A LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley: It is raining today and I have to stay in the house so I will write to you. Have you all had any of this rainy weather?

Our school closes May 27 and I will be glad this time because I want to go away real early this summer. We are going to have a commencement May 26. I will be glad when that comes. Wish you and the cousins could be with us. Can't you? We take some of our examinations tomorrow and some next week. I have only one to take, and this is arithmetic. Enclosed find ten cents for this month. Much love.—Dorothy Moore, Chuckatuck, Va.

We have had very little rain this spring. It is dry with us now. I am glad you have made good in school and hope your arithmetic examination will not be hard.—"Uncle Charley".

According to a recent ratified convention between the governments of Great Britain and Liberia, five pounds sterling, and no more, is to be the price of a wife in Liberia.

OUR ORPHANAGE

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

I want to say to all persons, Ladies Aid Societies, and friends who want to make a contribution toward furnishing the "Baby Home" that we are now ready to place the furniture in the building and will be glad if you will forward your checks or anything you have to help furnish the building. We want to get the furniture in right away and let the little tots take possession.

We were happy to reach our goal in the month of May and I understand that the man who was to give us one thousand dollars if we would raise five thousand will give more than he promised. The good Lord is kind to us and gives us more than we ask for and also puts it into the hearts of the friends of the little children to give even more than they promised to give.

CHURCH NEWS

A GREAT POUNDING

On the evening of April 29, 1921 wife and I were greatly yet, very pleasantly surprised, when our little cottage was so quickly and unexpectedly filled to its capacity with the good people of Ivor—not only our church members but the Methodists and Baptists also, and we discovered that a truck filled with provisions had been driven to our back porch. We were amazed when the men began to unload it, and take the contents to our pantry, but we murmured not, and let the good work go on. Our pantry was soon filled with good things to eat, viz. nine hams, ninety-six pounds sugar, fifty pounds of lard, one bushel potatoes, five dozen eggs, forty-seven quarts fruit, preserves, pickles, etc., eight pounds coffee, one pound tea, several cans baking powder, four pounds butter, four boxes candy, one peck apples, three sacks flour, cook book, a beautiful rug, one table cloth, and the ladies of Ivor presented a pretty set of window curtains.

Another truck came loaded with chairs and an enormous freezer full of cream. The chairs were brought in and placed and the crowd comfortably seated. Then they began to bring in spoons, dishes and cakes, and the crowd was served cream and cake.

We very much regret that our good people of Barrett's could not be with us personally, nevertheless, they did their part in the pounding and were well represented in our pantry.

About 10:00 o'clock the crowd began to leave for home, each one expressing himself or herself as having enjoyed the evening, but surely we enjoyed the event more than all the others.

We feel deeply indebted to the people of Barrett's and to each and every one who took a part in this the greatest of poundings.

We will ever remember the kindness, and shall strive to prove ourselves worthy in giving our very best service, by God's help, to these people.

SEASIDE CHAUTAUQUA GOES TO OCEAN VIEW

The Central Committee of the Seaside Chautauqua has decided to hold the coming session at Ocean View instead of Virginia Beach. This decision has been reached after a careful and deliberate consideration.

Virginia Beach has become more and more unpopular each year in the past because of its inaccessibility. Owing to the distance from Norfolk and the poor transportation facilities it has been almost impossible for even those living in Norfolk to attend the sessions without going to the Beach and remaining there for the entire week. On that account many of our best people in and around Norfolk have never attended the Chautauqua except for a day or two, now and then each year. But everybody can go to Ocean View. With splendid street car service by two different routes every fifteen minutes, and with five concrete automobile roads it is easily accessible at all hours of the day or night. People living in Suffolk, Holland, Waverly, and other nearby points can go to Ocean View, take in the entire day and night session and be back to their home before an unusually late hour. Boarding accommodations at Ocean View are equally as good as at Virginia Beach and some cheaper.

This year's session will be held under a large tent which will be pitched on the Government Reservation, only a short distance from the hotel and casino and within easy walking distance of the cottages on Willoughby Beach.

The pastors of the Norfolk and Portsmouth churches inspected the site last week, looked over the situation and heartily approved of the change. The decision to move to Ocean View has already aroused renewed interest among the membership of the Norfolk churches, and it already begins to look as though this session will break the record in attendance at least so far as our local constituency is concerned. The General Secretary is negotiating with the Chamber of Commerce and citizens of Ocean View looking to the erection of a large auditorium for our permanent use each year.

VAUGHAN-SMITH

The Suffolk Christian church was the scene of a beautiful morning marriage on June 1, 1921, when Lemuel Wilmer Vaughan, Bursar of Elon College, N. C., led to the altar Miss Mary Elizabeth Smith of Suffolk. The ceremony was read by Rev. W. W. Staley, the pastor of the church.

The church was beautifully decorated, Miss Rebecca Harrell rendered the bridal music on the organ, Mrs Bradford Kilby sang a solo, and the audience entered into the happy spirit of the occasion.

Miss Annie Corbitt of Sunbury, N. C., maid of honor, was gowned in gray georgette over gray crepe, a gray picture hat, and carried Russell roses. The groom entered entered with his best man, Ricks Vaughan of Franklin, Va. Rev. E. T. Cotten, Charles Manning, Dr. Jerome Costen and Vance Vaughan acted as ushers. Little Walter Poole Cobb was ring-bearer. The bride entered with R. B. Hill, who gave her away. She was attired in a blue traveling suit, trimmed in squirrel, and carried a shower of lilies of the valley and roses.

A display of numerous and valuable presents told the esteem in which the bride and groom were held by their many friends.

The happy pair left on the early morning Seaboard train for Black Mountain, N. C., where they will spend a season, and then return to Elon College, N. C., where they will make their home.

RAWLS-GATLING

The marriage of Dr. John L. Rawls and Miss Azzie Queldah Gatling at the Suffolk Christian church, on Thursday evening, June 2, 1921, was a very brilliant affair. The church had been elaborately decorated, was packed from pit to dome, and flooded with light.

Mrs. C. R. Wallace rendered Pizini, Nuptiale, Souvenir, Reverie and Vision, and Mrs. Bradford Kilby sang "My Sweet Repose", while the throng waited. As the bridal party entered the Bridal Chorus was played, and, "Be Thou Faithful Until Death" was rendered, softly, during the ceremony. Groomsman, Dr. D. L. Rawls, J. R. Saunders, Dr. H. G. Lassiter and Anderson Maxey entered first; the bridesmaids, Misses Julia Traxler, Louise Byrd, in colonial gowns of pink taffeta, with trains of tulle and lace, carried showers of lavender sweet peas. Misses Elizabeth Rawls and Pearl Myers, wore colonial gowns of green taffeta, with trains of tulle and bouquets of sweet peas. Mary Rawls and Mary Taylor Withers, in white organdie frocks, were ribbon girls. Ernest Howard Williams wore a white liner dress suit, and carried the ring on a silver tray. Luther Rawls Williams and Karl Rawls, in white colonial suits, and Emaline Rawls and Phoebe Thompson, in frocks of white organdie, with huge white tulle bows, scattered roses before the bride.

Miss Mary Emily Gatling, sister of the bride, as maid of honor, wore turquoise blue taffeta, with tulle train and carried a bouquet of Russell roses. The bride entered with her uncle, Dr. J. E. Rawls, who gave her away in marriage. Her gown was white corded taffeta, en train, embroidered in pearls and trimmed in real lace, her tulle veil caught with a coronet of pearls and orange blossoms, which had been used by her mother on her bridal day. She carried a bouquet of brides roses and lillies of the valley, and wore a platinum and diamond pin, the gift of the groom. The groom entered with his best man, Richard Rawls.

The bridal party left the church at the sound of Mendelssohn's wedding march. Dr. and Mrs. Rawls left for an extended northern tour and, upon their return, will reside in Suffolk, where the groom has a good practice and many friends.

The host of out-of-town guests and the wonderful presents told of their many friends. The ceremony was read by the pastor of the church.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—HARDEN

Whereas, on the 18th day of April, 1921, it pleased our Heavenly Father in His providence to call to his reward our brother, James Pleasant Harden, a member of Graham Christian church; and, whereas, we are assured that "all things work together for good to them that love the Lord," although many times we are unable to understand the mysterious workings of the Divine hand; therefore, be it resolved:

First. That we record with regret the unexpected passing of our brother whose honesty and integrity and unassuming influence we are sure will be missed in the community.

Second. That we extend to the bereaved our most genuine sympathy and commend to them our mutual unseen Friend who alone is able to heal the broken-hearted, Third. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be sent to The Christian Sun and the Alamance Gleaner for publication, and a copy be spread on the minutes of the church.

EDISON'S TWENTY QUESTIONS

(Zion's Herald)

Proof of the inadequacy of a college education to prepare one for life has been found, according to Thomas A. Edison, through a series of twenty questions submitted to college graduates who sought employment at Mr. Edison's plant. The answers of most of these applicants were so far from right that the great inventor is said to have remarked: "College men are amazingly ignorant. They don't seem to know anything." Following are the twenty questions:

1. Where do we get shellac from?
2. What is a monsoon?
3. Where do we get prunes?
4. Where do we get domestic sardines?
5. Where do we import cork from?
6. Of what kind of wood are ax handles made?
7. Who wrote "Home, Sweet Home"?
8. Where are condors to be found?
9. Who was Cleopatra?
10. What voltage is used in street cars?
11. What is felt?
12. What states produce phosphates?
13. Why is cast iron called pig iron?
14. Where is Spitzbergen?
15. Who was Francis Marion?
16. Who invented logarithms?
17. What ingredients are in the best white paint?
18. Where do we get benzol from?
19. How is window glass made?
20. Bound the state of West Virginia

Mr. Edison's experiment is of significance in many ways. This lack of familiarity with such simple facts as he lists is to be deplored, but it does not in our opinion warrant the sweeping conclusion he draws from the failure of these college men to answer his questions correctly. The incident raises the question of the purpose of college training. Is it primarily to impart lists of dry facts, or to teach men how to think? One might also inquire whether the best preparation for life is the possession of a memory working with automatic precision or a capacity for the fullest living. The facts about shellac, prunes, sardines, ax handles, pig iron, paint, and glass are important and have very direct relation, no doubt, to the work in Mr. Edison's shop. The world, however, is larger than his shop and life is greater even than "meat" and "raiment". There is another possible test that might be made which would hint at the value of a college education in relation to preparation for the larger culture represented by the more abundant life. The Herald ventures to submit a list of twenty such questions for Mr. Edison's perusal:

1. Name two books by Lafcadio Hearn?
2. What is the key to Tolstoi's philosophy?
3. Who was the button-moulder?
4. Why did Velasquez leave the door open in "Las Meninas"?
5. Of what study is "transference" the central problem?
6. Explain the kenosis theory.
7. In what book of fiction was Huish a character?
8. Who was the greatest expounder of the doctrine of the relativity of knowledge?
9. What is the title of Munkaesy's greatest painting?
10. Where did Washington Irving room while writing "The Alahambra"?
11. Who said, "Rich gifts wax poor when givers prove unkind"?
12. What and where is Gaya and why is it famous?
13. What was Wren's greatest works?
14. What is the Marxian theory of the development of history?
15. What is the Rosetta stone?
16. What was Handel's greatest production?
17. Give three meanings for the phrase "kingdom of God".
18. What is Kant's categorical imperative?
19. Where are "towers of silence"?
20. Who was the most striking figure in the English Reformation?

"Mother," said a little boy after coming in from a walk, "I've seen a man who makes horses."

"Are you sure?" asked his mother.

"Yes", he replied; "he had a horse nearly finished when I saw him; he was just nailing on his back feet."—Onward.

Junior was in the habit of coming to the table with a dirty face and of course, had to be sent away to wash.

One time his mother, nearly losing patience, said: "Junior, why do you persist in coming to the table without washing? You know I always send you away."

"Well", said Junior, meekly, "once you forgot."—Chicago Tribune

Agatha, aged eight, had been very strictly brought up and had been taught that a lie was unpardonable—even a white lie. One day while she was visiting her cousin in the country the two children while crossing a field saw a cow they were afraid to pass. Finally her cousin said, "Let's go on, Agatha, and pretend that we're not afraid of it."

But Agatha's conscience was not slumbering. "Woun'dn't that be deceiving the cow?" she objected.—Boston Transcript.

Reason Triumphs Over Right

"Why do you turn out for every road hog that comes along?" said the missus rather crossly. "The right of way is ours, isn't it?"

"Oh, undoubtedly!" answered he calmly. "As for our turning out, the reason is plainly suggested in this epitaph which appeared in a newspaper recently:

"Here lies the body of William Jay. Who died maintaining his right of way;

He was right, dead right, as he sped along,

But he's just as dead as if he'd been wrong."—Boston Transcript.

“Lamp Of My Feet = = = ”

THE EDITOR

WHEN men are prosperous they are likely to forget God. The days of adversity are the times when more hearts cry out for Divine guidance and sing with an understanding Taylor's "Lamp of My Feet, Thy Guidance Lend." Just human nature, it seems, for man to forget God in times of plenty. Nations that forget God perish with their forgetting. Individuals, too, forget Him and likewise perish. "The wicked shall be turned into hell; and all the nations that forget God."—Psalms 9:17. "For the Lord knoweth the way of the righteous: but the way of the ungodly shall perish."—Psalms 1:6.

In these days of material changes—these days when men find it difficult to anchor, may we place our hope in Him and let His teachings be a lamp unto our feet.

“Lamp of my feet, thy guidance lend,
Walk by my side, my path attend;
Led by thy hand I cannot stray,
Lamp of my feet, my Life, my Way.”

ELON LETTER

 HIS letter is not for preachers. I hope none of them will read it. I want a private word with my lay brethren and sisters about a very important matter—how to improve the preaching ability of our pastors.

And let me begin by saying that we have the best preachers in the world in this Christian Church of ours. They are faithful in the discharge of their duties. They manage to survive on the salaries we pay them and the poundings we give them. I hope we also pray for our pastor. He deserves our prayers as much as we need his. If you will just pray for the preacher at each service, it will surprise you how much better he will preach. I have tested that out and find it works. And somehow when I have had the grace to do that, I have been unable to understand how the one sitting next to me in the service failed to regard the sermon as excellent. Praying for the preacher is great blessing—to the preacher maybe, but to the pray-er most certainly.

But I had another thought in mind than this when I began to formulate this letter. We laymen expect our preachers always to present to us something fresh and vigorous in their discourses. What I am saying is no discount of the gospel message. That message is safe and saving, but it needs new interpretations and adaptations. If you do not think so try to read the sermons of Austin Craig or of Phillips Brooks. Publishers will tell you that books of sermons are the poorest sellers they publish. A sermon is a living thing and it is, unless perfect, momentary in its perfection, being adapted exactly to the situation of its delivery, but never so fully in accord with any other situation. So that a sermon is out of date as soon as it is delivered. I once heard Dr. Staley tell about burning a barrell of his former sermons, and "they made a great fire", he said, "because they were so dry." But I ventured that many of them were moist with the tears of sympathy and tender emotion when they were at first delivered.

But how can we expect our ministers to be able to present the gospel message in terms of the heart-hunger and soul-throb of our day? We should first discuss with them the questions of the times. The gospel has a message for every phase of our human endeavor and for every institution of our life. Let us discuss these matters with our pastor. He will undoubtedly reflect the results of his discussion in his public message to the people. This will require us to do some pastoral visiting. Well, why shouldn't we? We are as much under obligation to visit the preacher as he is to visit us, honestly, aren't we?

Secondly, we should make it possible without any suggestions on the part of our pastor for him to attend one or two gatherings of Christian workers each year, with all his expenses paid. We should certainly see to it that he attends our Seaside Chautauqua and then that he goes to at least one such gathering a year as the International Sunday School Convention, the World's Christian Endeavor Convention, the Federal Council of Churches, and the like. It is poor business for a church to vote its minister a month's vacation and for him to spend that month in preaching somewhere else.

And then there is a third thing we certainly can and ought to do. This is a day of great religious thought. Religious books are literally pouring from our presses. But our preachers, generally speaking, are not reading them, because they are unable to buy them. I think that twelve persons in every rural church should voluntarily bind themselves together to give their pastor a book a month, and in a city church fifty-two such persons should so unite. It would be a benevolent conspiracy, and it would promote the Kingdom of God. A book a year given to our preacher would not impoverish us, and a united effort on the part of the city to do this thing would immeasurably enrich the preacher. I have not asked him about it, but I am sure Brother Riddle will publish a list of books for rural church pastors and another for city church pastors and that he will mail the book you may monthly or weekly select directly to your pastor. If you want good preaching, practical, reverent, modern in spirit and concept, interpreting the gospel to the age, that will grip and hold the people, and I know you do, Brother Layman, Sister Laywoman, try this plan. It will work, it has worked.

Now don't think you have to do what I have suggested, beloved, for I am sure no preacher has read this. If you love your preacher—well—

W. A. HARPER.

SUFFOLK LETTER

 HE cause of temperance is more than a question of legalized saloons and intoxicants. It embraces all forms of human indulgence, and man may be intoxicated with business or pleasure, what they eat or what they wear. Intoxicate really means to poison. To say that a man is intoxicated is to say that he is poisoned; yet men are not accustomed to think of intoxication as poison. All forms of excess poison the body or the mind. One of the most difficult things to do is to live a real temperate life; yet nothing is so sane, so healthful, so righteous. Indulgences that lead to excesses poison the whole being and lead to self-destruction. Gluttony, licentiousness, avarice, ambition, temper, fanaticism, may lead to excess and poison the whole being and unfit the subject for sane and righteous living.

There is an awakened conscience on the one thing of the legalized saloon and intoxicating liquors as a beverage; that is a great step forward and the results in savings accounts, in general prosperity, in improved domestic relations, in education, in good roads, in Sunday school attendance by men, in public watchfulness over offenders, indicate a strong healthy sentiment in favor of maintaining the law. Much is made of illicit distilleries, bootlegging, and violation of law; but a sober population, in cities and on trains contradict the widespread propaganda of "as much made and used as ever was". If such were the case, those who make and sell would prefer present conditions, because prices are so much higher. The prohibition law is not violated more than the law against theft, usury, gambling, profiteering, Sabbath-breaking, or any other crime. To make, buy, or sell, for beverage purposes is a violation of law, and those who indulge in any of these violations are criminals. The man who buys and drinks is as guilty as the man who manufactures and sells; and, when they are treated like, it will change the operation of the violating machine. It is a fact that no amendment to the Constitution of the United States has ever been repealed. The 18th Amendment is in the Constitution to abide. The business will never be a legal business again. It will remain, so far as it does remain, forever, in this country, in the hands of law-breakers. It has lost its legal status and its respectability. Its poison will never again be a gentleman's means of social indulgence. It has lost its prestige and its place in our American society. It is an outlaw. It is a criminal. It is a lost art. The health of society will grow more robust, the intelligence of society will grow more universal, the character of society will grow more Christian, and future generations will rise up and approve what to some seems radical action, even robbing men of personal rights. It never had any inherent right; it had only rights conferred by legislation. The government has done nothing more than withdrew rights which it had conferred. I go into a small town and they raise pigs within the corporate limits; I go into a larger town, and that privilege is denied. Society rises up and pulls down. It looks to the welfare of all; but the great moral issues are even more regarded and individual appetite and notions must yield to common good. Individual rights lose themselves in the rights of the community, the state, and the nation. The progress of Christian civilization will make many changes in the course of years. Streams that are now polluted will be cleansed, indulgences that are now allowed will be prohibited, and future generations will live in a cleaner and a purer world.

W. W. STALEY.

OUR VIRGINIA LETTER

HERE was a time, even in his best days, when he could not get what he wanted. As we know he was a great orator, but there was a limit to his ability to do certain things which are understood to come in the line of his work. One day he was looking over a horse. Finally he said to the owner: "That is a fine looking animal. Is he as good as he looks?" The owner replied, "Mr. Beecher, that horse will work in any place you put him, and do all that any horse can do." Then Mr. Beecher eyed the horse more closely and admiringly, said: "I wish to goodness that he was a member of our church." He needed, you see, members who would, like the horse, work in any place you might put them, and then do all that any other member could do. Mr. Beecher could not reach his goal in that case, and all his eloquence and ability could not bring to pass what he desired. If he had been duly impressed with the fact that the power of the Holy Spirit could have accomplished all that through his members, then he might have reached the desire of his heart.

True religion, that which has been imparted to the human heart by the Holy Spirit, will make a man fill any place in the Church to the full of his capacity. I do not say, and do not wish to be understood as saying, that every church member will be so influenced, not by any means, but I do wish to be understood as saying that the man or woman who has been truly and genuinely born of the Spirit and lives that life in fact, will then fill his place in the church according to his ability. You know, and have no doubt seen, many instances where men and women of good natural ability have united with the church, but remained in the state of mind and heart, such as they had before joining the church, and you could not get them to fill a place commensurate with their ability any more than they did before. In such a case, please do not ask me to believe that such an instance shows how a man may be a true Christian and yet be unconcerned about the work of the Lord Jesus Christ. You may as well ask me to believe that the true life of Christ can be in a human heart and yet leave that heart and mind to be indifferent to the interests which so decidedly affect the cause of Christ. The life of Christ is a mighty power. Would you ask me to believe that a man can be filled with the power of the life of Christ, and yet would mope around, doing nothing for the glory of the one who had spent his life in saving him? I cannot, and will not believe it. The life of the Christ, put into the heart and mind of a man or a woman, must necessarily give the person so possessing it, not only a likeness to the Spirit of Christ, but it will lead him to sacrifice his time and his means for the Master's cause. I am sorry that we have in the church so many people who seem to show the same tendencies and characteristics after joining the church as they did before. This is why so many people are much disappointed in people who, though they have joined the church, have had no real change of heart. You need not expect a church member who has had no change of heart to show a life much different from the life he lived before he united with the church. Uniting with the church, without a change of heart, is the poorest business one can undertake. I know some people say, "Oh, let them join the church and get them to be Christians afterward." That is poor teaching, according to the Gospel, as I understand it. How many have you known to join the church without a change of heart that became active, earnest and devoted Christians afterward? I think there may be a few such instances, but they are few indeed, and I think it is a great risk for any one to undertake it. Jesus bade His disciples to tarry at Jerusalem until they were indued with power from on high. (See Luke 24:48.) He did not command them to go to work without the power of the New Life in them. He said to the disciples: "Tarry". Wait. "in the city of Jerusalem till ye be indued with the power from on high." If the disciples needed thus to tarry till they had received power from on high, then surely the men and women of this day also need to wait for the same power, and it is worse than a mistake to attempt to do the Lord's work till we have that power. A mere profession of religion without its possession is, and must be, an utter failure, not only for the church, but also for the individual. Paul tells us of certain people in his day who ever seemed to be learning, but yet never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. I may be mistaken, but my best judgment would say that he had in mind the people who had come into the church without having been born of the Spirit, the man or the woman who had united with the church, as a form, but had never known the power of the Holy Spirit. I wish we might have one earnest and honest effort to get men converted and regenerated by the power of God's Spirit before they come into the church of Christ. Some brethren claim that this standard is too high. Well maybe so, but if this is too high, I am equally sure that the standard which encourages the people to come into the church, without a real change of heart, is too low, fearfully too low. Let us quit hurrying people into the Church of the Living God without having experienced the regenerating power of the Spirit. Alas, when shall we learn something as to this matter, or shall we go on filling the church roll with the names of persons who have never known Jesus in the work of pardoning love, or in the regenerating grace of God. Without power from on high in the saving of men and women, we are simply leading men and women to have a form of Godliness, but without its power. No such arrangement can ever bring forth a Child of God who possesses the real life and power of the Spirit of God. (See II Tim. 3:5.) If the church is ever to have power from on high, then we must have the church which is made up of men and women who have been born of the Spirit—for they and they only—can become the children of God. Let us awake and get busy in an effort to bring men and women to a saving power of the redemption which Christ gives—then the Christian life will mean something. Which is better to have the standard of Christian living in its right place, or have it too low, as is manifestly true in many instances in the way of the worldly church? Read carefully II Tim. 3:1-7.

May God help us to maintain the Bible standard of the Christian life.

Strike? Some better method must be found. It is a conspiracy and should be illegal as well as immoral. Civilization cannot permit a continuation of such conditions.

PREACHER BROKE UP A DANCE AND BECAME PRESIDENT

Told by Jim Riddick in The Uplift, Concord, N. C.

(Being a story of the Editor's predecessor, Dr. J. O. Atkinson.)

If time did not fly by so fast I could tell the exact year. It may have been 1911, or 1912, or before or after these dates, but it certainly did happen in Hendersonville that Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., presiding at a meeting of the North Carolina Press Association in the absence of the president, broke up a dance without intending to do so—it was spontaneous under the influence of the program of the evening.

I was there for a few days hanging around Hendersonville, watching how some rich folks act, some make believe rich folks and just folks act when they get away from home. It's a sight! Daughters of liverymen and sons of blacksmiths mix and mingle with the daughters and sons of millionaires until it becomes a conglomerated mass, and one is led to believe that everybody is rich and has no poor kin—you feel like the only Lazarus on earth.

But to my story, which was brought back to memory by a recent meeting with that genial fellow, whom everybody likes or ought to, Dr. Atkinson, a strong, able minister of the Christian denomination, whose roosting place is at Elon College—I say roosting advisedly, because the Doctor is seldom at home. He is here and there throughout the State and in part of Virginia looking after the missionary cause of his Church. Fine man, this Dr. Atkinson. Let him walk into the train door anywhere passing through central North Carolina and at once a dozen or more people look up, feel better at once and ready for his kindly word. Some years ago, from overwork and a severe nervous strain, his friends were caused much alarm over the health of the Doctor. He knocked off for six months, settled himself in and about Asheville, and did nothing but eat, sleep and resign himself to the care and mercy of his Lord. He is himself again. And this be glad news to a wide and ever widening circle of admirers and friends.

One of the few times (during the little less than a half-century term of office of Secretary of the Press Association, John B. Sherrill, who had the fight of his life to get the Association to take the burden off his shoulders) when things seemed to go awry, Mr. Sherrill found the president called away, and the announced speakers failed to show up. Mr. Sherrill pressed Rev. Dr. Durham into service and asked Mr. Cook, of the Jackson Training School, to tell the boys about the institution. Dr. Durham had just finished a short experience as a special writer on The Charlotte Observer but being annoyed by the call for copy when he wanted to read or simply rejoice in an undisturbed line of thinking, quit the "special writing" job in disgust. Just at that time there were some marked differences among the factions that have always existed in the dominant party of the State. In one of the most splendid oratorical efforts ever pulled off in a Press Association was the speaking of Dr. Durham that night.

Mr. Cook followed with a story of how boys were being reclaimed at the Jackson Training School, what the struggle had meant and the task yet confronting the institution. The newspaper boys have always been deeply interested in the cause of the so-called bad boys, knowing full well it is more often a case of bad fathers or mothers or both, or none. He had the sympathetic following of the large audience; and concluding, the presiding officer, this man Atkinson, forgetting where he was and what he was presiding over and from force of habit, jumped up, spread out his long arms, looked the great audience in the face and ordered: "Let us all join in singing the doxology—long metre." It was done. Dr. Durham accused Cook of slipping the switch on Dr. Atkinson; but not so, for Atkinson was just following the bent of his mind and his soul.

Secretary Sherrill even went away feeling that he got away with a hard problem that night.

The prearranged dance by the editors' wives, sweethearts and visitors was called off in respect to a feeling in that neighborhood that that was no time for dancing or levity. But it is certain that that stunt that Dr. Atkinson pulled off, purposely, or accidentally, at the close of that meeting made him president of the North Carolina Press Association for the next year. And he made a good one, too.

A RESPONSIBILITY OF CHURCH MEMBERSHIP

The Herald of Gospel Liberty

The editor of The Methodist Protestant hits two of the biggest nails in church economy square on the head when he said, "We ought never to ask a Methodist Protestant if he wants to take his church paper, any more than we ask him if he wants to help pay his preacher. In both cases it is a simple duty that belongs to his denominational life. He ought to do both."

We well remember the time when the matter of church support, even on the part of church members, was considered to be a very personal question to be determined wholly by the individual himself. The running expenses of the church were taken care of in almost "any old way" that happened. The outstanding feature of the system was a soliciting committee who went the rounds "begging" for the "pastor's salary". Church members gave or not just as they felt like it. With most of them, the amount of their offering depended upon the whim of the moment—and upon who was to be the preacher. If they liked the preacher they liked the preacher they gave much; if they disliked him, they gave little or nothing at all. The matter of organized co-operative responsibility was not recognized at all. The fact that they had united with the church and that thereby they became ethically responsible for a reasonable share of its financial support never seemed to enter into their idea of church membership.

We know of some churches in which that sort of thing still exists. But with every church that is not gradually dying, it has become a thing of the past. More and more church members are coming to realize that there is an ethical equation in the matter of church support—and that no one can hold a very high standard of morality, to say nothing of Christianity, who partakes of the privileges of membership in a church organization without at the same time doing his full part, as God has blessed him with means, towards its financial obligations and undertakings. So clearly is the ethical and Christian import of this principle recognized today that no man who is worth while is willing to long remain the pastor of the church which is not willing to make honest effort to adjust the whole financial life of the church to this fundamental idea of the copartnership responsibility of every member.

But in the other principle quoted above, which is equally true and sound, the church has not made equal progress. In large part, the local churches are in just about the same condition with reference to the denominational paper as they used to be in matters of church finance. With church members, taken on the whole, it is still a question of individual pleasure whether or not they will subscribe for and read the church paper. They take it or not as they please—and especially as they are pleased or displeased with the work of the editor. But it is just about as impossible to carry on effective denominational work without a church publication as it is to carry on a local church without a pastor. That fact alone means that it is therefore an absolute obligation and responsibility resting upon every home of the church to contribute its support to the church paper, just as much as it is to support the pastor.

But there is another factor entirely distinct from the financial obligation. The moment any one unites with the local church anywhere the very moment, and by that very act, he becomes a member of the entire denomination everywhere. And whether he wishes it so or no, he becomes ethically and morally bound to do his share, financially and otherwise, to support the denominational enterprises of that particular church. This is an ethical and moral obligation which has not been clearly enough recognized by most church members. Now, if one it to fulfill this larger responsibility inhering in his local church membership, it is his ethical duty to make himself acquainted with these denominational enterprises and to become an intimate part of the denominational life. This intimate touch of the larger church life into which he comes, which includes not only his own denomination but the larger work of the Kingdom also, can be maintained only through the church publications. There is no other sufficient avenue of knowledge; there is no other binding link.

Given this wider and finer view of church membership and its responsibilities, and the ethical content of its relationships—one is driven to the logical and inevitable conclusion that the editor quoted above is right when he says that it is as much the duty of a member of the church to take his church paper as it is to help pay his preacher's salary.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

MORE THAN CONQUERORS

By Rev. H. E. Wheeler

Who is the Christian that does not yearn to have the faith that overcomes the world? Yes, and he may have something even better than a victorious faith; he may have Christ, who makes him more than conqueror! It is something fine to be able to resist the devil and to hold out against fierce and subtle temptation and to keep the body in subjection and to crucify the lusts of the flesh. But how much finer to have the unbroken peace of God in the heart, the perpetual victory of Christ, and to experience an infilling of the Holy Spirit which leaves no place for defeat! By the choice of right and the effort of will one may be a conqueror; by the choice of Christ and the rule of the Spirit one may be more than conqueror.

But how great is the cost of peace and power! Few are willing to pay it. It means to let Christ live his life in you just as He may choose. You no longer call Him into your life as a helper; you release yourself and all that you have to him for his indwelling sovereignty. You no longer make out a program and ask him to bless it. You submit that he shall make all plans, control all interests, care for all problems, meet all oppositions, and assume all responsibilities. It is your part to trust him, yielding everything, reserving nothing, and it is his part to undergird your heart with peace and your life with victory. But we must so trust him to live in us the life of victory that "if he should fail we would be henceforth bankrupt. He will not fail, and we will never be bankrupt."

Now we cannot be saved to the uttermost unless his salvation reach the innermost life.

"The dearest idol I have known,
Whate'er that idol be,
Help me to tear it from thy throne
And worship only thee."

The redemption of the Cross means more than getting our names in the Lamb's book of life; it means a searching of our deepest thought, a fiery trial of our faith, a scourging of our affections, a crucifixion of our soul. We may indeed know the power of his resurrection and never know the fellowship of his sufferings; but if we cannot share with him the agony of the garden, we shall never glory in the Cross, and we cannot claim to be crucified unto the world.

To many Christ is only a great teacher, a faithful friend, a gracious Savior, a willing helper who may be summoned in the hour of perplexity or need. But Christ must mean more than that. He must be both Lord and Christ; he must have undisputed place within; he must be indeed our life. "Nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Having exchanged the struggle for character for the peace and victory of Christ, how can we any longer rely on our own fitful and oft-discouraged effort? Christ not only means to give us the faith for victory; he means to sustain our trust. For Christ will meet for us the fears and trials and temptations and persecutions that wear out the soul. Trusting him, we do not even need to lift our hand when the tides seem to turn against us.

"When all around my soul gives way,
He then is all my hope and stay."

The uttermost salvation is then a matter of innermost trust. Christ is worthy of such confidence; he is pledged to honor it.

"O for a faith that will not shrink
Though pressed by every foe,
That will not tremble on the brink
Of any earthly woe!

That bears unmoved the world's dead frown,
Nor heeds its scornful smile;
That seas of trouble cannot drown,
Nor Satan's arts beguile."

And Christ offers you, poor, troubled soul, just that faith. It is yours to believe him utterly. He is willing to accept a trust that cannot be staggered by any circumstance, however forbidding; nor by any situation, however hopeless. Faith—the faith which is the gift of God—is always serene. It must suffer, but it cannot fail. The foundations may be broken up, but faith survives; the lines of hope may be erased, but faith persists. There seems no way out of the dungeon, and comfort flies away; but Christ comes, the doors of the prison fly open, the clouds are gone the sky is clear, the sea is still. When a man believes, you are wasting time in the effort to substitute anything for his hope. His faith is fixed; nothing in the universe is more fixed than his faith. It is the faith of God. You will remember that Abraham believed that in Isaac—in Isaac only—would God's promise be filled "Under utterly hopeless circumstances he hopefully believed" (Weymouth.) God might have to raise up that son from the altar of sacrifice on which the obedience was proved, but God could do that—yea, God would have to do it. "His word is the word of a gentleman of the highest honor, and there's an end to it."

Companions of the Via Dolorosa—friends of faith, friends of the living God—it is yours to believe. Whether the clouds lift or the mountains move, believe. "Be still, and know that I am God." You may have to wait long, but victory—glorious, irreversible victory—is for those who do not rest their eyes on the hills, but lift their eyes above the hills and fix them on the Lord, who made the hills and the heavens above the hills, and who has given it to us to trust in him.

One day you stood on the mount of vision and tasted the joy that you never dreamed would be yours to know; you had a revelation of love that transcended your highest hope; you knew for one brief moment the peace that passeth all understanding. Has the vision faded? No, it can never fade! Has the joy departed? No; all the sufferings of this life may seek to cancel it, but it remains. Has the hope shrunk or perished? No; it is imperishable; it is the anchor of the soul, and it holds, even though it is within the veil.

“There is a scene where spirits blend,
Where friend holds fellowship with friend;
Though sundered afar, by faith they meet
Around one common mercy seat.
Ah, whither could we flee for aid,
When tempted, desolate, dismayed;
Or how the hosts of hell defeat,
Had suffering saints no mercy seat?”

And so you may claim the victory after you are utterly defeated; you may proclaim the fact of the resurrection while you stand by the open grave; you may walk through the mountains, though they remain immovable; you may see the day of Christ and rejoice, though all things continue as they were from the beginning.

Did not Jeremiah buy the field of Anathoth from the mighty enemies of Israel when they were in possession of all her land and when real estate in Jerusalem was absolutely worthless? The faith of the prophet in God was vindicated, and he had not long to wait. So you may invest your faith in the God of Jeremiah, who will restore to you every hope which the world has crushed. Are there sorrows you cannot share even with the dearest friends? There is one who knows already and who does not condemn. You can count on his understanding sympathy—yes, and more, on his turning of your sorrow into joy. There comes a day—O, when I may not know, but it is coming—a day of full deliverance, of immeasurable joy! “Though it tarry, wait for it.” Weeping can only endure for a night. The morning cometh. There are yet no streams on the horizon, but there is a whisper of faith in the heart. There is no sound of trumpet; but where there is a listening ear, there is a consciousness of impending joy. When the morning comes and the bridegroom, there are some who will not need to be awakened.—Christian Advocate (Nashville)

WHEN LINCOLN REFUSED TO RISE

The Uplift

A capital story of Lincoln's early political life is told in John Wesley Hill's new book, “Abraham Lincoln, Man of God” (Putman.) It seems that in 1846, during a canvas for Congress, Lincoln attended a preaching service of Peter Cartwright's. Cartwright called on all desiring to go to heaven to stand up. All arose but Lincoln. Then he asked all to rise who did not want to go to hell. Lincoln still remained seated. “I am surprised”, said Cartwright, “to see Abe Lincoln sitting back there unmoved by these appeals. If Mr. Lincoln does not want to go to heaven and does not want to escape hell, perhaps he will tell us where he does want to go. Lincoln slowly arose and replied, “I am going to Congress.”

Rev. D. F. Parsons changes his address from Nashville, Tenn. to Middle Divinity Hall, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.

Rev. F. C. Lester, we understand, will leave Graham and Providence churches this fall to enter some seminary or university.

Rev. J. G. Truitt, according to mention in the Greensboro papers, preached at the First Christian church, Greensboro, N. C., last Sunday.

President W. A. Harper spoke in the First Baptist church, this city, last Sunday morning. THE SUN'S Editor is to speak at the same place and the same hour next Sunday.

We learn from The Herald of Gospel Liberty that Rev. C. J. Felton, Newport News, Va., has accepted a call to Toronto, Canada, and will begin his work there in the near future.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, about whose sickness and operation Rev. J. G. Truitt writes on page 14, is improving and doing nicely, so Mrs. Crutchfield informs us.

Brother W. M. Brown, Burlington, N. C., would like for Sunday schools of the North Carolina Conference to report three things to him: 1. What your school has done in the way of teaching missions. 2. What is being done. 3. What plans have you for the future? Brother Brown desires this information as a basis for his report on missions to the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention that meets in Reidsville, N. C., in July. Send him the information and endeavor to get it into his hands by July 12.

The Christian Vanguard, Newmarket, Ont., one of our exchanges, comes out in handsome style in its June 11 issue, the occasion being the history of the Christians in Canada, and carrying the Centennial program rendered at the Conference of the Christian Church in Ontario, Keswick, Ont., June 15-19, 1921. We note that Dr. J. O. Atkinson was on the program for one address and two sermons.

ELON'S FUTURE ENROLLMENT

THE preparatory department of Elon College having been eliminated, the future enrollment must come from high school graduates—or at least from graduates of schools giving a standard course embracing those subjects required for the necessary credit units. Thus the securing of the number who can be accommodated will not be so easily done—but it can be done. It means that every friend of the College, every pastor, alumni, professor, and former student must do his or her part during the vacation days in securing new students. It means prayer, sacrifice, and loyalty upon the part of every home in our Convention.

In recent years too many young men and women of the Christian Church have been attending other colleges when they could get the same advantages at Elon. This must stop or the denomination will greatly suffer from the effects. A college is the training station for denominational leadership, and experience proves that the Church's best leaders are trained in her own institutions.

This, then, should be our incentive to see that every boy and girl of the Christian Church within the bounds of Elon College, who go to College, go to Elon. The Church has invested her money there; the Church needs leaders, and out of her own flocks and folds these leaders must come.

No preacher, no layman, has a right to discredit the leadership of his denomination who will not endeavor to influence some young person of his denomination to attend college—a college of his Church. No preacher can rightfully pray for laborers to enter into the harvest who will not go out and help some one to prepare for that harvest. God gives faculties for helping to answer prayer just as He does to utter prayer.

Elon's future enrollment—as in years past—depends upon individual effort. All together now to see that we have a full enrollment this fall.

DECISION DAYS

THESE days—these good summer days with sunshine and rain and flowers and birds; these days when nature puts on her best robes and makes for us those sequestered spots longed for in mid-day; these days as Henry Blount would have us say, "filled with crimson splendors, silver brooklets, flowery grottoes, gorgeous sunsets, crystal streams," all inviting us to behold creation's greatness, there should come to many of our young men and women that desire to make life's decision. It may be personal to us but the fires of ambition with young people kindle greater during the summer months. The commencements are over, the literary addresses have been heard, and then come letters, catalogues, and all sorts of literature from schools and colleges. It puts the academic spirit right into your soul and you want to do something now.

There is in every church of our beloved denomination some young men, young women, or both, whose ambition for a larger service are many. They stand at the open door, or the closed door. To most of them it is the open door. To some it is closed, but thank God there is no closed door that cannot be opened with the right kind of ambition to rise.

What a privilege! What an opportunity! What a great service it is for a pastor to call his young people together to discuss these things. Possibly, better still, is that personal contact with some young heart for encouragement, counsel, and plans.

Our prayer is that God may move mightily upon many of our young people during the next few weeks that they may be able to make life's decision for a greater and nobler work—and then enter school this fall for a prosecution of that ideal and ambition.

RETURNING TO THE MINISTRY

IN recent years much has been said about the scarcity of candidates for the ministry. It seemed to be the opinion of the majority of Church leaders that the decrease was due to material conditions brought on by the war. This idea is no doubt the right one as conditions begin to point to its truthfulness. We quote from The Christian Work:

"In view of the wide publicity given the announcement, that out of one hundred students in the senior class at Amherst College only one had decided to enter the ministry, statistics from some twenty representative institutions, furnished by the Council of Church Boards of Education, are interesting. The senior classes in all of them combined averaged about one hundred students. Boston University, with the largest number of graduating students, 453, had 48 entering the ministry, or about 10 per cent. (The largest number from any single college), 14 missionaries, no Association men, and 15 social service workers, a total of 77 candidates. Ohio Wesleyan, the next in size with 239 graduating students, had 8 entering the ministry, 27 missionaries, 7 Association men and 14 social service workers, a total of 56, or the largest total number of candidates from a single college. Davidson College, North Carolina, with 62 in its senior class, came second in number of ministerial candidates with 17, and Muhlenberg (49 graduating) and Otterbein (65 graduating) next, each with 10. Radeliffe with 104 graduating had 6 social service workers only. Ursinus College, with the smallest number of graduating students, 34, had 8 ministerial candidates, or about 23 per cent. Northwestern University (not listed) reports the largest number of students preparing for Christian service, 101 men and 62 women, ever assembled in its college of liberal arts. Altogether the figures show 144 candidates for the ministry, 73 for missionary work, 14 for Association work and 68 for other forms of Christian service, making a total of 303."

Elon College graduating 31 with four entering Christian work (2 in the ministry, 1 mission service and 1 religious educational work) compares favorably with other institutions.

In this connection it is refreshing to consider the program of God. Material things affect the program of God only temporarily—and possibly not that much from His view point. The ministry will never be forsaken. As we are returning to "normalcy" in other things, so are we in securing recruits for Christian work.

KEEPING CHILDREN IN SCHOOL

EVERY State now has a compulsory day school attendance law, according to information recently furnished by the U. S. Department of Labor through the Children's Bureau. The Bureau has just completed an analysis of education laws affecting child labor, the results of which are published in a chart entitled "State Compulsory School Standards Affecting the Employment of Minors."

In five States attendance is required until 18 years of age, in two of these in certain districts only; in 3 until 17 and in 32 until 16. One State requires attendance until 15, six others and the District of Columbia until 14, and one State requires attendance until the age of 12 years, but applies this to illiterates only.

Unfortunately, the exemptions in the majority of States are so numerous that they greatly limit the application of the law. The most common exemptions are for employment, or upon completion of a specified school grade. Four States specifically exempt for work in agricultural pursuits, 3 with no age provision. The laws of 14 other States contain loosely worded provisions exempting a child at any age, which might be used to cover absence for farm work as well as for many other purposes. Several States exempt a child whose services are necessary for the support of himself or others, without any age or educational provision.

The amount of attendance required is still unsatisfactory in many States, several demanding only 12, 16, or 20 weeks in a year. Even in States where city children must attend for 8 or 9 months, the amount of attendance required in rural districts is sometimes considerably less.

HAVE YOU TAKEN TYPHOID TREATMENT

There were 128 cases of typhoid fever reported to the North Carolina State Board of Health for the month of May from 57 counties in the State. Rockingham is charged up with the largest number—seven, and is followed closely by Wayne, Lenoir and Johnston with six each. Durham led the cities with six, Winston-Salem had three, Wilmington two, Charlotte and Raleigh, one each.

A study shows that typhoid has not been epidemic anywhere, as there is an average of only two cases from counties where the disease exists. However, the Board of Health points out to the people that many cases may result from these few through contact with them, and through contamination of food, water and milk by flies or human carriers. For this reason, if it has been over two years since you took the treatment preventing typhoid, do the wise thing and repeat it now. During the coming months free protection against typhoid will be offered in half the counties of the State. If yours is not one of them, it should be and it is no fault of the State Board of Health that it is not.

THE CHAUTAUQUA AGAIN

The Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods is now a fixed institution of the denomination. It has passed through its infant days and now deserves full recognition and loyal support upon the part of our people. The date this year is July 18-24 and the Committee sends this as its first message in circular form: "Make this your vacation week. Spend it where ocean breezes blow. Splendid program. Lectures every day and evening by men and women of national reputation. See that the Sunday school and Young People's Society of your church is represented. Send your pastor."

Rev. C. H. Rowland, D. D., Franklin, Va., is President of the Chautauqua and Mr. S. M. Smith, Norfolk, Va., is the faithful, efficient, and wide-awake General Secretary. For detailed information address Brother Smith who will reply promptly.

CONDITIONS IN PRINTING INDUSTRY BETTER

The country-wide strike on May 1 in the printing industry is about over, or at least conditions are more favorable for the employing printers. In some instances the 44-hour week has been granted, but not generally. Most union plants have declared for open shop and have filled the vacated positions with non-union men. Exchanges coming to this office have told the story of the disruption. Many have been late, many failed to appear on regular dates, some merged two issues into one, and so on. Our nearest neighbor to be affected is the Biblical Recorder, Raleigh, N. C. which has missed some issues and is yet in bad style, typographically speaking. Again THE SUN has reasons for rejoicing for not being affected by the tie-up.

Miss Kate Swineford of Drewery's Bluff, Va., is the originator of Father's Day. She has secured a charter from the State and hopes to make it as well known as Mother's Day. It is to be celebrated on the second Sunday in June.

WORLD HAPPENINGS

Five hundred machine guns were seized by custom officials on June 15, at Hoboken, N. Y. These guns were on board the steamer Eastside and were loaded for an Irish port.

Captain S. B. Alexander, Sr., died at his home in Charlotte, N. C., June 15. Captain Alexander was a former Congressman and a distinguished citizen of Charlotte. The city, state and nation loses a good citizen.

After one of the keenest competitions that the State has ever witnessed, T. C. Thompson and Company of Charlotte, N. C., have been awarded the contract for $1,100,000 worth of construction at the University of North Carolina. The contract was awarded June 15 and it is understood that plans and actual construction are to begin at once. The work is expected to be finished within two years.

According to reports from Washington, June 15, direct negotiations have begun between the United States and Japan for the settling of questions pending between them. These questions include the Island of Yap, the immigration question, the alien land question and the return of Shantung to China. The proposal for the settlement of the immigration question is that it be settled on the basis of a complete stoppage of all Japanese coolie immigration, with proper protection of all Japanese property already acquired in the United States.

K. OF P. CONVENTION

Wilmington, N. C., was awarded the honor of entertaining the Pythian grand lodge in June 1922, at the close of the convention in Greensboro, N. C., Thursday, June 16. The convention of this year began on Tuesday and lasted up to 4:30 P. M. on Thursday. A great convention is reported, much business was transacted and honorary membership was conferred upon Supreme Vice Chancellor, G. C. Cabel, of Norfolk, Va., in the North Carolina grand lodge.

AMERICA—WORLD POLITICS

According to the late newspapers, Washington is the center of the universe as far as world politics and world peace are concerned. The British Government particularly is watching every move in the American capital. The British government especially studies the relations between President Harding and the Senate. It is claimed that Great Britain watches with unusual interest not unmixed with anxiety. The real issue is shall Great Britain join with America in an English speaking agreement to maintain world peace and cut off the ties of alliance and of ententes with France and Japan, or shall Great Britain continue alliances with her old associates. Our government is divided and powerful interests outside the government are lining up on both sides in their efforts to bring a favorable decision by the Cabinet to their diverse policies.

PRESIDENT APPRECIATES ROMANCE

The individual admires the appreciation of romance wherever found. The romantic side in the make-up of President Harding was discovered last Tuesday, June 14, 1921, when it was learned that the President obligingly postponed the appointment of a new ambassador to Spain in order to assist the completion of an international romance.

The younger daughter of Joseph E. Willard, present ambassador to Spain, was engaged to be married to Mervyn Herbert, a Britisher, the son of the late Earl and Dowager Countess of Carnovan. The wedding had been set for early June and the young lady had set her heart on being married in the embassy. Although the appointment of Mr. Cyrus E. Woods, secretary of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania, was decided upon some weeks ago, the president sent word to Miss Willard that her plans would not be interfered with by his administration.

ANSWERED THE SUMMONS

Rev. J. B. Gambrell, one of the leading spirits of the Baptist denomination passed away in his 79th year at Dallas, Texas, on June 10.

Mr. Jasper T. Moser, who was for a long time connected with the news and editorial work of the Federal Council of Churches in the New York office, and who was sent to Mexico some months ago to carry on the same work, passed away June 8. His death was caused by a complication arising from an operation for appendicitis.

HOW TO CREATE MISSIONARY INTEREST

By Rev. S. S. Hough, D. D., Dayton, Ohio

HE enlarged programs projected by the various denominations cannot be completed, and the interest sustained and enlarged, unless there be an unparalleled missionary information and inspirational campaign in the local churches.

No matter what method we use in cultivating the home church, whether through a combined Forward Movement or by having each Board proceed separately or in groups, we must get into the hearts and lives of our church members. three things:

FIRST. We must give them the vision of the living Christ and His program for the Church. Some years ago I asked different groups of leaders, "How many of your church members believe and act upon the belief that Christ is now alive and directing His work of evangelizing the world?"

Some answered 25 per cent, others 10 per cent, or 5 per cent. This gives some idea of the vast uncultivated field in the home churches which must claim our serious attention. Multitudes of professing Christians have not yet discovered the living, conquering Christ who said,

"Behold I am alive forevermore."

"All authority hath been given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye."

"Ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem and in all Judæa and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

Missions did not originate with men. Christ Himself is the authority for the program to evangelize the world. He is now alive and is directing this greatest enterprise in the world. The rank and file of the church members must be led into partnership with the living Christ, appropriate His resources and carry out, as loyal servants, His program.

SECOND. We must lead the members of the Church to see the condition and needs of the Christless millions now without the Gospel. Half the world's population cannot read or write, and have no medical aid. Their claims must be brought, in a graphic, sympathetic, living way, to the members of our churches and Sunday schools. They must be led to see the multitudes in Africa, China and in the islands of the sea as Christ Himself sees them, torn and prostrate in the hands of an enemy. The Christian leaders must discover a more comprehensive, thorough-going method of informing and enlisting the whole church membership—this for the sake of the Church itself as well as to reach every creature with the Gospel in this generation.

THIRD. The members of our churches must be shown the wonderful possibilities of an informed, obedient church and be led to practice the stewardship of the Gospel. The obligation to give the Gospel to others is as universal as the privilege of receiving it. The great commission is in reality the great permission.

Church leaders must be led to see that the surest way to develop a local church is to enlist its members to do their utmost to carry out Christ's program. Dr. Samuel Miller, who did so much to put the missionary atmosphere into Princeton University, well said: "If I were asked how a church would be most likely to rise and grow, I would say with confidence, let it begin in good earnest to pray and exert itself for the sending of the Gospel to the benighted and perishing, and the very effort will tend to enlarge and build it up."

Pastors everywhere should be led to discover what Dr. Andrew Fuller found out many years ago: "There was a period of my ministry," says Doctor Fuller "marked by the most systematic effort to comfort my serious people; but the more I tried to comfort them the more they complained of doubts and darkness. I knew not what to do. At this time it pleased God to direct my attention to the claims of the perishing heathen. I felt that we had been living for ourselves and not caring for their souls. I spoke as I felt. My serious people wondered and wept. They began to talk about a mission. We met and prayed for the heathen; met to consider what could be done among ourselves for them; met and did what we could; and whilst all of this was going on, the lamentations ceased, and instead of having to study how to comfort my flock, I was myself comforted by them. They were drawn out of themselves—that was the real secret. God blessed them while they tried to be a blessing."

The church at Antioch illustrates the possibilities of an informed, obedient church. They fasted and prayed and the Holy Ghost separated Paul and Barnabas, their leading workers, for missionary tasks. After the remarkable experiences of their first missionary journey, they returned to their home church and rehearsed "all things that God had done with them, and how that He had opened the door of faith unto the Gentiles." This Antioch church became one of the greatest churches of the centuries. When Chrysostom was its pastor three hundred years after the days of Paul and Barnabas, Antioch had a population of two hundred thousand, and one-half of its entire population were members of the Church. Thus the church at Antioch was a mighty evangelistic force in its own city, while it sent its strongest men to be missionaries to distant parts.

I repeat, we must reach the entire membership of our churches with the threefold vision: The vision of the living Christ and His program for the Church; the vision of the Christless millions without the Gospel; and the vision of the privilege and responsibility of every Christian to give the Gospel to every creature.—The Missionary Review of the World.

A poor man of good repute and character will make a better credit risk than a dishonest, squirming, wiggling man with resources behind him.

OUR MOUNTAIN SCHOOL

Miss Iola Hedgepeth, as our teacher, has had a most successful year in her work as the founder of our Christian Training School in Carroll County, Virginia. She had to teach in an abandoned store house, quite dilapidated and inadequate, but she enrolled during the term eighty-two pupils in the day school, and had about that number in her Sunday school. The people of the whole district, and there are four hundred of them, hold Miss Hedgepeth in the highest esteem and regard her as their benefactress. She has already proven herself a source of helpfulness and inspiration to them and they both appreciate her services and respond to her leadership.

By appointment of the Executive Committee of the Mission Board, Miss Bessie Holt, Supt. Young People's Work; Pres. W. W. Staley of the Southern Convention and the writer went to Carroll County, Virginia May 26 and accompanied by Mr. W. E. Lindsay of Mt. Airy, N. C., secured a site of about eighteen acres on which to locate our school and begin our permanent work of building a home for teachers, a school house and in time such other buildings as may be necessary.

Miss Hedgepeth had invited the people of her district to assemble on May 26 and gave them quite a little picnic. There were some 250 present and all seemed to enjoy the occasion. Dr. Staley made an address to the joy of all present and the writer tried to explain to the people what we were trying to do in their midst. They are most happy to have a Christian school located in their midst, for there is neither school nor church in the whole district.

This summer, Miss Laura A. Clemmer and Miss Gladys Lankford have joined Miss Hedgepeth in the work, and are conducting a school some miles from where Miss Hedgepeth taught. They are doing good work and the people are responding to their work.

We are hoping by September 15, to have comfortable and ample school house for Miss Hedgepeth to teach in next year, and to send her some assistance in her great work next year. She could enroll 125 pupils had she the room and the help. When she began her work none of her pupils had ever been to Sunday school and very few if any could read or write. All were without church privileges. This is a real missionary work.

OUR ORPHANAGE

HARVEST TIME

At this writing (June 15) harvest on the Orphanage farm is in full blast. The early warm weather and the late cold weather and frost have practically ruined our wheat and we will make a short crop this year.

Last year we did not lack much making enough to bread our family but will fall far short this year. We feel that we did our part and will be thankful for whatever yield we may have.

The weather has been very dry with us for two months and all our crops are being cut off. We have never seen a year that we did not have a time to plant and a time to reap.

The children, or a number of them, are beginning to take their summer vacations. We try to give each child ten days each summer and last year each child got a vacation. Sometimes when it is too expensive to send them to their people we get some friend to take them for ten days so they will feel that they have been treated fair in the matter.

We are ready to put the furniture in the new building and want to open it in a few weeks. A number have already sent in money to buy beds, etc., and we are hoping that the good women will furnish this building as we want them to have this part. One bed, spring, and mattress will cost $25.00. If every Ladies Aid Society would just furnish one bed (and they could) we would soon have the rooms all filled with nice clean new beds. Then the sheets and counterpanes can be added. Let the president of the different Ladies Aid Societies take this up with the Society and see if you cannot furnish at least one bed in this new building.

I can always count on the good women. They are always loyal. The men are mighty good, too.

A LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley: We did not write last month so we will take a new start. The Willing Workers Society will meet with us next Sunday afternoon. Wish you and your little folks could be with us and see what we are doing.

I am taking music twice a week, and I like it just fine. Mrs. G. W. Macon is my teacher. I had rather go to school than wash dishes and sweep, but I tell you I have to do it. Enclosed you will find our dues for May and June. With love and good wishes to all.—Virginia Pearl and W. T. Ayscue.

I had to wash dishes and sweep when I was a little boy, and I dropped a whole pile of dishes one day and broke them. Mother taught me not to drop any more. I was a nice little housekeeper when I was a little boy.—“Uncle Charley”.

“Tell Me a Story”

BOY COON'S BOX

Boy Coon ran home all out of breath. He hurried first into the nest room to find his mother, but Mrs. Coon was probably out calling on Mrs. O'possum, for Boy Coon couldn't find her. So he ran out of the nest room to find his father. And looking into the top of the big hickory tree, he saw Mr. Coon sunning himself on a large branch.

Boy Coon shouted: “O, dad, come help me bring home my pretty box. I've found just the thing to put my hickory marbles in.”

Daddy Coon leisurely ambled down the long branch on which he was resting to the tree trunk, so leisurely that Boy's excitement became greater. “Do hurry, daddy, before the O'possum boys see it!”

“Why didn't you bring it up with you?” asked Mr. Coon, now standing near Boy at the door of the nest room.

“It was too slick and heavy, daddy. The neatest box, though, you ever saw! Only we'd have to cut a hole in it, because the lid's on so tight. I couldn't raise it at all.”

Mr. Coon looked a bit puzzled. “I wonder what kind of box it could be, Rac?” he said, using a pet name for Boy. “I can't imagine what sort of box could be in the big wood.”

“It's a beautiful box! But come on, daddy, or somebody will get it before we get there.”

So Mr. Coon followed the path of his son, as he led him down the big tree and through the wood to the place where he had seen the box. But when Boy and Daddy Coon had come to the place, the wonderful box was not to be seen.

“There! I knew the Opossums would get that box. That's just my luck.”

“Don't be impatient, Rac. Look about a bit. It may be that you didn't come to exactly the right place. You mustn't give up so soon.”

Boy then looked more carefully; and a short distance away under a small bush, he saw the box. “Here it is, daddy,” he cried as he rolled it out from under the bush.

When Daddy Coon saw it, he rolled over and over on the ground in convulsions of laughter. After he spent a few moments at this, he was at length able to get to his hind feet, using his front feet to hold his sides, which were fairly bursting with glee.

“What's the matter, daddy?” asked Boy Coon, just a bit hurt because he knew his father was laughing at him.

“That's not a box, Boy,” said his father, still laughing.

“Not a box?” exclaimed Boy Coon. “What on earth is it, then?”

“That's Mr. Box Turtle!” And Mr. Coon again shook with laughter.

When Boy Coon received this information he took a step backward from the pretty, shining thing upon the ground as if afraid. But he had courage enough to say, “I wish you'd explain yourself, daddy.”

Daddy Coon's face sobered, because even he knew that a joke could be carried too far. He saw, too, that Boy's mistake was only natural; for Mr. Box Turtle did look like a box with a round top on it about the size of a saucer.

“You see, Boy, when any one comes near Mr. Turtle he is afraid he is going to be hurt. He isn't very sociable, and he has a good many enemies. So whenever anybody comes near him, he takes his head, his legs, and his tail and puts them inside the box which he carries with him.”

“Well!” exclaimed Boy Coon. “So he thought I was going to hurt him? But can't we make him open his box? I'd like to meet Mr. Box Turtle!”

“I'm afraid we'd have trouble in persuading him that we don't want to harm him,” explained Daddy Coon. “But if we hide and watch him,” he added in a whisper, “he may stick his head out.”

Then both of them slipped behind a large tree from which they could peep and see Mr. Box Turtle. It wasn't three minutes until they saw his head slide out ever so little from his box. In another minute they saw all of his head and his four feet appear as if by magic.

“Well, just look at that!” whispered Boy Coon.

Mr. Box Turtle then turned and took a few steps, while Boy Coon and Mr. Coon looked on.

“It must take him a long time to get to any place; he walks so slowly,” said Boy.

“Yes. But he does get along after a fashion. You see, he moved so far from the place where you first saw him that you had trouble in locating him,” replied Daddy Coon.

“Just think how foolish I was to think him a box. Don't tell anybody the joke, will you, daddy?”

“No, Rac, I won't. I wonder if Mother Coon has any supper for us. She ought to be back from Mrs. Opossum's house by this time.—Arthur Dunn, in The Presbyterian.”

CHURCH NEWS

PALM STREET

It has been my privilege to assist Rev. G. C. Crutchfield in a revival meeting at Palm Street Christian church, Greensboro, N. C., for the past ten days. Bro. Crutchfield came a week before I did and held a series of prayer meetings in the homes of the people in which meetings there were several professions of Christ. The preaching began on Sunday, June 5, and continued with two sermons daily through the second Sunday and a closing sermon Monday night.

The meeting was scheduled for fifteen days instead of ten, but was closed on account of Bro. Crutchfield's illness, he having suffered with appendicitis during almost the entire meeting, going to bed Saturday, June 11, and being operated upon by Dr. J. W. Long the day following. When he finally decided to have a physician examine him he was in the hospitable home of Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Ballard who did all they could for his comfort and well-being. Scores of loved ones and friends came to the Ballard home to inquire after him, and the church and Sunday school voted very enthusiastically to pay the expenses entailed upon him by the operation. Bro. Crutchfield is reported to have stood the operation all right.

There were professions of Christ every day after the first Sunday and most of them were young people of mature years. Ten were added to the church. At times during the meeting the power of God was most keenly felt by all present. May God bless this good, generous, Christian people and their beloved pastor and his wife and little daughter in these days of his affliction.

NEW PASTOR INSTALLED

Rev. W. C. Hook, the new pastor of the Rosemont-Berea pastorate, arrived on the field Sunday morning, June 5 and on the afternoon of the same day was duly installed as pastor of his new field in the Berea church in the presence of a large number of people.

The writer presided at the installation service, and conducted the installation ceremony. The installation sermon was preached by Rev. James H. Lightbourne, pastor of Memorial Christian Temple. The sermon was well prepared, attractively delivered, and most gladly received by the large and attentive audience which had gathered for the occasion.

By a rising vote the audience said to Bro. Hook, "We welcome you," and in response Bro. Hook in well chosen words told the audience how much he appreciated the welcome, and how anxious he was to be of the greatest service possible to them while he remained on the field.

Bro. Hook conducted his first service at Rosemont on the evening of June 5, and was greeted by a large audience, every seat being taken at this service. At the mid-week service the new pastor was greeted at Rosemont by about 125 people—an attendance which was gratifying to him and to the Rosemont church as well.

Both the Rosemont and the Berea people are delighted with their new pastor, and feel they have been fortunate in securing him as their leader. In fact one of the members in speaking for the churches told me they had in Bro. Hook one of the best ministers our Church has, and that Mrs. Hook had also made a fine impression, and had heartily entered into the work.

So we feel sure that the fine work begun in these churches by the former pastor, Dr. G. O. Lankford, will be continued under the splendid leadership of the new pastor, and our very best wishes are hereby extended to him and his people as they go forward together in the Master's work.

UNION (ALAMANCE)

We had unusually good services at Union on the second Sunday in June. The attendance was large at both morning and evening services. Chairs were used to help seat the audience. The primary class room overflowed at Sunday school. The music at all the services was good. The morning service was the regular preaching appointment. At the evening service a Children's Day program was rendered. It was one of the best Children's Day Program that I have seen. The decorations were beautiful and every one taking part did well. It was pronounced a great success. A Young People's Missionary Society and a society of Willing Workers have recently been organized. The Young People's Society met that afternoon. In all it was quite a full and joyous day.

P. H. FLEMING.

BURLINGTON, N. C.

The pastor of the Burlington church and his family have been on the field here for two and a half months now, and it may seem a little late to speak of the welcome that was accorded us on our arrival, but that welcome was so hearty that mention must be made of it, even at this late date. Before we arrived the parsonage had been "set in order" by a thorough renovation and presented a pleasing appearance in its new coat of paint. Attention of a peculiar sort had been given to the pantry, for we found it all furnished with supplies sufficient to take care of our appetites for several weeks. We were not only greeted cordially ourselves, but our car of household goods seemed to be welcomed also, judging from the manner in which several men of the church took hold and placed our furniture in the parsonage. Within twenty-four hours after we arrived, we were housed in our new home and began at once to fell ourselves at home. Since that time we have received so many kindnesses by our people that space will not permit more than this mention of them. Suffice it to say we could not have hoped for a warmer welcome, or for greater favors than have been shown us by our new-made friends.

The work of the church we found in a progressive condition. And during our two and a half months on the field, it seems that the interest has been of the most hopeful and encouraging type. Congregations have been very good and the people have listened patiently and with evident appreciation to my poor efforts to bring to them the message of the Master. All departments of the church are alive and going, not as we might hope in every instance of course, but in a way that gives large promise for the future.

On the first Sunday night of this month, after I had spoken, three splendid young people came forward and were received into the church and were baptized. For these young lives we give God the praise.

Pray for the blessing of the Father upon our work here.

G. O. LANKFORD.

CHILDREN'S SAYINGS

Kenneth, four years old, was a great chatterbox. His little tongue was seldom still. One day his mother was trying in vain to visit with a friend. She said, "Oh, Kenneth, I wish you would give me a chance to say something once in a while."

"I did keep still once," said Kenneth, "and you didn't say anything."—The Christian Register.

An elderly lady was trying to overcome the reluctance of her little niece, who was visiting her, to go to bed. "Being six years old," she said, "you should go to bed at six. When you are seven you will be able to stay up till seven, and when you are eight you can keep awake till eight."

The child did a little mental arithmetic and gazing at the wrinkled face and white hair of her aunt, she said, "Then I suppose you never go to bed at all."—Boston Transcript.

Miss Rose asked her eighth grade, "What are the sister states?"

Mabel answered: "I am not sure, but I should think they were Miss Ouri, Ida Ho, Mary Land, Callie Formia, Louisa Anna, Della Ware, Minnie Sota, and Mrs. Sippi."—The Epworth Herald.

The teacher asked the class wherein lay the difference in meaning between the words "suffieient" and "enough" "Suffieient," answered Tommy, "is when mother thinks it's time to stop eating pudding; 'enough' is when I think it is."—Watchman-Examiner.

HELPING THE PREACHER

A prominent minister of the Christian Church said to us the other day, "If I could only get my congregation to reading, I feel that I could do so much more. If in one of my sermons, I touch on something that a brother or sister has just read there is an understanding that would not have been there if she or he had not been reading."

Have you ever stopped to think of this? Have you ever thought that it was your duty to read so as to be able to help your minister? Is it your duty to help your minister? It is. He is working to bring something worth while to you and if you read you make his work mean more to yourself, more to your Church and more for the work of the Lord. Read your Church paper first of all after the Bible, and then, read books on Church work that you may get new ideas for your own church work. There are good books of fiction that you should read; there are good books on church missions that you should read; there are good books on church work and church principles that would not only help you in church work but would be of real educational value to you.

"Modern Pagans", by Charles M. Sheldon, is a story of the Wallace family. The Wallaces are a typical American family—wholesome, hearty, and honest; interested in sports and society, in politics and business. None the less they are practically pagans, enjoying the blessings of a Christian civilization, but accepting none of its duties and responsibilities. The transformation of these modern pagans into active and aggressive twentieth-century Christians is told by Dr. Sheldon in picturesque and compelling fashion. How was it accomplished? That is what will help you, perhaps, if there are Wallaces in your church. It costs one-half of a dollar.

"Fifty Missionary Heroes", by Julia H. Johnston. No home is complete without this book. It gives the life of David Livingstone and forty-nine other such heroes as he. This book is very interesting as well as beneficial. Its value is $1.25.

You will help yourself, you will help your church, you will encourage the work of Christian progress by buying these books of us.

Civilization

THE EDITOR

CIVILIZATION is not so many human beings, a code of laws, organized government, and a mass of material things. Civilization is the standard that mankind has set up in moral and religious realms. The progress of a nation is always measured by how far and how much humanity has been helped. Destruction by nations is not greatness, for that does not benefit human society. Getting breeds selfishness; giving is the means of drawing out the God-like in man and making him akin to his Maker. Individuals can best succeed by seeing how much they can do for others and not by how much they can do for themselves. Nations will grow in greatness as they manifest the spirit in brotherly love. Civilization is not so much of the seen as of the unseen.

THE HOME GOING OF DR. MILO T. MORRILL

THE EDITOR

Rev. Milo T. Morrill, D. D., Defiance, Ohio, one of the denomination's great and good men, was stricken with paralysis in his class room Thursday, June 16, and went to his reward at one o'clock A. M., Wednesday June 22, 1921. Such, in brief, is our only knowledge of our lamented brother's passing.

Dr. Morrill was one of the denomination's outstanding men and great workers. In early life he was a professor in Starkey Seminary under the principalship of Dr. A. H. Morrill. After this he held pastorates in New England, especially in Vermont. During this time he wrote much on the subject of missions and took a very active part in foreign missions. In 1906 he was elected by the American Christian Convention as Secretary of Foreign Missions. In the years 1910 and 1914 he was re-elected, which showed the great confidence the people had in his leadership, and held this position until about two years ago when he gave up the work and accepted a professorship in Defiance College, Defiance, Ohio, which position he held when the summons came.

This note of this sad information will be read by many who knew him personally. During his terms of office as Mission Secretary he frequently visited the South, and especially during the sitting of our Convention. He had a message and the people heard him gladly. He took the King's business seriously and worked faithfully and efficiently in all that was committed to his care and keeping. His smile was genial, his handshake firm, his speech refined, his manner elegant, and his spirit gentle as a child. To know him was to love him and to love him was to love a noble soul.

His home going casts a gloom over the whole Church. He was a profound student of the history of missions, knowing foreign fields as if they were at his own door, and the records of all great missionaries as if they were his intimate friends. He gave the bloom of his life to the subject of missions. His life has just begun. There will spring up from the seed he has sown, missionaries and supporters of the cause for world evangelism. He laid a structure that roots itself in the mountains. He died in the harness, that which was his own choice, we are sure.

*Fallen at the post of duty
Fallen with his armor on,
Closing a career of beauty
Milo T. Morrill is gone.*

Rev. Milo T. Morrill, D. D.----A Few Tributes

A PRINCE HAS FALLEN

A telegram on June 22, bringing the sad information that Rev. Milo T. Morrill, D. D., had passed to his reward from his home at Defiance, Ohio, that morning brought sorrow and grief beyond words. A prince indeed has fallen. In all our acquaintance with ministers and officials in the Church we have nowhere met or known one of a more magnanimous spirit, and of a more generous mind and heart than was his. He gave the best that was in him, body, mind, and soul, to the service of his God through the Christian Church and he, like his Lord, literally laid down his life for the cause he held most dear. As our Secretary for Foreign Missions and Editor of The Christian Missionary many years he was best known and most loved, and as such rendered heroic and immortal service to his Church and his God. He wrote with a painstaking and accurate pen, and spoke always from a great fund of ready knowledge. His "History of The Christians" is a monumental work, and in itself would have made the author beloved, invaluable and immortal. His writings are all chaste, clear, scholarly, convining; and manifest in a remarkable degree a spirit of devotion to truth, to church, to fellow man and to God.

A great and good man has gone from our ranks and we shall not soon see his like again. Our deepest sympathy goes out to dear Sister Morrill in this day of her sorrow.

J. O. ATKINSON.

A FALLEN HERO

Our Zion is called on to mourn another "hero fallen". Out from his New England home, after training on her farms, in her schools and colleges, Milo T. Morrill threw his heart and soul into the ministry of the gospel. As pastor, husband, editor and college professor, his conduct, proficiency and application were always highly satisfactory. Tears will fall on the Home and Foreign field, when it is known that Morrill is no more among mortals. The remainder of life's journey will be lonelier for thousands without the sunshine of his smile. Morrill needs no mausoleum. His epitaph is stamped in the hearts of our entire brotherhood. The free song of the uncaged birds will sing above his grave every spring, and the swift flying shuttles of the North wind will weave carpets above his ashes, but the name, and sweet Christian spirit of M. T. Morrill, and the good he did will remain immortal on earth and immortal in Heaven.

D. A. LONG.

A MAN OF BEAUTIFUL SPIRIT

Dr. Milo True Morrill dead! We had hoped and prayed for his recovery. Our hearts are bowed down in sorrow. Our Church is bereft of a great leader, and life has lost a rich and treasured friendship.

A man of beautiful spirit was Doctor Morrill. Sincerity was an outshining characteristic, a sincerity so unalloyed that he could not indulge in the little flatteries and exaggerations of speech which many of us employ to the satisfaction of our friends, and so those who knew him less intimately regarded him as rather cool and unapproachable. But to the initiated in his fellowship he was warm-hearted, affectionate, crystal, true. Truly has a prince fallen in Israel at this time.

Dr. Morrill was a constructive Christian statesman. He lacked the glare of brilliancy and sounded no trumpets before him, but laid broad and deep foundations for the things he did. Witness the prosperity of our Foreign Mission work, arising naturally out of the silent educational plans of his administration of that department. Such was his confidence in the ultimate outcome of such work, that when he came under the fire of criticism, he calmly said to the writer, "I shall not lose my religion if the Brotherhood turns me out." At Springfield he was unanimously reelected and left the office to take up what seemed to him a larger opportunity of Kingdom service—the professorship at Defiance College.

I shall best remember Doctor Morrill for his "At Prayer Time" contributions to The Herald of Gospel Liberty. Most of our leaders tell us we need more religion, a more vital religion. We know it. But how? Dr. Morrill's "At Prayer Time" was a practical demonstration. In these weekly contributions he exhibited the highest type of constructive Christian statesmanship, and the devout and spiritually-minded of the Brotherhood will find The Herald sadly lacking for them in the absence of his suggestions, suggestions which ministered so effectively and helpfully from week to week in the realm of vital religion.

W. A. HARPER.

HE WENT ABOUT DOING GOOD

The going of Dr. Morrill brings sorrow to our entire brotherhood. He was a student, scholar, teacher, Christian gentleman. He believed it was more noble to do things for humanity than to make money, or to hold high office, or to lead an army. He showed that the real opportunity of life was the man himself.

His was a life fashioned after that of his Master. He went about doing good as did his Lord. He endeavored to heal the sick, feed the hungry, make the blind to see, and them that mourned to rejoice. I know of no word which so fitly expresses the idea of his life as the word "usefulness". He was pre-eminently a useful man. In the counsels of our Church we shall say, "thou shalt be missed, because thy seat will be empty."

C. H. ROWLAND.

FAITHFUL AND UNSELFISH

I am informed by wire, from Rev. W. P. Minton, Foreign Mission Secretary, Dayton, Ohio, of the death of Dr. M. T. Morrill. I would like to express to the Brotherhood at large, through THE CHRISTIAN SUN, my appreciation of the life and services of Dr. Morrill and my sincere regret at his untimely going. Dr. Morrill was true to his Church and to his highest ideals and was certainly one of the best informed men among us. A deeply spiritual man and of unquestioned faith.

He gave the best part of his life to the missionary work of the Church, serving for a number of years as Secretary of Foreign Missions for the denomination. Since his voluntary retirement from that office he has kept in closest touch with the work always willing to give valuable information, service or assistance in any way that he possibly could. He has been Bro. Minton's right hand man and the Board as a whole will greatly miss his counsel.

He will be remembered by the Church through his writings as editor of The Christian Missionary for so many years, his contributions to The Herald and THE SUN and, his historical contribution to the denomination, "The History of the Christian Denomination in America", but chiefly by his faithful, untiring and unselfish service in the Brotherhood for the coming of the Kingdom of God. May God bless his memory.

HIS LIFE A BENEDICTION

I have learned with great sorrow of the passing of Dr. M. T. Morrill. From the first of my acquaintance with him, I was deeply impressed with his consecration to Christ and with his earnest desire to see the will of God done in all things. As I came to know him better, this impression grew upon me as to his having dedicated himself without reservation to the will and work of God.

A great soul has gone out from us. His work will follow him. The example of his life will be an inspiration to many others as the years bear us onward in service and upward to the realm into which he has triumphantly entered.

O much has been written about the value of higher education that it is difficult to interest the young in further consideration of the matter; and yet they need especially now to give heed to it, because world conditions have given a new emphasis to its place in their lives.

The scarcest thing in the world just now is thoroughly educated youth. The shortage in trained leadership is alarming, and at the same time inviting. It is alarming from the standpoint of society as a whole, but inviting to the individual. A premium is set on trained leadership in our day.

In 1917 in America's 512 colleges and universities, there were enrolled 457,488 students. In 1918 there was a shortage of 46,372; in 1919 a shortage of 34,011; and in 1920, a shortage of 17,419; so that for three years we sustained a shortage of 97,802 college years, or practically a 25 per cent loss for one year. The impression has got abroad that our colleges are overflowing. These figures are based on the World's Almanac, and are presumably correct. These figures do not include the vocational men placed by the government in our technical schools and universities, of whom there were many thousands last year, because these men are really not college students and cannot affect our leadership one way or the other. Many of them in North Carolina colleges have not even completed the seven grades of the public school.

But the situation in Europe is even more alarming. Experts estimate that for the period of the war and for the five-year period following, there will be a shortage of 90 per cent in college and university graduates, and that taking the world over the shortage right now is 60 per cent. This situation puts an additional premium upon American youth who are prepared, because the Old World must look to us largely for supplying the leadership which she cannot possibly supply, because the young life that should supply it is dead or hopelessly maimed.

These facts taken in connection with the records of college graduates in leadership present an unequalled challenge to young people to go to college in these years of shortage in the world's supply of trained men and women. Here are the records: 3.8 per cent only of our young people ever go to college. These supply 73 per cent of our leaders. 1.4 per cent only graduate from college, and these supply 59 per cent of our leadership. 2.4 per cent have some college training, and these have given us 14 per cent of our leadership. 96.2 per cent of our people have had no college training and these give us but 27 per cent of our leadership. College graduation offers a man or woman in other words in normal times 421 opportunities for leadership to one without it, and in the present shortage, 1005 such opportunities to one without it. Even a limited amount of college training offers 58 chances to one without any such training in normal times, and in this age of shortage, 145 chances to one. Those without any college training have barely 1/40 of a chance in normal times, and about 1/16 of a chance, even in these days of shortage.

The moral of this situation is so plain that to point it out would be reflection on the good judgment of those who read and think at the same time.

Young friend, you have but one life and but one time of preparation. What will you do about it?

W. A. HARPER.

SUFFOLK LETTER

HERE are two kinds of promotion; the promotion of the worker and the promotion of the work. It is not far to go to see which of these two is the more praiseworthy and the more important in the line of progress. Political promotion is advancement from one position to a higher position, as from the House to the Senate. Such advancement may be by a majority of votes by the constituency, and may not improve legislation. With school teachers or ministers it may mean going from a small school or church, with small salary, to a larger school or church with a larger salary. This may take place without any improvement of the work or the worker. The promotion that counts most is the improvement of the work. The man who takes a small business and develops that into a growing success makes the largest contribution to human progress. Ambition has ruined many men and many institutions. Ambition is the sign of smallness rather than largeness; it is a desire for preferment, a desire to enter into a larger position already in existence, rather than to make a small business or position larger and more permanent.

Aspiration is, no doubt, a better term than ambition. It earnestly desires to rise to something higher, not by external promotion, but by internal growth. When the mother of Zebedee's children came to Jesus desiring that her two sons might sit, "the one on His right hand, and the other on His left, in His Kingdom", that was ambition; but when the Gadarene out of whom Jesus had cast the devils, came to Him in the ship and "prayed Him that he might be with Him," that was aspiration. It is one thing to desire a great position; it is quite another thing to desire to fill well a small position. The example of Jesus seems to show that it is far better to honor a position rather than have the position honor the man. It is better to be a great Captain than a small General. A small success is greater than a big failure.

There are two lines that lead to failure: looking for position rather than service, and choosing a life-work without consulting God, or yielding to His impressions. Ambition is inclined to ignore God, and to seek position or power without His guidance. Any life thus projected and directed is artificial. All plants, flowers, and even trees, can be cultivated out of their native climate by artificial means, but only on a small scale and without value. Cotton could be grown in Canada, in a hot house, but it would have no commercial nor agricultural value; life may be located and operated by human choice only, but it will have very little value in the work and progress of mankind. Abram and Saul were called and so were the seven deacons; the former by God, the latter by the people. The minister may have a double call; one by the Lord, the other by a congregation. "Jesus increased in wisdom and stature, and in favour with God and man." That is the normal development of a human being, and it is fourfold: wisdom and stature—wiser and larger—and in favour of God and man. It is the privilege of men to develop and rise in the scale of being in the humblest positions. Jesus Himself took the lowly position of a servant and lifted service into the highest place. "He took upon Himself the form of a servant." Service in our day is one of the largest words, with the widest use. Diplomatic service, Consular service, military service, hospital service, religious service, personal service, and all for others. "Serve the Lord with gladness." Publicans came to Jesus to ask Him, "What shall we do?" His reply was, "Exact no more than that which is appointed you." The soldiers likewise demanded of Him, "what shall we do?" He replied, "Do violence to no man, neither accuse any falsely; and be content with your wages." The bane of modern conditions is discontent with pay. Service is the standard of human value and not position or wages.

OUR VIRGINIA LETTER

WHERE are your children? Are they going in the ways of truth and righteousness, or are they drifting the downward way to ruin? I am wondering how many of my readers will make an honest effort to answer that question. Is your child safe in the way of right? What is your answer? If ever you undertook to be honest in answering a question, let it be this one, and for the reason that not only are the earthly interests, but the heavenly interests, as well, are at stake. If you persuade yourself that your children are all safe in the way to God, then that is a great comfort to your heart and mind, provided it is true, but suppose your parental indulgence has led you to the point where you are blind to their faults, and suppose you are mistaken, and suppose that they are on the way to ruin, then what of your mistake? I plead with you to be careful of the moral, physical and spiritual interests of your children. It is so easy to let go and let them do as they please and go where they please, and then it becomes so easy to step off into hell and be lost forever and ever. Oh, parents, I plead with you today. Look after your children, for they are wanted by the devil to keep up his terrible business of furnishing hell with lost souls, and if you are not careful of your children, morally and spiritually, before you realize what is taking place, your poor parent-forsaken children will be lost and lost forever. Did you catch that thought? Will you let your child go to ruin? Oh, how it behooves us to stand for the salvation of our children!

We are told that once a farmer in North Carolina drove a pair of spirited horses to a neighboring city, and stepping from his carriage to the side walk to do an errand, his horses took fright and ran off. As they started, he grasped the reins, but he could not stop them, and yet he held on till the horses came to the end of the street, when they, not being able to go further, reared up and fell back upon the man and crushed him so that he was bleeding and dying, when his friends pulled from under the horses, when they asked him why he did not let go and so save himself. Feebly and with almost his last breath, he said: "Look in the carriage". Looking they saw his child was in there, and that was the explanation of his sacrificing his life—it was to save the physical life of his child. It was a noble sacrifice he made of himself, but why is it that we parents do so much for the physical safety of our children and yet so little for the spiritual safety of these dear ones. We would give our life for their physical safety, but how we do neglect their spiritual safety! Dear Reader, are you a father or a mother? Will you not ask God in his mercy to wake you up to the thought of the spiritual danger of your children. Already the horses of sin are going down the road to the ruin of your child, it may be, and are you doing anything to safeguard their safety? Are you doing anything to stop that mad horse of sin and so enable you to rescue your child? It may be that you think your child is safe, but if the wicked one can endanger his everlasting welfare, you may rest assured that he is doing it and with a high hand for ruin. Dear one, go look after your child—do it now, while you can.

One of the burning needs of this day is to have our Christian people wake up to the conditions about them, and then go to work to turn the tide of evil. This is a fact, no matter whether you belong to the men who believe the world is getting worse or getting better, you need to face this fact: Sin is rampant in your community, and you are needed to stay it before it runs over some of your own loved ones. Sam Jones, in his day, declared that there were many people writing to him somewhat as follows: "Jones, God bless you. Turn loose your guns and do your best to wake up the Christian people and show them how this country is drifting to hell every day." If the people are drifting to hell, is it not time that the Christian men and women be aroused to save our dear ones from everlasting ruin? We are delaying too long. Are you careful to know where your child is and what he or she is doing? It is to be feared that thousands of parents are not careful for the safety of their children.

It was only a few weeks ago THE SUN brought us the astounding fact that a girl was missing in the city of Chicago, and when that fact was made known, almost two hundred mothers appealed to the chief of police to know if it was their daughter. You see these almost two hundred mothers did not know where their daughters were, or it would have been unnecessary to inquire to see if the one reported was theirs. It is a shame that parents, at least many of them, are so careless about the safety of their children. God help the men and women of this country, who are parents, to awake to a sense of their responsibility for their children.

Rev. R. F. Brown, 1020 Park Place, Columbus, Georgia writes that he will be in North Carolina and Virginia for a part of the summer helping in meetings, and will have some spare time while in this section to aid other pastors should they need his services.

Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., Dendron, Virginia, tells in this issue of his resignation of his present pastorate. Brother Harward is one of our ablest pastors and we have no doubt that many churches will early seek for his services.

There will be all day services at Pleasant Hill church (Alamance) Sunday, July 3. In the morning the regular preaching service will be held and the afternoon will be given over to the program of the Cane Creek Temperance Society.

THE BURNING BUSH IS EVERYWHERE

Moses saw the presence of God in the burning bush; Jesus saw that presence in the grass in the wayside field. Did he not say, "God so clothes the grass of the field"? We make so serious, so impoverishing, a mistake when we fail to find our Heavenly Father around us everywhere and all the way. The Psalmist said: "If I take the wings of the morning and fly to the uttermost limits of the seas, behold thou art there." Our Father was there already. Would we might understand what is wrapped up in this wonderful fact, what of comradeship, what of communion, what of an ever-flowing fountain of blessing. Moses saw the presence of God in the bush that burned that hot day in the Arabian desert; may we find and prove that every leaf and berry bearing bush is aflame with the presence of our Father.—Exchange.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE CURE FOR UNBELIEF

About the best antidote for the subtle poisoning of quack religion is to get people to read vigorous Christian Literature. Two incidents will illustrate this statement. A man bought one of Tom Paine's books to fortify his unbelief during the Billy Sunday campaign in Cincinnati. Later, one of our Methodist Book Concern publications fell into his hands, and he became convinced of the reality of the gospel. He then purchased a New Testament and read it through twice within a few weeks. The second instance is that of a lady who was reading Christian Science and New Thought papers and was induced to take the Western Christian Advocate. She sent in a check for the Centenary and expressed her deep interest in such practical work.—Western Christian Advocate.

THE SISTER WITH THE CIGARETTE

The woman smoker will not become popular. If the idea be to have all the fun that men demand, let smoking become a feminine trait; the male animal will seek some other joy. If the woman's idea be to make herself more popular with the male, she is doubly damned in the doing of it. She has fastened the habit upon herself, and even the most depraved sot does not want his wife to turn drunkard, nor does the nicotine-soaked smoker feel that his possible wife's attractiveness is enhanced by her ability to join him in the festive cigarette. The "ladies" who have taken up the habit will have a hard time convincing themselves that the game is worth the candle. It is, of course, one of women's conceded rights if they so desire; but all women who are looking toward contributing their share to the great moral clean-up, of which the world so stands in need, are willing that men shall have a monopoly in the tobacco-consuming business. Women of judgment and sense, to say nothing about women of religion, are all dead set against the habit. It will die out after a brief vogue with a few fools who, like moths, have not sense enough to keep from singeing themselves at the flame.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

TOUCHING JAPAN AS A WHOLE

By E. C. Fry

SOME years ago, the principal of an important Japanese school spent an evening with me in my study. He had just returned from a national meeting of men in similar positions, at which some outstanding matters had been discussed. It occurred to him that he would be interested in a foreigner's more detached views. The discussion that night covered a wide range, and I remember the distinct sneer with which he remarked; "You Christians may win one convert here, and another there, but you are not touching Japan as a whole."

It is a nation that prides itself on its wonderful solidarity, and the remark was a pointed one. Either you will come back heavily to such a proposition as that, or not at all. I asked him, "Did you ever read the Civil Code of Japan?" I remember how puzzled he looked wondering what a law book could have to do with the matter. "Yes", he said, "I have read it". Then I asked, "Can you put your finger upon a single page of that code that doesn't bear stamped upon it the mark of the Lord Jesus Christ?" He was scholarly, and probably knew enough about the contents of that code and the history of their laws, to glimpse my meaning. At all events, he was silent, and I pushed my advantage. I said to him, "We have rewritten your codes of law from top to bottom. And there are other lines of nation wide changes that I can mention, if you ask for them. With these things in mind, will you insist on that assertion that we are not touching Japan as a whole?" He made no direct reply, preferring to drift our conversation to other topics.

In every land that the Gospel enters, there are two lines of development; and we find both in Japan.

On the one hand, through earnest efforts and much prayer, souls are led into the Kingdom of God. On the other hand, and this largely without similar conscious direct efforts, national institutions are recast and public opinion moulded along new lines. Conversions as yet are in relatively smaller groups. But these wide aspects of the impact of Christianity upon Japan are abundantly in evidence. They are leavening that land with Christian ideas and ideals, and preparing the way for the more definite advance of that Kingdom which is righteousness and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit.

When you have done everything you can to be a man; morally, physically, and mentally, you are a man.

Germany's war indemnity is $33,000,000,000. At the present rate we will soon spend that much for war preparation. Who won the war?

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

AS THE WORLD SEES US

The day you vowed to forsake the world and follow your Lord, life looked different to you. The life you had been living seemed empty. You saw the uselessness of it all. You saw Christ in all His beauty. You felt His drawing power. You saw Him suffering, bleeding, dying, hanging upon the Cross six long hours. You saw the blood issuing from those cruel wounds in His hands and feet, dripping, dripping, for you and for me. When you saw Him, your Savior dying for you, when you realized the great love which led Him to give His life for you, did you yield your all to Him, unconditionally?

Jesus said "he that renounceth not all that he hath, cannot be my disciple". When we enter the ranks of the Lord's followers, we have not only promised the pastor in the presence of the church that we would renounce all, give up the world and follow Jesus all the way, but we have said to the world that we would not walk in its ways any more. The world is going to look on and see if we keep the vows we have taken, or not.

The world is a pretty good judge of the Christian's character. It has all respect for the men or women who show by their daily lives that they are earnestly trying to be what Christ would have them be. The world has nothing but contempt for those who have "profession without possession". The world has nothing but contempt for those who profess to be Christians, yet are doing the same things and going to the same places as those who make no profession. It sneers at church members who dance, who play cards, who go to immoral picture shows, who use an occasional oath or indulge in coarse jests and stories. The world has nothing but scorn for the church member who overreaches in a business transaction or tells a willful lie. The world knows Jesus would not do those things. It also knows His disciples must not do them.

When our Lord was upon the earth the people of the world could find no fault in Him. There was plenty of fault found of Him, but it was by those who had the form of Godliness, only, who did it. It is so with His sincere followers today. There are the false accusations, the scorn, the mockings which came to the Master meted out to them, and they come from the same class of people, those who have the form of Godliness, and do not have Christ enthroned within the heart.

You said when you publicly confessed Christ as your Savior, that you intended to forsake the world and live for Him alone. Does the world know that you have? Does the world know that you have been with Jesus and learned of Him? Does it see His mark upon you?

EDITORIALS

SUCCESS AND FAILURE

LAST week we had something to say about making a decision, and expressed the hope that many of our young men and women would make a definite decision for a life-purpose this summer and then diligently pursue it. Before that editorial reached the public we had been privileged to hear a stirring address on "The Advantages of a Handicap" by one of the country's foremost men and great orators. Then came a young man into our office "great" sixteen and flashed his beaming brown eyes across the desk, saying by the presence of an ever widening and perpetual smile, "Some day I'll be a man." And now right here let us say that there is always too many possibilities in a boy not to talk with him when you have a chance. He is the last caller to whom you can show impatience.

But back to the headlines. Success or failure are the two pivotal words of human history. Success is no word coined in king's palaces or the homes of princes. Success is born in homes of poverty and amid struggles that test the brain and brawn of a man—or a woman. A failure is but the least resistance to the onward march of human progress. Keep step, seize life's golden opportunities, and success will take care of itself. Stop, stand still, allow the throng to go by, and soon you will be so far behind the times that your condition spells failure in large letters.

Thinking we are of the homes that shall furnish the Church her future leaders; thinking we are of the men of our communion who are walking toward sunset's valley—thinking we are also of those who shall take their places. Thinking we are of the scarcity of help, and the possibility of it getting more so.

But most of all we are thinking of two classes in our Church and among our young people—classes that are in every Church: Those who can go to college, but will not and those who cannot go to college, but want to go. The first class mentioned is the unfortunate—the latter fortunate. Consider the words, watch the two classes and see living testimonies of Success and Failure.

GETTING CHRISTIANS CHURCHED

WEATHER and travel conditions give rise to summer dates for revival meetings. The season is now on and many such meetings are in progress. Many will be the number who will turn to righteousness during these seasons of spiritual thinking and heart-searching. But merely turning to right ways is not sufficient. There must be a turning and a continuing—there must be a harnessing of this new power and changed vision.

Every member of the church has a place—and there should be work in that place. "Where your treasure is there will your heart be also" applies to more things and conditions than money. Work builds a treasure and there the heart is.

It is not enough to get a man saved—he must be churched so as to make him the means of helping others to get saved. Too many Christians are put on cold storage.

THE SUN would be glad to cooperate with pastors in getting the Church paper into the hands and homes of all new converts that they might become interested in the workings, acts, and activities of the denomination. If pastors will send us names we will send sample copies and letters in the endeavor to enlist subscribers.

Talk the Chautauqua

SELFISHNESS

SELFISHNESS is the common sin of humanity and the impediment in the wheels of progress. It is easy to breed and difficult to get out of the heart, where once it is there. We pity the person who becomes its victim—and we pity the more the community that becomes the victim of selfishness. Selfishness is just so near sin—we mean all of it, for most of it is—that we usually associate the words together. They are at least twin-sisters.

It takes no philosopher to tell when he is in a selfish community. And the pity of it is that many persons and communities do not know that they are selfish. The way they do things is the way they have been taught and it is never thought of as being selfish. This is the more serious and pitiful.

The spirit of helping our fellowman is brooding over the world. There is no getting rid of it. To do away with it is to do away with God, all love, and destroy all human feeling and sympathy—a thing impossible. It is the God in us that seeks to help the other fellow. The spirit of brotherhood knows no geography of separation—it knows only a geography that finds and binds. The true spirit of brotherhood knows no race, no color, no class. Christ died for ALL men everywhere. Christ knew geography only to lead Him to help and not to hide from duty and opportunity. His spirit in us will obliterate lines and destroy classes.

That community that does not seek to be better, do more for its young people, build better churches, better schools, better welfare centers, is selfish. That individual that seeks to save self and is not willing to do for others is selfish and is sinning against the spirit of the times. That business that does not consider the welfare of its every employee and is not willing to provide for cleanliness, sanitation, and all that go to make working conditions better, is selfish and is standing in the way of the progress of a world-love and brotherhood.

One of the greatest things that can come to a child is the teaching of doing something for others and doing it without pay or the expectation of it. It is wrong to allow children to always work for money or to give them money for work. They should be taught that there is such a thing as rendering service for the sake of service. A child should be taught that he or she has a duty to perform for those about them and that duty, or opportunity, is beyond the price of money. If such is instilled in the young heart, youth will not suffer from the sin of selfishness.

A joy that comes to a true heart is that joy of helping others: or doing something that others may be benefited, their lives enriched and humanity lifted up. Pity that person who has no desire to do something for others. His is the way that leads to narrowness and poverty living. Ponder on these things.

AGAIN, AGAIN AND AGAIN

THIS is one more "Again" that we have had again, and again and again, that articles sent to THE CHRISTIAN SUN without any name are used for only waste basket material. We cannot understand why, in the face of repeated notice of this, that readers will continue to send matter unsigned.

The very fact that we will not accept an unsigned article does not mean that we will not publish an article without a name. All we desire to know is the name of the person responsible for sending the article. The reason for this is very clear, for if the paper published articles without knowing the person responsible for the information, a great many injustices could be done to innocent persons. There are statements that appear in every issue of THE SUN that the Editor takes for granted are correct and so publishes because some responsible person has signed his or her name to the information. In most cases the Editor has no way of knowing that the report of the decease of a person is correct, for instance, but is published because the statement is signed, or there is a letter on file, in the office vouching for the accuracy of the statement.

We have before us now a bit of information that we would like very much to publish and it will really do good to publish it, but the letter is signed by "a friend" and we have no way of knowing that the facts are correct, though worthy they seem to be.

Remember that unsigned articles are consigned to the waste basket immediately after their arrival at this office. Do not waste your time in writing and spending postage on anonymous articles. This is as plain as we know how to make it.

Is it really true that a business man has to be a liar? If you think so, you must already be one and are practicing it.

It was thirty years after Edgar Allan Poe's death before the American people gave him enough recognition to place an humble stone at the head of his grave.

WORLD HAPPENINGS

FINANCIAL CONDITION OF FRANCE

According to recent reports from Paris, France, one of the most important nations of the world, is in a bad condition so far as her finances are concerned. Her economic condition is comparatively satisfactory, but she has failed to grapple with her financial problems of reconstruction as the other nations have done. Since the question of reparations has been the time has come for her to meet this problem squarely. A budget system must be found to meet her revenues.

Organizing ability is lacking in France. Although her individual initiative is greater than the English, or the Germans, she does not possess the high degree of collective organization that these nations have. The individual in France is less ignorant than the Englishman, or the German, but the Englishman and the German have broader political understanding than the Frenchman has. France, then, is given more to individual effort.

France was hard hit by the loss of her three greatest wine customers, Russia, Great Britain and the United States. Russia, because of her complete suppression of trade; Great Britain, because of her excessive tariff; and the United States, because of prohibition. Industrial conditions are not as good as last year and for about the same reasons as exist in America. It is of interest to note that the laborers are helping the employers and the relations between capital and labor are on a much better basis than in most countries. Confidence in expressé by those who know the economical conditions best and now that reparations have been settled France is expected to soon be on her financial feet again.

ENGLAND WILL NOT RENEW ALLIANCE

According to newspapers of this week, England will not enter the old alliance with Japan and France. Germany now fears an alliance between Great Britain and America. The German newspapers display dispatches prominently under such headlines as "Anglo-Saxon Alliance", "British-American entente for world domination." The matter, as a whole, is creating great interest in international affairs.

Whether or not there is to be an alliance between Great Britain and America, it is of great interest to know that the two great Anglo-Saxon countries are drawing closer together and that Great Britain will not go back to her old alliance.

REDS PLAN SEIZURE OF AMERICAN SHIPS

In the last few months several American vessels have mysteriously disappeared at sea. It was made known June 22, that the New York police officials had captured certain documents a year and a half ago which may explain the disappearances of today. These documents exposed certain plans of the Reds to capture American vessels after they had left port and divert them to Russian ports,

THE LARGER LOYALTIES

AN EDITORIAL IN The Herald of Gospel Liberty

THE old-time ties of family and clan are dying out. One nowhere today finds them as once they were, persistent, clinging, martyrlike for each other. Only a few generations ago, to be of "blood kin" was to be linked with inseparable ties in most cases. There was pride in the family name, and those bearing it fought and died for it and for each other's honor—as did those of the same tribe or clan. But now most of this has passed away. Blood is no longer thicker than water when taken just one remove from the immediate family circle. All of us must confess that we have more friends who are nearer to our hearts and more interested in and more helpful to our lives, more sympathetic, more companionable, than are any but our nearest relatives. Clans are unknown in a civilization like ours; and kin folks are no longer confined to the limits of small communities, or required to stand ready to engage in fist fights or duels or feuds for each other. It is safe to come and go as we will, and the railroads far separate us until family ties are worn thin and broken.

BUT into their stead must come new and larger loyalties. Nothing so impoverishes life as to undertake to live without a large number of deep affections and far-reaching attachments. It is not enough to be devoted simply to our home and to our family. It is not enough to have a compelling interest and render a full and faithful service to only our own little coterie of friends. The life which attempts that and nothing more soon ceases to glow and to grow, and ere long settles down into a common dull brown, without thrill or romance. The heart which does not have a large reach for its loves and its loyalties, soon becomes selfish and sordid. Study such lives where you will, and you will find them unfolding in one of two ways—either they are spoiling themselves by a round of unbridled pleasure, seeking excitement and satisfying activity; or they have settled down to a dead level of contentment in their own health and prosperity, indifferent to what becomes of the rest of the world. Their peace is the same as that which the old cat enjoys when, having played with her victim until she is tired and then eaten to her full, she lies down before the comfortable fire others have builded, to sleep. And if they have deluded themselves into thinking that theirs is a religious and spiritual peace, it only makes their selfishness the more ignominious. For whoever is not devoting his life to unselfish ministry in a circle of wide circumference, reaching far beyond his kin and loved ones, is simply basking like a cat in the warm glow of the knowledge and security and comforts that have come from the toil and the sacrifice and the martyrdom of unnumbered millions down through the ages—blessings and inheritances which never can be paid for in money, but only in kind.

EVERY life, then, must make wide its horizons. It must have many loyalties that stretch out far and away from the people and the things in which it has an immediate and selfish interest. The heart is like fire; and unless it be continually replenished by new and larger devotions, it will burn itself out into ashes. Here is the cause of most of the sordid materialistic contentment among some and of the unrest among others which are spoiling the lives of millions and threatening civilization. Their loves and ambitions and loyalties are all ingrown, and self-seeking. And this can be just as true of organizations, and class movements, and even of churches, as it is of individuals. If civilization is to be saved, mankind must follow Christ into a larger and finer set of loyalties. This is one of the superlative missions of the church in every community—to broaden men's visions and enlarge their aspirations for service, furnishing the organization and machinery by which every individual, no matter how obscure or how limited in resources, is made to feel that his own gifts of time and money through Christ Jesus are being radiated as a balm of healing to the uttermost parts of the earth. Every individual needs the invigoration and inspiration of such a consciousness, even as much as the world needs such ministry.

THE OBSERVATORY

J. E. MASSEY

CHRISTIAN LABOR UNIONS

We must not get in the habit of believing that every new movement for progress of society must of necessity come from America. There are many things which Europe can still teach us, and one of the most striking examples of this is the Christian Labor Movement which is now gaining rapidly in Central Europe.

In the heart of what we termed as "the enemy's country", or "no man's land" a few years ago, bands of Christians are fighting Bolshevism and labor dissention which has been so ruinous to production in such lands as America and England, by organizing into unions which stand for principles of Christianity rather than those principles of selfishness and narrow contentions, which the latter two countries have been the scene of during the past few years since the war.

According to a summary of the movement by the Literary Digest, textile workers from Germany, France, Holland, Austria, Switzerland, Italy, Hungary, Checho-Slovakia, have founded an international association of unions, and other organizations are in process of formation. A congress of Christian agricultural workers is being held in Coblenz, and an international association of Christian garment workers will be organized. Similar associations will be created among the metal workers, the railway men, the employees of the leather workers, and others.

Dr. Frederik Funder of the National Catholic Welfare Council's News Service, speaking of the development of the movement says that it comes at a time "when the Christian workers of Central Europe are exposed to persecution quite without parallel." It comes of a battle pitched between the Christian workers and destructive and unreasonable socialists, who are attempting by main force to hold their sway in the factories, as has been illustrated so well in the large strikes in factories in Austria and Checho-Slovakia during the last three months.

Speaking further of the movement, Dr. Funder says:

"There is an inherent antagonism and the certainty of a clash between the doctrines of Socialism and Christian teachings. It is fortunate that the ranks of the Christian workers are filled, thus making it possible for the international movement to succeed. Perhaps the trials and sufferings of Central Europe during the last two years were necessary to arouse the spirit of the people. There never was a Christian labor movement worth mentioning in Hungary, until after the devastations of Bolshevism. Now there is strong organizations there."

REVERIES OF A SCHOOL TEACHER

He looked like one of those old school teachers retired to the shade of the by-gone elms of a historic country mansion, but he was not. John F. Condon, has been for more than 30 years principal of the growing and thriving Public School No. 12, in Westchester (N. Y.), and each year he brought something new to his pupils. His conversations begins with philosophic comprehensions, but as he explains the background of his utterances, he becomes simple, yes simple and solid, like the oaks that grow and weather the centuries, and his ideas are thoroughly practical.

Dr. Condon believes that education is not only "fitting the pupil for life", but that it is "life itself". To carry out his conception of education, he would have the pupil emerge into the duties of the life about him, and have graduation be only a "red letter" day in the midst of the year's work. In order to accomplish this he trains his pupils so that every boy and girl can do, first of all, that manual labor which the average pupil has need of in the home, such as the making of simple articles for household service, such as hangers, racks, loops, rings, shelves, or some of the more dainty articles on the part of the girls. Then he would have the boys make simple implements for use in the field, shop, street, and watercourse, for he will have access to such places as these in later life, whether he specializes in medicine or teaching, law or agriculture. This manual training will prepare him for service for his country in war and peace.

This leads to Dr. Condon's definition of a school curriculum, not as a lot of so many books, or so much Latin and Greek inside of a class room, but preparing and adjusting the boy to his surroundings."

With all of his ideas in mind, his pupils spend so many hours of their week's time in a workshop in one of the recitation rooms with a special mechanic as instructor. The boys make a number of useful things, but the thing which made the old man proudest during the year was a boat which the boys built; yes, with their own hands—"to a hammer and rivet."

Speaking of the boat which the boys painted up for a parade on City "Borough Day" he said:

"'Rose of Columbia,' we christened her, after our conception of a 'Ship of State'. She's a model of perfection, and I love her, because I know her well—because she represents an idea and an ideal", again he said as he thought of the many hours he had watched the boys draw the keel, scrape the oak of her body. He saw them interested and disinterested, as boys and as men-to-be, planning, planing, cutting, sawing, sandpapering, gluing, and polishing her from bow to stern, until the school year had nearly ended, and they were done with her. She was finished.

"'Rose of Columbia'" was then more than a boat. A part of the soul of the old school teacher was in her. Although she didn't take the prize on Borough Day she could still be used on the rivers, on the lakes and watercourses of the country nearby, fulfilling his idea of a curriculum. The idea of her making was also caught in the soul of the pupils, and they are trained to become useful Americans. This year Dr. Condon has given the boys a boat. They are wondering what he will give them next.

OUR ORPHANAGE

THE LORD IS GOOD TO US

Sometime ago a friend of the Orphanage who is not a member of nor denomination made us this challenge. If we would raise $5,000.00 to furnish the Baby Home he would give us $1,000.00. We reached the goal within the required time and when this friend was informed of the effort, he wrote us that he had decided not to give us the $1,000.00 in a lump sum, but would give us an endowment that would bring us an income of $300.00 each quarter or $100.00 per month. This is the largest contribution we have received and it was very kind of our good friend to help by giving us a contribution so much larger than he had promised. The good Lord always gives us more than we ask if it is for our good.

Seven fertilizer companies donated to us for our spring crops 33 bags of fertilizer. This is a great help to us and we appreciate it very much. The fertilizer people have been real good to us and have helped us a number of times.

Lakeside Cotton Mills, Burlington, N. C., gave us two bolts cloth to make rompers for the little boys. Mr. Holt, the manager of this mill always remembers us at Thanks giving; but all through the year he will ask us to go by the mill and get some cloth for the little folks. We are grateful for contributions of this kind. They help us. Mr. A. T. Holland of Suffolk, Va., shipped us, freight prepaid, one bag of peanuts. The children were all happy.

Miss Alma Turner of Burlington sent us a nice quilt to help us get ready for the winter. We will need quite a number of quilts when we open the Baby Home. Busy Bees of Class No. 3, Olive church, Superior, Nebraska. Miss Ida Slates, teacher sent us one nice quilt. Who else will send one?

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: I am enclosing our dues for May, June and July. I hope the little cousins are well.

I gathered berries for mamma and she gave me ten cents a gallon. I picked two gallons. I would have written before now but my little brother and I have been sick with diphtheria and haven't had time.

I went to Oak Level preaching last week. I like the preacher fine, his name is Mr. Bettinger. I have four little kittens and they are pretty. Enclosed you will find fifty cents for the orphans.—Florine Strange.

P. S.—Mama says she will try to fill a dozen cans for the orphans.—Florine.

It was real good of you to pick berries and sell them and give the money for the orphans.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley: I am sending my dues for June, which is ten cents. Uncle Charley, I love you because your name is Charley. That is my Granddaddy's name. Best wishes for you and all the little orphans, may God bless them.—Virginia Johnson.

You are a nice little girl, I know, because your name is Johnson, and your name is Virginia and you live in the State of Virginia.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley: You will find enclosed ten cents my dues for June. We all went to Grandpa Maness' last Sunday. You know that was my first visit to Grandpa's so he gave me this money. Mamma says she wants to come to Elon sometime this summer. I hope she will so I can see all the little orphans.

With love to all.—Jewel Banks Stout.

If you come to see us we will give you a warm welcome. Come and see all the little orphans that we have at one time.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley: I have not written to you in a long time. I hope the little cousins are enjoying this warm weather. I have been with papa in the tobacco ground last week. He has a pretty crop. I have seven little pigs—they are a week old.—James Strange.

I guess you have had rain. We are very dry and our crops look poor, sure enough. Our garden is burning up.—“Uncle Charley.”

“Tell Me a Story”

THE BOBOLINK

Once upon a time there was a bobolink that was not a bird, and that sounds as though it was a riddle. If you had asked little Ruth Harlow, “When is a bobolink not a bobolink?” she would have known the answer right away, and would have said, “When it is a bumpy little trolley car.”

If you had lived where Ruth lived, you would know right away, too, that a better name than “Bobolink” could not have been found for the car that she rode on to school when the weather was not pleasant enough for her to walk so far. The car tracks were not the right sort for the funny little short cars that had been brought from another city after car fares became higher. So the cars bounced up and down, and bobbed from side to side, and the best word Ruth could think of to describe the way they acted was "jubble"; and when you rode on this funny little car you had to bobble and jubble with it whether you wanted to or not.

Most people did not like to bobble and jubble, but Ruth thought it a jolly sort of fun, and she laughed with the other children who rode. It was as much fun at a merry-go-round to them all.

It was Ruth who had thought of the name for the car, and even Mr. Harlow now called it the Bobolink.

"Come, Ruth, hurry!" Mrs. Harlow would say on dark, rainy morning. "Here is your umbrella. The Bobolink is just coming over the top of the hill. If it rains when you come out of school, be sure to wait for the Bobolink."

In Sunday school Ruth had been taught to be cheerful, polite, and good. At day school she had been taught the same things. At home, before she was old enough to school at all, she had been carefully taught these same things. Always she had been told that, no matter where you are or what is happening, you must try to be cheerful, polite, and good. Never can there be any excuse even for a little girl to be cross, impolite, or bad. So even in the funny little Bobolink, Ruth was cheerful, polite, and good. If the car were crowded and she had no seat, she cheerfully and politely gave it some woman or some elderly gentleman who might be standing, even though the Bobolink bobbed and jumbled so she herself could hardly stand.

This Bobolink must have been a magic sort of bird-car, for he made every one show whether or not he or she had learned to be cheerful, polite, and good. Ruth found that almost all children laughed and found the ride pleasant. They practiced the lessons they had been taught in Sunday school, day school, and home. But, strange to say, it was the grown-ups, who had known so many years about being cheerful, polite and good, who were made by this magic Bobolink to show that they had not learned these three things well enough to practice them when being bobbed and jumbled. Oh, my! One man even said the most bad word! A young woman—I nearly said "lady," but the name would not have fitted her just then—rudely snapped out cross words in a loud voice at the motorman, as though her discomfort were all his fault. A middle-aged man scolded about the railroad company all the way to town. A middle-aged woman said the passengers ought to be paid for having to ride on such cars instead of giving higher fares to a company which does things like this.

Of course it was hard to hold packages, and get out your fare, and look after a little child at the same time, but a woman who tried to do it need not have forgotten to be cheerful and polite and good about it, but she did and she was so angry that her face grew red as red, and she said she would report the motorman to the company, so she would!

It was a good thing that the motorman at least was polite. Some of the things he had to hear and some of the actions he had to see could not make him feel happy, but the Bobolink showed that even the motorman could be made to let the world know whether or not he had learned well those three things which all people are taught when they are children.

Ruth was always glad when she heard some of the grown-ups say funny instead of cross things about the Bobolink. "Daddy", said she one day to her father, who was a minister, "I can tell you how to find out if your sermons are making people good or not. Just take your whole congregation for a ride on the Bobolink!"

Father laughed, and said perhaps it was just as well the Bobolink wasn't big enough for that, and added that at least he hoped Ruth would never fail in the test. —Blanche Elizabeth Wade, in The Christian Register.

THE CATS' TEA PARTY

Five pretty little pussy-cats, invited out to tea, Cried, "Mother, let us go, oh do! for good we'll surely be, We'll wear our bibs and hold our things as you have shown us how—Spoons in our right paws, cups in left—and make a pretty bow;
We'll always say, 'Yes, if you please', and 'Only half of that!'"
"Then go, my darling children," said the happy mother cat.

The pretty little pussy-cats went out that night to tea,
Their heads were smooth and glossy black, their tails were swinging free;
They held their heads as they had learned and tried to be polite;
With snowy bibs beneath their chins, they were a pretty sight.

But ah! alas for manners good and coats as soft as silk!
The moment that the little kits were asked to take some milk
They dropped their spoons, forgot to bow, and oh! what do you think?
They put their noses in the cups, and all began to drink
Yes every naughty little kit set up a mew for more,
Then knocked the teacups over quick and scampered through the door!—New-Church Messenger.

CHURCH NEWS

SEASIDE CHAUTAUQUA

Ocean View—July 18-24

Are you planning to be at the Chautauqua? The change of places of holding it this year gives promise of a much larger attendance than heretofore, and we are counting on our workers and leaders of the churches to avail themselves of this opportunity of special instruction in Religious Education. Great themes and great speakers will inspire and instruct us in Religious Education, Missions, Woman's Work, Sermons, Christian Leadership, The Rural Church, Bible, Sunday School. The Church. These are some of the great themes that will challenge our attention for an entire week at Ocean View.

Mr. Marion Lawrance, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, President W. A. Harper, Dr. Peter Ainslie, Miss Patty N. Ellis, Rev. W. P. Minton, Mission Secretary, will be among those who deliver the evening lectures.

Two special text books will be used. Those who take the course on Religious Education under Miss Lucy Eldredge, Religious Education Secretary for the Southern Christian Convention, will use the book, "The Church School" by Athearn. Those who take the course on Christian Leadership by Mr. Hermon Eldredge will use the text book "Marks of a World Christian", by Fleming. As usual the book table will be present and the various books may be secured at the Chautauqua.

Come prepared to stay from start to finish. The closing lecture on Sunday night by Foreign Mission Secretary, Rev. W. P. Minton, will be a stereopticon and he will take us on a trip through Japan. He has some of the finest scenes from Japan that has ever been the privilege of the writer to see. Do not miss that closing lecture Sunday night. The sessions will open at 9:00 o'clock each day and close at one o'clock. The entire afternoon from one to eight will be given to bathing, games, fellowship, recreation, sight seeing. The waves and the breezes at Ocean View are bidding us assemble there July 18. Watch THE SUN and Herald for further information. Write Prof. S. M. Smith, Bankers Trust Building, Norfolk, Virginia for particulars.

SEASIDE CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS

Ocean View—July 18-24

Prospects are encouraging for a great session of the Chautauqua at Ocean View this year. We have been delighted at the hearty response given so far by the Eastern Virginia churches especially, and by the citizens of Ocean View in particular. It is very evident that the change from Virginia Beach to Ocean View was a wise one. The citizens of Ocean View are showing every evidence of interest and willingness to cooperate. A larger number of the churches are electing representatives than ever before, and are sending them with expenses paid.

A committee of 15 from the Norfolk and Portsmouth churches including the pastors spent a day at Ocean View last week canvassing the cottages and advertising. They met with every encouragement. The week preceding the Chautauqua a committee of 25 to 70 people from the eight local churches will go down one day and cover the entire beach selling season tickets.

Through the courtesy of the War Department in Washington, we have been able to secure the use of a number of small tents for class-room purposes. For the convenience of delegates and visitors there will be a luncheon room and cafeteria where refreshments may be secured at moderate prices.

The location of the big tent is ideal—plenty of shade and convenient to

All delegates and visitors who are planning to attend the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention which meets with the Reidsville Christian church July 12-14 will please notify Bro. J. M. the car line and boulevard. Boarding accommodations at Ocean View are even better than at Virginia Beach, and the rates more reasonable. We will publish a list of the nearby cottages next week. Persons coming from a distance (except speakers, of course) are requested to make their own reservations. The local committee will, however, do this if desired. Churches and Sunday schools that have not done so should elect representatives right away, arranging to pay a part or all of their expenses. It is too much to ask delegates to give their time and then pay their own expenses. We are expecting all the pastors to be there. Friends, we are going to make this session of the Chautauqua a thing for the Christian Church. Will you help us? They plan to be with us.

PASTOR HARWARD RESIGNS THE DENDRON-WAKEFIELD PASTORATE

This pastorate comprises the churches of Dendron, Wakefield, Burton's Grove, New Lebanon and Union (Surry). I took charge of these churches as pastor in the fall of 1915. The work has been heavy but we have enjoyed it, because for the most part we have had the cooperation of the people.

We found one missionary society in the field. Four of the churches have adopted the duplex envelope system and like it. All the Sunday schools make special offerings for missions, some every Sunday and others once per month.

The churches have raised the salary of the pastor three times and have bought a parsonage for him and his family to live in.

The last call extended to the pastor was for an indefinite time, with the understanding that if either pastor or people should come to feel that a change would be desirable it was to be made known.

So with this in mind and feeling that the time had come for a change I handed in my resignation on June 7, 1921, to Mr. J. H. Harris, Wakefield, Va., chairman of the pastoral committee. This resignation to take effect at the close of the present conference year or sooner if satisfactory arrangements can be made between pastor and people.

The work is heavy for one man and a committee of one from each church has been appointed to consider the prospects or possibility of making satisfactory arrangements to divide the field and have a pastor to locate at Wakefield. A pastor is very much needed there also. It will be decided soon as to whether such a change can be made for the coming year.

CALLED HOME

NORFLEET

W. H. Norfleet of Holland, Va., died April 29, 1921, aged 67 years. Mr. Norfleet had been confined to his bed for about seven months. He was cheerful and patient in his hours of affliction as he was cheerful and faithful to his Christian duty in time of health. He had been a member of the Holy Neck Christian church for a half century and a deacon in the same church for forty-two years. He was one of the most highly esteemed and respected citizens of the community. He is survived by a widow, four daughters and three sons, W. C. Norfleet of Norfolk, Va.; R. L. Norfleet, Portsmouth, Va.; and J. H. Norfleet of Boston, Mass.; Mrs. Lucile Holland, Mrs. Carlton Doughtie, and Mrs. H. E. Norfleet, all of Holland, Va., and Mrs. R. S. Davidson, of Norfolk.

The funeral services were held in the Holland Christian church, conducted by the writer and assisted by Drs. W. W. Staley, I. W. Johnson, J. P. Barrett, D. A. Long, C. H. Rowland, and Rev. L. F. Paulette. It was considered one of the largest funerals ever held in this vicinity. The gorgeous array of flowers was a token of the high esteem of his many friends. The blessings of the Lord be upon the bereaved family.

W. M. JAY.

HASLETT

J. D. Haslett, late of Suffolk, but formerly of Holy Neck district, died May 2, 1921, aged 61 years. Mr. Haslett had been in failing health for several months, and on January 13, 1921 he made sales of his personal property and moved to Suffolk. He gradually grew worse and weaker from the effects of a cancerous growth in the neck. His suffering was intense. He was an honored and respected citizen of Holy Neck district and a faithful member for many years of the Holy Neck church. He leaves a widow, one sister, Mrs. E. S. Darden, of Holland, Va., and two daughters, Mrs. S. A. Piland, Suffolk, Va., and Mrs. W. John Norfleet of Hardeville, S. C.

Funeral services were held in the Holy Neck Christian church, conducted by the writer and assisted by Drs. W. W. Staley and I. W. Johnson. Interment was made in the church cemetery. The floral tribute was beautiful. May the Lord be gracious unto the sorrowing ones.

SAVEGDE

Dorothy Spratley Savedge, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Beverly Savedge of Dendron, Va., was called away from the earthly home, June 8, 1921, after a brief stay of six months and two days. She was a beautiful and lovable child and the going, for the parents, was hard to bear, and yet they seemingly, soon get into the attitude of David who said of the departure of a little one, "He never more can come to me but I can go to him."

W. D. HARWARD.

HOLLAND

Little Royce Leslie Holland, only son of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Holland of Norfolk, Va., was killed June 10, 1921 while on his way to school, by a truck driven by a careless driver. He was nine years old and lived from 12:30 until 4:00 p. m., after the front wheels of the truck has passed over him. The boy was conscious and conversed with his parents until his death.

The incident, while terrifying and tragic was the means of drawing from the father a pledge to live a Christian life and thus meet his darling boy some day in the better land. May the Lord richly bless and comfort the grief stricken parents. Funeral services were held in the Holland Christian church on Sunday morning, conducted by the writer and assisted by Dr. J. P. Barrett. The body was laid to rest in the Holland cemetery.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—BAKER

Whereas, God in His great love deemed it wise, and best to pluck as it were, the full blown rose, and transplant from earth to heaven, when he took from her home and loved ones, Sister Inez Pierce Baker, one of the sweetest Christians I ever knew.

Ever ready to do her Master's bidding, perfectly resigned to the will of her beloved Savior.

Although the summons came unexpectedly she was willing, and ready, having expressed herself many times to her friends that she had no fear of death, and was expecting to meet her Christ who had gone before to prepare a place for her. When darkness overshadowed her home, and friends, and loved ones were in dreamland, God called and she answered the summons, but not before her life long friend and companion reached her side, and stood alone with her, until her sweet spirit took its flight to that beautiful city prepared by God. She leaves two little orphans but surely mother's prayers will follow them all the days of their lives, and when they answer the summons may mother and father be waiting at the beautiful gate and they may all be united to be with Christ forever.

Therefore be it resolved:

First: That we bow in humble submission to God's divine will knowing that He doeth all things well, and their loss is her gain.

Second: We extend to her loved ones our heartfelt sympathy, pointing them to the God, who gave and who has taken away. Our heart goes out to them in the loss of so dear a mother, neighbor, and friend, whose kindness to every one knew no bounds. And who was faithful and true to all to the end.

Third: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy placed on the minutes of Liberty Spring Christian church records.

"The Church's System of Education"

THE first division is the Sunday school, embracing the Cradle Roll, Home, Beginners', Primary, Junior, Intermediate, Young People's and Adult departments. The second division is Higher Education, grouping the Seaside Chautauqua, Summer School of Religious Education, and Elon College.

This is a logical arrangement of our system of education; and it is equally logical in its development. The slogan of every home should be, whenever and wherever practicable, "from Cradle Roll to College." The well-wishing parent desires that every child coming into the home shall have every possible good advantage. If every American home could send at least one child from the Cradle Roll to the various departments named above, finally graduating in some college, the course of the world would change. If every home within the bounds of our Southern Convention would take one child and let him or her go through the above named departments, graduating in Elon College, the history of the Christian Church would change so rapidly that all the eyes of the world would be centered upon us. It would take ten colleges the size of Elon to accommodate the students from our own communion alone. If each Sunday school in the Convention were to start one child in the graduated order according to the "Church's System of Education", it would in a few years graduate 225 of our people from Elon College each year, provided such a step included a four-year college course. If each Sunday school in the Convention should send one student to Elon College each year, and 75 per cent of each year's enrollment should not graduate, the Church would be graduating, direct from its Sunday schools, 57 each year of our own denomination from our own college. This number added to students from other sources would give us a graduating class of from 60 to 75 annually.

There should be, and we know there is, in every church, enough of appreciation for Elon, love for and loyalty to education, to see that one student is sent from each Sunday school. We are taking it for granted that in each Sunday school there is one or more high school graduates who can and should attend Elon College. Should we not be correct in such an assumption, we feel justified in saying that there are churches embracing a large membership, having proximity to high schools and having within their influence and membership a number sufficient to make up for the schools that may not have a member qualified for college entrance.

We invite our readers to examine on another page the unquestioned and unqualified endorsement of many liberal minds and noble hearts as they speak, after studying carefully and intelligently, the "Church's System of Education" as sent out by the Board of Education of the Southern Convention. If this system of education is logical, reasonable, and worthy of our approval, and it is, then let us not only approve it with words but back it up by acts and deeds.

As we see it, it is worthy of study, deserving of praise, and has within it such merit as to engage our loyal and unstinted support.

Community Recreation

ADMINISTERING to a community without some form of recreation is to administer without a well balanced program. There is a natural demand for life recreation that must be met. If such recreation is not under the direction of the best hearts and minds of the community it will take form in the minds and hearts of those not of the best—and this is why so many forms of recreation fall into disrepute: they are not properly regulated.

Without request, we desire to fully endorse the Chautauqua plan as a community recreation. We use these words advisedly, for while that part of the program that is not strictly entertainment, it is a change for us in our lines of thinking and increases our knowledge while we divert our minds from the daily routine.

Having watched very closely and studied very carefully the program of the Swarthmore Chautauqua for a few years, and also having a small part in bringing it to our city, we commend it to any community. Practically all of the Swarthmore Chautauqua personnel, from director to tent boy, is made up of college classed men and women—either as teachers or students.

The program on this circuit for this year, was, to us, unusually good and represented rare talent and high art. The Superintendent, Dr. Clement Vollmer, is a layman with a trained mind and heart, ever seeking through his lectures and personal contact to develop the best in humanity. Dr. Eliot A. Boyd's lecture on "The Advantages of a Handicap" is worth far more than can be estimated in dollars to any community. Dr. Bohn's "All the World and Ourselves", is a world study fully defined and outlined in such a way and manner as to impel a careful hearing. Drew Pearson in his illustrated lecture on "The New Power in Southern Europe" portrays in an electrified manner and gives to those who are fortunate enough to hear him, information in the most interesting form. Dr. Zilboorg brings a gripping story direct from Russia—and having served in Kerensky's cabinet, he speaks as one having authority. Dr. Jesse H. Holmes interprets the headlines of the daily press in such a way as to make the daily paper a clarified and understandable story.

But this much is concerning the lectures. The plays, the musicals, operas and junior chautauqua all come in for their place of praise and commendation. Space is too limited for us to make special mention of any of the features that are presented twice daily without duplication for the nominal fee of $2.50 for the week's program.

We commend the work of the Swarthmore Chautauqua to any community. It is an institution directed by intelligent men and women. We feel that a community will make no mistake in investing in it.

"Get In Next Issue"

NEARLY every week we receive articles accompanied by a letter or a penciled request on the margin to "get in next issue". Many of these requests go further and say "without fail". There should always be the best possible cooperation between this office and its every constituent, and we would like to assure contributors that we do all in our power to comply with every request about getting articles in the next issue. However, we should remind our friends that very little matter can be admitted to the next issue, that is received after Friday noon. The typesetting on the next week's issue begins before the issue of the present week reaches the subscribers. In our mail nearly every Monday morning we have from one to six or more articles with the special request to "get in next issue". This is difficult to do when the paper is made up on Friday afternoon and Saturday morning before, with the exception of about one page for the Editor's final notes that he has gleaned from his mail.

One of the easiest criticisms to make by the contributor of an article is to point out some article in the paper that is of minor importance than the one sent in with the urgent request to get in the next issue. Such criticisms, however, do not take into consideration the extra expense it would cost the paper in "lifting" certain pages, rearranging matter, and holding up the press work to get the type set on these urgent articles. We are inclined to believe that many feel like that all that is required to get an article in the next issue is for the article to reach the office any time before the paper is carried to the post office. They do not take into consideration the time it takes to do the composition, proof reading, make-ready, arranging in form, press work, folding, stitching, trimming, mailing, etc.

It is no common thing for us to receive an article after the paper is off the press, with the urgent request that such an article get in that week's issue by all means. It would take too much time to explain to these persons as we have above explained, and for that reason we have explained at length our program, with the hope that we will always be understood that every article reaching us at the last hour before going to press cannot be given consideration.

A man should never feel that he is educated. All learning is for more learning and when a man has filled his capacity of learning, he is an object of pity.

Hope is that eternal spark that fans the flames of life and adds color to the future.

The Death of Dr. Milo True Morrill

(The Herald of Gospel Liberty)

The news of Dr. M. T. Morrill's death will come as a great shock to the brotherhood. Only a few days ago had he been stricken and none of us had yet reconciled ourselves to the thought that we must lose him. Against the caution of friends and loved ones, he had driven himself without rest or ceasing year after year until finally, while before his afternoon class on June 9, he suffered a stroke of apoplexy and then later still another, which were the immediate cause of his death on June 22. Undoubtedly he had, in his ardor for the Kingdom, pushed himself beyond the point which his never-rugged strength could endure; and the Christian Church is again suffering the penalty of having overworked one of its most faithful servants.

Milo True Morrill was born to Mr. and Mrs. E. K. Morrill, March 13, 1865, at North Washington, Iowa. Soon the home was moved to Charles City and later to Wahpeton, North Dakota, where in 1885 Mr. Morrill completed his high school work. From his father, who was a newspaper publisher, he learned the printer's trade, which later became a helpful means of support while in college and university. While spending a year in study in Hamline University at St. Paul, Minnesota, he founded and edited the Hamline Oracle, a student newspaper. When thirty years later a nephew of Dr. Morrill was editor of this paper, there was still abundant evidence of the influence that had been exerted by its founder upon it. In 1889, he graduated with honors from Carleton College, in Minnesota, and having won a scholarship he spent the following year in graduate study in Harvard University. At the close of this study Dr. Morrill went to California and spent a year in search of health. Upon his return to the East, he accepted a position as teacher in Starkey Seminary; and a year later he was called to the pastorate of the Christian church at Woodstock, Vermont. It was while here that Dr. Morrill was united in marriage with Miss Alice C. Vaughan, thus forming the home that has blessed so many lives. To this union were born three children, two of whom are living, Marian L., a sophomore in Defiance College, and Justin M., a junior in the Defiance High School.

After a year of graduate study in Dartmouth College, Dr. Morrill removed his family to Dayton, Ohio, where for twelve years he was the efficient Secretary of Foreign Missions and editor of The Christian Missionary. In 1919, he accepted the chair of Biblical Literature and History in the Christian Divinity School, and entered upon what promised to be the crowning work of his varied and fruitful career and which, even though so quickly ended, has made an indelible impression upon that institution.

The funeral services were conducted on last Friday in the Defiance College chapel, with the pastor, Dr. Frank H. Peters, officiating, assisted by President Caris, Dean Enders, Dr. Thomas, Dr. Denison, Bro. Minton, and others. Dr. Morrill has filled many places of most invaluable service to the Christian Church, and won the universal esteem and love of all.

CONTRIBUTIONS

WITH THE FAITHFUL IN CANADA

EARLY in February of this year came a cordial request from our dear Brother, E. Lick, Oshawa, Ontario, Canada, Secretary of our Canadian Christian Conference, stating that June 15-19 the Conference would meet in its centennial session, and would convene and celebrate at Keswick, Ontario. . . . Would I accept the invitation of the Conference to attend and deliver as many as four addresses or sermons during the session?

The invitation accepted, at noon of Wednesday, June 15, I was met at the Union Station, Toronto, by Rev. Willoe J. Hall and Prof. J. N. Dales, both of whom gave me loving welcome and cordial greetings to the fair Dominion. Four hours later we reached Keswick and found the Conference already in session, with Rev. E. C. Hall of New Market presiding, and Bro. E. Lick, at the Secretary's desk. A happy welcome indeed was extended us, as we looked for the first time into the faces of many whose names, through THE SUN, The Herald, and Vanguard, had become familiar and beloved, and into the faces of others with whom we had already had fellowship in Christian service. The local church, Keswick, was celebrating the centennial of its founding, as was the Conference, and the rich traditions of one hundred years were ours. Mrs. P. W. Mahoney the great-granddaughter of the woman whose earnest appeals brought the first Christian minister to Canada and with him the founding of the Christian church there, is now an active member of the Keswick church and read a most interesting sketch of the founding of the Christians in Canada one hundred years ago. A very succinct and illuminating historical paper was presented by our beloved and cultured Prof. J. N. Dales from first pages of which I quote: "Heroes, apostles and statesmen are so called because they have keener vision and go farther than their fellows on the royal path of sacrifice and loyalty. Doubtless many members of the Christian connection came from the United States to Ontario in the early part of the 19th Century, but it was given to one woman to send back the challenge to Western New York for a Christian Missionary to Canada. And thus it came about that Ontario was the first Foreign Missionary field for the people called Christians. Mary Stogdil came to Newmarket in 1817. Her personal entreaties induced Allen Huntley, a young unordained minister, to try this not too inviting field of labor and in 1821 he crossed the lake and made his way to Mrs. Stogdil's home in Newmarket. There he met Darius Mann, who lived near Lake Simcoe and accepted his cordial invitation to go to North Gwillimbury and make his first effort. The results were most happy. A great revival of religion followed his preaching and in October 21, 1821, there took place in North Gwillimbury the first church organization of the Christians, the first ordination and the first baptism—the latter in the waters of Lake Simcoe.

The Conference Manual of 1884, which refers briefly to the preceding events defines three principles that were to be the inspiration and guidance of the New Movement:

1. The Scriptures of the Old and New Testament a sufficient Rule of Faith and Practice.
2. The Name Christian as the most appropriate for Christ's followers.
3. Christian character or vital piety the only test of fellowship.

In these broad principles we have anticipated the wide fellowship now prevailing and we modestly own some share in the spread of the spirit of unity which every one is so glad to recognize at the present time. The Christian Movement however had its baptism or persecution and misrepresentation. When its ministers desired to perform the marriage ceremony the law forbade. The struggle for recognition brought into view many leaders of whom the best known was Rev. Thos. Henry of Oshawa, who with others circulated petitions and interviewed persons of influence to the end that in 1845 the Christians were given legal rights such as other religious bodies already enjoyed."

From early years our Canadian brethren have had a publication of their own, first the Gospel Luminary, 1844-49, followed by the Christian Offering 1854-59. In 1866 the Christian Magazine appeared, followed in 1890 by The Christian Vanguard, of which Bro. Dales has been the capable and efficient editor for 29 years.

I found the spirit of missions in this Conference active, venerable and zealous. Over forty years ago, a Home Missionary Society of the Conference was organized, and now there is a very active Woman's Foreign Missionary Society doing most effectual work.

The work of the Conference was orderly, thorough and harmonious. All reports and questions were discussed intelligently and helpfully, and strictest attention was given to all by the delegates and visitors. There was usually only one report at a session in addition to routine work, and this report received the closest scrutiny and able discussion. The first afternoon was given to election of officers, president's annual report, reading church letters and treasurer's report. The writer spoke at night on "The Problems of the Evangelist." Thursday A. M., the devotions were led by Elder D. Prosser, followed by the report on Social and Moral Reform as presented by Bro. F. W. Kelly. Thursday afternoon was given to the Report on Religious Education, followed by papers and discussions of Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work. Thursday night Prof. J. N. Dales, Rev. C. E. Fockler and Mrs. Percy Mahoney, conducted a most interesting and happy Centennial Exercise. Friday A. M., Rev. W. J. Hall gave an inspirational devotional hour, which was followed by reports and discussions on "The Ministry" by Rev. D. V. Van Norman. "Education" by the Educational Board. In the afternoon Miss Laura Morton made the Report on Foreign Missions and Secretary E. Lick on Home Missions. At night Rev. W. J. Hall spoke on Home Missions and the writer on Foreign Missions.

Saturday A. M. Rev. D. V. VanNorman conducted the devotionals and Rev. E. C. Fockler presented the Report on Publications, and Prof. J. N. Dales was reelected editor of The Vanguard. The afternoon was given over to one of the most happy and spiritual fellowship meetings the writer ever witnessed. Scores testified for Christ, the communion of the Lord's Supper was observed and a baptismal service was held in Lake Simeon. Sunday was a happy day and the attendance was immense—far beyond the capacity of the house. Rev. E. Morton at the M. E. church and the writer at the Christian church were the morning appointments. Rev. W. J. Hall in the afternoon, Prof. J. N. Dales at the M. E. church in the evening and the writer at the Christian church made up the preaching schedule of the conference day. There were hundreds of people present and both dinner and supper were served from the town hall for all abundant and gratis. Keswick entertained in royal fashion serving breakfast at home, dinner and supper for all in the town hall each day. The writer's entertainment was at the parsonage where the pastor, Rev. E. C. Fockler, his charming wife and daughter dispensed hospitality most graciously to all who came under their roof.

Our Canadian brethren are doing real, solid, constructive Christian work, and the future has great things in store for us in the "Fair Dominion". The brethren and sisters there are cooperating in the spirit of Christian Unity and good fellowship and the work of the Lord is prospering at their hands. It was an unspeakable joy and a blessed inspiration to have converse and friendship with them in their wonderful centennial, for they one and all gave evidence of a people who look for a city that hath foundations and whose builder and maker is God.

J. O. ATKINSON.

SUFFOLK LETTER

HIGHER education becomes more important as education becomes more universal. The public school increases the necessity for the college. There is one danger to a true estimate of the value of the college, and that is the giving of diplomas to graduates of the high schools. Many parents do not stop to consider the difference between diplomas. The high school diploma certifies the completion of the course of study; the college diploma confers a degree. The high school prepares for college. In view of the demand upon scholars in the years to come, young people, who aspire to leadership in the world's work, should plan, when they finish high school to complete the course in college for a degree. The years and the money spent in such advanced work will amply repay the cost in time and money. It is doubly important to complete a college course in the denominational school to which the person belongs, as it is important for those who take a university course to take it in their own state. There is a coherent church acquaintanceship and a permanent loyalty attained that makes the life more useful and more satisfactory. This may seem a small matter; but there are no small matters in education. A B C's are just as important in English education as psychology or integral calculus. The place of education is as important as the course of education. Compare scholars educated in German universities and American universities.

The duty of families in the Christian Church is the support, by patronage, of Elon College; and since the Preparatory Department has been discontinued, it is all the more important for parents to send their high school graduates to Elon College to cover the loss of students by the discontinuance of the Preparatory Department. One hundred churches would send one student each in addition to the present number, it would make a Freshman Class of one hundred, and that would maintain the standard number of four hundred students in the college. It does not require much thinking to see the increase and improvement in Christian pulpits and Christian congregations since Elon College was founded in 1890. The increase in all the activities of the church, missions, benevolences, orphanage work, parsonages, local charities and foundations laid for permanent and progressive growth indicates, in some measure, the value of the college in the development of the cause of Christ as represented by the Christian Church. Pastors especially should be interested in securing students for Elon College. If every pastor would secure one new student from each of his charges, he would add to his usefulness and the student body for the coming year. State schools, and especially vocational schools make great effort to induce high school graduates to attend these institutions; but they are not the schools to meet the requirements of people who look to larger things than early entrance into a money-earning position. That sounds good to a person with limited means, but it circumscribes the outlook for the future. Young people of capacity can work out means easier than those of means can work out capacity. Those who aspire to first place in the world's service in the future must take time and do the work to prepare for such position. If I were a young person, I would make up my mind to get a diploma from Elon College. If I did not have the money, I would borrow it and insure my life to protect the person who let me have it; if I could not borrow the money, I would work till I earned it and then pay my own expenses. Longtime in preparation shortens time in success.

PEACE RESOLUTION ADOPTED

On June 30, 1921, a peace resolution was adopted in the House by a vote of 263 to 59. After being adopted by the House it was taken up in the Senate but carried over to another date with favorable action then said to be assured. Disension in both Senate and House centered on the disposal of alien property and the question of ending the state of war by declaring peace or by repealing war resolutions. President Harding is expected to soon endorse the compromise Congressional resolution ending the state of war with Germany and Austria.

The Church's System of Education

: : : TESTIMONIALS IN ITS BEHALF : : :

A GREAT DAY FOR EDUCATION

I notice that our Southern Christian Convention has adopted what it calls The Church's System of Education, embracing the work of our Sunday schools in their various departments and our Educational Institutions. This is a great day for education, and I wish to say, in so far as these lines of educational work are dominated by the Holy Spirit, and the work done for the glory of God, I say Amen!

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

Holland, Va.

A STEP TOWARD LEADERSHIP

I heartily endorse the poster that was placed in our Sunday school rooms, entitled, "The Church's System of Education." We need leaders in our Sunday schools. Elon College is the place to send your sons and daughters to acquire the desired leadership.

B. D. JONES.

Holland, Va.

TWO GREAT INSTITUTIONS

As a member of the Sunday school and as an Elon College student, I believe that these two great institutions, the Sunday school and the Christian College, should be more closely related in all our thought and effort. Consequently, I endorse most heartily the plan now being urged by the College, that every Sunday school be represented in next year's enrollment. As this ideal is realized, leaders for our future work will be assured. Such a noble work, I am sure, will enlist the whole-hearted cooperation of every person who has an interest in the Christian Church and Sunday school of tomorrow.

LUCY M. ELDREDGE.

915 W. Eighth St., Erie, Pa.

LET THE CIRCLE BE UNBROKEN

I desire to express through THE SUN my unqualified approval of "The Church's System of Education" as set forth in the poster printed last February by the Board of Education of the Southern Christian Convention.

The future welfare of America is dependent not so much upon education as upon Christian Education. It may be questioned as to whether mere education without the foundation of the Christian faith is not more dangerous than ignorance.

Let the circle be unbroken—the Church supplying the denominational school with material which it may develop and return to the Church in the shape of an educated ministry and laity.

Only by such a process may the Church expect to attain to her goal in promoting the spread of the Gospel and hastening the coming of His Kingdom.

NELSON F. RICHARDS.

Winchester, Va.

FULLY ENDORSES

Elon College, being the leading educational institution of the Southern Christian Convention, it affords me very great pleasure to write a line in behalf of the College: also to endorse Dr. W. A. Harper's plan for recruiting students for the coming year.

All honor and praise to Dr. W. A. Harper, who is doing a wonderful work for the uplift of our young people.

MRS. W. H. CARROLL.

Burlington, N. C.

GOOD LOGIC

I desire to say that I heartily endorse "The having the Sunday schools furnish a certain quota each of the whole student body of Elon College.

The Sunday school is the religious school for the church locally, and should therefore be the logical feeder for our Church college.

Would that we, as pastors and churches might be able to create the sentiment that is a promotion of the highest order to be promoted from the ranks of the Sunday school to the ranks in our Church college. May Elon's ranks be thus largely swelled from such recruits from our Sunday schools this fall.

W. M. JAY.

Holland, Va.

HEARTILY ENDORSED

I desire to say that I heartily endorse the "The Church's System of Education" as set forth by the Board of Education of the Southern Christian Convention, and believe that the proposition should be complied with, if possible, by the various Sunday schools of the Convention.

Will Your Sunday School and Church Meet the Challenge?

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

LINES FROM THE BRETHREN

Rev. E. M. Carter, Wadley, Ala., writes of the Missionary Rally at Noon Day church, Saturday and Sunday, May 28-29: "We had a fine congregation, though not as many churches represented as we hoped. Two Missionary Societies were reported organized, at Antioch and New Hope. The people seemed much interested. The subjects given in the program were all discussed, with possibly one exception..

"It was decided to have another missionary rally second Sunday of September, and Saturday before, and this program is to be arranged by our Woman's Board. The Sunday school Board is to have a short period of the time. I feel that before that date we will have more societies than we now have."

Rev. H. E. Rountree, now a regimental chaplain with the U. S. Marines is at present at Port-au-Prince Haiti, or was May 30, and writes personally. "I am having gratifying results. My work with men is accompanied with a success I did not have in the pastorate. I receive THE SUN and The Herald and am trying to keep abreast with the Church and its activities. I shall never lose my keen interest in it though the chaplain's duties may take me always a long way from it." Though Chaplain Rountree is having success with the U. S. Marines, some of our vacant pulpits need him, and somehow we hope one of them will secure his pastoral services ere long.

Under date of June 1, our good missionary, Miss Toshio Sato, writes: "The money order for $400.00 was received yesterday. It was delayed over two weeks on account of the misinterpretation of my name at the Yokohama postoffice. Thank you for the money. (The same being three months' salary.) As Mrs. Fry is not here I am quite busy, but happy working. Our vacation will not begin before 10th of July. After the 10th I will be at home and my address will be Motowakuya Tota Gun, Mavagi Kan, Japan." Mrs. Fry now in the States on furlough advises that Miss Toshio has done a wonderful year's work in Christian service in our Japan missionary school.

We were recently at Fanev Gap, Va., and in order for Miss Hedgpeeth to continue her work there and accomplish more it was necessary for her to have a horse. A splendid saddler was secured for $150.00, of which Miss Hedgpeeth gave $25.00. I wrote Rev. W. M. Jav, pastor Holy Neck, who had expressed the opinion that his missionary society would purchase a horse when necessary to the work. In reply this cheering letter came:

"Dear Dr. Atkinson: Your letter of a few days ago received and was very much interested in its contents

I spoke to a number of the members of the church missionary society and they are very glad to assume the cost of the horse, which I understand to be $125.00 and if at any time the horse is sold after it is paid for Holy Neck church will get the purchase price to be used again for some mission cause as the church may direct.

"With this understanding, I am sending you a check from the Missionary Society of Holy Neck church in the amount of seventy dollars. The remainder will be paid as rapidly as the society can secure the money.

"This society is the only one of its kind that I know of. Its membership consists of both men and women, and aims to get every member of the church to be a member of one of the departments of this missionary society.

"The meetings are held quarterly, using every fifth Sunday for a special missionary program. Our mission superintendent, Mrs. B. D. Jones, always has something worth while planned for this occasion."

Rev. H. S. Hardeastle who because of a very strenuous year at Yale did not feel able to the task of a pastorate this summer, writes under date, June 18: "I will remain in New Haven until about June twenty-eighth, when I will leave for Kamp Kill Kare, St. Albans Bay, Vermont, where I will spend two months in work with boys. We are to be located on Lake Champlain not far from the Canadian border and I am to have a part in the athletic activities as well as full charge of the religious services. I believe it will be a most fruitful summer in many ways. And I hope it will enable me to recruit enough energy to carry me through my last year at Yale in great style." Bro. Hardeastle is to go for us as a missionary to China after he concludes his preparation at Yale and SUN readers are deeply interested in his work and welfare.

Rev. J. D. Wicker, Sanford, N. C., at the request of the Mission Secretary has recently visited Antioch and Bethlehem, Warren Co., and finds conditions there very hopeful. He will hold meetings at both churches this summer and serve as pastor for both till conference.

OCEAN VIEW, VIRGINIA, JULY 18---24, 1921

C. H. ROWLAND, President
Franklin, Va.

S. M. SMITH, General Secretary
100 Freemason St., Norfolk, Va.

CHAUTAQUA NOTES

The Christian Endeavor Society of the Memorial Christian Temple will operate a cafeteria on the grounds. Light lunches, sandwiches, cold drinks, ice cream and fruits will be sold at city prices.

18—July—24

Bring your fishing tackle and bathing suit. Ocean View is the home of the celebrated "Ocean View Spot", while all the other favorite varieties of the finny tribe sojourn in these same waters.

Ocean View is also the most popular bathing beach anywhere around Norfolk.

18—July—24

One of the most interesting features of this year's session will be the "Flag Raising" every morning at nine o'clock preceding chapel exercises in the tent. One of our ministers who served overseas will act as bugler for this appropriate ceremony.

18—July—24

The uniform of the Chautauqua will be white felt hats, white trousers, and shirt sleeves for men. We would not undertake to prescribe any kind of uniform for the ladies—styles are too complicated, except to say that everybody will be expected to wear the Chautauqua hat. These will be for sale on the grounds at cost, about 75 cents.

18—July—24

The most noted man on this year's program is Marion Lawrance of Chicago. Mr. Lawrance is the world's leader in Sunday school work. He has been for many years General Secretary of the International Sunday School Association. He speaks on Saturday night.

18—July—24

The most interesting feature probably of this year's entire session will be the big parade on opening night. (Monday). We expect at least 500 people in line. The assembly will be at the Baptist church (near the station) at 6:30. Parade will move at 7:00 o'clock around the Ocean View Hotel to Bath House, down the board walk to the pavilion and down Virginia Ave. to the tent.

The nine churches in the Norfolk vicinity: Memorial Temple, Third church, First church, South Norfolk, Newport News, Rosemont, Lambert's Point, Portsmouth, and Prentice Park will contest for the largest attendance at the Chautauqua. A handsome banner will be awarded to the church that has the largest delegation in the parade on opening night. It is needless to say that all "our folks" in and around Norfolk will be going to Ocean View that night.

There will be no admission fee on opening night. Admission at other times will be, single lecture 25 cents, all-day session 50 cents, season ticket for the entire week $1.00. Many insist that our rates are entirely too low and that a season ticket is worth at least $5.00. To hear many of the speakers lecture one time would ordinarily cost $1.00. However, the admission remains the same as heretofore.

It is encouraging to note that many churches and Sunday schools are sending representatives this year and paying all expenses. Others are sending their pastors. This is as it should be. It is enough to ask one to give his or her time for one week to say nothing of paying their own expenses. While the week is truly one of recreation and pleasure it is also one of close application and study.

18—July—24

Every effort will be made to see that every one who attends the Chautauqua has a good time. Lectures will close at 1:00 P. M. each day. Lunch will be served at the cottages and hotels from 1:30 to 2:30. The afternoons will be devoted to rest and recreation. Rev. O. D. Poythress has been elected Recreation Officer. He will be assisted by E. W. Dance former Physical Director of the Norfolk Y. M. C. A.

A special program of water sports and other amusements will be provided for each afternoon. This part of the week's program will be unusually interesting.

Certain clergy who will attend this session, like the disciples of old, have attained a reputation as fishermen. Due recognition will be given to their skill during the week. One afternoon will be devoted to a contest in which only ministers will be allowed to participate. The minister who knows how to "cast his net on the right side" and who brings in the largest catch will be awarded a prize.

We are expecting Brother Netum Rathbun of our Publishing House at Dayton, Ohio to be on hand with his usual complete line of books, Bibles, and Sunday school helps. We appreciate having Bro. Rathbun with us every year. Come prepared to make purchases from his stock of good things.

Street cars from Norfolk to Ocean View leave over two different routes every fifteen minutes. These cars all leave from City Hall Ave., opposite Monticello Hotel. The fare is fourteen cents each way or twenty-eight cents round trip. The Chautauqua tent which will be on the Government Reservation is only a short distance from the Ocean View station where all cars stop. Follow the arrow and you will have not trouble in finding the place.

S. M. SMITH, General Secretary

18—July—24

SEASIDE CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS

OCEAN VIEW, VIRGINIA. JULY 18-24, 1921

A Christian School of Methods for ALL departments of church activities. Here preachers can learn how to improve their ministry; Sunday school teachers how to improve their teaching and efficiency; Mission leaders how to increase and improve their societies; Christian Endeavor leaders how to enlist more young folks and how to create a deeper spiritual interest; church officials and members may catch a new vision of opportunity and obligation in their work; song leaders may be inspired with a new sense of worship and their value in Kingdom service; in fact, it is a real SCHOOL with the best of TEACHERS, LECTURERS, and LEADERS, a SEMINARY for ALL classes of Christian workers. No one knows too much and no one knows too little to profit by a week in this Chautauqua.

The recreational hours in the afternoon of each day give some respite from the strenuous class work of the forenoon, and time to prepare for the evening exercises. This feature has its value in building body and mind under most exhilarant conditions. Seabaths, excellent fishing, breezes from the Atlantic and the Bay, combine to meet the taste and the need of every individual.

The more faithful Christian workers are in their home churches the more they NEED, and the more they are ENTITLED to a week like this by the Sea and with the great Leaders in Christian work. Churches would profit by sending their pastors, and Sunday schools would find it a good investment to send some officer or teacher to learn something new in their work.

The presence and work of Marion Lawrance ought to inspire many Sunday school Superintendents to attend. It would be a great asset in a Superintendent's life to have known personally, Marion Lawrance, the world's greatest Sunday school leader.

The cost at the View will be ONE DOLLAR for the SEASON TICKET, and lodging and board for the week $15.00 to $25.00.

OUR ORPHANAGE

We are very anxious to get the furnishings in the "Baby Home" by August 1, and let the little tots have possession. We have had quite a number of applications for a place in the last two weeks. Ten applications in one day. Have been averaging three applications per day for nearly two weeks. All of them seem to be worthy and deserving. We want to ask our Sunday schools and our church people to give us liberal support that we may do a larger work for God in this branch of our Church work. It is an opportunity you have to serve. A privilege to do good. Many little tots who will be reared here as the years go by will rise up in the future and bless the Christian denomination for giving them an opportunity to make something of themselves.

One of our girls who left here nearly four years ago graduated in June as a graduate nurse ready to go out in life to nurse the sick to health again. A few weeks ago when I was sick and confined to my room one of our girls who will soon graduate wrote me that if I needed her services to let her know and she would come and nurse me back to health again. It made our heart glad to see such appreciation for what the institution had been to her. While we did not have to have a special nurse we appreciated the spirit of the offer.

We have quite a number of children we have sent out from our institution that we are very proud of and as the years go by and our church grows in the work and gives us a more liberal support and enables us to do a larger work we hope to have a great host of boys and girls that will reflect credit on the institution that reared them.

A LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley: While mother and daddy are sending their dollar to the Home Fund, we want to help the orphans with our dimes. One of our playmates (Irene Corbitt) visited the little children and she told us so many good things about them. We hope to make them a visit some time. Love to each of them.—Earl and Ernest Pierce, Jr.

Glad to have your letter this week. It is the only one we have to keep the corner alive and to bring sunshine to us. Don't forget to write each month.—"Uncle Charley".

WORLD HAPPENINGS

COAL STRIKE SETTLED IN ENGLAND

After holding out for 88 days, the miners lost their strike in England, June 28, 1921. The Triple Alliance heralded as the strongest labor union in the world has been rendered helpless. Less than three years ago the railway men, the transport workers and miners with a membership of 2,000,000 approximately, formed a Triple Alliance so as to be able to put up a strong front to the government. However, one fact stood out in the recent settlement of June 28; that the Triple Alliance had failed to act in answer to the plea of the miners that they were fighting to put industry on a national basis and that the railways would have to face a similar fight with the government when the roads are given back to the owner in August. The miners gained one point—establishment of the profit sharing principle—but they lost the fight for a national pool and a national wage board; accepted a reduced pay.

WOMEN ACT IN JURY BOX

June 28, 1921, attorneys lost in their effort to bar women from the jury in the famous trial of Mrs. Eva Catherine Kaber, charged with plotting the assassination of her husband, Daniel F. Kaber, in their Lakewood home two years ago. A motion made by her attorneys to have a special venire of 42 prospective jurors annulled because there were five women among them, on the ground that constitutional right to sit on a jury had not been extended to women, was overruled by Judge Maurice Bernon, without argument from the state. As a result woman has made one more step toward equal rights with men.

SOCIALISTS WARNED BY DISABLED VETERANS

The socialists national convention being held in Detroit, Mich., was invaded shortly after noon June 29, by fifty delegates to the convention of the disabled American veterans of the world war. The socialists were warned by the loyal veterans that they would not stand for any disloyalty to the country and that they were again ready to defend the flag against sedition, disloyalty and treason. The leader of the veterans, Ralph Horr of Seattle, told the radicals that any cases of such sedition and treason would be met with force and invited them outside "if they wanted to fight for their beliefs." The leader also told them that they had had occasion in Seattle to use machine guns and they would use them again to stamp out all disloyalty, sedition and treason.

The socialist, Cameron King, replied for the socialists. He said they appreciated the sacrifices that the veterans had made but as American citizens they claimed the right of free speech and that they were going to stand out for that right. The visit was made without disorder and after the talks were made the veterans quietly withdrew.

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT, CHIEF JUSTICE

Former President Taft was nominated Chief Justice of the United States, June 30, 1921, by President Harding and his nomination confirmed by the Senate in executive session.

There was some opposition voiced as to his confirmation by Senators Borah, Idaho; Johnson, California; and Lafollette, Wisconsin, who were said to have criticized his record. The Democratic Senators are said to have strongly defended Mr. Taft and highly praised his record. The Southern Senators voted solidly for him with the exception of Mr. Watson of Georgia. The final vote being 60 to 4.

When Mr. Taft received the news he made the statement that it had been the ambition of his life to be Chief Justice of the United States but now that it was gratified he trembled to think whether he could worthily fill the position in a way useful to his country.

PEACE DECLARED WITH GERMANY

On April 6, 1917, the United States declared war on Germany. Although her Allies made peace with Germany months and months ago, the United States has maintained her state of war for these four long years. On June 30, the House passed a peace resolution which went to the Senate and then was signed by the President. This resolution was the end of our war with Germany and Austria.

Until this time the American soldiers on the Rhine were not allowed to visit in Germany. All of them have wanted to do so but were not allowed the privilege on account of the state of war existing between the two countries. Now it is expected that they will go without officers in pairs, dozens and hundreds to see Berlin and other important cities in Germany. And America, for the first time in over four long years is free of war and at peace with the world; so far as technicalities are concerned.

NOTICE

There will be a meeting of the Committee on Education of the North Carolina Conference at Reidsville, N. C. during the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention July 12-14. All persons having business with the Committee are requested to present the same at this time.

CHURCH NEWS

PASTOR IS GIVEN A BIRTHDAY PARTY

Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor of the First Christian church, Norfolk, was given a surprise birthday party Thursday evening June 16, by a large number of the members of his church and quite a few of his special friends and admirers. It was the pastor's 36th birthday. Just as the day was quietly passing, as all his other birthdays had done, he was surprised by the arrival of about 100 or more persons, who took charge of the parsonage, and presented their pastor first with a beautiful cake all covered with candles, and then with a purse of money amounting to more than $50.00. The cake was baked by Mrs. B. F. Speight, and the purse was the gift of the preacher's many friends.

The happy company also brought along home-made cake and ice cream in such an abundance that all present were served, and several sick persons in the community remembered.

Mrs. M. E. Nichols, loved by all who know her, and who has been sick now for two years, added much to the occasion by her presence. She seemed to enjoy the evening so much, as it was the first time she had been able to visit her pastor on account of her illness.

Bro. Morgan, tried to thank the friends for the honor conferred upon him, but was so surprised that words failed him, for even though Mrs. Morgan had known for several days he had not the slightest idea of it, but the expression on his face let his friends know that he was delighted and that he was also deeply grateful, and was not unmindful of the friendly spirit that prompted their kind remembrance.

ONE OF THE PARTY.

ORANGEPORT, N. Y.

The work at Orangeport has been moving on in an encouraging manner during the last year. Our work began here June 6, 1920.

During the year our congregations have been good and our Sunday school attendance has been steadily increasing. Easter Sunday was the first time our attendance reached over 100, but we have had more than 100 present several Sundays since that time. On June 5, our report showed 128 present and on June 12 we had 158. The excellent Children's Day program was no doubt helpful in securing this attendance. On Children's Day 1920 our report showed 97 present.

It was a pleasure to pastor and people to have Rev. W. H. Denison with us June 5. His presentation of the Forward Movement was enjoyed by us. This is the great movement before our Church today. Our Men's Class has organized a Men's Club recently and hopes to do more work and accomplish more by this means. We expect to hold monthly meetings and lay plans to enlarge our work. We have had only one meeting so far and that was well attended although this is a busy season with the farmers.

Our Woman's class is also arranging to hold monthly meetings.

Taken altogether our work here looks encouraging and we hope to see more accomplished during our second year.

RICHMOND, VA.

The First Christian church, Richmond, Va., is still on the map and is a healthy child of the Southern Christian Convention. We have a band of workers, whose indomitable determination and perseverance will ultimately result in a vigorous growth and permanent success. Fourteen members have been added during the past quarter and new names are being continually added to the list of prospects.

Our Sunday school rendered a splendid Children's Day program, on June 12, which was enjoyed by all. Our church has decided to become a member of the Eastern Virginia Conference and will apply for admission at the next annual session of the body.

We have been fortunate during this month in having with us Mrs. F. E. Bullock, Field Secretary of the Sunday School Department of the American Christian Convention, and Miss Iola Hedgepeth, who is doing home mission work for our Church in the mountains of Virginia. Both gave helpful and inspiring addresses on their lines of work and as a result our Sunday school is undertaking larger things and our people are planning to do something for Miss Hedgepeth's field.

Building a Christian church in Richmond, is a large, but essential undertaking for the Christian denomination. We request the prayers of the brotherhood in behalf of the movement.

LANETT, ALABAMA

One of the most successful revivals ever held at the Lanett church came to a close on Sunday, June 12. Rev. H. M. Gray did the preaching and the music was furnished by Mr. J. L. Stuart and his vocal class, and also several young men of the Lanett band, who assisted with their instruments. Brother Gray preached forceful and effective sermons, for which he received much praise.

The other ministers of Lanett, together with their respective congregations, cooperated heartily with Bro. Gray in making the revival a success. The seating capacity of the house was not sufficient to accommodate the crowds that attended. As a result of the meeting, nineteen members were received, seventeen of which were added to the Christian church. The incidental offering amounted to about $60.00, and the free-will offering for Brother Gray was about $240.00.

Interest in the work here is growing. The Sunday school is better this year than at any time since the writer has been connected with the church. The greatest hindrance to the cause is the need of a new building, which we hope to have when the business stress is relieved.

Pastor Gray is doing a great work here and is attracting the attention of the leading people of the community as well as uniting more closely the members of the church in the bounds of Christian fellowship.

MEBANE CHURCH

At my last appointment we received four additional members, three young men and one young lady. This little church, as I see it, is doing its best. First, it has a splendid Sunday school; second, it has a live prayer meeting; third, its financial record is fine—its members have paid its subscription to Men and Millions Movement for 1921 and two of its members have paid in full for the five years. They have also given to the Orphanage since last Conference, I think, about seventy dollars; fourth, they keep their pastor's salary paid up monthly; fifth, I think the spiritual condition of this little band is developing beautifully and sixth, nearly every member of this church attends every service. I look upon this as being encouraging.

We have a good Sunday school room but it has become too small. Hence we are now planning to enlarge the building; for it is a necessity. Any financial help that any big-hearted brother may see fit to give us, will be highly appreciated. You can send it to J. O. Fowler, Mebane, N. C. We are now planning for a series of meetings to begin Thursday before the fourth Sunday in July and for laen of room we have secured a tent. Rev. J. G. Truitt, late of Prineeton, N. J., is to aid us in this meeting. Pray for us that the Lord may give us great victory in saving many souls.

P. T. KLAPP, Pastor

I forgot to mention above that this little church met its challenge and sent to the Orphanage one dollar for each of its members.

NOTICE!

NOTICE!!

The Sunday School Association of the Eastern Virginia Conference will meet with the First church, Norfolk, Va., on July 27-28 instead of July 20-21 as per adjournment. This change was made because of the meeting of the Chautauqua at Ocean View July 18-24. All Sunday schools are asked to bear this change of date in mind, and we will expect a delegate or more from each school on July 27-28.

DAMASCUS

The third Sunday at this place was a blessed day. It was Childrens' and Memorial Day. The exercises were of a high order. The recitations were so interesting that the large congregation was held for two hours without a break. After the children were through with their part, the pastor gave an account of the Orphanage, its present accommodation, its needs for equipment and its continued dependence upon the church for support. Then, a free will offering was taken which amounted to near twenty dollars. Then, Dr. Harward W. Odum of Chapel Hill, N. C., delivered a splendid memorial address which was listened to with intense interest. The Doctor is a delightful man.

Then flowers were placed upon the graves, after which a sumptuous dinner was served. After dinner the writer preached to a large audience. Thus, the day was spent. The program was arranged and the children trained by Sister Lula Crabtree and Superintendent C. Lindsey. To God be all the honor and praise for the good accomplished.

ROSE HILL CHURCH REVIVAL

The evangelistic meeting at the Rose Hill Christian church began May 26 and continued through June 19. Rev. Geo. D. Eastes was the evangelist and Mr. Alfred Shumate was the soloist and musical director. These talented and efficient men constitute a splendid combination. Evangelist Eastes is a noble Christian gentleman and a great preacher. His messages are of a high type and they are presented in an earnest, logical and appealing manner. Mr. Shumate is a man of charming personality. His solos were superb. He led the congregational singing to the entire satisfaction of all who heard him. He has a wonderful solo voice and he is using it to a great advantage. No pastor can make a mistake by securing the services of these men.

The meeting was a signal success. It is very difficult to compute the results of any evangelistic campaign. But even the visible results justify the effort. During the meeting there were thirty-two professions, scores of reconsecrations and twenty additions to the church. The number of additions does not seem large, but it is very gratifying when figured from a percentage basis. The additions compose fifty-three percent of the church membership at the beginning of the meeting.

The response of the church to the financial needs of the campaign was very encouraging. The expenses of the meeting amounted to $503.50, and the thank offering for Evangelist Eastes was $175.00. The total amount raised was $678.50.

Perhaps our faith has not been fully rewarded and our highest hopes realized, but without doubt the meeting meant more to the church than any campaign the church has ever launched. It gave the church a prominence in the community that it has never enjoyed. In the days to come we expect to reap abundant harvests from the seed which were sown during these three weeks of intensive effort.

DAMASCUS—DANVILLE—MT. OLIVET

Damascus—I have been trying to serve the good people of Damascus (Gates Co., N. C.) since early in the spring. These are a very kind people to serve and should have a pastor, parsonage, and new church all in Sunbury, N. C. Brother O. D. Poythress will be with us in a revival here the week after the first Sunday in August.

Danville—Last Sunday (June 26) I began as pastor of the Third Avenue church, Danville, Va. This field presents an opportunity for real service. A man is needed to locate on the field. Brother Lightbourne has just closed a revival there and I suppose that Bro. McCauley, former pastor, will give an account of the meeting. The Sunday school is doing fine work. Six members were taken in the church last Sunday. The pastor's salary has been increased. If these people will unite their efforts there is no reason why much good will not be accomplished.

Mt. Olivet—Since early in the spring I have been making one trip a month to Mt. Olivet, Green Co., Virginia. On this trip I preached four times. Large congregations greeted me each time. We plan our revival here the week after the fourth Sunday in July. We have organized a C. E. Society that is doing excellent work considering its age. I hope another year to be located closer my field of labor. I now travel 810 miles per month, and have a church in three different conferences. Most truly I do favor the "Pastorate plan".

DUNSON CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Early in the spring a committee from the northern part of LaGrange, Ga., called on Rev. C. W. Hanson and informed him of a desire for a church. A meeting was held and on June 26, 1921 the Dunson Christian church was organized with 24 members. Brother C. W. Hanson will preach for the church until it can make other arrangements. H. L. Woodham was elected church clerk, and Brothers Tom Crowder, Clifford Alford, Jesse McRae and H. S. Carpenter were elected deacons. The sick committee consists of J. H. Fincher, Chas. Grice and Spears McDowell. We ask the prayers of the Brethren for the work in the town and country for we have a hard fight to make. We have received over one hundred members in both of the old churches this year and are expecting great things of our new church.

Rev. Spears McDowell came from the Baptist Church and is a consecrated young man.

SEASIDE CHAUTAUQUA AND SCHOOL OF METHODS AT OCEAN VIEW

JULY 18-24, 1921

The Seaside Chautauqua has changed from Virginia Beach to Ocean View for good and sufficient reasons. It is more convenient from Norfolk, and less expense. The Committee on arrangements will do all that is possible to make it comfortable and profitable. We plead with the members of the Christian Church to plan for a vacation, and go to Ocean View July 18-24.

We have a strong program, and the best speakers and teachers to be had. We plead with all of the churches to send your pastors. It will do the churches as much good as it will the preachers. Do not put off getting your money ready and send your pastor. Every Sunday school is asked to send delegates. Send some one and tell him to get help and bring it to the school. We are counting on the churches and Sunday schools to do all within their power to have representatives present for every session.

THE NEED OF BOOKS

Is there really a need for books? Why are there so many books in print and why are there so many more being written and published every day? Isn't it true that when the need or usefulness of a thing ends, that thing will go out of existence itself? This is true in every phase of life as well; it is a law of Nature. We know why the fish in the Mammoth Cave have no eyes and we have every reason to believe that at one time they did have eyes. Then there is a need for books—what is that need, are we realizing it?

Books develop originality in an individual. Perhaps one might disagree with us there; but, does a person ever originate an idea without some outside stimuli? How was electricity discovered; was it not the shock from the kite that suggested the idea to Franklin? Is this not true in the case of all inventions; have they not been suggested by some outside stimuli?

Books are inspirational. Do you not feel stronger after reading a book that has your ideals, the kind of characters you like portrayed in it? In reading a book you place yourself in the hero's role; you bear his trials, his temptations and his victories are yours. You have, in a way, had the experience of the characters; you are broader, you have a stronger hold on yourself and when you do meet just such experiences as you have read of, you are the better able to handle them.

The greatest thing that books do for us, is that they take the selfishness from the heart of the individual. The best rule of life for the individual to follow is to so live that the individual life will mean the most to humanity. After all, what is a life that has not been of any service; that has disregarded the above rule and lived for the individual alone? Yet many a person is living that kind of a life today because he does not really understand the other fellow. How can he understand the other fellow if he does not read? What better way is there to understand the other fellow than reading a book in which the thoughts of every kind of a character are portrayed?

Books, then, develop originality; books are inspirational and they teach us to live for others. These are only a few advantages to be gained from reading—do we not neglect our home, neglect our community and do we not neglect our God, if we fail to read?

BOOK REVIEW

"The Hero of Heroes," by Robert F. Fulton, is a story of the life of Christ. This is one of the very best books for young people. In fact, it is written for young people. Mothers and fathers should see that their children have the advantage of this book. It is very appropriate for a birthday gift.

THE EDITOR

Words are symbols of meaning. Difference of opinion usually result from the difference in the interpretation of symbols, or words, and not so much from what we actually think. Believers of the Christ agree on fundamentals, but differ when it comes to understanding what a word signifies. Education—the same education—to the same individual will not produce uniformity of interpretation. If it did, then the adoption of a uniformity of teaching would give uniformity in thinking. It is the difference in understanding and the difference in our interpretation, that fan the flames of truth; and so out of the multitude of counselors we receive wisdom. Non-essentials should not divide men so long as they can agree upon the essentials or fundamentals. Many interpretations, many faiths, should unite men on necessary things because of the test of the truth. Words, then, are not what actually is, but what they signify.

Work and The World's Work

ONE of the world's blessings is that the average man is busy. Crime rarely ever exists where the mind is busy with creditable and legitimate work. The ease and comfort that is so often manifested about a room where eriminal court is being held is that there are so many who are not accustomed to work. Criminals and their friends are usually an idle class.

But why are men so busy? There must be a reason. Few men would accept a position if they knew that it would take every minute of their time. They do not look at it in that light. They see in it time to be with their families; time for a vacation, time for their friends, and dotted all between, rest periods. These, however, are usually illusions of the mind. Here is the reason: It is not a man's position that keeps him so busy as it that part of the world's work that he must do without compensation in money. The world is an organization and all of us are interested in its welfare; in fact beings makeup the world in the larger meaning.

It is not the morning's mail that keeps a man in his office all day. It is the side issues that emanate from the information in that mail. One man writes for a wee bit of information. The giving of that information is a small item; the getting of it is where the call on time comes. The hours spent in receiving callers usually are more than the work hours, but those who call are a part of the work that is being done. Without them there would be no work, no position, no pay. Here is where a man is often misunderstood. The public understands that he fills a certain position, and to the average man, the position is small. To the man who is actually doing the work the situation is quite different. He can, as no and all of us are interested in its welfare; in fact human beings makeup the world in the larger meaning.

The pastor's work is not so hard if we take into consideration only his preaching and visiting. These are only a part of his labors. He must read, study, do research work, write, plan, take part in everything of the church, Sunday school, and be on hand at all times and under all circumstances. He must cultivate the happy mood to rejoice with the rejoicing and mourn with the dying, be at every beck and call of the congregation, keep open house for company, and in brief, be public servant. The right kind of a man does not object to all this. In fact, if he weighed the work properly before entering, he saw in the ministerial life all these things—and more. What a pastor desires is for the average layman to understand that the pastor's place is larger than the pulpit and broader than the social call. He desires that we enter into his every-day life and thought, counsel with him, and in so doing get the meaning of his message from the pulpit.

These are only two instances. The housewife, the groceryman, the farmer, merchant, and in fact all classes, could come in and tell the same story of doing more than set forth on their program. But it takes us back to the fact that we are a unit in welfare, aspirations, and hope. It is the average man doing a little of the world's work without price that gives momentum to big things and lifts the burdens of the weak and the needy.

The question for every individual to ask himself, or herself, is this: AM I DOING MY PART IN LIFE? And we mean by this that part above position, beyond salary, and for the good of humanity. That is the test of a man's worth in life and a standard of his right to fill the position for which he draws his pay.

A Worth While Work

We have received three publications in brochure form from the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, written by that wizard of writers and prince of Church historians, Rev. J. F. Burnett, Secretary of the American Christian Convention. These booklets are as follows: "The Origin and Principles of the Christians"; "Rev. James O'Kelly—a Champion of Religious Liberty"; "Rev. Abner Jones—the Man who Believed and Served".

No better introduction can be given to these three publications than what is found in the "Foreword" of the first by Judge O. W. Whitelock, Secretary for Publishing:

This is one of a series of booklets prepared and issued under the direction of the Secretary for Department of Publishing of The American Christian Convention, that the members of our churches and Sunday schools may be well informed as to the history and distinctive principles of which accepts and proclaims:

The Lord Jesus Christ as the head of the Church.

Christian our only name.

The Bible our rule of faith and practice.

Individual interpretation of the Scriptures, the right and duty of all.

Christian character the test of fellowship.

The union of all the followers of Christ, to the end that the world may believe.

Several of the booklets are from the pen of John Franklin Burnett, D. D., who has given many years of his life to research and investigation of the subjects he presents. Others are by men of outstanding ability who have given many years of service in the Christian Church. They will present the distinctive principles of the Christian Church as essentials in Christian life and the basis for church unity.

While the booklets have not been prepared especially for study books, yet the subject matter presented can be studied with profit by the individual, students, Christian Endeavor Societies, Sunday school classes, etc., particularly as a part of programs for stated week-day meetings. It is the hope of the Secretary for the Department of Publishing that they will be given by pastors to all new members as they are accepted into church. They are also intended for general distribution, by pastors and religious workers in our churches, to those who may be interested in the Church and principles of the Christians.

No. 1 is The Origin and Principles of the Christians with an account of the co-ordinating of the bodies of different sections.

No. 2 is a historical and biographical sketch of Rev. James O'Kelly, who courageously stood for individual liberty in religious thought and worship.

No. 3 sketches the life of Rev. Abner Jones, a pioneer in the thought that character and life are the true test of religious fellowship as over against dogma.

No. 4 is a sketch of the life of Rev. Barton W. Stone, a scholar and religious teacher who advocated that the Bible is the Book of life, and the only rule of faith and practice necessary for a Christian, as over against any formulated creed.

No. 5 combines sketches of Elias Smith, publisher; Horace Mann, educator; and the pioneer women workers of the Christian Church.

That all who use these booklets judiciously may be supplied, they will be sent free on request and payment of postage, 15c for one dozen, 40c for fifty, 75c for one hundred. Order them from The American Christian Convention, or The Christian Publishing Association. Both are in the Christian Publishing Association Building, Dayton, Ohio.

If the hopes and wishes of the Department of Publishing are even in a measure realized, the effort and expense of the publication of the series will be justified.

These booklets are neatly printed and bound and give appearance of stabilized literature. The price is, however, the most attractive feature. The books range from 36 to 60 pages, and yet may be had for the asking, plus the small sum of fifteen cents for one dozen, forty cents for fifty, or seventy-five cents for one hundred, this being for postage.

To our mind the issuing of this series of booklets is one of the most valuable contributions that the Church has made in recent years to its great history. Here is in readable, timely, and abbreviated form the life of the Church's founder; here is in definite form the history of how the Christians started and their principles; here is that gripping story of Abner Jones, whose life was, and is, an inspiration to all who love and believe in service.

But the use of these publications will be the test of their real worth to the Church. We hope that every pastor in the whole denomination will send for a supply of these booklets, take the time in the pulpit to review them and get the people interested enough to give the whole series a careful reading.

No people can be great who do not know of their origin and are in position to defend that origin. No man can be an intelligent member of an organization who does not know the principles for which that order stands. If the Christian Church is to get back to fundamentals it must do it through history—its own history. And here is, it seems to us, the wide open door for the Church to review its formation and spread a necessary information at the feet of the present generation.

And a suggestion: Would it be out of order for pastors to discuss the contents of these booklets, giving ten minutes to each, in substitution for the usual sermon?

The test of a man's criticism depends upon his ability to offer something better than that which he has criticised. Destructive criticism is bad; constructive criticism is good.

There were thirty-six lynchings in the United States during the first six months of 1921. This is twenty-four more than the number, twelve, for the first six months of 1920, and seven more than the number, twenty-nine, for the first six months of 1919. Of those lynched two were white and thirty-four were Negroes. Two of the Negroes were women. The States in which lynchings occurred and the number in each State are as follows: Alabama, 1; Arkansas, 4; Florida, 4; Georgia, 9; Kentucky, 1; Louisiana, 2; Mississippi, 10; Missouri, 1; North Carolina, 2; South Carolina, 1; Tennessee, 1.

THE CHURCH'S SYSTEM OF EDUCATION

BY WILLIAM ALLEN HARPER, LL. D.

ROTESTANTISM is not that perfected Christianity to which all true Christians look with hopeful eyes. It is the best type of Christianity that has yet appeared, recognizing as it does the freedom of the individual and the priesthood of each believer, insisting on the Brotherhood of man as the only defensible attitude of men and women who have a common Heavenly Father, and resulting in democracy in every realm of life whether it be political, domestic, industrial, social, educational, or religious, for God is no respecter of persons nor of classes. Yet in spite of its excellences these are defects, remediable of course, still defects that the honest Christian must face and willingly undertake to correct.

The separation of Church and State, necessary to the very life of Protestantism, has left us the problem of educating the people in religion and our failure to do so constitutes for us Protestantism's weakest spot. Religion cannot be taught in public schools by public school teachers nor at the expense of the public. Our boys and girls attend the public schools, the disseminators of secular democracy. Their minds become highly trained, but their hearts are for the most part untouched. Democracy in Government is dependent upon the Christian character of the citizenship composing its electorate. Education without Christian character will prove democracy's undoing, just as intellect without conscience led Germany to her ruin. Herein is our weakest spot, our failure to provide adequate facilities of religious education for our democracy. The boasted American freedom will become license, her much-vaunted democracy mobocracy unless we adjust ourselves successfully to the solution of this problem.

What are the facts?

THE FACTS

There are 43,000,000 persons under 25 years of age in the United States. Of these 27,000,000 are not in any way touched by the religious education agencies now at work and the 16,000,000 who are so touched receive only thirty minutes' instruction a week. These figures taken in connection with the further fact that more than fifty per cent of the entire population never go to church give a rather sombre picture of our religious situation. In Virginia, 860,080 young people twenty-five years of age and under are not in the Sunday school; in North Carolina, 885,540; in Georgia, 1,348,790; in Alabama 1,100,250; in Delaware, 39,150; in West Virginia, 472,542; in District of Columbia, 75,920; in Maryland, 23,570; a total of 5,013,940 in the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention.

Only eleven of the 183 denominations in the country have more persons enrolled in their Sunday schools than are on their church rolls. The Free Methodist Church ranks highest, being 165.9 per cent and the Synodical Conference (Lutheran) lowest with only 14.2 per cent. The Christian Church has 77.3 per cent. Protestantism will be bound to increase the membership of its Sunday schools or slowly die, for the Sunday schools are the source of Church membership.

In higher education we find a similar situation. There are 419 Church Colleges and there are 400,000 college and university students. Thirty years ago the denominational colleges enrolled three-fifths of the college students. Today the situation is reversed. One university has an income of $3,075,409 and 5,716 students. Fifty of the best denominational colleges have a combined income of $2,927,814 and an enrollment of 13,357 students. The cost of instruction in a State University per student is $436 annually; in a denominational college $200. Of the graduates of denominational colleges 21.3 percent enter the ministry, the percent of our own College being 23.2 while barely one percent of the graduates of State Colleges enter the ministry.

These are the facts. What is the problem?

THE PROBLEM

It is three-fold—adequately educating in religion the 16,000,000 now enrolled in our Sunday schools; reaching for the Kingdom the 27,000,000 now untouched; and providing Christian leadership efficient and equal to the opportunity that challenges us to take America for Christ. Before we go further let us say that spiritual illiteracy is the forerunner of moral bankruptcy and national decay and that a Church which cannot save its own children certainly cannot save the world. We must solve the problem of religious education in American Protestantism or some other type of Christianity will arise to displace it. We can do it if we will. We can reach our young people for Christ and provide an adequate Christian leadership if we really undertake it with our characteristic determination and initiative. This would mean for the Christian Church in America to care for 430,000 persons in her Sunday schools and to provide annually fifty ministers and an equal number of lay workers giving themselves to whole time Christian service as a life calling. It will mean for our Southern Christian Convention to care for 107,500 persons in her Sunday schools and to produce a dozen preachers and an equal number of Christian lay workers each year. It will mean for the Eastern Virginia Conference to have in its Sunday schools 30,000 pupils and to provide three preachers and three Christian lay workers each year. The North Carolina Conference should have in its Sunday schools 50,000 pupils and provide for 5 preachers and 5 lay workers each year. The Valley Virginia Conference should be 12,500 Sunday school pupils, 2 preachers and 2 lay-workers each year. The Ga. and Ala. Conference should have 5,000 Sunday school pupils and furnish each year one preacher and one lay worker. The Alabama Conference should have 10,000 Sunday school pupils and likewise supply one each of preachers and lay workers annually. In order to provide this leadership it will mean that our Southern Christian Convention will send to our College each year in college classes only 360 young people of whom the Eastern Virginia Conference should send 110; the North Carolina Conference 170; The Valley Virginia Central 40; The Alabama 25; and the Georgia and Alabama 15. This would leave us then 40 pupils to come from the outside, and yet not exceed our maximum capacity of 400 pupils a year. It is a great task, nay, rather it is a great challenging opportunity. Let us not think of the magnitude of the problem; let us think of its promise, the taking of America for Christ, and let us undertake it, no matter what it may cost.

What is the way out?

THE PROGRAM NEEDED

The Church is under necessity to construct a system of religious education paralleling the public school system and equally efficient, ministering to the whole life of the whole community. Let us look specifically at this tripartite remedy.

What will be included in this proposed system of religious education for our Church? It will include the cradle roll, the organized graded Sunday school, the home department, the Christian College, summer schools of Christian methods for teachers, the Daily Vacation Bible School, week day instruction in religion, Theological Seminaries with departments for training lay workers, Christian universities with graduate departments of religious education, and provision for teaching religion in the State and independent colleges and universities. All of this cannot come at once, but it must come eventually and it will.

It is not necessary that we discuss the first three elements of this system, since all recognize their need in the Church's program of religious education. The other seven items we shall examine briefly under five heads.

I. Week-day Instruction in Religion—Thirty minutes a week are devoted to religious instruction and twenty-five hours in the public school. For the year, spent in public school 750 hours, in Sunday school 26 hours. Will such a system produce spiritual prophets or materialists, worshippers of God or of Mammon?

The child spends each week in sleep 56 hours and has 85 hours of leisure. Here is the Church's opportunity. A part of this time must be utilized for week-day instruction in religion, either on a federated basis for the whole community or by the denominations acting independently. Our children must not be allowed to grow up spiritual illiterates. Democracy cannot subsist save on a basis of Christian character. Thirty minutes a week is not ample for this purpose. Certainly it will cost money, but the Church that rides in automobiles cannot dare to withhold all that is necessary to provide for the spiritual welfare of its children. Week-day religious instruction is fundamental in Protestantism and essential for democracy.

II. Daily Vacation Bible Schools—In the long good old summer time when the public schools are closed and when the great army of American public school teachers are at home, what finer opportunity than this to teach religion could be desired? In city and small town and in the open country the Daily Vacation Bible School works well. The plan began in 1866 and has grown steadily ever since, until now more than a thousand such schools are in operation each summer. A typical day's program for such a school consists of an opening period of worship, music and calisthenics, Bible story or study and drill about thirty minutes, hand-work about an hour, play, closing exercises, home visitation and outings. The Daily Vacation Bible School does more to teach moral guidance than any other known agency. The alert Church will not neglect it.

III. Teacher Training.—The teacher is the fate of the educational system. Fine buildings, good equipment, ideal curriculum are desirable, but good teachers, capable teachers are necessary. Mark Hopkins on one end of a log and boy on the other constitute a college. The Church must provide for the training of its teachers. How? There are various ways, all of which are good. A teacher training class for the local church, community teacher training schools, whether for town, city, or county, summer schools in denominational colleges. We are not wedded to any scheme, but we are profoundly convinced that it must be accomplished in some way. We cannot hold the 16,000,000 we now have in our Sunday schools nor hope to reach the 27,000,000 untouched without a system of teacher training complete enough to give us trained teachers and supervisors. No matter what it may cost, we must do it.

IV. Provision for Teaching Religion in State and Independent Colleges and Universities.—I have said it before and I must say it again, there is no finer mission field in America today than the campuses of our State and independent Colleges and Universities. On these campuses are gathered together more than half the College and University students of the land. From these campuses will come more than half the leadership of the nation. Shall their outlook on life, their motive principle of living, be material or spiritual, pagan or Christian? These institutions cannot answer. They cannot teach religion. The Churches must answer and we must find some way to instill in these future lawyers, business men, captains of industry, doctors, engineers, public school teachers, artists, and producers of ideals the spirit of the Man of Galilee. We cannot leave them to themselves, else we shall prussianize our democracy. The Churches owe a solemn obligation to these helpless institutions, helpless in the larger work of character development of the Christian type. A nation that cannot train its secular leadership in terms of Christian character can not long continue democratic. Somehow we must do it.

V. Higher Education of the Christian Type.—But the leadership of the Church, the Christian statesmen of the Kingdom, can come only from Christian Colleges, seminaries, and universities of the very highest type. We must instruct the students of the State and independent Colleges and Universities in religion that our secular leadership may be Christian, but all the history of the past is against the proposal to produce in these institutions leadership for the Kingdom's special work. It simply cannot be done. The only alternative is for the Church to strengthen her system of higher education as the price of an efficient and spiritual leadership whether of the pulpit or the pew.

I now it is a new thought to conceive of the denominational college as bearing a direct relationship to the Sunday school and as resting upon it for its support and patronage. Yet that is the situation. The public school system is crowned by the State normals, Colleges, and Universities. The public schools are made to feed their graduates to these state schools through a process of interlocking and inspection. The Church must understand that her educational system begins with the Sunday school Cradle Roll and ends with her Colleges, seminaries, and universities. The work of these various institutions must be viewed as the links of an endless chain inseparably linked together in the work of the Kingdom.

What is Elon College? It is the Christian Sunday schools of the South engaged in the work of higher education with the distinct motive to produce spiritual leadership for all departments of Church and community life. What are the Sunday schools of the Christian Church? They are the source of supply for Elon College. What must Elon undertake to do for these Sunday schools? Train leaders for pulpit and pew who will know the best methods of work and who will be motivated to undertake it in the spirit of Christian service. What should these Sunday schools do for Elon? Send their high school graduates to her for their life training. What will be the result? A generation of trained Christian workers who will hold the pupils we now have in our Sunday schools and add thereto the nearly 100,000 others we are responsible for in our Southern Church.

But to be more specific, Elon has a department of Bible and a department of Religious Education. We also plan to maintain a Summer School of Christian Methods. These will furnish the technical information for Christian leadership. The other departments of the College are under Christian men and women who present the truths of the secular world in the spirit of Christian reverence, producing as the result of their labors that beautiful spirit of Christian Brotherhood which is the glorious characteristic of our College. The pity of it is that relatively so few of our sons and daughters find their way to Elon. Now what we see the intimate relation of our Sunday schools and of our College, we shall look for better results and a more helpful cooperation.

We of the Southern Church have no Seminary and no University. These will come with the normal advancing development of our work. When they do come, our Seminary will offer courses for laymen as well as for ministers and our University will cherish as one of its outstanding graduate departments the School of Religious Education, in which professional and technical training of the highest type shall be given our leaders in the realms of Christian service.

THE WHOLE OF LIFE

Let us repeat now our definition of a statesmanlike program of religious education: "The Church is under necessity to construct a system of religious education paralleling the public school system and equally efficient, ministering to the whole life of the whole community." We have described the necessary system of instruction for this program and indicated how its efficiency is to be guaranteed. It remains now for us to call special attention to the final qualifying phrase, "ministering to the whole life of the whole community."

