger appropriation this year than has been heretofore given. The same men are to continue in the work there.

The Mission Board also planned to cooperate with the Educational Board in putting on schools for pastors at Craigville, Massachusetts, at Defiance, Ohio, at Union Christian College in Indiana and at Pabner College in Missouri. The colleges will also cooperate in these summer schools. At a meeting of the Educational Secretary, the Home Mission Secretary and the college presidents a tentative curriculum was formulated. The work of securing a faculty will be begun at once.

A few churches sent application for aid which were received following the close of the meeting of the Mission Board. These will be considered by mail and the results sent to the churches.

Communication from the Southern Christian Convention stated that the Home Mission Board of that Convention did not ask any appropriation this year because of conducting their own Home Mission work.

Respectfully submitted by

The Home Mission Board.

YOUTH AND MISSIONS

By Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson, Superintendent Wiling Workers, Berea Church, Nansemond County, Va.

(Read before annual session Eastern Virginia Conference and published by vote of that body.)

The passing of the World War has left a world filled with trouble, suffering and strife. The situation has its dark side and its brighter aspects. Though the war is over, the peoples of the earth are overburdened, broken-hearted, bleeding, hungry. In every land turbulence and strife delay the return of peace and order, and new revolutions shake the foundations of civilization. The greed for gold and the lust for power shut Christ out of the life of nations. Two-thirds of the population of the globe are still in heathen darkness. The very tragedy of the situation, however, brings hope, for it is driving the world to a new interest in Jesus of Nazareth. Men and nations are turning to him for help—without Him no promise of peace and brotherhood appears. Jesus stands forth today with new light and glory, God's only answer to human need and the one solution of every human problem. Every providence of the new day opens new doors of Christian opportunity, and God is calling as never before upon the young life of America for devoted and heroic service in the great program of making Jesus Christ known throughout the world. For the great forward drive in behalf of world peace and brotherhood we are dependent primarily upon the young life of the church. There is little hope of immediate success, but the morrow holds for the world a day of victory for brotherhood and righteousness if the young life of the church responds adequately to God's challenge in the new missionary opportunities of today.

The young are God's elect. You know that oft-quoted Scriptural injunction: "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Well, I think we might enlarge our interpretation of this proverb of wisdom and read it thus: "Train up a child to be missionary in heart and spirit and when he is old he will not depart from it." Then the question might be asked: How and where may this training be done? I am going to try to tell you a little about what I deem the most important fields for this training.

The first place of mission training that I shall speak of is in the Sunday schools. One great man has said: "Whatever ideas are to grip the church must be taught in the Sunday school." The real and only mission of the church is to make Christ known to the world and the largest avenue through which the ideals of the church are accomplished is through the Sunday school. As we all know in nearly all of our Sunday schools, there is adequate Biblical instruction, but as yet very little attempt has been made that shall provide missionary education for a pupil who enters the Sunday school at four years of age and graduates at eighteen. There is, however, a growing realization that if children are to be trained as Christians in our Sunday schools, it is impossible to omit the missionary element, that this is the heart of the Christian spirit, and that in the broad sense of the word, a Christian and a missionary are one and the same. The late J. F. McFarland said, "Let us carry missions into the Sunday school, primarily for the sake of our children themselves, that they may come to their largest development. The immediate raising of money is a trivial thing as compared with this great aim." We should feel that, as one has said, "The greatest missionary work of the church is to train its children in Christian service, or there will be no church to carry on missions thirty or forty years from now."

A Sunday school without missionary instruction may be compared to a village shut in by the hills, with no road to the outside world. The inhabitants know nothing of the great world that is lying beyond them. Ignorance, prejudice, and indifference are some of the hills that are shutting out the world-vision of missions from the majority of Sunday schools.

To name all the great and good whose service began in childhood is impossible. Within a century the lives of men like Alexander Duff, who at the age of 15 had heard the missionary call, William Carey, James Chalmers, the missionary hero to New Guinea and Alexander Mackay are but a few of the great examples whose powers of leadership were called forth by the simple tasks and responsibilities of childhood. The Sunday school should welcome the children into a definite, progressive work for humanity, no Sunday school being complete without a carefully arranged plan for mission study. The little ones must be interested by wide awake, interesting stories and then told how they can help in God's program with their small deeds. Then comes the age from 12 to 20, which might be called the time of first steps. During this period of the forming of ideals and of the seeing of visions, the beginning of a life choice is often made. Reading does more than any one thing to form ideals high or low. Ideas may lead to ideals. Thought governs action more than ever before and now is the time that the best of mission literature should be provided the student. Then besides reading there should be imbred in the minds and hearts of these young people the great need of service. This desire for service should so permeate the hearts of these young people in the Sunday school that as they go out to any form of life work, they will go with a missionary zeal and devotion to help forward by one means and another the Kingdom of God, remembering that "they who turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever" and this must surely be because in so doing they reflect the light of the Savior of the world.

The second place of mission training should be given in our day schools and colleges. One man of great intelleet has said, "If you wish to introduce any ideas into a nation's life, you must put them in the schools." The interest and outlook of the average student are not world-wide. The conditions of school life are limited so that the student cannot be occupied with the conditions surrounding remote nations of the earth and the great currents of life that move among them. He thinks in terms of his friends, his teachers, of his class and the immediate problems of his own life. Why should he not think thus? Why should he give any special concern to great world movements outside? The answer is that he has very much to gain from such a study. In any case, mission study has a claim on the attention of every student who is earnest and ambitious.

Mission study brings to the student a greater breadth of outlook and more thorough and practical knowledge needed in his life's career. He has already learned much regarding the conditions in his own country and probably those in other Christian lands. When he adds to this a knowledge of the non-Christian countries, he has pushed back his horizon until it embraces the whole world. He becomes a true patriot by learning to be a citizen of the whole world. Not a few students are looking forward more or less sanguinely toward politics, diplomacy and some public work as a life vocation. A study of the life of the immigrant, of the poor in the great cities, of the western pioneer, of the negro and the Indian, in his own land, and also, of the great world currents outside, of the ways of living and remote nations of the earth, will enter very materially into the preparation for such careers. And then Christian students are bound as disciples to be concerned about their Master's affairs and should equip themselves to lead in the missionary activities of the Church of his own land. The Church of today is calling for missionary leaders, especially from the ranks of college graduates. Never from the days of the early Christians there has been such an eagerness on the part of the Church to push forward the missionary cause. America is calling her youths into service under the leadership of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The very fact that America now seems in God's providence to be the great messenger nation to the world, demands, that the turbulence and strife at home shall be conquered by a great evangelism and by a new interpretation of Jesus to our own countrymen. The needs and the opportunities in the homeland and the providential purpose of God in the life of this nation constitutes an urgent study of missions and call to young Christians to dedicate their life to Christian service.

And so we come to Service, sacrificial service, which should be taught in the mission study too, for the call is indeed for a new spirit of self-sacrifice in Christian service. A recent Literary Digest tells the following story of willing service. "A soldier of France lay on a hospital bed. His shattered arm had just been taken off. The doctor looked down with pity at the white young face. "I'm sorry, my boy, you had to lose your arm," he said. The eyes of the lad flashed, "No, no, doctor, I didn't lose it," he said, "I gave it—to France." His head sank back on the pillow and he said, "My France". On every battlefield of the great war, men calmly and deliberately laid down their lives for the cause of human freedom. Are we not ready today to study and learn to offer as much for the salvation of men and of nations.

John R. Mott has said: "Christ never was so necessary, never more sufficient. It is a great thing by an infinite process of exclusion like this past war has been, gradually to rivet the attention of the world upon the unchangeable One, the one who is the same yesterday, today and forever. He came not only to proclaim a message, but that there might be a message to proclaim. Thank God for the chance of the ages to go into our colleges, into our schools and into non-Christian nations and fix attention on the only One that has not slipped and fallen. There he stands other than all the rest, strong among the weak, erect among the fallen, clean among the defiled, living among the dead—Jesus Christ, Our Lord."

Now I come to the more practical part. I have spoken of these methods and those institutions through and by which we do extensive missionary work, but that to which I now come is intensive and I mean by this those organizations whose only business is to do missionary work, namely the Young People's and Willing Workers' Societies. We must not depend on other organizations for here is the definite thing. I have tried to show you that to have a missionary church, it must come through the Sunday school; to have a missionary nation there must be training in our schools and colleges and finally in order that we may accomplish this desired goal there must be the training and necessary missionary interest which is obtained from the Young People's Societies. And we are going to grow in proficiency, prominence and strength only as we are going to train through these societies.

Our progress may seem slow at times for the children often may seem fidgety, impatient and uninterested, but we must try different programs by which to instill in them the missionary interest. If you will just pardon a little personal illustration, I am Superintendent of the Willing Workers' Society at Berea and to interest the children, I had been doing my best at telling them stories and missionary incidents, when at the meeting I decided to change a bit and asked two children to tell me a story each at the next meeting. Well, to me it was wonderful at the next meeting, to hear those two little children telling their little stories and then to watch the beaming, delightful and interested faces of the other little folks who were listening so intently to the stories told by these two. And it seems to me it would be a good plan if there could be arranged, by some of our Leaders and Superintendents a definite program with little pamphlets and stories which could be used in all the Young People's Societies to get these young people to tell the missionary stories. Can it be done? I believe such a program would bring strength to our societies, interest to our young people and help them to acquire a love for service which is needed so much now in the call for a new spirit in devoted Christian service.

“There is a call for faithful workers
In the vineyard of the Lord,
Where the ruthless hand of Satan
Has been scattering tares abroad.

“Tis a call that must be answered,
Are you ready to begin
To spread the glorious gospel
O'er a world that's dead in sin?”

BETTY AND BOBBY

One morning while Betty was dressing she heard the most pitiful crying of the robins in the maple tree just outside of her window, and she knew something just dreadful had happened to her baby robins, and sure enough something had happened. She saw a tiny baby robin fluttering on the ground with a broken leg.

She didn't wait to pull all her clothes on, because she saw she had to be quick or that wicked blue jay would kill every one of her baby birds. She ran down the stairs just as fast as she could go and climbed up into the tree, and you'd better believe that the jay flew away in a hurry, just scolding her as hard as ever he could; and the papa and mamma robins knew Betty wanted to help them because she had always been good to them and fed them and every day filled a nice little pan of water for them to bathe in. So when they saw her climbing up in the tree they knew she was going to help them, and they just flew down to the ground and fluttered around the dear baby robin that was hurt. And they cried so hard that Betty's mamma heard them and came out to help too, and she picked up the poor little birdie in her warm hands and—O. O. such a dreadful thing happened—one of Betty's feet slipped in the tree, and she fell to the ground hard and broke one of her little legs too. My, but that was bad, yes it was. And by that time Betty's papa and Pat and Norah were out there too. And Nora took the little hurt bird, and papa picked up his wee Betty, and Pat phoned for the doctor, and Betty's mamma—what do you think she did? She didn't stop to cry or say: “What shall I do? What shall I do?” No, sir. She was pretty white and frightened, but before the doctor got there she had some soft pillows on the table to lay Betty down on and took off her little slippers and stockings and held the little broken leg while the doctor bound it up. Aren't mamma's lovely?

Betty's papa couldn't help about Betty very much, but let me tell you what he did. He took a wee, wee bit of wood and a little piece of cotton and bound up the baby bird's leg, and Norah made a little warm nest for it out of a strawberry basket, and while she was doing that Pat boiled an egg and put little bits of it on a toothpick and fed the birdie. All the folks in that house loved birds and knew how to care for them.

The doctor thought Betty had better sleep for a while, so he left some good medicine for her and said he would send a nurse. But Betty's mamma and papa both said: “Why, no, we want to take care of her ourselves.” And Norah and Pat said: “Shure, an' we'll help.”

Four nurses for one little hurt girl. Wasn't that great? And the doctor said: “Well, well, I wish all my sick children had such good care.” And he smiled and looked kind of sad, 'cause he was thinking of some little children who didn't have any one to care for them at all when they are sick.

The next morning after all these things happened, Norah took the strawberry basket with the little nest in and put it in the window, and what do you think? There was daddy robin on a limb of the maple tree singing as loud as ever he could, and when he saw Norah put the nest in the window he stopped singing, and he turned his head first on one side and then on the other and looked down into the nest. Then he flew down to the window and made sure that it was his baby bird. Off he flew and in a few minutes came back to the window with a wigwag worm in his bill. He got just as near the nest as he could, but the screen was shut. What could he do? He was not going to open his bill and lose his baby's breakfast. No, sir. He stood chirping until Betty's mamma heard him. She opened the screen wide enough for daddy robin to drop the worm in his baby's mouth: such a wide-open mouth, and quicker than a wink that worm was gone. Betty's mamma had to laugh, and it pleased her because she would have something fine to tell Betty when she waked up.

It took Betty some time to wake up, and the poor little girl had to lie quiet many, many days, and Robin Redbreast got well before she did and learned to use his wings.

Betty's bed was rolled over to the window every day, and it seemed to please baby robin very much, for he would fly over to the soft covers of her bed, and by and by he tried to talk to Betty: yes, he did, such a chatter as he kept up, but it made Betty very happy.

She thought he should have a name so he would be one of her family: so she named his Bobby.

And this is the Betty and Bobby story.—Clara L. Gobin, in Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Our financial report still climbs upward but we must raise a little more than nine thousand dollars by the end of the year to reach our goal. Mrs. Thresa Aschbacher, South Bend, Washington, mailed us a Liberty Bond for $100.00, and Mr. and Mrs. P. C. Harnish, of Waynesville, Ohio, mailed us a check for $50.00. These good people live in a distant state but are interested in the little orphan children and are glad to help us in the work. Have we not many others who have Liberty Bonds they would like to give us? We can use them all right. If you would like to make the Orphanage a contribution and want to give it in Liberty Bonds, mail them right along. We will be very grateful to you.

In a few more weeks Thanksgiving will be here and it is a good time to make an offering on or near Thanksgiving. It is the time of year that we gather in the crops and see how bountifully the Lord has blessed us during the year. We ought to show our appreciation by making a liberal offering to help those who are unable to help themselves.

I heard a man make a plea in his church some weeks ago in behalf of the orphan cause and he used this thought that impressed me very much: He said that people very often give when an offering is taken and give it without ever giving a thought as to the worthiness, the need, or the good that might be accomplished through the offering. When your church makes its Thanksgiving offering this year I want you to ask your self how much you ought to contribute toward this cause. Remember that more than one hundred children have been turned away from the doors of the Christian Orphanage in the last few months because we had no room to offer them. To meet the need the Trustees have decided to build another building and the walls of the new building are nearing completion. We need $20,000 to finish the new building and furnish it. I ask you to ask yourself the question how much should you give toward this great work?

Don't you think you can contribute as much as the value of one day's work to help us in this work, or more if you feel that you want to? If everybody would give just the value of one day's work we would be able to finish our new building and furnish it and open the doors for the little children. Last week when we shrodded our corn, Mr. Berry Barber furnished his wagon and team and himself and helped us one day and when I asked his bill he said he had received a letter asking for one day's work in behalf of the Orphanage cause and that he had made up his mind that he was going to give this day's work to the Orphanage. It was a full day's work too. How many more in our church have made up their mind to give a day's work or the value of a day's work? Let us think of this thing, the seriousness of it, the great need of it, the opportunity and the privilege you have to help in this work.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

Holland, Va., Nov. 10, 1920.—The Eastern Virginia Christian Conference has just held its one hundredth annual session with the church at Holy Neck, five miles from this place. The occasion was one of unusual interest and was largely attended by ministers, delegates and visitors. Historical matter of a high order was furnished by Bro. W. E. MacClemy and also by Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., LL.D. The conference provided for the publication of this matter in some permanent form. Historically, it will be of great interest to our people. The financial side of the Conference was most gratifying. The Hon. J. E. West gave a review of the financial development of the conference, covering the last fifty years, which showed a marvelous advance. Fifty years ago, the treasurer's report showed practically no money in the treasury and almost no effort to raise money for Conference work. From that chaotic state the Conference has risen to the work of raising during the past year several hundred thousands of dollars for the great work it is seeking to do, and the outlook is growing more hopeful as the days come and go.

On the week before this Conference was held, the Woman's Mission Conference was held at Holland, Va. Though the weather was inclement for the day of their meeting, the attendance was good and the interest most inspiring.

The women of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference have been organized for work only nine years, and yet in that time they have made wonderful progress. They have set their financial goal for this year at $5,000, and they reached it and forged ahead to the sum of $5,200.00. They were full of enthusiasm and are going on to yet greater things. If they are not much hindered in their work in some unexpected way, we believe they will soon surpass the Conference itself in raising mission funds. We expect to see that day come in the not distant future. God bless these women in the noble work they are seeking to do.

Three ministers were received into the membership of the Conference in its late session at Holy Neck. They were: Revs. James H. Lightbourne, Roy C. Helfinstein and C. J. Felton. These all came from other conferences in the Christian church.

Great things have been accomplished in this Conference since I left its active work seventeen years ago to take up work in the Miami Ohio Conference at Covington, O. After that I spent more than twelve years at Dayton, Ohio, and then a year in Georgia. It seems good to be back on my old camping ground, and more, it seemed good to meet and get such a warm personal welcome from so many of the men and women with whom I labored in the long ago, but I must not take too much space. More later.

If any of your readers have a copy of Facing the Truth, which they would be willing to spare, please let me know, and if in good condition, will pay the regular price for it, such as was charged when first published. Address me at Holland, Virginia. Please see at once if you have such a copy, and if you have, let me know.

NOTICE! NOTICE!!

The committee chosen by the Southern Christian Convention to locate a site for the proposed school for our Georgia and Alabama work has met and decided definitely to visit that field about January 20, 1921. All communities interested in securing the school should see to it that their propositions reach us not later than the first day of January.

If any community would like to provide the funds you mean to offer, on a basis of five annual installments, the committee will take pleasure in considering such a proposition.

We would suggest the importance of definite, aggressive action at once on the part of those who are interested.

APPRECIATES FORMER PASTOR

Rev. R. F. Brown and family left Wednesday, November 3 for Columbus, Georgia. He goes to accept the call from the Columbus Christian church to the pastorate for the coming year.

The Chapel Hill church of which Bro. Brown was pastor the past year has gone forward rapidly during his stay. The church has added a parsonage during the year and bought a piano for the church. The membership has increased by thirty-three members. The church report for the year was the best ever since the church was organized. The report of the Woman's Missionary Society was also encouraging.

The many friends of Rev. and Mrs. Brown regret their departure from Chapel Hill, and wish for them the highest measure of success in the new field to which they have gone. Bro. Brown is eminently fitted for the field to which he has been called. He is an alumnus of Elon College and of the University of North Carolina, and is one of our coming ministers.

SUFFOLK LETTER

A well-deserved reception was given to Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., at the close of twenty years as pastor of the Franklin Christian church, Franklin, Va., on Thursday night, November 11, 1920. One can hardly realize that Dr. Rowland has served that congregation one fifth of a century; but it is now a recorded fact in the history of that church.

The Ladies' Aid Society had charge of the parsonage, through a committee, decorated the parlor with ferns and autumn leaves; the sitting room with yellow chrysanthemums, and the dining room with pink chrysanthemums, roses, and colored candles. Punch was served to the guests in the yellow room, and ice cream, cake, peanuts and mints in the dining room.

More than two hundred invited guests came with their congratulations, passed the receiving circle with smiles and good will, enjoyed the refreshments and the social hour and passed out leaving a benediction. Pastors McLean, Baptist; Chapman, Methodist; and Barrett of Holland, Jay of Holy Neck, and Staley of Suffolk and Scarborough, added their presence and good wishes to the occasion. McLean presented the felicitations of the happy throng in an inimitable address to Dr. and Mrs. Rowland, who did not say much, but looked happy. The community, without denominational colors, flooded the parsonage with an atmosphere of Christian fellowship as beautiful and as sweet as the floral decorations.

Dr. Rowland and his bride came to Franklin on October 26, 1900, and began their ministry in that church the first Sunday in November of that year. Dr. Rowland began by preaching one Sunday morning and one Sunday night in each month in Franklin, and one Sunday at Holy Neck and one at Bethany. Franklin at that time had thirty-two members and paid $200 as a salary. The pastor rented a house in which to live. Holy Neck paid $350.00 and Bethany $150.00 making the total salary $700.00. The second year Franklin completed their parsonage; but the arrangement with churches continued six years. The Bethany church finally merged into Franklin, and the pastor gave full time to this congregation and retired from Holy Neck.

In 1905 the church was remodeled, and it was rebuilt in 1915 at a cost of some $25,000.00. The church now has 255 members, own property valued at $40,000.00, and pays the pastor a salary of $2,500.00 and parsonage.

When they came, they were two; now they are five; three lovely daughters standing with them in the receiving line and enjoying with them, this joyful occasion. It is worth a fifth of a century of hard work to be on the mount of such an experience.

Dr. Rowland has won the distinction of being a community minister, being called into service in all community services and esteemed by all denominations for his work's sake.

I am afraid to give names of ladies who conceived and executed this merited reception, lest I might not include all who deserve mention; but I will say, that those who planned and served seemed to be as happy as the pastor and his family. As the autumn leaves vied with the flowers for first place in the beauty of the decorations, the mature people vied with the young people in the exuberance of their enjoyment.

The good words spoken, and the laughter that filled the parsonage will die, and the flowers will fade and their fragrance will be scattered, but the memory of this generous kindness of a faithful and loyal congregation will live in the memory of pastor Rowland and his family.

OBITUARIES

WICKER

Having been unusually industrious throughout the week for a boy of his age, Herman, the twelve years and nine months old son of Brother Marvin Wicker, was given the afternoon of Saturday, October 16, 1920, in which to rest and play. A few hours later, when his gleeful voice had not been heard for some time, and no response came in answer to a call by those who missed him, his little sister hurried to the cotton house where she had seen him last, and there found his lifeless body, head first, in a deep hole that he had dug in the cotton seed. He had smothered.

Herman was a bright boy, and was unusually religious for a child. The members of his Sunday school class covered the grave of their comrade with beautiful flowers.

He leaves a father, stepmother, two sisters, and a little brother.

In the absence of the pastor, Rev. J. E. Franks, the funeral was conducted by the writer from Zion Christian church of which the deceased was a member.

BEAUTIFYING THE HOME GROUNDS
WHAT TO DO THIS MONTH

Proper Month for Sweet Peas

Of course one can wait until the spring of the year to plant them and obtain good blooms, but the best ones, those that are the largest, with the longest stems and those that come the earliest in the spring cannot be secured unless fall planting is done. Plant them in good rich ground and give slight cultivation after they come up until cold weather sets in. If any unusually cold weather comes on, it might be well to put some protection like straw or leaves on top of them; but in the majority of instances they will go right through the winter without any protection whatever. It is advisable, however, to look out for them when any unusually cold weather comes along, and it is well to plant them in a more or less protected place.

Consult Catalogs

Those who haven't secured nursery catalogs should do so at once. Get them, study them and be prepared right now to order shrubbery to set out this fall for beautifying the home grounds. See if you can't determine where some shrubbery, rose bushes etc., would improve the looks of the home grounds. There are mighty few places where there is enough shrubbery about the place. A careful study of these nursery catalogs and the illustrations in them will give you some good ideas as to how to improve your own home grounds.

Grass Seed Should Be Sowed

This is the month to get ready to sow lawn grass seed. We believe that in the middle and upper part of the South, from now until perhaps the latter part of October is the very best time for sowing grass seed. In the Lower South it may be well to put it off until November. Of course, they can be sowed in the middle and upper part of the South during November, but October is the ideal time to sow. Therefore, we would urge those who haven't a good lawn to prepare the ground right now by making it rich, thoroughly pulverizing and smoothing it and sowing to lawn grass seed. This would be time well spent.—L. A. Nivin, in The Progressive Farmer.

Thanksgiving Proclamation

The season approaches when it behooves us to turn from the distractions and preoccupations of our daily life that we may contemplate the mercies which have been vouchsafed to us and render heartfelt and unfeigned thanks unto God for his manifold goodness.

This is an old observance of the American people, deeply imbedded in our thoughts and habits. The burdens and the stresses of life have their own insistence.

We have abundant cause for thanksgiving. The leisons of the war are rapidly healing. The great army of free men, which America sent to the defense of liberty, returning to the grateful embrace of the nation, has resumed the useful pursuits of peace, as simply and as promptly as it rushed to arms in obedience to the country's call. The equal justice of our laws has received steady vindication in the support of a law-abiding people against various sinister attacks which have reflected only the baser agitations of war, now happily passing.

In plenty, security and peace, our virtuous and self-reliant people face the future, its duties and its opportunities. May we have vision to discern our duties, the strength, both of hand and resolve, to discharge them and soundness of heart to realize that the truest opportunities are those of service.

In a spirit, then, of devotion and stewardship we should give thanks in our hearts and dedicate ourselves to the service of God's merciful and loving purposes to his children.

Wherefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate Thursday, the 25th day of November next, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and I call upon my countrymen to cease from their ordinary tasks and avocations upon that day, giving it up to the remembrance of God and his blessings, and their dutiful and grateful acknowledgment.

THE NORTH CAROLINA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE

The ninety-fifth session of the North Carolina Christian Conference met with the church at Parks' Cross Roads, Tuesday, November 16, and remained in session for three days. Rev. Thomas E. White, Sanford, N. C., presided over the body, while Secretary W. A. Harper, of Elon College, committed the record.

The Executive Committee reported that it had approved the Men and Millions Forward Movement, ordered the ordination of Rev. E. H. Rainey and granted Rev. J. O. Cox a letter of transfer to the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Committee on Sunday schools reported a continuation of the work of the Board of Religious Education and announced that it had elected Miss Lucy M. Eldredge as Field Secretary.

The Nominating Committee rendered the following report, which was adopted:

President—Rev. W. L. Williamson, Henderson, N. C.
Vice-President—Rev. A. T. Banks, Ramseur, N. C.
Secretary—Mr. J. A. Dickey, Elon College, N. C.

Assistant Secretary—Rev. J. W. Patton, Greensboro, N. C.

Treasurer—Hon. K. B. Johnson, Cardenas, N. C.

Home Mission Board—R. L. Williamson, J. O. Atkinson, E. L. Moffitt, K. B. Johnson, W. K. Holt, W. P. Lawrence, T. E. White, and P. H. Fleming.

Mrs. W. H. Carroll rendered a report of the Woman's Board which showed an amount raised of $3,305.45 for 1820. The objective for 1920-21 is $6,000.00.

Dr. N. G. Newman rendered the report on Education which was forward yooking i nevery respect. Revs. W. J. Edwards and J. E. McCauley were recommended for ordination, and the Conference so voted and acted. Mr. Sion H. Lynam, Apex, N. C., a member of Martha's Chapel church, and a Freshman in Elon College, was granted license. Brother Carl Brady of Pleasant Grove (N. C.) was admitted to the Biblical Class. The Conference passed an amendment to the report on Education, making it imperative that all members of the Biblical Class and Licentiates of the Conference own a copy of the Government and Principles of the Christian Church, also to be subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The Conference thought it wise for a young man coming into the work as a prospective minister to be familiar with the doctrines of the Church, and to keep in touch with the actions and activities of its work through its official organ.

Drs. Harper, Atkinson and Fleming were appointed a committee on Christian union and rendered a thoughtful report touching the matter of unity of all Christian forces. This paper will later appear in THE SUN

The reports on Foreign Missions was presented by that apostle of missions, Rev. P. T. Klapp, signed by him, Mrs. W. H. Carroll and Miss Bessie Holt. It was recommended and urged that the work of missions be a definite goal in the Sunday schools, and that our young people be definitely guided in this important work.

The Committee on Superannuation recommended the action by the Southern Christian Convention at its last session, and the Conference so approved.

The Home Mission Board made report on the following Mission churches: Chapel Hill, Reidsville, Danville, Franklinton, Clayton, Hopedale and Addor. Mr. J. A. Dickey was reelected Executive Secretary and is to continue his work in that field for another year.

The report on Moral Reform covered about the usual recommendation, except that the Conference was asked to request President-Elect Harding not to reinstate the precedent set by Mr. Wilson to eliminate the inaugural ball at the President's inauguration next March.

The report on Religious Literature called the attention of the Conference to the great need in loyally supporting all our Church papers, and especially THE CHRISTIAN SUN, which is so vitally necessary to the progress of the work of the Conference.

Mr. J. A. Dickey, the Executive Secretary of the Conference, reported that he had done considerable work in the field in the endeavor to get churches to group themselves, adopt a sound financial system and put their work on a permanent and cooperative basis. To be specific, the Secretary reported that he had visited sixty seven churches, sent out twelve hundred letters, secured thirty-one new members to the Christian Missionary Association and collected approximately $600.00 on dues of the Association. The Association now has 254 members. Nearly $2000.00 was collected during the year.

The report on Christian Endeavor urged the churches to adopt this method of training the young people. The pastors were urged to give Christian Endeavor a trial and a fair showing.

The Committee on Apportionments recommended that all apportionments remain the same as last year, with the exception of the following churches which requested a change in their apportionments: Antioch (R), Christian Chapel, New Hope (N. C.) Haw River, Damascus, Mt. Hermon, Morrisville, Danville, Six Forks, Mt. Auburn, Fuller's Chapel, Shady Grove (R), Ether and Poplar Branch. The request of these churches was referred to the Executive Committee of the Home Mission Board for adjustment.

The following standing committees were elected for the ensuing year:

Executive—R. L. Williamson, P. H. Fleming, W. A. Harper.

Education—N. G. Newman, J. W. Patton, W. C. Wicker.

Sunday Schools—R. L. Williamson, C. H. Stephenson, D. L. Boone, J. W. Stout.

Christian Endeavor—F. C. Lester, Miss Bessie Holt, Mrs. A. T. Banks.

Foreign Missions—P. T. Klapp, Mrs. W. A. Harper, J. E. Franks.

Tabulation—L. L. Wyrick, C. E. Newman, Ed Harris.

Program—C. B. Riddle, W. A. Harper, Mrs. W. H. Carroll.

Christian Union—W. A. Harper, J. O. Atkinson, E. L. Moffitt.

Rev. J. W. Harrell was granted a letter of transfer to the North Carolina Methodist Episcopal Conference.

President White's address was on this theme: "Big Jobs for Little Church".

The name of the church at Keysér was changed to Addor at the request of the church there.

Revs. B. F. Black, C. H. Rowland, and W. W. Staley were present as deliberative members, all making splendid and acceptable addresses before the Conference.

Rev. J. W. Wellons spoke very interestingly and tenderly to the Conference. His talk was well received and a liberal offering made in his behalf, by the Conference.

Rev. W. M. Cook, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was introduced to the Conference.

Rev. E. C. Fry was present on Wednesday and Thursday and addressed the Conference in the interest of the great work of missions, and especially our undertakings in Japan.

It was moved to instruct the president to secure the three gavels of the three former conferences and to have them made into one.

Rev. W. C. Hook, of the Virginia Valley Conference, was present the last day and was introduced to the body.

Danville, Va., was selected as the place of the next meeting and three days instead of four set aside in which to transact the business of the Conference.

Despite the heavy rains and unusually bad weather, the Enrollment Committee's report showed an enrollment of 122.

The total collections of the Conference amounted to $8,287.61, with fourteen churches not heard from. The unusual bad weather hindered the delegates from most of these churches from attending.

As in reporting previous Conferences, we are confident that important references have been omitted. None have been done so intentionally, and we will thank any reader to call our attention to anything that should have been mentioned.

We are indebted to the Secretary of the Conference for his kindness in permitting us to take notes direct from the records, for this brief summary of the work done at the Conference.

AGAIN! AGAIN! AGAIN! AGAIN!

We have said again and again and again, that articles will not be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN when the Editor does not know who the author is. Though we have repeated this from time to time, and though every Editor of THE SUN has had to repeat it, there continues to come articles without names. The occasion of this note is caused by an article signed "A Constant Reader", and giving us a "suggestion" and, in the meantime, a "little warming up" for not giving more publicity to the work of Evangelist A. Victor Lightbourne. "Constant Reader" sends us an article about a meeting recently held by Evangelist Lightbourne, but does not sign the article. We have only this to say: We make it a definite rule to publish all field items but have no way of being able to make a write up of a meeting held by Brother Lightbourne, or any other Brother, unless we could be there, or be able to get the facts. We can only depend upon the local church where meetings are held to furnish the reports. If a contributor does not desire to sign his or her name, for any legitimate reason, it will be withheld, if request is so made.

Will "Constant Reader" be careful to sign his or her articles so that they may be published?

TEACHING THE BIBLE BY USING THE SCREEN

If motion pictures are useful as a means of education, promoting social service and wholesome entertainment, why can they not be used as a means of teaching the Bible? Thousands of children are eager to go to the "movies" and see the thrilling stories of adventure and romance, some of which are wholesome, and uplifting, inspiring in ideals, others of which are degrading, deceptive and false in ideals. The idea of the International Church Film Corporation is to take advantage of this undirected enthusiasm on the part of so many of the children who attend motion pictures (and mature people too, for that matter) and direct it in such a way that it will give them true conceptions and ideals of life. In the meanwhile, an effort is being made to present parts of the Bible on the screen. This is done with great care and caution lest misinstructions of Biblical events may be given. Arrangements have been made with 5,000 churches for the display of films released through the corporation, including dramas, travelogs, educational subjects, and clean comedy.

SCHOOL WEEK

The Bureau of Education at Washington calls for the cooperation of the churches in the observance of "School Week," December 4-11. The Council of Church Boards of Education desires to emphasize the significance of this effort to call the favorable attention of the American people to the activities and needs of our schools and teachers.

Ideals of education in America were originally conceived and largely developed not by Government officials, but by private individuals who were as a rule directly or indirectly representatives of the churches. These men sought to provide the best education in institutions permeated by Christian convictions and ideals.

The later, and in recent years rapidly increasing, attention of town, state and federal governments to education is an indication that the action of the churches has leavened the entire nation. During the proposed "School Week" the people cannot think too much, and pastors, professors and teachers cannot talk or preach too much about questions concerning the education of the children and youth of the land.

Let the pastors and the people of the churches, and the teachers and students in all institutions of learning, private and public, vie with each other that "School Week" may strengthen the will of the people to support more adequately all these institutions, and to provide educational facilities, methods and processes more than ever worthy of the confidence and devotion of the nation.

THE INDUSTRIAL PROBLEM

Along with the fall of prices there inevitably comes the fall of wages and an increasing threat of unemployment among the working classes. The lowering of wages and unemployment is not confined to any particular part of the country or any one class of manufacturers, but it is nation wide and affects millions of people. The New York Times estimates that there is a twenty per cent average decrease in the salaries of workers in the various industries of the country. Some industries, of course, are affected more than others, especially in the case of the men and boys' clothing trade, cotton goods manufacturing, and textile manufacturing and trades, there is a marked decrease in the wages given to the employees. Not only this, there is also a continuous decrease in the number employed in carrying on the work.

Examples of this change of our industrial life are not difficult to find. In New York City alone the clothing trade industry has dismissed 35,000 workers, and has made a sharp reduction in the wages of the remaining workers, and until prices are lowered enough to attract the customer, still more men will either become idle or suffer further reduction in salaries. Cotton manufacturing establishments of New England and the South are reducing wages, in most instances from twenty to thirty per cent. In some instances the mills have closed because of the high cost of production and the heavy reductions made to the consumers.

One explanation of the present conditions is that the manufacturers are reducing production in order to create shortage in various commodities and thus maintain prices at an artificial level. But this is only one side of the question. The employment on the other hand asserts that the laborers used the war to hold them up and establish wages on a scale that is entirely incompatible with normal prices. They say that the public has put on the brakes and refused merchandise at the prices that must be obtained in order to let them out, and that the only solution is in this decreased production until it either costs less or the demand for goods at present prices has increased.

Of course if this condition continues, the responsibility will be placed somewhere. One thing we can be almost sure about is, that profiteering is responsible for the excess prices that led the buying public to strike. Until the extremely high wages are lowered and the profiteering has sufficiently vanquished from our midst, the present industrial problem will not be solved.

CREDIT TO THE AMERICAN NEGRO

Too often we have taken for fact that the American negro has never done anything for his country (It seems hard for many people to recognize that he has any country); we have even looked upon him as being incapable of contributing anything to the America in which he has lived, oftentimes passing an uneventful, jocund, merry-go-lucky existence. To say that he has made a distinct contribution to American democracy, contradicts this narrow, time-worn attitude. But as a matter of fact, the American negro has played a greater part than most people think.

Who has not heard of Frederick Douglass or Booker T. Washington, at some time or other, either in fact or in joke, well-meant or ill-meant, and who has not recognized that there is something great enough about these two orators and spokesmen of their race to merit our sincerest praise? Against the peculiar racial adversity under which they struggled, in circumstances which were discouraging, to say the least, these men grew to prominence, served their race and country.

Not only has the colored race produced orators and educators; it has also produced painters, poets, singers, and one sculptor. One of the finest painters that America has ever produced, judged by the French Academy of Art standards, is a negro. In the field of poetry Paul Dunbar has admirers all over the country. His songs are not sordid or commonplace, but they are possessed with a truly democratic, American spirit. Then we must not forget that the "only original music that America has yet possessed is the music of the negro 'spirituals.'"

We must not forget that the negro has done something worthy of merit. The old negative attitude of blindly discrediting what he has done, is wholly selfish and detrimental to the whole country, both black and white. It has been the means of keeping back the best that is in the negro, by always anticipating the worst. If we perform our duty toward the negro in a Christ-like way, we will help make him a better citizen by expecting and looking for the best that is in him.

GENERAL WRANGEL BEING DEFEATED

General Wrangel's army has been suffering severely before the advance of the Bolshevik army in South Russia. According to the report of The New York Times correspondent from Constantinople, November 15, 1920, 30,000 were killed and 40,000 were captured of the anti-Bolshevik army in the battle around Perekop. The character of the fighting is most desperate. Since the Bolsheviks have been baffled in the attempt to penetrate Poland, they have directed their efforts toward Southwestern Europe.

Ex-Governor Richard I. Manning was elected president of the American Products Export and Import Corporation, Columbia, S. C., November 16.

A PAGE FOR PREACHERS

SENSATIONAL METHODS

What is more deplorable in our Church life than the methods many of the clergy are employing to secure an audience? Whistling women, free lunches, shady politicians (posing as brilliant statesmen), moving pictures with an offensive smear of religion on them, represent some of the offerings in the Church notices. And the topics of the sermons! What poor, benighted heathen would even guess these performances had anything to do with Christianity?

The writer, who recently spent nine months in Los Angeles, observed the following in the Los Angeles Times "Has God Got Your Number?" "The Wild-West Man," "The Man in the Moon," "Pussy Cat, Pussy Cat, Where Have You Been?" "A Wonderful Invention—A Lunch Box, Hand Mirror, and Bath tub in One." The authors of these are Presbyterians, Baptists, and Methodists, all men of prominence in their respective denominations.

Happily there are hosts of ministers who are upholding the dignity of the Church, who are above this miserable vulgarization of religion, but the number of those who fill the Church columns of the secular papers with their disgustingly sensational advertisements seems to be on the increase the country over. The Church page is beginning to suggest a riot of department store bargain counters, a printer's ink scramble for business. It is beginning to be a noisome, indecent reek of commercialism.

What shall we do with these degraders of the Christian pulpit? We must either correct them to a belief in the power of the gospel of Christ or, in the event of our failure to do this, escort them out of the gospel ministry.—A Layman in the Continent.

DR. JEFFERSON TO PREACHERS

The Christian pulpit has been a hotbed for the growth of all sorts of curious and unearthly tones. Twangs of various twists, singsongs of melodies, howls of different degrees of fury, and roars of many types of hideousness have tarnished the fame of the pulpit and caused the ungodly to blaspheme. The cause of these vocal monstrosities and outrages is that the preacher forgets he is talking to individual men. He thinks he is talking to the world, and that is why he shouts. He has the idea the he is preaching to the town and consequently he roars. He imagines he is addressing a crowd, and his vocal mannerisms are caused by foolish imagination. He gets his eye off the individual, and his blunder reports itself at once in his elocution. The moment he comes out of the pulpit he speaks naturally. The most incorrigible pulpit howler or whiner speaks like a man as soon as he reaches the foot of the pulpit stairs. He is cured by remembering that he is talking to individuals.

Let him remember this in the pulpit, and many of his elocutionary sins will fold their tents like the Arabs. Preachers do not preach to society or humanity or civilization. They preach to men like themselves. When they come face to face with the individual heart their style becomes natural, with every tone genuine and every inflection true. This is the cure also for disease of rhetoric. There are stilts rhetorical as well as stilts elocutionary. A preacher who has imagination and a facile command of words is sure to go on rhetorical stilts unless he keeps his eyes on the individual. The individual is the preacher's life preserver.—Watchman-Examiner.

THE INTENT AND CONTENT OF THE SERMON

Sermon-making is a great business and a hard task. The difficulty partly arises from the intellectual demands of a noble theme upon the preacher and in part is a physical ordeal and a vocal strain, but it is due for the most part to the fact that in making a sermon the preacher is trying to make men. A faithful pastor is doing by his arguments on Sunday what he is trying all the week to accomplish by his example and service—to transform sinners into saints, many of said sinners not being anxious to be so transformed. This is the intent of the good sermon, which, moreover, must also have contents. The particular contents of a sermon vary almost infinitely with occasion, audience, age, and preacher. But in general it may be said of all homiletic endeavors that they must address themselves both to the intellect and the emotions of men, in such ways or degrees as to produce conviction of sin, and to provide motivation to righteous and self-sacrificing conduct. The ideal sermon contains something for the head, something for the heart, and something for the will. If the preacher does not prepare assiduously for his Sunday task, he will not long command the respect and attention of thinking men; if he "makes nothing" of his morning discourse, the people will make nothing of it either. The heart, too, must be comforted and fed, for many weep, and others are nigh to tears, while all crave consciously or unconsciously love from somewhere, and in a degree, of caressing or petting from the fathers in Israel. But the great end in view is the bending (not breaking) of the will of man, so that it will incline to the ways of God and consecrate this life to the great arrears and satisfactions of the life to come. The desideratum is the man in action—a Christianized product whose behavior will be valuable to God and serviceable to his fellowmen. The whole man, a complex character, must become Christ's. Such was the ideal of Paul, such shall be the aim of every preacher of the present day. Any sermon which falls short of this realization fails in that degree and way: and any discourse, however defective from a theoretic homiletic standpoint it may be, which becomes a means of accomplishing the salvation of the tripartite man, is a success.—Zion's Herald.

It was voted to print the minutes in the Christian Annual. The matter of district rallies was thoroughly discussed and referred to the Central Executive Committee.

The time and place of the next meeting were referred to the Central Executive Committee.

Committee on Resolutions report was adopted, moved and carried that the offering be given our return missionary, Rev. D. P. Barrett.

Dismissed by Rev. S. C. Harrell.

VISITING THE CHURCHES AND CONFERENCES IN ALABAMA AND GEORGIA

On Saturday evening, October 9, 1920, I went to Reidsville, N. C., to be with Rev. W. L. Wells' congregation on Sunday. I talked to his congregation on Sunday morning and the New Lebanon People, fifteen miles in the country, at three o'clock in the afternoon. Here a Young People's Missionary Society was organized with fourteen charter members.

I boarded the Southern train No. 54 at Reidsville at 7 o'clock and arrived at Cragford, Alabama, Monday evening at 6:30. Brother W. D. Mitchell met me and took me to his home, sending me, the following morning, to New Harmony church where the Alabama Conference convened.

This was the third Alabama Conference that I have attended. The church letters proved to me that this was the best yet in every respect. After this Conference adjourned, I visited the following churches until the Georgia and Alabama Conference convened: Dinger's Chapel, Cragford, Wadley, Beulah and Spring Hill. A Young People's Missionary Society was organized at Spring Hill.

The Georgia and Alabama Conference was, like the Alabama Conference, filled with good things from beginning to end. By request, I met with the people of the new church recently organized at La Grange, Ga., on Thursday afternoon.

Leaving La Grange at 12:00 o'clock Thursday night, I arrived at Ambrose, Ga., Friday morning at 6:15, and spoke to the Ambrose congregation that night. Mr. T. J. Holland conveyed me to Douglas by automobile Saturday morning, where I boarded the train for Swainsboro. I was met there by Mr. J. S. Stephenson's son, who took me through the country to Kite, Ga. At the request of Rev. H. W. Elder, who left on Thursday night for Texas on an errand for the Mission Board, I talked to these good people at both morning and evening services. Leaving Kite Monday at noon, I arrived in Burlington Tuesday evening at 7:00 o'clock (having traveled over 1500 miles, visited twelve churches, made fifteen missionary talks, organized two young people's missionary societies and two women's boards, and visited fifteen homes) feeling that I had had one of the most pleasant, and I hope, most profitable, trips I have made in the far South. I received a letter last week from the Superintendent of Young People's work of our Alabama Woman's Board saying that they had organized another Young People's Missionary Society.

I wish I had time and space to mention each home and each person who did so much to make my stay pleasant. Words are inadequate to express my appreciation. May the One who rewards all good, be gracious to each and every one.

THANKSGIVING

What if the gold of the corn lands
Is faded to somber gray?
And what if the down of the thistle
Is ripened and scattered away?
There's gold in the gathered harvest,
There's homely and hearthsome cheer
And so we will be full joyous—
The day of thanksgiving is here.

