Thursday morning, the day of the reunion, daughter Mary called up from the Rock Island station and it was not long before a car was there to bring her to Watson's home. Brother David's family were all present except Ethel; Roy, David's younger son, was present with his wife and two boys. When Lulu and Ruth were preparing to leave home, they did not know what to do with the quantity of lima beans in the garden so they pulled them, filled a suit-case and checked them with their other baggage. These were hulled Wednesday night. Edith said nothing could have pleased her more as she had been wanting lima beans for the reunion dinner. That dinner! Jabez, I wish you could have been present to enjoy it. It was a real banquet which would have done credit to a professional caterer. It was held in the basement of the church where forty-five were at the table to enjoy the sumptuous meal.

After the dinner, remarks were made by the president, D. M., followed by words from Roy at the close of which he challenged the members of the older generation to a contest with horse shoes and croquet mallets. I do not seem to have gotten beyond the play period of my life, Jabez although father gave us boys as much time for play as was consistent with the amount of work he had to supervise and do himself. So I cheerfully accepted the challenge and the older generation did not suffer the embarrassment of defeat. Jasper was champion on the croquet ground, also at the checker board.

Our formal meeting was held at eight P. M. Watson's daughter, Claire, had charge of the music. Her friend played several numbers on the violin which were much enjoyed. Then Claire sang "Don't Leave Jesus," a hymn composed by brother David. After this, Watson's family sang a song that he had composed. Both of these were also enjoyed. Then followed the informal exercises. I forgot to say that at the close of the banquet David called on anyone who was sorry that he had married into the Helfenstein family to manifest it by rising, but no one arose and at this point of the evening meeting opportunity was given for free expression. Tributes were paid to the memory of father and mother and incidents were recalled that were of interest to all present. The question arose as to whether the immediate members of the circle would rather hold their meeting alone or have those of the second and third generations join them. That the minds of all the descendants might be put permanently at rest on this point, a resolution was adopted making all descendants of James O'Kelly Helfenstein members of the reunion. Jabez, more than half the enjoyment of the reunion would be taken away if we could not have the members of our families with us. Thursday, August 17, 1922, was a red letter day in the history of our family. Words failed to express the joy and gladness of our hearts on that occasion and our minds turned to the All Father who had so graciously kept us all through the years and brought us together once more.

I think loyalty to the reunion idea could be shown no better than by the example of our oldest sister, Marsella, who although past seventy-nine, came clear from Washington to be at the reunion. Not only that, she took the responsibilities of caring for her husband who is past eighty-one and nearly blind, quite feeble and requires a good deal of care, yet she made the trip successfully and wore the same bright, cheerful look as formerly.

We had three new members at the reunion, Fontell's husband, Mr. Randolph, Annie Helfenstein and Opal Hunter. Brother Hannibal's oldest daughter came from Pasadena, California, so you see there are those willing to overcome obstacles to be present at our family gathering.

In the order of their ages, Marsella, the oldest sister, with her husband; Jasper, who lives in Mountain Grove, Missouri, was there alone. Saquin, who lives in Dayton, with his family; David who lives in Sandusky, was there with his family save Ethel; Jesse with Laura his wife and his eldest son and his wife; Mary Tallman from Imperial, Neb., she was also alone; Watson at whose home the reunion was held; Kitty Bivens and her husband with their two daughters, Ruth and Fontell with their two husbands. The sum of the combined ages of the eight sisters and brothers is five hundred and sixty-six years and I think the combined weight is about the same as it was two years ago. All were locking and feeling well when we met on that joyful Wednesday evening. Watson and Edith entertained royally.

Brother Jesse and those with him had to start for home after the reunion dinner, so they were not with us Friday afternoon when Ruth, Jesse, Kitty's older daughter, and her husband Fred entertained the reunion. As their house was small, they gave us a picnic supper in one of Des Moines' beautiful parks where there were tables and seats suited to our convenience.

The occasion was one of great delight. Three kinds of sandwiches were served, one of which was of the same delicious whole wheat on which Edith fed us sandwiches were followed with cakes, fruits and lemonade. The supper was self-served and each one could help himself to what he liked best. It was a delightful occasion but our enjoyment was not all physical and social, for after the supper, Jasper read a number of entertaining selections. Jabez, it is wonderful how he can commit and remember so many pieces. He certainly has disproved that old theory that after a man is thirty-five he cannot memorize, for Jasper in the last few years has committed to memory a goodly number of pieces.

Four automobiles took us to and from the park by each making two trips each way. We shall long remember the pleasurable occasion enjoyed through the kindly thoughtfulness of Ruth and Fred.

Friday evening Mary, Ruth and Joseph left for St. Paul; Saturday forenoon, sister Mary and niece Annie took their departure. So the immediate family was just two short on the Sabbath. We worshipped in the church in the basement of which the reunion dinner was eaten and listened to a helpful and inspiring message given by Roy on the subject "Believing in Jesus." We were glad that the Helfenstein family has given to the world so devout and faithful a preacher as Roy. If my letter were not already too long, I would like to give you an outline of the sermon. In the latter part of his discourse, Roy asked "What does it mean to believe in Christ? It means to believe in his way of living; in his good will toward all. Jesus was unselfish; he lived for others. Jesus had faith in God; he believed in the practice of prayer. He was sincere, with Him there was no shame, no wavering. Our belief in Jesus must be expressed by a life of devotion to him. Believing in Jesus means to rest on his promises; to rest in his forgiving grace; to rely upon him for strength to overcome and gain the victory." The congregation was highly pleased with the discourse.

Jabez, reunions cannot last forever here. The price we pay for their enjoyment is the sadness of parting. And we are always cheered by the thought that we may live to enjoy another, but if not, we are sustained by the glad hope of that eternal reunion toward which we are all constantly locking, firmly believing that in our Father's house we shall all meet again. Goodby, Jabez, and may you have a part in that glad reunion.

Sincerely yours,

SAQUIN.

IS INSPIRATION INADEQUATE?

In this day of the superabundance of human wisdom many are questioning the sufficiency of divine inspiration, indeed, many are seeking to throw doubt on the truth of inspiration. They seem to desire to impress the mind with the thought that only man's mind is sufficient as his guide in the thinking of the individual. If there be any inspiration at all from God, they say it is not sufficient as a guide to keep man in the way of real truth. They even seek to discredit the inspiration of the Scriptures and give to themselves the credit of knowing the truth. How mistaken men be when seeking to have their own way. Alas! for the wrecks along the way of human thinking.

What is inspiration? It is a supernatural influence, exerted on the writers of the Bible by the Spirit of God, by virtue of which their writings are given divine approval, as expressive of the will of God and therefore trustworthy in all matters of divine thought with which the said are therefore called the inspired, as the divinely determined products of men who have been inspired by the Spirit of God. This seems to be the true Scriptural understanding of the work of men. Listen to the words of Peter, for in I Pet. Scriptures may deal. The books of the Bible the Spirit upon the hearts of God's chosen penmen: 1:21; we read:

"For the prophecy came not in old time by the will of man; but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

We notice that a good many writers make it appear that their understanding of the inspiration of the Bible was of such a nature that it must be supplemented. For instance, they frequently speak of the inspired penman as having access to certain human records, as their source of supply of matter for what they are writing. Perhaps, but hardly. They may have had the privilege of reading records as other men have had, but they did not, we think, quote from those records on their own judgment. If they did quote from certain human records they did it under the inspiration of the Spirit, being guided thereby to use the matter so found in said records. We feel morally certain that not one of the sacred writers would have of his own will and accord taken such records to fill out the scriptures. That would have been the same as a human record, and that would not have been inspiration. So when the sacred writer was guided to copy certain records, he was inspired to make such use, and therefore the act was inspired, making the record just as truly inspired as if it had been given direct from God. Do the scriptures themselves sustain this view? Yes, we think they do. Read Job. 32:8; 2 Tim. 3:16; 2 Pet. 1:21, and many other passages of the Word.

Inspiration therefore is not a strange thing as given to man on the part of God. God made man in His own image, and therefore must have made him just as He wished man to be, and that being true, why could He not have made man susceptible of receiving from Him such influences as might be necessary in the giving of His mind and will to other man through the Word? It seems little less than bold unbelief for a man to deny the inspiration of the Scriptures. To say that God could not inspire men to give out His thought to His fellows would be the same as limiting His knowledge and power, and that is not reasonable, for the creative power which gave us the world and all it contains, certainly could give man a correct inspiration for the receiving and giving out the thought of God. Some will say: "Oh, yes, God could have done it undoubtedly, but did He? Yes, God's own Word says he did as we see in II Pet. 1:21. Why should He withhold such a blessing to His people when He had the power to give it and when the people so needed thus to be guided in knowing Him? Suppose God had not made a revelation of Himself by means of the inspiration of the Spirit, then what would have been the result? Why the people of God would have been without a guide in the matter of their highest and best interests—especially with reference to the will of God in the matter of their salvation. Even the most skeptical must admit that with no revelation man would have been exposed to all sorts of superstition and folk lore and the traditions of men, and as a result man would have had nothing upon which he could depend for safe guidance in the matter of his own salvation. Now if God could have given such a revelation of Himself to man, but did not do it, what can the unbeliever himself say but admit that God's course in not giving man safe directions for returning to God had but little, if any, concern for the saving of men? It is not reasonable that a God of the highest benevolence and of the broadest love should have thus thrown his people off into a sinful world with not a chance, not an opportunity, for coming to know Him or His salvation. It is undoubtedly not only contrary to reason, but it is contrary to His own loving heart thus to cast aside His helpless people in the time of their dire need. Beyond all doubt, God gave inspiration to men for thus safe-guarding his salvation, and that being true, there can be no doubt, we think, that He gave them the truth and that truth is expressed in the Scriptures and in Jesus Christ. If he inspired men at all for such purposes, there can be doubt that His inspiration is thoroughly adequate to meet every need of man. If the inspiration given by God to man is not adequate, then who can say that a self-gotten up inspiration by man is adequate, or at all fit for the guidance of the soul back to God?

The Sunday School Times, in its issue for September 9th, in presenting some thoughts along this line, says, and well says:

"God's wonders cannot be fully compassed in human words. You cannot 'drain the ocean with a teacup,' and finite human language cannot tell all there is to know about our infinite God. Many a Christian, knowing 'the love of Christ which passeth knowledge' and 'filled unto all the fullness of God,' is so overwhelmed by wonder and joy that he longs for some way to express thanksgiving beyond any words at his command. Did the inspired writers of the Bible have this experience? When 'holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost' were they conscious of being unable to say what they longed to say? A Christian leader recently voiced a thought that we often hear, as he said: 'The thing that impresses me more and more is that these writers (of the Bible) could not find language adequate to express what they were constantly seeking to.' This statement sounds plausible, and it sounds like a tribute to the Bible. But it is not. Unconsciously it is a minimizing or denying of inspiration. When the Holy Spirit gave to men 'the sacred writings which are able to make thee wise unto salvation,' the Holy Spirit said all that he wanted and intended to say. We must remember that God, not man, made human language. The Creator of man, the Creator of human language, the revealer of the deep and hidden things of God, undertook to write through men a perfect Book which should fully reveal to men all that he wanted them to know. Was this unique, supernatural inspiration, this 'God-breathing' of the Bible, inadequate? Is it true that these holy men of old could not find the necessary language to express what they sought to express? The question answers itself, with God's all sufficient, all perfect Book in our hands and our hearts.

A MOST REMARKABLE OCCASION.

Raleigh, N. C., Sept. 9, 1922.

DEAR DR. BARRETT:

I'm sending you a column of the "News and Observer"—which carries a message I think ought to be passed on in some way to our people, since most of them are in rural districts, and should appreciate it.

While I failed to get to this meeting, I'm told by part of the speakers on this program, that it was the sweetest meeting of their lives. I've traveled over most of Johnston county this summer, and Johnson people have the best crops in their history. Truly they have something to be thankful for, and have set an example for the world. I think it ought to be passed on,

Yours,

J. VINCENT KNIGHT.

JOHNSTON PEOPLE GATHER TO THANK GOD FOR HARVEST.

Smithfield, Sept. 4.—Coming from all four corners of the county today into a great assemblage at the rear of the courthouse the people of Johnston county gave thanks to God for his bounty in the plenty of the Johnston county harvest. It is the first time since this county was cut from Craven, way back in the days of Gabriel Johnston, that such a meeting has been held giving thanks to the Almighty Father for the many blessings He has sent upon the tillers of the soil, who have been folding back the earth with the plow since the first white man planted foot on American soil. Over two thousand farmers and their wives were present at the meeting and they have gone the homeward way with a deeper feeling and with a keener interest in their labor.

Hon. O. Max Gardner and J. W. Bailey were the principal speakers and they were followed by scores of Johnston county folks who made short talks of thanksgiving. It was one of the best meetings ever held in the county and it has had its effect, already, on this little city on the banks of Neuse river.

Judge W. S. Stevens, of this city, acted as chairman and promptly at the announced hour the services began.

Rev. C. A. Jenkins of Clayton, offered prayer while the great crowd bowed their heads. All during the beautiful prayer the typical Johnston county farmers cried in quiet reverence. "Amen, Amen!"—It was a beautiful prayer and there are numberless farmers and bankers and merchants of this city and county who will remember it.

Rev. S. H. Styron, of Pine Level, read the eighth chapter of Deuteronomy and Rev. J. A. Russell, of Four Oaks, made another very beautiful prayer. Johnston county rested upon her own ministers for her offerings.

Judge F. H. Brooks of this city introduced the speakers and later in the day made a very short but beautiful talk upon the services.

Mr. Gardner Speaks.

Mr. Gardner, who spoke first, said in part: "This North Carolina citizenship is made of wonderful things. It is in the counties like Johnston and the State like North Carolina that this nation is looking for her leaders. Your farmers right here are lovable sort of people and there is a great duty resting upon you today. We are at the turning point of the tide. The world is torn to pieces by strikes and there are millions of people who are hungry and who are thirsty, while here we live in a land of plenty. Yes, my dear people, we have a lot to be thankful for and this is one time in my life I wish I were a minister. I believe that this is an occasation where the chosen ministers of God should preside.

"I think that it is proper that we should gather here today and offer thanks to God for the many blessings he has sent upon us. We should again dedicate our lives to the constitution of this nation. You men working here on your farms are the greatest source from which our greatest things derive. You are like the spring in the hillside which trickles down the hill into the brook and then on down to the river and thence on out to the ocean upon which all the destinies of the world rest.

"There has never been a primrose path to victory and we have got to continue to work. It is only through work that we are ever going to gain anything in this world. If things come too easily we would not appreciate them. We have got to fight the boll weevil and if you Johnston county people fight as hard as you did in the campaign when Morrison and I were against one another there would be no weevil here in your county today.

Service Important Thing.

There is one thing I want the farmers of Johnston county to remember today and that is, it does not matter how big a crop you make after all; it is what you are going to do with it after you make it. I wish that you all would pay up your debts. Lighten the burden on the other fellow. There have been many men who have stated that the most important thing in life was duty. General Robert E. Lee said that duty was the greatest thing in the world in the English language; others have said that mother is the greatest word, but I believe that it is service. So sell your crop and pay up your debts. I am going to try to pay up some of my campaign expenses.

Bailey Speaks After All.

Hon. J. W. Bailey followed Mr. Gardner and spoke briefly upon the duty people owe their Maker. He was to make the principal address but business engagements later caused him to have to decline and he thought it would be impossible for him to get here. But Gardner's coming is attributed as being the magnet which brought him down. He made a very good talk and Johnston county was proud to have the two influential men with them, upon such an occasion.

"This is the first time in the history of my life that a people have gathered together on their own accord to offer thanks to their Maker for His blessings," said Mr. Bailey. "Wake county congratulates you upon your splendid crops. You Johnston people will not let it be said that any other county is greater than Johnston. Today is lost if we do not put our heart into our work. As you look upon your fields and our harvest you will speak to God. If you were never thankful to God, be thankful now," declared Mr. Bailey.

John H. Parker, of Selma, spoke briefly upon the services. He is an elderly man and spoke touchingly upon the work of man on earth bringing his talk to a close by telling the audience goodbye.

Starling J. Massengill, of Ingrams Township; Dr. R. J. Noble, of Selma; Judge F. H. Brooks, of this city; Judge W. S. Stevens, also of Smithfield, S. P. Averett, C. W. Carter, of Clayton; and Chas. U. Harris, of Raleigh, were among the speakers who made short talks at the meeting.

HOW A GREAT MINISTER LOST HIS PULPIT.

Two hundred years ago the most distinguished minister in this country was the Rev. Jonathan Edwards, and the church at Northampton, Mass., of which he was the pastor, was the largest and wealthiest outside of Boston. His grandfather, the Rev. Solomon Stoddard, had been pastor there for nearly sixty years, and when first he went there in 1726, at the age of twenty-three, it was as his grandfather's assistant. The following year he was ordained and when in 1729 Mr. Stoddard died, he was left in full pastoral charge.

For nearly twenty-three years he held the confidence, admiration and esteem of his people, and in that time added over five hundred and fifty names to its membership. He carried his people through two great revivals, and by his printed sermons and religious writings powerfully affected the currents of religious thought throughout the colonies. His mission was to recall the old-time Puritan standards of creed and conduct, and to infuse into them a new spirit of piety. A tall, spare man, with high, broad forehead, clear, piercing eyes, prominent nose, and thin, set lips, his appearance was that of an intellectual refined and benevolent person, and the qualities for which he was distinguished were spirituality and intellectuality. Religion was his element. He walked with God, and the people called him the "Saint of New England."

The "great awakening," as the revival of 1744 was called, was followed by a spirit of laxity. To the surprise and manifest horror of the pastor, he found that some of the young people of his congregation, belonging to the leading families of the town, were reading books which fostered vulgarity and obscenity in their conversation, and that they indulged in mirthful frolics and games. As soon as this was made plain to his mind, he preached a sermon from Heb. 12:15, 16, and after doing so, communicated to the church the evidence in his possession with a view to further action, and read the names of the young folks. This was received by many of his flock with indignation, and they refused to proceed with the investigation. Many of the young people refused to be examined, and those who did come before the pastor for that purpose, acted with insolence.

The outcome was as might have been expected. The books that the pastor had condemned attained a larger popularity. As it is in some Roman Catholic countries where the Bible is seized and burned, greater interest in that which was condemned was awakened. The prohibited books among the young people was deliberately rude, gross and coarse. They looked on the pastor as a tyrant and dictator, and for a time showed their resentment. After awhile this reprehensible behavior ceased, but Mr. Edwards was not the man to forget about it.

That the same feelings persisted was shown by the fact that for four years there were no applications for admission to the church. Then, when one of the young people applied, the pastor required that the candidate should give full evidence of conversion, and should make a public profession of godliness. The indignation was intense, while he, on his part, maintained the correctness of his position. The people prejudiced and obstinate, refused to consider his views, in which he persisted. Finally, after some time a council was called and upon the male members of the church, voting about 200 to 20, that the pastoral relations should be dissolved, this was ordered by the council.

Leaving Northampton, Mr. Edwards went to Stockbridge, in the Berkshire Hills, as a missionary among the Indians. The opposition which had driven him from his church followed him there, and persistent efforts were made to obstruct his work. But he successfully met the opposition and endeared himself to both the Indians and the colonies. Discharging his duties faithfully, he pursued his studies, and wrote several great religious treatises. One of his daughters, Esther, had married the Rev. Aaron Burr, president of Princeton College and on Mr. Burr's death, Mr.

Edwards was elected as his successor. On going to Princeton to assume the position, he found smallpox prevailing there, and was inoculated for the disease, which developed disastrously, and he died March 22, 1758.

So, just because he objected to his young folks reading improper books and because when one of them asked to be admitted to the church, he insisted that he should make proof of his conversion and give his testimony publicly, the Rev. Jonathan Edwards lost his pulpit.

A CLOSER UNION ADVOCATED.

Prof. A. R. Flowers of The Freewill Baptist Church, in several of his addresses in different sections, has expressed himself as being highly in favor of a closer union between The Christian Church and The Freewill Church. The two denominations are too much the same in faith and practice says Professor Flowers, not to be more closely associated in their church activities. Professor Flowers has filled the most responsible position in The Freewill Baptist Brotherhood and knows full well the feeling and need of his church. He also knows much of the feelings and needs of the Christian church; and has proven himself a special friend to the denomination through all his Christian life. It was he who introduced a resolution in the Freewill Baptist State Convention some years ago that the Freewill Baptist of North Carolina endorse Elon College which was passed by a unanimous vote. Professor Flowers has spent most of his life in the cause of Christian Education. He has collected the names of high school graduates from more than forty high schools in eastern North Carolina, since May the first, which he has sent to Dr. W. A. Harper, President of Elon College.

MEBANE

Last summer I assisted Rev. P. T. Klapp in a meeting at Mebane, N. C., in a tent. The meeting was reported in these columns. During the last days of this past August I had the privilege of being there with Bro. Klapp again. But this is not a report of that meeting. This is a note to say that a Christian church of which we may be proud is being built in Mebane.

Last summer there was only a little Sunday School room, and little more than a dozen members. This summer there stands there a handsome church building, made of brick, and three dozen members. The house is not entirely completed on the inside but is enough so to be worshiped in by the members and their families and to be admired by all who see it. In this way I wish to congratulate the pastor and his people for the splendid progress they have made. Considering their membership both in size and financial ability I know of none who have gone beyond them. They contribute regularly and comparatively largely to the orphanage; they have never failed to pay their present pastor's salary every month, and they gave me over one hundred dollars for the two meetings in which I assisted them.

They would appreciate your encouragement. They need your help. The house is not ceiled overhead, there are no folding doors to cut off the Sunday School rooms, and the heating equipment hasn't been installed. These things they need at once, other finishings can follow. The little amount you may send them (Rev. P. T. Klapp, Elon College, N. C.), will greatly help, and greatly bless both you and them.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

October 1, 1922.

The Birth of John the Baptist.—Luke I,

GOLDEN TEXT: He shall be great in the sight of the Lord, and he shall drink no wine nor strong drink.—Luke 1:15.

"Jesus the World's Saviour." To the study of this great theme as set forth in the Gospel of St. Luke, are the next quarter's lessons devoted. These lessons comprise the first half of a six-months course of study of the events and teachings of the life of the Master as told by Luke. The first twelve chapters of the Gospel will be studied this quarter.

"Luke, the Beloved Physician." Tradition declares that Luke was born in Antioch of Gentile—not Jewish blood. His social position is not definitely known. His name is a slave name, and it is conjectured that his master gave him the training necessary for him to become a physician in the best university of the land. He probably accepted Christianity when it was preached at Antioch, and his freedom was given him by his converted owner and master, Theophilus. Luke was a close associate of the apostle Paul, and was with him until his death. Prof. D. A. Hayes declares that Luke was a man of great ability, "a physician, a musician, a painter, a poet, a preacher, an author and a missionary."

"The Gospel of St. Luke." This book has been called the "Gospel for the Gentiles," for the other New Testament writers were all of Jewish birth. The key-phrase of the book is "Son of man," and the key-verse is "For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost," (Luke 19:10). In harmony with this key verse, Luke's Gospel tells the story of the life of Jesus in such a way as to demonstrate how entirely human He was, while always guarding His Deity. (Luke I: 32, 33). "Jesus, the World's Saviour" is presented in Luke as a babe, then as a lad, then as the great Teacher of men.

Preparation for the Coming of Christ. This might appropriately be the general title for the lesson which included the entire first chapter of the Gospel of Luke. Four events are included: (1) A wonderful promise to Zacharias, as he was serving God in his office as priest, that his prayers would be answered by the birth of a son who should "make ready for the Lord a people prepared for him."; (2) The annunciation to the Virgin Mary that she should bring forth a son and call his name JESUS; (3) the visit of Mary to Elisabeth, the wife of Zacharias; and (4) the birth of the son promised to the priest, who declared that his name should be John, and "the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his shewing unto Israel."

The lesson chapter presents four great characters: Zacharias the aged priest, faithful in his divine service, devout in performing his religious duty, a man of prayer (vs. 13), with his wife Elisabeth, a woman of purity, the daughter and wife of a priest the longing of whose heart was for a son; John, the Baptist, that son who grew and became strong, who was sent for a great work to turn the children of Israel to their God; Mary "blessed among women" to be the mother of the Christ, whom all generations have called blessed.

"And thou, child, shalt be called the prophet of the Highest: for thou shalt go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

October 1, 1922.

Better Work Romans 12:9, 11. (Consecration Meeting).

The suggestion has been made that this first meeting in October may well be a Rally Meeting and if this plan is followed, the subject is most fitting. Each officer and committee chairman should come to this meeting with definite suggestions for "Better Work" in this Society. To be most helpful, this will be a forward-looking and planning meeting, with each member resolving to be "Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord" which is a good motto for the coming year of work.

We have received gifts from the Father. How are we using them? Are we working together? Our gifts may differ, but that should not keep us from doing all the good we can one to another, and to our Christian Endeavor Society and church. Whatever God has given us is not for ourselves, alone, but for the good of all.

The Lesson in Verse.

"Free men freely work; Whoever fears God, fears to sit at ease."—BROWNING.

"Get leave to work—In this world—'tis the best you get at all."—BROWN.

"No man is born into this world whose work
Is not born with him; there is always work,
And tools to work withal, for those who will;
And blessed are the horny hands of toil!"—
LOWELL.

"Man hath his daily work of body or mind Appointed."—MILTON.

"Thine to work as well as pray,
Clearing thorny wrongs away;
Plucking up the weeds of sin, Letting heaven's warm sunshine in."
—WHITTIER.

"Christ has no hands but our hands
To do His work to-day;
He has no feet but our feet
To lead men in his way;
He has no tongue but our tongues
To tell men how he died;
He has no help but our help
To bring them to His side."

—ANNIE JOHNSON FLINT.

OLD TESTAMENT CHARACTERS.

The sweet singer of Israel is one of the unique characters of the Bible. As a shepherd boy he was faithful.

He was attentive to that committed to his care. He was a courageous lad, when the lion and the bear attacked his sheep, he put up a fight with them taking the lamb from the mouth of the enemy and put them to "flight." No less courage was manifested when he met the Giant of the Philistines. The spirit of duty to the right filled him with awe in the defense of his people. When it was beyond what might be expected of any one to conquer the Giant. David in his manner, backed with a faith in God, met the Giant and was victorious.

Then when it was seen that he was so successful in battle, King Saul became jealous of his record and sought to kill him in order to get him out of the way. He could not succeed very well for the Lord seemed to be with David, in order to have a better chance at him, the king planned to have him marry his daughter and David did marry her. The king after knowing David better, changed his attitude some, but not long before his jealousy rose to its height and David had to flee. Through the help of the King's son, Jonathan, David was able to keep ahead of the king. On all of this, David showed a magnanimous spirit, for when he had it in his power to take the life of the king in revenge, he did not do so, he had respect for the anointed of the house of Israel. Twice he spared the life of the king. He proved to be a friend to even his enemy, especially did he show the characteristic of being friendly. The experience between him and Jonathan all along brings this out.

King Saul is killed and David comes to the throne. David showed much sympathy, for it is said he wept when he heard of the death of Saul, also for his son, Jonathan. David showed "gratitude" to Jonathan's friendship when he met and treated him so well Jonathan's son, giving to him dominion over that which was his father's.

Great justice was shown by David throughout his life. He always tried to treat his men right—for instance, in the dividing of the "spoils."

As a father, David was thoughtful and kind—manifested great love for his son, Absalom, even when the son went into battle against him, seeking the Throne, David showed the great love of a father. He forgave him, He was very good to his children, possibly too good for their good. He seems to have let his love run in the wrong direction. He was not so careful in training them.

As a king he was Israel's best. He organized the kingdom and set up the altar of God. He was reverent towards God's house and God's rulers.

He was a leader of people. This was shown in all his works. In battle he was unsurpassed and skillful. He led Israel to victory.

In the Psalms of which David was the author, we get the spirit of the man. Repentance and many other traits of character are brought out.

The dome of the new Richmond church is to be one of the most appropriate for a church that we know of. It will add more to the beauty of the house, as a house of worship, than any other part of the building, although the whole structure is one to be greatly admired. The work upon its construction is to begin, if we mistake not, during this month. Dr. Walters is most anxious to get it completed an occupied and we join him in this desire. The Richmond church has a good beginning and we devoutly wish for it a great work in the Lord's cause.

CHILD'S HOUR

A CASE OF CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

"It's no use, Polly, we'll have to give it up."

"You're sure he's gone for good?"

"Sure, and taken every cent with him."

"And we thought he was such a good boy."

James Moore looked at his wife with an expression on his mild face that spoke his own disappointment plainer than words could have done.

"You put money in the drawer yesterday morning and Dick saw you do it?"

"Yes, yes, Polly; what's the use of saying it all over and over? It's gone and Dick's gone, and that's the end of them both. I'd sooner have lost the money than the boy."

"I thought it strange that he did not come to his breakfast."

Mrs. Moore turned away to take up her household tasks and her husband went slowly about his work out of doors, but his heart was not in anything he might do this morning.

Dick Meade had been his ready and willing helper ever since the day he had taken him from the asylum four years ago, and never till now had the boy caused him one moment of uneasiness or any feeling or regret of having chosen him. He was now a well-proportioned lad of 15 years, and he had grown into the hearts of the childless couple and had seemed to love them and respect them as if they had been indeed his parents.

But now, as Mr. Moore had said, it was all ended.

"If I had only put that money in the bank yesterday instead of waiting till today," muttered he, as he passed into the barn to harness his horse. "The boy is young. A year from now he wouldn't have done it."

Not a thought of pursuit or of putting the matter into the hands of officers entered the mind of kind-hearted James Moore, though his money lost of two hundred dollars had not been trifling.

At dinner-time he and his wife discussed the advisability of following the boy and trying to get him to return and remain with them, offering him inducements to do so that would make him contented and happy, so much did they love him, but finally they decided not to do so.

"I'm afraid it would be useless, James," Mrs. Moore said, today. "If we failed to make him love us in all those four years when we both tried so hard it would be useless to try again."

So again Mr. Moore went out and made a pretense of carrying on his farm work. It was slow work harvesting his potatoes alone. Yesterday he and Dick had dug potatoes, leaving them to be picked up and drawn in today, and there were far too many for him to do alone.

The field was far from the house, so he harnessed and drove there. He would need the wagon to bring back the potatoes, though he thought to himself he could almost carry them on his back, so little did he accomplish. But the horses were good companions, and oh! how he did miss Dick.

Mrs. Moore finished her dishwashing and went upstairs.

It was time to begin her fall housecleaning, and, unlike her husband, she felt that she could best throw off her trouble by working as hard as she could every minute.

"I think I'll begin in this closet," she said to herself, and sighed as she cast a look over at the bureau which had contained that unfortunate stolen money.

She opened the door and almost fell, stumbling over something which lay so close against it as to leave no room for her to step inside. She caught herself and did not fall, but never before did she come so near losing her senses.

For there at her feet was the lost boy, his white face upturned to her, his eyes full of a piteous attempt to smile reassuringly!

An enormous bundle of something was tied cruelly tight into his mouth, and his arms and legs were bound so that he could not stir hand or foot.

Mrs. Moore stood still for a moment till her strength came back, then she turned and ran downstairs, and seizing the old dinner-horn blew a halfdozen such blasts as it never was made to yield before, and today she cannot understand where her breath came from to send them forth.

Then she went back and did what she could to relieve poor Dick.

When her husband reached the house and, guided by her call, to the room where his wife was, she had succeeded in untying Dick and getting him upon the bed to lie for awhile and let his muscles relax and find their place again.

He had scarcely spoken as yet, so stiffened and sore was his mouth, and his tongue was swollen from the severe pressure of the harsh gag used to insure his silence.

But not for long could Dick be kept from explaining the situation.

The faces of James Moore and his wife shone with happiness as they listened to Dick's story.

"You see, it was like this, uncle," he began; "you and auntie were in the back room doing something and just after sundown I thought I would run down and get the mail. I went upstairs to put on lighter shoes and change my coat and had just got one shoe laced when I heard the front door creak on its hinges, and I stepped out of my room to see what made it or who was coming in, for I knew you were away at the back of the house.

"When I saw that it was two men with something black over their faces walking very carefully it struck me right away that in some way they had found out about you taking in that money for the young stock you sold.

"So I jumped into this room and snatched the big pocketbook from the drawer and took out the bills and laid the pocketbook back, and when they got up the stairs I was just putting on my last shoe. I raised up and looked at them and they looked at me, and then they looked at each other.

"In a wink they had put that thing in my mouth and my hands tied; then they laid me in the closet and shut the door. I was so glad uncle did not hear; he might have been killed.

"I didn't try to get away. What was the use? I knew you'd find me some time. I didn't think it would be quite so long, though," with a deep breath.

"Poor Dickey!" Mrs. Moore said, over and over.

Mr. Moore's ejaculations had been profuse and so energetic that they would better be omitted.

"Well, they got away with their booty, but you did your best and so long as you were not hurt, Dick, it's alright.

Then they looked at each other shamefacedly. Could they ever confess to honest Dick that they had doubted him?

Dick was watching them with a queer little smile.

"I don't think they got the money," he said humorously; "not much."

"Well, where is it, then, Dick?" asked Mrs. Moore.

"Why, I just slipped it into my shoes," quietly replied Dick, proceeding to unlace his left shoe.

"You see, I always lace my right shoe first, for luck," he added whimsically, as he laid out four fifty-dollar banknotes in the hand of Mr. Moore.

"Well," said Mr. Moore, "the luck is yours this time. This money shall go into the bank this very day in your name. I'll go and change the horses to the light wagon this minute and we will go together."

And so they did, with Mrs. Moore watching them out of sight, her heart filled with thankfulness for the restoration of their beloved boy and remorse for the readiness with which she had accepted the circumstantial evidence against him. —Mary S. Potter, in Ex.

GREETINGS FROM DOCTOR STALEY.

In Maroon and Gold.

September 5, 1922.

My dear Young Friends of Elon College:—

I greet you this opening day in the name of "Christian Character First and Always," and with abiding interest in young life with aspirations that reach beyond the common level of mankind. Education is incomplete without manhood and womanhood equal to intellectual attainments. No process of classic culture can save mankind from collapse unless character is imbedded in the whole structure of education. Information is the least part of collegiate training; that can be picked up anywhere. The main thing in education is the development of natural faculties through training, so that the scholar can work in any field of service. Gymnastics for body, mind, and heart, to acquire strength for the whole man. College years are years that determine life in its largest usefulness.

Emphasize the studies you do not like. That will strengthen your weak points. In farms and roads the most work is put on the weakest points. Do not follow "the line of least resistance" here; follow the line of greatest resistance. The sailboat moves forward best with head to the wind, and man moves the same way. Never shun hard places, but overcome them.

My interest in the college and the young is unabated. Public school is incipient; University is crystalized intellectualism; College is the heart of education. This is not meant as adverse criticism, but as a suggestion for Faculty and Students to consider. I congratulate Faculty and Students upon your opportunity to serve and prepare for great service.

Sincerely yours,

W. W. STALEY.

Let us take the risk and do our best to reach men and women for the Lord Jesus Christ. We hesitate because as we often think men and women of the world are not susceptible to truth. That is not your part of the responsibility. God has made men and women and has instructed his people to take the gospel to them in their sins. It then becomes our responsibility to deliver the gospel message, not merely from the pulpit, but from the fireside, the road side, from any place where an opportunity may be presented, for men are more susceptible to truth than we often believe. Our business is to try them with the gospel and then leave our best effort in the hands of the Holy Spirit to apply the truth; do your best and leave the results in the hands of the Lord.

Christian Orphanage

Sept. 12, 1922.

DEAR FRIENDS:

It has been one long desire of the orphanage boys to fill our silo one time. It holds about 110 tons. In the spring we made up our mind to plant enough stuff to fill it, but we were rained out so late in the season that while we planted all the ground we intended to plant, the yield was not so good as we had expected. Last week we went to work filling it, and for four long hot days we poured feed in the top of the silo and it filled up slowly till we could stand on the top of the feed and reach the top of the silo. About ninety tons was put in it. While we did not get it quite full we got it close to the top and the boys are very happy.

Applications to take children came thick and fast. We have had more applications for the last six months than we have ever had for the same period in the past. In many instances father and mother dead, no home, no where to go. We have taken the most pitiful cases till we now have ninety children in our care. It takes quite a bit of food and clothes for those children, ninety of them. One hundred is our goal for the present time. We will soon have that number.

We are worried about our coal for the winter. We have done our best to get a car, so we would feel safe for the winter but with all our efforts we still have none in sight. To have one hundred little children in the cold will be something fierce.

I still believe the good Lord will provide for us and will still cling to that faith. He has been faithful to supply our needs in the past and we believe he will in this instance.

The city graded school and the orphanage school opened Wednesday, September 6th. All the children large enough are in school. Miss Lilly Spain, of Waverly, Va., is in charge of the orphanage school and has started off nicely. We are looking forward to a splendid session under her management.

THE MISSIONS OF THE CHURCH OF CHRIST.

Jesus instituted the Church and gave it its mission to the world long before these modern times, when the efforts of men are put forth to induce the Church to undertake every sort of a thing that has been known in the human family in the way of charitable and philanthropic effort for the betterment of man. In a large way this is but blinding the issue and making impossible for the average man to see the error that is in it. The leaders of this sort of teaching have much to say of what the Church must undertake—undertake this and it must undertake that, but listen! You will hardly ever hear this class of men say anything of pushing the main issue of the Church. They declare the Church must see that we have good road, good farming, good housing, better conditions for this and for that but you will hardly ever hear one of them say the people needs first to be truly converted and given to God and when that is done, then the Lord will lead the way to the things which are needed for human betterment. Men and women are really not prepared for human betterment until they have been brought under the power of Jesus and have been born. Then, and then only, will men be ready to have the betterment for which so many are pleading. Let us first lead them to the Christ that He may make them Christians after the divine pattern, and then you may help to give them betterment, but till then all such betterment will come to grief. The Editor of The Wesleyan Methodist recently had this to say in an editorial on "The Mission of 'The Church,'" and it is worth your careful and prayerful reading. Let us try to see that the Church is first of all kept to its true mission. That editor said:

"Effort to divert the Christian churches from their work of evangelization was deplored in an address on August 23, at the General Bible Conference of the Stony Brook Assembly by Don O. Shelton, president of the National Bible Institute, New York. "A grave danger now threatening," said Mr. Shelton, "is the widespread attempt that is being made to attach to the church a great variety of objectives which have no direct relation to its distinctive mission. In several places of authority a programme is being suggested which ignores or minimizes the essential thing which the Christian church is in the world to accomplish. This programme overlooks the fact that the World's sore is too big for men's plaster.

"If the ideals of some of those whose counsels are now assertive were realized the church would become a composite kindergarten, labor forum, college or agriculture, medical clinic, educational lectureship, survey bureau, dance hall, moving picture theatre and institute of economics. The effect of these methods is a false emphasis and an obscuring of the essential Christian truths. When the church substitutes men-made methods for Bible standards of service her course is toward the scrap heap. Man's wit is no match for Satan's craft. The uppermost need of the hour is a renewed conviction of the transforming worth and absolute necessity of the proclamation of the fundamentals of the Christians faith. The world's disease is sin and nothing can cure it but the prescribed remedy of the Divine Physician. The need of the hour is that the Church shall carry the Gospel message to the people.

"To the majority of the people of the United States the reading of the Gospel of Christ would prove a fresher message than the latest dispatch in this morning's newspapers. One of the chief defects in modern church work is that many who are members of the Christian churches are engaged chiefly in preaching the Gospel to themselves. The Christian Church is not in the world merely to give an invitation; it is here chiefly to deliver the Gospel message, the very best gift of God to mankind. The New Testament ideal of the Christian Church is not a company of Christians who preach the Gospel to themselves but a company of Christians who preach the Gospel to the world. The larger part of the people of the United States are still unevangelized, and great numbers of them appear to be as ignorant of the Gospel as the most benighted peoples in blackest Africa. No prophet is needed to foretell what will happen to the United States unless the Christian churches awake and evangelize the people. What occurs when people do not receive or do not believe the Gospel was shown in Germany. Just before the recent war broke out there a careful investigator found that less than two per cent of the population were in attendance at the churches in Berlin and of those present three-fourths were women and children. With such facts before us with all that they imply of unbelief we need not marvel at Germany's rank selfishness and military brutishness. Without aggressive evangelism without evangelism that really delivers the Gospel to the people, we may look for a like result here. Unregenerate human nature is the same, both in Germany and America."

The Religious Organizations at Elon College have planned for the year's activities. The work as outlined will be co-operative. Every student is invited to contribute of his time and influence, and otherwise take part in the meetings. The following committees have been chosen and will be charged with the execution of the working plans for the coming year:

Membership—J. H. Dollar, Alice Barrett, Margaret Homewood, Mary Lee Foster W. E. Marlette.

Group Meetings—W. T. Scott, L. J. Bray, Pattie Coghill.

Study Courses—H. Lee Scott, R. S. Helms, Victoria Adams.

Social—Sarah Carter, Jennie Gunter, P. D. Rudd.

Budget—R. D. Clements, W. B. Terrell, Berta Crutchfield, Freda Dimmick, E. C. White.

Community Service—S. M. Lynam, Minnie Edge, Mary Swanson.

The Christian Church must be missionary, or it cannot grow and be highly useful. A non-missionary church is far from a Christian church. To be truly Christian, a church must be missionary, and if missionary it will be a growing church, other things being equal.

Called Home

GONE HOME.

Roselind Clements, wife of J. B. Clements, passed over the river of death at Delaware, Ohio, August 14, 1922.

She was born at Morrisville, Wake county, N. C., and was the daughter of Sheriff Page, Wake county.

She leaves two children, James thirteen years of age and Katherine eight years of age, and a devoted husband to mourn their loss. She took a loving interest in her husband and children. She was kind, energetic and economical. She was 42 years old in Jesus, and a member of the Methodist church and active in church. Both of her children and husband are members of the church.—F.

DIED.

James H. W. Bridger was called from labor to reward on Monday morning, August 29th, 1922. While at Lake View Hospital, Suffolk, Va. He was one of Antioch's leading members, one of her beloved deacons and also treasurer for years. He was truly a good Christian gentleman and will be greatly missed in his home community and church. In his death the church has sustained a great loss but we bow in humble submission to the Divine will realizing that our loss has been his eternal gain. He taught public school for seventeen years and was also Department Commissioner of Revenue for several years. He was greatly beloved by his class—The Mens Class, which he has taught for years, and also by all who knew him. He leaves a devoted wife, two children living, one son, J. Hobby Bridger, Charlottesville, Va. One daughter, Miss Lorine Bridger, of Windsor, Va., three sister, Mrs. Mattie S. Bayatt, Mrs. Ballie M. Pierce and Mrs. Mary Eure, of Gates county, N. C. One little grand-daughter, Marguerite Horn. Many relations and friends. His funeral services were conducted by his pastor and his remains were laid to rest in the Church cemetery to await the second coming of his Lord, God bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas it has pleased God in His divine providence to remove from our midst Mrs. Mary T. Morrison, a most consecrated Christian worker of the Rosemont Christian Church, and whereas she was the oldest charter member of our Woman's Missionary Society, as well as our church, and was always faithful, and active so long as her health permitted therefore,

Resolved: First, that we bow in submission to God's will, knowing that He doeth all things well.

Second, that we express our deepest sympathy to the family.

Third, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to the Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be placed upon the minutes of the Woman's Missionary Society.

HOW APOSTASY GROWS.

Under the above title the current issue of Moody Bible Institute Monthly, gives an account of the examination given to a class of young men about to be recommended for ordination. We quote it here as a reason why Wesleyan Methodist demand schools where "modernism" has no place and where the Bible doctrine of holiness of heart and life are undisputed:

In a small beautiful city a few miles from Chicago, an ordination council of Congregational churches was held last May, over a dozen churches being represented. The three or four candidates for examination had been trained at the Chicago Theological Seminary (Congregational) in affiliation with the University of Chicago. The following are a few of the questions put to one of the young men with his answers to them. The presumption is that the others held similar views, but all were recommended for ordination:

- (1) Was man created or evolved?
I do not believe man was created.
- (2) Do you believe in man's fall?
No, I do not.
- (3) Do you believe in the virgin birth?
No.
- (4) Do you believe that Christ rose from the dead, and now sits at the right hand of God the Father?
Christ is not at the right hand of God. I believe that Christ rose from the dead.
- (5) Was His resurrection spiritual or bodily?
Spiritual, and He now lives in the hearts of men.
- (6) What are your plans for the future?
The Congregational Board is sending out four of us (not all at once) to India for missionary work.
- (7) What do you hope to give them that their religions do not give?
Christianity is not a selfish religion, but looks out for the other fellow.

WORSHIP AND SERVICE.

Not all people show their religion in the same way. Some Christians are quiet, meditative; worship means much to them, they find joy in the consciousness of the presence of the Master, as Mary did. Other Christians are active; they, like Martha, want to be busy for their Lord. Service is their great word. Doubtless the ideal religious life is a combination of the two. We do our best work when we take time for worship.

It is a gracious form of speech that puts the means of grace and the hope of glory together as matters for thanksgiving. The right use of the means of grace keeps bright that hope always.

Agreeable and useful! such a question is beyond my ability. The better things are, the less they please. What is more salutary than Jesus Christ? and yet He is to the majority a savor of death. Make them hear the voice of Jesus Christ: you will be useful and agreeable, depend upon it, to a very small number only; for the sheep are rare in this region of wolves.

PRAYER.

"O Lord, teach us how to pray, weaken our desires for the things seen and temporal, and lift our hearts by thine inspiration that we may long after, and by longing possess the true blessedness, the joy unspeakable, the calm of heart, the elevation of spirit, the fixity of resolve, which come from communion with thyself. Much have we been forgiven; may we love more than we have done. Great has been thy mercy; may our thankfulness be great. Thou dost bow thyself down to come near to us; may we lift ourselves up to come near to Thee. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen."

DETERMINED BY THOUGHT.

A man's thought determines the moral climate of his life, and will settle the question whether his conduct is to be poisonous marsh or fertile meadow, fragrant garden or barren sand. The pose of the mind determines the disposition, and will settle whether a man shall soar with angels in the heavenlies or wallow with the sow in the mire. What we think about the things that are greatest will determine how we do the things that are least. What are your primary thoughts about God? The prints of those thoughts will be found in your courtesies, in your intercourse, in the common relationships of life, in the government of commerce, in the control of the body, and in all the affairs of home and market and field.—J. H. Jowett, D. D;

LET US PRAY.

Lord Jesus, Thou Fountain of Life, Thou Well of Salvation, give me the living water that I thirst not again. Give me that thirst which draws its satisfaction from the well hard by which Thou hast opened up within me that I may drink of its waters freely. Thus hast Thou linked my thirst and my unailing supply together and made them one. Amen.

PRAYER.

O Master, whose words are so deeply treasured by us, whose sweetness and strength so contribute to our day, we pray thee teach us anew how to use this gift of speech which Our Father has given us for the welfare and strengthening of the lives of those with whom our lot in life is cast. Amen.

ROOM FOR YOU.

"There are many heads leaning on Jesus' bosom, but there is room there for yours also."—Samuel Rutherford.

Heavy-hearted sinner,
Lift your hopeless face!
See, a Savior smiling
From the throne of grace!
Many heads are leaning
On His bosom true,
But there still is room there—
Room enough for you.

Fainting, fearing Christian,
By the foe oppressed,
Have you then forgotten

That dear place of rest?
Many heads are leaning
On His bosom true,
But there still is room there—
Room enough for you.

Eager, erring Judah,
Pride shall not prevail!
Christless hopes must perish,
Christless plans must fail.
Many heads are leaning
On His bosom true,
But there still is room there—
Room enough for you.

Struggling, scheming nations,
Lay your weapons down

At the feet of Jesus—
His the blood-bought crown!
Many heads are leaning
On His bosom true,
But there still is room there—
Room enough for you.

Our Nation's Ice Bill.—

The Literary Digest gives us the following interesting facts pertaining to our use of ice in this country:

A nation that spends a million dollars a day on ice ought to be able to keep cool. The National City Bank of New York, using 1920 census figures, estimates that the ice bills of the country come to a total of more than $365,000,000 a year. The ice-manufacturing establishments produced $137,000,000 worth of ice in 1919 and that produced by other industries brought the total of artificial ice up to about $150,000,000 worth. While we are growing less and less dependent on natural ice, we did get ice valued at about $37,500,000 from our rivers and lakes in 1919. This brings the total up to $187,000,000 and even this does not include large quantities of ice made by great manufacturing establishments solely for their own use and not included in the census records. Since experts say that the "ultimate consumer" pays at least double the price of production, "a total of the sums paid by the public would therefore aggregate about $375,000,000 per annum." Further interesting facts bearing on our ice bill are set down as follows by the New York bank in its Trade Record.

The production of ice by artificial methods began in New Orleans in the closing year of the Civil War, and by 1870 the number of ice factories in the country could be counted on the fingers of one hand. By 1880 the number had increased to 37; in 1890, 222; in 1900, 775; in 1910, 2,004; and in 1920, 2,867. That the industry proved an attractive one to the capitalists of the country is evidenced by the fact that the total capital invested in the ice factories of the United States advanced according to census reports, from about $1,000,000 in 1880, to $38,000,000 in 1900 and $270,000,000 in 1919, the year covered by the latest census reports.

While no official figures are available as to the quantity of ice still being harvested on the lakes and rivers of the country during the winter months, unofficial estimates by accepted authorities indicate that the quantity obtained from natural sources has steadily decreased coincidentally with the big increase in artificial production. A decade ago practically no ice frozen by the natural process was used in the southern half of the United States, since it was cheaper to manufacture it where required than to pay the cost of transporting it from the northern climate, while even the Northern States where natural ice is still to be had for the mere harvesting are now abandoning the natural product for the artificial, as is evidenced by the fact that the biggest producers of artificial ice are in the North—New York; Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Illinois—while the census of 1920 shows ice facories in every State of the Union except New Hampshire and Vermont. About two-thirds of the 28,000,000 tons of ice turned out by the factories of the country in 1919 was produced from distilled water.

That the production of ice by artificial methods has become general in other parts of the world is also evidenced by the disappearance of the item "ice" from the official export records as issued by the Government of the United States. The exportation of ice from the United States to the tropical and semi-tropical sections of the world began in 1805, and although the original experiment was not a financial success, the exportation continued until the value of ice exported reached more than a quarter of a million dollars a year in the period immediately following the Civil War, when it began slowly to decline as the production of artificial ice developed, and finally disappeared in 1917 from the official records of "merchandise exported from the United States."

Ice-making machines, however, have taken the place of ice in our list of articles exported, the total value of refrigerating machinery, including ice-making machinery," exported from the United States in the fiscal year 1921 having aggregated $3,391,000 as against a little over a half million dollars a decade earlier.

Summer School for Preachers.—

Such is their eagerness for self-improvement and for the recognition which self-improvement insures in the teaching profession that one-fourth of the 700,000 teachers in the United States are said to attend some sort of summer school. This certificate of ambition on the part of the school teachers raises the question, how many of the ministry, numbers of whom, no doubt, are equally ambitious, attend summer courses? Exact figures are said not to be available. The Baptist guesses that not more than 5 per cent. of the ministers attend, and at once saves the preacher from blame by saying:

"Do not jump to the conclusion that the fault is altogether with the minister. We have churches among us still which 'hire' a preacher as the farmer hires the farmhand. No provision is made for an adequate vacation. Some ministers pride themselves on the fact that they seldom, if ever, take a vacation. We really need a 'movement' for longer vacations, and a 'drive' to get the pastors to attend the summer sessions of the universities, seminaries and conferences, where provision is made for systematic study. The demands upon the minister today are making summer schools more necessary each year. Pastors, insist upon a vacation, and then don't loaf!"

The organization of Conference summer schools for undergraduates and graduates in the annual Methodist Conferences is bound to revolutionize these conditions, says the New York Christian

Advocate, for "the young men are finding not only change but mental and spiritual stimulus in these summer seminaries." They are now only at the beginning of their usefulness, we are told, for, tho the preachers already see what it means for them, "there are a good many local church officials whose eyes are not yet open to their advantage—not to say duty. When they are wide awake they will not only grant the vacation, but will take a hand in supporting the school."

The Busy Mormons.—

Mormons are supposed by many people to belong only to Utah. We wonder how many of our readers know that they have a strong hold upon the old State of Vermont, and that they are making their power felt there. In 1905 they were strong enough in one neighborhood in that State to erect a magnificent and costly monument at the birthplace of Joseph Smith, whom they claim as their founder. From this place he moved to Palmyra, New York, where he claims to have received his vision, and from there to Carthage, Illinois, where at the age of thirty-nine he was killed. The hold which the Mormons have now on the Vermont community is shown by what recently occurred. Mrs. Lulu Loveland Sheppard, a representative of the National Reform Association, and a lecturer who is noted for her eloquence and her ability to present clearly and forcibly her views concerning the Mormon question, held a series of meetings in that part of Vermont for the purpose of giving the people the facts about Mormonism. The merchants of these cities declined to put in their windows cards announcing her meetings, as they said they were afraid of the Mormons. The newspapers of these cities refused to publish anything concerning the meetings, presumably for the same reason. The Mormons will throttle any community as soon as they are strong enough to do so. Yet it is impossible to arouse the people of this country to a sense of the danger from this sect that is making a strenuous effort to destroy the liberties of the people of this land.—Ex.

Colleges in the East.—

American colleges in the Near East, Robert College at Constantinople, the American University at Beirut and the Constantinople Woman's Colleges, were so hard hit by the war that their very existence became a serious question. Recently a campaign for the benefit of these three institutions has been conducted in this country, and $1,100,000 was raised. This will repair the damages and provide the running expenses for the next two years. No better mission work is being done in that part of the world than is done by these colleges.—Presbyterian of the South.

NOTES - PERSONALS

We need to build up our publishing interests by giving it a large patronage, and that can be done, if only all will lend a hand to that end.

The Georgia and Alabama Christian Conference, according to notice published, will meet at the East LaGrange church, Tuesday, October 3, 1922.

The Alabama Christian Conference will meet at Mt. Zion Church Tuesday, October 10, 1922, at 10 o'clock A. M. Rev. G. D. Hunt is president and Rev. E. M. Carter, Secretary.

Excavation for the new First Christian church, Richmond, Va., of which Rev. W. T. Walters is pastor, began Monday. The contract for the new building calls for its completion by April 1st. Meetings of the congregation are held at the William Fox School, 2300 Hanover Avenue.

Let us repeat that churches that have been ordering books, Bibles, offering envelopes and Sunday school supplies in recent years from Rev. C. B. Riddle, Publishing Agent, Burlington, N. C., may continue to order as usual addressing their inquiries to the Church Supply House, Burlington, N. C.

ANSWER AT ONCE.

Do you expect to attend the American Christian Convention which meets in Burlington next month? This is more than a general question. We have just received information from Burlington to the effect that scarcely a dozen of our Southern people have notified the Committee of Arrangements of their expectation to attend. The Committee is endeavoring to complete its plans within the next few days. Surprise is expressed that so few of our Southern people have given any notice of their attendance. If you expect to attend the Convention send your notice immediately to Rev. G. O. Lankford, Pastor, Burlington, N. C.

NOTICE! NOTICE!

The North Carolina Christian Conference is to meet with Hines' Chapel Christian church, Guilford County, November 14-17, 1922. And as pastor of the above church we ask that every pastor see that every church of which he is pastor elect and send at least one delegate to this conference.

Will you see that a notice is sent us stating how and when you are coming. We will be glad to meet you at station if necessary. Come to stay for every session, we will be glad to have you.

C. E. GERRINGER.
Pastor.
McLeansville, N. C.

HOLLAND.

Our evangelistic services began Sunday, September 10th, and closed Friday, September 15th. Rev. James A. Crain, Executive Secretary of the Norfolk Council of Churches, assisted the pastor. Brother Crain won the hearts of Holland and established himself in the minds of the people as a virile Christian and a manly man. His sermons did not follow the usual evangelistic pattern, being more of an educational nature. One brother's name was restored to the roll. Thirty-nine were received into the church. Scores reconsecrated. In fact we had a right good time.

FROM ALABAMA.

Wadley, Ala., Sept. 20, 1922.

Sunday, September 17, was a great day at Christiana.

Brother Huckaley and Brother Lankford of Larrett (Georgia and Alabama Conference) were with us and filled the pulpit at the eleven o'clock hour.

These young brethren are going to apply for license to preach, at their conference October 3.

We cannot doubt their sincerity, the Power of God was with them Sunday, and it kindled in the hearts of all present. We have never had a better service at Christiana since we have been serving them as pastor.

We went away rejoicing that we had been to the house of the Lord.

The Ladies Aid Society gave us another real pounding, they loaded our buggy with flour, lard, sugar, coffee and various other things for the pantry and also a lot of towels, handkerchiefs dress goods, thread, etc., for Mrs. Veazey and children, all of which we are very thankful and as we cannot command language to express our appreciation for same, we can only pray God's richest blessings on them and may he richly reward everyone of them for all their kindness is the prayer of their servant.

G. H. VEAZEY.

A WORD FROM DR. WELLONS.

DEAR BROTHER EDITOR:

I spent about two months at the Masonic Eastern Star home, in Greensboro, with the dear old people, that were assembling there, for the close of their work on earth. It was a pleasant season to be there with them, and to try to assist them in their last thoughts while here on earth. Three died while I was there and we had daily prayer, and also on Sunday afternoon. It was a pleasure to me to pray with them and for them, and to talk to them and assist them, in preparing to meet the future. This is a delightful place for taking care of the old men and women, whose work has been about accomplished in this life. This was the work of L. M. Clymer and wife, who gave about four years of their time with their regular board of assistants. This is certainly an excellent place for the aged masons and their wives and daughters.

The college is having a nice opening, and everything is starting off well with a good number of students.

I will go back soon to spend another week at the Masonic Home.

I had better health this summer than usual.

I want to spend a week at Fuquay Springs soon.

J. W. WELLONS.

TRANSPORTATION S. C. C. DELEGATES AND VISITORS TO A. C. C.

The American Christian Convention is to meet for the second time in the South, October 17-25, at our Burlington Church. It is hoped not only that all delegates and alternates will attend, but that many visitors will come.

Ministers of the S. C. C. will find their clergy permits giving them cheaper rates than the reduced fare which has been provided. Laymen and others will purchase tickets to Burlington, asking for a certificate of the agent. These certificates will be vised at Burlington and if there are 250 of them the return ticket will be sold at one-half price. It is imperative that you demand and secure the certificate.

The following letter will be self explanatory:

"I am writing you this letter as chairman of the Transportation Committee of the American Convention. In order to reach the American Christian Convention in time for the opening session those who come from Eastern Virginia will have to come via the A. C. L., to Selma and there run the risk of missing the connection or leave the night before via the Southern to Greensboro. It is impossible now to come from Eastern Virginia via the Seaboard Railway and get there in a day. The connection is broken at Henderson and at Durlam.

"The Southern Railway has agreed to put on a special pullman car for the delegates on Monday night, October 16th, provided enough will notify me in advance that they will take advantage of such accommodation. It will require sixteen persons as the minimum for this special car. This car will reach the Convention Tuesday morning about 10:00 o'clock.

"Visitors too, may come on this car. It will also go back the night the Convention closes, if desired.

"Will you kindly let me know by return mail whether you will wish reservation on this car that I can make application for the pullman, and assure you that it will be placed on?"

Of course should the schedule be restored between Henderson, Durham, and Burlington so that the trip can be made in a day each way, we will make a different arrangement.

W. A. HARPER,

Chairman Transportation.

Time will be given to consider every question, and if need be business will be carried over into the third day. Let every minister and delegate come prepared to stay until the work is finished, and let us all pray for a great meeting.

Those coming by rail, notify John Sledge, Roanoke, Ala., and you will be met at train.

G. D. HUNT, President.

AS TO BETHLEHEM COLLEGE.

In accordance with the authority vested in the Executive Committee by the Trustee of Bethlehem College, and at a meeting of this committee which was held on the 18th, Rev. R. F. Brown was elected Financial Secretary for the College. Brother Brown has proven himself as being fully capable for this position. While he has an important work it is not known yet whether he will accept the position with the College or not.

The cause of Religious Education is making an increased and growing demand upon the church which fosters such. In heeding this call the Christian religion will be given greater impetus and the church will have greater success in its enlarged field.

So far as I know there is likely to be but few changes in the pastorates in our conference this year. The work moves steadily; the meetings throughout the conference have been good and when the reports shall have been compiled there will be shown an increase in membership.

The greatest problem now is the Mission in the northern part of the States. It is too large for so small conference. We have three churches there now and the outlook is encouraging, even to double this number within another year.

In connection with these notes you may mention, that, owing to the change in the date for the Georgia and Alabama conference the Executive Committee of the Trustees of Bethlehem College has decided to change the date of its meeting from October the 13th to the 6th. This will be on Friday 10:00 a. m. Wadley Ala., between the two conferences.

With every good wish, I am,
Yours truly,
E. M. CARTER.

A NEW ORPHANAGE, NORTH.

270 East 32nd St.,
Brooklyn, N. Y.
September 20, 1922.

DEAR DOCTOR BARRETT:

Enclosed a picture of our new orphanage buildings. The enterprise is succeeding beyond my expectation. I am resigning as pastor of the Vanderveer Park Christian Church, Brooklyn, in order to take full charge of the Orphanage enterprise. I shall make my home at Carversville, Pa., when the man to succeed me shall have been called and installed.

We have taken over the Carversville property at a great bargain. It is our hope to open the institution absolutely free of all debt Jan. 1, 1923. At the present rate of progress we will be able to do so. Our folks are taking a great interest in this new enterprise. This new institution has come to us in answer to faith and prayer. It is of the Lord, and we are expecting great things from Him.

You will be pleased to know that the membership of our Christian churches in Brooklyn have increased more than one hundred per cent, since I came to Brooklyn seven years ago, and that one new church has been built. The work here is full of promise. The good Lord has blessed us through all the years we have been here, and has prospered us. We give Him the praise and honor. We feel that the call to the orphanage is a call from the Lord, and we try to follow where he leads.

I am out for ten thousand friends for the new orphanage enterprise, and I expect to find them.

We will operate in what is known as Eastern territory, in the Conferences east of the Ohio line, and north of Maryland and Delaware. Better described Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, and the New England states. There are about fifteen thousand Christian Church members in the territory, sufficient number to maintain an orphanage. There is a great need for an orphanage in this section in the interest of the Christian Church. There are already many orphans among the families of the Christian church in this section, who need a Christian home. In answer to prayer the new orphanage has been made possible for them, and the doors will be opened to them Jan. 1, 1923. Please make this new enterprise a special object of prayer.

Hope you are enjoying excellent health.
With my very best wishes.
Sincerely,
L. F. JOHNSON.

THE WORK AT WINCHESTER, VA.

Sunday, September 17th, was rally day at the First Christian Church of Winchester, Va. The day was clear and beautiful, and at 9:45 A. M., the largest and most enthusiastic audience that had been at the church for a long time, gathered for Sunday school. The special items in the Sunday school were, an address to the young Men's Bible Class, by Commonwealth Attorney, T. Russell Cather, of Winchester; a special song by the Royal Oaks class of boys, which class is taught by Mrs. J. F. Morgan; and a duet by Miss Evelyn Cather and Miss Genevieve Spaid.

A large audience greeted the Pastor at 11:00 A. M., to hear his message on the subject, "The Awakening Call of God." The special numbers at this service were a violin solo, beautifully rendered by Mr. Morris Cather, and a male quartet, sung by Roy Cather, J. A. Spaid, J. F. Morgan, and Morris Cather. There were two additions to the church at the close of the morning service.

The Christian Endeavor Society at 6:30 P. M., was led by Roy A. Larrick, and was largely attended. Professor H. S. Duffey, principal of the Handley High School was present at this meeting and gave a splendid address on the "Value of an Education," which was very much enjoyed by all present.

The last service of the day was at 7:30 P. M. A great song service preceded the evening sermon by the Pastor on the subject, "Peace, Tribulation, and Victory." The choir rendered a great anthem, in impressive manner during the evening, which was much enjoyed by the fine audience that was present.

All in all, rally day was a great day for our church and we believe much good was accomplished.

FIELD NEWS.

We had very good meetings at Union, Haw River and Pleasant Hill, Burlington, N. C. Rev. Stanley C. Harrell assisted us at Union. He reached us on Monday and preached twice a day till the meeting closed on Friday afternoon. His sermons were good and well received. One member was received into church at the beginning of the meeting, five at the close and one has been received since.

Rev. J. S. Carden was with us in meetings at Haw River and at Pleasant Hill. Brother Carden is a very earnest preacher; and his messages in the Master's name were very kindly received. One member was received at Haw River on the first day of the meeting, and six at the close.

At Pleasant Hill, Brother Carden reached us on Monday and preached to good acceptance. Three members were received into church fellowship at the close of the meeting. The interest manifested in these meeting was excellent and we believe much good was accomplished.

Brother George R. Maynard, our pastor deacon, who died a few weeks ago, left the sum of $500.00 in trust to Union Christian church, to be used by the church for the use of the pastor. Truly a good and great man has gone to his reward; but his good works follow him. Though dead; yet by faith, he speaketh.

THE ELON CHAUTAUQUA.

I believe the changing of the Chautauqua and school of Methods from Ocean View, Va., to Elon College, N. C., was wise. I came to this conclusion after, or rather while, attending the Chautauqua at Elon August 28th to September 4th.

For real rest, as well as for real work, Elon can't be beat. Then the fellowship at Elon was delightful—we had the use of the great dormitory rooms free and we got our meals in the college dining room. This made the fellowship more home-like, and added to the success of the Chautauqua.

The class work, and lectures, I do not think have ever been better than they were this year. The lectures of Drs. J. U. Newman, and W. W. Staley, were more than worth the cost of the trip to me, and I believe others enjoyed these as much as I did.

I'm expecting a great Chautauqua next year, and I hope every minister will plan to be present. And have as many of his people there as he can persuade to go.

Why not begin now to make plans to attend the Chautauqua next year, by not making any engagements to conflict with the Chautauqua dates.

Yours for a great school of methods at Elon every summer.

J. F. MORGAN.

IGNORANCE OF TOBACCO COSTS DEARLY.

BY WILL H. BROWN.

Dr. J. H. Kellogg tells of a business man whocame into his office, much excited, saying his own physician had informed him he had tobacco heart, and could not live longer than two years. The man declared he must live ten years more, in order to develop a business enterprise in which he had induced his friends to invest, adding:

"I am absolutely indispensable to the business. If I fail the whole thing will fail and my friends will lose every dollar of their money. Tell me, doctor, how I can keep on my feet ten years more."

Dr. Kellogg replied: "Your safety margin is used up; your reserve strength is gone. Your heart, liver and kidneys have carried such a heavy burden, done so by years of overwork, that they are worn out. You are like a man whose once bank balance of millions has been reduced by extravagance of a few cents."

As Dr. Kellogg paused, the man read his thoughts, and saw there was no hope. He sprang to his feet, strode excitedly back and forth, pulling his hair out by the roots. Suddenly he paused and shrieked: "Why didn't some one tell me what tobacco would do to a man? If I had never dreamed that tobacco would injure my health or my business, I would have cut my throat as soon as I would have smoked."

This shows the great responsibility resting upon those who do know of the evils of tobacco, especially the rising generation.

HOW CAN I KNOW?

Here is one of the fruits of higher criticism. It has put into the mouths, yea, into the hearts and minds of many of our young people, and some older ones, too, that the Bible is not reliable, and worse than that if possible, that the Great Book is made up of myths, folk lore, traditions, etc., and many professing Christians have come to regard the Word of God as filled up with that sort of things, and no wonder that faith grows weak and hope is dulled and the light, as in the parable of the Ten Virgins, is really going out and leaving darkness behind. The Congregationalist tells of a pastor who ran up with just such a case. It was a young lady member of the Church to which he was ministering in spiritual things, and from his answer to her inquiry, we should judge that she did not get her unbelief from his preaching. She had probably been reading a good many books from the pens of these higher critics, and at any rate she was just rolling in the thought which these men are constantly putting out for the people to feed on, and when they have fed, they do little but die as useful church members. When one disbelieves the Word of God, it would be exceedingly strange if the light in that life does not go out in darkness. We commend the skill of this pastor in helping his young lady member out of her difficulty and unbelief and bringing her back to the old faith of the Word of God. Religiously speaking, if you have lost faith in the Bible, you have nothing to which you can hitch the star of hope and life in Christ. Be careful men, how you induce the young people of your flocks to forsake the truth of God, for when they have forsaken it, they have nothing else to take its place, and then they are done for, unless in the good providence of God some wise teacher should come along and help the wandering one back to the Rock of holy Scripture. The Congregationalist gives the case in question after this fashion:

"How can I know that the New Testament is not a lot of myths and legends?" said a young woman to her pastor.

It would have been of no use to say to her, "The Bible says so, and you must believe them," for the Bible for the time being had lost for her its authority. Nor would it have been of much use for her pastor to have argued with her. She was in deep water, deeper than she realized, voicing a criticism the full significance of which she hardly understood and the answer to which she was not entirely competent to seek.

Instead of seeking to guide her through the difficult field of Biblical criticism, her pastor took a more practical course. "Suppose," he said to her, "that for the sake of argument we assume that there might be legend or myth in the New Testament. Have you ever considered how much of the New Testament could never possibly come under that head? Here, for instance, is the Sermon on the Mount, which is a straight teaching, a matter of ideals which we accept or reject and with which any question as to fact or legend has nothing to do. Then there is the parable of the good Samaritan, which has a very clear truth for life, with which any question of the miraculous or non-miraculous has nothing to do. Likewise there is the parable of the prodigal son, the thirteenth chapter of first Corinthians, and great mass of plain teaching about life and conduct that is right or wrong, worthy of belief or of rejection quite independently of who said it or in what setting it is found. "Suppose," continued the pastor, "you take your New Testament and search out all that so stands challenging the mind and heart even if you have a fear that all the rest is myth or legend, and suppose you begin to practice all this truth in your life, I think you will find that before you have gone far the question of myth and legend will not trouble you greatly, or if it does you may see it in a new light and with a new ability to find an answer."

A JUSTIFICATION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

The Biblical Recorder of Raleigh, N. C., has recently published two articles from the pen of Rev. A. T. Howell, discussing the right of Capital Punishment. Mr. Howell presents the arguments in favor of Capital Punishment in a masterly way, and we are republishing them from the pages of The Recorder that our readers may examine the subject as a help to keep on the right side of this question. As we see it Mr. Howell presents the right side of the question with much force. We shall not attempt to discuss the matter at this time, but later, after our readers have had time to digest Mr. Howell's views most fully we may have something to say on the question, and for the reason that there is so much need for the right side to be maintained. We bespeak for these articles the careful attention of our readers. We need to know the right and then, knowing it, we need to stand for it. May God help us to get the truth and use it. Brother Howell writes as follows:

We are living in chaotic times. Relentless and determined attempts to destroy the foundations of home, church and State are being made as never before. Ancient landmarks and old established laws, upon which our fathers relied in making this great country, are now laughed at, and are the targets for the desecrating hand of the Iconoclast. The very fact that anything as hoary with age seems sufficient to render it contemptible in the eyes of the modernist. The fact that a thing is new is, with many conclusive evidence that it is true. "Up-to-date" is the watchword of the hour. Political foundations are being shaken and shattered. The foundations of government, the laws that make and protect government, are tried and assailed. It is a day of democracy, and more and worse, of democracy run mad. We have exchanged Czarism for Bolshevism, and autocracy for anarchy. High explosives have been used to blast the foundations of the faith of our fathers. Many are crying for a new religion and a new God. They tell us that there is no gold in heaven, no fire in hell, no blood in the atonement, no penalty in punishment. God is too loving to punish men, and men are too good to be punished. From the seething mass of malcontents may be heard the rumbling of the gathering storm. The sad lack of statesmanship is painfully apparent. The politician has taken the place of the statesman, and mighty problems are the puppets of party politics. The world is in a mess, and eagerly awaits a Moses to lead out of the wilderness.

The enforcement of law, all law, and especially the law against capital crimes is needed now as never before, for its salutary influence in suppressing the wave of crime which is now sweeping the world. So I shall write on "A Justification of Capital Punishment," with the following outline:

I. The safety of society demands the retention and enforcement of capital punishment.

1. It is the most powerful and effective deterrent known in penology.

2. It prevents criminals from committing more crimes.

3. It is needed until the race has advanced in civilization until there are no human brutes.

4. It rids society of the menace of dangerous and worthless characters.

5. There has never been a humane and adequate substitute for it.

II. Capital punishment is just and vindicates the majesty of the law.

1. It is sanctioned by the Bible and history.

2. It is sanctioned by reason.

3. A murderer's life should not be more sacred than that of his victim.

4. It is more merciful than suggested substitutes.

5. It saves the community the cost and danger of keeping in custody vicious and dangerous characters.

III. The objections to capital punishment are sentimental and theoretical, growing out of a false humanitarianism.

1. It can be made certain.

2. By our jury system very few mistakes are made in passing sentence to the minimum.

IV. The abolition of capital punishment has not been satisfactory.

1. It has led to lynchings and increase of crime.

2. Criminals do not dread life imprisonment as much as capital punishment.

3. Life imprisonment frequently develops insanity and torturous death.

4. Life imprisonment is not satisfactory in reforming criminals.

5. It more ideally fills the purpose of punishment.

I. The safety of society demands the retention and enforcement of capital punishment.

Crimes of all kinds are stalking over the land with brazen faces. The United States of America leads the civilized world in the crime of murder, and especially of unpunished murderers. The crime of murder is increasing at a shockingly rapid rate. How can this fearful and deplorable tendency, which puts a low estimate on human life, and places the lives of good people everywhere in jeopardy, be checked or restrained? This is a vital question which good citizens everywhere should ponder seriously and endeavor to solve, in the interest of the welfare and protection of every one. Who will deny that there is great and widespread laxity in the enforcement of the laws, especially with regard to the law of capital offenses. To a great degree, no doubt, this laxity in enforcing law is due the crime wave which is now sweeping the country with all its appalling blackness and hideousness. When the murderer is certain that his own life must be surrendered when the life of another is taken, the crime of murder will be reduced to a minimum. This has always been true. Here in our own beloved country brave officers of the law are being shot down in the execution of their duty, while trying to restrain criminals from their unlawful deeds.

From ocean to ocean, from the gulf to the lakes, we have murders after murders, thousands of murders, cold blooded, malicious murders. The great majority of these criminals of the baser sort go scot-free. Men are being shot down in the highway in the night and in the broad open day time. I do believe that the propaganda against capital punishment has much to do with this awful spread of murder.

The various newspapers of the nation have become alarmed at the fearful crime wave which is now sweeping over the land, overriding all lawful authority. A recent edition of the Literary Digest had an article on the criminal conditions in the nations, and from this article I take the following: The Police Commissioner of New York City says: "Our records will show more policemen killed than ever before." The New York World says, "It is obvious that the criminals are getting the better of the authorities in a very large proportion of cases." The New York Times says, "The criminal record exceeds all previous records of robbery and murder." The Chicago Tribune tells us that one murder per day and the theft of four million dollars was the record of that city last year. The Atlanta Constitution says that the criminal conditions of Atlanta are deplorable. The New Haven Courier-Journal says, "It cannot be denied but that crime is more rampant than ever before."

Another paper says, "There is a nation-wide disregard for life and property." The Digest quotes many papers as saying, "Some way must be found to thwart these high-handed criminals, or citizens will be forced to revive the old frontier expedient—The Vigilance Committee." It does seem to me that a look at the new-made graves throughout our land, and the desolate homes, weeping widows, and fatherless orphans that cry to heaven for succor, caused without warrant by heartless villains, will prevent any normal man from advocating the abolition of capital punishment.

1. It is the most powerful and effective deterrent known in penology.

Twelve States of the American union have abolished capital punishment.

Twenty-four States retain capital punishment, the court or jury having the power to substitute life imprisonment.

Thirteen States have capital punishment absolute, court or jury having no power to substitute life imprisonment.

In these 49 States of this union less than one hundred criminals are executed annually, which is about three per cent of the convicted, according to best authenticated statistics.

The death penalty is a mere remnant, a left over, from the days when the repressive theory of criminology held sway—a vestigial organ which has ceased to function for lack of exercise. In this event capital punishment has not had much chance to deter crime.

The criminal jurisprudence of America is a travesty on justice.

It is an undeniable fact of history and statistics that the penalty of death has had a deterrent effect upon criminals, and has greatly diminished crime wherever it has been efficiently administered.

In this paper I am arguing the necessity of having the death penalty for three classes of homicides: (1) Where deliberation is evinced; homicides accompanied by other serious crimes; (3) when there is reckless disregard of human life. Rape is a most heinous crime and deserves to be punished with death. Arson, burglary, treason, and train wrecking demand punishment by the retributive justice of death.

The leniency of our modern criminal jurisprudence, spurious mercy, false sympathy, a mistaken humanitarianism, an abused pardoning power, and the uncertainty of being punished at all, has caused a great increase of crime all over the world.

The fact is, that the few who are punished at all are negroes and poor white people without power or influence.

Collier's Weekly states that a murder is committed every hour of the day and night in this country, and thousands more.

A judge charging the jury some time ago in the State of Georgia said, "There are more homicides committed in Georgia in one year than in the whole British Empire." And Georgia is not the worst State in the union.

Under our lax enforcement of law less than one murderer in a hundred is convicted and executed, while in England one in three has to pay the penalty of broken law.

The enforcement of law does not put an end to all crime, but it does repress and lessen crime. Cain, Moses, Lamech, David, Simeon, Levi; and others lived under the stern laws of the Old Testament penalty and escaped the death penalty, but that does not argue that law against murder is not a good thing, nor that capital punishment ought to be abolished.

According to the history and statistics, wherever capital punishment is not a dead letter and is administered crime is greatly decreased.

A La Cassagne in his great book, "Peine de Mort," says, "Homicides are less frequent in all countries where capital punishment is rigorously enforced."

So far as I can gather from reliable statistics, in all countries where capital punishment has been abolished and crime decreased, for years before abolition capital punishment was a dead letter—was not executed. It now remains for my objector to show that the abolition of the penalty caused the decrease in crime, which thing cannot be done.

But we do know that the enforcement of the law has had a powerful deterrent effect upon capital offenses, and a very salutary influence in decreasing all other crimes by radiation and by reflex influence.

It seems to me that many of the societies originally formed for the purpose of reforming criminals are now doing their utmost to reform sentences imposed by the judges.

The fear of death is still the king of terrors. The certainty of the penalty is more deterrent than the severity. But all penalties must be graduated according to the enormity and malignity of the crime. This doctrine is laid deep by Jurist Blackstone in the English laws.

The innate love of life is deeply implanted in the bosom of every normal man, and hence a threat to take it is efficacious. The hope and probability of escaping the gallows offsets the fear of it.

England's great dramatist says:

"The wearied and most loathed worldly life
That age, ache, penury, and imprisonment
Can lay on nature is a paradise
To what we fear of death."

The lessening of the number of capital crimes, and the modern amelioration in the punishment, does not justify the abolition of the death penalty for capital offenses. Our laxity in enforcing the law is causing us to reap a harvest of crime, and if the law was abolished an avalanche of homicides would swoop down upon us.

Let the trial be as swift and as thorough as justice can make it, let the sentence be final without the chance of technical appeal, executive clemency, or hope of pardon, and it will deter any time, anywhere, among any people.

2. It prevents criminals from committing more crimes. Dead men tell no tales and commit no crimes.

The objects of punishment are: 1. The protection of society; 2. The reformation of the criminal; 3. The prevention of crime. To use a different phraseology, the objects of punishments are punitive, reformatory and prohibitory.

All four canons of punishment—segregation, deterrence, reformation and humanity—are met in a wiser, safer, and more ideal way in capital punishment of capital offenses than in any other form of punishment. Many times the soft-heartedness of courts and juries have assigned dangerous and degenerate types of criminals to life imprisonment, and these criminal incorrigibles have escaped by killing wardens of prisons and gone out to commit other heinous crimes. Segregation by death would be the safest and most just penalty for all such criminals and argues to me that abolition of the death penalty would be a profound and unfortunate mistake.

3. It is needed until the race has advanced in civilization until there are no human brutes.

"When the lion shall eat straw with the ox," then can capital punishment be safely abolished. As long as there are capital offenses committed—rape, murder, arson, treason, burglary—there must be capital punishment.

Abolish the crime. Justice will abolish the penalty.

4. It rids society of the menace of dangerous and worthless characters.

Why tax good children to keep such criminals, incorrigible criminals, who are a menace to society and a great cost to the commonwealth?

On strictly utilitarian reasoning, untinged with the bias of soft humanitarian sentiment and a spurious philanthropy, the argument is unanswerable. The sentimentalist quite likely would object to this argument. The arguing with a sentimentalist in a logical syllogism is like writing on water.

5. There has never been an adequate and humane substitute for it.

The only substitute ever suggested is life imprisonment. But that has been found difficult to carry out. It has hardly ever been carried out. A very few ever serve life term. In most cases, in a short time after the crime is committed, its heinousness is forgotten, and appeals are made to the executives, or pardoning power, and the criminal is pardoned. Sometimes the prisoner escapes. Many times the prisoner kills the warden or prison guard and escapes, and if caught after committing more crime can only receive life sentence. This makes it unjust and unsafe to society, and does not satisfy the retributive justice of the law.

Solitary confinement is the only absolute method of carrying out life sentence, and our civilization would revolt at that punishment.

I dare say that if one hundred prisoners were sentenced for life, and made to believe that there was no hope of escape, that there would not be one in fifteen years of sound mind and alive. Our humane civilization revolts at the treatment of lifers even in isolation prisons.

COUNT THE GOOD DAYS.

During the closing months of his life Gladstone suffered intense pain. He bore it heroically rather than submit to an operation which might result fatally. When a friend wrote to him expressing grief at his sufferings the great statesman replied, "No doubt I have suffered a good deal during the last six months, but then I had ten hundred and fifty-six months almost without pain." That is Christian arithmetic. That is the kind of reckoning that brings sunshine even in the midst of darkness. Life is a matter of emphasis. It is possible so to emphasize six months of sickness that they over-balance in our minds of our dear ones more than a thousand months of health. Gladstone was a statesman of the Kingdom of Heaven as well as of the United Kingdom.

"Think, as you lie down upon your bed to rest, how your Saviour was lifted up from the earth to die. Think, amid your plans and anticipations of future gayety, what the redemption of your soul has cost and how the dying Saviour would wish you to act. His wounds plead that you will live for better things."

ELON LETTER.

I am going in this letter to write about a personal friend for whom I have the greatest respect. He registered in Elon College in September 1911. That was the year I became President. The next three years he was in my office. During his senior year he managed the Ladies' Hall.

Rev. C. B. Riddle, for I am referring to him, earned his way through college. During his college days he wrote two books—"College Men without Money," and "Trailing the Truth." It is quite unusual for a man in college to perform such feats as this. "College Men Without Money," brought him considerable income and helped him bear his college expenses.

Immediately upon his graduation, Brother Riddle became editor of the Christian Sun. He held this position for six years, resigning at our recent Southern Christian Convention session. Mechanically speaking the Christian Sun under his administration surpassed any religious paper in North Carolina or Virginia. Many of our people felt the same way about it editorially. We can safely say this—his editorials were frequently quoted by other papers, secular, magazines, and religious.

During his editorship The Christian Sun was removed to Burlington. Immediately our editor became a community leader. He is a member of various clubs, of the Chamber of Commerce, and of many committees of a philanthropic and community nature. The Burlington News wrote him up in very laudatory style as a leading citizen, and that too while he was editor of a denominational paper.

But the achievement that has induced me to write this word of appreciation has taken place since he gave up the editorship of our paper. Brother Riddle is now an editor at large. Each week he writes under the heading "Church Folks and Events," a gripping series of paragraphs which he sells to the great dailies for their Saturday and Sunday issues. This is a real idea, one that the world needed and the service is being eagerly sought and paid for by the press.

One editor of a great metropolitan daily wrote Brother Riddle that it was the very thing he had wanted for years, but that he didn't have sense enough to work out how to get it. Aside from the income which accrues to him for this new idea, our brother is bringing lustre to our Church in this day as being the creator of a new idea in religious journalism.

So to the idea of religious journalism itself and to the idea of co-education, in which we as a people pioneered, in this day we contribute an idea that will bring the world together religiously as nothing so far has—a syndicated news service covering the whole field of religion in an authoritative and inspiring way.

Brother Riddle will blush when he reads this. He knows nothing of it. I am happy thus to write of a son of Elon and a member of our Christian Church.

LETTER FROM BELGIUM.

Bruxelles le, Sept. 2, 1922.

I wrote a short letter from Paris; but I feel constrained to write from Brussels, before leaving tomorrow for Holland, that I might inform our people in the States on a very important matter that they are and have been very deeply interested in. It has been our custom to contribute to all agent and societies in our sympathy for poor devastated Belgians. We have been informed today by our Counsel General Morgan that only about one per cent. of Belgium territory was destroyed.

And all this has been practically restored. The people are fairly well clothed. Food is sufficient. There is practically no suffering. The Budget in Belgium carries a large fund for the unemployed. They can all get work, if they desire. The factories have all been restored. He also stated that only 30 per cent. of all the donations sent from America ever reached the object for which it was sent. The societies and representatives that it was assigned to, spent the balance for themselves in wine, fashions and extravagant living. Various checks and gold is being sent here now for the poor, that never leaves the hands of the first party receiving it. During the war under The Hoover Relief Fund a Belgium could receive 100 pounds of flour from this fund at the time and then they would sell 60 pounds of it to a German soldier to take over across the line in Germany. Brussels did not lose a pane of glass during the war. The Germans only used this city for occupation. The Counsel General instructed our Commercial Congress on our return to say to the Americans, not to send anymore money over here for relief work. Keep it in the States—send it to the poor at home. Subscribe to the support of our various institutions that need our help. Such as schools, sanitariums, churches, and to the poor. This is one of the times when charity should begin at home. If you send it here the poor will never receive it. Belgium is not poor; the government may be—but her people are not. Their fields are very productive, nearly all of the devastated sections have been restored. The Queen collected a million francs two years ago from America and other countries and turned it over to the various societies of Belgium to be distributed to the poor and in 30 days after this she called us then for a report—and no one could account for this distribution.

I am writing this letter in order that our people at home may know the conditions from first hands—and stop sending your money here. Send it to Elon College to help educate some poor boy or girl. Send it to the Christian Orphanage to help save some poor child left by their parents destitute. We have too many orphans in the States who need our help and are worthy of our help rather than to send it to Europe to be used up in wines, beers and fancy living. I cannot conceive what the Condemnation will be at the last day to these people who took bread from the mouths of babes for their own grandizement. If our Congress sent here for investigation does no more than to inform our people at home these conditions and let the money stay at home collected for charity, they will accomplish much.

Do not cast pearls before swine. We are heading our way now for Germany: but the conditions there are so serious that we are fearing trouble of getting out if we get in. Our minister was attached yesterday and the German mark is so cheap that the printing presses cannot keep the people supplied. There is also much hostility against Americans. They say we have dollars but no heart. More later.

TO THE PASTORS OF THE CHRISTIAN DENOMINATION.

Are you in need of an Evangelistic helper in your field? The purpose of this letter is to bring to your attention a man of rare ability as a Pianist, Soloist and personal worker.

The man of whom I write—Mr. W. B. Johnson, 530 East Edenton Street, Raleigh, N. C., is one of the best helpers I have ever had in my revival work. He is a graduate of the State School for the Blind of Raleigh (from which the noted Sam Davis graduated) is a man of fine personalty and strong Christian character—with wonderful ability as a Pianist, and Tenor Soloist. I speak from personal experience, when I say, I have found no better helper anywhere. He has played in the Orchestra of almost every Church in Raleigh, and has helped in four evangelistic meetings I have held within the last two years. For further information ask Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Elon College, N. C., Rev. R. L. Williamson, Henderson, N. C., Rev. C. E. Newman, Virgilina, Va., or Rev. Geo. D. Eastes, Norfolk, Va.

Mr. Johnson has just recently decided to give his life to Evangelistic work, and is doing so at a great sacrifice to himself and family, since he is in great demand by Theaters, and public places, such as Hotels, Piano houses and various places of amusements. He is a man of thorough consecration, and ability to help in your work. For terms and dates write him at the above address.

THE POWER OF BOOKS.

William Thornton Whitsett.

"Books rule the world. As Robinson Crusoe has sent many a spirited youth from the safe footing of dry land in quest of adventures on the unstable element, so I believe can the influence of every volume be traced in its effects upon its peculiar tribe of followers, to whom it has given impulses in some one or another of the thousand paths of life.

"There are those who have shaped their characters according to the sage advice doled out in the appendix of an almanac; and a select few have had their souls fired with heroic daring by a perusal of the bold achievements of Thomas Thumb!

"Wherever a book happens there falls a spark which nothing but death can put out. A man looks into a book as he looks into a glass, to adjust his opinions, and to smooth down some rough spot on the face of his character.

"A book is a sort of little philosopher with whom we can chat whenever we choose, and draw as from an oracle without a fee. When we bring it fresh and warm from the book-shop we tuck it under our arm as a bosom crony, and retreating into some snug corner we hold agreeable and uninterrupted gossip."

The above interesting selection comes from Rev. Carl B. Riddle, of Burlington, N. C., who states that he copied it in on the New York City libraries some time ago from Vol. 1, No. 1, of the New York Morning Herald of Wednesday, May 6, 1835, making it thus eighty-seven years old. It is worth a place in any good scrap book. Mr. Riddle is a busy editor and minister but has found time to write three books, College Men Without Money 1914! Trailing the Truth, 1914; and Thirty-six, 1915. He recently had a short article in the Literary Digest, New York, and is planning to give more of his time to writing in future.—Biblical Recorder.

WOMAN' WORK IN THE CHURCH.

MAUD STOUT WYLIE.

Service is Her Watchword.

I would rather be a charwoman in the house of my Lord than occupy any of tottering thrones in Europe. It is a far cry from the woman who mops the floor, to the regal queen in royal robes and diadem. But after all, in the end, there may be more precious stones in the diadem the charwoman will wear. It all depends upon the woman.

When Jesus was on earth he was woman's friend. She was chief mourner at the foot of the cross and she was first to proclaim to the world a risen Lord. Since he has done so much for her, woman owes to him her happiest existence.

"No country can rise higher than the level of its women." The old saying, "What is home without a mother?" It might be added: what would your congregation be if there were no women present? Mostly minus, I dare say.

Just as the home is woman's best outlet for service for others as she ministers to those she loves, so through the work in the church her soul life expands as she serves her Lord and Master.

Lydia was among the first to help establish the church, when she opened the door of her home and said, "Abide here," and Paul and his helpers were made welcome. No doubt religious services were held in her home.

Christian Hospitality.

The little Christian Church which met in the home of Aquila and Priscilla flourished because of the loyalty of this first woman missionary. They kept Paul in their home, and when he went to Ephesus they went with him. It was here that Apollos came and "Aquila and Priscilla took him unto them and expounded unto him the way of God more perfectly." No doubt Apollos was a new convert or student, just a young theologian out of college who needed the counsel and the deeper experience of the older Christians to enrich his life. We still have them, these modern Priscillas, who open their doors for God's journeyman as he goes into a new charge. Who can estimate the incalculable good that has been accomplished through these sacred visits in the home? You treasure them in your memory these homes of welcome. Sometimes it was your body so weary and tired you needed just such a haven. Or your soul was sick and distressed and you needed just such a heaven to slip and pour out your problems to these understanding ones. Brethren, these homes have been the beacon lights along the not altogether rosy path, have they not?

I don't know but this is one of woman's best ways of service in the church. May she never falter in this task of happiness for God's servants.

Dorcas and Her Guild.

"Dorcas is dead." The wail goes out over the house tops and "the women come to Peter, bringing garments that Dorcas has made." Dorcas held that her way of showing love and gratitude to Jesus was with a tiny cambric needle. She little knew that this was the beginning of one of the greatest aids of the Christian church. Not only have the poor been clothed, but churches have been stitched together (figuratively speaking) with a slender piece of steel in the fingers of consecrated women. I have heard it expressed that "churches are built on tired women's backs." What haven't the "Ladies Aiders" done! If there is a big load to lift, they assume a large part of it. They pay the bills from basement to belfry, from pulpit to pew. These "tired women's backs" have bent under the load to help in every conceivable way to put more money in the Lord's treasury. Yes, Dorcas is dead, and while you may not have heard that cry, you have heard by the bedside, down the street, over the telephone: "Sister Frank is dead," "Mother Combs has passed away," "Emma Hill has gone," and you say, "It cannot be true. The church cannot spare her." Do you not long to do as Peter did—slip up to that quiet room and pray and utter those life-giving words, "Tabitha, arise!" and present that beloved sister to the church again? The church suffers unspeakable loss when these mothers in Israel pass on to their reward. If only the modern Dorcases will grow as graciously in the love of Christ!

Ministry to the Wide World.

If the Ladies' Aid is the vertebra (tired though it is) of the church, the Woman's Foreign Missionary and the Woman's Home Missionary Societies are its strong arms. There is no limit to the wonderful opportunities that these organizations offer, not only in helping the less fortunate, but in deepening the spiritual side of every woman's life who is a member. You cannot do some thing for someone else without enriching your own life. Were there time, I could tell you of the zenanas, the hospitals, the schools, yes whole villages of people who never would have heard even the name of Christ, much less received into their lives that gracious, uplifting power that emancipates from sin and bondage, if it were not for Christian women who have caught the vision.

Our flag would be desecrated more than it is if we did not have Marcy Home in the Ghetto of Chicago, our work in Alaska, among the Indians, the Negroes and the foreign element of our land.

Any minister who deprives the women of his church of enlisting in this work, is untrue to his trust. His church will not suffer by reason of what they give.

The greatest need in every church is more efficient Sunday-school work. Truly, "the field is ripe, ready for the harvest." Whole fields of growing children need the instruction and nurture which good teachers could give. Those in older years are going to seed for lack of cultivation. They need to be pruned of some of the "isms" and queer notions that sap their spiritual growth, and be grafted into that life-giving Tree. Who is better able to do this than a consecrated, gifted teacher, who can clear up the debris that back-washes into every life? Every person may say of someone, "He was my teacher," "I owe much to my training in the Sunday school."

May we say,

"One holy church, one army strong,
One steadfast high intent,
One working band, one harvest song,
One King omnipotent."

Missing Great Living.

It is a lamentable fact that there are women in the church who are so fascinated with the tawdry glitter of society that they are utterly oblivious to the needs of the world about them.

Their souls are shriveled, stunted, and emaciated. In a land of plenty they live on the banks.

A pastor friend told of calling upon a woman in the church who was indifferent to the greater needs of the soul. Her reply to the minister, when he exhorted her to more complete consecration, was that she "had made the May-years." As if her soul's salvation depended upon salad dressing!

Ask such women to join the missionary societies, their excuses are legion; teach a Sunday school, do social service work, take some official place in the church, it is the same story—too busy with other things.

How close to her Saviour every woman needs to live. What would this old world be like without the prayers of its women?

Parsonage Women.

I would be untrue to my calling and unfair to my sisters in the ministry if I did not add a word about the women in the parsonage. We have been commiserated upon our lot because we are dragged about the country. I think Aquila and Priscilla must have instituted the itinerancy, for we hear of them at Pontus, then at Rome, at Corinth, at Ephesus, again at Rome, then back at Ephesus again. Typical, is it not of the life we live in these days of going from one charge to another? It is a blessed privilege to be linked irrevocably to one who is trying to "bring about the kingdom of God on earth."

You do not hear of divorce cases among this class of people. There would not be alimony enough! Scarcely enough to sustain a Pekingese dog or Persian cat. Alimony seems to be the main inducement in many quarters.

The minister's wife is loyal because she is happy. No woman enters more fully into her husband's work than she. In his pulpit work she is his worst and best critic, and in the pastoral work his best chum and comrade. She has that instinct that makes it easy to discern good from evil; that insight that detects the false from the genuine. And her spiritual sensibilities are so alive that a hypocrite has about as hard a time to get by her judgment as the proverbial camel to go through the eye of the needle.

She has saved the preacher man from more than one embarrassment, much less tragedy. I think, brethren, you know what I mean.

Oh, there are crucial times in her life, too. If she has ascended the mountain with you, she will go down into the valley also. She may not go as uncomplainingly, as cheerfully, but she goes. Is that not enough! And after her battle she bravely and cheerfully faces the perplexities and vexations with you. Your strength and your prayers should be able to help her over the hardest places.

She is loyal to her church, and, best of all, to her Lord Jesus Christ. She keeps no alabaster box of sweet perfume sitting on the clock shelf awaiting her burial, but every day she pours it out at her Master's feet.

In my family there has been a wedding ring with the inscription, "Each for the other and both for God." It may not be engraved in any other ring in existence, but it is the unseen superscription over every parsonage home.—Bloomington, Indiana.

THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The Washington Monument, solid as it is, cannot resist the heat of the sun poured on its southern side on a midsummer's day without a slight bending of the gigantic shaft. This is perceptible by means of a copper wire, 174 feet long, hanging in the center of the structure, and carrying a plummet suspended in a vessel of water. At noon in summer the apex of the monument, 550 feet above the ground, is shifted by expansion of the stone a few hundredths of an inch toward the north. High winds cause perceptible motions of the plummet, and in still weather delicate vibrations of the crust of the earth, otherwise unperceived, are registered by it.

It is said reward sweetens labor; so if you are interested in building up the enterprises of your Church, begin at once to solicit subscriptions for the Sun and secure one or more premiums.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

SUPPRESSION OR EXPRESSION.

The God of heaven and earth seeks to express Himself. This He does with human beings by impressing them. Our impressions for good are God's expression to us.

Now there are just two ways in which we can deal with these divine impressions. We can suppress them, cover them, conceal them. This was done in the case of the man who received one talent in the parable. (Mat. 25:15). And this man was cursed of his master and received a scathing denunciation in these words: "Cast the unprofitable servant into outer darkness: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth." (Mat. 25:30). The curse that fell on this man was from failure to do anything for his Lord with that which his Lord had given him. He was useless, inactive, unproductive, unprofitable in his Master's business. He gave no expression to the world of the impression he had received from his Lord.

The other way of dealing with the impressions our Lord makes upon us, is to express them to the world. There is no third way. We must either suppress or express.

Now if we suppress we thwart, for the time, the will of God, stifle the very voice of God: if we express to the world these divine impressions we further the work of God and give utterance to the voice and will of God. The trouble with the blue sea is, not that it does not receive for it does: but that it does not give out. It has inlets, but no outlets.

That explains in a sentence why missionary churches grow, and non-missionary churches decay. Missionary Churches have outlets, give expressions to the world of that with which the Lord has impressed them. Non-Missionary churches have inlets but no out-lets. They build no Christian colleges, maintain no orphans' homes, support no benevolent enterprises.

They are impressed but do not express. They have visions, dreams, experiences, inspirations. But they give no visible expressions of these to the great waiting, wasting, wicked, wretched world.

This Christian church of ours has been impressed. God has spoken in audible and authoritative voice to it. It has heard, and in a measure seeks to express this voice to the world. He has impressed us, as Peter was impressed, till we like Peter cry out "Lord, thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Then we, like Peter, feel that He has given us the keys of heaven with which we unlock the very kingdom of heaven. This we do in Japan and Porto Rico by expressing there the impressions we have received, namely, That Jesus the Christ is the Son of the living God, and that there is no other name given under heaven and amongst men whereby they must be saved. This we call missions. We express to the world week by week through our church papers the impressions which God hath given us of His love, power, wisdom, will. This we call religious journalism. We express to our youths in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor every Sunday our ideas and thoughts about God and duty and salvation. This we call religious education. We express in our Elon and other Christian colleges our ideas of character and scholarship and learning and service and destiny. This we call Christian education. We express to the motherless and fatherless children of our churches and community our care and concern for them. This we call the Christian Orphanage. We express to our aged ministers and the widows of ministers who have worn out their lives in the ministry for us our respect for and appreciation of them. This we call superannuation. We express our desire for an organization that will foster, love, cherish all these expressions. This we call the Southern Christian Convention. And then we seek a method of showing our love, loyalty and devotion to all these expressions of our church life and activity. This we call Men and Millions. God has given us Men and Millions that we might become loyal, patriotic, whole-souled, one hundred per cent. Christians. Through this we express our impressions to all the world.

MISSION BOARD MEETING.

The Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention met in regular annual session in the Philathea room Suffolk Christian Church at 9:30 a. m. September 13. All members were present, namely, Lieut. Gov. J. E. West, Chr., Dr. W. W. Stanley and J. M. Darden, Suffolk; C. H. Rowland and J. A. Williams, Franklin; K. B. Johnson, Cardinas, N. C., Mrs. W. A. Harper, Elon College; Dr. G. O. Lankford and Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington; Rev. H. M. Elder, Richland, Ga., J. O. Atkinson, Sec. Elon College. Rev. H. M. Elder, by request of the Chairman conducted the devotional: It being the time for reorganization, the following were selected for a period of two years, Lieut. Gov. J. E. West, Chairman; Dr. C. H. Rowland, Vice-Chairman; J. O. Atkinson, Secretary-Treasurer; J. E. West, W. W. Staley, J. M. Darden, J. A. Williams, Executive Committee. Minutes of last meeting and all intervening Executive Committee meetings were read and approved. The Secretary reported the following collections for the year as itemized and sent in monthly to the President of the Southern Christian Convention; September 1921 $1295.93, October, $860.48, November, $2,843.17, December, $2,072.03, January 1922, $2,248.86, February, $1,292.95, March, $1,551.54, April, $1,734.21, May, $1,529.92, June $1-158.55, July, $598.78, August, $806.99, total for the year, $17,993.41. There was collected during the year through the regular channels and transmitted to our Secretary by drafts from the President of the Convention $21,178.31, making the total collections for the year August 31, 1921 to September 1, 1922, $39,171.72. This of course does not include the House Mission Funds collected and expended by the Mission Conference with which this Board has nothing to do.)

The following named places and pastors have received donations named with results attached:

I. Chapel Hill, N. C., $400.00. Rev. B. J. Howard, Pastor. Received during year 6. Church membership 92. Average attendance 50. Pays pastor $1000.00 and parsonage. Church indebtedness $4000.00. S. S. has 85. C. E. 25. Womans Missionary Society 22. Making steady progress slowly.

II. Rose Hill, Columbus, Ga., $700.00. Rev. R. F. Brown, Pastor. Membership 70. Average attendance 47. Received during year 6. Conversions 8. S. S. 125. C. E. 32. Womans Missionary Society 15.

III. Elm Ave., Portsmouth, $600. Rev. E. Bradshaw, Pastor. Members received during year 114. Present membership 152. Conversions 141. Average attendance 100. S. S. 206. C. E. 32. Woman's Missionary Society 29.

IV. Winchester, Va., $500.00. Rev. J. F. Morgan, Pastor. Membership 145. Received during year 2. Average attendance 71. Pastors salary $2000.00. S. S. 195. C. E. 40. Woman's Missionary Society 14.

V. Portsmouth, Washington St., $400.00. Rev. W. L. Wells, Pastor. Church membership 164. Has S. S., C. E. and W. M. Society.

VI. Mebane, N. C., $500.00. Rev. P. T. Klapp, Pastor. Appropriated on building new church now in course of construction and promising.

VII. Richmond, Va., 3000.00. Rev. W. T. Walters D. D., Pastor. Church membership 102. Has S. S., C. E. and Woman's Missionary Society. Preparing to build.

VIII. Franklinton, N. C., $400.00. Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., Pastor. Preaching in basement twice per month. S. S. and L. A. Society.

IX. Newport News, $700. Rev. B. J. Earp, Pastor.

X. Mountain Work. Mrs. Iola H. Meredith, Supt. Schools: One winter session of 7 months. Two summer schools, 2 months each. In former (Christian Training School) were 85 pupils. Rocky Ford (Summer School) 20 pupils. Sandy Ridge (Summer School) 35 pupils. All grades were taught to 7th. Average age of pupils, 12 years.

There were three Sunday Schools. At Elks Spur 35. Rocky Ford 45. Sandy Ridge 60. Had preaching during summer with about 50 professions. Rev. M. T. Sorrell served two months as pastor. Visiting ministers during summer, Drs. Staley and Rowland and Rev. G. C. Crutchfield. Three churches were organized, Elks Spur (?) 8 members; Rocky Ford, 11 members; Sandy Ridge, 8 members.

I have paid out for the Mt. work past year for building and equipment $4315.59. For salaries $1765.34, total $6080.93. I have received for the work on building and salaries $4227.82, leaving a deficit for the year of $1,853.11. Considering this as building year, and not anticipating as heavy a building program the coming year, should the income remain about the same the deficit should be overcome before the next fiscal year expires.

XI. N. Alabama, $500. Rev. J. W. Elder, Pastor, Pisgah, Ala. There are now three churches organized, two with good buildings. The $500 we paid was on building at Pisgah, Ala., where they have a neat $2500 building. The work is very promising. Several letters plead for men and means with which to carry on the work.

XII. Christian Temple, Norfolk, is building. I have paid $,500 past year and am ready to pay $4000 more when called for. We will need the coming year all we can spare to meet the demands here.

XIII. Foreign Missions. We have finished paying the $21000 agreed upon with the A. C. C. Board for Japan, and after this one half of our foreign funds will go to begin the work in China and one half to continue the work in Japan and Porto Rico. The A. C. C. Board will add 20 per cent to the amount for China. We now have two missionaries definitely decided for China with the possibility of a third before the year closes. A medical missionary is greatly desired, but so far has not offered. The work in Japan and Porto Rico is making rapid strides and enjoying permanent growth and progress.

XIV. Men and Millions. Since June 1st I have devoted my efforts to the work of Men and Millions. I have held conferences with nearly all our pastors, and with a large per cent of our Captains and Women Leaders. Every Captain and Woman Leader has had one or more personal letters and every subscriber has had notices and brief pamphlets urging the importance of meeting their obligations. I have not from Exec. Sec. Johnston a definite report of collections to date, but his verbal statements that collections are coming in some, and that $10,000 was distributed to the various enterprises in July. I speak once or twice each Sunday to some congregation on the subject and find our people everywhere anxious to learn and willing to do their best in meeting their obligations as soon as possible.

After the report was adopted, it was decided to assist the following the coming year; Chapel Hill, Christian Temple, Rose Hill, Columbus, Ga., Elm Ave. and Washington St. Churches, Portsmouth; Winchester, Va., Franklinton, N. C., Newport News, North Alabama, Greene and Carroll Counties, Va., by arranging to have a pastor in each, the Mission churches in the Dover Del., district by helping supply a preacher for a time.

It was voted as a policy of the Board in future to ask all churches receiving aid to reduce their askings by at least 10 per cent a year, so that within ten years at least a mission church should become self-supporting and allow the Board to take on new places. A letter was read from the Chairman of the building Committee of the Elon College Christian Church to the effect that as soon as possible a house of worship must be built at the College, that the Trustees of the College had already dedicated a lot on which to build and the local membership would need the help of the entire convention membership in order to erect such a house as the situation and demands will require. The Board voted its moral backing to proposition and expressed the hope that financial aid could be given when the time was ripe for building.

The Chairman and Secretary are to act jointly with the Chairman and Sec. of the A. C. C. Board in selecting and sending out the missionaries to China, Rev. H. S. Hardcastle, now of Defiance College, has offered to go out one year hence and Rev. F. C. Lester now in Yale offers to go with Bro. Hardcastle or remain in Yale another year as the Board may direct. A trained nurse now a graduate but at present doing post graduate work in Johns Hopkins Hospital, has volunteered to go out, but so far a medical missionary has not offered but for this we are anxiously hoping and praying.

After a most busy day the Board adjourned to meet on Wednesday after the Second Sunday in September, 1923, unless sooner convened by the Chairman.

GOD'S HAND SEEN IN INCIDENTS OF THE WORLD WAR.

(Abstracts from a Sermon of Elmer Elsworth Helms.)

"Thou art the God that dost wonders." (Ps. 77:14.)

What God did in the War is the wonder-chapter of history, and proves that He does move in a mysterious way His wonders to perform. And also, that He makes the wrath of man to praise Him.

I.

In the darkest hour of the War, some one said to King George, of England, "How will it ever end?" King George prayerfully replied,

"God will have to work a miracle." He did. That is the answer. Because God is the God that doeth wonders among the nations, is why Germany had the War won seven times, and then lost it.