The Church program of religious education has not aimed to do this, not even for those of its present membership, to say nothing of those outside its membership. It has aimed to provide only for a very small portion of the life of the individual with practically no effort to help the community as such. That is perhaps why we cannot hold those we have and fail to reach at all the great majority of the people. Our first duty is to inventory the community to discover what problems we have to solve, and then to prepare to minister to them. The intellectual, social, recreational, home, industrial, health, and other phases of our daily life are divine too and to them the Church owes a ministry of spirit and uplift. Her program of service must include the whole of life. Her system of religious education locally must be comprehensive enough to meet that responsibility.

THE LOCAL CHURCH IN THE SYSTEM

What is the duty of the local church in this system of religious education?

To make its Sunday school the most efficient possible, beginning with its cradle roll, through all the organized departments, providing for week day religious instruction for the young, arranging for the maintenance of a Daily Vacation Bible School, providing for training teachers, launching its program to include a wholesome ministry to the whole of life.

It will constantly impress upon its pupils that their religious education will not be complete till they have passed through the various departments of the local school and into one of the regular working organizations of the church and have graduated from Elon College, the crown of the Sunday school's educational program. To insure this the officers will keep the College constantly informed as to those about to graduate from the local high school and will frequently give an Elon turn to the thought of the whole school. Each school will, of course, accept its quota of a student in Elon for each one hundred of enrollment or part thereof. This is fundamental if we are to strengthen our Sunday schools or develop our college. For best results the local situation will call for all-time director of religious education.

It will also through its benevolent members provide funds for the local budget and for the maintenance of the Church's system of higher education, for the denominational Colleges of course and also for the the teaching of religion in Colleges and Universities which cannot teach it themselves.

FINALLY

Let no one stagger under the magnitude of this grand crusade for the religious education of our people. Let us take hold where we can and hopefully, confidently, prayerfully proceed to incorporate the whole of it in our program of service for the Kingdom of our Christ.

A MODEL CHURCH SCHOOL

THE content of this article is not a theory; it is the record of a church school that merits the name of "school". I refer to the Church School of the First Christian church (Disciples) of Norfolk, Virginia. They know nothing about this article, but after making a personal investigation of their plant and their excellent achievements I thought others might be interested in reading of what they are actually doing in the way of religious education.

1. Physical Equipment. Six years ago two churches got married and consolidated their interests in behalf of a bigger and better church. The first thing was a new building. What should it be? In order to obtain sufficient information regarding a modern plant the church paid the expenses of a representative committee who visited various churches reputed to have efficient Sunday school and church plants. The result was no "Akron" style of structure, no "hybrid" building having on one side of a petition the church auditorium and on the other a Sunday school auditorium which on special occasions can be thrown together to accommodate the pastor's inflated congregation. No! Having only so much money, they decided to put the whole sum into a church school plant which would serve temporarily as a preaching place also. Consequently they have a beautiful brick structure, three stories high, with a commodious auditorium and about forty class rooms. Each department and every class room is fitted up with modern equipment such as desks, blackboards, maps, etc. Every man, woman, and child, has an attractive room in which to spend the lesson period. The teacher is undisturbed by the "humming" of little voices in other classes. In addition to rooms for classes there are private offices for the Secretary, Superintendent, and Director of Religious Education. In short, it is a building constructed for efficiency and without it the school could not accomplish its larger purpose.

2. Trained Teachers. At least eight months out of every year teacher-training classes are in operation. Except for the summer months teachers' monthly conferences are held, at which time every department plans its program and devises means for the promotion of the work during the coming month. A mass meeting and supper closes the afternoon program. It was my privilege to address about sixty officers and teachers at their meeting on a recent Sunday. I have seldom found a more enthusiastic group of young people over their work. Every department of the school has arranged to send at least one delegate to the Chesapeake Area Training Institute which meets at Lynchburg in July. It is a conference that is similar to our own Chautauqua and brings together some of the best experts of America. Of course those who go will return with new zeal and inspiration for the fall term.

The trend of the times makes the training of our teachers a vital issue. Without trained teachers it is impossible to launch a modern graded school and make it go. It is the one big issue that faces us far more than buildings. Without teachers who can "teach" (not lecture) any program is a failure. How sorely we need consecrated, devout, and intelligent teachers! May our own coming Chautauqua bring together a large group of people who are teaching and are preparing to teach.

3. Graded Lessons. Yes, every class is actually using closely graded material. The curriculum is child-centered, logically and psychologically adapted to the pupil's needs. The old "Quarterly" is replaced by real text-books and manuals of instruction. Also, the lower grades have a series of stories and memory selections closely correlated with the lesson. Hand-work and various expressional activities emphasize "learning by doing". The pupil is not a "little vessel" into which the teacher is supposed to pour information as water is poured into a barrel. The teacher devises novel situations which arouse the pupil's interest and call out responses which contribute to moral and spiritual growth. Of course this makes the teacher's task more difficult; that is why we must have expert teachers. Time was when the day school teacher was not required to take special training. But today only the trained teacher is desired. Only when we realize that the Sunday school is a real school and demands efficient leaders will we begin seriously to prepare our teachers.

4. Library. It was an agreeable surprise to me to find at least one hundred of the most up-to-date books in their Sunday school library. And what is better, they read them! Officers and teachers, fathers and mother-boys and girls, all find here a choice selection of interesting and helpful books. Necessary information along any line connected with their field is available for all.

5. Time. This school does not stop with just twenty-four hours of religious instruction per year. Their Vacation School has just opened and boys and girls are attending week-day classes.

6. Finance. Without doubt it does cost more to run their school. But it pays. If the statement is true, that our Sunday schools furnish seventy-five per cent of the church members, then it has a moral right to make large demands upon the financial budget. This educational project cost the church last year more than two thousand dollars. But the real wide-awake and aggressive church school is no "brownie" affair. The church that spends three times as much for its music as it does for its Sunday school has an unbalanced budget. If the Sunday school is the church's largest asset it should engage the interest and the support of the church commensurate with its returns.

7. Director of Religious Education. To those who know Rev. C. M. Watson, the pastor, and Mrs. M. H. McArdle, the Director of Religious Education, it is not strange that this church leads in this field. It has been a pioneer work in Norfolk but the wisdom of those who undertook the task six years ago has been fully justified. The influence of their work has gone throughout Norfolk and other churches are seeking to enlarge their educational projects.

Mrs. McArdle is a real mother and understands the soul of the child. Her office is supplied with maps and charts and attendance records from every department of the school. She knows of the absent teacher of the absent pupil and seeks to keep as complete a record as any day school teacher. It is her business to organize the curriculum of the school, to assist in promotion, and to correlate every agency of the school in the interest of a well-balanced program of religious instruction. And she does it to perfection.

8. Results. Probably the reader has already looked ahead to see the results. After all, we are most interested in results, not theory. In 1914 the Sunday school enrollment was 177. Today it has 804 members. I have the statement of the Director that very few have passed the age of thirteen before uniting with the church. From first to last each teacher is his or her own evangelist to the class. The small class idea prevails and every teacher seeks personal contact with the pupils. Primary emphasis is placed upon spiritual growth as opposed to the "Billy Sunday" method of conquest. The child is not trained to be "converted" later in life. It is a process of spiritual growth, "First the blade, then the stalk, then the full corn in the ear." Definitely planned "Decision Days" reach the children for the church. At least six months before the "Decision Day" every teacher makes a survey of all the intervening lessons so as to organize her material to bring about the crowning result. Here is an enviable record. Of the forty pupils who entered the lower grades six years ago all have been brought into the church except two. Then read this statement from the Director: "Those who have had as much as three years of graded work are contributing members."

This church is growing at a rapid rate and will continue to thrive. Why? Because it is child-centered. The church that keeps its children will live. It should. The church that fails at this point will eventually come to want.

OUR VIRGINIA LETTER

WE all rejoice in the blessings with which God is endowing our Orphanage. Its rapid gain in its resources has been a delight to us all. There are few charitable works in this day of many and great enterprises for the good of the unfortunate, to which the people contribute for support more readily than they do for the protection and care of orphan children. Indeed the work is very beautiful and a great blessing to the needy, as well as to the Church. This is not only true of our Orphanage at Elon, but it is true of all well managed orphanages. The last report of the Ashby Down Orphanage at Bristol, England, the one which was founded and served for so many long and blessed years by the beloved George Muller, shows that it is still sharing largely in the blessings of God. During the past year it has received and expended more than in any year ever before but it also has an income greater than ever before, so that every need has been supplied. Many former donors have been called to their eternal home, but in their place God has raised up 1311 others, who, so far as we are aware, have never helped in this way before. The total income for the year was about $230,000 and the total amount received since the beginning of the work, eighty-five years ago, is over $10,000,000, and it has all come to the Institution without any appeal being made to man, woman or child, for help; to God's ear alone, daily, and oftentimes in a day, the needs are detailed, and the Mighty one has sent them help from all quarters of the world. The total number of orphans cared for during the year was 1395. The orphanage has a capacity for 2,000 children. Indeed, caring for the fatherless and motherless is one of the first works of the Church. Money invested in human life, after that manner, is the best money any of us ever had, if possible.

There is a small body of Christian people who are known as Mennonites. They are not generally well known, but they are undoubtedly more worthy of recognition, as people of God, than many others who are well known to the public. They are a very active people in the Lord's vineyard, as they are also a very liberal body of givers. They are giving for all church purposes at the rate of $80.71 per capita. And while the giving of money is not always a proof of the genuine work of the Spirit, it is a strong presumptive indication of the devotion of such people to the work of the Lord. We rejoice that they are so liberal and trust that their worthy example may stimulate others to do greater things in the same line.

We often get our ideas mixed and then we go astray. What a pity that any of us should be so indefinite as to great truths! How often we hear people deery doctrine, as if it were a curse to the world, as well as to the Church. Paul did not look upon doctrine in that way. He believed in doctrine, surely not mere sectarian doctrines, but doctrines of grace, the very net work of the gospel. In I Timothy 4:13, he said: "Till I come give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine."

That looks as if Paul believed in doctrines, and if he believed in doctrines, it seems to me that we should all believe in it and give attention to it, as he commanded us to do. It is too bad that so many people can be driven to forsake a precious truth through fear of being sectarian. I have no sympathy for sectarianism, but I have great appreciation of doctrine, for the doctrines of the Bible are fairly saturated with truth—the truth of God which is able to make us free in the service of God. I do not care for sectarian doctrines, but the doctrines of salvation are a necessity in the saving of the lost and in the building up of the individual Christian life, as well as the building up of the Church of Christ. Do you not believe in the doctrines of Conviction, of Repentance, of Faith, of Regeneration, of Justification by Faith, of the Forgiveness of Sins, of the Rewards of the Righteous, and of the Punishment of the Wicked? I do. To me these are practically fundamentals of the Christian life. Let go of sectarian doctrines, as much as you like, but hold on to these doctrines of grace now and always. Of course there are other doctrines of like precious teaching.

CHURCH FINANCE, HARD TIMES AND THE KINGDOM

If our patrons wait this year till a month before Conference to get up their Conference apportionments there will be a shortage such as we have seldom witnessed. People haven't ready money on demand now (save for luxuries and indulgence.) If the kingdom's money is to come, it must come by well laid plans, a carefully wrought out system, and prayerful procedure.

It is a matter to be deplored if any pastor has waited this long to get on foot some prayerful and careful plan for securing his conference apportionments with which to finance the interest of the Kingdom the coming year; but if any have, it were far better to begin to move than to wait till the last month or last week of the Conference year, and then press too hard the faithful few.

Nine times out of ten the Conference apportionments are reasonable, possible and within reach without hurt to any. The trouble usually is not with the size of the budget to be raised, but with the plan and method used in raising it. Financing the church should and can be made a blessing and not a burden, a benefit and not a bore, a real source of inspiration and not of perspiration. But it takes twelve months of the year, not one month only, to do the Lord's work in; and the worry and failure of the task usually come from trying to do in a month or in a week what the Lord intends shall be done in a year. It is usually a lean crop, and of mush-room growth, that a farmer tries to plant, plow and harvest all in one month. God gives a full season for all His work.

But I am wondering now if some of our churches which have such hard time raising their conference apportionments and pastor's salary will not undertake for next year a plan which so many have adopted to their help, pleasure and profit. I have yet to find anywhere a church which has adopted and uses according to a well determined plan, the duplex envelope system that has a hard time in securing its conference apportionments and paying its pastor's salary. There may be a church or churches but this writer has not known such. The wonder is that all churches do not adopt this, or some similar plan of finance, since it seems to be feasible, Biblical and universally successful. Meanwhile we should not let the kingdom's interests suffer because times are hard and money is scarce. If there ever was a time when zealous and prayerful effort was required to advance the kingdom's interest, that time is now.

ELM AVENUE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

Rev. E. H. Rainey as pastor of our Elm Avenue Christian church, Portsmouth, Va., issues a very neat card bearing on one side the hours of worship for Sundays and Wednesdays, Sunday school announcement, a welcome invitation, etc. and on the other are printed "Our Principles", with a scripture beneath each principle giving the authority therefor.

Brother Rainey has had a pleasant and profitable month with this our newest and youngest congregation, and seems to be laying a good foundation for permanent growth and development.

THE MEASURE OF OUR LOVE

The women of America spend far more for artificial flowers or for kid gloves than does the Church for missions and ten times as much for jewelry as for the conversion of the heathen. More money was puffed away in tobacco smoke last year than the Christians of the United States have given in a century to evangelize the rest of the world. The Church and the world alike spend money on the things which they care for most. In a year when $18,000 was spent for the racing of a crew, $150,000 in connection with a single football game, $70,000 for a banquet, $600,000 for a wedding, while the private wealth of Christians steadily increased, the mission work was left groaning under heavy debt.

God help us, that we may be delivered from the delusion of supposing we are expressing our love to Him when we give one-sixteenth of one percent for Him and spend all the rest upon ourselves!

And then we sing gloriously, "I Love Thy Kingdom, Lord". It is as if a man should go to the city and buy a $5,000 automobile for himself, a $75.00 overcoat, a $10.00 pair of shoes, a $15.00 hat, and for his wife a calico dress, and should go home singing ardently, "I love my darling wife."

WHAT THE LATE CHIEF JUSTICE WHITE SAID IN A LETTER ABOUT PRESIDENT HARDING'S PART IN COMPLYING WITH A NATION-OLD CUSTOM.

NOT long before his death the late Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, the Hon. Edward D. White, wrote a letter touching upon the subject of the oath of office which he had just administered to the President of the United States. The United States has been fortunate in having Presidents who have for the most part firmly believed in the whole Bible as the Word of God, and surely all of them have honored the Bible and recognized the immense part it has played in the progress and prosperity of the American people. The present President and his predecessor are both men who paid positive tribute to God's Word. When he was President-elect, Mr. Harding led a service on shipboard—reading a favorite Psalm—during an ocean voyage to the Canal Zone, and President Wilson, during his term of office, wrote a tribute to the Bible for the flyleaf of the Army and Navy Testaments issued by the American Branch of the Scripture Gift Mission.

Our country throughout her history has given a national recognition to the Bible in that all the Presidents have taken the oath of office upon it. The question arose after the inauguration of President Harding as to whether the Scripture passages where the various Presidents "kissed" the Bible were chosen by the Presidents themselves, or merely selected at random. This was the question which The Sunday School Times, through the medium of a friend in Washington, asked of the late Chief Justice White. He answered very courteously to The Times' intermediary, Mr. W. H. H. Shelly, who holds a position in the office of the Solicitor of the Postoffice Department, and who is also Director of the Washington School of Bible Study and Evangelism, 1824 H Street, N. W. The letter, dated March 24th, follows:

"Answering the question put in your recent letter, I say that I do not know what course has been pursued by the President-elect in selecting the particular verses from the Bible for the purpose of taking the oath of office, as my only duty has been to administer the oath on the Bible handed me for that purpose.

"My understanding is, however, that in the case of President Harding the Bible used was the one upon which President Washington was sworn in in New York at the first Inauguration, and the verses were the ones also then selected.

"Perhaps it might be that the Clerk of the Supreme Court of the United States, Mr. J. D. Maher, might know more about the practices in the past than I do.

"Yours very respectfully,
(Signed) E. D. WHITE."

The matter was then taken up with the Clerk of the Supreme Court, Mr. James D. Maher, who wrote, on March 26th, to Mr. Shelly as follows:

"President Harding selected the particular verse in the Bible upon which he pressed his lips at the inaugural ceremony on the 4th of March last, but I understand that previous Presidents have not done likewise, the places kissed not being selected either by the President or by the Clerk of this court, who held and opened the Bible at the ceremony. I enclose a list showing the verses other Presidents have kissed upon being inaugurated from General Grant's second term down to the present time:

"President Grant (second), Isaiah 2:2-3.

"President Hayes, Psalm 118:11-12-13.

"President Garfield, Proverbs 21:1.

"President Arthur, Psalm 31:1-2-3.

"President Cleveland, Psalm 112:4-10.

"President Harrison, Psalm 121:1-6.

"President Cleveland, Psalm 91:12-16.

"President McKinley (first), II Chronicles 1:10.

"President McKinley (second), Proverbs 16:20-21.

"President Roosevelt, James 1:22-25.

"President Taft, I Kings 3:9-10-11.

"President Wilson (first), Psalm 119:13-48.

President Wilson (second), Psalm 46.

"President Harding, Micah 6:8."

Under the title "The Bible and Our Presidents", the April New Era Magazine had this comment about the origin of this interesting and important national custom:

"Dr. Charles L. Thompson's book, 'The Religious Foundations of America' (Revell's), contains the following interesting and informative passage relating to the place given the Bible in the Presidential inaugural ceremonies, and the precedent set thereby, when Washington became President.

"It is remarkable that the place of the Bible in the life of the nation was fixed by precedent and public sentiment, and not by law. It was a day when infidelity was popular. But when Washington was ready to assume the office of President of the new republic, he asked for a Bible. Stepping out on the balcony of Federal Hall, Wall Street, New York, in full sight of the assembled multitude, he laid his right hand on the open Book while repeating the constitutional oath, and then reverently kissed the page. State Councillor Livingston turned down the corner of the page towards the words of Genesis 49:24—"His bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob."

"This custom has never been violated by a President-elect. The Bible is usually opened at random by the Clerk of the Supreme Court; a record is made of the passage kissed, and the Book presented to the President's wife.

"Cleveland used a little red Bible given to him when he was a boy by his mother. Roosevelt placed his lips to the words of James 1:22—"But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only". The Bible was opened for President Wilson almost at the middle. He kissed the page at Psalm 119:46—"I will speak of thy testimonies before kings and will not be ashamed."'"—Sunday School Times.

Do things just happen to people, or, does the individual have something to do with it? Do you wait for something to turn up? No! you get out and make something turn up.

WORLD HAPPENINGS

ENGLAND AND IRELAND DECLARE TRUCE

It is thought that the shedding of blood in Ireland may be very near an end. A truce has been declared between England and Ireland. It will take effect at noon on Monday July 11, 1921. Preparations are already under way to end the hostilities between the crown forces and those actively engaged in the Irish cause.

ASKED NOT TO PASS BONUS BILL

Secretary Mellon, with a warning that there is grave danger of an immediate deficit in government funds, asked Congress on July 6, 1921, to defer action on the soldiers' bonus bill. Mr. Mellon estimated that the bill would cost the country between a billion and a half and five and a quarter billion dollars. He said that this is not a time to impose several billion dollars of new liabilities on an already overburdened treasury.

PRESIDENT BREAKS A PRECEDENT

On July 7, 1921, President Harding broke a presidential precedent by motoring to the Capitol and taking lunch with some of his old associates in the Senate. Until the Wilson administration the Chief Executive remained away from the legislative end of the Capitol except when he was called there on official business. President Wilson originated the custom of calling on senators and representatives to discuss public affairs and President Harding just carried the custom a step farther in his informal visit to the Senate.

WOMAN COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC WELFARE

Mrs. Clarence Johnson was elected commissioner of public welfare of North Carolina on July 6, 1921. Mrs. Johnson was elected to succeed Rowland F. Beasley. She is woman of unusual ability and resourcefulness and has held a responsible position in the office of the commissioner of public welfare as director of child welfare for the past two years. Mrs. Johnson was elected over forty other candidates and was not elected because it was a woman's job. It is a man's job in responsibility and administration, but was called to it because of her ability to fill it.

THE SUN extends congratulations to "Uncle Charley" of the Orphanage in winning the hand of Mrs. Effie Wicker, to whom he was married on June 22. Mrs. Wicker has been one of the most faithful and loyal helpers at the Orphanage. She has the work at heart, and while she may be transferring her duties, her work will continue in making a home for our beloved Superintendent and his children.

Miss Lucy Eldredge took charge of the work as Field Secretary of the Board of Religious Education on July 8, with headquarters at Burlington, N. C. THE SUN wishes for Miss Eldredge much and lasting success in her new field of endeavor.

Just ahead! The Sunday School Convention of the North Carolina Conference, and also the Seaside Chautauqua. The Convention meets at Reidsville this week and the Chautauqua will be in session next week.

Rev. Geo. D. Eastes was a caller at THE SUN office the other day. Brother Eastes has been unwell since the closing of his meeting in Graham.

BORAH AMENDMENT ADOPTED

Adopting the Borah amendment for the limitation of armament with a plurality of 330 votes against 4, the House of Representatives has begun to definitely prove the way for international understanding, peace and good will. The amendment was carried in a wave of enthusiasm, which, according to the current press, was aroused by the President's appeal on disarmament.

The Borah amendment provides "that the President be authorized to invite the Governments of Great Britain and Japan to send representatives to a conference in order to discuss and come to an understanding or agreement by which the naval expenditures and building program of the three governments, including the United States, shall be annually reduced. Its purpose is to eliminate in a positive and definite way, competitive armament and dangerous rivalry between the world powers. Its fundamental principles are frankness and co-operation.

Fortunately the bill was passed before July 1, the time set for additional naval expenditures, which are generally believed to be unnecessary at this period. It is estimated that it saves the country $403,000,000. A similar spirit for the curtailment of armament is being realized in England and Japan.

THE ANGLO-IRISH CONFERENCE

Another attempt on the part of Lloyd George to settle the Irish question seems to have been foiled, when Eamornan De Valera, so called president of the Irish Republic refused to meet him in a conference in London. The purpose of this proposed conference is to facilitate an open discussion of the demands of the Sinn Fein movement of Ireland so as to arrive at an understanding and settlement of the differences between the warring factions.

De Valera refuses to meet the British Premier in conference in London, because of its "implications". He believes that his going to London would be too great a concession on his part as "president of the Irish Republic"; but he would rather have the British and Ulster premiers meet him in Dublin. Commenting on De Valera's action, the London Times says:

"By refusing a request which committed him to nothing more compromising than a conversation with fellow Irishmen, he assumed a very heavy responsibility."

"Equally heavy", continues the paper, "is the responsibility taken by De Valera in his second telegram to the Ulster Premier, proposing a conference on "Irish soil only". This telegram strikes us as the work of a theoretical politician rather than that of a statesman."

IN JUSTICE TO MEXICO

Opening its columns for an authoritative statement from President Obregon of Mexico on the Mexican question the New York World is affecting an understanding and good will between the two countries which cannot be overestimated. President Obregon says that he will do all within his power to weld the disrupting factors of his country to cooperation with the United States to end ill feeling so long existent. One thing he demands of us—that is to give him the support of the United States in keeping down underhanded dictators of American oil investors in Mexico.

The Mexican president believes that there is nothing between the two countries which arouses the feeling of the illiterate and revolting Mexicans more than the American oil dictator who makes every possible effort to get control of Mexican land. He cannot understand how such an invader can benefit Mexico. The result is that these Mexicans are destined to give the American people continuous trouble unless the government checks the efforts of oil prospectors.

In this respect, says the New York World: "Forbearance should be preached by the United States, in justice to the Mexican Government and President Obregon. It can afford to be magnanimous toward a country that after years of exhaustive strife is struggling to its feet. Any policy looking toward coercion would not only make the Mexican people enemies of this country, but alienate the states of Central and South America. The road to a satisfactory understanding with Mexico was never clearer of obstacles."

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS SHOULD MAKE MONTHLY OFFERINGS

One of the strong arms of support the Orphanage receives is the Sunday school monthly offerings. This is a source of support to which we can always look to pay our bills at the end of the month. It has been our custom since we have been in the work to pay every bill we have made during the month, at the end of the month. So far we have been able to do this. Every Sunday school in the Southern Christian Convention should make this monthly offering. It is an opportunity to help the helpless. It is your privilege to be of service to widows and orphans and minister to their needs. Pure religion is to visit the fatherless and widows and minister unto them. Will you make use of the opportunity? Twenty-five children have made application for admittance in the last three weeks and practically every case was worthy and ought to be admitted. The need is great. The cry is pitiful. We are ready and willing to make our task harder by taking more children, provided the people will furnish us with the funds to feed and clothe them. Yet, with the cry of so many widows and orphans pleading for help, we have one hundred and thirteen churches and Sunday schools in the Southern Convention that do not give us a monthly contribution to help in this work for the Church and the Master's kingdom.

If your church is in the list of the non-givers, dear reader, will you make yourself a committee of one to see to it at your next service, that you get your Sunday school on the list by taking a special offering for the Christian Orphanage and mailing the amount to us?

I long to see the day, when every church in the entire denomination will give one Sunday's offerings in each month to the Orphanage and one to Missions.

When that comes and all the churches and Sunday schools do this, then our Church will be in a position to do a larger work and a work more worthwhile.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Revs. J. G. Truitt and P. T. Klapp will begin a revival meeting in Mebane, N. C., July 21. Brother Klapp is the pastor of our work there.

THE SUN'S Editor will be in attendance at the Seaside Chautauqua next week.

We learn from a copy of the Daily News Record, Harrisonburg, Va., under date of July 6, that Rev. J. Cleveland Barrett is to leave the Rockingham charge about August 15. Brother Barrett is on enter Defiance College, Defiance, Ohio, according to the news item, to complete his college work, and also to work for the Master's degree.

THE WEATHER

Experience has taught editors that it is not safe to discuss the weather, for it always happens that conditions greatly change before the paper reaches the public. Our predecessor, the Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., can fully testify to this statement. We recall that once the Doctor was greatly moved by the presence of some early spring weather and his pen dropped petals of becoming beauty about the weather. But lo and behold, when that issue of THE SUN went to press, the weather man changed slides, and instead of glorious sunshine, balmy breezes, and the almost presence of flowers, there was rain, sleet, and finally a mild snow storm, overturning Bro. Atkinson's woodhouse.

But the weather is at this hour and on this day (10:30 A. M., July 8) very hot and the fields and gardens in this section almost ruined for lack of rain. With the exception of a few small showers, we have not had any rain in about two months. The situation is getting to be bad.

HOW DO YOU SPELL IT?

Somebody proposes a new spelling of an old word—response-ability,—thus insisting that responsibility is simply the response of ability in the matter under consideration. That is good, and doubtless there is just one trouble with that spelling—it leaves out the "i" in the middle of the word, and "responsibility" with the "i" left out does not count for much. Be sure to get the "i" in.—Watchman-Examiner.

DON'T COUNT THE BITES

You do not count your bites when you go fishing; you count what you string. We read so often in the reports of preachers, of great revivals, with many at the altar, but few to join the Church. It is the fish you string who help the Church and whom the Church helps. It is hardly true that you can have a hundred conversions and twenty-five receptions. You must be counting the "nibbles."—Methodist Protestant.

A CRYSTAL IN GRANITE

A crystal is sometimes formed in the embrace of granite. To liberate it from its rough inclosure and to bring its beautiful facets to the light, nature may submerge the boulder in deep waters, shatter it by tempests, abrade it with stones, and sink it in the mud and rubbish of the sea. Likewise a redeemed soul may be immersed in the cares and toils and enticements and usefulness of action in a world of sin. Providence may so direct. By sheer resistance to evil the soul becomes fair, and its polished countenance shows the image of Him who made it and trained it.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

MAKING IMPROVEMENTS

If a man should employ a carpenter to make improvements on his home, he would be considered very foolish if he did not tell the carpenter in just what respect he wanted changes made. The making of a change for the better always implies a knowledge of the things that are not right. Too many of us are striving to "go on to perfection" without knowing the exact points wherein we are weak. It ought to be possible for us, by careful examination, to discover even the little things that need to be changed in our lives in order that we steadily become better; and having discovered them, it ought to be possible for us to change them, one at a time at least.—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

CHURCH NEWS

VALLEY LETTER

I have held revival meetings this spring and summer at Palmyra, Wood's Chapel, and Concord. The meeting at Palmyra resulted in three conversions, and one addition to the church. There was another conversion and addition to the church there at my last appointment. At Woods' Chapel eleven people accepted Christ and united with the church. At Concord there were four conversions and six additions to the church. Two united with the church at Timber Ridge by letter third Sunday in April.

The third Sunday in June was our annual Memorial Day at Timber Ridge. A very large congregation gathered for the occasion, and to strew flowers on the graves of their departed loved ones, and otherwise pay their tributes of respect to them. We had preaching both morning and afternoon, with dinner in abundance on the ground. After the afternoon service I baptized eight young people by immersion in the beautiful Capon River. These memorial occasions at Timber Ridge are great home-coming occasions. Former residents of the community come for many miles to attend, and enjoy meeting again with friends and relatives, as well as to honor the dear departed dead.

As announced in a former Valley Letter we are building a new church at Dry Run. The work has been going along in a very encouraging way from the very start. Some of our people there are intensely loyal, and have done a noble part in helping. It has really been an inspiration to see how energetically they have stuck to the job. The building is now under roof, and every thing is paid in full to date. Most of the work and money have come from the local membership, and they are not wealthy either. Now they need and would appreciate some help from the outside. They have done nobly and will continue to do their best until the finishing touches are put on, and the last cent of indebtedness paid, but they need some help. Are there not people in other sections of our beloved brotherhood who will help them build this much needed house of worship? Yes, thank you, I though you would be one. The writer will receive it, or better still, send it direct to W. F. Ritenour,, Seven Fountains, Va. We want to keep the work going until completed, and if friends will help we can do so. And when that church is completed at Dry Run it will be a happy day for the people there who have sacrificed so nobly to build it, and we hope many others can share in the joy.

Our Conference will be held this year at Mayland, August 18-20. Those coming by rail will be met at Broadway, Va., on the Washington-Harrisonburg branch of the Southern. Will our churches please see that their delegates and the report are started in time to be there at the opening session on Thursday morning at ten o'clock? We are expecting some prominent visiting brethren to be with us. The program will be announced later.

SIGNS OF PROGRESS

When prices soared high a few years ago, the farmers received the benefit of same one or two years, and the members of the Mt. Carmel Christian church and Sunday school were inspired, at the same time, to do greater and better things. After a most strenuous effort by several young men and a few others, nearly four thousand dollars had been pledged toward the building of Sunday school rooms. The Men and Millions Forward Movement came on about the same time, and after a still greater effort, their quota was pledged. Then the bottom fell out of the prices the farmers received. With such conditions, as every one now readily understands, the idea of building those rooms almost became visionary and not real. But, glad to say, the religion of those people was such as not to halt with that part of the Lord's work, and now the rooms are there and are being used with the greatest sense of joy and pride.

The Sunday school now has the use of eight additional rooms, four of them 10X16; two of them 10X13 and two 9X10 feet. All of these are ceiled over head and from floor to bottom of windows, and plastered where not ceiled. One or two large windows are in each room. Folding chairs are used to seat the people.

It was a great pleasure, as pastor, to see the broad smiles and cheerful faces as the people marched, for their first time, into their new rooms the third Sunday in June. And when they reassembled in the church auditorium everything looked like happiness and success. Suffice it to say, none were happier than I.

There are also several signs of progress in the Windsor church. The Sunday school is very much alive. With one of the most energetic young men of our church as superintendent the work has gone forward rapidly. All of the officers and teachers have taken a greater interest in their part, and there is a larger attendance and more enthusiasm and activity on the part of the whole school. Generally there are from 90 to 100 present, sometimes over that, and once it numbered 112. Those who know the smallness of the town realize how well this shows up. We are leading the town in Sunday school attendance and church membership and such has not been the case in so many years. We are growing.

The church received thirteen new members fourth Sunday in June, after some personal consultation during the previous week. This made a total of forty-two received into the church within fourteen months, which is about 60 per cent increase in church membership. The pastor is a great believer in prayer meeting and Christian union. Last summer he started a union prayer meeting of the three denominations of the town. This great asset of the church did not continue many months. Where Christian union cannot be worked, the Christian Church must take up the work and press on. So this spring he announced prayer meeting at the Christian church Wednesday night; everybody invited. And since then, he has been driving twelve miles to this church and having real, inspirational prayer meetings every Wednesday night. The people are becoming more interested all the while.

Jesus, the Great Preacher, in His great sermon said, "Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them", and I trust and pray our whole church will continue to show signs of progress by their fruits.

SOLEMN VOWS

HINGERTY-BRITT

The marriage of Miss Marian Britt, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. J. Britt of Windsor, Va., to Mr. Bertram Rice Hingerty, formerly of Windsor, but now of Norfolk, Va., took place at 8:30 o'clock Saturday morning June 25, 1921 at the home of the bride's parents, the writer officiating.

The marriage was a quiet, but beautiful one. Only members of the two families were present. The impressive ring ceremony was used. Mrs. J. M. Roberts rendered the wedding marches.

The bride wore a handsome blue suit of trietine, with accessories to match and carried pink and white sweet peas. She will be greatly missed in the Windsor Christian church, as she is one of its most faithful and zealous members. She was a member of the choir, and also a teacher in the Sunday school.

The groom is an ex-serviceman of sterling Christian character, and is worthy of the prize he has won.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Hingerty left over the N. & W. for a trip North, followed by the best wishes of a host of friends.

At the conclusion of their wedding trip they will make their home in Norfolk, Va.

J. M. ROBERTS.

JOHNSTON-WICKER

A wedding of much interest to many people within the circulation of THE SUN occurred on the evening of June 28, 1921, when Miss Annie Laurie Wicker of Elon College became the bride of Lemuel Roy Johnston of Burlington.

The wedding took place in the College Chapel which had been beautifully decorated with potted flowers and ferns. The altar was of white with decorations of green. An improvised arch of miniature lights, produced a lovely scene where the bride and groom gave the vows of marriage.

At seven o'clock the organist, Miss Hennie Malone of Burlington, and pianist, Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson of Elon College, beautifully rendered Schubert's Serenade, after which Mrs. W. N. Huff of Gibsonville sweetly sang "At Dawning" and "Because". The entrance of the bridal party commenced when the tones of "Lohengrin's Wedding March" were rendered by the pianist and organist.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Johnston motored to Greensboro, where they took the train for the Western part of the State. After visiting many points of interest, they will spend the remainder of the summer at Peabody College, Nashville, Tenn.

The bride is a graduate of Elon College, Class of 1916. The groom is a graduate of the State University, Class of 1914. Mr. and Mrs. Johnston will return to the State in September to make their home in High Point, where Mr. Johnston will teach.

PLEASANT AND FIT TO LIVE

"There is no place on the earth today fit and pleasant to live where the Christian religion has not taken hold of the thoughts of men", said a great university president recently. Christianity alone can make the earth, or any part of it, a fit place for human beings to dwell. Christianity is a world-betterment program.

SOME INTERESTING FACTS ABOUT AFRICA

Nearly one-fourth of the land area of the globe is in Africa. Africa is large enough to include the United States, the British Isles, Germany, France, Norway, Sweden, Italy, Argentina, China, India and several Belgiums and Spains.

The population of Africa is about equal to that of North America. Every ninth person in the world lives in Africa.

The black race doubles once in forty years. The white race doubles once in eighty years.

Africa's coast line is equal to the distance around the world. There are 40,000 miles of navigable rivers and lakes—equal to thirteen times the distance from New York to San Francisco.

Africa has now 25,000 miles of railroad, but needs forty times this mileage to have the same proportion as America.

All of Africa, with the exception of Liberia and Abyssinia, is under the control of European governments.

Africa supplies more copper than Europe and America combined; has five times as much iron as North America; one-half the world's gold; two-thirds of its ivory; nine-tenths of its diamonds; and over half of the rubber and cocoa.

The slave trade is nominally driven out of Africa, but contract forced labor, especially in Portuguese territory, is practically slavery.

Ninety per cent of the Africans are reached by European and American commerce, but only ten per cent are touched by the Gospel.—Missionary Review.

Say! Young Man, Young Woman

There will be wars until a trained Christian leadership comes to the place of authority in the council chambers of the world. Your highest duty now is to give yourself to preparation for the works of peace with the same true-hearted devotion that enshrined Uncle Sam's sons and daughters in grateful memory for their sacrifices in the days of bloodshed and slaughter.

ENLIST in COLLEGE --TODAY!

Next—"Equip yourself for a place of leadership in America's future.

"Stop thinking in terms of your home community. Recognize that America is now the hope of the world, the center of human progress, and get ready to play well your part in the solution of her problems and the problems of a world looking to her with confident trust.

"Even so, I look to you.

"Remember that a college education is the best paying investment known. Only fourteen out of a thousand of my sons and daughters ever graduate from college, but they supply fifty-nine per cent of my leadership. I need you. I want you to enlist in some good college this fall.

"ELON COLLEGE gave me six hundred and one of her sons for the war, and offered me her facilities in the S. A. T. C. for the training of officers. There the atmosphere is hallowed by the good-fellowship of the Christian home, there the rates are reasonable, and there Christian leadership has been produced."

Negatives

The Editor

BEING positive is far better than being negative. "Thou shalt not" is no panacea for the ills and ails of humanity. A man's ability to do something consists more in what he can do than in what he does not do. Telling the child that a certain thing should not be done is the negative process of teaching. Telling the child what to do is the positive method. The first gives the child to understand that life is a series of "can'ts", while the second teaches that there is something to do and a work for everyone. Present the positive and pursue in such a way as to eliminate the negative. Getting rid of a habit is not so important as a substitution of a good habit for the bad.

THE New Testament does not do away with the negatives of the Old Testament. The New fulfills and glorifies the Old. Religion is not a system of negatives, but a life of positives. Christ was the positive teacher and used at all times the positive method. Bringing fear to the soul of man is of less importance than bringing joy. Happiness is much better than fear. Happiness seeks to help some one; fear distrusts humanity and isolates the individual from his fellowman.

THE emphasis of damnation has its place, but to preach it constantly, it seems to us, is to develop a people who see and feel only the horrors of life. Jesus meant no such for His people, and certainly not for His preachers.

SOUNDING the positive note is not condoling sin. Goodness is to overcome the world, and that which overcomes exerts itself. Our Christ taught that sin and its opposite can not dwell in the same heart, but His emphasis was always on the exercise of the good, for He knew the love for good, if properly cultivated, would destroy the desire for the evil.

GETTING a man saved is only the beginning. The acceptance of Christ is to accept a place on His program, and that program is to fill the world with goodness, greatness, peace, and love. The world has too many shelf-worn Christians, Christians packed away by the church for the future use and reference.

AND this: The man who is not wanting something to do is the exception, and must not be taken into consideration. The average man wants to help some one, and the appeal of the church for recruits can be of the greatest effect by pointing out something to be done by those who are asked to accept Christ.

THE CHURCH BUILDING OF THE FUTURE

As we travel among the churches we observe many things in connection with church buildings. Comparisons are easy and possibly this has helped more than any other thing to put us to thinking about the church building of the future.

We have in mind as we write these lines, not less than a half dozen church buildings that were erected in recent years—buildings that we considered at that time handsome, commodious, and seemed to meet every physical need. Today these buildings are far from adequate and the church and Sunday school are unable to house themselves comfortably, conveniently and economically.

The trouble with practically every church building that is erected is the scarcity of funds. The congregation in limited in its building by the amount of money rather than the present or the future needs. Following such a process, and being circumscribed by such a program, the whole system tends toward a woeful waste and hopeless toil.

The church building for the future should not be a plan designed by the average carpenter, no, not even the expert carpenter, but the building should be planned by an architect—a church architect. Not only should the building be planned by a church architect, but the committee should see that the architect's knowledge embraces a study of church problems and conditions.

The church of the future should embrace more than an auditorium for preaching and a few adequate Sunday school rooms. It should embrace rest rooms, rooms for the babies, modern ventilation system, recreation centers a lawn, trees and every natural touch of environment to make it a home-like place.

The house of God should not only be a well planned, well built and attractive, but a sufficient amount of money should be invested to make it a house of beauty. No wonder that so few congregations are reverent when we take into consideration the dilapidated buildings in which they worship. Congregations enter without much thought of what they are entering for. General talk on almost every conceivable subject is carried on in the church yard, and even in the very house itself until the service begins. A beautiful temple in which to enter is not all that is necessary to change these conditions, but it will help greatly. We should build temples in which to worship, rather than mere houses in which to find shelter from sun, rain and storm.

Let us build permanently, build beautifully, build for the future. There is nothing to be gained by inadequate planning and building. It is a mistake.

THE SUMMER CHURCH ATTENDANCE PROBLEM

Can the problem of poor attendance in the city church be solved? That is the question put to us the other day in a ministerial council. We frankly admitted then that such a problem cannot be solved and still contend for our original position.

The attendance in the summer for the country church usually grows larger, while the situation is the opposite in the city church. The reason is very evident: The city dweller takes the summer season for his country outing, the visiting of relatives in the country and the attending of the church of his boyhood. This is not the only reason for the falling off of worshippers in the city church during the hot summer days. There are many, and they are too well known to be repeated here.

We had only two things to say in commenting on the question asked us. Our advice was at that time and is now for ministers not to fret with their congregations on account of poor attendance, and then add to this, short sermons. People do not like to go to church to be scolded, neither do they like to listen to a long sermon on a hot day. These two things are absolutely no evidence that a man is not a Christian or does not have enough religion. The scolding process never wins, whether it be in pulpit or in pew, and as to the length of the sermon, it is the amount the people retain and not the amount they hear.

DISARMAMENT

The talk of disarmament continues and the outlook now is that the subject is soon to cover a very serious consideration. At this writing the outlook for a disarmament conference is hopeful and the nation prays that something worth while will be the outcome.

It is a hopeful sign for any good thing when you can get the people to talk about a thing, agree upon it, and then believe in the same thing. Never in the history of the nations has there been so much talk on disarmament and it is much hoped that this talk will be crystallized into something of a positive force for the alleviation of mankind from the terrible scourage and sore of war.

“There is a tide in the affairs of nations
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now afloat,
And we must take the current when it serves
Or lose our ventures.”

THE DOUBLE STANDARD

The North Carolina Christian Advocate points out that the double standard of morals is passing. The Advocate says: “As long as women occupied a position of inferiority, man could require of her a double standard of social conduct that he himself did not live up to. But with the political and economic emancipation of woman, there will eventually come a relaxation of the power of man to compel her to bear the whole burden of social purity.”

“WHAT CHURCH IS THAT?”

Did you ever hear such a question? Did anyone ever ask it of you? Were you ever traveling along a strange road, pass a church, and want to know its local name and denominational connection? Of course you have—all of us have had such an experience.

The cross roads store is marked—owner's name and what line carried. Postoffices are marked, railway stations, manufacturing plants, hotels, theatres, and so on. But the little church is silent. She tells no stranger who she is, what she is, when built, when and how often services held, or who is her pastor. She does not talk. Strange, isn't it?

Many city churches are marked, but few, if any, rural churches are marked. Would it be worth while? The tourist would possibly take pride in knowing that “the church by the side of the road” is of his denomination. One church might be the means of carrying the name and work of its denomination thousands of miles.

Now, we do not mean a flashy sign, a regular billboard, but a simple marker in the form of a shield, say, or something of that kind.

Is it worth while? Study about it the next church you pass and do not know its name.

A CORRECTION THAT SHOULD BE MADE

The other day we sat in company with one of the head professors of Swarthmore College, Swarthmore, Pa. In exchanging our Church affiliations the Swarthmore professor thought that he was paying a tribute to our Church by saying that recently a man of the Christian Church had been called to the presidency of his institution. We remarked to him that we had always understood that Swarthmore was controlled by the Friends Church, whereupon he remarked that it was. But the Board of Trustees being unable to find a man of the Quaker faith to meet the requirements, he said that a man of the Christian Church was chosen.

A splendid compliment, wasn't it? It came to us in the presence of men who knew but little about the Christian Church. We repeat that it was a fine compliment. Knowing of the man who had been chosen as the president of the college, we had to be true and inform our guest that the man named was not of our connection but rather of the Disciples of Christ. It is only fair that we should do this.

Is it not a correction that should be made—a correction of being able to distinguish between the two bodies which call themselves Christians?

But the incident mentioned is only an example. It happens nearly every day. What shall we do about it?

Let us remember that today is a day of leadership in every field. To be leaders we must train, train, train.

The miracle worker—radium—is valued at $3,260,000 per ounce and there are only three ounces in the world.

THE CHURCH'S BEST LITERATURE

The Church's best literature is her weekly publications and not her leaflet literature. This statement has been well defended many times. In a recent issue of an exchange we find the very interesting information that many pastors were called upon to discuss the difference in value of the leaflet literature and the weekly paper of the denomination. The decision was overwhelmingly in favor of the regular periodical.

ALONG THE WINDING TRAIL

Along the winding trail the Editor has been traveling during the past several days, visiting the sick, meeting committees, and doing general benevolent work, are among the things in detail of outside duties.

One Day

was spent in Reidsville, N. C., looking in on the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina Conference. There we met friends and faces of other days and readers of THE SUN that we had not been privileged to meet before. The day's outing had an added joy due to the presence of Dr. G. O. Lankford, the Editor's agreeable and able pastor. An extended account of the Convention will appear in the next issue of this paper.

Another Day

was spent at the University of North Carolina in conference, by invitation, with President Chase of that institution. The engagement and conference grew out of some remarks made by the writer while speaking before the Appropriations Committee of the General Assembly of North Carolina last winter, President Chase being present. Our speaking before the Committee confined itself to pointing out a cooperative relation between the Church College and State University. The conference was also attended by three other parties interested in seeing the Bible taught in our State institutions. In a later editorial we hope to discuss a plan that is now being worked out looking forward to the teaching of the English Bible in the University of North Carolina.

Last Sunday

was spent with the good people at Bethlehem church, Alamance County. The pastor, Rev. J. W. Holt, has been unwell for some weeks and was unable to hold services. The occasion was the beginning of the yearly revival. An unusually large crowd gathered, the seating capacity of the house being inadequate. We preached at 11:30 and 2:30 P. M., to audiences that gave splendid attention. Dr. G. O. Lankford is to continue the meeting during the week.

During the Last three months we have been serving as best we could practically every Sunday, and on several of these good days speaking more than once. As we go among the churches, talk with the people, and understand their hearts, the more we see the great and abundant opportunity of the country pastor. He has, it seems to us, in his hands the moulding of future leaders of the Church and statesmen for his country.

OUR VIRGINIA LETTER

GETTING Christians churched" is the heading of a brief paragraph in a recent issue of a Church paper. The phrase had such a hollow sound to it that I wondered who could have had such an idea. We may get the people churched but that does not necessarily mean that we have brought them under the saving power of Jesus Christ. Oh, no. We dare to say we have gotten a good many people churched but that does not mean that these people are really in state of grace, which means their salvation. A man or a woman who has been churched, I should say has merely been brought into the membership of the church maybe, but remaining as far from the kingdom of God as ever. Beloved brethren, we need to get men and women saved through faith in Jesus Christ, not merely "churched". Let us quit these empty sounds—words and phrases—which have nothing in them but sound. When you get a man churched, but not saved, you have done him a great wrong and you have also hindered the spread of the Gospel—you cannot reach these people with the gospel for their salvation. Approach them on the matter of personal salvation, and they evade the issue by declaring that they belong to the church. Now if belonging to the church meant what it ought to mean, then the situation would be quite different, but churching people does not mean what it ought to mean. We have let the bars down, and we have left them down, till so many unsaved people have come into the church that it is no longer a question of church membership—it is truly a question of salvation, and not of membership. Oh, do let us reform and make the aim of the church to win people to Jesus Christ for real salvation very plain.

Did some one ask if we are not judging, when we say that churching the people is by no means saving them from sin and unto God? I am glad to answer. The mere act of taking a man or a woman, a boy or a girl, into the membership of a church, has practically nothing to do with the new birth, and without the new birth, there is no salvation, as I understand it. If a person joins the church, and yet keeps straight ahead in life, just as he was going before he joined the church, where has he gained? What has he gained? I think he has gained nothing, but that person has lost very much. To be a merely nominal Christian is a poor business at best—there is no good in it, so far as my best judgment can decide the question. I wish we all, ministers and laymen, could and would keep our minds set upon making known, as best we can, the fundamentals in the Christian life and experience. Every time a poor soul is deceived, no matter how it was done, whether through his own lack of understanding, or through the lack of proper comprehension of the divine plan of salvation, or through the failure of the minister to expound the great doctrines of grace with clearness and force, the loss of that soul is a most serious matter, and especially to the person or persons who have been the cause of such failure, as some of us ministers may be when we fail to do our part in making the way plain to the men who are groping their way in the darkness of sin. Let us beware lest some precious soul be misled and be lost through our failure to make the way plain. Above everything else the minister should study to make himself understood, that the message may be clear and plain to every hearer. Some of us ministers do not seemingly labor as diligently to make the message we bring to the people so clear and plain that none shall have just cause for not understanding. On one occasion, some years ago, we had occasion to ask a lawyer his opinion on a business matter. He gave that opinion in writing, and though it involved a difficult question, yet he gave his answer in about six lines and it was so clear that there really seemed no way of misunderstanding it. The truth is, the lawyer has to make his case clear or he loses, and while some of us may not think so, that is the way with us ministers—if we do not make the matter we present clear and plain, we not only lose, but the poor sinner to whom we are presenting the most important matter in the world, will lose his soul, not so much because he could not understand the truth presented (if it had been plainly and clearly presented) as because the minister who was giving the message did not make the truth so clear that there was no chance to misunderstand. Who was it that did such work? Are you sure it was not you?

CHURCH attendance is largely a matter of habit; and the same may be said of contributions. In fact habit is the controlling factor in human life. When Darius made his decree that any person who shall ask a petition of any god or man for thirty days save of the king, shall be cast into the den of lions, Daniel went into his house and his windows being open in his chambers toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day and prayed and gave thanks before God, "as he did aforetime." His habit of praying three times a day was so fixed that the decree of Darius could not change it. That kind of religious habit is the most valuable asset in religious life. Daniel was not defying the king's decree; he was simply obeying the religious habit of his daily life. When Jesus came to Nazareth, He went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, "as His custom was". Jesus had the habit of going to the place of worship on the Sabbath. These two examples are worth consideration by church members. One other thing may be said in safety about habit and that is, that the greatest human pleasure is in the field of habit. In fact there is very little human pleasure outside of the field of habit. This is the foundation of patriotism, the love of home, and of friendship. The habit of living at one place, the associations of daily life, going and coming, develops a pleasure that a lifetime elsewhere cannot break. These two elements of habit, strength and pleasure, may be reached by members of the church by regular attendance and regular prayers. Irregular attendance upon regular church services does not produce strength of faith nor pleasure in worship. The cause of Christ is maintained by "the faithful few"; but it could be made a great power by "the faithful many."

There are two things church members should cultivate; regular attendance and systematic contributions. It is not so much a matter of personal value and sun given, as it is the habit of going and giving; and both can be cultivated until the habit cannot be broken, and until the pleasure is unspeakable. The same kind of attendance at the shop, store, or office as is practiced by some church members, would destroy business. Is the business of the King less important? Does business prosper by the force of habit? Does that habit become a pleasure? Is there any real satisfaction in daily work? Does it ever occur to you that your irregular attendance and your irregular giving cause your lack of interest and your lack of value? What would your watch be worth, if it kept correct time part of the time and would not even run the majority of the time? The Kingdom of God can never succeed on an irregular schedule and the workers out of place most of the time. The King's business not only requires haste, but it requires system.

Most people regard church membership too lightly. It is the greatest membership known to man. It is as sacred as marriage. It is the highest obligation one can assume; and it is for life. There is no provision for resignation. There is no chance for a better position. Unhappy membership, like unhappy marriage, can be corrected only by more faithful service. One might wonder whether many members of the church do not depend on simple membership landing them in heaven. Will lodge membership secure sick benefits if dues are not paid? There is a present obligation for future rewards. "Serve the Lord with gladness" is possible only to those who keep their vows and work in the vineyard. The desertion of the Sabbath by church members not only violates the fourth commandment, but breaks the habit of church attendance and church liberality.

SUNDAY SCHOOL AND ELON COLLEGE

ON behalf of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention we wish to endorse most heartily the idea of President W. A. Harper in seeking to link together, for cooperation, and cement together in Christian service, Elon College and our various Sunday schools in a thorough going system of religious education. The whole denomination should come to regard our College and our Sunday schools as one in an adequate system of religious education for our youth, and devoted to the same great and worthy task, namely, that of preparing our sons and daughters for Christian service. To quote President Staley of the Southern Convention, the college is expected to be loyal to the Convention, and all the institutions of the Convention are expected to be loyal to the college.

Our Sunday schools and our College are related in a very significant and a very dependable manner. The Church looks to the Sunday school to discover, to enlist and to inspire its Christian workers and leaders; and it looks to the College to train and equip them for faithful and efficient service. The work of discovering and beginning is no less important than that of training and equipping. In this combined task, the labor and loyalty of the Sunday school should be linked up with the Christian service and efficiency of the Church college. It will be for us a most fortunate and happy day when every Sunday school teacher of the Southern Christian Convention shall feel that he is a part of the teaching force of Elon College in a very large and a very real measure; and when every teacher in Elon College shall feel that he or she is a part, and a very vital part, of the teaching force of the Christian Church. With Elon as the head, and our Sunday schools as the heart of our educational system in the Southern Christian Convention we should have a healthy, wholesome, growing body for service in that name which we are proud to wear, Christian. Our Mission Board subscribes to this fine idea so ably advocated by President Harper and trusts the bonds between Sunday schools and Elon College will be so strengthened as to cement the whole into a mighty force and factor for the highest type of Christian education. Each and all of our Sunday schools should point with pride, loyalty and devotion to Elon College as the Church college in which the work is to be carried on to further development and efficiency, which has been so well begun in the local church (Sunday) school.

J. E. WEST, Chairman.

J. O. ATKINSON, Secretary.

Mission Board, S. C. C.

CONCERNING THE CHURCH OF TOMORROW

It is a sincere pleasure to endorse the idea of a closer relationship between the Sunday schools of our churches and our beloved Elon College. If the pastors and teachers in the various Sunday schools will rally to this call I see no reason why any church should fail in securing the quota asked for.

Ruskin has written the first, last and closest trial question to life—"What do we like? ". The entire object of education is to make people not merely do the right thing but enjoy the right thing. What we like determines what we are.

The public school teacher is often told that it is her responsibility to develop the right standards of living in the community where she teaches, if this is true, how much greater is the responsibility of the leaders in a church or Sunday school.

The boys and girls of today will be the men and women of tomorrow. If left uneducated what about our church of tomorrow?

In Butler's discussion of education he says: "The child is entitled to his scientific inheritance, his literary inheritance, his constitutional inheritance, his aesthetic inheritance, and his religious inheritance. Without them he cannot become a truly educated or cultivated man."

The teacher's responsibility as I see it is to convince the young men and young women of our Sunday school that without the cultivation of these influences there is no complete living.

Let us awake from a sleep of seeming indifference and not shirk our great responsibility to the youth of our churches.

MRS. J. W. PATTON.

THE QUALIFICATIONS AND WORK OF DEACONS*

By Rev. William W. Staley, D. D., Suffolk Va.

HE office of Deacon grew out of a church trouble—the murmur of Greek-speaking members against the native Hebrew-speaking members, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministrations. Poverty was great in that day, and it was greater among those who identified themselves with the Christian faith. This division among the members grew into hard feelings, and the apostles called a meeting of the believers and proposed the selection of seven men to assist in the work of distribution of the public charity. They suggested that "seven men of honest report full of the Holy Ghost, and wisdom", be appointed over this business. The oldest ecclesiastical office, next to that of the apostles, is that of Deacon. The apostles were chosen by Jesus Himself; but the Deacons were chosen by the congregation. Both are engaged in the Lord's work, but there is a distinction in their call and their office. So far as we know this innovation corrected the trouble, prevented a rupture in the church, and satisfied the whole body of the believers.

I. The qualifications of deacons, as expressed in the choice of Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicholas, were very high. They were full of faith and the Holy Ghost. Paul's expressed qualifications of deacons, in his letter to Timothy, enlarged somewhat upon the original in the Acts. Deacons, he said, must be honorable, not doubletongued, not given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre, holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience. Honorable among men; not doubletongued, not thinking one thing and saying another; not saying one thing to one person, and another thing to another person; not given to much wine, that is temperate; not greedy of filthy lucre, that is not greedy of profit, lest he might misuse church funds; holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience. That word conscience is a great word in the moral sense. It is composed of con together, and scire to know. It is knowing with God that is, God and self coming together in the settlement of a moral question. Man cannot know the right alone; but when God, by His Word or by His Spirit, joins the individual in his decision, it is right for the individual. Education, intellectual culture of itself, cannot settle a moral or spiritual question. A pure conscience is knowledge that has been reached by the united effort of God and man. Such a conscience decides and acts wisely. When the human family and God know together, wisdom will control and righteousness will abound among men. The qualifications of a good deacon will embrace—

1. Honorable standing with ministers.
2. Honorable standing with the congregation.
3. Honorable standing with the public.
4. Honorable standing with God—that is, full of faith, the Holy Ghost, and wisdom.

II. The work of deacons. Paul associates deacons with bishops in Phillippians 1:1. The work of deacons is plainly that as assisting ministers in the Lord's work—in the Holy Communion and the charities of the church. It is difficult to specify in detail the work of deacons, for the reason that it involves the Bible and ecclesiastical history. The origin of the deaconship suggests that necessity may discover new service to care for the interests of the Kingdom; but it is certainly clear from Acts 6:6, that they were to be appointed over the business of looking after the poor in the congregation; "and the poor ye have always with you." Widows seem to have been the chief objects of the charity of that day; and James says: "pure religion and undefiled is to visit the fatherless and widows and keep unspotted from the world." Helpless men would be equivalent to widows, and hence charity undertakes to relieve all necessity. The deacons represent such charity and hence their work enlarges with new conditions of misfortune.

When the deacons-elect had been ordained by the apostles, and entered upon their work, "the number of disciples multiplied in Jerusalem greatly; and a great company of the priests were obedient to the faith." A united church means a church multiplied in its power over the world. The church must be united before it can redeem the world. Jesus prayed "that they all may be one that the world may believe." "Deacon Stephen was the first martyr to the gospel, and his reputation was equal to any of the apostles, and he died saying: "Lord Jesus receive my spirit." The first life given up for the gospel was the life of a deacon, and not the life of a bishop. Serving tables may include all the temporal affairs of the church with a spiritual significance.

This office was established to improve the preaching of the gospel; "we will give ourselves continually to prayer, and the ministry of the world." "The apostles were, by this new office, to have more time for prayer and preparation for preaching. Congregations and deacons are responsible for much of the poor preaching of the present day. If deacons would perform the work of their office, and help the spiritual conditions of the congregation, and surround the minister with a spiritual pressure that would compel prayer and preparation, it would multiply the membership and win the leaders of men to the Savior and the church.

STUDENT SUPPORT FOR ELON COLLEGE

ON February of the present year the Board of Education of the Southern Christian Convention printed a poster, entitled "The Church's System of Education". This poster was sent out to the Sunday schools of the Convention with the request that the same be placed in all our schools. The purpose of the poster was to call attention to the fact that the College must look to our Sunday schools for students, just as the Church must expect her trained leaders from the College. With this end in view, this poster suggests the idea of a quota of students from each Sunday school on the basis of one student for the College next year for each one hundred persons enrolled in the Sunday school, or fraction thereof.

As an alumnus of the College and as a pastor in the Convention, I am interested in seeing Elon receive that student support to which she is entitled, to the end that she may in turn serve the Church in the largest possible way. It seems to me that a splendid service may be done by our pastors, Sunday school superintendents and teachers, and by our people in general during these days when so many of our young men and women are thinking as to where they will attend college next year. Elon is the school for our young people. Elon needs them and they need Elon. Will your Sunday school be represented there next year? Or will the young man or young lady in your community who should be there, attend some other school and probably be lost to the Church?

Now is the time for action. A month from now may be too late. Even one week's delay in this matter may mean an opportunity lost. A timely word of counsel and encouragement may turn the face of some young person Elon-ward, and so save a life for service to the Christian Church.

A PICTURE OF THE CHAPLAIN SUNDAY EVENINGS AS A SPECTATOR SEES HIM

THE following is taken from a monthly Bulletin June 1921, issued by the office of the General Receiver of Customs, Port-au-Prince, Republic of Haiti. After speaking at length on the subject of "Red Blooded Religion" in which was discussed the old theology of hell fire and damnation, and its demerits, the editor (an American) says:

"The resurrection of this familiar and mournful picture would be inexcusable if it were done for no other reason than to harrow up the feelings of such of our readers who may have suffered such tortures during their childhood years, but happily we can say that it is brought forward for a better reason, that of serving as a foil to another and brighter picture of another religious service recently attended by the writer, at which, as concerns preaching of the aforementioned kind, it was like the old farmer's verdict of a giraffe when first he beheld a specimen of the breed. His decision concerning it was, as will be remembered, "there aint no sich animaile."

We went to the Barracks auditorium one Sunday evening not very long since, mainly, it must be confessed, for the unholy purpose of witnessing Charlie throw a pumpkin pie, or something, at his mother-in-law, or somebody, and on account of our dollar watch being a half hour fast, we had the accidental good fortune to arrive in time to hear another and better kind of a Chaplain expound the doctrines of Jesus Christ and His plan of salvation in a few words and in such a way as to make Christ seem a friend and not a despot seeking vengeance. He didn't get up behind an altar that stood on end and shout that we were all going to hell. He didn't groan and talk about 'blu-u-d'. He just got up with a smile and asked if everybody could hear him, and nobody could for a minute because of the boys who were outside getting one last drag from the "pill" (cigarette) making a rush for the seats. They evidently had heard the Chaplain preach before and didn't propose to lose a word. We're not going to try to report the Chaplain's sermon—go and hear him yourself and when you come away more'n likely you'll know several corking good stories you didn't know before and you'll probably have it firmly fixed in your mind that there is a Father who is ever watchful of us, His creatures, ever ready with His love and mercy to forgive and help His children who call upon Him in time of need. You'll probably feel happier for having gone, and perhaps if you have been inclined to regard God heretofore as a vengeful God you may not after the preachin' feel so much like the children who had been entertained by Little Orphant Amie's 'Hobgoblins'll git ye if ye don't watch out.'

"When the Chaplain got through his talk, he didn't groan and close the Book with a "just so" gesture, nor part his coat tails and park himself on a horse hair covered implement of torture, no, he said to the picture operator, 'Shoot when you're ready Gridley,' or words to that effect and walked away while the boys clapped their hands and wanted more. Scandalous of the boys to be light hearted enough at divine services to clap their hands, wasn't it?

"The Psalmist sang: 'Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing. Thou hast put off my sack cloth and girded me with gladness.' There is nothing about true religion that a real man need apologize for or feel ashamed of nor that need make him go about with a face so long that it would cost him fifty cents to get it shaved and a cheap job at that. When Jesus was on earth teaching and preaching, He believed in and taught and practiced Red Blooded Religion. He didn't let it be understood that everybody who didn't try to live, act and looked like a boiled owl, or an Egyptian Mummy were going to hell. He told the people that He had come to save the world, not to judge it. He took little children on His knee and they were not afraid and He blessed them. When the scoffers brought before Him a sinful woman and recounted to him her sins he invited the sinless one among them to cast the first stone, and when they had faded away he forgave the woman and sent her away spiritually cleansed. He never said a word to any of them about going to hell. When He attended with His mother and His disciples a merry-making following a wedding, and when the guests wanted wine with which to toast the bride's health, perhaps, and the wine was lacking, did Jesus say 'Out upon ye all for a drunken lot, wine, forsooth, away with it.' He did not! On the contrary He produced the wine.

"The old hell-fire and damnation brand of religion which depended upon catching 'em by searing 'em to death is an old relic belonging to the days of witch-burning and scold-ducking. It isn't the same brand of goods that was given out to the multitudes by the Master or that is now being dispensed by His servant the Chaplain. Go to the barracks some Sunday evening and when you come away you wont say 'I've been to the pictures' very likely, but I've been to the church services.' "

The Chaplain is very happy to be referred to in the above manner for it constrains him to feel that his objective is being accomplished. With ninety men attending regular divine services in the morning and three hundred exuberant, jubilant and expectant young men, of the age from eighteen to twenty-five, before him in the evening, to say the least, it is an inspiring opportunity.

The Chaplain implores the Church at home, the entire brotherhood, to pray for him that he may rightly preach Christ, divinely carry His spirit and influence these men to be clean, manly and upright. He implores you also to pray that amidst a world of "unmorality", degradation and sin, he may never lose sight of Jesus and weaken in his hold on the living truths of man and God.

WHAT DOES THIS SIGNIFY?

Rev. J. Vincent Knight, pastor of our Raleigh ehurch has caused to be printed and posted in the hymn books and used each Sunday, the principles of the Christian Church in the form of a responsive reading, the leader reading the principle, the congregation reading the verses of Scripture from which the Principle is derived.

Rev. R. F. Brown, pastor of Rose Hill church, Columbus, Ga., has recently preached a series of five sermons on the five Cardinal Principles of the Christian Church.

Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., Richmond, Va., prints a monthly church Bulletin on the page of which are printed the "Principles of the Christian Church". The Christian Publishing Association at considerable cost has caused to be printed a booklet of about sixty pages on, "The Origin and Principles of the Christians" and these are for free distribution to those who request them.

Rev C. B. Riddle, editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, wrote an editorial some weeks ago on "Harking Back to Fundamentals", in which our editor told us that we needed as a Church to assert again, and make prominent as in days of yore, the Principles on which we stand and which we present to the world. It is doubtful if any recent editorial has caused so much commendation. From the above incidents, and scores of others that might be mentioned one wonders if we of the Christian Church do not feel a real need of making known to the world, and to our own members in particular, the principles on which we stand, and that which we advocate as a Church.

J. O. ATKINSON.

HARKING BACK TO FUNDAMENTALS

The Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, has done a most timely thing, and made a most valuable contribution to the whole Christian Church, in causing to be published a series of booklets bearing on our Church history, position and polity, which booklets are for free distribution to churches and pastors needing and requesting them.

Dr. J. F. Burnett, Secretary of the A. C. C., than whom no man living, I presume, has a better acquaintance with our history and position, has been engaged to prepare the booklets and those thus far published certainly measure up to a very high standard of excellence and efficiency. So far three have come from the press and are being distributed, viz—"The Origin and Principles of the Christians"; "The Life of Rev. James O'Kelly", and "The Life of Rev. Abner Jones". This writer does not know how many thousand of each the C. P. A. has had published, but he does know that at least five thousand of each should be in the homes of CHRISTIAN SUN readers, and in the libraries of the ministers and laymen of the Southern Christian Convention.

If any reader of this does not know how our Origin and Principles came to be, read Dr. Burnett's booklet and the facts will all appear. If any reader does not know who Rev. James O'Kelly was and what he stood for, read Burnett's "Life of Kelly"; and if there is any doubt of question as to who Rev. Abner Jones was, and what he taught and achieved, read Burnett's booklet. Every request for the booklet should be accompanied with postage, 2 cents each, 15 cents the dozen, 75 cents the hundred. They cover more than 50 pages each, and the above barely covers postage.

It is very evident that these publications have cost much money, and none should order who do not intend to read or place them to great advantage. The Christian Publishing Association is certainly to be commended for this most thoughtful, timely and valuable contribution to our church life and history.

Every member that is received into the church should be given a copy of the "Origin and Principles". The C. P. A. has by a great generosity made this possible.

HOUSEKEEPER AND NURSE NEEDED

We will need a housekeeper who has had experience in managing boarding houses and understands dietetics. Salary will be made satisfactory.

We will need a trained nurse also, to be resident nurse in the College dormitories. Salary will be satisfactorily arranged.

These ladies should be from thirty to fifty years of age and without families to live with them.

We prefer to use members of the Christian Church in these positions.

THE OBSERVATORY

J. E. MASSEY

DOWN WITH ILLITERACY!

If Americanization is to become a fact among the whole of our foreign-born population and illiteracy is to be conquered in the United States, everybody must be educated in the English language. This was the theme of J. M. Gwinn, superintendent of schools at New Orleans when he addressed a recent session of the National Education Association at Des Moines, Iowa. He urged that illiterates and foreigners of whatever age must not be exempted from school attendance. Without stricter educational laws to this effect he sees our standards of American life imperiled.

In view of the great number of immigrant-citizens who insist in holding to their native languages, and who try to inculcate foreign rather than American ideas in their children, Dr. Gwinn said that it was essential to have continuous education of all peoples, foreign and native up to eighteen years.

"Ways and means must be established for a survey showing those present in the community who are illiterates and foreign and not trained for citizenship," he said. "The city schools and the whole industrial, commercial and civic life of the community must cooperate to secure these objectives.

"The qualities of a good citizen must be made clear to all who have to do with making ideals, teachers, clergymen, men in public life, etc., should be required to measure up to the standards of good American citizens."

When one realizes that 77 out of every 1,000 American people are illiterates and unable to either read or write the English language, Dr. Gwinn's ideas become strikingly practical and need enforcement at the present time. In centers of immigrant population like New York City, Philadelphia and Boston, and in many of the remote mountain districts of the South, there is an urgent need of this before Americanism undergoes a change to ideals of citizenship unworthy of the United States.

CONVICING WAR CRIMINALS

That it is difficult to convict German war criminals of the Kaiser's leadership has been proven lately at the German Supreme Court at Leipzig. According to the order of the Allied Governments, the Court has charge of trying those of country who committed atrocious and inhuman crimes during the late war, but in the estimation of the New York Times, the proceedings of the judicial assembly has been "thoroughly expected and German." A most striking example of this difficulty concerns a German General Karl Stenger, commander of the Eighteenth Baden Infantry Brigade, and Major Crusius, an officer of it, both of whom were charged by the French Government with having ordered the troops under their command to take no prisoners, to kill wounded men.

It was proven by German testimony that under orders from their superior officers, many wounded Frenchmen had been murdered on the battlefield by German soldiers. Major Crusius testified that General Stenger had given an order to "shoot prisoners on the battlefield", an order which the Major passed on to his command by word of mouth. General Neubauer testified on oath in the case that "it was quite possible he would not be able to tell the truth."

Says the New York Times again: "In a court of any other country than Germany, Stenger couldn't have escaped conviction. The testimony against him was emulative and convincing. So he was set free, received with plaudits on leaving the courtroom, while the representatives of the French Government were hissed, and the underling Crusius sentenced to two years, and forbidden to wear the German uniform, the uniform of official murder. . . . The court really convicted itself."

RESULTS OF TEACHING SAFETY TO SCHOOL CHILDREN

Once you get the school child's mind directed as to the danger of certain accidents common to him, his safety will be doubly secured is the opinion of Dr. E. George Payne, principal of Harris Teacher's College, St. Louis, and chairman of the School Hazards Committee of the National Safety Council. He has made a careful and detailed study of accidents among children in the various schools of that city; and he gives curves illustrating the sharp decline in coroners' inquests and in automobile accidents since the introduction of safety instruction in 1919. Statistics for separate schools show, he believes, that attitude of mind on the part of the children has a much greater effect on the proportion of accidents, which vary greatly from school to school, than has location or environment. This attitude, of course, can be favorably or unfavorably affected by training.

TALK OF "ALLIANCES"

Once we looked to the stars of a great international bond—a League of Nations; now we talk of alliances. Our former idealism which buoyed the peoples of the world during the great war has fallen the victim of a pseudo-pragmatic spirit which is mostly a formula of international government practiced in the days before the war, run on a plan of national competition. It seems that the American people are either not advanced or ripe enough to act in terms of our ideal nature. Thus it is that the world can rightly call us duel-natured, once preaching a league of nations, now practicing alliances of nations. Can it be that our former ideals were not right, that competition is to hold us to old standards of government. Or, can it be that our ideals of government are far off, and our rightful existence of state many years to come?

THE EDUCATIONAL FIELD

ELON COLLEGE, ELON COLLEGE, N. C.

By B. T. Groome

One of the most active and educational institutions in North Carolina, or any other state for that matter, is Elon College located at Elon College, N. C. Not only is this college always active in its college life; but within the past few years, or since its present head, Dr. W. A. Harper has opened with his "greater Elon" purpose, the institution has forged to the front with a rapidity of action and a determination of purpose that has caused the real sensation in college circles of the state.

There is no gainsaying that fact that within the last 10 years, Elon College has come from an institution but little known in the public eye, to be one of the ranking institutions in North Carolina and one that has earned for itself by dint of hard work and solid achievement, a place high up in the list.

A careful look at the catalogue of Elon College will show that while the students have a lot of time for play, they are also doing high grade work. Dr. Harper seems to have the happy faculty of being able to mingle both so that the mixture will prove both palatable and nutritious. He is getting results from the attempt as is witnessed by his ever growing student body and the fact that Elon College is a bigger spot on the map each year.

There is a magnificent student spirit manifested at this institution, both among the men and young women who attend the institution. To be able to satisfy both the students and their parents is a hard task; but it appears that Elon College has worked out the problem.

Dr. Harper does not keep the fact to himself that Elon College is a good place to go to school. In a most successful and at the same time, in a fair way, he has put the advantages of his institution before the public eye through the various avenues open to him. It is a well, thoroughly and honestly advertised college. Dr. Harper has become one of the college presidents of the state, if to run a college most successfully allows one to be put in that class.

An able faculty has been gathered at Elon College and the courses offered are thorough. No college anywhere does more conscientious work than is done at Elon. In every branch of student activity this institution is represented, religious, athletic, literary, etc.

Regarding the Christian attitude of the college the catalogue says this:

"While Elon was founded to give thorough instruction under the strictest moral and Christian influences, this is not to be taken as meaning that there is no touch of sectarianism here. During our history we have had students from every denomination in the southern states, including Catholics and Hebrews, and they have all lived together in fellowship and harmony. In the faculty are found representatives of six evangelical denominations, and while the Christian Church fostered Elon and provides the endowment and material equipment of the institution, this does not mean that there is not the utmost freedom accorded each one to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience, but there is insistence that each student worship in the way which he understands the Bible to teach.—Charlotte Observer, July 10, 1921.

"THE FAITH THAT MAKES FAITHFUL"

By William Channing Gannett and Jenkin Lloyd Jones

This little book deals with eight subjects:

1. "Drudgery". We mourn our lot—call our work drudgery. Yet, it is through drudgery we gain culture in things, it is the man who has had the one aim in life who has succeeded.

2. "Faithfulness". Be faithful to all convictions—through laughter and scorn. It is not so much that you fail but that you try. "She hath done what she could"—this is the fullness of the Christian excellence; it is the ultimate standard of religion.

3. "I Had A Friend". He comes as a Counsellor, as a Strengthener, to be hands and feet for us in our absence. But, above all, he comes as our Rebuker, to explain our failures and shame our lowness, to be a constant challenge for something higher. When such a friend dies we can truly say, "I had a Friend."

4. "Tenderness". What most people think is tenderness in themselves is not tenderness—it is merely selfishness. True tenderness is that which can destroy limb in order to save pain; when necessary, it can increase torture to save life or reduce pain. The truly tender soul will gladly endure itself the agony it would not inflict upon another.

5. "A Cup of Cold Water". "Whosoever shall give one of these little ones a cup of cold water shall in no wise lose his reward." The deeds of kindness we can do each day are little cups of cold water and we are serving God when we administer them.... "Inasmuch as you have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

6. "The Seamless Robe." There is unity in everything that deals with Nature and God. Religion is a seamless robe—all paths lead to heaven that are founded on unity.

7. "Wrestling and Blessing." Our most besetting sin may be our greatest blessing. Our weakest spot may bring out our strongest point. By wrestling with sin we overcome it and are stronger from the struggle.

8. "The Divine Benediction." Duty is the pathway to divine benediction and leads to—"Peace which passeth all understanding." The Stratford Company, Boston, $1.25, net.

SOUTHERN POWER GRANTED INCREASE IN RATES

After taking ninety days to reach a conclusion entirely satisfactory to itself, the corporation commission of North Carolina handed down its opinion July 12, 1921, in regard to the forty per cent increase asked for by the Southern Power Company. The commission ordered a twenty per cent increase beginning August 1, 1921.

WANT THIS NATION TO CANCEL WAR DEBT

It was made known at Washington, July 14, 1921, that Premier Lloyd George, of Great Britain, in a letter to President Wilson, in August, 1920, referred to suggestions that the interallied debts be reciprocally cancelled. He asked Mr. Wilson's advice as to the best method on which the whole problem would be considered by this government.

JAPAN WILL ENTER CONFERENCE ON PROVISIO

It was returned on July 14, 1921, that Japan would be ready to enter the disarmament conference on a proviso. That proviso is to leave out the discussion of far eastern questions. It is the belief of the American government that a solution of the far eastern questions is a necessary accompaniment to any disarmament program.

This is the first indication of a hitch in the plan to remove the causes for heavy armaments. The American officials are optimistic over the problem, however, and believe that a way will be found for a satisfactory discussion of the eastern questions with Japan as a member of the conference.

THE BULLETIN

The Editor of THE SUN is to preach in the Graham Christian church next Sunday at 11 A. M.

We invite those interested in mission study work to read our editorial in "The Book Shelf" on page 16.

The annual revival at Union (Alamance) will begin the fourth Sunday in July. Rev. Geo. D. Eastes will do the preaching. Services 11:00 A. M. and 2:00 P. M.

The first catalogue of the University of North Carolina was a single sheet about 18x24 inches, and was printed on one side only. The whole faculty, courses given, and full information concerning the University were all given on one sheet. D. Heartt, Hillsboro, N. C. (then Hillsborough) was the printer, according to the imprint. Heartt printed the first issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN—the whole of the first volume also. The State University was opened in 1795 and THE SUN was started in January 1844. Heartt must have been an old man at the time he prepared the first form of THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

ON MAKING A WILL

Sometime ago a lady died in another State and in her last will and testament she willed all her property to the Orphanage after the death of her husband. While the estate amounted to only a few thousand dollars, and it may take the greater part of it to support her husband till his death, yet it showed an interest in the work here and a kindly feeling for orphan children.

I often wonder, as I read in the papers where friends of other denominations make provision in their wills for a part of their estate to go to the Orphanage of their choice, when they are through with it, how many of the Christian denomination have thought of this important matter and have placed a clause in their last will and testament making provision for at least a part of their estate to go to the Christian Orphanage. It would be a great blessing to this institution if our people will remember us when they write that important paper.

After nearly two months of continued hot and dry weather and the gardens almost dried up, some fine showers have visited our community. OUR MOUNTAIN WORK

SUN readers will be interested to know that land has been purchased on which to erect our school near Fancy Gap, Carroll County, Va., and that plans have been drawn and adopted for the building which is to be erected at once.

The house will have two rooms in which to teach during the coming year, which two rooms will cover half the space of the building. The other half will be all in one room the coming year, and will be used on Sundays only for Sunday school and church services. As the work grows it is contemplated to divide this large room into two of equal size with the two to be completed now; thus making a four-room school building. It has been decided by the Executive Commission of the Mission Board to have two teachers the coming year, Miss Iola Hedgepeth as principal, and one assistant to be secured. Miss Hedgepeth, who is leading in the work, declares that the next move must be for a preacher and that the Board should at the earliest possible date now secure a preacher and locate him at or near the school. Miss Hedgepeth has so conducted herself and her school the past year that the time seems ripe for the work of evangelization. There is not a church, and other than ours, not a school in the district. We should have a church and a preacher there now, and as soon as the Board has the money in hand or in sight this most needful thing will be done.

Miss Hedgepeth is now in Carroll county soliciting logs, lumber and labor for the school building, believing that the people there, if properly solicited will furnish the rough lumber and haul the material to the building site as their contribution to a work they are learning to love.

NEED A GREAT PROGRAM

The Church ought to keep constantly before its people some great program. By this means the attention of all the people may be focused upon a needed work, their interest enlisted, and their efforts united. It is the only way by which large numbers can possibly reach their best. We need to learn the lesson of team work in the Church. An army moves together, all its units moving toward the same objective and bent upon the same purpose. A contractor knows how vital it is to his business that every workman shall be employed and that each shall work in harmony with every other workman. Through the Centenary Movement the Church reached its largest service in the mission fields. Through the united revival campaign we had our largest increase in membership. Through the Christian Education Movement we will go far beyond any thing we have ever done for education. Our leaders should see to it that the Church as a whole is always engaged in some great enterprise.—Central Methodist.

A Word To The Young People Of The Christian Church

July 15, 1921.

My fortunate Friend:

Yes, I mean fortunate. It is great to be living in this splendid hour, but it is fortunate to be young in such a time and bliss itself to be in the highway of life-preparation.

You are a high school graduate now. In 1910 you entered the first grade with, say nine hundred and ninety-nine others, and just eleven years later your number has dwindled to one hundred and eleven, and but thirty-eight of you will enter college this September, and but fourteen will graduate from College in the class of 1925. One and four-tenths per cent of our people graduate from college, but they fill fifty-nine per cent of the places of leadership and service in our life. True greatness is measured by service. There is nothing comparable to a college education in qualifying high souled youth for service to brother and to God. Do not turn aside from the highway of life-preparation, in which you have now reached a cross-roads, but keep straight ahead till the goal is attained in your graduation.

I am not alone in urging such action upon you. The business men of our nation join me, and they never speak favorably of any course of action from mere sentiment. They look at life from the practical standpoint. Roger W. Babson, the famous statistician, says: "The need of the hour is not more factories or materials, not more railroads or steamships, not more armies or navies, but rather more education based on the plain teachings of Jesus. . . . Religion, like everything else of value, must be taught. It is possible to get more religion in industry and business only through the development of Christian education and leadership."

Charles M. Schwab, the greatest steel maker of history, says: "Today industrial conditions favor the college man."

George M. Reynolds, one of the world's greatest bankers, says: "I would like to impress on boys GO TO COLLEGE."

This list could be almost endlessly prolonged. It is safe to say that our great leaders in industry agree with George W. Perkins that straight thinking is necessary to life-success and that the surest way to that ability is a college education.

In conclusion let me quote for you the testimony of a great world leader as to what besides bringing you success, your college education ought to enable you to do:

"To be at home in all lands and all ages; to count Nature a familiar acquaintance and Art an intimate friend; to gain a standard for the appreciation of other men's work and the criticism of one's own; to make friends among the men of one's own age who are to be leaders in all walks of life; to lose oneself in general enthusiasms and co-operate with others for common ends; to learn manners from students who are gentlemen; and so form character under professors who are Christians—These are the returns of a college for the best four years of one's life."

To such a fellowship of the spirit my fortunate friend, I extend you a most cordial invitation. Accept it without reservation. Accept it today.

Sincerely,

W. A. HARPER, President.

CHURCH NEWS

CHILDREN'S DAY AT PLEASANT GROVE, VIRGINIA

Children's Day was held at Pleasant Grove, Virginia, Saturday, July 2. The occasion afforded a delightful time for all those who were present. We had a large crowd, considering the fact that two other churches had Children's Day the same time.

The morning service consisted of a program rendered by the children; which was well done and enjoyed by all present. After the exercise by the children, a short talk was given by the pastor. Among the special features of the program was the music and excellent recitations by the little girls.

At the close of the morning service dinner was served. It was a sumptuous feed and all had a real picnic in keeping with the occasion. The afternoon was given entirely over to the children for play or any thing else that added to the enjoyment of the occasion.

The program was under the supervision of Miss Mabel Farmer, assisted by Miss Florine Farmer. The church, school and parents are grateful to them and all others who rendered service and cooperation to make the day a success; and the occasion a joyous one.

JOSEPH E. McCAULEY,
Pastor

PLEASANT HILL

The services at Pleasant Hill on the first Sunday in July were especially good. Children's Day exercises were held at 10:00 A. M. The attendance was large and an excellent program was rendered. The children acquitted themselves well. It was a joyous and profitable occasion. Every one seemed much pleased with the exercises.

At 11:30 the pastor preached to a large and attentive congregation. At the recess hour a bountiful dinner was served on the ground.

In the afternoon the Pleasant Hill Temperance Society held forth. Dr. W. A. Harper, President of Elon College, the speaker of the afternoon, delivered an interesting and intensive address on Christian Temperance. He discussed the subject from the viewpoint of elimination, incorporation and utilization. Eliminate the wrong; (an unbeliever) presented his objections to Christianity in a very strong and clever way, but he was answered with point and force. The occasion was full of interest. We are planning to undertake a series of meetings with Rev. A. Victor Lightbourne, as evangelist, beginning September 18. We ask for the prayers of our readers—that a blessed work may be accomplished in the salvation of souls and in the building up of the Church.

HOLLAND, VIRGINIA

These hot summer days are making us all feel the depression, but still we are pressing on as best we can. On the third Sunday in June in the afternoon, we had a special service for the ordination of deacons, viz.: A. T. Duke, R. E. Hedgepeth and J. P. Dalton. We had with us Dr. W. W. Staley and Rev. W. M. Jay, who took active parts in the services, Bro. Jay speaking on The Scriptural Idea of the Deacon and Dr. Staley spoke on The Qualifications and Work of the Deacons. The occasion was full of interest and both speakers made fine impressions, and I am persuaded that the people had much clearer ideas of the work of the deacons than they had before. Indeed that was largely the aim of the service on the occasion, to inform the people of the meaning of the office and work of the deacon in the church. So few people really have any definite idea of the deaconry. Bro. Jay's speech was extemporaneously given. Dr. Staley had his address written and it was secured for THE CHRISTIAN SUN which I hope will appear in this issue. Look it up and give it a careful reading, and then thank Dr. Staley for helping you to a fuller and larger understanding of the qualifications and the duties of the deacon.

The ladies of the Holland Christian church gave a special missionary service recently in which much interest was taken. The exercises consisted of music, recitations and dialogues in which the missionary idea was largely to the front. A silver offering was taken and quite a good sum was given. The occasion was in the interest of the work of the Woman's Board. In one of the dialogues a heathen Japanese presented his objections to Christianity in a very strong and clever way, but he was answered with point and force. The occasion was full of interest. We are planning to undertake a series of meetings with Rev. A. Victor Lightbourne, as evangelist, beginning September 18. We ask for the prayers of our readers—that a blessed work may be accomplished in the salvation of souls and in the building up of the Church.

Deacon I. A. Luke, the superintendent of our Sunday school, is busy these days, getting ready for the interdenominational County Sunday School Convention of which body he is president. It is to meet on Wednesday, August 31, at Providence church, not far from Suffolk, Va. It is expected that the occasion will be one of unusual interest, and it is hoped that every school in the county will be represented. To gain this end Bro. Luke is working as the days come and go.

The Holland church has given its present pastor and his wife a trip to the Ocean View Chautauqua, July 18-24, with expenses paid by the church. In addition to this favor they have voted the pastor the month of August as a vacation, all of which he gratefully accepts and hopes to get much good out of it for future usefulness, more vigor for both the body and the mind.

At the request of the church I shall remain with them till October 1. I had planned to leave September 1, but October 1, will complete my year. They feel that they would need a pastor specially through September, as that is the month appointed for a protracted meeting. After October 1, I hope to be ready for work elsewhere, if in the good providence of God, there may be work for me to do. The church has appointed a committee to secure and engage a new pastor to begin work as near November 1, as may be at all convenient. We wish they may secure the right man for this field. Deacon I. A. Luke is chairman of the committee. His address is Holland, Va.

At our last communion meeting the fourth Sunday in June the church presented a morocco bound copy of the New Testament and Psalms to Deacon Eli Daughtrey, as a slight token of their appreciation of long and faithful service as a deacon. He was ordained to the diaconry of the church at Hebron, Isle of Wight County, which later became the Holland Christian church, more than forty years ago, and through all of these years he has maintained a fine record of loyal service. He is now in his eighty-fourth year. When the church was moved from Isle of Wight to Nausemond county, he followed it to its new location and still stands one of its most loyal members and a faithful deacon. Of course, age is making it more difficult for him to be regular in attendance, but his loyalty never swerves to the right or to the left, but onward. God bless the dear old veteran.

She was a faithful member of North Highland Christian church, and will be greatly missed.

On Tuesday night prior to her death Saturday morning, Sister Fincher testified in prayer service of her great love to God and her neighbors and her readiness to meet her God. Funeral services were conducted by her pastor. May the Lord's blessing rest on the bereaved ones and comfort them in their dark hours. The remains were laid to rest at Gerard Cemetery.

A. H. SHEPPARD.

BUTLER

Mrs. Mattie E. Butler, wife of Benj. F. Butler, was born November 6, 1861, married to Mr. Butler December 4, 1879, and died July 2, 1921. She was twice married; first to Junius Joyner. By this marriage she was the mother of a daughter who died in childhood. By the second marriage she was the mother of four children, two of whom died in infancy. Lola Ethel married J. T. Landing and died without offspring. Lancelot, the son, died at the age of 18 years. This leaves Mr. Butler, who is a brother of Rev. H. H. Butler, alone in his home near Mt. Carmel church where the funeral services of his dear companion were held on July 4 by Revs. W. W. Staley, E. T. Cotten and I. W. Johnson.

Mrs. Butler was a faithful member of Mt. Carmel, had been sorely afflicted for five or six years, and passed out of a suffering body into the "Home of the Soul". The sympathy of the community was expressed by attendance and beautiful flowers.

GOD CARES, DO WE?

Forget not that your first and principal business as a disciple of Christ is to give the Gospel to those who have it not. He who is not a missionary Christian will be a missing Christian when the great day comes of bestowing the rewards of service.

Therefore, ask yourselves daily what the Lord would have you do in connection with the work of carrying the news of salvation to the perishing millions. Search carefully whether He would have you go yourself to the heathen, if you have the youth and fitness required for the work.

Or, if you cannot go in person, inquire diligently what blood mortgage there is upon your property in the interest of Foreign Missions, how much you owe to the heathen because of what you owe to Christ for redeeming you with His precious blood.

I warn you that it will go hard with you when the Lord comes to reckon with you, if He finds your wealth hoarded up in needless accumulations instead of being sacredly devoted to giving the Gospel to the lost.—A. J. Gordon.

ABOUT MISSION STUDY BOOKS—

A PERSONAL WORD

For some time the Publishing Agent has been endeavoring to supply the various mission study groups with books, and as demands have grown, stock has been increased. Until this year we have filled orders for the regular mission study books only when orders were received because of the uncertainty of the number wanted. Taking into consideration "rush orders" and complaints from Societies that books could be secured promptly, we decided to be governed by the number of books sold last year and supplied to that number. This we did but find ourselves with many books on hand and no orders. Not only this, but several Societies for reasons unknown to us have returned the books, and we have no choice save to give credit. In many instances, we suppose on account of money shortage, only two or three books are being used—the "passing around" method being in vogue.

We figure that the Publishing Agent's Office has never made a dollar on mission study books. The commission on books is usually liberal, but an exception comes when you handle a book on missions. For instance the book on "Bible and Missions" yields a profit of four cents a copy to this office. This is not net, and so when postage has been paid on the bill, time and cost of wrapping added, there is a loss.

Our idea of the Publishing Agent's Office is to serve the Church in the way of encouraging more and better reading, and to make money a secondary consideration. Others, however, have a different idea about it and we are obliged to operate at a gain if possible and to cut every possible loss. The handling of mission study books is one item that will have to be eliminated, unless some better arrangement can be had that we have for marketing them.

We would suggest that all Societies have a book supply committee whose business it would be to arrange in advance the number of copies of the mission study book wanted and to place an order for them before the regular study period approaches. We seek the cooperation of the Church in this matter and shall be glad to entertain any suggestion. In the meantime if there are those who desire a copy of either "The Church and the Community" or "Bible and Missions" we will gladly send it from our overstock.

We list four of the mission books below that might be of aid in most any kind of church work:

- The Bible and Missions
- Missionary Education in the Church School.
- Fifty Missionary Heroes.
- The Bright Side and The Other Side.

These books could be used to a great advantage by a Sunday school teacher. They could be made a source of interest to a young men's Bible class, as a special study. As we have said, we are overstocked with these books and can make a very special price on them. Write us if you are interested.

Cheerfulness

CHEERFULNESS is the touchstone of life that sends the note of "good will" along the line. The faculty of it is much to be desired and its effect is always telling. Cheerfulness wins in business, adds to the social life, and is a big counterpart to the religious life. It is light to darkness and sweetness to the bitter end of life; it is an oasis in the desert and the healing balm for many an ill. To practice it is to cultivate that feature of life that will always win its way in the face of the storms of life and the dark valleys of despair.

We salute the person who is cheerful. We look to him for the optimistic views of life and drink of his tonic on every occasion. His smiles drive away our clouds and roll back the gloom of time. Three cheers for the cheerful man! His place is great and his number should be legion.

"Front Porch" Musings and Meditations

(A Personal Pronoun Editorial)

RESIDENT Harding made famous the expression—"front porch"—by largely conducting his campaign for the Presidency of the United States from his front porch at his Marion, Ohio, home. It is quite natural to think of the incident in carrying on my editorial scribbling these days on my front porch, having been nervously incapacitated some days ago so that I cannot remain long hours in the office or study. I am finding the change worth while.

This Editorial

is a forced affair, I confess, and is the answer to that ever and constant call for "more copy" that no editor ever gets away from long at any time. This forced writing reminds me of the story that Dr. Staley tells on himself. A fellow clergyman was passing the Suffolk church one Sunday night and heard the Doctor addressing his audience in unusual loud tones. Dr. Staley was later taken to task by his fellow minister about the loud preaching. Dr. Staley's explanation was that he was lost in his subject, and was making up by noise. The rambling in this editorial is the make up for thought.

You are not under any obligation to read this article, or any part of it, and here is a good place for you to stop, unless you prefer to go along and listen to some good jokes and other things.

Talking about Jokes

reminds me of a good one in which those two princes, Drs. J. W. Wellons and D. A. Long are the chief characters. Long went to Pope's Chapel several years ago to hold a revival. Previous work had made it almost impossible for him to make special preparation. The first service was at hand and a text had to be secured. He turned to the pulpit Bible and there found an outline of a sermon left there many years before by Dr. Wellons, once pastor of the church. This relieved the situation, for Dr. Long used the outline. Not only one outline was found, but several; and the story goes that the whole group was adopted by Dr. Long and used during the meeting. Now add this to the story: After each sermon a certain aged member of the congregation would compliment Dr. Long and remark, "That was a fine sermon; I have heard Brother Wellons preach from that same text"

this year is going to be more difficult than in former years, is the verdict of most ministers I have talked to in recent weeks. Several pulpits now being filled will soon be vacated on account of their occupants going away to the seminary. Elon produced only two men for the ministry from its recent graduating class—and these were already serving churches. The 1922 class of the College has three men scheduled to graduate who will enter ministerial labors. The demand for more men is far in excess of the supply. The demand is growing in three ways: Older ministers ceasing to preach, pastorates dividing, and new churches being added. The pastorate plan will always be hindered until we can increase the supply of men for the pulpits.

Talking About Ministers

reminds me that the time is drawing nigh for the Conference Calendar to appear in THE SUN, and then in a few weeks these bodies will begin to meet. But convening does not concern me so much as the need of churches to begin now to raise their apportionments. I fear that the church which puts off this important thing until late in the summer or fall will have a difficult time in being able to come up to Conference 100%.

I Have Wanted to write something about (or against) the prize fight held some days ago in Jersey City, but the words I would like to use are not at my command. The papers reported that the flower of the land was there, but The Lutheran remarks that the press did not say what kind of flower. We presume of the wild species. Ninety-two thousand people attended. The gate receipts are estimated at $1,650,000. The winner received $300,000.00; the loser $200,000.00, and the promoter $600,000.00, while the Federal Government collected $320,000.00 in taxes. These figures surpass all prize fight receipts in history. Seats cost from $5.50 to $50.00 each. There is much shame to all this, but of all is that the "flower of the land" should turn out in such numbers to watch a slacker fight. Leaving out all other issues, where is our patriotism of four years ago? Does this not bring us ad nauseam? The slacker won, too. He won in the visible knock-out, but the man who turns his back in a moral battle is already defeated in the eyes of "other flowers of the land". Shame upon the State of New Jersey for allowing the beastly combat! Shame upon our civilization. God have mercy!

How Long

impressions will last only the great Recorder of time can tell. It was a little more than five years ago—April 26-30, 1916 to be exact—that I attended the National Missionary Congress held in Washington. The addresses of that Congress came out in a 350 page book. But I had the great thoughts in heart and mind. Today I took the volume from the book case and was reviewing some of the things said by such men as John R. Mott, Robert E. Speer, and others of like character and capacity. Then I endeavored to take stock of my own writings, preaching, and teaching since that time, and found that the hearing of these great addresses shaped my thinking in many ways, which augurs that personal contact with men has more to do with impressions than any other means. This is true of teacher, preacher, and business man. No preacher can afford to isolate himself from the great leaders of his day.

"Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime,
And departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time."

But Speaking About Men

brings to mind a man in the Christian Church whose life has gone out to live in more pulpits than any man among us. Elon has educated nearly all the preachers of the Southern Christian Convention, either directly or indirectly—mostly directly. What man among us in the pulpit that is not preaching directly the interpretations of Elon's Dean of teachers? What man among us has been more faithful, exercised more patience, and borne more hardships in Elon's history than that prince of souls whose name it is needless for me to write, save for the stranger or future historian who may read this page? You cannot separate this man, about whom I am thinking and writing, and Elon College. The name of one includes the other. Modest, gentle and refined! A teacher of teachers: a devotee of the Christian Church; a scholar of the first magnitude, and a man who lives what he teaches. Elon's unnumbered host of students from the first opening day—September 1890—to this good day, greet you, Dr. J. U. Newman.

Nearly Everything is now being touched by the present financial depression. Business of every kind, churches, schools, orphanages, colleges, and all institutions of their kind are hard hit in many ways. North Carolina has had nineteen bank failures and 500 suicides during the past eight months; Florida has had 314 suicides during the first four months of this year. The situation is deplorable and the outlook is not hopeful. The farmer who brought wood to my back yard today told me that many farmers would not make back their seed wheat, and that no rain had fallen on his farm since May.

Poor Crops

low prices, bad seasons, weak money market, all seem to come together. It takes a big heart, a loyal spirit and abiding faith to stand it. All are touched by these conditions and it should not be humiliating to any individual not to be able to meet his obligations. This is not to put a premium upon the man who cannot meet his debts, but to point out that he is in the same class with nearly all men; that his task is common, and that he must suffer and bear with all. There is nothing to be gained, as I see it, to commit suicide or to give up. Work, wait, be patient, faithful, painstaking and honest, are my six points of advice.

A Crisis

is not always the hour of defeat. It is often the hour of triumph—and it should be. God loves a crisis. Israel faced a crisis at the Red Sea, Israel faced a crisis at Rephidim. It was here that the host expected to find water, but to their distress the streams were dry. How they had hoped! It was the most fertile part of the peninsular, well watered, but no water at a great time of need. Water, however, was miraculously provided. History progresses from crisis to crisis. In health and happiness there is the better day. Let us always look forward to it.

Three Days Ago

I started on these jottings and have been adding to them between rest periods, reading a little, studying, and a little sleeping. When a preacher-editor tries to write he thinks of some sermon thoughts he has worked out, and when he tries to do a little sermon building his mind turns to editorial notes. Here are two thoughts from a sermon of mine that I will pass along, for they are not original nor copyrighted: The heavenly arithmetic runs exactly contrary to the earthly arithmetic. If you desire to use the heavenly arithmetic in adding you must consent to subtract, and no man increaseth except that he scattereth, and if you would multiply you must divide. The second thought is that earthly and heavenly physics do not agree. In our earth-view of things we say that the pull is from the top to the bottom, but in heavenly physics the law works the other way, and if you would put the religion of our Christ into a people, begin at the bottom. The placing of any situation in the hands of a few at the top never insures success. "The common people heard Him gladly."

Nothing Has Been

said in THE SUN in recent months concerning an adequate support for pastors. Much has been written about the subject when money was plentiful. I have not changed my mind about the matter and can see very clearly where many churches are suffering because they have not been willing to pay a pastor a sufficient salary to support him and his family. I here refer to the local church, but the Church at large has suffered much because of this weakness. Our College has suffered, and is suffering, from just this sort of thing. I am mindful of what those who oppose my views say about this salary proposition, but I have noticed that it is theory that cannot be developed. The minister and teacher should be free from financial troubles; and unless they are, the result will tell in their work and the public must suffer.

Looking After

the interest of THE SUN is no drudgery to me. It is one unending task, and a work that few can appreciate and understand all its duties, without experience. I am just as eager to see this issue finished as I was the first one committed to my care. My space is now taken, and to each reader, here is a greeting.

And Finally—

this reminiscent, rambling, and disjointed editorial is sent forth with that same hope that each issue of THE SUN bears from me—that hope that homes may be happier, the cause of Christ strengthened, and His will done here among men as it is being done in heaven.

Sunday School and C. E. Convention of North Carolina Christian Conference

BY REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

THIS Convention met in third annual session at Reidsville, July 12, at 8 P. M. and after an exceedingly pleasant and profitable session adjourned at 12:30 P. M. July 14, to meet in fourth annual session at Liberty church, Vance County, North Carolina, one year hence.

President C. H. Stephenson was on hand and at the appointed moment the gravel fell, the house was called to order and from the beginning to the closing moment, the "Convention train ran on schedule time." President Stephenson is a "minute-man" and not only begins and closes on time but manages his program as to call every item on time and to create interest and enthusiasm all along the route. After a musical program conducted by President Stephenson and the Raleigh orchestra, the devotional exercises and the address of welcome were in charge of Rev. W. L. Wells, pastor. The response by Rev. J. Vincent Knight of Raleigh finished the complimentary part of the opening and at 8:50 the Convention went into business session. After twenty minutes devoted to routine an address was given by J. O. Atkinson on "Why This Convention?" Following this homes were assigned, announcements made, a few moments of delightful fellowship were enjoyed and the meeting adjourned at ten o'clock.

The Convention was in session at 9 A. M. on the second day, and in the absence of Rev. H. Scholz, who has been the faithful and efficient Secretary for many years, and whose absence all regretted, the devotional service was conducted by Rev. J. V. Knight. The devotions were followed by a very practical and helpful period of "Questions and Answers" by Brother Knight in which many of the members of the Convention took a part. The President's annual address treated of Sunday school work. It dealt practically and most powerfully with the "Why" and "How" of the Sunday school, that is to say why have a Sunday school and what to do if you have one. Among the many helpful and able messages that President Stephenson has brought the Convention during his terms of office, it is no discredit to any former effort to say this surpassed in practical worth and real power any former message. The Convention was deeply moved and voted that the same be put in pamphlet form, if found possible, by the Board of Religious Education, and a copy placed in the hands of every Superintendent of the Convention. At eleven o'clock Rev. F. C. Lester delivered a very timely and helpful address on "Endeavorers—Endeavoring". All of our churches not having Endeavor Societies should have heard this address. Brother Lester is one of our faithful pastors whose heart is in Christian Endeavor work. Miss Margaret Alston of Henderson, N. C., read a helpful paper on "Loyalty". After some discussion of Christian Endeavor, the morning hour closed.

The Wednesday afternoon session was opened with devotional exercises conducted by Rev. H. Russell Clem of Springfield, Ohio. Brother Clem in a few striking sentences called attention of the Convention to the fact that our churches and schools are using martial music rather than music that helps worship and devotion. This is a thought well worthy of the consideration of all as the songs we sing have much to do with the thought and attitude of the time. After a business session, departmental reports were made on Cradle Roll, Primary, Intermediate, Adult and Home Departments. Prof. L. L. Vaughn of the A. & E. College, Raleigh, conducted a very suggestive period of "Questions and Answers" on problems directly facing Sunday school workers. These "Questions and Answer" periods with printed questions handed out to all members of the Convention and asked and answered either by the leaders of someone called upon brought out many of the problems that Superintendents and teachers and workers have to face and were found exceedingly helpful throughout the Convention. Three such periods during the Convention were conducted with wonderful profit to all. Rev. C. B. Riddle, editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN spoke to the point in giving to the Convention "Seven Essentials of a Teacher" and Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., inspired the Convention with an exceedingly practical and able address "The Responsibility of the Church—Teaching". After a business session, Dr. N. G. Newman, Elon College, N. C., at 4:40 P. M., delivered an able address on "Be That Ye May Do". The adjournment was at 5 o'clock.

The grand climax of the Convention was reached at the fourth service of the Convention Wednesday evening when the spacious auditorium of our Reidsville church was practically filled with delegates and interested visitors. The excellent program began with a musical program of thirty minutes in which the Raleigh orchestra led and delighted the Convention. There were also several instrumental and vocal solos. Many were heard to say that the life of the Convention was the Raleigh orchestra and one who attends this Convention regrets that all our Conventions have not an orchestra to inject life and vivacity into the sessions. The first speaker of the evening was Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, our Field Secretary of Religious Education, who is just beginning her work in this capacity and who spoke to the Convention on "The Work As I See It". In this address Miss Eldredge gave to the Convention something of the platform on which she appears as our Field Worker, the program that she expects in some measure worked out and the great desire of her heart for the Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of the Southern Christian Convention. She lays down a splendid program of activity and sets the standard high and we who know her have the faith to believe that she will see in a few months much of her excellent program in actual execution. Her address was a great delight to all present. Brother J. Byrd Ellington, the faithful treasurer of the Convention, spoke briefly on "Individual Activity" in which it was shown that every individual has his part in carrying forward every good work. J. O. Atkinson delivered an address on "The Sunday School Bearing Witness" in which it was shown that there are four ways along which the Sunday school can in reality bear witness; (1) By making a survey of the moral and spiritual conditions of the community; (2) By putting on in the Sunday school a missionary program from time to time which has to do with the moral and spiritual conditions at home, in the state, in the nation and unto the uttermost parts; (3) By teaching and inculcating in the minds of youth the method of Christian stewardship, and (4) By establishing a missionary library or supplying the schools with missionary books and journals. The remainder of the evening was devoted to the Christian Orphanage and was in charge of Superintendent and Mrs. Chas. D. Johnston. Mrs. Johnston with three of her class singers gave to the audience a sample of the work that is being done at the Orphanage and Brother Johnston in an exceedingly helpful manner laid before the Convention the present status and the methods of the Orphanage, calling his address "A New Day for the Orphanage". Bro. Johnston convinced his hearers that a new day had really dawned in our Orphanage life, and following his address an offering was taken amounting to $126.47, in cash and subscriptions.

The fifth and closing session Thursday was filled with much business routine, many reports and addresses. The devotional period was conducted by Rev. F. C. Lester, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell of Durham read a report on "Music"; Dr. N. G. Newman on "Co-operation"; Prof. L. L. Vaughn on "Literature"; Mr. P. T. Hines sent in a report, which was read on "Organization and Expansion"; Dr. J. O. Atkinson read the report on "Missions". Miss Bessie I. Holt, Secretary on "Our Board of Religious Education", and Miss Susie Riddick on "Finance". Mr. D. W. Sims, Secretary of the North Carolina Sunday School Association, delivered an address on "Some Essentials of a Progressive Sunday School." Rev. Stanley C. Harrell on "Teachers and Sunday School Teachers" and President W. A. Harper on "An Adequate Program of Religious Education". These three addresses, coming at the close of the Convention, all gave food for thought and brought the delegates to a realization of the great task as well as the many problems of the Sunday school and Endeavor workers. The Convention endorsed the action of the Board of Religious Education in putting an all-time Field Secretary in the field and congratulated the Board on securing the services of Miss Eldredge, and appropriated to the Board all Convention funds, except $25.00, after current expenses of the Convention were paid and also ratified the action of the Convention in adopting an adequate program of religious education.

Mr. C. H. Stephenson is to serve the Convention the coming year as President, Miss Bessie I. Holt, as Recording Secretary, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge as General Secretary and Mr. J. Byrd Ellington, as Treasurer. The people of Reidsville were most cordial in their hospitality and the stay of the delegates and visitors was made most happy.

SUFFOLK LETTER

HE Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian church has over two hundred members and is doing a fine work. As the Men and Millions campaign placed the emphasis of importance on MEN, it may be said that the largest asset in this society is the WOMEN as compared with their liberal contributions to the cause of missions. Recently the President, Mrs. John King, conceived the idea of a joint meeting of her society, the Girl's Missionary Society, and the Men's Christian-Business Association, a society in the church composed entirely of men and recently organized. For this joint meeting she invited L. Prettow Holland, a young attorney and son of Col. E. E. Holland, to deliver an address. It was a great meeting for a local church.

Soon after the close of the world war, young Holland visited China under very favorable circumstances. He had a university friend in China who welcomed him and gave him the advantage of his knowledge of China by reason of his residence in that great and ancient nation. His address was, therefore, on China as a mission field.

Mr. Holland is a member of the church, a willing speaker on religious topics, and a chip from the old block of Congressman Holland oratory. His address was, therefore, informing, inspiring, at times eloquent and gave the personal touch of one who had entered China's great temples, great cities, and acquainted himself with her great religions. The ancient peoples struggling after what the whole race has felt—the need of God—had developed great ideas and reverence, and constructed a system, called Confucianism, that enabled their thought while it failed to reveal to their hearts the true God. Christianity can give them what they sought for thousands of years. The conversion of China would mean the conversion of the world. Mr. Holland's address was listened to by these three societies with rapt attention, grateful appreciation, and spiritual profit.

This bit of local activity in one church is not given so much for its denominational importance, as it is to suggest the value of lay-service. Almost any local church can find young men and young women who can render good public service in the way of address. Mr. Holland is a young lawyer who is willing to give time and care in preparation for public addresses in the interest of the Kingdom. There is latent lay-talent scattered all over our Zion that could be brought into active service by invitation. A church that has emphasized lay-rights from its foundation has been slow to develop its laymen and this is the only way to develop a great church. Great rulers never develop a great national life; autocracy does not compare with democracy in the development of a great people. America has put a new spirit into the nations. Revolutions may be necessary to plant the seeds of a greater spirit and larger life among the nations; but it will come by the slow process of the activity of the peoples. When the Christian Endeavor Society proclaimed its slogan of "A Saloonless Nation by 1920", the wet world laughed, and the dry world sighed; but it came. And now that that same organization of young people, with eighteen million members has proclaimed a "Warless World by 1923", the military advocates will laugh, and the peace advocates will sigh; but history will tell us the results. We look to the young workers for the salvation of the world.

ELON LETTER

In April 1921 D. Peter Ainslie of Baltimore sent me an address he had delivered in Union Seminary, New York City, urging the abolition of denominational colleges. He asked me to write him my opinion. I sent my answer as this week's Elon Letter.

"Dr. Peter Ainslie,
Baltimore, Md.

Dear Dr. Ainslie:—

"I have read with appreciation and interest your excellent, challenging discussion of "Has The Denominational School a Place in Present Day Education?" You are right in your position that the denominational college is a stronghold of denominational life. The very reason however that impels you to oppose the denominational college is in the mind of its supporters the chief necessity for it. I have had some experience in soliciting funds for such a school and I know that the great majority of givers to education are influenced by their desire to see their own conception of Christian truth propagated. What you regard as a weakness, the plain men and women of the churches regard as the highest virtue. The issue is clearly drawn. They want the thing you oppose, and for the very reason you oppose it.

"What you really object to is denominationalism, or to be perfectly frank, sectarianism. You have discovered too that the great majority of the denominational colleges are not sectarian in their teaching any more. What you really plead for is the "inter-denominationalizing" of Christian education. Can this really come while we have denominations, except in rare instances? Ought we not rather to strike hard at the very heart of the trouble? The denominational college is merely a symptom of denominationalism, as is the church proper. The quack physician treats symptoms. The real physician diagnoses the case and applies his remedy to the underlying cause. Our disease is denominationalism. The Master Himself has prescribed the cure. We read it in John 17:21. We cannot cure the ills of the denominational college while the festering sore, the cancerous growth of denominationalism afflicts the body of Christ. And when denominationalism has been cured in the reunion of Christ's disciples, even as He prayed, then the denominational college will have become the Christian college, for which there will ever be need under a civil government requiring the absolute separation of Church and State.

"We have seen the vindication of the claims of Christian education in the moral and spiritual collapse of the German educational system. Somewhere in our institutional life must be located an agency that quickens the heart of emerging manhood and womanhood with the highest idealism, an idealism that will fruit in altruistic service. We have confidence, based on experience, to believe that the Christian college is able to be that agency. If so be, we dare not eliminate it from our program of saving influences for the life-equipment of youth. As earnestly as I deprecate denominational education, I am persuaded even it is preferable to the education based on mere scholarship and patriotism to the exclusion of God from the curriculum. If this be narrowness, make the most of it. I would rather be narrow than so broad as to lose sight of the greatest personage conceivable. Ignorance, utter illiteracy, would be preferable to learning so orientated. But happily we are not forced to accept either alternative of this dilemma. We can reject sectarianism and atheism both in the organization of the truly ideal educational system. We can reject them for that noblest conception of all—Christian education.

"How? By putting forth every effort possible to cure the evils of denominationalism. The prescription will be progressively applied, because the patient is in no mood to take the medicine except in broken doses. What I mean is that groups of denominations very closely akin in origin and aim and method should begin to unite, with the goal of ultimate union for all denominations kept constantly in the consciousness and Iso before the conscience. As these related bodies merge, their colleges would also unite. Through this process we may hopefully expect to heal our disunion in less time than we have expended in its multiform development.

"What we must achieve is Christian union. When it has come, Christian education will also have come. Were we to abolish denominational colleges overnight, they would immediately spring up again from the same cause that has produced them. They are the product of denominationalism, not its cause. The coming of true Christian education, what you so aptly in your discussion call complete education, waits on the answering of Christ's prayer for the oneness of His followers. We dare not destroy the good there is in denominational colleges till we have made sure the best awaits us in a united Christendom functioning educationally in truly Christian colleges, yielding their complete equipment for life and its obligations."

W. A. HARPER.

SELF

I remember hearing someone say, not so long ago, that if Christ had done one thing in His life for a selfish purpose He would not have been the Messiah. I feel very impressively that God is ready to use men (or the man), who will fully surrender, in a special way. I am more and more convinced that if we are to bear fruit in His name, we must let him do the leading. Christ said to the disciples (or to the fishermen) when He called them "follow me and I will make you fishers of men."

The days that are ahead are going to be testing times for the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Someone will have to hold it up in a special way, if it is to be carried to the people in its truth and simplicity.

Of late, even as never before, my earnest desire and prayer to God is that self, in my own life, may be completely destroyed and that God might have His way. I am tired and sick of self for I know it, at all times, fails in the service of God. So I resign and ask Him to take charge and let me follow. I ask each reader of these few words to ask himself or herself, "have I surrendered self entirely, fully and completely?"

ELISHA BRADSHAW.

A NEW DAY FOR ELON

Dr. W. A. Harper is on the field, and on the job, if he thinks "The Church's System of Education" is the policy to pursue, then I am for endorsing the whole "budget of effort."

Dr. Harper, while servant of all, is surely our Commanding Officer with reference to the success of Elon College. We are in the fight to win. If our Commanding Officer calls for a man from each Sunday school, then we should send that man post haste to Elon, or stand a court martial trial for non-performance of duty.

The Southern Christian Convention is behind Dr. Harper. He in turn is behind us pushing and in front of us trying to lead us.

Here we go! Four hundred for Elon this September. Every state, every Conference, every church, send a student. May the new day help every home to send a student—then we will have our 400.

B. F. BLACK.

SHOULD BE ACCEPTED

I heartily endorse the system of education planned lined by the Board of Education of the Southern Christian Convention and believe that the plans should be accepted by every church in the Southern Christian Convention.

T. J. HOLLAND.

RESOLUTIONS

First: That the Board of Religious Education hereby endorses the Church's System of Education as outlined by the Board of Education of the Southern Christian Convention.

BESSIE I. HOLT, Secretary.

Second: That we commend the plan of the Elon College authorities in seeking the cooperation of the Sunday school in the enrollment of new students and giving each school credit for results obtained.

BESSIE I. HOLT, Secretary.

The above resolutions have been adopted by a correspondence vote of the Board.

MISSIONGRAMS—NUMBER THREE

Wilson P. Minton

Rev. C. P. Garman landed at Victoria, B. C. from the steamship Empress of Russia, July 11. He comes for his regular furlough and has joined his family who have been at Saranac Lake, N. Y., for the past year. After a good rest Bro. Garman hopes to be able to take some school work in further preparation for his work in Tokyo. Upon landing he wired that he had bought land for the new mission home just before starting. We have had no further particulars but this news means that we are now in possession of land for both the mission home and the night school and kindergarten buildings at Naka Shibuya. In view of the extreme difficulty to secure land anywhere in Japan we are rejoicing that our mission has been so successful. Brother Garman has worked especially hard in trying to bring this about, and he will work equally as hard when the buildings are put up. The Garmans plan to return to their work after the usual year's furlough.

Reports from our mission force in Japan are to the effect that the recent annual meeting of the mission was the most progressive and the most constructive ever held. This seems to be the unanimous verdict of those present. Far-reaching plans were launched that ought to materially strengthen our work there.

The Japanese churches show a fine year's work accomplished. A commendable increase in local church support is shown, which is always a good sign of greater activity in the oriental church. We rejoice with our Japanese brethren in what they have been able to do.

Our new missionaries are rapidly taking up the work and we are already beginning to depend upon them for a good share of real missionary service. After September first the McKnights will be located at Sendai. This change has come a year sooner than was at first intended, but it was found that Brother McKnight would have to secure private instruction in Language next year owing to the fact that the other members of his class had in one way or another dropped out. He can secure the private instruction as well at Sendai and at the same time will be acquainting himself with his future field of labor. He is also acting as treasurer of the mission for the time being and he is doing the work in excellent style. With Mrs. McKnight in charge of the Sendai home and Brother McKnight at his task, we predict great things in the Sendai district under their consecrated leadership.

The Woodworths will return to Tokyo in the fall where they will of course plunge into the work they formerly engaged in before going to Sendai. They are so well known and loved in Tokyo and especially in the Azabu district that we shall soon be getting reports of their many activities there in the school and in the church.

As Mrs. Woodworth so nicely puts it "Miss Stacey has emerged." She is now a full fledged missionary and her work is growing by leaps. She hopes in the fall to be located in a little house within reach of both Shibuya and Oji where she will have a big hand in the conduct of the kindergarten work in those important fields. She just recently visited the kindergarten at Moka and in a fine way she is linking herself up with the work among women and children. She expects to have a young Japanese woman associated with her and knowing of their mutual friendship we make the safe guess that they will have many happy and useful experiences together.

The annual convention of the missions working in Porto Rico was recently held. We have not yet had report from there but expect to hear as soon as our workers, several of whom attended, return to their fields of labor.

In spite of Miss Williams' weak physical condition, she has been going right ahead with her work at Salinas. She has been receiving loyal support from our missionary societies in this country for which she is very grateful. Pray for her constantly.

We have added a new worker to our native force in Porto Rico, Rev. Ojeda who will have charge of the work at Santa Isabel where Brother Martin has been working so effectively. We understand that he is well qualified for the work both theoretically and from practical experience and we wish him great success in his new field.

Brother and Sister Martin have been resting quietly for a few weeks in and near Darlington, Ind. Mrs. Martin improves slowly. She needs our continued prayers for her complete recovery. Brother Martin has been doing some effective work, speaking at churches in the Western Indiana Conference but he should not be called upon too heavily as yet until he has had more rest.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: I am sending my dues for July. I had a big time last night. I went to Ocean View and marched with my Sunday school class. We had lots of children and I think our church had as many as any church. Don't you think that is fine? Love to you and the children.—Virginia Johnson, Portsmouth, Va.

I wish I could have gone with your Sunday school to Ocean View. I enjoy the water.—"Uncle Charley".

Dear Uncle Charley: I have been waiting a long time to write you haven't I? Enclosed find 25 cents for this and last month's offering. How are all of the orphans? I hope they are well. I have two of my cousins visiting me now and I am expecting three more next week. We will have quite a number of girls and boys to play with then, won't we? With much love.—Dorothy Moore, Chuckatuck, Va.

I know you enjoy having your little consins visit you. I feel sure you will have a good time.—"Uncle Charley".

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE
Elon College, N. C.

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Saturday, July 16, was a very happy day for the children at the Orphanage. The Sunday school from Union Ridge, Alamance County, held its picnic on the Orphanage grounds and invited the Orphanage family to dinner with the children. The day was clear and pleasant and everybody had a good time. Rev. P. H. Fleming, their pastor, came over and enjoyed the day with us. It is always a treat to the children to have Sunday schools hold their picnics here.

We have plenty of shade; plenty of ice water (on picnic days); plenty of house room in case of rain; nice grounds for the children to play on. We will try to make you happy while here.

THE OBSERVATORY

J. E. MASSEY

RARITAN VERSUS VERSAILLES

With the increasing doubt and lack of confidence in the late treaty of peace between this country and Germany, signed by the President at Raritan (N. J.) July 2, once more the pulse of public opinion points to reconsideration of the Treaty of Versailles. "The fact is," according to a diplomatic correspondent of the New York Times, "that the latter Treaty is the solitary avenue of approach to the solution of our international problems. Like truth crushed to earth this fact rises again and again."

"Strife and not peace" is the meaning of the peace resolution signed at Raritan, voiced by the editors of such journals as the New York World, the Springfield Republican, and Louisville Courier-Journal. The Republican says: "The recent pact is the strongest method of making peace, especially by a victorious power, known in history."

The good points of the new resolution have been pointed out as "paving a way for more German trade", permitting the withdrawal of 15,000 American troops in the army of occupation on the Rhine. Says the New York Herald, "It makes possible the complete resumption of friendly relations by the appointment of consuls, and issuance of passports, to be followed by exchange of ambassadors when a decision has been reached as to the signing of formal peace treaties." Though it may be a "makeshift" in the estimation of two of its Republican defenders, at least it clears away a "certain amount of wartime debris".

On the other hand it is more forcefully argued by Democrats and Republicans alike (excepting the irreconciliables) that predictions that the Peace Resolution will spur German trade will come to nothing. Declares The News Record, New York's oldest trade journal, "the declaration of peace alters only the political situation, not the economic or financial". We make a separate peace with Germany, yet before Germany can put it in force, she will have to obtain the permission from the Allies, who have grounded their past and present actions in European affairs in the Treaty of Versailles. This treaty, though it was turned down by the Senate after much elaboration, will be the one we shall ultimately sign, is the opinion of leading political thinkers throughout the country. Any other treaty, according to the Brooklyn Eagle, "is a troublemaker and betrayer of principle".

IN GETTING DISARMAMENT UNDERWAY

Now that Japan has consented to send delegates to a conference proposed to be held in the United States in the near future, the paramount problem is to keep things going in the right direction—of disarmament without unnecessary side-stepping. Irrelevant matters should be discarded at once.

Says the New York World: "Japan's way of approving President Harding's proposal for the conference need not cause overmuch perturbation. On the contrary the silence of Japan as to the suggestion that the discussion include Pacific and Far Eastern problems may serve as a salutary reminder to President Harding and every one else that the primary purpose of the proposed conference is the limitation of armaments and that other subjects should be discussed only as they prove necessary or inevitable in the pursuit of the paramount object."

Begin with the point and stick to the point should be practiced by every nation to assemble in the conference. They would be less likely to have that feeling if the nations represented had each cordially agreed to discuss anything and everything under the sun that could be dragged in as remotely related to disarmament.

The World again says: "Get the conference started as a disarmament conference. Then once the discussion is under way, neither Japan nor any other participant will find it expedient to disappoint the hopes of its people by blocking or sidetracking the main purpose."

FRENCH ECONOMIC REVIVAL SEEN

In view of the importance of French exports to America, the tariff deliberations of the government are a matter of material interest to France. A higher American tariff will tend to decrease trade with the United States. M. Deor, French Minister of Commerce, in an interview a few days ago with a correspondent of the New York Times called attention to the fact that France was establishing an open market for wheat and petroleum, which are American exports, and reviewed the state of French trade with the United States.

"Although the period of unrest which followed the war is not yet closed," he said, "and the resumption of commercial exchanges is not fully established, we can, nevertheless, notice indications of an economic revival."

An expert of the Ministry gave the following details: "Our exports to America have particularly increased lately, and for a great variety of products. If we compare for instance, the total French exports of America for the first four months of 1920 and 1921 we shall see that this total, which in 1919 was only 141,699,000 francs, reached 587,838,000 francs in 1920 and 564,383,000 francs in 1921. Exports in silk and floss have increased almost ten fold from 1920 to 1921. An important rise in the amount of cotton goods has also taken place. Many exports unheard of during the past two years are adding to an increasing exchange between the two countries."

Since July 19, 1921, Japan has manifested more interest in the disarmament conference and her negotiations with this country have apparently assumed a more active phase. Both the state department at Washington and the Japanese embassy have about completed their surveys of the situation preliminary for the next step in the negotiations.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

THE CHRISTIAN CLIMAX

In a recent sermon which has reached our desk, the minister calls attention to familiar words in the fortieth chapter of Isaiah, declaring that those who wait on the Lord shall renew their strength, mounting up with wings as eagles, running and not weary, walking and not faint. He lays stress on the order—soaring, running, walking. Is it an anti-climax? In most thought, yes. For the Christian faith, no. For "the true Christian finds his climax in the commonplace."

Of course, life is for the most part commonplace. Its dramatic moments are rare, and if they continued they would in turn become commonplace. Probably even presidents think of a first reception with a certain zest of anticipation; certainly they think of the last one with relief as closing a wearisome order. Some people have a strange affinity for the dramatic and are always having striking things happen to them. But an analysis of what actually occurred often reveals that its most dramatic features are in the telling. Even for the most enthusiastic and adventurous, life is principally a repetition of the commonplace. If, therefore, Christianity at its best is a life, it may expect to find its climax in the condition that life finds most common.

This is not, however, the way in which everybody thinks of Christianity. For some, it is essentially a series of explosive experiences, a kind of leaping from mountaintop to mountaintop. Time in the valleys is felt to be lost time. Hours of isolation or of communion, intense experiences of the divine presence, dedications that open the heavens and reveal God near and loving, conferences that bring together people of a similar and devout mind—these are the real experiences of the Christian life which make its humdrum endurable. Indeed, in the thought of such believers, if life were all it ought to be, there would be no break in these high experiences. In public meetings and in private confessions, doleful acknowledgement is made of failure to maintain this rare relationship. The popular song speaks of "living on the mountain" and "living by the fountain" as a permanent experience.

All the while it is noticeable that most of life has to be given to commonplaces even when religion is conceived in these exceptional terms. The everyday task has to be done in order to have time and opportunity to get to the exceptional occasions. It is not uncommon to have witness borne in the high-level conferences that one has worked all winter in order to be able to spend these weeks or days with the brethren. The defect of the estimate is not in its esteem of these high experiences but in its exclusion of all Christian reality from the lowly ones. It is highly Christian to be on the mountaintop of the summer conference, but it is also deeply Christian to be in the office and classroom and factory getting ready for that experience or putting to practice what was learned from it.

Perhaps the matter can be brought to focus by asking whether a Christian has his exceptional experiences for their own sake or for the sake of the humdrum order which will follow them. Attention has often been called to the fact that in the Christian scheme the day of rest comes at the opening of the week rather than at its close, with the implication that it looks forward, whereas the older Sabbath looks backward. The Christian has his Sabbath because he is to have six days of wear and tear when he will need the strength accumulated in his repose. His week is not for his Sabbath; instead, his Sabbath is for his week. Peter would have had booths on the mountain for a further stay, but the mountain exists for the plain, not the plain for the mountain. The dazzling glory dies away, but the enduring grace irradiates the plain. The climax is in the commonplace, not in the exceptional.

At the very heart of the Christian faith this proves true. There is only one redeeming cross—the cross of Christ Himself. But when the power of the saved life comes to man he is at once called to take up his own cross daily and follow. The daily cross is the result of the unique cross. Biographers cannot reproduce the ordinary, daily grind. They are compelled to record the brilliant spots of endurance. They slip in quiet expressions which tell their readers that "the following year was uneventful, merely filled with the regular round of work", or "here he settled down for some months at his regular work," as though the story must hasten on to some further dramatic occurrence. But everybody who knows life realizes that the demand of these uneventful years is serious and straining.

The great events are soaring upon wings as eagles; they are running without weariness. But most of the days of life and just plain walking without fainting. The sight of the Calvary cross sends men away thrilled, but the vision realizes itself in the daily cross which is the badge of the follower.—The Continent.

We will need a housekeeper who has had experience in managing boarding houses and understands dietetics. Salary will be made satisfactory.

We will need a trained nurse also, to be resident nurse in the College dormitories. Salary will be satisfactorily arranged.

These ladies should be from thirty to fifty years of age and without families to live with them.

We prefer to use members of the Christian Church in these positions.

MASONIC MONUMENT AT VERDUN

On July 18, 1921, it was learned that a Masonic monument would be erected at Verdun and that an American sculptor, Cecil Howard, had been chosen over all the sculptors of France to design the great monument.

SOUTH'S BUSINESS MEN TO MEET IN GREENSBORO

On July 19, 1921, Mr. E. P. Wharton, of Greensboro, N. C., president of the North Carolina division of the Southern Tariff Association and President of the Greensboro National Bank, called a congress of representatives of Southern industries to meet in Greensboro, N. C., August 15-16.

DEMOCRACY AND CHRISTIANITY

Just before the recent war the people of America began to talk Democracy and we entered the war "To make the world safe for Democracy". All through the war that was our cry.

Democracy and Christianity. Is there a difference between the two? When we train for Christianity it is our purpose to teach the individual to so act that his conduct will mean the most to humanity, that is, we train for service to be rendered to our fellowman.

That is the part of a democratic nation, then, if it is the part of a democratic nation, it is the part of a Christian nation.

THE BULLETIN

Rev. T. J. Green, who assisted in a meeting at Long's Chapel last week, called at THE SUN office on Thursday. We regret our absence, and our failure to see him.

Dr. D. A. Long preached for our Graham congregation last Sunday, filling the appointment of THE SUN'S Editor, who was unable to fill the engagement.

"Uncle" Wellons, who has been feeble for some days, is now better. He continues his reading, abiding interest in everything pertaining to his denomination, and rejoices in the love and friendship of his wide circle of friends.

Rev. J. W. Holt, who has been confined to his room for some time, is now able to be about again. He reports a fine meeting at Bethlehem. The meeting started on Sunday, July 17 and closed Thursday night, following.

AN APPRECIATED LETTER

Dear Brother Riddle:

I must say that outside the Book itself, I do not think I ever saw as much Gospel, the kind most needed today, in so little space as your front page editorial of this week entitled "Negatives".

God bless you and yours.

Fraternally,

B. J. HOWARD.

STEWARDSHIP SECTION

CHRISTIAN STEWARDSHIP

(I Cor. 9:17.)

By Rev. J. Hammond Dutton

(Pastor United Brethren Ch., Dayton, O.)

Proper giving is a matter of affection, not of conscience. It is of grace rather than of law. From the heart rather than of the hand must come the stewardship that pleases the Father and makes the exercise a means of grace, growth and godliness. "God so loved that he gave." God's children must also love that they give.

The stewardship idea has grown. Once it referred only to money. Now it embraces all with which God has entrusted us—life, truth and possessions. To render to him a good account of the use we have made of the life, the gospel and the possessions which he has committed to us, is stewardship. Love is the fulfilling of the law. Whatever God's requirements are, he has a just right to his claims. If God asks all, who could deny him that which is his own? He gave all, He owns all. "Ye are not your own." If it seems hard that God demands an accurate accounting and return, it is only that our greed has warped our conception of God. God does require of all his children a title of money, not that He needs it, but that we need to give it. It is part of our salvation to be saved from greediness. God does require fidelity in spreading the glorious news of a redemption as broad as the blight of sin; not that He has no other means of telling the world of his love, but it is a part of our salvation to be saved from slothfulness. God does require that our lives be yielded to him in loving service, not that He is in need of life; He is the source of life; but it is a part of our salvation to be saved from selfishness.

The ordinary or common method of enforcing or inducing Christians to practice stewardship, i. e., the Drive. The solicitation. The objective without stewarding, etc., is little less than begging in God's name for the thing we wish to accomplish, many times to satisfy personal ambitions, but for which we have no adequate appeal apart from linking it to the sacred cause of God. This method has and ever will put the church upon the rock. It blights the spiritual life and strains the victim's loyalty to the cause. Christian stewardship is a thing controlled from within and not from without. No gift ever blessed that did not spring from a grateful heart and take the heart with it.

How, then, is this motive for proper stewardship to be revived and made intense enough to produce adequate resources for the work of God? One word will answer; by bringing Christian people to full and proper appreciation of the character and goodness of God. From a life made pious by knowledge of, and devotion to, God will flow abundant and above all the needs of the kingdom. It is absolutely impossible for one who truly loves God with all his heart, soul and mind, to be stingy or slothful in giving. As God fills his heart, money will fill the coffers. No tainted money comes from such a devoted saint. No false or feeble effort in spreading the gospel nor will the life be yielded in a stunted manner.

DID SHE GO?

During the Winona Lake School of Missions, a few summers ago, at a little twilight meeting with the missionaries on the Hillside, a woman of beautiful presence and of strong and persuasive personality was introduced as the sister of J. Campbell White, and she and her husband both spoke, telling of their work in the foreign field. Their field was China. Some of us soon forgot the name of Mr. and Mrs. W. R. Stewart, but we remembered those splendid messages coming from the sister and the brother-in-law of J. Campbell White. One is indeed ignorant of the active missionary forces at work in the world today, who does not know something of the work of Doctor White.

But perhaps we do not all know why Doctor White is having such a victorious life. The story is short. The Missionary Review of the World told it something like this:

Into the heart of a young teacher in a country school came the impulse to "Go into all the world and preach the gospel." Barriers seemed to rise about her to prevent her going. She became the heart of a new American home, and eventually the mother of six stirring boys and girls. As each new life came into her home, she consecrated that life to God. In spite of obstacles, she realized her ideal of a Christian education for each one of them.

The eldest son is Wilbert W. White, of New York, whose influence as a missionary and as the founder of the Bible Teachers' Training School is felt throughout the mission stations of every land.

The eldest daughter is Mrs. Compton. She and her husband spent years in frontier Home Mission service in Nebraska and Montana.

Mrs. John R. Mott is the second daughter. Through her wide missionary influence and through the missionary statesmanship of Dr. Mott, the students and the Christian leaders of the entire world have felt the touch of that little home in Ohio.

In China, the other daughter, Mrs. W. R. Stewart, is proclaiming tidings of salvation working with her husband, Mr. W. R. Stewart, of the Y. M. C. A. force in China.

This quiet mother never addressed an audience in her life, but perhaps no other man in America has ever stirred as many a nation of their world obligation as has her second son, J. Campbell White, formerly a missionary in India, and later the first General Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement of the United States and Canada. He is now giving his life to sounding the call for Life Recruits.

As one by one her children gave their lives to missionary service, the mother said to each one, "Long before you knew anything about it, I gave you to God for His service." So their mother, while remaining all of her life in the United States of America, has gone into all the world.

"THINK IT OVER"

Of every two infants in the world one first sees light in heathen Asia: To what instruction is it born?

Of every two brides one offers her vows there: To what affection is she destined?

Of every two families one spreads its table there: What love unites their circle?

Of every two widows one is lamenting there: What consolation will sooth her?

Of every two orphan girls one is wandering there: What charities protect her?

Of every two wounded consciences one is trembling there: What balm, what physician, does it know?

Of every two that die one is departing there: What is his hope for the future? (Give these questions to your pupils and let them "think it over" and answer.)

A DIVIDED CHURCH

Is it well to say, "Charity begins at home" about the time an offering for foreign missions is to be taken?

Is it spiritual and Christian economy to argue that until the local work is well established it is folly to ask the church to give for missions, especially for foreign missions?

In 1832 the Baptists of Indiana separated on missions and anti-missions lines, each division numbering about 3,000.

In 1882 fifty years later, the anti-mission Baptist still numbered about 3,000, while the missionary Baptist had increased to 37,000.

In 1836, the Miami Baptist Association of Ohio divided on missions and anti-missions lines. Nineteen churches with 742 members excluded six churches with 441 members, for having the missionary spirit.

In 1888, fifty-two years later, the nineteen anti-mission churches had decreased to five (one has since died), the 742 members had decreased to 151, and not one of these churches had as many members as in 1836. But the six missionary churches had increased to 65, and the 441 members had increased to 7,212.

In 1840, the Baptist of North Carolina separated on missions and anti-missions lines, the missionary Baptist numbering about 24,000 and the anti-missions, 12,000. Fifty years later, in 1890, the anti-mission Baptist of the state were still about 12,000 but the missionary Baptist had increased to 300,000. Facts speak louder than words. "There is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty."

Christ's most emphatic command, and His one farewell command was "Go ye into all the world," and He has never yet given progress and power to a church, a Sunday school or a people, who ignored or disobeyed that command.

HOW OUR MONEY IS SPENT

Miss Edith Strauss, head of the Woman's Activities in the High Cost of Living Investigation being conducted by the Department of Justice, is authority for the figures showing the amount spent in the United States for luxuries. The total amount spent annually for candy is $1,000,000,000; for chewing gum, $50,000,000; for soft drinks, $350,000,000; for perfumes and cosmetics, $750,000,000; for furs, $300,000,000; for violet soaps, $400,000,000 and for pianos, organs and phonographs $250,000,000. Tobacco users spend $2,110,000,000 for their weed. While automobiles cannot strictly be classed as luxuries, $2,000,000,000 annually is expended in this direction. Is religious work receiving a reasonable share of America's wealth?

THE CALL OF THE MOUNTAIN FOLKS THIRTY MILLIONS IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOLS

Here we have a class of people with as good blood and ancestry as the most pedigreed aristocrat. Get out your American histories and refresh your minds as to the early settlers in the mountain regions of Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina and West Virginia. You will find the present ignorance and illiteracy due, not to mental deficiencies, but to an isolation from all things pertaining to civilization. Most of these people are pitifully poor. They have been unable to eke out more than the scantiest living from these rugged hills. Not many of them have traveled far enough from their own little cabins to have even seen a train. Is it any wonder we used to read of family feuds? If we had no interests beyond ourselves and our kin, and neighbor Brown and his kin, we might enjoy a feud to relieve the monotony. These mountaineers, once the way is shown them and made possible for them, are quick to take advantage of Christian and educational training. Moreover, removed from their home surroundings, they bring into more sophisticated society genuineness and stability of character.

Since various organizations have been studying the mountain people and their condition, much has been done to awaken an interest in them. Elementary schools and churches have been built, and preachers and teachers have consecrated their lives to this work, yet large numbers of these people have not been reached. The schools which have been established are in session only three or four months a year. They are so few and far between that the students who can attend have to walk great distances, sometimes as far as ten miles. Church services are irregular, not often more than once a month, the preachers usually being men of limited education.—Sue R. Staley.

Our own Christian training school for the mountaineers is in Carroll County, Virginia. We are now erecting a comfortable and commodious school building which can also be used for Sunday school and church services on Sundays.

A UNIQUE CHURCH

There is a non-denominational church in California with about 2,200 members that supports 23 missionaries on the foreign field, in addition to all its activities at home. This church is only five years old and has no organizations other than the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Society. The members make no pledges, conduct no church fairs or sales; have no banquets or movies, but there is spiritual life, Bible teaching, Christian fellowship and devoted service. It is the "Church of the Open Door" in Los Angeles.—Exchange

The notable gains that have been reported by the Sunday schools in various parts of the world in recent years are noted by the denominational press with deep satisfaction. Owing to the disturbances caused by the war, it was impossible to obtain complete statistical reports before the International Sunday School Convention in Tokyo, and estimates, based on the best information available, had to be made in some cases. The total enrollment at the time of the Zurich Convention, in 1913, was 29,848,041. In spite of the great loss incident to the war years, the present figures show a decided increase, except in Europe and Oceania. Notable gains have been made in Central and South America, Asia, and Africa. The increase for North America was more than 2,000,000. The statistics for North America were those gathered in 1918, and since that time there has been a marked increase in the membership of the Sunday school.

The latest statistics compiled by W. G. Landis, Statistical Secretary of the World's Sunday School Association are as follows: (for the whole world), Number of Sunday schools, 287,426; Number of officers and teachers, 2,586,825; Number pupils, 27,709,706; Total enrollment, 30,296,351. Of this number, North America has an enrollment of 18,762,581; Europe 8,623,629; Asia 1,379,860; South America 162,344; Africa 706,225. The whole world's enrollment in Sunday schools is less than one-third the population of the U. S.; and not one person in five is enrolled in any Sunday school.

'WHY?'

Why should we give money to save heathen abroad, when there are so many heathen at home?

There are some other WHYS equally logical.

Why should I give money to save those in other parts of this country when there are needy ones in my own state?

WHY should I give for those in other parts of the state when there are needy ones in my own town?

WHY should I give to the poor of the town when my own church needs money?

WHY should I give money to the church when my own family wishes to have it?

WHY should I give to my family what I might spend on myself?

WHY?—Because I am a Christian, not a heathen—that's why.

"Worry never made any one happy, nor has fear ever won a battle."

CHURCH NEWS

NOTICE!

It is my present intention to move to my home at Morrisville, N. C., this fall. I shall be glad to communicate with any church, within reasonable distance of that place, that desires my services as pastor.

G. J. GREEN.

Stem, N. C.

BEREA (NORFOLK)

On Saturday afternoon, July 2, 1921, our third quarterly conference for the present year convened and was called to order by our new pastor, Rev. W. C. Hook. Brother Hook presided with such gracefulness and ease, one would have thought that he had, had many years of experience in that kind of service. The business was transacted in harmony, good will and very satisfactory. In discussing some matters of interest, Bro. Hook offered several suggestions that were timely and very helpful.

This scribe living about ten miles from his church decided to spend the night with one of our loyal deacons, Bro. K. S. Gammon, he is also our very efficient treasurer. He and his excellent wife are lovingly united in good works for the cause of their Lord. It is a pleasure to be in the home of such consecrated followers of the Lamb.

Sunday morning the Sunday school was well attended and much interest manifested. Bro. W. F. Hodges is the devoted and consecrated superintendent. After school and just before preaching the audience was delighted and very much impressed by a solo from Miss Marion Lee Newman daughter of Dr. N. G. Newman. Bro. Hook's sermon for the morning was very interesting, thoughtful and inspiring. His subject was, "Who is Jesus?" In answering this question he gave the testimonials of many of the most noted characters of the New Testament that had come in touch with Jesus (while in the flesh) and received from Him His loving favors and divine blessings. After preaching, the Lord's supper was administered. In consideration of some remarks of Bro. M. W. Hall referring to the mission of the disciples and their Lord when this supper was instituted. Bro. Hook asked all to take the bread and retain it in their hand until all were served and then eat together, likewise the cup. This plan seemed to make the emblems more solemn and impressive, drawing us in a closer, sweeter relationship to Jesus, who commanded that we do this in memory of Him.

M. W. HOLLOWELL.

A FEW WORDS FROM DENDRON, VA.

Last Sunday night, July 10, some of our girls from the Young People's Missionary Society rendered a very interesting and helpful program. Besides special music there were two numbers, "A Chinese Hospital" and a "Young Maid who went into all the World". An offering was made for missions.

The second Sunday night in June there were splendid Children's Day exercises by members of the Sunday school.

On the third Sunday night in June there was a good program rendered at New Lebanon, consisting of Children's Day and missionary exercises, after which an offering was made for missions.

The young people at Union have reorganized their Missionary Society and have decided to have their meetings second Sunday nights.

The Sunday school at Burton's Grove had a picnic on the church lawn last Tuesday afternoon. There was ice cream and cake in abundance. When all had been served the pastor delivered a short address from the church steps.

The Young People's Missionary Society of Wakefield is showing signs of new life after giving a few of the interested ones a bit of deep concern for its welfare.

The six weeks' drought in this section has been broken by refreshing showers of blessing for which all seem to be grateful.

HOME COMING SERVICE

A Home-Coming Service will be held at the Holy Neck Christian church on the fifth Sunday of July. An all day program has been arranged, with dinner on the grounds. It is earnestly desired that every member of the church, resident and non resident, will be in attendance at these services. What a day of fellowship, renewing of acquaintances, and making new ones, that will be! Don't miss it.

You will rejoice to meet those men who preached the word to you in former days and who will bring you a helpful and inspiring message on this occasion. I refer to Drs. J. P. Barrett, N. G. Newman, C. H. Rowland and Rev. B. F. Black.

Come—Welcome.

NEWS FROM ROSEMONT CHURCH

Though we have been silent for a long time is no reason we are idle—from it.

The first of March our pastor, Rev. G. O. Lankford, left us having accepted a call from Burlington, N. C. We were without a pastor until the first of June when Rev. W. C. Hook came to us.

He is fast winning his way into our hearts with his pleasing personality and willingness to undertake anything for the upbuilding of God's Kingdom.

During these three pastorless months the members worked all the harder that our church might not dwindle. On several occasions ministers from various churches filled the pulpit which were greatly appreciated, while at other times our deacons officiated.

Our Wednesday evening prayer meetings are usually very largely attended and with great enthusiasm.

It was suggested a revival would be beneficial towards making us active and stronger spiritually, but without a pastor whom could we get? Mr. Lightbourne and Mr. Davis were secured to the gratification of all. With Mr. Lightbourne's attractive way and earnestness in his preaching and Mr. Davis' most wonderful piano playing, the building was filled to its utmost seating capacity each evening. Mr. Lightbourne in requesting our co-operation asked that we hold cottage prayer meetings daily. The total number persons taking part in the 29 prayer meetings were 495.

The revival closed having had a large number of professions and re-consecrations with 25 new additions to the church and $406.00 raised.

We are greatly interested in Missions. One Sunday in each month we give to missions and one Sunday to the Orphanage.

On July 12, our Sunday school gave a picnic at Ocean Park, Princess Anne Co., Va., where we went by trolley and automobile with lunch baskets and plenty of ice cream. We hardly knew which we enjoyed the more the "eats" or the surf bathing.

Soon after Mr. and Mrs. Hook's arrival, the members gave them a reception, at which time eight persons, each representing a department of the church welcomed them with appropriate remarks. After Mr. Morgan's charge to the members and Mr. Poythress' to the pastor, refreshments were served, after which each left having spent a very enjoyable evening.

MRS. H. E. ROANE.

MT. AUBURN

The protracted meeting at Mt. Auburn, Warren County, N. C., closed Thursday, July 14. There were four accessions to the membership. Rev. J. Pressley Barrett, D. D., was with us and pleased the people by the well prepared and earnestly delivered sermons. Prof. H. Scholz was also with us and preached one very instructive sermon.

The church at Mt. Auburn will, I believe, faithfully and promptly redeem all of her pledges to our College, and comply with all requests of the Conference and Convention. The Sunday school, of which Deacon J. A. Kimball is superintendent, will try to do all that is possible in inducing young men and women, who are prepared, to enter Elon College.

The writer declined a call to serve as pastor of this church for next year. I would, if desired, accept a church for full time where I could live with the people I served.

SOLEMN VOWS

JOHNSTON-WICKER

A marriage of much interest was celebrated at the parsonage of the First Christian church, Raleigh, N. C., on Wednesday, June 22, 1921 at 3:30 P. M. The contracting parties were Mr. Chas. D. Johnston, and Mrs. Effie Mae Wicker, both of Elon College, N. C.

Mr. Johnston became Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, Elon College, N. C., five years ago, and has filled the place with great acceptance, winning for himself a warm place in the hearts of thousands of his Church.

Mrs. Johnston, as well as her husband, has been eminently connected with the Christian Orphanage. She has held the place of head matron for a period of six years, and like her husband, has, by her very efficient work with the children, won her way into the hearts of the whole Church.

The words that made the couple one were read by Rev. J. Vincent Knight, pastor of the First Christian church, Raleigh, who used the beautiful ring ceremony.

Immediately after the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Johnston left on Southern train 139, for Asheville and points West for a ten days trip, after which time they will reside at Elon College, N. C. Their many friends will rejoice at this happy and most fitting union, and will wish them long years of success and happiness in their great work for humanity.

EDITORIAL

MORE ABOUT "THE BOOK SHELF"

AS we have said before in talking about the purpose of "The Book Shelf", the purpose of this page is to keep before our readers a list of books in which we feel they will be interested. And while our primary object is to supply patrons with church books—books for Sunday school work and church supplies of all kinds, we do not expect to stick solely to that. We hope to make "The Book Shelf" a reader's guide in every way and we want our readers to let us recommend to them the books of today that are really worthwhile, whether they be books of religion, science, or fiction. We believe any book that will stimulate the reader to higher thought, higher deeds and higher ambition, is good.

This is the class of books we want you to read; they are the kind of books we want to recommend to you and will recommend to you. We not only want to encourage our constituency to read these books, but we want our people to do more reading. It is not only a joy to read but it is very beneficial. Reading increases our capacity for thinking—it is the most economical way of obtaining the thoughts of other men and it makes us more able to meet the problems of every day life. The concentrated reader is the man who moves up to the highest rung on the ladder of success. If you do not read your Sunday school lesson, can you discuss it intelligently? So it is in all subjects, if you do not read on them, can you discuss them intelligently?

"The Book Shelf" then, is to be a reader's guide. We invite special attention to this page because we are listing the very latest books out. When we do not have them in stock we can obtain them for you within a short time. It is our purpose to publish a list of this nature from time to time. Give attention to this page, and we will help you keep up with the latest books on science, religion and fiction. And we, therefore, hope to serve you—our readers.

BOOKS

Books rule the world. As Robinson Crusoe has sent many a spirited youth from the safe footing of dry land, in quest of adventures on the unstable element, so I believe can the influence of every volume be traced in its effects on a peculiar tribe of followers, to whom it has been given an impulse in someone or other of the thousand paths of life. There are those who have shaped their character according to the stage advice annually doled out in the appendix of an almanac; and a select few have had their souls fired with heroic daring, by perusal of bold achievements of Thomas Thumb. Wherever a book happens there falls a spark which anything but death can put out. Every man looks into a book as he looks into his glass to adjust his opinions, and smooth down some rough spot on the face of his character. A book is a sort of philosopher, whom we can face to chat wherever we choose, and draw from him an oracle without a fee; whom, as we bring fresh and warm from the book-shop, we tuck under our arm as a wife or a bosom-erony; and, retreating with it into some snug corner, hold agreeable uninterrupted gossip.

The Way To Disarm

THE EDITOR

ONE of the best ways to accomplish anything is to begin at the bottom and work toward the top. The subject of disarmament seems to concern itself with reducing of war machinery and turning soldiers back to civilian life. That is good, but there is a feature aside from this; a feature that may seem little, but one that cannot go unnoticed without harm to the bigger program and larger discussion. This feature is the disarming of private citizens. Weapons that kill are carried by the thousands and men continue to use these things to kill men regardless of the law. This is the basis of blood thirst; and so long as we allow men to carry private arms for revenge, nations will continue to pile high mounds of ammunition and build huge guns. The private citizen must disarm and increase his confidence in his fellowman. The nation is the individual idea enlarged, and that which concerns the individual concerns the nation—and that which is taught and lived by the individual will be found in the heart of the nation.

Disarm at home, and so let the education that it must take to finish the job begin with the masses who love peace. Let individuals set the example for the nation.

MAKING THE CHURCH ATTRACTIVE

Repeatedly we have made mention of the necessity of keeping the cemetery, the church yard, and the church building attractive. Many are the times we have gone into a church to be greeted by an odor due to improper ventilation. Then as we ascended to the pulpit, there was found dust on furniture, Bible, desk, and all. Every minister who has had this experience knows that such a condition takes about 50% from the sermon. Imagine a preacher trying to preach on "The Clean Life" in such a place. (Well, that might be the place to preach it.)

There is another scene: The church yard beautiful, the building opened early and properly ventilated, the pews clean, song books free from dust, pulpit furniture clean, the presence of flowers, and a general tidiness that is apparent. Preach—why, sir, if you cannot do it here, there is something wrong with the text, or other conditions, and not the house.

Our worthy and able exchange, The Herald of Gospel Liberty, in a recent issue carried an editorial on "A Study in Cause and Effect", discussing the same thing of honoring God's house by keeping it decent. The Herald puts the situation after this fashion: "God simply cannot and will not bless any church that continues to worship in an old shabby, poverty-stricken building in the midst of a prosperous, up-to-date village or farming community. Just so long as the Israelites were living in tents in the wilderness, the old tabernacle was a sufficient house for God's worship. But when the time came that the nation was rich and prosperous, it was made very plain and very positive that God no longer could use that old tabernacle as the instrument of His work. They must build Him a temple in keeping with their own changed conditions. Anything less than that could not receive His blessing. The same great spiritual law holds true today. Just so long as our country was new, and poverty was general, and the people in rural communities were struggling to clear their land and put their farms in shape to feed the world, God could look with happy complacency upon the type of church building which then was common in these districts. For the churches were buildings equally good, and many times better, than the homes of the members. But now when the log houses are no more, and the chickens no longer roost in trees but have comfortable buildings of their own, and even cattle and the pigs do not lie out in the weather but are housed in expensive and comfortable quarters, God simply cannot pour out the fullness of His blessing upon any church whose members devote to His worship a building less modern than that which most of them have erected for their animals."

EX-PASTORS

To speak in terms of an ex-pastor is to speak of practically every minister, for nearly every one of them has served more than one charge. The Latin ex means out and it should be taken for exactly what it means when we speak of an ex-pastor. It is the pastor who is out of a certain charge—his work being closed there and the responsibility left with the local church and the incoming pastor, if one has been secured.

And occasionally there comes upon the surface certain rustling of leaves, troubling of the waters, etc., that make no few of us feel that some do not stick very close to their Latin or at least have ceased to remember that ex means out. Occasionally there is some going back and either directly or indirectly stirring up trouble.

We could go along and say many things in favor of the ex-pastor and possibly could point out more than a dozen ways in which he can help his successor and render most valuable aid to the congregation which he is leaving. We believe, however, that we will say this and close on the subject: When a pastor leaves a charge he should leave it. If he has any advice to give, give it to the present pastor on the field, or to the Board of Deacons in writing, leaving the giving of this advice until it has been asked of him. For an ex-pastor to cause trouble and confusion in a community or congregation is unkind, ungentlemanly and un-Christian.

LET THE CHURCH REMOVE IT

Here is a cause and criticism that the Church should remove. Let us illustrate in this way: The other day we stood in the office of one of the largest printing establishments in the State. In looking over some work, notice was taken that little church printing was being done. We made inquiry in such a way as to find out why, for we knew that the house had in other days made a specialty of church printing. The superintendent plainly told us that his house no longer took in denominational work, and even avoided all school work possible. "Dealing with the average church committee or board is very unsatisfactory", remarked the business man. "You never know just when you will get your money." he continued.

This man had reference to no one denomination, but to the class of work in general.

We pass this instance along, not as a jab at the Church, (though we have known hundreds of cases to justify the action of this business firm) but to remind committees, boards, Conferences, Conventions, and similar church officials that the more business they can put into their work means a name for the cause of church people everywhere.

THE COMMUNITY MAID

There is in every community a maid—and in some, more than one. Whether they deserve it or not, they have been labeled as "old maids". In their behalf we deny the charge and attach to them such names as these: "Sisters in Waiting", "Afternoon Sisters", "Unclaimed Blessings", "Perpetual Youths".

But in all sincerity there is the sober thought that many of these noble women, regardless of what you call them, have done more for education, morals, and right living than many who control banks and bonds. There is the school mistress who has held a big part in the education of nearly every child of the community. She deserves to be honored and crowned by the best that her community can give. She may be, after years of toil, unable to keep the wolf away from the door or to dress half so well as hundreds whose brains she has started toward a fruitful service.

If this "maid of honor" in your community, has helped to educate you or your children, enshrine her in your heart as one of the greatest women of the land, for she is. Not only this, but let her know that you appreciate her. You may be enjoying a success traceable to her unnumbered hours in the school room. Honor to whom honor is due!

RALLY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

(Christian Endeavor World, July 28)

The denominational rally of the Christian Church was the largest, the most enthusiastic, and was pronounced the best ever held by them at any World's or International Convention.

Five brief addresses were enjoyed by those present. These were "Christian Endeavor Deepening the Devotional Life," Rev. Ralph G. English, Albany, New York"; "Christian Endeavor and the Evangelistic Programme," Rev. J. F. Morgan, Norfolk, Va.; "Christian Endeavor Aiding in Christianizing the Intellectual Life," Rev. F. E. Roekwell, Albany, Mo.; "Christian Endeavor and the Great Commission," Miss Frieda Kirkendall; "Christian Endeavor and Stewardship of Self and Substance," Rev. A. E. Kemp, D. D., Troy, Ohio.

The addresses were all of a high order, glowing with enthusiasm, burning with earnestness, intensely practical, forward looking.

The rally closed by the singing of the Christian Endeavor Forward Movement Crusade rally song composed by Rev. A. B. Kendall, D. D., secretary of the Christian Endeavor Board of the Christian Church, and repeating the Mizpah benediction.

REACHING THE MASSES IN A UNIQUE WAY

(We have read the message below with much interest and pass it along to our pastors as a suggestion.—C. B. R.)

Central Presbyterian church, Denton, Texas, A. Reilly Copeland, pastor, has a unique way of reaching the masses with the gospel.

The church has placed literature bags in prominent places throughout the city and elsewhere. These bags have thirty pockets each, and are filled with the best tracts that teach spiritual, patriotic and educational truths.

For instance, in Denton, these bags are placed in the church, Sunday school annex, schools, (two state colleges), city hall, central office, court house, barber shops, hotels, cafes, mills and the depot.

In addition to this, Central church has these bags in the depots along the railroads out of Denton, and plan soon to extend the work as funds permit. Funds are secured in a very simple manner. Mr. E. Hugh Egan, a layman of Denton, is chairman of the work, and all offerings are strictly voluntary. This means free will in spirit as well as in name. Most of the funds come from members of the church, yet it is left open to anyone who is interested in this program of the work.

Mr. Copeland says it is marvelous how all classes read these tracts in great quantities. He thinks it is the most effective and the most economical form of evangelism known to the church today.

As this is an age of propaganda, it is a timely suggestion to pastors and churchmen to avail themselves of this method of gospeling, which carries on night and day. Only evangelical tracts are used. The work is non-sectarian.

Anyone desiring information as to how to put on the tract work, may write the Denton pastor, who will cheerfully give particulars concerning it.

Several large publications in America and elsewhere have given news articles of this work as it is being carried on by this church. Since then, quite a number of people in the United States have written the pastor about it.

In addition to the spiritual, patriotic, and educational features of the tracts, the church announcements can be attractively displayed on the space at top of literature bags, thus making a permanent ad for the church doing the work. The beautiful green canvas bag looks well anywhere.

Central Presbyterian church also has a free book table in the vestibule supplied with an assortment of the best ten leading subjects. These books are also paid for by voluntary offerings from those interested.

There are two book tables near the main entrance, loaded with a large assortment of orthodox books with printed prices on outside of covers. One can select books desired and leave money in the plate.

By these methods, the sermons and the church's ministry are increased a hundred fold.

WHO EMPTIED THE BOTTLES?

New York City's recent anti-prohibition parade has been the means of much comment. One of the things carried by the paraders was a lot of empty bottles. William Jennings Bryan speaking before the World's Christian Endeavor Convention recently held in the same city told who emptied the bottles. He said: "If those people who carried empty bottles in that parade had come here they would have found the people who emptied the bottles they carried."

ELON LETTER

O much has been asked me relative to the "Y. C. C." of which I am a member and the proud teacher, that I have decided to print the constitution and by-laws in The Sun, with the hope that similar organizations for our young men may come to other communities with blessings such as we have enjoyed and confidently anticipate will continue.

The "Y. C. C." proceeds on the sound basis that all life is religious and that the Church is under obligation to provide for every department of life. Athletics, reading, outings of various kinds, indoor games, music, eats, and study of religious topics together with debating and discussion on current topics, all of these it esteems to be with the scope of religion. The boys also attend the North Carolina Conference Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention.

We are working hard on our problem, and we are enjoying ourselves tremendously.

The Constitution and By-Laws follow:

CONSTITUTION OF THE Y. C. C., ELON COLLEGE

Preamble

We, the young men of the Elon College community, feeling the need of closer cooperation in order to insure a broader fellowship and more adequate expression of personality, do hereby associate ourselves in a club for social, recreational and religious purposes.

Article 1. The name of this organization shall be the Y. C. C.

Article 2. The purpose of this club shall be that set forth in the preamble of this constitution.

Article 3. The club shall have president, vice president, secretary-treasurer, team captains and managers for the various sports, social secretary, Sunday school teacher, Headquarters Secretary, and such other officers as the club may from time to time decide.

Article 4. All officers shall be elected by the Club in regular session and shall hold office for a period of six months or until their successors are elected.

Article 5. These officers shall have the duties usually prescribed for their respective positions by Roberts rules of Order, and the Intercollegiate Athletic Rules.

Article 6. Any young man of good character having his home within the town of Elon College may be elected to membership in the Club. This does not apply to charter members.

Any resident of Elon College twenty-one years of age and of good moral character may be elected to honorary membership.

Article 7. The Club shall maintain Athletic teams in the various sports in season, have regular social events under the direction of the social secretary, conduct a Sunday school class weekly in connection with the Citizens Sunday school, and maintain a headquarters room for reading, lounging, indoor games, and include any other activity that may from time to time be added.

Article 8. This constitution may be amended by a two-thirds vote of the club after two weeks notice. By-Laws may be passed by a majority vote of those present in any session.

BY-LAWS OF THE Y. C. C.

1. Fifty per cent of the members enrolled shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

2. A business session shall be held preceeding each social event, and at such time as may be called by the President.

3. The Club in all its activities shall be supported by social voluntary contributions. An offering shall be taken at the regular social meetings.

4. At each regular event two members will be asked by the social secretary to provide a simple feed, and one member to give a five minutes talk on some current topic of general interest, the person to be appointed by the president.

5. At such times as the Club may direct by vote, young ladies with chaperone shall be invited to join with the Club in social events.

6. No debt shall be incurred for the Club by any member, unless the Club shall in advance have voted on the same.

7. Athletic uniforms and personal equipment for athletics will be furnished by the individual participating in the respective sport.

8. Candidates for membership must be proposed at one meeting and elected at the next. A single negative vote will exclude any one proposed for membership. The election shall be by ballot.

9. No member of the Boy Scouts can be elected to membership till he has been honorably discharged from the Scouts for six months.

10. The headquarters room is for members only, and for their especially invited guests.

11. Dancing, profanity or vulgarity, games of chance of every kind, drinking alcoholic beverages, and the use of all kinds of playing cards are forbidden on the part of members of the Y. C. C.

OUR VIRGINIA LETTER

E are now passing through the most trying season of the year—the days of July and August when the heat is usually very severe, and so far it has been severe this year. Many of us are inclined to complain because the days and nights are so hot, but before we do this, we would stop and recall the fact that the warm weather is very necessary in the economy of human affairs. We can not do without the warm weather. If it were not given us, then our crops would be poor indeed and soon famine would follow and we would soon have a taste of what poor China has endured. Let us not complain because of the very warm weather. Then there is another fact we should carefully and prayerfully consider, and that is we should not slight the cause of Christ because the weather is hot. Let us remember that in the hot weather God is sending us great blessings, and therefore we should show our appreciation of these blessings by rendering to Him the most faithful service, though the weather be hot. What? Shall we neglect the cause of Christ and let it trail in the dust just because he is sending us great blessings in disguise—through the hot days of the mid-summer time? Nay, let us hush our complaining and “bend to the oar”, and do our best for the cause of Christ while we endure the heat, or He might permit a worse thing to come upon us.

In our rural sections this is also the season for special revival effort for the saving of souls and the building up of the church. Do not stay at home when Sunday comes—rather be sure to go to church, and not only on Sunday, but on every day of the week when the revival effort is in progress. It may not be so pleasant for the physical man, but it is profitable for the spiritual man and also for the glory of God in the work of the Church of Christ. Let us in prayer and all humility “bend to the oar” and do our best, for the seed we sow in these hot days will almost surely germinate and bring forth a blessed harvest in the salvation of many souls. To say the least the true Christian cannot afford to become “a slacker” in the cause of Christ, just because of the hot weather—because God is sending us special blessings for the farm and the home. Rather let us recognize the facts in the case and then do our best.

The way we live and serve, in the time of testing, shows us very surely just about how much we do love God and His Kingdom. Indeed, we often show the shallowness of our own poor hearts when we neglect the cause of Christ because there is some obstacle in the way. Sometimes we go so far as to show hypocrisy in ourselves. For instance, here is a man, a church member, who on a warm Sunday morning declares it is too hot to go to church and that too when his church building is a delightfully cool structure and located in a big fine grove, and yet he says he cannot go to the worship of God on the blessed Sabbath day because it is so hot. But wait a few hours, and see that man at 2:30 P. M. go off to the base ball park and there stand in the hot sunshine for two hours, yelling himself hoarse, over the work of the players, and then he thinks, or pretends to think, that he ought to be excused from attending the house of God. Alas, alas! Is that not downright hypocrisy? I believe it is, and may God have mercy on the man so acting and help him to see his hypocrisy until he shall repent and come up to the full life which is in Christ. A hypocrite cannot, unless he repents and turns unto God, is not only not a Christian, but he cannot be a Christian while he deliberately lives in hypocrisy. May God hasten the day when we shall see ourselves in the true light of Christ and then do our best to measure up to His teachings. At best we shall not have very much longer time in which to set our house in order and get ready to meet our God in peace through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. We, at least many of us, are too careless in the matter of maintaining right and true relationships with our Lord and Master.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

THERE are some persons whose character and usefulness stand out in exemplary prominence. They may be modest and unconscious of their worth; but their reputation speaks their praise. Jesus “made Himself of no reputation”, but He had a great reputation for the people saw in Him an unflinching faith in His Father, and a genuine love for mankind. It is not always the conspicuous types of character that are the most useful. Some one has said, “that all great things are wrought in silence.” We know that growth is silent. No man ever saw or heard the tree grow; it goes up like Solomon’s temple “without the sound of saw or hammer.” So some lives add force with passing years and pass over the river into a “great beyond.” Such was the life of Mrs. Annie McClenny, who departed this life July 12, 1921, after a lingering illness of five months. She was born December 25, 1852 to Dixon and May Holland, and was therefore, Heaven’s Christmas gift to the Holland home.

Two sisters, Mrs. J. T. Rawles, Holland, Va., Mrs. C. Council, Portsmouth, Va.; one brother, Jethro S. Holland, Holland, Va., survive her. She leaves, also, her husband David McClenny of Myrtle, Va.; four sons, Wilbur E., married of Suffolk, Va.; Edward D., married, and one child, Marion, S. C.; Sidney Lloyd, unmarried, residing with his parents; Jesse D., married, and one child, Suffolk, Va. Her oldest son, Wilbur, is quite a historian and has written important serials and books, Among which is “The Life of James O’Kelly”, perhaps the best authority on the great religious movement led by O’Kelly in 1792. This book was published in 1910.

Mrs. McClenny was born of religious parents, members of Holy Neck Christian church, one of the historic churches of Nansemond County, Virginia, and she kept alive the faith of her fathers and trained her children in the “nurture and admonition of the Lord”. She and her husband were members of Bethlehem Christian church where her husband has served as treasurer for forty years. She had been a member of the church for fifty years. She was related to the Summers, Hollands, Howells, Norfleets, and Kings, prominent religious families of Nansemond County. She was a niece of Rev. R. H. Holland, and a cousin of Dr. Job Holland, and Congressman E. E. Holland. Her husband was descended in direct line from Scotch immigrants who came to this country from Scotland in a time of persecution; and they have multiplied and maintained their Scotch characteristics in this country from the first of the 18th Century.

Mrs. McClenny’s life was of that even and consistent type that impressed others with a genuine faith and a bright Christian hope. There was no pretension, display, or obtrusion, in her life; but there was a steadfast adherence to principles and conduct that made “others take knowledge of her that she had been with Jesus.” Her domestic qualities, her religious habits, her neighborly kindness, and her patience under affliction marked her as one of God’s jewels. “Her children rise up, and call her blessed; her husband also, and he praiseth her.” Her four sons are all fine Christian characters, active in the work of the Kingdom. The third generation keeps the faith and reminds one of Paul's letter to Timothy where he says: "When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and in thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also." It is a fine commentary on family faith and family life, when the third generation keeps the religious fire aglow on the family altar. It was heavenly to witness the resignation and hope of this wife and mother waiting for the change. Her sunset was glowing with tints so sweet and so beautiful that the home heart said, "Thy will be done", "and we will wait for the resurrection morning"—that morning without clouds.

Bethlehem will miss her quiet trustful face on that second front seat, and pastor E. T. Cotten will look for another to fill her place in the congregation.

HAS YOUR AUTOMOBILE JOINED THE CHURCH?

OU may think that a very unusual question, Brother Barnabas, for the editorial columns of The Recorder. But it is an up-to-date inquiry; it is one of the foremost questions of the age! Therefore, pass the question on to your laymen, Brother Barnabas; for with some of them, at least, this question is not only a timely one, in its relation to all the other questions of the day, but it is a question which projects itself across the boundary line of the Christian's life, and bears a vital relation to the eternal salvation of tens of thousands of our American Christians.

Has your automobile joined church? The question is directly associated, first of all, with the proper observance of the Sabbath. "Six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. In it thou shalt not do any work; thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy manservant, nor thy maidservant, nor thy cattle"—nor thine automobile! Or is your automobile an exception? Have you a special decree of indulgence or of absolution from on high as to the conduct of your automobile on the Sabbath day? There is no exception to the all-inclusive ownership implied in this commandment, Brother Barnabas. We are responsible for all things within our gates. We are responsible for every use to which they are put, and for every abuse of them. And there is a vital sense in which a man takes all his possessions into the church, the very moment when he himself joins. The religious life of every professing Christian is an atmosphere; and if his Christianity is genuine, permeating, dominant, in that atmosphere, the whole environment of the home and its surroundings will speak the language of that man's faith, not alone to his old-time neighbors and friends, but even to the stranger within his gates, and even to the most casual passerby in the highways of life.

We are living in the age of the automobile. It has come to stay. We must give it place in the economy of life. It is indeed a great factor of human progress; and its almost universal use in our country communities will relieve the farmer of many of the irksome drudgeries of rural life, and give one other factor of superiority in the town-and-country equation of human life and human happiness. Because of its ever-widening usefulness, we must make terms with the automobile, in the realm of the non-essential. But while we give this winged vehicle its own large place, and recognize, with generous allowance, its immense value to mankind, we must not compromise our Christian principles nor our Christian duties in tribute to its imperial demands. If the automobile will join church with its Christian owner, and will covenant to convey that Christian owner to his usual place of worship, at the stated hours of service, every Sunday, that orthodox fidelity in itself will gain, not alone from the church, but from courts of heaven, as we believe, the ready permission to carry the family into the country, and afar among the trees and over the rivers, on Sunday afternoon. Not on a secular picnic, however! Not as the initial stage of a long overland journey! But only as a means of getting the whole family away from their toils and trials, and even from the very memory of them, by a swift retreat over hills and plains, and among the groves which were God's first temples, and under the great blue sky which is the perpetual dome of his noblest earthly tabernacle. In such a journey, prompted by such a spirit, and with the hallowed recollections of the morning worship as the constant companions and guardians of the mind, an afternoon ride may become to the true Christian a genuine religious exercise. But listen! Will your automobile remember the hour of the evening service? Yes, if it has really joined church!

The real fact is that the average automobile is so unregenerate that it often leads the owner himself astray from the path of Christian duty! You know all about it, Brother Barnabas! You know that one of your own parishioners, only last week or was it last year?—suffered a backsliding disaster of sad results, just through the influence of his unconverted automobile! He had been a faithful church-goer since early childhood, having formed the habit by accompanying his sainted mother to the old meeting house, among the maple trees, in the long ago. And when he bought the automobile, he really intended to have it join the church at once; and, as he lived some distance from his usual place of worship, he concluded, with easy logic, that he would now be sure to get to church in good time, and thus be able to greet his fellow worshippers and any strangers that might happen to attend. But somebody in the family, little knowing the consequences of such a reversal in the lifetime of their faith, suggested how very nice it would be to visit Uncle Hezekiah, who lived on Indian Creek, forty miles away. It was not a long battle which took place within the breast of Brother Faithful on that Sunday morning at the old homestead, but it was a hard-fought struggle, and it was just as decisive; and in its own eternal way it was just as eventful as the battle of Waterloo. They went to see Uncle Hezekiah, passing the doors of the church on the way just as the bell was calling to morning worship; the bell which never before had called in vain to the household of Brother Faithful.

"Only this one time!" they had said to themselves as they went on their first journey in their new automobile. "Only this one time! Next Sunday we will surely be in our accustomed places." But Aunt Mary lives forty miles in the opposite direction from Uncle Hezekiah; "and she would feel slighted if we should fail to visit her soon after our visit with Uncle Hezekiah. And it is so beautiful today, father, and it might rain next Sunday, you know!" And so it is to Aunt Mary's today; to Cousin John's the next Sunday; and then to the springs; and then to the mountains; and then to the seaside; always going and coming on Sunday, for the short journey; always starting on Sunday for the long tour.

There is only one safe way, Brother Barnabas! Get your people to answer in the affirmative this vital question. "Has your automobile joined church?" The automobile that fails to join church will almost inevitably lead its owner astray from the church! The automobile that joins the church becomes the instrument by which three great achievements may be wrought:

1. It will always convey its Christian owner to the place of worship, and will prove itself the best vehicle of the ages for getting the entire household there, thus helping to realize the truth that the family is the unit of the church of Christ.

2. It will become the long-prayed-for opportunity by which the aged, the halt, the lame, the blind and all the shut-ins of the community can enjoy, occasionally at least, the privileges of the sanctuary.

3. It can be made a symbol and a vehicle of the church's spiritual hospitality by conveying to the sanctuary those who are strangers in the community.—Methodist Recorder.

THE CHAUTAUQUA AT OCEAN VIEW

The session of the Chautauqua recently closed at Ocean View was the most successful ever held, at least that was the general opinion. Everybody seems convinced now that the change from Virginia Beach was a wise one. The weather throughout the week was fine, with the exception of one evening, and the big tent served the purpose well. Two hundred delegates registered from Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland, District of Columbia, Illinois, Ohio, Delaware, Pennsylvania, Canada, and probably other sections. Every speaker on the program was present on time with a prepared message.

The only regret expressed was that it was impossible to take it all in.

The opening on Monday night was marked by a big parade through the town which with a possible exception or two went off fine. The eight churches of Norfolk and vicinity turned out in full force and when the tent was reached not more than half the people could get inside. It happened though that the youngest church of the eight won the banner, having 100 per cent present. This honor went to the new Elm Avenue organization in Portsmouth.

The banner will be awarded again next year to the local church that has the largest delegation present on opening night.

Another matter of interest in connection with this session of the Chautauqua was the organization of a Christian church at Ocean View, with seventeen members. The church is located on Chesapeake Ave., which is the main thoroughfare on the cottage line end of the beach. They already have a creditable building worth several thousand dollars. This church was organized through the ministry of Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk.

The program of the Chautauqua this year was in every way up to standard. The committee, however, will probably emphasize the institute feature more in planning the program for next year.

The question as to the permanency of the Chautauqua is now probably settled for all time to come. The holding of the recent session at Ocean View was somewhat an experiment. It was evident, however, from the beginning that the move was a wise one. The daily attendance was much better than in recent years, while the tent was well filled for the evening lectures. Everybody was pleased. The vote was unanimous to make the Chautauqua permanent with Ocean View as the place of meeting. The matter of providing the necessary equipment in the way of a suitable building is in the hands of a committee. It is the purpose of this committee to get busy at once. The citizens of Ocean View are naturally very much interested, and ready to manifest that interest in a substantial way.

Who knows but that in a few years the Christian Church will own a valuable plant at Ocean View which will not only be used for our own conferences and conventions, but available for other large religious gatherings. Who knows but that in this decision the Christian Church has launched a movement that will result in the establishment at Ocean View of a great summer school of religious education? Why not? We have a constituency that is thoroughly loyal and ready to back such a proposition with their means. Friends of the Chautauqua everywhere will watch with interest the development of the idea.

S. M. SMITH,
General Secretary.

ON LEARNING TO WAIT

For some of us that is the hardest of all possible lessons to learn. . . . But unless we do really learn to wait, courageously and without fret, our failure will spoil our lives of much of their effectiveness. Even God Himself has to wait for many things. For instance, we must try His patience sorely. We go off into ways of sin and folly and stupidity, and He does wait so patiently and magnanimously for us to come back into the paths of wisdom and saintly again. . . . Our pleasure is sought for everywhere else but in Him, but He waits until at long last disappointment sends us back to the one center of joy and happiness. Thinking of this ought to make waiting just a little easier for us.—The Christian Guardian.

LAYING ASIDE THINGS PARTISAN

Wasting time is one of the most besetting troubles with our Government. In many respects, scientific, in business and otherwise, the American people are synonymous with rapid accomplishment, "pep" and speed; but in government it is apparently different. We lose too much time in deciding upon a definite course as to how we shall act and always keep in harmony with partisan policies, ambitions and aims. The art of striking quickly and surely in solving the central problems before the government, seems to be a lost one. Almost three years since the war finds the U. S. Government committed to no definite foreign policy and few domestic policies of lasting shape.

On the other hand, while the government waits upon the rest of the world, process of changes are taking place which will be hard to amend later. Changes, economic, social, racial and religious, continue surely and unhampered, realizing for the most part, belated rather than timely action on the part of the government. Has this always been the case with government? How can we make up for lost time? In what direction is the ship moving?

Disarmament (in progress at present) is the first milestone to peace and progress. It is a thing definite and sure so long as the leading powers (Anglo-Saxon for the most part) are in force. To sponsors of a real and genuine League of Nations, it is only a part of the great task of making permanent peace. But we cannot afford to become too idealistic in practical dealings with folk the United States as well as the world over. Expediency is our watchword.

President Harding is now busied with the problem of disarmament, which is a leading problem to be solved before a true league of nations can work. It is being solved by a few of the leading nations, the United States, Great Britain and Japan, rather than a world of nations as Ex-president Wilson thought expedient. But we cannot be overparticular in regard to the two somewhat contradictory methods; otherwise we will fall short of the object of accomplishment and witness another struggle of partisan factions, resulting in more loss of time. If the President succeeds in establishing a sane and successful program whereby the nations of the world will disarm and reduce international snobishness, he will have won a victory for peace highly practical and worthy of highest praise. The way will then be open for still more definite accomplishments, broader, more comprehensive and far-reaching action. To disarmament there will need be plans for more of cooperation and less of force, that the peace in prospect will be permanent.

RUSSIA IN FAMINE AND DIPLOMACY

An economic panic affecting the lives of millions of people in various parts of Russia, (especially in the northern parts of the country) has led the Soviet Government and other organizations of the nation to call on the world for relief. In almost wild and uncontrollable madness the people are sweeping across the country by the thousands toward Moscow, "stripping the land like locusts", says a recent report of the United Press from London.

This bad economic condition in the country rests chiefly on the breakdown of transportation and the failure of the Soviet theory of managing the railroads and other instruments of transportation, is the opinion of information received in Washington.

In response to the need of relief in Russia Herbert Hoover has promised to send food and supplies, but with the proviso that the Soviet Government will release the American prisoners who are held in that country as a kind of pawn against the action of the United States. Almost simultaneously with this action, Secretary of State Hughes has sent a communication to the so-called Russian Government demanding the release of the prisoners, which in all number more than twenty persons who have been captured during the past few months in their sojourn in Russia. Latest reports show an inclination of the Soviets to comply with the United States' demands.

The principal reason for these demands on the part of the United States when Russia is facing starvation, are apparently to insure all food which might enter the country, so that it will not be misused by the Bolsheviki, whose rule is believed to be the present cause of the famine. Ordinarily this should not be a season of economic distress, when crops are usually ripening; and for this reason the Soviets are likely to make more advances before food can be sent.

CHINA PLANTS TREES

The gods of materialism are not always on the side of ugliness. For centuries the Chinese and the Tartars spoiled their hills of timber in the manner that outwasted the most careless American milling company. Roy Chapman Andrews describes how the process was still going forward a few years ago in the northern Chinese provinces. After such timber as was needed had been taken from a gulch the underbrush and trimmings were fired, and if the rest of the stand burned with them the Mongol tribesmen saw no reason for concern. There seemed to be plenty of trees left.

Now, however, most of China has awakened to the disadvantages of treelessness. Total cessation of rainfall in certain districts during certain years, the washing away of soil, lack of timber for building purposes and fuel speak strongly for trees. Last year 130,000,000 shoots were planted by twenty-one afforestation institutions in central and northern China. The work cost $250,000. One railroad is planting 4,000,000 trees. A Chinese arbor day has been born. All countries can profit well from China's mistake.

The House By The Side Of The Road Let Me Walk With The Men In The Road

There are hermit souls that live withdrawn
 In the peace of their self-content;
 There are souls like stars that dwell apart
 In a fellowless firmament;
 There are pioneer souls that blaze their paths
 Where highways never ran:
 But let me live by the side of the road
 And be a friend to man.

Let me live in a house by the side of the road,
 Where the races of men go by—
 The men who are good and the men who are bad,
 As good and as bad as I.
 I would not sit in the seorner's seat,
 Or hurl the eynie's ban;
 Let me live in a house by the side of the road,
 And be a friend to man.

I see from my house by the side of the road,
 By the side of the highway of life,
 The men who press on with the ardor of hope,
 The men who are faint with the strife:
 But I turn not away from their smiles or their tears,
 Both parts of an infinite plan;
 Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
 And be a friend to man.

I know there are brook-gladdened meadows ahead,
 And mountains of wearisome height;
 That the road passes on through the long afternoon
 And stretches away to the night:
 But still rejoice when the travelers rejoice,
 And weep with the strangers that moan,
 Nor live in my house by the side of the road
 Like a man who dwells alone.

Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
 Where the races of men go by.
 They are good, they are bad, they are weak, they are strong,
 Wise, foolish: so am I.
 Then why should I sit in the seorner's seat,
 Or hurl the eynie's ban?
 Let me live in my house by the side of the road,
 And be a friend to man.

'Tis only a half truth the poet has sung
 Of the "house by the side of the way;"
 Our Master had neither a house nor a home,
 But he walked with the crowd day by day.
 And I think, when I read of the poet's desire,
 That a house by the road would be good;
 But service is found in its tenderest form
 When we walk with the crowd in the road.

So I say, let me walk with the men in the road,
 Let me seek out the burdens that crush,
 Let me speak a kind word of good cheer to the weak
 Who are falling behind in the rush.
 There are wounds to be healed, there are breaks we must mend,
 There's a cup of cold water to give;
 And the man in the road by the side of his friend
 Is the man who has learned to live.

Then tell me no more of the house by the road,
 There is only one place I can live—
 It's there with the men who are toiling along,
 Who are needing the cheer I can give.
 It is pleasant to live in the house by the way
 And be a friend, as the poet has said;
 But the Master is bidding us, "Bear ye their load,
 For your rest waiteth yonder ahead."

I could not remain in the house by the road
 And watch as the toilers go on,
 Their faces beclouded with pain and with sin,
 So burdened, their strength nearly gone.
 I'll go to their side, I'll speak in good cheer,
 I'll help them to carry their load;
 And I'll smile at the man in the house by the way,
 As I walk with the crowd in the road.

Out there in the road that goes by the house,
 Where the poet is singing his song,
 I'll walk and I'll work midst the heat of the day,
 And I'll help falling brothers along—
 Too busy to live in the house by the way,
 Too happy for such an abode.
 And my heart sings its praise to the Master of all,
 Who is helping me serve in the road.

HELP NEEDED

We had hoped all the year to reach the $15,000 mark in this report. But we have not been able to do it. Many of our Sunday schools have failed to help us this year and it has caused us to fail to reach the amount we had hoped to reach at this time. We have never needed money more than we need it now. We are doing our best to get the new building furnished so we can open the doors for the many little children that are pleading for a home. I received a letter today from one of our pastors stating that he wanted us to take three children, saying it was the most pitiful case that had ever come under his observation.

I have numbers of just such pleas and I am willing to work harder and forget self in order to give these little helpless children a home and an opportunity in life, provided our church folks will contribute to support them.

The good women are going right along furnishing the building with good beds to make the children comfortable and I knew they would when I called on them.

But we must have bath tubs, etc., and it will take several hundred dollars to put in the water and necessary supplies.

More than one hundred and twenty-five children have made application in the last year for a place in this home. Many of that number are still waiting. While we cannot take all of them, we can take the most helpless cases and our Church ought to see to it that the most needy have a home when a few more hundred dollars will get the new building equipped for them.

Let every Sunday school come to our rescue. Don't wait but make a monthly offering for the support of the Orphanage.

HELP US NOW WE NEED YOUR HELP.

WORLD HAPPENINGS

PRESIDENT ASKS CONGRESS TO HELP RAILROADS

President Harding in a special message to Congress delivered by messenger on July 26, 1921, requested that the powers of the war finance corporation be broadened so that the corporation could take charge of funding upwards of $500,000,000 of railroad debts and provide additional farm credits. The President declared the government to be morally and legally bound to fund the railroad debts and was under an impelling moral obligation to provide agricultural credits. He stated that the railroads and the agricultural interests are most vital to the country and at this time they needed all the help that could be given them.

CHARLES REPORTED AFTER THE THRONE AGAIN

According to reports from Vienna July 26, 1921, there are still repeated rumors going over the country that the former Emperor Charles is to make an effort to regain the Hungarian and Austrian throne. The government is taking the strictest precautions to preserve order and thwart any such plans. The Vienna police have been given special instructions as to their conduct should an emergency arise and the customs officials and guards along all the borders have been warned to be on the lookout for the former Emperor Charles.

REPORT OF CONDITIONS IN SOUTH UNTRUE

The recent reports to the effect that the South is now facing a famine and is in the grip of a pellegra plague were stoutly denied by the senators of the Southern States on July 26, 1921. Newspapers had published these reports and stated that President Harding was alarmed over the conditions and had called for an investigation to see what the federal government could do for the South's relief. The Southern senators stated that they appreciated the solicitude of President Harding and his interest in the section but that the pellegra scare had been due to erroneous information and that they objected to steps being taken for relief because it was a reflection to the South.

It is well to bear in mind, "What is Everybody's business is Nobody's business."

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

The chaplain of the New York State Prison at Auburn, Rev. Arthur Copeland, some years ago made the following statement:

'I have now been chaplain of the State Prison at Auburn for six years. We have eighteen hundred men in that prison. They are as fine and athletic a group as you can find. They are a bright bunch; it would be difficult to find eighteen hundred men who would come up to their standard in brain power. They are young men; the largest number of any one age is at the age of twenty-two.

'They are graduates of grammar schools, of high schools, of great universities and professional schools. There are a good many college men among them. I have made a diligent search in the records of those men, and during these six years there has not been among the prisoners a single graduate of any church college.'—Christian Advocate.

ELON CRADLE ROLL RALLY

Despite the rain and threatening clouds we held our annual missionary Cradle Roll Rally at 4 o'clock July 18, 1921.

Not having a church building these rallies for the babies are held in the home of the Superintendent. After the exercises the little folks enjoy playing games on the lawn. There were about forty mothers and their babies present, with several visitors. It was a beautiful sight to see so many precious babies together with their loyal mothers. The little folks gave an interesting program, which was enjoyed by all. A solo by Miss Marion Lee Newman added interest to the occasion. At the close of which came the roll call and opening of mite boxes. The amount realized from mite boxes and mothers' offering was $19.25.

Of the little babies, little Mary Sue Rothgeb's box had the most and of the older size Master Thomas Smith's box contained the most. Both of which received a prize.

After this refreshments were served by the Superintendent, assisted by Misses Blanche and Marion Lee Newman.

To the mothers ice cream and cake were served, ice cream cones and wafers to the older children, and to the wee little ones, who couldn't eat cream, little animal crackers were served.

With happy faces they all departed, hoping to have another Cradle Roll party.

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

THE WHOLE HOME MISSION FIELD

By Alfred Williams Anthony, LL. D.

Executive Secretary of the Home Missions Council

HE While Home MISSIONS FIELD includes properly every agency and every influence, whether religious, moral, philanthropic, or political, which effect in any manner the welfare of people, and help bring in the reign of Jesus Christ in America. The field may be defined, and described, in at least a half dozen ways:

1. Geographically, a line drawn around all of the forty-eight states, and then extended to include Alaska, the Sandwich Islands, Mexico, Guatemala, El Salvador, and the West Indies, (meaning Cuba, Porto Rico, Haiti and Santo Domingo), will make the physical outlines. Mexico, Guatemala and El Salvador are included because one Home Mission Board (the Baptist) works there. Other denominations work in Mexico, Guatemala and El Salvador, through their Foreign Mission Boards. The geographical extent is about one-sixth of the land area of the earth.

2. So far as races are concerned the Home Mission field includes the Indians, who have been rightly called "the first Americans", Eskimos, Mexicans, (some of whom, of original Spanish stock, lived in New Mexico, Arizona and Southern California, before any other white man came, and others of them by the thousands have migrated into the States during recent troubles); the Orientals (including Chinese, Japanese, Hindus, Koreans and Armenians); New Americans of every stock; Jews, and Negroes, the last numbering about twelve millions with problems becoming nation-wide.

3. All of these people present Home Mission problems arising from their various conditions. Some are crowded densely in great cities; others are scattered and isolated on the open countryside; others as laborers toil in huge industrial enterprises; some live in lumbering and mining camps; others are the roving hand-workers who follow seasonal occupations in the harvest fields, and so we have the urban, rural, and industrial problems; and the problems of the migrant groups, perplexing problems, fraught with good or ill, as they are solved by the Christian principles, which workers in the Home Mission field may apply or are left unsolved.