A sigh for the vanished splendor
Of the autumn's purple and red,
For the goldenrod that is whitened,
For the gentian bloom that is dead.
Then turn to the hearthstone cherry,
Behold, 'tis the time of year
To count our blessings and mercies—
The day of thanksgiving is here.

Bare and brown in the shadows,
The meadowland meets the gaze,
Where the bold, blithe bee went seeking
Its sweets in the summer days.
The honey is stored in plenty,
So what if the winter is near?
The time is not one of repining—
The day of thanksgiving is here.

The fruit has matured in its season,
The sunshine has ripened the seed,
Then sing to the Lord of the harvest
A song of thanksgiving indeed.
The moon and the noon have passed by us,
'Tis the sweet afternoon of the year,
So let not your tribute be lacking—
The day of thanksgiving is here.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

A THANKSGIVING APPEAL

The Thanksgiving offering. How much are you willing to give? Will you give the value of one day's work to help clothe, feed and care for the little helpless, fatherless ones? Give more if you will.

Will you do your part? Will you see that your church does its part and makes an offering that you will be proud of? It encourages us to greater and nobler things when you back us up in our efforts.

Do you want to see us reach our last goal for this year? Every goal set in the past has been reached. We are depending on you to push us up to this one.

Just a little more than eight thousand dollars to get us up to it by the end of the year. If you will do your part and your church does its part we will reach it.

Count your many blessings during the past year and then remember the one hundred little children who have been refused a place in our orphanage this year because we had no room. Ask God to direct you in making this offering and then follow the dictates of the spirit. Let us make an offering unto the Lord. He has said "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these * * * ye have done it unto me."

MISSIONARY

AN OPEN DOOR IN THE FAR SOUTH

As is known to many CHRISTIAN SUN readers, Rev. J. B. Orr, one of our faithful ministers of the Alabama Conference, has been living and preaching in Texas for several years. Brother Orr has often urged that we undertake work in Texas and has appealed to the Mission Secretary to make a visit to the church which he has established there. At the recent annual session of the Mission Board, it was voted that Rev. H. W. Elder, who had personal acquaintance with Brother Orr, pay him a visit and find out as to the prospects there and the needs of our cause in that place. Accordingly Brother Elder made the trip as requested and makes his report as follows:

Birmingham, Ala., November 5, 1920.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

I am on my way back to Georgia from Texas. I preached for Brother Orr eight days and nights at Sand Hill. The weather was bad nearly all the time I was there. It had been raining for some time and the roads were muddy. It rained both Sundays I was there. I found Brother Orr well and delighted with my trip.

Brother Orr has done some good and faithful work and everybody speaks well of him. This church is in a fine country. The people are prosperous and seem to be contented. There are no negroes in this community and the most of the people own their homes. There are fifteen or more men who own their homes, members of the Christian church. They love their pastor and their church. There are several families in the community who belong to other churches, but they work together in unity. They have Sunday schools and a splendid singing class. The community has voted bonds and are fixing to build an up-to-date high school building. The present building belongs to the community as a school and church building. This church is located in Upshaw County and is a splendid farming community. This is in the hill country and is well timbered. They are grading a road from Gilmer, the county seat, in front of the church, spending about $5,000.00 to the mile. This will add much to the community. We did not try to have a revival, but I enjoyed preaching for them. We ought to have gone to Brother Orr's assistance long ago. But better late, than never.

I left Gilmer on November 1, for Corsicana. My wife's sister, Bessie, who married W. H. Chewning lives there. I spent one night and day with them. I also visited Rev. M. D. Chewning who went to Texas from Alabama about twenty-seven years ago. He is now seventy-two years old and quite feeble. Corsicana is a beautiful city of fourteen thousand. It is in the oil belt and they are doing much work there. My brother-in-law has two wells on his place and is sinking the third. I left there on Tuesday afternoon for Dallas, Texas, and enjoyed immensely the view of the prairie land. This is a great country. I left Dallas Tuesday night via Shreveport, Louisiana, to Monroe, Louisiana. I ran up to Haide Wednesday afternoon and spent the night with Brother W. H. Allen and family. I was their pastor twenty-seven years ago at McGuires, Alabama, and it was a delight to go into this home. I preached for them that night in their school building. They have organized a Sunday school here and are using our literature. They report to the Home Department of our school at Vanceville, Georgia once a quarter. This is a fine field for mission work. I am here waiting for a train. My train was one hour late getting here. The Christian Church faces a great open door. Shall we enter?

H. W. ELDER

Bro. Elder in a personal letter urges that we employ Bro. Orr for all his time and have him preach every Sunday in the outlying districts from our Sand Hill church. This church will pay half the salary and Bro. Elder says he will give $25.00 on the salary if our Board can arrange for Bro. Orr to give the Texas work his full time.

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK

It will be of interest to many SUN readers, and particularly to the young people of our Young People's Missionary Societies in North Carolina and Virginia to know that Miss Iola Hedgepeth is located at Fancy Gap, Virginia, and is happy in the great sacrifices she is called upon to make to carry on the work for us there. She has already enrolled thirty-six in her day school. In this number she has girls eighteen and twenty-two years of age who never attended school a day before. Miss Hedgepeth writes most interestingly of her work and of the zeal manifested on the part of her pupils to learn. There are one hundred and twenty-eight children in the district but she will of course not be able to reach or enroll all of these. She has rented an old building and is to have it fitted and furnished for school purposes. I have shipped her four dozen standard desks, blackboards and other necessary equipment for her school room. Among the needs which she mentions are clothing for children and women, either ready made or in material that can be made into warm clothing. Some of her pupils come to school in tatters. She also needs all kinds of material for hand and constructive work in school; two dozen pairs of scissors, colored cardboard, needles, colored thread, pages for paper cutting from magazines, story books (to be given to a few who can read); pictures, which illustrate Bible stories, Scripture cards, Testaments and song books, individual drinking cups. It is her desire to provide a hot drink for the pupils at lunch as their food is so often lacking in proper nourishment. Hot cocoa is what she hopes to prepare. Sugar and chocolate would therefore be much appreciated to the extent of $8.00 per month. And then that which she needs immediately is a church organ, as she has begun Sunday school and Christian work on Sundays in her school room.

The women of the North Carolina Woman's Conference in session at Durham, N. C., Saturday and Sunday, November 13 and 14, decided to send to eight destitute families sufficient clothing for the children that they might have the apparel necessary in order that they can go either to day school or Sunday school. Eight Societies took the families, one each, and I am advised that this help should go forward at once by Parcel Post. The young people of the Virginia Conference have decided to raise $900.00 for this work the coming year and of the North Carolina Conference $500.00. We have an idea that this will greatly appeal to our Young People's Societies but it will not be adequate by any means to equip Miss Hedgepeth for the work and to send her the assistance which will be necessary in a few months. I hope before long to tell SUN readers even more than they have seen yet, something of conditions as they exist and of the actual work being done to relieve the situation and to carry enlightenment and Christianity into the homes of these mountain people.

DEVOTIONAL

SUFFOLK LETTER

The most important exercise of the soul is in prayer. It is the only exercise in which all believers can engage. All cannot read the Bible; all cannot sing; all cannot give; all cannot attend public worship; but all can pray. Hodge defines prayer as "the converse of the soul with God"; and Montgomery says: "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire, uttered or unexpressed; the motion of a hidden fire, that trembles in the breast." The modern phrase is "talking with God"; but this last definition or expression, seems to be lacking in the dignity that belongs to prayer.

There are three kinds of prayer: Secret, private, and public prayer. Hodge says secret, social, and public; but what is better than my statement or his, might be called secret, family, and public prayer. Closet or secret prayer is clearly taught in Matt. 6:6, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which is in secret shall reward thee openly." Joshua seems to have had family worship in mind when he said, "as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord"; and David said: "Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud." "Peter and John went up together into the temple at the hour of prayer"; all these forms of prayer seem to be taught directly, or are implied in the Word of God; and all of them are necessary for the development of individual, family, and church life. The church is built on the family, the family on the individual, and the individual on Christ.

Secret prayer is known only to the individual and God; family prayer to the family and God; public prayer to the Church and God. The easiest prayer is secret prayer. Here there is no intrusion of others to mar its sincerity and its faith. The holy of holies is the closet where the Christian prays. There is nothing to prevent genuine adoration, thanksgiving, confession, and supplication.

Family prayer is more embarrassing and more likely to contain formality. What others think and feel influence the mind. If some members of the family are not in harmony with family worship, it makes it hard for the head of the house. This family prayer-spirit should be cultivated in the earliest history of the home. Children should grow up in the atmosphere of family prayers. Family life is the root of the church and all life is cultivated at the roots.

Public prayer enters a new field and has its dangers as well as opportunities. There are two kinds of public prayers: written and extemporaneous. Written prayers fail to meet the changed conditions and growing needs of men, and extemporaneous prayers often lack thought and reverence. A good written prayer, or printed prayer, is better than a poor extemporaneous prayer; but a prayer thought-out in secret would be an improvement on both. Attention to public prayers will discover a tendency to address the people rather than God. It is a difficult matter to lead the congregation to the throne of grace without thinking of what they think of the prayer. What is called prayer thus becomes an address to the congregation rather than a prayer to God. It is often a good address, but a poor prayer. Any minister will find, upon an examination of his own public prayers, that they are too long, too extemporaneous, too much of an address to his congregation, and too barren of the real spirit of prayer. His thought should not be of what the people think, but of what the people need, and how to lead their minds in the spirit of reverence up to God; and the people can help in this by entering into the spirit of prayer with those who lead in prayer. Criticism has often led the minister into the very error that renders prayer of little value in public worship. The whole congregation should follow prayerfully in the public prayer.

W. W. STALEY

ASK

Never until the height and depth and breadth of Christ's love have been fathomed will the possibilities of His prayer promise be known. Jesus said "ask anything", but most of us try His "anything" on a very small scale. In fact many try almost everything else before they think of trying His prayer promises in the everyday affairs of life. There is nothing which any child of God can legitimately do, there is no duty at home or abroad, there is no decision to make but this same Jesus who said "ask", is ready to direct the course of such an one.

When I read these words which the Holy Spirit had recorded in the Word: "Be careful for nothing; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God", I know it is my duty to talk over everything which comes into my life with the One whom I have pledged to serve all the days of my life. Often has the writer, with many others, proved our Lord in that "everything by prayer", and found Him ready to take the lead in even the small affairs of life. The work does not necessarily have to be world-wide in its scope before we can talk it over with our Lord. Whether your work is world-wide, whether it is confined to the four walls of your home, your office, the sick-room or even the kitchen, Jesus understands the need and He is ever ready to direct the course and lighten the burden.

The "everything by prayer" life does not mean a life of idleness or shirking responsibility. On the other hand it means a life of increased service, the busiest life we have ever known. As we live the "everything by prayer" life, our Lord keeps showing us more and more we can do to His glory, either in our home or out in the world. Jesus was always busy and He keeps His followers who are constantly asking Him so busy that many times they feel they are "pressed out of measure, above strength." But "His grace is sufficient," His "strength is made perfect in weakness", and His "if ye ask, I will do it" is infallible.

But with each "ask" there is an "if". Between His "ask" and "I will do", there is a condition which has to be complied with. "Whatsoever ye shall ask, that will I do," but we must ask in Jesus' name. The privilege of using Jesus' name in these great prayer promises is given only to His friends. We are His friends if we are doing whatsoever He commands us. If we are doing that, because of our love for the Son in whom God is well pleased, though we are undeserving, for the Son's sake our requests are granted. The Lord's "whatsoever ye shall ask" is ours if we are filling the place Jesus has chosen and ordained us for.

"Ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you", if ye "abide in me, and my words abide in you". Not only are we to remember His words, but they are to be the living principal which governs our life before the "everything by prayer" will bring His "whatsoever ye shall ask" in answer to our petitions. We are to "pray and not faint", to preserve and not grow weary or give up though the answer is withheld for a long while.

"What things soever ye desire, ye shall have them", if when ye pray, thou canst believe. The faith must be strong enough to take Jesus at His word. It must be strong enough to believe that those things which He saith shall come to pass, before the things we desire can be ours. "Again I say unto you, that if two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." This is another promise so great, its possibilities have never been fully realized. Jesus' "anything" is again promised, but the condition is perfect harmony between the two, Jesus in the midst, and the two in harmony with Him.

That night when our Lord gave His very strongest prayer promises, there was leaning upon Jesus' bosom, one of his disciples whom Jesus loved. One who was drinking in and treasuring up every word of that last long, intimate talk of the Master's. Many years after Jesus had said "ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you", after many years of testing and trying out these promises and finding they held good, this same disciple could say, "and this is the confidence that we have in him, that if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us, and if we know that he hears us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of him".

Is your confidence in Him so great, have you proved Him so far in prayer, is your will so completely lost in His that you can say I know that He hears me, I know that I have the petitions that I desired of Him?

MINNIE LOHR

"IN EVERYTHING GIVE THANKS."

By Rev. William J. Hart, D. D.

"Am I to thank God for everything? Am I to thank Him for bereavement, for pain, for poverty, for toil?" These were the questions that George Matheson, blind, but determined, cheerful and successful, asked himself. His answer is noteworthy and voiced in the precise language of Saint Paul: "Be still, my soul; thou hast misread the message. It is not to give thanks for everything, but to give thanks in everything." Such a feeling enabled him to write the lines which will long live:

"O Love that wilt not let me go,
I rest my weary soul in Thee."

"Thank God that things are no worse," folks sometimes say. That doesn't seem to be especially inspiring; yet when we observe, sometimes by contrast, how much worse our condition might really be, there appears to be good sense in the suggestion. An old legend of the King and his Prime Minister carries with it this thought. Thus it runs:

"From the time of the old Revolution
When we threw off the yoke of the king,
Has descended this phrase to remember,
To remember to say and to sing:

"'Twas King George's Prime Minister said it
To the king who had questioned in heat,

What he meant by appointing Thanksgiving
 In such times of ill-luck and defeat.
 'What's the cause of your day of Thanksgiving
 Tell one, pray?' cried the king in his ire,
 Said the Minister, 'This is the reason—
 That things are no worse, O my Sire!'

"And whatever of care and of sadness
 Our life and our duties may bring,
 There is always the cause for Thanksgiving
 Which the Minister told to the king.
 'Tis a lesson to sing and remember;
 It can comfort and warm like a fire,
 Can cheer us when days are the darkest—
 'That things are no worse, O my Sire!'"

Being asked how he acquired the habit of good cheer, which never seems to fail him, Bishop William Burt said to have answered: "Maybe the remark of a child that I once overheard helped me to learn to complain and grumble as little as possible. While I was studying at Milbraham Academy, I spent a few days with this child's father, a good man, but a chronic growler. We were all sitting in the parlor one night, when the question of food arose. The child, a little girl, told cleverly what each member of the household liked best. Finally it came to the father's turn to be described.

"'And what do I like, Naney?' he said, laughing.

"'You,' said the little girl, slowly—'well, you like 'most anything we haven't got.'"

Spurgeon it was who stated that it is a pleasant sight to see anybody thanking God, because the air is heavy with the hum of murmuring and the roads are dusty with complaints and lamentations. A unique suggestion was once made by Dr. Maltbie D. Babcock to the effect, "that instead of having one day set apart for thanksgiving, it would be better to set apart one day for complaining, and cram into it all our worries, leaving the rest of the year clear for gratitude."

When the young students were in military training for positions as officers in the national army at Madison Barracks, N. Y., in the summer of 1917, the idea of community singing in the army was developed, and W. Stanley Hawkins, of Rochester, directed this work. He said the favorite song of the men was "Keep the Home Fires Burning," but the next choice was "Pack Up Your Troubles."

A man paid a superb tribute to his mother when he said that he remembers that as a boy he caught the idea that his mother was always finding "wayside texts," and therefore the children of the family grew up with the feeling that the "world was full of God." If they happened to be walking on a starlit night in winter she would call their attention to the star-studded sky. A note of awe would be in her voice as she remarked, "Just to think that anyone could look at that and then say that there isn't a God!" Then she would repeat the strong words of the psalmist:

"The heavens declare the glory of God;
 And the firmament showeth His handiwork."

Thus it was that in all nature and throughout all life she found evidences of the wisdom and the love of God.

"All things to me are a perfect delight,
 The wind whistling in the night,
 The stars which shine,
 The whole host of Heaven is mine."

The soul, resting in God, is secure in its sense of peace. With unshaken confidence in the Heavenly Father, the saint learns how "in everything to give thanks." The intervening mile between Loch Lomond and Loch Long was covered in a walk by Dr. J. H. Joyett. The impressions made and the lesson learned are thus stated by the famous preacher: "Loch Lomond is an inland lake, and when I left it its waters were disquieted and boisterous, lashing the shore with angry waves. Loch Long is an arm of the sea, and its waters were perfectly calm, and I looked through its lucid depths and see the seaweed rooted on the rocks beneath. And the life of the soul, when it is like a small, measurable lake, is easily disquieted, and little disturbances toss it into convulsions. But when the soul knows God, when it recognizes its vast relationship, when it feels the tidal flow of the infinite within the waters of the breast, it has the secret of a great calm, and the little things leave it undisturbed." Rejoicing Christians used to sing:

"Though waves and storms go o'er my head,
 Though strength and health and friends be gone,
 Though joys be withered all and dead,
 Though every comfort be withdrawn,
 On this my steadfast soul relies,
 Father! Thy mercy never dies."

Are you familiar with those lines, "Fust-Rate and Very Thankful?" They contain the life-story of one who "in everything gave thanks."

"Our country town still holds the fame
 Of Grandma C., a sturdy dame,
 Whose doughty deeds in house and field
 And church her energy revealed,
 And whose undaunted spirit shone
 Through phrase and manner all her own—
 'Fust-rate and very thankful.'

"Of all the echoes from her days
 Most clearly rings that homely phrase
 (It seems a text and sermon, too).
 When she was hailed with 'How d'ye do?'
 From friend or neighbor passing by,
 Unfailing was her quaint reply,
 'Fust-rate and very thankful.'

"No doleful tales had she to tell,
No martyr's murmur, 'pretty well!'
Not she. Her happy chronic state
With unction she announced, 'Fust-rate!'
And with an emphasis as glad,
Her grateful word would always add,
'Fust-rate and very thankful.'

"As the light survives the set of sun
Her bright and cherry word lives on,
A happy influence that spurs
Our hearts to utterance like hers;
And when friends greet us day by day,
Like her, we, blithe and grateful, say,
'Fust-rate and very thankful.' "

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

HENDERSON LETTER

Beginning October 19 and continuing until October 31, we held our annual revival meeting under the leadership of Evangelist Victor Lightbourne, and Mr. Sam Davis, pianist. We realized from the beginning that we should be seriously handicapped because of lack of room, so put forth our best endeavors to secure as large an auditorium as possible, but failed to find any other than one of the other churches, which were kindly offered us. Considering the relatively small increase of seating capacity of these over ours, and from other considerations, we decided to continue the services in our church, which we did until the last day of the meeting, when we secured the Riggan Opera House for all the services.

To say that Lightbourne is great is putting it mildly, in fact, to express an adequate opinion of him, would subject me to criticism from those who have not heard him. Those who do not know me personally would accuse me of exaggeration; my friends, who know my rather conservative attitude toward people and things would probably think that I am beside myself, and that not because of much learning either. And Sam, too, is simply indescribable. He is still the talk of much of the town. Everyone was charmed and delighted with his wonderful improvisations on the old hymns as well as the new.

All the congregations Sunday were good. But at the evening service the opera house, which is said to seat about 1,500, or with the stage, 1,600 or more was filled until one of the managers asked the ushers not to send any more to the galleries.

I find this note is getting too long; so I must close, but with the Editor's permission and the readers' indulgence, I will give in another article an estimate of Mr. Lightbourne and his work as an evangelist.

THANKSGIVING

Two years have elapsed since the signing of the armistice. The Prince of Peace is reigning in more hearts than ever before in the history of the world. We are on a higher plane of civilization than ever before. Uncle Sam stoops to no nation, but is looked upon as a model by the other nations of the world. We as American people, have some of the greatest problems of the world facing us. The nations of the earth are nearer together than ever before. Our national opportunity is the greatest we have ever had. The lovers of Christian Liberty are nearer united than ever before, despite the decline in the efforts of the Interechurch World Movement. God still loves his people. For these things I am truly thankful.

CHURCHES SHOULD TELL THE TRUTH

The ethical element in the creed of the advertising clubs of America is very strong. The motto of the national organization is "Truth." Unless advertising is honest, there soon would be no advertising. It has been the work of some advertising experts to root out the dishonest element in the columns of the various periodicals. The Churches are sometimes represented by advertisements that would meet the condemnation of the experts in the art of publicity. When a congregation announces that it is a friendly Church and yet provides no way for greeting and winning strangers, it has sinned against the code of good publicity men. There was an old method of fulsome announcement of a new minister in a community which was misrepresentation pure and simple. The reports of a great crowd at a church that was but a little more than half filled can be branded as pure falsehood. It does not pay to advertise an inferior article. Only staple goods can reap the full advantage of a publicity campaign. The autumn publicity of the Church should have for its motto "Truth."—Christian Century.

WRONG SIDE OUT

She didn't like the morning
And she knew that it would rain.
She didn't like her breakfast
And she pushed it back again.

At noon 'twas worse than ever,
And she cried for cakes and pie.
She wouldn't eat her dinner,
And she would sit still and cry.

She pouted till the evening
Of this very horrid day,
And all because, so early,
She got up the wrong way!

“THANK YOU” NEVER HURTS

A small boy had a message to deliver to an elderly captain of industry. Afterwards the man of affairs met the boy's father. “Your boy will succeed,” he said sententiously, “because he is polite.”

One of the best features of the Boy Scout movement is that it teaches the market value of manners. Of course, it does not tell the growing lad that the forms of courtesy will put money in his pocket. It does not tell him that he can capitalize “Please” and “Thank you” in dollars and cents. But it teaches him the lesson that the beasts of the jungle taught Kipling's child hero, Mowgli, that a civil tongue in his head will carry him far.

It is such small trouble to use these ceremonies that require but the flicker of an instant of time. And if more flies are caught with honey than with vinegar, have we not often seen how politeness wins where rudeness loses? What is the use of rushing about the world knocking each other over in the hurly-burly of our eagerness to embrace an advantage which the world resents such roughness and yields its prizes instead to those who are gracious and graceful?

Among the best of good manners is promptness. Many persons have many of the sweetest virtues of character and “miss out” because they are too late. They come when the party is over and the fiddlers have gone home, and there is nothing left for them but confusion and regret. They attend a committee session long after it has assembled, figuring that everybody else will be late and so they might as well be dilatory, too. They are amiable pests in society and business. They have to be ruled out when it comes to transactions that must be put through on time. The American Army abroad was an efficient Army because it moved at the zero hour; it kept its appointments with the enemy and its “rendezvous with death.”

Another superior point of good manners is to listen. He has not learned to live right who interrupts in the middle of a sentence, any more than he who talks too long or too miscellaneous. The world wants people in whom the world can repose its confidence, and you cannot tell anything to people who listen with half an ear and half a mind. A great leader of men and of measures declared that his rule for success could be put in one word, “concentration.” He shut out from his mind the extraneous thoughts; he shut himself in with the main idea whenever he was considering a project. So his thoughts moved arrow swift to the mark, not to be diverted. When he listened, the business of listening engaged him; and when he spoke, he did nothing but speak. He didn't talk over the heads before him to posterity; he talked directly and flatly to those present. A vastly successful shipbuilder and steel magnate knows the secret. When he is with you, he is with you only. He seems to be thinking of nothing and nobody else. You feel pleased and inwardly warmed, believing that your business must actually be of moment to his powerful personality. At once he has made a friend of you. When he wats you to do something, you are likely to do it. His personality has a power that mere machinery can never attain.

Never will the human soul be put out of business in human affairs. “Things never yet created things.” It takes people—real people—to stir people. Until the earth shrivels to a cinder and turns utterly cold—as long as our little speck in space is populated—personal influence will count, and in personal influence the deferential and considerate manners that are born of genuine godness of heart count primarily.—Editorial in Public Ledger, Philadelphia.

MY DOG

I have no dog, but it must be Somewhere there's one belongs to me—
A little chap with wagging tail,
And dark brown eyes that never quail,
But look you through and through and through.
With love unspeakable, but true.

Somewhere it must be, I opine,
There is a little dog of mine
With cold black nose that sniffs around
In search of what things may be found
In pocket, or some nook hard by,
Where I have hid them from his eye.

Somewhere my doggie pulls and tugs
The fringes on rebellion rugs,
Or with the mischief of the pup
Chews all my shoes and slippers up,
And, when he's done it to the core,
With eyes all eager, pleads for more.

Somewhere, upon his hinder legs,
My little doggie sits and begs,
And in a wistful minor tone
Pleads for the pleasures of the bone—
I pray it be his owners whim
To yield and grant the same to him!

Somewhere a little dog doth wait,
It may be by some garden gate,
With eyes alert, and tail attent—
You know the kind of tail that's meant—
With stores of yelps of glad delight
To bid me welcome home at night.

Somewhere a little dog is seen,
His nose two shaggy paws between,
Flat on his stomach, one eye shut,
Held fast in dreamy slumber, but
The other opened ready for
His master coming through the door.

NOTES

Rev. J. B. Howard changes his address from Jonesboro, N. C., to Chapel Hill, N. C.

The North Carolina Methodist Protestant Conference is in session at Enfield, N. C., this week.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson will preach at the Burlington church next Sunday morning—also at night.

Read Brother Johnston's appeal in this issue and remember the orphans during Thanksgiving.

Dr. J. W. Harrell, who transferred his membership to the Methodist Episcopal Church last week, has been assigned to the church at Troy, Montgomery County, N. C.

We sympathize with Bro. J. D. Oldham, Elon College, N. C., in the loss of his only son, J. D. Jr., on November 20. The son was in his fourteenth year, and a favorite with the family and College community.

Rev. G. O. Lankford writes from High View, West Virginia, under November 17: "I am here for ten days to assist Rev. A. W. Andes in evangelistic service at Timber Ridge. The meeting has been ushered in with ice and snow. I trust that it may close in spiritual warmth and power."

WHAT SHE WAS GRATEFUL FOR

Finite man can never conceive what it costs God to provide atonement. George Innes, of Philadelphia, in one of his addresses on stewardship, tells of a young girl whom he met in a leper asylum while he was studying missions at first hand in India. Upon the eve of her wedding, she was appalled to learn that she was a leper. All her earthly hopes thus frustrated, she went to the asylum, where at first she was tempted to doubt God's love, but, finding others in worse plight than herself, she tried to comfort them with the comfort whereby she herself in her girlhood had been comforted by Christ, for she had learned of Christ from the missionaries. She led scores of lepers to Christ, with all that that meant of hope and joy. Then she began to thank God for her fate, because of the opportunity it gave her, and for the new light that this dispensation of providence threw upon the meaning of the Scripture which says, "Him who knew no sin he made to be sin on our behalf; that we might become the righteousness of God in him." (2 Cor. 5:21). Although this girl realized that her own service and suffering were by no means vicarious in the sense of that of our Lord, her experiences, both tragic and blessed, helped her toward a better understanding of what he gave up in leaving heaven to have contact with sin in his incarnation, and to make atonement for a lost world. —Sunday School Times.

A BIG MAGNET

One of the most dangerous places in all the seas is near the coast of Denmark, where there is a little island that goes by the name of Bornholm. The seas do not run unusually high about it, nor are the currents strong, but when the mariner approaches it the needle of his compass begins to act in the strangest and most unaccountable manner. Instead of pointing north it switches around and points to Bornholm, so that if it happens to be dark and stormy the pilot may guide his ship straight on the rocks, thinking he is making due north. This strange condition exists for the reason that Bornholm consists almost entirely of magnetite or magnetic iron, and it draws the compass needle like a powerful horseshoe magnet.

This influence is felt even at a distance of miles, and on the island being sighted by mariners on the Baltic Sea they at once discontinue steering their course by the needle, and turn, instead, to the well-known lighthouses to direct their craft. Between Bornholm and the mainland there is also a bank of rock under water which is very dangerous to navigation, and because of its being constantly submerged vessels have been frequently wrecked at this point. The peculiar fact in this case is that the magnetic influence of this ore bank is so powerful that a magnetic needle suspended freely in a boat over the bank will point down, and if not disturbed, will remain in a perfectly perpendicular line.—Selected

LOSING COLLEGE BOYS AND GIRLS

We have just read of a rector in an Episcopalian parish who in the presence of the writer of this item took his pencil and crossed out of his membership book the names of a half dozen or more young folk who had that morning gone away to college—in this instance to tax-supported colleges. Very well. How easy to cross off those names! How impossible to write down other equal number of names who can take and fill the places of those so easily eliminated in the long years of influence which stretch ahead.

Our own pastors may not take out their pencils and deliberately erase the names of their young folk from membership lists. Really they don't have to do that in order to have the Church lose them. They need only to neglect them; they need only to neglect to write the college pastor about them; they need only to let those young folks drift, while their pastors are indifferent to their care by the Church at the college town. That is all. No such physical weariness as sharpening a pencil and turning the pages of the membership book and using up the physical energy necessary to cross out the names. Just neglect the young folks. Let it become plain to them that their pastor does not care for their interest and even salvation the price of a two-cent stamp. That is all that is necessary to have the Church lose several hundreds—yes, thousands—of her choicest young lives. —Central Christian Advocate.

STONE-MARTIN

A beautiful autumn wedding took place Tuesday afternoon, November 16, 1920, at three o'clock, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Henry Martin in Colonial Place, Norfolk, Va., when their only daughter, Miss Louise Taylor Martin, became the bride of Mr. Clarence Edward Stone, formerly of Chicago, but now of Norfolk.

The home was artistically decorated with palms, ferns and Southern smilax. The bridal party entered the spacious drawing room to the strains of the beautiful Lohengrin wedding march, rendered on the violin by Mr. Alvah Barlow.

The ceremony which was solemnized before an improvised altar of white lattice entwined with Southern smilax, amid palms and ferns and soft shaded lights, was performed by the bride's pastor, Dr. L. E. Smith, of the Third Christian church, Norfolk, the impressive ring ceremony being used.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was lovely in a stylish traveling suit of manking blue peach bloom cloth and hat of the same shade. Her flowers were a shower bouquet of bride's roses and lillies of the valley.

Miss Mary Alice Plummer of Portsmouth, Virginia, was the bride's maid of honor and only attendant. She wore a lovely afternoon frock of soft brown crepe satin beaded, and a large picture hat. Her flowers were an arm bouquet of Ophelia roses.

The bride-groom had as his best man Mr. Clyde W. Rogers.

Following the ceremony there was a large reception held, and later in the afternoon, Mr. and Mrs. Stone left for an extended honeymoon through the west. After the fifteenth of December, they will be at home to their friends with the bride's parents at 537 Maryland Avenue, Colonial Place, Norfolk, Virginia.

Mrs. Stone was formerly a student at Elon College.

SOCKWELL

Mrs. Mollie Sockwell, widow of Robert Sockwell, died at her home in Guilford County, N. C., November 12, 1920, after a lingering illness. She was in her seventy-fifth year and had been a member of Bethlehem church since early life. She leaves one daughter and many relatives. Her husband and eleven children preceded her to the spirit world. Funeral and interment at Frieden's Lutheran church, conducted by the pastor, Rev. Von Riser, and the writer. A good woman has fallen asleep in Jesus.

MADDOX

Sister Hettie Maddox died November 3, 1920, at the age of forty-two years, and was buried at Moore Union Christian church the following day. Her health had been on the decline for more than a year. She professed faith in Christ very early in life and joined the church at Moore Union where she has lead a beautiful Christian life.

The deceased leaves to mourn their loss, a husband, three sisters, five brothers and a host of relatives and friends. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. McLaurin of the Presbyterian church. May God bless the bereaved family.

IRELAND

Daniel Milton Ireland departed this life November 12, 1920, at the age of fifty-one years and three months. He connected himself with Berea Christian church very early in life. When his father died he took charge of the family, and was in a sense, a father to his sisters, neices and nephews, and proved himself faithful in this capacity.

Surviving are four sisters, two brothers, and many friends. The crowd that attended the funeral was proof of his many acquaintances and friends. The floral offerings were beautiful. Burial services by the writer, assisted by Rev. A. F. Isley. May God bless those who mourn for this beloved brother.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

MINISTER VERSUS PREACHER

The old contention that there is nothing in a name and that a rose would smell the same if called by some other name—may be true in some instances, but untrue in others. We argue not the point, but point out the significance of what a word may have. "Preacher" is an old word. It had its origin in the days when the Word was preached to the multitudes. The word suggests public delivery of the message—and that is what it is. It is interesting to note that Christ in addressing His disciples used the word teaching before He said preaching.

The Church is breaking away from the word "preacher" and using the word "minister." The word minister is a broader and more significant term. In it is both implied and expressed the need of the present conditions of the world. With great intelligence among the people, they are not so much in need of a preacher as they are of a minister. Christ did not say that He came to preach. "I came not to be ministered unto, but to minister."

The foreign minister of a country (or for a country) is not an instructor for public assemblies, but a guardian of the rights of his people. He ministers in their behalf. A man may be a great preacher but a poor minister. The man who can go among his people and meet all conditions, carry sunshine into dark rooms, spiritual right into places of business, and be a man among men, is a far better man for the average church than a great preacher—a man who can hold an audience by his eloquence.

Emphasis is now on service, and the man who ministers is the man who serves. The preacher instructs. The minister does more—he instructs and ministers.

Our colleges and seminaries would do well to shift the emphasis from public speech to public service. "He went about doing good" is one of the greatest epitaphs that can be written of any man.

The lack of oratory should be no hindrance for a young man entering the ministry. If he can minister to his people, his acts of love and mercy will speak so loud that he will be heard.

The country church that is satisfied with preaching alone and will not provide for ministering to its people will surely die. The day for such service has passed, though the controlling powers of the Church are satisfied to see some congregations eke out their existence for the lack of real ministering.

Is yours a preacher or a minister? Which?

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

The other day we listened to an address by Dr. H. W. Chase, president of the University of North Carolina. Dr. Chase chose for his topic that present day theme—"Christian Education." The speaker's treatment was not theoretical, philosophical, or in any way impractical. It was plain and practical, and said Dr. Chase, "No man is educated who is not educated to serve his fellow-man instead of selfish interests." That is not a new emphasis, but one that needs to be repeated again and again. We are glad that influential men in Dr. Chase's position take such a stand. It is an index that the Church has a larger field in the realm of Christian education than to point out the defects of the State institutions. These defects can never be remedied by destructive criticism. There is a cooperation that the Church can use in connection with the State's Colleges and bring Christian training to them. It would be unwise for the State to attempt it, and likewise it would be folly for the State not to provide for the training of her youth.

The Church should have no desire to control the institutions of learning owned by the State, but the Church can influence the plastic minds that attend these institutions. The Church cannot do this by being aloof. The Church can reach these young men and women by churches, endowed chairs to give a definite type of instruction, etc. Shall the Church enter this open door?

A GOOD SUGGESTION

W. P. Baker, Literary editor of the Syracuse, New York, Post-Standard, we note from the Christian Advocate (Nashville), has a good idea of circulating valuable books. Mr. Baker names it his "Shelfless Library." His plan is this: when he finds a good book, one that is interesting to him, he reads it and instead of keeping it, passes it along to someone else, who, he thinks, will appreciate it. The following agreement is also passed along with the book on a slip of paper about six by four inches: "The rules of the library are these: The borrower agrees to put this book on his reading table, not on his book-shelf, and to read it without delay. He agrees when he has read it to pass it on to a friend who, he believes, will be interested."

This is a good suggestion and should be appropriated by those who do reading during these long winter evenings. We venture a further suggestion along this same line: Pass along your papers, especially your religious papers, and let your friends and neighbors enjoy them with you.

THE INTERCHURCH MOVEMENT AGAIN

The reorganization committee of the Interchurch Movement was in session November 3-5, in an effort to get the affairs of the Movement in some definite shape. The indebtedness of the Movement is being paid out of funds provided by the denominational boards which under-wrote the Movement's loans last year. We note that the Methodist Episcopal Board of Foreign Missions has paid more than a million dollars into the Interchurch treasury for this purpose. We note also that the Disciples of Christ are also very heavy losers. That denomination has set Sunday, December 12, as a day to make a special offering to help meet the obligations of its boards.

The financial part of the Interchurch Movement is a sad chapter. No doubt but that some good has come out of the surveys and the activity, which caused great numbers of men to do some religious work for the first time, but in general the whole thing seems to be a failure.

PATCHED AND PADDED SERMONS

We take the following from the Pacific Methodist-Advocate, which we think is worthy of reproduction, and also worthy of consideration:

"What would you preach on today, if you were in my place?" This question a young preacher asked one Sunday of one of his lady members, a lady celebrated for her plainness of speech. "If I were in your place and had made no preparation up until now and did not even know what I should preach about, I wouldn't preach at all." Right. And we wish this could be said to every lazy idler who lets a whole week slip by and then on Saturday night or Sunday morning grab up "Peloubet's Notes" or a bone-dry volume of "Skeletons" and steals off to steal a sermon. It's an offense against his God, his sacred calling, and an insult to his people. We know of preachers doing this very thing, and we have even heard them brag about it. Shame on them! Of course they bragged about how quickly they could prepare a sermon, and they seemed to imply that they held the world's championship for throwing sermons together in the shortest space of time. The only question we had after we heard them was that it took as long as they claimed. The sermon which, like Solomon Grundy, is born on Sunday, will take sick on Monday, get worse on Tuesday, die on Wednesday, be buried on Thursday, and the same thing said of Solomon can be said of such sermons—"that was the last of it."

LIGHTHOUSE OBSERVATIONS

J. E. MASSEY
A WAVE OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Unemployment is one of the biggest problems which the public as well as the employer has to deal with at the present time. Manufacturing concerns, especially in textile industries of the country, are turning off employees by the thousands, consequently increasing the army of idle people daily.

The cause of this wave of unemployment is difficult to express in terms of any one particular thing. Of course it is to be attributed mostly to the changing of industries from their war-time basis to normal peace-time basis. During the war new industries were builded up and many old ones thrived from abnormal conditions. Now that their products are in less demand, and that the public has struck for lower prices, these industries are undergoing changes to suit normal times. Employees that flocked to these industrial centers of the country find they will have to either go back to the country, town or city from which they came, or that they will have to switch off into some other industry, or department of the industry in which they have been working.

This unemployment, as it has been stated, is sweeping the whole country, but no where is it felt more keenly than in the large industrial centers of the North and East. Detroit which normally has a transient working population of 10,000, at the present time has 75,000 idle,—with nothing to do but drift around, dissatisfied, unrestful, seeking other jobs which are in many instances inferior to the ones which they have occupied during the war times. Some cotton mills of New England have been closed on account of the present slack in trading conditions, causing many to lose their weekly support, while in the South similar conditions of unemployment or lower wages have caused unrest among textile workers.

The old saying: "the idle brain is the devil's workshop", ought to remind the public that these unemployed must be given something to do—something to keep off a possible wave of crime which usually follows idleness. There is no need for any pessimistic outlook of the situation developed thus far. Optimism,—a brotherly feeling for the "fellow without the job" by helping him find employment, is about the best means to solve the problem.

DECREASE IN CRIME

Judging by the smaller numbers of arrests and imprisonments in New York City and other large cities, there has been a marked decrease in crime during the last ten months. According to the report of Sheriff Knott of the Tombs Prison (New York City), there has been more than 2,000 fewer arrests made since March, than there was in the same length of time previous to that date.

Though the Sheriff declines to speculate on whether the dry law was in any way responsible for this decrease, undoubtedly less liquor has helped to make less crime. One never sees the drunken victims of the "old days" when breweries were active and bar-rooms were frequented from morn till night. It is very seldom now, that one finds a drunken person anywhere about these places which once bred such a large percentage of the city's crime. Another thing that is to be taken into account is that since the war people have become better adjusted to peace-time conditions. No doubt there will be a still greater decrease in crime, provided people find employment and keep busy during the critical labor adjustment period, through which we are now passing.

CONTINUOUS TROUBLE IN IRELAND

Ireland seems to continue to be one of England's biggest problems. Every day brings news of clashes between the Sinn Feiners and British Royal troops. On Sunday, November 21, fourteen officers and civilians were shot and killed in a Dublin hotel, presumably because they were connected with courtmartial proceedings against Sinn Feiners.

England has planned to put on a rigorous drive against these agitators of Irish freedom and independence. But unless England can affect a settlement of Ireland's troubles soon, the tide may turn so strongly against the Royalists that the world will fare better with a self-governed Ireland. The situation seems to be more and more like a "house divided against itself,"—a very difficult thing to make stand.

SCOTLAND GOING DRY BY DEGREES

Though the last election held in Scotland in November was not a complete victory for the prohibitionists, it showed that they have not fought in vain. Out of the one hundred and ninety-six districts which voted, twenty-four voted to reduce license and eighteen will go dry. The prohibition-workers will continue their campaign with hopes of gaining other districts in the next election in spite of the rather "canny" attitude shown by many of the Scots.

DR. FRANK CRANE SAYS:

Tyranny, grafting, bulldozing, and swindling are not inherent in any scheme, nor the exclusive possession of any class. They are inherent in human nature.

Any absolute monarchy contains within itself the seed of abuse.

The more honest a man is, the more pleased he is to have his accounts audited and his doings watched.

The wicked it is that continue to love darkness rather than light.

A good deal of railings of one class at another are in substance no more than accusations against that evil nature that is common to all classes.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

VISITING THE CONFERENCES

I attended the Eastern Virginia Conference at Holy Neck where I used to attend church seventy-five or eighty years ago. The old preachers who were there when I attended church have all passed away. Uriah Rawles and Joshua Livesay were some of the first ministers whom I knew there. These were followed by William Jones, R. H. Holland Robert Rawles; also W. B. Wellons, who, however, was not a pastor there.

Great has been the change. The old plank house which used to be there has been substituted by a brick building, modern in its equipment and everything is very convenient. It is one of the best country churches I know of and is located in one of the best communities. I was glad to be present and shake the hands of so many children and grandchildren of people I once knew.

We had a pleasant Conference. Everything went off nicely and was thoroughly provided for. There was possibly twice as much dinner every day as was consumed; good accomodation at night and a great many more could have been taken care of with ease.

After having made a most pleasant visit at Holland, I went to Norfolk. Here I met Frank Hitch, who married my niece, who died several years since. Two of his children, Arthur Hitch, and Mrs. Pinkney Pane, have nice families coming on and their grandfather is so proud of the children (Also their Uncle James.) I attended service at the Third church on Sunday and it was a pleasant service. I spent a few days in Norfolk the following week, visiting my relatives, and enjoyed the time thoroughly.

After leaving Norfolk, I stopped over in Henderson, N. C., where I spent a day and night with Miss Dora Ayscue and her sisters—all my spiritual children. There I met several persons afflicted, and these I prayed for. I shook the hands of so many dear friends.

I attended the North Carolina Conference which convened at Parks' Cross Roads, beginning November 16. I spent the time while there with Mrs. Wellons Parks, whose home is near the church. The weather was so rainy and cold the first day that I could not attend. The meeting of the Conference was pleasant. I attended Conference at this place in 1853—sixty-seven years ago, it being the first of the Conferences held here. At that time the house was on old building, hewn down and nicely dressed, but did not excell the capacity it needed for its congregation. I joined the Conference in 1854 and arrangements were made for me to preach at that place, with other churches as a circuit. I preached here three years— 1855, 1856 and 1857. My labors resulted in much good. It had been a custom with different denominations to criticise other churches severely. They had been accustomed to criticising ours and calling us a society without any legal authority to marry, administer the ordinances of the Church, etc. I at once took them up and proposed to discuss these questions with them, and the other preachers said, "James, they will whip you to death—you are only a boy." I replied that if they did, I would get it in the face—I would not be running. We soon changed the tide, notwithstanding the opposition we had, and we all worked out smoothly together. This was a dear people to me.

The Conference this year was a pleasant session, and resulted in much good, I hope, for our Church. The meeting place of the Conference is an excellent country church, and was ready, able and willing to take care of the Conference. However, owing to bad weather, they possibly did not have half those expected to accomodate who were expected, and that they were prepared for. Some who prepared for company were entirely disappointed at not having any.

We did not make arrangements for all the churches to have preaching this coming year, but trust that we will be able to do so soon. The next session of this Conference meets at Danville, Va.

I am at home again, but am anticipating one more trip before I go into winter quarters. I will report this trip in a later note to THE SUN.

THREE SUNDAYS IN THE STATE CAPITOL

On November 3, this writer and his companion came to the Capitol city to live. No special significance to November 3, except that happened to be the day when most politicians receive notice to move. On arrival we were met by Bros. C. H. Stephenson, son Hermis and P. T. Hines, who arranged for us to go to the Bland Hotel for lunch, after which time through the kindness of Brother Hermis Stephenson we saw the city and were brought to our home about 3:30 p. m., where we are now conveniently and happily established.

We are conscious of the fact that we are following a long line of great and good men in the Raleigh work—and that makes us all the more anxious about the work. We are finding a number of interesting things about the work that are exceedingly hopeful. One in particular is the church organization. We never saw a church better organized. This credit goes to Rev. Geo. D. Eastes and a number of busy business men of the church, who believe in putting things on business basis.

The church has an official board composed of twenty men of the church under leadership of Mr. P. T. Hines, that meets and discusses church problems, business problems of the work, monthly programs, new undertakings and report to the church conference. I have never seen a board of any kind more harmonious and enthusiastic over its work. Such a board puts new life in the pastor, for he is aware that they are upholding his hands and knows the work will have to succeed—as we lift our hearts to God for it.