It was four o'clock on the afternoon of April 22, 1915, that the Germans at Ypres turned loose for the first time their deadly, poisonous gas on the Allies. It was all unexpected, and the allied armies, all unprotected, fell in wind rows. They were piled up like bloated cord wood. All Germany now had to do was to march through take the English channel, and the world was hers. Then why didn't she do it? And why was this particular time selected to turn loose the gas? It was not the military but the meteorological authorities that fixed the hour. Dr. Schmaus, the head of that department announced to the German general in charge that the direction of winds was fixed and settled for thirty-six hours to come, and they would carry the gas far over the allied lines. So the gas was turned loose—when all of a sudden it whirled, and flung itself back over the German army. The Germans, gasping, strangling, staggered by the thousands to their death.

Dr. Schmaus, in his official report, said, "In forty years of the meteorological records of the German Government, the wind never acted so peculiarly before." And the doubly strange and striking thing was, that the wind whirled in only a small area.

In the story of Jonah we read, "And Jehovah prepared a vehement wind." Where is the factory where the winds are made? "He bringeth the wind out of His treasury." God is the father of the wind. One hundred and sixteen times the Bible tells of God's dealings and doings with the wind.

II.

We now come to the darkest June of the War. Germany and Austria have swept down the Alps to swallow Italy. Just before them lies Venice. Venice is the heart of Italy. To have taken Venice at that time would not only have broken the heart of Italy, but the Central Powers could then easily have taken Rome, Naples, Milan, all Italy. If at that crucial hour Italy had fallen, the Allies would have lost. All there was between the Central Powers and victory was the Piave River. The Piave is a slow, sluggish stream that sleeps itself away 125 miles to the sea. The banks are so flat that it is easy to fling over bridges or cross by boats. The Austrians and Germans crossed over by the tens of thousands. They took no food, for the granaries of Italy were just ahead. Every soldier carried an empty chest. There were automobiles, trucks by the score, to bring back the loot. They are now within six and a half miles of Venice. The sky is red with the flame of their victory and the air is rent with their shouts, when, all of a sudden, out of what had been a dead and dry sky an hour ago, there burst a Niagara. And in an hour the Piave was a racing, roaring, mad wide sea, sweeping before it boats, bridges, trees, soldiers. Whole battalions of Austrians and Germans were swept to the sea. The Austrian and German soldiers were cut off from food supplies, and a great terror seized them, and the Italians captured or killed more than 40,000 of them. General Foch said, "General Diaz did his best." What would his best have amounted to without God's best? General Diaz recognized this when, sobbing, he said, "Deus facit," God did it.

Job asks a very interesting question, "Hath the rain a father? Jehovah causeth it to rain grievously upon the earth." And Jehovah sent lightened and two times the Bible speaks of God's dealings with the rain—His rain.

III.

November 17, 1917. The German submarine strength is at its tide. Night and day, for ten months, they have been turning them out. They have enough now to sweep the seas of American soldiers and ships. It is done, the war is won. The Berlin papers of those weeks gloated over the winning of the war by the submarine, when lo! the seas rolled and raged and would not cease, and the submarines, being unable to make their bases, were forced to come to the surface and were captured or sunk. One hundred and ninety-nine submarines, with crews amounting to 3,000, were taken and the back of the German submarine warfare was broken, and Germany lost. "He maketh them afraid with His storm." "Thou triffest them at sea." "The Lord hath His way in the whirlwind." Two hundred and nineteen times the Bible tells of God's dealings with His storms at sea.

IV.

It is September 6, 1914, one month after the war began. The Germans are in sight of Paris.

The Kaiser, from yon hill, through his glass, can plainly see Eifel tower. The French have but eight hours' ammunition. The orders are already given, "When the last round is fired, every man take to his heels." The archives of the Government have been removed from Paris southward, and women and children have been taken out by the thousands. Eight hours, and the war is done, and the world is won. Only eight hours—when all of a sudden the Germans ceased firing, and did not begin again for forty-seven hours. General Gallini commandeered every taxicab, automobile, carriage, cart, wheelbarrow, everything that had wheels in Paris and rushed munitions and men to the front. When after forty-seven hours the Germans began firing again, they were met with such fury that they were pounded back, and never in four years were the Germans so near Paris again. The German generals in charge; in their reports, said that they did not know why they ceased firing. Only eight hours and the world is Germany's, and the Germans cease firing, and do not know why. The Bible answers, "So far shalt thou come, and no farther." "Thus saith the Lord concerning this wicked king: He shall not come into this city. By the way that he came, by the same way shall he return. He shall not come into this city, saith the Lord, for I will defend this city to save it" (2 Kings, 19:33, 34). And Germany lost.

V.

By the spring of 1917, the German scientists had solved the problem of growing food and grain, and perfected it as never in the history of the world. They announced that Germany would have the potato crop of all time; that they had put into each potato hill that which would kill every enemy of the potato, under ground or above ground. And how the potatoes grew. When those uncounted acres were in blossom, lo! a blight, hitherto unknown, swept over the potato fields of Germany, and in a day they were scorched, scabbed and shriveled up, as though swept by fire. Hungry Germany learned the bitter truth, uttered by Napoleon, "An army travels on its belly, and will not travel when that belly is empty." A mutiny broke loose in the army then, that caused the abdication of the Kaiser. Ludendorff, in his history of the war, says that it was the failure of the potato crop in 1917 that lost Germany the war. That same spring, we raised a bumper crop of potatoes and wheat and everything; we had plenty for ourselves and the Allies. "Verily He giveth seed-time and harvest." "He sendeth the early and latter rains," and also the blight.

One of the plagues of Egypt spread death to the growing crops. Germany lost, because God is the God of seed-time and harvest.

VI.

Germany conceded that she was worsted in the air the last few months of the war. The Germans said that the accursed clouds defeated them. Nearly every time when they had a bevy of the enemy's ships in a pocket, ready to take them, one of those accursed clouds would be hanging handy, and would develop them as thick as a blanket, and the devil himself couldn't find them and they would escape at their leisure.

It was those clouds that did it. "My clouds shall curse them in that day, saith the Lord." Many of our boys who were in the air service report the same thing. "A cloud came upon them to hide them." "The Lord hath covered him with a cloud." "The clouds are His." "They are the dust of His feet." "He maketh the clouds His chariot." One hundred and sixty-two times God speaks in the Bible of His doings with the clouds. "Behold the sea, the earth and the sky, they are Mine, saith the Lord."

VII.

"Those whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad." In those early days of the war, Germany could easily have cut through to the channel ports, and had England at her mercy. But blinded and maddened, like a blind and mad bull, the Germans struck for Paris. They never reached Paris and they never reached the Channel ports, in later endeavors to do which they paid the price of nearly two million men. Germany knew that she must have the ports of the English Channel to win the war. Six weeks after she began the war she might have possessed every foot of the Channel, but mad and blinded she plunged Paris-ward, for the Kaiser must have his Christmas dinner in Paris. Germany was mad. "And, saith the Lord, Whence cometh this mad man?" Maddened and blinded, she struck for Paris, and that gave England time to get between the Channel and the enemy, and there she stood, for four long years, with her back to the wall and Germany lost. Germany had the shortest history of any great nation or empire that ever had being—forty-eight years from her cradle to her grave.

The Armistice came at the eleventh hour of the eleventh day of the eleventh month, 1918. The eleventh verse of the eleventh chapter of the eleventh book of the Bible is at least more than suggestive: "For as much as this is done of thee, O King, and thou hast not kept my covenant and my statutes, which I have commanded thee, I will surely rend thy kingdom from thee, and will give it to thy servant." If ever that was done to any nation and any ruler, it was done to Germany and the Kaiser.

A LIVING MESSAGE BASED ON THE WORD OF GOD.

BY REV. A. B. SIMPSON.

The following message was from the gifted and consecrated heart of the late A. B. Simpson, President of The Christian Missionary Alliance and the founder and editor of The Christian Alliance Weekly, from which this message is in his day. He was called home from his busy life here on the earth, if we mistake not, in November, 1919. The work of The Christian and Missionary Alliance of which he was the founder and president to the end of his life, still goes on with increasing power and usefulness. He was a great man and a true servant of God and did a great work for the world in his lifetime. We praise God for the gift of Albert B. Simpson. The following is well worth the careful and prayerful reading of all Christians.

"I beseech you. . . that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice" (Rom. 12:1).

We have had two glimpses of deeper spiritual life in the Epistle to the Romans. We find yet another of a wholly different character in seventh and eighth chapters we have the inward experience of sanctification, but in this, the outward expression; in other words, holiness in action, the experience of sanctification in its outworking in practical righteousness.

It begins with a call to entire consecration, the presenting of our bodies as a living sacrifice to God and our whole being so yielded up to Him that it will become "a reasonable service," "holy and acceptable to God."

This is not yielding described in the sixth chapter of Romans in connection with the inward experience of sanctification, but it is the offering of a life already sanctified for actual service. This passage, therefore, should not be applied as an appeal to the un sanctified, but to the sanctified.

A Separation.

The first effect of this surrender will be a distinct separation from the world, not so much by outward lines or arbitrary demarcation as rather by the inward and instinctive repulsion and expulsion of earthly things by a higher law of attraction and transformation. The word transformed here really means transfigured, and the idea is that the divine life throws off the old earthly forms, just as the new leaf and blossom throw off the old withered foliage of the past season. Phariseism can separate itself from sinners by an external barrier and yet be the same at heart as the sinner. True holiness can mingle with the sinful, like the Master, and yet at heart be separated as far as heaven from hell. Therefore, we are to be "transfigured by the renewing of our mind" so that we shall choose and prove the highest things, not only "the good and acceptable, but also the perfect will of God."

Ministry.

The next effect of true consecration is ministry for God and our fellowmen according to the grace given and the calling bestowed in the providence of God. Therefore, we have a variety of ministrations described in verses four to eight. These ministries differ in different Christians, and each is to be faithful to the trust assigned to him, realizing "that as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office, so we, being many, are one body in Christ and every one members one of another."

Next we see the truly consecrated life developing and manifesting itself in the various social one to another." We are to be liberal and helpful to our brethren in their times of need, "distributing to the necessity of saints given to hospitality." We are to adjust ourselves to the various classes and conditions of people around us, and "rejoice with them that do rejoice and weep with them that weep." We are to keep in touch with the humble and lowly and be free from the spirit of exclusiveness and pride, and "mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate." The consecrated Christian will always be easy to get along with and a source of gladness and good cheer wherever he goes. There is nothing that more honors God than a beautiful Christian deportment in the family and the social world, commending Christ even to the ungodly by the charm of our manner and the sweetness of our spirit.

Then the consecrated life will be found equally practical and true in the business world and in dealings man with man in the secular walks of life. It will be "not slothful in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord," making its possessor more capable and efficient in every calling, and bringing glory to God from the transactions of business and the tests of daily life. It will "provide things honest in the sight of all men," and avoid everything in connection with the affairs of life which could reflect upon our integrity or lower the standard of Christian uprightness.

It will exhibit a disposition becoming the various conditions and circumstances of our life, cheerful and joyful in receiving the blessings and mercies of God, and at the same time patient and submissive when trials come, "rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation," and as the secret of its triumphant spirit, "continuing constant in prayer."

Perhaps the supreme test of the Christian life is in the time of trials and especially in connection with the trials that come to us from the hands of our fellowmen. The principle of the consecrated child of God will be, "If it be possible, live peaceably with all men." He will not be quarrelsome, sensitive, or ready to get into trouble with his neighbors, but considerate, yielding, and always ready to meet others in the spirit of concession and conciliation. And when he must suffer wrong, there will be no resentment or revenge, but the sublime spirit of the Sermon on the Mount will be translated into the principles that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you. That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven, for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth the rain on the just and on the unjust." Or, as the apostle paraphrases it, if thine enemy hunger, feed him, if he thirst, give him drink, for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head."

The Underlying Principle.

The profound principle that lies back of all this beautiful life is expressed in the closing verses, "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." That is to say, do not live a negative life, do not be everlastingly thinking of what you should not do. Rather let the positive supplant the negative, and the good overcome the evil. The ten Commandments consist mostly of "nots"; the law of Christ is one simple positive obligation of love. Everything is to be settled by the principle of love. Is this best for my brother? Will this most glorify my Lord? What an infinite variety of pretty questions will be decided by this one supreme and simple rule. Let me be occupied with Jesus; let me be filled with the Spirit; let my heart be overflowing with love, and then my life will adjust itself to the various conditions of life; and love, like a great tidal wave, will flow into every open channel and sweep away all the barriers, oppositions, and rubbish of life.

A Mississippi pilot was seeking employment in a shipping office. Among other things the agent asked him if he knew all the snags along the river on which a ship might be wrecked. He promptly answered that he did not. "Well," said the employer, "how do you expect to pilot a ship safely along that dangerous river if you do not know where the snags are?" "Well," he said with a look of quaint amusement and shrewdness, "I reckon I know where the snags ain't, we do not need to know all about the snags that Satan sets. Enough for us to know the channel and to sail in the midcurrent of His will and His Holy Spirit's love and power, and there we shall be safe.

ELON NOTES.

Elon College, Sept. 25.—The Music Lovers' Club announces its Concert and Lecture Course for the season 1922-23. The high standard set in former years for the concert course here has not only been maintained in the list of artists secured for the present season, but has been surpassed.

The artists for the season are Marie Tiffany, Soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Co., Tom Skeyhill, renown lecturer, the famous Tollefsen Trio and Alfred Mirovitch, pianist-composer.

The season opens October 14th, with Marie Tiffany, Soprano. Marie Tiffany is beginning her seventh season with the Metropolitan Opera Company of which she has been a valuable member for the past six years. Miss Tiffany has created roles in world premieres of "Sour Angelica," "Ill Tabawo" and "Gianni Schicchi" by Puccini and in "Bluebird" by Wolfi under the composer's baton.

Besides her activities in Opera Miss Tiffany is widely known as a concert artist and has toured extensively in all parts of the U. S. and has also appeared in both concert and opera in France.

The beauty of her voice records with exceptional purity and finish. There is an ever increasing demand for Tiffany records which may be secured from the Brunswick, Edison, and Victor dealers.

Tom Skeyhill, the famous Australian soldier-orator comes in November, the 15th. Roosevelt said of him: "I would rather be on the platform with Tom Skeyhill than any man I know." "The sort of a man worth reading about," said the Literary Digest. The New York Globe says of him: "The most inspiring speaker that ever appeared at the Metropolitan Opera House." Skeyhill is a profound scholar with the soul of the poet, no matter what his theme, Skeyhill weaves his story a charming thread of beautiful romance. His every sentence rings with the eloquence of the true orator.

The third number of the course will be the Tollefsen Trio in February, the 15th. The Tollefsen Trio is composed of violin, piano, and violin cello. No chamber music organization in America can boast of so long and so honorable a career as the Tollefsen Trio. Musical America says "This organization has earned the right to be classed the foremost of its kind in the country." The Tollefsen Trio has played in Greensboro and Raleigh. The Greensboro Daily News: "One of the most delightful concerts given to Music Lovers here."

Raleigh Times: "Gave a program of rare beauty. The large audience showed their appreciation by enthusiastic and persistent applause." The Tollefsen Trio makes records for the Victor and Columbia Graphophone Companies.

The last number of the course will be Alfred Mirovitch, the famous pianist-composer, who will come in March. Mirovitch, the great Russian pianist ranks easily with Godowsky, Rachmaninoff, Levitzki, Ornstein, and Moizeiwitsch.

It will be readily seen that a rare treat of genuine culture awaits the students and lovers of artistic creation this year.

The Music Lovers' Club has no desire to realize a profit from its course. Every dollar that is paid in for tickets, it is the purpose and plan of the Music Lovers' Club and guarantors to give back to the public in the form of artists of the highest reputation. This has certainly been done this year, the price of the season ticket is $2.50, single admission $1.00. They will be on sale October 1st. Mail orders for tickets will be filed and filled accordingly. Address E. M. Betts, Elon College, N. C.

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

One person may take two or more subscriptions and have his time extended. All persons in arrears as much as one year should pay up, and then aid the solicitor in securing a premium. The name label indicates the time to which subscription is paid.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

October 8th, 1922.

The Birth and Childhood of Jesus. Luke 2.

GOLDEN TEXT: "And Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and men." Luke 2:52.

THE BABY JESUS.

"Once a little baby lay
Cradled on the fragrant hay,
Long ago on Christmas;
Stranger bed a babe ne'er found
Wondering cattle stood around
Long ago on Christmas,
Long ago on Christmas.

"And today the whole glad earth,
Praises God for that Child's birth,
Long ago on Christmas;
For the Light, the Truth, the Way,
Came to bless the earth that day,
Long ago on Christmas,
Long ago on Christmas."

Here we have the greatest of all stories. For many years before the wonderful birth of the babe Jesus, that event had been the theme of poets and prophets. For the many years since the birth in Bethlehem, the story has been told and retold but it is always new and always loved. "The Baby Jesus" is the theme of stories in song and in picture, in prose and poetry, and always bears the message of the angelic host of that long-ago night:

"Glory to God in the highest,
And on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased."

THE BOY JESUS.

"Jesus became a child, as Irenaeus beautifully observes, that He might be the Savior of children. He has sanctified childhood, as He has every other age and experience of humanity by passing through it." Hastings.

Our Golden Text presents "The Boy Jesus" as a real boy, living the four-fold life and presenting a program of living for our young people today. "Jesus advanced in wisdom"—he grew mentally, his mind was developed as he received the education which was given the Jewish lad of His day. "And stature"—the boy Jesus was strong physically. "And in favor with men,"—Jesus must have been a friendly boy, the kind of a boy liked if he found favor with men, and while he was growing physically, mentally, socially, he was advancing "in favor with God" His Heavenly Father. Jesus, the real boy, will appeal to the boys and girls of today, as one who has been a child, as one who loves children, and then as the Saviour of the children of all the world.

This lesson offers a splendid opportunity to consider the religious education of our boys and girls of today. In a recent issue of "The Church School, William S. Bovard declares: "I cannot think of any objective possible to us as a people that has such unifying, harmonizing and stirring power as the business of presenting the field of American childhood and youth for Christ, and by the patient processes of education, growing a whole nation to love God with a whole heart and the neighbor as oneself." And this is the stirring task which is our opportunity and responsibility and which is calling for the most earnest effort of the church today.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

October 8, 1922.

The Folly of Procrastination. Eccl. 9:10.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in Sheol, whither thou goest."

THOUGHTS ON THE TOPIC.

The dangers of procrastination are threefold: 1. Neglected opportunities, which may never return; 2. Decreased output, or a tragic waste of power to serve; 3. Establishing of a dodging mental attitude, which causes the individual to shirk responsibility constantly. Procrastination, "the thief of time," is dangerous, as well as foolish, and is the root of many other evils.

God wants whole-hearted service, and whole-hearted service does not dally. When Jesus called the fishermen by the seas of Galilee to come and follow Him, we are told that "Straightway they left the nets, and followed him." The best Christian service is "straightway service." "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do." Is God calling you to find some work to do for Him now? Sometimes we dream so much of the work we wish we could do or that we long to do, that we fail to find the work which is lying undone right at our side. The faithful performance of the work found daily prepares for the work of the future. And just as truly does neglected hinder future work.

"My Father, this I ask of Thee;
Knowing that Thou wilt grant the plea,—
For this, and only this, I pray,
Strength for to-day—just for today.
Strength for each trial and each task,
What more, my Father, should I ask?
Just as I need it, day by day,
Strength for my weakness,—this I pray."
EBEN E. REXFORD.

Religious Education News.

The Sunday School at Christiana, Alabama, reports fine progress through its secretary, Mr. Pressley Ingram. A recent letter contains this interesting paragraph and suggestive plan: "We have what we call the 'Sunday Eggs' plan for raising money. Every household represented in the Sunday School has pledged to give the value of the eggs laid by their hens on Sundays to the Sunday School. We have a secretary and treasurer to keep the records of this special plan. We have decided not to use any of the money raised this way to buy literature. Instead we use it to a better purpose. If a member of our Sunday School in any department does not have a Bible and is not able to purchase one, we buy the Bible and pay for it with the funds raised from the 'Sunday Eggs.' We hope to do a lot of good by having this special fund in our Sunday School to use in many good ways." The Christian Sunday School has been doing splendid work and growing rapidly and the prospects for the future for an even larger work are very bright.

"The Christian Endeavor Society of the Noon Day Church is going fine. We have several new members and the interest has increased to a great extent. People are studying more about Christian Endeavor." This is the report sent to the Field Secretary by Miss Lois Calhoun of the Noon Day Church. This church also has an active Sunday School, and its annual report showed a gain of over fifty members during the last year.

Mrs. S. B. Kinsey, Columbus, Georgia, Cradle Roll Superintendent of the Georgia-Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention reports the organization of a Cradle Roll at Beulah church on Sunday, August 27th, with Mrs. J. F. Hill as Superintendent, Mrs. Jettie Gallman, Assistant Superintendent, and Miss Harden, Secretary. Mrs. Kinsey is working to have a Cradle Roll in every church in her conference.

Several of our Churches are planning to organize teacher training classes this fall. Many Sunday schools should begin this work for the sake of better trained teachers, and more efficient workers. The greatness of the teacher's work calls for thorough preparation of heart and mind. The Pilgrim Training Course for Teachers, a three-year course, is the one recommended by the Sunday School Board of our church. If for any reason, it seems impossible to commence this three-year course at first, then some good elementary one-year course, such as "Preparation for Teaching" by Oliver, or "Teaching the Teacher" or any similar course may be used for preliminary work. Examinations on these books for classes, or for individuals where it is impossible for that person to be in a class, may be secured through the Field Secretary from Rev. H. H. Short, Bluffton, Ind., or from Rev. Short direct, and credit will be given. A certificate is given for each year of the Standard course, a diploma on the completion of the three year's work. A certificate is granted for any Standard Elementary Course, upon completion of the work, but this certificate does not apply on a diploma. Diplomas are issued for the full three years of the Standard Course only.

Mr. Charles Stephenson, of the Board of Religious Education, Prof. and Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, Mr. Hubert Rhodes and Miss Fleda Summers, all from Raleigh, attended the gathering of Christian churches held at the Bethel church, Wake County, recently. Mrs. Vaughan assisted in organizing the women's work, and Miss Fleda Summers organized a Junior Christian Endeavor Society. Mr. Stephenson spoke on the work of the Board of Religious Education and a liberal offering was given to help carry on the work of the Board: Mr. Rhodes and Prof. Vaughan also spoke during the day. Mr. W. S. Johnson of New Hill is the wide awake and efficient superintendent of the Bethel Sunday school and is doing a great work, and planning much progressive work.

The young people of the Ocean View, Virginia, Christian Church are active in the work of the church. The theme of one of their prayer meetings was "Loyalty," and the following numbers, together with music, made up their program, which may be suggestive to young people of other churches:

Scripture Reading, Ruth 1:1-18—Louise Whitehurst.

Loyalty—What it is and its value—Bennie Thomas.

Loyalty to Church and Sunday School—Verna Grape.

Loyalty to our Homes and Parents—Daisy Bell Duncan.

Special musical numbers were given by Hazel Murray, Louise Harrell and May Sykes, and after open discussion on the subject, the meeting closed with the song "Loyalty to Christ."

CHILD'S HOUR

A MEMORY OF AN EMPRESS.

BY VINCENT STARRETT.

In every man's life, it is said, there is one good story. "Mine," said the banker, "has nothing to do with banks." So saying, he told the story of "The Empress's Kiss."

The year was 1878; the scene, the romantic neighborhood of Bournemouth.

Neither circumstance particularly impressed the small boy who, from his pony's back, surveyed the world about him with the complacent pride of the horseman whose chief joy is his horse. And, for the time, at least, the pony was his own, although chartered. The horseman was seven years of age, and he was taking his riding lesson.

Near him, and holding to the pony's leading rein, rode a tall man of military appearance, and beyond this personage rode a second small boy, and then another, and another. It was a gay party, and the bubbling spirits of the four youths found escape in occasional cheers and shouts. Sometimes they endeavored to gallop their animals, but were restrained by the soldierly man who rode in their midst. The month was May, and the famous English watering place was particularly festive.

Up and down the esplanade the little party rode; the well-trained ponies trotted and cantered as the tall director ordered. When they had tired of the main road and the crowds they explored obscure by-paths, skirting the sea at times; and at the water's edge the day being clear, they looked across the waves and exclaimed delightedly at the faint outline of the Isle of Wight, dimly rising on the near horizon—a phenomenon only visible on an exceptional day. Again they traversed bridlepaths between wooded acres, out beyond the resort, where great private estates spread in trained luxuriance.

Two of the youngsters were the sons of a distinguished English clergyman, in fact, a Bishop; the others were cousins, wide-eyed youngsters from Canada, now enjoying the novel routine of English upper-class life, which included a governess and a riding-master. The military individual was Count von Dorn, an impoverished German cavalry officer, and a splendid horseman.

The seven-year-old Canadian moved restlessly in his saddle. Romance was calling to him in the warm breeze, and with a handsome pony between his knees he felt himself monarch indeed of all that he surveyed. The pony, too, rode in glamour, it seemed.

Suddenly, the leading rein was jerked from the riding-master's grasp; there was a startled cry, and in a moment the pony had bolted up the road, turned sharply into a bride-path, and disappeared from the sight of the rest of the party.

The small boy in the saddle at first tried to check the little beast that carried him, but in a few moments gave over the attempt. He was not frightened, for he had learned his lesson well enough; but he knew that he must keep his head and hold on. So he gripped the animal with knees and fingers, and clung grimly, while the pony galloped as furiously as its small legs would carry it, up into the heart of the private estate.

The path widened, after a few turns, and shortly there appeared, slowly riding from the opposite direction, a woman and her groom. They were mounted upon magnificent horses, and rode like veterans. It occurred to the small boy on the flying pony that the woman was very beautiful, and he vaguely wondered if he had galloped magically into the middle of a fairy tale. Years later he carefully checked up his dates, and discovered that even then, when the meeting occurred, the fairy princess must have been in middle life.

She was tall and stately, it seemed, and the groom who rode with her wore a green cockade in his hat—two facts which impressed the youth from America. The cockade tickled his fancy immensely. The woman was quietly garbed, yet with an air of distinction.

It was immediately evident to the approaching riders that the small boy's small pony was running away with him; not too rapidly, nor was the small boy in any actual danger, but the fact remained that he was helpless to arrest the animal's progress. The tall and stately woman wheeled her horse quickly across the pony's path, and with perfect ease leaned down and stopped the career of that speeding animal. The small boy's curls no longer blew in the breeze; now he resembled the pictures of Little Lord Fauntleroy, drawn by the clever Mr. Birch.

When she had brought the pony to a standstill, the rescuer bent coolly down, and twisted her white fingers into the curls.

"Little boy," she said quaintly, "have you lost your way?"

The little boy replied, simply, "No, ma'am!" "Where do you come from?" she persisted.

Accepting the question literally, the young man replied: "I come from Canada I am only visiting here."

Then he revealed the relationship with the distinguished Bishop, and other secret matters, and when he had finished, the beautiful creature on the big horse leaned further down from her saddle, with a smile and asked:

"Little boy, will you give me a kiss?"

She stretched her hand to him and he placed his own in her grasp. Thus braced, he stood up in his stirrups, and put up his lips. She bent still lower, and there followed two kisses.

At this interesting moment, Count Lieutenant von Dorn and his three remaining charges came into sight, moving in haste. Appalled by what he saw, the soldierly von Dorn hesitated; then he came valiantly on. There was a sharp military salute from the Count and a low bow, to which the beautiful woman on the big horse nodded a response. Count Lieutenant von Dorn, still overcome, began an interminable apology.

"Not at all," said the horsewoman at length, smiling again at the youngster on the runaway pony, "for although I have been Empress of France he is a little Emperor of America.

She turned her horse, and with the cockaded groom in her wake cantered away, looking back once to wave a bright goodbye to the boy upon whose lips still tingled the royal kisses. . . who rode homeward in a daze. Only vaguely he understood what had happened.

It is a far cry from the Lincoln State Bank, in Chicago, in the year 1921, to the private park of the Empress Eugenie at Bournemouth, in the year 1878—but this is the story in the life of Henry St. Lawrence Chandler chief clerk of that Chicago bank.

In Mr. Chandler's library there is a big book, in which occurs the portrait of an exiled Empress of France, beside which recently has been laid a newspaper clipping telling of her death. Often of an evening the banker takes it down and looks at the portrait.

One wonders what Mr. Chandler is thinking about.—Our Dumb Animals.

Christian Orphanage

September 19, 1922.

DEAR FRIENDS:—

Our Orphanage family still grows. A number of children have come to live with us this month and have increased our number to ninety children and twenty still knocking at our doors for admittance.

We have an interesting crowd of children and they are fine little fellows. A number of the largest and oldest have reached the age limit and have gone out and the majority of our boys are small in stature and young in years.

We are facing a coal famine and have not been able to get any shipped from the mines. We truly hope and pray that the coal situation will clear up within the next few weeks and that we will be able to get coal shipped. To start into the cold winter with no coal to warm our building and ninety children to keep comfortable is a grave situation.

We trust our good women through their different societies will help us by sending dresses for the girls and suits for the boys, hose, etc. It takes lots of clothing for ninety children as well as food.

It always makes us feel comfortable too, to know that all the children have clothes to keep them warm during the winter.

It is always well to start early and get your boxes up and shipped in so we will buy only what we actually need. The good women have always come to our rescue and we feel they will again this fall. We need sheets, it takes a lot of sheets for so many beds. If every Ladies Aid Society in our denomination would get up a box for us this fall what a help it would be to us in this work.

GREATEST MUSICAL LIBRARY IN THE WORLD.

Where do you suppose is the greatest public library of music in the world? It is not in Paris or in one of the great music loving German cities, but in that very businesslike, manufacturing English metropolis known as Manchester.

It was founded some thirty years ago by the late Sir Henry Watson. On his death it came into the charge of the Manchester Libraries Corporation Committee.

The collection has nearly 40,000 volumes. It began with the discarded score of Haydn's "Creation." Every known branch of music is represented. There are some 800 operas. There are 2500 volumes of piano music and 4000 single copies of piano music, over 5000 books of reference and biography. The library has over 2000 orchestral scores.

EARLY DECORATIONS WITH FLOWERS.

By Miss Julia A. Brinkley, Suffolk, Va.

Decorating the Lord's house with flowers is not merely a modern custom. When Lord Delaware landed on Virginia soil on June 10th, 1610, just in time to save the little Jamestown colony from famine and final abandonment, his first act was to kneel and give thanks to God that he had brought him safely across the Atlantic, and in time to save Virginia. Then he, with the remnant of English settlers, went to the church where they held services. The old Jamestown church, like the other structures, presented a desolate picture, but now it was about to be restored.

Lord Delaware at once repaired the building and had it decorated with flowers.

The old church was sixty feet long and twenty feet wide. The pews and chancels were of cedar and the communion table was of black walnut. The building was plain and decorous.

The matter of placing flowers in the sacred edifice was discussed among the worshippers, and they concluded that the blossoms were among the most beautiful of God's creations and they were fit to decorate His temple. That was when the country was in its infancy. The idea of so decorating the church was one of the many beautiful ideas planted in those days of beginning in the new world, and it has lived and spread until it has become a universal custom throughout this land of ours to decorate the churches with the choicest of flowers. God gave the churches and He gave the flowers, but he left it to man to use the two together in His service.

LIBERTY AND LAW.

A vigorous opponent of Sabbath and temperance laws finishes each clause of his argument with the phrase: "You can't make people good by law." Possibly not, but a law against picking pockets makes his pocketbook safer, and the law against murder makes his life safer than it would be if there were no law. The law against adulteration of foods protects his health as that against obscene literature protects his morals.

Some may not need this protection. Some housewives are so wise and careful that they detect adulterations and use only pure foods. So some men may be so well grounded in faith and morality that they think only right thoughts and repel all suggestions of evil.

Some men find no temptation in open saloons or free liquor or Sabbath desecration or obscene shows, but these cannot close their eyes to the fact that others are tempted. Some have formed habits which render these things especially dangerous.

Moreover, a new generation is coming on and is forming its habits. It is important that boys and girls who are to be the fathers and mothers of the next generation be protected against temptation to form evil habits. Laws are for the protection of society. The strong may not need them, but the weak and the young and society as a whole do need them.

Most of the outcry against robbing men of their right to drink and making them good by law is voiced by those who would profit by the debauching of others. They seek not personal liberty, which is always and everywhere limited by just laws, but the abrogation of all law.

A great deal of the talk of personal liberty and not making people good by laws is simply the mouthing of anarchy.—The Herald and Presbyter.

THE PURPOSE OF PRAYER.

By A. L. Millet, A. M.

Our ordinary ideas of prayer are quite one-sided. We think of prayer as a means of approach by which we may obtain some desired benefit from God. From this it is but a step to the further error of supposing that the purpose of prayer is to influence the mind of God in our behalf. Whereas prayer is intended to fit us to receive the good from God which his unchangeable love is ever waiting to bestow. Thus we lose sight of the important fact that prayer is commanded for the sake of what the act of prayer will do for us rather than as a means of obtaining our desires.

It is not possible to produce a favorable change in the unchangeable goodness of God. And it is well for us that this is so. How evident, then, that if prayer is intended to effect any change it must be in ourselves! When we realize the blessedness of emptying the heart of bitterness that it may be filled with the sweetness of God and of having our jangling thoughts attuned to the mind of God, we will begin to know something of the true purpose of prayer.

Collingdale, Pa.

A TRIBUTE TO SAMUEL L. ADAMS, JR.

The subject of this sketch was a son of Hon. Samuel L. and Mrs. Mitchell Adams, of Cluster Springs, Halifax county, Va. He was born at Elon College, N. C., October 30, 1892; and was educated at Cluster Springs Academy, and was graduated from Richmond College in June, 1913; and later took law at Washington and Lee University.

He was admitted to the bar in June 1915, and entered into a law partnership with his father with offices at South Boston, Va., where he continued the practice of his profession till he was compelled by the ravages of disease to surrender.

He was converted in a series of meetings held at Cedar Grove church on the South Halifax Circuit, conducted by the writer, when he was fourteen years old, but for some reason did not at that time join the church. Several years afterwards, transferring his membership to the old home church in Halifax.

It was not my privilege to see him very often after he began the practice of law, and hence my knowledge of him was limited. After his decease at the Catawba Sanatorium, his father received a letter from a fellow patient which is such a beautiful tribute to his lofty and noble Christian character that I quote it here:

"It seems a presumption and intrusive thing that a stranger should offer condolence in your bereavement, and I hesitated over the conventions until this thought came to me—" Here is a father who has just lost his son. Anything good anybody, even a stranger, may say about that son, will seem sweet to his ears. I know many good things so I shall write."

I knew Sam during the year 1918 and '19, when we were both patients at Catawba. To those who have never had tuberculosis, the fight with the disease, the physical discomforts, the spiritual agonies, are such abstract things as to be entirely beyond the most sympathetic understanding. So many of us grow bitter, so many lose courage, so many deny our spiritual hunger, even letting erstwhile strong fibers of our morals become weak. It is so easy to let those things happen, such an immeasurably difficult thing to hold on to them. The "letting go," is the real defeat in tuberculosis, the real battle lost.

But Sam did not lose his battle. If ever there was glory in the conquered, his spirit has found it.

In all that hard winter, I never once saw him lose his marvelous courage; I never knew him to express the slightest bitterness. When the rest of us were indulging in the most absurd optimism, or plunged in demoralizing pessimism, Sam was holding an even balance, trying to pull us out of our extremes back to his own rational basis. When we are railing against God and arrogantly refusing to attend chapel, he was faithfully present at Sunday school and chapel services.

I can see him now in the dark blue overcoat in the rain, the snow, the cold, visiting on the infirmary or the pavilions; his face oftentimes gray with fatigue working over some plan for the amusement of the patients, or the betterment of the Sanatorium. If there was responsibility, it was always "Oh let the Judge do it, we can always depend on him." And somehow the "Judge" never failed to manage to get it done, whether it was mending a moving picture film, to editing the "Sunbeam." In his unquestionable good humor and his whole-souled unselfishness, he was imposed upon and too often gave when his physical condition cried out in protest.

I felt at first when I learned of his death, that something very beautiful had gone out of my life. But I do not feel that way any more. Sam Adams can not go out of People's lives once he has touched their spirits. He was too good, too kind, too unselfish and fine a personality, not to leave an indelible print upon those who have loved him—and we all loved him. I have not seen him for three years, I have not heard from him for over a year, and yet he is as real to me as though we parted but yesterday. The very thought of him this day has given me new courage in my own fight. Instinctively I know that with which he fought.

It is a splendid thing to have had such a son."

The funeral took place from the home at Cluster Springs, and interment in Oak Cemetery, South Boston; five ministers assisting in the services, and a large concourse of friends both white and colored were present to attend the last sad rites of one whom they held in such high esteem.

The Circuit Court of Halifax county adjourned out of respect to his memory; and the members of the bar acted as honorary pall bearers.

The grave was literally banked with beautiful flowers; and Sammie's remains sleep in a shaded nook of the Cemetery, awaiting the sound of the trumpet that will call the dead to life again, on the glorious resurrection morn.

W. T. A. HAYNES,

Called Home

DIED.

IBBY Jane Barbee departed this life, August 26, 1922, at the age 77 years, one month, and 19 days, at the home of her son-in-law, near Apple's Chapel, Guilford county, N. C. Funeral and interment at Bethlehem Church, conducted by Rev. J. W. Holt

J. W. HOLT.

DIED.

At his home, Suffolk, Va., on Tuesday morning, September 5, 1922, Alonza L. White, aged 48 years. He was a member of Damascus Christian Church, Gates county, N. C. He leaves a devoted wife, four children; three sons, one daughter, three brothers and two sisters. He also leaves many relatives and friends. The Lord be with and comfort for the dear bereaved ones:

H. H. BUTLER.

KLAPP.

Joseph P. Klapp, the second son of the late Rev. S. B. Klapp, fell asleep, Monday, the eleventh. His health had been on the decline for more than two years. Before his departure, he assured his Aunt that all was right between him and his God. He was living in Greensboro, N. C. The funeral services took place in the undertakers auditorium parlor. His remains were laid away in the Green Hill cemetery of Greensboro. He leaves a wife, three brothers and a host of friends to mourn their loss. God bless and comfort the bereaved wife and three brothers. Funeral by the writer, assisted by Rev. Brother Clem, of the First Christian church in this city.

P. T. KLAPP.

DIED.

Sarah Sutton Ross died at the home of James M. Ross, her husband, Altamahaw, N. C., September 9, 1922, age 80 years, 11 months, and 17 days.

She was married to James M. Ross, August 14, 1892. To this union were born six children all of whom are living. She leaves a husband, one brother, six children, 27 grand-children, 8 great-grand-children and a host of friends to mourn their loss. She had been a faithful member of Bethlehem Christian church at Altamahaw, N. C., where her funeral and interment took place, conducted by Rev. J. W. Holt assisted by Rev. A. F. Iseley. Truly a good woman has gone from labour to reward.

J. W. HOLT.

DIED

At his home, near Newport News, Va., on Saturday, September 2, 1922, Mr. G. C. Wright, son of the late David P. Wright, aged 63 years, 11 months and 4 days.

He was for years a member of Bethlehem Christian Church with his father and mother. He united with the Christian church in Newport News some years ago when he moved there and was one of these beloved deacons. He was loyal to his church, home and community. He was married twice; first, to Miss Theodosia Eley; second to Miss Mittie Myra Wilson in 1891, three children survive him, Florence, Eveland, Thomas J. Wright by his first wife, and David Henry by his second wife, all of Newport News, Va. He was a member of the Odd Fellows and also a member of Masonic fraternity. His remains were brought over to Bethlehem, his old church, where his funeral services were conducted by the writer and the interment was made with Masonic honors. May the Lord sustain and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER.

DIED.

Died, Herbert C. Roney at the home of his father, Brother H. C. Roney, Alamance county, N. C., September 15, 1922, aged 39 years and 29 days His wife and one child survive him. He was a member of Long's Chapel Christian church and had been for about twenty years.

Herbert had been sick for some time and towards the end of life's pilgrimage, he was a great sufferer. But he has fallen asleep now and sweet be his sleep till the Master bids him awake.

The funeral services were conducted from the home and the interment was in Pine Hill cemetery, Burlington, N. C. We commend those who mourn to the care of the infinite Father for strength and comfort.

P. H. FLEMING.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas, it has pleased our Heavenly Father, on Monday, September 4th, to call from labor to reward one of our best loved members, Mr. J. W. Lashley, and

Whereas, by his death the Christian Church, Durham, N. C., has sustained the loss of a consecrated, faithful and loyal member. His religious life was one of deep conviction, great faith and fervent zeal. Therefore, be it resolved:—

First, That we bow in humble submission to the will of Him Who doeth all things well, realizing that our loss is Heaven's gain.

Second, That we record our gratitude for his loyalty to the church and his faithful service in the kingdom of God.

Third, That we extend our sincerest sympathy to his bereaved family, assuring them of our prayers that His grace may be sufficient in this hour of sorrow.

Fourth, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the Christian Sun for publication, a copy be sent to the family of the deceased and a copy be spread upon the minutes of our church.

MRS. J. P. AVENT,
MR. C. C. MULHOLLAND,
MR. J. L. CASH,

THE DISCOVERER.

Youth is crying in the streets,
Crying to the crowds he meets:

None has ever loved as he,
Flamed or won so gloriously!

None so laughed at prison bars,
Stormed the sun and spilled the stars!

Not a gray soul of them knows
How a heaven buds and grows!

Youth is crying in the streets
To the quiet folk he meets

—M. E. Crocker, in The New Republic.

MARRIED.

Miss Sudis Faucette became the bride of Lewis Marion Sutton, September 2, 1922, at the home of Rev. J. W. Holt, Burlington, N. C. Marriage ceremony performed by the writer in the presence of a few friends.

J. W. HOLT.

FAITH IMMORTAL.

When sorrow, care, or earth's unending strife

Subdues ambition's unremitting power,
I leave my task and spend a pleasant hour

Alone in some inviting place, where life,

Care-free, yet deep with lessons rife,
Bends like a benediction over flower,
Meandering way, and cool, sequestered bower

In which the song-bird sits his strains to life.

'Tis then that Faith, untrammelled, doth reveal

A glorious glimpse of life beyond the grave.

The awful fear of death which oft I feel

Is then forgot, and in my soul a wave
Of happiness immortal doth conceal

The clouds of doubt that sometimes blind and brave.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas God in his wise providence has seen fit to remove from our midst our beloved brother deacon, Brother George R. Maynard, we feel keenly and with deep sorrow his departure. For more than a half century he has served faithfully and honorably as a deacon of Union Christian church. His life and conduct has at all times reflected His advice and counsel has always been sought and taken by all, as coming from a heart burning with a desire that the entire human family might be brought into closer relationship with the Divine Creator, and render service in this life that would commend it to a higher and better life. In that quiet and unassuming manner he showed that he possessed a heart full of human kindness, and tender compassion, and was ever responsive to the call of Church or Charity and hailed with delight an opportunity to advance the Kingdom or bless a human soul. His kind and generous deeds, his quiet Christian life of more than four score years will long be remembered around Union Christian church and the community in which he lived.

Therefore, be it resolved:

I. That in his death Union Church loses one of its most faithful and loyal members, the Board of Deacons its oldest, wisest and most beloved member, the community a Christian life that cannot be replaced.

II. That we extend our sympathy to the bereaved wife and family and direct them to the One who may truly sustain and comfort them in their sorrow and loss

III. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved wife, a copy to the "Christian Sun," for publication and a copy spread upon the minutes of the Church records.

RIPPY-PRICE.

Leonard Phillip Rippy, of Altamahaw, N. C., and Miss Lollie Jane Price, of Wentworth, N. C., were united in the bonds of holy matrimony, September 18, 1922, at 10:45 A. M., at the residence of the officiating minister, Rev. C. B. Riddle, Burlington, N. C.

The contracting parties are both members of the Christian Church, Mr. Rippy holding his membership in Bethlehem church, Alamance county, and Mrs. Rippy being a member of Mount Bethel church, Rockingham county. Mr. Rippy is a graduate of Elon College in the class of 1920, studied in the University of Kentucky 1920-1921 and in the University of Virginia 1921-1922, and will teach science this year in the high schools of Newport, Tenn. The bride is the daughter of Mr. John Price and is a young woman of talent and many accomplishments. She has been engaged in teaching for the past few years.

The ceremony was witnessed by a few close friends, and the bride and groom left immediately thereafter for their new home in Newport, Tenn.

May happiness be their part and portion as they journey through life.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Palestine, the Holy Land.—

There are to-day about 80 colonies in various parts of Palestine, and they are mostly very well off. The Jewish people have successfully created under the most difficult circumstances, and out of territory of a most forbidding appearance, flourishing and remunerative agricultural enterprises. This demonstrates the possibilities of the country. Arab villages situated near a Jewish colony are invariably very much better off than isolated Arab villages mostly in a very primitive condition. The most important of the colonies are the enterprises of Baron Gilmond de Rothschild—Jewish Colonies Trust and Zionist organizations. They have greatly revived the vine and orange culture, introduced dairy farming, besides cultivating ordinary agricultural crops. There is plenty of room for extension, and what is wanted is capital and labour. The Jewish people are quite ready to undergo hardship and go to great lengths to develop the country. What is wanted is the co-operation and friendly harmony with the large Arab population. The Jews and Arabs, branches of the same Semitic race, and, moreover, have always got on well together. The presence of the Jews in Palestine should be highly beneficial to the Arab.

A joint committee of Arab and Jewish orange growers has been formed, the object being to secure some united action and policy in connection with the export trade. Without this united action the exporters were at a disadvantage both in the matter of transport rates, shipping, and in getting the best terms in the foreign markets. Now no orange grower is to send his produce to any foreign market except under the auspices of the committee.

The railways, although in the early years of infancy, have made splendid progress in every way. Improvements have been made from what they were two years ago just as much in the punctuality as in the cleanliness of the trains. The line joining Egypt to Palestine was, of course, built as a military measure during the advance of the British troops from Egypt, and naturally lacked all modes of comfort and security. The line is now converted into a civil concern, with the provision of up-to-date trains with dining and sleeping cars. An excellent service and connection is now maintained with branch lines, and trains are now running as far as Amman in Trans-Jordania, and are likely to extend as far south as Maann and Medina (in the Hedjaz). The Cantara Rafa section is a military railway on behalf of the War Office, and is known as the Sinai Military Railway. A new line has been constructed to connect Jaffa with the Jewish colony of Petah-Tikva for the transport of their produce. It is anticipated that several similar lines will be built in the near future. Greater improvements are yet in store.

New rolling stock is expected from England in the near future, and these new cars will provide accommodation of all classes comprising the latest and most up-to-date improvements and fixtures afforded by European railways, such as powerful engines, etc. The inhabitants of Palestine, who before and during the last war—with the exception of a French line between Jaffa and Jerusalem—had no better mode of travelling than on camel or donkey back, will now enjoy travelling by luxurious trains.

Should We Hate Filth?—

In The Sunday School Times of August 12, 1922, a Medical Missionary in China writes to ask the editor if one ought to love filth. The missionary bases his question on a real instance of contact with filth, as follows:

"I love my work most of the time, but sometimes I almost hate it when some awful, filthy case comes in, as happened this week. A beggar woman was picked up in front of our gate. I have never seen a human being as filthy. I looked at her and I thought surely this is one of the very "least of these," and I must confess I did not feel much of a thrill in ministering unto "the least of these." Of course, I felt sorry for her, and I wanted to see her helped, but everything in me shrank from touching her.

I know I am going to overcome this some day, but I wish I did not hate filth so. I wish I could realize that that poor creature was just as precious in His sight as the most cultured person. I know he sees the soul and not the body, but it is hard for me to separate them.—A Medical Missionary in China.

To this question the Editor of The Sunday School Times gave the following answer. Believing it may not only be interesting to our readers, but also instructive and helpful, we reproduce it here:

God does not want us to love filth. He does not want us to like filth. He wants us to hate it. He wants us to be sensitive to it. The Spirit-filled, victorious Christian is more sensitive than any one else to the things that are contrary to God's own nature; and there is no filth in God! For the victorious, Spirit-filled life that is Christ," and it is lived in the sensitiveness of God. Therefore no child of God ought ever to say, "I wish I did not hate filth." But the miracle comes in just here: that, while hating filth and everything else that is repulsive to God, we are not irritated by it; we are not made impatient by it; we are not made unloving by it; it is powerless to cause us to lose our peace, our joy, our love. Such a Christian can then take a poor, needy creature who is covered with filth, and minister with the love and tenderness of God to that one, not hesitating to touch even the filth, if by so doing a ministry can be rendered. And in the midst of the squalor and unpleasantness of the actual contact the life will be filled with "joy unpeakable and full of glory," the Holy Spirit will be shedding abroad in the heart the love of God, and great thanksgiving and praise will be welling up in the heart and overflowing for this priceless privilege of ministry.

All this is a miracle. No human will power can bring it to pass. But it is the miracle of the Gospel which the Lord Jesus Christ died and rose again to accomplish. It is just normal Christianity; any other kind is abnormal. It is had when we yield our very being to the Lord and then trust him wholly for this life and every other needed miracle in our spiritual life. Then our Lord delights to share with us his own very life, and others are blessed by him through us.

Number of Students Enter Elon from County.—

We are glad to know that a large number of students will attend Elon College from this county this fall. The people of Burlington and the county has begun to realize that Elon College is a home institution, and that it has many appeals to make to our people. In the first place it has standards that many other larger colleges have not to offer; in the second place it has a faculty composed of men of high standing and who are known and respected by the people of the entire county. In the third place the work of this college is known and appreciated by our people. The character of students enrolled insures pleasant associations for your boy or girl, and the man of the world realizes the importance of this last named fact.

Elon College ought to be crowded with Alamance boys and girls. It is convenient, less expensive than many other colleges with fewer advantages; it is a growing college that stands at the top among the big colleges of the south. Its president is a man who is recognized as one of the big men among the educators of the state as a man who does things worth while. There is every possible influence for good thrown around the student body and Elon graduates are recognized throughout the state as men and women of high educational and moral standards.

It is a pleasure for us to make an appeal for this college. We feel that our entire citizenship should be a booster for this college. It is our college, our home college, and we are proud of it, and we are not going to lose an opportunity to boost it. We feel that the people of Burlington should stand by this college and we know that this is going to be the case to a greater extent in the future than it has been in the past. It has grown into one of the big educational institutions of the south and yet has only started to grow.—Alamance Paper.

NOTES - PERSONALS

The Alabama Christian Conference will meet at Mt. Zion Church Tuesday, October 10, 1922, at 10 o'clock A. M. Rev. G. D. Hunt is president and Rev. E. M. Carter, Secretary.

Mr. P. L. Welch has located in Richmond, Va., and his friends can address him in this city, P. O. Box 617. He was formerly at Seagrove, N. C. We are glad to welcome him to our city.

I am exceedingly well pleased with the splendid church paper we are getting and hope to be able to help increase the subscription list.—J. E. FRANKS, Cary, N. C. This letter had a substantial background. Thank you.

Dr. Staley has not written his usual Suffolk letter for several weeks, but it appears this week, and it is a most thoughtful paper. We ask every SUN reader to give it careful attention—it is both timely and much needed just now.

Rev. H. H. Butler held a series of meetings with the church at Antioch, Isle of Wight County, Va., the week beginning with the third Sunday in September, and had some success in winning new converts. It was thought by some close observers that the church itself was also benefitted by the meeting.

Let our brethren generally, especially such as may expect to attend the American Christian Convention at Burlington, October 17-25, read the Final Notice on page two in this issue, and then act accordingly, and do it, not next week, but at once, or you may find yourself without a home during the Convention. Report you are coming and they will take care of you, and do it nicely.

Usually we know them as far as we can see them, or hear them, for there is always the sound of strange things in their thought. We know a few brethren who if there be any chance for them to lend a helping hand, it will as a rule be to some strange or erratic thought which is commended. Well, we can all wait till we gather at the judgment bar of God to have things settled right, as they surely will be when God disposes of them.

We hope this issue of THE SUN may contain one or more letters from Brother John King, Suffolk, Va., who is traveling in Europe. One of his letters contains a most important announcement concerning relief for Europe. We are loath to publish it, but coming from so high authority as the American Consul, if we mistake not, at Belgium, we must admit it, because the report seems at least semi-official. The revelation he makes is startling and to be deeply regretted. This crime against orphans is inexcusable.

"I have richly enjoyed THE CHRISTIAN SUN this summer. No man who edits a paper can enjoy it like the reader who does not see it until the paper is finished. I have enjoyed THE SUN since childhood, with the exception of the six years that I was the unworthy editor—Rev. C. B. Riddle, Burlington, N. C. It is true that the man who edits a church paper can not enjoy its weekly visits during the time of his own work as editor of the same. We have had experience again and again and know that what Brother Riddle says, as to this fact, is true.

Let us repeat that churches that have been ordering books, Bibles, offering envelopes and Sunday school supplies in recent years from Rev. C. B. Riddle, Publishing Agent, Burlington, N. C., may continue to order as usual addressing their inquires to the Church Supply House, Burlington, N. C.

"It is a gracious thought that Christ does not require of any man more than he can do. He fits the burden to the shoulders which are to bear it. He requires of each to do what he can do; no more and no less. The saint who mourns that no great task comes to him and therefore neglects the small task while grieving that he has not a greater is sinfully wrong."

FINAL NOTICE

For several weeks due notice has been given in THE HERALD and CHRISTIAN SUN of the Burlington Church's desire to be notified if you are a delegate and expect to attend the approaching session of the American Christian Convention to be held in Burlington, N. C., October 17-25. In this final notice we desire to assure you that we shall strive to accommodate all who come, but the Committee on Homes cannot guarantee entertainment if you do not notify us by Saturday, October 14, of your intention to be present.

BURLINGTON CHRISTIAN CHURCH,
Burlington, N. C.

G. O. LANKFORD, Pastor.

Dear Dr. Barrett:

Please give just as much prominence to this notice as you can. Would like for you to carry same among your "Personals" if you can. To date, I think less than twenty of our Southern Convention people have notified us of their intention to attend the A. C. C. If they are coming, it will certainly be well for them to send notice to that effect.

G. O. LANKFORD.

Rev. L. F. Johnson, D. D., has tendered his resignation as pastor of the Vanderveer Park Christian Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., to become the President of the Carversville Christian Orphanage in Pennsylvania. This institution is located in the Delaware River Valley, seventy miles out from New York City, thirty miles out from Philadelphia, on the Belvedere Division of the Pennsylvania Railroad and in the town of Carversville, Pa. The new enterprise has one large stone building with fifty outside dormitory rooms, school building, class rooms and auditorium, one six-room cottage, large barn and garage, ten acres of good land, gardens, fruit and shrubbery, lawns and playgrounds, all located on a beautiful hill and several hundred feet above the sea level. Bro. F. R. Beach, 1200 South Grove Street, Irvington, N. J., is the Secretary-Treasurer to whom all monies for the institution may be sent. It is hoped to open the orphanage January 1, 1923. This is an enterprise under the leadership of Dr. Johnson. That means that the orphanage has a strong leader and an untiring worker. He counts success, under the blessings of God, as already assured. Dr. Johnson is a Southern man and a man who must "do something," and we are glad to see that his purpose to "do something" for the Master's cause is fruiting in the establishment and maintenance of such an institution. Dr. Johnston can be counted on to do his best for the work he undertakes in behalf of the church. We wish the new institution all possible success in doing good for the orphans of the region in which it is located.

While I have been silent for the past few months, I have endeavored to do some work. Nearly every Sunday some call of public service has been met, and I am hoping that some good has been done. My pen has also been in use some, having written, and am still writing, a series of articles on "Church Folks and Affairs" which is being syndicated with a number of leading daily papers for the religious section of the Sunday edition. These notes are reaching about six hundred thousand people each week and hence I am hoping to further the work and interest in the Father's Kingdom by the use of the daily press.—Rev. C. B. Riddle, Burlington, N. C. We welcome our brother's assistance in behalf of THE SUN, and wish not only that he may continue this assistance, but that many others will join him in such worthy service for our church paper. Not only so, but we wish many others may join in the same good undertaking. We are also glad that our brother has found a larger field of journalistic service and wish him great success in every good work he may undertake for the advancement of the Kingdom.

The many friends of Rev. Alvah H. Morrill, D. D., throughout the denomination, will deeply mourn the death of this beloved brother. We have known him, and have been more or less intimately associated with him for more than forty years, and we have known him to love him through all of these years. We first met him in the Biblical School at Stanfordville, N. Y., in 1881, where we learned to love and honor him as a teacher of Greek. He was not only a strong teacher, but an able preacher of the gospel. He had some peculiar gifts. One was his ability to look after the details of whatever he undertook, and he seemed to do so without any special effort. While we were at Stanfordville, he often went on Saturday to New York to preach on Sundays. Often it happened that the boys in school at Stanfordville would gather around him as he was about to leave for that city and request him to purchase some article for them, or to do some students requested, it was because it could not be done under the circumstances, not because he other errand, and we cannot recall a single instance when he came back to say, "I forgot it." He seemed always to give each request special attention, and if he did not do what some of his forgot it. He was a strong man and greatly beloved by those who knew him best. How rapidly we are passing away. Dr. Morrill had usually enjoyed good health and was strong physically, as well as splendidly equipped intellectually. We do not know as yet the immediate cause of the death of Dr. Morrill, and yet we do know that he had long been one of the most active men among us. Peace to his ashes and love to his memory!

NOTICE! NOTICE!

The North Carolina Christian Conference is to meet with Hines' Chapel Christian church, Guilford County, November 14-17, 1922. And as pastor of the above church we ask that every pastor see that every church of which he is pastor elect and send at least one delegate to this conference.

Will you see that a notice is sent us stating how and when you are coming. We will be glad to meet you at station if necessary. Come to stay for every session, we will be glad to have you.

C. E. GERRINGER.

McLeansville, N. C.

Pastor.

A VITAL NECESSITY—WHAT IS IT?

We find in The Pioneer of A New Era of Mitchell, Iowa, the following most interesting discussion. We urge a careful reading of this interview, not merely because it is from one of the great preachers in this country, but because the subject matter is a vital idea in the development of the Church. Without it no church can become the power it should be, and therefore this interview should be read from the pulpit of every church in the Christian denomination. We bespeak for the interview a wide reading by every Sun reader, and then it should be read from our pulpits that it may reach the masses of our people.—Editor.

A very interesting conversation between Bert Wilson and George W. Truett, the well-known Baptist preacher of Dallas, Texas. Here it is—"Now, Mr. Wilson, what was it you wanted to see me about?"

"I have heard that you have a great giving church, and I want you to tell me the secret of your success along that line."

"Oh, there is no secret about it. Practically everybody in our church gives. Giving is magnified as much as prayer, for nine chances out of ten, people who do not give do not pray. Definite, unceasing energy is put forth to get our people to give."

"What about poor people in your church?"

"The poor are taught to give as well as the rich. It is not a question of whether they are rich or poor; it is a question of whether they are Christians. Every Christian is expected, as a part of his life, to give."

"But how do you keep them interested and informed on the subject?"

"We have a regular system of sending tracts and facts through the mail to all of our members. We get letters from missionaries, of whom we are supporting several, and give the people the information about their work. If the people know the facts and needs they will usually give."

"How soon after the person joins your church is he asked to make a subscription?"

"We do not delay that for a single hour, for it is just as important that they understand that giving is a part of the Christian life as anything else. On the day they join the church they are charged, among other things, to be regular, systematic givers. They are exhorted to study this most important matter."

"What emphasis do you lay upon Tithing?"

"Our whole teaching is that no Christian should give less than a tenth. Of course we do not emphasize that giving is a Christian grace. Surely a Christian, with the larger light of the New Testament, should not give less than the Jew, with his little taper."

"But if you teach the poorer people and those in average circumstances to give 10 per cent, what about the well-to-do members?"

"Ah," with a twinkle in his eye, "these well-to-do people surely understand that 10 per cent is the starting point and not the stopping point. We have many men who give a fourth of their income. We once had a well-to-do man who was very devoted, who took out of his business only enough for a comfortable living and gave all the rest to Christ. He gave from $15,000 to $40,000 a year."

"Are you able to get your business men to accept the principle of setting aside a definite portion, as well as those on salaries?"

"I can answer that question very definitely. Recently I had a very large group of our men together and I asked them the straight question,

'How many of you are giving as much as a tithe as your minimum gift to God?' and 85 per cent of that great crowd of men stood to their feet. That was one of the most heartening experiences that I have ever had in all my ministry, for with these fathers practising such fine habits of giving, I know the future of that church is established; because their children will follow in their footsteps."

"Would you mind telling me what the total gifts of your church aggregate per year?"

"Well, last year our gifts amounted to $204,000, plus, but from present indications our gifts for this year will probably reach $225,000."

"How much of that total will be used for all of your missionary work?"

"Our local expenses will reach about $35,000, so that our gifts to missions, benevolences and education, will amount to from $190,000 to $195,000."

"Why are the totals so large?"

"It is because everybody gives. We have 4,000 members, and I do not know of a single family that does not give to the church."

"But how do you get them to give these large sums through the church treasury?"

"Constant teaching gets them to give through the church. Many fine men in the church are bled and the church does not get the benefit from it. We teach that the bulk of the giving should go through the regular church channels. All of our charities go through the church. When we want to help a poor family, we send a messenger in the name of the church to distribute our gifts. This binds the people up to the church instead of to some individual."

"Please explain how you get your rich men to give so freely."

"Well, our rich men have been trained thru a period of twenty-five years. I have been the pastor of that same church for twenty-five years and our major premise is that Stewardship is a vital principle of life—that men are trifling with God, themselves and humanity if they do not give; that they misrepresent Christ. To give is to live; to withhold is to die. Hardshellism works its own destruction."

"Have you ever found that preaching about money drives men away from the church?"

"No, because it must be a deeper thing getting the money. Giving is not for the purpose of getting the money—it is for the purpose of developing."

"If this subject is taught and emphasized in the right spirit, there is no reason why any church should not come to feel a new sense of power in the administration of its Stewardship, both in the local community and throughout the world."

Dr. Truett is one of the foremost Baptist ministers in the United States, and this lesson from his own experience is of great value. We respectfully ask that our ministers generally preach a sermon on Stewardship and then read this interview with Dr. Truett to his congregation, and after reading the interview, it will be a good thing if he will give his congregation the opportunity to ask him questions on either, or on both, the sermon he has preached on Stewardship, and the interview with Dr. Truett. We are not, as a people, doing half enough teaching as to this question of giving to the promotion of the Lord's work. We need to double our teaching along this line, not merely for the sake of raising money, but also for the good of the individual members—for they need to do the giving as much as the cause needs to receive it.

Giving is a privilege that an angel might covet. I often preach on the subject of Stewardship when no offering is to be taken at all, but emphasize the definite doctrine of giving as a part of the Christ's program.

"What is the spiritual effect of your stewardship on the members?"

"Ah, that is the great thing about it. I have seen lives transformed by giving. The non-giving Christian has a bad time—he is at 'outs' with himself and the church and the Lord. Again I repeat that to give is to live, and to withhold is to die."

"What if a man comes into your church who refuses to give?"

"But the probability is that he will give. The atmosphere is there and he can't live in that atmosphere without giving. Of course, if he continues to refuse to give he will automatically cut himself off from us and go to some other church. A very rich man once said to me that we should never fail to teach the poor to give and for two reasons: First, Because it is right, and Second, if he is taught to give when poor, he will continue to give when he becomes rich.

We also teach the children to give systematically. We teach that giving is a fixed principle, and the minimum is the tenth—that some should give a fourth, some one-half, and others even more than that."

A LETTER TO CHURCHES AND PASTORS IN NORTH CAROLINA

Dear Friends:

As you know the North Carolina Conference has by referendum voted to separate into three conferences as before the merger. It will, however, be necessary to hold one more session of the United Conference in order to get everything straight for the division. This session will be held with the Hine's Chapel Church, Guilford County, Rev. C. E. Gerringer, McLeansville, N. C., pastor. The date is November 14 to 17.

It is imperative that every church be represented by a report and by delegates and that every minister be present at this session. Beloved friends, this is the Lord's work and we should give it our best attention.

Mr. J. A. Dirkey, the Conference Secretary, has just written me he cannot find time to send out the report blanks and that Rev. J. W. Patton, assistant secretary, has engagements that prevent his doing so. That is why you are hearing from me.

Pray for the Conference and for the Kingdom of Christ. Please have the church in session also pray.

Sincerely,

W. A. HARPER,
Secretary Executive Committee,
N. C. Christian Conference.

Our Public Schools.

Public schools are maintained for the purpose of making better citizens of the boys and girls of this country. The secular education furnished is generally very good, but in the schools, as a whole, very little is done for the moral instruction of the pupils. Most of what is given is by the teachers individually rather than as a part of the system. All true morals are based on the word of God. So the most satisfactory means of teaching morals is through the Scriptures. Parents should see that at least there is the reading of the Bible in the schools. So far as we are informed there is no law against this in any State in the South.—Ex.

A VERY BEAUTIFUL ILLUSTRATION.

One reason why we love this world so deeply is because we live so near to it. One reason why we do not love Heaven, as truly as we should, is because we live so far from God. Do you see the point? We shall most likely love the thing to which we cling more than that which is far from us. If we love the world and the things of the world, it will be because we live so close to it. If we love this world less and Heaven more, it will be because we live nearer to Heaven.

Some one tells us that the scientists say there is a place high up in the air where a stone weighing a ton would weigh naught. And then they proceed to explain why this is so. When the stone reaches that high place in the air, the attraction of gravitation from other bodies counteracts, or counterbalances, the attraction from the earth, and then because of the attractions from opposite places, the stone weighing a ton can be held on the fingers. You see in that high position in the heavens, the attraction from the different heavenly bodies, nullifies the attraction from the earth, and there, being held between opposing attractions, the stone comes to weigh nothing, and it is then that one can hold it on the end of his finger easily and for the reason that it is suspended between opposing forces.

In a somewhat like manner there is a place high up in the spiritual realm where our burdens become light, and like the man who holding the stone weighing a ton on his finger, seems to do so with the utmost ease. That place is where the soul draws nigh to God and God draws nigh to the soul. See Rev. 3:20. It is then that the power of God neutralizes the power of the world and we are enabled to stand in the presence of great world attractions and become more than conquerors, just because we have come more in touch with God than with the world. Here is a great lesson for us, if indeed, if we will but learn it and put it into practice. By living near to God we rise above the earth-forces and being upheld by a greater power the Christian is an overcomer, and being an overcomer, he is freed from the powers of the world and enabled to live in touch with God, and therefore, by His power he gets to be not only an overcomer but a victor in Christ. If you would nullify the power of the world over your heart, live near to God and then the attractions of the world will lose their power and the Christian will thus become master of the world and live above it to the glory of God.

ALAS, HOW TRUE!

Some one has told it that a certain boy was a member of a mission band. On one occasion he confessed that a quarter for peanuts looked as small as a pinhead, while a quarter for missions looked as big as a cartwheel. We are not absolutely sure of the meaning, but it seems to be that this boy was regarding the size as indicating his willingness to part with it for the purposes named. Evidently the quarter he was to spend for peanuts was readily let go, but when it came to giving it to missions, the quarter looked mighty large to go for missions. He was quite ready to let it go for peanuts, but he was slow to let it go for missions. That boy had the matter exactly backwards from what should be the Christians viewpoint. For missions the quarter should be allowed to depart most willingly, while for the peanuts he might have done well to hold the quarter for a time till he could be assured of the wisdom of spending for such a purpose. There are many grown-up people who look at their money in a similar way. If their money is to be spent for selfish purposes, then it goes quickly for that which will satisfy the appetite, but it is held a long while before it is allowed to go, if it is to be spent for some benevolent purpose, such as missions, schools, hospitals or orphan asylums. Let us get the matter straight and learn to do things in the right way. Let us learn to put the right value on the things we do and give. If it be for self, we may let it go slowly, not dashing it off suddenly, as if we were glad to get a chance to part with the money. If, on the other hand, we are to give for some worthy benevolent purpose, it will do us good to consider the value of the money and what it may accomplish for the up-lift of fallen humanity, and then let it go quickly to the place where it can be of the largest service to our needy fallen fellowmen. Let us try to get the stingy disposition of our hearts so that we may be magnanimous in our benevolence for the cause of Christ.

There is a great deal of difference between the size of a pinhead and a cartwheel, and the way we use the two shows conclusively what estimate we put upon the one for self and the value we put upon the other for the cause of Christ. True love for Christ and our fellowmen will settle the matter well and wisely for the cause of righteousness.

LIEUT.-GOVERNOR WEST AND THE BURLINGTON CONVENTION.

This week we are publishing a communication from our beloved brother, Lieut.-Gov. West, of Suffolk, Va., in which he presents quite clearly and even pointedly matters which ought to engage the attention, the best attention, of the forthcoming Quadrennial Session of the American Christian Convention, soon to meet at Burlington, N. C.

We bespeak for his suggestions the best of attention on the part of the Convention. If we wish to serve the cause of Christ in the best possible way, then the suggestions he presents cannot be ignored. Some of these suggestions are very vital and need the best study and development our people can give them.

At this time we wish to make a suggestion bearing upon one point in particular, named indirectly in his sixth item aggressive leadership. Only a few weeks ago, we ventured to call attention to one point in our work as a people, viz.: Statesmanship in the work of the Church. Of course we are not thinking of political methods, not at all. We are, however, thinking of the great need of men and women who are broad minded enough to take responsible positions in the Convention and then fill those positions in a way which shows their ability to do the work of real Christian statesmen in the work of the denomination.

We need men to do more than to serve as mere clerical aids. We have a plenty of men who can do that sort of work, and do it well under the direction of competent leaders. What we do really need is to have leaders who can and will put their shoulders to the wheel and move wisely and promptly for the establishment of the cause we love, and for which some have made the sacrifice of occupying larger fields of usefulness elsewhere. A few men and women have done great things for the promotion of the cause of the Christian Church, but they have been sorely tried and hindered by men who ought to have done great things for our cause, but their vision both for the prosperity and usefulness of the Christian Church and for the spread of the Gospel and the building up of the Christian Church, as a religious body, has been entirely too limited to gain the end in view. A brother, writing to us only recently, declared that our people, in the matter of selecting our leaders, have in some instances, passed by the gold and taken up the brass, and to the extent that he is correct, such choice has always been disastrous to our cause. To be a wise and successful leader in such a work, a man needs education, but he needs more than education. He needs to have a far-seeing vision, dominated by a competent statesmanship, and by that we mean men and women who can sense the situation and see what is needed to make the situation a thrifty field of broad Christian usefulness. He must be capable of giving the treatment needed. Must be able, not merely to do the work himself, but rather should he be a man who can put other men to work and so carry out what he sees is needed and what he believes will meet the demands of the field. That is the kind of man the Christian Church needs to undertake its leadership and bring to pass such things as shall contribute to the upbuilding of the Church as an evangelistic agency for the winning of the world to Christ.

Did you say, Have we such men? Oh, yes, surely we have, only we have not looked them up and put them into position where they can show their ability for the tasks which the church must undertake, if it is to accomplish its mission to the world. Look at our leaders as we now have them. You can tell, in each case, where we have had the right men in the right place. We can tell it by the fact that the work in charge of such a competent man will be thrifty and moving forward, while the enterprises which have good men, but men not adapted to the work, for leaders, you will find, is to say the least, not aggressive, not planning better things than his predecessor had planned and not doing any great amount of real progressive work.

Do you ask for proof? You shall have it. Within one hundred years we have made such small gains as now to be hardly as large, numerically, as we were seventy-five years ago. Lieut.-Governor West has shown that numerically we are now far behind what we were many years ago. If the work of the Christian Church had been in competent hands, in the hands of men and women who were statesmen indeed, and who giving themselves to their great tasks, not as a politician gives himself to his task, but as big hearted men and women give themselves to great undertakings for Christ and the Church, then we should have been standing well to the front, in point of ability among the various denominations. Not merely in point of ability, but also in usefulness and large fruitage.

We can name institutions in our denomination which have done wonderful things for our cause. Then we can just as surely point to others where there has been a virtual failure, not because the enterprise was not worthy, and not because there was not need for it, but purely, as we believe, because the men and women who were chosen as leaders were, in many instances, not at all adapted to the work assigned them. We are not censuring these men, at least not to the extent that they did the best they could, but we do blame the Church for putting such men in positions which they are by nature (in natural gifts) not qualified to fill. The successful leader needs to be a man in the first place who stands high as a Christian, and who can not be induced to hinder his cause by "peanut" practices. A great leader is a man who has in his moral, intellectual and physical make up, qualities which God put in him, making him a man among men and a leader who dares to stand for the right, who cannot be swayed from the work to which he is giving his life, not even to put some other man forward, whether he is qualified or not.

Most certainly we have had great leaders for other days, but they were leaders for the day in which they lived. We now need leaders for our work in this day. The man who was a good leader twenty-five years ago may not be at all a good leader for the present time. Are we going too far? Then prove it by showing the enterprises under leaders appointed by the Convention, who are leading in their work and showing real progress and prosperity for and in our cause. Accept the challenge if you like, but when you do accept it, be assured that you have a task before you that your brethren will insist shall be performed in the open and shown to be fully abreast of such enterprises in other bodies of like character and purpose. What will you say if you find a man who has been elected to leadership among us, and who has long been in position, while the said enterprise is far below what it was ten or fifteen years ago, when he took charge of its high and holy interests? Do not shun the question, but face it and meet it fairly and squarely.

We have men who are well prepared for leadership, but such men generally are very modest men as to their own abilities. They will not put themselves into position, but if the Church at large should call them to leadership, you would see something coming to pass in the good work of the Christian Church, and it seems to us a wise thing to look before we jump in the election of officers, and try to make sure that the right man is found and put forward. We are now near to the assembling of ourselves as a body in our quadrennial convention, and if we ever needed to be careful in the selection of our leaders it is now. If there is not real improvement in the managers of some of our enterprises, and very soon, we doubt that certain enterprises will be anything of real power for the building up of our cause within the next fifty years, and may be the limit might be put much nearer to us than fifty years.

One of our most prosperous conferences in the denomination has been led on from almost nothing in the way of aggressive work till to-day it is really one of the best bodies, if we count aggressive work and real fruitfulness in the cause for which we are laboring, and yet that has largely been due to real statesmanship on the part of its leaders and especially of one leader, and this one leader is too modest to put himself forward except as his fine work has made it too plain that he was the man of the hour. Now may we not find such men for leadership in all of our work? We believe we can, if we make the real and right effort.

We ask that the communication from Bro. J. E. West, in this issue, be read and studied carefully and prayerfully. Bro. West writes to the point and his challenge should be met just as fairly and openly as possible, for he is right and the work is calling for such men as can lead well and wisely. But our testimony is not needed—the condition of our enterprise and the slow growth of our work at large show the facts beyond all question.

A JUSTIFICATION OF CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

By A. T. HOWELL, in Biblical Recorder.

Part II

II. Capital punishment is just and vindicates the majesty of the law.

There is an innate sense of justice in the bosom of all normally constituted men that is compatible with the moral law of God, which is bottomed on man's need and God's holy character. Retributive justice demands a penalty of punishment commensurate with the gravity and malignity of the crime. Christ died on Calvary's cross to satisfy the justice of a broken law. Law is never satisfied until the penalty is paid. If Christ had not died to pay the penalty of a broken law there would be no forgiveness of sin and the gates of heaven would have remained closed against all transgressors of the law. The law is of God, and if its majesty is not vindicated, society is injured, and God's moral government put to shame.

1. The Bible sanctions capital punishment.

The Scriptures justifying the authority for capital punishment are many, clear, positive, unequivocal, and decisive.

Gen. V. 6. "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed."

Ex. XXI. 14. "Thou shalt take the murdered from mine altar that he may die."

Num. XXV. 31. "Ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer which is guilty of death, but he shall be surely put to death."

Ex. XX. 13. "Thou shall do no murder."

Ex. XXI. 12. "He that striketh a man with a will to kill him shall be put to death."

Moses, Joshua, Samuel, David, Elias and other holy men used this power and put to death malefactors. Paul in his epistle to the Romans, chapter thirteen, verse four, says: "If thou do that which is evil, fear; for he beareth not the sword in vain, for he is God's minister." Here the apostle plainly teaches that the right of the sword, or capital punishment, has been given by God to rulers against criminals. The lawful ruler holds from God the right of life and death, according to the exigency of eternal reason of justice; and therefore he does not bear the sword in vain.

Every civilized and Christian nation from Sinai till now has so understood the law, and has practised this penalty in punishment of murder. The Bible in no uncertain sound condemns retaliation. Killing in self-defense on the part of individuals and nations is not murder. Some wars are just and are justifiable on ethical grounds. War is the surgery of civilization. Wars are sometimes become the highest expression of benevolence. The progress of the race has largely depended upon war. Taking life on the battlefield is the nation's defense against external enemies. Taking life on the scaffold is the nation's defense against internal foes.

The non-resistance doctrine of Jesus is beautiful. It is a high standard of Christian ethics, and was given by Jesus to His disciples in the sermon on the Mount to govern them in relation of one to the other in the Kingdom of God. Only Christians can approach, or practice, this non-resistance doctrine of Jesus. Not until the nations of the earth are dominated by the spirit of Jesus will the doctrine be practical for nations simply because blind men cannot see and dead men cannot love.

Shall Belgium, France, England, Italy, and America apply the non-resistance doctrine of Jesus and let the ruthless hand of Germany burglarize the nations of the earth, and let silver shod despotism and golden crowned militarism dominate the governments of the earth, and an atheistic philosophy shape the world's learning, and a Christless theology dominate the religions of the world? I think not. Not to resist in this case would be a crime. Jesus lived under the stern law of the Romans, and as far as we know never breathed a word of protest against capital punishment. The just for the unjust died of crucifixion upon a Roman cross. The Bible, the infallible Word of God, confirms and justifies capital punishment.

2. It is sanctioned by reason.

Capital punishment is lawful, necessary, as a deterrent of crime, and essential to maintain the sense of national justice which lies at the foundation of all vigorous administration of law.

This sense of justice sustains the judge on the bench. It fortifies and supports the whole process of criminal adjudication. We advocate it on the broad, reasonable principle that it is in accordance with the clearest dictates of justice.

To say that the abolition of the death penalty diminishes crime is to read statistics upside down. You must show that abolition is the cause of the diminution, which thing cannot be done. Otherwise you will be guilty of the fallacy of attributing a fact to a false cause. Post hoc, ergo propter hoc. Strange logic is that.

3. A murderer's life should not be more sacred than the life of his victim.

Great certainly is mercy, but in the government of nations it can never take the place of justice. It can only season it. When mercy displaces justice, it becomes the highest injustice. For then the wicked can overpower the good with impunity, and the rebellious can shake society to its foundations. Thousands of innocent persons are murdered in the United States every year, the majority of these are helpless women. Many times there is much sympathy for these brutal murderers, and little for the innocent and helpless victims and families and friends left behind. It has come to pass that when the criminal is sentenced and executed, he is looked upon as an unfortunate victim of law rather than one who justly deserves to be punished. He has a large funeral attended with sympathetic friends who praise his noble, plucky, but untimely death. He is the hero of the hour with virtues which invite emulation rather than the guilty wretch whose shameful conduct should be a lasting example to evil doers. This morbid sympathy and maudlin sentiment puts a premium on human butchery, and bends an aureole on the brow of crime. The safety of many ought to outweigh the sympathy of the few.

4. It is more merciful than suggested substitutes.

Cain's punishment was a thousand fold more severe than death. History and fiction vie with each other in depicting the horrors of a guilty conscience. It is a cold shadow by day, and the black wing by night. It is a fire that never goes out and a worm that never dies. When the sunshine of hope fails to kiss prison walls, and the prisoner is assured of no possibility of escape the majority of them prefer death to life imprisonment. Insanity is fifteen times more prevalent among life convicts than among the others—death or insanity disposes in four years of 27 per cent of life cases. This is the estimate of authentic statistics.

5. It saves the community the cost and danger of keeping in custody victims and dangerous characters.

This proposition is logical and right from an economic point of view. There are without doubt many criminals so low and hardened that they cannot be reformed. They are ready at any time to kill the warden of the prison, and escape to commit more heinous crimes. They are dangerous, incorrigible and absolutely worthless. Why should such criminals be imprisoned for life at the expense of good citizens? The maintenance of criminals in all its history has been a great liability and not an asset. The greatest safeguard to life is its sanctity. The way to keep life sacred is to eliminate by death all who wilfully take it. Though not so pleasant, punishment is as important as reward. It is as necessary to hang some men as to build monuments to others.

III. The objections to capital punishment are sentimental and theoretic, growing out of a false humanitarianism.

We do not stay the fiend who wields the midnight bludgeon, disembowels pedestrians, ravishes women and garrots young women in secret places because we are bloodthirsty, but because society is not safe when they are at large.

1. It can be made certain.

It is true that some mistakes have been made and innocent people executed.

But mistakes are now reduced to the minimum. The taking of an innocent life on the battlefield in a just war of self-defense is regrettable, but necessary.

The loss of an innocent human life by the slip of the surgeon's knife is regrettable, but we do not for this reason abolish surgery. The deliberate taking of innocent human life by the law of society is ethically justified, if such a sacrifice saves a multitude of other human lives. This conclusion has been unanswerably worked out by ethical classes in a score of great universities.

Life may have been taken from insane and illegally responsible people by the hand of the it had been done knowingly it would have been State, but it was because of human ignorance. If a meaner, lower act than the dogs licking the blood of Jezebel. Taking the life of people of no criminal responsibility unknowingly is no cause to justify the abolition of the death penalty. Revive the scientific test for legal insanity and reduce the mistakes to a minimum.

2. By our jury system very few mistakes are made in passing sentence of death.

The law takes for granted that every man is innocent until proven guilty.

The law allows every chance to the criminal where there is the least uncertainty of guilt. There must be no reasonable doubt of guilt in the mind of the jury before a verdict of guilt is given. Then the prisoner is allowed the right of an appeal to other courts. So, by our system of criminal courts, very few innocent persons are ever condemned and punished.

3. It reduces crime to the minimum.

We have heard that prohibition laws do not prohibit the making and selling of liquor. But yet the liquor folks are all the time fighting prohibition laws. Strange paradox. We know that these laws have knocked the face off of John Barleycorn, suppressed and destroyed more than three-fourths of his business, and sent him out into the dark to carry on his nefarious traffic. If these laws were perfectly enforced the nation would be so dry that you would have to prime it before it could spit.

They tell us that the law against capital offenses does not deter criminals from committing crime, but we know it does if figures do not lie.

The enforcement of the death penalty gives firmness to the execution of all laws by a sort of radiation or reflex influence. Robbers, thieves and assaulters prefer to operate where there is no capital punishment. They can then kill their victims, and rid themselves of a dangerous witness without increasing the punishment.

In Canada under stern English laws there is only one murder to twelve in the United States per million of inhabitants. In England where the laws against murder are swiftly and vigorously enforced, the crime is comparatively rare.

In our own land the cowardice of juries and judges, the power of money to delay and frustrate the law, and a weak and sickly sentimental humanitarianism bind up the sword of justice. For this we pay a daily tribute of blood, misery and money that ought to make us shudder.

In the early days of our history too many and too trivial crimes were punishable by death, but now the pendulum has swung too far the other way, and sentiment and sympathy have run away without judgment.

IV. The abolition of capital punishment has not been satisfactory.

The objectors of capital punishment are not jubilant over the results in the States which have thrown off the stern mandate.

In every such State crimes and murder have greatly increased in number and in violence. Murder in Michigan increased from sixteen in the six years prior to abolition of hanging to 152 in the same period after forty years of abolition.

Murder in Maine increased from two to eighteen. Murder in Iowa increased so rapidly that the penalty was restored.

Murder in Vermont increased from five to 20 and the jury exercised the law's option and sent Elroy Kent to the gallows and thus stayed the wave of crime.

Murder in Rhode Island so greatly increased, and violence within the State prison became so serious that capital punishment was restored for murder committed inside that institution.

In France murder increased 68 per cent in eight years, and the guillotine was restored. In Austria murder increased and the punishment was restored.

The same is true of Germany, Switzerland and Italy. Murder in California and Colorado increased and both States re-enacted the statute.

This looks like the abolition of the death penalty leads to barbarism instead of high civilization.

1. It has led to lynchings and increase of all sorts of crime.

Lynching is capital punishment perpetrated illegally, and is a disgrace to our civilization. The number of lynchings in our country exceeds the number of legal executions. It is a shame upon us that we do not abolish lynching. It is not too much to say that if capital punishment were universally abolished our present moral status existing, an avalanche of crime would fall upon us, and lynchings would follow in thick profusion.

Wherever unusually brutal and atrocious crimes are committed, particularly if they cross racial lines, nothing less than death will satisfy the general sense of justice that is to be found in the average community of the civilized world.

2. Criminals do not dread the life imprisonment penalty as much as they do capital punishment.

Nearly all criminals hail with joy the verdict of life imprisonment instead of death. For there is hope of escape, or of pardon, because of our laxity in pardoning the guilty.

3. Life imprisonment frequently develops insanity and torturous death.

To prevent the escape of the prisoner is the first essential in the execution of life sentence, and this was first accomplished by solitary confinement. But solitary confinement usually in a short while produces death or insanity. Our civilization cries out against solitary confinement except for short periods and for keeping order in prisons.

Co-operative work is the concomitant of non-solitary confinement. This gives opportunity of escape and the committal of more crime.

4. Life imprisonment has not been satisfactory in reforming criminals.

Even the most sanguine advocates of life imprisonment do not boast with pride of the reformation of criminals.

Mr. Cotton, for 12 years chaplain of Newgate, England, said that he did not remember one instance of conversion and reformation except in prisoners who were executed.

The governor of the Portland convict prison in England bears this testimony. "I have known only two cases of real reformation in thirty-five years."

Reformation is the exception rather than the rule. About the same thing is true in other countries. Some may have a better record. According to the best authenticated statistics not over twenty-five per cent of recidivists in all countries are ever reformed.

5. It more ideally fills the purposes of punishment.

The death penalty accomplishes more ideally and more justly the purpose of punishment for murder, rape, arson, burglary, treason, than any other form of punishment. Dr. McGilvary, of Cornell University, says: "The best way to reform some men is to kill them." Life imprisonment seals criminals in crime, while the imminence of death hastens repentance and the acceptance of the sacrifice of Christ. If the impending doom of death does not arouse the sacred conscience, the atrophied moral sense, the blurred vision of judgment to come, and quicken it into a new spiritual life, what will? It does in many cases cause the convict to call on God for forgiveness. They ask for pardon from an offended God, forgive their enemies, and die gladly, peacefully, and happily. They obtain "a purification through suffering."

Our country just now is suffering badly for some hangings. After the communists burned the guillotine in 1871, France grew strangely soft and merciful, and concluded that capital punishment was a relic of barbarism, but in eight years barbarous crimes increased 68 per cent. The guillotine had to be restored.

Apart from the reception of God's blessings gospel, nothing would work more for the salvation of our country than a goodly number of well conducted, well considered, and well timed hangings. We want no hangings by mobs of brutal ruffians. We are not particularly concerned about the hanging of poor ignorant white folks and negroes who have neither friends nor money to interpose in their behalf. The hangings that would do good is where wilful capital offenses are clearly proven against men of some standing, who have money and who have employed shrewd and unscrupulous lawyers to exercise their talents to the utmost to defeat the ends of justice. There are plenty of opportunities for such hangings, opportunities that are now going to waste.

We believe in capital punishment because we believe in the Bible. That old Book speaks in no uncertain sound, "Whoso killeth any person, the murderer shall be put to death at the mouth of witnesses. Moreover, ye shall take no ransom for the life of a murderer that is guilty of death, but he shall surely be put to death."

That is plain enough, but that is not the end of the matter. God proposes to have a reckoning with those who trifle with that requirement. "So ye shall not pollute the land wherein ye are; for blood it polluteth the land, and no explanation can be made for the land, for the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it." We verily believe that God has a controversy with our land because it is polluted by the blood that has been shed therein for which no explanation has been made. Let us have some hangings that will mean something, that will make the man who is capable of taking the life of his fellow, think seriously how it would feel to have a halter around his neck and his feet dangling in the air with no support in reach. Such seeming barbarism will be a great mercy toward the innocent.

If that does not hold back the waves of pandemonium, what will?

Let us abolish the crime, not the penalty. Capital punishment should be abolished, but not until the murderers of the earth abolish it. Then will the instruments of death and torture crumble to dust, and prison cells be tenantless. The church has spent much time admiring the Good Samaritan, and little time in getting the robbers out of the way on the Jericho road. It is our duty to prevent all the crime we can, and punish all we cannot prevent.

A SERMONETTE.

"Wherefore He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them."—Heb. 7:25.

The Central Purpose of the Hebrews Epistle is the exaltation of Jesus. He is in its thought greater than Moses. He is the Builder of a spiritual house. He is the Mediator of the New Testament. He is a Saviour to the uttermost for those who come to God by Him.

Expectation of a full salvation roots itself deeply in the priesthood of Jesus. His character, the plan of His appointment to the priesthood, the sacrifice which He makes, are all given emphasis. He is "holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners." He was made a priest with an oath by Him that "sware and will not repent." He hath become a priest "after the order of Melchisedec." He was made such, "not after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life." He needeth not daily to offer sacrifices. He hath offered himself once "without spot unto God."

Jesus saves to the uttermost in degree. He can save the worst sinner. He can save from the worst sin. He can save from deepest depths to highest heights; from the uttermost to the uttermost. He can save all men from all sin.

The intercession of the living Christ assures salvation to the uttermost in duration. He lives; He intercedes. While probation lasts, He pleads our cause and stands our Surety. Eternity shall know exigency that is not met in the meditation of our Lord. Enter now into the "holy of holies by a new and living way"—even the rent veil of His flesh.

Doers of the Word.

The apostle James speaks of the word of God under the figure of a glass or mirror. He implies that if we stand long enough before this Scripture looking glass, we shall see ourselves just as we are. Its power and accuracy, inreflecting our likenesses are not questioned for one moment. Our soul blemishes, our spiritual deformities, are clearly revealed. The prayerless man is found out in the presence of truth. The careless and indifferent have a life-size portrait of themselves as they wait before the mirror of the word. The pollution and perversity of the carnal nature are discerned as we look into this "perfect law of liberty." But a vision of one's condition and a pungent sense of one's need are not sufficient. We must be "doers of the word." Truth can not be held abstractly; it must be incorporated in life and practice. To make mental assent to truth and pay no tribute to it in the soul's devotions is to invite deadness of conscience and hardness of heart. Light rejected becomes darkness. Truth that is not obeyed becomes to the soul as death-dealing error. Warnings unheeded make callous the nature. The man who hears the word but refuses to practice it in his life forgets "what manner of man he was." He loses the vision that was once his. He wastes capacity for rallying to gospel appeal and settles down into a state of inertia and spiritual blindness greater than that which he knew before he received the revelation of truth at all.—By Rev. Jos. Owen in Way of Faith.

THE RETIRING PASTOR.

We are in that season of the year when many of our ministers will be changing pastorate. What should be the attitude of the retiring pastor toward the members of the charge he has been serving, and his relation to the work of the Lord which has been placed in the hands of his successor?

It is possible to retire with a bitter spirit. This seems almost incredible in view of the profession of the religion of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the office of the ministry which should be an example to the flock of God. Nevertheless it is sometimes true that a minister retires from a pastorate in such a frame of mind as to say harsh and bitter things about those who may have been instrumental in the change of pastors, and even speak disparagingly of the entire charge, and make it as difficult as possible for the pastor who is to follow him. His exit may be so generally disgusting and unchristian as to bring great discredit upon the work of God. And the pitiable thing about the performance is that such an exhibiton is usually accompanied by a loud profession of superior spirituality. Such a person may be entirely blind to his own spiritual condition, but it is no difficult matter for even the least discerning to perceive his backslidden state.

There are others who exhibit an equally despicable disposition, but in an almost opposite direction. Such a one seeks to retain the intimate friendship of those of the charge he is leaving, to the extent of encouraging them to run after him for all sorts of ministerial service, such as arranging before hand for weddings, funerals, etc. We have known some such persons to exercise some sort of an influence over members of former charges as to cause them to run after them and pay them money that should have been paid to the rightful pastor, and in various other ways retain an improper influence in their community. It is entirely proper that a pastor should so conduct himself in the labor of the Lord, that he may retain the affection and confidence of those whom he has served; but he should discourage a continuation of pastoral relations with a church or charge after he has changed to another field of labor, to the detriment and embarrassment of the new pastor.

But we rejoice to know that by far the larger number of ministers with whom we have been associated have been of a far different character. If one, in the providence of God, severs his pastoral relations with a church or charge, every possible endeavor should be made to leave an amicable and happy feeling behind him, and do all that may wisely and profitably be done to prepare the way for the hearty reception of the new pastor, and the cordial co-operation between him and the people he has been called to serve.

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

- 1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
- 2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
- 3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
- 4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
- 5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
- 6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
- 7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

One person may take two or more subscriptions and have his time extended. All persons in arrears as much as one year should pay up, and then aid the solicitor in securing a premium. The name table indicates the time to which subscription is paid.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Pledges for the payment of money to the cause of Christ are as binding as the obligation to live a Christian life, and such pledges exist by implication if not expressed. The obligation to tithe, under the law, did not rest upon a human promise but upon God's word, but when a pledge is made it acknowledges the obligation and strengthens the purpose to fulfill it.

Perhaps nothing is treated more lightly and yet is more important than human speech. It is used loosely, and even pledges seem to be clothed with reservations based on most trivial excuses. Nothing should be regarded more sacred than a promise—the human word. The business of the world rests on promises. The currency we use is nothing but a promise on paper. The notes held by men are nothing but promises. If promises fail, the whole structure of human enterprise falls to pieces. God puts his word above everything else. "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."—Matt. 24:35. "The word of God, which liveth and abideth forever."—I Peter 1:23. The universe may pass away, but God's word remains. His word is more to Him, and to us, than the whole universe. If His word were to fail, all would fail. God could not be God and not keep His word; Christians cannot be Christians and not keep their word. A human promise is the supreme thing in human history.

Obligations to give do not rest upon large ability to give. Tithing did not rest upon large producers, but upon all producers. The widow's mite counted even more than the gifts of the rich. This reveals a great lesson. Two classes fail in the real spirit of Christian giving; the poor excuse themselves, because they can give so little; the rich lose the reward of giving because they do not give as God has prospered them. All should give as they prosper; if they have made a promise to give, as in the case of Men and Millions pledges, that should be as binding as a note in bank; if not able to pay a note at bank the day it becomes due, it is renewed, and that is exactly what should be done with a promise to pay to any church cause. Failure to pay or renew an obligation at bank forfeits credit. It can be no less at the counter of the church. The person who promises or pledges money anywhere and fails to pay or renew, loses confidence in himself, and that is the greatest loss of all. It is bad enough for others to lose confidence in us, but it is doubly worse to lose confidence in ourselves. Self-confidence, when based on a right foundation, is the strength of human character and conduct. When men keep their word, they value their word and will defend it with their lives. Men go backward when they lose confidence in themselves. There are three kinds of confidence that make up active faith: confidence in God, in others and in self. These three make the triangle by which all human achievements are wrought out. These are all retroactive. If we have faith in God, He has faith in us; if we have faith in others, they have faith in us, and if we have faith in ourselves, it makes faith active in us. As all great problems in higher mathematics are solved by the use of the triangle, so all spiritual activities are worked out by this triangle of faith. One weakness of the church is that people have too little confidence in one another. Friendship rests upon mutual confidence. Business rests upon the same foundation. The strength and love of home are here.

Some people excuse themselves from religious obligations because, as they say, they do not belong to the church. The obligation to be religious rests upon all; it is simply acknowledged when they unite with the church. The obligation to contribute money to the use of the Kingdom rests upon all men; it is acknowledged when they join the church; it is doubled when they make a pledge. There is no religious release from the Men and Millions pledge. Absolute inability to pay is the only thing that can absolve the one who has promised to pay.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

Why should anyone be troubled about miracles? Every time we pray and our prayer is answered, a miracle has been wrought. Every time God accepts the returning prodigal and restores him to his proper place in His love and affection, a miracle has been wrought.

I worship a God Who made the world and Who is greater than His creation. He can at any time change any law He has made. Whether He will change one of His laws depends on the purpose He has in mind to achieve and on whether He can achieve it any other way. Whether He has at any time so changed a law is a matter of evidence.

Three things we must especially keep in mind in any discussion of miracles. First, God is not dependent upon miracles to prove His immanence in His world. "The still small voice" of conscience has always been ample for the individual heart to know of His presence.

Second, law is a relative matter, not absolute. Laws may and often do come into conflict. The law of gravitation is that all bodies are attracted toward the centre of the earth. Relativity deposits that this is not true of all bodies, for even the earth itself is attracted to some other centre. The law of force comes along and lifts bodies away from the centre of the earth. Water can flow up hill, despite the adage time-honored to the contrary. Bodies heavier than air can fly. You say these are not miracles, and rightly, but they tend to show that a conflict of laws does not nullify law. We know so little about spiritual laws that he would be presumptuous indeed who should attempt to dogmatize about miracles.

Third, God does work according to laws which He has made. These laws in the material world we call natural. The great sciences have developed around these laws, as men have been able to discover them. Every natural law is a thought of God. And further, every natural law is a covenant relation between God and His Children, as much so as a covenant relation touching the forgiveness of sins following repentance. God's covenant relations with His children touch all their life's relationships.

However, there can never be any question of God's ability to set any law of His aside. He made the world, including its laws, and He can change it and them. He is transcendent above His world as well as immanent in it. He will do anything for His children, that they may know Him and His love for them. He is not only a very present help in time of trouble, but He is a constant joy in time of success and achievement. His presence is the realest thing in Christian experience. His companionship is our most priceless possession. Certainly He can and will work miracles, but to Him they are the natural laws of His great heart. The greatest of all miracles is His undying love for His wayward children, but this is but the eternal law of His nature.

ON THE OCEAN WAVE.

On Board S. S., Aug. 23, 1922.

My Dear Dr. Barrett:

Before leaving Suffolk I noticed in the editorials of the SUN a request for me to take with me a good pen and drop the SUN a few lines from time to time, as we traveled through Europe. I have a splendid pen with me, but I have for so long had the use of a typewriter that my pen will not work like it did before the days of a stenographer and typewriter. We are now on the last lap of our trip and we hope to land in Sherbourg, France, Sunday morning.

We have had a very delightful trip baring a slight storm last Sunday and Monday. At this time Mrs. King employed the two first words of the Sea Voyage language, Oh, My! Perhaps it would be interesting to the patrons of the SUN and especially to the rural sections to know the Mission of the International Congress to Europe at this particular time.

These men and women are chosen by their States to spend about two months in European countries, such as France, Belgium, Holland, Denmark, Switzerland, Germany, Italy and England to study international relations with Europe and United States with reference to trade conditions. What Europe's needs are and her ability to pay and our capacity to supply. It is a recognized fact that the United States can and are producing more material and especially food stuff than we can consume. It is necessary, therefore, to find an out side market for this over-production that our planters may take courage and continue to produce. For the past two years the farmers have demonstrated to the world that they were more patriotic than the rest of us. They continued to toil through sun and rain that they might help to feed the world without consideration of cost or profit. We need Europe and Europe needs us.

Therefore, the Commission is hopeful of establishing such relations that will bring Europe out of chaos and put our producers, and especially our farmers, on their feet again. I am sure it will be interesting to our people of North Carolina to know that this grand old State is represented by Mr. F. L. Williamson, of Burlington, and Alabama by N. L. Reeder, Florence; Georgia, Judge F. L. McCrackin, Valdostox; Mrs. King and I are the only representatives from Virginia.

The itinerary of the Commission will be very rapid traveling and I anticipate quite a great deal of study and hard work, therefore, I may not have an opportunity to write many letters, but I shall hope to give you from time to time a few things that will do credit to the splendid pages of the CHRISTIAN SUN and of interest to its readers.

I notice very perceptibly in traveling on this palacial ship the absence of prohibition and the presence of the new woman and her cigarettes, which are both very distasteful to me.

Yours very truly,

JOHN KING.

WHY THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH HAS NOT GROWN MORE RAPIDLY.

Having published the statistics of the Christian Church which show slow growth, I next inquire as to the causes of its slow growth. While there will be an honest difference of opinion, I believe that the growth of our church has been retarded principally from the following causes, which I name in the order of their importance:

1. Our leaders have been too indifferent as to the growth. They seemed to think our mission was to declare great principles rather than propagate them.

2. The lack of a strong organization and a lack of loyalty to what organizations we have.

3. A non-educated ministry and improper support of same.

4. A non missionary people.

5. Failure to enter the cities.

6. From lack of aggressive leadership, compact organization and sufficient publicity of a definite statement of principles. In the early years, the Disciples of Christ gathered in thousands of our members, the most of our ministers were charged with being Unitarians, and our position was misunderstood and misrepresented as to baptism, and it is now.

If I am correct, the Burlington Convention should carefully consider paragraphs one and two. I believe that the membership of the Christian Church should grow more rapidly, if we are to accomplish our mission. We can grow if we really want to, but we must have leaders, from the highest to the lowest, who believe in growth; we must revise our organization so as to keep step with the times and must fire our entire membership with a spirit of supreme loyalty to our denomination and the kingdom of God.

I would like to see the Burlington Convention appoint a strong committee of fifteen to consider these problems and the Convention spend one day or more in considering the report of this Committee. The Burlington Convention can be made the greatest in the history of our church. Will we grasp the great opportunity that will never come again? The delegates must give the answer.

THE CHURCH WILL LOSE POWER UNLESS TALENT IS USED.

Rev. W. T. Walters Says God Intended That Talents Be Used.

In a sermon on "The Unused Talent," delivered at the First Christian Church yesterday (Sunday) morning, Rev. W. T. Walters, the pastor, said that the talent that was not used was taken away, and added: "The Church must use the talents she has or lose in that proportion her power to fight and conquer sin."

Dr. Walters took his text from Matt. xxv. 25, and said in part:

The Parable of the Talents is an illustration of trust on God's part and responsibility on ours. He has intrusted us with certain faculties and gifts and is holding us responsible for their use. Christ is the Master and we are the servants, and according to our several ability, He has bestowed upon us His gifts and allotted to us our tasks and has appointed unto us a time of judgment when we shall render an account of our stewardship. The parable forcibly portrays the two classes of humanity; viz: those who use the gifts of God for His glory and those who fail to use them. The subject today is "The Unused Talent."

1. The unused talent is useless. The servant, who buried his lord's money was rendering it useless to himself, to his master and to mankind. The miser, who hoards his gold, is blocking the wheels of progress, robbing God of the use of his talent, depriving his fellow-men of the benefits of his wealth and rendering no service to himself. Thus it is with all talents; whether music, public speaking, comforting the sick, winning souls or whatever it may be, it is no benefit to God, to the Church, the world or to the man himself unless it is used.

Intended Us to Use Talents.

2. God intended for us to use our talents.

No gifts of God are to be wasted, no blessings tossed aside, and no time and talents to be unused. God has a purpose in every life, a place for every individual and a task for every man and woman. His gifts are showered upon us that we may pass them on to others. His talents bestowed that we might use them for His glory, and time and opportunities given that we may improve them. The servant was not condemned because he had not gained five talents or two, but because he had failed to use the one. We are not required to do the impossible nor to do the work of another, but we are required to fill our own places and perform our tasks.

Enough Talents to Transform the World.

3. The world needs the use of the talent.

Our country has always had its untold wealth, in natural resources, but the red man had only his wigwam, his pipe, his coat of skin and a few days supply of provisions. We have water-power enough, if harnessed, to light and heat our homes, to haul our freight and to run our factories; we have tillable land enough to feed the world and uncounted wealth in our mines. Our material progress has been in proportion to our knowledge and use of these vast resources, and in the same way we have grown spiritually in proportion to our knowledge and use of spiritual things.

"We have enough unused talents in the church, if put into service, to transform the world within the next decade. The church has enough wealth to give the gospel to the whole world any time it sees fit to do so, and enough buried or misused talents to win the unsaved by the tens of millions annually. The weakness of the church is not from the opposition without, but from inactivity or misdirected energy within. We have too many church members fishing for fish on Sunday, when they should be fishing for men, or following links on a golf course when they should be linking souls to God. It is poor altruism for a man selfishly to spend his Sundays in idleness or pleasure instead of linking himself up with the moral and spiritual forces of the community and using the talents God has given him for the betterment of his fellow-men. There are wrongs to be righted, reforms to be accomplished; there are hungry ones to feed, sad ones to cheer, despairing ones to encourage, and souls to save, and all our talents and forces are needed to meet the conditions. He who can win men in business should win souls for the church."—Richmond Times Dispatch.

A LETTER FROM DR. LONG.

Littleton, N. C., Sept. 22, 1922.

Dear Dr. Barrett:

Made my last visit to the Antioch and Bethlehem Congregation yesterday. At 11 A. M. I stood on the right bank of the Roanoke River, and preached to an unusual large congregation.

I then went down into the river and baptized twenty-four happy converts. Preached here in the First Baptist Church last night. Will return to Franklinton, N. C., this P. M., and continue the protracted meeting there this week. I commenced a meeting in Franklinton the third Sunday in this month.

Received three into fellowship in Franklinton last Friday night. Got Brother Carlton to preach for me at Franklinton yesterday, so I could come here and then return and continue the meeting another week.

I go to Ebenezer and preach next Sunday, 11 A. M., and Six Forks, 2:30 P. M. This will be my last visit as pastor to those two churches. Brother Green has very kindly agreed to serve these two churches next Conference Year.

Very truly your,

D. A. LONG.

THE DAMASCUS MEETING.

The meeting began here third Sunday the 20th, and continued till Friday evening. There were some 12 or 15 reclamations, one accession to the church. I think the church was greatly helped. Rev. J. G. Truitt from Princeton, N. J., did all the preaching. His sermons were fine, deep, clear and very instructive. Bro. Truitt is destined to be one of our strongest ministers. There is no speculation in his theology, he gives his congregation the "thus saith the Lord."

This church is now open for a new pastor. We will leave them at the close of this conference year. We are expecting to give our time next year to Danville and Mebane Churches. This church has some splendid members. This will end my fourth pastorate with this church. We began preaching here nearly fifty years since, and I am still a young man. God bless the church.

P. T. KLAPP, Pastor.

Elon College, N. C., 8-26.

PALM STREET CHURCH, GREENSBORO.

Sunday, Sept. 24 was a big day for the people of Palm St., Greensboro, in place of the regular routine lesson in Sunday School, we had a Red Letter Day. Among the features of the morning service was the excellent music by the quartet, and the noble address delivered by Dr. N. G. Newman of Elon College, N. C. We were also favored by having Dr. Newman at the evening service. Our people at Palm Street, with the pastor, will not soon forget the day. We are grateful to Dr. Newman for both of these messages.

G. C. CRUTCHFIELD, Pastor.

MT. BETHEL NOTES.

Mt. Bethel, we feel has done, and is doing a great work. Our revival meeting which was held in July revived our church greatly and we are steadily moving on with our work. Our membership is somewhat scattered, but our members are still loyal—making our Sunday School active along with other auxiliaries of the church. We are hoping for a great year for Jesus.

WM. T. SCOTT, Pastor.

Elon College, N. C.

We need to build up our publishing interests by giving it a large patronage, and that can be done, if only all will lend a hand to that end.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

THE WORTH OF THE WEAK.

A member of the Christian Church objected some time since to aiding foreign missions because it was an attempt to help "Inferior People." That which this unknowing brother declared to be the shame of foreign missions is its chief joy and supreme glory. That which Jesus the Christ did while here on earth, chiefly was to help folks who were inferior. That is the strength of the Christian's position. That is the very reason why Christianity has never been conquered and never will be. It emphasizes the worth of the weak. This is how the Salvation Army got started. It went after those who were so weak and worthless that the church even did not feel that it had the time and strength to save them. The one asset of the Salvation Army today is the emphasis and estimate it places on the worth of the weak.

Yes, the yellow man and the red man and the black man may be "inferior" to the white man (in the latter's estimation at least), but the only way that either race can prove its superiority over the other race is by rendering to it the greater service. "He who is greatest among you let him be servant of all," are words of the Master that applies to races as well as to individuals.

In his "Meaning of Service," H. M. Fosdick gives the following comment: "Perhaps most of all the missionary movements has justified the Christian's faith in the worth of the weak. When Charles Farwin (father and founder of Evolution), sent his subscription to the Christian Orphanage on Tierra del Fuego, he wrote, "The success of the Tierra del Fuego Mission is most wonderful and shames me, as I always prophesied utter failure of it. I certainly should not have predicted that all the missionaries in the world could have done what has been done (there)." As glass is made of sand, so repeatedly out of the dull, opaque material of low castes and degraded races the Christian Gospel has made the most transparent sainthood. When the Master announced the direction of his ministry "unto the least of these my brethren" who could have foreseen the wide areas of human life in which that revolutionary principle would be justified; for this is the Christian convictions which underlies the greatest practical venture of social faith in the race's history; that the outcast, down-trodden and despised are worth saving; that every son of man, however ignorant and bestial, is not beyond redemption to sanity and virtue; that there is no personal or social inferiority that need be final, and that, therefore, the weak by their potential capacity to become strong have a right to the service of strength."