4. Then the Home Mission field is divisible into the religious groups which are involved. Protestants, constituting more than one hundred denominations pushing each its own propaganda, are nevertheless learning to cooperate in great interdenominational undertakings.

The Roman Catholics, especially since the war, are showing missionary zeal and enterprise in new undertakings of a social and philanthropic character. Jews, both orthodox and liberal, have awakened to the need of ministering to their three and a half million people in this country. Mormons send out missionaries, two by two, in large numbers into practically all states of the Union. And Socialism, really a religion now to many of its advocates, has assumed threatening aspects. In the midst of all these types of religious belief and practice the Home Mission worker seeks to make known the essential message of Jesus Christ.

5. The methods employed are various. Churches and Sunday schools established by itinerant preachers and colporters, and are sustained by missionary pastors, mission stations and community houses seek to reveal the Christian life in foreign settlements and slum areas. Schools are founded, books periodicals and literature published; conferences held; and social services rendered of almost every description, with the intention of adapting the message of Jesus to every human need in every possible condition.

6. The agencies at work are almost beyond enumeration. Almost every church as it seeks to build itself and minister to its own neighborhood, is a Home Mission organization. Churches combine as associations, conferences, conventions, presbyterials, synods, districts, and dioceses, carry on extensive missionary work of almost every kind. Denominations have national societies, bureaus, and boards; and these in turn unite in an interdenominational Home Mission Council, and Council of Women for Home Missions, to correlate and coordinate the diverse efforts for the greatest efficiency, without conflict and waste. Then there have come into existence usually on individual initiative, a host of interdenominational, undenominational, bodies, working in the Home field as an ally to the churches, aiming to improve conditions of health, or to heal the sick, or to relieve poverty and suffering, or to meet the needs of children, the aged, the unemployed, and other needy classes. These are all working effectively in the Home Mission field, as are also organizations like the Young Mens Christian Associations, the Young Womens Christian Association, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the Salvation Army temperance societies, educational institutions, and similar organizations.

The whole task is to make the United States as a nation, and the people as individuals, Christian.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

FOLLOWING JESUS

When Jesus says, "Come take my yoke upon you," "come learn of me", "come out from among them", "come follow me", Jesus our Lord and Savior is moving on before us. If we stand still, if we turn back, we lose His companionship. Following Jesus closely is the only way by which we can enjoy His companionship. Taking the Cross is the only way we can follow closely. It is the price we have to pay for discipleship. Forsaking all, taking up the cross daily and following.

Even when He says "go ye, teach all nations" it is his invitation to "come ye apart with me" unto some other part of the world to tell the gospel story. If it is Japan, China, Africa, South America, wherever it is, the Lord goes on before preparing the way. And as He moves on He gently pleads for us to tell all of the old, old story. Our Christ asks us to lift Him up, up, higher and higher until the eyes of the homeland, the eyes of Africa, China, Japan, of all nations can behold Him.

The lifted up Christ has the drawing power. He will draw men and women to Him if we only lift Him up high enough. We do not need to introduce any new methods to draw men and women to Jesus, for He is the magnet none can resist when they really see Him lifted up, bleeding, dying that they might be cleansed from all sin if they only have faith to accept His atoning blood. We must come to Him in complete surrender. We must put off the world's yoke and work under the yoke with our Lord and Master. There must be complete separation from the world, and complete union with Christ. We must let the Holy Spirit alone be our guide and teacher.

Will you answer His "go", which really means "come", enter into companionship with Him? Which means come with Him into some remote place, to tell the story of Jesus' love, His shed blood, His triumph over death. Or will you freshen the wounds in those nail-pierced hands by refusing to enter into His service? Does it mean so little to you that you would start those wounds to bleeding afresh by refusing to answer His call to service? You can choose of your own free will, but remember this, when you choose, you are choosing your destiny.

THE REFUGE FROM SELF

We need a refuge from ourselves, that is, from the instability of our purposes, our faith, our desires and energies, for our deepest disappointments and our profoundest discoveries are, and will be, in ourselves.

Under the strain of temptations, temptations coming decked out in no startling garments, we make the humiliating discovery of our own weakness; and it is just as well we should. And we who think we stand should have cause to take heed lest we fall. It is just as well that we should rejoice with fear and trembling. It is just as well we should learn that not one of us is stronger than our weakest part, not one of us is securer than our most vulnerable front; and in our endless struggles after emancipation, in our endless endeavors to get free from the things we find in our nature, of its capacities we never dreamed of until we were put to the test, our hearts cry out in weariness and disappointment for some refuge from the passion, the perfidy, the pride, the prejudice we discover here; the shrinking fearfulness and the overbold presumption that we find within ourselves; the isolating suspicions and the jealous rivalries that we find within us; the sympathy with sin and with evil unmentionable; the longings for the world and the prizes and toys of the world, which can only be ours at such a price; the uncertainty of care for the things of God; all of which go together to make up that baffling and perplexing thing we call personality. And the day comes when we say: "O that I could get away from myself! O that I had a lodging in the wilderness! O that I had the wings of a dove, that I could get away from the whole business!" Well, so you can! But if you take the wings of a dove, you will take yourself into the wilderness, and it will be tenfold more wilderness than it was before.

There is a refuge, and that refuge is in God. There, in the hour when I most fully and startlingly discover myself, I may betake me to the secret place and find I am perfectly understood in Him, and that the ultimate meaning and secret of personality is with God who made me and redeemed me.—REV. J. STUART HOLDEN, D. D. in the Record of Christian Work.

HAW RIVER

We had good services at Haw River Sunday, July 17. This church stands not far from where Joe Thomas, the White Pilgrim once preached in his early ministry. Some of his relatives are members of this church.

The Sunday school enrollment is considerably larger than the church membership. The church has a flourishing Christian Endeavor Society. At the evening service there were fifty-five in the Young People's Society and twenty-two in the Junior.

At the morning preaching service, a father and mother came to the altar bringing their babe for consecration. The consecration service is beautiful and impressive.

At the evening service three members were received into fellowship.

One hundred song books have recently been purchased and placed in the church. The revival services are announced to begin on the third Sunday in August. We are hoping for a great and good meeting.

A NEW PASTORATE WANTED

After having a consultation with a few brethren and sisters concerning the forming of a pastorate for Ebenezer, Six Forks, Piney Plains, Martha's Chapel, O'Kelly's Chapel and Morrisville, I appointed myself a committee of one to take the matter into hand.

I wrote to the above named churches and received much encouragement, either directly or indirectly. I do not write to Piney Plains, but to the pastor. My heart is in the work and I expect to push it with all my power. As soon as I get a little more information a call for delegates to meet at Morrisville for organization will be made. The churches will be notified when the call is made.

Let us pray for God to direct in this work.

A CHALLENGE TO CHRISTIANS

The startling statement was made recently by Rev. F. W. Bible that there would be added to the population of China in the next thirty years, at the normal rate of increase, as many people as there are now in the United States. The present population of China is well over 400,000,000. The size of the missionary problem in China is seen in the fact that there is now only one evangelical missionary for every 80,000 people. There are in all only 312,000 communicants of Protestant churches, and the areas in which there is no missionary agency at all contain thirty-five to forty million people.—Christian Observer.

BOOK NEWS

WE hope that each of our readers who has not already done so will read the Book Review in our issue of July 20, 1921. This review is published on page ten and is a review of "The Faith That Makes Faithful" by William Chamming Gannett and Jenkin Lloyd Jones. There are eight subjects of vital interest to every person treated in the little book and to read the book is to be stronger. The summary of each chapter is given in the review but of course it merely suggests the scope and cannot represent the richness and thoroughness of the treatment of each subject. It is one of the richest little books that we have ever read and we only hope we can be the means of causing you to read it for we know it is a good thing and it is our duty to pass a good thing along. It is a new book but we can soon get one for you. The price is $1.25 Net.

Another new book is Booth Tarkington's "Alice Adams". This book has just been published and like all of the other books from the pen of Booth Tarkington is one which appeals to every person, old or young, man or woman.

"Alice Adams"
Booth Tarkington

Vital, alluring, capable of romance, but equally capable of reality, Alice Adams is a heartening portrait of young American womanhood. It is, besides, a revealing study of an American family left behind in the evolution of the home town into the big city, and of how, after attempts to catch up, is finally set out in quest of a firmer and finer reality.—New York Times.

The Goal Of The Soul

THE EDITOR

 THE goal of the soul is perfection, and that means beauty of character, modesty of person and rightness of heart. A life is the trying out period of humanity. Brier laden paths and steep ascents but test our ability to overcome. Life unfolds itself to us as we place ourselves in position to permit it to show us the beauties unseen to many eyes and unknown to many hearts. Things about us are but things if in them we do not see the Artist that paints a rainbow and tints a million flowers. Science without the thought of the Healer is fact; but with Him whose life abounds in perfection, science is the hand-maid of Christian civilization. Botany is only the science of flowers, if it is not linked together with the thought that "created He all things." Philosophy in the abstract deals with the conduct of human beings; but in its final analysis character rises above conduct and man is found to be the image of God. The goal of the soul is to rise above fact, above science, above greatness and above things mortal to things immortal.

Taking Ministerial Inventory

THESE are days when all of us are vitally concerned in the matter of the scarcity of ministers to man the pulpits in our Southern Convention. The problem is difficult, perplexing, and certainly cannot be solved in any one year. Impatience has no place in the working out of such a condition.

There are many things that enter into the present situation. No one accounting can take into consideration all the things that go to make up our present ministerial shortage.

Materialism has been broad in the land during the past few years and many minds have been diverted from "pray ye, therefore", to material conditions. The would-be supply of candidates for the ministry four years ago is now just beginning to affect the annual increase that we are supposed to have. Our trouble is that we are not preparing enough men annually to meet the annual demands. Of course back of this is the lack of young men who are offering themselves for this particular type of work.

In 1914 there were enrolled in Elon College twenty-eight ministerial students, sixteen of whom were members of the Christian Church. We traced out this number from personal knowledge, The Christian Annual and the Phipsicli—the College Annual—and note that eleven of the sixteen are now actively engaged in church work. There were in 1915 forty-one candidates for the ministry enrolled in Elon College, twenty-five of these being members of the Christian denomination. Of this number fifteen are now doing work as ministers in our Southern Convention. In 1917 there were thirty members of the ministerial association at Elon, twenty being connected with our denomination. Fourteen of these are actively engaged in ministerial labors. Skipping the years of 1918-1920, for lack of information before us, we go to the year 1921 and find twenty-eight ministerial students in the institution, seventeen of whom are members of our denomination. The reader should keep in mind that in practically all of these years there are some of the same ones numbered each time, and that the number enrolled and doing work remains practically the same.

A little study in the history of the Senior Class of Elon College for the last few years is not without interest. The classes here named graduated ministerial students as follows: 1915, five; 1916, two; 1917, four; 1918, two; 1919, two; 1920, one; 1921, two. These figures include only those who are members of our denomination. One of the graduates in 1919 has withdrawn from the Christian Church. The class of 1922 has two ministerial students of our denomination scheduled to graduate. This leaves us a net of seventeen ministers from our College in a period of seven years. But the College is not at fault. It cannot educate that which it does not have.

The above takes into consideration only the supply so far as our College is concerned. We have added a few ministers in recent years from other Conventions whose preparation has been at other colleges. We have not said anything about loss by death, withdrawal, and by retiring.

But the inadequate supply is not due to a shortage of candidates, graduates, or general withdrawals alone. New churches have been built, pastorates divided, and in some cases a few churches have changed from monthly or bi-monthly preaching to all-time service.

Matthew tells us (See Matthew 9:38) to pray that the Lord may send laborers into the harvest, for it is ready. That "pray ye, therefore", is the one big thing—and we are wondering if we have thus prayed. We may not have the right interpretation of that "pray ye", but it occurs to us that when the churches, the local churches, get so burdened with the world's salvation that they will pray collectively and individually so as to reach that point of anxiety or vital concern and unrest for the lost of the world, there will come from all such congregations those who will answer the call of Macedonia and go over to help.

Several of our churches are going to be without a pastor during the coming year, as we see it. Yet this is no pessimistic view of the situation. It is no easy thing to see the hopeful in face of the almost hopeless. Great trials bring great things, and it may be that our people will get so much concerned over that which is facing them until all of us may earnestly "pray ye, therefore", and then the Lord will send the laborers.

We are conscious of the two schools of thought as we briefly comment on this subject. The first is that when God calls a man to preach that the salary will be no question. The other is that the salary is so small that it is driving men from the thought of the pulpit to secular pursuits. We agree in part with both. God's plans are furthered through human agencies, and when God calls a man to preach we believe that He likewise lays a burden upon men. That burden is to support His servants. Failing to do this, increases the burden upon His followers. God's program reaches every believer and places upon him not so much as a duty as that of an opportunity. To fail to provide adequately for the ministry is to fail God's program. Our candid opinion is that we are suffering more for the lack of ministers from a spiritual standpoint rather than from a standpoint of money.

We are leaving a waive of prosperity and entering into a time of testing and trying. We predict that it is to mean a period of turning to God. THE SUN believes fully in the money program—we mean God's money—and believe that the tithing is right. Yet, we do not believe that money alone will suffice. Money is a part of the individual, and giving a part of our income for the support of the church, is an offering unto the Lord, and not a substitute for our sons. God's program includes men and money. It is a form of narrowness that excludes one from the other.

It is a sad commentary upon our Conferences to send up their quota of money and not their quota of men. Some of our Conferences have money in banks and bonds for the cause of ministerial education, but no one to use these finances. Is it impossible for each of our five Conferences of the Southern Convention to enlist by prayer and vital interest at least two men each per year for the great and glorious work of preaching? The denomination must have preachers or it will decay. Poverty of purse is no comparison to the poverty of morals. The survey of the country indicates that ten thousand pulpits will be vacant during the coming year. The Christian Church is coming in for her quota of this calamity.

Since writing the above paragraphs, The Presbyterian Standard for August 3, has come to our desk, and in it we find an editorial on "The Shrinkage in Candidates". We glean the following from this editorial, as it points to the way that we are endeavoring to point:

"Jesus had no trouble in getting preachers, though He plainly warned them that persecution, imprisonment and even death would be the price of responding to His call. He had no trouble because He was speaking to those whose hearts had been detached from the world and freely given to him. Had our young people such detached and devoted hearts, the size of the pay would not have a feather's weight.

"Who is to blame for the low state of piety? Certainly not the young men exclusively. Parents are to blame. They have no family altar. They do not show piety at home. Children do not see father and mother bowing daily at the throne of grace, nor hear their voices pleading for spiritual blessings. They see them constantly busy with other things, and hear them talk of everything but religion. How can such home life develop piety in children? The atmosphere of the home is secular, not religious.

"Then it may be questioned whether our church life is not wanting in the note of seriousness. The young people have introduced quite a good deal of social frivolity in their religious meetings. In fact our age seems to be amusement mad. Many people, other than the children, cannot get through the day without a visit to the movies. Speaking generally, our piety is wanting in deep seriousness, and this tells on our young men, and makes the ministry distasteful."

It is time the whole Church become much concerned over our dire lack of ministers. It is a situation that calls for seriousness of mind, and a consideration that is prayerful.

THE SUN REFUSES A SUBSCRIPTION

THE SUN office did an unusual thing the other day by refusing a subscription. Here are the facts: A minister in a sister denomination had access to a copy of THE SUN, read it, and took issue with a certain contribution. His reply was accompanied by a letter enclosing a check for a subscription, with definite instructions that if the article was not accepted for publication that the check for the subscription must be returned. The article and check were both returned.

THE PASTOR AND HIS VACATION

One of the best investments that a church can make is to give the pastor a vacation. But there is a proviso—and here it is: That said pastor spend his time in bodily and intellectually upbuilding. There is where the investment comes in for the church—and the preacher, too.

We have known pastors to take a vacation from their churches and use the time in preaching for other pastors. This is unfair to the church and to self. The pastor needs time for study, recreation, and for the getting of a new hold on life. He should desire to advance for the good of the cause that he is serving.

A church should be just as vitally concerned in seeing that its pastor gets a vacation as it is in seeing that he meet his scheduled duties.

The pastor that takes a vacation and does not come back stronger in body, mind, and soul, provided sickness or other hindrances have not crept in, has wronged self and church.

And this: If your pastor is endeavoring through a vacation to be a better and bigger pastor, pay the expenses of such a vacation. If the church will do this it will put the pastor under a double obligation to use his time for a better preparation for his work.

INDIAN POPULATION DISPUTED

According to the recent United States Census, the Indian population of this country is put down at 242,959. Ten years ago it was 265,883. This would indicate a decrease in a decade of 22,724. On the other hand the Indian Bureau of the United States, Interior Department places the Indian population of 1920 at 336,337. According to the enumerations of the Indian Bureau, the Indian population for the last thirty years has been slowly but steadily increasing. The discrepancy between the Census Bureau and the regular Indian Bureau is to be accounted for at least largely by the fact that Indians in the enumeration of 1910 were counted as whites in the Census of 1920. This proof of enumeration particularly applies where only slight traces of Indian blood are in evidence. It is to be noted that the chief difference is by far the greater part accounted for in Oklahoma alone. There 18,876 are counted as white this year, and were rated as Indians ten years ago. It is to be remembered that the larger figures of the Indian Bureau are obtained by considering as Indians all those who have even the slightest of mixtures of Indian blood.

The Sunday School---Its Why

(Annual address delivered by President C. H. Stephenson before the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the North Carolina Christian Conference, Reidsville, North Carolina, July 12, 1921.)

AFTER a lapse of two years, one of which I have spent among you as a layman, I am glad that we can come together once more, for a brief but earnest consideration of the growth of the Sunday school, and the Christian Endeavor Society, and their respective needs in the immediate future. And I rejoice that this is true, because it enables me to speak both from observations made as a Sunday school student, working in the ranks, and as your representative as president.

Great changes have taken place both within and without the Sunday school since last I addressed you. Then we were just coming out of a two year period of great anxiety and exertion—a period when intense national endeavor kindled religious fervor to white heat; a period when the grim realities of sending our best men, where death and glory waited, drove us all to the fundamentals of life. But then when peace came and the restraints of war were taken away, the situation was reversed. There was a general relaxation everywhere. People who had practiced cheeseparating economy during the war, spent recklessly what they had and plunged headlong into the scramble for some of the easy money that flowed so freely over the country.

The result was heavy "wildcat speculation" with inflation mounting upward. Prices soared skyward, and still the people paid them, and clamored for more goods to buy. Sensible men, however, knew that this condition could not continue. They realized that we were skating on thin ice, that must eventually yield to the abnormal pressure brought to bear on it. Nor was this tendency toward over-inflation confined to the business world. In religion too, which ever goes hand in hand with business, as with all other human activities, the same "wildcat speculation" was manifested.

Two years ago a wave of spiritualism swept over the country. Sir Oliver Lodge, the English spiritualist, came over and toured the United States in an effort to connect us with his mystic mediums. And in thousands of good American homes, the ouija board literally replaced the family Bible. But this tendency, too, ultimately reached its peak and fell.

Last November the crisis of over-inflation in business came, and the landslide back to normal prices, started by Mr. John Wanamaker, and Mr. Henry Ford, restored business stability, just so in the Church and Sunday school, people have come to realize that it is both unnatural and dangerous to speculate on false theories of life, with no spiritual bank account, to back them up. We are skating on thin ice indeed, when we spend our time trying to shoot holes through moral standards, that have for over two thousand years been the bed rock of our very life.

And I feel, after studying the reports that have thus far come to this convention from the Sunday school out in the State, that Sunday school and Christian Endeavor have both been rapidly returning since January 1, to that state of religious stability which the war a short time before with its imminent peril made necessary. But this is not enough. The experiences of what I call "wildcat" speculation in religion have not passed without leaving their residue of doubt and skepticism in the minds of some of our best people. And while it is true that this tendency towards religious distrust is more prevalent outside than inside the Sunday school, still it is a tendency that I view with alarm, and for that reason, one with which I propose to deal at the outset of this message. This raises my first question: WHY THE SUNDAY SCHOOL?

We are so busy already with our businesses, and our homes, and our clubs, and our motor cars, that there is scarcely room left for another institution; and especially one that takes a definite time on Sunday and requires study and planning all through the week.

What justification can the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor give us for demanding our time and attention, already so taken up with other things? This question can only be answered by stopping and analyzing our own lives. Then let each of us look within for a moment and ask ourselves very frankly: WHAT PURPOSE HAVE I IN LIVING? WHAT AM I HERE FOR? and finally: HOW AM I REALIZING THAT PURPOSE THROUGH SERVICE? To answer these questions, we must make a close examination of our inner selves, and what do we find? Simply that our natural desires and inclinations are countless and conflicting; that our natures are made of a myriad of antagonistic tendencies which leave us constantly dissatisfied if they are not unified by some consistent plan of life. You are familiar, all of you, with that man who has no such plan to guide his living. He is governed by self-will. He is always running around in a chaos of circular conflicts, never knowing just what he wants to do, or why it is that he is never contented. And why is this?

It is because he is a slave of a thousand fleeting desires and momentary caprices which now suggest this thing, and now that, but never afford a steady, reliable program to live by. His spirit, therefore, is always filled because he is prey to every passing interest. Have you taking control of himself, he is swept along with only chance to guide him. He can never do any steady work with restlessness and even rebellion, because by not ever felt that way? Have you ever felt that you wanted something and still did not know just what it was? If so it is merely because you are human, and have been living without a cause to guide you as the rudder guides the ship. This, then, my friends, is why we, every one of us, need some great dominant cause to guide us through life.

It is why we must have some big, absorbing purpose which rises above business and social activities; which is greater than houses and farms, and clothes and automobiles, and which alone can give unity and purpose to our naturally confused and chaotic natures.

And it is to satisfy this need, to give us a cause that is the one great panacea for all the pretty trifles and worries of this life, that I recommend to you today, with all the force of which I am capable. THE SUNDAY SCHOOL. And I recommend it without qualification as the working right arm of the Church, and as the supreme institution in all the world to give a man unity and stability in his every day life.

After thirty-five years continuous service in the Sunday school as a pupil, teacher, sexton, secretary, treasurer, and superintendent, I feel that I can say with some degree of accuracy that it satisfies all the needs of men. In it lies the whole fulfillment of our various, and intricate nature. It furnishes a personal solution to the hardest of human problems. And how? By simply giving to you and to me a big cause to serve, that will harmonize our lives and that will give higher and grander rewards, than farms and houses, or clothes and motor cars. And in addition to the good accomplished in the world and the tremendous influence shed on other people, the Sunday school holds a final spiritual reward, that earthly business cannot give. Wealth and luxuries are good, but without some big goal to work for they are empty and bare. Death, inevitable death is always sure to make a mockery of them if they are not fortified by life-long service to a good cause.

The Sunday school may require time and hard work, to be sure, but that inner peace that results, adds a sweetness to one's labor that is not to be compared with riches. And this my friends is why the Sunday school.

And now having seen why we all need to serve the Sunday school the next natural question is: What shall we do?

Many of you already have offices and duties in the Sunday school and are serving them faithfully. To you I say increase your efforts.

Try doubling your week-day consecration and preparation. Require yourself to devote at least thirty minutes of each day to intensive Sunday school planning. With the Sunday school's justification I have just outlined clearly in mind this will not be hard to do. To you who are not doing any Sunday school work, let me urge you, nay warn you, to begin active work this week.

Offer your services to your superintendent. I have served the Raleigh Sunday school some ten or twelve years in this capacity and I know that nothing can make a superintendent's heart gladder than a real genuine offer of service. And once in harness, work with your mind as well as with your hands. Develop new plans, and once they are made, follow them out regardless of the little obstacles that are sure to come up.

If you have not already done so, start a permanent training class for the training of young teachers. First talk it over with the pastor and superintendent. Then select all available pupils between the ages of 16 and 40, and have a talk with them. Order the Teacher Training text book recommended by our publishers, and begin at once. Vary the instruction as much as is practicable, and enliven the class with free all-round discussion. In this manner the involved points in the lesson are thrashed out in advance, and when the pupil asks about them the following Sunday the teacher is in a position to help clear them up.

Keep your classes small, so as not to lose the element of personal contact, and keep them alive by injecting some rivalry between them now and then, and by working up new ways of stimulating the pupil to study, and attend regularly.

One of the most remarkable instances of this very thing that I have ever witnessed, was a rivalry campaign for real Sunday school work, recently conducted by our Sunday school in Raleigh. The nature of the contest was a race around the United States in two automobiles. One half of the school (divided by classes) driving a Packard touring car while the other half contented themselves in driving a Ford. It was stipulated and agreed in the beginning that the losing half of the school should entertain the winners of the race. Each officer and teacher present on time counted twenty-five miles, each pupil, on time counted five miles, and each penny contributed counted one mile up to five dollars from each individual class, and no class could count over five dollars in the contest, per Sunday. Each new member counted fifty miles, and if a member of the church not attending Sunday school fifty additional miles. Each new member had to attend two consecutive Sundays before being counted in the contest. The contest included all the school except the Cradle Roll, the Beginners and the Home Department, and was divided into two divisions with a captain for each division, and a steering committee composed of the pastor, the superintendent, and a general secretary (or speed cop) who tabulated the miles, and read the record made to the Sunday school each Sunday. It required sixteen Sundays and three trips around, (approximately twenty-five thousand miles travel) to decide the race. The result was much fun and hard work, with more pep, punctuality, persistency and perspiration among the classes; and enthusiasm throughout the whole school, keeping pace with the little John Henry, which won the race.

The increase in our average attendance was about 57% while the increase in our contributions was about 300%. Was it a success? Did it pay? Was it worth while? You may be the judge.

Special days, well advertised in advance, have also proved a source of new life and interest with us, and I am sure that you will find these same things true of your Sunday school. And let me emphasize once more, as I have often done in the past, the absolute importance of promptness and dispatch in all Sunday school work.

It is surprising to know how wholesome the effect is on the minds of the pupils, to know that services are going to begin and conclude on a schedule.

And finally let your "motto" ever be, work, work, work: work for the good of the school all the time.

Those of you who attended the Convention in 1915 at Wentworth may remember my address, which emphasized and was built around the one word: WORK. And six years of reflecting over it, have only served to increase my confidence in the redeeming powers of unceasing labor. But what reward, you ask, is there for unceasing labor in the Sunday school? Having seen why the Sunday school and what to do in the Sunday school, you ask finally: what is the harvest you offer for doing this service? I answer that first of all, it will give us that inner unity and peace of nature, that to me is the greatest thing in this life. My first creed of living is contentedness. The time to be content is now. The place to be content is here. And the way to be content is to serve. And what finer institution could be found in all the world, to diligently serve, than in Sunday school?

The Sunday school where thirty-one millions of men and women, boys and girls everywhere today are working under a single banner, and with a single purpose, where all the emphasis is placed on formation rather than reformation, where the child is carefully guarded and trained, through the age of doubt, and then given tasks to perform, that will require him the rest of his life to properly complete. The Sunday school that is today in every country touched by the rays of the sun, feeding to the workshop of civilization the world's greatest men: our greatest evangelistic agency from which comes 35% of our church members, 90% of our missionaries, and 95% of our preachers of the gospel.

How significant is the recently published statement of Judge James Beale of Carrollton, Georgia, in which he declares that in the eight years he has presided over the Carroll County Court, that about seventeen hundred people have come before him for various crimes, and that only one was a member of a Sunday school. Or that of Judge Faucette of the Brooklyn Juvenile Court, when addressing a youthful criminal before him sometime ago, he said: "In the five years that I have been sitting on this bench, I have had twenty-seven hundred boys before me for sentence and not one of them was a regular attendant at Sunday school. Had you gone there, I am sure you would not be before me today."

My friends, no age in the world's history ever offered such rewards for earnest labor, as the present offers for the worker in the Sunday school. Would you achieve the ideal in the brief time that you have to live here? Then here is the path of the martyr, thorny and even blood stained—but glorious. Would you have that inward peace that comes to ardent servants of a great cause? Then here is the hungry world, calling for men and women; for you and me. And the call can only be answered when we are, all of us, doing our full service in the Sunday school, and the Christian Endeavor Society.

ELON LETTER

The class in Religious Education III this year attempted to put into practice the theories discovered in text-book study. The following account of the project was written by Miss Lucy Eldredge a member of the class:

"The course in Religious Education III, taught by Dr. Harper, has combined this year with the regular text book work a community program of real value. The class work has included a thorough study of the church school, of modern church architecture, of effective methods of social service work, of the value of recreation, of the meaning of worship and methods of religious instruction and of inter-church activities. Not only have these themes been studied and discussed. They have been actually carried out in the community as far as possible. All this work has been done by the members of the class, under the supervision of the Department of Religious Education and the direction of a cabinet of three elected by the class.

"The work was inaugurated when the class made a religious survey of the village to ascertain conditions and needs from the religious viewpoint. The questionnaires, when compiled, revealed many facts and suggestions, which have been made the basis of all the year's work.

"Early in the fall the Boy Scouts had been reorganized under the leadership of an efficient scout master and the work linked up with that of the Sunday school. The class in Religious Education felt the need of a similar organization for the girls of the town, and as a result work with the Camp Fire Girls was begun. With capable leadership, this work will doubtless soon rival that of the boys.

"Upon investigation, it was discovered that the Missionary Cradle Roll was active and doing a splendid work for the babies, and consequently no Sunday School Cradle Roll was organized, but the co-operation of the class was promised to the Superintendent of the Missionary Cradle Roll.

"A Home Department was organized, in connection with the Elon Sunday School, with an efficient superintendent and four visitors. More than forty members have been enrolled in home Bible study by the work of this department. The workers have also distributed literature setting forth the need for and the value of the Family Altar in every home.

"Recognizing the place of recreation in the child's life and development, funds were secured to equip a playground and supervised play was conducted for the children of the village. This phase of the work will continue throughout the summer months.

"In the month of March, the work of religious instruction in the graded school was begun. Every Thursday, the hour from three to four was devoted to this work. A ten minute recreational period was followed by a service of worship in the school chapel. The class period completed the hour. The story method of teaching was used in all grades. At the close of the regular school term, a Daily Vacation Bible School was conducted daily for two weeks, at the same hour in the afternoon. The same general plan was followed and, in spite of inclement weather, the attendance and interest were splendid. The enthusiasm of the pupils continued up through the closing day. The school was closed with a short program, consisting in the main of stories retold by pupils from each of the five grades taught.

"An additional fruit of the year's work has grown out of the study of inter-church work, or co-operative effort. It has been suggested to the officers of the religious organizations of the college, that during the coming year there shall be more union of effort. As a result these leaders are working on a program of activities for next year that will attract and hold every student in some Christian work and which will prevent overlapping of work.

"The work has been well worth while in two ways. Leaders have been given an effective training for active Christian work in their home churches. The children of Elon College have been given unusual advantages in religious education and the interest of many adults awakened. A valuable program has been initiated and classes of years to come will see great results in the work of religious education at Elon."

DR. AINSLIE COMMENDS CHAUTAUQUA

Having recently attended the Seaside Chautauqua, near Norfolk, I am taking the liberty to send a word regarding this institution and its service. I was glad that a definite move was made to incorporate it and make it a permanent institution. It has already rendered valuable service, especially to the Christian Church. The addresses that I heard were of a high class and the outlook is most encouraging for a much larger patronage in the years to come than in the past. People are usually attracted to the seaside in the summer. To combine recreation at the seaside with intellectual and spiritual refreshment makes it altogether possible that the Seaside Chautauqua, if properly conducted, will be as fruitful in its ministry to Virginia and the Carolinas in particular, as Asbury Park and Ocean Grove are to New Jersey, Pennsylvania and New York.

The fellowship at the Chautauqua was very pleasant, and in the atmosphere of congenial spirits we were enabled to find new valuations of life. I hope very much that the Disciples will join heartily with the Christians in helping to make the Seaside Chautauqua a place where they, with the Christians, shall gather for their summer conferences. One of the values of the summer conferences is that they are growing toward the international ideal. A number that have been associated with certain denominations, have, in the last few years, interdenominationalized their policies, which has been to the advantage of all.

I can conceive of no fairer opportunity for the enticement of friendly relations between these two bodies than for them to join heartily in making the Seaside Chautauqua worth while to both, and even to others of other communions. But especially ought the Christians and the Disciples to find paths in which they can walk together. Men like Dr. Rowland, Dr. Harper, Dr. Staley, Dr. Denison and others of kindred spirits will lead this work into most satisfactory results. Their fellowship with other communions, especially with the Disciples, ought to furnish a contribution for a similar group of Disciples to meet them in this plan. I see no hindrance, except that of prejudice, to close and permanent co-operation between these bodies. I asked Dr. Rowland to enroll me as a member of his church at Franklin, Virginia, and he in turn asked me to enroll him as a member of my church here in Baltimore. Why should this not be so. We are both Christians. We are both holding to the Scriptures as the rule of faith and practice and we both long for the fellowship that expresses unity for the whole Church of God.

I am grateful for being honored with a place on the Seaside Chautauqua program this year and the two days spent there are most happily remembered.

THE ORIGIN OF THE YOUNG MENS CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION

This organization may be found in almost every land where Protestant Christianity has gained a foothold—originated in circumstances peculiarly simple in character. But, as in science, so in the inception and early history of this movement, "the greatness of little things" is deeply impressed upon the thoughtful mind.

In the year 1844, (the same year THE CHRISTIAN SUN was founded, and I was born) one hundred and fifty thousand young men are said to have been engaged in the different branches of business in London, England. But little attention was then paid either to the mental or spiritual improvement of this large and most interesting class in the community; consequently bad habits and bad associates were freely contracted. In the words of an eloquent Englishman, who went to show me, while in London, the place of its first meeting "that vast maelstrom, the commercial life of London, was drawing thousands of young men within its dark and rapid current." No wonder vast numbers of young men were shut up in counting houses for many hours a day, and released only when every respectable family circle was closed. The dram-shop, dance hall and their logical climax were alone open for their reception.

Deeply impressed with the importance of making an effort to save some of these young men, George Williams, a pious young man invited three or four friends to meet in his chambers, to pray for strength to preserve themselves and to enable them by some means, to bring the truth to bear upon their careless companions. It was but a small meeting and with but humble though an earnest thought were they thus assembled; but He who marks the fall of a sparrow, was not unmindful of that praying band of young men. A public meeting was held on June 6, 1844, at which, after a prayerful consideration of the sad condition of the young men of London, it was resolved to organize a Young Mens Christian Association; a constitution was adopted, officers were elected and the Association entered upon effective operations.

The first Y. M. C. A. in the United States was organized in Boston, Mass., 1851. Today not only the Y. M. C. A., but the Y. W. C. A., have organizations by the thousands, and buildings, whose aggregate wealth goes into the hundreds of millions. By the blessing of God, many young men and young women have been led, through this instrumentality, to seek an interest in "the great salvation". Members of the Associations may now be found on land and sea, in the Army and Navy, throughout the world, visiting the sick and dying, the fatherless and the widowed, gathering the outcast, ragged children into schools, and by tracts, books and lectures, aiding the churches in carrying the gospel of the world's Redeemer to every heart and home on this earth.

ACATION is the hardest time to work. The easiest work is when one is working all the time; yet I presume men as well as machines need rest and repairs. No ship goes to sea so strong and so durable that it never needs to go into dry dock for examination, repainting, and repairs. "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." Well, I am on my August vacation by the vote of the Suffolk Christian church, and this is the second day of abandon; and I am writing without any special inspiration, and just to fill up the column under the head of "Suffolk Letter."

Dr. C. H. Rowland, two of his daughters, Annie Graham and Birdie; Annie Staley, William Staley Cheat-ham and I left Franklin, Virginia, in Dr. Rowland's Dodge car Wednesday morning, August 3, at 6 o'clock and came to Fuquay Springs, N. C., arriving at 6:00 P. M. We left Annie Staley and William Staley Cheat-ham at Louisburg, and the Rowland girls at Mr. Sam Rowland's. We made 170 miles in eight hours over almost perfect roads.

Today, Thursday, Dr. Rowland and I have gone over country familiar to him and interesting to me. Among other places visited in the forenoon was his birthplace and childhood home, and the graves of his parents. We have seen, of course, K. B. and J. Beale Johnson, Trustees of Elon College, and prominent Christian workers; and we plan to accept J. B.'s invitation to fish in his pond tomorrow; and we may call it "Good Friday."

After the morning ramble today, we carried out a previously laid plan to go to Morrisville to visit Rev. W. G. Clements and family. The air was fine after yesterday's rain, the roads were splendid and we soon found ourselves in the presence of our dear friend. Bro. Clements will never be able to walk again without his crutches, but he has good health, and so thankful for what he enjoys as to be more cheerful than many Christian people who are in good health. His wife was in bed with broken nerves, reduced weight, and cut off from domestic activities which made a happy home for husband and children; but their son Eddie, with his good wife and children, are doing for the parents what they used to do for the children. Good children often do as much for their parents as parents have done for their children. This visit was a combination of suffering and service. Father and mother confined to the chamber of infirmity and young strength serving with a loyalty that honors home. The veteran of the Civil War, and a veteran of the war in which Paul fought and conquered, looks upward to the final victory when the course is finished; and his companion weak but waiting in hope. They have passed their golden wedding day and now look upon children and grandchildren with Christian satisfaction and even pride. It seems that suffering is necessary to refine human character and keep alive human sympathy. "The Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering." It makes us ashamed of ourselves when we think of our dissatisfaction and then see the satisfied and happy souls shut in by affliction. "It is better to go to the house of mourning than to house of feasting."

Our visit was very precious to us and we hope it let in a ray of sunshine into the chamber of age and affliction.

We visited many of the homes of Dr. Rowland's kin and friends; but I cannot mention all their names; but they all seemed to enjoy our brief visits. There is large room for sympathetic visitation; and laymen, as well as ministers, could spend part of their time in no better way than to visit the sick and the aged. Were it not for suffering the fire of sympathy would die out on the altar of human society. Mother-love grows with her suffering, and Isaiah says of Jesus, "that He shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied." Suffering for others is the most satisfying experience of mankind.

THE MORNING OF LIFE

With every boy and girl, the morning of life is bright and breezy—An idyll, in its essence, is a background of men and women, simple and noble in manners. All young men and women, dream that the day will come when they will work out their own little idyll—retire from the life they know and live the life they dream about.

THE OBSERVATORY

J. E. MASSEY

FACING FACTS

At last France and Germany are facing facts. Laying aside that spirit of racial and national friction which has been so prevalent before and since the Great War, the two countries are resuming trade relations on a noteworthy scale again.

A dispatch of the New York World from Berlin tells us that Germany is making preparations to pay the indemnity to France in commercial commodities produced in Germany. Almost simultaneously from Paris there comes a dispatch to the effect that France has agreed to accept half its reparation payments in commodities.

"Here is a real hope for economic rehabilitation and reconstruction," says the World. French and German spokesmen have been meeting and negotiating on terms which are rationally possible, economics has stepped in where politics failed.

"Granting German good faith—which has been questionable—it has been highly improbable that Germany could pay in gold anything like the sum imposed by the recent ultimatum of the Allies. Germany has to pay in goods or not at all. If French statesmen have finally come to a realization of this fact it means that they will now perforce educate the people of France to the necessity of such a course."

In such a common understanding of the inescapable facts rests the only hope for real peace along the Rhine.

RUSSIA IN RUINS

Mr. Herbert Hoover, speaking as head of the American relief administration paints a horrible picture of Russia. The drought and famine in the valley of the Volga are the last straws of a burden which was already agonizing. Even since last year the areas planted in crops in the most fruitful provinces have diminished by 40 per cent or more, and the crop expectations have been nearly cut in half. On account of the shortage of locomotives and the almost impassible state of the railway tracks such surpluses as exist outside the famine areas cannot be readily moved where they are needed. There has been a "general agricultural decadence" due largely to the failure of the city population to produce goods which the peasants would be willing to take in exchange for food.

The New York Globe presents a table showing what has happened to industry in Russia for 1920, compared with production in 1913. Only 2 per cent of the pig iron, 0.6 per cent of the copper, 5 per cent of the rubber products, 20 per cent of the paper, 20 per cent of the coal, 3 per cent of the cotton manufacturers, and 3 per cent of the woolen cloth turned out in 1913 was produced in 1920. Imports have dropped to 4 per cent of the pre-war normal and exports to about one-twentieth of 1 per cent. Here is an entire country suddenly made wretchedly poor. Large areas have reverted to a condition which has not prevailed elsewhere in Europe since the middle ages.

The Globe believes there is "no time for talking politics with Russia." What she needs is aid immediately; not only bread but a complete rehabilitation of her economic life. Whether this can be established by the Lenin Government is still a question. It can be, perhaps, if Lenin is sufficiently an opportunist to value the lives of his countrymen more highly than he values his communistic theories. Mr. Hoover is a severe critic of communism as any intelligent and well informed man can be. He believes that it means economic ruin. But, although he has not hesitated to point out, he has been gathering relief supplies for some time and will move them into Russia as soon as he can get the required assurance of protection and a free hand. This is practical and Christian. The first thing to do is to feed as many of the starving Russians as can be reached. Later there will be plenty of time to talk politics.

ENRICO CARUSO DEAD

Everywhere it is said "a man is dead"—not only the world's greatest tenor and vocal artist, but a man beloved by the world because he stood for principles of humanity, love and beauty, kindness, forbearance, and the greatest there is in song.

Enrico Caruso died in his native Italian city of Naples a few days ago, after an acute spell of suffering following his sojourn to the land of his birth. The tenor's illness began the night of December 11, 1920, when he burst a small blood vessel in his throat during a performance in the Brooklyn Academy of Music. Since then he has suffered, lingered and was apparently on the way of recuperation, when the final spell came.

Caruso was a man from the ranks of the poorer class of Italian people. He met with much discouragement in his early years. It was only gradually and slowly that his voice was recognized as that of the great singer he was before he died. He represents perhaps the most striking contribution of the Italian immigrant to America—an ardent love for beauty expressed in music. Caruso's music will live long after him.

CHIPS

From Dr. Frank Crane

Life is a garland of flowers, thorns, fruits, and dead leaves.

The direction of one's thought is more important than the distance it travels.

Beauty abides not in things. It is the effect produced by a beautiful thing upon a beautiful soul. Without human spirits the world of beauty—including the sunsets and the majesties of Nature, as well as all the creation of music, the plastic arts and literature—would be no better than a boiler factory.

THE SCRAP BOOK

SURNAMES

G. W. Fitzwater in North Carolina Christian Advocate.

Surnames, as we use them—family names, began in the eleventh century, when feudalism began. As every man took his office or privilege by contract of subrenting, it became necessary to identify each man by more than the name, John, William, etc., such as he was called in his village. So men became known by family names or surnames. ("Sur" means additional.)

These surnames may be classed under about seven heads. (1) Trade or occupation names, as-Smith (strike, later smite), carpenter, tanner, etc. (2) Geographical names, O'Dell (of the dell), Piedmont (foot of the mountain), Ireland, Scott, etc. (3) Illegitimate names (a child found on the step called Step, found on the east step, Estep, by a stump, call it stump, Tree, Bush, Pine, Lake, etc.) (4) Personal characteristics, Black, White, Brown, Redman, Tallman, Short, Strong, Weak, Little. (5) The Scandinavians put the word son to the father's name and use that compound as the surname, changing every generation, as William Johnson, for Williamson of John, and when William has a son James, then James is called James Williamson, etc., and these people from Norway, Sweden and Denmark have placed many of their name in Scotland and other countries. But after settling in other lands, their names remained unchanged in the males. (6) Illiteracy causes names to be changed. The newcomer pronounces his own name, the assessor or deed writer spells it as he sounds the word, which is often incorrect, as in Amick for Emmich, Sarvice for Service. (7) And then honorary titles, as Fitz Simons, von Emmison, Van Dooson, Mac Elroy, McKinney, Dewald. These first syllables are titles in different languages. Each means son.

THE WAR AGAINST BATHTUBS

Youth's Companion

When the American boy vigorously objects to getting into a bathtub he is, a contributor reminds us, simply revealing a trait inherited from his grandfather. For in grandfather's day not only boys but doctors, officials and citizens in general considered the bathtub as a dangerous invention.

When in December, 1842, Adam Thompson placed inside his house in Cincinnati the first bathtub in America it was the sensation of the town. Physicians declared that bathing in such a thing, especially in winter, would cause rheumatism and inflammation of the lungs; and several citizens wrote to the newspapers that the introduction of the device proved that America was becoming effete and showing a snobbish inclination to follow the degenerate aristocracy of Europe!

It is true that Thompson had first got his idea from England. But the tubs that he saw there were simply tubs—large, round, shallow pans that had the habit of flooding the floor when their owners sat down in them. Thompson devised a more luxurious article—long, narrow and high, made of mahogany and lined with lead. For hot water he placed a tank in the attic and ran a coiled pipe from there down through the kitchen chimney and into the tub.

Evidently the bold Ohioan was enthusiastic over his new piece of furniture, for, according to the story that one of his acquaintances told throughout Cincinnati, he took two baths on December 20, the day the plumbing was completed. After dinner on Christmas he proudly led his guests to the bathroom, explained the use of the tub and persuaded four guests to take a bath!

The idea began to spread. The Common Council of Philadelphia failed by only two votes to pass an ordinance forbidding bathing between November 1 and March 15; and Virginia tried to stop it by placing a tax of thirty dollars a year upon every bathtub. But the thing had now gone too far; it could not be stopped. A plumber named John Simpson invented a zinc tub about 1846, but was refused a patent. In 1847 the first one was installed in New York City, and by 1850 the people of that town alone had bought one thousand!

America may indeed be called the land of bathtubs. It is a poor cottage that has not one. Yet in Europe there are many millions of people who have never seen a bathtub.

A CHALLENGE TO DISARM

"One of our young men came back from France and, like many others, would not talk. One day his father took him apart and rebuked him for his silence. 'Just one thing I will tell you,' he answered. 'One night I was on patrol in No Man's Land and suddenly I came face to face with a German boy about my own age. It was a question of his life or mine. We fought like wild beasts. When I came back that night I was covered from head to foot with the blood and brains of that young German boy. We had nothing personally against each other. He did not want to kill me any more than I wanted to kill him. That is war. I did my duty in it, but for God's sake do not ask me to talk about it. I want to forget it.' My friends, that is war—the quintessence of it at the central point of its self-revelation. There is nothing glorious about it any more."

From the Christian point of view, the Klu Klux organization and those who use its methods whether official or otherwise, are dangerous to the common life. To have a group of men abroad in America whose purpose is to stir up prejudice of any kind, is not only un-Christian, but contrary to well-established American principles; to have the truth regarding Negroes and Negro organizations basely distorted can only mean the aggravation of a situation already bad enough.

It is impossible to become educated by learning only what you like.

WORLD HAPPENINGS

CARUSO IS DEAD

Enrico Caruso, the world famous singer, died in Naples, Italy, August 2, 1921. Less than a week before his death he had avowed his returning strength and expressed the conviction that he would sing again as in the old days. His illness began last winter, when he burst a blood vessel while singing at Brooklyn in the Academy of Music and he had never been well since. His death comes as a shock to the music world because it was generally understood that he was gradually gaining health. Grand Opera will never be the same to those who have heard him and the hope of those who have not heard him was to hear him but is destroyed now by death and the golden notes of the great tenor are forever silenced. He died in his own sunny Italy, for which he always held a deep affection.

GERMANY SENDS RELIEF TO RUSSIA

That Germany is recovering from the war is evident in the fact that she wants to help others. On August 2, 1921, she asked permission of the soviet government for German workers to enter the country and establish a base at Petrograd. The request was based upon the provision that the representatives be given a free hand by the soviet government. Five prominent physicians and 20 assistants with quantities of medicines, disinfectants and delousing equipment will make up Germany's first relief expedition to Russia.

DOMESTIC CONDITIONS MUST REVIVE BUSINESS

On August 2, 1921, it was declared by newspapers that in administrative circles at Washington, hopes of a return of business activities and prosperity turn now more to domestic conditions than to foreign trade. America must work and build up a trade within America, she must furnish a market for her own products until Europe can get on her feet again. Business men must work with this idea in mind and as Henry Ford, cut the cost of production without cutting wages.

PRESIDENT HARDING TAKES REAL VACATION

President Harding with Mrs. Harding and a party of close friends went into the White Mountains of New Hampshire on August 1, 1921, for his first real vacation since the inauguration. They are stopping at a little lodge high above the reach of the heat wave and four miles from a telephone. It is to be a real vacation and the party will be guests for the remainder of the week and longer if public affairs will permit.

Japan has recently sent representatives to this country to oppose legislation under which Chinese coolies are to be admitted to Hawaii.

2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE BULLETIN

We presume that most of the pastors are "vacating" these days, since we have so little from their pens.

THE SUN's Editor will attend the Virginia Valley Central Conference, which meets at Mayland Christian church August 18-29.

Sunday school workers who were not privileged to be at the Reidsville Convention will be interested in reading President Stephenson's address in this issue of THE SUN.

THE SUN congratulates Col. J. E. West, Suffolk, Virginia, on being elected Lieutenant Governor of his State. The position will be well filled and every duty honorably discharged by a great Christian statesman.

The opening date for the approaching term of Elon College is near at hand. We entertain the hope that every son and daughter from the homes of our Brotherhood who is to attend college this fall will go to Elon.

Oak Level, Mt. Gilead, Franklinton, Pope's Chapel and Mt. Carmel churches desire the services of a pastor. These churches are now being served by Rev. B. F. Black, who is forced to resign on account of a throat trouble that has been troubling him for many months. The chairman of the pastoral committee, Brother B. J. Blackley, or Mrs. H. E. Pearce, the secretary, will be glad to correspond with any pastor. They may be addressed at Franklinton, N. C.

Very often our lack of confidence in the other fellow is the cause of his lack of confidence in us.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

LUCY M. ELDREDGE—FIELD SECRETARY
Burlington, N. C.

The great organizations for religious education in our Southern Christian Convention, include the Sunday school, the Christian Endeavor Society, and our Missionary Societies. The valuable, far-reaching work of all these organizations merit our best effort and constant devotion. We need to know more about their work, that we may be inspired to do more for them and through them. The Board of Religious Education recognized this fact when it voted to put a Field Secretary into the work, to give help and information wherever possible. Now that this work has been initiated, the Board trusts that each Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Society will feel free to call upon their Secretary for any help which may be needed or desired. Let us work together for a larger service with our Master's aid.

CRADLE ROLL IN EASTERN VIRGINIA

Cradle Roll enthusiasm was high when Mrs. I. W. Johnson gave her report at the Eastern Virginia Convention in the First Christian church of Norfolk recently. Mrs. Johnson was happy to report sixteen new Cradle Rolls organized as a result of her efforts this year. This brings the total number of Cradle Rolls in the Convention up to thirty-three, or nearly twice the number reported last year. We are trusting that next year many departments may follow Mrs. Johnson's example and that all of our work may be thus stimulated by reports of good work done.

"MEET ME AND MINE AT LIBERTY (V.) JULY 1922"

The above slogan has already been adopted by the wide-awake President of the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, and appears in large letters on his correspondence. Now is the time for all of our Conventions to begin talking about next year's sessions in order to make those gatherings reach out to all of our churches.

The Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention voted without a dissenting vote to hold their Convention next year at Ocean View, just before the Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods, which will be held at Ocean View again next year. Many of our people should begin to lay plans now to attend both of these inspiring and helpful gatherings next summer.

True Temperance in Heart and Life.—I Thess. 5:4-11
May we together heed the injunction:

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

PRAYER THAT WILL BE ACCEPTABLE

In this article we wish to consider the prayer of believers—those who have accepted Jesus as their Savior and are in sweet fellowship with His will.

A person may be living in this attitude toward God and yet, while engaged in devotions and communion with the Father relative to his hearts yearnings and desires to do His will, may frequently realize that his thoughts had suddenly drifted into channels absolutely contrary to his wishes and attitude of devotion. Having at times in my life experienced this unpleasant situation, I have sought the Lord's guidance through meditation and the study of His Word to know of His will, I have found to be acceptable we must be sincere. In Heb. 10:23, we have these words, "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water." This seems to be the first requisite, a thorough cleansing of the heart and life so we can come "in full assurance of faith", with our hearts free from all evil and pure in the sight of God. In the second place we must ask in faith, Mark 11:24 "Therefore I say unto you, what things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." To have this promise verified we see the necessity of the petitioner to have that simplicity, that trust, humility, confidence and unfailing faith that we see in a little child as it looks up into its mother's face with earnest pleading for the favor desired, with that sweet imploring, confiding trust that knows no denial. In the third place it must be offered in the name of Jesus. John 16:23—"And in that day ye shall ask me nothing; verily, verily, I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, He will give it you." In our communion with the Father, seeking His guidance, loving care and tender mercies; He would have us remember Jesus and ask for those things our heart desires in His name. The Father contemplating what His Son endeavored and suffered in revealing Him unto a lost sinful world desires that the Son be not forgotten when we approach him at a throne of grace. Finally, when we make our petitions to God, the Father, let us make them in sincerity of heart, in faith believing and in the name of Jesus.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

A SUGGESTED SLOGAN

A number of our Sunday schools that have not been making the monthly offering have recently decided to make one offering each month for the benefit of the Orphanage. That is very encouraging to us in this work, as we need your help. More than sixty little children to feed and clothe in the Institution and more than a hundred crying to us for a home and many of them from members of the Christian Church. Dear friends, we need your loyal support.

Let every church and Sunday school adopt this monthly plan and make your slogan "Every church and Sunday school on the roll of monthly givers in the year 1921." Help us to bring this to pass.

"Tell Me a Story"

ETHEL AT GRANDFATHER'S

(A True Story)

There are not many girls who enjoy being called a tomboy, but it never mattered in the least to Ethel Stirling. Her Cousin Jim was her companion, and there was not a thing his adventurous spirit dared that Ethel was not his admiring follower. On some occasions she even led in rank, and Jim brought up the rear. All sorts of mishaps had befallen her, from the day she had stayed out late to see the horse doctor, and came home grieved because she had found him a mere man, to the time when coasting face downward, she had run between the wheels of a grocery wagon and came to an abrupt stop between the four legs of a good-natured horse. On this last occasion she gave way to tears, and was taken home to her mother in a state of alarm quite unusual to her.

Portland was a good place to live; but it was when she visited her grandfather's farm that she realized the fulness and freedom of life. Among other products on the farm was one Ethel was never tired of watching, and it appeared to hold the same fascination for Jim. Grandfather had large pens filled with pigs, and fenced about them was a strip of ground which Ethel called her summer garden.

One day an original thought came to Ethel. "Jim", she said, "you are afraid to take a ride on one of the pigs."

"I'll do it, if you will do it first," said Jim.

Ethel was rather taken aback, but in nowise daunted. She was younger than Jim, but just as brave, if not more so. She gathered her little skirts closely about her, sprang from the fence, where she and Jim had been sitting, into the pigs' summer garden, and, selecting the largest one, she sprang astride his back and grabbed his ears for support. To say there was surprise and consternation in the pigs' garden is to express it mildly. The rest of them all stood back, and Ethel and her gallant steed had a clear track. Round and round the space they went, Ethel clinging on for dear life, and the pig giving vent to his displeasure in loud squeals. There had been nothing said as to how long she could ride, but she concluded she might as well continue as long as she stuck on. Jim was bending double on the fence, his legs dangling in the air, his shrieks of laughter mingling with the squeals of the pig.

In the mad chase, Ethel had not had much time to take in outside surroundings, but she suddenly became conscious that she had an audience. The pigs' pasture land lay along the roadside. Four passing teams had drawn up, and they were watching her with keen interest. The noise brought grandmother from her baking and grandfather from his oat field, and the ride was brought to an abrupt end.

Ethel was a bit indignant when she found that Jim was not to be allowed to take his turn; but if there was any disappointment felt on Jim's part, he succeeded admirably in concealing it. But he was known to say to the boys that his Cousin Ethel was too gritty by half to be a girl, so that it is certain that he appreciated her, even if he did not always dare to follow her footsteps.—Exchange.

THE BEST PREPARATION

Few girls make the mistake of supposing that they can successfully do more than one thing at a time, but a great many, while engaged on one task, let their thoughts turn to something else which is waiting, and perhaps worry over it, and make themselves uncomfortable and unhappy. There is no task so small, but that we cannot afford to bring to it divided energy and interest. The way to make a success if the least thing is to do it as if it were the greatest thing, putting our whole heart into it. Do not work flogged on by the thought of something else waiting to be done, reproaching yourself for every lost second, forgetting all about the fine touches. The best preparation for the new task is the last well done.—Selected.

CHURCH NEWS

POUNDED

I have read for a long time, the accounts various pastors have given of poundings which they had received. I have wondered how it made a fellow feel to get that sort of pounding. I don't have to wonder any longer. Now I know from actual experience.

Tuesday evening, July 26, the Ladies Aid Society of the East End Christian church were holding a lawn social on the church lawn. During the evening, I was told that somebody wished to see me in the Sunday school room and I at once started that way with, perhaps, thoughts of a wedding running through my mind. Inside I found a cheery group of my members standing around a pile of packages of various sizes, and one of the with a smile said, "We want you take these home with you." With surprise and sincere appreciation I complied with their wishes and we now have sugar, coffee, canned fruit, preserves, bacon, in fact, almost a stock for a grocery store, in our pantry. Such expressions of good will and appreciation makes a pastor feel his unworthiness, and they also enable him to go about his duties with a lighter step and a song of thanksgiving in his heart.

I shall leave the work here on the first of October with sincere regret and with pleasant memories of the associations and delightful fellowship of the good people here. May the richest blessings of a loving Heavenly Father rest upon them and may he direct them in securing the right man for their pastor.

VALLEY CONFERENCE

The Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference will meet with the Mayland church, near Broadway, Va., August 18-21. We hope to have every church represented and with good reports. The officials of all churches should attend the Conference. The Conference needs their presence and cooperation to make it a strong progressive organization and the local church needs the inspiration and more progressive work, which would come through its leaders attending the Conference.

We have a feast of good things in store for those who come this year. The following visitors expect to be with us and will take part in the discussions: Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. W. W. Staley, Rev. C. B. Riddle, Dr. C. H. Rowland, Dr. F. W. Johnson, Mr. C. D. Johnston, Rev. E. T. Cotten and Miss Lucy Eldredge.

KEYSER

Mrs. Sarah Francis Keyser of Shenandoah, Va., R. 1, died August 1, 1921. Her age was seventy-six years, two months and twenty-four days. She is survived by four sons, four daughters and twenty-seven grandchildren. Sister Keyser was a faithful member of East Liberty Christian church and a consistent Christian. Her Christianity was of the highest type. Her life was a benediction to those with whom she came in contact. Her last testimony was to the effect that she was not afraid to die and meet God in judgment, and was perfectly willing to go whenever God should call her. The funeral was conducted at East Liberty Christian church, August 3, by the writer of these lines, and the body was buried in the nearby cemetery.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

JEFFRIES

John G. Jeffries was born February 29, 1839, and died July 19, 1921, aged 82 years, four months and 20 days. He was married to Miss Margaret E. Hurdle, March 8, 1866. To this union were born eleven children, eight of whom are living.

He was a soldier in the Civil War.

About four years ago he made a profession of faith and his words of consolation were, "I am willing and ready to go". The funeral was conducted at the home of his son, with whom he was living, by Rev. T. J. Green, and the remains were placed in the McCray Cemetery.

He leaves to mourn their loss a wife, eight children, forty-two grandchildren, eleven great grandchildren and a host of friends.

APPLE

Barbee A. Apple died July 4, 1921, aged 79 years and three months. She joined Apple's Chapel Christian church in early childhood and lived a Christian life. She was good and kind to everybody. For more than fifteen years she was afflicted with blindness and deafness, but bore her afflictions well. She leaves to mourn their loss one brother and one sister. The funeral was conducted by the writer, her pastor. The remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery.

RICHARDSON- RICHARDSON

The hand of sickness, suffering, and sorrow has been very heavy upon the life of Deacon Charles C. Richardson of Wakefield, Va. For some years his wife "Aunt Mollie" has been a great sufferer though not confined to the house. Recently the seeds of sickness ripened into a harvest of death—when his eldest son died in the hospital at Suffolk, Va., where he had gone for treatment and operation. He was born November 15, 1868 and died July 20, 1921. "Sidney" as he was kindly called was reared near Spring Hill Christian church Sussex County, Virginia, where he joined in early manhood and remained a faithful member till death. About eight years ago he married Miss Sarah E. Brittle, who survives him, and to whom many friends extend deepest sympathy. He was buried at Spring Hill July 21. Besides his wife he leaves a father, mother, four brothers and three sisters to mourn their loss. Services by the pastor. At the time of his death and burial his mother was too sick to be told of his death. And five days later she was called to give an account of a life well spent.

Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Cox Richardson was born August 21, 1846, near Copperhaunk Spring, Waverly, Va., and died at Wakefield, Va., July 25, 1921, and was buried at Spring Hill Christian church where she had been a member for more than fifty years. January 23, 1868 she was married to Deacon Charles C. Richardson. To this union were born eleven children. Two died in infancy, nine were reared to manhood and womanhood. Two children preceded her in death, viz. Mrs. Letitia Pond about thirteen years ago, and Albert Sidney Richardson five days before her death. She leaves a devoted husband, four sons, three daughters, twenty-nine grandchildren and four great grandchildren.

This splendid Christian mother has left the fruits of her faith in a fine family of sons and daughters. In her home the pastors of Spring Hill church have rested and have been cared for, for more than half a century. At her old home now owned by Deacon Charles C. Cox, the writer has seen the old family building where it was said Joseph Thomas preached. Her life was one of loyalty and faithfulness to her church.

Though weak, she attended divine worship on Sunday before taking her bed on Thursday. She often talked of the sufferings here and always expressed a rich hope for the great hereafter. By her wish the pastor preached a short sermon, for the funeral occasion at Spring Hill church which was crowded to overflowing by relatives and friends, July 26, 1921 4:00 P. M. Rev. Mr. Paylor of the Wakefield M. E. church, and Dr. W. D. Harward of Dendron assisted in the services. Many beautiful floral designs were given by relatives and friends, in their silent language and fragrance spoke to all around of the beauty and goodness of the life that had come to an end at such a ripe age.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—DICKERSON

Whereas, it hath pleased our Heavenly Father, on July 7, 1921, to remove from our midst our brother and Deacon, W. A. Dickerson, of Durham Christian church; and,

Whereas, by his going the church and Sunday school have sustained the loss of a faithful and consecrated Christian worker who was always glad to be of service in the kingdom,

Therefore be it resolved,

First. That in the death of Brother Dickerson the church has lost a true, loyal and valiant soldier.

Second. That the removal of such a useful life from our midst will leave a vacancy hard to fill.

Third. That a copy of these resolutions be entered upon our church record, a copy sent to the family and a copy to The Christian Sun for publication.

MISSIONARY

NOT OMITTING THE FOURTH STANZA

By Mrs. E. C. Cronk

Mrs. Belmont glauced anxiously at her watch. The hands pointed to 5:12. At six o'clock the stores would close and she must match a piece of black silk. There was just one more hymn on the program of the missionary meeting she was leading.

"Let us conclude our meeting by uniting in singing Hymn 102, omitting the fourth stanza," she announced, with a rather unsuccessful effort not to appear hurried.

Number 102 was a favorite hymn and the society sang heartily:

"Take my life and let it be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee.
Take my moments and my days,
Let them flow in ceaseless praise."

Mrs. Belmont looked at her watch between the verses.

"Fife seventeen. I can still make it," she thought, referring not to the consecration of her moments and her days, but to the silk counter, "before six o'clock."

During the singing of the last verse Mrs. Belmont gathered her papers together and was ready to dismiss the society when some one spoke.

"Madam President!"

The president turned a surprised face to the little woman who had arisen and was standing over by the organ.

"Madam President," she said, "I'm opposed to omitting that fourth stanza."

A suppressed murmur of surprise passed over the society. The older members caught their breath in amazement. The younger ones leaned forward with quick wonder. Maggie Sparkman had never opposed anything in the society before. She was "a wheel horse" they had always said. She pulled hard and never balked. Now two spots of bright red burned in her cheeks, which were usually colorless. She was evidently profoundly stirred.

Almost unconsciously the women opened the hymn books they had just closed, to see the fourth stanza. Miss Sparkman read aloud the words of the omitted verse, on which the eyes of every member of the society now rested:

"Take my silver and my gold,

Not a mite would I withhold."

She lifted her eyes from the book to the audience. They were usually timid eyes, but now they shone with conviction and determination.

"I'm opposed to omitting the fourth stanza. If it were only in our singing it wouldn't be so bad. Likely that just happened, but we are omitting it in the life of our society. The amount of money that has come into our treasury this year is shamefully small. I think it is getting to be our habit in our consecration to 'omit the fourth stanza.'

"We sing to the Lord 'Take my life,' but when it comes to our silver and gold we ask every one except our Lord to take it. Silver and gold we offer our grocers, our furniture dealers, our jewelers, our milliners, our merchants all, but we scarcely average the smallest bit of silver among our coins as a monthly offering at our missionary meetings, and I have never yet been custodian of a single piece of gold since I've been treasurer.

"The appeals from our mission fields are read to us and we listen to them and say placidly, 'How interesting!' but we 'omit the fourth stanza.'

"We hear of great opportunities that should be seized ere they pass, and we say 'what a pity,' but we continue to 'omit the fourth stanza'. We have tried all sorts of devices and commercial schemes to get a little money in our treasury, when we have all that we need if only we would learn not to 'omit the fourth stanza'. Now I'm sure all of you know that I'm no extremist. I don't think a woman ought to feel uncomfortable every time she puts on a pretty hat or buys a new piece of furniture, but we have dollars for all these things and only pennies, nickels and dimes for the Lord.

"He says that the gold and silver are His. We have so much and yet we bring so little to Him, when it is really His and not ours."

The words she spoke were simple enough, but the earnest conviction of the speaker made them eloquent with the not-to-be-denied eloquence of truth. The heart of every woman there recognized that truth. There were no pledges made, no promises spoken, yet the president knew that she acted on the sincere though unspoken suggestion of every woman there when, with perilous disregard of six o'clock, she said: "Let us sing again Hymn 102, not omitting the fourth stanza."

The treasurer's books for the next year bore witness to the integrity of the singing of that fourth stanza, especially under the heading "Thank Offering".

FASTER TRAINS ON SOUTHERN

Faster schedules between New York, Washington and the South will be put into effect by the Southern Railway System on Sunday, August 14, when material cuts will be made in the running time of eight through passenger trains.

No. 138, the "Atlanta Special," will leave Atlanta at 11:30 A. M., arriving Washington at 7:40 A. M. and New York at 1:30 P. M., an hour and ten minutes earlier than at present.

M., but will arrive Birmingham at 4:30 P. M., an hour and ten minutes earlier. No. 30 will leave Birmingham at 10:30 A. M., an hour and a half later, will arrive Atlanta at 3:55 P. M., leave Atlanta at 4:00 P. M., arriving Washington 12:35 P. M. and New York at 6:10 P. M., the same as at present.

No. 41 will leave New York and Washington as at present, but will arrive Chattanooga at 6:10 P. M., fifteen minutes earlier. No. 42 will leave Chattanooga at 11:15 A. M., arriving Washington at 7:45 A. M. and New York 1:30 P. M., an hour and ten minutes earlier.

No. 32, the "Augusta Special," will continue to leave Augusta at 12:15 P.

M., arriving Washington at 7:30 A. M. but will reach New York at 1:30 P. M. an hour and ten minutes earlier.

Inauguration of faster schedules by the Southern has been made possible on account of the shortened distance and excellent condition of the double-tracked line extending all the way from Washington to Atlanta. Since the completion of the double track work which involved the rebuilding of practically the whole of the railway, the Southern's through passenger trains have made a remarkable record for on-time performance and the management feels that the new and faster schedules can be operated with as satisfactory results.

FOR THE CURE OF HIGH BLOOD PRESSURE

By Dr. J. E. Gault in Christian Advocate (Nashville)

Without going into details, I will give a safe and sure remedy for high blood pressure. You can surely get results if you will carry out these instructions to the letter. For the first two days absolutely nothing to eat but grapefruit juice and lemon juice. Squeeze a glassful of grapefruit juice and put the juice of a half lemon in the glass. Drink a whole glass of this every one or two hours during the day. Drink very little water.

Then for a week eat nothing but fruit, either cooked or raw or both. Continue to drink the grapefruit and lemon juice as stated above during the day, drinking very little water.

Keep the bowels open with fountain syringe, but use no salts or medicine of any kind. Drink no milk nor use any salt or pepper or butter.

If your head aches and you cannot sleep, put your feet in a tub of hot water for thirty minutes before going to bed. Diet after the first week.

For breakfast eat nothing but fruits, changing from one kind to another so as not to tire of any one variety. For your noon meal eat spinach, turnip greens, mustard greens, beet greens, lettuce, and celery. Of course I do not mean for you to eat all of these at one meal, but one or two of them freely. You may have some young string or snap beans, peas, some corn bread or whole-wheat bread. About twice a week have one baked potato, but no butter. At this meal you may have a raw salad made of either fruits or vegetables or both. Have raw salad twice every day. Do not overeat, but be reasonable.

For your supper have the same as for your dinner, except you may add a small helping of baked fresh meat or fish about two days a week. Masticate every mouthful thoroughly. Once every day, just before retiring, sponge the body all over with warm water, and rub the skin till it is all aglow. Now forget your disease and give nature a chance, and you will soon be well. Be very careful with your sex life, avoiding everything that appears to be excess.

Sleep with your windows wide open and get eight or nine hours of sleep every night.

To sum it all up in a few words: Eat as stated above, being sure not to overeat; sleep eight or nine hours in every twenty-four; be of a happy, cheerful frame of mind. Expect to get well. Do not eat sweets except honey. Use no vinegar or white flour products. Keep your feet warm, your bowels open, and your head cool. For the first week use the fountain syringe every night, then three times per week. Simple, isn't it? Yes, and it will save lives by the thousands.

The Waste of Manhood

THE EDITOR

SAVE, save, save, were the watchwords during the World War. It was but an emphasis and a refrain of what we have been hearing for years. Such is but the mouthpiece of material economy. Nothing should be wasted, but there is that which is above the material that should be saved: It is the wasted manhood of our land. It is time that we cry out—Save, save, save. Save the manhood of our day. On every hand open pitfalls may be seen. They stand ready to swallow up and waste the noble manhood of our land.

Manhood is wasting by loose thinking, loose living, and practices that will bring a nation to its own defeat. The situation is too serious to go unnoticed and too vital to civilization to go unchallenged.

Throw out the life line—throw it out today. Manhood is wasting while there is a better way. The flower of civilization is withering. The snares of one civilization become the handicaps of another. Awake, awake, awake, O ye reformers, that manhood may not be wasted. To save manhood is to save a nation—to allow manhood to waste is a nation's decay.

Our Ministry Again

IAST week we endeavored to show what a large per cent of our ministerial students who enter college never graduate. Many who fail to graduate are among our best men, but the sad part is that the most of them who failed to graduate are not even in the ministry today.

It is necessary at times to check up and see what we have done, what we are doing and what we plan to do. To follow the line of least resistance is the world's way, and often the way of the Church. It is our purpose in this article to point out the leakage and, in a later editorial to suggest a remedy.

We have made a careful and diligent study of each Report on Education in our Southern Convention from the year 1910 to the year 1920, inclusive. We find that Conferences admitted in these years men to the Biblical class as follows:

1910—Virginia Valley, none; Alabama, 2; Georgia and Alabama, none; Eastern Virginia, 1; Eastern North Carolina, none; Western North Carolina, none; North Carolina and Virginia, none.

1911—Virginia Valley, 2; Alabama, none; Georgia and Alabama, none; Eastern Virginia, none; Eastern North Carolina, 3; Western North Carolina, 1; North Carolina and Virginia, none.

1912—Virginia Valley, none; Alabama, none; Georgia and Alabama, none; Eastern Virginia, none; Eastern North Carolina, 1; Western North Carolina, 2; North Carolina and Virginia, 4.

1913—Virginia Valley, none; Alabama, 1; Georgia and Alabama, none; Eastern Virginia, none; Eastern North Carolina, none; Western North Carolina, none; North Carolina and Virginia, 1.

1914—Virginia Valley, none; Alabama, none; Georgia and Alabama, none; Eastern Virginia, 2; Eastern North Carolina, 1; Western North Carolina, 4; North Carolina and Virginia, 1.

1915—Virginia Valley, 1; Alabama, none; Georgia and Alabama, none; Eastern Virginia, none; Eastern North Carolina, 4; Western North Carolina, none; North Carolina and Virginia, 4.

1916—Virginia Valley, none; Alabama, none; Georgia and Alabama, none; Eastern Virginia, none; Eastern North Carolina, none; Western North Carolina, 2; North Carolina and Virginia, 3.

1917—Virginia Valley, none; Alabama, none; Georgia and Alabama, none; Eastern North Carolina, 2; Eastern Virginia, 3; Western North Carolina, 3; North Carolina and Virginia, 3.

1918—Virginia Valley, none; Alabama, none; Georgia and Alabama, none; Eastern Virginia, 1; Eastern North Carolina, none; Western North Carolina, none; North Carolina and Virginia, none.

1919—Virginia Valley, 1; Alabama, none; Georgia and Alabama, none; Eastern Virginia, none; Eastern North Carolina, none; Western North Carolina, none; North Carolina and Virginia, 2.

Of this fifty-five, only twenty-two are now engaged in church work, thirteen of whom graduated from Elon College. The remainder of the fifty-five have entirely dropped out, so far as the records of the Conferences indicate. Some of these have left our denomination.

These figures can be duplicated by most any denomination, and so what we are discussing not only applies to our people, but the others. However, we of the Christian Church must work out our own problems and consider that which faces us.

No one answer will suffice for the reason or reasons these young men ceased to preach, or failed to continue their preparation. We shall name a few of the reasons, as they seem to us, and express the hope that others may add to these. They are:

1. The lack of a proper conception of the calling. We believe that many young men never consider what manner of work they are about to enter. They may be so deeply impressed with the work of some minister until they have a feeling that they could do as well if they were in his stead. They fail to comprehend the big task of preparation, the much study, the hardship and the trials they are to face. The dream of it is one thing and the work is another.

2. Over persuasion. It is a plain thing to say, but we believe that men instead of God have called many men to preach. We have seen persons who took a great fancy to wanting a certain person to preach. The young man is reminded of it so often that he semi-consciously makes up his mind that he must preach. He has let another do his thinking. Acting under some religious impulse, he declares himself a candidate for the ministry.

3. Class separation. It is strange, but the average ministerial student feels that he must put on the sanctimonious garb, get the ministerial touch to his voice, and become pious as soon as he tells the public that he has decided to be a minister. He first sets up the barrier of separation and the consequence of this is he is separated from others. He soon begins to feel the need of the companionship of others, but too late. He has said by his actions that "I am especially set apart from other men". And he is too. Don't forget that. A young man studying for the ministry is first to be human—and this applies the more when he becomes a regular pastor.

4. The pull of material things. Ministerial students hear others talking of how much they will make per month; they see men become rich and mass a fortune. They know that before them are hardships, especially in a financial way. They know that their families will never be able to dress as other families dress. They know that the chances of their owning a home are against them. They get despondent and fall out. It is heartless to accuse this class of not being sincere in their undertaking. We must remember that their minds are immature, and that they are human. Possibly their worst critics are those who should have encouraged them. And with all seriousness, the Church makes a mistake when it places the salary of the minister so low.

5. Example of other ministers. We are of the opinion that young men entering the ministry have an exalted opinion of the work. They are, as a rule, young men who have not been about so very much. As their acquaintance enlarges they have a better opportunity to study men. They hear slang in the pulpit, see ministers dressed unbecomingly to the calling; see ministers careless with their personal appearance, hear jokes unbecomingly the high office and other things that they did not expect to find. (Just here let us say that a minister invests well when he shines his shoes, uses a razor every morning, keeps his clothes pressed, patronizes the laundry, and wears out a few hat brushes.) These young men lose respect for the whole of the ministry by the way some men dress, act, and conduct themselves.

This subject of ministerial supply is getting to be serious and the Church must face the facts. We believe that it can be seen from figures given above that the Church cannot be too careful in admitting young men as candidates. It is a serious thing to turn down a young man who desires to be enrolled as a candidate for the ministry. But there is a side more serious than this: That is for mature minds to allow a young man to go into that which will bring reproach upon himself, and upon his Conference, and upon his denomination. Let us make sure of our grounds and then go ahead.

Then, too, we have been licensing and ordaining many young men too early. They have not had time to deliberate. The Christian Annual records dozens of instances where we have granted license, and even ordained, and there can be found no trace of these men or their work today, so far as the general public is concerned. Such conditions reflect heavily upon the men who sit in counsel.

We have not mentioned that class who have been compelled to drop out on account of sickness and hindrances beyond their control. They have our deepest sympathy—in fact all classes for that matter.

Our next editorial will be on "Meeting the Crisis" and will appear next week.

Two Streams

 HERE are two educational streams pouring into human society. The Church schools are giving the country about 150,000 graduates annually, while the State supported schools graduate about 250,000 each year. These two streams have not always been the same. The Church school was once ahead in graduates, but is losing each year. This is a great challenge to the Church to gird about herself every resource to maintain her institutions. The hope of the world lies in the graduates of Church institutions. The world leaders prove this statement and it needs no supplement here.

This is a day of big things. But bigness is not all, and too many Church institutions have gone from the emphasis of quality to the key-note of numbers. The Church college must no longer worry over numbers; it must put time and emphasis upon character and quality. The supporters of the Church institutions must not expect college officials to meet expenses by big enrollments. It cannot be done. The cost of maintaining a college is the price of leadership. We know but little of the present outlook at Elon for students for the coming year. THE SUN shall send out no note of woe if the enrollment falls short of the enrollments in recent years. THE SUN is more interested in the size of the Senior class than it is of the Freshman class. The largest enrollment serves as no guarantee to a large graduating class. Seniors must first be Freshmen, but our observation has been that the closer a college can get to its students, the chances of their graduating are enhanced. Many, many students go to college with no thought of ever completing the course, but change their minds and graduate. The opposite is also true.

But the two streams that pour into human society are changing the course of the world. We moved too far toward materialism. The Church college endeavors to check the advance of the material and strengthen the fortress of the spiritual. The Church college is the society saving institution of the day. She has builded the pillars of civilization and safely anchored, so far, the destiny of the nation.

CONTRIBUTIONS

LEADERSHIP

FS I gleaned from the Seaside Chautauqua and Eastern Virginia Sunday School Convention recently, it seems to me the great need of the Christian world, and especially of our Church, is consecrated leadership. Sometime ago someone deplored the fact that some of our great leaders had left our Church to go into other fields and in commenting thereon I suggested that the trouble was we failed to give them the opportunity to use their especial talent in our Church and they naturally sought an outlet for their pent up energy. I am more and more impressed with this thought and am taking the liberty of mentioning a few examples which have recently come under my observation.

In other churches I have visited, the pastor and other leaders are constantly pushing forward some young man or woman into prominent places, coaching and encouraging them along while many of our pastors apparently do not feel that the laymen are competent to fill any important office. Therefore you will see in our Conferences practically all offices filled by the pastors whose hands are already filled with other duties. Naturally there is a lack of efficiency. Brother Hermon Eldredge at the Chautauqua Sunday school class asked the question, "Why were the seven deacons appointed in the early church?" My answer was, because one strong apostle and seven weak laymen could do more than one strong apostle.

Sometime ago a new pastor was called to one of our churches. A young man was acting as choirster, putting in a great deal of energy in trying to develop himself as well as the choir. The pastor was a good song leader. The young man was timid and naturally resigned in favor of the pastor. Instead of the pastor counselling and encouraging him to keep on, he assumed charge and made the young man feel that he had made a failure. Later he was sought out and located in another field and we lost a future leader. Another similar instance occurred not long since. A pastor had been assigned to conduct the song service at a meeting but was late in arriving. The presiding officer called upon a layman to open the service with a song and was proceeding very well when the singing pastor arrived. Naturally the layman offered him the book and place and instead of saying to the layman "go ahead, you are doing fine", he took the book and proceeded to finish the song service. The layman stepped down discouraged and may not make another effort. The same thing often occurs in class. A teacher for some unavoidable cause is late, an earnest substitute starts with the lesson when the regular teacher arrives. Of course it is natural for the substitute to offer the regular teacher the place but wouldn't it be much better for the regular teacher to say "go ahead, you are doing fine, I will sit by and be ready to help if you need me", than to discourage the substitute, perhaps making his or her first effort. Sometimes it may be necessary to insist but this ought to be done if it is possible to bring out a new worker. The same thing applies to any other office. A true leader is one who leads, not one who does the work. He points out the way and encourages his followers. He seeks out the best and utilizes it for all it is worth. We have abundant talent in our Church but we are letting others find it and as the old saying goes "finding's having".

Let us get on our "specs" and find some of our talent and use it. It will take work and perseverance but get away from that old "line of least resistance".

Someone else will do our work when we are gone, why not give them a chance, while we are here to learn by doing.

OUR VIRGINIA LETTER

WE like to see people get comfort out of every situation into which they may be thrown. It is much wiser to do so than to make yourself miserable over the situation. One correspondent, writing from a distant state, extracts comfort in a true way as we think from a situation which was at that time confronting that correspondent. The letter reads:

"I do not know what our church is going to do for a pastor another year. The committee is so slow in taking any action. They have neither accepted our present pastor's resignation, nor asked him to reconsider. Our pastor was not here at our last service as he has been on a visit to his people in Southern..... Perhaps he will tell us when he returns that he is going back to his former State and to another field. If so, some one else will get to hear the gospel awhile. Our church has had her chance, and so far as we can see she is on a lower plane, spiritually speaking, than ever before. When preachers of the Word, who are faithful in declaring the whole counsel of God, move from place to place often, it gives more people a chance to hear the truth. That is the consolation I get out of losing our pastor. It may be one way the Lord has of spreading the gospel in these days when there is so much apostasy in the Church."

Now, that is one way to look at this matter and it is a pretty good way to get comfort out of the loss of a faithful pastor. In this day of the scarcity of pastors, it will be wise for churches needing a pastor not to wait too long to act in an effort to secure a pastor. A hint to the wise is sufficient. If you remain slow to act, why you need blame no one but yourself for not having a pastor.

A correspondent in a recent letter makes a pretty bold hint as to "bosses" in the church. There ought to be no such characters in the membership of the churches of Christ. The writer to whom we refer, says: "It is a shame that churches, or at least some of them, have to be dominated by worldly, unspiritual members, yet it is so in some instances. It comes close home to me to make a statement, for our own church has been 'bossed' for twenty years by one of the most unprincipled of men in its membership. People have no confidence in him, and yet they let him rule. You see he is rich in this world's goods. It may seem strange but it is true—he manages to make the rest of us bear most of the financial burdens. He has balked everything our pastor has tried to launch, till at length our pastor has resigned, not being willing to be dominated by such a man, and now this 'boss' is trying to be very kind and considerate of our pastor's interests. Of course, he is kind now that he has gotten him to leave us. What can we gain by the change? If we be so fortunate as to get another pastor, this 'boss' will treat him in just about the same way. That is not only an injustice to the pastor, but it is even more an injustice to the church, for no church can do much when it is changing its pastor every year or two. For one I would like to see this 'boss' muzzled in some way so that he shall not continually be handicapping our church in its efforts to build up."

We read the other day a remark by a writer who evidently has had experience in dealing with evil in the church. This lady, for it was a lady writer, said:

"Satan intends to get inside of the church in some way, for he well knows he can not do much to injure the church, if he stays on the outside. He also knows he can strike the most deadly blows through some prominent church member. The pity is there is so often some man or woman always ready to be the tool of the wicked one. You can nearly always find some person who is ready to sell for prominence. I do not wonder that so many stay out of the church when there is so much within that is wrong. Of course the people who are out of the church ought not to look at these persons and so make an excuse for themselves to go wrong, but as a matter of fact there are such people, and such evils in the church greatly hinder some people. If they could only look to the Perfect One, Jesus Christ, the head of the Church, then they need not forsake the better things for the poorer."

With this letter finished, I am almost ready to leave for my vacation. I shall be away, if not hindered, till about September 1. I may or may not be able to write again before my return.

THE CHURCH COLLEGE

In this materialistic generation, we are too much inclined to measure all values in terms of dollars and cents, and oftentimes that is the question asked by both parents and young people in considering a college education. How much more money can I make? And even from this standpoint it is a big paying proposition, but if the Church, or denominational college, has that as the final purpose and goal, it has no reason for its existence. The state school and the business college will do that. It is not enough for the Church college to simply import so much mathematics, teach so many languages or instruct in so many sciences; it must develop character; it must hold up high ideals; it must inspire its students to be pure, to be strong and to be great, and must impress upon them the fact that greatness comes only through service.

The "Church's System of Education" as outlined by the Educational Board of the Southern Christian Convention, has a happy blending of forces and presents a fitting climax to the work begun in the Sunday school. It should commend itself to our Brotherhood and enlist our support.

ELON LETTER

ONE aspect of the Great Commission receives scant attention in Christian thought. I refer to what may be called the method of evangelization and its results—teaching and disciples. This is the method likewise that yields results in the home field.

We are to go into the world as teachers. How does the teacher go? Not as an autocrat with the air of conscious, obtruding superiority, nor with insolent intolerance toward all that differ from or with him. The teacher who understands his mission discovers a basis of agreement or likeness between what his pupil knows and what he wishes to teach him. It is easy to get a child that has seen an apple to understand an orange. We ascend from each lower level of knowledge to the next higher by discovering likenesses or unlikenesses between the two levels. Professional teachers understand this to be the law of apperception. In the practice of Jesus' teaching we discover it is the parable. In common every day language we speak of using illustrations. So all amounts to the same thing—we begin with what men already know and on that build what we wish them further to comprehend.

The most successful missionaries have used this method in winning adherents to the Christian faith. It was Paul's method at Mars Hill. It is the crying need of missionaries today according to no less an authority than Dr. Tasuka Haroda, president of Doshuska University himself a great Christian leader of Japan. The Christian missionary who is able to show the non-Christian man how Christ fills full his yearning desire to know God—that is the missionary who will win. Not wholesale condemnation of the non-Christian religious, but demonstration of their inadequacy and that Christianity is the completion of all—such is the teaching method Jesus enjoined upon us.

And then the result—Disciples. Looked at historically Christians have been disciples, learners. The Christian faith is not today what it was in the first century. Great Christian leaders like Paul, like Augustine, like Jerome, like Luther, like John Knox, like John Wesley, like James O'Kelly, like Charles S. MacFarland, have in every generation of Christian history given new impetus to the faith and interpreted it in ever widening circles. Nor do we now know all of Christian truth. We are learning some things in our day that succeeding generations of Christians will cherish with ardent devotion, but after us Christians will continue to learn and the better become able to understand the implications of the faith in Christ Jesus.

Our duty is plain—we are to teach the things sacred through the long centuries of Christian history and experience, and we are to be ready to learn the messages the spirit should through us, speak to men's hearts and consciences in our present age. Teachers and leaders—such are the heart of the Great Commission.

AN APPRECIATION

I was permitted to spend the week at the Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods of the Christian Church at Ocean View, July 18-25.

It was the most successful meeting of the kind which I have had the privilege of attending in our Church and the program was of the best. The Norfolk churches co-operated largely to increase the interest and attendance although many other sections were represented, notably Holy Neck church with twenty representatives.

The messages of Drs. L. E. Smith and Roy Helfenstein were outstanding as were the periods given to instruction by Dr. Atkinson and Secretary Minton. Brother Fletcher of Canada was especially fine in Rural Sunday School work. Miss Lucy Eldredge on the "Church School" seemed to satisfy her group and fill the periods to overflowing with helpful and suggestive things.

The Chautauqua lectures by Marion Lawrence and Dr. Peter Ainslie were outstanding features of the week and capacity houses were there to welcome them.

It was a good week and plans are being prepared for a better one next year. Save your dimes and go.

SOME EXPERIENCES OF A CHAPLAIN

 THE promulgation of Christianity and the working at the job are two different things. The Chaplain the other day found himself working at the job in a way altogether new to him.

Among his many duties is one special one—that of visiting every camp in the Regiment once a month and administering in every way needful and possible. It takes a week to do it, covering a distance of sixty-nine miles, over plains, hills, mountains and valleys. The trip in June was undertaken in a Ford and the exercise of the journey needs no supplement. The following are some of the experiences: (1). Help push the machine three miles up the mountain. (2). Forging the river we stalled and had to get out and push the "universal carriage" out. (3). Stuck in bottomless places, we waited for "Gooks" (Natives) to gang along and push us out. (4). Caught in a terrific storm and stuck for good. (5). Swinging effects to belt and walking the balance of the way, wading in mud and fording rivers. (6). Arriving at the fifty-second mile post in fine style. This is as far as we got. All the time we kept our good humor and, after a change of clothes, which was well provided in our haversacks, we felt as though nothing had happened. This is very good for a vacation, specially from the monotony of the Barracks and Black Port-au-Prince; but the Chaplain is frank to admit that the life is not very charming.

On this trip the Chaplain visited seventeen different camps. At the most of them he conducted song fests and delivered addresses and supervised their recreational equipment. The opportunity afforded in speaking to these men en masse is adequate to all moral and religious teaching, and when possible to take advantage, the Chaplain aims to let no opportunity pass. Having attracted their attention and interest, there is genuine inspiration in facing these men and, in a heart to heart manner, reveal to them the will of Christ in reflections that cast their shadows before them: in the every day things that are the results of sin and which reveal the true character; in God's loving forgiveness; in complying with those habits that put God in the life; in teaching them America's strength (her men); and enforcing upon their vision the true significance of Independence. It would be fine if you could be along and see the men in the rough and discover occasionally some working out for the right.

Occasionally a Jonah is found among them. A good man with Christian training and early persistent persuasion to preach the Gospel, is found down here in Haiti, in Uncle Sam's outfit, as it were, running from duty. Sometimes, figuratively speaking, one gets "spewed" up on the beach and they say they must return. The other day the Chaplain was led to lay his hands on a young musician and ask him if it ever occurred to him that he should preach. As quick as the question was asked a "burning fire" was discovered and the young man plans now to return to the States and prepare for the work long in his heart. Think of picking preachers out of "rough-necks". It is not to be understood, of course, that we are having a revival meeting down here. Why, one has to look for religion as one would for a needle in a hay stack in the night. But a great many of these men are Christian born and (at so early an age) are just far away from home and restraints having their fling. They need to be found. This is the job of the Chaplain.

"CHRISTIANS FIRST"

Address delivered at the Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods, Ocean View, Virginia, July 21, 1921, by President W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.)

QUOTE from Acts 17:26—"Christians First." The phrase is apt—that is what and where Christians ought to be. That is what we who wear that name to the exclusion of all party or sectarian names have been. The record is a glorious one. Our pedigree is illustrious.

The sobriquet our progenitors spiritual achieved in their day witnesses at once to the vision and leadership of our founders. They called us O'Kellyites, but it did not fit. Our most appropriate and benefitting nickname was "New Lights"—new lights, what tribute this to the vision and the leadership of the men who with O'Kelly and Haggard and their compeers dared launch a democracy for the Church that matched in its comprehension of principles the democracy that was then rejoicing the hearts of the people politically! No wonder that the apostle of political freedom, Thomas Jefferson, sought the friendship of the prophet of religious liberty, James O'Kelly, and arranged for him to deliver his message to the assembled Congress of the nation.

It is true that democracy is a spirit and not a form of government. We have seen how necessary it is for the leaders of democracy in a crisis to be clothed with autocratic power and for them to exercise it. It is the glory of democracy that those whom it exalts to the highest leadership voluntarily surrender their authority and readily retire to the rank of private citizens. Such is the spirit of democracy. It is also true that this spirit must have instrumentalities through which to express itself. The spirit must have a body, and that body must work harmoniously, must be geared together in its functions. The leaders of our Church saw this with prophetic discernment. They understood that the petty sectarianism of the Church renders it impotent. Multitudes subscribe to that view now, but these prophets of the Lord saw it more than a hundred years ago, saw it in an age the most prolific of sects in Christian history, and seeing it were fearless to proclaim their great purpose to be "Christian Union," and so they were in derision styled "New Lights".

These pioneers in Christian democracy not only proclaimed the need for Christian Union and incorporated it in their hymns, but they announced a platform that made its consummation possible. The five cardinal principles of the Christian Church are the utterance of statesmen. It is a finer bill of rights than the Declaration of Independence. It is brief, yet inclusive. Not one of its statements has been outgrown. We cannot say this of the immortal document that heralded the birth of our national liberty. "All men are created equal"—a fine theory, a splendid vote-getting proposition, but untrue without qualification. The Declaration also affirms that "the pursuit of happiness" is an "inalienable right"—and yet even the wisdom of the world disowns happiness as the ultimate goal of life—unless happiness be interpreted to mean even the sacrifice of life itself in the cause of right.

The seers who drafted the five cardinal principles of the Christian Church were prophets of a higher order than were the political leaders of our nation's early life. Their bill of rights stands unimpeached and unimpeachable, and ultimately the wisdom that prompted them to speak for the Kingdom its ultimate constitution will be gloriously glorified in the union of all Christ's followers—which was the goal in terms of which each plank of the glorious five took form and from which it received its inspiration. I say this deliberately and say it because the five cardinal principles of our Church embody all that is needful in the matter of positive statement and in them dwells the spirit that alone must animate any movement looking toward union, the spirit of brotherhood and Christian love.

The requirements of a spiritual democracy are that it shall be distinctly and appropriately denominated, that it should have a head not by birth or inheritance or law, but by free choice, that there should be a just and comprehensive constitution, that citizenship should be open to all, and that individual and social rights should be amply safeguarded. With what prophetic insight the founders of our Church sensed these fundamental requirements and provided for them! It is the marvel of Christian history. That they were inspired of God with a wisdom not their own is the only conclusion to which I can bring my mind. I say it reverently, these men were God's ambassadors and their instructions were direct from Him.

(a) NAME

The democracy of the spirit should be distinctively and appropriately named. Our people have steadfastly adhered to the name given the followers of the Master first in Antioch—Christians. Biblical scholars tell us that the complete translation of the record in Acts should be "the disciples were divinely called Christians first at Antioch." Be that as it may, the bride should take the bride-groom's name, and the Church is the bride of the Christ. The name we wear to the exclusion of all party or sectarian names is distinctive and it is appropriate. Let me pause here long enough to say that we dare not to make our glorious name a party or sectarian one. The century old controversy as to whether we are a denomination takes its origin right here. We never intended to become a denomination, however the census and federated movements must class us. We do not deny any follower of Jesus the same right to use that name which we claim for ourselves. We are not a sect. We are the common denominator of the disciples of Christ. We are a brotherhood, not a denomination, and my faith is that ultimately we shall be the brotherhood of Christ among men.

(b) HEAD

Democracy needs leadership and must have a supreme leader—a Head. That head must not occupy his exalted position by reason of birth or of inheritance or by law.

The leader of Christian democracy must lead by inherent ability and by the voluntary choice of the electorate. Such a leader is the Head of the Christian Church. He is the chosen Leader of all who seek its fellowship, their voluntary and willing choice. No leader is able to compete with Him and none to be compared with Him for the leadership of the Kingdom's forces. He is the peerless Head of the redeemed and Him we of the Christian Church have elevated to the place of leadership in our own hearts and in the Church.

(c) CONSTITUTION

Democracy not to degenerate into anarchy needs a constitution. The Christian Church recognizes the Holy Bible, or the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, to be that constitution. All the creeds men have written for themselves or for the organizations of the Kingdom have claimed the Bible as their ultimate and legitimate source and sanction. We Christians in accepting the Bible as sufficient rule of faith and practice include all that is divine in all the creeds. We do not however accept any manuscript or version of the Scriptures as ultimate and final. All manuscripts and all versions are to us the legitimate sources of information as to what should constitute the Bible. Least of all do we credit any man or organization of men with the prerogative of interpreting the constitution of the Christian life for us. Each citizen according to our view is the chief justice of the spiritual supreme court for himself and the Holy Spirit is the only accredited associate justice. We Christians recognize and seek the Spirit's presence in the interpretation of the Scriptures and trust the Spirit to lead us right. As an individual member of the Church I claim and exercise this privilege. And what I claim for myself in the Kingdom I cheerfully accord to every fellow-citizen of the realm. Our constitution through a hundred years and more has required no amendment. Our national constitution during the same period has been nineteen times amended, and is far from perfect today. We Christians are unwilling to concede even the possibility of amendment for our Magna Charta of spiritual liberty and soul-democracy. Our constitution is the one perfect instrument for the government of men.

(d) CITIZENSHIP

Citizenship is a highly prized possession even in a political democracy. Men and women cross the ocean to seek citizenship in this country, at great risk to their health and with no assurance of livelihood, such is the charm of political and civil liberty. One of the problems that faces our country is what conditions to impose on those who seek the boon of citizenship here. Immigration threatens American ideals we are told, and it does, unless we Christianize the immigrants and incorporate them into the fabric of our democratic social order. To argue however that America exists for Americans is to advertise our lack of faith in the foundation principles of democracy. America does not exist for Americans, but for all mankind. We must not only assent intellectually to this doctrine, but we must accept actually every obligation it imposes. We must make America serve the world and we must in particular make every brother and every sister from any place in the world seeking our citizenship fit for that high station.

The Kingdom of God too has certain standards of citizenship. The same limitation on the right to enjoy it which has characterized the immigration legislation of our Congress, has been expressed in the denominational fellowship tests of the Church. There have been erected tests of faith, tests of ordinance, tests of interpretation, tests of government. Not one of these tests is justifiable according to the constitution of the Kingdom. They violate that instrument and must sooner or later disappear. The idea that a church, local or denominational, is a body of people holding similar views and agreeable to each other, an idea that lies at the basis of the 183 sects of American Protestantism, is a mistaken notion. The Church ought to be composed of persons of all Christian views and should teach all classes and all men to live and work harmoniously together. Affinity of tastes, of views, of social standing ought not to be the occasion of cleavage in the body of Christ. All of man and all men are equally dear to Jesus. The Church is not a social club or a labor guild. It is a unitary representative of the Kingdom and as such it must not exclude any member of that Kingdom from its citizenship, its fellowship. The tests of Church membership therefore must be tests of citizenship in the Kingdom, broad and inclusive enough to exclude no one of its citizens.

The prophetic leaders of our Church saw this and with inspired accuracy wrote their naturalization clause in terms that can never die—"Vital piety, or Christian character," they said, "is the only proper test of fellowship or of Church membership." "By their fruits ye shall know them," taught a Greater than they, and His "inasmuch" and the Revelator's "whosoever" suggest the scope of and furnish the sanction for this enabling act, flinging wide open as it does the privilege and right of Kingdom-citizenship to all who do the will of God and exhibit the fruits of the Spirit in their daily life.

(e) INDIVIDUAL AND SOCIAL RIGHT

Government must guarantee the individual liberty and freedom and must safeguard the rights of society, that is, of the individuals governed in their relation to their fellow-citizens and to the organized life of the social order. We have already seen the exalted honor conferred on the individual Christian by the Christian Church in granting him the right of individual interpretation of the Constitution of the Kingdom, permitting him to understand the Bible as the Spirit may lead. This principle would produce chaos in the Kingdom but for the recognition of it as not only a "privilege" but also as a "duty", and not only as a duty "to be exercised by," but also "to be accorded to all." That word "all" is the dynamic of the social gospel. It is the balance wheel that restrains the individual in the interest of the brotherhood of the saints. When "all" search the Scriptures and become Spirit-led interpreters of the Kingdom's constitution and when "all" practice its teachings in accordance with the requirements of vital piety and Christian character, the purely academic dilemma of how can the individual liberty of conscience and the right of private judgment be reconciled with the social interests of the Kingdom will vanish in the spirit of Christian love and Brotherhood which clearly underlie the Kingdom in its inherit nature. In the Kingdom there will be a harmonious unity amid a charming diversity, wherein liberty of conscience and private judgment shall have properly fruited in purposeful difference, but wherein diversion because of genuine appreciation of and love for the brother who honestly differs is unthinkable—a Kingdom wherein all who name the name of Christ shall be one, even as He and His Father are one.

So we are brought back inevitably and properly in our study of the five cardinal principles of our Church to the great purpose the framers of those principles foresaw as the ultimate goal of the Kingdom—the union of all Christ's followers. The necessity for Christian Union is now conceded by many outstanding leaders in all the Churches. John R. Mott has said that denominationalism is the great organic sin of the Church today and that an unbelieving world is the price we pay for our sectarianism. Robert E. Speer has declared that the cooperative movement of our times is undefeatable. Peter Ainslie with an epitude all his own has challenged the Christian world with his query that will not down—"If not a United Church,—What?" And these prophets of the present time but speak the sentiment that stirs in the hearts of thousands upon thousands. We rejoice in this good day, but we honor the far-seeing prophets who in a far different day not only saw the necessity, but pointed the way, submitting a platform that, if universally adopted, would overnight bring all the followers of Jesus into that oneness for which He so yearningly besought His Father on the eve of His supreme sacrifice.

Naturally would men of such keen, discerning insight become the spiritual progenitors of leaders, yes, new lights if you please, in other realms of Christian statesmanship. It is even as should be expected. The Christians did become the new lights of the Kingdom in many lines. They were the first we have seen to sense the uncompromising necessity for Christian Union. They were also the first to found a religious newspaper and with such vitality did they launch it that to this day it is vigorous with enthusiasm in the propagation of Christian truth and a real and worthy Herald of Gospel Liberty. They were the first to recognize that equality of opportunity should be accorded woman. In the Church they welcomed her to the ministry. In education they were the first to accord her equal right to higher education. Oberlin granted women the right to higher education on limited terms a short while before Antioch first began her pioneer work in genuine co-education. It is significant that the Christians have never maintained an educational institution of any kind on any other than a co-educational basis. The first total abstinence society in the world was organized in July 1833 at Pleasant Hill Christian church in Alamance County, North Carolina, and now behold who follow in their train. The American public school system as exemplified in the State of Massachusetts, admittedly the original pattern for the nation, was created out of the great mind of that prince of educators, Horace Mann, a faithful, loyal servant of the Christ in the Church that wears His name. And this same Church that has never been great in numbers, because it has been too busy with the larger work of the Kingdom to look after its own interests, has supplied the leadership for the International and World Sunday School Associations in the persons of Marion Lawrance and W. C. Pearce, for Christian Endeavor in the person of Amos R. Wells, a graduate of and professor in Antioch College, for the Federal Council of Churches in the person of Charles S. Macfarland, nurtured during his youth in the home of a Christian minister, and for the Y. M. C. A. during the most trying period of its history, the World War, and at its most strategic post, Camp Upton, in the person of Hermon Eldredge. And it was this same Church that launched a Forward Movement totaling the largest per capita drive for funds for general Church purposes in Christian history—$50 per member over a period of five years for the whole Church and $50 per member in the Southern Christian Convention.

SLANG IN THE PULPIT

Garrett W. McQuiddy in The Christian Evangelist.

By the side of the poorly prepared sermon, I place the vulgar sermon as operating against the crowded pew. I cannot explain the man of God who puts the vulgar into his sermons. He is out of his place in the pulpit. The effect of vulgarity is to prostitute the pulpit, to cheapen its message, and to destroy reverence for the Lord's house, and the people's loss of reverence for the Lord's house is soon followed by their loss of longing for its sanctuary. The sermon of the pulpit needs to be clean and chaste, compelling the mind to think in terms of truth and righteousness, and commanding the heart to chain its passions and to release its virtues. The only sermon that is means to this end is the sermon that has Christ both at its center and circumference. In the material world the sun is supreme. Every planet borrows its light from this great luminary. So in the spiritual world the supremacy is in Jesus. Every pulpit must, therefore, borrow its light from him if it would light up the souls of the people with the verities and virtues of life. He is the magnet of the pulpit. Let the preacher present him to the people. He is not antiquated by reason of 20 centuries intervening between his hour and ours. His doctrine is not outworn. It is the mightiest truth in the universe today.

President Harding returned from his vacation in the White Mountains on Tuesday, July 9, and is declared to be unmistakably the better for the trip.

A CUT IN TAXES

By working his plans between the House and the Secretary of Treasury the President has given the country a tax relief approximating $555,000,000. This was a great deal larger cut than the House had planned, and still more than the country would have enjoyed according to the Secretary's proposal to pay the country's debt on current account. The report of this reduction in the year's taxes was made the other day by the Ways and Means Committee who are framing a new tax bill.

Among the principal changes in the measures of taxation were in the repeal of the excess profit taxes, retroactive to January 1, 1921, the increase of tax on net incomes of corporations from 10 to 15 per cent, and the striking out of all surtax brackets above 32 per cent. The provisions of the new bill strike out all transportation levies and transfer beverage duties to manufacturers, while there is provision for free building income, aimed to stimulate this industry which has been considerably slighted during the past few years.

"It is welcome news that the excess profit tax is to be repealed and the income surtaxes are to be reduced retroactively to the beginning of the current calendar year," says the New York Times. But it is disappointing that the halving of the transportation tax is to be postponed until next New Year and the repeal of the remainder until 1923. The increase in tax on corporations will be popular; and the country will welcome this relief of over a half million in taxes, but it should make up its mind that some of the bill now not provided for will be heard from again."

OUR LACK OF EDUCATION

Much of the social discontent of the present period is traced to our mania for vocational training, according to Dean Andrew Fleming West of the Graduate School of Princeton University. "To push vocational training to the extreme is to reduce the pupil to the condition of an animate tool. This tends to industrial and economic slavery and fosters discontent, both social and political, of all so trained," he says. "Remove this difference—give to all the chance to know about other things that the way to make a living—and you remove the basis of social discontent."

Dean West believes that the education of the average American youth is far from a praiseworthy standard yet, in spite of the fact that we spend more upon education than any other nation. We do this and get less for our money, he says, because we have "too many educational lunch counters." In other words "the elective system of study has grown out of all sensible proportion in schools and colleges, until too many of our young people are getting education by dabs."

American education is far from being as thorough as that of other countries of Europe such as Germany and England. "Not long ago we were shocked by Gen. Perishing's statement that one out of every four in the American war-time army 'could neither read nor write,'" says the Literary Digest, "while in the German army there was only one illiterate in 5,000." This lack of thoroughness, Dean West believes to be due to the less rigid standards of American school attendance and to the "appalling dearth of good teachers in all branches." He calls attention to the fact that while the natural supply of teachers of all kinds was annually from 16,000 to 18,000, reports from Washington say that there will be needed next September 120,000 new teachers. We need more and better teachers.

When the Dean was asked to outline the "all-round" education suitable for the average person, he replied:

"First, there should be made a selection of a few studies of the most general value for the whole of life. These few should be used as a basis for all general education. Secondly, these studies are to be pursued long enough so that each shall be fully developed and mastery of them assured. Thirdly, these studies are to be organized together to form a coherent body of education or things known, running parallel."

"After this foundation has been carefully laid elective studies in accordance with the ascertained attitude of a student for a special field may be wisely added to them, but not in accordance with immature caprice as is now the rule."

NEW CLIMATE FOR CANADA

A more amazing and at the same time practical feat of science could not be proposed than that of changing the climate of eastern Canada to that of the South. The proposed feat is nothing more than the building of a ten-mile dam between New Foundland and the Canadian main land, cutting off the cold Labrador current which has run through the strait to the southward. Scientists say that by building the dam the current which has made this part of Canada as well as New England experience cold winters for the centuries past, will be reverted to the northward, where it will have no effect upon the land of the western hemisphere.

Such a change in climate would produce a great change in the commerce and industries of this part of the world, possibly making eastern Canada one of the most ship-laden parts of the northern continent. The British Government is considering the project seriously also proposing to extend a railroad from the main land across the dam to St. Johns, New Foundland, facilitating the commerce of the two sections of the Empire.

The call for a world conference was sent out by President Harding August 11. The conference is to take place at Washington, D. C., on Armistice day, November 11, 1921. It is called for the purpose of a practical effort to banish the causes of war. The powers invited to attend are Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan and China.

WORLD HAPPENINGS

The Linney nomination was confirmed by the Senate August 10, 1921 by a vote of 31 to 17. Only half the members of the Senate were present when the action was taken. It is understood that both Senator Simmons and Senator Overman opposed the confirmation.

It is believed that the old Farmers Alliance is coming to life again in North Carolina and that it will supplant the present union. The old organization has already been revived at meeting in Raleigh and it goes on record as being strongly in favor of cooperative marketing.

It is learned that tobacco prices on the South Carolina markets, including towns and cities just over the border from North Carolina, are continuing to improve. Buyers claim that good tobacco is just as much in demand as ever and they are instructed to buy it. The market opens at Danville, Va., on September 20.

Naval officers are not so much in favor of this nation disarming further at present. They declare that this nation is already disarming her navy while other powers only talk about disarming. Japan is building the most powerful submarines in the world and Great Britain is building four of the greatest battleships she has ever constructed.

Germany hopes to regain in air what she has lost on land. A German technical commission is searching the southwest coast of Spain for a site suitable for zeppelin sheds to house the giant aircraft to be used in proposed Spanish-South American trade.

Civil service examinations were called at Washington August 9, 1921 to fill postmastership vacancies in 47 North Carolina postoffices. The civil service commission set September 10 as the date for the examinations. All offices are third class and the salaries range from $1,000 to $2,100 per year.

Governor Cameron Morrison has ordered two companies of national guard troops to take charge of the situation at Concord, N. C. The troops were ordered out early Sunday night, August 14, 1921, after a call for help from Sheriff Spears of Concord. The trouble has grown out of a mill strike which has been on there for some time.

The movement for a recess of Congress has received several set backs in the last week. The date had been set for August 20 but is changed now to August 24 or 25. The change is due to a probable delay in passing the Tax Bill.

THE BULLETIN

Drs. Staley and Rowland preached for the Raleigh congregation last Sunday, according to information from pastor J. V. Knight.

Brother W. P. Minton, our Foreign Mission Secretary, reports on another page the return of Missionary Martin, which the Brotherhood will regret to learn.

The revival at Haw River church will begin next Sunday. Dr. P. H. Fleming, pastor, will be assisted by his son, Rev. H. J. Fleming. The revival at Pleasant Hill, another of Dr. Fleming's churches will begin the first Sunday in September with Brother George D. Eastes doing the preaching.

Rev. George D. Eastes, Evangelist, writes that he is open for engagement three weeks, beginning September 11, before going to the middle western states. Any church, or group of churches in the Southern Convention, desiring his services should get in touch with him at a very early date. He has associated with him Mr. Frederick J. Balmoud. Those interested will please address Evangelist Eastes at Box 1362, Norfolk, Virginia.

For about fifteen years Brother Donald Melver has been the faithful pastor of the First Presbyterian church in this city. He has a host of warm friends in Burlington, and in North Carolina, outside of the Presbyterian Church. He is yet in the prime and vigor of manhood, and we congratulate the Presbyterian church at Bristol, Virginia, on securing the services of this scholarly, consecrated and industrious man of God, who will take up his work in the Old Dominion September 1.

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

AN IMPORTANT WORD ABOUT OUR PORTO RICAN WORK

Wilson P. Minton

According to present plans Dr. J. O. Atkinson and the Foreign Mission Secretary will sail for Porto Rico about the middle of September. They go at the request of the Foreign Mission Department of the American Christian Convention to make a first hand study of our work there and with a view to ascertaining just how the mission of the Christian Church can best serve the field in the future.

Rev. W. H. Martin, who was compelled to come home on account of the illness of Mrs. Martin, will accompany the brethren on this trip; but it will not be possible for him to remain in the work there. Mrs. Martin improves very, very slowly and the attending physician states that it is entirely out of the question for her to think of returning to Porto Rico. This news will be received with great regret throughout the Brotherhood, for we had come to watch with interest for the news of the ever enlarging work Brother Martin had so rapidly launched. But the keenest of all disappointments is that of the Martins themselves. They loved the work and wanted so much to give their lives to it. Even in the face of her serious physical handicap Mrs. Martin has expressed her willingness to return, but of course this could not be thought of under the circumstances.

While Brother Martin was in Porto Rico only about fifteen months (he remained there eight months after Mrs. Martin came home) he had accomplished much more than could reasonably have been expected. He is a thorough student and in a remarkably short time had learned to converse in the Spanish language and had even begun to preach a little in Spanish before he was compelled to come home. His views of real Christian service and his devotion to his work enabled him to make his presence strongly felt not only in his local field of Santa Isabel, but in the larger Christian movements on the island. Through all the difficulties he has had to meet, his faith has never wavered, and he has gone on with the prayer that God might still make it possible for him and his family to continue in the work that had gotten such a grip upon their hearts. Now that this seems impossible he has turned his face to work in this country again, with the same faith that God may have for him as important a work to do here, in stirring the Church to larger missionary activity and perhaps, in the discovery of someone who can take his place in Santa Isabel. It is likely that he will accept the pastorate of some church about November first. We bespeak for him and his devoted family the prayers of the brotherhood as he continues his Christian work wherever God may lead. The Santa Isabel field is now in charge of Rev. Ojeda, a well trained native pastor whom we have recently added to our force.

The report of the work in Porto Rico will be made at the annual Mission Board meeting in October, and while we cannot now foretell just what that will be, we do wish to call the attention of our people to the great need for more trained workers in both our mission fields. We are now face to face with the greatest opportunity for advance work in the history of our missionary activity, and the Church should give herself to earnest prayer that we may speedily find properly trained workers to go to the aid of those already at the task. Surely there are such workers now ready upon whom God will lay His hand if we pray and believe.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

LUCY M. ELDRIDGE—FIELD SECRETARY
Burlington, N. C.

The Board of Religious Education plans to issue this year an attractive handbook, containing the minutes of the recent sessions of our three Conventions, those of Eastern Virginia, of the Valley of Virginia and of North Carolina, together with tabulated reports from the various Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies represented in these Conventions. This book will be issued at the earliest date possible. Much of the material is already in the hands of the printers. Copies of the handbook will be sent to each Sunday school of the Southern Christian Convention.

The report of the Sunday schools of the North Carolina Convention shows fifty-three Sunday schools reporting this year, with a total enrollment of 6,463, including 256 officers, 306 teachers, 5,459 scholars, 296 Cradle Roll babies and 146 members of the Home Department. The average attendance of all the fifty-three Sunday schools is found to be 65, while 43% of the church membership is seen to be represented in the enrollment of the schools. These fifty-three Sunday schools have raised for all purposes a total of $10,502.59, of which $2,005.31 is for missions and $3,255.60 for the Christian Orphanage, or more than half of the total raised for "others".

Such reports as the above are a very valuable part of our work. They record our progress, and show us our needs. One need shown in most of our reports this year is for more activity along the line of teacher training. In his splendid book "How to Conduct a Sunday School" that great Sunday school leader, Marion Lawrance says: "Since the Sunday school is a teaching service, the teachers should be competent and specially trained for their work, such as one of the teacher training courses now so numerous and comprehensive. In some schools no teachers are selected except those who hold diplomas indicating that they have completed such a course. This is far in advance of the average school no doubt, but is an ideal worth aiming at. Horace Mann, the great educator, said on one occasion, "The only way to get good teachers is to make them." He referred to public-school teachers, but it is equally true of Sunday school teachers. There should be, therefore, in continuous operation in every Sunday school a vigorous training class where young people may be trained under competent leadership for the important office of teaching."

All great Sunday school leaders stress the need for and the value of teacher training. Every Sunday school at some time or other feels the need of it. Truly it is a part of our work which we cannot afford to neglect.

The fifty-three Sunday schools of the North Carolina Conference report but two such classes, with a total membership of sixteen. We hope there are many more. At the Eastern Virginia Convention, when the question was asked on the Convention floor, how many delegates came from Sunday schools with a teacher training class, it was shown that there was but one. Prospects are brighter though, for ten pastors and delegates promised to go back to their schools and be responsible for the organization of such a class. May many more see the need and assume the responsibility for this great work.

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Our financial report keeps climbing and we passed the $14,000 mark this week. We are happy to do this and hope our Sunday schools and friends will continue to remember us kindly and make their contributions liberal so we can do a larger work in this line of our Church work.

A number of our Sunday schools have joined our monthly contributors in the last two weeks and it is our earnest desire that all will join in within the next few weeks. "Every Sunday School on the Roll This Year" is our slogan.

Five beautiful little children have come to us in the last week. Bright little fellows. We are happy to give them a home.

We are putting the furniture in the "Baby Home" now and hope to get it open for the little children in the next ten days. We need sheets, pillow cases, quilts, blankets, and counterpanes. WE USE THE THREE QUARTER BEDS AND WILL USE BED LINEN THE SAME SIZE AS WE USE NO DOUBLE BEDS. LET THE SHEETS, QUILTS AND COUNTERPANES, BE SEVEN FEET LONG, or as near that length as possible.

The writer had a very pleasant trip to Ingram church, Va., and attended Children's Day exercises there on the fourth of August. We have attended many Children's Day exercises but we are frank to say the children at Ingram church rendered one of the sweetest and most touching programs we have ever witnessed anywhere.

The Singing Class attended the Masonic Annual Picnic at Baynes' store in Caswell County on August 4, and rendered a program for the occasion. They report a splendid time and enjoyed the kind hospitality they were accorded there. This has been an annual trip for the past six years that our children look forward to with a great deal of delight.

Familiar words are always the most forceful. Deep matters are "explained" simply by substituting common every day terms for unusual or technical expressions. For instance, when you explain the law of gravitation by saying that a thing falls because it is heavy, you have not "explained" anything at all, but you have made a clear impression on the hearer's mind by using the words with which he is familiar. Besides, familiar words give your writing an air of sincerity and of frankness. They give your reader the idea that you have thought long on the subject, and it is no more strange to you. For the clearest words to us are those we are most used to; and when we hear them they sound like truth, whether they are or not.

CHURCH NEWS

UNION (ALAMANCE)

The protracted meeting at Union, Alamance, began on the fourth Sunday in July and continued till Friday afternoon, July 29.

Evangelist Rev. Geo. D. Eastes was with us and preached to good acceptance. His sermons were strong and forceful with apt and telling illustrations here and there. He is an interesting speaker and a hard worker.

Mrs. Eastes presided at the piano and rendered valuable service in the meeting. I do not know when I have heard better singing than that made by the choir and the large audience which assembled from day to day during the meeting. The audiences from the beginning of the meeting till its close were large, prompt and attentive.

The visible results as gathered thus far, are twenty-five professions, three restorations, twenty-three additions to the church, twenty baptized with others to be baptized at my next appointment, and the church revived and greatly encouraged.

There are large opportunities and great responsibilities connected with this pastorate. I know of no community where so many young people gather. God help pastor and people to measure up to the call of the hour.

P. H. FLEMING.

LIGHTBOURNE-DAVIS MEETING

The Lightbourne-Davis evangelistic meeting at Fuquay Springs and Pleasant Union have, from outward appearance, proved a success. Large crowds attended the meeting at both places and the people en masse were pleased with Bro. Lightbourne's strong, beautiful, and forceful sermons and with Bro. Davis' excellent performance at the piano.

The meetings were characterized by a policy of brotherly union and good will to all. The most striking thing seemed to be a wave of earnestness and a desire for a better life set in motion.

Large numbers came forward in response to the call to reconsecration. A large number also came as reclaimations, while 55 or 60 confessed Jesus as Lord. Special mention might be made of several cases of hardened old sinners being broken down, by the persuasive preaching of the gospel, and made to surrender to Christ. One man of years standing as a very hard case became so convicted in the first meeting that he followed on to the next meeting and confessed Jesus as Lord. Another who had become so hardened that he had almost ceased to be present at church, became so convicted that he could not rest in his home, came back and surrendered.

Brother Lightbourne made such an impression that the town of Lillington and the town of Coats are both trying to secure him for future meetings. I would estimate the crowd at the last service at the country church at 2000.

May the Lord richly reward them in their future work by giving them many souls for their labors.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

ANNUAL MEETING AT INGRAM

The week following the second Sunday in July we held the annual meeting at Ingram. It began on the second Sunday morning and closed Friday night following. There were several reconsecrations, and the church as a whole seemed much revived. There were two professions made and one addition to the church as a result of the meeting. This might seem somewhat small to some when there are other meetings being held where there are a large number being added to the church. But in view of the fact that there are only a few non-professing Christians in the community it was a great meeting. The church responded readily to each request and seemed to get a blessing from so doing. We have a faithful little band at Ingram.

Bro. J. G. Truitt conducted the meeting for us. He had the whole responsibility as pastor and evangelist, since I as pastor, was sick and unable to attend but four of the services. Bro. Truitt could and did do that all right though, as he was former pastor and knew the people even better than

I. He was greeted with a hearty welcome back into the community by all denominations, as well as the church to which he preached.

Another great occasion was held at Ingram on the fourth of August when the day was given entirely to the children. It was a little later in the season than is the custom of having the children's day there. But owing to the fact that whooping-cough was raging in the community it was postponed.

The morning was given to the exercises by the children. A large number took a part, both boys and girls. The children did a credit to themselves, to the school to which they belong, and the community as a whole. Many expressed their opinion of it as being the best and most touching program ever rendered on an occasion like that.

After the program by the children, Bro. C. D. Johnston, the Superintendent of our Orphanage, gave us an address on the institution of which he is the head. Bro. Johnston in his talk told us that it was our work there, they were, and are, our children as well as these of the community. By the inspiring speech that Bro. Johnston gave, each of us was made to feel more responsible for the Orphanage. This was shown by a very liberal offering made after his address. The exercises of the children and the entire program of the day was under the supervision of Misses Mary Kent, Pattie Adams, and Mrs. R. L. Ingram. The Sunday school and community as a whole are very grateful to them for their service, and the excellent program of the day.

A good dinner was served on the ground—one which everybody seemed to enjoy. In the afternoon all were given a chance to devote the entire time to social events. Cream was sold for the benefit of helping to raise the amount allotted to the Young People's Society.

Our work is progressing very nicely in both the Sunday school and church. It is a real pleasure to work with a band of soldiers like these.

JOSEPH E. McCAULEY, Pastor

SOLEMN VOWS

DRIVER-LOHR

On July 31, 1921 the home of Mr. and Mrs. James Bradferd near Tenth Legion was the scene of a pretty home wedding. The contracting parties were Mr. John R. Driver and Miss Lois Ella Lohr. The groom is a son of Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Driver, living in the community, and is a successful farmer. The bride is a native of Madison County, Va., but has been teaching school in the community for several years. A few intimate friends and relatives of the bride and groom were present. An excellent dinner was served. After the ceremony the happy couple left by automobile for a honey-moon trip to Washington and other places of interest. Both are prominent young people, and will doubtless make their mark in the world.

GILKERSON

John Henry Gilkerson was born May 5, 1847, and died July 29, 1921. His age was 74 years, 2 months, and 24 days. He is survived by two daughters, and one son. Brother Gilkerson united with the Linville Christian church several years ago. For some time prior to his death he endured much affliction, but expressed himself as ready to meet his God. Funeral services were held at Linville, Sunday, July 31, 1921, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Samuel Garber of the Church of the Brethren.

NICHOLSON

Mrs. Nellie Jane Nicholson was born July 27, 1891, and departed this life July 15, 1921, making her age therefore, 29 years, 11 months, and 18 days. She is survived by her husband, Frank H. Nicholson, and a daughter five years old. Surviving also are her father, four sisters, and one brother. It is sad to see one taken so early in life, especially when a little daughter is left who will so much need the care and guidance of a mother. Funeral services were conducted July 16 at Joppa in Powell's Fort, of which church she was a member as is her broken-hearted husband also. May God care for the bereaved.

GARVIN

Mahlon Garvin was born December 11, 1838, and died at his home near Timber Ridge church, July 17, 1921, at the age of 82 years, 7 months, and 6 days. Brother Garvin united with the Timber Ridge Christian church at 18 years of age, and was a faithful member during the remaining sixty-four years of his life. For many years prior to his death he filled the office of deacon. He enjoyed the friendship and esteem of a large circle of acquaintances. A good man has gone from earthly labors to his heavenly home. He leaves three sons and two daughters to mourn his departure. Funeral services were held at Timber Ridge, July 19, 1921, and the body laid to rest by the side of that of his wife who died September 6, 1897. A large congregation gathered to pay a tribute of respect to this good brother.

FINANCIAL DEPRESSION AND THE WAY THROUGH

(J. W. Bailey in Charity and Children.)

Last January I wrote for the Biblical Recorder some "Thoughts on the Financial Depression." Amongst other things I said then that we should get over it. This was questioned then. It is plain enough now. The depression bids fair to stretch out through many mouths, and many a business now staggering and struggling must go down. Many an individual must take his losses and start over again. Money will not be easily borrowed for at least eighteen months, if so soon. It will, however, within that time become somewhat easier to make and save. When thrifty people have made and saved enough it will become easier to borrow. Then thousands will begin again to borrow, buy and sell, and splurge; and we shall have "prosperity." But the money must first be made and saved. Remember that. There is no other way to replenish the supply; no other way to make credit easier.

I come now to write a few suggestions on the way through the depression.

In the first place rest assured that there is a way through the wilderness and the night. Just as there were thousands who a year ago thought prosperity would last forever, there are now thousands who think that the depression is here to stay. There is no way to think—it is not thinking. Be of good cheer. You may not see it, but there is an end of the depression, and a way through to the end. Consider the past—the ebb and flow of prosperity and depression. The pendulum of a clock never stays to one side.

The first step on the way is to hold on to your one indispensable asset—your character. Your money may go; it may be recovered later on. The same energies that made it may yet make more. Your lands may go. Other lands may be bought. But if you lose your character—it is lost, and all is lost. You cannot start again without character. Some men are now seeking out lawyers to show them how to avoid their debts. Wise lawyers will tell them that character is property—and more than property. That a good character is itself the basis of fortune. That if they preserve their characters they may lose their money and live to make more. But if they repudiate their obligations and dodge their debts, they lose their characters, and with them their only chance to get started again. And if you are too old—remember the inheritance due to your children—a good name, more to be desired than great riches.

I will tell the story of an editor of the Biblical Recorder (not myself) that has never been told. He was induced to become director of a bank. In order to qualify as a director he bought ten shares of its stock—giving his note for it. He had little or no property. In ten days the bank broke—the cashier and president fled to Canada. There were four others who had bought stock and qualified as directors the same time he did. It was announced that these five new directors would resist payment of their notes on the ground that they had been fraudulently induced to buy this stock—that the bank's officers knew it was broke when they sold the stock. They undoubtedly had a reasonably good legal defense. The editor of the Biblical Recorder announced that he would be party to no such action—that he had signed the note and would pay it. The next day he found a note on his desk from the late Judge Reade—president of another bank. The note read—"You can get $5,000.00 any day on demand on your plain note." The editor of the Recorder asked Judge Reade why he made the offer. He answered—"Because you are an honest man, and have proved it. You need no security. If you need money, honest men ought to let you have it." From that day the editor of the Biblical Recorder never lacked for credit. In time of panic and depression he let go his property but preserved his character. With his character to bank on, he began anew late in life and made a good estate.

Again, one who must go through this depression ought to lay fresh hold upon God. Earthly props are falling—well, that is the earthly way. There is nothing sure but God; and He is sure. As the visible things which are temporal take wings and fly away, get a fresh hold upon the "unseen things which are eternal." God is where He always has been. He is the same in the lean years as He is in the fat years. If there have been changes in your relations to God they have been on your part, not on His. You used to count your fortune, count now His mercies. Praise right now and count them over. You are not so poor. You used to lean on your estate, now lean on Him. Your trust has been in riches, invest it now in Him. There is more joy, more satisfaction, more life in a well-established faith in God than there is in all the land and money. Jesus showed the world how to get along without property; and Paul proved that Jesus was not setting up an ideal that a mere man could not follow. Very probably a man cannot say that he has learned how to live until he has learned how to be content and confident without property. Independence of property is essential to religion.

And again, work and save. There is much to be done. There are no big opportunities in sight; but they will come again—to the faithful. Your working and saving will tend to pile up the general surplus out of which business will be restored. It can be restored by no other means. Government subsidies will not suffice. Only labor creates wealth. Remember that. The tenant farmer who makes a crop this year on short rations and small labor cost will have a living and a small profit. That profit may be applied on last year's unpaid debt. (If so, let the creditor be generous and considerate.) This done he makes profit next year—on short rations and low cost; and has at the end of the year a living and a small profit. If he puts this in the bank and thousands do likewise, the bank's deposits will increase and the power to extend credit will be restored. Interest rates will come down. Loans will increase in value. Improvements will start up. This is the only business way out. The money consumed by the war and by folly must be made, must be saved, and must be banked. It cannot be borrowed until it has been made and saved. Your little will count. Your luxuries must go. Automobiles will do more to keep the depression with us than anything that I know of. If you have not told the car good by, tell it now. It stands between you and—prosperity.

And, finally, we ought to make a drive against the mad-men who are plunging our government into debt. United States, state, county, township and town bonds mean taxation; and taxation is burden. The burden is already so great that business is staggering under it. Every dollar borrowed and spent,—notwithstanding bonds are so easily issued must be accounted for. Loans to governments stand in the way of loans to individuals. Bonds are a charge on business, an obstacle to the return of prosperity, a brake on the wheel. We ought to demand that the tax burden be lightened at every point. We are cutting out the luxuries in our homes—let us also demand that they be also cut out in nation, state, county, township and town. Luxurious public salaries ought to go too.

The depression of 1894 lasted until 1899. The writer struggled (as editor of the Recorder) every hour of the way. This one will last longer that that for some people—for those who will not meet it along the lines I have suggested it will last seven years. But for those who will so meet it I could almost promise that daylight will appear through the woods by morning, and the worst be over by Christmas. They will be well on the way out next year this time.

If you are depressed, get down your Bible; ponder over some Psalm or the sermon on the mount; pray quietly; put your trust in God; resolve to face your situation with faith in Him; go to sleep, in the morning the outlook will be brighter, the way clearer, and your heart will not be bowed down with burdens greater than it can bear. Maybe you will find another in the yoke with you when the hill gets steeper. Said the ancient prophet—"In quietness and confidence shall be my strength."

CO-OPERATION is about to become the watchword of this age. The word has a sound and a meaning that invites approval. But good things may become bad when the extreme is reached. It is well that we distinguish co-operation from individual initiative. All great movements start with individuals and not with co-operative bodies; they carry on that which was born in the mind of the individual. An individual—Robert Raikes—founded the Sunday school; Florence Nightengale started the Red Cross, the world's greatest mother; George Williams founded the Young Men's Christian Association, and it has helped to hold up the morals of millions of young men; the Dowager-Lady Kincaid set to work the organization of the Young Women's Christian Association, which has mothered many million homeless girls and protected them from the world's snares. All great religious movements hold up some person as founder.

Co-operation must not overshadow the individual. The individual must not become to think that he is helpless without being joined by a group. The world is now, as never before, in need of individual impulse. Men collectively will set sail to individual ideas. The day of the hero, the martyr, and the man who can say that which may be heard around the world, is still here.

No More of Their Kind

THE other day when Caruso, the noted singer, passed away no few papers said that he had no superior and no successor. To these statements we agree.

If Caruso has no successor, then it devolves upon the public to ask why and and to find out why. Caruso was the king of the golden realm of singers. Is there to be no other king for this golden realm?

The day of art for the sake of art is no more. The great brush artists painted the pictures that grace a million walls without the hope of reward. They saw—they felt, but they could not tell what they saw and felt, so they expressed it with brush and generations have gazed upon these great pieces of art with amazement.

From appearances, no paper, magazine or book is complete without a touch of some sublime verse of centuries ago. The old hymns never grow dull to us; with each singing they bring a message that is refreshing and the heart responds to them as it does to no other songs. These old hymns have in them the spirit of devotion and worship. The new hymns have military enthusiasm, and seem to call us to action, but not to a spirit of worship.

No Burns, no Longfellow, no Whittier, and no Riley. Why? No Moody, no Sankey, and in fact no great preacher to set the world to thinking. Why?

Some Correspondence and Comment

ON JUNE 29 of this good year, Rev. J. H. Garrison, D. D., Editor Emeritus of The Christian Evangelist, 163 N. Alexandria Avenue, Los Angeles, California. (The Christian Evangelist is printed in St. Louis, Mo., and Dr. B. A. Abbott is Editor-in-Chief) wrote THE SUN's Editor as follows:

“Dear Brother Riddle:

“By your grace, or somebody else's, I am receiving THE CHRISTIAN SUN out here at my home on the coast each week, and admire its spirit and aim. I hope you are receiving The Christian Evangelist, with which I have been associated editorially for more than a half century. It represents, as you know, the people most generally known as Disciples of Christ, because He alone is our Creed; but we are sometimes designated by the same name as your people wear. Of course, it is not right for either body to designate themselves as the Christian Church, thereby implying that we alone are Christians. On the other hand, we do not want to take a sectarian name, but one that all may wear. I think we are justified in calling our congregations ‘Churches of Christ’ or ‘Christian Churches,’ and other Christians have the same right, if they wish to exercise it.

“But I started to write this letter, to ask to state what, in your judgment, constitute the vital difference, if any, between the religious bodies we respectively represent, and whether you think it possible, under the urgency of Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers (John XVII; 20, 21) for them to merge their minor differences in their common faith in our divine Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, and to so love one another because we all love Him, as to work together as members of His body.

“Very fraternally your brother in Christ,

“J. H. GARRISON.”

Since Brother Garrison wrote the above letter the following paragraphs have appeared in The Christian Evangelist in the “Easy Chair” page of which Dr. Garrison is the contributor:

For several months the “Easy Chair” has been receiving THE CHRISTIAN SUN of Burlington, N. C., through the courtesy of its editor, Rev. C. B. Riddle, who gives as his reason for this extra courtesy the fact that he has been for many years a reader and admirer of the “Editor's Easy Chair.” Of course, this would naturally incline us to have a good opinion of his orthodoxy and literary taste, aside from the many fine things THE SUN is saying and the excellent Christian spirit it is manifesting! It is “the official organ of the Southern Christian Convention” and is “devoted to the interest of the kingdom of God as represented by the Christian Church.” By the name “Christian Church” is meant the body of people we sometimes speak of as “The Christian Connection,” thus using the name “Christian Church” in the same limited and denominational sense, that many of our writers and speakers do, in designating our own movement. The use of religious names is rather an embarrassing question. On the one hand we ought not, and by our very principles cannot be forced to adopt a sectarian name, that is, one which all Christ's followers cannot in all good conscience wear. On the other hand we do not wish to sectarianize a common Christian designation, or assume, or even seem to assume that we are the only people fit to wear it. What, then, shall we do? Perhaps in the present divided condition of the church, we can do no better than to use undenominational names in the least objectionable way, all the while making it plain that we claim no monopoly of such names, but are praying for the day when all who own Christ as Lord may be content to wear them. Meanwhile let us not forget that there is something far more vital than the name we wear.

But we were speaking of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. We notice that it carries at its mast this statement of the “Cardinal Principles of the Christian Church.”

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only head of the Church.

2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.

3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship and of Church membership.

5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Observing this statement of principles we wrote the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Brother C. B. Riddle, to kindly state what, in his judgment, were the chief differences between the position of the "Christian Church" and that of the people most generally known as "Disciples of Christ," their local congregations being designated as Churches of Christ, or Christian Churches, and what, in his opinion, was the possibility of merging or uniting the two now separate movements into one. We have a courteous reply from the editor saying he was extremely busy at the present time, but would soon give attention to our request in his paper. We are sure our readers will be interested in reading his reply.

We have mailed Brother Garrison a copy of the Government and Principles of the Christian Church and will ask that, after reading, he tell his readers the vital difference, as he sees it, between the two branches of worshippers. We do not have at hand a copy of the Principles of the Disciples. The matter of baptism is, as we see it, the main separation now. The Christian Church will baptize by immersion or sprinkling, while the Disciples adhere closely to immersion.

Union between the two bodies can come only when they are willing to acquaint themselves for the Kingdom's progress and not for denominational discussions.

Here are three questions that we desire Brother Garrison to answer: 1. What caused the Disciples to drop the name—Disciples—and take up the name "Christian," in connection with their local church? 2. When did this happen? 3. Why is it that so many Disciples are not, seemingly, supporting one of their number, Dr. Peter Ainslie, in his Christian union efforts, though the Disciples have union as a main plank in their platform? (We get this from articles that have appeared in The Christian Evangelist).

It is time for sectarianism, bigotry, and monopoly to take a back seat. The Christian Church is favorable to united effort toward the progress of Christ's Kingdom, and we are sure that readers of THE SUN will be glad to read Dr. Garrison's discussion of the above questions, as they rally around the points discussed by so many of our people.

EDITORIAL BRIEFS

The following news article from Reidsville, N. C., appeared in the News and Observer under date of August 21: "Rev. W. L. Wells recently tendered his resignation as pastor of the Montgomery Street Christian church. The congregation and church officials met and decided to ask Rev. Mr. Wells to withdraw his resignation and continue his pastorate. He now has the request under consideration and will probably decide within the next week or ten days whether he will remain as pastor. Rev. Mr. Wells has been pastor of this church for four years and during that time a deficit or debt of $3,500 on the church has been reduced to less than $500, and the membership has increased by 75 or more. He is a very popular citizen and his many friends in and out of the church are hoping he will decide to remain in this field."

Bro. I. A. Luke, Holland, Va., is the president of the Nansemond County Sunday School Association. The annual Convention is to be held Sunday, August 31 at Providence M. E. church. The copy of the program which we have received is forward looking.

Rev. D. T. McKinney, Lillington, N. C., a licentiate of the North Carolina Conference, is open for church work for the coming year and is offering his services to any church or group of churches.

The Editor attended the Virginia Valley Central Conference last week and returned to the office Monday morning. A good Conference is reported and a full write up will appear next week.

In last week's issue of THE SUN we announced that the third editorial would appear on the ministerial situation. This will appear next week, space not permitting this week.

Rev. J. L. Foster, Waverly, Va., after nine years in the Waverly pastorate, will retire from that field November 1, and is now open to consider any other church or churches.

Have you made that decision about sending that son or daughter to Elon? The 1921-22 session opens September 7. Elon is our College and richly deserves our support.

The Statistical Bulletin of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company claims that the death rate among college women is much lower than among women who do not attend college.

Columbia University is to have a Biblical course. In the recent summer session there much more interest was shown in religious education and the coming academic year will see a broadening of religious teaching at the university. There will be provided a course in Old Testament history and literature, which is to be the forerunner of a wide range of instruction in the Biblical field.

CONTRIBUTIONS

I have not recited these instances of achievement in any spirit of boastfulness or pride, though if any Church has occasion to boast we do and if any Church can rightfully exhibit pride, we can. I have recited these household facts of common knowledge in our Brotherhood that we may feel with all the greater weight the tremendous responsibility that rests upon us in the days ahead. Our fathers were not afraid to look forward. They considered the Kingdom to be a growing, advancing, developing institution. They dreaded not to be styled visionaries, impractical idealists, new lights. Their delight was to see visions and to dream dreams. But they did not rest their case in seeing and dreaming. They proclaimed the things they had discerned in the secret place from the housetops. All honor to their indomitable spirit of progress. In grateful memory we their lineal descendants in the spiritual line will ever enshrine them. But we will if we stop with that but prove ourselves unworthy of our illustrious pedigree. Pedigree that ends in the offspring is worse than personal failure—it is dishonoring to the pedigree. What is sadder than the puny, imbecile son of a great father! These mighty Christian warriors wrought well in their day, but they look to us to complete their work. They look to us to be the prophets of our day as they were in theirs. They look to us to discern the signs of the times and to interpret the gospel to the men and women of our day in the language they can understand. It is the same gospel, but the people are not the same. Enlarged conceptions of life have come and the gospel needs reinterpretation in terms of those enlarged conceptions. I challenge the men and women of the Christian Church to pioneer the way in these latter days, even as our forefathers did in the days of their sojourn here, and to speak the message for which men's hearts yearn in these times.

It would be presumptuous in me to undertake to speak that message, yet it is entirely proper for us to consider together a few at least of the chords that must enter into the symphony of its harmonious oratorio. We will do this briefly and humbly, praying the Father that He may raise up the prophet in our midst speedily who will utter for Him the message so needful at this crisis hour in Christian and world history. It is the duty of our Church in this day to keep the Christians first in prophesying the idealism of the Kingdom and in providing leaders for its practical working out. Let no man of us shirk in an hour like this and let no man be afraid to follow the Spirit's leadership.

I SALVATION

The conception of salvation is certainly in need of enlargement. The historic, traditional view is that it is a purely personal matter and concerned primarily with a future state. Salvation is personal and it does bear upon the preservation of the soul in the life to come. But this is not its entire content.

Salvation is for this world too. If the Christian religion can not add to the value of this present life, it is sadly deficient in its ministry. This world is no “vale of tears.” It is God's world, the best He could make it, and He pronounced it good. Religion is other-worldliness, but it is of this world too. Even should there be no future state, the salvation of the Christian faith with its splendid idealism would be unqualifiedly worth while for the present life. What the green pastures and the still waters were to the sheep of Palestine, that the salvation of the Christian religion is to the sincere adherent of the faith in this present life.

And likewise salvation of the Christian type is more than personal. Its fundamental concept is brotherhood, and its fundamental obligation is sharing the good we have with others. Of necessity therefore it is social. We are our brother's keeper, we are members one of another, we must out of respect to the organic Christian principle of life, bear one another's burdens. There is no selfishness in Christian salvation, and so there can be no self-salvation alone. We must be saved together, or we will all likewise perish. The Christian faith would die of inaction, were its missionary impulse to cease. The sweetest satisfaction of the Christian life is to lead some one else to experience the joys of the salvation which has enriched our own heart.

But it is more even than this. The salvation of the social order, of the institutions that minister to men in all the relations of their life, is also essentially a part of the Kingdom's program of world-redemption. Religion has a message for the press, for industry, for labor unions, for the social life, for the theatre and other forms of amusement, for political parties, for the nations. There is no organization or institution wherein its voice may not properly be heard with saving influence. The environment of life tends tremendously to uplift or to pull down character. We must make the social order Christian or it will paganize us. This Christianizing of the social order is no idle dream; it is a grim necessity and the Kingdom can never come till it is accomplished. Such is the concept of salvation adequate for the times.

II SERVICE

The conception of service too needs enlargement. For the most part our efforts are now consumed in keeping the intricate, complicated, duplicating machinery of the Church alive. Our Christian activity is keeping us from real Christian service. We have fallen into the habit of referring to singing, praying, testifying, and attendance on religious worship as divine services. We must rise to the point where we will look upon all service as divine. Life in all its aspects is the field of divine ministry. Service to the body is as assuredly Christian service as is a prayer meeting. It was for the time being more so for the good Samaritan in his ministry to the wounded Jew. Preachers on their way to the pulpit and deacons to the pew may well consider whether they might not invest that hour to better advantage by visiting some known or suspected den of vice or in seeking to lead the "rubber necks," as we derisively call them, of the street corners to a new ideal of life. Attendance on Church worship may make us worse men than we are, if we go merely for the satisfaction the service brings us and do not pass its benediction on to some one else. We think we have completed the circle of Christian duty when we have worshipped in the sanctuary. The success of the minister is rated by his drawing power. His real success is seen in his propelling power. When the pews in Wichita, Kansas, began to exhibit a falling off in men it was a thing to rejoice over. The churches there were functioning. Their men in deputations of four each to the number of 68 such teams were carrying the gospel to outlying rural and neglected city districts.

Our service too is to be life-wide in scope and constructive in purpose. We must minister to all life or see that it is ministered to. This will require three things—cooperation with agencies already on the field infusing them with the spirit of Christian idealism, the coordination of duplicating agencies in the Church itself so as to provide time and personnel for the increasing obligations, and the creation of additional agencies in the Church to foster and promote lines of service not now contemplated. The Church of the future will recognize her obligation to the social and recreational aspects of life as well as to the mental, moral, and spiritual. Wherever her sons and daughters go, she too will go, not in a concessionary spirit, but because it is right for her to minister to all their life.

And her entrance into service of whatever character will be constructive. It is well to amputate a blood-poisoned limb. Indeed such amputation is essential, but the good surgeon also administers medicines to purify the blood of his patient. So is the disease eradicated. Just cleaning up life is inadequate. The Church has the divine commission to condemn evil in every place and form, but only on condition that she puts good in the place of evil. The process is described in the Bible as overcoming evil with good, and this is the only way to do it. We must cease our mere scolding and meet the impulse to action in men with a constructive, positive program of things to take the place of the evils we aim to eliminate from life. The method of moral and spiritual growth is not through inaction and abstention, but through activity and indulgence in wholesome, helpful pursuits. The Church must recognize this and provide for it in her program of service.

III SACRIFICE

"What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God?" queried the prophet Micah. This was a splendid standard for that day. It marks the acme of Hebrew prophecy. But is this enough? Then why did Jesus come? And why that tragic enactment of Calvary? Micah's prescription was not enough. "To do justly"—an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth—this is the law, and is a great advance over a head for an eye or a life for a tooth. The law is not ample, we must do more than seek justice and pursue it. The clamor for rights and justice produced the World War. Justice is the basic principle of life—but only the foundation. It is not its superstructure and cannot be.

"To love mercy",—this is a great advance step over "to do justly." According to this view we are to make of our lives the most magnificent successes possible, accumulate all we can, and then be merciful to the unfortunate and the down-and-out. Nations according to this view would be justified in erecting barriers against the commerce of other nations and to use every means possible to build themselves up, and then to say to the rest of mankind "we are sorry for your weakness and we are glad to give you of our bounty. We cannot join your League of Nations, but we will contribute of our own abundance to your necessities, as occasion may arise. Wars will come. We will prepare for them. We shall be able to defend ourselves. So must you. Nations exist to get all the advantages possible for their own citizens. They are not responsible for other nations, except to be merciful to them if they can afford it." The prophet Micah's teaching permitted such a view. For we must not forget that the most narrow nationalists in history were the Jews to whom Micah spoke this word. They were arrogant, intolerant, clannishly selfish. Yet they loved mercy. The American people can certainly profit by their blunder. Nations and individuals must do more than "love mercy".

"To walk humbly with thy God"—certainly all of us need to recognize God and acknowledge His supreme place in our lives. But religion is more than worshipping God. It has human relationships too, and these relationships are not satisfied in doing justice and loving mercy. Humility before God is good, but it took the life and teaching of Jesus to reveal the complete excellency of the Christian way. He taught that love in sacrifice is the true test of discipleship. He made it plain to the lawyer who questioned Him that to love God with all the mind, soul and strength and to love one's neighbor as one's self is not enough. He said that doing these things would put us not far from the Kingdom. To put us actually in the Kingdom, He taught we must love one another as He loved His disciples, even to the point of giving our lives for our brotherman. Loving sacrifice that is the way—not sacrifice alone, because we might give our bodies to be burned and yet not satisfy the requirements of Christian brotherhood. There must be love and willingness to sacrifice. Let us never forget it.

It is sacrifice that brings us into fellowship with Him, sacrifice that takes its origin in love for Him and brotherman. The Church must love men and be ready to sacrifice herself for their salvation, and we as individual Christians must exemplify the same sacrificial love in our personal lives. So must the nations with reference to each other. We will bless the world and save and serve it not in the success we achieve for ourselves as individuals or as nations, but in the sacrifices we make in love on each other's behalf. Jesus is the best loved man who ever lived because He gave Himself in loving sacrifice as no other man ever did. So only will His Church and His followers win the world to Him. It is the magnitude of our sacrifice that indicates the extent of our soul-growth. Let us not spare to speak to the people in our day that they go forward in loving sacrifice for the coming of the Kingdom of Christ, that they go forward in this grand crusade as individuals, as Churches, as nations. It is the command we need most of all to obey.

OUR VIRGINIA LETTER

WHEN one tries to injure another he ought to stop and carefully, and ever prayerfully, to examine his own motives—look into his own heart and see if there be any wickedness mixed up with his motives, and if there is, then by all means repudiate such action and do it now, for whatsoever you sow that shall ye also reap. When you try to injure another, you may be sure that another will seek to injure you, and thus in the long run you will get back again what you gave to another. This is the sentence God has written in His Word against all wrong doing, and the sentence will be executed even to the uttermost farthing. Before you sow an evil seed, you will do well to stop and ask yourself this question: "Am I willing to get back as my portion just the deal I am giving to another?" If you are, then you may go ahead, but if you are not so willing, then you had much better not do it at all, for whatsoever a man sows that shall he also reap—that shall he get back. Not only so, but when it comes back to your life, you may expect it to come with at least the natural increase. You know when the farmer sows a bushel of wheat, he naturally expects to get in return much more than he sowed. May we not expect as much in reaping what we sow in evil? Then when you go to give evil to another, measure exactly, for you may be sure it will come back into your life with the increase which is sure to follow the sowing. Must you sow? Then be careful to sow just what you are willing to receive in return—no more, no less!

The Scriptures abound in many precious promises. Some one has undertaken to count them and they say there are 32,000 of these precious promises in the Word of God, and these promises are sent to the people of the world, and yet how few get real comfort out of these 32,000 promises, sent to us from the God Who cannot lie! One trouble, as to these promises, is found in the fact that they fail to acquaint themselves with these promises, and not knowing the promises of God, they cannot act upon them, and not acting upon them, they do not get their value, and getting no value from them, they soon come to put no dependence upon them, and of course, they get no good out of them—certainly no direct good from them. One thing even the average Christian fails in, and that is to acquaint himself or herself with the teachings of the Bible, and not knowing the Bible they do not get the growth of the soul which would surely come to the hungry heart from a true knowledge of the Word. Let us learn to read and study our Bible every day, and it will greatly profit us all.

The Holland, Virginia, Christian church very generously voted us August for a vacation, and so it came to pass that on Thursday, August 4, my wife and I had the pleasure of starting off on said vacation. Leaving Holland at 7:08 a. m., we reached Suffolk in good time to catch the 9:05 train on the Atlantic Coast Line for Darlington, S. C. It was a run of 12 hours to Darlington, but we reached that city on time and found daughter, Mrs. Hearn, and little Bunn quite well, but little John Barrett, aged 4 months, was not very well, and yet not dangerously ill, as we hope. These are two fine boys, at least grandfather and grandmother think so. It is a fine rest to play with these lambs of the fold. It would be hard to tell which enjoys this pastime more, the grandparents or the children. We are having a fine time eating, drinking good water, and sleeping, but that is not all for we have time for a quiet study of the Word, but I must close for this time.

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN

The kingdom of heaven is neither a geographical nor a political realm, but it is a spiritual realm. It is the kingdom of the Father's rule in the hearts of men and women. It is within you. It never comes till it is welcome. Therefore, we still pray "Thy kingdom come."

The price of gasoline has dropped on an average of about 30 per cent since the beginning of the year. This means an annual saving of $500,000 to the automobile owners of America. The public still holds to the view that it is too high at present and thinks that the big cut in crude oil should bring further reductions.

It is said that Europe is slowly recovering from the belief that our foreign policy is an endowment policy.

THE OBSERVATORY

J. E. MASSEY

IRELAND INDEPENDENT OR A DOMINION—WHICH?

The pendulum of victory or peace (the world scarcely knows which) in the case of Ireland now swings in favor of her being an independent nation; then again in favor of the British proposal for a dominion status. Of course there is little question that Sinn Feiners would not reap independence in the fullest degree, but with the island itself divided into two almost distinctly opposing factions; Ulster on one hand and Southern Ireland on the other, considering the weight of opinion and numbers of the rest of the British Empire, the chances for Ireland being completely independent seem to lesson in favor of her remaining under the influence of Britain.

Eamon de Valera, so-called President of the Irish Republic, believes that now is the time to strike for his aims of complete independence. Again and again he attacks the British offer, and his manouvers are backed by the Dail Eireann, in fact guided by the latter, it seems. But on the other hand, Lloyd George has worked to obtain the backing of the British public, and is equally persistent in keeping Ireland within the Empire. Not only does he have the backing of England and Scotland in this; he is continually being advised by General Smuts of South Africa, and the leaders of the other dominions.

Although there are numbers of American agitators of Irish freedom, and in some parts of the country the Irish question is a very delicate one, this country as a whole appears indifferent. Certainly this nation is not in favor of dictating in arms for Ireland. What it wants is what the world wants—peace, time to reconstruct that which has been torn by war.

Had Ireland an abundance of men and materials for war, the case might be different. Undoubtedly most of her people desire absolute self-determination, but Ulster is a strong minority and has so far allied with the Empire. It is Protestant, while the rest of the country is Catholic, and religious differences have figured considerably in the Irish question, in spite of the modern severance of Church from State.

England has a strong advantage over Ireland. She looks upon the question from a domestic standpoint, just as we did in the case of the Civil War. It is the proximity of the two islands, Ireland and England that makes the Englishman revoke Irish independence. But he will go a long way toward conciliation. Ireland, according to the late proposal of the British Government, will practically have economic freedom and self-government.

It is useless for the two countries to have more bloodshed. Ireland as well as England wants peace. She too must "give and let give", for stubbornness will not likely solve the problem at present, as it did in the case of the American independence. Ireland must become united before she can obtain complete freedom. That will take time.

ADVERTISING RELIGION

Modern "advertising" means more than an attempt to "sell". At least, that is the meaning conveyed by a recent number of the Literary Digest. The idea of placing a big advertisement on the roadside in order to attract a crowd at church has thus far been denounced by most conservative Americans, because we have accustomed ourselves to thinking that "advertising" religious services and movements, "commercializes" religion. We have thought that such places the services of the church on the same rating as that of an article of merchandise. But the idea is losing ground.

"It pays to advertise", quotes the Literary Digest, "is just as true of the Church as of business." The New Orleans Times Picayune argues: "The same great force that is used with such signal success with making known the worth and importance of purely material truths that underlie the things of life will have equal potency in spreading the spiritual truths that underlie the outward manifestations of religion."

Churches in a number of Southern cities have taken up the idea with success, we are told in various accounts. Before people take an interest in things, they desire to know about them, and in so many cases the pulpit is not equal to the needs of informing the public about religion, in its many forms and movements. The American public is educated in the language of the sign-board and newspapers, it seems. They are accustomed to surveying these for their information, and must be informed in a conspicuous and direct method. He is no longer the American of the pioneer days, when he traveled miles to get a morsel of news. The Church must use itself in terms of present-day education of its public.

The question of unemployment is cause of great concern to the present administration. The army of unemployed is rapidly climbing toward the 1914 record and a hard winter is feared. Secretary of Labor Davis has placed official statistics before the Senate. Captain Robinson, of navy general wage board, is trying to get Labor to accept wage cut so that more can be employed.

The Poles and Germans are still having trouble and a serious clash occurred between the two on August 17, 1921. The clash took place near the frontier villages of Sternalitz and Kostellitz, in Upper Silesia. The Germans drove the Poles across the frontier killing twenty-four and wounding many more.

Gold valued at approximately $10,000,000 has arrived at the port of New York in the last week. In addition to this it is announced that vessels at sea are carrying $5,000,000 more to New York. This gold is to be distributed among financial institutions and eventually to find its way into the vaults of the Assay Office.

"Before they will call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear." (Isa. lxv. 24.)

"If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him?" (Matt. vii. 11.)

"Ask of me, and I will give thee the nations for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession." (Ps. ii. 8.)

"Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest." (Luke x. 2.)

"MY GRACE IS SUFFICIENT FOR THEE"

The other evening I was riding home after a heavy day's work; I felt wearied, and sore depressed, when swiftly, and suddenly as a lightning flash, that text came to me, "My grace is sufficient for thee." I reached home and looked it up in the original, and at last it came to me this way, "My grace is sufficient for thee," and I said, "I should think it is, Lord," and burst out laughing. I never fully understood what the holy laughter of Abraham was until then. It seemed to make unbelief so absurd. It was as though some little fish, being very thirsty, was troubled about drinking the river dry, and Father Thames said, "Drink away, little fish, my stream is sufficient for thee." Or, it seemed like a little mouse in the granaries of Egypt, after a seven years of plenty, fearing it might die of famine; Joseph might say, "Cheer up, little mouse, my granaries are sufficient for thee." Again I imagined a man away up yonder, in a lofty mountain, saying to himself, "I breathe so many cubic feet of air every year, I fear I shall exhaust the oxygen in the atmosphere," but the earth might say, "Breathe away, O man, and fill the lungs ever; my atmosphere is sufficient for thee." Oh, brethren, be great believers! Little faith will bring your souls to heaven and heaven to your souls.—C. H. Spurgeon.

TRAMPLING ON THE SHADOWS

A tiny girl, out with her mother, noticed for the first time the shadows they were throwing straight before them. She was greatly interested, but also distressed by the fact that her mother persisted in pushing forward without waiting for the shadows to get out of the way.

"You walk on them. You walk on them!" protested the baby voice.

"Well, child," answered the hurried mother, half laughing, half vexed, "we will never get anywhere in this world if we can't trample on the shadows we make."

The shadows are always in the way, and they are chiefly of our own making—shadows of fear, of discouragement, of unbelief—and it is only as we learn to tread them down and push on that we ever accomplish anything worth while or ever reach any point of comfort or success. The harvest and the most useful lives are those that have mastered the lesson of pushing steadily forward in the path of right, regardless of the interfering shadows.—Forward.

A careful and prayerful thinking of John 3:16 is worth while.

HOW DOES YOUR SUNDAY SCHOOL RANK?

The Sunday School Board of the American Christian Convention, has adopted the Standard for an International Standard Sunday school, as a Standard for the Sunday schools of the Christian Church. The Standard includes ten points, each of which is an essential in effective Sunday school work. Any Sunday school, which qualifies on the following ten points, is recognized in the Christian Church and in all denominations and in the International Sunday School Association as an International Standard Sunday school. We need many such schools in our Southern Christian Convention. What school will be first to send in word that it can qualify on all ten points and is hence entitled to this recognition and a place on our Honor Roll of Standard Sunday schools?

The ten points of the Standard are as follows:

1. A Cradle Roll and a Home Department, both organized and active.
2. Organized Class in both Secondary and Adult Divisions.
3. Teacher Training Class, meeting regularly in the study of some approved course.
4. Graded organization and instruction.
5. Missionary instruction and offering.
6. Temperance instruction.
7. Definite Decision for Christ urged.
8. Worker's Conference regularly held.
9. Full Denominational Requirements. Annual Offering and Report.
10. Full Sunday School Association Requirements.

The Field Secretary will be glad to answer questions regarding any of these ten points, and to help any school to qualify as an "International Standard Sunday School." May we have many schools which will be willing to endeavor to reach this goal, and by so doing, better their Sunday schools and their churches in doing a more active work for the Kingdom!

NOTICE

The fifty-second session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Sunday School Convention was one of the best ever held, and the delegates went back to their various schools feeling better informed and inspired to accomplish bigger and better things the ensuing year. However, one thing marred the occasion, namely, the lack of the reports and money being sent in in as fine form as has been the custom. Here is the reason, for that trouble and reason for this notice. There being a vacancy in the office of Corresponding Secretary, no report blanks and other notifications in regard to money were sent to the schools. The blanks were then necessarily delivered to the delegates at the convention to be filled and sent to the Recording Secretary, E. T. Cotten, Suffolk, Va. Because of this, the publication of the minutes will be delayed quite a while, and we trust the schools of the various Conventions will be as patiently as they can. Our minutes are already for publication at present date, but the tabulated table cannot be made up until the reports have been received by the Recording Secretary.

We trust each and all the schools which have not already done so, of the Eastern Virginia Sunday school Convention will take notice and send in reports and money as soon as possible.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETY, LIBERTY (VANCE)

On July 22, 1921, at 8:00 o'clock P. M., the Young People's Missionary Society of Liberty Christian church, (Vance) met for its regular monthly meeting at the home of Mr. Ira Weldon.

The Society was called to order by the president, Miss Margaret Alston, after which the Society hymn, "Just as I Am", was sung. A chain of prayers was then offered, several members taking part. A very interesting program was carried out. The Scripture lesson was taken from Luke 2:1-20, using the subject "Be Glad".

This being the time for the election of officers the following were nominated: President—Mr. Walter Bowen; Vice-President—Miss Zola Winn; Secretary-Treasurer—Miss Nora Eaves.

Twenty-five active and twenty honorary members were present at this meeting; also several visitors. The offering received amounted to $3.65. The treasurer reported $121.64 collected since July, 1920. Disbursements, $101.23. Amount now in treasury, $20.41.

After the Society adjourned the young people were invited into a large maple grove where they found many watermelons. This was of course enjoyed by all present.

After the refreshments Mr. Weldon ushered the jolly band into the front lawn where they enjoyed a social hour, after which they departed for their homes having spent a most pleasant evening.

The young people will hold their next meeting in August.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

CANNING SEASON

We are very proud of our Orphanage children and we may well feel proud of them. One day last week they gathered and canned ninety-four gallons tomatoes. Of course our force, matrons and all helped, too, as we draft all the help we can get on canning days. But we thought this one item in our work worth mentioning. The dry weather struck us hard this year and I hardly see how we have been able to produce any vegetables, at all. At one time we thought we would not be able to get any tomatoes at all to can, but we have put up something over one hundred gallons. We intended to can four hundred gallons, and if we had had favorable seasons, we would have easily gotten that done.

Our beans have been almost a failure and we have gathered very few to can but have later vines coming on and hope, if we can get seasons, that we will get our quota canned out of the late crop.

It has been our custom to put up much sauer kraut and the children are very fond of it through the winter and it helps out very much, too. We had planted a large patch of cabbage to make kraut but the dry weather actually burned our cabbages from top to bottom.

We are glad to have with us this week Mr. Alton Cooper, of Andrews, S. C. Alton came to us some years ago a little boy and left us last year and took a job with the Seaboard Railway Company, at Andrews, S. C., and has made good.

We are always glad to have our old boys visit us as we feel that they always count the Orphanage their home and like to come back to see us from time to time. One of the great joys in this work is to see our children go out in life and make good.

Contributions are coming in rather slowly and we need funds to feed and clothe the children in our care. If your Sunday school is not making the monthly offering please make yourself a committee to see to it that you get it on the list at your next service.

"Every Sunday School on the List This Year," is our slogan. Help me to get them.

A LETTER

Dear Brother Riddle:

I preached at Mt. Auburn yesterday. The church is still on the lookout for a pastor for the next Conference year. It is a sad sight to look at the crops about Mt. Auburn—cut off so badly by the heat and dry weather. The recent showers were too late to do the corn much good. One month ago the people never had better prospects for abundant crops.

I went to see Brother W. B. Mann immediately after my return from Mt. Auburn. He is quite feeble, though cheerful. His abiding faith and trust gives him hope in all the nights of his sorrows. His devoted daughter and son-in-law anticipate his every want. His only grandchild is the joy of his heart.

I went to hear Dr. C. H. Rowland preach at the First Christian church, in this city, last night. A splendid sermon. Dr. W. W. Staley was also present. A number of members said to me as I entered the church: "Dr. Staley gave us a grand sermon this morning, now we are to have Dr. Rowland tonight. We are glad they are having a vacation." Well, if two such attractive preachers expect to get any rest from ministerial services they will have to hunt a swimming hole or a fishing pond in a distant State and disguise themselves well at that.

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE CHURCH IN INDUSTRY

LABOR SUNDAY MESSAGE SEPTEMBER 4, 1921

Commission On The Church And Social Service Federal Council Of The Churches Of Christ In America

HE message for this Labor Sunday is set against a background of suffering and confusion. The land is filled with unemployment. Possibly one-fourth of the population are straitened and anxious. Thousands of employers are holding their industries together merely from day to day. Labor is fighting for the fundamental right of collective action, and fighting at a serious disadvantage. The freedom of the ministry to proclaim a social gospel and to apply it according to their own honest convictions is sharply challenged. Even the common right of citizens to freedom of speech and assembly in many communities is at stake.

In such a troubled time as this it would be easy for the Church to hold aloof from industrial questions. To confine itself to simpler tasks would seem the path of prudence. The summons, however, is not to the easy way but to the way of duty. Concerning the relations of men to each other in the economic and industrial realm, as well as in the other areas of life, the Church must seek to discover and to proclaim the mind of Christ. To do so calls us, indeed, to humility and to prayer, but also to courage and to faith.

When the pulpit speaks on human relations in industry it is not undertaking to advise the engineer or manager about the technique of management or machine process. It is simply trying to apply its Gospel to the relationships between men in the working world. It cannot be too strongly asserted that the preacher has a specialty as well as the engineer. Machinery, buying, selling, finance—these are matters of which he has only incidental knowledge. But the relation of persons to one another is always a moral and religious question and so is inevitably in the preacher's field.

The immediate and compelling consideration for the Church is always its divine commission to win men and women to personal discipleship to Christ. But a redeemed life is one redeemed in all its aspects and relationships. The economic and industrial factors that condition the lives of men and women and help to make them what they become are, therefore, as much a concern of the Church as any other phase of their moral environment. An industrial practice that cramps and devitalizes human beings in body or in spirit is as much a foe of religion as is the liquor traffic. The Church cannot ignore the one any more than it can ignore the other.

Not only so, but the charter of the Church, received directly from its Leader, requires that it proclaim the Gospel of the Kingdom. Jesus said of this Kingdom that it is like leaven hidden in meal—it works until "the whole lump" is leavened. There are no areas of life which Jesus excluded from the ultimate operation of the law of the Kingdom. A Gospel that is susceptible of only partial application is not a Gospel which can save the world. A Church which is content to recognize limits to the proclamation of its message is a defeated Church.

Christian Principles to be Applied to Industry

There are at least three fundamental principles in the teachings of Jesus that the Church must apply to industry. Unless we can learn to conduct industry according to these basic principles the Kingdom of God cannot prevail in the modern industrial world.

1. Men are to live as brothers.

That God is our common Father and that men are therefore to live together as brothers is the very foundation of Jesus' message. To the more simple, social and business relationships the application of this teaching is at once apparent. The store-keeper and his clerk, the farmer and his hired man, the mistress and her maid, find no obstacle outside their own wills to the maintenance of Christian relationships. But between several hundred absentee stockholders on the one hand and several thousand wage earners on the other, relations are so impersonal and distant that the responsibilities which brotherhood implies are more difficult to grasp and are too seldom regarded with seriousness. In the administration of a large industry policies are frequently inaugurated which would not have been determined upon if their full human consequences could have been instantly visualized. The investors in an industry expect its managers, first and principally, to produce profits. The directors scrutinize the records but rarely visit the work shops. In consequence men and material are lumped together as commodities, labor is bought in the market like goods, and the personal equation is lost in a mechanical system.

Democratic relationships in large scale industry do not necessarily pre-suppose a restoration of the early intimacy between employer and employee. Such intimacy is impossible in large plants, and where it actually obtains it is by no means a guarantee of a square deal. Democracy requires rather that every individual shall have his point of view represented and shall have opportunity effectively to register his will. What really matters is that the life interests of the workers should be the first consideration; not that they should be called by their first names. But where there can be added relationships of personal friendship between employer and employee, the human possibilities of the situation are greatly increased. Significant in this connection is the fact, not widely realized, that according to the most recent available figures more than one-third of the factory workers in America are still employed in plants having fewer than one hundred employees. The employers of these small groups of workers have superior advantages too little utilized, for the promotion of fellowship.

In an industrial age there can be no real brotherhood of man unless there is a brotherhood in industry. Mr. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has put the matter well: "Surely it is not consistent for us as Americans to demand democracy in government and practice autocracy in industry." Of similar import is the recent statement of one of our foremost labor leaders that to political citizenship must now be added industrial citizenship. Political democracy leads to industrial democracy because a nation trained in school and church and state to democratic relationships, will inevitably carry these same principles into industry. The growing sense of manhood and responsibility in the workers tends in the same direction. There can no longer be satisfactory relationships under an autocratic shop rule, any more than in an autocratic state. Arbitrary control leads to class war, which is as contrary to Christian principles as any other war.

Democracy in industry must be realized progressively and is being steadily approached today in an increasing number of industrial establishments. Recognition of the ideal commits no one to any particular social theory or program. Collective bargaining with labor unions is an expression of the democratic ideal; so also are some of the various forms of labor representation in shop councils. There are also democratic forms of cooperation by which labor relations within a plant are handled as in a town meeting, or a family circle. It is quite possible to develop such forms of association, without prejudice to those vital interests of labor which are conserved by its own regular forms of organization, and to secure a real partnership between employer and employees. Such a partnership may go to any length in democratic procedure that those concerned may desire it to go.

2. A human life is of immeasurable value.

Jesus taught the immeasurable value of a human life. Once born into the world all society is obligated to see that it has a chance. Modern high-speed machinery is dangerous even with the best of safety devices. Although we have deeply mourned the loss of the 48,000 American men who were killed in the great war, we have given little thought to the fact that during the same period of nineteen months, American industries claimed 35,000 victims. This fearful rate of destruction still continues. With all the impetus to protection of life given by the workmen's compensation and industrial safety movements, the dangers of modern machine processes still show that too low a value is placed upon the life and health of human beings.

But the crippling of the body is not the only price paid by human lives. Crowded living quarters reduce physique and low wages increase infant mortality. The wage earner is subject to hazards from which the salaried and professional classes are secure. Children born in industrial districts are deprived of opportunities that should be inalienable in a Christian society; a predestination as real as any theology ever taught governs their future. Low wage scales and unemployment have the effect upon the lower paid workers of thrusting millions down to the poverty line and an accident precipitates them into destitution. Unless the man is lifted above the machine, the life that Jesus considered of more value than the whole material world is sacrificed. In order that the family of the laboring man may have fair opportunity, not only must life be safeguarded, but wages must be sufficient to guarantee a higher standard of living for the workers and to justify their aspiration to a larger life. There can be no doubt that our working people should receive a relatively larger share of the product of industry.

Since prices began to recede we have heard much concerning excessive wage demands. Without doubt wages in certain occupations have been out of proportion to those paid in the less skilled and less well organized trades. But throughout the entire period of war prices large groups of wage earners have been compelled by inadequate wages to live at a low standard. Not only so, but even the wartime wages of highly skilled labor, whether of hand or brain, can be considered disproportionately high only when it is forgotten that in the production of all our wealth labor bears the most irksome burden, takes the heaviest risks and suffers the gravest insecurity.

3. Service is the Christian motive.

Of course business cannot be run without an adequate financial return. The services of physicians, teachers and even of ministers, require compensation. But the primary motive in these professions is assumed to be service. A Christian society will try to put business under the same motive; it will purge itself of all ruinous competition and substitute for it a cooperation that preserves initiative and all the stimulus of competitive enterprise without its war-like methods. The Kingdom of God is builded through service and sacrifice; it cannot be builded out of selfishness and with the motive of profit dominating, nor can it ever be builded apart from the daily activities of men.

And the motive of service is not only entirely practicable but it is the only salvation of business itself. The service motive will bring a spirit into industry that will minimize strife and selfishness and magnify fraternity and goodwill. It will inspire production and tend to eliminate waste. With the profit motive controlling both employer and employee, each seeks to exploit the other, each looks upon the other with suspicion, friction grows between them instead of confidence, and industry assumes the aspect of war broken only by periods of truce. The operation of the profit motive defeats the practical purpose of industry—continuous, efficient production. If the service motive can be made mutual, employer and employee will learn to work together in mutual goodwill and the wastage of strife will be turned into mutual advantage.

The Golden Rule is the classic expression of all these ideas and of the spirit in which alone they can ever be made real. Without that spirit the most careful devised system of organized relationships will be ineffective. The Golden Rule means the comprehension of another's point of view, and the doing as one would be done by. It is a rule to be observed day by day, especially as new situations arise, and to be used equally by manager and men. These Christian principles are as binding upon one group in industry as upon the other; and only in so far as they are recognized can industry achieve permanence and security. They will be found at last to underlie the social structure as the laws of chemistry and physics underlie the phenomena of the material world.

The Church as a Teacher of Right Industrial Relations

The right of the Church to speak on human relationships in industry has been challenged by some representatives of employers, although upheld by many others. It is objected that ministers know nothing about industrial processes and therefore are not competent to speak upon the relations of employer and employee. This is a challenge which the Church must meet by a full understanding and a clear statement of its relation to industry.

Even in the absence of demonstration in familiar fact, the Church and its ministry would not lack a sufficient warrant for the proclamation of the Gospel with respect to industry. The Church is commissioned to bear testimony to the truth as it is in Christ. The responsibility for making the world of business and industry conform to Christian requirements rests upon those leaders of business and industry who profess to be Christian men.

But the Church is not advocating an untried experiment. Abundant demonstrations are at hand that every sincere approach to the application of the Golden Rule in the world of work has made not only for stability by putting cooperation in place of competitive strife, but for lower costs and a better product. Illustrations of this principle in many types of industry are now at hand. The ideal has nowhere been attained, but the soundness of the principle is no longer open to question.

Clearly the function of the Church is not to manage industry, or to teach either employers or workers how to manage it, but to interpret these Christian principles and to mediate the Christian spirit. To do this effectively, its teachers, and especially its ministers, need to have direct knowledge of industrial conditions. They need to be sufficiently familiar with industrial processes and procedure so that they can illustrate and make clear what these principles mean in industrial relations and in the conduct of business. The pastor must understand the point of view of both the employer and the worker, so as to know the difficulties and responsibilities of each. This requires frequent visits to factories and to the homes of the workers and intensive study of specific problems. Else he may know the Gospel, and still be like a physician who is well trained in materia medica and yet who, because not trained in diagnosis, fails to heal. The need of the Church today is for men skilled in the diagnosis of moral ills that the Gospel may be more adequately applied to human needs.

But the Church has also the possibility of teaching through its laymen, including employers and leaders of labor who have the Christian spirit and who are working conscientiously at the problem of Christian relationships. These men know the problems of management as the ministers do not and are competent to speak upon them in their technical aspects. The Church can use them appropriately and with great effect in explaining what Christian principles mean and how they actually operate in industry. The application of these Christian principles rests finally with the laity—with employers, managers and leaders of labor—and upon their spirit and faithfulness depend the future of our industrial life.

The Church must therefore assert and maintain the authority of Christian teaching with reference to the industrial order, and its own right and duty as interpreter of Christian motives and ideals. Let the Church gird itself with humility for this great new task. Let it work by faith, for the difficulties are insurmountable unless one believes in the presence and power of God.

Let the Church keep also the comprehensive social point of view. It is not and cannot be partisan. It is, or should be, the shepherd of all; rich and poor, radical and conservative, employer and employed. Class distinctions or conflicting selfish interests have no permanent place in the Kingdom of God. The Church may find itself, in the defense of right relations, temporarily supporting the claims of a particular individual or group, but it is not, and cannot be partisan. Its platform is the Sermon on the Mount. Its function is to promote goodwill and to secure that social justice without which goodwill is impossible. Others will propagate self-interest, hatred and class struggle; it is for the Church to work in the Master's spirit and to give itself to the coming of His Kingdom of brotherhood upon the earth.

FORGETFULNESS OF SELF

Not when we are determined, come what may, to have a pleasant and a happy life; not then, as the reward of that insistence, does God bestow the music of the heart. He gives it when there is forgetfulness of self, and the struggle to be true to what is highest though the morning break without a glimpse of blue, and the path be through the valley of the shadow. The one sure way to miss the gift of happiness is to rise early and sit up late for it. To be bent at every cost on a good time, is the sure harbinger of dreary days. It is when we have the courage to forget all that, and to lift up our hearts to do the will of God, that, like a swallow flashing from the caves, happiness glances out with glad surprise.—G. H. Morrison.

CHURCH NEWS

FROM BROTHER P. T. KLAPP'S FIELD Mebane

The meeting at Mebane began July 21 and continued for nine days, with glorious results. Between forty and fifty professions of faith in Christ, with eleven accessions to the church and more to follow. The attendance was very large, the seating capacity was inadequate for our congregations. There were sometimes as many outside of the tent as were under it.

Rev. J. G. Truitt arrived on Sunday evening, July 24, and did the preaching. His messages were clear, logical, Biblical, and delivered in the power and demonstration of the Holy Spirit. To say the least, God has made Brother Truitt a power in the pulpit.

We have bought the brick for the new church to be built at this place.

Pleasant Hill (J)

The meeting at Pleasant Hill began the fifth Sunday in July and continued five days. In many respects this was a great meeting. Between twenty and thirty professions were made at this meeting. The interest was good from the beginning, and God's people were revived and strengthened. God bless this people and lead them to know the Lord more and more.

Pleasant Ridge

The Pleasant Ridge meeting began the first Sunday in August and continued until Friday night following. Rev. J. G. Truitt came to our assistance on Monday and did the preaching. His sermons were of a high order. One of his messages was "How God Saved His People during the Mosaic Dispensation," and his argument was from the 16th Chapter of Leviticus. Another message which I desire to mention was on "A Life Freed from Sin." These sermons were thoroughly Biblical. The remainder of his sermons were good and the people came to hear him and heard him with great delight. The results of this meeting were not what we had hoped to see, but we believe much good seed was sown. There were several reclamations and God's children were edified and built up in the faith. To God be all the glory and praise for what was accomplished in these meetings.

HENDERSON LETTER

Fuller's Chapel enjoyed a season of revival effort and experience the week following the third Sunday in July. Rev. F. C. Lester was with us and did all the preaching, which was very much enjoyed by all. His messages were clear, practical, and earnest, such as edify the saint and warn the sinner, and greatly arouse the indifference. A goodly number attended the day services; large congregations attended the evening services. Bro. Lester made for himself a lasting place in the hearts of those who heard him.

The music was under the direction of Bro. C. C. Woodlief, who has for several years given much time and effort to the development of the interest in music in church and community. In addition to the facts mentioned above one great factor in creating interest is the prayer meeting which is held regularly every Sunday evening, and is largely attended. At least one young man professed faith in Christ in a recent meeting. Friday night, the last service of the morning, eight united with the church, and others are expected to join. We were called away Friday, so were not present at the last service. It is said to have been a great service. Besides those who accepted Christ as their Savior, many came forward for reconsecration during the meeting. God be praised for the good accomplished.

Another result of the meeting was the organizing of a Christian Endeavor Society. This is a step fraught with great possibilities, as there are many young people in the community. The Sunday school is perhaps the best in the history of the church.

Henderson church is making progress along lines that will add greatly to the opportunity for service. Full reports will be given a little later.

BETHELEHEM AND ANTIOCH

Rev. J. D. Wicker of Sanford, N. C., began a series of meetings at Bethlehem on July 30. I reached there on Monday and we continued the meeting until Friday afternoon—with services in the afternoon only. There were fifteen professions. Twelve joined the Christian church and two united with the Baptist church. Many persons re-dedicated their lives to the service of God.

The meeting at Antioch began Sunday, August 7. Services were held both morning and afternoon and continued until Thursday, August 11. There were between twenty-five and thirty professions of faith and twenty-three joined the Christian church. Most of these were grown people, several being heads of families. Communion service was observed at both churches.

A woman's missionary society was organized at Antioch with eight members.

I feel that both of these churches have been strengthened under the power of the Spirit, and my prayer is that God's richest blessing may rest with every member and that they may grow to be strong in the Lord's service.

RALEIGH, N. C.

The First Christian church of the Capitol City held its third quarterly conference last night, and the purpose of this article is to give some facts concerning the work and plans for the coming quarter and the next conference year.

The church is now in the last quarter of its thirty-ninth year, and is planning for a "fortieth anniversary". A representative committee of five has been appointed to assist the pastor in mapping out the program for the next conference year. The purpose will be to celebrate the fortieth anniversary with appropriate exercises during the month of June, and the erection of a modern church building in the heart of the Capitol City. Raleigh is said to be the most beautiful city in the State, and our church owns one of the choicest lots in the city, and is located just two blocks from the Capitol square. Our present quarters are far too small, and our people are anxious for a new edifice.

During the conference year, this church has had fifty-two additions to its membership, and plans are being made to have Rev. A. Victor Lightbourne and his blind pianist, Sam Davis, in the church from September 1 to 16th, for a meeting. The field is ripe, and we must harvest before the grain wastes. The city has been divided into four districts with a captain and secretary for each district, whose business is to make a complete canvass of the city. The purpose of this canvass is to find and enlist all who are members of other Christian churches, and to learn who in the city are favorable material for our church.

Next Sunday our church is to have two distinguished visitors in the persons of Dr. W. W. Staley, President of the Southern Christian Convention, and Dr. C. H. Rowland, President of the Seaside Chautauqua and School of Methods. These brethren have agreed to speak for us, and a couple of great messages will be given to an appreciative congregation.

TEN REASONS FOR GOING TO CHURCH

1. We like to please our friends. You have not a worthy friend who would not be pleased to have you go to church.

2. The sermon may help you. Daniel Webster said, "It is a mighty poor sermon that doesn't hit me somewhere."

3. It helps us keep in touch with the Eternal Verities. There is danger that God, our loved ones and the future world will be crowded out of our thoughts.

4. It helps to keep our ideals fresh and high and stimulates us to live up to them.

5. It encourages an institution that stands for the best things, and that cannot live without friends and supporters.

6. It helps us to see things in their right proportions. We need the comprehensive view which takes in not only dirt and dollars, but also character and eternity.

7. The reflex action of worship is as inevitable as it is ennobling. One cannot help but grow like that which he reverences, loves and adores.

8. Its service appeals to the best sides of our natures: the music to the aesthetic, our friends to the social, the sermon to the intellectual, the worship to our oldest and deepest instincts.

9. The thought and speech on high themes, the noble hymns and dignified music are needed to offset the slang, profanity and ragtime with which we are daily assaulted.

10. George F. Hoar says, "There is no more commanding public duty than attendance at church on Sunday. It would be impossible to maintain liberty of self-government if our churches were closed, and public worship of God is to be maintained only by attendance upon it."—By H. S. Bradley, D. D., in The Congregationalist.

SMILES

Certainly "Not"

Tenderfoot—"Why do you have knots on the ocean instead of miles?"

First-Class Scout—"Well, you see they couldn't have the ocean tide if there were no knots."—Yale Record.

Luck

"Sure, it's Mike that's the lucky man."

"How's that?"

"Why, he just took out an insurance policy for $10,000 and the very next day he fell off the bridge and got drowned in the river."—American Legion Weekly.

Mixed Metaphors or Drinks

William Lyon Phelps of the English chair at Yale has added a new mixed metaphor to his large and amusing collection. This addition is from one of the novels of W. L. George: "The cloud that tried to stab their happiness was only a false rumor whose bitter taste could not splinter the radiance nor dim the effervescence of their joy."—Detroit Free Press.

The Nice Shades of Our Speech

Dr. Tehyi Hsieh, Chinese Labor Commissioner to the United States, while speaking recently at the Kiwanis Club of Springfield, Mass., gave an interesting example of "dictionary English." A Chinese woman who had learned her English in the schools had been very much annoyed by the constantly increasing charges made by a plumber. When at length a particularly exorbitant bill was presented she said: "How is this, sir? You are dearer to me now than when we were first engaged."—Writers' Monthly.

The Labor Problem

A gentleman here from Georgia says the labor situation in the South this year reminds him of this story:

A Negro applied to a cotton plantation manager for work.

"All right," said the manager, "come around in the morning and I'll put you to work and pay you what you are worth."

"No, sur, I can't do dat," replied the Negro. "I'se gittin' mo' than dat now."—Commerce and Finance.

The Need of Christian Education

ONLY a short time ago, just before the recent war, the need of the hour was declared to be more education. The war greatly emphasized this need but we saw in the case of Germany that mere education was not sufficient in itself. The world is beginning to realize today that there is a certain kind of education which will satisfy the great demand and that kind is Christian education.

We are beginning to realize that religion, like everything else of value, must be taught. It is possible to get more religion in industry and business only through the development of Christian education and leadership. The forces of evil are organized and backed by men and money. Why not have a systematically organized force to fight these evil forces? The safety of our nation depends on just such an organization and such an organization can come only through Christian education.

Then, the need of the hour is not more factories or materials, not more railroads or steamships, not more armies or more navies, but rather more education based on the plain teachings of Jesus. The prosperity of our country depends on the motive and purposes of the people. These motives and purposes are directed in the right course only through religion. Laws, riches, or force are of no avail in determining a man's attitude toward life. Harmony at home and peace with the world will only come through Christian education.

We believe that book stores, publications and the like, can help greatly in the cause of Christian education by placing the right kind of literature and books before the people.

Crosses and Crowns

THE EDITOR

WHERE there is no cross there is no crown is a repeated statement known the world over. All things worth while are paid for with a price. Sometimes it is the price of blood, again it is the surrendering of self and things selfish that greater things may abound. The crosses we bear are not only emblematic of His cross, but remind us that great parts of the world are suffering while other parts enjoy the richest happiness.

The crosses of life make the crowns worth while. And these crowns are not to be understood as a great diamond-set head paraphernalia. The crown in life worth while is that satisfaction that we have rendered a service to others for their happiness. The great rewards beyond will be in proportion to the rewards here. If no crowns here—no crowns beyond. And these crowns are not human bestowed. It is out of the heart that a feeling flows that we have done what we could that presents the crown.

Crosses are opportunities to enjoy the crowns of life. Despise not the crosses—strive for the crowns.

Over the Hills and Far Away

ON Wednesday night, August 17, THE SUN's Editor left Burlington to attend the Virginia Valley Central Conference, which met at Mayland church, near Broadway, Va., August 18-22. We were joined at Elon College by Superintendent Charles David Johnston and President William Allen Harper. These brethren have been companions of ours on other trips, and we knew that there was in store for us a season of good fellowship and Christian hospitality—and such was the case.

We reached the Nation's capital at 6:30 the next morning, looked after some local relations, made a brief visit to both houses of Congress, visited government buildings and left at 3:55 P. M. for Broadway, Va.

While visiting the East Room of the White House we met one of THE SUN's former Editors, the Reverend Jesse P. Whitley, Norfolk, Va. Brother Whitley was at THE SUN's helm from October, 1876 to March, 1879. He is a born editor and still wields the pen as religious editor of the Virginian-Pilot. Such is the fate of a man who once sits on the tripod—he cannot get away from the haunt of it. Printer's ink, we are told, once on a man's hands never leaves.

Superintendent Johnston, considering the trip his vacation, decided to walk up Washington's monument, the elevator being out of commission. The SUN's scribe thought it his duty to go along to see that our good Orphanage Superintendent got back all right. And we did. Some upward walk—555 feet! President Harper was wise enough to stay on the ground.

A word about our law-making bodies. We have visited these august assemblies under different administrations and have always faced the same kind of wrangling. Much speaking, debating, and seemingly little being done. It is about as much pleasure to read newspaper reports of Congress as it is to make a personal visit there. The tariff, and general revenue matters, now engross the time and thought of Congress.

From Washington, D. C., to Broadway, Va.,—a distance of 133 miles—the scenery of corn fields, fruit farms and pasture lands greeted the eye. The route carried us through the heart of the Valley—a section adorned by nature's hand. Among familiar faces on this trip was that of President Fairfax Harrison of the Southern Railway System. He is an Elon LL. D., and many readers of THE SUN will recall his address at Elon College at the 1917 commencement. President Harrison is a student and a scholar of the first magnitude; a genius in business, and an organizer with effect and force.

While traveling Mr. Harrison assumes the same position as any other citizen and pays his own railroad fare, though entitled to free transportation.

The Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference was organized 1848, and is therefore, in its seventy-third year, this being the seventy-third session.

Friday Morning Session

The Conference opened on Thursday morning. Addresses during the first day were made by Dr. A. B. Kendall, Miss Lucy Eldredge, and Rev. C. A. McDaniel, who delivered the annual address. Miscellaneous business was transacted and pastors took part in bringing before the Conference the needs of their respective fields. The Thursday night session was missionary in plan and purpose, and Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., president of the Southern Christian Convention, was the speaker.

The session Friday morning opened at 9:30, and President Harper conducted the devotional half hour, using as a question—theme, "What is a Christian?" Rev. W. C. Hook reported on Moral Reform and led the discussion, followed by Dr. A. B. Kendall.

Superintendent Charles D. Johnston spoke interestingly and touchingly about the Christian Orphanage and endeared himself, as usual, to the people.

Mrs. W. T. Walters read the report on Foreign Missions. Her good husband spoke pointedly to the report and was supplemented by others.

Friday Afternoon Session

THE SUN's Editor gave a talk on Devotion as the opening message of this session. The Conference also accorded us at this point an opportunity of speaking in behalf of the literature of our denomination and especially in the interest of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Following this report on Education was rendered showing the enrollment of two young men for the ministry. President W. A. Harper delivered an instructive address on "The Church's System of Education."

An interesting period of this session was the telling of the delegates of the best thing that their churches had done during the year. The Conference Missionary Association met and the report showed progress and steady growth.

At the close of this session of the Conference a delegation was officially sent to Edinburg, Va., to carry the Conference's fraternal greetings to the seventy-second annual Convention of the Disciples of Christ. Drs. Harper, Staley and Rev. J. C. Barrett were sent; and they detailed this scribe to go along, for what, we do not know. It was a most delightful and interesting trip of thirty miles over the famous turnpike highway. Along this route beautiful homes, yea, magnificent homes were found. These magnificent dwelling places are thickly settled. Not only beautiful homes, but farms of beauty under a high state of cultivation. Apple orchards, too, caught the eye as they stood picture-like at the foot of the mountains. The corn crops in the Valley section are much better than in many sections we have recently visited. Practically no apples could be seen, though thousands of acres are planted in apple trees in this great Valley section.

The evening meal for this trip was provided by some good women at Mayland before our departure. The meal was enjoyed by the road side at sunset's close. A real fellowship was this with these brethren. Away from the presence of mail, beyond the call zone for "more copy", in the quiet of the evening, it was indeed a real treat to be with these brethren.

We received a most cordial and brotherly reception at the Disciples Conference. Dr. Staley was to do the talking for the group, but the moderator was not satisfied until Dr. Harper, Brother Barrett and the writer had been heard. If all the members of our denomination could have the brotherly feeling that existed at this Conference there would be no delay concerning the union of the two bodies. The big difficulty in getting large organizations together is the lack of understanding, and this misunderstanding is due to the lack of personal contact with the other group.

This same night at our own Virginia Valley Conference the program was in charge of the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Board, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson, our Field Secretary of Missions, was the speaker.