Yesterday was our third Sunday in the city. At each of the services, congregations have been fine. Yesterday being the best of all. Interest in the Sunday school under leadership of Prof. L. L. Vaughan, the C. E. under leadership of Miss Gladys Poole, the Woman's Missionary Aid Society under leadership of Mrs. L. L.

Vaughan, are all making fine progress and have had some live meetings. Our C. E. is leading the Thanksgiving Service with a sunrise prayer meeting, and we predict a great time. The offering will go to the Baby Home at the Orphanage.

There seems to be no reason why the work should not go. There is more real enthusiasm among the members for the work than any church I have seen. The greatest need of the work, as I see it, is an adequate church edifice. But this will come later. The church is putting on a very elaborate program for next year. This includes a program of "Community Service" large enough to reach all country churches, culminating in a one week institute in our church, in the spring or summer. The team for this work will soon be organized.

Other reports from church services, and general work will be given later, and especially of the church program, which a congregational meeting of the church will discuss on Wednesday night. We ask the Conference churches as a whole to pray for the work here. We need a strong, live wideawake organization here, and the foundation for it is already laid. There is no reason why we should not go forward with a work like we have here.

POUNDED

Saturday before the second Sunday in this month, and Sunday included, Piney Plains church gave me and wife a very fine pounding. There was included so many good things for the table that it would be almost impossible to mention them all. One thing in particular deserves mention because of its unusual appearance in pounding, and that was a pound of pennies.

We appreciate these good things from this kind and generous people and most of all appreciate the spirit that prompted the gift. May our heavenly Father richly repay them and make me far more useful in this church.

THANKSGIVING SERVICE

The Christian Endeavor society of the First Christian church, Raleigh, N. C., held a unique and very happy Thanksgiving service at 7:00 A. M. Thanksgiving Day. This had been announced and heralded as a "Sun-Rise" service and when "Old Sol" actually appeared above the eastern horizon he found a great crowd of people, young and old (no, all young), waiting for him. Special invitations had been given to the other C. E. Societies and B. Y. P. U's of the city to come. Quite a number of these people did, helping to swell the local congregation to a large and appreciative audience for the program was rendered as follows:

Subject: "Thanksgiving"; Leader: Rev. J. Vincent Knight; Song, Praise God From Whom all Blessings Flow; President's Proclamation, Miss Gladys Poole; Governor's Proclamation, Mr. L. N. Brown; Prayer; Song, "America"; Scripture lesson, Psalms 103; Leader's Remarks; Special Music, Miss Mae Stephenson, Miss Louise Brockwell; For What Am I Most Thankful; Everybody; Song, "In The Sweet By and By"; Closing, A Chain of Prayers.

Following this service a Thanksgiving offering was received which will be sent to the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C., for the benefit of Children's Home.

SUFFOLK LETTER

Much has been written on the question of aliens in America, and grave questions remain for solution. When America's population was small, and laborers were needed, immigration was encouraged and immigrants were welcome. Recent years have revealed dangers to the peace and integrity of the Republic. The question of religion enters into the equation, race is a factor, and language is not the least of the problems to be solved by this country.

The influx of large numbers of Negroes from the South into the Northern cities, where there is a large foreign population, has caused race and industrial trouble, and, in some cases, riot and bloodshed.

But this letter was not intended to discuss these interesting and important questions.

This is a letter written on what is understood as the Negro question. I wish to say a few things about the Negro race, and his place in American life. It is the only race outside of native whites that is genuinely American. Other races cling to their language, their traditions, love for the country from which they came, and many of them return to their native land, after they have saved some money; and many of them send their earnings back to their native country. One would think that the Negro, since he was brought to America and remained in slavery for nearly a hundred years, would want to return to his native land; but not so. He has no love for Africa, he does not want to return to Africa, he sends no money to Africa, he would not speak the African language, if he could; he is genuinely American.

The Negro race is the most musical and most religious race; but he cares nothing for the religion of his forefathers. He accepts the Bible and the Christian religion with a simple and loyal faith. No skeptic has been found in the Negro race. As a race it is docile, friendly, happy, and useful. Had the race been left free from suggestions by would-be missionaries and teachers, the South would be the freest, the happiest, and the most prosperous area in the world. Designing or ignorant men and women, have led the race away from their greatest opportunity and their highest interests. Misguided and designing leaders of their own race, inspired by imported suggestions, have created feelings that do not belong to either race as they live together in the South. I will suggest that the white and colored races in the South are held together by a natural bond of sympathy and good will stronger than any other opposite races in the world. They really love each other in the true relation of the races, and one can hardly get along without the other. Left to their own thought, their own sympathies, their own religious and civic ideas, they would cooperate in the finest type of civilization.

The enforced importation of the Negro race and his settlement in America was, in results, like the deliverance of the Israelites from Egyptian bondage. Slavery in this country was far better than life in Africa; and led to their freedom and the prospect of a great future. The Negro race is the only race that has no competition in his own field. Think of the $100,000,000 earned with his fingers in picking out the 10,000,000 bales of cotton in the Sunny South. No machine can drive him from that field. Think of the deluded people who neglect poor foreigners in their own cities and weep over the happy Negroes in their genial clime.

ENCOURAGEMENT AND COUNSEL

Dear Brethren and Sisters of the Alabama Conference:

To my mind, the greatest opportunity that has ever been presented to our Church came when the Men and Millions Movement was introduced, and great numbers of our people made pledges to that fund. In fact, the most of our people gave as they were able to give, but since that time everything has gone to the bottom and times have so changed that I know some of them will be unable to redeem their pledges for this year. But brethren do not get discouraged. The Lord will provide. Let us pay what we can and strive to meet our obligations in the future.

I am sure that no section of our country has been so hard hit as the South. But do not forget God and His Kingdom. There are a number of people in our great South who are unable to pay their rent, or provision debt, or for their fertilizer. Some are not able to buy shoes and clothes to keep their families comfortable this winter. I, for one, expect these people to redeem their pledges fully for this year, but what I am trying to impress on your mind is the fact that our pledges were made in good faith, and we must not forget our Kingdom promises. We should pay what we can now and trust Him to provide for us to live and meet the demands later on.

There is not so much danger in times of depression as there is in times of prosperity. If we forget God we plunge ourselves into idolatry and defeat. If we remember Him, He will lead us out into a large place. God bless the struggling men and women of our Church, for I am in hearty sympathy with them and am praying for them every day.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

When you read this letter "Thanksgiving Day" will have passed. But we will long remember what a beautiful day it was. Clear, cool sunshiny and pleasant. How thankful each of us ought to have been when we looked back over the past year and counted our many blessings.

I trust that many who enjoyed the beautiful day made themselves the happier by remembering the little children at the Christian Orphanage. We are trying to raise the largest Thanksgiving offering this year in the history of the institution. Will our faith in you be made stronger by your offering on that day?

Will you help us reach the goal we are striving to reach? The value of one day's work seems to be appealing to our people, as a number have sent in checks.

Don't forget that our goal from the first of November to the last of the year is $10,000. Just ten rungs in the ladder to climb and we have already passed two of them and nearly up to the third one.

We are already looking up toward the top one and we have faith enough to believe you will push us up there by the end of the year. You have been so loyal to me that my faith has grown from year to year and you have always seen to it that I reached each goal.

REV. E. K. McCORD, MISSIONARY*

John 15:13, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

I am to speak to you tonight of a man who had this greater love.

Edward Knapp McCord was born October 28, 1870 at Wallkill, N. Y., and died in Dayton, Ohio, April 26, 1920—thus lacking six months and two days of rounding out a half century of earthly existence in the flesh.

He worked hard on a farm in his boyhood days, and at the age of seventeen was born again, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, but of God, and at once united with the church. He was educated in the public schools of his community, in the high school at Newberry, N. Y., his collegiate training being at Starkey Seminary and at the Christian Biblical Institute. June 29, 1897 he was married to Miss Edith Powell, who was the daughter of Rev. D. E. and Rachel Powell. To this union were born a son and a daughter, who with the widow, survive him.

He was ordained to the ministry of the Word in the Christian Church by the N. Y. Southern Christian Convention, in 1895, when he was twenty-five years of age, and immediately entered upon the pastorate of the Christian church at Binghamton, N. Y. After serving this church acceptably from April 1895 till December 1898, he was called to the pastorate of Wolfeboro, N. H., and was in this pastorate till December 1899, when he decided to dedicate his life to the service of God in a foreign land, and amongst a people groping in heathen darkness because they had not the Gospel of the Son of God. Accordingly he was put under appointment by our Mission Board in October 1899 and assigned to work in Japan. With wife and child he sailed from San Francisco January 24, 1900, and reached Tokio, the following month. He gave eight years to mastering the Japanese language and preaching, teaching, and scattering the good news of Salvation through Christ, on this first trip. On February 6, 1908 he landed in America on his first furlough, and spent three years in the home land endeavoring with all the consecrated energy and devoted strength he could command to awaken our people at home to a sense of Japan's great need of the Gospel and of our responsibility to supply that need.

Early in January 1911 he returned to Japan, and for more than six years literally poured out his life, among the multitudes of unsaved Japanese who moved him with compassion and with pity because they were indeed sheep without a shepherd. In July 1917 he landed in America on his second furlough, from which without his knowing it, he was to go no more to the land of the cherry blossom and pagan darkness, a land which he had learned to suffer for and to love as he did his own soul; but from that furlough was to go on April 26, of this present year to the land where the rose of Sharon fills the gardens of paradise with divine fragrance, and ladens the air with the holy incense of heavenly love.

From July 1917 to April 26, the time of his going away, contrary to the counsel of his friends and associates he worked at a pace beyond human endurance, and ere he knew it the brittle cord of life was snapped. Here was a life that burnt itself out with twenty years of incessant toil and burden bearing. Do you see how those twenty years divided themselves?—fourteen in the foreign field, toiling by day and by night, to bring home to the Japanese the story and the life of our Christ; six years here in America trying to bring home to our hearts the needs of the Japanese for the gospel and to awaken us to a sense of our responsibility in sending them the gospel. At the time of his sudden and unexpected death he was acting Secretary of Missions, and was editing The Christian Missionary, and was preaching, lecturing, teaching missions to our people in all parts of our Zion.

I have taken some pains to bring these facts to your attention as a background of that larger and better life our missionary lived, and to serve as a foundation of that structure which he so nobly reared for our help and inspiration.

A life like McCord's cannot be pressed into historic statement, but is expressed in the service he rendered and the sacrifices he made that the world through him might be better, and the Christ he served should be glorified.

There were two outstanding elements in McCord's character I wish to speak of:

I. His unswerving devotion to a great principle.

The two most powerful forces in the world are principles and personalities. It is by these two forces that the living movements of the world are advanced, by the truths which they embody and the men who embody them. They are different. Great principles exist separate and apart from personalities. Great truths, that is to say, great principles, existed before men discovered them, and apart from any man that discovered them. Truth is truth whether man discovers it or not. That the world was round and not flat, was a truth centuries before man discovered it. Man's blood circulated in his own body ages before Harvey ever found it out and told the rest about it. All right principles exist independently of their discovery and are ever operating on life by the Divine Spirit. We believe this because we believe in God who is the truth. But we hold also that God is seeking men who will advance the truth by making it a part of themselves; and who will give to principles a home and a leverage in their personalities. It is the very glory of God that He is truth; that is to say, He is what we want to have. God is Truth. Man holds truth, or in instances truth seems to grip and hold man. A great truth grips a man like a vise and the truth seems to constrain the man and send him forth.

This man of whom I speak, was gripped and sent forth into our world with a great truth. That truth literally dominated all he did, controlled him in his every act. It was this great and gripping truth I read you from John's Gospel, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends". And who were this man's friends? They were the multitudes in a heathen land who did not and could not worship God, because they knew nothing of God so that they might worship Him. He offered up his life that they might have life and have it more abundantly through Jesus Christ whom to know aright is life everlasting. May I read you what one of his colleagues on the foreign field wrote of him while he was yet on the field there:

"Being left parentless while young he had to step lively and he keeps it up. This fits him for being a good missionary in the work here. He must travel much in his large field, and he goes all the way from trains, on his own feet. He preaches anywhere; in church, if there is one; in lodging houses; at tea houses, with a box for a desk, and with a background of beer boxes; in private houses, and by the wayside; through all kinds of weather, through heat and cold, water and snow, and slush and mud, he goes and after that he keeps on going." He had to go. A great principle controlled him; a great truth gripped him, and he went forth to lay down his life for his friends. And now let me give you a word of testimony to this man's controlled and obedient life. This word is from a Japanese in Tokyo, Rev. Mr. Matsuno of our Japanese Christian Conference, "He spoke our language even better than many of us. A man of sound judgement, with a bleeding heart: full of jokes and full of tears; loving and beloved, his life was to us a real pattern of Christian modesty." Here then was a man dominated with a great and undying principle, that principle that would cause a man to lay down his life for his friends.

(*Memorial address by J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary Southern Christian Convention at Burlington Christian church, under the auspices of the Woman's Missionary Society, Sunday p. m., November 7, 1920)

II. He had an indomitable faith that would not let him be Conquered.

Out yonder in Japan he saw the millions perishing without Christ, yet he was never conquered or discouraged. He had the faith to believe they would be reached through Christ. Here at home he saw a church indifferent, unconcerned, not sensible of their responsibility. Yet he had the faith to believe we would some day wake up. This drove him to work often 18 to 20 hours a day. But his faith in us and in God never faltered. It gave him a vision of things afar off. He veritably wrought as one seeing the invisible, for he sought a city which hath foundations and whose builder is God. Such faith we have record of in the world's category of the really good and great in Hebrews eleventh chapter. And as these obtained a good report through faith, but received not the promise because God provided some better thing for us that they without us should not be made perfect, so the highest tribute any of us can pay McCord is to make his life perfect by carrying on the work which he so well began and for which he gave his life. His perfection depends upon us. Shall we fail him now, or shall we in faith and love bend ourselves to the completion of the great task to which he dedicated his life?

DEVOTIONAL

WHAT DOES "CHRISTIAN" MEAN?

Great words come into popular use without bringing any definite content with them. Ask twenty men in succession what they mean by "democracy," and their answers will be not only different but conflictive. The same confusion will mark response to inquiry about "Americanism." No wonder if it appears regarding the word "Christian." That is not because it is vague, but because it is vital—so vital that it has many aspects appealing to differing needs of men.

Nor are the differences of reply confusing until one is insisted upon to the exclusion of the others. It is not saying that one idea is true, but that no other idea is true, which makes the confusion. And even this confusion is not the serious element in the matter. The root trouble is the weak consent to consider every meaning unimportant because there are so many others. There is not much to choose between the mind that sets itself up as a final judge over all other minds, requiring that they see and express vital truth as it does, and the mind too spineless to have any convictions because so many other convictions on the same subject are conceivable.

Plainly, "Christian" must have some connection with Christ—with what he taught or with his spirit or with himself. The circle or divergence must have a radius leading back to him as center. It may sweep a wide field as Paul's preaching did, but the center controls it.

It is proper to use the word "Christian" to describe an ideal, though it may be far from achievement. In so far it is like the word "democracy" for "world brotherhood." Public speakers often declare that America is not a Christian nation, and of course it is not, if they mean that its ideal is achieved. Yet it may be called a Christian nation if by the word is meant that its predominant ideals are of the Christian type. In the same senses it is and yet is not a democracy. Sometimes there occur in it hideous contradictions to anything that can be called Christian, but the thing that makes them hideous and impossible is their contradiction to ideals more widely accepted than cynics are ready to admit.

The same use of the word applies to many men. They do unworthy deeds, and critics declare that they are not Christians or they would not do so and so, and that is true, if being a Christian means having accepted sincerely an ideal of life. An early believer declared that at a certain point he had not attained but was only following after in hope that he might some day attain what was yet only an ideal. All the while he was "Christian," and so may a nation or a Church or any other man be Christian.

The word can be used to describe a spirit, and attitude toward the world and toward other men. In Scripture there is no name given to the system of faith that we call the Christian religion. It is not called either a religion or Christian. Neither word occurs more than three times in the whole Bible and they are nowhere connected. The commonest Bible word to describe it is "The Way." It was recognized by enemies and believers as a way of living, an outlook on life. Room would be left in it for manifold expressions of the spirit, and possibly some men who have lived by it might behave so differently from others that they might be thought to have different codes. But the test would be not in what was done so much as in the spirit that controlled the doer.

To be sure, the word "Christian" in this meaning does not obviate the need of intelligence in discovering the way in which deeds should be done. The world cannot be renovated merely by having a group of people with the Christian spirit, unless they are willing to find out wise ways of expressing it. A general feeling of love is necessary, of course, but it must work out the solving of its problems by sheer intelligence. It is love that safeguards men from shrewdness and its meanness, but it is intelligence that safeguards love from weakness and irresponsibility. This needs to be kept in mind when the Church faces labor and racial and world situations. The Church may be Christian in spirit and yet be unwise, but it is sure to be unwise if it is not Christian in spirit.

The word "Christian" may be used also to express a personal relation to Christ, with or without an adequate extension of it to one's fellow men. For a long time being a Christian was thought of almost exclusively as a matter of eternity and God. In the reaction against that, and in enthusiasm for the second great commandment, it has become common to declare that a man is not a Christian if he fails or goes wrong in some social act.

Along with that goes the current assurance that a man is a Christian when he is socially right, even though he pays no attention whatever to God or his will. It is well to come back once in a while to the fact that being a Christian is not all impersonal and social, that a man may be rightly called a Christian when he accepts Christ's relation to God, even though he may not see or realize how much that demands in social duties.

The word "Christian" is too rich to be restricted to any one use of it. And the ideal ought to be to give it its full content in life, no matter what content lips may give it.—The Continent

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

A COMING NECESSITY

(The Herald of Gospel Liberty)

To read the statistics which show that only ten percent of the Sunday-school teachers in a city like Dayton are taking any sort of teachers' training, and to know that only a very small number of the other ninety percent ever have had any such training of any kind, is to realize the desperate need for the pastors and churches throughout the country immediately to be stirred in some way to a realization of the fact that our Sunday schools are practically failures measured by the standards of real educational institutions. And they never can hope to do any better until they be given a trained and qualified teaching staff.

Somehow it has been slow to enter into the minds of church people that it is just as imperative to have trained teachers in the Sunday school as it is an educated ministry in the pulpit. The pupils in the Sunday school are even more impatient with ignorant and disqualified teachers than the people in the pew are with unprepared ministers. For the great majority of the Sunday school pupils are daily in contact, in the public school, with the most highly qualified teaching, under conditions most conducive to thorough study and learning—and that which they find in the Sunday school makes a sad contrast indeed to their day school work. This will grow increasingly true as a still larger and larger percent of our Sunday school pupils come to be those who have been educated in modern high schools and colleges. This condition makes it absolutely imperative upon every church to plan at once to make improvements in the teaching ability of its Sunday school staff.

Of course it is out of the question for the average Sunday school to make a sweeping and immediate reformation. But it ought not to be impossible for any Sunday school to make a beginning. However small or poorly equipped the school may be, there are surely two or three or more promising and capable people in its membership who can be induced to take teachers' training and other work the better to qualify themselves for the privilege of teaching in the Sabbath school. And it will be possible for every teacher to secure for herself some of the best books and periodicals to assist her in teaching.

The whole Sunday school teaching proposition is going to have to be put on a new basis. It will have to be dignified by a new appraisal in the mind of the school itself. If there has been a lot of slipshod and no-account teaching, it is because our schools, almost without exception, have stood for that sort of thing. In large part they have been contented just as long as they have had a teacher that could hold a class—it did not matter much whether they had any ability or fitness for the work or not. It has been the exception rather than the rule for Sunday school teachers to spend any respectable amount of money for books and periodicals to help them in their work. Almost invariably they depend on only the "quarterly" and somebody's "notes". It is only a matter of chance if they read anything or attempt anything for their class out of the regular cut and dried Sunday school stuff. But a live pastor and superintendent might make something worth while out of even such teachers as those if the teachers had any real conception of the part that they themselves must play in building an efficient Sunday school. But in most cases they do not. According to their idea, they fulfill the obligation resting upon them as teachers when they get to Sunday school—almost any old time before the classes begin their lessons will do!—and "take care" of their class. In almost no school is it considered a binding and obligatory part of the teaching position to attend the teacher's meeting and the business sessions of the Board. The teachers and officers come or not as they please, and have little or no conscience in the matter. Now just so long as the schools permit that sort of thing, the whole teaching question will remain unsolved and the matter of religious education in our churches will be a humiliating failure.

The teaching position must be made one that will be considered a real privilege to be sought. The most fundamental mistake is when we make it such a cheap thing that we "beg" folks to take it against their will. It ought to be clearly and emphatically understood that no one would be allowed to teach who did not throw her whole heart and life into it as a most precious service unto her Lord. How rarely ever have we known of a school to try prayer instead of coaxing as an enlistment method of securing a sufficient number of the right kind of teachers. When the church wants more missionaries or more preachers, it unitedly prays for them with the faith that the Spirit will search out the proper ones and turn them to the work with compelling power. And we do not believe that the Sunday school teaching problem ever will be settled until we put it in the same plane and go about our recruiting with the same methods.

It would be well if every school would make it clearly understood that those who are not willing to spend at least a little money and a considerable bit of time for such preparation will not be considered by the school as worthy to have the honor and privilege of a position on the teaching staff conferred upon them. We think that herein lies the secret of the trouble in most schools. They have "begged" people to teach, and forced classes upon those who do not want them. Thus the teachers have placed no real dignity or value upon the teaching position simply because the school itself has not done so. If the school has faith enough and courage enough to lay down the clean-cut requirements that the teacher must at least make an attempt to qualify herself, and then put the whole teaching proposition on the basis of a high and holy privilege—too high and too holy to be given out to just any one or entrusted in the hands of those who are careless or indifferent with it—we believe that the whole matter of religious education will quickly be lifted to a far higher plane than it has been and that the school which does this will have far less trouble in securing a sufficient number of teachers than it has had under the old method of “begging them to take a class”.

And right now is the time of year to begin. The long evenings are coming when most folks have more leisure and opportunity for study. It ought not to be overly difficult for any school, in the town or in the country, to organize and carry forward a training class for at least a short course of study—and that would make the beginning out of which great things can grow.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: I am late again but I have not forgotten you and the little orphans. Wish I could visit you and bring you a pocket-book full of money, but as I cannot do that I will do that which I can, so I am enclosing 20 cents—my dues for October and November. I am going to school at Knap of Reeds. We have four teachers. Prof. G. J. Green, one of Elon's students, is principal. We go on a truck and my brother drives it. Ruth M. Sanford.

Well, Ruth, I know you have a good time at school and enjoy the rides on the truck. It is real fun, isn't it? —“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley: Please let us join the band of cousins. I am five years old, have blue eyes and white curly hair. Am going to kindergarten and enjoy it fine. Hope I can do my own writing soon. Brother is two years old and has light hair and brown eyes and we all think he is the sweetest baby in town. Please find enclosed $2.00 for our Thanksgiving offering.—Beuna and Charles Veazey.

I am glad to give you a hearty welcome to the corner. It was so nice of you to join at Thanksgiving time. You must write often.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley: We are sending $1.00 as our Thanksgiving offering. Hope all the cousins are well and will enjoy a happy Thanksgiving. With love to the orphans.—Leonora and Lewis Weleh.

You are among the first to mail in your offerings for Thanksgiving. I hope you will have a happy Thanksgiving and a good dinner.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley: I have been to school six weeks. I like to go fine. I am in the second reader. My school is closed now on account of diptheria but mother hears my lessons at home. Enclosed you will find $2.50 as a Thanksgiving offering toward the new orphan building from Helen, Mildred and myself.—Maurine Isley.

I hope you and your little sisters will not take diptheria. If it should get in our Orphanage family I do not know what we would do.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley: I did not see any letters from the children is last week's SUN, so I am going to write this week. I am staying down in Georgia while daddy is in school at Nashville. I wish you and the little cousins were down here to help me eat pecans and peanuts. I am enclosing 50 cents.—Margaret Earp.

How I wish I was down there to help you eat pecans and peanuts. I am very fond of both. I guess you miss “daddy” and I'll bet he misses you.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley: I have not written this month so will write now. It is real cool now and it was so warm a week or two ago that we feel it badly. I go to school every day. I have not missed a day from school yet and I don't want to if I can help it. How are the cousins now? Hope they are all well. It is not but a week until Thanksgiving. I like for it to come for I always enjoy our holidays. I am enclosing ten cents for this month.—Dorothy Moore.

I guess you will have a big dinner Thanksgiving—with a turkey and cranberries. We will not have turkey this year.—“Uncle Charley.”

WOMAN'S REALM

OUR WOMEN'S WORK IN THE SOUTH

Our women in the South are infants in organized missionary work, not that we have not been interested in missions all along, but that definitely our work began but a few brief years ago.

On Friday morning April 29, 1910, the Southern Christian Convention in session at Suffolk, Va., passed the following resolution:

WHEREAS, There is at the present time no distinct uniform Missionary Organization for the women of the Southern Christian Convention; be it

RESOLVED, That a committee composed of women, one from each Conference, be appointed by the President at the present session of the Convention, said committee to be known as the Woman's Board for Home and Foreign Missions in the South.

The duty of the Board when appointed shall be to prepare a constitution, submit same to the several Conferences for approval, and ask that the Conferences appoint a Woman's Missionary Board for Home and Foreign Missions.

In accordance with this resolution the following Woman's Board was adopted: Mrs. McD. Howsare, President, Norfolk, Va.; Mrs. L. F. Johnson, Raleigh, N. C.; Miss Bettie Stephenson, Roanoke, Ala.; Mrs. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga.; Mrs. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.; and Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, N. C. Just why no woman from the Virginia Valley Central Conference was appointed I am sure I cannot tell.

Soon after the appointment of this Committee Mrs. Howsare moved from the South and left the Woman's Board without a head. In January 1912 Mrs. C. H. Rowland was appointed to succeed Mrs. Howsare as president. Mrs. Rowland took up the work at once and under her leadership it began to grow.

When the Convention met at Elon College in 1912, we women were able to report the work started with eight societies in the Eastern Virginia, six in the present North Carolina, and two in the Georgia and Alabama Conferences. The Convention at this session made the women's work permanent and elected the first regular Woman's Board as follows: Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va.; Mrs. L. F. Johnson, Raleigh, N. C.; Mrs. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga.; Mrs. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.; Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, N. C.; Miss Bettie Stephenson, Roanoke, Ala.; and Mrs. W. T. Walters, Winchester, Va.

On May 29, 1912 a meeting was held in Raleigh, N. C., attended by the following women: Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Mrs. L. F. Johnson, Mrs. W. A. Harper, Mrs. W. T. Walters, and Mrs. W. H. Carroll. Dr. J. O. Atkinson was present throughout the meeting and contributed greatly to the success of the same. At this meeting the financial goal for the next two years was fixed at $1,000.00 a year and apportioned to the various Conferences. Constitutions for the various organizations were adopted and ordered printed and steps were taken to print a monthly program in The Christian Sun. It was a small beginning but most great movements so begin. The women present can never forget the inspiration of those days of beginning in our work.

The first Conference Woman's Board was that appointed by the Eastern Virginia Conference on November 3, 1911, and consisted of Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Franklin; Mrs. W. H. Dick, Suffolk; and Miss Margaret Brickhouse, Norfolk. In this same month Woman's Boards were appointed in the three conferences of North Carolina and in August of 1913 in the Lineville church the Woman's Board of this Conference was appointed, being composed of Mrs. W. T. Walters, Winchester; Miss H. C. O. Mortz, Lacey Spring; and Miss Ivie D. Andes, Harrisonburg. In October 1912 the Alabama and the Georgia and Alabama Conferences also appointed Woman's Boards, so making our general organization complete.

But general organizations are but the alpha of our work. These organizations must be perfected in each church. This goal we are far from reaching, though we are persistently pursuing it, and we shall not pause in our efforts till it is realized.

A fully organized Church from the standpoint of the Woman's Board will have the following organizations: Woman's Society; Young People's Society; Willing Workers; Cradle Roll; and Boy's Missionary Society.

We have only a few congregations fully organized and so I say again, as in the beginning, that our work is in the infant stage of its development. One church, the First church, Greensboro, N. C., also has a Young Men's Missionary Society.

These local organizations are for a purpose—two purposes rather. First, they are to create interest in and knowledge of missions among the membership and constituency. And secondly, they are to raise money through regular dues, special offerings, and public rally day occasions for Home and Foreign Missions, to be divided equally unless otherwise designated between these two enterprises of the Kingdom.

From the very beginning we have recognized the large place of mission study in our Women's and Young People's Missionary Societies. For this purpose we have recommended the regular books adopted by the Missionary Education Movement. During months of September 1919—July 1920, we issued, however, a pamphlet each month which our women in many instances used in place of the regular mission study books. These pamphlets were: Women and the Kingdom; My Money and I; God's Missionary Program for His Church; My Missionary Creed; Our Women and the Men and Millions Forward Movement; The Fruits of Missionary Zeal; Jesus and Women; Missionary Zeal in Missionary Literature; Woman's New Day of Christian Service; Program for Missionary Rally Days, 1920; Women and the Kingdom.

Beginning in the summer of 1918 a program has been annually issued for Woman's Missionary Rally Days in all the churches. These programs have been sent to each congregation and the money so raised has been requested to be turned into the treasury as a literature and expense account fund. It is hoped through this method, too, to stimulate widespread interest in the general topic of missions.

In May 1913 the first session of the Woman's Convention was held at Elon College. At that time it was decided to meet each biennium for a one day's session at the same time and place as the Southern Christian Convention, beginning with the 1914 session. Those who have attended these Conventions know their value and inspiration. In addition our Convention Board, holds a session in the summer of the years in which the Convention does not meet for planning and furthering our work.

Most of the Woman's Boards in the several Conferences now hold annual Conventions of their own for one or two days, shortly preceding the annual Conferences, reporting their work of course, officially to the respective conferences. Experience shows that the best results come by this method, and eventually we hope all the Woman's Boards will hold separate Conventions each year preceding the annual session of Conference.

Financially, our women have every reason for gratitude and thanksgiving to God for results achieved. We have been in active work now but four brief bienniums and here is our showing:

Money Raised By Biennial Periods

19-14, $1,960.27; 1914-16, 3,116.25; 1916-18, 5,585.97; 1918-20, 12,753.35.

Our Goals for 1920-1922

Money to be raised, $25,000.00; New organizations added, 50; New members added, 2000; New subscriptions to Christian Missionary, 2000.

Apportionment To Conferences

Eastern Virginia, $10,000.00; North Carolina, 10,000.00; Virginia Valley Central, 3,000.00; Alabama, 1,000.00; Georgia and Alabama, 1,000.00.

Finally

Our women in Eastern Virginia, in addition to their regular apportionment, are raising $1200 each year to support Rev. H. S. Smith and wife when they are ready to go to the foreign field. The Eastern Virginia Young People are to support Miss Iola Hedgepeth in her work among the Virginia mountaineers. Our women of North Carolina similarly are raising $1200 a year to support Rev. H. S. Hardeastle when he is ready to take up his work in the foreign field. And likewise our North Carolina Young People are to support two girls from Japan field in Elon College beginning this fall.

For all of this we give thanks and take courage for the greater tasks and undertakings ahead.

MISSIONARY

MY FIRST DAY IN TOKIO

In the early morning of September seventh I was awakened by the sound of much shouting and singing, and upon looking out of my port hole I discovered what all of us aboard the Korea Maru had been longing to see—the lights of Yokohama, the port of Tokyo. From then on everything was hurry and bustle and excitement. Everyone was anxious to get ashore as soon as possible.

The morning was misty and did not afford us the coveted view of Fujiyama, the grand old mountain of Japan, but it was a very interesting sight to see the numberless fishing smacks start out on their hunt for game. They are small boats with usually only one large, oblong sail, and as they make their way in the light morning breeze out toward the harbor mouth they tell the mute story of the countless men and families whose welfare is wrapped up in the experiences of the day's toil.

After the simple medical inspection the big ship lifted her anchor and moved slowly toward the dock. Mr. Y. Takahashi, son of our pastor Takahashi at Oji church, is freight clerk on the Korea, and as we neared the dock I found him at my side ready to lend any necessary assistance. And he proved to be a friend indeed for both my messages from the boat to Bro. McKnight and Woodworth had gone astray and neither were there to meet me. But my good young friend was equal to the occasion in every particular and I suffered absolutely no inconvenience.

The first face I recognized as we drew up, was that of older Takahashi. The son, without my knowledge, had wirelessly ahead to him that I was aboard and he came down to meet us both. It seemed good to see a familiar face in this strange land, (I recognized him from his photograph) and his greeting was most cordial indeed, though he could not speak English and I could not speak Japanese. A short time later Rev. Matsumo, of the Azabu church appeared and in the presence of these two Japanese brethren the reality of our work in Japan began to deepen.

Passing the customs at Yokohama has no terrors for one who has gone through once, for the officials are extremely courteous and the examination, in my case, was very brief. Loading my trunks and hand bags on two jinrikshas, which I saw for the first time outside the dock, we were soon on our way to the electric station bound for Tokyo. The distance to the station was not far and we walked. I shall never forget this first touch of life in Japan. We walked in the street of course, (there are very few sidewalks in Japan) but with little fear of being run over. Once in a while one would hear the familiar toot of an automobile, and a little more often see a horse with a rickety wagon, but there was an endless stream of rikshas and carts drawn by men, and countless feet clattering along in all sorts of wooden shoes and sounding for all the world like the rat-a-tat-tat of a routed cavalry host.

After a pleasant chat with Dr. Frank L. Brown and several other Sunday School Convention workers we boarded the car for Tokyo, a ride of eighteen miles through rows of tiny houses and plots of ground checkerboarded into little rice paddies full of half clad farmers busy at their tasks.

A long ride in one of Tokyo's famous pigeon-hole street cars brought us within walking distance of 26 Kasumi cho, a large, three story, English style house, set well back from the street—a good precaution, I fancy. Perseverance at the door-bell finally brought forth Mr. Zendo Takahashi and his dainty little wife who announced that none of the missionaries were at home and that they did not expect them until Thursday, when they were looking for me to arrive. Nevertheless, we were graciously ushered into the large office-like room of this big house which is really the headquarters of our Japanese work, where Mr. Garman takes care of the treasurership and all of the many other details of his work, where missionary meetings are often held and where the McKnights and Miss Stacy are staying while in language school.

Although the dinner hour was passed, Mrs. Takahashi kindly sent out for a combination American-Japanese meal consisting of fruit and a big bowl of rice, egg and small pieces of chicken cooked together. The Japanese name for this dish is "oyako domburi" meaning "mother and child"—the chicken the mother, and the egg, the child. A pair of chop sticks lay by our bowls.

Rev. Matsuno, who dined with me, picked up a fork, and with a feeling of relief I did likewise, while the chop sticks lay idle until later on when he showed me how to use them.

At four o'clock Dr. Woodworth arrived, stating that he was expecting me to arrive two days later on the China. We were mutually glad to meet and were soon on our way to see something of the section of this great eastern city in which our work is located. We passed the great Azabu Middle school where 800 select boys are in educational training, and also the Azabu church of which Rev. Matsuno is pastor. As darkness fell we passed down Juban, (10th St.). It was crowded with people, for in the evenings the merchants spread their wares right out on the street where the prospective buyers can see them easily, and about nearly every stall there stood a crowd of eager people. In his unique way the Doctor explained that if we should stop in front of one of these the owner might object, but if we went to a side street it would be all right, and almost before I realized what was happening, we had stepped to a side street and were singing in English, "Jesus Loves Me, this I Know". When we had finished the third stanza, a hundred Japanese were crowding about us, blocking the street so that a cart could scarcely pass. And such a crowd as this can be secured at almost any corner any night in the week. Dr. Woodworth introduced me, and interpreted while I spoke. Later he gave a considerable message in the Japanese tongue. They listened attentively all the while and seemed loathe to have us depart.

Moving on finally, we entered a little Japanese tea house and leaving our shoes at the door, were ushered to the second floor where we squatted on the floor while a neat Japanese girl served us a plate of "sushi" made of rice prepared with five different styles of fish. There was tea, of course, and I had my first introduction to the Japanese manner of pouring it. The water in the tea kettle is always kept hot and is poured on the leaves in the little tea pot only a few moments before the tea is poured into the tiny handleless tea cups.

In the course of our evening walk we made a pleasant call upon a Mr. Ando, who lives by the side of a very nice M. E. church which he had built in memory of his mother. We also called at the Azabu Y. M. C. A., occupying a quarter of an acre of ground, and where sixty boys receive food and lodging at Y25 ($12.50) a month.

When we returned home we found the McKnights had arrived and there was a genuine old-fashioned American reunion at 26 Kasumi cho, as a fitting climax to my first day in Tokyo. And when it was all over I crept into my bed under the mosquito netting and slept the sleep of the happy tired.

Rev. R. F. Brown, Columbus, Georgia, writes under date of November 25:

"The darkest gloom was cast over my life last Monday, November 22, when a telegram reached me from Wedowee, Ala., announcing the tragic death of my mother. She was killed Sunday morning, November 21 by a runaway horse. She and one of her grandsons were out driving and the horse was frightened by a drove of hogs. Mother was thrown partly out of the buggy and was dragged for several yards. She died in about two hours after the accident. Her untimely death almost crushes my heart."

The Brotherhood will deeply sympathize with Bro. Brown in his sad hour.

THE ACORN BROTHERS

One bright autumn day two acorns lay on a bed of leaves under a big tree and stared out at the world. There was a great deal to see, and they agreed that it was good to be alive, seeing it.

The thing they enjoyed most was watching the wind play with the leaves, which were all dressed in lovely colors—clear yellow, gay red, and crisp brown—and were romping gaily through the woods and across the field.

If the leaves stopped for a minute to catch their breath, the wind came racing after them whistling and whooping, and away they would go scampering in every direction. Sometimes fifty leaves or more leaped into the air and waltzed round in a whirlwind. Then the two little acorns would chuckle out loud.

But though the wind was such a rough playfellow during the day, toward evening he generally calmed down and sang the leaves to sleep. It made the acorns drowsy to hear him. At other times he was mischievous and chased the leaves all night long.

The two acorns made friends with the birds, the bees, and the beetles. They liked to lie and watch the puffy white clouds moving in the sea-blue sky above them like small ships under full sail; and they never failed to watch the sun take off his pink nightcap every morning shortly after dawn.

The moon and the stars kept guard over them during the darkness, and once in a while the rain came through the woods and gave them a drink of cool sweet water. On the whole the two brothers were very well content, but they could not help wondering sometimes what their future would be.

"Can you make out what the oak tree is saying above us?" one of them asked the other on a clear October day. "She seems to be calling us."

They both listened. The oak tree was calling them, sure enough.

"Look at me," they heard her say after a while, "and see what you may become someday."

The larger acorn laughed at that. "Surely she's making fun of us," he said.

But the smaller acorn gazed upward and was struck anew with the beauty of the great oak tree.

"She must be able to see all over the world," he said to himself. "Her lowest branch is higher than the maple that stands near. How the birds love her! How the leaves cling to her! Many of the other trees are bare now, but she is still dressed in russet brown."

Then all at once he heard the tree speak again.

"Look at me, little acorn," she said, "and see what you may become in time."

"I don't believe," thought the little acorn, "that a noble tree would try to deceive anything so small as I am." He listened again.

At that moment a voice spoke somewhere close at hand. "I am ready at any moment to help you climb," it said.

"We'll help, too!" cried other voices in a chorus; and the acorn was sure, though he did not know why, that it was the sun and clouds and the winds that spoke. He began to feel very much excited.

His brother only laughed at his hopes. "The idea of your becoming an oak!" he said. "Much you look like one!"

"Here comes the autumn wind," said the little acorn. "I will ask him."

The wind halted for a moment to hear his question.

"Can acorns become oaks?" he repeated. "Well, some think so." Then he was off again after the scurrying leaves.

There was silence for a short while. Then the little acorn said clearly: "I believe that I can become an oak. Help me, everybody!"

An hour or two later a little boy came through the woods with his hands in his pockets. Under the big oak he stooped and picked up the acorn.

"Let me see how far I can throw you," he said, and he gave him a far fling. The little acorn had begun his journey!

He fell to the earth some distance from his old home and settled down into a little cranny and fell fast asleep.

It was a long, long sleep; and as he slept the air grew colder and colder. The wind came and covered him with a warm quilt of snow, but the acorn did not even turn in his sleep.

When at last he waked he did not know himself. "What has happened?" he cried. "Am I punished for daring to think of becoming an oak?"

Then he remembered what the oak tree had told him long ago, and his heart grew braver. "How fat I feel!" he said.

A little later he noticed that his jacket was splitting. He decided to take a long breath and see what would happen. So he did, and rip! went the old coat that had fitted him perfectly before he fell asleep.

"That is strange," the acorn thought. "But everything is strange now."

He stretched himself and began to push upward. Somehow it did not seem hard to push. Day after day he climbed, always cheery, always hopeful. At last, one never-to-be-forgotten morning, he pushed his head up into the sunlight. There was the world again!

"Hello, little oak!" a voice said, and he felt a tap on his arm. It was his old friend, the wind, hurrying by. The clouds and the rain, too, spoke to him, and the big oak he used to know waved to him from the distance.

And so the little oak grew and grew, and before he had finished growing he shaded half a field.

His brother, the acorn that laughed at the idea of being an oak, had made a good meal for a hungry squirrel and had been forgotten long ago.—Elizabeth Carrington Young, in the Youth's Companion.

“Slightly Soiled”

I noticed the phrase recently in a store-window, as furnishing reason for the low price of a certain article. “Slightly Soiled—Greatly Reduced in Price.” The merchant does not expect to get normal prices for goods damaged, however slightly. The purchaser insists upon a perfect article when he pays the full price. He resents a slight soiling, even. I wish we were as careful in life: as insistent upon flawlessness and immaculateness. Unfortunately we have grown accustomed to the idea that one must not expect too much of human nature. The result is that we end by expecting too little. We speak of small sins and slight soilings of the spirit. If, however, a small stain on a fabric cuts the value alarmingly, what of a human soul? Jesus said, “Be ye perfect.” He did not say “Be approximately good,” or “Be relatively respectable”; He challenged us with the ideal. Always He was patient with soiled hearts, but always He resented the soiling.—George Clarke Peck.

Principles of the Christian Church

- (1) The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
- (2) Christian is a sufficient name of the Church.
- (3) The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
- (4) Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- (5) The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to, and exercised by all.

EDITORIAL

A FRAUD

A correspondent in The Herald of Gospel Liberty recently called attention to letters being received from a supposed theological institution, which offers to confer the degree of Doctor of Divinity for a nominal fee. Since reading this contribution to The Herald columns, we have been privileged to see some of these letters to men in our Southern Convention, and to receive some also. These letters are skillfully written, but any man who has sense enough to be the pastor of a church has sense enough to ignore the whole thing.

This "Institution of Theology" offers a short course by mail for a fee of $5.00, and when the course is completed will confer the degree of D. D. for an additional fee of not more than $15.00. Education and scholarship have already suffered too much because of conferring degrees upon men wholly unfitted for such recognition, but for a fraudulent institution to seek to bribe its way into educational ranks is a gross insult upon the name of education.

Honor to whom honor is due. Surely no minister of our communion will ever attempt to correspond with this supposed institution, for the purpose of taking the "course". It would, however, be well worth the time for each of our men receiving such letters to answer them and denounce, in no uncertain terms, the whole propaganda. Anyone is at liberty to clip and send this editorial, and furthermore, any correspondent has the permission to use the name of the editor.

This institution's latest communication is couched in this would-be-argument: "As every person who has qualified to practice medicine has the right to be called Doctor of Medicine, so every person who is prepared to preach the Divine Revelation of God, through Jesus Christ, should have the honor of being, and the right to be called, Doctor of Divinity."

Scholarship, where art thou? Shall thy name be dragged into the dust and trampled beneath the feet of unholy men? Rise up, ye lovers of study, and proclaim that education's fame shall not be dishonored!

A LAY SERMON

Brother T. H. Crocker, Middleburg, N. C., called at this sanctum the other day. Brother Crocker is a shoe salesman of the highest magnitude, but he is not only interested in shoe soles, but human souls. He is one of our leading and loyal laymen, a member of Mt. Auburn church, Warren County, N. C. He is of that sturdy and pioneer stock of the Christian Church, and seeks to help his denomination by every possible effort.

But this is not our topic. Brother Crocker will forgive us for this personal reference. He is just such a genial and devoted friend of THE CHRISTIAN SUN that our pen had to digress that much.

Here is the lay sermon. Brother Crocker says that his travel, his observation, and his experience teach him more and more that religion cannot be thrust upon a man like a suit of clothes. "More and more", said Brother Crocker, as we chatted, "I am convinced that the ideals of the community and the ideals of a church must be instilled into the youth of that community and the youth of that church."

Brother Crocker is right. Education, culture, refinement, religion, or whatever accomplishment or position that you desire to emphasize, cannot be taken on in a moment. We believe that a man can become religious in a moment's time, if he but accepts the conditions, but we do not believe that a man can become a trained professor of religion in a moment's time. "Ye must be born again", should be the great cry of the Church, but that does not mean that there should not be a thorough preparation for that birth. Men are not thrown into the Kingdom by miraculous events. The child that is brought up in an atmosphere of religion, guided and directed by parents of Christian faith, is easier to lead into the fold, than the child who has had only the opposite training.