And this is the way God has chosen for the strong to grow stronger and maintain their strength; by helping the "inferior," showing to the world the worth of the weak.

J. O. A.

LOYALTY TO THE WHOLE CHURCH

If a member of the Christian Church gives all his enthusiasm, care and donations to missions is he a loyal member of the church? If a member cares for the Orphanage, and only the Orphanage, does he really care for his church? I think not. But for the whole church there would be no Orphanage. And every enterprise of the church reinforces and adds to all the other enterprises. Our Sunday Schools are stronger and better because we have Elon College, and Elon College is stronger and better because we have Sunday Schools. The CHRISTIAN SUN is more interesting and better because we have an Orphanage, and the Orphanage is largely what it is because we have a CHRISTIAN SUN. God in His goodness has seen fit to link us Christians up to and with seven enterprises, or institutions, thus far. And no member of the church can be a loyal, well sounded member who leaves out of his care and love either one of the seven enterprises thus far given us. Superintendent Johnston did not give us the Orphanage. God gave it to us through the medium of our dear church. Dr. Barrett did not give us the CHRISTIAN SUN. God gave it to us through the medium of our church. Dr. Harper did not give us Elon College; God gave it to us through the medium of the church. Dr. Staley did not give us the Southern Christian Convention; God gave it to us Christians in our endeavor to reach and save the world for Christ through the church. No man gave us Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor or our benevolent idea of caring for our aged ministers and the widows of ministers. God gave us Christians such an idea through the church. Now if we are loyal to our church we will not give all our love, interest, enthusiasm, gifts of money to just one of these seven enterprises or expressions of the church—but to all.

And this is exactly what Men and Millions is and stands for. It challenges the loyalty and devotion of every member of the church to every enterprise of the church. It seeks solely and simply to create and cultivate well rounded, whole hearted, all-round loyal Christians. A prayer offered for Men and Millions is a prayer for all that the Christian church stands for, is and seeks to do. A dollar given to Men and Millions is a dollar given to all that the Christian church has, is and is trying to be and do.

Men and Millions is the clarion call to Christians to rally to their colors and stand by all that God has so far given them.

J. O. ATKINSON.

WELCOME!

BY C. B. RIDDLE.

To the sunny South, we welcome the American Christian Convention. We welcome you to that section of the country which is matchless—matchless because it fills up every blank in the United States census report. We welcome you to a land of labor, a land of toil, a land of service and song. We welcome you to a land where the sunbeams give a summer charm to a winter day. We welcome you to a land where streams make a merry prattle around the hills, and rush into streams that turn spindles that help make the world's clothing. We welcome you to a land of God's common people where love is supreme and homes secure. We welcome you to our homes, our hearts—all.

Come friends, yes come. Come from the whispering pines of Maine; come from the weeping willows of Florida. Come, yes come from the rolling plains of the west, the far away villages of the east, the frozen zones of the North, and the tropics of the South. Come—and receive our welcome—thrice welcome.

THE MORAL SIDE OF AMERICA'S WORLD POSITION—WHAT SHOULD IT BE?

(A discussion of great principles, delivered by a prominent Baptist minister, at the Second Presbyterian Church of Louisville, Ky., as reported by the Louisville Post, Sept. 11, 1922.)

Text: "I exhort therefore, that, first of all supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men; For kings and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty—1 Tim. 2: 1—2. Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone—James 2: 17.

It is my desire to appeal to the Christian conscience. I would like to reach every Christian conscience in America. There is no partisan politics in my message. I spent six months traveling in every part of Europe in 1920. I have just returned from another shorter trip. My recent journey has greatly deepened my convictions.

THREE STATEMENTS

Three statements I wish to make at the very beginning. The first is that the American nation has evaded its moral responsibility since the World War. The second is that American Christians, who are familiar with ideals of right and truth, have evaded their moral responsibility by their policy of silence, of lukewarmness and drifting in one of the greatest crises in the history of the world. The third statement is that the great temptation and the great sin of America as a nation is presumption. We imagine we are safe, immune from the general perils of the world across the seas, that our constitution is an inspired document, and that we are the favorites of heaven. We need to recall the words of Christ when the Devil tempted Him to jump from the pinnacle of the temple and trust God to save Him from injury by sending angels to bear him up. Jesus replied: "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God."

AMERICA ON THE WORLD'S PINNACLE

America is on the pinnacle of the world's life, and she is in danger of making the fatal jump by ignoring her moral obligation to mankind. We are living in a fool's paradise in our vain delusion that we can live a separate life.

There are two practical suggestions I wish to make. The first is that the American government ought to take an active part in the settlement of the great European problems. This implies nothing as to the method. Personally, I am for the League of Nations, because some agency or instrumentality is necessary, and this is already in existence, and in a way functioning. But if some other way can be found, well and good. The second practical suggestion is that American Christians should make their influence felt to this end. We Christians are citizens. We must not attempt any encroachment of the church upon the State. But we should sound the clear note of duty. We should do our best to arouse the American conscience.

WE ARE MORALLY BOUND

My reasons for the preceding statements are as follows:

First, we are morally bound to complete what we began. We did not start the World War, but we went in and agreed to help. Then we drew back at a crucial moment. Suppose a surgeon agrees to help another surgeon in a dangerous operation, and suppose in the midst of the operation, on professional or technical grounds, he should suddenly desert the case and let the patient bleed to death. The verdict of right-minded people would be that such a surgeon was a moral reprobate and unworthy of confidence.

We are making the impression upon the world that we do not care for others. We drew back from our great task at the very crisis of the world's affairs.

We brought new democracies to birth all over Europe and then we left them as helpless infants, a prey to the wolves of anarchy and reaction. We tossed the young democracies out of the sleigh in which we were escaping to satisfy these wolves pursuing us.

We crushed autocrats all over Europe and then we said to Bolshevism and Socialism and anarchy, do as you will.

IS IT NOT A BURNING SHAME

My second reason is that responsibility and opportunity go together. In 1920 I met American merchants in many places in Europe prospecting for trade. I have seen in American papers long lists of countries, European as well as Asiatic, in which there are great trade opportunities.

We are seeking to exploit the world commercially. Our papers are publishing long lists of business houses in China, Japan, India, Africa, France, Germany, South America, everywhere, and pointing out how American merchants must seize the opportunity of the new world unity to advance American trade. And yet there are Americans who are unwilling to assume any responsibility for keeping the world's peace. In trade we want to be a cosmopolitan, a citizen of the world. In politics and national life, we want to be a "little Jack Horner, who sat in a corner eating a Christmas pie. He put in his thumb and pulled out a plum and said what a great boy am I." In trade we say "be bold and daring, take every chance." In moral responsibility we are saying "play safe." Take no chances. We forget that

Though love repine and reason chafe,
There comes a voice without reply,
'Tis man's perdition to be safe,
When for the truth he ought to die.

WHAT IS THE RECORDING ANGEL WRITING

I am wondering today what the recording angel in heaven is writing in the books of God concerning our present behavior as a nation. I am wondering what the dispassionate historian one hundred or two hundred years from now, when all the clouds of passion and conflict shall have passed—what the historian will be compelled to write concerning us. If some of the present tendencies continue, if no new moral power is aroused to resist the present pettiness and selfishness, the future historian will have to say some things like the following:

America prayed and fought that the governments of the world should be democracies and assisted at the birth of a score of new democracies, and then turned her back upon them. She helped to bring them forth and then repudiated her own offspring. She saw those new-born peoples trying to learn their new art of how to govern themselves; saw them half blinded and dazed by the new light of liberty; saw them by famine after four years of nonproduction; saw them in deadly peril of anarchy and internal forces of destruction; saw them battling for their very lives in a stormy sea of unrest and lawlessness; saw them doing all this when they had been bled white with four years of loss of blood, and while she looked on, she passed by on the other side, perpetuating the unrest, prolonging the great tragedy. Men say we fiddled while Rome burned. It is worse than that. We played tiddletwinks while the world burned.

THE WORLD HOPELESS WITHOUT AMERICA

My third reason is that the present European situation seems hopeless without America's influence. We are familiar with the failure of the recent conference at Genoa, at The Hague, and at London. Two great voices have recently been raised in England for the enlistment of the Christian conscience of the world. Dr. J. H. Jowett, the great Non-conformist preacher of London, has recently made a heart-breaking appeal to Christians of the world to arouse themselves. Lloyd George has put the case in an address recently to a group of Christians with the minor note and all the tragic impressiveness of one of the old prophets of Israel. He said the drift in Europe is toward another war. Another war means the doom of civilization. He repeated the word to impress it. "I tell you, my friends, if we get into another general war, civilization is doomed, doomed, doomed!"

America's voice has the one needed influence. Our chief asset is that our influence based upon the conviction, in European minds, of our disinterestedness. I offer no solution of the European problem. Probably no American today knows what is the true solution. I am simply trying to find the solution.

PHYSICAL AND MORAL UNITY

My fourth reason is that the physical unity of the world creates a moral unity. There is no escape from this. A hundred years ago the world life was many organisms. Today it is one organism with one nervous system. Then the world was like a block of clay. You could strike and dent it. Today it is a block of marble. A slight blow vibrates to its utmost extremity.

Every international question today it at bottom a moral question because of world unity. The economic unity of the world involves the whole question of justice and fair play in world trade. The political life of the world is not a legal unity, but mutual obligations between nations make that life a moral unity. Even the physical health of the nations involves a deep moral unity and mutual responsibility. A religious devotee crosses Asia Minor on a pilgrimage, drinks the poisoned waters of the sacred pool at Mecca, contracts Asiatic cholera, and upon his return communicates the disease to others. And then the health organizations of all nations begin to function to prevent the spread of the disease. Only the morally blind can fail to see the close interdependence of all the parts of the world upon each other.

ALTRUISTIC STATESMANSHIP

My fifth reason is that in the world's life today enlightened altruism is the highest statesmanship and the best politics. A great many politicians would become great if they could have a moral vision and let the law of right dominate their course. They are constantly trying to do the expedient thing, or the shrewd thing, or the adroit and skillful thing in order to circumvent their foes, and they are constantly reaping what they sow, the reprobation instead of the approval of men. There is one path that leads to the heights of fame and glory for the political leader, and to the heights of progress for mankind, and that is the path of unselfishness and of right. The political leader with an eye clear enough to see this path, and courage and strength of purpose to follow it is the hero of posterity. Mankind never forgets the great men whose greatness took the form of service coupled with sacrifice and courage. America with her glorious history will never unfold her eagle wings and soar to the heights of her destiny until she rises to the demands of the great moral vision.

Finally Europe presents the greatest civic and spiritual opportunity in human history. Our highest contribution is our ideals. Europe is hungry for new spiritual forces. She is weary of state churches, of autocratic states, of kaisers and autocrats. If, as Whitelaw Reid has said, the rise of the American nation is the greatest fact of modern times, then the failure of America to fulfill her destiny of service to mankind will be the greatest disaster of modern times. May God give us vision and faith and courage, for these and these alone can light the path which leads to God's great purpose for our nation.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

October 15th, 1922.

Subject: "The Ministry of John the Baptist."
—Luke 3: 1-38.

Golden Text: "Repent Ye; for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand."—Matt. 3: 2.

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 40: 1-11; Philemon 2: 5-11.

Reference Material: Matthew 11: 2-19.

LESSON TEACHINGS.

"A VOICE IN THE WILDERNESS." About thirty years had passed since the hearts of Zacharias and Elisabeth were gladdened by the birth of a son. The Gospel writers tell us very little of this period. But we are told that the "child grew and was in the deserts till the day of his showing unto Israel." In the wilderness he prepared for his great life work. Here he became fitted to prepare the way for the Christ. Evidently there in solitude and in communion with God, the needs of the people were so indelibly impressed upon his mind and heart that he could do nothing but go forth to preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins. Emerson once said: In the woods we return to reason and faith." God teaches many a lesson in His out-of-doors.

"WHAT THEN MUST WE DO." It is supposed to have been the Sabattic year when John started to preach, and a multitude of people, released from business and agriculture, thronged to hear and be baptized by John. The earnest message touched their hearts, and their sincere query was, "What the must we do?" John's counsel was practical. He told to each something definite he could do. He bade the publican, or collector of dues, to be just and fair. He urged the soldier to be merciful and contented. He admonished all the people to be generous and kind in their dealings. Obedience to the advice of John the Baptist would solve many social problems to day. To teach, presenting truths adapted to the needs of the hearers, bears fruit in uplifted lives. Do we discuss lessons in our Sunday School classes which make our lives better throughout the week?

"ONE MIGHTIER THAN I COMETH." John was a loyal servant. His first thought was always of His Master. Above all, there was the deepest earnestness, the most utter disregard of man, the most firm belief in what he announced. For himself he sought nothing; for them he had only one absorbing thought: The Kingdom was at hand, the King was coming—let them prepare!"—(Edersheim.) One of the outstanding characteristics of John's life was his humility, and because of this lowliness of spirit he was able to render a large service.

"JESUS ALSO HAVING BEEN BAPTIZED." There is a very great lesson for us in this act of submissive obedience on the part of our Saviour. This was the last act of His private life, and from it He went forth to be about His Father's business in a public way. He went with prayer, for we are told that he was praying in the baptismal service. He went with His Heavenly Father's expressed approval: Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased." God will also be well pleased with His children to-day if they listen to His word and endeavor to follow the example of His Son.

"Do we live so close to the Lord today,
Passing to and fro on life's busy way,
That the world in us can a likeness see
To the Man of Calvary?"

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

For October 15, 1922.

Topic: "True Patriotism, What It is and What It Does. —Isaiah 1: 16-20.

In all Young People's Societies, October 15th will be observed as Citizenship Day." The whole program should be one that will be an appeal to Christian patriotism. Flags and other decorations in the room will emphasize the lesson. Patriotic songs will be part of the program. Discussion of how your city, town or countryside may be improved, and what part of this work your Christian Endeavor Society is responsible for should take part of the time. Make the meeting one that will not end with the Mizpah at the close, but will start a movement that will mean something.

A fitting illustration of the meaning of the topic is given in the words of Charles R. Erdman: "I have a wealthy friend in Paris who is spending money not very wisely, but not very wickedly. Some of his acquaintances suggested to him that it would help him socially and give him more prestige, if he could go to America and induce the President to appoint him as a member of our American embassy in Paris. So he came to Washington and went to see the President. He spoke the little speech that he had prepared to give, beginning by saying, "I think that I could serve my country, perhaps, if I should have this appointment in Paris." The President spoke right up: "My young friend, a man desiring to serve his country does not begin by saying WHERE he is going to serve." True patriotism begins with service at home. The true patriot is always loyal and looking for chances to do good.

There are many Biblical examples of true patriots, as the bold Amos, Amos 5:1-15, or the faithful Jeremiah, Jer. 28: 1-17, or the devout Nehemiah, Nehemiah 1.

"Our country is the world—our countrymen are all mankind."—William Lloyd Garrison.

"There are no points of the compass on the chart of true patriotism."—Robert C. Winthrop.

PLANNING THE CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR MEETING PROGRAM

"A meeting without a program is like a ship without a rudder. The meeting drifts slowly to nowhere. Do not expect success without thought, planning, and care in preparation. We get no real training out of unprepared meetings. The benefits come to us through our own efforts.

"Start the meeting on time. Close on time. Run every part of the program on schedule. Do not drag the program in order to fill the time.

"Hold a ten-minute prayer service preceding the devotional meeting. Invite the officers of the society and members of the prayer meeting to gather in this meeting with the leader.

"Be thoroughly prepared for the meeting. Be brief. If prepared, you will be brief.

"Four things constitute a good prayer meeting leader: Prayerfulness, patience, promptness and point."—The Devotional Meeting Annual.

A DEDICATION

Dear Christian Sun:

I left my home on Friday, September 15th, for Pisgah, Ala., which is in Jackson county. Here Rev. J. W. Elder has, by the aid of his co-laborers, erected a nice new church building. The object of my visit was to dedicate this new building.

I was met at Valley Head by Bros. Elder, Gaither and Thomas. After a ride of some 14 miles, over a very rough road, we arrived at Bro. Elder's home, where without much ceremony we retired for the remainder of the night.

Saturday morning Bro. Elder and I went over to the new church to hold service at 11 A. M. We held a very sweet service that day and I met and formed the acquaintance of a great many people, and I found among the number many of my friends of the "long ago."

To me it was almost like going home, so many faces I had seen before—among whom I desire to make special mention of Mrs. Fannie Lett, who in the long ago was a member of the church at Pleasant Grove in Chambers county. She is totally blind now, but is happy on her way home. May the Lord bless and comfort her. She resides with her brother, who is a Baptist preacher, Rev. M. A. Johnson. I went into the home and had a sweet season of prayer with the family. I preached, in all, six sermons. We had large crowds and good order. Every one seemed to enjoy the services, and especially so on Sunday.

The day was fine and the people came in great numbers. The music was of high order. At 11 A. M., after the opening song, Rev. Bro. Wisener lead the opening prayer and then Rev. J. W. Elder gave an historical account of the church and the building. The house was a little more than two months in building. It is paid for and they have funds on hand sufficient to do the painting, in fact the paint has already been ordered.

It was a day of great rejoicing and Bro. Elder was exceedingly happy because he realized his labors were not in vain. And now, in this new county, he has a comfortable church home, and there are being added to the church some of the best citizens of Jackson county, which in my judgment is one of the best sections of our great state. The land is rich and fresh, makes abundant crops of almost everything humanity needs, and is populated by honest and industrious white people. Surely a bright future awaits this church. If our people could see for themselves the situation, we would all be glad of what we have done for our North, Ala., mission field, and especially our Women's Missionary Societies, which have helped so liberally this year. The church needs a bell. I wonder how many men and women who would like to have a part in purchasing one for this church? I would like to see our people of this Southern Convention make this donation; men, one dollar or more; women, fifty cents or more, and children any amount. I want to give the first dollar. Send your gift to Rev. J. W. Elder, Pisgah, Ala.

Yours in His name,

G. D. HUNT.

CHILD'S HOUR

THE FUSSING PLACE

I have to go to the Fussing Place
 When I am very bad;
 And mother has such a sorry face,
 And her eyes look sad.
 But she says in just the firmest tone,
 "The boy that fusses must stay alone."
 When I have been bad.

At first I pretend I do not care,
 And I hum a tune
 And walk off with my head in the air;
 But pretty soon
 I begin to hate the Fussing Place,
 And to be there seems a great disgrace.
 So I stop my tune.

And then I think of mother's eyes
 With that sorry look;
 And soon I think it is time to surprise
 Her over her book.
 So I hunt up a smile and put it on (For I can't come out till the frowns are gone.)
 How happy she'll look!

The Fussing Place? Oh, its where you're sent
 When you are naughty and mean.
 And there you must stay till you're good again
 And fit to be seen.
 It's up in the attic or under the stairs
 Or seated on one of the kitchen chairs.
 And oh, you feel mean!

But it doesn't matter much where it is—
 This old Fussing Place—
 For the very spot that seems so bad
 When you're in disgrace,
 It's nice enough when you're loving and true.
 So it's not where you are, but how you do,
 That makes it a Fussing Place.
 —Exchange.

THE ROADSIDE SERMON

An old man, holding at the end of a long halter strap an old horse, stood one sunny afternoon at a point where a country lane joined a great highway. The horse nibbled at the grass by the roadside. Immediately behind the man an old dog sat. Automobiles whizzed by, an endless procession.

And it chanced that day that a big touring car, in which were two men, two women and a child, stopped near the place where the old man and the old horse and the old dog were, and its driver was unable to make it go again. The sun blazed down fiercely, and the driver, in his efforts to adjust the difficulty, was soon in a sweat, both physically and mentally. The old man, followed by the horse and the dog moved forward.

"Better let me pull you into the shade," he suggested.
 "Bless your heart," said the driver, wiping the sweat from his eyes, "go ahead."
 So, improvising a harness from a rope included in the equipment of the touring car, the old man hitched the old horse to the machine and drew it into the shade.

"Sometimes it seems to me," spoke the old man then, addressing the smiling woman and the frankly grateful men, "as if every living thing was dependent upon every other living thing. It is hard, maybe, to understand it in the broad sense—covering all animal kind, I mean—but if it is true in one instance, it must be true in many. None of us are justified in holding ourselves quite independent of the other animal forms in our creation. Everything, even an old horse, is worthy of our respectful and kind consideration. Yes, and even an old dog, too."

The child—a little girl—had stepped out of the automobile, and, in answer to something in the old man's eyes, had gone to him and taken hold of his hand. He beamed down at her.

"I am going to prove to you what I said about the dog," he chuckled. "The horse has already proved himself. You are thirsty, aren't you?"

"Dreadfully," admitted the child. "So is mamma and all of us."

"I knew it." The old man pointed up the lane. "See that house yonder, with the red barn behind it? That is where we live, the horse and the dog and I and some "two-legged" folks I think a heap of. Well, in a house up there is a gallon or two of ice-cold buttermilk. Like buttermilk?"

"Yes," came in fervent chorus from the entire party.

"All right." The old man took a book from his hip pocket, tore a leaf from it, and with a stubby pencil wrote a message. Then he called the dog to him and fastened the message to the animal's collar. "Now, Bub," he ordered, "you streak it for home and mother." He waved his hand toward the house, and the dog, wagging his tail frantically and barking, sped in a circle around the horse and was off in a cloud of dust.

"I don't know, I am sure, what I should do if I didn't have that dog to help me," laughed the old man, his eyes affectionately following the cloud of dust. "Now we'll see what happens."

Ten minutes later another cloud of dust appeared in the lane, and presently two bare-footed boys, one carrying a covered bucket, and the other bearing a tray upon which were a number of glasses under a snow-white napkin, arrived on the scene, trudging, grinning, far behind the excited dog.

"My grandsons," said the old man. "They and some of the rest of us run the farm, and amongst us two-legged ones and the four-legged ones we have heaps of fun." He held up a hand. "No, not a cent. Glad it tasted good to you. You happened to be dependent on us this afternoon, that's all."

The driver turned again to the engine, and of a sudden it began to whirl. The child ran to the car, and in a minute, with a wavering of hands and calling of good-byes, the party was on its way again.—Our Dumb Animals

Christian Orphanage

OUR ORPHANAGE

Dear Friends:

We have very encouraging letters from our two girls who went to the hospital in August to take training to be nurses. One of them in Watts Hospital, Durham, and the other in Lake View Hospital, Suffolk, Va. Just a little while and they will have finished their probation period and if accepted will enter on their regular course. It always fills our heart with joy and delight to see the children who go out from here make good. These two girls came to us when little tots and were faithful in their duties in the institution and went out from us with the best wishes of every one in the institution. When they shall have finished their training and go out in life to nurse the sick, I feel sure they will do their best to be faithful and bring credit upon the institution that cared for them in their young and tender years and made it possible for them to have a chance in life.

Two beautiful little girls came to us last week, father and mother both dead and we are happy that we had room for them. They are just as nice and sweet as they can be and have already won their way into the hearts of all the children.

If your church folks could just visit this orphanage and see the children and the great opportunity they have to visit the fatherless in their affliction, I feel sure your superintendent would not have to plead from week to week for funds to care for our large family of little children.

My friends, remember us in your prayers and back up your prayers with your help. The burdens of taking care of ninety orphan children with applications coming to us nearly every day pleading for a place is not a small thing.

When our income runs but a little more than a hundred dollars per week to care for nearly one hundred children we sometimes feel that you have forgotten us.

I sometimes think if I had the millions of Henry Ford or John D. Rockefeller, that I would have lots of fun spending it. I would give every little helpless orphan who is worthy and needy and without a chance in life a home and an opportunity to be able to stand shoulder to shoulder with other boys and girls who had not been so unfortunate.

Superintendent.

MUNCIE, INDIANA, LETTER.

Through the courtesy of Rev. A. B. Thornburg, pastor of the Christian Church at Powers Station, Ind., I was permitted to preach for them last Sunday afternoon. It was the occasion of their Home-Coming service. They have a beautiful house of worship and a fine congregation. It was an all-day occasion and a good home made orchestra led the music. We returned here in time for our evening Christian Endeavor meeting and church service. I find some difference between methods and organizations here and in the South. Sometimes I have felt that there is almost as much difference as exists between some denominations. It may not be offensive to those this way who may happen to read this for me to say that, I find conditions here in the Middle West that existed in my mother conference in the South during my early ministry. I recall that down in Eastern Virginia one Saturday I met a brother on the road driving about forty miles across the country to a point near my home to fill an appointment the next day and to visit his parishioners, while I was driving the same distance to reach a point near his home to render the same kind of service. That was before automobiles came into use, with good roads, and forty miles then with horse and buggy would equal possibly a hundred and fifty today with good roads and automobiles.

A minister of large vision, progressive ideas, and practical sense urged the grouping of the churches into pastorates, but his suggestion was met by bitter opposition, and strange to say by ministers. But the agitation, and educational processes, continued until most of the churches of that Conference are grouped into compact pastorates. Another point of difference is in organization, and College trained men for leadership, and this is no reflection on the great number of fine men this way who are sweet-spirited and loyal, and are carrying the burdens of the work. At the last session of the Eastern Indiana Conference four finely equipped men were received into membership. Another difference is that a much larger number of pastors in this part of our territory devote a part of their time to other lines than we find in the South, while yet another difference is that the South during the past twenty five years has carried its greatest effort to the centers of population and interest, while in the Middle West we are almost exclusively a rural people. In this Conference of about seventy eight churches and eighty four years of history there are only three or four city churches, and most of them are small organizations. The work in the South is more strongly organized, with a much larger number of college trained men as pastors than in the Middle-West. However, the pastors that I have met are worthy and devoted men and women and are doing faithfully a necessary work.

I have just finished my second year here, with the First Christian Church. We have a splendid house of worship and when improvements now being made are finished our building will compare with the best in the city and which is possibly the best church architecture in the city. Since coming to this work we have organized a C. E. Society of about thirty young people, a Missionary society of twenty-four, with a Mission Study Class, a Junior C. E. Society, and an Intermediate C. E. Society, have created an Official Board in the church, and established quarterly business meetings. They had held but one business meeting in two years at the time I came. The work has naturally been slow and most difficult but progress has seemed steady and permanent.

The ministers and people of this conference, and of this city, have been cordial and most friendly. In the Ministerial Association of this city almost every denomination, including the Universalist, are represented and a fine spirit of cooperation among the churches exists.

It might be of interest, and suggestive to some, to know that during our forenoon service on Sunday, our Intermediate and Junior Societies, conduct, each, a service in separate rooms.

MURDOCK W. BUTLER

Muncie, Ind., Sept. 23, 1922.

FIXITY OF CHARACTER.

Fixity of character is one of the main theories of psychologists, especially for people beyond the age of twenty-five. According to this theory, old age would be notable for the lack of changes in deportment. Without a doubt, many aged persons do retain the main lines of interest which they have pursued through life. But is not old age also a time for marked differences in behavior?

Who has not known active men to become passive? Sweet-tempered people to become embittered and cynical? Generous folks to become stingy in old age? Workers with children have been irritated into becoming haters of children. Church-going people have ceased to attend the sanctuary.

Immediately the defense arises to say that with bodily infirmities many activities become impossible. This is granted freely. This fact is an adequate reason for many changes, but not for all.

Old age sees the departure of many motives which were active through the early and middle period of life. Old age is the final test of a man's genuine sincerity. It shows where he has really lived in his soul. Life's motives are so mixed through the years that not until old age removes many of them can it be determined what a man truly cherishes in the inner citadel of his being. Just as leisure is considered as a test for character to a certain degree, so is old age. What a man does in his leisure hours indicates quite largely to what his life is committed. So an old man's conduct is a barometer showing the moral pressure of his career.

If a man has built on the foundation of his life a structure of hay, or stubble, he will be revealed in this day of fire—old age. Small and inconsequential motives will have been burned out by that time. If he has built a house of stone or of gold, he will see the structure stand, even in old age. Just what do we mean?

Here is a young man who starts out to work with zeal because of selfish ambition. By the time he reaches old age he will either have been disappointed in his ambition, or will have become successful, and possibly satisfied. Ambition may be a spur to labor, but ambition as a motive is burned out in old age. Unless effort is based on some more fundamental principle, it will cease at the close of life. Just why do we work to-day? Is it simply to earn a living? Is it to make headway in the world? Or is it to be of real service to others? The man who starts out to work for Christ and for men will find something to be done up to his dying breath. His old age will not be marked by semi-parasitical living; but with whatever energy he possesses, he will labor to the end.

Old age is a fiery test of stewardship. As long as a man sees money coming regularly into his pockets, he can afford to be generous with it. But old age means for most men a radical reduction in income, grave uncertainty for the future, and possible helplessness before death. Did that man in middle life give simply because others were giving? Did he make a subscription in order to be rid of the solicitor? Did he pay out with ostentation so that others might see and applaud? In old age he will find his motives gone and his soul shriveled. Unless a man learns stewardship in his heart; unless he has faith that God will keep him as a shepherd cares for the sheep, he will not be able as an old man to maintain that beautiful spirit of giving. He may be obliged to reduce the amount because of a similar reduction in his own income, but he will not reduce his spirit to the level of a tightwad. A man's last will and testament is becoming more and more a bill of judgment.

Unwilling parents of children will find their grand-children almost unbearable, unless their hearts have been converted meanwhile. Proud parents make tender grand-parents. And is this characteristic not also an item in the judgment? Those who shall so soon make their appearance before the great white throne to be judged according to the deeds done in the body ought to recall the words of Jesus concerning little children. Those words are comforting to some and menacing to others. Old age is a fiery test of one's attitude toward children. Necessity may be past, but choice now gets its inning.

No personality is more inspiring than an elderly man or saintly woman who, by their conduct as true Christians, up to the very last show the inner springs of the divine life. Having left their official positions, they are still deeply concerned for the victory of the kingdom of God.

CHRISTIANITY VERSUS COMMERCE.

Completing my devotions I rose from my knees and seated myself that I might feast my eyes upon the art windows and mural paintings. I was visiting in the city and naturally wanted to see a church about which I had heard so much. Seated away in the rear, in a dark corner, I was in a position to view the windows as the morning sun shone through them. The first window was dreadfully disappointing and prejudiced me against all the others. I tried to look elsewhere and forget what I had seen, but it was impossible.

The window referred to contained a large and, with one exception, delightfully conceived "I H S" monogram; but, viewed from a distance, it reminded one of the $ mark. The H was light and shadowy while the I and S were elongated and stood out in heavy relief. The two letters (superimposed) reminded one of the stroke passing through the S to make the $ sign. I wanted to examine the other windows closely (for really that church is known far and wide as one in which sacred art is exemplified), but the effect of the sacred emblem made to look like the $ mark was so revolting that I was constrained to rush out into the open.

Back in my room at the hotel I mused over the matter in a calmer frame of mind. I felt sure that the commercial taint had not invaded that particular church, for I know something of its spiritual life; but what of the impression that $ mark must make upon pilgrims not so informed? I am glad that I do not know the name of the artist, nor yet of the manufacturer responsible for placing such a window!

ELLA N. SHIFLETT.

Ella N. Shiflett, wife of John W. Shiflett, departed this life September 5, 1922, at the age of 64 years, 10 months, and 7 days. Sister Shiflett was a faithful member of Antioch Christian Church, and was a devoted Christian woman, a good neighbor, wife and mother. She leaves to mourn her departure her husband, five sons, and two daughters. She will be greatly missed, but she has left a good example for her children and others to follow. Funeral services were held at the Menonite Church at Mt. Clifton, September 7, 1922.

JAMES A. WOTRING.

James A. Wotring was born November 28, 1857, and died September 14, 1922. His age was 64 years, 9 months, and 16 days. His home was broken up because of his and his wife's all-health, and her death last November. For a year or more he made his home with his sister near Hayfield, Va., and his death occurred there. He is survived by one son, two sisters, and one brother. Bro. Wotring was a faithful member of the Timber Ridge Christian Church, as was also his wife, and both were highly esteemed by a large circle of friends. Funeral services were held at Timber Ridge, September 17, 1922.

OBITUARY NOTICE

Brother F. H. Daniel, an aged and well known citizen of New Bethel Township, died at his home on Saturday, September 16th, at the ripe old age of ninety years. Bro. Daniel was a member of Mt. Bethel Christian church, and was an upright christian gentleman. He was loved by all who knew him.

Funeral services were conducted from the Flat Rock M. P. Church in Guilford county by the writer, and interment followed at the church cemetery. Six daughters and one son, and a number of grand-children and great grand-children mourn his loss. May God comfort them in their sad hour.

IN MEMORIAM

On Wednesday, August 28th, 1922, at Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va., the spirit of James H. W. Bridger took its flight and entered into the presence of his God that gave it. Age 59 years, 1 month, 2 days.

He was a consistent member, a consecrated deacon and the treasurer of Antioch Christian Church, Isle of Wight County, Va.

He had served as teacher of the Men's Bible Class of the Sunday School for a number of years.

He was a resident of Isle of Wight county near Antioch Christian Church from his birth.

He was a very quiet, pious, christian man, and highly respected and loved by his fellow citizens.

Therefore be it resolved, in behalf of the Sunday School and Church:

1st. That Antioch has sustained a great loss in the death of this brother.

2nd. That we thank our Heavenly Father for the beautiful character of his life.

3rd. That we extend our heart-felt sympathy to the bereaved wife and children, and commend them to their Heavenly Father for sustaining grace in their sorrow.

4th. That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, that one be published in the Christian Sun and the Suffolk Herald, and a copy be spread on the church records.

Respectfully submitted,
Mrs. W. K. Saunders,
Mrs. W. E. Garrison,
W. E. Garrison,
W. K. Saunders,
Committee.

WAITING ON THE LORD

The Psalmist tells his disquieted soul, "Wait thou on God." It is the heart of Old Testament theology. God is our rock, our fortress, our high tower, in him alone resides our sense of safety. It is a mistake to say that the religion of the Old Testament is all fear, while that of the New Testament is all love. The Old Testament theology vibrates with love and trust and willing obedience.

Isaiah said: "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength, they shall mount up with wings as eagles, they shall run and not be weary, they shall walk and not faint." Then as now, "waiting on the Lord" had its reward and imposed its duties. A sense of failing sooner or later comes to every one who has passed the meridian of life. But the idea of renewing one's strength brings joy and hope.

MAN MUST HAVE RELIGION

Our Lord said: "Man can not live by bread alone." No matter what some men may say and how much they may seek to eliminate religion from human life, this thing stands true: Man to be his best must have an answer to the questions of the soul, What is this world, whence am I, what am I, whither am I going? These are deeply rooted in the religious life of the human race, whether found in the wild life of the Australian jungle or the halls of our most highly cultured institutions of learning. The religion Christ gave to the world came down from the heavens, from the altitudes, from the clear light of eternity. It came from the bogs and fens of human floundering. It has power to satisfy the spirit of man and to abide with him as a permanent value that can never be displaced. To accept him means to see the way open to light and life to the dwelling place of God.

PREPARING TEA IN JAPAN

As soon as possible after being picked, the tea leaves are placed on a round tray, with a brass wire bottom, over boiling water. This process of steaming, which is completed in half a minute, brings the natural oil to the surface. The next and principal operation is firing, which is done on a wooden frame, with thick Japanese paper stretched across it, charcoal well covered with ashes being the fuel employed. This first firing is done at a temperature of about 120 degrees Fahrenheit. Meanwhile the leaf is manipulated for hours by men who roll it into balls with the palms of their hands. The final result is obtained when each leaf becomes separately twisted, and changes color to a dark olive green. Two more firings at a lower temperature follow, after which the leaf is allowed to dry until it becomes quite brittle. When the process is complete the tea is kept strictly dry, as moisture destroys its aroma. Tea so made is the genuine Japan tea, or what is commonly known in America as "green tea."—East and West.

ANDES—SENGER.

On the evening of August 30, 1922, Mr. Owen W. Andes and Miss Carrie A. Senger were married at the bride's home near Harrisonburg, Va., by the writer, assisted by Rev. W. F. Gruver, of the U. B. Church. A large number of friends and relatives were present to witness the ceremony. The groom is a son of Mrs. Barbara Andes, and is a brother of Rev. A. W. Andes. The bride is an accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George F. Senger. Immediately after the ceremony the bridal party and friends repaired to the dining-room where dainty refreshments were served. The happy couple then left by automobile for Staunton, en route for Richmond, Norfolk, and Washington, for a few days. They are now at home near Harrisonburg, where the groom has employment as a motor mechanic. Their many friends wish them a happy married life.

tian Church in Mebane, but he went away before it came. Words fail us, when we undertake to express our gratitude to these dear friends, for their liberality to us in our time of need. We do hope that we may have the great pleasure of acknowledging the names and amounts of our many friends, who may treat us as the above mentioned friends have. We have ceiled our building overhead, but the folding doors, which will form a partition between the auditorium and Sunday-school rooms, are not in. The walls are not plastered, and we only have temporary seats. We are in debt about $700. We do hope that some big-hearted brother or sister, may be led to come to our relief in this time of great need. Send your check to pastor, P. T. Klapp, Elon College, N. We are anxious to get the house so it will be comfortable through the winter for our little band.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

The Richmond Church.—

The First Christian Church, of Richmond, Va., is now under construction. The location at the north-west corner of Grove Ave. and Shepherd St. is one of the prettiest sites in Richmond, and the church will be one of the most beautiful in the city.

The building, which is of classical design, will be constructed with beautiful Corinthian columns of gray terra cotta. The cornices and trimmings will also be of terra cotta. The base of the building will be of granolithic and the walls of gray brick. The entire building will be crowned with a magnificent copper dome.

The basement will house the Sunday School, which includes all the most up-to-date equipment for the grading of classes, together with kitchen and pantry for church entertainments.

The first floor auditorium, which is 50x60 feet, and will seat approximately 500, will be finished off to match the exterior. Provision has been made for a modern pipe organ, pastor's study, dressing rooms, and all other conveniences to be found in the most modern churches of the day.

L. P. Hartsook is the architect, and the John T. Wilson Construction Co., are the contractors.

THE FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH OF RICHMOND, VIRGINIA.

Austria Suffers.—

Austria, bankrupt and in every way distressed, has become a bone of serious contention between Italy and the little entente. Plans for an economic union between Italy and Austria, which might later result in the virtual absorption of the latter, have been put forward, and are said to have the approval of Great Britain and France. The scheme would relieve Austria's pressing needs and give her an outlet to the Adriatic, and would satisfy the growing Italian sentiment for expansion. But Jugo-slavia, Italy's rival, for the control of the Adriatic, doesn't want Italy strengthened, and furthermore she wants to grab the Austrian district of Klagenfurt. Rumors that Serbian irregulars were about to invade that region stirred up a lot of excitement in European capitals and Jugo-Slavia was constrained to deny any intention of invading the district and to promise to restrain the irregulars. The Czechoslovaks were credited with a hankering to seize the northern provinces of Austria in case of dismemberment of the succession republic. Budapest heard that both of these little entente nations were planning to send troops through Hungarian territory into Austria, and Count Andrassy, chairman of the Hungarian foreign affairs committee, declared Hungary would resist this, adding that Hungary, though weak, "may prove dangerous in case of such an insult."

use of electricity in lighting, in power, in radio. Twenty-five years ago the automobile and the gasoline motor truck were almost unheard of, and the important part that they play in our commercial life today was not thought of. The airplane is another new invention, and there are innumerable others of lesser importance in the physical world. Discoveries in medicine and surgery are numerous, wonderful and life saving. This knowledge is the gift of God to man. Why has He given so much to this generation? Is it not a challenge to us to use it all for His glory?

troops through Hungarian territory into Austria, and Count Andrassy, chairman of the Hungarian foreign affairs committee, declared Hungary would resist this, adding that Hungary, though weak, "may prove dangerous in case of such an insult."

Advances in Knowledge.

Advances in knowledge and the applications of science have come so fast that we can scarcely realize the changes that have taken place during the life time of the present generation. Probably no invention of modern times is more generally used or is more necessary to the comfort of life than the telephone. It is used in millions of homes and business places all over this land and over the civilized world. Yet this is a comparatively new invention. It was at the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia, in 1876, that its inventor, Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, who has just died, first put it on public exhibition. During his life time, or at least during the last forty-six years of his life, he saw his invention take a place in the economy of life and business that we suppose even he could not have dreamed of in the beginning. In the same period has come practically the whole development of the

NOTES - PERSONALS

Mrs. A. O. Harmon, one of the workers in our Raleigh church, with a party of friends from Durham, motored through Richmond last week, en route to Washington and will return via the Valley of Virginia.

Dr. J. G. Holland, of Holland, Va., called at the SUN office Wednesday just as the paper was going to press. His son, who is in school at Elon College, came over to meet him in the city. Glad to have them call.

We are glad to hear that Mrs. J. P. Dalton, Holland, Va., who has been sick for several months and a part of the time in Lake View Hospital, is improving and doing nicely. Her many friends will be pleased to have this good word from her.

Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., LL. D., Chapel Hill, N. C., will reach his eighty-third birthday on the 22nd of October, 1922. Let us give him a shower of congratulations on that day, send either letters or card and tell him of the love of his brethren for the man who has been a brave leader through a long life.

Brothers, are you praying for Men and Millions? Are you teaching your members also to pray for the success of the great work? It is, as we trust, Men and Millions for His cause. Do not think of failing to pay your pledge, and do it just as soon as you can. You see your promise was made for the promotion of the cause of Christ. Do your best.

Old Antioch, Isle of Wight County, Va., is setting a good example to the churches of our denomination in the matter of paying their pledges to the Men and Millions fund—it has just sent in $477.00, and it is not a wealthy church by any means. If all will do as well, in proportion to ability, we will put a smile all over Dr. Atkinson's face and at the same time do the greater work of wonderfully helping the cause for which we labor.

Rev. R. L. Williamson, now pastor of the Christian church at Henderson, N. C., having tendered his resignation as pastor at that place to take effect at the end of the present conference year (about the middle of November next) has received a call to succeed Rev. T. E. White in the Lee County, N. C., pastorate, with headquarters at Sanford, N. C. He has accepted this call and will go to that field at the end of the present conference year. Bro. Williamson has held several important pastorates among our people. He was also rocked in a Christian cradle, and we believe he will do a good work in his new field.

We understand that Rev. T. E. White is expected to take charge of the Windsor pastorate, which includes the churches at Windsor, Mount Carmel, Isle of Wight Court House, and Bethlehem, all of them in the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference. Bro. White is regarded as one of the growing men in the ministry in the North Carolina Conference, and we believe he will do a fine work in his new field of labor. He has had about twenty years experience in the ministry, first as missionary in Porto Rico and then as pastor in North Carolina. He is a student and we expect him to win his way to the hearts of his people in the new field.

Princeton Theological Seminary, Princeton, N. J. is having its largest opening this fall. So writes Rev. J. G. Truitt, one of the students now taking a course of study in that institution. There is at least one institution in this country in which there is not a trace of higher criticism, and that is Princeton, and it has some of the most scholarly men in its faculty to be found, but not one is a higher critic.

We understand that Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., LL. D., is open to engage as a pastor for the coming year, having retired from his present field at Franklinton, N. C. He is willing to give his entire time, if some field where he may be needed, shall give him the opportunity. Dr. Long is known as one of our most gifted pulpit orators. We trust he may be speedily located where he may have ample opportunity to do a great work for the cause.

FINAL NOTICE

For several weeks due notice has been given in THE HERALD and CHRISTIAN SUN of the Burlington Church's desire to be notified if you are a delegate and expect to attend the approaching session of the American Christian Convention to be held in Burlington, N. C., October 17-25. In this final notice we desire to assure you that we shall strive to accommodate all who come, but the Committee on Homes cannot guarantee entertainment if you do not notify us by Saturday, October 14, of your intention to be present.

BURLINGTON CHRISTIAN CHURCH,
Burlington, N. C.
G. O. LANKFORD, Pastor.

Have you yet notified Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., of your purpose to attend the approaching session of the American Christian Convention, to assemble at Burlington, N. C., where Dr. Lankford is pastor, and who will, if notified, make ample arrangements for your entertainment during the sitting of that body? If you do not notify him, then, if you go, you will have to take chances for entertainment on that occasion, as he holds himself and his church responsible for providing entertainment only for those who notify him that they are coming.

Rev. B. F. Black, late of Wolfeboro, N. H., has resigned his pastorate and is returning to Virginia. We understand he is to locate at or near Norfolk. We do not know as to what field he is to serve, but we give him a welcome back to his native state and wish for him great success. The public press of the Wolfeboro, N. H., section speak of Bro. Black in the highest terms and express real sorrow that he is leaving there so soon. The church was, we understand, very reluctant to give him up, but having turned his face toward the Sunny South, they gracefully yielded and left him free to return.

Here are some words that you may do well to ponder and consider for the life that you are now living and also in the interest of lives by which you may be surrounded. We do not know the author, but we are sure the ideas presented may be useful to us all. Read:

"The young man may be influenced to practice truthfulness, forgiveness, promptness, industry, fairness in judgment, kindness of speech. A teacher may educate himself by the study of the Bible experimentally, and then take the results alive and virile in his own spirit into the school. If the spirit of it is in the teacher it will impart itself to the school. The conclusion is obvious. In the school, the church or anywhere else, results can be wrought by a living exhibition of faith in Christ."

From an exchange we learn that Mohammedanism does not seem to flourish in this country. Through the liberality of a rich Moslem in Detroit a mosque was built in that city at a cost to him of $55,000. This was the only mosque in this country. Because of differences of opinions in regard to the teachings of their religion, the mosque has been abandoned and no service has been held in it for a year. As the Moslems have lost all interest in it the mosque is to be pulled down.

"From what is known of this 'ism,' we wish it may not find a building room in this country, for since we do not believe it is true, we cannot wish its prosperity, believing, as we do, that its growth in our midst can but be to the injury of the highest and best interests of the people of this country. We do not see how any one can wish the prosperity of Mohammedanism in Christian countries or elsewhere."

One of the really great preachers of this day is Rev. J. H. Jowett, who was only a little while ago Pastor of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church of New York City, but later a pastor in England. When he speaks, he has something to say of real worth to thinking men and women. Here is one of his rich and racy paragraphs. Take time to read it and think it over. It may be worth much to you. It follows:

"A man's thought determines the moral climate of his life, and will settle the question whether his conduct is to be poisonous marsh or fertile meadow, fragrant garden or barren sand. The pose of the mind determines the disposition, and will settle whether a man shall soar with angels in the heavenlies or wallow with the swine in the mire. What we think about the things that are greatest will determine how we do the things that are least. What are your primary thoughts about God? The prints of those thoughts will be found in your courtesies, in your intercourse, in the common relationship of your life, in the government of commerce, in the control of the body, and in all the affairs of home and market and field."

CHANGE OF TRAIN SCHEDULE

There will be no special car attached to the Southern train, No. 3, covering Norfolk, Va., Monday the 16th, for the A. C. C. via Danville and Greensboro.

The regular trains on the Southern from Raleigh to Greensboro will be restored on Sunday the 15th, so that Eastern Virginia delegates can reach the Convention certainly by 9:30 P. M., if not at 6:40 P. M., should they come by the Seaboard morning train Tuesday.

ATTENTION WOMEN!

The Women's meeting of the North Carolina Christian Conference will be held with the Raleigh church, November 2nd and 3rd. Please note the change in the date, the time is November 2nd and 3rd instead of November 9th and 10th. Thursday evening is the opening meeting of the Conference; let's have a big attendance at this time. All churches are urged to send representatives; we promise you a good program and a cordial welcome. Delegates are requested to notify Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, State College Station, Raleigh, N. C., that they are coming to this meeting and at what time they expect to arrive. Please do this as soon as possible. Let's have every church in the Conference represented and make this the best meeting in our history, both in interest and attendance.

MRS. L. L. VAUGHAN.

The Eastern Virginia Conference is announced to meet with the church at Johnson's Grove, Southampton County, Va., on Tuesday, Oct. 31, 1922. If you wish to be met at the train, when you get to Sedley, Va., why write to Bro. W. B. Fuller, Ivor, Va. We hope to be there, and for many reasons. It was our first pastoral charge, now more than forty-five years ago. We shall be glad to be there once more in the flesh, but the sad part of it will be to find so many faces not there, men and women who stood by us in the days of our beginning, who have gone home. We shall meet the children of some of them, but they will be strangers to us, but we shall be glad to see them all the same.

Some heathen people seem to have fine thoughts for the people of Christian lands. Here is one, and it is as good as most of us who have been all our lifetime surrounded by Christian influences. Read it carefully and get all you can out of it to enrich your thought: It is from The Christian Index. It follows:

"That is a meaningful remark which a convert in Africa made, as reported by a missionary: 'The trail is hard and tangled,' he said, 'but there is a Man ahead of us.' Yes, there is a Man ahead. Jesus always goes before. He is ever in front. He never asks us to tread a path which has not been trodden by His own feet. Yet he does bid us follow. Do we obey?"

What do you think of the following as a matter of fact? Onward puts it out as well worth your thought. It says:

There are three kinds of Christian workers—canal barges, sailing ships, and Atlantic liners.

The canal barges need to be dragged to the work. Often they do wonderfully well, but on the whole one volunteer is better than three pressed men.

The sailing ships make fine going as long as the wind and tide are with them, but when things get hard, when "the winds are contrary," when the work is discouraging, they turn sail and sail away.

But give me the Atlantic liner type of worker, the man who can fight his way through wind and tempest, because within there burns the hot throb of the mighty furnace of the love of Christ."

There is a good joke on the editor of this paper and it seems quite too good to keep it out of sight. A dear brother, a man we love and honor, says that according to certain high authorities, the editor of this paper is a higher critic, not only so, but a destructive higher critic. Well, that is news from a far country. We are sure that a good many of our readers, knowing how long and how persistently we have stood against higher criticism, will laugh heartily over the fact that we have been judged to be a higher critic. The basis of this charge is as follows: The brother in question was called on to say what he thought of the sacrifice of Jephthah's daughter. He affirmed that he believed she was sacrificed as stated in the Bible. The other party said: "But Dr. Barrett does not believe that she was so sacrificed," and without further explanation, the brother said that according to several authorities, "Dr. Barrett is a destructive higher critic," and then he was fair enough to write me and tell me so. We suspect that the basis of my rejecting the sacrifice of Jephthah's daughter were not detailed to our brother. Most likely the party who told him that I did not believe that Jephthah's daughter was burned, remembered only the fact, but did not remember the basis of the fact, and therefore it seems necessary to state the facts here. The Bible, in Judges 11:31, gives Jephthah's vow as follows: "Then it shall be, that whatsoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering." That is Jephthah's vow, and that is the basis of the charge of higher criticism as laid against the editor of this paper. What we claimed as to that vow is that in the original Hebrew in the sentence, "Shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering," the word and should be or, and that in so reading provision is made for the very emergency which came upon Jephthah. If it should be a person coming out to meet him on his return, such an one should surely be the Lord's, and then he says and I will offer it up for a burnt offering. Now that word and should be or, and then the verse would read: "Whosoever cometh forth of the doors of my house to meet me, when I return in peace from the children of Ammon shall surely be the Lord's, or I will offer it up for a burnt offering." Now you can see the wisdom of the form of Jephthah's vow. If any person of his household should thus come out to meet him on his return, that person shall surely be the Lord's, or if it should be an animal or a bird coming out to meet him on his return, then he would offer it as a burnt offering. But what authority have I for changing that word and into or? That is a proper question: and I must answer it, or take my place with the higher critics, although that would be a bad dose for this writer. In the margin of many of our Bibles the reading is given as or. In the Variorum Edition of the Bible, the marginal reading is given as or, and this Variorum Bible is considered one of the most scholarly of all the editions of the Bible. It was edited and the various renderings and readings were from the best authorities, given under the editorship of Rev. T. K. Cheyne, M. A., D. D., Rev. S. R. Driver, D. D., Rev. R. L. Clarke, M. A., and Rev. W. Sanday, M. A., D. D., LL. D., and they all agreed that the or is the rendering of that word which is printed as and in most of our English Bibles. To satisfy our own judgment in the matter, we looked up the words and and or in the Hebrew, and find that these two Hebrew words or and and are so much alike that we cannot discover a bit of difference between the two words. This is often the case in the Hebrew language. This fact alone makes it entirely possible for even the translators of our English Bible to have mistaken the word or for our word and, and so have made the English reading be "shall surely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt offering," when it should have read, "Or I will offer it up for a burnt offering." Now notice that using the or instead of the and. Jephthah makes ample provision for saving his family from being offered as a burnt offering, in case one of them should come out to meet him on his return. If one of his family should come out to meet him, then he would give such an one to the Lord, but if it should be an animal, he would offer it as a burnt offering. Now notice that he speaks of what he would offer as a burnt-offering as it, and not as her. If he meant his daughter, or any human being, that he would offer, why did he say it, rather than her, or him, as the case might be? Reading the passage as in the margin of many of our Bibles, but especially as in the Variorum edition of the Bible, reading it, I say, as or and not and, we find that Jephthah contemplated the possibility of a member of his family meeting him, and in that case, such an one should be the Lord's, and then, remembering that it might be an animal, he said, "or I will offer it up for a burnt offering." Taking these facts into consideration, I cannot but believe that Jephthah simply dedicated his daughter to the service of the Lord for life and did not burn her, as a burnt offering. If so believing makes THE SUN's editor a destructive higher critic, then he will go to the wilderness, as Jephthah's daughter did, and bewail the fact of his being a higher critic for the next years before me, if such there should be.

COMMENDING THE SUN.*

The Editor appreciates the following from The Pioneer of A New Era, published at Mitchell, Iowa. In its issue of September, 1922, it says:

The Pioneer of a New Era has received a copy of "The Christian Sun" edited by Dr. J. Pressley Barrett. We have known Dr. Barrett for a number of years, and congratulate The Christian Sun readers on having one of the ablest editors in our country. One thing is certain, so long as Dr. Barrett is at the helm, The Christian Sun will be guided in the pure way of the gospel. Higher criticism and doubt will never find its way into the columns of The Sun. Dr. Barrett has served his Brethren as editor for more than twenty-five years. This is the second time he has been editor of "The Christian Sun." It is the prayer of The Pioneer that Dr. Barrett may remain in this, his adapted vocation, to the setting of the sun.

*Not twice but thrice.

NOTICE.

The East Virginian Christian Conference is to meet with Johnson's Grove Christian Church near Sedley, Va., Southampton Co., October 31st and November 1st and 2nd.

All ministers, delegates, and visitors wishing to be entertained will please notify the pastor as soon as possible, not later than five days before Conference meets.

Please state whether coming by rail or by private conveyance. We will be glad to meet those coming by rail (by way of the Virginian) at Sedley, Va., train arriving Tuesday A. M. at 11:05 from Norfolk.

W. B. FULLER, Pastor,
Ivor, Va.

The clouds hang heavy around my way;
I cannot see.
But through the darkness I believe
God leadeth me.
'Tis sweet to keep my hand in his While all is dim,
To close my weary, aching eyes
An follow him.
Through many a thorny path he leads
My tired feet;
Through many a vale of tears I go;
But it is sweet
To know that he is close to me,
My God, my Guide!
He leadeth me, and so I walk
Quite satisfied.
To my blind eyes he may reveal
No light at all,
But while I lean on his strong arm
I cannot fall.

FIVE POINTS IN THE MINISTER'S LIFE WORKS

No matter to what line of activity a minister gives his life, more is expected of him than of most other men. We mean, of course, in lines of activity in his own chosen sphere. There are many things which claim the attention of the minister, but there are three lines running through his life to which he needs to give unusual attention. If these three lines are well cared for, his ministry will ordinarily be a success. If he neglect them, he is almost as surely to fail in his work. If this be true, as we believe it is, then he cannot be too careful to cover well and carefully these five lines as they pertain to his life and ministry.

1. Consecration. The minister who does not consecrate his life to the Gospel ministry and to God, can hardly expect even the semblance of real success. The ministry is already a failure, if his life be not devoutly consecrated to God and the work to which God has called him. To consecrate ones self to any given purpose is to keep the heart, the head and the hands full of the thing to which the consecration has been made. This is the very beginning of a minister's usefulness and fruitfulness. Therefore to consecrate one's life to the gospel ministry is the beginning of real service.

2. The second thing that enters essentially into the life of a minister is PRAYER—he must be a praying man, or he cannot be a success. He may be eloquent and he may be a fine reasoner in discussion, but he can never be a successful minister without the prayer-life. This has been shown so many times that it seems almost useless to consider it as a part of the life of the real minister of the Gospel. Prayer, real prayer, becomes a necessity in the life of the minister. Without it he can do not much of anything, unless it be to make a show of himself and his intellectual abilities, and that is a poor business for any minister. God help us to be a praying band in His vineyard, for then, and only then, can we hope to be successful in preaching the gospel.

3. The third thing is to keep filled with the Holy Spirit. No man's ministry can be a real power in human life if he possesses not the gift of the Holy Spirit. It would be a good thing if every candidate for the office of a minister of the gospel were required to prepare himself after the manner indicated in these three points before he should be ordained to this great work, for the man who is consecrated to God, whose life is filled with prayer and whose heart is filled with the Holy Spirit, he is already a success in the gospel ministry, and then no church need hesitate as to his ordination. He can be trusted to undertake and do the work which may fall to his hands. These three points are the great essentials in the life of the gospel minister. Possessing these, his life will blossom, bloom and fruit in the service of the Lord and many souls will be given to him for his hire.

4. The fourth thing the minister must needs do, and do well, is to keep his heart and mind full of the Bible—of its thought and teaching. We have said it before, and now here we repeat it again, the minister needs to know his Bible far better than most of us know it. We once heard of a man who, as a preacher of the gospel, set for himself the work of reading his Bible once each month, through the year. That was work, but we are quite sure that he never did a work that paid so well in his efforts to preach the gospel. No man can preach the gospel truly unless he keeps himself full of the thought and teachings of the Bible, but being full of Bible thought and teaching, he will be able to do wonders in declaring that truth. Let any man, be he preacher or layman, keep his heart and mind well filled along these five lines, and he can preach sermons that God will mightily use in winning the world unto Himself through Jesus Christ.

Let me say to our ministers of the gospel: Keep yourself fully consecrated to God, full of prayer and full of the Spirit and then full of Bible truth, and you can preach, preach sermons of great power in winning men and women to Christ. Then add to all this plain culture, and we believe you can preach the gospel and glorify God in doing so. Make a note of the five points herein given and seek daily to qualify yourself in them, and we believe you can preach the truth anywhere the Providence of God may call you, and preach it with power from on high.

5. Yes, there is a fourth item that should enter into the life of every minister of the gospel, but it is of another class of qualifications, and should be kept distinct from the other three, viz.: No man should try to preach without what we ordinarily call human culture. While the divine side of the minister's qualifications are very essential in preaching the gospel, without human culture of the right kind, he may even hinder the far-reaching influence of his life. A man who is ignorant has practically no excuse for his ignorance. It was different once, but now he can get ordinary culture himself by a diligent application to the study of History, Geography, Science and Literature, along with the Word of God. He may not have the ordinary school advantages, but he can get the advantages of ordinary human culture, if he will but study and make the proper effort. While this is good, and its absence is inexcusable, because it can so surely be gotten by every one seeking to enter the ministry, yet no man should be permitted to enter the ministry if he has not the other three points well developed in himself—well developed for one in his early days as a minister of the gospel. The three cover essential experiences in the minister, while the fourth is fitting for such a work and adds to its power in the lives of the people to whom he ministers. With these four points covering the practical side of a minister's real ability to preach the gospel, he can preach, he must preach, yea, he will preach, and even in the face of unfavorable circumstances, he will preach the gospel of the Son of God. We hear much of men quitting the gospel ministry. That may be true, but the man who has these points fully developed in his life, as a minister of the gospel, will not quit in the face of untoward circumstances, unless there be some decidedly hindering cause which he cannot control. A man may be sick, or he may reach an age when he is no longer qualified to minister in the work of preaching the gospel. In such a case it is nothing to his disparagement to discontinue, but for a man who is not handicapped by age, by affiliation or hindered by other controlable circumstances, to quit the ministry—they do not do so, when they have these points well developed in themselves. With these four qualifications intact, a man who has been called of God to preach the gospel, will preach, even though his salary be very inadequate to meet his needs.

The ministry has its hard places and trying experience, but that is as it should be, for if there were no hard places, or trying experiences, in that work, then no doubt many would enter it as a place of ease, where hard work would not oppress and where it is possible to take life easy. All such persons would most likely be tempted to quit the gospel ministry because the salary is small and inadequate for the needs of the family. We are told that where there is a will there is a way. We believe that is true in the case of an inadequate salary. The man who is called of God to preach and then had the wit and wisdom to get a wife from the Lord, he will live and get along fairly well, even on a small salary, and he will be pleased to do it, and as a rule, his family will turn out to be as valuable to the community and to the church as the families of those who are better paid.

Just a word to young men expecting to enter the gospel ministry: By all means see that you get these five points in your qualifications as a minister of the gospel. Get them truly and you will succeed. Fail to get them and you will—fail.

SUPPOSE MAN HAD TO DO AS MUCH!

We sometimes think man's lot in making a living is a hard one—we think it takes so much work to make a living for himself and family. Did you ever have such thoughts of your lot in life? Well, if you have, you will do well to unthink them and revise your ideas of your hardships. You have to work to make a living, of course, and that is right, for man would be of little worth, if his living and all his wants were met without effort on his own part. Solomon told the sluggard to go to the ant, to consider her ways and become wise as to the industry which makes a living for the ant. That was doubtless good advice.

Now let us suggest that the men and women of the twentieth century likewise go to the honey-bee and learn a lesson as to what work it takes for that little creature to make a living. Man has a comparatively easy time to make a living, if you compare his work with the work of the honey-bee, and to convince you of the truth of this statement, we will give you some idea of what the bee has to do in order to make just one pound of honey. Suppose a man had to do as much to make one pound of food for himself and family as the bee has to do to make that much honey for himself—well in that case, most likely man would prefer to go to some other country, if such a place were known, where he could work less and make a living. But now come to the estimate of what a bee has to do to make one pound of honey, and then you will see what an easy time man has in making a living for himself and his loved ones, and yet man is not satisfied, although we have never heard of any complaining on the part of the bees on that account—we only wish we could say as much for us men and women upon whom God has lavished so much in the way of blessing.

The Presbyterian says:

When you eat a spoonful of honey, you have very little idea as to the amount of work and travel necessary to produce it. To make a pound of clover honey, bees must take the nectar from sixty-two thousand clover blossoms; and to do this requires two million seven hundred and fifty thousand visits to the blossoms by the bees.

In other words, in order to collect enough nectar to make one pound of honey, a bee must go from hive to flower and back again two million seven hundred and fifty thousand times. Then, when you think how far these bees sometimes fly in search of these clover fields, often one or two miles distant from the hive, you will begin to get a small idea of the number of miles one of the industrious little creatures must travel in order that you may have a pound of honey.

A PERSONAL DECISION, AND WHAT CAME OF IT

I am a minister in the Christian Church and am serving at one of our home mission points. I feel impressed to give to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN an experience which came my way today, September 28, 1922.

In the first place, I am not seeking to throw reflections of any nature on any denomination whatever. I only wish to expose a trap which now and then has been set for some of our unfortunate ministers and some have been caught. I have spent the most of my time for the last two years working in denominations other than my own, and on the whole my work has been pleasant. I was glad to exercise that liberty of conscience which enables me to worship with anybody who truly worships God in spirit and in truth.

I helped in the revival meetings in my community and declined two invitations of the pastor to help elsewhere, but because I had other engagements. I have nothing but the highest regards for the Church of which I am writing. I delight in its growth and never hesitate to lend them a helping hand whenever opportunity is given. But unhappily this spirit of friendliness and co-operation has developed a situation which on the whole is not pleasant. I lay the cause of this unpleasant situation, not to the spirit of this particular denomination, but rather to the personal ambition of some people.

I took pleasure in going out to this church today to hear one of their highest officials—a man of more than thirty years experience in the ministry, and he was a Doctor of Divinity. He preached. It was an able sermon and I enjoyed it very much. I also endorsed all he said. After the sermon a very prominent member of this church presented to me a plea in the following language:

"Bro. A., meet Bro. C."

"I am mighty glad to meet you, Bro. C.," he said.

"Thank you; I am glad to meet you also, Bro. A."

"Bro. C. has certainly been a great help to us here this year and we appreciate it, Bro. C."

"Thank you," said I.

At this point the brother layman withdrew, and the following conversation ensued:

"Bro. C., to what church do you belong?"

"The Christian Church."

"Do you mean the Campbellites?"

"No, sir."

"I think I am acquainted with your church. It is the church founded by James O'Kelly, is it not? He was one of the leaders in our movement."

"I see! Yes, he led in the movement of the Christian Church."

"Well, there's not much difference in your church and ours, is there?"

"Not from a doctrinal standpoint."

"What is the difference?"

"It is in governmental matters."

Then with a little mixture of flattery the brother continued:

"Now, Bro. C., if you know me as other people around here know me, you would be assured that I am not trying to proselyte you, but I wish to advise you a little, that I intend only for your good and the betterment of the Kingdom. I have been informed of the good work you have done in this community and elsewhere, and I can tell from the cut of your eye that you'll do all right. I have high regard for your Church and like its principles, but honest, Bro. C., I do not see much chance for your church ever to do a great deal here in this country. Now it is a pity and it grieves me to see a talented man, as you are, waste his energies. What do you intend to do another year?"

"I am intending by the grace of God to preach for the most part."

"How old are you, Bro. C.?"

"Twenty-three."

"Have you a family?"

"Yes, a wife and one child."

"What do you expect to do another year in addition to preaching?"

"I expect to farm some."

"Now, Bro. C., you do not need to farm. You should give all of your time to the ministry."

"Yes, I would be glad to do so, if it were possible, but I am glad to do the best I can, as it is."

"Now Bro. C., the thing I think you ought to do, since you are situated as you are, is to come to our church. You would not have to give up any doctrinal views, and it would so much increase your chance for usefulness. We can give you a work now—one of our best charges, and at a very comfortable salary. You could devote all your time to the ministry. You could better provide for your family and you would have plenty of time for study and for preparation to preach. But best of all you could do a greater service for the Master. Now, Bro. D. of the Methodist Protestant Church told me the other day that he was coming to our church. His situation is identical with yours. He wants to better situate himself for service. Also Bro. F. of the Congregationalist Methodist Church told me the same thing. He is in similar condition. Still another brother, a preacher in a small denomination, told me that he was coming."

These words of pointed argument and persuasion, pointing out the advantages of his church and the disadvantage of mine, continued for almost an hour, when I was obliged to beg off to attend other duties. Before leaving the brother, I remarked that I appreciated his kind consideration of my interests, his words of praise and his gracious offer, but that I did not think it could be sufficient compensation to induce me to give up my church. I thought of many sweet and comforting passages during his discourse which strengthened me, but I did not refer to them, wishing to avoid a controversy. I told the brother that his church was very dear to me, especially as a number of my relatives belong to it. I also said that his church is my second choice, but at the same time, I said deep down in my heart that I would never forsake my first love."

Toward night of the same day as I was picking cotton near the public highway, two of the leading members of this church drove up in a car and calling me to the roadside, said: "Well, Bro. C., Bro. A. has just told us that there is a probability that you will join our Conference." Then after giving me a well worded welcome, they hinted that they would like to have me for their pastor.

I feel almost sure that ere this Bro. A. is saying to some other brother that Bro. C. is going to join our church—he told me so only a few days ago. God pity!

As I followed the trail toward home, I thought of two things, and was almost startled at the thought of two little churches, one of which I was instrumental in getting organized. I had promised by my actions that I would remain loyal to our Heaven-born principles under which we were organized, and I was wondering if I should betray such a trust, could the people of that little church where I am trying to serve as pastor, ever forgive me. Then came immediately to my mind the picture of the traitor, standing with his thirty pieces of silver and saying to them: "I have betrayed innocent blood," and it was a great deal harder to think of accepting this man's invitation to join his church. Indeed I do not wonder that the devil is called a serpent, and I am just now thinking of those of our flock who have been beguiled. I wonder if they are happy.

I do not blame one for changing his church home if his convictions have changed, but I have nothing but contempt for the man who is hunting a flowery bed of ease.

As I review the events of the day, I find that I love my church better than ever and thank God for the sweet communion of His Holy Spirit. Now in rejoicing tears I promise Him that so long as there is room on the rolls of my church for my name, you will find it there. Stand by us, brethren, with your prayers and in any other way you can that the work may go on.

A BROTHER.

....., Alabama.

We were in Burlington for a few hours on Oct. 6, and no doubt about it, there is some work going on in the big Christian church in preparation for the coming of the Big American Christian Convention, which is expected to assemble there on Oct. 17. Although it is a new and handsome building, it is being thoroughly overhauled and put in the best of shape, in honor of our coming guests. We believe it is one of the handsomest buildings in which the Convention has met in forty years, and may be in all its history, and not only, so, but we believe it is the best arranged building for entertaining such an assemblage in which the Convention has ever met. So our brethren North and South and East and West may as well get their good clothes in shape and come right along for Burlington will be ready for them, and not only ready for them, but they will be looking for them. We were in Burlington a few days ago for a few short hours and things were moving about the Christian church. We saw Dr. Lankford's fine shining face and he seems to be in big expectation. He said then already he had received notice of the coming of more than three hundred persons, and that they were coming in by practically every mail. The outlook is for a large gathering of the people and a great Convention. Get yourself ready and come along—we are quite sure there will be plenty of room for you, and if there is not, Dr. Lankford and his people will make room for all who come, having given notice to that effect. If any come without giving notice, if there is room left, it will be given them, but the people who give notice of their coming will have the first attention. If you wish to give notice of your coming, why write to Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., Burlington, N. C. A glad welcome awaits you.

It seems like Chapel Hill is having a stealing wave to pass over it. We find the following paragraph in The Chapel Hill News, and it is enough to put others to thinking what may come to them, if they do not keep a close watch on their possessions. The News says:

"There have been several day light robberies the past week. Rev. B. J. Howard, pastor of the Christian church, had a new suit stolen off a clothes line in his yard, while another robbery was committed at the home of Mr. Graves on Mallett street. In this case a new suit Mr. Graves had just paid $60 was stolen from his front porch. Rev. Howard, though, happened to good luck, when he came down town his friends presented him a purse of $50, for which he profoundly thanks them."

We rejoice that Bro. Howard was so blessed with good friends who did help him out in the time of his need. Good friends are better than money.

SUFFOLK LETTER

Life is not stationary. It moves upward or downward. Years add to years and there is no power that can stay their course. The life of man is endless as he is made in the image of God, who is yesterday, today and forever the same." Life in Christ Jesus is immeasurable. The Christian life is the only life that promises endless happiness. Doubt creates nothing, blesses no cause, inspires no activity, and wears no crown. Even sight is too limited for great endeavor and great achievements. "We walk by faith, not by sight." By faith great things are undertaken and achieved. Doubt has no vision, no venture, and no hope. All the great achievements of man have been wrought out by men of faith. Christianity is distinctly a system of faith. "The things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." No man has ever seen air, gravity, space, truth, or an election. The philosophers deal with the unseen, and construct their systems by faith, and thus admit Christian faith. No citizen has ever seen his government or a song. "No man hath seen God at any time." The best that Paul could say was: "I know whom I have believed." His Saviour was known only by faith.

The farms are tilled by faith. Farmers cast their seed into soil, cultivate the growing plant and wait in faith for the harvest. If they had no faith they would neither sow nor reap. What the church needs today is more faith in man and in men. The business of the world rests on this faith of man in man and men in men. Investments are seed. The operation of factories, railroads, shops, stores, is the cultivation of growing investments and waiting for profits. Men would not invest their money, their time, their energy, their labor in great industries if they did not have faith in men. Here is a great field for the cultivation of faith.

Domestic and social relations are built upon this same foundation of faith in men and women, in children and mature folks. The marriage relation rests upon the rock of faith in each other. The moment that doubt enters love begins to retire. The relation is not sustained by education, possessions, promises or standing. The relation is maintained by faith and love. These two belong together. The parental and filial relation is sustained by faith. Many parents weaken their influence over their children by lack of faith in them. Carry this thought out into society and you have the bond that protects law, virtue, religion, and all human relations. The thing that taints society most is doubt expressed in terms of suspicion or charge, and without proof. The tongue that gossips infects human society with a poison that kills peace. The man that loses faith in man loses faith in God, because God has faith in man. He put the world in man's care to keep it and to dress it." He put the Bible in the keeping of man. He inspired man to write it. He left the church in the care of man. Jesus went away, and left the church in the hands of a few discouraged disciples. The Church needs more faith in one another. Adverse criticism should die; constructive criticism is the helper of all interests and all men.

THE RICHMOND CHURCH

Rapid progress is being made on the building of the First Christian Church of Richmond which was begun September the 25th. The church is well located on a beautiful lot in a fast growing part of the city.

The church was organized April the 4th, 1920 and now numbers approximately one hundred members. The services are held in one of the city school buildings where we have ample accommodations for church and Sunday School work. The membership includes a number of faithful loyal workers, who had secured the school building and organized a Sunday School and Ladies Aid Society two months before the pastor reached the field. The rapid development of the movement has been due largely to these interested and liberal members.

When our church is completed, we feel that it will be a credit to the denomination and will stand as one of the visible-results of the work of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention. The Board inaugurated the work and has fostered it since the beginning.

The following members compose the Building Committee: P. J. Carlton, *A. E. Pierce, W. R. Harton, Jno. T. Kernodle, Dr. B. W. Rawles, J. W. English and F. J. Eley. This committee has worked out a splendid financial arrangement for the prosecution of the work. The church is to be completed by April the 1st.

I feel that our people are going to do their best, but building a suitable church in the capital of the State is a large task and we shall need the co-operation of the entire convention and especially the members of the Christian Church in the state of Virginia.

We are now asking for the following contributions for the ensuing conference year:

1	Subscription of	$1.000
2	Subscriptions of	$500 each
4	Subscriptions of	250 each
8	Subscriptions of	125 each
10	Subscriptions of	100 each
20	Subscriptions of	50 each
40	Subscriptions of	25 each
100	Subscriptions of	10 each
200	Subscriptions of	5 each
400	Subscriptions of	$2.50 each

These subscriptions may be paid any time before October the 1st, 1923, but we would like to have the subscriptions as soon as possible. We know there is a number of people interested in seeing a Christian Church established in Richmond and we are glad to give you this opportunity to have a part in it. Send all subscriptions and contributions to Jno. T. Kernodle, Treasurer of the Building Fund, 1012 E. Marshall Street, Richmond, Virginia.

OUR EUROPEAN LETTER

Berlin, Germany, Sunday, Sept. 17, 1922.

Dear Dr. Barrett and the Christian Sun Family:

I think I wrote last from Brussels, Belgium. Since then our Commission has visited Antwerp, Rotterdam, De Haag, and Amsterdam. Unfortunately for me, Mrs. King met with a very serious accident less than 24 hours after arriving here. Ten days past, and she is now in Elizabeth Kronnehaa's Lutz Strassa, suffering with a fractured hip. She is recovering slowly but I am hopeful of her entire recovery and that I may take her home by the middle of October. It is very hard to be left alone in a foreign city and unable to speak the language. I have thrown around us for our comfort and protection the entire force of the American Embassy as well as the Consul General and his staff. In addition to this I have met several Americans here at the Hotel Esplanade. Mrs. King has a German doctor that studied under Dr. Halstead at Johns Hopkins, Baltimore, 1912. She also has a splendid Zister (Sister) Nurse, that can speak English. I am spending a portion of every day with her and live at the hotel the balance of the time. I found out today there was an American church here and the pastor will also call to see us next week. We are having lots of callers at the hospital, and I have had several invitations out by American and English friends. I am not suffering for the want of attention.

The days hang long and heavy and we are looking forward to that day when we are told that Mrs. King can leave the hospital with safety and we can then turn our face toward our English-speaking countries. I stayed in France just long enough to get a few words of French and then I was forced to take up Flemish, then Dutch, and now I am puzzling my brain on German. It is almost necessary to speak some German as you cannot get along very well alone. By the time I get this sufficiently to get through I will have to go back to French before I can get with people who speak the only language to me—English. Then not that good old Southern brogue we speak in America. That is what I want to hear once more.

We were entertained more elaborately in Holland than any country we have visited, and I think Holland is in much better financial condition than any European country at present. She did not suffer from the ravages of war—only the reaction which she is now undergoing. Holland is practically all reclaimed land as it was once practically under the sea. It looks to me now if she had some of those heavy showers we had in Virginia this summer she would be under the sea again. We have more unreclaimed swamp-bogs and marshes in the United States now that are unreclaimed than the entire area of Holland. If our country would get an engineer from Holland and clear up our swamps and bogs we would have the richest and most beautiful country in the world. Germany at present is in a terrible suspense. The valuation of their mark is depreciating every day, and it will continue to depreciate unless they stop printing it. It takes practically all the printing presses to print German currency and no time for other things. You can feel mighty rich here with a pocket full of currency. I took forty dollars a few days past and went to the American Express Company and exchanged it for $60,000 dollars in marks. I am living at the finest hotel in Berlin, and, believe me, it is a peach, for an outlay of around $2.50 to $3.00 per day, including a splendid room and three good meals and all the service I need. I can get a shave and hair trim for 5 cents. They tell me beer is the highest thing a German has to buy. We visited a factory here that worked 5,600 employees in one factory and 3,400 in another, and the most skilled mechanic only got $14.00 per month. Labor is cheap and all these things are high to these people, but an American dollar looks big here.

Sunday in Berlin at present seems more quiet than in some other country. The principal shops are closed. The theatres, ball parks, beer gardens and many other places of amusements are open, but they don't print newspapers on Sunday.

She can certainly teach America a lesson on this. Everything seems to be quiet and peaceful, but France is frightened in her boots, expecting Germany to attack her from the air and I believe she will do it if France continues to force the payment of her reparations. I have been taught not to fear the Germans, but since I have spent two weeks with them in their great city, I am forced to believe that they have good people here. They have certainly shown me the very best side of humanity. We came here frightened from reports received in France and Belgium, but all fear has disappeared now and Mrs. King and myself are being made very comfortable.

I had intended, in starting out, to write this letter to give an idea of our impression and the work our Congress is doing in other countries, but my whole heart is now centered on Berlin, where my all lies flat on her back awaiting final restoration, and my whole desire and anxiety now is to take her back home again fully restored. This has been the second very dark spot in our married life, but we are fully resigned to our fate, believing that the same watchful Eye that has cared for us in America all these years can take good care of us here in a foreign land. We keep before us the consoling words of David: "Though I walk through the shadow of death, Thy rod and Thy staff comforteth me."

I am hopeful of seeing more of Germany before leaving, but my impression over about one-half of the empire is that this is the finest country I have ever seen. Their crops are good and they have a plenty of everything except money. Don't think you will ever starve these people as they are the most industrious of all nations. Men are scarce, but women are plentiful and the women do the greater part of the work, especially on the farms. I hope to be back in the States by November 1st.

More later.

Yours very truly,

JOHN KING.

Hotel Esplanade, Berlin, Germany.

PREVAILING PRAYER

(The following pointed paragraphs are from a sermon preached by Evangelist F. F. Bosworth, in the Gospel Tabernacle, New York, in opening the Tent Campaign in that City, Sunday, August 6, 1922.)

"These all continued with one accord in prayer and supplication, with the women and Mary the mother of Jesus, and with His brethren." (Acts i:14).

If every church and Christian of any locality would open the Bible at the first chapter of Acts today and do as the people did then, God would pour out His Spirit anywhere and anytime for a revival. It is God's way.

The answer they got to their prayer reveals the character of their prayer, because when the answer came, the multitude ran together and asked what it meant; and Peter got up and said, "This is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel; and it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams: And on my servants and on my handmaidens, I will pour out in those days of my Spirit; and they shall prophesy.

We are living in the last days, and this promise is for us when we shall have fulfilled the conditions as these people did. God is just waiting for a chance to be gracious.

The church is organizing most everything today except to kneel down together and pray. The church is in the organizing business to help pull the load, but what we need is not new organizations, but some new steam and some new power.

These people all prayed—not a part of them.

Today there is only Sister Jones and Brother So and So, and a few people who do the praying. God never intended any such thing for our generation. God intended that the church should be composed exclusively of intercessors.

As the sons of Aaron, so in our dispensation God intends for every individual to enter into the Holy of Holies and get answers to their prayers. I want to say that it is a dreadful tragedy for any man or woman in the church to be without the spirit of prayer. Any man or woman who does not share in the soul travail of the church, hinders the church.

They all continued with one accord in prayer. They did not get down to pray and then get up and forget all about it; but they continued to pray until they knew God had answered. If God were to write about some churches today, He would have to say that they discontinued.

If it is right to pray for a thing, then it is wrong to stop praying until you get the answer.

The greatest need of the time is that some power shall sweep around the world and bring the Church down to her knees.

Adam's children were born to him through the instrumentality of Eve, and we are the bride of Christ, and He wants us to populate heaven through the travail of our souls.

Travail of soul is intense desire—God transferring His desire to your heart so that you want what God wants more than anything else in the world. God has to answer that kind of a prayer, or else He would have to work contrary to His own Spirit. God certainly will answer the prayer that is prompted by His own Spirit.

God can and does deal with every situation when He gets a people filled with the Holy Ghost. That is His business.

Suppose I went to see President Harding. Perhaps I should wait a long time before I could gain an audience with him. But finally I am introduced to him and touch his hand. Is that the time to jump up and run away? No, that is the time to stay until I get what I want. If God does respond to prayer and bless us, that is not the time to stop—that is the time to start in.

When we pray in the Holy Ghost we never get less than we ask for. We always get more.

When we pray until the atmosphere of heaven comes down, sinners will repent in that atmosphere before they know what is the matter with them.

When these people prayed and supplicated, they created a spiritual vacuum that pulled the wind down from heaven. It pulled the atmosphere of heaven down upon the people until 3,000 sinners were converted. In such an atmosphere as that sinners will repent automatically. It is hard to stop them.

What we call opposition is nothing. When God's lightning strikes, there is no such thing as opposition. No opposition can stand when God works in answer to prayer.—The Alliance Weekly.

NOTICE! NOTICE!

The North Carolina Christian Conference is to meet with Hines' Chapel Christian church, Guilford County, November 14-17, 1922. And as pastor of the above church we ask that every pastor see that every church of which he is pastor elect and send at least one delegate to this conference.

Will you see that a notice is sent us stating how and when you are coming. We will be glad to meet you at station if necessary. Come to stay for every session, we will be glad to have you.

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

One person may take two or more subscriptions and have his time extended. All persons in arrears as much as one year should pay up, and then aid the solicitor in securing a premium. The name label indicates the time to which subscription is paid.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

PUT MEN AND MILLIONS ON YOUR PRAYER LIST

A letter from one of our brave and loyal captains says: "I am praying daily for our Men and Millions." That is the right note. We will never pay up till we pray up.

I wonder how many of your pastors pray publicly, in their pulpits on Sundays, for Men and Millions. I was in a Baptist church at a regular preaching service a recent Sunday. "Our Father in Heaven, bless our servants—Five Millions Campaigns, the men and the women intrusted with its promotions and all who have pledged to help it." I wonder how many of our Christian pulpits have prayed like that for this our greatest movement, and the one on which the future growth of our Church depends, as it does upon no other? Brethren, sisters, pastors and beloved, put Men and Millions on your prayer list.

J. O. ATKINSON.

OUR RICHMOND CHURCH

On September 25th ground was broken for the beginning of our Richmond church building. The excavating was to be completed in one week. This will be good news to SUN readers. Virginia's capital city should have had a Christian church decades ago. But we shall not grieve over wasted opportunities. For two years now Dr. Walters has preached in a convenient school house. Only one who has tried it can realize how different it is to hold a city congregation in a school house, and only the loyalty and devotion of our Christian band in Richmond can account for the success thus far. Richmond Christian Church will need our prayers and our liberal contributions for many months to come. We have made a beginning. God help us safely to this end.

J. O. ATKINSON.

A WORTHY GOAL

Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., in starting our new church building in Richmond, sets a month goal for his congregation. He says:

"Now that the building of the new church is under way and the permanency of the organization, in a beautiful house of worship, is assured, I want to appeal to every member and friend of the Christian denomination, in Richmond, to give us their presence and co-operation in the further development of the cause of our beloved Christian church in this city.

"We want to start by increasing our Sunday school enrollment and church membership. We want ten new Sunday school scholars per month or 60 by April 1st, and 50 new church members. How much can you help us in reaching this goal?"

We strive each year, or from time to time, to increase our business or our farm products.

Why should not every Sunday school now and then set a goal; and every church for increase in membership. Then pray God that it is His good will that will bring it to pass.

J. O. ATKINSON.

A TIMELY STATEMENT AND LETTER

Supt. C. D. Johnston, of the Orphanage, and Executive Secretary of our Men and Millions

Movement, who receives, credits and receipts all the money paid in, and keeps the books, has sent to the Captains in each church a card showing just how much his church pledged, and how much it has paid on those pledges up to date. This will enable every captain to see just where he stands, and what now needs to be done. In with this card is this very appropriate letter:

"The enclosed card will show how much your church pledged for Men and Millions and how much has been paid to date. With these figures in hand I am wondering if you will not be able to make a special plea to your people to pay up their pledges or at least a partial payment.

"I know times have been hard and money close for the past two years but crops are good this year, cotton and tobacco bringing fair prices and the general outlook for better conditions is much brighter.

"These pledges are moral as well as financial obligations we have made to our church and our God's cause. On this account it seems to me we should put forth a special effort to meet them. Besides every dollar paid to Men and Millions is divided to every institution we Christians have, and when we pay to Men and Millions we are paying to help carry forward all the interests and obligations of our dear church.

"THE CHRISTIAN SUN will carry each month a statement of what each church sends in, and I do hope your church will show up well in that column. Let us make October a "Banner" month.

With best of good wishes in your Christian activities.

Your friend and brother,
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Executive Secretary.

Will not our faithful and loyal Captains act upon Brother Johnston's fine suggestion and make October a "Banner" month.

J. O. ATKINSON.

(Signed) C. D. JOHNSTON,
Executive Secretary.

September is a between month—summer behind, fall ahead. Hence the small amount paid in by the churches this month. Our two Southern Conferences did not send in, but they will swell their sendings in October and November.

We are thankful for the ones who have paid and are daily praying for those who have not, that they may be both able and willing.

THE SENSE OF SOLIDARITY

In The Herald of Gospel Liberty, September 14, appeared an editorial under the above caption that I could wish with all my heart every pastor in our Southern Convention would read, re-read and inwardly digest. One of the strongest, most distracting, heart-rending phenomena I have ever met is the isolation, the indifference, the unconcernedness of many of our pastors to any scheme or plan of co-operation for our denominational progress. Let any plan for progress and development of the whole denomination be adopted by Conference or Convention; and that is sufficient to condemn it to chilling and deadening indifference by many pastors.

Make this matter concrete and definite. Superintendent C. D. Johnston of our Orphanage is working as the responsible agent and representative of one of our important and altogether worthy church enterprises. So is President Harper of Elon College; so is Dr. Barrett and Prof. Kernodle of THE CHRISTIAN SUN; so is Miss Lucy Eldredge of Religious Education; so am I of Missions of Men and Millions. Now let either of us write a letter of the most personal and important and financial kind to each and all of our 100 pastors touching vitally the work to which we have been appointed, and on whose progress the very welfare of all the pastorates intimately hinge, and it is safe to say that not 33 out of the 100 letters will receive any reply whatever. These letters seem to be impersonal and their writers inhuman because they deal with the institutions and enterprises of the church. Why am I, for instance, any less human, and deserving of fraternal courtesy now through the mails than when I was settled as pastor of a church? Then I could write a letter to my brethren and they deemed it worthy of reply. Brethren, we are one, and the enterprises and institutions of the church are the off-spring of the church; and if the off-spring dwarfs or languishes or is fruitless, we all suffer the sense of humiliation together. But read what Editor Kerr says about "Denominational Solidarity":

Every man or woman who has had experience or any deep interest in the affairs of our denomination must have been deeply interested with the fact that there is not among us the cohesiveness that is essential to growth and power in any organization. All through our history there has been a peculiar spirit of isolation manifested by far too many of our conferences, churches and pastors. These have seemed to have the feeling of self-dependence, that they were sufficient unto themselves, and that it mattered little to them or their future what became of the other conferences or other churches or other pastors. Their horizon has been exceedingly constricted, and the most narrow and selfish provincialism has pervaded all of their interests and outlook. They have never seen beyond their own immediate circle in any big and understanding way, nor perceived the fact that their welfare, if not their very existence so far as the Christian Church is concerned, is absolutely dependent upon the closest co-ordination, the inseparable identity, of our whole denomination. No one part or parcel of it can live and amount to anything alone.

It is a deepening of this sense of solidarity which is most imperatively needed even yet. We have come a long way in the past few years in bringing our various sections and conferences into a living and vital organic touch with each other. We have made marvelous advancement along that line. In the past ten or fifteen years our denominational officials and field workers have done more conference and church visitation than perhaps was ever done in all of the history of the church put together before. To some folks who never worked at a denominational task and felt how much like a rope of sand our church was, and how isolated and separated its various conferences and groups were from each other, and how little most of them knew or cared about each other, such field work, such going here and there, seemed a needless outlay of money and of men. They have said that it was a waste to use so many of our strong men in denominational positions when the pulpit needed them so much. But such an opinion is the very provincial and shortsighted policy which has kept us small denominationally and created the very conditions which now compose our most stupendous and pressing problem. During all of our history we have had great preachers in the pulpits—and half of the churches they built have died of isolation of spirit. But never until a very few years ago have we had more than two men devoting their time to making a denomination of our churches—the editor of The Herald and the Business Manager; and some of the time the same man had both offices, and much of the time our editors were dividing our church far more than solidifying it. But with the advent of the mission idea into our church, a new era began; and now for some years we have had men dedicating their lives unstintly to creating a denominational consciousness, to organizing our forces into a solid phalanx, to stimulating the sense of unity and interdependence. And the remarkable progress which we have made in every line of denominational life since ought to be convincing proof of the tremendous value of such work.

Brethren and beloved, we need to cultivate zealously this sense of denominational solidarity."

A PLEA FOR MISSIONS.*

It is largely through our missionary societies that the members of our churches are interested and instructed in Missions. Therefore, let us realize the great field of opportunity that is open to us. May we realize, too, that in just the proportion we support Missions will our Church prosper and grow. If you want to see a doomed church, shut your doors to missionary enterprises and you will have one. In the spiritual life the more we give the richer we become. I don't think our unbelief is always because we are selfish and don't care, but from ignorance and lack of vision. We sometimes forget that our neighbor is not only the one next door to us, but any one who needs our help, regardless of race or nationality, as Christ taught in the Parable of the Good Samaritan.

The very act of God sending His only Son into the world was prompted by the missionary spirit, so we would never have had a Saviour if God had not believed in Missions. Christ established the Christian Church, and could anybody have read the four Gospels without knowing that His life was spent entirely for others? Did you ever stop to think that nearly everything you have comes from others? Even our very customs, and most of the things we do and say are imitated. So we can't afford to keep to ourselves. If you can't be convinced that Mission Work is right for the sake of our church and the progress of the Kingdom of God, don't tell it. You are hindering the cause when you do.

I have recently read the lives of some pioneer missionaries and oh, what a very little bit we are doing in comparison with their lives of suffering and sacrifice. Some of us are not interested enough to give one hour a month to the study of this great work. Every member of our church should give something to Missions. Sometimes I fear we are like the Hebrew priests who offered the poor and sick bullocks when God had demanded the best. Listen, "I gave my life for thee, what hast thou given for Me?" When we are asked this question before the judgment bar of God will we have to hang our heads in shame?

And then we must give our money. This is the hardest thing most of us have to give. God doesn't expect all, but we have got to get first. John Wesley says, "Money never stays to the point where we are willing to put Him with me. I throw it out of my hands as soon as possible, lest it should find a way into my heart." The Christian Temple, Norfolk, is supporting three missionaries and finding they had a surplus in the mission treasury immediately decided to support another. In this church nearly everybody gives to Missions. If we want to grow we must be more missionary. May we each have a desire to do more and may we catch a vision of the Christ just before He went away, as He lifted His hands and said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature, and Lo! I am with you always." It is His command, we dare not disobey.

SELFISH SUNDAY SCHOOLS

Even as good an institution as a Sunday School may cultivate selfishness. It thinks in terms of self; how it may live, keep its head above water, stay in existence.

I read this in a book recently: "The Sea of Galilee and the Dead Sea are made of the same water. It flows down, clear and cool from the heights of Hermon and the roots of the cedars of Lebanon. The Sea of Galilee makes beauty for it, for the Sea of Galilee has an outlet. IT GETS TO GIVE. It gathers in its riches that it may loan them out again to fertilize the Jordan plain. But the Dead Sea with the same water makes horror. For the Dead Sea has no outlet. IT GETS TO KEEP. We all want life's enriching blessings; we ought to; they are divine benedictions. But some get to give. They are like Galilee; but some get to keep and they are like the brackish water that covers Sedon and Gomorrah!! So many Sunday Schools think only of getting to keep—getting enough money in the Sunday's "collection" to buy something (tickets, cards and quarterlies) to carry home with them and keep.

Ought not all our Sunday Schools follow the example of our best, most vigorous and wide-awake schools, viz., Teach that we should give to others as much as we keep for self. Give the offering one Sunday a month to orphans; then that of another Sunday a month to missions. Keep the offering of the other two Sundays a month for self—to buy literature and pay current expenses. No school has yet adopted this to its hurt so far as we have heard. Our Conventions have requested and urged all our schools to try. It cannot hurt.

EDUCATORS SEE DANGER TO CHILDREN.

A report just compiled in the public schools of Washington shows that out of nearly twenty-seven thousand children in the first four grades, more than eight thousand have repeated one or more semesters. Commenting upon the report, Superintendent of Schools Frank Ballou, said:

"The educational situation revealed by the statistics on repeating in the primary grades demands immediate consideration. These facts should prompt us to ask ourselves whether we, as teachers and school officers are doing all we ought to do, or what we ought to do, for these pupils who are so frequently failing of promotion. Are those pupils having a square deal educationally?"

The blame for the condition can not be well laid to inefficient teaching, but to overcrowding. Overcrowding schools is not confined to the Nation's Capital, although the school situation in Washington is deplorable. Schools are overcrowded all over the country, due to the inhibition of building during the war. But it is pointed out that the remedy of more building is not one which will help the children of today, if the erection of more buildings is postponed until the future. The children of today are growing up. The child who repeats several classes is losing time. He will get to the high school so late that he will not be able to graduate, but will in many cases go to work unprepared, adding one more to America's already large number of partially educated men.

More schools, more rooms, more teachers means smaller classes; and smaller classes mean better classes. Teachers may, indeed, ask themselves with Dr. Ballou whether they have done their best for the child who can not be promoted, but governments, which fail to provide facilities with which teachers can do their best, must also bear their proportion of responsibility for the grave situation which must inevitably confront the United States if it continues to neglect the very foundation of healthy national growth; education of its youth.

Some weeks ago we published a small editorial note on the song, "Longing for Mother," by Brother Franklin Babb, of Lee's Creek, Ohio. In some way, we cannot tell just how, his address was given as Lost Creek, Ohio. If you ordered the song by sending to Lost Creek, Ohio, please correct that by sending again to Lee's Creek, Ohio. The song will pull more than one tear from your eyes as you sing this fine tune, so full of rich sentiment. We have known Bro. Babb for years, and believe him to be a most worthy brother and thoroughly reliable. The price of the song is 25 cents.

DEPLORES LACK OF HOME INFLUENCE FOR CHILD.

CHILD NOW COMING INTO OWN

Blames Living in Apartments and Hotels and Desire of Parents to Be Amused for Failure to Give Offspring Attention They Need.

With "Religion in the Home" as the subject of his sermon last Sunday night, Rev. W. T. Walters, pastor of the First Christian Church, preached to a large congregation, beginning with this admonition:

"Only take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes saw, and lest they depart from thy heart all the days of thy life, but make them known unto thy children and thy children's children."

The activities of the generation of to-day are a product of the preceding generations. We are farmers, mechanics, merchants, lawyers, teachers, physicians and so forth, because others were before us.

Knowledge of history, government and social customs has been transmitted from father to son, and what they have given us, plus our own personality and individual efforts, has made us what we are.

Our religions have come to us in the same way. It was God's way of instructing His chosen people. The two elements of making the home religious are contained in our text.

First, to keep our own souls diligently; and second to teach religion to our children.

Living in Child's Age

We are living in the child's age—a time when the long-neglected child is coming into his own. We have passed through periods of neglect and indifference, but to-day we are putting the child in the center of practically all reformatory forces. If we were to draw a circle and write the word "Child" in it, we would find one line entering that circle from the State representing better school facilities, another representing the State health department, another industrial schools, another representing special schools for the weak-minded and otherwise afflicted child.

Society would center its lines of better sanitary conditions, public playgrounds, directed recreation and fresh-air work in this same circle, while the church, at last aroused to its responsibility, would converge the lines of better Sunday schools, vacation Bible schools, week-day religious instruction, young people's societies and institutional church work in the circle representing the child.

Home Influence Weakest Link

However, the link which should be the strongest in the chain of influences thrown around the child is the weakest. It is the home, and while every other force has been gaining in its methods and activities in behalf of the child, the home has been losing.

This loss is due more to our complex civilization than to a neglect on the part of the parents.

Residing in hotels and apartment houses has done much to destroy the ideal home life. The automobile, the moving-picture show, the theater, the evening lecture, the night school and even the church activities have all contributed to leaving no time or place for the family gathering. With the passing of this condition has passed the strongest tie in the home influence.

Parents Losing Authority

The weakening of parental authority means the loss of another valuable factor in the development of the child. Perhaps, it would not be wise to go back to the days of so much corporal punishment, but it would be well to get back to the time or condition where the child would be obedient to the parent.

1. We are to make the Bible truths known unto our children.

2. We are to train the child up in the way he should go.

3. We are to train the child in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

4. Children are to obey the parents in all things.

Not until religion has a higher place in the discussion in the home than, business, society or sports, will the home have a religious atmosphere adapted to the highest spiritual development of the child.—Richmond Times Dispatch.

PRESENT-DAY PREACHING

The critical intellect of our day takes pleasure in dealing mercilessly with religion. It hesitates not in the least in asserting that the accepted form of historic Christianity has spent itself. It contends that it must be modified and modernized and rationalized if it is to survive the present shocked condition. Its attitude toward the preacher is that of looking back; the procession has passed him; is that of looking down; there are heights of truth to which he has not attained. It does not even hesitate to castigate him with the severest depreciations. We have no sympathy with this form of criticism.

TINCTURE WITH WORMWOOD.

There is a contemporary criticism that is unworthy thinking men. It is tintured with wormwood. It is colored with a yellowness that betrays its source in unmitigated bile. It is suffering with jaundice that discolors the eye and impairs the vision. It is that criticism which arraigned Jesus Christ before Pilate and crucified him on a wooden cross; which stoned Stephen and let him die in the midst of his prayers; which hooted Paul for a madman and left him to perish outside the gates of Lystra; which cried out against Savonarola as a heretic and burned him at the stake before the portals of San Marco Cathedral; which announced Martin Luther an apostate and sought to take him in shackles to Rome; which bound Columbus in chains and threw him, the discoverer of a continent, into a dungeon as a common malefactor; which drove Dante from his native city and made him suffer the bitterness of exile, because he had dared to write of the eternal beauties and felicities of Paradise. It is that same criticism that bickers like Shylock for the last drachm and the last drop of blood. It drove Shakespeare to write sonnet, "When in disgrace with fortune and men's eyes." In its lack of appreciation it gave John Milton five pounds for "Paradise Lost." In its parsimonious hold upon the fortunes of men it kept Samuel Johnson, the father of English lexicographers, standing at the door of Lord Chesterfield begging for a shilling to buy his morning meal. Yes, where has not the spirit of criticism and depreciation not gone? Whom has it not attacked? It followed Shelley, the poet, and reviled him as an unclean dog. It trailed Keats, the sweet singer, in his sublime flights midst the stars and celestial ways until he dropped into his early grave. It twitted Gluck; it laughed at Schubert; it reared at Beethoven; it shouted paranoiac at Wagner. It has not hesitated to attack the proudest geniuses that have blessed the long history of the human race. It has committed many invidious follies. Its stupidities have risen like barriers against the light of truth. It has stood formidable and foreboding, sullenly blockading the progress of mankind. Call it what we will, higher criticism, lower criticism, rational criticism, destructive criticism, the great question is, is it ugly criticism?

THE MINISTRY SUFFERS.

The ministry suffers under this scrutiny of prejudice and the ugliness of depreciation. The average secularized individual does not want a man come around who makes him think of God. Such an one makes him uncomfortable. He does not enjoy being uncomfortable. He is seeking to find satisfaction and comfort and ease and luxury, and above all, inward contentment, in another way than that recommended by the preacher of the gospel. When this man of divine authority appears he is disturbed. He does not want him about.

We are interested in the minister's criticism of his own work. What has he to say about it? How does he look upon it? Can he see its failures and characterize them? Has he the power to be self-analytical and critical? What is he saying about his work today? What is his judgment on preaching today? We discover he is saying at least three things:

TOO BROAD AND TOO SHALLOW.

First. He is saying that present-day preaching is too broad, hence it is too shallow. It covers too wide a field. It encourses too much mousing of economics, of psychology, of sociology, of criminology, of Americanism, of internationalism, of social service, of community life, of strikes and lockouts and boycotts, of modernism, and a thousand and one other subjects that pertain only indirectly or remotely to religion and the spiritual life. Present-day preaching does not run deep. The average hearer can see the bottom at almost any point and it is always human. The preacher grows his lilies out of the muck and mud, not knowing that men want to see the stars of heaven mirrored in the depths of a stream that makes them think of Bethlehem and singing angels. It is too shallow. Man unaided can walk across. It does not lead men out into the depths of God. The stream was not made to swim in, but to wade and cavort in as those familiar with its depths and delighting themselves with its security. The preacher who does not get beyond his depths once in a while is too cautious to make an adventurous appeal to any land-stranded soul.

NOT ENOUGH CURRENT.

Second. Present-day preaching is too placid, hence without decided current. Because a stream runs quietly is no sign that it is deep. The Bible does not tell us that Christianity is to go forward evenly like a prosperous business, growing every year. Christian preaching that moves forward like a summer breeze bears not the message of a prophet. Christian preaching that pours forth as a stream from a hidden spring without ripple or without chasing laughter finds not its source in the fountain of life. Mark you, the stream of Christian preaching, prophetic preaching, is beset by walls that hold it; that conserve it; that oppose it; that will not let it go; that confining it give it power and drive it forward with compelling force. Witness the influence of the world as it rises in antagonism on either side of it. Watch the deepening by the impact of the stones that form the rapids in the very channel itself. The swirlings and eddyings that rise from the misery of defeat, the delays of victory, the half-expressed faith, the partially-answered prayer, the unfulfilled prophecy, the prediction that fell short of its goal, all these crowd along the channel, slip into the stream, then deepen, then resist, then impede, then lie hidden, producing rapids, concealing the depths of terrors. The stream of Christian preaching is not of tempered waters that flow listlessly along a safe and chartered channel. True, there are those who would lead us to believe that it is. They proclaim a gospel of leisure and comfort, guaranteed by sanitation and prophylaxis. The poor turn unto it to find apples of Sodom hidden in the ashes of Gomorrah. For when the minister turns the current of sanitation into the stream of Christian preaching, men never reach the landing of salvation, but drift out to sea and are lost without compass on the wide expanses of doubt and agnosticism. For placidity is the bane of present-day preaching.

TOO DULL AND INSIPID.

Third. Present-day preaching is too vapid, hence it is flat and dull and often insipid. It is easy for a minister to preach all around a subject and never touch it. Like a blind man, he is able to identify an elephant by rubbing his hands over it. Touching its limbs, he declares it is like a tree. Touching its proboscis, he swears it is like a snake. But what is an elephant like? The blind man cannot tell by touching it. He must think and relate and see with his mind's eye. He must not depend upon his tactile powers in dealing with a subject too large for his grasping. A preacher cannot present the gospel by touching it here and there, by thinking all around it. By this method it will appear flat and dull surface. It will be insipid to the taste and find itself rejected by the cultured palate. Christian preaching must be fresh and pure and original. Selfishness in the preacher's heart gives it a sulphur taste. It must be water not drawn from a cistern where storage was made during the refreshing season. It must be drawn from wells of living water. Then the vapidness of present-day preaching will pass away. In the place of dullness and in the place of flatness will come sweetness and crystalline freshness that will charm all thirsty men and draw them to drink of the waters of life freely.

*An Editorial in The Western Christian Advocate. We commend it to the careful and prayerful study of our readers, and most especially to such as may be directly interested. In it are set forth facts of the highest importance to the health of Christianity of today.—Editor.

THE NEW CHAMPION OF THE CHRISTIAN FAITH

The great auditorium at Lakeside, Ohio, was filled to capacity with chairs on the platform and three rows of people standing on the edge round the entire circle on the outside. It was the most wonderful gathering of the season save one. Who was present to draw such a crowd. The Hon. William Jennings Bryan, late of Nebraska, now of Florida, and incidentally from everywhere in the United States. It was very evident that he has not had his day. He still wields his old power over the populace, and it follows him with unabated enthusiasm. If we are not mistaken, he has the largest hearing of any man in public life today. We express this conviction in the face of the fact that he is now taking a very unpopular course in attacking the professors and teachers of our high schools and universities over their attitude toward the theory of evolution. He still commands the respect of the great commonality of the people. They come to hear him by the thousands. Thank God, he seeks to do them naught but good. He is now endeavoring to defend and build up faith in Jesus Christ and the holy Bible. Men may differ from him. They may decidedly disagree with him. They cannot discount the vigor of his convictions.

He is having a new experience in this fight he is waging in behalf of the integrity of the Word of God. He confessed that he had not met such opposition and vilification and willful misunderstanding in all his political campaigns as he had received during the short period he had been dealing with the theological problems, from preachers and Christian leaders. It was a revelation to him. A man must be careful of the approach he makes when he opposes the trend in thought in the world of religion. The most vehement narrowness lies close to the surface, and when aroused, it becomes bitter and intolerant. So he has found, but he moves forward, watching the process.

It is interesting to see how the cycle turns, following men of doubt by men of faith. A little over one hundred years ago Tom Paine's "Age of Reason" was found in the library of every student of almost every college in America and in thousands of homes where thinking men loved books. Within less than eight decades Henry Drummond's books, "Natural Law in the Spiritual World" and "The Ascent of Man," were in the libraries and on the shelves of every thoughtful and serious-minded student, and the "Age of Reason" had gone to the limbo of the junk heap, where worms devour and dust collects. Then came the great infidel, Robert Ingersoll, that silver-tongued orator who found the American people waiting for him in the largest assemblies of the day. He sought to destroy faith, and discovered that the people seemed glad to hear him. Then came William Jennings Bryan, the nonpariel, with an eloquence that has seldom been matched in public life, before for over thirty-five years, leading in different causes, many of which proved to be unpopular, and some unwise. Midst fire and sword, metaphorically speaking, he has maintained himself without a spot or blemish. In the height of his career he becomes a champion of Christianity and the Bible, turning all his genius in their defense and pouring forth a volume of eloquence that should stir the heart of the nation. If the people would only listen to him, regardless of the degree to which they differ from him. He has a great truth he is battling for, the supremacy of Christian thought and ideals. He is standing for the Bible. That should be enough to command the respect of the entire Christian world. But the answer he gets is, one should be careful how he stands in defense of the Word of God—for there are reservations to be respected. The Bible must be the Word of God as we see it, as we have accepted it. It is not out-and-out, through-and-through, but only a certain way the Word of God says the man who claims to be advanced in his thinking. Mr. Bryan has no reservations. It is a perfect delight to hear him talk about the Bible as the greatest of books. If he is symptomatic, as he so frequently has been, in his present activities, may he find support of all men of faith, though they cannot go with him in his scientific ideas. Better by far have him on the horizon of the church than such a man as Tom Paine or Bob Ingersoll. This is making no concession. This is almost belittling his attempts to do what he considers his duty. It is far better for the church to live in an age of Bryanism than in that of Tom Paineism. Better have a champion of Christianity, though he utilizes the jawbone of an ass, than to suffer the bald atheism of an Ingersoll.