Saturday Morning Session

Rev. R. P. Crumpler led the Conference in its half hour of devotion after which the general routine of Conference business was taken up, various committees heard from, and further miscellaneous business dispatched. Miss Lucy Eldredge, Secretary of Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work for the Convention, made an interesting, inspiring and helpful address. Miss Eldredge is a true pattern of her noble father and we feel that she will bring things to pass in her new undertaking.

The business of the Conference was being brought to a close on Saturday afternoon when we left. We failed to get the details of what took place, but presume that others will write of the things we have failed to report.

The usual preaching services were held on Sunday. Dr. Staley, Dr. Atkinson, Rev. C. A. McDaniel and Rev. J. C. Barrett, were the speakers for these services.

Visiting brethren at the Conference were: Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. W. A. Harper, Dr. W. W. Staley, Mr. C. D. Johnston, Miss Lucy Eldredge, and the writer.

Officers elected for the coming year were: President—W. T. Walters; Vice-President—Dr. A. B. Kendall; Secretary—Rev. A. W. Andes; Assistant Secretary—Rev. R. P. Crumpler; Treasurer—Mr. Samuel Earman.

The Conference voted to meet with the Joppa church, near Edinburg in its 1922 session.

We had an enjoyable trip. The above is but a brief sketch of what we saw and heard. No doubt we have failed to mention important things, but not intentionally. Others will, we are sure, write of the Conference.

Meeting The Crisis

THE crisis of the ministerial shortage is at hand—at hand in all denominations. It must be met. The churches must have ministers. The crisis can be met, and the Church has upon it the responsibility of meeting it.

No survey, no organized plans, will bring men to fill the pulpits now vacant. "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he send forth laborers into his harvest" is the way our Master said to get recruits. No better plan can be laid. There is no use getting away from it, but there is great hope in earnestly following it. We must pray, and pray earnestly. We must pray, in that some young man, or our neighbor's son, may enter into the great work; but we must pray unselfishly that our own sons may be led into this high and holy service. In our own hearts we must lift Him up so that He can draw all men unto Him. (See John 12:32.)

The work of the minister must be exalted. It is better to exalt the work than to exalt the worker. Men are willing to undertake the big, the heroic, and the challenging things of life. The right kind of men—the kind of men that the ministry needs—are not those who care to be exalted themselves, but they are willing to sacrifice that their undertakings may be exalted. The ministry cannot be considered as a side issue and expect great hearts to undertake it.

God does not undertake things except through human beings. God will undertake for the churches when the churches undertake for Him. How many local churches will get so interested in filling our pulpits that they will pray that God may call one or more of their own number to help? When individuals and churches earnestly "pray ye" as the Lord has directed, young men will offer themselves as answers to these prayers.

To meet the crisis the churches must recognize that the laborer is worthy of his hire. God cannot be exalted in the minds of young men as the Giver of every good and perfect gift, as the Provider of all things, and harmonize this with a compensation too meager to sustain self and family.

To meet the crisis, that shelf-worn philosophy must be done away with that only the poor enter the ministry. It is short-sightedness that reasons that God cannot use the rich man's son also. There must be dedicating of life regardless of social or financial circumstances. The churches must look to the issue as the King's business, and consider it a program sufficient for all classes.

When individuals and churches turn their thoughts in a passionate way toward an unsaved world, toward teaching millions of unregenerated men and women, they will "pray ye" and our pulpits will be filled.

These lines of suggestions deal not with the present. Others in this issue suggest how we may be able to handle the present situation.

SUFFOLK LETTER

REV. C. H. ROWLAND, D. D., and I had a fine time in Wake County for ten days. Fuquay Springs water was our first objective, and the result was four pounds added by Rowland and six and one-half by me; but I needed weight more than he. The benefit otherwise was of more value than avoirdupoise, clearing up our blood, increasing our appetite, and improving our looks.

We enjoyed several trips to Mr. J. B. Johnson's home and pond. Rowland caught one bass that weighed 4½ pounds; and another that tipped the scales at 6½ pounds; and yet another much heavier that he did not land as it carried away his borrowed artificial minnow; but it furnished a fishing text for many piscatorial addresses; and that put new life and hope into Rowland's mind. Fishing is good for grouch, despondency, loss of energy, and faded imagination. The good dinners at Johnson's were as much enjoyed as the fishing, and that is saying enough.

On the first Sunday in August we went to Catawba Springs where Rev. J. Lec Johnson who is very much beloved by his congregation, was beginning a revival meeting with a good attendance. I preached at that service. We ate dinner at Brother Sam Rowland's—a typical rural feast—and went to Plymouth church in the afternoon where Dr. Rowland preached and I taught a Sunday school class. That was Rowland's home church where he held his membership and began to preach. The people were delighted to see their friend and that gave me introduction to their confidence and good will. No man gets very far alone. Those who introduce us and indorse us are great assets in our lives. We get into the Kingdom through mediation of Jesus Christ, and we will enter heaven through Him.

We spent the second Sunday as the guest of Mr. Thornton Rowland and his good wife who was confined to her bed with what we hope is only temporary indisposition.

We attended Sunday school and church at the First Christian church, Raleigh, where Rev. J. V. Knight is the popular pastor with a growing work. They are planning for a new church building in 1922. I sat with the Baraca Class taught by Prof. L. L. Vaughn of the A. & E. College and his exposition of the lesson was fine. At eleven o'clock I preached and Dr. Rowland at night. The congregations were good for vacation month and especially so at night.

In the afternoon we motored to Auburn where pastor Knight was beginning a meeting. My daughter, Willic, had taught school there when a girl and many of her friends greeted me in her praise. I preached again and we enjoyed the hour. Rowland had preached at this church and the congregation was glad to see him. After service we stopped at the home of Mr. James Branch, where peaches, cantaloupes and watermelons were served in country style—that is, in abundance.

On Monday morning, August 15, we ate breakfast and left Raleigh at six o'clock. Our breakfast was prepared by James the only and good son of Mr. Thornton Rowland as his mother was not able to be out of bed. Then James drove the car as far as Warrenton where we left him at his grandfather Gardner's. We reached Franklin at 4:15 P. M., after delay of an hour by a tire puncture and blowout.

ELON LETTER

I WISH to take this means of expressing my grateful thanks to the dear friends who have so loyally assisted the office and field workers of the College this summer in their effort to give Elon a good enrollment this fall. It seems to me the response to every suggestion for help has been unusually gratifying. Ministers and lay workers, alumni and students have all royally presented our cause and the success we shall achieve will be due in large measure to them.

I am particularly gratified at the manner in which our people have rallied to "The Church's Educational System". We must keep at it along this line and in a few years we will have the best trained ministry and laity in the South. Our people have never been afraid to pioneer the way. New ideas have been our specialty. This idea will, when it becomes universally applied, revolutionize our Church work.

Then too the splendid letters that have been appearing in The Burlington News this summer have rejoiced my heart. Last spring when the Methodist Protestants were seeking a suitable location for their college in this State, Alamance County, offered them about $200,000 to locate on a fine tract of ground between Burlington and Graham. The proposed college went to High Point. That suggested to Editor O. F. Crowson, of The Burlington News that maybe Alamance had not fully appreciated Elon, a college in Alamance with thirty-one years of history behind it. He wrote an editorial along that line and since then in almost every issue, of which there are two a week, he has had one or more letters from the country's most distinguished citizens expressing their appreciation of Elon. These have been people of other Churches than ours with the one exception of a very fine letter from Mr. J. M. Fix, who spoke as a patron.

There is not space to print even excerpts from all these letters. So I shall print the one written by Hon. E. S. Parker, Graham, and a splendid layman of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Parker wrote under date of July 2 and said:

"There are not many Colleges in North Carolina and when we think of the fact that our county is one of those fortunate counties in whose bounds there is a college, we should be profoundly grateful. That the people of Alamance do recognize the benefits that come from the presence in their midst of such an institution as a Christian college, was demonstrated when they made the magnificent offer to obtain the Methodist Protestant college. They failed to obtain that college, but they have as great an opportunity now as then and that opportunity is to build and make larger and more powerful Elon College. We are grateful that Elon College is in Alamance, but to paraphrase, 'Gratitude without works is dead'. It has not been my privilege to know intimately the work that is done in the class rooms at Elon, but I have had both the opportunity and the occasion to observe the spirit and atmosphere around that institution and certainly it is such that even the visitor there for a day comes away better for that day. During the war it was a perfect hot bed of patriotism and yet it was a patriotism of the understanding kind.

"While Elon is the denominational college of the Christian Church, yet, under the leadership of its President, it is broader in its teaching and its influence than any single denomination can be. Its President, Dr. Harper, while intensely loyal to the Christian Church and its college, is so broad in his views that he is constantly called upon to talk in churches of every denomination, and he, personally, and the institution that he heads subordinates denominationalism to true Christian training. What such an institution means to the county cannot be estimated and to support it should be regarded as a privilege because it means a great future for our country's citizenship to be trained in these things that are so worth while.

"If some other county had the privilege of obtaining an institution like Elon, we know what they would do. Will Alamance be less appreciative of what she has?"

Nor would I be satisfied to close this letter did I fail to express my most grateful thanks to Brother Riddle for his splendid editorials and for the space he has accorded others in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

All in all, the summer's campaign has been a pleasant, though strenuous one, pleasant because of the united effort of the Church. Brethren, we have fought a good fight together. The results are with One wiser than we. Let us earnestly pray for His continual blessings upon our College.

W. A. HARPER.

MINISTERIAL COURTESY

J T. Bowden, in Biblical Recorder

This, my brethren, is a subject that is rarely ever brought to our attention in public discussions. And yet I am persuaded that there is a smouldering feeling among many of our good pastors that a better understanding would save us much embarrassment.

I believe the professors of homiletics in our theological seminaries would do well to say more about ministerial courtesy to the younger preachers, for we are certain that it is a matter that should receive considerable attention, especially that part which touches the relation of ministers to the churches of which they were formerly pastors.

Time and again we have known pastors to have their difficulties multiplied beyond reason because their predecessors persisted in maintaining quasi-pastoral relations to their former churches, or at least to some of the members. They have corresponded more or less regularly with their old parishoners; they have received their confidences as to the work of their successor and the condition of the church; they have officiated at marriages and funerals; they have frequently visited in the town community, spent their vacations there, sharing the lavished kindnesses. One is only surprised that these ministers ever resigned the pastorates of churches which they so loved, and in which they are so greatly needed.

Now the rule of ministerial courtesy in this matter, it seems to us, is clear and definite. An ex-minister should hold no official relations whatever with his former church except with the full knowledge and approval of his successor. If his services are needed and desired at funerals or marriages he should make it the condition of his presence that the pastor of the church is present also, and when he visits there he should invariably make his first call on the pastor. He should be scrupulously careful to recognize his position as pastor at all times. In short, he should recognize in the fullest way the rights of the pastor, and never say or write anything which has the color of infringing upon the pastor's prerogatives, or that would give pain to the most sensitive successor.

We do not urge these conditions simply for the sake of respecting the position of the pastor, though that consideration alone is sufficient, but each pastor is entitled to the fullest and undivided loyalty of his people, and to the full advantage of the impression made by his own personality and methods. These interferences from outside are distracting to the people. They suggest comparisons. They throw the deficiencies of the actual pastor in high relief if he is weaker at some points than his predecessor. They feed the highly imaginative or otherwise sensitive and jealous ones and make his work more difficult than it would have been. Sometimes they rob him of the conditions of success.

The truth is that after a man resigns a pastorate of a church he holds an entirely different relation to it. He should think of that before he resigns. A resignation means the absolute sundering of the old official relation. After a minister has resigned, his first duty is to give his successor a fair chance.

Tear gas is being used now to disperse mobs. It is a chemical gas which chokes the victim and causes a copious flow of tears.

"Between the two classes of savers, those who save money and those who save homes, the latter are to be preferred."

OUR MINISTERIAL SHORTAGE

A Temporary Solution of the Problem

WHO WILL TAKE THEIR PLACES?

Prospects now are that we are to have more pastorless churches in the Conferences of the Southern Christian Convention next year than has been witnessed in our generation.

Rev. J. C. Barret, Harrisonburg, Va., leaves a pastorate of strong, well established churches, to enter Defiance College, O., in September; Rev. F. C. Lester, Graham, N. C., leaves a pastorate of two good churches, to enter a university for post graduate work this fall; Rev. A. T. Banks, Ramseur, N. C., leaves a substantial pastorate for post graduate work in a theological school this fall; Rev. B. F. Black, Franklinton, N. C., leaves a full pastorate for university work; Rev. E. T. Cotten, Suffolk, Va., with a strong pastorate of near-by churches, and Rev. C. J. Felton, of our good Newport News, Va., church have both accepted work the coming year with our churches in Canada. Here are six of our strong, loyal, vigorous, active pastors going out from us this year. And this writer does not know of any to take their places. In addition to these, Rev. H. W. Dowding resigned our First church of Portsmouth, Va., last spring to go to England, and since January first we have built a nice, good church in Prentis Place, Portsmouth. These two pulpits have been supplied by two of our men from Yale University, viz., Revs. H. Shelton Smith and E. H. Rainey respectively; but both of these return to Yale with the opening of the fall term, thus creating two vacancies. Here we have an absolute shortage of eight men seven more than we had last year with not one to take their places. Is it not time that we at least were praying devoutly, as our Lord commanded that we should; "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest that he would send laborers into his harvest?"

J. O. ATKINSON.

OCCUPY "TILL I COME"—

 HAVE noted with interest recent editorials in THE SUN as well as other comments upon the dearth of young men offering themselves for the ministry, as well as having read the several articles upon "If I Were A Preacher" and vice versa. I am not a prophet nor a son of one, nor am I an expert on the subject but perhaps an expression from me might be helpful.

I am of the opinion, as expressed by the Editor and others, that the cause lies in a decadence of real vital piety in the home. And that goes deeper than a mere mockery of reading the Bible and family prayers. We may have our daily Bible reading and prayers, but if there is no sincere desire to follow implicitly the teachings of God's Word it becomes sacrilege.

Parental authority as ordained of God and taught in His Word has ceased to exist because of disbelief in the Divine plans and in its stead has developed a man-made substitute.

Friction between the dual head, frequently culminating in divorce, makes its impression upon the children and naturally they do not lean toward spiritual things. This condition will continue until there shall be a return to a full recognition of Jehovah as our Supreme and Spiritual Father and Jesus Christ as His manifestation in the flesh. Our one and only Head. This awakening and return will require the active, constant and consecrated effort of every true and sincere believer. I believe therefore, our every effort should be put forth to place and individual task before every Christian.

Our Sunday schools are doing a great work but they occupy only a small field. Our Christian Endeavor Societies are doing great work, but they also occupy only a small field. These and other like organizations are hedged about by limitations placed upon them by the church (speaking not of a particular organization, but as the great body of followers in general). Our vacant pulpits, it seems to me, present a field for service for the laymen to occupy "till He come". As all pastors are not ten talented men, so laymen may not be even one talented, but perhaps several laymen together may under proper direction combine to make a talent. All farmers are not well trained but they do not allow a field to grow up in weeds because they do not have an experienced man to cultivate it, but frequently good crops are harvested by farmer boys—amateurs. Christian Endeavorers have demonstrated their ability to conduct services and have within their ranks many capable of doing good work for the Kingdom under proper leadership. Following the "Billy Sunday" campaigns, there have been organized in many cities "Billy Sunday" clubs, composed of laymen to carry on the evangelistic work set in motion by the great leader. I have the honor of being chairman of Prayer Meeting Committee of one of these clubs. We have organized three regular sub-committees of five members each who have been sent out from place to place to conduct services, definite programs being arranged in advance, somewhat along the line of C. E. programs and we have report of excellent work being done. We have been filling two regular appointments. At the same time we have had other special committees doing similar work. Can we not under a similar arrangement fill every vacant pulpit in our field, at the same time praying for the Lord to send forth laborers? Simply "occupying till He come."

One of our programs was as follows:

"SABBATH OBSERVANCE"

1. Its Institution—Gen. 2:2-3.
2. Why Ordained—Mark 2:27.
3. Things Lawful—Matt. 12:12.
4. The Greatest Gift—Matt. 28:1-3.
5. Keep it Holy—Ex. 20:8.

One member of the Committee being assigned to read and discuss not exceeding five minutes each, one of the topics.

One of the greatest results has been the getting of five men to read and study a section of the Bible upon a vital question.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Approximately 6,000,000 people in the United States are unemployed, according to a recent estimate of the Department of Labor. This is equivalent to one person out of every ten being idle and in many cases dependent upon the remaining nine that work. Such a wave of unemployment seems to be increasing rather than decreasing, and when considered in terms of reluctant decline in the cost of living, it gives no little concern to hundreds of thousands of families who are dependent upon a specific and declining wage.

But forces are being organized to increase employment. In New York City and several other large cities, where unemployment is always manifested in extremes, the municipal authorities have organized themselves to study the conditions of the present unemployment. Most noted of these bodies to fight unemployment in New York City is the Board of Estimates, which is expected to establish employment bureaus and other means of bringing the employer into closer touch with the employees. In his statement to the Board of Estimates Mayor Hylan said:

"The problem of unemployment particularly in view of the possibility that the approaching fall and winter season may witness the continuance of the industrial depression now existing in many lines of activity, is of such vital importance to the social side of the community that it is deserving of the most sincere and thorough consideration."

In respect to increasing employment, the New York Tribune, relating our present industrial ills largely to the hitch in our system of transportation, writes:

"Not only does the railroad business wait anxiously for final action on the railroad bill, which has been passed in the House by a vote of 214 to 128, but practically all the business of the country.

"If the railroads are able to make improvements which must be made if rates are to come down, a great army now idle will get work. Not only this, but the demand for goods thus created will bring confidence where now there is doubt. If a half billion is spent on railway betterment it means employment for a half million men for six months. The effect of the prospect would be immediate. When other labor demands are light is a good time to carry on work for permanent improvement."

PEACE SIGNED BETWEEN U. S. AND GERMANY

The treaty of peace recently drawn up between the United States and Germany has been signed, giving us the full right of territory won by the Allies and expressly cutting America from the League of Nations. Although the relations between this country and Germany since the war have been of a friendly nature, this is the first formal ending of the state of war declared April 6, 1917.

According to this treaty of peace our rights under the Treaty of Versailles are assured, but we are not to be tied up to a decision as to Shantung and other similar questions, neither is the United States bound to take part in "Allied Commissions", save that we elect to do so. This is a treaty by which the United States reaps the advantages of the Treaty of Versailles, but "is not bound to assume responsibility for any of them", is the opinion of the New York World. The country can participate in any of the Allied commissions with freedom of action, and in the opinion of Secretary of State Hughes "it puts us on equality with the other powers."

The immediate effect of the new treaty is realized in the field of finance, still this effect is not as yet marked. The people as a whole received the news with little enthusiasm or emotion. Historically, however, the document will probably be one of the most important. The relations between the two countries should become stronger in friendship and confidence.

NEAR-PROHIBITION IN NORWAY

The most acute political question agitating Norwegians today is that of prohibition, according to the recent account of a noted journalist, T. R. Ybarra, in the New York Times. The same old fight between the "Wets" and "Drys" which took place in this country, is being staged in Norway at present. But the situation in the latter country, in the estimation of the writer, is considerably acuter than it was in America. He states that it may at any time "overthrow the Norwegian Government."

Norway isn't bone dry in the sense that the United States is, to be sure, but the Prohibitionists have hopes that they will eventually win. Unlike the United States, Norway has an almost international fight to contend with in order to obtain prohibition. That fact seems to be the cause of the acuteness of the question of drinks.

By the terms of the near-prohibition law now in force in Norway nothing containing over 14 per cent of alcohol can be drunk by Norwegians. This is equivalent to placing a ban on sherry, port, and madeira wines, which are the great staple of wine export from France, Spain, and Portugal. The fact that the latter two countries cannot handily export their drinks, has caused no little internal and external trouble. In turn they have counteracted the Norwegian law and put a ban on Norwegian fish, which have been brought in enormous quantities in past years.

Thus the fight is on. Somewhat of a compromise has been reached between Norway and France. But prospects with Spain and Portugal are not very promising. Smuggling of wines on the rugged Norwegian coasts has ensued. The odds are in favor of the Prohibitionists, however, and it seems that they are destined to get a "good end of the bargain" finally.

On August 25 the governor of West Virginia requested the war department to send 1,000 federal troops to Logan county, at once. Trouble has again broke out in the coal fields there and it is reported that old men, women and children are fleeing the trouble zone.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

BACK TO GOD

By William Jennings Bryan

The supreme need of the day is to get back to God—to a love of God that fills the heart, the mind and the soul, and dominates every impulse and energy of the life.

Evolutionists are leading their followers away from the Creator, away from the Word of God, and away from the Son of God. They teach that man is the lineal descendent of the lower animals—that he has in him, not the breath of the Almighty but the blood of the brute. They tear out of the Old Testament the first chapter of Genesis, and then, having discarded the miracle, they tear out the first chapter of Matthew and deny the virgin birth of the Savior. They would, in effect, dethrone Jehovah, strip the Bible of its claim to inspiration, and libel the Master, by branding Him as the illegitimate son of an immoral woman. Their creed denudes life of its spiritual elements and makes man a brother to the beast.

Materialism has so paralyzed the mental machinery of the evolutionists that they cannot comprehend spiritual things. They can understand how gravity, though an invisible force, can draw all matter downward to the earth, but they cannot understand how an invisible God, all-powerful, all-wise, and all-loving, can draw the souls of men upward toward His throne. Their minds are open to the most absurd hypotheses advanced in the name of science, but their hearts are closed to the plainest spiritual truths.

These exponents of a brutish philosophy have entered our universities with boldness; they have crept into some of our Christian colleges by stealth; they have even wormed their way into a few of our theological seminaries. They make agnostics and atheists of a multitude of trusting students; they turn many young men away from the ministry; they palsy the zeal of some who stand behind the pulpit.

It is time the Christians of the country should understand the ravages that the groundless hypothesis of Darwin is making. It is depriving the Church of the support of young men, and young men who ought to be its leaders; it furnished Nietzsche with a basis for his godless philosophy, a philosophy which led the world into its bloodiest war, and it is bringing chaos into the industrial world. What can be done to combat it and to save church and civilization from its benumbing influence?

First, those who preach and teach should be called upon to announce their views so that their positions may be clearly understood. Every citizen has a right to think as he pleases—to worship God according to the dictates of his conscience, or to refuse to worship Him. That is an inalienable right that should not under any circumstances be interfered with, but those who employ a minister for themselves or an instructor for their children have a right to know what the preacher is to preach and what the teachers are to teach.

Second, only Christians should be permitted to teach in Christian schools and colleges. If denominational schools cannot find Christian instructors to teach every branch of learning that needs to be taught, they have no reason for existence.

Third, Christian taxpayers should insist upon a real neutrality in religion, whenever neutrality is necessary. The Bible should not be attacked where it cannot be defended. Professors, paid by the public, should not be permitted to undermine the religious faith of students. No amount of education can compensate for the destruction of faith. Out of the heart, not out of the head, are the issues of life; as a man thinketh in his heart, not as he thinketh in his head, so is he.

The sin of this generation is mind worship—a worship as destructive as any other form of idolatry. To your tents, O Israel.—New Era Magazine.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

The writer had a very pleasant visit to the Virginia Valley Christian Conference. It is always a pleasure to visit that Conference and meet the good people of that section. The Virginia Valley is a beautiful country and is very prosperous. The mountains are so beautiful to one who has lived in a flat country and who has never had the pleasure of seeing so much earth piled up in one big pile.

I had the pleasure of meeting my old friend Mr. Lisky, in whose home I spent several days and nights some years ago while attending Conference in that section. He and I are going to take a bear hunt sometime in the future. I have often heard big bear stories and read them in books when a boy, many years ago, but I want to be able to tell some exciting bear stories from my own experience. So sometime when I get an opportunity and can take a week off I am going to visit Brother Lisky and we will take that long-planned hunt. When I return I know I will be able to tell of many exciting stories and the bravery I showed when I met the big bears. I know all the children will enjoy my letters when I am describing the exciting time I had with the big bears.

The weather continues dry with us and our gardens have dried up. Tomatoes have given out and it has been so dry that late plantings have done no good.

We are having many applications for a place in the Orphanage for little helpless children while writing of a home. We had three applications while writing this letter from three little children in Alabama. Our income is small at this time and sometimes is discouraging. We have so many pleading for a place and we can give quite a number a place within the next few weeks if we can get income enough to care for them.

We are glad a number of our Sunday schools, that have not been making the monthly offering have joined the faithful in the last few weeks. We want every Sunday school on the roll this year. What school will join this band of happy workers in the next month?

not be used for kindergarten purposes according to law, but has a kitchen and two rooms for the kindergarten teachers. Of course these have tatami. Upstairs and down are largely glass on the south, and the east and north, also have some windows downstairs, as does the kitchen upstairs. The kindergarten building is near enough to the church that the two can be connected by a bridge. The roof is tile. Until the June treasury statements come, I can not give an exact report on cost. The contract price was slightly over 4200 yen ($2100) and there were a few minor additional expenses. The patrons raised a fund to aid, which Miss Stacy and the teachers were using in the purchase of an organ, a clock, etc., as I left. It has always been next to impossible to rent rooms for the teachers and we are very glad to have our own rooms for them."

This is gratifying and we sincerely trust all our Sunday schools will adopt this financial program as our Southern Christian Convention has voted all should do.

A NEW KINDERGARTEN AT OJI, JAPAN

We are happy to announce the practical completion at Oji, Japan, of a splendid new kindergarten building, a short description of which follows from the pen of Brother Garman, and other interesting details of which Miss Stacy writes in the September number of The Christian Missionary. When we remember that Oji, a suburb of Tokyo, has about forty thousand laboring people almost entirely dependent upon our one little church there for Christian enlightenment and that one of the surest ways to reach them is through the children, we can begin to realize what this new kindergarten building will mean to the work. For some four or five years our workers have been running the kindergarten there under great difficulties, but their faith and devotion have at last been rewarded.

The money for this splendid addition to our kindergarten work in Oji was secured by careful management on the part of the mission resulting in a surplus from the annual appropriations during the last few years sufficient to make it possible. Such economy and wise use of funds on the part of the mission will surely receive the hearty commendation of those in this country who give of their means for this cause.

Mr. Garman, who had supervision of the building operations, writes as follows:

"It is a two-story Japanese building with an oak floor instead of tatami (matting). The upstairs can

The presence of soldiers in Concord, N. C., soon ended the strike there. The mills are reopening and the employees going back to work without any disorder. It is expected that every mill in Cabarrus County will be open again within two or three days.

WANTED—LEADERS

One solution of the ever-perplexing problem of efficient leadership in all our Church work is found in our Teacher Training Classes in our Sunday schools and in our classes studying "Expert Endeavor" in our Christian Endeavor Societies. "There is no inspiration without information" and these classes are in many places inspiring Christian people to undertake greater work for their Master and for his Church.

A second solution of the problem of leadership is found in our Christian College. To the Sunday schools of the Southern Christian Convention is given the task and opportunity of furnishing the student body of our Elon College. The College, exists to serve the Church, and in turn needs the Church to support it with prayer, money and students. The card "The Church's System of Education" as published by the Board of Education of the Convention, shows how intimately related the College is to the educational branch of the Church, the Sunday school. As the members of the Christian Church of the South come more and more to see this relationship, and as they recognize it in their Sunday school work, they will give Elon the opportunity for larger service. It will be the natural thing for the boys and girls to go to their own college, and to come back prepared for service in the church. Leaders cannot be produced in a moment. They are the work of years, of long-planned effort and training. Let us in our Sunday schools of today begin to provide for our Sunday schools and Church of tomorrow by believing in our "Church's System of Education" and by impressing it upon our boys and girls from their childhood days, and by working to bring about the ideal "Every Sunday School of the Southern Christian Convention Represented at Elon College," and hence, "Elon College serving every Sunday school."

"CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR IS GROWING."

"Christian Endeavor is growing." So says Mr. Edward P. Gates, General Secretary of the United Society of Christian Endeavor at the recent World's Convention in New York City. Secretary's report shows that nine thousand, two hundred, and thirty-eight new Christian Endeavor Societies have been organized during the past two years. He also reports that any losses in total membership which Christian Endeavor may have suffered as a result of the war conditions have been more than made up. The number of Christian Endeavor Societies is larger today than it has ever been, and more denominations and nations are represented in its fellowship. Secretary Gates gave three fundamental reasons for this remarkable growth: First, because Christian Endeavor is adaptable; second, because Christian Endeavor is loyal to the Church; third, because Christian Endeavor is continually emphasizing spiritual things. Every Christian Endeavorer will agree that the Society possesses these three vital characteristics, and that these very qualities show every Church its need of a Christian Endeavor Society. A Society which can adapt itself to the large city church and to the countryside, as Christian Endeavor has demonstrated that it can; a Society with a forty years' record of intense loyalty to the church; an organization which stresses the spiritual things in a day which has a materialistic trend; truly this is an organization to be desired to help promote the work of the church through its youth. Rev. Thomas Davies, President of the Welsh National Christian Endeavor Union, has said: "It has, indeed, become a by-word in many churches if anything is waiting to be done: 'Oh, ask the C. E.—they'll see to it.'" All of our churches have a place in their program for such service and miss much when they do not have it.

CHILDREN'S DAY REPORT

Has your Sunday school had your Children's Day exercises? Are you interested in the fact, that we have a Field Secretary, who is giving her entire time to the advancement of the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work in the Southern Christian Convention?

Are you willing to do your bit toward financing this great work? If so, read the list of Sunday schools that have sent in offerings, and if you fail to find your school in this list, get busy, and have a Children's Day program, and give them a chance. Be sure you do this (even if you have put it off too long). Any time this year will do, and the Board of Religious Education will appreciate your efforts. The following schools have sent in their donations to this work:

W. B. Byrd, $1.00; Richmond, $4.00; Centerville, $4.80; Bethlehem, $4.00; Reidsville, $9.30; Henderson, $5.52; New Lebanon, $3.05; Raleigh, $13.68; New Port Christian Church, $1.75; New Hope Sunday School, $2.65; Leaksville Sunday School, $5.25; Winchester Sunday School, $10.91; Long's Chapel Sunday School, 2.30; Mt. Olivet (R) Sunday School, $2.34; Oakland, (Va.), $7.79. Total, $78.34.

This is a fine record for the fifteen schools that have so nobly responded, and we appreciate their efforts, feeling that these schools have been benefitted themselves. But what about the vast number of schools that are "at ease in Zion?" If you think the work worth while, again I say get busy. Thank you.

BETHLEHEM AND ANTIOCH MEETINGS

The meeting at Bethlehem started the fifth Sunday in July, with two services a day and closed on the Friday following. I was assisted by Brother Elisha Bradshaw. He is a good preacher and a good worker. God blessed his efforts. As a result of this meeting, we had fifteen converts, twelve accessions to the church, and a great many reconsecrations. It was truly an old time revival of the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ. Quarterly meeting was held and the Lord's Supper was commemorated while there, and I collected $70.00 to pay a pastor for the coming year. Bethlehem church is in a good condition with fifty-seven members enrolled.

We left Bethlehem Saturday and went across the Roanoke river to Antioch church. We entered, having the Holy Spirit with us. We had a large crowd on Sunday and they continued to come during the week. Good dinners were enjoyed by all. As a result of this meeting twenty-eight professions were made and twenty-three joined the church, with one or two to join yet. Brother Bradshaw did some fine preaching at Antioch and endeared himself to the people at that place. We also held quarterly meeting here and commemorated the Lord's Supper. One hundred dollars was collected to pay the pastor for the coming year. Antioch has about eighty-five members enrolled.

I expect to preach at Antioch the third Sunday in September at eleven o'clock and at three o'clock meet at the ferry on the Roanoke river and baptize for both churches Bethlehem and Antioch. I expect about thirty-five candidates for baptism. If my health does not permit me to fill this engagement, I will get some young man to do so.

I would recommend that Brother Elisha Bradshaw go before the Committee on Education and be recommended for license to be ordained at the next Conference. He is zealous and unassuming, a good worker and preacher. Any church would be fortunate in securing him for pastor.

BETHEL

Revival services began with the Christian church at Mt. Bethel the third Sunday in July and continued until the following Friday. Rev. John G. Truitt did the preaching to the delight of all who heard him. Brother Truitt is a strong preacher of the truth and we predict for him a successful career in the work of the Master. There were large congregations every day and the interest was good in every service. There were three professions and three additions. It was a good meeting. The work at Mt. Bethel is showing signs of new life. The Sunday school is doing well. The attendance at the regular church services is increasing from time to time. The work in general is progressing nicely, and to God we give the glory.

W. L. WELLS.

NEW LEBANON

The fourth Sunday in July was the beginning of a series of revival services with the New Lebanon church. Bro. F. C. Lester preached for us, and he did it well. His sermons were well prepared and well received. He is a consecrated young man and gives promise of a most useful life for the Master's cause. He has his eye on the foreign field. May heaven's blessings ever attend him as he goes to represent the Master in other lands.

At the close of the meeting there was one young man to unite with the church on profession of faith in Christ. May God lay it upon the heart of this young man to be a minister of the Gospel. The work at New Lebanon is most encouraging. We have some splendid talent there, and we are looking for the church to go forward.

The first Sunday in August, revival services started with the Happy Home church, and continued through Friday. Rev. A. T. Banks assisted us. Brother Banks' sermons were strong and convincing. The people were pleased to have him in the meeting. He is one of our successful preachers. We understand that he is to leave his present field of work this fall and go to school to further prepare himself for a better day.

The results in these meetings were not what we had hoped for. A week is not long enough with the average church to experience what is considered a real genuine revival. As a rule when a meeting starts, the spiritual temperature registers low, and it requires about a week or more to get the spiritual temperature to a fervent boiling heat, and when our spiritual cups begin to overflow, souls are going to be saved, and Zion is going to move.

The pastor recently has been remembered by many of the good people of this pastorate, with such things as chickens, butter, eggs, milk, melons, and vegetables. These good things are always gladly received and the pastor and family are most grateful to every one who has contributed to their temporal needs.

Ether—The revival meeting began at Ether on July 17 and closed on July 22. The attendance was very good from the beginning to the close. The singing was splendid.

Rev. J. S. Carden, Durham, N. C., was with us the first day of the meeting and had charge of the services. He had been here before and this was a renewal of friendship, as well as the making of new friends. He brought forceful, simple gospel messages. He is full of enthusiasm and it is good to fellowship with him. May God bless his efforts elsewhere.

There were seven professions during the meeting and the church much revived and strengthened. All glory and honor to Him who is King of kings, for what was accomplished.

Concord—A series of revival meetings began at Concord, Caswell County, N. C., the fifth Sunday in July and closed August 5. Large congregations attended each service, and the interest was splendid from start to finish.

Rev. Neil Rowland, Fort Worth, Texas, came to our assistance on Monday and did the preaching. This was our first work with him, and it was good to be with him. He is a super-annuated minister of the M. E. Church and does revival work during the summer months. He brought inspiring messages, and was heard with rapt attention. We hope to be with him again.

There were six professions during the meeting, and four additions to the church. To God belongs the glory for the good accomplished.

Mt. Pleasant—On the first Sunday in August the revival meeting began at Mt. Pleasant, closing the Thursday night following. The interest was good and the congregation large.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, Elon College, N. C., was with us from Monday night, and did the preaching. He is a promising young minister who puts himself into the work. His messages were simple and full of enthusiasm.

There were thirty professions and reclaimations. Fifteen additions to the church, with eleven to be baptised by immersion. The church was much revived and filled with hope for a better future.

This is my first year as pastor of this church, and the work has been pleasant in every way. For all that has been done all praise would be to Him who rules above.

L. L. WYRICK.

FROM BROTHER B. J. EARP'S FIELD

Danville—We began work in Danville the fourth Sunday in June. A revival had just been conducted by Rev. Victor Lightbourne with his assistant Mr. Sam Davis, who rendered excellent service at the piano. Mr. Lightbourne's sermons were of the highest type. There were twenty-two decisions for Christ.

The Sunday school with Mr. Siviter as the efficient superintendent, is doing good work. The work of the parsonage had to be postponed for the time being as the committee on ways and means failed to realize sufficient money to build.

Damascus—The first Sunday in each month we have been going to Damascus, Gates County, N. C. The most important feature here being the revival that was held the week after the first Sunday in August. Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk, Va., was with us and did the preaching, also led the singing, which was an inspiration to us all. Dr. and Mrs. I. W. Johnson of Suffolk, Va., were present on Wednesday, and rendered very helpful assistance. Rev. Mr. Harrell of the Baptist church was also present most of the week, and by his earnest prayers and faithful co-operation proved a great help to the meeting. The sermons of Brother Poythress were full of power from start to finish, and thru his earnestness has won the hearts of many friends. There were twenty-one decisions for Christ and fourteen to unite with the church.

Mt. Olivet—At Mt. Olivet there is a splendid opportunity for real service. We have been going there once a month since March. The church is in better condition now than when we first began there. We did the preaching for the revival, at the request of the church. There were eight decisions for Christ and six of them united with the church. The churches in Green and Albemarle counties should unite and locate a man in their midst. I have found the work of my field difficult because of the much scattered condition of it, and yet the people have been exceedingly nice to cooperate with me the best they could. I shall regret very much to resign any of my work for another year, and yet the loss of time, energy and money, going from one church to another over one hundred miles apart is not best for the work or me either. So, unless a part of my present field can make arrangements with other work near by I shall be compelled to accept any field that calls me for full time. Should such a field desire my services I shall be very glad to give it due consideration.

B. J. EARP.

ANTIOCH

Our revival meeting will commence at Antioch Christian church on the third Sunday in September, the Lord willing. We are praying and hoping that we may have a gracious revival of religion on that occasion and many souls may be born into the Kingdom and added to the church, such as shall be saved.

Dr. W. W. Staley of Suffolk, Va., will be with us, the Lord willing. We hope the brethren will pray for us, that we may have success in saving souls for the Master. We will have all day meetings, two services—one in the morning. Prayer meeting at 10 o'clock, preaching at 11 o'clock, one service in the afternoon, preaching at 2 o'clock. Come and help us, we are going to have a good time with our Lord in His great work in trying to save souls and building up His Kingdom.

PRICE

Sister Ida L. Bason Price was born June 18, 1870, died August 3, 1921, aged fifty-one years, one month and sixteen days.

She was married to J. G. Price January 13, 1895. To this union were born six children, five of whom survive.

Sister Price gave her heart to God in early life and joined the Christian church at Mt. Bethel, of which church she was a member at the time of her death. Her going was sudden, but her summons did not find her unprepared. She was taken ill at the church, was carried home and died in a few minutes. She loved her church, and was faithful to attend its services on all occasions. She was a devoted wife and loving mother. A chair is left vacant in the home, but her sterling qualities will never be forgotten and her influence will abide.

Funeral services conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. E. N. Johnson, at Mt. Bethel church in the presence of a large congregation. Interment in the church cemetery. May God comfort the sorrow-stricken husband and children in this hour of their bereavement.

Bro. W. D. Newman was born December 21, 1845. Was called home August 6, 1921. He married Miss Rhoda C. Moss December 19, 1866. She preceded him about four years, after a companionship of 50 years. Thirteen children were born to this union, ten living: E. M. Newman, Mrs. C. D. Harton, W. A., D. L. and K. H. Newman, Mrs. E. J. Hicks, J. H. and C. E. Newman, Mrs. R. L. Champion, Mrs. L. W. Painter. There were 59 grandchildren, 49 living; 35 great grandchildren, 29 living.

He had been a consistent member of the church from an early age, first of Mt. Auburn, and in later years, of Henderson. Many will miss his warm hand shake and cheerful greeting, and especially his presence at church, the services of which he often attended though much afflicted for several years. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones.

R. L. WILLIAMSON.

GOLLADAY

Laura Golladay, wife of John Golladay, was born February 1, 1872, and died August 7, 1921, aged forty-nine years, six months, and six days. Sister Golladay was a member of Mayland Christian church. She had been confined to her bed for several years before her death; and, though, unable to attend church, never seemed to lose interest. She always spoke freely of her approaching death, and seemed fully prepared to go and be with the Lord. She leaves her husband, two daughters, and an aged mother to mourn her departure. Funeral services were held August 9, 1921 at Concord, near which church the family lives, and the remains laid to rest in the adjoining cemetery.

A. W. ANDES.

SALYARDS

Mary Susan Salyards, who was born April 9, 1868, died August 8, 1921. Her age was fifty-three years, three months and twenty-nine days. Her death came as a shock to her many friends, few of whom realized that her condition was serious. She was the wife of William Salyards, and the family lives near Concord church. Thirteen children were born into the home, five of whom died in infancy. A married son was killed by a train about seven years ago. The husband and seven children survive. Sister Salyards was a faithful member of Concord Christian church, a good wife and mother, and an obliging neighbor. Funeral services were held at Concord August 10, 1921.

A. W. ANDES.

GRIFFIN

Mrs. Carrie Griffin, widow of the late Joseph Griffin, died August 14, 1921, aged fifty-one years. She was a good Christian mother and a faithful member of Cypress Chapel Christian church. Her home community and church have all sustained in her death a great loss, but their loss has been her eternal gain. She was fully resigned to the will of her Lord and said just before she passed away, "There is not a cloud before I am going where the tree of life is blooming". She leaves five children, four sons, all were living with her except her daughter, Mrs. Minie E. Barnes of Portsmouth, Va.; three sisters; five brothers; one granddaughter, Martha Virginia Barnes, and many relatives and friends.

The funeral services were conducted by her ex-pastor at her church and her remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery. God bless the dear bereaved one.

H. H. B.

TURNER

Benjamin Newton Turner, son of William and Katie Turner, of Graham, N. C., was born July 12, 1860, died August 15, 1921, and was buried in the cemetery at New Providence, August 16. For many years he was connected with The Alamance Gleaner. His health failed him. He brooded over his condition. Reason tottered on the throne. In the gloom of a lonely, sad hour, he cut his own throat with a pocket knife. What is the condition of a man's mind when he decides to commit suicide, I know not. It is a shoreless sea, and the fogs never lift. "Ben", as he was called by his most in-imate friends, was never married. A professed Christian, a kind friend, an agreeable neighbor, and a very industrious man, when able to work.

D. A. LONG.

SMITH

Henry H. Smith, aged 42 years, died at the city hospital, Columbus, Georgia, August 18, 1921, after an illness of about three months. He is survived by only one son, Pearson Smith, aged 14 years, and his stepmother, Mrs. Wessie Smith, of Eldorado, Ark. The funeral was conducted by the writer and the interment was made in the Girard cemetery. May the Holy Spirit comfort the little son in his deep sorrow.

R. F. BROWN.

HENTON

Robert Albert Henton was born June 21, 1860, and died August 18, 1921 at the age of sixty-one years, one month, and twenty-seven days. The deceased was a faithful member of the Antioch Christian church, since he united with the church at the age of sixteen. For many years prior to his death he was a deacon of the church. Bro. Henton was one of those faithful, loyal members of the church such as it is always a pleasure to find, and a sad loss to lose. He is survived by his widow, who before marriage was Miss Mary Elizabeth Byrd, and who is no less a faithful member of Antioch than was her devoted husband. Two brothers also survive. Funeral services were held at Antioch, August 21, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. C. Barrett.

A. W. ANDES.

JOHNSON

Mrs. Kissiah Johnson, widow of the late Eli B. Johnson departed this life at the home of her son, Calvin Johnson, Portsmouth, Va., August 19, 1921, aged eighty-one years, five months and thirteen days. She leaves three sons and two daughters, twenty-two grandchildren, and nineteen great grandchildren and one great grandchild. She was a member of Bethlehem Christian church from her childhood where her funeral services were held and her remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery. The Lord bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

H. H. B.

WHITMORE

William Joseph, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Charley Whitmore, died August 18, 1921 at the age of three days. The little one had only a brief stay on earth, and then was called into the companionship of Jesus and the angels. A brief service was held at the grave at Antioch, August 19.

RESOLUTIONS—RICHARDSON

Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ Whom she served many years, "Aunt Molly"—Mrs. C. C. Richardson—one of the charter members of the Ladies' Aid Society of Spring Hill Christian church, quietly passed away on July 25, 1921.

Realizing how much we shall miss her, and esteeming her loyal character and

A worth this Society wishes to express our love and respect in the following resolutions:

1. The Society has lost one who loved her church and its enterprises. She liked to come, though locked in the silence of deafness she could hear but little of the service, yet her seat by the western window was rarely vacant. We shall miss her strong, noble face, but feel she has gone to the better land where the "ears of the deaf shall be unstopped and His face is the light thereof."

2. To her fond husband, devoted sons, and daughters and grandchildren, we extend the hand of sympathy and commend them to the God she loved for comfort.

3. That a copy of these resolutions be placed upon the pages of our record and sent for publication in The Christian Sun and Wakefield Enterprise.

DEATHS BY AUTOMOBILE

Astonishing is the statement made by a New York judge. He said that in the nineteen months in which this country was at war 48,000 of our soldiers were killed or died of wounds in France, but that during the same length of time 91,000 people, principally children, had been killed in this country by automobiles. Millions of automobiles are driven by careful drivers who look to the safety of themselves and others, but there are thousands of others who are utterly reckless. There are certain things that an automobile can do safely, but there are many things that automobilists try to do which are fraught with great dangers to themselves and others. It often seems that the enforcement of the laws against speed and carelessness is very lax. We believe they ought to be rigidly enforced, and if an automobilist causes the death or injury of another the burden of proof that he had shown due care should rest upon him. If carelessness is shown, the punishment ought to be severe. Life is precious.—Presbyterian of the South.

IF UNEMPLOYED

Keep up your courage. Clouds will pass away. Business depression cannot last forever. Take your troubles to the Lord in prayer.

Hunt for work. A job may not "turn up" without your turning something over. Seek for a different sort of employment, if your regular kind is not to be secured. Do work you never dreamed of doing. A little income is better than being reduced to beggary or idleness.

Keep busy at something. There is work to be done around the home premises: repairing, painting, cleaning, gardening. Make the place shine. When other work is found, then you will have a nice home to live in.

Study and read along your chosen line. Books can be borrowed from public libraries or from friends. Be determined that when you go back to your old job you will be better equipped for service. A raise in salary may be the result, and your past unemployment period will thus show a financial return.

Leave off all luxuries. Many things may be all right as long as the money keeps coming in, but when the pay envelop ceases to make the rounds, these items must be clipped off from the budget. Articles purchased on the installment plan had better be surrendered and settlement made before more money is lost on them. Luxuries which become "white elephants" in upkeep should be sold. Put off all hired help and do the work yourself; walk instead of hiring a street car; wash, instead of sending things to laundry or washerwoman; bake, instead of buying high-priced goods; sew instead of passing out money for ready-made garments.

Borrow, if you must, from one source. Pay cash to all others. Maintain your general credit by meeting bills promptly. Groceries and other articles purchased on time are generally higher than if bought at cash stores. Do not become a slave to every tradesman, but limit your borrowing to a Morris Plan bank or some private individual.

Maintain your religious life. Keep going to church, even if your old clothes have to be cleaned, patched, pressed over and over again. "Man shall not live by bread alone," and the soul can get its spiritual food anyway. Hunt up somebody else who is in worse condition than yourself, and lend a helping hand. Tithers will continue to give a tenth of their scanty income, because they believe in the primal importance of keeping up religious devotion, and the tenth is the Lord's. God's promises will not be long in fulfillment, the windows of heaven soon being open.—Western Christian Advocate.

SMILESThe Englishman's Logic

"Rivers", said the American, "why your rivers are nothing to ours. Compared with our Hudson and Mississippi, your Mersey, Severn, and Thames are sleepy, sickly streams."

"Oh, come;" protested the Englishman. "I think your rivers are just as sickly as ours."

"How do you make that out?"

"Well, they are all confined to their beds," replied the visitor.—Boston Transcript.

Unfit for His Job

"Father," asked the small son of an editor, "is Jupiter inhabited?"

"I don't know, my son," was the truthful answer.

"Father, are there any sea serpents?"

"I don't know, my son."

"Father, what does the North Pole look like?"

But, alas! again the answer: "I don't know, my son."

At last, in desperation, he inquired with withering emphasis: "Father, how did you get to be an editor."—The American Legion Weekly.

Little Louis was a smart boy and very anxious to forge ahead in the world. He got a job in the local bank. A wealthy uncle met him in the street one morning and said:

"Well, Louis, how are you getting on in business? I s'pose the first thing we know you will be president of the bank."

"Yes, uncle," replied the boy, "I'm getting along fine. I'm draft clerk already."

"What!" exclaimed the uncle. "Draft clerk? Why, that's very surprising, but very good."

"Yes, uncle," replied the lad, "I open and shut the windows according to order, and close the doors when people leave them open!"—Youth's Companion.

Our Sufficiency

THE EDITOR

".....our sufficiency is of God"—II Corinthians 3:5

THE words—human race—spell weakness. Man has in him the spirit of adventure, but his strength is in God. Paul declared that he could do all things through Christ Who gave him strength. Christ is not only our sufficiency, but our all-sufficiency.

Where there is weakness, He can make us strong; where there is hatred and jealousies, He can give us love and good will; where there is a lack of faith, He can give us that understanding which reveals life in all its glory and fullness; where there is narrowness of mind He can clothe us with a humanity outlook and a world vision; where there is sin He can cleanse, purify and purge. All these things our Lord can do if we will submit to His will, believe upon and follow Him.

In human strength we fail. In His strength we succeed. He is our sufficiency. Accept Him.

The Zero Hour of World Affairs

REVEREND SAMUEL ZANE BATTEN, D. D., in a recent issue of The Christian Work uses the above heading as the topic of a very illuminating and interesting article. We quote, for the benefit of our readers, the following paragraphs from this well written article:

"There are several possible attitudes that men may take with reference to the world. The first is that of blank pessimism, which says that things are growing worse and there is no hope of their getting better. The second is that of blind optimism, which says that all is well and everything is coming out right. There is another attitude, that of the man who sees the evils of the world and recognizes their menace, but who believes that things can be made better and has a sense of direction in effort. Much pessimism is simple unbelief, as much optimism is mere shallowness. The sensible man can afford to ignore both of these charges and face a situation determined to know the worst about it, but believing that it can be changed for the better. It is in this state of mind that we discuss the present situation, which is indeed a zero hour in world affairs.

"First, the world is disillusioned. During the five years of war and darkness the world cherished a bright dream. The nations were fighting to make the world safe for democracy. The men who went into camp and died on the battlefield were cheered by the hope of a world that would be safe and decent for boys and girls. The folks at home toiled and gave to the end that autocracy might be destroyed and men might be free. The peoples of many nations lifted up their heads believing that the hour of their deliverance was at hand.

"Now the war is over and the world is getting down to a peace basis. But, alas, things have not come out as we had expected. The men have come back from the front to find the same old evils of greed and profiteering in the land. The high cost of living has made the struggle for existence harder than ever. Workingmen seem to be selfish and narrow and to think of their own advantage with little regard for the common welfare. Employers seem more autocratic and unreasonable than before. Profiteering is common and there seems to be no limit to men's greed. The number of millionaires has increased three-fold during the war. Statesmen appear to be just as small and partisan. As a result social tension has tightened, industrial friction has increased and general discontent is rife.

"The world today is in a serious mood. It is disillusioned and disappointed. Men live by ideas and ideals. When these fall and vanish life loses its inspiration and men are ready to plunge into the mire.

In the wrecking of his ideals and the passing of his dreams many a man has lost all spring and meaning out of life. He throws away all higher aims and drifts with the current. One man gives himself to mere money getting; another, with coarse instinct, may sink into frivolity and sensuality. In the nation itself a time of spiritual exaltation is often followed by a dangerous reaction and moral slump. Ideals are scorned and men give themselves to material things and selfish policies."

The above is a fair picture of conditions at this time. We must remember, however, that these conditions are man-wrought and not God-sought. Greed, gain, and the unlimited selfish interests that men seek bring about such chaotic conditions. This is no time to dwell upon these things. The church must continue her teachings and educate humanity to that point and place where we shall be brothers and seek for the unselfish ends of life. It is true that such is an ideal, but we must follow the gleam and not despair.

The Christians and their Publicity

THE Christians are a modest people. Their name signifies this and their great history bears them out in this statement. The Christians have never been house-top proclaimers. The debaters in the Christian denomination in the days of theological controversy were few, and as years have come and gone their number represent the type of the individual rather than the spirit of the denomination.

The Christians, while pioneers in the field of Religious Journalism, have been contented to be the forefathers of the mighty weapon—the Church paper—rather than contend for superiority in the number of their journals. The Christian Church has been contented to consider herself a mother hovering her wings over the infant disciples of Christianity, rather than to proclaim her superiority in world leadership. We have been contented with our principles, our practices and precepts. The thought of this has so embedded itself into the hearts of our people that at times it has taken almost bankruptcy of our publications to awaken us to their great peril and their dire relief. Since that Thursday evening, September 1, 1808, when Elias Smith, the pioneer of Religious Journalism laid before the public his first copy of The Herald of Gospel Liberty, or on January 1, 1844, when the pioneer of Religious Journalism in our own Southern work brought from the antiquated press of D. Heartt, Hillsboro, N. C., the first issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, our publications have seen an unbroken period of financial strain.

So far as publicity is concerned we have hid our light under a bushel. Yet our publications have been our anchor and our great cementing forces that have held us together. Small in circulation, they have winged their ways to every corner of our Brotherhood and kept alive the outstanding and vital interests of our great Brotherhood. The Herald of Gospel Liberty has been our champion and has kept before the world for nearly a century and a quarter our principles that bear the response of Christian approval the world around. THE CHRISTIAN SUN has given light, championed liberty, unified essentials, liberalized non-essentials, and exercised charity in all things for our Southern work until we are brought together as a unified people carrying forward a great program for a great cause.

Our next great undertaking should be to put THE CHRISTIAN SUN into every home. The need of this needs no argument. Where THE CHRISTIAN SUN goes we get our preachers, our teachers and our missionaries. In the homes where THE SUN is found the leading members of the denomination are found. We candidly believe that if THE CHRISTIAN SUN were in every home in our Convention that we would have more ministers today than we could reasonably use. THE CHRISTIAN SUN is our greatest missionary. It deserves our loving and our loyal support.

The Christian Missionary is the connecting link between our work and the foreign lands, and the multitude of Christian workers, missionary organizations go to make up our missionary budget. We believe that if The Christian Missionary were in every home that missionary interest would kindle in thousands of hearts and that our missionary work would grow in greater leaps and bounds.

What shall be the future program? Shall we be satisfied with this small circulation of our publications or shall we become so interested, so vitally interested in spreading their pages, until every home shall have one of these publications? It is not too much to hope; it is but a progressive program that can be put over when we stand unitedly, and work enthusiastically.

Colleges and New Students

COLLEGES are now opening and many students are entering for the first time. It is the beginning of a new era in their lives and the writing of a new chapter for each college. The one big day in the life of a young man or young woman is when he or she enters college. There are many thousands who never have, for various reasons, the slightest chance of attending college. There are many thousands who have never seen a college, and certainly those who have an opportunity of attending college are to be congratulated upon their benefits, even if they never graduate.

Of all the advice that may be given to this army of young people who enroll this year in our colleges for a larger preparation, none can be better than to say that the great things which they may expect will be in proportion to what they put into the college of their selection. It is a false reasoning that says that a college can educate regardless of the student. It cannot. A college cannot educate the student who considers himself wiser than his instructors. The first essential of learning is the acceptance by the student that he is willing to learn and anxious to know more than he knows.

There is another phase, too, aside from recognizing our inability. It is that recognition that every college abounds in great things and in great resources beyond the class room. A college is an organized social life which tends to develop the all around man—and the Christian college adds the principle of Christian life to other necessary things. The student can get out of every department of college that which he puts into it and that which he desires. The teaching forces of a college are reciprocal, and the true college forces nothing upon the student. The true college is a democracy where the methods of give and take are used, and where every student seeks to make the institution permeate with life so as to render to every person enrolled the largest possible service.

The ideal college has one law—the law of do right. The ideal student is the one who seeks to do right—right for the sake of his college, his parents, and for the sake of his own good name. The ideal student will understand that no college can give every convenience of a home, and that many home privileges may have to be given up for a successful career of self and others. The ideal student will find the imperfections of his college and seek to remedy them instead of magnifying them. He will understand that liberty is not license, and that freedom is not the avenue to abuse.

THE SUN sends its greeting to the colleges of the land and prays a blessing upon every home that furnishes a student; upon every student, new and old, and bids teachers and students God speed in this year's work.

CALL FOR DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

The peoples of earth are weary of war. They want reduction in armament to the point of well organized and orderly conducted national and international police forces. The hour has struck for obtaining this much to be desired end. With the opening of the international disarmament parley in the capital of our country the eleventh of November next, peace-loving American citizens have the greatest opportunity of their lives to secure the answer to their prayers and obtain the realization of their hopes. If they will but crystallize and focalize at Washington the disarmament sentiment of the country to support our statesmen while they lead in the discussion for this great object, there can scarcely be any failure of results.

President Eliot, of Harvard, has said: "Nobody knows how to teach morality effectively without religion. Exclude religion from education and you will leave no foundation on which to build moral character."

A leader must first of all, listen. He must know what those who he is to lead need and want.

The need of the world today is religion—not church and state—but the Christian religion—belief in God.

SUFFOLK LETTER

HAVING closed my Fuquay Springs stay of ten days, where I gained six and a half pounds and rid my system of rheumatism, I left North Carolina and visited the Valley Virginia Central Conference at Mayland in the great Virginia Valley. My home was with Mr. and Mrs. A. M. Spitzer in a big house facing the Blue Ridge mountains. Their hospitality was generous. I was the only guest, with a big car to go to and fro. Mr. Spitzer carried me to the "Endless Caverns" one morning when many conference people visited the "underworld". You wind around to the distance of one mile and a quarter amid the wonders of forms and colors that fascinate you, bewilder you, and awe you as you listen to the guide and look. The end of the cave reveals "Diamond Lake" and "Fairy Land". Nature has been revealed here in great beauty by the aid of colored electric lights. I have seen nothing upon earth, under ground, or in the art galleries of Europe equal in real beauty to these last two views. The dropping of water loaded with lime has wrought out many grand and beautiful formations that must be seen to be fully appreciated; of course imagination connects many of the formations into seeming realities and adds to the charm of the visit where total darkness reigns but for electric lights. I am told that Brother J. C. Bradford and other boys discovered this cave while pursuing a rabbit one Sunday, years ago. I was told that as many as a thousand persons have been conducted through this cave in a single day. The charge is one dollar and sixty-five cents. It is near the Valley pike, the best road in Virginia, ninety-eight miles long, from Staunton to Winchester.

The Conference was well attended, the spirit of the session was fine. President W. T. Walters knows the people and Secretary A. W. Andes has the work at fingers' ends. The Mayland church was founded by Dr. W. T. Herndon and is growing in members, liberality, and activity. Conditions are changing slowly, but surely and careful and liberal training will bring that church, and all those mountain churches, up to a higher standard of real work. Drs. Atkinson and Harper, with Editor Riddle and Superintendent Johnston, and Miss Lucy Eldredge made a good representation from the Mission Board, Elon College, THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Orphanage. Miss Eldredge made an address on Young People's work and remained over to hold institutes throughout the Conference with several churches in groups. Of course Atkinson and Harper made great addresses. They always do. Presuming that Editor Riddle will give a detailed write-up of the Conference, I am simply giving some random shots.

The closing Sunday, twenty-first, had four sermons: J. O. Atkinson, W. W. Staley, C. A. McDaniel, and J. C. Barrett, with a Valley dinner in the middle of the day and of the sermons.

I went with Dr. Walters and wife to Winchester on Sunday afternoon; stopped to see Brother Sam W. Lincoln, his wife and mother, as they live on this pike. I married Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln years ago and now their twin daughters will enter Elon in September. We reached Winchester at ten o'clock Sunday night and spent the night with Mrs. Walters' parents in a fine Valley home. They have ten children—six sons and four daughters—all married but one son who remains on the fine apple farm. While there we visited the Richard family and others during the day and returned to father Richard's at night. On Monday night Rev. W. T. Walters and wife, Rev. C. A. McDaniel, genial pastor of Winchester church, two little girls, and I went to Timber Mountain church, twenty-five miles back in the Alleghany mountains in West Virginia, where Walters preached, McDaniel sang, and Mrs. Walters recited. They have no pastor, but Brother McDaniel will go there once a month and hold service for them. A good congregation and a good service. We got back to Brother Richard's at midnight.

I returned with Brother Walters, wife and five children on Wednesday 24th leaving Winchester at 6:00 A. M., and coming in his car by Front Royal, Washington, Va., Culpepper, Orange and Louisa, all courthouse towns, and reached Richmond after many ups and downs, at midnight—just eighteen hours—with sleeping children, a hungry baby, and a tired doctor of divinity driving a car that sometimes failed to go; but we had grand mountain views, a jolly time, and a safe trip.

THE VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE

Last Sunday marked the close of a very harmonious and successful session of the Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference, held at Mayland, near Broadway, Va. Large congregations attended throughout the conference, often many more people than the church could hold.

The program as previously announced in this paper was followed with only a few minor changes.

Rev. R. P. Crumpler was received into the Conference as an ordained minister by letter of transfer from the North Carolina Conference. Bro. Crumpler has had charge of a group of churches in Page County the past year, and has done splendid work.

Rev. A. B. Kendall, pastor of the Washington church, was elected to deliver the Annual Address next year, with Rev. R. P. Crumpler as alternate.

It was voted that an apportionment of $125 be laid upon the Conference to help take care of superannuated ministers in the Southern Christian Convention. The apportionment for Church Extension was reduced so that the total apportionment upon the Conference will be slightly less than last year.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Dr. W. T. Walters, Richmond, Va.; Vice President, Dr. A. B. Kendall, Washington, D. C.; Secretary, Rev. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va.; Assistant Secretary, Rev. R. P. Crumpler, Luray, Va.; Treasurer, Samuel Earman, Harrisonburg, Va. Officers for the Woman's Home and Foreign Mission Board were elected as follows: President, Mrs. Boyd R. Richards, Winchester, Va.; Vice President, Mrs. A. B. Kendall, Washington, D. C.; Secretary, Mrs. B. F. Frank, Harrisonburg, Va.; Treasurer, Miss Verdie Showalter, Harrisonburg, Va.; Young People's Superintendent, Mrs. A. W. Andes, Harrisonburg, Va.; Superintendent of Literature, Miss Ella Pickering, Broadway, Va.; Cradle Roll Superintendent, Mrs. C. O. Taylor, Linville, Va.

The Conference voted to accept the invitation to meet with the church at Joppa in Powell's Fort next year.

Visitors from outside the conference who added much to the conference by their inspiring sermons and addresses were Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. W. A. Harper, Rev. C. B. Riddle, Supt. C. D. Johnston, and Miss Luey Eldredge.

ELON LETTER

FEW months ago I received a letter from Miss Helen Gould protesting against the social service program of the Y. W. C. A., and saying she should resign from its National Board of Directors unless it modified its position. Miss Gould declared herself as favoring "the depth rather than the breadth" of the church. I regretted this from Miss Gould, because she has been a leader in Christian work in this country. All the Y. W. C. A. had done was to endorse the Social Service Program of the Federal Council of Churches. Of course this program had the approval of thirty-one religious denominations and the Y. W. C. A. was entirely right in its position.

Soon after receiving Miss Gould's letter, another, came, signed by "The Employers' Association of Pittsburg", attacking the Y. W. C. A. and the Federal Council of Churches for the very same reason. This letter rejoiced that because of a previous bulletin issued by the Association only $90,000 of the $200,000 budget had been raised in Pittsburg for the Y. W. C. A. and contained this very remarkable sentence—"Many of our members are expressing themselves as determined to discontinue financial support of their respective churches unless they withdraw all moral and financial support from the Federal Council."

The Ministerial Union of Pittsburg passed the following resolution in reply to the Association: "That we resent this attempt of a commercial organization to prescribe limits within which alone the Church and other religious organizations may move; that we reaffirm the historic right and duty of the Church to proclaim the whole truth in Christ as revealed in the Scriptures and as applied under the Holy Spirit to every relationship in life; that we deny to any political, commercial, industrial or any other group or agency the right to set any restrictions on the freedom of the Christian Church or its agencies to apply the spirit and standards of the Kingdom of God to the whole of life; that we declare it our solemn duty and purpose to defend this liberty of the Gospel."

The Federal Council also issued a statement resenting the churches declaring that more must be included in the program of the Church today than to acknowledge that "religion may properly act as a councilor to the individual conscience, and as a stretcher bearer for the wounded", and that so far as the Federal Council can have influence there will be no wounded.

We must not forget the tragic end of the great Inter-Church World Movement. Its death was foreboded when it announced its social service and industrial program and began its investigation of the Steel Industry.

The other day I was talking with an industrial baron who repeatedly referred to the operatives in his plant as "my people". He was particularly enraged that they had just voted a school tax for their public school, saying he was ready to "give" them a school and they did not "appreciate" it.

I tried to show him that labor and capital were friends and that laboring men do not wish any gifts. Welfare work does not appeal to them I explained, because it puts them under obligation. What they most of all want is their manhood respected and their rights under the law accorded them. But he could see only a strong tide set in toward the Red and the Bolshevik. The remedy he thought is repression.

Manifestly, the Church owes a solemn obligation to preach the full gospel and to lead both labor and capital to accept it. Our generation has no finer avenue of service to Christ than to accomplish this essential feat, and it can be done. All men are brothers, in industry as in every other relationship of life. Let us teach this, or Labor Day may become an anniversary of dread as in France and other countries.

W. A. HARPER.

"THE CALL OF THE MOUNTAIN FOLKS"

To the Editor:

IN the excellent issue of THE SUN, July 27, I see an article bearing the above caption, and signed by Sue R. Staley, in which the writer says some things about the mountain folks: their poverty, ignorance, illiteracy, no-schools, or schools short terms and ten miles away, ir-religion, scarcity of churches, ignorance of preachers, not traveled far enough away from their own little cabins to have seen a train, isolated from civilization, etc., etc. All of which, I suppose, was written a long way from fact: or, taken largely, from the writings of others who themselves lacked "contact" knowledge of the mountain people—as so many have written.

With your kind indulgence, I wish to speak of the counties west of the Blue Ridge—and of a few nestling east and north of the top—in North Carolina, for I have intimate and personal knowledge of its people, beginning in 1878 and extending to this time, with a block of five years spent in the great northwest, and with another period of four years spent in Georgia.

In 1883 I began a local business in the center of the remoteness of Western North Carolina—there was then no railroad west of Asheville, and later my business took me over large sections of the mountains. I had dealings through years with every class and condition of mountain people, and I believe that I know them thoroughly. Besides, after entering the ministry, I served congregations in different counties of Western North Carolina—as well as down in Georgia and “East of the Ridge,” and I feel that I can say that the North Carolina mountain people are not one whit behind the people of other sections of the country in all of the things that said writer alleges that they are so woefully deficient. The people of that particular section do have sense, homes, property, schools, churches and all things calculated to make a people who love God and country contented and happy.

Before the civil war the Baptists established a high school—Christian—at Mars Hill, Madison County, N. C. Hundreds of preachers, teachers, doctors, lawyers, home builders, citizens, business men and women, have gone out from this great school to bless the mountain country and the world beyond; besides missionaries, teachers, doctors, for the foreign world.

Directly after the civil war, Prof. John O. Hicks established a far reaching school in the woods at Old Fort Embry—now Hayesville, Clay County, N. C. That great school—perpetuated by the Drs. Bailey, Bays, Truett—and last of all, Adams, has its teachers, doctors, lawyers, successful farmers and business people, throughout the mountains and in the regions beyond. For some thirty years the Methodist have had their great Young Harris Junior College near-by; educating and training pupils by the hundreds, yearly. And for a long time, the Baptist also have maintained, nearby, their great Hiwassee school.

Besides those named, the Baptists have, in those mountains, Christian high schools at Sylva, Clyde, Fruitland, Bakersville, Burnsville. The Methodists also have a great Junior College at Weaverville. The Presbyterians have both a Normal and Industrial College at Asheville. Besides their various farm schools and other schools of a high teaching character in different parts of that great mountain country. The Episcopalians have schools also—and no doubt other churches have them. Then there is The State Cullowhee Normal; many state high schools, public schools—a few miles apart, and doing business six to nine months, throughout the mountains. Besides the city and town graded schools, etc.

Before coming to Piedmont North Carolina last January, I served six years in Clay County, the most remote and hardest county to get into in the state, is had no railroad: You cannot get farther away than three miles from a church in Clay County.

As to educated preachers, teachers: That founder of schools and hospitals, builder of colleges and seminaries—and one of the greatest gospel preaches in the world today, Dr. George W. Truitt, now of Dallas, Tex., was born and reared right there in the mountains of Clay County, North Carolina, and baptised into the membership of the old Fort Embry—now Haysville church. Dr. Furd C. McConnell, pastor of one of the great Atlanta churches, was born and reared right there at Hiwassee. Dr. Frank Siler was born and reared in the mountains of Macon County. A host of the most prominent preachers in Southern pulpits—and all over the country, even in the foreign world—were born and reared in those mountains. Not to speak of great educators, editors, lawyers, doctors, jurist, statesmen, business people, home builders, local school people, who are natives of the mountains, and who received their high school education there.

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN, WHAT AND WHERE?— SOME QUESTIONS

The article by Doctor D. A. Long, in the August 24 number of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, stirred a number of half-slumbering questions that have been lying dormant in my mind for some time.

I recall a certain occasion while I was attending Antioch, after I had stepped over a certain rule of the college, when the good Doctor asked me some very pointed questions. Now is my opportunity to attempt to get even by asking him a few. They may not be as pointed as were his, but then I have not the authority over him that he had over me.

In this article, he said, “The kingdom of heaven is neither a geographical nor a political realm, but it is a spiritual realm.”

Does the fact that the kingdom of heaven is a spiritual realm, make it impossible that it should be a geographical or political realm? Why?

He says further: “It (meaning of course the kingdom of heaven) is the kingdom of the Father’s rule in the hearts of men and women.”

I would like to ask Doctor Long, as to what he means by “hearts”? Does he mean the physical organ, or the affections, or does he mean to use this term in the larger sense which the Bible so often employs, meaning the whole man?

If he means the physical heart, it cannot certainly be disassociated from the body in which it dwells.

If he means the affections, must there not be a body of some kind in which the affections have their seat?

If he means the whole man, then surely there must be a body.

If these deductions be true, then these bodies, the men and women of which he speaks must dwell somewhere and that somewhere must be either geographical, or, if I may be permitted to coin a word, celestographical. Furthermore, is there any reason why the rule over these bodies should not be; in fact is it not highly probably, that it would be political?

Is this not true that while God reigns through the heart, that reign extends over the whole man, body as well as mind and spirit? And this body must be located somewhere and that is geography.

Are not the teachings of Scripture very positive in their declarations that the kingdom of heaven is both political and geographical?

Take this statement of Christ, "And Jesus said unto them, Verily I say unto you, That ye which have followed me, in the regeneration (new world. Moffat's translation) when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel"—Matt. 19:28.

"And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation. And hast made us unto our God KINGS and priests: and we shall reign ON THE EARTH".—Rev. 5:9-10.

"Kings" certainly signify political government. "On the earth" is surely geographical. Compare with this Rev. 20:4-6 which further bears out this thought.

Again we read in that glorious description of the conditions which prevail when the kingdom of heaven is established: "The NATIONS of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the KINGS OF THE EARTH do bring their glory and honour into it."—Rev. 20:24.

"Nations" and "kings" are certainly connected with political organization; and "the earth" is surely geographical.

These are just a few of the declarations of the Bible which teach me that the kingdom of heaven will be both political and geographical. If I am wrong, I hope that the good Doctor will set me right.

A. B. KENDALL.

THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN

WHAT is it? There be those who think it is an earthly kingdom, called heavenly because heavenly in spirit and aims. But it is to be established here on the earth with capital in Jerusalem, with Jesus visibly and bodily on the throne, with the Jews occupying a preferred position, and with all the nations of the earth yielding allegiance and obedience to it. Having thus described it in outline, it is needless to say that it is not here as yet—it is to be established when Jesus returns "without sin unto salvation." John the Baptist and Jesus proclaimed it "at hand," but this is supposed to have meant something different from what it seems to mean. It was not really "at hand," but it was the next thing on the divine program as that program had been announced by the prophets. The program was changed because the Jews rejected their King. Then this present dispensation of grace was interjected, an "interpolation," Dr. Campbell Morgan called it, a kind of temporary parenthesis, a something not mentioned in the Old Testament prophecies.

The more common answer to the question is that the Kingdom of God is identical with the Christian Church. It is a spiritual kingdom, the reign of God over souls made "willing in the day of His power." Or it may be defined as the reign of Christ over His redeemed people. "Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." The new birth is the door of admittance. Jesus, indeed, calls himself the door. "I am the door; by me if any man enter in he shall be saved." No one enters the kingdom except through Christ; and all who enter through Him are saved. So the kingdom may be defined, as to its subjects, as the collective body of saved sinners.

This answers to many descriptions which Jesus gives. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven, but he that doeth the will of my Father who is in heaven." None get into the kingdom but God's obedient children. These are the spiritual kindred of Jesus. "And looking around on them that sat round about him, he saith, Behold my mother and brethren; For whosoever shall do the will of God, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." Doing the will of God from the heart brings one into closer relation to Christ than the natural relationship of those nearest of kin to him in the flesh.

Because this kingdom is spiritual, it cometh not with observation. "Lo, the kingdom of God is within you." It is certainly made known, therefore, only to God who looketh on the heart. Throughout all the generations God has emphasized the fact that mere external obedience has no value in His eyes. He despises all acts of worship in which the lips alone are engaged. "As a man thinketh in his heart, so is he." Hence "out of the heart are the issues of life."

God is moral Governor of the whole universe. He suffers His authority to be set at naught and His laws violated, but He will hold all transgressors to strict accountability. If they break His laws, they cannot escape their penalty. He also exercises a providential government over the whole world. He has a way, secret to us, of controlling and guiding to His own end, the acts of free agents. "He makes the wrath of man to praise Him, and the remainder thereof He restraineth." But this moral and providential rule is never referred to as constituting the Kingdom of God, certainly not in the New Testament. This phrase is reserved for the rule that was introduced by Jesus, the Messiah. It is in fact the fruit of His redemption. The Son of God became incarnate, took upon Himself the form of a servant, lived, labored, suffered and died here on earth for the one supreme purpose of establishing His reign over the souls of men. The motive was love, and the end was to establish a kingdom founded on love. In comparison with such a kingdom any kingdom established and maintained by force is cheap and tawdry. Napoleon had the genius to see this. "Alexander, Cæsar, Charlemagne and myself," he says, "founded empires; but upon what foundation did we rest the creations of genius? Upon force: Jesus Christ alone founded His empire upon love, and at this hour, millions of men would die for Him. What an abyss between my misery and the eternal kingdom of Christ, which is proclaimed, loved and adored, and which is extending over the whole earth." This is the kingdom which was "at hand" when John and Jesus began to preach, and which was actually established when Jesus, by the agency of the Holy Spirit, won disciples and bound them to Himself by the ties of love.—Presbyterian Standard.

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK

Many SUN readers will regret to learn that Miss Hedgepeth of our Christian Training School, Fancy Gap, Carroll County, Va., had a fall recently, as a result of which our work of erecting a suitable school building has been somewhat delayed. Under date of August 15 she writes: "I had been invited to speak at a District Sunday School Rally at Hillsville, Va., and was on my way. I stopped in a home out of a rain and when I started to step from the porch, on leaving, one of the floor boards which was broken fell through and threw me. Unfortunately I broke my right shoulder and have suffered a great deal from it. I was three miles from Hillsville, but went on and spent a week there (to be convenient to a physician). For the past ten days I have been at my boarding place here at Fancy Gap carrying on my work as best I could. You do not know how hurt I was to be so delayed in the work of our school building. My!! but I am going to be so proud of our building. The people here are responding wonderfully, cutting logs, hauling, sawing, donating the rough lumber."

I am happy to report from a later letter that she is much improved and is so happy and hopeful of her new and ample school building. The Mission Board has voted her an ample school building, both for day and Sunday school purposes, and has also voted her an assistant in her work this fall and winter. And then that wonderful missionary force, the Third Christian church, Norfolk, with already two missionaries in the foreign field, has voted to pay the salary the coming year of Miss Hedgepeth's assistant.

The Tide-Water Sunday School Association (composed of the Christian Sunday schools in and about Norfolk) has voted to pay for the tract of land on which our training school and its accessories are to be located. There are eighteen acres and the price was $500. We are hopeful that the building will be ready before cold weather sets in, and we are making all the speed we can in that direction.

AVAILABLE PASTORS

Following what was said in last week's SUN by this writer about vacant pastorates, it has come to my attention since that our young Brother, Rev. H. Jennings Fleming, has recently returned to the South from Kittery Point, Me., and is ready to take a pastorate amongst us. Bro. Fleming is an Elon graduate and also spent some time in post graduate work in Vanderbilt University, and has now had some three or four years of helpful experience in the pastorate. This is being written without his knowledge or request and we commend him to any of our pastorates desiring to locate a pastor at once. His address at present is Burlington, N. C.

For some weeks I have been in correspondence with Rev. H. Vernon Winter, Industry, Ill., who would like very much to come South and locate in a pastorate here. I gather from the correspondence with him and with others about him that he has had some years of successful work both as pastor and evangelist. His wife also is of great help to him in the work, especially in music. I would be glad to furnish this correspondence, or give references, to any church committee that may be on the lookout and feels interested enough to request it.

SUCCESSFUL MEETINGS

The writer was more than gratified to read from Rev. J. D. Wicker and from Bro. Elisha Bradshaw in THE SUN recently of the wonderful meetings at Bethlehem and Antioch in Warren County, North Carolina. The Mission Secretary found out by chance that these churches were without a pastor and asked Bro. Wicker to visit them and later to hold a meeting. He did so but wrote for help in the meetings, and Bro. Bradshaw was requested to go. The churches seem to have been wonderfully revived and thirty-five new members were added to the two. They are anxious for a pastor next year and Bro. Wicker thinks they will go their full length in supporting one.

Amelia, in Johnston County, wanted a meeting and sent a request for a man. Bro. Bradshaw had just come in from his Warren county meetings but consented to go on to Amelia at once. There was no time to advertise the meeting, but Brother Bradshaw reports a very happy and helpful one and thinks the church is much built up and is anxious for a pastor the coming year.

Bro. Bradshaw just joined the ministerial class a year ago, and has been in preparation in Elon and the Moody Bible school the past year; but he is a consecrated man, his heart is in the work, he is a student of the Bible and the Lord is greatly using him in winning souls to Christ and the better life. He is a member of Elon College Christian church, coming to us from Antioch, Isle of Wight County, Va., and the next session of the North Carolina Christian Conference is to be asked to license him.

God always uses men who lay themselves unreservedly on the altar and consecrate all their time, talent and energy to Him.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS THAT DO THINGS

Bro. J. M. Anderson, Supt. of Timber Ridge Sunday school, Trone, Va., writes as follows of his school: "I am glad to inform you that our Sunday school is now taking one offering a month for missions and one offering for the Orphanage. Our school has been taking a monthly offering for the Orphanage for some years and began taking the regular Mission Offering with the first quarter of the present year. I feel that our school is getting on higher ground. Our school has the honor of being the first school in Hampshire County to make all of the ten points of the International school standard.

We are now recognized as a Front Line Standard School. But I tell our school we must not rest on our oars, but still go forward, strive earnestly to attain to a still higher state of efficiency in good work.

"I want our school included with the others taking the required offerings." It is a pleasure to enroll this good school with that growing number trying to go forward in carrying out our Lord's command "Go ye into all the world and teach all the nations."

You may count on schools that adopt our Convention's plan of offering for self, for the Orphanage and for Missions to go forward. For the school that gives to missions now will soon be studying about missions and undertaking larger things in His name.

SHALL WE PRACTICE WHAT WE PREACH?

This from the pen of Rev. J. Vincent Knight, Raleigh, N. C., under date of August 31: "Dear Bro. Atkinson: Have just read your note in THE CHRISTIAN SUN this week concerning our seven men who are soon to leave us, and it leads me to ask you a question which you will, I hope, answer through THE SUN. As you know, our Church and the (Christian) Disciples have been preaching union for years and years. Do you think the fact that both Churches are now suffering loss in ministers, with hundreds of small churches pastorless, is a call for both of us to practice what we preach? As an example of what I am trying to ask both their church and ours here in Raleigh are struggling, and their church has no pastor and cannot get one. They need a church building and so do we; but neither are able to build. There are about enough members in both churches here to make one good congregation; and when their church building and ours are complete, if they ever are, they will only be two blocks apart here on Hillsboro Street. I have come to the conclusion that it is time we as denominations were uniting or quit preaching it."

It seems to the writer that Bro. Knight has answered his own inquiry very wisely, and as they say in parliamentary circles, has put the clincher on it. Dr. Rowland of Franklin, Va., and Dr. Peter Ainsle of Baltimore declare they have already united and this is a mighty good beginning from high up. We lesser lights might do well to follow this high leadership. But the preaching will do good, for there are many possible converts yet to be won from both sides. After getting the consent of the mind the assent of the heart is necessary to all inseparable unions. Or, if we may get the assent of the heart the consent of the mind will not be difficult. Our Lord's prayer shall be answered some day—and "they shall be one even as we are one."

A BEAUTIFUL AND TOUCHING SCENE

We opened up the "Baby Home" last week and have placed in that beautiful home fourteen children. We have many applications on file. More than enough to fill it to the limit.

It was one beautiful scene to see the building occupied with the little tots so young, so innocent and so sweet, and so happy in their new home. As I beheld the scene I could not imagine how any one who had ever contributed a penny could for one moment regret it. I thought to myself if I knew of any one who had made a contribution to help build and equip that splendid building that could visit the Institution and see these little helpless children so helpless, but now so happy, and could have any regrets, I would like to return them the amount they had contributed. I feel sure if our people could visit us and see the little children made so happy by giving them this splendid home and an opportunity to have a chance in life they would want to even contribute more.

We need many things yet to have the home complete. We need a stove, table ware, of all kinds. We need more sheets and counterpanes, and many other things.

We also need funds to meet the bills at the end of each month. We are very grateful that so many of the churches have been so loyal to us in this work and regret very much that each Sunday school is not on the roll of monthly contributors.

We are glad to say that a number have joined recently and hope that all will respond to the challenge in the next few weeks. Let us NOT FORGET THE FATHERLESS.

OUR WORK IN THE VALLEY

The Field Secretary attended the Valley of Virginia Christian Conference and spent nearly two weeks in institute work in the various churches after the close of the Conference session. In all of the churches visited, were found interested and enthusiastic Sunday school and Christian Endeavor workers and many plans were laid for forward steps in our work.

The first institute was held at Mayland Christian church and was attended by teachers and officers from Mayland, Bethlehem, Concord and Linville, as well as by several workers from the church of the Brethren near Mayland. Both sessions held were well attended and the discussion by those present was most interesting and helpful. Rev. A. W. Andes was present and conducted devotional services and helped throughout the institute.

On August 24 and 25 meetings were held at the New Hope, church attended by workers from New Hope Antioch and Linville. All churches reported active Sunday schools but no Christian Endeavor Societies at present. Rev. J. C. Barrett was present at both sessions and rendered much assistance.

On Friday night, August 26, the Field Secretary met thirty workers of the Winchester church in an informal meeting for discussion of local Sunday school and Christian Endeavor problems. Sunday, August 28, was also spent at Winchester where we found a Sunday school, well organized and doing splendid work under the leadership of Mr. Roy A. Larriek. A Junior Choir in the Sunday school was especially fine. The Christian Endeavor Society is wide-awake and growing under the Presidency of Mr. Paul Hook. The Society is just beginning work with the Efficiency Chart. Rev. C. A. McDaniel, pastor of the Winchester church, helpfully cooperated in our work there, and the visit to Winchester was most pleasant and inspiring.

The final institute was held at Newport, Rev. R. P. Crumpler, pastor, for six churches, Newport, Leaksville, St. Peter's, Bethel, Mt. Lebanon and East Liberty, August 30 and 31.

A GOOD WORKMAN DESIRES AND NEEDS GOOD TOOLS

A Sunday school worker needs help to make his work effective.

While a good library does not make a good scholar, a library is an indispensable aid to the scholar.

Thus also, while a good book will not necessarily make a good Sunday school teacher or worker, yet it has been proved many times that that good Sunday school book has a great influence in stimulating thought and encouraging better Sunday school work. Most of our schools will be benefitted by taking this fact into consideration and providing inspirational and practical books for their workers.

In the helpful little volume “How To Run A Little Sunday School” by E. Morris Fergusson, we learn that the statistics of the International Sunday School Association indicates that half the Sunday school population of the United States is enrolled in Sunday schools of sixty-five members or less. Without a doubt, the leaders of these Sunday schools, many of whom are in our own Sunday schools, would be greatly helped by reading Mr. Fergusson's book, which is practical from the first sentence. It is written for the man and woman in the little Sunday school to give a vision of progressive Sunday school work, but contains many suggestions which would be helpful in any Sunday school. Are you interested in starting a Sunday school, in increasing attendance, in how to grade your Sunday school or in many other problems? Write to our Publishing Agent, Rev. C. B. Riddle, Burlington, N. C., and ask him to send you this book, and by reading, find how your Sunday school can grow and render a greater service.

If your particular problem is organization, especially in a larger Sunday school, get “The Sunday School Organized for Service” by that great Sunday school leader, Marion Lawrance. This book reveals clearly the relation of the Sunday school to the Church, and discusses fully the various officers needed in the Sunday school to make possible a really educational work, a work based on principles which will be effective in reaching human lives and hearts. The various departments of the Sunday school from the Cradle Roll through the Adult and Home Departments all receive attention in this manual. The book is small, but each chapter is clear and to the point.

Either of these books, and many more, may be secured from our Publishing Agent at a nominal price, and our Sunday school leaders will be greatly helped by securing and reading them. We need to study, that we may be “approved unto God.”

THE WORK FOR EDUCATION

The first born child in a large family of children has been saving her hard earned pennies, for years, in order to enable her to go to some college. Her devout and industrious mother informed me of the same. I wrote President Harper that I would camp on her trail, until she registered. Her mother went to Elon College, with her, a few days ago and arranged everything for entrance the first day, September 7, 1921.

3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.

THE BULLETIN

President W. A. Harper spoke at the Graham Presbyterian church last Sunday.

Rev. Geo. D. Eastes is this week holding a meeting at Pleasant Hill, Alamance, with pastor P. H. Fleming.

Dr. W. T. Walters, Richmond, Va., changes his address from 2023 Grace Street to 1615 Garland Avenue, that city.

Rev. D. F. Parsons, 1320 E. 58th Street, Chicago, Ill., is spending his summer in the windy city and will re-enter the Chicago University October 1.

Rev. P. T. Klapp reports progress with our Mebane church. Sunday, August 28 the church raised $115.00 in 20 minutes to apply toward the building.

The Burlington church recently decided to issue a four page weekly bulletin. The first issue appeared last Sunday and in handsome style. Mr. W. D. Lambeth, Publicity Director of the church, is editor.

The Burlington Journal is the name of a new publication that made its initial appearance last week. THE SUN congratulates and wishes the publication success and prosperity. Mr. E. B. Fyke is editor-in-chief.

Rev. A. Victor Lightbourne began an evangelistic meeting at the First Christian church, Raleigh, N. C., on September 1. "The meeting opened with a splendid audience and the prospects for a great revival are unusually promising," so writes Brother Lightbourne under date of September 2.

Elon College opens Wednesday of this week. The water supply, while reported as being low at some other colleges, is abundant at Elon. We make this statement without being asked to, for we know that Elon's deep well is a most resourceful fountain of water—and of the very best kind.

The announcement of the approaching marriage of Miss Bessie I. Holt of Burlington, N. C., to Rev. H. Russell Clem, Springfield, Ohio, was made by Miss Holt's sister, Mrs. W. E. Hay, on Thursday afternoon, September 1. The wedding will take place at the First Christian church, Burlington, N. C., on September 14, 1921. Miss Holt is well known to many SUN readers, having been connected in many ways with our work in the Southern Convention. Brother Clem comes to our Southern work from the First Christian church, Springfield, Ohio, taking over the duties as pastor of the First Christian church, Greensboro, N. C., the second Sunday in September. THE SUN extends congratulations and best wishes.

In last week's issue of THE SUN we reprinted an article from The Biblical Recorder, Raleigh, N. C., from the pen of Rev. J. T. Bowden, Marion, N. C., and sent Brother Bowden a copy of that issue. We have received the following very cordial and generous letter from him and take the liberty of reproducing it:

To the Editor:

Most heartily do I appreciate your copy of this week's issue of THE SUN carrying my article "Ministerial Courtesy" from The Biblical Recorder. This is the gist of my paper on the subject discussed in our Mountain Ministerial and Laymen's meeting held here Monday after every first Sunday. I am satisfied, after some experience, that we have some things to learn and then more rigidly practice along this line.

Another phase of this subject would furnish good advice, viz., "the good name of our brethren in the ministry." The unbrotherly, slurring and depreciating remarks one hears among our brotherhood are not becoming nor elevating to us. They are down right sinful. The "big I and mine, and little you and yours" is the ugly spirit lurking among us to our shame and weakness. We ought to enjoy the most soulful fellowship of any set of men in the whole world.

I greatly enjoyed looking over your pages. Many familiar names, those I knew in years gone by when I was in training at Windsor Academy, in Tidewater, Va., appear—Staley, Barrett, Johnson, Rowland and others. They take me back twenty-five years and more when the world-expansive and God's greatness and goodness were opening up to me. Many have been the experiences and blessings since those favored days.

Sincerely and fraternally,

J. T. BOWDEN.

JUNKERISM STILL IN GERMANY

The old Germany has not completely disappeared. Nationalism still swells within the hearts of the remaining Junkers, as the world has realized since the recent murder of Matthias Erzberger, leader of the German Nationalist Party. Incited by the murder of their leader, the Nationalists have thrown the country into a state of agitation which again imperils the existing administration.

President Ebert has decreed the enforcement of the martial law and the suppression of all possible riots between the Nationalists and the Republicans. He seems to have command of the situation though it is difficult at this distance to estimate the exact force of the Junker propaganda. Undoubtedly he has the majority of the people behind him, yet it is feared that the monarchist leaders may obtain control by a coup d'etat, taking advantage of any possible disorganization of the government.

"It had been hoped that Germany had dropped profitless agitation", says the (N. Y.) World. "The revelation of the readiness of the reaction and the Junkers to destroy the state and rebuild Utopia is disturbing. The best 'defense of the republic' is in peace, order, and industry. Nothing that resembles welfare is likely to come out of the present tumult."

PRESIDENT TO STOP MINERS' WAR

President Harding has ordered the warring coal miners of Mingo and Logan counties, West Virginia to disband and go to their homes. The ultimatum was issued August 30, and in case of refusal to disband, U. S. troops will invade the disturbed section of the country and enforce the edict. The armed miners numbering several thousand have persistently outruled the law long enough.

In the opinion of a number of prominent journals, the miners' riot would not have proceeded as far as it has had Gov. Morgan of West Virginia taken a strong hand in the situation when trouble first broke out last May. He absolutely failed to organize any national guard to command the insurgents.

The situation is not merely a "union government", in the estimation of the Logan Coal Operators' Association; it is an insurrection. The operators charge the union miners' officials as being responsible for the trouble. Miners' officials, on the other hand, steadfastly aver that they are doing all within their power to maintain order and cite that they have ordered the miners to refrain from violence and substantiate their contentions.

BRITISH IDLE BETTER PAID THAN WORKERS

That the "eyes of men are seldom satisfied" has been recently demonstrated in England, where the unemployed are unsatisfied when they receive more pay than those that work. In London the boroughs of Camberwell and Islington have already adopted a scale giving a man and wife with six children $18.25 weekly—at the pre-war exchange rate—while Bermondsey pays such a family $22.00 a week. Before the war the average unemployment payment per head was 85 cents in London and 85 cents in the provinces.

There are mass meetings of these unemployed in London's poorer boroughs that are pressing demands for local unemployment relief payments which will amount in hundreds of cases to more than the family bread winners would get if they had jobs. In view of the situation, there is daily increasing alarm among the local taxpayers of these boroughs. It would be better to organize to give men employment than to have the boroughs go bankrupt, but at any rate the struggling masses must be appeased and relieved.

FOREIGN TRADE OUTLOOK

Our foreign trade is better in volume than in values, is the timely remark of Secretary Hoover. An analysis of the situation in the New York Times says that "many of our exports are going out in actually greater quantities, but at prices so much reduced that there is an apparent decline which is contrary to the fact."

The trade is becoming sounder in the opinion of this organ of the public and economic pulse. The increased movement of goods at a lower scale of prices is the insurance of the foreign trade situation. The fact of the movement is proof that the trade is not frozen, but that the sellers have assured themselves against the embarrassment of those who sold what the buyers could not pay for at the old scale of prices. The Times concludes that "all interested may remark that the later months of 1921 show a rising tendency in foreign trade, and the farmers may comfort themselves that they are better off than those making less complaint (in Europe) and receiving less assistance."

U. S. TEACHERS POPULAR IN LATIN AMERICA

American women have shown a daring and genuine spirit of self-sacrifice that has made an undeniable impression upon the educational system of a sister country, the Argentine Republic, according to Clara A. Alexander in the Boston Transcript. In response to a request of President Sarmiento some years ago, American women have been visiting the southern republic in small but growing groups, in order to introduce the American methods of education. Accepting the Argentine government's invitation these teachers courageously made the 7,000 mile journey from the United States to Argentine.

Today there are few teachers more popular and beloved by the people of the South American republic than the American ones. They have served perhaps as much and possibly more than anything else to bind the two sections of the Western world together. In many instances the Latin-Americans have preferred the society of the American teachers to their lessons. Apparently the social phases of the work have been most preferable as well as beneficial.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

THE BOOK OF JOB

It is known to be extremely ancient; generally reputed the most ancient of all the poetical books; the author is uncertain. This book has no connection with the affairs or manners of the Jews, or Hebrews. The scene is laid in the land of Uz, which is a part of Arabia. The great students of Hebrew poetry regard Isaiah the most sublime, David the most pleasing and tender, Job the most descriptive. No writer abounds so much in metaphores. See how he paints the condition of the wicked: "Knowest thou not this of old, since man was placed upon the earth, that the triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hyprocite but for a moment? Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach to the clouds, yet he shall perish forever. He shall fly away as a dream, and shall not be found; yea, he shall be chased away as a vision of the night. The eye also which saw him, shall see him no more; they which have seen him shall say, where is he? He shall suck the poison of asps; the viper's tongue shall slay him. In the fullness of his suffering, he shall be in straits; every hand shall come upon him. He shall flee from the iron weapon, and the bow of steel shall strike him through. All darkness shall be hid in his secret places. A fire not blown shall consume him. The heaven shall reveal his iniquity, and the earth shall rise up against him. The increase of his house shall depart. His goods shall flow away in the day of wrath. The light of the wicked shall be put out; the light shall be dark in his tabernacle. The steps of his strength shall be straitened, and his own counsel shall cast him down. For he is cast into a net by his own feet. He worketh upon a snare. Terrors shall make him afraid on every side; and the robber shall prevail against him. Brimstone shall be scattered upon his habitation. His remembrance shall perish from the earth, and he shall have no name in the street. He shall be driven from light into darkness. They that come after him shall be astonished at his day. He shall drink of the wrath of the Almighty."

Froude, Carlyle, and other great scholars and writers, regard "The Book of Job", the greatest piece of literature to be found in any book, or any language.

AMERICA'S NEED

(The Christian Statesman)

The great need of our nation today is religion;—not ecclesiasticism;—not sectarianism;—not the union of church and state; but the Christian religion, for our people, for our government, for all our officials, and for all our legislation.

We need it because the prohibition amendment is being made a mere football in so many places, and our officials are often too weak or too disloyal to enforce it.

We need it because we have had nearly thirteen hundred thousand divorces granted in a period of forty years.

We need it because the fourth commandment is so widely desecrated, and is trodden underfoot by our United States mail service.

We need it because we are proposing to spend enormous sums unnecessarily upon our navy.

We need it because of the tremendous burdens of taxation being laid upon our people.

We need it because of the great wave of crime that has been sweeping over the land. Employes are being shot down and thousands of dollars are being stolen every day; and the Government seems powerless to prevent it.

We need it because commercialism, the worship of the golden calf, blinds the eyes and hardens the heart of so many of our people.

We need it because so many are pleasure-mad; indulging in constant effort to be entertained and amused.

We need it because there is so much secularism and lack of Christian principle among our politicians.

We need it because we have been trying since 1789 to sail our ship of state under a charter that makes no recognition of Divine Authority.

The paramount need of our nation is not a revival of business. It is not an emergency tariff. It is not an increase of tonnage on the seas. It is not better immigration laws. It is not disarmament. It is not a change of political parties. It is not education.

The great need of our nation is more religion at the fireside; more religion in the counting room; more religion in the strife between capital and labor; more religion in the schoolroom; more religion at the ballot-box; more religion in our courts; more religion at Washington; more religion in our fundamental law. "Blessed is the nation whose God is Jehovah, the people whom He hath chosen for His own inheritance."

A FINE ENCOMIUM

When Louis XIV after hearing Massillon preach at Versailles, said to him: "Father, I have heard many great orators in this chapel; I have been highly pleased with them; but for you, whenever I hear you, I go away displeased with myself; for I see more of my own character."

D. A. L.

"It is said that an Englishman was once heard to remark that wherever the Germans go you will find an arsenal; that wherever the French go you will find a railroad; and that wherever the British go you will find a custom house; and that wherever the Americans go you will find a schoolhouse. It will be a fine day for America, and for the world, when it can be said that wherever you find an American schoolhouse you will find the Bible on the desk of every teacher."

It is given us on good authority that he is foolish who expects to win something for nothing.

AUBURN

Our meeting in the Auburn church closed Friday night, August 19, with twenty professions and about seventy-five reconsecrations. Practically all the twenty who professed faith will unite with our church. It was our great privilege and delight to have Drs. Staley and Rowland with us in the opening service of this meeting. Dr. Staley preached an excellent sermon on the "Out of place Christian". From the very beginning of the services the crowds increased until the house and yard filled.

The church at Auburn was without a pastor when we came to Raleigh, and at the church's request, we have supplied until they could get a regular pastor, which they have not yet done, and we are still supplying. Mrs. Knight and I went down on Sunday, Aug. 14, for the meeting and spent one of the finest weeks of our lives in the community, as well as having a great meeting. The work at Auburn is planning to move forward. The church building is soon to receive a new coat of paint, new song books are to be secured, and the school increased so as to take care of the great number of young people that live in this community. There is no reason why we should not have a strong church at Auburn.

DAMASCUS

On Saturday, August 21, our meeting started at Damascus church in Orange County. Rev. P. T. Klapp, our pastor, did the preaching. We had expected some help from Rev. O. D. Poythress, who was planning to be home on his vacation, but as he was delayed, he did not reach home until Thursday. He preached for us on Thursday afternoon. His sermon was one of power and greatly enjoyed by all.

I have never known a better meeting than the one we have just closed. From the very first the whole desire seemed to be to glorify God in preaching, praying, and singing.

It seemed that the church needed just such messages as our pastor brought to us.

It has been my great privilege, and pleasure to hear many series of sermons, but I can truthfully say, I never enjoyed a series of sermons like I did the ones Brother Klapp preached. His messages were plain, practical, full of love, and were real Biblical truths. They were a great power in uplifting the Christians, returning the back-slidden, and showing the light to the sinners. There were 27 or 28 conversions. Many of these were cold church members. There were five to unite with the church.

We trust that the seed sown these few days may bring forth much fruit to the honor and glory of God.

CLARA JOE MCCAULEY.

HAW RIVER

Revival services at the Haw River church began on Sunday, August 21 and closed on Sunday night, August 29.

Rev. Hamilton J. Fleming, pastor of the Kittery Point, Maine, church for the past fifteen months was with us and did all of the preaching except the opening sermon. His sermons were good, well delivered and much appreciated. He has a musical voice, a good and flowing delivery. He frequently deals in striking contrasts and telling illustrations in driving the truth home. The audiences were prompt in attendance and very attentive. At times the attention was tense.

The church was much revived and knit together in the bonds of Christian fellowship. There were ten public professions, six gave their names for membership and three were baptised at the close of the last service.

WILSON

Samuel Paisley Wilson, son of the late William D. and Margaret Law Wilson, was born August 28, 1854, and died August 2, 1921, aged sixty-six years eleven months and twenty-six days.

He was a member of a family of seven children, five boys and two girls, all of whom have preceded him in death, except one sister, Mrs. R. L. Davis, of McLeansville, N. C., with whom he made his home. Mr. Wilson never married, nor made any profession of religion. In his dying hours he prayed and plead with God, but it seemed he had waited too long.

Funeral services were conducted by this writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Proffitt from Bethel Presbyterian church, in the presence of a large number of relatives and the body laid to rest in the church cemetery with Masonic honors by the lodge of which he was a member.

C. E. GERRINGER.

CUMMINGS

Nannie A. Cummings, last daughter of Wm. and Elizabeth Cummings was born February 22, 1836 and died August 19, 1921, aged eighty-five years five months and twenty-seven days.

She was a member of a family of seven children, three girls and four boys, all of whom preceded her to the spirit land.

In early life she united with Friedens Lutheran church, then about thirty-five years ago she transferred her membership to Hines Christian church, where she remained a member till death.

The funeral was conducted from Bethel Presbyterian church by the writer, her pastor, assisted by Rev. Mr. Rankin and Rev. Mr. Proffitt. Interment in the cemetery by the side of her mother. May God bless those who mourn.

C. E. GERRINGER.

DIEDRICK

George Diedrick was born July 5, 1863 in St. Gallen, Switzerland. He came to the U. S. with his parents when but a child. They first lived in Kentucky, then settled in Detroit, Mich., where he lived till 1901 when he moved with his family to Waverly, Va. In 1888 he married Miss Ida Ruffing who survives him. To this union were born ten children; two died in infancy. The following eight survive him: Ida—Mrs. H. M. Ball of Purcellville, Va.; Minnie—Mrs. J. N. England of Cartersville, Va.; Anna—Mrs. F. J. Jackson of Stony Creek, Va.; Amelia—Mrs. Taylor Hammerly of Hillsboro, Va.; George, Mary, Robert, and John, still reside with their mother near Waverly, Va. Bro. Diedrick was a quiet retiring disposition. He read much, thought deeply; thought twice before speaking once. He was a hard worker. He appreciated friends. His health had been poor for some months. He died at Stuart Circle Hospital, Richmond, August 19, 1921. The beautiful flowers and large attendance at burial services told of the high esteem in which he was held throughout the county. Burial at Waverly cemetery, by the writer. Peace to his ashes, love and sympathy to the sorrowing family.

JAS. L. FOSTER.

ALGER

Charles Robert Alger of Stanley, Va., R. F. D., died in the Hospital at Harrisonburg, Va., August 25, 1921. He had been very ill with typhoid fever for about eight weeks prior to his death. His age was forty-eight years, six months and fourteen days. He is survived by his wife, seven sons and three daughters and one brother. Bro. Alger had been a member of New Port Christian church for about thirty-one years; and tried to live as he professed.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer of these lines at the home of the deceased near Stanley, Va., on Saturday, August 27; and the body was buried in the cemetery of Leak's Chapel church of the Brethren, also near Stanley.

May our loving Heavenly Father who gave, and who has taken away, shower his blessings of comfort and consolation upon the sorrow-stricken widow who has, within the last ten weeks, lost her mother, a sister, and a daughter, as well as her husband, and may God abundantly bless and provide for the children.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—McCLENNY

The Ladies Missionary and Aid Societies bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father when we meditate on the taking away, all too soon, as we think, of one in whose life the Christian graces found full expression.

We cannot understand why one so gentle, unselfish and good should be removed from us, but we must remember that God calls those whom He loveth and why should not loved ones shine in His own home, even though ours be made dreary?

These are the sentiments that express the emotions of our hearts when we think over the lovely and unselfish life of our sister Annie M. McCleddy who so sweetly sleeps in that celestial city awaiting the summons of the resurrection morn.

A faithful wife, true and devoted mother, kind and loving to all and ever faithful to her God in whose service she always delighted to be.

We will cherish the memory of her pure life and may we strive to emulate that beautiful character. Therefore be it resolved:

First: That we extend to the husband and children and all the relatives, our deepest sympathy and commend them to our gracious Heavenly Father "who doeth all things well".

Second: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, one to The Christian Sun and one spread upon the minutes of our societies of which she was a faithful member.

THE LIFE STORY OF A FIVE-DOLLAR GOLD PIECE

Andrew Ahern

Bishop Edwin H. Hughes tells the "life story of a five-dollar gold piece once given him by a good Methodist woman at Shrewsbury, Mass.

"Where did you get this coin?" the woman was asked.

"From the First National Bank at Worcester, Mass.," was the reply.

An official of the bank, upon being asked where the institution secured the gold, gave the information that it had come there as a part of "Consignment 984" from the San Francisco Mint.

The director of the mint was communicated with and asked the same question, "Where did you get this gold?" He replied that the bullion from which it was made at the mint in San Francisco was received in 1910 from the Grass Valley mine, California.

In search for the source of this gold, let us go to Grass Valley. Here we find Noah James, manager of the mine.

"Mr. James, where did you get the bullion of 1910?" we ask.

He leads us down, down a measureless distance into the bowels of the earth. And he points to a glistening vein. "About here we mined the 1910 bullion," he says.

There in the dimness, in silence, in this secret retreat of the earth, we whisper the question, "O mine—O mine that was aged before man ever trod the earth—whence came your wealth of gold?"

To the reverent heart there can come but one answer out of the deep interior of the earth—"From God."

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth."

"The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof; the world, and they that dwell therein."

"The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts."

Draw, if you can, thy mystic line
Serving rightly His from thine,
Which is human, which divine."

War Goods

THE EDITOR

WAR goods are now showing depreciation very rapidly. These goods were manufactured under abnormal conditions. Labor was unskilled, material scarce, and all kinds of substitutes were used for both. Costly articles purchased during the war are now worth but little. This is only an economic effect of war.

The social effect of war is the worst of all effects. Materials hastily gathered and unskillfully put together soon pass away. Morals continue through almost an endless number of generations. Loose thinking, loose living, loose speech, and low ideals, are the things that are going to affect us more than economies of the material world. And these things are here now. They are making inroads upon life while we worry and wait upon things material. To combat these there must come a new vision of life, a new consecration of manhood and womanhood to the higher and holier things of life.

CONFERENCE TIME APPROACHING

The time for our annual conferences is now approaching—one of them having already met. Financial conditions for some time have been bad, but it is generally accepted now that these conditions are improving. Church people should not excuse themselves unduly on account of these conditions. THE SUN expresses the hope that all our people may do the very best they can, and we know that they will, and endeavor to see that every church brings up all of its apportionments to conference. Above all, we express the hope that no pastor's salary will be reduced in any way.

A COMMENT ON THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Editor O. F. Crowson, of The Burlington News, has been visiting the various Sunday schools of his city this summer that he might know what the various schools are doing. He has also made it a rule to remain for preaching after his visit to the school. He declares there is a spirit of optimism, pride and perseverance in all the Sunday schools that he has visited. He also states that the attendance is exceedingly good, but to use his own language, he declares that "it looks as if someone has taken a broom and swept out the entire church during the intermission of Sunday school and the beginning of church service." He says it is alarming to notice the large attendance at Sunday school and the small attendance for preaching. He discovers that there is something wrong somewhere that is resulting in the large attendance at Sunday school and the small attendance for preaching.

Will some correspondent be kind enough to furnish THE SUN an article which will give the solution to the problem that Editor Crowson has pointed out?

A NEW CONFERENCE

September 19, 20 and 21 there will be in session at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill, a first National Regional Conference on town and county administration. This Conference will be under the auspices of the State University, the National Municipal League, the North Carolina Municipal Association, the North Carolina Association of County Commissioners and the North Carolina Commercial Secretaries. The purpose of the Conference will be to make concrete, definite and substantial contributions to present-day political problems in the development of American government, and to make usable to the people the important facts of administration. The list of speakers announced insures an interesting Conference and we believe that any reader of THE SUN interested in such a Conference will do well to attend.

OUR COLORED BRETHREN

Our colored brethren of the Christian Church are making most wonderful progress. They have planted many new churches in the South during the past few years. They have a handsome brick church in Graham, and the Burlington membership has recently erected a modern building and will dedicate it in October of this year. Rev. J. W. Patton (same initials as our Rev. J. W. Patton) is pastor of these two churches and editor of The Christian Herald and Missionary Star, the official organ of their work in the South.

During the past week the women of the Lincoln Conference held a missionary conference in Burlington. The session lasted four days and the interest and attendance were good. THE SUN'S Editor was the speaker for one of the night sessions, supplemented (surpassed, we should have said) by our better three-fourths, who is president of the missionary organization of the Burlington church. The Editor gave an address which might be classed as inspirational, while the "assistant" editor made a talk classed as information.

ASSIST THE PASTORS

By the time this note reaches the public practically all our colleges will be open. There may be those among our number who may be in colleges other than Elon, and in towns where there are Christian churches. If so, we express the hope that parents will not only instruct their sons and daughters to attend church services wherever possible and practicable in our own churches, but that they may write pastors in towns where colleges are located and give these pastors the names of their sons or daughters who may be there in college. For instance, if you have a son or a daughter in any of the colleges in Raleigh, write Pastor J. V. Knight, 320 West Morgan St., Raleigh, N. C.; if you have children attending any of the schools in Greensboro, write Pastor H. Russell Clem, 410 Mendenhall St., Greensboro, N. C.; if in Durham, N. C., write Pastor Stanley C. Harrell. There may be other places and instances that we have not mentioned. We would also add that Pastor N. G. Newman, of our Elon church, will be glad to hear from parents who have sons or daughters at Elon. Give Dr. Newman the name, or names, where he or she is rooming, and he will be glad to meet them personally. It is true that our college pastor gets in touch with all the students during the year but any assistance rendered him by parents or friends will help him the more.

"THE OBSERVATORY"—AN ANNOUNCEMENT

A feature of THE SUN during the last twelve months has been "The Observatory" written by Mr. J. E. Massey, New York City. Bro. Massey is a member of Concord church, Caswell County, N. C., a graduate of Elon College, and is now a second year student in the Department of Journalism in Columbia University, New York. He is preparing himself for special newspaper work.

"The Observatory" seeks to observe a few of the general tendencies of times and to serve that class of people who do not take a daily paper.

Beginning with this issue "The Observatory" is to be written by Mr. Watson D. Lambeth, Mr. Massey retiring from the work. Mr. Lambeth is also a graduate of Elon College, class of '21, a member of our Burlington church; and since June 1 has been the office assistant to THE SUN'S Editor. Mr. Lambeth keeps the subscription accounts, handles the book sales, assists in the correspondence, and edits "The Book Shelf" found on page 16. He is proving himself to be a capable helper and we predict that he will continue the standard of "The Observatory" set by Brother Massey.

TWO ARTICLES AND SOME QUESTIONS

There are two articles in this issue touching the ministerial shortage. They are written by Rev. J. P. Barrett and Rev. J. W. Holt. To each of these brethren we desire to ask some questions for them to answer through the columns of THE SUN:

To Dr. J. P. Barrett: - 1—Define a call to the ministry. 2—Does not God's calling a man to the ministry lay upon the laity of the Church an obligation to adequately support the one whom God calls? 3—Will God call a man to preach when God knows that the people will not answer a call to support?

To Rev. J. W. Holt: 1—If the average layman is being repelled in church work, who is responsible more than the average preacher? It is the pastor who has an opportunity to give the layman something to do, and why do not more of our pastors take advantage of this opportunity? 2—If the troubles of the Church exist now, as Brother Holt sees them, is it not because that pastors have failed to direct juvenile leadership? 3—What is wrong with amusement and recreation for church people if the amusement and recreation are not harmful? 4—Has the Church not already reproved and rebuked too much instead of directing how to work? Is the Christian religion a system of "dont's"? 5—If optimism has gone to seed, who has headed it in that direction more than the pastors who have preached negatively rather than positively?

The richest fruitage:—The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law.—Gal. 5:22-23.

How to win:—Trust in the Lord, and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed. Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass.—Psalm 37:3-5.

A safe investment:—He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again.—Prov. 19:17.

THE BULLETIN

We sympathize with Chaplain H. E. Rountree in the loss of his mother, Mrs. J. T. Rountree, on August 24. She was a faithful member of Cypress Chapel church in the Eastern Virginia Conference.

Rev. J. Cleveland Barrett changes his address from Harrisonburg, Va., to Defiance, Ohio, No. 4 College Place. Brother Barrett is studying in Defiance College and preaching for two nearby churches.

We were privileged to be present at Elon's opening last week. The student body is a fine looking group of young men and women. The outlook for the year is fine, the enrollment at this time being about the same as the enrollment on this date last year.

Dr. J. W. Wellons returned a few days ago from an extended trip to Fuquay Springs and nearby points. While away he preached four times, visited many old people in their affliction, and as usual, made himself useful for the Master.

The Committee on Location of the school to be located for our work in the far South has decided to build the school at Wadley, Alabama. The Chairman of the Board will give later a more extended account of Wadley's location, its offer, and the general plans of the school.

SAN ANTONIO FLOOD

On September 11, the waters which had flooded San Antonio, Texas, as a result of a cloudburst, were receding rapidly. The known death list had reached forty-seven persons and a rigid search was still being conducted. At least two hundred dwelling houses had been washed away and at places blocks of pavement were torn up and carried away. The wreckage was piled in spots twenty feet deep. The property damage in the business district is estimated at from five to ten millions of dollars. While the known death list is only 47, the dead and missing are estimated at 250. Gangs of workmen are busy carrying away the debris and searching for the bodies of the dead.

Death or life:—To be carnally minded is death; but to be spiritually minded is life and peace.—Romans 8:6.

Road to true riches:—Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.—Matt. 6:33.

The road to want:—He that oppresseth the poor to increase his riches, and he that giveth to the rich, shall surely come to want.—Prov. 22:16.

SUFFOLK LETTER

SEPTEMBER first will be a "red letter" day in the history of Bethlehem Christian church, near Suffolk, as the first home coming day of that congregation. The day was clear, dry, and hot. The community turned out four hundred strong. It was an all-day affair without any break in the interest from ten thirty a. m., until far into the afternoon. Automobiles filled the grove where carts used to rest with their shafts placed on the ground while the horses were tethered to trees and fought flies all day. It is better on horses now. If horses were asked to say whether the world is growing better, I think they would answer, "yes".

The chief speaker of the forenoon was Rev. H. Shelton Smith of Yale University, serving as vacation pastor of Washington Street Christian church, Portsmouth, Va. Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., an ex-pastor, had conducted devotional services and Rev. E. T. Cotten, the present pastor and Mrs. A. D. Brinkley sang a duet. This had tuned up the audience for Smith's great address. This writer as an ex-pastor sandwiched between Smith's address and music by R. O. Chandler's orchestra with Mrs. I. W. Johnson at the piano, in a few words of the salad type. The audience enjoyed the orchestra of seven pieces. The absence of Rev. H. H. Butler, an ex-pastor, was one of the regrets of the day.

After the enjoyable exercises in the church, pastor Cotten announced free dinner for all. A long table in the form of a hollow square had been erected in the grove, and in the center of it a long table where the super-abundant provision made people forget dry weather and hard times. Paper plates and cups have simplified and lessened the work in serving large crowds. The menu was something like this: All kinds of sandwiches, ham, beef, lamb, shooat, fried chicken in great panfuls, bread, biscuit, many kinds of pickles and cakes, chicken and potato salads, ice tea, ice water, and a grove full of good will. (I must explain for the children the origin of sandwiches. There was a town in England named "Sandwich" in Kent. The 4th Earl of Sandwich was named John Montague. He used to have slices of bread with ham between brought to him at the gaming table, so he could go on playing without stopping to eat at a table. Since his day slices of bread with something between are called sandwiches.)

Well, it was worth the day to see that throng enjoy that hospitable, sumptuous meal. The five thousand men Jesus fed by the sea did not have such a dinner as the Bethlehem people had. Christianity continues to improve the life and enjoyment of man. Jesus said Himself: "He that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto my father." Jesus never proposed to do all nor to make the best conditions in his day. He laid the foundation and believers build thereon. The reason why the world starves in places is because they do not pray, "give us this day our daily bread." If God could feed millions in the desert with no farms or gardens, He can spread a feast for those who pray and till the soil.

The afternoon listened to an address by Dr. I. W. Johnson and then held a Conference to consider enlarging, improving, and remodeling the church for modern Sunday school efficiency. This meeting, I understand, was earnest and steps were taken to carry out a cherished community desire. I was absent from the afternoon feast to attend funeral of Benjamin Claude Griffin, one of my members, who died in his sixty-second year. A good farmer, a good husband, a good father of one living son, Claude Courtney, and a faithful Christian.

The Bethlehem home-coming was a great day, a community feast, a spiritual occasion, and a new feature in that congregation. Where good women prepare such a splendid dinner for double the four hundred present, where the temperature was in the nineties, and are then happy in serving it, there must be something of the spirit of Jesus in their hearts; and the men helped and were happy, too. No doubt it will become an annual social feast day. Any country church could do the same.

THE HALLOWED PAST

There are some things that make the heart thump:

1. A prairie rolling back from the mountains where a man walks the mystic glimmering road.
2. The bare thought of God.
3. The wild stormy sea tossing against the barren "Roek-ribbed" coast of Maine.
4. The infinite depths of a canyon as one stands looking over the edge.
5. The sight of a small humble home down a wooded lane near Cypress Chapel, Virginia.
6. A story and a half bungalow behind a white-washed paling and a glimpse of a lassie behind the running vines.
7. Waiting for the parade of a circus and standing at the outside of a tent at night.
8. The sight of a squirrel in the forest.
9. The sudden appearance of a bear in the nighttime when hunting for smaller game.
10. A seven pound chub on the end of a fishing-line in lake Kilby.
11. The red heart of a watermelon broken about ten o'clock in the morning in an August fodder field.

12. Rolling in the surf at Virginia Beach in July.

13. The coming of a ship into the harbor of a foreign port.

These are a few scattered reminiscences the blessing of which poverty is to be thanked. The lingering impressions of the most of them may be traceable to the chronic meagerness of circumstances. For the lack of means to buy the ride, we often walk, and walking often gives opportunity for observation and experience which would never come by riding. For the lack of the means to go to the beach we stop at the lake in the woods and there we get thrills which we may not have had at the more expensive place. To the hard discipline of Dame Poverty we owe our thanks for a great many things,—a thousand thoughts of childhood pleasures which are never forgotten. Who cradled thee in the thought of God? Who took thee along the mountain road? Who held thee over the precipice? Who made thy home dear to thee? Who gave thee the love of a country lass? Who took thee into the joys of the forest? Who gave thee the melon in the field, who milked cows by day and walked to the was the poor man's boy who took the wintry walk, who drank of the old oaken bucket, who ate the melon in the field, who milked cows by day and walked the "candy cracking" by night or held his torch by the open Caesar, who stole apples of the orchard and was stung by the wasps of the trees,—the yellow of their beauty still stains the soul. And now after forty years of existence one stands upon the holy heights attained and view in panoramic glory the mighty spread of them all. And the thoughts that come over thee like a mighty tide of the sea teach that they were the forge that shaped thee. They were the forces that bore thee up "lest thou shouldst dash thy foot against a stone." However common-place they were, not one has diminished, not a distance receded; but whether by the pale March moon or the summer's burning heat, their distance lends enchantment and the soul is touched with gold. Would we exchange them for the riches of Carnegie or Rockefeller? For the freighted weight in gold of New York's greatest building?

Poverty is a Goddess fair. She found thee in the potter's field and sent thee where nature and piety were friends and together kept the House of God, where conduct and character is her education and the everlasting verities of life the thoughts of God. It is in such a temple we become true Masons, and are taught the virtue of deliberate rightness, love, truth, and beauty, the higher jewels of the kingdom.

So now as we contemplate the wonderful scene of the hallowed past, town and tower, trees and chapel, folks and faces, roads and ridges, homes and hardships and happiness, the joys and the phantasies of youthful yearnings, fused as it were in colored radiance of the gushing fountain in the sunshine of May, drink with me its hallowed beauty and turn with a pure soul to heaven.

OUR VIRGINIA LETTER

READ with much interest our editor's article touching the question of decrease in the ministry. The question is far reaching and bears directly on the future prosperity of the Church, not merely our Church, but quite as surely all the Churches.

The fact that there is a heavy decrease in the number of young men entering the ministry is most significant indeed. This decrease is not causative, but it is an effect which has been produced by some cause—the cause is the main question and not the effect.

If this scarcity of ministers were confined to our own people, it would not be so serious in that case, but when we know that there is not a Protestant denomination in the land which is not having a similar experience, then we begin to get a glimpse of its real meaning.

According to the most reliable authority at my command (I am copying from The Evening Post, as quoted in a religious weekly) the following are the facts:

The number of young men attending Theological Seminaries in the United States, with a view of entering the ministry, for the four years from 1916 to 1920, are as follows:

The Episcopal Church in 1916 had 463 such students, but in 1920 it had only 193, showing a loss of 270 in four years.

The Presbyterians in 1916 had 1,188 such students, but in 1920 it had only 695, showing a loss of 493. That is positively alarming.

The Methodist Church had in 1916 1,226 such students, but in 1920 it had only 976—a loss of 250.

The Congregational Church in 1910 had 499 such students, but in 1920 it had only 255—a loss of 244—almost half the whole number in ten years.

Supposing that this ratio should keep up in all the leading evangelical denominations of this country, as most likely it will, then the situation is most serious on every side.

Do you ask, What is the cause?

Some say it is because the churches pay such small salaries. For my part, I do not believe that at all. It is surely true that in many instances the salary is very small, but I am not ready to believe that any well reared and intelligent man would for one moment, when he feels called of God to preach the everlasting Gospel of the Son of God, decline it on the ground that the salary is not sufficient. What, refuse to enter the ministry under the call of God, and for no better reason than that the compensation is not sufficient? No man who has felt the call of God, as did Paul, when he said: "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel," would for one moment refuse to answer the call because the salary is too small. A man who has been thus gripped by God's call to enter the ministry, will not for one day, as I think, hesitate to answer in the affirmative and do his best in that direction. I must be candid enough to say that I am not prepared to believe that any sane and God-called man—I mean a man who has definitely settled the fact that God is calling him into the Christian ministry—will even listen to the tempter in any effort to induce him to decline the call. I do not think that a man who is called of God, and fully realizes it, could be bought off with the thought of a bigger salary in some other sphere. I dare to say that if a man were entering the ministry through some other call than that of God, he might be induced to go somewhere else for a bigger salary, but the man who feels, "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel" does not belong to that class of men.

I once heard of a man who said that if he had ever been called to the ministry, his pastor did it. I am not disposed to question his own statement, but in such a case I think possibly the matter of a small salary might govern his course and turn him to something with a bigger compensation for him, but the man who has received a call from the Lord to enter such a field, will never, I think, be so turned aside.

In my opinion the matter of a salary, big or little, never leads the God-called man to forsake the ministry. He cannot afford to do it—it would destroy his peace of mind and heart for the remainder of his life—at least I think it would.

Then do you ask: "If that be true, why does not God call a larger number to preach the Gospel?" I think that is an easy question to answer. The church, which is not deeply and truly spiritual, cannot bring forth young men whom God can reach by a call. Their ears are too deaf to hear spiritual calls. A deeply spiritual church can do this sort of work—it can by the grace of God and the inworking of God's Spirit move His chosen to undertake such a work, but nothing else can do it, so far as I know.

We truly believe that this is the present situation. Unspiritual people, whether preachers or people, cannot bring forth men upon whom God will lay His hand in a call to preach the Gospel. If we are to increase the number of worthy men in the ranks of the Gospel ministry, then we must have men and women to compose the membership of the churches, in the main who are surely born of the Spirit and commissioned of God—they will undertake the work God gives them, even though the salary be very small.

May we hope to increase the number of ministerial students in the Churches? Can the Episcopal Church, the Methodist Church, the Presbyterian Church, or the Baptist Church, or the Congregational Church increase the number of their ministerial students? Can we increase the number in the Christian Church? The answer depends on what they become. If they become deeply and truly Spirit-filled, then they can, but if they prefer to be formal and stilted church members, in that case the very best they can hope to do will be to induce a few to enter the ministry, the most of whom will preach, if the salary is big enough, and if it is not, then you may expect to see them turn aside to work which will, as they believe, pay them a bigger salary. We sincerely wish that this class of men might be induced to begin their life's work in some line of human activity.

Next week we hope to give another serious reason for so few young men entering the ministry, and may God add His blessing to as many as He may need in this great field of Christian effort.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

WHY IS IT?

If an explanation can be given, we want it. This lament that is going the rounds of the religious press, about the shortage of ministers in the ranks of all denominations is in mind of this writer, doing harm. Does it mean that the Master has lost interest in his Church? Does it mean that the real and vital principles of the gospel have ceased to appeal to the heart of man? Have we so beclouded the word of truth with worldliness that men have ceased to listen with interest and heed the message? A lack of honest sincere conviction at the very start may account for some of the indifference that comes out later in life. The cross becomes too heavy to be borne with patience and fidelity when the pulpit and the pew falter at the sacrifice and service required. The administration of church government is hurtful in some instances, and accounts for the falling off of many. Instead of a democracy the church machinery is run by hierarchical and purely political methods. The average layman is repelled when it comes to church work. He meets with no encouragement but practically is told to furnish the money and keep quiet. Economy has but little place in church affairs. Publicity is largely kept in the background in church finances. Conference proceedings are little better than political steam-roller methods. Favoritism has become too much of a family roost. It would be better in some instances to pull down the sign Christian and to hoist in its stead personal ambition. God will not call men into either pulpit or pew while the church offers nothing better than much that it is offering now. Juvenile leadership is leading too much in the direction of reckless speeding. A minister told me a short while ago that he would confess that he did not know just where we were, not just where we were going in our church life. The young people have gone wild in the matter of amusement and recreation and many of our older church people have gone with them. The outside world sees this and stands aloof. In our own Christian Church the spirit of compromise with the world dominates our activities so far that socialism has taken the place of piety and religion. Our church life no longer reproves and rebukes "with all authority and doctrine". Our toleration has become participation, and that gives the devil a day off to go on a picnic. Our standard of religion is too low and we are doing but little to raise it higher. Our social, religious and civic code has become so elastic that it tolerates almost any and every thing. We are being sadly wounded in the house of our friends. This is in part why the Church is losing out. The gospel of Jesus Christ with the cross left out does not appeal to the unsaved world today. It does not inspire men to live lives of sacrifice and service to help bring the world to Christ. Optimism has gone to seed while men are going to destruction. Why is it? Where is the remedy?

Jesus As A Leader

(C. M. CANNON)

IN delivering his opening address to the student body last Sunday President Harper of Elon discussed "Jesus as a Leader". "The leadership of Jesus," he said, "is unique in the world. Born amid the cattle, cradled in the trough from which they ate, with never a place of His own during all His life on which He could lay His head, crucified with thieves, buried in a tomb belonging to another, this Man cast out and rejected by the rulers of the day has become the dating point for all history. But the uniqueness of His leadership is not discerned in these facts, marvelous as they are. He gave the world a new idea of leadership, a new viewpoint from which to estimate men and movements, a new spirit in which to live, a new power to rise to closer fellowship with God and brethren.

"Jesus was no scientist and yet He understood the interpretation of science as no scientist ever did. He saw to the heart of things and interpreted the facts of life in terms of His Father's will and purpose. To Darwin life was competition, a struggle between the strong and the weak, with the fittest surviving. To Malthus the increase of population could be relieved of the direful consequences of overcrowding only by disease, pestilence, famine, and wars. The sad thing about these scientists, one of them a preacher, is that they arrived at their irrational and distressing conclusions after Jesus had given us the proper interpretation of the facts of life that drove them to folly and madness. No one can doubt that biologically the strong have survived the weak and that disease and war have on occasions thinned out the population of the world. On these points Christ agrees with Darwin and Malthus. But these men understood these facts which they had observed to be the inevitable and unchanging laws of life. Jesus knew better. He knew His Father's design in the creation of man. He knew that the weak as well as the strong are equally dear to God and that there is no respect of persons with Him. In terms of that knowledge He interpreted life not as competition but as brotherhood, and the ills of life not as inevitable consequences, but as the denial of that brotherhood, and the goal of life not as the survival of the fittest, but as the uplift of all. 'And I, if I be lifted up from the earth,' He declared, 'will draw all men unto Me.'

"He was lifted up, lifted up on the cross, and He has been drawing men to Himself ever since. As the Leader of men, He lifts them up to higher places. We who have imbibed His spirit and adopted His viewpoint look upon the inequalities of life as rebukes to our own sinfulness and are driven by the sense of brotherhood striving within our hearts to remove those inequalities by lifting our brothers out of them and up to our own standard and vantage ground of life. And most marvelous of all,

He has imparted to us and will to all the power to achieve the things our hearts assure us are right and which they impel us to undertake.

"The problem of suffering has always perplexed the human heart, and appalled it when loved ones have suffered. Why should there be suffering and sorrow in life? 'It is the process by which the fittest survive,' says Darwin. 'It is the method by which the surplus in population is eliminated,' answers Brother Malthus. 'It is the opportunity to prove our brotherhood and the challenge to men to make progress by removing the causes of sorrow and suffering,' teaches the Christ. And we instinctively know He is right. The same facts, but a new insight. The same facts, but a new interpretation. The same facts, but a new spur to progress. The same facts, but these very facts become the opportunity to achieve the goal of humanity, the lifting up of the weak to the level of the strong and the bringing of all mankind into the high estate of citizenship in the democracy of God. Christ has been lifted up, and behold the miracles He has during those twenty centuries wrought in the lives and organizations and attitudes of men!

"It would therefore be more appropriate to call Jesus the lifter of men and all that ministers to man", the speaker urged, and then he showed how Jesus had lifted women, children, the laboring man, prisoners, medical science, scholarship, governments, and the individual soul that trusts Him.

In concluding President Harper declared that "the millennium is yet to come, but it is coming. It is being born before our very eyes, and we are privileged to hasten its full realization among men. The millennium is not something to be dropped down out of the sky upon men. It is a state of bliss possible of realization through the lifting power of Christ, assisted by His followers on the earth. Just as He has lifted women and children from their low estate to where they now are, with larger promise for the future; just as He has touched the lives of the poor and the prisoner with hope and cheer and lifted them up; just as He has created for uplift to men medical science and scholarship; just as He has touched the individual man with newness of life and power and everywhere made him a king and priest unto God; just so He is able to touch all of life and every institution that ministers to life, and the social order in even its remotest and most minute details, and lift them up to Himself.

Sins of the Tongue. James 3:1-12.

“There is so much good in the worst of us,
And so much bad in the best of us,
That it scarcely behooves any of us,
To talk about the rest of us.”

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION IN OUR CHURCHES

The inquiries regarding various phases of Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work which come to our office, and the interest shown in the churches visited show that our people are seeing the need of religious education, and the absolute necessity of better organized Sunday schools, better trained teachers, and more efficient Christian Endeavor Societies to accomplish the great work which lies in our power to do. The opportunity of our Church for service in the coming days surely lies in the thought and care and direction which we give to the children and youth in our churches today, and just as surely if we neglect them, we are throwing away our chance to serve and our opportunity to grow and progress. It is encouraging and inspiring to note that many of our churches are seeing the need and earnestly seeking to respond to it with a more adequate program of church activity through the Sunday school and the Christian Endeavor Society. We give a few evidences of this forward work.

Most of our problems when carefully analyzed may be traced back to a lack of trained leadership. Some of our schools are realizing this and providing for future leaders in their Teacher-Training Classes. In the Newport church in the Valley of Virginia Conference, Rev. R. P. Crumpler, pastor, Mrs. J. F. Lauderback is assuming the responsibility for the organization of a Community Teacher-Training Class, which will be made up of Sunday school workers from four nearby churches, meeting weekly in this study. Mr. J. E. Foster, of our Leaksville church, is to assist in the organization of this class which we are sure will do a splendid work. Another Teacher-Training Class is to be organized in the Shiloh Sunday school, Mr. Chas. A. Tedder, Kemps Mills, N. C. Superintendent. Leaksville, Va., has a fine class, meeting at the regular Sunday school hour, taught by Mr. Ralph Rothgeb. This class has completed nearly three fourths of the first year course. Winchester has a class meeting every Monday night, with a membership composed of teachers of the school and young people interested in training themselves for better service in the Sunday school and the church. Ten leaders in the Eastern Virginia Conference promised to be responsible for the organization of a Teacher-Training Class in their respective churches. We hope to hear from these classes soon. This is a very constructive feature of our work and one which every pastor and superintendent should help to promote.

A letter from Mr. Roy A. Larrick, Superintendent of the Winchester Sunday school, under date of September 1, says: “I shall appreciate it very much if you will write me the ten points that each Sunday school is to reach before becoming a banner school. We hope to make Winchester a banner school very soon.” And Winchester will soon reach the standard set by the International Sunday School Association because that school has a splendid start, and a determination to succeed. Which will be our first standard Sunday school?

Christian Endeavor work comes in for its share of awakened interest also. An enthusiastic letter comes from Mr. Marvin A. Pollard, Wedowce, Alabama, asking for information about starting a Christian Endeavor Society, and another letter from Mrs. W. A. Hand of the Vanceville church, Tifton, Ga., R No. 5. Both of these workers are alive to the needs of our young people, and to the part which Christian Endeavor can play in satisfying those needs and giving an opportunity for consecrated Christian service. Miss Edna F. Smith, Raleigh, N. C., Route No. 4, reports definite plans to organize a Christian Endeavor Society. We hope to hear more from these churches as well as from the others which have made inquiries about Christian Endeavor work.

Very many of our Sunday schools are doing a splendid work by their monthly missionary offering. Several have been asking about missionary instruction in the Sunday school as well. This is fine. Let your school elect a Missionary Secretary or Superintendent who will be responsible for emphasizing missions in your Sunday school. Then let that Superintendent write to Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C., for material for that monthly of weekly missionary service, and make that part of your service really worth while in bringing information and inspiration for the great missionary endeavor.

RAIN AND POOR CROPS

During the evening of September 7, we had a good refreshing rain. Everything has been so dry and dusty that the rain brings joy to our hearts. But the rain came too late for vegetables as our gardens have dried up and we have not been able to get a turnip up this season, after planting five different times.

Our Baby Home is a growing institution. We started off with ten children and now we have twenty little tots. We received three little tots from Alabama on September 7. They made the trip alone and their ages are from three to seven. Bright little fellows and fat as butter balls. Though far from home they are happy and bright as they can be and are perfectly satisfied. The rest of the children have fallen very much in love with them and carry them around in their arms as if they were little babies.

I asked one of the what they were fed on where they came from to make them so fat, and he said, "Milk and bread." We can keep up their diet as we are now getting plenty of milk and have some bread.

We had one warm time filling our silo the first days of September. I hardly think I ever worked in weather much hotter. The heat registered from 100 to 105 in the silo. It was good for rheumatism to work in there. I hardly think I will be bothered with it any time soon. We had to cut up about half of our corn crop to save it as it was burning up so fast and before the corn could mature. Then, too, our bean crop we had planted for cow feed has been a complete failure owing to having no rain since we planted them, but with some early beans and the corn we put about eighty tons of silage feed in the silo for the cattle. This will be a great help to us to keep our dairy going.

THE ZR-2

Spoken of by The Literary Digest as the mightiest dirigible air-ship in the world and the same magazine stated in its issue of August 27, that the air-ship would soon be on its way to America from England flying the American flag. Yet, before that issue could be printed and delivered the great ship had met a destruction on its trial trip that astounded the scientific world, most especially America and England. The great ship was wrecked August 25, at Hull, England, killing twenty-seven men of the British navy and seventeen of the United States.

According to Donald McGregor, writing in the New York Herald, the cost of the ship was $2,000,000 and the hangar which was to house the ZR-2 and the ZR-1, her sister ship (now being built in the United States), will cost $2,000,000 more. John Gleason O'Brien describes in the magazine section of the New York Tribune:

"The total length of the ZR-2 is 700 feet. If she were stood on end by the Washington Monument the tail of the ship would be 150 feet higher than the top of the monument. If the mighty ZR-2 was stood up against the Woolworth peak just 92 feet of the tower would remain in view looming above the bulk of the air-ship. She is 85 feet thick, and her gas capacity is approximately 2,720,000 cubic feet, which gives her a disposable lift, consisting of gasoline, crew, oil, cargo, or armament, of about 45 tons.

"The captain controls the ship exactly as does the captain of a seagoing vessel. The communication system consists of engine room telegraphs, ship's telephone, and voice tubes. All orders to the power units on the engine telegraphs are repeated back to the control car before being put into execution. The ZR-2 is an aerial liner in every sense of the word, it will be observed that she is truly an aristocrat of the sky, ranking far above the ordinary navy blimps."

The destruction of this great air-ship vividly brings back to our minds the destruction of that great water vessel, the Titanic. The destruction of the ZR-2 will rank in aerial history as the destruction of the Titanic ranks in the history of seagoing craft. Perhaps there was less cause for the ZR-2 disaster, it being reported that she was weak in structure. However, the rumor was emphatically denied by officials. Some editorials have spoken of it as a great crime that should be investigated and severe punishment administered. The ship structurally weak was allowed to ascend, making possible the greatest disaster in aerial history.

GERMANY GAINING POWER IN AIR

It is claimed that while the German shipping industry is showing great signs of coming to life again, she is making much more rapid strides of progress in air-transportation. British observers in Germany keep referring to these signs because they are afraid that England is going to be left behind, if she does not "get a hustle on", before she realizes the opportunities of this new field of transportation. They say that "the world is my field" use to be the slogan of the German merchant marine in the boastful days of 1914 but now as she could not realize that boast she has taken the air as her field.

The London Daily Chronicle states that Germany's aeroplanes are running on schedule every day and almost every hour of the day. The same paper calls attention to a guide of air-routes which is "a substantial booklet of nearly a hundred pages, and is as statistical as the famous English railway guides." Fourteen pages are filled with details of regular daily services to places within the borders of Germany and it is said that they give to a minute the time of arrivals and departures, not even inserting a clause "the wind and weather permitting."

Much is said about the "Flying Post" which is not burdened with any special regulations. All one has to do to assure speedy delivery is to mark the letter "By Flying Post" and drop it in any letter-box in the ordinary way. The Literary Digest states that international arrangements have been made with Holland, England and Scandinavia so that a letter posted in Berlin at 7:30 in the morning reaches London at 5:30 the same evening. This only proves that Germany is doing all in her power to develop her air transportation and if the other countries do not wake up they will soon be left behind.

WOODROW WILSON GAINING HEALTH

Much has been said about the health of this man and it is because laying aside all prejudice of party and politics the country and we might say the world is interested in the author of the League of Nations and respects him as such.

Reports coming from Washington September 8, state that Woodrow Wilson is "on the up-trail to health," and is climbing steadily toward the peak of physical recovery. The correspondent presenting the report says that he has pulled out of the slump into which he slipped following his retirement from the public in March and is looking better and feeling better than at any time since his breakdown two years ago. His voice is much better and he speaks almost as easily as before his illness when his eloquence held great audiences spellbound. He is gaining rapidly in weight and the use of his partially paralyzed left arm and leg is gradually returning. Dr. Grayson, who was his personal physician in the White House is still with him and they have formed the strongest of friendships.

The public cannot help rejoicing at the recovery of this man, who now moves about the capital without any noise, and it cannot help but wish him much success as it wishes any wounded veteran of the World War because he is numbered with such.

The South Carolina American Legion adopted a resolution on September 7, 1921, declaring a statement made by George Harvey at a dinner of the Pilgrim's society to be false.

INTERCESSORY PRAYER

(Central Christian Advocate)

There are prayers—we almost said prayers a plenty. There certainly are prayers a plenty after their kind. But how many prayers of intercession are there—prayers for others poured forth with searching of heart and an intensity of feeling that will take no refusal?

Our age finds it easy to condemn. Labor condemns capital. Capital condemns labor. Whites condemn blacks; Americans, Japanese; the world, Germans. It is easy to be harsh today?

But is it as easy to pray the prayer of intercession for those who do as well as those who suffer wrong? Do we pray for our enemies, so to say? Do we make intercession with groanings deeper than words?

Friends, if we wish to cure the ills and hurt of the world we shall not succeed by mere condemnation; for cures must touch sources, roots, not effects only. And in efficacy we must, we must begin with intercessory prayer. We must begin with prayers for the conversion of those we believe to be wrong and doing wrong, for those we believe to be guilty, as well as for those we believe to be their victims. We must begin where Jesus began—or we shall miserably fail.

Let us step aside into the closet and shut to the door, and in secret upon our knees, in the spirit to the Spirit, set going the power that belongs to intercessory prayer. We can pray out wrong, we can checkmate wrong. In some way, in the mystic fact of prayer, we can bring about the heart's desire. Christ taught us to pray "Thy Kingdom Come!" Can we not pray the kingdom into being?

President Harding points to the 3000-mile unfortified Canadian line and claims that the world is not so bad after all.

OUR WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE

The time draws apace for our annual gathering when the work we have done during the year shall stand to our credit or appear to our humiliation. Have we wrought well and shall we rejoice together? Much may be done in these last few weeks of we apply ourselves to the task. This year has been marked by greater depression, perhaps, than any in the history of our woman's work, and to reach our goals will require heroic effort but we cannot afford to let our King's business suffer. Perhaps we may be called to sacrifice in order to meet our requirements but if we love the work we will rejoice to do this in order that the work may go forward. If every woman in every church shall do her best there shall be no lack.

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference meets with the Society at Damascus, Gates Co., on Friday, October 28. We want to make this a great occasion, and each of us can help to do this. Begin now to pray daily for this meeting and plan to have a good representation present.

September is the month to elect officers for the coming year and to outline your work. We suggest that your leaders for each month be appointed and posted in a conspicuous place in your church. Also delegates should be elected at this time for the Missionary Conference.

MRS. C. H. ROWLAND.

DISARMAMENT OF THE NATIONS

The formal invitation to the powers to join in a conference in Washington November 11 on the subject of disarmament follows the lines set for general expectation. Stress is laid upon the staggering economic burden entailed in the disbursements in armament rivalries. No stability or social justice can be expected "while wasteful and unproductive outlays deprive effort of its just reward and defeat the reasonable expectation of progress." Secretary Hughes' reasoning is unanswerable: "There can be no final assurance of the peace of the world in the absence of the desire for peace, and the prospect for reduced armaments is not a hopeful one unless this desire finds expression in a practical effort to remove causes of misunderstanding and to seek grounds for agreement as to principles and their application."—Washington Evening Star.

These statements made by Hudson Maxim showing that disarmament would mean a saving of a billion dollars a year suggest better than figures could possibly do what the race for big armaments is costing the United States year by year. And the things specified are only a few of the many for which such a sum of money as a billion dollars might be used. Consider for instance what it would mean to have that much money used for educational purposes annually in addition to what it now being spent. Consider what it might accomplish in improving housing conditions in our big cities and in providing people with beautiful surroundings. As things are we spend vast sums of money, the net result of which is to increase the volume of suspicion in the world and to make future wars more likely. If the present movement toward disarmament has the backing of the Christian Churches, we shall find ourselves on the eve of better days.—The Baptist.

Our formal invitation to the powers to participate in a conference at Washington on limitation of armaments is more than an invitation. It is a frank statement of the essentials of world peace. In a few words President Harding (or Secretary Hughes) lays bare the heart of the problem. "There can be no final assurance of the peace of the world," runs this part of the invitation, "in the absence of the desire for peace." And this desire must be more than a mere wish. It must be strong enough to compel "a practical effort to remove causes of misunderstanding and to seek ground for agreement as to principles and their application." These words lift the conference from an assembly called to consider precise restrictions upon armaments to a great clearing house of misunderstandings.—New York Evening Post.

With the definite acceptance by Japan of President Harding's invitation to the great powers to engage in a conference for discussion of armament and Far Eastern problems, the conference apparently is assured. It is expected that the date suggested by the United States—

Armistice Day—will be accepted by the other powers, though a great deal of study and research will be necessary before intelligent discussions can take place. There have been several suggestions that the conference be held in some Canadian city or in some other American city than Washington. As had been expected, Japan's acceptance was not without an insistence that certain Far Eastern problems be left out, as closed incidents or "accomplished facts." The Japanese statement says that it is advisable that the agenda of the conference should be arranged in accord with the main object of the conference—disarmament—and that "the introduction therein of problems such as are of some concern to certain particular powers or matters that may be regarded as accomplished facts should be scrupulously avoided."—The Continent.

The information you give of orders having been issued by the British Government to increase its naval force on the Lakes is confirmed by intelligence from that quarter of measures having been actually adopted for the purpose. It is evident if each party augments its force there with a view to obtaining the ascendancy over the other, that vast expense will be incurred, and the danger of collision augmented in like degree. The President is sincerely desirous to prevent an evil which it is presumed is equally to be deprecated by both governments. He therefore authorizes you to propose to the British Government such an arrangement respecting the naval force to be kept on the Lakes by both Governments as will demonstrate their pacific policy and secure their peace. He is willing to confine it on each side to a certain moderate number of armed vessels and the smaller the number the more agreeable to him; or to abstain altogether from an armed force beyond that used for the revenue. You will bring this subject under the consideration of the British Government immediately after the receipt of this letter.—Secretary of State James Monroe in 1815.

The sentences in the formal American invitation to the Disarmament Conference, summoned to meet on November 11, 1921, ring like steel hammer blows on a brazen gong. They carry far, and there is no mistaking the reasons, purposes, and arguments. These may or may not appeal to the world politician or the chancelleries. Their approval, however, is certain to be to the tax-burdened, whether in Great Britain, Japan, Italy, France, or America. The reasons for the call to Washington go back of the rulers and national figureheads to the men and women who pay war's tributes in tax-money and blood and tears. "Productive labor is staggering under an economic burden too heavy to be borne," is a phrase that will find echo and affirmation everywhere. Men who are dreaming of social justice, of world stability, and the security of unbroken peace are told that such dreams and hopes are idle, "while wasteful and unproductive outlays deprive effort of its just reward and defeat the expectations of progress."—Public Ledger.

"Tell Me a Story"

THE LONGEST WAY ROUND

Martha and Ella lived on a farm. Their father kept a nice herd of sheep headed by a big ram. This old ram never troubled the grown-ups, but would tease the children every chance he got.

The sheep pasture was directly back of the house, and, at the right of the pasture, some distance away, was the vegetable garden. When mother and the girls went to the garden they always went through the corner of the pasture, as it saved so much time, and the distance was so much shorter. When the little girls went alone to gather beans and peas they had to go long way round, because of the old ram.

One day mother sent Martha and Ella to the garden alone, as she was busy with the housework. The little girls looked longingly at the path through the sheep pasture, and noticed that the sheep were all at the other end of the pasture, and they made specially sure that the old ram was among them. Together they talked the matter over carefully and in spite of mother's warning decided to skip quickly across the corner of the pasture!

They climbed the fence into the pasture and ran gayly along, but here was a pretty flower to pick and there was another, until they forgot entirely the need of haste or the ram. Half way across they heard the pounding of hoofs, and upon looking around saw that the old ram was close upon them.

With a frantic rush and loud screams the little girls ran for a pile of boards just ahead of them. Martha reached them first, climbed quickly over and lay down flat on the ground on the other side. Little Ella, following close behind, reached the top of the lumber pile with the ram so close behind her that before she could go down on the other side the old ram had sent her flying into the air. She fell to the ground on the other side of Martha.

Ella wasn't hurt, but was badly frightened, and lay crying on the ground. The old ram followed the children over the pile and stood guard over them.

As long as they lay still, he only stood between them; but if either girl raised her head, he threatened her with a rumbling voice and shaking horns.

Martha called and called for mother and little Ella sobbed pitifully, but no one came. They were out of sight of the house, behind the pile of lumber, and were too far away to be heard. Then too, mother had no idea they had gone through the pasture.

Bye and bye mother began to think that it was time for her little girls to return from the garden, and went to the door to look for them. Her little girls were nowhere to be seen. Their little bright sunbonnets ought to be seen from the house, thought mother; but no sign of them could she see. Finally she let her eyes wander over the pasture. There she saw the sheep scattered over it, but as her eyes went back to the garden she noticed the back of the old ram just showing above the pile of lumber. At once she thought she knew where the little ones might be.

Quickly she ran down the path, was over the fence in a hurry and quickly she ran to the old ram, and seized his two horns in her two hands and rubbed his nose in the ground as hard as she could. He felt dreadfully hurt and offended to have his fun spoiled like that, and hurried off to join the other sheep.

Mother picked up little Ella and made sure that she was only frightened, and then they all went back to the house.

Martha and Ella never tried the path through the pasture again when they were sent to the garden unless mother went along.—Exchange.

MUST HAVE

Some things the services of the Church must have. She must have dignity in her worship, and reverence for the house of God. A preacher may gain the praise of men and lose the favor of God. It does not bring the kingdom of God, when we use the pulpit to entertain and preach a gospel that is not the gospel of the Son of God.—Exchange.

CHURCH NEWS

OUR CHURCH AT LANGDALE, ALA.

The church at Langdale, Ala., was organized by Rev. H. M. Gray on the third Sunday in March, 1921, with eighteen members. Our work has been held back because we have no church building. The only church building in the town is furnished by the cotton mill, and in this building the Baptist and Methodist denominations each hold two services a month. Brother Gray has been preaching in this church twice a month, on Sunday afternoons. We expect to hold services one Sunday each month next year and thus give our church a better opportunity for service.

Langdale is a cotton mill village of about 2,100 population, and the Christian church has a great opportunity to become strong in membership if we will assist Brother Gray in his faithful efforts.

The revival at this place began the fifth Sunday in July and was well attended. At many of the night services the crowd could not be seated. As a result of the meeting there were eighteen additions to the different churches—nine to the Baptist, one to the Methodist, and eight to the Christian. The meeting continued twelve days with Rev. H. M. Gray doing the preaching, Samuel B. Dollar leading the singing, Miss Ina Gray, pianist. The church was much revived and the eyes of the people turned toward the meeting and much good was accomplished. The free will offering amounted to $106.00

Brother Gray is doing a great work here. May God continue his blessing on him for he surely is a man of God.

FROM THE FAR SOUTH

My dear Brother Riddle:

I desire to give readers of THE SUN a few notes from my field. We have had fine meetings at all our churches this summer and at some of these large numbers have been added to the church.

My first meeting was at New Hope the fourth Sunday in July and the week following. I was sick at that time and Rev. H. W. Elder conducted the meeting. There were eleven accessions to the church and much good resulted. At my last appointment I received seven additional members into the church, and the membership voted an invitation to Brother Elder to hold their revival each year so long as it is possible for him to do so.

My second meeting began at Beulah church Saturday before the fifth Sunday in July. Rev. A. B. Roberson, the Baptist pastor, assisted me in this meeting. We had a great union meeting—one of the best we have held in this community during the thirty years which I have been trying to serve this people.

My next meeting was at McGuire's Chapel. Rev. C. W. Carter preached three sermons during this revival and we had a good meeting. Three members have been received since the revival.

The week following the second Sunday in August the meeting at Antioch was held. Rev. J. H. Hughes did most of the preaching during the meeting and everybody enjoyed his sermons very much. Seven members were added to the church.

I assisted the Methodist pastor of Abanda in a revival the week after the third Sunday in August. We had a fine meeting. In all these meetings we have endeavored to give God the glory, and I desire to express my thanks to my ministerial brethren for their help during the revival season. If I had not had help my strength would have failed. God bless these brethren.

I feel that I should give up some of my work next year as I am not so strong as formerly. And, too, we have some noble young men who need to be employed. May the Lord direct.

G. D. HUNT.

FROM BRO. J. F. APPLE'S FIELD

Mt. Zion—Our meeting at this place began the second Sunday in July. Rev. Cornelius Rowland, Forth Worth, Texas, was with us and did the preaching. He is a real gospel preacher. His messages were plain, inspiring and uplifting. There were four professions, and one addition to the church since the close of the meeting.

Long's Chapel—On the third Sunday and week following in July, the evangelistic services were conducted at this place. Rev. T. J. Green, Ramseur, N. C., was with us and did the preaching. He did some fine preaching. His messages were enjoyed by those who heard him. The singing was fine, and large congregations attended. As a result of the meeting, there were ten professions and four additions to the church. The church was really and truly revived.

Apple's Chapel—Evangelistic services were conducted here fourth Sunday and week following in July. Again we were assisted by Bro. Rowland. The attendance at these services was larger if not the largest there had been in several years. Many expressed themselves as hearing the plainest and best preaching of their lives. Bro. Rowland is a man of experience and power in the pulpit. So far as we know there were about 28 or 30 professions; of this number 16 united with the church.

Hopedale—Here Bro. Rowland and Rev. R. H. Coble conducted the evangelistic services beginning the first Sunday in August and closing on Tuesday night after the second Sunday. The meeting was a great success. There were some more than thirty-five professions; nine united with the church. The work here is getting along fine. We are preaching to them the first Sunday afternoons.

The first Sunday in September Bro. Hurley Sumner and Bro. Walter Faucette were ordained deacons of the church.

SHADY GROVE

The revival meeting began at Shady Grove, Montgomery County, N. C., on August 21, 1921 and closed August 25. The services were conducted morning and afternoon with luncheon in the grove. The attendance was fairly good during the entire meeting.

Rev. J. W. Knight, Stokesdale, N. C. came on Monday and did the preaching. His messages were practical and inspiring. Brother Knight is an earnest worker in a revival. He is a Gospel preacher and lives the life to give his messages power. It is good to work with him and to be in his company. His fellowship is congenial. His life has been an inspiration to me. May the Lord bless his efforts wherever he goes.

There were eleven professions and reclamations, two united with the church and the church greatly revived. It was the best revival I have seen in any of my charges this summer. All glory and praise to our Heavenly Father through Jesus Christ for what was done.

L. L. WYRICK.

On Sunday, August 14, the revival meeting began at Good Hope, and closed the following Friday.

Rev. J. S. Carden of Durham was present and did the preaching. The interest was good and the church greatly strengthened. Twenty-five professed Christ during the meeting, and twenty-one were taken into the church. There were also three reconsecrations. All glory and honor to Him who listens and answers when His children pray.

PALM STREET, GREENSBORO, N. C.

On Saturday afternoon, August 27, 1921, the Sunday school of Palm Street church enjoyed a trip to Lee's Chapel M. E. church. They served watermelons, lemonade and supper on the ground and everyone was thoroughly satisfied so far as eating was concerned. The church ground was beautiful and level so the children could play games. It is the custom of the Palm Street church to give an annual affair of this nature for the young people and children to enjoy.

The Sunday school at this place is growing rapidly. Everyone seems to be doing his or her part under the direction of Superintendent E. L. Hobbs. The church as a whole is also making progress. The writer accepted a call for full time service last December. During this year a Woman's Missionary Society has been organized and this Society is planning to render a program on the fourth Sunday evening in September.

A Christian Endeavor Society has also been organized with a large number of young people taking an interest.

We are hoping in a few weeks to lay some definite plans for the Society to do.

The church could not get a resident pastor for next year so the writer was called to serve. We are planning another revival between now and Conference. May the Heavenly Father continue his blessings upon the church at this place, and help us to lead the way of real truth and honesty in the Word of God.

G. C. CRUTCHFIELD.

A CALL FOR HELP

Dear Friends: Haven't you a member, class or organization in your congregation who would be glad to contribute $10.00 to a very worthy cause in the vineyard of our Lord?

The members of the Christian church at Mebane, need and want a church building, but the membership is too small at present to undertake the work alone.

There is no other church located within half a mile of the site, although this part of the town is building up on all sides with substantial families who own their own homes and a large tract of valuable property has recently changed hands and is to be opened up shortly.

We now have a Sunday school room, which we have been using for four years, but we are very crowded. We have a live Sunday school of willing and energetic workers. The church membership though small is very liberal and loyal to all the causes of the church.

We feel that this is the time to make an earnest effort to get us a church building. We as a denomination have waited too long already and have seen the children of our people go into other churches, simply because our Church was not represented in the town.

We have placed the contract for the brick to build the church and if you see your way to give us a contribution it will mean much to the cause.

With a prayer that you may see your way clear to contribute to this cause and believing that you will, we are yours,

A HOME WITHOUT BOOKS

"We form judgments of men from little things about their houses, of which the owner perhaps never thinks. If on visiting the dwelling of a man of slender means we find that he contents himself with cheap carpets and very plain furniture in order that he may purchase books, he rises at once in our esteem. Books are the windows through which the soul looks out. A home without books is like a room without windows. No man has a right to bring up his children without surrounding them with books. It is a wrong to his family. He cheats them."—Henry Ward Beecher.

"Books are never asleep. If investigating you interrogate, they conceal nothing; if you mistake them they never grumble; if you are ignorant they cannot laugh at you."—Lincoln.

"Books will speak plain when counsellors flatter. Therefore it is good to be conversant in them, especially the books of such as themselves have been actors on the stage."—Bacon.

Reading is mental traveling through regions far ore various and attractive than any terrestrial journey. The tourist annihilates space while the reader destroys space and time. The world of thought and action is spread out before him and it is his privilege to take part with the greatest men of history of all countries. The art of reading is to read in such a way as to secure the greatest results in the shortest time. Reading habits must be formed to be able to do this and they are formed just as other habits, unconsciously. One who is just beginning to read or one who has already read much can form good reading habits and acquire the art of reading.

The Steep Ascent

By Emily E. Entwistle

Beginning with the way of the Master up the steep ascent of Calvary, the author tells in a delightful way the story of those Christian heroes who down through all the centuries have followed their Master's footsteps. Martha Tarbell says: "It is exceedingly well and interestingly written. Adapted to the junior and lower intermediate grades for which so few books of this sort are written." Price 50c.

A NOVEL

The Master of Man

"Hall Caine gives to the full the desired measure of life—of its passions and its defeats, of its ideals and its triumphs, of its sweetness and its strength. In his new story he has taken a subject of undying-interest, one which has fascinated many great writers, Tolstoy, Stevenson, Hawthorne and others, but above all it is a romance of the heart."

Preaching

THE EDITOR

PREACHING is no small thing and the word signifies more than most of us understand it to mean. Common is the acceptance that it means to instruct from the sacred desk. It means this—and more, far more. The Hebrew language renders it kohleth, “to bring or tell good tidings”; the Greek would render it euaggellizo, “to announce good tidings”. That continuous truth that the Church is always giving is preaching; and that truth is given by ordained and un-ordained preachers.

Preaching—the spreading of Christianity’s good tidings is the privilege of every true follower of the lowly Nazarene. Christians are proclaimers of the “good news”, and they may proclaim it in a hundred different ways. To limit preaching to the pulpit is to circumscribe its meaning. And to say this is not to minimize the pulpit, but magnify it. The pulpit is the Jerusalem of preaching. Every believer must be an ambassador to carry the “glad tidings” to the uttermost parts of the earth. Let us preach in His name.

IDEAS AND RESULTS

This is a day when no special conviction is expressed. One idea is as good as another, if the results are forthcoming. There are ideas that may bring results, but the worth of such ideas depends upon the endurance of the results. Short cut methods are popular. Such methods may bring immediate results, but they may not be lasting. That is, after all, the final test of an idea. There are ideas and ideas. Judge them by results that last.

A WORTHY AIM

Pastor Lankford of the Burlington flock writes this for his people as their aim and prints it on the front page of the church's weekly bulletin: "It is our aim to be not merely a religious organization, but a real spiritual force in the community; to minister, and not to be ministered unto; to prove ourselves friends to the friendless; to share the burdens and sorrows of others; to point the unsaved to the way of life; to represent not ourselves, but Christ, striving to have His likeness that we may manifest His spirit in all things that we undertake in His name and for His cause."

LABOR DAY MESSAGES

The papers for the past two weeks have carried no few Labor Day messages, editorials, and comments. These articles have been varied and far-reaching in their scope. Nearly all these contributions on the subject have either said or implied an estrangement between labor and capital, but so far as we have read none have told why there is such a difference between labor and capital. THE SUN does not profess to know the labor situation thoroughly, neither has it a panacea for the ills and ails of these two organizations. But, we offer this: Do away with legislating and official arbitration and both sides meet us each as brothers. The time has come when employee and employer must come in personal contact with each other. Wherever there is a labor trouble we believe that fault can be found on both sides, but faults that can be easily remedied—but not by legislation.

KEEP HISTORY STRAIGHT

The Christian Advocate (Nashville) in its September 16, issue says: "The Christian Observer, Presbyterian, published at Louisville, Ky., is one of our best exchanges. It is a very fine Church and family paper. The last issue contains this: 'The Christian Observer completes with this issue one hundred and eight years of continuous publication. This is a record not equaled by any other weekly religious paper in the world.' We have been thinking since reading this announcement, thinking about the vast amount of good that a vast company of readers has got from this Church paper during those one hundred and eight years."

The Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, Ohio, is rounding out its one hundred and thirteenth year. If memory serves us correctly, The Christian Observer and The Herald of Gospel Liberty fought out their then disputed ages some years ago, and that The Observer "surrendered" in favor of The Herald. At any rate The Herald carries "Volume 113" on its business page each week.

DAY OF PRAYER FOR CONFERENCE ON LIMITATION OF ARMAMENTS

The Sunday preceding the International Conference on the Limitation of Armaments, November 6, is proposed by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America as a special day of prayer. This action of the Council is a reflection of the widespread interest of the Churches, suggestions having come to the Council from every quarter that such a step would be especially welcomed. The call for the observance of the day is as follows:

"The Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America suggest that Sunday, November 6, 1921, be observed by the Churches as widely as possible throughout the country as a special day of prayer, self-examination and supplication for the guidance and blessing of God on the International Conference on Limitation of Armaments."

NEW RULING OF WAR DEPARTMENT RECOGNIZES THE SABBATH

An official statement issued by the War Department on September 1 contains a fine acknowledgement of the significance of the Sabbath in the life of the nation. The document has to do with "Conduct of Troops Changing Station by Marching," and is known officially as Circular 229. Among the instructions "published for the guidance of all concerned" is the following:

"The sentiment of the nation concerning Sabbath observance should be respected and no marches, except in cases of necessity, be made on Sunday. Opportunity should be provided for religious services, conducted by the chaplain or through community cooperation and dignified publicity of such services should be made."

This action published by order of the Secretary of War and signed by General Pershing, as Chief of Staff, is another heartening illustration of the new place which the chaplains have given to religion in the army.

In connection with this order of the present day, it is interesting to recall an order issued by George Washington at Valley Forge, May 2, 1778, a copy of which the Chief of Chaplains, John T. Axton, has communicated to the Federal Council of the Churches:

"The Commander-in-Chief directs that divine service be performed every Sunday at eleven o'clock in each brigade which has chaplains. Those brigades which have none will attend the places of worship nearest to them. It is expected that officers of all ranks will by their attendance set an example to their men. While we are duly performing the duty of good soldiers we certainly ought not to be inattentive to the highest duties of religion. To the distinguishing characteristics of a patriot it should be our highest glory to add the more distinguished characteristic of a Christian."

THE BULLETIN

Rev. H. J. Fleming is engaged in school work at Pilot Mountain, N. C.

President Harper was the speaker at the opening exercises of the Burlington schools last week. His address was timely.

Rev. J. W. Holt reports that he has received seventeen members into the Bethlehem (A) church during the past three months.

The Mission Board of the Convention met in its annual session in Suffolk, Va., September 15. We have promise of a gist of the Board's doings for next issue of THE SUN.

Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, who has been serving the Memorial Temple, Norfolk, for more than a year, has resigned and will become pastor of the Holland, Va., church October 1.

Dr. J. P. Barrett closes his work at Holland, Va., next Sunday. Dr. Barrett has not accepted work for another year. He is one of our able, experienced, and useful men and should be used.

Rev. W. L. Wells, now pastor of the Reidsville church has accepted a call to the First church, Portsmouth, Virginia, and will enter upon his duties there about September 1.

Revs. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C., and W. P. Minton, Dayton, Ohio, sailed on September 17 for Porto Rico, to secure first hand information concerning our mission work there and to study its needs.

We regret to learn that Bro. W. B. Mann, Raleigh, N. C., one of THE SUN's faithful and loyal subscribers is growing weaker. Bro. Mann has been sick for some time. He is one of our leading members of the Raleigh church.

Rev. H. Shelton Smith has returned to Yale for another year's study, and will also be Director of Religious Education in the United Congregational church on the Green. Bro. Smith's address is now Box 1183 Yale Station., New Haven, Conn.

THE SUN extends felicitations to Rev. H. Russel Clem and bride, who was Miss Bessie I. Holt. They were married in the Burlington Christian church on September 14 and went immediately to their new field of labor, the First Christian church of Greensboro. Happiness and service for Him be their part and portion!

Maroon and Gold, the student publication of Elon College, started on its third year of publication last week. The publication is well edited, neatly printed, and sells for $2.00 for the college year of nine months, and should be in many homes. It reflects truly the Elon spirit.

In last week's issue of THE SUN we asked a question about the church and Sunday school, which question grew out of what we said about Editor Crowson's comment on the Sunday school. We have in hand an answer to the question written by Editor Crowson himself. Watch for this article next week, and in the meantime send us your answer.

Dr. D. A. Long writes: "Some readers of THE SUN think, from what Dr. Kendall wrote about my asking him some pointed questions at Antioch College, that he was guilty of some bad conduct. Nothing of the kind, Kendall, in the estimation of the faculty, was one of the brainiest and best behaved boys who attended Antioch College during my administration."

CONTRIBUTIONS

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

 HE innermost teaching of the Old Testament is summed up in this expression. The word Kingdom also means ruling. While it means the actual Kingdom, it signifies the sway of the King. The Greek word Basileia of the New Testament has these two meanings—All through the Psalms it is insisted that God's throne is in the heavens. Matthew's preference for the expression "Kingdom of heaven" was familiar to the Hebrews. When Christ spoke of the Kingdom, it is possible that his hearers thought of the prophecy of Daniel vii:13. In that vision the power is given to "one like the son of man."

In the New Testament the speedy advent of this Kingdom is the one theme. "Repent: for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand," said the Baptist. At every step of Christ's teaching the advent of this Kingdom, its various aspects, its precise meaning, the way in which it is to be attained, form the staple of his discourses, so much so that His discourse is called "the gospel of the Kingdom". And the various shades of meaning which the expression bears have to be studied. In the mouth of Christ the "Kingdom" means not so much a goal to be attained or a place—though these meanings are by no means excluded—(Matt. v:3-xi.2) it is rather a tone of mind (Luke xvi.20,21) it stands for an influence which must permeate men's minds, if they would be one with Him and attain to His ideals" (Luke ix:55).

Heart

The word awakens, first of all, the idea of a material heart, of a vital organ that throbs within our bodies.

Now this heart of flesh is correctly accepted as the emblem of the emotional and moral life.

A symbol is a real sign, whereas a metaphor is only a verbal sign; a symbol is a thing that signifies another thing, but a metaphor is a word used to indicate something different from its proper meaning. We are constantly passing from the part to the whole and we use the word "heart" to designate a person.

We may spend a long life in trying to find out the various shades of meaning set forth in the parables of the Kingdom, with their endless variety. I incline to the view that at one time the "Kingdom" means the sway of grace in man's heart, e. g. in the parable of the seed growing secretly (Mark iv.26; Matt. xxi.43); and thus, too, it is opposed to and explained by the opposite Kingdom of the devil (Matt. iv.8; xii.25-26). At another time it is the goal at which we have to aim, e. g. Matt. iii:3. Again it is a place when God is pictured as reigning (Mark xiv. 25) In the second petition of the "our Father"—"Thy Kingdom come"—we are taught to pray as well for grace as for glory. As men grew to understand the Divinity of Christ, they grew to see that the Kingdom of God was also that of Christ—it was a thief who said: "Lord, remember me when thou shalt come into thy Kingdom."

So I say, in reply to the questions of Doctor Kendall, that while I may be in error, I am inclined to believe: 1. The Kingdom of God means the ruling of God in our hearts; 2. It means those principles which separate us off from the Kingdom of the world and the devil; 3. It means the benign sway of grace.

Now, if it is a fact that "The Kingdom of God" has a geographical position, or location, I will ask Dr. Kendall one question: Will you please bound the Kingdom, and give the boundaries to THE CHRISTIAN SUN?

A Letter

Dr. Daniel Albright Long,
1609 Hillsboro St.,
Raleigh, N. C.

My dear Dr. Long:

Your letter of the 7th addressed to the President has been handed to me for reply. It is perfectly correct to use the expression you quote regarding the Kingdom of Heaven. I do not regard it as either "a geographical or political realm". I sometimes speak of it myself in this way. The Kingdom of Heaven is that section of human life which owns the sway and rule of the Divine Spirit.

Hoping this may answer your question, I am

Very sincerely yours,

SUFFOLK LETTER

 S the world growing better or worse? That question is often asked and, as a rule, each person answers it to suit his own mind. To say that it is growing better is optimistic; to say that it is growing worse is pessimistic. Optimism is the tendency of the universe toward the best; pessimism is the tendency of all things toward the worst. I think the tendency is for the better, if not for the best. To attempt an answer for the whole world requires an extended view of present conditions in all races and nations; but a few historic facts, it seems to me, lead to the conclusion that the world is growing better. Of course no present state of facts justify wise conclusions on any subject. The past and the present both enter into wise judgment on any great matter. Present conditions, for example, indicate the absence of prosperity in this country; but to read into the present a decade or two decades in business justifies the conclusion that this is a prosperous nation. The present is only an incident in the nation's progress and prosperity. The same is true of any one crop. The apple crop in the Valley of Virginia is a total failure this good year of 1921; but this is the only year of failure of that great crop in that great valley. It may be necessary for the orchards to rest a season to prolong their life and their useful service.

Now, we must judge of moral and spiritual conditions by past history as well as present facts. Think of the Colosseum in Rome, the greatest building in ancient or modern times used as a place of entertainment for the free people of the imperial city in the slaughter of Christians by wild beasts. That building would seat eighty-six thousand people and they amused themselves by killing Christians at one time for one hundred days in succession. More than half of the population at that time were slaves. That was in the Christian era for that theatre was built in the first century of the Christian era. Then think of the Spanish inquisition. Its tortures, its deaths, of Christians who tried to think for themselves. That kind of persecution remains only where Turks hold sway. In that respect the world grows better. Slavery has gone. It would be a crime in this country today. It was not even irreligious when I was a baby. The lottery passed away by Congressional action years ago. The saloon is no more. The legalized liquor traffic went away by the will of the nation and it will never return. Dueling is no more. Of course these are negative facts in the argument to show that the world is growing better; but there are positive facts to prove the same things. Education has improved in its wider privileges. Emancipated slaves have better educational advantages today than original freemen had fifty years ago. Institutions for the unfortunate—orphans, insane, imbeciles, paupers, the aged and infirm, to say nothing of hospitals, reformatories, colonies for incurable diseases, and charities administered through lodges, special organizations, churches, and private ways to lift the burdens from the back of helpless humanity. The multiplication of churches, the vast increase in Sunday school, in religious literature, in sanitary conditions, and a sober, sane, and fraternal atmosphere in which life is cleaner, wiser, better.

It is true that other evils have crept into the public mind with new discoveries and inventions and the increase of knowledge and wealth. The devil does not retire from the earth when gross evils are removed. He comes in with more subtle arts. The automobile, the moving pictures, the modern dance, the Sabbath for recreation and pleasure instead of a holy day; dress and music, bathing and camping, finer games, and easier morals; but these will run their course, so far as they are abused, and the world will move upward to higher and finer living. Christianity will sometime win the world for Christ.

W. W. STALEY.

MONEY AND VITAL PIETY

"Christian character, or vital piety, is the only proper test of fellowship or of Church membership", so deplored the prophets of a century and more ago who founded our Church. There would be a mighty stir in our Israel were we to apply this test to some of our members today, for how can a man exhibit vital piety, how can he be said to be possessed of Christian character, when he is not a tither?

The Department of Tithing ought to be absolutely unnecessary in a Church that accepts the Bible as its only creed. Either we do not believe the Bible, or we consider belief all that is needful in the Christian life. The devils believe and tremble, and are devils still. Something more than belief is necessary. Practice too is in order. For us Christians, I submit, there is no escape from tithing.

But who wants to escape? Not those of us who have tested it and found it good. Those who would escape have never tried it. They are to be pitied. What they lack is the faith they are so strong in advocating a real faith, a faith that will enable them to believe that nine-tenths is worth more to a Christian than ten-tenths and the will to act upon that belief. Only tithers know the verity of this problem in celestial mathematics. All others are Nicodemuses and want to know how these things can be.

Poor, stingy robbers of God—that is what we Christians are who withhold from Him the tenth to which He lays claim, and what is worse for our own souls, spiritual self-destructionists. The Christian who robs God commits spiritual suicide, that's the sum and substance of it, and there is no need to minimize the fact. You can stand in the pulpit and pick out the tithers. They look so happy, hilarious, and prosperous. For them evidently the windows have opened and upon them blessings have been poured such as they had not conceived.

And you can also pick out the skin-flints. Their far-away gaze betrays them and their agony of soul when the collection (properly so for them, since to call it an offering would be a parody on truth) is being taken, and taken too, is the appropriate word for their feelings. How tragic! The Bible has more to say about money and giving than about any other one theme. Yet these close-fisted brethren hold a penny so close to their eyes that it obstructs the sun-light of God's love. That's why they are so dismal that an offertory has to be rendered to cheer their drooping spirits when the ushers pass the plates.

But these brethren are long on singing, Bible-reading, and prayer. It is good to sing, and to read the Bible, and to pray, but we dare not neglect also to pay. God can get along without our gifts, but we cannot get along without making them. It is the joy of tithing that makes it such a precious privilege to the trusting servant of the Most High. I know from fifteen years' experience what satisfaction of heart it brings.

What's the matter with your piety? Stinginess keeps it from being vital. That's it.

W. A. HARPER.

"UNCLE" WELLONS AND HIS VACATION

I have had many inquiries as to where I spent my vacation this summer. I spent it at Elon College most of the time. I was sick a week or two. I took my meals at the West End Boarding House, walking for them when able to do so. When unable to go for them my meals were brought to me. We had good board. I remained in my room in the West Dormitory. Some other person slept in the building most of the time. It was very lonesome, as there were fewer persons in the village than usual, and I am accustomed to so much company.

I was called to Durham once to see Deacon Wm. H. Dickerson, who met with the misfortune to get a fall which broke his back and caused his death.

After some had returned, on Saturday, August 20, I left for Fuquay Springs. Brother K. B. Johnson had me met at Raleigh. I made my headquarters with Brother Johnson and his family and they took me around to see many dear friends. I attended service at Wake Chapel where we commenced the building of a house in 1857, and dedicated it the third Sunday in April, 1858. As we were building at a new place we ought to have built it near the Fuquay Springs, a mile and a half away, where they now have a nice church building with a large membership. Their pastor is Rev. J. Lee Johnson.

I was to see Brother Archer Johnson who is confined to his bed with rheumatism. He cannot use his hands and has to be fed like a child. I had visited him often before but prayed with more faith for him to be able to feed himself and relieve his family of that trouble.

I also visited Brother Alvin Austin and wife, charter members of Wake Chapel church, whom I had not seen for years. How glad I was to see them again, though age has begun to work on them right much since I saw them last.

What a pleasant week I spent with dear friends, brethren and sisters. Brother Johnson proposed to make a bargain with me—that I am to spend a week with him as long as I am able to do so.

Brother Johnson took me to Raleigh on August 28, where I left for Franklinton to my old home. More to follow.

J. W. WELLONS.

BROTHER HOLT ANSWERS

Dear Brother Riddle:

Answering your questions as they appear in THE SUN of September 14, I submit the following:

Question number one: Like priest like people.

Question number two: That is it. Instead of leading they are being led or driven.

Question number three: Too much of the best things ever done by anyone becomes hurtful.

Question number four: I think not. God chastises and reproves for correction. a Question number five: No one except pastors who preach positively and in practice live negatively. There is where the hurt comes. The church is today being sadly wounded in the house of its friends. I think the editor has pretty well answered his own questions.

J. W. HOLT.

OUR VIRGINIA LETTER

SEE that Bro. J. W. Holt and this writer are called to take their places in school again to be catechised. Well, all right. No doubt Bro. Holt can take care of the answers to the questions propounded to him. I will try to do the same for mine.

THE SUN'S Editor wishes me to answer three questions. All right. Here I go:

1. Define a call to the ministry?

Webster says a call is a summons to a particular duty by divine authority. We therefore take it that a call to the ministry to preach the gospel of the Son of God is a call in that sense. Paul says that God made him an able minister of the New Testament. After He had made him such, He so impressed Paul that he could not avoid the conclusion that he was called to preach. As I understand it, a call to preach the Gospel is an impression given of God upon the mind and heart of the person so impressed that he comes to feel that he must preach. When Paul came to feel that way he said: "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel". If you will turn to I Cor. 9:16, you may read his own words, expressing his own sense of the call. I have no sympathy with this "namby pamby" sentiment that a man gets his call to preach the gospel through the appreciation of the needs of the people. No, I think he rather gets his call when God so deeply impresses him with that thought, that like Paul, he feels to fail to do what God has impressed him as his duty would bring woe upon him.

2. Yes, likely, but something else goes before the giving of such support. The layman who has been truly called of God to his service will gladly avail himself or herself of the opportunity to support the ministry. I think the personal burden of the life given to God comes before the call to support the ministry. The layman who hears the call will gladly answer that call. The trouble is that so many do not get far enough in the divine life to hear the call of God to the layman to do this part of the Lord's work. Let the preacher hear distinctly the divine call to preach the gospel and then let the laity hear the call to support the ministry, and I think he will feel much like Paul did when he said: "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel". They are both divine calls to a sacred duty, and when truly heard, the one will be as anxious, as the other to discharge that duty. A part of the trouble comes in supporting the ministry is the fact that the layman in many, alas, in so many instances has not gone far enough to hear the sacred call to support the ministry.

3. I think the man is called to preach regardless of what the laity will do, or not do. God calls the man and then puts upon the laity the responsibility of supporting the minister. If they fail to support the minister, then theirs is the responsibility for such failure, but the minister, if he does his part faithfully and truly, so far as he can, will get his reward, and the laity which refused to do his or her part in supporting the minister will have to face the facts in the situation. God calls men to preach, and then He calls men to support the ministry whom He has sent. The responsibility of failure will rest with the minister or the laity who comes short in the work to which they have been called. Both minister and layman have their responsibility, and each must answer for themselves.

In recent years much has been said on the question: Is the world getting better or worse? Some writers maintain an attitude on the question which seems to say: We must never admit that it is growing worse, as that would seem to shame us for our failure. They seem to think it is quite a crime to make such a plea. When the war came these same writers got badly mixed. They declared that the Church was far from its duty in allowing the world to go to war. Still they insisted that the world was getting better, even if the Church was far from its place in the world. When the war stopped, they looked for a period of marvelous progress, and they are apparently still looking, and yet the facts do not seem to justify the claim which has been made again and again. It was only recently, during the Methodist Ecumenical Conference in London, that the Rev. Ezra Squier Tipple, said in a sermon preached before that great body, some awful things. His subject was "Christ the World's Greatest Need". He said in part: "There is a growing vulgarity and recklessness in dress and behavior, and an increasing disregard for the sanctity of the home. The world is groaning under industrial coercion, oppression, antagonism, race riots, ignorance and illiteracy. The world wants to be rid of poverty, ignorance, lust, greed, violence, ill will, social injustice and the warping burden of hatred and war.

"What help is there for this broken world? Naturally, we look to the Church, but we find it full of imposing ceremonies, thundering moralities, rigid decencies, the clatter of rules, platitudes, venerable traditions, infinite cogwheels of organization—everything except the spirit of the Galilean peasant, who came to plant in the garden of the world the seed of the love of the Almighty."

The Lawyer's Question—Master, what shall I do to inherit eternal life?

Jesus' Answer—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind: and thy neighbor as thyself. This do and thou shalt live.—Luke 10:25,27,28.

A Benediction—Finally, brethren, farewell. Be perfect, be of good comfort, be of one mind, live in peace: and the God of love and peace shall be with you.—II Cor. 13:11.

Salvation—If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead thou shalt be saved.—Romans 10:9.

ELON LETTER

WHEN the Board of Trustees at their May meeting eliminated the preparatory department, which last year had seventy-three students, there was rejoicing and there was fear as to consequences. The trustees had seen their duty and with confident faith did it. Their judgment has been vindicated in the spirit of the student body and supported by the Church at large. There is a loss in students enrolled at this time a year ago of twenty-eight. Now the enrollment is 301 and on September 18, 1920 it was 329. This represents a very commendable gain in the College itself.

We are encouraged too, over the manner in which our churches have responded to the "Church's System of Education", as was announced last February by the Convention's Board of Education. A democracy reacts slowly toward new ideas and it will be some years before all our churches will support the plan, but a commendable and assuring beginning has been made. The following churches have reached their quota of one freshman present for each one hundred of enrollment in the Sunday school: Elon College, Union (N. C.), Apple's Chapel, Dendron, Ponce (Porto Rico), First Church of Greensboro, Monticello, Haw River, Canal Zone (Federal Council Church), Morrisville, Fuller's Chapel, Damascus (E. Va. Conference), Pleasant Ridge (G.), Rock Springs (Ala.), Ingram (Va.), Belle Grove (Md.), Pleasant Grove (Va.), Belew Creek, Bethlehem (Alamance), Pleasant Ridge (R.), Richmond, Graham, Berea (Alamance), Japan Church (Utsunomiya), Long's Chapel, Bethlehem (Valley Va. Central), Salem Chapel, Mt. Olivet (G.), Youngsville, Catawba Springs, Oak Level, Antioch (Ala.), Plymouth, Pleasant Union (H.), Pleasant Grove (N. C.), Pleasant Hill (A.)—a total of 36 churches. Each of these churches will within 30 days receive a book for the Sunday school library and next year we hope there will three times this many on the banner list.

Other churches represented in the student body but not reaching their quota are as follows: New Providence, Beulah (Ala.), Shallow Ford, Third Church of Norfolk, Burlington, Union (Va.), Hebron (Va.), Dry Run (Valley Va. Central), Rosemont, Bethel (Valley Va. Central), New Hope (Ala.), Lumber City (Ga.), Waverly, Sanford, South Norfolk, Holy Neck, Mt. Auburn, Holland, Memorial Temple, Martha's Chapel, Oakland, Lakemont (N. Y.), Suffolk, Union Grove, Spring Hill (Va.), Liberty (Va.), Franklin, Berea (Norfolk), Asheboro—a total of 29. We hope every one of these next year will reach their quota and secure their book for the library.

This gives us 65 churches out of 241, or barely 25 per cent. Let us labor hard this year, beloved, to raise the per cent to 100 represented in our College next year.

The Church too, will rejoice to know that we have twenty-four ministerial students in the college this year and that sixteen of them are of our Church. Eight of the sixteen are first year students. Already our life work recruit effort is bearing fruit.

A CAR OF COAL

For a number of years Holland & Beamon Co. Suffolk, Va., has been donating to the Christian Orphanage each fall a car of coal to keep the little children warm and comfortable.

We received a letter from Mr. W. S. Beamon last week stating that his company would make its usual contribution this fall and had written the mine to ship us a car at once. It always makes our heart glad when we get a letter telling us that such a blessing is in store for us. We know now that if nothing happens that all the children in the Orphanage will be warm and comfortable this winter.

We had such an awful experience a few years ago when we had that bitter cold winter, and the World War was raging. It was almost impossible to get coal and we did not get our car till late, and the blizzard weather struck us with no coal on hand and no way to heat our building, except the furnace. That sad experience has lived in our mind ever since and it is always a relief when the car of coal reaches our station.

We are very grateful to our friends who have been so good to us in giving us this splendid contribution and we pray that God's richest blessings will rest upon them and prosper them abundantly in the future.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: As we have not written you in five months, guess we will try and brighten the corner again. All of the crops are looking bad. We have had such dry weather. We are having some awful warm weather now. Here is $1.00—our dues for the five months. Please excuse us for this time as we will try to do better. With love to you and all the cousins. Lovingly.—Ossie and Dennis Harris, Hickory, Va.

You are not alone in the dry weather. Our crops are almost a failure. We have had only a few showers since April. I hardly see how anything has matured with so little rain.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley: I am sending my dues for August and September. I am late. I was in the hospital in August and grandmother was in New York, but I am home now and grandmother is too. I was operated on for the third time. I hope it is the last time. I started to school this morning. I hope I will learn fast so I can write you myself and not bother grandmother. Love to you and all the children.—Virginia Johnson, Portsmouth, Va.

I sympathize with you in your trouble. I truly hope you are well and will enjoy good health from now on. I want you to study hard and soon learn to write your own letters.—“Uncle Charley.”

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL—ITS WHY

To each Sunday school in the North Carolina Conference, there is being mailed this week a copy of the annual address, delivered at the Reidsville Convention, by Mr. C. H. Stephenson, President of the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention. The subject of this address is “The Sunday School—Its Why”. President Stephenson presents a stirring appeal in behalf of the Sunday school and its work and shows clearly why we need to serve the Sunday school, and then goes further and discusses the question “What shall we do in the Sunday school?” and presents several practical plans, the adoption of which would help any Sunday school. He stresses the value of the permanent training class “for the manufacture of young teachers”, and also counsels all Christians who see the need of the Sunday school and the value of its work, to offer their services in the great work of planning and carrying out forward steps. It is to be hoped that each Sunday school Superintendent will read this address carefully and prayerfully, and then in the best way that he can get the message to his Sunday schools officers and teachers. If an additional copy of the address is desired, there is a limited quantity on hand, and may be secured by addressing the office of the Field Secretary, Box 333, Burlington, N. C. Or if Sunday school workers in other Conferences desire a copy of this address, it will be sent gladly upon request received at this office.

"AND LET US NOT BE WEARY IN WELL DOING"

Under the heading "If She Did It, You can!" The Sunday School Executive quotes the following incident:

"I watched a superintendent hold a small school together under the most difficult circumstances. It was in a small town, where everything was more or less dead. Added to that, there was a split in the community. Some were of another denomination, though they had no church building, and with the malice of such small jealousies were doing their best to break up the church and school organization. Then there was only occasional preaching services. The superintendent, a woman, lived several miles in the country and drove in, with team and spring wagon, each Sunday. She herself taught the adult class, and she was the only teacher that could be depended on. Sometimes others were there, sometimes not. She always found some sort of supply when they were not. Sometimes there was a young girl to play the organ. When there was not the superintendent did her best at it. Sometimes there was a choir of young people to lead the singing. When there was not, the superintendent led. Sometimes the people she had asked to review the lesson were present and did it. When they failed her, the superintendent did her best at it.

"Through all this there was never one word of discouragement or complaint. There was not a hint of criticism of anybody for their failure to do their part. Everything was all right. They would go right on doing the best they could, and things would begin to pick up after a while.

"If this woman met all these difficulties with courageous cheer, can't you?—(Lellie Munsell).

"If she did it, you can!"

The annual meeting of the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention, Dr. W. T. Walters, Chairman, is meeting this week—Tuesday—at the Raleigh Hotel, Raleigh, N. C. Plans for the year's work and forward steps are being discussed, a full report of which will come later.

The final Sunday school institute held in the Valley Conference was held in the Newport church, Page County, Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons, August 30th and 31st. Twenty Sunday school workers from near-by churches were present both days. Many Sunday school problems were discussed in the round table, and the interest in better methods and work was splendid. Rev.

R. P. Crumpler was present both days and helped greatly in the discussion and throughout the meetings. The Field Secretary spoke briefly at the prayer meeting of the Leaksville church Wednesday night, and a liberal offering was received for the work of religious education of the Southern Christian Convention.

Many of our Sunday school workers have discouraging conditions to face and difficult problems to solve. But the glorious story of the development of our Sunday school, if told in detail, would reveal many heroic characters, men and women who have sacrificed self, who have persevered, as this devoted woman, in the path of duty and opportunity in spite of many handicaps which would discourage a weaker soul. Many of our most successful Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies have been enabled to thus carry on their work by the inspiration and unceasing efforts of a single enthusiastic individual, who was willing to assume responsibility and thus make possible a really worth while work. We find many such consecrated Christians in our churches here in the South, and honor them. May this little incident of an unknown woman, and the lives of many whom we have known, lead us to greater effort and stir us with a deeper zeal in the Master's service. Are there steps of progress which you would like to see your Sunday school take? Is there new work which you see lying before your Christian Endeavor Society? If so, is it not possible that God is calling you to lead in these lines?

"He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much."

I am profoundly grateful for the constantly increasing number of Sunday schools that regard missions worth while, worth contributing to, and worth studying. I long for the day when every Sunday school in the Southern Convention will adopt the plan that our Convention has now endorsed and urged all our schools to adopt, namely, give one Sunday's offering each month to the Christian Orphanage and one Sunday's offering each month to the spread of the gospel through our missionary efforts. This is in keeping with the teaching of the Word and no Sunday school should fear to adopt such a schedule.

THE CHESTER DISASTER

Twenty-four persons were drowned and five seriously injured at Chester, Pa., September 10, 1921. This appalling disaster came as a result of a crowd rushing out on a footbridge that spans the Chester river at Third Street, in the heart of the business district. The crowd had been attracted to the place by the cries of a drowning boy.

Little Charles Apostolus had been accidentally knocked into the river while watching the antics of a bear on the bank at the back of a theatre. An alarm was given and police were at work immediately to save the boy. In the meantime the crowd was gathering on the bridge to learn who it was in the water. The New York Times describes the disaster:

"Frantic mothers, each thinking it was her boy who had met with death, rushed down to the riverside and out upon the bridge. They were joined by others. The bridge is of wooden construction and is thirty years old.