A good place to begin is in the beginning. A good time to reform a thing is before it is deformed. Brother Crocker is right. We thank him for his visit and for his sermon.

THE WORLD'S PROPHETS

The prophets of the world are not all poets, artists, musicians, sculptors, and men of that type who stood out prominently in the centuries past, but in the prophetic class no one is more outstanding than the missionary. The missionary sees the world at possibly its worst. He sees men and women in the lowest strata of society and sees them picked up by the refining influences of Christianity and elevated to position and power. The missionary believes as no other that the solution of the world's problems, sin, poverty, and distress, lies in the acceptance and full application of the living Word of our God. The man on the home field can discern the check that religious influence has upon the evil of the land. The missionary not only sees the same thing, but he sees more—he sees the transforming power do its greatest work.

CONSIDER THE MATTER

THE CHRISTIAN SUN has been entering your home each week and you have no doubt learned to appreciate its value as a religious paper. Wouldn't you miss its weekly visits, with all the messages which it contains?

This Church paper would be of much value to some relative or friend who does not have the privilege of reading its pages each week.

Then why not give this person a six months' or a years' subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN as a Christmas gift?

Try it Christmas. Both the giver and the recipient will be benefitted.

"LOSING AT THE BUNG AND SAVING AT THE SPILE"

When Governor Bickett set out to defend his recommendation to the State Legislature on the Revaluation Act, he took as his text, "Losing at the Bung and Saving at the Spile".

Governor Bickett's text applies to a point in conduct of our denomination, a point wherein, as we see it, the Church is losing at the bung and saving at the spile.

When the Editor was in college he took the position, without reservation, that young men in college preparing for the ministry should not take church work. This idea was, and is, more or less personal, and we have no desire whatever to enforce a personal opinion upon the Church. However, we feel that there is enough of judgment, reason, and sound philosophy in the position for it not to be wholly ignored as a principle.

To our way of thinking, the Church saves at the spile and loses at the bung when it takes young men into its fold for preparation and either allows them, or forces them from the point of necessity, to take practically all time in church work during their years of preparation. We have observed for years the ebb and flow of the ministerial tide. This observation of ours has led us to see, as never before, that the Church is the ultimate loser in practically every instance when the days of preparation are broken into by church work. We are not unmindful of those who oppose us in this idea, in that they have always cited us to some of our most successful ministers who had to literally preach their way through college. We are sure, however, that these same persons will not forget to give full credit to the fact that these successful ministers could have reached a far greater point of success had all of their time been given to preparation. Practically every minister will tell you that he has found little time to study since leaving college and every day sees a need of a far wider preparation.

We know that the churches need the young men, and it looks hard and unfaithful for them not to serve when they are so much needed. But when we look back over the half done work; when we see a membership that has been fed on student preaching, and realize that the largest possible work of our Church is dependent upon the men prepared for the task, we can see wherein we lose at the bung and save at the spile.

Placing this matter in other terms, it means that we gain (?) now and lose later. So often a young man must decide between the success of his preaching and his studies, and nine times out of ten he neglects his studies. Suppose that he does not neglect his studies, then nine times out of ten he hurries off to an appointment with little or no preparation. There are two results from this. (1) He gets into the habit of making no preparation and that follows him through life. (2) The people get the benefit of a few rehashed sermons and the rehearsal of a few stories that they have heard for many years.

Let us put our ministerial students in college and have them stay there during the days of preparation. Raise the standard. It is far better to do this than to give them no work after they have made an honest effort in a misguided direction.

This editorial is an attempt to call attention to a loss, as we see it, to the Church, and not a personal reflection upon any one.

LIGHTHOUSE OBSERVATIONS

J. E. MASSEY

STRICTER OBSERVANCE OF SABBATH MOVEMENT

A movement for stricter observance of the Sabbath is being carried on by the Lord's Day Alliance of the United States. It proposes that legislation be enacted to free the United States of the habit of too much work and pleasure seeking on Sundays. The abolition of Sunday sports and amusements including base-ball, motion pictures, motoring and traveling for pleasure on trains are among the things which the Alliance desires to accomplish.

The organization reports that it has a "fighting force" in twenty States with field men flooding ten other States with propaganda, according to Secretary Bowlby. A number of leading prohibitionists have endorsed the work and show an inclination to become active workers. But in addition to the number of enthusiastic workers, there are those who conscientiously criticize the movement as to methods and accomplishment. The belief of the latter class is that this return by law or otherwise to the Puritanical observance of Sunday will be a mistake and will be an injury to religion.

At the beginning of such a movement it is difficult to discover its true and right significance. There is no doubt of the good intentions of the promoters of legislation for stricter observance of Sunday, but theirs is a big task. Their views may suit certain people in certain conditions and sections of the country, yet contradict those living under other conditions and influences. Too much dictation of ideas may lead us away from the spirit of Christianity. Then, too much must not be depended on law and legislation, for people may be driven away from the Church instead of toward it. Such a method, we believe worked all right in the prohibition problem, but that is no reason why it will work in every case. Legislation is "short cut"; education of Christian standards of government is a process of development whereby people discover the newer, better, unknown ideals which make better legislation possible.

THANKSGIVING

Thanksgiving Day has passed, and thanks have been offered all over our land for the blessings of health, prosperity, and kindnesses which our Maker has bestowed upon us during the past year, but Thanksgiving should not end with the day. The day set apart by the American people, first celebrated by the Pilgrims, is only one day in the year. The other three hundred and sixty-four days should not be passed without giving thanks to the Lord. His blessings never end; so should our thanksgiving never end.

Aside from being thankful for what the Lord has done for us, we should always try to do something for Him—help the man that gives no thanks, help feed the millions of starving children of Europe, help educate the uneducated and illiterate in our own county and state, help make the weak soul stronger by cultivating it with higher and nobler ideals. If we will do our part in these things we will find in the next Thanksgiving Day a more joyful day than ever. In other words, to appreciate the next thanksgiving day (which ought to come more than once in a year) we must sacrifice time and means in doing something worth while for others, for God. By this sacrifice we will learn to think more in terms of our Maker,—doing more for Him will help us to appreciate more what He has done for us.

ARMISTICE BETWEEN ARMENIANS AND TURKS

Will the massacre of the unspeakable Turk end? This has been a question which has held us in suspense for months and months, but maybe the answer is not far off. It is reported that an armistice has been signed between the Armenians and the Turkish Nationalists. The conditions give the Turks possession of Alexandropol, and the Turks, it is said, guarantee the safety of the inhabitants of the city.

COLBY TO VISIT SOUTH AMERICA

In order to strengthen our friendship and to bind together the nations of the Americas, President Wilson has commissioned Secretary Colby to visit South America. The President thinks that the importance of maintaining the good-will of our Latin neighbors cannot be over-emphasized. Secretary Colby's visit will also return the visits of the Presidents of Brazil and Uruguay to the United States in 1918.

NOBLE PRIZE AWARDED TO PRESIDENT WILSON

The Alfred B. Noble peace prize for 1920 has been awarded to President Wilson, according to a late report from Stockholm. This prize is given to Mr. Wilson in recognition of his efforts for world peace and concord. It is offered on the annual income of the Swedish scientist, Alfred B. Noble, who died twenty years ago leaving his $9,000,000, the interest of which is distributed by his Committee in prizes. Besides the peace prize, there are four other prizes given annually to those influential in world literature, art, and other international accomplishments.

This makes the third time that the Noble peace prize has been awarded to an American. In 1900, it was given to Theodore Roosevelt, and in 1912 to Elihu H. Root. It is valued at about $40,000.

ADRIATIC QUESTION SETTLED

The Adriatic question has been settled at the conference between the Jugo-Slavs and the Italians, says a report to London. The principal points of the settlement are: The Istrian frontier is practically decided in favor of the Jugo-Slavs; Fiume is made independent; Zara is placed under Italian suzerainty; the islands of Cherso, Lussin and Unie are granted to Italy.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

COLUMBUS, GA.

We left Chapel Hill, N. C., November 3, and arrived here November 4. We were met at the station by Bro. T. F. Potts, who carried us to our boarding place which had been engaged in advance of our arrival. After a few days our household goods came and we are now comfortably situated in the parsonage.

Everything indicated that the people here are interested in church work. It seems that the church is very well organized for service. Different from previous beginnings, we commence our pastorate here with a series of evangelistic services. This series of meetings will begin Sunday, November 28, and continue about ten days.

R. F. BROWN

1020 Park Place, Columbus, Ga.

PROVISIONED

The members and some friends of Henderson Christian church again showed their appreciation of the pastor and his wife when on the evening of the 14th of October they visited the parsonage and left with us many good things to eat. These included: flour, (almost enough to last until harvest) rice, peaches, sweet and Irish potatoes, vinegar, pickles, lard, cocoa, olives, oatmeal, canned goods of several varieties, coffee, sugar (enough to last until preserving time), one table cloth, cash donation, meat, navy beans, canned snaps, etc. All were useful and are aiding very materially in reducing the high cost of living. We know not how to show our appreciation for this kind remembrance. We pray God's richest blessing on them, and will earnestly endeavor to serve them more faithfully and efficiently.

R. L. WILLIAMSON

HENDERSON LETTER

We are entering our third year with the Henderson church. The church in informing us of our call to serve them another year stated that an increase of $250.00 had been voted. This makes an increase of salary totalling $400 since we entered the work here. Coming as a complete surprise and without our asking an increase, the kindness and liberality of this good people is the much more appreciated. We hope to serve the church much more efficiently in the future.

R. L. WILLIAMSON

FULLER'S CHAPEL

It is our good pleasure to begin another year with this church. Our relationship with them has been pleasant. They have expressed in various ways their kindness to their pastor and his wife.

One of the promising features in the work here is the activity among the young people. The Missionary Society is still growing, not only in numbers but in influence. On the second Sunday in October they rendered a helpful and enjoyable program, consisting of song, prayer and a talk by the president, who in well chosen words presented very interestingly the purpose of the Society and the work it is doing. Miss Pattie Coghill, who is president, is developing into a real leader, and she has associated with her in the work, Mr. Sutton, principal of the Buena Vista school and several of the teachers, besides young people of talent of the community. The Society now numbers 33.

R. L. WILLIAMSON

DR. WELLONS, AGE 95, PREACHES HERE TODAY

Venerable Minister, Lacking Five Years of Being Centenarian Still Active.

Stopping in Richmond for the first time in about twelve years, the Rev. Dr. James W. Wellons, 95 years old, probably the oldest minister of any denomination in the United States, is now in Richmond as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. P. J. Kernodle, of West Franklin Street. Despite his advanced age, Dr. Wellons is still active in religious work and he will preach this morning before the congregation of the First Christian church at the services in the temporary headquarters in William Fox School.

Dr. Wellons entered the Christian ministry more than sixty-five years ago and has held many pastorates in Virginia and elsewhere. He is a native Virginian and many years ago assisted his brother in the organization of a Christian church at Suffolk, Va. He has passed through Richmond a number of times within the last decade, although this is his first stay in the city in twelve years.

The aged minister is widely known and highly esteemed and he is still a forceful and capable speaker. He has been located at Elon College, N. C. for some time. Dr. Wellons travels considerably and is still actively interested in church work. He has many friends in Richmond and a large congregation is expected to hear his sermon this morning.—Richmond Times-Dispatch: Sunday, November 28, 1920.

EVANGELISTS LIGHTBOURNE AND DAVIS

An Estimate

The following lines are written out of a deep sense of appreciation of the genuine services Rev. A. Victor Lightbourne and Mr. Sam Davis are rendering in the field of evangelism, with the hope that they may be used to impress the reader with something of the greatness of the work these servants of the Lord are doing in His vineyard. The following phases of their work appeal to me as fundamental and most important as they relate to true evangelism.

1. Matter or content of the message. Evangelist Lightbourne preaches the old gospel that Jesus died to give to the world: the gospel of sin, sorrow, suffering and woe; and a Savior Who can supply the deepest need of human experience. He magnifies the Bible and the Christ of the Bible. Upon the central and vital theme he brings to bear in a wonderful way truths from many sources.

He holds a ready key to many sources of knowledge, with which he unlocks the treasures of truth to all.

He gleans from many fields and gathers therefrom knowledge, and prepares it for the assimilation of all minds.

He digs deep for the richest ore of wisdom, which he purifies and refines to bless and beautify life and character.

2. Style. He is not a sensationalist. He is not a user of slang. His diction is pure and chaste, such as a mother would like for her boy or girl to hear and use. One girl who heard him in a talk at the high school, said to her mother: "Mother, I wish you could have heard him. He uses the most beautiful language I ever listened to." And yet, people of all walks of life hang on every utterance with rapt attention.

He does not make his great appeals to the emotions; yet his messages are soul-stirring and gripping. Many who hear him go away with a resolution to live a better life.

With an occasional, but very genuine touch of humor, and with abundant illustrations he adorns and illumines his thoughts so that the hearer's mind is alert to catch every word. His illustrations are drawn from many sources. Art, mythology, history, science, music, personal experience, and incidents from the various walks of life are brought under contribution and made to elucidate the theme.

3. His work and methods. The great thought of the evangelist when he comes to a new field is to reach the people, regardless of church affiliation. He seeks the cooperation of all the ministers and, through them, the people to whom they minister, and to those who do not attend church.

He sets up a prayer life that involves members of the various churches. Some of the groups formed during the meeting in Henderson are still holding meetings.

I think the Lord is using him to bring the churches together in cooperative spirit of work and worship, thus hastening the coming of His kingdom on earth.

This estimate would be far from complete if I should fail to give an appreciation of Mr. Lightbourne's pianist, Mr. Sam Davis, familiarly known as "Sam". In attempting this I feel at a great loss. I love music; it is one of the major parts of my life; but I am not an interpreter of music or musical genius, especially to others. To say Sam is the champion ragtime player of the world might not carry much weight to one contemplating holding a revival in his church. To say that he has consecrated this wonderful gift and talent and skill to the service of the Christ he found precious to his soul only a few months ago, would be more to the point. He draws mightily, and lifts the soul from the cares of life to the heights of worship.

R. L. WILLIAMSON

The winning of the war was an easy task compared with getting things adjusted now. The reason is evident: Then the people were of one accord; now we are divided.

THANKS

Mrs. Wells and children join me in sincere thanks to the good and generous people of our Reidsville church for the real pounding which they gave us Wednesday night before Thanksgiving. It came as quite a pleasant surprise to us, and we are so grateful to these appreciative people for remembering us in such a substantial way, with such eatables as flour, lard, sugar, coffee, cheese, honey, canned goods of various kinds, vegetables, oatmeal, rice, bacon, fresh meat, chickens, and other food articles. The supply was abundant.

May God bless and prosper every one who had a part in making the pastor's heart glad.

A Christmas present that goes 52 times the year—
THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

GREETING FROM PRINCETON

By day and by night my thoughts turn southward. My prayers go up continually for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the Southern Christian Convention, and the good people thereof. I do not want space to preach, I give way to others more worthy than I; I do not want to counsel nor to advise, I give way to those wiser than I, but I do want to say I love the Church to which I am committed. I love the Christ whose Kingdom it seeks to further, and I love the people who have given me the privilege of laboring along side them during the past few years. Many of them said as I left them: "You must write for THE CHRISTIAN SUN" and I promised them I would, but time has been fleeting, tasks have been rather stupendous for one unaccustomed to doing the type of study required here, and until now I have not written. My health is good, my work is hard, and I am happy. Beyond these days of mental discipline; beyond this place of spiritual culture, lie fields full of challenge, and the Master, the ever-blessed Christ abides with us always.

JOHN G. TRUITT

Princeton Theological Seminary,

Copies of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for December 8, 15, and 22 will be mailed on December 23 to all who are to get THE SUN for a Christmas present, and in the same mail will go a letter stating at whose request the paper is sent and for what purpose, unless we are otherwise advised.

"THE UPWARD LOOK"

In a recent issue of THE SUN I notice an article from the gifted pen of Dr. W. A. Harper called, "The Upward Look." This article is an interpretation of the 121st Psalm and set forths the heart of the Psalm according to certain proper translations.

There is another interpretation which more nearly sets forth the heart of the Psalm than that derived from the figure of the individual's look into the hills around Jerusalem. That interpretation is given in the original Assyrian Shepherd's story. The story is as follows:

One evening when the shepherd called his sheep to the fold to rest for the night, one was missing. Immediately he sent his son to seek, find and bring home the lost sheep. All night long he vainly searched calling, "hoo-ha-ha-ha." No answer came. At last when the night was spent,—after the break of day,—he came out upon the side of a hill looking across a narrow valley, and called with a loud voice, "hoo-ha-ha-ha." Away down in the valley he heard the faint bleat of a sheep. Continuing his call and listening to the sheep's bleats, he found him, picked him up and carried him safely to the fold.

The Psalmist puts himself in the place of the sheep and as the lost sheep looked unto the hills from whence came his help, so David, the devout soul, said, "I will look unto the hills from whence cometh my help."

The above story is given by a shepherd of the Assyrian hills, as "the shepherd's" understanding of the original promptings of David's soul. It is perhaps not new; and here it may not be given as the translation suggests. But the above story is a fact and presents to us clearly the cry of the needy soul and the help of an Almighty God. It is easy for us to draw a mental picture of the lost sheep down in the valley looking up the mountain side unto his shepherd calling him. David the shepherd, out of such an experience, when looking to his God, found it very natural to say, "I'm a sheep." "I will look unto the hills from whence cometh my help."

How individualistic and personal is God's help!

RELIGION AND MODERN PROGRESS

It seems a pity that our finest minds are not directed to the pulpit. Such seems to be the acknowledged fact. If this be so let us accept the fact but not let the religious enthusiasm of the young of the community go down; let us rather do something to remedy matters. Christianity is the foundation of all that is good in our modern life.

What are other places doing about it? One of the most successful efforts to meet changed conditions has been through the motion picture whose power for good is as great as its power for harm. It is destined to become more and more a powerful influence in the cause of righteousness.

That no motion picture can take the place of a minister is self-evident. However, so great is the need that in international church film organization has been formed which furnishes three types of reels weekly at reasonable rates. Of these, one is for Sunday-school, one for night service, and one for a community program for the week.

For Sunday, such subjects as "David and Goliath," "The Story of Samuel." "The Ninety and Nine" and "The Lord is My Shepherd" are treated interestingly and reverently, with them go the hymns to be sung, in large type. The Sunday-school reels are mostly missionary stories and the week day ones are wholesome drama, comedy, travelogs and education. Nor can the talking machine and record of church music be neglected in communities where musicians are scarce.

If the motion picture can be used by traveling salesmen, by teachers to illustrate a lesson, by doctors to visualize an operation, surely it can be used to show current events to the boy from the farm or help the whole family in its religious life.—The Progressive Farmer.

An accurate record will be kept of each subscription received as a Christmas present and the same will be cut off promptly.

THE MESSAGE THAT REACHES THE HEART OF MAN

(From lines of Sam Walter Foss)

Who will write the best song, who will paint the best picture?

Whose music is best?

He who understands man, knows the heart of him, loves him,

Above all the rest.

Put stars in your song and put skies in your picture,
Put mountains and seas;

But one heart throb that's tuned to the heart of a brother
Is greater than these.

Man first is your song; man first, and then mountains,
And woods and seas;

And know while you picture the star group of midnight
He is greater than these.

What is art, what is art and the artist's achievement,
Its purpose and plan?

'Tis the message that's sent from the heart of the artist
To the heart of a man.

PLEDGE CARDS

THE SUN office has pledge cards on hand made up in three different styles—weekly, monthly, and quarterly. These cards are at the very reasonable price of 30 cents per hundred and orders can be filled promptly. State which kind wanted when ordering.

Most presents are usually laid aside. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is not that kind—it keeps presenting itself.

Solve the problem of what to give for a Christmas present by sending THE CHRISTIAN SUN a year.

DEVOTIONAL

"WHO IS CHRISTIAN?"

This question is the topic of one of the Four-Minute leaflets issued by the "American Institute of Sacred Literature." Its evident purpose is to assail and undermine the position of the Evangelical Churches as to the essential mark of a Christian. Unless this is its intention, it has no excuse for being. The culminating sentence insists that we "face the issues of the coming age and make it clear that to be a Christian means to trust the living God and Father of Jesus Christ rather than to insist on a system of doctrine or rituals."

If all the the writer means is that denominations should not refuse to recognize as Christian those who truly accept Christ as Lord and Savior, as the Roman Catholic Church refuses to recognize Protestant believers, few will join issue with him. If, however, he means that the Evangelical Protestant Churches refuse recognition to such (unless the practice of close communion can be so regarded) he is mistaken. There is scarcely a Protestant Church that demands either a system of doctrine or ritual as a prerequisite to the recognition of any of Christ's true people.

The motive of the paper seems to lurk in the allusions to Christian people who "try to excommunicate one another for divergence in doctrine" and who "waste time on the things that divide good men." The Evangelical Churches recognize and aid one another and are more and more willing and planning to cooperate in serving Christ and saving men. But they are not yet willing—we trust that they will never be willing—to recognize as Christians those teachers and schools and organizations which repudiate Christ's elementary teachings as to his person and saving work.

The author defines a Christian as "one who shares the life and manifests the Spirit of Jesus Christ." But Christ himself declared that those who did not honor him as Son of God, and believe in him as Savior, were not of his sheep, were not the children of God, and would die in their sins. Nicodemus would doubtless have been classed by the writer of this pamphlet as one of the good men from whom we ought not to be divided. Yet our Lord Jesus plainly told Nicodemus that something was necessary before he could share the life and manifest the Spirit of Christ. The Churches have no right to erase the lines of difference which Jesus Christ drew.

And furthermore, one may recognize an individual Christian because of his true acceptance of Jesus and yet refuse to acknowledge as Christian the organization to which he belongs. Marcus Dods stated a great truth when he said that a Unitarian might be a Christian, but that Unitarianism certainly was not Christianity. As long as Unitarian Churches and teachers disown the Christ of the New Testament, the loyal Churches of our land must refuse to recognize Unitarian organizations as Christian. Certainly a Roman Catholic may be a Christian, as this writer says. But until the Roman Catholic Church puts away its doctrines of pope and priest and mass and image-worship and penance and other teachings and practices destructive of pure Christianity, the Evangelical Churches cannot acknowledge her to be true to Christ.

On the cardinal elements of the Christian faith the Churches must stand firmly and without compromise. To do otherwise in the interests of unity or sympathy or supposed effectiveness would be to tear the roots from the soil and destroy the tree.—Christian Observer

WHAT IS IT TO BE A CHRISTIAN?

To this question it would seem that there could be but one answer. Every one will admit that to be a Christian it is necessary to follow Christ, to be his disciple. Yes, so far so good. But what is implied in this following? That may not be so easy to settle. The Master himself tells us that if we are to follow him we must deny self and take up our cross. He says this in substance on various occasions. Are we ready to look at it squarely and admit its plain implications? Whoever carried a cross, in those days when Jesus walked the earth, was on his way to execution as a criminal. We see not how Christ's reference to this can be mistaken or explained away in our modern manner as simply denoting some insignificant unpleasantness. Jesus was facing Calvary when he said this and he declares that if any man purposes to be his disciple he must follow him in that path of humiliation and agony—that the clamoring sinful self must be met by a resolute negative, a deliberate denial. He puts the matter a little differently by saying that the lower life, the self life, must be thrust decisively away if the higher life, the eternal life is to be saved or gained, that the acquisition of worldly profit is not compatible with the saving of the soul. Is this too severe? Is such a standard of discipleship unattainably lofty? The cross has come to be the symbol of Christianity. How little way into the hearts of men, even into the masses of Christ's professed disciples, the thought it typifies has penetrated. The sacrifice of self is very superficially interpreted. It is not considered as meaning much of anything. But will not the Master when it comes to the final settling up hold by his own language? And where will we be then?—Central Christian Advocate.

RELIGIOUS CENSUS OF PRINCETON

There is only one atheist in Princeton University, according to the last census reports of the institution. Although the University was founded by Presbyterians and has always been looked upon as a Presbyterian institution, there are 531 Episcopalians as against 512 Presbyterians. There are 92 Roman Catholics and 72 Jewish students, with 29 Christian Scientists.

The Methodist Church has 93 students and other denominations have the following numerical strength in the University: Congregational, 78; Baptist, 44; Dutch Reformed, 33; Lutheran, 32; Unitarian, 25; and Quaker, 20.

MISSIONARY

MISSION WORK IN THE GEORGIA AND ALABAMA CONFERENCE

During the last year there seems to have been a considerable increase in the missionary interest in our Conference. While we had some difficulties many years ago, we also have them now. But they are giving away, as we know more of what it means to be a missionary people. As we view the efforts of the past, it is more evident that there needs to be greater efforts put forth to instruct the young and more active people of the Church. There is our hope; not only in our Conference but throughout the entire Church.

Speaking of the conditions locally, we have never had a more effective worker in our section than Miss Bessie Holt. She never tires, and is always ready to go and talk in the interest of missions. Personally, I feel that there is an unlimited field of work for her. To the forceful, earnest way in which she presents the work, the people respond. I believe that in the years to come when the young people now being trained, throw themselves into the missionary task, then our efforts may be realized. There are no efforts lost in preparing the future Church.

The organization of the Woman's Missionary Board is the dawning of a new era. It has been true in the work of the Southern Convention. They are proving themselves valiant soldiers.

It is the purpose of the Executive Committee of the Alabama Missionary Association to hold one or more rallies during the year. It would not be a bad idea if some of the churches would invite the Committee to hold one of these meetings with them.

There are five Sundays in January and it might be possible to hold a Missionary Rally at that time.

A GOOD EXAMPLE

Our North Danville, Va., Sunday school has decided not only to give a monthly offering to missions, but has elected a Missionary Superintendent to tell them once a month or oftener, about missions and to use his endeavor to create interest in missions among the pupils and teachers of the school. That is fine. Bro. Harris has been elected Mission Superintendent and has asked us for suggestions. We have asked Rev. C. B. Riddle, Publishing Agent, to send Bro. Harris at once, two little books, "The Why and How of Missions in the Sunday School" by William A. Brown, and "Sunday School Missionary Incidents and Exercises" by John M. Somerville.

The first of these books has an introduction by the great Sunday school expert, Marion Lawrance, in which he says "the chief reason, doubtless, for the lack of interest in missions, is that the membership of the church were not, in their youth, given a missionary vision". He most highly commends this small volume to all Sunday schools desiring to create an interest in missions, and believes that no school can follow the plans of the book without "getting a great blessing in increased zeal for the Kingdom." The other volume, "Sunday-School Missionary Incidents and Exercises" is gotten out by the Presbyterian Board of Publication and Sabbath School Work, and undertakes to put into the hands of Sunday-School Missionary Superintendents and teachers stories, exercises and incidents with which they can interest the pupils in the school in missions. It gives eighteen brief "Stories from The Field", and five "Fifteen-Minute Programs" for the Sunday school. It also tells emphatically and interestingly of "Missionary Education in the Sunday school."

There are many other such books that the Mission Secretary has which he thinks will be of great interest and real worth to those who are trying to interest their schools in missions. We sincerely trust that many other superintendents will follow the example of Bro. Harris and by the expenditure of a few dimes, get that which will be worth thousands in money and in character for their Sunday schools.

The following list does not include all the schools that are now making a monthly offering to missions, as some treasurers report only once a quarter, but it shows the amounts sent in by the schools mentioned and will show that many of our schools are falling in line most loyally with what the Board and Conventions have adopted.

J. O. ATKINSON

Love is the thing that all of us know about, and yet hard to define. Anyway if it makes you think more of your neighbor, though he is not without faults; if it causes you to wear a smile, work hard, be congenial and offering a helping hand to the unfortunate, it is a safe thing to follow.

THE BIBLE AND MISSIONS

Rev. J. O. Atkenson, D. D., Mission Secretary
Southern Christian Convention.

No reader of the Bible has caught its full and fundamental message who has not discovered that that message is missionary through and through. And this fact explains why there are no great preachers, or Bible teachers, in anti-missionary or non-missionary churches. A preacher is great, and teaches with authority, in proportion to the manner in which he interprets the Bible to his hearers; I mean the Bible in the fullness of its spirit and meaning. And no man can interpret that which he has not discovered. And again, I say, he who has not discovered that the Bible is through and through a missionary Book has not discovered its deep, full and fundamental meaning. There is one reason, and just one, why our church, your church, any church, the Church is fettered. And that is because we of the church do not bend our minds and souls and strength to the study and exposition of God's Mission Study Text-Book, the Bible. I set up this claim then. The yellowest man of China, the brownest man of India, and the blackest man of Africa, have the same right to hear the Gospel and be redeemed by the Gospel as the whitest man of America. And the Bible from Genesis to Revelation carries the inescapable teaching that we of all races have one Father, are of one blood, must be saved, if saved at all, in the same way, namely: by believing in the same Redeemer. Now that is just half of what the Bible teaches. The other half is this: It is the bounden duty, as well as the solemn obligation, of those in this family who have been Redeemed, to carry the message of redemption to the rest of the family who have not been redeemed. My Scripture for both sides of this great truth are (1st) Genesis I, "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth; and God said 'Let us make man in our own image.'" Now that does not say "The white man, nor the yellow man, nor the black man;" It just says MAN. And again the Holy Spirit through Paul in (Acts 17:26) declares "And God hath made of one blood all men for to dwell on all the face of the earth." And that which the Bible teaches is substantiated by every science now known to man. I say that is one-half of Scripture, namely that there is just one race of men, to wit, the human race; and that there is just one kind of man, to wit, mankind.

Now the other half of Scripture is this: That I am my brother's keeper: That I should love the Lord my God with all my strength, and my neighbor as myself, and that he is my neighbor whom I may help anywhere on this earth. I doubt if we carry in mind the full significance of the good Samaritan teaching of Christ. In this allegory Christ is trying to show a certain lawyer who his neighbor is. A certain man goes from Jerusalem to Jerico and falls among thieves who rob him. Now a priest, who was a Jew, sees the poor, pitiable, robbed victim and refuses to help him. Also a Levite, another Jew, passes along and also refuses to help him. Now notice that the Priest, the Levite and the robbed man were all from the same town, Jerusalem. They lived close together, but they were in no sense neighbors. Now the plain inference is that there is just one reason why neither the Priest nor the Levite helped the man who was robbed and left half dead, and that is because they were both Jews and he was not a Jew—just a certain man from Jerusalem. Their race prejudice, their sectarian prejudice, their national prejudice was so strong that they would not stoop to help the one who was down, because possibly he was of a different race, sect or nationality. Now look what happens. A hated and despised Samaritan journeys this way. He too sees the robbed and wounded man. This Samaritan, mind you, does not live in the same town, not even in the same country with the wounded, robbed victim. But he has compassion on him, takes him up, cares for him, shows mercy on him: not because he is of the same race or country, but because he is a man, that's all.

Now this last, declares Christ, is neighbor to the robbed victim, because being of a different race, he has mercy on him. "Go ye and do likewise," says our Lord. That the Bible is world wide in its scope, and makes the fortunate responsible for the unfortunate, the saved responsible for the unsaved, the strong the burden bearers of the weak, proves it to be the missionary Book of all books, God's handbook of missionary teaching for all teachers and preachers and Christian workers everywhere.

I desire now to take three cross sections of Scripture and show the unmistakable missionary spirit and teachings of each.

I. God's attitude to world-wide missions as shown by His dealing with the Jews.

I heard a college president once say in teaching a Sunday school class, that he believed the reason God had one chosen people, and no more, was because He had such a hard time teaching and training that one people to be right and to do right and two or more such peoples as were the Jews would have overtaxed the wit, wisdom and strength of God himself to keep them straight. I want to declare that the reason why God had a chosen people, and only one, was that He might teach them to be torch-bearers for Him so that through them He might light up every dark soul that came into this world, and the reason why such a task seemed difficult and doubtful of achievement was because those torch bearers, instead of doing as they were bidden and urged to do, hid their torch under a bushel and absolutely refused to let their lights shine into the uttermost parts of the earth. God in His wisdom chose the faithful Abraham and those who should descend from him to evangelize this earth; and as long as there was any promise or prospect of Abraham and his seed doing this deed, they remained the chosen and favored race of God. But when the Jews proved by unmistakable evidence and by an obstinate and rebellious spirit that they would not exert themselves to this end, then God's hand was withdrawn from their help, and they became a race scattered through all lands. I think we do not bear in mind the unmistakable fact that God chose Israel as trustees for man, a nation of priests who were to make known His love and saving power to all people. In Exodus 19:3-6. we see this new born race as it looks back across the Red Sea to its days of bondage and forward to the Land of Promise. Now at this moment Moses received from the hand of God the nation's commission. Let me read it to you: "Thus shalt thou say to the house of Jacob, and tell the children of Israel: Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians and how I bare you on eagles' wings, and brought you unto myself. Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be mine own possession from among all peoples: for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests and a holy nation." What is the significance of this Scripture? I want to give you a line of Cowan's comment on it: "First of all this Scripture calls upon Israel to get her bearings. First let the people learn the reason for their separate existence. It was God who had brought the children of Israel, not to Canaan, not to glory, but to "Himself." Now their future as his own people will depend upon their obeying His voice and keeping His covenant. Such was God's character and such His plan with Israel that only in this way could He make them His special own, above all peoples, that they reflect His glory among men. They must not forget that all the earth is His and all its peoples. If He takes this one tribe to His heart for the time, it is not to forget the rest, but to do good to all. His aim is that Israel shall serve Him as a Kingdom of priests, a nation set apart to prophetic service. Now when the priest and the prophet are a nation, the people for whom they minister and to whom they prophesy are the other nations of the earth." The fundamental and unspeakable tragedy of Israel was its failure to discern the meaning of God in choosing them as His Servant nation. As Helen Barrett Montgomerie so pointedly says, "What God meant for men, Israel monopolized."

He called them out as a peculiar people, a nation of priests and prophets, "A light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." Now instead of Israel measuring up to its high and holy privilege of carrying salvation to "the end of the earth," it became a nation of Pharisees, thanking God that it was not as other nations, and then in the wrath of an outraged God this nation perished miserably behind the hedge of a law interpreted to exclude all Gentiles from the promises of Jehovah. This nation called to be a holy nation, a peculiar people, a nation of priests, a light to all the world, turned from the world wide vision of her prophets to the narrowness and the legalism of warring sects, and though they were the custodians of the ideal of a Kingdom of God on earth, failed to recognize the King when He came. It was indeed, it is forevermore the tragedy of history, this failure of the Jewish nation to perform the service for which it had been chosen and set apart by God. It was the vision of this heart rending and unspeakable tragedy over which Jesus wept as He looked upon the Holy City from the Mount of Olives. "The Jew, set apart to witness to the one true living God to all the earth, failed, and his candlestick was removed out of its place."

Brethren I think of another people called out, especially favored of God, a people with the highest and holiest principles ever given to man, a people who have the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice, Christian Character, the one test of Church membership, and Christian as their only name, to these also have been committed in a most peculiar way the oracles of God. After more than a hundred years of God's grace and graciousness, what have we done to carry this light to the ends of the earth? I ask in the words of another: "Will the Christian Church prove another tragic instance of the thwarted purpose of God? Walking not by the flickering light of the Old Testament, but in the full blaze of light that streams from the Cross of Christ, inheriting His promises, His commands, His love for the whole wide world, I declare to you that this Church of ours has failed up to the present moment, to interpret her own worldwide mission." Shall our candlestick be removed out of its place also?

II. There is another section of Scripture which forces itself upon our attention here, viz. God's attitude to worldwide missions as shown by revelation through His Son. Those of you who have taken the pains to read critically the 4th chapter of John have discovered two things. First, it was not to the Jews, but to a despised Samaritan woman that Christ first announced His Messiahship. Second, it was not the Jews, but the despised men of Samaria who first discovered and said unto the woman, "Now we believe and know that this is indeed the Christ the Savior of the World." Christ indeed came unto His own, but His own received Him not, and the despised Samaritans, and not His own, were the first to acknowledge that "He was the Savior of the World." This then was the revelation God made through and by His Son. "God so loved the world," (not the Jewish race merely, not any race merely, but the world) "that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life!"

Now I ask you to look at the grand climax of this marvelous and matchless life: He has finished His work of atonement. Sin is vanquished and put away. Satan has been conquered and brought to nought. Death is robbed of its horrors and the grave of its sting. What is next to be done? What is left that can be done? He appears to His disciples. What command now does He give them? Matthew's Gospel tells us of only one "All power is given unto me; go ye therefore and teach all nations."

Mark tells us of only one, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature!"

Luke's Gospel tells us of only one: "That repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among all nations."

John's Gospel has one "As my Father hath sent me, even so I send you."

The first chapter of the Acts also records the Lord's last words before His Ascension! What are they? "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

The greatest missionary spirit that ever visited this planet was the Lord's Christ. From beginning to end of His wonderful and matchless earthly career, He tried to impress His disciples with the plain truth that He had come to seek and to save the lost of all the earth. He sought to train them in that spirit of greed and boundless cosmopolitanism that would include all men in its sweep. For God had through David said to him "Ask of me and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." Jesus Christ was to have the faith to ask; and His was the task of instructing and inspiring His disciples to have the faith, though few, to undertake to reach and redeem a world in His name.

III. And then notice God's attitude toward world-wide missions as the Bible reveals it through Paul and the early converts to Christianity. Someone has rightly said that the book of Acts is a record of how the Gospel, taking root in Jerusalem swept out not only into Asia, but into Europe as well. And all of us know that the epistles of Paul, containing more than a third of the New Testament are really a bundle of missionary letters—letters from a missionary to missionary churches, relating how missionary work may be carried on and telling why it should be carried on. And Revelation is a dream telling us what is to take place when the Christians of all countries have become missionary. Unless we catch the missionary message of the New Testament, we miss its central and fundamental teaching.

I close with the thought pronounced in the opening of this address, namely: There can be no great preacher of the Word who ignores the missionary message of the Bible. I long to see the day when there shall be great, towering, giant preachers in this Christian Church of ours. That time shall come when we shall catch and carry to the homes and hearts of our youth the missionary vision and the missionary message. For the man or woman who tries to teach or preach the Word of God without having the missionary message at the center of his or her teaching must teach not a full and free, but a narrow and restricted Gospel. I have never yet known a great Bible teacher or preacher in a non-missionary or anti-missionary church. The burden of world-wide salvation must be upon the preacher's heart before he can deliver the message of might and fullness and power. It is not sufficient for a preacher to have a passion for the souls of those whom he can see with his natural eye, or reach with his human voice. If he is to be a great preacher of righteousness, he must have that passion that His Lord had, a passion for the multitudes of unsaved in all this broad earth, and a faith in God strong enough to make him believe that though he is a weak man, he is strong enough in Christ to enter soul and body into Christ's program of saving the wide world to Him.

Only he who preaches a gospel for all the world preaches a full and not a restricted message. And the Bible only yields its richest truths and treasures to him who reads it as God's missionary book for all peoples.

WOMAN'S REALM

WOMAN'S WORK IN THE EASTERN VA. CONFERENCE

It seems to the writer that no year in our work in this Conference has the work started off as hopefully. We have had so many letters of inquiry as to what we are to do for the coming year that we feel constrained to quote from some of these that you may see the interest manifested. Here is one from a pastor's busy wife, Mrs. G. O. Lankford. They have done things so efficiently in this Society that we have often wondered just how they did them. She writes: "Could you furnish me a copy of the report of the Woman's Board that was read at Holland? I was there and heard it, but, of course, could not remember all of it and I thought it would be well to have it read at our meeting next week. In that way we will have the year's work before us." Again she writes: "Your letter with the information came just in time for our meeting. We had our Thank Offering and it was more than twice last year's. We are planning and hoping this will be our best year yet." Mrs. A. G. Massey writes from Dover, Del., and says: "I am asked to write you concerning our Thank Offering. Where and to whom shall we send it?" Then she tells of the work done last year and how they are planning for better things. Mrs. Harward, our Board Secretary, who, because of rain, was unable to attend meeting in Holland, writes: "I should like to have a few facts to present to our next meeting. I feel that I have missed so much by being absent. I am going to do my best to get some new societies." And she always does make things come to pass.

Mrs. John King, the new President of the Suffolk Society, insisted that we come down and meet with her women. We went and found them lined up behind her. Mrs. King has the ear marks of a good officer, she wants to know what is expected of them, lay their plans and proceed to do it and we bespeak a splendid year's work here for this year. We also had a privilege of looking in on the Girls' Society while there and found they, too, were interested and planning the year's work. Word came from the women at Damascus that they are enthused over the idea of having our Conference with them next fall. Let us all labor to make the occasion memorable in being the best in our history. We believe it will be. Next week we want to talk about our plans for the year. In the meantime, see that your society has a thank offering service. We want $500 from this source. Aren't we women of Eastern Virginia thankful that much for the privileges we enjoy?

AN APPEAL

To the Churches and the Christian People of America:

The Christian Churches of the United States are called to recognize and accept their responsibility to assist the distressed peoples of Europe, who are suffering, to the full, the grievous consequences of a war from which we as a nation have emerged relatively unscathed.

The signers of this appeal have recently visited Europe, some under the special commission of their respective ecclesiastical bodies and nearly all under the commission of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, which designated them as "Friendly Visitors" to the churches of Europe from the Christian people of America. Delegations have personally investigated the conditions in Europe, especially in most of the needy countries, including Hungary, Austria, Poland, Germany, Czecho-Slovakia, Roumania, Transylvania and Jugoslavia. They hereby testify, from intimate personal observation and thoughtful inquiry, that the descriptions of those pitiable conditions have not been exaggerated and are so extreme that they cannot be exaggerated. The need is urgent and desperate.

Great populations are hungry, almost naked, and are becoming the prey of epidemic diseases which, in their undernourished and impoverished condition, they are unable to resist. The recent death of one of our "Friendly Visitors" from one of these causes is a striking testimony of this fact.

The situation bears with special heaviness upon the children, not only because of their helplessness, but because the elemental materials for their nourishment are the things most needed. Millions of little ones are actually starving and millions more are so retarded in their growth that there is imminent danger of a rising generation of anaemic and underdeveloped men and women.

The needs of children in the form of food, clothing and medicines are immediately urgent and, although enormous, must be met and met at once by benevolent contributions which should be made entirely in the form of money. The approaching winter will bring added horrors. We find that the policy governing the child-feeding is based on self-help and local resources, both in personal service and commodities, and that everything possible is being done to promote responsibility and avoid pauperizing.

The responsibility is so great and the task of its economic, efficient and prompt administration is so imperative that it must be met through some great common and highly responsible agency. The European Relief Council has therefore been formed under the chairmanship of Mr. Herbert Hoover, composed of representatives of the responsible agencies, including the Federal Council. This Relief Council has the best knowledge of conditions, the most efficient leadership and the best facilities for the wise administration of this task.

We earnestly commend the accompanying appeal from the Relief Council, in which we have the most absolute confidence, to the Christian people of America, with the hope that pastors will present it to their people with all its force for as long a time as may be needed and that, especially, they will respond to the request that it be presented with all its power on Sunday, December nineteenth. Collections and individual gifts should be sent to Mr. Franklin K. Laue, Treasurer of the European Relief Council, Guaranty Trust Co., 140 Broadway, New York City.

A pathetic illustration of the need for this call was afforded by an orphanage visited by one of our delegations. The children were quiet and well-behaved, with intelligent faces, winsome children, to whom one's heart instinctively went out. A young woman with one assistant was in charge. Because money is scarce and food dear, they cannot afford servants, so these educated and refined young women do all the work of the orphanage themselves—making the beds, cooking and serving the food, and caring for the children. As we looked into the spotlessly clean and well-kept rooms and saw on every side the evidence of thoughtful and loving care, we had a feeling that He who of old took little children in His arms must be very near that place. As we went away, we could not forbear

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

The Sanford Christian Sunday school, Sanford, N. C., has the pleasure of being the first Sunday school to make a Thanksgiving offering for more than $100.00. Our Sanford church is a working church and does things. We want twenty-four more churches to give $100.00 or more. Will your church be one of that number?

My old friend, Mr. June Parker, of New York City (An Alamance boy) came to our rescue with a check for $100. "June", as we know him, always helps us when we call on him.

Then our dear friend, Mr. M. Orban, Jr., Whittier, Calif., mailed us his check for $100.00 for Thanksgiving. He is a great friend to us and we only wish we had the pleasure of meeting him in person and telling him how much we do appreciate his sympathy and help.

Now for the strong pull to reach the goal! Less than seven thousand dollars to reach it. See that your church and Sunday school gives one strong push and it will help me along way up toward the top. I am counting on you. You have never failed me in the past. I know you will not this time.

We need fifteen thousand dollars right away to complete the Children's Home. Make your Thanksgiving offering large that we may not have to stop work on account of funds.

We want you to have a part in this noble work.

Watch our financial report from now till the final report for this year and see that we reach the goal set. Now, is your time to do a real service for the Master. "To visit the fatherless ones" by giving of your means to provide a comfortable home for them.

A LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley: We are very busy, going to school and stripping tobacco. I haven't missed a single day at school yet. I get back some times time enough to pull off some tobacco; mama gives me a penny a stick. I guess W. T. tries to help some too.

We are looking forward to our Thanksgiving offering next Sunday.

Enclosed are our dues for November.

With love to all.—Virginia Pearl and W. T. Ayscù.