His attack upon education, which is based upon prevailing scientific ideas, will do little harm. No man will keep his children out of the schools for fear their Christian faith may be taken from them. The fact is that there is a good deal of non-essential stuff in Mr. Bryan's preaching. This will not go very deep into the intelligence of his hearers. For when a man goes contrary to the intellectual light of the day in which religion and Christianity are interpreted, he does not get very far. His best thought and his honest conviction will filter through and remain a permanent deposit in the life of the people, but that which is not worth while will be carried away as the refuse from ashes to ashes and dust to dust. For this reason those who disagree with him need not worry. It is not the first time he has thrown a shaft of his own personal conviction across the horizon of the past thirty years and moved on as a good man to another interest which attracts his attention. When we realize his ability and seek to value his powers and rate his national influence, we thank God he is on the side of the church and giving his abilities and his influence in defense of the Christian position. He could do a world of harm if he were ugly and morose and unbelieving and agnostic and bitter and resentful. After all his running for the presidency, after all his battles in political life, after all his defeats, he has kept his optimism and his faith in his fellowmen. He is still religious and believes in Jesus Christ and the moral integrity of the race.

But this is not all. Witness the high-grade American citizenship he has lived before the present generation. Talk about men in public life and the rottenness of politics. But there stands William Jennings Bryan with untainted moral integrity. Talk about the scarcity of men of intellectual conviction in political life. But there stands the great Commoner, whom even his most decided enemies concede to be without moral dissimulation. They believe in his sincerity. The majority of the American people have always disagreed with him in his policies. They have listened to him. They have applauded him in his oratory. They have followed him in his Chautauqua journeys. They have kindly and enthusiastically encouraged him in his proposals for the betterment of the common interests of life. Now that he has become the defender of the faith, they accept him with the same degree of grace they have always extended him.

His work in the daily newspapers of the country is growing in influence. Thousands upon thousands read what he writes on the Sunday School Lesson, while hundreds of others go into their Bible classes to teach what he has written in his public discussions in the news prints.

We do not readily see what is to be the outcome of his present course in the wider field he is now entering. The platform has been lucrative, and the printed page as he defends religion will be no less so. He has come to the place where he is wielding an influence in American life not only with the spoken word that is envied by many thoughtful men, but also by the written word that increases his audience most equal to a radio broadcasting principle. We have no apologies or defense to make of him. He needs none. He is a phenomena deserving the study of the thoughtful, the support of the serious, and the encouragement of the loyal. He will go on with his work. He cannot be checkmated. He must be utilized.—The Western Christian Advocate.

FROM THE FIELD

Our meeting at Antioch was fine. Two services a day, morning and afternoon. Dr. J. P. Barrett was with us from Sunday morning to Thursday afternoon and did the preaching. Dr. Barrett was at his best and the preaching was fine from the beginning to the end. There were twenty some conversions and seventeen united with the church.

May the Lord continue to bless the old church.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

October 22, 1922.

Subject.—"Jesus Tempted."—Luke 4: 1-30.

Golden Text.—"In that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted".—Heb. 2: 18.

Devotional Readings.—Hebrews 4: 14; 1: 10.

Reference Material.—Phil. 2: 5-11; Heb. 2: 14-18; 4: 14-16.

LESSON TEACHINGS:

"Let a man be but earnest in praying against a temptation as the tempter is in pressing it, and he need not proceed by a surer method."

—Bishop Smith.

"Temptation is not sin, but yielding to it is." We are told that Jesus was "tempted like as we are, yet without sin." His life was full of the Holy Spirit, and that gave Him the power to resist very real and very powerful temptations. Through the temptations of the wilderness, Christ's character was revealed. Through our attitude when face to face with temptation, is our real self made known. Only when we yield to temptation do we sin, and God has given us the power to overcome through His Son.

Only tried men are fit for service. In the wilderness Jesus Christ was tried, and passed every test with flying colors.

"And Jesus answered them." He knew well God's Word, and the knowledge served Him well. The great work of the Sunday School is to teach God's Word to boys and girls and men and women. Then may they truly say with the Psalmist: "Thy word have I hid in mine heart; that I might not sin against thee." Only God and His Word can deliver us from temptation.

"And he taught" (vs. 15). As a boy Jesus learned the Word of His Heavenly Father. As a man He used that Word to conquer the tempter, and then "as His custom was," he went into the Jewish church on the Sabbath and taught to others the great truths which were strengthening His own life. "Be ye doers of the word and not hearers only." God needs hearers first, and then doers and teachers.

The story is told that on the slope of Long's Peak in Colorado, there rises the ruin of a great tree of the forest. The naturalist claims that the tree has stood there for four hundred years. Avalanches and storms and lightning seemed powerless against it. But in the end it was killed by tiny beetles which worked into its massive trunk. Little insects which could have been easily killed at first caused a ruin which mighty storms had failed to bring about. Yielding to small temptations has caused the ruin of noble characters. If we are to keep alive, we must, with the power and help of God, crush the apparently small enemies which assail our lives, and daily practice the principles of the Christ in our lives.

"Ask the Saviour to help you,
Comfort, strengthen and keep you;
He is willing to aid you,
He will carry you through."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

October 22, 1922.

Subject.—"Reverence and Worship."—Psalms 111: 1-10.

THOUGHTS ON THE TOPIC.

"And what greater calamity can fall upon a nation than the loss of worship."—Emerson.

The first emphasis of Christian Endeavor is upon the growth of the spiritual life. For this growth reverence and worship are indispensable. This meeting should increase our honor and regard for the house of God and bring a greater appreciation of the privilege of private and public worship. Read in the eighty-fourth Psalm of the longing of the psalmist for the worship of the temple. "Worship is the soul's humble and earnest approach to God in a definite act."

Plan your Christian Endeavor worship service. Arrange a program of prayer and Scripture and hymns that will produce a spirit of reverence. In every heart there is a desire to worship a Supreme Being. Does your program really call forth that spirit and give opportunity for its expression. Miss Koontz tells us: "After all, true worship comes only as a by-product of the worship program. If there is no meditation, no new purposes formed, no service rendered later, the program of worship has been a failure." Test your own meetings by her standard!

"Worship is not an end in itself, but by making God and His purposes a reality in the life of the Christian, it tends to unify, to solemnize and to give purpose to all of life. The test of worship is always to be found in its effects upon life."—Stowell.

The psalmist gives the reason for our worship of our Maker: "For he is our God, and we are the people of his pasture, and the sheep of his hand." For His gifts and care and protection do we thank Him in worship.

"God is a Spirit: and they that worship him must worship in spirit and truth."

A MEDITATION.

Curfew is just ringing in the old revolutionary town of Princeton. Someone is playing a piano in the parlor nearby. I am thinking of you. Music, moonlight, and olden memories always make me think of those I love. You are they. You, the dear old farmer-folk of old Virginia, and you, the kith and kin of North Carolina. It is Saturday night. Some of you are tired, some of you are anxious about the sick, and some of you are doing much the same as I—namely, thinking of friends.

Friends change their places and stations in life, but love abides forever. Some of my best friends are very poor in either, or both, this world's goods or its achievements but you are a source of great joy to me to-night. Some of you have left the old farm and found places in towns or cities, but your hearts are all the same. And to-night as I meditate on you it matters little whether you are farmer, preacher, student, teacher, merchant, lawyer, or business man or woman, I love you. Is it wrong to take a little of these columns to tell you that? The whole world is wanting love, and yet it has more now than it knows about! So much of it remains untold, either in word or action.

The other day I was a little catty, and ugly toward a dear friend. It was Sunday, too. And as the sun was setting, with tears in my eyes, I told him I was sorry. He told me he didn't realize I was ugly toward him, and he spoke so gently, I saw he loved me still. He was a farmer. How often it is an accident which causes us to confess our love for one another.

Christ comes confessing His love for us. In word, in deed, in His very life blood He confesses it. With the radiant joy of His youth He confesses it; with tears of sympathy He confesses it; with longing, lingering, suffering pity He confesses it; with thorns on His brow He confesses it; in dying on the cross He confesses it; and, praise be to His precious name, before the Father and angels in Heaven He confesses He loves us beyond every measure of the finite mind! His telling us He loves us is no accident either for he has planned to tell us in innumerable ways. How we should love Him! How we should confess it till all the world catches up the refrain! The love I have for you is a by product of the love He has for me.

IN THE VALLEY OF DECISION

Near eight hundred years before the coming of Christ, the prophet Joel, through inspiration, saw the judgment of God ready to be visited upon the enemies of Israel and blessings promised to Zion. The prophet declared that the day of the Lord was near, in the valley of decision, and multitudes were in that valley. In consideration of the urgent needs of our Church to-day and the indifferent response of so many to these needs, I feel that there are many of God's people within the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention who are in the valley of decision. It is sad to think of the truth of this statement, for the King's business requires haste. The cause needs the active, co-operative decision from those who serve in His sacred ranks.

There are several enterprises in connection with our work as a denomination in the South. What are you doing, brother, to encourage the people to support, to foster, these enterprises? Men and Millions properly considered and supported will meet the demands that are now so urgent. The appeals for co-operation in supporting the call for Missions, Christian Education, Orphanage, and Aged Ministers, are so impressive and heart-searching as to demand the very best there is within us in response.

Brother, sister, are you away down in the valley, where God cannot reveal Himself unto you, where it is impossible for Him to embrace you in His love, so you can realize that sweet relationship, that enchanting fellowship, which will gladden, thrill and inspire your very soul? If you are, step out and upon the Rock, having decided for God, and enjoy that blessed assurance that is given to as many as are hid with Christ in God. Get busy in His service, seek to get your Sunday School (if not already doing so) to give to the orphanage and missions.

Plead with the Lord for guidance, for ability and inspiration to meet your pledges to Men and Millions. Then all through the day you can walk with Him and talk with Him, and when to go to your bed at night to rest in sweet repose. Oh, what joy, what peace, what unspeakable bliss will be yours in His presence.

CHILD'S HOUR

DOING IT FOR CHRIST'S SAKE

"I don't believe that I can go to Sunday School any more," sighed Lois Chamberlain, throwing her furs down on a couch and leaning on her elbows on the table while she gazed at her mother.

"What's the trouble, dear?"

"It's that Joe Hicks. Actually, mother I don't think there is such a badly behaved boy anywhere. And just when I had the class nobody else could manage becoming a model, that this boy should be put into it and upset everything: it's a shame!"

Lois' voice sounded tearful.

"It is discouraging, child, but after all what are Sunday Schools for?"

"Well, they are not reformatories," was the forceful reply.

"No, that's true. But I suppose you would not have taught the Bible to the rest, would you?"

"No-o," confessed Lois.

She was revealed now as a young woman of exceedingly delicate appearance, well dressed, hair becomingly arranged, eyes shining with the intelligence and will which caused the five boys in a class for which it was difficult to find a teacher to sit up and take notice.

"Mother, he's as rude as can be. His clothes need patching and his hands—I don't believe that they have been washed in a month. What kind of a home has he come from?"

"That's for you to find out, my dear," answered Mrs. Chamberlain in a tone which sent Lois to her room to do some serious thinking and considerable praying.

Lois Chamberlain was no coward. She faced something that she did not want to do. All the other boys, while unmanageable, belonged to respectable families. It was easy to go to see them in pleasant homes. She abhorred dirt.

Perhaps that was why she hesitated to enter the ramshackle house belonging to Bill Hicks, who only worked when he had to and was perfectly willing to take in washing for his wife to do. She was at it now, red-faced and in no good humor, because Bill was in bed reading the newspaper.

"I'm Joe's Sunday School teacher," Lois explained.

Mrs. Hicks wrung the soap from her hands and stared at this vision from the aristocratic North Side.

"Well, it wa'n't my doin's sendin' him to that school. A man met him an' told 'im if he'd go he'd learn somethin' new an' nice, new an' nice," she repeated grimly. "Won't ye come in miss? We ain't got much to offer ye, but ye're welcome to set, an' ef ye don't mind I'll go on with my washin'."

Lois sat down on a broken chair and her heart sank. Joe came from this home, and she had expected fine manners and clean hands. Poverty glared at her from unpainted furniture and nicked crockery, from the hard face of the woman bending over a tub.

"Mary," called a gruff voice from above, "who's that talkin' down there?"

The woman raised eyes in which pride and shame were mingled.

"It's Bill, my man; I'll go and see what he wants. He—ain't workin' today."

While she was gone, Lois made a resolution. Something must be done about Joe. He really needed help. It was a new thought to Lois, who had always considered her work in Sunday School as a sort of favor she was conferring on the church. She began to realize that it was something for God and human beings. The aim was not entirely so much money, but it was to lift up the boys and girls—to help them to be better and stronger.

It meant sacrifice, too. Beneath Mrs. Hicks's rough manner she saw a desire for better things. Maybe in helping Joe she could shed some light into this dark home and make things easier.

She decided to plunge in boldly.

"Mrs. Hicks, will you let Joe come and have supper with me tomorrow?"

There was silence. Lois saw tears glisten in the weary eyes.

"Ain't you Jerome Chamberlain's girl?" Mrs. Hicks asked, when the pause was growing painful.

"Yes."

"An' you ask my boy to come to your big, fine house? Why he ain't got no clothes fit to wear. An' he's dirty, an' unkempt, an' plays on the street. Why? 'Cause I'm always at the washin' an' can't tend to the children. They ain't got no real home, nor no place to go. Why are ye doin' this?"

"I guess," answered Lois slowly, "it's for the Lord Jesus Christ's sake and because he said, 'Let the little ones come unto me.'"

"I ain't hear much about him sence I was a girl. I useter go to Sunday School in them days, an' that's why I let go so easy. Joe'll come tomorrow night, Miss Chamberlain, and thank you."

"Wot're ye doin'?" growled Bill that night. "I'm mendin' up Joe's one suit," she answered, with a touch of bitterness. "He's goin' to supper at Jerome Chamberlain's big house."

Bill laughed. "Wot are ye talkin' about, old woman? Jerome Chamberlain! Well, if he' gimme a chance I'd go to work fer good in his factories, an' stick."

"Ye wouldn't! honest, Bill?"

Mrs. Hicks dropped Joe's brown jacket on which she was putting a black patch and stared at her husband.

"I just would, sure, Mary. But there ain't no chance o' that."

Bill Hicks and his wife watched Joe as he made his exit from the half-ruined house, which they got cheap beause it was liable to fall down any minute.

Bill's eyes were big with surprise and some pride, seeing how fine Joe looked in clothes neatly patched and pressed by a very weary mother, his face shiny with soap. It had been a trying experience for Joe, and he wished sincerely that he had never set eyes on Miss Chamberlain or gone near the Sunday School. It was a trap for unwary boys to make them get washed.

"Now be sure to say 'Yes, ma'am,' an' 'Thank ye,' every time. Don't let 'em think we didn't teach ye no manners," warned Mrs. Hicks.

"An' if ye should see Jerome," added Bill, "you tell 'im—"

Mrs. Hicks pulled him inside the door.

"It ain't polite, Bill. You mustn't tell Joe to ask Chamberlain fer no favors. But, oh, Bill, ef ye only could git a place there!"

Mrs. Hicks, worn out by days and nights of work, threw her apron over her head and cried, while Bill awkwardly tried to comfort her.

It was a trying occasion for Lois as well as for Joe Hicks—one never to be forgotten. She and her mother ate supper with a tongue-tied boy.

But beefsteak and roast potatoes, pudding and chocolate will do wonders, and by the time that Jerome Chamberlain put his latchkey into the door, having been requested by his daughter to eat at a restaurant, Joe was quite at home; his hair was rumped, as usual, he was putting records into the victrola as casually as if he did it every night.

The business man sat down in an arm chair and watched the boy's face. It was an honest, open face.

He watched Lois, too, and something made his heart feel very warm and tender. To him it was a great thing that the girl who loved beauty and daintiness should be entertaining a boy from Jones's Alley "for Christ's sake."

Rag-time, Joe liked, and "Over There" and "Keep the Home Fires Burning." He told Lois that the hurdy-gurdy plays 'em.

Then Lois put into the victrola the "Wonderful Story" of how Jesus was here among men and called to him the children and blessed them. The firelight shone on Joe's face as she sang this hymn, and he was very quiet.

"Is your father Bill Hicks, who used to work at Parker's?" asked Mr. Chamberlain when nine o'clock struck and Joe tore himself from the victrola.

"Yes, sir."

"Got fired from there, didn't he? Maybe it wasn't his fault, from what I heard today. Doin' much now?"

"He don't work at all, sir." Joe was rapidly acquiring "manners."

"Well, tell him to come around to the foreman tomorrow and maybe there'll be a job for him."

"Oh, daddy!" Lois held the lapel of her father's coat and smiled at him. "You are a dear."

"And what are you?" he asked, pushing up a loose curl of fluffy hair.

"Mrs. Hicks will be so happy, daddy."

Mrs. Hicks was happy, but stern.

"Did you remember your manners, as I told you?" she asked, trying not to let her joy show in her face. Bill had promised to do his best now at the factory.

"Yes, ma."

"Well, remember this: Miss Chamberlain ain't a-doing this stunt fer her own pleasure, I tell ye that. It ain't no fun fer her to take keer of a lot o' kids like you. Ef ye don't behave an' go clean to Sunday School, ye'll have the threshin' of yer life."

Then suddenly she stopped and kissed him and Joe threw his arms around her neck. She had been too tired and busy to kiss him for a long time.

Bill Hicks turned around.

"What under the sun is she doin' it fer, then, ma?" he asked.

"For the Lord Jesus Christ's sake, she said," answered Mrs. Hicks, with a little trembling in her voice.

"I guess, ma, mebbe we'd better go 'long with Joe," suggested Bil Hicks.—Selected.

We had a fine baptismal service. Thirty-three were immersed. Dr. Jay began the baptizing by entering the pool with his little daughter, Virginia. It was very impressive and beautiful, when he said, "I baptize thee my sister and daughter." Before the immersion, I baptized five by sprinkling. This service of baptism is always one of solemnity and beauty to me. I believe the service of immersion that followed was as rich in worship and beauty as I have ever witnessed—Rev. Jas. H. Lightbourne, Holland, Va. That must have been a delightful occasion and a most inspiring scene. To see thirty-eight persons baptized on one occasion is an encouragement.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON,
Superintendent.

Dear Uncle Chas.—I am a little boy two years old. My birthday was the 22nd of September and Daddy gave me a rocking chair, but I don't like it very much. I rather run away from Mother, out in the street.

I am sending my dues for the Little Cousins and hope they are all well.

JESSE PAUL LONG, JR.
Hertford, N. C.

"Uncle Charlie" imagines you're a fine little boy. We have a little boy here about your age. He is real sweet and the children all love him. Wish you could visit our "home" and play with the little children. I'm sure you would all be great friends.

With love,
"UNCLE CHARLIE."

HOLY NECK, VIRGINIA.

Vacation days are over and the work of the church is gradually pulling up to normal, with the hope that much advance ground may be gained. Indeed we feel that much gain has already been made.

Our week of special revival meetings was observed September 4th to 8th. It was indeed a revival of interest and spirit on the part of the church. Dr. L. E. Smith, of Norfolk, Va., brought the messages each afternoon and night and with great power did he present the truth. His sermons were logically presented. He began with the essentials of a true revival,—prayer, power, and personal work, and his appeals were convincing; so much so, that you were impelled to take your stand either for Christ or against Him. No neutral ground was left.

We believe the church was carried to new heights in this meeting and our prayer is that all advanced ground gained may be held during the year and be our inspiration to launch out into larger and nobler things in Christ Jesus.

FIELD NEWS.

Pleasant Hill Church. We had a good day at Pleasant Hill, Alamance county, yesterday, October 1st. There was a nice attendance at Sunday School and at church services and a good monthly offering by the Sunday School for the Christian Orphanage.

Eighteen young people were received into church fellowship—one by transfer and seventeen by profession of faith. Fourteen of those received were baptized that day.

At the close of our protracted meeting, September 9th, three members were received, one of whom was baptized.

Rev. Walker L. Fogleman was with us in our revival services in September and rendered valuable services as a worker. He preached for us on the opening day of the meeting and his sermon was well received.

Pleasant Hill is one of our old churches. It was organized nearly one hundred years ago.

CONCERNING BETHLEHEM, VA.

The remodeling of the Bethlehem Church is on in full blast. The building is now ready for the new roof. It has been so arranged that the work of remodeling may go on and still not prevent regular services in the church. Brother W. B. Byrd, a member of the church, was employed for full time to superintend the construction work and to employ competent workmen for the job. He has been most faithful and untiring at his task.

The auditorium will be considerably enlarged and equipped with new modern seats, furnace heat, and electric lights.

Sixteen large windows (3½ x 10), and two large triple windows (11 x 12) over all, made of beautiful art glass, and one large figure, will also adorn the auditorium and furnish light. It is hoped to have every one of these windows donated by members and friends of the church.

Nine Sunday School rooms will add to the equipment for Sunday School purposes.

We have been serving this church as a supply pastor since last December and the people have responded in a remarkable way to appeals that have been made. We conducted a week's revival meeting with this church in August and two were added to the church as a result: Two splendid young men, brothers, that we trust will become pillars in the church. At a later service on Sunday, another made confession and was received into the church. On Wednesday we baptized three in the rising tide just by Lake Cohoon.

We understand that the churches of this pastorate have extended a call to Rev. T. E. White, of Sanford, N. C. We trust that Bro. White may be able to see the way clearly to come to this field already white unto harvest.

AT DEPOT, RALEIGH, N. C.

Dear Dr. Barrett:

I preached at Ebenezer last Sunday 11 A. M., Six Forks 2:30 P. M., and at the First Christian Church here 7:30 P. M.

Brother Knight is undecided about where he will labor next year. The church here is trying to secure the services of Brother Rowland. I will return to Franklinton today. Next Saturday and Sunday is the time for quarterly and communion meeting at Mt. Auburn. I will go there next Friday. Preach at Mt. Airy 11 A. M. to 2:30 P. M., and possibly at Henderson 7:30 P. M. The next session of the A. C. C. and G. R. A. at Burlington, N. C., will, I believe, be the largest and most important ever held.

The train time cometh.

DAN. A. LONG.

Crime and criminal accidents were never more common in this country than at this time. Whatever other causes there may be, one of the chief cause is that those who are guilty of them are not adequately punished. One of the causes for failure to punish is the long delays in our courts. Frequently a minor offense is in court for months, before the offender is brought to trial; and more serious offenses are frequently carried over many months or it may be for years, before the innocence or guilt of the accused offender is decided. Every one who has any thing to do with court procedure knows that it is much harder to convict a criminal after a long delay than it is when the evidence is fresh. This delay often results in the offender being given a much lighter penalty than he deserves. Another trouble is that courts too often impose penalties that have only a very slight deterrent effect upon those who are tempted to violate the law. Frequently the man who violates the prohibition law by making or selling liquor, is only fined a comparatively small amount. Any one in that business, because of its great profits, is entirely willing to risk a fine, and even a short jail term. If he knew that he would be sent to the penitentiary, when convicted of this violation of law, many a man would be made a keeper of the law, instead of a law-breaker. The number of so-called accidents from automobiles is distressingly large. The deaths from this cause run well up into the thousands and the lesser injuries into the hundreds of thousands each year. Some of these accidents seem to be unavoidable so far as the drivers of the automobiles are concerned, but the vast majority of them are due to their recklessness or carelessness. When a driver of an automobile through careless or recklessness kills or injures another, he should be punished so severely that not only he, but others also, will be made more careful in the future. A determination to violate law or a carelessness in observing it, deserves adequate punishment. This in the end is for the good of the offender as well as the public.—Exchange.

EARP.

James Thomas Earp was born in Halifax county, Va., February 21, 1854, and died September 19, 1922, aged sixty-eight years, six months and twenty-eight days. Brother Earp had been a deacon in Lebanon Christian Church for a quarter of a century and was faithful in the performance of his duties. October 10, 1886, he married Margaret Jones Williamson, who died the 2nd of December, 1921. To them were born three sons as follows: Rev. B. J. Earp, Newport News, Va.; Tom Jones and Henry, Seward, N. C. There are seven living grandchildren.

On Sunday, the 17th of September, the deceased was at church and was in fine spirits, entering heartily into the worship. At the close of the sermon he offered a beautiful prayer. On the day following he worked on his farm and in the evening he received injuries from the explosion of a small quantity of gasoline that resulted in his death the following morning. When told by the physician that his injuries were too serious for him to live, he was not alarmed. Told those about him that he was going to meet his wife, mother and grandson and it would be a happy meeting.

Brother Earp was a man of excellent practical business judgment. He began life penniless and by hard work and economy became independent. He educated his oldest son for the ministry and assisted the other two to become prosperous farmers. While he took great pride in the success of his son in the ministry he also was equally as thankful that the other two were active loyal laymen in the home church. He was as devout a Christian as I have ever known. He delighted to talk on spiritual things and to encourage the unsaved to seek Christ. He loved his church and was always at services and on time. In his home there was a room he called "the preacher's room." Here all the ministers who came his way found a cordial resting place.

A large crowd gathered at his church on the afternoon of September the 20th to attend the funeral by the writer and the burial was by his wife in the church cemetery. Many were the sad hearts and bowed heads around the grave, but all were thankful that they had known so honest and godly a man and none doubted that his spirit was rejoicing among the redeemed saints of heaven.

C. E. NEWMAN.

MRS. NANNIE V. RUSSELL.

WHEREAS, Mrs. Nannie V. Russell, widow of the late Deacon John J. Russell, has been recently called to her heavenly home; and

WHEREAS, Mrs. Russell was a faithful and devout member of Pleasant Grove Christian Church; be it Resolved, 1. That we, as a Church, bow in humble submission to this sad providence of God, remembering to render to Him our thanks for her long and lovely life among us.

2. That we commend her example to all of our people, and pray that the memory of her devotion may never die from among our members.

3. That we spread a copy of these resolutions upon our minutes, send a copy to the bereaved family, and have a copy published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

By order of the Church,

MRS. D. J. SIPE,

Secretary.

New Ferry, Va., Sept. 18, 1922.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

WHEREAS, Mrs. G. W. Truitt was a charter member of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church, and was true and faithful in her life, and devoted and interested in every good work of the Society cheerfully giving her time and money to the cause of missions among us; and

WHEREAS, it pleased our Heavenly Father to call her from labor to reward, removing her from our circle of active workers where she was so greatly loved for her beautiful Christian life and devoted service; therefore, be it Resolved, 1. That in the death of Sister Truitt this Society has sustained the loss of a true Christian servant of the Master, and her cheerful spirit and helpful service will be greatly missed.

2. That we bow in humble submission to the will of our Heavenly Father, thanking Him for giving her to us, and expressing our gratitude for her life of sweet fellowship and unselfish service.

3. That we express to her family our deep sympathy in their great bereavement, and commend them to Him whose comfort can give strength in our time of weakness and despair.

4. That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the records of this Society, a copy sent to the members of the family, and a copy sent to the CHRISTIAN SUN for publication.

A TIMELY ADMONITION TO MINISTERS

We ask that our ministers will read the following lines which was written by some unknown author specially to stir up the mind and heart of the preachers of the gospel. If all of our ministers will read and carefully reflect on the broad hints there given, it will not have appeared here in vain:

Preacher, facing needy souls,

Do not dare ignore them,
While God's fateful thunder rolls,
And you preach—before them;
Rather, finding out their need,

Piercing through and through them,
Though they shrink and though they bleed,

Preach your sermons—to them.

It is easy to parade,
Fling your knowledge o'er them,
Preaching sermons study-made
Pompously—before them;

But the sermons that will bless
Through and through and through them,
From your heart to theirs—no less—
Are the ones preached—to them.

PERRY.

Bruce, the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. P. R. Perry, died at the home on Pittsboro St., Chapel Hill, N. C., on September 17, 1922. His little body was laid to rest in the family plot of the Chapel Hill Cemetery on the day following his death.

In some respects this was the most beautiful burial of an infant I have ever witnessed. Six little boys acted as pallbearers, and several little girls assisted in carrying the profuse floral offering. A surprising number of the family's friends, in and out of town, were present to express their sympathy.

Bruce's earthly stay was short, but long enough that we were grieved at his passing.

"Transplanted into bliss, he now Adorns immortal bowers."

LEONIDAS JUDSON WHITE.

Leonidas Judson White was born June 26, 1856, in Southampton county, Va., and died August 18, 1922, at his home near Suffolk, Va., in the 67th year of his age.

About four years ago he suffered a stroke of paralysis from which he only partly recovered, when a second stroke came which caused his death within a few days.

He was for many years a member of the Bethlehem Church. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, and interment was made in the church cemetery.

He is survived by his widow and four children, Gavin V., of Norfolk, Va.; W. Ermotte, at home; Mrs. C. W. King, of Suffolk, Va., and William A. White, of Marion, Va. Three sisters and one brother also survive—Mrs. C. A. Brittle, Maury, Va.; Mrs. Belle Joyner, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. Emmett Carroll, Wakefield, Va., and J. W. White, Maury, Va.

His loved ones are commended to the care and keeping of a merciful Heavenly Father, Who can all our sorrows heal.

NUMBER 42.

A MODEST RECOGNITION OF A WORTHY MAN.

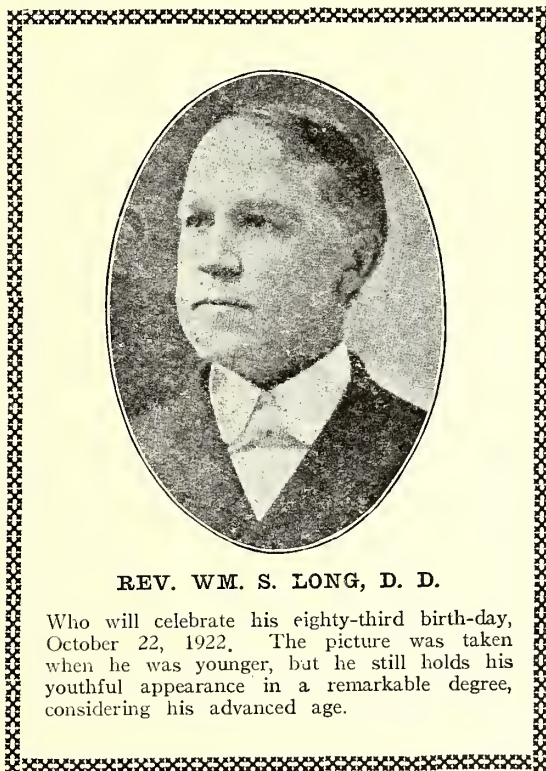

Pioneers often remain unrewarded during their lifetime. Inventors and discoverers often die poor. Columbus passed his last days in "poverty and neglect;" but he discovered a continent that may sometime lead the world. James Watt and George Stephenson are rewarded by the whistle of every steam engine that draws the traffic of mankind. Even Jesus did not see, in His lifetime among men, the full establishment of His church, though founded by His own blood. This by no means lessens the value of their contributions to the salvation and progress of the human race. Flowers upon the graves of good men grow out of the beauty and usefulness of their lives. "The blood of martyrs is the seed of the church," and the service of self-sacrificing men puts organizations forward for the glory of God and the progress of ages, even after their work is done. But a word of recognition, while men live, may sweeten their last days and compensate, in some measure, for burdens they have borne and the trials they have endured in the course of years.

Editor J. P. Barrett, D. D., has planned to pay tribute in the Christian Sun to REV. WILLIAM SAMUEL LONG, D. D., on his eighty-third birthday, October 22nd, 1922; and he has requested me to write for this special page. The idea, it seems to me, merits approval, and no one could feel more flattered by such opportunity than I do, or more willing to comply with his request.

Having lived in Dr. Long's family for three years, while attending his school in Graham, North Carolina, and having listened to his great sermons during those plastic years, I came in contact with his life in almost all ways; what I write, therefore, is not only from the head, but, also, from the heart. His life has been one continuous struggles to build for God and time. One might justly say, that he belongs to the "Old School" of teacher and preacher combined; and he is a fine combination of the well balanced, intellectual and spiritual man. His early educational aspirations and progress inspired his whole family to seek literary and professional pursuits; and what he did unconsciously for his own brothers, he has done consciously for his church. He founded and conducted "Graham Female Seminary," at the close of the Civil war; out of this grew "Graham High School," "Graham Normal College," and, finally, "Elon College." As Superintendent of Public Schools for Alamance County, North Carolina, he inspired the erection of Graded School buildings in Burlington, Graham, and Haw River; and these have been enlarged and others erected in recent years. Every school bell in his native county unconsciously sounds his praise, and every school building enshrines his work. But the founding of ELON COLLEGE is the crown of his educational career. His convictions are as strong and as long as his years, and he never sacrificed them for popularity or gold. Neither criticism nor opposition could turn him from his purpose and his loyalty to God and truth.

His work has been permanent rather than brilliant, and his character is of the same rugged type.

His domestic life has been genuine and sincere. He has been twice married. The first time to Elizabeth Jane Faucette, daughter of John Faucette, Superior Court Clerk of Alamance County, North Carolina, June 25th, 1861. They lived happily together until October 27th, 1903, when Mrs. Long was released from a long affliction and entered into rest. The issue of their marriage was eight children, four of whom survive. Devoted to his family, home was the citadel of his empire. He watched at the bedside of his long afflicted companion with pathetic tenderness till the end came.

REV. WM. S. LONG, D. D.

Who will celebrate his eighty-third birth-day, October 22, 1922. The picture was taken when he was younger, but he still holds his youthful appearance in a remarkable degree, considering his advanced age.

Dr. Long was married a second time on April 19th, 1905, to Mrs. Mary Virginia Ames, daughter of that prince of Christian men, Captain Thomas Gaskins of Lower Parish, Nansemond county, Virginia, and a member of Berea Christian Church; and they will celebrate this good man's EIGHTY THIRD birthday together in their home in Chapel Hill, the University of North Carolina, on October 22nd. of this year. Congratulations by a host of friends will be FELT, if not EXPRESSED, on that happy day for a man who has been honored by his native county, his State, his Church, and Literary Institutions. Made Superintendent of Schools in his county several times, a Trustee of the State University, degrees of A. M. and D. D. conferred by Trinity College, North Carolina, and Union Christian College, Indiana, President of his Conference, President of the Southern Christian Convention, President of Elon College, which he led in founding, and all of these have been deserved.

Having passed his four score years, he will not be embarrassed by any compliment his friends attempt to put in print. Gratitude impels me to write this last personal word as the credit I give this man of God for the help he rendered me in the earliest years of my preparation for the ministry. While in his school he carried me through the Principles and Government of the Christian Church with as much care as he carried me through Algebra, Caesar, History, Rhetoric, or any other study. And more; his personal character, his family honor, his intense interest in students, his humane feelings, and his sound preaching, linger in my memory as gems that time can not efface.

Gratefully,

W. W. STALEY.

Suffolk, Va., October 6, 1922.

DR. W. S. LONG.

The name of Rev. W. S. Long, D. D. will ever live in the grateful memory of us Christians as the founder and first President of Elon College. Had he rendered no other service to our Christian cause and the Kingdom of our Lord than this, that would have been sufficient to immortalize his name and give him a high place in the annals of the Church forever. In his young and vigorous manhood a passion for the higher education of our youths in a Christian College seized and controlled him, and to the fervor of this passion the tireless energy and tenacious purpose of a great heart were freely given. By day and by night, in season and out of season, through cruel opposition, chilling indifference and friendly co-operation he wrought, toiled, prayed—and achieved!

Elon College is a living monument to this man's courage, fidelity, patience, endurance, wisdom and prophecy. A grateful people will cherish his name through generations yet unborn, and thousands, now living, will rejoice that God has so abundantly blessed him and allowed him to come to the full years of a rich and ripe Christian manhood. In love and fond affection a grateful people greet and salute and honor him in his eighty-third anniversary.

J. O. ATKINSON.

THE DISCOVERER.

Youth is crying in the streets,
Crying to the crowds he meets:

None has ever loved as he,
Flamed or won so gloriously!

None so laughed at prison bars,
Stormed the sun and spilled the stars!

Not a gray soul of them knows
How a heaven buds and grows!

Youth is crying in the streets
To the quiet folk he meets.

—M. E. Crocker, in The New Republic.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Elon College has opened up well, and President Harper is wearing a smiling face. He is still a prodigious worker. He seems never to tire in his efforts to build up Elon.

Our brother, Rev. Chas. H. Rowland, D. D., Franklin, Va., has just enjoyed a gracious revival, with Rev. Geo. D. Eastes, Norfolk, Va., doing the work of an evangelist. We rejoice with these brethren in the good work accomplished.

Dr. W. S. Long, we hope may receive a shower of letters, cards and telegrams on the occasion of his eighty-third birthday, which will be October 22nd. By the way, The Sun has some deserved tributes to his great worth in this issue, and these will not spoil him, but rather hearten him at this late hour. God bless this noble man.

Dr. W. W. Staley was in Dayton, Ohio, last week to attend a meeting of the Board of Trustees of The Christian Publishing Association. He returned in time for services in Suffolk, Va., on last Sunday, and was then expecting to start by automobile on Monday morning for the American Christian Convention at Burlington, N. C., where that body is announced to meet October 17.

The Men and Millions movement is calling for the help of each subscriber, and then for the prayers of the whole church. Dr. Atkinson, soul and body, is wrapped up in the effort of his life to do a great and good thing for the Christian Church, and he wants every one to lend a helping hand. If you have not paid your pledge yet, do it just as soon as you can, for it is needed now.

The death of Bro. A. E. Pierce in Richmond, Va., on October 5, was a serious affliction to his beloved family and to our young church in Richmond, Va. He was a most useful man and was greatly beloved by a large circle of relatives and friends, among whom we counted it an honor to be one. He was a fine Christian man. He was a son of the late E. T. Pierce and wife of the Pleasant Grove Church. His remains were interred at Pleasant Grove, Va.

We have a most interesting account in this issue from Rev. Jno. S. Zelig, who recently was sent by the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America to extend a helping hand to the people of Russia in their distress. Do not fail to read what he says. You may have given help to some other places, where it was not wisely used, but judging from Mr. Zelig's report, it was not to Russia where you sent in vain. The gratitude the people expressed in various ways was touching indeed.

The church at Reidsville feels that it has had a good year. When the present pastor came to the work last November, he found nearly a thousand dollars debt on the church, due to current expenses which had accumulated from time to time in very recent years, the last dollars of which has been paid off, meanwhile the current expenses for the present year will be closed up by Conference, middle of November. The Reidsville Christian Church is in a fine financial condition, said to be the best of all the Reidsville Churches, although the most of them are financially much stronger than is the Christian Church.

The many friends of Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., will be glad to know that his youngest daughter, Mrs. Willie Holden of Louisburg, N. C., is rapidly recovering from a major surgical operation to which she submitted recently in the Lake View Hospital at Suffolk, Va., under the care of Dr. J. E. Rawles and his associates. The last report we have from Dr. Staley is to the effect that she is doing well and recovering nicely.

The month of September was the best month the Christian Publishing Association ever had, and of course we are feeling good. The prospects are excellent.—John H. Stewart, Manager, The Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio. We rejoice with our brother in the fine success of his labors. We have known Bro. Stewart for a number of years, and when we heard he had been elected to the management of the Christian Publishing Association, we said the right man had been chosen. It is by no means an easy thing to get the right man for that place, but we believe the Trustees have succeeded in this case, and Bro. Stewart will make a fine showing at the end of his first term of service, and we rejoice with him.

Bro. Chas. D. Johnston, Superintendent of the Orphanage will greet his many Northern and Southern friends in the Convention with a good report of the work of the Orphanage, and a good work it is, too. He has ninety children to care for and he is doing it well, the Lord helping. He will be glad to have many of the visitors from the West, North, East and South visit the Orphanage during their stay in Burlington, as it is located only a short distance out from Burlington. That Orphanage is a great and good work and richly deserves the help of our brotherhood. Our Orphanage work is growing. There is our Elon Orphanage, the Pennsylvania Orphanage (to be very soon) and then the Orphanage in Japan. It is one of the great works of the Church.

Dr. Staley's letter in this issue puts the value of the church paper before our readers in a fine shape. Read it, and then read it again, till you get it fixed in your mind and heart. We wish some one would try to answer his question this week. He says: "I would like to find a regular reader of The Sun who habitually neglects his church and conference obligations." He then says: "If there is such a member, I will thank such member to drop the Editor a card telling him his name, post office address, and why he neglects his church and his pledges to the denomination." Who will be the first one to report it? It may be that Dr. Staley has it in mind to present such a member with a chromo. You better report promptly, or you might miss your chromo, that is in case Dr. Staley has it in mind to do such a thing. Any way, let us hear from you at an early date, if you are in existence.

Do you attend the prayer meeting in your own church? If so, be glad and rejoice that you have such a good habit. If you do not, then mourn over your misfortune and seek now to form the habit, for it will be a means of greatly building you up in the Christian life. The other thing is true, too, if you do not attend the prayer meeting in your church, provided of course, there are no hindrances which you cannot remove, standing in your way, you will lose in the spiritual life. The prayer meeting, dear old Dr. Cuyler used to say, is the pulse of the church. That being true, it must also be the pulse of the individual member. Now, then, brother, how is your spiritual pulse beating? Is it slow or fast? Maybe you can hardly discover its regular beats. Then you better get up and go to prayer meeting and go regularly, seeking to get your spiritual pulse quickened.

As a people the Christian Church can do things in the name of the Lord, when they are filled with His Spirit. That is the great need of the people comprising the membership of the churches in the Southern Christian Convention. Paul urged upon the Ephesian Christians to be filled with the Spirit. That was the need then and it is the need now. We wish every pastor in the Southern Christian Convention might seek to get the infilling of the Spirit for his own heart and life and then for the next six months preach a sermon, at least once a month, to his people on the filling of the Spirit. That will do great things for the people, if the ministers will but seek and get this great gift themselves and then have their people to do likewise. This is the great need of the church. Such a move will come nearer to solving all the problems of the church than any other one thing, so far as we know.

Some one has said that there is nothing more to be dreaded, either in Church or in State than ignorance on fire. Pretty well said, but all the same we think it depends much on whence the fire? If Ignorance is on fire that has been sent from hell, we say, it is so, but if ignorance is on fire sent from God, well the danger is greatly lessened. Be careful as to where your fire comes from. The Bible shows us that the two fires are very different. Take as examples the fire of Nadab and Abihu—that was destructive, but the fire on the day of Pentecost was very exhilarating and a blessing to the Church of Christ. The fire that fell from above in the case of the burning up of the substance of Job. That was evidently fire from Satan, for he sent it and it did much harm. Take the fire which fell from Heaven on the day of a great revival and it was a blessing, not because of ignorance, but doubtless in the presence of ignorance.

Be careful in talking of the other person. Observe this rule when talking of others. Say to others what you would be willing to have the person of whom you are talking, say of you to others under the same circumstances. That rule may cut down much of your talk, but let that be, for both the talker and the one of whom you are talking, will be better off and no one will have lost any good thing. Before you say something hard or unkind of another, ask yourself this question: "Will it do any harm to say this ugly word of my fellow being?" And if the answer is "No," as most likely it will be, still ask yourself another question, viz.: "Will it do any good to any one to say this ugly thing of the person I have in mind to speak of." And if it will do no harm and will do no good, then do not speak of them at all—just let the words be forgotten and buried in oblivion, and you will always be the happier for having buried what you were about to say. God bless you and help you to do so.

The Sunday School Times asks a very significant question, and then answers it significantly by way illustration as follows: The question is, "Is our salvation theoretical, or actual?" The following illustration is used: A friend in India standing in a building, saw a soldier pass by the window and his coat appeared white. He had puzzled about it until he found that he had been looking through a piece of red glass, and the red coat appeared white.

So God looks at us through the pane made red by the blood of Jesus, and we are spotless as the Spotless One." But the salvation of God offered us through the blood of Christ, now and here, is infinitely better than that. One who accepts Christ as Savior and who looks unto Him, in repentance and confession, for the cleansing of his sins, does not simply appear white to God; he is actually made white, as white and spotless as Christ Himself. For the blood of Jesus His Son Cleanseih us from all sin. How much better it is to be white than seem white? Now study that faithfully and prayerfully before you pronounce against it or for it. Such study will do you good.

FRANKLIN NOTES.

A meeting began at the Franklin Church on September 24th, and continued two weeks. It was a real revival, and we believe that much lasting good was accomplished. Many of our meetings are protracted meetings, but when the power of the Holy Spirit comes down they become revivals. The Spirit came in His mighty power and many were born into the Kingdom. There were thirty-eight conversions, and many renewed their covenant with the Lord, and thirty-one united with the Christian Church, and several gave their names for other churches.

Rev. George D. Eastes of Norfolk, Va., was the evangelist and his preaching was sound, simple, scholarly and gripping. He is one of the sanest and safest evangelist we know. He is attractive in manner, pleasant to work with, and powerful in his presentation of the truth. His messages to the church were strong and his appeals to the unsaved moved men's souls. He was a pastor for several years before going into the evangelistic work and was a successful pastor. Since going into the revival work he has held meetings among practically all denominations. Thousands have professed faith in Christ and united with churches.

Brother Eastes had with him Brother Leonard Saxon who directed the music. He proved himself a good worker and his solo work was superb. The Chorus Choir was a great attraction. All singers of the town joined in the song services. The spirit of union was inspiring.

The interest in the meeting grew and the congregations increased until we had to move the services to the New Theatre. The last week of the meeting was at the Theatre, and great crowds came to hear the gospel messages. No evangelist has been more appreciated in our church and town than Brother Eastes.

THE HOLY BIBLE AND THE MYSTIC FAITH.

(Rev. J. E. Tiffany, in Wesleyan Methodist)

Nearly every verse in the Bible has a hidden meaning. From the fifth to the fifteenth century the Roman Catholic Church ruled the faith of the church in the whole world. If they did not obey, they suffered terrible persecution. John, the Revelator, tradition tells us, who was commissioned by Christ to write the Apocalypse, was thrown in to a cauldron of boiling oil; but the Lord preserved his life. Enoch walked with God for three hundred and fifty years and was not, for God took him. He walked a mystic life with God.

All the prophets of the Old and New Testament were mystics. Every one who receives the baptism of the Holy Ghost and fire has the mystic faith to a certain degree more or less. Madam Guyon, was a writer of mystic truth.

She had a Latin Bible translated from the Hebrew and Greek. The Spirit revealed to her the meaning of the Bible as she read it verse by verse.

Many of the mystics endured bitter persecution. They were confined in prisons built for the purpose. One over the River Seine, in Paris, was very large and strong. Each cell was eight feet square with two apertures in each cell, one to put in the food, and the man who handed it in wore a mask, and an aperture in the door for toilet purposes. Madam Guyon was the daughter of an immensely wealthy man in Paris. Her father did the general business of the king. Madam Guyon was the means of the conversion of Archbishop Fenelon, of the Paris Diocese, who was banished from it. Her converted priest was in a dungeon in the Bastille for thirty-nine years, and died insane. She did not remain there so long, but came out with broken health. Read her beautiful poetry. She believed that she was converted to the mystic faith from Catholicism by an angel. One day as she left her father's house and walked to the cathedral for confession, a man stepped to her side, walked to the cathedral with her, and told her about the true faith of Jesus Christ. She had several sisters in convents.

George Fox, the founder of the Quakers, had the mystic faith, a light shining within his soul. He was so powerful in prayer, that when he prayed the whole building would be shaken as in the days of the apostles.

John Bunyan, who wrote the Pilgrim's Progress, was put into Bedford jail for thirteen years; his little blind girl was with him to comfort him.

God called Martin Luther to overthrow Roman Catholicism in Germany and Rome. When he was a little boy he walked the streets of the city to get food. The Pope sent a delegate by the name of Tetzal to Germany to sell indulgences for sins before they were committed. Martin Luther hastened to Rome, believing the Pope to be ignorant of this. He was going up Pilate's staircase, at the top of which is St. Peter's statue, to kiss the toe. Suddenly there was a sound like thunder in his heart, saying, "The just shall live by faith." He hastened away and fled back to Germany and preached salvation by faith. He was commanded by the Catholic prelates, to come and answer for his crime. Taking his Bible he went to the place of meeting. Every question they asked him he would answer from the Bible. He turned and hastened away. As he was passing by a piece of woods, a body of cavalry dashed out. The soldiers jumped to the ground and lifted him onto a horse saddled and bridled, and they galloped up a mountain fortress owned by a friend of Luther. They changed his clothes, shaved off his hair and whiskers, and there, out of the original languages, he translated the classic German Bible.

John and Charles Wesley were mystics. Charles Wesley wrote five hundred hymns, fifty of them classics.

LEARN TO LOVE.

We may, if we choose, make the worst of one another. Everyone has his weak points; everyone has his faults; we may make the worst of these; we may fix our attention constantly upon these. But we may also make the best of one another. We may forgive even as we hope to be forgiven. We may put ourselves in the place of others, and ask what we should wish to be done to us, and thought of us, were we in their place.

By loving whatever is lovable in those around us, love will flow back from them to us, and life will become a pleasure instead of a pain; and earth will become like Heaven; and we shall become not unworthy followers of Him whose name is Love.

There is a story of a German baron who made a great Eolian harp by stretching wires from tower to tower of his castle. When the harp was ready he listened for the music. But it was in the calm of summer, and in the still air the wires hung silent. Autumn came, with its gentle breezes, and there were faint whispers of song. At length the winter winds swept over the castle, and now the harp answered in majestic music.

Such a harp is the human heart. It does not yield its noblest music in the summer days of joy, but in the winter of trial. The sweetest songs on earth have been sung in sorrow. The richest things in character have been reached through pain. Even of Jesus we read that He was made perfect through suffering.

The child of poverty and vice has still within him, however overlaid by the sins of ancestry, a germ of good that is capable of growth, if reached in time. Let us stretch out a tender, strong hand, and, touching that poor germ of good, lifting its feeble head in a wilderness of evil, help it to live and thrive and grow.—Dean Stanley.

THE PERIL OF INDULGENCE.

Dr. Straton, of New York, calls attention to the danger to sound religion and to democracy in government arising from the extravagance and craze for amusement which has struck our age, especially since the war. He says:

"If we grow a sturdy generation upon downy beds, fancy foods, lazy hours, shows, chewing gum, and dances, we will accomplish the miracle of the ages. If we are to abide as a nation, we must let the ideals of our fathers be wedded to the splendid spirit of modern progress."

The Evangelical Messenger, in a review of the condition says, "Time and temper are against the soul's best interest. After seven years of storm and stress, we find ourselves, as a people, stranded in the hollow of superficiality and folly. Everywhere is a terrible reaction which leaves the masses morally dazed and spiritually deadened. We were promised, we recall, a new world marked by devotion to nobler ideals; we find ourselves in a paradise of fools. Only those who have been faithfully moored in God have weathered the storm unharmed. Only those who have a tight grip upon the Almighty are sure of themselves today."—The Presbyterian.—Ex.

God's Out-of-Doors.

The little cares that fretted me,
I lost them yesterday
Among the fields above the sea,
Among the winds at play;
Among the lowing of the herds,
The rustling of the trees;
Among the singing of the birds,
The humming of the bees.

The foolish fear of what may come,
I cast it all away
Among the clover-scented grass,
Among the new-mown hay;
Among the husking of the corn,
Where the drowsy poppies nod;
Where ill thoughts die and good are born—
Out in the fields with God!

—Elizabeth Barrett Browning.

What Do They Say?

No man can be considered a truly educated man who is ignorant of the Bible.—Schurman.

A MAN, AND A BROTHER BELOVED*

Character is the basis of real manhood. Character, Christian Character, is everything in the make-up of human life. Character is the divine equipment for life and service. With it we face the world, unafraid and unshaken!

"A man is what he is—
Not what men say he is.
Character no man can touch—
It is what we are before God.
Only the man himself can damage Character—
There stands the man of Character, like a stonewall.
Reputation is what men say we are—
Character is both for time and eternity.
It will survive all storms—
And outlive all damage.

A man of character is of necessity a man of high ideals and noble purposes. He is—"Formed on the good old plan,

A true and brave and downright honest man!
He blows no trumpet in the market place,
Nor in the church with hypocritic face.
Supplied with cant the lack of Christian grace;
Loathing pretense, he did with cheerful will What others talked while their hands were still."

—Whittier.

We have a brother beloved. His name is WILLIAM SAMUEL LONG. We have been associated together in the work of the Lord for almost fifty years, and through all of these years his Character has been the strength of his life, and under God the source of his fruitfulness in service. His life has been a busy one, and yet, be it said to his credit, we do not recall a single instance when he seemed to hurry. He has taken his tasks in the morning and through the live-long day he has quietly pressed on till the tasks have been accomplished and turned to monuments to his faithfulness.

Although he is now nearing his eighty-third mile post on life's journey, he is not yet singing—

'I am breaking my pilgrim staff,
And laying aside the toiling oar.'

The weather beaten Pilgrim is still bearing his face to the storm and driving back the buffets of the waves, determined by grace to reach the shore—the haven of rest and peace.

Thank God, William Samuel Long is still a busy man, doing for others when he might be taking his ease under the shade of the trees. However, he was not made that way—he was cast in the mold of steady industry. He has wrought well as a student, as a teacher, as an educator, and, as a preacher of the Gospel—of the Word of God. Though in each place he has acted his part well, he is now passing down among the lengthening shadows of evening time, amid the glories of a setting sun, and who shall begrudge to him the joys of the evening time when the light of God is illuminating his pathway?

Like Noah of old, Dr. Long has been a preacher of truth and righteousness for more than sixty years. The old war-horse never forgets the sound of the bugle, nor does Dr. Long forget his call to the ministry and the obligations it imposes. Almost from boyhood has he been proclaiming the Gospel of the Son of God, and what nobler work could have claimed the time and talents of a mortal man? Some one has said the distinctive work of the preacher is the unveiling of the invisible world, looking himself, and enabling others to look, upon the things which are unseen and eternal. What a calling, if we regard it from this standpoint of unveiling the things which are unseen and eternal. What achievements in such a life-work! The most eloquent part of his ministry has been his constant stand for the Truth of God's Word. From early manhood, we might say from his boyhood, he has been seeking to let in the glories of the divine life upon the darkened lives of sin-touched men and women.

What a journey is behind him! Eighty-three years and all given to God! What a prospect is before him in the Eternity which God gives, with Everlasting Life, as its crowning glory in Christ. Well may his heart sing glory to God in the highest. How beautiful is such a long life when its last utterance is "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

Dear Brother, with the host of your friends, we join in the chorus of congratulations on this occasion, and wish, if it may be God's will, that you may have this keen pleasure of so receiving from your host of friends many times yet before the Master shall call His servant home, call him to come higher and enter into the joys of your eternal home with Christ and all the redeemed forever. Amen!

*In this issue of THE SUN a loving tribute is paid to the character and worth of the Rev. William S. Long, D. D., Chapel Hill, N. C. See also first page.—EDITOR.

WE MAY AS WELL FACE THE ISSUE, FIRST AS LAST.

There are certain nerves in the body, which if cut, will paralyze the body, or at least certain parts of it. These nerves need to be well guarded and for the reason that upon their soundness and health, depends the life and usefulness of the limb which may be involved.

This has a spiritual application as well as a physical. If the coldness of heart, or the formality of the people cut certain of the spiritual nerves in the life of the Church, you may be sure that soon death will come, and a death from which it is difficult to awaken.

We are thinking of the work of genuine revival. If that work is blocked entirely, or even largely, you may as well get ready for a funeral, for without the real work of evangelism the Church cannot live except in a poor, dying state, and a dying state is next door to death. It means much to the life of a church, and not only so, but much to its usefulness, if the evangelistic nerve is cut, for without the evangelistic nerve the Church cannot function properly, and a church which does not function in spiritual life, may as well be counted dead, unless some way can be found to restore it to life and useful activity. Of all the dead things of which we know, the deadest of all is a church, and a dead church is almost the most useless thing in the community. We must have evangelistic life or no life at all.

The Western Christian Advocate puts the situation pretty clearly, when it says under the heading of—

THE CURSE OF CREEPING PARALYSIS

"When the nerve of evangelism is discredited in the church, there begins a slow process of creeping paralysis which spreads over the vital organs, announcing the approach of death. For evangelism is the expression of spiritual life. It manifests the presence of that reaction which life makes against the forces that would destroy it root and branch. Evangelism is the expression of the aggressive spirit of life. It is that assertion of spiritual power that produces is survived, and gains expression for health and buoyancy for the vigorous and the triumphant.

Evangelism is the challenge the church throws out to the world. It was young David answering the defiant Goliath. It is the prophet Isaiah crying out in the wilderness and the solitary place. It is the John the Baptist meeting full-breasted the black iniquity of the Herodian rule of the people of God. It is the Lord Christ crying out from the hilltops, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." It is Saul of Tarsus crying out from the steps of the Areopagus, "Ye men of Athens, I perceive that ye are very religious. I found among you an altar to the Unknown God whom ye ignorantly worship. Him declare I unto you." It is Savonarola before San Marco with an up-raised, trembling hand declaring for the repentance of the leaders of the city and the return of the people to the altars of worship. It was John Wesley, standing before the colliers, preaching forgiveness of sins while tears rain down their faces as they turn, asking for mercy. It is Jonathan Edwards preaching his sermon on "A sinner in the hands of an angry God." It is Dwight L. Moody preaching for weeks before multitudes of people on the text, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believed on him might not perish, but have everlasting life." But mark you, a church without evangelistic urgency is stricken with spiritual death."

WHAT IS OUR GREATEST NEED AS A PEOPLE?

In every organization there are many needs, needs which cannot be ignored with safety. This is especially true of all church organizations, and for this there is a reason, a real reason. Some of us say it is one thing we need, and some of us say it is another, but there is generally one outstanding need which outweighs all other needs, and as such we ought to do our best to meet and supply it. What is the great need of the church today?

Well, to answer that question may require more than one man. The Alliance Weekly tells of a bishop in some church who declared that what his church needed was not more harness, but more horse—a great deal more horse. We believe the trouble with a good many of us is, we have more harness than horse, and that handicaps the cause at once. Just enough harness may be wise and all right, but too much harness is a hindrance rather than a help. And it looks now as if not only one organization, but all organizations have too much horse when the need, the real need is more power, or as the bishop put it, we need more horse.

For a good many years past it seems as if almost every organization has been straining itself to get more harness, and the outcome has been discouraging. We have so much harness—organization—that we cannot get it to a horse on which to use the harness, and there we are with a plenty of trappings, but the harness will not work unless there is a horse in it, and, we, so far have been unable to put in horse-power for every harness we have. In other words, we have got a plenty of trappings, but we are lacking power. If we had power to work all of our organizations, then there might be work enough to keep them all busy, but an organization which is doing nothing is a poor piece of property—it is worthless in fact.

If one should ask us, What is the greatest need of the Christian Church today? We should not hesitate to answer a condition of heart and mind which is capable of receiving the Holy Spirit and then working under His plans to make effective all our machinery, and then we should see some work done.

It would be work that would bring forth abundant fruit—fruit that would glorify God and bless humanity in the spiritual life. As it seems to me, today we have so much harness and so little power to use the harness. The truth is harness without power to work it is of no value at all, while a limited supply of the harness idea in the church, together with the power we need to operate it successfully would accomplish great things. If the poorest church in the country were ever so poorly equipped, so far as harness is concerned, and yet had a plenty of the power to use the harness at its full value, we should see things accomplished in the church. As it is now, with so much harness and so little power, we can do but little for the building up of the true Kingdom of Jesus Christ, and here we go glorying in our harness, while it is practically of little use because of the absence of power. Would it not be far more sensible on the part of the church to lay the harness by for a little repairs and truly seek the power from on high. See Luke xxiv:49.

As we see the answer to the question which stands at the head of this article, viz: What Is Our Greatest Need As a People?

Without hesitation, we answer: Our greatest need is the power of the Holy Spirit to be made manifest in the hearts of the people and in the work they seek to do in the name of Christ. There came such a crisis in the early church and the men and the women of that day met it by laying down the work of the church which they were doing and went to praying for the power of the Holy Spirit that their work might be more effectively done to the praise and glory of God, and it came to pass within a few days that the greatest revivals of religion which the church has ever known was given in Pentecost and in other meetings following. The church awoke to new life and power and the disciples went everywhere preaching the Word of God. If you wish to read the Scriptural backing to these statements, then turn to Luke 24:49, and Acts 1 and 2. Read carefully and prayerfully and we believe your eyes may be opened to see the truth of the thought we are trying to impress upon the hearts and minds of our readers. We need to stop handling our harness so much when we have no horse upon which to place the harness.

GOOD, VERY GOOD, IF PRACTICAL.

One thing has always seemed strange to us about seating a congregation in a church. The usher may do all in his power to give the people front seats, but many a time we have seen the usher on reaching a front pew, look around to direct the person to a seat, only to find that he was walking down the aisle by himself—the person he was leading to a good seat did not wish to go to one so far to the front, and so he or she let the usher go on while he or she stopped in a seat well to the rear. We have wondered why this reluctance to occupy the front seats, but we have no definite idea as to the why.

The Western Christian Advocate has discovered a good way to get people to occupy front seats. We do not doubt it would work if it could be made practical, without much expense. The Advocate says:

PEOPLE TAKE FRONT SEATS.

“Getting people to take front seats has become a problem in churches and in almost all public assemblies. The caretaker of the big tent at the Indiana Conference, Greensburg, solved this problem with the best success. Aside from the fact that crowds were in attendance anyway, he used a nice scheme to get the front seats filled first.

“In this tent-tabernacle, the best seats were placed in front. These were individual chairs with good seats and backs. To the rear of several rows of these chairs were improvised benches made of wooden frames, with canvas cloth tacked on to the sides for the seat. Many of these benches gave way when several heavyweights sat down together on one of them. Back of these benches were planks laid on different kinds of supports. Beyond these planks was still some standing room. Of course, chairs are more comfortable than clumsy frames; frames with backs are more comfortable than planks; and planks are more comfortable than standing. The people took the hint without being told.

“In churches, unable to give the ideal seating conditions on account of financial resources, it might be well to provide varying accommodations, with the best in front. The first five rows of pews might have cushions, carpets, footrests, and hymn racks. The second five rows might have carpet and hymn racks only. The third five rows might have just plain pews, without any accessories. In such a church there would be less scattering and less demand for the speaker to urge the people to come forward. The theater has already realized the value of different sorts of accommodations and sells its box seats, orchestra chairs, dress circle, balcony, and gallery.”

SHALL WE DISPENSE WITH THE SUPERNATURAL CHRISTIAN OR NOT?

If what we call Christianity did not have in it the supernatural, it would no more be Christianity, for Christianity is a supernatural revelation from God. There is a class of persons today who object to the supernatural in our religion. They seek to rule out the supernatural in our religion, and the next thing they wish is to destroy the reliability of the Bible, and then they begin to talk of how much more beautiful is Christianity without the supernatural. The next step is to drop out of the Bible very much that belongs there, and then they declare that the Bible is more real to them since they have dropped out the things that they think do not belong to it. They seem to forget that the teachings of the Bible, which they rule out, are the very points which make the Bible, and the Christianity it presents, the real power of God in the saving of the world. A faith that cannot receive the supernatural from God, cannot have a religion which saves from sin.

May we reinforce our words to you by introducing words from The Richmond Christian Advocate along this line. Read it through and then take time to study the thought therein presented from Henri Frederic Amiel, and see if you cannot get your faith back on the true foundation. Without the supernatural in religion, we do not think that one can find salvation from sin and eternal life, as Christ has promised it to us.

Read as follows and then say if you believe it is true:

“Henri Frederic Amiel said that the efficacy of religion lies precisely in that which is not rational, philosophic, nor external. In the light of his definitions the statement is true, also his statement that the efficacy of religion lies in the unforeseen, the extraordinary, the miraculous. He says that religion attracts more devotion as it becomes more incredible to the profane mind which rationalizes, philosophizes, and is content to deal only in the things of sense. The following from him is so true, pertinent, and timely: “When the cross became ‘the foolishness of the cross,’ it took possession of the souls of men. And in our day those who wish to get rid of the supernatural, to enlighten religion, and to rationalize faith find themselves deserted like poets who should declaim against poetry or women who should decry love. It is the forgetfulness of this psychological law which stultifies the so-called liberal Christianity. It is the realization of it which constitutes the strength of orthodoxy. No positive religion can survive the supernatural element, which is the reason of its existence. Natural religion seems to be the tomb of all historic cults. All concrete religions die eventually in the pure air of philosophy. So long, then, as the life of the nations is in need of religion as a motive and sanction of morality, as food for faith, hope, and charity, so long will the masses turn away from pure reason and naked truth, so long will they adore mystery, so long, and rightly so, will they rest in faith, the only religion where the ideal presents itself to them in attractive form.”

MAY WE NOT APPEAL TO REASON? IF NOT, WHY NOT?

We are led to ask this question because we believe the time is here when as brethren, we cannot afford to take a stand against the validity of the Holy Scriptures. If our scientific brethren, we mean those who lay so much stress on science, so called, in the matter of the reliability of the Bible as the exponent of Christianity instead of science, we make this appeal, and for the reason that we have, as we believe, a cause for presenting such a plea. True science and real Christianity must be in unison, for they are both the gift of the same Author, and therefore whatever is true in each must be from the same source. Of course, false science and false religion may not be in agreement at all, but the teachings of the Bible and the teachings of true science must be in harmony, and therefore we ought to be slow, very slow, if at all to allow any thought of the opposition of science to the Bible to stagger our faith in the Bible, as the rule of our faith and the guide of our lives in the teachings of Christianity.

Then there is yet another reason why we ought to heed such appeal, viz: The Darwinian theory of Evolution is discredited, as science by many of the leading scientists of the world. In the face of such a fact, we feel sure we ought to go slow, very slow, in accepting the conclusions of science as against religion and its Book. The missing link in the Darwinian theory of Evolution stands as a barrier to its full acceptance as truth, and while that is true, we should not lay down the teachings of the Bible for that of science so called. Writing along this line, we quote from The Richmond Christian Advocate the following, and we commend it heartily to our scientifically inclined brethren:

President E. Y. Mullins, of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, is one of the soundest and best-trained thinkers of the country. He earnestly maintains in the last issue of the Western Recorder that “nothing whatever in the methods of modern science legitimately applied is hostile to the Christian religion," which "asks only for a square deal." He rightly contends that the Christian religion can never receive this "square deal" so long as many modern scientific men begin investigations with a presupposition which excludes everything above the natural plane. The following wise words follow:

"Let us clamor for the facts; let us demand from scientific men openness of mind. Let us insist that science be true to its own great ideal of intellectual humility and teachableness. Let us proclaim boldly that Christianity has absolutely nothing to fear in any realm of research, but let us resist with equal boldness the provincialism of scientists who rule out of their reckoning at the very beginning everything distinctive of the Christian religion.

"We may be assured of one thing: if Christianity shall ever be emptied of its supernatural elements, if we should ever reach the point where we are willing to eliminate the resurrection of Christ and the truths that go with it (the supernatural in general), then the end of Christianity as a mighty world force will have come.

"Nothing short of a divine, supernatural Christ can ever meet the needs of this world; and if the modern philosophic Christianity which has been born of the abuse of scientific method shall ever become the dominant type of thought in America, then it will be a sad day for our country and for the world."

WHY WAS THE TRIBE OF DAN LEFT OUT?

In the book of Revelation, chapter seven, where twelve thousand of each tribe were sealed, the tribe of Dan is left out, not even mentioned. In studying the book of Revelation we discovered this fact, and naturally we sought to know the reason for this omission, but no hint of the reason is given, so far as we have been able to ascertain in that book. It is true there are twelve tribes without Dan. This may be accounted for by the fact that both Joseph and Manasses are included, but even then, Ephraim, Joseph's other son is left out. It will be remembered that Ephraim and Manasses, Joseph's two sons, were given the tribe of their father, Joseph, which, leaving Joseph out, would still make thirteen tribes. Of course, they could inherit only what was Joseph's, and therefore again we meet the fact that the half tribe of Manasses had a hundred and forty and four thousand sealed, but Ephraim had none according to the account given in Revelation 7. Ephraim most likely was left out that his father might have a place in the twelve tribes, since in his place the name of his father is recorded. Here are the names of the tribes, each of which had one hundred and forty-four thousand sealed:

1. Juda,
2. Reuben,
3. Gad,
4. Aser,
5. Nephtholim,
6. Manasses,
7. Simeon,
8. Levi,
9. Issachar,
10. Zabulon,
11. Joseph,
12. Benjamin.

In this list we note the absence of Ephraim (the second son of Joseph) and Dan. Supposing our surmise as to why Ephraim was left out be correct, we are still left with Dan not included, and we are still asking, why? There must have been a reason for the omission of Dan. The absence of Dan's name means more than the mere absence of Dan—it means that there were no hundred and forty-four thousand sealed from his tribe, and again, we ask why? Matthew Henry in his commentary ventures to suggest a reason for the absence of Dan—he says it was likely because Dan was much given to idolatry. But how did Matthew Henry discover this fact? We wish Dr. Staley, or some other of our Biblical scholars would endeavor to clear up this matter, as there must have been some real reason for this omission of the name of Dan from the Revelation list of the twelve tribes.

AN AWFUL THOUGHT.

When we think of countries which have the gospel planted only on the edges of its boundary, we feel how awful must be the moral and spiritual darkness encompassing such peoples. That seems a dreadful condition for the Church of Christ to face, but there is a worse condition, as to heathenism than that, for we are told that in Afghanistan, in the central part of Southern Asia, there is not a single missionary in all that country, and not only so, but there is not a Christian among that people numbering 5,000,000. The darkness there must be so thick as to be almost felt. One almost shudders as he thinks of a land containing 5,000,000 of people and yet has not a single missionary, not even one Christian to reflect the light of Christ upon all that darkness. Most of the other heathen countries have some missionaries and even some Christians, but we are told on good authority that Afghanistan has not one of either. It does look like the Christian world might find some one to be sent to that benighted country with the blessed gospel that they might have light.

These people are Aryan, Koptic, and Semetic. They are shepherds, cattlemen and horsemen. They are fierce and barbarous, but they love liberty. South America has a much larger population to be evangelized; India has its millions of unchristianized people, and China has a great host of people to be evangelized, and so has Africa, but each of these countries has a number of missionaries and thousands of Christians, but Afghanistan stand out with only 5,000,000 of population, but not a single missionary in her borders and not only so, but not a single Christian among all its people. Most certainly the eyes of the Church at large needs to be directed to look upon Afghanistan as the land in which the rays from the Sun of Righteousness is not ever seen. How awful must be that darkness! Shall the Church with her millions of men and women, and millions of money at her command, let Afghanistan go on in her ways of darkness, go on to ruin, never knowing that there is a Savior for them, and that a glorious salvation has been provided for that people. We wish the Christian Church would begin especially to pray for this dark land in Asia. Is it possible, can we let the people who have never heard of Christ go to judgment before they hear of Him and His great Salvation? Nay, nav, let us pray for Afghanistan.

The giving of the gospel to this land is of unusual importance, and for the reason, that we are told that it is the stronghold of Moslemism, that to bring Afghanistan to Christ will be the breaking of the backbone of Mohammedanism, and the breaking of the backbone of Mohammedanism would mean a long step toward the conversion of the world to Christ, for in vast fields Mohammedanism is the greatest barrier to the giving of the Gospel to the world. Afghanistan is a Mohammedan stronghold, reaching from the Strait of Gibraltar to the Islands of the Pacific. It is considered as the keystone of the Mohammedan arch. Of course, it will be hard to take it for Christ and the Church, but by the help of God and the earnest work of a faithful Church, it can be done, and it ought to be done, for it is a barrier to world evangelization. Why has all Christendom allowed this country to stand in the depths of darkness and never an effort put forth to give them the gospel of the Son of God?

We are told that the Ameer of Afghanistan said more than a year ago that there are other religions in his country, but not a single Christian, and at the same time, he declared that his country is open to all. What a challenge to the Church of Christ! Not a Christian in all its borders! What darkness? And still its ruler declares the country is open to all religions. Already we are told that the Jews, Parsees, the Buddhists and others have entered the country, and still not a Christian missionary in all the land. What will the Church do as to this challenge? Will she quietly fold her hands and go to sleep, will she thus bring reproach upon the Christ of our salvation? Oh, men and women of the hosts of the Lord, shall we do nothing in the face of such situation? Can we stand still and let this darkness reign, and do not a thing for the salvation of this people, since Christ died for them as well as for us? May the Lord stir our hearts and move us mightily to take the gospel to this benighted land, and may the Church early be moved to undertake the great work of giving the gospel of Jesus Christ to this gospel forsaken country.

THE BURNISHED REFLECTOR.

The one constant barrier to the success of the gospel in all Christendom is the lack of a deep and an abiding Christian Experience. Wherever the Christ is uplifted in the lives of men and women in any marked degree, there we find men and women drawn to His teachings. What we need is to have the members of the churches as a burnished reflector. That is to say, we need each church member to be so filled with the Spirit as himself or herself to become a burnished reflector for throwing out the light of Christ and His blessed teachings upon the lives of the unsaved, for in the event of such reflectors being furnished, men and women would find it most difficult to refuse submission of their lives to the life and teachings of Christ. Jesus Himself said:

"And I, if I be lifted up from the earth will draw all men unto Me."—John 12: 32.

We need to live a life of such character that Christ may use us as a reflector for giving His light to the people of the world. We often excuse ourselves from thus yielding the life we live to Jesus as a means of reaching others on the ground that we are too weak and feeble, from the Christian standpoint, to be such an instrument of blessing to others, but that is the kind of mistake which not only keeps the person himself, or herself, weak, but it keeps others out of the Kingdom. It is not your greatness that Christ wishes of you, but your littleness (humility) which may mean so much in reaching the lives of those who are in the darkness of this world.

The headlight of an engine is very small, but it throws a wonderful light into the darkness. This it does not by reason of its own greatness, but in the face of its own littleness, and this it does because of the great reflector, which is behind it, gathering all of the light given and throwing it to the front. Jesus said on one occasion:

"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify (not yourself, but) your Father which is in Heaven."—Matt. 5:32.

You are to be the light, but Christ will be the Reflector. It is thus your light but with Christ behind you reflecting and making your light great in showing others the way into the light of God. The headlight on the engine is of itself very small, but under the power of the reflector which has been placed there by the builder of the engine, for the very purpose of increasing the power of its light, it covers a vast scope and even runs far ahead of the engine. It is thus in the Christian life. Man is very small and his light flickers at times till Christ gets behind our life and throws its power out, intensifying it, as it is given out, till for a long distance ahead of the train it is seen and used for great and good purposes, all due to the power of the reflector behind the little light. The little weak Christian, if true to his Lord and Master, may also get his little light reflected and thus thrown out ahead of the man till another shall see the light and yield his life to the power of Christ, not to your power, but to a power which comes from above. It is in this way that Christ can make the smallest of His people to fill large places of usefulness and be a great help to helpless men and women who in the darkness of sin are seeking to find the way into the light of God. Now, if He can use you in that way to glorify His name and help the helpless into the light of God, do you not think that you are under great and lasting obligations to yield yourself to Him as an instrument, that through you, He may reach these people and bring them to Himself and through Him to God?

Many of us scarcely realize at all what God can do with us, if we be true to Him and to His Word, in bringing the world to Christ. Do not say you are too weak to be used of God in doing such great things for the lost. Remember that God in you is mighty to the pulling down of the stronghold of darkness and mighty in you to the giving of light to the lost.

Let Him use you. But are you prepared for Him to use you?

ATTENTION WOMEN!

The Women's meeting of the North Carolina Christian Conference will be held with the Raleigh church, November 2nd and 3rd. Please note the change in the date, the time is November 2nd and 3rd instead of November 9th and 10th. Thursday evening is the opening meeting of the Conference; let's have a big attendance at this time. All churches are urged to send representatives; we promise you a good program and a cordial welcome. Delegates are requested to notify Mrs. L. L. Vaughan, State College Station, Raleigh, N. C., that they are coming to this meeting and at what time they expect to arrive. Please do this as soon as possible. Let's have every church in the Conference represented and make this the best meeting in our history, both in interest and attendance.

MRS. L. L. VAUGHAN.

NOTICE.

The Committee on Education of the North Carolina Christian Conference will meet on Monday, November 13th, 10:00 A. M., at the writer's residence, Elon College, N. C., and will be in session through the day. All parties having any business with the Committee are requested to be present.

N. G. NEWMAN, Chairman.

THE RICHMOND CHURCH

Rapid progress is being made on the building of the First Christian Church of Richmond which was begun September the 25th. The church is well located on a beautiful lot in a fast growing part of the city.

The church was organized April the 4th, 1920 and now numbers approximately one hundred members. The services are held in one of the city school buildings where we have ample accommodations for church and Sunday School work. The membership includes a number of faithful, loyal workers, who had secured the school building and organized a Sunday School and Ladies Aid Society two months before the pastor reached the field. The rapid development of the movement has been due largely to these interested and liberal members.

When our church is completed, we feel that it will be a credit to the denomination and will stand as one of the visible results of the work of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention. The Board inaugurated the work and has fostered it since the beginning.

The following members compose the Building Committee: P. J. Carlton, *A. E. Pierce, W. R. Harton, Jno. T. Kernodle, Dr. B. W. Rawles, J. W. English and F. J. Eley. This committee has worked out a splendid financial arrangement for the prosecution of the work. The church is to be completed by April the 1st.

I feel that our people are going to do their best, but building a suitable church in the capital of the State is a large task and we shall need the co-operation of the entire convention and especially the members of the Christian Church in the State of Virginia.

We are now asking for the following contributions for the ensuing conference year:

1	Subscription of	$1.000
2	Subscriptions of	$500 each
4	Subscriptions of	250 each
8	Subscriptions of	125 each
10	Subscriptions of	100 each
20	Subscriptions of	50 each
40	Subscriptions of	25 each
100	Subscriptions of	10 each
200	Subscriptions of	5 each
400	Subscriptions of	$2.50 each

These subscriptions may be paid any time before October the 1st, 1923, but we would like to have the subscriptions as soon as possible. We know there is a number of people interested in seeing a Christian Church established in Richmond and we are glad to give you this opportunity to have a part in it. Send all subscriptions and contributions to Jno. T. Kernodle, Treasurer of the Building Fund, 1012 E. Marshall Street, Richmond, Virginia.

W. T. WALTERS,
108 N. Stafford Ave., Richmond, Va.

*Deceased.

NOTICE! NOTICE!

The North Carolina Christian Conference is to meet with Hines' Chapel Christian church, Guilford County, November 14-17, 1922. And as pastor of the above church we ask that every pastor see that every church of which he is pastor elect and send at least one delegate to this conference.

Will you see that a notice is sent us stating how and when you are coming. We will be glad to meet you at station if necessary. Come to stay for every session, we will be glad to have you.

C. E. GERRINGER,
Pastor.

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

One person may take two or more subscriptions and have his time extended. All persons in arrears as much as one year should pay up, and then aid the solicitor in securing a premium. The name label indicates the time to which subscription is paid.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

Address—"The Christian Sun," 1536 East Broad Street, Richmond, Virginia.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

A member of the church may be interested in his local church and a good worker in the local congregation without reading his church paper; but he cannot be informed and active in the larger work of the denomination without reading the church organ. Family loyalty to the denomination cannot be developed without the church paper. Families have grown up as devoted members of the local church where they attended Sunday School and church, and then easily lost interest when separated from that locality. It requires knowledge as well as religion to make the best church members. "Thy people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." Hosea says, "Thy people," not outsiders. The church paper is essential to the growth and loyalty to the denomination. Members devoted to the local church and not to the denomination, are narrow in their views, local in their contributions, suspicious of officials, and disposed to question the use of money which other people give. As a rule the largest givers say least about how the money is used. The destructive critic is usually a man of good intentions and with a lack of knowledge; the constructive critic is usually one well posted and well balanced. The constructive critic is an architect, the destructive critic tears down what others build. Constructive criticism should be courted; destructive criticism should be shunned.

Newspapers have aided materially in the world's progress; and what the Press has done for the world the religious paper has done for the church. The fact should be repeated that the Christian Church printed the first religious paper in the world—The Herald of Gospel Liberty—September 8, 1808, in Portsmouth, New Hampshire, and it is still printed in Dayton, Ohio. That paper is now 114 years of age. The Christian Sun is the daughter of that organ of the American Christian Convention, and is the organ of the Southern Christian Convention. The members of the church should have one or both of these papers in every christian family. The Sun is especially adapted to the needs and culture of members of churches in the Southern Convention.

Papers are made by readers as preachers are made by hearers. A deaf congregation would never produce a great preacher any more than a dumb keyboard would develop a pianist. The people do not realize that they have in their ears, their minds, and their hearts, the making of great preachers. Great violinists were never made on poor fiddles, or great gunners by the use of poor guns. What the preacher needs is attendance, attention, and activity on the part of the congregation to develop his best powers of speech, interest and work. The church paper needs the help of members financially, sympathetically, and cooperatively. The goal should be The Christian Sun in every family, read by every member, and that would improve the paper and all the activities of the church. I would like to find a regular reader of The Sun who habitually neglects his church and conference obligations. If there is such a member, I will thank such member to drop the Editor a card telling him his name, post office address, and why he neglects his church and his pledges to the denomination.

If there were no papers printed we would know nothing of the troubles in the east, the crops in the west, the revivals in other cities than our own, the State Fairs, the American Christian Convention, and our mission in Japan. But the people for whom this is written will never read it, and will never know it unless Christian Sun readers tell them about it and get them to subscribe.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

Jesus has been described as the first real progressive in religious history. As such He came into conflict with accepted views. In such instances He did not sidestep the issue nor camouflage. "It hath been said," we find Him declaring, "but I say unto you." He looked upon His larger view not as a destruction of former views, but as their fulfillment. He accepted the developmental, the evolutionary view of life. "First the blade; then the ear; and then the full corn in the ear," we find Him teaching.

How say some then that the acceptance of the evolutionary principle makes man a brute and renders the incarnation an untenable belief? Such do greatly err, not understanding the Scriptures nor God's method of conducting His universe. To begin with the Scriptures themselves are a progressive revelation of God. No man who can read and understand can fail to realize the marvellous expansion in spiritual vision that has taken place between Paul and Moses. It had to be so. God could have made men full-fledged in spiritual development, but He chose the evolutionary way. In every generation He spoke to men as they were able to comprehend, and even now, the Holy Spirit interprets to us the larger conceptions of our Master's teachings. The immanence of God explains the rest, for this truth accounts for the spirit indwelling in man's body. When we say that we are made in God's image, we mean that we are spiritual beings in essence and that the body is only our temporary place of abode. Our spirits are the special creation of our Father God. Just so He placed in the body to which men gave the name Jesus the eternal Son of His bosom. The incarnation thus becomes as natural for God as our own creation in His image. When these spirits of ours have been created, each one of them a definite act of God's creation, and inserted in our bodies, they too in their upward spiritual climb become subject to that universal law of God's progress for His world—the law of evolution.

And why should the trinity trouble any heart? I am myself a trinity and what is more I am tri-une. I am capable of affection, of thought, of action. I am a soul with heart, mind, and will. Yet I am not three persons. I am one. What my affectional nature is to me, that the Father is to the God-head; what my mental power is to me, that the Son is to the God-head, the expressive Word of the Father's love. What my will is to my conduct in ordering my life, that the Holy Spirit is to the God-head, the guiding Comforter of the Father's holy eternal purpose for His children, speaking to their individual hearts and consciences the yearning message of the Father's will and purpose and design. The Tri-unity of God represents the three essential qualities of the divine nature, His inherent modes of being. The Trinity rests upon this conception and connotes the three-fold manifestation of the Divine in His relations to men. Thus does the Trinity confirm our kinship to our Father. We are in His image. And we are to understand Him as we do ourselves and approach Him as we do one another, with the reverence due His exalted station, and yet as a person of like nature with our own, though infinitely magnified and pure and holy and loving. Such is our Father. He is worthy to be our God. Let us live worthy of such a Father. That is the behest of the Trinity today. Blessed behest, growing out of such a blessed revelation of God and His relation to ourselves!

The resurrection too has been the occasion of misgiving on the part of many. Recently I was talking with an old man at a Christian assembly of which he was a member. He expressed his doubt with reference to the future life. He feared it might be with him as with sheep. He chose this figure because he is a stock grower. I asked if it is now with him as with the sheep. He readily responded negatively. "Why," I inquired, "has man made progress in his mastery of the universe and in his idealistic conceptions?" He likewise readily answered that it must be due to something in man not in the sheep. That something is our likeness to God, it is our soul. God is eternal and that spark of His likeness in men is else eternal. The resurrection is therefore an absolute essential in a universe where spirit is the abiding fact and force. Paul was right in the high estimate he placed upon the resurrection. If Christ be not raised He has no abiding spiritual existence and is consequently valueless as the Redeemer of men. Have no doubts or fears therefore with reference to the continuation of the spiritual life. We are in God's image and we shall live with Him forever.

PLAYING THE GOOD SAMARITAN IN RUSSIA.

(By REV. JOHN SHERIDAN ZELIE.)

(Dr. Zelig has just returned from Russia where he spent the summer as a special representative of the Federal Council of the Churches in administering relief, especially to the Russian clergy and their dependents. It is a fascinating story, which he here tells, of what the help of the American Churches has meant to Russia.)

In a stately room in a great residence in Moscow the American Relief Administration has established what is known as the "Representatives' Room." The representatives are those who act under the A. R. A. (as the American Relief Administration is everywhere called) for the religious and philanthropic organizations who under its auspices carry on a work of mercy for special constituencies in Russia. The National Lutheran Welfare Council holds one desk, the Jewish Relief another, the Mennonites, the Y. M. C. A., the Y. W. C. A., the Baptist Relief, and the National Catholic Welfare Council, the others. On July 1st another table was moved in and the Federal Council of Churches took the seat to which it had been entitled from the start, though hitherto carrying on its operations through the general staff of the A. R. A.

There is something telepathic about Russia. Within about a day everybody knows who you are and what you came for. My own mission, as representative of the churches acting unitedly through the Federal Council, in addition to general participation in relief in all kinds of cases, was to carry relief to the major body of Christians who were in distress and for whom little had hitherto been done. There was certainly no

"axe to grind" in this errand, no political purpose to be served, no ecclesiastical plan for union between these evangelical Churches of America and this ancient and fascinating Christianity of the East, now so disrupted and distressed. There was no design of any kind except to feed the hungry and when the work was done I came away without having even "talked politics" or having interfered in any way with their affairs. The Churches which I represented were not even in communion with this great body which embraces most of the believers of Russia, and did not expect or ask to be. But they were in destitution, we were in prosperity, and it seemed the Christian thing to send out of our fulness a token of good will toward them in their need. As one of the most experienced and sagacious philanthropic workers in Russia said to me, "The people you want to help are the worst off and most neglected of all classes in Russia."

"All day long in the Representatives' Room one sees a ceaseless stream of famine victims with their appeals. It is nothing less than mysterious how, if you have any help to give, the people get wind of it and come. In one city of Russia, and I could never tell how it happened to this day, though I came unheralded, within six hours everybody seemed to know that this added relief was available. What was more, they could scarcely believe their ears. As one woman said: "I thought we were forgotten of the whole world and that nobody would ever take thought of us. Since you came on this errand I have felt all the time as if I were walking in a dream, just to think that way over the other side of the world Christian people want to help us."

It was such an exhilaration to be giving this help that one did not think much about being thanked for it and I was quite overwhelmed when on returning from an errand, I was told that the two poor women outside, with shawls over their heads, had been waiting an hour for me. "What for?" I asked, "They are sisters of one of the great convents who for years have given every kind of aid and service and they have come to offer you the Oriental tribute of 'bread and salt' as an expression of their gratitude for helping out their old and sick and infirm." Nothing in Russia ever touched me more deeply—an there was plenty to touch me. In they came, bringing the bread and salt and with it an address which said:

"We are full of profound thanks for the love and compassion expressed to us in our exclusive, surely never existing before, grave situation. And now taking advantage of your visits we feel our duty to express by this letter our sincere feelings of our hearts and to ask you to give our kindest greetings to the far American land. In glory of God, and in holy remembrance of your visits we request you kindly to accept these Saint pictures of the first men and leaders of piety in Russia. At the same time following the old Russian habit, as sign of answer of our hearts, we request you, our most highly esteemed Representative of the American Church, to accept this bread and keep this towel made by hands of nuns to serve you as a remembrance of our communion in our Lord Jesus Christ."

All Christendom could not show a finer or more impressive personality than one of the great figures among the Russian Christians whose destitute people I offered to help. When he began to state their needs I saw at once that he was over-modest and thought he might go too far; yet it had not been long since he had been forced to go and humbly ask for one food package for himself. He was evidently trying to suggest to me only an irreducible minimum. And that in a region where not so long before people had been dying on the streets with hunger. Afterwards his companion said to me: "When you came we had begun to feel that we just had nothing to look forward to and we could see no help ahead. You cannot think what it means to us." Then came a stately message of thanks to the American Churches for their remembrance, thanks not only for food but for the sympathy and moral support that mean just as much in this day when all the clergy are under great mental as well as physical strain.

When I went on another occasion to one of the clergy and offered help I was puzzled by his silence and calmness. There was no sign of joy over it. Perhaps I had not offered enough? But I understood soon afterward when my companion said, "You must give that poor man time. He is so confused at the offer of such undreamed of help that he cannot get used to it and does not know what to say or how to act." "We have felt as if we were walking on air these last days at our house," said another old and destitute, "religious" who had lost everything by a disaster and could not conceive how a food package had ever come to him. "In fear of her boldness,"—says another petition, "she presented her first application mentioning only those who were really on the verge of starvation but there are many more who are in sore need of help. There are women whose whole life was one of devotion and service but now are old and helpless with no comfort in the present, nor hope of anything better in the future." They were all helped through the standard food parcel, consisting of 50 pounds of flour, 25 pounds of rice, 10 pounds of sugar, 10 pounds of fats, 20 cans of milk and three pounds of tea.

The surprise of the people never quite disappeared, surprise that Christian Churches with whom they were quite out of touch should be the senders of this relief. No man ever had a greater privilege than I had, as the messenger of American Churches, in carrying that surprise to these people.

One day in Petrograd I was asked to go in and see for a moment the 126 Russian women who were directresses of the Child Feeding work in that city. These women went every day from their homes in distant parts of the city to work for hours and over-hours in these kitchens. For themselves they received nothing. As I heard of their work I could not sit there and do nothing. So I interrupted the commission entrusted to me by the Federal Council of the Churches in my own way and said to myself, in the words which college presidents used to employ in granting diplomas.—"Pro auctoritate mihi commissa"—"By virtue of authority in me vested by the Federal Council every one of these women is going to have a food package this winter." And they had it. This company was about the equivalent, as nearly as anything could be, of the groups of religious and philanthropic women who in our towns and cities at home are at the centre of our most merciful undertakings. They vibrated with excitement when I rose to tell them just exactly who they were that had sent these gifts. "Knowledge that others in far-off America, separated from us by thousands of miles continually think of us, makes our stormy path less difficult. Life feels less hard and less ugly. We feel we are not alone and have more courage for our work"—they said afterward when they presented their response.

How I would like to make up a complete Anthology of all these varied gratitudes, often so quaintly expressed. All of them will soon be in the Federal Council's hands. But there is another, mortifyingly flattering to me, but I give it. I had sent to a translator of one of the great European classics a food parcel and one day there came a copy of the translation of the great work and on its cover: "To the Most Christian Mr. Zelic from a hungry Translator of."

Probably the reader is by this time longing for some touch about those golden domes, those gorgeous sanctuaries, that music of unearthly beauty, those long adorations. And probably also the names and localities and the setting to go with all this story. I feel the thrill of the stately places where some of those interviews took place. I too felt as if I were in a dream, it seemed too wonderful to be true. No one could deny himself more delight than I am doing in withholding the concrete details but having heartened those dear people I am not going to be the means of disheartening them now. To give names or places to the public during the present state of feeling in Russia toward the Church, would be uncalled for and unwise. But how I wish I could give some thumb-nail sketches of the personalities from the highest to the lowest whom this relief brought into view!

It was hard to believe that anything private or personal could ever be allowed to intrude upon the rich mysterious atmosphere of "the Divine Liturgy" but one of the Russian priests wrote me: "Your sojourn here was like a dream, and on Sunday the day of your departure when I went to church and saw there the happy faces and heard many thanks all referring to your activity here, it seemed to me that I was really too happy and our sorrows are nothing when compared with the great love they attracted from our brothers in Christ. Dear Father Zelic, how I thank you." Of course I waived all remarks when they chose for me the title they felt most at home with. They understood perfectly what I was, simply a Protestant clergyman on a mission of love from Protestant churches.

Perhaps churchmen could not be further apart than the helpers and the helped in this expedition but somehow I never felt it, never thought of it, never had any reason to do so. And one reason was, I think, that the prevailing Christianity of Russia does not have it always in its mind to proselytize and to make you submit to it. It does not always have that dream at the back of its mind. It is content that there should be other forms of Christianity than its own. The American Churches, which through the Federal Council made possible this service to the Christians of another land with whom there was no ecclesiastical tie, have done something unique among all efforts at relief. The heart of that great Russian Christianity has been touched and relieved by their friendship.

DR. AINSLIE AND A UNITED CHURCH.

Dr. Peter Ainslie says: Discord and defect indicate the presence of a foreign element. The normal condition of the Church is unity. Disunion is immorality. If we find something that is pushing us away from our fellows, let us not deceive ourselves by thinking that something is religion. The fact is, that something is irreligion, for religion fundamentally is the hand of kinship and love which binds us together and to God.

ANNUAL SESSION EASTERN VIRGINIA WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONFERENCE

The tenth annual session of the Woman's Missionary Conference met at Berea, Nansemond, Friday, Oct. 6, 10:30 a. m.

Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., who has been President of the Conference since its organization, presided and presented to the session a most inviting and suggestive program. The theme which every officer and speaker and delegate seemed to keep in mind for the entire session was, "The Light of the World." The text was, "The Entrance of Thy Word Giveth Light."

Promptly at 10:30, the Conference was opened with singing, "Onward Christian Soldiers." Mrs. J. L. Foster, of Waverly, Va., brought a deeply spiritual devotional message, which set the Convention in a fine frame of mind for the work ahead. Her topic was "Rays from the Light-giving Word."

In the enrollment of delegates, it was found that a very large per cent. of the churches of the Conference were represented by the one hundred and twenty-four delegates, and the two hundred and seventy-five delegates and visitors present. The reports by the various societies were exceedingly interesting and showed an interest and enthusiasm for the work and a determination to carry forward the missionary enterprises not heretofore demonstrated. The reports of the officers were not only interesting because of the signs of progress and faithful service rendered, but because of the unique message which each officer sought to bring before the body. Mrs. C. H. Rowland chose as her topic, in presenting the President's report, "Gleams from the Watch Tower." Miss Mary Andrews, in reporting for the Cradle Roll Department, had for her topic, "Reflectors, Our Children." Mrs. W. V. Leathers in reporting from the Young People's Department had for her topic, "Lamplighters in The Making, Our Young People." Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, Supt. of Literature, in reporting had for her topic, "Varicous Torches." Mrs. M. L. Bryant in presenting her Treasurer's report had for her topic, "Oil in the Lamps."

The Superintendents of departments as named above had such inspiring and helpful reports that a motion was unanimously adopted that each be handed to the Secretary, who was requested to offer them for publication in the Christian Missionary. They would certainly be suggestive and helpful to missionary workers and students.

At 1 o'clock the more than three-hundred people present were served to an elegant and sumptuous luncheon by the women and their friends of the Berea Society. The social hour was a joy, and Berea lived up to its reputation of abundant and exceedingly gracious hospitality.

Mrs. I. W. Johnson of Suffolk opened the afternoon exercises with devotional, using the topic, "Rays from the Word." The Mission Secretary gave an address on "The Glow and the Outlook." Following this there was a general discussion of best methods, a member of the Suffolk Society thrilling the audience in the presentation of the plans and program as already made for that Society during the coming year. There were many suggestions of helpfulness to societies and delegates which will result in even greater activity among the societies the the coming year. The committees made their reports from which reports it was decided to retain practically the same officers as during the past year, that the next meeting place should be Wakefield and that the goal for the year should be $6000.00. The committee on resolutions was enthusiastic in its praise of Berea hospitality. The District Superintendents were all present and reported splendid District meetings last Spring and the fact that these meetings were to be repeated next Spring.

There was general regret that Miss Williams of Porto Rico, who was expected, was unable to attend.

Mrs. M. J. W. White of Norfolk closed the "best yet" Conference of all the years with the devotional period which was a fitting climax to the proceedings of the day, Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D. of Suffolk leading the closing prayer.

The following from Mrs. Bryant's report ought to be of interest to Sun readers as showing something of the volume of work this Conference is doing:

Amounts received from Woman's Societies past year $3,177.67; Young People's Societies $1,539.25; Willing Workers' $339.87; Cradle Roll $62.45; Rally Day offerings $101.35, making a total offering for the year of $5,040.-59.

No wonder these good women felt justified in putting their goal at $6000 the coming year, for their program seems to be "Go, Glow, Grow."

It was certainly an inspiration to be in this great gathering of devout women, who like their Lord were so deeply earnest "about their Master's business." As the President, Mrs. Rowland remarked in opening the session, if ten years of organized effort has brought us to present achievement it is but an earnest of what we may expect in the next decade.

THE CHALLENGE OF THE NEAR EAST CRISIS

The appalling crisis in Asia Minor is leading the Churches all over the country to send vigorous appeals to Washington that our Government should not hold coldly aloof. The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, acting in behalf of the thirty constituent bodies, held a great mass meeting in the Synod Hall of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York, on Sunday afternoon, September 24, just when the crisis was at its height, to voice the sentiment of the Christian people of the country that the United States should exert its clear influence to secure justice and permanent peace in the Near East. The crowd was so great that the police had to close the doors and an outdoor overflow meeting was held on the Cathedral grounds.

The speakers were Dr. Robert E. Speer, President of the Federal Council of Churches, Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, New York, and Rev. James L. Barton of Boston, Chairman of the Near East Relief. The presiding officer was Dr. John H. Finley, Chairman of the Federal Council's Commission on International Justice and Goodwill, and Editor of the New York Times. The keynote of all the addresses was that the United States must assume at once its share of moral responsibility for securing protection of the Christian minorities in the Near East. There was also an insistent appeal that the United States be represented in the forthcoming conference on Near Eastern affairs.

Dr. Speer, in announcing the purpose of the meeting, said:

"We are not here to feed the fires of hatred against the Turk, nor to propose war, nor to urge our Government to take sides on disputed political issues. But we are here to declare our conviction that religious minorities are entitled to protection, to appeal to our nation to accept its inescapable duty in aiding and establishing a righteous peace in the Near East, and to insist that the Armenian people are entitled to some home of their own where they can be safe and able to take care of themselves."

Dr. Fosdick, urging that steps be taken to prevent further atrocities declared:

"History bears out the fact that the Turks are not a people who ought to be entrusted with the unregulated governance of Christian groups."

Dr. Barton elicited prolonged applause when he vigorously asserted:

"America is on trial today no less than Turkey. A clear declaration by our Government of the moral conviction of the American people is immediately called for."

Appeal to Washington

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted and forwarded to the President, the Secretary of State and the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate:

"The tragedy of Smyrna has astounded the world, and shocked the sensibilities of all peoples of all creeds and religions. We, therefore, voicing, as we believe, the strong conviction of the philanthropic and loyal people of America, make the following appeal:

First, that an immediate and generous response be made to the need for food and clothing for the hundreds of thousands of absolutely destitute refugees whose chief hope is in America, and that the Near East Relief be requested to use its organization for this purpose.

Second, that we entreat the United States Government, the Allies, the League of Nations, and especially France, which has entered into treaty relations with the Kemal Government, that measures be taken at once to prevent future atrocities and afford an adequate guaranty and protection to the minority populations left under the rule of the Turk.

Third, that, because of the wide interests of America in the right settlement of these questions, the United States be represented in the forthcoming conference on Near Eastern affairs."

A cablegram was forwarded to the Secretary of the League of Nations, at Geneva, Switzerland, reading as follows:

"Resolution adopted at mass meeting Cathedral St. John the Divine September 24 under auspices Federal Council of Churches: 'Convinced we are voicing sentiment of mass of Christian people in United States. Congratulate Assembly for stand in behalf of protection of minorities and Armenian National Home.'"

United Prayer and Intercession

A call to united prayer and intercession has also been issued by the Federal Council, reading in part as follows:

"Let us pray for the thousands who are suffering or are in hourly peril of their lives. Let us remember especially that some of them are representatives of the original churches of our Christian faith, of which we read in the Book of Revelation.

"Let us pray for all who are responsible for the massacre or violence that a merciful spirit may come to them and that they may cease from all injustice, persecution and aggression.

"Let us pray for our own nation that it may be willing to accept its moral responsibility of helping to save a defenseless people.

"Let us pray for our Government and the Governments of Europe that they may be given wisdom and courage to deal with the present crisis in such a united way that their combined moral influence may be able to stay further bloodshed and secure a righteous peace."

Appeal for Emergency Relief

As a result of a conference between the Near East Relief, the Federal Council of Churches, and other organizations especially interested in the Near East, a public appeal is being made for funds for emergency relief in Smyrna. Near East Relief has the organization on the field capable of handling the situation, but announces that it cannot do that unless it has immediately special funds for this purpose. An urgent appeal for immediate contributions is made. They should be sent to the Treasurer, Near East Relief, 151 Fifth Avenue, New York, designated "Smyrna Relief."

Among the scores of cablegrams and other messages appealing for help, the telegram addressed to the Federal Council of Churches from the 8,000 members of the Clergy Association of Greece, and forwarded to the Federal Council by the Greek Legation in Washington, is especially vivid: It says in part:

"In the name of our Savior Jesus Christ we beseech you, assist us, save those faithful who have so far escaped Kemalists scourge. Hundreds of thousands of Christians without shelter or food are left amidst ruins of Smyrna in dire distress and panic-stricken. You are their last hope and salvation. They implore you to take immediate action."

Important Note

In The Sun of September 28, 1922, we published a letter from Bro. John King, Suffolk, Va., who was then traveling in Europe on an important mission for our Government and country. It seems hardly fair to publish the above appeal in the face of what Mr. King has just written. While we do not doubt what Mr. King said of the work of helping in Belgium, for it comes as direct statement from the American Consul in Belgium to our people, yet we must state that the appeal given above is not for Belgium, but for the suffering people of Smyrna in Asia Minor. We know from the reports in the daily press that Smyrna has had a baptism of blood and fire, and if any people ever needed help, it is the people of the destroyed city of Smyrna, and we hope our people will respond cheerfully to this call, and do it quickly. Remember that Smyrna is not in Belgium, and we hope it is not in the hands of such a people as is the relief work in that country. It is quite impossible for us to believe that Dr. Robert E. Spear could be induced to lend his influence to such a work, even for Smyrna, if there was any probability of its being misused as it seems to be in Belgium. God help poor Smyrna, as she is prostrate from one of the most awful and terrible crimes that was ever committed against any helpless people. Let us help Smyrna, and do it quickly, for she is prostrate and in terrible suffering.—Editor.

PRINCETON THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY

A few days ago I was standing on the front steps of a Federal government building which faces the great Princeton campus. I saw a shower of gold! Yes, golden colored leaves were wafted on a gentle breeze from hundreds of hickories, and elms, and ashes, and oaks! A wonderful carpet of green grass received these monster-flakes of gold. The October sun of a cloudless day was beginning its descent; the old bell in Nassau Hall was calling a few thousand students to their classes; and Old Glory, that noble emblem of a free and happy people was floating over my head. And again I thought of you. Who? A hundred or more young men in as many homes in the "Sunny South." It is not strange that my mind should connect such marvelous beauty with your rugged strength, because if you remain strong your lives will be beautiful and they too, in October—glow of their final charm, will be translated as gently as these pretty leaves.

Indeed, I thought of you whom God is calling to preach the unsearchable beauty of His saving Gospel. I said to myself if you really knew what Princeton is you, too, would soon be here. If you knew that here is an investment all told of about $5,000,000,000.00 for ministerial students alone, to which you are welcome; if you knew that your railroad fare, board room, tuition, heat, and light for a whole year would be less than $225.00; if you knew the fourteen fine, Christian, scholars who teach the eight full departments of Christian theology; if you knew that, without the slightest hint or implication whatever that I should become a Presbyterian, this Presbyterian school has given me three scholarships amounting to $400.00 in cash, and that you could do as well; if you knew the great brotherly spirit manifested among the students from fifty high grade colleges which are here; and finally if you knew the type of broad, impartial, yet faithful theology taught here you would come.

Lieut.-Governor West mentions in his valuable article, entitled, "Why the Christian Church Has not Grown More Rapidly," a "non-educated ministry." To that, as well as to the other sentiments I wish to say "Amen." But now, with our Divinity School at Defiance, our forthcoming theological department at Elon, our cordial and generous welcome into fully equipped schools of other denominations, and our scholarships from our own American Christian Convention, (from which I am to receive a total of $400.00 and for which I am genuinely grateful) I see no real reason for our ministers stopping with a college diploma. With a college diploma one is just prepared to begin one's real ministerial training. But this article grows too long. I started out to say I long to see scores of our young preachers take the most wonderful opportunities which are now at hand. And ever as I sit in the lecture-room, my study, or as I read all our publications, or revel in the beauties all about me I think of you.

JOHN G. TRUITT.

Princeton, N. J.

IT MUST BE BAD WHEN THEY SAY SO.

An editorial in the Theatre Magazine came to my attention, as a business man, the other day. It raised the question, "How we (the theatrical profession) may check the crime wave." The editor goes on to show what the criminal sees that adds to his desire to plunder, and this is the remarkable description:

"On every side he sees the barriers let down—corruption in public life; crookedness in fi-nane; bootlegging and profiteering; grafting politicians shamelessly accepting office so they may better rob the public; immorality rampant; virtue derided as old-fashioned and out of date; indecency and undisguised harlotry on the stage; mere children laughing at the most disgusting lines; lewd orgies and murders in motion picture circles; obscene wriggling and suggestive songs in cabarets and music halls; jazz in the restaurants, jazz in the homes; mothers cynical, self-seeking, encouraging their bobbed haired, cigarette smoking, lip-sticked daughters to dress immodestly, the better to market their sensuous charms,—the whole foul welter of a nation in delirium, a people without ideals, engrossed only in material pleasures and pursuits, without faith, without a God, suddenly gone mad, drifting slowly, restlessly, toward the abyss. Why, argues the crook, should he not get his, in the general debacle of the public morale?"

Then the editor earnestly calls for clean recreation and incidentally places the average movie below the spoken drama in the scale of corruption. Is this not significant? But to the close of his editorial:

"So get to work, banish crime-encouraging movies, cheap vaudeville, and tawdry musical shows. Do you realize what bad movies and indecent bed-room farces are doing? Do you realize that criminal movies make criminals, create unrest among employes, bring about strikes? Give people decent amusement and they will become decent themselves. Bad movies, immoral shows, that is what wrecks the home and breeds discontent and revolt."

Surely, the theatrical and movie condition must be bad if it is all they have said.

But we want to take issue with one statement in this editorial. It is not true that if people are given decent amusement they will become decent themselves. Nothing but the blood of Jesus Christ can wash a man's heart so that it is clean, unless his heart is clean there will be indecent spots in his life more than likely.—The Bible of Today.

I Will Not Doubt.

I will not doubt, though all my ships at sea
Come drifting home, with broken masts and sails;

I will believe the hand which never fails,
From seeming evil, worketh good for me;
And, though I weep because those sails are tattered,

Still will I cry, while my best hopes lie shattered,

"I trust in Thee."

I will not doubt, though all my prayers return Unanswered from the still white realm above;

I will believe it is an all-wise love
Which has refused these things for which I yearn,

And though at times I cannot keep from grieving,

Yet the pure ardor of my fixed believing,
Undimmed, shall burn.

I will not doubt. Well anchored in this faith Like some staunch ship, my soul braves every gale,

So strong its courage will not quail,
To breast the mighty unknown sea of death,
Oh, may I cry, though body parts with spirit,
"I do not doubt," so listening world may hear it

With my last breath!

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

October 29th.

World-Wide Prohibition. Isaiah 61: 1-9.

Golden Text: "Righteousness exalteth a nation, But sin is a reproach to any people."
—Proverbs 14: 34.

Devotional Reading—Ps. 93.

Reference Material: Matt. 7: 15-20; Romans 14: 23.

LESSONS TO LEARN.