"Out upon it the crowd surged. Suddenly there was a crack as of a large rifle shot. Then there was a pattering, ripping sound, as of machine guns and drums sounding together in one great volume.

"In an instant those who had gathered on the bridge were a mass of tangled humanity, fighting for life in the murky waters of the river. Expert swimmers were unable to make a single stroke for themselves or for others. Those who went over first were without even the slightest hope of rescue. They were crushed to the very bottom of the river, and there imbedded in the mud."

A small wrought iron gusset plate, part of the support for the footbridge along aside of the wooden structure had been half eaten with rust, gave way under the weight of the crowd. Only twenty-three were saved out of the great mass who went in with the wreckage.

ANGLO-SAXON SUPREMACY

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, President of Columbia University, has returned to England on his way back to New York. He has made a continental trip of Europe, meeting and talking with the most influential leaders in European politics. He was received with signal honors in the different European nations. He has been the guest of Premier Lloyd George in London and as published in the New York Times, it is Dr. Butler's firm belief that the future of the world largely depends upon a complete understanding of the Anglo-Saxon race.

The New York Times states: "The United States and Great Britain are in position to lead the world along the road to reconstruction and pacific development, and in Dr. Butler's view Continental nations, far from being jealous or fearful of Anglo-Saxon supremacy are prepared to welcome it as a guarantee of the world's peace."

The same paper states that it would be difficult to exaggerate as to the interest which both the Governments and public opinion of Europe take in the coming Washington conference on the limitation of armaments. Both the eyes and heart of the world are fixed on that conference. The coming conference has much to do with the future conditions of economic, social and political affairs.

The world looks to the Anglo-Saxon element to lead in this conference. Its supremacy has been recognized since time immemorial. Do we stop to think why this is so? In most cases it is taken for granted because it is so customary. The Anglo-Saxon race leads the world because it is the most unselfish race. It leads the world in progress and in Christianity. It seeks to improve the conditions of humanity. Such a race will lead all the rest, unconsciously.

THE CHICAGO MURDER

This crime is so horrible in detail that it is hard for a normal being to believe it was committed by one of his fellowmen. It is so cold-blooded, so devoid of human feeling, that one cannot really believe the thing to be real.

Harvey W. Church, a twenty-year-old youth, killed two men in Chicago, Friday, September 9, to gain possession of a $5,000 automobile. He pretended to want to buy the machine and asked one of the men to go into the house with him to receive the money for the purchase. After getting into the house he drew a pistol on the man and put handcuffs on him, then he took him to the basement where he beat him to death with a baseball bat and then went back to get the other man and repeated the same thing.

When talking of the crime he said that "It was a beautiful car and that it did not seem so terrible". Of course the boy was insane. No sane person could so completely lose sight of the laws of justice and of God as to think that such a terrible deed can go unpunished. Even if such a thing could go unpunished no sane person could commit such a crime against his fellowman. Such deeds come before the bar of justice within a very short time. This boy was apprehended and had made a complete confession within two days after the deed.

ROSCOE C. ARBUCKLE

Roseoe C. Arbuckle, better known in the movie world as "Fatty Arbuckle", is still in jail with a charge of murder or manslaughter pending against him.

Miss Virginia Rappe, a motion picture actress died in his rooms after a party which is classed by newspapers as a "booze party", was given by Arbuckle. The coroner's inquest showed that Miss Rappe died as a result of some force being applied and Arbuckle is accused by friends of applying the force.

The motion picture houses all over the nation have cut out all pictures in which Arbuckle was featured and they declare that no more of his pictures will be shown until he has shown himself to be innocent of the charge.

EDUCATIONAL

LOCATION OF NEW SCHOOL

Fortunately, for the town of Wadley, Alabama, it has been selected as the place for the location of the Junior College which is to be built by the Southern Christian Convention. Upon receiving this glad news from the chairman of the committee on location, Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., the enthusiasm of the people ran very high. The citizens of the town desire to give a barbecue, and this is proposed for October 13. This being the last day of Conference the members of the Christian church have voted to invite the Alabama Christian Conference, in session at Corinth, to hold the last day's session with them. If this request is granted, or if it is not, the delegates to Conference should arrange to stay through the entire session.

The establishing of this school is a very important step on the part of the Convention, and will be a source of great advantage to our work in this section. Not ours only, but all who may chance to come in touch with the institution. Every location offered for the school was a good one, and the requests were made in good faith. Then it is hoped that as Wadley was the most fortunate, there will never be a cause for regret.

The Harvest—Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap.—Galatians 6:7.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

PAYING OUR VOWS UNTO THE MOST HIGH

Paying our vows unto the Most High is making a deposit in Heaven's bank. When you first resolved to separate yourself from the world and follow the Savior, you made your first deposit. But perhaps there were things in your life at that time which you did not think out of place and did not give up. As you followed on step by step, day by day, you saw in your life inconsistencies which you had not seen before. As you saw them and resolved to give them up, by God's help, and live the life which is Christ, it was credited to your deposit in the bank of Heaven. When you did some kindly deed for your Lord's sake, you were given credit for another deposit. When you found courage to stand for His truth, another deposit was credited to you.

Everything you are giving up for Jesus' sake and the gospel's, everything you are doing for Him, every sorrow you are winning for Him, every act of faith, trust and obedience to the Most High, is adding to your deposits in Heaven's bank. If we pay unto the Most High not only our money, but all our ability, all our heart and strength and mind, putting Christ first in everything, every day, then what! "Call upon one in the day of trouble: I will deliver thee." Not a trial or trouble or need which cannot, will not be met if we are paying into the hands of the Most High.

If your bank were balanced today how would you stand with the great bank of Heaven? Is your life so completely yielded to the Most High, is your will so lost in His will, is your faith in Him so great, are you living in His fear, trusting Him so completely, obeying His commands so fully that you know His storehouse will be opened unto you when you call upon Him in your time of need. Can you call in the day of trouble knowing He will deliver you? Do you have His commands in your heart, teaching them to others, talking of them as you are journeying to the other side? Are you thinking of them the last thing at night and the first thing in the morning? If you are doing this you can call upon the Most High with the assurance you will receive everything necessary to meet your needs. Heaven's bank is different from the bank you transact business with here. It pays back more and better than you bring to it. If you give your all into His hands, all the unlimited resources of the Most High are at your command. You can draw upon them in every time of need. It cannot fail. Prove Him now, will you not, by paying your all into His hands, and see if the Most High does not pour out blessings upon you until you are overwhelmed by them.

THE SINS OF SUCCESS

A SERMON TO BUSINESS MEN

BY THE REV. DR. KARL REILAND

"The sickness that wasteth at noonday."—Psalm 91 vs/6

VIL things are usually represented by darkness, good things by brightness. Paul says we are "children of the day" and of the light, not of darkness and of night. The distressfulness, failure, dejection and shame of life are associated with wickedness. Comfort, success, elation and honor with righteousness. So midnight is the symbol of dark deeds and midday the symbol of shining deeds.

In the verse quoted the figure is of some fainting sickness that wastes life. It points out a significant contrast. We receive stern caution and learn hard lessons in our failures and when we are distressed about ourselves and our condition.

Anxiety like pain puts us on our guard, and out of our despair we fashion some high resolves for the future. Our troubles make us think. We repent of past deeds, reform our present course, and resolve for future action.

But when we are satisfied; when we are getting on in the world; when things are going favorably and "all men speak well of us"; when the clouds of anxiety seem to have left our sky and the sun shines a kind of approval upon us and our affairs—then we are apt to "bless ourselves in our hearts" and we often develop an assurance which leads us to identify prosperity with propriety, success with soundness, well being with well doing and sanctify ourselves just as we are. Being thus confused many mistake good condition for good character.

When in danger of distress and failure we are usually dissatisfied with ourselves.

The dangers of comfort and success are often greater than those of failure because of the subtle complacency they encourage, and the self-assurance they inspire. This is the "sickness that wasteth at noonday." It is the malady that affects the successful preacher who thinks that he is bigger than the moral law, as well as the ruler who comes to believe himself, not the servant of the people by whose election he was put in office, but the favored object of divine right. It is the trouble at the heart of the man who after starting in the simplicity of exacting labor, reaches the complexity of authoritative administration and becomes hard, luxurious, conceited and altogether spoiled. These have the "sickness that wasteth at noonday."

You may know of some one who started life with enough human touch to keep his heart full of character and lofty aspirations, but today he has lost that human touch, because success has filled his head with conceit. It may be he was struggling with problems which nurtured him in the grace of humility. Then he was a real companion and a sympathetic fellow being. Today he is thinking of his own prerogatives and they have produced in him a corrosive pride, till he is an insufferable egoist and a human perversion. This is "the sickness that wasteth at noonday."

You have heard it said, "He could not stand prosperity" or "He could not sustain success." You know what these phrases mean.

Many a man has become a failure because he became a success.

There is no fool like the fool who was once wise, no blight so pitiful as the blight that strikes abused brains.

Success is just as dangerous as sin and causes very many to mistake prosperity for principles, goods for goodness, recognition for respectability, possessions for progency and money for manhood.

This sickness sometimes smites the professional man, the doctor, the lawyer, the educator, with disintegrating virulence. One often hears of physicians whose achievements have acquired a well earned fame, but with their distinguished powers, as tares among wheat, there has grown a crop of attributes which mar the picture. They become abrupt, aloof, unsympathetic, mechanical and set their hearts on a clientele of cash. It is somewhat similar in the case of certain lawyers, whose faculties are most conspicuously aroused on behalf of the largest fees. No man can lose touch with the sick and suffering, or with the defenseless, the helpless and the poor, and attain true dignity of character.

Musicians who in the years of study and struggle were free, generous and unassuming, have in the noonday of proficiency, prominence, press notices and popularity grown so exclusive, disobliging and out of all reasonable reach that apart from their musical gifts they have little but self-consciousness and bad taste.

Intellectual culture,—one of the great privileges of life involving the exercise of mental action,—grows impatient of simplicity and ignorance. It tries to overpower the less capable with words, and the untrained with subtle argument, using the brain force as a physical giant might use brute force to crush down or push aside all opposition instead of using intellect and superior abilities to help, enlighten, encourage and sustain the mentally less fortunate.

Culture and brains do not necessarily mean either character or rightness. Victory is by no means synonymous with virtue.

All these are like "goodly apples rotten at the heart," smitten with "the sickness that wasteth at noonday." Let the wealthy, the powerful, the official, the professional and all in positions of privilege, be exceedingly careful to cultivate the humble spirit, which is fundamentally opposed to anything like spoilation.

Sincerity and simplicity are great qualities and all those who are fortunate enough to walk in the favoring light of success should strive for them in spite of all temptations. They must remember that they are not essentially the elect of heavenly purpose, but rather the accident of generous human support. The ground whereon they stand is privileged and holy, and they ought to be always willing to say "I am among you as one that serveth" and be anxious to prove it by their deeds.

I have a feeling that there is more mercy for the wicked sinner who never had a chance to amount to anything than for the gifted and capable persons who scale the heights of distinguished achievement in cultivated egotism, selfishness and abuse of sacred privilege. When all is said, they are a sordid clan, who lose enthusiasm for humanity and fail to serve it graciously with their sovereign powers. They have a self-inflicted sickness—"the sickness that wasteth at noonday."

A person who has watched the springs of action in his heart, and kept them pure; who has thought more of personal responsibility than of personal privilege; who has kept his human sympathy on tap in kindness and friendliness; whose knowledge of himself keeps him honestly aware of his faults; who scorns flattery, hates sham and pretention—may or may not be a great success as the world rates success, but if he is, he will use his success in a great way, he will have the love and confidence of many people; they will look to him and will not be disappointed, for he will be to them like "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land"—a living benediction in the brotherhood of human hearts, where "the sickness that wasteth at noonday" is unknown because humility in helpfulness and sincerity in sympathy exclude the withering blight.

CHURCH NEWS

A SUMMER'S WORK

During the week following the third Sunday in July, we held the regular revival at Belew Creek. The church preferred that the pastor do the preaching, and we undertook the work alone. The meeting, when measured by the usual standards of additions to the church, was not what might be called a "Big meeting", but the work of the people was excellent. A good choir was organized under the direction of Mr. Clifton Flynn assisted by an able pianist, Miss Thyra Strader.

During the week the good people furnished their ears to the pastor, and he was enabled to do much real pastoral visiting. At the close of the meeting there were four conversions and four accessions to the church.

Our second meeting was held at Ebenezer. Rev. B. J. Howard was with us at this time, and did the preaching for us. Brother Howard is an able minister and a consecrated man of God, and the church was strengthened greatly by his preaching. At the close of the meeting on July twenty-eighth, we had three conversions and three additions to the church. The people of all denominations cooperated to make the meeting a success.

Our third revival began on the first Sunday of August at Salem Chapel. Rev. Mr. Caglerice, an interdenominational preacher, came out from Winston and preached for us at two of the night services. During this meeting we had three conversions and four accessions to the church.

The revival at Antioch (Chatham) was held the week following the second Sunday of August. The people at this place asked that the pastor be his own evangelist. Despite the inclement weather, we had a good meeting at Antioch. The meeting resulted in two conversions and one addition to the church. Several others are expected to unite with the church at an early date.

On the fourth Sunday in August we began our last revival for the summer at Six Forks. Owing to the rain we had but fourteen present for the opening service, but before the meeting closed the large church auditorium was crowded. We did our own preaching here except in three services when Rev. Mr. Williams of the M. E. church preached for us.

The church was left with a Sunday school which it had not had for some time, and we trust that the spiritual awakening which was manifest in the church and community may continue through the grace of our Lord. At this meeting there were seven conversions and five additions to the church, two of the young men going to the Baptist church.

As we look back across the summer's work, we can but feel that God has been very gracious to us and our field, and we give Him all the praise for the good accomplished. At all the meetings there have been crowded houses, and a steady growth of attendance.

PLEASANT GROVE (R)

Our meeting began at Pleasant Grove the fourth Sunday in August and continued five days. There were about thirty-five conversions and a large number reclaimed. Twenty-seven were baptised. Many said that it was the best meeting they ever had.

There is a bright future for this church. Revs. W. J. Edwards, Wm. Hayes of the Christian church and D. R. Moffitt, of the M. E. church, helped in the meeting. Brother Edwards was with us most of the time and did a good work.

PLEASANT HILL

The protracted meeting at Pleasant Hill began on Saturday before the first Sunday in September and continued till the following Friday.

Evangelist Rev. Geo. D. Eastes of Norfolk, Va., was with us and did the preaching. The congregation was pleased with Bro. Eastes and his good gospel sermons.

The audience on Sunday was unusually large. The house was well filled at the morning hour and there were doubtless as many out of doors as there were in the house. The church was much revived and I believe good seed were sown that will bear fruit.

Professing Christians seemed ready and willing to do personal work; but the non-professors of Christ: some of them, appeared to be unmoved and not very deeply concerned about the question of salvation. There was one public profession of Christ, and we trust many professing Christians were drawn with a closer walk with God.

DEDICATION

We expect to dedicate the new church at Dry Run the fifth Sunday in October. Dr. J. O. Atkinson of Elon College is to do the preaching. The good people at Dry Run have worked hard, and almost without ceasing, and have made some splendid sacrifices to build this house of worship. It will be a glad day for them when they can see the building completed and dedicated to the Lord.

SOLEMN VOWS

NEWLAND-RUSH

On Sunday, September 4, 1921 I stopped at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Rush on my way to fill my appointment at Palmyra. It is no unusual thing for me to stop at this good home, but the real purpose of my visit on that occasion was to unite in matrimony the older daughter in the home, Miss Naomi, to Mr. Fred Newland. It was a simple, but beautiful home wedding, only a few intimate friends and relatives being present. The groom is formerly from the same community, but for several years has been a street car conductor in McKeesport, Pa. He is a splendid young man, and active in church work. The bride is our organist at Palmyra, and one of our most active and useful members. They will make their home in McKeesport.

ACKER-YATES

Mr. Grover C. Acker and Miss Lula M. Yates motored to my home on the evening of September 7, 1921, and were quietly married in the presence of a few friends. Mr. Acker is a young man of sterling qualities—a fine type of a real man. He is formerly from near Broadway, but for several months has been in business in Louisville, Ky. Mrs. Acker is also a native of the Broadway section, and a splendid type of young woman. This popular couple will make their home for the present in Louisville, Ky., but their many friends are hoping to see them return to the old home neighborhood ere long.

CALLED HOME

TOLLAN

Mrs. Rachael Tollan, widow of the late Frank Tollan was born in Minnesota, February 3, 1845, and died at her home in Norfolk, Va., August 22, 1921, and was buried in Cedar Hill cemetery, Suffolk, Va., August 23. In the absence of her pastor the burial services were conducted by Dr. I. W. Johnson.

Mrs. Tollan came to Virginia in 1891, lived a few years in Waverly and Suffolk, then made Norfolk her permanent home. For twenty-five years she was a loyal member of the Memorial Christian Temple giving her time and talent freely to all enterprises of the church. During her long illness of several months she never lost interest in the church, and would eagerly inquire about the different organizations, and the work in general. Her last message to the church was truly a missionary one—"People can become good only as they know Christ, and they can know Christ only as we bear the living word."

She was a consecrated Christian, a true friend, and a woman of rare culture and mental attainments. She is survived by one son, Harry A. Tollan, and seven grandchildren of Norfolk, Va.

A FRIEND.

ROUNTREE

Mrs. Lavinia Ann Rountree, beloved wife of J. T. Rountree died August 24, 1921, aged 59 years, eleven months and two days. She was a true and faithful member of Cypress Chapel Christian church, and will be greatly missed in her home, church and community. Six children survive her: Rev. H. E. Rountree, now chaplain in the navy stationed at Port-au-Prince, Haiti; A. T. Rountree of Roanoke Va.; R. J. Rountree of Hardeville, S. C.; W. L. Rountree, of Waverly, Va.; Mrs. H. B. Harrell, of Portsmouth, Va., and Addie Maude Rountree of Cypress Chapel, Va.

Twelve grandchildren, two sisters, four brothers and a host of friends mourn their loss; but not as those without hope of a blessed reunion in our heavenly home.

May God's abounding grace comfort and sustain these dear bereaved ones in this sad hour.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer assisted by Rev. H. H. Butler, a former pastor, and her body laid to rest in the Cypress Chapel cemetery.

J. M. ROBERTS.

BISHOP

Mrs. Nancy Elizabeth Bishop was sixty-three years, eleven months and fifteen days old at the time of her death on September 3, 1921.

She was married to Mr. T. J. Bishop and to them was born seven children: five sons and two daughters. Those left to mourn their loss are, her husband, Mr. T. J. Bishop, and children: Mr. M. G. Bishop of Greensboro, N. C., Mr. W. H. Bishop, of Omaha, Ga., Messrs. T. L., H. W. and Miss Gertie Bishop of Richland, Ga.

She was a devoted companion and mother and leaves to the family and friends a heritage of a good name and a life well spent in good works. She was a member of Providence Christian church since about the age of twenty, at which time she joined the church during a meeting conducted by Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D., and Dr. Jubilee Smith. All this time she has been devoted to all the interests of the church.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer and her body laid to rest in the family lot of the Providence cemetery.

E. M. CARTER.

GUNTER

A. J. Gunter was born in Chatham County, N. C., January 25, 1847 and died in the city of Durham, N. C., August 7, 1921. Brother Gunter was a charter member of Center Grove Christian church, where funeral services were conducted by the writer.

Deceased leaves to mourn their loss five sons and three daughters. He was loyal to his church, his family and his fellowman, and will be missed by all.

COOK

Rossie J. Cook was born June 9, 1884, and died at the home of his parents in Powell's Fort near Joppa Christian church September 13, 1921. His age was thirty-seven years, three months, and four days. He is survived by his parents, one sister, three brothers, and one daughter about eleven years old. Bro. Cook was a member of the Joppa church. He had been in very poor health for several months, but attended the recent session of our conference at Mayland. He went home sick after the conference closed, and continued to grow worse until the end came. Funeral services were conducted from the home on the afternoon of the same day on which he died, and the remains laid to rest in a family cemetery not far away.

Professional Evangelism

DURING the past twelve months we have made it a point in mixing with laymen and clergymen of various denominations to ask this question: "What do you think of professional evangelism?" Almost every one interrogated has answered negatively. We have summarized these opinions and we are convinced that the thought is growing away from professional evangelism. We think that the people are losing interest in this form of getting men and women into the Kingdom. We are confident that 80 per cent of the congregations the country over in all denominations would vote for the pastor to do his own preaching in a revival, or at least get some help other than a regular evangelist.

We are aware of the much good that is being accomplished by professional evangelists. We know that often they can draw large crowds that a regular pastor cannot get. And too, we know that they are able to reach many that many pastors do not seem to reach.

Professional evangelism has one besetting drawback that has brought, and is continuing to bring, it into ill repute. That besetting feature, is the money display. It is a great pity that many engaged in this work do not have some way of financing their work other than the big show of public collections and offerings. People do not mind paying an evangelist a reasonable amount, but we are sure that many laymen are growing tired of seeing their pastors starved to death on a small salary and some evangelist come to the community and take away more than is paid the average pastor for a whole year's work. We are aware that the compensation of the evangelist must be more in proportion to time than for the pastor the same time, because of the time that the evangelist is not engaged. However, this remedies the situation only in the minds of the few.

We are of the opinion that pastors as a whole get no big results from a meeting held by some professional evangelists. Great crowds gather and a general upstir prevails, but when you begin to count numbers added to the churches in the community the comparison is very small. And again we are aware that results cannot all be counted in numbers or even in things visible. The most difficult thing that the pastor has to overcome is the relapse after a big revival meeting in his church or community. As a rule the people do not continue to pack the house to the overflow.

Conditions are sad in a church when it cannot, with its own membership and its own pastor, create a revival. Our observation is that the pastor who works constantly and earnestly among his people can accomplish far more than the work of the average professional evangelist.

A Review

READING the "copy" for this issue and the reviewing it in the proof cause some reflections of mind. This can be said of every issue. If the reader is in doubt as to worth and timeliness of the contents of this issue, we ask the indulgence of a brief review.

* * *

Rev. J. E. Etter, who furnishes THE SUN with the second of a series of articles on "Tithing and Stewardship", says: "Christianity does not simply mean going to the church and outwardly subscribing to certain beliefs and practices that may after a while merit heaven." That sentence, to us, is the keynote of Brother Etter's splendid article. Read the sentence following the one we have quoted from the article and see what life is. See page five.

Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., in his article tells why the shortage of candidates for the ministry. His answer to the question will be read with pleasure—accepted by some and rejected by some. Dr. Barrett should state where these false teachers are and who they are. His testimony would not be accepted in court. He has stated a ease, but he will have to go further to prove it. This is a time of free speech and there is protection enough to keep a man from dealing in generalities. Name the institutions and the men, Dr. Barrett, and THE SUN will certainly publish the statement. This is not doubting Dr. Barrett's statements, but he has hinted at danger but has not shown us the place of it. Until he points out the schools and the men every school and every teacher stands under his bill of indictment.

Rev. L. F. Johnson, D. D., near the close of his article asks four questions which are worth pondering. Who will answer them in a logical and positive way?

Drs. Staley and Barrett both touched on the same question last week—the question: "Is the world growing better or worse?" Staley said that it is growing better; Barrett said that it is growing worse. Each writer has a following. Now, comes along our good friend, Daniel Albright Long, D. D., and takes the "middle" ground. See his article on another page, entitled "To Think is to Differ."

Editor O. F. Crowson, of The Burlington News discusses and asks some questions on another page. Brother pastor is he right? You know.

Many readers of THE SUN will recall President Harper's article some months ago on the decrease in membership of our Church. His "Elon Letter" this week follows up the discussion. He makes some statements that are worth considering. It is a bad rule that cannot be changed if it works harm; and it is a dangerous law that does not guarantee freedom along with protec- tion. If President Harper is right—and we think that he is—then the government of our Church should be changed. A right change is usually made to meet a condition, and so we refer the case to the Revision Committee of our Government and Principles. But Dr. Harper says that the fault is not with our government, but with our vision.

The Orphanage letter is interesting this week, as usual, and needs no comment. We call attention, however, to a very fine article found on page 16 of this issue which we are reprinting from Maroon and Gold. Brother Rainey has given a splendid mirror of the work at the Orphanage, and we make a special request that you turn to page 16 and read that article now.

The Observatory this week discusses the cotton situation, the Irish peace, and comments on the farmer. We believe that the page this week is of unusual interest and importance.

Miss Eldredge renders a splendid report for her department of the Church work, and five minutes of our time in reading this will give us a very clear idea of what the Board is seeking to do.

“The Women and the Kingdom” section shows that the women are continuing their good work in behalf of Christianity’s cause. Hats off to these noble workers, and may great success crown their every effort.

Under “Church News” this week we are printing the proceedings of the approaching session of the Alabama Conference. If you plan to attend the Conference clip this out and preserve it, as the committee suggests. Brother Jay renders a fine report from Holy Neck and Pastor Knight, of our Raleigh church, tells the news of a recent evangelistic meeting held there.

The United States Department of Agriculture, in its crop notes for September 15, states that the national corn crop has been maturing well and that the bulk of the crop is out of frost danger. The harvest will be earlier than usual and the cutting of corn for silage is almost completed in many areas. Cutting for grain is in progress and husking has begun. Plowing and preparations for sowing winter wheat are under way, considerable seeding having been done. Threshing is practically completed. Returns indicate the oat crop, which is about threshed, to be inferior in yield and quality. Moisture is needed in the Southern states to facilitate fall seeding. Cotton bolls are opening rapidly owing to the hot, dry weather, and picking and ginning are making good progress. Bolls are small and scarce in many localities and weevil damage has been severe.

God is ever seeking to wean men not only from sin, but from the love of it.—Henry Howard.

A Convention Office Moved

We understand that the office of the Board of Religious Education is to be moved this week from Burlington, N. C., to Richmond, Virginia. We presume that the Board has good reasons for this move and THE SUN would like to be first to express hope that the move will be beneficial in many ways. There are some questions that some are asking about the move—questions that should be answered.

If we understand the work it is to keep in touch with Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor Societies and similar organizations of the churches. If this be true, then it looks like a bad move to take Miss Eldredge and her office out of the bounds of the churches. The work cannot be done by correspondence. This long range work will not do. The worker must go to the people. If an office is important, and it is, then the office and the officer should be located near the people. Draw a line around the churches of our five conferences and see how far they are from Richmond. No objections to Richmond, for we wish that our offices might be located in some large city. No idea of a pull for Burlington. We have no selfish motive whatever. We do not see the point of moving the office from among the churches and placing it where it is out of the churches reach, except by expensive travel.

It is only another case of our dragging our offices around like an old cat with her kittens. How long, oh, how long, will it be before the Convention will see the wisdom of establishing headquarters so the people will know where the officers of the Convention are “at”?

In the meantime let some member of the Board of Religious Education state the reasons for moving the office. If we are wrong, then we will take it all back.

Random Paragraphs

This ham-slinging over the back fence to the pastor is no substitute for a just and reasonable compensation for his labors.

Mr. Sunday school superintendent, if you are talking yourself to death trying to get some work done it may be that you talked your school to death first.

Do you “take a collection” in your church or “receive an offering?” There is a wide difference. It would be a good idea to look into this matter.

A community with good schools will have good churches. A community with good churches will have good schools, and a community with both of these will have good roads.

If it takes a man an hour to deliver a sermon, the chances are that he did not spend that much real time in preparing it. It is not so much the amount that a man hears as the amount he retains.

CONTRIBUTIONS

A TRIBUTE TO MY MOTHER

(H. E. ROUNTREE)

A BOY without a mother, no matter at what age in life, feels like a boy without a home, and no one knows so well as he who has experienced this loss. Mother is gone, and with her is taken away life's center. Home is not the same without her greetings. The heart has an aching void and an unsatiating longing for the vanished hand of love.

Our mother was a woman of the old Southern type, not self indulgent as some have been pictured to be, but a model of industry, unselfishness and sacrifices. Her life was devoted to the bringing up of her children, and though pressed hard and heavily with such duties, this was her chiefest delight. Beyond this nothing was more paramount than her endeavor to remedy life's wastefulness and correct life's lassitudes. With all her faults (and humans have faults) she was but a little less than an angel, and often becoming a protecting angel between the lash of sin's cowering slavery and the moral character of her own dear children. In all, her purity of thought, her gentleness of spirit and her firmness of character have made her an object not only of strong love but of deep devotion.

Life was to her an endless task, full of labor, perplexities and a continuous strain; but she performed it all with cheerfulness and untiring devotion.

She was a member of the Christian Church all of her life and always known to be very keen in her devotion and loyalty to all its precepts and influences. Assisted by one of the most Godly and best of husbands, she zealously instructed her children in God's Word, wrote it upon the tablets of their hearts, imprinted it indelibly in the fibre of their character and painted her life eternally in their memory. Now the life of sainted mother becomes a daily inspiration to them. It is now this material influence will bear fruit in their lives, in love of work, in thrifty economy, in persistence and fortitude, in mental alertness, in brotherly sympathies and in spiritual devotion.

After her children established homes of their own, mother, though afflicted, devoted the most of her thought and time to her church and to doing good in her community. Being brought up of humble parentage and during the reconstruction period following the Civil War life did not bless her with an education, but she was endowed with something, which of the two was infinitely better—the indescribable Grace of God. In spite of her afflictions and troubles, the last twenty years of her life were happiest ones, because her greatest happiness was in serving the Lord and doing good.

From this life to the material, mother has gone. No more will we see her here. No longer shall we have her kisses and feel the warm press of her cheeks against ours. But all these which we so much enjoyed in the past, linger with us still and now become a foretaste of the eternal love and felicity we shall have when we too shall have passed beyond this life into the eternal where life is complete and perfected in His presence and in His likeness. She is not dead. She is now more alive. The robe and limitations of the flesh have been removed and God's white robe of glory put on, and now the true mother, with us still, loves, guides, and blesses; yea, still a protecting angel.

These are not merely sentiments born in a time of grief, but sincere reflections of the outstanding characteristics of the true mother as we always knew her and as we shall always remember her. They represent the belief of her children in the "Faith of our Fathers", in God in this life, and God in glory. All things else fall away as ashes. Every fault is forgiven and forgotten in the admiration of the sweetness of her song. Life and God seems more indeed as the poet put it:

"Life is real, Life is earnest,
And the grave is not its goal.
Dust thou are to dust returnest
Was not spoken of the soul."

STEWARDSHIP AND TITHING

A STUDY of this theme has helped me first of all as a minister. It deals with a principle that goes at once to the fountain source of man's spiritual nature. That brilliant English novelist, H. G. Wells has recently suggested that the world needs a new Bible, "The Bible of Civilization", he terms it. Whatever a committee appointed by Mr. Wells might draft as a substitute for God's Word, we sincerely hope that it shall not attempt to expunge the ageless doctrine of stewardship from the sacred page. Bishop Brooks wrote in one of his hymns that, "Mankind are the children of God." This knowledge that man's talents, his possessions, holds in trusteeship for his Heavenly Father is at once the noblest concept of life. Those who reject this principle do it to their own hurt, whereas those who receive it receive the life of God with it and are wonderfully nourished by that life. In the case of the rich young ruler, who went away in sorrow from the presence of the Master, this principle of stewardship was rejected. The minister who succeeds in planting these truths in the hearts of his people shall be made to rejoice, for the fruits of the Gospel shall immediately appear in his parish.

The one cheering hope of our age, that is to dignify and ennoble religion, is this new emphasis that is now being stressed by the prophets of God, that life is a stewardship. When we think deeply enough, we must conclude that any other view or practice has a tendency to belittle the mission of Jesus. Christianity does not simply mean going to church and outwardly subscribing to certain beliefs, and practices that we may after a while merit Heaven. Life is rather a power of possession, with all its attributes, to be used here and now for the upbuilding of Christ's Kingdom, which He mentioned many times in His Gospel.

Perhaps our observations are not different from others. But we have often noticed that where this responsibility of trusteeship has taken possession of a soul, there is always the attendant blessing of a God consciousness. To such believer the All Father is a partner and a partaker in all their affairs and He never seems to be far away. These people have money to subscribe for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, The Herald of Gospel Liberty and similar publications, while their neighbors cannot afford it. As they tithe their time they have time to read timely articles from these journals and at times inquire of their minister if he has yet read a certain informing article. The knowledge that their lives belong to God places them on the firing line of all church activities in their local church work. They never seem to be too busy to assume a responsibility that honors Christ and strengthens the church where they hold membership. These people recognize the fact that the field is the world and in whatsoever foreign soil Christ's truth may be planted it is sure to bear fruit to the glory of His name. Thus does the believer come into a fruitful and harmonious relationship with his Lord in this adoption of the principle of stewardship. For the promise is plain, "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit; so shall ye be my disciples".

OUR VIRGINIA LETTER

N a recent letter to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, in regard to the decrease in the number of persons entering the ministry, I said in my next letter I would give another reason for the decrease. But my next letter was given to another phase of the matter to meet an immediate call for answers to certain questions, but I have not forgotten my promise.

I am much interested in young men and especially young men for the ministry in the Christian Church. It was because of my interest in these young men that I proposed to discuss further some things which it seems to me keeps the number of young ministers so small. I am reluctant to state the case, and I am reluctant because I hesitate to bring to the front a clash with men who seem to be teachers of young men who are looking forward to some glad day when they may enter the ministry and give their lives to the preaching of the gospel; and yet for the sake of encouraging some doubting ones, or rather some one who is likely to meet with doubts which some higher critic seems to delight to put into the minds of young men who are in school making preparation to enter the gospel ministry, I am prompted to speak.

Of course, a teacher must be a man of learning, or he could not do much at teaching, but the trouble with some of these smart men appears in the fact that they know so much that is not true, and they try to cram full the minds of these young men, till at length they see so much that looks like error under the light which their teachers throw on various doctrines, that they get discouraged and quit. They say if the Bible is not true, then I do not wish to preach, and who can blame them? It is this way that some schools which were intended to greatly help these young men have become a great hindrance to them. If the Bible is not true, then they wisely conclude not to enter the ministry at all. No doubt this sort of work is hindering a great many ministerial students. They rightly think that the Church has put these teachers there to teach them, and when they find that these so called teachers are seeking to pull down the Bible, as the inerrant Word of God, they rightly stop and ask: Why does the Church permit such work on the part of teachers? They quite reasonably conclude that if the Church approves such work on the part of teachers of Christianity, then we may as well quit. This kind of work is not only going on here in the home field, but quite as surely in the foreign field. Only a few days ago, we read of a student in a school in a heathen land who had become a Christian, was reciting to one of the higher critic teachers. He (the teacher) disputed some great truth as taught in the Bible. This young man had the wisdom and the courage to say he would see what his Bible had to say touching the matter. He found his Bible taught quite the opposite from what his teacher had been giving him, and then he went to the teacher and pointed out the difference between what he had taught them and what the Bible teaches, and the young man had sense and grace enough to denounce the work of the teacher and to stand by the Bible. This sort of weakening of the faith of young Christians is well calculated to turn many a face away from the gospel ministry, and for one I believe the Church ought not to permit such teaching to be given our young people—it is cursing them, it is doing the Church great harm, it is hindering the spread of the gospel, and it seems to me a big piece of real foolishness to allow such teachers in the schools of the Church. What is the use to build up with one end of the power of the Church and then with the other end pull it down and to ruin? It is enough for the world to tolerate such teachers, but for the Church of Christ to do so, is enough to make the angels weep.

It is said that many words will not fill a bushel. I guess that is true, and so it may be that some serious acting as to the decrease in ministers may be of more value to the cause of Christ, but of course, we must do some talking in order to get people to acting. We suggest that more of us begin to follow the directions given by Jesus, when He said: "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth laborers into His harvest." There can be no doubt as to the fact, the Church can pray laborers into the harvest, but they seem not to do it. Let us try praying.

SOME WORDS OF APPRECIATION FOR THE SOUTH

HAVE just now completed a three-thousand-mile vacation trip through the North, West and South. I love the dear old South and through THE SUN desire to express my appreciation to the many friends and relatives, who contributed to the pleasure of my family and self, on the lovely trip. Autos were furnished us at every stopping place which enabled us to see much of the beauty of the land which we would not have otherwise seen. I wish to thank all the friends who furnished auto service for us. We found the homes of the South more beautiful and attractive than ever before. Farms and homes are cared for in a better way, than in former years. The South is fast becoming a land of beautiful and lovely homes. This is as it should be. Nothing attracts more than good homes. The next marked improvement in the South is in its roads. Wonderful improvements have been made in every section visited. We did not see more than twenty-five miles of what we call real bad roads on our entire trip. The States deserve great credit and praise for what has been done in road construction the past ten years. The upkeep of these fine roads will be in item of expense, but they are worth it. Prompt effort in the line of upkeep will save the fine roads and the States much money. Repairs should be promptly made, so as to save time, money, and the thousands of beautiful and costly cars operating over the roads. We were delighted also in the progress being made in the public school equipment everywhere along the line of travel. The States are acting wisely in planting substantial, and beautiful buildings at every convenient point. No investments made by the States will pay better than that investment made in training of the youth. The youth of the land everywhere prove the value of such investments.

Church progress: The many beautiful churches visited by us gladdened our hearts, and made us to feel grateful to the folks who have built them and who are maintaining them. We enjoyed worship with the Christians in many places, and our souls were delighted in the privileges enjoyed in worship. It might be well for me to say here a thing that almost every Southern family knows, and the fact that I wish to say is this: The progress in the physical improvements in the churches is not equal to the progress in the building of homes, roads, and schools. One community visited has four churches and one school. The school building cost several thousands of dollars more than the four churches combined. The school building is no better than the community deserves and needs, but the churches should be improved in keeping with the school building. There are private dwellings in that community of greater value than any one of the church buildings. The dwellings are not more valuable and beautiful than they ought to be for the folks that live in them, but according to our way of thinking, each of the churches should be made to become as valuable as a private residence. Some families of the South have autos to ride in that cost more than the church they worship in. The autos are no finer and better than they should be, but the old church needs a lift. Great improvements are needed here. We purchase and pay new equipment for the auto. Why not for the church? We keep the home up-to-date in appearance. Why not the church? We build new roads. Why not a few more new churches? We paint and beautify the school buildings. Why not the churches? I believe the people of the South will do these things in more liberal way as the years go by. I am not discouraged in this, I believe the same folks that are ambitious for good roads, fine homes, good schools, etc., will see to it that churches shall be more costly and more beautiful, and better equipped.

It was my pleasure to be with Rev. J. Lee Johnson in a good meeting at Piney Plains, Wake County, N. C. There were many conversions, and eleven young people in the teen age united with the church. Christian fellowship with the people was highly enjoyed.

TO THINK IS TO DIFFER

Minds differ like faces, and every thing God ever made and sin ever marred. You cannot think about one thing. To think implies comparison. To compare, you must have at least two things, or times, or seasons.

Is the world growing better, or worse? It is doing both all the time. Which of the two is gaining on the other? Some times one, and sometimes the other. On the whole, when you take long periods of history, you find it has grown better faster than it has grown worse. When Christ died and rose again, it was soon found that the Bible was the most optimistic book in the world. Then the Roman citizen had three rights: to whip, sell and kill his slaves, wife and children. Then a majority of the people were surfs and slaves. Except to his possessions, it will soon be that a slave will not walk this earth. It is unwise to compare a few years of war, with a few years of peace. Crimes are just as great now as ever in the history of the world and the news about them is gathered swifter than the voices of the morning. Yet, he who does not see that the world is better today, with all its follies, hatreds and sins than it was nineteen hundred years ago, has studied the philosophy of history in vain. Be of good cheer. Men may flounder in the great sea of inquiry. The radiance of Bethlehem star grows brighter and brighter, as the ages roll on.

SOME SUGGESTIONS

N a recent issue of THE SUN, in commenting on a statement made by myself, in connection with church and Sunday school attendance, the request is made that someone furnish a solution of the problem presented.

I would like to offer a few suggestions that may help solve this problem, since I have called attention to it.

In the first place I do not believe that this is a new problem. I know that many preachers have worried over the matter and I have heard them discuss the situation with very great concern. In fact I have heard many suggestions from pastors myself, but I have not believed that the suggestions offered would solve the question.

In the first place the successful Sunday school of today is simply running on business principles and using well known business rules in making itself a success. This church is not doing this. The successful Sunday school has a working force that is busy seven days in the week, and it will not be a successful organization if this is not so. The successful Sunday school has a half dozen organized classes with a president, teacher and other officers and these officers and teachers of the organized classes are at work—if they have a successful Sunday school. This gives to the Sunday school a live, active force of perhaps fifteen or twenty men and women. These are inviting persons to Sunday school, writing personal letters, going out on Saturday afternoons in pairs to get new members for Sunday.

I was in a certain barber shop one Saturday night, and a half dozen young fellows were in there waiting their turn. They were planning for Sunday school work next day. I was back the next Saturday night and the same men were there, planning for work next day. They were members of a live Sunday school. Their Sunday school was alive, because they were alive. Their Sunday school has a working organization.

How about the church? How many church members meet on Saturday to plan for Sunday work? How many squads are out during the week hunting up men who should attend preaching on Sundays? Not any. If you meet with a squad of church folks, they are generally grumbling about something. The average church "hires" a preacher, turns everything over to him and tells him to "go to it". He is the whole show, and it is root hog, or die with him, and the result is that he dies.

I can take the same number of active workers found in any live Sunday school and put them to work in any dead church in the town and I can have that church running over every Sunday.

There is your solution. The Sunday school is organized and AT WORK. The church has no organization for WORK. It has a board of stewards, deacons or whatever your individual church may call your official body. But nobody ever heard of these men working. They are generally picked out because they are successful, busy business men, and you never heard of many of them doing any personal church work.

Occasionally you will find a preacher who has sense enough to put his folks to work? When you find one you will find a live progressive church, even if he is the poorest preacher in town.

When the pastors demand and adopt the same economical, business, common sense, every day methods used by the Sunday schools, used by industrial plants, and used by the whole world, and cease to try to pull the whole load, do all the work, then you will see some successful churches.

ELON LETTER

SOME months ago I sent THE SUN'S Editor some statistics taken from The Christian Herald which showed we are decreasing in number of adherents and of congregations. Some doubted the accuracy of the statistics. I wrote to Dr. H. K. Carroll and asked him whence came his figures and he wrote me that he got them from Rev. J. F. Burnett, D. D., Dayton, Ohio, showing for us for 1920 the following facts: "826 ministers, 1094 churches and 104,390 communicants." This should settle the accuracy question all right. Now a word as to the why.

I am sure the "why" is remediable. So this is to be no wail of pessimism. I am sure we are improving as a Church and that we shall continue to improve. There is nothing wrong with our principles. We ought to be able to take these principles and with them lead the world to Christ and His followers into fellowship with each other. Why not?

The answer is to be found not in an infidelity to our principles. I think no such slander is merited by our people. We do practice our principles locally and individually we have learned in mutual love to live with liberty of conscience respecting all mooted questions of theology. I do not know a local Christian congregation that is in ill repute with its neighborhood, and I have personally visited nearly every church in the Southern Christian Convention. Our sister denominations and their members speak well of us and mingle freely and happily with us, feeling at home in our midst. We have solved the problem of "living peacefully" with other people.

But we have not seen the need of cooperation with our own selves outside the local field, and herein is the cause of our failure. To begin with we cannot get our churches to group themselves into pastorates. We have the spectacle again and again of four or five contiguous Christian churches, each having a separate pastor. I once called the attention of a leading layman in one of these groups to this situation. He argued it had its advantages—that it gave him opportunity of "hearing four preachers a month rather than one". But he forgot that he lost the helpful presence in his community all the time of a settled pastor, and he forgot that his practice was impoverishing our ministry and keeping promising men out of it.

Sometimes it is alleged that our democratic organization makes it impossible for us to make our collective purpose effective, and that were we to become effective organically we would lose our individual and congregational liberty. If this were true, I would despair of freedom. But it is not true. The Disciples of Christ are more loosely organized than we are, and yet they are the fastest growing body in America. The Baptists too, are insistent on local autonomy and practice it, yet they make their collective will effective. The fault is not in our government, but in our vision. We are localized. We do not see the Kingdom in the large. We are contented to do the local thing. We forget that the light that shines farthest must of necessity shine brightest nearest home. And so our local churches are dying, and so our members decrease, and so there is a dearth of ministers.

But seeing the cause of our situation we can remedy it. Our leaders, lay and ministerial, must get a new vision of enlarging purposes for the Kingdom. We must lift up our eyes and behold the fields white unto the harvest. We have been using the muckrake of localization too long, and too long the Kingdom has lacked our contribution in full measure. How shall we get this vision? HOW?

SUFFOLK LETTER

 HE meeting in Antioch church, Rev. H. H. Butler, pastor, September 18-23 inclusive, added fifteen to the list of professions and seventeen to the church membership. The course of the meeting was the usual course, small attendance at the beginning, increasing every day until the congregation was larger than the church building. It is an old church, the community is largely identified with the membership, and material for conversion they say is small; but the congregation is noted for its loyalty to Christ, its hospitality, and its willingness to work in a revival service. The singing is enthusiastic and spiritual and there is some of the outward emotional expression left in that community. There are some aged ones whose spiritual overflow is refreshing in these times when enthusiasm is rife in all departments of life except religion. Enthusiastic demonstration is popular in politics, it is in good taste at concerts, it is tiptop at a baseball game. Why should it be improper in a religious meeting? John heard the praise of God in heaven "as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mightily thunderings, saying, Alleluia: for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth". "It is true that when the seventh seal was opened" there was silence in heaven about the space of nearly half an hour; "but a little later the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound." "Let all those that put their trust in thee rejoice; let them ever shout for joy." The Bible is full of reasons for shouting and it would revive genuine religion to revive shouting in the praise of God. It is not in bad taste, nor a sign of weakness, nor a lack of self-control; it is the expression of feelings that are joyous and sincere.

The Antioch meeting was an all-day meeting with dinner between, a condition that gives people an hour of social intercourse, a luxury that modern conditions do not often make possible in this busy age. Pastor Butler mingles with his flock in a brotherly way that cements them together and inspires a friendliness that belongs to the fellowship of the saints. Rev. J. P. Barrett was with us two days to the delight of his friends. The nights I spent in the homes of Peter Bradshaw, Jesse Gwaltney, and John T. Godwin, revealed to me the hospitality of the Antioch congregation and they were the index to many open doors into homes of that community. Ministers have such kindness bestowed upon them that one feels that he receives more than he deserves. There is no place so pure and sweet as a Christian home.

While we were having such a feast at "Old Antioch" as Brother Butler would say, Rev. Dr. I. W. Johnson and his Oakland congregation were enjoying a great meeting with Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., preaching for them. The church would not hold the congregations, thirty-five professed faith in Christ and twenty-five united with the church. It does not look like rural churches in this Conference are going backward, but forward in a four-fold way; in numbers, in spiritual growth, in liberality, and in organic activities, Sunday schools, missionary societies, organized classes, and general work are all growing in these days when the business world is in semi-eclipse. Dr. Smith's preaching was gripping, inspiring, convincing, and results followed not only among young people but heads of families identified themselves with the church. Whatever may be required in the regular work of a Christian congregation throughout the year, nothing is so uplifting and encouraging as a spiritual revival in the church. Pentecost stands out in the Christian era as the finest day in Christian history.

DEATH

We know that death is an absolute certainty. No warrior ever held spear, or gun, in his grasp, without knowing that they would drop from his hand. The orator may be able to stand over slumbering Greece, and utter a note at which Athens starts from her indolence, Thebe rouse from her lathergy, and Mercedon tremble, yet he knows that soon his tongue will be still, and the forum silent. The greatest musicians know that "time creeps on with downey feet", and soon the minstral's harp will hang upon the "willow". Death drinks from the blushes of beauty the mingled leaves of the rose and the lily, and the reptiles of the grave soon banquet upon lips of erstwhile so fondly kissed."

The first deed for title of land, recorded in the Bible, was for a cemetery. In every continent, in every age, with, or without mummies, you may find monuments reminding you of death's trophies. We have a death to die, but not a death to choose. Every birth is the herald of a death. Every heart-throb is a warning that our journey is soon to end—that our souls will stand before the righteous judge. Will be sin-stained, unrepentant an dunforgiven, or virtue-clad, repentent, forgvien and be prepared to meet the messenger, on the pale-horse, at any hour. The gates of happiness, or woe, will soon be closed behind us. Now we have the choice to decide whether we will listen to the "welcome plaudits" or of hearing the awful word "Depart".

COTTON RESCUES BUSINESS

In the last few weeks there has been a marked improvement in business throughout the country but most especially in the South. The reason for this improvement is that King Cotton has come out of his spell of long illness and his influence on business has acted the same as a hypodermic on a sick person. The wealth of the South has been doubled recently by the rise in cotton and it is remarkable to see what an influence this has on the business of the country. The News Record, a textile daily, reports that business is being buoyed up in the South, with the result that merchants are practically doubling their orders with Northern and Eastern firms. The same paper says, "Business has picked up and there is great improvement even in building." The rise of cotton means the circulation of new wealth and it starts things humming again. Cotton at the present is blazing the way to normalcy for business.

The cause for the revival of cotton is claimed to be on account of the disaster that has overtaken the growing crop, as a result of the unfavorable weather and other minor conditions. According to The Wall Street Journal, production has been reduced in this year's crop to approximately 50 per cent. There has also been a sudden demand for the staple of this country in Europe in the past three months. Arthur Bisbane points out in the New York American that: "Cotton, along with corn and iron is to the nation what blood, flesh and bones are to the body." The world has a great need for it and that need is growing with every passing month.

The shortage in this year's crop need not cause any alarm in the country because in reality the shortage does not more than make up for the depression of last year. Nine million bales were left unsold for the year of 1920. The present crop is the smallest in thirty years but will not be serious.

IRISH PEACE

The world has been looking on the recent negotiations going on between Ireland and England with the greatest of pleasure and any move that brings the two nearer together causes great rejoicing. To the rest of the world there seems to be no justifiable reason why some satisfactory agreement cannot be reached between the two. Yet just when everything seems to be getting on in the best sort of way some little jar comes to disrupt the whole proceedings again. Does Ireland want separation and is she going to hold out for such? If Ireland has a right to separate from the Empire, so has Scotland and so has Wales. No Welsh or Scotch patriot would ever dream of such a separation.

Lloyd George is quoted by The Literary Digest as saying in his speech last month at Barnsley in regard to the recent terms offered Ireland: "I am proud that Great Britain has risen above all prejudice and proposed terms such as have never been proposed before. They are terms which commend themselves not only to Great Britain but to the whole world.

"I believe that when the Irish people realize the sense of the freedom which is theirs, that real freedom is offered them, and that all they are asked to do is to come into the proudest community of nations in the world as free men, I believe you will find that that gifted people will realize that their destiny is greater—a free people inside a free federation of peoples."

Observers see promise of an ultimate agreement in the fact that both Lloyd George and De Valera have taken the utmost pains to leave the door of an agreement open. September 4, De Valera reiterated his irrevocable rejection of Great Britain's terms for an Irish settlement, he concluded with an offer to reopen negotiations on the basis of the principle of government by consent of the governed. Great Britain promptly named the following Thursday as the date of another conference.

THE FARMER

Much is being said again about the farmer and what is being done to help him. It was thought at one time that the Federal Reserve System was established to aid the farmer but when the farmer went to get aid from that source during the hard months of the past summer he found that there was not much aid coming to him. Then, in the opinion of writers of widely varying schools of thought, the new farm credits law is like a gold brick to the farmers in financing his products.

A writer in a prominent magazine says that this law helps the farmer indirectly by lending funds to exporters, middlemen, and bankers whose money is tied up in farm products. The New York World agrees that the law actually plays into the hands of speculators who take over the farmers' crops for the purpose of boosting the market. Another writer claims that the farmer is being undersold in the very markets that he would invade, and that the bill deserves the name of "farmer's subsidy."

The crops have to a great extent been a failure over the country the past summer and as a whole things are not so bright for the farmer. If things go bad for the farmer and he is not given the credit whereby he can weather the storm when one blows up it is going to sooner or later hit the other man as well. One hundred years ago the population of the United States was two-thirds farming and one-third city population. Today the city population is greatly in excess of the country population and is becoming more so every day. The country must realize that the farmer is the backbone of its frame-work and treat him as such.

Safe From all Evil—The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil: he shall preserve thy soul.—Psalm 121:7.

Perfect Peace—Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee: because he trusteth in thee.—Isaiah 26:3.

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

MISSION BOARD MEETING

The Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention met in annual session in the Philathea room of the Suffolk Christian church, Suffolk, Va., on Thursday, September 15. Members present: Chairman J. E. West, W. P. Lawrence, H. W. Elder, J. W. Payne, J. A. Williams, K. B. Johnson, and G. O. Lankford. Members absent: Mrs W. A. Harper, C. H. Rowland, and J. M. Darden.

Devotional exercises were conducted by Rev. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga.

After certain routine matters were disposed of, the Board went into executive session for the remainder of the day. It is probably true that the Board has never held more important session, a session fraught with more responsibility, due to the fact of so many urgent calls and the Board's inability to meet these calls adequately. It is safe to say that the Board could spend easily and with profit to the cause we represent several times the amount at our disposal. And this statement is made in the light of the fact that our contributions have grown by leaps and bounds during the last few years.

Appropriations were made to the following points: Chapel Hill, N. C., Mebane, N. C., Rose Hill and La-Grange, Ga., and Newport News, Winchester, South Norfolk, Third Church, Washington St., Elm Ave, Va. Perhaps other points also. These appropriations are to be used either on the pastor's salary or for the purpose of building or for improvements.

It developed in the meeting that important building operations are to begin at several points as soon as it is possible to move in that direction. Among the points where buildings are soon to be erected are Third Church, Norfolk, Va., South Norfolk, Va., and Richmond, Va. These are strategic centers, and it is a matter for the Convention to see to it that an adequate plant is made possible at each place.

Plans were laid for the prosecution of our mountain work. The school building when finished and equipped will prove an invaluable asset in that work. It will be a source of gratification to our people generally to know that Miss Hedgepeth is to remain in charge of this work, in which she is leading in such splendid manner.

Dr. W. T. Walters and Prof. P. J. Kernodle came before the Board in the interest of the church which has been organized in Richmond, Va. This church has been represented as having now a membership of one hundred, a live Sunday school, and suitable building lots obtained and well on the way toward payment for the same. The brethren there seem determined and consecrated. Evidently the work there has gone far beyond the experimental stage. With the proper support given it is a question of only a few years until we shall have an organization and a building in Virginia's capital city of which we shall all be very grateful. The Woman's Board has been requested to take Richmond as its Home Mission special for the next five years. If the women concur in the action thus taken, we all know what that will mean for Richmond. Success is already assured.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

THE SOUL'S QUEST FOR A FRIEND

Life is spent in a search for sympathy and understanding. We have many needs in this world—food, clothing, shelter, and a chance to work. But the great need is some one who is a true companion of the soul, receiving the confidences and confessions we long to make, giving back the encouragement we require, the affection without which we go famished through the years. Such a friendship is hard to establish. It demands time, and trust, and full appreciation of virtues as well as sensitiveness to defects, but always an unflinching love that forgets the evil and treasures the good. Stevenson says in a fine paragraph: "In this world of imperfections we gladly welcome even partial intimacies. And if we find but one to whom we can speak out our heart freely, with whom we can walk in love and simplicity without dissimulation, we have no ground of quarrel with the world or God." Most of us have acquaintances without number, associates in groups, companions and comrades whose society is a comfort and a pleasure. But fortunate above most is the one who in all the fine intimacies of affection and self-revelation has—a friend.—The Christian Century.

CHILDREN'S SAYINGS

Fullness is proved by overflow. Theoretically it may be possible to have a vessel absolutely filled with some liquid, without a drop to spare. Practically, the only way we can make sure that the vessel is really filled is by seeing it overflow—unless, indeed, it is hermetically sealed. And so the only way we can make sure that a Christian is filled with the Spirit is by the overflowing life. When a person, at conversion or later, through a full surrender to the Lord and a full trust in him, exclaims impulsively, "O, I must tell So-and-So about this", we may be sure that the "fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ" is there. For that fullness can never be kept to one's self. When there is no evident desire to share our spiritual blessings, the quality of those blessings may fairly be doubted. When we go the whole way with God He promises to "pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it"—that is, it must overflow.—Sunday School Times.

THE BULLETIN

Brick has been placed on the ground for the new Christian church to be built at Mebane, N. C. Rev. P. T. Klapp is the pastor.

Rev. J. H. Lightbourne changes his address from Norfolk, Va., to Holland, Va., where he goes as pastor of the Holland church.

Rev. J. L. Foster has been extended a unanimous call to the Waverly pastorate for another year and has accepted. This is Brother Foster's tenth year in that field of labor.

Rev. F. C. Lester is now at Yale as a graduate student. THE SUN extends best wishes to him as it does to other of our young in that and other universities this year.

Dr. Martyn Summerbell began his annual series of lectures at Elon College Sunday. It was our good privilege to hear two of Dr. Summerbell's able and scholarly discourses.

On another page may be found an advertisement of a cottage for rent at Elon College. This is a nice piece of property and well located and we believe that any party interested in moving to Elon College will do well to correspond with the owner, Rev. J. L. Foster, Waverly, Va.

Information is received that the Memorial Temple and Third church of Norfolk, Virginia, are considering the matter of merging. Next week we will speak more fully about the contemplated change.

Sunday, October 2, THE SUN's Editor will occupy the pulpit at Providence church, Graham, N. C., both morning and evening. On the following Sunday he will be at Durham for both services.

Rev. J. W. Holt, Burlington, N. C., is open for work for the first, second and fourth Sundays, and any church, or churches desiring his services for these Sundays may correspond with him.

We are requested to state that the annual meeting of the Mission Board of the Christian Church will meet in the mission room of the Christian Publishing Association building, Dayton, Ohio, on Tuesday, October 18, 1921, at 10:00 A. M.

By force of habit we wrote "September" instead of November in a note last week regarding Rev. W. L. Wells. He will begin his work with the Portsmouth church about November 15 and not September 1, as stated in last week's issue.

Dr. D. A. Long under date of September 23 writes: "You see long articles in the Raleigh papers in regard to the life and labors of Brother W. B. Mann, whose funeral services took place from the First Christian church at 11:00 A. M. today. The only place in the Bible where the word "success" is found is the last word of the 8th verse of the first chapter of Joshua. A successful man is one who has made a happy home for his wife and children. This our departed brother did. White and colored people followed his remains to the tomb. And when his pastor, Rev. J. V. Knight, pronounced a benediction at the cemetery his remains were resting beneath a pyramid of flowers."

The thing that the average man is getting tired of is a boasting of some man for a political job just because he is faithful to his party, and possibly done some work for it. Fitness should be the necessary qualification for any office.

Yes, pastors will soon begin to make some changes. Treat the new man upon his arrival in the same manner as you would if he should be leaving. Go to hear him the first Sunday that he preaches—and on all other Sundays.

"Don't you wish you was a bird, Jimmy, and could fly away upon the sky?" mused little Jean dreamily.

"Naw" scorned Jimmy. "I'd rather be an elephant and squirt water through my nose." Kind Words.

REPORT OF FIELD SECRETARY TO BOARD OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

The report of the Field Secretary to the Board of Religious Education in session at the Raleigh Hotel, Tuesday night, September 20, covered work done from July 8, to September 19, 1921, and, in brief, included the following items:

Field Work

The Secretary attended two Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Conventions, the North Carolina Convention at Reidsville and the Eastern Virginia Convention at Berkley church. Five classes in Religious Education were conducted at the Seaside Chautauqua at Ocean View. One Conference has been attended, the Virginia Valley Central at Mayland, and four Sunday school institutes were held after the Conference, reaching nine churches, with a total attendance of 252, and total offerings received of $14.11 for the work. Individual churches visited at Sunday school or Christian Endeavor services include Burlington, Berea (Nansemond), Winchester, and Leaksville was visited at the time of the mid-week prayer meeting. The field work includes sixteen talks made, besides the work at Ocean View and about 1,425 miles traveled.

Office Work

The office work included the sending out of 1,300 circular letters, 165 personal letters, the answering of thirty inquiries regarding Sunday school and Christian Endeavor methods, and sending out several pieces of literature to the schools making inquiry. Material for the Handbook to be published was compiled and Sunday school lists of officers and teachers made more complete. The letter file shows inquiries answered from every Conference, and dealing with the following subjects: Books for superintendent, teacher training, missionary work, cradle roll, Christian Endeavor organization (one Society organized as the result), organized class work, rally day, Standard Sunday school requirements, Junior Christian Endeavor, grading Sunday schools, graded lessons, general Sunday school interest, etc, etc.

The work so far necessarily has been to a large degree a work of experiment and adjustment, but the interest shown by many workers in the Convention has been most encouraging.

WOMEN AND THE KINGDOM

ANOTHER GREAT RALLY

According to arrangements at the Missionary Rally, the fifth Sunday in May, 1921, a rally was held at Wadley on September 10, under the auspices of the Woman's Board of the Alabama Conference. Not all the members of the Board were present, neither were all the Societies of the Conference represented, but the meeting was marked with enthusiasm from beginning to end. It was a success. The meeting was conducted by Mrs. S. E. Pearson, president of the Conference Woman's Board, with Mrs. J. H. Bass, secretary.

During the discussion of the subjects, especially "Our Goal for Next Year", the president appointed Mrs. E. M. Carter, Mrs. C. A. Weldon and Mrs. E. M. Hood as a Committee on Resolutions. The points in the resolutions were: First, a Missionary Society in every church, Second, that each church raise a minimum of $10.00 for missionary purposes; that each church—whether as society at present—be requested to send some of their most consecrated women to the Annual Conference at Corinth to meet with the Woman's Board.

It was found that there are seven Societies in the Conference at present. The Society at New Hope has used the mite box very successfully.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

UNLOADING COAL

Our ear of coal given us by Holland and Beamon Co., Suffolk, Va., arrived on September 20, and our hearts were filled with gratitude. But getting it moved out to the Orphanage was another question. Our farmer was busy ploughing and we did not want to stop the tractor and we tried to get some outside help to assist in unloading the ear, but help is always hard to get when we need it the most.

We finally succeeded in getting a colored man with a truck and we took the little boys at the Orphanage and in a little over a day we had the coal on the Orphanage grounds. We are always happy when we have our winter fuel on the ground for we know it makes no difference how cold the wind may blow we can keep the children warm.

We want to ask our Sunday schools and friends to remember us in the monthly offerings. Our financial account is running low and the fall months are very expensive as we have shoes, clothes, hats and caps to buy for seventy-five little children. It takes quite a good deal but it is a happy privilege we have to lend a helping hand to the needy.

Our financial report this week is the smallest we have had for many months and when we look at the heavy expense just in front of us and the small income it makes us put on our thinking cap.

We have faith in the Church and in the friends of the orphan children to believe we will be abundantly supplied. The extreme dry weather has cut us so short this year on everything we raise on the farm we cannot help but feel that we will have to deny ourselves of much that we enjoyed heretofore because we raised it on the farm and this year we will have to buy.

Make your monthly offerings as liberal as possible. If your Sunday school is not on the list of monthly contributors see that you make an offering and mail it in.

I AM THE PRINTING PRESS

Written by Robert H. Davis for R. Hoe & Co.

I am the printing press, born of the mother earth. My heart is of steel, my limbs are of iron, and my fingers are of brass.

I sing the songs of the world, the oratorios of history, the symphonies of all time.

I am the voice of today, the herald of tomorrow. I weave into the warp of the past the woof of the future. I tell the stories of peace and war alike.

I make the human heart beat with passion or tenderness. I stir the pulse of nations, and make brave men do braver deeds, and soldiers die.

I inspire the midnight toiler, weary at his loom, to lift his head again and gaze, with fearlessness, into the vast beyond, seeking the consolation of a hope eternal.

When I speak a myriad people listen to my voice. The Anglo-Saxon, the Celt, the Hun, the Slav, the Hindu, all comprehend me.

I am the tireless clarion of the news. I cry your joys and sorrows every hour. I fill the dullard's mind with thoughts uplifting. I am light, knowledge and power. I epitomize the conquests of mind over matter.

I am the record of all things mankind has achieved. My offspring comes to you in the candle's glow, amid the dim lamps of poverty, the splendor of riches; at sunrise, at high noon, and in the waning evening.

I am the laughter and tears of the world, and I shall never die until all things return to the immutable dust.

I am the printing press.

THE MINGO TROUBLE

West Virginia has become famous for her labor troubles. The Mingo District now stands out most conspicuously as a place of unrest. Hungarford, a cartoonist, represents West Virginia and Ireland in a cartoon as two individuals shaking hands with each other while they remark "It takes us to keep things stirred up in this old world." The cartoon is very appropriate. West Virginia is becoming to America, in a way, what Ireland is to Europe. To people not familiar with Mingo, and to those who are familiar, it is a great question why so much trouble should occur.

According to Oliver T. Holden, who has lived and worked in the troubled region for some time, moonshining is to a great extent responsible for the disturbances that arise there. Of course, the feud spirit of the mountaineer and the question of unionism, enter into the trouble to a great extent.

HOLY NECK

We shall close our third year's work with Holy Neck church Sunday, September 25, the last year of which we have given our full time to this church.

We believe that the experiment, if it may be so called, has proved an invaluable help to the church. This church while not wealthy, is for the most part made up of liberal contributors, and is amply able to stand on its own feet and do its part in the general work of the Kingdom. Nothing but a spiritual chill or famine conditions would be able to cause any backward step in the work now being carried on.

True, the losses this year by death have nearly equaled the increase of membership. Since our last conference report eleven adult members have passed over the great divide, and fourteen new members have been received. Our revival meeting which closed on Sunday, September 11 was truly a benediction to the church. Rev. J. F.

Morgan of the Berkley Christian church did the preaching and did it to the whole-hearted acceptance of the church. Fourteen were received into the church on the last Sunday, which several others have not yet made a choice of church. One expressed preference for the Holland Christian church and one for the Apostles' church in Berkley.

Brother Morgan brought wonderfully inspiring messages both in sermon and song and his stay with us and his visitations among the people will be an influence long felt.

We should like to mention a service, or rather a day's service, held on the fifth Sunday of July which we believe will go down in the church's history as a red letter day. It was her first home-coming day and that is just what it proved to be. People came home from far and near and many former members were in evidence and visitors not a few. It was a real treat and pleasure besides, to have with us on that occasion every living former pastor who had served the church as its regular pastor. We understand that Dr. J. O. Atkinson and Dr. J. U. Newman each supplied the pulpit for some months each and who were unable to be present.

Those present were Dr. N. G. Newman and Rev. B. F. Black who spoke to a filled church in the forenoon and Dr. J. P. Barrett and Dr. C. H. Rowland who spoke in the afternoon to an audience that crowded the capacity of the church, though the day was one of excessive heat. Dinner was served free and in abundance on the grounds.

At the last quarterly conference a call was extended for the fourth time to the pastor to serve the church, this time not for a period of one year but for an indefinite period of time, which call was later accepted. The church year ends September 30 and on Saturday, October 1, will be held the last quarterly conference at which meeting every department of the church work will be reported in writing.

The church is entitled to four delegates to conference and these will be elected at the quarterly meeting and urgent effort will be made to have full representation at Dover when the annual conference convenes there.

LIGHTBOURNE-DAVIS EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN AT RALEIGH

The series of evangelistic meetings held by Evangelists Lightbourne and Davis at the First Christian church, Raleigh, N. C., came to a close Sunday night September 18, after three other great services for the day in which large crowds worshipped.

For eighteen days these men have been in Raleigh playing and preaching the Gospel. Large crowds, mostly church members, flocked to hear them and were greatly edified from the very beginning. The church building was packed most every night with church folks, who received the principal blessings as very few unsaved folks attended a single service.

There has been so much said by way of description of the work of these men, that I dare not describe it or attempt to place any accurate estimate on their work. Each of them is in a class to himself so far as their particular work goes. The thing they need is a tent so they can arrange to reach the masses of the people. As it is their work is handicapped and little can be accomplished.

The total expenses of the campaign in Raleigh will reach $225.00, and the offering for the Evangelists was $187.35.

As to results, as I said above it is hard indeed to give any accurate estimate, and no attempt is made to do so, for no one can tell what is done in a campaign like this. There were large numbers of church folks who seemed to be revived, and reconsecrated their lives to Christ; about fourteen professed faith in Christ, five were received into the church by letter and one on profession of faith. Two others will join at a later date, I think. May God's richest blessings be upon these men, and may he soon open up a way for a larger and more constructive work for them.

Mrs. Ann Elizabeth Liskey, wife of J. R. Liskey, departed this life September 3, 1921 at the age of sixty-four years, nine months, and six days. Bro. and Sister Liskey had traveled life's pathway happily together for over 43 years, but the sad parting hour came at last. Eleven children were born into the home, eight of whom survive. There are also seven grandchildren. Sister Liskey was a member of the United Brethren Church, and was a woman of unquestioned Christian character, and much loved by all who knew her. Funeral services were held September 5 at New Hope Christian church, of which church all the other members of the family are members. Services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. G. B. Fadely of the United Brethren church. Interment in the adjoining cemetery.

CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

(By R. S. Rainey—Special Correspondent)

The $30,000 baby building which was begun a little over a year ago at the Elon Christian Orphanage has now been completed, and twenty-five youngsters between the ages of two and eight years have moved in during the last three weeks. It is a handsome brick structure two stories high with a basement, complete and modern in every detail. There are twenty rooms besides the basement. Four large rooms are fitted up for the little innocents to sleep in. The others are used as school rooms and living rooms for the matrons.

Realizing that the little ones need milk and that in abundance, Superintendent Johnston has had an up-to-date dairy barn constructed. When everything is installed, the cows can be handled to the best advantage and the cleanest and purest kind of milk will be produced.

There are in all seventy-five children being cared for at the Orphanage. Mrs. S. V. Holt has charge of the new building for the babies and Mrs. Lula Witherspoon looks after the main building. The Superintendent is Mr. Chas. D. Johnston. When students visit the Orphanage, as they frequently do, they are always politely and cordially received by these three. Most people look upon the ordinary college student as a species of wild animal to be tolerated if possible. But not so with Mr. Johnston. His kindly eyes and cordial smile always spell welcome to visitors from among the students.

The Orphanage farm comprises one hundred and eighty acres of land. Ninety acres is cultivated and the other is in timber. Mr. Dennis Churchill, a young man raised up at the Orphanage, is manager of the farm. Last year the farm produced 5100 pounds of pork, 350 bushels of sweet potatoes, 125 bushels of Irish potatoes, 255 bushels of wheat, and 100 barrels of corn. Being in the heart of the dry belt, this year's crop of potatoes and vegetables has been almost a failure. During a good season enough food stuff, with the probable exception of wheat, can be raised to feed the seventy-five children and the employees of the institution.

The children of the institution, who are large enough, do all of their own work. The girls do cooking, sewing, mending and laundering; while the boys look after the dairy and the farm, and in this way, practically no hired help is needed.

The first five grades go to school at the Orphanage and the grades above these go to the Elon High School. After they finish the high school, they are allowed to attend the college where tuition is free on account of the fact that both the Orphanage and the College are of the Christian denomination. At present there are two students in the college from the Orphanage. One is a Junior and the other is a Freshman. Several boys and girls in past years have taken advantage of the opportunity and have attended the college.

Those who have become of age and left the Orphanage have been successful in many fields of work from trained nursing to newspaper work. One notable success is Tom Walton, who has a game leg. Many former students of Elon remember him well. He learned shoe-mending while at the Orphanage, and later opened a shop in town. After doing a successful business here for a few years, he moved to Greensboro, N. C., where he now has one of the largest shoe shops in that city.

The singing class is one of the best in any similar institution of the State. The class travels over the country a good deal giving concerts. Last year they took in over $1500. The boys take a great deal of interest in athletics and in the Boy Scouts. Many of them are members of the local Scout troop and some of them have been successful in securing varsity positions on the college teams. Andrews was one of the college baseball pitchers last year.

Mr. Johnston, the Superintendent, is a most interesting and likeable man. He is big and handsome and just in the prime of life. He seems to have the whole of his kind heart in his work. He has been in charge for five years, and he has accomplished great things since he came there. But through modesty he attributes his success to others. "People have been very loyal to me", he said in conversation with the Maroon and Gold correspondent, "Since I have been in charge, we have paid off a large indebtedness, built the new home, installed the dairy and are now out of debt. This has been brought about by the loyalty of the churches, Sunday schools, and friends of the Orphanage children."

"Do you like the work?," he was asked.

"It is wonderful to think of the good that is being done", he replied, "but the work has its disappointments as well as its joys."

He might have said that the work had its romances as well as its worries, for only recently was Mr. Johnston married to Miss Effie Wicher, who has seen seven years of service as one of the matrons of the Orphanage.

"Do you ever get tired of so many students coming over and asking so many questions?"

"Certainly not. We are always glad to have visitors. It encourages us and makes us feel that people are interested in what we do."

Students who desire to see some of the results of the pennies, nickels and maybe dimes that they dropped in the old contribution box back at home, by simply taking five minutes walk from college, may see what a wonderful thing they did in helping to provide a home for the homeless.

DID YOU KNOW THAT

Forty-six per cent of the income of the average American family is spent for food?

There are 2433 daily newspapers in the United States, printing approximately 32,735,937 copies a day?

Moving picture theatres in the United States total approximately 17,000. The daily attendance ranges from 12,000,000 to 15,000,000?

American railroads own approximately 2,428,049 freight cars, 56,240 passenger cars, and 68,802 locomotives, operating over 252,571 miles of track?

Robert Louis Stevenson's favorite recreation was playing the fiddle, in order, he said, to tune up his ideas?

Despite the growing use of the automobile there were never before so many horses in the United States and they never before were so valuable?

Two Congregations Unite

NAST week mention was made of the high probability of the Memorial Temple and the Third church, both of Norfolk, Virginia, uniting. The two congregations voted about that time to merge. A recent number of the Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch gave prominence to the merger. From that issue of the paper we find the following:

The official boards of the two churches considering the merger in joint session last night made the following recommendations to be presented to the separate congregations Sunday morning at 12 o'clock together with the merger plan:

1. That the name chosen be "The Christian Temple of Norfolk."
2. That Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., be called as pastor of the new organization.
3. That the present boards of deacons of both churches constitute the new board of deacons.
4. That the officers of all auxiliary organizations of both churches at present constitute the new officers of their respective departments until regular time of election in the church calendar.
5. That beginning the first Sunday in October all efforts be centered toward "The Christian Temple," 34th street site. Sunday school, morning and night service at this location with Sunday school at the Memorial Temple, Brambleton, Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock.
6. That the merger become effective at the close of the night service Sunday, September 24, 1921.

The joint session last night was attended by nearly all of the members of both boards. Arrangements were made to have a train of automobiles at the Temple first Sunday morning to convey that school to Park Place for services. A farewell rally service will be arranged to take place in the Memorial Temple as soon as possible, when an effort will be made to have all its former pastors present.

The merger of the Memorial Christian Temple, Brambleton, and the Third Christian church, Park Place, will become effective after the two congregations in separate sessions in their respective churches tomorrow morning adopt the recommendations of their official boards favoring the merger of the two churches into a new organization to be known then as "The Christian Temple of Norfolk." This means that within a short time actual building work will begin on the new edifice to be erected at the corner of 34th street and Llewellyn avenue. The plans and specifications are all in hand, the lot is cleared and all that remains now in the way of preparation is to receive bids. The present temporary building will not care for the combined congregations. The building in Brambleton is too far from the congregation to make it practical to use it.

It seems appropriate that we give space to the following history of the Temple at this time. We glean this sketch from the Norfolk papers:

History of the Christian Memorial Temple

During the Eastern Virginia Christian conference at Holy Neek church in 1889, and on the night of October 31, sixteen persons met at Captain P. H. Lee's residence to consider the question of a Christian church in Norfolk. The meeting adjourned to the residence of Mrs.

A. L. Hill in Norfolk on November 11. Fifteen were present at this second meeting. A finance committee was appointed and a subscription of $700 was taken for current expenses and the American Christian Committee offered $800. Rev. C. J. Jones was chosen to lead the work and W. W. Staley was instructed to wire the call. This was done November 12, and Dr. Jones wrote a letter of acceptance November 16th from Columbus, Ohio.

The third meeting was held at the residence of Col. A. Savage, December 1, Dr. Jones being present. Committee of place for worship reported a purchase of chapel on Charlotte street for $3,250, and this was approved.

This hall is standing today on the south side of Charlotte street, just a little to the west of Granby street. The outside appearance is the same except for the front of the building; the interior, of course, has been changed to meet business needs.

The fourth meeting was held in the chapel, March, 1890, at which forty charter workers were enrolled; and the fifth meeting was held in the same place April 5th, when twelve names were added, making 52. Many of these held membership in other churches.

At a sixth meeting, held May 29, 1890, officers were chosen: Deacons, A. Savage, A. M. Eley, S. A. Etheridge; Treasurer, A. Savage; Secretary, T. A. Jones; Ushers, P. H. Savage and James A. Eley.

On January 14, 1891, a committee was appointed to sell chapel on Charlotte street and purchase a new location. Eight lots were bought on the present temple site for $3,800, and a plank chapel erected at a cost of $1,080. This was occupied from March 15, 1891, to March 11, 1894.

The reunion of the Church, North and South, Marion, Indiana, October 1890, suggested the idea of "Memorial Christian Temple" to commemorate that historic event. In this work the city of Norfolk paid $16,120; the southern churches $7,865, and the north $4,600, making $28,585 up to the time of its dedication, May 6, 1894.

Among the most conspicuous helpers in those early years were Col. A. Savage, whose personal check made big steps possible by gift or loan; A. M. Eley, T. A. Jones, R. A. Hyslop, E. J. Brickhouse, John C. Haynes, P. H. Lee, T. R. Gaskins, W. J. Lee and many others.

The reasons given for the abandonment of Temple are: The removal of our people from the section in which the Temple is located; the settling of the section by the colored people; the practicability of the two churches working together.

The work of the new edifice for the Christian Temple will begin at once. The building is to be one of the finest and handsomest in the South.

THE SUN wishes the new undertaking much success. May our heavenly Father be pleased.

A Personal Talk With Subscribers

A FEW papers are now returning to pre-war prices. The list includes, however, those papers that have a large circulation. A little business explanation here is in order: During war times goods sold without much advertising. Now it is necessary to advertise. The cost of advertising depends upon the circulation of the paper in which you advertise. As the circulation of a paper increases, it can increase its advertising rates. But hundreds of Church papers are not in this class. Their circulation is below ten thousand—the most of them below five thousand. To increase in circulation a few hundred has no change in rates of advertising. In fact, the paper with less than 10,000 circulation is crossed out by the advertisers whose wares are worth advertising. The local newspapers, of course, are not considered in this discussion. The circulation of these are all in a small area and the advertising space taken by local business men, with the exception of a little general advertising. Local merchants and manufacturers do not patronize Church papers, owing to the scattered circulation.

Can THE SUN reduce its present subscription price? We answer in this form: If there were no expense in running the paper, save actual cost of printing, the subscription income would lack from three to four thousand dollars each year of meeting that expense. The scale of wages in the printing industry has not been changed. With an average of 20% shortage of help in this trade, the outlook is not hopeful for a reduction soon. Paper has dropped in price, but yet far from a pre-war basis. THE SUN has no office rent to pay, no storage room to pay for its books, records, and files. All space for the book and church supply business is without charge to the Convention. All these are provided for by the Editor.

The subscription income has been miserably small for several months. The larger per cent of our subscribers being farmers, and knowing their financial plight due to poor crops and low prices, we have not urged payment of accounts. We can no longer be lenient. Pay day is at hand and we must insist that subscriptions be renewed. The Convention expects the management to make these collections and we have no other choice than to insist. The crops are being marketed and we trust that THE SUN may be remembered in the distribution of the income from the sale of cotton, corn, tobacco, potatoes, etc.

Regardless of conditions and cost of the paper, we are doing all we can to give readers value received. And after all, that is the thing for each subscriber to consider—is he getting his money's worth.

Monday, October 10, has been set aside by the Governor of North Carolina as Fire Prevention Day in the Tar Heel State.

THE BULLETIN

Rev. J. G. Truitt has returned to Princeton Theological Seminary to take up another year's post graduate work.

THE SUN sorrows with Rev. P. T. Klapp in the loss of a daughter on September 26. She was Mrs. W. M. Klapp and lived in Sumpter, S. C. The body was buried at Elon College. She leaves husband and two children.

Rev. Victor Lightbourne has severed his connection with the Christian Church and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church. He thinks that he needs a larger field and THE SUN is hopeful that he is in sufficient territory to meet his requirements.

Rev. J. R. Cortner, Fort Recovery, Ohio, is anxious to spend the winter in the South and desires to get some place where he can do evangelistic work during the winter months. Anyone interested may address Bro. Cortner.

Rev. F. C. Lester is now at Yale, and his address is 1184 Yale Station, New Haven, Conn. Brother E. H. Rainey has also gone to Yale for study. THE SUN extends best wishes to all our young men in preparation for larger and better work.

THE SUN's Editor was with the Providence church, Graham, N. C., last Sunday for two services. Providence is the mother of all our churches in Alamance county. She serves a good people and seems to be in a healthy condition. Bro. F. C. Lester, who has been serving this and our regular Graham church, is now away at Yale for post graduate work. These churches are on the lookout for a pastor to serve them for another year.

WASHINGTON WORK ABANDONED

In last week's report of the Mission Board no mention was made of the abandonment of the Washington, D. C., work. We understand, however, that the work was abandoned. THE SUN presumes that our Mission Secretary upon his return from Porto Rico will give the Brotherhood full reasons.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SEVERING HOME TIES

HAVE no doubt that thousands of other families, like our own, have broken up and scattered far and wide these past few days of school openings and vacation closings. Scarcely ten days ago we were together. Now the good wife with the two youngest are at home by the stuff; the eldest at Town Point with "Aunt Jennie"; Mary D., the second oldest in Boston for voice study. She and I were the last to separate—coming on to N. Y. together, she taking the Colonial Express for Providence to spend the night with a friend and then next day on to the Conservatory at Boston, I taking the good ship San Lorenzo for Porto Rico Saturday A. M., September 17. And so we are separated the one from the other, for better or for worse. Separation seems necessary in life as the pathway of our pilgrimage. The sea certainly separates you, if you will commit yourself to it. It is now Wednesday and our log reads 1325 miles out from New York whence we sailed—and no sight of land yet, nor word to or from loved ones. However, they promise us sight of land by noon today and a tie up at the dock in San Juan, P. R. by 2:00 P. M. It is a journey of 1400 miles from port to port, and once you lose sight of land from New York harbor you have only the blue sea, the bending sky and your traveling companions to look upon till you come into San Juan harbor.

It has been a most glorious voyage. Sunday A. M. we were some 250 miles off Hatteras and for several hours our good ship rolled with the surging sea. By noon Sunday she had found herself in great fashion and settled down to a steady, vigorous, comfortable pace for the long journey. Very few of the 180 passengers were in the dining room for breakfast Sunday, but more and more of them appeared at each successive meal and things took on a livelier air.

Our ship is interesting. Its hull is of steel, and her gross carrying capacity is 6500 tons. She has a crew of 138, of which number 32 man her engines. There are two engines given to the task of propelling her and consuming 400 barrels of oil each day she develops 8000 horse power. Favorable seas and winds allow her to carry you 400 miles each day, though the average, I notice is about 360 miles a day. I estimate that each trip one way pays to the company not less than $15,000 gross. What the expense of the journey to the company is I have no way of estimating. It must be considerable. The dining room is elegant and only the very best foods that sea and land, the States and the tropics can afford are served upon her tables. The balmy sea breeze and the constant motion of the boat seem to give one an appetite and three square meals a day, and beef and crackers at 11:00 A. M. each day, with grapes and plums and apples at call are none too many—when the sailing is good and your appetite is steady.

The sea, the sea, the sea! Broad, boundless, trackless, infinite! One cannot get over the bigness and boundlessness of the thing. And I never knew before that it did have, or any natural water could have, so many and so varied colors. I counted seven distinct and very marked colors or shades of color awhile ago. 1. The snow white of the caps or seething foam. 2. Pea green. 3. Emerald green. 4. Sky blue. 5. Indigo blue. 6. Tourquoise blue. 7. Blue black. Just what gives this different coloring to the same waters I am unable to say, unless it be the sky above and your relationship in vision to the surging undulating or undisturbed surface. One can sit for hours—I do—on deck in a comfortable deck-chair and look at the blue surface as it forms and fashions itself into all sorts of graceful folds, accumulations and receding mounds, or irons itself out into a great purple plush carpet, soothing to look upon and restful to contemplate. I have not worked on this trip, since leaving New York—just read lazily one wholesome volume on the philosophy of leadership—but have just dreamed and looked and rested and wondered. It is my first long sea trip and I am trying to see what it is like—or rather I am letting it have its way with me and take all that it has to offer in wonder, indolence and meditation.

My journey takes me with Rev. W. P. Minton our Mission Secretary of Dayton, and Rev. W. H. Martin, one of our Porto Rican missionaries, to study the missionary situation in Porto Rico. We are to spend two hurried busy weeks on the island visiting all our preaching places, mission stations, present and prospective, and our missionaries in Porto Rico, so as to help decide, what shall be our next step in Porto Rico. The time seems to have come when we must do much more in Porto Rico than we have been doing, or turn the territory over to others who are ready and willing and prepared to do more than we are doing. It is hoped that our people shall soon know and realize just the situation in Porto Rico and the part we should take in handling the situation.

In subsequent letters to THE SUN I will endeavor to tell of conditions as I find them in the island. In this I am thinking of the dear ones from whom I have been steadily adding the miles on miles of separation since I left them one week ago, and of the hundreds of SUN readers who, like myself, wonder when the periods of severance come, why it is necessary to break home ties—when those ties are so happy and wholesome. But each has his life to live, and the God of infinite resources, has a different path and different experience for each creature of His hand. But we are one in Him, and while we abide in His presence, though separate in body, we are together in spirit—in love—in that which is really worth while.

WHY I BELIEVE IN, AND PRACTICE TITHING

 BELIEVE in and practice tithing first of all because the Scriptures, it seems to me, teach that Stewardship is the basic principle of religion, and tithing is a worthy response to the obligation of stewardship of property. The person who looks upon religion as an opportunity "to get" instead of a challenge "to give", has missed the vital part of the religious appeal. No one can deny that at least one-tenth of a person's income belongs to God. From the beginning of time He has claimed one-seventh of man's time, and one-tenth of his income. This divine claim stands out in marvelous distinctness on nearly every page of the Old Testament Scriptures.

And then in the New Testament Jesus most emphatically endorsed the principle of the tithe. Hence, I believe in tithing further, because my Master and Lord endorsed it. He did not say much about it, because the principle of the tithe was so well established that He did not need to restate it. All the Jews tithed. Why should Jesus tell them to do something that they believed in just as sincerely as He did? Such would have been as unnecessary as for a father, who saw his children all gathered around the table eating, to call them to come to eat, when they were already eating.

If the Jews had been as indifferent to tithing as many professing Christians are today, without question, the Master would have preached tithing to them on every opportune occasion. But whatever Jesus says "Ye ought to have done", surely no minister would say can be left undone without incurring Christ's disapproval.

Furthermore, I believe in tithing, because I realize that if every professing Christian would practice tithing the Church of Jesus Christ would speedily win its desired prestige throughout the world and would be able speedily to evangelize the world. Moreover, it would not have to be content in merely preaching the social gospel, but it could then also affectively practice it. The cause of Christ is handicapped and retarded just to the extent that men and women withhold their tithes from His Church. It has been my experience that when men and women bring their tithes to the Lord, they also bring their lives more fully.

I believe in tithing also because of the reflex benefit that comes to those who tithe. I have never seen it fail that a man becomes more prosperous and more successful when he tithes.

For sometime I had the same experience that hundreds of others have had in thinking that the Christian law of giving did not require one to keep an account of what one gives—but to give freely and liberally. And in that attitude, I veritably thought that I was giving more than a tenth. It was my sincere conviction that such was the case, and I prided myself in the fact that I was "going one better" than my tithing friends who gave a tenth, whereas I gave more than a tenth.

But while attending the Student Y. M. C. A. Conference at Lake Geneva one summer I heard the great challenge appeals of the Church leaders who were on the program, and who stressed the principle of stewardship in general, but tithing in particular. And I realized as a young man in college, that from that time on I would practice tithing, and not only merely think that I was giving a tenth, but know it.

I am convinced that it pays in a hundred ways, spiritually and materially. I soon learned that I had been robbing God all along in spite of the fact that the Devil had been making me think that I was more than playing fair.

I like to see men and women who tithe,—who keep an accurate account of their income, and an accurate account of what they pay out to the Lord's work, so as to know that they are giving at least a tithe. And my experience personally has been that I have never stopped with the tithe. And I have never yet seen the person who tithed that wanted to stop with the tithe. But oh, the joy in knowing that one is complying with God's requirement, by giving at least a tithe. There are some who say they cannot afford to tithe, but the fact is that no one can afford not to tithe. It is God's will for all.

ELON LETTER

 HE fact that Christianity and Mohammedanism are contending with each other as missionary faiths for primacy in Africa today gave peculiar appeal to the Summerbell lectures this fall. In the discussion of conflicting issues, so often those who "argify" are never "embarrassed" by the facts in the ease, and so they only "argify". Their discussions never reach the high station of "splanifying", though they are at times strong in putting on the "rousment".

College students are trained to weigh argument pro and con. Debating is a college tradition, and college debaters are never satisfied till they have carried the issues involved through their historical development back to their origin. This was Dr. Summerbell's method in dealing with Mohammedanism, to which series of four discourses he gave the title "The Prophet of Arabia."

He gave the life history of Mohammed himself, revealing him as an epileptic sensualist whose favorite wife declared after his death that he was characterized by love of three things: women, perfume, and food, and that of the first and second he no doubt had satiety, but of the third never. Then, in contrast with this bestial sensualist, the lecturer held up the Christ. It was a compelling argument for the Christian faith and for Christian missions.

But Dr. Summerbell is always just to an adversary. He will not strike below the belt. He frankly admitted that the degeneracy of the Christian Church in that day gave occasion for the rise of Islam and that vile and vulgar and detestable as it is, it was an advancement on the religion of that day and time and that it has served to help the Christian Church, just as poison is sometimes inserted in the human body to prevent a more deadly poison from destroying life itself. This however, did not prevent his analytic soul from discerning that Mohammedanism is not even an invention, but a concoction, based on Hebrew Scripture and Arabian lore, a plain human fabrication.

The concluding discourse "Why The Crescent Must Wane" was the climax of a great discussion, and what a comfort its optimistic outlook was to the reverent, hopeful disciple of Christ! Any religion which exalts sensuality, degrades women and childhood, resorts to force to propagate and perpetuate itself, and divorces itself from morality is bound to yield. But a religion of this character will not yield without a struggle. It will cost men and millions to overcome this pernicious system that now counts its adherents to the number of 220,000,000. But it can be done, and it will be done, and the followers of the Christ will do it. We will do it, our part of it in our day, or we shall be false disciples.

Dr. Summerbell also gave two masterly sermons on Sunday, preceding his lectures, which were given two each day on Monday and Tuesday following.

SUFFOLK LETTER

 HE question of courage in a minister is one that suggests a question. What is courage in matters of public deliverance? Does the unbridled utterance of what one thinks or feels indicate courage? It is sometimes remarked that a minister is afraid to preach what he believes, lest people would be offended. There are certain sins that run rampant in society and certain people indulge in them. One minister treats the subject in a general way, exposing the evil by use of Scripture, and appealing to the judgment and conscience of the congregation; another treats the subject in a very personal manner, really exposing persons instead of sins. The latter is often regarded as the brave minister, and the former as afraid to speak out his mind. That evil should be exposed and condemned no one questions. That malaria should be exposed and driven out of a community is plain duty; but that persons affected by malaria should be abused for such affection is subject to a negative answer. Discretion may be the soul of valor.

The question arises, in the study of such a subject, which is easier, to speak one's mind or to keep silence? Which requires more courage, to express one's feelings or to restrain feelings? When meanness or wickedness has made one indignant, is it easier to speak or to keep silent? Experience answers that question. The most difficult thing to do is to hold the tongue when under excitement, whether it is that of anger or joy. The easiest preaching is to rant on topics of the day, incidents in the current of human society, customs that shock the refined morale sense, pleasures that are carnal in their nature and that defile. Many of these temporary indulgences discourage religious teachers and ministers, and require correction so far as the pulpit and the pew can change public sentiment and turn the tide toward better ways. Jesus usually answered by, "It is written"; and Nathan in his personal, "thou art the man", was face to face with the offending David. It is no sign of courage to speak to persons from the pulpit; it does require some courage to go to an individual, face to face, and tell him of his wrong; but it is more difficult to keep silence when the conditions seem to require speech. It seems to be an unjust criticism to charge a lack of courage against those who do not rail at congregations when evils invade the church. "I show unto you a more excellent way" seems to be a good suggestion. A negative gospel is little more than a new decalogue. It seems to be necessary in these times to deliver a gospel of positive service, rather than a system of don'ts. The substance of the gospel of Jesus is summed up in what He said to Simon and Andrew: "Follow me." His speech was seldom harsh and only to hypocrites: when the Pharisees took counsel how they might entangle Him in talk, He said: "why tempt ye me ye hypocrites?" and this was because "He perceived their wickedness". To the woman guilty of woman's worst sin, He said, "go and sin no more"; and there was such virtue in His words that it changed her life. A mother's life has more power over her children to keep them in the right path than all the scolds of the negative type of motherhood. God hates sin and loves the sinner; and that spirit is the power that makes the gospel a corrective of human wrongdoing. The brave man controls his tongue and guards his speech.

OUR VIRGINIA LETTER

 EFERING again to the decrease in the number of young men who choose to enter the ministry, as their life work, or more correctly, who feel called of God to enter that sacred calling let us remember that in olden time the Church travailed and agonized before the Lord, and the Church became most faithful, not only in the number who entered the ministry but it was most faithful in every good work. Indeed it was a common thing to find the people of God zealous in every good thing. See Titus 2:14. Not only so, but that was one of the distinct purposes for which Jesus gave Himself. Listen—Paul says: "Jesus gave Himself for us". To what end? "That He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, teach one of good works". So, as I see it, a believer has no assurance of his personal salvation till he becomes so filled with the zeal of God as to be enthusiastic for good works. There are many in the Church today, no doubt, who know nothing of such an experience, as real enthusiasm for Christ. I dare say that many of us do not even know the origin and meaning of the word enthusiasm, which in and of itself reveals a great part in human history, as well as a great spiritual truth. The word enthusiasm comes from two little Greek words, viz: en and thus, which means God in us. and God in us always gives us the zeal for God and good works. In proof of this idea, I guarantee that you have never seen a man or a woman who was cold and indifferent in spiritual truth, and toward good works, who was filled with the fulness of God. The fulness of God, according to one's capacity, is always the measure of one's usefulness and faithfulness in the Christian life. If you wish to be really and truly useful, then get full of God. But do you ask: How can one do that? It is a good question, and you have a right to a true answer. Do this: Live a prayerful life and keep full of Bible teaching—be a careful and prayerful student of the Bible, walking not after the flesh, but after the spirit. Rom. 8:15. And you will soon see what it is to keep full of God, and that of itself will revolutionize your personal experience as a Christian. It is not such a great mystery after all, and so we can all learn to be filled with the fulness of God, if we will persistently really try.

As to the decrease in the number of young men entering the ministry, there are doubtless many influences at work to accomplish such an end, but I believe the most aggressive of such influences is one to which I have briefly referred, viz: This doing higher criticism on the part of a few self-styled scholars, who think that modern scholarship is of higher authority than is the sacred Scriptures. No doubt, I think many a young man has been turned away from the ministry by the claims of this cult of higher criticism, not only in the homeland, but also in the foreign field. Young men are told that the trial of Abraham's faith was a myth; that there was no reality in the flood; that the crossing of the children of Israel over the Red Sea, while the Egyptians, undertaking to do the same thing, were drowned in the sea, is founded on unreliable traditions; that miracles cannot be, that Jesus knew very little and so made many mistakes, etc. Of course, young men who are taught to respect the authority of the higher critics, feel that the Bible is no longer authoritative, that it is a discredited book, and of course one need not expect a young man thus taught, to think of entering the ministry and preach the teaching of such a Bible, as the higher critics claim we have, certainly not, who would if he believed the Bible unreliable. The Sunday School Times in its issue of September 10, in discussing these matters took a bold stand against sending missionaries to foreign lands who are in sympathy with higher criticism, giving as one reason for such a stand the fact that it hinders, rather than helps, the cause of Christ. To prove this fact, the following note was given, as coming from certain Chinese Christians, as a protest against sending higher critics to teach them a Bible in which these so called teachers do not themselves believe. The following is the note thus sent to a mission board in America: "We write to say that some missionaries from your board, here in China do not believe the Bible, and we earnestly ask you not to send any more such missionaries to China. We have a great many persons in China already who do not believe the Bible, and it is not necessary for you to send more such persons to us. We would like to have, to teach the Chinese, those who do believe the Bible." What foolishness to send such men to teach a Bible they do not themselves believe, to the heathen? Is it any less foolish to have them teach the people at home?

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

Recently I have noticed definitions of this phrase and I do not agree entirely with any one as given in THE SUN. There are two phrases which have become familiar to all Bible readers, the "kingdom of heaven", literally "of the heavens", and the "kingdom of God". The latter occurs four times as often in the New Testament as the former. So far as I can discover, the former occurs only in Matthew, the latter in each of the Evangelists, in the Acts, and in five of Paul's letters.

I would not assert dogmatically that the sacred writers maintained a distinction in their own minds between these phrases, or that Christ used them otherwise than as generally synonymous; but the Holy Scripture was written for all ages, all minds, all culture. To my mind there occurs a possible distinction, and what is possible to my mind was possible to Matthew, John and Paul,—was possible to the mind of our Saviour.

"The kingdom of the heavens" conveys to my mind a description of the kingdom of God extensively, and the "kingdom of God conveys to my mind the idea of the kingdom of the heavens intensively. "The kingdom of the heavens" was in existence first, then "the kingdom of God." The former may exist without sentient and responsible creatures, wherever matter and forces exist; but the latter requires for its existence not simply unresisting matter, but perceiving mind and feeling soul, persons capable of loyalty. Did not Paul mean as much when he said, "That was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural, and afterward that which is spiritual."

So, were I to make a distinction I should say that the kingdom of heaven, or of the heavens" represent the rule of Jesus over the whole universe of matter (however extensive that may be) and spirit, and "the kingdom of God" His special rule in the hearts of His people, a rule they themselves come perceive and acknowledge, the principles of which they can understand and apply in their own lives.

These phrases, I know, are commonly used as interchangeable, or synonymous, and no one may seriously object, yet the distinction I mention is very evident to my mind.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD—THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN— THE CHURCH

In many respects these expressions "cover the same spaces of meaning", yet, in many respects each has "a concept that differentiates it from the others."

"The Kingdom of God" is "His rule and realm". It is "universal, all-inclusive, all comprehending", for "The Lord hath prepared his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all." (Ps. 103:19). "It is an everlasting kingdom". (Ps. 114:13), "covering all time and all space." "The Kingdom of God is within you", applies to "those who acknowledge, accept, and submit to His sway". There is a wonderful difference between God's "rule and realm."

"The Kingdom of Heaven."

So far as I know, this term is found thirty-two times, in the New Testament and only in the gospel by Matthew, "always in the plural—in the Greek."

To those who would read carefully what is written in the Old Testament about "the kingdom, I would suggest: Daniel ii:44, vii:29, II Sam. vii:7-10; Ps. xxxix:20-37, Mic. iv:1-8; Zach. ix:9-10; Chs. 12,13, and 14; Isa. ix:7. Then read Matthew through and you will see, I think, why his gospel is "preeminently the kingdom-gospel."

John has no parable. Mark and Luke speak of "the King of God." "The Kingdom of God is personally entered only by the new birth, for "except a man be born again, he cannot see the Kingdom of God." (John iii:3).

"The Church."

Perhaps you will not find this word in the Old Testament. It appears to be "Kingdom, kingdom, all the way through", as Dr. Bates says, and from his able works we quote. Here we will do well to read: Eph. iii chap., Colos. II:23-27., Ephs. 111:9; Ephs., ii:22, 23., 1 Cor. xii:13.

"The Greek for Church is Ekkesia, and is found in the New Testament 115 times, and is always translated Church, except three times. Acts xix:32,39 and 41—where it is translated assembly," unless "we except Acts xix:37, where the word hierosulos (hieron, temple, and sulao, to rob) is translated robbers of Churches."

The actual Church, or "body of which Christ is the head," (Eph II:22,23) is invisible. Composed of those who obey Christ, have given their love to God". They who do "not truly love, and serve God—no matter what they profess—are not of the Church, but of the world." (I John v:19.)

"The Visible Church."

"The followers of Christ organize and are denominated—We have denominations. Some may write with the true followers and form a mixed multitudes." (Ex. xii:38). Of the denominations, in the U. S., according to Dr. Daniel W. Fisher, there are "164 of those bearing the Catholic name, there are the Greek Catholic Church, Roman Catholic Church, Old Catholic Church, Catholic Apostolic Church, Reformed Catholic Church, and Independent Catholic Church. Of Protestants there are 24 Lutheran denominations, 16 Baptist, 13 Methodist, 12 Presbyterian, 4 Reformed, 2 Episcopalian, 2 Christian, 2 United Brethren, 1 Congregational; while the remaining 87 bodies comprise but about one-tenth of the entire Protestant membership."

"The late Cardinal Gibbons, in his "Faith of our Fathers, page 23, says: The Church is called a Kingdom, and then attempts to prove that the only true Church was the Roman Catholic. The simple fact is, in Scripture the Church is never called a kingdom, nor is Christ ever called the King of the Church."

Christ is "the head of which the Church is the body: The God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory gave Him to be the head over all things to the Church, which is his body." (Eph. 1:17, 22, 23).

DANIEL ALBRIGHT LONG.

AN INCIDENT OF LONG AGO

Brother Editor:

When I met you in Washington, at the White House, in August, and you courteously invited me to write occasionally an article for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, which I edited many years ago, you placed me under an obligation which I would willingly discharge. So many things have claimed my attention, however, that I have found no "convenient season." There are things that I might write about, had I the time and your readers the patience; so many, indeed, that I scarcely know where to begin.

It occurs to me just now to relate an incident in which our venerable Brother, Rev. Dr. J. W. Wellons, figured, and which may be of interest and excite a smile. Possibly he may recall the occurrence. It was about the year 1875, when I was pastor of Antioch Christian church, near Windsor, in Isle of Wight County, Va. My wife and I with our first baby were living in the village of Windsor, keeping house on the street fronting the railroad. We received word one day that Rev. J. W. Wellons was coming to Windsor, and that he would be our guest. Preparations were made, and in due time he arrived. An hour or so before supper time, my wife, who had then had but little experience in house-keeping, inquired of our visitor what sort of drink she should provide for him—tea, coffee, milk, etc? In some way she failed to hear his reply distinctly, and thought he said "eatnip tea". Now, there was not a sprig of eatnip in the house, and what to do in order to get enough for the minister's supper was a serious question. Finally wife said: "Maybe Elizabeth, our laundress, has some." So away I hastened up the railroad half a mile or so, to Elizabeth's cabin, and that good darkey was able to supply the need. Home I went, the precious herb was properly manipulated, and when we were sitting at the supper-table, the young hostess told Brother Wellons that she had prepared a nice cup of eatnip tea for him. Whereupon with a hearty laugh, he said: "Oh, no, sister, I did not say catnip tea, but kettle tea." What he called "kettle tea" was a cup of hot water diluted with sweet milk. Of course, we all joined in the laugh that convulsed our genial guest, and many a time since my wife and I have made merry over that innocent mistake.

If this incident seems trivial, let me say that I have held in affectionate esteem for more than half a century the venerable man of God who still lingers as a patriarch among his brethren. The long and useful ministry which God has enabled him to exercise is a source of unfeigned pleasure to me whenever it comes to mind, and I pray that his last days on earth may be serene, a fitting prelude to the perfect peace of Paradise.

Christian Endeavor Topic—October 9, 1921

How to Improve the Meetings of our Society. Matt. 18:19-20; John 4:23-24.

The first chapter in that excellent Christian Endeavor handbook of information "Expert Endeavorer" by Amos R. Wells, gives suggestions, which if followed, would change for the better many a Christian Endeavor prayer meeting. In discussion the question "How can we get original thought on the prayer-meeting topics?" a problem with so many of us, the following means are given: "Only by study of the Bible followed by meditation and observation. First the Endeavorer should read the Bible passage; then he should read good commentary upon it; then he should take the subject with him into his daily life for five or six days, thinking about it in his odd minutes and watching for experiences in his own life, or the lives of others, or observing nature and looking for illustrations on the subject from all these sources. Prayer-meeting preparation should begin the Sunday beforehand." Would such preparation improve your Christian Endeavor meeting? Would it not make Christian Endeavor work and truth a real vital force in the life of every member if such a course were pursued weekly? The spirit which will make our prayer meeting work a success is defined by this chapter as "The desire to please our dear Saviour in bearing witness for Him and in helping others to Him." Let us endeavor as Christians to improve the meetings of our Society, and carry the teachings of the Christian Endeavor hour into the life of every day.

"THE CHURCH SCHOOL"

A forward step in Christian Education has been taken as five denominations unite in the publication of "The Church School" a magazine of Christian Education. The October issue of this helpful magazine appears as a joint product of the editorial and publishing boards of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South; the Congregational, the Reformed Church in the United States, and the Disciples of Christ, which have organized the "Church School Press" for its production. This action shows commendable cooperation in religious journalism and works toward the ideal of a national magazine of Christian education. Such a magazine will make a distinct contribution to this great work, and an editorial states that "It is hoped that the magazine will be a medium through which interdenominational cooperative movements and organizations may carry their message to the church and community" as well as a Church publication. All Christian forces must unite in effort if the great work of Christian Education is to be adequately promoted, and religious journalism has a mighty power to wield. It is to be hoped that "The Church School" may have many regular readers among our workers and leaders.

MEETING OF BOARD OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

The Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention met in the parlors of the Raleigh Hotel, Raleigh, N. C., Tuesday evening, September 20, at 8 p. m. The members present were Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., Richmond, Va., Chairman of the Board; Rev. J. F. Morgan, Norfolk, Va., Vice-Chairman; Mrs. H. Russell Clem, Greensboro, Secretary; Mr. I. A. Luke, Holland, Va., Mr. C. H. Stephenson, Raleigh, N. C., Treasurer of the Board, and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Field Secretary.

In addition to the routine business always claiming attention at the annual meeting of the Board, several new items were acted upon.

Miss Eldredge was authorized to begin holding institutes in which instructions will be given to the young people of the churches of the Convention as to the methods and plans proposed in doing the Convention work along lines of missions and young people's work. She will soon leave for a visit among the churches of the Georgia and Alabama Conferences. By action taken by the Board, the office of the Board of Religious Education of the Southern Convention, now located in Burlington, N. C., will be moved to Richmond, Va. This action was taken so that the chairman, Dr. Walters, might be in close touch with the executive end of this work, and to give Miss Eldredge, the Field Secretary, the advantages of the informational sources of a larger city.

HEADQUARTERS MOVED

The headquarters of the Board of Religious Education, by vote of the Board assembled in annual session at Hotel Raleigh, Raleigh, North Carolina, on September 20, were changed from Burlington, N. C. to Richmond, Va. The Field Secretary has already moved to Richmond and communications to her should be addressed to 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va. The Board anticipates more effective work after this change and aims during the year to reach every Sunday school that is possible to reach through Sunday school institutions and other gatherings. The Board also desires that the office of the Field Secretary shall be a clearing house for Sunday school and Christian Endeavor information, and the number of inquiries, regarding the work among our young people, is increasing, and is very gratifying. The interest in adequate Christian education and training among our people in many sections is encouraging.

THE NEED OF GRADED LESSONS IN OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS

At a recent Sunday school convention, the statement was made by a leader that one of the greatest needs of the schools represented was the need of graded lessons in the Sunday schools, that is the need of lessons adapted to the needs of the children to be taught. That leader was alive to the truth of the slogan "The need of the child is the law of the Sunday school."

For many years all schools used the International Uniform Lessons, and all the pupils, big and little, studied the same lesson on the same day. The uniform lessons have rendered a great service in Sunday school development and growth, and are still used by many schools with effective results. But for years there has been the realization in the minds of thoughtful church leaders of the need of instruction adapted to the need of the child at each stage of his development. In an address at the Bishops' General Conference in 1844, this statement is found: "Sunday school instruction may justly be regarded as one of the most effectual auxiliaries which we can employ for the prevention of the destructive influence of error, by preoccupying the infant mind with the germs of Scriptural truth. Although it is a matter of rejoicing that a great amount of good has been accomplished by this service, it is believed that much more might be done with a system better adapted to the capacities of the subjects of instruction, and with books suitable to differing classes in the several stages of development." This high ideal set by the leaders of the Nineteenth Century for graded instruction is just being made real in the Twentieth Century through the International Graded Lessons.

In an attractive little booklet "A System of Graded Instruction for the Church School", published by the Methodist Book Concern, the following testimonies are given regarding the influence of graded lessons upon life:

"The stories and their teaching fit so well into the daily life of the child that through them right habits have been formed, such as the impulse to obey, to be kind and to be unselfish. . . . Many have learned to pray and to say 'thank you' to God who never prayed before, and who never hear prayer at home."—Edythe Wilson.

"Since we have used the graded lessons every child who has been in the junior department for a year or more has joined the church before his promotion into the intermediate department."—F. W. Harris.

"Some of our teachers in the Junior school have had no other lessons themselves and are making our best teachers. I find them more conversant with Bible truths, stories and teachings than some older teachers who did not have the benefit of graded lessons as children."—Cora Downs Stevens.

Do the Sunday school lessons taught in your school achieve these results? Is your school training its youth in this way? Can you see that your boys and girls are receiving the Bible stories so that they are being developed into boys and girls who can meet the tests of the home and school and playground and street, and meet them as Christian boys and girls? Is the Bible real to them, and are they learning to live for Jesus Christ and to follow in His footsteps? Are they being given a vision of service? These are the things which the Graded Lesson Course aims to accomplish. Do you need them? The Field Secretary of Religious Education (Burlington, N. C., Box 333) will be glad to send a prospectus of the graded lessons to any Sunday school, or to answer any questions regarding them. Send in your problems. If you cannot use these lessons, tell us why. If you can use them, let us help you in getting them started. If you are using them, let us know of your work, that we may help other Sunday schools. The new year in all courses of graded lessons begins October 1, and while they may be introduced into a Sunday school at the beginning of any quarter, the best time of all the year is at the beginning, October 1.

"As the pupil passes through the various stages of development his interests widen and his needs become more complex. The curriculum, then, must be comprehensive, to touch him on all sides; must meet his widening horizon, must be rich in content, to supply fully his every need."—George W. Pease.

We are carrying on our back page this week an advertisement that should be of more than passing interest to readers of THE SUN. The building shown is the modern and well equipped plant of the Burlington Printing Company. The Company is an outgrowth of the former Southern Christian Publishing Company. The Company was organized and began operation April 1, 1918 and has grown rapidly from the very beginning. Its every employee is a Christian. There is no smoking during work hours and no impure language ever heard. The plant is in charge of Mr. A. Dabney Pate, a master printer and business man. The office is directed by Miss Hester Stuart, a wizard with figures and office details. Every person connected with the company is personally interested in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Even the faithful janitor can be seen scanning a proof sheet "appropriating an idea" from some article.

The Company's motto is "Quality Printing" and lives up to its well deserved quotation bestowed by the public. Every employee is an artist in his line. No amateurs are employed, no cheap work turned out. The company seeks to serve with a service that lasts.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF FEDERAL COUNCIL TO MEET IN CHICAGO

The annual meeting of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America will be held in Chicago December 14-16. In view of the fact that this meeting brings together the official representatives of thirty constituent denominations, it is hoped that denominational meetings may not be scheduled for these dates.

Word has just been received in this country of the death, on September 26, of the Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council, Bishop Walter R. Lambuth of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in a hospital at Yokohama, Japan.

Bishop Lambuth has been one of the most notable figures in American church life during this generation. His missionary service in China, Japan and Africa has been of far-reaching significance, not only to his own denomination, but to all the churches of the world.

The first Vice-Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Federal Council, Rev. Frederick W. Barham, President of the United Christian Missionary Society, will be the Acting Chairman of the Committee.

The End of Enmity—When a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him.—Proverbs 16:7.

The Untamed Tongue—He that keepeth his mouth, keepeth his life; but he that openeth wide his lips shall have destruction.—Prov. 13:3.

Fate of the Robber—Behold at eveningtide trouble; and before the morning he is not. This is the portion of them that spoil us, and the lot of them that rob us.—Isaiah 17:14.

THE OBSERVATORY

W. D. LAMBETH

RISK OF FAILURE

Quoting The Literary Digest: "Something worse than failure may be the alternative to success when the representatives of five nations meet in Washington on November 11 to discuss the limitation of armaments. For it the twenty men who will speak for the United States, Great Britain, France, Japan and Italy fail to reach an agreement, some editorial observers aver, they will leave the world in a far more desperate position than if the conference had never been held. The failure of this portentous experiment could 'sow throughout the earth the dragon's teeth of distrust,' so declares the San Francisco Argonaut, which is convinced that this 'will not be a case where it was better to have tried and failed than not to have tried at all.' In explanation of its assertion that 'the results incident to failure will be disastrous and unequivocal,' this California weekly predicts that if the nations that convene to disarm are unsuccessful, 'they will part to arm; and the suspicious, excited by the failure will increase the extent and the rapidity of subsequent armament.' This, it declares, is 'a great and obvious peril.'"

The above sums up the consensus of American opinion in regard to the coming conference. The aggregation to assemble in this country November 11 is the strongest that has ever come together in any international discussion. The responsibility rests upon those men taking part in the conference and as the Kansas City Star says in regard to the men who are to represent this country: "There is ground for confidence that they will do their best to solve the problems confronting the country without sacrificing its essential interests. Their record indicates that they will not be satisfied with pleasant words, where real guarantees are necessary; that they will not pledge the nation to a course involving solitary unpreparedness in a world where unpreparedness has been an invitation to aggressive action on the part of the unscrupulous."

THE KU KLUX KLAN

In the dark days following the Civil War, or in the days of reconstruction from that terrible struggle, the negroes urged by lawless white men went wild. No mother was safe in her home without her husband to defend her, no daughter was safe unless she was under the protection of her father or brother. At times, even then, they were torn away, assaulted and murdered. A mystic band of men was organized to combat this evil and this band was called the Ku Klux Klan. It did save the South and there is no doubt but that it served one of the most noble of purposes—for that reason alone it deserves our most careful consideration as it has come to life again. The consensus of opinion now seems to condemn it. It is said that there is no need for it in the present age and if there is no need it should and will die. There is a law of God and Nature that will let nothing live unless there is a need for it to serve.

William G. Shepherd in Leslie's Weekly writes: "There are districts of the United States as lawless and as liable to witness horrible happenings as any district in Russia or Italy or upset Germany or topsy-turvy Poland, or any other European land which we Americans look on as suffering from after-war lawlessness." The same writer recently returned from the undisciplined lands he mentions. The Baltimore Evening Sun calls the Klan "A new Camorra, in spite of its high-sounding principles and professions, it is based on some of the most despicable of human passions, with aims and objects no less vile." The New York World, sponsor of the most extensive of the recent attacks, calls it "a super-government by irresponsible heads of a secret oathbound order," and declares that since "only by law can defiance be curbed, such a rule within a rule can not continue the advice of the county and district attorneys."

Such things as the above are continually being said against the Klan by the press and it seems that the press is against the Klan almost as a whole. Mrs. Taylor, a prominent member of the Klan, makes a statement in the World: "The thing that the Klan has to fight hardest is the mob violence that has been resorted to by men in white, masquerading as Klansmen."

NOVEMBER ELEVENTH

November 11, Armistice Day, has been re-named "Disarmistice Day". This name was given to that day when it was arranged for the Conference of Limitation of Armaments to be held on that date. That date will be the third anniversary of the end of the Great War and as The Christian Century declares, "it should be a High Day in the Christian calendar." The Christian Herald says that it "would welcome a united call to prayer from the World's Evangelical Alliance, the Federal Council of Churches, and all church bodies in all parts of the world in a united petition that God's presence might be felt by any who have a part in the deliberations of the conference." Other papers have said that ministers of the gospel of Christ should preach everywhere "Peace on Earth" with the greatest of emphasis.

The Christian Century urges that on November 11: "Every church bell in America should ring and every whistle in the length and breadth of the land blow, at the hour appointed for the opening of the conference on disarmament at Washington. On that day—even though a week-day—Christian-minded people should assemble in churches for prayer and song. Schools and courts and legislatures should adjourn. Work should be stopt, as far as possible, during the hour of assembly, that the people might give themselves to worship and reflection. Street cars could well halt for five minutes—a concession which has been granted by transportation corporations on more than one occasion of far less importance than this."

FURNISHINGS FOR THE CHILDREN'S HOME

I am publishing a list of the contributions that have been sent in at different times for supplying the "Baby Home" with quilts, sheets, and many other articles. The reason this has not been published was because of the fact we did not want to open the bundles till we opened up the building for the children.

However, if you find that we have made errors, please write us and we will be glad to make the proper correction. All money contributions have already been reported from time to time and do not appear in this list.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: We like to read the children's letters in THE SUN. We think the children at the Orphanage must have such a good time playing with each other.

Two little girls from Barium Springs Orphanage visited near us this summer and we enjoyed hearing them tell about their Orphanage.

There is no Christian church near us so we attend the Presbyterian. We each send a dime for the Orphanage.—Katherine and Reuben Morgan, University, N. C.

I am real glad you wrote a letter for the Corner this week. I believe all the little cousins have been off on a vacation. We hope all of them will begin to write now and keep the Corner full. I wish you could come to see us sometime, and see all our little folks.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: My birthday was in this month, so mother gave me the Sunday eggs for this month, and I am sending the money to the orphans. I am writing this myself and will let you guess my age.—"Mildred Auman, Steeds, N. C."

This is fine. It is a good little girl that will give the Sunday eggs for the benefit of the little orphans. You must come to see us and see all the little tots in our "Baby Home". I guess you to be seven years old. How much do I miss it?—"Uncle Charley."

CHURCH NEWS

A POUNDING

On September 18, at the close of the eleven o'clock service at Christiana, when we went to our buggy to start home we found it loaded with sugar, coffee, lard, dried fruit, canned fruit, and many other things that are very useful in the home.

The good ladies had gathered together and were laughing because of our glad surprise and also because they thought we would have to walk home. However, we managed to find a place to ride.

When we reached home about dark we were a happy little family unloading and looking through the various articles, all for which we are very thankful, and pray God's richest blessings upon each one who had a part in this service.

DAMASCUS POUNDS PASTOR

I desire to express my sincere thanks to the good people of Damascus, Gates County, N. C., for the nice box of provisions sent by express to Mrs. Earp and myself last week. It certainly does make a pastor feel good to know that he is remembered in this way by the people to whom he ministers. May God abundantly bless all those who have taken part in this token of brotherly love, and help me as their pastor to prove the more worthy.

B. J. EARP.

FROM REV. J. S. CARDEN'S FIELD

Mt. Hermon—Our meeting began at Mt. Hermon, Wake County, the fifth Sunday in July. The Lord gave us a good meeting. There were four accessions to the church.

Bethel—On the first Sunday in August the meeting began at Bethel. Rev. J. F. Apple did the preaching and as a result of the meeting seven joined the church. Brother Apple is a good preacher and a consecrated man. May the Lord bless him in his work.

Hank's Chapel—The fourth Sunday in August was the beginning of our revival at Hank's Chapel. Brother C. Rowland did the preaching and a good meeting was the result. There was one addition to the church. To God we give all the glory and honor.

J. S. CARDEN.

ELM AVENUE, PORTSMOUTH, VA.

An evangelistic campaign of two weeks which was conducted by Evangelist George D. Eastes has just closed at this church. The entire community was awakened to a greater spiritual interest. I never saw the Spirit of God manifested any stronger than in these meetings. On one occasion practically every unsaved person in the audience came out confessing the Lord Jesus. The church was crowded from the very first night of the meetings to the close. Many people were turned away because of the lack of room.

Such preaching as Brother Eastes does will stir any church to the depths of its most indolent member. His sermons are thoroughly practical and fraught with Gospel truth and abound in beautiful word pictures that grip the hearts of all who hear him. These wonderful sermons of his are delivered in such a forceful manner that they hold an audience spell-bound. Besides his power as a preacher, Bro. Eastes has such a sweet Christian spirit that he wins the hearts of all who know him.

Associated with Bro. Eastes is Frederick J. Balmond of Philadelphia, a singer of international reputation, who sings the "Old, old story" from the depths of a pure heart. His solos make impassioned appeals to his audiences. He is an adept at getting others to sing and is especially fine in work with children. He is so kind and considerate of other people's feelings, especially of the old folks, that he makes hosts of friends. He has a wonderful set of pictures and a machine with which he gives illustrated song services that are very impressive and attract large numbers of people.

Mrs. Eastes did most of the playing. She plays as only a few people can and received the highest praise from the audiences.

There were eighty-one confessions during the meetings, many for the first time and others who renewed their allegiance to the Lord Jesus. We consider this a great victory since only a few people could be reached as the church seats about 350 and as usual most of those were professing Christians. Thirty persons have expressed a desire to join the local church and others will join the different churches of the community.

I feel that Bro. Eastes and his helpers are among the very best to be found for their work. They go from our church to Berne, Ind., where they begin a schedule in the middle Western States lasting up till about next Easter with only a few vacant dates. Bro. Eastes tells me that he has not a single engagement with any church of our denomination. What a shame it is that our people will not use this wonderful man of God! Many churches hesitate because of the financial end of such a campaign as Bro. Eastes conducts, but if our church which is just a mission point can raise by free will offerings nearly four hundred dollars for the support of such a meeting no other church need hesitate.

Much to my regret I must leave this work to return to Yale Divinity School. I have enjoyed the work here for the summer and have learned to love the people with whom I have labored. I feel that some good has been accomplished during my stay. A Ladies' Aid and Christian Endeavor Society have been organized. There is here a Sunday school of about ninety members which gives one Sunday's offering to the Christian Orphanage each month and one to missions. Several families in the community who hold their membership with Christian churches elsewhere have promised to join in with the work here. Rev. H. W. Dowding has consented to preach for this congregation until Conference convenes in November.

Where the Christian Sun Office is Located

The Office of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is located in this building. This is the Office Supply Department of the Burlington Printing Company, located just across the street from its main plant shown on page 16 of this issue. The editorial room of THE SUN is upstairs, in the building shown above, in front and is shaded by the extended awning shown in the picture. The office is 17x22 feet, handsomely finished, and furnished with the latest model office furniture. On the lower floor, in the rear, is located the business office of THE SUN where the subscription accounts are kept, books, Bibles, and church supplies are on sale.

The picture shown on page 16 is where THE SUN is printed. The plant is equipped with modern machinery manned by workmen of the first magnitude. The fine form in which THE SUN appears each week is a testimony of this.

LIFTING HIM UP

THE EDITOR

And I, if I be lifted up from earth, will draw all men unto me: John 12:32

THESE are the words of Christ, and they were spoken a short time before the hour of His crucifixion. The words are missionary. It is significant to note that he said all men—not certain countries or certain peoples—but all countries and all people.

But before He can lift up all men from the earth He Himself must be lifted up. "If I be lifted up," is the conditional clause. We must lift Him up before He can lift others up. While his power is independent of us, yet this thing of lifting men up from a sinful life to a life of hope is one big program placed into the hands of men. Every follower of the Lord is a missionary, each should lift Him up so that He may be able to draw others unto Him. Are we lifting the Christ up from earth?

THE CONFERENCES

THE Conferences are now meeting and they face difficult problems. They face problems that are not easy to solve. The churches have reached what they consider a climax during the past few years. Finances have not been hard to raise and about all churches have gone to Conference with apportionments paid in full. The conditions have changed. Seasons have been unusual, crops have been short and little money in circulation; business has suffered and the Church has also had to suffer. All have felt the financial depression.

The big problem before the Conferences this year will be to keep things going as they were last year. It would be a pity for any church to do less than it is able to do. It is very easy to let the work of the Church suffer when times are financially bad. But God's goodness usually comes when it is most needed, and our work for his cause and efforts in its behalf should be rendered most faithfully in the time of crisis. Let no church say that it can not so long as God is on its side.

Another difficult problem for the Conferences to work out is the supply for the churches. It is true that each local church in the Christian denomination is responsible for securing and paying its pastor, but that which concerns one church is a thing of concern of the whole Brotherhood. It is easy enough to say that the securing of a pastor is the problem of the local church—and such a remark is sticking to the letter of the church government and ignoring the spirit of the Christian Church. And the spirit of our denomination is bigger than the written government of our people.

CHURCHES AND THEIR PRINTED MATTER

IT is often remarked by those who are inclined to publicity that a Church, a denomination, is judged by its printed matter. This reference, of course, has to do only with the style and mechanical part of the printed matter and not with the literary content. The literary content, of course, is a stronger testimony than the mechanical quality.

Mr. John Clyde Oswald of New York City, is a printer of wide reputation and editor of The American Printer. Some weeks ago the Associated Advertising Clubs of the country met in Atlanta, Georgia, and at this conference Mr. Oswald addressed the Church Advertising Department and we consider his remarks well made and his advice timely. We quote from his address:

"So far as I have seen," he said, "most printing done for the church in recent years is poor in quality and insufficient in quantity. We build fine edifices, equip them splendidly, employ the best talent to conduct the work of the church organization, and then buy printing where it is cheapest or is contributed by those with mistakenly benevolent intentions.

"It may not be good morals to put the best apples at the top of the barrel, but it is also not good business procedure to put the worst ones there. Printing for the church should be so superior as to represent, not misrepresent, the church.

"Printing in one form or another is often the first point of contact between the outsider and the church. If it be proper in the attempt to widen the scope of church service, to go out into the highways and byways and beckon non-churchgoers to come into the fold, it should also be proper to make the effort in the best and most effective way.

"And as to quantity, printing for the church is usually restricted to the smallest amount that will go around. A business house that would confine the distribution of its publicity to its present customers without thought of future customers would soon have no customers. The department stores and other business enterprises fill the newspapers with their announcements, load the mails with their printed matter, keep in constant operation a follow-up system that omits no opportunity to make a favorable impression—all to the end of making constant additions to its clientele. Conducted on any other basis, modern business enterprises would shrivel up and disappear."

AN ANNUAL CALL THAT IS WORTHY

EACH year at this season there comes a request to THE CHRISTIAN SUN that is worthy and one that has never escaped our attention. The call is from the publicity committee of the North Carolina Orphan Association. The committee seeks to place before the reading public a Thanksgiving appeal for each orphanage in the State. This appeal is in behalf of the orphan child, regardless of where he or she is.

The committee asks for one day's income from every citizen of the State, on or near Thanksgiving Day. The income of one day out of 365 is reasonable, and not one person in a hundred is unable to contribute of their income to that extent—and all can aid in bringing the matter to the attention of the public. Those who respond are asked to forward the amount direct to the orphanage of his or her choice. Or this may be done through church, Sunday school, community organization or fraternal order.

The publicity committee, Mr. M. L. Shipman, Chairman, handles no funds. The committee labors with love and devotion that this important matter may be known to the general public, so that all responses may be sent to whatever orphanage is chosen.

THE SUN is personally acquainted with the work of the Association and not only commends its efforts in behalf of the homeless children of the State, but entertains the hope that those who read this article may set aside some day's wage between now and Thanksgiving for the benefit of some orphanage.

A NATIONAL DISARMAMENT ENDORSEMENT

A MOVEMENT to obtain the endorsement of the objects of the disarmament conference by every Protestant church in the country has been launched by a representative committee of clergymen and laymen under the auspices of the Christian Herald. Efforts will be made to have the minister and board of every local church, as representatives of the entire congregation, sign the following resolution:

Whereas President Harding has called a Conference on Disarmament to be composed of the Principal Allied and Associated Powers and China, to be held in Washington, D. C., on November 11, 1921, and

Whereas the Christian people of the United States of America of all denominations are by their profession of belief in the teaching and Spirit of Jesus Christ committed to the policy of World Peace and to Disarmament as a means to the accomplishment of that goal; Therefore

Be it Resolved: That we, the pastor, officers and members of church, do hereby express our hearty approval of the action of President Harding and pledge to him our support in every effort to bring about World Peace.

In addition every pastor is requested to devote at least a part of each service on Sunday, November 6, to the conference called for that week.

CHURCH NEWS

WE are giving this week more than the usual space to church news. We are always glad to accommodate whatever church news that may reach us, regardless of the space that it may take. The brethren everywhere are interested in the deeds and doings of the local churches.

It is fitting that we should state here that church news is printed near the back of the paper, not because of any minor importance of it, but because general contributions and departmental work of the Church are more important than the news from the local churches. As a rule, reported activities of a local church interest only those in connection with that church—and they already know what has happened before it appears. The custom that we follow in arranging church news near the last page of the paper is followed by all Church papers that reach our office. But send the church news along—send it often. Be brief. If you will write often it will not be necessary to be lengthy.

ECHOES FROM THE BRETHREN

WE have received in person and by letter many comments on our recent editorial on "Professional Evangelism". A summary of these expressions would be about as follows, which we have from one progressive pastor: "I thank you for the editorial on 'Professional Evangelism' * * * * All that you said has happened right in my church."

The pastor whom we quote above further states that he had always held his own meetings, with the exception of one time, which meeting was held by a professional evangelist, and the outcome was much entertainment, much expense, a big offering for the evangelist with his own salary partly unpaid. This pastor declares further that his church was in worse condition after this particular meeting that was before. This pastor closes his letter as follows: "Your editorial ought to be supplemented with another and another."

A WORTHY APPEAL

We have received an appeal for assistance in behalf of a young man who is an invalid, that he may be able to purchase a wheel chair. The young man is twenty-one years old and has been afflicted with rheumatism from the age of fourteen. We have personally investigated the appeal and have been assured that the young man is forced to use a rocking chair for his comfort, instead of a wheel chair. The family is poor and unable to make the purchase. The young man's mother is a widow and her earning capacity is impaired because of poor health. If any friend or friends desire to make an offering for this purpose the Editor of THE SUN will gladly receive it and will look after the purchase of the chair. Each donation will be acknowledged and the young man's name stated in the acknowledgment.

BIBLE FOR DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

The New York Bible Society announces from its new Bible House, No. 5 East 48th Street, that word has been received from President Harding that he will be glad to accept a Bible presented by the Society for the Disarmament Conference. The Bible is beautifully bound in morocco and with large type. It is one of the finest copies of the Scriptures published and will be engrossed on the outside within a panel, as follows:

"This Bible is Presented to the Conference for Limitation of Armaments and is Dedicated to the Promotion of Good Will among the Nations by the New York Bible Society. November 11, 1921."

The Bible is now in exhibition at the Bible House, 5 East 48th Street, and will be forwarded in due time to Washington. There may be also seen Bibles in the 53 languages which the Society is daily distributing among the immigrants and all nationalities. A pamphlet giving verse of the Bible in each of these 53 languages will be presented to anyone inquiring for the same.

CONTRIBUTIONS

ELON LETTER

A GREAT deal is being said in our CHRISTIAN SUN relative to the shortage in ministers. I wish to call attention to the fact that we have more ministerial students in Elon this year than we have had in many years. The Men and Millions Forward Movement is to be directly credited with the larger part of this happy situation. One pastor, Rev. J. Lee Johnson, has sent two of his splendid young men to us.

Does this situation not suggest how we can remedy our plight? Individual pastors can lay the matter on the hearts of their young people, and the Church as a whole should undertake at a stated time each year to recruit candidates.

Does some one object that God will call His own prophets? Then lets abandon all evangelistic campaigns and quit all our personal work for the unsaved. God does call to the ministry. God does call to citizenship in the Kingdom. He is not limited in His method of calling. He frequently uses the individual Christian as the mode of approach to the young life, hesitating to know what God would have it do. He frequently uses an organized body of believers in the same way.

I am thinking now of three successful ministers, two of them in our own Church, one of them in another, to whom I was impressed to speak. They were ready for the word of encouragement and gladly dedicated their lives to the ministry. No one had ever spoken to them before, they declared. How glad I am that I followed the spirit's leadership in speaking to these splendid men. I have spoken to others. Not once have I been rebuffed and only once did the person spoken to decline to consider the matter further.

We have the same obligation to urge young people to give themselves to Christian work, as we do to urge them to enter the Christian life. We have no right to do either in our wisdom or strength.

But I have another thought too for this letter—how can we care for the pastorless churches right now? There are two ways. Call upon the ministerial students in Elon, willing to do so to take part time work. We all grant it is better for young ministers not to take pastoral work during their College days, and churches too do better when the pastor is a resident among them. Actual conditions sometimes force us to adopt measures not ideally to be commended. Such a situation now faces us. The following young men will, I think, be glad to serve the Kingdom by such service this year: R. O. Smith, Wm. Clem, H. W. May, M. T. Sorrell, W. T. Scott, Elisha Bradshaw, J. H. Dollar, H. C. Hainer, and J. T. Harrod. There may be others. Some have already accepted all the work they can. These brethren may be addressed at Elon College or I will communicate with anyone of them for any church.

The second way will be to make use of laymen, many of whom would be willing to go on occasion to a church without pastor, making no charge but expenses. The Mission Boards of each Conference should look out for this.

The main thing is for us to refuse to be discouraged. It is the Lord's work and He expects us to care for it with fidelity, earnestness, and consecrated judgment.

W. A. HARPER.

OUR VIRGINIA LETTER

SOME one asked Captain Levy of Chestnut Street, Philadelphia, how he was able to give so much and still have so much left. "Oh", said he "as I shovel out, He shovels in, and the Lord has a bigger shovel than I have." That puts the truth in a nutshell. If men will do their giving according to God's will, no doubt about it, the Lord always uses the bigger shovel. The Lord's way is always the better way—in fact the only right way.

There are some good story tellers, but the great majority are bad story tellers. What is the difference between a good story teller and a bad one? Well, there is a big difference and it is worth your attention and thought. The good story teller is recognized readily enough by the character of the stories he tells. It takes a good story teller to tell a good story, but the question naturally arises: What constitutes a good story? It is a story which is well suited to the highest and best interests of the hearers. A story that has in it nothing to do any good—good of the right kind for the occasion—is a bad story. There are people who rarely, if ever, tell a good story, and it must be because they are not good story tellers. Telling a good story is a fine showing of what the teller is in himself. The opposite is just as true, a teller of bad stories just as surely reveals himself—the character of his own inner life. There are some stories that ought never to be told to any person. Some of these are: Profane stories, irreverent stories, stories having a corrupting influence over those who hear, smutty stories, such as are unbecoming anywhere, etc. Reader, if you have been telling stories which may properly fall under any one of these classes, be sure that you do not tell one of them again at any time, or in any place.

I have heard that among us certain brethren make it a point to see that some minister, supposed not to be in their class, is "ousted" from his pastorate. Well, it may be justified, but I doubt it. To say the least, it is a dangerous practice to do such a thing. Maybe others can do it, but I would not.

Whenever I hear a person talking, and pretending to believe that the money given, for instance for the sufferers in Europe and China, is all used before it gets there, I immediately put that person down as a stingy man or woman, who is arguing against a cause, not because it is not a worthy cause, but because he wishes to have a plea for not giving. We have heard a similar plea against giving to foreign missions, and in my judgment that plea was made for the same purpose, not because foreign missions are not all right and most worthy, but because the person talking against foreign missions wishes to have an excuse for not giving, and so he puts forth that miserable plea—saying it is all spent before it gets there. I have never known of such a case. Only recently that plea was put forward against sending money to the relief of the Near East. It was claimed that the whole fund was used up by the officers managing the work of raising this fund. Dr. J. L. Benton, upon hearing that such a claim was being made, made answer, declaring that less than two per cent for all expenses in raising and handling the money was spent. Now could any sensible and reasonable man ask that the conducting of a great campaign to raise millions of dollars for the relief of the starving and the sending across the ocean and the delivery to the sufferers be less than two per cent? The man who makes such an objection is not the man who would help, if all the expenses were paid, or all given free—he is the man who does not feel willing to give at all, and for the reason that he is so stingy. There may be men and women who can not give to such calls for help, but their reason is not because the money is all spent in expenses, but for some good reason. Remember the man who refuses to give because he claims to believe the money is all used by the officers before it is ever sent to the starving, is only making a plea to justify himself in not giving to a worthy cause.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

AGAIN CALLED TO ACCOUNT

T was but yesterday that my attention was called to the editorial comment in THE SUN of September 28, 1921, in which I am called to account for what I said recently as to higher criticism being a hindrance to young men entering the ministry. The reason I did not see it from my own reading of THE SUN was the fact that at the time that issue of THE SUN came out I was away at the bedside of my sick wife, and so did not see THE SUN till a week later.

THE SUN's editor wishes me to name the institutions where, and the men who, are thus hindering young men in entering the ministry.

I am disposed to be accommodating and so I will try to grant his wish. I might have done so in the letter upon which he comments, but I naturally supposed that a well read editor needed no such information, as the facts are generally so well known. Our brother implies by his questions that the public is in the dark as to the existence of such institutions and such teachers. If the editor does not know of the existence of such institutions and such teachers, then it is my happy privilege to name some of them. He intimates that I should give the names of all of them, but I cannot name all of them and for the very good reason that I do not know them all, besides a full list would so crowd THE SUN's columns as to make it impractical, but I will meet the issue by naming several of them. Before doing so I will admit that I know of a number whom I shall not mention and for the reason that they are such clever dodgers that you cannot make them admit the facts unless they have attained such eminence through the writing of books as to have committed themselves to these dangerous ideas, known commonly as "higher criticism."

But to the task the editor has given me.

The University of Chicago is so well known as the hot bed of higher criticism that to most men who read no proof is needed. A former president of said university, Professor W. R. Harper, was one of the most prominent of the higher critics of his day. Prof. Geo. B. Foster was another such teacher in the same institution. I do not know whether he is still connected with it or not. Prof. Willett is another such teacher and is at this time still connected with that institution. He is a prolific writer and has often shown his views in that direction.

Union Theological Seminary of New York City is another school for the training of young men for the ministry where such teaching is allowed. Do you ask for the proof? A former president of that seminary, Prof. Briggs, (now deceased) was a most aggressive teacher along the line of higher criticism. Prof. McGiffert, if I mistake not is now president of that institution. He is a strong advocate of higher criticism.

The Crozier Baptist Theological Seminary at Upland, Pa., allows such teaching in its halls, and its president, Prof. Evans, is one of the most aggressive of such teachers. Prof. Driver of Oxford University, England is also such a teacher. Prof. Robert Moffett of the same institution is a teacher who delights to work along the lines of the same cult. There are no doubt literally hundreds of others, both in these, and other institutions, who have publicly espoused the cause of higher criticism.

If THE SUN's editor does not know of these facts, he may be excused for asking these questions, but if he does know of them, then why such questions?

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

SUFFOLK LETTER

HE most vital thing in local church work is system for a specific object. To take an offering or "basket collection" for any purpose, without naming the sum required is to defeat the undertaking. Sometimes we speak of a "free-will offering", when it is only a small collection. "A free-will offering" is an offering in addition to regular and stated offerings, given in gratitude to God for His blessings upon us. There is what one might call the necessary and regular expense in maintaining the work of the church, there is the regular benevolences of the church, and then there are opportunities beyond these for doing service in His name. The maintenance of the local church, the regular contribution to benevolences, and church institutions, should be provided for by the best system known for such work. There is one method in two parts that has proven itself the most effective in this work. The first thing, of course, is to determine what will be necessary to meet the demands upon the church for the year. That is sometimes called the "budget". The conference requirement, pastor's salary, music, fuel and lights, whatever is necessary to meet the church expenses for the year may be included in the "budget". This will differ in its items according to local conditions. In one place it would mean a paid organist, musical director, sexton, insurance, etc. The local conditions will determine what is necessary in a financial way, to care for the expense for one year. The second thing is to provide for the collection of the money pledged by the members of the church. This assumes that a canvass of the members has been made, and that in this canvass the members are acquainted with the total sum required to meet the obligations of the church. The best methods yet tested for raising or collecting church funds is the envelope system. It is best because it gets the money and because it keeps the books straight. There are two kinds of envelopes; the duplex and the single pocket envelope. The duplex is two envelopes in one, and they are torn apart and one part goes to the church treasurer; the other to the treasurer for benevolences. But in the smaller churches with only one treasurer, the single pocket envelope is cheaper and less trouble. The printing on this envelope is the same as on the duplex envelope; on one end "for current expenses" and on the other end "for benevolences". Payments should be made according to the time of regular services in the local church, where a church has full-time preaching the weekly payment is the best; where a church has monthly preaching, monthly payments should be made; where bi-monthly services are held, bi-monthly payments should be made.

There are two good reasons why this method is the best known. It keeps the obligation before the members. The package of envelopes is a reminder. It ends the year with expenses paid and conference money in the church treasury. It ends the year with good feeling. The old method of "pay at the end of the year", and "get up the conference money", just before conference made people feel sore. Nothing is so successful as success, and nothing is so satisfactory as duty promptly done. Now is the time for the local church to estimate how much money it will take to meet the expenses for next conference year, get the members to pledge what they will give, order the envelopes and put the requisite number—52 envelopes where church has preaching every Sunday; 12 envelopes where the church has monthly preaching place in the hands of the members and then pray for results. The Lord Jesus said: "It is more blessed to give than to receive." W. W. STALEY

REV. J. W. WELLONS WRITES AGAIN OF HIS VACATION

LEFT Raleigh August 28, for Franklinton, N. C., my old home where I lived nearly twenty-five years. Rev. B. F. Black met me at the train and took me to Brother A. L. Allen's home for dinner, where I met so many old friends. It was a pleasure to greet them. Many of the old people have passed away, but their children and grandchildren filled their places.

Brother and Sister R. H. Utley offered me a home while I remained in Franklinton. For over twenty years I owned and lived on the lot they now own. All the original houses, office, barn, trees had been removed, and others put in their places.

Here Brother Black came for me. I met Sister Black and the children—and what a pleasant evening we spent together!

Next morning, being fourth Sunday, we headed for Pope's Chapel, one of my old appointments, and the present church building I had erected. I preached there for twenty years. Here we met many old friends and had a pleasant service. By the courtesy of an old friend, Jen Green, I was taken through the rain on a Ford back to Franklinton, where I stopped with Brother Utley. A phone message came, asking me to preach for Rev. Brother Cotten at the Methodist Episcopal church that night. Next morning, I rested during the forenoon. Then Brother Black took me to R. R. Homes' who is now reaching his ninetieth milestone, and what a pleasant afternoon we spent with him, his family, and friends.

On our return, we shook hands and prayed with those with whom we met. The next day Brother Black took me over in the neighborhood of Liberty church to Brother B. F. Ayseue's where I found him and wife. His father and mother were converted and added to the church with his five brothers and one sister, and baptized by me. It was so pleasant to meet his family and old friends that I had not seen for a long time. Next morning, they took me to see Brother George Dickey and wife, Baptist friends of mine, of long standing. I found Brother Dickey an invalid with rheumatism. They have two children—one married, and lives nearby. The other one is a practicing physician. What a pleasure it was to me to pray for him and wife, in his affliction.

From here I went to Brother Dick Ayseue's, where I met so many dear friends; so many of them my spiritual children. Here Brother Utley met me to take me back to Franklinton, and after spending a while in talking and praying, a little after three o'clock we started back by the way of Louisburg, shaking hands with the families living on the road to Louisburg. Time would not allow us to stop, only to shake their hands. Just before reaching Franklinton, we stopped to shake hands with a dear sister who was a daughter of Wiley J. Winston; and some of my best friends, when I lived out near them.

Friday morning we spent calling on old friends, and Brother Utley took me to see Brother J. C. Winston where we took dinner and attended a union meeting in the town, conducted by Christian, Baptist, and Methodist ministers. They were having a fine meeting. One family the grandmother accepted Christ the day before, on her eighty-first birthday, with her daughter-in-law, and one more from their home. I had prayed so many prayers for this dear sister, when my hair and hers were of natural color. I buried her parents, both in the same grave, long years past.

While at Franklinton, I visited the new Christian church. It has a fine basement, well laid off in rooms for the various classes. Here I preached for them, and I want to say, that I was so proud to do so. This church, located on a plot of ground that I long owned and two beautiful rows of maples of large size, that I had planted there. Brother Black has done a fine work in arranging this bungalow building to be used until they can finish the entire building, and not a dollar owing on what they have done. Brother Black deserves great credit for this work. It had been started before, and the material had been lost, by not moving forward. They will have a splendid building when completed, but renders them faithful service in its present condition.

On Saturday, Brother Utley took me back to Youngsville, where I attended the meeting that night, and we had a good meeting. I spent the night with Brother Robert Underwood. Next morning found me at Oak Level. I had this church built also.

Sunday, I preached for them at Oak Level, baptized a sweet little girl for Brother Black, and we had a delightful service, shaking hands and preaching to so many old friends. We had dinner with Brother J. C. Winston, an old friend and Brother. Here Brother Black took me back to Franklinton where Brother Utley was in waiting to take me up near Creedmore to Brother Alviss Catlett's for the night. Here Brother Utley left me, and I was under so many obligations to him and wife, for their kindness to me, as he, and Brother Black took me just any where I wanted to go. And how grateful to them I am for their kindness. Oh, what a pleasure to me and all, for these happy greetings. Brother Catlett took me to Creedmore where I shook the hands of many, among them, Mrs. M. L. Winston, whose husband has gone on before. Here I moved on a belated train for Durham, but they waited for me and an hour later, I was at home again. Had been well all the time, but returned home exceedingly tired.

THE BULLETIN

Rev. L. L. Wyrick, Elon College, N. C., informs us that he is open for work on the second and third Sundays for the coming conference year.

Dr. A. B. Kendall, who has been in charge of the work undertaken in Washington, D. C., has accepted a call to Springfield, Ohio, where he goes November 1.

The Alabama Conference is in session this week at Corinth church. Dr. G. O. Lankford, of Burlington, and Dr. N. G. Newman, of Elon College, are in attendance from this section. There may be others.

Dr. J. P. Barrett is now at Wilson, N. C., his post office box being 636. He and Mrs. Barrett are spending some time with their daughter, Mrs. Bunn Hearne. Mrs. Barrett is not well. THE SUN family will join in prayer for her recovery.

THE SUN'S Editor was scheduled to be at Durham last Sunday, but owing to Brother Harrell's plans being changed, did not go. We accepted an invitation to address the Washington Township Sunday School Convention in session at Apple's Chapel. The weather was ideal, the audience large and the interest good. Dr. Harper spoke in the afternoon.

As stated in THE SUN some weeks ago, the school that is to be built in the far South will be located at Wadley, Alabama. The exact location in Wadley has not been decided upon. Dr. N. G. Newman, Dr. G. O. Lankford, and Mr. D. R. Fonville, have been chosen to visit Wadley Thursday of this week and decide upon the location. Drs. Newman and Lankford are already in Alabama and Brother Fonville will join them Thursday at Wadley.

We regret to announce that Mr. Watson D. Lambeth, who has been assistant in THE SUN office since June 1, has been forced to give up the position on account of his health. Mr. Lambeth has been suffering for some time with a nose and head trouble. His specialist advised him to give up office work due to its confinement. He left us last week and of his own volition. He has made a good assistant. He is accurate, painstaking, trustworthy, and sincere. He has accepted a position with the Reidsville, N. C., city schools and has entered upon the work there. THE SUN extends its best wishes to Mr. Lambeth in his every undertaking.

Who Shall Enter—Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven.—Matt. 7:21.

THE EDITOR'S EASY CHAIR

By The Editor Emeritus

(Duplicated page from The Christian Evangelist, Sept. 22, 1921)

In a former number of this paper, we mentioned the fact of having written the editor of The Christian Sun after having read his paper for some time, to please state what in his judgment are the differences which separate the religious bodies our papers respectively represent and what he thought was the hope of uniting. In The Christian Sun of August 24th the editor publishes our letter to him and some paragraphs we had written about his people, "The Christians," and his "reply" to our letter which we here print:

We have mailed Brother Garrison a copy of the Government and Principles of the Christian Church and will ask that, after reading, he tell his readers the vital difference, as he sees it, between the two branches of worshippers. We do not have at hand a copy of the principles of the Disciples. The matter of baptism is, as we see it, the main separation now. The Christian Church will baptize by immersion or sprinkling, while the Disciples adhere closely to immersion.

Union between the two bodies can come only when they are willing to acquaint themselves for the Kingdom's progress and not for denominational discussions.

Here are three questions that we desire Brother Garrison to answer: 1. What caused the Disciples to drop the name—Disciples—and take up the name "Christian", in connection with their local church? 2. When did this happen? 3. Why is it that so many Disciples are not, seemingly, supporting one of their number, Dr. Peter Ainslie, in his Christian union efforts, though the Disciples have union as a main plank in their platform?

It is not necessary to comment here on what our brother calls "the main separation" between us, further than to say that in our judgment, the difference lies further back, and has to do with the fundamental principles underlying the two movements. The reading, as far as possible, of the literature which the editor of the Christian Sun has kindly sent us has revealed to us a real difference in the scope, spirit and guiding principles of the two movements. At the same time it has impressed upon us anew the saintly character and the moral heroism of the leaders in the origin, and organization of the "Christian Church," who stood for some of the same principles that our own leaders contended for, and whose work, as continued by their successors must be reckoned among the forces making for righteousness and a purer Christianity.

But our brother editor has asked us to state "the vital difference between the two branches of worshippers" as we see it.

1. While both movements recognize the evil of denominationalism of a divided church, and the need of Christian unity, in order to the world's conversion, Alexander Campbell and his co-laborers seem to have gone into the matter of unity more deeply and inquired the cause of these divisions and the remedy for them. True, our brethren of the "Christian Church" did drop denominational names and discard human creeds claiming "The Bible and the Bible alone" as their "only rule of faith and practice." But the Disciples of Christ have gone beyond that. They have analyzed the Bible into its separate parts, recognizing the dispensational lines so distinctly drawn therein, with its Old and New Testaments, and the vast significance of this division in its bearing on Christ's personality and mission, and on the nature and mission of the Church. A new era, a new and perfect revelation of God, a dispensation of the Holy Spirit, the entrance into our humanity of a divine Personality, who came to show us the Father, and to lay the foundation, in his life, suffering and resurrection of a divine organism through which He should work for the world's conversion. This divine Personality is, of course, the object of that faith that brings men into right relations to Him and to His Father. Hence it was an essential condition of unity to restore that ancient creed. He is the all-sufficient and the only sufficient creed of His Church, the non-recognition of which has brought about, or has been a potent cause of bringing about the divided condition of the Church.

In the next place, the religious world, one hundred years ago, was in a very foggy state of mind concerning the New Testament terms of salvation, or the steps into Christ's Church. When the writer was a boy it was the popular understanding, in most religious bodies, that a period of mourning and mental anguish of greater or less duration must precede any genuine conversion. Hence the "mourners' bench" was deemed an important if not an essential condition of a revival. It was a most valuable contribution which Mr. Campbell and his co-laborers made to the progress of Christianity when they pointed out that we were not left in the dark concerning so important a matter as conversion but that the New Testament—Christ's will—contained definite instruction as to how the alien sinner might become a citizen of the Kingdom of God. On the first Pentecost following Christ's resurrection—the birthday of the Church and the beginning of the Christian era—Peter, to whom Christ had given the keys of the Kingdom (Matt. 16:15-18) said to those who had been convicted by his sermon and the outpouring of the Spirit that Jesus was indeed the Christ, and had cried out in their new-found faith asking what they should do to be saved, "Repent ye, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ unto the remission of your sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." (Acts 2:37-38.) Is it any wonder that "they that received his word were baptized, and there were added unto them in that day about three thousand souls?" The steps which their faith in Christ required to bring them into the company of the saved were stated definitely and there is not the slightest evidence that the meaning of either repentance or baptism was not understood. To have re-proclaimed Peter's original announcement of the terms of pardon through Christ was to render a serviece to Christ's cause which history will not underestimate.

We might mention other features of the work of the Disciples, such as emphasizing the Gospel as God's power (dynamite) for the conversion of the world, versus any mysterious power miraculously exerted; man's active agency, not his passivity in his conversion; the necessity of obedience to Christ, not as meriting salvation, but as manifesting our willingness to accept it, by grace through faith. But our space forbids.

Brother Riddle's "three questions" puzzle us. We know nothing of the "dropping" of the name to which he refers and so far as we know Dr. Ainslie is in "good standing and full fellowship" with all his brethren, though they may not agree with all his opinions, as they do not all endorse mine. But that is another characteristic of the Disciples! We can differ and still love one another.

NEW PROGRAMS

Societies desiring the new programs based on the new study books can secure them from Mrs. Emma Powers, Dayton, Ohio, for fifty cents per dozen. While the study books are the basis for these programs, yet for those who desire to make a study of the books, it will be necessary to have study classes.

These books have been planned with much care to meet the needs of our societies and we should make the best use possible of them. The books can be had from Dayton or THE CHRISTIAN SUN office. The Literature Superintendent of each society should secure the books for those who desire them as early as possible.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE AT DAMASCUS

The difficulty of reaching Damascus church early enough on Friday, the 28th makes it necessary for those who come by rail to go on the 27th. The train leaves Suffolk about six p. m. and will put those who go there in time for an evening session which the program committee is endeavoring to arrange for. It will be necessary for all those who expect entertainment over night to inform Mrs. J. E. Corbitt, Sunbury, N. C., of the fact in order that she may be able to provide entertainment.

It is hoped that each society is putting forth a great effort to secure the amount of its pledges. If every society does this there will be falling off and we will reach our financial goal of $5,500.

Mrs. C. H. R.

WOMAN'S MEETING AT DAMASCUS

Our women at Damascus are anxious that we may have a good representation at our conference on the twenty-seventh and twenty-eighth. There will be a program on the evening of the twenty-seventh, followed by a morning and afternoon session the next day. Those who go by rail can leave Suffolk about 5:30 or 6:00. Returning, the train will stop near the church for the convenience of the Conference. All who want entertainment for Thursday night should inform Mrs. J. E. Corbitt, Sunbury, N. C.

As to representation, the president of each local society, the superintendent of Young People, the superintendent of Cradle Roll and the superintendent of Literature are ex officio members of the Woman's Conference. In addition to these, each Society is entitled to a delegate for each ten dollars paid into the treasury. We hope that each society may have a good representation. We hope to give the program in next week's issue.

A word to the district superintendents. You will be expected to give a report of the work in your district, number of Societies, how many new ones during the year and the general outlook, with a brief report of your Rally Day.

HEATING PLANT NEEDED

We are having beautiful weather but still dry. We have been doing our best to get some land ready to put in our wheat crop but the ground has been so hard and dry that it has been impossible to break any land except where we had corn or beans. Owing to the extreme dry weather, we will not get in as much wheat as we had intended to sow.

Our children are all in school and doing nicely. We have offered a prize of one dollar to each one at the end of the month who make a general average of ninety-five on all their studies. We have a bright crowd of children and we expect will have to call on the Board of Trustees to back us up, as we have been paying this out of our own pocket for the past two years. They are all making an effort to win the prize and we hope all will win. It makes the little fellows happy to bring in their report with a general average of ninety-five on it. It places a very happy smile on their faces and they enjoy getting the dollar.

Winter time is almost here and to get ready for the winter is one of the most expensive seasons of the year for us. Shoes, clothing, hats and caps all to buy, makes our bills run up. We truly hope the churches and Sunday schools will make their offerings as large as possible so we may meet all bills and not have to be embarrassed.

In the history of our work here, we have never had so many applications. Two and three new applications nearly every day. We can easily handle one hundred children now, if we had a heating plant in the new building and money to pay the expense. It really seems to me that our denomination could support one hundred children and keep money enough in the bank to pay all bills at the end of the month. I hardly see how we will get along in the new building this winter without a heating plant in the new building, as it will be dangerous as well as very inconvenient to keep the little tots warm around a fire place. A heating plant will cost us $1,800.00. WHO WILL BE THE FIRST PERSON TO SEND US A CHECK FOR $100.00 TO PUT IT IN? IF SOME LITTLE TOT SHOULD FALL IN THE FIRE AND GET BURNED WE WOULD ALWAYS FEEL THAT THE CHURCH COULD HAVE PREVENTED IT BY PUTTING IN A HEATING PLANT.

Dr. Jennings S. Lincoln announces that he has opened an office at 53 Church Street, Montclair, New Jersey. Office hours: 9-10:30 A. M.; 1:30 to 3:00 P. M., and by appointment. Telephone, Montclair 269.

GREETINGS TO DR. W. S. LONG

Dr. W. S. Long, Chapel Hill, N. C., is next to the oldest minister in our Southern work. ("Uncle" Wellons is the oldest, he being in his ninety-sixth year). Dr. Long is also one of the oldest educators in the State. He began his ministry and teaching career before the war of the sixties. He is still young in spirit and active as a man of fifty. On October 17 he will begin his teaching for this year. On October 22 he will be eighty-two years of age. THE SUN has gathered this information without Dr. Long's knowledge. THE SUN takes pleasure in extending to Dr. Long the greetings of the entire Brotherhood. We salute you, our veteran of the Cross! Happiness be your part and portion during many years yet that you richly deserve.

Words are all right, but there is something that is better. Let us do honor to whom honor is due. Let us remember Dr. Long on his 82nd birthday by a greeting of some kind. Many, no doubt, will desire to make it more than a greeting, and here is THE SUN's sanction to that—also the assurance that ours will be more than a sanction on that day.

TWO LETTERS

In view of the article that is being reproduced on pages 8 and 9 it is in order that we quote the following letters:

"Dear Brother Riddle:

"Your kind letter of recent date was duly received. I note in THE CHRISTIAN SUN the publication of my letter and your comment on same. In my last week's "Easy Chair" I have complied with your request for a statement of our position and difference. It will probably not be printed before next week, as I have to write two weeks ahead. I hope it will be satisfactory. Make any comment or criticism you think proper. Perfect candor is not inconsistent with Christian fraternity. The things we hold in communion are vastly more important than those in which we differ. We are brethren.

"J. H. GARRISON.

"Los Angeles, Cal., Sept., 12, 1921."

"Dear Brother Riddle:

"I read with much interest the labored attempt of the Editor Emeritus of The Christian Evangelist to answer your questions. I am sending him a copy of the editorial on "Christians and Disciples" in this week's issue of The Herald—it was printed before I saw his article. He certainly makes a poor out at answering your questions. The fact is that the Disciples will have to go all the way with us or give up their particular plea for union of Christ's followers.

CHURCH NEWS

MT. CARMEL AND BETHLEHEM

Mt. Carmel—The week following first Sunday in September revival services were held in Mt. Carmel Christian church, Walters, Va. Rev. O. D. Poythress delivered touching and stirring sermons in a very forceful and impressive manner, and sang several songs that the people greatly enjoyed. He has a fine tenor voice. The church was well filled at both afternoon and night services. Miss Essie Johnson and the pastor helped with special music, and the whole congregation joined heartily in the regular songs. Services closed Friday afternoon with fifteen additions to the church membership, and a general consecration of all church members.

Bethlehem—One of the greatest revivals in the history of the Bethlehem Christian church closed Friday night, September 16. Rev. H. H. Butler delivered very impressive and inspiring sermons in words that convicted and converted. The meeting was successful and well attended from the beginning. Friday, Brother Butler having to be absent, the pastor preached two sermons; the latter, because of its nature and manner of delivery and results, will long be remembered by both pastor and people. That night services closed with twenty-eight members having been received into the church and a general spiritual awakening in the whole church. The following greatly helped with special music: Mrs. A. D. Brinkley, Mrs. Ray Saunders, Mrs. E. T. Cotten and pastor, all from Suffolk; assisting at the piano were: Mrs. I. W. Johnson, Miss Irene Cotten, Mrs. E. T. Cotten, and Miss Nina Griggs. Good music helps wonderfully in revival work; and it was there.

FRANKLINTON MISSION

Franklinton, N. C.

When I returned from Sunny France, the North Carolina Conference had a job waiting. November 1, 1920, found us settled nicely, ready for work.

The work here was started by Bro. Clements, with eleven members. Rev. G. J. Green took charge November 1, 1918. On our arrival we found still intact the faithful eleven. We lost four by letter, took in ten; present membership, therefore, is sixteen. We made friends of the town; put in duplex envelopes; took in about $400.00 for current expenses the first year. The organization had promised $150.00 on salary; they paid $300.00, thus relieving the Mission Board of $150.00 of the $300.00 obligation on salary for the year.

This year the church has paid (and forgot it) $350.00 on salary. Last year we (three of us are members) paid $40.00 to Orphanage; this year $85.00. Our Ladies Aid Society is a wonder. This society is one and a half years old and has raised about $350.00. The members are an inspiration to the pastor and have furnished the church basement.

The fifth Sunday in May, 1921, was our Red Letter day. Dr. W. A. Harper was the orator, and two great addresses are still lingering in our hearts; the church was filled, the town turned out en masse. The basement has a seating capacity of 300, we have 250 chairs, 100 song books, an organ and $118.00 Communion set (through THE SUN Office). We have a soap-box pulpit set, made by the pastor, but covered with dark goods; electric lights; city water; the one cool place in summer is our "Dugout", as we are five feet in the ground.

We have preaching first and third Sunday nights, and fifth Sunday at 11:00 A. M. and 8:00 P. M.

Our Baptist brethren have no service first and third Sundays; Baptist and Methodist close on fifth Sunday and worship with us.

Prayer meetings Thursday night, the average attendance being thirty-two. I have preached to and for our little membership thirty-five sermons in the two years.

The other churches opened their doors and hearts to us, and up until recently they furnished Communion set, wine and bread for us. We alternated between the Baptist and Methodist churches.

The following figures are for the information of all concerned. First we found a discouraged little band of eleven, also a $500.00 note in bank. We launched our canvass for funds and put on paper in good subscriptions in Franklinton $8,123.47 The Mission Board pledged us 7,500.00 Giving us a total of $15,623.47 for a working basis.

We spent on church $5,076.11 Paid bank note 500.00

Total $5,576.11

We collected in cash on local subscription $2,813.72 The Mission Board paid us 2,800.00

Total cash $5,613.72

Balance in bank (building fund) $ 37.61

Balance due from local subscription 6,309.65

Balance due from Mission Board 4,700.00

Total $11,009.65

This asset forms a foundation on which to work when the time comes to go on with the church.

Our contractor assures us that we saved from six to eight thousand dollars by not trying to complete the church at the time of high prices.

It is not my business to comment on the loss of cement and lumber, which will run around $1,000, on the effort to build before we took charge.

While doing the above work, we have kept up with five country churches, where four Cradle Rolls, three Missionary Societies, two Young People's Societies have been organized; over two hundred different homes visited, and two hundred sermons preached; conducted twenty-two funerals and assisted in eight, and performed five marriage ceremonies. Conversions 62; members received 97; baptized 72.

The people everywhere have been kind to us. We have been pounded to the extent of $231.60, and $300.00 given by the members on our automobile.

I tendered my resignation, and have accepted a call to Wolfeboro, N. H., where I hope to take up the work the first of November.

UNION, (ALAMANCE)

The fourth Sunday in September was a busy, and I think a very helpful day at Union, Alamance.

We had Sunday school at 10:00 A. M., and preaching at 11:00. The audience was large and very attentive at the preaching hour. At 3:00 P. M. the Young People's Missionary Society held its regular meeting with a special Porto Rico program. Miss Lucy Eldredge and Miss Alice Barrett were present and made interesting and helpful talks which were much enjoyed and appreciated.

At 7:00 P. M., the Willing Workers had a very enjoyable and instructive exercise. They had an excellent program and it was well executed. The lessons taught presented missionary calls and opportunities that appealed to both young and old. It was a good service.

Those in charge of the Young People's Society and of the Willing Workers are to be congratulated upon the success attending their efforts. Members of these societies are doing a good work and they are deeply interested.

The pastor was present at each of these meetings and made brief talks. He also was present an hour or two at a township Sunday School Convention at Hopedale that afternoon and spoke on the subject, "Children and the Work."

Altogether it was a strenuous day, but the times demand that we be busy in the Lord's work.

NEWS OF ROSEMONT

As we come to the close of the conference year and look back over the months that have passed, it reminds us of a great picture, sort of a panorama with its variety of scenes gliding by.

For awhile with us, as all over the country, was prosperity, and some gave the impression it would always remain; also we have seen partings, times when dear ones left us for other fields, causing a twinge of sadness; sorrow was felt when a dear sister, Mrs. Bettis Cahoon, a sweet Christian woman, left us for a Heavenly home, yet our sorrow turns to rejoicing as we remember the faithful are promised "a crown of righteousness"; last but not the least is the joy we feel when we are doing God's will by helping to carry out His great plan, and so the picture continues to pass on and will until the end of time, as we, one by one will have crossed over to our own reward.

Our pastor, Rev. W. C. Hook's practical sermons are made so plain and delivered in such a forceful manner that as we listen to the spiritual truths, we are convinced he is directed by the Holy Spirit to preach not pleasing things always but the truth as God would have him.

Each Sunday evening before preaching services we spend three-quarters of an hour very profitably in our Christian Endeavor work in which both old and young have a part. Recently, on one occasion, the entire evening was given to the Christian Endeavor. The Misses Hedley, two talented young ladies, were in charge and with ease and grace they managed so successfully that soon the audience was freely discussing the topic. On the afternoon of September 18, a Christian Endeavor rally was given at which time a most interesting and instructive program was rendered.

We are much pleased to report that our missionary work is progressing rapidly. One Sunday morning each month we have a missionary program in each of the two departments. The third Sunday afternoon of each month is set aside for the Junior Society, and it is accomplishing great things under the direction of Mrs. O. S. Mills.

On September 14, the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society at its mite-box opening, was most interestingly entertained at the home of Mrs. B. F. Gibson. Refreshments were served which were greatly enjoyed by every one.

The majority of the women of the church are members of the Society and are greatly interested in missions, to the extent that often self-denial is necessary that the Lord's work may go on, for during the history of the church since it was organized twenty years ago, it has not had to resort to "pink teas" or "supper" for its maintainance, but each member pledges a certain amount, and considers it a privilege to help spread the gospel that means so much to the world.

"GIFTED"

On last third Saturday afternoon I met Brother Hughes at Corinth church, where we held a delightful service. While I was away from home on that trip, a company of brethren and sisters from the Baptist church and our own, led by the Baptist pastor, came into our home and brought us many valuable gifts, for which we feel devoutly thankful to all who in any way had a hand in the affair. May the Lord bless them.

HONORS PASTOR

Whereas, our pastor, Rev. E. T. Cotten feels that God has called him to serve in another field, we the members of Mt. Carmel church desiring to express our heartfelt appreciation for his services during his leadership in our church do hereby adopt the following resolutions:

First. Be it resolved that we the members of Mt. Carmel Christian church who have been closely associated with Brother Cotten during his ministry, both in church and in our homes, do believe he is living a life wholly consecrated to God.

Second. Be it resolved that while Brother Cotten is yet young in years we find him a true worker and we anticipate a great future for him; we wish to boost him on that he may be a great factor in the spreading of Christ's Gospel, and though we regret to lose him, we hope it will be his gain and he may be of greater service to the Kingdom.

Third. Be it resolved that we wish to express our thanks and appreciation for his past service and hereby extend our best wishes to him and his loved ones and may our prayers go with them through all their future life and may his ministry be a fruitful one.

Furthermore, be it resolved that these resolutions be spread on our church record, and a copy sent to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for publication.

APPRECIATION OF PASTOR'S WORK

The members of the Elm Avenue Christian church wish to give this public expression of appreciation for the work of the Rev. E. H. Rainey during his short pastorate with us. Brother Rainey came to us four months ago and during this short time the membership of our church has been about doubled under his leadership. The church was barely organized when he took charge of the work and was struggling under much adverse criticism. Now the church is thoroughly organized and seems to be going forward with great rapidity, and instead of reproach the church is receiving praise because of the good work of all its departments.

The Sunday school is very active, growing each Sunday and will no doubt do greater things in the future under our new superintendent, Mr. R. L. Baker. The Cradle Roll is doing much to gain the interest of the mothers of the community in church, having on roll about fifty members. The Ladies' Aid and Christian Endeavor societies are lending much valuable service to the church.

By his faithful services Brother Rainey has caused the entire church membership to love him. He is a good mixer and seems to be able to get the support of all. It is with great reluctance that the church gives him up and we hope that after his school work is over we will be able to get him back again in our midst. We pray God's richest blessings upon him.

Will someone help us to secure a regular pastor? There is a wondrous opportunity here for a pastor not afraid of hard work.

COLUMBUS, GEORGIA

All things considered, this has been a good year for the Rose Hill Christian church. From the beginning the church has labored under disadvantages. The community in which the church is located is overwhelmed with "dyed in the wool" Baptists, Presbyterians and Methodists. These, together with other forces, have been effective in thwarting the progress of the church. Such conditions are calculated to discourage the most faithful. With but few exceptions our people have been loyal and the church is gradually winning its way.

In a most remarkable manner we are gaining in numerical strength. During the eleven months the writer has been on the field the church has added 63 per cent of its membership. This is a commendable record and it is an index to the possibilities of the church.

But that is not all. The church during this year has raised more money than in any year of its history. The treasurer's reports show that $2,319.81 has been paid in this year. This is an average contribution of $63.67 per member. This is exclusive of the Men and Millions money. I am wondering if we have another church in our communion that has raised this much money per member this year.

This wonderful record would have been utterly impossible but for two things, viz: our business-like system of finance, and the abiding consecration of some of our members. Personal consecration is the first step in financing the Kingdom of God. There is always one gift that must precede the gift of money. People must give "themselves to the Lord". The gift of self must ante-date the gift of money. Any church that is in desperate need of money has a more desperate need than money. Its greatest need is the personal consecration of the individual members.

HAPPY ON NEW FIELD

I am safe, sound and happy in Holland, Va. Both man and nature pleases here.

I feel that my pastorate at the Memorial Christian Temple closed successfully. However that may be, I left with a unanimous vote of thanks from the congregation for my interest and labors in their behalf, and a silver fruit dish as a token of their affection for Mrs. Lightbourne and me. The first was given me at the morning service just after the congregation had voted to enter into the merger with the Third church. The second was given us at the evening service, just before a Bible was given to Mrs. Emily Midgett, who goes to the mountains as a teacher with Miss Hedgepeth.

It is my conviction the Memorial Christian Temple acted wisely. I worked hard to consummate the plan after it was evident it was agreeable to many of the Temple members. Naturally, after such activity the vote of Sunday morning in recognition of my efforts was gratifying.

The Christian Temple of Norfolk should grow to be a great and useful church.

I believe it would be well to secure material for a short historical sketch of both of the churches. For such material from the Temple I can suggest: Mr. M. J. W. White, 719 Park Ave., Norfolk; Mrs. E. J. Brickhouse, Greenwood Apartment, Armistage Bridge Road, Norfolk; Mr. J. H. Etheridge, Roswell & Tunstall, Norfolk.

J. H. LIGHTBOURNE.

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

Last Sunday, October 2, was a good day for the First Christian church of Richmond. We held our Rally Day services in the morning and had a good congregation and a highly enjoyable program, one feature of which was an excellent address by our Field Secretary, Miss Lucy Eldredge. The evening service was well attended and the total for the day was the best we have had since our anniversary service in April. One new member was received by letter September 25, and others will join soon. We were delighted to have Chaplain H. E. Roundtree with us for two services during last month. He gave us a good Sunday morning sermon and an intensely interesting evening lecture on conditions in Haiti. We hope to have the pleasure of having him with us again. The outlook for the success of our work here continues to grow brighter. We have some of the most loyal church members with whom it has ever been our privilege to labor. We are looking forward to beginning our church building at a nearly date. We need the prayers and cooperation of the brotherhood in getting our church established in the capital of the Old Dominion.

SOLEMN VOWS

CLEM-HOLT

Rev. H. Russell Clem, pastor First Christian church, Greensboro, N. C., and Miss Bessie Irene Holt, Burlington, N. C., were married at the Burlington Christian church on Wednesday, September 14, at 10:00 A. M. The ceremony was read by the pastor, assisted by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary of the S. C. C. The groomsmen and ushers were nephews of the bride, while the maid of honor and the bridesmaid were nieces, and the ring-bearer was a cousin. The bride was given in marriage by her brother C. T. Holt. The ring used was that of the bride's mother, having been used at the mother's wedding, and being a gift from mother to daughter. The bride also carried on her arm her mother's Bible, this being likewise a gift from mother. Miss Hennie Malone presided at the organ. Mr. S. A. Caviness of Greensboro, N. C., was best man.

The bride's pastor and a great company of friends wish the Father's blessing upon this happy union, as Mr. and Mrs. Clem enter into the Master's service together in Greensboro, N. C., where Mr. Clem became pastor the first of September.

RHODES-FOSTER

Wallace Keith Rhodes, Luray, Va., and Miss Bertha May Foster of Luray, Va., R. F. D., were joined together in the holy state of matrimony at the home of the writer at 5:45 A. M. Monday, October 3, 1921. Messrs. J. E. Foster and S. L. Rhodes, the fathers of the bride and groom, and the writer's family were the only persons who were present for the occasion. Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple motored to Luray and there they boarded an early train for Washington, Baltimore, Atlantic City and other places of interest.

This October bride is the oldest daughter of our genial good friend, Deacon J. E. Foster, of Leaksville church. The bridegroom is an enterprising young photographer of Luray. The many friends of this couple extend congratulations.

CALLED HOME

BROWN

Cyrus Alexander Brown was born May 20, 1889, died August 25, 1921 at his home. He was 32 years, three months and five days old. He professed faith in Christ in early life and joined Apple's Chapel. He was married to Miss Hepsie Michael May 29, 1919.

He leaves to lament, a devoted wife, father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Brown, two brothers, H. H. and A. J. Brown, seven sisters, Mrs. R. A. Apple, Mrs. H. W. Michael, Mrs. J. L. Apple, Mrs. L. L. Wyrick, Mrs. J. R. Lowe, Mrs. A. Y. Fuller, Miss Aubra Brown, a number of relatives and a host of friends.

His death was a shock to the family. It was an intimate friend to the writer of this account. During his short illness he made no complaint, was very patient. He said, he was not afraid to die, and was conscious to the end and has gone to a better world.

He was an industrious farmer, a man of his word, honored and respected among his acquaintances and a faithful member of his church. He will be missed.

Burial services were conducted at Apple's Chapel by Brother M. V. Brown one of his former Sunday school superintendents, which was his request and his body laid to rest in the church cemetery. A large concourse of people attended his burial. May the Lord comfort all the bereaved.

She had been in ill health for several months in her home and later was taken to a hospital in Richmond, Va., where she gradually grew worse until the final end came and she was relieved of all her suffering. She bore her sufferings here with Christian fortitude and without a murmur. Being of a very kind and sweet disposition she won many dear friends while in the hospital. To know her meant to love her.

She was reconciled to death, and told her daughter shortly before the end came that she was prepared and willing to meet her God.

She leaves to mourn their loss, a husband, J. B. Hedgepeth, three daughters and two sons, Mrs. M. H. Hargrove, Miss Lola Hedgepeth and Miss Jeannette, Messrs. Sam and John Hedgepeth.

A TRIBUTE OF RESPECT—HOWELL

In the passing of Miss Annie Howell from the scenes of earth to the realities of eternity, our class rank has been broken, leaving a vacant chair in our class circle. In the presence of that empty chair we sit with bowed heads in acknowledgement of our loss, but we have a blessed hope of rejoining her in the sweet "Bye and Bye."

Therefore be it resolved that in the death of this devoted member of our class we have lost a good worker a noble and sweet spirited character whom we loved and highly appreciated for her work's sake.

Resolved, that we sorrowfully and yet cheerfully accept and use this opportunity to give expression to our high estimate of her life, character and service among us, as one of our most worthy members.

Resolved, that we express to her loved ones and friends our deepest sympathy in the loss which has befallen them in her death, the loss of a devoted and faithful Christian woman who was ever glad to fill her place wherever her lot was cast.

Resolved, that these resolutions be entered upon the pages of our Class Record, and sent to her family and to The Christian Sun for publication.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—CAHOON

Whereas, God in His great love and infinite wisdom, deemed it wise and best to transplant from earth to heaven our beloved sister, Lillian Hatcher Cahoon, one who was always loyal to every enterprise of the church and a faithful worker in all of its organizations, we, the Woman's Missionary Society of Rosemont Christian church, realizing our great loss, offer the following resolutions:

First: That we bow in humble submission to God's divine will knowing that He doeth all things well.

Second: We extend to her husband and five little children our heartfelt sympathy, pointing to the God who gave and who has taken away. Our hearts throb with tears in the loss of so dear a mother, neighbor and friend in whose life the Christian graces found full fruition.

Third: That a copy of these resolutions be sent the bereaved family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy placed on the minutes of the Woman's Missionary Society of Rosemont Christian church.

HAMMOND

On September 4, 1921 the angel of death came and took the spirit of Sister Hammond back to God who gave it. She was not a member of the church, but she gave evidence that she was saved and ready to go.

The deceased was born December 2, 1875, making her age therefore, forty-five years, nine months and two days. She leaves a husband, one daughter, two grandchildren, three brothers and one sister. Burial was in New Elam cemetery, funeral services being conducted by the writer.

BROWN

The people living near Apple's Chapel church were greatly saddened on August 25, 1921 when news was received that Alexander Brown, Jr., had died of typhoid fever. He was born May 20, 1889, and was therefore thirty-two years, three months and five days old. In May, 1918 he was married to Miss Hepsie Michael of near Gibsonville, N. C. In early life he professed faith in Christ and joined Apple's Chapel Christian church and remained a faithful member until death. He loved his church and was always ready and willing to do anything he could to advance the cause of Christ. He was of a pleasant disposition and to know him was to love him. Burial services were conducted from Apple's Chapel church by Mr. M. V. Brown, and the esteem in which he was held was shown by the great number that gathered to pay their respect and also by the floral offerings. He expressed himself before he died as being ready to die and may those who mourn realize that they can meet him on that peaceful shore where there will be no more sorrows and no more separation.

A RELATIVE.

WHEN TO THANK GOD

Can we be as thankful for a promise as for the fulfillment of the promise? Yes, if we trust the one who promises. Suppose a wealthy friend, in whom we have entire confidence, tells us that because he knows we have a financial obligation to meet on a certain date he will, just before the obligation falls due, give us more than enough money to meet it. Do we thank him then, or do we wait until after he has paid over the money? God has promised us personally to supply all our need. Whenever a need comes into view, do we thank God in advance, or do we keep Him waiting until after he has "made good" and then thank him? "Lacked ye anything?" said the Lord to the seventy, who had been sent out without any worldly emoluments, and they answered, "No, Lord." Suppose we thank God now for His abundant meeting of that need that lies ahead.—S. S. Times.

HIS GIFT AND MINE

Over against the treasury
He sits who gave himself for me.
He sees the coppers that I give
Who gave his life that I might live.

He sees the silver I withhold
Who left for me his throne of gold
He sees the gold I clasp so tight,
And I am debtor in his sight.

A LITTLE FUN

A teacher in one of our public schools in Boston was asking the usual questions of the pupils at the beginning of the year. Antonia Gianelli was called. "You are an Italian?" "No." "Why, your father is an Italian." "Yes." "Is your mother American?" "No." And so she was told to bring her mother the next morning to have the matter settled. Next morning appeared Mrs. Gianelli, shawl over her head, Italian undoubtedly. Again the question, "Is Mr. Gianelli an Italian?" "Yes." "Are you an Italian?" Again the answer, "Yes." "Why, then Antonia must be an Italian." "No! No!" (with much emphasis) "She Irish—she born in Boston!"—Christian Register.

Little Freddy was using his fists on little Helen. "Freddy, stop!" commanded his mother. "Don't you know that a gentleman never strikes a lady?"

Instantly Helen stopped crying. "They do, too," she contradicted. "Why, Helen," said mother, "when did you ever see a gentleman strike a lady?"

With an air of convincing proof the little maid replied:

"Daddy spansks me."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Why Disarm ?

THE EDITOR

MILLIONS of graves speak in silence for disarmament. These graves on land and in sea challenge us to cease from war. A million homes cry out with millions of heart-aches that human slaughter shall cease. An unnumbered host of ex-soldiers maimed and blind present their helpless and hopeless condition in support of a lessening of guns and gas to kill and destroy the happiness and usefulness of mankind.

But these are the direct testimonies why we should disarm. The reaction of crime after war upon human society sends its deadly poison into all walks of life. It is easy to lose sight of this, but courts face more crime in immediate years after war than any other period of time. Killing by the use of license breeds a desire to kill without license.

Selfishness, greed, and gain say to arm; love, the spirit of brotherhood—the spirit of the great Peace-maker says disarm. The populace say disarm. Why not?

The Pastor and His Young People

THE wise pastor will look after his young people. That said, nothing better can be added here. Further remarks would have to deal with reasons for caring for the young people.

The future's hope is with the young men and women, whether this be in government or in church affairs. To neglect the young people is to neglect the young plants this sort of doctrine will find some day that it has no

There are a few churches in our Convention where only the old folks have any control. This we do not condemn. But the idea that young Christians have no place in church work is false; and the church that nurses this sort of doctrine will find some day that it has no young people.

Recently a man in his seventies said to us: "All that I can hope to do for our congregation is to help hold together what we have. I do not have visions and dreams that the young people have." Then this man of God continued: "Unless we harness our young people, the process of decay is already started and soon we will not have any church."

That was, and is, a most wonderful testimony. Over against this, many church members who have reached their seventies are jealous of the young people. They are not willing to cooperate. It is always their charge that the young people want to run things and they will be hands off.

We have heard the many pros and cons on this subject. "The young people will not cooperate", we have heard some say. Behind such a condition there has been going on a process of education that has brought about the condition. If the pastor knows how to handle the young people he will have no trouble with them. We have in mind a church that once its young people took no part. That church changed pastors, and today the young people are being trained and delight in the Master's service. It is not the young people—it is the chance they have.

Pastors, save and put to work our young people. In them we have our hope. Lose them we fail—get them we succeed.

Conference and the Local Church

THERE are a few churches in every Conference that are rarely ever represented at their Conference. No one reason will suffice for all them, unless it be for the lack of interest. Some churches do not see the need of being represented—others cannot find representatives who will attend.

Every Conference is a vital part of the Convention, and every church is a vital part of some Conference. Each church has the right to be represented and should be represented.

Possibly the custom of each delegate paying his or her own expenses has something to do with the why some churches are not represented at Conference. We believe that each church should provide for the expense of its representation to Conference. There are those who will not accept it, but in other cases it may provide representation at a necessary time.

The local church that ties up to its Conference in a business-like way is the local church that sees a new day. It begins to get the life-blood of the Conference and swings itself in line with progressive plans and movements that are forward looking.

And this: Get your church out of the habit of allowing its delegates to attend one day and go no more. No progressive citizen would allow such representation in behalf of his country, his state or his nation. Then why in behalf of the King's business?

The Disarmament Conference

NOVEMBER 11 is the day set for the great Disarmament Conference to be held in Washington, D. C. The Conference is to consider the matter of greatly reducing the armaments of the world. We understand that all the principal countries of the world will be represented there. Great preparations are being made for an elaborate occasion and real work. The occasion should mean a new page in the world's history.

This Conference will mark the extending or the ending of the world's fighting paraphernalia. It would be a most unfortunate situation if there should be no reduction of arms after this Conference. At the present time there is a feeling of confidence that should be extended and continued. If there be no reduction of arms, then the average citizen is to understand that this long distance confidence is theory and not practice. We will therefore, come into greater favor with each other as nations or grow in disfavor. The very fact that we do not decide to reduce our expenditure for war equipment would indicate that we need to enlarge and expand. So there can be no standing as we are, as we see it. There will be a reducing of arms or an increasing. It will be a sad day in American history if we fail to take the present growing sentiment against war and mould it into the spirit of real brotherhood.

CONCRETE SUGGESTIONSWhat Can Individual Citizens do to Help in the Reduction of Armaments?

Accept your personal responsibility in helping your church and your community to believe in the practicability of a warless world.

Write individual letters to your two Senators, to your Representatives in the House and to the four American members in the Conference. Remember that resolutions passed in mass meetings or signed by hundreds or even thousands of names, though valuable, do not begin to have the influence with legislators that individual letters have which show intelligent knowledge, deep interest and personal conviction.

Unite with others in getting the Mayor to ask all citizens to pause for two minutes at noon on November 11, for silent prayer for God's blessings not only on our beloved country, but also on the International Conference.

Talk in your home and with friends about the Conference being equipped for such conversation by the information given in this and other pamphlets dealing with the necessity for an immediate reduction of armaments.

Write short letters of not more than 300 or 400 words to your local newspapers. Editors as a rule are glad to know what their readers are interested in.

Let Church groups, women's clubs, or other organizations ask the managers of local motion picture houses to prepare and use each afternoon and evening, five or six slides presenting statistics and brief quotations on the question of the reduction of armaments.

A NEW DEPARTURE

Editor Christian Sun: You will see, from the following, that the denomination of Unitarians urge Diocesan control. The "Report to Conference" decries isolation of parishes hitherto obtaining:

Detroit, Oct. 5.—Holding that the Unitarian Church best can serve the world by adopting the guidance of a central board, the Council of the Unitarian General Conference in session here urged permanent establishment of such a central group in its report to the Conference today. This report, in effect, is asking that the organization indorse a programme providing for a board that would act in the capacity of a Bishop.

"We have found that our old, self-centered, parochial life has been foolish and selfish", the report stated. "The church cannot be turned into a departmental society or an organ for any special and temporal programme. It must not forget its duty is world service."

The report will be acted upon by the Conference at business sessions Friday.

The Conference today adopted a resolution congratulating William Howard Taft, President of the Conference, upon his assumption of the duties as Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

The final vote will be taken October 14, 1921.

A STORM AT SEA

Sunday P. M. October 9, 1921.
On Board S. S. Ponce, Atlantic Ocean.

HIS writer had always secretly felt that if he ever went out on a sure enough sea voyage—one of days and nights—there would somewhere on that voyage come a storm. Maybe all who have not been to sea feel the same way—a sort of universal fear of the big ocean; a feeling that if as big a thing as that ever gets a chance at you, like the big elephant at the circus, its pent up danger will show itself. I was not disappointed. The storm came. It is just subsiding now and I am sitting in my state room looking out on waters that have been furious with a mad rage all day, but are becoming quiet now at 4:00 P. M.

For three days our good ship Ponce had lazily nosed her way through tropical waters and balmy breezes, the men dressed in Palm Beach suits, half dreaming on deck, the women chatting and happy in their summer organdies. It had been three days of inactivity, indolence and delight. But Saturday afternoon, cloud rifts, like dense smoke, began to gather on the horizon, and by four o'clock a stiff breeze was springing up. White caps and grey hounds were in evidence on all the sea. Rifts of wind sent speedy showers splashing through the spray. Heavy detonations of thunder like far off growling bull-dogs, could be heard and here and there jagged lightning rent the lowering clouds.

Our erstwhile lazy ship bolted upright, like a thing of life that suddenly scents approaching danger, and began to throb and thrill with a new and defiant energy. My first storm at sea had begun. Our ship's log showed we were rounding Cape Hatteras, some 300 miles off, and this added no comfort to the inexperienced sailor.

By six every evidence of day's sun was obscured, and night, like a leaden pall, had settled down heavily upon the encircling sea. By eight the wind was blowing a gale, rain was falling in torrents, splashes of sea foam swept lower, middle, and upper decks. The ship's captain stopped near my deck chair, leaped over the rail, pierced out with experienced eye into the thick darkness. "What are the weather prospects, captain?" queried the writer. "They do not look good to me", and for the first time on the journey he mounted the steep stairs to the pilot house. That is what a ship's captain is for. Anybody can navigate in a calm; a skilled hand must hold the rudder in a storm.

I confess that it was sleep only in broken doses that night. The ship was groaning from time to time, her plunges forward and her unsteady movements, all entering into a combination of noises and uncertainties calculated to disturb peaceful slumber. I could hear the reckless and racey rush of waters as they lashed themselves heedlessly against the prow and sides of our good ship. I could hear and feel the quivering, throbbing heart-beats of our gallant ship as she would gather all her strength from her 2200 horse-power engines and hurl her thousand tons of steel against the battling billows beneath, and force them to give way to her cargo of human freightage.

But I knew an experienced captain was at the helm and faithful watchmen walked every deck and kept sleepless vigil. I realized also that there was One who held the seas in His hand and could at His will, say, "Peace, be still". So in the deep darkness of the stormy night, far into its late hours, I repeated from memory the 23rd Psalm, "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures," and fell into sweet sleep. When I awoke an early morning sun was struggling to come out over a troubled sea and drive away the broken and spent clouds from the horizon. I hurriedly dressed and went out on deck. One of the most magnificent spectacles my eyes had ever witnessed spread out before me.

The rains and lowering clouds and sweeping gales had ceased. But what a sea! My! it was mad.

If any pen or paint has ever portrayed the grandeur and the glory, the marvel and magic, the wildness and wonder of the ocean torn and distraught by a beating storm and furious gale overnight, I have never found it. A thousand wild, ferocious beasts goaded to foaming anger and fury would be tame in comparison to a mad sea.

Rolling, tumbling, splashing, foaming billows as far as the eye can see. One broad, desolate waste, but surcharged with vital and unbridled energy; full of movement and color, extending on the bleak horizon like a vast ploughed field cut into long and liquid high ridges, all scurrying in one direction in serried column, and with nervous speed as if pursued by some terrible and unseen foe. The endless waves, surging, heaving billows in fact, pass on, some small, others monstrous large with their fleecy white combs rushing down their green sides, small Niagaras with a seething, boiling sound as when flames touch water.