I am real glad to have your letter this week as it keeps the corner bright. I hope you will get a big price for your tobacco and then you can make a big "Thank Offering", can't you?—"Uncle Charley."

AN APPEAL

asking the young lady in charge: "Can you manage to get enough for all these children to eat?" A wistful tender look came into her face as she replied: "We give them all we have, but it is not enough. They cry for more. It is very hard. They are little children, and they do not understand."

They do not understand. Do you?

"God has forgotten us," a hungry little girl wailed to her sister. The sister's lip trembled, but she, bravely replied: "No, God has not forgotten us, He has told somebody to help us, and that somebody has forgotten us."

It was Jesus who said: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

The United States is the strongest and most resourceful nation in the world and "we that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak."

(This appeal is signed by 43 of America's leading ministers and laymen. Names omitted for lack of space—C. B. R.)

NOTES

Do not forget to send that Thanksgiving offering to the Orphanage.

Rev. W. F. Jordan, Elon College, N. C., spoke very acceptably at both services of the Burlington church last Sunday. Bro. Jordan is a member of the New Jersey Conference and has been engaged by the American Bible Society for the past twelve years, his work being in South America.

Rev. B. J. Earp writes under date of December 1, as follows: "I am having to leave Vanderbilt University today, at the advice of my doctor. Doctor White has been treating my eyes for a month, and now I have almost reached a nervous breakdown, the consequence being that I have been recommended to the open air till my nerves are in better shape. I have no plans at present whatsoever as to what work I shall take up. Temporarily I shall be at Richland, Ga."

We feel that we are justified in quoting the following paragraph from a personal letter from Rev. H. S. Hardcastle to the Editor under date of December 1:

"Elon in Yale was made very happy last night when Drs. Harper and Atkinson unexpectedly dropped in on us. What a great season of fellowship we all did have. As you know our 'Colony' includes Rainey, Coach Johnson, 'Smitty', and me, and in addition we have a Defiance College man, Rev. E. B. Flory with us. We had a regular reunion together and it made me hungry to come back to old Elon. I am planning to do that some day."

COLLEGE STUDENTS TO MAKE SURVEY

America's big task at present in regard to prohibition is to interpret it properly to the rest of the world. Pre-eminent in that work is to truthfully give the results of prohibition. Just what are the facts is the continuous query that comes from the people of other lands.

To give these facts the students of America have taken it upon themselves to do. Under the auspices of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, and at the direction of the professors of Economics and Sociology in the various colleges and universities, college students, early in 1921, will make a survey of their own communities and ascertain just what effect prohibition has had upon every line of industry, business and investment, and just what the result has been in regard to crime, health, recreation, scholarship, home life and social welfare. These facts will be carefully gathered, painstakingly checked, and sworn to before a notary by either the professor in charge or the students who secure the material.

A LETTER FROM DR. D. A. LONG

Dear Brother Riddle: I hear many encouraging words here, in regard to the way Brother Knight and his wife have entered upon their labors with the members and friends of the First Christian church in this city.

Do not fail to send me THE SUN to 114 Plant Ave., Tampa, Fla. I will leave this city for Tampa tomorrow, via Florence, S. C.

I would be delighted if our Mission Secretary could go to Florida, look out a good place for the establishment of a Christian church, and eventually a Conference. So many of our people from N. C., Va., Ohio, Ind., Ill., New York, and other States go to Florida every winter. Many go to stay. We are not acting wisely. A little concert of action, and we could soon have a number of churches.

My brother William will fill my appointments at Mt. Auburn while I am in Florida.

Truly,

DANIEL ALBRIGHT LONG

Raleigh, N. C., December 3, 1920.

THAT POCKET TESTAMENT

That pocket Testament that you have been planning to buy to give as a Christmas present can be secured at THE SUN office at 75 cents per copy postpaid. We have something nice for that money. Order early.

BIBLES FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

We have on hand a fine collection of Bibles suitable for Christmas presents. We regret that we do not have catalogues and descriptive circulars that we can send customers, with the exception of a circular that covers only a limited part of our stock. Catalogues and circulars are furnished us by the Bible publishers, and during the last few years prices and materials have been so uncertain that the publishers have found it difficult to standardize catalogues and circulars.

If parties desiring Bibles for Christmas presents will be kind enough to write us stating briefly the kind of Bible wanted, we are satisfied that we have it in stock and will take great pleasure in replying immediately or will send on approval. Owing to the congestion of the mails and rapid sale of stock from now until Christmas, orders should be placed at once.

DON'T FORGET

Don't forget that the most appropriate present for a Sunday school teacher is a copy of Peloubet's Select Notes or a copy of Tarbell's Guide. The price of either book is $2.00 per copy when delivered at this office, or $2.10 when sent by mail. These volumes have grown with increasing popularity from year to year and further praise is unnecessary here.

We also have "The Gist of the Lesson" by Dr. R. A. Torrey at 40 cents the copy.

HARRISON

Myrtle Irene Harrison was born March 7, 1920 and died November 18, 1920, aged eight months and eleven days. She was the daughter of Mr. Fletcher Everett and Mrs. Lula Maude Harrison of near Savage, Va. The loss of this beautiful child was distressingly sad because of its suddenness and because of its being the only baby in the home and grandparent home also. It was sleeping sweetly when observed by its mother, and in a few minutes was found dead. As it awoke it slipped off the foot of the bed on which it had been sleeping and a brace rod of the bed caught it across the throat and it died in that position. The loving parents have the sympathy of the entire community. May God bless the family. Burial services by the writer.

JAS. L. ROSTER

He was a member of Elon College church and Sunday school and a manly, lovable boy. His sudden death cast a gloom over the entire community. The large audience crowding the chapel and the many beautiful floral designs borne by his scout comrades attest high esteem in which he was held. We the sympathy for the family and the extend our sincerest sympathy to the loving father and mother and fond sisters. May our Heavenly Father comfort and keep them in their great affliction.

J. W. HOLT

MEMOIR—REV. J. T. KITCHEN

"How well he fell asleep!
Like some great river, widening toward the sea;
Calmly and grandly, silently and deep,
His life joined Eternity."

In the good providence of God this Conference has been bereft of one of its oldest ministers in the person of Rev. John T. Kitchen, who passed from labor to reward at the Protestant hospital, Norfolk, Va., on October 8, 1920.

This beloved brother was licensed to preach the gospel at Cypress Chapel, Nansemond County, Va., during the annual session of this Conference, held there in the year 1873. Having proven his gifts as a minister, he was ordained two years later, during the sitting of Conference at Berea, Nansemond County, Va., 1875, and thence forward for many years he was an active pastor, serving several churches within the bounds of his Conference. He also spent several years in pastoral work in the Virginia Valley Conference, and still later, he did some work in the pastorate of the Greentown, Ind. Christian church.

Later his pastoral labors were hindered by a serious throat trouble, but he did occasional preaching as opportunity offered in various parts of the Master's vineyard. He also frequently used his gifted pen in our Church paper, and so won for himself a place in the hearts of our brotherhood. His last sermons were preached in a series of meetings at Oak Grove in Gates County, N. C., a few weeks before his death. His last article appeared in the columns of The Christian Sun the week he died. It seemed prophetic of his approaching demise, the theme being "Nearing Home." We judge from its contents that he had some presentiment of his early departure and in this delicate way bade his many readers an affectionate farewell. By the time the article appeared he was cold in the embrace of death.

In his long ministry he had made a host of friends, as was so well attested by the multitude who attended the funeral services, which were held over his remains at Mt. Carmel church in Isle of Wight Co., Va., on Sunday afternoon, October 10. His body was laid to rest beside the remains of his first wife, who was Miss Betty Duck, but later Mrs. Thos. M. Murray. Some years after her death he was again married to a lady of the Virginia Valley who after a few years of happy married life was called home in death. During the remainder of his life, he lived alone at Windsor, Va.

He was a good man and was loved by a host of friends and acquaintances. He was held in high esteem by his brethren in the ministry and by the churches he had served in his earlier ministry. He passed away in his seventy-fifth year. He had no near relative living. Among the last acts of his life was a visit to Miss Bradshaw in Southampton County, now in her one hundredth year. She was his nurse in his childhood and he never forgot her, but periodically visited her in her home, thus giving her indications of his appreciation of her care of himself when a child. These visits were not only beautiful, but they portrayed the character of the man.

Verily a good man has gone to his reward and this Conference has a vacant chair in its circle. Therefore be it Resolved. That in the death of our beloved brother, we have lost a fellow-servant, a faithful co-laborer in the gospel ministry, a brother beloved and a genial companion in the social circle.

Resolved. That we give public expression of our sorrow because of his death and so testify to our high estimate of his life and labors as a Christian minister.

Resolved. That a copy of this Memoir be sent to the executor of his estate and that a copy be recorded in the minutes of this session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, and further, be published in The Christian Sun and The Herald of Gospel Liberty.

NUMBER 50

Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the King, behold, wise-men from the east came to Jerusalem, saying, ¶Where is he that is born King of the Jews? For we saw his star in the east and are come to worship him. ¶And when Herod the King heard it, he was troubled and all Jerusalem with him. ¶And gathering together all the chief priests and scribes of the people, he inquired of them where the Christ should be born. ¶And they said unto him, In Bethlehem of Judea: for thus it is written through the prophet.

SOME CHRISTMAS REFLECTIONS

How swiftly time does fly! Only yesterday, it seems, that the roses in the garden displayed their painted cheeks and the sun flower followed the course of the world's light and bowed its head at the close of the day. The vegetables covered the spare-houred chopped dirt and the morning glory bedecked the fence in the rear. Tonight snow has blanketed the earth and the baby tells in amazement the story of Santa Claus' coming. The fire burns with a glow and the story of Saint Nicholas rehearses itself in the mind. The last leaf of the calendar stands alone and the new one is already on the wall. Time flies. "Yesterday" we, too, picked out the best mother-knit stocking to hang up for Santa Claus. No more such joys, and no more such warm stockings. The knitting needles are gone, but the mother is still here. To paraphrase a little, let us say—

"Backward, turn backward,
O time in your flight;
And bring us a Christmas,
Just for tonight"

for the world is the same—ah better, but duties crowd the mind and heart, and life at times, almost loses its sweetness in the fight to keep the bitter out of the sweet and too much of the sweet out of the bitter.

CHRISTMAS, ah the word! Who dares to spell it Xmas, for that places an X for the Christ. It is Christ—mas—a feast of Christ. No wonder the world leaves Christ out when some of us who profess His name get in too much of a hurry to spell Christ and simply put down the X. If you are going to put the X anywhere, put it at the last of the word and not at the first.

OUT on the streets today we heard the buzz of the cars and the tramp of many feet. Christmas shoppers were many and busy. There was the man who hadn't been to town in two, yes, three months; there was the little girl that had just seen her first big dool, but still not her own; there was the little boy who wanted the "Coaster" wagon, but as yet not his. The crowd grew larger, the traffic in the streets thicker, and we hurried away to think of what it all meant. And it means something, too. The Christ Child has caused all this Christmas rush and the flow of the Christmas spirit. Thousands of employees earn their bread making toys. The commerce of the world not only speeds up on the event of Christmas, but all the year Christianity opens the way for trade and traffic. There would be no real world without the Christ.

HOME-COMING! The words have warmth and sunshine in them. Christmas is the home-coming season. The daughter from the city goes to the old home to share the Christmas season with her mother, if that girl is a real soul and can go. The grand-children go to make child life again for the grandfather and grandmother. No words can complete the story and do justice to all the meaning that renewing home ties mean. It is a part of Christmas and Christmas would not be real without it.

* * *

THE Babe of Bethlehem is now the man of Bethlehem. Some have never realized that the Christ ever grew beyond the baby stage. Jesus is a Man, but more than a man. He is the Savior of all mankind. Some have a wrong conception of the Christian life, anyway. They think that it is a life of tears and ease and "sissy" doings. Jesus was once a babe, but today He is more than an infant. He had and has a great manhood, a manhood sufficient to challenge all the world. Jesus tasted all the experiences from the cradle to the Cross. He tasted death and He tasted life for all men to come after Him. As we think of the babe let us also think of the Man.

JESUS was crowded out of the habitations of men into the dwelling place of the ox, and from that day till this, men are still crowding Him out. In the days of His infancy they knew not His worth and some know not as yet, or they would not crowd Him out. But there are those who have not, and this number grows as the years come and go. They sing:

"Joy to the world! the Lord is come;
Let earth receive her king;
Let every heart prepare him room,
And heaven and nature sing"

* * *

THERE are deluded souls that debauch the spirit of Christmas by pouring into their beings that which will make devils out of them, bring heart-aches to their families and demons faint at their unholy acts. The going of John Barleycorn is lessening this number, and thanks be to God for that. A glad Christmas it will be when the spirit of the Christ shall rule and reign in every heart; when He shall "draw all men unto Him" and His followers shall "Make his blessings flow

As far as the curse is known"

* * *

SERIOUS? No, not that, but gladsome song that the world can sing because Jesus was born and came to save and deliver from the sin of the world. For two thousand years the power and principles of Jesus have been demonstrated and found to be workable. The coming of Jesus is the hope of the world. He who foresaw His coming called Him "Wonderful", and as the years come and go, more significant the word—wonderful—seems to us. He is wonderful and works wonders in the hearts of men, when He is allowed.

* * *

BACK to the song of the night, the heart of the world and spirit of the child. When the world becomes dissatisfied because all children cannot enjoy Christmas, a good day it will be. A little girl finds "heaven on earth" as she rocks the dolly Santa Claus brought while another little girl sleeps in rags until late on Christmas morning, and lives in shadows of sin and selfishness, or rather in sin because of our selfishness. When we have taught our children that Jesus makes the world happy and that children are "crying in the night, and nothing but a cry"; when we have taught them that their happiness depends upon what they may be able to do for others, the story of Bethlehem's Babe will be carried to all the world. Christmas should teach us to give and not to get.

CHRISTMAS plans,—did you ever hear the expression? surely, and may we add a word, or at least a suggestion? If those plans are without the doing of some deed of kindness to make a little heaven on earth in some person's heart, they will be in vain so far as the real Christmas spirit is concerned. A personal call, though but a minute, will beat a card; a greeting over the telephone will outweigh "A happy Christmas to you" in passing on the street. There may be homes near you where poverty has taken a hand and there be no Christmas dinner. A suggestion is sufficient. You may live near a school where some boy or girl in unable to pay his or her way home. You can let sunshine into such a heart by a pressing invitation. There is the home where the shadows of the evening are thickening and feet are turned toward the sunset valley. This home may be rich in the world's goods, but poor in love and real joy. Call there and add sunshine to evening's dawn.

REMEMBER your pastor. He has carried burdens during the year, and possibly many of them your burdens. A word, a book, a chair, or something to make life brighter, music sweeter, and fellowship more satisfying. Remember your pastor.

OUR pen moves slowly and the noise of the night dies away. Echoes of the day pass and re-pass. This body of ours laid to rest for the night, shall, by the will of God, come forth in the morning renewed; and though grown away from the Santa Claus period of life, shall join the song of children and march forth in a restless spirit to join the world in real joy on Christmas day.

FRAGMENTS FROM EDITORIAL SWEEPINGS

We note from an Exchange that clergy fares will be changed from one-half to two-thirds in rate January, and that permits will be issued from January 1 to December 31.

While you are puzzled over what to give for a Christmas present, just send along $2.50 and let us send THE CHRISTIAN SUN one year, and along with the first copy a letter telling of your kindness.

Mrs. Muriel MacSwiney, widow of the late Terence MacSwiney, is now in this country in the interest of Ireland. The Irish question is one that has spread itself upon the pages of history for years. There must be some solution. Where is the man to say what it is? Let him come forth.

We take the following paragraph from the Presbyterian Standard, Charlotte, N. C., which is a part of an editorial on "Officious Intermeddling," and pass it along without comment:

"Why are we so concerned about the officious intermeddling of the Interchurch World Movement, and its prejudiced handling of matters that lie outside of the Church's proper sphere? Because our Church was and is a party to it. Our Church entered the movement, and has continued in it and is still a part of the wreck. What is more, we are in the Federal Council, and it is run by those who have the same conceptions of the Church's sphere as the Interchurch World Movement. It has commissions that sit in judgment on everything from labor disputes to the way our government conducts its foreign relations with China and Mexico. This report which we have been considering, a report condemned by both the Times and the Continent, has been published in book form. It is scattered abroad as the work of all the churches taking part in the Interchurch World Movement. It is the work of our Church. We give it publicly our sanction by our membership in the body that issues it. Do we wish to bear responsibility for such a perversion of the Church's mission, such a prostitution of the Church's influence? We must as long as we are linked up with those who use the Church for such ends."

Dr. Robert E. Speer, a layman of the Presbyterian Church, was elected president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America in its session December 1-6 Boston, Mass.

LIGHTHOUSE OBSERVATIONS

J. E. MASSEY

CONSTANTINE AND GREECE

There is much talk of the possible accession of former King Constantine to the throne of Greece. In the recent elections, Premier Venizelos was defeated by the Constantine Party causing him to resign. The contention of the party in power, it seems, is to have the former king on the throne again. The Literary Digest has brought out the point that popular opinion is against Venizelos because the people believe that he has restricted their liberties too much, and that the majority of the people trust that Constantine may lead them out of the tiresome war-time conditions.

Constantine promises to form a government which will let the people have a liberal hand. "Let my people decide" are the words that he wrote from Switzerland, where he has been in exile since his abdication.

In opposition to this movement toward Constantine, the Allies have warned the Greeks not to let him come to the throne. They have threatened to make territorial reprisals and withdraw their financial support, should he return. Their reasons for such possible action are, in part, based upon the fear that the former king may act pro-German and that he will not be the adherent to international law that Venizelos was; furthermore, that Bolshevism may get a stronger hold in Greece.

WELLS' ACCOUNT OF RUSSIA

Russia may have a chance after all, is the opinion of H. G. Wells, prominent English novelist, after his recent trip to that country. In his account in The New York Times, he sketches conditions as he found them over the places he traveled; and he has tried to point out, as much as possible, the future of Russia, the land of Bolshevism and chaos. He studied the country from the standpoint of the present government and from the standpoint of the people who are its subjects. He tried to see why it was that a country could be controlled by such a deplorable scheme as that of the Soviet regime.

Mr. Wells thinks that if Russia is to amount to anything; that if there are to be any sound and decent principles of government established, they must come from what is left of Bolshevism. He fails to see that there is any other faction of people strong enough to prevail save the Soviet one, and he bases his conclusions upon the fact that the country is devoid of trained leadership, and an educated public. The conditions of ignorance make it impossible for the masses to assert themselves in any very definite way in the policies of the government. The thing that pleases them most is that they are away from the old Czaristic regime. They are willing to stand anything but the Czar,—for a while at least.

Even though using unscrupulous methods in their government, Mr. Wells finds that the Bolsheviki have made progress in educating the children—which is worthy of praise. He finds that the officers of the Soviet are even conscientious about the way in which other people see them, and that in many ways they are really trying to do their best to set Russia right in the estimation of the world. When they will be able to do it, he does not know, and cannot tell. Mr. Wells believes that Russia is at the beginning of a period of construction.

PROPOSED BAN ON IMMIGRATION

The Immigration Committee has approved the terms of a bill which aims to halt the immigration into the United States for two years. Provision has been made, however, for admitting blood relatives of aliens who are now resident here, and who have declared their intention of becoming naturalized citizens. There is provision, also, for the entry of travelers not staying more than six months, and for "otherwise admissible" aliens from Canada, New Foundland, Mexico and Cuba.

The bill has the backing of organized labor, which desires that the ban be placed on immigration because of the present problems of unemployment in American industry. The New York Times states that, while Congress may not consent to prohibition of immigration for so long a time as two years, it is believed that it will stop the reported rush of undesirables from Southern Europe.

FRONT PORCH LEAGUE TALK

President-elect Harding has proposed that he will have conferences at his home on the League in which he will communicate with the best minds of the country in order to determine the kind of a league of nations America should enter. The conferences will begin December 13 and extend over several months. According to his schedule, there is to be invited to them, "brilliant Americans of every shade of thought." The President-elect states that this will be a campaign designed to unite Americans, rather than merely Republicans, on a scheme for international co-operation for peace that shall not infringe the freedom of the country's action.

CANADA'S CALL FOR BETTER LITERATURE

Canada has made a literary declaration of independence, according to a recent issue of The Literary Digest. It seems that our northern neighbor is being "flooded" with the "literary slush" which she imports from the United States. One Canadian writer and critic in the Toronto Onlooker writes that Canada's "national soul" is in danger of being lost in the wave of America's cheap and trashy literature. He finds that our magazines are ever-laden with "well-advertised trash" and that this stuff when read, leaves one neither wiser nor better. Canadians are reacting against this kind of American literature in view of building up a stronger and better literature of their own.

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL IN SESSION

Boston, Mass., Dec. 5, 1920

Dear Editor and Readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN:

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is now in its fourth quadrennial session here, the Council having been formed in 1908. The writer is not advised of the number of constituent bodies, or denominations, forming the original Council, but discovers that at present the Council is composed of thirty constituent bodies (or denominations) made up of a membership of over 20,000,000 communicants. Only evangelical churches are eligible, thus excluding Catholics and Unitarians, and so far as the writer now observes practically all the large and evangelical bodies are active members of the Council save the Southern Baptists, and the Episcopal Church as such. (The Episcopals articulate with the Council through one or more Commissioners, and here in Boston have flung wide the doors of two of its great cathedrals to public meetings of the Council.)

The Federal Council is a wonderful and significant assembly from two points of view, 1. Because of what it seeks to achieve. From its inception the Council has sought to do two distinctive things, (a) To cultivate a spirit of friendliness and good fellowship amongst all the churches that exalt Jesus Christ as Savior and Redeemer and give to each a knowledge of what the other was thinking, saying, and doing. (b) To create a spirit of cooperation and Christian solidarity for the great work of world-wide evangelization and brotherhood through Christ.

As such there are Business Committees, Administrative Committees, Executive Committees of the Council, made up of men from the various denominations, who, working together seek to facilitate the work of the various Churches, and point out where work is most needed, and where the needs are most pressing. Then there are, and these are the more important, Commissions on "International Justice and Goodwill", on "Relations with Religious Bodies in Europe," on "Relations with France and Belgium," on "Home Missions", on "Foreign Missions", on "War and the Religious Outlook" etc, etc. All of these Commissioners seek to coordinate the work of the various constituent bodies, and also to present a solid front on the non-Christians and to the Catholic world. In brief, the Federal Council is united Protestantism, and as such is seeking to cultivate a spirit of unity and brotherly love among the denominations. 2. The Council is wonderful, marked and marvelous in its personnel. The President elected and presiding at this session is Robert E. Speer of New York, that marvelous Christian statesman who as a layman embodies and interprets the great religious thought and dynamic of his time. Besides an orator and an author of international fame, he is a parliamentarian and Christian diplomat with a gavel, John R. Mott, another Christian statesman and layman, is one of the speakers who, has the international mind and heart, and speaks with pleading eloquence in terms of the world.

There are bishops, presidents, potentates high in the Church councils of this and other lands among the counsellors and speakers, and the utterances from the platform will form the volumes we should read and take cognizance of in our religious teaching and preaching during the coming decade.

I shall hope to write more in detail of the Council to THE SUN at a subsequent date. It is good to be here with President Coffin of our own S. C. C., with Secretary Burnett, Drs. M. T. and Alva H. Morrill, Summerbell, Helfenstein, W. A. Harper, W. G. Sargent, W. W. Staley and others.

COST AND SERVICE OF THE FEDERAL COUNCIL

The Fourth Quadrennial session of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, held in Boston, Mass., December 1-6, was, in some respects, the greatest meeting of Christian statesmen ever held in this country. There were some four hundred accredited delegates from thirty constituent bodies, many of them the foremost leaders in their respective denominations. It was considered the best meeting in the history of the Council.

The original conception of the Council was the federation of American churches; but it has grown into a working body with international, inter-racial, and world-wide activities. The idea of co-operation without selfish motives has found its way into a thinking world, and doors open everywhere for its teaching, its sympathy, and its help. Its work has increased with its willing service, and expenses have increased in like proportion.

At the beginning of the work of the Council in 1908, it was estimated that one dollar per thousand members of the constituent denominations would support the work financially; and counting 16,000,000 members, would yield $16,000.00 per year. As a matter of fact, the treasurer's report shows the average expense for the first four years to be $22,000.00 per year; the second four years, $68,000.00 each year; the third four years, $181,000.00 each year; or, expressed in terms of quadrenniums, $88,000.00 the first; $272,000.00 the second; and $784,000.00 the third. It is plain that the $16,000.00 allotted to the constituent denominations in no sense met the expenses of the Council; yet the expenses have been met by generous donations from individuals and churches. The time has come when more adequate financial support must be provided for, and the Council decided by unanimous vote to raise the coming year the sum of $300,000 by an equitable distribution of that sum among the constituent denominations. It is to be hoped that the Christian Church will gladly provide its share of this sum, when the distribution is made to the denominations.

The sum to be paid by the Christian Church, in underwriting the Interchurch World Movement, would pay her part of the Federal Council budget for four quadrenniums.

The Federal Council so thoroughly harmonizes with our denomination that we should count it a privilege to support its work in the great field of real Christian service to which the Council is committed. The absence of credal and sectarian deliverances on the platform and floor of the Council presents the spirit of unity and the oneness of purpose in the whole church of Christ. The church may never become one in thought, but it is one in service. Co-operation is the word that expresses the spirit of the Council. What the Council has done in supplying Army and Navy Chaplains; what it has done for the church in war-scarred European countries; what it has done for temperance; and what it has done through Commissions on Christian Education, Evangelism, Family Life, Social Service, Country Life, and other subjects, has given new impetus to Christian activities in all denominations, and in all lands. It is the only organization in a position to deal with the present religious world-situation in its social, industrial, and political revolution.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

"OLD SANTA" AND THE CHILDREN

The Thanksgiving offerings are coming in and we are still pushing on up toward the goal, but not as fast as we would like to.

We have passed the fourth rung in the ladder and hope to be past the fifth one this week and then we will just have five more to pass and the goal will be reached. We appeal to you to help us reach it.

Christmas will soon be here and "Old Santa" will visit, we hope, all the little children and make them happy. When I was a little boy many years ago, I well remember how I looked forward to Christmas morn with so much expectation and how my eyes would open wide when I would look in my stockings and find red striped candy. I no longer hang up my stocking and "Old Santa" has too many children to make happy to even think of me. Still we get our happiness from trying to make others happy and it makes us happy to see the little children happy.

The little children at the Orphanage are not so well fixed as the little fellows who have fathers and mothers to write to "Old Santa" for them so he will fill their stockings with so many things to make them happy. My heart goes out to the little child that has been left alone in the world with no father or mother to see to it that the little stockings are filled on Christmas morn when presents are in order and happiness ought to reign supreme in every heart.

I have been wondering since Christmas is so near how many Sunday schools or how many church societies have thought of the little children at the Christian Orphanage and have made any plans to put a little sunshine in their pathway.

Our Church could do so much for the Master's Kingdom if it could one time catch the vision of the great opportunity in this one branch of its work.

Some years ago a family of little children were brought to the Orphanage and have been reared here. One boy, the oldest, reached maturity several years ago and now holds a responsible position and is making good. The next oldest reached maturity a few weeks ago, a splendid young man and one who was faithful in his duties here. We got him a position with a corporation that started him off on a salary of $100 per month. Came here little tots, helpless and without an opportunity, but the Church, through this institution, gave them an opportunity and they made good. Who would regret, for one minute, that they had contributed of their money to give these two boys a chance in life.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: Enclosed find $1.00 for the Orphanage, as my Thanksgiving gift. Am sending this with grandmother's since daddy and mother are members of the M. E. church.—Elsie Mariam Edwards.

I hope you had a nice Thanksgiving and that "Santa" will come to see you Christmas.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: Last year we sent our Thanksgiving offering through our church collection at Isle of Wight Court House, but as we could not attend the services this year we are sending direct to you. We send $1.00 each and wish we could send more. With love and best wishes for you and the little orphans.—J.M., Jr., Charlotte and Alberta Roberts.

You are fine little folks and I thank you very kindly for your Thanksgiving offering. It was real good of you.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: I enclose $5.00 for the Orphanage. Sorry I could not do any better, but this will help some.—Frank Bray.

You are good to the little orphans and we are glad. We trust this was much pleasure to you.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: Well, here I am again. I am a very busy little girl these days—writing letters to old Santa Clause and telling my mother what I want for Christmas. Guess the little children at the Orphanage are anxious for the time to come. Guess the little children up there do not know how to appreciate the snow and ice as we do. That is our greatest sport. I take my sled every day and enjoy a long ride down the hill. Enclosed find my dues for October, November and December.—Mary Louise Snook.

We don't often have enough snow and sleet for the children to use sleds, but if you could be here when we have snow and ice you would think they enjoy it.—"Uncle Charley."

THE SUN office is now ready to furnish you Peloubet's Select Notes, or Tarbell's Guide on the International Sunday school lesson. Either volume is $2.10 delivered or $2.00 when purchased at this office.

Next week's CHRISTIAN SUN will probably go to press earlier than usual due to the speeding up of work before the holidays.

SUPERANNUATION BOARD MEETS IN RALEIGH

The Board of Superannuation of the Southern Christian Convention met in its first regular meeting at the Bland Hotel, Raleigh, N. C., December 9, 7:30 p. m.

The full Board consists of J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C.; K. B. Johnson, Cardenas, N. C.; W. K. Holt, Burlington, N. C.; B. D. Jones and W. M. Jay, Holland, Va. All were present.

The first duty of the Board was to organize itself for the transaction of business. J. O. Atkinson was elected Chairman, W. M. Jay, Secretary and K. B. Johnson, Treasurer.

On motion the Secretary was ordered to write the various Conference secretaries to instruct their respective Conference treasurers to turn over to the treasurer of the Board of Superannuation, the corresponding funds in their possession, in accordance with the action of the Conferences at their last annual sessions.

On motion it was agreed by the Board to ask of the Conferences for the further support of this fund the sum of five cents per member annually, provided that no Conference be asked to raise less than one hundred dollars per annum; and that the Chairman of the Board be requested to present this matter at the next annual session of the Conferences.

On motion the Secretary was instructed to prepare suitable application blanks to be used by applicants in applying for aid from this fund.

The names of a number of aged ministers and widows of ministers were presented to the Board and due consideration was given in each instance.

The Secretary was instructed to send application blanks to the above mentioned parties and to state in the report to THE CHRISTIAN SUN that if any person eligible to this fund fails to receive a blank, same may be secured by writing to the Secretary.

It was voted that payment of these funds will be made quarterly to the beneficiary.

After providing for certain items of expense incidental to the Board meeting, printing of blanks, secretary's book, etc, the Board adjourned to meet again on the second Thursday in December 1921, or at the call of the Chairman; the place of meeting to be at Raleigh unless otherwise agreed upon.

W. M. JAY, Secretary.

That pocket Testament that you have been planning to buy to give as a Christmas present can be secured at THE SUN office at 75 cents per copy postpaid. We have something nice for that money. Order early.

If your daughter is going to get married Christmas and begin house-keeping for herself, start her right by sending her THE SUN as a Christmas or wedding present. And this also applies to the son.

An accurate record will be kept of each subscription received as a Christmas present and the same will be cut off promptly.

MISSIONARY

MONTHLY OFFERINGS FOR MISSIONS IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

The number of Sunday schools making a monthly offering for missions is growing steadily, but is not as large yet as is needed or desired.

Our Southern Christian Convention, as well as all our Sunday school Conventions, have voted that all our Sunday schools (in Virginia, Delaware, North Carolina, Georgia and Alabama, everywhere) take one offering a month for missions. It would seem on this account, if on no other, that all schools would for the sake of the cause, and loyalty to their church, adopt the plan and do this good and helpful thing. Moreover, the Mission Secretary has said, and now repeats, that if any Sunday school will give one offering a month to our Orphanage, and one offering a month to our Mission Work, and does not get enough the other two Sundays to pay its current expenses, the Mission Secretary will himself pay the deficit. We have never yet known a school trying the above method to run in debt, or get behind with its current expenses. We likely never will.

When a Sunday school devotes all its offerings to its own expenses it has not made an offering at all. It has taken some of its money to be used in a good purpose, but it certainly has not made a benevolent offering. No stronger or clearer expression can be made on this than that of J. F. Goucher who says: "Contributions to the expenses of the Sunday schools by those who are to receive the direct benefits of their own gifts are not acts of benevolence. In fact, for the church to pay the expense of its own Sunday school is no more an act of benevolence than it is for a father to pay his family's living or educational expenses. For the child to be taught to give financially to anything which centers in himself, or to anything in which his personal relation is the determining factor, or to give simply to relieve his church of its duty to give, rather than to supplement the giving of the church that it may enlarge its work, is to strengthen the principles of selfishness. The church should provide for the expense of its own Sunday school, and let the children and youth have the influence and character-developing privilege of contributing to the world's evangelization. The aim in Sunday school giving should be to cultivate genuine unselfish, thoughtful habits of giving; that is, true benevolence directed by an enlightened conscience and an intelligent sympathy." In this statement, Dr. Goucher goes one step further than this writer has gone, and says that all the contributions of the Sunday school should go to purposes other than expenditures for itself. But Dr. Goucher's idea and the writer's are together in the main, namely, that children and youth in the Sunday school should have the influence and character-developing privilege of contributing to the world's evangelization.

Now, above and beyond the offerings is the further and more important fact of teaching and learning missions in the Sunday school. And after all this is the main objective. If our schools begin to put their money into missions it will not be long till they will want to know more about missions. The monthly offering gives the monthly opportunity for missionary thought, speech, or training. "For where your treasure is there will be your heart also."

J. O. ATKINSON

CHURCHES AND SUNDAY SCHOOLS THAT DO THINGS

Marion Lawrance has said that "The churches that know most about missions are the churches that do most," do most, that is, for others and for themselves. That is why Marion Lawrance, the great Sunday school man, wants the children in the Sunday school, as well as the grown-ups to study and learn about missions. "Without a doubt," he continues, "the greatest barrier to the missionary propaganda of the church is lack of information. No information, no inspiration."

The hope of the church of the future is missionary instruction and training in the Sunday school. Your missionary churches, and your missionary Sunday schools are the ones who do things, you cannot hold a missionary church or school from progress, neither can you hope for progress in a church or school that is non-missionary.

I know of no enemy to the church, or to the school, quite so dangerous or so deadly as the one in church or school who opposes missions. Satan himself can wish for no closer ally, or surer agency for ruin than such a person. Such a person sets himself against the supreme and most emphatic command of our Lord's arisen Christ, and against the sum total of the church's responsibility. Such a person is not seeking Christ's way, but his own way, and that way leads to ultimate ruin and destruction. The person who says that "our church spends too much money for missions away from home and so has too little to spend on ourselves and our church at home", asserts that which is contrary to all history, and conflicts with all Scripture. For from the first church of the Apostles till this good hour the churches which have ever and always done most for themselves, and for every benevolence at home, are those churches which did most for those away from home and who were not blessed as we are. "He that loseth himself for my sake and the gospel's shall find it." We find our life, in its joy and fullness, when we lose it for others, for our Master's service and kingdom. Put it down, and remember it forever, that the person who in Sunday school or church, opposes missions, is working for the stagnation and ultimate undering of that church and school. There is just one reason why we have so many lifeless schools and churches today, and that reason is that they do so little for missions.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

MEETING OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

The Board of Education of The American Christian Convention met in Dayton, Ohio, October 19, 1920. This was one of the most strenuous meetings the board ever held. The members of the board labored under a sense of loss occasioned by the recent resignation of Rev. John MacCalman, D. D., who had served on the board many years and was one of its most valuable members. The old members of the board were delighted with the genial fellowship of the new member, Rev. C. E. Huff, who because of his marked ability fits into the vacancy admirably.

The work of the board grows more complicated year by year as its field becomes more extensive. However the work of the board at its last meeting naturally divides itself into three divisions.

1. The maintenance of work already established and plans made.
2. The planning and providing for new or enlarged work.
3. Our interdenominational relations and obligations.

Under the first division the consideration of Jireh College took about one-fourth of our time. (The situation there and the result of our considerations have been fully stated by Dr. Sargent. See Herald of Gospel Liberty, November 25, page 9.)

The incorporation of the board as planned for one year ago is under way. This action becomes necessary because of the enlarged work of the board and funds accruing from the Forward Movement and other sources.

The summer schools for pastors were endorsed and aided financially by a limited amount.

In this division may be placed the usual routine work of the department.

Rev. W. T. Walters was elected president of the board and Rev. Hugh A. Smith was re-elected clerk for the coming year.

In the second division the board approved of a cooperative publicity between the colleges and the Board of Education and took action looking to its consummation.

Rules regulating scholarships for ministerial students were changed to meet conditions which were not known when the scholarships were first established.

Our churches were asked to observe a "go-to-college-day" in June. This is important and attention will be called to it later through the columns of The Herald of Gospel Liberty, and THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The three members of the board living nearest to each other were made an executive committee to act on such matters as were necessary during the year, thus obviating the expense of a meeting of the full board. These members are Drs. W. G. Sargent, W. T. Walters, and Roy C. Helfenstein.

Under the third division the board approved of the School of Religion of Ohio and planned for the membership of the Christian Church in said school.

The Secretary of the Department was instructed to become a member of the Religious Educational Association of America.

The Secretary of the Department was instructed to represent this board at the meeting of the Council of Church Boards of Education and the Association of American Colleges.

HUGH A. SMITH, Clerk of Board

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP

(An address by Brother J. W. Stout, Sanford, N. C., before the N. C. Christian Conference and published by vote of that body.)

It is indeed a great pleasure to be here and to worship at the altar made sacred with the incense of grateful memories. I see before me today, faces chiseled a little finer by the hand of time, but all the dearer because of long years of friendship, confidence and long service in the work to which we are again dedicating ourselves. To those who have grown old in the service, I wish that we younger people might bring a message that would prove that your work and teachings have not been in vain; but rather that we have caught the vision that you have striven to point out and with your aid and prayers are going to carry forward.

A new era has dawned in America. Men and women have been shaken loose from traditions and poverty. With this loosening of the bonds of poverty in the South, a new opportunity has been presented and a new duty imposed. For forty years we wandered in the wilderness of poverty, of ignorance, of despondency, and a lack of confidence in our ability to do things on a really big scale. Thank God that day has passed and I hope that no relapse may come economically, socially or spiritually. Our Men and Millions Campaign has proven to the Christian Church that she is strong and militant, economically, and spiritually.

So in talking about Christian Stewardship, I want to get at the right relation between Men and Millions. The leaders of our Church who planned that campaign saw the fundamental question of Christian Stewardship and called it Men and Millions. The first and vital question of Christian Stewardship is men and women. If the church of God can get the right relation to exist between men and God, the millions will flow in to the church. If that relation is not obtained all the campaigns devised by the hands of man must of necessity fail. Christian Stewardship is vastly more than a question of Christian giving. Christian Stewardship is a question rather of relationship between man and God.

Christian Stewardship is not solely a relation between man's pocket-book and God; it is a relationship between man's life and God. It is a duty imposed by God that a man or woman live their fullest life, that they give their fullest service, whether that service be in business, medicine, law, the trades, on the farm, or in the factory, in the pulpit or school room, or wherever their talents call them. A steward is a trustee, accepting the gifts that God has given him; and accepting also the duties of trusteeship that God has imposed.

A steward is accountable for what has been committed to him. He is to manage, or administer it, in the interest of the owner. To forget this, and to appropriate and use what God has entrusted to him for himself, is no less a crime than for a trustee of an estate to appropriate the funds entrusted to him for his own profit and pleasure. As in the parable of the pound the day of reckoning will surely come. Whether the steward has held all of his property, wealth and ability as to trust of God, or has called it his own; whether he has wasted it in foolish expenditures, or has withheld it in vain-glorious hoarding whether he has, like Annanias, kept back part of the price, or made full surrender of both himself and the property committed to him by God are questions that will enter into the final accounting to which every steward must come.

But what are specifically some of the duties and responsibilities of stewardship? Stewardship is primarily a trusteeship of the gospel of Jesus Christ. Paul says: "A stewardship of the gospel is committed to me". Every believer is a steward of the manifold grace of God. Not simply those who are called to be pastors, or evangelists, or missionaries, but all believers. This stewardship of the gospel is all inclusive. It takes in all we are, all we do, all we have, and all we acquire. It is the stewardship of personality, the stewardship of the faculties and powers with which God has been pleased to endow us. There is a stewardship of time. Time is God entrusted. We have no right to do as we please with it. We are to use it as a part of one great stewardship of the manifold grace of God for the good of men. Then there is the stewardship of opportunity, and of privilege, and of every blessing that may come into our lives, and with all of these there is the stewardship of property or wealth. There is the stewardship of parenthood; the stewardship of good citizenship. Indeed stewardship is in every relation of life and death.

It is the duty and should be accepted as the high privilege of every man and woman to advance the cause of Christ on this earth. If you have the powers and feel the call to the ministry, it is a fearful thing not to answer that call by dedicating your life to the service of Christ through the ministry. God has called a few to serve him through the ministry; he has called all the others to serve him in other ways. God has entrusted talents for song to some and they have no right to withhold this talent from His service. He has given others the ability to transmit ideas and foster them in the minds of the young. So how can they escape the stewardship of teaching? He has endowed still others with knowledge and power to heal human ills and alleviate suffering and their duties of stewardship calls them to medicine. To some are given minds that deal successfully with the intricacies of legal jurisprudence and their duty lies in the administration of justice. To some God has entrusted the ability to trade and carry on the business of the world, but their stewardship requires that they do it for the glory of God. Some have superior skill in the mechanical arts and to them he has entrusted the transforming of raw material into the finished products of the factory and the mill and there they may and must be stewards. To the vast majority of the people of this fair land of ours, God has entrusted the raising of food and supplies, so that His people might not hunger and so the farmer as he tills the soil or reaps his harvest is a steward of the one God.

When men and women catch the vision and realize the ever present Christian stewardship, life to them will no longer be divided into sacred and secular. There will be no line on one side of which he will say "Here I must be religious", and on the other side, "Here I may be worldly". To the true steward business is as sacred a thing as a prayer meeting, and is to be conducted on the strictest lines of honesty and purity. The Christian steward realizes that he is in partnership with the Father and with His Son Jesus Christ, and his business is carried on in relation to that partnership. He feels free to ask God's guidance and blessings upon his business and rejoices in the consciousness of his Heavenly Father's presence in everything that he does, or that takes place in connection with his business.

Life becomes a different thing from what it usually is when men sell goods, or keep ledgers or use hammers or saws, or plow and sow fields for Christ. Nor is any duty in all the realm of daily toil too humble to be performed with an eye single to God's glory. "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Stewardship helps to lift men up to this high ideal.

A steward has the right and the duty to make all he can justly. God does not want slothful or wasteful stewards. He imposes the obligation of doing everything the best it can be done. Some have greater talents than others and each must, if he be a good steward, make the most of the talents. God gave us his idea of the abilities of men in the parable of the talents, giving more to some than others, but expecting of each a return equal to his ability. I think that God expects us all to make all the money that we can honestly make. Laziness, indifference, neglect of duty, failure to make the most of one's talents is a breach of divine trust.

Since the earth and the fullness thereof is God's, the true steward does not have to search the Scriptures to see how little he may give back to God, but if a Christian is a true steward, then with him it is a matter of determining, first, how much of the income is necessary to make him most efficient; second, how much money is necessary to be put into his business, profession or farm to make it the most productive, and then all the balance—whether it be ten per cent, or fifty per cent—belongs to God, and under the Christian trust agreement with God, must be applied for the benefit of mankind. God expects a true steward to expend on himself all that is necessary to make him the most efficient steward. In business, free service is synonymous with poor service. Likewise a Christian steward has the right to retain for himself out of his income from God's estate, reasonable compensation for his services. God is not niggardly. He expects his children to retain for themselves enough to give them comfortable homes, attractive clothes, nutritious food, time and opportunity for recreation. More than this a Christian steward has no right to retain less than God would have him retain. And here I would emphasize the point that a "laborer is worthy of his hire," whether that laborer be a teacher, a lawyer, a business man, or a preacher of the Gospel.

So when we admit and fully realize that all that we are, all that we have and all that we hope to be, in wealth, mind, soul and health, is through the manifold grace of God, that our business prospers or fails at His will, that our health can be changed into death by His will, that our talents and our souls are lost except through His mercy; then how can we fail to be true and faithful stewards?

The wage earner and the millionaire; the one who has the least committed to him and the one who has the most each must stand before the judgement seat of Christ and have their getting and their givings, their accumulations and their expenditures, their motives and their methods, brought under the searching scrutiny of Him whose eyes are as a flame of fire. All wrong ways of getting money, all frauds and dishonesty and oppression, together with all wrong ways of using and spending money, will be laid bare in that day. All withholding from God, all selfishness and covetousness, all wastefulness and extravagance, all spending of money to gratify pride or sensual desires, will soon be seen in the light of the eternal throne, and no cloak of respectability or religiosity, no paltry excuse, such as is often made by those who do not give, will be able to conceal or extenuate any blemish or flaw in any man's stewardship. Every man will be rewarded as his works have

On the other hand, all diligence and fidelity in the service of God as his stewards, all getting and giving for God's glory, all prayerfulness and consecration, all unselfishness and liberality and self sacrifice, whether by those who have little or by those who have much, will be remembered by the Lord of those good stewards.