Sunday, October 29th, is World's Temperance Day, and in both the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society, the subject to be considered is that of temperance, and especially the means by which the whole world may be freed from the evils and suffering which result from the sale and use of strong drink. In Luke 4: 18 and 19, Jesus is found to quote the first verses found in the Sunday School lesson, for His first sermon in Jerusalem. The lesson text (Isaiah 61) does not primarily refer to the question of prohibition, but rather to the condition following the captivity in Babylon. The message of the prophet is one of the joy and gladness and prosperity bestowed by a God who hates injustice, but loves obedience to His commands and righteous dealings. Sin is captivity. No one is more completely in bondage than that person who is bound by the chains of strong drink. In its wake come sin and suffering, ruin and death. The power of Christ in the life breaks the bondage of this as of all other sins, and life is given the blessedness which the prophet promised to Israel of old.

The prophet had the "Spirit of the Lord Jehovah". That spirit inspired him to preach and to serve. That spirit called him to teach the people the commands of God that through their obedience the nation might become beautiful and joyful. Is the "Spirit of Jehovah" upon your life? Are you heeding His call to live and work for Him? Henry Drummond called verse one of the lesson the "program of Christianity." The work of reform is a part of that great program.

A true Christian must stand for righteousness. World-wide prohibition must be his desire to secure that righteousness in home, state and nation.

Since we have the prohibition law, we now have the great problem of making it effective, and the additional problem of making it helpful to the whole world.

"Bodily enjoyment depends upon health and health upon temperance."

"Do you Americans know that the finest vital statistics in your history were those of the six months of this last year, after prohibition came into effect?"—Dr. C. W. Saleeby, British author and lecturer.

"Temperance puts coals on the fire, meal in the barrel, money in the purse, credit in the community, contentment in the house, clothes on the children, vigor in the body, intelligence in the whole constitution."—Benjamin Franklin.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

October 29th.

A Saloonless World and How To Get It.
Ephesians 6: 10-18.

THOUGHTS ON THE TOPIC.

Christian Endeavors have always taken an active part in movements for reform. Make this meeting an hour during which you will thoughtfully consider the great blessing which a "Saloonless World" would be, and pray earnestly that your Society may be led to do its part to help to this great end, and that as individuals you may do all in your power to secure enforcement of the laws on the statute books already.

Every member should bring at least one fact gleaned from his reading giving evidence that world prohibition is coming. The progress is encouraging in many lands. Dr. Charles Scanlon, in the Westminster Teacher, gives the following facts: The President of Uruguay declared recently: "I hope that Uruguay will be the next nation to adopt a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors." In Greenland both the local and national authorities have prohibited the importation of any kind of intoxicating liquors, and the introduction of spirits for any purpose is a penal offense. "The prohibition movement has passed from America to Europe and daily wins more support among the working classes," declares Dr. S. Ducker, a German authority. The agitation against liquor traffic in Ireland by all parties is one of the gratifying developments recently, for their leaders are realizing that Ireland cannot be free even though she makes her own laws while she harbors the liquor traffic. In Switzerland there is a movement to enable the people of each commune to prohibit the manufacture and sale of distilled liquors. Prohibition is making rapid and encouraging strides in Mexico, Central America, and other Latin American countries, as well as in New Zealand, Australia, Sweden, and several newly formed states in Europe. In conclusion Dr. Scanlon declares: "The solidarity of the human race, the rapid means of transportation and communication, the growing fraternity, the commercial relationship, and the spread of Christianity make imperative the giving to the whole world whatever is found beneficial to any nation."

Other nations are watching the United States. If prohibition is successful here, other nations will go dry. It is a great responsibility to be an example to nations. Unless the Christians of America do their part, it will be impossible for the United States to pave the way to a Saloonless World. Sir John Foster Fraser, the distinguished British journalist and traveler who is not himself a teetotaler, came to the conclusion, after visiting the United States that "America is going to remain dry. I saw how healthy the people looked, how well the men, and particularly the women carried themselves, how bonny the children were." That is what a saloonless world will mean, strong men, beautiful women and healthy children.

EXTENSION OF CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR.

The Monthly Service Program Theme for Southern Christian Endeavor Societies, as outlined in the Dixie Endeavor for October is "Extension", meaning an increase desired in societies, members and unions. There are about 2,500 Christian Endeavor Societies in the South, and the goal before the Dixie Endeavorers is to secure 250 new Senior Societies, 150 new Junior Societies, 100 new Intermediate Societies and 25 new Alumni Councils this year. An examination of our own records shows about fifty societies, Junior, Intermediate and Senior, active at the present time. If there are more, reports have not been sent in this year. Two churches, South Norfolk and First Christian Church, Norfolk, have reported three Societies. Several other churches are doing splendid C. E. work. Several new Societies have been organized in the Alabama Conference and are doing good work. But in spite of these encouraging facts, most of our churches are without any Society doing the work of Christian Endeavor to inspire and train their young people. Many of our churches are not giving their young people the opportunity for active Christian work which those young people are really craving for. The Christian Church should have at least fifty new Societies this year to help Dixie reach the goal set. The Christian Church of the South needs these Societies to give new impetus to its own work. Write to the office of the Field Secretary of Religious Education if you are interested in organizing a new Christian Endeavor Society for your young people, or for the children of your church and community, or if you are eager to revive Christian Endeavor work in your church. Let us resolve to grow and become strong in our Christian Endeavor work, making 1922 a Banner Christian Endeavor Year in our churches.

NEW HANDBOOK ISSUED.

The Handbook of Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies of the Southern Christian Convention, published annually by the Board of Religious Education, is being mailed out this week from the office of the Board in Richmond. Every pastor should receive a copy. Copies for distribution are sent to the superintendent of every Sunday School. If additional copies are desired, a limited number may be secured by writing the Field Secretary, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va.

The Handbook of 1922 contains the minutes of the five Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions held this year in the Southern Christian Convention, together with statistical tables giving the reports of the Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies. This year for the first time, Conventions were held in all of the Southern Conferences, and as a result, this Handbook is a more complete record of all the work of the South than last year's book. By comparing the two Handbooks, the progress in both Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work is clearly evident, and is most gratifying and encouraging to all of the workers with the young people of the Christian churches of the South.

The Baptist Union in England is discussing what to do to stop the increase of half educated preachers? Let them provide for the proper spiritual training of the young ministers and we think the difficulty may be solved.

CHILD'S HOUR

HOW A COUNTRY GIRL GOT AWAY WITH THE CITY GIRLS.

Polly was going to school for the first time in her life. Polly was eight years old.

"I am afraid the girls will laugh at you," said cousin Blanche.

"Why?" demanded Polly. "I don't see anything about me to laugh at."

"Oh, you will see tomorrow," answered Blanche—Blanche had been to school for three years.

Blanche called Polly the next morning.

"You must be very careful to do everything just right," she said.

"Of course," answered Polly; "I always am." And that ended her cousin's advice.

The children watched Polly curiously, and she smiled back at them with very friendly eyes. At recess the girls looked with disapproval at Polly's shoes.

"What makes you wear that kind?" asked one, boldly.

"Bronzed boots?" queried Polly. "Oh, Uncle Morton sent them to me! Aren't they lovely?"

The girls looked surprised. "Nobody else wears 'em," she said a little scornfully.

Polly glanced around on the blackbooted group. "Haven't any of you bronzed boots?" she asked.

They shook their heads.

"I'm awfully sorry," Polly said; "maybe Uncle Morton will send you some if I ask him to, and I'll ask him in my next letter."

The others did not know what to say.

"What makes you be called Polly?" queried the bold girl. "You told the teacher your true name was Mary."

"Yes, but I like Polly best."

The bold girl turned up her little freckled nose. "It is countryfied," she said.

"Is it?" returned Polly, innocently. "Oh, I'm so glad! That must be why it is so beautiful. Don't you love the country? I do. I was there a whole month last summer."

"Haven't you ever been to school before?" asked the bold girl's comrade.

"No, never," smiled Polly.

"And don't you know how to read?"

"Oh, yes! I have studied with mother."

"It must be horrid to have to study at home," said a rude girl.

Polly opened her brown eyes wide. "I guess you never tried it," said she. "Why, it is perfectly splendid! Mother makes plays to help me get my lessons, and tells me stories about them, and hears them all in the morning, if we're going away in the afternoon—oh, it's beautiful! But father and mother thought school was best now, so I've come. It is lovely, isn't it?"

The girls looked at Polly in wonder.

"Guess she won't think it's lovely when the teacher keeps her in at recess, will she?"—and the bold girl tossed her head.

"What will she keep me in for?" questioned Polly.

"When you don't have your lessons."

"But I shall have them," declared Polly.

"Always?"

"Why, yes, of course. Why not?"

The girl said, "Huh!" and took another track.

"Does your mother make your dresses?"

"No, she doesn't," Polly answered smiling.

"Who does? Your dress isn't a bit like any of ours—it's awfully short."

"Isn't it?" chuckled Polly. "It's about the shortest I have. You ought to see me run in it—it's just as easy! Mother was going to let it down; she said, of course, it was all right in New York, where they wear them short, but for here she didn't know what folks would think. I wore it once before she had time to do it, though, and it was so nice to run in, I begged her to let it be, and she did."

"You see," Polly went on, frankly, "my cousin Marguerite, who lives in New York, outgrows her clothes so fast that she can't wear them out; so auntie sends them right up to me, and they almost always fit. Isn't that nice? I think this dress is so pretty, don't you?"

Nobody answered for a minute. Then the bold girl said: "I don't believe it's the latest style; I never saw anything like it."

"No, I never did," returned Polly, blithely. Marguerite always has such pretty clothes, and they are different from the other girls', too."

"I shouldn't think you'd want to wear somebody else's things, just like a begger," retorted the other, with a sneer.

Polly looked surprised. Then she laughed.

"Excuse me," she said, "but you are so funny! I never beg for Marguerite's clothes. Did you think I did? Auntie sends them to me for a present—that's all. Oh, it is such fun when the boxes come! I try on everything right away. And it is so nice that mother doesn't have to make my things; she has ever so much more time to tell me stories."

"Oh, come on!" cried Blanche. "Let's play something! You can't snub Polly, if you try. She thinks everything and everybody are lovely!"

"Of course they are!" laughed Polly, catching her cousin and whirling her about. Then she threw an arm around the bold girl's waist. "I like you!" she cried. "You are so funny."

THE OLD LACE PEDLER WHO "SOLD" THE GIRLS AND TAUGHT THEM A MUCH NEEDED LESSON.

(By William H. Leach)

Sally Harris, Ruth Roons, and Mildred McCollum composed a committee from the Francis B. Willard Class to arrange for the monthly meeting. They were sitting on the pleasant porch of the Harris home discussing plans.

"I have a great idea for missionary instruction," said Ruth, "and I think our class needs that instruction. We have never studied missions as much as we should."

The other girls nodded agreement.

"There is a girl in the university this year who was born in Syria. She is a splendid girl, and everybody is crazy about her. She is studying to be a doctor, and they say that she is the brightest one in her class. My cousin knows her well. Now my idea is to have her attend the class meeting and talk on her native land. That would help create an interest in our missionary fields."

Just at this point in the conversation an old Syrian pedler woman stopped at the steps and offered her wares. When she saw Mildred she smiled and nodded recognition. Mildred blushed with embarrassment.

"It is a funny thing," she said after the woman was gone, "how people take advantage of one. That woman lives in a little house at the end of our street. I bought some lace of her one day, and now every time I see her she nods in recognition. It's no fun to have people think that I am acquainted with dagos, and I wish that she would stop it."

"Yes, it is too bad, but these foreigners will refuse to accept their place," admitted Sally. "I just won't buy anything from them, and for just that reason. But we must go on with our preparations for the meeting night. I have heard about the girl that Ruth has in mind. I am sure that all the girls will love her."

And the girls, like everybody else, who came in contact with Mary Abdisho, did like her. She looked very much like an American, but for her black hair and eyes of a Syrian, which added to her youthful beauty. She used good English, with the exception of a slight accent, which smoothed the rough corners of the adopted language. She had seen so much of life that the girls listened to her with intense interest.

Hers is an interesting story. She was born in Syria, of thrifty parents. Her father had become a mason foreman and they managed to save a little money and owned a home and a little plot of ground. A mission station was organized in the town of her birth and her parents permitted her to attend the school. She proved so apt a student that she was accepted for advanced training, and after sufficient preparation was admitted to Beirut College. This was indeed an honor.

By this time she had become a devoted follower of the Christ, although neither her father or mother had as yet been converted. The year she finished her course her father died. Then her mother offered to give the girl the dearest wish of her heart. She would sell all she had and take her to America. This would give Mary the better training for her chosen profession.

"Girls, I never realized just how much my mother loved me until the day that she announced that she would yield to my wish. All her friends were left in Syria. Father's grave was there and father and mother were unusually devoted. But she did all this to bring me to a land I had learned to love from afar."

The girls were moved by this speech of devotion, and there was a great deal of whispering among them in regard to the beauty and courage of the girl who was speaking. Suddenly the ringing of the door-bell attracted their attention and Sally went to open the door. In a few minutes she was back.

"It was that old Syrian woman who is always around selling her laces. I told her that we were busy and couldn't look at them now. It makes me mad to think that a woman like that would interrupt such a fascinating address. Please go on Miss Abdisho."

As though under restraint the Syrian girl went on.

"Let me tell you some more things about my mother, if you would like to hear them."

"Yes, go on," all of the girls cried.

"We came to this city and bought a little house. It took nearly all of our savings. Mother insisted that I must go to the university, and so she had to do something in order to secure an income. She couldn't do domestic work, for she couldn't speak English. So she decided to do that which is considered so disgraceful by many of you. She became a pedler."

The girls gasped.

"Could it be the old woman who was at the door?" they thought.

Mary Abdisho read their minds.

"Yes, that was my mother. To you, possibly an old Syrian pedler. To me, the most wonderful woman in the world. And I am going to hurry now and carry that basket for her."

Sally Harris was quicker than the Syrian girl. "You are not," she said. "I am going to carry the basket for her. I am going to carry it back here, so that she can have lunch with us. And I am so ashamed of myself for sending her away that I could get down on my knees to her."

Sally and Ruth ran from the house and in a few minutes they came, helping the old lady up the steps. Startled and surprised, she could not understand what they were trying to do. But when she saw her daughter her eyes brightened and in a few minutes everything was plain. And although she kept awfully quiet the girls could see that she really enjoyed the party, but above all else her interest was in the daughter before her. And when mother and daughter left there was a rapid exchange of confidences.

"Isn't it wonderful what our missionary schools are doing?" suggested one.

"Yes, and our money helped pay the running expenses of the missionary schools. So we really helped make that girl the wonderful creature she is today."

But Sally Harris closed the conversation.

"But she has more than paid us for anything we did for her. She has made me see beauty where we least thought it existed, in the face and heart of an old Syrian lacepedler."—The Girls' World.

The Sinfulness of Doubt.

Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, for many years editor of the Missionary Review, was also a great preacher and Bible student. His writings as well have been a means of inspiration to thousands of God's people. On commenting on the fifteenth verse of the seventy-third Psalm he says: "It is foolish and sinful to express doubts, for that is injurious to the faith of others. Tell what you knew of God's goodness and of His revealed will. This decision not to openly complain against God marks the turning point in the Psalmist's experience. . . . Though we may not always avoid giving expression to them, and so planting seeds of unbelief in others." He then gives four reasons for refusing to give expression of doubt concerning God or His goodness or providence:

1. Doubts are the result of ignorance. We should await fuller light.
2. They may disturb or destroy the faith of others, and so injure them.
3. They grow into convictions of unbelief as we give them expression.
4. They indicate a low spiritual life. The antidote is closer fellowship with God.

Why I Am A Foreign Missionary

Because I am a Christian and my Lord has repeatedly commanded me in His Word to go and preach the Gospel to every creature. I believe this was His dearest wish because it was His last command to His disciples on earth.

Because He is my Redeemer and I have no choice in the matter but to do my Master's will.

Because Jesus found no sorrow too great, no cross too heavy to bear for me, and if I am not willing to bear my cross for Him I am not worthy to be His disciple.

Because I love my Saviour and delight to obey His commands, for I believe that "obedience is the test of love."

Because it is the fulfilling of the Golden Rule, as laid down by the Christ, that I should do unto others what I would wish them to do unto me were I in their place and they in mine.

Because, as long as there are souls in the foreign lands who have not yet heard of Jesus, I can refuse to adopt the course of least resistance, such as settling down to a life of ease in the home land, but can "fight the good fight of faith" and "lay hold on eternal life" not only for myself, but for a few at least of those who live in heathen lands.—W. K. Norton, India, in Wesleyan Methodist.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

About the first of July we realized that if the coal strike continued we might be short on coal when the weather turned cold this fall. We well remembered a few years ago when it was almost impossible to get coal and our friends "Holland & Beamon Co." donated a car for our use but it was impossible for them to get it shipped and it was impossible for us to get it anywhere. The cold zero weather struck us about the fourth of December that year, and not a pound of coal and I well remember how we dug wood from under the snow to keep the children from freezing, and I also remember how fast they could burn it. It looked at one time this fall as if we might get in the same fix, our loyal friends, Holland & Beamon Co., of Suffolk, donated a car for our use this winter. (They have been making this an annual contribution for a number of years) but the mines refused to ship it on account of the fuel distribution order.

We tried all the methods we knew to get coal but of no avail and no promise. The coal strike ended and Holland & Beamon Co., got the mine to ship us a car and it has arrived, has been placed in the yard and we are happy indeed. It is always a great relief to us to know we will be able to keep the little children warm. We are indeed grateful to Holland & Beamon Co., for this splendid contribution and pray that God will continue to richly bless them.

The writer had the pleasure of attending the Georgia and Alabama Conference and had a most enjoyable trip. Met a number of old friends and acquaintances and made new ones.

The President gave us an opportunity to tell the Conference something of the Orphanage and its work and we appreciate his kindness very much.

THANKS

We acknowledge with grateful hearts, the following donations for our Mebane Christian Church:

The Danville Sunday School.....$15.00
 The Danville Ladies Missionary Society. 5.50
 S. P. Shelton 5.00

The missionary society of the Danville Church now numbers fifty, including the honorary members, and we are trying to get every member of this church to become a member of it. Besides this missionary society, these sisters have a Ladies Aid Society and with their money they do things, such as carpeting the aisles of their church, and are now planning to have the woodwork of their building restained and varnished.

The brethren have decided to add more Sunday School rooms to their church. Our congregations have nearly doubled in the last eight or ten months. We have some noble young men here, who are coming to the front, and taking hold of the work, and we thank God for the peace and sweet fellowship that this church is now enjoying. I wonder if many of our good Sunday Schools and missionary societies could not send us some help for our struggling band at Mebane. Think of it, won't you. We have no petition dividing the auditorium from the Sunday School rooms. Just think of us in the cold winter. We have a good Sunday School, and we want our children in the Sunday School to be comfortable during the winter. Help us won't you?

A. E. PIERCE

Archer E. Pierce fell asleep at his residence, Richmond, Virginia, on October 5th, aged fifty-two years. He had been a patient sufferer for over nine months and all that medical skill, loving hearts and kind hands could do for him, was done in an effort to prolong his life, and restore him to health; but the ravages of disease were too powerful to be overcome.

Artie Pierce (as he was better known) was the son of Edgar T. and Martha E. Pierce of Halifax County, Virginia. He was married to Miss Dora Covington, November, 1887. To this union were born two children, Janie and Edgar, both of whom survive, together with their mother.

Brother Pierce joined the Pleasant Grove Christian Church in his youth and remained a member there until the organization of the First Christian Church of Richmond, when he became a charter member of the new organization and one of the most active and ardent supporters of the work, being a member of both the Finance and the Building Committees. He was an earnest Christian and we feel that our loss is his gain.

The funeral services were conducted from the Pleasant Grove church, by the writer, assisted by Dr. P. H. Fleming and Rev. J. E. McCauley, and the remains were laid to rest in the adjoining cemetery, beneath a mound of flowers, the loving tribute of devoted friends.

May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved.

W. T. WALTERS.

DIED

At her home near Antioch Christian Church, Isle of Wight County, Va., on October 6, 1922, Mrs. Jennie Virginia Uzzell, beloved wife of Mr. Geo. W. Uzzell, aged 62 years, 5 months and 17 days. They were married January 17, 1878 and lived happily together for 44 years. She leaves a devoted husband, 9 children, 6 daughters, 3 sons, 18 grandchildren, 2 sisters, 2 brothers and many friends. She was a member of Antioch from early childhood and did what she could. She will be greatly missed in her home, community, church and Sunday School. Her sufferings were great, though she bore them all with much christian fortitude, being resigned to the will of her Lord. Before she passed away, she clapped her hands and praised her Lord and said, "A higher plane than I have found, Lord, plant my feet on higher ground." Her funeral services were conducted by her pastor at her church on 2nd Sunday afternoon, October 8th, and her remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery, to await the second coming of her Lord. The Lord bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER.

WILLIAMS

Cornelia Williams, the oldest member of Center Grove Christian Church, died October 11th, at the home of her son, J. C. Williams. She was a good woman and greatly beloved by her neighbors. During her long life she had many bitter experiences, but was always cheerful and never gave up. She married J. H. Williams, and when it seemed that home was complete with five intelligent children, they lost everything by fire. By hard work they built better the second time, and had a home and family that welcomed and delighted their friends. They had a son, Harold, who approached manhood with great promise of usefulness. It was expected that he would be a minister. But death claimed him. Then followed in a few years the death of all the children but the youngest and also the husband. During all these trials she never lost faith in God. Her end was peace, and all her wants were supplied by her son and his wife. We gently laid her body to rest by the side of her loved ones at Center Grove and rejoiced in the hope of resurrection.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE OF RESPECT

It would be impossible to express in words all that our hearts feel in the death of Miss Monemia Eley, and the loss sustained by the Ladies Benevolent and Social Union of the Suffolk Christian Church of which she was a faithful member; but we have no other means of giving permanent form to what we desire to put on record of her Christian character and worth. Modest in all relations, the soul of faith, a human flower of rare beauty and sweetness, her friends were limited only by the number who knew her.

In her long affliction she suffered most in thinking of those who waited at her bedside, and often longed to be at rest. Her sister, Mrs. Eudora Kilby, cared for her with maternal, as well as sisterly tenderness and solicitude. Her fidelity to the Union was even more than her strength.

Her life ended on August 9, 1922, and she was buried in the family lot in Cedar Hill on the 11th, after a sweet service in the home. In view of our loss and her gain, we offer the following recommendations:

1. That the Union express by a rising vote the loss we feel in the death of our beloved sister, and the hope we have of meeting her in the Heavenly Home.

2. That we extend to her sister, Mrs. Kilby, and other members of the family our condolences in their bereavement, and the pledge of our friendship in years to come.

3. That a copy of this report be sent to the Christian Sun, and, also, be made a part of the records of our Society.

Mrs. H. H. Butler,
Mrs. Catherine Riddick,
Mrs. Otis S. Smith, Committee.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE

Mrs. Maria Rogers, beloved wife of Mr. George W. Truitt, was a loyal member of the Ladies Benevolent and Social Union for more than twenty-five years. Her interest never faltered, her attendance was regular, and her willingness to serve unabated. Her friendliness and good humor made her a genial companion as well as a useful worker. Her life was one of patient endurance, fidelity to Christian convictions, sustained by a bright Christian hope under all human conditions. Bodily affliction did not rob her of spiritual health and inward peace.

Her faith in Jesus Christ, her love for her church, her value to the Union, all fill us with praise for her useful life.

Her death in Bronxville, N. Y., at the home of her son William, July 31, 1922, came as a blow to our hearts and a great loss to the Society; but her funeral in the church on August 2nd, was a beautiful tribute to her personal and religious life.

We offer the following for your approval:

1. That we hereby declare our confidence in her Christian character and our hope of re-union in that House not made with hands.

2. That we will try to keep alive the splendid work which she helped this Society to achieve, and we believe the memory of her life will inspire us to continue the good work, in HIS NAME.

3. That a copy of what we here present, be sent to her husband and son, with our sympathy and prayers; and that a copy be sent, also, to the Christian Sun for publication; and that a copy be spread upon the records of the Union.

Mrs. Susie Holland,
Mrs. Geo. Nurney,
Mrs. H. Woodward,
Committee.

OBITUARY

Mary W. Newman, devout member of the Christian Church, at Mt. Auburn, Warren County, N. C., born Feb. 22, 1855, died Oct. 7, 1922. Funeral services conducted by D. A. Long, assisted by Rev. Mr. Self, of the M. E. Church, South. The funeral took place from the M. E. Church, near Norlina, N. C. Many could not get seats in the church. Miss Newman lived for others, and had a host of friends who followed her remains with tears and flowers to the grave.

MRS. HARRIET STEWART

Mrs. Harriet Stewart, of Norfolk, Va., passed to her reward on the evening of October 1st. Mrs. Stewart was born in Wales, but had lived the most of her life in this country. She was a woman of true consecration and of great faith; devoutly attached to her family and to her church. She was a great sufferer, but many who knew her best, knew nothing of her sufferings. She kept them all to herself and bore them patiently.

Mrs. Stewart was the mother of Mrs. W. H. Garman. The Rev. W. H. Garman is the successful pastor of Old Zion Christian Church of this city. The mother will be greatly missed in this home by every member of the family.

The funeral was conducted from Old Zion Church, October 3rd, at three P. M., by the writer assisted by Rev. David Peebles and Rev. Herman Trueblood, Baptist pastors in Berkley. Mr. Miner, Presbyterian pastor and Rev. E. B. Flory, our pastor.

May God bless and keep the bereaved ones.

The World's Gold Supply Since Columbus Discovered America.—

An exchange says:

Since Columbus discovered America the world has produced 875,000,000 fine ounces of gold, valued at $18,000,000,000, it is estimated by the Commerce Department. About $8,000,000,000 of this world gold production the department declared are in circulation as money or in banks and public treasuries—$2,000,000,000 in the United States Treasury—while $10,000,000,000 has been used in the industrial arts or has disappeared in the 430 years since the keeping of accounts began.

"Lest when thy silver and thy gold is multiplied. . . . thou forget the Lord thy God." Deut. 8:12-14.)

More Apes for Glands.—

Greater successes in the field of life-giving gland operations are predicted by Dr. Serge Voronoff, who developed the famous monkey-gland grafting process and has now discovered a species of anthropoid apes and chimpanzees possessing glands more closely resembling those of mankind than any heretofore experimented with.

Dr. Voronoff recently exhibited two patients. One of them, Arthur Evelyn Liardet of London, is growing new hair at the age of 76. He did not appear to be more than 50.

Experiments on rams prove that life can be prolonged by grafting, Dr. Voronoff said.

"For the King's ship went to Tarshish. . . . bringing gold and silver, ivory and apes." 26 Chron. 9:21.)

Dr. Straton on Divorce.—

The Rev. John Roach Straton, pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, assailed the American habit of taking one wife or husband after another. He preferred the Turk style of taking them in a group. From Syracuse, where he is on vacation, he wired:

"What we need is not more laxity but more stringency. The departure from Bible standards in this and other ideals is leading the race to a moral morass. The two great contributions of Judaism and Christianity are monotheism and monogamy. If these are lost the race will speedily sink back into paganism and heathenism.

"The only difference now between us and the Turks is the difference between a team and a tandem. The Turk takes his plural wives team fashion, side by side. We take ours tandem style, one after the other. If there is any choice between the two evils the advantages are all on the side of the Turks, for their system at least makes possible some semblance of home life and some sort of care for little children."

"What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder." Matthew 19.6.)

The Death of Senator Watson.—

The sudden and unexpected death of Senator Thomas Watson last Tuesday morning in Washington removes one of the picturesque figures in public life. He was a brilliant and erratic Georgian who had been elected to the Senate upon, as he said, an "anti-Wilson, anti-League and anti-war platform." The most of his political platforms through his forty years of political life were of an "anti" nature and his election to the Senate of the United States in 1920 was one of the few times that he did not meet defeat in his political races. In 1896 he was candidate for vice-president on the national Populist ticket and in 1904 his name headed the ticket of that party. With all his erratic ways and advocacy of extreme measures, he was able to maintain a place of influence in public life, for he was a man of energy and gifted to an unusual degree. He was a brilliant orator and an interesting writer. Quite a number of volumes came from his pen, the majority of these being biographies of great men. At the age of 66 this stormy career closed suddenly and unexpectedly.

A Timely Hint to the Pulpit.—

The North Carolina Christian Advocate has a good and timely word to the Methodist preachers of the State. Believing the same are just as applicable to preachers in other States, we give its words as follows:

"It is easy for the pulpit to become distracted with too many things. Sociology, criminology, social service, strikes, lockouts, politics, styles of dress, and scores of other subjects have their place, but it is not in the pulpit on Sunday. Religion is, or should be, the pulpit's speciality. The Christian minister's first business is to preach "the crucified and risen Christ." This is a theme big enough and broad enough to keep him busy and to satisfy the needs of his congregation. Hungry people go to church desiring to be fed with spiritual food. Don't give them a stone. The weak and the discouraged come seeking strength and encouragement and if they get it the minister must lead them into the presence of our loving Lord. Men and women, too, come to church to hear a message different from what the world can give. Why, then, should the preacher mock them with a lot of earthly verbiage he has gathered here and yonder, when he ought to come from the secret place of prayer with God's message adapted to the particular needs of his hearers, so that the hungry may be fed, the disheartened encouraged, the weak made strong, the weary given rest, and the troubled spirit led into the paths of peace.

A Woman in The United States Senate.—

Georgia gets another distinction by having one of her senators a woman, Gov. Hardwick having appointed Mrs. W. H. Felton as United States senator to succeed the Hon. Tom Watson, deceased. Mrs. Felton is the widow of a former Congressman and is known in her state as the Grand Old Woman of Georgia, being eighty-seven years old. Referring to this matter an exchange says:

"A special election will be held November 7 to choose a permanent successor to Mr. Watson, and it is not probable that Senator Felton will sit in the Senate chamber before she is succeeded by whoever may be elected. Governor Hardwick is a candidate for the place. When interviewed by a newspaper reporter, Senator Felton said, among other things: "I shall not strive to win glory in statesmanship. If only I can aid in making men and women live cleaner, sweeter, and more wholesome lives, I shall be well satisfied. I am not interested in the fast-disappearing flapper type of girl," she smiled as she removed her gold-rimmed glasses, "but I am interested in the modern young woman. The light of a new day is growing brighter for women in America, and with their advancement we shall see a generally advanced type of citizens. A strong nation is dependent upon its women, and the manner in which the women of this country grasp their opportunities will decide most of the great issues of the future. Woman's entry into political affairs is the most romantic development in this country's history. It comes about because our great problems today are social and economical, and this is work in which women are needed. I am thankful for the good laws that we have now, but even more important are the greater laws that society must observe if we are to have a strong citizenry. We must have more thought of the simple, sweet virtues of life; men and women must be good because they want to be good. No amount of legislation can make them good," she asserted, "though the future of our nation and our race depends largely upon it. I see a better citizenry coming to America only through efforts to improve our living standards. The workingman must have a living wage. He must not be forced too much in competition with unskilled labor from abroad. There must be every encouragement."

NOTES-PERSONALS

Prof. P. J. Kernodle, the Managing Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, was in attendance upon the sessions of the American Christian Convention, at Burlington, last week.

Rev. W. T. Walters of Richmond, Va., and Dr. L. F. Johnson of Brooklyn, N. Y., were both detained from the Convention at Burlington, by unavoidable circumstances. We all regretted their absence.

Rev. J. F. Burnett, D. D., for many years secretary of the American Christian Association, was in his place at Burlington and as busy as ever. He is considered by many as one of the best secretaries of such a body of men and women.

Burlington, N. C., which city has so recently entertained the American Christian Convention, was treated to a plenty of fine speaking, for there were many able men in that body. We had men from the North and the South, and from the East and the West.

Rev. Albert Godley, Tenafly, N. J., the well known Purity Evangelist, was attending the Burlington Convention last week. He is just as much in earnest in the proclamation of purity as ever. He is untiring in his efforts to get the people to believe and live purity truths. We wish him great success in his work.

Judge Whitelock of Huntington, Indiana, the veteran President of The Christian Publishing Association, has so far recovered from the illness which befell him last Summer, as to be called to do so. He has been president of the Christian Publishing Association for many years.

Rev. Hugh A. Smith, D. D., of the Miami, Ohio, Christian Conference, was in attendance on the sessions of the Convention at Burlington and when the Convention went into a committee of the whole, he was called to preside, and he did his work well, just as though he were a veteran in the cause. He has been president of the Miami Christian Conference for many years.

The friends of Rev. H. J. Duckworth, D. D., Mt. Sterling, Ohio, will be pained to learn that during the Convention at Burlington, he was taken ill and last reports from his bed side were far from encouraging. At this writing, early Monday morning (Oct. 23), we have no immediate news from his condition. We sincerely wish he may be restored to health and to his family and friends.

Dr. D. M. Helfinstein of Iowa was in attendance on the Convention at Burlington. He is growing old slowly and keeping in good trim all the while. He is the father of Rev. Roy C. Helfinstein of Dover, Delaware, and of Miss Irene Helfinstein of the Elon College faculty. They were all having a good time. The Rev. S. Q. Helfinstein, brother of Dr. D. M., the veteran Editor of our Sunday School literature, was also in attendance and had the pleasure of greeting many friends. Mrs. Helfinstein was along with him.

Rev. F. G. Coffin, D. D., President of the American Christian Convention was in his place and busy in serving the brethren. He has served as such for eight years. In this Convention the unwritten law has for many decades limited the term of years for the presiding officer to two terms—eight years—so we suppose, unless the law has been changed, that he will retire. He is both a forceful speaker and a good presiding officer.

Much of this issue is given to the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference. We believe it will be interesting matter, not merely for that Conference, but for all of the Conferences, South. We suggest that you keep this issue for reference in the future. When you need to know something in connection with the history of the Conferences, the churches, the ministers and the conference officials through the past, it will be helpful to have this issue at hand.

Our beloved brother, Rev. J. W. Holt, Burlington, N. C., though very feeble, was able to attend the American Christian Convention last week apart of the time and seemed to catch its spirit and interest. He is now far advanced on life's journey, but is a keen observer of the work the church is undertaking to do. He has long stood in the front ranks of the men and women who have given their time and energies to the work of the Christian Church.

The Eastern Virginia Conference will meet in its 102nd Annual Session October 31st, to November 2nd, 1922 at the Johnson's Grove Christian Church, Sedley, Va.

Rev. W. B. Faller, the pastor, will be glad to arrange for the entertainment of all delegates, who should also communicate with the pastor as to their coming.

Trains will be met at Sedley.

W. M. JAY, President.

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., was in the Convention last week at Burlington and was on the alert to see that his brethren kept on the right line, speaking from the standpoint of a parliamentarian, and when it comes to that matter, he is a master. When he says a thing is so, speaking from the parliamentarian's standpoint, you better be very sure before you say it is not correct, because Dr. "Dan" knows the ins and outs of that business.

Dr. W. S. Long, Chapel Hill, N. C., celebrated last Monday, his 83rd birthday. We have not heard from the occasion since it passed, but we feel reasonably sure that the occasion was one of unusual interest, and while we could not be present to enter into the joys of the day, we extend to him the best wishes and happiest greetings of both the editor of this paper and its many readers, wishing him many returns of the day and yet great usefulness. As we look into Dr. Long's face we cannot realize that he can be so old as he really is, for, so far as we can judge, he lacks but little of looking as young as he did twenty years ago. He is remarkably well preserved. He and Mrs. Long were both at the Burlington Convention and seemed to catch the spirit of the great assembly.

Miss Olive G. Williams, one of our missionaries to Porto Rico, was in the Burlington Convention and took an active part with the ladies in their efforts to stimulate interest in the work in that Island. Her many friends were glad to see her.

Rev. M. W. Butler, so well known in the South, but now pastor of the Christian Church in Muncie, Ind., was glad to get his foot on Southern soil again and seemed to greatly enjoy the Convention. He came over to Reidsville on Sunday, October 22, and preached for the editor of this paper, and it was preaching that does not need to be repented of in life's great battle. His text was Heb. 8:5—last clause. It was a very able exposition of the text and the people were delighted.

The Convention at Burlington last week had a lively time over the adoption of the report of the Commission on Organization. When we left to look after mater for this issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the report was still the center of attraction. We almost tremble for its fate, and yet we hope the Convention may do the thing which is so much needed, for there can be no doubt that we lack something for the further advancement of the cause which the Christian Church has espoused. The Convention has been for years hammering at an effort to get better organization in our denominational work. We hope something good and practical may be put forth by this body.

Religious Literature came in for much attention in the Burlington Convention and rightly so. The President of The Christian Publishing Association gave all of our papers much prominence in the proceedings of that body, except THE CHRISTIAN SUN, which belongs to the people whose guest the Convention was. Dr. Kerr of The Herald of Gospel Liberty was introduced and made a very fine report of his work as editor for the last three years and more. Then Bro. Dales of Canada, the editor of The Vanguard was introduced. He spoke well, as he always does, when he has everything to say to the Convention. Then Bro. Eldredge, editor of The Officers and Teachers' Journal, was introduced. He made a very excellent speech in presenting the claims of the Journal. Later Bro. John H. Stewart, the Business Manager of the Christian Publishing Association was introduced and made the very gratifying statement that the business of the Association is looking up in a remarkable degree—that September was the best business month in the history of the institution. THE CHRISTIAN SUN, even though it was not counted worthy of any official recognition, rejoices in the upward trend of the newspaper business. The Church has yet to learn of the high value of its newspapers. It is enjoying the advantage of this value even now, although it hardly appreciates the real worth of its papers—but some day and some where it will come to see that without its papers the Church at large will not be able to carry forward its general work. We wish our people may not be so hard to be brought to appreciate the good work our papers are doing for the cause, and so come earlier to the splendid task of giving its periodical literature a better support. In the day that it does this, in that day they will find greater advantages and larger prosperity for the work of the denomination and for the cause of Christ. Mark it!

BRO. BLACK AND HIS RESIGNATION.

The wild geese go south in the winter—they are seeking a warmer climate. So does Bro. Black also. He is coming South as the first cold winds of a Northern winter come, and who blames him? We do not, for the Southern climate is more in keeping with the nature of a Southerner, and he wants to get rid of the rigors of the New England climate. All the same his many new friends in New Hampshire are reluctant to let him come, but they are generous and big-hearted also, and so they would not stand in the way of his best interests, as he saw it. His address in Virginia will be R. D. 3, Berkley, Va. The Granite State News, in reporting Bro. Black's resignation, says:

"Rev. B. F. Black, minister of the Christian Church, will preach his farewell sermon Sunday morning, October 1st, at which service the G. A. R. Women's Relief Corps, and American Legion will attend by special invitation. Mr. Black tendered his resignation as minister some weeks ago, to accept a call to a field in Norfolk, Virginia. After due consideration on the part of the church, it was very reluctantly decided to accept his resignation. He has served the Little White Church as minister for one brief year and has been a successful pastor with promise of even greater success had he remained. His sermons were replete with fine thought, earnestness and charm. He and his estimable family have greatly endeared themselves to our people. Especially do the old soldiers and the Legion boys admire the chaplain of the local post. At the annual meeting at the Weirs last month he was made historian. He is a most generous and big-hearted brother. Many a sick room has been cheered by his presence; many a little child has been made happy by him; many a discouraged fellowman has been lifted by his tender sympathy and affection.

Always active as God's messenger he will be greatly missed by a host of friends. The church has given Mr. Black a vacation of two weeks after which he will tour back to "ole Virginny." Our best wishes to him for a pleasant trip and may his ministry be a power for good as the road lengthens before him.—R. S. PARKER.

THE COMMUNITY CHURCH.

This is a factor now coming to the front in the United States, and as some of our exchanges think, it is coming rapidly. Our Methodist brethren do not seem to take to it very much. We submit the following from The Christian Advocate (Nashville, Tenn.) as expressing the view of our Methodist brethren. We respectfully ask The Pioneer of a New Era, a paper which is espousing the cause of the Community Church, to say what it thinks of the situation:

Is the community Church the outcome of a desire on the part of people to dodge denominational responsibilities? That is the opinion of a Des Moines pastor, Dr. K. W. G. Miller, who writes for the Northwestern Christian Advocate. He says: "The real essence of it all is in the fact that a good many of these organizations were begun in an attempt to dodge responsibility for a world-wide program. What pastor is there who does not recall the protest of some narrow-visioned laymen who objected to the imposition of missionary apportionments, who didn't want so many things sent down from New York? We all know how it goes. I have before me now a letter from a banker in a prosperous Western town where they have a beautiful community church, inviting me to consider a call to their pulpit. He closes thus: "This is a great opportunity to work out a large program without the burden of ecclesiastical politics.' The community Church is here without a doubt. It will do a great work here where hosts of us could not do otherwise. I am not disparaging it one particle; but the man who deserts his colors in the already organized bodies and goes into the community Church movement in the hope of escaping denominationalism is doomed to bitter disappointment, for the thing is here now. It was inevitable, and the very life of the movement depends upon its getting together and taking upon itself some of the world-wide burdens which Christ is placing on our shoulders. However loosely or tightly it is organized, it does not lessen the fact that it is denominational in its character." The Northwestern mentions another reason for the community Church; "These motives may obtain in certain instances; but, that aside, we desire to emphasize another motive, one that we have mentioned in these columns, and that is that not infrequently the community Church is the expression of a protest against overchurching in a community, and the best way to obviate community Churches is for the denominations already represented in a community to come to some understanding that will reduce the number of Churches to a proper working number. There are already 2,000 community Churches in the country, and the movement is growing rapidly. Without reference to the motive attending the establishing of a community Church, the fact remains, as the writer states, that such a Church, loosened from the larger organization, is relieved of certain calls from the outer world in need. And just here is where the 'overhead' so denounced, by the unthinking, justifies its existence. No one will question the justice of the call from the outside world for assistance. Foreign missions, with all it involves, is as integral a part of a healthy Church organization as are local interests, and no Church can even exist that ignores the call from without."

NOTICE! NOTICE!

Every church in the North Carolina Conference is asked to send at least one delegate to the annual session of conference which meets November 14-17 with Hines Chapel Church, Guilford County.

If every one will send us a notice telling us when you are coming we will provide free entertainment for you. If you are coming by rail, we will meet you all at either Greensboro or Brown Summit, N. C., as McLeansville is only a flag station. Notify us as when and where to meet you and we will be glad to meet you.

Brother minister, see that each church sends a delegate and notice of their coming.

"GODLINESS IS PROFITABLE."

From reliable sources we learn some interesting facts concerning the largest hotel in Syracuse:

Under the license system, the bar room of this hotel returned a profit to the hotel management of $30,000 for its best year. When prohibition went into effect, the management set up a gas range in one of the alcoves of the bar room and proceeded to conduct a cafeteria in which first-class food was served at reasonable rates. Last year 400,000 meals were served in this room, at a profit of $60,000. One hundred per cent gain in profits when legitimate business replaces illegitimate.—Exchange.

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

One person may take two or more subscriptions and have his time extended. All persons in arrears as much as one year should pay up, and then aid the solicitor in securing a premium. The name label indicates the time to which subscription is paid.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN

The present issue of The Christian Sun is what we are pleased to call the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference Number, being largely given to matters of special interest to that Conference. Through the kindness of Bro. Wilbur E. MacClenny we are enabled to present to our readers this week a valuable compendium of the history of that Conference. As you peruse its contents, you will be interested, no doubt, and you will hardly stop to think of the work our Bro. MacClenny had to do in order to get the facts in such shape as to let you enjoy them, but it has taken a great deal of reading and hard work to put them before you as you now have them. We are quite sure that many, as they read, will stop to think of the work he did in compiling the same. His work has been well done and we wish to thank him for his noble generosity in permitting The Christian Sun to have and publish the valuable matter, the product of his brain and pen. He is a painstaking laborer and his work is much appreciated because it is so reliable.

The Eastern Virginia Conference is one of the oldest bodies in the South among our people. Just two years ago it celebrated its centennial at Holy Neck Church in Nansemond County, Va., where it was organized in 1818, if memory serves us well. It is now, in its second century, one of the strongest of our Southern Conferences, and with all, one of our most useful Conferences. It is most likely one of our wealthiest Conferences, and therefore well prepared to be one of our most useful bodies.

If we had the data at hand and the time to do so, we could easily in a few hours run up a history that would be worthy of your most careful reading. This Conference has been the scene of the labors of our strongest men, and therefore the field of some of our greatest revivals and high achievements in the promotion of the work of the Church of Christ. It was the home Conference of the Barretts for a number of generations, and of the Joneses and of W. H. Boykin, of R. H. Holland, of E. W. Beale, of Jno. N. Manning, and last but not least of William B. Welons, and many others, whose names we cannot recall just now—they have labored zealously and wisely and their labors still speak the praise of these men. Indeed they wrought well, and we, the younger men in this Conference, are even now entering into their labors and reaping rewards from their labors. They sowed and others are reaping, but it is all for the glory of our common Lord and Master. What a privilege to have had a part in this good work. The sowing and the reaping have come close together, but ere the garner has been filled, the laborers have been called to their reward. We trust many may be stimulated to greater consecration and labor by the memory of the fathers of the long ago.

WHY NOT DO BOTH?

Let us do both—why not? Do both of what? Some men who are not very decided in their devotion to the Church of Christ often stay away from the church and do something else, and then declare that what they did gave them more satisfaction than going to church would have done. Ah, that is a keen old trick for easing your conscience and more than likely both motives, that is the motive for staying away from church was bad and just as likely as not the motive for doing the good deed was just about as bad, so the man who played truant to the church was losing on all sides by trying to escape the injunction which says forsake not the assembling of yourselves together. God's way is always the best way, and whenever we see a man or woman trying to dodge a plain duty, as enjoined in the Word of God, by doing some other good thing, we can but expect that there is some wrong in the other good thing he seeks to do, as a substitute for the plain teachings of the Word. If both of the good things are enjoined by the Word of God, why not undertake to do both, rather than leave one out and then try to make the other doing of the other an excuse for not doing the first one? It is most likely a case of hypocrisy, for the hypocrite nearly always seeks to cover up one wrong by doing another, and usually, if he can so order it, he will choose some other good thing, the doing of which he thinks will cover up his failure to do both, as a true Christian would seek to do. For instance, why should a man or woman, stay away from church on Sunday and then do some other good thing in an effort to make it seem that what he did was better than going to church? Indeed, that is the mark of a man who is not sincere, for were he sincere, he would try to do both, go to church and then give relief to the poor, or the distressed.

The Presbyterian Advance gives an instance which just illustrates what we are trying to make plain to our readers, when it says:

"There was a rather amusing story in a daily paper of a business man who had heard of a family in destitute circumstances through a story published in the paper just mentioned, driving by the office of that paper on a Sunday morning with an automobile filled with supplies for the family and taking a reporter along to witness the distribution. Of course there were no such reporter's in Jesus's day. He covered the case, however, in what he said about not letting the left hand know what the right hand did in the matter of alms and not sounding a trumpet before them when they did their alms. The case in question was more like sounding a trumpet. In modern parlance, it was "telling the world." The reporter, in giving the story, quoted the business man as saying that he felt much better than he would have done had he spent the morning in going to church. Jesus put justice and mercy before the practice of religious observations, but, in speaking to men who put the latter first he said: "These ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone." They were to do both, and there appears no good reason why the business man might not have started in time to give relief to the needy family and then go to church."

HOW LONG HAS MAN BEEN ON THE EARTH?

We have great respect for real learning, but for mere nonsense, well we confess it does not have any great attraction for us. We need to be a bit sober in thought as well as in drink. If a man be in liquor his talk does not count for much, nor is it worth much. If a man be intoxicated with nonsense, well we would just about as soon trust the man who is intoxicated from strong drink, as to trust the one who is intoxicated with mere speculation.

Of all the men who go wild in their speculation we think none are further from ascertained truth than the man who undertakes to guess how long man has been on earth. In science guess work will not do. The very meaning of the word justifies that proposition. The very word science means knowledge of principles or facts. It further means accepted or accumulated knowledge which has been systematized and formulated with reference to the discovery of general truths, or in the operation of general laws. "That is from good authority and we believe is correct. As long as a scientist can keep to such knowledge, we shall respect his discoveries, but when we ask a man, who is reputed to be a scientist, How long has man been on the earth? And when for an answer he gives us a mere guess, we hold we are under no obligation to accept his answer, or to respect him as a scientist. To illustrate what we mean:

Sometime ago we were reading a work on science, giving certain facts bearing on scientific matters. We came to the question of the age of man, or more correctly speaking, how long has man been on the earth? This scientist undertook to answer and he said: Man has been on the earth from fifty thousand years to two hundred and fifty thousand years. That guess is not science. If a man must have a play of two hundred thousand years in guessing how old anything is, it is self evident that he does not know anything of the facts in the case. He should not attempt to classify himself as a scientist. He does not know enough of his subject to be called a scientist, especially since he can come no nearer to the truth of a given subject than to say that there is a latitude of at least two hundred thousand years—that he may have been only fifty thousand years on the earth, or he may have been here two hundred and fifty thousand years. That is not scientific. It is mere guess work. The man who proceeds to declare a knowledge of facts, and yet can say no nearer truth than that, ought to be ashamed to call his knowledge scientific—it is not scientific at all. If guess work is scientific then so much the worse for science! But we do not believe that guess work is scientific. We should be more nearly scientific if we should say there are between ten thousand people living in New York and 20,000,000. Yes, that would be a more scientific statement than that man has been on the earth between fifty thousand and two hundred and fifty thousand years, for we are more than sure that there are more than ten thousand people living in New York City and we are just as sure that there are not twenty millions living there. So we are more sure of the truth of our statement, than is the so-called scientific man of his statement that man had been living on the earth between fifty thousand and two hundred and fifty thousand, for he does not know that either end of his guess is correct, for we know that there are more than ten thousand people living in New York City, and we are just as sure that there are not so many as twenty millions living there. Of all the nonsense, for some nonsense may have truth in it, possibly, but it is quite sure that there is not even the element of truth in this wild guessing, as to the age of man.

The Herald and Presbyter tells us of a new kind of science man, and he has the advantage of possible truth in his statements. It tells us that Dr. Frederick Pfaff, professor of natural science in the University of Erlangen, Germany, concludes a very able article on The Age and Origin of Man, with three well-ascertained facts. He proves—

1. That the age of man is short, extending only a few thousand years.
2. That man appeared suddenly; the most ancient man known to us is not essentially different from the now living man.

3. That transition from ape to the man, or man to the ape, are nowhere found.

Prof. Pfaff therefore concludes that the Scriptural account of man is true, and we believe that he is right. We certainly could place no confidence in the statements of the extreme scientists, for at best they are but guessing and know but precious little of the thing at which they are guessing, and therefore we prefer to stand with Prof. Pfaff and his thought, that the Bible account of the coming of man to this earth is correct. Let us stand by the Bible account of the coming of man to this earth—it is one hundred per cent more likely to be true than is all or any of this wild guessing, by so called scientists. We have the most perfect contempt for all this effort to set array science against the Bible. The Bible and science are from one and the same Hand. Therefore the Bible and all true science are in perfect harmony, since in the Bible God could not set forth a fact as true and then have the same fact set forth by science in such a way as to make the Bible false. Can God stand against Himself? Never! The man who claims that God has given a Bible full of error and that he has given us science which is all truth, and as such, it is against the Bible, well, he is enough to make a sick stomach do double duty in freeing itself from the burden of such a thought.

Do let us, men and women, made in the image and likeness of God, try to maintain a little common sense when we come to face the Word of God. The word of man is much more likely to be in error than is the everlasting Word of the Living God. Well did the Psalmist say: "Thy Word is true from the beginning; and every one of Thy righteous judgments endureth forever."—Psa. 119:160.

AND HE KNEW IT NOT.

The Richmond Christian Advocate has some forceful words on a most interesting theme. Read what it says and be reminded of certain dangers which overshadow the lives of the people, and if you are exposed, betake yourself by times to the Lord for deliverance. The Advocate Editor says:

"There is nothing new and unusual in the fall of Samson. It is the more alarming and dangerous because it is the way so many go. The awful tragedy is enacted in every town every day. Samson played with power until that very power killed him. Electricity is not made for children to play pranks. Poisons are not playthings. There are secret sacred forces in all lives too sacred to be used as toys and playthings. They are not to be dragged out to public gaze to furnish merriment for the crowd. They are not laughed at nor even discussed. To trifle with the secret sanctities of life is an awful sin. He who does not guard the purity of brain, body and heart is on the way to be shorn of his strength. There are powers in every life that will wreck it if used as playthings. There is no worse sin today than the breaking down of modesty and reserve. That tendency to make coarse jokes of sacred things and laugh at love and the marriage ties is an evil omen for the race. Delilah is still here with her scissors in her hands.

Samson was a performer. He was always running a three-ring circus and he was the chief actor. He did not try to do real constructive service for his people. He just wanted to cut a big, sweet, knock down and drag out. There are many Church people today like him.

And Samson had no regard for the company he kept. It is old as the race, but true as it is old. A man cannot but tread the down-hill road whose haunts are in Gaza and whose comrades are Delilahs. When in the spring of manhood he sought a sweetheart, he turned toward the heathen. His mother and father protested, but it mattered not. When a young man chooses a sinful, worldly sweetheart among the Philistines, you may never expect him to be found in company of God's children. When a young woman chooses a husband among the churchless, Godless men, you need not expect her to ever have a Christian home. A man does not rise above the bosom companions he chooses.

There is no tragic act on history's page sadder than the day he went to his defeat. He arose from slumber in the lap of sin. He heard a noise that aroused him, and she told him to make his stand, for the Philistines were there to take him. His eyes flashed fire and his big muscles stood out like bands of iron as he raised himself to his full height, ready to strike them down as a lion would strike a hare. He looked the same and felt the same. He did not know the Lord had departed from him. He did not see the woman there with leering laugh, holding in her hands the locks of his hair—emblems of the Nazarene vow of his virtue and strength. They came upon him and halted, for they were not sure. Delilah gave them a knowing wink, and holding up his shorn locks, motioned them on. As they bore down upon him he raised his once mighty arms to lay them low. He pressed the battery button, but no power came. An awful horror fell on him—a terrible consciousness of something lost and gone. It wasn't there. The fuse was burnt out, the power gone. He quivered, trembled and crumpled up like a crushed flower as they took him. Once their mighty conqueror, now their helpless victim, and led him away while Delilah went down the street dancing the dance of her people and waving above her head the locks of his hair.

There are many men like him. They don't know all power is gone, and the peace of God departed. They hope for the best. But slumbering in the lap of ease and luxury has made them lose their vital touch with God. They would be surprised if they would stop and see how far they have drifted from the religious peace that once was theirs.

It seems strange Holy writ should dispose of the life and character of such a man as Enoch in less than a dozen words, while it gives nearly four chapters to the sensational career of Samson. It gives in minute detail his pranks and exploits and paints as only the Bible can paint the picture of his tragic fall.

Samson was endowed with a good ancestry and born in a pious atmosphere. Before his coming into the world his parents were prepared to receive him as from God and raise him to please Jehovah. He was endowed with a great physique and had unusual opportunities that put him miles ahead of most lads.

He stands on manhood's threshold like the hills of Benjamin, strong and rugged, looking toward the stars of God. Then he looks down and starts down. Like the streams of Judean hills that flow pure springs at a lofty height gathering refuse as they go their downward course to the muddy level of the lowlands, the stream of his life runs from hills of nobility down to the depths of ruin and shame.

The world has no more pathetic figure on its stage than this mighty giant whom sin changed to a miserable dwarf pulling down the Temple pillars on his head. How forceful are the great powers of sin. It is binding. It ties him with fetters who never was bound before. Sin has shackles that will hold arms that can break iron chains. Sin is like the octopus who runs one slimy tenacle about you, followed by another, until you are wrapped and bound in the grip of death. Sin is like the spider's web in the sun. When the fly lights upon it, the spider flies upon him, spinning web after web about his legs and wings until he is helpless. One act may not bind a strong man, but sin stops not at one. It weaves a web that becomes a hangman's rope and forges a chain out of the links of daily deeds that cannot be broken. Withes and bands could not bind Samson until he was shorn of the locks of his manhood.

Then sin has a blinding power. It put out the great man's eyes. He saw not the flowers of the Judean hills nor looked upon the sunset glow toward the Mediterranean. The bright stars of the Syrian sky twinkled not in the dark, for all days and nights were black and starless. But sin blinded Samson before the Philistines thrust the hot irons in his eyes. He had long been blind to purity, gentleness and modesty. He saw no more the faces of his mother nor the way of truth and virtue. Sin is always blinding. It destroys our vision of purity and the love and mercy of God.

And sin was grinding, too. It takes a great judge consecrated to God and his country, makes a horse of him and hitches him to a mill to grind his enemy's corn. It makes kings brutes and beasts, turns princes into paupers and kind hearts into demons. It takes men from the seats of leadership and puts them on the rock pile.

In all walks of life, it makes sons of the mighty turn the mills of sin to grind the devil's corn.

ANOTHER STROKE AGAINST THE BIBLE.

The greater the power the greater its enemies. That is undoubtedly true, and so it comes to pass that the enemies of the Bible seem never to tire in striking back at the Bible, and we suspect that it is because the Bible strikes evil so hard. God bless the dear old Book and give it yet more power forever to stand like an unpregnable rock against all the storms that may be directed against it. An exchange says:

The Central Christian Advocate sounds a warning to which we wish to call the attention of our readers in Missouri, and the matter is of interest to all our readers. Here is the warning: "Unless the Christian citizens of Missouri are exceedingly alert, the new constitution now being prepared at Jefferson City will prohibit the reading of the Bible in the public schools. The old constitution is being widely interpreted as shutting the doors of the schoolroom to the Bible. For safety's sake a provision must be inserted in the new constitution specifically stating that the Bible may be read in the schools, but the members of the convention are not now certain as to the wishes of the home folk in this important matter. It is thus very important that every citizen who believes that the Bible should be permitted in the schoolroom if the patrons of the school wish it there should at once write his delegates to the convention urging them to include such a provision in the new constitution. There are two delegates from each district. Find the names of your two delegates at once and send them both a letter asking them to use their influence to secure the adoption of a provision in the new constitution permitting the reading of the Bible in the public schools. Petitions should also at once be sent from Churches all over the State. Do not delay."

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The upkeep of religion is a lifetime necessity. This is true of individuals and of churches. Salvation is "without money and without price"; that is, it is a priceless gift of God; but the maintenance and development of the Christian life requires great effort and expense. The upkeep of public roads, railroads, streets, requires constant and continuous repair. The same is true of buildings, machinery, farms and education. Diplomas are simply certificates of preparation. The student has done nothing but prepare for life-work when the diploma is conferred; it takes a lifetime to make that certificate good. Religion is a divine bestowment by God upon those who repent and believe. After the change of heart has been wrought by the Holy Spirit and the new life in Christ has been a conscious experience, the real work of Christian growth begins. "Grow in grace and the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus Christ."

This matter of the upkeep of religion is of great importance to the Christian himself and the cause of Christ. The biggest thing with a farmer is not the money he makes but the farm he builds. A big bank account and a rundown farm is no credit to a farmer. His business is to build a farm. That is the mistake of many farmers. They bend all their energies toward making money. That is the function or business of a Christian to build Christian character and Christian influence. Even a passerby can understand and appreciate a good farm; and an outsider can understand and appreciate a good Christian. But every Christian knows that non-use is equivalent to abuse. Religion will not run itself nor maintain itself. It must be kept alive and must grow. There can be no neglect of Christian life without loss to Christian life.

There are three lines that must be followed to keep religion alive and growing. Conscious relationship to God must be maintained. That is the title to religion, the experience of Christ in the life that can be kept up by reading the Word and prayer. There is no other way, unless one cannot read. In that case prayer must do all. This spiritual relationship is essential to the development of the soul into the likeness of the Master; and we know that "we shall be like Him when we see Him as He is." Again, the Christian must keep watch over himself. He must cultivate such feelings, thoughts, and expressions as a good witness, for Christ requires His own aspirations, and energy must work toward Kingdom interests and human welfare. He must rise early and work through the whole day. "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life." Personal Christian activity will greatly strengthen and improve Christian experience. But the work does not stop with God and self; it must reach others. The products of a good farm must go to the market and benefit others. The world is clothed and fed that way. Religion is not simply a personal or individual possession. It belongs to the world. There is a market for influence as well as for corn. To keep religion up in these three ways is no small undertaking. The track men on a railroad find something to do all the time and they are important as well as those who run the train. Old ties and rails must be taken out and new ones put in. Old ideas pass away in Christian development in the individual and the church; the upkeep of religion requires this. The Christian must not be afraid of new things. Behold, I make all things new." The tallow candle must give place to the electric light. The old church must yield to the new. The old life must surrender to the new. And to keep up the Christian life is the biggest upkeep work in the world.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

Sin has been the engrossing problem, I had almost said pursuit, of man. The fact of sin is an ever-present one in experience. We all know what sin is and we know its wages. They are death.

We have wasted a lot of valuable time and energy trying to discover the origin of sin and fit into a well-thought-out theological scheme, when what we need is to face it—not in the abstract (sin is comfortable that way), but in the concrete—not in others (sin is comfortable that way too), but in ourselves. First let us get the beam out of our own eye. Then we can clearly see how the mote can be removed from our brother's eye.

We get rid of sin not simply by denouncing it. Sometimes sins have been known to fatten on such advertisement. Recently the daily press of a great city started a campaign of publicity against certain scurrilous papers that were undermining the character of certain boys who were buying them from the news stands of the community. This was the best advertisement, and free at that, which these dastardly publications could have received. The consequence was that thousands of boys who would never have heard of these vicious papers eagerly sought them out, and the nefarious business flourished, while the boys were in increasing numbers being ruined.

Then some level-headed practical Christian men got busy. They went to the news-stands and got a pledge from every one of them not to sell these papers, but to sell the well-known boys' publications that go to stir up the best in them. They asked the city newspapers to stop denouncing the bad and play up the good. And the evil was done away with.

Israel's prophets were past-masters in denunciation. They delivered the finest moral reform messages of the ages, if incisive, biting criticism be moral reform. But their messages accomplished little. The nation went from bad to worse under their preaching.

Jesus declared John to be the greatest prophet. Why? Because John coupled with his description of the people as a generation of vipers a demand for repentance and for fruits meet for repentance.

We are to overcome evil with good. We are in other words to put good in the place of evil in our lives. When we have reformed ourselves by the Spirit's help, we can hopefully approach our brother in regard to his sins. We will not help him by denouncing the evil in his life. We can serve him by telling him how to put good in its place.

We sometimes sin in our attitude toward others' sins. It is bad to play cards, to dance, to smoke, to curse. It is equally bad to lose our tempers in criticising these faults in our brothers. The anger we display upsets our spiritual life. It undermines our physical health. It may do us more harm than the sin we denounce in others. Breathe on a glass surface when you are angry. A yellowish precipitate will be found there when the moisture has dried up. Place this on a rabbit's tongue and it will kill it. So says the experimenter. Nicotine too, which comes from cigarettes, will kill a rabbit. They are both wrong, sinful.

Let us face the problem of sin as a fact in our own lives. Let us rid ourselves by putting good in the place of evil. Let us lovingly help our brothers to perfect their lives in the way we shall thus have found to be so helpful.

MUNCIE, IND. LETTER.

The painting of the metallic and wood-work on the exterior of our church has just been completed, bids are being received for the interior, and the re-instaling of heating arrangements are now under way. Last Sunday was probably the best day in many ways that we have had since coming to this field two years ago. Congregation and offerings were good and the Sunday School attendance broke the record for three years past. Rev. Mr. Ruley of the M. E. Church recently preached for us and his message was well received. The Intermediate and Junior Societies of the church, led by Miss Strong and Miss Colson their Superintendents, gave us a most pleasant surprise last Saturday evening, in the way of a banquet in honor of my birthday. I understood that the occasion was to boost the work of the two organizations, and never once remotely connected it with myself, personally, until just before the luncheon was finished a very fine birthday cake appeared before and near me lighted with candles representing the years passed, and instantly the little folk were ready with their applause and yell. Then by my plate there was quite a stack of birthday cards by the children and their leaders. God bless them. It gives me new inspiration, and paints a new bow of promise for the work in the lives of these dear children and young people. Wish I felt more worthy of such a tribute and expression at such worthy hands. Childhood furnishes our material for Kingdom building for the future and unless we secure the material we cannot build.

Here is something singular. I find in the Middle-West that the Disciples of Christ are strong and aggressive, and are known denominationally as the Christian Church. That term is almost invariably used in their Bulletins and current announcements, altho they do not use it in their legal documents. Four blocks from our church they have one of the strongest and most influential churches in the city, with one of their strongest and most liberal men as pastor. He manifests a most friendly spirit toward us. But here is the singular thing. A number of our young people attending the Normal College here, seem not to be able to distinguish between the two denominations on reaching here or to know the difference until they have gone with the larger company to the Jackson Street Christian (Disciples) Church and formed associations, and then when it gradually dawns upon them that they are in the Disciples Church they find themselves already fitted into some place and are held there. Is it that we have not been faithful in properly training our children denominationally? Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Friends, Episcopalians and others teach their children the peculiar tenets of their church while we seem to have cared but little about those things and have been too content with liberal views. A man may be too liberal as to starve himself and family. Broadness may waste energy and power, and too often does. The stream must be narrowed to one point to give it momentum and power. When the stream spreads over too much space it loses power. We seem to have been doing that denominationally. Be liberal and broad but let's stop this suicide business. We lack concentration, organization, and leadership in almost every direction. We have leaders, well trained and of liberal education, of consecration and devotion, but we lack leaders still in all the departments of our work. A better organization would call for still more leaders and yet better prepared. From the smallest local church up to the largest Conference and Convention we are sadly in need of trained young men and women for departmental work, so that we cannot too strongly emphasize religious education. The failure of the Forward Movement to function in many churches, with their five point program, is in this great need. The Burlington Convention will find many vital issues to give them deep concern.

OUR BUDGET SYSTEM.

During the Chautauqua and School of Methods at Elon, the last days of August and the first of September this year, some of the attendants were surprised that no offering was taken in our Sunday School classes. We do not because we use the budget system.

According to the budget system the church finance committee estimates what will be required to meet the church's obligations for the year, allotting certain amounts for current expenses (including pastor's salary), for the Sunday School, for Christian Endeavor, for Conference apportionments, for incidentals, and so on, and then secures a pledge on a weekly basis from every member of the Church, Sunday School, and other organization for the general budget. The general church treasurer pays out the funds on order of the finance committee according to the budget.

In this way the smallest tot in the Sunday School contributes weekly through the envelope system for all the work of the church. A different colored envelope is used for children not members of the church. This too has its object lesson. Should the little ones not intend to stay for the preaching service, the teacher receives their envelopes and puts them in, at the church service. But the fact that each one has an envelope to put in the offering plate tends to encourage attendance at church.

Supplementing the envelope given each Sunday there should be periodic offerings in Sunday School class following definite educative work to that end for various benevolent causes, such as the Christian Orphanage, the Monixion Work, the Santa Isabel Work. Children need to be educated respecting these enterprises of our work and then give to them, "offerings" expressive of their interest and sympathy.

We must face the fact that our church financial system is spasmodic rather than systematic, impulsive rather than educative. The primary function of the Sunday School is to teach Christian truth to growing minds. It is not a money raising institution. The same statement holds for Christian Endeavor and the missionary organizations. They have specific functions of great consequence to the Kingdom of God, and they are not money raising institutions. A well organized business has a central agency charged with its financial policies and plans. The church can learn a lesson here, an important lesson.

What we need in the Southern Christian Convention is an executive session of all our boards and committees, called for earnest and prayerful consideration and construction of a program adequate to meet our obligations to the Kingdom and geared together so that there shall be no duplication, competition, or lost motion in any of our several units or in the appeals we address to them.

Why not budget the Lord's business in every realm of service for Him?

THE ALABAMA CONFERENCE HELD GOOD CONFERENCE.

The 24th annual session of the Alabama Christian Conference met with the church at Mt. Zion. The work was done in two days, but it was work every minute of the time. Rev. G. D. Hunt was re-elected president and was at his best throughout the entire session. His sermon Tuesday at eleven o'clock was inspiring.

Considering the financial condition the church made a right good showing. Many of them paid the apportionments in full.

The reports of the several committees were given due consideration, while those of missions and education seemed most interesting. When Brother Hunt had given a report and his impression of the North Alabama field, the people responded with cash and subscriptions to the amount of $377.25. This was indeed encouraging for the work. With three organized churches there now and backed by such generous-hearted people, we are looking forward for good results this year.

The following is a part of the report on Religious Literature, which shows the appreciation of The Christian Sun, under the present management: "That November be designated as Christian Sun subscription month and, that during that time every pastor put on a campaign in each of his churches to increase the number of Christian Sun subscriptions in his membership.

We were indeed glad to have Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Secretary of Missions, with us, who preached Wednesday at eleven o'clock, to the acceptance of a large and attentive congregation.

This was a fine session. Harmony prevailed in every transaction of the body. The next session is to be held with the church at Cragford.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

PROGRAMS FOR MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.

Many of our missionary Societies, both Woman's and Young People, are inquiring about programs for the monthly meetings.

Mrs. Alice V. Morrill, President of the Woman's Board of the A. C. C., advises that the programs for the year are partly based on the study books, but some of them can be carried out without the books, not all, however. An attempt was made to create programs that were suitable for the less experienced societies. Every society should have enough programs to supply each member. However, one envelope of "Helps" is sufficient for one society. The Young People will need the study books, and this is fitting, for our Young People should certainly study the Missionary books prepared for them.

The program can be secured from The Literature Department, 25 C. P. A. Bldg., Dayton, O. We greatly hope that our societies will take advantage of these programs.

J. O. ATKINSON.

FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL.

Astley, Worchestershire, England, on the banks of the Severn among the Malvern Hills, December 14th, 1836, became the birthplace of Frances Ridley Havergal. She was the youngest of six children born to William Henry Havergal, who was a poet and musician as well as a faithful rector of the Church of England.

The childhood of Frances is interesting. Being a child of exceptional beauty and grace of figure she was frequently called "Fairy" and "Little Quicksilver." In mental power she was above the average since she was reading easy books at three years, composing verses at seven and very early picked up German from hearing lessons given to her elder brothers and sisters. While she was sunny-haired and her expression sweet and vivacious, she was not possessed of the best disposition. She schemed many ways to avoid much needed admonition and unhesitatingly complained of the slightest scratch or hurt, saying she could not kneel at prayer. This natural disposition mingled with true conviction often brought moods of unhappiness and penitence. Though the deeper, gentler qualities of her nature were buried deep under an almost insurmountable reserve and she was still taking, as she says, a "savage joy" in her own perversity she decided to be a Christian was the most desirable thing in life.

She was sent early to a boarding school in England and later to one in Germany. While in the English school, the dawn of conscious faith in Christ came, though she could not fix any date of conversion. In Germany, the indifference and hatred of her schoolmates for living faith seemed to offer just the stimulus that her peculiar cast of mind needed to brace her by forcing her to watch herself lest her failure discredit her religious experience. Advancing rapidly in her studies, she mastered French, German, Italian, Latin, Greek and Hebrew.

Returning to England a cultured young woman of ability, beauty of person and possessed of a social disposition, society opened its doors to her, beckoning insistently upon her, but ever deep in the inner conscience was the rebuking voice which made holy fire burn in her breast for a deeper and higher and closer walk with the Master.

From her father, who had declined the chair at Oxford, she inherited much musical ability. In voice and instrumental music, her ability and soul qualities moved audiences as she rendered classical selections. Even here her delight was in singing the Scripture set to music by masters of music. This was signally blessed. Upon being asked why she chose this type, she said that she had the promise that these Scriptural words would not return void while there was no such promise regarding the words of men. Some of her favorites were: Mendelssohn's, "Woe Unto Them" and "The Lord is Mindful of His Own;" and Handel's "Comfort Ye" and "Rest in the Lord."

There were many sorrows and griefs in her life. There were times when there were spiritual lessons hard to be comprehended, but through suffering she seemed to learn obedience. Through this she taught others the way of the Christian's warfare and steadily climbed the ladder of Christian perfection and maturity. As the joy came at the end of each trial, the beauties of God's all-sufficient grace were revealed. Rarely writing of the hard places, she told in poetry the beautiful side of her experiences, thus bringing joy instead of sadness to many readers.

Her poetic skill was first manifested through writing poetry in connection with letters and festivals celebrated in the home. Later as she studied her Bible, having written the margins so full that though very neatly done they could scarcely be read, the fuller inspiration of poetic genius burned more warmly in her soul and as the better revelation of the word came these two forces caused her "song chalice" to overflow and write:

"You bear the chalice." Is it so, my friend?
Have I indeed a chalice of sweet song,
With overflow of harmony made strong,
New calm of strength through throbbing veins to send?

Did I not form or fill—I do but spend
That which the Master poured into my soul,
His dewdrops caught in a poor earthen bowl,
That service so with praise might meekly blend.

May he who taught the morning stars to sing,
Ave keep my chalice cool, and pure and sweet,
And grant me with loving hand to bring Refreshment to his weary ones—to meet Their thirst with water from God's music spring;

And, bearing thus to pour it at His feet.

Concerning her works there is an excellent volume of her poetry most of which is based directly upon the Scripture. One of the best compositions is the consecration hymn we all know so well: "Take My Life and Let it Be Consecrated, Lord, to Thee." This was written after God had used her in a special season of soul winning. She said she did not comprehend all in it but that the meaning grew upon her. Then there is that wide-read volume: "Kept for the Master's Use," which is the best of her prose.

The end of this noble life came on June 3rd, 1879. Her last poem, an unfinished one, sounds a note seemingly from one within the Gates of Pearl. Among her last words were: "Splendid to be so near the gates of Heaven" and "so beautiful to go." Still nearer the end she sang faintly to her own tune, "Jesus, I Will Trust Thee." Those present say that for ten minutes they watched the almost visible meeting with the King, as her countenance was so radiant and expressive as if talking to her Saviour. At her request the key text of her life was placed on her monument: "The Blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, Cleanseth Us from all Sin!"—Way of Faith.

THE SHEPHERD PSALM.

REV. A. B. SIMPSON.

This describes the glorious fruition of His blood and tears. The twenty-third Psalm was made possible by the twenty-second. There are two pictures in this fine double figure.

I The Fold (vs. 1-4.)

So much has been written about the Shepherd Psalm that there is only space to emphasize a few of the pictures. Do not forget the pronouns "my," "me," and "I." They occur seventeen times in six verses. Do not forget the present tense, "The Lord is my Shepherd." The first promise is provision,—"I shall not want." The second is peace,—"He maketh me to lie down." "He leadeth me beside the waters of rest." The next is restoration, "He restoreth my soul." This is followed by righteousness,—"He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake." Not because of my goodness or merit, but through His victorious grace. The next is comfort and support in trouble. There is a dark valley, but we walk through it and do not sink in it. We are not alone, for He is with us. We are saved from fear which is the very sting of sorrow; and the darkness is only a shadow, and the death a name.

And the crown of all is discipline, blessing, sanctified affliction,—"Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." The rod which smites is as comforting as the staff that sustains; and chastening, though not now joyous but grievous, worketh the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them that are exercised thereby. Do not fail to notice how the third person becomes the second when he gets into the valley. It is "He" up to the fourth verse, but that will not do now. "Thou are with me."

II. The Family (vs. 5, 6).

The figure is transfigured and exalted to a higher significance. The sheep now becomes the child, and the fold, the Father's house. The feast is spread; the table is furnished in the presence of the adversaries. His cup is not only filled, but overflowing. The smell of the fire is replaced by the fragrance of the anointing oil, and the future becomes bright and glorious with faith and hope as he looks out into the eternal ages and cries, "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life, and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever."

The Woman's Mission Boards of the American Christian Convention held most interesting services during the sittings of that body. Their one chief service was the one which symbolized the spread of the gospel. It was called, or rather represented Light-giving. It was very interesting and very suggestive, as applied to the work of the Woman's Boards. The leader came forth with a large lighted candle. Then a large number of women came forward and each lighted the candle she was carrying from the burning candle held by the leader, thus increasing the light as they came one by one.

History of Eastern Virginia Conference

THE CHURCHES OF THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE

HISTORIC SKETCHES OF THE CHURCHES THAT HAVE COMPOSED THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE FOR THE PAST 105 YEARS, BEING THE ADDRESS DELIVERED BY W. E. MACCLENNY AT THE CENTENNIAL SESSION OF THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE AT HOLY NECK, NOVEMBER, 1920.

ANTIOCH: Known in the earliest days of the Conference as Republican Chapel, then as "Old Chapel", sometimes as Chapel Grove, and finally Antioch, is one of the oldest church sites in Eastern Virginia, an Episcopal chapel of ease having been built in the community prior to 1700, and it continued to be used as such until the Revolutionary War. Capt. A. S. Johnson, formerly clerk of the Circuit Court of Isle of Wight County, informed the writer that he had found references to this chapel in the county records long before 1700. It was located near the site of the Old Isle of Wight Court House, which was located at Blackwater Bridge, and was no doubt started by one of the early settlers named Bridger, a kinsman of Col. Joseph Bridger, the builder of St. Luke's, near Smithfield, Va. After the Revolutionary War the old chapel remained idle for a short time, and then a Christian congregation was gathered there by the missionaries or traveling preachers of the new denomination, this happening before the birth of this Conference, as at the first regular session it was known as the Republican Chapel, and Rev. Mills Barrett was assigned to this point. In the year 1828, the present name of Antioch appears in the Conference records, even after this it was sometimes called the "Old Chapel". This has been one of the veteran churches that has stood the test of time. It has sent out several ministers, among whom we will mention Dr. J. P. Barrett, Rev. J. W. Barrett, and Rev. D. P. Barrett, our first native born white foreign missionary, who came from this church.

She is the mother of Mt. Carmel, Isle of Wight Court House and Windsor, and she is still a strong country church. Rev. Daniel Whitley was a member and pastor of this church in 1821.

She has been one of the main pillars of the Conference, and many times when the storm clouds were hovering over the denomination a conference was called with this church to pour oil on the troubled waters.

BARRETT'S was organized about 1800 by Rev. Burwell Barrett, he being pastor in 1819, and has been in existence ever since. It was a plain country church and was used as the center of the community life, acting both as a church and a school house for a long time, the pastor acting as teacher as well as preacher. A new house was built there in 1888. It was and is yet in a purely rural community, and while small in numbers the influence of this church has been felt greatly in the Conference from the men she has furnished for the pulpits, among these we mention Rev. Burwell Barrett, Rev. Mills Barrett, the Secretary of the Conference for so long; Drs. W. B. Wellons, James W. Wellons, and we think that Rev. M. B. Barrett was at one time a member of this historic church. For over 100 years she has been the light-house of the Christians in that section, and her influence has been felt far and near. Her history goes back beyond the records of the Conference, and so prominent was the organizer of this church that in some sections the Christians were called the "Barrett Society", one church deed having been made that way.

BEAR QUARTER CHURCH was a member of the Conference in 1819 with Rev. Joshua Livesay as pastor and was provided for in 1820, but after this date we find no record of this church. Whence it went we know not.

DEEP CREEK CHURCH was a member of the Conference in 1819 and was provided for at the Conference of 1820 with Rev. Joshua Livesay as pastor, but after this date we have been able to find no trace of this church organization.

CRANEY ISLAND was a member of the Conference in 1819 served by Rev. Nathaniel P. Tatem, and it was provided for at the Conference of 1820, and at the Conference of 1826 a committee was appointed to try to get the church at Craney Island to come into closer union with the Conference, and from the record we learn that it was still alive in 1829, but soon it disappeared altogether from the records.

CYPRESS CHAPEL: This was an Episcopal chapel in Colonial days, the order having been entered for its erection on the Vestry Book of the Upper Parish of Nansemond County, Virginia, in 1758, and it continued to be used as such until the Revolutionary War. It was also used by the itinerant Methodist ministers just prior to that war. Here on July 8th, 1780, Rev. James O'Kelly, the leader of the early Christians in the South first met Bishop Francis Asbury, the founder of American Methodism. After the Revolutionary War a Christian congregation was gathered there by the early Christian ministers, perhaps by Rev. James O'Kelly himself. Here the first regular session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference met September 25th, 1819, and Rev. John Livesay was the pastor.

We give here the personnel of that Conference.

Elders—Burwell Barrett, Joshua Livesay, Nathaniel P. Tatem, unordained, Mills Barrett, James Warren, John Livesay, unordained, Francis Williamson, Nelson Millar, unordained.

Laymen—John Harrold, Thomas Holiway, Stephen Smith, Abraham Harrold, Harred Burt, John Copeland.

Rev. Mills Barrett was chosen speaker and Nelson Millar, scribe.

Churches—Providence, Craney Island, Bear Quarter, Deep Creek, Wills Chapel, Lebanon, Republican Chapel (Antioch, Joynes' (Union, Southampton), Barrett's, Holiways (Spring Hill), Cypress, Bethel, and Holy Neck.

In 1820 a new house was built, and it was later enlarged, and in 1846 another new house was built, again in 1870, another house was built and it has been repaired from time to time as occasion required. It was here that Rev. Dr. W. B. Wellons was licensed to preach on August 2nd, 1845, and it was at the same place that he was ordained to preach on November 29, 1846. It was there that the Southern Christian Association met in 1858, and plans were made for the progress of the denomination. It is one of the oldest churches of the Conference. She has always stood high and her laymen have held high rank in the councils of the denomination. Her pulpit has been filled by some of the ablest men of the Conference. Rev. Hersey E. Rountree, our first chaplain in the U. S. Navy came from this church.

HOLY NECK: This is the birth-place of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, in 1817. It is one of the historic spots in lower Nansemond County, being the site of a Quaker or Friends' meeting house in the very early days of the colony, just after the visit of Rev. George Fox to this section in 1672. Even before the coming of the white man it is believed that this was the site of an Indian place of worship as from the first it was called Holy Neck and a few years ago a good many Indian relics were found while excavating for a building. It was then, 1747, known by its present name, and on December 19th, 1747, an order was entered on the Vestry Book of the Upper Parish of the county for the purchase of land from Hardy Ralls, whose descendants now own the adjoining lands, to build a chapel 50 feet long by 26 feet wide and 14 feet pitch. This was soon completed and received. It then continued to be an Episcopal chapel until the days of the Revolutionary War, and when the Episcopal Church was disestablished in Virginia, the chapel was idle for some little time, but soon a Christian congregation was gathered here by Rev. James O'Kelly, the leader of the Christians. Rev. James Warren and Rev. Joseph Thomas had this in their circuit about 1807-1808. It was visited in 1809 by Rev. Joseph Thomas alone. It was ministered to by travelling preachers, and by local ministers at first. Rev. Francis Williamson was minister in 1819. No permanent records were kept until 1829, and then they are fragmentary, however we know that Rev. Benjamin Bullock, who was a member of this church was the minister in charge in 1821. The "Big May Meeting" at this church goes back to where the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, and out of this gathering of the early ministers and laymen grew the present Conference in Eastern Virginia. The colonial chapel later had a shed built to it for the colored people, who were slaves and belonged to the same church as their masters. Later the house was enlarged by having another house moved up and joined on the end. A new church was built in 1835, 35 feet by 45 feet. This was the old church that the older people remember, with a door in the end and a door on each side. None of the older people, or people of middle life of this community can ever forget one central figure associated with this Church for many, many years. This was Major and Deacon John Oberry, a pious, God-fearing man. It was his place to see that proper order was maintained at all services, and he did his duty without fear or favor. Well does the writer remember as a child going with his parents to this church, and at the time for services to begin, Deacon Oberry would go to each of the three doors and say in a stentorian voice, "Gentlemen, services are about to begin, come in". No matter what the topic of conversation, when this announcement was made, cigars and tobacco were thrown away, hats taken off and all went in, and were orderly. In 1888 a new house was built, one of the most modern churches of that day, and in 1916 this was remodeled and modernized, and the year 1920, it was lighted by electricity. At the session of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference held here in 1848 three races met for worship. Revs. Isaac N. Walter, W. B. Wellons and many other Southern leaders were in attendance and preached. Rev. George Copway, a Chippewa Indian, preached and then there was a service held for the colored people in the yard nearby.

She, like Cypress Chapel, Antioch, Spring Hill and Providence has been one of the pillars of the Conference for over a century, and she has sent out many ministers of the gospel, among whom we will mention Revs. William A. Jones, Benjamin Bullock, Uriah Rawles, R. H. Holland, J. H. Jones, C. C. Jones, and a great number of professional and business men, and her influence has been felt further perhaps than any other church in the Conference. She has been the mother of Franklin, Hebron, now Holland, Sarem, and her members have been the back-bone of many other churches in the Conference, yet she is now one of the most progressive and strongest country churches in the South.

Her members have always been loyal and patriotic, for during the war of 1861-1865 the church was used as a barracks for the soldiers who went into the Confederate Army, and during the late war her members were as true to the U. S., and no call of the country went unheeded.

HOLLOWAY'S: From recently gathered data this church was organized and the congregation worshipped for some years in the old Thomas Holloway Home, now owned by Mr. Charles C. Cox, near Spring Hill, Sussex County, Virginia. It was organized by Rev. Burwell Barrett around 1800 and very likely the Holloways were his active assistants. This was on Rev. Joseph Thomas' circuit in the first years of the 19th century and he often mentions being at Brother Holloway's. It was a member of the first Conference and Rev. Burwell Barrett was the pastor and must have been an old church at that time, since a new church was built in the same neighborhood in 1826-1827 and called Spring Hill. Revs. Thomas and Lazarus Holloway, sons of Thomas Holloway, Sr., were the early ministers. It had 18 members in 1830, after this date the church weakened and finally only one member remained, Francis Clary. The Methodist Protestants used the house for worship for some years, but in 1849 Rev. M. B. Barrett, the grandson of the organizer, learned that the original deed for the property was made to the "Barrett Society", as the Christians were sometimes called in that section, and he proceeded to revive the sentiment for a Christian church at that place. The reorganization took place in 1850, and was accomplished by Revs. M. B. Barrett and J. I. Hobby, Francis Clary being the only member who had belonged to the original church that came into the new organization. From that time it was served by Revs. M. B. Barrett, Robt. H. Holland, W. H. Boykin and Thomas Bashaw, until the War between the States, and while this was raging it was served by Dr. W. B. Wellons a part of the time. It has been a progressive church, having Sunday School since 1869. It was the first church in the Conference to develop a systematic and practical method to raise money for home missions, and the plan is now of record, the first to have Sunday School all the year, the first to use maps and charts in the school work and the first to furnish conveyance to pupils who were unable to go to Sunday School without it. It has furnished some of the ablest laymen in the Church, and her influence has been felt all over the bounds of the Conference, and beyond.

She has furnished members for several new Christian churches in that section. We mention Waverly, Wakefield and Dendron, and is still a strong country church. Her pulpits have been filled by some of the liveliest men in the Christian ministry. Long may she live and keep up the traditions of the past.

OLD LEBANON: This church was located in Surry County near the Court House, and was an organization before 1802. We have been informed that there was a place by this name mentioned by Bishop Asbury in his Journal before the organization of the Christian Church in 1794, and it must have been in this neighborhood, since the early names of the Christian leaders are found there even before that date in the State records. In 1802 John Warren and Jane, his wife, sold the land to trustees for the house to be built on, this deed is now extant, a copy being in the writer's possession. The famous Conference of 1794, when the church was formerly organized, was held in this vicinity, and is mentioned by Rev. James O'Kelly in his Apology. After 1794 it continued to be a prominent church for many years, and was represented in the first session of this body, and Rev. Mills Barrett was the pastor. We believe that Rev. James Warren was a member of this church. It later separated from the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference and joined the North Carolina and Virginia Conference, the sessions of that body for 1832 and 1839 being held there. About 1809 this was a great gathering place for Christians. The second Sunday in August of that year, Rev. Joseph Thomas says there were 2,000 people at the services. At this place he was twice threatened for preaching. Later it grew weak, and finally it was disbanded, its members identifying themselves with a Methodist Protestant church in the community. Why it separated from the Eastern Virginia Conference we have never been able to determine. We only know that in 1826 a committee was appointed from this Conference to try to get this church in closer touch with the Conference, but this effort was not successful. The house was used in several ways, and finally was torn down, and we understand that a part of the lumber is still in use to-day. At the Conference of 1885, several canes made from timbers of the old house were made by Mr. Cokes and sold as souvenirs and the money used to help pay for the new church. New Lebanon, some miles south of the old site, is an offspring of this early church. This was fostered by the Cokes family as we shall see later.

PROVIDENCE: This is one of the first churches in the records of the Conference, being located near Norfolk City, having been organized in 1804 by Rev. Nathaniel P. Tatem, who was their pastor for some time, he being pastor in 1819. She took a high stand in the Conference for over 50 years, having 218 members in 1854, but in the shifting of the population, near a great city as Norfolk has become, her members appear to have scattered and joined other churches more convenient to them until in the 1919 annual, no report was made of this church. She has done a good work in her day, and may she yet come forth to shine as a bright light in her section and in this Conference. Her pulpit has been filled by some of the brainiest men of the denomination. Her last report to the Conference was made to the Conference of 1908 at Dendron, Virginia. This church has now (1922) united with the Christian Temple of Norfolk and her members are helping to erect a new modern church in Norfolk.

JOYNER'S OR UNION SOUTHAMPTON: This church was organized around 1800, or perhaps earlier. The earliest record we have seen was in 1828, but this is very incomplete. It was known as Joyner's in 1819 and Rev. Burwell Barrett was the pastor, but in 1826 it appears as Union. It thus goes back beyond the birth of the Conference, and we are unable to tell what minister organized it or when, nor who were the early ministers with any degree of certainty. She has sent out several ministers, and was one church that somewhat held together during the war between the States, asking for the ordination of Rev. Thomas W. Joyner to preach during those trying times to those who were left at home. She has given of her members to several Christian Churches in Southampton County and perhaps elsewhere. Revs. Etheldred and John T. Kitchen were from this church.

WILLS' CHAPEL: This church was located near Scott's Factory in Isle of Wight County, Va., and no doubt took its name from the Hon. John S. Wills, or Wells, of the Revolutionary times. It was one of the largest churches in the early days, and in 1819 was under the pastoral care of Rev. Mills Barrett. In 1830 it had 45 white and 85 colored members. It was last represented in the Conference by Elisha Everett in 1831. From that time on it was not represented and finally went out altogether. What became of the members we have never been able to learn, nor what disposition was made of the building, but we understand that the land is still in the name of the Conference trustees. This might be looked into by the Home Mission Committee.

BETHEL: This church was located in Hertford County, N. C., and was organized and built by Rev. Francis Williamson. He was their minister in 1819, though the exact date is not known, and continued for sometime, and he was followed by his sons who were ministers. They later moved to Ohio and assisted in organizing the Christians in the West. After the removal of the Williamsons, Bethel became extinct, and its location is unknown to-day.

PORTSMOUTH: This appears to have been the first mission point of the Conference, a church being mentioned there in 1820 and a union meeting was appointed to be held there in 1821, and at the next Conference a church is mentioned as being at Gosport, and we believe that this was the same organization. This seemed to have held on as a mission point until 1829 when it was admitted into the Conference with Rev. Joshua Livesay as pastor, but after a few years or in 1835 the church at Portsmouth disappears, for 35 years, when another mission was started in Portsmouth by Rev. R. H. Costen but this was of short duration, and again she disappears from the record until 1901 when a mission appears there and in 1902 application was made for admission of the church into the Conference with Rev. John W. Harrell as pastor. A lot was bought and a chapel built in 1902, and the present church was built in 1909 and it then had 137 members.

It has been served by Revs. J. W. Harrell, H. E. Rountree, H. W. Dowding, and others, as pastors.

DAMASCUS: This church is in Gates County, N. C., and was organized in 1832-3 by Rev. Uriah Rawles and his brother, Hon. Risop Rwaless with only six charter members, and this Conference met there in 1833. Churches have been built there in 1833, 1873 and in 1887. She has sent out two ministers, Revs. L. L. Lassiter and G. J. Green, and she is the mother of the Christian churches in Gates County, N. C. Among her ministers may be mentioned Revs. Uriah Rawles, W. B. Wellons, C. J. Ralston, H. H. Butler, J. M. Roberts, B. F. Black and others. The house was burned accidentally in 1873.

BETHLEHEM in Nansemond County, Va.: This church was organized October 9th, 1847, by Rev. W. B. Wellons, who was the minister for some years. It greatly prospered before the war of 1861-1865, but during the war it became a picket post, and the building was greatly abused and damaged by both armies as it lay between the lines during the siege of Suffolk. After the war it was repaired, and the present house was built and dedicated about 1879, and it has been repaired once or twice since. In 1870 its record shows that it raised $15.00 to help keep two young ministers in school. The following have served as pastors: Revs. W. B. Wellons, Dr. P. S. B. Corbin, R. H. Costen, C. A. Apple, John N. Manning, E. W. Beale, John U. Newman, M. W. Butler, Z. A. Post, R. A. Ricks, W. W. Staley, H. H. Butler, I. W. Johnson, Stanley C. Harrell and E. T. Cotten and W. M. Jay. While she is a country church, she might be justly termed the mother of the Suffolk Christian Church, as she furnished many of the charter members of that church. Rev. Samuel Copeland was from this church, and was the second person buried in the cemetery, Rev. Joshua Livesay being the first.

BERKELEY: This church has been known by several different names. When it was admitted to the Conference in 1847 it was called the church at Berea on Washington Point, Norfolk County, Va., the next year it is put down as Berea and later we find it called Jerusalem, and Ferry Point, and still later Berkley, and now it is known as the First Church, Norfolk, Virginia. It was organized by Rev. S. S. Barrett on October 6th, 1847, and he served as pastor for 22 years. It had a hard struggle for existence for a good many years, but the prospects now look bright for it. It has been served by the following pastors: Revs. G. A. Beebe, M. W. Butler, M. P. Porter, J. U. Newman, H. Scholz, and Rev. J. F. Morgan, and many others.

NEWBERN, N. C.: This church was organized by Rev. W. B. Wellons and was admitted into the Conference in 1848, and it was quite an active church in 1858. In 1859 this church united with the North Carolina Conference. After that date we see no more of it as the war soon came on and the organization was disbanded, and scattered, and if we are not mistaken the site has been used as a colored church since 1900.

HOLLAND: This was originally Hebron, near Carrsville, Va., and was organized by Rev. R. H. Hollnad, with Alfred Cobb, William Odom and James R. Holland as charter members in October, 1853. It grew some in that location and had some good men and women as members, but conditions in that locality were such that it did not thrive as it should, so in September, 1890, a committee was appointed to consider the advisability of removing the church to a more convenient location, and on October 27th, 1890, the committee reported with Rev. Dr. W. W. Staley, presiding, and recommended Holland as the most suitable place. In 1891 the house was removed by Mr. J. E. Daughtrey and his sons to Holland, while Rev. R. H. Holland served as pastor. Later the house was enlarged, and on April 1st, 1918, ground was broken for the present edifice, and by the second Sunday in July, 1919, it was ready to be used. It was dedicated by Rev. J. O. Atkinson, December 14th, 1919.

PLEASANT RIDGE in Princess Anne County, Va., was received in the Conference in 1853 and from the record it had been organized under Rev. S. S. Barrett. It was mentioned in the Conference records for some years and then disappeared.

GOOSE CREEK, Craven County, N. C., was admitted into the Conference in 1853, and after a few years it disappeared.

LIBERTY, Norfolk County, was admitted into the Conference in 1856, and it was a member for some years, and as late as 1887, the pews and the lamps were secured for a Christian Church in Brambleton, (Norfolk, Va.).

THE SUFFOLK CHRISTIAN CHURCH was organized in November, 1860, with 25 chartered members, by Rev. W. B. Wellons, who was its pastor as long as he lived. The first church was built and dedicated on the second Sunday in March, 1861. June, 1862, Rev. W. B. Wellons had to leave Suffolk on account of the war, and services were held here by Rev. J. W. Wellons until November, 1862. The church was then used by the army chaplains as a church and later as a hospital, and was closed till May, 1865. Rev. W. B. Wellons returned and became pastor at a salary of $100.00 per year. Dr. Wellons resigned on October 24th, 1876, and Rev. J. T. Whitley was elected as active pastor and so remained until February 28th, 1879. He was followed by Rev. W. T. Walker who remained until November, 1882. Rev. W. W. Staley was then elected and has served the church since. First house erected 1860-61, added to in 1884, and present house built in 1892-1893, and dedicated the last Sunday in January, 1894, by Rev. C. J. Jones. It was again added to in 1914.

BEREA, (Nansemond), traces its beginning back to the preaching of Rev. R. H. Holland in Yeates' school house, near the present church, in 1850, and the work was continued by Rev. W. B. Wellons, who was then on the field. The church was organized, the house was built and ready for dedication the third Sunday in March, 1861, and Rev. J. W. Wellons having preached there some before the war. Since the war some of the brightest lights in the denomination have served it. Around 1890 a new house was built. While small in numbers, her members have been shining examples of loyalty to the denomination in all of its branches. We must be pardoned for mentioning a few, Col. A. Savage, Capt. Thos. R. Gaskins and W. J. Lee. Their works do follow them.

This takes the list of the churches up until the war 1862-1865. The remainder has been done during the memory of many present and we shall have to abbreviate a great deal.

JOHNSON'S GROVE was organized by Rev. Thomas W. Joyner and was admitted in 1868, and he was pastor for many years. It has had several pastors since.

LIBERTY SPRING was organized in 1869 by Dr. P. S. B. Corbin with 18 charter members, near the site of the Colonial Chapel called Middle Chapel in the early days. The church was small for a long time and had a hard struggle for years, but in 1904 and 1905 a modern church was built and dedicated April 30th, 1905. It has sent out the following ministers: Revs. C. C. Peel, R. H. Peel, J. W. Rawles and Stanley C. Harrell.

IVOR was organized on October 2nd, 1869, by Revs. Robert Rawles and M. B. Barrett in a school house near, with 20 charter members, Rev. Robert Rawles became the pastor, and it was admitted to Conference that year. In 1871, Rev. Jesse T. Whitley began to work there. The first church was built about 1872, the present one finished in 1913 and was dedicated by Dr. W. W. Staley on August 9th, 1913.

MOUNT CARMEL was organized by Rev. M. B. Barrett and joined the Conference in 1871. This was the outgrowth of a mission Sunday School begun by Major Irwin W. Duck, Rev. M. B. Barrett remained pastor until 1891. She has sent out two ministers: Revs. H. H. Butler and I. W. Johnson. Since 1891 she has been served by several prominent ministers, her own son, Rev. H. H. Butler, being with her for years.

BEREA (Norfolk County) had been a Methodist Protestant Church for some years, but on August 15th, 1871, it decided as a body to separate from the Methodist Protestant Conference, and it united with the Eastern Virginia Conference that year, with Rev. J. N. Manning, as pastor, and since that time it has been one of the progressive churches of the Conference, and has been served by several of our best pastors. It was rebuilt and rededicated November 2nd, 1905.

MISSION work was begun in Norfolk in 1872 by Rev. John N. Manning, and was continued the next year, and in 1884 Brambleton was admitted into the Conference, this time under Rev. H. H. Butler, and the church at Liberty Norfolk County was dismantled and the furniture used in the mission, and in 1889, Norfolk was again admitted with 13 members, and the next year it was reported as fully organized under Rev. C. J. Jones in a building on Charlotte Street, then in 1895, the work was transferred to the Memorial Christian Temple, and this was admitted with 337 members. This represents a work that had been going on for some time along the missionary line, several attempts not making good. This final one was the result of long headed business men and consecrated ministers planning together for success. Rev. Dr. Jones was the pastor, and he was helped by Col. A. Savage and his associates, Capt. P. H. Lee and Mr. T. A. Jones, in the movement. The point became a national pride, and the whole country came together to put it on its feet, with the aid of a loyal congregation. In a few years after it became self-sustaining it had its missionaries on the foreign field, being the first individual church in this Conference to do this. It has had some of the best ministers in the entire country to fill its pulpit. This congregation has now (1922) affiliated with the Christian Temple of Norfolk and Old Providence, and they are building the Christian Temple.

The same year, 1872, Cool Spring was a preaching point, but little seems to have been accomplished there.

SHARON, Camden, N. C., was also admitted in 1872, organized by Rev. J. N. Manning, he serving it as pastor for some time. It was finally dropped in 1881, and we are not informed what disposition was made of the property.

OAKLAND, Nansemond County, Va., was organized by Rev. W. B. Wellons in 1872. This was an after growth of Wills' Chapel, prominent in the early days. This was a Methodist Episcopal church site and was secured from that denomination when they procured the Methodist Protestant church building in Chuckatuck. It has grown and now has one of the best country Sunday Schools in this section. It has been served by several of our best preachers. It is in one of the most historic spots in Southeast Virginia, and has always been a church-going community since the first settlers arrived in the country. She has sent out three ministers, Revs. John U., Nathaniel G. and Charles E. Newman. We might add that the most of the Greek learned by the ministers of the Southern Convention has been taught by Dr. John U. Newman, who has been Professor of Greek in Elon College since her doors were opened.

EURE'S (at first Eure's Cross Roads) was started by two women, Mrs. Emma C. and Mrs. Mary J. Sparkman, members of Damascus, they going to the deacons of Damascus and asking them to send some one to look over the field to see if a Christian Church could not be established there. Rev. C. J. Ralston was sent, he being pastor of Damascus at that time, and he was soon holding services under a bush shelter, and the church was organized August 24th, 1876, the house was built in 1878 and dedicated in April, 1879, and has been remodeled and repaired three times since.

WINDSOR: Mission work had been done there as early as 1873 by Rev. J. T. Whitley, he preaching there in the afternoon and nights. This continued for some years and in 1879 the church was built and dedicated under Rev. E. W. Beale. This was a child of old Antioch, and recently the building has been removed to a more suitable place, and they now have a nice church and good prospects. It has been served by able men, and has sent out one minister, Rev. J. M. Roberts.

In 1881 Bethany appears, having been organized in 1880 with Rev. C. J. Ralston as pastor and 47 members, and the next year it had 52 members. This church prospered for many years, but in the shift of population it united with the Franklin church in 1908 and plans were made to dispose of the property, which was done and in 1920 it is used as a school building, having been sold for that purpose.

This year, 1881, Rev. C. J. Ralston was preaching at Buckhorn, in Nansemond County, as a mission point, but no church was firmly established.

UNION (Surry County) was organized in a school house at Marl Spring by Rev. J. P. Barrett about 1880 and admitted to Conference in 1881 with Rev. R. A. Ricks as minister. Two years later the present house was built about two miles from that spot. It was served for its first years by Revs. R. A. Ricks and J. U. Newman. She is the mother of Dendron Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH IN FRANKLIN was organized the fifth Sunday in April, 1883, by Rev. W. W. Staley, and it was under the care of Rev. M. L. Hurley and was assisted by the Home Mission Board for some time. It soon began to grow and now has a nice house of worship and a good membership. It has been served by such men as Rev. M. L. Hurley, R. A. Ricks, John T. Kitchen, Dr. W. S. Long, J. O. Cox, and Dr. C. H. Rowland.

WAVERLY appears as a mission point in 1883, having been preceded by an afternoon Sunday School on farm of W. B. West. This school was moved to the village that year. M. J. W. White, John T. Harris and Rev. R. E. Barrett started the movement for a church there, the organization taking place the same year and it was admitted to Conference. Rev. R. A. Ricks came next as pastor and he was followed by others. They worshipped at first in Temperance Hall. The church was completed and dedicated in October, 1886, by Dr. J. P. Barrett. A new and modern church was erected and dedicated November 1st, 1908. This is a daughter of Spring Hill, and inherited her progressiveness.

BURTON'S GROVE, a child of Barrett's was organized July 4th, 1882, by Rev. M. W. Butler in a school house near the present church. Services were held in this school house for some time, the church being built in 1883, being finally completed and dedicated in May, 1889, by Dr. J. P. Barrett. (1885 she appears in annual.)

CENTERVILLE was organized October 18th, 1885, by Rev. M. W. Butler, it having formerly been a Methodist church, whose membership was transferred to Disputanta, and was used for some years as a school, but the people wanted a church and they organized and united with the Conference in 1885. It has been served by several pastors, and is on the outskirts of the Conference.

In 1886 a mission was started at HANDSOMS, but it finally went down.

ISLE OF WIGHT C. H. was organized 1888 by Rev. John T. Kitchen. At first they worshipped under a shelter, then in the C. H. and finally the house was built. This is an offspring of Antioch, and is located just in front of the C. H. Pastors: Revs. J. T. Kitchen, I. W. Johnson, H. H. Butler, Stanley C. Harrell, E. T. Cotten and J. M. Roberts.

MT. ZION was organized by Rev. H. H. Butler, the church property being donated by Capt. Theodore Houghwout in 1890, and Rev. H. H. Butler served it as pastor for many years, and he was followed by others.

DENDRON was organized April 16th, 1901, by Rev. R. H. Peel with 21 charter members. Corner-stone laid by Rev. W. C. Wicker May 24th, 1902, and house dedicated in October, 1902, by Rev. Dr. W. W. Staley. Revs. R. H. Peel, H. E. Rountree, C. C. Jones, W. D. Harvard, and perhaps others have served as pastors.

This must have been the second organization, as M. W. Butler was there 1892.

SAREM, Gates County, N. C., was admitted to Conference in 1897 with Revs. H. H. Butler and N. G. Newman in charge, this being the result of a revival held in the vicinity by Dr. W. W. Staley and Rev. H. H. Butler, after which the church was organized with 20 members. Corner-stone laid July 13th, 1898, and Rev. R. H. Peel was the first pastor. Rev. C. J. Felton was from this church.

In 1898, EMPORIA appears as a mission point, and work was continued there for some years, a house was built, church organized, but it finally dwindled down, and we understand there is now no organization left.

NEWPORT NEWS: Work was started there by Dr. W. C. Wicker in 1900. A building was ready for use March 3rd, 1901, in North End, and in 1901 the East End Church with 29 members asked for aid, and Rev. N. G. Newman went to the field. A house was then built in East End, and Dr. Wicker resigning both congregations united, and the North End Church was closed the last Sunday in September, 1906. This work has been under the C. M. A. with the help of the local churches and private benefactions, the salary of one of the ministers having been practically paid by a member of another church in the Conference.

In 1902 PETERSBURG was a mission point, where some work was done, but the prospects did not appear bright and it was finally abandoned.

OAK GROVE, Gates County, N. C., was admitted to Conference in 1903 with Rev. B. F. Black as pastor. It had formerly been a M. P. Church, and had gone down, the building was bought and transferred to a new location, being known as Holly Grove, then as Oak Grove, Mr. L. S. Parker being very active in the work, his father having been a former minister of the M. P. Church. It was assisted at 1902 Conference.

SOUTH NORFOLK was organized in 1904 by Rev. Herbert Scholz, while he was pastor of Berkley with 24 charter members, and it has been ministered to by several pastors since.

OLD ZION, Lambert's Point, first appears in 1902 and was admitted to Conference 1903, having been worked up by Rev. J. W. Barrett. It became a mission church, and later the name was changed to Old Zion.

ROSEMONT was organized August 14th, 1902, by Rev. J. Pressley Barrett with 13 charter members, Mr. J. L. Gibson giving the land, first house built about 1900, the second in 1915 and opened for worship in January, 1916, the second Sunday and dedicated last of June, 1919, by Dr. J. O. Atkinson.

WAKEFIELD was organized by Rev. H. E. Rountree March 1st, 1906, and was admitted to Conference the same year with Rev. W. D. Harvard as pastor. Building erected in 1909 and dedicated 4th Sunday in July, 1909.

HOBSON, Nansemond County, Va., was organized by Dr. I. W. Johnson in 1906, admitted to Conference the same year, house erected soon thereafter, and Dr. Johnson has been their pastor all the time.

THE THIRD CHURCH, Norfolk, was organized September 8th, 1907, with 26 charter members and joined the Conference the same year with 30 charter members, with Rev. P. S. Sailer, as pastor. This is a child of Memorial Temple. A temporary building was soon put up and this has been enlarged from time to time, and they are now (1922) building a modern church, and it has a large membership. Rev. L. E. Smith is pastor.

THE OLD BRICK CHURCH, Isle of Wight County, Va., where the Conference once met seems not to remain in the hands of the Christians very long, but for some reason scattered. This was old St. Luke's and the fact that there was a congregation there is confirmed by Bishop Meade in his Old Churches and Families of Virginia. The tenth session of this body met there.

MARS HILL was a church in Southampton County, belonging to the North Carolina and Virginia Conference like Old Lebanon, and was in existence in 1838.