These mad billows come and go by you in stately, but never ending procession, coming from nowhere, going nowhere, but "full of dignity, power and importance." Their bosom seem to heave with suppressed rage because there is nothing in their pathway they can destroy. It is all so indescribably wonderful—and so useless. The storm is spent, the rushing gales are passed, the day is fair and balmy and sweet. What does this sea want to show its anger for, and keep up its rage and madness about? You can only wonder that a thing like this, big, bulky, infinite, can get so mad in a night, and remain out of humor so long after all causes of wrath and indignation have been removed.

Now the good ship battles with these billows manfully, heroically, if needs be, desperately. She seems to see the great basin washed out beneath her prow. She hangs on, the great bulge formed beneath her bosom.

Hanging, holding, hesitating there she seems to gather new strength from her prodigious hull and engines. With heart pulsating like a thing of life, athrill with collected and defiant energy, she plunges with all her gathered fore and power against the raging billow and splits it wide open, sending the spray splashing a hundred feet into the air, where it mingles with a glowing sun and reflects a dozen rainbows at once. Talk about movement, form, color, shape, size, length, breadth, depth; well one sees it all in the gallant fight of a great ship with a mad sea. It has been a beautiful and glorious Sabbath, though a wild and wonderful one out here on this wide ocean. I have enjoyed it all, grateful beyond words for the guidance of Him who is as near one on the sea as on the land. And I have wondered again and again which to admire most, the wildness and the grandeur of the sea, or the skill and ingenuity of man who has built big ships able to battle with the wild waves—and bid them do their worst.

We live in the expectation of a calm sea, an unbroken night's sleep, a joyous sail the remainder of the journey and a happy landing from New York harbor sometime tomorrow afternoon (Monday 10). I have kept something of a diary on all the trip to Porto Rico, and what I saw and learned of the place, the people and our work there. This I will try to transcribe as time permits and offer it to our editor for his readers. I have had a most happy visit to our Porto Rican work and workers and am grateful to have been well and safe throughout the whole journey.

ON WORLD CONDITIONS

AND so the doctors disagree! Well, that must needs be. It is not so much the fact that they disagree that interests some of us, as it is that they leave us as much in doubt as ever, as to what is right. THE SUN'S editor shows up three of his contributors on the question: Is the world growing better or worse? He says that Dr. Staley says it is growing better, Dr. D. A. Long says it is somewhat a "betwixt and between" affair—somewhat a "fifty-fifty" affair. Then the editor says this writer, J. P. B. says the world is getting worse. Now as among all these doctors, who can say which is right? We remember some years ago in a convention some one asked a distinguished minister what he thought of the question, Is the world getting better or worse? He made a notable answer when he said: "The good are getting better and the bad are getting worse." We think that is possibly true, but if we take in the true situation, it practically settles the question because the good constitute only a small part of the world. The most liberal estimate we can recall claims only one-third are even professing Christians, and that leaves two-thirds of the world's population untouched by Christianity. The population of the world is now estimated to be a little more than 1,500,000,000. One-third of that number is 500,000,000, leaving one billion of men, women and children who have no chance to grow better because they have not the gospel. That seems to show according to the distinguished minister, quoted above, that only 500,000,000 of the people of this world are growing better, while 1,000,000,000 are getting worse. That makes it seem that much the largest portion of the earth's population is growing worse, showing that while the good may be getting better, the bad are getting worse by a large majority. But we are glad we have better authority than this distinguished minister of the gospel, viz. the Word of God. The Bible speaks very plainly and with authority from above. Hear the Word:

"But evil men and seducers shall wax worse, deceiving and being deceived"—2 Tim. 3:13. In the same chapter from verses 1 to 7, we have, as it seems to me, very plain and very strong language, when he says: "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, true breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."

If the sacred writer did not have in mind such things as these, through which we are, and have been, passing for many years, then I will impose the task of showing wherein the description is at fault. Read the passage again and see for yourself how closely it applies to the people of the twentieth century. Referring to the awful times through which we shall pass before He comes did not Jesus Himself say, if the days be not shortened, no flesh should be saved? Did He not also say the people would then be much as they were in the days of Noah?

I believe in the final triumph of the Gospel, not in its defeat, not in any sense, but I also believe the Bible teaches us that there will be a season of apostasy before He comes. Is there anything wrong in such a position? If so, what?

SUFFOLK LETTER

LOCAL matters do not generally interest the reader beyond the locality; but a church affair of sufficient importance for a place in THE SUN is here presented.

The Philathea Class of the Suffolk Christian church entertained the Baraca Class last year in the church. This year the Baraca Class entertained the Philathea Class at Sleepy Hole, a wharf on the Nansemond river. It is about ten miles from Suffolk. The Baraca Class invited the Philathea Class, and the officers and teachers of the Sunday school to be their guests on October 13 in the afternoon. The party was to leave the church at 2:00 o'clock. The day was bright and cool.

J. M. Darden, J. M. Eley, and R. C. Harrell served as the committee of entertainment, and they exhausted human resources in making the occasion a success.

About forty cars conveyed about one hundred men and seventy-five women to the place of meeting. The committee had already erected tables, collected material, built the fires, and made the place look interesting when the people arrived. The people chatted, looked out upon the Nansmond toward Hampton Roads, rode out in groups upon the river, and then came to silence and attention when J. M. Darden mounted a box, welcomed the teachers, officers, and Philatheas, and then introduced John Martin, Superintendent of Suffolk schools, who delivered a sensible, interesting, and instructive address, which the assembly enjoyed and expressed their appreciation by enthusiastic applause.

The call to table brought long lines of men and women face to face in silence while Dr. I. W. Johnson invoked the divine blessing. Then human society reversed its custom and men served tables. Raw, stewed, and fried oysters, loaf and corn bread, fried spots, pickles, crackers, and coffee came in abundance. Long rows of women stood and enjoyed one meal prepared and served by men. At the close of the feast, Senator J. E. West, teacher of the Philathea Class, stepped upon the box, and, in a brief word, expressed the appreciation of his class and others for the good time the Baracas had given, and closed by saying that the occasion reminded him of the time when Jesus fed the multitude with "loaves and fishes"; and, I may say, that this feast is one of the flowers in the garden of gospel seeding. During the whole time, H. Woodward, the Baraca teacher, was enjoying the fruit of his successful labors.

Nothing occurred to mar the occasion and it was the unanimous vote to have it repeated next year. The Christian fellowship, the social satisfaction, the spiritual impression and feeling, combined to emphasize what is, in modern phrase, the "social gospel". "The social gospel" is not the gospel that is produced by social functions, but social conditions produced by the gospel. In other words, it is the gospel functioning in social life, purifying its purposes, giving tone to its pleasures, refining its associations, and giving the Christian standard to social life. Such occasions leave no remorse, no sting of conscience, no painful regrets.

The Christian religion contains all the essential elements for business, social life, education, pleasure, and social intercourse. Whatever does not harmonize with the gospel fails to give permanent pleasure to mankind. "Thou wilt show me the path of life; in thy presence is fulness of joy; at thy right hand these are pleasures for evermore"; while the "pleasures of sin are for a season." "It is finally a choice between the temporal and the eternal."

RELATION OF WORSHIP TO THE TITHE

Ernest D. Gilbert, Fall River, Mass.

Worship is inseparably involved with the best fruits of man's effort and life.

The Scriptures clearly indicate that at the ancient feasts individuals were to bring and there offer their sacrifices—fruits of their labors from field and flock. No man should come to this feast unless his relative share was brought with him and offered unto the Lord.

The ancient worshipper went to hear no fine music; he did not go to hear a modern sermon; he may have heard the reading of the law and an exhortation; he may have heard prayers and incidentally may have breathed a prayer himself; but the ancient man was blessed at the feast because his sacrifice was his offering to God and was acceptably used to express the common worship of his day.

Say what we please about having outgrown this primitive custom, there is something vital in it that must not be forgotten in the religious stress of our time. We have lost something vital out of our Christian living wherever and whenever the principle of sacrificial offerings have disappeared from our forms of worship. Music may add its grace to the worshipper, and the modern sermon that attempts to interpret anew the redemptive message of a Father God may stimulate the ideal element in the life of the one who hears. But that is not the complete expression of worship. Count helpfully all that may, it will ever be true that the worshipper who most fully fulfills the worship function will be the one who from his life and work brings his best gifts before his Maker.

ELON LETTER

LAST year the College arranged with the Redpath organization for five lyceum numbers, which were given at intervals of about a month during the fall and winter. The ten guarantors had to pay only about $2.00 each for deficit incurred. They paid it gladly, assumed they had done the College and community a fine service.

But it was not fine enough. So this season the Music Lovers Club has sponsored a Concert Course of five numbers. The difference between a lyceum and a Concert Course is a matter of degree and standard of excellency, the difference so to speak between successful amateurs and recognized professionals in their line. Only real artists have been engaged for this season, persons who are masters in their realm of culture.

The first number in the series came on Thursday evening, October 13, when Walter Green, baritone, and Frances Moore, pianist, greeted the largest audience ever assembled in the auditorium for an admission event. The promoters of the Concert Course wore a smile that will not come off, because it is not put on. It was the first time that recognized artists in voice and piano had ever appeared here, and the response showed that students and citizens alike appreciate the best many persons of taste and discrimination in Alamance and Guilford counties purchased season tickets and highly praised the College for its effort to build up a large musical appreciation and sentiment in the community.

It is sometimes asked why persons of cultured taste object to the shoddy ragtime music so often used in the Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, and other religious gatherings. The answer is that once having enjoyed the better music, it is impossible to be satisfied with the lesser. "But", asks someone, "can't we worship God with ragtime music?" Certainly, and no doubt God accepts such worship, just as He does the paint, the feathers, and the inharmonious whooping of the savage. Civilization, however, has been a process of transforming the savage music into the soulful creations of the aspiring heart. It is all a matter of civilization and heart culture. "Covent earnestly the best gifts" in music, as in all things else.

EDUCATIONAL

EDUCATION WHAT?

By Alburthus Perry

Rummaging through the archives of my subconscious mind, I found the following bit of information that may be of interest to others. Once in my life I wore a cap and gown and that one time the day I walked away with my first degree. Most of the incidents associated with that experience have gone out of my mind, but every now and then one comes to the front. A young American, I should say twelve years old, as he pointed to my coveted outfit, dared to quiz me: "Mister, what's that for?" Of course I was too proud to resent his impoliteness, so explained as best I could. And he came back with a reply that stays by me: "Some day I'm going to know a whole lot. Why, my big brother knows every baseball player and all about them." Then and there my Latin, Greek, et cetera, vanished. Had my college career been in vain? I know I had neglected to acquaint myself with the leaders of this national sport. I knew of Samuel of old, but I knew nothing about Cap. Anson.

Now I turn to a recent issue of the Literary Digest, and find a memory test, and more, a test in education. Among the tests are forty questions and I am told that a fairly intelligent person will not fail in more than three. I am considerably disturbed because of the nature of my four failures. From the day of the cap and gown until now little did I realize the inadequacy, the inefficiency of my schooling, for one of the questions is: "What base-ball player is called the Georgia Peach?" Imagine my chagrin when I could not answer that, I, a college graduate.

But that is not all. Many years ago, in that same period of remoteness, I taught a Sunday school class in a down-town mission in Chicago. I had to keep out of mischief, for one hour, eight of the brightest boys and I must now add, smartest boys to be found in that part of the city. One Sunday the question arose: "Who is the one man who never sinned?" I was taken off my feet with a most unexpected answer: "John L. Sullivan!" What do you think of that? This, too I had forgotten, but when I turned to the forty questions and read "Who licked Jack Johnson at Havana?" then I recalled that class and that answer. And again I ask myself the question, what is education?

Of course this test question is in no way related to the next in order, "Who Wrote Paradise Lost?" But another one arises in my mind, which is it most important to know, Jack Johnson's opponent or the author of a classic in poetry, or, on the other hand, must we know both? Being more or less of a Bible student, I know something about Samson, but should I also be acquainted with Johnson? What is education, an absolute or a relative term? Of course I may answer these questions by making a distinction between the physical and the intellectual tests. That may be comforting to me and to hosts of others, but it will not satisfy another element, very numerous and equally popular. I am dealing with folk, and here are two boys placing the baseball hero and the prize-fighter upon the same pedestal as I have already done for the blind poet. It is not of my doings, I do not like it, but what am I to do about it? Must I know as much about Jack Johnson as I do about Samson? Once I heard a noted evangelist say he had committed to memory "Paradise Lost". He has since given up the pulpit for travel and in the published statements of his travels he says nothing about Milton.

What is education anyway? These forty questions are taken from a book entitled "How Smart are You?" Just what is the meaning of "smartness"? Offhand its etymology I cannot give, but I do know the origin of "benediction", but who cares about that word? It is never used except once in a while on Sundays.

All of this offers a satisfactory explanation of many so-called educational fallacies of today. Now I understand beyond all questionings why Congress appropriates as much for education as it does for a battleship and why the Towner-Sterling bill is subject to such a heated debate. Now I think I understand why in T——, Ill., with a population of 1,600, there are enrolled in high school just six pupils. Now I understand—at least I think I do—why of the 4,406,000 boys between the ages of fourteen and twenty only 4,309,000 are not in school. Education is just being smart.

Underneath all of these facts I recognize one fact—our educational system is wrong. Out of eight Supreme Court judges seven came from denominational colleges. Out of twenty-nine presidents nineteen came from denominational colleges. Out of all the members of Congress two-thirds came from church colleges. And to offset this, one out of every four soldiers could not read or write intelligently. I offer no solution, I simply present the facts, and yet I cannot refrain from offering a suggestion. Why not qualify education? Why not say that in the broadest sense of the term we should call it Christian education? One thing is sure: education cannot be an abstract term, and in my humble judgment, "Christian" is essential to a satisfactory definition.—In The Christian Advocate, (N. Y.)

A Sure Guide—Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in him; and he shall bring it to pass.

Rest in the Lord, and wait patiently for him.—Psalm 37:5-7.

Return to the Lord—Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him: and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.—Isaiah

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

OBEEDIENCE NOT DICTATION

Have you ever noticed when reading the Gospels how often the disciples told Jesus what to do? In your own Christian life and work have you not often found yourself laying plans and asking God to bless those plans, instead of waiting upon Him in prayer until you know His plan for you?

When the Syrophenician woman came to the Lord in behalf of her afflicted daughter, we hear the disciples telling Jesus to send her away. What a lesson in encouragement to pray and to keep on praying when everything looks like failure, we would have missed if Jesus had listened that day to His disciples. For our Lord met her first request with silence, and when she renewed her pleading He seemed to repulse her. You and I have passed through just such experiences in the prayer life many times. There have been times when God not only seemed to be turning a deaf ear to our pleading, but He seemed to be treating us harshly. Persistence on the part of the Syrophenician woman was rewarded with the Lord's "great is thy faith be it unto thee even as thou wilt." Persistence in a Spirit-given prayer always means an answered prayer.

Then again that evening when Jesus was moved with compassion toward the great multitude we hear the disciples telling their Lord to "send them away, that they may go into the villages and buy themselves victuals". But Jesus answered by telling them to do the seemingly impossible thing—feed them. The supplies on hand were almost nothing among so many. The disciples that day as well as His disciples today needed to learn that their resources, no matter how small they are, if given into Jesus' hands nothing doubting, but believing He is able, will be enlarged until they will meet every need. The people that day were satisfied, and the need was more than met for there remained more than there was at the beginning. What Jesus gives always satisfies if we are so yielded to Him that we are ready to trust our all in His hands.

Neither the Twelve or any followers of the Lord today has the right to tell his Lord what to do. We can call upon Him day or night, we can tell Him all about our trials and troubles, we can ask Him about everything which comes into our lives. But to tell our Lord and Master what to do—never. Christ did not call His disciples to be advisers. They were to follow Him and learn of Him, then they were to go and teach others to observe all things whatsoever He has commanded, trying to win them to become followers also. Are we seeing our plans fail and our work come to naught and our prayers unanswered because we are doing the planning and asking God to bless work He never gave us to do? Or, are we experiencing His supernatural power in our lives because they are so yielded to Him we are constantly saying, "Speak, Lord, thy servant heareth"?

THE NEED OF CHRISTIAN WORKERS

"The field is white unto harvest, but few are the laborers therein." If all of us could be awakened to our duty, by the grace of God we would be more willing to labor for the Master. I pray to God to hasten the day when we will have more people in the church converted with the Holy Spirit. Then we will move this world for Christ. Church members should realize the lives they should live before those out of the church, and by living the Christ-like life they can come near drawing them to Christ. We should realize that our lives that we live will determine our future. We should be willing to lay our all on the altar of God and say "Here am I, send me."

Let us ask ourselves the question: Is Christ still on trial in our hearts, and what are we going to do with Him? Let us pray for more workers for the Master's harvest.

JESUS SAVES FROM SIN

A Sermonette by Dr. N. G. Newman

"And thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins."—Matt. 1:21.

Our text embraces two great facts—sin and salvation; two age-long problems—what it is Christ saves men from and how does he save them.

1. What it is that Jesus saves men from:

It is not from the penalty of sin. He says nothing about this. Men do not need it. The remission of all penalty would give an impetus to sin. It is not certain that penalty can be remitted unless the constitution of God and his universe could be changed. Christ came to save men from sin—the act and habit of sin. This is the world's supreme need and is met only in Christ. And this salvation from sin is in no narrow theological sense of "the willful transgression of known law" which embraces only a small fraction of the world's sin. Sin is anything in a man's life, positive or negative, in word, deed, thought, or feeling, that tends to thwart God's purpose in him. It is from all of this that Jesus saves. He is the light of the world, the truth, and saved from the sins of ignorance and error. He is the one perfect and holy spirit and saves from all impure and unholy thought.

2. How Jesus saves men from sin:

Neither by imposing nor remitting penalties can men be saved from sin. The former hardens men, the latter conduces to sin. Nor does Jesus save by being offered a ransom to Satan to buy men back to God. God is sovereign and has never had to bargain on even terms with the devil. No less does Jesus save by offering himself a penal sacrifice, or any other kind of sacrifice, to reconcile an angry and offended God. God never had to be reconciled. "God so loved that he gave". He has never been angry with his children. He is a loving Father. He has never needed a "plan of salvation". He has always been ready to save, possessing both the power and willingness to save. The only thing that has ever been necessary is to get men willing to be saved, and herein comes the saving work of the Son of God.

No mere believing of any set of facts and truths, no acceptance of dogma, no trusting in sacrifice or substitution, can of itself save men from sin. It is Jesus who saves. Not the death of Jesus not his teaching not his conduct nor his work saves, but Jesus himself in the power of his own pure and holy spirit made perfect through suffering and entering into and dwelling in the hearts of men. This is the true doctrine of the cross. It was necessary that the Captain of our salvation "be made perfect through suffering". "If I go not away the comforter will not come unto you." If Jesus had shunned the cross he would not have been "made perfect" and there could have been no perfect and holy spirit of Christ to dwell in and regenerate men.

THE GREATEST NEED

The gift of life is the greatest need of the modern church. Without this first gift the church will ever be in desperate need of money. It is a toilsome task to get people to give their money to a thing to which they have not given their hearts. But once the heart is given the money will be forthcoming. When God gets a man's heart He gets his money. Solicit the man who has given his life to God and the gift of money is the natural sequence.

On the other hand it cannot be said that a person has given anything to God if he withholds himself. It often happens that the things which men are most ready to give God does not want. He wants that which man desires to keep. There are many people who are quite ready to give that which requires no sacrifice. Imagination is too feeble to picture a person making a permanent offering to God if he withholds himself. The woman with her two pence made a permanent respectable, sacrificial offering, while the cold-hearted, disreputable, ostentatious givers eluded, escaped, and defrauded the Kingdom of God by dropping their thousands into the vessels of the sanctuary when they should have given themselves.

The church today faces hoards of wealth and mountains of unwillingness. The Kingdom of God will never lack money if man's willingness equals his wealth.

Mind Your Own Business—He that passeth by, and meddleth with strife belonging not to him, is like one that taketh a dog by the ears.—Proverbs 26:17.

A Cure for Worry—Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God.

And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.—Philippians 4:6-7.

Fruit of the Spirit—Love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law.—Gal. 5:22,23.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

MANY NEEDS

It has been quite a busy time on the farm for the past ten days. Though the ground has been dry and hard, we have succeeded in getting fifteen acres of land put in condition for wheat. This will be a small crop for the Orphanage, but the ground has been so hard that it has been impossible to break it this fall. I have often heard old people say to dust in wheat if you wanted to make a good crop; and if that me true, I think we will make a good crop next year. As the drill moves along it leaves a cloud of dust in its wake.

We have also gathered in our crop of sweet potatoes and made one hundred and fifty bushels. This is better than we expected as we hardly see how they grew with no more moisture than they had. With good seasons we would have made at least three hundred bushels—enough to have fed the little folks till March or April.

Our Irish potatoes are almost gone now. We have been able every year since we have been here to make enough Irish potatoes to run us. The children like them every day in the year. In sections where the crop has been good this year it would be real kind if our good people would remember us with a barrel. A few barrels will help us wonderfully in this work.

Don't forget that winter is coming and that it takes many quilts, blankets, sheets, and counterpanes for our beds in order to keep the little fellows warm and snug and I know you do not want them to sleep cold. It is a very uncomfortable feeling to try to sleep when you are cold and chilly. I hope our dear readers have never had that uncomfortable feeling, but if you have you will know better how to sympathize with those who do have it.

Please make your Sunday school monthly offerings as large as possible as the fall season is expensive in this work. Shoes and clothing of every description to buy for seventy-five little children takes money. We like to pay every bill at the end of the month.

We still have many applications on file and have room to take a number of them if we can get our people to supply the funds to care for them. It is your opportunity to help the widows and fatherless in their affliction. Its a glorious privilege you have to lend a helping hand in this work.

Rev. P. T. Klapp, of Elon College, N. C., has been extended a call to the Third Avenue Christian church, Danville, Va.

Dr. N. G. Newman, Elon College, N. C. gladly and successfully represented THE CHRISTIAN SUN at the Alabama Conference last week.

We have reduced prices on Communion Sets. Let us send you free catalogue and price list. A postal card will bring it by return mail.

Rev. B. J. Earp, Milton, N. C., has accepted a call to the East End Christian church, Newport News, Va., and will enter upon his duties there about November 1.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson filled the Burlington pulpit last Sunday, in the absence of Dr. Lankford, pastor, who is in Dayton, Ohio, this week attending the meeting of the Mission Board of the A. C. C.

Secretary Atkinson of our Mission Board gives SUN readers another interesting letter this week. Next week he will begin a series of "Scenes and Impressions in Porto Rico". Look out for these articles.

THE SUN sympathizes with Rev. and Mrs. T. E. White, Sanford, N. C., in the loss of their only son, William Staley, on October 8. He lacked a few months of being five years old. Comfort of the Father be upon parents and sisters.

More than a half million railroad workers have been ordered to strike on October 30. This order came about because of a twelve per cent decrease in wages on July 1, and also as a result of a meeting on October 14, the decision of which was a further decrease in wages. President Harding has joined forces in an effort to avert the threatened strike.

Watch for our announcements that will follow during the next few weeks about books for the children. We are now placing orders for some new titles and will be able to please you.

What We Know About God. Psalms 139:1-1-12.

Jehovah is good to all;

And his tender mercies are over all his works."

ELM AVENUE CHRISTIAN SUNDAY SCHOOL PORTSMOUTH, VA.

The reports of growth from one of our newer Sunday schools that of the Elm Avenue Christian church at Portsmouth, Virginia, are very gratifying. The school has a Cradle Roll of about fifty babies, developing under the leadership of Mrs. S. L. Haire, as superintendent. There is a splendid primary class with twenty children, and the Sunday school now has an enrollment of ninety-seven. Prospects are bright for further progress under the leadership of the superintendent of the school, Mr. R. L. Baker. Rev. E. H. Rainey, who has been serving this church has returned to his work at Yale University.

Rally Day was observed in the Richmond Sunday school on October 2. A program was rendered by the children, assisted by special musical numbers by Mrs. Brown, Mrs. Walters, and Mrs. Lee. Short talks were made by Mr. Adolph Richards of Washington, D. C., and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Field Secretary of Religious Education. Four members of the Junior Department of the Sunday school were presented with promotion certificates, as a recognition of the splendid work they have done in that department of the Sunday school. Reports made by the officers and teachers gave to the congregation a glimpse of the good work done by the school, and was very encouraging.

SUNDAY SCHOOL BOOKS

Many new books are offered annually to the Sunday school teacher who is alive and eager to find new ways to teach and impress Bible truth in his Sunday school class. Many times is the question asked "How can we interest the scholars?" and in these books is found the answer. The old maxim says "Seeing is believing" and Professor Weigle adds "And seeing is understanding and remembering too. The teacher is foolish who relies upon words merely when he might supplement his verbal descriptions and explanations with objects and models, pictures, diagrams and maps." There are three little books of real practical value, "Paper Tearing" "Outline Chalk Talks" and "Rapid Hand Drawing" which may help many of our teachers. All three are published by the Meigs Publishing Company, fifty cents each, and may be secured through our own Publishing Agent, Rev. C. B. Riddle, Burlington, N. C. In reviewing these books, Mrs. Fred E. Bullock, of Dayton, Ohio, Field Secretary of Sunday Schools of the American Christian Convention, says:

"'Outline Chalk Talks' is more especially intended for teachers of older boys and girls, or for adult classes. It contains sixty-four pages of splendid illustrative material, yet the outlines are so simple that almost anyone with a knowledge of drawing can use them.

"'Rapid Hand Drawing' is to assist the beginner; one who has never drawn at all would be profited by a study of this little book and the suggestions given would enable him or her to do really effective work.

"'Paper Tearing' can be used in the Elementary Department, and also in the other grades. It gives suggestions for illustrating Bible truths by means of paper tearing, as its name suggests. The results secured are surprising, and the interest of the pupil is secured and held as the teacher works."

"'Make Your Own Posters'" is the title of a new book which is offered to the Sunday school workers who have envied the people who could have such splendid posters for every special day or occasion. There are six large outline posters in addition to the book which gives explicit and plain directions for making any amount of posters, using these outlines in various ways, and also suggests the finding of other poster material. You will be able to furnish as fine posters as any other school or teacher can have, even if you are not an artist, if you secure a copy of this book. The book is published by Smith and Lamar, and costs $1.25, and may be secured through Rev. C. B. Riddle, who will secure any Sunday school or Christian Endeavor book for you if you will give him the title, and the author and publisher of the book you desire.

Two other Sunday school books are recommended as follows:

“Story-Telling Lessons” by Prof. Tralle is a new book on story telling which will be found very helpful. Prof. Tralle advances some new methods, which are very well worth while. It is a real contribution to religious education. There are ten chapters, each one covering a definite phase of the art of story-telling, and it is a real delight to read the book, while the material presented is so helpful, one can but be glad of the opportunity to study this book presented as the result of twelve experienced in telling stories and teaching the art of story telling. The book is published by the Judson Press, Philadelphia, and costs seventy-five cents.

“Hymnal for American Youth”. “It is hard to find words too enthusiastic about this new book which aims to be exactly what its name suggests. It is not a revival hymn book, being used out of its setting in the Sunday school, but a hymnal with real religious value in training our young people in the praise and worship service of the school. In addition to the hymns, there is an unusual amount of program material, making it possible for a school to plan Special Day programs for years without buying any extra programs. This saving so reduces the cost of the book, as to make it really cheaper in the long run than an ordinary book, to say nothing of the tone given to the minds and hearts of the pupil, as well as the services of the school by the religious and educational quality of the music and words provided. This hymnal is published by the Century Publishing Company, and costs seventy-five cents.”

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

WHY I BELIEVE IN FOREIGN MISSIONS

1. Because I'd be ashamed of myself if I didn't.
2. Because many folks don't believe in foreign missions, and I like to be a bit unconventional and original. Therefore I believe in 'em. I hate to follow a crowd.
3. Because I believe in home missions. If it isn't wrong to help somebody who lives outside of your own little community, your own city, your own state, where's the harm in helping somebody who chances to live outside of your own little nation?
4. Because I've noticed that when a man begins to draw a line, saying, "Thus far I shall help, and no farther," pretty soon he draws the line around his little neighborhood, then around his little family, and at last around his shrimp-souled self.
5. Because if it weren't for foreign missions, you and I wouldn't be members of a Christian church. The chances are that just this minute we'd be prowling three-quarters naked through the woods hunting for some raspberries and a few frog's legs for dinner. When our ancestors were savages back in ancient Gaul or thereabouts, Christian missionaries came to them. Here we are. Shall we begrudge others the same chance.

6. Because I know a village in Africa where the Christians are raising five and six times as many bushels to the acre as their heathen neighbors. That alone is a mighty good reason for Christian missions.

7. Because the sale of white collars and stiff-bosomed shirts is mounting by leaps and bounds in Singapore. As soon as a man becomes a Christian, he wants to clean up and look like something, have a decent home, a prize garden, a steady job, and make a success of himself. And I like to see that, and am willing to back any thing that will accomplish it.

8. Because modern education has been first introduced into practically every non-Christian land by the missionary. Any one who believes in education must believe in foreign missions.

9. Because tens of thousands of lives are saved every year by medical missionaries.

10. Because missionaries prepare the way for commercial expansion. In almost every instance they have preceded the merchant into the interior.

11. Because the world's confidence in American integrity, American goods and American ways of doing business is largely the result of the good impression made in foreign lands by the advance guards of civilization—the missionaries.

12. Because woman is a beast in non-Christian lands, and a woman in Christian lands. The most tragic farce under the sun is that of a woman who doesn't believe in missions. What would she be if it had not been for Christian missions?

13. Because Christianity lifts, vivifies and renovates. It is a spiritual vacuum cleaner to dusty germ-laden human souls. It freshens and sweetens. It is altogether good.

14. Because I am sure Christ meant exactly what he said when he commanded "Go ye into all the world and make disciples of all nations."—Dan Ward, in World Outlook.

VISITED AND POUNDED

Having been elected to serve Monticello, Apple's Chapel, and re-elected to Hine's Chapel for two Sundays per month, we moved to our new home on McLeansville R. F. D. 1, September 28. We were very busy in the home on October 4, when some one knocked at the front, and upon answering, we found Bro. Webb Isley and family of Hine's Chapel at the door. We took it for granted they had come to pay us a call, when presently other cars came and others and others until standing room was valuable. Soon we were showing our friends over the new home when we were called to go with the good wife into the kitchen and behold the floor, table, sideboard, and cabinet were literally covered with good things that had been brought to us. I thought I had read of poundings, but I, like all others, was almost speechless, about the only thing we could say was "thank you all" and the crowd quietly bid us "good night" and left us to look over the many nice things, and in looking we found the following:

About thirty pounds of sugar, molasses, preserves, flour, wheat, soda, baking powders, Dutch cleanser, pickles, peaches, pears, potatoes of both kinds, ham—two kinds, corn, beans, hens, young chickens, pumpkin, peas, rice, tomatoes, cucumbers, cakes, sausage, peanuts, bacon, eggs and cut flowers.

So if anyone should think that after another member should give us a choice cow to milk, and a coop of hens, and all these good things we could not live I would like to see him. For all these things we are very grateful and hope to be of more service to all who were numbered among those who came.

PASTOR RECEIVES A REAL TREAT

Near the close of the morning service on my last Sunday with the Elm Avenue church, I was asked by one of the ladies of the church for an opportunity to make an announcement.

Imagine my surprise when this lady announced that the members of the church and Sunday school wished to present to me a handsome gold watch, one of the best that manufacturers make. This was entirely unexpected and I failed miserably as I tried to express my appreciation. Surely my service for such a short time with these people did not demand such compensation, but God has been good to us this summer and I have been rewarded in more ways than one for my work.

In all my life I never saw such an earnest and persistent body of church workers. They really "go out into the highways and hedges" to bring people to God and into the church. During my stay with them I learned something of what can be done by people who are consecrated to God and not afraid to work. If I mistake not this will be one of our strongest churches in the years to come.

May the Lord bless them in all their work. I shall ever be thankful for their good and wholehearted friendship, as well as for the valuable lessons of service which I have learned from them.

COLUMBUS, GEORGIA

Recently a Christian Endeavor Society was organized at the Rose Hill Christian church. This society began under favorable circumstances and has a most promising outlook. There were 32 charter members and several names have been added to the roll since the organization. Mr. Lyman S. Robbins is president of the organization and his wife is pianist. They are capable leaders, having had considerable experience in this work.

For the last month the Sunday school has increased in interest and attendance. It is endowed with new lift as a result of a contest that is now on.

The Woman's Missionary Aid Society is doing fine work. In addition to sending a box to the Orphanage the ladies have about enough funds in the treasury to pay off a note on the parsonage.

PATTERSON'S GROVE

The meeting at Patterson's Grove was in progress four days following the second Sunday in August. Rev. J. W. Knight of Stokesdale, assisted in the meeting. There were four professions of faith, and two persons were baptized at our last appointment at this church.

The writer has accepted the work here for one Sunday each month for another year. I find the people of this church faithful and agreeable to serve. I would consider work for the remaining three Sundays of the month.

GIBSON

Mr. Luther Gibson of Rosemont, Norfolk County Va., departed this life Oct. 9, 1921, aged 28 years. Mr. Gibson was injured Saturday evening when the heating system at the residence of Dr. L. C. He was knocked about fifteen feet by the concussion and badly burned by escaping steam. He was hurried to the hospital where on Sunday morning he passed to his reward.

He united with the Rosemont church two years ago and since that time has been a faithful member.

He is survived by his widow, Mrs. Bertha Bunnell Gibson, his mother, Mrs. Mary E. Gibson, two small children, four sisters, Mrs. H. L. Bondurant, Mrs. L. C. Ferebee, Mrs. J. H. Fleming and Mrs. D. D. Johnston and two brothers, Mr. Howard L. and Mr. John Ben Gibson.

The funeral was conducted by his pastor, Rev. W. C. Hook assisted by Rev. W. R. Evans and Rev. O. D. Poythress of South Norfolk. The church was crowded with relatives and friends and the floral offerings were very beautiful. The remains were buried in the family plot at Rosemont. The loss is great to family and community.

THE STORY OF RUTH KRUMLING

(A Suggestion: Why not give this to one of your pupils to learn and tell to the class next Sunday?)

In the city of Shen Chow, China, a few years ago a Chinese baby girl was born. The father was displeased, for little girls are not welcome in China. The mother, fearing the wrath of the father, drowned the tiny baby in a bucket of water.

Later, another little girl came into their family, but the mother was allowed to keep this baby. The father had seen that little girls in the mission compound, where he was working, were loved and cared for.

When the baby was about six months old, the mother became very ill. Dr. Krumling, a medical missionary in Tungrenfu, was called, and when he came into the squalid little home, he saw that there was very little hope for the mother's recovery. He found the little baby girl wrapped in rags and crying as loud as she could, for she was hungry. Her father had tried to feed her some rice with chopsticks. Dr. Krumling brought a tin of milk, and told the father how to feed the child, but he tried to give the milk to the baby with chopsticks. She warded off the chopsticks with both tiny fists, and there was more milk on her face and clothes than she had to drink.

When the doctor came again, he saw that the baby would starve as she had no food, so he decided to take her home to his wife. He wrapped her in some rags and carried her to his home, hoping she would be very quiet. But, true to baby custom, this little girl gave forth such vigorous cries that Mrs. Krumling came running and said, "Oh, what have you here?" He told her to look. She shrank for an instant from the sight of the dirty baby, but overcame her first feeling and put the tea-kettle on for heating bath-water. They bathed the baby and borrowed some little baby-things from the other missionaries and dressed her. She hardly looked like the same child. Then they fed her milk, and she fell asleep, content. The next morning she opened her brown eyes and looked around, and seemed very comfortable in her new home. They called her "Brownie".

The mother grew worse and died. Dr. Krumling asked the father if he wanted the baby, but he shook his head, and told him he had enough other mouths to provide rice for, and that the doctor might keep the baby.

So Dr. and Mrs. Krumling have taken her to be their own child and have named her Ruth. She is a dear little girl, with all the cunning ways that American babies have. She speaks English to her parents, and Chinese to the servants, although she is not yet three years old.

Mothers in China think it no sin to drown their girl babies. Shall we send them the gospel of Him who said: "Suffer the children to come unto me, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." (Luke 18:16) —Exchange.

LET'S MAKE THE SOUTH "THE LAND OF THE CRAPE MYRTLE"

All over the South now the blossoming crape myrtles are adding to the beauty of the homes that are fortunate enough to have them. If you have no crape myrtles on your grounds, why not decide now to get some sprouts from a neighbor this fall, or else order a few from some nurseryman?

As we have often said before, if any other section of the United States had a virtual monopoly of a tree as beautiful as the crape myrtle, and so easily grown, that section would soon become famous as "The Land of the Crape Myrtle." Why then should not the South make use of its opportunities in this respect? The crape myrtle will not flourish in the colder states north of us. It is one of God's special gifts of beauty to the South; and no other flowering shrub or tree blooms for so long a period, has such a variety of colors and tints, or requires less care.

If only one crape myrtle sprout were set out in every Southern farmer's yard this fall, that action alone would not only help beautify each individual home but would also go far toward making the South "The Land of the Crape Myrtle." Is it not worth doing? —The Progressive Farmer.

MINISTERIAL STUDENTS AT ELON
—SOME COMMENT AND THEIR NAMES

(By R. S. Rainey, Correspondent)

Elon is doing its share this year to diminish the preacher shortage throughout the country, having already enrolled around a quarter hundred of young fellows who intend to spend their lives crusading against the devil. Not only is there a goodly number of them but those who know say that they are excellent material out of which to build sky-pilots. The relationship existing between the average student and these recruits who expect to be good soldiers of the Cross is said to be better this year than ever before. The following pertinent statement was recently made by one of the old students who was here during the ante (great) bellum days:

"I believe that the spirit existing between the divinity students and the ordinary students is better today at Elon than ever before. I know by personal experience that back in the days of 1912-14 the conditions were far short of what they might have been. I don't know just what the trouble was, but there was an inexpressible something that caused a lack of mutual understanding and appreciation, both sides being to blame. But now it is different. The ministerial students have thrown aside their false piety and decided to be real fellows and the other students have met them half way. Today when someone says that so and so is a fine fellow, in most cases you will find that he is a divinity student."

The preachers are largely represented in all the different college activities ranging from athletics to the campus course, a prelude to matrimony. Twelve of them are working their way through college, four have regular churches at which they preach, seven do supply preaching but have no regular churches, and all of them take active parts in the Religious Activities Organization. The majority of them are members of the Christian Church but there are some Baptists and Methodists. Five are members of the Student Volunteers. Several go out for athletics and some of them hold varsity places.

Among the preacher athletes may be mentioned Clem, football; Harold, football and gym team; M. J. W. White, gym team; Hainer, football, track and tennis, and Fogleman, baseball. Coach Corboy says that he likes to have divinity students on his teams. "Say what you will, these preachers are no pikers—they are game to the last inch of them", was the bouquet thrown by this man who does not believe in undeserved compliments.

In addition to the athletes, many others of the preachers have come into prominence. S. M. Lynam has won college fame with the poetry he has written. His poetry deals with the theme, "love", and those who know him best say there is a reason. Having his poem "Under 'Neath Maroon and Gold" adopted as the official college song is an honor that can come to but one student or person in the history of a college. This extremely high honor was accorded Mr. Lynam last Friday when the students accepted his poem and made plans to have it set to music.

There are others who come in for their share of notoriety. W. T. Scott is considered a male vamp. M. I. Crutchfield is the handsomest homely man on the hill, and the official laundryman, having for his motto "Clean hearts and clean underwear". R. O. Smith has acquired the title of "The gentleman of the opposition" by consistently opposing every question that is brought up among the students. H. W. May is a married man and as well as educating himself is doing his share toward propagating the race, having a whole house full of children. H. Lee Scott is noted for his oratorical abilities and for the miraculous way he can convince people who argue with him. G. A. Pearce is the college tonsorial artist, and W. M. Clem chief-of-police of the town. Rev J. D. Messiek sings in the choir and is quite a vocal artist.

It is reported from the ministerial association that the new members are showing up well, both as good fellows and good Christians.

Let Us

Let us give thanks

—for the growing conviction that war is an unmitigated curse to humanity and that it can really be abolished;

—for the earnest men and women who, in every land, are working to secure a far-reaching reduction in armament, as a first step toward a warless world.

Let us humbly confess our sin

—in not having realized more fully that every battlefield is a Calvary on which the Son of Man is crucified afresh;

—in not having set ourselves more firmly against the method of war and in having been too easily content to rely on the mailed fist more than on the power of love.

Let us pray

—that the spirit of Christian brotherhood may so fill our hearts that war will be more clearly seen to be a denial of the Gospel;

—that ways may now be found for the pacific settlement of every international dispute.

"There is no more inconceivable folly than this continued riot of expenditure on battleships at a time when great masses of humanity are dying of starvation."—Herbert Hoover.

"We cannot be satisfied with a mild curtailment of our military expenditure. Nothing less than a far-reaching reduction in armaments on sea and land can suffice."

The Fashion and Folly of Criticism

ORDINARY criticism is one of the easiest things to do. It requires no special thinking, not much prompting, and only a little cause—and often no cause. It takes more manhood to praise than it does to criticize.

There are two kinds of criticism—constructive and destructive. The first points out faults, failures and defects, and then shows what may be substituted to better advantage. Such criticism comes from the heart of those who love the cause or thing they are criticizing. The latter offers nothing better. It finds fault with persons, things, institutions and conditions, and talks against them—not for them.

Christians should not deal in destructive criticism. Theirs should be of the constructive type, pointing the way to progress and promoting movements that are forward. But Christians sometimes fall into such errors. Church leaders sometimes fall into the error of criticism of the negative sort. There are times that may call for this kind of talk, but we are now speaking of the habit of it.

The habit of offering destructive criticism always starts where real thinking ceases. Progress allows no room for negatives. When everything is succeeding, not much destructive criticism is heard. It is when the tide turns in affairs that negations start.

Leaders in small denominations sometimes fall into the comparative mood. They get the big mind and little heart. Comparisons are odious. If a man starts to comparing his mental, spiritual or material condition, by some other person whose comparative state is better, dissatisfaction soon develops. On the other hand, if we take the "Pollyanna" view of things, all is well. Comparisons are unfair.

But leaders in small denominations are not the only Church people who deal, at times, in negatives, and see everything going to pieces. The Methodist Church, all its branches, gathered for its Fifth Ecumenical Conference in London, September 6-16. It was possibly one of the most notable religious gatherings in many years. It was the real celebration of world-wide Methodism. And yet, this great body, according to a statement in one of its finest and ablest papers, had this to say, in commenting on some of the great addresses given: "It was the settled habit of many of those who addressed the conference to bewail the manifold shortcomings of the Churches." The speakers no doubt saw and felt defects; saw and felt morbid conditions. In the absence of patience to fully diagnose the condition, they sought to find it by the use of the probe.

We are led to think that some among us have fallen into the habit of criticizing. It is a dangerous state of affairs, and the sooner we can get out of it, the better it will be for the Church and the Kingdom.

When our college is not calling for funds or students, little is said. But when we are called upon to aid her financially and recruit her ranks with other students, it is easy to point out failures, follies and foolishness of those who have it in charge. Such adds other white hairs to the head of our young president, whom the Church is permitting to burn life's candle at both ends. One of these days he will break under the strain. All our praise then will not give him back to us. We know hundreds of ordinary laboring men and women who had a vacation last summer, but we know that our own hard-working college president had none. We know more—he did a real summer's work. The trustees themselves know whether they granted or requested him to take a rest. They know.

When money is pouring into the coffers of our mission treasury, it is all glory and the sound of victory is heard. When we mortals close our already deaf ears to great appeals, and the demand exceeds the income, it is an easy matter for some of us to say that our Mission Secretary is not doing his bit.

When THE CHRISTIAN SUN is self-supporting, and The Annual costing the price of two good cigars and meeting expenses, no one is seemingly concerned. But as expenses mount high and higher, and the income becomes less than the expense, it is following the line of least resistance to point out the Editor's errors and heap burdens upon him to destroy the efficiency of his work.

Other departments of the Church could be cited, but the principle applies the same in every case. They need more co-operation and less criticism of the kind they get.

The world is passing through a period of criticism. It is a period of readjustment—and every fellow wants it adjusted to suit his way of thinking, hence so much criticism.

This is no time to hoist the red flag. No one save a moss-back ultra conservative will do it. This is no time to use destructive criticism. It is a time to breathe the spirit of optimism and good will, win the confidence of men and lead them to Christ.

The Farmer

THE harvest season is closing, winter approaching, and our mind turns to the days of boyhood, when the old time corn shuckings were plentiful. How often have we enjoyed these work socials and then let our adventuresome boy spirit lead us into an o'possum hunt after the shucking.

These were pleasurable days. We thought at that time they were difficult, but now we know better as we stem the tide in public life we find the great comparison. It would be selfish, though, to long to go back; for it was then that we dreamed that some day we might offer humble and obedient service.

We have a special reason for thinking of the farmer at this season of the year. The year has been without its parallel. Without exception, to our knowledge, the seasons have been unusually dry. All conditions have been against the farmer. This has been his "hard" year. He has borne it like a soldier, and we salute him as he gathers his small crop and places it upon a market where prices are low. We have seen him on our own streets, and in our imagination now we see him in many places, counseling with his wife how to make the income from the small crop meet the demands of the family. We also see the children as they gather around the fireside, looking into the first fires of the golden autumn. Having passed that way, we know their wants, their desires. Shoes and clothes to buy—yes, little feet to be shod, bodies to be wrapped, appetites to be satisfied. The picture can be no greater and the home no happier where such scenes are found. Either bad or poor crops, prices or no prices, there is in the sunlight of this thought true and lasting happiness. The father who provides comfort for his companion and necessities for his children, let those comforts and necessities be great or small, there is happiness that comes to such a heart.

The farmer is the world's hope for bread; he is the one who sends the shuttle of business swiftly into all ranks and walks of life. It is in his heart to work and to labor that the world may be clothed and fed. It is from his homes, with few exceptions, where our great men have their beginning.

The approaching winter finds many farmers without the usual well filled barns and bursting bins, but our hope is that there are no despondent hearts, and that no companion shall be neglected or child go uncared for. It may take an added resolution to stem the tide and hustle out an hour earlier on a winter morning, but over the door of every man's home is written the word, "service."

We salute the man who, with an impoverished condition, rises to meet it like a soldier on the battle front. To every reader of THE SUN who is a farmer, and to every member of his household, we salute and greet you and encourage you and pray for you. Blessings be upon you in every walk of life.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Federal control of railroads is being advocated again by many. The contemplated strike is the basis of the recent discussion.

The New York World is seeking the opinion of some of the country's great men on the disarmament conference to be held in Washington beginning November 11.

At this writing the indications are that the great railway strike to be called October 30 will take place, at least in departments and some sections of the country.

The Census Bureau issues a statement that illiteracy has decreased in every State since 1910 except Connecticut. The desire for higher education is also growing, the statement points out.

The Senate has taken a formal and favorable vote to abolish the treaty with England and open the Panama Canal to all nations on equal terms. President Harding opposes the measure.

Europe is now saying that "America won the war and lost the victory." All Europe is deploring our aloofness in world affairs after so much co-operation during the war.

The Senate is now considering a bill to abolish the policy of newspapers carrying gambling news. The gambling craze is taking on large proportions and something should be done to check it.

All eyes are turned toward Washington for the conference on the limitation of arms. Every newspaper is making mention of the approaching meeting. Few have any distrust.

The unemployment conference called by Mr. Harding some days ago made the following recommendations: "(1) Readjustment of railroad rates to a fair basis of the relative value of commodities with a reduction of rates upon primary commodities, but at the same time safeguarding the financial stability of the railways. (2) Speeding completion of the tax bill. (3) Immediate settlement or definite postponement of tariff legislation in order that business may determine its future policy. (4) Passage of the rail refunding bill to increase railway employment and stimulate general employment. (5) Passage of world armament and consequent decrease of the tax burden. (6) Steps looking to the minimizing of fluctuations in exchange, to end the great slump to manufactured exports. (7) Definite programs of action that will lead to more regular employment in seasonal and intermittent industries, notably in the coal industry. (8) Restoration of the pre-war price relationships." These resolutions remind us of some of the resolutions passed at our conferences—easier to write, read, and adopt than to put into practice.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A DIARY

ON my recent visit to Porto Rico I kept a diary, writing at some interval or intervals during each day the scenes and impressions of that day.

It occurs to me now to transcribe that diary and leave it to the editor to print or eliminate what his experienced scissors will allow. The guide books and histories of Porto Rico would give a far more accurate and detailed body of information about Porto Rico and the Porto Ricans than my diary will convey, for be it borne in mind that my entire journey only covered four weeks exactly one-half of which was actually spent on the island. But I haven't a guide book, did not get hold of one, and there is not time now to consult a history. The "scenes and impressions" then are only those of this writer. Others of course would naturally witness other scenes and have different impressions.

I went to Porto Rico, sent there on an errand by our Mission Board. That errand was to find out, First: What is the present status of our mission work in Porto Rico? Second: Shall we put more into the work there as a mission field, or is it time now to withdraw and seek an opening in some other Latin American country? With these queries in mind the task was begun. But to my diary.

"Saturday A. M., September 17, 1921. I awoke this morning at 7 o'clock in a very comfortable room on the 14th floor of the Pennsylvania Hotel, New York. They tell me that this is the largest hotel in the world, having 2200 rooms, and these rooms are in such demand one has to make engagements ahead, or one will go elsewhere for bed and board on arrival. I had engaged ahead and on arrival last p. m., had time after room assignment to look around awhile. This is more than a hotel; it is an institution. A great library is at your convenience, also reading and writing rooms, palm parlors and flower rooms, lecture halls, and what not. Taking the elevated railway at Seventh Avenue at 9:30 a. m., "down town", we arrive half hour later at the Battery. Across the East River a ferry lands us near pier No. 35. The San Lorenzo, a good specimen of an ocean going liner, is tied up here and nods a welcome to us as we walk up her ample gang plank at 10:35. Rev. W. P. Minton, our Foreign Secretary, Dayton, Ohio, and Rev. W. H. Martin, former missionary to Porto Rico are companions of the journey, and with a young Porto Rican returning home after a vacation in America we four are to share such comforts and conveniences for living and sleeping as we can extract from room No. 22, Main Deck. The room is not large, but has four comfortable beds or bunks, two on either side one over the other, fastened to the wall. At eleven o'clock our time, 12 o'clock their (sea-going) time the great old cables that were fastened to the pier were hoisted, everything was hustle and bustle, friends and acquaintances waved goodbye to each other and under the steady pull of a powerful tug our good ship glides out from her resting place and immediately points her nose toward the open sea. It was cloudy and a gentle rain was falling, but the wind and the sea were calm. There was somehow a tug at the heart of this writer as he passed out to sea, for he was not sure of himself as a sailor, and was not altogether satisfied about the security and safety of his ship and sea journey anyhow. I wonder now why some one else might not go on this errand, some one who knows and is certain about the sea, and leave me alone to walk or ride and live on terra firma—and where I could at least hear from my family day by day—and know what was taking place in the world.

But in spite of such apprehensions there was a certain sort of wild intoxication as one passed out to sea and all shore lines began to fade and sink in the ever receding distance. So with this drop of ink I will write in my diary that "The sensation of passing out to sea is agreeable."

The Statue of Liberty stands high and looks a longing "bon voyage" and a happy return to us. Hydroplanes are coming and going, and big ships glide slowly into harbor from safe journeys across many seas. We are reassured and feel that in three or four weeks we too shall sail safely back into the same harbor. At 12:30 the ship's chimes from the loveliest melodeon calls us to luncheon. My! the eats are fine, and are included in the purchase price of your transportation. So order what you will. A soup, a roast of mutton, peach short cake, ice cream and Porto Rican coffee satisfied this writer. (Dinner was not so far off, and one wants to be ready for dinner on a boat). We had as table companions at luncheon a Porto Rican dry-goods merchant. Lives at Ponce, comes to the United States at least twice a year to buy goods. He is an intelligent gentleman, but the pity of him is that he speaks very poor, or rather very little, English. He can jabber away in Spanish, as do about three-fourths of all the other passengers on this boat. What a babel of voices I have fallen into!

We pay $1.50 each for the rent of very comfortable deck chairs and lounge in these till 2 p. m. At one thirty the last scenes and signs of shore lines have disappeared and only the encircling sea is visible—and the blue vault above. From 2 to 3 an agreeable "nap" in my state room prepares me for the gentle breeze and the mild sea of the afternoon which I am now enjoying. The air is damp from the recent showers, but braeing and delightful. There is no land in sight. How small indeed is man, and how meager seems all his handiwork, when you are on the big ocean—and alone with nature's infinite domain! You can only see 15 miles in any direction on the sea, and then the horizon cuts off your vision. Thus God intended man to feel and realize his narrow confines and meager limitations while here on earth and in the flesh.

We sail almost due south from New York direct to Porto Rico, and shall see no land, and touch no pier, till we arrive 1400 miles away in San Juan harbor. Porto Rico means "Rich Port", and is an island 100 miles long, 40 miles wide, has all tropical fruits, plants and flowers, is cob-webbed with nearly 800 miles of good road, some of it the best road to be found in America. So a Porto Rican traveler tells me while we chat on deck. And Porto Rico is the most beautiful of all the West Indies. All right, entice us on. Every native thinks his land the richest in all, or in at least many, outstanding glories and virtues. It is well they do—or more people would be on the move than now are, and we already have enough moving vans and "motion" folks now.

"Pure as the sea", is an adage. But how does the sea purify itself? It has been the world's wash-pot and waste receptacle for thousands of years. I guess it purifies itself by its never ending, untiring laving. Forever and forever and forever the sea is in nervous, energetic motion. Its unyielding energy does the work no doubt. And then God gave it plenty of salt for purification. At 4:30 a boat drill was ordered. All passengers were called out on deck and taught how to secure and adjust to oneself the life preserver. All life boats are also lowered for dropping into the water. My, but here is hoping this is a useless precaution for this trip. Still one is comforted in knowing what to do if the worst comes.

Besides looking at the sea and the ship and fellow passengers I have been reading Bishop Brent on "Leadership"—a book Mr. Hermon Eldredge recommended at Chautauqua, Ocean View, last summer, but which I had not had time to read till now. From its page I transcribe in my diary here far out at sea these lines, for they fit my meditation:

"For while the tired waves, vainly breaking
Seem here no painful inch to gain,
Far back, through creeks and inlets making
Comes silent, flooding in, the main."

Dinner is announced at 5:30. Good bye meditations! I will only take soup, buttered toast, roast goose, mashed potatoes, blue-berry pie, and hot tea—for I do want a good night's sleep tonight.

After dinner there is a concert with piano, victrola and some good voices. I read more Brent and pen these last lines of my first day's diary. The wind is blowing without, our great ship speeds happily, I have had a comfortable evening and already 150 miles out at sea at 9 p. m., "I lay me down to sleep."

(To be continued)

J. O. ATKINSON.

HAS TITHING BENEFITTED THE SPIRITUAL LIFE?

"Has tithing benefited the spiritual life of your people?" In every case it has been a spiritual blessing. Some time ago, two young people came out from the world and into my church. They started their Christian career as tithers. It was the first big thing they decided to do as Christians. God has blessed them abundantly. They are happy in business and Christian service.

Does tithing help my people in general activities? The best way I know how to answer this question as I review a true situation in my field, is to say that without any thought of tithing at the annual election of officers, the tithers got most of the work. I think there was a reason. The folks who tithe in my church are usually on hand to help out in the work other than giving. It helps wonderfully in keeping up the general interest in church work.

Has it been a success in my church? If I tell you that the tithers are giving more to every cause of the Kingdom and that they have more for themselves than nominal Christians who do not tithe, I suppose you can say that tithing is a success. Perhaps the greatest reward and the finest success is in the joy realized in the lives of the tithers themselves. They usually seem to have a satisfied mind and are contented with most things, and are not hard to satisfy. They encourage and help the pastor and render much useful and benevolent service in the community.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

ELON LETTER

N a recent letter in discussing the reasons why, with a platform that meets the hearty response of all true Christians, we have in latter years lost ground, it was said that what we especially need is vision. How are we to get it?

Our leaders must get it and communicate it to the rest of us. If we have any leaders who refuse to see, then we must either decline to grow or exchange them for others. The cause is always greater than the individual and whenever the good of the cause is being hindered by some well-intended, but reactionary leader, wisdom would suggest a new leadership. This applies to the local church officers, to general officials and to officers of all church enterprises. It applies with peculiar force to the president and faculty members of our college. Of course it applies to pastors, but it applies equally well to deacons—it applies to all. We must have leaders of vision, seers, prophets, and no price is too high to pay for them.

One of the sure sources of vision is careful, constant study. First in this respect I would place the Bible. It is our creed, our rule of faith and practice. We must study it, not simply for proof texts or sermon subjects, but intensively that we may imbibe its spirit. The Bible teaches brotherhood, spiritual democracy, a world wide obligation of service. No man who studies it can put his local church before the larger interests of the Kingdom. No man can study it and be satisfied merely to labor for his local cause. Let us practice the creed we have espoused. By all means let us study it.

Then we shall need to study other books. A new spirit has come to the world, a new aspiration to the church. But do our people know it? Do our leaders know it? With very few exceptions, no. Our Publishing Agent tells me our people do not buy books. I fear they do not read them. The perennial flow of new religious books, filled with vision and wisdom, constantly pouring from our presses, if neglected by any body of Christians, will fossilize them in a generation. We cannot have access to them all, but we can own some and master them. Some time ago I urged our laymen to give their pastor a book each week, at least, one a month. I urge it again, only first, my brother, read it yourself. You too will be left high and dry in vision unless you also read the books that interpret the Word in the spirit of the present age.

And then we need to express our new ideas in private and social life, in organizations appropriate to realize them, in our teaching and preaching, and in our Church periodicals. I have read THE CHRISTIAN SUN since boyhood and the Herald of Gospel Liberty, Christian Missionary, and Christian Vanguard for many years. Except for field notes and the contributions of editors and department officials, I venture to say I can count the constructive thinkers who have during these years contributed to the columns of any one of these papers on my fingers and toes. And as for writing in the general religious periodicals, I suspect we could count them all on our fingers.

Have we ceased to think? Then let us express ourselves. There is no way so sure to bring vision to our people, as for our religious papers to be crowded with the inspiring, life-giving thoughts of our people,—not controversy, not doctrine, not dogma, but interpretations, faithful, true, humble, trustful, hopeful of the program of Jesus.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE—IMPRESSIONS

 HE twenty-third annual session of the Alabama Conference met with the Corinth church, near Wadley in Randolph County, Alabama, October 11-12, 1921. The secretary will report the proceedings. I wish to give a few impressions.

A Fine People

Six visits to Alabama and Georgia have convinced me that we have no finer people in the Southern Christian Convention than those of these two Southern Conferences. The character and ability of the men and women they have sent to Elon College and the positions of honor and responsibility they are taking in the church are but a prophecy of their possibilities in the future.

A Tried People

The boll-weevil, low price of cotton, unfavorable seasons, together with the general business depression, have conspired to render the past year a trying ordeal. The oldest men in the Conference declare it has been the hardest in their experience. But they seem to have come through it with a stronger faith and a more zealous determination to labor and sacrifice for the Church. The spirit of unity and fellowship throughout the Conference was fine.

A Forward-looking People

For decades they have hoped and prayed for a college in their midst to meet the educational needs of the two Conferences. The last session of the Southern Christian Convention authorized such a college, elected trustees, and appointed a committee to select a site and get a charter. Wadley, Randolph County, Alabama, was selected. On October 13, the particular location in Wadley was decided upon by the committee—a site of about fifty acres, all within the incorporated limits of the town, beautifully located and can be made an ideal college site. Its elevation overlooks the town and the view cannot be obscured.

A Hospitable People

Southern hospitality in its purity and simplicity prevailed. This was in sufficient evidence over at Corinth, but it did not satisfy Wadley. The church at Wadley invited the Conference to hold its last day there and the citizenship seconded the same. This was in consideration of a great educational rally and an old time antebellum barbecue to be "pulled off" in "due and ancient form" plus the modern touches. Five cattle and six pigs—nearly three thousand pounds—were sacrificed.

The invitation had gone out extensively and was extensively accepted. Randolph County was there and a part of Chambers and Roanoke counties also. After full justice to pig, beef, Brunswick stew, fried chicken, pimento and chicken salad sandwiches cake, pie, custard, pickle, hot coffee, etc., the great crowd retired to the amphitheatre on the hill side for the music and speaking. The mayor, Dr. A. J. Clardy, presided and welcomed the crowd. Addresses were made by Dr. G. O. Lankford of Burlington, N. C., Col. Holton Lovejoy of LaGrange, Ga., Attorney D. R. Fonville of Burlington, N. C., Rev. G. D. Hunt, the writer and others. The principal address of the day was by Mr. Fonville and was fine both in literary quality and practical import. A good band from LaGrange furnished music throughout.

A People One in Purpose

The citizens of Wadley are united in their interest in the college. The mayor said there was not a knocker in the town. They subscribed $23,000.00 to be paid in cash and gave the site of fifty or more acres, the latter being the gift of Mr. J. M. Hodge of the Wadley bank.

The location at Wadley meets with general approval. No friction exists on account of competing places and the particular site in Wadley is satisfactory to the citizens. A great opportunity presents itself to the Church and kingdom of that section and the people are determined to meet it.

LET US HAVE THE FACTS

HAT are the facts in the case? It seems to me that while we have the question up, we may as well thrash it out, so that THE SUN's readers may study it for themselves.

Is the World Getting Better or Worse?

Of course there are different opinions held by different men, touching this question; but let us not forget that one fact is worth a dozen opinions which are founded, not on facts, but on misconceptions of the situation. I now propose to give some of the figures on which I base my contention that the world, morally and spiritually, is getting worse.

I am not contending that the world is growing worse educationally, financially, or in its inventions, or in its modern improvements. My contention is that morally and spiritually, the world is growing worse. Mind you, I do not claim that this means, or even hints at the final defeat of the gospel—never! The gospel, in the Lord's time, will certainly triumph, and Christ shall be crowned with the glory of the Victor. You may call that pessimism, but I do not so call it—I call it the best optimism the world has ever known. Besides, as I showed in my last article, this view is based on the plain teachings of the Bible.

Now, while you think of it, get your Bible and read the following passages of Scripture, and see for yourself if I am right on that point:

1 Tim. 4:1-6 gives the Spirit's teaching on this question in part. 2 Tim. 3:1-7, which tells us of perilous times in the last days. 2 Tim. 4:3, 4, which tells of the time of the "itching ear" teachers. 2 Peter 3:4, 5, which tells of the talk of the men who oppose this view.

Not only does Paul tell of the churches of the last days, but Jesus tells us what the people will be doing in the last days, and Jesus and Paul agree, and this agreement is in perfect harmony with the character of the day in which we live in a general way.

Now, as to the facts of the present world situation, as showing that this is an age in which the world is growing worse, let us have your undivided attention:

1. The moral and spiritual standards of the early part of the 20th century are very low. We believe that no sane and thoughtful and well-read man can deny this statement, and that being true, we could hardly expect a situation other than what we have—the world getting worse as the natural outgrowth of a low moral and spiritual state. It would be a marvel if a low moral and spiritual state of the world should bring the world to its best condition, as it must necessarily do, if the world is really getting better.

2. It is claimed, and we think no cultured person will be found to dispute it, that at this time the world is cursed with a wave of crime, such as the civilized world has not known since the Dark Ages. This could not be, if the world were getting better all the while.

3. Men and women seem to have forgotten the authority of the Bible. With the masses the Ten Commandments seem to have been repealed and the gospels discredited. This could not be if the world were truly getting better. The Word of God will stand forever. See Matt. 5:18, 19.

4. The destruction of the home among the masses is something awful. If the world were getting better, could such a state exist in so vital a part of our social fabric? I think no sane and well informed man will dispute the loss which has come to the human family in this respect in late years. Do you ask for the evidence to support this claim? Then turn to our court records and read the history of the divorce business. If I am not greatly mistaken, the court records show that an average of three divorces have been applied for in the United States for every minute of the court's working day for the last twenty years, and of these divorces applied for, two of the three have been granted. If the world were really and truly getting better, how could such a state exist in the social fabric of the early part of the 20th century, or any other century, as for that?

5. I saw the statement made recently in an influential magazine that it is now being taught that man has outgrown the institution of the family, and now they are advocating the idea that human relations have come into the same laxity as exists among animals. If the world were getting better, could such teaching be promulgated without a veritable storm of protests from the public?

6. Human life seems to have lost its sacredness. The spirit of violence seems to rage in all conditions of human society. You can hardly glance over the news columns of any daily without seeing the notice of murders—murders of the most awful character—the husband kills his wife, the wife kills her husband, parents kill their children, neighbor kills his neighbor, the business man kills his fellow business man, and the end is not yet. If the world were truly and genuinely getting better, could such a state of human society exist? I am told that murders are no more common now than in any other age of the world; that what makes it seem so is the great increases in population, that murders are not more common now than in other ages, in proportion to the number of the people. That is a plausible plea, but statistics show that the increase in the number of murders far exceeds the increase in population. That being true, the plausible plea of no more murders now than formerly, except in proportion to the increase in population, falls to the ground and is utterly worthless.

7. There seems to be a wave of opposition to God now sweeping the earth, not merely the United States, but the civilized world. In a smaller measure this has always been true, but now it is more defiant and blatant and full of irreverence, and so common among the masses. In discussing this fact, one writer declares, "We have not had the like of it since the fall of Rome." Another scholarly and thoroughly non-pessimistic writer goes further and declares that "the world has not seen the like of the present opposition to God since that dark night in which Christ came into the world" to die for the sins of a world which had gone mad in sin. If the world is truly getting better, such a state of opposition to God could not exist, I think.

8. There seems to be a well defined dislike to Christ, developing among men and women of this day. This is not true merely of the rabble, but in some large measure it is true of many so-called church people. They deny His deity, His divinity, the power of His atonement, the truth of His miracles, the fact of His Virgin birth, declaring that Jesus was the natural son of Joseph and Mary, all tending to show that Jesus was not the divine Son of God and the Savior of sinners. Does any man of common sense wish to affirm that all these tend to show that the world is getting better? If so, let him speak and make the fact plain to the public.

I did hope I might finish this paper in one issue, but I find it is too lengthy, and so will have to wait for another issue of THE SUN. Till then, let us give these matters candid and serious attention. It is the truth we wish rather than any human theory in the absence of the facts.

THE WORLD IS ALL RIGHT

N the discussions of the doctors and the editors as to the question, is the world growing better or worse today, leave it to a layman to say that this grand and glorious old world is all that God intended it, and He made it. God made all things the human family needed, then created man in His own image, and gave him intelligence, a mind, a will and a soul; then He gave him all things for his comfort, and gave him with these things the chance of choosing life or death. Then man chose death, and the human family has chosen to serve Satan and follow death ever since. Think of it, doctors, every living creature has kept its place, every form of vegetation has kept its place, and both have filled their mission the way God intended them, but intelligent man has grieved the Lord that created him by wilfully and woefully choosing death. The human family has stooped to things much lower than all things else created by God.

Do not quibble, doctors. If the Word of God is true, and I believe it is, the human family today is further from God than ever in the history of the world, and why? Because people are selfish and do things their own way and not the Christ way. Paul said (Acts 4:12): "Neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." And Jesus said, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." In the study of the life of the lowly Jesus, we find Him preaching words of comfort to His hearers, giving them the simple spiritual food that helped their souls and made them happy and content. We find Him comforting the heart-broken, helping the afflicted, and the like. We of today are too busy with plans, system, organizations and various other petty things, while thousands about us are swiftly gliding down the toboggan slide of sin into the pit of an unescapable hell, without a hope, while we hold our heads high and busy ourselves about routine things. I think that Jesus' way would be to go about quietly in the spirit of the Nazarene, and see if we could not reach down, as He did, and comfort and show our brethren the way of life. Oh, doctors, as a layman let me prevail on the clergy to stop giving the people "theory dope," and tell them the plain old story of Jesus. No, the world is no worse; it is beautiful, indeed, but the poor, stumbling human family is in dire need of a closer walk with Jesus, else they are lost.

SUFFOLK LETTER

NTERDENOMINATIONAL movements, international questions, and world-visions have so occupied the public mind in modern times as to rob local and individual obligation of their useful place in the activities that build up permanent neighborhoods and friendly citizenship. No one would be reckless enough to undervalue the larger enterprises, whether industrial, political or religious; but it would be equally unwise to ignore or neglect the importance of individual character and service. Railroad corporations represent billions of dollars and millions of men, and serve many billions and millions more. The products of farm, mine and mill would find no market, and supply no human need, were there no transportation facilities to carry necessities from producer to consumer. Every whistle upon land or sea is the voice of service for mankind. What is true of one corporation is, in this large sense, true of all. But before and after these millions of men and billions of dollars at work on this large scale is the little tiller of the soil and the customer who purchases and uses goods.

The government must not use its powers to serve the large and the few. The smallest voter and the least taxpayer are entitled to the same treatment as the largest and wisest man. Even-handed justice is the highest point of human government, and any other administration of law is a travesty upon government. In fact, the attention and care of the least is the highest exhibition of progress. Modern civilization shows this in its care of children. The latest effort at the salvation and improvement of the human race is seen in Sunday school, public school, and child welfare. It is no longer considered the function of the church to convert adults, or train citizens as they reach the majority age, but to lead them to accept Christ and the obligation of citizenship in childhood. The individual life is watched and directed with care. Back in the home where individual affection and service count the most is where character is formed and fundamental principles are fixed in the life.

The neighborhood is one of the greatest centers in human society. It is true the city is the greatest human center, because of its greater content of people, money and business. It is the great fall in human society. It is the great human power. It is the Niagara of the race; but away back of this roar is the quiet lake, the winding river, the forest and field until you reach what we know as the neighborhood. It is a group of simple homes, with a modest church, and a school. The lowing herd, the bleating sheep, the squealing pigs, the cackling and crowing chickens, the farm bell, the field song toward the closing day, the neighborly visits, the motherly mothers, the fatherly fathers, the brotherly brothers, the sisterly sisters, and the filial children, all moved by an impulse that is natural and free. The Sunday school may lack efficiency in conduct, but it gets at the heart of its meaning and the real word of God. The church may lack style, but it has sincerity and faith. The choir may not touch artistic heights, but they "sing with the spirit and the understanding also." The preaching must be good or the congregation will discover its faults. It may be one sermon a month; but the people think it over, talk it over, and get the meat out of it, if there is any meat in it. In the city it is not so. It comes too often. The people hear the sermon, pass to other things; hear another at night, pass out to the street; then to other things on Monday and the sermon is not gone over in thought or conversation. The neighborhood requires better preaching than the city, as they require fresher eggs. There is a great field for fine service in the country church. Time and quiet open the way for a Sunday "remembered and kept holy."

A PLEBEIAN'S PROTEST

I was shocked to read what Dr. Harper had to say last week in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN on the subject of music. Surely he did not mean to pass judgment on the musical tastes of the Almighty Himself! I do not claim to be a "person of taste and culture," if in so being I have merely to "tolerate" the beautiful songs sung by Christian Endeavorers and Sunday school children. Ragtimes, many of them, certainly are, but the very lips from which they roll make them beautiful; and the swing and force of such songs have an energizing influence that could never be brought about by the "soulful creations of the aspiring heart."

I have the greatest respect for Dr. Harper as an educator, as a "person of culture," and as a Christian leader. As for myself—and there are many others like me—I am a plain plebeian and deem it an honor to be considered a plain, ordinary fellow. However, I do believe myself to be civilized, and, therefore, raise my voice in protest when Dr. Harper ridicules some of my favorite songs of worship and says I am a savage for liking them. Here are a few of my favorites that will have to be classed as ragtime: "Love Lifted Me," "Since Jesus Came Into My Heart," "Brighten the Corner," "Dwelling in Beulah Land," and many others similar. If liking these songs constitutes savagery, then look out for me—I am a dangerous cannibal.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

A few days ago I received a letter that read like this: "We have in our community a girl of 13 years, and her little sister is 13 months old. A little more than a year ago this girl's mother died and left a little infant girl. This girl of 13 now, with the aid of her father, has kept the little baby and seemed to be getting along fairly well, but last week the father was taken sick and died, and now the older sister is left helpless with the little sister of 13 months. It is her request that they be sent to an orphanage where she can take the little sister and not have to part with her. It is a very sad and pitiful case. Will you take them in your institution?"

In my imagination I can look in that little home and see that noble girl of 13 whose heart is broken by the loss of father and mother, clasping that little sister that is so dear to her with the tender affection of a mother, but helpless and in need, praying that some kind hand may offer assistance and find her a place in some institution of charity where she can still have the sweet companionship of the little baby sister.

Our income is very small, and has been for several weeks, and I might say several months, but we hope, as our people begin to gather in their fall crops and place their tobacco and cotton on the market, that contributions will grow in number and in amount so that we may be able to do a larger work.

AS OTHERS SEE US

The Herald of Gospel Liberty, the official organ of the Christian Church, believes that "there can be no excuse in this day and age for other than the most perfect understanding and the utmost fairness toward each other" between the Christian Church and the Disciples Church. The Disciples are what most of us know as the Christian Church. The Herald believes the time has come for these two Churches to get together. But "above everything else," says the Herald, "it is time for both Churches to manifest to the world a bigness of mind and a sweetness of heart commensurate with the kingdom of God. Neither body can ever hope to promote the union of Christ's followers while it itself assumes a spirit of sectarianism that is outstandingly offensive to other denominations or erects a barrier to Church membership which excludes the larger part of Christendom. Both like the name 'Christian,' and much confusion and friction have come between them because both have used it. Both pride themselves on having no other creed than the Bible, and both have had a history blackened by as much controversy as any creed-bound Church. Both have a democratic form of government, and both have suffered by having this liberty of the individual and the local Church many times prostituted into stubbornness and unwillingness to co-operate. Both insist that it is the right and duty of every Christian to interpret the Bible for himself and settle his own belief between himself and his God; and then in both Churches have always been, and are yet, those who make life unpleasant for every one who does not believe just as they do. Both have pretended to the world that they were offering a basis of Church membership on which all followers of Christ could unite; and yet the Disciples have openly, and as their one most insistent and outstanding tenet, required immersion, excluding all unimmersed from membership, thus denying the right of the individual; and many of the pastors and members of the Christian Church have contended so strongly for immersion that it often has been impossible to distinguish them from the Disciples."—Christian Advocate, Nashville, Tenn.

"The golden rule of service: It was said of Hezekiah, king of Judah: 'And in every work that he began in the service of the house of God, and in the law, and in the commandments, to seek his God, he did it with all his heart and prospered.' Whole-hearted service is the secret of power in the kingdom of God."

THE BULLETIN

The American Christian Convention will meet in its quadrennial session with the Burlington Christian church in 1922. The opening date is October 17.

Rev. A. T. Banks has changed his address from Ramseur, N. C., to 714 Seminary Ave., Richmond, Va. Brother Banks is now in Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, taking post-graduate work.

The Editor enjoyed his worship last Sunday by preaching, at the 11 o'clock hour, to the Graham congregation. Rev. Paul S. Kennett, of Elon College, preached at the night service.

Miss Lucy Eldredge did splendid work for THE CHRISTIAN SUN at the Georgia and Alabama Conference, last week. Miss Eldredge is vitally interested in all parts of the Church work, and is progressing nicely with her new work as Field Secretary for the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor of the Convention.

Drs. J. O. Atkinson, W. W. Staley, L. E. Smith, G. O. Lankford, Rev. J. F. Morgan, and possibly others of our Southern brethren, attended the Board meetings held in Dayton, Ohio, last week. We have no special announcement in hand, from any of the Boards, to make, but understand that constructive and practical measures were undertaken in all departments.

Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, minister of the People's Christian church, Dover, Delaware, requests that all persons who expect to attend the Eastern Virginia Conference notify him at once in order that arrangements may be made in advance for entertainment. The church will furnish free entertainment to those who attend.

Mr. Warren McCulloch, a graduate of Elon College, class of '17, and who during most of his college career was linotype operator on THE CHRISTIAN SUN, has returned to his "first love" by accepting a position with the Burlington Printing Company. Mr. McCulloch is one of the best and most skillful operators that has ever set type on THE SUN.

Miss Eula Dixon, one of the best known women in Alamance County, N. C., passed to her reward October 21 and was buried at Cane Creek last Sunday, the funeral being conducted by Dr. Daniel Albright Long. Miss Dixon was in her 50th year, and had been closely connected with everything of her community and county that tended toward its upbuilding. She was a devoted member of the Friends Church.

THE SUN is requested to announce that on Sunday, November 27, the dedication of the new church at Apple's Chapel will take place. At the same time the pastor, Rev. C. E. Geringer, will be formally installed as pastor of Apple's Chapel, Hines' Chapel and Monticello churches. Dr. J. O. Atkinson is to preach the sermon on this occasion. Strong Drink in a Nation's Life (World's Temperance Sunday) Isa. 28:1-13.

The Golden Text: "Woe unto him that giveth his neighbor drink." Heb. 2:15.

"Temperance is the controlled and right use of our powers and possessions in service; intemperance is the uncontrolled or wrong use of our powers and possessions in self-indulgence."—Zillah Foster Stevens.

The following pledge is excellent for memory work for children in connection with temperance teaching. (and adults will do well to heed its truth.):

"My body is a temple,
To God it does belong.
He bids me keep it for His use,
He wants it pure and strong.
The things that harm my body
I must not use at all,
Tobacco is a hurtful thing,
Another, alcohol,
Into my mouth they shall not go;
When tempted, I shall answer, 'No',
And every day I'll watch and pray,
'Lord keep me pure and strong alway.'"
'Glorify God, therefore, in your body.' I Cor. 6:20.

"CHRISTMAS IS COMING"

The calendar tells us that it is only about two months until Christmas, and as this fact thrills every boy and girl, it must also impress our Sunday school superintendents and teachers that it is not too early to be thinking about what kind of a Christmas will be observed in our Sunday schools this year.

Have you ever read the beautiful story of "Marcia's Dream"? If not, at your first opportunity, read the tale of a little girl who, falling asleep before the open fire, dreamed of her birthday soon to come. In her dream, the longed-for day arrived. Everybody seemed happy, but nobody seemed to pay any special attention to little Marcia. All over the house, she could hear the joyful voices calling out wishing happiness to all on "Marcia's birthday". Everybody received gifts—except Marcia. In the celebration of the day, everybody shared—except Marcia. Even at the party in the evening there was no thought given to the one whose birthday was being observed. To the little girl, it was "Marcia's birthday" without any love or thought for Marcia. And the little girl awoke, relieved that the unhappy day had been but a dream, until she thought of Christmas, the Christ's birthday, and how often the Christ had no part in the merry celebration of His birthday. And does not this tale bring a message to our Christmas Committees, a call to make room for the Christ, to really celebrate the King's birthday?

One of our leading Sunday school workers has said: "May we not suggest that we can have Santa in the school and in the home if you wish it, but in Sunday school we should not forget the King. Let us bring Him our gifts this year instead of giving gifts to one another. If you wish to plan for a Christmas treat for the children in your Primary Department, do so. If you know of some one or more children who will have no Christmas, if you do not make it for them, then, by all means see that they are remembered." "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me."

There is a splendid little book, published by the Meigs Publishing Company, called "White Gifts for the King" and written by Phoebe Curtis, which carries out in a very beautiful way the spirit of a "giving Christmas" in an inspiring program. This book has been completely rewritten this year and made suitable for today. The book contains many suggestions regarding decorations, gifts and the service to honor the King's birthday. The leading idea of this whole Christmas service is "giving" and the gifts may be life, or the dedication of one's whole life to Jesus Christ, service promised to the Church and its organizations, or substance, that is food or clothing for the needy. It is a real birthday service for the King of Kings. Many a Sunday school would be uplifted by such a service. Write to Rev. C. B. Riddle for the book, or to the Field Secretary for information.

But whatever program you plan this year to celebrate the Christmas season, remember the Christ. Build your service for Him, and around Him as the one to be honored. Let the lessons of the Sunday preceding lead up to the great Christmas lesson. Let us begin to think about Christmas!

RALLY SERVICES AT FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH, RICHMOND, VA.

On the first Sunday in October we help our Rally Service. Our number being small we could only give a small program; but under the leadership of Mrs. W. T. Walters it was a decidedly good one. The children entertained us with songs and recitations and four of them received certificates of promotion from the first year Junior work to the second year Junior.

Among the most interesting features of the program was a talk to the children, while the grown folks listened, given by Mr. Richards, who is a great Sunday school worker. We were indeed glad to welcome Miss Lucy Eldridge to our school and enjoyed her talk very much. We feel we shall be greatly benefitted by her presence here.

Our school seemed to take a fresh hold on the work at this service and we hope to build up a large Sunday school during the coming year. We do not feel discouraged because our crowds are small but enter into our service with a desire to get the folks talking about us which is the best advertisement we can possibly have and then we know the others will come. We shall be glad to welcome any of THE SUN readers who may be passing through our town to worship with us should they be here on Sunday.

"TELL ME A STORY"

A LITTLE SERMON BY THE ROADSIDE

By D. H. Talmadge

An old man, holding at the end of a long halter strap an old horse, stood one sunny afternoon at a point where a country lane joined a great highway. The horse nibbled at the grass by the roadside. Immediately behind the man an old dog sat upon his haunches. Automobiles whizzed by, an endless procession, some going toward the city, which lay in a haze in the distance, some going in the other direction where, so far as the eye could discern at that point, were only a mighty forest and a range of mountains.

And it chanced to come about that day that a big touring car, in which were two men, two women and a child, stopped near the place where the old man and the old horse and the old dog were, and its driver was unable to make it go again. The sun blazed down fiercely, and the driver, in his efforts to adjust the difficulty, was soon in a sweat, both physically and mentally. The old man, followed by the horse and the dog, moved forward.

"Better let us pull you up into the shade," he suggested.

"Bless your heart!" said the driver, wiping the sweat from his eyes, "go ahead."

So, improvising a harness from a rope included in the equipment of the touring car, the old man hitched the old horse to the machine and drew it into the shade.

"Sometimes it seems to me," spoke the old man then, addressing the smiling women and the frankly grateful men, "as if every living thing was dependent upon every other living thing. It is hard, maybe, to understand it in the broad sense—covering all animalkind, I mean—but if it is true in one instance, it must be true in many. None of us are justified in holding ourselves quite independent of the other animal forms in our creation. Everything, even an old horse, is worthy of our respectful and kindly consideration. Yes, and even an old dog, too."

The child—a little girl—had stepped out of the automobile, and, in answer to something in the old man's eyes, had gone to him and taken hold of his hand. He beamed down at her.

"I am going to prove to you what I said about the dog," he chuckled. "The horse has already proved himself. You are thirsty, aren't you?"

"Dweadfully," admitted the child. "So is mamma and all of us."

"I knew it." The old man pointed up the lane. "See that house yonder; with the red barn behind it? That is where we live, the horse and the dog and I and some two-legged folks I think a heap of. Well, in a place up there is a gallon or two of ice-cold buttermilk. Like buttermilk?"

"Yes", came in fervent chorus from the entire party.

"All right." The old man took a book from his hip pocket, tore a leaf from it, and with a stubby pencil wrote a message. Then he called the old dog to him and fastened the message to the animal's collar. "Now, Bud," he ordered, "you streak it for home and mother." He waved his hand toward the house, and the dog, wagging his tail frantically and barking, sped in a circle around the horse and was off in a cloud of dust.

"I don't know, I am sure, what I should do if I didn't have that dog to help me," laughed the old man, his eyes affectionately following the cloud of dust. "Now we'll see what happens."

Ten minutes later another cloud of dust appeared in the lane, and presently two bare-fotted boys, one carrying a covered bucket from which came a sound which could have been made only by ice, the other bearing a tray upon which were a number of glasses under a snow-white napkin, arrived on the scene, trudging grimly several hundred feet behind the excited dog.

"My grandsons," said the old man. "They and some of the rest of us run the farm, and amongst us two-legged ones and four-legged ones we have heaps of fun." He held up a hand. "No, not a cent. Glad it tasted good to you. You happened to be dependent on us this afternoon, that's all."

The driver turned again to the engine, and of a sudden it began to whirl. The child ran to the car, and in a minute, with a waving of hands and a calling of good-byes, the party was on its way again.—Our Dumb Animals.

CHURCH NEWS

FROM BRO. W. J. EDWARDS' FIELD

Needham's Grove.—The revival meetings here this year were very successful. Several were converted and 11 joined the church. This church is in fine working condition and has an excellent choir.

Randleman.—The pastor was assisted by Rev. A. T. Banks at the meeting at this place. He did splendid preaching and the people were delighted with him. There were several conversions.

New Center.—The meeting at this place was a great one. Twenty-eight conversions and eleven additions to the church was the result of the revival. The church was greatly revived.

W. J. EDWARDS.

TO THE PASTORS OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

When did you have your last revival meeting? Did you feel good over it or were you disappointed? Are you planning for a meeting in the near future? Every church in the entire denomination should have a series of evangelistic meetings between now and Easter. The result of such a meeting, humanly speaking, will depend entirely upon the organization, the personal effort, the consecration and prayer of your leaders and the kind of help that you have to assist you.

If you have a pastor or evangelist to assist you, you will in all probability need a good musician, a first class pianist. If you hold your own meeting you will certainly need one. I am writing this letter to the pastors of our Church in interest of Brother Sam Davis, the noted pianist of the Southern Convention. For the past year Brother Davis has been associated with Evangelist Victor Lightbourne. Brother Lightbourne has changed his denominational affiliation, but Brother Davis is with us, and we are most fortunate to have him. He needs work and we must give it to him. Not simply for his sake, but for the sake of our work. We cannot afford to miss this opportunity.

If you want some one to attract and hold the un-churched and give an opportunity to preach to them, I know of no one more efficient in this line than Brother Davis. You do not have to try him; he has been tried and proven true. He is certainly a great factor in an evangelistic meeting.

He is a member of my church, did his first evangelistic playing here; you can find none better. I take great pleasure in recommending him to the brotherhood, and in asking every pastor in the denomination to give him a trial, and he will prove his worth and benefit to you in your work.

L. E. SMITH.

Pastor, Christian Temple, of Norfolk, Virginia.

FROM BRO. H. H. BUTLER'S FIELD

Our meeting closed at Antioch on September 23, with 16 conversions and many reconsecrations. Seventeen united with the church and 11 were baptized. Dr. W. W. Staley did the preaching, and it was fine from the beginning to the end. Dr. Staley was at his best, and everybody seemed to enjoy the meeting, both saints and sinners.

The pastor was re-elected for the coming year for the first and third Sundays in each month, and would like to have work for the second and fourth Sundays.

H. H. BUTLER.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON CENSUS OF GREENE TOWNSHIP, GUILFORD COUNTY, N. C.

Your committee would respectfully submit the following report:

With the co-operation of the superintendents of the Sunday schools, and other church workers, we have tried to make such survey as will cover the grounds intended to be covered by the resolution passed at the last convention.

There are 199 families in the township, with a population of 889. 149 own their own homes, 46 are tenants and live on rented land, 3 not reported, and 1 refused to answer any question. 519 are enrolled in various Sunday schools in the township. These come from 138 families having a population of 689. Of the remaining 60 families, none of whom attend Sunday school, there is a population of 200. 447 claim connection with various branches of the church. 383 of those who are church members are of the 138 families attending Sunday school. 64 of those who are church members are of the 60 families none of whom attend Sunday school. 55 cannot read and write, 30 of these are of the 138 families attending Sunday school, and 26 are in the 60 families not in Sunday school.

Reasons Given for Not Attending Sunday School

Indifference, no way to go, carelessness, don't care anything about it whatever, just don't, detained at home, too young and have to be kept at home by mother, live as good as those who go to church, sickness, inconvenient, just won't go, don't start, children too small and no way, wasn't brought up to go to Sunday school, because I think I am not welcome by some of the church members, sickness, old age, physical inability, no church in reach, have not decided why I do not attend, just cannot get old folks out to church, too tired to go, sometimes I stay at home and lots of Sundays I go somewhere else, force and drag me into things will you, wasn't raised to go to Sunday school, don't believe in them, undecided, have no conveyance, not able, small children and indifference, no good reason, too lazy, do not know, nor any, distance, cares of home.

Reasons for Not Being a Member of the Church

Because I don't want to be, personal reasons, churches fool and deceive the people, because I am a Baptist, difference in denominations, prefer Baptist, too many hypocrites in the church, just never was moved, neglect, not able to attend church, not fit.

"How is it you have such a good memory, Norah?" her mistress inquired.

"Well, mum, I'll tell ye. Since me childhood never a lie have I told, and when ye don't have to be taxin' yer memory to be rememberin' what ye told this one or that, or how ye explained this or that, shure ye don't overwork it an' it last ye, good as new, till ye died."

Great Men

THE EDITOR

*"When a great man dies, for years beyond our ken
The light he leaves behind him lies upon the path of men."*

HOW true these words! You cannot inter a good man's life with his bones. The physical form only ceases to be; that which is spirit lives forever. Time has no dominion over it, except to enlarge and magnify its usefulness. "Lives of great men remind us . . . that we too can make our lives sublime."

We cannot finish this life here. Only the great Ruler of the universe can finish our work. To die is to change the form of living. Death is a period of transition as well as a translation. Our part is to live right; time and the angels will do the rest.

Great men often become greater men after their decease. The good they do lives after them. Time is a sure rewarder and justice is sure of her throne.

The life now lived is that which will make the light to guide the footsteps of some one. Make sure of its way, its fulness, and its sincerity, and its service.

THE DAY OF THE HUMAN TOUCH

In casting about to find something to stir the souls of our young people, we chronicle the passing of one element in literature—that is the element of the human touch. We firmly believe that among the things in life that stir the souls of men to action is the relating of some great deed done by an individual. The achievement of the individual is always something that stirs men to real action.

Today we have been reading that delightful and fascinating book, "Reapers of the Harvest," by John T. Paris. In this volume of 166 pages are to be found seventeen gripping stories of men and women who threw themselves upon the strength and resources of God and pioneered their way into the untouched parts and portions of the world for His sake. One finds himself rising to accept the Church's great challenge and to embrace her far-reaching opportunities as he finds his eyes welded to these wonderful and fascinating touches of human achievement for mankind's sake.

Back in boyhood's days the first missionary that we ever heard of was Dr. Daniel McGilvary, who sailed to Siam in 1858 under the direction of the Presbyterian Church. This man was born and reared within a few miles of our old home (near Sanford, N. C.) We recall when a small boy of seeing Dr. McGilvary at home on a furlough. His stately manner, his long silken beard, his earnest look, and his passionate pleas made a lasting impression. There is not a man or woman between the ages of thirty and fifty years, born and reared in that section of the country, who will not tell you immediately that he or she knows of the life of McGilvary.

These were years ago that we knew and heard of this man. Today as we searched the little book mentioned above, lo and behold, we found the story of Dr. McGilvary. McGilvary was born May 15, 1828, and both parents died before he was thirteen years of age. He joined old Buffalo church, near Sanford, N. C., and later entered school at Pittsboro, N. C. Later he went to the then famous Bingham School, graduated, and then to Princeton Theological Seminary. He sailed on the ship David Brown March 11, 1858, and landed in Bangkok June 20, of that year. The reading of his life-story was only a review of what we knew of this great man.

After a career of a half century of eager preaching, Dr. McGilvary passed away August 23, 1911. Dr. Arthur J. Brown, writing of the funeral, says: "Princes, Governors, and High Commissioners of State sorrowed with multitudes of common people. The business of Chiangmai was suspended, offices were closed and flags hung at half-mast as the silent form of the great missionary was borne to its last resting place in the land to which he was the first bringer of enlightenment, and whose history can never be written without large recognition of his achievements."

Has the day of human touch gone? We have gone afield with many appeals—appeals that render results in some instances. The day has not passed when young men and women will listen and respond to the daring and heroic deeds of good men and women. Somehow we wish that we might fully acquaint ourselves with the lives of the men and women who paved the way for Christianity's cause, and with burning words instill into the hearts of our young people the enthusiasm that heroes of old had. Let us put into our talks, our sermons, our writings, and in our conversations the story of some man of God who has dared to do, that our youth may catch the same vision, be filled with the same spirit, and go in the same name and on the same mission.

THE LOCAL CHURCH

The local church ought to be the happiest, most wholesome place in the community. Flowers ought to be growing in the yard, and everything possible done for the comfort and convenience of every attendant. It is a school, it is a center of wholesome friendship—a place where we meet God and meet the men and women of God. It is a place where we turn our minds heavenward and it ought to be a place where we long to go on every occasion. It is a place where greatest truths are told, where noblest ideals are set forth; where all of us reflect the spirit of the Master. We believe that if we would use the church in all its usefulness, we would hear from the lips of many as they express that poem,

"You ask me how I gave my heart to Christ?

I do not know.

There came a yearning for Him in my soul,

So long ago.

I found earth's flowerets would fade and die,—

I wept for something that would satisfy;

And then—and then—some how I seemed to dare

To lift my broken heart to Him in prayer.

I do not know—

I cannot tell you how;

I only know

He is my Savior now."

OUR ORPHANAGE CALLS

This being November, we naturally think of the one big event that comes in that month—the event of Thanksgiving. Those of us of the Christian Church in recent years have thought of Thanksgiving and our dear Christian Orphanage at the same time. Thanksgiving is the regular time that we make one of our annual offerings to the Orphanage. The time is now at hand when we should begin to think about the amount that we are going to give. It is the plea of hard times with nearly every one whom you meet. Let us not call it hard times, but times of testing. Now is the time to get real joy out of giving. When money is plentiful and work abundant it is not difficult to give liberally. Depriving ourselves of something that others may be helped is often the test of our discipleship. Let us prove that discipleship this year and give the Orphanage the best and biggest Thanksgiving offering that it has ever received. All together—all together NOW.

CHRISTIAN FRIENDSHIP AMONG THE STUDENTS OF THE WORLD

Dr. John R. Mott, speaking in his capacity as Chairman of the World's Student Christian Federation, points out that because of the importance of the present generation of students in Europe, extraordinarily grave problems press upon every land in that part of the world. It is of supreme importance that the life and efficiency of this generation of future leaders be safeguarded.

Large areas of Europe are almost destitute of professionally trained men and women. The factors militating against their replenishment are terrific. Yet, despite woeful handicaps, heroic groups of students and professors are struggling to provide an equipped leadership for Europe's future, as well as for the preservation and revitalization of the mental and spiritual values, the principles and institutions, which stand at the very heart of sustained recovery and progress.

It is to the lasting honor of the Christian students of North America, and to many of their non-Christian brothers and sisters, that they undertook in 1920, in common with the students of more than a score of other countries, to express their appreciation of the crisis facing the student generation and the educational institutions of Europe, and their desire to aid in overcoming that crisis.

EDITORIAL FRAGMENTS

Reconstruction and peace are the two sister words that stand out most prominently in the minds of the people at the present time.

* * *

The Church has always had a program—the program of Jesus Christ. Men have never differed on that point, but inhuman-like, they have waged wars over the presentation and interpretation of that program. This is the crux of the situation. It is not law that brings men into conflict so much as it is the result of the law, or the interpretation of it.

Out of the turmoil and world upheaval the spirit of Christianity has come like a flame from a burning volcano. It started with the beginning of the world, and with every world conflict it has come out a shining light to the path of men, and a joy to all who have sought and practiced its teachings. We have no fears of Christianity—our concern is in the application of it.

To many who have joined the church there has been a sad disappointment. They have been expecting to get something out of it and they have not. The reason is simple: They have put nothing into it. They have sought to draw dividends when they have not invested; they have sought to reap where they have not sown; they have asked before they have given.

We drill into the heads of our children the most difficult mathematical problems and praise them for their quick knowledge of the principles. Could we not likewise teach them the revelation of God through nature, so when the period of regeneration came they would not be ushered into a strange way and manner of living? No wonder the seemingly converted get back into the world. When a man feels the tug of the world at his heart for years it takes something to relieve him of that kinship. Christ can do it, but the chances in mature years are so much against the opportunity of Christ that many stay out in the sinful world.

We do not contend for a changed Church as much as we do for a Church that applies the Master's principles. We do not argue for a Church with a program large enough to take in the sinner, but we do insist upon a Church and a program sufficient to love the sinner and to do as much for the foreigner at home as in his own land. The narrowness of the Church's program has given birth to thousands of humanitarian organizations that are within the scope of the Church.

So delicate and so personal have been the issues between Christian forces that enemies have been made because certain denominations have brought charges against other denominations. Friendship and fellowship have been rent asunder in many cases where Christ would have suggested brotherly love. The recent war was often called a religious, a righteous war, but it was not the first one to be called that. All through the ages men have fought for religious freedom; and we are inclined to think that wars have repeated themselves because men fought for religious freedom and then made that freedom a prisoner in their own hearts; kept the precious thing tied up in a napkin and heeded not the injunction, "He that saveth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life shall save it."

A CHALLENGE

In a recent missionary journal there was a large drawing of a huge Shinto shrine; under it was a smaller figure, a Buddhist temple, and under that a tiny church. Here are the figures that accompanied the pictures: 117,729 Shinto shrines in Japan, 71,643 Buddhist temples, and 1,039 Christian churches. What a challenge to the great powers of the Church of God!

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

Diary—Part II.

SUNDAY A. M., September 18, I awoke at 4 a. m., and discovered that the sea was rough and our good ship was playing toss and tumble with the big waves off Cape Hatteras. Deciding I could not at all adjust matters, I dropped off to sleep and awoke at 7. Twenty minutes later I was up, feeling fine and busy making the morning toilet. My room-mates, save the Porto Rican, decided they would, for various reasons, remain in bed. That glorious gong called at 7:30, and to my surprise the dining room seemed quite uninviting to most. I was happy to negotiate grapefruit, puffed rice, buttered toast, breakfast bacon, two soft-boiled eggs and two cups of perfectly delicious Porto Rican coffee. Let me put it down here in my diary now that if the coffee in Porto Rico lives up to the reputation they give it on this boat, I am in for many a joyous sniff and delightful aroma. By the way, they taught me in psychology at college that one does not taste coffee at all, but smells it only. That is why, when you have a bad cold, you cannot taste your coffee—you never have tasted it. Maybe so; but this Porto Rican coffee smells so delicious that you feel like you are tasting, seeing, feeling, hearing, and smelling it. As Rev. H. H. Butler says by a good ham when he tastes one, "How I do wish my wife had some of this." Maybe if I live to get back home I will carry with me some real Porto Rican coffee.

Our dining room seats 148, but there are only 18 at breakfast. No one else is at my table, so this gives me opportunity to eat in quiet, enjoy the gentle dipping and upward surges of the ship, and to see how elegantly this dining room is equipped. The table linen is spotless, the silver is abundant and highly polished, the China is inviting in color and appetizing to look upon, our table "waiters" dressed in their well starched uniforms are Chesterfields in manners and bearing, and there are flowers of various hues, colors and fragrance on the tables. I am taking particular note of this dining room, for I have already discovered that the one hope of breaking the monotony of sea travel is to visit the dining room three times a day—and see what they have to gladden your eyes and heart with. So far, I have never been long in any condition or surroundings but that if I would look about I could find something for comfort and for joy. I am at breakfast this morning pledging myself to be a good patron and friend to this dining room on all the trip. It looks good to me and I purpose to stand by it like a brother—if the winds and waves will let me.

I get acquainted with our waiter. He is an intelligent fellow, a white man of gentle manners and forty winters. (If he had been a woman I should have written "forty summers"—a distinction that a friend told me recently I must always make—count a man's years by winters and a woman's by summers.) He says he was waiter at a fashionable and lucrative country club out from New York City, but the hard times had put the club out of business and he had found his present job. Said he voted for Mr. Harding to be President because he thought under him times would be good and work plentiful, but he was willing now to vote for somebody else if he could, as work was hard to get, and the good jobs were all taken. For my part, I am glad he is a table waiter on the San Lorenzo instead of at a fashionable country club, for he certainly does know how to make you feel happy at table and bring you in inviting portions of whatever you wish.

At 8:15 I am on deck, straining my eyes for another ship or something at sea besides ourselves. Nothing to be seen—just the far-stretching, rolling, restless sea. The sea never stops. What infinite energy it has and exerts. And it is so big and we so little! The people at home and in all our good country are gathering now, while I write, for Sunday school, and a little later for preaching, prayer and worship. What a privilege that is! Why can't we have services on this boat? Not allowed. Most of the passengers are Porto Ricans, speak Spanish, are Catholic in faith (if they have any faith) and so are busy at their gaming tables.

They play a pool on board ship. One comes around with pad and pencil and asks you if you wish to come into the pool. If so you pay a dollar and guess how far the ship will sail within 24 hours. The one guessing the nearest to the number of miles sailed takes the whole stake—less 10 per cent which goes to the seaman who got up the pool. At the tables in smoking and sitting rooms they are gambling with dice and cards incessantly. The one occupation of many voyagers at sea is gambling. How can they spoil the glory of this day and the wonder of this sea with hours at the gaming table? I have just stood out on deck and counted five distinct colors of the sea. But what was even more surprising, I found the form even more varied than the coloring. I saw and noted separately at least eight distinct forms: (1) the dashing split-up spray; (2) the mole hill or slow bulge; (3) the deep trench; (4) the high mound; (5) the foot hills; (6) the piled-up peak; (7) the pent-up dam; (8) the falls. For variation of color and form the sea has the land beat to a finish. As we go further south the sea becomes ever bluer and bluer in color—it is a brilliant ribbon-blue now.

They gave us a splendid luncheon today. Chicken soup, broiled blue-fish, half a spring chicken broiled, on toast, with hot tea, bread, butter and baked potato made up mine.

They have all kinds of fruit in season—grapes, wonderful apples, peaches, oranges, grapefruit, bananas, which they bring out on deck to you or serve at table on request.

I talked with the wireless operator. He is snugly perched in a room pitched high upon deck. By day he keeps in touch with other ships in a radius of 400 to 500 miles. He gave me a list of more than a dozen he had "talked" with today, some crossing to British and Oriental waters and everywhere. (I am glad he can talk with them if I can't see them.) He supplies our ship's captain every hour with a list of and news from neighboring (?) ships. At night he takes land news and reports what has taken place of interest during the day. (He got full reports from the world's series between the Giants and the Yanks.)

At 7:30 this evening the full moon climbed above the sea's horizon, literally came up out of the waters like the vast rotund head of some giant diver, and smiled one broad smile of happy greeting to us rovers of the deep. And all the shining way from us to the moon was a "shimmering sheen of quivering beauty"—like an unending surface of cut glass stretched out on the throbbing bosom of the nervous, restless sea. Oh! the glory of this full orb moon and the palpitating sea that breaks its beams into a thousand quivering rays and makes one wonder if one is not already nearing, or getting a fore-gleam of the pearly gates that stand ajar, welcoming to the City of our God. God's heart is full of love, but His hand is full of beauty, and the seas as well as the heavens declare His glory.

Our ship's decks are brilliantly lighted. So I sit here in my deck chair, read a few chapters from the Book, also finish Brent on "Leadership"—a fine volume of experimental philosophy and human experience,—thank God for a Sabbath at sea, which Sabbath has arrayed itself in nocturnal beauty as it lit up the dark places with a marvelous and mellow moon, finish this line in my diary—and at 10:30 turn in to dream, I hope, of home and loved ones and a thousand things to be grateful for and happy about.

REMINISCENCES

 THE CHRISTIAN SUN of October 5, which contained a letter from Rev. J. T. Whitley, of Norfolk, Va., had a good joke in it that has been told by a great many, and I enjoyed it. The pleasant association with him and his wife was exceedingly gratifying to me.

I was on a visit to my brother, Rev. W. B. Wellons, D. D. I had worked very hard, and was off taking a rest, when we saw in the papers that the people of Philadelphia had offered to provide homes for all the ministers who would attend the Moody and Sankey meeting, the next week. I said to my brother, "Let's go." He said, "Are you able to go?" I said, "I'll go, anyway."

I proposed that I would go up to Windsor and see Rev. J. T. Whitley and wife, and from there I would leave Monday morning for Southampton Court, where I had a matter of business to attend to for my widowed sister. My brother was so afraid that I could not get this done in time that he went to Franklin and came over on a haek to "Jerusalem," as it was then called. We finished our business, returned to Franklin, and from there to Suffolk, where Brother Whitley joined us. We were proud to have him go with us, as we were both very fond of him. We went by boat that night from Norfolk for Baltimore, which city we reached next morning. Then we took cars from there to Philadelphia. We had written that night to Philadelphia, and they sent us home with Mr. Gibbons, a prominent lawyer, and of a fine family. We reached there late in the afternoon, and Mrs. Gibbons inquired if we wished to attend the meeting that night. If so, she couldn't give us dinner, but a luncheon. As soon as we finished luncheon, we started. I was with Mrs. Gibbons. My brother followed me, in charge of Brother Whitley, who was rendering him good service, when we saw a street car crossing below us. Mrs. Gibbons said, "Yell." I did so. She said, "Yell louder," and I hollered at the top of my voice, and told them to wait for Mrs. Gibbons and her company. If that car had passed us by, we could not have reached the meeting in time. Mrs. Gibbons took us right up to door "A," which admitted us to the rostrum, where we were pleasantly seated. We all enjoyed the meeting as much as we could—all being very tired.

When Moody dismissed the meeting, he said we would all go to certain churches where they conducted a prayer meeting. As soon as we reached the prayer-meeting, some one asked me if I were a preacher. I told him I was. He said, "Come here and talk to my friend. I don't know much to say to him, as I was converted myself only a night or two ago." I told him I had just reached there; was exceedingly tired, and hadn't gotten into the spirit of the meeting, but I would be back the next night, and would take pleasure in talking to any of his friends. I think at least a half dozen with whom I talked that night accepted Christ. The second time I heard Sankey sing the "Ninety and Nine," it just got me up a little higher in the divine life than I thought I had ever been; for I thought it was being sung in Heaven, and that was but the echo.

That night, for dinner, I ate something that gave me convulsions such as I frequently suffered with. Mrs. Gibbons said next morning: "I see you can't eat what we do, and I can't diet you at my own table. I will ask you to have everything before us, but you just take what you can eat, and it will be all right with me." My brother said, "Brother James, eat just as little as you can get along with."

ALABAMA CONFERENCE

 N the eleventh day of October the Alabama Christian Conference met with the church at Corinth, with a full delegation from the churches, and the ministers all present. In the organization, Rev. G. D. Hunt was re-elected President; Rev. J. D. Dollar, Vice-President; Rev. E. M. Carter, Secretary; Joe French, Assistant Secretary, and J. W. Payne, Treasurer.

We were very glad to have Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., and Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., and Miss Lucy Eldridge with us, also Attorney D. R. Fonville, on the last day.

The work of the Conference was harmonious throughout the entire session, with a forward look for service. The items of Missions and Education were the most interesting. The meeting of the Women's Board of Home and Foreign Missions showed that there are ten societies, and an interest that looks to the organization of the entire Conference. The Mission work in the northern part of the state is in fine condition. We had an offering for this work of $205.00, while the report was pending. On account of financial conditions, the churches did not all pay their apportionments, but every other point showed a marked improvement, with a gain in membership over that of last year.

Two ministers were ordained, and the ordination certificate of another coming to us from the Baptist Church was endorsed. Three were licensed, while one of each class was dropped from the roll.

Upon an invitation of the church and citizens of Wadley, the Conference held its closing day's session at Wadley, this on account of the decision of the Committee on Location of the proposed Junior College at that place. In the morning the reports on Education and Literature were considered, with some other items. At noon a barbecue was served by the town, and in the afternoon, from a platform in the public park, there was speaking to a large crowd on the subject of Religious Education.

We are now at the Georgia and Alabama Conference. This, too, is a fine session. Rev. R. F. Brown is in the chair.

ECHOES FROM THE GEORGIA AND ALABAMA CONFERENCE

(By Rev. R. F. Brown)

The Twenty-third Annual Session of the Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference met at the North Highland Christian church, Columbus, Ga., October 18, at 7:30 p. m. The Conference was called to order by President H. W. Elder. After the enrollment of a large number of ministers and delegates, the following officers were elected:

President—Rev. R. F. Brown,
Vice-President—Rev. H. M. Gray,
Secretary—J. F. Hill,
Treasurer—H. B. Floyd.

The annual address was delivered by the retiring President, Rev. H. W. Elder. His subject was, "Is the Church Measuring Up to Her Obligations of Present-Day Conditions?" This address was well received by a large and appreciative congregation.

Four questions of far-reaching importance were considered on the second day; viz.: Home Missions, Foreign Missions, Education, and Moral Reform.

General discussion following the report on Home Missions brought out the fact that there are now five cities in this State into which we should go at once with our great principles and organize and build churches. The cities that offer us this unprecedented opportunity are Atlanta, Macon, Savannah, Cordele, and Tifton. It is a pity that we lack both money and men with which to meet this challenge.

The report on Education expressed our unmitigated delight over the fact that the Christian churches of the Far South are soon to have a college within easy reach of their sons and daughters. Rev. E. M. Carter, Wadley, Alabama, delivered an inspiring address on Christian Education.

Rev. D. A. Evans, a licentiate of the M. E. Church of South Carolina, was ordained as an elder in the Christian Church. Also Rev. F. D. Dickson, Anderson, S. C., an ordained minister of the Baptist Church, was given credentials by our Conference. In addition to the above named recruits, four young men, viz.: A. S. McDowell, C. L. Reese, Ellis Easterwood and W. W. Willingham, were licensed as probationers of the Gospel.

During the Conference three new churches were received as follows: Langdale Christian church, Langdale, Ala.; East La Grange Christian church, La Grange, Ga.; and Luke Mills Christian church, Anderson, S. C. The Luke Mills church is the first Christian church ever organized in the State of South Carolina. Prospects are good for other organizations in the near future. Rev. D. A. Evans has accepted a call to the Luke Mills church.

The Wednesday night session was devoted to the interests of the Christian Missionary Association of the Conference. During this session three splendid addresses were delivered. Miss Lucy Eldredge spoke on the theme, "The Duty to Give Regularly and Liberally." Miss Eldredge made a fine impression. The writer spoke on "The Blessings That Follow Liberal and Regular Giving." Rev. A. H. Shepherd spoke in a pleasing manner on the theme, "The Responsibility of the Ministry in Teaching the Membership to Support the Kingdom."

The Committee on Sunday Schools recommended that a Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention be held annually in this Conference. The three superintendents of the Sunday schools of the Christian churches of this city were appointed as Arrangements Committee. The Convention will be held some time in the early spring of next year.

The closing message of the Conference was delivered by Rev. H. M. Gray. He emphasized the importance of ministers and laymen "Witnessing for Christ."

The spirit of complete unity and healthy optimism prevailed throughout the Conference.

The Conference adjourned at 12:30 p. m., Thursday, to meet with the East La Grange church, La Grange, Ga., on Tuesday evening following the third Sunday in October, 1922, at 7:30 p. m.

WHAT ARE THE FACTS?

CONTINUING the discussion of last week on What are the Facts in the matter of the world growing better or worse, we now come to Fact—

9. At this time the world seems to be in the grasp of the spirit of lawlessness, possibly as at no other time in history. Do you say that is only a matter of morbid imagination? Let us see if you are not mistaken. Solicitor General Beek, of the U. S. Government, delivered an address before the American Bar Association August 31, 1921, in which he is reported to have said "the spirit of lawlessness is now so prevalent throughout the world." Then he added: "American criminal statistics of recent years show an unprecedented growth in crime." He further declared that there is a relaxation of respect for law, a conscious or unconscious revolt "against authority is everywhere apparent." Let me be very plain. Is there a man or woman who at all keeps abreast of current events who denies what Mr. Beek says. If there be such an one, let him take the stand and give his testimony. If what Mr. Beek says is true, as it seems to be, we ask you in plain language, How can a world which is in the grip of a lawless spirit be growing better? If you can answer this question, do it.

10. Modern civilization is at this time under the awful pressure of at least a five-fold plague. A man of world-wide fame, known in all civilized lands as a great leader of one of the most powerful organizations in the world, only a little while ago declared that five great curses are now afflicting humanity. He named these plagues as follows:

1. An unprecedented challenge to authority.
2. There is equally an unprecedented hatred between man and man.
3. There is an abnormal aversion to work.
4. There is an excessive thirst for pleasure.
5. There is a gross materialism which denies the reality of the spiritual in human life.

What do you think of his statement? As a God-fearing and a truth-loving man or woman, would you dare deny his statement as true? If you cannot and back your denial by facts from current history, would you dare to say that such a series of curses is evidence that the world is growing better? Well, then, if these five plagues be cursing the world, do you think that their presence in human society could possibly be taken by any sensible man or woman as evidence, proving that the world is growing better?

11. The development of the human mind was perhaps never so great as it is now; and yet this development has been largely a contribution to the devil's kingdom—being largely used in an effort to destroy man—the world's glory and power. The greatness of man's mind and his power to use that mind for the advancement of the Kingdom of God are so largely used to pull it down rather than to build it up. And yet some claim to see this age as the best the world has ever seen. These strong minded and highly cultured people, instead of being given to God in His service, are largely given to doing work which the devil uses to pull down the truth of God in saving men. Can this be evidence to show that the world is growing better? Think of it—these great minds are given to making the most awful explosives—such as the world had never dreamed of—so deadly that they can destroy a city in a moment—as is so surely shown in the ravages of the late war. Not only so, but they make such deadly liquids now that a few drops placed on a man's body would kill him in a few minutes. They also are making such powerful liquids that an airplane might drop a certain quantity on a section of country and it would absolutely destroy in a very short time not only man and beast, but every sprig of vegetation. Again, they claim that they will have for the next war a gun that will shoot five tons of these explosives and deadly liquids a distance of 300 miles, destroying great cities, or vast sections of the country upon which it may fall. And does any one hold that a world in which such work is done is actually growing better day by day? As I see it, it takes an un-Christian people to do that sort of deadly work, and if that is true, as I think it is, how can any one say such a world is getting better? If the world is growing better in any way, it must be growing better in its qualifications to serve the wicked one—at least a large part of it is so growing.

12. This seems to be the day of "itching ear" teachers; not that all teachers of the Word belong to the "itching ear" kind, but many do. They seem to serve as if their service and its usefulness depend on attracting attention to themselves and their strange doctrines, true or untrue. A recent magazine article affirms that many, while they do not deny the existence of God, yet question His personality, His omnipotence, His providence and His government of this world. The same article declared that the president of one of the leading seminaries of this country recently said, "We do not know that there is a God." That sort of teaching is well calculated to break faith's moorings and set the world adrift on unknown seas of human but Godless speculation. The same man then went on to say: "To avoid this awful condition we make a venture—we postulate that there is a God; this venture is our faith." Alas, for such a teacher! He puts more confidence in a postulate than he does in the Bible. Alas, a postulate for God! Where such teaching is given, what is there to check man in his sins and save him from crime and ruin? Another class of teachers boldly declare that we are saved by character—not by Christian character, but by character. They leave the idea of Christian off—another effort to rob Christ of His glory and of the honor of the salvation of the lost. Again, I ask, is the prevalence of such teaching any evidence that the world is getting better? Of course, if such teachings were confined to only a few sporadic individuals, then its significance would be a matter of little concern, but when a movement of this kind is on and the teachers come from almost every denomination in the land, it becomes a serious situation and we do well to stand against it. Can it be, brethren, that such teachings tend to prove that the world is getting better? I cannot so see it, and because we have so much of these false teachings—teachings which are not according to the Bible—we say in the utmost confidence of saying what is true, that the world is not getting better morally and spiritually. The time is coming when these conditions will be changed, and then, in the Lord's own good time, we shall see victory for Christ everywhere. That is my kind of optimism.

I yet have one more paper before closing this discussion. When I began, I fully expected to finish in one article, but it has grown into three—one more yet to come.

ELON LETTER

DEMOCRACY is not a form of government: it is a spirit. That spirit may express itself through any form of political organization, just as a man without arms may find ways of doing what men with arms do. It is conceivable, however, that one form of government may be especially adapted to the expression of the democratic spirit. Just as we may have a form of Godliness without the substance thereof, so we may have the power of democracy without its spirit.

Democracy recognizes the supreme worth of personality. Now that does not mean individuality. Individuality has often been democracy's undoing. Individuality tends to selfishness and aloofness. When the Church worker aims only at the building up of his own local church, he has individualized God's Kingdom. Such a Christian would be greatly improved in the quality of his spiritual life to lift up his eyes and behold the fields white unto the harvest. The capitalist who fastens his eyes only on dividends and profits has lost the spirit of democracy, if he ever had it, and the same is true of the laboring man who sees only wages and improved working conditions as the heart and soul of industry. He too has lost the spirit of democracy, though he may clamor never so loudly for its form.

For the supreme excellency of democracy, we have said, is the recognition of personality's worth; and personality is a social concept. Personality can never ripen in seclusion. It requires the association of brothermen. We are born into a social institution, the family; we live in a social institution, society; we are saved through a social institution, the Church. Whatever we do affects for good or ill, whether we will it or not, our brothermen, and what they do affects us. We cannot escape the consequences of our brotherhood. "Social" is inextricably enmeshed in every experience of our life, because we are persons.

When our organized political life, our government, is so shunted that it fosters wealth at the expense of persons, whatever else we may say for it, it is not a democratic government, and the same is true of every other institution or organization of our social order. Things must never hinder the growth, the development, the expansion, the fruition of personality. If a man gain the whole world of things and lose his soul (his source of personality) he is profited nothing. And who ever offends one of the humblest personalities in its God-given right to ripen into fullness, it were better for him, according to One Who knew, that he had never been born.

Democracy is a spirit, the spirit of brotherhood, the spirit that fosters and promotes personality, the spirit that enables men to live with and for each other and unto God. Democracy is the Christian faith in action.

W. A. HARPER.

TITHING

A first essential to a really spiritual life is a realization that we are not our own—that we belong to God, both by creation and redemption, having been "bought with a price." All that we have belongs to God, and all that we can hope for comes from Him. A faith that sees God Who is so interested in us as to number the hairs of our head, can easily trust Him with worldly possessions. How easy ought it to be for us to return to God what He has intrusted to our handling when we see Him as the real possessor of all things! And what joy ought one to find in that return when through it he can claim the promise of no good thing withheld! No one can have the approval of conscience when he awakes to the fact that he is robbing God, and withholds that measure of increase that is so clearly stated as belonging to Him. Malachi says that it is robbery, and that "Ye are cursed with a curse." God said to Israel, But bring in the whole tithe and let your increased prosperity be a proof of my faithfulness.

Does tithing contribute to the spiritual life of a people? How can it be otherwise if God is true to His promise? That He is thus true is almost the universal testimony of those who have tried it. They always rejoice in the step they have taken.

This taste of God's faithfulness invariably leads to an increased activity along other lines. Why should it not? If giving to God along the line of the material brings a return in good measure, pressed down, shaken together and running over, can we think that it will be anything other than profitable to give Him of our time, our strength and our thought?

Has tithing been a success? No, not much of a success, taking the Church as a whole, because as a whole the Church has lacked the faith and that spirit of obedience that would put into practice God's command and precepts. But so far as the Church is showing faith in putting God to the honest test it is doing much to relieve the financial burden and to convince the world that religion is of heart conviction in those who have accepted it, and to increase the faith and spiritual power in this obedient few. This is my observation.

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

OUR MOUNTAIN SCHOOL

Miss Iola Hedgepeth, our hustling and diplomatic school teacher and school builder, is at her task at Fancy Gap, Va. Under date of October 19 she writes:

"Except for the case of diphtheria about which I wrote you this morning, things would be ready to start at once here. The diphtheria case is in the home where my assistant, Miss Midgett, is to come. About 15 persons were exposed before we knew what was the matter with the boy. Half of them are my school children. I was exposed but have taken anti-toxin; but of course the others have not. Within ten days, the doctor says, if there is no new case there will be no further danger. Meanwhile, I am doing my best to get our new school building completed; but it is a big job for a little person. I finished up the logging and hauling of rough lumber last week at very little cost. Nine wagons came in yesterday from Mount Airy with the dressed lumber, sash, doors, etc., etc. Four have gone back today. I am pressing forward toward getting the building finished now just as quickly as possible. The carpenters have promised to return at once. Five have promised to help."

It may be said that owing to much delay in securing proper plans, specification and a contract, and further delay later on account of the illness and death of Miss Hedgepeth's mother, the school building is not yet completed. It was the purpose and plan of the Board to have the new building ready by October 1. We still hope, and are bending every effort, to have it ready before cold weather sets in. Meanwhile, the old building used last year will be occupied. Miss Emily Midgett, a member of Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., has been employed to assist Miss Hedgepeth, and would have been already in the work but for the outbreak of diphtheria in the community. We are to have a very creditable and comfortable building and two capable Christian women to conduct our day and Sunday school for us.

FROM MISS TOSHIO SATO

So many CHRISTIAN SUN readers know Miss Toshio Sato personally that whatever she writes about herself and work is of human interest. We have it from Mrs. Fry that Toshio is doing the work of two and is one of the most untiring and efficient workers now on the field. The writer has a most interesting letter which is personal in character, but he feels that SUN readers should share its contents and would appreciate its fine spirit:

Motowakuya, Rickereya, Japan, Aug. 31, 1921.

Dear Dr. Atkinson:

This letter was meant to follow the card I wrote you about two weeks ago, but delayed on account of the sickness at home. Please pardon the delay.

Your last letter was reread over and over again, and I appreciated what you told me in it.

I have just finished a letter to Dr. L. E. Smith. I hope it will reach him all right.

Until a few days ago it was awfully warm here, but tonight it feels like a night in late autumn. Though it is cool, the mosquitoes are still provoking, so I am sitting up in a Kaya. I wonder if you ever saw a Kaya! Kaya is a large net made of some kind of fine threads, and it is to keep mosquitoes away. The net I am now in is about 8x12 feet, and just about 15 feet high. Its shape looks just like a box without its bottom, and its four corners are fixed so that they can be hanged to the nails prepared for it. And when it is not needed, it can be folded to a small package. Some Kayas are grass-green, and some are white, light sky-blue, or pale yellow.

The other day one of my childhood playmates, who is quite younger than I and was forced to marry a man of her parents' choice, came to see me with her tiny baby on her back. When I heard her baby cry, I thought of the serious question which a certain American friend asked me one day: "Do the Japanese babies cry like ours?"

Every morning a milkman—no, a woman—brings us milk. Often I recall another question one of my college mates asked me. Of course she too was serious when she asked me, "Do you people in Japan have fresh cow milk?" My answer was a big "yes." Then she surprisingly said, "Oh, really! Then there are cows in Japan!"

It is very natural for us to imagine or think some ridiculous things about the people or the places or the things we do not know very much about. So I know, to some of my friends in America, I, too, am a question, especially the work I am doing.

After being away from home for six years, I returned last July a year ago. Spending the month of August with Mother was a realization of those six long years' dreams. When September came I packed my bags and went down to the city of Utsunomiya, where Mrs. Susie V. Fry was waiting for me to begin teaching at her school. Christian Girls' School, it is called, and this is the school that taught me what it means to give my life to Him.

To see the school building grown taller, and the little baby-plants of my school days now making the homes of many birds was a great joy, but the realization of the great, heavy responsibilities I was to carry upon my feeble shoulders overthrew the joy.

Last April Mrs. Fry, the principal, returned to America on her short furlough, after being away so many years, and the school was left for the three teachers to take charge of. Of these three I was the youngest and the most inexperienced. The other two teachers are "Mrs." who have their own homes to look after, so though I am not suitable for, I promised to take the entire charge of the dormitory, for which I have been trying to fill the position of matron since last September.

The teaching is very hard for me, but to be the matron is still harder. And all the bitter experiences I had is on account of my being unworthy of these responsible places. The One who is my constant inspiration is He who so willingly drank the bitter cup of death for me.

Excepting Monday and Sunday I teach five periods a day, and when the teaching is over I have two hours of extra teaching. The number of the subjects I teach is seven, and it keeps me quite busy on account of having several subjects that are not very familiar to me.

The dormitory is arranged something like the Ladies' Hall of Elon College, and the girls do all the cooking, sweeping, washing, and anything else that has to be done. In the dining room there are four long tables set in two rows, and several long benches for us to sit on.

If it were possible it would be quite interesting for you to peep into the dining room at meal time. Instead of silver forks, knives and spoons, two little sticks are used. With them almost anything, even such little grain like rice, can be picked up easily. At our home I was taught it was bad manners to talk or laugh at meals, but the girls have a jolly, sunshine time.

Those who ever visited Elon College during a school session know, I am sure, how busy that college bell is kept. Our little Japanese bell, too, is kept quite busy, and mostly it is I who rings it. When the morning chapel bell is echoed, all the girls go into the auditorium (first year class room) which is on the first floor, and have about 15 minutes' worship under the leadership of a teacher. And immediately after this the day's school schedule begins.

The evening chapel is just for the dormitory girls, and it is the girls who lead this meeting. After the worship is over, the auditorium is turned to the night study hall, and here the girls spend two hours. At 9:30 the "retiring bell" is rung, and all the girls are expected to keep perfectly quiet. When I, after going all over the buildings to see that all is right and safe, go to bed, it is usually 11 o'clock.

My room is on the first floor, and is nearly in the center of the building. All the mail has to be examined by me, and should any girl send her mail off without having it censored she has to be punished.

The days the girls can go out for shopping are Monday and Thursday. And of course Sunday is expected to be kept holy.

The church we attend is on the Fourth avenue and the school on the Third. So it is not far to walk. My Sunday school class is quite a large one, and it is interesting to see how fast they can learn the teaching.

Though my work of the past year was not a success, I enjoyed it. And I am hoping to do much better in the coming years.

The summer vacation began July 10, and I have been home since July 14. The vacation is almost gone, and I am getting ready to go back to the post. During the vacation I helped Mother by keeping myself busy doing what she has to do, and in a few days I have to leave her again. The school begins September 10, and I am expecting Mrs. Fry by October.

If I knew English a little better I would write you all about my work, but as I am not able to do so please tell the Christian friends briefly just what I am doing. Though I do not write often, I do not mean to forget or neglect the faithful friends who are nobly supporting me in this far off land.

It is getting very late, so I must stop here. Please give Mrs. Atkinson and the Misses Atkinson my best wishes and love.

Very sincerely,

TOSHIO SATO.

So a teacher's life in a Christian school in Japan is much like that of teachers in our own Elon. Whether in Japan, Porto Rico, China, or America, the Christian teacher works, there he or she is trying to lead those taught to a better and more useful life. All who know Toshio realize that she is doing her work faithfully and is helping in the great task of winning her people to our Christ.

J. O. ATKINSON.

THE BULLETIN

Rev. F. C. Lester, studying in Yale University, indicates in a letter to the Editor that he is well situated and enjoying his work fine.

Revival services will begin at the First church, Burlington, Wednesday of this week. Brother C. A. McDaniel, Winchester, Va., will do the singing.

Dr. J. P. Barrett has been given a unanimous call to the Reidsville Christian church, and will begin his work there November 15. Pastor Wells, now serving, Reidsville, goes to Portsmouth, Va.

The Eastern Virginia Conference is in session at Dover, Delaware, this week. The seat of the Conference is out of the regular boundaries, but went to Dover by invitation of our People's church at that place.

The North Carolina Conference will meet with the Third Avenue Christian church, Danville, Va., November 15. It is urged that all churches of the Conference send delegates with instructions to remain during the entire Conference.

Rev. W. P. Minton, Secretary of the Foreign Missions Department of the Christian Church, will be present for the Woman's Conference to be held in Greensboro on Thursday, November 10. He will also be present for the first day's session of the North Carolina Conference. THE SUN welcomes Brother Minton to this section of the denomination and assures him a glad hand.

Readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN will learn with sorrow the passing of Mrs. J. Pressley Barrett at Wilson, N. C., on Thursday, October 25. Mrs. Barrett had been in ill health for some time. The funeral was conducted in Suffolk, Va., October 27, by Dr. I. W. Johnston, and was assisted by Revs. H. H. Butler, W. M. Jay, and Jas. H. Lightbourne. The floral offerings were beautiful, and came from Dayton, Ohio; Richmond, Norfolk, and Suffolk, Va.; Wilson, Burlington and Elon College, N. C., and possibly other places. The body was laid to rest in Cedar Hill cemetery, Suffolk. THE SUN extends deepest sympathy to Dr. Barrett in the sad hour of his bereavement. Comfort be his part and portion!

PASTOR WANTED

The Graham and Providence churches, both in the town of Graham, N. C., are in need of a pastor. The churches own a good parsonage. This is furnished, together with a salary of $1,000, and the outlook of that being increased. Brother F. C. Lester has been the shepherd of these two flocks, but is now in Yale doing post-graduate work. The churches have made a temporary arrangement of supplying and are endeavoring to locate a man interested in the field. If there is a reader of THE SUN, minister or layman, who has any suggestion to make in the matter, it may be communicated to Mr. Walter Harden, Graham, N. C., a member of the pastoral committee. Or if the correspondent prefers, he may address THE SUN's editor, who will take pleasure in entering into confidential correspondence with any minister about the field. The church grants this permission, or rather makes this request.

NOVEMBER

November is a month in which Nature changes her dress. The gay life of the summer flowers end, the streams lose their splash and change to quiet pools covered with leaves, and later stopped by winter's ice. From fields and forests the glory of autumn has been driven. We pass from the open porch to the glowing fire and listen for the bitter blasts of winter. Thanksgiving adds charm to older life, and "how many days till Christmas?" is the delight of tender years.

There is a "November" in the life of every one. The spring and summer toil pass on and leave us to pass along toward the sunset valley to behold the golden thread of life shortening. Just as there is color and quiet and charm in the November days, so there can be hope, charm and splendor in the older days of life.

PUTTING IT OFF

Yes, you put off the matter of raising your Conference apportionment just a little too late. We mean this if you failed to secure all the apportionment. A good time to begin raising the conference apportionment is the next Sunday after Conference adjourns. Try it next year and see how you come out.

NORTH CAROLINA WOMEN—NOTICE

Do not forget our Woman's meeting in Greensboro, November 10. We have prepared a great program. Dr. W. P. Minton, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Miss Iola Hedgepeth, of our mountain work, are to be with us. We are expecting our women to be there. You will regret it if you don't come.

And our preachers are invited too. We women always stand by our pastors. We feel sure they will stand by us.

MRS. W. A. HARPER, Secretary.

WHY DANVILLE DOES NOT OFFER FREE ENTERTAINMENT

You will notice in THE CHRISTIAN SUN that delegates, visitors and friends of the North Carolina Conference are asked to notify Mrs. L. R. Allen, 2012 North Main street, Danville, Va., if you expect free entertainment at Conference. Our membership at Danville is small, barely thirty families represented in the church. Sister denominations have been asked to help with the entertainment, but they have not responded as we had hoped. We are in position to provide for the free entertainment of only sixty-five. Our church is not in position to send its delegates and friends to the hotels, and we felt that there were many who would gladly go to the hotels to help the church in this way. The Leland Hotel offers to cut rates for delegates to the North Carolina Conference. Every effort will be made as far as possible to entertain all we can free. This suggestion is made at the request of the Conference President.

Golden Text: God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will we not fear.—Ps. 46:1, 2a.

THY WILL BE DONE

Not in dumb resignation we lift our hands on high,
Nor like the nerveless fatalist, content to trust and die.
Our faith soars like the eagle and springs to meet the sun,
And cries exulting unto Thee, Oh God, Thy will be done!
Try will—it bids the weak be strong. It bids the strong be just,

No hand to beg, no lip to fawn, no brow to kiss the dust!
Wherever man oppresses man, beneath Thy liberal sun,
O God, be there, Thine arm make bare. Thy righteous will be done!

Thy Will Be Done—With My Money.—Matt. 6:7-15
(Consecration Meeting)

“Some folks give according to their means, and some according to their meanness.”—George Elliott.

“Money is like a spring of water in the mountains. It holds the wealth of the valley in its bosom, if it will only expend itself. When it dashes down the mountain, it makes the meadows glad and green with its wealth. Beautiful flowers spring up along its banks and bathe their faces in its sparkling surface. But when we obstruct this beautiful stream, the valleys dry up, the flowers and grass wither and die. So it is with money; while it flows out freely and circulates, it blesses humanity; but when the circulation is interrupted by hoarding it, or squandering and abusing it, it becomes a curse. The heart hardens, the sympathies dry up, the soul becomes a desert.”—Orison Swett Marden.

“Take my silver and my gold—
Not a mite would I withhold;
Take my moments and my days,
Let them flow in endless praise.”

IN ALABAMA AND GEORGIA

On the tenth of October, as Field Secretary of Religious Education, I left Richmond bound for our Conferences in the Far South. On the morning of the twelfth I finally arrived at Corinth, where the Alabama Conference was in session, and found a church full of delegates and visitors deeply interested in the work of the Church. Others have reported the proceedings, and it suffices to say this was a meeting marked by Christian harmony and forward steps looking ahead to progress. The meeting of the Woman's Board was one of interest to all women present. On Thursday the Conference convened in Wadley to celebrate the location of the new college in that town, and there was great rejoicing in all hearts that a dream of years was approaching realization, and that opportunities of Christian education were to be brought nearer to the boys and girls of Georgia and Alabama.

Following the Conference, through the efficient planning of the live Sunday school chairman of the Conference, Mr. J. W. Payne, I visited four churches before leaving for Georgia. At Noon Day church a Christian Endeavor society was organized, with Miss Minnie Huey as President and Miss Lois Calhoun as Secretary, at a fine meeting of young people. After a pleasant night spent in the hospitable Huey home, I went on to Rock Stand church to be with them in their Sunday school service. I found here a good school with interested officers and teachers and pastor, Rev. J. H. Hughes. Rock Stand also has a working Christian Endeavor society. After dinner with Mr. and Mrs. Allen, Mr. Leon Payne took me on to Roanoke, and Sunday night I stopped with Mrs. H. W. Smallwood. I went out to Mt. Zion church to be with them in their Sunday night service. On Monday night a meeting was held at Lowell with the young people, and a group of about eighty were present, and Christian Endeavor work was discussed. Through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Vernie Kitchens I made the early train for Columbus, Tuesday morning, and was on my way to the Georgia and Alabama Conference at North Highlands church.

Several busy and happy days were spent in Columbus. The Conference was fine. A good Sunday school report was given, and it was voted to hold a Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention in the Conference in the spring, and Mr. Denson, Mr. Willingham and Mr. Kinsey were appointed as a committee to make arrangements. Other steps were taken looking forward to a larger future work. It was a Conference session well worth while, and one enjoyed by all privileged to attend. The generous hospitality of Mrs. Sallie Kinsey made it especially enjoyable to the Field Secretary.

Thursday night a meeting was held at North Highlands church in which steps were taken to have a Cradle Roll and a Home Department in the Sunday school, and Mrs. Willingham and Mrs. Maples were elected to have charge of the work. Friday night, with Rev. A. H. Shepherd, we went to Beulah church, where we had a good meeting, and started a Christian Endeavor society, with Mr. Roberts as president and Miss Chadwick as secretary. Rev. P. L. Dukes, the pastor, assisted greatly in the meeting, as also did Brother J. F. Hill and others.

Today (October 22) is being spent in Columbus, and after two more full days, the trip back to Virginia will be started. Sunday, with the morning at Rose Hill church, the afternoon with the Intermediates of North Highlands, who desire to organize their Sunday school class, and the evening in a Missionary Rally, promises to be a great day. On Monday I go to La Grange to spend the day and night with our three churches there, and Brother Hanson has promised a full day. Tuesday I leave for Atlanta and Richmond, and only regret that work in the office makes it seem unwise to stop with our first church in South Carolina, the new organization at Anderson, Rev. Evans, pastor.

Never have I been among people more consecrated and devoted to the work of the Kingdom; people interested and eager to work for Him. Sunday school and Christian Endeavor interest is keen, and progress is apparent. I wish there were space to speak individually of all those who helped make this first trip pleasant, to tell of the young people whom I have met who are looking forward to preparation for greater usefulness. But the kindness is appreciated, and with great interest shall I watch the records of work accomplished in our churches in Georgia and Alabama—and now in South Carolina.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

In making out the list of contributions for the furnishing of the Baby Home we overlooked a package from Mrs. W. A. Newman, Henderson, N. C., which contained one quilt, two pillows, two sheets, two pillow cases. We regret the oversight, but it is hard to keep everything correct with as many different things to do as we have. We also gave Mrs. Ethel Abel, Richland, Ga., credit for a package containing quilts, linen and other articles which should have been credited to the members and friends of the Christian church, Richland, Georgia. We are glad to make these corrections.

Seeing sometimes is believing, and makes quite a different impression. Mrs. John A. Hall visited the Baby Home last week, and was so impressed with the little helpless tots that she went back home and gathered up many little articles of clothing she thought we could use in the building and brought it back to us. I have often stated that if we could just get our people to visit the institution and see the golden opportunity of doing a great work through the institution for helpless humanity, all our needs would be supplied in the future.

A man of wealth visited us some months ago and caught the vision of how he might use part of his fortune, and gave us an endowment through a trust company that brings us an income of $100 per month. He caught the vision by coming to see us and getting in personal touch with the work.

But it is necessary for us to believe, though we have not seen, because it is impossible for all to visit the Christian Orphanage in order to catch the vision. I give you the instances above mentioned to show you the impression it makes on those who do come, and if you could visit us it might make the same impression on you. I wish you would come.

The Thanksgiving season will soon be here. Begin now to make your plans to raise a splendid offering in your church. We need your help. We need it now. Make an offering that will cost you a little self-denial and it will do you more good. Begin next Sunday to plan for this offering.

CALLED HOME

EBERLE—Mrs. Lura Pearle Eberle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. McCoy, was born April 24, 1894, and died in Washington, D. C., September 15, 1921, at the age of 27 years, 4 months and 21 days. On September 15, 1920, she was married to Hicury A. Eberle, of Hyattsville, Md. The grief-stricken husband accompanied the body back to the home of her parents, and the funeral services were held at St. Peter's church September 18, 1921. Sister Eberle became a member of the Christian Church when quite young, and was a good worker in church and Sunday school. Besides her husband and parents, she is survived by three sisters and two brothers. Rev. R. P. Crumpler assisted the writer in the services.

A. W. ANDES.

SHOWALTER—William P. Showalter, son of Antioch's most faithful members, died September 27, 1921, at the age of 75 years, 4 months and 5 days. Brother Showalter was one of those firm Christian characters with positive convictions of right that are so much needed everywhere today. He served his Master well and gladly while on earth, and leaves us every reason to believe he has gone to reap a true Christian's reward. He will be greatly missed in the church and in the community where he lived. He is survived by his widow, one daughter, and one brother. Funeral services were conducted at St. John's Lutheran church, September 29, 1921, assisted by Rev. S. B. Hanna of the Presbyterian church. May his influence still live in the hearts of those who knew him.

A. W. ANDES.

PAYNE—Little Helen Virginia Payne, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Payne, was born April 10, 1921, and died September 27, 1921, making her age, therefore, 5 months and 17 days. Burial services were held at Linville Christian church, September 28, 1921. May the Lord bless and comfort the sorrowing parents and other relatives and friends.

A. W. ANDES.

RICE—Mrs. Mary N. Rice passed to her reward October 6, 1921, in her 84th year. She was a good Christian mother and a faithful member of Damascus Christian church. She leaves two sons and two daughters, many grand and great grandchildren, also many relatives and friends.

Her remains were laid to rest in Cedar Hill cemetery, Suffolk, Va. May God bless the bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER.

WHITE—William Staley White, son of Rev. and Mrs. T. E. White, was born November 19, 1916, and died October 8, 1921. He had a remarkable birth, a remarkable life and a most remarkable death. He came at the close of an interesting session of the Western North Carolina Christian Conference, which was held at Pleasant Ridge church, in Randolph county, N. C. The new church building in which the Conference was held, and of which his father was pastor, was being dedicated by Dr. W. W. Staley, at the hour of his birth. Partly because of this circumstance, he was given the name William Staley, and during his short life he bore, worthily, the name of that great man.

He filled the home with the sweetest joys and the holiest aspirations. To train and educate him was the parents' desire, and his strong body and mind for three years responded encouragingly to this desire. Wherever he went he won friends, and almost all his Sabbaths were spent in church. He felt perfectly in place in his father's pulpits, and would take his seat with remarkable reverence and dignity.

The last year of his life was marked by the most valiant fight against an unconquerable disease—sarcoma. In every battle he was brave, and in death he was crowned a hero. He submitted to medical examinations like one of a mature mind, the best skill in America being employed to help him. All that human hands, heads and hearts could do was done. But victory was to be won, not in life but in death. So when the day of October 8, 1921, was passing into night, the little brave heart gave unmistakable evidence that he had gloriously won, not with human help, but with God. And anxious, yearning, breaking hearts were suddenly filled with the grace of God as he sweetly sang, with a clear and victorious voice, "Makes me love everybody, makes me love everybody, and it is good enough for me." 'Tis the old time religion, and it's good enough for me." Then, to make sure that the long, earnest, prayerful watchers had understood him, he said, "You sing." All had understood, but only one could respond—the one next to God Himself. And with trembling voice the mother sang, "Love Lifted Me." A few more struggles, and then the peaceful sleep.

The Methodist, Baptist and two Presbyterian pastors of Sanford were present, and took a part in the services held in the First Christian church of Sanford, of which Brother White is pastor. The house was filled.

The little one's body was gently laid to rest in the Buffalo cemetery by the side of his grand parents and great, great grand mother at the old home church of the child's mother. The grave was literally covered with flowers in various designs.

The child can not return, but parents and loved ones can go to it.

COLEY—On October 10, 1921, the death angel came to the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Coley and took the spirit of their daughter, Lucile, back to the God who gave it. Lucile was eight years of age. She was kind and obedient and loved by all who knew her.

She leaves to mourn their loss, four brothers and five sisters. Her remains were laid to rest in Grace's Chapel cemetery, the funeral being conducted by Rev. Walter Gilmore. May the Lord comfort the bereaved ones.

A FRIEND.

DOFFLEMYRE—Willie Dofflemyre, son of Hiram Dofflemyre, of Luray, Va., was shot and instantly killed in Hagerstown, Md., on Monday evening, October 10, 1921, by a Norfolk and Western railroad detective. Young Dofflemyre's age was 17 years, 9 months, and 22 days. His remains were brought to Leaksville, where the funeral services were conducted and the interment made in the cemetery of Leaksville Christian church, Thursday, October 13, 1921. Mrs. Dofflemyre, Willie's mother, is a member of the Leaksville church. May the Holy Spirit comfort the heart-broken parents. The funeral services were conducted by the writer.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

PIERCE—Andrew Jackson Pierce, aged 64 years, 8 months and 10 days, was taken on October 19, 1921. He was for several years a member of Antioch Christian church, but at the time of his death was a member of the Central Hill Baptist church. He was married four times; the first wife being Miss Mary M. Duck; the second, Miss Roxanna Duck; the third, Miss Annie Lee Munford, and the fourth, Miss Emma F. Hall. All his wives and children preceded him to the grave.

The funeral was conducted by his pastor at Antioch church, assisted by the writer.

One brother survives—Mr. J. G. Pierce, Suffolk, Va.; also many relatives and friends.

H. H. BUTLER.

KING—John F. King departed this life at his home in Pleasant Grove township, Alamance county, N. C., October 20, 1921, at the age of 71 years, six months and one day. He leaves three children and one sister. His wife died July 13, 1911. He had been a member of Union Christian church about 40 years. Funeral services at his home and interment in the cemetery at Union, conducted by the writer. He realized that the end was near and was willing to depart. God bless the bereaved.

J. W. HOLT.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT— DAUGHTIE

Whereas, God deemed it best to remove from earth to heaven our beloved brother and member, Mr. B. R. Daughtie, therefore be it resolved—

First: That we bow in humble submission to our Heavenly Father's will, knowing He doeth all things well, and that our loss is Heaven's gain;

Second: That the church has lost a member that was always interested in its welfare, and wanted it to prosper and grow that men and women might be saved;

Third: That we offer our heartfelt sympathy to the family, pointing them to Christ, the Savior of the world;

Fourth: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy spread on the minutes of Liberty Spring Christian church records.

NEW YORK WORLD ASKS OPINION OF PRESIDENT

New York World Wires President Harper Asking Opinion Of Disarmament. Reply Printed

The New York World plans a week in advance of the Disarmament Conference to be held in Washington beginning November 11, to bring out a special Disarmament Number.

The World wired President Harper for an opinion on the matter. The Maroon and Gold takes great pleasure in printing his reply:

Elon College, N. C.,
October 24, 1921.

The World,
Herbert Bayard Swopee, Editor,
New York City.

We must prepare for peace with the same assiduity that we have prepared for war. Our preparation for war has saddled upon the unborn for ages to come a burden of debt which will retard the progress of mankind immeasurably. The immorality of war is seen not so much in its taking the life of the generation that wages it, as in its unwarranted proscription of the liberty and life and potential human progress of the generations yet unborn and unable to protest. War denies every human right; it violates every tenet of Christian brotherhood and democracy. Disarmament is what we need just now to render war less likely disarmament by international agreement if possible, as helping the peoples of the whole world, but disarmament for our nation alone if international agreement is impossible.

In saying this, I am in no way unappreciative of my country. It may be, in the providence of God, that America may best serve the redemption of humanity by suffering herself to be destroyed than by arming herself to destroy other nations. Just as Jesus became the Savior of men by yielding up His life, so may it be the duty of some nation to give its life for the salvation of the political life of mankind. What nation should be chosen as this Messiah for the redemption of the political order? Rather, what nation would be willing to offer itself on this new Calvary for the race? If such sacrifice be needful for this great redemptive boon why not our own nation?

But I do not believe such a consequence would necessarily follow. Certainly it would not, if we should establish in our President's Cabinet a Secretary of International Good-Will, and place at his disposal the millions we now expend on army and navy appropriations, and authorize him to use this vast sum in every legitimate manner to sow the seeds of amity and brotherliuess and education for democracy to the ends of the earth.

This plan would give Christianity a chance to redeem the world. May statesmanship in America rise to the challenge of such a mission of "peace on earth, good-will to men." May it do it on November 11th, and the days following, when the Disarmament Conference gathers in Washington.

W. A. HARPER, President.

DR. W. P. MINTON TO BE HERE NEXT MONTH

Dr. W. P. Minton, Foreign Mission Secretary of the American Christian Convention, will preach on Sunday morning, November 13. On the night of the 13th Dr. Minton will give a stereopticon lecture of his travels in foreign lands.

MR. BLACK REACHES NEW FIELD OF WORK

Rev. B. F. Black reached his new field of labor in Wolfeboro, N. H., October 15. Mr. Black drove through from Franklinton, N. C., in his faithful Ford, passing through 11 of the original 13 states of the union. He is deeply interested in the beautiful landscape and the spirit of the people he has gone to serve.

The students will recall that Mr. Black has made several visits to Elon, and always had in store interesting talks for them.

ELON AT YALE

Elon has four men in Yale this year: H. S. Smith, '17, who is candidate for the Ph. D.; H. S. Harcastle, '19, who is to receive his B. D.; E. H. Rainey, '20, in his second year, and F. C. Lester, '18, who has entered this year for the first time.

A letter from Dean Charles R. Brown says that Mr. Harcastle has won a Fagg Scholarship, which carries with it room and tuition and one hundred dollars in money. Dean Brown also speaks a good word for all the Elon men in Yale.

PASTORING OUR PASTORLESS CHURCHES

The one big problem that is before many local churches now is that of securing a pastor. There are not enough ministers to supply the churches. We can hardly conceive the idea of many of our churches being without a pastor, and yet we are face to face with just such a condition.

It will not do for the churches not to have and hold their regular services. We believe that there are laymen in every local church who are capable, consecrated and able enough to hold a service. Not only this, but there are men in the various churches who are capable and willing to go to the pastorless churches. We believe that some definite co-operative program should be undertaken whereby the churches without a pastor may have services held for them. We know that each congregation is a law within itself and no official among us is given power to undertake such a program, except where the people are willing; but it seems to us that the hand of necessity lays upon us the obligation to see that a service is held in every church. To do less is to acknowledge our inability, our lack of consecration, co-operation and earnestness in the work. Let us get together and undertake such a program.

THE CHALLENGE OF SACRIFICE

In last week's issue of THE SUN we spoke of a great man who gave his life to the spread of the gospel in a benighted land. We hope that a series of such articles may be worth while in stimulating our young people to undertake larger and greater things for Christ.

During the past few days our reading has caused us to consider two missionaries who gave their best and all, that His name might be lifted up in a land of darkness. The first is the story, fresh from the press, of a young man who sailed to India in 1915 that he might carry the Master's message to untouched parts of that great area of the world. He was in the very glory of his work when the dreaded disease, smallpox, in that far country, laid its cruel hand upon a flower of life and cut it down. He died in a strange land and among strangers. He had given up home, friends, the close ties of friendship, and all the charms of the homeland, that his Master's will might be done. In the prime of his work he is cut off. Strange providence, this is. Yet, God has His own plan and program. As we read the touching account of the young man's passing and burial, we took courage that God would use the occasion to touch the hearts of many others, and instead of one to go, many may go. May they!

Then here comes the sad story of the passing of a missionary's wife in the same land—India. Her life was full of helpful plans and her soul aflame with love for down-trodden humanity. Her life was dedicated to India. For ten years she had poured out her full strength for the emancipation of the unfortunate. Great plans ahead, and yet her "well done" was His will, and her half-finished work, as it seemed to her, was left in the hands of a broken-hearted husband. He buried her body in the land she loved and then turned toward the evening shadows to finish their task.

We wish that more of our young people might read such heart-touching and real life stories instead of so much fiction that borders on nonsense. Tell us the kind of literature young people read and we will tell you what will be made of their lives.

All of us love a hero. The hero of the Cross deserves double honor. Let us tell our young people of these heroes and encourage them to follow the Spirit's leading.

OUR FOREIGN MISSION BOARD MEETS

The Foreign Mission Board of the Christian Church met in Dayton, Ohio, October 18-20. We have been furnished with the full proceedings of the Board, and regret that we do not have room for their full printing. We re-tell the essentials in this editorial, in the absence of more space.

Resolutions: In view of the proposed building operations in Japan and their need on the field, the Garmans were asked to return to Japan as soon as practicable after the close of their spring term in college. Section 11 of Article II of the Mission Manual, which refers to the ceasing of salaries of missionaries, while traveling to and from the field, was stricken out.

Japan Budget: The budget for Japan gives $22,113 to regular work, $12,000 to specials, including night schools provided for last year. The total budget is $35,698.

Program: A constructive financial program for the churches in Porto Rico was decided upon looking to these churches to become self-supporting within a period of fifteen years. The plan embraces an educational campaign on stewardship from now to the middle of December, and an every-member canvass at that time in each of the organized churches, aiming at not less than five per cent of the pastor's salary to be raised by the local church during the coming year in addition to current expenses and benevolences. A medical missionary, with an equipped automobile for a traveling clinic, was decided upon. The matter of training native workers was also stressed and included in the program.

Miscellaneous: Monthly reports from each worker is to be made, showing the financial standing, attendance, confessions, baptisms, visits made, etc., in each preaching place. A copy of the report is to be sent to the secretary of the Porto Rico Mission, and a copy to the Foreign Mission office.

Porto Rico Budget: The budget for Porto Rico embraces $7,736 for regular work and $12,019.24 for specials, including the Santa Isabel chapel. The total foreign mission budget for 1922 amounts to $66,982.86.

Officers: Rev. W. H. Denison, D. D., was elected President; Rev. W. P. Minton, Secretary, with Denison, Winters and Minton as the Mission Council.

DISARMAMENT AGAIN

By the time this issue of THE SUN reaches the public, the Disarmament Conference will be in session at the country's Capitol. No such Conference has ever been called before. Its place in the world is appropriate and its undertakings Christian in spirit, mighty in purpose and brotherly in feeling. The Conference expresses a confidence among nations—a confidence among individuals. The country during these days should rise to its highest approach of brotherly feeling and urge those who represent us, and who represent other nations, to believe fully and forcibly in the dream of the ancient writer who said that weapons of war should be beaten into useful instruments.

As we have already pointed out, the millions of men lying in the silent tomb, buried in a surging sea, and lost beneath the wreckage of carnage and warfare, speak in un-numbered ways that we shall cease from the killing of men and turn to their uplift, to their service and to their salvation.

May it be the earnest and sincere prayer of every Christian heart that November 11 of this good year will mark the beginning of a new era of time, fraught with hope that shall bring great and lasting joy to the hearts of all peoples of the world. May the acts and actions of the men who sit at the council table serve as the death knell to war's grim and selfish passions!

AMERICA'S LEADERSHIP

America's leadership will be tested again this week. She sits at the council table on the matter of reducing our arms. Just as the world looked to America in the great and trying years of the war, so will she look upon America this week. If America's representatives at this great conference will take the lead, we confidently believe that other nations will follow suit.

Shall America fall short of her responsibility, her obligation, and the expectation of the world?

NEW EDITOR NORTH CAROLINA CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE

The North Carolina Christian Advocate, Greensboro, N. C., has again changed editors. Rev. G. T. Rowe succeeded Rev. H. M. Blair one year ago, and now Rev. A. W. Plyler succeeds Brother Rowe, who has been elevated to the book editorship of The Southern Church and editor of The Methodist Review.

THE SUN welcomes Brother Plyler into the fraternity, and hopes that his troubles may be fewer than other editors—and even at that he will find a plenty.

THE NEXT GREAT SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

The sixteenth International Sunday School Convention is to be held in Kansas City, Missouri, June 21-27, 1922. This Convention is called in session every four years. The last Convention was held in Buffalo, New York, in June, 1918. The text of the Kansas City Convention is to be "Jesus Christ, the Chief Corner Stone," and the working theme of the Convention, "Building Together." The special themes for each day will be, "Building Together Through the Home," "Building Together Through the Church," "Building Together Through the Nation," "Building Together Throughout the World," etc.

A consideration of this great gathering calls to mind the magnitude of Sunday school work. There will be nearly 10,000 delegates in attendance, and from possibly all countries. There are 145,957 Sunday schools in the United States, with a total of officers and teachers of 1,583,491. There are 16,131,733 pupils enrolled in our Sunday schools.

DEFICITS ON OUR PUBLICATIONS

We have stated again and again that THE CHRISTIAN SUN does not meet expenses. The deficit amounts to about $5,000 per year, which is made up at present from the funds of the Men and Millions Forward Movement. It ought to be known to all our people that THE CHRISTIAN SUN is not the only publication of our people that faces a deficit each year. Our Herald of Gospel Liberty sustained a deficit last year of something over $10,000. The Christian Missionary—a monthly publication—had a deficit of $1,216.89 for its 1921 report over a deficit of $698.18 for its 1920 deficit.

But our own papers are not the only ones that are facing deficits each year. We know of no Church publication that is self-supporting. All of them are subsidized in some way. A large part of them own their own plants and take the profits from the job printing department and make up their deficits.

A WEEK OF PRAYER FOR YOUNG MEN

The Young Men's Christian Association has set aside November 13-19 as a week of prayer for young men. The call sets forth four essentials. They are, briefly, as follows:

1. The development or extension work of national movements.
2. The removing of inter-racial friction and misunderstanding.
3. The Christianizing of international politics and commercial relations.
4. The creation of a moral and spiritual atmosphere and knowledge of the fundamental problems of foreign affairs, which are essential to the life and development of a truly Christian fellowship of nations.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—No. III.

MONDAY, September 19.—I had a most refreshing night's rest and sleep, awaking, at 6:30. A steamer at sea is a much better place for sleeping than a Pullman. I was up at 7 and ready for a hearty breakfast by 7:30. Minton and Martin are with me at the table, and a jolly meal we have together—the first one thus since Saturday. They played "hookie" yesterday and declined the dining room. I ate my first Casaba melon. It is tropical, very much like our Honey Dew, and sharpens the appetite for more.

The sea this morning is very, very calm; there are no breakers or white caps, and the surface is like a fish pond. One could fish on it in comfort from a row boat. But it has grown much warmer. I put off the fall clothes with which I had dressed for the voyage, and don the thin clothes of summer. This makes me comfortable after a cold water shower bath and puts me in fine fettle. Being out at sea is great—sometimes.

Our ship sailed 330 miles yesterday in 22 hours. The sun is shining, the sea is calm, the boat is steady, piano, flute and Victrola are heard together or alternating. Many passengers are in evidence not seen before, and at 10 a. m. it is indescribably delightful "out on the blue and briny deep" 500 miles from any land or shore line.

I meet and talk with a Mr. Wells, from Kansas. He is under appointment by President Harding to go to Porto Rico for four years, maybe longer, as U. S. District Attorney for the island. Finding out my mission, he expresses the wish that the churches would do something by way of helping moral and religious conditions in Panama. He was stationed during the war and some time after, as Judge Advocate and Provost General in Panama, and having learned conditions there he is of the opinion that the worst moral conditions on earth exist in Panama. We keep 20,000 or more soldiers and sailors in Panama, all of whom are exposed to enticements and allurements that should not be tolerated. There are 60,000 people in the Republic of Panama, and the moral type, particularly of the women, one-twelfth of the 60,000, is beyond words for print. Our Government has the right by treaty to police the isthmus, and if this were done would greatly lessen disease and improve moral conditions. We preachers and missionaries should put moral backing to a movement that would cause our Government to do this very thing. That would be a real missionary task. Attorney Wells is interesting and will without doubt do his work well in enforcing laws and seeing that justice is done in the courts of Porto Rico.

I cannot realize, comprehend, adjust myself to the blueness of the sea. I had never heard, read or dreamed it was like this. It is nothing less than a great, spreading carpet of the richest blue plush, which coils itself into the most graceful folds, like some great garment being spread out to show its rich, soft texture, and delicate, glorious coloring. As our good ship gently noses its way through this velvety surface, one wonders if it was ever intended that so downy a surface should be so ruthlessly disturbed.

Of our 168 passengers, 18 are on the cruise for an outing—just going to Porto Rico and back on this same ship. It must be a rest, self-imposed and complete. (But I would rather rest on land, for a storm may come at sea any hour.) Our purser this morning issued his "Passenger List," and gives a copy to each passenger. It is a neat brochure of 18 pages, and done with high skill in the printer's art. On its front cover is a picture of the San Lorenzo. It is neatly tied with a blue cord, and carries the name of each passenger—a fine souvenir of the trip. Evidently they have a good printer and printing press aboard.

I was noticing at luncheon today our table waiters. There are Spaniards, Porto Ricans, one Japanese, one negro, and several whites. The only competition between the races in this service is to see which can serve best and act most graciously.

I have been watching the flying fish which you find in abundance in tropical waters. They burst out of the water, possibly frightened by our ship, or pursued by an enemy, and arising six inches to two feet above the surface, they sail away on graceful, silvery wings for one or two hundred yards, and then drop back into the sea, their native element. I wonder if this is a fish evolving toward a bird, or a bird devolving toward a fish? At present he is neither bird nor fish, but a complete combination of both. They seem to be about six inches long, and on spreading their wings—or scales—are about half that wide.

Another very curious phenomenon of the sea appears. I do not know what causes it or how to describe it. It looks something like ten thousand sparkling eyes that of a sudden burst out on the surface of the sea, blink at you and then burst or disappear—diamond-like, sparkling and brilliant. I reckon the sea is unfolding the richest skirts it has before us, crimpling them up, and then ironing them out, and these peeping, blinking eyes are the spangles that fly off in the smoothing out process. God not only loves folks and animals and creeping things—He loves His big oceans also, or He would not have planned them so well nor made them so beautiful. If one cannot see the glory, majesty, and beauty of God in the ever unfolding wonders of the sea, one need not look elsewhere. The oceans join with the heavens in declaring the glory of God, and the only reason why the Psalmist did not write it so was because he had not sailed the Atlantic.

We had a fine luncheon today. Pepper pod soup; broiled lamb chops on toast; deliciously baked potatoes; hot Ceylon tea; Romaine salad; lemon sherbet and assorted cake. We talk at table with one acquainted with Porto Rico, and he gives some interesting facts. There are 102,000 couples in Porto Rico living in "Consensual" marriage—the contracting parties having "consented" to live together without any civil or religious ceremony whatever. The result is 10,000 homeless children, because when the mother finds a man who will marry her she leaves her little ones to shift for themselves, because the new husband will take her, but not her offspring. There are no orphanages in Porto Rico. Some of the churches started one or more, but had to quit. There were too many orphans, present and prospective. An orphanage would only increase the number of homeless by inviting desertion on the part of mothers. Porto Ricans must first be taught the sanity of the marriage vow, and what Christian marriage and a Christian home mean.

At 2 p. m. today we crossed the path of what seemed to be an ocean freighter coming up out of the north-east and heading toward the southwest, evidently from Europe by the Bermudas en route to San Domingo or Havana. It looks good and cheers you wonderfully to see another ship at sea not more than four or five miles away.

At noon today our ship's "log" read "Latitude 29 degrees, 31 minutes north. Longitude 69 degrees, 35 minutes west. Course 16½ degrees east; calm wind, smooth sea, distance run past 24 hours 360 miles." Minton is teaching me new tricks. We went out on forward deck and he took me through his military calisthenics. Then for a hot tub and a rubdown with a Turkish towel at 4:30 p. m. After an hour's rest, well wrapped and perspiring in a deck chair, a half hour's vigorous walking around the decks. But, my! what an appetite that did give me for dinner at 5:30. I had iced celery, soup, asparagus tips on toast, lettuce salad, roast spring chicken with dressing and gravy, blackberry pie with ice cream, glorious Porto Rican coffee, and Amalaga grapes. Just at 8 the full moon climbs up from the sea and hangs there a thing of shimmering glory out above the sea line. The stars are thick and twinkle diamond-like in the clear sky.

What a changeable and wonderful world! Out here, far on the sea, one seems to have slipped into another and different world. Here one is so very close to nature—and nature's God. It is enchantment, and one could seemingly enjoy it forever.

But nature asserts itself in another direction, and Morpheus, the gentle god of sleep, lovingly puts his arm about your neck and bids you say "good-night and sweet dreams" to all the rest of the world while he prepares to refresh you for another new day.

SAMUEL RUTHERFORD—A COUNTRY PASTOR

OUT of love for my brethren in the South who are working away in the rural churches, I write this article on the life of one of the greatest country preachers who ever lived. Samuel Rutherford was born in Roxburghshire, Scotland, in the year 1600. At the age of twenty-one he received his Master of Arts degree at Edinburgh, at which time he was given a position in the Edinburgh faculty. Four years later he gave up this professorship for the study of theology, and after three years of this study he settled at a country church known as Anwoth. Thus we see he was educationally well prepared.

The biographies of great and good men often contain many pages of sorrow, or of defeat in the opening chapters of their lives. For thirteen months before she died his wife was very ill. The death angel also claimed his two children. Such was the discipline of sorrow by which he was trained for the duties of a pastor and by which a shepherd's heart of true sympathy was imparted to him.

A third elemental point in his success was prayer. A. A. Bonar says he habitually arose at 3 o'clock in the morning to meet God in prayer. And the men of his own day said, "The 'little fair man' of Anwoth is always praying."

It seems that a fourth characteristic quality which brought him success was a true appreciation of his field. He did not murmur when it seemed Providential that he should go to a poor little country parsonage off the coast of the Irish Sea. Two hundred years later Samuel Gilmour says: "The entire region is one of the loveliest in all of Scotland, a veritable garden of Rome. This and the fragrance of Rutherford's name have brought many a traveler to the spot. . . . 'We went first to his church; the identical fabric he preached in, and which is still preached in. There are dates 200 years old carved on the seats.'" He did not trifle with his opportunities because they seemed small. From his own letters written afterward we gather evidence of his intense interest in each individual soul in his care. "I did what I could to put you within grips of Christ. I told you His last will and testament plainly," he writes me. To another he writes: "There I wrestled with the angel and prevailed. Woods, trees, meadows and hills are my witnesses that I drew on a fair match between Christ and Anwoth."

What were the methods of that parsonage which has been held up as a great example for 300 years? First, a knowledge of his people. He studied them. He went early and late in the name of Jesus Christ as one driven by a great motive and love to look for his lost and scattered flock. Arising at 3 o'clock in the morning to await the coming dawn on bended knees, he went out under such inspiration and leadership of the Holy Spirit as this sort of devotion would naturally give him to learn 'who was who.'

Secondly, this getting acquainted ripened into regular, helpful visitation. He learned the needy and their needs, and with great zeal and arduous efforts he went to work to supply those needs. He was always visiting the sick, lonely, aged, young—everybody!

Thirdly, he taught the Scriptures. He was a master of the catechising art. Children and such as were ignorant of the teachings and doctrines of the Scriptures he gathered into classes and taught most skilfully—indeed, he became so proficient as to be called upon later to help compose the Shorter Catechism of the Reformed Faith.

Fourthly, he really preached the Gospel. His vast scholarship and deep, earnest Christian piety made him a powerful pulpiteer. It is not surprising that his fame spread far and near. His church was packed with the country people, and scholarly travelers turned aside to visit a man so learned and pious.

Finally, love, love, love. It was the capstone of his pastoral achievements. Without it he could do nothing; with it he accomplished much in Christ Jesus.

In conclusion I may add I have only stated the facts as I saw them from reading biographies, letters and sermons. You must make the applications, and draw the inferences; and may God bless you, noble ministers of His, and cause you faithfully to attend the tasks to which He has called you.

ELON LETTER

WE have a way of calling each other names whenever we disagree. The conservative vituperates his progressive brother with the sobriquet of radical or even anarchist. The progressive man responds with his derisive moss-back. The regulars in the Church label the seers heretics, to be dubbed in return old fogies.

We hear a great deal in these times about the Reds and the Bolsheviks. It would be better to inquire as to the cause of these classes than to condemn them wholesale. Why do we have Reds and Bolsheviks?

Bolshevism is nothing more nor less than rabid classism. The only difference between it and the domination of the capitalistic order to which we are accustomed is that more people are involved in the new class that essays to rule and they are less skilled in pretense. So much for a definition.

But what has caused the proletariat to rise up? Class domination—that is it, and the masses have reacted against it. The Czar and his minions in Russia could lead eventually only to his assassination and mob-rule. There is another cause, too—the neglect of the inefficient and the abnormal. There is a class in every country handicapped by weak bodies and minds below the average. No nation has yet undertaken systematically, sympathetically and scientifically to improve the condition of these “under-dogs.” I write this on the way to the Eastern Virginia Conference soon to assemble in the church founded by that great friend of the “under-dog,” Dr. A. W. Lightbourne. We must help these weaker brethren, or their smouldering malcontent will wreck our social order. There must be no under-dogs in democracy.

Dr. Lightbourne was the friend, nay, more, the champion of every oppressed and handicapped brother. He founded and edited “The Under Dog.” The paper did not succeed, because the “top-dog” saw in it a leveling power that would reduce his superiority, and the “under-dog” was in no position to help. The age demands strong champions of the weak. It needs thousands of Albert Willis Lightbournes.

This doughty David of the Lord’s Anointed against the Phillistine forces of entrenched Classism it was my joy to know intimately. Little children loved him. The poor and the outcast revered him. The political grafter and the oppressive industrial baron feared and hated him. Those who knew the real excellency of his unselfish spirit sustained in his death an irreparable loss.

How his soul would express its indignation today at the assault on his “under-dogs,” and how he would rise to eloquence unsurpassable in pouring the oil of reconciliation on the troubled waters of the class dissensions that are at this hour the threatening menace of our social order! Blessed be his memory.

W. A. HARPER.

SUFFOLK LETTER

THE Eastern Virginia Christian Conference held its one hundred and first annual session as the guest of the People’s church, Dover, Delaware, Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., pastor, October 31-November 3, 1921.

At one time it was feared that the distance from the center of the Conference would reduce attendance; but the opposite was true. One hundred and two were registered, and they remained to the close. In point of attendance and attention to the business sessions, it was the best session ever held.

President C. H. Rowland wielded the gavel with kind authority. Secretary I. W. Johnson kept the records up to the last motion, and committees and speakers kept material in the mill. The local attendance was good, so that the audience was a helping factor in the interest and work of the Conference.

The Conference opened Monday night, at which time Governor Denny, Hon. J. B. Hutton, and John King welcomed and responded in happy terms.

Five full business sessions were held, and the other three were given to music, addresses and sermons of high order.

Among the visiting speakers of reputation and value to the Conference were President W. A. Harper, of Elon College; Omer S. Thomas, Secretary of Home Missions for the American Christian Convention; W. P. Minton, Secretary for Foreign Missions; Mrs. Fred Bullock, Field Secretary for Sunday schools for the A. C. C.; and Rev. F. G. Coffin, D. D., President of the American Christian Convention. Rev. W. H. Denison is a member of the Conference, but is superintendent of the Forward Movement with headquarters in Dayton, Ohio. These all brought great messages on great subjects and made an invaluable addition to the spirit and impression upon the city of Dover. I was informed that no religious body that had ever assembled in Dover had made a more favorable impression upon that city.

The Rotary Club of Dover invited the Conference to accept an outing on Tuesday afternoon at the close of the session; this was gratefully accepted, and about fifty machines lined up in the street by the church. The rain and clouds had passed away and a bright autumn sun made field and forest a picture of many colors. The spin was south to Five Points, back through State street to Smyrna, twelve miles to the north over the State Highway. Mr. Dupont has given to the State of Delaware $44,000 per mile to build a State concrete road through the whole length of the state, about ninety-eight miles. This road is as good as any city street. The farms and orchards make this one continuous scene of beauty and thrift. Lakes along the way add to the picture and the delight of the drive. Villages and farmhouses indicate prosperity and taste. No such courtesy has ever been extended to the Conference by an outside organization before, and it was greatly appreciated and enjoyed.

More than seven thousand dollars was sent in by the churches, and some did not come, but will, later; and the prospect is that the Conference receipts will be larger than those of 1920.

The report of Mrs. C. H. Rowland, President of the Woman's Board, showed increase in societies, offerings, and interest in the work. More than five thousand dollars have been paid and they propose a larger sum for 1922.

The People's church went over the top in their hospitality in the luncheons in the church basement and in their homes. The cordiality of the people, the music rendered under the direction of E. B. Benson, and the spirit of good-will, made delegates and visitors feel that it was a rare treat to be the honored guests of such hosts. Pastor Dr. R. C. Helfenstein is not only popular and successful in the People's church, but ingratiated himself unconsciously with the entire Conference.

The Conference goes to Johnson's Grove next year, with Rev. W. M. Jay as President; Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., as Vice-President; Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., as Secretary, and H. Woodward as Treasurer.

Sam Davis was invited to Dover as the guest of H. Woodward and at his expense, and delighted the audience by his wonderful performances on the piano. He is a marvel on ivory for a man who is blind.

HAT was one of the biggest meetings I had ever attended. When the time came for us to turn homeward, my brother was feeble, and wanted to see an old friend in New York. I said, "Go, and I will attend to your churches and your papers for you until you get back." Brother Whitley and I turned homeward. I reached Suffolk Sunday morning, just in time for preaching. After preaching I told them I would give them a sketch of the meeting that night. The large congregation present took great pleasure in listening to what I had to say. I took charge of my brother's work until he returned, and I then started homeward for Franklinton, N. C. As soon as I stepped from the cars, a gentleman who was not a member of the Church himself, but whose family was, came to me and said: "The shepherd has been away, and the sheep have gone astray. The gentleman whom you left as a lay-reader read only one time, when he joined into the 'Scotch Ramble,' and his children had one at his house, and he danced nineteen sets that night, and joined in the dance afterwards." How hurt I was! Here the whole country was now engaged in these "Scotch Ramble" dances. I went, however, next day, to one of my churches, and conducted a service Saturday and Sunday. We had a pleasant service, and I sent message to another church that I would be there Monday morning to begin a series of meetings. This was in February. When I got there I met a good congregation. They said, "You must be crazy." The house was not comfortable and the roads were bad. I told them I was enthused, and while I was away the devil got the reins, and was running everything at the highest speed. We had a good meeting that day, and I appointed several prayer meetings to be held that night, some by ladies and some by gentlemen. I went to meet some old people, and the old lady didn't accept Christ that night, but she did afterwards.

On Saturday I got Rev. M. L. Winston to conduct the services that day and the next morning. I asked the congregation on Saturday, after I had given a talk on the meeting, "Now I want you to talk some." Brother Deaton, the lay-reader, attempted to talk twice, with others, but couldn't succeed. I was sorry for him. He felt so bad, when the service closed, he took a "bee-line" for home.

I returned to my meeting Sunday afternoon and re-continued two weeks. I had gotten the reins from the devil, and Christ was my conductor, and we had charge of things in general. Several efforts were made to have dances, but I appointed prayer meetings nearby, and they never had another dance. I had built one church, and afterwards two more, and the devil couldn't stand the divine service and prayer, and so I broke it up in all that country.

The next meeting I went where my reading brother was a member, and he had become a different man altogether, and said that he didn't think dancing was so much harm. He had danced when he was a young man, but he was satisfied that the influence was hurtful, and he said, "I'll never dance any more." The church forgave him, and he was a strict member afterwards.

BOOK REVIEW

THE CHURCH IN THE PRESENT CRISIS

The Fleming H. Revell Company is shortly to bring out a fourth book for President Harper, of Elon College, to which is given the title, "The Church in the Present Crisis."

Of the volume the publishers said in the original announcement of it: "Dr. Harper's new book is a refreshing, stimulating antidote to the host of works concerning the Church's failure and of mankind's growing worse and worse year by year. Dr. Harper is fully aware of what the Church lacks and of the necessity for new methods and fresh life, and he discusses various modus operandi which should lead to a larger increase of usefulness and power."

Later they have said: "This is a book for the perplexed man, religious, but not able to accept the gospel in the moulds made for it by theologians of other days. It challenges every man to be his own creed-maker and recognizes no authority in religion other than the Spirit-led individual soul.

"A pastor emeritus, hearing the manuscript read, exclaimed: 'Would that my son engaged in mining had had such a book ten years ago!' An eminent surgeon, hearing the concluding chapter, declared: 'That message has done more for me than all the sermons I have ever heard, and I have been what might be styled an agnostic Church member since my thirteenth year.'

"The book does not essay to be a patent remedy for the ills of the time. It rather makes broad and sure the principles in accordance with which a correct solution of all religious and spiritual problems may be found, with just enough of the application of those principles to present situations to lead the thinker and truth-seeker to be his own guide into the endless caverns of spiritual delight and exaltation,—a man's book for men."

The manuscript was submitted by the author to four religious leaders of our day, two of them in the Christian Church and two of them connected with great interdenominational movements. Their estimates are significant.

Dr. W. W. Staley says: "I have read with pleasure and profit The Church in the Present Crisis, by William A. Harper, President of Elon College, N. C., and find that he has covered a large field, planted many vital ideas in fertile soil, and made a contribution of thoughtful and inspiring suggestions for study by religious teachers and workers, in this period of revolutionary thought in all departments of human opportunity and obligation. The spirit of the book charms one as he reads, and the versatile knowledge of the writer furnishes historic and scientific information that illustrates his more wonderful acquaintance with Scripture, and its meaning for the present day. The style is vigorous, the reasoning is strong, and every turn of the page exalts the Gospel of Jesus Christ. It is a book that will be of great value to ministers, and will be a fine volume for laymen who want to acquaint themselves with up-to-date information on the liveliest topics of Christian interest at the present time. To begin the book is like following the guide through caverns lighted by electricity; one will not stop or turn back until reaching the end."

Dr. Martyn Summerbell says: "I have read the manuscript of The Church in the Present Crisis, the new book of my long-time friend, President W. A. Harper, of Elon College, N. C., and I have found it to be a treasury of good things. Dr. Harper has the double gift of sight and insight, coupled with the courage to speak out in plain English of what he observes in the spiritual conditions of the day. He realizes what thinking men in the pew are saying to themselves, and he does not hesitate to express their convictions as to present needs and prospective remedies. To him the Christ is the present Savior, and His plain gospel, freed from the ceremonies of old time prejudices and traditional misconceptions, is the cure for prevalent laxities and the inspiration for successful endeavor. It is a book that intelligent laymen will be glad to recommend to their friends, and that may clarify the vision of some faithful preachers, who will be none the worse for a little modernizing of their Sabbath message."

Dr. Worth M. Tippy, Social Service Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, says:

"President Harper reveals a wide range of interest in The Church in the Present Crisis, his latest book. He discusses from a modern viewpoint the religious and social problems about which everybody is thinking, including also important details of local church work and organization. The book is constructive and stimulating, and is especially significant because of the spiritual note which it sounds in a program of action.

"The following passages indicate the temper of the book:

"'We should be grateful for the age's restlessness as a sign of renewed life and vigor.'

"'Systematic theology received scant courtesy at the hands of the Master. He never even mentioned it.'

"'The Christian who refuses to embrace the social program of Christ with the martyr's devotion, with the crusader's passion for service, is destined to lose his love for Christ.'

"'We shall never settle the industrial problem by adjustment of the grievances which capital and labor have against each other. Labor and capital must recognize that they are brothers together.'"

Dr. Francis E. Clark, founder of the Christian Endeavor movement, says: "I began to read the manuscript of your book on The Church in the Present Crisis with interest and expectation, for I knew that anything that came from your pen would be well worth reading.

"But I must say that, much as I expected, I was happily disappointed, as I read on. I like the book because it is so constructive and forward-looking. It finds fault with the present order of things, but does not leave us hopeless in regard to the future. It points out goals which the Christian Church may reach if it will. It does more than that—it points the way to these goals.

“The vigor and aptness of the sentences catch the attention and make one eager to read on. I have not found a dull line in the book.

“It strikes splendid blows for a genuine religious education and experience, against narrow sectarianism, and for the strengthening and encouragement of all the good elements in our civil and religious life that still exist.

“I was reminded by your book of the message of the Spirit to the Church in Sardis,—‘Be watchful and strengthen the things that remain.’ Your book has pointed out the supreme need of of watchfulness in these critical days of the history of the Church and the world, but it has not forgotten that there are many permanent elements that we can build upon. To the strengthening of these fundamental things that we still have, in the organizations of the Church, in the right understanding of the Word of God, and above all, as your later chapters show, in the imminence of our God and Father, this book is a notable contribution. It is needed by a great multitude of people and I wish they all might read it.”

WOMEN AND THE KINGDOM

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETIES

The good women of our Alabama Conference are anxious to organize Missionary societies in their churches, as the following will indicate:

From Rev. J. H. Veazey, Wadley, Ala.: “We have organized a Woman's Missionary society at Christiana with twelve charter members, and are sure to get more soon. The prospects are bright. This is entirely new to us in the Far South, but our good women are willing and anxious to do something if they have an opportunity. Mrs. M. J. Ingram, Dadeville, Ala., R. 2, is president of our Christiana society. You will kindly send her such literature as will be helpful to her in carrying on the work.”

Miss Lucy Eldredge, writing from Wedowee, Ala., October 14: “I attended the meeting of the Woman's Board of the Alabama Conference Wednesday afternoon, and while I have little experience in that work, at the request of President Hunt I tried to help a little. They had a fine group of women there, and they represented eight or nine societies. Many expressed their interest in the work. Miss Tinie Mae Hunt was elected President of the Conference Woman's Board, and Mrs. Sarah Jane Hood, Roanoke, Ala., R. 1, Secretary-Treasurer. They agreed as a Board to get behind the North Alabama work this year and support a man for one-fourth time. The following asked that you send literature to aid them in organizing societies and in carrying forward the work.” Then follows quite a list of names of the good women who are interested and wish missionary literature—which we have sent with pleasure.

Our women never tire of work for their Lord, and for that to which He laid down His life—that the whole wide world might be redeemed through Him.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

SAMUEL MOURNING FOR SAUL

The saddest thing which comes into the life of any faithful servant of the Lord is to see one who has been a God-fearing man or woman coming down and trying to please men rather than God. While Saul was little in his own sight and feared the Lord he did well. But later when he became a self-willed, man-fearing man instead of a God-fearing man, rendering unto the Lord only partial obedience (which is always disobedience), Samuel was sent with bad news to him. It was not an easy thing for the faithful old judge to face the king and tell him “the Lord hath rent the kingdom of Israel from thee this day.” The parting from the stately, handsome Saul was not an easy matter either, for their ways henceforth would lie in different directions. Samuel's heart was filled with sorrow, and he mourned for Saul, but he did not let his sorrow interfere with his duty to God.

Every true pastor has passed through just such heart-aches and sorrow. They have seen those who promised so well, those who, perhaps, for long years have stood faithful and true, turning away from the Lord and going back to the world. Only a short time ago we had a sorrowful letter from a pastor's wife, telling how hard they worked to induce their church members to give up their worldly pleasures. Telling how, after giving them up for a while, they would plunge still deeper into them. But you know the heart-ache and the sorrow of it all, for as you saw them going back to the world you knew it meant separation forever, and you mourned for them.

Again, it may be the people who are mourning because their pastor's feet are slipping off of the Rock. Mourning because they have seen him sell his Lord for popularity, or buying up some worldly man or woman with prominence. Heavy-hearted, sorrow-laden because their pastor, who has been a God-fearing man, is letting the fear of man take possession of him. Grief-stricken because he is forgetting the Lord who spoke a “fear not” to Paul, telling him “I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to hurt thee,” still lives, and that He is the same Lord unto whom all power has been given. Forgetting that obedience to God insures a power which out-measures the worlding's power as far as the East is from the West.

God can do no mighty works through a man-fearing man, but He can accomplish great things through a God-fearing man. Saul began all right, he looked all right, for he was handsome, stately, and made a fine appearance. That is what people look at mostly. A handsome face, a fine intellect, and great possessions. But God looks deeper. He looks down deep into the heart, and there is often a great difference between outward appearances and the heart. What does God see as He looks into our hearts just now? Does He see the fear of man or the fear of the Lord? Does He see us coming down that we may win the favor of unspiritual persons? Or does He see a fixed purpose to stand true and faithful in all places, at all times, even though our hearts are aching because it is costing us friendships we have enjoyed, and it means separation from those we have liked so much?

A CALL TO THE CHURCHES OF THE NORTH CAROLINA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE

I think we all appreciate the frank statement made by Rev. B. J. Earp, pastor of the Danville church, regarding the ability of the church to entertain delegates and visitors to the coming session of our Conference. I am sure that no one will regard it as in any way reflecting on the good people of that growing church. When we consider how recently the church was organized, a feeling of pride is felt that they can provide so many homes, and that without the help that they had expected from people of other churches.

I desire to urge that no church fail to be represented because of the fact that delegates may have to pay for lodging while there. Provide your delegates with the few dollars that will be required to pay for bed and board, and send them. As Brother Earp stated, every effort will be put forth to provide entertainment for as many as possible, and you may be sure of the fact that the Danville people will give you as hearty a welcome as was ever extended to a conference body. Send in the names of your delegates to the chairman of the committee on entertainment. It is probable that your delegates will be given free entertainment. It is a time for us to rise to the occasion with loyalty to our Church and her cause and help make this the greatest session of our Conference ever held. In doing so we shall also show our appreciation of the noble band of workers there. I am counting on you.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

Dear Uncle Charley: Perhaps we owe an apology to you for our negligence, but please forgive us and we will try to do better when we get old enough to write for ourselves. Wilson is a big boy eight years old and Mildred is six. They go to school and are very fond of their teacher, who is Miss Ruth Lloyd. We wish so much that we could come to see you and the crowd of children. Enclosed please find $4.00—$1.00 from each of us.—Wilson, Mildred, Wilmoth and Jack Rowles, New Hill, N. C.

Dear Cousins: You are fine this month. We like to see you. Come in with your dues, even though you are late.

Uncle Charley is away this week, but I knew you would be disappointed if some one did not answer your letters, so I am answering them for him this time. We would be glad for you all to come to see us some time. With love from all the cousins, Hulda Frederick, Clerk.

Dear Uncle Charley: My little sister and I want to join the band of cousins. She is ten months old and I am three and a half years old. I wonder if you have any "tots" we could play with. My mamma was in the Orphanage for several years. Her name before marriage was Mary Lou Mitchell. She has always loved the orphans and I am sure we will too. We enclose one dollar.—Herbert Olive, Jr., and Dorothy High, Durham, N. C.

Dear Cousins: We extend to you a hearty welcome into the band of cousins. We have several little fellows in the Baby Home just three and a half years old. You would like them for your playmates, I am sure. Come to see them some time. I remember your mother very well. She was here when I came to live at the Orphanage. Ask her if she remembers me. I will ask Uncle Charley to write you a letter when he comes back from the Alabama Conference.—Hulda Frederick, Clerk.

NOTICE

Following the close of the Conference period, the services of the Field Secretary of Religious Education, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, will be available for Sunday school and Christian Endeavor institutes among our churches. It is the desire of the Board of Religious Education to reach every part of our work that it can in such gatherings for the discussion of better methods. The plan is to hold the institutes where two or more churches can meet together, wherever this is possible. Any churches interested in holding such meetings will please communicate with me as Chairman of the Board, or with the Field Secretary.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION IN GEORGIA AND ALABAMA

The churches in the two Conferences in Georgia and Alabama are showing much interest in progressive steps in Sunday school, Christian Endeavor and missionary work. The following instances of a live interest in all forms of church work came to the personal attention of the Field Secretary on her recent visit to these Conferences.

The Rock Stand church, Rev. J. H. Hughes, pastor, has a new Christian Endeavor society which is doing a splendid work. They report that the organization of the society in the church has given new life to their prayer meetings, and has enlisted the efforts of the younger people. The Rose Hill church, Columbus, Ga., Rev. R. F. Brown, pastor, also has a newly organized Christian Endeavor society, which is progressing nicely under the leadership of the efficient president, Mr. L. S. Robbins.

On Saturday night, October 15, a Christian Endeavor society was organized at the Noon Day church, with Miss Minnie Huey as the president, and the next week a society was organized at the Beulah church, Columbus, Ga., with Mr. J. R. Roberts as the president. Two churches in the Alabama Conference, Mt. Zion and Lowell, have expressed their interest and desire for a Christian Endeavor society; and it is hoped that these will be organized soon.

On Monday night, October 24, the Field Secretary was privileged to attend an unusual meeting, and one full of help and inspiration. This was the Children's Prayer Meeting at the LaGrange, Ga., Christian church, Rev. C. W. Hanson, pastor. Although there were many grown people present that night, the meeting was in the hands of the children, and a little girl seven or eight years of age led the meeting, while a choir of children directed by Bro. Hanson led the singing. Nearly every child present took part in the meeting, giving personal testimony of his or her love for Jesus Christ, and no one could help but feel impressed by their earnestness and devotion. Following the prayer service, the Field Secretary spoke to the children, and then we had a free discussion of Sunday school, Christian Endeavor and Missionary society problems. Enthusiasts along all lines were present, and the meeting ended with Mrs. E. M. Whaley being chosen to be responsible for the organization of a Woman's Missionary society in the church, with the Sunday school superintendent, Mr. J. J. House, putting in an order for twelve Teacher-Training books for the use of a new class, and with the organization of the children into a Junior Christian Endeavor society. Nineteen children signed the pledge of the society, and the following officers were elected: President, Miss Katie Royal; Vice-President, Miss Mary Jones; Secretary, Miss Lottie Humphrey; Treasurer, Charlie Hanson; and Rev. C. W. Hanson was unanimously chosen as the Superintendent, a tribute to his interest in the children and their work. A visitor from the nearby Methodist church offered to help organize a Senior Christian Endeavor society in the church, and his offer was accepted, and a joint meeting of these two churches will be held in the future that the Methodist Endeavorers may help the new organization. LaGrange church has grown rapidly and has been greatly blessed, and is going forward to do a greater work in the days ahead.

The North Highlands church, of Columbus, Ga., Rev. A. H. Shepherd, pastor, held a missionary rally on Sunday night, October 23, under the direction of the Woman's Missionary society. The children of the Sunday school and the church choir assisted with many special numbers. The president of the society, Mrs. Sallie Kinsey, had the direction of the program, which was enjoyed by a large audience. Before the program was rendered, the pastor gave a short missionary sermon which impressed upon those present the great needs of the world, and the call for workers to go forth in the Master's service.

The Intermediate class of the North Highlands Christian church met recently and organized in order to do better work. Mr. Homer Wilkerson was chosen as President, and Miss Annie Kinsey as Secretary. Rev. A. H. Shepherd teaches this class.

The Georgia and Alabama Conference voted at its session recently to hold a Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention in the spring, and a committee of three, Mr. Walter Denson, Mr. W. W. Willingham, and Mr. Kinsey were appointed to make necessary arrangements. This Conference also included a Committee on Christian Endeavor among its Standing Committees for the coming year.

Much more could be written about the work in Georgia and Alabama. The work is growing. New churches are being organized. Old churches are taking new life in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work. Several churches have Life Recruits looking forward to training and to service. May God bless His work in this section!

THE HANDBOOK

The Board of Religious Education is mailing to each Sunday school superintendent and to each pastor copies of The Handbook just issued. This handbook contains the minutes of the various Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions held this year, together with statistical reports of Sunday schools in all Conferences, as far as such reports could be obtained. It is hoped that the superintendents will distribute the copies sent wisely among their workers in order that The Handbook may have the widest reading and use possible. Any of the workers who may desire a copy may secure one by applying to the Field Secretary, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va.

OUR BABIES

"The Cradle Roll Department of the Sunday school has been organized for two purposes: First, to show that the church recognized the importance of early religious nurture and desires to assist all fathers and mothers in providing Christian nurture and training for their babies and very little ones; Second, to open the way for babies and very little children to come into personal touch with the church, through the Sunday school, at a very early period in their lives.

"There are three essentials in organizing a Cradle Roll: A Sunday school; a good woman in that Sunday school who loves Christ and who loves babies; and a baby or babies in the community whose parents, whether they be Christian or not, ought to have the cooperation of that particular Sunday school in providing nurture for the spiritual natures of their children. Wherever these three are—a Sunday school, a Christian woman, a baby—city, town or country, there ought to be a Cradle Roll Department."