Blessed indeed shall those stewards be to whom it shall be said when the King comes to reckon with them: "Well done, good and faithful servants; thou wast faithful over a little. I have set thee over much; enter into the glory of thy Lord."

Sermons and Songs of The Christmas Season

THE STAR AND THE SONG

“O star in the heavens gleaming,
And shedding your wondrous ray,
Your light over Bethlehem beaming,
Reflects in our hearts today
The wonderful Christmas glory,
It signals to lands afar;
All nations can read the story,
In the light of the Christmas star!

“O song through the air resounding,
Your music can never die,
The love in your notes abounding
Still rings over earth and sky.
The wonderful Christmas Chorus
Shall echo through ages long,
Heaven’s portals swing wide before us
At the sound of the Christmas song!”

CHRISTMAS

Christmas is a feast of hope. Out of poverty and neglect, from the chill cave of the Bethlehem khan, He appeared whose goings forth are of old, even from everlasting. Herod and Caesar, with all they stood for, perished; but the Child of Mary reigns, and shall reign. He it is who putteth down one and setteth up another, and in the presence of wrong triumphant we may hearten ourselves by that knowledge. “King of kings and Lord of lords”—how gloriously the titles roll out in the “Hallelujah Chorus!” And His angels, who sang of peace on earth, and the long vision of His accomplished purpose, and were calling one another (all of them parts of Jehovah’s dread Sabbath) to help in its accomplishment. We, too, are summoned to our part in that task. Let us be men of good will, that in the triumph of God’s will we may find our peace, and the world’s.—The Living Church.

A CHRISTMAS PRAYER

O God our Father, Giver of the most loving Gift, make us partakers of Thy joy at Christmas time. We, too, with simple shepherds and wise men, come to bend the knee before the kingly Child, bringing our gifts of faith and love in true self-offering. Show us our way of service and give us willing hearts to walk therein. For motherhood and childhood, for love that gives and learns we bring Thee Thanks. Have mercy upon wives and mothers in distress and children fatherless. Hasten the coming of Thy kingdom. Bring an end of war and give the shaping of the world to men of good will. Teach our hearts how to make ready for that age of peace. In the name of Christ, who loved us and gave Himself for us. Amen.—Isaac Ogden Rankin.

CHRISTMAS SONG

The earth has grown old with its burden of care,
But at Christmas it always is young;
The heart of the jewel burns lustrous and fair,
And its soul full of music breaks forth on the air,
When the song of the angels is sung.

It is coming, Old Earth, it is coming to-night:
On the snowflakes which cover the sod,
The feet of the Christ-Child fall gentle and white,
And the voice of the Christ-Child tells out with delight,
That mankind are the children of God.

On the sad and the lonely, the wretched and poor,
That voice of the Christ-Child shall fall,
And to every blind wanderer opens the door
Of a hope that he dared not dream of before,
With a sunshine of welcome for all.

The feet of the humblest may walk in the field
Where the feet of the holiest have trod;
This, this is the marvel to mortals revealed
When the silvery trumpets of Christmas have pealed
That mankind are the children of God.

A CAROL OF THE BABE IN THE MANGER

By H. Elvet Lewis

His mother gazed with wondering eyes—
Little Stranger!
As she hushed His first small tender cries,
In a manger!

She watched Him in His first earth-sleep,
And knew not why she fain would weep—
Little Stranger—
In a manger!

When passing mothers saw his face—
Little Stranger!

They said how the Lord had shown much grace
In a manger!

The little folded hands they kissed,
And went their way in a tender mist—
Little Stranger—
In a manger!

Snow-white lambs drew gently near—
Little Brother!

And shepherds knelt with holy fear—
Little Brother!

The mighty angels looked with awe,
And sang at Home of the grace they saw—
Little Brother—
With His mother!

THE FIRST CHRISTMAS

The little Lord Jesus lay meek in the manger;
 No room in the inn for the tiny new stranger:
 So out with the creatures so quiet and weary,
 In the stable so humble, so darksome and dreary,
 The little Lord Jesus was cradled in hay,
 And the dawn, when it came, brought the first Christmas Day.

But that night on the plains there was wonder and waking,

There were songs in the sky, and a glory-light breaking
 O'er hill and o'er valley, and white wings were gleaming,
 And far to the eastward a new star was beaming.
 To guide the wise kings to the dear little Stranger,
 Who lay in his beauty asleep in a manger.

'TIS CHRISTMAS EVE

Mrs. Ina Salome Delo

An ancient world knocks softly once again
 At memory's door;
 Echoes of heavenly praise—the angels' song,
 Sound evermore.

That new-born Light o'er Judeah's rugged hills,
 O wondrous Eve!
 Still shines serene, a sacrificial ray,
 That we may live.

Its piercing gleam e'en lights the dreary way,
 Through death's dark tomb,
 And turns to hopeful joy, with faith sublime,
 Its midnight gloom.

Ring then, tonight, across this stricken world,
 Ye Christmas bells!
 Comfort and peace, goodwill to all mankind,
 Your message tells.

STORY OLD, YET ALWAYS SWEET

'Twas night on fair Judea's plains,
 Where faithful shepherds watched their sheep,
 When sudden, sweet, exultant strains
 Woke all the dreaming world from sleep.
 "Rejoice!" they sang: "in Bethlehem
 To-night a child is born, to be
 First star in heaven's bright diadem;
 All hail the King of Calvary!"

Then shone above the hills a star,
 And, as the Christmas angels sang,
 Shepherds followed from afar
 While heaven's wide arch with rapture rang.
 And full of deep, adoring awe,
 They came to where the star stood still;
 And angels sang, when Christ they saw:
 "Be peace on earth! To man goodwill!"

O, story old, yet always sweet,
 Of Christ-Child in a manger born,
 With shepherds kneeling at His feet,
 While angels sang on Christmas morn.
 Low at Thy feet we kneel today,
 While heaven and earth with gladness ring;
 The Babe that in a manger lay
 Is crowned at last a King—a King!

SANTA CLAUS'S REAL NAME

There's never a home so low, no doubt
 But I in my flight can find it out;
 Nor a hut so hidden but I can see
 The shadow cast by the lone roof tree!
 There's never a house so proud and high
 That I am constrained to pass it by;
 Nor a heart so happy it may not be Happier still when blessed by me!
 What is my name? Ah! who can tell,
 Though in every land 'tis a magic spell!
 Men call me that and they call me this,
 Yet the different names are the same, I wis.
 Gift-bearer to all the world am I,
 Joy-giver, Light-bringer, where'er I fly
 But the name I bear in the Courts above
 My truest and holiest name is Love!

—Julia C. R. Dorr.

THE LITTLE CHRIST-CHILD

There was cheer at the inn, with windows alight,
 But no room to offer a child that night—

The little Christ-child, so tender and small;
 They made him a couch in the cows'rough stall.

They covered him there in the manger's straw;
 Only the humble cattle saw.

Warmth in the village, cheer at the inn.
 And the straw in the manger scant and thin;

But the angels sang on the hill near by,
 And a gold star rose in the winter sky;

His mother pillowed him on her arm,
 And the little sleeper was glad and warm.

Hundreds and hundreds of years have gone,
 And still the angels are singing on;

Still the light of that lovely star
 Over the world hills shines afar;

Still into hearts where love is bright
 The Christ-child enters on Christmas night!
 —Mary Nelson Talbot, in the Youth's Companion.

HIS COMING

Silence, and midnight, and a star;
The flash of shining robes afar;
A song within the blue;
Some wandering shepherds—But they say
He came in such a lowly way,
Though destined this great world to sway,
The great world never knew.

The dawn begins to break and glow—
Hark! Do you hear the bugles blow,
And hear the throbbing drums?
Again the King! But with such power,
And tyrants so before Him cower,
The world scarce knows in this great hour
That it is He who comes.
Yet through all perils and alarms,
He kept men's hearts, and nerved the arms
That swung the righteous sword;
The legend which His banner bore
Was "Right is Might," and evermore
The powers of darkness fly before
The glory of the Lord.

—Samuel Valentine Cole.

CHRISTMAS BELLS

I heard the bells on Christmas day
Their old familiar carols play,
And wild and sweet
The words repeat
Of "Peace on earth, good will to men."

And thought how, as the day had come,
The belfries of all Christendom
Now roll along
The unbroken song
Of "Peace on earth, good will to men."

Till ringing, singing, on its way,
The world revolves from night to day,
A voice, a chime,
A chant sublime,
Of "Peace on earth, good will to men."

But in despair I bowed my head,
"There is no peace on earth," I said;
"For hate is strong
And mocks the song
Of "Peace on earth, good will to men."

Then pealed the bells, more loud and deep:
"God is not dead; nor doth He sleep!
The wrong shall fail,
The right prevail,
With 'Peace on earth, good will to men.'"

—Longfellow.

PEACE ON EARTH

"What means this glory round our feet,"
That magi mused, "more bright than morn?"
And voices chanted, clear and sweet,
"Today the Prince of Peace is born."

"What means that star," the shepherds said,
"That brightens through the rocky glen?"
And angels answering overhead,
Sang, "Peace on earth, good will to men!"

'Tis eighteen hundred years and more
Since those sweet oracles were dumb;
We wait for Him like those of yore;
Alas, He seems so slow to come.

But it was said in words of gold
No time or sorrow e'er shall dim,
That little children might be bold
In perfect trust to come to Him.

All round about our feet shall shine
A light like that the wise men saw,
If we our loving wills incline
To that sweet life which is the law.

So shall we learn to understand
The simple faith of shepherds then,
And, clasping kindly hand in hand,
Sing, "Peace on earth, good will to men!"

—James Russell Lowell.

CHRISTMAS

It is coming! The birthday of the "Holy One of Israel." "Oh, how shall I receive Him?" Let this be everyone's uppermost thought. Do not let it be with selfishness and greed, wondering what we will get and forgetting the things we SHOULD give. It is JESUS' birthday, so let us make Him happy... Our first consideration should be for Him... Find the needy and the depressed. Bring joy to weary hearts and gladden the hearts of the homeless little folks, remembering His words, "Whatsoever ye do unto the least of these my brethren, ye do it unto me."

"LOOK, LEST YE MISS HIM"

*"In little faces pinched with cold and hunger
Look, lest ye miss HIM! In the wistful eyes,
And on the mouths unfed by mother kisses,
Marred, bruised and stained, His precious image lies!
And when ye find Him in the midnight wild,
Even in the image of an outcast child,
O wise men, own your King!
Before this cradle bring
Your gold to raise and bless,
Your myrrh of tenderness!
For 'as ye do it unto these,' saith He,
'Ye do it unto me.'"*

THERE'S A SONG IN THE AIR!

There's a song in the air!
 There's a star in the sky!
 There's a mother's deep prayer,
 And a baby's low cry!
 And the star rains its fire
 While the beautiful sing,
 For the manger of Bethlehem
 Cradler a King!

There's a tumult of joy
 O'er the wonderful birth,
 For the Virgin's sweet boy
 Is the Lord of the earth.
 Ay! the star rains its fire
 While the beautiful sing
 For the manger of Bethlehem
 Cradles a King.

In the light of that star
 Lie the ages impearled;
 And that song from afar
 Has swept over the world.
 Every hearth is aflame,
 And the beautiful sing
 In the homes of the nations
 That Jesus is King!

We rejoice in the light,
 And we echo the song
 That comes down through the night
 From the heavenly throng.
 Aye! we shout to the lovely
 Evangel they bring,
 And we greet in His cradle
 Our Savior and King!

HIS CHRISTMAS GIFT

At Christmas time when mother dear
 Was tying up one day,
 The presents that she had to send
 To folks who live away.

Wee Freddy boy stood watching near,
 As still as still could be,
 Just thinking what he'd like to send
 For grandma's Christmas tree.

And so upon the kitchen floor,
 With paper and a string,
 He struggled hard to wrap himself—
 The funny little thing!

When mother came and, laughingly,
 The bundle tried to lift,
 "Send me to draundma, please!" it said,
 "I is her Tristmas dift!"

A BABY BORN IN BETHLEHEM

There was a baby born in Bethlehem.
 I know they say
 That this and that's in doubt, and, for the rest,
 That learned men who surely should know best Explain how myths crept in, and followers' tales confused the truth.

I know, but, anyway,
 There was a baby born in Bethlehem,
 Who lived and grew and loved and healed and taught,
 And died, but not to me.

When Christmas comes I see Him still arise,
 The gentle, the compassionate, the wise,
 Wiping earth's tears away, stilling her strife;
 Calling, "My path is peace, My way is life!"

TO ANY MOTHER ON CHRISTMAS EVE

Dear mothers, busy with your Christmas cheer,
 Your hands so full, your hearts a little tired,
 I pray you, when you think the rafters ring
 Too loudly for the nerves that are so jarred
 By all your planning and your weight of cares:
 When o'er your household ways sweeps avalanche
 And everwhere a rush of boyish things
 Mars for a space the symmetry you love!—
 I pray you smile, smile on! and never shut
 Your heart to these glad sounds, nor let your eyes
 Be dimmed by anything but joy.
 Oh, never mind the footprints on the stairs!
 The finger-marks upon the cherished wall.
 All these should be your riches, and they are.
 And when at holy hush of eventide,
 When all the homing birds come back to nest,
 And you perchance steal through the quiet rooms
 To look with tender eyes on their sweet rest—
 I pray you, then, down on your bended knees, and ask
 That God may let you know how rich you are;
 That in His mercy you may never taste
 The hunger of the home where silence reigns.

IT'S CHRISTMAS TIME AGAIN

There's a fire in the grate and a light in the hall,
 For it's Christmas time again.
 And the sleigh bells ring and the children call,
 For it's Christmas time again.
 It's time for a Christian land to raise
 Her loudest pæans of love and praise
 For the Holy Babe of the Bethlehem days,
 For it's Christmas time again.

There's a wreath of green at the windowpane,
 For it's Christmas time again;
 And the church bells echo the glad refrain,
 For it's Christmas time again.

O, It's time to turn with the golden smile
 To the friend we doubted and scorned a while,
 To rid our hearts of their greed and guile!

For it's Christmas time again.—Lalia Mitchell.

NOTES AND PERSONALS

The Christian Missionary Association of the Eastern Virginia Conference met December 7. We presume an account of the meeting will be furnished THE SUN.

Missionary Societies will please bear in mind that THE SUN office has on hand an ample supply of mission study books and will fill orders promptly.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson filled the pulpit of the Burlington church last Sunday at both services. Rev. J. E. McCauley is to preach next Sunday, and Rev. J. W. Holt on the fourth Sunday.

We have received a warm and cordial letter from Dr. L. E. Follansbee. Dr. Follansbee is continuing his lectures on the Chautauqua platform. He adds a good word for THE CHRISTIAN SUN and we appreciate his remembrance.

Our dear and beloved "Uncle" Wellons is now confined to his room with a severe cold and asthma. He returned from Richmond, Va., some days ago and has been indisposed since that time. It was our privilege to be in his sick room last Saturday and to spend a few minutes with the veteran of the Cross. He sends greetings to all friends. All of us will remember him during his sickness.

It is earnestly hoped that those who are due to renew their accounts with THE SUN will do so before January 1. Help us to make the showing for 1920 as good as we can.

Installation service will held in the Winchester, Virginia church next Sunday. Our Mission Secretary, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, is to be present and take part. Rev. C. A. McDaniel is the new pastor to be installed.

Peoples church, Dover, Delaware, is also to have an installation service for its new pastor, Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., on the night of December 20. Dean Brown of Yale, is to preach the sermon. Dr. L. E. Smith to give the charge to the people, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson is to give the charge to the pastor.

We desire to call attention to the subscriptions made to the Men and Millions Fund. The time is now at hand when the funds are very much needed. The local treasurers will confer a great favor upon the different institutions of the Church by taking a personal interest in seeing that all pledges are paid promptly.

The brotherhood will be glad to know that Mrs. L. F. Johnson, of Brooklyn, New York, who recently underwent a very serious operation, is slightly improved. It will take many weeks for her to fully recover, but she is cheerfully looking forward to good health again in the firm belief that she is being restored in answer to the prayers of her church and friends. Dr. Johnson writes that the outlook in that city for the Christians was never better than at the present time. They expect three of the young men from the church there to go to Defiance after Christmas, one of them to prepare himself for the ministry. There are many hopeful indications for the work.—The Herald of Gospel Liberty.

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America was in session December 1-6 in the city of Boston, Mass. The following of our Church was in attendance: Drs. F. G. Coffin, J. F. Burnette, M. T. Morrill, A. H. Morrill, Martyn Summerbell, W. W. Staley, W. G. Sargent, Roy C. Helfenstein, W. A. Harper, Rev. E. D. Gilbert, E. C. Fry, and Mrs. Rowe. The Council is to be reported to THE SUN by Drs. Atkinson, Staley, Harper and others. We are giving in this week's issue the papers of Drs. Atkinson and Staley and for another issue the articles of Drs. Harper and Burnette.

UNCLE WELLONS WRITES FROM RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

I left home on Tuesday morning, November 23, 1920, for Richmond, Virginia, arriving at 9:35 p. m. I was met at the train by Dr. W. T. Walters, and Mrs. P. J. Kernodle, and went to the home of Prof. P. J. Kernodle, one of my old friends.

The next day I was very violently attacked with a heavy cold and asthma. Sunday was an exceedingly cold and rainy day, but I went to the First Christian church, meeting a very respectable congregation, and we had a very pleasant service. I was much pleased with the appearance and decision of the little band to make an effort to build a church, as soon as possible.

I returned to the home of Prof. P. J. Kernodle, where a number of friends called on me, but I was not able to get out any more that day. I have been here ever since with Prof. Kernodle and wife, John T. their son, and Mrs. J. T. Nurney, Mrs. Kernodle's mother; also a friend who was stopping with them, Mrs. Mary Penn Cannon. These people did all they could to make me happy and comfortable. I am under many obligations to them for their kindness.

So many dear friends came to see me, but the inclemency of the weather and my affliction have kept me from going out to see the historic city. I am going out too see the new lot which has been purchased for the church and to see a few friends for dinner this evening. I have my arrangements all made, including ticket and berth so as to leave here tonight for home.

The asthma always joins all other diseases, but I am going to try to overcome it and make the trip. I have never met with more kindness than I have from this dear family and from the people of the city since I've been here. I have been compelled to, not only refuse many invitations from old friends, but others who were entire strangers to me. I appreciate all these things. I am delighted to see the success the Kernodle family has met with in Virginia.

MARRIAGES

YOWLE-WATSON

A quiet but pretty marriage took place at the First Christian church parsonage, Raleigh, N. C., on Tuesday afternoon, November 23, 1920, in the presence of a few invited guests. The contracting parties were Mr. Albert H. Yowle and Mrs. Bessie B. Watson of Wilson, N. C. A brother of the groom and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Yowle, of St. Louis, Mo., accompanied the couple. The ceremony was read by the writer, who used the ring ceremony of the Christian Church.

Mr. and Mrs. Yowle left on Thanksgiving eve for St. Louis, Mo., and an extended trip through the West. Upon their return they will make their home in Raleigh.

OBITUARIES

KING

Mrs. Mary Temples King died at the home of her son in Raleigh, N. C., November 30, 1920, at the age of seventy-seven years. Before marriage she was Miss Mary Temples Utley. In early life she married John Calvin King, and to this union three sons and two daughters were born. The husband preceded her to the grave by two years.

Mrs. King had been a member of the Christian church since early childhood, and when the Raleigh church was organized she became one of its first members and remained active until God called her home. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, from the First Christian church and the remains laid to rest in one of the cemeteries of the city.

She leaves the following children: Mrs. Myrtle Brickinan and Mrs. Lovie Turner, Raleigh, N. C.; R. W. and Claude King of Raleigh, N. C., and John W. King of Philadelphia. May God's richest blessing rest upon the bereaved ones.

J. VINCENT KNIGHT

KERNODLE

William Sanders Kernodle departed this life December 5, 1920, at the age of seventy-nine years, two months and ten days.

He served as a Confederate soldier in the Civil War for four years, belonging to Company K of the 47th Regiment. Soon after the war he connected himself with the Christian church at Bethlehem and remained a member till death. He was married to Nannie L. McCray in 1872 and to this union four children were born—two of whom survive him.

Brother Kernodle lived a simple and harmless life and before his death he said that he was ready and willing to go. He leaves to mourn their loss, a son, daughter, sister and a host of relatives. Funeral services were conducted by the writer on the following day and the body was placed in the cemetery at Bethlehem Christian church.

May God bless the bereaved children and sister.

P. T. KLAPP

MEDLIN

Essie Vernelle Medlin departed this life December 2, 1920 at the age of twenty months and twenty days. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Medlin and a member of the Cradle Roll at Liberty (Vance.) She leaves to mourn their loss, mother, father, two brothers, and many relatives and friends.

A dear little one is gone on before. So young and gentle—yet gone. Father and mother, she cannot come back to you, but you can go to her.

Burial services were conducted by the writer and the remains were laid to rest in the family plot at the old homestead. May the Lord comfort those who mourn.

A Christmas Message

BY REV. W. W. STALEY, D. D., LL. D.
President Southern Christian Convention.

WE approach the time that celebrates the birth of the Savior, and Christmas alone is a great witness to the fact that Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea. Great facts root themselves in history and grow larger with passing centuries. Three hundred years have added to the certainty of the landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth. A hundred million people and nearly two hundred billions of material values bear testimony to that historic beginning of a great Republic. The birth of Jesus as the greatest historic fact in the human race grows in the belief of mankind; more people know of Jesus this Christmas, and more people believe in Him as their Savior than at any time since the "angel of the Lord came upon the shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them".

The Babe of Bethlehem has done more for the babies of the world than all other agencies. He made Christmas for childhood. He made the angels sing, and He has kept music ringing from that night to this. What does Christmas mean? It tells of Christ. It brings joy; "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Is that true? Does Christmas bring joy to all people, or just to believers? Look around you and see if the whole community does not enter into the abandon of the Christmas-time. The wheels of industry are still. The workshops are closed. The school-bell does not ring. Care is laid aside. Family reunions supplant business and peace reigns in heart and home. Weeks of active business point to the joyous day. Who can estimate the inventions, the trade, the expenditures for Christmas and childhood. Thousands share in the commercial, social, and domestic benefits of Christmas, who think little of Him who has brought this great joy to mankind. It is pathetic to note the spiritual indifference of those who feast upon the luxuries of this great time without any spiritual recognition of Him of whom the angels sang. But human neglect does not keep back the tide of joy which is for all people.

The expectation of the world was never as great as it was when the "fullness of time was come and God sent forth His Son"; and there is no time of the year when the expectation of Christendom rises so high as it does on Christmas eve. That is Holy Night. The stockings are hung up in cabin and palace; millions of tots retire early. Santa will come while they sleep. They will not see him, but they will see his gifts in the morning. He is not a myth, but a symbol. He leads up to Jesus the child's best friend. Their belief in Santa Claus is the cultivation of a faith in the unseen, and the divine Savior.

It would be a dull experience to grow up in a world of facts. The unseen lures us, inspires us, and enlarges us, and makes us "walk by faith and not by sight". The spiritual world is the only world where angels sing and speak to tired men and expectant children. You would have to destroy all the show windows, the bright cards, the tender greetings and the gifts, before you could destroy Christmas; and you would have to blot out Christmas before you could destroy human faith in Jesus Christ. The Babe of Bethlehem has worked His way into the shops and stores, the arts and letters, the anthems and sermons, the cradles and parlors, the hearts and lives of men and women; and the wise men are coming from the east to worship the King of the Jews. Let human industries rest. Put out human lights. Listen to the angels sing, and wait for the morning.

A Personal Christmas Message to Readers of The Christian Sun

Last week I endeavored to say something about Christmas and the spirit of Christmas. Pens more worthy than mine are given the editorial space this week.

I have in my heart a great desire to send to each reader of THE CHRISTIAN SUN a Christmas gift. Such is beyond the means of your humble servant. A further desire is that I might send each of you, dear readers, a personal letter saying how much I wish for you a joyous Christmas. Such a desire is also not within my reach for lack of time to write such a personal message to each one.

This note is my Christmas greeting to each reader of this paper. There is one more issue to be sent out during the good year 1920. I therefore, not only send greetings of the season in this issue, but desire to thank the people for their kindness, for their faithfulness, and for their liberality during the year. I have another message in mind for the next issue.

To the faithful and loyal subscribers who have watched their labels and responded to THE SUN'S financial needs, I am deeply grateful.

To the many faithful contributors who have helped me to fill THE SUN'S columns, I extend, not only greetings of the season, but sincere thanks.

To those who have been kind and generous enough to send words of appreciation and encouragement, I want to assure them that their words of encouragement have been like springs of flowing waters in a desert land. Practically all of these messages go unpublished for personal reasons, but in my heart there is always a renewed place of interest because of them. I thank you, and you, and you.

To the ministers I especially send greetings of the season and thanks for their untiring efforts in behalf of THE SUN'S continued circulation. No class of men mean so much to the life of the Church as the liberal and loyal ministers.

To those who have given me information from which I have been able to present a few "Notes and Personals", thus endeavoring to vitalize and acquaint our people with each other, I send words of appreciation, and enlist their continued support.

If there are those who have not agreed with me in everything that I have said, I can only ask them to remember that this Republic is a democracy, that the Christian Church is a democracy, and that THE CHRISTIAN SUN is a mouth-piece of such a democratic Church. I can assure them that their views have been respected and shall be respected and that the columns of THE SUN are open for all constructive articles regardless of personal view points. Again I say, if there are those who do not see as I see and think as I think, I hold a warm place in my heart for them.

The spirit of Christmas is to give and not to get, and I know that not one of you will dissipate this idea and ideal. The Babe of Bethlehem came not to get but to give.

There are many readers of THE SUN whom I have never met, yet their names are treasured in memory's book and this personal word is as much for them as for those whose faces I have seen and whose hands I have clasped.

It would be without thought and appreciation if I were to close this hastily written note without giving a word of personal appreciation and Christmas expression to those who have labored behind the screen that the pages of THE CHRISTIAN SUN might shine. I have reference to the faithful and efficient linotype operator, whose patience with my hand-writing, (as well as with Dr. Harper's and Dr. Atkinson's) has been great. His untiring efforts for best display and carefulness of "copy" have become an asset to the paper.

Next, to the make-up-man, whose personal interest in THE SUN'S welfare I record with grateful thanks, his interest which has become an asset to the whole Church. Thus he works with an interest in his heart and not altogether with a dollar mark before his eyes.

To the press-man, whose carefulness and artistic sense and taste I have observed and appreciated in heart, I now record publicly and wish for him, a young and proud father of his first-born, a merry Christmas around the fireside of his "first real home."

To the manager of the plant where THE SUN'S pages are entrusted, we look beyond the compensation of the dollar and remember only every favor shown toward the paper that it might have precedence over other things. His relation to the public is one of those strong factors that the whole denomination enjoys and yet knows nothing about. Christmas greetings for him.

To those in the office who have been entrusted with the responsibility of money and correspondence; of enough details to out-number the perplexities of any house-wife—the hundreds of details that no one can scarcely dream about, without experience, I am grateful to the depth of my heart and hope for them a Christmas giving to them the same sacrificial spirit that they have given, unreservedly, in behalf of the Editor's tasks and THE SUN'S every interest.

And finally, brethren, Christmas greetings to you, and you, and you—to all.

CARL BROWN RIDDLE.

The Mission Of The Heavenly Messengers

(A Christmas Meditation)

By Dr. J. O. Atkinson, an Ex-Editor of The Christian Sun

Luke 2:13—"And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God."

It was a pastoral scene. Shepherds were minding their flocks out on the hills that skirted the ancient town of Bethlehem. They were simple shepherds who watched the heavens above them and read there the lessons of the stars, and the teachings of the heavenly planets about the weather. Their minds were receptive to the instructions of nature and their hearts were open to the truths of God. They were interested in the heavens as well as in the earth. And no one ever learns the best and truest lessons of earth whose heart is not open to the heavenly voice. So, while these simple shepherds minded their flocks by night and watched the stars above them, an angel came to them, and the earth about them was immediately transformed. They became afraid, did these simple shepherds, because the heavens were more brilliant and more resonant than usual. Things became so grand and glorious and bright for them that they were frightened. Only an angel could allay their fright, and it was the Lord's messenger who told them to be glad, for only good tidings came from heaven. And then the annunciation followed. "Unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Savior. And this shall be a sign unto you, ye shall find the babe, lying in a manger." And then it was that the heavenly host could no longer remain silent, and they burst forth in a holy chant, singing the glorious song "Glory to God in the highest." I invite you to consider the words of this chant, for they are significant. They teach us three definite and distinct facts:

I God's Praise.

Whatever good thing is done on earth is done to the praise of God. Man in his natural condition is sin and vanity; and when man achieves aught worth while, it is because God does it through man.

It is to the praise and glory of God that man enjoys Christmas. For God gave His Son through Whom Christmas came. It is not to the praise of man, but to the praise of God that Christ came to redeem man from his sins. The angels foresaw and understood that the greatest good ever done for man was through the coming of the Son of God, and ere Christ had done for man the first turn of love and kindness, the angels praised God for this great gift. If the angels praised God for the gift of Christ to man before Christ had redeemed man how much more truly ought man to praise God since Christ redeemed man? To praise God for the gift of His Son should be the world's greatest joy and satisfaction, not only for the gift, but because the angels did so before us. It is angelic; it is heavenly; it is holy to praise God for the gift of His Son. We do not praise God enough. We so seldom think of praising Him. We think of asking Him for something, of begging Him for gifts. We do not stop and tarry enough to praise Him for what He has done.

We have numberless objects for which to praise Him. Our land is at peace. It is to the praise and goodness of God that we have peace now and not war.

The man who was heard and applauded most and had the largest following in Germany the past decade was he who as a great university and lyceum lecturer declared that what love is to the home, and faith is to the church that strength is to the State.

We can join with the heavenly hosts in praising God that we have no such teachers as that in our universities. If you wish to know how the world conflict began, you must go to the colleges and universities of Europe, of Germany in particular, where the godless science of militarism has been taught for the past half century and where the intellects of men have sought to work out through efficiency that which their hearts would not accept as truth from God. We can praise God that the Prince of Peace reigns amongst us to the extent that even efficiency and might do not make right. The angels have taught us to praise God.

II God's Plans.

The simple text in its majesty teaches us the plans of God in a marked manner. The advent of Christ into the world was not an earthly scheme, but a heavenly plan. God planned redemption and salvation for us ere we had dreamed of it. No plan or purpose of man would ever have begun the salvation of the world in the way and manner God did. The simplicity and the daring of it have always baffled the brain of the great and the learned. The Jews would not accept Jesus as Messiah, because He was not great and grand and stately enough. Because He was of humble birth and origin, of minor and insignificant station, they rejected Him. And many of the world's great and skilled and learned are rejecting Christ yet because He was too small and insignificant of origin to redeem a race.

But it is through simplicity and humble efforts and beginnings that God plans to save the race. The text proves it. For when the Child was born in the manger, and cradled in a horse trough, the heavenly multitude joined the holy angel in chanting a glad song to the glory of God. God planned the advent. God planned the coming into the world of His Son. God planned that He should come as He came and live as He lived. And our only hope is in accepting the simple fact in faith and shaping our lives in accordance therewith. Tonight millions of souls will be made happy, millions of homes will rejoice and will be glad. God planned it so. These will be blessed and benefitted tonight in spite of themselves. Men who deny Christ, men who reject Christ, men who will have nothing to do with Christ will be blessed and benefitted this Christmas time. God planned it so. The whole wide world will be blessed in one way and in another through this Christmas, the

How Men are Controlled

From "Religion and Business," Babson.

WHAT foolish, short-sighted people we all are; both employers and wage-earners! We business men think that the world is governed by intellect. It is not. We think people are controlled by their minds. They are not. Both employers and wage-earners are controlled by their emotions; by love or hate; by sympathy or jealousy; by hope or fear. If this is so, it is evident that only religion can bring together employers and wage-earners.

We think wage-earners are striking for wages or hours. They are not. They are striking for self-expression. They are actuated by the same desire for self-respect, self-preservation, and self-propagation as actuate the employers. We think that employers are fighting for more profits. They are not. These employers know that houses, factories, stocks and bonds don't make men happy. They now have everything that money can buy. It is not for money reasons that they are resisting the demands of the labor unions. These employers are actuated by the same desires of self-respect, self-preservation, and self-propagation as actuate the wage-workers. Both are thinking of the same indefinite things, but in different terms.

THE IMPORTANCE OF FEELINGS

What does all this mean? It means that the labor problem is really a question of religion rather than economics. The problem can never be settled by the methods now being used by either side. It can be settled only by each side thinking more of the community and less of itself; only as the church takes an active part in the struggle. What would Jesus tell both sides of the labor conflict were He here today? I think He would say what we read in the 38th to 42nd verses of the fifth chapter of Matthew.

He would advise each side to win the other by loaning them the cloak also. The secret of success is to do more than is demanded. In advising His hearers to give up their cloak also, when some one sued them at law to take away their coat—to go an extra mile when compelled to go only one, Jesus emphasized a great psychological truth. Jesus understood that the Law of Equal Reaction applies to human relations as it applies to astronomy, chemistry and mechanics. He knew that to get a beneficial reaction we must go the second mile. There is no power nor glory in doing only what we have to do. The glory comes with the second mile. The side which ultimately will win this labor conflict is the side which will voluntarily give up the most.

LIGHTHOUSE OBSERVATIONS

J. E. MASSEY

CHRISTMAS

Christmas comes again, bringing Santa Claus "blazing fire and Christmas treat." One cannot help but feel its spirit and see it among those about you. Once more the hearth-stone becomes the scene of family reunion. Vacations have begun and the year's work ends in a season of joy and merriment. Tops and toys, too, and the ruddy-faced girls and boys remind one that the school-master, so-called "tyrant of all his realm", has abdicated and in his stead, Santa reigns supreme.

But in the enjoyment of this great season of the year lest one forgets, there are 3,500,000 children in Europe who are not so fortunate as the happy American children. They too, would like to enjoy Christmas, but cannot because many of them have no food to eat. Many of them have perished, and others are barely sustained by a meager daily allowance. More food must be shipped to them. Their supply is limited, and they will need more soon.

The days of reconstruction are still with us. Christmas spells enjoyment; it spells service, too. How can that service be more than words? How can those children enjoy Christmas when they have no peace? Their need cannot be over-emphasized.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S MESSAGE

Though the President was not able to deliver or even hear his final message read to Congress, in it, he set forth several recommendations which are of timely interest to the country. In spite of the reverses which he has received from physical illness, and from seeing his administration rejected and his party defeated at the polls he has shown a firm determination to keep the "fire of his desires" burning.

No mention was made of the League of Nations in his message, neither did he express any condemnation of those who have opposed him. But he brought out very forcefully the world's present need of a stronger spirit of democracy. He declared that the Old World is suffering from wanton rejection of the principles of this spirit, and he stated two ways by which the United States could make it prevail: first, by example, enforcing just and equal laws, second, by standing for right and justice towards other nations, particularly the weak.

To show the "recuperative force of a great Government of the People," he recommended a budget system free from Constitutional objection rigid economy in view of our war indebtedness, simplified tax laws, a loan to Armenia, and the granting of independence to the Philippines.

SHALL THE STRIKING PUBLIC BUY?

It seems that the "striking public" will have to buy, or there will result a still greater crisis in the cotton-mill industry of the United States. Financial reports show that more than sixty per cent of the total production of cotton goods has been curtailed. The retailers are unable to sell because the public refuses to buy on as in normal conditions. With no demand for their goods, the manufacturers are forced to run the cotton mills on a part-time basis, the workers suffering from unemployment.

In addition to this reduction in employment, the worker has to suffer approximately twenty-five per cent reduction in wages. In New England conditions are even more deplorable than in the South. Though the reduction of wages is not quite so great as in the South, the cost of living is greater and the mills are almost on a stand-still. It is predicted, however, that there will be a more normal rate of production in both sections of the country after Christmas.

Major-General Leonard Wood will probably be offered the leadership of the Armenian Expeditionary Force proposed by the League of Nations Assembly in Geneva, according to advice from that city. He is said to be the unanimous choice of the committee having that part of the Assembly's proceedings in charge. Under the plans outlined, General Wood would be made High Commissioner for Armenia.

SPEED IN THE AIR

Three miles a minute in an American war-plane is the latest speed of the new "king of the air." This was the rate traveled by the winner of the Pulitzer Trophy in the contest held on Long Island a few weeks ago, thus setting a new world's record. In the course of the one-hundred-and-thirty-two-mile flight, Captain Mosley of the Army probably moved faster than any human being has ever moved before.

PULPIT AND PEW

Is it politics, science, or is it religion that stirs the average American church-goer of the present day? In other words, do people go to church primarily to listen to scientific theories, political developments, or do they go there to find cures for ailments of their souls?

Man is inherently a religious being, as someone has said, and in order to satisfy this craving to know about things which are eternal, he believes in an established place for worship where he can come into close relation with the Spirit of God. He wants to see his relation to things about him. He craves to learn about that which will help him in his daily occupation or line of work, but he doesn't go to church to learn about the technical points of his work. He goes there to learn about God. If he wants to know about the movements of the so-called "secular world", he will read his daily paper, magazines, or his books. But when he wants to learn about things that concern his soul's welfare, he usually looks toward the pulpit.

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

CHRISTIAN COOPERATION AS SEEN IN THE FEDERAL COUNCIL

BY W. A. HARPER

The Boston session of the Federal Council is the third such gathering I have been privileged to attend. The session as I view it in retrospect is characterized by sanity in view and by a sense of serene enjoyment of cooperative effort.

The partial failure of the Inter-Church World Movement and the unrest in every realm of the social order no doubt tended to sober the Churchmen of America as they came together in this the Fourth Quadrennial session of the Federal Council. Be that as it may, there was no radicalism in their utterances. Strong restatement of the positions previously taken by the Council, safe and steady planning in conformance thereto—of these there was abundance. But no pronouncement that could in any wise bring the Council in unfavorable light was forth coming. Insistence on fundamentals may be said to have been the keynote.

And this was particularly true with reference to cooperative movements. The Council has through its twelve years of history demonstrated the necessity of cooperative effort among the Churches, and conclusively shown that some agency is absolutely essential for the promotion of the common task of the Churches. Before the coming of the Federal Council many agencies covering each some specific common task had come into being, such as the Home Missions Council, The Foreign Missions Conference, The Council of Church Boards of Education, and these all in one way or another are affiliated with the Council. An effort is to be made in the immediate future to correlate and coordinate them in or through the Council, in such a way as to conserve all their good and to eliminate all competition and duplication.

This action was bound to come in accordance with the unalterable preamble of the Constitution of the Federal Council, in which it was said—"In the providence of God, the time has come when it seems fitting more fully to manifest the essential oneness of the Christian Churches of America in Jesus Christ as their divine Lord and Savior, and to promote the spirit of fellowship, service, and cooperation among them." The emphasis in this session was upon the "more fully" and its spirit united in a winsome unity the trinity of purposes set forth at the Council's inception, for the spirit of this session was that of "cooperative fellowship in service", and it was this triumphant spirit that glorified the Council in every one of its sixteen component sessions in Boston.

During the quadrennial period just closed, the Council had crossed the oceans and entered into cooperative and fraternal relations with Churches in other lands. The war made such cooperation essential and the Council was the only agency capable of fostering it. It was lovely to have present in the Council representatives of the Churches of England, France, Belgium, Italy, Japan, China, Mexico and other lands. Their messages evidenced a unity of thought and purpose for the Christian forces of the world and foreshadowed the day when there shall be a league of churches for the world.

Yes, the Council favors the league of nations. Again and again, reference was made to the regret that we are not now a member of the League, and every such reference was liberally applauded. In its message to the world specific reference was made to our nation's future relation to the whole idea of international cooperation and with unanimous approval it was voted to have the Council's officers bring to President-elect Harding's attention the sentiment of the twenty million Christians represented in the Council, favorable to our entering such a league. There can be no doubt that the incoming administration will give careful heed to the voice of one fifth of the nation's population.

That interdenominational cooperation in the spirit of "cooperative fellowship in service" must eventually lead to Church union was frankly avowed by many speakers and as frankly held before the Council as an ideal consistently to be pursued. Two Episcopal Bishops spoke "informally" during the sessions and both of them declared for a "reunited Church." One of them said he recognized all baptized believers to be members of the Kingdom of God and signified his willingness to accept ordination at the hands of any denomination willing to confer it, after which he would preach in such denomination's pulpits. This he reminded the Council was the spirit of resolution thirteen (I think) of the recent Lambeth Conference.

We may digress long enough to say that this represents real progress for our Episcopal brethren. They must enlarge their resolution however to include in the Kingdom our Quaker brethren and to allow all ministers and even laymen to speak from their pulpits, without ordination by themselves. And then these beloved friends must also be willing to say that all these believers are not only members of the Kingdom of God, but of His Church. My faith is that they will eventually do it. But "how long, O Lord, how long?" Yet it is refreshing to note that they who have ever regarded themselves as sitting in high places have seen "a great light." They are destined to see a greater.

For the idea of Christian Union is "absolutely undefeatable," to quote the Council's new president, Robert E. Speer. It is undefeatable, because Christ is undefeatable, and with Christian Union He inseparably yoked the progress of His Kingdom. He prayed for the oneness of His people "that the world may believe that Thou hast sent Me," and we who love Him and are dedicated to do His will, in this generation have resolved in our hearts to help answer that prayer.

How refreshing it was to sit in counsel for six days with the representatives of thirty-one denominations and for there to be during all those days an absolute absence of denominationalism! How refreshing! The Council is evidently enjoying its cooperative undertakings, and with the Psalmist of old has learned in this historic year marking the 300th anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers, "How good and how pleasant a thing it is for brethren to dwell together in unity."

The present status of Christian cooperation as revealed in the Federal Council is most satisfying, and the future is luminous with hope. A great door is open to us, and no man can close it.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Our financial report this week carries us up to the fifth rung in the ladder since November first. Half way to our goal that we must reach by the end of the year. just five thousand dollars more to raise and we will be there. Now, don't you want to see us reach it? If you do, see that your church does its part and we will cross the mark when we make our financial report for the year.

Our good friends in the Peoples church, Dover, Del., made us happy by making their church a $100 church in the Thanksgiving offering and gets on the "Banner List." This is the second church so far and we expect quite a number more to reach that mark.

Christmas will soon be here. Are you going to help make our little folks happy at that time?

THE MISSION OF THE HEAVENLY MESSENGERS

just and the unjust, because God planned it so. Man would never, could never have thought out such a scheme. But God thought it all out and planned it in heaven. An because He had done a work so great and so gracious for man a whole multitude of the heavenly hosts sang His praise and glorified His name.

III God's Peace.

It is strange indeed that man will not live at peace with his fellow man. There is no beast on earth as cruel to his kind, no wild animal known so destructive of his sort, as man. We think of the fierceness of the lion, the ravenousness of the tiger, the wildness of the leopard; but their wildness and fierceness with each other are not to be compared with the wildness, the fierceness, the heartless savagery of man to his fellow man. The pages of history, sacred and secular, are one long record of man's cruelty and savageness to his fellow man. Among the earliest and most ingenious inventions are those which man invented with which to kill and destroy his fellow man. Man has spent more money, exercised greater skill, and employed more ingenuity in seeking to kill and destroy his fellow man than on any other one account whatsoever. In our own country today some of the very best machinery, some of the largest sums of money, some of the biggest and best brains are being employed in manufacturing arms and implements with which men may kill and enfeeble their fellowmen.

Now God in heaven knows man was capable of better things than this. So He planned a basis and term of peace.

Men who are filled with the spirit of the Christ have peace one with another. It was the mission of the angels to make known God's peacefulness to the world. And that is yet the mission of angels—heavenly and holy men everywhere—to make known God's peace plans for the world.

MISSIONARY

THANKSGIVING AT OUR MOUNTAIN MISSION SCHOOL

It is known generally, I suppose, among readers of THE SUN that the mountain work has been started. When we have become better established in the work I am going to ask for as much space as THE SUN can spare and shall then attempt to give, in detail, how it happened that this particular locality was chosen; conditions in this section of the State, together with the specific needs of this community.

It is my desire now to let our people know about our happy Thanksgiving.

On Tuesday of that week two large boxes of clothing came for the needy families. These were sent by some Norfolk friends. The garments were selected for families and individuals according to sizes and needs. Into bundles they were made, each ready to be given out in their respective order the following day.

Before nine the next morning our sack was packed with the packages, lifted to the shoulders of the boy in whose home I stay, and he and I were off with glad hearts down the road to the school house. Before we quite reached the little frame building in which we have "Books" we saw something which made us rejoice even more. Under a shed near by stood a wagon loaded with a good portion of the long-looked-for supplies which had been shipped to us by our Field Secretary. The youngster who was as heavily loaded made his way on, but I paused for an investigation. There I found a goodly number of the desks we so badly needed, a teacher's table and chair, a globe and several minor things that go to help make a satisfactory school room. These had been left by a kind gentleman who was to return early that morning and have them placed in the school house. It had been previously made known that holiday was to be given on Thursday, November 25, but ours began from that moment. The sack of something "the teacher" had brought, together with the anxiety about how those "benches" were going to look, had broken up study for that day. Then there was the "Globe Map" that Miss Hedgepeth had said represented the earth; her chair and table. Those erasers were interesting things. In fact, all that was just a little too much for us in one day. We had an early closing hour, just before which the bundles of good, warm wearing apparel were given out to the neediest and grateful children.