NEW LEBANON was organized in 1882, by R. E. Barrett in a school house then known as 'Level Fork,' now Elberon. The church was built in 1884 by Mr. C. E. Cokes and it was dedicated in May, 1885, by Rev. M. B. Barrett, who served as pastor in 1885 and 1886. He was followed by Rev. M. W. Butler, then came Rev. N. G. Newman, Rev. C. C. Peel, Rev. J. W. Barrett, Rev. J. W. Harrell, Rev. H. E. Rountree and Rev. C. C. Jones and others. This is the successor of Old Lebanon of the early days.

In 1917 the entire Delmarvia Conference of Delaware united with this Conference, but as we have had no opportunity to study these we shall have only to say that they were admitted in 1917. The following churches coming with the Conference: Bethel, Dover, Holden's, Moore's, St. Paul's, Christian Mission, (Dover, Del.), Temperville, all in the State of Delaware.

"Jesus, The Great Physician."
Luke 4:31-5:39.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Himself took our infirmities, and bare our diseases."—Matt. 8:17.

Devotional Reading: Isaiah 63:7-14.

Reference Material: Matt. 9:35-38; Mark 1: 21-45.

LESSONS TO LEARN

Jesus is our great Physician. We find that of the forty-five miracles which the Gospels definitely relate as performed by Jesus, thirty-six were miracles of restoration from sickness and death, to say nothing of the many other cures of which there is no specific record. Ministry to human need was a work of love by our Master when He was on earth, and there was no trouble that He could not cure. He is still our Physician for all diseases of body and mind. Are we consulting Him constantly about ills and sorrows? Are we directing to Him the friend who needs His divine ministration?

"And seeing their faith." Faith overcomes obstacles otherwise insurmountable. Faith always finds a way. Faith is not a mere passive force, but is active seeking expression in deeds. It was Charles Dickens who said: "Trust in nothing but Providence and your own efforts; never separate the two." The friends of the palsied man had this trust and their efforts were persistent.

They did not possess the nature which waits for a convenient day. They had such faith in the power of Jesus, that they made the opportunity for their friend to come into His presence. Too often minor obstacles tend to discourage. Faith and work bring the blessing to-day as they made possible the cure of old.

"The sins are forgiven thee." The palsied man received a blessing greater even than his own wish. God gives His children blessings generously. As a wise and kind Heavenly Father, He gives before we ask, and often better than we ask. Later in His ministry, Jesus Christ said: "Hitherto have ye asked nothing in my name: ask, and ye shall receive that your joy may be full," and "Whatsoever ye shall ask the Father in my name, he will give it you." And forgiveness is one of the greatest gifts He gives to man, and one which is always ready for the penitent child. The power of the Great Physician is here shown to the people of His time, so that they departed declaring "We have seen strange things to-day."

Departed . . . glorifying God. Gratitude is indeed a virtue. Favors are bestowed daily which are never recognized by a word of thanks. Too often God's best gifts are taken for granted. "What shall I render unto Jehovah for all his benefits toward me?" The palsied man came to Jesus helpless in body, strong in faith. He came, carried by friends. But he left strong in body, his disease cured, and his sins forgiven. Truly he had much to thank God for. And so have we all. As Thanksgiving Day approaches again, our thoughts are directed to counting our blessings

"one by one," and we are brought to realize that they are so numerous, that our year should be spent "glorifying God."

"Sin brings about paralysis of our best nature."

"The great world's heart is aching, aching fiercely in the night,
And God alone can heal it, and God alone give light;
And the men to bear that message, and to speak the living word,
Are you and I, my brothers, and the millions that have heard."

—Frederick George Scott.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

NOVEMBER 5, 1922.

Better Thinking. Phil. 4:4-8. (Consecration Meeting.)

THOUGHTS ON THE TOPIC.

God approves happy thoughts in the minds of His children. He tells them to "rejoice . . . always." Happy thoughts make happy Christian Endeavorers. Christian Endeavor should develop better, happier thinking.

Our progress comes as a result of our thinking. Worry and anxious thoughts of people who do not trust God enough hinder growth in the Christian life. Prayer conquers worry, and faith overcomes anxious thought, and brings to the life, "the peace of God which passeth all understanding."

Thinking on the true, the just and the pure, makes the life true and just and pure. The untrue, unjust and impure thoughts are crowded from the mind, and wrong deeds from the life when thinking is raised to the high plane urged by the Apostle Paul. It is impossible to be constantly thinking good thoughts, while living an evil life. Our thoughts to a very large degree determine our lives, our character and our destiny.

"Sow a thought and reap an act,
Sow an act and reap a habit,
Sow a habit and reap a character,
Sow a character and reap a destiny."

"Ideas are the greatest warriors in the world."—Jas. Field.

"Great thoughts are blossoms that fill the world with perfume and joy."—Geo. H. Knox.

"Thoughts are mightier than armies. Purposes have achieved more victories than horsemen or chariots."—W. M. Paxton, D. D.

"The man with an idea has ever changed the fact of the world. Your idea or ideal is not fully yours until you have expressed it."—Henry C. King.

To the Women of the North Carolina Christian Conference:

Owing to conditions in Raleigh, it has been deemed expedient to change the date of the Woman's Missionary Convention from November 9 to November 2, one week earlier.

A full representation from all missionary organizations and churches throughout the Conference is earnestly desired.

The missionary work is growing and we women need to increase our efforts to reach the goal set for 1922, as the demand for funds becomes more urgent each year. All ministers are cordially invited to join us in Raleigh November 2, 1922.

De Notes of De Big Brass Horn.

From one of our exchanges we clip the following incident, and it is well worth reading and considering as a meditation:

A sincere, pious old Southern colored man was asked to talk at the funeral of a little child. He was talking on the text, "All things work together for good to them that love God." He said in substance: "Brethren, we can't take one of God's dealings by itself. We got to put them all together. He don't say His dealings work by themselves. He says dey work together for good. You hear dat brass band? Take all dem horns sep'rate—be mighty poor music. De high tenor horn makes shrill music by itself. It takes all de horns together to make de music. Dis is like de notes ob de big brass horn. Dere's no music here. But let us wait in faith till God brings in de brass horn ob death, a solemn sound. We all wait for de horn ob de resurrection, for de horn ob de ascension, for de angelic horn. When all de horns in God's great band of providence get together, den dere will be music in heaven."

Mr. Spurgeon's Answer to Two Churches

A country church offered such a very small salary that Mr. Spurgeon wrote to the trustees: "The only individual I know who could exist on such a stipend is the angel Gabriel. He would need neither cash nor clothes, and he would come down from heaven every Sunday morning and go back at night. So I advise you to invite him." The qualifications specified by another church were so many that Mr. Spurgeon recommended the corresponding deacon to take a large sheet of brown paper and cut out a minister of the size and shape desired.—Selected.

NELSON.

Little Emory, the twin son of Brother and Sister Albert Nelson, was born August 12, 1920, and died August 30, 1922, aged two years and eighteen days. There are two surviving children in the family, William, six years of age and the twin sister. Brother and Sister Nelson are deeply grieved to lose their bright little boy, but their faith is in Jesus who is giving them sustaining grace.

C. E. NEWMAN.

A DOUBLE MARRIAGE

The home of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Copeland of Eagle Springs, N. C., was the scene of a pretty double wedding October 4, 1922, when their twin daughters Misses Monte and Jennie, became the brides respectively of Mr. Jeter Allred and Lacey Cole, both of Norman, N. C.

The room was tastefully decorated with potted ferns and evergreens, when the brides to be entered, each dressed in a beautiful travelling suit of blue with hat to match with a crescent of ferns and brides roses over their left arms, while their right arms were locked with their husbands to be.

The ceremony was performed by a former pastor, Rev. F. J. Green of Ramseur, N. C., and after the vows had been said, prayer was offered while the young couples knelt around the hymeneal altar.

Immediately after the ceremony, and a beautiful supper, the young couples left for Asheville, N. C., where they will spend their honeymoon. Many friends wish them happiness and long life.

F. J. GREEN.

NOT MEN, BUT CHRIST

One earnest man was on the point of forsaking the doctrine of the eradication of the "Old Man," because, he said, "There is no use to preach it when I do not see it manifested and proven by the lives of those who profess it." His friend replied, "Get your doctrine out of the Bible, not from the lives of men."

St. Paul called attention to the fact that we do not yet see all things put under Him; but rejoices that we can see Jesus who has made the fullest provision for the salvation of every man (Heb. 2: 8, 9). It is impossible for us to always discern the difference between human weakness and sin in the lives of those about us. We may judge a man as a sinner who has, in God's judgment, but made a mistake.

We will never see any ideal men in this world, there never was but one ideal, the man Christ Jesus; but we can believe the word of His promise to save us from the guilt and presence of sin, and we can have the testimony of His Spirit to the fact that He has sanctified us wholly (Heb. 2: 11). Whether any one ever had it or not, God has promised full salvation. If I am so rigid in my requirements that I am not able to look upon a single life that measures up to the standard of His Word, still the Word, and not the lives of men, is the basis of my faith and the rule of my practice. Even if I will not receive the testimony of men, the testimony of God is greater.—Herald of Holiness.

THE DEATH OF A BELIEVER.

The Apostle slept; a light shone in the prison,

An angel touched his side;
"Arise," he said, and quickly he hath risen,
His fettered limbs untied.

The watchers saw no light at midnight
greamling;

They heard no sound of feet,
The gates fly open, and the saint still dreaming
Stands free upon the street.

So, when the Christian's eyelid drops and closes

In nature's final strife;
A friendly angel stands where he reposes
To wake him up to life,

He gives a gentle touch and so releases
The spirit from its clay;

From sin's temptations, and from life's distresses
He bids it come away.

It rises up, and, from its darksome mansion

It takes its silent flight,
And finds its freedom in the far expansion
Of heavenly air and light.

Behind, it hears Time's iron gates close faintly,

It is now far from them.
For it has reached the city of the saintly,
The new Jerusalem.

A voice is heard on earth of kinsfolk weeping

The loss of one they love;
But he is gone, where the redeemed are keeping
A jubilee above.

The mourners throng the way, and from the steeple

The funeral bell tolls slow;
But on the golden streets the happy people
Are passing to and fro

And saying, as they meet, "Rejoice!
Another

Long waited for, is come;
The Savior's heart is glad, a well loved brother
Has reached the Father's home."

OBITUARY.

Departed this life at her home, Haw River, N. C., October 8th, 1922, Mrs. J. H. McClure, wife of Deacon J. H. McClure of Haw River Christian Church. Sister McClure was a member of the Baptist Church at Haw River. She had not been well for some time, but kept up and at her household duties till within about a day of her death. She bore her affliction very patiently and did not complain. A good woman and devoted wife has fallen asleep.

The funeral services were conducted by her pastor and the writer and the interment was in the cemetery at Graham, N. C. May the dear Master comfort the bereaved.

WHAT WILT THOU.

Do what Thou wilt! yes, only do
What seemeth good to Thee:
Thou art so loving, wise and true,
It must be best for me.

Send what Thou wilt, or beating shower,
Soft dew, or brilliant sun;
Alike in still or stormy hour,
My Lord, Thy will be done.

Teach what Thou wilt; and make me learn
Each lesson full and sweet,
The deeper things of God discern
While sitting at Thy feet.

Say what Thou wilt; and let each word

My quick obedience win;
Let loyalty and love be stirred
To deeper glow within.

Give what Thou wilt; for then I know
I shall be rich indeed;
My King rejoices to bestow
Supply for every need.

Take what Thou wilt, beloved Lord,
For I have all in Thee!
My own great exceeding reward
Thou, Thou Thyself shalt be!

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Uncle Sam Borrows the People's Savings.—

"For the first time since the World War the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Andrew Mellon, announces an issue of $500,000,000 of United States government bonds. The bonds bear four and one quarter per cent interest. They are thirty-year bonds and are without the special tax exemption privileges. The final date for turning in bids for the bonds was October 16. Several days before that date bids had been received for more than one billion dollars' worth of the bonds. This shows that many people have money to loan and that they have confidence in the stability of the United States government. The various issues of Liberty Bonds are selling above par and are in demand."

The United States Quits Bootlegging.—

"All law-abiding citizens are pleased with the decision of the State Department to put a stop to the sale of liquors on American ships anywhere in the world and to stop the sale of liquors on foreign ships while they are in American waters. Attorney General Daugherty, after long consideration of the matter, has announced his decision that the selling of intoxicating liquors on American ships, government owned or privately owned, anywhere in the world is contrary to law. He also rules that no foreign ship may bring such liquors within the three-mile limit, sealed or unsealed, whether they are or are not intended for consumption in this country. The President has therefore instructed Chairman Lasker of the Shipping Board to discontinue the transport and sale of alcoholic liquors on Shipping Board vessels and has directed Secretary Mellon to deliver equivalent instructions to all private owners of American ships. This is good news indeed."

A Rare Bible.—

"Through the courtesy of Mr. Gabriel Wells, of New York, a rare copy of the Gutenberg Bible, which is his, is now on temporary exhibition at the National Museum in Washington. Gutenberg invented the art of printing from movable type. Prior to his time printing was done from carved wooden blocks, on which was everything which appeared on a page. Gutenberg invented the three essentials of modern printing, changed only in details since his day in the early part of the fifteenth century. These three things—type, mold, from which the type is cast, and matrix from which the mold is made—have had a more powerful influence upon the world than any other invention or discovery ever made. Through them all knowledge is spread; through printing the Bible has become the world's book; through printing has education of the masses been accomplished; through printing has civilization displaced barbarism and knowledge taken the place of ignorance and superstition."

Standard Oil Stock Jumps.—

"Sensational gains in the value of Standard Oil stock startles Wall Street. The gains are unprecedented in the history of American stocks. The announcement of the payment of very large dividends caused the stock to increase in a few days more than a billion dollars. John D. Rockefeller, Jr.'s holdings alone increased more than $52,000,000—that is, "on paper" Mr. Rockefeller is more than $52,000,000 richer than he was a few weeks ago. As is well known, the United States Supreme Court in 1911 split up the Standard Oil Company. There are now thirty-five units of the company, the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, the Standard Oil Company of Louisiana, and so on. A dividend of $200 per share was announced by some of the units. And a few years ago the shares were selling as low as $125. No wonder we pay high for gasoline and other oil products."

Raise Restaurant Standards.—

"To the discredit of the American people, they are patronizing eating houses more and more. We say this to their discredit because the practice means the weakening of home ties, and anything that detracts from the home weakens the very foundations of all that is best in our American life. The National Restaurant Association met in Washington City last week. One of the speakers said: "The development of the public restaurant business in America has been so rapid during the past few years that too much of it has been done on the fly-by-night basis. The time is ripe for the stabilized restaurant to assume proper leadership in the industry. The public will soon learn to discriminate between the stabilized restaurant and the mushroom unstabilized type of public eating place." Those who must eat in restaurants deserve improved service, but, so far as it may encourage those who could eat at home to go to restaurants for their meals, it would be better not to improve the service."

Our Autoists in Japan.—

"It is said that the following traffic rules for automobile drivers are posted in conspicuous places on the streets of the cities of Japan: "At the rise of the hand of the policeman stop rapidly. Do not pass him by or otherwise disrespect him. When a passenger 'of the foot' hoves in sight, tootle the horn trumpet to him melodiously at first. If he still obstacles your passage, tootle him with vigor and express by word of the mouth the warning 'hi, hi.' Beware of the wandering horse that he shall not take fright as you pass him. Do not explode the exhaust box at him. Go smoothly by or stop by the roadside till he pass away. Give space of the festive dog that make sport in the roadway. Avoid entanglement of dog with your wheel spokes. Go smoothly on the grease mud, as there lurk the skid demon. Press the brake of the foot as you roll around the corner to save the collapse and tie-up." We think it would be in order for many American automobile drivers to be sentenced to drive upon the streets of Japanese cities for from two to twelve months."

Dangers Ahead!

We are confronted today with world-wide upheaval and embittered antagonism in social and industrial relations. This is, in part, the heritage of war; in part, it is the growing pain of democracy—that democracy which had its birth in brotherhood and now seeks to make brotherhood the actual law of community life and so embody Christian thought and feeling in political and industrial relationships. Difficulties innumerable are an accompaniment of such an effort. Such difficulties, however, open to the Church a wide door of opportunity and leadership. For, as we have been reminded, the Church, ideally, is "A great democracy of God's servants and Christ's brethren." Democracy really seeks to embody in statute law the fact that men are brethren. Necessarily that is not an easy task. We shall solve its problems only as we become servants of God, making our brotherhood a brotherhood of service in Him.

The gospel of the Kingdom is of and in itself a social message. In all industrial questions there is need, above all else, of frank co-operation and sympathetic understanding. There are also certain primary and fundamental principles of economic and social justice for which the Church must stand. In obedience to Christ's teaching, the Church is bound to bear positive and corporate witness to the equal and infinite value of every human personality. To this end we would emphasize the duty which is laid upon all Christians, of placing human values first in the conduct of business. The end of business is not primarily profit but human welfare and the common good. In the language of the Lambeth Resolutions on "Social and Industrial Questions," we believe that "an outstanding and pressing duty of the Church is to convince its members of the necessity of nothing less than a fundamental change in the spirit and working of our economic life. This change can only be effected by accepting as the basis of industrial relations the principle of cooperation in service for the common good, in place of unrestricted competition for private or sectional advantage."

To arouse and educate the public conscience to a recognition of the truth of these principles and a brave effort to apply them, and to transmute the present spirit of self-seeking into good will and mutual confidence and helpfulness, is the task of the Church, and of every one of its members.—Southern Churchman.

NOTES-PERSONALS

The prophet must always be a martyr because the disciples of the things that are, will crucify the man who sees the things that yet shall be.

Get but the truth once uttered, and 'tis like
A star new-born, that drops into its place,
And which once circling in its placid round
Not all the tumult of the worlds can shake.

Lowell.

"We have seen His star" was the declaration of the Wise Men, and seeing it there was but one thing for wisdom to do and that was to follow it, day and night, until they arrived where God lay waiting.

It is not a difficult task for a man to take a hammer and go around breaking to pieces every thing which comes in his reach, but it is not an easy thing to go around and mend them and rebuild them again so that they shall serve the same purpose as well as they did before.

When you go to work for the Lord, do not forget and think you are in the work of the world, for if you do, you may use the human agency to win success, and that will always be a failure. Use not carnal weapons, but the weapons that God gives and so win your victory.

Are you complying with the request of Dr. Atkinson to pray for our Men and Millions Movement? Do not forget this request. The men who have carried the responsibility of this work need the sympathy and assistance of every lover of our cause. You can help it by earnest, believing prayer.

"A man tells of how he was called on the wire from five hundred miles away. He could hear perfectly, but not one word of his went over the wire. His transmitter was out of order. This sometimes happens in our communication with our Heavenly Father. 'If I regard iniquity in my heart, the Lord will not hear me.'"

It is a constant effort if we make our lives worth much to the world. Some one has said: "He only is a true citizen who strives, day by day, to develop higher national ideals, and by adding his own mite of effort to the cause of righteousness brings the gates of the Golden City a little closer to our view."

The outlook for Christian education is hopeful, if only we may keep the other side from dominating the work of the Christian in that direction. The Christian educator must be untrammelled by the handicaps of the world-life. We cannot have two heads of equal power in any enterprise. Let Christ and his ideals be at the head, and when all others submit to him, then we shall have the development of the education which is truly Christian.

One of our exchanges puts it this way:

"When a young man is in love, we say he is 'paying attention' to his beloved. It is a perfectly good description. Where there is love of any kind, it results in a concentration of interest. When one really loves God, it will result inevitably in his 'paying attention' to God's will, and will cause him to go to any sacrifice to serve Him."

Nature has a beautiful way of overgrowing the wounds and hiding her scars; if the bark be knocked off a tree, in due time the evidence of the wound will be obliterated, the vital processes in the tree itself will find a way to cover the scar. This is a lesson, a blessed lesson that men should learn. We ought to outgrow the wounds we receive from others. If we have in us a full and abounding life we will outgrow them. A pin scratch will not make a permanent wound on healthy skin.—Western Methodist.

Do you know what is the starting point in the Christian life? There must be such a starting point. It will pay you, and all the rest of us, to find out where that starting point is and then be sure to seek that point, and finding it, begin there and go in search of Christ. Rev. F. L. Vernon says: "There is no other way to become a Christian. He who dares to do the will shall know the doctrine. But he must do the will first. From the top of Calvary you can see the City. But you must go to the top."

We preachers need to hear advice and in many instances we need to take the good advice which may be given us. We read of an old brother who had more sense than eloquence, who being called on to lead in prayer, he included in the prayer the pastor, and in doing so he said: "Lord give him unction and gumption, for he needs both." That was pretty well done, and many of us are in need of both. We should not allow that prayer to end with some one else praying for us—we ought to pray that or a similar prayer often for ourselves.

The sainted Andrew Murray once said:

"There is no way of being delivered from this life of self but one; we must follow Christ, set our hearts upon Him, listen to His teachings, give ourselves up every day that Christ may be in all of us, and by the power of Christ the denials of self will be a blessed, unceasing reality. Never for one hour do I expect the Christian to reach a stage at which he can say, 'I have no self to deny.' His fellowship with the cross of Christ will be an unceasing denial of self every hour and every moment."

That was a very graceful act on the part of Rev. J. O. Atkinson, when in the late session of the American Christian Convention, he led Rev. J. W. Holt, who lives within a short walk of the Burlington Christian Church, to the front and introduced him to the Convention as one of our retired brethren, who was also the man who organized the Burlington Christian Church in which the Convention was then meeting. We feel sure the Convention will remember the act as a very pleasant one, and we feel we are quite sure also that Bro. Holt will remember it as one of the sunny spots in his long and useful life.

Do we appreciate them? Who? Why, the missionaries who are toiling in foreign lands with no hope of any great achievements, as the world looks upon their work, but they are looking higher and beyond what the world has to say. Referring to this matter, Mr. J. A. MacCallum says: "There are thousands of missionaries today who, with no complaint and no thought of doing anything noteworthy, are giving their lives to a cause so vast that its impact upon even a small man makes him large. Sometimes their creeds are narrow, but their motives are so pure and free from self-regard that in action they burst these self-imposed shackles, and their minds move with mighty strides towards a world redeemed from ignorance, superstition and sin."

Why do men go mad? It is due to some wrong conception of life, as we believe. The man who has the right view of life and sticks to it, we believe will never go mad. Robert J. Burdette says: "It isn't the experience of today that drives men mad. It is the remorse of what happened yesterday, and the dread of what tomorrow may disclose. These are God's days. Leave them with Him. Therefore, I think, and I do, and I journey but one day at a time. That is the easy day. That is the man's day. Nay, rather it is our day—God's and mine. And while faithfully and dutifully I run my course, and work my appointed task on that day of ours, God the Almighty and All-loving takes care of yesterday and tomorrow."

We are religionists, but are we Christians, real Christians? Have we been born of the Spirit? There is much talk now a days of the regeneration of society. There is such a thing as the regeneration of society, but it is a very different thing from the regeneration of the individual. Regeneration of the human heart is the work of the Spirit in bringing us to see the truth in its right light. It takes us as it finds us in the darkness and brings us into the light of God. Indeed, as we see it, we cannot have the regeneration of society except as we first have the regeneration of the Holy Spirit upon the individual heart and life. It is the regenerated individual who brings regeneration to society. Society has no other way, so far as we know to get regeneration. J. D. L. Thomas is quoted as saying, and he says it well: "There can be no complete social transformation without individual regeneration. The church must focus her efforts upon living and teaching personal religion. She must give herself to prayer and meditation, for it is while we muse the fire burns and passion is born of thought. It is spiritual passion we need. In addition to intellectual culture, which was never more necessary than it is today, the church needs this spiritual passion, which will clothe her message with authority in dealing with men and nations."

"The managers of the Central Carolina Fair Association at Greensboro advertised that there would be no gambling this year at the fair and then kept their word. The amusement company that secured the concessions of the Midway had contracted that no gambling devices should be allowed, and then regardless of the agreement opened up in full force as soon as they began business. But the managers of the fair put a stop to it. The amusement company protested vigorously and even closed up entirely for a while in the hope of forcing the managers of the fair to terms, but they stood firm and compelled the carnival crowd to observe the original contract. As a result the city school board met and ordered a holiday last Friday for the school children so that they might attend the fair, since objectionable features had been eliminated, and the Ministerial Association passed special resolutions commending the stand that had been taken for a clean fair. We mention these things to commend the action and to call upon the managers of other fairs in the state and upon the communities in which they are held to clear out the gambling devices and other hurtful features. There has been entirely too much advertising that no gambling will be allowed and then permit it to go right on. Managers of fairs should deal honestly with the public or they should be compelled by an enraged sense of decency in their communities to keep faith with the people."—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

A FAIR QUESTION FOR DENOMINATIONAL SCHOOLS.

If the denominational school or college is to be Christian in name and in a few points of Christian truth, why not let it take the essentials in the Christian life. The whole scope of actual Christian truth is needed to give Christian Character to its students and work. One of the best articles we have seen along this line, we find in an exchange, and was delivered by Rev. J. A. Huffman on the occasion of Marion College Day. It is most fitting for the study of all college presidents, professors, students and trustees. We are giving it a prominent place in our columns. We really wish it may be given a careful and prayerful study on the part of all these school and college leaders. It follows and is worthy of the attention, the careful attention, of all who may be concerned.—EDITOR.

THE RELATION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT TO THE EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM OF THE CHURCH.

"Howbeit when He, the Spirit of Truth, is come, He will guide you into all truth." John 16: 13.

No one doubts but that the church has a program of evangelism, but sometimes the question is raised as to whether or not the church would engage in an educational program. Every educational institution launched and maintained by any branch of the Christian church is an affirmative answer to the question whether or not the church should engage in education.

The fact is, that the state does not, and some argue, cannot, supply distinctly Christian education. This is the result of a democratic government, church and state being separate, and all classes alike—Christian, Jew, pagan and atheist—being patrons of education such as the state offers.

Since the Christian element is so vital to our educational processes, if we would have our young people to be Christian, and since the state cannot or does not supply that element, there remains no institution capable of supplying it but the church. The Christian home can go a long way in providing the Christian element during the process of primary and secondary education—the common and high school periods, while the children are constantly under parental care, attending school from home; but finds itself almost entirely helpless when the child is ready for higher education, and must leave home to attend college. The only solution to the problem of Christian higher education is for the church to assume an educational program, providing training in every field of necessary and legitimate knowledge. There are some highly specialized courses, such as medicine, engineering, etc., which may quite safely be taken by maturer Christian young people, which the church may not feel obliged to include in its educational program, but the church must not fail to provide Christian education for her young people, preparing them for specific Christian work and the legitimate occupations and professions, making provisions for both ministry and laity.

Since the Holy Spirit, the third person of the Trinity, the Administrator of the Affairs of Grace in this dispensation, is interested in the church's program of evangelism, this and her educational program are closer related than most people realize. How often, if ever, do we hear mention made of the fact, that the Holy Spirit has any relation, whatever to the educational program? Perhaps this is one thing which is wrong with so many so-called Christian institutions.

The promise that the Holy Spirit will guide into all truth is primarily applicable to the truth of God's Word, the truth relative to sin and salvation. But the "all" of the promise must, from the very interest of the Holy Spirit in the church and her members, be sufficiently inclusive to embrace all the fields of legitimate knowledge into which we may enter, and in which we may make inquiry.

The Holy Spirit is vitally interested in the organization of an educational institution, its faculty and its curriculum. He is also interested in every activity of the institution, and if given His way, would Christianize and spiritualize the atmosphere of the school, making it natural that intellectual progress and spiritual advancement should go hand in hand.

Apart from the regular school work, there are three distinct spheres of activity in the average institution of higher education, all of which have a far-reaching effect upon the product of the institution. To fail to give the Holy Spirit His place in either of these activities has resulted in havoc, spiritually, in many an institution.

The Social Life.

Man is a social being. He cannot help it for God made him that way. The social life of an institution is an important part of it, and if properly conducted makes for refinement, culture and spirituality. The social life of many a so-called Christian institution tends toward coarseness, sensuality, indolence and worldliness. Surely, if the Holy Spirit were given a place in the social program of the institution, it would not be degraded into card playing, dances, mock marriages, attending theaters and movies, parties featuring every popular event and occasion. This is not to argue that every gathering must be for a wholly religious purpose, but to insist, that if the Holy Spirit is given His place in the social program of an institution, nothing will be introduced, even in a social way, which will militate against the healthy spiritual progress of the school.

The Athletic Life.

No one who has ever borne responsibility to an oncoming generation of young people, whether in the home or in an institution, will doubt the necessity of physical exercise. This is necessary for their physical well-being. Young people who live in rural districts, especially those on farms, receive a large proportion of their necessary physical exercise in attending to their duties. But in an institution some form of a systematic exercise is necessary. Perhaps the most relaxing and profitable physical exercise for an institution is some suitable form of athletics. But athletics in many Christian institutions, like in others, has become so highly developed, that only a few can participate—such who can "make the team," while the student body as a whole and especially those who need it most, get practically nothing out of athletics. Then, too, by the system of intercollegiate games which is in vogue, much valuable time is expended by the teams in making "trips" and much money is expended by the students of institutions in paying other teams for games conducted at home. The moral hazard of teams on "trips" is no small one, to say nothing of the waste of time. The high athletic spirit which such a condition develops is not conducive to spirituality, nor the highest type of scholarship. Students have been known to leave school before the close of the year because the cost of maintaining the athletic program drained their financial resources. Athletics frequently crowd out regular school work, and the situation in many institutions was described by Ex-President Wilson, when President of Princeton University, when he said: "The tail (athletics) is wagging the dog, instead of the dog wagging the tail." This type of athletics also encourages gambling, which is indulged in to an alarming degree by the students in many institutions. Dad Elliott recently said: "Within five years college athletics will be as notoriously corrupt as the race track ever was."

Now the Holy Spirit would be pleased to sustain a relation to the athletic program of a Christian institution, and if He would be allowed to do so, the gymnasium might become a sacred place, for here the young men and women would be made fitter temples for His dwelling. He would certainly exclude the coarser, brutal games; would promote a type of athletics from which all alike unselfishly might share the benefits, and which would not require a needless expenditure of time and money, nor expose "teams" to moral dangers beyond the control of their institution.

The Religious Life.

It goes without saying, that the religious life of an institution will be influenced largely by its own activities. It is equally evident, that other activities in an institution will be determined by the religious life. Every activity reacts upon the other activities.

Here, again, the Holy Spirit's ministry is greatly needed, but usually ignored. The religious standards set for Christian institutions by popular organizations which aspire to leadership in all institutions of higher learning, such as the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A., are superficial and largely of social character. When once these organizations become entrenched within an institution, it is well nigh impossible to dislodge them, and as long as they function in institutions their standards of religious experience and life prevail. Of course, where the church, whose educational institution is in question, has no higher standard of religious experience and life to offer, such standards are likely acceptable. But where a church stands for higher religious standards, such organizations should not be allowed to function within its institutions of learning and set the religious standards for them. The Holy Spirit cannot guide into the truth of sin and salvation, where His ministry is neglected and undesired. There is nothing in the experience and practice of holiness which is inconsistent with young life, and while young people express their religious experiences in a way peculiar and consistent with youth, this standard should be maintained for and by them, by the organization within the church whose institution of learning is under consideration, best adapted to this ministry. The ministry of the Holy Spirit is adapted to the religious life of the young people within an institution of higher learning no less than to other people outside of such institutions.

The Quest for Truth.

If the Holy Spirit is to lead us unto all truth, within every field of legitimate and necessary knowledge, why should we not seek His guidance in our whole quest for truth? No one would doubt the propriety of asking Divine guidance for a recitation in theology. Why should we not, as well, seek the guidance of the Holy Spirit in our study of physics, botany, biology, zoology, chemistry, mathematics, astronomy, or any other subject in the curriculum of higher education? If we should seek His ministry as we should, we would find God in His universe and be spared the doubts and skepticism which frequently result from scientific studies. I once studied astronomy through the whole course, under one of the most distinguished astronomers in America, who during the whole time never mentioned the existence of God. How different with the eminent Christian scientist, Kepler, who after believing for years that the earth's orbit was not a circle but an ellipse, finally proved the same mathematically, is reputed to have exclaimed: "Oh God, I think Thy thoughts after Thee." Education is that process by which we become acquainted with our environments, and a true process of education cannot but lead to a knowledge of God, who is our greatest environment, in His relation to the universe and man. Only bad process of education leads in the opposite direction. If the Holy Spirit is given His proper place in the educational program of the Church, head and heart will go together in the quest for truth and appropriation of truth, and the educational institutions of the Church will prove veritable bulwarks of faith, promoters of everything for which the Church stands, and mighty factors in the salvation of men.

HOW DO YOU READ YOUR BIBLE?

That is not the primary question. The main question for each of us to answer is this: Do I even make an effort to read my Bible as much as I read the newspapers? We fear you do not. Or if you do, then you are the exception to the rule, as we think of the matter. If the matter of your reading your Bible is settled, then the next question is, How do you read it?

In answering this question, we propose to allow Iva Durham Vennard to tell you how you ought to read your Bible in order to get help from its great truths for your own heart and mind and life. Iva Durham Vennard says:

There are those who consider it very important that we should know our Bibles from the literary point of view and that we should be well versed in its geography and history as well as to have some knowledge of its accuracy compared with science, etc. Some intellectual people are content to put years of study upon its records, testing their authenticity and the like. We would not condemn this intellectual view if it is reverently done. We believe that geography and history are necessary as a background for the truth taught. But the sacred Book does not open its heart and yield its spiritual treasure to this kind of Bible reading. There are riches hidden from the wise and prudent who have only the world's standards of learning, riches that are revealed to babes who know the deeper secret of dependence upon the Holy Spirit.

Then there are those who read their Bibles almost entirely in the devotional attitude. There is not one word of criticism to be offered. We wish there were more people reading it upon their knees. The Church of today would be vastly richer if more of her members were daily drawing their spiritual exaltation from this well-spring of inspiration and illumination in their private devotions. I remember an aged saint who had never had the opportunity of taking a Bible course in a training school. There were no Sunday Schools even in her childhood, but through the long years of her life, in the midst of much responsibility and sorrow she had loved this book for her comfort, and had read it through from cover to cover, year after year, in her private devotions. At length the eyes became too dim to follow its lines and the dear old hands too feeble to hold it up any longer, but she loved to have it in her lap as she sat in the big arm chair. It had been "the man of her counsel," and the secret of her strength for so many years, that it was a comfort to her at the eventide of life simply to fold her tired hands upon its worn and beloved cover. She was a devotional reader. And friend, if we do not understand in a measure at least, this love for the Book itself, we have missed something that is very sweet and precious.

There is still another way of reading our Bibles, a middle way perhaps between the two mentioned. Let us remind ourselves again that the Bible is truth. We often hear the remark, "I believe everything the Bible says. If it's in the Bible that is authority enough for me." And we Amen it. But there is something more fundamental than that. Everything the Bible says is true, but not simply because it is the Bible. It is in the Bible because it is true. Truth is eternal. The Bible is God's Book. It is the revealed, inspired expression of God's wisdom and His will. What is written, God has caused to be written and has marvelously preserved for us through the crashing of centuries, because it is His own eternal truth; true before the Bible as a book had been begun. With this conception of the eternity of the truth before us, let us come to its written pages with all our intelligence, reverently gathering all the knowledge we can concerning it, and with all the devotion of our hearts, laying bare our inmost being to the Holy Spirit, that we may discover, as Dr. Mabie so forcibly expressed it, certainties to go by: The Bible stories, its biography, history, poetry, epistles, prophecy, all are more than a mere record with its local coloring and application. They embody the eternal principles, the certainties of God's wisdom and His infinitely loving will. That is why the Bible never gets to be a back number. It is never out of date. It is the only book that fits every generation and bears a message for all time.

A few years ago we heard a brother say that he always came to the study of the Scriptures with this prayer in his heart—"Lord, let me find the truth. Make it a working force in my life. Let me learn its working value." Would that this were the heart prayer of us all! If we read to discover its "certainties to go by," then indeed the Word becomes a "lamp unto our feet and a light unto our pathway." And if we pray that this certainty may become a working force in us, that will bring down the measuring rod of God's eternal truth upon our lives. It will square us in ethics as well as in doctrine. It will search us out in motive as well as in theology. Then indeed we as "living epistles known and read of all men" will tell the same story that our Book records. We will be true witnesses. May God help us all in the study of our Bibles.

SWEET CHARITY"—WHO? WHEN? AND WHERE?

Charity is a Christian grace and it ought to have a place in the heart and mind of every Christian, for when a virtue is in the heart, it will be very likely to come out and undertake something for the world: Hilda Richmond, a noted lady writer, gives the following story as illustrating some of the more desirable features of real charity. She says:

A woman who moved to another town was sincerely mourned by all her friends for her lovable qualities; but among the expressions of regret heard on all hands at her departure none was more sincere nor expressive than that of an old lady in deep poverty who the woman, now a resident of a distant town, delighted to help and visit. The old lady, entirely unable to support herself, was deeply grateful to those who made it possible for her to remain in her tiny home; but for some of her supporters she could not help having a warmer affection than others.

"Mrs. M——— always made charity so sweet to me," she lamented. "I shall miss her so much. She made me feel that it was a privilege for her to help me. She was always praising me for my housekeeping and my keeping cheerful in old age after I had lost all my folk and recalling the times when I was able to help others, and—O, well, I can't explain, but she took all the sting out of poverty."

And the humble friend who listened understood. Kind-hearted, really good women visited the tiny home with bigger and better gifts than Mrs. M——— could bring; but they loaded the poor old soul down with cautions as to being very careful with the supplies they brought and making them go as far as she could, and they talked about the high cost of living and the taxes and repairs on the shabby little home, and they were in too much of a hurry to sit down—things that Mrs. M——— never did. To many the old lady was merely a charity case, one of a long list of people who must be supported; but to Mrs. M——— the charity cases were dear friends, and she gave of herself as freely and far more generously than she could give of her means.

It is a wonderful thing to be able to make the poor forget their poverty even for a brief period. To be sure, there are shiftless, no-account folk who would waste every penny given them and be content to live in filth and wretchedness, but there are others who hold out to the last moment rather than ask for help. Sickness, misfortune, the faults of others, accidents, and trickery may rob them of the means of support, thereby adding double sorrow to their poverty, and it is worse than useless to remind them of their troubles. Particularly are old people abnormally sensitive, and they do love sympathy and comfort.

Perhaps the term "sweet charity" was coined to make wealthy people regard giving as a delightful privilege rather than a duty, and year by year more people are coming to see in giving a means of education and growth and development for themselves as well as a delightful opportunity to serve their day and generation; but when the word "sweet" can be made to mean something to the recipients of charity, then the highest peak of unselfishness has been reached in giving—that is, giving as Christ himself gave. "Go thou and sin no more," he said to those who came burdened with sin. To him it was the joy of life to give, and to those who received his bounty in those sunny days in Galilee it was a gift that carried no condescension with it. O that the number of men and women who make charity sweet to the helpless and the infirm and the needy might multiply a thousandfold! There is need for tact and consideration and kindly sympathy and love and helpfulness in handing out money and old clothes and food to restore self-respect, to banish bitterness, to inspire hope in hopeless hearts, and to show Christ himself to those who know him not.

ACTING IN THE CHURCHES—PAUL IN ROME.

There seems to be quite an aping of the theater on the part of a good many churches. It was published sometime ago that some professor in one of our great universities went one Sabbath to see what was the difference in the attendance at the theaters and at the churches. He went and he saw, but he did not come back as a conqueror, for he had to admit—what a shame upon the people of this country!—that the attendance at the theater was much larger than in the churches. Forthwith the church had to try an experiment—it must see if acting in the church would not bring out as many as the theaters. But the theaters could beat the churches in the matter of attendance, and for the reason that the theater was in its own place of service—if it deserves that name—and therefore much better prepared to amuse and entertain than the church, and besides the church in theatricals is out of its place, for it was never given such a mission to this world, but there are many people who wish it had been given such a mission—at least their actions seem to indicate as much. Now we have the movies and the pageants in the churches—we just must have something doing in the churches, as if we cannot keep up with these high flyers, and we really think we act just as if we were running a race to see if we cannot beat the world in its own game, but that is all unnecessary, for when the church is out of its place, we may be sure that we cannot compete with the world. On the face of the story below, it does not look as if it was a very suitable thing to be given in a church, but beloved, it is a species of acting, and therefore running in competition with the world and its amusements. Read what it says, as coming from the Christian Advocate (Nashville, Tenn.) and say if you think such things indicate the fall of the church, when it gets out of preaching the Gospel and goes to playing the Gospel in the churches. We do need to get our eyes open to the truth of God in such matters. Read—

“On a recent Sunday night the pastor, Rev. Roy L. Smith, assisted by another minister, gave a dialogue in the Simpson Methodist Church, Minneapolis, representing Paul’s last days in Rome. The report of the service says the effect was profound. The pulpit was arranged to present a stage setting with footlights. We take the following partial description of the service from the Northwestern Christian Advocate: “After a brief pause, a young man, dressed as a Roman guard, with plumed helmet and sword, entered and placed two lighted candles upon the table, retiring to a position near one of the entrances. The audience heard the clanking of chains, and one of the ministers, garbed as an old man and chained to a Roman guard, groped his way as if half blind and seated himself at one side of the table. The guard made his prisoner secure and took his position near another entrance, opposite his colleague. The old man, representing Paul, opened a conversation with one of the guards, who proved to be a Roman convert to Christianity, in which he recited the story of his own life since his conversion. As he closed the story, referring to his imprisonment, he said: ‘Demas hath forsaken me. Only Luke is with me.’ This was the cue for the entrance of the second minister, who appeared dressed as a traveler and deposited some scrolls in a rack near by. From then on the conversation between the two consisted largely of Scripture quotations in which the missionary journeys and experiences of Paul and Luke were described and the spiritual purpose of their respective writings was set forth. As Luke took up the recital of his visit with Mary, the mother of Jesus, he recited the story of the Nativity, and the organ played ‘Silent Night’ very softly and effectively. The whole conversation was arranged to present the significance of Paul’s missionary work and Luke’s writings and closed with a triumphant speech from Paul, ending with the words: ‘The time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have kept the faith, I have finished my course,’ etc. Supported by Luke, he retired from the stage, repeating the Ephesian prayer and closing with the Apostolic benediction. As the two disappeared, followed by the Roman guards, the footlights and spotlight went out and a beautiful illuminated cross flashed out while a soprano sang ‘Am I a Soldier of the Cross?’ When the hymn was completely finished, the lights were turned on, the ministers returned in clerical garb, and the service closed with a congregational hymn and a prayer of benediction. The educational opportunity of this service was exceptional. Paul told why he had written some of his epistles, and Luke gave the whole historical background for his own writings. The testimony of the young people as to the value of the service was universally appreciative, and the reverent spirit throughout the entire evening was unusual. The fact that the church was packed to more than capacity, with people turned away, on a midsummer Sunday evening is evidence of the public’s interest.”

“THE RATING OF RURAL PASTORATES!”

We make so much distinction between the city and country churches that we can scarcely tell what that distinction is. If we should listen to some of our foremost men, we should conclude that a country church is altogether a different thing from what a city church is. The fact is that the two are so nearly the same thing that most of the leading men in the city churches come from the country churches. We believe the country church and the city church will be found upon close inspection to be so nearly the same in character, that it is not necessary for both to be catalogued as distinct institutions. The same Lord is the Head of the Church, whether it is in the city or in the country. And they are both the same in Christ. If Christ is in the city church and in the country church, then where can all this distinction be found? If they both have the mind of Christ, they must be close together, indeed!

There is evidence that there is not, and ought not to be a great difference between the country and city churches. It is from The Christian Advocate (Nashville, Tenn.) and we ask for it a careful and thoughtful reading:

The Congregationalist tells of receiving a letter from a young preacher who was serving a rural charge. In the letter he said: “I do not object to my pay, but I do object to my rating.” This young man had a right to object to his rating if among Congregationalists rural work has come to be rated as it has among the Methodists. The rating we have put upon rural work in recent years is both unreasonable and unjust. Go into the town or city Church that is strong, that worships in a splendid edifice, is served by a cultured and gifted preacher. Select the leaders in that Church, the men and women who are doing most to make it a real Church, a place of worship, and an institution for the salvation of souls and the promotion of the Christian religion. If you have never tried it, you will probably be surprised to find how many of them came from a country or village Church. The rural mail carrier, the telephone, the daily paper in the farmhouse, good roads, and the automobile, and now the radio are rapidly carrying the city to the country and the country to the city; but still the country, as has always been the case, supplies better material in the main—the country boy and girl—out of which to develop strong, useful Christian characters. The country preacher deserves a rating that in no way discounts him as compared with the city preacher.

JEALOUSY STILL DOING ITS UNHOLY WORK.

Satan never displayed his strategy to better effect than when he put jealously in the heart of man. When everything else fails to stir up trouble and discord among individuals or nations, then jealousy comes to the front and the work is done. No evidence beyond what one may see on every hand in the affairs of men and nations is needed, for indeed the woods are full of evidence, and he who has eyes may look and see for himself. Jealousy has torn down many a life and many a nation in its dreadful work, and it is never satisfied with its work, except when it can induce more trouble and stir up more evil.

In a recent issue of that paper, M. has a good article on this line in The Southern Churchman, which we publish below and commend it to the attention of our readers. Follow its thought through and we think you will find it interesting, and especially as it may be applied to the present unrest in the East. It follows:

An impressive thing about God’s truths is the way in which they are constantly being brought home to us.

It may seem a far cry from the fourth chapter of Genesis to the perilous situation of the British troops at Chanak protecting the Dardanelles, and the doorway of Europe, against the Turkish hordes of Kemal Pashe. Yet the connection is close and intimate.

As we read that chapter we become silent witnesses to the first sacrifice, and the first murder. We see Abel’s offering accepted and Cain’s rejected, and then we watch the bitter poison of jealousy doing its deadly work in the mind of Cain, and he “was wroth and his countenance fell * * * and it came to pass that Cain rose up against Abel his brother and slew him.”

It is quite immaterial whether we regard this scene as a narrative or actual facts; or consider it a wonderful allegory, for our instruction, to show us the tragedies that jealousy will bring about.

One of the wonders of God’s messages is that they change not, neither lose their power, though our attitude toward them may vary from generation to generation.

Fifty or seventy-five years ago most Bible readers considered this chapter as an historical account of facts occurring in the infancy of the race. Today the majority of those who read this record think of a word picture of the havoc that can be wrought in the hearts and lives of men by the jealousy that engenders hatred and crime.

With either view, the fact remains that we have the truth of this teaching vividly brought home to us today in the headlines of the daily papers.

A horrible double murder is committed in the State of New Jersey, and we read in the scare heads of the morning paper, “Police attribute motive for tragedy to jealousy.”

In the editorial comment on the Near East situation, after summing up the amazing results of a brief campaign by the Turkish leader, we find the sentence, “Thus in three weeks, thanks to allied divisions and jealousies, Kemal has recovered all Turkey lost in Europe between 1914 and 1920.”

Indeed it would seem as though this dividing spirit of jealousy always worked in favor of the Turk, for when through the combined forces of Serbia, Greece and Bulgaria, during the first Balkan War, in the opening years of this century, a Sultan's power had been diminished and his territory cut to within seventy-five miles of his capital at Constantinople, such bitterness and rivalries arose between the Balkan allies that he was soon able to re-arrange the boundary line so that it reached about sixty miles further north up the peninsular into Europe. Here it remained until the close of the World War, when Constantinople was occupied by the Allies, and every one hoped, that the end of Turkey in Europe was at hand, and that the city founded by the first Christian Emperor of the Roman Empire, and for so long a stronghold of Christianity, whose inhabitants had once listened with eager ears to the eloquence of Chrysostom, would become an international metropolis with freedom and fairness for all creeds. But again jealousy has lifted its venomous head so that the editorial statement quoted above may be only too true.

No one can help admiring the courage that has been displayed by the British in holding back the Turkish forces single-handed, knowing as she does the weak-hearted support, if not indeed the actual opposition, that she must expect from Italy and France. With only a small military force available, she has firmly blocked the way to the Dardanelles, although besides the jealousy of her supposed allies, she has also the restless seething Mohammedan masses of India and Egypt to reckon with.

It is earnestly to be hoped that the negotiations now beginning will not result in the return of Constantinople, to be reoccupied as a Turkish capital.

CONFIDENCE IN THE BIBLE.

In these days of infidelity and unbelief in the reliability of the Word of God it is refreshing to know that an increasing number of persons prominent in the scientific, educational and religious world are coming out in unequivocal terms in support of the Bible as the very Word of God and worthy of confidence as a historic account of the origin of the world and mankind. In the struggle between truth and error, truth is sure to triumph in the end, and finally will prevail when error and unbelief have been driven back to hell from whence they originate. Praise the Lord for the sure word of God upon which our hopes are firmly based, and which will never fail us. Such a foundation is not sandy and will not wash out from under our feet in time of storm and flood.

Mr. Hugh R. Monroe, in the current number of "The Bible Today," answers the question, "Can a well-informed person today accept the first eleven chapters of Genesis as a trustworthy account of the events that actually occurred as narrated?" Here is his reply:

"The most convincing answer to this question lies in the fact that there are vast numbers of men and women of high character and culture who accept this record as true. Many centuries of critical investigation have failed to establish a single fact in opposition to the teachings of Genesis, and prominent men of science have declared that this marvelously accurate record must have had a divine source. It may be safely said that only the speculations of science conflict with Scripture."

In the same issue of the above named periodical Dr. Charles A. Blanchard, President of Wheaton College, discusses the question, "Is Evolution Scientific," in the following vigorous language:

"The doctrine of evolution is unscientific, anti-Christian and absurd. . . . Evolution rests not upon knowledge, but upon guesses. It is now admitted by all candid and competent students that this is merely theory, and that it is not proved and that it cannot be proved. The test of science is the ability to foretell. Astronomy is a science; we can foretell eclipses, phases, places of the heavenly bodies. Physics and chemistry are sciences; we can foretell the reactions of material bodies on one another. When we can foretell we know, and when we classify our knowledge we have at least the beginnings of years ago, but it can not prophecy a day or a year or a century ahead. Evidently it is not scientific. All scientists admit this.

"Only by revelation do we learn the origin of life, or the method of continuing living beings. Darwin's theory of life origin was given up by him, by Spencer, by Huxley, by Romanes, by Wallace, and no theory has been advanced to take its place. Varieties are produced, but no species. Prof. Huxley said that the 'Engis skull,' guessed by evolutionists to be the oldest known skull, was a 'fair average skull which might have belonged to a philosopher or might have contained the thoughtless brain of a savage.' Dr. Saint George Mivart, of University College, Kensington, England, says the Darwinian doctrine of evolution is 'a puerile hypothesis.' Dr. Heishmann, of Erlanger, says, 'The Darwinian theory of descent has not a single fact to confirm it in the realm of nature. It is not the result of scientific research, but is purely the product of the imagination.' Haeckel, who forged proofs for evolution, says, 'Most modern investigators of science have come to the conclusion that the doctrine of evolution, and particularly Darwinism, can not be maintained.' Dr. Le Conte, of the University of California, says, 'The evidence of geology today is that species come into existence suddenly, and in full perfection, remain substantially unchanged, . . . and pass away in full perfection. Other species take their place by substitution, not by transmutation.' Lord Kelvin, the greatest English scientist of our days, says, 'There is not a single ascertained fact of science which conflicts with any statement of the Bible.' The doctrine of evolution is unscientific, anti-Christian and absurd. As the great Virchow said, 'It is dangerous to the state and should be forbidden by law.' "

UNITED APPEAL IN SUPPORT OF PROHIBITION.

Regarding the present moment as a critical one in sustaining the Prohibition Legislation, the Federal Council of the Churches has issued an urgent message to the churches. The immediate occasion for the statement is the announcement at Washington October 18 by the organized forces which are fighting for the repeal of the Prohibition Legislation that they are organizing support at the coming election for candidates who will vote to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer and wine. Not only this open attack upon prohibition, but also the more subtle efforts to prevent the enforcement of the existing legislation are pointed out, and the necessity urging the churches now to play as vigorous a part in the maintenance of respect for law as they formerly played in securing the enactment of the Prohibition Legislation.

The statement issued by the Council is as follows:

The public announcement of the program of the forces opposed to prohibition is a direct challenge to the churches and the friends of orderly government. They demand the repeal of the national prohibition act and the restoration of the manufacture and sale of beer and wine, in the face of the fact that both are intoxicating and therefore cannot be legalized without first changing the Constitution. Furthermore, the sale of beer and wine would require some agency for distribution, and so would lead inevitably to the return of the outlawed saloon with all its attendant evils.

Even more serious than the open campaign against prohibition are the sinister influences constantly at work to prevent the honest enforcement of the existing law. To disobey or disregard any law enacted by the properly accredited representatives of the people is to aid the cause of anarchy and to undermine the foundation on which all democratic institutions rest. In the ringing words of President Harding: "Whatever breeds disrespect for the law of the land is a force tending to the general breakdown of the social organization."

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America therefore appeals to all Christian people to exert every influence to secure the impartial enforcement of all laws. Since the foes of prohibition are now united to defeat the Constitution it is high time for the Christian forces of our country also to unite and to be as consistent at the ballot box in their support of the Constitution as its enemies are in attempting its nullification.

PAGE VALLEY LETTER.

We held a series of evangelistic meetings at Leaksville (Va.) October 1-12 of this year. Rev. J. F. Morgan of Winchester came over on Monday, and did the preaching and conducted the singing for us during the entire meeting, except the two Sundays. Bro. Morgan has assisted in two other meetings here, within the last six years. Each time he has been here he has not only won souls to Christ by his forcible soul-stirring sermons and his effective singing; but, by his winsome personality, he has also won the esteem and affection of everybody around here. As a result of this last meeting, three grown people were converted and added to our church; and the members of the church were greatly revived. The reviving of the church was one of the two chief objects of the series of services.

The work of the other five churches of the Page Valley Pastorate is making fairly good progress.

I have conducted two funerals since our conference was held in August. I did not send the obituary notices to the SUN for publication; because in each case, the persons whose funerals I conducted were persons who were scarcely known out of the immediate communities in which they had resided, and the surviving relatives are not readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I do not feel that the valuable space of the SUN should be taken up for obituary or marriage news items, except when the subjects of such items, or their family connections are more or less generally known to the brotherhood.

In conclusion, I am glad to say that, to my way of thinking, the improvement in THE SUN, in many ways, since Dr. Barrett became its present editor, has been marvelous. Before last May, I subscribed for it because I felt it to be my duty to do so, and because I felt a need to keep in touch with the cause in general. Now, I read it, not only from a sense of need, but because of its much interesting and helpful reading matter.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

PRAYING FOR MEN AND MILLIONS.

Our Christian churches began well the noblest, best and biggest task they ever undertook. Subscribing a half-million dollars to be paid within five years was indeed a step forward that required co-operation, faith and vision.

In the days of the Men and Millions Campaign there was prayer, prayer, prayer that the great task might be undertaken. God saw fit in His infinite love and grace to answer those prayers.

Shall a work so well begun, a vision so inspiring and a faith so stalwart be rendered null and void, and made to none effect by cold indifference or chilling neglect? God of our fathers forbid. Saints and devotees of the Christian Church forbid.

Then we must

Pray, Pray, Pray,

For Men and Millions if it is to avail and we are to win out. We can pray it through. And as God heard and answered our prayers in beginning, so will He now hear and answer our prayers in pursuing and in concluding this our holiest undertaking as a Church for Him.

Pray-Pray-Pray

And God will make our Victory sure.

A RENEWAL THAT RENEWS.

I am today in receipt of this letter which I wish all Christian Sun readers could see and could realize what joy the same brings to my heart. The letter is as follows:

"Dear Brother Atkinson: I am enclosing P. O. money order for $10.00, my last payment on the $50.00 subscription I promised you five years ago.

You may renew my subscription for $50.00 more to be paid $10.00 per year for the next five by my husband and myself.

With every good wish for you in your work, we are sincerely yours."

This is indeed to the point and brings joy. Such lines revive hope as they reveal an abiding interest in the spread of the Kingdom of our Lord in those lands and places where the light of the gospel has not gone. God's blessings upon the writer of the above letter.—J. O. ATKINSON.

NOTICE OF APPOINTMENTS.

Rev. R. A. Whitten of Athens, Ga., who was licensed to preach at the recent session of the Georgia and Alabama Conference, has been engaged to speak in the churches of that Conference on Men and Millions and to assist the Captains in any way he can in the good work they are doing in behalf of the Kingdom. Rev. R. F. Brown, President of the Conference, has made out for Brother Whitten, the following appointments, and any notices by pastors or members of the churches named as to these appointments will be greatly appreciated:

Rose Hill, Columbus, Ga., Sunday, November 12, 11:00 A. M.

Richland, Richland, Ga., Sunday, November 12, 7:30 P. M.

Providence Chapel (Red Hill), Richland, Ga., November 13, 7:30 P. M.

North Highland, Columbus, Ga., November 14, 7:30 P. M.

Beulah, Phoenix City, Ala., November 15, 7:30 P. M.

Oak Grove, Chipley, Ga., November 19, 11:00 A. M.

CHURCH ATTENDANCE.

Public worship has been a necessity from the earliest age of the human race. That all mankind might have an opportunity for rest, relaxation, and for the cultivation of the spiritual nature, and for acquiring the qualifications for the highest felicity, the heavenly Father has set apart one-seventh part of our time.

In the progress and development of the Jewish race it was the design of the Deity that they should gather for public worship on the Sabbath day, and their history proves that they were very punctilious in the discharge of this duty. Under the Christian dispensation, the church having been substituted for the temple and synagogue, the same divine requirement is made. The house of God is the place of worship, and for the cultivation of our spiritual nature. In commemoration of the completed work of our saviour and His resurrection on the first day of the week, Sunday has been substituted for the seventh day and set apart for communion with God in the act of worship. Any other use of the Sabbath day is to divert it from its original and sacred purpose.

The worship of God in the sanctuary is essential to our growth in grace, our efficiency in service and our preparation for the life above. The church is the only place this side of the grave where the rich and poor, the learned and ignorant, the high and the low, are taught to forget the accidental distinctions of birth and rank and station and fortune, and to realize their dependence upon an all-wise God Who makes one to differ from another, and Who is still the beneficent Father of all of His family. Here is to be offered for our acceptance that good part which can never be taken from us. Here we may obtain those spiritual treasures which cannot be corrupted or consumed. Here we may acquire that heavenly love which casts out all fear, Here we may secure a title to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, and here we are offered an adequate remedy for all our temporal afflictions. And yet, notwithstanding the ordering of a kind providence and the institution of the Sabbath day and the many inestimable benefits and blessings that come to us from its proper observance, it is a noticeable and lamentable fact that in these latter days there is a falling off generally in church attendance, and the services of the house of God seem to have lost their attraction to many professors of religion. This is due to many causes. We are living in an age of general unrest and change and unsettlement consequent upon the great strife among the nations of the world, and the spirit of materialism that largely prevails. Men are seeking for the almighty dollar and are doubting the value of things which cannot be seen and handled.

Herman Lincoln said "a subtle liberalism is gradually undermining the foundation of the Christian faith. Perverts to a barren skepticism, both in the highest and lowest circles of society, are far more numerous than perverts to Romanism. Wealth and luxury are weakening the restraints of piety. The Sabbath, in some quarters, is passing into a mere holiday, and public worship is neglected by many who call themselves Christians. In the great cities a rigid census would reveal a larger number of Sabbath breakers than church goers; while in the rural districts habits on religious negligence are confirmed by the infrequency of public worship. And the established ministry and the most faithful and earnest preaching of the gospel fails to correct these evils."

Various excuses are urged for this neglect of church attendance. Some do not like the preacher, as if forsooth, any one person could on all occasions so think and speak and appear as to please the differing tastes of an entire congregation. With some of the indifferent, weather conditions and the wet or dry state roads, seriously interfere with their attendance upon public worship. With many, worldly pleasure and amusement absorb their thoughts and lead them away from the house of the Lord on the Sabbath day. It has been seriously questioned whether the invention and use of automobiles has been a help or hindrance toward church attendance. In too many instances they are used for going on excursions, or seeking recreation, or visiting relatives and friends, instead of being a means of reaching the house of God on the day of worship. Some plead fatigue and weariness as their excuse for forsaking the assembling of themselves together. But have we any right to rob God of what is due Him by so exhausting our physical powers on the preceding day as to be "too tired" to go to church on Sunday?

Is it not a fact that to prepare ourselves for the sanctuary, to breathe the pure atmosphere, to meet the joyous greetings of our friends and acquaintances, to unite in the soothing voice of devotion, to have our feeling enlivened by animating music and song, to have our minds enlightened by the exposition of God's word, and to have our souls stirred with heavenly emotions would be far better, to say the least, than to spend the day in any pleasurable pursuit, or to be numb and stupefy our faculties by a whole day's idleness and sleep? Whenever we have thus spent the Lord's day has it not seemed long, tedious and wearisome? Have not our feelings and spirits and health been in a worse condition at evening's close than at morning's dawn? Has our conscience not convinced us that the day has been lost, as far as any improvement or happiness is concerned? And if we have spent the day in worldly pursuits, or in sinful dissipation, have not our characters been injured and our reverence for religion and its divine Author been destroyed? And have we not become more and more disinclined to go to church? We lose our relish for the purer joys of religion and are apt to contract hurtful and dangerous habits. Our influence and respectability are lessened, and in times of sickness and bereavement we are deprived of the consolations of the gospel, and in the hour of death our past neglect will fill our mind with anguish and darken our prospect of a blessed immortality.

Every person is answerable for his example, and if one may neglect his public worship for some trivial excuse, then may all, and thus an end would be made to the religious observance of the Sabbath.

This is one of the most serious, outstanding questions that confront us today, and one that menaces the foundation principles of our government, and one that blocks the progress of evangelical Christianity.

In our next article I will endeavor, as best I can, to show how this question may be met and answered, and this dangerous tendency overcome.—A. W. Graves, in Religious Herald.

CONTRIBUTIONS

ELON LETTER.

The Elon Alumni have for years felt the need of a General Secretary through whom they might function in a helpful way for their Alma Mater. The Alumni holding degrees now number more than four hundred. The total alumni membership, which includes all former students whether they graduated or not, amounts to several thousand. All these now have a secretary through whom they can express their devotion for Elon in the person of Mr. G. C. Donovan.

The duties of an Alumni General Secretary are many and varied. He is to be host to visiting Alumni when on the Hill. He is to assist any Alumnus to get a location. He is to publish in the College paper, Maroon and Gold, information relative to Alumni, so that those of former days may keep up with each other. He is to visit Alumni in their homes and to organize them into local units, so that those geographically contiguous may on stated occasions get together for a luncheon, speaking, singing, and the general renewal of their old days as well as to lay plans to aid Alma Mater in her larger undertakings.

Mr. Donovan began his work in June. During the summer he aided in the campaign for students and assisted in the office work. Since the College opened he has been installing his office, collecting information, writing for Maroon and Gold, welcoming visiting Alumni, and getting acquainted with the student life of the campus. He also prepared the Elon Exhibit for the American Christian Convention.

He now takes the field. On October 31st the Eastern Virginia Conference meets with the Johnson's Grove Church. Mr. Donovan will be there. He will immediately following the Conference begin his intensive campaign in its bounds. He plans to visit every congregation, meet pastors, Sunday School superintendents, local Alumni, leaders in our work, students in High Schools connected with our Sunday Schools, life-work recruits, and speak where feasible to each Church on the work and plans of Elon. We trust that great good will come of this pilgrimage. I hope our people will receive Mr. Donovan and his aid in his work, entertaining him if at all convenient as the official representative of the college.

Mr. Donovan will also have the lists of those who have generously made pledges to the various funds for the support and development of Elon. He will write receipts for all who will find it convenient to remit through him.

Any courtesy shown Mr. Donovan in his work and any assistance rendered will be thoroughly appreciated. His work is to be an important link in perfecting the "Church System of Education," inaugurated two years ago and which has given us a student body made up of 72 percent of our own young people. Help him all you can, beloved, and so strengthen our College in its purpose to serve our Church to its utmost capacity.—W. A. HARPER.

RIGHTEOUS BEFORE GOD.

To be known as one who is righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless, is the very highest tribute which can be paid anyone. Scofield says: "The righteous, or just man, is so called, because he is right with God; and he is right with God because he has walked in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless." One may appear righteous before men, and not meet the approval of God at all.

The associates of the rich young ruler would, most likely have called him a righteous man, because, as he told Jesus, he had kept all the commandments from his youth up. The Lord at once showed him he was not keeping the first one, for he had another god—his money. "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh on the heart." He knows, too, that "as he thinketh in his heart, so is he." Men like show. God likes the quiet, orderly walk, the life which walks in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.

It is not easy to live such a life in the midst of ungodliness. Where sin and wickedness abound on every hand, and we unexpectedly come in contact with the works of the flesh, where we rightfully have expected to see the fruits of the Spirit manifested. The blameless walk is not easy when we encounter wickedness where we thought righteousness reigned. In the business world we do not like to discover dishonesty and falsehood where we have believed there was truth and honesty. That, however, is not so great a test to our faith as when among those we have believed to be righteous, some secret sin has been revealed. When we find some one in whom we have had the greatest confidence, whether it is a layman or one of Christ's under-shepherds, is only an actor, it makes it harder to walk in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless. Such a walk is not impossible though, under the most difficult circumstances.

Zacharias and Elizabeth lived in a time when wickedness among the ruling class abounded, and the priesthood was corrupt, yet they were both righteous before God. Like you and I, they were not faultless, but they were blameless, just as it is possible for us to be. It is possible only when we look upon Him who said "I am the way," and "Lo, I am with you always."

The life that any true servant of God has ever lived is possible for you and me. But are we making it real? Are we ever trying to walk blamelessly before God? Are we walking in all the commandments, or, are we depending upon the keeping of a few of them taking us safely through? Let us ever remember "the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, and His ears are open to their prayers; but the fact of the Lord is against them that do evil." Let us "live soberly, righteously and godly, in this pleasant world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."—MINNIE LOHR, Mt. Vernon, O.

FROM BRO. HUNT.

Dear Dr. Barrett.—We had a fine meeting at Antioch Church last second Sunday, and at the close of the service the church under the direction of the Woman's Missionary Society proceeded to pound their pastor and his family. Our buggy was loaded with many useful and valuable articles such as canned fruit, preserves, jelly, soda, soap, towels, handkerchiefs, table linen, and other things useful in the home. We take this method to express to these dear friends our sincere thanks for the kind remembrance. It is a pleasure to preach to such a kind and generous congregation.

This church has met all of its obligations to both Conference and pastor.

We now turn our faces toward the new Conference Year and pray that we may attain greater success. May God richly bless all who in any way had a part in remembering the pastor and his family.—G. D. HUNT.

PRAYER IN THE CHINESE ARMY.

One of the most remarkable incidents in army life is given in what follows. Think of a general, just out of heathenism, offering such a prayer. We know of nothing like it except in Moses' prayer for God's favor for Israel, and if that favor could not be given, then Moses wished to be blotted out of God's book. There is one other case that is much like the prayer of Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang, and that is Paul's prayer in Rom. 9:3, where Paul prayed that he could wish himself accused from Christ for his kingdom according to the flesh. Now here Gen. Feng Yu-hsiang calls on God to destroy him for the sake of saving his people. The incident is reported in The Peking Daily News, as follows:

"For a long time the people of Honan have been suffering from the continual drought, which has caused the rise of the price of foodstuffs. General Feng Yu-hsiang, the Christian Tuchen, recently sent out invitations to various mission churches in the province requesting co-operation in his appeal to God for deliverance. One day he invited more than 800 Christians of various denominations to join his troops of the Eleventh Army Division at the parade ground to hold a prayer meeting, where very much enthusiasm was shown.

"After a grand review more than ten thousand men sang the national anthem, after which Mr. Hsu Sien-pu read some verses from the Bible. Colonel Chang Chi-chiang, commander of the brigade, in a short speech declared the object of the meeting, and pointed out the necessity of confessing sins before the Heavenly Father. Then thousands of voices joined in singing the hymn "Onward Christian Soldiers, Marching as to War." This is the favorite hymn of General Feng's soldiers, who sing it shouting at the top of their voices. A short sermon was delivered by Rev. Litch, who urged the people to have faith in God, who answers the prayers of His children when offered up in confidence. After offering a prayer for rain, the large audience sang "Praise God, from Whom All Blessings Flow." Five soldiers were asked to offer prayers for rain.

Closing up the meeting, General Feng Yu-hsiang, Elijah-like, stepped forward to the platform and offered the following supplication: "O God, just and benevolent, Thou punishest sin and wickedness with natural calamities. We do not come to utter our complaints, but we humbly implore Thy mercy. Oh! have mercy upon me, Feng Yu-hsiang, a miserable sinner. Punish me alone, and spare all the people of the provinces. Punish me for the sins and crimes of all the people of Honan, but spare them, O Lord! Cut me to pieces and scatter my ashes to the wind. I am willing to go down to hell for the sins and wickedness of my people: and indeed I will praise Thy justice even in hell."

His clear thundering voice was heard by all the people present, who could not help shed tears. After the prayer, Rev. Pu Hua-jen pronounced the benediction and closed the meeting. Exactly two hours after the prayer-meeting there was great rain, which was indeed a shower of blessings that the people desired.—The Peking Daily News.

FAMILY ALTAR

By Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, D. D., in The Alliance Weekly.

Sunday.

"Thy prayers are come up for a memorial before God" (Acts 10:4).

"It would seem almost as if supplications of years had accumulated before the throne, and at last the answer broke in blessings on the head of Cornelius, even as the accumulated evaporation of months at last bursts in floods of rain upon the dry ground. So God is represented as treasuring the prayers of His saints in vials; they are described as sweet odors. They are placed like fragrant flowers in the chambers of the King, and kept in sweet remembrance before Him. And later they are represented as poured out upon the earth; and lo, there are voices and thunderings and great providential movements fulfilling God's purposes for His kingdom. We are called "the Lord's remembrances," and are commanded to give Him no rest, day or night, but crowd the heavens with our petitions and in due time the answer will come with its accumulated blessings."—Dr. A. B. SIMPSON.

There are noble Christian workers,
The men of faith and power,
The overcoming wrestlers
Of many a midnight hour;
Prevailing princes with their God,
Who will not be denied,
Who bring down showers of blessing
To swell the rising tide.
The Prince of Darkness quaileth
At their triumphant way,
Their fervent prayer availeth
To sap his subtle sway.

Monday.

"Believe ye that I am able to do this?"
(Matt. 9: 28).

"Be resolved then never to say, I cannot believe. You can believe. You have the Spirit of God in you. Even the natural man can say, 'This Word of God is certainly true or certainly not true.' And when he with a desire of the soul says, 'It is true; I will believe it,' the living Spirit, through whom the Word is living and powerful, works this living faith. Besides, the Spirit is not only in the Word, but also in you. Although you do not feel as if you were believing, know for certain you can believe. Begin actually to receive the Word; it will work a mighty faith in you. Rely upon it, that when you have to do with God's Word, you have to do with a Word that can be surely trusted that it of itself works faith in you. And not only the promises, but also the commands have this living power. When I first receive a command from God, it is as if I felt no power to accomplish it. But if I then simply receive the Word as God's Word, which works in those that believe—if I trust in the Word to have its working, and in the living God which gives it its operation,—that commandment will work in me the desire and the power for obedience. When I weigh and hold fast the command, it works the desire and the will to obey; it urges me strongly towards the conviction that I can certainly do what my Father says."

—Dr. A. MURRAY.

Tuesday.

"Casting all your care upon Him: for He careth for you" (I Peter 7).

"Treat cares as you treat sins. Hand them over to Jesus one by one as they occur. Commit them to Him. Roll them upon Him. Make them His. By an act of faith look to Him, saying, 'This Lord, and this, and this, I cannot bear. Thou hast taken my sins; take my cares: I lay them upon Thee, and trust Thee to do for me all, and more than all, I need. I will trust and not be afraid.' As George Herbert says so quaintly in his sonnet, Put care into Christ's bag. There is no surer path to rest than to pass on to Jesus all the anxieties of life, believing that He takes what we give at the moment of our giving it, that it instantly becomes a matter of honor with Him to do His best for us; and surely it is a sacrilege to take back any gift which we have put into His hands. What a clog to all activity care is. How earnestly therefore should we seek at the beginning of every day to free ourselves from its hindering presence. Be watchful not to allow care to hinder thee in serving Christ to-day."—Dr. F. B. MEYER.

Wednesday.

"Always laboring (literally agonizing) in prayer" (Col. 4: 12).

"In the afternoon God was with me of a truth. Oh, it was blessed company indeed! God enabled me so to agonize in prayer that I was quite wet with sweat, though in the shade and cool wind. My soul was drawn out very much for the world; I grasped for multitudes of souls. I think I had more enlargement for sinners than for the children of God, though I felt as if I could spend my life in cries for both. I had great enjoyment in communion with my dear Saviour. I think I never in my life felt such an entire weanedness from this world, and so much resigned to God in everything. Oh that I may always live to and upon my blessed God! Amen."—Journal of David Brainerd.

Prayer need not always be an agonizing of soul, but there may come times when we shall be moved so mightily and be filled with such deep concern, that our praying will be a moving of the soul to tears. The great peril of the prayer-life is indolence; a failure to stir up ourselves to take hold of God; that want of intensity about which He complains through the prophet Isaiah in chapter 64:7. Many never reach the stage of refusing to be denied in their petitions.

Thursday

"For this I besought the Lord thrice, that it might depart from me. And He said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee" (II Cor. 12:8, 9).

God sometimes answers prayer by giving something better than we ask. An affectionate father, on earth often does this. The child says Father, give me this fruit. No, my child, the father replies, but here is bread, which is better for you. There was given to Paul a thorn in the flesh, a messenger of Satan to buffet him. In bitterness of heart, he cried, "Lord, let this depart from me." No answer came. Again he prayed the same words. No answer still. A third time he knelt, and now the answer came, not as he expected. The thorn is not plucked away, the messenger of Satan is not driven back to hell; but Jesus says, "My grace is sufficient for thee, for My strength is made perfect in weakness." Ah, this is something better than he asked, and better than he thought . . . Dear praying believer, be of good cheer, God will either give you what you ask or something far better.

—R. M. McCHEYNE.

Pray though the gifts you ask for
May never comfort your fears,
May never repay your pleading;
Yet pray, and with hopeful tears,
An answer—not that you sought for,
But diviner—will come one day:
Your eyes are too dim to see it;
Yet strive and wait and pray.

Friday.

"This is the will of God even your sanctification" (I Thess. 4:3).

"With His whole heart, with all the power of His will, is God willing to make us holy. If we but open our heart to believe that it is not the law, but the will of God, something that He certainly gives and does where we permit Him, then shall we rejoice over our sanctification as stable and sure. When God gave a will to man, He gave him a power whereby he could accept or reject the will of God. Child of God, open your will to receive the will of God with its full power, and to be filled with it. This is heavenly glory and blessedness, to be conscious every day: my will is in harmony with God's will; God's will lives in me. It is the will of God to work this in you. Learn always to adore the will of God in the least and the worst thing that man does to you. It is not the will of God that man should do what is sinful; but when man does sin, it is the will of God that His child should be proved thereby. Say then always in the least as well as the greatest trials: it is the will of God that I am in this difficulty. This brings the soul to rest and silence, and teaches it to honor God in the trial."—Dr. ANDREW MURRAY.

"Ill that He blesses is our good,
And unblest good is ill;
And all is right that seems most wrong,
If it be His sweet will."

Saturday.

"The Holy Spirit, whom God hath given to them that obey Him" (Acts 5:32).

"For a life of obedience and for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit in His fulness, these things are required:—

"1. Decisive surrender. I must no longer have to ask in every single case: Shall I or shall I not, must I, can I, be obedient? No: it must be such an unquestionable thing, that I shall know of nothing else than to be obedient. He that cherishes such a disposition and thinks of obedience as a thing that stands firm, shall find it easy, shall literally taste in it great joy.

"2. The knowledge of God's will through the Spirit. Pray, do not imagine that, because you know the Bible in some sort, you know the will of God. The knowledge of God's will is something spiritual: let the Holy Spirit make known to you the knowledge of God's will.

"3. The doing of all that we know to be right. All doing teaches men: all doing of what is right teaches men obedience. All that the Word, or conscience, or the Spirit tells you is right, actually do it. It helps to form doing into a holy habit, and is an exercise leading to more power and more knowledge. Do what is right, Christian, out of obedience to God, and you shall be blessed."

"But we never can prove
The delights of His love
Until all on the altar we lay;
For the favor He shows,
And the joy He bestows,
Are for them who will trust and obey."

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

NOVEMBER 12, 1922.

SUBJECT: "Jesus, the Great Teacher."—
Luke 6: 1-49.

GOLDEN TEXT: "As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise."—Luke 6: 31.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ps. 119: 9-16.

REFERENCE MATERIAL: Matt. 5: 1-18; John 3: 2; 6: 68; 7: 46; Col. 2: 3.

LESSONS TO LEARN.

As the miracles of last Sunday's lesson revealed the power of Jesus, the teachings of this lesson show His wisdom. Jesus was preeminently a Teacher. He imparted truths for all time. He was a master of the art of illustration. In a few words He gave truths which touched the deepest of human needs. He adapted His teachings to the lives and interests of His hearers. He taught "with authority." His ministry was one of teaching, and His last command was, "Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all nations * * * teaching them." His one plan for extending His Kingdom on earth was to have His followers teach others.

Many have read with deepest interest Dr. Sheldon's book, "In His Steps," in which he tells of a group of church members who met and agreed to make the test of every action of their life: "What would Jesus do?" The teachings of this lesson present many things that "Jesus would do" in every day life. He presents here the way for people to live happily together. The art of living together is an art worth cultivating, and nowhere can better rules be found for such living than in the Sermon on the Mount. This sermon has been called the "Charter of Christianity," and is one of the clearest revelations of the simply Christian principles to be found in God's Word. If every Christian would memorize and repeat daily the teachings of Jesus found in the sixth chapter of Luke, the great problems of society would be settled, and settled right, as they were decided in the light of the principles set forth by the Man of Galilee.

"Love your enemies * * * pray for them." Here is a test of religion—your attitude toward your enemies. Prayer is the best weapon against wrong feelings.

The "art of living together" is founded upon the law of love, expressed by the Golden Rule and in service to others. Poor Richard's Almanac gives this advice: "The noblest question in the world is, what good can I do in it?"

The future church and nation lie in the hands of the teacher today. The teacher who can instill the principles of love and justice, of mercy and service, in the minds of boys and girls, has rendered a service the value of which can never be estimated.

Every person is teaching some one. The teaching may be conscious or unconscious, good or bad, uplifting or degrading. What kind of a teacher are you?

"Teach me, O Lord, thy holy way,
And give me an obedient mind;
That in thy service I may find
My soul's delight from day to day."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

NOVEMBER 12, 1922.

SUBJECT: "The Meaning of Church Membership."—Matt. 10: 32-33.

While all the Christian Endeavor meetings should seek as their first end the salvation of souls and should stress loyalty to the church and its work, this meeting should tend very definitely to do these things. Special preparation should be made to secure the attendance of Associate members and any unconverted young people. Have a brief prayer meeting preceding the regular meeting, of the Prayer Meeting Committee and the leader, praying that all of the members may have a deeper sense of the blessings given and the opportunities offered by church membership, and that those outside the church may be led to join. During the meeting plan for personal testimonies from Christian Endeavorers who will tell what Christ has done for them, and how their membership in His Church has been a blessing and a constant assistance. Give the pastor five minutes to speak on "Youth and the Church."

Some of the mission lands could teach Americans a vital lesson regarding the meaning of church membership. In some of these lands, no one can join the church until he has brought a friend to Christ. To them church membership means soul winning.

To join the church means the consecration of a life to Jesus Christ, and the confession of a determination to do as He has taught, to serve through the Church which He founded all people everywhere.

"I heard Him call,
'Come, follow,' that was all:
My gold grew dim,
My soul went after Him.
I rose and followed; that was all.
Who could not follow, if they heard His call?"—Anon.

THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

Burlington, N. C., October 17.—The American Christian Convention, the general body of the Christian denomination, convened in its quadrennial session in the Christian Church, Burlington, N. C., on Tuesday, October 17. This body represents the entire Christian denomination from Texas into Canada, and delegates from all parts of the United States and sections of Canada are in attendance.

This is the second time the American Christian Convention has met in the South, the first being twenty years ago when the Convention went to Norfolk, Va. Delegates began to arrive on Monday and came in in increasing numbers on Tuesday. A special pullman train from Cincinnati arrived shortly after three o'clock in the afternoon bringing one hundred and thirty-five delegates and ministers present for the convention.

The Burlington Christian Church, where the convention is meeting, Rev. G. O. Lankford, local pastor, has made elaborate preparations for the convention. Many of the delegates have never before been below the Mason and Dixon line, and the local congregation has made every possible effort in planning their entertainment and comfort while here, and expecting to show them the true meaning of "southern hospitality" at its best. The people of the city of Burlington, too, are helping in every way they can to welcome the visitors, and hundreds of automobiles carry the sign "A. C. C. Delegates—Ride Free," on their windshields. At the Church the ladies have prepared and decorated the class rooms and auditorium of the church, placing potted plants and cut flowers in every conceivable nook and corner, and the convention floor is indeed a place of beauty.

Opening Session.

At 7:30 the convention was officially called to order by the President, Dr. F. G. Coffin, of Palmer College, Albany, Mo., following a song service led by Rev. J. F. Morgan, Winchester, Va., the convention director of music, in which the convention hymn was sung.

Dr. W. W. Staley of Suffolk, Va., who last year retired as President of the Southern Christian Convention after many years of service at the head of that body, led the opening devotional exercises. Dr. P. H. Fleming, of Burlington, was in charge of the communion service which was the closing item of the first session of the convention.

Convention Sermon.

The convention sermon, preached by Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein of the People's Church of Dover, Delaware, was the main feature of the initial session, his address coming on the program immediately following the devotional exercises.

Dr. Helfenstein is one of the outstanding ministers of the entire denomination, and the opening message he brought to the convention on "The Leadership of Jesus," was a masterpiece of thought, eloquence, and challenge. Vividly and clearly he delivered his somewhat lengthy sermon, which in reality was a powerful oration.

Beginning his subject of "The Leadership of Jesus," he read from Matthew 16:24, and based his message upon the words "Follow Me." "These two words," he said, "embody the Master's favorite challenge to men. He made this challenge to the young ruler who asked what he must do to inherit eternal life. He made the challenge to Simon and Andrew, and again to Matthew,—'Follow me.' On different occasions, He made the challenge as the climax in his requirement for Christian Discipleship. 'If any man will serve me, let him follow me.'"

Continuing Dr. Helfenstein declared that, "The challenge of Jesus is to men and women in every condition and relationship of life,—'Follow me.' It is the challenge of pardon to all who have sinned; the challenge of light to all who are in darkness; the challenge of divine guidance to all who have lost their way; the challenge of purity to all who would be pure. It is the challenge of strength to all who would be strong; the challenge to all who are in doubt; the challenge of hope to all who are discouraged; the challenge of victory to all who have been defeated in their moral purposes. It is the challenge of love to all who would serve. It is the challenge of the Son of God to the sons and daughters of men.

"In considering the Leadership of Jesus there are three main observations that claim our attention,—the supremacy of his leadership, the nature of his leadership, and the motives that impell men to follow His leadership.

"Every person is following some leadership—either for good or for ill. Every person ought to have the inspiration of some life far superior to his own as an ideal toward which to strive. The Man of Galilee should be the world's supreme ideal. Other men have been courageous, but none so courageous as He. Other men have been wise, but none who had so keen an insight into human life as did He. Other men have been true, but none so true as He whose life itself was the very incarnation of truth. Other men have loved goodness but none have loved goodness with such a passion as He did. Other men have cherished wide human sympathy, but none whose sympathy had such an unlimited range as had our Master's. Christ's sympathy embrace all the ages and all conditions of humanity.

"Christianity rests its care upon "the love-challenge," the ethical challenge of Jesus Christ. Those who follow the Leadership of Jesus, following His principles by practicing His spirit. Jesus does not lay down specific rules for every case in question, but he gives great altruistic principles of life which may be applied to every case, and which if applied will solve every personal and social problem that brings confusion and discord to the human family. But the principles by themselves will not avail. They must be applied by man. The principles of Christianity like the principles of Mathematics are worthless unless applied. The principles of Mathematics are absolutely necessary to erect a great bridge or building. But the bridge or building cannot be erected merely by the principles of Mathematics as written in a book. Those principles must be applied.

"Following the leadership of Jesus means to follow Him in His devotion to His Heavenly Father and in His love for humanity. It means to follow Him in His prayer life, to follow Him in His loyalty to the Kingdom, in His spirit of sacrifice and service. It means to follow Him in His joy, in His magnanimity, in His sincerity, in His moral courage, in His affections, in His moral attitude, and in His manhood. Following thus the leadership of Jesus makes the Fatherliness of God as real to us as are our earthly parents."

Concluding his address Dr. Helfenstein asked the question, "And what have we done to realize the hopes and prayers of our fathers, and the desire of our Leader, Jesus?" "As a denomination," he declared, "we are stronger today than ever before in our history. Our future was never brighter if we are satisfied in merely building a stronger denomination. But it was not to this end that we were born, nor for this cause came we into the world. We came to preach a liberal and practical gospel, and to lead the way to Christian union. To be honest with ourselves and with our God, and with the Kingdom, we should either strike out the sixth item in our cardinal principles, that of Christian union, or else make an honest and unbiased effort to practice that principle by seeking union with some denomination that stands ready and waiting to effect such a union with us. We should either attempt union as if we meant it, or else quit talking about it, and put our hands to the task of strengthening our ropes for the sake of a larger and more efficient denominational life."

Delegates Sing.

Immediately following the alighting of the delegates from the special train when it reached Burlington the delegates assembled at the station and sang a specially prepared song for the occasion, written by one of the delegates on the train, Dr. A. B. Kendall, Secretary for the Department of Christian Endeavor of the convention.

Burlington, October 18.—Registration figures of the American Convention in session here show that through this morning's session that more than two hundred and seventy-five delegates have registered. Others have registered throughout the day, and the total registration is expected to run well on to the four hundred mark before the close of the convention.

Beginning the initial service last evening the convention will hold three sessions a day continuing throughout an eight day period, concluding with the evening service of October 24th.

The morning session was given over to the submitting of reports. After the morning meditation services conducted by Rev. D. B. Atkinson of Albany, Mo., Dr. J. F. Burnett, Dayton, Ohio, was first on the program with his report as Convention Secretary.

Dr. Burnett has been secretary for the American Christian Convention body for thirty-two years now and at the conclusion of his report he made it known to the convention that he would resign this year. In Dr. Burnett the convention has had a faithful and efficient secretary and the securing of a worthy successor for his office will not be an easy one. The nominating and election of a successor for Dr. Burnett will be taken up at a later session of the convention through the nominating committee. It was generally understood by the members of the convention that Dr. Burnett would resign at this session.

Reports were heard from the Secretary of Finance, John G. Myers, Pleasant Hill, Ohio; for Foreign Missions by Rev. W. P. Minton, Dayton, Ohio; for Home Missions by Dr. Omer S. Thomas, Dayton, Ohio; for the Department of Education, by Rev. W. G. Sargent, Providence, R. I.; for the Department of Publishing by Judge O. W. Whitelock, Huntington, Indiana, and for the Aged Ministers' Home by Rev. John B. Grove of Sprakers, N. Y.

During the session committees were named on Resolutions, Dr. E. A. Watkins, Ohio, chairman; A. J. Brownell, Mass.; Dr. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Va.; on publicity with Dean George C. Enders, Defiance, Ohio, as chairman, and for the committee on roll with McD. Howsare, Dayton, Ohio, Chairman.

President's Address.

The outstanding feature of the second day's program of the convention was the quadrennial address of the president of the convention; Dr. F. G. Coffin, Albany, Mo., President of Palmer College, who has for eight years been serving his church as head of this convention.

Dr. Coffin's eminence in the affairs of the Christian denomination has made him one of the outstanding figures of the Christian Church. As a speaker he is eloquent and classed among the best of our country, throwing his personality into his discourse on the general history and growth, principles, hopes and aspirations of the Christian Church, and of this convention in particular, held the interest of the general public and was well received.

Beginning with the purposes and motives of the forefathers who established the church he sketched in a general way the growth of the denomination to its present strength, and the reasons for this steady growth. He touched briefly the accomplishments of the convention since the last quadrennial session, brought to the front some of the weaknesses of the body, and then undertook in a straightforward manner to set forth the lines along which the convention must grow in the future.

"For over a century and a fourth," said Dr. Coffin, "the Christian Church has been broadcasting a message to the world. It is not known how many receiving stations have picked it up and tolled it out, nor how many have known its origin, but the message has been the important and effective thing. Our ambition should be to make ours the holiest in motives, the purest in life, the most efficient in service and the greatest in strength. Low aims and high attainments are never found together."

"Hitherto we have attempted to make the principles of our Church its selling point. Their worth has justified the most extravagant things we have dared to say of them. They have needed no revision in a hundred and thirty years of service—a unique ecclesiastical history," continued President Coffin. "In view of these observations. If I were to venture a personal interpretation of our confronting task, it would be first, that to us belongs the task of all other churches and with all other churches to make our divine Lord supreme over all in a Kingdom into which all the earth is to be gathered. This is equivalent to saying also, that we shall effect a common good in humanity throughout the world. To enable us to do these two things about which we are thinking, five processes must be vigorously at work within our body.

"First, a better understanding among ourselves of our purpose and work. A larger volume of forward looking literature should be created and distributed.

"Second is a closer cohesion of our forces and uniformity in our methods. We lose much of the value of concerted effort, so successfully effected by some other denominations.

"This suggests the third process of transcending value to our plans, namely, more nearly universal cooperation in making the Church effective everywhere. Not only do many of us not cooperate, but the desires of some seem to be against cooperation.

"A fourth process ever growing among us should be the courage for larger tasks. Of how much timidity has robbed us we shall never know, but certainly of great things.

"The fifth process should be to thrust ourselves more deeply into the cooperative movements of our day. These have much to offer us, and we have a real contribution to offer them.

Afternoon Reports.

For the afternoon session the submitting and adoption of reports for the various departments continued, the main ones of which were that of the Secretary for the Department of Sunday Schools, Mr. Herman Eldredge, Erie, Pa.; for the Department of Christian Endeavor by Dr. A. B. Kendall, Springfield, Ohio; the Commission on the State of the Church by Rev. W. J. Hall, Dayton, Ohio; of the Superintendent of the Forward Movement, Dr. W. H. Denison, Dayton, Ohio, and the report of the Commission on Organization by Rev. W. P. Minton,

A TROUBLED LAYMAN

Today I had an interesting and helpful talk with an intelligent and devoted layman of a small North Carolina community. This layman was troubled. He told me that he lived in a small village of about 350 inhabitants. This village has three churches, he said, when it should not have but one; it has two and one-half preachers when it needs one good minister living there instead of occasional visits. Our brother said that the village was attempting to have three prayer meetings each week when the combined attendance would scarcely make one good prayer meeting. He said that the community was raising around $3,000 per year to support the three preachers (two and one-half to use his language) and not either of the congregations being half served.

Yes, the layman was troubled and said out of his deep heart that he could not believe that the Lord could add His blessing to such a program of work. What do you say, dear reader?

CHILD'S HOUR

ALMA'S PROMISE.

"Mama, the seventh grade pupils are going for a picnic this afternoon, and they want me to go along," cried Alma, with the telephone receiver in her hand. "Of course, I may say yes, mayn't I?"

"Why, I think so, dear, I know of nothing to prevent," said Mrs. Creighton. "It certainly is a lovely day for a picnic."

"But I promised Miss Nelson to go to Mary Burt's this afternoon," said Alma, with a shadow crossing her face. "Will it be all right if I get somebody else to go, mamma?"

"What do you think of that?" asked the wise mother.

"Well, mamma, I shouldn't like to break my promise, but there will be few chances for a picnic, now that October is here. Perhaps this will be the last of the year."

Then to the girl waiting for an answer at the other end of the wire: "Gladys," she said hastily, "I'll call you up in a few minutes to tell you if I can go." She knew she would have to settle the question for herself, and she felt that she must have time.

"It won't make a bit of difference, mama," she said, turning from the instrument, "whether one of the other girls does the errand for me. Of course I persuaded her to join the class, and she seems very fond of me, but no doubt she likes the other girls."

Mrs. Creighton said nothing, and her daughter went on hurriedly:

"It's not as if Mary needed me," she argued. "I feel just as sorry as I can for her because her little brother is dead, and maybe she wouldn't see me if I did go."

Presently Alma stopped thinking about the matter and slowly climbed the stairs. She longed for her mother to settle the question, and yet felt sure what she would say. The Creighton children had been taught that a promise is a sacred thing and not to be lightly broken. Alma hesitated a long time and then she dropped on her knees by her bed. The victory was won before she uttered the first word, for Alma had fought out other problems in the quiet place, but she lingered a moment or two to whisper a little prayer of thanksgiving, and then ran quickly down to tell her friend that she could not go.

"Why not?" demanded Gladys.

"Because I must take some flowers down to Mary Burt's, Gladys. Her little brother is to be buried this afternoon."

"Is that all? came back over the wire; "I'll get Joe to do that for you. The idea of giving up the last picnic of the season for a trifle. Everybody says this will be the last chance to get nuts this fall."

But Alma resolutely held on, and though she wiped away a few tears, she gave up the picnic. She wiped away a few more tears as she saw the long park wagon driving past her home a little later, but she put on her hat and started out with the beautiful flowers to the forlorn little home almost a mile away, where a poor family was in great distress. It was a sultry morning, though late in October, and Alma was tired and warm before reaching the shabby home.

"I knew you'd come," sobbed Mary when Alma put her arms about her. "Some of the neighbors said you wouldn't, but I knew better. What beautiful flowers! These are the only ones we have. And, oh, Alma, could you sing this afternoon at the funeral? You sing so well, and it would be such a comfort to poor mama."

Alma had been planning to get Cousin Ralph to take her in his new machine to the picnic, thinking that even if she missed the feast she could still have a full share in the fun of gathering nuts, but with Mary's pleading voice in her ears she could not refuse.

"I am not good at singing at all, Mary, but if you want me I'll come," she said simply.

So she had another long walk back home and then down to the funeral, but somehow she did not feel very tired, nor did she think the picnic so important, after seeing that unhappy family. Is she could do anything at all to comfort them she would be glad to do it, so her steps did not lag, and even after the little procession had gone its way to the cemetery she lingered to say a consoling word to the little children left behind.

"Well, Alma, how was the picnic today?" asked Cousin Ralph, strolling in at supper time. "I heard the boys and girls planning it, and I knew you would have a dandy time if you went."

"I didn't go," said Alma. "I had promised to go down to Mary Burt's and I couldn't break my word. I'm glad I did go down there, for they seemed glad to have me."

"I knew you wouldn't go," said the young man quietly, "I was at Gladys Trent's house talking to her brother when she telephoned. I said you wouldn't go and she said you would. I didn't leave the house until you telephoned, half an hour after the first call."

"You knew it?" cried Alma in amazement. Cousin Ralph had but recently come to live with them and he had been brought up in a very careless home. Why in the world would he be so sure she would not break a promise? Something of this must have shown in her face, for he said very quietly, as if in answer to her unspoken question, "Yes, I felt sure you would keep your word."

"Why, please?" asked Alma.

"Because you are a Christian, Alma. I said to myself that Alma Creighton could be trusted, and I wasn't disappointed. And I'm glad of it, too. I said to myself, if a girl of thirteen can give up a picnic to help somebody in distress, that Ralph Creighton was missing something very fine in life. And, Alma, I decided this very day to be a Christian, and I'm so happy over it."

"What are all the picnics in the world to this?" said Alma, with rapture in her voice and face. "Oh, Ralph, what would have happened if I had broken my promise? I can't bear to think of it. I'm glad! glad! She ran lightly upstairs to her room to fling herself upon her knees, but this time it was to celebrate the victory rather than to try to gain one.

"There will be plenty of good times this fall," she said aloud, "and one picnic doesn't count. But one soul does count, and I'm glad of it. No wonder mamma has always said a promise is a sacred thing. Of course, I knew she was right, but I never felt like this before.—Selected.

Speaking on "Worldliness in the Present Day Church" recently, John Roach Stratton, D. D., pastor of Calvary Baptist Church, New York City, said that "the spirit of worldliness takes three manifestations: (1) Lusts of the flesh, (2) Lusts of the eye, and (3) Pride or vain glory of life." On the spirit of the world as it is seen in the lusts of the eye, he spoke as follows: "Lusts of the eye include the abuse of art. Art has its place, for God is a God of beauty, but whenever art separates itself from righteousness it becomes ruinous. The sculpture and painting and drama of today glorify the sensual; the art of today is Godless and pagan, and has departed from the standards of Christianity."—Exchange.

WHAT HAS THE CHURCH OF CHRIST TO SAY?

Rev. J. H. Jowett Makes a Fervid Appeal in The Interest of the World.

If this is not the day of Jacob's trouble, it does not like much of being the day of every other man's trouble. The world is practically turned upside down. It is in the midst of such an hour that Rev. J. H. Jowett makes an appeal through The British Weekly in behalf of more solid work in behalf of all, and he asks the Church to take the lead in an effort to bring peace and righteousness, the righteousness of God in Christ. Read what he has to say and then do your best to lend a hand to the united effort. He says:

The affairs of the world are now in the hands of politicians, some of them noble and magnanimous, accounting themselves stewards in a grave obligation; others of them subtle, cunning, mischievous, always plotting and maneuvering for the main chances, irrespective of the broader interests of mankind. It is difficult for the old-fashioned politician and diplomatist to breath the air of a new era and to adjust himself to the mental and moral fashions of a new day. He cannot escape from old ways and traditions. He cannot break away from old prejudices, old jealousies, old suspicions. He is too often the heated custodian of merely national deposits, and his sight that of the partizan rather than of the citizen of the universe. He has the competitive spirit rather than the co-operative spirit, and he is far more concerned in erecting barriers of exclusion than in breaking down all the old middle walls of partition which rear themselves, in such grim division, between class and class, and between nation and nation. But even the finer type of politician, to whom politics is just the science and art of universal well-being, has a tremendous fight against the destructive material forces which, never more than now, are pursuing their narrow and dividing ends.

The politicians have failed in establishing a righteous peace, and men everywhere are feeling the need of some power which shall lift all political relationships out of the rut and mire in which they are fallen, and create the possibility of national and international fraternity. It is not soft sentiment we need. And still less can we do anything with a mere "good nature" which is indifferent to moral issues. It is not enough for peoples to kiss one another; even a kiss is to be "a holy kiss." Sentiment must be impregnated with righteousness. Love must draw its vital strength from holiness. Kinship must have its roots in virtue. Fraternity must have a moral core. It is not a matter of just "feeling nice" to one another. It is the high necessity of establishing the will of God, as revealed in Jesus Christ, in all the relationships of mankind. It is the enlargement of merely parochial and patriotic fellowship into the family of man. It is the transformation of the kingdoms of this world into the kingdom of God. And what is the power which is to do this except the power of religion?

And how are men to get these world-embracing moods and these world-inclusive views? How are they to wed these ideals to current affairs? How are they to do these things except by the moral power of the Christian religion? And what is to be the organ of both power and ideal except the church of the living God? In the far-off days, of which the Old Testament preserves the record, the prophet was the organ of the national conscience. The prophet was the medium through which the voice of the Almighty sounded through the courts of kings, and broke in upon the councils of statesmen, and disturbed the plots of politicians, and proclaimed to nations the ways of righteousness and truth. The prophet appears and re-appears on all the stages of national life. You could not get rid of him. He could not be scared away by menace. He could not be bribed into silence. Visibly and audibly he was the incarnation of the divine will. But in our later days the function of the prophet has been transferred to the ministry of the church. The church of Christ bears the high glory of her divine priesthood, but added to her priesthood, nay, as a vital part of it, she has to be the conscience of the corporate life. The clear clarion of the prophet is to be wedded to the mystic ministry of the priest.

Is the church fulfilling her manifold function? Is her heart the home of broad and noble sympathies? Is she clothed with light? Does she put a trumpet to her lips which can awake the very dead? There are individual members of the church in every land, countless thousands of them, who are wide-awake in spirit, and who are devoted servants of the Christian ideal. But they are like the scattered units of a broken army. They lack the strength of a well-disciplined organized host.

I know the answer which is sometimes given to judgments of this kind. We are told that the church is not intended to be like an organized army, moving to the sound of bugle down the crowded ways of time. She is to move with the silent contagion of leaven, and with all the hidden mystery of growing seed. Yes, but we are told that her well-ordered life is to be seen as "a city set on a hill that cannot be hid." She is to incarnate her ideals, and she is to present herself before men as "the Light of the World." The church is to be the organ through which individual faith and loyalty can find corporate expression. Through the church the holy judgments of obscure multitudes are to shine with powerful and arresting constraint. The church is purposed to gather to herself all the divine elements in society, and to manifest and demonstrate them in the leadership of the human race. In a word, the church is to be in the thick of things, carrying the Lamp of God. I am far from suggesting that she is to be a meddler and muddler in matters in which she is entirely ignorant. It is not a question of being able to handle the details of problems. It is rather that of proclaiming eternal laws and principles in which all problems are to be solved. I am contending that the ministry of the church is to be that of a lamp, burning with the clean, clear light of the Christian ideal. She is to carry and declare the principles in whose jurisdiction all things are to be tested, and she is to be the primary channel through which the power of God is to work upon social problems to their appointed solution.

I am therefore eager that the church of the living God should play her part in the fateful hours of our day. Let her declare the things which have been revealed to her as the unchanging will of God. She knows these things. They are the things for which her Saviour died. Let her write them across the skies! Let her proclaim them, not in muffled tones of timidity, but with all the authority which has been given to her of God. She has the light. She has the right. Let her use them. On some appointed day let the believers in Jesus Christ go to their churches, as they went in the early days of the war, and in some simultaneous act of dedication and audible declaration let them proclaim their desire and purpose for a sacred peace, and their belief in the common brotherhood of mankind. Let us incorporate this "sacramentum" in the usual ordinances of worship. Let it be an act, not merely of priests and ministers, but of the whole congregation. Let them rise in their sanctuaries, standing before God and man, and in some simple form of words let them assert their witness to the ethical ideals of their faith, and their determination to have peace on earth and good-will among men. Let this be done in every Christian church throughout the world, whether it be Protestant, Roman or Greek.

Am I comforted with the retort that all this is impossible? Very well; the church exists to do the impossible. Institutions which have no confessed relationship with the Lord Jesus Christ can do the possible things. His church is called to the impossible. That is to be her distinctive mark, and behind her are the spiritual resources by which the wonder is to be wrought. "But even if it can be done, it will be so unconventional!" Yes, and that will be its power and its significance. It will be unconventional without being sensational. It will be individual as well as corporate. It will be an act of the knights of King Jesus' order, an act of homage and holy purpose, a confession of His will and a dedication to its accomplishment. The word would ring out in every church in Christendom, and its sound would engirdle the world.

But I will go further than this. In every nation I would have representative leaders of the Christian church meeting together, not in councils of war, but in councils of peace, to express the luminous principles of our Lord on some of the grave matters which are now plunging the world in confusion and strife. Have we any guiding principles which are intended to be to men as the light of day? Let them be proclaimed in every nation with an authority which is drawn from their Sacred Source, and with a strength of testimony which would be derived from the act of a united church. There need be nothing elaborate about these national gatherings. There is no necessity for complicated machinery. In every nation some would have to take the lead, and surely some one could be found to do it. Surely it would be possible in every country to find men and women who would be the originating centers of the simple organizations which are to get these councils together. Of course it would mean work and plenty of it. But the laborer in these fields would be sowing seed which would yield a hundredfold.

As far as our own country is concerned, let us have a council of peace in London with delegates from every part of the empire. Let the delegates be distinguished Christian men, not merely drawn from the ranks of ecclesiastics, but also from the wider realms of commerce and art and literature and labor. Let them be broad-minded, deep-hearted men, with personal loyalty to Christ and a passion for the kingdom of God. Let us have a three days' council here at the heart of the empire, not merely to make speeches, but to visualize and demonstrate the existence of a corporate body which has in its custody the moral ideals of Jesus Christ, and which intends to give them their purposed sovereignty in the reconstruction of the world.

What have the young leaders in the church of Christ to say about all this? If we elder men are somewhat timid, or if we are too much imprisoned in traditional ways, if we have become a little stiff in our joints, stiff in our mental movements, and stiff in our aptitude to seize the possibilities of a new era, let the younger men grasp the occasional, and let them use it to establish the will of the Lord in the upbuilding of His kingdom. The eyes of the young men are not dimmed, they can see new worlds building upon the horizon, and they can discern the highroad along which are to come the ransomed of the Lord with joy and singing. Let the young believers in Christ put their hands to the task, let them lay their backs to the burden, and let them make our confusing day the day of the Lord.

Are we ready to drop our grave-clothes? That is the question. Are we ready to exercise the fullness of freedom in the emancipation of mankind from the menace and ravage of war? Are the Free churches ready? Is the Anglican Episcopal Church ready? Is the Roman Church ready? If the national leaders of the Roman Church regard the proposed steps as a serious departure from traditional ways, and if they lack authority for this kind of co-operative service, let them seek the needful authority from the Vatican. The present Pope is a man of liberal instincts. He has already given proof of it. Let appeal be made to him to give any needful freedom to his church to co-operate in a demonstration of moral power which seeks the peace and well-being of the world. There will be no sacrifice of conviction. There will be no compromise in religious principles. It will be a sacred effort, on the part of all who believe in the moral ideals of Jesus, to direct them to the control of governments and of parliaments and of all who are busy seeking the material welfare of peoples and determining the social and national relationships of mankind.

Is all this a vision and a dream? Very well; then that is how things are to begin. "Your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams." Castles have to be built before their foundations are sunk in the earth. Solid worlds are born of gaseous nebulae and whirling mists! But not for one moment do I think our opportunity is so vague and so remote. Our resources are real and immediate. The occasion is ripe. The hour is at hand. The world is drifting again to war! What has the church of Christ to say, what is she to do? Shall she arise from her slumber, or . . . ?

By the courtesy of the editor, I have been permitted to read a full report of the sermon which the Archbishop of Canterbury has preached before the League of Nations at Geneva. I think I agree with every word of it. The League of Nations is the depository of all our international hopes and ideals. There is nothing on the field. If the League had the requisite dynamic power it could save the cause of civilization. But what is to give it the needful dynamic? Has the church of Christ any secret in her grasp which can endow the League with commanding power and vitality? What is our faith? Does the church only take rank with political systems and constitutions, or does she hold a sacred precedence? Is she the ordained minister of spiritual forces which can transform frailty into strength, and is it within her divine prerogative to clothe the League with requisite authority and power?

I believe that the League is waiting for the very support which the church can bring. Is she awake to the call? With all my heart I accept the closing words of the Archbishop's sermon: "Once let the Christian men and women upon earth, West and East, North and South, kneel to God side by side, stand shoulder to shoulder before men, to say what they mean shall happen, or rather what shall not happen in the round world again, and they are irresistible." I have only one sentence to add to this—let us begin and do it!

Christian Orphanage

THANKSGIVING CALL.

DEAR FRIENDS:

Thanksgiving season will soon be here—Our churches and Sunday Schools will soon be making their plans for the Thanksgiving offerings. Letters to all the churches and Sunday Schools are being mailed to the Sunday School Superintendents. We hope they will be read in the Churches and Sunday Schools. Thanksgiving envelopes will be mailed in a few days. We are also writing each pastor and asking for hearty co-operation. For the last two years our Thanksgiving offerings have not been as large as they should have been, but we realized the poor crops in the country and the depression in business and had no complaint to make.—But I did wonder if we really made any great sacrifice as to our own personal needs, comfort or pleasure. This year crops in most sections are good. Tobacco and cotton bringing good prices and business is better than for several years.

Come, let us make an offering that will be worthy of our church and denomination. Remember while you are richly blessed there are others who have been unfortunate—widows and orphans are crying to you for help. You have a golden opportunity through your orphanage to lend them a helping hand.

Have you helped a widow or an orphan this year? If not, do you think you have done your part in the great drama of life? If you have not done this, when your church makes its Thanksgiving offering open your heart, loosen your purse strings and remember the ninety little orphan children at the Christian Orphanage, who have bright minds and healthy bodies and who are asking you for a chance in life. They may not be from your community but they are your neighbors children. We have children here from Georgia and Alabama, two distant states but we love them just as much as if they had come to us from our own town or community.

If you cannot be at your church when the offering is made, mail your check direct to Chas. D. Johnston, Elon College, N. C. We are asking every member in the Christian denomination to join in this offering and help us to make it the largest Thank offering we have received in the History of the Institution.