These two paragraphs are taken from a leaflet written by Mrs. Maud Junkin Baldwin, Children's Division, Superintendent for the International Sunday School Association. The whole leaflet discusses the "Why" and the "How" of the Cradle Roll in a very helpful way, telling how to organize, explaining the duties of a Cradle Roll Superintendent, telling of equipment desirable and suggesting material for Cradle Roll Services.

The following Cradle Roll Standard is also given in the leaflet. A standard is an ideal toward which to work and a measure by which to test progress. The following standard was adopted by the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations in January, 1916, and by the International Sunday School Association in February, 1916, and is recommended to all thoughtful Cradle Roll workers as a guide and an ideal.

The church and Sunday school may assist in the religious nurture of little children in the home and insure their future membership in the Sunday school. To this end, it is desirable:

1. To keep in touch with the children and parents, by:
 - (a) Organizing a Cradle Roll of children from birth to three or four years of age, with a superintendent and any needed assistants.
 - (b) Recognition of membership in the Sunday school, a public roll and an accurate, permanent record of names, birthdays, promotions, removals, parents' names and addresses.
 - (c) Public promotion not later than the fourth birthday to the Beginners' class or department.
2. To make definite provision for the child's early religious nurture by:
 - (a) Suggesting to parents appropriate stories, prayers, songs, or simple lessons preparatory to the Beginners' lessons, and furnishing helpful literature when necessary.
 - (b) Furnishing appropriate and simple preliminary instruction and a sympathetic teacher for the Cradle Roll Class, if there is one in the Beginners' Department.
 - (c) Mothers' or Parents' meetings or classes in which topics concerning the early training of children shall be considered and by providing a home library for their use.
3. To provide for social contact between Sunday school and home, by:
 - (a) Visits, messages, and invitations for special days.
 - (b) Recognition of birthdays.
 - (c) A Cradle Roll Day annually.
 - (d) An occasional social affair for parents and children.

How does your Cradle Roll measure up to this standard? Does it suggest new work to you, a new field of opportunity and service?

The Board of Religious Education has secured a limited number of Sunday school leaflets, including the one above referred to on the Cradle Roll, and leaflets on the work of the Beginners; Primary and Junior Children, and organized class work for the older members of the Sunday school, as well as some literature on general Sunday school work. Upon request made to the Field Secretary, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va., this material will be sent to any school. Let us help you solve your problems of religious education through better Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Societies, through more missionary instruction and better Teacher Training classes. And with our Heavenly Father's help, may our churches go forward to a greater service, because our youth knows Him better.

CHURCH NEWS

OPEN FOR WORK

I have accepted a call to Needham's Grove for the coming year, also I have accepted a call to New Center. I will preach at Needham's Grove on the first Sunday and at New Center on the fourth. I would consider work for the second and third Sundays.

Blessings be upon the entire denomination. I trust that we may have a great conference this year and many great things accomplished.

PLEASANT RIDGE (R.)

The revival meeting began at Pleasant Ridge fourth Sunday in August. I preached twice on Sunday. Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, of Elon College, N. C., came to us on Monday and did the preaching during the week. His sermons were fine, well delivered, and enjoyed by all who heard them.

Brother Crutchfield very quickly won his way to the heart of each one and made a very strong impression there. As a result of the meeting, there were five conversions, the church was greatly revived and two united with the church. To God be all the praise for this.

"COATED"

Not long since I was in one of our North Carolina cities and a dear friend took me into a clothing store and put a $47.00 overcoat on me. He gave instruction that I wear it to keep me warm. Words are inadequate to express my sincere appreciation for this valuable present. While I am clothed with an overcoat, I trust that this good friend may be clothed with the righteousness of our Lord.

GRAHAM CHRISTIAN PASTORATE

Two Sundays ago I stood on top of West Rock and looked down into the valley some four hundred feet below at New Haven, with its hundred and fifty thousand people, and beyond to the blue of Long Island sound. Turning to the west, there towered another mountain which the setting sun gave the appearance of a mighty mound of gold. From the distance trees seemed but shrubs, and people but pigmies. Distance makes a difference, and a view from the summit is worth all the effort it takes to reach it.

From a distance of some seven hundred miles, and looking back over four years spent with the Graham and New Providence churches, things assume a new aspect. The rough places are now but beauty spots, for as the green bushes and barren rocks turn to gold under the autumnal setting sun, so the disappointments of youth mellow the heart and broaden the sympathies under the influence of Christian love and fellowship. Those years of service shall linger in my memory and add joy to my life.

Undoubtedly there was some progress made during those years. Then they had half-time preaching, now full-time. Then they had no young people's organization, now they have one of the best Christian Endeavor societies in the state. Then they had no parsonage, now they have a nice place for a preacher to live. Several improvements have been made to the churches, such as adding carpets, paint and song books. Had I been able to give full time to the work it would have made better progress.

We had splendid help in evangelistic campaigns in such men as Brown, Black, Lightbourne and Eastes. Our people were very appreciative of the work of these excellent men. Perhaps the work that was most successful for the churches in this line, however, was that done by the members in the Men and Millions campaign. I shall never forget that Easter morning when a number of us were early in the church to worship and to welcome our quota of new members.

The great need of the churches now is a progressive pastor to live with and lead them.

THE MEBANE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

This church had its last quarterly conference October 22, and finished the year's work. Meeting all its financial obligations, and electing J. O. Fowler and Robert Jones as delegates with their wives as alternates. The building committee reported progress in our new church building. We have had two bids for the brick work. There is to be a window in memory of Rev. Thomas Fowler put in this building. His grandchildren are to do this. This little church has a fine Sunday school, with J. O. Fowler as superintendent, and faithful, wide-awake teachers.

The membership of this church has been more than doubled during the year, and our congregations continue to grow. We baptized three at our last appointment. Pray for the dear little church. It has a prayer meeting every Wednesday night with good attendance.

"NOT POUNDED BUT BEDDED"

Our dear, little, big-hearted church and friends of Mebane, N. C., presented me, their pastor, with a fine "Kingsdown" mattress on which I am to rest when the day's work is done. I only wish I could find words to express my deep appreciation for this valuable gift. Many thanks to Sister Luther Jones, members and friends, who had a part in presenting this useful gift. May God abundantly bless these friends.

CHRISTIAN CHAPEL

On Saturday and Sunday, October 29 and 30, Rev. J. S. Carden, of Durham, N. C., was a visitor to some of his friends in this section. While here it was arranged for him to preach for us at Christian Chapel church. Although being on short notice, there were many out to hear him, including members of other churches, and it seemed that all were greatly pleased with his most powerful sermon. As he is an ex-pastor of this church, it seemed quite natural for him to appear in the pulpit, everyone being exceedingly glad to greet him.

His sermon was based on Adam and Eve in the garden, the good and evil placed before them; and the sin-stricken world in which we have to toil, caused by their lack of confidence in the Creator to keep the law. We have heard sermons from this same text, but not so plain and full of real explanatory teaching as this one. In rebuking the waywardness of mankind, Brother Carden always used the words "we" and "us" instead of the word "you," as so many preachers too often do. It being, as we might say, a sermon on surprise, yet there were several from a good distance out to hear him. Even some close by, who had not been to Christian Chapel services in over a year; and, owing to the unfavorable weather, there were a few who did not attend.

Everyone was glad to greet our former pastor, and he may be assured that at any time it is convenient for him to do so, he will be welcomed to preach for us again.

DRY RUN CHURCH DEDICATED

Sunday, October 30, 1921, was a glad and memorable day to the people of Dry Run Christian church, Seven Fountains, Shenandoah county, Virginia. It was the day appointed for the dedication of their new and beautiful house of worship. They had a right to rejoice and a cause for being happy.

I have nowhere seen a neater, nicer, better built and better equipped country church than this. Here is the reason of it all: the building of it was a labor of love and brotherly cooperation from beginning to end. The house will seat three hundred people; it has an incline floor; its walls are spotlessly plastered in white; its overhead ceiling is strikingly beautiful; its aisles are laid with carpets of noiseless rubber; its comfortable pews are of polished, fine grained oak; the ample windows are hung with heavy green shades; there is a furnace beneath the building sufficient for the coldest weather; without the painting is of white; there is a heaven-pointing tower with a bell that rings clear and appealing and strong; the roofing is of galvanized metal studded with snow-forks (circular prongs two or three inches long to catch and hold the snow for slow melting, that the cistern may be supplied); and the entrances to the house are all of cement. That is not a description of the building: rather a recital of the material elements that combine in making a well planned and very comely and comfortable house of worship.

More to the point and marvel of the whole matter is that the timbers for this building were supplied locally by members and friends. Those substantial oak pews were made there at the church. You simply could not believe it as you looked upon them. Still more marvelous, the communion table and the pulpit stand, of the finest grained quartered oak, were made by good Brother Boyce, one of the members there—not in a furniture factory with latest machinery and by professional artists. It was a work of art because a work of love; and would compare to greatest advantage with the finest pulpit furnishing in the costliest city church.

I dwell upon this because it was the best illustration ever witnessed by this writer of what skill is lent to the hand when the heart that guides that hand is aflame with love and devotion for a holy cause. And it typifies the whole process of building, furnishing and equipping Dry Run Christian church. It has cost well over $5,000, every dollar spent to the best economic advantage, and on the day of dedication the congregation was asked for only $450 to clear the outstanding bills and indebtedness. About $500 was given.

Reverend Brother Baugher, of the U. B. Church, led the invocation. Rev. A. W. Andes read the Scripture and offered the dedicatory prayer; the writer preached and read the dedicatory formula, the people responding with a most hearty Amen and Amen.

The church is hard by the home of our good brother, W. F. Ritenour, and his happy Christian family. How they have toiled and talked and planned and prayed to bring this church house to completion and make possible this day of dedication. Brother Ritenour, so Pastor Andes said, had almost lived these past few months in and about this church. It was indeed a glad day for him and his, as it was for the happy pastor, the united membership and the friends of the entire community. And THE CHRISTIAN SUN unwittingly made a valuable contribution. Our church at Amesbury, Mass., printed a notice in THE SUN that it had installed a pipe organ and would give to the first Christian church, needing and applying, its old organ. Dry Run, through Brother Ritenour's anxious pen, was the first, and for eight dollars freight, and with proper polish, Dry Run has a Mason and Hamlin "good as new," and worth, at the lowest, $250.

After the dedication there was a dinner that would have fed another 500 besides the half thousand that helped relieve the groaning, far-reaching tables. In the afternoon the house was filled to its capacity again, and at night Brother Andes was to begin a series of evangelistic meetings. Here is predicting a great meeting.

Rev. A. W. Andes has been pastor for thirteen years, taking the work when the membership was exceedingly small, and preaching in an uninviting building community-owned. His people are devoted to him as well they may be. God has been with him and wonderfully blessed his labors. And the glory of the Lord filled his heart, as it did the hearts of his faithful and happy congregation, when the people gathered from miles around to help them set aside their beautiful house to the service and worship of their Lord.

A timid young lady awoke one night and heard a mouse in her room. First one slipper was hurled mouseward and then the other, but she succeeded in stopping the noise only a short time. Terrified, she wondered what to do next.

She sat up in bed and "meowed."

A BILLION DOLLAR STATE

Nearly a billion dollars, or more nearly exactly, $943,808,000 is the factory value of the manufactured products of North Carolina in 1919. And this total does not cover hand trades, building trades, and neighborhood industries, that is to say, domestic industries not organized in factory systems.

Twenty years ago twenty-seven states outranked North Carolina in the value of manufactured output. Among the states that stood ahead of us at that time were Maryland, Virginia, Rhode Island, Maine, New Hampshire, Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Louisiana, and Colorado. But we have moved beyond these thirteen states in manufacturing industries during the last two decades. Which means that the Old North State is striding forward in seven-league boots; that she is moving out of the dominance of agriculture into the dominance of industry—out of a country into a town-and-factory civilization, not in the number of people involved, but in wealth and influence. The point we make becomes clear when we consider the influence of something like 2,000 people who are busy with the business of banking in North Carolina. They are few in number but their lightest whisper sounds like thunder, and the lifting or lowering of their eyebrows registers fair weather or foul day by day for two and a half million people. Of similar sort is the rapidly developing influence of manufacture in the state.—University News Letter.

OUR PRIMACY IN THE SOUTH

North Carolina led the South in 1919 in the number of factory establishments, with 5,999 against 5,603 in Virginia, her nearest competitor.

In the number of wages and salary earners she led Georgia, her nearest competitor, by 34,000.

In the capital employed she led Texas by more than 100 million dollars, Virginia by 230 million dollars, and Georgia by 250 million dollars.

In the total value of manufactured products Texas was the only Southern state that outranked North Carolina in 1919, and her lead was only 57 million dollars. Our next nearest competitor was Georgia, which fell behind by 250 million dollars.—University News Letter.

The Known Soldier

THE EDITOR

Much is being said about the unknown soldier. Something could be said about the known soldier. He was called and answered, and often answered before he was called. We looked upon him with admiration as he changed from civilian clothes to the olive drab. We saluted him as he passed in line to entrain; and as he sped away, we cheered and enshrined his name in our hearts. The world revered his service star as we looked upon it. This known soldier fell in Flanders field for the emancipation of mankind, and we hoisted a marble shaft to perpetuate his name.

This known soldier saw, felt and experienced that which was, and is, more than pomp and splendor—glory in words and remembrance in marble. These were not the things for which he fought and died. He fought and died to help cure the ills and ails of a war-cursed and war-sick world. Has this known soldier died in vain, and have we his blood upon our hands?

Present Day Preaching

THE other day we met a forward-looking and progressive young man who said that he had lost interest in attending his church because his pastor hummed out such long and sanctimonious sermons. This young man declared that his pastor never interpreted the spirit of the times in the light of the Scripture. Our friend further added that he had taken a delight in attending church of a denomination other than his own because a certain other pastor seemed to be abreast of the times and lifted the hearts and souls of his hearers up to, and prepared them for, present day problems.

The next day after we had had the conversation with this young man, we met another layman who said, without knowledge that the first layman had spoken to us, that he had heard so much exposition of something that St. Paul or some other Biblical character had done, and had heard so little of his duty in the present age that he was beginning to wonder if Christianity was a fossilized, age-worn principle or a present-day solution to the world's problems. This layman declared to us that his pastor was a man of education, holding two degrees, but living two thousand years ago in his thought.

One of the easiest things to do is to prepare a sermon on some historical exposition and review before an audience a Bible story that is known to the average child. The matter of presenting a present day message concretely, definitely and fittingly is a problem that only the preacher who is willing to study and to work can reasonably solve.

As we look upon churches that dot every hill and form the corner in every little hamlet, and then enter some of these churches and see fewer people than can be found on the streets at the same hour, we are almost ready to declare that the indictment that the two laymen make is true, and that the world today perishes for the lack of a present-day vital message from the pulpit.

The time has come when every preacher and pastor must be a student. The time has come when no man can successfully divide his time of preaching and pastoring with other things in order to make a living, if the people whom he has been entrusted to lead are to be led. The time is now at hand when the church which contented itself with only a preacher will find itself losing ground and unable to hold its banner of obligation in human society. The public is beginning to inquire of the physician not of his diploma that is laden in dust on a dilapidated wall, but what recent investigation and preparation he has made to acquaint himself with the new diseases of his day. Likewise, the average church member is not so much concerned of the length of his preacher's coat, the number of degrees he holds, how fluently he can speak or how gracefully he can walk, but he is inquiring something of the pastor's study, what is being done there, and listening to hear the interpretation of the gospel in the light of present-day conditions.

Reading For The Winter

THE long winter evenings are now here. The fire glows and there is comfort and happiness in the well organized home and around the peaceful fireside. But these long winter evenings, with their splendid opportunity for social life, should not be taken up solely with such things. Part of the time should be spent in reading. The children should be gathered together in the early part of the evening, and some one of them asked to read aloud, alternating this where there are more than one child in the home who can read. Such a program will add interest, information, and bring the children together in a happy circle of lovable association.

The older ones should come in for their part of the reading and can profitably use an hour in general discussion of the topics of the day. Out of the reading home will always come the world's greatest thinkers. We cannot afford to neglect a matter so important.

The wide range of reading matter debars us from a full suggestion as to what should be profitable to read. We believe in a program of variety. Select some good stories for the little ones, and by all means arrange for a few hearty laughs. It will be a splendid tonic for the ills of the day. Many a stubborn thought has been broken because of a hearty laugh. Mix with these stories two or three wholesome jokes. After the children have grown tired the older ones will find it profitable for some one to read aloud.

The fireside should not only be a place for rest, recreation and social discourse, but it should be a place of information and a forum of ideas.

We believe that along with this reading should be a good daily paper with an editorial page that breathes thoroughly and optimistically the spirit of the times. The county paper should be in the list, and by all means the Church paper. The stories and the jokes that we have suggested can usually be found in the Church publications, and this will give the child an idea that the Church paper is something useful. He will begin to go to the Church paper to find these stories himself, and as the years come and go he will find himself enlarging by reading other articles. The most loyal subscribers to the Church press are those who have been hearing it read and reading it from childhood themselves.

There is practically enough time wasted in every life, if it were used systematically and intelligently, to make of every person an intelligent citizen. It is in the snatches of time of a few moments each day that keep us informed, that educate us, and enlarge us in our mental capacity.

THE COST OF WAR

Leaving out the unspeakable horrors and tragedies of war, the cost in money values is beyond comprehension, and almost beyond endurance to many. George W. Morris, governor of the Philadelphia reserve bank, says that before the World War the average family in America was taxed for governmental purposes $1.15 on the national debt, $23.10 for military expenses, for all other purposes $8.75; making a total to each family of $32.90. Today the total tax on each family is $214.80, of which amount $43.23 is for war debt, $54.10 for military expenditure, and $117.54 for other governmental expenditure, mostly connected with the war. The world today is supporting six million men in idleness in its standing armies, or one soldier for every 283 civilians, at a cost of more than five hundred million dollars every 30 days. North Carolina last year paid enough for armaments and the incidentals of war to build and equip 165 standard colleges.

A QUESTION ANSWERED

Katherine Morgan, University, N. C., a girl of eleven years, asks a question in her letter to the Orphanage this week which the Editor desires to answer. Her question is: Where are all the little boys and girls who used to write for the Corner?

Katherine, we are glad you asked that question. We hope that you are not discouraged because you no longer see their names. We can tell you where they are. They are busy out in the marts of life. They have transferred their presence from the Children's Corner to the financial report. Their first love for the Orphanage was the interest taken in their behalf by father or mother who possibly wrote and read to them their first letter. They have been promoted, Katherine, from the Children's Corner to a place in the bread and butter line. This promotion has come through interest. Some day your letters will be missing, too, Katherine. But we know that you will then be a grown woman and out in life doing an even greater work for the Orphanage. You cannot help it, because you are now being taught to think of the Orphanage and to love it.

The moral of this note to Katherine is too plain for us to comment further. Brother Johnston knows what is means to get the children interested in the Orphanage.

SERVING YOUR RACE

Mary Lyon gave good counsel in these words, and that which is wise for any Sunday school or Christian Endeavor pupil to think about: "If you want to serve your race, go where no one else will go, and do what no one else will do."

EDITORIAL BREVITIES

Our prediction is that unless the present Disarmament Conference, or some other such body, finds a way for the capitalization of international confidence and good will, the date of November 11, 1918, will be a day of mourning for the generations unborn, instead of a day of rejoicing. The declarations of peace so far are empty and have no meaning in the light of the ideals for which the American youth fought and gave up life for the liberation of the world.

The world has hope and confidence in the Disarmament Conference now in session in Washington. The world cannot afford to continue under staggering burdens of war. The time seems to be at hand for some definite action for reducing the burdens of the people—burdens imposed by ruthless warfare.

The ninety-sixth annual session of the North Carolina Methodist Protestant Conference was held in Burlington, N. C., November 9-14. The sessions were well attended, and signs of progress were plain in all departments of the Church's work.

During the past week THE SUN office has been favored by visits from two prominent editors—Dr. J. F. McCulloch, editor The Methodist Protestant Herald, Greensboro, N. C., and Dr. F. T. Benson, editor The Methodist Protestant, Baltimore, Md. These brethren are deeply interested in the work of the Church press and are serving faithfully their Church through the printed page.

Any misgivings in this issue may be charged to the fact that the Editor has had critical illness in his home during the past ten days. His only child, Ruth Teague, has been very ill, but at this writing—Monday afternoon—is showing signs of recovery.

SHALL AMERICA LEAD?

I look to America as the greatest factor in the world crisis on international peace. Combined reduction of expenditure by the great naval powers is essential. America, trained in great principles, is free to act and make her own proposals. We have a common object and all nations must work loyally for agreement in effective methods.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part IV.

 WEDNESDAY, September 20.—I retired at 9 o'clock last night and slept till 6 this a. m. The sea is better for sleeping than the land—for whenever in years have I slept even eight hours in one night before! Had my hour of meditation and devotion in bed, arising promptly at seven. And when those plaintive and bewitching chimes rang at 7:30 I was ready for all that was coming to me. Our waiter outdid himself at hospitality at breakfast. Evidently he, too, had had a glorious night. He insisted on serving our bacon and eggs "San Lorenzo style." It was a sort of shirred fashion. The eggs were cooked without turning, and in the same dish in which they were served at table, the bacon being in the middle and surrounded with eggs, yet simmering and frying with hot butter. Will try to find one of these dishes in a China store when I get back home and give it to my wife to cook eggs in for me! It is wonderful how liberal we men-folks are in buying presents for our wives—usually something she can use in the house for our comfort. Men are so very unselfish?!

After drinking a pot of this hot Porto Rican coffee I feel at peace with all mankind, and exceedingly comfortable. If I have an enemy on earth I would like to meet him now, and I would ask his pardon and crave his forgiveness for any harm I had ever done him in the world.

We near the tropics and it is much warmer this a. m. than heretofore. There are people on ship as well as on shore who crowd the fashions and push the styles; so some passengers appear now in their lightest summer suits and make the rest of us sit up and take notice.

I figure that the income to this ship for the trip from New York to Porto Rico is not less than $15,000. There are 180 passengers, including children. Estimate 175 at $75.00 each—some pay much more and none that I know of that little—and you have $12,250. (My own passage is $90.00, including $5.00 war tax. Yes, they tax you for war purposes away out at sea.) It seems far too low an estimate to put the piles and heaps of United States mail, the wagon loads of express, and the tons and tons of freight, at $2,750. But they spent a million dollars this year repairing this boat, beautifying, strengthening and adorning it, they tell me.

At 11 a. m., and again at about 9 to 9:30 p. m. each day, two boys in white uniform come out on deck, one with a rolling table carrying pitchers of beef tea and a eup for each passenger, the second boy carrying baskets of crackers and cookies—and each passenger is urged to eat and be sociable. Three straight meals a day have served me fairly well through the days of the years of my life so far, and I have a notion that three a day such as I am negotiating on this ship will keep me going till I get to land again. A friend said in my hearing once that he did not eat to live, but lived to eat, because he enjoyed the eating better than the living. He had evidently been out on the sea where the eating is the principal event of the day. I am certainly spending a lazy, restful day. To read or write or accomplish anything on board ship you have to assert yourself—and I am not self-assertive today at all. The warm sun is indolent, the sea is almost sluggish, and our great old ship reminds me of an elephant on parade before the circus opens—just lolling along with supreme indifference and a superb unconcernedness. (I sometimes wish I could be as unconcerned about how the world wags as an elephant is!) My will-power seems to have oozed away from me and I sit here in the shade on this full-orbed sunshiny day—and just drowse, and doze, and dream—and do nothing!

The "San Lorenzo" was built at Newport News, Va., in 1907, and rebuilt in the spring of 1921. Her hull is of steel, six thousand, six hundred and five gross tons of it. She has eighty-eight state rooms with 288 beds, and so is allowed to carry 288 passengers. In her crew of 138 men there must be twenty-four life boat men; six firemen; six oilers; four wipers; three night watchmen; and eighty-one persons for service not connected with the navigation. There are in her engine rooms six boilers, and her engines develop 8,000 horse-power. (Think of 6,000 tons of steel, to say nothing of wood and ware, propelled by 8,000 horse-power, and you will understand that the big waves and the beating billows have a monster to battle with worthy of their strength.) She carries eleven metal life boats; 415 life preservers for adults, 42 for children, and 1,600 feet of fire hose. She consumes 400 barrels of oil a day, and 31 men are engaged in her engine room. Coal is only used for cooking.

From 2 to 3 p. m. I took a siesta, and on awaking found it raining beautifully. As the drops hit the smooth surface of the sea they seemed to bounce back, then burst like shattered diamonds and mingle with the blue beneath. The sun is obscured by cloud rifts, a gentle, cooling breeze is blowing, and the sea is calm, restful and very blue. I recall that Horace, the Latin poet, speaks in his odes of "the disconnecting sea." But Horace lived before great ocean liners were built, or ever Columbus discovered America. The seas do not disconnect; they really connect the islands and the continents and the hemispheres all together.

By permission I went up into the room of the First Assistant Engineer. He was not smutty and sooty and smoked black; far from it. He was reclining in a cozy room, dressed in white, and reading a magazine. He talks interestingly of his engines and his men and his work—he works his head and other fellows less skilled handle the oil. He is on duty from 4 to 8 a. m. and 4 to 8 p. m. The rest of the time he has for study, play and recreation. He lives the life of a gentleman and likes the sea. The master of any situation usually likes his job.

We had a glorious dinner at 5:30. Martin and Minton were both in fine fettle, and we decided to eat a square meal—I wonder why we always call it a “square” meal, and never a round one? We were round when we finished. I could not keep up with them and confined myself solely to oysters on the half-shell, Mock Turtle soup, roast goose, buttered toast, Romaine salad, iced celery, iced tea, lemon ice cream, with a dish of fruit (apples and plums) to wind up with.

They give a concert in the assembly hall tonight. A fellow quotes poetry in Spanish; another sings in Spanish, and both put on all the airs and movements and fandangoes of a Spanish grandee. The hall is full and applause follows each number. I take it for granted that the performance is fine—and slip away to bed at an early hour.

WEDNESDAY, September 21.—After a rather poor night's sleep I am up at 7, feeling fine. But whoever sleeps real well two nights in succession? Not I. When one is sick one has a good day and a bad one; when one is well one has a good night and a bad one. One cannot be at one's best all the time. And this is the most glorious day out, chiefly because we are to see land today. After revelling for two hours in a balmy sun, a sweet breeze and a calm sea, I write letters from 9 till 11 a. m.

And then some one announced land in sight. Glasses are called into service and the barest smoky outlines can be discerned in the far distance. We are told that what we see are the tops of the mountains, not on the shore, but far inland. As we draw nearer, under straining eyes we catch glimpses of the hills, then the towers of tall buildings, then tops of houses—and Morro Castle. Everybody is in a flurry—and quite happy, doing little nothings preparatory to leaving the ship at 2 p. m. At 12:15 the wooing and enchanting chimes sound out their invitation to us for the last time.

We take a hurried lunch and give our table waiter a “tip” of $1.50 each, the three of us; he pockets it but scantily thanks us, evidently expecting us to give him $3.00 to $5.00 each. You do not tip your waiter at sea till after the last meal with him—and then you are expected to give him all you have.

The city of San Juan is closely guarded by Morro Castle—which is not a castle at all, but a great old Spanish fort 400 years old, built of brick, with walls four feet thick and then some.

This proved like soft soap to our American 16-inch guns, and when in 1898 our great fleet, from one of its big ships, sent a great ball crashing through it, the white flag went up—and the Castle, that had stood guard for four centuries, hauled down her colors. It is now inhabited by a few American soldiers, and from its ugly appearance, I presume by spooks, ghosts and hob-goblins at night.

Just before tying up at the pier at 2 p. m., a dozen boys swam out to meet us. What they want, however, is not us but ours. We throw pennies whirling into the water and they dive, duck-like, and never come up any more until they bring back the penny with them. Hundreds of people are on the pier, and a babel of voices. Among the number was Bro. D. P. Barrett, to greet us and gladden us—and give us welcome. We go to the Palace Hotel, where the clerk understands English, and register, and cable home, “Arrived well.” Which two words, with the five words of the address and signature, tax my pocket book $2.80—but they tell me that the words will flash back under the sea and across the states from New York to Elon College well before 6 p. m.—and it is nearly three now. After all, I am not far from home—and feel very happy as I greet what is to me a new people and a strange city.

J. O. ATKINSON.

ANOTHER QUESTION ANSWERED

AM glad to have my friends interested in my teaching and practicing, ever watching to see if I am keeping to the track. I am glad, not only for personal reasons, but when people are interested in spiritual matters it is an indication of good.

A beloved brother writes to tell me that some prominent man recently told him that I did not now, and had not, preached sanctification for twenty years, and he wishes to know if that is true.

In reply, permit me to say that brother is mistaken. I have believed in sanctification since the early days of the ‘nineties,’ when I was editing THE CHRISTIAN SUN in Raleigh, N. C., and during all of these years I have preached that doctrine in various places and on various occasions.

I have never been fanatical on that or any other doctrine. I try to preach that truth just as I would repentance, or conviction, or faith, or regeneration. I have never seen any need of becoming fanatical on that or any other teaching of Christianity.

Of one thing I am assured and that is if the various denominations believed and practiced sanctification, as it is taught in the Bible, we should immediately see a great change in the life and work of the Church. It would mean a new day to the prosperity of the Kingdom of Jesus Christ. Mind you, I never did defend extreme views on this question, and I am not doing it now, but in the true Bible doctrine of sanctification I am a believer, and when the proper occasion for preaching it comes I preach it. I have done so for many long years, and I expect to do so till I reach the end of my earthly journey.

My reason for that stand I may give in a few words, as follows:

The Bible declares: “God hath not called us to uncleanness, but to holiness”—1 Thess. 4:7. Now if God has called me to holiness, ought I not to do my best to reach it, and as best I can to live it? Not only so, but the Bible also says: (God) “Who hath saved us and called us with an holy calling, not according to works, but according to His own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began."

The same verse affirms that God has saved us and called us with an holy calling. If a man will not believe that God has called us with an holy calling, how can he believe that He has saved us? The same verse affirms that He has done both.

Again, it is affirmed in the Bible that partakers of the heavenly calling are holy brethren. See Heb. 3:1. I wish to be a partaker of the heavenly calling, and therefore I try to lead a holy life, not in myself, but in Christ. This call of God implies two things:

1. That He has put His holiness within our reach.

2. That He is prepared to give us all that is necessary to effect in us that to which He has called us. Now, if He has purposed to give it to us, as is declared in 2 Tim. 1:9, why should I, a poor, weak creature of the earth, decline to accept His marvelous gift of holiness, especially since He has put this great gift within my reach through Christ and the Holy Spirit?

Then again, Paul tells us that no man shall see the Lord without holiness. See Heb. 12:14. Well, if holiness is essential to my seeing the Lord in peace, I wish it, and by His grace, I mean to do my best to receive it, as His gift to me. If any of the rest of my brethren do not wish it, I hope they will be considerate enough not to object to my trying to prepare myself to receive it as His gift to me.

On this point Dr. F. B. Meyer, the great London preacher, has said: "God is pledged to make us holy, and must make good that pledge or expose Himself to the mocking of His foes."

How I wish as much might be said against a godless, formal, and worldly church membership, as we sometimes have said against a holy life in Christ. The man who is opposed to a sane and Scriptural holiness, the which God hath given to us, that we may see Him in peace,—well, the least I can afford to say of such a man is that I wish he might get his eyes open to see the truth of this wonderful purpose of God to make us holy preparatory to our seeing and associating with God and the Holy Angels in the life to come.

I have given only a very little of what the Bible has to say on the question of sanctification, but enough, as I trust, to show why I stand for the teaching which is given to us in the Word of God.

Reidsville, N. C.

ELON LETTER

WRITE this on Armistice Day, the great day of democracy's vindication, the day of hope in promise for human brotherhood's realization in the world.

It was a day of welling up hopes. Rejoicing and gratitude were on every lip. Right had won. We saw in November 11, 1918, the dawn of a new era of friendship and love and mutual sacrifice of man for man, of nation for nation, and it was entrancing to glimpse that vision. One day it will be real.

Today, three years from the hour of the world's rejoicing, there assembles in our Capitol City a distinguished group of the world's statesmen to consider the question of disarmament. May the Holy Spirit direct them as they deliberate, and the will of our Heavenly Father be accomplished in their decisions!

But I am thinking particularly this morning of the lessons of the first Armistice Day for us, in light of what preceded it and what has followed. What are those lessons?

First, as to the value of preparation. Germany held the world at bay for nearly five years because she was prepared. Ninety-six per cent of our commissioned officers were college men, though college men represent but one per cent of the population. When the available supply of college men gave out, the War Department, through the Students' Army Training Corps, took over some 400 colleges to make more on short notice. College preparation is thus shown to be the entrance door to leadership in life.

Second, as to the strengthening power of the conviction you are right. There was some doubt about the motives that actuated the European nations engaged in the World War. Our motives were unselfish, altruistic, sacrificial. They made us invincible. They broke the spirit of Prussianism even more than our mobilized military and civic might.

Third, as to the compensation entailed by high idealism put to practice. In the days before the war, we were regarded as a nation of vulgar materialists, bloated with luxury, bent on our own pleasure. During the first two years of the war, we were the most hated nation in history, because we were enriching ourselves as neutrals through trade and commerce and dollar diplomacy with the belligerents of both sides fattening, as it were, on the gore of our stricken brethren. But when we entered in, with the noblest spirit of brotherhood that ever nerved a nation to undertake a bloody task, we were readily acclaimed the deliverers of the race and overnight became the best loved nation of human history.

Fourth, as to the necessity of organizing idealism to make it effective. A sinister group of partisan and selfish interests, almost the day of the Armistice, began to organize the populace against the idealism of the war days. The upshot was that the treaty of peace, embodying the finest flower of Christian statesmanship, the League of Nations, was defeated. Immediately this nation and Japan began to enlarge their navies. President Harding saw the impending disaster of such a course, and while he was unwilling to enter the League of Nations, he has called the Disarmament Conference to discover methods of international agreement for the conservation of the idealism that stirred men's hearts and national legislatures during the frightful days of the world holocaust. Virtue cannot rest her claim on her integrity of purpose alone. She must organize to make her idealism effective. There is a great truth here for the Christian Church.

W. A. HARPER.

SUFFOLK LETTER

IT seems to have required a world-war to make the world think of world-peace. Up to that appalling sacrifice of property, money, and human life, men seem to have thought in terms of individual national interests; but war, with a world involved, opened the eyes of the blind and made men think in terms of the human race. Any nation, now, that thinks and plans for its own interests becomes an object of pity or of blame. The gospel principle of "all nations" and the "field is the world" has taken possession of mankind. There is an outward plan of individual nations that makes self-interest the motive of action; but underneath that narrow view is the almost universal thought of all.

The honor paid to the unknown soldier in Washington on Armistice Day is a new expression of honor bestowed upon service and not upon a name. Up to this time monuments have been inscribed to heroes by their names; this time service is the object of honor.

It has been very evident that our nation, while thus bestowing honor upon the unknown soldier who gave his life in the war, still elings to the fossil idea of our nation; for in all addresses you will hear the orator dwell upon the sacrifice of the boys for our country. If I understood President Wilson, and if I understood the purpose of America's entrance into the war, it was to "make the world safe for democracy." I do not understand that the American men gave their lives for America, but for the world. We paid our own expenses, loaned money to other nations, and offered two million young men to prevent the wreck of nations beyond the seas. There is not a great discovery or a great invention that does not belong to the whole world. All great ideas and ideals should be the property of mankind. It would be a travesty on Christianity to limit it to one nation though it might be the largest, the richest, and the wisest in the world. Jesus Christ is the world's Redeemer. Justice belongs to the world. Virtue is for all mankind. Truth has no marks of race, nation, caste, or possession. Peace is the privilege of nations. The markets of the world unconsciously demonstrate the feeling that all men are entitled to the products of all industries and all fields. Why do the colder zones enjoy tropical fruits, and torrid zones enjoy ice? "No man lives to himself," and as long as they try it, they die. The day has come when the world longs for friendship and peace. If the men who prepare for war were required to fight the battles, war would cease. The fighting spirit is a magnificent gift; but we should "fight the good fight of faith" and not one another. It is a wonderful thing to fight germs, but no honor to fight Germans. Treaties of peace are more valuable than declarations of war. Jesus came to establish peace, and the world cannot have peace without Him. "He is our peace" and He can help bring peace to the world.

W. W. STALEY.

The North Carolina Conference is in session with the Third Avenue church, Danville, Virginia, this week.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS OF YALE

FIRST impressions are lasting, they tell us. It is also true that we are sometimes forced to change our minds after greater acquaintance. Perhaps some of my Southern friends would be interested in knowing my first impressions of Yale University. Let me confess that I came here with some misgivings, having heard certain criticisms of the school that have been circulating in some parts of the South. It gives me great joy to find those criticisms unfounded.

Landing here three days before school opened, I was first impressed by the bigness of the institution. There are numerous, massive, and magnificent buildings. They represent the architecture of the past two centuries, and some, at least, are known far and near for their beauty. The buildings are filled with students, there being about 3,600 here. The Divinity School has more than a hundred students. It has three excellent libraries—one for general reference, one for religious education, and one for missions. Other graduate schools are equally as well supplied. Yale is a big institution.

A second impression, and one I was surprised to get, was the personal interest of the faculty for the students. Much of the first few days was spent in getting acquainted. Dean Brown expressed the desire of himself and other teachers in being of assistance to the individual students in their perplexities by saying that his office doors swing on easy hinges. It is very true. There is wonderful fellowship between the faculty and students, as well as between students.

Scholarship is an outstanding idea. The men who teach speak with authority. They know what others have said and have an opinion of their own, but are not dogmatic in forcing their ideas on the other fellow. Truth is the thing desired, find it wherever one may. Students are urged to find for themselves and form their own conclusions. Superficial knowledge does not suffice. Students are striving to be able to give a reason for the faith that is within them, and to be workmen that need not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

The outstanding impression, however, is of the personal faith and devotion of the men who teach, and of those who learn. Most recitations begin with prayer, not a superficial utterance of words but that definite visualization of Christ's presence and petition for his assistance that touches the heart and makes one more like the Master. Knowledge of the history of the Bible, of science and of religion gives virility and increased devotion to the Christian faith. It is an inspiration to hear these men of God explain God's plan and His work. Such faith as they have will certainly remove mountains of difficulty. Certainly no right thinking man can watch the lives and listen to the teachings of the Yale Divinity School teachers without becoming greater devotees of the Lord Christ.

A LETTER AND ITS ENCLOSURE

Mr. C. B. Riddle, Editor,
Burlington, N. C.

Dear Sir:—

We have received a marked copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN entitled, "Keep History Straight," concerning the age of The Herald of Gospel Liberty and the age of The Christian Observer, which says, "If memory serves us correctly, The Christian Observer and The Herald of Gospel Liberty fought out their then disputed ages some years ago, and that The Observer 'surrendered' in favor of The Herald. At any rate, The Herald carries 'Volume 113' on its business page each week."

Enclosed please find a page from The Christian Observer of September 3, 1913, in which we go quite fully into the claim of The Herald of Gospel Liberty.

To our knowledge The Herald of Gospel Liberty never answered this editorial.

Do you not think it would be well to set forth these facts in some subsequent issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN?

H. P. CONVERSE, Managing Editor.

CHRISTIAN OBSERVER,
Louisville, Ky.

(Enclosure)

"The Herald of Gospel Liberty"

The "Christian Observer" has investigated, with much painstaking research, the history of religious newspapers in America and the world. At various times within the past quarter of a century, claims have been made by several religious newspapers to be the oldest in the world. In every instance, except one, the claims of the "Christian Observer" have been recognized by these newspapers when the facts have been presented to them.

The one exception is the "Herald of Gospel Liberty," a paper of the Christian Church, published in Dayton, Ohio, which claims "to be the oldest religious newspaper." Five years ago the editor of this paper published a book entitled, "The Centennial of Religious Journalism," in which he gave the history of the Christian Church, and also claimed that the "Herald of Gospel Liberty" is entitled to the honor of being "the oldest religious newspaper."

We have given careful consideration to the claims of this publication, and we find from the statements of the editor himself, as published in "The Centennial of Religious Journalism," the following facts: Rev. Elias Smith published a bi-weekly paper at Portsmouth, N. H., called the "Herald of Gospel Liberty," the first number bearing date of September 1, 1808. It will be noted that this paper was not a weekly religious newspaper. In the beginning it was issued "every other Thursday," and as time went on the interval between issues was lengthened, and in 1816 it was issued only "the first of every other month." That is, it was a bi-monthly magazine, and "contained 36 pages and cover, each page being about five by eight inches." Evidently the publication of a bi-weekly religious newspaper was abandoned, and Mr. Smith turned his publication into a bi-monthly review or magazine.

We quote from "The Centennial of Religious Journalism," page 41, the following: "From September, 1815, to May, 1818, the 'Herald of Gospel Liberty' led a precarious life. In the issue of September 29, 1815, notice was given that one number more would complete the seventh volume. . . . Volume VIII, No. 1, appeared in August, 1816. Its form was changed, and it showed less vigor than formerly. It was now issued 'the first of every other month,' and contained thirty-six pages and cover, each page being about five by eight inches."

Mr. Smith's publication was, therefore, in the beginning a bi-weekly, and part of the time was a bi-monthly. It required nine years to publish eight volumes. Evidently numbers representing a whole year were not issued. In the August number of 1817, Mr. Smith, the editor, gave notice to the following effect: "One number more will complete the eighth volume of the 'Herald,' which has now been published in nine years. . . . I now conclude after the next number, to drop the publication forever, unless those who are indebted pay before the time of publishing the first number of Volume ninth." In the October number (1817) of the "Herald of Gospel Liberty," (now a bi-monthly), Mr. Smith published three articles called "Farewells." This was the last number of the paper issued by Elias Smith. He gave notice that "this number closes the volume," and "no more are to be printed by me." He stated that "Robert Foster, of Portsmouth, N. H., proposes to publish a work of this kind upon the same terms as this has been published, called 'The Christian Herald.'"

The first number of the "Christian Herald" bears the date of May, 1818, (seven or eight months after the publication of the "Herald of Gospel Liberty" was dropped), and it was issued monthly. It was in the form of a pamphlet or booklet containing 24 pages, the size of each being five by eight inches. In 1829, the "Christian Herald" was published semi-monthly. Not until 1839 did this magazine become a weekly paper, at which time the name was changed to "The Christian Herald and Journal."

The above facts, all taken from "The Centennial of Religious Journalism," by Rev. J. Pressley Barrett, D. D., the present editor of the "Herald of Gospel Liberty," show conclusively that Elias Smith abandoned the publication of his paper from October, 1815, to August, 1816, and that he finally abandoned the project, seemingly in disgust, in October, 1817. It is true that Mr. Smith gave notice that Robert Foster would publish "a work of this kind upon the same terms as this has been published, called the 'Christian Herald';" but there was no claim made in the paper at the time, so far as we are able to learn, that Robert Foster claimed or desired to claim to be continuing the "Herald of Gospel Liberty." Dr. Barrett says in his book on "The Centennial of Religious Journalism," page 54: "It was a matter of policy not to say anything about the connection of the 'Christian Herald' with the 'Herald of Gospel Liberty.' Later, when Elias Smith was being fellowshiped by some of the Christian ministers, Robert Foster acknowledged that his paper was the successor of Smith's paper." Mr. Smith, himself, does not assert that he sold or transferred, or intended to perpetuate his paper in the "Christian Herald." On the other hand, "as a matter of policy," it was deemed best not to claim connection of the one paper with the other.

It strikes us as a strange kind of reasoning that can claim that the present "Herald of Gospel Liberty" is "the oldest religious newspaper," when there were two positive breaks in its publication, one of nine months, from October, 1815, to August, 1816, and another, which seemed to be a final abandonment of the publication, from October, 1817, to May, 1818. Furthermore, the publication was not a weekly, but for part of the time a bi-weekly and for part of the time not even a monthly, but a bi-monthly. A bi-monthly booklet, or pamphlet, of which only six issues appear in a year, cannot legitimately claim to be a religious newspaper.

The claim of the "Christian Observer" is that it is the oldest religious weekly newspaper in the world that has had a continuous publication. So far as we have been able to trace the facts, there has been an unbroken succession as a weekly religious newspaper from "The Religious Remembrancer," first issued September 4, 1813, through a century down to the present centennial number of the "Christian Observer." The only breaks in the weekly publication of this paper were due to a delay of one week, when Rev. Amasa Converse removed from Richmond to Philadelphia in 1839, but there was no intentional break in the publication; and the other breaks were at the beginning and at the close of the Civil War. In the first case the paper was suppressed in Philadelphia by order of President Lincoln, but appeared three weeks later in Richmond. In the latter case, when Richmond was burned it was physically impossible to issue the paper for some weeks. But there was no break in the continuity of its publication.

THANKSGIVING APPEAL

We want to raise for our Thanksgiving offering for the Christian Orphanage this year the sum of $6,000. Six thousand dollars the goal set. Shall we reach the goal? I have confidence enough in our people to believe we will. I have been your Superintendent for five years and I have never asked you to do anything yet that you failed to do. I had confidence in the Christian Church before I took this work, and that confidence has been strengthened each year since that time. We have never asked our people to reach a goal but that they well succeeded, and in setting our goal at SIX THOUSAND DOLLARS this year we have that abiding faith, believing we will reach it.

In this work we have our joys and our disappointments. In the past we have had many churches that took a pride in seeing how large an offering they could raise. It was not only a joy to the Church to do its best, but an inspiration to your Superintendent to give you the very best service. We have had some churches that made but little effort and sent in very small offerings. It can be no joy to a church to see how little it can do, and it certainly is a disappointment to your Superintendent. If your Superintendent made an easy job out of his work, he would not get any joy out of it. But it is our pleasure and our joy to make a little greater effort each day to do a little better than the day before.

It will be easy to reach the goal if your church will do its part. In making your Thanksgiving offering, ask each member of your church to give the value of one day's work to this cause. Just one day out of the whole year for the benefit of the little helpless children. You have many things to thank God for. He has been good to you. You have been blessed greatly in your past life with health, home and plenty. We have eighty little children in the Orphanage, and fifty on the outside, pleading for a home, who have not the blessings you enjoy save through the Orphanage. Will you forget self just at this time and be willing to make the sacrifice of the value of one day's work for these little helpless children? If you will we will go far beyond the goal set. We have room for forty more little children, if we had the funds to support them. The Thanksgiving offering goes into the general fund and toward the support of the children. Help us right at this time in our great need to lend a helping hand to the helpless. See that your church makes some sacrifice to make the offering as large as possible. It will bring to your church new life and joy. It will bring to your Superintendent that abiding faith he has always had in the Christian Church.

Let us reach the Six Thousand Dollars.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

CHILDREN'S LETTERS

WOMEN AND THE KINGDOM

NORTH CAROLINA WOMAN'S CONVENTION

The Woman's Missionary Convention of the North Carolina Conference met with the First church of Greensboro on November 10. The woman's work in this state began at this church, and it was good to get back there again in this our ninth session. The leader in organizing the work, Mrs. M. F. Cook, was present and led the opening devotional service.

It was our largest and best Convention, nearly a hundred delegates being present, and a fine spirit characterized it throughout.

We were glad to have some of our ministers present, among whom were Dr. J. W. Wellons, Dr. N. G. Newman, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. P. H. Fleming, Rev. H. Russell Clem, Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, and Rev. H. E. Crutchfield. There should have been five times as many there.

The officers' reports showed the work to be in good condition.

The treasurer reported nearly $3,500 raised, with a few societies yet to hear from.

Raleigh was selected as the place for the next session, and the date was fixed as Thursday before the third Sunday in November.

WANTED—A NAME

Dear Brother Riddle:

I wonder what SUN readers think we should call our mountain school at Fancy Gap, Va.? So far we have called it our "Mountain Work," or "Miss Hedgepeth's School," or our "Christian Training School." But it is growing, our grounds are bought and paid for; a handsome building costing at least $2,500, to be used for day school and Sunday school purposes, is nearing completion. Two teachers are there, and before very long now we must send a preacher to live and labor there. And there must soon go other helpers. In another year or two we ought to begin to get pupils from there for our Elon. In brief, our "baby" is growing, gives promise of permanency, prestige and place in our Christian household. Now the baby should be named. The Mission Board who so far are acting as guardians and trustees would appreciate suggestions.

Brother Earp, in writing under date of November 7, says: "I think that I shall like my new field fine. I was given a splendid welcome yesterday. The Sunday school was unusually good. The attendance at both morning and evening services was splendid. Dr. J. P. Barrett favored us with his presence at the night service."

Rev. W. P. Minton, Foreign Mission Secretary of the Christian Church, is now in this section meeting the brethren and making himself most useful by illustrated lectures and also addresses. He attended the Eastern Virginia Conference at Dover, Delaware, the Woman's Conference in Greensboro last Thursday, gave an illustrated lecture at Providence church, Graham, N. C., on Saturday night, presented the same at the Burlington church on Monday night, and is this week to attend the North Carolina Conference, which meets at Danville, Va. Brother Minton is making a most favorable impression among our people, and has received the glad hand everywhere he has been.

EXPRESSIONS OF FRIENDSHIP

I have just passed the 82nd mile-stone on life's highway. How memory shortens time, how anticipation lengthens it. It seems to me but a little while since I was a school boy, yet four score years lie at my feet.

Several letters bearing messages of affection and words of congratulation came October 22, my natal day, to which I have responded. Some had substantial expressions of a financial character.

One letter had in it: "Years do not lessen friendship and distance does not hinder love; they both ripen with age, and sweeten in memory. My boyhood days in your Graham Female Seminary is a valuable chapter in my experience, and a grateful memory to you and your first wife. You made it home to me, and I tried to give value received for your kindness and instruction. If nothing more was done, a friendship was established between us that can never die out of my life."

The evening of October 22, all the ministers of Chapel Hill and a few lady friends called and extended congratulations. Mrs. Long and daughter served refreshments. On the table were eighty-two lighted candles.

My health is good and my interest in the extension of the gospel of light and truth knows no abatement.

CRADLE ROLL DAY

"Cradle Roll Babies are wanted at the Christian Sunday School next Sunday morning at 9:45. Bring papa and mama.

EMMA HART, Cradle Roll Superintendent.

Be sure to tell the nsher you are a

Cradle Roll Baby.

This cordial invitation, written on a little white card which had a tiny kewpie sketched in one corner, was received recently by every baby who belonged to the Cradle Roll of the Sanford, N. C., Sunday school.

The following program was rendered at this service:

Music.

Opening Song—Jesus Loves Even Me.

Lord's Prayer—By Children.

Welcome to Babies—Elsie White.

Short Talk, By Cradle Roll Superintendent.

Song: "Daisies White"—By Mary Lee Morgan, Nellie White, Jewel Way, Katherine Lemonds, Grace Stout, Sadie Gunter, Eunice Woodell.

Recitation—By Jeanette Stout.

Exercise by Seven Little Girls—Frances Ellington, Ruby Baldwin, Doris Lemmonds, Virginia Parrish, Thelma Taylor, Grace Morgan and Juanita Brown.

Song: "Smile and Sing."

Roll Call.

Collection—John Fulton, June Gunter, Jr., Arthur Taylor.

Prayer, by Sunday school superintendent.

This was a happy day for the Sanford Sunday school.

The Superintendent, in writing about the day, says:

We had the church decorated with ferns and flowers, set a large sized doll cradle on the table, put a large doll in it, draped it with white net, and pinned a celluloid Kewpie, one for each Cradle Roll baby, on the net. The Kewpies wore pink and blue sashes. We roped off some seats with pink and white crepe paper for our little guests and their parents, and you never saw babies look so sweet, mothers so pretty, or fathers so manly.

A real small boy sat in the Sunday school superintendent's chair and announced the program. We had some of the larger children for the songs and recitations, but the little exercise was given by little girls that could not speak plainly. At the roll call each baby came up to receive a Kewpie; those who could not walk were brought, and I never saw babies act quite so cunning and sweet. The exercises were short, just taking the first period of Sunday school, and going to class as usual.

Doesn't that make you want to have a Cradle Roll Sunday in your Sunday school?

The superintendent of the Sanford Cradle Roll is Miss Emma Hart, 501 Charlotte Avenue, Sanford, N. C., and Miss Hart is also the Cradle Roll Superintendent of the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, and we are proud of her.

Down in Alabama, eight miles back in the country, is a little Sunday school. The school may be small, but it has some devoted and consecrated workers, and proof of this fact is found in letters which come to the Field Secretary's office asking, "How can we interest our people in the work of the Sunday school?" A girl is superintendent of the school, another girl is secretary, and they are really working back there to make the Sunday school a real force in the community life. The pastor, Rev. G. H. Veazy, recently ordained by the Alabama Conference, goes there once a month, and one plan which he has tried to get his members to work is to have essays written by some of the young people and read at the regular church service. Mr. Veazy sent us recently one of these essays, discussing the question, "Is the World Growing Better?" and written by a young girl, who is one of the most earnest of Sunday school workers. In this essay she has expressed many thoughts which should be considered most earnestly. Miss Hindon Jennings, of Dadeville, Ala., is the author of the essay, from which we quote in part:

Of course we want to say that the part of the world in which we live is growing better, but it is not, when we do not do our duty in the church, to our neighbors, friends, and to God. The world is in an uproar, and too often the thought of "getting better" is packed away. We do not realize the sin and danger we are in when we are dragging along, worrying our minds when they should be free and resting; grumbling all the time and never thinking what such a course means to us and to the wide world. * * * The world is full of war and sin and devotion to fashion. The fashion or style of today is often a curse to humanity, and common sense cannot be preached to the weak minds of many people. Just to be fashionable is the thought, no matter how we look, act, how we sin or what results follow. Then regarding war: Why cannot the minds of the people come together and agree on some things instead of so much war? It is the simple reason that sin has the upper hold. People cannot disobey the laws of God and of the nation and be Christian citizens. Of all the most heart-rending and disgusting sights, the worst is to see a man or woman get up in the church of God, pray with all their will power, shout the name of God, and then go home, make whiskey, curse their children, abuse wife or husband, and tell the most positive lies about it. People want money and get it in any way possible.

Hypocrisy is a curse all over the world. Reputation is what people say about you, but character is what God knows about you. Why do many girls, boys, men and women, rush to the front seats and to the choir? Do they go to understand what they hear and sing? Or is it to see and to be seen? Some do it to impress the people and make them think they are close to the preacher, but it is hypocrisy in many. Some go so as to be seen more plainly when they pray, but the Bible says, "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut the door, pray to thy Father, which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly."

If you live wrong you certainly cannot die right, so let us all strive to win some one for Christ, instead of thinking of some way to lead people astray. Churches do not need new members half so much as they need old members made over. * * * Church members need to love God, obey God and trust in God, as well as believe in Him.

In the places in this world where people are really living the Christian life, the world is growing better. Some believe that their surroundings hinder their way of living, but it matters not where you are, who you are with, or when, if your heart is with God and you are obeying Him. * * * The world is growing better in some respects because we have greater revivals, better preachers, more conversions, and the young people are realizing that they have a part in God's work. As we know the needs of this world and what we can do ourselves, let us all strive to do our part toward making the world better.

One of the most encouraging features of the work of the Field Secretary of Religious Education is to meet, in our various churches, so many young people deeply interested in the work of the Church, and thinking about its problems and activities. Many are looking forward to training at Elon and in the new college at Wadley, and they will prove a great power in the Christian Church of tomorrow. Essays, like this one by Miss Jennings (and this is only a part of her good work), show that our young people are in earnest and doing a great work.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS' AND MISSIONS

The following Sunday schools contributed to missions in October:

Pleasant Grove, Ala., 73c; New Elam, N. C., $4.60; Leaksville, Va., $1.69; La Grange, Ga., 80c; Wentworth (McCullers, N. C.), 90c; Reidsville, N. C., $2.73; Haw River, N. C., $7.69; Zion (Moncure, N. C.), $1.70; Johnson's Grove, Sedley, Va., $2.44; Richland, Ga., 53c.; Hanks Chapel, N. C., $2.50; Henderson, N. C., $5.75; Dry Run, Seven Fountains, Va., $2.00; Shallow Ford, N. C., $2.16; New Providence, N. C., $3.90; Isle of Wight C. H., Va., $2.50; High Point, N. C., $2.65; Durham, N. C., $9.41; Berea (Nansemond), Va., $10.00; Elm Ave., Portsmouth, Va., $2.81; Pleasant Hill (Alamance), N. C., $2.20; Liberty (Vance), N. C., $9.36; South Norfolk, Va., $10.11; Winchester, Va., $6.03; Graham, N. C., $1.80; Wakefield, Va., $2.87; Hines Chapel, N. C., $1.22; Shallow Ford, $3.18; Berea (Alamance), N. C., $2.79; Union (Surry), Va., $2.10; Dry Run, Va., $3.20; Antioch (Rockingham Co.), Va., $4.15; Linville, Va., $3.00; Wadley, Ala., $2.40; Holy Neck, Va., $16.00; Burlington, N. C., $83.08. Total for October, $220.68.

Bethlehem Sunday school, Nansemond county, Va., Bro. J. M. Ashley, Treasurer, joins the number of schools now taking the monthly offering for missions. It is doubtless only a matter of a few months and all our schools will enter into this wise decision of our Convention's schedule. How any school can improve on it we cannot see! One Sunday a month let all the offering go to the Orphanage; one Sunday a month the whole offering to missions: the other two Sundays to pay the current expense of the school. "As much for others as for self" ought to be the motto of every Sunday school and Christian Endeavor society, as well as every church.

Half the amount given by the schools to missions goes to the foreign work, half to the home work. Just now that foreign part goes to building our Kindergarten and Night School in Japan; the home part to our mountain work in Carroll county, Virginia. We do not see how anything could appeal more to our Sunday schools, or be worthier of their help than these two objects. Why not all our schools join in this great and good plan of our Convention?

OUR MOUNTAIN WORK

Five carpenters have been busy of late trying to get our school house at Fancy Gap, Va., ready for Miss Hedgepeth and her assistant, Miss Midgett, before cold weather begins. The teaching now is in the old building used last year, and this is totally inadequate. But we have the promise of the new building at a not far distant date. Miss Hedgepeth is pushing the work as rapidly as possible. We are to retain the large double room for Sunday school and religious services; two rooms being completed and separated from each other by a roller door, for use by the two teachers this winter. All the building material, other than the rough lumber, has to be carted from Mount Airy, and this is a tedious and expensive task. Every dollar we can get now on the work is necessary to pay on the building. It will cost $2,500 at the very best we can do, it seems now. It is not to be a fine building, but we are putting into it good material, and trying to build something substantial, comfortable and worthy of the great cause we represent.

FAILURE

Some people fear failure very much. They fear it so much that they never undertake anything constructive, and worth while. There is something far more to be feared than failure; namely, the fear that we will go before Him empty-handed, or with scanty fruit. This was the fear our Savior rebuked when the man with the one talent said, "And I was afraid, and went and hid thy talent in the earth." The Savior called a man who let such fear as that control him and keep him from doing his best both "wicked and slothful." It was Cyrus Hamlin who prayed a helpful prayer in saying, "Let me fail in trying to do something, rather than to sit still and do nothing."

HOME VS. FOREIGN MISSIONS

Henry Van Dyke hit the main topic with a sledge hammer in these words: "Home Missions does not mean missions for home alone. It means missions that begin at home and continue for all the world. We want America for Christ because we want America to help win the world for Christ." That does not mean that we are to win all of America for Christ before we begin winning the rest of the world to Him. As we help win the world for Him we gain strength for the task at home. Home Missions may be the arm of the Church; then Foreign Missions is its heart. And the arm grows strong as the heart beats full of love—and life.

CHURCH NEWS

FROM BROTHER J. E. FRANKS

Our first revival meeting of the year was at Lee's Chapel, the week following the fifth Sunday in July, and resulted in a glorious revival for the church. Some twenty or more professions, and eleven joined the church. Most of these were grown people, and give promise of much strength as members.

Our second meeting was at Zion, week following the first Sunday in August. The Christian part of the community enjoyed a great revival. Baptists and Methodists worked freely in the winning of souls to the number of 25 or 30. Seventeen of this number joined Zion church, and several at other places.

Our meeting at Christian Chapel started on the second Sunday in August. Here we also had a wonderful revival. About 25 professions of faith, with seven to join the church. Here we had great crowds, from a distance. Therefore many of the converts joined at more convenient places.

On the fourth Sunday in August we began our meeting at Youngsville. Brother Klegg, of the Methodist Church, and Brother Dowell, of the Baptist Church, had agreed with us to have a union revival, and requested that the writer, the pastor of the Christian church, do the preaching. This meeting, by request, was continued the second week, and gave Youngsville, they tell us, the best revival they have had in several years. Some 25 professed faith in Christ. Among these there was one old lady of 81 years, and a man of 82 years. About twenty united with the different churches.

The Bethel meeting continued from the second Sunday in September. Congregations were small because of the busy period of fodder pulling caused by the dry weather. The few worked and prayed faithfully, and God rewarded our efforts with some twenty professions of faith. A fine revival for the community, and thirteen additions to the church.

The Clayton meeting began on Monday after third Sunday in September. The Methodists very kindly invited us to hold our meeting in their church, our hall being too small. We should have had two weeks' meeting here, including a Sunday, but lack of time made it necessary to begin on Monday and close on Saturday. Nevertheless, the meeting was a great success, considering the limited time. Some twenty-five made profession of faith, and 16 joined our church. We are planning to begin our building here soon, and hope to be able to hold a meeting in our own church some time next year. This church building is the one thing we need under the providence of God to quickly give us a strong organization at North Clayton.

The fourth Sunday in September, according to previous appointment, found us beginning the meeting at New Hope, which continued until the following Friday, at which time the interest was such that a request came from the church and community to the pastor to please continue on. We had to promise that we would, after the two weeks Garner meeting, which was to begin on the first Sunday in October. A union meeting here of the three churches had been agreed upon, with Rev. O. D. Poythress to do the preaching. On account of the sudden sickness of his wife, Brother Poythress was forced to disappoint us and did not come. Consequently, we decided on Rev. J. V. Knight, of Raleigh, to do the preaching. This he did to the great delight of the big congregations for the ten days that followed. On account of sickness, the writer was denied the privilege of attending the main part of the meeting. But many were the words of praise to be heard of the preaching, and of the splendid music rendered by Brother and Sister Knight. There were several professions of faith, and four united with the different churches of the town.

We were back at New Hope to continue the meeting from Monday after the third Sunday in October. In the meantime, electric lights had been installed to prepare for night service, and we continued the services at 2 p. m. and at night, and closed the meeting on the fourth Sunday. I have attended many wonderful revivals, but this revival at New Hope was the best of all that I have ever witnessed. On the closing day there seemed to be almost a repetition of the day of Pentecost, and all were agreed that we had never seen it this way before. There were between 40 and 50 converts in the two weeks, and 25 joined this church.

The writer conducted the meeting and did the preaching at all points except Garner.

PEOPLE'S CHRISTIAN CHURCH, DOVER, DELAWARE

The 101st session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference has now passed into history. The more than 100 delegates and visitors present at the Conference were a splendid representation of Christian men and women. And the People's church fully appreciated such a fine attendance, especially in the view of the fact that practically all of the delegates came from such a great distance. It would be difficult to find a more congenial and friendly group of delegates at any Conference or Convention. The members of People's church gave full entertainment, and were only sorry that the Conference came to a close so soon, as it was a real pleasure to entertain such a delightful delegation.

The Conference was a real blessing to People's church, and the pastor and members of the church consider it a real privilege to have played the part of host. Though People's church has been a member of the Eastern Virginia Conference for several years, this was the first time the church as a whole has had the opportunity to get acquainted with so large a group of members and officials of the denomination. The church was so pleased with the fine type of laymen and clergy who attended the Conference that the denominational consciousness locally will be greatly quickened and strengthened as a result. And People's church and Dover extend a hearty welcome to the Eastern Virginia Conference to "Come again."

R. C. HELFENSTEIN, Pastor.

HOWARD'S CHAPEL

The meeting began October 9, 1921, and closed October 13. The attendance was fairly good. Rev. J. S. Carden, of Durham, N. C., assisted in the preaching. His messages were practical and inspirational. Brother Carden has been here before. He was heard with splendid attention. Also he renewed former friendships. He has an abundance of energy. May the Lord bless him in his labors of love elsewhere.

As to visible results, there was one profession of faith in Christ, two additions to the church, and the church itself strengthened. May the Lord bless the seed that was sown. All praise to the good Lord for what was accomplished.

CALLED HOME

SCRUGGS—Mrs. Elizabeth R. Scruggs died October 20, 1921, at the age of 83 years. She was a member of the Bethlehem Christian church and leaves to mourn their loss two brothers and many other near relatives.

The funeral was conducted at the grave in the family burying ground.

H. H. BUTLER.

WRIGHT—Miss Margaret J. Wright was born February 19, 1860, and died October 23, 1921. She was never married. She was a member of the Bethlehem Christian church since her childhood, and was present at the services while health permitted. The funeral service was conducted by the pastor, assisted by Dr. I. W. Johnson, all of which service was according to her own request and arrangement: Songs, "Abide With Me," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," "Safe in the Arms of Jesus," by choir, and solo, "I Would Not Live Alway," sung by Mrs. E. T. Cotten. Psalms 90 and John 14 were read. Her chosen text, Philippians 1:21-24. She lived a faithful and devoted Christian life and will be greatly missed by the church and community and her two sisters, Mrs. Charles Hyers and Mrs. W. H. Byrd. Interment made in the church cemetery.

E. T. COTTEN.

The funeral was conducted by the writer at the Leaksville church, and the body was laid to rest in the Leaksville cemetery on Monday, October 31. May the Lord bless and comfort the sorrowing mother, brothers and sisters, and comfort and care for the grief-stricken widow and the helpless infant.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

ROTHGEB—Mrs. Henrietta Katherine Rothgeb, wife of David Rothgeb, of Leaksville, Va., departed this life October 31, 1921, being 60 years and 22 days old. She is survived by her husband, ten children—three sons and seven daughters—and 20 grandchildren.

Although the deceased was not a member of any church, she professed faith in Christ a week or more before her death. All of her children, with the exception of one, are members of Leaksville Christian church.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer, Wednesday, November 2, and the body was buried in the cemetery of the Leaksville church.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

LUCAS—Mrs. Regina Frances Lucas, wife of Richard Lucas, of Ingham, Va., was born September 26, 1857, and died November 1, 1921. She is survived by her husband and eight children. The funeral services were conducted by the writer in the Lucas home Thursday, November 3, 1921, and the body was laid to rest in the family burying ground nearby.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—HEDGEPEETH

Whereas, on September 4, 1921, God in His wisdom saw fit to remove from our midst Mrs. J. B. Hedgepeth, a beloved member of the Burton's Grove Missionary society; therefore be it resolved—

First: That we bow to God's will, knowing that He doeth all things well, and never maketh a mistake;

Second: That we extend to her sorrowing loved ones the assurance of our heartfelt sympathy, that God's richest blessings may be theirs, and that He will sustain them with His love;

Third: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy spread on the minutes of the Burton's Grove Missionary society.

MRS. L. F. NIBLETT,

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT—HEDGEPEETH

When God, the Maker and Giver of mankind, took from our midst Mrs. Nanie Lee Hedgepeth, September 4, 1921, we were deprived of a faithful friend and co-worker.

We keenly realize our loss, in the removal of her earthly spirit, and sorrowfully note the vacancy created, yet we humbly submit to Him whose will must be done.

In the name of Barrett's Christian church we offer the following resolutions:

First: That we thus record our deep feeling of gratitude for her life, so filled with the characteristics exemplary of a true Christian; and among us her influence shall live;

Second: That in her death Barrett's Christian church has lost a consistent member—oue who gladly gave thorough service, ever willing to perform her duty;

Third: That we extend to her bereaved family our most sincere sympathy in the loss of a wife and mother whose devotion was steadfast and true; we commend them to God for strength of endurance in their profound sorrow;

Fourth: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy be sent to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be entered upon our church records.

MISS ADELAIDE M. ROLLINGS,
MISS LYDA CORNWELL,
MISS VIOLA VIRGINIA ROLLINGS.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—BARRETT

The news of Mrs. J. P. Barrett's death brought to us a deep sense of sorrow. It has been only a short time since she lived among us and occupied a prominent place in our Sunday school and church work. She still occupies a large place in our memories. In her passing from earthly labor to Heavenly reward we feel keenly our loss. She was a sweet-spirited Christian, a thoughtful and considerate friend. Although our Heavenly Father has transplanted this noble character into the realities of eternity, we cherish sweet memories of her beautiful life and good work among us. Knowing that God is too wise to make a mistake and too good to be untrue, therefore we resolve—

First: That we register our appreciation of her life and effective service as a Sunday school teacher and Christian worker while among us.

Second: That we express to her husband, Dr. J. Pressley Barrett, our deepest condolence in the loss of his faithful companion. Also do we extend our heartfelt sympathy to her other loved ones and friends. May they ever look to Him who heals broken hearts and gives comfort and companionship to those who are lonely.

Third: That these resolutions be entered upon our Sunday school record and a copy sent to her grief-stricken husband, and also one to The Christian Sun.

Done by order of the Sunday school of the Rose Hill Christian church, Columbus, Ga., October 30, 1921.

RED CROSS GOOD WORKS

More than 400,000 European children, most of whom for years have never possessed clean and decent clothing, today are wearing warm garments made by the women of America in response to the nationwide appeal by the American Red Cross last spring when the desperate plight of Europe's children was revealed. By the first of the year, when the rigorous winter of Europe is at its height, virtually double this number will be warmly clad, in American-made clothing. Shipment from Red Cross Chapters from Maine to California to the terminal in New York from which the garments are dispatched to Europe is continuing daily and is increasing rapidly.

Included in the shipments to date have been 327,339 children's garments and 78,005 layettes. This clothing, supplementing the feeding program of the European Relief Council and the medical welfare work of the American Red Cross among the thousands of suffering children, will be the means of assisting in the saving of thousands of lives.

Distribution of these garments in Europe is made through the Child Welfare Units of the American Red Cross, engaged in relief work in hundreds of centers, rural and urban, throughout Europe.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

VOLUME LXXIII BURLINGTON, N. C. NOVEMBER 23, 1921 NUMBER 46

President Harding's Thanksgiving Proclamation

By the President of the United States of America—A PROCLAMATION

THAT season has come when, alike in pursuance of a devout people's time-honored custom and in grateful recognition of favoring national fortunes, it is proper that the President should summon the nation to a day of devotion, of thanksgiving for blessings bestowed and of prayer for guidance in modes of life that may deserve continuance of divine favor.

Foremost among our blessings is the return of peace, and the approach to normal ways again. The year has brought us again into relations of amity with all nations, after a long period of struggle and turbulence. In thankfulness therefor, we may well unite in the hope that Providence will vouchsafe approval to the things we have done, the aims which have guided us, the aspirations which have inspired us. We shall be prospered as we shall deserve prosperity, seeking, not alone for the material things, but for those of the spirit as well; earnestly trying to help others; asking, before all else, the privilege of service. As we render thanks anew for the exaltation which came to us, we may fittingly petition that moderation and wisdom shall be granted to rest upon all who are in authority, in the tasks they must discharge. Then hands will be steadied, their purposes strengthened in answer to our prayers.

Ours has been a favored nation in the bounty which God has bestowed upon it. The great trial of humanity, though indeed we bore our part as well as we were able, left us comparatively little scarred. It is for us to recognize that we have been thus favored, and when we gather at our altars to offer up thanks we will do well to pledge, in humility and all sincerity, our purpose to prove deserving. We have been raised up and preserved in national power and consequence, as part of a plan whose wisdom we cannot question. Thus believing, we can do no less than hold our nation the willing instrument of the Providence which has so wonderfully favored us. Opportunity for very great service awaits us if we shall prove equal to it. Let our prayers be raised for direction in the right paths. Under God, our responsibility is great; to our own first, to all men afterward; to all mankind in God's own justice.

Now, therefore, I, Warren G. Harding, President of the United States, hereby designate Thursday, the twenty-fourth day of November, to be observed by the people as a day of thanksgiving, devotion, and prayer; urging that at their hearthsides and their altars they will give thanks for all that has been rendered upon them, and will pray for a continuance of the divine fortune which has been showered so generously upon this nation.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the seal of the United States of America.

Done at the capital of the United States, this thirty-first day of October, in the year of our Lord, nineteen hundred and twenty-one, and of the independence of the United States, the one hundred and forty-sixth.

(Signed)

By the President:

WARREN G. HARDING.

Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State.

EDITORIALS

Harking Back To A Custom

THANKSGIVING comes this week. It is a reminder of things that are many. It reminds us, or at least it should, of the noble sires who instituted the custom. Our forefathers were solemn and serious when they instituted the custom of Thanksgiving. Under an open sky, amid the trackless forest, on a soil that yields to labor, and in a land that was destined to become the haven of the oppressed, they had something for which they could be, and were, thankful. Theirs was an heritage rich in life. They knew it and gave thanks to God for all of it. To them their chances were many and great—and they were right. Our opportunities, our blessings, our chances, are multiplied many hundred. We have occasion and cause for even more thanksgiving than they.

The original idea of the day was to give thanks. That custom, like the custom of the holy Christmas, has been marred with world affairs and let trail in the dust of irreverence. God never meets His people except when they desire to meet Him. God met the Pilgrims and out of their devotion to God, to man, and to country, we are the recipients of their favor and noble ideals. The Pilgrims never forgot their God; and God kept His word that such a people would be blessed and multiplied. The generations to follow will have upon them the stamp that the present generation gives. We owe it to the unborn to give to them the best that the blessing of God and the direction of good government can give.

The President of the United States has issued his proclamation. Likewise the governor of each state has issued a call to the people, asking that they remember the day in thanksgiving, worship, and prayer. To many it is a day of low-living, sporting, and doing almost anything except being thankful for the abundance of good things provided for us on every hand.

In former years we have spoken of an abundant harvest. There must be modification of words in speaking of such this year. The harvest in many sections has been abundant, while in others it has been scant. But for four years nature has given from her soil and poured from her willing hand crops in great abundance. It is not our part to worry in a lean year if nature withholds it from us. Hers is a great world and there must be rest and change and diversity just as in the mental and physical world. Nature has filled our barns and bins with much during the past few years. It was our part to save then, not to worry now. It was our happy lot to be thankful then, and it is now.

The silver lining of world conditions is just beginning to show. It is sure. During this very week of thanksgiving, there is assembled in Washington a conference in which the world has hope and confidence. It is no political meeting. The destiny of many a fair son will be settled around that council table, and so who dares to call it a political gathering? As the old year wanes, we predict that a new one will usher us into a realm of approaching and permanent peace and world confidence. There is cause for thanksgiving for all these things. God cannot, and will not, bless a people who suffer their innocent men to die by the million for no benefit to the world. "They labor and others enter into their labors."

Sectarianism is on its last legs, narrowness is a community sin instead of an individual fault, selfishness is an obnoxious odor in the nostrils of humanity, and the spirit of brotherhood is rapidly prevailing where rank classism once held sway. The ideals of a democracy are bound to win and the spirit of God shall prevail.

With the approach of all these things we should hark back to the original custom of Thanksgiving Day. We have not gone from it in toto but the unifying influence of the Church should be able to bring the people to a spirit of greater reverence. Ours is a land of peace and plenty and our joys have been multiplied because of that increasing discovery that our obligations to humanity reach to all the world. Ours is a land to help every land and every nation. With thankful hearts, reverent minds, and faith in God, together with His help, we know not our strength for world advancement.

Our own Church has cause for thanksgiving. The year has been one to try the hearts of men. It has been very trying upon the leaders. The faith has been kept. A two-fold burden has come to nearly every member: Subscriptions above the average year and income below the normal time. Our people have trusted God the more and we are going to come out victorious. God tries His people. He is trying us now. Fail? Never, ten thousand times never. Down to your knees! The kingdom is the cause for which we strive! Onward, onward! be the words to march after. No retreat! NEVER!

Our Conferences have been well attended; every line of work has shown progress in light of present conditions. Adjustments are always taking place, more in some years than in others. The institutions of God move on, though men may come and men may go. Every institution of the Church is doing its full quota of work, more young men are now enrolled for the ministry than at any one time during the past four years, and more of our men are preparing in larger institutions than ever known in the history of our Church, and more men are giving their full time to the Gospel ministry than in any year of our existence. Surely we have cause for rejoicing and thanksgiving.

Let us enter into Thanksgiving Day with reverent minds, thankful hearts, and rejoicing in His name.

THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

EDITORIAL NOTE: The Sun's Editor, owing to serious illness in his family, was unable to attend the North Carolina Conference. President W. A. Harper, by special request of the Editor, was asked to give readers of The Sun a summary of the Conference. The following is the summary furnished.—C. B. R.

THE Danville church, one of the young churches of the Conference, was host to the ninety-sixth session of the North Carolina Conference November 15-17. The pastor, Rev. B. J. Earp, and the brethren there feared they could not care for the body, and so stated in THE SUN. One hundred and forty-one persons registered for the Conference, and members of the church told me they could have cared for more. Some went to hotels, as is the case with other religious bodies. Why should we object to paying our expenses to the Lord's work? We pay when we go to the circus or the State Fair.

The Conference was characterized by a lack of addresses and a presence of discussion and debating, most of which was in good vein. Rev. H. Russell Clem gave the ordination sermon. Rev. S. C. Harrell spoke on "Books," Rev. G. O. Lankford on "Recruiting for Kingdom Work," Miss Lucy Eldredge on "Unifying the Church's Educational Forces," Dr. W. W. Staley on "The Relation of Conference and Convention," and Rev. R. L. Williamson gave his annual address as President. On Tuesday night Rev. W. P. Minton gave an illustrated lecture on our Japan Mission.

Four elders were received into membership: Rev. H. Russell Clem, Rev. G. O. Lankford, Rev. C. E. Gerringer, and Rev. A. K. Scotten from the M. P. Church. Four young men were licensed as licentiates: Elisha Bradshaw, M. T. Sorrell, W. T. Scott and John M. Allred. There are seven young men in the Biblical Class as candidates: J. U. Fogleman, H. E. Crutchfield, R. I. Williams, D. M. Spence, E. C. Brady, W. B. Terrell, and G. A. Pearce.

A new standing committee was created, known as "The Committee on Propositions and Grievances." The committee made no report, and so likely no propositions were made or grievances submitted. This is a new committee for the Christian Church, though regular in State legislatures.

The regular routine work of the Conference was transacted, the usual special and standing committees submitting reports. The Committee on Moral Reform was not there to report, and so the Conference re-adopted the report of last session.

Resolutions commending President Harding and Secretary Hughes for their program as submitted at the Disarmament Conference were adopted and sent to those officials.

It was decided that the Conference Men and Millions Forward Movement officers should urge on the churches prompt payment of their pledges. Rev. G. O. Lankford and Mr. W. K. Holt were elected as Conference leaders for ministers and laymen, respectively.

Despite the hard times, the funds sent to the Conference were practically the same as last year, with some few churches to hear from, which may carry the total even beyond that of last year.

The Executive Committee was authorized to take a referendum vote of the churches on these three propositions:

1. Shall the Conference remain united as now?
2. Shall it divide into three as before the merger?
3. Shall it divide into two, with the Cape Fear and Haw River, the North Carolina Railroad from Haw River to Durham and the Durham-Keysville Railroad to Keysville as the dividing line?

This vote is to be taken by March 15, 1922, and the Committee is then to take such action as the majority of the churches desire.

Sixty-two delegates were elected to the Southern Christian Convention which meets in April-May, 1922. Only men were elected.

Rev. R. L. Williamson, President; J. A. Dickey, Secretary, and Rev. J. W. Patton, Assistant Secretary, were elected to succeed themselves in office. Rev. G. O. Lankford was elected Vice-President, and W. J. Ballentine Treasurer.

Rev. J. W. Holt was elected to represent the Conference in the North Carolina Anti-Saloon League.

Dr. W. P. Lawrence was elected to succeed himself on the Home Mission Board.

The Lord's Supper was celebrated in a novel way by Rev. J. W. Holt, assisted by Dr. W. W. Staley, Dr. P. H. Fleming, and Rev. J. W. Patton.

The Conference expressed its regrets at the enforced absence of Dr. W. S. Long, Dr. J. W. Wellons, Rev. W. G. Clements, Rev. A. F. Iseley and Rev. C. B. Riddle.

The next session is to be held with Hines Chapel church, Guilford County, North Carolina.

The Conference closed with a beautiful praise and testimony meeting conducted by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, in which perhaps fifty persons took part.

We call special attention to the Thanksgiving appeal on page 9, from the Superintendent of our Orphanage. Let every individual and church be mindful of this opportunity to help the helpless.

The burial of the "Unknown Soldier" was a fitting expression of the nation's recognition and gratitude for the spirit of human sacrifice shown in the war. The popular reception of former President Wilson was evidence of the vitality of ideals of national unselfishness, while the Conference on Limitation of Armament followed with startling immediateness to put those ideals into the form of reality.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part V.

WEDNESDAY evening, September 21.—The city of San Juan, which is the capital of Porto Rico, and now has a population of more than 40,000, was once surrounded and shut in by a brick wall. This wall, like the old fort, is crumbling and only the decaying remains are visible. How perishable indeed are the most noble and enduring works of man! God alone creates and builds that which time cannot erase or destroy.

Within an hour after landing, Barrett had Martin, Minton and me in his Ford and our real work on the island had begun. We went first to Bayamon, a thriving city about seven miles out from San Juan. Here both the Lutheran and Disciples of Christ have churches. The Lutheran church seats about 125, has a Sunday school, and preaching services twice a week. The church does not pay anything on pastor's salary, but does pay current expenses. It has kindergarten rooms and a good class. There is a church membership of sixty and a native pastor has charge. Here there are forty children enrolled in the kindergarten, and on the same street several blocks away is another kindergarten class with forty-three members, one teacher having charge of both classes, but at different hours. (These missionaries have to economize time and effort as well as the rest of us.) On the church lawn is a beautiful cocoanut tree with two dozen or more cocoanuts on it. (On a church lawn in the States these cocoanuts would not be there very long.) The tree is about eight inches in diameter and twenty-five feet high to the first limb or fruit. The cocoanut tree had sense enough to know that if it had limbs or fruit close to the ground—well, the fruit would not be there long. The One who designed the cocoanut tree certainly understood what He was doing. Nothing valuable is easy of access. If one wishes the goods one must pay the price, in one way or another.

The Disciples' church at Bayamon seats about 200, and has a membership of ninety. The average attendance at church services is about forty, and at Sunday school about ninety. (These Porto Ricans are evidently on to our American way of going to Sunday school, but not remaining or coming back to preaching.) This church pays about $15.00 a month on pastor's salary, the native pastor in charge getting $70.00 a month salary. He has been preaching nine years. He has a wife and two children, holds five services a week, received twenty-five members last year, is a very neat looking, pleasant fellow with an unpronounceable Porto Rican name. The town of Bayamon has 5,000 people and the Lutherans and Disciples have two churches each here.

The ride to Bayamon and return was one of open-eyed wonder, surprise and delight—it being our first peep at Porto Rican life. The houses attract us. They are built beside the road and are mostly thatched roofed, the body of palm bark and sticks. There is much grazing of cattle and small horses along the way. Leaving out the houses, the cattle and the folks, everything else is green. They have no frost here to bite or burn the growing vegetation, and so the flowers bloom, the trees blossom and the orchards bear fruit the year around. (Also mosquitoes and other pesky insects abound throughout the year.) I saw many yoke of oxen, usually two yoke of four oxen to the cart, each team driven by two drivers. The law requires one man or boy to walk in front of every team of oxen—that the teams may be quickly turned aside on meeting automobiles. They have no bows around the oxen's neck, only yokes across them, and these are tied to the horn of the beast with a tight cord. This seems cruel indeed, as a cow's head at the horn is very sensitive and tender.

I saw enough goats this evening to make a long, long line on judgment day when they are to be separated from the sheep. The goat is in much demand here, both for meat and milk—and is monarch of all he surveys. You see him everywhere, in town and in country, at home and abroad.

We had supper tonight in a Spanish restaurant. They served our butter in salt cells and spake in a jabberish we could not understand—but the coffee was good. After supper we went to the Blanche Kellogg Institute. This is a girls' school in San Juan supported by the Congregational Church. Dr. and Mrs. York are in charge, have a good building and a plant worth $50,000. There are three teachers (Americans) who work for $650.00 a year, board included, and the school runs eight months. There are twenty-five pupils. Dr. York's salary is $1,650 a year and living, and the total annual budget for the school at present is $5,000. The Congregational Church is spending $20,000 a year in Porto Rico at present. It has only one missionary on the island, but has a hospital with a physician, three American and three native nurses. It has about thirty congregations and preaching places, but only ten organized churches. The increase in membership is slow. It is very difficult, said Dr. York, to get missionaries who will stay in Porto Rico. It is too near the States, and they tire or get in bad health. The Congregationalists have five ordained and five unordained native ministers, and their salaries range from $65.00 to $100.00 a month each. Native workers must be taught and then these must evangelize Porto Rico. Returning to the hotel at 10 p. m., Minton, Martin and I went for a walk. Everybody else went also. The plaza and drug stores and sidewalks and streets were all alive with people. The houses are low and open right out on the sidewalk or narrow street, and you can walk in and have a seat with the family—if you wish.

The tropics have made a civilization all their own. The people are lacking in "pep" (as the boys say). The people do not seem to have much to do—and don't care whether they do that today—provided they can put it off till tomorrow.

I saw the farmers coming into town tonight to be ready for the early market tomorrow morning, no doubt. They have two baskets, each of which will hold about two bushels, strapped across the back of the horse, and if not too heavily laden the farmer himself rides between the baskets on the horse's back. I saw a few shabby four-wheel wagons, but the horses pull them with ropes instead of chains for traces.

Thursday A. M., September 22.—I slept last night as if I had a clear conscience, was up at 6:50 this a. m., and after a shave and a shower bath felt fine and fit. Minton tried to make me believe I also looked good in a light summer suit. It is a fair and beautiful day, as wholesome and balmy as an April morning after an early rain. Ate my breakfast of tough bread and black coffee at the restaurant on the plaza, and had butter again served in a salt cell—so if it melts, which it does, it will not run out and away from you. (Some of it is strong enough to run.) They do not make butter in Porto Rico. The milk they get is not rich enough, I guess.

We called at the governor's palace at 10 a. m., but owing to a death in the official family he could not be seen. Near the palace is the Hugh O'Neal Memorial Presbyterian church. It is a splendid building which seats 250 and has a membership of ninety-one. It now pays all current expenses and $300 on the salary of the local pastor. The building has been occupied fifteen years, but the church was organized several years prior to this. The native pastor in charge is a highly educated and well trained man of culture and dignity, speaks English, and receives a salary of $110 a month. This church helps support a missionary in Santo Domingo. (That is fine—a mission church out here helping send a missionary to another mission field.) The church also has a kindergarten with two teachers, each of whom is paid $20.00 a month. The young pastor was educated for a teacher, but seeing the need of his people for the gospel, he yielded to his better impression and gave himself to the ministry.

In the kindergarten school were three white children, all others black or mulatto. There are 185,000 children in school in Porto Rico, and 250,000 out of school. Forty-one percent of children of school age do not attend any school.

At 10:45 we visited Morro Castle. It would take up my whole note book to describe this fort—for it is not a castle. These walls are four feet thick and moss-covered. It is dilapidated and seems to have ghosts, spooks, "haunts" in it. One winding stairway leads you deep into an ancient Spanish prison dungeon. There are American soldiers stationed in the old castle now—and they must have a hard time to keep from being lonesome and getting scared.

Just across the harbor, 600 yards away, is Leper Island. There are forty lepers there now, patiently or impatiently awaiting their slow and certain death. It is a ragged, torn island, with a shabby shack for the poor fellows to die and decay in. And so here, with signs of sorrow and disease and death 600 feet away: in this fort where soldiers have watched and waited and reveled and gambled and died for 400 years, and with the ebbing, restless sea at my feet, and the overhanging mountains covered and clustered with tropical fruits, foliage and flowers, coming down almost to the ocean's edge, I have mingled emotions of hope and dread, joy and despair. But what else is the human heart for but an instrument of a thousand strings to be played upon by the scenes and incidents of the day?

LET US HAVE THE FACTS

(Concluded)

 THE following is the last of the articles on the question, Is the world getting better or worse? It was written early in November, but by mistake was laid away and not sent, although I thought it had been sent in due time. This will explain why it now appears somewhat out of its place, but I hope the reader may associate it with the articles which preceded it.—J. P. B.

13. Modern enlightenment against God. This is perhaps the day of the world's greatest enlightenment, but an effort is making to set up enlightenment as opposed to God. This is to deify enlightenment and minimize God. What folly! Enlightenment, to be of real value to the world, must be thoroughly dominated by the teaching of Christianity, otherwise it may become a greater menace to truth than ignorance itself. Would you believe it, that in the enlightenment of the twentieth century there is a widespread teaching that enlightened men and women do not need God, man's wisdom being all we need! Alas, for such teaching! How can the world be growing better, morally and spiritually, when the two greatest centers of Christian influence, England and America, are being honey-combed by such teaching? Dr. Ivan Lee Holt, of St. Louis, says that such a teaching is now broadcast in these two great countries. These teachers declare that "war put an end to the naive and childish idea of a personal God." These teachers (?) hold that "God is a convenient terminology for the higher individual and social aspirations; that God is an imaginative person, created by men's minds, to aid in the solution of the problems of social contact; that the enlightened individual does not need God, since God is necessary only when social contacts are established." Do THE SUN's readers believe that such vagaries in human thought can by any means contribute to the growth of this world, morally and spiritually? "These men," says Dr. Holt, "hold and teach that God is an imaginative person, created by men's minds, and further, that enlightened persons do not need God. Can such teaching add to the growth of this world in truth and righteousness? If so, on what basis? I admit that if such teachings were confined to very limited communities, then it might mean very little, but since it is being sown broadcast, far and near, and at the same time being backed by the most awful forms of unbelief and open rebellion against God, I hold that it is an evidence of the gain in this day against wholesome moral and spiritual conditions.

14. Rank heathenism is rapidly gaining in this Christian country, planting its teachings and temples in many parts to the dismay of the best interests of our country. Do you think the fact that heathenism is making inroads upon our Christian territory, especially on the Pacific slope, is anything in the way of evidence that our world is getting better?

15. The power of civil government seems practically paralyzed—unable to cope with modern problems, now burdening human society. And this is true to such an extent as to be slowing down the wheels of human progress in many spheres of human activity. Think of it! Think of the situation as it now confronts our own government. We have 6,000,000 of our working people unemployed, and that at a time of great industrial progress, and by common consent our country is far better off than are most of the world's civilized governments. If the world were really improving, morally and spiritually, how could human life be burdened after this manner?

16. There is now a widespread world movement to destroy the Christian Sabbath, and this effort is not confined to infidels, agnostics and other traducers of the God whom we worship, but hundreds and thousands of professing Christians are lending their influence to the accomplishment of the same end. Can you truthfully deny the charge? Can such conditions in any way serve as evidence that the world is getting better in its morals and its Christianity? If so, it is theirs to show wherein.

17. The very face of the earth has lately been swept by such an appalling disaster in the shape of a World War as is not elsewhere recorded in the pages of history. Think of a disaster, a world disaster, which made the world poor indeed, as compared with the world's condition before its scourge from the bloody hand of war. Think of it! As the outcome of this world disaster, today ten millions of the world's choicest men and women are sleeping in the last sleep of death, while the loss in other lines to the world's properly values cannot be estimated. This world war has also been followed by the greatest rise in human history of human lawlessness, and this lawlessness has been crowned by a wave of crime which is even now world-wide, devouring the best institution of Church and State, and yet, in the face of all of these things, some are telling us that the world is getting better. How can they, in the face of present world conditions, believe their own claims?

In some large measure these and other modern conditions have practically wrecked modern civilization. Really, if the world is getting better, how are we to account for the multiplied agencies of ruin, now so apparent throughout the world? How can such conditions develop the moral and spiritual in human life? If they do, maybe we shall make more progress in bringing the world to its best by encouraging these widespread evils. Who can believe such a suggestion for one moment?

In closing, permit me to have a word for Brother J. H. Blanchard. He makes some statements which I do not think he would make again, if he will take time to consider their significance. For instance, he says that this old world is all that God meant it should be, and then almost immediately he says: "God gave man all good things to enjoy, but that man chose death and sin, and that since then the human family has chosen to serve Satan and follow death." Does Brother Blanchard mean to assert that God intended this old world to serve Satan rather than Himself? Brother Blanchard says that every living thing has kept its place, except man, and he has gone into the service of Satan, sin and death. Brother Blanchard urges the doctors not to quibble. There is no call for a quibble, so long as he lays himself so wide open to the charge of trying to stand on both sides of the fence at the same time. If the world be now just what God meant it should be, then what was the need of any effort to try to make it better? No doubt that Brother Blanchard can set himself straight, even if he should quibble a good bit in trying to do so.

We truly believe that Christ will yet be gloriously victorious, but the battle is yet to be finished. This is the optimism for which I stand.

ELON LETTER

EEK before last I wrote on the causes of Bolshevism. Brother Riddle has suggested that I name the remedy. Diagnosis is one thing and prescription another. I may not even have diagnosed the case properly, but I will try to suggest what remedies may be applied.

Three methods are usually resorted to when radicalism in any form appears in public life. The first method is the authority of the government. The day the recently threatened railroad strike was called off I was on the train and talking with a very intelligent man who would have gone out had the order not been annulled. I asked him why the strike was called off. "Because the government was against us," he said, and the bitterness in his voice was very evident. Government exists to prevent crime and to punish it. Whether it should be used for other ends in times of peace, I mean its force, is a doubtful expedient. The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church. It is also the seed of radicalism. The expelling of the Socialists from the New York Assembly helped socialism. When we undertake to quell radicalism by authority, we really weaken our authority and strengthen the radicals.

The second method of dealing with radicals is to organize a propaganda against them. They always reply in kind and go us one better. Every "The Menace" aimed at Catholicism brings quickly "The Slime of the Serpent," aimed at Protestantism, or a "The New Menace." We learned the subtle value of propaganda during the World War. In a sense every newspaper and every public speech are propaganda. I am referring now to organized, controlled propaganda. Any one who reads more than one newspaper or magazine knows that there are several such cliques at work now, moulding public opinion unfairly against the radicals in this country. It will not cure the evil. The Inter-Church World Movement unearthed the iniquities of the United States Steel Corporation in its dealing with its men and its servile newspapers, and the Inter-Church paid the price of its honest exposures. Unfair propaganda against the Reds will but make them redder in the face.

The third method resorted to is that of a censorship. During war time, perhaps there should be a limitation of the freedom of speech and of assembly. But in peace times there can be no excuse for abridging either, and the attempt to do so but adds fuel to the flaming passions of the men coerced and their friends and sympathizers. Oftentimes a man feels better to get the bile out of his system. A radical speech has been known to cure many a Red. It is no crime to criticize your government or those who administer it. I have learned far more from my adverse critics than I have from my admiring friends. The government has too. We all covet the eras of good-will and fellow-feeling, but those eras can never come by placing a gag on the mouths of free people. Let us rather listen respectfully to the radical and patiently point out to him the better way. We may hand-cuff him and drag him along that way, but it will be far better to re-make his ideals so that he will uprightly like a true man walk in it gladly and stay in it because he wants to, not because he has to.

I have in this letter shown the things we are not to do in the attempt to cure Bolshevism. Next week, Brother Editor, I will try to be positive in suggesting remedies that promise hope. Say, this prescription business is all right, just so the other fellow takes the medicine.

SUFFOLK LETTER

HE most potent agent in modern civilization is the press. It is the telepathy of the world, the mouthpiece of human thought, the creator of public opinion, the tide of human feeling. It can make slaves or freemen. It can set up empires or wreck established institutions. It puts its ears to the keyhole of home, business, government, and secret conclaves, and then interprets all in the light of modern excitement. The click of the type, the flap of the press, the mark of the pen and the inkhorn flood the world with reports and suggestions that make honest men or crooks. The "Autocrat of the Breakfast Table" is the morning newspaper, and the shade of the evening is the last issue of the press. Markets rise or fall by its edict, passions flame and virtue shivers under its voice, and the day dawns with a map of the world revealing the worst known to man. It builds roads or wastes public funds, enlightens the age or corrupts society. It dissolves marriage, overturns dynasties, creates panics, and runs the world mad: but at the same time, it gives vision to citizens, proportion to business, prosperity to cities, and color to honor and truth. It is the moving picture of human actions, the Aladdin's lamp of a new day. Its dailies, weeklies, monthlies and annuals, represent all spheres, all progress, and all plans. Science, art, politics, commerce, religion, all feel the force of this giant silence more powerful than cannon or bombs.

But the religious press occupies and cultivates a field by itself. This field was first entered by The Herald of Gospel Liberty in September, 1808, and was the first religious newspaper published in the world, and is issued weekly from Dayton, Ohio, now in its 114th year. That the Christian Church should issue the first religious paper in the world is the marvel to all men, but to the credit of Elias Smith, Portsmouth, New Hampshire. The Herald is the oldest and none better today. Religious literature is a larger term than the paper because it includes religious papers, books, Sunday school lesson papers, cards, pictures, music, stories, all built on Jesus Christ and His gospel. Most of what is published is experience tested by the highest standards derived from the Word of God. The distinction between the press and the religious press is that the press derives its material from the world, and the religious press derives material from what the world should be. It must be admitted that both are mixed utterances, but the higher standard is set by religion and is above the world. The religious press corrupts no youth, deceives no readers, stains no home, blights no character, desecrates no Sabbath, violates no virtue, sets up no false standards of conduct and life. It bows to no position, prestige, possession, or power. It measures its ground, weighs its words, and selects its thought. An unseen spirit of prayer runs through its pages like the silken strand in the currency of the nation, and it advertises no doubtful thing for gold. It advocates benevolent enterprises, supports Christian institutions, and is the safeguard of home. It is the expression of the religious life of the time, the channel of correspondence between the thinkers and workers in the churches and church institutions, making the best thought and purpose of the age current among men. It leads in reforms, creates clean public sentiment, quiets the passions of men, and keeps alive the fire on the altar of family prayer. It is the tonic of Christian life, the corrector of radical thought, the calmer of human passions, and the support of the holy Sabbath. It does not reach so many as the secular press, but it reaches the conscience of a greater number of men. It has aided or led in the abolition of slavery, lottery, the saloon, and many minor reforms. It is the silent moulder of moral sentiments, the mute advocate of righteous laws, and the sympathizer of unfortunate men. It has done more for freedom, virtue, justice, peace and education than any other force save the gospel of Jesus Christ.

W. W. STALEY.

IF I WERE A LAYMAN'S WIFE

By a Minister's Wife

Candor compels me to state that if I were a layman's wife, knowing as little as most laymen's wives know of Church conditions and Church problems, I would do just as they do—or, perhaps, not as well. The minister's wife has a peculiar opportunity to make herself familiar with these things. She breathes an atmosphere of missions; she eats and drinks and sits down and rises up with it. From sheer force of circumstances she knows about the poor and the sick and the sinning, because these find their way to the minister's house. On Sundays the whole life of her home centers itself in the Church, because that is where her husband must be.

All these causes tend to make of the minister's wife a Church worker whose labors are conscientious and intelligent. Her duty is so clear, her opportunity so obvious, that she is rarely a shirker. Moreover, it is work that binds her closely into her husband's life. None of these things are true of the layman's wife; it takes more time and more effort and more self-sacrifice for her to give herself to the work of her Church; and therefore, recognizing at the start the difference in conditions, if I were a layman's wife, it seems to me that, first of all, I would take my vows of Church membership more seriously.

This will require a definite effort, because this knowledge will not drift into her home as it does into mine. It will not be a subject of conversation at the table, nor make its appeal by telephone, doorbell, and post, a dozen times a day. It must be deliberately sought and reckoned with. And if I were a layman's wife, attending Church as a member, contributing to it, giving my vote occasionally in its affairs, I would endeavor to have an intelligent knowledge of its workings. This knowledge ought to embrace general denominational activities, as well as local conditions.

And where there is sympathetic comprehension, caviling will die. The most captious woman I ever knew was entirely cured by a patient application of the X-ray of information. She had to have the treatment often, and she was exceedingly restive under it, but in the end light conquered. Her pastor made her listen to a statement of all kinds of problems, and made her use her brains to help in their solution. She had brains and she enjoyed using them, and finally the whole force of her shrewd common sense was engaged in making that Church come up to better financial standards.

If I were a layman's wife, I would try to recognize another thing. Almost all laymen are business men, working hard in one way or another at their own affairs, and they have little time to give to Church problems or Church interests. The layman's wife must be his source of knowledge. From her he can get information, interest, enthusiasm, and she has an approach to him that his pastor can never have. One of the quietest men I ever knew, a man from whom nobody expected anything, became a perfect tower of strength to a church in its emergency, because his thoughtful wife had kept him interested concerning Church affairs.

After I had informed myself and my husband and my children, making myself definitely responsible for the family attitude toward Church matters, I would get that word "our" deeply implanted in the minds of one family, at least. We would treat the Church as we treat the home; its weaknesses should be dealt with gently, its strength and wisdom praised, its life loyally shielded from unkind criticism or ridicule. It should be "ours" in all that the word implies, because it is "our" Father's house, "our" Father's family. The most important change in attitude that a family can make in its relation to a Church is to drop the "y"; no longer "your," but "our." It is a little thing, but it is immensely significant and valuable. If I had learned this, as a layman's wife, it would do away with indifference or timidity in my attitude toward strangers—other children of my Father, drawn to His house by love for Him. The "our" frame of mind would make me feel the same cordiality and freedom that I would feel in my own home, and would lead me to manifest it, not in exuberant overzeal, but in gentle friendliness.

Having achieved all these things, I think I would go a step farther, and learn how to do something. Every church today is suffering from lack of leaders, those who are willing to bear responsibility. I would not be contented simply to absorb, to attend meetings and listen; I would endeavor to fit myself to undertake some one thing. Such knowledge does not come by sitting still, and the church worker is not born, but made.

These are the things I would do. Are there any that I would not do? Are there any that the wives of laymen do that might better be omitted? Just a few come to my mind and the first concerns social affairs. If my pastor had such problems as the mid-week service, or the Sunday evening service, I would not plan social gatherings at these times. It is not wrong to give a dinner party on Wednesday night, or to ask one's friends to one's home on Sunday evening, but it is a very great hindrance to the church. In one church which I know a very beautiful dinner was given on a prayer-meeting night, and, urged by their wives, two of the deacons attended. For years the young people used this story to excuse themselves for anything which they wished to do.

A layman's wife has a very great opportunity. No matter how zealous and devoted a minister's wife may be, she is "taken for granted." If she does not do these things she is an "unprofitable servant," and if she does them she is only a shade less unprofitable, because even then she "has simply done that which it was her duty to do." All her knowledge is supposed to be "professional." But interest, knowledge, sympathy, loyalty, zeal self-sacrifice on the part of the layman's wife, are recognized to be the outcome of sincere conviction, and the entire strength of her personality, her ability, her social advantage, count double, and far outweigh the same contribution made by the wife of the minister.—The Lutheran.

A Thanksgiving Appeal

This will be my last letter before Thanksgiving. I want to plead with you in all earnestness to make your Thanksgiving offerings as large as possible. We need your sympathy, your prayers, your love, and your help now. Eighty little children to feed and clothe and care for, with more than fifty pleading at the door for admittance. How can we turn them away in the cold when our Church could so easily supply the means to give them a home where they may have the kindly touch of love and sympathy? Let us not forget how good the kind Master has been to us and the many blessings He has given us for all these years—and while our home has been kept intact under His kindly blessings, do not forget that little children in other homes have been bereft of father and mother and no friends to take them and give them a home. I plead with you to open your heart in loving sympathy and make an offering that will be some sacrifice to you, and God will bless your effort and your gift.

When you get ready to make the offering in your church, set a goal that will require some sacrifice to reach, and then reach it and see how much joy and happiness it will bring to you.

I was invited to address the 20th Century Baraca Class of the Suffolk, Virginia, church a few Sundays ago, and in my talk told them how badly we needed a furnace in the new building, and how a man who was not a member of our Church had promised to give one thousand dollars, if I would raise the other. In less than ten minutes after I had taken my seat, that class had subscribed the thousand dollars, and all were happy. It always makes us happy to do something worth while. So in your Thanksgiving offering, do your best and be happy.

Our goal this year is $6,000. I AM COUNTING ON YOU TO SEE THAT WE REACH IT. Let your church do its full duty. Keep in mind eighty little orphan children pleading to you for support. Will you turn a deaf ear to their cry?

MISSIONARY MEETING AT CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

On Saturday afternoon, November 12, 1921, Misses Frederick, Johnson and Utley entertained the Junior Missionary Society at their home, the Christian Orphanage.

The parlor had been decorated with lovely potted plants and chrysanthemums for the occasion. The guests were met at the door by the hostesses.

The regular monthly meeting was held, the program being in charge of Miss Ruth Huffman. "China" was the subject for discussion. Mrs. Perkins gave an account of the Missionary Conference held November 10 at Greensboro.

There were fifteen members present, and at the close of the devotional service, Mrs. Weatherspoon invited us into the dining room, where a lovely table had been laid for about twenty. After a delightful luncheon, consisting of hot cocoa, sandwiches, pickles, delicious cake, and punch, was served, the guests went back to the parlor, where music and games were enjoyed.

At six o'clock we bid our hostesses and Mrs. Weatherspoon adieu, declaring it to be one of the best meetings our Society has had the pleasure of enjoying.

MRS. A. F. PERKINS, Supt.,
Junior Missionary Society.

Big turkey dinners and feasting should not be the chief things of Thanksgiving Day. It should be a day of thanksgiving.

THE CALL OF THE WORLD

(From a Lecture by Prof. A. R. Flowers to the Young Men and the Young Women of Harmony High School)

The world is calling in thunderous tones for young men and young women who are accomplished; for young man and young women who think clearly and constructively; for those who are earnest, ambitious and sincere, and want to lift themselves above the dead level of the common, every-day humdrum of life; for those who can translate the altruistic thought of the times into the affairs of life.

There are too many of our young people whose thoughts are running through grooves that are too narrow. They fail to see all sides and take the wisest course. They don't know how to dispel illusions and overcome uncertain impulses. They don't know how to analyze external evidence and make wise deductions. The common sense way is often too coarse-grained, and they will not pursue it. The desire for easy sailing is making too many duty shirkers and moral cowards; into whose care we must soon place the conditions of the future. Your fitness to achieve will be no greater than you believe, and your reward will be proportional to your skill and your effort. Don't be afraid of duty; it broadens and deepens your character. Pack your soul with courage and enter the arena of life to win. Don't lessen your hold because of a few Spartan years. They are blessings in disguise. If you are poor don't compromise with doubts; poverty is capital, if the love of righteousness keeps your soul alive to duty. Empty pockets never made a slacker of Carnegie, Wanamaker, Marshall Field, Edison or Lincoln. Pluck is ashamed of failure, and never compromises because of obstacles.

FROM PORTO RICO

This line is contained in a personal letter from Rev. D. P. Barrett, Ponce, Porto Rico, October 25: "This month's labors here have had splendid results. I believe our Ponce Sunday school will have an average of 200 for the month. If so, this will be the largest in its history. I was in Salinas on the 18th to meet the workers, and they were all very much animated over the prospects. I preached in the evening at Santa Isabel and received into the church four persons after the sermon. We then had the Lord's Supper, and afterwards the business meeting of the church." It may be said that Santa Isabel is one of our most promising points, and we should have built there long since. The Board has decided to build at the earliest possible date—a wise and necessary step, it seems to the writer. Brother Barrett's Ponce Sunday school is exceedingly interesting and full of promise. The Sunday we were there in September there were present 170, and the following Sunday more than that, we learned before leaving the island. It is a fine school and contains material worthy of our best efforts in trying to develop.

NOTICE TO PASTORLESS CHURCHES AND PROBABLE PASTORS

The recent session of the North Carolina Conference through its Home Mission Board asked me to try to bring together churches without pastors and pastors who are available. To this end, I am anxious to make a list of each, and when such a list is made every church without a pastor will be supplied with list of the names and addresses of ministers available and the Sundays they have vacant.

To this end, I crave the help of those who read this. If you know of any Christian church without a pastor, will you send me the address of the secretary? And will every pastor who sees this and who is open for engagement, kindly send me the information and state on what Sundays they are available?

A little help now may secure a pastor the coming year, and will be appreciated. Thank you.

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE BULLETIN

THE DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

The Disarmament Conference now in session at Washington is making satisfactory headway. The Conference assembled on November 12, and Secretary of State Charles E. Hughes was chosen chairman by general consent. The first thing Mr. Hughes did was to bring a great surprise by submitting a ten-year naval holiday. He suggested that the three great naval powers scrap 1,800,000 tons of capital ships and that a replacement period of twenty years be fixed.

Regarding this suggestion we have only one criticism: If we rightly understand the "scrap" idea it is to dismantle the great ships and put them out of commission. It occurs to us that it would be far better to convert these great ships into freight carriers and to use them in moving the commerce of the world.

On November 15 Great Britain, Japan, Italy and France were represented by their spokesmen and said that they were ready to accept the American proposal in spirit and principle, with reservation to suggest modifications. On November 16 China submitted her plans, ten in number, looking to the engagement of powers to respect and preserve territorial integrity. On November 17 a committee of nine agreed upon the general exchange of views in regard to China's proposal.

As a whole the public seems to have confidence in the Conference, and the prediction is that some lasting good will come out of the assembly.

Mrs. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C., lost, on Saturday morning, November 19, between Burlington and Elon College, a letter postmarked Yanceyville, N. C. The letter had not been opened, and Mrs. Harper desires that if any reader of THE SUN sent this letter, to please write her again.

The colored branch of the Christian Church has just completed a handsome edifice of worship in Burlington. The dedication took place last Sunday with all-day services. Drs. J. O. Atkinson and G. O. Lankford, together with THE SUN's scribe, appeared on the program in the afternoon.

We call attention to Secretary Atkinson's article on page 11 concerning pastorless churches. If your church is without a pastor we suggest that you read and heed that message.

Here is wishing every reader of THE SUN a pleasant, joyous and peaceful Thanksgiving.

AN OFFICE WELL FILLED

(Deferred from last week)

We note in the proceedings of the Woman's Conference that Mrs. W. A. Harper retires as secretary of that body. If we are not mistaken, Mrs. Harper has filled this position for nine years. During these nine years she has labored faithfully and efficiently. Her retiring should not go without this mention. She deserves the thanks of the Church for her faithful services.

EMPLOYERS CONSIDER RELATION OF CHURCH TO INDUSTRY

The growing interest of industrial leaders in the effort of the churches to promote better relations in industry was effectively illustrated in a conference of employers held in New York on November 7, at the invitation of the Federal Council's Commission on the Church and Social Service. The conference brought together about seventy employers from various parts of the country, who spent the whole day considering the function of the Church in connection with modern industrial life.

The morning session was devoted to a discussion of the theme: "What are the Christian Principles to be Applied to Industry and what is their Practical Meaning?" There was a general consensus of opinion that, although it is not easy to define just what the function of the Church should be, it must take a constant interest in the human side of every industrial and economic question. The afternoon meeting centered around a discussion of the question: "What can be done to Raise permanently the Wages of the Lowest Paid Workers Relatively to the Cost of Living?" In connection with this topic a widely quoted paper was presented by Professor William F. Ogburn, of Columbia University, formerly Chairman of the Cost of Living Department of the United States War Labor Board.

A MOST GRACIOUS DONATION AND OUR MOUNTAIN SCHOOL

The Sunday school of First church, Norfolk, Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor, sends $500.00 with which to pay for the lot and land on which we are building our Christian Training School at Fancy Gap, Carroll County, Virginia. We have about 17½ acres bought, paid for, and deeded to the Mission Board, Inc., of the Southern Christian Convention. We feel that this will be ample for church and school purposes, and such manual and industrial work as we may in future see fit to put in, and also to furnish fire wood as needed. I express the gratitude of our whole Mission Board to First church, Norfolk, and assure every donor that the money was spent to good purpose and for real Kingdom service. Our new building is being pushed to completion and soon we are going to need funds with which to furnish and equip for use.

Under date of November 4 Miss Emily Midyett, member of Christian Temple, Norfolk, who has gone up to assist Miss Hedgepeth in teaching this winter, writes: "I arrived at Fancy Gap Tuesday, November 1. I find my work very interesting, and the pupils show that they have been well taught. We are looking forward with interest to the completion of our new school building. I shall be able to write you more about the work in future."

Under date of November 7 I have the following from Miss Laura A. Clemmer, Eaton, Ohio, who went as a volunteer to Fancy Gap last summer and gave two months' faithful service among the mountaineers, particularly in Sunday school work: "Dear Dr. Atkinson: Thank you for the check received recently to help pay on my traveling expenses to Fancy Gap, Virginia, last summer, and also for the privilege and opportunity of learning (with but little expense over what it would have cost me at home) that I could do so much work which is a great blessing to me. Am now helping Miss Hedgepeth with a Christmas tree for the field and school in which I worked last summer. I certainly do love the work and hope I may be able to do some such work again next summer. Am putting all the time I can spare on study to be better prepared, as I know now where the points are weakest and the needs greatest. Whether I go or not, please send some one to that field again next summer. You will excuse my enthusiasm, but my heart is in the work, for those mountain people are so worthy."

And under date of October 29, Miss Hedgepeth writes: "You will be interested in knowing that the little Sunday school organized by Misses Clemmer and Langford down between the mountains at the "cabin" is still in progress. The people down there conduct it alone. Their literature gave out, so they just meet anyhow, and those who can join in and read a chapter in the Testament. They all help sing. One lady who reads best selects one chapter and reads aloud to them after the lesson is read. They started at the first of the Testament, taking a chapter each Sunday as the lesson. I am planning to help them give their members a Christmas tree or treat. I must get our folks here started to collecting things—and helping themselves. I have been down and helped them in their Sunday school once. I wish you could meet with them once. It is certainly interesting." This is the school Miss Clemmer writes about—and who knows what will come of it, and the souls that will be won through it, in the years to come? And they must have Sunday school literature.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

A DEVOTIONAL STUDY

The Temptation of Christ—Matthew 4:1-11.

I. THE PURPOSE OF—

Negatively:

1. Not a preparation for His work.
2. Not to see if He would stand fast. Failure was impossible. To postulate that failure was possible would: (a) Show that God's scheme of redemption was contingent—unsettled until after the temptation; (b) Render God guilty of setting up redemption on a basis of possible overthrow; (c) Make void the grace of God.

Positively:

1. To demonstrate the supreme fact that no sin was in Him, and that failure was impossible.
2. To exhibit Him as an object upon which we may rest our faith with unshaken confidence.

II. THE METHOD OF—

Since as Redeemer He sustains a threefold relation: (1) Son of Man; (2) Son of God; (3) Messiah. Each one was made a ground of attack:

1. As Son of Man, he must be tested as to whether His Humanity by the virgin birth was real.
2. As Son of God, He must be tested as to whether He was Divine—as to whether He through presumption would yield to temptation of the spectacular.
3. As Messiah, the devil offers to surrender the whole world on condition of adoption of his methods, thus obviating the necessity of the Cross.

III. THE ISSUE OF—

1. Satan vanquished.
2. Reality of the Incarnation demonstrated.

"A CHRISTIAN'S CHRISTMAS"

There has just been issued a new book, "White Gifts for the King," by Phebe A. Curtiss, containing complete directions and plans for the Christmas service which is used the world around.

This service is described in brief in the words found in the opening paragraph of the "Foreword": "'White Gifts for the King' is a Christmas service. Yes, it is more than that—it is truly a Christian's Christmas. It has as its central thought three gifts—Self, Service, Substance—that stimulate an unselfish spirit of giving. The service conveys an atmosphere of prayer and close communion that stirs the hearts of all. It is entirely appropriate for Christmas because it is entirely Christ-like."

This new, complete book is a revised edition and contains all services issued for the celebration of the White Gifts Christmas. Eight complete programs are given in detail, with Christmas carols and recitations, with exercises and a Christmas play. Complete directions for planning and carrying out the central idea are given. Cuts are given showing how churches have been decorated for such services. There is a very helpful article on the conservation of results, telling how the gifts of self and substance may stimulate and help the growth of the church. This very helpful book, which gives suggestions which will help the Christmas Committee for many years, may be secured through C. B. Riddle, Burlington, N. C. (The book costs $1.00.)

Many Sunday schools are coming to see the great opportunity which Christmas offers for making a real contribution to the work. We are glad that many are making their programs, programs of worship; a service, rather than just an entertainment. Let us plan for our Christmas this year. Let us make it a real "Christian's Christmas" in all of our churches.

ELM AVENUE (PORTSMOUTH) CRADLE ROLL

On November 6, the Elm Avenue Christian Sunday school, of Portsmouth, Va., held its first Cradle Roll rally, which was declared by all present to be a great success. The church was beautifully decorated with fall flowers and ferns. A very sweet and simple program, arranged by the superintendent, with the assistance of some of the ladies of the church, was rendered, as follows:

Song by the choir.

Cradle Roll Catechism, by superintendent and ten children, closed by prayer by a Junior boy.

Song by four little girls.

Recitation, "Little Cradle, Do You Think?"

Song, "Bring the Little Ones to Jesus," by Junior choir.

Solo and chorus, by superintendent and four girls.

Talk by the pastor.

Quartet, Mrs. Baker, Mrs. Haire, Mr. Baker, Mr. Turner.

Presentation of certificates and flowers to the Cradle Roll.

This is a new Cradle Roll in a new church, and already has a membership of fifty-three babies, five having been promoted to the Beginners' class during the past month. This Cradle Roll is doing much for the advancement of the Sunday school, and the superintendent, Mrs. Haire, is receiving much praise for her untiring efforts for the little people.

Miss Verna Pinckard, of Roanoke, Ala., writes that a Christian Endeavor Society has been organized at the Mt. Zion Christian church, near Roanoke, and that the young people of the community are manifesting much interest in the Society. Miss Pinckard is the secretary of the Rock Stand Christian Endeavor Society, organized only a few months ago, which is doing a splendid work, and already the influence of that Society has spread to Mt. Zion.

The Field Secretary spent Sunday, November 13, in Portsmouth, Va., visiting the First Christian Sunday school and church in the morning, and the Elm Avenue Christian Endeavor Society and church service in the evening. At both places were found workers active and interested, and progressive work was very evident. Both of these churches have new pastors this fall, and they are looking forward to a larger work and even greater usefulness.

MONDAY CLUB SERMONS

THE SUN office this year is in position to furnish the Monday Club Sermons for 1922. For forty-six years this annual volume has maintained its place as a commentary on the International Sunday school lessons. Its particular value lies in its unique analysis of the lessons afforded the higher or adult classes. The price is $2.00 delivered.

CHURCH NEWS

WINCHESTER, VA.

The pastor is absent from the church at this writing, and is assisting as song leader in the revival services now being held in Burlington, N. C. Dr. G. O. Lankford, Pastor, is doing the preaching. Meanwhile, good reports have come from the Winchester Christian church of a fine prayer meeting conducted by Mrs. Boyd R. Richards last Wednesday night. Mr. Luttrell, of the local U. B. church, a young man of promise, preached to good acceptance to the congregation Sunday morning, November 6, supplying the pulpit during the absence of the pastor; Mr. Fred Wilson, Field Secretary of All-South C. E., delivered a great address on Young People's work at the evening hour to a fine audience, representing the Christian Endeavor Societies of the community. The Scout Orchestra, of the city, with inspiring music, enriched the service to the enjoyment of the congregation.

C. A. MCDANIEL, Pastor.
November 11.

GREENSBORO, PALM STREET

We began the second series of revival meetings at Palm street, Greensboro, the fourth Sunday in October. I preached at both services Sunday. Rev. J. Lee Johnson, Fuquay Springs, N. C., came on Monday and preached throughout the meeting. Brother Johnson's messages were strong, forcible, and spoken in the language of the Bible. He is one of the best Bible preachers I have ever heard. Among his sermons were two that struck me with such power that I have been unable to shake them off. They are: The Seven Sayings of Christ on the Cross, and the Return of our Lord. These two are the best I have ever heard on these subjects.

The result of the meeting was not what we had hoped for on account of the Baptist revival running in conflict with ours. There was visible only one profession of faith in Christ, and a number reclaimed. The church, as a whole, was wonderfully revived. Brother Johnson was at his best both in preaching and in winning a warm friendship in the hearts of the people of Greensboro. Many expressed their appreciation of having him in their home. On account of my being in school, I was unable to be with him very much and take him into all the homes and show him the bountiful table our people set for a preacher.

We went to and fro at night, doing our school work during the day and attending the services at night. This indeed was very hard on us, but we held up under it.

This is the second revival the church has had this year, and both have done much good. The church is coming out from the background and showing signs of great work. This has been a great year for both pastor and people. We have enjoyed the work fine. May our heavenly Father bless and prosper our good brother who labored so faithfully with us.

NEW HOPE AND FRANKLINTON

Fifth Sunday we were with the good people of New Hope. The occasion was the funeral of Brother Nathaniel Oldham, who passed away some months since. I visited him a short time before his death, and he told me he was ready.

The congregation was large and the attention marked. This church has had two fine meetings in the last few months.

At night we preached at Franklinton. Notwithstanding the rainfall, we had a large congregation. The membership here is small, but very courageous. The basement of this church is fine, and will seat several hundred. I think it would be a very worthy deed if some of our substantial brethren would help this dear little band with a nice check to finish the church building, and how it would make their hearts leap with joy! Please do not forget this little band of God's dear children. They have made a brave effort in going forward with their church building. God bless them.

SOLEMN VOWS

PRITCHARD-NORWOOD

Mr. Thomas B. Pritchard and Miss Nettie Norwood were happily married at the Chapel Hill Christian parsonage on Saturday evening, October 29, 1921. They went immediately to their new home on West Cameron Avenue.

The groom holds a responsible position with the University here. A large circle of friends extend greetings and best wishes to this young couple.

WASHBURN-COX

The home of Mrs. L. I. Cox, Elon College, N. C., was the scene of a quiet and beautiful marriage November 2, 1921, when her daughter, Alta, became the bride of James C. Washburn, of Danville, Va. The parlor was tastefully decorated with ferns, roses, and chrysanthemums. Miss Annie Graham Lawrence rendered the wedding march and other music. Only a few relatives and special friends were present. The ceremony was performed by the writer.

The bride is a daughter of the late Rev. L. I. Cox, and was educated at Elon College. The groom is the son of James W. Washburn, of Stella, Va., and holds a position with the Southern Railway. They left at once for a bridal tour to northern cities. May their wedded life be rich with blessing and honor.

We wish for them a most happy, prosperous, and successful life.

CALLED HOME

BURROUGHS.—James Madison Burroughs was born September 13, 1852, at "Hickory Grove," Warren County, North Carolina, and passed to his heavenly home from his earthly home at Warrenton, N. C., September 28, 1921. He was married to Sarah A. Wright, February 1, 1879, and to this union were given five children,—Pauline W., William H., Mary R., Sue P., and Stephen E.

In 1875 he joined Mt. Auburn Christian church, Warren County, and remained one of its most loyal and devoted members till he was translated to the church triumphant. He was made a deacon in 1890, and no one ever filled the office with more piety, faithfulness and becoming humility. December, 1911, he moved to Warrenton, and after that could not attend services at his home church as in former days, but his heart's love was ever with the church of his active manhood. He was very active in church, Sunday school and public school work. He was three times elected County Commissioner, and was a member of the Board at the time of his demise.

His first wife having died some years before, he was married, on November 10, 1915, to Elvira P. Wright, who survives him. This writer was never in a home where Christian fellowship more completely pervaded all the domestic and filial relationships. No kinder husband and father, no gentler spirit no more amiable and unselfish neighbor and friend, has the writer ever known. His death, from acute indigestion, was unexpected, and a shock to family and friends, but it found him not unprepared. He had been true and faithful to God and to every trust in life, and in death he was not without comfort, satisfaction and assurance.

The funeral was conducted by Dr. J. T. Gibbs, of the M. E. Church, assisted by Dr. T. J. Taylor, of the Baptist, and Rev. E. W. Baxter, of the Episcopal Church, and the interment was in Fair View Cemetery, Warrenton. "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?" (II Sam. 3:38.)

J. O. ATKINSON.

BLAND.—Her neighbors and a host of friends throughout many parts of the state were shocked to learn of the almost sudden death of Mrs. T. M. Bland, Pittsboro, N. C., on the morning of November 3, 1921. She was 64 years of age, and leaves a devoted husband, three sons, and five daughters.

To know Mrs. Bland was to observe unusual attainments in Christian character building. It was an inspiration to visit the home in her lifetime. There was a distinct blessedness in the prosperity and peace and joy of the home that could be attributed to none other than the influence of that Christian wife and mother. Those who knew her best say that her chief desire was to make others happy, and it is needless to say that she was successful.

She had been a member of Gum Springs Baptist church for about fifty years. It was to that place the long procession moved last Friday, and with her sons and brothers acting as pallbearers, a little mound was made and completely covered with choicest floral offerings.

The writer was assisted in funeral services by Rev. W. B. Waff, Baptist, Pittsboro, and Rev. G. W. Perry, M. E. Church, Carthage, N. C.

B. J. HOWARD.

AVENT.—After several weeks of suffering, Mrs. W. M. Avent departed this life on October 25, 1921, at the age of 67 years, nine months and one day. She leaves an aged husband and two daughters, several other children having preceded her to the spirit world.

Moore Union Christian church, of which she had been a faithful member for several years, and the entire community in which she lived, keenly feel the loss of this good woman. The writer, whose life has been richly blessed by her warm, mother-like friendship from his childhood, conducted the funeral service from her church on the day following her death. The Lord comfort us.

B. J. HOWARD.

ALESHIRE.—Mr. S. P. Aleshire, whose home was near Stanley, Va., died November 8, 1921. He was 62 years, seven months and 16 days old. Although the deceased had been in poor health for some time, he had not been seriously ill but about two weeks. He is survived by his wife (who has been a helpless paralytic for several years), two sons, three daughters, and 12 grandchildren.

Brother Aleshire was a member of New Port Christian church, and had lived a consistent Christian life for 42 years. He was faithful to his invalid wife, to his children, to his neighbors, to his church, and to his Lord Christ.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer, November 11, 1921, at Leak's Chapel Church of the Brethren, and his body was laid to rest in the cemetery nearby.

May our Heavenly Father be very merciful to the sorely afflicted widow and to the other members of the family.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

PALMER.—Mr. Cooper Palmer, son of Mr. and Mrs. Lemuel Palmer, died at the home of his brother, J. J. Palmer, near Carbonton, N. C., November 9, 1921, at the age of 69 years, three months and 10 days. He will be missed by his many friends he leaves to mourn their loss, one brother, and a host of relatives and friends. His remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery at Carbonton. Peace be unto his ashes.

A FRIEND.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—HUBER Union Christian Church Missionary Society, Surry County, Va.

Whereas, God in His infinite wisdom and mercy has seen fit to remove from our missionary band our beloved leader and friend, Mrs. John L. Huber, on October 18, 1921, and while we bow in humble submission to his divine will, we feel our great need of help from on high to carry on the work she was so faithful in. Be it resolved—

First: That our Society has sustained the loss of a faithful, consecrated Christian worker who was always glad to be of service to the Kingdom.

Second: That the removal of such a useful life from our midst will leave a vacancy hard to fill.

Third: That we as a band of Christian workers try to emulate her example and be more faithful in the future than we have been in the past.

Fourth: That a copy of these resolutions be entered on our record, a copy be sent to the family, to whom we extend our heartfelt sympathy, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication.

Lovingly submitted,

MRS. GARLAND C. SPATLEY,

ELON STUDENTS HONOR HEROES ON ARMISTICE DAY

Memorial services in honor of Elou's heroes in the world war were fittingly observed by the Elon students on Armistice Day. At 9 o'clock in the morning the entire student body assembled in the college chapel to engage in a service of thanksgiving for those who were permitted by divine Providence to live through the war, and to pay homage to the brave lads who gave their all for America and for a righteous cause.

Dr. N. G. Newman offered up a prayer of thanksgiving and plead for the success of the Limitation of Arms Conference at Washington. Short talks were made by President W. A. Harper and Coach Corboy, who was athletic officer for the 109th infantry of the 28th division in France. Assistant Chaplain A. C. Thompson, of the A. E. F., related some of his experiences in France, and told of the great influence that mothers' love had in preserving the morals of the American boys "over there." Following the speeches Miss Florence Fisher sang beautifully the French and the American national anthems.

Many of the ex-soldiers and sailors in the student body appeared in uniform for the occasion, and these were given seats of honor on the rostrum. giveu seats of honor on the rostrum.—Maroon and Gold.

THE EDITOR

HE Church has pioneered her way despite the things that have attempted to check her progress. She has found her way to the hilltops of every State; she has winged her way across the seas and become a lamp to the feet of millions who once wandered in darkness; she has preceded commerce and opened up new trade routes for increasing world industry; she has piloted millions across the "unknown border" and lifted from the muck and mire the unguided feet of countless multitudes. She is the unassuming and unselfish organization that sets a world-example for right dealing, right living and common honesty. The gates of hell cannot prevail against her; the devil and his legions of angels cannot stop her forward march or mar her mantle. She is here to spread the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth and to preach the glad tidings to all nations.

EDITORIAL OBSERVATIONS

THE Conferences are now over and both pastors and people are thinking in terms of what the coming year will mean. The Conference year just closed was not satisfying to a great many of us. A year of discouragement; a year of back-sets and "blue days" as we sometimes hear. Every cloud has its silver lining, and there is a joy to match every discouragement, if we set our faces to find that joy. The last Conference this year has passed. It behooves every church and every pastor to forget any discouragements of that year and turn energies, aspirations, and deliberations toward brightening the future. No day or year is typical of God's providence. It takes more than a day or a year for Divine Providence to work out its great program. We cannot compare our work, or the work of a Church, by the result of one year. Onward should be our slogan—forward should be our marching command.

All of us rejoice because of so many young men in preparation for the ministry this year. It was our privilege some weeks ago to address the ministerial students at Elon, and our opinion is that it is the finest and most forward-looking body of young men that has been at the College in recent years. They are healthy, have a degree of intelligence above the average first year men; and to us, give promise of great usefulness for the Kingdom.

The world believes in prayer. We believe that every individual believes in prayer. You will find those who will not so confess; but we believe there is an hour in the life of every individual when the prayer life is recognized and believed in. Not in six years of reading of many exchanges have we seen so many calls and appeals for prayer in behalf of the Disarmament Conference now in session at the nation's capitol. There is going up from millions of pulpits and many, many millions of individual hearts a prayer that the Conference may be the beginning of the world's greatest era—an era of good will, fellowship, and brotherly love.

Speaking of the Conference on Disarmament reminds us that there is not much progress in any line of work where there is no co-operation and confidence. Men with money invested in the same business must co-operate and have confidence in each other if their business is to succeed. A nation must have officials and different departments of government that co-operate and confide if that nation is to do its best work and exercise its best judgment in behalf of its citizens. Nations must co-operate and confide in each other if they are to bring about a condition for the benefit of humanity the world over. France cannot, and will not, beat her war implements into tools of industry if she distrusts England. We cannot limit our own extravagant expenditures for the things that destroy men, blight homes, and multiply graves, if we do not see China in the light of a brother. Japan, if she sees only her interests and confines a real freedom to the limitations of her own map, will never bring emancipation for her people from the cruelties of war. We had a world war and now we must have a world agreement, and world confidence, and a spirit for humanity that is world-wide.

The other day we were in conference with two editors of religious journals. They are our seniors by several years—seniors in age and years of service. They said that they had carefully studied with others the problem of the Church paper. These two editors declared that they had reached the conclusion that every denomination would have to provide a fund to place the Church paper into every home. One of these editors stated cases where pastors had, of their own means, sent the Church paper into the homes of their membership, and in every case the pastor's salary had been increased about ten times the amount spent for subscriptions. We are firmly of the opinion that the denomination that would undertake to put its papers into every home would receive enough in finances alone to many times pay the cost of these subscriptions. Not every home will be appreciative of the Church paper; and it may go into many homes for months without being recognized. But some occasion, or some article, will be the beginning of interest in the Church paper. It is a process of education that cannot be carried out in a day.

Speaking of putting the Church paper into every home brings up a big question that some near future session of the Southern Christian Convention will have to consider. We get alarmed at times because of the lack of knowledge of our people of the workings of our Church. This very thing exists in every denomination and it cannot be overcome until the people read. It is easy to suppose and easy to think that every church member should read the Church paper. It is easy to suppose that it is for these members to read their Church paper. We must remember that there was a time when those of us who now take great delight in the Church paper had no interest in it. It is not good business to censure those who do not read, but it is good business to bring about some method whereby they may become interested in reading. The Convention will have to realize and see that THE CHRISTIAN SUN goes into every home. The interest of a Church people depends upon their knowledge of their Church, and their knowledge depends upon their reading.

Last week President Harper wrote on Bolshevism, and this week he continues that discussion. We commend his viewpoint. He is right. We cannot win men by suppressing them; we cannot enlist their cooperation by avoiding them. Likewise the Church cannot enlist its every member for work until an interest has been manifested in the individual member. There is a job for every member, and if every member does not get that job, the fault lies in somebody's organization. Where our interest is, there will our heart be; and where we invest our money and time, there will our treasure be.

Officials of the Men and Millions Forward Movement are now endeavoring to co-operate with pastors and churches looking toward better collections of the subscriptions made to the Movement. It is known and understood that financial conditions during the past several months have prevented many from meeting their pledge. But such a condition should be no excuse if God gives us time to live, health to enjoy, and strength with which to work. We should remember these pledges as being solemn and sacred, and meet every dollar that we have pledged. The pledges were, and are, for the Kingdom's advancement; and we need to consider these obligations in a very solemn and serious manner. Let us not forget, for God has not forsaken us.

A good pastor looked across the desk at us the other day and asked this question: "Why should a pastor have to report the amount of his salary to his Conference?" It is a question worth considering. The amount of his salary is a personal affair so long as it is fixed and agreed upon by him and the church, or churches, which he serves. In considering this question, we ought to find out what good is accomplished by reporting the salary. Each church reports what it pays for pastoral labors, and so why should a pastor have to make the same report. The columns of THE SUN are open for discussion.

Speaking of questions—the members of the North Carolina Conference are deeply interested in the three questions now being considered in regard to the Conference's territory. In last week's issue of THE SUN the three questions were stated. This is to announce that THE SUN's columns are open for discussion concerning the three items to be voted upon. It is taken for granted that those who may discuss these questions will do so constructively, and on the merits of the questions. It is needless to drag into these discussions what has been done, or any personal opinions or feelings. Such is not the spirit of our beloved Church. Let the past be past. The future is our problem and the Kingdom is our interest. Let us keep these two things in mind as we write—and here is an unlimited invitation in behalf of THE SUN for whoever will to discuss whether or not we should have one, two, or three, Conferences embracing the churches in North Carolina.

Some one has raised the question whether THE CHRISTIAN SUN is maintaining its number of subscribers at the rate of $2.50 the year against the old rate of $2.00. We are glad to answer this: THE SUN is sending out 150 more copies per week than it was when the price went from $1.50 to $2.00 the week. The circulation has not decreased under the $2.50 rate. There are more subscribers in arrears now than in former years, but being behind with THE SUN is not the only thing they are behind with. They are behind with the local church offerings, personal accounts, and many other things. But they will pay if given a chance, and that is sure. And this is not all about THE SUN: THE SUN is not meeting expenses at $2.50 the year. We know of no paper that is doing it.

We note this in President Harper's article this week: "What we must have is the facts—all the facts just as they are." Read his further comment about having everything open and above board. We add this: We have reached the conclusion that the Church should publish the facts about its every department. Our College, the Mission Boards, the Orphanage, THE SUN, and all of the various enterprises of the Church should give their financial exhibits in THE SUN. THE SUN expects to do so at an early date, unless opposed by the Board of Publication. The Orphanage publishes every week its income and renders an annual report of its expenses. The College has agreed to publish its financial standing in a near issue of THE SUN. We ought to know what is invested in the various places where we are placing our mission funds. Such statements will help and do good—much good. A few critics of the "moss back" type will use them as a lever to lift something, but the Church has never gone forward by such fellows.

Christmas is near at hand. It is significant that each Christmas the spirit of the occasion grows greater. There is no lessening of interest in the great event. No human being has ever immortalized a season like Christ has the Christmas season. Christ was a man and more than a man. His birth was the beginning of the world's greatest era. The era has been marked and marred, but not by the Christ spirit and the Christ program. Weak humanity has not always kept the banner lifted high enough. But each year we come to celebrate His birth and get a new hold on Him. The wheels of industry are now beginning to hum and to avoid the holiday rush, every office and every store is being touched with the Christmas spirit, the mails are being burdened, and children are counting the days till December 25. As we write Christmas let us write it Christmas and not Xmas. Put not the X in the place of Christ.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part VI.

HURSDAY, September 22.—I lunched today at a Spanish-speaking restaurant, meaning by that that the restaurant as well as the waiters speak Spanish, and do it in garlic. Some time when I have nothing else to do I want to read a reliable history of Spain and see if it anywhere explains why her colonies flavor everything they serve, except coffee, with garlic. I will put it down as a guess that every native restaurant in Porto Rico savors of garlic. But a Roman philosopher said centuries ago, Non disputandum de gustibus (which in English means, "There is no dispute or discussion about one's taste.") So I will not dispute with the Spaniard about his love for garlic, and will let him keep on eating it, if he will give me time to get out before he begins. For lunch I ate some fish fried in butter, and then had some good bread and butter and a delightful demitasse.

I have seen today, in mixing around, very few white people. They have married and intermarried in Porto Rico, until the race is mixed and the type is mongrel. I am told that between fifty and sixty per cent are whites, mostly "high class Spaniards," and all the rest are mixed. They go to school and church together, and seem to have no color or class distinction; i. e., the latter forty to fifty per cent.

Houses attract me. Some of them are beautiful, built as they are of brick covered with plaster or cement. And they are so open and airy. Have not seen a chimney to a house anywhere, and Barrett says I will not see any on the island. They cook on open stoves with charcoal and let the smoke, what there is, take care of itself; or they use oil or gas stoves. Most people, in the country especially, cook out of doors, under a friendly shade tree, or a thatched shed. Fact is, fruits are so abundant and wood so scarce they do not have to cook as much as we do in the "States." And it never gets cool enough to need a fire to warm by.

I have seen today many naked children, two to three years old. They do not need any clothing and are possibly better off without any. They call to my mind Job 1:21, and in turn I wish for them the same patience good Job had.

Most things you want to buy here are higher than in the States, for the plain reason that they are brought here from the States. They do not grow apples or grapes here, neither peaches nor pears. But bananas are abundant and sell from eight to ten cents the dozen; coconuts from two to four cents each. Oranges can be had two for a penny, and other tropical fruits accordingly. I had thought to find a very superior sweet potato here, as one of our best species is called "Porto Rican Yams." Well, we have improved the breed since we got it from the island, and no sort of Porto Rican potato is equal to our Yams or Nancy Halls.

I saw a man going through the streets and into the shops and houses on the sidewalk, with one chicken in his hand, and yelling out something about "Henna" at the top of his voice. And it did not look like a hen at all. Barrett informed me that "Henna" meant chicken, and that the man had come to town to market his chicken. This was his entire offering of the day. Maybe in a week or a month he would come back to market and sell another "Henna." That is to say, the time element does not count here as with us. What is the use of bringing two chickens or two pigs to market the same day, or on the same load, when you have at your disposal a plenty of other days to bring the other one? One sees very many people here on the street, or along the roads, or in the restaurants, "helping John." (I remember years ago running up with an old acquaintance and asking him what he was doing now. He replied that he was helping John. Then I asked what John was doing, and he said, "Oh, nothing.")

I have been resting at my hotel for an hour and a half, while I slept gloriously and wrote in my "Diary" the scenes and impressions since leaving Morro Castle with its spooks and "hants" just before noon.

At 2:30 we went to the Evangelical Lutheran church, but could not get in. This church, a good edifice, is built near the ocean's edge, and is certainly in a section of San Juan that needs a church. My! what miserable huts and shacks the people do live in along the beach here!

We then went to call on Rev. Manuel Andujar, of the M. E. church. He is an intelligent Spaniard and is in charge of the M. E. Mission. He came here in 1900 and has been here ever since—has worked away at winning Porto Ricans to Christ through the Methodist Episcopal Church all these years and is now in charge. He says that the Methodists, the Baptists and the Lutherans cannot unite, and he does not favor overmuch co-operation. He believes in the Union Theological Seminary, but not in the union religious paper that all the denominations in Porto Rico are trying to edit and circulate jointly. He believes in dividing up the territory in which each denomination is to work, but he thinks a Methodist should be a Methodist, and a Christian should be a Christian, and each be on his own job of building up his own denomination. He says the Methodists have five missionaries on the island, but only one of them in the pastorate. Two are superintendents of districts; one is a teacher in the Union Seminary; and one (himself) is superintendent of the whole Methodist work in the island. They have fifteen native ordained pastors and have six unordained attending the Theological Seminary now at a cost of $200 a year each. They have thirty-one native workers in all, deacons, exhorters and so forth. The Methodists used to have thirteen missionaries, but now only five, and do not need any more, since the natives must do the work of preaching and winning their fellows to Christ. Missionaries should only superintend and direct the native work and workers. "The principal work of preaching must be done by the natives," declared this brother of ideas and a Spanish, as well as an American, tongue. He declared further, "There are not too many evangelical denominations here. We need all we have, and all that each can do."

Thank you, Brother Andujar. I may never tell you so to your face, but will now put you down in my diary as a man of ideas and convictions which you enjoy expressing. I have met a great many of your kind in life—and you are refreshing.

From the parsonage we went to call on Dr. McAlister, of the Seminary faculty. Dr. McAlister was not at home, and this gave Mrs. McAlister time, and us the opportunity, to talk about the different kinds of trees in her yard—or on any other well kept Porto Rican lawn. I found the following trees in the small area of, say, forty by eighty feet, growing happily together: Hibiscus, with a large red blossom on a green bush. (The blossom was five inches across.) Pau—a tree fifteen feet high, evergreen and vigorous, with a very fragrant blossom; Limes, a tree with deep green foliage; Alligator pear tree; Banana, Orange, Tamarind, Guava, Almond, Bread Tree (has a nutritious nut and tastes like good sure enough bread); Gooseberry tree; Coconut tree; Jobo (pronounced in English "hobo") and has an orange size fruit that they make jelly of, and sauce; Flamboyant tree (the most beautiful of all, with blazing red blossoms which burst forth as the leaves are shed—hence the name, "flamboyant"—which is the Spanish for "blaze of fire") and then I became intoxicated in a revelry of colors, borrowed a box of Mrs. McAlister, gathered leaves from a few of the trees and mailed them home to Mrs. Atkinson, meanwhile thinking of Revelation 22:2, "and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." I could not believe till I saw it in this yard today, that the leaves on the trees could have, and did have, as many colors, and as varied, as the roses have in our flower gardens at home. I will put it down here in my diary before I forget it, that the leaves on tropical trees and shrubbery are far more beautiful and varied in color than any and all the blossoms we have in our gardens and hot houses in the States. The Master Artist was certainly lavish with color when He created and painted Porto Rico.

At supper tonight I ate Arron-Con-Pollo (pronounced Polyo) a part of which, Barrett says, means chicken, another part means rice, and the other part, a mixture of the two with pimento. I negotiate the proposition in fine shape, adding to it some bread, butter, and a demitasse (another name for coffee in a small way) and after a visit to the plaza and a pleasant evening, reach my room at 10 p. m. My! how I welcome my pillow and couch! For in this, my first whole day on the island, I have seen, heard, smelled, tasted and felt enough to set my head in a veritable whirl. Come on, sweet sleep, and make me forget, or I will weep aloud at my own woeful ignorance. I am ignorant, untaught, unlearned, untutored, in a world of mystery, majesty, knowledge and wonder. And I am reminded again of good old Job, "I would seek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cause, Who doeth great things and unsearchable; marvelous things without number" (Job 5:8, 9).

IN THE SUNNY SOUTH

WE are enroute home after a week's delightful visit in the South, where it was our privilege to speak on our Foreign Mission work at Greensboro, Elon College, Graham, Shallow Ford, and Burlington, all in North Carolina, and at Danville, Virginia.

Personally the trip has been of more than ordinary helpfulness in that it has served to widen the circle of acquaintances in the South and has given me a far keener appreciation of the scope and effectiveness of the work being done there. One simply cannot be a stranger in such homes as those of Rev. and Mrs. H. R. Clem, of Greensboro; Dr. and Mrs. Harper, Dr. and Mrs. Atkinson, and Mrs. Kirkland, of Elon. Their fine hospitality and the fellowship of a host of old and new acquaintances in whose homes time forbade a visit made the trip one of unceasing pleasure.

We gave the lantern lecture on Japan five different times, on four of which we used the Elon College lantern—the best we have ever used—and which we learned later was put together by Prof. A. L. Hook, who gave so freely of his time in operating it for us. At Danville, through the kindness of a Mr. Pierce, we secured the Y. M. C. A. lantern and the splendid help of Brother Earp, the pastor, made the work here a joy.

The visit to Greensboro was occasioned by the Annual Conference of the North Carolina Woman's Missionary organization, and the earnestness and dispatch with which they did their work under the capable leadership of Mrs. W. H. Carroll, of Burlington, was evidenced by the reports of the year just passed and the forward-looking plans of the year ahead. A still closer co-ordination of the work of our women both north and south will make even more effective their already fine work for the Kingdom.

On Armistice Day we rooted for Elon at the Elon-Guilford College football game, but in spite of our efforts it resulted in a score of 0 to 0 (in favor of Elon, however).

Friday evening we spoke to a good audience at Shallow Ford, near Elon. We shall not soon forget the stirring, whole-hearted singing we heard there.

On Saturday afternoon we visited the Graham church, where another splendid audience greeted us, to see the slides on Japan. Brother Riddle, the editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, whom we had the long-looked-for pleasure of meeting for the first time at Burlington, is supply pastor of the two churches in Graham till January 1, if we mistake not, in addition to his other heavy duties.

Besides the lantern lecture at Elon on Sunday night it was our privilege to preach there in the morning and conduct chapel Saturday and Monday. We also met the life recruits and student volunteers in groups and in personal conferences. We were surprised to learn that the former enrolls something over thirty, as we recall, and that eleven of Elon's present student body are definitely pledged to foreign service. As I met these fine, consecrated young people, most of whom belong to us, I could not help wondering if our Church would sense the great opportunity before her now and if she would respond in such a way as to make it possible, in due time, for every one of these young people, as well as those in training elsewhere, to go out and give their lives to the service to which they have dedicated themselves. Elon is producing leaders in a convincing manner. Surely our Church faces a great day in its mission work, if we are quick enough to grasp it.

One evening was spent with Dr. G. O. Lankford and his people at Burlington, where the next session of the American Christian Convention is to be held. They certainly meant business when they invited the Convention, and they are not waiting until the last minute to get ready for it. They are thinking and planning right now for a big Convention. They want it to be the biggest and the best and you can depend upon it they will leave nothing undone to that end. Make your plans now to go to Burlington in October, 1922. You will find as fine a church building and as faithful a pastor and church people as you could wish to see.

We attended only the first day's session of the North Carolina Conference, held at Danville, Va., where we spoke twice to splendid audiences representative of the various churches.

Wherever we went we were more and more impressed with the steady growth of the missionary spirit of our people in the South. Dr. Atkinson's splendid leadership of an increasing number of missionary workers in all departments is resulting in accomplishments undreamed of a few years ago. And the work seems only begun, with a future as "bright as the promises of God."

It was indeed a great trip and opened our eyes to the scope of our work as a Church and to the great possibilities for larger things in the future. With the whole work of our Church, North, South, East and West, more thoroughly co-ordinated, along the lines that the leaders in these various sections are now working, we have every reason to believe that the years just ahead will continue to show marked progress.

ELON LETTER

HE positive remedies for Bolshevism, which we have previously defined as a rabid application of class spirit, are fourfold, it seems to me, looking, however, to a unity of source.

First, we need a frank admission that the cure must be slow. No revolutionary remedy can heal the soul-sickness of the social order to which we give this shuddering name. Bolshevism did not arrive over-night. It grew and grew and grew, as men, oppressed and imposed upon, nursed their injuries until they flared forth in howling resentment. Guns and bullets and prison houses will not cure the evil. Education in the principles of Brotherhood as Jesus taught and lived them is the fundamental cure for radicalism of every character. The Church, through its pulpit, its Sunday school, its other organizations and literature, must fearlessly, constructively, persistently, teach the doctrine of Brotherhood. Voluntary groups of public spirited citizens must bring together for open forum discussions and other forms of community consideration persons of every viewpoint and infuse all with the spirit of fraternity, fellowship, brotherliness, love. This cannot be done over-night. It cannot be done in a year, but it can be done, and a Christ-led community must do it.

Second, all the facts must be known. The press must be made free. Newspapers, through the coloring of news, through omission of facts as well as through deliberate misrepresentation, do injustice to the radicals. We know in North Carolina what happened when Kingsbury sold The Morning Star of Wilmington to a capitalistic group, and when "Marse" Henry Watterson sold the famous Louisville paper to a multi-millionaire. We know, too, what the Inter-Church discovered relative to the servile press of Pittsburgh. What we must have are the facts—all the facts, just as they are. I am persuaded that nothing would aid more right now in giving us a speedy relief from the suspicions we have with reference to organized labor and capital than for all newspapers for thirty days to print the things that actually happen without color or comment. So long as the facts are concealed in any direction, we shall have radicalism and ought to have.

Third, a frank statement of willingness to pay the price of growth. The boy in his teens lays aside his short trousers and dons long ones, at what might be to his meagre resources a great sacrifice. He pays the price, as the legitimate expense of growing. The social order, too, must bear the expense of progress. Secretary Hughes proposes to junk warships costing billions. But what Christian objects? Restlessness is a sign of progress, the evidence of growing pains. Travail accompanies every new birth. What we need is optimistic approach, sympathetic understanding, wise direction of the moving, trekking masses of mankind at this time. Whether the discontent of these days shall lead to Palestine or to the wilderness depends on whether we shall heed the voice and counsel of Caleb and Joshua or of the grasshopper pessimists who signed the majority report. God grant us leaders of vision, of sympathy, of courage, of love and faith and hope, who shall lead us in the pathway of righteousness, because they see the promise of the hour and recognize the necessity of paying the price of progress!

And, finally, we need to be brave to say that brotherhood requires certain restraints and controls. Liberty is not license. I cannot do as I would like. I cannot, even as a Christian, do as I would wish others to do to me. That is the law and the prophets. As Christians we are to love one another as Jesus loved His disciples and loves us, even to the point of giving our lives for our brethren. We must say this to radicalism and must say it in the spirit of Christ.

What, then is the cure for Bolshevism but the gospel of Jesus earnestly preached, completely taught, and faithfully lived? The Christian gospel is the unity of source for its cure—the gospel only.

W. A. HARPER.

SUFFOLK LETTER

THREE prominent Christian citizens have recently passed away from labor to reward, and I must pay pen-tribute to their memory. The first was Robert Augustus Hyslop, of Norfolk, Va. He was born in Norfolk County, September 5, 1850, and died, after nearly five years of creeping paralysis, on October 22, 1921. He married Miss Alice E. Halstead September 23, 1869, and they had already passed their golden wedding. They had four daughters. Mattie married Mordaunt Etheredge and they have two children, Robert Hyslop and Mary Mordaunt. Alice married J. J. Dunbar. Bobbie married Ralph Eberley and they have two children, Alice Earl and Ralph. Mamie resides with her mother.

His father, John W. Hyslop, was a deacon in old Providence Christian church, where Robert joined the church early in life; and he was ordained a deacon in his father's place by Rev. H. H. Butler. After changed conditions closed Providence church he united with Memorial Temple.

For a man of his great energy and prosperity, he was remarkably patient under affliction, and left a good home, a good name, and a host of good friends. Funeral services were conducted from the residence October 24 by Rev. Dr. L. E. Smith, assisted by Revs. H. H. Butler and W. W. Staley. Mrs. Jarvis and Mrs. Dixon sang two beautiful songs, and thus closed the earthly career of a successful life.

In Windsor, Va., on November 3, 1921, the life of Mills Leroy Watkins closed upon earth to begin in heaven. He was born July 27, 1842, and was in his 80th year. He married Louisiana Pierce, January 18, 1866, nearly 56 years ago. Their family consisted of eight children and nine grandchildren. The children are: Jesse L., Herbert, deceased, leaves a widow and two children; infant, deceased; Floyd; Mrs. Dr. Roby (Mai); Ocie, deceased; Mrs. Rhodes (Garry), and Clyde. He is survived by Mrs. Watkins, five children and nine grandchildren. His father and a Mr. Ashburn were among the first, if not the first settlers of the town, even before the N. and W. Railroad was built.

Brother Watkins has been identified with the Christian Church for more than half a century, taking an active part in the work of the local church, attending annual Conferences, and always interested in general enterprises. He was educated at Graham Institute before the Civil War and had a large acquaintance with the leaders of the Church in the South. His manner was quiet, his feelings were modest, his faith was strong, and his patience had its perfect work. His last year was one of gradual decline in strength until the end came like the close of a quiet day.

The funeral services were conducted from the Windsor church by this writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Foushee, pastor of the Methodist church, and Rev. W. M. Jay, pastor of Holy Neck Christian church. The church was crowded, and Windsor buried a good citizen, a good Christian, and a good husband and father. He was a good Mason and was buried with Masonic honors.

Deacon John Zachary Yates was born August 4, 1848, and fell on sleep November 12, 1921, in his 74th year. He married Miss Alice Harden, of Graham, N. C., July 14, 1874. They had nine children, seven of whom are living: Lney, Mrs. Anderson; W. H.; Z. Taylor.; Minnie, Mrs. J. C. Philhower; Richard Staley; Ora, Mrs. D. F. Barnett; Gattis R. Mrs. Anderson lives in Norfolk, Z. Haylor in Albany, Ga., Gattis R. in Dothan, Ala., and the others in Suffolk. There are fourteen living grandchildren. Mr. Yates was reared on a farm in Southampton County, Virginia, bought a farm near Bethlehem Christian church, and became a deacon in that church. I was pastor of that church for four years during my first years in Suffolk. About twenty-four years ago he bought the house in Suffolk once owned by Rev. E. W. Beale, and transferred his membership to Suffolk, and has been a faithful deacon in this congregation for nearly a quarter of a century. His children are all members of the Suffolk Christian church, and his wife has always been true to the church as well as to her family. Though scattered in four states at the close of his life, they all reached his bedside in time to see the end. The pastor was assisted in the funeral services by Rev. H. H. Butler, who had also been his pastor at Bethlehem. His sons, sons-in-law, and grandson were the active pallbearers, and the thirteen deacons of the Suffolk church were the honorary pallbearers. A good man, a good citizen, a good husband, a good father, a good neighbor, a good friend, a good Christian, and he leaves a "good name rather to be chosen than great riches."

These three worthies are indexes to the many good men I know in the Church.

W. W. STALEY.

GRAHAM AND PROVIDENCE CHURCHES SECURE PASTOR

The Graham and Providence churches, Graham, N. C., have secured the services of Rev. S. L. Beougher, 2305 Highland Avenue, Tampa, Florida. Brother Beougher is a member of the Eastern Indiana Christian Conference and has held pastorates at Lynn, Mass., Vaughanville, Ohio, and other places. He went to Florida a year or two ago in search of health for his wife. She is now recovered and they desire to locate in the South. He is expected to arrive about December 10.

A number of articles had to be crowded out this week. Be patient and continue to send us the good news.

THE STEWARDSHIP OF POSSESSIONS

By John King, Suffolk, Va.

THIS is a day of efficiency and service, and since we have been so abundantly blessed with this world's goods, He naturally expects us to find our neighbor that we might show him mercy.

There is undeniably a movement in history towards the material enrichment of mankind. There seems to me to be a triplicate movement towards a larger and better food supply, better and more convenient means of communication, and a constant development of innumerable comforts and luxuries that make physical life happy and pleasant.

Let us note the increase in the food supply. Fifty years ago, in the decade of 1866-74, the production of the six leading cereals per capita was thirty-two bushels. While in 1905-14 it was fifty-two bushels. Milk increased from 84 gallons per capita to 96 gallons. In meat there has also been an increase of twenty-five per cent; corn, ten; oats, twenty-four; potatoes, thirty-three; hay, twenty; or for all crops together about sixteen per cent.

This development has been steady and sure, until today stand the proud possessors of a crop of three billion, one hundred thirty-one million, three hundred forty-nine bushels of corn, or a billion bushels more than we can consume; seven hundred and seventy millions, fifteen thousand bushels of wheat, or one million bushels more than we can consume. And this proportion of production and consumption holds true with every crop in America this past year.

Indeed we have been borne forward a far distance from those days when men and women appointed days for fasting and prayer because starvation threatened with death and destruction.

When it comes to the development of communication, only an example or two will show what a tremendous stride history has taken in the last hundred years. Think of the fact that in the time of Jefferson two stage coaches and eight horses sufficed for all the commerce that was carried on between New York and Boston, and that in the winter the journey required a week's time. Or compare the announcement of the results of the presidential election in 1812 and in 1920. When Madison was elected President for the second time, in November, 1812, the good people of Kentucky did not hear of it before February of the following year. In 1920 they had the returns two hours after the polls closed.

When the historian portrays George Washington or John Quincy Adams as sitting down to a breakfast of boiled corn-beef and potatoes in a room without electric light, gas, lamp, stove, carpet, without coal in the winter or ice in the summer, we can see what advance our day has made in the comforts of life. Or when the chronicler shows us young Daniel Webster plucking his pens from the wings of his mother's pet goose, and making his ink from the soot he scraped from his mother's kettles, we have another illustration of the development of the things that make present-day life more pleasant.

What an immeasurable advance there has been in the general amelioration of the physical conditions of life since the days of Christopher Columbus! Each century has made its own contribution: the fourteenth gave us the mariner's compass, the fifteenth the printing-press, the eighteenth the cotton-gin. The nineteenth century has given us so many things that we can hardly realize it all. Among these gifts we number the railway, uniting distant cities; the steamship, uniting distant nations; the telegraph, uniting distant commercial centers; the cable uniting far-flung continents; the telephone, uniting friends that are separated; the wireless, uniting the imperiled ship with a hundred rescuers; the phonograph by immortalizing the human voice adds one more bond in unity between the passing generations.

But these material gifts are not the most important that the past ages have given us. They are not the ground-swell in our ocean. They are but the smallest triplicate of waves, which are pushed on and on by another series of developments. And this second triplicate, this second three-fold movement in history is the development in education, in individualism and in morals.

We have more bread today than ever before in the history of the world, only because science has made possible the invention of better farm machinery, and better farming methods. We have finer and better and more clothes today because science has made possible the invention and education has made possible the use of the loom and the sewing-machine. We are better off on every side today than the world ever was before, because science has found a way of lessening labor and increasing production everywhere. It has been said that an ordinary day laborer today enjoys as many comforts as sixty slaves could provide with incessant labor.

Education has touched life everywhere with its refining touch. It touched the crab-apple and it became the wine-sap and the pippin. It touched the sour grape and it became the Concord and the Catawba. It is giving us faster and better horses, adapted for more and better and differentiated work. It is giving us better cows that we may have more and better milk and beef; it is touching the hog with its magic wand and we have more and better ham and bacon. And now it is promising us better babies, too.

And what wonders have not been wrought with regard to health. When Washington was inaugurated it is said that every fifth person was disfigured by the marks of smallpox. Today you will hardly find one in a thousand. Dr. Rush of Philadelphia tells of a physician at that time who, finding his patient overcome with fainting, drew ten ounces of blood. As the obstinate faintness continued he drew off twenty ounces more, and as there was still no recovery he drew off thirty ounces more. Two days later, when the clergyman held the funeral services, he said "Mysterious Providence has grievously afflicted our community."

As for the worth of the individual I need only refer you to conditions a hundred years ago, to convince you that we have been borne forward an almost immeasurable distance. In Philadelphia, in the year 1801, white slaves went through the streets with iron chains around their necks, and with the initial of their masters branded upon their brows. In Delaware twenty crimes were punishable by hanging, and there were ten misdemeanors for which women were whipped upon the naked back. In Connecticut insolvent debtors were thrown into a prison made out of an old worked out copper mine. The only entrance was by means of a ladder down a shaft which led to the underground cavern. There in little pens of wood from thirty to one hundred culprits were immired, their feet made fast in iron bars and their necks chained to the beams in the roof. In these intensely dark, filthreeking caves vermin abounded; in the darkness and dampness the clothes on the prisoners grew mouldy and rotted away. Some of the prisoners had their ears cropped; others were scarred by the branding iron. In Virginia women were ducked for gossiping.

A hundred years ago was also the era of the chimney sweep of pitiable memory. It was the era when orphans were farmed out and half-naked boys began their labors in the mines at seven years of age, becoming deformed and stunted by long stooping in the dark caverns.

As for the elevation of moral life, consider the fact that most of the books that have come down from the earlier centuries have to be expurgated by reason of their coarseness and vulgarity. Profanity was universal. As to drunkenness consider this, that many pastors were part owners in the distilleries to make up for small salaries. As late as 1850 some pastors received part of their salary in whiskey and tobacco. This seems incredible in these days of general prohibition, but it is an eloquent witness to the advance of morality in the last decades.

We all know that the first blow for individual liberty, both civic and religious, was struck by Christian men, who had tasted of the liberty that is in Jesus Christ. The Pilgrim fathers themselves were but the spiritual children of a host of men and women who had sown the seed of liberty and fertilized the ground with their lifeblood. And we know also, that the first effective blow against slavery was struck by a Moravian missionary to the West Indies who, when he found that he could not gain the ear of the horribly mistreated negroes, sold himself into slavery to work in the field under the overseer's lash, in order that he might preach Christ to the poor negroes. Long years after he had fallen on the fields of the sugar plantation, his story fired Wilberforce, another Christian, with invincible courage and determination to rest neither night nor day till the slave was free in the English domains.

And is it not true that the historian must confess that Anglo-Saxon society would have collapsed from the dry-rot of immorality but for the preaching of John Wesley and George Whitfield?

Who can successfully deny that the moral sensibilities have been both refined and kept alive by the example and teaching of the twice-born men and women of the day?

Why is Italy cleaned of the plagues that devastated her cities a hundred years ago? Because John Howard sailed on an infected vessel from Constantinople to Venice, that he might be put into the lazarette and find out the clue to that awful mystery of the plague and stay its power. How is it that the merchants of our western ports send ships laden with implements for the fields, and conveniences for the house, into the South Sea Islands? Because such men as Patteson, the pure-hearted, Gallant boy of Eton College, gave up every prospect in England to labor amid the Pacific savages, and twice plunged into the waters of the coral reefs, amid sharks and devil-fish, and stinging-jellies, to escape the flight of poisoned arrows of which the slightest graze meant horrible death, and in that high service died by the clubs of the very savages whom he had often risked his life to save—the memory of whose life did so smite the conscience of his murderers that they laid the young martyr in an open boat, to float away over the bright blue waves, with his hands crossed as if in prayer, and a palm branch on his breast. And there, in the white light, he lies now, immortal forever.

And why is it that in ten years after Livingston's death, Africa made greater advancement than in the previous ten centuries? Everybody knows it is because of the regenerated life and vicarious suffering of one of Scotland's noble heroes.

Think of the Gideons, Baraks, Sampsons, Jephthas, Davids, Samuels, Florence Nightingales, Elizabeth Frys, Goughs, Frances Willards and other prophets; who through faith subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouth of lions of iniquity, quenched the power of fire by dying in it for high convictions, escaped the edge of the sword by being beheaded by it for noble principles; who from weakness were made strong, waxed mighty in battle, turned to fight armies of aliens.

When Keats, walking in the rose garden, saw the ground under the bushes all covered with pink petals, he exclaimed: "Next year the roses should be very red!" When Aeneas tore the bough from the myrtle tree, Virgil says that the tree exuded blood. But this is only the poet's way of saying that civilization is a tree that is nourished, not by rain and snow, but by the tears and the blood of the patriots and martyrs and prophets of yesterday.

What is it that has inspired men and women to sacrifice for education, for the elevation of the worth of the individuals, and for the elevation of the moral life? What is it that has made the weak strong as giants in the service of mankind? What is it that has again and again surcharged the humanities with a sublime emotion that has made them burn and scintillate as the stars in the sky of the night? Is it not the knowledge of the overwhelming love of God?

Is it not the men who have been gripped by an irresistible sense of God's love, who have felt the divine urge to enlighten and lift other men to the wonderful knowledge of God?

Is it not true that the desire for liberty gets life and power of action from the men who realize that the objects of God's love are too precious to be trampled under the heel of tyrants?

Is it not true that the desire for a better moral life lives strongest in men who, having realized that God loves them, who desire to please Him—feeling that the sons of heaven are too good for the mire of impurity?

And where do men learn of the love of God? Is it not in and through the person of Jesus Christ, and in and through Him only? How is it that the world failed until Christ came, and still fails to achieve even physical blessings where Christ is unknown? The secret is that only in Him does the glory of the knowledge of God shine, and only in this radiance does the tree of civilization and happiness thrive.

So to the person of Christ must all our blessings be traced. Our business, our homes, our liberties, our luxuries, even the well-cooked victuals upon our tables, are the fruit of His glorious life and death.

The great question we should consider is: Has the Church kept up with the progress made by science? If not, why not? Is it because we have given more time to science than we have to religion.

Should not the call of the Church have a priority over the call of man?

Omnipotence is God and God covenants with a nation that He will preserve it and strengthen it and fill it with abundance and peace. It shall not be dethroned by enemies within nor overwhelmed by foes without.

But a certain condition is an integral part of that covenant. In His omniscience God imposed the condition. In His omnipotence God required its fulfillment.

What is that condition? That Jesus Christ shall be the Ruler of the civil government, and that civil government shall submit to Him and serve Him.

There is no other contract than this which a government can have with God. There is no other way in which any contract can be made.

A governmental contract with Omnipotence!

That is all this nation needs. It is everything. It means repentance of national sins. It means national confession of Jesus Christ as Savior and King. It means a national living of His law.

An individual can make only one kind of contract with Omnipotence. It is the contract of obedient submission by the individual and protection and blessing by the Ruler.

Can one hundred millions of individuals aggregate into a nation make any other kind of a contract? No. A governmental contract with Omnipotence is a contract of obedient submission by government and protection and blessing by the Ruler.

Will the Divine Ruler recognize a contract with any government which does not acknowledge Him? Such a thing is inconceivable.

Then the first step which this government must take, if it would have the contract, is the acknowledgment of God by the government. You cannot have much of a contract with any power whose existence you do not admit.

Hence, a confession of the Rulership of our Lord Jesus Christ over this nation must go into the fundamental law.

"God in the constitution!" Certainly. Why not? If we want a contract with Him, why not acknowledge Him? He does not permit a contract upon any other terms.

The restless millions wait
The dawn whose coming maketh—all things new—
Christ also waits, but men are slow and late.
Have we done what we could Have I? Have you?

NOTICE TO PASTORLESS CHURCHES AND PROBABLE PASTORS

The recent session of the North Carolina Conference through its Home Mission Board asked me to try to bring together churches without pastors and pastors who are available. To this end, I am anxious to make a list of each, and when such a list is made every church without a pastor will be supplied with list of the names and addresses of ministers available and the Sundays they have vacant.

To this end, I crave the help of those who read this. If you know of any Christian church without a pastor, will you send me the address of the secretary? And will every pastor who sees this and who is open for engagement, kindly send me the information and state on what Sundays they are available?

A little help now may secure a pastor the coming year, and will be appreciated. Thank you.

J. O. ATKINSON, Secretary.

HAVE YOU?

Have you ever used Peloubet's Select Notes or Tarbell's Teachers' Guide, Brother Sunday school teacher? A copy of either will make your teaching worth while.

REPORT OF EASTERN VIRGINIA WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE

The Eastern Virginia Woman's Missionary Conference met with the Society of Damascus church, Gates County, North Carolina, on October 27, 1921, in its ninth annual session. This marked the close of a most successful year in our work. While this was the ninth annual Conference, work among the women has been in progress for ten years. It is significant that the first report from the Woman's Board was made to the Conference in session at this place nine years ago. At that time less than $500.00 was reported and about fifteen Societies. The Treasurer as this session reported $5,695.00, with a total of seventy-five societies in the Conference. The goal for the coming year is $6,000.00.

Local conditions were not so favorable for a good attendance, the church being on the outskirts of the Conference, and two county fairs being in progress nearby, yet the attendance was good and the interest was splendid. Dr. Harper delighted the Conference with a splendid address on Thursday evening. On Friday, Miss Pattie Ellis, from India, gave an inspiring address, and Mrs. Stagg read an exceptionally fine paper on Mission Study.

The reports of the District mid-year Missionary Meeting showed that they had been well worth while. They will be held again with the uniting of some of the districts. The young people will continue the support of the mountain school and a foreign worker, pledging $1,000.00 to each. The women will contribute $1,500.00 to the Richmond work, and $1,200.00 for a foreign worker.

We missed the presence of our ministers, only two being present—Dr. I. W. Johnson and Rev. James Lightbourne. Drs. Staley and Rowland were prevented by sickness, and Dr. Atkinson by the press of business; this being the first session the latter has not attended. It was voted to meet with the Society at Berea, Nansmond, a year hence. Let us all bend our energies to make this our greatest gathering.

Officers were elected as follows: President, Mrs. C. H. Rowland; Vice-President, Mrs. I. W. Johnson; Secretary, Mrs. Leon Stagg; Treasurer, Mrs. M. L. Bryant; Superintendent of Young People's Work, Mrs. W. V. Leathers; Superintendent of Literature, Mrs. J. E. Cartwright; Superintendent of Cradle Roll, Miss Mary Andrews.

SMELLS OF POVERTY

Walter H. Page

The man who says we are too poor to increase our taxes for education is the perpetuator of poverty. It is a doctrine that has kept us poor. It smells of the alms-house and the hovel. It has driven more men and more wealth from the state and kept away more men and more wealth than any other political doctrine ever cost us—more even than the doctrine of Secession. Such a man is a victim of an ancient and harmful falsehood.

Even if you could respect the religion of the man who objects to the elevation of the forgotten masses by public education, it is hard to respect his common sense, for does his church not profit by the great enlightenment and prosperity that every educated community enjoys? This doctrine smells of poverty—poverty in living, poverty in thinking, and poverty in the spiritual life.

The Men and Millions Committee of the Eastern Virginia Conference held a meeting in Franklin Monday of this week to take steps to further the work of the Movement. A similar meeting of the North Carolina Conference will be held this week in Burlington.

By the way—have you sent your Thansgiving offering to the Orphanage?

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

THE BULLETIN

Rev. J. R. Cortner, of Farmland, Indiana, passed through Burlington this week en route to Tampa, Florida, to spend the winter. He stopped to see the Burlington church and its pastor.

President Harper spoke at Newport News, Virginia, last Sunday, and attended the meeting of the Men and Millions Committee of the Eastern Virginia Conference held at Franklin Monday.

Financial experts feel that trade conditions are bettering all the while. Liberty bonds and other securities seem to hold their own and in many cases advances have been made.

A SELF-EXPLANATORY LETTER

Dear Brother Riddle:—Will you kindly state in THE CHRISTIAN SUN that we will need a college carpenter and superintendent of building beginning January 1? We should prefer that this person be from among the membership of the Christian Church. I will be very glad to receive applications from any one who is interested in this position.

Prevost was chosen as President, Miss Eula Freeman Vice-President, and Mr. Paul Phillips Secretary-Treasurer. Another new Society is that of the Palm Street church, Greensboro, with Miss Leona Rich as President. Mrs. W. A. GOD'S CHALLENGE TO THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER

Sunday school teaching is defined in the "Westminster Teacher" for November by Dean H. T. J. Coleman as "A Man's Job." He says in part:

"Sunday school teaching is a man's job in two senses of this familiar expression. It is a man's job in the wider sense that it is important enough and difficult enough to challenge the ambition and exercise the resources of the most intelligent adult, whether man or woman; and it is a man's job in the narrower sense that it is an undertaking from which the manhood of the Church, as distinguished from the womanhood, has no right to ask to be excused.

"Of the importance of the Sunday school teacher's work little need be said, since it is universally admitted—at least in theory. We are all more or less convinced of the fact that there are certain things to be learned and certain habits and attitudes to be acquired for the effective mastery of which childhood is not only the golden period, but the only period. The "brand plucked from the burning" is, indeed, a testimony to the power of the grace of God, and no one can measure the value of even a few years spent in an effort to redeem the errors of a sinful past; but no thoughtful person would for a moment regard the tary acknowledgment of the divine claims upon the human soul as having the same value, either to the individual or to society, as obedience to the injunction of the preacher, 'Remember also thy Creator in the days of thy youth.'

"Life is pitifully short at its longest; human nature is so handicapped by its brute inheritance, our possibilities so greatly transcend our actualities, that no one who feels the call to Christian service can afford to neglect this fundamental need of the childhood of the world the need to be taught."

God has entrusted much to the Sunday school teachers of His Church. He is expecting much from them. Bishop Vincent once declared: "Remember, teacher, you may be the best teacher some child will ever have." Our Sunday school teachers are facing this responsibility and this tremendous opportunity.

MY LITTLE HOUSE

By Grace G. Bostwick

I want to build my little house
So straight and stanch, so fair and fine,
That it will show rare workmanship
In every telling line.

I want to build my little house
On such foundation—solid, true—
That it will stand the hardest storm
That ever dwelling knew.

I want to build my little house
With windows shining far and wide,
So that each passerby may know
It is aight inside.

I want to build my little house
So children come to it for play;
So it may know much happiness
And ring with mirth each day.

I want to build my little house
With such warm friendliness of air
That those who sad and lonely are
May find sweet comfort there.

I want to build a friendly house,
A refuge free from strain and strife;
A glowing home of love I'd make—
My little house of life!

CALLED HOME

MERICA—Miss Nancy Ellen Merica, of Shenandoah, Va., (R. F. D.) died on Friday, November 11, 1921. Her age was sixty-nine years, three months, and fourteen days. She had been a patient sufferer for a year or more. Miss Merica was converted and united with Mt. Lebanon Christian church February 8, 1885, and had lived close to Christ ever since. Her beautiful consistent Christian life, and her kindness and helpfulness to others made her life a benediction to all who came in contact with her. Before her spirit took its departure, she spoke of being ready to go; and not being afraid to die. The funeral services were held in the home of Mrs. Geo. Comer with whom she lived, on Sunday afternoon, November 13, 1921, and the body was buried in the family burying ground near by. The funeral was conducted by the writer.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

BAULDWIN. — Bertha Agenette Baldwin, daughter of Stiner and Minnie Baldwin, was born July 18, 1920 and died November 17, 1921, aged one year, three months and twenty-nine days.

Bertha was only sick about one day and night with croup. All that could be done that parents felt possible, but God saw fit to call her to Him while she was being rushed to the hospital.

Funeral conducted by the writer and the body laid to rest beside her little brother at Apple's Chapel. May God richly bless these sad hearts.

C. E. GERRINGER.

HUBER.—Mrs. Mary B. Huber, wife of J. L. Huber, a prominent farmer of Surry County, Va., departed this life October 18, 1921, aged fifty-four years, seven months and fourteen days. The family moved from Lititz, Pa., in 1900. Mrs. Huber was formerly a member of the Moravian church, but at the time of her death she was a member of Union (Surry) Christian church, and teacher of the boys class in Sunday school.

She is survived by husband, seven children, nine grand children, three sisters and one brother.

The funeral service was conducted in the church where she was a member by her pastor, after which the remains were laid away in the church cemetery to await the resurrection.

W. D. HARWARD.

HILLIARD—John Hilliard departed this life at the home of his son, W. A. Hilliard, Norlina, N. C., November 8, 1921, in his eighty-ninth year.

When a young man he confessed Christ and united with old Keeder Christian church, now Mt. Auburn, in Warren County, N. C., and remained a member through sunshine and shower till death came. He served four years in the war between the states. He was faithful and lived to the stars and bars when they fell at Appomattox.

In young manhood he was united in marriage to Miss Martha Coie and to this union were born seven children. His devoted wife, two girls and one son preceded him to the grave.

A devoted husband, a fond father and a good citizen has passed from his labors to his reward. Sweet be thy sleep dear father, brother, friend, and neighbor, till we meet on the resurrection morn.

A FRIEND.

RUDD—Mrs. Emma J. Rudd departed this life at her home in Norfolk, Va., November 6, 1921. She was married twice; the first time to Ardena Wood, who died leaving her with four children. Her second marriage was to Mr. Edward Rudd of Berkley, Norfolk, Va., who also preceded her to the grave.

Mrs. Rudd was a charter member of the First Christian church, Norfolk, Va., and also one of the charter members of the Washington Street Christian church, Portsmouth, Va. She was a good Christian mother and will be greatly missed. Our loss has been her gain.

Sister Rudd leaves four children—R. B. Wood, Chuckatuck, Va., Mrs. A. Hudson, Norfolk, Va., Mrs. G. Serricks, Baltimore, Md., and Mrs. P. Price, Dendron, Va.

The funeral was conducted at her home by the writer and her remains were laid to rest in Magnolia cemetery, Norfolk, Va. The Lord bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT-HUBER

God in His infinite love and mercy saw fit to take from our midst a greatly beloved and useful member of Union Sunday school, Mrs. J. L. Huber October 18, 1921. Therefore, be it resolved.

That in the death of this earnest, faithful servant of God, the Sunday school which she was a member has sustained a great loss, she was a lady of noble Christian character, ever ready to lend a helping hand for the upbuilding of worthy objects, she was a bright and shining light to the church and the community, our loss was her eternal gain.

That we tender our heart-felt sympathy to the bereaved husband, children and relatives, and pray that God will sustain and help them through the dark hours and they may be able to look up through their tears and say, "Thy will be done."

That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family and to The Christian Sun, and Lititz Record for publication and a copy be spread on the Sunday school record.

The Companion's purpose is to picture the permanent satisfaction that springs from following the path of duty rather than that The Companion stands for—the solidarity of the family. In its articles, in its contents generally, The Companion speaks to the family, animated by the spirit that draws parents and children together round a common hearth-stone, sharers in the same duties, the same joys, the same aspirations. New subscribers for 1922 will receive:

1. The Youth's Companion—52 issues in 1922.

“Yes, I’ve just been reading a splendid book!” “Indeed, what was it?” “Well, I forget the name.” “Who was the author?”—hopefully. “Oh, I don’t know.” “Well, what was it about?”—desperately. “Indeed, I’ve forgotten.” Long pause—then, eagerly, “It had a red cover!” —Tit-Bits.

A story is told of a man in a back pew of a London church seen from the pulpit with his hat on. The minister beckoned to a deacon, who went to the man and asked him if he was aware that his hat was on. “Thank God!” said the man. “I thought that would do it. I have attended this church for six months, and you are the first who has spoken to me.”—Australian Christian World.

A hungry traveler put his head out of a car window as his train pulled up at a small station, and said to a boy:

“Here, boy, take this dime and get me a sandwich, will you? And, by the way, here’s another dime. Get a sandwich for yourself, too.”

The boy darted away and returned, munching a sandwich, just as the train was starting off. He ran to the traveler, handed him a dime, and said:

“Here’s yer dime back, boss. They only had one sandwich left.”

EDITORIAL OBSERVATIONS

In last week's issue of THE SUN we made mention that the various departments of the Church should make statements as to their financial standing. It would be a very stale question indeed that had no opposition. We expect some opposition to our idea about this matter. It would be disappointing not to have it. We are firmly of the opinion that it is the thing to do. There are those who will not rightly understand such statements; but it must always be taken for granted (for it is true) that those who do understand such statements and appreciate them are in the majority. Elon College opens up the way this week with its statement. Why not? It is the people's property—not the property of the Board of Trustees, the faculty, or the administrative officers. THE SUN will go into more definite detail as to its working basis in some early issue. In the meantime THE SUN calls upon our Mission Board to give the public a financial statement of how much is invested in the various mission points. This is not, in any way, to be considered as an insinuation that a dollar has been unwisely invested. It is a principle that seems sound to us. Let us have the statements—not all in one issue, but at intervals, until we have had a review of the amounts invested in each place, the value of property, and the outlook for future investments. We also call upon the Executive Secretary of the Men and Millions Forward Movement to let us know how much has been collected on pledges to that fund, and to keep us constantly advised as to the amount received.

The year 1921, ten years from now, will be looked upon as the pivotal year of the Christian Church. The close observer sees that now. There are many far-reaching things that have taken place, to exert themselves later. Asking no distinction as a prophet, we mention one thing at this time, and will mention others later. We mention the price that we must pay for pastoral leadership. Ten years from now it will be remembered that it was the year 1921 that brought us to thinking so seriously on the subject. The Church's history ten years from now will point to the year 1921, when we enrolled the largest number of ministerial students and sent the largest number from the South to the universities for higher educational development. The public has demanded a trained leadership. The price that we are to pay for it will challenge the sincerity of our demands. We have said to the young men that we want the best that they have. They have taken it seriously, very seriously, and they have gone forward. Some have spent four years in college, and others are following suit. Some of those who have spent four years in college have agreed to devote three years to further study—seven in all. They have done, and are doing, far more than most of us are willing to do. They have understood by our demands that we are willing to pay the price. They are not expecting to come back to us to farm, to garden, to keep store, or to engage in secular pursuits in order to make a living. They are going to put the challenge squarely up to us—yes, they are—and they are going to find out if we meant what we said when we followed them to the station and said, "God bless you, boys, we are with you." They have the passion, the program, will soon have the preparation—three essential things. When they come back, will we have the pay? God forbid that we should fail to do our one-fourth—one thing out of the four.

Two interesting and helpful meetings have recently been held by Conference leaders of the Men and Millions Forward Movement. The first was held in Franklin, Virginia, and the other in Burlington, North Carolina. The time has come when activities of the great Movement must act. The Movement was never intended to be other than one in a series of advances for the full realization of the Kingdom of God on the earth. It was not a war measure, a spell of enthusiasm, or a one-year undertaking. It was, and is, a great program for a great people to carry out. It was, and is, a clarion call to the Church. It was, and is, the signal for action upon the part of the Church. It was, and is, the supreme test of the Church's willingness to do the even greater thing for the Master. It was, and is, our part and program in the world's crisis that the Church shall prove true, be helpful to a greater degree, and fully exert her influence in the world. The money side of the Movement is its minor side. The life-recruits, new members, tithees, and the other parts of the Movement, are, after all, the things that will count in the final analysis. We cannot afford to slacken our interest in this, the Church's greatest undertaking. Shall we? The answer comes back, "No! a thousand times no!"

We raise the question as to what a mission field is. We read that a mission point has been opened up in some community where churches are already too numerous. Again we read of some mission point in a foreign field. We wonder if a small town with one or two thousand people having five or six churches is a mission field. Some denomination may not have its house of worship there, but is it really a mission field? It may be a field for propaganda of that particular denomination, but we have begun to question the matter as to its being a real mission field. Is a small and struggling church that is costing the denomination many thousands of dollars, at the sacrifice of some well established church, a mission point? It may be a point of propaganda for that denomination, but we seriously doubt in our minds whether such a place is a real point for mission work to be done. We have in mind as we write a small town already over-churches by Protestant churches. Each organization has its faithful few and there is not enough work in that place for one-half of its churches to do, and yet we list it as a mission point and gladly spend our money in helping to still further over-church the quiet little village. We repeat that it seems to us to be a point of propaganda for us, but really, is it a mission point?

If Christ were to come to any little village, look around and see a church on every hand, and then visit the latest church under construction, would He condemn the expenditure or commend it? This is a question, too, that we have been turning over in our minds, and we pass it along for the consideration of those who may desire to entertain the thought. If a manufacturer had two factories and not enough help to make both go successfully, yet enough help to make one a real success, we are quite sure that we know what he would do. If a church is struggling for existence, and cannot live decently, we wonder if it is good business to continue to build others? If gaining membership is the motive of mission work it might be just as well to build some points stronger and increase the membership that we have, as it would be to continue to establish mission points with the hope of gathering in members. We pass these question along for whatever they are worth.

The next session of the Southern Christian Convention promises to be one that shall claim the best thought and earnest prayers of the Brotherhood. There are many problems that will present themselves to be worked out. The members of the Convention can do no better thing than to begin to study earnestly and sincerely the problems of the Church. In a few weeks we hope to have a complete list of all members of the Convention elected by the various Conferences. We believe that it would be a good idea for the various Boards to prepare their reports in advance, or at least as much of them as possible, and to mail copies, without comment, to the members of the Convention. Such reports could be marked "tentative," and that would make it plain that they were not final. In this way the members of the Convention would have a chance to study over and pray about the things they are to help decide. It must be remembered that a delegate to the Convention is a representative of his people. It delegates know more of what the Convention had to consider, the people at home could be consulted before hand, and in this way a delegate could vote more intelligently. THE SUN also opens its columns to any and all Boards and Committees of the Convention for the presentment of such matters as may be of information to delegates of the Convention.

"The Church and World Brotherhood" is the theme which, from various angles, will be discussed at the annual meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America at Chicago, December 14 to 16. The sessions are to be held in the new First Congregational church, the Chicago Church Federation serving as the host of the meeting. Of outstanding interest are the three evening sessions, which are to consider successively "The Church and Inter-Racial Brotherhood," "The Church and Brotherhood in Industry," and "The Church and International Brotherhood." The subject of inter-racial brotherhood is to be presented by Bishop Robert E. Jones, of New Orleans, one of the distinguished colored leaders in the South, and Rev. W. W. Alexander, of Atlanta, Director of the Commission on Inter-Racial Co-operation. This is to be followed by a discussion on the theme, "What Can the Churches Do to Promote Better Race Relations?" opened by Bishop George C. Clement of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, and Miss Nannie H. Burroughs, Secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary of the National Baptist Convention.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part VII.

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

Field Secretary for Missions

RIDAY A. M., September 23.—I was awake by six this a. m., and before seven had had a fine shower bath and rub-down. After a thirty-minutes walk I was feeling unusually fit and fine, ready for a wholesome breakfast at the Colonial Cafe. Having on our schedule a very heavy day, we packed off hurriedly from San Juan, stopping first at the Union Theological Seminary. This school is well housed, has at present twenty-seven theological students, as follows: Four Baptists, three Congregationalists, three Disciples of Christ, six Methodists, nine Presbyterians, one specialist (to be a medical missionary), and one Cuban. The Seminary is supported jointly by the various evangelical denominations doing mission work in Porto Rico. We Christians join in the support of the Seminary, pay annually our proportionate part for its support, and our Foreign Mission Secretary is a trustee; but we have not had a student in the school now for eight years. When we had men who wanted to go and should have gone, we did not have the money to send them. Recently we have not had the men to spare from the work. As soon as we get a man on the field ready for the Seminary, we have to put him in the pulpit and to work. The Seminary receives men on recommendation of the "Mission," but they should at least finish the eighth grade before coming to the Seminary. The course covers nine months, September to June, each year, and the cost to each student is about $200.00, just enough to cover board and books. The Methodists allow their men this amount. The salaries of the professors are paid by their respective Boards. The Seminary had been in operation on the union basis for three years now, and the idea seems to work. The president and faculty have so far had no criticism from the outside relative to the union, and the ideas and doctrines taught. That is to say, the fact that a Presbyterian professor teaches a Baptist ministerial student theology, or that a Congregational professor teaches a Methodist ministerial student, theology, seems to work all right in Porto Rico. Evidently the denominations in Porto Rico have beat us of the "States" to the practical working out of the union idea. And they say it works. Before the student leaves the Seminary, some teacher of his own denomination (if possible) gives him a course of study in the history and doctrine of his own denomination.

Besides the work done with the pupils in the Seminary, there is a correspondence course carried on by the faculty with those not yet in the school, and with some who may not be able to come. There are now 150 registered in this course. We of the Christian Church have five enrolled in this course.

President McAlister, of the Seminary faculty, is a very interesting man. He says that the number of American missionaries on the island is decreasing rather than increasing. He says the Presbyterians used to have ten missionaries here, but have only three now besides himself. One is chairman of the executive committee of the Presbyterian Mission; one is treasurer, one is general superintendent, and McAlister is teacher in the Seminary. The Presbyterians have allotted them about one-fifth of the island, about 250,000 souls they are responsible for. They have thirty-four organized churches, about one hundred preaching points, and about twenty-five native ordained pastors. The Methodist Episcopalians have about the same, and serve about the same sized population. The Presbyterians and Methodists have poured several hundred thousand dollars into Porto Rico to the saving of souls here and the building up of the Lord's cause among this needy and appreciative people—and they have a great and growing work here. McAlister says it matters not how good a work the American missionary does, it is not permanent and in the highest sense progressive until the native pastor is developed, who can and will get hold of his fellows in a way the foreigner cannot. The real work of evangelism must be done by the native pastor and preacher. Two ideas now prevail and must be emphasized in Porto Rico: first, a native church as soon as possible, ministered to by native pastors; second, native support of the work. All missionaries have this as their ideal. The Presbyterians now have one church of 150 members that pays $75.00 a month on pastor's salary, and several paying as much as $60.00 per month. One church promises to be self-supporting within ten years. The Presbyterian budget last year was $57,000, and they have asked for $55,000 for 1922 to keep things going as they are. Their missionaries get $2,000 a year and house to live in; their Board paying actual traveling expenses of missionaries to the "States" once in three years.