Previous to that time from day to day, Thanksgiving, its origin and meaning had been explained. So before closing we entered a little appropriate service. Several children were called upon to think about and mention things for which we should be thankful. Opinions varied, of course, but the gifts that had reached us on that day were called to every one's mind, especially, as well as thanks in our hearts to the kind friends who had sent them. After a short prayer we sang "Count Your Blessings" in which only a few of them could join. It was an impressive scene—the dark room filled to an overflow with poorly clad and badly kept children, who rose from their rough seats with faces aglow, surrounded by bundles and crates of things that had been given us to make our school room more adequate and their bodies more comfortable—I thanked God from the depths of my heart.

On the following evening we were to have a special Thanksgiving service. By sundown the next day, groups began to pass. After an early supper we assembled at the school house for the first Thanksgiving celebration ever known here. We had a helpful meeting, after the conclusion of which the patrons agreed to help out the seating proposition by getting together a few of the new desks by the following Monday.

This has been accomplished. My enrollment is constantly increasing. A daily average of thirty-five pupils is being made, the enrollment being forty-five. More than thirty-five of these are past beginning to learn to read, write and do number work. Quite a large number of them never attended school before. They have had none accessible to them. We are opening up to them advantages never before realized here in this section of the Blue Ridge, and they are rapidly becoming zealous to improve by it, being encouraged by parents the most of whom are unable to read and write at all. Boys and girls from ten to eighteen come unashamed with their Primers and First Readers. While visiting in a home recently a gentleman of possibly thirty-five years remarked that he only wished he might have had a chance to go to school. I stated my desire to conduct, sometime, one for adults, to which he replied, "I want to come, if no longer than to learn to write my name." The future development of these unfortunate people depends wholly upon the Christian Church or some other similar organization. Their resources are too inadequate for them to press forward alone. Are we willing to enter this door of opportunity to help to carry the Gospel into all the world as Christ commands us?

It is my expectation to remain here during the Christmas holidays. I am looking forward to another joyous time with these people. Many are already asking if I am going to "make a Christmas Tree". I trust a good many societies and individuals will remember our mountain boys and girls at that time. Anything that would bring joy and comfort to hearts of other boys and girls could be appreciated. Please send the packages direct to me by parcel post.

I ask your prayers that I may have a great power of uplifting influence while connected with this work.

Gratefully yours,

IOLA HEDGEPEETH

FROM OVER THE SEAS

AN AFTERNOON WALK AT KARUIZAWA

One of the most beautiful trips I have yet made in my travels about Japan was the one to Karuizawa—a picturesque village among the mountains of Japan, some two thousand feet above sea level, where missionaries from far and near, not only in Japan, but China and Korea as well, come for a few weeks rest during the hot summer months when life in the lowlands is almost unbearable. Dr. Woodworth accompanied me from Tokyo and when we arrived Mrs. Woodworth met us at the door of their summer cottage with a welcome that I shall never forget.

But I started to tell you about a little side trip from this little village. One afternoon, Mrs. Woodworth and a Miss R. M. Francis, a missionary for the Christian Missionary Alliance, and I started out for a short walk which ended in a long, but easy climb up a mountain called Usti Pass. It was a delightful walk along a path of old lava thrown out by the mountain in its active volcanic days.

At one point we saw a three-faced God, one face smiling, one angry and one sorrowful. It was somewhat of a question with us as to which was which. The Japanese think that good luck will come to him who puts a stone at the foot of this god and the large pile of stones at its base bore mute evidence of the large number of god luck seekers who had visited it. A little farther up the hill we saw the entrance to a shrine. We determined to find it though none of it was visible from the entrance. Following a winding path for a long distance up the hill we finally came upon a Shinto shrine, on a promontory, offering a fine view of the valley and mountains. The shrine was locked, but we looked through the bars and saw a big drum and a gong used to sound the call to worship. Over the door was the name of the ancestor who worshipped here, and just outside was the grave, lying among half a dozen stone images. There was also a wooden prayer wheel near by.

Another big climb brought us to a tea house with a superb view of the mountains and valleys, with Karuizawa nestling below. From here we climbed higher and higher until we reached an old, old sacred place on the summit of the mountain. This is the famous Suni Pass Festival Kamano Temple. As I looked upon the marvelous scenery, Mrs. Woodworth called attention to the fact that in the Old Testament most of the places of worship were high places, and I could not help admiring the forethought of the builders who placed the temple at a point of vantage so conducive to worship.

A long flight of stone steps led from the path to the shrines, of which we found six. Great stone lions guarded the entrance. At the top of the stairs are two hideous figures supposed to keep away evil spirits. Miss Francis learned that the ancestor worshipped here is Izanami, the wife of Izanagi, who is famous for having brought peace to the country during his rule. Within the grounds there is a bell, a stone, and a mirror, each of which is more than seven hundred years old. The buildings of the place are old and neglected and seemed almost beyond repair.

Leaving the shrines behind, we went down a winding path to a famous spring called Usitoge Spring, in a pass by the name of Usui from which the mountain is called. I think foreigners call it "The Hog's Back." A few years ago the present Emperor came and drank of the delightful spring water here. We all took a drink right at the spot where the water bubbled out of the mountain. It was absolutely pure here, but as we drank, a Japanese woman came up a little below us and began washing some clothes in the flowing water. This practice is so common in Japan everywhere that one must be very careful in the matter of drinking water.

The view in this pass was excellent, showing the other side of the ridge from that which we had climbed and looking far out for miles over hill and valley.

Going back to the shrine, Miss Francis talked to one of the natives while Mrs. Woodworth sat down to rest. I stood up to get a better view of the scenery, and as I did so, a Japanese woman came out and said something in Japanese, which I discovered later meant "hang your hips on the rock", or as we would say in good English style, "Please be seated on the rock." I sat down, somewhat bewildered, while the good lady went on out into the garden and plied her wooden hoe.

The descent was uneventful but for the ever-changing mountain scenery, the memory of which will always linger with me. As I partook of the good supper which Mrs. Woodworth knows so well how to prepare, I determined to let no opportunity go by to feast upon the beauties of Japan. But I found my heart heavy as I thought of the millions in this great Empire whose god is a stone or a departed spirit or nothing, and I wondered how long, how long before they would know the true God whom we are seeking to reveal to them.

WILSON P. MINTON.

PROGRAM OF THE EIGHTH WORLD'S SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

Despite the loss entailed and the discouragement encountered in the burning of the specially constructed Convention building on the very eve of the opening session, the program of the eighth World's Sunday School Convention was carried through as planned with only slight alterations and readjustments. The first session was held at the hour scheduled, but in the Y. M. C. A. instead of the new Convention hall which only a few hours before had been reduced to ashes. After a day in the Y. M. C. A., the scene of the proceedings was transferred to the large Imperial Theatre of Tokyo, seating some fifteen hundred or two thousand people, and quite suitably arranged for such a gathering.

The plan of the program was well expressed by Dr. Frank L. Brown, Joint General Secretary in the opening paragraph of the foreword in the Convention Booklet, most of which were destroyed by the fire. He says, "The purpose of the program for the Eighth World's Convention has been to present the place of Christian education through the Sunday school in the life of the new world and as a force in the building of individual, community, national and world character." Adhering to this idea the general theme of the nine-day session was, "The Sunday School and World Progress", and the program for each day was so shaped as to bring out some phase of and to throw light upon this great general theme. Beginning Tuesday evening and continuing all through Wednesday the theme for the day was, "The World Progress of the Sunday School"; showing, by reports from various department heads, field secretaries and representatives from many lands, just what the Sunday school has been accomplishing in the six years elapsing since the last world gathering.

Then on each succeeding day the following themes were treated in the order named: Jesus Christ the World's Redeemer; The Bible—God's Revelation to the World; The Christian Heritage of the Child; The Sunday School and World Evangelism; The Sunday School and Education; The Sunday School and the Community; The Sunday School and National Life; The Sunday School and the New World.

A close study of this comprehensive program will reveal the fact that the aim emphasized hand in hand with the idea of Christian education through the Sunday school is that the Sunday school is a world evangelistic force at the same time. And from many and varied angles the Sunday school was presented as one of the greatest hopes for making a better world, through its program of Christian education and evangelism. The song services each day were carefully planned and unusually well executed to bring home the theme of the day, under the able leadership of Prof. H. Augustine Smith, whose excellent work is worthy of an article from a better pen than mine. The Scripture lessons and responsive readings for the day, the addresses, the pageants, the stereopticon lectures, and even the banners were made to bear upon the daily changing themes as they in turn pointed to the great general theme of "The Sunday School and World Progress."

Among the speakers who stand out most vividly before me as I write, are Herbert L. Welch, Bishop of the M. E. Church for Japan and Korea; Dr. W. E. Biederwolf, Miss Margaret Slattery and Mr. Charles G. Trumbull, the latter well known as Editor of The Sunday School Times. For thirty minutes preceding the opening of each morning session, Dr. Biederwolf conducted a devotional service that proved a great blessing to the large number who came, in that it prepared them personally for the day's Convention work. At the close of the morning session, Bishop Welch brought a daily message which he admirably focused the attention upon some great outstanding truth of the Bible in its relation to the progress of the world in the light of the theme for the day. The work of Bishop Welch was perhaps the most effective of any one person on the program. His messages were virile and as they were backed up by his naturally strong personality coupled with his deep devotion to God, they never failed to grip his audience and send them from the hall with fresh inspiration and encouragement. Mr. Trumbull's message was well calculated to balance the program by helping us to realize that Christianity is to accomplish its work in the world, not as a great system such as other religions are, but by wielding its influence through a living Christ who becomes the life of the individual who believes in Him. It was a strong message upon a vital theme. Miss Slattery well succeeded in linking up this idea of fundamental personal religious life with that of sacrifice and aspirations for world service on the part of each Christian.

The afternoons were given over to stereopticon lectures, and conferences along the usual lines of Sunday school work. At the Y. M. C. A. Mr. H. E. Coleman, Sunday school Secretary of Japan had prepared an especially fine exhibit of Sunday school work throughout the world, which was worthy of much study and which was seen by thousands daily.

One of the interesting phases of the Convention was the plan by which the inspiration of the gathering was carried to many parts of the world. The various tour parties organized in connection with this great international meeting were utilized before and after the Tokyo Convention proper to carry the message to many parts of Japan and beyond. Three pre-convention meetings were held in Manila, Hong Kong and Canton, and following the convention meetings were planned for Korea, China, Singapore, Colombo, India, Cario and Jerusalem where many of the addresses and stereopticon lectures are to be repeated.

I was asked to join a deputation making a tour of one section of Japan before the Convention, but because of my very full itinerary in the interests of our own work I had to refuse. It so happened however, that the field which I covered north of Sendai had to be refused meetings by the Central Speakers Bureau because of shortage of speakers and I found abundant opportunity to speak on the Sunday school in connection with my tour of our northern churches. This was especially true where the citizens of the town extended me a public reception, which was done in a number of places. At several of these meetings the citizens insisted that I speak on the Japanese-California question, which was then creating even greater stir here than at present. I accepted this opportunity, not to suggest diplomatic solution for the problem, but to present the principles of the Bible, which is the Sunday school text book, as the only principles which can form a basis for permanent international friendship.

Tonight Brother Garman and I start on a ten day trip to Kobe, Osaka, Kiyoto and other western points, and since this trip is a part of my regularly planned itinerary we have accepted invitations to speak at Osaka and Wakayama under the auspices of the Welcome Committee organized to welcome delegates from the S. S. Conventon who should visit these places. The opportunity at Osaka is especially pleasing as it will enable us to tell a select audience of some three hundred teachers of the plans of the Sunday school for religious education and of the value of Christian teaching in the making of good citizens.

CHRISTMAS EVERYWHERE

Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas tonight!
 Christmas in the lands of the fir tree and pine.
 Christmas in the lands of the palm tree and vine.
 Christmas where snow peaks stand solemn and white.
 Christmas where cornfields lie sunny and bright!

Christmas where children are hopeful and gay,
 Christmas where old men are patient and gray.
 Christmas where peace, like a dove in his flight,
 Everywhere, everywhere, Christmas tonight.
 Broods o'er brave men in the thick of the fight,
 For the Christ child who comes is the Master of all;
 No place too great and no cottage too small.

—Phillips Brooks.

LITTLE BUB'S LONELY CHRISTMAS

"Papers! Evening papers! Papers! Evening papers!" shouted Jakie at the top of his voice. "All about the coming of 'Father Christmas!' All about the big Christmas trees for the poor children."

"Oh, gracious! how cold I am!" he groaned; "no one seems to be buying my papers! Look at the big snowflakes falling! This is a jolly Christmas Eve for kids with fathers and mothers, but what about boys without parents like poor little Bub at home, with only a cross-grained old landlady and me to look after him?"

Just then another boy came running toward him, crying, "Here, Jakie; here is a ticket for the Christmas dinner tomorrow which is to be given to the newsboys. Don't say a word! I hear we are to have turkey, cranberry sauce, sweet and white potatoes, with stacks of giblet gravy over them, and heaps of other good things. We'll go together, you and I, and we'll eat just as much as we are allowed to do, for we both know 'twill be many a long day before we eat turkey again."

Jakie took the ticket with glowing eyes, and then both boys stood in the fast-falling snow until all their papers were sold. "Now for little Bub," cried Jakie, and he started for his long walk home, while his hands in his pockets jingled the pennies he had earned selling the newspapers.

After a time he came to a narrow court, which he entered, and in a moment reached a dark staircase. This he ran noisily up, calling, "Bub! Hello, Bub! Here's Jakie!"; and then he saw his tiny crippled brother waiting for him at the top.

The boys entered their meager room, and in a short time Jakie had cooked quite a nice little supper of plain but good food.

Poor crippled Bub spent most of his time alone in this dingy room while his brother sold newspapers to support them.

The boys, by all means, should have been in some home for orphan boys, where they would have been educated and kept comfortable; but for some unknown reason Jakie's dread of being placed in an "orphants' house," as he termed it, was very great, and he had filled Bub with the same fear.

The rent they paid for this dingy, ill-kept room was a trifle, but the old woman who rented it to them was even glad of their small weekly sum, which Jakie always managed to gather in advance. She was really kind-hearted, but was far too busy, working hard all day at the washtub, to pay much attention to the little cripple, and was too densely ignorant to understand that the boys were receiving no education.

"Oh, Jakie!" cried Bub, "tomorrow will be Christmas Day, and you know you've been promising me for a long time that you would take me out in my cart and let me see the wondrous toys that Santa Claus gives to some children. Oh! why doesn't he ever come to this room? I am afraid he does not love little boys who have no mothers!"

"All right! All right, Bub! You sleep just late as you can tomorrow morning; I'll start out bright and early and I'll come home and take you out if I have time."

Jakie flushed guilty as he thought of the ticket in his pocket which was to give him a good dinner, but where was Bub to get any turkey?

The next morning, very early, he crept quietly away, for he sold morning papers as well as evening ones, but he left all the pennies he could spare on the table, thinking "Bub will be able to have some buns today, anyhow."

Later in the day, being no longer able to resist the thoughts of turkey and cranberries, he joined the other newsboys.

Oh! what a grand dinner! And how the poor boys enjoyed it! But Jakie felt a pang all the time he was eating, for tiny, crippled Bub was home alone on Christmas Day, with only a few buns to eat!

Later a number of the boys thronged around him, reminding him of a promise to come see how comfortably they lived in some large packing boxes. Jakie went with them, and the hours passed so quickly that the clocks were striking ten before he could realize it. "How time flies when boys are having a jollification!" he cried.

When he reached their room all was dark, and he crept silently in, feeling very, very mean. Poor Bub had had no Christmas dinner! No Christmas toys!

The boy lighted a candle and then he saw his tiny brother cuddled just as close to the stove as possible. The fire in it was almost dead. He leaned tenderly over him, while boyish tears fell from his eyes. Carefully he laid him on their "nubby" bed. How pale and thin the little fellow looked! "How could I leave him alone all this time! I am a cruel boy!" he cried.

Just then Bub opened his eyes and said: "Oh, Jakie! I've been having a wonderful dream of Santa Claus! I dreamed I was living in his house and I had a Christmas tree loaded with toys, and I had a grand dinner, and, oh, Jakie! I dreamed that Santa Claus said, 'Dear little Bub, you shall live with me, and you will never be lonely and cold and hungry on Christmas Day.'"

Then Jakie gathered his tiny brother in his arms, crying, "Never will I be selfish and leave you alone and cold and hungry on Christmas Day again as long as I have two strong feet to stand upon and two strong arms to carry newspapers." And he never did.—Mary C. Kenderdine.

"THOUGH I SPEAK WITH THE TONGUE OF ANGELS"

There is no asset to a community so great as that of a friendly spirit—good roads, telephones and even churches not excepted—and it is the women who make a neighborhood friendly. Everybody fears the gossip of that group of peculiarly minded men who inhabit the environs of the stove in the village store, their thoughts as dark and useless as the tobacco they chew and spit. Even that, however, is ignored in the friendly atmosphere we women can create.

Snobbishness is more a characteristic of the country than of the town; and it is fostered by us women. We do not mean to be snobbish and few of us feel snobbishness. We are busy, someone must stay at home; when we do go we are a little diffident. Then it is that the tenant thinks the landowner's wife is high and mighty and she draws within her shell. The members of one church have a good time among themselves and do not think of the little woman who has just moved in. And so it goes.

To be friendly costs no money. The hearty smile and greeting that men have acquired through meeting the world and his neighbor for generations, we might copy with profit. The old saying "Even the cat can look at the king" might be changed to "Even the king can speak to the cat."

The biggest, finest lesson we women can set ourselves to learn is that of tolerance and charity. "Though I speak in tongues of men and of angels and have not charity," was written two thousand years ago, but it is just as true now as then. Charity in thought, word and deed means being kind in small things. It means applying the Golden Rule every hour of every day. It means putting one's self in the other person's place and trying to understand.—The Progressive Farmer.

AN APPEAL TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

Three and one-half million children in Eastern and Central Europe have no alternative to disaster between now and next harvest except American aid. For months, because the needy were so numerous and the available funds so limited, these most helpless sufferers in the track of war have been admitted to American feeding stations only if tragically undernourished, and have received American medical aid only if desperately threatened by death from disease.

Winter is closing down. The money of many nations is valueless outside their own boundaries. Economic and crop conditions, aggravated over considerable areas by actual warfare last summer, make famine, with its terrible train of diseases, a certain visitor until next harvest. Inevitably the helpless children will suffer most. No child can grow to health and sanity on the pitiful makeshifts for food with which millions of European adults must content themselves this winter. It is obvious that the remedy can come only from outside.

America saved 6,000,000 European children winter before last. Normal recuperation cut the need nearly in half last year, but unusual conditions have resulted in scant shrinkage of child destitution during the twelvemonth just past. The response of America must now decide whether 3, 500,000 of these charges, in acute distress, shall begin to be turned away in January from more than 17,000 asylums, hospitals, clinics and feeding-stations dependent on American support. There would be no tragedy in history so sweeping or so destructive of those who can deserve no evil.

The undersigned organizations, working among every race and creed, many engaged also in other forms of relief, agree unanimously that the plight of these helpless children should have complete priority in overseas charity until the situation is met. This is an issue without politics and without religious lines. There can be no danger of pauperization, for the $23, 000,000 for child food, and the $10,000,000 for medical service that we seek, will relieve only the critical cases. The medical supplies, of course, must be an unqualified gift, but for every American dollar used in child-feeding, the governments and communities aided furnish two dollars in the form of transportation, rent, labor, clerical help, cash contributions and such food supplies as are locally obtainable.

America has not failed in the past in great-heartedness. She has never had a more poignant call than this. Contributions should be turned over to the local committees which are now being formed for this national collection, or sent to Franklin K. Lane, Treasurer, Guaranty Trust Co., New York City. EDUCATIONAL INCREASE

There are 210 colleges and universities in the United States according to a report of The Independent; and only fourteen of these institutions have fewer students in 1920 than in 1914. During the last six years there has been a total increase in attendance from 187,000 to 294, 000, or a gain of 107,000 students.

BIBLES FOR CHRISTMAS PRESENTS

We have on hand a fine collection of Bibles suitable for Christmas presents. We regret that we do not have catalogues and descriptive circulars that we can send customers, with the exception of a circular that covers only a limited part of our stock. Catalogues and circulars are furnished us by the Bible publishers, and during the last few years prices and materials have been so uncertain that the publishers have found it difficult to standardize catalogues and circulars.

THE CHRISTMAS STAR

Since ancient Bethlehem beheld
The Christmas star arise,
Astronomers have vainly sought
Its splendor in the skies.
But when the bells on Christmas Eve
Repeat the glad refrain
Of "peace on earth, goodwill to men,"
Behold, it shines again.

In every home where little feet
Go pattering to and fro
And little voices merrily
Ring out across the snow,
And scarlet-berried holly makes
The glittering windows bright,
The holy star of Bethlehem
Reveals its dazzling light.

It sparkles from the Christmas tree
In gold and silver sheen
And tiny tapers strung along
The branches darkly green.
It shimmers on the angel perched
Upon the topmost spray
And o'er the tinsel cords that tie
The gifts of Christmas Day.

The children dance and sing around
The trees of wondrous fruit,
Or at some new and novel toy
They gaze with rapture mute;
And dolls and drums and picture
books
And all the Christmas things
Are touched with radiance that led
The shepherds and the kings.

O may no little one awake
Upon a Christmas morn
To find his stocking hanging up
All empty and forlorn!
For lo, the glory that aroused
The shepherd in the fold
Is shining still in childish eyes
And curls of baby gold.

THE WISE MEN FROM THE EAST

(A boy's Christmas Lesson)
By Bliss Carman

"Why were the Wise Men three,
Instead of five or seven?"
They had no match, you see,
The archangels in Heaven.

God sent them, sure and swift,
By His mysterious presage,
To bear the threefold gift
And take the threefold message.

Thus in their hands were seen
The gold of purest Beauty,
The myrrh of Truth all-clean,
The frankincense of Duty.

And thus they bore away
The loving heart's great treasure,
And knowledge clear as day,
To be our life's new measure.

They went back to the East
To spread the news of gladness.
There one became a priest
Of the new word to sadness;

And one a workman, skilled
Beyond the old earth's fashion;
And one a scholar, filled
With learning's endless passion.

God sent them for a sign
He would not change nor alter
His good and fair design,
However man may falter.

He meant that, as He chose
His perfect plan and willed it,
They stood in place of those
Who elsewhere had fulfilled it;

Whoso would mark and reach
The height of man's election
Must still achieve and teach
The triplicate perfection.

For since the world was made,
One thing was needed ever,
To keep man undismayed
Through failure and endeavor.

UNDER THE HOLLY BOUGH

*Ye who have scorned each other,
Or injured friend or brother,
In this fast fading year;
Ye who, by word or deed,
Have made a kind heart bleed,
Come gather here.*

*Let sinned against, and sinning,
Forget their strife's beginning,
And join in friendship now:
Be links no longer broken,
Be sweet forgiveness spoken,
Under the Holly Bough.*

*Ye who have loved each other,
Sister and friend and brother, . . .
In this fast fading year:
Mother and sire and child,
Young man and maiden mild,
Come gather here;*

*And let your hearts grow fonder,
As memory shall ponder,
Each past unbroken vow.
Old loves and younger wooing
Are sweet in the renewing,
Under the Holly Bough.*

*Ye who have nourished sadness,
Estranged from hope and gladness
In this fast fading year;
Ye, with o'erburdened mind,
Made aliens from your kind,
Come gather here.*

*Let not the useless sorrow
Pursue you night and morrow,
If e'er you hoped, hope now—
Take heart;—uncloud your faces,
And join our embraces,
Under the Holly Bough.*

CHRISTMAS CAROL

From the starry heav'ns descending,
Herald angels in their flight,
Nearer winging,
Clearer singing,
Thrilled with harmony the night:
"Glory, glory in the highest!"
Sounded yet and yet again,
Sweeter, clearer,
Fuller, nearer—
"Peace on earth, goodwill to men!"

Shepherds in the field abiding,
Roused from sleep, that gladsome morn,
Saw the glory,
Heard the story,
That the Prince of Peace was born:
"Glory, glory in the highest!"
Sang the angel choir again,
Near winging,
Clearer singing:
"Peace on earth, goodwill to men!"

Swept the angel singers onward,
Died the song upon the air;
But the glory
Of that story
Grows and triumphs everywhere;
And when glow the Yuletide heavens,
Seems that glorious song again
Floating nearer,
Sweeter, clearer—
"Peace on earth, goodwill to men!"
—J. R. Newell.

THE ANSWER

By John Stapleton

"If we could see and hear Him—
This vision—were it not He?"

—Tennyson in "Higher Pantheism."

Why so dulled is our hearing?
Why is our seeking so dim?
Why do we walk in His garden
Yet fail to get vision of Him?

He walks abroad in His garden,
And over the lonely seas;
He speaks through the dawn of the morning;
He speaks through the midnight breeze.

I know—for the quieted waters
Tell the Vision is nigh;
And blossoms abloom in His footprints,
Whisper that He has passed by.

Yet search as I may, He eludes me.
I find but a half-open door;
I see faded flowers in the garden,
I hear but the waves on the shore.

The dust of our selfishness blinds us,
Our hearing is dulled by our fears;
We hide when He walks in His garden
In anger and pride—or in tears.

O soul, stained of earth, learn the lesson;
No glimpse of Him here can we win
For life round about us is Christless
While Christless our life is within.

When throned in our hearts, He is mirrored.
In waters—or heard on the breeze;
And walks by our side on the highways,
And lives in the flowers and the trees.

—The Continent.

THE CHRIST CHILD

A woman sings across the wild
A song of wonder sweet,
And everywhere her little Child
Follows her gliding feet.

He flutters like a petal white
Along the roadway's rim;
When He is tired, at latter-light,
His mother carries Him.

Sometimes a little silver star
Floats softly down the air,
Past mountains where the pure snows are,
And sits upon His hair.

Sometimes, when darkness is unfurled
Upon her breast He lies,
And all the dreams of all the world
Flock to His dreamy eyes.

CHRISTMAS IN LITERATURE

Great Poems and Stories That Have Been Inspired by the Advent Season

By far the noblest Christmas poem is Milton's "On the Morning of Christ's Nativity." It is a long poem full of the great poet's matchless music, deep reverence, and profound spiritual beauty. Every Christian and every lover of fine thought finely expressed will do well to commit it to memory.

It is impossible to name poems worthy to stand alongside of this, but other noble Christmas poems have been written by the great poets. There is Browning's "Christmas Eve," a long philosophical poem on the reality and meaning of worship; it is intensely dramatic and full of insight into the human heart and mind. There is Alfred Domett's wonderful poem about what happened "in the solemn midnight, centuries ago." There is Tate's glorious hymn, "While shepherds watched their flocks by night," and Heber's star-song, "Brightest and best of the sons of the morning," and Bowring's "Watchman, tell us of the night," and Muhlenberg's "Shout the glad tidings," and Watt's "Joy to the world, the Lord is come!" and Henry Kirke White's "When marshalled on the nightly plain," and James Montgomery's "Angels, from the realms of glory," and Wesley's "Hark! the herald angels sing." It would seem that all the great hymn-writers had turned to this inspiring theme of Christmas.

America has produced some of the noblest Christmas hymns. We have only to instance those two lovely advent songs by E. H. Sears, "It came upon the midnight clear," and "Calm on the listening ear of night"; Bryant's "As shadows cast by cloud and sun," and Phillips Brook's "O little town of Bethlehem. Longfellow wrote this charming "Christmas Bells ending

"Then peal the bells more loud and deep!
'God is not dead nor doth He sleep!

The wrong shall fail,

The right prevail,

With peace on earth, good will to men!"

Longfellow also wrote the best poem on the Wise Men, "The Three Kings" Whittier wrote a number of Christmas poems the finest being "Christmas Carmen," which begins:

"Sound over all waters, reach out from all lands

The chorus of voices, the clasp of hands;

Sing hymns that were sung by the stars of the morn,

Sing songs of the angels when Jesus was born!

With glad jubiliations!

Bring hope to the nations!

The dark night is ending and dawn has begun:

Rise, hope of the ages, arise like the sun,
All spirit flow to music, all hearts beat as one!"

Then, too, the Christmas classic of childhood, "A Visit from St. Nicholas," was written by an American, Clement Clarke Moore, professor of Oriental languages at the New York General Theological Seminary. In addition, for the children there are Eugene Field's rollicking "Jest 'fore Christmas," J. G. Holland's "Christmas Carol," and Irwin Russell's "Christmas Night in the Quarters," though the last two are equally for grown-ups.

It would need more space than we can here take to survey the influence of Christmas upon English prose. The most famous Christmas stories, of course, are those which Dickens wrote for so many years, the splendidly popular "Christmas Carol," "The Cricket on the Hearth," "The Chimes," and the rest of them. Each of these short stories took as much out of the great novelist, he declared, as a long novel. Thackeray also wrote Christmas stories, five of them, including "The Rose and the Ring," but none of them touched Dickens's in popularity. Indeed, the best thing Thackery did for Christmas was his famous poem, "The Mahogany Tree," beginning:

"Christmas is here:
Winds whistle shrill,
Icy and chill,
Little care we:
Little we fear
Weather without,
Sheltered about
The mahogany tree."

America has done its share for Christmas in prose as well as in verse. Irving is the essayist of Christmas, and the very heart of the happy festival is in those five chapters of the "Sketch Book": "Christmas," "The Stage Coach," "Christmas Eve," "Christmas Day," and "The Christmas Dinner." The most famous of American Christmas stories is Henry van Dyke's "The Other Wise Man," though others come close to it: Robert Grant's "The Bachelor's Christmas," Hopkinson Smith's "Colonel Carter's Christmas," and Edward Everett Hale's "Christmas in a Palace"—which was a Pullman palace car.

This hasty survey has doubtless reminded our readers of many past delights. May it lead them to get into the true spirit of Christmas by reading over again some of the old-time favorites, and forming the acquaintance of the poems and stories which we have mentioned that they may not have read.

BURLINGTON, N. C., DECEMBER 29, 1920

NUMBER 52

An Appeal to Christians

BY HERBERT HOOVER

IT IS NOT wise nor proper for men to claim indiscriminately the blessing of Christ on the tasks they undertake. Yet surely concerning the vital duty to the performance of which American charity has dedicated itself this winter—the protection of 3,500,000 children from the indescribable miseries of starvation or death by disease—it is not presumptuous to call on His followers in His name. Quoted word and recorded act assure us that Jesus has no passion more intense than His love of children.

Eight organizations, working among every race and creed, have come to the unanimous conclusion that three and one-half million children in Eastern and Central Europe have no alternative to disaster between now and next harvest except American aid. The European Relief Council, comprising eight great relief agencies, was formed in the deep conviction that this heartrending peril to helpless children should have absolute right of way until the situation is met.

I know America has tasks and needs at home, but I make no apology for seeking to lay on your hearts our obligation to avert the incredible tragedy that threatens these children. They are no more my children than they are yours. Neither of us can dare let them suffer through our indifference and then claim servanthship to Christ.

THE MISSION OF THE CHURCH PAPER

The mission of the Church paper is what the word mission means—to send.

The mission of the Church paper is to send and to go and it does both.

The mission of the Church paper is not to make money, but to add to the Kingdom's growth.

When thousands of Church papers have died after being founded upon worthy motives, certainly no Church paper can live if founded for the principles of money alone.

And while the Church paper is not a money-maker, thousands of dollars pour into the coffers of the Church annually because of the Church press.

The mission of the Church paper is to preach—and it does preach. It is just as unbusiness-like to ask the preacher to provide his own salary as it is for the Church paper to provide for its own existence.

If a minister is necessary for the local church, the Church paper is necessary for the denomination—and if the minister is to be supported as a business proposition, so must the Church press:

If you consider it non-ethical to disown a member of the local church because he does not pay his dues, his pledge, or his assessment, it is also unfair for the Church paper to drop a subscriber's name the day his subscription is out, unless there is a definite agreement and understanding.

No orphanage is self-supporting, and no one expects it to be. Yet it has lands and crops and other sources from which to derive money other than donations or gifts. The mission of an orphanage is to be missionary, and therefore, we provide for it. The mission of the Church paper is to be missionary, and it should be provided for.

To cut the size of a Church paper, or to limit its usefulness in any way, is to say that the work it is doing is not worth the price.

To bar the Church paper from a home is to bar a sermon—from sermons—from the family.

To take the Church paper out of the field is to take a missionary out of the field.

Colleges are not self-supporting, but the Church must have her colleges. Colleges increase in buildings, in teaching force, and in curriculum; there is no backward road for the right college. There is no retreat for the Church paper.

The Church paper is a silent force for untold good, a promoter of education, of benevolence, a producer of ideas and ideals. It is the co-pastor of every pastor. It goes rain or shine, snow or sleet.

The Church paper must not suffer. It has a claim upon us for what it has done. To forsake it is to be disloyal in a dozen ways.

NOTES AND GENERAL COMMENT

The deficit on THE CHRISTIAN SUN during the past six months has averaged $698.00 per month. This deficit has been met by the Convention.

Bethlehem church, Alamance County, raised $66.50 on a recent Sunday for the Armenian Relief Fund. We trust that many other churches have done likewise.

Rev. R. P. Crumpler, Luray, Va., writes that he is delighted with his present field of work and we understand from other sources that he is getting along nicely.

The Christian Advocate (New York) informs its readers in its issue of December 23, that its subscription price of $2.50 the year is not near meeting the cost of publication.

Mrs. Fred Bullock, Suffolk, Va., goes to Dayton, O., on January 1, as Sunday school Field Secretary and Editor of Scriptural cards and Junior Quarterlies for the Christian Publishing Association.

THE SUN'S Editor extends thanks to the many who remembered him with Christmas greetings. Such expressions are always appreciated and make us feel that readers enjoy the paper.

The Burlington Sunday school gave a very fine Christmas exercise by the children on Sunday evening, December 26, and presented a Christmas tree in the old church building on Monday evening, December 27.

We note that the Christian Observer, Louisville, Ky., has limited death notices to thirty words and charge three cents per word for resolutions of respect, in order to help meet the high price of producing the paper.

Rev. J. E. McAuley held services for the Burlington church on Sunday, December 19. He brought the congregation two acceptable messages. Rev. J. W. Holt preached for the congregation last Sunday morning.

The Methodist Protestant, Baltimore, in its issue of December 15 says that its income is barely 50 per cent of the cost of production. That paper has decided to purchase a printing plant of its own as a final attempt to live.

No doubt you have neglected sending for that copy of "Peloubet's Select Notes", or it may be a copy of "Tarbell's Guide." Both can be had at this office for $2.00, or $2.10 delivered. We also have "Torrey's Gist of the Lesson" for 40 cents.

Different Conferences make arrangements about distributing The Annual. We have prepared, in brief, what each Conference voted to do with its allotment and the same will appear in THE SUN for next week and will be run for two successive issues.

Rev. J. W. Holt, pastor of the Bethlehem church, says that the good people in that community have been very kind to him this winter, adding much to his larder and spending money. Friends from other communities have also remembered Bro. Holt.

Brethren, if you expect to renew your subscription soon, do it now, when the income is the smallest in years. But if each subscriber on the list were to pay in advance, and never allow his or her account to lapse, THE SUN cannot meet expenses at the present income.

Eight pages of this issue of THE SUN were printed on December 23, and on that date enough matter was in type for the remaining eight pages with a considerable overage for the first issue of the New Year. This may explain why your article does not appear this week.

The publication of the Methodist, a weekly Church paper of the Methodist Episcopal Church, published at Baltimore, has been suspended. The high cost of paper and labor and the fact that many have failed to pay for the paper are given as the reasons for suspension.—Christian Advocate (Nashville)

Rev. G. O. Lankford, now pastor of Rosemont and Berea churches in the Eastern Virginia Conference, has accepted a call to the Burlington church and expects to move about April 1, 1921. Burlington's call was made several weeks ago and was unanimous, but Bro. Lankford did not accept until last week.

The following is quoted from Zion's Herald of December 1: "Zion's Herald today actually costs for its production $4.12 for each subscriber, while we receive an average of only $2.12 from each. The question, therefore, is plainly one of meeting this deficit of $2.00 a subscriber." The Herald announces an increase in subscription price from $2.50 to $3.50 the year.

We are giving on this page several notes taken from current issues of our Exchanges giving the deplorable financial situation many Church papers are in. We have a reason for this: THE CHRISTIAN SUN is in the same condition and subscribers should know it. The paper is their property and its condition is rightly their property. No man in the Church regrets the repeating of THE SUN's financial condition so much as the present Editor. It is humiliating, but we have no other choice.

By the time this issue of THE SUN reaches the public, The Christian Annual will all be in type, with the exception of the minutes of the Christian Missionary Association of the Eastern Virginia Conference. We have promise of these proceedings by January 5. The Annual, however, is on press and by the last of this week we hope to have all the press work done except Part II, in which the above records mentioned will appear. If we had the records of the C. M. A. on hand now, The Annual would be completed this week ready for delivery.

Greetings to our great and beloved "Uncle" Wellons. He reaches his 95th mile stone on January 1. We dedicate page 4 of this issue to our venerable Brother. The facts given by Dr. Harper concerning "Uncle" Wellons are certainly of rare interest. Why not say these things while our good Brother is living? We answer in the affirmative, and for that reason have arranged that page. Let the Church remember Brother Wellons on his birthday—January 1. Let us send him ninety-five letters or cards and remember him in other ways. Act on your impulse and do it now, even if this issue should not reach you until after January 1.

The Methodist of Baltimore announces that it has suspended publication for an indefinite period, due to manufacturing costs, inadequate subscription price ($1.50), and slow collections. The paper has been a valued adjunct in the church work of its field for forty-two years. Its self-sacrificing editors, and the individual laymen who have stood by them, have succumbed, temporarily at least, to the pressure of economic circumstances. It will be a serious matter for all the interests of Methodism in the Washington Area, if this suspension shall diminish the circulation of our literature in that field.—Christian Advocate (New York)

Readers of THE SUN will be interested to know of the success of Rev. Geo. D. Eastes, Evangelist, who until some months ago was pastor of the Raleigh church. While Mr. Eastes is strong himself as an evangelist, his present success is due in part to the very efficient help he has in the other members of his party. Mr. C. Major Daugherty, his Musical Director and Soloist is also a fine worker among young people. In fact, he is one of the best known men in his line in the country. Miss Gladys Hinton, his pianist, is equally strong in her line. Miss Hinton, in addition to being an accomplished musician is a fine worker among women. She has had considerable experience in evangelistic work. Mr. Eastes' engagements for several months have been in the West. He prefers, however, to work during the spring in North Carolina and Virginia. Pastors desiring his services in evangelistic meetings may address S. M. Smith, Box 1362, Norfolk, Va.

Rev. James W. Wellons, D. D.
 "95 Years Young"
 Elon College, N. C.

OUR GRAND OLD MAN

Certainly I mean Rev. J. W. Wellons, almost universally known as "Uncle" Wellons, now fast approaching his 95th birthday. Here are some of the facts of his life as a public servant and Christian worker:

He joined the North Carolina Conference at O'Kelly's Chapel in 1854. He has seen this Conference become the North Carolina and Virginia Conference and later merged into the Eastern and Western North Carolina Conference and the North Carolina Conference again.

He assisted Dr. W. B. Wellons and Rev. I. N. Walter erect the monument at the grave of Rev. James O'Kelly.

"Uncle" Wellons has attended every session of the Southern Christian Convention since its organization and every session of the North Carolina Conference since 1854 but two, once being within the Federal lines during the Civil War and once being sick.

He was present when THE CHRISTIAN SUN was sold to Rev. W. B. Wellons in 1854 and when the Federal troops entered Suffolk in the Civil War, he "pied" some articles then in type which would have embarrassed the Church.

"Uncle" Wellons was one of the authors of the original "Principles and Government of the Christian Church". With Rev. R. H. Holland he wrote "Life and Labors of W. B. Wellons". He has published four other books, of which he is the sole author: Wellons' Family Prayers, The Wellons Family, Wellons' Devotional Life, and Vital Truths for Hungry Hearts.

He was present when the decision was reached to locate our College at Elon and offered the first prayer on the present campus. He has attended every session of Elon's general and executive Board of Trustees since the college began. He was also deeply instrumental in establishing Franklinton Christian College for our colored brethren.

"Uncle" Wellons was once quite well fixed financially. By the duplicity of a Christian layman in whom he had the utmost confidence, he lost all. He would not even so much as avail himself to the homestead exemption.

He was one of the commissioners on Christian Union when our Northern and Southern Churches united after the Civil War.

He began his ministry in the North Carolina Conference as a circuit rider on the Deep River Circuit, covering five counties and having to ride on horseback 225 miles a month to reach his 15 churches and 2 school houses. His salary was $100 the year, but each year he received more than promised, because he gave himself, not merely his Sundays to the work.

He has built six churches and served as pastor of forty. His greatest work, however, has been as evangelist and singing master. Thousands have been converted under his preaching.

The last few years his active service has consisted of an occasional sermon delivered while seated, designed for old people out of Christ, and to praying for the sick and afflicted, two services his soul greatly rejoices to perform.

In 1902 "Uncle" Wellons moved to Elon College where he has since been co-pastor, being elected to that office for life. He is a benediction to the College community, where no visitor comes without his cordial greeting and where no mistake is too high up to go unrebuked.

Is he not our grand old man? God bless him and give him many years yet of blessed service among us.

SIDELIGHTS ON THE WORLD'S SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

A great deal of comment, favorable and unfavorable, has been volunteered in view of the fact that the staging of the Convention at Tokyo was backed by what was known as The Patrons Association, a group of some of the most prominent of Japanese public citizens, the president and many of the other officers and members of which are not Christians, and frankly lay no claim to being such. The reasons given for their enthusiastic support were expressed in numerous welcome addresses given by such men as the president of The Patrons Association, Marquis Okuma, and the vice-president, Baron Eiichi Shibusawa, Baron Yoshiro Sakatani and Viscount Inajiro Tajiri, the last named being Mayor of Tokyo. These reasons seemed to embrace the frank acceptance of some of the principles of Christianity and the belief that in them and in the Convention which stood for them, there lies the hope of a better basis for good will among the nations.

But we did not begin this article with a view to discussing the reasons back of the support of the Patrons Association, nor the probable effect of it in the future. Such discussion could only be in the nature of conjecture anyway at this early date. We do, however, want to show to what pains the Japanese people as such, went through various associations and committees in their effort to give the delegates from all nations a cordial welcome. And I am quite sure they succeeded so far as the Convention was concerned, for the delegates from some thirty nations mingled together at the various functions arranged in their honor in such a genuine spirit of friendliness as could leave no room for suspicion.

At the very outset when the Convention hall burned, expressions of sympathy poured in from Japanese of all walks of life and I have learned since that the Parliament buildings were placed at the disposal of Convention officials and the only reason given for not accepting them was that they were not suitably arranged for the various sessions and especially for the magnificent pageantry effects arranged by Professor Smith.

On one occasion the Convention was invited to a reception given in one of the detached Imperial palaces, located in the midst of Shinjuku Imperial Garden. This garden was the favorite spot of the mother of the present Emperor, and is a beautiful site of several acres of rolling land covered with many beautiful garden effects worked out with various trees, flowers, shrubs and grass flanked by winding walks and miniature lakes. Many Japanese have never had the privilege of visiting this park and only those admitted this time, who could show an official delegate's badge.

On Friday afternoon of Convention week, the city of Tokyo entertained the delegates at Hibiya Park in the center of the city. A massive evergreen arch of welcome stood over the gateway and the natural beauty of the park was supplemented by many color schemes in hunting and fireworks in which the Japanese excel. After an hour of Japanese entertainment in our honor we were served a most excellent foreign style meal in tents erected for the purpose. During the dinner the Mayor of the city delivered an address of welcome.

This welcome meeting was duplicated at Yokohama later on and also at Kamakura, a very old, but fashionable village resort on the sea-shore some thirty-five miles from Tokyo. The delegates were divided into seven groups for this trip, each group being distinguished by a different colored ribbon. Special trains took us through the interesting rice paddies, and numerous little villages lying between Tokyo and Kamakura and when we reached the station at our destination a great throng of citizens had gathered, who gave us a welcome long to be remembered. We then started for a walk of three miles through the historic village and out to the famous Buddhist image, Daibutsu. The image has been roused several times in a wooden shrine, but the floods from the nearby beach have so often washed the house away that the last one was not rebuilt, and the image stands out in the open among the trees of a beautiful park. It is fifty feet high and the figures with its sitting posture is exceptionally well proportioned, while the pure Hindu type face has an expression of beauty and repose that marks this as perhaps the best of the several Daibutsu images, though the one at Nara is somewhat larger.

Although Kamakura is in the strategic zone near the Yokohama harbor we were given special permission to take pictures of the image. It is made of bronze and is hollow, with a winding stairway leading up into the head. We entered the image by stooping and crawling through a very narrow passage (Miss Stacy was equal to it, although I think I negotiated it a bit easier than she. Brother Garman waited on the outside). Climbing the narrow stairway we were able to look out upon the park from two small doors in the back of the head. As we descended we noticed on one side of the large hollow interior, a number of small altars and a shrine.

From the base of the image the delegates broke up into the seven groups and were taken to the places designated where supper was to be served. Our party of fifty was escorted to the home of Mr. Abasaki, a wealthy resident of the town. Here we were served a delightful foreign lunch at tables tastefully arranged in the spacious and beautiful garden. After the luncheon, we gave three "bonzias" for our host and returned to the station, stopping a moment at the beach as we passed. As our special train pulled out the citizens bade us goodbye with an enthusiasm that was contagious.