We have ninety children in our care. We have thirty now on the waiting list—ten urgent applications within the last ten days. We have room for fifty more if we had the funds. The more children we take the heavier our task. We make you this challenge. We are willing to give our life to the work, to lend a helping hand to those little children and train them to be useful citizens for our community and for the Master's vineyard.

We challenge you to furnish the funds—will you meet the challenge?

TRUSTEES OF BETHLEHEM COLLEGE HOLDS MEETING

The Trustees of Bethlehem College, pursuant to call on the 6th inst., with Dr. T. H. Denney presiding. Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., led the prayer. After due consideration of the matter of buildings and plans, the Building Committee was instructed to proceed in securing plans and specifications. Also, the Executive Committee was instructed in that of securing a Financial Secretary.

After adjournment the Executive Committee held a meeting in the afternoon, but adjourned to meet the 10th. At this meeting, on account of some new plans, the trustees were called for a meeting on the 11th.

There were eight of the trustees present; and, after prayer by Rev. R. F. Brown the following items were acted upon: That, instead of canvassing funds with a Financial Secretary, we put on simultaneous campaign, the same to be done at the earliest possible date.

Rev. R. F. Brown was elected to direct the campaign and with the Executive Committee to make plans for the work.

It is believed that plans will be made that will provide ample accommodations for the beginning and that the doors of the institution will be opened September, 1923.

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

One person may take two or more subscriptions and have his time extended. All persons in arrears as much as one year should pay up, and then aid the solicitor in securing a premium. The name label indicates the time to which subscription is paid.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

GEORGIA-ALABAMA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

The twenty-fourth annual session of the Georgia-Alabama Christian Conference met with the East La-Grange Christian Church, October 3, 4, 5, 1922. The conference began with a splendid song service conducted by the local choir, after which the devotional service was conducted by the president, Rev. R. F. Brown. Immediately following the devotional exercises, the ministers and delegates were enrolled. All the churches in the conference were represented either by delegates or letter except one.

The organization of the conference was perfected as follows:

President, Rev. R. F. Brown, Columbus, Ga.; Vice-President, Rev. H. M. Gray, Lanett, Ala.; Secretary, Rev. R. A. Whitten, Athens, Ga., and Treasurer, Mr. H. B. Floyd, Chipley, Ga.

The Annual Address was delivered by Rev. R. F. Brown, the president. His subject was, "The Autocracy of Service."

Some inspiring reports and addresses were heard on the morning of the second day. The report on Sunday Schools was read by Rev. W. W. Willingham. This report showed that progress has been made in Sunday school work in the conference during the year. Rev. Mr. Willingham delivered a splendid address on "The Sunday School During the Week."

He showed that every Sunday school that is properly organized has something for the teachers and pupils to do during the week. Then came a very touching address by Rev. P. L. Duke. His subject was, "The Sunday School as a Spiritual Force"

The report on Christian Endeavor was given by Mrs. R. F. Brown. This report was encouraging. It revealed the fact that there are now six live-wire Christian Endeavor societies in the conference, whereas there was only one a year ago. After the report was read, Mrs Brown read a very instructive paper on "The Pivot of Christian Education." The thought presented in this paper had special reference to the youth of the land. It showed that the youth of the land is the Pivot of Christian Education. Many interesting facts were given which proved the logic of this reasoning.

At 11:00 A. M., Rev. N. G. Newman, D. D., of Elcn College, N. C., preached a very able sermon on the subject, "Visions for Service." Dr. Newman is a logical thinker, and he held the attention of his congregation throughout the discourse.

During the afternoon session of the second day, several reports were presented, among which were the reports on Religious Literature, Moral Reform, Home Missions, and the Woman's Board. Following these reports, addresses were made by Rev. C. W. Hanson, Rev. E. M. Carter, Rev. H. W. Elder, and others. The reports showed a net gain of 350 members during the year.

The evening of the second day was given to the Christian Missionary Association. Following the roll call and collection of dues, the association surrendered the privileges of the floor to Mr. Chas. D. Johnston, superintendent of the Christian Orphanage. Mr. Johnston told in a very interesting way of the work of the orphanage and gave illustrations of how the children are being trained. An offering was given to aid in this important work.

The third day session was a very busy one. The report on Education was read by Rev. R. F. Brown, who was the chairman of the committee. In this report were expressions of joy over the fact that the long cherished hopes and dreams of the people of this conference are about to be realized in the building of Bethlehem College. This college will supply a long felt need and will mean a great deal to the work of the Christian Church in the far South. This report recommended the following young men for licensure: R. A. Whitten, Argus C. Huckaby, William H. Brewer, Leon E. Oliver, Shaford D. Lankford, and W. T. Crowder. The credentials of Rev. B. A. Dees, who for several years was a minister in the Baptist Church, were endorsed. While this report was pending, several inspiring addresses were heard.

The report on Foreign Missions was read by Rev. H. M. Gray. At this juncture, an able address written by Rev. J. O. Atkinson, was read by the president of the conference.

A resolution on Men and Millions was read, discussed and adopted. This resolution strongly endorsed Men and Millions and urged the pastors and people to co-operate with the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention in collecting the pledges.

A forward step was taken when Rev. R. F. Brown, president of the conference, introduced the following resolution:

"Resolved that this conference in session assembled, authorize the Executive Committee of the conference to employ a conference secretary for half time. This secretary shall be required to give a part of his time to visiting new fields, organizing new churches, and holding evangelistic meetings."

This resolution was adopted without a dissenting vote.

After the most successful session ever held, the conference adjourned to meet with the Vanceville church, on Tuesday following the third Sunday in October, 1923.

ASSURANCE.

A deepening yellow on the leaf,
A chilliness in the air,
A deepening silence in the woods,
And sadness everywhere.

No longer blush the flowers sweet
On mossy bed and brink,
No longer sing the mocking bird
And the blithesome bobolink.

No longer wave the lush green fields
In summer's balmy breeze,
No longer 'mong the garden blooms
Hover the dozing bees.

The blighting breath of dauntless death
Is turning green to red,
And soon each leaf will leave the bough
And find its earthly bed.

But a resurrection day will come
When the tree will bud again,
And the flowering plant again will wear
Its fair and radiant gem.

O hope divine! O promise great!
Beyond this bourne of space
My God will also raise me up
In a robe of beauty and grace.
--F. M. DUNAPHANT.

FILIAL REMONSTRANCE.

Oh touch me gently, Father Time,
That I'm your child can be no crime;
You gave me life, yet hold me so,
That as you let I can but go.

CHORUS:

Oh, Father, touch me gently now,
For I'm your child as you must know;
Excuse the bad, accept the good,
I've only done just what I could.

You gave me faith to walk the road,
And bear through life a constant load;
You watch me too so close that I Cannot evade thy watchful eye.

You gave me eyes to see the light,
But now you've brought me failing sight;
Why silver hairs among the gold
When I would not be growing old?

You gave me strength to run a race,
Yet watch my feet at every place;
You gave me ears to hear my friends,
But what I hear, on you depends.

You're with me everywhere I go,
And keeping tab on all I know;
And should I do both this and that,
You always know where I am at.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

What Nationality Is This Woman?—

This strange question is propounded by conflict of laws. Edward Everett Hale's famous story, "The Man Without a Country," is being played in real life by many "Women without a country."

Legislators interested in immigration and naturalization laws are puzzled as to the best method to unravel a snarl produced by a conflict between United States and British naturalization laws.

In Great Britain an English woman who marries an American loses her British nationality.

According to a new United States law, an American woman who marries a foreigner retains her citizenship in this country. The law further provides that foreign women who marry American citizens do not by that act become citizens of this country.

The result has been confusion; a British woman marrying an American, by the laws of her country, is no longer British, and by the law of this country is not American. Much embarrassment is being caused by questions of passports, since each office, American and British, sends the British wife of an American citizen to the other's office for papers.

Business on the Upgrade.—

"Business in the South is again on the upgrade" says Fairfax Harrison, president of the Southern Railway Company, in his annual report which has just been made public.

"The output of the mills and factories has been steadily increasing during the past few months," the report continues. "An outstanding feature has been the operation of the cotton mills, a happy contrast with the strike-ridden cotton manufacturing centers of the East.

"In July, 1922, according to figures compiled by the United States Census Bureau, 96.97 per cent. of the spindles in mills in the cotton producing states were active, while in other states the percentage of active spindles was only 78.53. During that month the average active spindle hours in the South was 250 compared with 145 in other states. In the twelve months ended July 31, 1922, the mills in the cotton producing states consumed 3,733,147 bales, which compares with a consumption of 2,178,767 bales by mills in the other states.

"The more favorable conditions for the cotton manufacturing industry in the South are reflected not only in operating statistics, but also in the record of new mill construction. During the same twelve months, according to Census Bureau reports, there was a net increase of 245,831 spindles in Southern mills and a net increase of only 79,627 spindles in mills in states outside of the South. A survey of new mills under construction or in prospect indicates a continuation of the tendency shown by these figures.

"There has been unusual activity in the provision of new business and residential structures, as well as in the construction of improved highways".

German "Marks" In America.—

Citizens of this country have already paid Germany, in profits on marks, it appears, more than the indemnity Germany got from France after the war of 1870. By the same token, American citizens are poorer to the exact extent by which Germany has profited. Getting down to brass tacks, Americans have invested, since the war, the huge sum of $960,000,000 in German paper money, now almost worthless. This is the careful conclusion of the New York World, based on official statistics from Berlin and nation-wide records in America. The figures have been checked, we are told, by a canvass of the big cities of the United States, and by the scrutiny of eminent, thoroughly experienced banking and foreign exchange specialists. Among the figures used are Berlin official statistics of September 9, 1922, and the latest records of the German distributors in this country. Most of the buyers seem to have been German-Americans, whose natural sympathies may help to temper the bitterness of their financial loss. The complete story of the frenzied American buying of the German paper mark, only fragmentary and disconnected reports which have appeared from time to time, runs, according to The World, as follows:

"America paid 10 cents, 5 cents, 1 cent a mark. America bought 80,000,000,000 paper marks at an average of $1\frac{1}{8}$ cents a mark, \$12 a thousand. Today paper marks sell below 70 cents a thousand. America has left what may be worth \$56,000,000. Not more. The victims in America of this stupendous folly, the most gigantic financial delusion in history, have lost \$904,000,000. About one-third of the loss is represented by worthless stocks and bonds bought in Germany with marks. The buyers have given to Germany more than twice as much gold as Germany has paid in gold in war reparations payments to date, \$365,637,000.

London reports British losses in German marks speculation at about $672,000,000.

"America has paid to Germany a sum equal to one-third the total of the American Civil War debt, $2,845,907,625, August 1, 1865. America, victor over Germany, has paid her as much as Germany in victory collected from defeated France as indemnity after the Franco-Prussian War of 1871—$968,000,000.—Literary Digest.

Civilization Can Breathe More Freely.—

Two epoch-making events marked the closing hours of last week, when on Saturday (September 23rd) the grand jury investigating the atrocious crimes at Herrin, Ill., returned indictments against two hundred and fourteen men, some for murder and some for assault with intent to commit murder, and definitely charged the authorities with failure "to protect life and property" through cowardice or membership in the miners' organization. After giving in detail the horrors of that crime, the grand jury adds:

"The atrocities and cruelties of the murders are beyond the power of words to describe. A mob in its relentless brutality, but the savagery of this mob in its relentless brutality is almost unbelievable. The indignities heaped upon the dead did not end until the bodies were interred in unknown graves."

The Grand Jury reports that they indicted some forty persons for murder, fifty-eight for conspiracy to commit murder, fifty-eight for rioting, and five for assault on murder. It publishes the telegram received from President Lewis of the United Mine Workers of America to the district mine workers of Herrin, and says: "Following the publication of the telegram from President Lewis preparations for an attack upon the mine were made. The hardware stores in all the cities of Williamson County were searched for firearms. The weapons were either taken by force or upon a verbal assurance that the local would pay for them."

That is one of the great epoch-making events of the day, and the next, and perhaps of even greater importance, is the permanent injunction granted to the Government against the railroad employes who have been combined in a strike against the welfare of the nation. In his statement as to the reasons for granting this injunction Judge Wilkerson, referring to acts of violence against railroads, said:

"There began throughout the country a series of depredations which rapidly developed in some portions a veritable reign of terror. Railroad bridges were dynamited, spikes were removed from rails, obstructions were placed upon railway tracks, bombs were exploded on tracks and in railroad yards and hurled at moving trains. Notwithstanding the admonitions of the leaders of the combination to use peaceful means only, the real situation at most of the places where the strike was in progress was that employes were insulted, assaulted and otherwise intimidated. The word of the 'peaceful picket spoken in the darkness of the night by the club and pistol of the 'unknown party.' Regardless of the condition that no injury must be inflicted upon property, there was sabotage upon a large scale, engines, cars and equipment were tampered with and innumerable acts of malicious mischief committed which endangered the lives of both passengers and those operating trains. These unlawful acts are shown to have been on such a large scale and in point of time and place so connected with the admitted conduct of the strike, that it is impossible on the record here to view them in any other light than as done in furtherance of a common purpose and as part of a common plan."—Wesleyan Methodist.

NOTES-PERSONALS

What say you as to the truth of this item? "No man has come to true greatness who has not felt that in some degree his life belongs to his race, that what God gives him He gives him for mankind."

Thanks to Rev. E. M. Carter for a good newsy note of the late session of the Alabama Christian Conference. We wish some one in each of our conferences would keep us supplied with the news items happening in the limits of the same.

The North Carolina Christian Conference will be held at Hines' Chapel, November 14th to 17th. A full representation is expected. Rev. C. E. Gerringer is the pastor. If you desire to be met at the train, write him at McLeansville, N. C.

Ten years of records indicate that Death Valley, California, is the hottest region in the United States, and probably in the world. The hottest month on record is July, 1917, when the mean temperature was 107.2 degrees. On July 10, 1913, the mercury rose to 134 in the shade.

Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, late of Portsmouth, Va., has taken work with our mountain people in Virginia. His address is Fancy Gap, Va. Persons wishing to communicate with him may do so by so addressing him. In a private note he says: "I truly hope that many will write and give a word of encouragement."

What do you think of the following sentiment? Study it closely and then say what your idea is: Does your judgment favor the following sentiment: "The God we worship is the God still suffering over the sorrows of humanity, the God with tears in His heart for the sorrows of this world—the God who is like Jesus Christ."

The laying of the corner stone of the new Christian Church building in the City of Richmond, Va., will take place at the hour of 3:30, in the afternoon of Saturday, November 18, 1922. The friends of this church are cordially invited to be present and witness the interesting ceremonies of the occasion. The building is located on the corner of Grove Avenue and Sheppard Street.

New Guinea doesn't occupy much space on the map for the average American, but it is a vast island, 310,000 square miles in area, considerably larger than Texas. One of its rivers is seventy-five miles wide at its mouth. And this vast land has been scarcely more than touched by the Christian missionary. Its people are savages separated from one another in numberless little clans and each clan regards all outsiders as enemies. New Guinea should get a larger space on the American's missionary map.

Rev. H. E. Rountree, now stationed in Haiti sends us an account of the Religion of Haiti. We believe it will be read with interest by our people. The truth is we know but little, very little, of the people of Haiti. The fact is we knew almost nothing of them except in a general way, till Bro. Rountree began to tell our readers of their manners and customs. Let us read what Bro. Rountree gives us because it is knowledge at first hand and by one of our own ministers. He is a Chaplain in the United States Navy. His address is Marine Barracks, Port Au Prince, Haiti.

Had you thought of the fact in this way? What fact? Why that we, as Christians will never see each other for the last time. We may, and most likely will, see each other for the last time on earth, but we expect to meet the dear ones again in Heaven, and so it may be truly said that we shall not meet for the last time. Let us be comforted with this thought and take courage and go on to the end of the road and that will be Heaven.

Character is invaluable in the Christian life. Indeed, we do not see how there can be a Christian life of the genuine kind, except as we have character, for character is the Christian foundation stone of a strong life. The Congregationalist had a good thought along this line when it said: "We speak a great deal of 'character building,' but does the expression always carry with it clearly the implication that character must be built? Inherited tendencies and faculties are not character any more than bricks and mortar are a building. Our natural endowments and the elements of our environments are the resources and materials. What we build of them and from them constitute character. It is not something that happens; it is the achievement of thought and effort."

Do you have any trouble? What do you do with it? Evidently the Lord did not mean that we should keep our troubles. The burden would be too heavy. We must have relief from them and it must not be too long in coming, or it will break us down and end whatever of usefulness we may have. Some one has said: Fleeing from trouble is the first escape for the coward. Fleeing from trouble is the last escape for the hero. The shame of it—cowardice! When life becomes burdensome, lay it down, they suggest. Should Lincoln have laid down the duties of his office in the stress of the Civil War? Should Washington and William of Orange have laid down his burden when trouble faced him? Does it mean that Jesus Christ should have made His escape from the anguish of the crucifixion? We shall not get rid of this cancer of divorce law, either State or Federal. The Church is the solution. It should teach us that no life is worth living unless lived right.

Dr. W. W. Staley bravely stood for the truth in the Convention at Burlington recently when he heard a man say on the floor of the convention what Dr. Staley did not believe was true as to a certain feature in our Sunday school work. After this gentleman had said what he wished to say, Dr. Staley, believing that this man had presented the wrong view, arose and disputed the rightness of the statements. If we are not mistaken, the man thus rebuked did not attempt to answer Dr. Staley, and for one, we are glad the man was answered. He was what is known as an expert in some special lines of modern church work. We believe we had better get our experts from among our own men. We have as much confidence in our own good and able men as we have in the experts from the outside. For one, we think it is time to have our own men do our work for us and leave the experts to do their work in their own way, and where they may please. All honor to Dr. Staley for the loyalty he displayed.

What say you? Some one has asked the question: "Will There be differences in Rewards and Punishments in the Future?" In answering this question Mr. J. H. Bredall says: "The Bible puzzle comes from the parable of the householder who went out at several hours in the day and hired laborers to work in his vineyard and paid each a penny. The eleventh hour is a great hobby of Satan's.

"It is intended to explain why God saves fully, instantaneously, the Gentile just as He saves the Jews, by faith and not by works.

"That this has reference to different times in our lives is false and should never be preached or taught. Christ is not talking about rewards and punishments in eternity, but the last shall be first and the first last to come into his kingdom.

"Christ gives us a clear cut parable on eternal rewards in Luke 19:11, 27. The ten servants each received a pound. One improved his to ten and is given or made ruler over ten cities, the other gained five and is given five cities. He (Jesus) gives this because 'they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear.' Emphasis should be laid on the 12th and 13th verses ending with the clear term, 'Occupy till I come.' Again Jesus said, 'And behold I come quickly and my reward is with me to give every man according as his works shall be' (Rev. 22:12). Jesus taught us to lay up treasures in heaven and that even the giving of a cup of cold water should not lose its reward, etc. The Bible is full of this kind of teaching. Paul says, 'For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ that every one may receive the things done in his body according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad' (2 Cor. 5:10). The same lesson is taught about punishment in hell. 'And that servant which knew his Lord's will and prepared not himself neither did according to his will shall be beaten with many stripes. But he that knew not, and did commit things worthy of stripes, shall be beaten with few stripes' (Luke 12:47). Christ has one great plan and 'few there be that find it.' Seek ye first (in childhood) the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; live our whole life in his service and thus be worthy of the greatest possible reward."

Do you not realize that when God shuts one door to your life, He can at the same time and by the same power open another? This thought is beautifully and forcefully put forth by Rev. Russell H. Cronwell, the noted Philadelphia clergyman, when he says: "Here is a story—I wish I could recall who it was that wrote it. It is something like this: In the early part of the war, before Russia came into it, there were a number of men in prison in Siberia, and they were very carefully guarded. One night, according to the story, a conspiracy had been arranged among the prisoners confined there because of political offenses, and they assembled together and decided that one of their number should go up and in some way capture or kill the guard, then open the gate, and so enable all to make one general rush for that open gate. According to the account, one of the bravest men went and captured the sentinel, and swung open wide the door. When he opened the gate, there was a general movement, all rushing for their liberty. But as they were rushing toward the open door together, a strong breeze of wind came up and shut the door through which they were about to escape. They were unable to open it again. The door was shut!

"But some wise man among the number said: 'I feel a breeze from the west; the breeze that shut that door is blowing this way, and it could not enter the prison unless it has blown open some other door.' So, feeling their way, by the draft of air, they found that the wind which had shut one door had opened another, which opened out on the parade grounds, giving them the liberty they were seeking. The other door which had been shut before their faces was a very dangerous exit, and might have caused them their lives, even if they had succeeded in getting out at all. The same breeze that shut one door opened another and safer door, and gave them their liberty. God often sends breezes to His followers; and the same winds that shut the door in the face of him who would escape that way, opens another door which furnishes a far better method of getting one's liberty. . . . There are many Christians whose faith has been frozen because they found one door shut and concluded that was the only entrance. . . . Our Heavenly Father opens the door that is best for us."

FINAL NOTICE

Brown Summit, N. C.

The N. C. Conference will meet with Hines Chapel Church November 14-17. All ministers, delegates and visitors are urged to send us a notice of your coming, if a home is desired, also if we must meet you at Greensboro or Brown Summit. Let us hear from you, and come to Conference.

THE HUMAN TOUCH.

A neat little frame building. A yard full of flowers. In front a crude counter where a small boy offered a row of fat and blushing tomatoes. On the counter was tacked a sign, written by a boyish hand. It said: "My mother raised these tomatoes in her garden. They're good!" The boy was doing a thriving business, and we rather imagine he had no difficulty in disposing of the season's crop. The president of one of the country's largest advertising agencies saw the sign. "There is the best advertisement I've seen this year," he declared.

Just telling the simple truth! The "human element" we talk so much about is nothing but the truth—all of it!

OPEN MINDS

"It is well to have an open mind," says President Butler, of Columbia University; "but it is not well to have it open at both ends."

There are people who become so broad that they get exceedingly thin. They surrender so much to be liberal that they fail to retain enough to be respectable. They are so universal that they cease to be individual. So far as standing for anything in particular, they do not stand. They do not even sit. They have lost their identity, and have faded out into the universal, featureless sky.

The popularity a man gets for being "broad" is not worth much. It is a syllabub kind of popularity. It is like the foam that rolls in on the beach when the tide breaks. It comes in and it goes out. It appears and it also disappears. It is the applause of a crowd that shouts "Crown him!" today, but they may cry "Crucify him!" to-morrow.

To amount to anything a man must have enough force to stir up some kind of opposition. He need not carry a chip on his shoulder. It is not necessary for him to be a grouch. But beware when all men speak well of you.

Keep one end of your mind closed. Be open-minded, but at the same time have a mind. Society needs people who stand for something. The people who have fought the battles of the world have not had spines of spaghetti. Stand, therefore! And having done all, stand!—Dr. James I. Vance, in Exchange.

HONOR WELL PLACED

"President W. A. Harper was the unanimous choice of the American Convention which has just closed its quadrennial convention at Burlington for the important new office created by the convention of secretary of Christian Education. This was a compliment worthily bestowed. Dr. Harper has been a powerful force for Christian education. Elon College has forged forward rapidly under his aggressive and wise leadership, and he has been a force for activity in every phase of the work of his denomination. The Convention showed judgment in electing him to the high and important post to which it called him, and those who know of his services are not surprised that the action was unanimous."—Editorial in Raleigh News and Observer, October 26, 1922.

Dayton, Ohio, October 30, 1922.

The Mission Board of the Christian Church will meet in regular annual session, Tuesday, November 21, 1922, at 10 o'clock a. m., in the Mission Rooms at the Christian Publishing Association Building, Dayton, Ohio, corner Fifth and Ludlow Streets. All persons having business with the Board should govern themselves accordingly. The members of the Mission Board are:

REPORT ON HOME MISSIONS

EASTERN VIRGINIA CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE
1922

The object of the Church being to save souls, we heartily endorse the action of the Southern Christian Convention in setting a minimum standard of ten per cent increase in membership per annum, and we recommend as an evangelist Rev. George D. Eastes, Norfolk, Va.

We recommend the employment of a Conference Missionary as early as practicable and suggest to the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention the advisability of paying his salary for the present.

We urge the prompt payment of subscriptions to the Men and Millions Movement and to the Special Mission Fund.

We renew our endorsement of the pastorate system and urge the building of parsonages by churches and pastorates.

As to appropriations we recommend the following:

Portsmouth, on church debt.....	$ 500.00
Christian Temple, Building Fund.....	1,000.00
Ivor Pastorate, salary	300.00
	$1,800.00

We congratulate the Southern Christian Convention and the Eastern Virginia Conference on their contributions for 1921, as indicated by statistics compiled by the chairman of this committee and included in this report.

The Southern Christian Convention with a membership of 28,251, contributed for all benevolences $146,401.43; for all other purposes, $199,531.68. Grand Total, $345,933.11. Per capita for benevolences, 5.18; for all purposes, $12.24.

Considering our various methods of collecting funds, which causes a certain amount of overlapping, these figures are considered conservatives.

Of the statistics used where contributions were accurate as to conferences, the Eastern Virginia Conference contributed 47 per cent of conference assessments; 50 per cent of all other purposes by churches, Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor Societies; 62 per cent of the Woman's Board, and 72 per cent of Men and Millions. Therefore, the 50 per cent estimate used in the last three items of the following report are very conservative.

Eastern Virginia Conference with a membership of 8,299, contributed the following for benevolences:

Conference assessments	$ 7,600.40
Christian Missionary Association.....	2,080.00
S. S. Convention for Missions.....	387.74
Suffolk C. E. for Missions direct.....	250.00
Woman's Board	5,650.85
Men and Millions	26,653.27
(Estimated on 50 P. C. basis.)
Orphanage	13,587.99
Elon College Standardization	16,896.42
Mission Board of S. C. C.....	9,388.22
For all other purposes:
Sunday Schools and C. E. Societies....	$ 7,248.87
Churches	92,222.35
Grand total	$181,966.11

Per capita for benevolences, $9.94; for all other purposes, $21.92.

In order to obtain accurate statistics, we recommend the appointment of committee of three on church letter, of which the Secretary of the Conference shall be a member, to formulate a church letter for the Conference and recommend same to the Southern Christian Convention.

We further recommend that Elon College, the Mission Board, Orphanage, and other institutions be requested to keep an account by churches, if practicable, and certainly by conference, of all contributions not sent through regular conference channels.

Respectfully submitted,

J. E. WEST,
T. R. JONES,
H. H. BUTLER,
J. T. RAWLES,
Committee.

Bishop Bratton, at a dinner in Jackson, was genially patronized by a millionaire.

"I never go to church," the millionaire said. "I guess you've noticed that, bishop."

"Yes, I have noticed it," said Bishop Bratton, gravely.

"I guess you wonder why I never go to church, don't you?" the millionaire pursued. "Well, I'll tell you why, bishop. There are so many hypocrites there."

"Oh, don't let that keep you away," said Bishop Bratton, smiling. "There is always room for one more."—Detroit Free Press.

UNITED APPEAL IN SUPPORT OF PROHIBITION.

Regarding the present moment as a critical one in sustaining the Prohibition Legislation, the Federal Council of the Churches has issued an urgent message to the churches. The immediate occasion for the statement is the announcement at Washington on October 18 by the organized forces which are fighting for the repeal of the Prohibition Legislation that they are organizing support at the coming election for candidates who will vote to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer and wine. Not only this open attack upon prohibition, but also the more subtle efforts to prevent the enforcement of the existing legislation are pointed out, and the necessity urging the churches now to play as vigorous a part in the maintenance of respect for law as they formerly played in securing the enactment of the Prohibition Legislation.

The statement issued by the Council is as follows:

The public announcement of the program of the forces opposed to prohibition is a direct challenge to the churches and the friends of orderly government. They demand the repeal of the national prohibition act and the restoration of the manufacture and sale of beer and wine, in the face of the fact that both are intoxicating and therefore cannot be legalized without first changing the Constitution. Furthermore, the sale of beer and wine would require some agency for distribution, and so would lead inevitably to the return of the outlawed saloon with all its attendant evils.

Even more serious than the open campaign against prohibition are the sinister influences constantly at work to prevent the honest enforcement of the existing law. To disobey or disregard any law enacted by the properly accredited representatives of the people is to aid the cause of anarchy and to undermine the foundation on which all democratic institutions rest. In the ringing words of President Harding: "Whatever breeds disrespect for the law of the land is a force tending to the general breakdown of the social organization."

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America therefore appeals to all Christian people to exert every influence to secure the impartial enforcement of all laws. Since the foes of prohibition are now united to defeat the Constitution it is high time for the Christian forces of our country also to unite and to be as consistent at the ballot box in their support of the Constitution as its enemies are in attempting its nullification.

VISITING THE EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

Leaving Reidsville, N. C., before the break of day on the morning of October 26, I turned my face toward Eastern Virginia, going by way of Wilson, that I might have a day with Ethel (Mrs. Bunn Hearn) and the two little grand sons. Of course I had a pleasant stay in their home. The older boy Bunn, Jr., is in school and making gratifying progress. He is highly pleased with the golden stars which ornament the pages of his school books, placed there by the teacher for good lessons. John Barrett, the younger boy, is now in his second year and is a clever little fellow, at least his grandfather thinks so, Bunn, Jr., is very much like his father while John Barrett is very much of an Everett, taking after his grandmother's family, and yet his name makes me think he is of my side of the house, but they are both dear little fellows. In a family of 13, only Ethel and her father are left. The sorrows of our home have been like the deep waters—hard to pass through.

Saturday I hastened on to Eastern Virginia. Sunday Morning, I spent in worship with Bro. William and his church and heard him preach a strong sermon on the true liberty of the Christian. I reached the church a bit late and went in with some late comers, so he did not see me till he had dismissed the congregation, but when he found I had been in the house through the service,—well, it did look as though I might get a switching for not making myself known. He has an elegant little church and seems to be enjoying his work. He is ten years my junior, but some one thought I was ten years his junior, since his head is white, while mine is only gray. It was a pleasure to spend a little while with him and his family and so renew the associations of our childhood.

Sunday Night, October 29. I spent with Dr. L. E. Smith and The Christian Temple of Norfolk. Miss Kirkendall had spoken for him in the morning service, while Miss Olive G. Williams of our Porto Rican mission spoke for him at night. So I had the pleasure of hearing Miss Williams and much enjoyed her presentation of our Porto Rican work. I was especially anxious to see the New building of what is to be the Christian Temple of Norfolk's house of worship, when it is completed. My nephew, Mr. M. Pressley Barrett, took me in his auto to see what now promises to be the handsomest church building in the Southern Christian Convention, and it may be in the whole denomination—I believe it is estimated to cost about $225,000. Dr. Smith, the pastor is indeed a busy man and is doing a great work. His congregation is delighted with his ministry. We now and then, and may be often, hear of a "misfit" as between the pastor and his pastorate, but if we are not mistaken, Dr. Smith has the unique distinction of never having been a "misfit" in any pastorate he has served. That is an unusual record!

But I sarted out to write of the late session of the Eastern Virginia Conference which was held at Johnson's Grove Church in Southampton County, Va.

The occasion was full of interest, but possibly more so to me than to others, since the Johnson's Grove church was my first pastorate, some forty-eight years ago. I had not been there in years. I found all of the older members gone—gone to their reward. I did however, recognize a few who are still there, who were in 1874-5, young people. In most instances it was difficult to recognize them, as like myself, they are growing old. Occasionally one would approach me and say, "You do not know me," and I had to admit in some cases that I did not. Then I studied the face, and soon through the wrinkles and gray hairs with which old age has adorned them, I could detect some facial expression of the long ago. It was a rare treat to meet them again.

It had been reported that Johnson's Grove could not entertain the conference and for the reason that it is a weak church, but I am more than glad to say the Grove conference will go down in history as having been well entertained. Rich churches, having entertained the conference, have nothing to claim, as laurels over Johnson's Grove. It did its part very well.

Rev. W. M. Jay, D. D., was re-elected President and Rev. I. W. Johnson, D. D., is Secretary, Bro. Hersey Woodward, Suffolk, Va., is Treasurer. The Methodist church in Sedley, near the Grove invited the conference to hold one night session in their new and beautiful church. The invitation was accepted and we had with them a splendid meeting. Dr. L. W. Johnson preached a most excellent sermon from Matt. 16:18.

The Friends (Quakers) also have a strong church in Sedley. They went us one better and gave us a hearty invitation to have the whole conference take supper with them and also hold a night session with them. The invitation was accepted and the Friends gave the conference a great supper and a delightful evening. The large church building was crowded and the services were much enjoyed. The outstanding features of the evening, apart from the good fellowship of the occasion, were the two addresses by Rev. Dr. Parry of Greenville, S. C., and the one on The Bible by Rev. E. B. Flory, of Berkley, Va. The last of these was requested for publication in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. We hope to give it in an early issue.

The program of the conference was full—so full that it could not all be given. Many of the papers and addresses were very fine, Dr. Atkinson's address on The Church a Revelation was a masterpiece. He was at his best. Many of the other addresses were fine and they deserve special mention, but my space is now over run, and I must stop, except I must say that this conference was apparently a marked success, and it will stand out prominently as such in years to come.

One other item I must mention, and that is the fact that ten (10) new ministers were admitted into the membership of the conference—Seven of them are ordained ministers and three licentiates. Some of them were men of much talent and experience. It was truly one of our great conferences.

SOME HARD NUTS FOR SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS TO CRACK.

NOTE—The following is one of the strongest pleas for not keeping the old Jewish Sabbath, we have seen. If you have any trouble with the Seventh Day Adventists, just bring out the facts presented in the article given below, and we believe you will not be bothered with him any further. The unknown author of the article evidently failed to make himself clear on one point. He makes no distinction between the ceremonial law and the moral law. The ceremonial law has been abolished, but the moral law has not been abolished, and cannot be, if we understand it correctly. The truth, even in the ceremonial law has not been abolished, only the form of it having been superseded by the offering of Jesus Christ. Paul tells us in Rom. 10:4, that Jesus is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. Evidently the author of these "Hard Nuts" for Seventh Day Adventists to Crack meant the abolishment of the ceremonial law, and not the moral law, when he speaks of the law having been abolished. Keep this fact in mind when you read and do not be led to believe that the moral law has been abolished. The ceremonial law has been abolished, but not the moral law, for if it were, then we would be without moral restraints and that cannot be. The ceremonial law had to do with the burnt offerings, the various forms and kindred matters in the old Jewish law. These we have no more, for Christ has taken their place, in His work of saving the world from sin, but the moral law is still our guide in the ways of truth and righteousness along all moral lines. Now read these Hard Nuts for Seventh Day Adventists and keep them for further reference, as you will sooner or later likely need them, as when some Adventist tries to show you that you ought to keep the old Jewish Sabbath, and when that comes to pass, give him the benefit of what you find below—EDITOR.

1. Where is the proof that any man ever kept the seventh day, except by special commandment, prior to the proclamation of the ten commandments at Mount Sinai? (Gen. 2:2, 3; Ex. 16:1-30; 20:1-17.)

2. If Christians are required to keep the seventh day, why do you depart from your dwelling on that day, seeing those to whom the law was given were plainly commanded not to do so? (Ex. 16:29.)

3. If you keep one Sabbath—the seventh day—why not keep them all, the seventh year and the year of Jubilee? Who authorized you to make distinction in favor of the seventh day? (Lev. 25:1-22.)

4. If Christians are required to keep the Sabbath, how are they to live in cold climates? (Ex. 35:1-3.)

5. Is it the duty of Christians to put to death those who desecrate the seventh day? (Num. 15:32-36.) If yes, who will be the public executioner? If no, what will you do with the law? (Ex. 35:2.) If you say that the penalties are abolished, I answer that the same passages that you use to establish this, prove beyond the shadow of a doubt that the law, too, is abolished. If you admit that the penalties are still in force—and the proof that they are is unanswerable and invincible if the law is in force—there is not an Adventist on top of the green earth who can escape the vengeance of the broken law.

6. If Christians are under obligations to observe the seventh day, why did Jesus declare that all law and prophecy hang on love instead of the Sabbath, seeing the command to keep it is the one on which you hang your everlasting all? (Matt. 22:34-40; Rom. 13:8-10.)

7. Why did Jesus not require the young ruler to keep the Sabbath, when enumerating the commandments? (Matt. 19:16-20; Mark 10:17:22; Luke 28:18-24.)

8. If Christians are to keep the law of Moses—the Sabbath—why did the apostles and elders who met at Jerusalem leave it out of their address to the churches? (Acts 15:1-29.) This case finds, in some respects, a parallel in your theorizing. Judaizing teachers had gone forth declaring to the brethren that unless they would submit to circumcision and keep the law of Moses they could not be saved. The apostles said, "We gave no such commandment."

9. If Christians are required to keep the Sabbath, how are we to account for the open violation of the law by Jesus Christ, who is our example, unless by saying that the power that made the law can take it away, and that He did it? (Matt. 12:1-8; John 7:22, 23.)

10. If you keep the Sabbath because, as you think, it was kept before the law of Moses, why did you not practice circumcision, seeing it is plainly commanded in these ages? (Gen. 17:1-14; Gal. 5:1-6.)

11. When did patriarch, prophet, or apostle, or anybody else, command any Gentile to keep the law of Moses? No dodging here. Proof! Proof!! Proof!!!

12. Paul says the ministration of death written and engraven in stone (Ex. 20:1-17; 31:18; 32:15, 16; 34:1-18) was done away. (2 Cor. 3:1-18.) When, where, and by whom was it brought back into force? Name the day, the age, the authority, and give proof from the Book. If your doctrine is true, the great apostle of the Gentiles stand convicted of a mistake?

13. If the early Christians kept the Sabbath day, why did they break bread on the first day of the week? (Acts 20:7.)

14. If Christians are to keep the Sabbath day, how do you account for the fact that the apostles preached the gospel in Jerusalem, Samaria, to Cornelius the Gentile, and to many others, without commanding a single individual to keep it? Did they, under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, fail to properly instruct their converts? (Acts 2:1:47; 7:1-40; 10:1-48; 16:1-40.)

15. Is it not a fact, according to the book of Acts, that the thing done was of more importance than the day? (Acts 20:7.)

16. Can you demonstrate that the day you keep is really the seventh day or Sabbath, coming down in regular succession from the day on which God rested? If not, your day is no better than any other day. Admitting, for argument's sake, that the law of Moses is still in force, and that the fourth commandment is binding on the whole human race, will you affirm that it is possible for all men to keep the same day? If so, how do you explain the fact that the traveler who starts out to go around the earth, gains, say, if going east, one hour for every thousand miles traveled, or in going west loses an hour for every thousand miles traveled? How far would he go before he lost the count? Do you not see that he would inevitably be behind or in advance? Further, how do you explain the fact that far away toward the extremes of the earth, traveling from the equator, there are periods of six months night and six months day from age to age? Do you not see that it is a geographical impossibility for all men to keep the same day, and that the law was only intended for one people, one country, and one age?

17. Do you keep the Sabbath day? No dodging do you? Do you rest, or put in the day promulgating your doctrines? Do you not eat food on that day prepared by work on a fire kindled in violation of the law? (Ex. 20:8-11; 35:1-3.) Do you offer the burnt offerings required by law? (Num. 28:3-10.) Do you remain in your house during the day? (Ex. 16:29.) If you do not keep the day according to the Law you do not keep it at all. If you admit that any part of the Law concerning the Sabbath is done away you are driven to the inevitable and irresistible conclusion that it is all done away. If you deny that any part of it is done away, you condemn yourself, for you do not keep it. Which day will you take?—Undenied.

THE PRESENT CONFLICT OF FAITH AND UNBELIEF.

BY PROFESSOR NEWTON WRAY IN WAY OF FAITH.

That there is a conflict between faith and unbelief today more serious than ever known in church history must be evident to every thoughtful person. There have been times when some phase of Christian truth has suffered at the hands of unbelief; but never before have the very foundations of Christianity been so attacked and the entire superstructure been so imperiled as now. It is imperative that true believers should be awake to the issues involved and array themselves for the conflict. The subtle character of the assault which the new theology and higher criticism are making upon the evangelical faith obscures the issues and limits foresight of the ultimate consequences. Under such euphemisms as "divine imminence," "uniformity of nature," "reign of law," "evolution," "progressive revelation," "a better Bible" and "social salvation," we are robbed of a supernatural revelation, left with a mutilated Bible, without a Gospel of personal salvation, and with the cry of Mary in our hearts, "they have taken away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid Him."

Is the statement far-fetched? The facts speak for themselves. In State and Denominational institutions alike, and even in theological seminaries (which are among the worst) there is no longer any pretense of allowing the Bible to speak for itself. Its history is displaced by the speculations of Darwin and Wellhausen; its prophecies are made the relics of Persian dreams and ancient ecstasies or reduced to the level of contemporary performances; its doctrine of atonement by blood is set aside for the moral influence theory; its apocalypics are the borrowed fancies of Jewish and pagan fanatics. In short, the Bible is nullified by irreverent iconoclasts to whom the declaration of Ewald concerning Eichhorn, who originated the title, "Higher Criticism," applies: "We cannot fail to recognize that from a religious point of view the Bible was to him a closed book." Instead of being a trustworthy history of persons and events supernaturally characterized it is a mixture of legend and fact, invention and reality, without order or intelligence, which it is the task of higher criticism to resolve into a rational system. In attempting to do this it reduces the Scriptures to a heap of fragments, some of which are rank forgeries, some mythical folk-lore, others glossarial additions, and all worked over by various redactors (?) and left without a trace of the inspiring Hand which, to a spiritual mind, makes the Bible a reasonable and consistent whole.

Even the New Testament is not spared this dastardly treatment but is subjected to processes which rule out the deity of our Lord Jesus Christ and therefore His competence to speak with authority concerning the Scriptures of the Old Testament and events to come. Of course the apostles share with Him the charge of error, there being infallible inspiration neither in the New nor Old Testament.

A few citations will show the accuracy of these assertions. Professor Edwin Lewis of Drew Theological Seminary, in an article on "Theological Expression and Contemporary Thought" in the Methodist Review for January-February, 1922, says: "It is beyond question true that Jesus set forth at least a part of His teaching concerning the kingdom under forms and figures of the current apocalyptic and eschatology. Who will today distinguish for us the permanent and the transient elements of that teaching? It is equally certain that Paul used the ideas and terms of the Mystery Religions which played so prominent a part in the life of his time. To what extent, if any, has this borrowing colored the apostle's thought with the ensuing danger that with the passing of the mysteries his language may become misleading?" The professor also says that John's Gospel and certain sections of Paul's epistles borrowed the Logos idea from Philo, "reaching back through him to the Stoics and to Plato," and that "the central argument of the Epistle to the Hebrews is pure Platonism," etc. Thus does this lilliputian successor of such giants of orthodoxy as Miley and Curtis repudiate Christ's confirmation of the inspired eschatology of the Prophets and thus does he make Paul a liar who said that the gospel he proclaimed was not of men, but by revelation from Heaven and that God shall judge the secrets of men by it. Christ was a borrower; Paul was a borrower; neither is reliable!

One of the contributing editors of the Christian Work has tried to answer the question,

"What is truth in Bible history?" He refers to the story of Daniel as not true literally, but holds "that this is no denial of the truth of the book, not even of its historical truth. The new view holds the book to be history just as much as the old, but the history of a people personified, not the history of a person, and of the 2d century B. C., not of the seventh, and history written in pictures, and images, and poetry, not in bare literal record, but true history all the same."

Was there ever a more self-contradictory statement than that? What sort of a mental twist is it that speaks of fiction as history? This writer goes on to say: "The story of the stilling of the storm may be a case of the materializing of a spiritual experience, of which there are many instances. Men whose storms of trouble or sorrow had gone down into a great calm through the presence of Jesus told their experience to others, and this in course of time was related as if it had occurred in the physical realm."

Thus is the history of both Old and New Testaments explained away leaving no historic basis for the great truths of revelation. Hence we see men betraying the churches whose doctrines they are pledged to maintain and denying, as the editor of a leading Methodist paper has done, the supernatural and plenary authority of the Holy Scriptures, the substitutionary atonement and the second coming of Christ.

What now is our duty in view of this appalling situation? First, to protest with all our strength against the work of schools, editors, ecclesiastics and publishing houses that are promoting infidelity and bringing the Church to a state of spiritual impotency. We say, with Charles H. Spurgeon, that God "has not tantalized the ages with a Bible which can only be opened up by a succession of Germans with big pipes. We have measured the boasters who are the apostles of "modern thought," and we are slow to admit that the truth of the Gospel was purposely involved in obscurity that their vast intellects might in due time develop it. Under their management our churches are famishing and religion is falling into contempt, and yet we must daily wait at the posts of their doors, while their changeful oracles reveal to us the progressive theology."

In a court the other day a husband and wife asked a judge to settle a family quarrel. The wife had asked that the husband be arrested, and he had made a typical reply. The judge asked them both to sit with him on his bench for an hour or so and listen to the other cases that came before him. They sat there silently, witnessing the troubles, problems, and unhappiness of others: saw so much distress that they were ashamed and apologized to the judge for bothering him with their petty differences. The best way to get rid of our troubles is to find out what other people are suffering.

The railroad station at Meridian, Texas, is about a mile from the business part of the town. One night a sleepy, weary traveling man said to the man who was driving him to the hotel:

"Old man, why did they put this depot so far from town?"

The driver scratched his head in thought and replied.

"Wa'l, boss, I's fo'ced to admit dat I hasn't given de matter s'ficient cogititation, but jes' jumped up for a answer like dis: I s'pose dey done dat so as to have de depot as near as possible to the railroad.—Mother's Magazine.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

It is doubtful whether laymen realize their true value in the Kingdom. It is so easy to look to the minister as the source of church success; whereas it is plain from the history of the church that there were laymen before there were preachers. The apostles were laymen before they were ministers, and Paul was never ordained by a church presbytery. In fact it does not destroy a church to be without a pastor, though it may suffer loss, as ministers and laymen are both essential to an active church. Laymen make the preacher as much as the minister makes the laymen. The President does not make the nation, but the citizens of the nation make the President. The character of the citizenship will determine the kind of President who occupies that high position.

The business of the church should be managed by the laymen; and it should be handled in a businesslike way. The finances should be reduced to a system and every member should contribute, monthly or weekly, as the preaching service may determine. In a church that has preaching once a month, the offering should be paid monthly; where services are held every Sunday, payments should be made weekly. The oftener the payments are made, the easier it is to make them. Wages are paid weekly or monthly and the Lord's cause deserves the same system. Some members wait till the end of the conference year to make payments. This looks simple; but it fails in two respects. The weekly or monthly offer causes the member to keep it on his mind; and that is helpful. Every time the member goes to church he thinks of his offering. That is a great factor in Christian development.

Again, if the one by his side in the pew does not see him put his envelope into the basket, the value of example is lost and that is a loss to both. A and B sit side by side in the pew on Sunday. A is rich and B is poor. To save what A calls trouble he does not take the pains to bring his envelope every Sunday, but gives his check at stated intervals. B does not see A cast into the treasury, and he feels less like giving. If A would put in his dollar or five dollars every Sunday, B would put in his dime or quarter. Example is a valuable help in the church. The same is true of church attendance. It benefits the member who attends and helps to bring others. Both are benefitted.

There is a great field for laymen in the church to build up the kingdom of Jesus Christ among men. The church will never reach its best by individual salvation. It is not enough to be born again and keep the new life for self; it is useless unless it helps others. It would be as wise for a farmer to produce a crop and house it for himself, as for a man to get religion and keep it for himself. As well, might the singer never let his voice be heard as for a Christian to keep his spiritual achievements in his own heart and in his own life. "No man liveth to himself," and surely this is true of the Christian. The congregation can produce the kind of minister they need, if they will do their part and pray for him instead of criticise him.

Cooperation among the members in every good word and work is essential to progress. The business of the world moves forward by cooperation. Nothing secures cooperation so much as some big task. Nothing binds men together like heavy burdens. Watch a crowd of men moving some heavy weight and you will see that they lift or pull together. When the leaders calls they all work together. We see this in war; we see it at a great fire; we see it in a flood. We see it in all calamities. It is a common task that binds men together, and the larger the task the closer they pull together. Progressive laymen should keep some large task for the church to accomplish.—W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER

The Elon Alumni have for years felt the need of a General Secretary through whom they might function in a helpful way for their Alma Mater. The Alumni holding degrees now number more than four hundred. The total alumni membership, which includes all former students, whether they graduated or not, amounts to several thousand. All these now have a secretary through whom they can express their devotion for Elon in the person of Mr. G. C. Donovan.

The duties of an Alumni General Secretary are many and varied. He is to be host to visiting Alumni when on the Hill. He is to assist any Alumnus to get a location. He is to publish in the College paper, Maroon and Gold, information relative to Alumni, so that those of former days may keep up with each other. He is to visit Alumni in their homes and to organize them into local units, so that those geographically contiguous may on stated occasions get together for a luncheon, speaking, singing, and the general renewal of their old days as well as to lay plans to aid Alma Mater in her larger undertakings.

Mr. Donovan began his work in June. During the summer he aided in the campaign for students and assisted in the office work. Since the College opened he has been installing his office, collecting information, writing for Maroon and Gold, welcoming visiting Alumni, and getting acquainted with the student life of the campus. He also prepared the Elon Exhibit for the American Christian Convention.

He now takes the field. On October 31st, the Eastern Virginia Conference meets with the Johnson's Grove Church. Mr. Donovan will be there. He will immediately following the Conference begin his intensive campaign in its bounds. He plans to visit every congregation, meet pastors, Sunday school superintendents, local Alumni, leaders in our work, students in High Schools connected with our Sunday schools, life-work recruits, and speak where feasible to each Church on the work and plans of Elon. We trust that great good will come of this pilgrimage. I hope our people will receive Mr. Donovan and aid in his work, entertaining him, if at all convenient, as the official representative of the College.

Mr. Donovan will also have the lists of those who have generously made pledges to the various funds for the support and development of Elon. He will write receipts for all who will find it convenient to remit through him.

Any courtesy shown Mr. Donovan in his work and any assistance rendered will be thoroughly appreciated. His work is to be an important link in perfecting the "Church's System of Education," inaugurated two years ago and which has given us a student body made up of 72 per cent of our own young people. Help him all you can, beloved, and so strengthen our College in its purpose to serve our Church to its utmost capacity.

W. A. HARPER.

AN EXPRESSION OF KINDNESS AND CONFIDENCE.

At the close of the prayer service of the First Christian Church last Wednesday evening, Mr. Irvin Cather arose and announced that every one present was to go home with Rev. and Mrs. J. F. Morgan. There was a surprise look from the pastor and his wife, but there seemed to be nothing they could do but let the whole audience visit the Parsonage, as every person present seemed determined to do so any way. So the pastor led the way and opened the Parsonage door to welcome the distinguished visitors, but imagine the surprise to the already surprised preacher, when the folks began to enter with arms full of good things to eat, and some other things that were good and useful but not eatable. The friends continued to come and the pastor and his wife soon discovered that they were being abundantly, and yet tenderly pounded. These members and friends of the First Christian Church had brought with them canned goods, and groceries of nearly every description to gladden the hearts of their pastor and his wife, and to lessen the burden of their pocket book.

For this expression of kindness and confidence the pastor of the First Christian Church and his wife desire to express their sincere and heart-felt thanks for each and every one of these dear friends who have remembered them in this lovely and substantial way.—J. F. MORGAN.

ANNUAL STATE CONFERENCE OF NEAR EAST RELIEF WORKERS OF VIRGINIA

Members of the Christian Churches and Sunday Schools in Virginia will be interested in the annual State Conference of Near East Relief workers, Virginia Division, which was held in the Broad Street Methodist Church, in Richmond, Tuesday, October 24th. The meeting was arranged for the definite purpose of discussing the situation in the Near East, and deciding what the people of Virginia should do to help alleviate the chaotic conditions there. Many prominent speakers took part in the program. Among others were John W. Mace, National Field Director; Mrs. Florence Durvea, National Women's Leader; Mr. Charles V. Vickrey, World's Secretary, Dr. Henry Allen Tupper, of Washington, D. C.; Congressman William D. Upshaw, of Georgia; Congressman Andrew J. Montague, of Virginia, and others of national reputation. In a letter calling the meeting, the State Chairman Oliver J. Sands, of Richmond, said: "At this time when the Christian people of Bible lands are being murdered by the wholesale, no one is too big or important to be commissioned to do their part." There is a part for every one to play in alleviating conditions of suffering in the Near East, and this meeting offered an opportunity to gain a wealth of inspiration and a great fund of information to lead to more effective work. Many of our Sunday schools are planning to make their Christmas offering to the work of the Near East Relief. The Christian Church has made liberal offerings in the past and we have reason to believe that this year's work will surpass the efforts of former years.

THE LORD'S TENTH.

A good brother sending to Executive Secretary, C. D. Johnson, $20,000 for himself and family on his Men and Millions pledge says: "I have found it much easier paying the Lord the tenth with His blessings than I did paying a little sum without His blessings." That brother certainly has the right line on tithing. He is a farmer. Many farmers say they cannot tithe. One wonders when he hears a farmer say that if the farmer has ever really tried to tithe. My candid conviction is that any person in any station of life who earns or receives any sort of income, whether in money or kind, can tithe if that person will make an honest effort to do so. A volume might be written on tithing, but the brother above referred to spoke the finest possible word to be said in the matter. I used to beg people to tithe. I now really sympathize with those who do not tithe, because I know from hundreds of historical sources as well as the plain teachings of the Bible that they are missing a real joy in this life and a joy that the Heavenly Father wishes them to share.

Let every reader of the Sun put it down as a certainty that those who tithe, be they merchants, farmers or what not, will pay their pledges to Men and Millions and the other pledges that they make for the Lord's cause. Somehow the tither gets the money to pay that which he owes the Lord. I have just read of the experience of a boy in an orphanage who made a pledge and seemed to have no way of earning the money. Not long and that boy had a pair of Bantam chickens. From tithing his income from his chickens he has more than met his pledge to date and has nearly the five year pledge paid off. That boy found a way under difficulties while thousands seek to repudiate to their own hurt that which they pledged, on the ground that they are not able. There is a way in the Lord's work if we only seek His guidance in finding it, and it is a way of joy and hope and life and good cheer, for "God loves the cheerful giver." The most cheerful givers I find anywhere are those who keep accounts and have the tithe from which they can give cheerfully. I know a man who says since he began tithing nearly four years ago he has never turned down any plea coming to him for church or benevolence of any kind, and that he has enjoyed responding because he could respond with great cheer from the purse his tithe had created.—J. O. ATKINSON.

REPORT OF PAYMENTS FOR OCTOBER

Superintendent C. D. Johnston submits his report of collections for Men and Millions during October. As November closes a quarter it is very much desired that all Captains will do their best during November and send in their reports by November 30th. September and October being the first two months of the quarter showed poor collections, but November being the final month of the quarter will show very encouraging returns if our good Captains and Women Leaders will do their best.

A popular minister was also an enthusiastic golfer, and on one occasion he was greatly upset at the loss of a match game, which until near the end seemed entirely his.

His defeat worried him considerably, and on the following Sunday he rose in the pulpit to announce his text, which very solemnly he gave out as: "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose the last hole?"—Epworth Herald.

THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

Burlington, Oct., 19.—Continuing in session the American Christian Convention meeting in Burlington in quadrennial session gave over the morning hours to the hearing of reports from the special commissions.

Lieutenant-Governor of Virginia, J. E. West of Suffolk, arrived at the convention yesterday and is now attending the sessions as a member of the convention and delegate from the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference.

Yesterday afternoon completed the submitting of reports of all the departments, and with the reporting of all the special commissions this morning, the convention this afternoon will get down to details for the transaction of business.

The commission reports which came this morning were those on Laymen's Work, Rev. Omer S. Thomas, Dayton, Ohio; on Evangelism, Rev. McD. Howsare, Dayton, Ohio; on Life-Work by Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, Dover, Del.; on Ministerial Relief by Dr. J. E. Etter, Huntington, Ind.; on Social Service by President W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.; on Public Morals by Dr. Alva H. Morrill, Newton, N. H.; on Stewardship by Dr. E. A. Watkins, Lima, Ohio; on Christian Unity by Dr. F. H. Peters, Defiance, Ohio; on City and Rural Churches by Dr. H. G. Rowe, Warren, Ind., and Dr. W. T. Walters, Richmond, Va.

Elaborate and attractive exhibits have been prepared for showing in connection with the convention, the most artistic of which are the ones of the Department of Missions in which China, Japan, and Porto Rico are represented, and Elon and Defiance colleges. Other exhibits are Palmer College, Department of Sunday School, Printing, Publicity, and Life-Work.

LADIES MEET

The Woman's Mission Board of the American Christian Convention met in separate conference this morning. This session and one tomorrow afternoon will be the extent of their separate sessions in connection with the convention.

With Mrs. Alice V. Morrill, President of the Woman's Board, presiding, reports of the officers and standing committees, along with recommendations were made. The afternoon session tomorrow will be an executive meeting and which time constructive legislation in the department of missions will be enacted.

On the general convention floor the nomination committee, consisting of nineteen members, one each from the named conferences of the convention, was appointed by president Coffin. Dr. H. A. Smith of the Miami Ohio Conference was Dr. Coffin's choice as chairman of this committee. It will begin its work immediately in choosing and submitting candidates to fill all the offices for the coming quadrennial period, and will report at a later session.

AFTERNOON SESSION

The second session of the day brought before the convention the publishing interests of the Christian Church. Judge O. W. Whitelock, President of the Christian Publishing Association, addressed the convention first on the interests of the Publishing House at Dayton, Ohio, the official publishing office of the American Christian Convention. At the conclusion of his address the convention on motion rose to its feet in a standing vote of appreciation for Judge Whitelock's long and faithful service, and the good he had been able to accomplish in the field of publishing.

He was followed by Dr. Alva M. Kerr, Editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, published at Dayton, which is the official organ of the northern section of the church. Representing the interests of Sunday school literature, Editor S. Q. Helfenstein then spoke, and was followed by Mr. Hermon Eldredge of Erie, Pa., editor of The Teachers and Officers' Journal. These officers brought vividly and in detail the work of publishing and publicity in the church and suggested ways in which the co-operation of the Convention was desired in furthering the work in the future.

During this session Lt.-Governor of Virginia, J. E. West, made a rousing speech on the importance of having a strong children's department in the Herald of Gospel Liberty and The Christian Sun. "This is the best way to teach the denomination loyalty," he said, "and to increase the subscription list. This will be an effective means to the salvation of souls, which should be the great objective of this Convention."

An appreciated item of the afternoon's session was the presentation to Dr. Coffin and to the convention a gavel, made from the wood of a tree near the site of the church founded by Elias Smith in 1802. The presentation was made by Dr. L. E. Follansbee, and is the compliments of the Portsmouth, N. H., church.

C. E. OFFICER TALKS

Christian Endeavor held sway over the third session of the day's program, and except for the presentation of the Christian Orphanage, all other items bore directly on the work of the Christian Endeavor Society.

The Convention was fortunate to have with it this session Mr. A. J. Sharpe, Treasurer and Publicity agent of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, Boston, Mass. At 8:15 he spoke to the convention on "Christian Endeavor in the Life of the Kingdom." This subject was treated from four distinct views; Christian Endeavor in the church, in the home, in the community, and in the World.

In opening his remarks Mr. Sharpe declared that: "The greatest asset in the life of the American nation is a great praying congregation, and the greatest asset in the life of a praying congregation is a group of young people actively engaged in the larger work of the church."

"Christian Endeavor is alive to its opportunities," he continued, "and is making use of them. The Chinese stumbled upon gun powder but failed to make use of it, and upon the mariner's compass but failed to develop it, and upon printing but made no progress with it. Their failure along these lines was due to lack of initiative. The fundamental principles of initiative are life, energy, and progress. These three are all found in Christian Endeavor. Christian Endeavor is alive, growing, going, gleaming, energetic, with young people going forward in the spirit of the work."

Dr. A. B. Kendall, Springfield, Ohio, and Rev. J. F. Morgan, Winchester, Va., also participated in this Christian Endeavor program with C. E. rally songs and the C. E. round table.

C. M. CANNON.

Burlington, Oct., 20.—The program of the department of Sunday school was the general theme of the American Christian Convention in its morning session. Mr. Hermon Eldredge, head of the Department of Sunday Schools for the Christian Church was in charge of the program.

Dr. Henry F. Cope of Chicago, General Secretary of the Religious Education Association of America, and eminent Sunday school and religious worker, was the outstanding figure of the morning's program. Dr. Cope is a well known author, and his numerous books on Sunday school and Religious Education are of the very highest type. His texts are used in practically every college throughout the United States in connection with their courses in Religious Education.

He spoke on "The Present Task of the Sunday School," and said the average Sunday school must be reckoned as a failure because it did not succeed in securing the respect of the child life of today; "It is usually a poor, weak, and insignificant affair compared to the public school, and yet it professes to deal with the most important aspect of human life, with religion. But the responsibility for this lies not with the hardworking people who keep up the school, but with the indifferent and selfish folks who neglect it, with the church members who keep the best of the building and the best of everything in the church for themselves. We need a converted church, one that will care for them as well as the public school does. Unless the church can train the next generation to religious living we have no hope for a better world, no chance of even a decent world. Unless we do train this oncoming generation to think of religious terms of social love all the base passions that broke loose in the war are liable to break loose again and wreck the world. The task of the Sunday school is to save the world by training the children in right living, by helping them to form Christian motives, by leading them to make a new world of Christian good will and brotherhood."

On the local end of the Sunday school program Mr. Hermon Eldredge spoke on the young people's division of the Sunday school work of the church. Mrs. F. E. Bullock, field secretary for the department represented the children's division, and Mr. F. R. Beach, Covington, N. J., the administrative division.

A pleasing item of the morning program was the introduction of the ministers of the city of Burlington to the convention. Dr. G. O. Lankford, pastor of the local convention church, made the introduction.

The loose collection taken at the evening session yesterday for the Christian Orphanage at Elon College it has been announced amounted to $250.57.

GREETINGS FROM NORFOLK

Greetings came to the convention today from the Norfolk Council of Churches in the form of an open letter addressed to President Coffin. The letter reads as follows:

"To the Members of the Convention; Greetings from the Christian forces of Norfolk, Virginia;

"P. Whitwell Wilson said in his lectures the other night, 'I must say that your newspapers are treating the churches splendidly in the church publicity, and God grant that the churches may give the papers something to say,' and that is my plea and prayer, and that the news will be of an evangelistic campaign put on by the churches of Christ. We of today need evangelization more than organization and only the story of the living, loving, Christ will evangelize the world and bring peace to poor, wayward, faint hearts and souls."

(Signed) J. H. BLANCHARD,
Chairman-Publicity Committee,
Norfolk Council of Churches.

MISSIONS HEARD

The mission session of the convention, which came at night, proved to be one of exceptional interest. The work of the Woman's Board and home and foreign missions is not lagging, and the night's session was convincing proof of the value of this board to the convention and of the energetic way in which the problems of missions is being undertaken and solved by the women.

Mrs. Athella M. Howsare, Dayton, Ohio, President of the Woman's Board for Home Missions presided over the session. Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., Vice-President of the Woman's Board for Foreign Missions, came before the convention with her address on "Rays From the Light-giving Word," which was followed by a beautiful candle light service.

Under the head of "Messages From our Bearers of the Light," Mrs. J. Russell Meredith, Fancy Gap, Virginia, talked of the work being done in the mountain mission schools in the mountains of western Virginia; Miss Frieda Kirkendall, Haverhill, Mass., told of the work of the schools there in religion, and Miss Olive C. Williams, Troy, Ohio, finished the program by telling of the Porto Rico work and accomplishments there. The song "God Bless our Heralds of Light," came as a fitting benediction for the mission program.

EDUCATOR SPEAKS

The principal feature of the afternoon period was the address of Dr. W. C. Wicker of the faculty of Elon College. Dr. Wicker has for the greater part of his life been an educator and his timely address on the fundamental principles of teaching in connection with the Sunday school literature of the denomination had great weight, and was of especial value. His specific subject was: "Some Present Day Demands Upon Sunday-school Literature."

His address was built along the lines of keeping in mind the nature of the child, the laws of learning, and the laws of teaching in compiling the literature for the Sunday school children, and ended his address with specific ways in which the literature could be improved and launching an appeal that the nature of the child's desires be studied more closely. He complimented those who are now in charge of this work for the splendid ways in which they have interpreted the demand up to the present, and for their faithful service.

The Woman's Board in session this afternoon on account of the large attendance of the ladies was moved from the convention church to the First Presbyterian Church just a block from the Christian Church.

Mrs Athella M. Howsare there presided over the deliberations of this body. After talks by Mrs. W. A. Harper, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, and Miss Frieda Kirkendall, general discussion was entered into relative to plans for promoting and facilitating the work, and a set of resolutions in regard to the young people's work.

C. M. CANNON.

Burlington, Oct., 21.—Convention business, Department of Education, and The Forward Movement of the Church was the order of the day for the American Christian Convention in session here. Rev. H. Shelton Smith, New Haven, Conn., speaking on the subject "An Adequate Program of Religious Education," and Dr. Warren H. Denison, Dayton, Ohio, presenting the combined Forward Movement was the main items of the program.

"Making the Forward Movement Permanent in the Life of the Church," was Dr. Denison's theme in his address at the night session. He spoke of the Forward Movement as the biggest thing that the Christian Church had yet done, and brought before the convention plans for continuing this work, which consists of securing life-work recruits, tithing, and financial pledges for the work of the denomination.

Dr. F. G. Coffin, President of the Convention, delivered an inspiring address on "The Church's Future Program," in which the principal of Christian union was made prominent.

Then under the head of "Forward Movement Echoes" a series of seven minute speeches on the accomplishments and possibilities of the movement were made by Dr. Donald P. Hurlburt, Bangor, Maine; Rev. Rue Burnell, Superior, Nebraska; Mr. John E. Reese, Gasport, N. Y.; Mrs. Athella M. Howsare, Dayton, Ohio; Dr. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Va., and Rev. W. P. Fletcher, Toronto, Ontario.

Very fitting and in spirit with the program of the hour the Education session was moved from Burlington to Elon College, four miles away. Elon College is the property of the Southern Christian Convention which in turn is a part of the American Christian Convention, and the convention held its Education session in its own college. This is the first time the Convention has ever met in one of its colleges.

After short speeches from the executives representing the seven educational institutions of the American Christian Convention, Starkey Seminary, Lakemont, N. Y., Defiance College, Defiance, Ohio, Palmer College, Albany, Mo., Union Christian College, Merom, Ind., and Elon College, Elon College, N. C., Presidents Martyn Summerbell, A. C. Caris, F. C. Coffin, W. S. Alexander, and W. A. Harper, respectively, on "The Needs and Opportunities of Our Educational Institutions," Dr. H. Shelton Smith, New Haven, Conn., a graduate of Elon College who last spring received his Ph. D. degree from Yale University, made the address of the day on the subject of "An Adequate Program of Religious Education."

"The present impulse in religious education is not the breath of a moment," he declared. "It is the church's answer to convictions not born in a day. It is the dawn of a movement whose influences have been gathering in force and vigor for the last seventy-five years.

"In the first place it is partly due to the secularization of the public schools. But there is another and more important reason for the new awakening in religious education. It is found in the dawn of a new conception of education and religion and their relation to each other. Religion can no longer be properly conceived as a function of the heart exclusive of all other aspects of our mental life. In every expression of personal behavior the mind's energy, thought, feeling, and will, acts as a unity. Two great causes, therefore lie at the basis of the present trend in religious education. One, the secularizing movement, which threatens to eliminate the essential elements of true education, the other, which shows the unity of life and the common aim of both religion and education. The third need to make vital and effective the resources already at the command of the church is the bringing together of the several organizations into one comprehensive program of Christian Education.

"There, the important step for every local church is the formation of a Council of Religious Education having representatives of all the organizations of the Church. This is the great challenge to our church," he concluded, "but friends of this church, the hour has come. The present generation is the one we can reach. If we train, hold and inspire them, the future will be radiant with hope."

Announcement was made this morning that members of the Convention would preach at both Sunday services in all the churches of the city and community instead of the regular pastor of these churches. For the First Presbyterian Church Dr. Martyn Summerbell, for the morning, and Dr. W. C. Sargent for the evening Services; for the First Baptist Church, Dr. Roy C. Halfenstein, and Dr. D. B. Atkinson; for Hocutt Memorial Baptist, Rev. Willow J. Hall, and Dr. E. A. Watkins; for Reform Rev. J. E. Etter, for Methodist Protestant, Drs. Clarence Defur and G. A. Coni-bear; for Piedmont Presbyterian Drs. W. H. Hainer, and A. C. Caris; for Elon College Rev. H. S. Hardcastle and Mr. Hermon Eldridge, for Graham Christian Rev. G. B. Opening the business session of the morning Lt.-Governor J. E. West of Virginia made a rousing speech on the matter of changing the constitution of the church so as to read "The Christian Church" instead of as heretofore designating them as "A religious body known as Christians." Legislation was so enacted as to make this change.

Consideration and the disposition of reports was the matter claiming attention in the first sitting of the day. The report of the commission on State of the Church was adopted with the amendments to create two new departments, that of evangelism and life-work recruits. In this report the goal was set for new members as 27,000 for the next quadrennial. This report showed the total membership of the Christian Church in North America to be 96,296, a total number of 1,159 churches, 1008 ministers, total number enrolled in Sunday school 94,000, and 372 life-work recruits.

After long deliberations over the report of reorganization and correlation of the various executive board, and the report of the Commission on Education, of which neither matter has been finished, the conference adjourned to attend the afternoon session at Elon College and also to witness the foot-ball game there between Hampden-Sidney and Elon Colleges.

Burlington, Oct. 22.—The Sunday program of the American Christian Convention which has been in session at the First Christian Church in this city since Tuesday night, October 17, began with a sermon by Rev. Frank H. Peters, D. D., pastor of Defiance College church, Defiance, Ohio. The large auditorium of the church was filled to overflowing with members of the convention and the members and visitors of the local church. Rev. G. O. Lankford, D. D., pastor of the convention church, presided during the morning service.

The program of the service preceding the sermon by Dr. Peters consisted of invocation by Rev. A. B. Kendall, D. D., of Springfield, Ohio; scripture reading from Isaiah first chapter by Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., of Norfolk, Va.; prayer by Rev. W. H. Denison, D. D., of Dayton, Ohio.

Dr. Peters chose as subject, "The Manger In Bethlehem and In Modern Times." He quoted as a text Luke 2:11. The speaker discussed the subject from the standpoint of the coming of Jesus Christ into the heart and life of man, and spoke of the blended beauty of the human and the divine nature of the Christ. Dr. Peters declared that "Through the centuries since the birth of Christ in the Bethlehem manger he had been trying to get into the heart and life of men of all the nations of the earth. Christ was standing at the door of the hearts of men in St. John's day and he is still standing at the door of the hearts of men in modern times.

"The presence of the manger in modern life has been hindered by the doctrines of the religious autocrats, and new ideas have supplanted the old in science, in education, in government and in religion. The condition of Christian discipleship is to accept Christ as the Saviour of men and follow his teachings in all the avenues of life. Jesus Christ in his divine life is finding his way into the heart and life of the nations of the earth. Christ was born, not for failure, as some would teach, but was born in the Bethlehem manger for victory. His church, founded upon the eternal rock of ages, shall stand. Christ is being born in the Christian scholarship of modern times, and religion and goodness are the order of the day."

Concluding his sermon, Dr. Peters made reference to the movements of the present day toward a unity of the different denominations of the land, and declared that Christ was appearing in these movements for the unity of purpose. He stated that in due time all denominations would emerge from the weakened division into a strengthened union. The speaker also asserted that "as Christ was born as Saviour in the Bethlehem manger, so he must be born Saviour in modern times. He can only lead the world out of chaos into order and happiness and peace and joy."

The afternoon session of the convention took the form of a memorial service in memory of 122 deceased ministers of the denomination who had died during the past quadrennium. A paper was presented by Rev. Alva M. Kerr, D. D., editor of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, of Dayton, Ohio, in which the lives of the departed ministers were effectively and touchingly eulogized by Dr. Kerr.

The last speaker at the afternoon session was Dr. J. O. Atkinson, of Elon College, who is secretary of Mission of the Southern Christian Convention. Dr. Atkinson spoke very forcefully on the theme, "Filling the Ranks." He began his address by paying a very high tribute to the deceased ministers and to those who have labored during the years of the past century in establishing the Christian Church and have retired from active service in the ministry. Rev. J. W. Holt, of this city, a retired minister of the denomination, was given a glowing tribute by the speaker, and was called to the rostrum and introduced to the large audience as the organizer and first pastor of the Burlington Christian church in which the sessions of the convention have been held.

Entering into the discussion of his subject, Dr. Atkinson asserted that "the highest and noblest memorial that can be erected for those who have fallen from the ranks of the ministry is that the work they begun be carried on and on to a successful and happy consumation." Dr. Atkinson stated further that more than 30,000 pulpits of the various denominations in the United States were vacant, and that there were hundreds of vacant pulpits in the churches of the Christian denomination in the United States. The speaker asserted that the ranks needed filling, and then he set forth some conditions under which God calls men to preach his gospel, quoting from Deut. 32:39 as a basis of his address.

"God calls whom he will to preach his gospel. If the call came from man, there would be a set of rules by which the man might qualify himself for the work of preaching the gospel and by which the ranks would be filled. But God calls preachers. Man must clarify the atmosphere so that the person called may answer the call," were some of the assertions of the speaker.

Entering more forcefully into the discussion of the subject, Dr. Atkinson spoke of the conditions under which God seemed to have called men to preach the gospel and filled the ranks in the past. Three characteristics were presented to show how men have been called into the work of the ministry in the past. First, the speaker showed that God had called men that had a passion for souls, and he discussed this phase of the subject at length. The second characteristic or condition under which the call is made was termed those that have a passion and fondness for the Bible. The third and last characteristic of the divine call from God to man to preach his gospel and win men into the kingdom of God was declared to be a passion for the principles of righteousness. The speaker made it plain and convincing that these three things governed the call of God to men for the ministry in filling the ranks which constantly need filling.

C. M. CANNON.

AFTER THEY HAD PRAYED.

We often wonder how any Christian worker can attach so little value to the power of prayer, and depend so largely upon the plans and schemes of men in doing the Lord's work. Jesus taught again and again the power of prayer which is backed up by faith in the faithful and unfailing God. Again and again men have proved the power of prayer. Do the people of God forget, or why is it socials, sales and suppers are depended upon so largely, and prayer is depended upon so little in advancing Christ's kingdom, or holding the church together? Why is it the all-day meeting with a basket dinner brings out nearly the whole church, and the prayer meeting draws only a few? It is because the church members are forgetting God and His word?

In Acts 4:31 we are told it was "when they had prayer, the place was shaken where they were assembled together, and they were all filled with the Holy Ghost." It was after they had prayer. It was not after they had given the best entertainment, or the most popular and best attended social they had ever had. It was not after they had raised the largest sum of money they had ever raised, or listened to the most logical and eloquent sermon which they had ever heard. It was not after they had worked up a faction to put through some great scheme. Neither was it after building the finest church in town. But it was after they had prayed.

Who were they? Peter and John had been taken to task for boldly preaching the power of the crucified and risen Christ. Peter and John who could not "but speak that which we have seen and heard." Peter and John who could not but hearken unto God rather than men. Peter and John who being threatened and let go, went to their own company? Their own company was made up of the people of their own kind. People who had Christian courage to stand for the right, and to speak with boldness for their Lord.

What kind of company do you seek? It is your own sort, but who are they? Are they theater-goers, dancers, card-players pleasure-seekers, Sabbath desecrators, those who are given to foolish jesting? There is no power to shake things in that kind of company. You may shock people but you will never turn them to Christ, you will never see Him until you get in Peter and John's kind of company.

They, Peter and John and their own company, believed in the mighty prayer promises which their crucified and risen Lord had given them. They not only believed them but they fearlessly put them to the test. What was their prayer? They acknowledged the power of God and prayed that His servants might "with boldness speak the word." The church on its knees is the church where the Holy Spirit's power has always been manifested. Prayer changes things. Are you through fervent prayer changing anything in your church or community? God can work and none can hinder. He also can hinder so those who are out of the line of His will cannot work if consecrated, earnest Christians, those who regard not iniquity in their hearts cease not to pray to Him.—MINNIE LOHR, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

The Men and Millions Campaign and the causes embraced by it gain and hold their rightful place in the hearts of our people only in proportion as our preachers preach on these great Kingdom interests. The churches having the best record also have preachers who are constantly on their Campaign job.

PREACHING THE CAMPAIGN

No one human agency contributed so much to the victory in subscribing to Men and Millions as the preachers preaching the Campaign. The preacher was then and is now the key man. If the pastor preaches Men and Millions the people will work for and pay their pledges to the Movement.

Make the Victory Sure.

Our people will fall behind in their payment of the pledges if our preachers do not get under the burden again. We can go to the extraordinary session of our Convention next May with a glorious record, if our people are aroused to a full sense of their duty. We need to go to our knees for Power in these great days ahead of us, if we are to truly lead our people, pay our pledges and win out for our Lord.

Preach—Preach—Preach.

LESSONS TO LEARN

The Comforting Jesus

In times of sorrow, Jesus is the friend who comforts. The Centurion's faith was rewarded when his servant was made whole. The power of the Christ restored life to the son of the widow of Nain. The revelation of Christ's power always brought blessing. His loving power is still able to comfort the sorrowful, to heal the sick, and to cheer the broken-hearted.

"What a Friend we have in Jesus,
All our sins and griefs to bear!"

The Friendly Jesus

Jesus loved people. He was found at social gatherings. He constantly mingled with throngs of men and women. He did not hold himself aloof, but delighted in knowing people. True religion is friendly. It is sin that separates us from other people and from God. True religion should make the Christian life attractive, not repelling. True religion knows no class distinctions in friendship. Jesus Christ was the friend of all. Dr. G. Campbell Morgan defines a friend as "One who knows all about you and likes you just the same." Jesus knows all about you, and still He is your best Friend. And He sets the example for His followers to show themselves friendly. How wonderful it would be if we only reveal to the world the attractive goodness of Jesus, rather than the snobbish, repelling attitude of Simon.

"I've found a friend who is all to me,
His love is ever true;
I love to tell how He lifted me,
And what His grace can do for you.

"He saves me from ev'ry sin and harm,
Secures my soul each day;
I'm leaning strong on His mighty arm;
I know He'll guide me all the way."

The Generous Jesus

Our best for Jesus is not to be compared with His gift to us. The patronizing Pharisee, Simon, invited the Master to eat with Him, but in his abundance, neglected to observe the common courtesies due a guest. No water for bathing His feet, no kiss of welcome, no oil for His head greeted Him in the home of the Pharisee. Yet the humble sinful woman, whom Simon looked upon with scorn, washed the feet with her tears, kissed them much, and anointed them with ointment. She gave her best to the Christ. And the reward of her humble love was great. How are you welcoming the Master in your life, with love, or neglect? Is He receiving your best, the first of your strength, time, service, or are you forgetting the courtesy of placing Him first in your thought and life?

"To serve the present age,
My calling to fulfill;
O may it all my pow'rs engage,
To do my Master's will!"

The Forgiving Jesus

No sin is too great for Jesus to forgive. "To whom little is forgiven, the same loveth little." "A man's sense of forgiveness is the measure of his love." No doubt Simon felt that he had little to be forgiven of; that his life had been rather exemplary and far above that of the sinful woman before the Christ. By this attitude, Jesus determined the amount of his love. "For all have sinned and fall short of the glory of God," declared Paul. All have had great sins to be forgiven of, and that generous forgiveness binds us more closely to the Father. "Thy faith hath saved thee." Faith is a condition of forgiveness, and is closely allied with love. The true Christian must be a man of faith, of love, of forgiveness for others, even as Christ has forgiven him. In judging others, we judge ourselves, and the earnest prayer of every follower of Christ must be "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors."

"Put on, therefore, as God's elect, holy and beloved, a heart of compassion, kindness, lowliness, meekness, long-suffering; forbearing one another and forgiving each other, if any man have a quarrel against any; even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye."—Col. 3: 12-13.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

November 19, 1922.

"How We Can Help Home Mission Work."
Gal. 6: 6-10.

LESSON THOUGHTS

To be a Christian means to be a missionary. Every Christian has a vital part to play in all of our home mission enterprises. From every source possible glean facts about your church home mission work into the mountains of Virginia, among the foreigners in Haverhill, Mass., among the lumbermen of western Washington, in the churches which your Mission Board is helping to grow. Stories of this work will impress many Christian Endeavorers with the fact that a great work is being done, and that every Society should be very personally interested, especially in these centers of our work. They need our prayers, our financial help, our interest, and our service. Plan at this meeting to fulfill your responsibility as Christians and as missionaries by attempting a very definite work for some of our home mission points.

"Let us not be weary in well doing." Perseverance must be a part of the missionary program. Discouragement has killed many a good effort. Your part in the home mission work may be to give the word of cheer to some worker who is experiencing hardships, and seeing days which seem to be filled with fruitless effort. Write to your home missionaries.

"As we have opportunity, let us work." Many opportunities are calling us to work. "Is it vain to hope that there may be found young men and young women with hearts prepared and souls afire to step forth from the ranks and say, 'Ready?'" (J. I. Vance.) This meeting may be made a call for Life Work Recruits. It is a great thing to be one of those heroes or heroines who bravely follow Jesus in obeying His last command: "Go . . . Teach."

To young people seeking a place in life, and a vocation, the call of the mission fields, here and abroad, for life service recruits should be made clear in no uncertain manner. Their life dream is Service. They are listening for the Macedonian cry that they may know where to offer themselves. It is ours to see that they hear first and clearest the call of God (Isa. 6:8) or they will most assuredly hear and heed the call of the world. Perhaps no other one point needs more emphasis in our teaching than the fact that whatever business in life they may follow, they can there obey the exhortation, "Whatsoever ye do, do it heartily as unto the Lord and not unto men; for YE SERVE THE LORD CHRIST."—From Missions in the Sunday School, by Mrs. F. E. Bullock.

PROGRESS IN RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

The Sunday School at the Mt. Olivet Church in Rockingham County, Va., is doing splendid work under the leadership of its able superintendent, Miss Annie Laurie Hensley. Three organized classes are doing good work. The school is planning on an all-year Sunday school this year, and it is encouraging to note how many of our churches have resolved to have "Evergreen Sunday Schools" this winter. The Christian Endeavor work at Mt. Olivet is also very encouraging. One Sunday evening a month is devoted to study of missions, and a monthly offering is taken to further the missionary cause.

Whistler's Chapel Sunday School in the Valley of Virginia reports progress. Mr. R. L. Ettel, of Quicksburg, is the superintendent, and Mr. A. N. Green, president of the Christian Endeavor Society.

Two new Christian Endeavor Societies have been organized recently in the Alabama Conference. Rev. G. H. Veazy, assisted in the organization of the Society at the Christian Church, of which he is the pastor. The membership is twenty-three, with Mr. Barnes Jennings as president. The pastor writes that the young people are very much interested in the work of the Christian Endeavor Society and of the Sunday School as well. The Pleasant Grove Christian Endeavor Society was organized recently, with the assistance of Miss Birma Dollar, of the Rock Stand Society. Twenty-five charter members were enrolled, with G. Hugh Pool as President, and Miss Maggie Edge as Secretary. Miss Dollar and several members from Rock Stand also visited the Noon Day Society recently.

DR. HARPER CALLED TO DO A GREAT WORK

In the election of Dr. W. A. Harper as head of the Christian Education Board, the recent American Christian Convention put this big modern movement in aggressive hands. The work of this board includes the organization and administration of Sunday school work, Christian Endeavor work, as well as the college work, and opens up a wide field. We understand that Dr. Harper has not yet accepted the chairmanship as the work would require a greater part of his time. We understand that great pressure is being brought to bear upon Dr. Harper to undertake the work as it is realized that if he undertakes the work he will carry it to success.

This is the first time any church has organized its whole educational work into one organization.

We take it for granted that Dr. Harper could continue to head Elon College, otherwise we feel that he should very thoroughly consider the matter before taking up the work.—Burlington Daily News, October 30, 1922.

CHILD'S HOUR

THE ECONOMY OF PREPARATION

By ROSA NAOMI SCOTT

My Dear Hazel:

You may think I am just a fussy old aunt when I beg you to go on to college. I know you are saying, because you lost one year that you can't go on with your class, and that you hate to give up your perfectly splendid position.

Losing your class is not a real excuse to an independent young business woman, so we'll pass that argument up as dismissed from court. The nib of the thing is your desire for money to spend for things you want right now.

Let's bring in a pair of scales and weigh the situation.

First, the college education side on the scales. All college women have a broader outlook on life than the girl who has not. Put that in first. General, you say, but true nevertheless. Next put the fact that 90 per cent of all positions of trust and honor in America are going to the young man and woman who has a college diploma. A much better position than one you can "work up to" in the business world awaits you after you receive your diploma.

The scale for the negative is going up so high I think we had better put in something for your not going to college.

Your swell "little suit" that will be a "darling" this fall, and a hat you have been "dippy" about for a month, since you saw it at Madame's. Put them in.

See! These scales weigh for life, and the hat and suit don't bring down that "good position after your diploma." A suit and hat don't weigh very much in lifetime scales.

That stunning new frock! A little evening gown—a vision! Dearest of all perhaps, the things you just want that are always coming up, you know." Dump them in, too. Well! The college side still has it.

I know what you are feeling, Hazel, whether you are putting it into words or not. You are feeling that the sense of being well-dressed means more to a girl than just the material of dress. That there is a subtle power for personality in being daintily and properly tricked out.

I grant you this. We'll put it in the scales, for intangible things are often the most precious. We'll put in, too, pleasures that come to a girl when she is dressed to her own fancy. You will attract friends, and you will be more attractive, in your pretty clothes, than you could be without them.

There is one other thing that I'm going to put over against the college education. It is financial independence. See! It is the first thing of weight we have put in the scale for your staying out of college. It does bring the scale down a bit nearer balancing.

In the college side I am putting financial independence, tagged, "Slightly belated, but sure to come." Now, the college side has gone way down again.

You will have a period of strict economy, no "darling" suits nor "stunning" frocks. And you will have some "managing to do." But this won't really endanger your future independence. It insures it. The habit of a few years of close, intelligent economy will be worth more to you than the pleasure of feeling prettily dressed. It will give you more poise of personality ultimately than wearing the "latest" right now.

But we will put in your side of the scale against the college degree, "Nagging economies." Also, "Giving-up-pleasures-t h a t-have-expense-attached-to-them." These do bring down your side quite a bit.

In the side for college I drop, "Companionships-o n-equal-t e r m s-with-girls-situated-a s-I-am."

There! That brings down the scale for the college

After all, the precious thing in social life, is feeling on an agreeably equality without associates, and working for large aims creates delightful teamwork, in study and play. In fact the joys of a college girl's life are the kind that enrich life.

One other thing I am putting in, Hazel, for college, and it weighs tremendously. It is the fact that you equip yourself by a college education to be a better wife and mother.

Educating a girl always means educating, indirectly, many other people. A mother who has had the training of learning-to-think, is better able to cope with the endless problems of child-rearing. She is a better guide for her children, in their studies, and preparation for life.

If you do not marry, and are at all the normal woman that I feel sure you are going to remain, you will be thrown with young people and children, and your educational influence will still be a potent one on those who follow closely after you.

Great state and life problems are being thrust upon women for complete or partial solution. To say you are interested in nothing but your personal problems, would insult you. Your community needs your diploma; the state, the church—and the world need it.

Your little candle throws a far beam, Hazel, child You are living in an upheaved, but marvelous age. Cool-headed thinking is more needed just now, from women, than ever before. The home has to be set up again, and none but you girls can give it its old dear honor.

The church needs the service of women who are capable of dealing wisely with international snarls on foreign fields, and of taking a wide, true view of home affairs.

This is a long letter. Please don't call it a preachy one. You are so important, I have to beg you to make yourself as big and wisely trained as this college course promises.

Girls, just now, lead the world. You are more charming, vivacious, alert, delightfully companionable than girls have ever been. And you are so immensely more influential. Girls influence boys, and home, and business, more even than women. The future seems to lie in the cusp of your rose-fleshed young hand.

It should be a capably trained hand. The scale honestly tip to the college degree.

Would I be unforgivably slangy, if I said, "Go to it!"—Onward.

FATHER, TAKE MY HAND.

The way is dark, my Father! Cloud on cloud

Is gathering quickly o'er my head and loud
The thunders roar above me. See, I stand
Like one bewildered! Father, take my hand,
And through the gloom

Lead safely home
Thy child.

The day goes fast, my Father! and the night
Is drawing darkly down. My faithless sight
Sees ghostly visions: fears, a spectral band,
Encompass me. O Father! take my hand,

And from the night
Lead up to light
Thy child!

The way is long, my Father! and my soul
Longs for the rest and quiet of the goal.
While yet I journey through this weary land,
Keep me from wandering. Father, take my hand;

Quickly and straight
Lead to heaven's gate
Thy child!

The throng is great, my Father! Many a doubt

And fear and danger compass me about,
And faces oppress me sore. I cannot stand
Or go alone. O Father! take my hand,
And through the throng
Lead safe along
Thy child.

The cross is heavy, Father I have borne
It long, and still do bear it. Let my worn
And fainting spirit rise to that blest land
Where crowns are given. Father, take my hand;
And, reaching down,
Lead to the crown
Thy child.

—ANON.

Did you ever read the twenty-third Psalm as the Indians have it? Well, it is interesting and we commend it to our readers as worth reading. We have many languages, but thought is about the same in all. When the twenty-third Psalm is written in the Indian language and then translated, you will see that it takes other English words to express the thought, and yet the thought thus expressed is practically the same in ideas. Read it for yourself. The following is a translation of the 23rd Psalm, which can easily be interpreted in sign language:

The Great Father above is a Shepherd Chief. I am His, and with Him I want not.

He throws out to me a rope, and He draws me, and He draws me to where the grass is green and the water not dangerous and I eat and lie down satisfied.

Sometimes my heart is very weak and falls down, but He lifts it up again and draws me into a good road. His name is Wonderful.

Some time, it may be very soon, it may be longer, it may be long, long, time, He will draw me into a place between the mountains. It is dark, there, but I will not draw back. I will be afraid not, for it is there between these mountains that the Shepherd Chief will meet me, and the hunger I have felt in my heart through this life will be satisfied. Sometimes He makes the love rope into a whip, but afterwards He gives me a staff to lean on.

He spreads a table before me with all kinds of food. He puts His hands upon my head, and all the "tired" is gone. My cup He fills till it runs over.

What I tell you is true, I lie not. These roads that are away ahead will stay with me through this life, and afterward I will go to live in the "Big Tepee" and sit down with Shepherd Chief forever.—Missions.

THE RELIGION OF HAITI

From the discovery of Haiti by Columbus until the present time, the Roman Catholic has been the church of Haiti. In the year 1511, the first priest was sent over by the Spaniards, after which others came, and the organization figured much in the nation's life. However, we are told, that owing to the unsettled conditions both in the church and in the nation, from the year 1535 to 1815, there existed no hierarchy in the Roman Church, and the religious life suffered in consequence. During this period the enormous influx of slaves from Africa, bringing with them their cult known as Vaudouism, militated quite naturally against the progress of Christianity.

This form of religion has as its basis the belief in a being upon whom depends all events which take place in the world. This being is symbolized in the form of a non-venomous serpent under whose auspices the devotees assemble themselves. When assembled, their worship takes the form of a festival, presided over by a priest and priestess called "Papaloi" and "Mamaloi," meaning High Priest and High Priestess. At times these are also called "King" and "Queen," then again "Master" and "Mistress," and not infrequently by the more touching appellation "Papa" and "Mama," which is a shortening of the terms "Papaloi" and "Mamaloi."

This Priest and Priestess are declared to be inspired of God and to have right to unlimited respect. They are mediators between the worshippers and their serpent god, and they render all the decisions of their god in matters pertaining to their prayers. They also decide if the serpent agrees to admit a candidate into their society and what duties each will perform when once admitted. They receive the gifts of the people offered in devotion to god and they proclaim whether the god is favorably inclined or not to their petitions.

These Vaudoux assemblies are characterized by great and prolonged ceremonies. First, they include the offering up of a living sacrifice which, after being immolated, is cooked and eaten. Ordinarily it is a white goat or a white cock, but sometimes the gravity of the petition demands the sacrifice of a human child. It also includes excessive drinking of rum and the engagement in the "Tom Tom dance," which ends ordinarily in the way such dances have been described in previous articles.

It is the custom of the Priest and Priestess to wear the most gorgeous costume possible to procure. I have seen one which had been taken from a priest who, among the bandits, was captured by one of our men. It was woven solid with beads and made up in all sorts of characters and figures presenting the most gorgeous vestment I ever saw. When robed in this the Priest makes such a gorgeous appearance that he creates awe among the people and they feared him as a God.

When any of these festivities are advertised, the people assemble from every direction, far and near, to participate in their holy rites. Only members, however, are permitted to attend. No curious stranger can penetrate therein, and when they are satisfied that none are present, the ceremonies begin by a profound adoration of the serpent and by protesting their faithfulness and submission to his judgment. After other ceremonies, in which they declare their affections and devotions, they offer prayers, which cover the whole range of human desire as well as their urgent needs. While these petitions are being offered the High Priest sits in deep thought, when suddenly the spirit seizes him and he takes hold of the box in which the serpent is confined and sits it on the ground. Then the queen jumps upon it and immediately becomes filled with the spirit of their god. This spirit is manifested by a trembling of the body until her entire frame goes into convulsions and then she speaks by oracle. What she has to say may be according to her wishes or caprice. When she is through, all gather around the serpent and make their offerings, from which the expense of the meeting is defrayed and needy members assisted.

Following this, custom demands that solemn appeals and affirmation be declared afresh. Thereupon they enter into extended ceremonies, the character of which is described as being of the most heathenish and superstitious. Augmented with liquors, which the adepts do not spare, they lapse into an excited and wild orgy. Deprived of their senses, they tear their clothes, bite their own flesh, fall to the ground, and roll into one another's embrace, and then they drag one another to some dark place where in obscurity there are said to be scenes of the most disgusting prostitution. It is thus their festivity ends.

The Vaudoux Priest lives a most depraved life and practices every possible abuse and oppression. Out of great fear for him the women yield to any of his proposals, because he has the power of a ruler and upon any who may decline his demands he may order death; so that the answer is that it is the order of the Vaudoux and they are obliged to yield or suffer that penalty.

This concludes a brief description of Vaudouism as it has been known in Africa, giving us some idea of the type of religion which the slaves brought with them from that continent to Haiti. I have dwelt upon it for the sake of giving the reader some idea of what the Roman Catholic Church and all others must have had to contend with all these years in the propagation of the Christian religion. Practices ingrained in the nature of a race cannot be thrown off by the wave of the hand nor by the adoption of a law. It takes time, education and the passing of generations to efface from the lives of the people such base and corrupt customs as practices existed quite prevalently here; but the Vaudoux is now an unlawful performance, and so far as is known no engagements are held. The American influence is strongly helpful in this and Christianity through the churches operates with less difficulty and with greater influence than before. By this influence probably it will be but a few years when there will be seen but little trace of the Vaudoux at all. Having lost much of the original form of worship and come under the influence of true Christianity, though not entirely void of their Vaudoux tendencies, they claim Christianity as their religion.

As to the Protestant missions in Haiti we have the Wesleyan Methodist, Episcopal, Baptist and Seventh Day Adventist. In 1835 the Wesleyans were introduced at Cape Haitien. Their organizations are still few in numbers but they have quite a following at centers. In 1861 the Episcopal Church began its work here and it has extended quite rapidly until now it has thirty-five missions in various parts of the Republic, one orphanage, several schools, and a theological school for the training of their native ministers. For the past five years this work has been directed by Dr. A. R. Lloyd, who is among the most scholarly of the Episcopal clergy, a noble character with a very strong personality and untiring in his devotion and service for the advancement of the kingdom of God in Haitien hearts.

The Seventh Day Adventist and the Baptist are doing a good work in a very limited way.

From all appearances the Haitien takes his religion seriously. With little else in his country to attract his attention or to give him soul-food, conformity to religious rites means a great deal to him, and thus he is very earnest in all its claims upon him. Sabbath and All Saints' Days are most sacred holidays and they are observed by the closing of business places and by attending church. No personal sacrifice is too great for him to make and any compliance seems to be a pleasure. Divine services are held beginning at 4:00 o'clock each Sabbath morning and are continued until about 11:00. It is interesting to note that from the early hour of three the streets are full of pedestrians on their way to the church. Take a peep into the Cathedral during Mass and it is packed and jammed to the very limit and often hundreds are turned away. Step over to the other churches (and there are many) and there is found the same conditions. They are doing that which is so important to them—participating in devotion.

But some one asks, what is the effect of all this? In reply it must be said that it is hard to state the extent that religious conformity enters into any soul to raise it from what it is to what it ought to be. However, we have noted this, that the happiness and contentment produced by unfettered Christianity is nothing less than remarkable.

Upon being converted their belief in Jesus and His power to free them from evil is such a complete emancipation from the thralls of superstition that in many instances it is about the same as apostolic exorcism accompanied by manifestations such as we read of in the Scriptures; and when they realize that they are free they cannot help from being happy. It may be conceded that, to some extent, they may still believe in the power of the witch and the potency of the evil spirit; but then, they also believe that the Saviour is able to save and does deliver them from the power which the sorcerer exercises, as well as from the malignant power of the spirits, and this is their joy. A colporter has said, "In a country where evil men are objects of terror because of the supernatural power they are supposed to possess, where trees and plants are dwelling places of malevolent spirits, where the dead return to trouble the living and where there is not one ray of hope from all these fears, the liberty brought to a soul by believing in the Lord Jesus Christ, is a very real thing indeed. The sorcerer acknowledges that their spells have no power over the Protestants."

Backward as Haiti is, and heathenish as it may have been, it is said that Bible readers, those who profess to live by its principles, are the most responsible and dependable among them. These are they who occupy positions of responsibility and trust and it matters not what faults they may retain, they represent the best and no doubt are the ones who will be the making of new Haiti.

One of the greatest difficulties in the way of the moral uplift and Christianization of Haiti lies in its marriage customs. The law requires civil marriage, but the conditions to be complied with in securing the license and completing the ceremony are so exacting that there are a great many who cannot possibly meet them. The Church, of course, regards marriage as a sacred rite and, although performed by civil authorities, it must be performed by them that it may be right in the sight of God.

This undoubtedly makes marriage observance lax and often prohibitive to the poor. However, the Church hopes for the time to come when marriage will obtain everywhere and be regarded by the people as a rite in their Christian faith which they cannot ignore.

There is certainly lots to be done for this country and we naturally wonder what the next hundred years will bring forth. We equip and send missionaries to Africa, China and other places, and overlook this little piece of Africa, may we say, right at our door. Haiti has been left very largely to itself to work out its own salvation, and during the last hundred years of missionary effort the little contact it has had with the white people has not, on the whole, helped it very far toward what the great enlightened world could wish it to be. Until Christ comes to it, it will remain in superstition. But when He does come, it will be lifted up to the power and the life that He gives—that power which is found, not within the fear of demons, but in intelligence, righteousness, honesty, justice, mercy, peace, love and joy in the Holy Spirit.

H. E. ROUNTREE.

Christian Orphanage

THANKSGIVING APPEAL

DEAR FRIENDS:

The Christian Orphanage has in its care ninety little children—thirty five now on the waiting list, pleading for a home. We expect to have one hundred in our care by Christmas. We have room for fifty more if we had the funds to care for them. To meet the crying need we want to raise $10,000.00 by the end of the year, through Thanksgiving offerings and special personal contributions. We have faith enough in our folks to believe they will do it.

I want to ask each church to try the plan of setting a goal for the Thanksgiving offering this year. I find when we set a goal, and after spending days of toil and sleepless nights in trying to reach it, and finally do, it brings us much happiness. We have never really set a goal since we have been in this work and failed to reach it; but it has taken our best efforts more than one time to do it.

Set your goal high enough to take some real effort and sacrifice to reach it. It will do your church good and will bring you happiness.

When you make up your offering this year just look at the following picture. Consider your little children gathered around your fireside in your happy home, blessed with a father's care and advice and a mother's love to fill their lives with joy, started on life's pathway under the most favorable conditions to become useful citizens and to be a blessing to society and true followers of our Divine Master.

Now, turn your thoughts for a few minutes from this happy and most beautiful picture and look at the many little helpless, unfortunate fatherless children out in the cold, ill-clad, hungry and shivering with no happy home they can call their own. No bright comfortable fireside to bring cheer to their little lives. No good warm bed to sleep on and all these blessings will be denied them unless you help to make it possible to give them a home.

Your child is safely entwined with the tenderest cords of love in your heart and when grown will be able to confront the battle of life with a clear mind, a strong, healthy body, and a saving knowledge of and love for Jesus our Lord and Master.

These other children are out in the dark, perhaps peering through your well lighted windows and wishing for some of the comforts of life, but these will be denied them unless you help make it possible for them.

God has said to us, visit the widows and fatherless in their affliction. When you contribute to help support the Christian Orphanage you are reaching through this institution the real object of charity.

Let this Thanksgiving appeal reach your heart, untie your purse strings, and make at least a small sacrifice that the little children may be fed.

Think of the ninety children in our care. Think of the many needy ones appealing to us for a home. Think of the winter with its cold, chilly days and freezing nights, with all their shoes and winter clothing to buy. Think of the suffering you might help to relieve.

Can we afford to turn a deaf ear to the cry of the widows and orphans?

So give, my friends—in the name of the blessed Master who loved little children, and it is not His will for a single one of them to perish. Give and lay up treasures in Heaven.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Superintendent.

A CHURCH IN A PRISON.

Paul the Apostle must be regarded as the organizer of the first Christian Church that is recorded as having been formed in a prison. The story of its foundation may be read in Acts 16. There are religious services in many prisons today, in the Christian lands at least, although organized churches are exceptional. An organized church, to be known as "the First Christian Church in Prison," has been formed in the United States Penitentiary at Atlanta, Ga., in which all the religious communions of Atlanta have a share in the ministrations. As an outgrowth of this church, a Prison Sunday School is maintained, each of the city churches supplying their quota of teachers. The work began two years ago with a little class of six members. Soon it had over 160; then it was that the decision was made to organize it as a Church. At a recent service, 23 men made confession of faith and dedicated their lives to Christian service.

This development of prison religious work is carried on with the approval of the Department of Justice in Washington. It is revolutionizing the moral and spiritual life of the Penitentiary community. Further, we may be assured that it is strengthening all the participating local churches that have helped to build up the movement. It is the best kind of home missionary work, and there is no reason why other churches should not follow the example of the Atlanta congregations in practical and loving interpretation of the teachings of Jesus, Who made a special plea to His followers to remember the prisoner.

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

One person may take two or more subscriptions and have his time extended. All persons in arrears as much as one year should pay up, and then aid the solicitor in securing a premium. The name table indicates the time to which subscription is paid.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

Address—"The Christian Sun," 1536' East Broad Street, Richmond, Virginia.

A PRAYER.

O Lord, who hast called us into thine own family, help us to spend our lives, as becometh the children of God, in the activities of love, in the study of opportunity, in the employment of our Father's presence and the brotherhood of Christ. Open our eyes to see the deeper meanings of the life about us. Arm us against impatience. Consider our infirmities which keep us from overcoming and remember our needs from hour to hour. So let good will like thine rule in our hearts and may our love in action make some contribution toward the completion of thy purpose among men. Amen.—Isaac O. Rankin.

THE SEEKER AFTER GOD.

The man who finds not God in his own heart, will find Him nowhere; and he who finds Him there, will find Him everywhere. The reason why men are so often disappointed in their search for God, is that they do not look for Him first of all where He should chiefly be sought—in the manifestations He makes of Himself in their own hearts and minds.—David Swing.

HONEY FROM THE COMB.

It takes the conceit all out of us when we remember that we are in the making, and not made. Who shall be equal to this work half done! Come Thou to our help, O God, or our humility will come too near despair.—I. Edwardson.

The earth is the place where God is ever seeking to grow souls. Its true wealth is soul wealth, its true honor is spiritual honor, its one and only valuable product is human character.—Percy C. Ainsworth.

Love is not pretty sentiment, a weak emotion, love is the most compelling force in the universe; love is tender, but love is also stern; love seeks, but love also shuns; love is passionate, persuasive, but also love is pure.—Alexander MacColl.

Those are great days for us when some word of truth comes with awakening power; comes as a kindly light, as a heavenly call, as a loving touch.—Charles G. Ames.

To be a Christian is simply to be a man who is in course of "making good," who is in right relations with his whole surroundings because his heart and will are right with God.—F. A. Burroughs.

Beyond question, it must be a rule—how much space and thought given in our private devotions to our fellow-men, in all the variety of their necessities, so much do we heed and honor the second part of Christ's two-fold commandment.—F. D. Huntington.

Our relationship to God creates our value to our fellow-men. Our value to our fellow-men is our test of our relationship to God.—G. Campbell Morgan.

OBITUARY

Departed this life at his home in Burlington, N. C., October 28, 1922, Mr. Eli Winfield Wilkins, aged 69 years, 4 months and one day. His wife and three children survive him.

He was a member of Union Christian Church and had been for some years. He was prompt in attendance when health permitted.

He had been in failing health for some time; and when the end came he quietly fell asleep to await the resurrection morning.

The funeral services were conducted at Union Christian Church by the writer, assisted by Dr. G. O. Lankford. The attendance at the funeral was large, bespeaking the esteem in which the deceased was held. The interment was in the Union Ridge Church Cemetery.

To Jesus Christ, the healer of broken hearts, we commend those who mourn.
P. H. FLEMING.

DIED

Mrs. Martha Sarah Boyett, beloved wife of Mr. W. H. Boyett, while visiting her son, Willie, at Hopewell, Va., on Sunday afternoon at two o'clock, October 29, 1922. Aged, 52 years, 8 months and 20 days. She was a true and faithful member of Antioch Christian Church and will be greatly missed in her home and church. She leaves a devoted husband, 7 children; 4 sons, 3 daughters, 4 grand-children, 2 sisters, Mrs. Mary E.

Eure, of Gates Co., N. C., and Mrs. J. E. Pierce, of Windsor, Va., and many friends. Her funeral services were conducted by her pastor at her home and her remains were laid to rest in the Church Cemetery. God bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

MITCHELL RIPPY

On October 18, 1922, at 5 o'clock p. m., Mr. William A. Mitchell and Miss Annie Rippy were united in the bonds of Holy matrimony at the residence of the officiating minister, Rev. C. B. Riddle, Burlington, N. C. The ceremony was witnessed by a few friends and relatives of the contracting parties.

Mr. Mitchell is a young business man of Burlington, and at present is engaged in the mercantile business. He is a man of fine character and excellent qualities, and his friends are numbered by the hundreds.

Mrs. Mitchell is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Rippy, of Altamahaw.

She was educated at Elon College and is a young woman of most excellent character, and pleasing disposition. For many years she has been active in church work and has always taken the leading part in every good undertaking of her community. These young people begin life with a most promising outlook and with the best wishes of their great host of friends.

Immediately after the ceremony they went to their new home in Burlington where a sumptuous supper had been prepared awaiting their arrival.

May the Father's benediction rest upon this new home and bless these young people.

Jews Now For Christ—

Possibly many people do not realize the progress that is being made in Christianizing the Jews. Read this, taken from the Herald and Presbyter: "Dr. Davis W. Lusk, Presbyterial Superintendent of Newark Presbytery, finds that 224,000 Jews became Christians and came into the Christian Churches during the nineteenth century. It is said that 'this is a greater result than for any other class of people in any other part of the world's mission field; that many have become ministers of the gospel, as 600 Hebrew Christians are ministering to Gentile congregations, or are engaged in the work of foreign mission.' God has power by His Holy Spirit of reaching Jewish hearts to-day as in early days he reached the hearts of such eminent Jews as James and Peter and John and Paul and made them powerful in leading souls to faith and salvation in Christ."—Exchange.

Japan's Sincere Reforms—

On the authority of one of the most prominent missionaries of our church, it can be stated that Japan truly is doing her utmost to turn away from a militaristic policy more towards peace and quietness.

The Washington treaties have all been ratified. Let us remember how the United States senate juggled with some of them, and how certain other treaties never were ratified at all.

The withdrawal from Shantung has been carried out in good faith. Japan has further manifested her attitude by withdrawing troops from Hankow, and by refusing to send troops to Chientao in spite of the raid by Chinese bandits on the Japanese consulate.

Orders have been issued by the Kato cabinet for all the troops in Siberia to be back home before the ice closes navigation in October.