I talked with Professor Hubbard (M. E.) of the Union Theological Seminary faculty. He says the union religious paper published twice per month is great. It has the largest paid-up circulation of any paper in Porto Rico. The subscription list at present is about 8,000, and the paper sells for $1.00 a year. He and McAlister agree that this union paper is the thing, is working along the right line, and is accomplishing wonders. This, I say, is "going some." Suppose we in North Carolina were to consolidate The Presbyterian Standard, The Biblical Recorder, The Christian Advocate and THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Would we not have a rattling of dry bones for a season? Yet such a thing as that has taken place and is now going on with great pleasure and profit in Porto Rico—among the Christians of all denominations, and with their hearty approval and sympathetic co-operation.

Our journey—Martin, Minton, Barrett and myself—on Barrett's Ford, is from San Juan to Caguas, about eighteen miles. Near Caguas we stop for Minton to take a picture of women washing clothes in a creek. They rub the clothes either in the creek, or in a tub made of bark from a palm tree, then beat the clothes with a paddle and lay them out on the grass to dry. Barrett says we will find this process throughout all Porto Rico. The women carry the clothes to the water instead of bringing the water to the clothes. They seem to have a merry time, dozens and scores of them on the creek shore, or in the water ankle-deep, doing the family wash and "jabbering" away while they work.

In Caguas we stopped for lunch in a poorly kept restaurant on the plaza. While we fought off the flies and odor of garlic with one hand, we ate an egg fried on one side, raw on the other, and pushed it down with bread dipped in coffee. But the plaza was beautiful. Out of the town of Caguas we go along a fine road of asphalt, shaded for miles and miles with palms,—royal, cocanaut and date—and beautiful tropical trees whose names my diary will not hold (because I do not know how to spell them).

We stopped at a thatched house up in the mountains and saw corn in a small way, and some rice in the shell. Yes, they grow some rice in Porto Rico.

The mountains are very much like those you see in the Valley of Virginia, though not as large. But the shrubbery and trees and foliage over the mountains from San Juan south to Ponce are varied and beautiful beyond words. I saw here today for the first time the fern tree. These fern trees are fifteen to twenty feet high, and their leaves are from three to six feet long! Geologists tell us, I believe, that the fern is the oldest plant life now extant. Well, they must have got started in Porto Rico about a million years earlier than they did in the "States"!

At the peak of the mountain today I saw the most glorious and wonderful scenery of my life. Far below, spreading in one direction, was a very fertile valley. In it were patches of varied green, yellow, blue, purple, orange, and gold. There seemed in it every tree, herb, plant, and fruit to make glad the heart of man. Now back to the north down the jagged mountain, the blue Atlantic Ocean is clearly seen in the distance. Forward to the south, the green waters of the Caribbean sea are in view. Think of it, a far-stretching, unending valley of richness and splendor and plenty in one direction; in another a mountain dipping off into the ocean; in still another, the undulating hills sloping slowly into the sea—two mountains, two seas, and a wonderful valley, all visible from one spot! If that will not make the soul of a man cry out, "How wonderful are the works of thy hands, O Lord, my God," then nothing will.

Up in the mountains, about 3:30 p. m. we stopped at a rest home for the missionaries. This was built mostly by the Baptists, but all denominations use it. It has a cook room, dining room, two long bed rooms, and bath. It cost $2,900, and is 1,700 feet above sea level. The minister in charge, Mr. Ford (not Henry) is a pleasant and clever Baptist brother. He had on his overalls and was painting, not himself altogether, but the house. He is a mechanic as well as a missionary. He says the Baptists (Northern—there are no Southern Baptists working on the island) have five missionary families in Porto Rico. They have eight lady missionaries, and these are very useful, both in industrial work, and in Sunday school and young people's religious education work. They have nine native ordained and sixteen unordained native workers, with forty-eight organized churches and about twice that number of preaching places. The Baptists came to the island in 1898, and their first church was organized in the city of Ponce. They now have one self-supporting church which pays its pastor $110.00 a month and current expenses of $40.00 a month more. This church raised last year between $2,400 and $2,500—not a poor showing for a church on a mission field. Ford is a fine man, of brotherly spirit. He says the union paper and union seminary are working along the right lines, and are doing much to help both the natives and the missionaries in their common task of soul-winning.

As we descended from the mountains toward the sea, a phenomenon was apparent that I had never noticed before—and had never read about. It seemed so unreal. Just this: When you see the ocean from the hills or the mountains, the waters of the ocean look as if they are piled up out yonder just as high as the hills or mountains are from which you see them—and of very much the same color! I will give it up! There are no limits to the wonders and mysteries of God's great world. I am now on the high peaks of Porto Rican mountains—glory and grandeur and gorgeous beauties spread out in every direction, but hedged in by two surrounding seas whose waters are as high as these hills—and yet there are low lands and intervening valleys between. Evidently the high seas and the high mountains as well are in "the hollow of His hands."

GOLDEN WEDDING

On November 5, I was at Youngsville, N. C., where I went to attend the golden wedding anniversary of Brother J. C. Winston and wife. This was celebrated at the country home of Brother and Sister Winston, and was a delightful occasion. There are eight children living—all of whom were present on this occasion. They are: Mrs. L. H. Ragan, Mrs. S. C. Holden, Miss Gertrude Winston, S. E., M. E., L. E., G. E., and H. E. Winston.

Upon the arrival of the guests they were ushered into the reception room, which was beautifully decorated with yellow chrysanthemums and ferns. A table was arranged in the yard, in the center of which was a large cake with fifty golden candles thereon. The writer, who baptized Brother and Sister Winston some sixty years ago and married them fifty years ago, presented the gifts. One of the gifts presented was by the children, and consisted of a plata containing $50.00 in gold.

Brother Winston has been a deacon in the Christian church at Youngsville for many years. He has suffered several months with paralysis, which affects his speech and troubles his nervous system. Sister Winston is in perfect health.

It was a great pleasure to me to meet with these dear people again and to see many old friends of former years, and to participate in the most excellent dinner prepared by them.

PLAIN TALK TO PLAIN PEOPLE

WE hear much said about the support of the ministry. Some seem to think that man, and especially the minister, has made this law as a means of self-support. If I believed this salary business was of this world in its origin, I would no more receive a salary. As it is, I have no doubt that it was handed to us from heaven—the support of the ministry as the teachers of the oracles of God could, as it seems to me, have come from no other source than God Himself. It is not a mere law of the Old Testament, or of the New Testament—it is a law set forth in both. In Numbers 18: 20, 21, it is written:

“And the Lord spake unto Aaron, thou shalt have no inheritance in their [Israel’s] land, neither shalt thou have any part among them: I am thy part and thine inheritance among the children of Israel.

“And behold, I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation.”

That is pretty clear that the Lord did not allow the Levites (the preachers of that day) to have the privilege of making a living among the Israelites, but that the Israelites must support these Levites from the fruits of their (the Israelites’) labors. The Levites were to give themselves to the work of the sanctuary, and then the labors of the Israelites must provide a living for the Levites.

In the New Testament times the same law was given in the interest of the preachers of that day—it was given in a different form, but it meant the same thing in fact “they that preach the gospel shall live of the gospel.” It therefore seems clear that God never meant that His ministers should minister in divine things and at the same time make their own living by secular work. In other words, if they are to preach the Word for the spiritual enlightenment of the people, then from the income of the people’s labors these preachers of divine truth must be supported. There has been no law changed in order to have this matter of supporting the ministry thrown upon the preachers themselves, and for this there is a reason; viz.: No man can preach the gospel, as the Lord wishes him to do it, and support himself by engaging in secular work. If this is the true view, as we believe it is, then the ministry which gives itself truly to the Lord’s work should not have to resort to secular work as a means of support for himself and his family. We believe that many of the people, if they knew this to be according to the Scriptures, then not many outside of the covetous would think of such a thing as to have their pastors to engage in secular work in order to have their families live comfortably. When people know the truth, the truth makes them free—free to do right and eschew wrong.

SUFFOLK LETTER

MORAL philosophy must be distinguished from spiritual life. The Decalogue is the moral law; but the new birth gives spiritual life. Moral life and spiritual life are as distinct as day and night; but spiritual life is the greater. Moral reform has its motive in spiritual life; so, that Christianity must be recognized as the origin of reforms. The rich young ruler was a moral man and had kept the “commandments” from his youth up; but he “went away” from the spiritual teacher “sorrowful.” The Pharisee commended himself to God by indisputable evidence of moral excellence; yet the publican went down to his house justified rather than the Pharisee.

Moral reform is the reconstruction of moral sentiments and practices. The potter changes the clay and makes of it another vessel, because it had marred in his hands. We are living at this time in the midst of reconstruction, of reform, in commercial, social, political, and educational life. To re-form is to reconstruct, as a house. The architect plans to remodel the old house. Old material is removed and new material takes its place in re-forming the building. Machinery is all the time undergoing improvement. New inventions take the place of old ones, and the machines are thereby made better. Air-brakes on trains, binders in the harvest fields, ect ton gins in place of human fingers, electric currents in place of steam, motor trucks in place of horses and wagons, automobiles in place of horses and carriages. Reforms and new forms are coming into use everywhere.

We must guard against believing that reforms can do all that society needs. Better clothes, better houses, better schools, better correspondence, may not spell better character. All these may come to us from without; but spiritual character is wrought out in the life by the help of the Spirit of God. The abolition of slavery does not set men free; the abolition of the saloon does not make men sober; the prohibition of obscene literature from the mails does not make men pure. Good laws do not make people good. Reformation is the effect of Christianity, and not the cause of the good in the world. Many substitute reformation for salvation and imagine themselves better than the saved. Good manners is a product of civilization, and the Chesterfield might have been as nude as a savage if he had been a papoose. Reformers often leave Christ out of the equation in their welfare work. Schools and pools and parks and games can never take the place of the new birth.

All agencies of modern social welfare service for men, women, and children will fail unless regeneration is a big factor in the equation of social reform. Good folks, like poets, are "born," not "made." The real work of reform is in the home, in the cradle, in the mother. The greatest school on earth is the Christian home. There is a modern danger in turning over too much of parental responsibility to institutions and public care. Society can never rise above the purity, faith, and ideals of the home. Christianity in its simple place in the home is the power that sustains nations and leads the way in the progress of mankind. Fireside religion is the pure spring from which flows the stream virtue and love. The silence of mother-influence shapes more lives than all the educational forces outside the home. Human beings love to transfer responsibility to others, and modern methods tempt parents to do like Eve. The tendency is toward paternalism instead of parentism. Reformers who leave home and Christ out of their plans are deceived and deceivers. The age needs a simple faith in Christ, a simple allegiance to home, and then all that can be done to reconstruct a social order that is Christian through and through.

W. W. STALEY.

VOCATIONAL GUIDANCE

The tendency of a large number of people in their work of guiding the young in the matter of life-service is to wait too long. True, there are various opinions as to the proper time and the proper age to begin the work of vocational guidance, but the general conviction of those best competent to judge is that, in the main, workers do not begin early enough with the child. One of the principal reasons for delaying this matter is to wait and see what capabilities the child might develop, what natural ability he may seem to have. Right here is where we make a serious mistake. To wait until the life finds some course, and begins the creation of a liking for that particular thing, and then seek to change it into some other channel, means unnecessary work, and often failure. Of one thing the Christian worker may feel sure—that no effort in seeking to get a child to train and fit himself for the highest service will be lost, if even in the end the life seeks and follows the lower channel.

On one of the beautiful green mountain peaks in Vermont a clear spring of crystal water flows out near the top. How cool and refreshing is this sparkling water as it gushes out from the cleft in the rocky ledge! There are many similar springs bubbling out from the sides of these mountains, but this one teaches a great lesson. The water flowing out from this spring runs in two channels, one flows down the west side of the mountain and eventually empties into the St. Lawrence River and on through the Gulf of St. Lawrence to the ocean; the other channel flows down the east side of the mountain and eventually into the Connecticut River, and on through the Long Island Sound into the ocean. Along what different courses the drops of water entering these different channels travel! Now, a little sod there at the spring can throw the water all into one channel or the other, but after it has traveled a few hundred feet it would necessitate the removing of mighty mountains to change its course.

We need to realize that there is a time in the life of a child when a little influence will throw that life into this course or that, but pass that period and the task after that becomes nearly an impossibility. Solomon never uttered a wiser saying than "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is older he will not depart from it."

"THE MINISTER'S EMBASSY"

Text—II Corinthians 5:20: "We are ambassadors therefore on behalf of Christ, as though God were entreating by us: we beseech on behalf of Christ."

HE ministry is one of the oldest and most fundamental elements of Christianity. The plan of Christ for the propagation of the Kingdom not only comprehends it, but are made dependent upon the ministry. The records of the early Church show the existence of an accepted and authorized ministry. In the beginning the Church was admonished to know them that labored among them, and were over them.

And the ministry has justified itself. No man need to make an apology for the ministry, for it has been justified of its own work. The cheap and irresponsible gabble that we hear about the decadent ministry, or the useless ministry, represents a condition which is only in the mind of persons not well informed, or those wilfully trying to misrepresent and defeat the work of an important calling. However, as the adaptations of government has made necessary different forms of government, even though the fundamental principles have never changed, so it may be necessary for each generation of preachers to make particular adaptation of its ministry to the tasks of that age, but there will never be a change in the fundamental message and work of the ministry. There will always be need for the gospel of Christ to meet the world's needs, and the philosophy of Christ's teaching to meet the world's tasks.

FIRST: I should like to have you notice with me the emphasis Paul places in this text on the high calling of the ministry. The word "ambassador" suggests dignity. It is most suggestive of the delegated power back of a minister. Luke gives us a picture of one king trying to make peace with another, who send an embassy. Paul comprehends the high power indicated by the term: the great commission the minister has from God. He is sent as an ambassador in behalf of Christ, and he speaks as though God were entreating. He speaks for a higher order and a greater kingdom.

*Summary of an address delivered before the recent session of the North Carolina Christian Conference, by Rev. H. Russell Clem, Pastor First Christian church, Greensboro, N. C. Published by vote of Conference.

The only power that can create an ambassador is a sovereign power. When one goes as our ambassador to the Court of St. James, or the French government, he represents not the Senate or the House, but the people, who are sovereign. I believe in conferences and organizations, and I think a man who is accepted by a conference for its ministry should have a keen appreciation of the confidence reposed in him, and his life should be so ordered as to show that appreciation. But there comes to him a greater authority than any conference or Church can give, and that is from his King. He must faithfully represent the Church, but he must never forget that he represents a Kingdom which is not of this world. He speaks the will of his King. He declares and interprets the laws of his Sovereign.

The men who are now meeting in Washington in that great Conference on the Limitation of Armaments come from their countries with special and important powers and commissions. What a wonderful responsibility to thus represent and speak the will of a great nation or a great king! But I say to you that a greater King than any earthly king has spoken to the ambassador for Christ, and given him a law and a will to declare and to do. Christ said, "I came not to do my own will, but the will of him that sent me." The minister is not Christ, neither does he stand in Christ's place, but he does speak for Christ and represent Christ.

SECOND: The minister represents a country, and must endeavor to be a true copy of Christ. And I think now of His life of self-reunciation. The great temptation in which He was tried, and which typically represents the general temptations of our life—that call to selfishness, to ambition, and to power. But in all Christ said, "Man shall not live by bread alone," and "Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God." And He could say after the temptation, "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

Can a minister say these things? How we yield to the selfishness as Christ did not yield. What ambitions we have! The grind for our daily bread, to meet our obligations, to provide for those dependent upon us in old age—all these count mightily in the calculations of men. Christ knew how to relate values. He knew the relative values of things. We are tempted to take the road to selfishness, and to turn every ounce of our energy, and every asset we have, into that which will care for our physical life. The minister who can teach people, both by word and act, to so relate things in life that life may come to the highest possible fruition, and can carry the message of reconciliation to the world in a ministry as comprehensive as God intends His ministry to be, will be an ambassador on behalf of Christ, who will be a living power, and a vessel for the Master's use.

The ambassador for Christ carries a message of reconciliation. And the world is his field. He must preach a gospel that is comprehensive enough to touch all conditions of mankind and save all forms of human life, high or low. It is a great message, and a great example we have. The story of the Prodigal Son, called by many the greatest piece of literature extant, is such a consummate gist of the gospel that a minister must present it in a way so as not to appear commonplace.

THIRD: The minister is a diplomat. Up to the present time some of the other countries of the world have excelled in diplomacy, because their diplomats could use high-sounding and ambiguous phrases. However the demands of the times have stripped us of that which is superfluous, and now our own Secretary of State makes his proposition, and our proposition, with its face up. So we can see it, and so we need not have feelers to find out what it means. He reflects credit upon his country by showing his own sincerity. The minister must recommend his message by his act. Earnestness, self-forgetfulness, truth, simplicity, singleness of purpose, must all characterize the minister. Fraud, deceit and maneuver are not part of true diplomacy, neither do they belong to the plan of God to save the world.

Moreover, the minister must use the most persuasive modes and manner of speech. In his preparation, every attainment and art that helps to reach and persuade men is not only worth while, but highly to be valued. Jaques Surin, the famous French Protestant preacher of the seventeenth century, won many of his preaching victories by his oratorical manner, coupled with his directness and frankness of speech. Paul, the author of our text, appeared before Felix with hands and feet that were bound, but his art in preaching was not bound. And when he reasoned of righteousness, temperance and judgment, lifting his arms in chains he painted God, the Judge of the world, in letters of fire. And Felix' house trembled, his head began to swim, and instead of a secure throne on which he could sit in comfort, there was before him a great black river carrying him on to judgment and to death.

Too much of our preaching relates only to this life. An ambassador brings two countries together in all things that are to their mutual interests. The ambassador on behalf of Christ leads men to know the country which he represents. And he relates the life of men to that country so that when he preaches, men like Felix are shown that now is the accepted time, today really is the convenient season.

As it is the function of political science to relate certain fundamental laws, that economic and financial prosperity may come, so it is the minister's work to so relate this life to that which is to come, that we may have moral and spiritual prosperity.

Now I have only tried to suggest principles. Time would make it impossible for me to go into detail. And the minister cannot be circumscribed. He speaks for God, He may not speak as men would speak, but be that as it may, he must have a conscience void of offense toward God. Paul professed to have both toward God and men. The minister is commissioned of God, but his ministry is to and among men. He must deal with men. He lives in this world, and he preaches in this world. I believe in good common sense, as uncommon as it sometimes is, in the ministry. There is no calling in which it is as hard to make a success. To be all things to all men that some may believe, is certainly to be sensible in attitude. The minister can not ride a hobby, he can not go off on a tangent. If he does people do not take him seriously.

The suggestions I have made cover the high calling of the minister, and the fact that he represents God. He speaks instead of Christ. When he speaks it must be as if Christ were speaking. How different it is sometimes! Compare the clap-trap the piffle, the ranting, the self-advertising we some times hear, with the sermon on the mount or that profoundly solemn task of Christ at Jacob's well.

I am not unmindful, as I speak, of the fact that it is sometimes true that the ignorance of man saves him. How He can take our weak efforts, if they are true and sincere, and with His Holy Spirit bring conviction and help!

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

Our Thanksgiving offerings are coming in, and the churches so far have done well. To reach the $6,000 for this Thanksgiving will take some work and some sacrifice. I earnestly plead that you see that your church does its best in making this offering this year. Keep in mind that eighty little children we now have are looking to the church for support. Let me insist that you do not forget the fifty who are appealing to us for a home, that are turned away because we do not have the funds to support them. Six thousand dollars for a Thanksgiving offering for our church is a small offering; it would be better to make it ten thousand. Will we continue to turn a deaf ear to those appealing to us for help?

"AN APPROPRIATE HYMN"

By James L. Elderdice

Some ministers are in the habit of calling on the people to "sing something," and because they are not specific the result is sometimes more amusing than edifying. It would be well if all persons whose duty it is to choose and announce hymns would be cautious. With hundreds of good hymns to choose from it should always be easy to select something appropriate. In many cases, unintentionally or unconsciously, the random selection is a little too appropriate.

Sometimes the coincidence is furnished by the minister, because of some circumstance connected with himself. This was the case of the clergyman who married a young wife, with whom he received $10,000 and a fair prospect of more. While occupying a pulpit the first time after the honeymoon he gave out a hymn. After reading the first four verses, he was proceeding to read the fifth, beginning, "forever let thy grateful heart," when he hesitated and exclaimed, "Ahem! the choir will omit the fifth verse," and sat down.

Attracted by their pastor's evident confusion, the congregation read the verse for themselves and smiled broadly as they read:

"Forever let thy grateful heart
His boundless grace adore,
Which gives ten thousand blessings now,
And bids me hope for more."

Somewhat similar was the amusement furnished by the vicar of St. John's, Keswick. Before the services started, he was handed a lady's watch which had been found in the church yard. After making the customary announcements, he referred to the finding of the watch, which, he stated, was in the vestry awaiting an owner, and then solemnly said: "Hymn No. 110, 'Lord, her watch thy Church is keeping.'"

An unexpected coincidence in names is likely to make an awkward break in the most solemn services.

Rev. C. R. Moss, of Virginia, a Baptist preacher of considerable renown, spent a Sunday in Richmond soon after he had visited the beautiful regions around Mountain Lake, in Giles County, Va. Being invited by one of the city pastors to preach, toward the close of the sermon he gave as an illustration a vivid description of the wonderful landscape scenes which he had just beheld, and as he closed he called on the choir to sing something of their own selection. They struck up the old hymn beginning, "There is a land of pure delight," but when they reached the fourth stanza these words confronted them:

"Could we but climb where Moses stood
And view the landscape o'er."

They tried to sing, but broke down. The congregation followed their example, and the service closed in general merriment.

Two country clergymen had agreed to exchange pulpits on a certain date. One of them made the solemn announcement to his congregation on the Sabbath previous to the event: "My dear brethren and sisters, I have the pleasure of stating that on next Sunday morning the Rev. Zachariah B. Day will preach for you. Let us now sing two verses of Hymn No. 489, 'That awful day will surely come.' And it took him some time to discover why the congregation smiled.

It is well known that the English preacher, Spurgeon, had a great sense of humor. He was once conducting a prayer meeting when a family friend tiptoed to the pulpit and whispered in his ear that he had just become the father of twin boys. Mr. Spurgeon immediately announced this news to the congregation and said gratefully: "In honor of the event I will ask you to join in singing the hymn,

"Not more than others I deserve,
But God has given me more."

But it is not always the minister's connection with an event that furnishes the entertainment. There was a story told some years ago of a Scotch Presbyterian Church, some of the members of which strenuously objected to the introduction of a violin into the choir. Those in favor of the fiddle carried their point, and the hymn chosen the first Sunday after the innovation began with the lines:

"O may our hearts with joy abound
Like David's harp of solemn sound."

This caused one of the opponents to the violin to suggest with fine sarcasm that the couplet be changed to read:

"O may our hearts rejoice within Like David's sacred Violin."

A still more sarcastic Scotchman proposed the following emendation:

"O may our hearts go diddle, diddle,
Like Uncle Davy's foolish fiddle."

Amusement is sometimes afforded because of the incongruity occasioned by odd combinations between the hymn and conditions. A Methodist minister tells us that his presiding elder came to his work and preached a stirring sermon on the subject of "Hell," and after the closing prayer he called on the brethren to "sing something." A good old brother obeyed by singing:

"I want to go, I want to go,
I want to go there too."

This was very absurd, of course, but it was "something." A Boston preacher once went to preach at a country appointment. It was a rainy day, and there were but nine people in the congregation. The hymn chosen to begin the service was, "What means this eager, anxious throng?"

At the opening of a morning service the pastor called on a visiting brother to "sing something," and an old brother began to sing the old evening song:

"The day is past and gone and farther on We lay our garments by."

The pastor closed the services, and after a drive of eight miles he met another congregation at three o'clock waiting to hear the word. As he walked into the church he asked his co-laborer to give some music, and he began:

'On the hill the sun is setting,
And another day is gone.'

Going to bed in the church at 11 A. M., and the day gone in the middle of the afternoon—all this for not being specific.

For incongruity and unreality of sentiment in hymns we must go back to the eighteenth century. Here is an instance:

"Ah, lovely appearance of death!
What sight upon earth is so fair?
Not all the gay pageants that breathe
Can with a dead body compare."

It seems strange that death should have been the occasion for a touch of unconscious humor in a hymn. In the collection entitled, "Hymns, Ancient and Modern," there was, and possibly still is, the following verse:

"They do not hear when the great bell
Is ringing overhead;
They cannot rise and come to church
With us, for they are dead."

The list of things which "they" are unable to do might be indefinitely extended.

A LETTER FROM UNCLE WELLONS

Dear Brother Riddle: I have been confined to the house about three weeks with heavy cold and asthma. I do not have any signs of improvement and am almost prostrated for the want of sleep. I have not had as bad an attack in two or three years, but my appetite keeps good. I hope soon to be on the road to improvement.

J. W. WELLONS.

THANKFUL

I am thankful that today I can look over eighty-one years spent on earth with relatives and friends. Fifty-three years ago the twenty-sixth of last March Annie E. Moring and I were united in marriage at the home of James M. and Cynthia Moring, in Orange County, N. C. God gave us seven children—three boys and four girls. All of the children are living and are members of the church. So now Mrs. Clements and I take courage and press forward along the "straight and narrow way."

THE BULLETIN

THE SUN deeply sympathizes with Rev. B. J. Earp in the going of his mother on last Friday, November 2.

Pastor Clem of the First church, Greensboro, N. C., writes that he received eight new members into church fellowship last Sunday.

We have received a copy of The Brigadier, published weekly by the Enlisted Men's Club of Porte Au Prince, Haiti, sent us by Chaplain H. E. Rountree.

We have been overloaded with material for THE SUN for several weeks and will ask contributors to be patient. In the meantime, be brief, so that we may get caught up by Christmas.

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

OUR KINDERGARTEN AND NIGHT SCHOOL IN JAPAN

It was the privilege of the writer November 25 to forward to Rev. W. P. Minton, Foreign Mission Secretary, Dayton, Ohio, a check for $5,000.00, to be applied on building our kindergarten and night school in Japan.

Miss Stacey, whom our Burlington Sunday school is supporting as their missionary in Japan, is an expert in kindergarten work, and this building is a sore need. It will be used in the day for kindergarten work, and at night to teach those who are too poor, or unable in one way or another, to attend any day school. In Japan, where a State public school system reaches practically all of school age, and refuses religious teaching in all public schools, you have to try to reach the children before they come to be of school age, or the poor who can only go to school at night. We of the Southern Convention are undertaking to build this house—also to be used for church purposes—at a cost of $12,000. The other $7,000 should go to Secretary Minton at once. All who contribute to our mission fund now are having a hand in this most worthy and needy cause.

We have sent Brother Minton $9,000 during the year to build a home for our missionaries to live in—a house for which the late lamented Dr. M. T. Morrill and Dr. E. K. McCord both labored and prayed and plead.

LETTERS FROM THE WORKERS

I have just received an encouraging and hopeful letter from one of our good missionaries in Porto Rico, Rev. D. P. Barrett, in which these lines appear: "Your (and Brother Minton's) recent visit encouraged and cheered us very much. I think it would be a fine thing for the Church at home, and much better even for us in Porto Rico, to have a representative come down once a year, say, to our Annual Conference. It would certainly be an inspiration for our people, and helpful to those at home. It is worth considering." Which last line contains a worth-while idea. Our people certainly need to know more of the actual needs and wonderful opportunities in Porto Rico. And there is no better way to get these facts than by a personal visit now and then by some one interested from the home-land.

From the Mountains

Miss Emily Midyett, assisting Miss Hedgepeth in our Carroll County Christian Training School, under date of Fancy Gap, Va., November 13, writes: "Before I close I want to tell you about our Sunday school today. The day has been cold and cloudy here, and you know how far some of the people have to come. Yet there were twenty-one present, besides myself. We are studying the life of Jesus, using the Bible as our text-book. One of our girls played the organ and also taught the small children, while I taught the larger ones. I feel that if the weather permits, our Sunday school will be a success." Is not that a tribute for you to the work of Miss Hedgepeth? Only been in the mountains a little over a year, and yet has a pupil who can play the organ at Sunday school and teach a class! It is doubtful if this girl was ever in a Sunday school, or any other school, prior to a year ago.

We now have two Sunday schools in the mountains in a whole district five by five miles, where there was no school a year ago. Eternity alone can reveal what this will mean and result in, in the years to come.

NAME SUGGESTED

Mrs. W. T. Walters, Richmond, Virginia, in reply to the request in THE SUN for a name for our Mountain School, suggests "Iola Institute," or "Iola Christian Institute." In advocacy of this name Mrs. Walters writes: "I believe in honoring folks while they live, and in giving them the flowers while they can smell and enjoy them." And this addendum: "I am sending Miss Hedgepeth a box of pictures and magazines, but am to exhibit the display to our Sunday school tomorrow before sending them." What do other SUN readers think of the name? So far we are calling it our "Christian Training School" and "Our Mountain School," and "Miss Hedgepeth's School in Carroll County, Virginia," but we must soon give it a specific name. Suggestions are in order.

A CROWDED SCHOOL

We have had all sorts of delays and vexations in completing our school building at Fancy Gap, Virginia. The last trial is that of getting the roofing. This was shipped by a St. Louis, Mo., roofing company early in October—and at this writing (November 23) is still at large.

Miss Hedgepeth writes November 19: "Our school is over-run. About fifty pupils in that little (one-room) house I used last year. Miss Midyett and I are trying to teach in the same class room. Almost impossible for me to hold out under it. She is willing to keep on trying, but it is very strenuous. Am doing my best under conditions which are trying. Will go to our 'Shack' Sunday school tomorrow down the mountain. Miss Midyett will hold Sunday school here."

We have rushed all we knew how to get into that comfortable building before cold weather—but who can overcome delays in assembling material and building?

ACTIVE MEMBER'S PLEDGE

Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise Him that I will make it the rule of my life to pray and to read the Bible every day, and to support my own church in every way, especially by attending all her regular Sunday and mid-week services, unless prevented by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Savior, and that just so far as I know how, throughout my whole life, I will endeavor to lead a Christian life.

As an active member, I promise to be true to all my duties, to be present at and to take some part, aside from singing, in every Christian Endeavor Prayer Meeting unless hindered by some reason which I can conscientiously give to my Lord and Master. If obliged to be absent from the monthly consecration meeting of the Society, I will, if possible, send at least a verse of Scripture to be read in response to my name at the roll call.

LIBERTY (VANCE)

The Liberty (Vance) Sunday school has just completed a contest, which took the form of an automobile race for ten thousand miles, between a Packard and a Ford. The contest was directed by a steering committee consisting of the pastor, the superintendent, and the secretary, while the Packard side was led by Mr. G. W. Eaves, and the Ford by W. J. Bowen. And, as usual, the Ford won the race, completing the course fifteen hundred miles ahead, and the Ford winners are now waiting for the barbecue to be given by those of the losing Packard, they say. The superintendent, Mr. E. M. Newman, declares that the contest was successful in stirring up enthusiasm, in bringing scholars and teachers to Sunday school on time, in greatly increasing the offerings, and in securing several new members. The average attendance was increased from one hundred and thirty to one hundred and sixty, and on the Sunday following the contest, the attendance was one hundred and sixty-four. The offerings were increased five hundred per cent, according to the secretary.

The Liberty Sunday school on Sunday, November 27, voted to add Sunday school rooms to the church building, in order to care for its growing membership, and also in order to be better able to entertain the North Carolina Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, which meets with this church the second week of July, 1922. The people of Liberty are looking forward to this Convention and planning to do all they can to make it a success in every way. They join with President Stephenson in saying: "Meet me and mine at Liberty (Vance) in July, 1922."

A SUNDAY SCHOOL CLASS THAT DOES THINGS

We are wondering if any of our Sunday schools anywhere have a class that, during a year, does more sorts of good and helpful things than Class No. 5 of our Burlington Christian church.

It is a class of young ladies, with a total membership of thirty-one. Miss Nellie Fleming, president; Miss Maud Gunter, secretary; Mrs. L. A. Fitch, treasurer, and Brother James P. Montgomery, teacher.

Neither this writer, nor any one else outside the class, has any idea of how many good things the class did the past year, but by accident the following facts fell into my hands. They are too good to keep.

The average attendance last year was fifteen. The class holds quarterly business meetings, either in the church parlor or at the home of some member—at some other hour than the Sunday school period. There is a visiting committee whose members visit the sick and look up the absent members each Sunday. The class colors are green and white, signifying "growth and purity," and the ambition of the class is to live up to that symbol. During the past year the class sent to Miss Hedgepeth, Fancy Gap, Virginia, a box of good things to eat, and three boxes of clothing and school materials for the mountain children. The class has adopted one of these children to clothe, help and educate. It has a Christmas Savings Club of $50.00 cash. But to enumerate the sundry missionary deeds would take too much space. Look at this—and get your eyes open as to what a real class can do when it tries:

Money Raised Past Year

Sunday school expense, $91.87; Christian Orphanage, $222.36; Missions, $200.91; Chinese Relief, $31.70; European Relief, $60.00; Miss Williams (in Porto Rico), $30.00; Mountain Work, $69.25; Class expenses, $11.25; Class chairs, $14.00; Paid to Christian Endeavor, $6.85; Paid on Christmas Savings, $43.00; Balance in treasury, $2.86. Total, $784.05

We know just numbers and numbers of Sunday schools with several classes in them whose total gifts for the year do not approximate the benevolence of this one class. But where is the class in any of our churches that equals it? We are inquiring for information and writing for inspiration. Meanwhile, we are praying and hoping for more such presidents, officers and teachers as Class No. 5 of our Burlington church has.

MONDAY CLUB SERMONS

THE SUN office this year is in position to furnish the Monday Club Sermons for 1922. For forty-six years this annual volume has maintained its place as a commentary on the International Sunday school lessons. Its particular value lies in its unique analysis of the lessons afforded the higher or adult classes. The price is $2.00 delivered.

CHURCH NEWS

VALLEY LETTER

Sunday, October 30, 1921 was a great day with the Dry Run Christian church. For about a year the members and friends there had labored unceasingly to build a house of worship. They had made many sacrifices worthy of comment. When at last the beautiful new church was completed they were happy. Duty well done makes any of us happy.

The day was somewhat gloomy, but the people were happy, and a large crowd gathered for the services—many more than could possibly get in the church. Dr. J. O. Atkinson was present and preached morning and afternoon, to the great delight and edification of all who heard him. This was the genial doctor's first visit to this church, but the people will long remember the good sermons he delivered and the pleasant association they had with him while there. All regretted very much that he could not have remained longer.

On the night of the dedication day I began a revival meeting which lasted nearly two weeks. Congregations and interest were excellent throughout the meeting. Four young people professed during the meeting and united with the church, and were baptized by immersion at the close of the meeting.

I am in a meeting at Whistler's Chapel now. A splendid congregation was present last night at the opening service.

A. W. ANDES.

REV. GEORGE D. EASTES MEETINGS

Rev. George D. Eastes, who was blessed with an unusually fine meeting with our Elm Avenue church, Portsmouth, Va., writes under date of November 11, from Piedmont, W. Va., where he is aiding the pastor of the First Methodist church:

"We are having a great time here. We are in the middle of the second week only, and to date there have been 110 professions and many more than a hundred definite reconsecrations. Crowds equal to the seating capacity of the church have been turned from the doors since the third night of the meeting, and we have the largest auditorium available in a town of over 12,000 inhabitants. Pray for us. We go from here to First M. E. church, Frankton, Ind., thence to Mack Avenue Evangelical church, in Detroit."

Our Christian church here should be taking advantage of the great and good work Brother Eastes is doing as evangelist. He is safe and his methods are praiseworthy.

J. O. ATKINSON.

GREENSBORO, NORTH CAROLINA

Yesterday at the First church here we took up the offering for the Christian Orphanage. We had set the mark at $500.00, but went considerably beyond that amount. It will probably reach $600.00 as a special offering, and together with $100 yearly contributed by the men's class and the collection of the Sunday school one Sunday of each month, the total will probably reach $800.00 for the year. And this is one of the offerings outside of the regular church budget, which this year has been placed at $6,000.00.

We were surprised last Tuesday evening when the people of the church first invaded the pastor's home in a body and took possession of it for a while. It was a Southern pounding for sure. They brought flour,—sacks of it; sugar—sacks of it, canned goods, hams, and many other things, such as coffee, apples, etc.; and left word that a turkey would be sent out for Thanksgiving dinner. My, it was almost too good for a preacher, but of course mighty fine for his family.

H. R. CLEM, Pastor.

A NEW TYPE OF LUNATIC

Whenever we discover a brand new type of lunatic, the kind that makes us believe in the total depravity of man, for lack of something better to say, we use the worn out expression "all the fools ain't dead yet," and trust the inflection of our voice to carry the contempt which we feel. No vocal inflection, or expression, either new or archaic, can express the contempt which we feel for a certain kind of fool that becomes prominent at Elon each fall. We are very much grieved that our disgust is so thorough at this time that we can't give our readers something extraordinary in the way of a genteel denouncement of the particular kind of Tom-foolery we have in mind. The fact is, dear reader, we have arrived at one of those stages of righteous indignation where words fail. Here is what we started out to say:

Some insects sojourning here under the name of college students, having the appearance of normal human beings, but whose actions cause us to reflect on the habits of a long-cared quadruped of the species equus, get enjoyment out of making the campus look like a burnt hoe-cake. Just at Thanksgiving time when we were about to forgive all trespassers and become thankful for all things, some loon who hereafter shouldn't be trusted to carry matches, set fire to the fallen leaves on the front part of the girls campus and made it nice and black for the holiday occasion! Go out and look at it, whoever you are, and do your infinitesimal brain the justice of feeling ashamed of it. The girls can't walk across that charred area with white shoes, neither can they sit on the ground for relaxation as they usually do in the afternoon on good days like those around Thanksgiving were. It was a terrible sight for visitors to look upon and we suggest corporal punishment for the perpetrator of this piece of burnt leaf comedy. Tearing up pieces of paper and scattering them around in the chapel, taking candy from babies, and even shooting squirrels on the campus are praiseworthy deeds compared with this leaf burning business which so disfigures the campus and so endangers the property of the college and citizens of the town.

If any one takes offense at these expressions of our opinion, let him call around at the office and Maroon and Gold will gladly give him some more of its mind.—Maroon and Gold, Elon College, N. C.

When Mary Adams died in London after having served nearly fifty years as a servant in the royal family, Queen Alexandar sent a beautiful wreath with a few lines expressing her appreciation of the woman's service.

London's force of policewomen now number 113 members.

OFFICIAL ORGAN OF THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

VOLUME LXXIII BURLINGTON, N. C. DECEMBER 14, 1921 NUMBER 49

The Southern Christian Convention

TO MEET IN

Suffolk, Virginia

The Suffolk, Virginia, Christian church has invited the Convention, and the Executive Board has accepted the invitation.

The Southern Christian Convention will, therefore, meet in its twenty-fifth regular session in Suffolk, Virginia, on Tuesday evening before the first Sunday in May, 1922, (May 2), and close at noon on Friday.

It is very important for all delegates to be present at the opening service and remain till the final benediction.

The Executive Board hereby makes two requests:

FIRST: That the Secretaries of Conferences send to Rev. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., a full list of the delegates, with their addresses, that he may communicate with them officially and as pastor of the church where the Convention will meet.

SECOND: That the Chairmen of Boards and Committees, after consultation with other members, send to Rev. W. W. Staley, Chairman, an outline of what they wish to present in the program.

By vote of the 1920 session of the Convention, the Executive Board was authorized to decide the place of meeting, and to prepare the program. The Board will need all the help it can get in making a good program.

W. W. STALEY, Chairman,
I. W. JOHNSON,
E. E. HOLLAND,

Executive Board.

EDITORIAL OBSERVATIONS

The Conference on the Limitation of Armaments which has been in session in Washington since November 11, will likely come to a close this week. There is much speculation as to what has been done, and especially as to the worth of what has been done. It is not expected that all should agree on the things undertaken. The United States, Great Britain, Japan and France have allied themselves into a quadruple agreement to provide peace in the waters of the Pacific. The provisions of the agreement, which is in the form of a ten-year treaty, are confined to the region of the Pacific ocean. Under them the four powers are to respect each other's island possessions and to meet in consultation if a dispute arises or if the rights of any of the four are threatened by any other power. The compact becomes valid with the United States only when ratified by the Senate. Seemingly little is meant by what has been done, but it is in the hands of Christian people to hope that it may be a great beginning for the cessation of wars.

Giving a book as a present ought to be considered more than a passing act of affection or appreciation. The selection of a book is far more important than the giving of it. A great book is a great power for great good, but a bad book has its opposite effect. So often life is started and stimulated by the reading of some book. Many men could count their beginning in life with the reading of some worthy piece of literature, and likewise, those who have made failures could, if they would, point to some worthless book that led their minds and souls to low thinking and low acts. A book may be as great as a battle. It may start the reformation in the life of an individual, or it may start a reformation in the life of a community; in the life of a nation.

We believe that the prayer meeting is the one part of the church that is most difficult to handle, yet it is part of the church that is of vital importance. We pass to pastors, and any others who may be interested, an idea which we have found by reading of a church in Los Angeles, California. Instead of having the regular Wednesday night prayer meeting, they have what they call a "church night." The meeting begins at 6:30 p. m. with a dinner served under the supervision of the ladies, a few of them taking charge for a limited time and passing the honor around. The dinner is served in the basement of the church at the small cost of 35 cents per plate, as only the actual expenses are accepted from the proceeds. The young men of the Sunday school do the serving. Promptly at 6:30 the guests must be at the table, and in 40 minutes the tables must be cleared, and then a leader takes charge while the people remain in their seats. A few songs are sung and then the prayer meeting is on. We understand from reading of the account that this way of handling the prayer meeting adds largely to the social life of the church as well as religious, and that the attendance and interest have increased. Something of this kind might be worth while in many of our churches.

We give this week's front page announcement to a message from the Executive Board of the Southern Christian Convention. We feel that the announcement will be received with hearty approval by the Brotherhood. It goes without saying that the Suffolk church will entertain the Convention in royal style. Every pastor and every delegate should make a circle around May 2, 3, 4, 5, 1922, and let no small engagement conflict with this date. There are many and difficult problems to be handled at our next Convention, and we should begin now to see that we have a full representation.

Announcement comes from Washington to the effect that there are openings in the Chaplain Reserve Corps. The purpose of the Corps is to provide a reserve of officers in all branches of the military service who will be available and trained for their respective duties in the event of national emergency. Citizenship in the United States, or the Phillipine Islands, duly accredited by and of good standing in some recognized religious denomination, two years' practical experience in ministerial work, and the applicant to be between twenty-one and sixty years of age, are the requirements for appointments. Those who are interested in this field should apply to the Adjutant General of the Army or to the Chief of Chaplains for blank forms of application and such other information as may be desired.

A little journey one day last week of 130 miles across the country carried us by many community churches. The territory was all practically new to us, and each church we passed we wondered what church it was, but we had no way of knowing. Recently we called attention on this page to the marking of community churches. Practically all the churches in the cities are marked so that those who pass may know. This is not the case with the country churches. Strangers passing along may wonder what church, or churches, they are passing, but they have no way of knowing. We pass along the suggestion.

The year 1921 has 51 Wednesdays. Therefore, there will be 51 issues of THE SUN for 1921. There were 53 issues last year. We will not skip an issue for Christmas, but the issue for December 28 will be two days late.

THE BULLETIN

THE CHRISTIAN HYMNARY

For some time the Christian Hymnary has been out of print, but we are informed that a new edition will be available about January 1. The price is $1.00 the copy for single copies, postpaid, or one dozen or more copies at 80 cents.

A WONDERFUL MEETING

We have just received word from Defiance, Ohio, of a very interesting meeting held there under the personal supervision of Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, Dover, Delaware. The meeting was held December 5, 6, 7, and resulted in every student of the institution making a definite decision for some active Christian work. Twenty members were added to the life recruit list. We consider this a marvelous record.

AN EXPLANATION

Rev. A. R. Flowers, Sims, N. C., a member of the Free Will Baptist Church, who was to attend the recent session of the North Carolina Conference, but who did not get there, requests that we give the brethren the following explanation: "On account of illness, I was unable to attend the North Carolina Conference which met at Danville, Virginia. One of my special friends wrote Rev. B. J. Earp asking him to announce my sickness and give it is an explanation as to why I could not be present. I have since learned that Brother Earp left Danville before receiving the letter."

THE SMITH FAMILY BULLETIN

We have just received Volume I, Number 1, of the Smith Family Bulletin published by the Captain John Smith Memorial Association in the interests of the Smiths. Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., is vice-president of the Association, and Prof. S. M. Smith is the executive secretary. We have read with interest the first issue of this bulletin and shall take pleasure in reviewing future editions.

A VALUABLE BULLETIN

President Harper of Elon College has just issued a very valuable and interesting Bulletin. The Bulletin gives by years the graduating classes of the College, from the first graduating class to the present. It also gives a full list of all departmental graduates. So far as could be obtained, abstract information is given about each graduate—that is, his or her address who married, number of children living or deceased, accomplishments, etc. The Bulletin also gives the list of all graduates who have died, and this is enclosed in a fitting memorial page.

This Bulletin may be had without charge by application to President W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.

A CHRISTMAS SUGGESTION

Many readers of THE SUN are always anxious to secure some little book that is suitable for a Christmas gift. We have in stock this year the "Unique Envelope Series of Little Gift Books." These books will be welcomed by every one who wishes to make an inexpensive gift that will be appreciated because of its message and beauty, rather than because of its cost. These books are harmoniously printed in two colors, each with border decorations of distinct and effective design. The covers are in heavy Ganges, Onyx and other art papers, double folded and enclosed in an envelope uniform in stock, design and color with the covers, ready for mailing. We consider this to be one of the most inexpensive gifts that we have. The price is 35 cents postpaid, or four copies or more at 30 cents per copy.

A REMINDER

Each year about this time we have called attention to remembering the pastors during Christmas. Such a suggestion is unnecessary in most instances, but we know that so often at this busy season many of us overlook important matters. Remember your pastor during the Christmas season. And this: it is not the value of what you will give him that will do his heart the most good, but the love, affection, and esteem that go with it. Again we say, remember your pastor.

A SERIOUS CHARGE

Tom Watson, of Georgia, has for some time been charging that there were illegal executions during the war. At first the report was given little attention, but the information is now gaining the attention of the public and the people are becoming interested. Witnesses are being summoned before the Senate Committee in Washington and the country hopes that the charges may be made clear and the truth known.

AN INTERESTING COURT DECISION

An interesting decision of the court has just been handed down in the State of Pennsylvania in regard to a Church matter. It seems that a local Lutheran church would not consider itself a part of the United Christian Church, after the union was made about three years ago. It was the minority that voted to enter the merger, but the majority ruled otherwise. The matter was then taken to court and was decided in favor of the minority, thus giving the larger ruling body of the Church the power to control the local church. The matter is interesting from the standpoint that though a local church may have a congregational form of government, such a church is supposed to conform itself to the unity of its governing Conference or Synod.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Dairy—Part VIII.

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

Field Secretary for Missions

RIDAY P. M., September 23.—I believe this island will tear my heart to pieces before I can get out of it. In all my born days I have never had so many and such rapid conflicts of emotion, opinion and sentiment. In one moment I behold such beauty that I could fall down and cry out to God, utterly bewildered and overcome with a sense of joy and a feeling of adoration that no words can express. And then the next moment a scene of squalor, filth, poverty, pity, ruthlessly thrusts itself upon me, and I wonder if some horrible nightmare is not disturbing my happy dreams. And the shout of joy becomes a distressing scream.

The scenery from San Juan to Ponce over the mountains is of surpassing delicacy, charm, and wonder. The smooth, velvet-like mountain sides, slopes and peaks, the graceful palms growing everywhere with a friendly carpet of plush and moss about and beneath them, great, thick foliaged Mango trees standing like stately sentinels along highways and over the hills, the sweet-scented coffee groves, banana orchards, mingled here and there with blooming or bearing orange trees and coconut palms—well, if the Garden of Eden equalled this I am more than ever ashamed and humiliated to think that my first parents, Father Adam and Mother Eve, would ever, or could ever, commit a sin grave enough to be driven from it. And how they must have cried and cried and cried when they discovered that they had to be driven from it, never to enjoy its perfect and spotless and sinless beauty again! Poor, pitiable, dear first parents, why in the world did you commit that heinous crime and get yourselves driven from a place like this? I wish now I had been there and told you not to do it.

Now, all this talk about making things beautiful around you and you will get beautiful and good, is bosh. For the pitiable, tragic, killing, unspeakable poverty, filth, sin, shame, misery, that one witnesses from San Juan to Ponce, mingled with the glorious, the sublime, the happy and the wholesome, is enough to make you weep a week, if it does not make you so sick you cannot weep.

We arrived at Salinas at 6:15 this p. m., and found Miss Olive Williams, our good woman missionary here, all ready to get aboard our Ford and on to Ponce with us. We saw our ample church here, the only one in the town, save the Catholic, and shook hands with our native pastor, Rev. R. M. Sandoval. We were rushing, trying to reach Ponce by night. But we stopped at Santa Isabel a moment, shook hands with Ojeda (not Jeda but "hayda," it is pronounced. Barrett says we must pronounce j as if it were h here in Porto Rico—and I wonder why they just didn't make it h at first and be done with it) and rushed on our way toward Ponce. Whether any one other than the writer ever sees it or not, I am going to put it down in my diary here and now that one had better never get in too much of a hurry, and nervously wrought up, to get some place by a certain hour, when traveling in an automobile. We must be in Ponce by 7 p. m. because we must have a bite after a hard day's travel—and be at the Christian Endeavor welcome service at our church at 7:30. But at 7:15, yet more than a mile out—"bang" goes a fierce noise. I thought someone had shot us from ambush! Just a tire puncture, better called a "blow-out" (for it blew everybody out of that car in a jiffy). And the signal I think notified every hungry, heartless, homeless mosquito in a radius of half a mile to come in, for the feast was now ready. Four fat preachers and a good woman missionary were all there ready to give their blood, willingly or unwillingly, if the poor and the perishing of Porto Rico might be fed. While Barrett worked like a Christian at his task of mending that tire, the rest of us fought like mad warriors with those millions on millions of mosquitoes.

At eight we were greeted with gladness and a wholesome welcome by good Mrs. Barrett and the Barrett children, and without eating or drinking, hurried at once to the church.

There was vigorous and lively singing within. The Christian Endeavor was holding its weekly evening meeting and had a program and welcome prepared for us. It was all in Spanish, but the tunes were familiar. A nice, intelligent young man was presiding, and a very enthusiastic young woman was leading the meeting. There was an audience of between 150 and 200, of whom I should say at least two-thirds were young people and children. There were several old people very much interested. A junior choir of thirteen led the singing, and did it, under Mrs. Barrett's fine leadership, most effectively. They had a printed program for the occasion, and I pin a copy here to read and think over in the leisure days at home whenever I read my diary, for it is just such language as this that they are jabbering away at us here all the time:

[Readers will kindly overlook any errors in this program, especially the spelling.—Proof Reader.]

I am sure I do not know what all of that means, but no doubt it meant well for us, for we certainly did have one good time this night. Barrett introduced an old gentleman who was his original Spanish teacher, and who held the first service for us Christians in Porto Rico twenty years ago. He was reminiscent, spake in English (and I love him for that), and told the early beginning and history of our church here, and of Barrett's effort to get started. Next Barrett introduced a former principal of a high school, now a teacher in the English department of the city public schools. He is a member of our church, is twenty-six years old, is dark in color but fine in appearance, and speaks English beautifully (I fall in love with him on the spot for that). He gave the story of his own conversion. When six years old, he dropped into Barrett's meeting place one Sunday morning, attracted by the singing. He was on his way to market, whither his mother had sent him to buy some meat for dinner. He stayed so long in the service listening to the music that when he did go out and on his journey, the market was closed. He got a sound thrashing for his truancy in missing the market, and the whole family was likewise punished in having to go without their Sunday's dinner. He often "sneaked" in after that to hear the singing, but not till he had first made good his errand at the market. Six years later he became converted, and at twelve joined the church. He is a graduate of the city high school, was a lieutenant in the army during the World War, and now has a wife and two small children. He plays the organ and piano well, is a most faithful attendant upon all his church services, and when Barrett has to be away he speaks at the Sunday night service.

After these addresses and all the carryings on in Spanish, Minton and I are introduced. Minton smiles sweetly as he talks, and the whole audience, not understanding his speech, catch his smile—and all of us laugh together. O, if I could just smile that contagious smile Minton has! We both speak about ten minutes each,

Barrett interpreting for us. Now an interpreter is really a disturber. You speak a sentence and stop. Then he takes the floor and jabbars away for a sentence. Then you rise and come at it again. Then his turn. So on, till you get disgusted with yourself and sit down humiliated, while your interpreter still jabbars away, I think trying to make apologies for you and to tell the audience in their language that you really could speak in your own tongue. Brother Martin, who had been previously on the island some months, got off his greetings in a jabberish I could not understand, but the others seemed to relish it highly. After a song, a dismissal, and two hundred hand-shakes, they served ice cream, cakes, and American flags on the beautiful lawn in rear of the church. It was a happy throng of playful young folks. They had laughter and fun and frolic, and a social occasion that seemed delightful. My! how Christianity does level us all up! These people are clothed and in their right mind. If Barrett and his companion never do anything else in their lives than to bring together this well dressed, orderly, happy throng out of such surroundings, population and conditions as I have witnessed today, then he and his have built their monument that will never perish. Great heavens! I am a far older man than Barrett—used to teach him in college. But what I have done in life is nothing with his. He has come amongst a people who did not want him nor the gospel he had to offer, and has just hung right on here in their midst till hundreds have heard him with joy, and have been brought to fine, clean, wholesome, happy lives through his life. Well, I envy him. He paid the price, and I did not. I chose the easier path at home and in pleasant places. He chose the hard, the unwelcome, the sacrificial, and the heart-aches. And God has rewarded him, and is rewarding him, accordingly. Oh! for the joys of a missionary's reward!

I met the Baptist minister of the city. He is a Spaniard with an English lady for his wife, and they seem happy together, speak lovingly of Barrett and his work, and are enjoying their own work in Ponce.

At 10 p. m. we return to the Barrett home, and at 10:30 we sat down to a good old American supper—the Barretts, Minton, Martin, Miss Williams, and I. And we had some good talk, in our dear English tongue, over our pork chops, fried bananas, hot toast, preserves (lovely dulce), and glorious Porto Rican coffee. We were at it one happy hour, when Barrett had me read a scripture and Martin lead a prayer at 11:30. By 12 I am writing my last word in this diary for the day. I would be far happier if I could sit here the remainder of the night and write down what my torn heart, with its conflicting emotions, has felt this day; but duty will call early in the morning; and now, dear diary, good night, while I dream of Eden, and Adam's sin, and beauty, and mountains—and home.

A NEW HERESY

HERESY is a doctrinal departure from an established custom in the Christian faith. It becomes obnoxious, injurious, and offensive when its advocates endeavor to thrust it upon others, causing them to relinquish the faith once delivered to fathers and subscribe to these new views. This is done under the guise that the advocate is an "advanced thinker." The modern opinions of "advanced thinkers" will never be powerful enough to displace the heart of Christianity—spirituality. This principle is as old as life itself.

Intellectual attainment is a most dangerous possession if it is not seasoned by the principles of Christianity. And this does not argue that a spiritually minded person cannot be intellectual. Far be it from me to intimate such a thing. In fact, a well trained intellect, if it is dedicated to God, is calculated to give the individual a finer insight, a firmer grasp, a keener outlook, a more profound penetration into spiritual things. It gives the possessor a more far-reaching view of intrinsic and spiritual values. Spirituality, augmented by intellectuality, enables one to place more adequate value on humanity and form a more sympathetic view of God.

But, granting the foregoing advantages of the highly developed intellect, it must ever be borne in mind that the ungoverned, undisciplined, undedicated intellect is a grave danger to Christianity. For be it ever remembered that the mind may advance to the point that it will endeavor to divest Christianity of its spirituality and robe it in a garment of materialism. The Church of today faces this very situation. It has reached the crisis of its existence. It has come to the cross-roads of its journey. The cross-roads indicates that a choice must be made. Will the Church of today succumb to this intellectual pruning, or will it awake and divest itself of these intellectual appendages and fight heroically for the sacred trusts with which it has been honored?

The above is not the question of an alarmist or the alarm of the pessimist. It is the question of a modern optimist. Certainly we are living in a day of fierce competition. But competition is a good thing. It helps bring out the very best there is in any life or institution. The competitive forces of the Church will not and cannot translate themselves into a band of rejoicing victors over the Church. The Bible, the charter of the Church, outlines one rule, which, if followed, will guarantee a most glorious victory for the Church. The Bible tells us to try the spirits whether they are of God. And any spirit that shows an obnoxious and defiant disposition when subjected to the Bible test should be overwhelming defeated and driven out of the Church. Any thing that is void of spirituality has no place in the Church and has no right to be there.

The Church was established to promote Christianity and Christianity is based on spirituality. Once more let me say that spirituality is the heart and core of Christianity. Take away the spiritual asset of Christianity and you reduce it to Paganism. However, there are those in our own communion who say that "there is no spiritual life." If there is no spiritual life, then why does the Bible have so much to say about it? Answer me that, please. But the advocates of the spiritual life have occasion to rejoice over the fact that one stroke from the pen of the "advanced thinker" will not and cannot extinguish the fact of the spiritual life. For certainly this is the characteristic and distinguishing feature of Christianity. And what is more, it was the leading theme of Christ's ministry and the fundamental doctrine of His creed. He lived it, He taught it, He died for it.

The spiritual life is the fundamental requirement of spiritual insight. Only as one lives and moves and has his being in God is he capable of interpreting the Bible in the light of spirituality.

Christianity is as eternal as God Himself. It is a flower that translates itself into the fruits of a spiritual life. The unanswerable evidence of the spiritual life is its purity of conduct. An impure man cannot live the pure life or the spiritual life. Purity and impurity are not kindred spirits. The very impact of their nature constitutese a barrier between them. Divergent are their interests. Dissimilar are their purposes. Vastly different are their pursuits. Uncongenial is their meeting. One debauches, the other develops. One abhors that which is evil, the other welcomes it. One accepts the abundant life that Christ offers, the other rejects it. One is coliced by sin and debauchery, the other feeds on the bread of life. One perishes in an endless eternity, the other flourishes in the light and liberty of Heaven.

The spiritual life shows itself in its attitude to truth. It is an open and welcome door to truth. Wherever in life there is truth, it is of God. God is truth, as well as love. The only question that the spiritual life asks is: Is it the truth? If so I want it, if not I do not want it." "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Hence the spiritual life makes progress only as it adjusts itself to truth.

By its uselessness the spiritual life bears testimony to its existence. Christ's dealings with the barren fig tree give evidence of His unwillingness to countenance uselessness. A useless life means an early death. A useful life means an everlasting life.

Christianity was not born in a graveyard. It did not culminate on the Cross. It was born in heaven. It will culminate only when eternity ceases to be.

PLAIN TALK TO PLAIN PEOPLE

TREAD the other day a most remarkable story. It was given as a real fact, and not as a mere fancy picture. It follows:

A preacher was riding on a boat going toward Washington, and on that boat were a great many of the representatives of our nation on their way to Congress. The preacher was an observing man, and being thrown among these men for three or four days, he concluded that they were not very good specimens of good citizens. A certain man on that boat was a lawyer, and on Sunday morning he determined to ask that preacher to conduct divine worship on the steamer that day. Approaching the supposed preacher, the lawyer said to him:

"Sir, we would like to have you preach to us this morning. We would like to have divine worship on the Sabbath day." The minister answered: "You do not want me to preach to you fellows, do you?" The lawyer replied: "Yes, sir, we desire to have divine worship on the Sabbath."

The minister finally consented, and while preaching to them he said: "If I am to judge the character of our nation by the character of our representatives, I would decide that we are a nation of drunkards, gamblers and blasphemers. I have been on board this boat three or four days, and I have seen nothing but drunkenness, card-playing, gambling and swearing." And then, in his own way, he rubbed in what he had said in a most substantial way. He knew that these men were representatives of the nation, and on their way to Washington, and he determined he would rebuke sin as he stood face to face with it; and he did, but he felt sure it would offend, but he was not afraid. As soon as the sermon was over he hurried to his cabin, not waiting for congratulations from his auditors, and as he went, he was thinking to himself, and if the thoughts had been put in words it would have been something like this: "I have put the fat in the fire now. I will hear from this."

Sure enough he did. He had not been in the cabin long when he heard a knock on his door; and upon opening it, saw before him the lawyer who had asked him that morning to preach for them. To the real astonishment of the preacher, the lawyer handed him a purse of gold and said: "Sir, we want to give you this as a small token of appreciation of your earnest words of reproof this morning."

The preacher was so overcome that he could scarcely thank the man. Meanwhile the lawyer continued: "I have been requested to ask you if you will submit your name as possible chaplain of the Senate of the United States." The preacher answered: "You do not want a fellow like me to preach for you, do you?" The reply was: "If we had more honest men to show us our faults, we would be better men than we are." What a reward for great faithfulness to these men in telling them the truth! Oh, if we only had a plenty of such brave men in the pulpit of today, how different it would be even now from the scene of that boat!

If we preachers could bring ourselves to believe that honest men, whether Christians or not, like to hear the truth, and then be brave enough to face the men of the world with the truth, the state of the world today would be so different from what is, and to the credit of the ministry and the Church. It is the bad man who does not like to have the truth made plain—it hurts his dishonesty.

FEAR GOD IN YOUR OWN VILLAGE

RICHARD MORSE was a young man just finishing college, university and seminary. He had had one year's experience as a social survey investigator for the United States, and was now accepting what he thought was a unanimous call as pastor of a church in Hilldale and also to become secretary of the Hilldale Neighborhood Association. The church not being able to employ a pastor for full time, it joined with the Neighborhood Association and secured one man in the dual capacity of resident minister and director of the Association—a combination of religious and social work in a rural community. The community had about one thousand inhabitants, consisting of farmers, real estate dealers, merchants, masons and other laborers. The chief business establishments of the community consisted in repair shops, stores, and seven saloons. There were two churches and a school in the community. Richard Morse came to this community, which he termed an average community, with "a wealth of theory inside of me and a wealth of experience before me."

At the conclusion of his second service in the Hilldale church, Deacon Gordon informed Pastor Morse that he had "just about won Deacon Bostick over." "Won him over?" I said. "To what, from what?" "Why, he is the only member of the consistory holding out against you. When he gives in we will give you a call and make it unanimous. We were just trying you out." Parson Morse replied, "And you think that I have been here simply candidating for this church these last four weeks!" "Of course." "Well, let me tell you something. I am not candidating. I don't give a lonesome whether Deacon Mostick or anybody else wants to vote for me or not. This church is not choosing or rejecting me. I am choosing it. I have come here to put the fear of God in it. I am going to stay, votes or no votes." "Good for you," replied the Deacon, but be sure the town doesn't put the fear of man in you."

Parson Morse went away with a chip on his shoulder, and later decided to kick himself for carrying it, and then to get down on his knees and ask forgiveness, but found his knees would not bend and his lips refused to utter anything but imprecations against Deacon Bostick and his ilk. He quizzed himself as to what right they had to think that a minister should please them. He had come as a pastor to a church with twenty-three members, and only fifteen of them living in the community. "In fact the church was only walking around to save funeral expenses. After arguing ten minutes to the walls of the room, I decided that I was right, since I got no reply, and I was going to see what could be done in one country town. In fact, I was going to set the world afire. What right had the kindling to say it would not burn? It ought to be proud to have a part in the conflagration! Then I heard a whisper, 'Be careful that the town doesn't put the fear of man in you.'

The beginning of a review of "Fear God in Your Own Village," by Richard Morse. It is a true experience of Mr. Morse.

ELON LETTER

HE Christian Church made no mistake in making the Scriptures our rule of faith and practice. Jesus Himself said, "Search the Scriptures." The antidote of infidelity, agnosticism, atheism, anarchism, autoeracy, materialism, militarism, and all other "isms" hurtful to the spiritual life of man and the race, is "to search the Scriptures." So also the way to growth and development and enlargement in the things of the Spirit is by the same pathway. A revival of Bible study always brings a revival of religion.

I have read recently of two noted infidels, both of them learned lawyers, who had noteworthy experiences in searching the Scriptures. I refer to Gilbert West and Lord Lyttleton, of England, in the days of Deism's triumph in that country. They met one day and agreed that they could not maintain their position against Christianity (for Deism accepts God, but denies revealed religion) unless they could disprove the resurrection of Jesus and the conversion of Paul, as those two mighty bulwarks of our faith are set forth in the Bible. So they entered into a compact honestly to study the records and then to expose the whole fraud in two books, West undertaking to disprove the Master's resurrection, and Lyttleton, Paul's conversion.

They set out on their investigations, not meeting for some time, working independently. One day they met and West said he was troubled. His investigation was about to convince him that Jesus did rise from the dead. "I am glad to hear it," said Lyttleton, "for I have concluded according to the evidence that Paul was actually converted as is related in the Acts of the Apostles." Both men wrote their books, both books were scientific defenses of the Bible, and may be found today in many libraries. But what is better still, both men became devout, earnest Christians. The tide of Deism was turned and searching the Scriptures did it.

In our own country we have a similar witness. General Lew Wallace was an atheist. He was an honest man, accustomed to weighing evidence and to looking at both sides of a question. So he took up the Bible and studied it carefully. He became a Christian, and that noble story of the early Church, Ben Hur, was the result, a book that has led many a soul to Jesus and strengthened the hope of many another weak and wavering disciple.

Therefore I rejoice in the growing interest in Bible study as evidenced by the mounting sales of Bibles. When I was a boy, not every member of the family had his individual Bible. The large family Bible was considered ample, until the children started to college or to a residence somewhere else, but now every child is provided his own Book and urged to read it daily. The Christian Endeavor Society and the Y. M. and Y. W. C. A.'s deserve grateful recognition for their efforts to make Bible reading and meditation a personal Christian responsibility and privilege.

Let me close with a practical suggestion: If every member of your family does not have a Bible, what better gift for Christmas could you give than a copy of God's Word to each child? If you know a friend without a Bible, why not give him one? And personally, if you do not read the Bible you own, why not resolve to do so daily, setting aside each day a brief space for searching its uplifting pages and meditating on its heartening truths? A man recently told his wife that when he saw her face he loved everybody. When we see God's face and feel His presence as we prayerfully study His Book, we cannot hate anyone. Bible study will sweeten life as well as lead to Him.

W. A. HARPER.

THE BIBLE AND THE OPEN COUNTRY

IFFERENTLY from all other books the Bible responds to the attitude of mind with which it is approached. The missionary finds it a Book of missions, the preacher a Book for sermons; the evangelist sees its evangelism, the theologian its theology, the minister its ministerings, the painters its pictures, and the singer its songs. Most of us have read it from many of these viewpoints, and still others unmentioned. Many times unconscious, and often consciously, I have read it in recent years as a lover of the open country.

The Bible is full of imagery which has little significance to those who are unmindful of rural scenes and country settings. From the Garden of Eden to the Isle of Patmos it never ceases to pass in one grand review mountains, plains, trees, gardens, flowers, vineyards, and fields! Behold the tent of Abraham pitched high up in the hills of Palestine amid the oaks of Mamre. There, away from the Babel-society of brick and mud, Abraham met the messengers of God and entertained them as a friend of God beneath those majestic trees. Out there, unhindered by the towers of men, he was enabled to gaze into the midnight blue of that eastern starry sky and receive the promise of Jehovah. What majestic trees those oaks of Mamre were, beneath whose abundant shade was the ancient meeting-place of God with man! From this lofty plateau Abraham prayed for Sodom and witnessed in sorrow its burning.

Behold the pictures beautiful behind such phrases as "the rose of Sharon," "the lily of the valley," "the voice of the turtle-dove in the land," "the dew which lay thick on Hermon," "the cattle on a thousand hills," "the perfume of Lebanon," "the lilies of the field," "the early and latter rain," "the valleys covered with flocks," "the plowman," "the reaper," "the barns," and "the bright and morning star." Behold Moses, by adoption an Egyptian prince,—cultured, learned, gallant, God-fearing, young,—a stranger newly arrived into the pasture lands of Midian, with the odors of the imperial courts of the Pharaohs still upon him,—assisting the daughters of Jethro as they water their father's flocks. Or behold the beautiful Rebecca, coming to the well at eventide, with the glow of the setting sun in her hair and a fitly moulded pitcher in her hands! And more beautiful yet is the picture of the tired and travel-worn Savior sitting quietly and all alone upon the curb of Jacob's well, awaiting the return of His disciples from the city of Sychar. "And Jacob's well was there. Jesus therefore, being wearied with his journey, sat thus upon the well." What brief words! Words of the beloved disciple! What a picture for angels and men to gaze upon! What brief, sweet solitude, and what hallowed memories must have flooded His soul as He sat upon that ancient curb! The Living Water flowing above the perishing water of which Jacob drank and gave his cattle over a thousand years ago! The sinner-woman of Sychar entered that holy scene and retired a saved evangel for her city.

Driven oftentimes from the city, Christ found solace in little Bethany homes or amid the fields where bowed the bending grain at His passing. Looking westward from Mt. Olivet across the fertile fields and vineyards of the valley of Kidron to Jerusalem, he wept. He had come unto His own, and His own had received Him not. Sidney Lanier expresses it thus:

"Into the woods my Master went,
Clean forspent, forspent.
Into the woods my Master came,
Forspent with love and shame.
But the olives, they were not blind to Him,
The little gray leaves were kind to Him:
The thorn-tree had a mind to Him
When into the woods He came."

The Law was given to Moses on Sinai's solitary summit; Christ died outside the city on Calvary's heights; but the Apostles, the divinely appointed bearers of the finished Good News, carried it into the very centers of the biggest cities of the earth. So if the country can be said to be the place of holy plantings, the city is Paul's "open door," the test of the first ripe fruit of the fields, the scene of battle where a citadel is taken for God.

SUFFOLK LETTER

HE Philathea Class of the Suffolk Christian church was organized October 27, 1913, with thirteen members, and Col. J. E. West teacher. Mrs.

I. W. Johnson was elected as president, Mrs. R. O. Harvey, secretary. The class is now eight years old and has entered upon its ninth year. The officers have been changed many times, but the teacher is the same. Mrs. T. A. Barbee is president; Mrs. A. D. Brinkley is secretary; Senator J. E. West is teacher, and Mr. L. P. Holland, Attorney at Law, is assistant teacher. The class has membership, visiting, and social committees, and the usual helpers in official positions.

At the end of the first year the membership had grown to seventy-eight and the offerings to $129.21, and a $10.00 membership had been taken in the Christian Missionary Association. This was continued for three years, and then the class took two memberships, or $20.00 a year, and this continues to the present time.

At the end of the third year offerings had reached $291.66, and the work of the class had kept pace with the financial growth. The class gives $25.00 annually to the Christian Orphanage as a Christmas donation. They have also sent a box to the Mountain work.

In 1917 the class subscribed $200.00 to the Mission Fund raised by J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary; and the same sum of $200.00 to the Standardization Fund for Elon raised by Dr. W. A. Harper, President of the College. These are paid by annual installments of $40.00 a year to each fund, making $80.00 annually. The class recently gave $100.00 to the anti-tuberculosis fund, in addition to the above yearly payments. The class now numbers one hundred and four women who are not only active in many lines of religious service, but really enjoy the work.

They hold monthly meetings on Monday night after the fourth Sunday of each month as a social feature of the class. They usually have a program for these social meetings and refreshments. To say that Senator West is as much interested in his class as he is in the Virginia Senate is not an over-statement of his interest.

The class has a separate room for its work, a piano, Bibles, desks, and is well equipped for its comfort as well as its work.

The modern Sunday school, with its departments and organized classes is developing activities in Christian service never dreamed of under the old methods; but this is no criticism on the Sunday school of fifty years ago, for, without the schools of that day, the schools of this day would be where they were. The growth is in harmony with the progress made in agriculture, mechanics, transportation, manufacture, education, housebuilding, and every modern convenience. We are moving forward steadily, but surely, notwithstanding the changes introduced into social, religious and political life after the World War. The Sunday school will one day be more powerful in training for service than the military schools have ever been; but it may be many years before the results of such a prophecy become real history; but when that time does come, peace conferences will mean the reign of peace among churches, nations, and races. An organized Sunday school class is a good field in which to cultivate the graces and virtues of fellowship and peace. If you do think so, try it in your school.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Sunday, December 18: Paul's Last Words—II Timothy 4:6-18

Golden Text: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith."—II Timothy 4:7.

"Life is a battle—fight it bravely; life is a course—run it eagerly; life is a faith-keeping—hold it firmly; but do not think to win the righteousness by your battle, by your race, or by your faith-keeping; God will give it to you; it is his free gift if you simply love Him and wish to see Him."—Dr. Lyman Abbott.

"And if, today, this life of mine
Should ebb away,
Give me thy sacrament divine,
Father, today.
So for tomorrow and its needs
I do not pray;
Still keep me, guide me, love me, Lord,
Through each today."

"The boy who, after a course of lessons upon the life to Paul, spoke of him as a 'man who stuck to his job and worried through all obstacles and came out on top,' had grasped the great significance of his life."—Tarbell's Teachers' Guide.

"Judged by his influence of human history, no human life is entitled to more admiration for what it has done or is indeed more worthy of admiration for what it was." This is the comment of the great Henry Drummond on the life of Paul.

December 18: Conscience: Teaching It, Quickening It, Obeying It—Prov. 20:27; Acts 4:13-20

THOUGHTS FROM GREAT MINDS

"Labor to keep alive within your breast that little spark of celestial fire called conscience."—George Washington.

"Conscience is the voice of the soul."—Jean Jacques Rousseau.

"Conscience is that matter within which warns us when we are tempted to do wrong, and points out the right path. It is the guide of life and duty, and it is of the utmost importance that we obey the voice of conscience, for disobedience to it means the ruin of our character and life. Conscience makes clear to us what are our responsibilities."—James Terry White.

"There is a line by us unseen,
That crosses every path;
Which marks the boundary between
God's mercy and His wrath.

"The conscience may be still at ease,
The spirit light and gay;
And that which pleases still may please,
And care be thrust away.

"Oh, where is that mysterious line
That may by men be crossed,
Beyond which, God Himself hath sworn
That he who goes is lost?"

"An answer from the skies repeats,
'Ye who from God depart,
Today, O hear His voice, today repent,
And harden not your heart.'"

OUR JUNIORS

Is Junior Christian Endeavor worth while? If this question ever crosses your mind, just ask one of our enthusiastic, active Juniors in Raleigh or Henderson or Elon College or in any one of a score more places where our Junior Endeavorers are really working, if we do not hear very much about them. In many places this organization, superintended by a consecrated man or woman, is making a valuable contribution to the Christian education of our boys and girls. That church is wise which is insuring its future by training the leaders-to-be in a Junior Christian Endeavor Society.

The LaGrange, Georgia, church has a new Junior Society. The children there are an enthusiastic group. Their secretary, Miss Lottie Humphrey, has just sent in the following chorus which this Society sings often and well, and she expresses the wish that the little song may help other boys and girls as much as it has helped our LaGrange Juniors. Here are the words. (Tune: "I'm Forever Blowing Bubbles.")

"I'm forever finding comfort
In a loving Savior's care,
When clouds arise
He clears the skies,
My every need He satisfies.
There is nothing sweeter—
I've looked everywhere,
I'm forever finding comfort
In a loving Savior's care."

Henderson, North Carolina, has a Junior Endeavor Society which is doing splendid work. One of the new Sunday school rooms furnishes a fine meeting place. These boys and girls are busy learning parts of the Bible and so earning the "String of Pearls."

Elon College Junior Endeavor Society is making good progress, with Miss Mildred Kirkland as superintendent and Andrew McCauley as president.

What is your Junior Society doing?

Junior Endeavor Superintendents will be glad to know that a new Junior Manual, written by Rev. Robert P. Anderson, has been published recently. The book is proving to be a great blessing to Junior workers everywhere. The book covers every phase of Junior work, and is the best help to be found anywhere for this work. Some of the subjects treated are: "The Child; Morals and Religion; the Superintendent's Task; Organization and Equipment; Officers; Committees; How to Conduct a Junior Meeting; the Junior Educational Program; Bible Drills and Memory Work." This book is published by the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston, Massachusetts, and costs $1.00. Ask Rev. C. B. Riddle to get one for you, and inject new life into your Junior Society of Christian Endeavor, or begin a new work in your church. Miss Nellie Fleming, Burlington, N. C., Secretary of Junior Work for the North Carolina Convention, will answer questions regarding this work, and the Field Secretary is always glad to hear from "Our Juniors."

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

The goal for the Thanksgiving offering is six thousand dollars. So far we have received $2,114.89 toward reaching this goal. Has your church made its offering? If not see that it makes its offering, and mail it in. We want to reach this goal before we close the books for this year. I know we have had three rainy Sundays right in the Thanksgiving season, but this should not hinder us from making our Thanksgiving offering, even if you were kept away from church on account of the rain. Mail your check direct to the Superintendent if your church has already made its offering. Everybody ought to give as much as the value of one day's work toward the support of the unfortunate children. They need your love and your help. If nobody cares, what will the little orphans do? If somebody cares and you don't, that does not relieve you of your part in the great work for humanity. Do your part is the only satisfaction you can get, and satisfy your conscience.

Christmas will soon be here. Eighty little children are looking to the Christian Church and to those who do care, for a Christmas present. I am wondering how many churches have decided to give them a treat.

If our people could be present when we open a Christmas box and call each little fellow's name and hand him a present that some loving hand has prepared especially for him and see the happy smile it brings to that face and the joy that fills his heart, you would never let a Christmas pass without sending a box and a present for the children.

Every church in the Southern Christian Convention could easily send a box for Christmas. Members of the churches in the country have plenty of chickens, and how easy it would be for each one to give just one

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

- 1 The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of church membership.
- 5 The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

chicken—practically no sacrifice—but what a blessing it would be to the children here! I wish I had the power of speech so I could talk to our people and get them more interested in the work here, and get them to see a vision of the great opportunity of service in this work. Perhaps if I had greater ability in handling the pen, so that I could express in more beautiful language the cause of the orphan children who are pleading to our Church for a home, our people might become more interested.

I do my best. I give my best. I give my time, my thought, my energy and my life. What more can I do to enlist our Church in this great work for the Master's cause? Still we have churches that never give a penny. We have church members who never make a contribution.

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

A "GIVING" OR A "GETTING" CHRISTMAS

In our Sunday schools, teachers have the power to mold character that shall be free from greed and self-seeking, and shall be ever more and more Christlike. Every Sunday's work in the school should see more and more of such characters.

Have our Sunday school teachers thought of it? Perhaps this month they can and will take a forward step that will carry the children a long way ahead in this direction.

Many, many of our schools have had the custom of a Christmas tree or treat with presents given by a benevolent cotton-bearded Santa to all the school. How the children look forward to it! But just think a minute. Is it to giving or getting that the children look forward? Are they in this act and exercise being trained to selfishness or unselfishness?

It is not to be said that a Christmas tree or treat is a mark of selfishness. Maybe the Sunday school has inherited the idea or tradition from the days when this exercise was the only evidence of friendliness or benevolence the children had. Then, indeed, a Christmas of giving toys, a red apple, a luscious orange, and other joy-bringers was the right sort of Christmas.

But now when many if not all the children receive from several sources more than the school gives, would it not be worth while to "face about" for Christmas, and help the pupils to receive that which is the greatest gift of all, the spirit of the unselfish Christ who ever gave Himself.

Why not plan a "giving" Christmas for your Sunday school? Have an exercise that brings out the needs of other children for whom Christ gave Himself, but of whom they have never heard. Let your school give these needy ones a chance to learn of the Christ Who gave us Christmas. They have no Christmas in non-Christian lands.

Why not our schools—your school—join in a crusade of giving Christmas to those who never heard of such a glad day? Herein is true joy for your school—and seeds of real life and growth.

CHRISTMAS SUNDAY

This year Christmas comes on Sunday. Let's make it a real Christmas in all our Sunday schools, and in every class of the school. This can and should be done. Our Southern Convention, and all our Sunday School Conventions, have voted that one offering a month in the Sunday school should go to missions—one-half to home, one-half to foreign. Many schools are doing this. Let them make the fourth Sunday of December Mission Sunday—and let the whole offering go to Missions. Then many schools feel so poor they cannot yet see their way clear to give the offering of one Sunday a month to missions. Well, now, can they not give one Sunday in the year? Make a Christmas gift to missions. This is the most fitting and appropriate gift one can make at Christmas; for we would have had no Christmas at all but for Him Who said, "Go ye into all the world." Let's carry Christmas into all the world.

A VITAL QUESTION ANY SUNDAY SCHOOL TEACHER MAY ASK THE CLASS

About this time of the year, or a little later, why do people who cannot afford it go on frantic shopping expeditions into over-crowded stores to buy useless trinkets for friends who do not need them? Will it not be better and more joyous to give the money formerly spent in such a fashion to sending the gospel of glad tidings to the 500,000,000 children who wait in darkness and have no Christmas cheer or smile or joy at all—because they have never heard of Him Who gave us Christmas?

WHY NOT?

In planning Christmas for your Sunday school why not bring to the school a knowledge of "The Hope of the World," as represented by her 500,000,000 children who have never heard of Him who gave us Christmas, and in Whose name we celebrate and rejoice?

Do you know that 100,000,000 of them are bound by caste, because of Hinduism?

Do you know that 70,000,000 of them bow to idols in Buddhist temples?

Do you know that 150,000,000 of them are chained to the dead past by Confucianism?

Do you know that 80,000,000 of them are fettered by the darkness of Mohammedanism?

Do you know that 100,000,000 of them sit in the darkness of Paganism?

You may not have known these things previously, but now you know. And now that you do know, you want to share, don't you? Of course you do.

Think of this: We can have the chance of sharing our Christmas with the children of the world.

Doesn't this stir your hearts? For there are so many needy children in the world today, and we cannot pretend to be happy at this glad season of the year if we know that they are in sorrow.

THE WORK GOES FORWARD

Miss Hedgepeth has had no end of trouble in getting the roofing for our Mountain school house at Fancy Gap, Virginia, though the shipment was made long since. We are hopeful of its arrival daily. The Secretary was in Raleigh recently and placed the order for the furnishing of the building—desks, chairs, maps, blackboard, —and a good sized bell for the tower. Stoves and hardware were purchased in Mount Airy. Our little storehouse building in which Miss Hedgepeth taught last year is old, dilapidated, uncomfortable and inadequate. Yet two are trying to teach in the one small room more than fifty pupils.

WOMEN AND THE KINGDOM

WOMAN'S MISSION BOARD OF VIRGINIA VALLEY CENTRAL CONFERENCE MEETS

The Board for Home and Foreign Missions met Wednesday, November 16, at the home of the Misses Byrd in Harrisonburg, Va. The president, Mrs. Boyd Richards, conducted a short devotional service, after which plans and needs were discussed by all present.

One great need seems to be more societies among our women and young people. Another need no less apparent is some one to take the lead and keep a society alive after it has been organized.

It was suggested that each church have a special thank offering day for missions some time during the year, whether they have a society or not.

Mrs. A. W. Andes, Superintendent of Young People's Department, will try to get her Young People's Societies to raise the $200.00 for the mountain work, then $50.00 for the Orphanage, and then to help the Women's Societies to raise $500.00 for the Kindergarten and Night School in Japan, and the China educational and evangelistic field.

Plans were made to arrange special meetings at some of the churches in the near future, and have the president to meet with them and give a talk on our work.

The Board adjourned, to meet at Conference at Joppa in August, 1922.

MRS. B. F. FRANK, Secretary.

A TIMELY CALL

Mrs. W. A. Harper, President of the Woman's Board of the Southern Christian Convention, under date of November 23 sends out a worthy call which, it is hoped, will be read and appreciated not only by the membership of the Woman's Missionary Department, but by individuals in the churches generally. The women are undertaking a most stupendous task, and a most worthy one, to raise $25,000 for missions in two years; and a thank offering, which is the appeal of Mrs. Harper's letter, will largely aid in this task. We presume that the ministers and churches have received one of these letters, but there may be individual members who have not, and on that account I am asking THE SUN to print the same herewith for the benefit of any who may desire to respond. The appeal is as follows:

Each church of the Southern Christian Convention is asked annually to give its membership opportunity to make a Thank Offering for the Woman's Missionary Department. If there is a missionary organization in the church, it will of course look out for the offering and report it through its treasurer. If there is no missionary organization, the pastor or some local leader is urged to give this matter sympathetic attention.

The Woman's Board has set as its goal $25,000 for two years, or $12,500 a year. We can reach it if every church will aid us by making the special offerings we ask for. The receipt of this letter is an urgent request to you personally to look after this offering in your congregation. We ask that the offering be made during December and reported either to the local woman's treasurer or to Mrs. W. T. Walters, 3115 Garland Avenue, Richmond, Va., who will credit the proper Conference Treasurer on her books.

Please, dear friend, help us in this great work, and so help the Kingdom of our Christ.

Assuring you of our appreciation, I am, for the Southern Christian Convention Woman's Board,

Yours sincerely and prayerfully,

MRS. W. A. HARPER.

Very many of our churches, pity so say, are not yet blessed with a missionary society of any kind. Let us hope that this will not be so forever. But in every church it is presumed that there are at least some individuals who have the missionary vision and who care for our Lord's commission. These can have a part in this "Thank-offering."

GRAHAM AND PROVIDENCE CHURCHES

Graham and Providence Christian churches, both located in the town of Graham, N. C., have been served well and faithfully during the past four years by Rev. F. C. Lester. Brother Lester retired from the work on October 1 to enter Yale Divinity School. Brother Lester provided for the services during the month of October, and, by request of the churches, I agreed to provide for the services during the months of November and December, without salary, agreeing to do at least half of the preaching, and finding others to do the other half. The churches have two services each, with both morning and evening meeting.

I have been assisted by Revs. W. M. Clem, H. W. May, students in Elon College; Dr. J. O. Atkinson, our Field Secretary of Missions, and Rev. W. F. Galloway, a retired minister of the Methodist Episcopal church. (Brother Galloway is a gospel preacher of the old school, and stirs his audiences with a great spiritual message.)

The two churches have been anxious to secure a resident pastor, and just at the time when the committee ex-

CHURCH NEWS

OUR FRANKLINTON WORK

We were visited on the third Sunday in November by Rev. D. A. Long, D. D. This was an off-day so far as the other churches of the town are concerned, so we had many in our congregation of other denominations, and would have had an overflowing house had the weather been favorable. Dr. Long was at his best and gave us two of his most inspiring sermons—one following the other—based upon the life and activities of St. Paul. Old men were heard to remark, "I never before heard such a comprehensive exposition of any Bible character."

At the close of the evening service, Dr. Long announced that he was in the hands of the church, and that if it was our wish he would remain in our midst for a few days and continue preaching services. Our church quickly voted to accept the Doctor's offer. So services were continued each evening till the close on Thanksgiving Day. There had been no previous intimation of such services, yet the people of the town responded beautifully. Baptists and Methodists seemed to vie with us in showing their sense of appreciation of the spiritual messages of such high order as delivered by our beloved Brother Long.

Our own church has, perhaps, profited most by such a series of sermons. We have been strengthened and encouraged beyond expression. There is no division of sentiment among our membership—no confusion—no disappointment—all is harmony and brotherly love. Whether Dr. Long determines to heed the call extended him to serve this church as permanent pastor for this Conference year, or whether other arrangements are made, we are determined, through His grace, to hold together and push forward to completion of the work which our Mission Board has enabled us to begin—the erection of a house of worship for our church in this place. Brethren, pray for us.

GEO. T. WHITAKER,
Church Clerk.

Rev. S. L. Beougher

hausted its every information as to an available man, I received a letter from Rev. S. L. Beougher, 2305 Highland Avenue, Tampa, Florida, saying that he desired work in our Southern Convention. By permission of the pastoral committee of the churches, I entered into correspondence with Brother Beougher, which resulted in a unanimous call by the churches, and he is to arrive about December 16 and hold his first service on Sunday, December 18.

Brother Beougher is a member of the Eastern Indiana Christian Conference, and has held pastorates at Vaughansville, Ohio, Lynn, Massachusetts, and other places. For some time he has been in Florida in the interest of his wife's health, but she now being well, he desires to enter upon active work again.

POUNDED

The Woman's Missionary Society of Palm Street church met in its regular monthly meeting Saturday evening, November 26. After the business session was over we were invited to the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Hinshaw, where we met with quite a number of members and friends. Dr. W. C. Wicker was present and the people were delighted to have their former pastor and friend with them. After a short while of enjoyment, we were invited into the dining room, led by Brother Hinshaw and Dr. Wicker. When all had formed a circle around the table, the lights were turned on, and behold, the table was a beautiful scene, decorated with various articles, namely: 10 yardsingham, 2 yards lawn, 5 cans pickles, 2 cans preserves, 1 quart can vinegar, 1 can jelly, 2 five-pound buckets lard, 1 can pineapple, 2 cans cherries, 1 can pumpkin, 1 can kraut, 1 can tomatoes, 6 cans peaches, 30 pounds sugar, 1 pair hose, 1 table cloth, 4 handkerchiefs, 1 doiley, 1 spool thread, 4 yards lace, 2 towels, 5 cakes toilet soap, 1 cake laundry soap, 1 cake shaving soap, dried fruit of various kinds, and rice.

Dr. Wicker presented these things to us, and we were unable to express our thanks for such a wonderful gift.

The people are showing their appreciation for our work. May the heavenly Father bless and prosper such liberal hearted people, and help me, as pastor, to render a more efficient and effective service.

Sunday morning Dr. Wicker preached to the Junior Sons and Daughters of Liberty. Sunday evening he preached for us, and his message was well taken among the people.

G. C. CRUTCHFIELD, Pastor.

Eaton College, N. C.

OUR FIRST

During my ministry of nearly ten years, I have been a constant reader of my own and a number of other Church papers. During this time I have often read of pastors being pounded, coated, hatted, shoed, etc., and have wondered just how a pastor felt when, like a whirlwind, a crowd of folks came piling in with their arms full of something good for the pastor and his wife. Well, I know now, even though no words of mine can express that feeling of gratitude. Here's the way the people of Raleigh did the stunt in fine fashion:

Sunday morning, November 27, Brother Osear Summers inquired of the pastor and his wife what night during the week would be most suitable for a visit to the parsonage—stating that he and his family wished to call for a personal visit. Tuesday night was set for the visit, and they came, but the family had increased from about nine to between fifty and seventy-five. Deacon J. W. Pool led the way with a bag of flour under his arm, marched into the study, and dropped the bag in the middle of the floor. Others followed, and still they came—every one carrying something in his or her hands—men, women, boys and girls, kept coming until the study and adjoining room were filled with folks; and all had come just to pay a social call to the pastor and his wife, and at the same time remember their needs in the home. The happy company spent an hour singing, laughing, and having a good time, and left informing the pastor that they just came for a little visit.

Well, they left us wondering, and not only that, they left our pantry filled with flour, sugar, coffee, tea, cocoa, canned goods, cereals, meats, soaps, and even sent along a dressed chicken for the preacher's breakfast. But they left more than that—for they left their love with a speechless pastor and his wife, who have no words by which to express their appreciation of the love and respect of these dear people.

I wish I could tell how a preacher feels at an hour like this, but the only thing I can say is that there are some things God does not mean for us to express our thanks for, in mere words. This is one of them, and the only way we have of expressing our appreciation of it all is to do it with a deeper consecrated life of service—for certainly no words of ours can ever express our deep sense of appreciation to these dear friends. It was our first, and no one knows how much closer and stronger it binds a pastor and people together, except those who experience it. May God's richest blessings be upon these dear friends and people of ours, and help us in some way to repay them in better service than we have ever been able heretofore to render.

THANKS

I desire to express my appreciation through the columns of THE SUN to Brother J. I. Branch and family for a sack of nice sweet potatoes. It makes my heart rejoice because of the kindness of those to whom I have preached in former days. May the richest blessings rest and abide with Brother Branch and his family, is the prayer of their former pastor.

SOLEMN VOWS

SMITH-DERROW

On October 31, 1921, I united in matrimony Mr. James C. Smith and Miss Bessie V. Derrow. They are residents of the vicinity of Concord Christian church. The marriage took place at the home of a friend in Harrisonburg, and was witnessed by a few intimate friends and relatives. Soon after the ceremony the happy couple took the train for Washington, to spend a few days sight-seeing. They will reside at the home of the groom, who is engaged in farming.

Mrs. Smith is an active member of the Concord church. May their lives be useful and happy as they travel life's pathway together.

Christmas Meditations

The Editor

THERE is a saying that the baby rules the home. Every member of the household loves the baby. A baby is the symbol of innocence. It loves with a love that is open and true. A baby in the home is a mediator in many would-be domestic frictions. A baby turns the house into a home and smoothes out more wrinkles than it adds. "A little child shall lead them." The baby leads the father and the mother. The baby and its Cradle Roll often lead the father and the mother into the Church and then into the Kingdom.

The baby not only rules the home but a Babe rules the world. This Babe led before He was seen. His star led the Wise Men, and all really wise men are now being led by Him. His birth was humble, very humble. "Peace on earth, good will toward men" was the message announcing this Babe's birth. This was a real song by an angelic choir over the Judean hills, and millions upon millions have taken up the refrain.

But has the world understood these often quoted words? We have been looking for peace among nations as the full and final meaning of the announcement by the angels. Like the coming of a great epoch the world has been expecting this "peace on earth" and to that end the world has prayed.

Peace will never come as a great event. It is already here in part and gradually coming every day. It is not coming by the holding of great meetings. As men turn to follow the Babe of Bethlehem peace approaches through every heart that turns Christward. As men cultivate good will toward each other peace advances. Peace is inward rather than outward.

All men of good will are looking toward peace. There are peace makers who are not legislating peace—they are living peace and endeavoring to get others to live it. And this good will is not so much the limiting of armaments as it is the increasing of our love for the world's greatest Babe, for as our love for Him increases our desire to kill decreases.

The 1921 Christmas has a special significance, for it sees the visible sign of good will toward men. The Conference on Limitation of Armaments now in session in Washington is this visible sign. But deliberations cannot go beyond the inward good will of men.

No national event can eclipse Christmas. Christmas is the season of seasons. It is a season of love; it is a season of cheer, of hope, of happiness, of increasing and abounding good will. Saint and sinner testify of Christ by many acts and deeds. Those who deny the being of the Savior acknowledge Him by acknowledging Christmas.

The Christ religion is the religion of joy. "Merry Christmas" is known the world over. It is the merry time that we feast upon Him and all that His good and holy name has accomplished. The angels sang and we should sing—sing to the Father for His Son for our emancipation. Sing—sing the songs that praise and exalt the Christ child—Bethlehem's Babe.

Christmas is a season when we forget self and cultivate the habit of giving. The Babe of Bethlehem gave Himself to the world and we acknowledge His great gift by making gifts to others. We give to those whom we love. He gave His life because He loved—loved a sin-marred and sin-scarred world.

NO CHRISTMAS TREES FOR ARMENIA

Who will dress the Christmas trees in Armenia this year?

Nobody!

There is no one in Armenia who has anything fit to put on Christmas trees for little children. There are no Christmas trees to be had. In most places in that unhappy land there are not even ordinary trees to cut up for fuel.

There are consequently no warm fire-sides for Christmas trees to grace.

Were there fires, there is no food to cook on them.

What delight would there be in a Christmas tree for a child weakened by ravenous hunger? Would the sunken eye light up to the sparkle of tinsel? Would numbed attention be made to focus upon the tantalizing gift suspended by its pretty red ribbon?

No! There is no need to dress Christmas trees in Armenia this year.

But go down into your trousers pockets, you comfortable Americans, and send to Armenia a real American Christmas package.

Justify our faith in you and let that Christmas package of yours not only include enough to take care of those children you have already pledged to see through, but let it include something for those thousands without our orphanage gates, for whom the doors could not open.

Dispense with some expensive Christmastime habit, drop somebody from your Christmas list, some genial, easy-living soul who will bear you no malice for neglecting him, and save a little child from death. The Christmas dawn will deck itself in royal purple for the giver of such a gift.

THE TREE OF LOVE

am the tree of Love
I am the light that Christmas tide brings. I am ever green.
My limbs are yearning to bear the burden of gifts of Noel. I live in the high, open spaces where God smiles brightest on the world, where His light keeps the memory of Christ's birth refreshed. Years ago men fought and knew no time to think of the Gentle One who spoke of Love. And then one night a star beamed in the east and filled me with a sweet grace. My soul quivered and I was born again. And now I come with the Christmas time to remind you of Love—Love that fades, but lives again. I am but a dream unless you know me. I wish to ache under the burden of love gifts. Yes, I am ever green; I live forever, but you do not know me always. I ask you to remember the little ones whom Love has passed when some forget me. I pray the light that never dies shall flame out again in your heart. For this I live. For this I ask.

I wish to live and to Serve.
I am
Love, Hope,
Life.
I am the Tree of Love.

EXTRAVAGANCE IN CHRISTMAS GIVING

Possibly many go to the extreme in giving at Christmas time and give extravagantly. We should give in keeping with our means. And after all it is the love and the affection behind the gift that should count most, and not the value of the gift. God's gift of His Son to the world was a gift of love rather than a gift of material value. Let us give, but let us give thoughtfully.

CHRISTMAS CARDS

It is significant as well as sad to note the degradation that has come to Christmas cards. Christmas cards were originally intended to convey a message of good will and be reminders of the Christ whose birthday we celebrate during the Christmas season. To look over the average selection of cards reminds one that the publishers have gone from the original idea in making cards. We presume that they are yielding to a demand. Analyze the wording on many cheap Christmas cards and draw your own conclusions.

ELON LETTER

CHRISTMAS this year is doubly joyous—it is the annual recurrence of the birth of the Saviour, and it falls on the day of the week which signalizes His resurrection. So that this one day epitomizes and unites two great events of the race's spiritual history. Consider how the birth of Jesus gladdened all life, and particularly what transformation it has wrought in the home, in woman's status, and in childhood! Consider again the significance of the resurrection, how that Paul says if Christ be not raised, we are yet in our sins and of all men most miserable! And this December 25 combines in one happy day the significance of these two great events! So let's enjoy it. But how?

That is a serious, worth-while question. The Christian world does not know how to enjoy a joyous occasion. Some of us make of it a mockery through forced, unnatural merriment and noise. Others of us would make of it a bore through false notions of pious and reverential observance. Most of us make it the occasion of lavish display, aiming to outdo our friends in our riot of gifts, all in the name of the birthday of Him Who had not where to lay His head! How incongruous!

A Christian Christmas—that is the need! What a transformation will be required to bring it to pass! It must be a joyous day, a day of reverential aspiration, a day of good-will expressed in service—for all three of these elements inhere in the advent of the Redeemer of men.

But joyousness is not noise, except for a savage, and Jesus came to transform savages into civilized men and women. We are told in Scripture to make a joyful noise unto the Lord. A joyful noise—can it be made with cannon-crackers, sky-rockets, toy guns, and the other almost innumerable methods of pyrotechnic display that make of what was meant to be a joyous day an occasion of danger to life and of exhaustion of nerves? Let us definitely plan a day that shall be joyful, not with the reign of pandemonium let loose in a bedlam of noise, but with melodious harmony, rhythm of body and voice, and gladsome, happy association. Children and youth, experience teaches, enjoy such a day more even than the reversion to savagery which annually mars our hallowed festive occasions.

But it is to be a day likewise of reverence and worship. Now this does not mean long-facedness, crossed hands, plaintive tones, or bended knees. Scripture teaches us to pray without ceasing. If prayer is what some spiritual caricaturists would have us believe, our whole life would be spent on our knees. How impossible! So, too, a Christmas day of reverential worship need not be one whit less joyous than a day that aimed at joy alone. And this also is true, that a reverential atmosphere, truly interpreted, even to children adds to the joy of joyousness, is a positive asset for real joy, not a hindrance. For what is reverence but the respect we owe a great character, the greatest Character conceivable, let me say, our Heavenly Father? Christians should recognize His presence in every experience of life. We teach His omni-presence, His everywhere-ness, but we do not understand this means His omni-interest, His concernedness in all experiences. When we understand that He is interested everywhere, and that His presence is a joyous helpfulness and not a restraining order—how happy worship will come to be, and how natural! We shall never have a sane Christmas till our whole life is rendered sane through recognition on the part of all that God is our loving Heavenly Father, ever-present and universally concerned in every experience of every child of His heart and love. God made the whole of life and let no man call unclean what He has made. We must recognize that all our life is to serve Him and all its interests—that we are not spiritual in one act and worldly in another, but altogether religious when we are truly His. Little children readily act upon such teaching, and it is true teaching.

And further, it is to be a day of good will in service. There is no objection to giving costly gifts, if we can afford it. But "if we can afford it" involves far more than the size of our bank account. It must include also the implications of the Brotherhood of Man. When I give a costly gift to some friend in His name, expecting nothing in return (though often I do expect and receive), I must first have considered if this is the best way to discharge the stewardship of my possessions. My brothers in China and in stricken Europe and Russia have claims on me, through the Christ on whose natal day I make my gift. As a Christian, I must be sure Jesus approves my act of love and devotion.

After all, it is not the cost of the gift we bestow, but the spirit of our act. Persons, according to the Christian view, always outweigh things, and a gift which includes some personal service on my part touches the heart of the person I would serve and meets the requirement of true Christian service. In the parable of the Last Judgment, every service rendered was of the personal kind. Relieving hunger, quenching thirst, caring for strangers, clothing the naked, visiting the sick, calling on prisoners,—all acts of persons for persons, such acts win the approval of Christ and weigh heavily in the rewards of Heaven. And the beauty of it is that rich and poor alike can make gifts of this character, gifts of personal good will in the name and for the sake of Christ. Such gifts will make Christmas a day of heavenly benediction, as it will any day. Try it and see.

Why not make Christmas, 1921, a Christian Christmas, keeping before us the advent of Christ and His resurrection?

A Merry Christmas and Happy New Year to all.

W. A. HARPER.

PLAIN TALKS TO PLAIN PEOPLE

IN this day of great things, some people do not like the true idea of a holy life. That is a pity. Which would you prefer: to appear at the judgment bar of God, clothed in the true righteousness of God in Christ, or to so appear in the cold and formal drapery of a worldly church member? Take your choice, but by all means do not choose the cold and formal worldling. A truly holy life is the only kind that will stand when men and women face the judgment bar of God. You will do well, if you mean to win heaven, to pay no attention to the ridicule which some people try to heap upon the doctrine of holiness as taught in the Bible.

Let us be fair to men who differ from us. There are many people who repudiate the best any of us can give them along the line of a holy life. We wonder why it is so. Some people who profess to live holiness are most likely to blame for it—they profess so much and live so little as to gain the dislike of this great truth. Many a person has been set against the great truth of holiness by the people who profess so much and do so little—by the extremists who are likely to be found in every community where this truth is preached. I would like to admonish these dear friends to be careful not to profess anything they do not at least make an honest effort to live. I believe in the holiness which the Bible teaches, but I do not believe in the extremes to which some unfortunate people go. And yet I must admit that I would prefer to go too far in trying to serve God, rather than to lag away behind the Christian life by standing for a cold and a formal church membership. Which do you prefer?

If our Seventh Day Adventist friends had spent as much time in trying to win the world to Christ as they have in trying to convince the world that Saturday is the Sabbath, we believe decidedly more would have been accomplished in the salvation of the world. But our Seventh Day Adventist friends are not the first people who have complied with Matthew 23:24. If nothing else will do for these dear people but to continue in that sort of work, we suppose we shall have to let them continue till Jesus comes and sets all things right. We wish to be true to the truth, as true as we may have light to be, and yet we are compelled to feel that there is a much better work for the Christian than to be swallowing camels and straining at gnats. It looks like nothing else will do for this people but that most unprofitable business—straining at gnats and swallowing camels.

Some people claim they are right, and others claim they are right. Now, who can be assured of who is right? Two are claiming to be right, and the third man is confused and does not know just who has the truth. Well, here is a rule that may help you a bit. Watch the two men and see which one is manifesting the spirit of Christ and which the spirit of the wicked one, and then you can easily determine which is right and which is wrong. You can, as a rule, count on the man who has the Spirit of Jesus Christ, and as a rule, you cannot depend on the man who has the spirit of the wicked one. It is needless to go further—both cannot be right, and as between the two I will follow the man who has the Spirit of Jesus. You had better let alone the man who gets mad and abuses the man who is at the other end of the discussion. The most likely reason he has for getting mad is the fact that he is in the wrong, and being in the wrong, he fears the other man will expose that fact.

So many professing Christians like to discuss questions of peculiar bearing on the Christian life, but when did you ever hear one of them press upon the attention of his hearers such a question as this: "Are you in the Kingdom yourself?" "Have you full assurance as to your own salvation?" Did you ever hear one propose for discussion this question: "What constitutes the true Christian life?" We doubt that one of our readers ever heard such questions introduced in the social circle for discussion. Why? Oh, it gets too close to their own condition! They can talk of baptism, falling from grace, where does the soul reside between death and the judgment? Oh, yes, they can discuss such questions almost to the point of abuse, and yet they will not engage in the discussion of such questions as, "Are you in the Kingdom?" "Do you know that you have been born again?" "Have you assurance of your own salvation at this moment?" "Do you love your brethren and sisters in the Church?"

Jesus said that if we older people do not repent and become as little children, we shall not enter the Kingdom. The disciples of Christ were greatly concerned about who should be greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven, but they forgot to ask, "How can we get into the Kingdom?" Oh, how concerned we are to discuss the mint, the annise and the cummin, while we forget to even study the weightier matters in the plan of salvation. Brethren, how can we even claim to be interested in the saving of the soul when we talk of almost every unnecessary thing in the saving of both ourselves and others, but we let go the thing which would make us wise unto salvation?

SUFFOLK LETTER

CHRISTMAS means a religious service, and it celebrates the anniversary of the birth of Jesus Christ. Christendom approaches the Christmas-time with great activity and pauses at the time in recognition of its value to mankind. It is not always observed in a Christian manner, but it is observed, and that marks its hold upon the world. It touches every sphere of human interest, determines the course of human affairs, and reaches all conditions of men.

The stores and shops are never so beautiful, the streets are never so crowded with shoppers, the cities are never so brilliant, and the people are never so happy as they are the days before Christmas. Expectation rises to its height, generosity overflows, thought of others is at its best, and plans for benevolence is at high tide in families and communities. Parents think of children lovingly, children think of parents tenderly, love finds expression in a thousand ways that make poverty forget its destitution, age its infirmity, the tired man his exhaustion, and the sick man his pains. The world breathes a new atmosphere, and moves in the realm of peace. The influence of Jesus is not felt in church only, but in every sphere of life. The machinery of the world is still except that which adds comfort and correspondence to all. The morning whistle is not heard. The store door is not open. The school signal does not sound. Home is the center of activity. Old and young mingle freely around the fire, the dining table, and the musical instrument. Music had not touched the heart of mankind until the angels sang over the Judean hills, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." From that night until this glad Christmas men have joined the angels in praising God in song. That night was earth's greatest epoch in the annals of time. It changed the calendar of time. It changed the current of human thought. It drew wise men from the East and shepherds from the fields. That peasant babe is "King of kings and Lord of lords." Empires built on force and lust have fallen, and they will continue to fall until the kingdoms are ruled in peace. The Conference in Washington at this very time is the result of His entrance into the world. "Peace on earth" was first a song, and some day it will be a fact. History crystallizes as the centuries pass by, and that "Holy Night" has crystallized into a Christmas that laughs and sings, prays and gives, and calls nations from labor to rest and joy. Let the skeptic doubt, the atheist deny, the agnostic keep silent, the unfaithful abuse the day, and pleasure crowd out thought of Jesus as the Savior of the world; they all yield to the tide of good that rises to its flood when Christmas comes.

Listen! Santa Claus is coming with his load of toys and sweets, his books and pictures for children and his baskets of good things for the poor; his tons of coal, his cords of wood, and his angel visits to the "shut-ins." There would have been no "Santa Claus" had there been no Babe of Bethlehen." He touched the world's heart. He brought the music from heaven. He brought the gifts of "gold, frankincense and myrrh." He has enriched and sweetened the world. He made home. He has created hospitals and homes for the unfortunate. The infant class was born in Him. The Church sprang from His gospel, and the charities of the world came out of the manger where the babe was laid!

Hush the noise of business! Put the little ones in bed! Let the world rest! Dream on, childhood, while stockings hang by the wall and wait. Keep two fires going all the night through. "Silent night, silent night"; angels are hovering around. Morning comes with its first shimmer of light; but it is enough to awake the waiting throng—it is millions strong. Out of bed they bounce and now look and listen! If that army of happy children could be seen together, as they grow rich with the gifts of Christmas, the military leaders of history would look small beside the leadership and blessing of the child that made Christmas. Compare their shouts of joy with the shrieks and groans of the wounded and dying on the field of battle, and then tell me which is better—war or peace.

W. W. STALEY.

THE WHOLE LIFE SPIRITUAL

HAVE just read the article, "A New Heresy," by Rev. R. F. Brown, in the current number of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and have been deeply interested. If I understand him correctly, he takes the position that there is a department of life which he knows as "The Spiritual Life." He condemns those who say there is no such thing as a spiritual life, but it seems to me that there is yet another possible view, and one which I believe must ultimately come to be dominant in the lives of Christians.

I do not believe that there is a spiritual life which may be grafted on to the normal activities of life. Life is not made up of departments. It is a unity. If I am spiritual at church, then I must be spiritual at home. If I am spiritual when I pray, then I must be spiritual when I play. The spirit must permeate the whole of life or it does not control any of it. The great apostle says, "Whether therefore ye eat or drink or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

It was this view that Rev. S. C. Harrell took in an address before the North Carolina Christian Conference which met at Parks Cross Roads in 1920. Brother Harrell's subject was listed on the program as "Ministering to the Expressional Life." In his introductory remarks the speaker declared that there was no such thing as an "Expressional Life," or any other sort of life, but just life, and begged to change the subject to "Ministering to the Expression of Life." To substantiate his position Brother Harrell quoted Dr. W. A. Harper in "Reconstructing the Church," chapter III, which read:

"There is no devotional life. There is no spiritual life. There is no any sort of life, but just life. Life is a unit, a unity, an entity. It is one or it is nothing. Every attempt to regard it as a cellular arrangement is futile. When it is partitioned off, it degenerates into a mere existence."

Doctor Harper does not here deny the fact of a spiritualized life, but he does deny the departmentalized spiritual life, and rightly. Until the Church has come to think of spirituality as pervading the whole of life, not a part of it, the Church can not hope to achieve the fulness of triumph for which God ordained it. I believe that the Church will ultimately attain this fulness of triumph, and because of that, I believe that the Church will eventually come to see that the spirit must permeate the whole of life in its every phase and in its every relationship.

The Church has long suffered and is still suffering from a misconception of the spiritual life. We have too long been segregating or departmentalizing the spiritual life. Allow me to quote again from Doctor Harper in the same book and chapter as cited above:

“The devotional life has been conceived of as something to be grafted on to the normal round of things. Rightly conceived it is not an intrusion, but the normal ripening of a twice-born soul. The devotional attitude must flavor every impulse of the heart, season every act of consciousness, permeate every experience of mind or spirit.”

It is regrettable, indeed, if there are those in our own communion, as Brother Brown declares there are, who deny the spirit-filled life, but if they deny only the spiritual life as a department, then it means only that they have taken another step toward God. No Christian, who is worthy to bear the name, can say of any phase of his life, “This is spiritual, but this is not.” As I have said, it is all spiritual or none of it is.

Christ nowhere makes a differentiation. Nowhere does Jesus speak of saving souls. That idea originated with some one other than the Master. He came to save men, whole men, men as they are related to God and as they are related to other men. He came to save them physically, mentally, socially, as well as spiritually. Since Jesus does not differentiate, since He does not departmentalize, neither should we. May I repeat, there is no spiritual life separate and distinct from other life. The spirit must vitalize my physical life in daily toil. The spirit must energize and clarify my mental life in its shaping of the ideals which shall guide me through life, as the north star guides the mariner over the sea. The spirit must permeate my social relationships, leavening the whole of life with the principles which Jesus came to live and to teach. The spirit must do all this or I have failed as a Christian. My spiritual life is not that part of me which will go to heaven, while all the rest is sent away into darkness and despair; my spiritual life is my whole life or it is none of my life.

Why should we fear to break with precedent, if precedent is wrong? Truth is not static, it is dynamic and will continue to grow so long as men live and think and God is. Into the fuller, completer conceptions of life let us go, sweeping aside, if need be, the petty foibles of tradition.

“I will bow at the shrine where my brothers bowed, Humble, but open-eyed.”

“We shall know the truth, and the truth shall make us free.” Truth does not hamper, it does not segregate: it breaks the shackles and gives the spirit of Christ full sway in the whole of life.

THE BULLETIN

FOR FUTURE ISSUES OF THE SUN

We have on hand several very able and helpful articles on different topics which will appear in near future issues of THE SUN. You cannot afford to miss these. Keep your subscription renewed and start off 1922 with a paid-up account. It will help us—and it will help you.

NEXT WEEK'S SUN

Next week's SUN may reach readers one or two days late. The plant in which THE SUN is printed anticipates being closed on Monday following Christmas, and thus will probably delay the issue one day or more. No issues will be omitted on account of Christmas. We will follow our regular rule and get readers a paper every week in the year.

NEARING ANOTHER BIRTHDAY

Our venerable and beloved Dr. J. W. Wellons, Elon College, N. C., will reach his ninety-seventh birthday on January 1. Again THE SUN greets this almost centenarian. We hope that none of his friends will forget him during the Christmas and on his birthday. Grand old man, he is, and loves every part of his Church. Let us remember him.

“SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS OF PORTO RICO”

We are purposely omitting from this issue “Scenes and Impressions of Porto Rico,” by Dr. J. O. Atkinson. The Herald of Gospel Liberty is finding this series interesting to its readers but is one week behind THE SUN in its printing, and so we are omitting the usual article this week that The Herald may catch up.

We are receiving many words of praise regarding this series of articles and we note that like expressions are being received by The Herald. Brother I. M. Hoel, writing to The Herald, says: “Have you followed the journey of our brother, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, from Elon College to Porto Rico? Though sick, I have been with him all the way. I saw the scenes of the sea on the vessel and now I am feeding on the things of Porto Rico.”

NEW PASTOR TAKES CHARGE

Rev. S. L. Beougher (pronounced Bu-her), the new pastor of Graham and Providence Christian churches, arrived with his wife and daughter last Saturday, December 17, and preached his first sermon in Providence church last Sunday morning. The service was in charge of THE SUN's Editor. Rev. F. C. Lester, former pastor, was also present and took part in the services. Brother Beougher made a favorable impression and has entered

WOMEN AND THE KINGDOM

FROM THE WOMAN'S BOARD

The Woman's Board asks every Woman's Society and every church not having a Woman's Missionary organization to make three offerings a year:

- A Thank Offering in December.
- A Self-Denial Offering in January.
- A Rally Day Offering in the summer.

I have already sent out the two letters below to our workers. I hope they all received them and will help us. They are printed here for the benefit of our pastors and the other many workers to whom I could not send individual letters. Every one who reads is invited to help us.

THANK OFFERING FOR WOMAN'S MISSIONARY DEPARTMENT

Each church of the Southern Christian Convention is asked annually to give its membership opportunity to make a Thank-Offering for the Woman's Missionary Department. If there is a missionary organization in the church, it will of course look out for the offering and report it through its treasurer. If there is no missionary organization, the pastor or some local leader is urged to give this matter sympathetic attention.

The Woman's Board has set as its goal $25,000 for two years, or $12,500 a year. We can reach it if every church will aid us by making the special offerings we ask for. The receipt of this letter is an urgent request to you personally to look after this offering in your congregation. We ask that the offering be made during December and reported either to the local woman's treasurer or to Mrs. W. T. Walters, 3115 Garland Avenue, Richmond, Va., who will credit the proper Conference Treasurer on her books.

Please, dear friend, help us in this great work, and so help the Kingdom of our Christ.

WEEK OF PRAYER FOR 1922

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America has issued the following program for our week of prayer, January 1 to 7, 1922. It is important that we begin the year right, and what better way can we find than season of united prayer?

The Woman's Board urges every Missionary Society to observe the week of prayer, and if possible, on the dates set officially, but at least during January. We also urge every woman or pastor receiving this letter to become personal sponsor for its observance in every church by the women of the church, whether there is a Missionary Society there or not.

We also request that each woman, during the week of prayer, make a "Self-Denial Offering" for our woman's work, turning it over to the local woman's treasurer if there is a Society in the church, or sending it directly to Mrs. W. T. Walters, 3115 Garland Avenue, Richmond, Virginia, in case there is none.

Pray earnestly for our work, dear friend.

MRS. W. A. HARPER,

President Woman's Board, Southern Christian Convention.

Elon College, N. C., December 12, 1921.

THINGS NOT TO DO AT A FUNERAL SERVICE

Rev. J. E. Patterson

1. Don't attempt to conduct a funeral—leave that to the undertaker.

2. Don't stand in the doorway or hall to greet people coming.

3. Be short in your remarks—don't say, "The family requests me to be brief."

4. Don't stay in the room when the family takes the last view of the loved one—only exceptional cases admit of this.

5. Don't start services until the undertaker gives the signal—unless the services are held in a church.

6. Don't thank friends at the grave for kindnesses rendered during illness and death of the loved one.

7. Don't make burial services long.

8. Don't offer long prayer at the grave.

9. Don't mention the vacant chair to be found when returning home.

10. Don't mention names of the family, and point out lessons to them.

11. Don't think you must give age, date of birth, and cause of death.

12. Don't permit your choir to sing just any old thing—remember you are conducting the service for the benefit of the family—not the choir.

13. Don't conduct the service in a haphazard way—consult the family and carry out their wishes wherever possible.

14. Be considerate of the family—do as you would be done by.

15. Don't say it's hard for a minister to conduct a funeral, for if there ever was a time when religion should be a comfort it is then. Hold up the Cross, and give comfort when it is needed.

16. Don't preach a funeral—most poor mortals get their funerals preached ten thousand times over while they live. A funeral sermon is always out of place, and even when requested by the family it should never be more than twenty minutes long.

17. Don't hold the cars at the grave while you shake hands with all the bereaved ones. Go and see them at some other time.

Pomona, California.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

CHILDREN AND CHRISTMAS

Our little folks are working hard for the dollar prize in school. At the close of last month seven of them had won the dollar, and it brings a great big smile on their faces to get to pull the Superintendent for a dollar. Twenty-four got on the honor roll. They are:

First Grade—Bessie May Penny, 95; Willie Lou Brown, 95; Margie Thompson, 94; Elizabeth Rowland, 92.

Second Grade—Callie May Cauthren, 96; Inez Holt, 95; George Thomas, 92.

Third Grade—Lawrence Fields, 94; Garner Hilliard, 93; Clarence Fields, 91; Annie Betts, 90.

Fourth Grade—Joe Howell Jones, 95; Walter Betts, 95; Wilson Collier, 95; Swannanoah Weatherspoon, 94; Bennie Rowland, 90.

Fifth Grade—Eugenia Hilliard, 96; Frank Utley, 94; Eurl Morelen, 93; Marvin Franklin, 91; Z. T. Jones, 91; Hilda Wallace, 91; Josie Bradshaw, 91; Clarence McKinney, 90.

Our Thanksgiving offering to date is $2,600.00—not quite half way to the goal. The weeks are passing rapidly and the Thanksgiving season will soon be gone. The books will close for the year. Shall we reach the goal? It lies within your power. If all our churches would do their duty we would reach it.

Eighty little children to care for; many pleading for a home. We made the shortest crop this year we have ever made on the Orphanage farm. It was no fault of ours, for we worked harder than in any previous year. Planted more stuff, but we were not able to combat with the extremely dry summer. Having a short crop and having to do without food that we could have easily raised on the farm and had it in abundance, and the Thanksgiving offerings coming in small, it makes it very discouraging to those who have charge of the work. The winter months are always expensive. Shoes and clothing count into dollars. We look to the Thanksgiving Offering to tide us over these trying months.

Christmas will soon be here. Our little folks are looking forward to its coming with bright expectations. I truly hope our eatures will be as kind this year as they have been in the past.

Children's Letters

(Deferred from last week)

Dear Uncle Charley: I am a little girl almost five years old. I have two older sisters going to school, and I get so lonesome. Our grandmother came from Virginia to pay us a visit, and she thought if my little cousin and I would send the little orphans a small Thanksgiving offering it would be nice. Hope they will have a nice Thanksgiving, and you, too. Find enclosed 25 cents.—Ruth Phillips, of Ohio, and Louise Smith, of Virginia.

I enjoyed your letter very much. The children had a nice Thanksgiving dinner. The good ladies of Union Christian eature (Alamance County, N. C.) gave us ehickens for the dinner, and the North Carolina Ice Cream Company gave us five gallons ice ecream, so we had a good dinner.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley: I enclose ten cents for the month of November. Hope the orphans will have a nice Christmas. I am eleven years old and go to Fort Hill school. My teacher is Miss Dupuy.—Carl Dunn, Lynchburg, Va.

I am glad to have your letter in the Corner this week. It helps to keep it alive. “Uncle Charley” wishes many of our little children would write for the Corner. The letters are interesting.—“Uncle Charley.”

Dear Uncle Charley: Papa told us if we would sell some potatoes we could write to the Children's Corner, and send the money to the Orphanage. We sold fifty cents' worth, and we are sending it today for a Thanks-

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

FRANKLINTON, N. C., CHURCH

The writer was rejoiced at the splendid report of Rev. B. F. Black, retiring pastor of our Franklinton church, appearing in THE SUN recently. Brother Black did a most timely and helpful work at Franklinton, and the writer greatly regrets that he felt impelled to leave.

In all our missionary endeavor we have nowhere a more loyal and faithful band of workers than at Franklinton. The Mission Board has tried to help the work there all it could, and has only regretted that it did not have more to help with. But the Franklinton people have helped themselves. Think of a mission church, trying to build and without a house in which to worship, promising the pastor $150.00 for preaching once a month and actually paying $350.00, besides raising in two years $2,813.72 for the church. The average prayer meeting (on Thursday night) was thirty-two—equalling the prayer meeting of some of our larger churches. The church has a Ladies' Aid one and a half years old that has raised $350.00. And the church membership, while struggling to build, is growing steadily. Our Franklinton faithfuls certainly have every reason to rejoice, be glad and take courage. We are trusting Brother Black will have a worthy successor at Franklinton.

A LINE FROM OUR MOUNTAIN SCHOOL

Miss Emily Midyett, assistant teacher to Miss Iola Hedgepeth, Fancy Gap, Virginia, in a personal note dated November 29, says:

"The attendance at school was very good last week, and in spite of disagreeable weather it is keeping up to the mark this week so far.

"We are working to increase attendance at Sunday school. It rained hard last Sunday, and to my surprise there were eighteen present. We have printed a few posters and put them on the public roads telling about our Sunday school. We are now studying Christ's Sermon on the Mount. All those who bring their New Testaments and can read, read a few verses from the chapter we are discussing. I have to do most of the discussing at present, but hope they will soon take part in the discussion. They seem to like to study in this manner. We are now keeping a roll and in this way hope to cause the people to be more regular in their attendance."

The equipment for our new building has been purchased, and we hope the desks, blackboards, etc., will reach the school in time for the opening of our new building.

NOVEMBER SUNDAY SCHOOL OFFERINGS TO MISSIONS

We are profoundly grateful for the constantly increasing number of our Sunday schools that are adopting the Convention plan of finance; namely, one Sunday's offering a month for the Orphanage, one Sunday's offering for missions, the other two Sundays for current expense of the school. In November, Rosemont, Virginia, school adopted the plan and began with a fine offering, $104.91. Rev. W. C. Hook is the fortunate and happy pastor. Also Needham's Grove, Randolph County, N. C., and Bethlehem, Nansemond County, Va., make our hearts glad by joining the list and sending in their liberal monthly offering. We are so grateful for each of these additional schools, and for that ever faithful number whose offering comes each month to help, to gladden and to push forward our mission work.

Bethlehem, Va., $5.15; Danville, $4.70; Bethlehem (Nans.), $3.25; Timber Ridge, $1.65; Rose Hill, $8.86; Morrisville, $1.41; Ivor, $6.82; Needham's Grove, 84c.; LaGrange, 80c.; Reidsville, $3.80; Elm Avenue, $2.15; People's church, $75.00; Zion, $1.50; Christian (Winchester), $6.22; Isle of Wight, $2.50; Richland, $1.00; Henderson, $6.02; Sanford, $5.11; Beulah, $2.45; East LaGrange, 54c.; Pleasant Grove, 42c.; Wakefield, $3.10; Graham, $1.81; High Point, $1.10; South Norfolk, $8.91; Rosemont, $104.91; Berea (Virginia), $4.75; Berea (North Carolina), $2.26; Leaksville, $1.14; Dry Run, $2.30; Union, Va., $1.30; Linville, $2.00; First church, Berkley, $500.00 (to pay for land, Mountain School); C. E. Society, New Providence, Graham, N. C., $5.00. Total for the month, $778.77.

The way is still open for other schools to join, as our Southern Convention and all our Sunday School Conventions have voted that all our schools should do.

THAT THEY GO FORWARD

Business may or may not be "pieking up," but one thing the Mission Secretary knows full well: all promised appropriations by the Mission Board are being called for, and the demand is for more—that the great and good work may go forward.

Brother A. B. Jarvis, Secretary of the Building Committee, Christian Temple, Norfolk, writes: "At our last Building Committee meeting the secretary was instructed to advise you that, according to our records, there is now due from your Board the sum of $4,500. We trust you will find it convenient to make check to our Building Fund Treasurer at once. The prospects for starting our new building are beginning to look brighter now. Thanking you for your kindly interest, and begging your prayers for the success of the work here."

We were happy to forward the check that was due. Dr. L. E. Smith and his Christian co-laborers in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, are undertaking a gigantic task, and they are going to need, as they most richly deserve, the co-operation, sympathy, interest and prayers of our entire Zion.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON— DECEMBER 25, 1921

The Visit of the Wise Men (Christmas Lesson).—Matt. 2:1-12
Golden Text: "And opening their treasures, they offered unto him gifts, gold and frankincense and myrrh.—Matt. 2:11.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC—DECEMBER 25, 1921

Following the Star: What Do Men Find?—Matt. 2:1-12.

"The wise may bring their learning,
The rich may bring their wealth;
And some may bring their greatness,
And some bring strength and health.
We too would bring our treasures
To offer to the King;
We have no wealth or learning—
What shall we children bring?"

"We'll bring Him hearts that love Him,
We'll bring Him thankful praise,
And young souls meekly striving
To walk in holy ways.
And these shall be the treasures
We offer to the King,
And these are gifts that even
The poorest child may bring.

"We'll bring the little duties
We have to do each day;
We'll try our best to please Him,
At home, at school, at play.
And better are these treasures
To offer to our King,
Than richest gifts without them:
Yet these a child may bring."

THE CHRISTMAS MESSAGE

The spirit of Christmas is the spirit of the Christ. The message of the Christmas tide is fulfilled only when the Christ enters the heart and fills it with His spirit of love and joy and peace. In His Church this must be the reigning spirit, as we observe the holiest of days, a Sunday Christmas. Throughout the world millions of people are honoring the Babe of Bethlehem. They are commemorating His birth with carol and gift. And only has the day been celebrated aright when its message of peace and good will to all men has been heard, and when men have been led, like the wise men of old, to see the Christ, and to offer Him their gifts.

We are coming in our Church observance of the Christmas season, to an appreciation of the deep meaning of the holy day. We are beginning to teach our boys and girls in our churches the real, vital significance of Christmas. We are experiencing the joy of a "Giving Christmas" rather than the selfish pleasure of a merely "Getting Christmas." The boy or the girl who really knows that he or she has given a gift where would have been none, who really sees a family with a Christmas dinner where there would have been hunger on a day of feasting, who sees another child warmed and made happy by his gift, appreciates Christmas in a new way. Especially is this true when the gift has been the result of his own planning and securing, and even sacrificing. Sharing happiness is a beautiful experience, and teaches its own lesson. And why can we not apply this truth to three hundred and sixty-five days instead of to but one? Are people more needy at Christmas? Are not people lonely and in need of love in other months than December? The meaning of Christmas will grow upon us as we carry its expression on through the whole year. The spirit of loving giving makes life more joyful at all times. This is the spirit which makes life worth living. This is the spirit of the Christ of Bethlehem. This is the spirit of love.

The Wise Men, when they had come to the place where Jesus was, "fell down and worshipped him; and opening their treasures, they offered unto him gifts." The celebration of Christmas involves worship of the Christ. Our church Christmas services should be services of worship, of adoration, of loving homage to the Infant King. No greater opportunity for a spiritual appeal to men comes than at Christmas. The most impressive service of all is that in which some boy or girl, some man or woman, gives self to the Christ as His Christmas gift, the gift of eternal and untold value. Then comes the gift of service promised to the Master, a gift precious in His sight. Think what a work our churches could do in 1922 if every Church member would give Christ a gift of promised service! This would mean more consecrated teachers for our Sunday schools. This would mean leaders in our Christian Endeavor and Missionary Societies. This would mean volunteer workers in the Kingdom, which would mean a forward movement along all lines. And with our gifts of self and service, will come the gift of substance, remembering the words, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these, my brethren, even these least, ye did it unto me." Let each of us give a gift to the Master; substance, service, SELF; and all in the loving spirit of the Christmas season.

And as we go into our Christmas services this year, may it be with a deeper appreciation for the day, and what it may mean to us, to our Church and to the world. May it be with more love in our hearts. May it be with the determination to learn the Christmas lesson for the whole year, to make this a day to be remembered because of the eternal message of peace and good will to men.

"May He, the Unseen Guest, abide Within your heart this Christmas tide,
That ever through the days to be
The Christ may be revealed in thee."

—Mary Susanne Edgar.

CHURCH NEWS

TO SHOW OUR APPRECIATION

Most of us have heard and, doubtless, sung the song, "Count Your Blessings." If we of Christian Chapel obeyed that injunction, we would almost unanimously place our pastor, Rev. J. E. Franks, very near the top of our list of blessings. He has been our pastor since 1915 and each year he remains with us he wins more friends for himself as well as souls for the Kingdom, not only in his own church and denomination, but in the whole community in which he moves.

Of course, I do not mean to say that he is a favorite of all, for there are some in this community, as well as in all other communities, who dislike being told of their sins; and, therefore, dislike the one who tells them. Brother Franks, loving the sinner while hating the sin, makes bold to tell us all when he knows we are doing wrong. But I do say that his friends so far outnumber his foes that the latter are inconspicuous. I do not write this letter with a view to flattering our pastor, for I believe him to be immune from flattery, but being confident that I express not only my own feelings, but those of the greater part of the Christian Chapel community, I wish to let others know what one of his churches thinks of him, and I believe that all our God-called pastors would be greatly encouraged and strengthened for service if given a word of praise occasionally.

MRS. M. D. WOODELL,

Sanford, N. C.

A SURPRISE

Quite a surprise came on December 13, 1921, about 2:30 p. m., when a Ford car stopped at our front door. It was operated by Brother George Tate. He said he had brought something for us. When we investigated it was a very valuable "something." He told us it was a Christmas present from Concord church, in Caswell County. It was a real pounding, consisting of sugar, apples, oranges, cheese, a nice quantity of fresh pork sausage, sweet and Irish potatoes, chestnuts, walnuts, butter, flour, eggs, canned goods, citron, chickens, etc.

To one and all who had a part, and may have wanted to but could not, kindest regards and many thanks. We appreciate your kindness. This is a very considerate people, and it is a pleasure to work among them. May the gracious Lord richly bless every giver and help us to be more worthy servants.

REV. AND MRS. L. L. WYRICK.

TOKENS OF APPRECIATION

The fifth Sunday in October I preached my last sermon of the Conference year to the people of Third Avenue, Danville, Va., promising to come back and help them as best I could with the entertainment of the North Carolina Conference. I went back for Conference, which we enjoyed, and I believe it meant a great deal for the church at Danville. But what I want to say is that Danville has not forgotten their former pastor. Quite a number of letters, full of love, friendship and appreciation, have been received by me from the dear friends I left at Danville. To more fully show their appreciation of the splendid fellowship we enjoyed together as pastor and people, I have received a nice Persian morocco Seefeld Reference Bible, costing twelve dollars, which I am very proud of. As I daily open this Book I silently in my heart breathe a prayer for the success of the good people who in this way remembered their ex-pastor. May God wonderfully bless those faithful followers of Christ at Danville, is the prayer of their former pastor.

MISSIONARY EDUCATION CONFERENCE, 1922

The annual Southern Conference of the Missionary Education Movement for 1922 has been set for June 23 to July 3 at Blue Ridge, N. C. At a recent meeting held in this city the Executive Committee was reorganized, subcommittees were appointed, and preparations were begun for the Conference, which will draw several hundred missionary leaders from a half dozen denominations in the South and East.

Dr. W. D. Weatherford, of Nashville, president of Southern College, and executive of the Blue Ridge Association, was elected chairman to succeed Dr. H. F. Williams, resigned. Dr. C. L. Brown, of the Lutheran Board of Missions, Baltimore, was elected Vice Chairman. The following were elected the Committee on Program: Dr. Weatherford, Rev. E. D. Grant, Mrs. Hume R. Steele, Dr. E. C. Cronk, Miss W. B. Lindley. This committee was instructed to lay out a full program of mission study, Bible study, normal training and inspirational addresses, and to take steps at once to secure the strongest leaders and speakers available.

The Missionary Education Movement Conference has been held in the South for nineteen years consecutively and occupies a large place in the training of missionary leaders in this section. It is interdenominational, being conducted under the auspices of a number of mission boards. The annual attendance runs to four or five hundred, and is drawn from all the Protestant denominations.

THE NEAR EAST COMMISSION

Report of the Commission of Overseas Visitors of the Near East Relief

At the invitation of the Near East Relief we have just completed a careful study of conditions, peoples and relief work in Transcaucasia, Armenia, and the regions in and about Ismid and Constantinople. We have studied the orphanages, hospitals, feeding and clothing stations on the ground as far as Erivan. We have surveyed the warehouses and the distribution centers. We have become acquainted with the personnel and looked carefully into the management at this end of the line. We have watched the unloading of huge cargoes of American gifts of food and clothing in Near East Relief warehouses at Derindje, Batum, and Constantinople, and passed long trainloads in transit to distant orphanages. We find the governments sympathetic and ready to co-operate, our personnel alert and efficient, our orphanages crowded and unable to cope with the demands for admission but meeting the great need in a truly remarkable way. Affairs in the Near East will reach a crisis by mid-winter. Owing to prolonged warfare and intermittent fighting until late spring, planting was on a very meager basis. Food is growing scarcer every day. Fuel will be hard to obtain, and the only clothing must come from the outside. Unless the food rations are increased, the death rate in our own orphanages will advance rapidly. Starvation stalks through barren fields and war-ruined villages and the death losses will be appalling this winter unless help is given speedily. The seed of an ancient and honorable nation has been gathered under our flag by the heroic devotion and loving constancy of our own sons and daughters. We urge American hearts to respond and purses to open once more that those committed to our care perish not from the face of the earth. Profound is their gratitude expressed in word and deed. Let us justify their faith in us as their only hope.

SHERMAN L. DIVINE, Chairman,
E. W. HEULSTER, Secretary.

CALLED HOME

POOL.—Mrs. Nannie A. Pool, daughter of Ambros and Elmira Sanford, was born January 22, 1844, died November 4, 1921, aged 77 years, 10 months and 13 days. She was twice married. First to W. H. Harris in the fall of 1858, who was killed in the Civil War; by this marriage one son, John Harris, of Nelson, Va., survives her. January 15, 1873, after remaining a widow for nine years, she married J. S. Pool, who survives her, together with three sons and three daughters: Carl A., J. L. and Charles G. Pool; the daughters are Mrs. Nannie Royster and Mrs. Mamie Sue Hart, of Virgilina, Va., and Mrs. Claud Adcock, of Pinuers Point, Va. She also leaves 21 grandchildren and one great grandchild.

About the year 1865, she, with her sister, Mrs. Corina Apple, who survives her, joined Union Christian church, near Virgilina, Va., and were baptized by Rev. Solomon Apple.

The writer was Sister Pool's pastor for fourteen years, and I can conscientiously say that it has been my lot to know of no one more faithful than she in home, community and church relations. Whenever there was trouble or sickness in her community there she would go, until her health declined, and there were none who could render comfort and relieve suffering better than she. She had the profoundest respect and utmost confidence of all who knew her. Religiou to her was a continuous joy, a subject she loved to talk about. She was devoted to her family, and they in turn were faithful and devoted to her. In a revival meeting her very presence gave inspiration. Through her personal efforts scores have been led to accept Christ and hundreds of Christians strengthened.

The funeral was conducted from the home, where she had lived all her married life, in Grauville County, N. C., conducted by the writer and Rev. J. W. Reynolds, of the Baptist Church. The burial was in the Sanford burying ground nearby. A large assembly of people came with sad hearts to express their appreciation of her life and offer sympathy to her loved ones.

While her husband has always been a consistent member of the Baptist Church and she of the Christian, they pledged themselves before marriage that they would not argue over their religious beliefs, but attend each other's church and worship together. This vow to them was as sacred and as faithfully kept as their marriage vow.

While the home and community are poorer by her departure, they are richer as the result of her useful and faithful life. Her place in the church cannot be filled. Heaven is the richer because of the presence of her angelic spirit.

C. E. NEWMAN.

SAULS.—On November 28, 1921, Mrs. Syrenie Sauls died at the home of her son, S. A. Heron, New Hill, N. C., at the age of 93 years, eight months and three days. She was buried in the old family cemetery near Merry Oaks, N. C.

Sister Sauls was twice married. Her first marriage was to Abraham Heron, and to this union were born five children. The second marriage was to W. B. Sauls, and to this union two children were born.

Deceased was a member of New Elam church, and was a faithful attendant so long as she was able. Four children, 35 grandchildren and 24 great grandchildren and a host of friends survive her.

J. S. CARDEN.

CHRISTOPHER.—Less V. Christopher, infant child of Less and Effie Christopher, of Burlington, N. C., departed this life November 18, 1921, after a brief illness, aged one year five months and eight days. The funeral services were conducted from the home by the writer. The remains of the little one were interred in Pine Hill cemetery. May the Healer of broken hearts comfort and bless those who mourn.

P. H. FLEMING.

WOTRING.—Mrs. Florence Virginia Wotring, wife of Brother James A. Wotring, was born October 29, 1860, and died November 24, 1921, at the age of 61 years and 25 days. Sister Wotring was a faithful and devout member of the Timber Ridge Christian church. She is survived by her husband and one son. The husband is an invalid, and is being cared for in the home of his sister. The son is just out of the hospital, having undergone a serious operation. Sister Wotring was buried at Timber Ridge, November 27, 1921, a large congregation attending the services.

THE EDITOR

THE old year is dying—the new is approaching. The history of 1921 is nearing its final chapter.

The volume will soon be closed, and our deeds, good and bad, will be recorded in time's diary. We cannot change it. What is written is written and what is done is done. Troubles and trials may have been our lot, or joys and happiness may have been our part and portion. Only the individual heart knows and can tell.

The backward look may be pleasant or unpleasant. If unpleasant, worry not, but turn the face hopefully toward the unmarred and unscarred year that is approaching. If pleasant, strive to make another that will be even happier and sweeter.

Let the old be the old—let the new be our thought and concern. The future is the Christian's goal. The Christian is optimistic, hopeful, joyful, happy.

The old year dies—we must use the past as a stepping stone to things higher and nobler. Let forward be our aim and hope our guide. Bury the old—resurrect the new. Enter cheerfully into 1922.

NEW YEAR GREETINGS

The Sun's Editor sends greetings of the New Year to every reader of The Christian Sun and wishes for all a year filled with much joy and happiness.

Trying The Untried

ENTERING into a new year is always a new experience. In a measure, it is going over the same thing, but in the final analysis it is really a new year. It is trying the untried in going out of the old and entering into the new. It is casting aside and looking forward to new days and new weeks. We look at the figures 1922 with a degree of suspense, and yet, with a degree of joy and delight. They look interesting to us; they spell progress, prosperity, and lend a vision of hope and seem to open up a volume of happiness to all mankind.

This is a time of New Year resolutions—a time of mental, moral, physical and financial inventory. It is a time when new plans are made—a time when old plans are re-made. These are days of beginning again and making the best out of the better and the greatest out of the great and the greater.

Looking about us, we see nations striving toward new ideals and individuals pulling up to a higher and holier life. Businesses are breathing more and more the spirit of Christian democracy. Individuals and nations crumble to earth and greater and better individuals trod the path of man's follies. Nations build and seek to avoid that which has destroyed other nations. We are mindful of the sin in the world and the weakness of the heart of mankind. But God's program is being carried forward and His plans are being materialized. Christianity is making her onward march and the spirit of brotherhood is triumphing each day.

We of the Christian Church see about us the unnumbered tasks and the fields that are white unto the harvest. With us it is a day of rejoicing, a day in which we should be courageous, hopeful, being ever filled with the spirit to press forward. The past year has been a trying period in our history. A few of our great leaders have fallen, but, thank God, they fell in the harness. The evening of life came with them while they were yet thinking of the noon-day, but

*God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform;
He plants His foot-steps in the sea
And rides upon the storm,* ever teaching us that our plans and our programs are not always His purpose, and that our frailties are but instruments in His hands to bring a generation to His service.

The past year has been hard and difficult upon our leaders. Those in places of responsibility have found silver threads slipping in among the gold, and only the prayer chamber has strengthened them for the unnumbered duties that have been theirs. But they have always had their faces toward the rising sun, and each morning welcomed a new day, believing in it there was hope and happiness and balm for every pain—and it was so.

The shepherd of our flocks—our preachers—have found around about them troubled hearts, and souls once buoyant often depressed. Like a true shepherd, they have comforted, they have cared, they have kept. During the silent watches of the night they have carried the heart aches of many a soul and gone to God in prayer for a benediction to many a home.

Our churches and their local leaders have been brave as Daniels, and carried the flag of hope Mollie Pitcher-like, while some have fallen under the battle of depression. Like a rising tide, these individuals are lifting every obstruction, and soon there will be sung a new song—a song of victory, a song of triumph. The time of testing is the time of the Christian's trial, and the time of victory is the Christian's delight.

From every place, from every source, from every home, there has gone upward the spirit of prayer, the spirit of willingness, the spirit of sacrifice. There is no defeat strong enough for hearts and souls like these.

Emerging from the trying year of 1921, let us, as a people, turn our faces toward 1922, and let there be sunshine upon our faces and hope in our hearts. Let us relegate to the junk heap every pessimistic note, if such there be in our borders. Let every church member feel that God has called him to do his utmost that good will and the spirit of Christianity may rule and reign in every heart. Let every local church officer feel that his or her duty is his or her privilege, to fill 1922 with a spirit of brotherhood that will love every man, regardless of his race, color or standing. Let every Sunday school teacher and officer feel that 1922 must be the biggest and best and brightest and most hopeful year of all years. Let every pastor feel that he has the best flock to watch over and the best possible outlook to discharge the sacred obligation that he has taken upon himself. Let every officer in our Convention co-operate and pull together in a genuine spirit of co-operation—a spirit of sincerity and love. Let every one of us have unity in essentials, liberty in non-essentials, and charity in all things.

*Father, help me dedicate
This coming year to Thee,
In whatever worldly state
Thou wilt have me be!*

EDITORIAL BRIEFS

The Christmas season brings anew each year a number of follies. There are those who feel that Christmas cannot be celebrated without much noise and from that which is dangerous. Guns, fire-crackers and sky-rockets often bring destruction to property and death to many individuals. It is a poor way to celebrate the Savior's birth.

* * *

Here is a question that often puzzled us: How do some preachers manage to prepare so many new (?) sermons and rarely ever purchase a book? And this question might lead many to ask themselves this question: "How many books have I read during the past year?" How is a preacher—or any one, for that matter—to keep abreast of the times and not read? It is too much for us.

Speaking of books reminds us to call attention to Brother Clem's splendid article in this issue of THE SUN. It is worth reading and we commend it to our ministerial brethren. Read it and heed its suggestions.

* * *

We invite and urge our people to write more for THE SUN. We are planning the very best possible paper during the next few months and are anxious to make every issue fill its mission well. To do so we must have good articles. Our brethren are capable of writing them and we urge that they do so. There are too few writers to the paper. Practically the same names appear each week, and this ought not to so be.

* * *

A very unwise thing happens in many families at this season of the year. Some child of the home decides to drop out of school for the remainder of the term. Usually there is regret before the term is over, and certainly next year when that part of the school year is reached. Losing a half term in high school or college always works to a great disadvantage. Stay in school, stay in college. It is the wise thing to do, and you will regret it if you do not.

PRESIDENT HARPER'S NEW BOOK

President W. A. Harper's new book, "The Church in the Present Crisis," has just been received. It is the fourth volume from his pen by The Fleming Revell Company, New York. The book has its introduction by Dr. Peter Ainslie, Baltimore, and the foreword by its author. The volume has 272 pages and is made up of sixteen chapters. In mechanical make-up it is fine; and if it follows the other volumes by Doctor Harper, its content is worth while. A thorough review will appear in THE SUN at a later date.

The price of "The Church in the Present Crisis" is $1.75 the volume, and may be had from THE CHRISTIAN SUN office.

A FEATURE APPROVED

In the beginning of 1921 THE SUN'S Editor started out to write the message for the front page of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. This plan has been followed, with the exception of times when the front page was used for special messages, cuts, and in a few instances the contents of the issue. From many sources have come words of praise and approval of this original plan, instead of re-printing something that the average reader had read. We are grateful for these words and trust that some constructive thought has been presented.

Desiring to carry out this plan of printing original matter during 1922, we have decided to ask twenty-six ministers and twenty-six laymen to write an article each for the fifty-two issues of 1922. A personal letter is being mailed this week to these brethren, and their approval and response to the request will be shown each week during 1922, unless it seems necessary to change the plan. We can hardly think that these men will fail to respond, but any week that we do not have anything from our chosen number, the Editor will undertake to fill the space himself.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT

TO THE BOARD OF PUBLICATION—
SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION,

Dear Brethren:—

Having decided not to stand for re-election as Editor and Publishing Agent, should the Convention desire my services, I feel it incumbent upon me at this time to communicate this message to you so as to give ample time for your consideration before the Convention meets.

I feel that the time has come when the work should pass to other hands—hands that are better fitted for the work than mine.

I am mindful of the esteem and confidence imposed in me by the Brotherhood, and assure you of my sincere appreciation of the splendid co-operation which I have had.

Cordially and sincerely yours,
C. B. RIDDLE,

Editor and Publishing Agent.

December 23, 1921.

The above is a copy of a letter mailed to the members of the Board of Publication on December 23. The letter announces a decision of the Editor after prayerful consideration on his part for a period of six months.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part IX.

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.
Field Secretary for Missions

SATURDAY A. M., September 24.—Despite the mosquitoes, I slept soundly from midnight, at which time I retired, till six this a. m. I asked Barrett if there were no closed season for mosquitoes in Porto Rico. He says there is none, but you must get used to them and not bother! Think of mosquitoes humming around your Christmas dinner table and getting into the children's stockings on Santa Claus night!

The Barrett home is large enough, high pitched, large hall at entrance, dining room and pantries in the rear of this, on left, three bed rooms, cook room, bath and pantry. The bed rooms are screened against mosquitoes, the gift and brotherly kindness of Rev. B. F. Black and his churches. I wish Black and all his church members who contributed could know how I feel toward them this a. m., and what an everlasting favor they did confer on the Barretts when they decided to screen the windows and doors of the Barrett's sleeping quarters. If I lived here I should want to screen the whole house, front porch and side walk, if possible. Brother Black and his good people, I presume, will never see this diary, but for my own pleasure I want to put it in black and white that this gift of yours was most timely and saves the family from an onslaught of blistering mosquitoes. He who confers a favor like this on friends two thousand miles away has the milk of human kindness in his heart, and a speck of the divine that illuminates his soul.

I am certainly feeling good this a. m. By the time I had my toilet, including this wholesome shower bath and rub down, and had taken in the Barrett house and surroundings where we are to shelter and feed and fellowship for ten days, good Mrs. Barrett announced breakfast at 8:00. Grape Nuts, sliced bananas, toast, and glorious Porto Rican coffee. And we had some good talk, while a schedule for the week is made out. At 10:30 a very kindly woman, a member of our Ponce church, calls and brings two Alligator pears—presents for the visiting mission secretaries. She speaks in Spanish only and Barrett interprets for us. She thinks Minton is very much like a cousin of hers who is a Catholic priest. Yes, the priest is rather small, but good looking, and smiles. (Oh! for Minton's smile!) The Porto Ricans are a very sociable people. Have seen a hundred evidences of this already. I guess one has to have a plenty of time on one's hands to be sociable. For if one is busy or in a hurry, one will hardly be called sociable. And the people here have an abundance of time, plenty of leisure. I want to learn Spanish before I get to be old, or even middle-aged, so that when I retire I can come over here and sit about in the shade all day and get acquainted with my fellowman—have some good talk for hours at a time!

An old "saw-mill" interested me yesterday. I had seen one in the picture books, but not in real action before. It was a quaint sight. It consisted of the log to be sawed rolled high up on a substantial rack or frame of wood. One man stood on top the log, one under it and on the ground, the two pulling a cross-cut saw, making inch boards out of the log. They get out about fifteen planks, twelve feet long, eight to ten inches wide, each day—and have to work to do it. There are many houses in Nansemond County, Virginia, and in other places I have seen, built of lumber sawed by hand "fore de war," but I had never witnessed the ancient performance before. Coffee was brought to the men while they worked. They do not speak of "bread and meat," but "bread and coffee" in Porto Rico. I bought bananas at the store beside the "saw mill." Gave the merchant five cents and he gave me half a dozen very fine and luscious bananas and two pennies back in change.

Went to the market this morning. It is a conglomeration beyond description. If you want to know a country and a people, a town or a community, as for that, you must go to the market where they buy and sell what they eat. I saw in the market here today okra, sweet potatoes (of an inferior sort), pepper, tomatoes (very inferior), a few small cabbage, and some snap beans. There were other vegetables and roots galore not familiar either in name, appearance or odor to me. I saw of tropical products offered for sale mangoes, pomegranates, bananas of three entirely different kinds (some to eat raw and some you can eat only after being cooked) coconuts, pork sausage, pork chops, live pigs at $2.00 each, at least eight weeks old, with nose and four feet all tied soundly to prevent kicking and too much squeal; much green unroasted coffee at fifteen cents per pound, and strong, black tobacco platted into a rope but cut off to the customer at one cent per inch.

We stopped at the Baptist church and made acquaintance of Miss Lake, a lady missionary in charge of the Sunday school. She has been here thirteen years, and is a Sunday school worker with ideas and a program. She is a wide awake missionary. What untold good she is accomplishing as she works away all week and Sunday, too, with these tots, boys and girls of Ponce!

We get back to Barrett's for lunch, and having taken in the town, I note the trees in Barrett's yard. They are jobo (pronounced hobo—we have these in the States, except they are not trees and can walk and beg); date palm, grosage, Corazon (called corathon, and means a tree with a heart), guynauena, two large bunches of beautiful green grass, with wavy leaves as wide as my hand and five feet long.

We call on Mr. Drury, of the United Brethren Church and manager of the publishing company that prints the union religious paper for the seven evangelical denominations in Porto Rico. They are buying an up-to-date printing outfit now. (Printers and publishers are the most hopeful people on this earth. I never went into a print shop anywhere beneath the sun but that they were installing, or about to install, some new and different something.) All the denominations are paying for this Porto Rican print shop. The United Brethren Church have put in its first installment of $1,380. The Baptists have agreed to put in $2,400, provided the Presbyterian and Methodist will each put in a like amount. But neither one has yet, for the simple and good reason that neither has the money.

This union religious paper is an interesting proposition. It now has the largest paid subscription list of any paper in Porto Rico, and now has all the subscribers it can print papers for. It increased its subscription list by 2,000 in six months, and could do it again if it had a printery equal to the task. Here is the interesting thing, however. Sixty per cent of its readers are not members of any Church. What if we could get outsiders, non-church members to read our Church papers in the States! How happy indeed the editors of our Church papers would be! But this paper carries the news of Porto Rico, and tells what is going on, both in and outside of the churches. Its editorials are on religious topics, and Church news has right of way. Mr. Drury tells us that Protestant Christians of Porto Rico have built a hospital in Sauto Domingo at a cost of $3,000, and have sent there, of their need, a doctor and two trained nurses. Porto Rican churches are themselves now doing foreign missionary work! The United Brethren have about seventeen organized churches and forty-two preaching places, with a total membership of 1600 in the churches and about 2,200 in Sunday schools. In 1920 this church began a plan to train all their churches to become self-supporting in fourteen years. They now have no self-supporting churches but are trying to put more responsibility on their churches here. The United Brethren church in Ponce, Mr. Drury says, will give $2,500 to all purposes this year. This church uses the every-member canvass and envelope system for collections. They now have only three missionary families here. At one time they had four, and Ponce is their only church in charge of a missionary pastor. All their other churches have native pastors. Their missionaries are paid $1,500.00 a year and parsonage with children's allowannces as follows: each one under twelve years of age, $100.00 a year, over twelve, $150 a year, and for children in college $200.00 a year each and tuition. Thank you, Brother Drury. My visit to your blisteringly hot printing place and office building was very pleasant. If your activities square with your talk I could be a United Brother with you or you might come along and be a Christian with me. I wonder why United Brethren will not be brethren who will unite; or we Christians become united so we can be brethren! (That sentence certainly does look good in my diary!)

I stopped at a Porto Rican drug store and Minton "set us up" to a Pineapple Sundaw (I do not know why they spell it that way. It is good enough to spell it Sunday.) And we stopped at a Benevolent Society House where women sell fancy needle work. I gave those women (the one who waited on me was a real saleswoman) $5.00 for a needle-drawn, hemstitched snow-white collar and pair of cuffs for Mrs. Atkinson—almost my total roll of spending money for the whole trip! No wonder they call it a Benevolent House. Bought for myself a pair of bed room slippers for twenty-five cents and for a good friend back home a pair for ten cents. (I always did believe in being generous to my friends!)

At Barrett's tonight I have been much interested in a frog. They call the beast Cogui—and his name sounds very much like his voice—a mellow, plaintive, musical sort of whistle—co-g-we! co-g-we!! He seems to have liberty at the back door and in the hall, and his voice is bewitching.

I went to the Ponce slaughter house this afternoon. It was a sorry lot of pigs, goats, and cows there for the slaughter. Domestic animals fare badly in the tropics. They look needy and seedy. They, like men and women, require some hard weather to bring out the best that is in them.

I have "done" Ponce today—church edifice, drug store, market place, slaughter house and all, and am now "done for." Cities never appeal to me as does the wide, open country. But I see readily how Jesus could weep over Jerusalem. He could weep over Ponce, too, and other modern cities, with their crass materialism, their fast life, their killing indifference to Him and to things spiritual. A pleasant evening of fellowship with the Barretts, and an early couch; for tomorrow is Sunday.

MEN AND MILLIONS

If there was a time when some of us seemed to be extremists on the above named subject, we can no longer be thus accused, except it be for our extreme silence. Anyhow, we seemed to feel that our people should have a "breathing spell."

Now we feel that we need a revival. Yet we are assured that we have no cause to feel pessimistic over the situation. Let us get our bearing and keep the vision clear.

What was our motive in launching this movement? Did we want a king like the nations around about us? Was there any thought of trying to keep up with the procession?

Granted that our motive was pure and that we were actuated from on high in the consciousness that we should undertake in a larger way the program of God for the Church, and that the Lord was moving us in the undertaking, why did He cease to move? Or did He? Where are we? Are we still in the faith? Have we faith in the movement? Have we faith in the people? Have we implicit faith in God? We need faith all along the line.

Let our people be assured that we have faith in them. Leaders in other denominations are letting their people know that they are being depended upon. Some time ago there was an advertisement in our local paper, The Wakefield Enterprise, which read: "Millions for the Master. Baptist 75 Million Campaign. General Association Year ends October 31. Are you behind with your pledges? Will you do your best? State, Home, and Foreign Missions, Christian Education, Orphanage, Ministers' Relief, Baptist Hospital, all depending upon payment of pledges. Baptist State Mission Board."

I am told that in the Association emphasis was laid upon the statement that loyal Baptists would pay their pledges. We may differ in reference to methods, but may not our people be reminded that we are expecting loyal Christians to pay their pledges?

Given a motive that is godly, a system of finance that is biblical, and a vision that is clear and Christian, then we have a foundation for hopefulness and the future is bright.

ELON LETTER

VERY successful business has its inventory period, wherein assets and liabilities are listed and a balance struck. New Year offers us the same opportunity for our life. It is the style now to scoff at New Year resolutions, and oftentimes they do not result in permanent good, yet the custom is wholesome of examining our life periodically and of laying our plans for new advances and achievements.

Self-examination, if too frequent, produces a morbid self-consciousness. Preventive medicine, when personally applied, has its dangers as well as its benefits. Many a man has been brought to his grave years ahead of his time because he knew too intimately his physical weakness. It requires courage and heart-ache at times to refrain from expressing sympathy for an ailing friend or loved one. But physicians say that the road to recovery in many cases lies just in that abstention. So it is too that moral diagnosis is not, when frequently indulged, a positive good. Yet we owe it to ourselves occasionally to sit down and think it all over, test our life purpose, and in its terms weigh our life's achievement. New Year offers us a splendid opportunity to do this.

Resolutions made after a careful self-examination are more likely to be lived up to, because they rest not on impulse, but upon a solid basis of ascertained facts. There are two general reasons why New Year resolutions are fleeting—first, they are impulsive, rather than thorough, decisions of the will; and secondly, they are human rather than religious. A spasmodic decision to quit cursing or to read the Bible every day will not likely be successfully achieved, because spasms are of short duration, and a resolution must be acted upon again and again before it becomes habit and a fixed principle in the character. But there is small chance even of a well thought out line of conduct based on a rigid self-examination that leaves God out. A resolution based on facts supported by prayer and that trustful dependence on God which should characterize every act of the Christian's life has everything in its favor; it ought to become habit and a fixed principle of character.

A third reason, and this a very special one, why so many resolutions fail is because they are not resolutions at all—they are mere negations. A resolution should be positive. John the Baptist realized this when he preached not only repentance, but also the bringing forth of fruits meet for repentance. It was this second element of his preaching that distinguished him from the prophets that preceded him and that warranted our Master in declaring him to be the greatest of the prophets. A resolution not to do something we have been doing, when unaccompanied by some positive thing to do, is defeated in most cases before it is made. We overcome evil with good, that is, by placing the good in the place of the evil. Just quitting our meanness, as it is sometimes baldly put, is not ample. We must fill up the aching void left by the meanness we would quit with something positive to be done. You have been reading trashy literature. Resolve to quit and buy a good book or get down your Bible, never forgetting to realize God is present to help you. In this way your resolution may win out.

A good business man, too, at the inventory period, charges off certain accounts to profit and loss, because it costs to keep them on his books and there is no likelihood that he can ever realize a penny of them. Every year of life brings its bitterness. Trusted friends betray you. Conscientious persons think they do God service in criticising and annoying you. Malice leads mean souls to slander your good name. On New Year forget it. They did worse than that to Jesus, and yet He prayed for their forgiveness. They did not ask for forgiveness, feeling the need of none, but He gave it just the same, and that is why He is Savior of the world. Charge off the ledger of life all these bad accounts, and start the year as Jesus would, with hatred for none, with every wrong or injury completely forgiven, with love for all.

A Happy New Year to you all.

W. A. HARPER.

SUFFOLK LETTER

IT was a source of deep regret that I was sick abed on October 27, 1921, when the funeral services of Mrs. J. Pressley Barrett were conducted from the Suffolk Christian church. But Dr. I. W. Johnson, who is the pastor of Berea, the church of her younger days, led the service and was assisted by Rev. II. H. Butler, a schoolmate of Dr. Barrett, Rev. W. M. Jay, pastor of Holy Neck church, where Dr. Barrett was once pastor, and Rev. J. H. Lightbourne, who is Dr. Barrett's successor as pastor of the church at Holland, Virginia.

Mrs. Barrett was, before her marriage, Emily Susan Everett, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Everett, of Nansemond County, Virginia, and was born on October

8, 1857. She passed away October 25, 1921, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Bun Hearne, in Wilson, N. C., after a long decline in health. She was buried in Cedar Hill Cemetery, Suffolk, Virginia, by the side of her parents, brothers, sisters, and her own children who had gone before.

She was married to Rev. J. Pressley Barrett November 7, 1882, exactly one month before I took up permanent residence in Suffolk. I buried her parents, several of her children, her brother, sister-in-law, and niece. I have, therefore, been with the Everett and Barrett families in many bereavements, besides being intimately related to Dr. Barrett in Christian work for nearly forty years.

Dr. and Mrs. Barrett seemed wedded in the Lord. They agreed in their religious convictions, purposes, and hopes. She was suited to a minister as a companion and a helper. In the work of editor to which Dr. Barrett has devoted most of his life, his companion was a loyal, faithful and efficient co-worker. She was a prime worker in the "Little People," a Sunday school publication edited and published by Dr. Barrett; and she rendered valuable assistance in the editorial work of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. It was in this paper that Mrs. Barrett first appeared as "Aunt Minnie" in the Children's Corner. That corner began as "Uncle Edwin," "Aunt Minnie," "Uncle Tangle," and "Uncle Jim." That Corner in which Mrs. Barrett served as "Aunt Minnie" was a clearing house for little letters from little children who made little contributions; but it grew until the idea became the Christian Orphanage, located at Elon College, and now worth one hundred thousand dollars. That institution cares for seventy-five children, a real "Children's Corner," where young life is saved, trained and equipped for usefulness in the Kingdom. The union of these Christian workers lacked only twelve days of thirty-nine years together, and it was one united effort to build up the Kingdom. Dr. Barrett's long service as editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and his twelve years as editor of The Herald of Gospel Liberty, gave ample scope for her talents as his helper in the field of Christian journalism.

But the chief characteristic of Mrs. Barrett was her strong personality and her deep spirituality, two valuable factors in human usefulness. No one who knew her ever doubted her sincerity, or her faith in her Savior. She built her life as well as her hope on Jesus Christ. The frivolities of life never appealed to her noble soul. She was concerned about the welfare of men and the building of the Kingdom. Her religion, as well as her domestic hospitality, was the outflow of a genuine soul filled with kindness. To be guest in their home was to evoke the best she could offer; she kept back nothing that could express the warmth of her heart and the service of her hands. As a member of the church, as a Sunday school teacher, as a Christian worker, "she did what she could." In her long affliction she did not murmur, but was patient, bright, resigned and trustful. She was best appreciated and best loved by those who knew her best. Many times have I shared her hespi-tality and fellowship in their Dayton home, and I am hoping to renew it in heaven. "Her children can rise up and call her blessed: her husband also, and he praiseth her."

W. W. STALEY.

THE PREACHER AND HIS BOOKS

OOKS, books—of making books there is no end.

Books have become both popular and useful. Books are found upon every subject under the sun. Books tell us how to farm, how to teach, how to raise pigs, cows, sheep; and books tell us how to preach. If we want information upon any subject, new or old, we go find a book which contains the information and make it our own.

First—The Preacher's Choice of Books

If one goes into the business of buying books he may get "loaded up" very soon unless he is extremely careful. I have heard more than one preacher who had come to middle-life say that his books were a white elephant on his hands. He had so many that he did not need, and did not use—they were only junk to move from place to place. It is no very great compliment to say of a preacher that he has the largest library in the town, but it certainly is worth while to possess the best one.

I think it was Theodore Roosevelt of whom I read that he did not buy a book for his library until he had read it. This statement seemed to me at the time to represent the almost impossible, but if it is a rule that can be followed it would save the preacher a boundless amount of trash and rubbish in his library.

Lyman Abbott said: "He (the preacher) should study those books which will teach him what men of his time are thinking about, and how the men of his time are living. Too much time of the minister has been spent in studying what men used to think about and how men used to live in times past. Horace Bushnell once said, 'All seminaries are behind the times, but the Theological Seminary is behind all times.' He should endeavor to understand how men are living, what are the motives which are controlling the men and women of his congregation in their social, business and political life."

The synopses and criticisms published in the newspapers and magazines sometimes help a preacher to make choice of the books that will be of permanent value to him, but a book should never be purchased because it is popular or because it is a good seller. Sometimes the thing—even a book—which is taken by storm at first, is of the least permanent value. I do not mean to minimize the work of H. G. Wells, but it seems to me that his books, for example, afford an illustration of that.

Second—The Range of a Preacher's Books

A preacher's library should be complete, if not large. We have left behind us the day when preachers are afraid of "book l'arnin'." The preacher of today knows that he must have the help of good books. Indeed, he needs the help of other books to help him understand and properly interpret the Bible. There was a time when folks accepted the statements of the Bible as true without question, but now we have the means to prove that they are true, even outside of personal experience. That is, a man who does not believe them may be shown they are true by the use of other materials.

Of course the preacher who is in line with his day will have a liberal supply of books covering the history and teaching of his own denomination, as well as those of the whole Church. A knowledge of general history is of very great value to the preacher. During the World War, and since, I have heard many sermons and addresses mentioning the treachery of the Russian Court women, under the influence of the Black Monk, Rasputin, but I did not hear that related anywhere to the activities of Brunhilde in the sixth century. The masterpieces of the world's literature bring to a preacher priceless materials. He need not be a master of science to be able to use science to his very great advantage in preaching. A study of the philosophy of Christ will certainly show that the kind perpetrated for a long time on the world is that of ancient time and barbarous mind.

Every age has supplied some very fine works of fiction. The preacher should know the best fiction. Such fiction as "The Scarlet Letter," "Ramola," and "Les Miserables," delineate character and teach principles that are fundamental in preaching. A certain type of late fiction has come to be so popular, and the attraction of such amusements as the moving picture become so great, that I fear if the preacher does not wake up to that which appeals to human nature he will not long get the ear of the people.

Preachers like John and Charles Wesley used to put great facts of theology into poems, and the congregations (not the choirs) would sing them. Today poetry has almost entirely disappeared from the discourses and study of the preacher of mature mind. However, only a few years ago there was published "The Everlasting Mercy" by John Masefield, called by eminent educators the greatest poem published in twenty years, and it affords a very fine clinic in regeneration.

The range of the preacher's books is limitless. Dr. W. W. Staley, in "The Minister," says: "A mighty host surrounds me in my study. Peter, James and John did not see as much or hear as much as the minister in his library. Jesus is here, too, in the Bible and in the Spirit. There are more people in my library than in my church. They speak to me, they kindle the fires of my imagination, they quicken my faith, humble my pride, rebuke my wrong doing and wrong thinking, warn me against sin, and point my soul to the living Christ. Here I find tombs with angels, deserts with fountains, gardens with Saviors, prisons with praises, and crosses with crowns."

Third—The Preacher's Use of His Books

The preacher who stops reading and studying books will cease to grow. It will not be of any benefit to a minister to have a world full of books and not use them.

Books are published to give help and information. The preacher cannot be a plagiarist, or a copyist. And while the contents of a book are, in a measure, public property, the preacher in using them must certainly make them his own. It is amusing to sometimes see preachers kidding themselves into thinking, or at least pretending, to be entirely original. Some time ago I read a published sermon of an eminent American divine. This same sermon I read later out of a book of sermons in my library, and found that it had been delivered centuries ago by a famous preacher of that time. But it had been subtracted from and added to, I must say in justice, until it had become the sermon of the man who delivered it last.

Moreover, it sometimes becomes a reasonable question to ask whether the cause might not be benefitted by a more frequent use by preachers of material which has been criticised, edited and published, rather than so much of that which is undigested by the preacher who may deliver it, and which is the product of immature and pragmatic thinking. The preacher who uses books, good books, books taking him in his study into all the different fields where explorations may be made, and who gathers the material for his sermons, basing them of course upon biblical teaching, and using it to fortify, will certainly not be a ranting know-nothing.

The preacher must always be mindful of the fact that his people, except a small number, are not getting their ideals from the Bible, but from the popular novel—a few from heavier reading, possibly, and some are taking Christian (?) Science, and some even take a try at Spiritualism. The preacher who does not study books, and who is not able to show the man or woman of honest doubt, the better way, must not find fault if some go to churches where a more intelligent and modern presentation and application of the gospel is preached. "Let us thank God for books," and let us thank God for the Book of books, which is a lamp to our feet, and which contains the bread of life—the message which is the preacher's meat and drink.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON— JANUARY 1, 1922

The Revolt of Jeroboam—1 Kings 12:1-13:6.

Golden Text: Thou shalt not make unto thee a graven image, nor any likeness of anything that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: thou shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them.—Exodus 20: 4, 5.

NOTE: With this lesson we begin a nine-months course in Old Testament lessons. Our last studies in the Old Testament ended in September, 1920, and ended with the reign of Solomon. The former course included a study of the work of the early leaders and kings, and the progress of the Israelites. This first lesson period may well devote time to a hasty sketch of the history which leads up to the division of the kingdom, noting the six outstanding periods which the Hebrew people had passed through: (1) the Patriarchal (Abraham to Jacob); (2) the Egyptian (Joseph to Moses); (3) Exodus (Moses); (4) Settlement in Canaan (Joshua); (5) Period of the Judges (Gideon to Samuel); and (6) the Period of the Monarchy (Saul, David and Solomon.)

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC

January 1, 1922: Better Christian Endeavor Societies—
I Corinthians 15: 57, 58.
(CONSECRATION MEETING)

A QUESTION

Do you want a better Christian Endeavor Society? January 1 is an excellent time to decide upon forward steps which your Society is going to take this year. The Christian Endeavor Department of the American Christian Convention, Rev. A. B. Kendall, D. D., Springfield, Ohio, Chairman, has issued a card giving the "Christian Endeavor Standards," which will be a fine guide to any Society which really desires to be a "Better Society," in accordance with the idea of our topic for the first meeting of the year. These Standards include the following ten points: (1) Adoption of the Christian Endeavor Efficiency Chart; (2) a 10 per cent increase in membership; (3) one-tenth of the gross income of each Society for the Christian Endeavor Department of the American Christian Convention; (4) Fifty cents per member for missions; (5) 50 per cent average attendance at the Christian Endeavor prayer meeting; (6) 50 per cent of the active membership enrolled as Comrades of the Quiet Hour; (7) 25 per cent of the active membership enrolled in the Tenth Legion; (8) 25 per cent of the membership Christian Endeavor Experts; (9) a representative at denominational Christian Endeavor gatherings, where such are held; (10) a representative at State or District Christian Endeavor Conventions. Christian Endeavor leaders should study this list of standards carefully and choose the points toward which their Societies need to work most. True Christian Endeavor effort "For Christ and the Church" cannot help but mean better Christian Endeavor Societies, and hence, better churches.

OUR TASK IN 1922

"The Church of Christ cannot live in the world as if there were no children. The Church of Christ must work in the world for the teaching and training of the rising generation. In the faith of the Church, Christ must have the preeminence. In the program of the Church, the preeminence belongs to the Christian nurture of the rising generation."

This significant statement, made by Dr. Harold Robinson in the last issue of The Christian Educator, sums up the opinion, which is coming to be more and more that of thinking, consecrated Church leaders. The Church must place more emphasis upon the need of Christian nurture, and then devote its energies to satisfying that need. The Church faces the responsibility of providing Christian education for millions of boys and girls, or the tragedy of seeing them grow up without the knowledge of the Christ, and of the great principles which He represents. And in this same responsibility and challenge is found the supreme opportunity of the Church. The New Year will see forward steps taken in this important work. The Christian Church must "go forward on the feet of her little children," or lose ground. In co-operation with the local Churches and the Conferences, the Department of Religious Education is praying and working that progress may be made possible because, as the years go by, the children will be ready to take up the work.

To this end, the program of the Board of Religious Education for the year of 1922 must include many activities, with an effort to correlate all of the work with the single purpose of winning and training lives. Some of the work which the Board hopes to be able to accomplish is as follows: (1) to see a Sunday school organized and maintained in every one of our churches; (2) to enable the Sunday schools now working to render a larger service to the boys and girls, to the Church and to the community, through efficient Cradle Rolls, Home Departments, Teacher-Training Classes and organized Sunday school classes; (3) to see our schools real religious education forces because they are adequately graded and because they are offering lessons which are adapted to the needs of the pupils; (4) to organize Christian Endeavor Societies, Senior, Intermediate or Junior, where these Societies are needed, and to strengthen in every way possible the Societies we now have; (5) to promote missionary study in the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Societies as a very vital part of religious education; (6) to urge every Sunday school to provide for future progress by having one or more students in Elon College; (7) through Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Institutes in convenient centers in all of the Conferences to reach every church with a message of inspiration and information, and through these gatherings to pave the way for even larger and better Conventions in 1922; (8) to strive to solve the problem of the limited time at the disposal of the church for religious education by providing week-day religious instruction, and to carry on as many Daily Vacation Bible Schools this coming summer as possible, having at least one in each Conference. These are just hints of the program which the Board of Religious Education is striving to promote. Our work needs to be organized for this program, but organized for the sake of the lives for which we are responsible to give the greatest of messages. All of these activities are but a means to the one great end of touching lives for Jesus Christ, and winning them for service in His Kingdom. Without this end in view, they are of no avail. This is our task, the great challenge for service coming to our Churches and your Board. What shall our answer be?

“O thou who didst the vision send,
And gives to each his task,
And with the task sufficient strength,
Show us thy will, we ask;
Give us a conscience bold and good.
Give us a purpose true,
That it may be our highest joy
Our Father's work to do.”

VOCATIONAL GUIDANCE—BEGINNING EARLY

AT what age should we begin to point our young people to our schools and colleges? Do we not make a serious mistake in waiting until boys and girls are about to graduate from high school before we begin to talk to them about going to one of the splendid colleges of the Christian Church? Some people get up on Sunday morning and begin to ask the question, Who's going to church this morning? as if it were a foregone conclusion (as it no doubt is) that some were not even planning to go to church that day. It should never be a question in the true Christian home, as to whether one would go to church on Sunday morning or not. We should never expect or plan anything else. So with the boys and girls going to college. It ought not to be a question at all whether they are going to college, or where they are going to college, but the getting down in the grades and later in the high school the proper fitting for their later college work. Such conditions ought to exist, and they will in the normal Christian home. Begin down there with that little six or seven year old boy in your home, and talk Defiance or Elon or Palmer or Union Christian to him as the place where he will get his college training for his life work. Many a father or mother who feels a little concerned, and rightly so, about sending their boy or girl to the modern high school, will find a safe place in Starkey Seminary, under most favorable conditions and the best in text-book and faculty, for a thorough and careful fitting for the college course.

Our people need to be impressed with the fact that our schools and colleges are not only in the front ranks scholastically, but are also safe morally and spiritually. One of our strong pastors and also one of our best representative men says: “I find that every boy and girl that goes out from my church to one of our colleges, when they come back home they are better workers in the church than when they went away.” How different that is than sending a boy away to college and having him lose all his love for the church and interest in church work. All parents may feel assured that they will not make any regrettable mistake by sending their boys and girls to our own schools.

And then, these homes of ours must be willing to give their boys and girls for leadership in our church work. One of the Forward Movement aims is to have a boy or girl in training in one of our own colleges from every Christian church. Surely this ought to be possible. And we ought to have a young person in training for distinctive Christian work from every one of our churches. It will take planning, and praying, and paying to do this, but what greater work could any church undertake, than to educate one of their young people for Christian leadership? We are confident that many of our churches would find a real joy in getting back of such a proposition? What church is ready to invest from two to three hundred dollars a year in such an undertaking? It is constructive work of this kind on the part of the church that will solve the great question of future leadership. The Life Recruit Department will be glad to counsel with any church along these lines of service. The Lord is calling us and we will hear His call if we are true to Him.

HISTORY OF THE HEBREW COMMONWEALTH

(By Bailey and Kent)

This book will be found of great value in teaching the lessons in the Old Testament, a study which is pursued by those using the uniform lessons for the next nine months. The maps are invaluable; there are also many fine pictures which will prove helpful, and the descriptions are so plainly written as to prove illuminating to many Bible texts, as well as giving an insight into general conditions. The book is brought down to the time of General Allenby's entry into Jerusalem, and the suggestions in the appendix make it a fine study book. Care should be used, however, in putting this book into the hands of young people, as in many cases it takes the higher critical view. It is a good book for teachers. This book is published by Chas. Scribner's Sons, and may be secured through our own Publishing Agent, Rev. C. B. Riddle, Burlington, N. C. Price $2.00.

Dear Riddle:

The November 23 issue of THE SUN, in my estimation, is such a fine number I desire to commend it and you as its Editor. It attracts me in a way to compel the reading of every article. It is indeed of a very high order, and I hope this can be maintained. As far as you are able I know it will.

Very sincerely,

H. E. ROUNTREE.

The above letter is only one of many such letters that weekly find their way into THE SUN office. Our custom has been, almost without exception, to let these tributes go unpublished. It is in justice to the faithful men in the plant who take a personal pride in THE SUN that we print Chaplain Rountree's letter. The men who do the mechanical work on THE SUN take special pride in its every issue to see that the best in their line is produced.—EDITOR.

A CORRECTION

Our dear Brother J. W. Wellons writes: "I was born January 1, 1826, and will be 96 January 1. You have it 97." Thank you, Brother Wellons, we did not mean to make you that old, and we are glad to drop a year and call you 96 years young. THE SUN and its host of friends greet you on your 96th birthday.

The Lord bless thee and keep thee. The Lord make His face to shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee. The Lord lift up His countenance upon thee, and give thee peace.—Numbers 6: 24-26.

FOREIGN MISSIONS

In October of 1920, Dr. W. P. Lawrence and your Secretary went to Dayton, Ohio, to meet the A. C. C. Board, as requested by this Board, in order to have a clear understanding of our relationship and the expenditure of our foreign funds. The A. C. C. Board gave your representatives a hearing and a joint meeting of the members of this Board with the A. C. C. Board was agreed upon, pending the return of Secretary W. P. Minton from Japan. The Chairman of this Board appointed Drs. C. H. Rowland and G. O. Lankford, Brother K. B. Johnson, J. A. Williams, and J. M. Darden and the Secretary, to attend the Dayton meeting.

Owing to sickness in his family at the time, Brother Darden was unable to attend. The other appointees assembled in Dayton, February 1. As the proceedings of that meeting are a part of our records they need not be reported further here, other than to say that from that meeting till now the best of good fellowship has obtained between the two Boards, and as far as I have been able to learn, between the constituency of the Boards. It was certainly a most happy adjustment of a perplexing and embarrassing proposition. There is one point we did not cover and it would be in order for this Board to adjust that; and that is the power of appointing missionaries to the proposed China field, and the fixing salaries of the same. As this Board is to bear more largely the burden of this work, your Secretary is of opinion that this matter should be left as in the last paragraph in the agreement; viz.: to the chairmen and secretaries of the two Boards jointly. In addition to the above agreement it may be added that this Board is now supporting Miss Olive Williams in Porto Rico, through the generosity of the Third church, Norfolk; Miss Stacey in Japan, through the generosity of Burlington church, and Miss Toshio Sato in Japan through the generosity of Third church, Norfolk. The Treasurer's Report will show moneys paid out for foreign missions past year.

J. O. ATKINSON, Secretary.

WE, TOO, BROTHER

Secretary Burnett, of the American Christian Convention, in a recent contribution to The Herald concerning The Christian Annual, says, in speaking of some of the "copy" sent him: "We have used a magnifying glass, have turned the paper upside down, sidewise and otherwise, have submitted it to the printers, the manager, the stenographer, and then shut our eyes and guessed at what it means. . . ."

We, too, Brother, for we have been following a like experience for the past several weeks. We are ready to move that the time for all annual conferences be changed to that the men who have to get out our Annuals may enjoy a Christmas. Brother Burnett, here is a fellow-sufferer's sympathy.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

GETTING READY FOR CHRISTMAS

At the time of writing this letter our Orphanage family is making all preparations for Christmas. The Orphanage school has closed and Miss Brothers, our very efficient teacher, has gone to her home in Berkley, Norfolk, Virginia, to spend the holidays. The village graded school has also closed for the holidays and the boys and girls who attend from the Orphanage are busy getting everything in readiness. The girls are cleaning the building and scrubbing the floors and dusting the woodwork and the furniture. The boys are getting the stove wood all split and in the dry and all other extra work done, so when "Old Santa" comes they will be ready to give him a warm welcome and be able to entertain him in a manner that will make him feel that children in an Orphanage love him more than anybody.

The little children in the Baby Home will all hang up their stockings and go to bed on Christmas eve night with that bright expectation that we all had when we were little folks like them, expecting to find them filled to the top when they awake on Christmas morning. From the packages that have come in during the last few days I think they will be happy and their hearts filled with joy, for a number of friends have sent in boxes of candy, apples and oranges to fill them with.

Christmas is always a joyful season at the Orphanage. The friends of the orphan children have always been kind to us and have always made it possible to give them a joyful time at the time when every heart should be filled with joy. This Christmas season will be as good as in former year and I think every child in the Institution has been remembered in the presents sent in.

Our Thanksgiving offering still climbs toward the goal, and this week runs us up to $3,242.00. We are yet far from the goal. To reach the six thousand dollars this year will take some effort and some sacrifice. I wonder how many members of the Christian Church who have contributed toward this offering have made a real sacrifice in making their offering?

Let us all take some interest in this offering and lend a helping hand and see that we reach the goal. We ought to take pride enough in our Orphanage to reach this goal.

If your church has not made the offering, please make it at your earliest convenience and mail it in. We will not close the books for several weeks yet, and will give you time to get your offering in. Personal checks will be highly appreciated as well as church and Sunday school offerings. Liberty Bonds taken same as cash if you want to make an offering. We will be as good as we can be and make it convenient to you.

CHURCH NEWS

PORTSMOUTH

About four weeks ago I arrived in Portsmouth, Virginia, to begin my pastoral labors with the First Christian church of this city. My impression of the work here in a general way has been most favorable. I find the membership of the church well organized for service, which speaks well for former pastors. The members who are the most interested in the church are enthusiastic, and are willing to be led to undertake larger things for the Kingdom. My prayer is that I may prove to be just the kind of leader that the church may need.

Since being on the field the church has been exceedingly thoughtful and kind to the pastor and his family. Special kindness was shown by our genial brother, Jack Brothers, and his good wife, for taking me into their home and caring for me so well until my furniture arrived and a place was found to put it. And after it came a check was handed me by the church to pay freight and all moving expenses to the amount of $127.93. Then on the day that I was expecting Mrs. Wells and children from Raleigh, our good and gracious women and Brother Gort came and set our house in order and prepared a delicious hot supper and had it waiting on the table for the arrival of Mrs. Wells. And when she walked in she was charmed, delighted and hungry. She could not have been otherwise after seeing what was prepared for us. And more than that, our ladies furnished our pantry with at least a week's supply of provisions, and later our good Brother Gort came along and presented us with a nice heater, which has proven to be a real comfort to us these cold days. And then on last Thursday night our Ladies' Aid Society arranged a special program that was highly entertaining and helpful in honor of the pastor and his family. The first part of the program was the regular routine of a Ladies' Aid Society meeting, which was full of interest. Then came songs, duets, readings, talks, and a very warm welcome address by Sister Ellis to the pastor and family. After a few words of response by the pastor, all were invited into the basement of the church, where sandwiches, a salad course, and hot coffee were served. After having spent a good while together, eating, talking, and getting acquainted with our people, the hour came for us to say "good night."

We are so grateful to our good people for all these good things done for us. They make us want to be better and do better, and serve those whom our Lord has called to labor with in a Christlike way.

FROM "UNCLE" WELLS

To My Many Friends:

I want to express my gratitude to God for His goodness to me. I will be 96 years old the first day of January, 1922. I suppose I am the oldest living minister in the Christian Church, North, South, East or West, and one of the oldest preachers of all the denominations in the South, and one of the oldest royal arch Masons in the state. I am so grateful too to say that, while my faculties are growing weaker, none of them so far has failed me entirely. I can walk around some yet.

I have had to contend with asthma for sixty years or more, and have had some very serious attacks of it. Yet I have been able to contend with it successfully.

I am comfortably quartered at Elon, never lack for friends, and have a fairly good appetite. The cold wind of the winter season and my asthma do not agree, so, of course, I have to keep pretty close in the house at this time of the year. There is, however, no one who appreciates shaking hands with old friends more than I do. So here is for a happy handshake through the pages of The Christian Sun for every one of you on this first day of January, which is to be my 96th birthday.

It may be that I will not live to see the closing out of my 97th year. If I should fail to live to see another January first, I won't say good bye to you, friends, but good morning until we meet again.

I am expecting to receive, as in former years, a large number of Christmas cards and New Year cards from my dear friends. I will read every one of them and pray for the dear ones who send them and think of them often with deep and abiding pleasure.

May God bless you all, in my prayer, for Christ's sake.

J. W. WELLONS.

CHRISTMAS TREE GIVEN LITTLE BITS OF HEAVEN

Y. M. and Y. W. Make Little Ones of Elon Orphanage Happy. Dolls, Air Guns An' Everything

Two little hands stretched out, two little eyes gleaming with delight; one little throat gurgling with ecstatic joy, one little body a-quiver with happy excitement; a big, broad smile which said, "I am happy," and a wee small voice which said, "I thank you"! This was the picture in each case as Santa Claus plucked a present from the Christmas tree and passed it to the eager hands of the little ones from the Elon Christian Orphanage. This wonderful Christmas tree and its presents were given and arranged for by the members of the Y. W. and Y. M. C. A., and it all took place in the College Auditorium last Saturday afternoon. The children came over in a body and entered the chapel in almost perfect order. Outwardly, they were calm, inwardly their hearts were exceeding the speed limit.

H. Lee Scott, who led the devotional exercise, could see that he was keeping the tiny tots in torturous suspense, and so he cut his ceremony down in order to get down to the real business of stripping the tree and allowing Old Santy to come in.

One little fellow from the baby building sat on the front row, his little duck legs dangling about half way to the floor. "I want me a auttomobile," he calmly announced. And sure enough, when his name was called off, he found himself to be the proud owner of an automobile truck, and on its sides was written "Dry Goods." True the truck was only about the size of your two fists, but what did its owner care about that? He wasn't much bigger than two fists himself.

Next to the little boy sat a wee little tiny small girl. She wanted a doll, and lo and behold, when her name was called off Santa Claus gave her a big nice doll almost as big as she was. And what do you suppose the little girl did? She kissed her doll right there before everybody, and the doll was a boy, too.

After old Saint Nicholas got limbered up, he began to give out presents right and left. Several dolls were bestowed upon other little girls, and any number of automobiles of various makes and models went to other embryonic speed-kings. But dolls and automobiles weren't everything. One black-eyed Susan got a tea-set, and folks are sure almost that they saw one tow-headed urchin get a Charlie Chaplin that was made so that you could press on his stomach and make him stick his tongue out. One fellow got an alligator that you could wind up and he would crawl all around and wiggle his tail, too. They had one little boy from Alabama—he doesn't have any mother and father, that's why he stays over at the baby building like a lot of others—well, he got an air gun that you can shoot spit balls in. Besides that he got a trumpet that you can blow and make sound real loud, just like those folks did when they marched seven times around the walls of Jericho.

The big children over at the orphanage got something, too. In fact, everybody got something and everybody was happy. Toward the close of the affair, old Santa Claus picked up one youngster and set him on his shoulder. Was the little lump of heaven frightened? Not a bit of it! "Look what I got," he yelled to the audience, and in grandiose style he waved to them in his left hand the whole of a brand new automobile.

Members of the Y. M. and Y. W. say they are actually happy because they were responsible for bringing all this happiness to the little ones of the Elon Christian Orphanage. They say it really was a pleasure for them to have a part in bringing joy to the hearts of those whose sweetness caused Christ to say, "Of such is the Kingdom of heaven." Miss Maude Kendrick, who had charge of the arrangements, is also glad that she had such a fine opportunity to lay up for herself "treasures in heaven" where there are no moths and rust and where thieves cannot get in to steal. Some folks believe that anybody who does something for an orphan child's Christmas will feel good over it.—R. S. Rainey, in Maroon and Gold.

THE REFLECTING LAKE

It is only memories, rough illustration, which show how the force of destruction has swept over gigantic forests of vegetation. Grass and young brush respond to one sweep of the fire and disappear. Here and there large trees fall but will leave the stump as a reminder that the life of the giant was there, and that the giant has not perished without a fight. A quiet lake at the foot of the forest reflects this great struggle in the realm of nature. Fire is the passion of life. Grass, brush, and giant trees, individuals weak and strong, and the reflecting lake is the human soul which reflects the passions of life and the destruction of our own body.

The fire of life may sweep over the human forest many times, but will never destroy this quiet reflecting lake—our soul. And this permanent lake will produce another and another glorious forest of giants, and so on infinitely. Now you see no water and everything is clouded by smoke and fire. It seems that this great force of destruction has predominating effect over everything and will eat up the very existence not only of the forest of giants but of the earth and sky also. Is the lake, the soul, which raised this forest there? It is there: But you could not see that reflecting mirror of life because it is clouded by the sweeping passions of the fire of life. So with human nature. When individuals are weak and discouraged and let the passions of life control them, destruction for them is imminent.

And that is why so many people are unable to see and conceive their own souls. When water is wavy, we cannot see the bottom of the lake. When the sky is cloudy, we cannot see through it. And so with human nature. When we allow the passions of life to excite and vanquish us, we cannot see our own selves. But when we use self-control in our daily life, only then can we look into our—souls—into the lake of life and see there the reflected memories of the forest fire and realize that all this great passion of life is only temporary and superficial, and know that the real soul always exists beyond all memories.—Michael Berdnikoff.