On still another occasion The Patrons Association gave a reception for the delegates at the Imperial Theatre where the Convention sessions were held. At this meeting there was a very fine program of music by the great Imperial Naval Orchestra and Band, a piano solo and a vocal solo by two very accomplished Japanese ladies, and a number of addresses of welcome by some of the officers of the Association already mentioned.

At all of these receptions every effort was made to give the delegates a royal time. Souvenirs especially prepared for the occasion were in evidence everywhere and all sorts of pleasing courtesies were extended.

One of the thoughtful things done by the committee was to provide interpreters for any delegates who wished to be piloted about the city. A great number of college and high school boys volunteered for this service and they never seemed tired of doing what they could to be of service.

Many other pleasing features were introduced by the Japanese hosts and the delegates left the Imperial City with many words of praise and appreciation for the hospitality extended them. Regardless of any doubtful motives that might have inspired some members on the various committees, it is certain that if the mutual feeling that existed here during the Convention could be carried to all the peoples of the various nations representing it would go a long way towards permanent peace.

FEDERAL COUNCIL OF CHURCHES

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL AND WORLD BROTHERHOOD

BY J. F. BURNETT

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is building world brotherhood. It has come to the kingdom for such a time, and task, as this. Never has the spirit of brotherhood had such demands made upon it, and such opportunities offered to it, as now.

The Churches of Christ in America, which have escaped the sad experiences, and awful desolations of Europe, are listening to the call, meeting the obligation, and accepting the opportunities, which come to them from the churches that were smitten by the pestilence that walketh in darkness, and the destruction which cometh at noonday. They are increasingly conscious that they must join themselves to groups of kindred life and purpose, not only for their sakes, but if they would preserve their own soul, and represent their divine Lord. The process by which the Council is reaching this world brotherhood may be slow, and to many appear inadequate and sluggish, but one who reads widely, and thinks carefully, will not fail to see the goal towards which the churches are moving through this, the largest unit of expression that they have hitherto enjoyed. A survey of the field of the Council's activities is in itself assuring, if not wholly convincing. In the field of its activities are found: Methods of Cooperation, The Regulation of Immigration, Interchurch Federation, The War and the Religious Outlook, International Justice and Good Will, Relations with France and Belgium, Relations with the Orient, and Foreign Missions. In addition to these are the following affiliated bodies, each with its field and obligation, and which have for their boundries the extremes of human society in every land of the world:

Home Mission Council, The Council of Women for Home Missions, The Church Board of Education, The Sunday School council of Evangelical Denominations, The American Bible Society, The International Committee of Young Men's Christian Association, The National Board of the Young Women's Christian Association, and other bodies, which have for their purpose the preaching of the gospel to every creature. In this field of activity is found the demand for a steady application of the spirit of Jesus Christ to the whole range of human relations. Toward these relationships the Churches of Christ in America have voiced their conscientious convictions through the Federal Council. Through this agency, both in international matters, and in regard to grave domestic concerns, they have spoken with no uncertain sound and through it they have been rallied to unity of endeavor which has made their influence felt upon each and all of these relationships. The influence of the churches upon themselves, as they voice their conscience in unity, makes them not only willing, but eager, to become the big brother to the weak, helpless, dependent suffering victim of the world war. The "Big Brother" idea was strongly enforced, and clearly illustrated, by Mr. Hoover, in his appeal for the 3,500,000 children of Eastern and Central Europe, whose lives, for the winter, depend upon American generosity. He told how splendidly the churches of the United States were responding to this call for help, and how grateful the sufferers were for it, reaching an impressive and worthy climax by saying, "I would rather have the American flag enshrined in the hearts of these children, than to have it flying from every citadel in the old world." These children, whose lives are now being saved by the friendship of the American people, will not be likely to forget it when they become the men and women of the land, and it will go far toward making sure the brotherhood of men. And more, and better yet, the Council has sent living representatives to the stricken brethren across the sea, with messages of hope, and gifts of gold, who, upon returning, bear testimony to the heart-felt appreciation of the receivers, and the assurance that more and more a dry path is being beaten across the sea, and that ere we know it, the entire world will gather in one council house, and the whole church sit down around one communion table. The Federal Council, having put its hand to the plow, dare not look back, and there can be but one end to the furrow, and that must be world-brotherhood. The evidence of this world brotherhood was convincingly present during the late session of the Council in a larger degree than ever before, which fact is proof of the growth, and realization of purpose, for which it strives.

There are many things in the life and work of the Federal Council, which give assurance of a world brotherhood, one of which is the many strong and enduring personal friendships that are being formed, and which are being strengthened each succeeding year. These friendships have neither sectarian nor denominational character of any sort whatsoever. The members of the Council are not held together by laws, rules and service; not by what they do, but by what they are, and friendship, rooted in the heart-life of individuals, is a friendship that endures and enlarges, until the ever widening circles embrace the kindred spirits of the whole world. Real friendship can only be formed between good men. Hearts are the soul of honor. Members of the Federal Council have such hearts, and year after year they are more strongly knit together, thus forming the basis for a brotherhood as extensive and inclusive as the race of mankind. The friendships of the Federal Council is that sort where true friends loveth at all times, and loveth like a brother born for adversity; a friendship, not governed by moods, atmosphere and circumstances, but a friendship without variableness, or shadow of turning, a really rooted attachment one for another, and a fervent love for the things each may be doing. Such a central force is the substance of the thing hoped for, the evidence of the thing not seen—world brotherhood.

And yet another very potential force is the fellowship of the churches. More than thirty denominations, each with its name, its history, its traditions, its forms, its doctrines, and its field, dwelling together in the unity of the spirit and the bond of peace, cannot fail to contribute to that long looked for, and often prayed for, time, when "they all might be one." The Council spoke with no uncertain sound on the question of Christian Unity. Denominationalism had neither part nor lot in the mind and work of the Council. It was a noticeable fact, that the President, in introducing speakers, did not mention the church to which they belonged, simply saying, Bishop Blank will speak, without giving the name of the church to which the bishop belonged. And then the pronouncements of the Council, and the special addresses, all emphasized the essential oneness of the people of God.

The session on Thursday evening was held in St. Paul's Cathedral, and the Bishop Ethelbert presided, and most graciously welcomed the Council, though it was composed of those outside the pale of his particular household of faith. On Friday evening the session was held in the far-famed Trinity Church, at which the Bishop presided, being assisted by the Rector of the Church, and again the Council was welcomed, and a free minister, and a layman, occupied the pulpit, which, only a few years ago, was closed to all, except those of Apostolic succession. All this goes far in assuring us, that the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ is building World Brotherhood, and in that glad good hour, when sectarianism shall writhe and die, and the glorious life of Christian fellowship shall rise to bless the world, the contribution made by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America will not be found wanting.

It would be well to remind ourselves of the high, pure and deeply Christian spirit of the session, and of the high plane of thought on which we lived while together, and to say that if four hundred Christians could exemplify the unity of the spirit for the days we were together, there is not a reason in all the world why sectarianism should live another day, nor why World Brotherhood should be postponed to a future hour.

A NEW YEAR'S PRAYER

Prov. 30:8-9—"Give me neither poverty nor riches; feed me with food convenient for me: lest I be full and deny thee, or lest I be poor, and steal, and take the name of God in vain."

It is wise that time is divided for us into periods and seasons. It enables us to take stock of passing events and to view ourselves in relation to the things about us and the God above us. We more often do this at the opening of each new year, and the making, as well as the breaking, of new year resolutions, are proverbial and expected. It is not the making, or the breaking, of these resolutions that are often worthless and count for so little; but it is the fact that we leave God out of the count. The wise and good men who wrote the proverb of the text did not do that. He not only makes a resolution: but he considers his God in the matter, and makes his resolution revolve about God as the center. His God is at the beginning of his resolution, at the middle of his resolution, and at the end of it. In brief God permeates the wise man's resolution as he makes it, the name of God being mentioned no less than three times in this brief resolve. This is the part of discretion, of prudence and of wisdom, to put God first, in the middle and at the last of things.

In the text the writer reveals three elements of his own nature which we may contemplate with profit.

I He calmly contemplates the future.

It seems difficult for us to rightly estimate and regard our time. There is nothing else that we deal with quite so valuable as time. It is the one thing in life that we cannot harvest, husband, heap up, or hold. The richest man on earth may pile up millions in money, or stocks, or bonds, but he cannot purchase one moment of time. It is so precious in God's sight that He gives it to us moment by moment, deals the moments out to us as He does not deal out diamonds, jewels or precious stones. He indeed is the wise man who knows how to contemplate the future with complacency and properly deal with the moments as they come, one by one. No man can contemplate the future sanely and wisely who does not take God into the count, for two reasons: 1st, because the future is all in God's hands. Only this moment is ours: all the vast, unknown and unexplored future is solely and wholly in God's hands. Then temptations that we have not counted on arise. No man can tell what is going to be projected into his life tomorrow. Certainly some most unexpected thing, some new untried experience and temptation. As we contemplate the new year, with all its hopes, fears, prospects and possibilities, we are very foolish if we do not identify it with God, and view God through it. I wish that it might be the firm resolve of every reader of these lines, that the coming year shall bring him close to God: that God and not gold, shall be his constant quest, and that on every Sabbath he and his house will be found at the place of worship and of prayer. Do we mean for our new year's wish and resolutions to count? Then let us place God at the base of them, and let us hinge that resolution on God. Do we mean to make a new year's resolution that will count and prove worth while? Then what better foundation can we have for it, than that during the coming year, the first day of the week shall find me and my house at the place of worship, preaching and prayer. I have an ambition that ours shall be the happiest, most wholesome, most progressive town and community in all our land. I dare to hope that we shall be neighbors one with another: that we shall love our neighbors even as ourselves, that we shall live together in perfect frankness, freedom and fellowship; that we shall know God and make it our constant delight to serve Him. How may this happy consummation be brought about? By putting God at the beginning and at the center of things where He belongs. If you and I could here and now resolve that by the help of God, during the coming year, we shall be found in the house of the Lord on the day of the Lord, a long stride would be taken toward making ours the best of all towns, and we ourselves becoming the happiest of all people.

Having put God at the beginning and at the center of his resolve and prayer the writer of the text reveals his wish and deep desire. 2nd, that he may avoid the extremes in life. Give me, he cries, neither poverty nor riches. The happiest people on the earth are not the richest, nor yet the poorest. The happiest are those who by their own honest toil and industry support themselves and dependent ones comfortably and who realize that they are with their own hands and hearts really rendering some service in the world. I presume all of us at first blush would rather be rich than poor. And yet, while riches and poverty are to be avoided, riches are shown to be more hazardous and dangerous than poverty. Take the text as proof, "Give me neither poverty nor riches, lest I be full and deny Thee, or lest I be poor and steal and take the name of God in vain." That is, the rich deny God, while the very poor profane Him only; the rich become self obsessed, and in their plenty and self-sufficiency either forget God, or deny Him; the poor only profane Him for dealing with them on such severe terms.

Poverty has its trials, its temptations, its hardships. And we can readily and easily pray to be delivered from it. None of us desire to be poor and it is easy indeed to pray against that which we do not want. So poverty is not as great a temptation as riches, because more want to be poor and all want to be rich. How difficult indeed it would be for us to pray not to get rich. Yet this is what the wise man did in the words of the text; he prays that he may not get rich because riches deny God. The poor profane God, therefore he desires not poverty; the rich deny God, therefore he desires not riches. This is why Jesus said, "How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of heaven." Verily, verily, I say unto you "It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the Kingdom of God." Avoiding the extremes of life we are fitted for better service. The extremely poor are pinched by want and pressing need, and so must devote all their thought and time to themselves. The extremely rich are pressed to hold their riches together, and are driven by the force of their wealth to seek more. So neither have time, thought or opportunity for serving God. He is poor indeed who is not rich toward God; and he is rich indeed who with his heart, hand and possessions, whether great or small, serves God.

The poorest men I know are not the tramps and hoboes who come to the door for a hand-out, or are kept in the county homes or almshouses at public charity or benevolence; but the very poorest people of all my knowledge, and the ones most to be pitied are those who are blessed of God with brain, strength and health and who make a comfortable competence which they spend upon or hold for themselves, and never feel able to give a dollar to charity or benevolence, as to advance the Lord's Kingdom in the earth. A man may be rich and have what the world regards as very small possessions. He piles up what he has, and holds what he gets with such tightness that it looms up before him with such bulk and largeness that it obscures his vision of God. It is possible for a man with a thousand dollars to be richer than another with a million; for his thousand is so close and near and dear to him, and so thoroughly absorbs all his thought, time and energy, that he has no disposition to part with any of it, not even with which to serve and worship his God. Or it may be possible for a man worth two thousand to be poorer than another with two dollars; for the one with the two thousand dollars may be so anxious to hold it all and add to it some more that he will take away none of it with which to worship his God or serve his fellow man. Give me neither poverty nor riches, prayed the wise man, that he might in mind and heart and hand be open and free and ready to serve God with all he had, and do His will at all times.

But there is a third element in this wise man's prayer that we may profit by at the opening of the new year.

II The good which will prove a blessing.

The wise man wanted to be led, in body, mind and soul. So he prays, Give me the food that is convenient for me. God knows what is best for us. He seeks to supply our wants, but we will not allow Him. We often think we know better than He knows. We do not inquire of Him as to our wants. Some one has remarked very gruesomely, but more the less truly, that, all we shall hold in our cold dead hand is that which we have given away; and it may be as truly said when the soul goes to meet its God and render account of the deeds done in the body, it will only have to offer that which it has dona for others.

The straight and narrow path that leads to glory and to God, is straight only because it is made for the unselfish and the true; and it is narrow because the old, big, blundering self cannot walk therein. I may think that power and riches and fame and renown could be convenient for me. But the wise man of the text asks God to give the food that is convenient, "Feed me with food convenient for me lest I be full and deny Thee, or be poor and steal and profane Thee". The life that is neither cursed by poverty nor intoxicated by riches is the life freest from temptations and that with which it is easiest to serve God. And when the new year now coming shall pass, he will be happier who has served God best now with what he has.

WOMAN'S REALM

SECRETARY'S REPORT

(Report of the Recording Secretary to the North Carolina Woman's Missionary Convention, Durham, N. C., Nov. 11, 1920.)

First Meeting

Our first meeting was held on November 19, 1919. At this meeting the work of the new year was planned as follows:

Mrs. W. R. Sellars was asked to secure fifty new life members; Mrs. W. H. Carroll to secure fifty new honorary life members; Mrs. W. A. Harper to raise by private subscription the $1,200 to support Rev. H. S. Hardecastle, to print the goals in a pamphlet, notify each officer of her part of the year's work, and furnish the minutes for the Christian Annual; Miss Bessie Holt to organize Women's and Young People's Societies in a selected list of twenty-two churches, to reorganize in nine formerly having Societies, and to push the Young People's work especially; Mrs. N. G. Newman to organize ten Cradle Rolls and push the work in those organized; Mrs. J. W. Patton to organize five boy's Societies and push the work in those already organized, and Mrs. M. F. Cook to secure 250 new subscribers to The Christian Missionary.

Second Meeting

Our second meeting was held on September 13, 1920. The Men and Millions Forward Movement had demanded the time of our women and this second meeting was necessitated to start anew on financial lines.

At this meeting reports were submitted by each officer and each officer again urged to put forth redoubled effort to reach each goal set before the Woman's Conference in the fall.

Durham was selected as the place of meeting

The program for the Conference in Durham was made and ordered printed.

The support of Chiyo Ito in Elon College was assigned to the Young People at the request of Miss Bessie Holt, and she was asked to raise the money required for that purpose, estimated to be $400 the first year.

Miss Bessie Holt was asked to prepare a Willing Workers' program to occupy a page in The Christian Sun once a month and to secure extra copies of The Sun to send to Superintendents.

Mrs. W. A. Harper was authorized to apportion to the Societies the remaining subscriptions necessary to complete the Hardecastle Fund and to select persons in each Society to secure the required number of memberships.

Secretary's Work During The Year

As Secretary, I prepared the minutes for the Christian Annual issued and distributed the "goals" prepared and sent out for reports the simplified "Statistical Report" blank, and as requested in the November meeting made a careful list of persons who were thought willing and able to subscribe to the Hardecastle Fund. Out of this list about $400 was raised, prior to the coming of the Men and Millions Forward Movement. When it came, the Fund was dropped till after our September meeting.

After that meeting I apportioned to the Societies memberships as given below, writing to the individuals given below:

Society, Name and Number of Memberships follow in successive order.

First church, Mrs. S. A. Caveness, Greensboro, N. C., 6; Pleasant Grove, (Va.), Mrs. W. J. Pierce, News Ferry, Va., 6; Palm Street, Mrs. A. H. Hinshaw, c/o Revolution, Greensboro, N. C., 1; Oak Level, Mrs. W. H. Hudson, Youngsville, N. C., 1; High Point, Mrs. L. R. Gibson, High Point, N. C., 1.

I recommend that each Society be apportioned this number of memberships next year, in addition to the regular apportionment, and that individual subscribers in the various societies pay their Harcastle subscriptions to the local treasurer. Of course our Conference Board Treasurer will notify the local treasurers who these individual subscribers are. This method will enable societies not having individual subscribers for the Harcastle Fund to raise it in any way they may like.

It is not necessary that I report the number of Young People's, Willing Workers, Boys' Work, Cradle Roll and other organizations, since the department superintendents in each case will do that. The list of Women's Societies as I have it is given above in connection with the apportionment for the Harcastle Fund.

The Treasurer's Report will show how much has been paid in on the Harcastle Fund and how much pledged, but not yet paid.

I recommend that the Harcastle Fund be put in the form of a Savings Account certificate in the name of Mrs. W. T. Walters, Treasurer, and sent to her, to be held subject to our order.

MRS. W. A. HARPER, Recording Secretary.

REPORT OF WOMAN'S BOARD— EASTERN VIRGINIA WOMAN'S CONFERENCE

THE RAINY DAY

When the rain is falling
And we have to stay
In the house together
All the dreary day,
We don't fret or whimper
'Cause we can't go out.
We pretend we're children
That we read about.
When we're tired playing
There is lots to do,
Things to make with scissors,
Cardboards stiff, and glue.
Pretty little verses
For each one to say—
No one's cross at our house
On a rainy day. Ex.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

A GOOD REPORT

Our financial report for this week is splendid. It helps us climb above two more rungs in the ladder. Seven reached and passed since the first day of November. Three more to reach and pass by the time we close our books for this year. Ninety-seven churches in the Southern Christian Convention have answered the appeal for a Thanksgiving offering. We hope all churches that have not sent in their offering this time will take it and mail it in within the next few weeks. We would be very very happy to reach the goal of $30,000 by the end of the year. Just three more to reach and I appeal to you to see that we get up there. I have given you my very best efforts this year. I would not like to be disappointed at the close of the year. I have faith enough in you to believe you will push us up there.

The Durham Christian church came in this week with $130.00 and gets on the banner list of the $100 churches. Our friends in Burlington head the list with an offering of $300.00 from the church, and the Sunday school had already sent in $63.53, making a total of $363.53.

Now, just three thousand dollars to reach the goal. Let everybody come to our rescue. Everybody push us up with some amount. Remember if you want to make a special donation on the "Baby Home" it counts on this amount. We need your help right now. Will you help us?

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: Please find enclosed $1.00 for offering. Certainly hope you can raise the desired amount for the children's home. Many good wishes for a happy Christmas for you and the dear little boys and girls.—William E. Garrison, Jr.

Now, William if it was not for your letter this week the corner would be vacant. I am glad you keep the "Home fires burning" this joyful Christmas.—"Uncle Charley."

(Deferred from last week.)

Dear Uncle Charley: As we would like to join the cousins four little tots, Wilson, Mildred, Wilmotte and Jack, each is sending $1.00, making $4.00 for the little cousins. Hope they will have a merry Christmas and that Santa will visit each one. Wilson and Mildred have started to school, but Wilmotte and myself are too small.—Jack Rawles.

We give you a warm welcome to our band of cousins, and we hope you will enjoy being a member very much and write often.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: I am late with my Thanksgiving offering, but hope it will reach you in time to help a little. Am enclosing dues for the past five months. I hope you and all the cousins enjoyed Thanksgiving day.—T. D. Matthews, Jr.

Yes, we enjoyed Thanksgiving day all right. We did not have turkey and cranberry sauce, but we did have chicken and the Ice Cream Association in the State gave us five gallons of ice cream and the children enjoyed it very much.—"Uncle Charley."

It is an interesting fact to know that the Bible is printed in 269 different languages and dialects, which are report of the American Bible Society. More than 32, scattered throughout the whole world, according to a 000,000 volumes are printed annually by the Society.

HOW SHALL THE ELON ENDOWMENT FUND BE INVESTED?

The Elon Endowment Fund is a great power for good. All Christians who have given their support realized this fact. In the aid given to Elon College alone, it will be worth all the sacrifices made.

It is possible, however, for this endowment fund to do double duty in service to the Master, and at the same time bring larger revenue to the College than it is now doing.

If I am not mistaken, the policy of the loan committee at the present time is to make loans from this endowment fund on standard investment securities yielding 4 to 5 per cent. This is being done when many churches throughout the Southern Christian Convention are unable to obtain loans for making needed improvements even when they offer to pay 6 per cent interest, and give first class security. The inability to secure a loan is therefore holding in check many of our churches.

The power to change or recommend a change in this ruling as to loans is in the hands of the Elon College Board of Trustees. This body will not meet again until May, but any letter of opinion or recommendation mailed the Secretary, Rev. P. H. Fleming, Burlington, N. C., will have attention then.

How do you think this fund should be invested?
P. T. HINES

SUFFOLK LETTER

The New Year is a repetition of the Old Year; and yet it is as new to us as if it were the first year in time. "There is no new thing under the sun." Prov. 1:9. That is, there is no absolutely new thing. There are new combinations, new manifestations, new views, new experiences for individuals; but no new thing. Sunrise is as old as the universe but is as fresh as the first blush of morn; the "sunset's radiant glow" has lost none of its glory by centuries of repetition. Repetition is no sin, no bore, no fault, no loss of beauty, value, or power. The measure of value is capacity for successful repetition. Repetition gets better or worse according to the thing repeated. All good improves by repetition. all bad grows worse by repetition. Prayer improves by repetition; crime grows worse by repetition. The new year opens the door unto larger and better life, if we have repeated the good resolutions formed a year ago.

A song that will not bear repetition need not have been written. The book that will not justify reprinting was a literary spasm. The newest book today is the Bible. The oldest light is the newest. The oldest love is the newest. There is no new love; it is the same love that was God. Mother-love is the same as it was when Mary "wrapped Jesus in swaddling clothes and laid Him in the manger." There is not a sweet experience in life that would not be sweet, if repeated. Charity loses nothing by repetition. Kindness grows by repetition. Friendship is the result of repetition. But what of repeated neglect, harsh words, hate, abuse? It wears away love, destroys friendship, disrupts home, precipitates war, and tears down the citadels of hope. The new year is a book for study, an opportunity for service, an open door to usefulness, and a time to change bad habits for good habits, bad associates for good associates, and the old life for the new life in Christ Jesus.

Last year people were thinking of how to make more money, how to indulge in more pleasures, and how to gratify self; this year ought to create hunger for righteousness, plans for correcting the mistakes of the year just closing, and to enter upon the new year with a purpose worthy of honest men. The new year brings new reflections, new memories, and new wisdom. This year will be better than last year. It begins with saner judgment, less of self-confidence, with a caution born of fear. This year of 1921 will be a year of improvement in thought, life, and material progress; 1920 was not. It opened wildly, moved on recklessly, and closed with a frown on its brow. Everything went downward in 1920; everything will move upward in 1921. This good year will witness decline in the starvation of orphans in Europe, famine in China, and Revolution in Russia. Brotherhood will strengthen in this new year throughout the world and the golden rule will begin a new mission in the intercourse of mankind. Its fruit will not mature, but its blossoms will fall away from the tree, and the promise will be surer in the hope of the world. Pray for it. Labor for it. Believe in it. Hope for it. And let us all say to others: A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

A PANTHER IN THE PULPIT

"When Grandfather Durrell moved out to Onondaga County, New York, in the early forties," said Aunt Eunice, as she sat back from our Thanksgiving table on a late November afternoon, "it was quite a change for us, as you may imagine. Western New York was then a comparatively new country, and our neighbors were not very near or very numerous. The country was largely a wilderness and the wild animals of the section had not entirely disappeared. Bears were quite common and wolves and catamounts were occasionally seen.

"I remember on one occasion that Grandmother shot a bear. Grandfather had gone away to help one of the neighbors, and Grandmother was left at home alone with the children. As she was busy getting dinner she heard one of the children out of doors cry out, 'Go away, you great, big, black dog, go away! We are afraid of you!'

"With her heart in her mouth, Grandmother rushed to the door, and there was a huge black bear sitting on his haunches regarding her with small, cunning eyes. But Grandmother was not easily daunted. Turning back to the kitchen, she seized the old flintlock that hung over the mantel and which was always loaded, and in a moment was facing the bear again. Bruin had not changed his position, and his great hairy chest offered a fine mark. Taking a quick aim, she fired, and Bruin fell dead right in front of the frightened children.

"When Grandfather came home that night Grandmother had some of the bear-steak cooked for supper. His furry hide made a rug that was in use for years, and I have slept on it more than once.

"Life was very different on the frontier in those days than it had been in our old New Hampshire home. Everything was much simpler, and we all had to work harder in our new home. But the soil was very rich and fertile and we raised large crops. In a few years Grandfather was much more forehanded than he would have been had he remained in the East.

"There were quite a number of New England people settled in the region, and we kept Thanksgiving Day just the same as we had done in New Hampshire. We lived about three miles from the little village, or rather hamlet, for there were not more than a dozen houses, including the store, post-office and church. The latter building was a small square structure with a belfry and spire, but no bell. It stood on the outskirts of the village, with a woods on one side and a cemetery on the other. Some of us went with Grandfather almost every Sunday to attend service at this church, and I do not remember that we ever missed a Thanksgiving Day.

"In the fall in which the incident happened that I am going to relate a number of our neighbors had been troubled by the ravages of a wolf or catamount or some other fierce animal. Several sheep had disappeared from one's flock, another lost a young heifer, which had been found mangled and half-eaten, and one night our nearest neighbor had his best shoat taken that he was intending to kill on the morrow. The creature, whatever it was, had sprung into the pig-pen and carried the half-grown porker away without breaking down the sides of the pen, thus giving evidence of its great strength.

"This latter event occurred only two or three days before Thanksgiving. Half a dozen of the men started out with guns and dogs to hunt down the marauder, but their search was fruitless and they returned disappointed. Then Thanksgiving Day came on and everybody forgot the circumstance in the general preparation for the rejoicing.

"Thanksgiving Day that year was rather cold and disagreeable, and in the afternoon a little snow fell, which was unusually early in that section. I remember the day as well as if it had been but yesterday. We had all risen early so as to have the day's labor well under way, and at ten o'clock we started for church, father having harnessed the span and taken us all along. Services had not begun when we arrived there, and the minister was still down in the aisle shaking hands with the new arrivals as we entered. At last he turned to ascend to the pulpit.

"I can see him now just as he looked going up the steps, very dignified and solemn in his dark, ministerial garb, his long hair falling upon his shoulders. All was intensely still in the church. Suddenly there was an awful screech, and, as the minister started back with uplifted hand and the exclamation, 'Get thou behind me, Satan!' a long, lithe, tawny body sprang upon the pulpit cushion and stood glaring down upon us with eyes that seemed to scintillate like fire. A moment the beast stood there and then, with another horrible screech that made our blood run cold, he leaped deliberately down into the aisle and dashed out of the church, the door being ajar.

"It was all done so quickly that we hardly realized what had happened till it was all over, and then some strident voice in the congregation cried out, 'It's a panther.' Three or four of the younger men rushed out, and obtaining their guns and dogs, set out in pursuit of the animal, but the rest of the congregation remained, and after a time the services went on as if nothing had happened. In fact, our minister preached one of the most spirited sermons he ever delivered in his life, illustrating from the adventure of the morning how often Satan attempts to surprise us, but if boldly faced will fly and leave us.

"It was a long time, however, before the incident was forgotten, and for years after I had grown into womanhood the story was still told at our firesides. Whenever a youngster wanted a story of adventure his mother, as a cap-sheaf, would relate the story of the 'Panther in the Pulpit,' which never failed to sufficiently excite.

"I might add in conclusion that the panther was finally shot and killed. The young men followed his trail to the hills and brought in his skin the next day. He was a powerful beast, his body measured, so they said, nearly five feet in length—a true specimen of the American felis concolor. Upon the whole, I think, that Thanksgiving Day was the most exciting one I can remember, and I can still feel a thrill along my spine as I recall the terrible screech and how formidable he looked as the fierce animal glared down upon us from the ulpit."—Fred Myron Colby, in Christian Intelligencer.

PASTOR AND PEOPLE

HOLY NECK BRIEFS

On Sunday night December 5, 1920 the ladies of Holy Neck church, held their Thank Offering service. It was a splendid service and while the crowd was not large the free will offering was $27.35. The special features of the program were the special music and the presentation of the Rainbow Pageant. The characters were all dressed in costume, each displaying in large letters some motive, as gratitude, obedience, honor, etc. The roll of the Society was then called and each member present came forward and deposited her offering in a small basket held by the characters, choosing the motive that most impressed her.

It was significant to see how "love" and "gratitude" took the lead. Truly these are good leaders in any phase of church work, but it is remarkable how they are reinforced by self-denial, loyalty, obedience, honor, ambition and privilege, when given their proper place in one's life.

The church at its last quarterly conference voted to endorse the Forward Movement Five Point Program as recommended by the Conference at its recent session. The membership roll is being revised so as to form an accurate basis for the grouping by families.

Fourteen representatives of the church attended the Christian Missionary Association held at Lambert's Point church, December 7. It was an encouraging meeting reporting upward of $1,800 dollars, and several new memberships were secured. Holy Neck has thirty-two memberships in this association totaling $255 annually. We were glad to report six new members since the last meeting of the Association, Mrs. J. K. Jones, Mrs. Harvey Worrell, J. E. March, H. H. Holland, L. C. March, and Mrs. J. T. Jones.

Interest is already awakened to the effort to see how large a representation the church may have at the next annual session of Conference at Dover, Del.

MISSIONARY

A WORTHY EXAMPLE

One Sunday school class the other day sent to Miss Iola Hedgepeth, Fancy Gap, Va., the following to be used in her school in the mountains: 100 sheets construction paper 9x12 assorted colors; two dozen pairs school scissors; thirteen story books; 500 colored pictures for school use; one package Sunday school picture cards; fourteen school pads; 1,000 primary pegs; two boys' blouses.

Miss Hedgepeth is enjoying her work immensely and the people are responding wonderfully there in the mountains to the work she is trying to do in their behalf. She needs an organ for her Sunday school and church services. I wonder if some church or Sunday school has not on hand an organ that it could donate, having possibly purchased a larger organ or piano? We will pay the freight if some person, school or church will donate a suitable instrument.

MAKING THE WORLD FIT TO LIVE IN

I heard a great speaker use this sentence the other day: "There is nowhere on the earth today a place pleasant and fit to live where the initiative of the Christian religion has not taken hold of the thoughts of men." That means that the purpose of missions is to make the world a fit and pleasant place in which to live. John was right when he wrote the words "the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." And unless He, the true Light lighteth the dark places of the earth, men live and linger in darkness. Today the hour of the world's greatest distress, need, hunger, suffering, is upon us. We are told by authorities who know, who do not exaggerate, that there are more people on the verge of starvation, than there ever have been at any one time. Three and one half million orphaned, helpless, homeless children in Europe are dependent upon American bounty and benevolence for their sustenance this winter. And in the provinces of Northern China the suffering, the hunger, and the need are indescribable. Forty millions or more people are in the districts of death drought, famine and starvation, twenty million of whom face death from hunger and cold unless American relief can succor them. They are dying daily by the hundreds and thousands from sheer starvation, hunger, and exposure. Now they need food, and must have it or die; they must have that Light which so lighteth the minds of men that they can make for themselves such civil, economic and moral laws as will enable them to live comfortably, happily and well.

The Gospel of righteousness, and the system of economy and morality that follows in its train, must be carried to all parts of the earth before it will be a fit and pleasant place to live in.

MARRIAGES

SPIVEY-CARR

In the presence of a few friends and near relatives, Mr. Rodney D. Spivey and Miss Elsie Mae Carr were married Friday afternoon, November 26, 1920, by the writer. This pretty scene took place at the home of the officiating minister, Suffolk, Va.

E. T. COTTEN.

MATHEWS-HARRIS

At the home of the bride, Wakefield, Va., on the evening of November 9, 1920, there was a quiet but pretty marriage when Mr. Byron Ewell Mathews, led to the marriage altar Miss Grace Harris. The parlor of the Harris home had been beautifully decorated with potted plants and cut flowers. They marched to the altar to the strains of the wedding march played by Mrs. Harry Harris, sister-in-law to the bride. The ring ceremony was used.

Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for Washington and points North.

They will reside in Petersburg, Va., where the groom is in business. They have the best wishes of their many friends.

JOHNSON-JENKINS

The marriage of Mr. J. Sherman Johnson and Miss Mary Jenkins was quietly celebrated Saturday afternoon at 5 o'clock, December 11, 1920, at the home of the pastor. Just before the ceremony the wedding song "Oh Promise, Me", was sung by Mrs. Cotten, who also presided at the piano.

The bride, an accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Jenkins, Wakefield, Va., and formerly a successful school teacher, wore a dark blue serge suit with chic black hat and set of fox furs.

The groom, a son of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Johnson of the Mount Carmel Christian church, experienced real fighting in the World War. He was superintendent of the Mount Carmel Sunday school when he left to join the army. He is now back home, and a very prosperous young farmer. He takes his bride to his new home near Walters, Va. Their friends wish for them a happy and prosperous wedded life.

GRIFFIN

Mrs. Missoura O. Griffin was born in Nansemond County, Virginia almost eighty two years ago, and died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. W. B. Baker, Newport News, Virginia, November 11, 1920.

In early life she became a member of Great Folk Baptist church and remained a member of that church through the remainder of her life. She was first married to David Parker, and to this union were born four children, two girls and two boys. One boy died at about twelve years of age and the other three are still living. They are, Mrs. W. B. Baker, of Newport News, Mrs. R. E. Griffin of Nansemond County and James Clayton Parker of Norfolk, Va., Having lived a widow for some time, she was married a second time to Hamlin S. Griffin, who preceded her to the life beyond about eleven years ago.

She always carried with her a sunny disposition and a loving Christian spirit which won the love and esteem of all who knew her. She will be missed in the home and community. But we may look forward to meeting her in the land where there will be no more parting and where God shall wipe away the tears.

Funeral services were conducted in the East End Christian church by the writer assisted by Rev. H. J. Goodwin, pastor of the Second Baptist church. A church packed with friends and neighbors was a testimony to the respect and love in which she had lived.

May God bless and comfort the bereaved family.

CALVIN J. FELTON.

OLDHAM

J. D. Oldham, Jr., aged fourteen years, only son of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Oldham, Elon College, N. C., died November 19, 1920, after a few days of illness, as a result of blood poison.

The death of this dear little boy was such a sudden shock to the family and also the community. "J. D." was such a loyal little fellow in the family, and so polite and genteel to everybody. He was a true Scout and was always ready to carry out the Scout orders. Our hearts are grieved over the departure of this dear boy, and his bereaved parents and sisters have our deep sympathy, for we know that "J. D." has left a vacant place in their home that no one else can fill.

After human skill has done all in its power to restore health, and it fails, we must bow in humble submission to God's will and say, "Thy will be done". "J. D." was a member of Elon Christian church, and it was there that his funeral was conducted by his pastor, Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., and his little form laid to rest in Spring Wood Cemetery. The floral designs were many and beautiful. The sympathy of the entire community is with the sorely bereaved family.

A FRIEND

BRAND

Mrs. Mary Brand, widow of the late C. Brand, of Reidsville, N. C., died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Dora Huffines at Hope Mills, N. C., on Tuesday, November 23, 1920, aged seventy-eight years. She suffered a stroke of paralysis several years ago, and had since been in a feeble condition, but in all of her suffering she was always patient and cheerful. At the time of her death she was a member of the Reidsville Christian church, and had been since its organization. I am sure that a member never lived that was more devoted to a church than sister Brand. She loved the Christian Church. Since her death I have heard it said by some that our Reidsville church is an answer to the prayers of Sister Brand. She was loved by all who knew her. A good woman has gone to her reward.

Funeral services were held in the Reidsville Christian church, conducted by the writer, assisted by Brother Therrell, pastor of the Reidsville M. E. church. Interment in the Greenview Cemetery. May God comfort the bereaved.

W. L. WELLS.

RASCOE

Miss Minerva Rascoe was born January 15 1848 and fell asleep November 26, 1920.

One brother, James Rascoe, and one sister, Rachael Rascoe, besides several nieces and nephews survive her. She made a profession of faith in early life and united with Union Christian church, Alamance County, North Carolina, of which she remained a loyal and devoted member till death. The funeral was at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Stevens, Burlington, and the interment was in Union Cemetery. The floral designs were numerous and beautiful. A large concourse of relatives and friends attended the obsequies.

Our Father's blessings abide with and comfort the bereaved. Funeral by the writer.

J. O. ATKINSON.

MADDOX

Irma Theresa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Maddox was born January 31, 1920 and died November 26, 1920 at the age of nine months and twenty-six days. This was the first death in Brother Maddox's immediate family, and the father, mother, brothers and sisters felt keenly the loss of the little child. We buried the little body at Moore Union and took comfort in the thought that when little children die they are "safe in the arms of Jesus."

MARSHALL

Mrs. James Matt Marshall, familiarly known as "Aunt Sallie Matt", died November 28, 1920 in her 77th year. She married James Matt Marshall February 25, 1858, and to this union were born ten children. The husband and three children have preceded her to the better land. The surviving are W. H., J. A., J. F., and A. F. Marshall, Mrs. L. K. Mathews, Mrs. T. P. Ford, and Miss Janie.

She reared her family on a farm near Salem Chapel Christian church. She loved the church, honored, and supported it, and in her death it loses one of its most loyal members. She took great interest in her pastors and all of them found a welcome in her heart and home. She was a mother in Israel, a tower of strength in her community, and a blessing to all who were fortunate enough to know her. She reared her family well, and her children with 37 grand-children rise up to call her blessed. For several years she had lived in Winston-Salem, and was so active in the church there that her death was regarded as a serious loss. It was very fitting that three ministers from three congregations other than a minister of her own church, should be present at her funeral and speak an appreciative word, for she always felt at home in any company of God's children.

We buried her in the church yard at Salem Chapel by the side of her husband, and covered her grave with many beautiful and costly flowers. Her funeral was conducted by the ones she had selected, and in the manner she had planned. She will be missed in the home and church; she will be found in Heaven.

T. E. WHITE.

FREEMAN

Little Gracey May Freeman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ira L. Freeman, Eagle Springs, N. C., departed this life December 3, 1920 at the age of six years, ten months and fourteen days.

By accident she was burned so that death was the result. May the Lord comfort the grief-stricken parents through His word "suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not for of such is the Kingdom of heaven."

Burial at Big Oak by the writer.

T. J. GREEN.

PURCELL

George Blackman Purcell, son of A. Q. and Mary L. Purcell, departed this life December 4, 1920, at the age of twenty years, eleven months and eleven days. He was a member of the Haw River Christian church and had been since early life. He has fallen asleep.

The funeral services were conducted from the church, in the presence of a large concourse of friends, by the writer assisted by Rev. F. C. Lester, Graham, N. C. The burial was in the cemetery at Grakam, by the side of his mother who fell asleep a few years ago.

To the bereaved family and friends we offer the consolation of the Holy Scriptures—"Not dead, but gone before."

P. H. FLEMING.

VESTAL

On December 4, 1920 another Godly man was called to rest from Parks Cross Roads Christian church and community in the name of Manley A. Vestal. He was the son of John A. and Elizabeth Vestal; was born September 19, 1853; died December 4, 1920. He was married to Almedia E. Craven February 27, 1873. To this union five children were born, two of whom died in infancy. One brother, the wife, children and a host of friends were left to mourn their loss.

He professed religion and joined Parks Cross Roads church in early manhood and remained a faithful and useful member till death. He died in triumph of faith saying "There is nothing between me and God. Man may say that I have not lived as I ought, but God knows I have done my best."

God bless the bereaved ones and give us another to fill his place in the church is the pastor's prayer.

Funeral was conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. M. F. Cook.

A. T. BANKS.

WICKER

Mrs. Ava Wicker, wife of Alton Wicker, died December 11, 1920, in her 28th year. She had been in poor health for a year, but tried hard to recover from the dreadful disease—tuberculosis.

She was a member of Turner's Chapel church, and greatly loved by all who knew her. She leaves three sisters, a brother, husband, and three children who have the sympathy of the entire church and community.

T. E. WHITE.

RITENOUR

Mrs. Sallie Ritenour was born May 23, 1842, and departed this life December 13, 1920 at the age of 78 years, 6 months, and 20 days. Sister Ritenour leaves the record of an humble, consecrated Christian life to her three sons, two daughters, one brother, and one sister. Her example is one well worthy of being followed. She was a member of the Palmyra Christian church. Her death occurred at the home of one of her sons near Harrisonburg. The remains were taken to Cedar Grove Dunkard church where burial services were held December 14, 1920.

Rev. Geo. T. Webb, D. D. Secretary,
99 Dundas St. East,
Toronto, Ont.

To The Editor:

Dear Sir,—The Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations is an organization made up of the Sunday school officials of the Sunday School Board of thirty or more Evangelical denominations in the United States and Canada, and also the Territorial Sunday school leaders. The annual meeting of this Council, therefore, will be of vital interest to all your readers. We will greatly appreciate it if you will give space to the enclosed brief announcement, and it will help the work if you will add whatever you will in the way of editorial comment.

Yours very truly,
GEORGE T. WEBB, Secy.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL COUNCIL IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

The Annual Meeting of the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations will be held in the Hotel Severn, Indianapolis, Ind., January 19th to 21st, 1921. The membership of the Council is made up of all the Editorial, Educational and Publication officials of the Associated Evangelical Denominations, and the employed officers of the International, State and Provincial Sunday School Associations of the United States and Canada.

The Program Committee has prepared with great care a program of unusual timeliness and strength.

The future welfare of Sunday schools of North America makes this meeting one of great importance, especially as this is the first meeting of the Council since its re-organization to include the officers of the Territorial organizations. Information concerning the meeting may be had on application to the Secretary, Rev. Geo. T. Webb, D. D., 99 Dundas St. East, Toronto, Ontario, Canada.

RESCUE THE PERISHING

One babe of every twelve born alive in North Carolina in 1919 died during the first twelve months, so read the latest figures of the federal Census Bureau.

In 1917 our death rate of infants was nearly one in every eleven. Which is to say our State Health Board is now saving infant lives at the rate of 900 a year.

The babes that died last year were weaklings at birth—around one fourth of them, because the mother or father or both were physically unfit to be parents.

Or they died because expectant mothers were ignorant of how to keep themselves fit to give birth to vigorous children.

Or because they did not know the abc's of infant feeding, sanitation, and hygiene. This sort of ignorance is surprisingly common even in well-to-do and supposedly intelligent homes.

Or because they did not know how to safe-guard their babies from the common scourges of infancy—most largely the fly-borne diseases, and the deadly ills due to contaminated milk, improper diet, and exposure to contact with infected persons; in other words, from diseases most of which are preventable or readily curable with timely proper care and treatment.

Or because they were too far away from the doctor or too poor or too ignorant to call the doctor in time.

Our infant death rate of 84 per thousand births is three points below the average for the 22 states of the registration area. And it is a lower rate than we had in 1917—one point lower, but there are still nine states that make a better showing. We need to lower still further the rate of infant deaths in North Carolina and we can do it under the leadership of our distinguished State Health Officer and his devoted staff.

King Herod slew 20 babes in Bethlehem 20 centuries ago, but King Ignorance slew 62 hundred babes in North Carolina last year.

The hour stroke of our clocks, day and night the year through, tolls the death of a helpless babe in this state.

Rescue the Perishing is a song that we ought to sing with a new meaning in our devout minds.

TEN REASONS FOR TEACHING

It is the duty of every school superintendent, school committeeman, and patriotic citizen so to cooperate in organizing work and crystalizing public opinion that local young men and women will choose teaching—

Because without education our country will not advance—for a State or county is no better than its schools.

Because the teacher comes into constant contact with the best things in life.

Because teaching is one of the surest ways of making one's personality count.

Because the teacher may have as companions people of refinement and intelligence.

Because it is a highly respected profession which is rapidly receiving more and more recognition.

Because it offers an opportunity for the highest type of service by influencing countless others to live honorable and useful lives.

Because our land must be safeguarded and education is our protection. The teacher must carry on what the soldier began.

Because it keeps one young, alive, and progressive. Contact with growing, inquiring minds, keeps one continually studying and learning.

Because there has never been a time in the history of our country when our people have turned as eagerly and as hopefully to their teachers as now. They are asking us to teach them economic laws, patriotic duties, the meaning of national and international cooperation and service.

Because in return for duties adequately performed the profession will soon receive higher salaries, better working conditions, and high rank in the professions that serve mankind.—School Life.