Scrapping of the capital ships was in progress even before the treaties were fully ratified. Attacks made in the United States against Japan's building of auxiliary cruisers have been answered satisfactorily by Premier Kato, who shows that less than the usual number are being built, according to the demands made by capital ships.

The Japanese cabinet is planning a cut in the army of 56,000 men and in army finances of 75,000,000 yen. The naval cut will be 40,000,000 yen.

These facts are highly significant of a radical change of attitude on the part of the Japanese government. While Premier Kato has served with the army and has its point of view, he has also seen the handwriting on the wall, and none but a militarist could have made such sweeping alterations in public policy.

The Duty of the Hour.—

At the time of this writing the press dispatches bring harrowing pictures of the exodus of the Greek population from Thrace—an exodus ordered by England, France, and Italy in meeting the demands of Kemel Pasha in behalf of the Nationalist Turkish government centered at Angora.

The Turk is again in Europe. He is not there by conquest. He is there by force of circumstances. He has in his hand a flaming torch. He threatens to bring about a conflagration that would envelope both Europe and Asia. He is able to carry out his threat, and the three nations know it. In protecting their own selfish interests they have allowed him, who was flat on his back in 1918, to run at large, regather his wasted forces, and to defy all Europe. To save their selfish interests, the three nations have surrendered to Kemel Pasha. They have subscribed to nearly every one of his haughty and imperious demands. They have hog tied the Greek population of Thrace and decreed that it should vanish from a part of the country where they had been established for hundreds of years—all that the Turk may rule once more in Europe.

It should be said for England that her surrender to the Turk is an experience bitterer than any other in the long line of Anglo-Saxon history. The Turk could have been prevented from re-entering Europe, the awful massacres at Smyrna could have been prevented, and the whole ugly blot on the civilized government of the world would never have appeared had England had the backing of France and Italy. At a critical hour England found France giving its moral sympathy, even its practical support, to the Turk, who fought with Germany against France and was completely defeated in 1918. Italy also was found wanting. England to save the world—and to save herself—seemed compelled, with no cheering word from this country, to undergo the bitter experience of surrendering to the Turk in the disposition of the whole Turkish question.

Why was England found in such humiliating straits? One thing can be said in answer to this question. If the victorious nations in the World War had addressed themselves to the actualization of the great ideals which lay at the heart of the mighty struggle, if they had carried out the principles and provisions of the historic treaties, if they had kept banished the form of secret diplomacy, if they had subordinated material interests to the welfare of struggling, aspiring humanities, the surrender to the Turk would not have been possible.

The sin of the United States in decreeing a policy of self-isolation in a crucial and in almost defiantly refusing to enter a League of Nations is mixed up with this awful debacle which brings reproach to Christian civilization and reinstates the Turk in Europe to continue his slaughter of Armenians and Greeks. Mr. Lloyd-George a few days before the downfall of his ministry openly stated that the Turk had slain two million Armenians and Greeks since 1914. Our country cannot evade its responsibility by crying "America first!" and leaving the nations of Europe to wallow in helplessness and blood.

The blood of the slaughtered ones in the Near East, the sufferings of that long trek of evicted Greeks, the whole harvest of horrors which must grow from the reinstatement of the Turk in Europe—all are sending out a piteous appeal to the civilized nations. It comes to our own country, boasting of her wealth, power, and selfish isolation, and it must be heeded by the pouring out of our material treasures to stay the starvation and insure the protection of the many victims of the Turk's rapacious cruelty. We cannot afford to be either dilatory or parsimonious in the performance of this Christian duty. We are a Christian nation in profession, and there is a mighty army which is Christian in practice.

But the performance of our duty to Eastern sufferers involves something more than merely loosening our purse strings. It goes down into principles and policies. The United States is not helpless in forestalling international tragedies and quelling threatened tumults. We must begin at the beginning by making America one of a real brotherhood of nations and assuming the responsibilities of such a relationship. We do not see how this nation can stay out of a League of Nations and stand guiltless before God and a civilized humanity. There must be also the utterance of a note of authority justified by the overwhelming power that we have gained among the nations.

This is no appeal for war. This is no rattling of the saber. The Christian Churches are for peace and are consistently and unchangeably opposed to war. Such indifference as we are now showing as a country in an hour which demands the deepest interest and practical action is bound to bring war to which we are so strongly opposed. In the interest not only of the sufferers in Asia and Europe but of that peace which the Christian Church is set to establish we demand for our country a plain, practical co-operation in those plans and policies which alone can bring peace to the world.

What we mean is better expressed in the words of Dr. James L. Barton, who recently said: "Secretary Hughes in his discussion of the message from Bishop Cannon gives the impression that the church people of this country are trying to stampede the United States into war in the Near East. If a belief that the United States should be a member of a League of Nations means war, if the use of the moral influence of the United States in the support of England and France in keeping the tide of barbarism from sweeping into Europe means war, if an official part in the forthcoming conference with eight other nations over the Near East and the settlement of the relations of Western nations to Turkey means war, then it is probably true that the majority of the people of the United States, including the membership of the Churches, are breathing out threatening and slaughter."—Christian Advocate (Nash.)

NOTES-PERSONALS

I saw the other day a red iron pillar intended for a fire alarm, and on it was a printed card with the words, "Not in Use." That is the sign which ought to be put on many professing Christians.—"Marks of the Master."

Bro. T. J. Haskins of our Mount Auburn church, though well beyond his four score years, and not in robust health, is still much interested in the welfare of the Church. Mount Auburn, of which Dr. D. A. Long is pastor, is one of the leading churches in the Southern Christian Convention.

A short time ago a Salvation Army captain was preaching in Hyde Park, London, when a man in the crowd interrupted him. "We haven't anything agin Jesus of Nazareth," said the interrupter, "but we have something agin you Christians, because you ain't up to sample."—S. S. Chronicle.

Rev. J. P. Barrett, editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, changes his address from Reidsville, N. C. to Henderson, N. C., having resigned the pastoral charge of the Reidsville Christian church and accepted a call to the pastorate of the Henderson Christian church. All personal correspondence and letters pertaining to the editorial work of THE CHRISTIAN SUN should now be addressed to him at Henderson, N. C.

A recent writer says that we are all dwarfs because only a small portion of our brain area is developed. We might become tenfold greater and wiser if we could develop all our resources. It would seem absurd to speak of a jellyfish flying through the air and discerning distant objects on the horizon. And yet the living cells in the jellyfish are like the living cells in the eagle. Men often remain jellyfish when they might become eagles of power.—Rev. E. Y. Mullins, D. D.

Rev. M. W. Butler, a Southern man, but now pastor of the Christian church at Muncie, Ind., has been called to succeed Dr. Barrett as pastor of the Christian church at Reidsville, N. C. The call was unanimous and it is earnestly desired that he may accept, but his decision at this writing (Nov. 8th) is not yet made known. Bro. Butler has been, and still is doing a good work for the Muncie, Ind., Christian Church, but many of his brethren would like to see him again located in the South, where he is much loved and honored by his brethren in the Lord.

I would remind you that for climbers of the Alps the only way of safety is to fasten each other together with a rope, and for you, too, a great way of safety is to join yourself to some one else. Ask your companion if he will allow you to draw a little strength from him. He will most likely tell you in his next breath that is just what he is wanting himself, and you two together will be stronger than if you had been alone. Christianity is a social thing. That is why Christ instituted the Christian Church and the sacraments, that there might be a bond of union between all of his followers.—Henry Drummond.

During the memorable retreat of the French from Moscow the soldiers froze to death by the hundreds. It is said that at night they gathered together such combustible material as they could find and made a fire. Then, gathered around it in circles as closely as possible, they lay down to sleep. In the morning, after a bitter night, those in the outer circles would be found dead—frozen to death. They were too far away from the source of heat. So the Christian's hope of life, of strength, of help in the warfare of life, lies in constant communion with Christ, and with those who love him. To be on the border of worldliness may be, and often is fatal.—Saturday Evening Post.

It must be gratifying to Dr. W. S. Long and his many friends to know that appreciation of his life-work is so high and so general. The News and Observer, and the Greensboro News, on the occasion of his eighty third birthday, published highly appreciative articles of his life and work in North Carolina. Then on Monday, Oct. 23, 1922, the ministers of Chapel Hill and fourteen of the professors of the University spent an hour or more with him to join in the celebration of his eighty-third birthday. The occasion was a very pleasant one. It must be a real pleasure to a man who looks back upon so many years well spent in the best interests of the world to receive such expressions of love and appreciation as was shown to Dr. Long. We rejoice with him in his well earned honors. God bless the man and his work, and may he have many years yet in which to labor.

During the latter part of October, Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, Fancy Gap, Va., assisted Rev. R. L. Williamson in a series of meetings in the Henderson (N. C.) Christian Church, in which a fine influence prevailed, greatly strengthening the spiritual life of the church membership and adding to the membership some 13 persons. In a private note, Bro. Williamson says the church seems much revived, giving a bright outlook for the church. Bro. Bradshaw is developing well as a preacher. His work in the Henderson meeting was much appreciated. He is now in charge of our Mountain Work in Carroll County, Va., and we shall expect good fruitage from his labors there. Let our brethren remember him and occasionally at least write to him some word of good cheer as he is laboring where he will rarely see need the fellowship of his brethren. Bro. Williamson, a Christian minister, and naturally he will liamson, after four years of faithful service with the Henderson church, retires and becomes pastor of the Lee County Pastorate, with headquarters at Sanford, N. C.

Soon after the death of Dr. A. H. Morrill, some writer in the Herald of Gospel Liberty said:

"Probably he was not a deep student at the close of his life, and did not keep in immediate touch with the currents of modern thought."

In a later issue of The Herald, Lucy M. Rowell, Newton Junction, N. H., made the following comment on that criticism of Dr. Morrill, and we feel that it is but justice to the memory of that most worthy and highly accomplished man that it should be given to our people. In replying, Miss Rowell says:

Those of us that were privileged to know Dr. Morrill intimately during the last years of his life, know that he was a "deep student" and that he did "keep in immediate touch with the currents of modern thought" almost to the last minute. It was not because he was ignorant of modern thought that he was not affected by it, but because he refused to accept it as truth. Dr. Morrill's faith was too firmly fixed on the eternal verities to be "tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine." In these days when so many professed Christians are departing from the old-time teachings of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the loss to the world of a man like Dr. Morrill is inestimable.

Of the twenty-one thousand Jews who have returned to Palestine under the Zionist movement, according to an exchange, about twenty-one thousand of them would be delighted if they could return to the United States and to the other countries from which they migrated to the land of their forefathers. We do not know just how much of this is true, but it sounds reasonable. It is stated that most of them have gone to Palestine under the impression that a plot of ground was waiting for each one of them. That is not the case. And, furthermore, the inhabitants of Palestine who are not Jews are objecting to the coming of these Jews and are making it as hard as they can for them. It is difficult for them to get employment, and they get little for their work when they do get work to do or produce crops or raise cattle. They find it very hard to live on what they make after living in this and other countries where they earned much more than they can earn in Palestine.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

Judging from all reports, the late session of the American Christian Convention at Burlington made a fine impression upon the people of that city, and in a general way on the South. There were many strong men and cultured women in the body and it is believed that the Burlington Convention did much for the cause of the Christian Church throughout the country. Its new plan of organization, it is sincerely hoped and believed, will do much for the upbuilding of its work. The chairman of the Commission on Organization, Rev. W. P. Minton, Foreign Mission Secretary, Dayton, Ohio, is to be congratulated on the success of the work of his commission. Of course there were some changes made in the outlines of the work as presented by that commission, and yet that report shaped the way for the new organization. Many others, most worthy men, have tried in other days to do the same thing and failed, not in their work, for they did a splendid piece of work in their efforts, but failed through the inability of the church to accept the fruits of their labor.

A dull mirror can dim the fairest sunshine, and grimy windows can make a room dark on the most golden day. Here we touch our understanding of why it is so disastrous for men and women, as so many of us often and foolishly do, to stay away from church and communion, or come only on those infrequent occasions when the mood moves us and all conditions favor. We imagine that because not every time when we come to church does any conspicuous thing seem to happen, not every time do we hear any message that stirs us, nor receive from the prayers and hymns and music any conscious thrill, therefore our attendance generally means little, and we can well afford to hold it lightly. We think the same thing of our prayers, because so often they are not winged, and of our Bible reading, because that, too, does not always open any wells of inspiration. But the value of faithfulness in worship and in prayer is that it keeps the soul's mirror burnished and the windows clear. It keeps us expectantly prepared, and when the presence of the Master comes to us in some whispered new suggestion in our hearts, comes to us at some familiar place of our business dealing and our ordinary routine with the flash of a new perception of what our life's ambitions may be if we would let Him be their Lord, our souls are sensitive to perceive in that which common men might call a passing fancy, the real presence of the living Lord.—The Southern Churchman.

THE TRAIL OF THE KINGDOM.

By C. B. RIDDLE.

The International Convention of the World League Against Alcoholism will meet in Toronto, Canada, November 24-29, 1922. This League is supported and participated in by every nation of the world, and is gaining each year in prominence and in the scope of its work.

The Baptist denomination in the United States is making a most heroic effort in behalf of its Seventy-five Million Campaign. In every Convention, Association, church and from all of its scores of publications the appeal is given in behalf of that denomination's greatest financial undertaking.

The Chinese Recorder is the name of the publication issued by the Christian missions of China. This paper is independent, Christian in spirit and deals with the religious conditions of China. Its circulation is mainly in China among missionaries. The publication is not any propaganda, is not run by any mission board and does not beg for money.

The American Red Cross has adopted a budget for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, showing a reduction of $2,735.975 as compared with the expenditures of last year. The reduction in the cost of domestic operations represents a saving in the overhead expense and decreased personnel through the combining of divisional units.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has released some interesting and heartening news in regard to its mission work. That denomination's work in India is taking on more than a formal church gathering. The matter of education, agriculture, medicine and various things to help the people of the dark continent are being fostered and featured by the Mission Board.

Announcement has just been made from the office of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America concerning the "Week of Prayer for the Churches." This time this week is to be from Sunday, January 7, to Saturday, January 13. For a number of years this week has been observed by practically all the religious denominations and has grown in interest and vital concern.

The recent Bankers' Convention held in New York is said to be the highest order of any session of its kind ever held. Instead of the usual business formalities and discussions some of the highest Christian principles and ethical codes were written into the records of that great body of financiers. The deliberations were permeated with a brother to brother spirit and a world wide vision for the development of all peoples of the world. The spirit of Christ is becoming the dominant thing in world business.

About one year ago a group of men organized a "Back to the Bible Bureau" which Bureau sends out a press service consisting of suitable Bible verses to be printed in the daily press, and especially at the head of the newspaper editorials. A great many papers are using these Bible quotations and the Bureau reports that the popularity and work is increasing. The Bureau's recent statement shows that over 1200 publications in the United States are using the Bible verses in addition to a number of publications in foreign countries.

For two or three weeks press reports have been coming from the Near East telling of the great tragedies there. This week there is being released in a number of religious publications the actual story of what is taking place among the Turks in recent weeks. Bishop James Cannon, Jr., returned to New York a few days ago and we quote from his own words something of the tragedy in Smyrna: "Mothers with little children in their arms shot down as a sort of sport of the Turkish soldiers. Hundreds and thousands of other mothers and children driven on to the docks; thousands put into barges and carried out and drowned in the ocean; orders coming from Kemal that for three days these refugees could stay on the docks, and at the end of these three days, if they had not been taken off, all of them, mothers, girls, boys, babies, would be driven into the desert and left to die—except the pretty girls, they . . . Smyrna was set on fire and burned to ashes; people fleeing before the scorching flames; Armenians being maimed and killed in most horrible ways; homes being entered, the women assaulted, the men killed and left on the floor, and so on and on, one horror piled upon another, and through all this only one nation in the world uttered one word of protest or undertook to stop this horrible thing, and that was Great Britain."

Dr. Sherwood Eddy has just recently given to the public his new book, "Facing the Crisis." One chapter of that book deals with the thought embodied in this question: "Is Our Religion Worth Exporting?" After we admit the great evils being carried on in this country, selfish isolation, and being far from the ideal, Dr. Eddy makes a splendid comparison between the Christian religion and the religions of the heathen world. Dr. Eddy points out that America is going to an awakening modern world which is facing the crisis of national, racial, industrial or religious upheaval. He declares that we have a whole gospel and must be ready to apply it to the whole of life in these awakening lands everywhere.

On the Sunday after Armistice Day, November 12, many churches will pay a tribute of gratitude and honor to those who laid down their lives in the World War. Their courage, their unselfishness, their spirit of sacrifice, are a heritage that time can never dim. How shall we honor them most? By dedicating ourselves anew to the task of ending war. These men whom we remember on Armistice Day did not glorify war. They loathed and hated it. Multitudes of them went forth to their death inspired by the hope that they were doing something to rid the world, once for all, of the horror of war. To such men we bring a tribute of real praise only as "we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion."

CHURCH FOLKS AND AFFAIRS.

American Methodists, North and South, are seeking a fund of $40,000,000.00 for the support of their aged ministers and, under certain conditions, their families. This denomination has raised about one half of this fund and the outlook is bright for the raising of the remainder.

President Harding believes in the eighteenth amendment and believes that it has come to stay. Recently he said to the members of the Allied Christian Societies Engaged in Community Work, to whom he gave a reception as the climax of their two day conference in Washington, that no government is worthy of the name if it does not attempt to enforce its laws. The President declared that we are better off for the eighteenth amendment and that it had come to stay. "I do not think that we will ever depart from it," he said.

The Washington Park Community Church, in a residential section of Denver, Col., is composed of eleven denominations, nine of which are represented on the Official Board. The great effort of this church is to organize the leisure time of the young people. To this end this program includes story-telling and game hours, clubs for the children, Boy Scouts and Camp Fire Girls, an open forum, the only moving pictures in the community—well censored and of the best type obtainable—mission study and service classes, summer camps and a branch library.

DONATIONS FOR THE MEBANE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

Again we acknowledge with a grateful heart the following offerings:

Sidney Crabtree	$ 1.00
Robert McCauley	1.00
James Henderson	1.00
Alfred Perry	2.00
David Neville	1.00
D. L. Neville	1.00
W. H. Etheredge	5.00

Total $12.00

Grand total received from friends including the above is $328.00 for which we are very grateful, and pray God's blessings upon these dear friends. Now won't many more of our dear friends let us acknowledge the receipt of your donation to help this little struggling church, who desires to have a comfortable house of worship just like yours.

We are now in debt about $900. Won't you help us?

The memorial window that is put in our church building was done by the Fowler family, the grandchildren of Rev. Thomas Fowler, deceased. We are truly grateful for all the help we have received. Send check to pastor—P. T. KLAPP, Elon College, N. C.

FIELD NEWS.

We held our last quarterly meeting for this conference year at Pleasant Hill, November, 4th. Delegates to conference and church officers for the ensuing year were elected. The conference apportionments were raised in full.

The deacons in their report had this to say: "Members in good fellowship and the most prosperous Sunday School in the history of the church, also a very industrious Ladies' Aid Society." The services at Pleasant Hill are well attended and there is a deep interest in the work. Special attention is being given just now to music and a juvenile choir has been recently organized.

We have received twenty one members into church fellowship at this church during the conference year, and nearly all of them are young people.

There are many enquiries as to the publication of the Annual for this year. We have been waiting quite a while to give the information to brethren who have written to this office for information. So far we are unable to say where or when the Annual will be published, but we hope our people will be patient a little longer, as we believe it is the purpose of the Publication Committee to give out very soon what they will do in the matter. As soon as we have information we will give it out to the public.

CRITICISING THE CHURCH.

It is all too common in these days of unrest to put the blame of many things on the Church. No doubt but that the human organization known as the Church has its defects and makes its mistakes, but even then the Church is the greatest single force in the world of human affairs---it stands for more than any other organization and it does far more than any other body for the saving of the people and for their highest interests in all lines that are good and for the permanent uplift of the people.

Along the line of benevolence the Church of Christ is the most powerful institution in the world. We make bold to say that no other organization among men even attempts to do the work that the Church is doing, and yet now and then the Church is unfavorably compared with this or that institution, and this comparison is made in a way to discredit the life and activity of the Church of Christ, and yet it is unjustly done. The Church is not all we wish it might be, but it is away and far better than any other organization of which we have knowledge.

If you will make an honest comparison of the work of the Church you will easily find it to lead away ahead of any other organization in the world in its acts of benevolence and in its helpfulness to humanity. Let us do a little estimating of the facts in the case. The first place, the equipment of the Church requires more money than any other organization with which we are acquainted. We presume the simple matter of Church buildings in the United States costs more than all the other benevolent institutions in this country. Other organizations have their homes, the places where they meet for their work, but who would expect in a true investigation to find all the buildings of benevolent organizations in the same territory to equal by half the cost of the Church buildings and other equipments necessary in their work? We do not think that any man will be so brave as to undertake such an investigation.

Let us take the hospitals the Church has built and is building, and we believe they will outstrip all other hospitals in point of value to humanity as well as in the cost of production and maintainance, especially if we except such hospitals as are built and maintained by taxation, and these should be excepted because the Christian people are taxed quite as truly for the building and support of these as well other people. In a fair estimate the Church will be found to do quite as much for these as other helpful sources. Then again, the Church has much in the benevolence of the various organizations, as truly as the organizations themselves have. While in this way the Church is doing a great deal to help these various agencies of benevolence, apart from what the Church itself is doing, it is yet true, if we be not greatly mistaken, that the members of these organizations, who are not Church members, give for less to the Church.

Let us take the support of the gospel in all of the churches, and we shall find a pile of money used in this way with which no other organization in the country can compete. We are supporting thousands of ministers of the gospel and other Christian workers, where most of the other organizations are not doing anything. Take the ministers of the gospel of all the denominations of our country, and we dare say that what the churches give annually to this cause is far greater than all the other institutions in the same territory---far greater, and yet how many there are who try to ridicule the Church because it is so stingy and close-fisted, and yet not another organization in all the country can compare with it at all in what it gives to a like ministry even in their own work.

Take the matter of orphan asylums, and the church is away ahead of all the other organizations in the land in its contributions to the support of this charity, than which there is possibly not one more worthy or more fruitful in good works. There are a few orphan asylums supported by benevolent institutions of the world, but where will they stand when compared with the institutions of the same class which the Church has built or is building and supporting? Indeed the Church has no cause to fear honest comparison of its work in this line with the work of the same class in other institutions. If you do not believe us, try it---investigate the facts and let the world know what you find.

Take the work of the building and supporting of colleges, and the Church is away ahead of all other institutions in this line of work, especially if we do not include as belonging to non-Church institutions such as are supported by taxation, and this should not be included and for the same reason as given above, viz.: The Church people pay taxes and so help to support state institutions just as truly as do the non-Church people and hence these institutions should not be included in either, the Church institutions and the non-Church institutions.

Take the matter of Foreign Missions, and again we shall see the Church far outstrip all the other benevolent agencies, for there is no institution in human society outside of the Church which makes any pretension to doing Foreign Missionary work. We should not be surprised if in any fair comparison the Church will be found spending more money for the work of the salvation of the heathen peoples in the world than all the benevolent institutions outside of the Church are spending. We do not affirm this as a fact, but we dare to believe it is true.

Now throwing in all of the benevolent and philanthropic work of the Church, not included in the above list, and we truly believe that all of that class of work done by outside organizations in our country would seem like a mole hill beside a mountain, if accurately and closely estimated and placed the one beside the other. The Church is not doing all it ought to do, nor all it can do, but it is away ahead of all the other benevolent and philanthropic agencies in the amount of work it does for the uplift of humanity. We therefore trust we shall hear no more of the Church being a back number and not doing its part of this kind of work, as compared with the work being done by the institutions not in the Church. Till this can be shown to be untrue, we hope we shall not hear men of the worldly institutions criticising the Church of Christ for not doing its part.

IS THE UNITED STATES NOW THE RICHEST COUNTRY IN THE WORLD?

Our country has for quite a while been greatly afflicted with the disease we will call "boastitis"---we have fancied that we had reached the pinnacle of the uppermost place in the world's greatness, and may be it has, and if so, we ought not to say too much about it, lest it increase our disease and make us seem puny and less virile than we really are.

One of the points of our boasting is based on the fact that we consider ourselves the greatest nation in the world. That may be true, and there are some things which would seem to indicate that such is a fact, we have much that ought to claim our attention before we brag much on our own excellence. We have seen a fine dish for the dinner table, which because of a fly in its contents no one was willing to be helped to the good thing in the dish. So it may be that although we may be the richest nation on the globe, yet are we quite sure that there is no fly in the dish?

We may be first in wealth, in education, in inventive genius in the ways of modern life, in great engineering feats, but what of our moral and religious life? If sin is dominating all of these points of excellence, then there is "a fly" in the dish, and the sooner we awake to remove this "fly", the sooner we may get on the road to real prosperity and attain a prosperity which has a sure foundation indeed and in truth. The Lord yet has His hand on the United States, and somewhere and somehow and sometime, He will call on us to make restitution and put ourselves right before Him as well as before the world.

Mr. Thomas W. Lamont, in an article in The Christian Herald for Oct. 28, 1922, puts forth some facts, which in themselves are staggering, although from one standpoint in our favor as a nation. It is true that we lost much in the late world war as a nation. It cost us billions of dollars and thousands of our noble men and women, who answering the call of the country, went to the front and laid down their lives, the supreme price, that we might be a free people? Now in the face of all of that we lost, we are confronted with the staggering fact that as a nation we have been thrust into the place of world leadership and yet we do not seem willing to assume the responsibilities which such a place entails, and here we are, standing in the place of leadership, and yet not willing to take the place that is ours by right of providential leadings. What shall we do about it? Shall we take a back seat and give the reins of leadership into the hands of men who have not won it, or shall we bravely in the name and fear of God step to the front, put our hands upon the throttle of humanity and go forth to the noblest destiny to which any nations has been summoned in modern times? Twenty of the nations of the world are now indebted to us to such an alarming extent that it seems quite out of the question to expect them to pay what they owe to us in many years. Here are the facts:

Armenia owes us	$ 11,959,917
Austria owes us	24,055,708
Belgium owes us	377,564,298
Cuba owes us	8,147,000
Czecho-Slovakia owes us	91,169,834
Esthonia owes us	13,999,145
Finland owes us	8,281,926
France owes us	3,358,104,093
Great Britain owes us	4,166,318,358
Greece owes us	15,000,000
Hungary owes us	1,685,836
Italy owes us	1,648,034,050
Latvia owes us	5,132,287
Liberia owes us	26,000
Luthinia owes us	4,981,628
Nicaragua owes us	170,585
Poland owes us	135,620,583
Rcumania owes us	36,128,404
Russia owes us	192,601,297
Serbia owes us	51,153,160

Making a total of $10,150,154,196

Is not that a world's "night mare?" Who can conceive of such a debt? More than ten billions, and how can it be paid? Many believe that the various countries never can pay it, but so far Uncle Sam says it must be paid, and as a matter of simple justice, he is doubtless right, but, looking at it from the standpoint of the brotherhood of nations, what can we do? Being what is called a Christian nation, shall we not do unto others as we would have others do unto us? And if we would, and especially as we now become the world's big brother, must we not, as a Christian nation, maintain Christian ideals toward our debtors, and treat them just as we would wish to be treated if our positions were reversed, and we owed them far more than we could? Some day our positions may be reversed and in such a case would it not be fine to have behind our need such a plea as having forgiven them, we might feel all the freer to ask mercy at their hands?

Even though we stand at the head, and not at the foot of the nations of the world, ought we not to act the part of a big brother and help them in the hour of distress. Suppose we refuse to cancel these debts and hold that these nations must come forward and pay to the very last mite, then what shall we gain? We shall gain the notoriety of demanding more at the hands of our fellows than they can pay, and what will be our gain? Well, doubtless we shall gain the contempt of our more unfortunate brothers. In that event, we shall not only gain the dislike of the unfortunate, but we shall get to ourselves a bad name, and still not get the money due to us. That being true, it seems that common sense, to say nothing of Christianity, would say do the noble part and give our brethren financial freedom.

It is true that Great Britain has just paid $50,000,000 in interest to our country, but think of what money it takes from her needy self to pay our government even the interest on the $4,166,318,358, and when she has paid that vast sum, her debt to us is just what it was before she paid the interest, except that the interest is paid for the time, but the principal has not been reduced at all. If ever the world needed a big Christian brother, it is now, and if there was ever a nation that was able to play the part of a big brother to the suffering and over-burdened nations of the world it is now. What shall we do about it?

We are not an expert in finance and so we do not take the stand for the cancellation of these debts from the standpoint of a financier, but from the standpoint of a Christian people, what shall we do?

ARE HEAVEN'S WINDOWS CLOSED? IF SO WHY?

If they are, they have been closed by men and women who cannot afford to reap the fruits of their own labors. Rev. Paul Rader, now President of The Christian and Missionary Alliance, puts the situation up to us this way:

More and more we see that the windows of heaven are closed against the prayer of the Church of God on earth because its members have robbed God in tithes and offerings. They have rich clothing, automobiles, silverware, beautiful furniture, delights of the palate, delights of art and culture, and have taken the greater part of their money to satisfy their own desires. The mistaken Church has tried to satisfy itself by what money could buy instead of sacrificial giving to God. We have gone on with ornate edifices, putting hundreds of thousands into brick and mortar just to please the eyes of men; we have gone on with costly expenditures until God's heart is grieved as He looks upon us. We are in that age revealed in Revelation where we are saying, "We are rich and have need of nothing." God cries back to the Church, "You are poor and naked and weak," and challenges us to buy of Him gold tried in the fire—to go through testings for Him and sacrifice for Jesus' sake.

We pray that as a local Church He will not have this to say of us and to us. We would love to get from under such a ban as that and stand before the eye of our God, real givers, with sacrifice and prayer and intercession behind our gifts. We want to pour out for the Christ who poured out for us, who made Himself poor and of no reputation—spit upon and despised, that we, through His poverty might become rich.

We pray for cleansing fire to go through our hearts so that as we bring our gifts to God they will not be defiled like those of Ananias and Sapphira. Say not "we are sacrificing," when God knows we are holding back "Part of the Price." God helps us not to lie to the Holy Ghost, but to bring into Him our money and our lives, our time, that He may be able to pour out such a blessing that there will not be room enough to contain it.

Oh, if there is to be a revival in the Body of Christ there will have to be new sacrifice and a new poverty program. We ought to be giving Him the extra, like Mary pouring the alabaster box of her savings upon His head. He still sits over against the treasury. "Is He pleased with your offerings to Him?"

Mr. Rader is, we believe, right. A new sacrifice has to be made, not so much to reach and influence God to give the Church a real revival, as to reach man and influence him to give God his whole heart and life in simple obedience. The revival is even now ready, but something must be done to open the windows of Heaven—the windows we have closed by our unfaithfulness must be opened by our faithfulness in obedience to God. There is no other way, so far as we understand the matter.

Let us before we go to prayer think a little of what Mr. Rader says, as to what we have done with money that belonged to God. Instead of paying what we own to Him we have spent in more or less largely in gratifying our own selfish lusts. This must be given up, or we must go on without a revival. We hold that a revival can be had when we, the people of God, are willing to pay for it—pay for it by making the sacrifice which the Lord our God sees we need to make by dedicating our all to Him. It was a law in the olden time that when the sacrifice begun then the songs of praise of God began.

Get your Bible and turn to 2 Chron. 29:27, and read:

"And Hezekiah commanded to offer the burnt offering upon the altar. And when the burnt offering began, the song of the Lord began also with the trumpets, and with the instruments ordained by David, King of Israel"

Notice that when the burnt offering began, the song of the Lord began. When there was no sacrifice, there was no song. May it not be that the reason that we have no revival of a wide sweeping character is the fact we have not made the offerings we should have made unto the Lord our God. Read again Mr. Rader's burning message and let us see that we render unto the Lord what is due unto Him, and then we may expect a revival that will mean a new day to the Church.

THE WHISKEY BUSINESS.

The late Ex-Gov. J. Frank Hanly, who was one of the bravest and strongest men of our nation, fought the liquor traffic to the end of his life and died in the harness in an automobile accident only a few months ago. In one of his great speeches against the liquor traffic, he said:

I understand a gentleman, speaking from this platform the other night, declared the liquor traffic is moral and right. If it is, then it is moral to despoil the helpless, to wrong the innocent; if it is, then murder is moral; if it is, then it is moral to disinherit babyhood, to wrong childhood in its conception, to wound it in its mother's bosom. Men and women, hear me! if this thing be moral, then there is no crime beneath the stars. And here stands the accused traffic—stands before you to be judged. There is no defense for it.

There is not an alienist in all the land who will testify for him, not a lover of humanity anywhere who will speak in defense of his terrible work. Strong drink is the foe of every man, woman and child, within the limits of our great country.

I bring before you to-day this awful business as the destroyer of the manhood of men, as the curse of the womanhood of women, and the blight of innocent childhood. The liquor-seller stands before the American public, yea, before the world, a criminal. He stands at the bar of public opinion to be judged. The blood upon his knotted hands is a terrible witness against him. The whole world knows he is guilty, and knows it better than any one else. He knows it so well that he dares not to defend himself. There is no plea for his terrible work of destruction in human society. Instead of a plea in denial of his guilt, he begs for mercy—begs for mercy at the hands of the men and women he so dreadfully wrongs.

He even presumes to ask for acquittal, while he is yet looking in the face of children whose life his accursed business has ruined. Yea, he even begs for mercy that he may get one more chance to blight the life and hope of children yet unborn. The liquor dealer is the capital criminal of his race, indeed of all races. Thank God he has been arrested for his crimes against humanity and that to-day he is held at bay by the indignation of the men and women of earth who in the interest of our civilization, have spoken at the ballot box and have said to him: "Thus far, but no further"—the free men and the noble women of our land have decreed his death. This is a great day for our nation—it has by the ballot freed itself from the rum power. For a thousand years he has dared society to strike him down. He has presumed on the long indulgence of a patient and a burden-bearing people, but to-day they are standing as a mighty phalanx against the awful evil.

For a thousand years this dare-devil criminal has stood, debauching the people, and when they have cried for mercy, he has laughed them to scorn and ruin. For a thousand years this criminal has entangled his knotted fingers in the heart strings of the motherhood of our land and dared to continue his work of destruction. Now that we have him imprisoned, we shall deny him the mercy for so long a time he denied to his dying victims.

For a thousand years he has bruised the mute lips of the babyhood of our land, yea of all lands, and now we who stand for right give to him a mercy which he does not deserve, which he never did deserve, and which never can make him a better citizen? Nay, this is our land, and this is the day of its redemption from the rum craze. This is a fair land, and we must maintain its freedom from this curse. Men and women, boys and girls, let us stand shoulder to shoulder and dare this arch-enemy of the human family and never let him again clutch our throats to our own destruction. May God make us men and women who are not afraid to stand for the right and against the wrong.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

"Did you have a good time?" "I had a good time." "We certainly did have a good time." The emphasis here rests on time. Let us shift the question and ask, "Do you want a good eternity?" "Is a good eternity of greater importance than a good time?" The writer of Hebrews expresses it in this way, "choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season." The word does not deny that sin gives pleasure; it simply declares that it is for a season. The old theory of living was by seasons. Food products were produced in seasons, used in seasons, and the people waited till another season for fruits, melons, garden vegetables, and even meats; but transportation, cold storage, preserving methods, have filled the year and all countries with the products of all soils, all climes, and all seasons. Men have found out that luxuries as well as bare necessities may be enjoyed over a larger period than a season.

Production is not the only value in the labor of mankind; use is a prime consideration. Life is the time for developing Christian character, but eternity is the limitless period for the enjoyment of that life. "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world;" but "eternal life" is the goal of Christian effort. "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his soul; or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Duration adds value to experience. "Train up a child in the way in which he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." One value of the diamond is its durability. Material values are limited to time; spiritual values continue with eternity. The pleasures of sin are for a season; the pleasures of righteousness last forever.

These lines are not written in opposition to a good time in the right way; but to suggest the folly of placing so much emphasis upon what is usually called a good time. It is evanescent. It is barren of permanent good. It is illusory. It is deceptive. It shuts the door to better things. It is habit forming. It is insinuating. It is better to render good service than to have a good time. A doctor does not have a good time. A trained nurse does not have a good time. A mother does not have a good time. A horse-shoer does not have a good time. But they all render good service. Be careful of what is meant by a good time. A good eternity is the great thing to desire and strive after. "The Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering." Jesus did not have a good time; but He shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied. He has entered upon a glorious eternity; and those who suffer with Him, shall reign with Him in His glory.

No sane person can object to a good time; but a good time that does not have the hope of a good eternity is "pleasure for a season." It is the difference between a German mark and a gold coin. It is mirage on the sea of life, a horizon that continues to disappoint the unsatisfied soul. Which will it be, a good time, or a good eternity?"

ELON LETTER.

Dr. Charles E. Jefferson has recently published another of his illuminating volumes on "Under Twenty." It is a series of sermons to "big boys and girls." If you are like the writer, you will not stop reading it once you have begun. The book is published by The Fleming H. Revell Co., Rev. C. B. Riddle, Burlington, N. C., will order it for you.

Dr. Jefferson is not only a successful author, but he is a rare preacher. He could have succeeded in almost any line of work. Why did he become a minister?

He was recently asked this question and he gave five answers. Here they are:

Because he had the gift of public speech.

Because he had the additional gifts of imparting knowledge, of molding character, of moral enthusiasm, and of moral discernment.

A desultory glance reveals that these are great qualities and further that a minister needs them, not that a man may not succeed without any one of them, but that their combination will produce a life of fruitful service for Christ.

The gift of public speech. The minister does not have to be an orator, but oratory helps, and the great ministries of history have been rendered by men gripping their audiences by their eloquence. Jefferson is such a man.

The gift of imparting knowledge. This is a prime quality of ministerial success. So many times a minister knows his subject, but is unable to get his knowledge across to his people. Jesus was known as a successful teacher. He taught with authority, as one who knew His subject in terms of His listener's needs and so He could tell what He knew. A man with a stuttering mind has no place in the ministry.

The gift of molding character. A man who has not this gift had better watch the character of his associates. A man who can force his viewpoint on others, however, can trust himself anywhere. A minister must necessarily deal with all classes and situations. Unless a man can mold his associate rather than be molded by them, he had better not enter the ministry.

The gift of moral enthusiasm. The wrath which Jesus felt at the perversion of His Father's house. If a man's soul can be satisfied with sin round about him, he is not called to the ministry. A man who does not grow enthusiastic for the improvement of this life is doomed to fail in the ministry.

The gift of moral discernment. The ability to separate the things that vitally enter into life from the temporary expedients of an age. In every generation there are social ills that hurt and which time will remove. There are other issues that strike deep into the human heart and such evils recur in every age. The difference perhaps may be connoted in the distinction between immorality and sin. Sin is a constant problem, but immorality varies from age to age. There are churches, for example, which today regard it as immoral to have a musical instrument. I can remember when the first time a violin was used in a certain Christian church, several prominent members took immediate leave, because the violin was associated with the bar-room and low life. The banjo has hardly yet redeemed itself. The Y. M. C. A. today is greatly criticized for permitting certain kinds of games—innocent in themselves, but of uncanny association. The really great preacher can distinguish the temporary and passing elements of the mores from the distinctive items involving character and so leading to sin.

I trust that many who read these lines will take new courage in their God-given work and that some who are hesitating about their call from God will see in their possession of these five sterling qualities added reasons for yielding their lives to the Spirit's leadership.—W. A. HARPER.

FILLING THE RANKS.*

It is superfluous to say that the ranks seem to need filling. With thirty thousand vacant pulpits in all denominations of our country; with hundreds of vacant pulpits in our own Christian Church; with momentous problems that the pulpit and it alone can solve; with moral issues that involve civilization itself, which moral issues can only be faced effectually in the light of pulpit teaching, there is no need I say of emphasizing the fact that the ranks seem to need filling. And the world is heart hungry for that which the pulpit alone can give.

But God and not man is the Sovereign of the universe. So God and not man must be looked to to fill the ranks and thus save civilization and redeem mankind. We cannot get beyond His words to Moses, "I kill and I make alive; I wound and I heal; neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand." (Deut. 32:39). He buildeth and He teareth down and there is none to hinder. God and not man rules the universe, and shapes the destiny of human character, rough hew it how we may.

Having said this it is but trite and commonplace to add that God calls whom He will to fill up the ranks and preach His gospel. Possibly this explains why we do not find in the Scripture of the Old or New Testaments that any two persons were called alike to preach the gospel. They were called according to the conditions that surrounded them and the personality of the one called. If man had done the calling and had his way he would have laid down hard and fixed rules. We could then have told exactly how to fill the ranks. But God laid down for Himself no rules or tests, and so from the call of Moses and Samuel to that of Paul and Timothy you find no two preachers called alike. The call to each and all preachers is different.

But God uses men and not angels to reach men. He may employ angels as His messengers, but He never entrusts His angels even to an alien foe or an unfriendly audience. John is not the only man entrusted with the message, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord; make His paths straight." The path of angels, as well as that of the Son of God, must be made straight and requires a herald before the Lord entrusts the feet of His holy ones to walk therein. The way of approach for the divine messenger must be cleared by human hands. God calls preachers and fills up the ranks; but man must clarify the atmosphere so that youth may hear and rightly interpret the voice of God. God's voice called the youthful Samuel, but it found him in the house of the Lord and in proximity to Eli who must prepare the lad to properly interpret the voice. God called Paul out of an open sky and sent him forth to suffer great things for his Lord. But that is not the first nor the last time that an awakened and guilty conscience has brought blindness to the eye and dizziness to the head of a gross offender against the Lord's Christ. For Saul had consented unto the death of the martyr Stephen and had been in an atmosphere sin changed and to a degree clarified with, the light and heat of preaching the gospel of the Son of God. Out of what sort of atmosphere, what kind of environment does God call and create preachers? Since no two preachers are called alike, since God does not repeat Himself, can any condition be defined or pointed out from which preachers are called and created. Now I am not saying out of what conditions the rank should be filled. I shall endeavor to discover conditions out of which up till now God seems to have filled the ranks. Not seeking to tell you how we in future may fill the ranks; but how God in the past seems to have filled the ranks. I believe it is possible to define such a condition.

Observation leads me to affirm that the ranks of the ministry are filled from conditions created by three sorts of persons: First. Persons with a passion for souls. Wherever you find a person consumed with a passion for the salvation of those about him, and finds his highest joy in spending and being spent that others may know and receive Christ as personal Savior, you will find God calling men to preach in that person's wake. That person consumed with such a passion may be either parent, teacher, or preacher. The avocation of such a person matters little; the vocation is soul-winning. When God fills a soul with flame that burns and blazes and blisters, God is preparing such a one to lead others into the gospel ministry. There was in the flesh till recently amongst us a preacher, a pastor, a devout man of God. Many here would know his name. His ministry was not long. He was late beginning and was cut down in middle life; yet from that one man's field of labor, and that by no means a large parish, there came in his life time eleven preachers, some of them among the ablest and best we have in our Christian ranks today. Here now. A growing scarcity of preachers you say; None to fill up the ranks you fear? Then why did God call eleven active, able worthy ministers from this man's field of service? I say it was because this man had a passion, was literally consumed with a flame, for soul winning. Do not understand me to indicate that this man was a fanatic, a fool or even a crank.

The thought that controlled him, and the passion that inflamed him as he faced his congregation was that here are souls induring the way from death to life and I must by God's help show them that way. He believed with his whole life that a preacher's business was soul winning, and youths sprang up under his preaching who are giving their lives now to fill up the ranks. George Eliot says that a thing well done makes that thing seem worth doing. This man was used of God so markedly and so successfully for soul winning that the youth of his congregation deemed it worth while to give their lives to this sort of work. Henry Ward Beecher was once asked what feeling was uppermost in his mind when he faced his congregation on Sunday morning. His reply was "A feeling of compassion," a heart hunger to reach with the gospel lives that are lost, ruined and undone without it. What feeling is uppermost in many of our minds when we face our congregations on Sunday? Is it not one of anxiety about our subject, or of fear that we will not laudably handle it? Does a passion to reach the unreached and save the unsaved to our Lord's Christ consume us? It may be that every pastor cannot have this passion. Possibly God neither so ordains nor directs. I am neither justifying nor condemning. I am seeking to find and point out the nature of conditions under which God seems to call preachers and sends them forth to fill up the ranks.

But it may be inquired what creates or constitutes in one a passion like this? There are two constituent elements of such a passion. First,

A profound sense of sin and an abhorrence of all its evil and hideous consequences. If there is a dropping off in the number today of those entering the ministry you may attribute that deplorable fact, in a measure at least, to our loss, or partial paralysis, of the sense of the magnitude and hideousness of sin. It is a characteristic of our day to palliate sin, to apologize for or blink at evil. Sin does not look, or certainly is not pictured as dark, hideous and hateful in our day as it was in the days of Jonathan Edward for instance, or even in the days of our own youth. "In Cleveland, Ohio," said a pastor awhile ago, "I don't meet men who regard themselves as sinners." Is there not in your midst and in mine a decline in the sense of sin? We are talking of environment, of community betterment, of social uplift, of industrial and economic conditions. These we ought to have a regard for and must but not to leave the other unheeded or unsaid. Not long since I saw from a publisher that the outstanding and characteristic sermons of the year to the students of one of our great universities had been published in a book. I sent at once for the volume and read it through. From cover to cover I found not a sentence that would tell a sinner the way of eternal life and forgiveness of sins through the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. This may be called preaching, but is it really preaching? To me they were splendid lectures and essays on ethics, but I cannot see how they could carry conviction to a sinner's mind or call to repentance one erring soul. The first element in preaching is to reveal the individual to himself, show the individual preached to, who and what he is. This was the method Christ always used. He made the individual see his own sinful and sinning self and cry out for help. He made the blind man realize his blindness and then exclaim, "Oh thou son of David, have mercy on me." He made the non-believer see the folly of his way and cry out, "Oh Lord I do believe, help thou my unbelief." He made the doubter despise his skepticism and cry out, "My Lord and my God." When He preached His great sermon to the woman of Samaria at the well He first revealed that woman to herself. He next revealed to the woman what she might become. Then He revealed Himself to her. The Son of God had the deepest sense of sin and so could and did reveal that sense to others by showing them their lost estate. "There is more rejoicing among the angels of heaven" said He time and again, "over one sinner that repenteth than over ninety and nine that need no repentance. Jesus Christ at any rate believe in sin, in its evil and hideous consequences. This I say is one of the constituent elements in a passion for souls. Unless we believe there are lost souls, souls suffering under the blight and curse of sin we are not apt to have a passion for their salvation.

But there is a second element constituting a passion for souls, and that is a deep conviction that through the power of preaching this world is to be won to Christ. How can they believe without they hear and how can they hear without a preacher? cried Paul the preacher. Christianity is the religion of preaching. "With its preaching Christianity stands or fails," declared Forsyth. Daniel Webster in his famous Girard College speech inquire, "And where was Christianity ever received, where were its truths ever poured into the human heart, except in the track of the Christian ministry? Did we ever hear of an instance, does history record an instance, of any part of the globe Christianized by lay preachers, or lay teachers? Wherever Christianity has been carried, and wherever it has been taught by human agency, that agency was the agency of ministers of the Gospel." Christ chose preaching as the agency of winning the world to Him. "Ye shall be witnesses of me." Just that—witnesses of Christ—bearing testimony of Him. Preaching isn't a profession; it is a calling. "I can't come here," said Phillips Brooks to Harvard students, "and talk to you of the ministry as one of the professions. I must tell you it is the noblest and most glorious calling to which a man can give himself." No wonder ministers sprang up in the parish of Phillips Brooks, and wherever he wrought. He had a conviction that the righteousness and power of preaching were to save this wicked and sinful world, that witnessing for Christ is the apostles' business. It is not books; it is not schools; it is not plans and purposes and propaganda that are to save this world to Christ. These are agencies and serve their place. They equip the minister and help him. But only the gospel as it is preached can save. By the foolishness of preaching God sees fit to win this world to Him, says Paul. And His purpose shall be accomplished in the world. When a man goes forth into the world, a man sent of God as John was sent, to teach the righteousness of God and His power to save, then preachers follow in his train. God calls preachers, fills up the ranks, out of an atmosphere and conditions created by the one who holds to, and proclaims to the worlds convictions like that. Such convictions give to man or woman, teacher or pastor a passion for souls that provokes God to call preachers to His aid, until one can say of him as one said of David, "From day to day men came to David to help him, until there was a host like unto the host of God." Oh! men and brethren we need today a host to help us like unto the hosts of God. And God is able and willing to give them to us; but are we creating and supplying the conditions from which He can give them to us? If you wish to know why there is a falling off of the number of those entering the ministry is it not worth while to ask, First, if there is not a decreasing number of us pastors, teachers, fathers and mothers who have an abiding conviction that it pleases God by the foolishness of preaching to save this world to Him? There is a vast difference between foolish preaching and the foolishness of preaching. Man in his wisdom would never have chosen as simple and as commonplace thing as preaching to save a world from wickedness. But that which in the wisdom of man seems so simple and impotent, in the wisdom of God seems all-powerful and sufficient. And even the foolishness of God is wiser than men. I say again, then, that it is the power of the preached word that is to uplift this world and save it.

I deny that it is a passion for pay or a desire for salary on the part of those outside the ministry that prevents them from coming in. It may sometime be a passion for pay, and not for souls on the part of those who are in that prevents others from coming in. I know a certain preacher whose salary is a pittance and whose living is close and hard so far as this world's goods are concerned. But from one congregation of that poorly paid preacher four young men went to annual conference this year and asked for license to preach the gospel of the Son of God. Their pastor's poor salary and meager living did not deter them from helping fill up the ranks. This pastor believes with all his heart and soul that God Almighty is going to win this wicked world to the way of righteousness through the foolishness of preaching. And he creates in his church a condition from which God calls preachers.

Secondly. Where there are men and women, be they preachers, S. S. teachers, fathers, mothers, who have a passion for the Word of God, in their wake and about their doors preachers spring up and are called of God. Out of a passionate fondness for the Book, to know and to make known the glorious truths it teaches God calls preachers. Show me a mother who is passionately fond of her Bible, hugs it to her heart as the blessed hope and promise of God's Word to her and her family, and in all probability I can show you a preacher springing up among that mother's sons, or her neighbors sons. Show me a S. S. teacher who daily searches the Scriptures for in them he thinks are the words of eternal life, and I will likely show you a preacher or preachers being called out of that teacher's class to carry to dying men the message of light and of life. When the present D. Jowett, in some respects the world's greatest preacher, had finished school and had made preparation with his father's help and consent to enter the bar as a profession, Jowett met one day his old Sunday School teacher. "Jowett, what have you decided to follow in life as a profession?" Practice law, Sir," was the ready response. "Oh! my lad I had so much hoped and prayed you would enter the ministry." That sentence changed all Jowett's plans and turned him from the bar to the pulpit. That old Sunday school taught had a passion for the Word of God and had long prayer that young Jowett would go out to teach and preach its truths. He might not have been able to expound the Bible as eloquently as many; but by his love for it he created a condition out of which God raised up one of the greatest preachers of our day and of the world.

Show me a preacher who has a passion for the Book, a balanced, sane love, a devotion to the revealed will of God as taught in the Book and in all probability I will show you a congregation from which preachers are being called of God to go out into the world and proclaim the glad tidings of great joy.

The Pilgrims and Puritans came across the sea to build a new world upon the old Book. And whatever defects you may accuse them of in character or in doctrine, bear in mind the Pilgrims and Puritans gave our civilization the best we have. A passion for the Book may make fanatics of a few and bigots of some; but it has given the world more holy aspirations, more noble ambitions, more exalted ideals than have come from any other single source whatsoever. As some thinker has well said, "The Hebrews did not make a civilization but they made a Book which has sent other nations civilization." I recently read in a preacher's magazine that the Bible was too big and had too many contradictions and irreconcilable statements, and Christianity could not improve until it improved its Book. I want to say that the Bible has given us the best Christianity has to offer, and to speak of improving it in order to improve Christianity is like polishing boots in order that cattle may grow better hides, or painting the house to make the forest grow better trees. A passion for the Bible creates an atmosphere through which God's voice is heard and heeded in calling preachers. I know a pastor now in whose churches the list of ministerial students and candidates is not shortening but lengthening. The ranks are being filled in his field. One score of pastors as enamored of the Bible as he is, as passionately devoted to its study and exposition as he is, I say twenty preachers like that in our denomination would soon have such an atmosphere in the churches that our youths would hear the voice that calls and we should soon have the ranks filled with willing and ready workers.

I do not say show me a person with a passion for prayer and I will show you a person in whose wake God calls preachers. For I have never yet found a man or woman with a passion for the Bible and a passion for souls who did not have a passion for prayer. A devoted study of God begets devotion to the act and the fact of prayer. The Bible brings one to one's knees. A love of that Book sends one to one's closet. "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he would send laborers into His harvest." That was spoken to those who love the Word of God and the noble truths contained in that Word. Some one has rightly called the Bible a book of worship. A passion for the Bible involves a passion for prayer; for no man or woman can read the Bible with open heart and mind without becoming a person of prayer. A passion for the Word of God, a passion for prayer, out of this passion is created an atmosphere in which God calls and raises up for Himself preachers of truth and righteousness. Unless I am mistaken, if we will cultivate less love for many books and more love for the Book we will create a condition from which God will call laborers to fill up the ranks. The world today is heart hungry for the great truth taught in the Word of God.

And then I have observed a third sort of condition from which God calls preachers to fill up the ranks. And that is a passion for a great principle or principles. No wonder Jesus found ready disciples, willing apostles and great preachers in the wake and following of John the Baptist. Listen, "In those days came John preaching in the wilderness of Judea saying—Repent." John set Jerusalem and all Judea afire with that message. John was literally consumed with a passion for the eternal principle of Repentance. And from the clarified atmosphere of that preaching God raised up some of the most renowned preachers that ever spoke the words of life and truth. Show me a preacher, a parent or S. S. teacher with a devout passion for a holy and righteous principle and I will show you a congregation, a home or a S. S. from which the ranks are being filled, and recruits for Christian service are being enlisted. In the days of John Wesley God called preachers and filled up the ranks from the congregation he served and the communities in which he preached. He was enamored of an idea, consumed with a passion for a great principle. Where James O'Kelley, Barton W. Stone and Abner Jones preached God raised up for Himself preachers of the Word. These men did not believe in every sort of thing indifferently. They believed in something very definitely and devoutly. They had a passion for a great principle; a conviction that called them to heroic sacrifice. They believed that religious liberty meant something and that the principle of the ministry of all the followers of Christ under one name was a principle worth living and dying for. No wonder God called preachers to fill up the ranks where these men wrought. A great Japanese preacher recently said, "You should have nothing in your creed you would not be willing to die for."

My deep conviction is that in our day we are believing so many things vaguely and indefinitely that we have small mind for believing any specific thing very definitely. In our clamor for a democracy of creeds, freedom and liberty in forming and fixing our creed we have discounted any creed whatsoever. "Whoever believeth in me the works that I do shall he do also and greater works than these shall he do."

Works and deeds were to come out of creed. Some one said, "Show me your deeds and I care nothing for your creed." I want to say no man has ever yet done a great deed unless back of it was a still greater creed. And we have that immortal declaration "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him might not perish but have everlasting life." The person who had a creed that laid hold on Christ and would not let Him go should have life forever more. It is not having a creed that hurts. It is cramming your creed down somebody else's throat that chokes and kills. Only people who have faith, who believe, that is have a creed that ever undertake to remove mountains. A creed is as necessary to a safe course in life as a compass is necessary to navigating the sea successfully. Find a person with a passion for a great principle of righteousness, a virile fixed faith in a principle on which God's Kingdom is built up and you will find God filling up the ranks of ministers in the wake of that man. It was Thomas Carlyle I think who said that "The curse of our day consists in not making money." Would we not be nearer the mark in saying "That the curse in our day is in making money." We are consumed with the passion for possession. The men of our day whose names are most often on our lips are those who have piled up great possessions. Some writer said recently that we preachers in illustrating our sermons with successful men did not any longer use the names of great preachers and pulpit characters, but great business men and large money makers. The editors of our popular journals in printing the careers of successful men do not use preachers and teachers of righteousness; they hold up the great lights of the economic and commercial world. Here then we come face to face with the whole issue and find the cause of depleted ranks and falling off in ministerial candidates. We who are preachers, we who are parents, we who are teachers are not indulging and cultivating our passion for any great, sublime, outstanding principle of righteousness, persistency and power in God's plan of redeeming and saving this sinful race of men. We have abolished hell for less hurtful and painful fires; and so the heat and flame of any passion for man's saving seems to smoulder within us and die out for the want of proper fuel to keep it alive and aglow. The ranks of the ministry will be filled again, God will fill up the ranks, when the burdens of a world's sin shall again roll over on us, and we shall be consumed with a passion for man's salvation, through the preaching of the Word in the light and conviction of a great principle of righteousness by which God is redeeming this wayward world to Himself.

How shall we fill up the depleting ranks of our own ministry? First, by cultivating in ourselves a passion for saving souls, which passion is born and nurtured to fruition by an ever deepening sense of the hideousness of sin.

Second, by cultivating a passion for the Bible, as the Word of God and a greater devotion to this inspired Book. Third, by cultivating a passion for some great, outstanding, eternal, principle of truth and righteousness; for those who go through the world consumed with such passions as these create an atmosphere, produce a situation from which God calls His preachers and Himself fills up the ranks. Shall these whose memory we honor and name we cherish and memorialize this day, shall these have lived and died in vain. Nay verily, not if we love them good enough to seek in our preaching, in our teaching and in our living to create that condition out of which God called them to preach the gospel of the Son of God, the gospel that has made us what we are today and hope to be in the ages yet to be. God bless their dear names and hallow for us their sacred and noble lives.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

RESPONDING TO GOD'S CALL.

For my part I believe with all my heart that God called us into our Campaign for Men and Millions. We got that Movement by divine impulse. We did not get it from judgment, from reason, from philosophy, from cold discretion. We did not even get it primarily from what it was going to do for us. We got it from divine impulse. We got it from divine impression. We got it from revelation. There was clearly revealed to us an opportunity for great service, a privilege of expressing love and loyalty to all that God had given to and done for the Christian Church.

Under such impulse a great canvass was put on, a great battle for righteousness was fought and a great initial victory won. We were responding then to God's call. The question that deeply concerns me now is, Are we going to let the blessings of past days suffice, are we going to let the victory of the past become the defeat of the present?

It is true we cannot recreate the spirit of other days. But we can get into the spirit of God and His cause for this day. We must again fling ourselves upon the altar in sacrificial service to Him that His name may go forward. I agree with the brother who says: "In my own feeling I believe our present situation is a blessing from Almighty God to bring us back to preach on Missions, Orphans' Home, Ministerial Education and the other Kingdom interests which we have neglected. We have just preached cold facts and cold figures until we have lost sight of God, of suffering humanity, of orphan children, of sick people and old preachers. We have forgotten the use of education. I feel that we preachers can bring back that high and holy impulse for our great kingdom interests. We helped bring it in the projection of the Campaign and we can bring it back. We laid off our coats and we waded in then. We laid down our work to do that big thing in those glorious days and if we do so again now we will reap results. God's people have got to see the fight. They have to feel the thrill of battle and we have got to preach so as to make them feel it. There never was a Campaign that had so many points of appeal, thrilling appeals, as this Campaign. You and I must create a courageous optimism. We can talk about failure and fail, we can talk about victory and win it. The man with an optimistic spirit in his soul feels something within him and communicates that to his brethren. You can't whistle in a graveyard. Oh, my brethren, let us declare this great thing as a certainty and a certainty because we are, under God, going to make it a certainty. Let us gird our loins, count not the cost and go straight through to the end. If our pastors everywhere, our Sunday school teachers, our Missionary leaders will act in the light of these facts, we shall yet see our Christian cause everywhere renewed with a strange new life and with a power that comes down from above. We need simply to respond to God's call, to put Men and Millions on our prayer list and our preaching list and our teaching list and permeate the Movement with our intense devotion to God and to the work of the Kingdom with which He has entrusted us.

J. O. ATKINSON.

KINGDOM SERVICE.

The writer knows full well that every subscriber who understands will do his or her best to meet payments as they come due, pledged to Men and Millions. This statement is based on two facts: First, that the pledges were made in good faith and so those who gave them are in honor bound to meet these obligations as rapidly as they can. Second, this money is for Kingdom service and goes to advance all the interests of the interests of the Kingdom adopted and undertaken by our Christian Church. All the seven enterprises which the Christian Church in all its history has thus far been able to give to the world are dependent for efficiency, growth and further development on our loyalty to Men and Millions. The people who have pledged only need to realize what the Movement stands for and is doing in order to pay their pledges. One could no more repudiate these pledges or would wish to do so who understands the situation than one would repudiate the Christian Church itself. On the one hand Men and Millions consecrated on the altar of our Church would emphasize and proclaim to the world our five cardinal principles and in so doing would find expression through the seven enterprises that the Movement seeks to support. I have yet to and a member of the Christian Church anywhere who understands Men and Millions that does not believe this to be our best and greatest movement.

Brethren and beloved friends, pray for Men and Millions both in the house of prayer and in private devotion. God seems to have revealed this as a program for our Church at this particular time, and through it calls all of us to loyalty and devotion to all the enterprises and institutions of the Church. If those who love and believe in the Christian Church will pray daily for the success of this Movement we shall come to a glorious consummation by this very vital thing.

J. O. ATKINSON.

UNCLAIMED BLESSINGS.

The Christian Index has the following which we could wish our Christian forces would take to heart and apply to the Men and Millions Movement:

The story is told of a woman who dreamed recently that she had entered heaven. Upon looking about she discovered a large heap of bundles. She asked the guiding angel what they were and the answer was, "They are blessings sent you from heaven while you lived on earth and they were never claimed. These bundles have come back one by one and are thrown together there, a reminder of numerous joys you refused to accept."

God has poured out marvelous blessings upon Southern Baptists since the inauguration of the 75 Million Campaign, but it is well for us to pause and consider the many other blessings He had laid up for us and our work which we failed to claim because of our lack of faith and our failure to meet such other conditions as bringing whole offerings into His storehouses with which to carry forward His program of world redemption.

But God does not become estranged from His children when they refuse to claim blessings. The very day that they return to Him and claim the blessings, that day will the blessings be bestowed. Every phase of our organized work is in sore need of the greatest blessings we can command through faith and now is the time for us to meet the conditions for receiving God's favors by doing our whole duty by the 75 Million Campaign. The masses of the people will do their duty to this and other causes largely as they are informed and challenged to do so by their God-given leaders, the pastors.

A CONFERENCE SPEAKS.

At the Eastern Virginia Conference, Johnson's Grove, last week after the Secretary of Missions had presented the Men and Millions Movement a motion was made and unanimously adopted that every church in the Conference put on a program of the Movement the first Sunday in December, or the nearest Sunday thereto possible. The program to be used on the occasion according to the vote of the Conference was that of the Chart, the responsive reading by the entire congregation and the explanation as used by the Secretary before the Conference. An effort is being made to secure a special visiting speaker, minister or layman, for every church in the Conference on the day when this program is presented. It was the expressed belief of many that if those who have pledged to Men and Millions will view the Movement in the light presented through this program that special effort will be made to promptly pay the pledges. The Secretary had not anticipated this decision by the Conference but trust with all his heart that it will do good and result in advancing the cause of the Kingdom. He could wish that not only the churches of Eastern Virginia but all of the Conferences as well would put on this program for the sake of emphasizing the cardinal principles of the Church and the relationship of the Movement and of all our enterprises thereto.

J. O. ATKINSON.

RESPONDING TO GOD'S CHALLENGE.

God is challenging us preachers as His prophets, men called of God. I firmly believe that what the church of the Lord Jesus Christ needs today is for us preachers to have the consciousness that we are prophets of the Living God. We must believe with absolute certainty that God's truth is marching on to victory.

The trouble with many of us preachers is that we have not enough vision and nerve. A great many of us know the Kingdom ought to go marching on. We know our people have enough money to carry on the work of the Kingdom, but sometimes we have neither nerve nor courage enough to demand that they lay their money on the altar of God. The challenge of these crucial times is for the preacher, the prophet of God, to realize that he is backed by the reinforcements of Heaven to lead God's people forward. Now that we are coming to the point where here and there the fires are flickering and where the climbing of the hill is harder, each preacher is challenged to prove that he is indeed God's called man, God's prophet.

Then again, the challenge of God is for a revived passion for Jesus Christ and His work. A passion that counts not the cost and rejoices in sacrifice. O, my brethren, have any of us lost the vital passion for Christ in the rattle of the machinery? Let us go back to our pastorates and put the genuine passion into our task. It is good to suffer and even to cry a bit. Our Chieftian has called us to warfare, not to ease, to give not to gain. I believe that the one thing above all else that is to rally us to our great task is a renewed and consuming passion in the redeeming grace of Jesus Christ. We must agonize for the souls of men. Our sign is the cross and that means crucifixion. I believe if our preachers and our people will get the passion of the Cross all through our own hearts it will speak through our voices and it will flame mightily in our spirit. Then there will be no question about the money, no question about our going forward together and winning a glorious victory.—William Russell Owen.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

Burlington, Oct. 23.—Rev. John R. Voris, New York City, Associate General Secretary of the Near East Relief, has since Sunday been attending the sessions of the American Christian Convention in session here in the interest of the Near East Relief.

Sunday night he spoke a general missionary message to the Convention, and this morning he together with a group of church leaders met on the Near East problem, and drew up resolutions which will be presented to the Convention calling upon President Harding, together with all the people of the United States, to take definite action in regard to Near East Relief.

Mr. Voris, speaking as a traveler and lecturer with his wide knowledge of conditions and countries, greatly interested his audience in his mission message on the subject: "The Whole Gospel for the Whole of Life for the Whole World." It was his idea that the Christian gospel must apply to the whole of life. That the Christian's duty and opportunity is to apply the teaching of Jesus to the social problems arising in his community, questions of sanitation, of child welfare, of hospitals, homes for the insane, nurseries, old age pensions, etc.—charity and rehabilitation. The response to international relief appeals during the past three years, he said, indicates on the part of the people of America the warmth of heart that is in accord with the Christian Gospel.

He looked at the subject of missions in relation to the rural, and small town, and the city churches. He declared that the gospel must also enter the life of the citizen, and that the Christian could not be indifferent to his community obligations. From the social and economic point of view he looked at missions in relation to the laboring class, the negro problem, the mountain people, the state universities, Latin-American countries, China, India, and Africa.

Concluding his address he said that a new kind of missionary work is rising in our relations with the churches and the people of Europe and Asia Minor—"one that will gain as much as it gets. A number of American churches are even now giving through their relief workers and missionaries a vision of western Christianity, and the Federal Council of Churches representing your church as well as most of the other American Protestant denominations, is sending friendly visitors to the churches of Europe. Our relations with the Russian, the Greek, the Armenian church should be most brotherly. We have in the whole gospel of Christ applied to the whole of life, much to give these churches, carrying as they do so many of the medieval trappings, but in turn they have much to give us. It will be a brotherly relationship. In conclusion I would say that many individual ministers are preaching this gospel, and unless I am mistaken your Convention, your churches as a whole, are endeavoring to carry these ideals into effect."

In its business session the reports of the Commission on City and Rural Churches was adopted and admitted to record, calling for the strengthening of city churches, that pastors for such churches be college and seminary men, for better equipment of the churches, for more of the home mission money to be spent with the rural churches, and the placing of better leaders in charge of the rural churches.

Also the report of the committee on reorganization was adopted with some amendments providing for a logical organization of the whole church, extending from the local congregation through the local conferences and eventually through the district conferences leading up to the quadrennial session of the American Christian Convention. This plan also provides for a general board composed of the members of the Board of Publications, the Board of Christian Education, the Mission Board, the Board of Evangelism, the president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer of the Convention, college presidents, editor of Herald of Gospel Liberty, and an additional number of members at large to compose a board of fifty members, which board considers and refers matters to the Executive Committee for action.

At the morning session of the Convention Rev. Voris made a general appeal to the convention on behalf of near east relief in which he said he was appealing to this church body as representing a group of Christians interested in all kinds of Christ-like work; that the near East relief work was really a segment of church co-operation so far as the churches are concerned, and that the Christian Convention had done a very great deal in this direction. He drew attention to the Smyrna disaster and of the terrible suffering of these people at the very time the convention was going in this quiet, beautiful church and peaceful town. He also laid emphasis on the fact that the children in the orphanages of the near East must not be forgotten by America, on whom they are dependent. "It would have been better to have let them die by the bayonet of the Turk, or by starvation, rather than to have saved them and later to forget them and let them die," he said.

Mr. Voris insisted if America would join with the other nations of Europe in firmly saying to the Turks that these outrages must cease, the Turks would not dare to do them. He urged that America join in the coming Near East Conference.

In outlining the future program of the Christian Church as represented by this convention President Coffin gave four essential principles upon which the work must be based as follows:

1. "To hold what we have already secured and continue what we have so well begun."
2. "To enlarge the borders of our church habitation."
3. "To stimulate the lives of our people to an adequate expression."
4. "To give us a denominational cohesion."

President Coffin announced that he was authorized to state that there was a member of the convention who had agreed to give $100,000.00 toward an endowment fund for the American Christian Convention on condition that the church at large raised $400,000.00, the Executive Board to be in charge of this fund and to administer the proceeds for the various interests of the church according to the wisdom of the Board. No name was made public.

Christian Co-operative Movements was the subject of the night session of the Convention. Drs. Marytn Summerbell, Lakemont, N. Y., and Samuel M. Cavert, New York City, General Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, spoke on this theme.

"All that rests upon and grows out of the conception that Christ has one church, and only one church; and as the inevitable conclusion, that all Christian believers should recognize each other as brethren in the same household of faith," said Dr. Summerbell in his address, "and cooperate together as a single force in common policies, and under wise direction for the common end of regenerating souls and winning the whole world to the service of Jesus. It is to the growing conception of this ideal, the essential and indestructive unity of the church, that we are to attribute the growth and persistence of the various co-operative movements that have risen to commanding influence in recent years."

As the co-operative movements of the church he named the mission movement, advancement of Bible study, the Young Men's Christian Association, the United Society of Christian Endeavor, The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and overtures toward Christian Union of the churches.

Burlington, Oct. 23.—Closing the seventh day of its eight day session the American Christian Convention in session here rolled up its sleeves, so to speak, and got down to earnest business, disposing of many matters of importance claiming its attention.

First the report of the commission on Christian unity was considered and the convention went on record as reaffirming the resolution adopted at its last session at Conneaut, Ohio, as follows:

"That it hereby makes loving overtures to all true Christians everywhere, of whatever name or order, to unite by legal incorporation, placing all interests now owned and controlled by said Convention under the ownership and control of the amalgamated organization. . . ."

But the convention at this session took two more steps in the direction of Christian unity; that of voting to appoint a permanent Commission on Christian Unity whose duty it will be to make and receive overtures looking toward complete unity of the Church of Christ; and to arrange a program of study in Christian Unity for use in the Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, and other groups.

The report on Evangelism was adopted, carrying with it provision for the organization of a personal worker's Class in the churches that training in personal evangelism may be had, and the recommendation that social evangelism be given a larger place in the life and thought of the church.

Adopting the report of the Forward Movement of the Church the convention voted to terminate this movement on January 1, 1923, and to absorb into the other departments.

The convention in disposing of its report on laymen's work asks that every church within its bounds appoint a lay leader who shall act as an associate pastor and have the responsibility of the pastor in his absence.

An Evangelistic and Life Service Campaign to be held in each college of the denomination some time each year was favored in connection with the report of life-work recruits.

The reports of the Christian Endeavor and Ministerial Relief were also considered and admitted to record by adoption.

The matter of a campaign to raise $400,000.00, to meet the requirement to secure the $100,000.00 offered as a donation by a member of the Convention, as an endowment fund for the Convention was referred to the Executive Committee with instructions to work out plans and set in motion such a campaign at a time when in its judgment such a plan would succeed.

Legislation was enacted to amend the constitution of the Convention so as to make the Board of Trustees of the Christian Publishing Association in Dayton, Ohio, a publishing committee of the Convention and in this way linking up the work of the publishing department in a definite way with the Convention. Also constitutional amendments provided for a board of trustees for the Mission Board, which is an incorporated body.

The most forward looking step taken by the Convention at this session, however, was the creating of a Department of Christian Education correlating and integrating in this department the work that has been conducted heretofore by the Board of Education, Christian Endeavor, and Sunday School. This departure is in agreement with the pronounced general tendency in the world today to unify and co-ordinate the educational work of the church into a system and into a whole. This is the first definite action of religious body. The movement has the approval of the leaders of educational thought and Christian leadership of the world. Only four votes were cast against the amendment to the constitution when the proviso came to the final vote, and over this delightful circumstance too there is a spirit of rejoicing and congratulation throughout the members of the convention.

The constitutional provision providing for this Department reads as follows: "The Convention shall elect not more than eight persons, who shall constitute, with the Secretary of the Department of Christian Education, a Board of Christian Education, the Secretary of this Department being president ex-officio. This Board may declare vacancies in its membership for cause, subject to an appeal to the Executive Board of the Convention. It shall have charge of all Convention interests connected with Christian Education and training for Christian life and service reaching from our homes through our churches, communities, schools and colleges and shall fraternally co-operate with similar departments in other denominations, and with organizations having similar objectives."

Also a similar amendment was made to the Convention constitution creating a Board of Evangelism with a full time secretary. This also is one of the forward looking steps taken at this session.

Speaking on the Christian Co-operative Movements of the World Rev. Samuel McCrea Cavert, one of the general secretaries of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, narrowed his theme down to the undertakings and accomplishments of the Federal Council as a Co-operative Movement. He declared that the church needs unity, and needs it bad, and that the Federal Council came as a challenge to this need. The home, schools, and churches should be united in co-operative movements. He spoke in detail of the work and accomplishments of an inter-denominational character of the Federal Council, and stated that this organization is doing much toward unity, correlation and organizing the religious forces into co-operating factors for good, and that it was probably doing more in this direction than any other organization.

Also Dr. Cavert touched the Near East Relief question, and depicted the church as a factor in demanding the government to take a hand in relief work, and urging that every church should urge their senators to see that United States was represented in the coming Near East Conference

OFFICERS ELECTED

Election of the convention officers for the next quadrennial occurred during the morning session as follows:

President: Rev. F. G. Coffin, D. D., Albany, Mo.

Vice-President: Rev. D. B. Atkinson, D. D., Albany, Mo.

Secretary: Rev. J. F. Burnett, D. D., Dayton, Ohio.

Secretary for the Department of Finance, Mr. John C. Myers, Pleasant Hill, Ohio.

Secretary for the Department of Publishing, Hon. O. W. Whitelock, Huntington, Ind.

Secretary for the Department of Christian Education, Dr. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.

Secretary for the Department of Home Missions, Rev. Omers S. Thomas, D. D., Dayton, Ohio.

Secretary for the Department of Evangelism, Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, D. D., Dover, Del.

All the officers for the coming year are the same with the exception of those for the Secretary of Christian Education and Evangelism. President Coffin begins his third term this quadrennial as head of the American Christian Convention. He became president of this body eight years ago.

President W. A. Harper was the unanimous choice of the Convention for the important new office just created, that of Secretary of Christian Education, merging the former boards of Education, Sunday School, and Christian Endeavor together, which offers the finest possibilities that Christian Church can offer at this time to any one in the way of service to the Convention. Dr. Roy Helfenstein is also a new officer, Secretary of Evangelism, a new department created at this session of the convention, which promises much in the advancement of the Kingdom.

Also at this time the various boards and standing committees were elected as follows: Rev. O. S. Thomas, D. D., Dayton, Ohio, chairman Board of Home Missions; Mr. W. R. Sailer, Milford, N. J., chairman Board of Control for Aged Minister's Home; Mr. Hermon Eldredge, Erie, Pa., Representative on the Lesson Committee of the international Sunday school council of Religious Education; Rev. H. Shelton Smith, New Haven, Conn., Member of Council of International Sunday School Council of Religious Education; Rev. A. B. Kendall, D. D., Springfield, Ohio, Trustee of United Society of Christian Endeavor, Drs. Martyn Summerbell, J. O. Atkinson, J. F. Burnett, F. G. Coffin, W. W. Staley and Col. J. E. West, Representatives to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America; Drs. E. A. Watkins, and C. H. Rowland, Members of the Executive Board; Rev. C. W. Morrow, Detroit, Mich., Representative to World's Conference against Alcoholism; Rev. F. G. Coffin, chairman Commission on Christian Unity; and Rev. D. S. Lusk, Farmland, Ind., chairman Representatives to Anti-Saloon League.

Also the officers of the Woman's United Boards of Home and Foreign Missions, along with the Woman's Board officers have been elected as follows:

President, Mrs. Abbie B. Denison.

Honorary Presidents, Mrs. Emily E. Bishop, Mrs. Ellen C. Gustin.

Vice-President, Mrs. Alice M. Burnett.

Recording Secretary, Mrs. W. P. Hinton.

General Secretary, Mrs. Emma S. Powers.

Superintendent of Young People's Department, Miss Byrle McReynolds.

Superintendent of Junior Department, Miss Carrie Robinson.

Superintendent of Cradle Roll Department, Mrs. Norma Johnson.

Superintendent of Thank Offering Department, Mrs. C. W. Johnson.

Mrs. Athalla M. Howsare, chairman Representative to Federation of Women's Board of Foreign Missions.

Rev. M. B. Porter, representing the American Bible Society, addressed the Convention on behalf of his work. Information from his talk revealed the fact that the society was organized 106 years ago, has distributed 145,000,000 Bibles printed in 700 different languages, and has missionaries for distribution of their Bibles in all parts of the world. The Convention pledged its indorsement of this work and renewed their assurances of hearty co-operation.

Mrs. Alice V. Morrill, President of the Woman's Board reported the work of the Women in regard to Missions, which report was adopted as a part of the Convention Proceedings.

EDUCATIONAL FUNDS

With the report of the commission on Education came the proposal to institute a campaign to raise 1,350,000 in cash and pledges for the colleges of the Christian Church to be distributed to Defiance College, $450,000, Elon College

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

The Men and Millions Campaign and the causes embraced by it gain and hold their rightful place in the hearts of our people only in proportion as our preachers preach on these great Kingdom interests. The churches having the best record also have preachers who are constantly on their Campaign job.

PREACHING THE CAMPAIGN

No one human agency contributed so much to the victory in subscribing to Men and Millions as the preachers preaching the Campaign. The preacher was then and is now the key man. If the pastor preaches Men and Millions the people will work for and pay their pledges to the Movement.

Make the Victory Sure.

Our people will fall behind in their payment of the pledges if our preachers do not get under the burden again. We can go to the extraordinary session of our Convention next May with a glorious record, if our people are aroused to a full sense of their duty. We need to go to our knees for Power in these great days ahead of us, if we are to truly lead our people, pay our pledges and win out for our Lord.

Preach—Preach—Preach.

VICTORY!

$525,000, Union Christian College $250,000, and Palmer College $325,000, and that this money be used for the purpose of paying present indebtedness. The matter was referred to the Executive Committee to plan and execute such a campaign according to the methods and time best suited for raising such a fund.

Other reports considered and adopted with some amendments and changes looking to progressiveness in church work were Ministerial Relief, Public Morals, and Social Service, Stewardship, Publicity and Literature, and Sunday Schools.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 47.

REFERENCE MATERIAL: Matt. 4: 23; 9: 35-38.

LESSONS TO LEARN

The eighth chapter of Luke gives the story of the ministry of Jesus, as He began the second tour through his home country. Through the cities and villages of Galilee He travelled "preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of disease and all manner of sickness . . . moved with compassion." Each incident of the chapter brings its own lesson from the love and teachings of the Great Missionary. Each incident helps to make the great story of sacrifice and love, of helpfulness and courage, of sympathy and teaching which the chapter presents.

1. Jesus had helpers in His work—"the twelve, and certain women." They went together through the cities and villages bringing the good tidings of the gospel. They were co-laborers. Jesus needs helpers, who will work with Him. Dr. McAfee has declared that "good men may merely wait for needy men to appear and receive a blessing; missionary men go where needy men are, taking the blessing with them." The helpers of Jesus in Galilee were missionary helpers. He is calling for missionary men and women today.

2. Jesus taught most often through stories of the activities of every day life. Verses 4 through 15 give one of the most familiar of these stories, the parable of the sower and the seed, and the Master's interpretation to His disciples. The four kinds of soil can be found in any community. The four types of hearers are all about us. Yet the seed must be sown, and some will fall upon good ground and bear fruit a hundredfold. Every Christian is a seed sower. "The harvest indeed is plenteous."

3. The Parable of the Lamp, lighted and then covered, illustrates the life of the Christian. The lamp under the vessel is useless. On the stand, it gives light to all who enter the house. The Christian who sheds abroad the love of Christ, is the missionary Christian whose life serves the world. And his light will shine afar. "The light which shines the farthest, is brightest at home." No Christian can grow strong in the faith, who does not seek to impart the love of Christ to others.

4. The incident telling of the family of Jesus to draw Him away from the crowd, has its bearing the missionary application of the lesson. "Jesus was ready to recognize the natural ties of family life, but He was not ready to accept family interference with his duty as a messenger of God (Westminster Teacher)." Luke 9: 59-62 gives more teaching from Jesus on this point. Sacrifice of home ties has often been the price which the missionary has had to pay to obey the call of God. He has entered into a larger world, where he has had for his "family" those who need him most, and for his brothers those "that hear the word of God, and do it."

5. The power of the Christ is further revealed in His lordship over the raging waters during the storm. "Where is your faith?" is a question which might well be hurled at Christians of this time. Do we pray in fright, more than in faith; in fear more than in loving trust?

6. The story of the Great Missionary driving out demons is given in the printed portion of our lesson in the lesson helps. Here Christ was dealing with an individual who needed Him at this particular time. The man helpless in the grip of the evil or unclean spirits was cured by His divine power, and was found "sitting, clothed and in his right mind at the feet of Jesus." Did this work pay? A man was cleansed and saved. And more even than this for he went his way, telling to the people of the whole city how great things Jesus had done for him. He became a missionary himself, a living witness of the power of Christ. At this Thanksgiving season, people are coming together to declare how great things God hath done. Blessings, which are so great and many in our lives, should call for continual thanksgiving and praise to God.

7. The story of the 12-year old daughter of Jairus, the Junior girl, will appeal most to the children of the Sunday school. The Great Missionary regarded the life of the little girl so precious that He turned from His teaching and preaching and healing of adults, to listen to the plea from the heart-broken father. To the house of sorrow and death the Saviour came, and restored joy as He brought back the girl to life. There are boys and girls who need to know of the Jesus today. There are boys and girls living in lands where there is no one to know how to care for them when they are sick. Make your children see that truly

"Jesus loves the little children,
All the children of the world."

8. As Jesus was going to the home of Jairus, pressing through the throng, the woman who had been suffering for twelve years, touched His garment, and was made well. Her faith had made her whole when she came in contact with the Great Physician.

These eight incidents make up the story of the Great Missionary as told in this great chapter of St. Luke. Every one of them tells a missionary story and teaches a great missionary truth. Make this a real "Missionary Sunday" in your Sunday school, and if you are not already doing so, take a forward step by deciding to have a Missionary Sunday regularly, at least once a month in your school, and make that a day when you will think about how the work of the Great Missionary, Jesus Christ, is being carried on today, and a day when your boys and girls, and men and women, will be given the privilege of giving that the great work of winning the world to Him, may go rapidly forward.

"Praise God."—Ps. 145: 1-21.
(Thanksgiving Meeting)

LESSON THOUGHTS

God is our King, the ruler of our lives. All of our days are in His control. All of our blessings are gifts from Him. Surely He merits our praise "for ever and ever."—verse 1.

"Every day," declares the psalmist, "will I bless thee." Daily life is an indication of our Christian experience. Not only words, but deeds every day express our gratitude to God, or reveal our ungrateful nature, while we are enjoying His bounties?—verse 2.

"Let your life speak well of Jesus every day, Own his right to every service you can pay."

"One generation shall laud thy works to another." Moses in his parting message to the children of Israel repeated the injunction he had often given to them to "command your children to observe to do, even all the words of this law." The psalmist would combine with this teaching of the law, an enthusiastic praise to God for all of His good works. For centuries, the story of the Heavenly Father and His Son, Jesus Christ, has been passed down from father to son. It is a great privilege to tell the wonderful story to a little child, and to lead him to express his heartfelt thanks to the Father—verse 3.

"Will I meditate." Think of God's works. Too often the root of all ingratitude is just "I didn't think." Count your blessings, meditate upon them, and you cannot help observing Thanksgiving Day all the year around—verse 5.

"I will declare." Just thinking, as essential as it is, is not enough. Thought is just the first step. Expression is necessary to convey to God, or to companions our gratitude. Declare the greatness of God to join in your daily devotions. Declare His greatness to men, that they may share in the blessing of knowing the Father. And every time you declare His greatness, you own Christian life will be strengthened—verse 6.

"Jehovah is good to all." Praise Him for a goodness which knows no limits and no distinctions. Praise Him for His mercy and loving kindness to all.—verse 9.

"Jehovah is nigh." God is near to all who call upon Him. He is always ready to hear the prayer offered in sincerity. He is present to comfort in sorrow. He is at hand to share in joy. Praise God for being ready to fulfill the desire, to hear the cry, to preserve the righteous. "Bless his holy name for ever and ever."—verses 18-21.

MEETING PLANS

As this meeting comes the Sunday night before Thanksgiving, it will direct the minds of the Endeavors to the national Thanksgiving Day, and its observance. A true Thanksgiving Day cannot be a selfish holiday any more than can Christmas Day. Perhaps your Society can provide a Thanksgiving treat for some home, where luxuries may be scarce. Gather a group of young people, and visit shut-ins of the community, or a near-by Hospital or Home and sing some gospel songs. See if it does not put the Thanksgiving spirit into your own heart, while you are spreading joy in the Master's name.

Let your Sunday meetings be "Thanksgiving" throughout. Choose your hymns carefully, with the thought of the meeting in mind. Suggested hymns: "More Love to Thee," "Come, Thou Almighty King," "My Jesus, I Love Thee," "The Child of a King," "Count Your Blessings."

Leave plenty of time for personal testimony during the meeting. Urge every one to speak of his own blessings and voice his thanks to God in the Christian Endeavor Meeting, a meeting which was first held to give young people an opportunity to testify to His goodness, and to strengthen their own Christian lives in actual Christian service "For Christ and the Church."

"A SERVICE, NOT AN ENTERTAINMENT."

Will your church celebrate Christmas this year with entertainment, or observe the Christmas season with a service which will tell anew the "old, old story"?

In the early days of our nation's history, the Christmas festival was observed with a very simple service of song and recitation and story, all of which contributed to the one great thought of "Joy to the World, the Lord is Come." Gradually, probably for variety and novelty, new features were introduced. Each year saw the increase of these features, until the Christmas program meant strenuous effort for days and nights, with its chief noticeable purpose to entertain the members of the church and Sunday school. Unintentionally, the main theme seems to have shifted often from the Christ to Santa Clause. And while we believe that Christmas is a time for joy and pleasure, and that there is a place for the jolly St. Nicholas, still when he seems to be put in the place of prominence belonging to the Christ Child, especially in the church service, Christians must unite in demanding that the central theme of the Christmas service must still be "The Lord is Come."

In these November days, as we are beginning to think of the observance of Christmas, the question is important "Shall we have an entertainment, or a service this year?" What shall be the supreme aim of our Christmas, to entertain, or to inspire?"

To those who ardently long for the Christmas service, the service "White Gifts for the King" is suggested. Many Sunday Schools have used this service. Programs for it have been demanded until there are eight different services now published from which to choose.

For those to whom the service is new, it might be said, that the idea of the White Gifts Service, is based upon the short Legend of Cathay, where the king's birthday was celebrated by a "White Feast" when the rich brought their king white gifts of pearl and ivory, white chargers and costly garments. And the poor brought their white pigeons and handful of rice. And the secret of the beauty of the Feast, was that fact: "Nor doth the great king regard one gift above another so long as all be white." One day this beautiful little legend fell into the hands of a minister's wife, and the thought came to her that Christmas is our King's birthday, and to Him we could bring "White Gifts" to express our love and loyalty and joy. Since that day many gifts have been brought to the altars of many churches; gifts of self, when lives have been given to Jesus Christ as the best Christmas gift of all; gifts of service, when His followers have promised to give Him more time or money during the days to come; gifts of substance, wrapped in white or white in fact, to be given to His children some place.

Because this service has proved to be of such a great spiritual blessing to many, it is suggested to you. The book "White Gifts for the King" full of suggestions for program, decorations and gifts, including music and recitations of all eight services may be secured through our Publishing House, or separate copies of the various programs may be secured. The Field Secretary will be glad to give information, or help regarding your Christmas service.

And most important of all is it that we determine in our church this year shall be some sort of a service which will commemorate in an inspiring and worthy manner, the birth of the Christ Child.

"Our Father, unto whom we pray
And in whose praise we sing,
Help us to keep Thy Christmas Day,—
The Birthday of our King.

"Keep us from selfish act and thought;
Keep us from idle mirth;
Help us to live what thou hast taught
By Thy great Gift to earth."

POUNDED.

While I was away from home in revival work, Wentworth Church made up a nice pounding, and two of the members took the load of good things on their Ford and brought it to my door and delivered the contents to my wife. I shall not try to mention the articles separate; sufficient it is to say that there were many of the most common things one needs for the every day table, as well as some things which, at least, I, am not used to daily.

Not only did Wentworth pound us, but paid, to my wife, at the same time, the last cent of my salary. This was on Monday after the second Sunday in October. I think Wentworth has never failed the pastor's salary by or before the annual conference, since I have been preaching here.

It was a real joy not only to receive the pounding, but to hear my wife tell about it, when I came home and to claim it as hers. Well she is welcome to it just so she puts it on our table.

I appreciate the kindness of the people very much and hope, as long as I serve them, I can prove my gratitude by real service. May our Lord's richest blessings rest upon them and reward them for every such deed.—J. LEE JOHNSON.

DEAR FRIENDS:

We have in our denomination in the Southern Christian Convention 28,251 members. We ought to have out of this number twenty-five thousand live, active members. If we have twenty-five thousand active members, and all of them active, our church ought to do great things. If twenty-five thousand able bodied men should go to the forest to cut wood what a tremendous amount they could cut even in one day. If twenty-five thousand good women would make garments one day what a number they would have when night came. I read a story recently where a new pastor took charge of a church, and the first Sunday he read out the names of the different committees he had appointed, and when he had finished it was found that every member of his church had been appointed on a committee. Every member given something to do. After services someone asked him why he had appointed them all on committees. He said, "What are you a member of the church for if it is not to be active and busy in the Lord's work?" We put in good time for self all the week and expect the kind Master to bless our efforts in business and on the farm, or whatever our occupation may be; but we go to church on Sunday listen to the sermon and go home—but what have we done?

You say that that is all there is to do! When our Master lived on earth as a man, did he find anything to do? His was a busy life: Healing the sick, opening the eyes of the blind, cleansing the lepers and raising the dead. He forgot himself in his busy life in serving others and in bringing happiness to those in distress and sorrow. You say you cannot go to the mission field, perhaps you cannot, but you can send. Some years ago a good girl with a frail body offered herself to the Mission Board of her church to go to the foreign field but was rejected on account of her health, but she did not give up in despair. She was a school teacher and she asked the Mission Board to let her support a girl who was strong enough to go and it was granted. She taught school in her homeland and out of her salary she supported her missionary in the foreign field. She could not go but she could send. You say you have no widows and orphans in your community to visit. You have ninety orphans in your orphanage. Have you given anything that they may have something to eat, something to wear, and an opportunity in life.

We have missionaries in the homeland and in the foreign field. You cannot go. Have you made an offering to support those who have gone. Oh! there is so much to do to keep us busy. If the twenty-five thousand active church members would get busy on the Thanksgiving offering this year we would raise at least $25,000.00 Our church could then care for one hundred and fifty children.

If our twenty-five thousand active members would get interested in paying Men and Millions pledges. We would be able to collect every dollar pledged within the five years allotted.

Let us ask ourselves two questions. Have we a work to do in our Lord's vineyard? Are we doing that work?

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

The term Christian Education was adopted by the American Christian Convention at Burlington, to include all the educational activities of the Christian Church. The work of the Christian Colleges, the Sunday Schools, and the Christian Endeavor Societies, of the church will be included in this department. The purpose of unifying this work under one concept was to give unity, organization, plan, and objectives that will place "the child in the midst" and use all these means of grace for guiding the growth of the child's spiritual life to a full manhood in Christ. This work cannot take the place of regeneration, for no child can be trained to grow up without sin, but to train children for regeneration, and train them after regeneration.

"Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it" does not mean to substitute training for life. Life must come from regeneration, but the regenerated child has instincts and impulses that must be modified and redirected in the formation of Christian habits and the building of Christian character. One of the great dangers in new movements is that of making too inclusive claims for them and substituting them for what they cannot do.

In the past too great claims have been made for the work of regeneration. It was thought to be sufficient for all the needs of the Christian life of the child, and too little attention was given to the Christian education of the child both before and after conversion. All that Christian education can hope to do is to develop what is within the child's nature. The child is plastic, trustful, docile, inquisitive, curious, imitative, and in this way is a worthy example for the adult who is engrossed with traditions, customs, habits, prejudices, and institutional loyalties from which they need to become free in order to make a new beginning—a beginning in the Christian life.

The process of educating a child in Christianity is quite different from teaching him ideas about Christianity. This would be only an intellectual process. One might know all about Christianity and yet not be a Christian. Some of the most intellectual students of Christianity are the least Christian. There must be a self-surrender to Christ—a conscious committal to His service through faith—an identification of the self with His plan and purpose and will in the world in order to become a Christian. This will involve repentance, pardon through faith, and regeneration. After this experience, the work of Christian education has a big undertaking in growing a Christian life, the Christian education is a process of Christian growth.

This means a process which must take place in a social environment with social activities, social responsibilities, joint and co-operative service, common purposes, mutual obligations, and shared outcomes. Social pressure will develop a sense of duty, quickened conscience, altruistic service, and worthy ideals. From Christian associates the best things of the religious life of the past will be received and assimilated, Christian teachers with rich experiences will modify the habitual and instinctive activities by a wise use of rewards, reproofs, changed responses, changed environment, counter attractions, stimulated expressions with instruction, and sublimation of conduct, natural to the child upon a higher plain of ideal service. By this process old habits will become atrophied, new habits will be initiated, and through attentive repetition and guided practice, through emotionalized devotions, and spiritual realization Christian ideals will be translated into Christian practice. Temptations will be resisted, habits will be formed, character will be acquired, and innocence will give place to positive goodness, potentialities will become realities, and the growing self will be guided in its activities to the developed personality. Receptivity will give place to vigorous activity in joyous service for self-improvement, in Christian living, by a larger life of service and sympathy for mankind.

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

WILL DR. HARPER RESIGN?

The choosing of Dr. Harper by the American Christian Convention to head its new work in Christian Education reflects high honor on the man and the college which he represents. Dr. Harper has meant much to the college, and to lose him now would be nothing less than a tragedy. He has just come to the place where he can be of greatest service to the college and to the work of the church in the South. We are also aware of the fact that Dr. Harper is one of the most promising figures in the field of Religious Education. His extensive study of the subject has made him an authority, and the need for such a man to help the work which the Christian Church has just undertaken is great, but shall Dr. Harper resign his work here to take up this new field?

The board of trustees are entering their protests, and the students feel that his loss would be a calamity. From the North and West appeals for his acceptance are pouring in, but these people do not recognize the need in the South, and they are unacquainted with the particular needs of Elon.

In the report which names Dr. Harper for this important work there is a clause which may easily be interpreted to mean that he could do both. We realize that the work of a college president is a full job. We know, too, that the putting of this new work through will require the strongest of our leaders. Dr. Harper is fully competent to do either, but could he do both? It has occurred to us that it might be possible, since the two fields are so closely allied, that he might be relieved of some of his duties as a college president, delegating them to other authorities, and that trained departmental specialists be put in the field to do the work for the new department, while Dr. Harper shaped the policies and did the planning for both. At best he could not in person reach the whole of the work. This the specialists could do.

We are under the impression that the work might be divided into the elementary, young people's, and the adult and schools and colleges department with a trained specialist to develop each. Such a scheme would keep Dr. Harper in the president's chair at Elon, and give him at the same time to the work of the new board.

Such a plan would involve sacrifice to both the college and the board, but in the ultimate it would be a saving to them both. Will Dr. Harper resign? We hope not, and we believe that it is unnecessary if the church has the vision and faith to do well the task to which it has so nobly set its hand.—Maroon and Gold

Drive the Sow from the Spring.

You have heard of the order to drive the sow from the spring. All clever sayings usually assemble to the credit of a few celebrities. Sam

Jones told of a man trying to clear up a brook to get a drink when a neighbor told him that the best way to clear it would be to go up the stream a few rods and drive an old sow out of the spring.

Too many of our institutions of learning are emitting the waters of infidelity in the thinking of their graduates. The proportion of students is too large who come out in worse condition morally and spiritually than they went in. There must be something wrong at the source; there must be a sow in the spring. There are many in position to help put the sow out of the spring if there were sufficient light for them to see that the stream was muddy. One way of bringing relief on a small scale is to supply some springs in which there is no sow; springs that are fenced against her. But the better way, instead of fencing the springs, is to fence the sow! But this is looking rather far ahead. Just now the emergent demand is to drive the sow out of the spring.

Evolutionary criticism, directing its shaft at the Biblical account of creation and, consequently, at the doctrine of sin and atonement and the Diety of Christ, is rampant even in the science classes of some of the high schools, where some of these teachers have become twenty-two calibre theologians.

Gipsy Smith on Higher Criticism.

Gipsy Smith, on his return to England, was asked as to religious conditions in the United States. This is his reply: "In America they have been passing through a very critical period. Here in this country we have largely emerged from the trouble attaching to the higher criticism, and we are emphasizing the things that we have tried and proved. The American churches, on the other hand, are still in the throes, and they had to listen often to messages which were in the highest degree uncertain. They are tried now, and they want the real thing. I found that desire after assurance and reality more pronounced than ever at this time. The man who has got a real live message, with the power of the Holy Spirit inspiring it and backed up by a consecrated heart and life, will be welcomed and listened to in America more eagerly than ever before. For my own part, I never saw crowds so earnest, never met with so ready a response in my life as in the States last winter."

MICHAEL-MURRELL

Mr. Robt. Murrell and Miss Dolly Ethel Michael, accompanied by a few friends, came down from Greensboro Nov. 5th to the home of Rev. J. W. Holt, Burlington, N. C. and at 2:30 P. M. were married. Rev. J. W. Holt officiated using the Ring Ceremony. Mr. Murrell is a popular young man from Greensboro and Miss Michael has been employed in the office of the Newman Manufacturing Co. of Greensboro. She spent several years in Burlington and is well known to many Burlington people. They will reside in Greensboro for the present.

JEREMIAH W. HOLT.

HUMBLE-ATKINS

Charles Henry Atkins and Mary Evelyn Humble were united in marriage by the writer at the home of the bride's grandfather, D. A. Humble, Elon College, N. C. Nov., 1, 1922. The bride is the daughter of Rev. W. B. Humble, Moyock, N. C., and the groom is the son of the late J. O. Atkins of Isle of Wight Co. Va.

May their wedded life be happy and useful.

N. J. NEWMAN

LANGSTON

W. D. Langston was borne Jan. 6, 1884. Died Oct. 2, 1922. He leaves to mourn his departure four sisters; Mrs. W. H. Stephens, Mrs. J. J. Holland, Miss Annie Langston, Mrs. W. C. High; Two brothers: T. E. and John Langston. His courteous manner and cordial friendship toward all won for him many friends, who are grieved at his going. May God's blessing be on the bereaved brothers and sisters and comfort them with the assurance of a blessed reunion beyond the grave.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

The Panama Canal.—

The Pacific Ports of the United States have shown a great increase in foreign trade since the opening of the Panama Canal. For the fiscal year 1922 they made a gain of 108 per cent in imports over 1914, the year preceding the opening of the Canal, and a gain of 132 per cent in exports; while the gains for the Atlantic ports were only 28 and 45 per cent, respectively. Eleven per cent of the country's imports in 1922 came through the Pacific ports.

The Victorious Turk.—

On November 6 the Turkish government notified the Allies that no warships must pass through the Dardanelles except by permission of Turkey. A Turkish governor of Constantinople has been appointed, and the Allies have been told to withdraw from the city. Both acts violate the Mudania agreement. The Allies have refused either to leave the city, or to accept Turkey's ruling about warships. The Turks have begun to imprison influential Turks favorable to the Allies. One of them, a newspaper editor, the Allies demand shall be released within forth-eight hours.

The Turkish government has also abolished the sultanate and placed the governing power in parliament. As the Sultan is also the Calif of most Mohammedans—sustaining the same relations to Mohammedans as the Pope does to Roman Catholics—he has thus lost this religious office also, and the government expects to appoint a new Calif.

The Turks have proclaimed all treaties made since March 15, 1920, null and void.

Eleven Billion Letters.—

The United States excels all other nations in the number of letters it writes, for 11,335,000,000 letters went through the United States mails last year. This means that every citizen in the country received—or would have received, if the matter had been averaged up—112 letters during the year. The corresponding figure for Great Britain is 84, for Germany 25, and for Italy 24.

Of course, a vast number of these "letters" are not letters at all in the strict sense of the word. They are bills. They are receipts. They are circulars. Some are printed. Many are duplicated in various ways. There are millions of Christmas cards, birthday cards, and Easter cards. Picture post-cards also are hardly to be regarded as letters, though they enter this total.

But, with all these subtractions, it must be acknowledged that our nation does a lot of letter-writing. The question is, What sort of letters are they? Are they thoughtful letters, fresh and original, spicy and brainy, or are they dull and tame and perfunctory? And are they helpful letters, cheery and inspiring, wise and loving, such letters as a modern Paul would write, or are they harsh, cynical, unkind, and selfish?

Eleven billion letters—what a glorious opportunity for brotherly love! What a terrible implement for the evil one! Which shall it be?

The Bible in the Schools.—

The proposed Illinois Constitution, Section 3, of the Bill of Rights, provides that "The reading of selections from any version of the Old and New Testaments in public schools, without comment, shall never be held to be in conflict with this Constitution."

The Bible Fellowship of the State of Washington proposes an amendment to the Constitution of that State which, among other things, contains the following: "No public money or property shall be appropriated for or applied to any sectarian religious worship, exercise, or instruction, or support of any religious establishment. Provided, however, that whereas the common rules of life and liberty of the people of this State and of the United States are founded upon knowledge from the Bible, not less than ten verses shall be read or caused to be read by the teacher, without comment, each school day from the King James Version of the Bible, in all State schools and educational institutions of the State, and no graduation certificate shall be issued by any public school or educational institution in this State to any student who is unable to certify that he or she has consecutively read all of the said version of the Bible."

In the State of Pennsylvania, the Bible is now read in the State schools. All this gives a hopeful outlook for the restoration of the Bible to its original and historical place in the life and education of this nation. May the good work continue and prosper.—The Presbyterian.

Money of China.—

The circulating medium in China is nothing more or less than a replica of the cart-wheel dollar that we still have in many parts of the United States. The silver dollar was introduced into China by the Spaniards many decades ago and first became popular in Canton, which was the pioneer port opened to foreign trade. In the 50's the familiar Mexican silver dollar arrived. Though this coin is actually in the minority today, the word "Mexican" is used to indicate silver valuation. When you hear the phrase "one hundred dollars Mex" it indicates a value of $100 Mexican. Ordinarily the Chinese silver dollar is worth fifty cents gold. Throughout China you find many so-called Yuan dollars, which were coined during Yuan Shih-kai's stormy reign as president, and upon which his profile is stamped.

With subsidiary coinage is the usual complication common to all Chinese currency, for you have big and little money. Ten big dimes of the Yuan coinage constitute a dollar, but it takes twenty Dragon dimes to make a dollar. The Dragon coins, therefore, are the little money. Unless you are very careful the shrewd Chinese shopkeeper will invariably give you little money instead of big when making change.

One further detail in Chinese finance remains to be explained. Everywhere you get what is known as the chopped dollar. If you heard this phrase used you would naturally think that the coin was physically mutilated. Not so. Every Chinese money-changer has a chop, which is his seal. This seal is survived scrutiny, and is good. That is why you see so many dollars with purple markings on them. Once the dollar is chopped it will be accepted by the most ignorant coolie, because he knows that it has passed muster.

Henry Hoover Says Europe Can Pay.—

The plain speaking of Herbert Hoover appeals to the American people. They like it. And he has so many times that they have confidence in what he says. Perhaps no American knows Europe better than Mr. Hoover. And it was Mr. Hoover who said in a speech in Toledo last week that Europe can and ought to pay her war debts to the United States. Great Britain paid fifty million dollars interest to our government last week. Mr. Hoover says that Great Britain will pay the $4,750,000,000 war debt she owes the United States. He says that the remaining group of nineteen debtors, owing a total of less than seven billion dollars, can take care of interest and make sufficient payments on principals to pay off all indebtedness in a reasonable length of time. It will take not more than twelve per cent of any nation's annual government income and will be as little as two per cent in some cases, says Mr. Hoover. He says that Europe is "coming back" in social organizations, industry, agriculture, commerce, transportation—everything except politically and financially. Secretary Hoover denies that gold is necessary. He ridicules the familiar formula that Europe must pay either in goods or gold and that, having no gold, she must pay in goods, and that payment in goods would wreck American industry. Europe is trading with the whole world, not America alone. The gains from world trade, from the pool of the world's commerce, and from the interplay of world industry, he says, will aid Europe in wiping out these debts. Secretary Hoover has refused to deal with the debts as a "moral issue" or a matter of sentiment. He asserts that we have dealt with Europe the "last few years in terms of idealism" and says we cannot continue to do this if the Old World continues to think in terms of war and to work out its problems by the formulas of force and guns. Mr. Hoover thinks we ought to remind Europe that armies and budgets and navies must be cut ere we agree to cancellation of debts. Many do not agree with Mr. Hoover's views, however, and the fight is on in earnest for the cancellation of war debts.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Did your pastor pray publicly in his last Sunday service for Men and Millions? If not, why not?

If we believe in our Christian Church we must believe in Men and Millions, for it seeks to promote according to need, all that our church is and seeks to have and do.

In our Men and Millions Movement we seek to do something for our entire church and all that it is and has in the world. Are we praying for it, contributing to it, and working for it as we ought?

Peloubet's Notes, the standard on the International Sunday School Lessons for many years, is announced in this issue of The Sun. The 1923 volume is now ready for distribution, and you can be supplied through this office.

How many congregations in the Conferences of the Southern Christian Convention have heard their pastor or Sunday School Superintendent or Captain pray for the work of Men and Millions in the last six weeks?

Miss Olive G. Williams of our Porto Rican Mission is at the Rex Hospital in Raleigh, N. C., suffering from pneumonia. Her many friends in the South will join in wishing that she may be speedily restored. Let prayer be offered in her behalf.

Brethren there is one Movement in the Church which if we help by effort, prayer or sacrifice we help all that our Christian Church stands upon and offers to the world and that is our Men and Millions Movement. Are we doing our bit or rather our best for this Movement?

Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D.D., is on a visit to Georgia this week, speaking in the interest of Men and Millions. Dr. Atkinson is doing his part for this great enterprise for the Christian Church, and he certainly deserves the hearty sympathy and cooperation of our people.

Rev. E. M. Carter, Wadley, Ala. is now giving all his time to working for Men and Millions in his Conference and will do so until every church and subscriber in his Conference has been visited, Bro. Carter began his work Monday Nov. 13, and hopes to complete it in four or five weeks by hard, continuous work.

O, for several hundred men in the Christian Church to do as The Christian Index tells about a Baptist in their Campaign:

"A prominent business man in one of our Southern states who had subscribed liberally to the Seventy-five Million Campaign, but who had suffered some financial reverses in the economic depression, felt that he could not pay anything on his subscription until times had improved. When he heard a plea from one of the Campaign speakers, however, to the effect that as long as Baptists can eat plenty of good food, wear good clothes and ride in automobiles they can pay their subscriptions to the Campaign, he resolved to shut his automobile up in his garage until he had paid up all that was due to the Campaign and he carried out his resolution. All our people can do better than they have done if they really try."

If our Christian people would stop their automobiles until they pay up their pledges to Men and Millions, these pledges would shortly be paid and we would hear no more about "unable to pay."

TARBELL'S GUIDE.

Guide to the International Sunday-School Lessons" presents all the familiar features of this teachers' help, which has now reached its eighteenth annual volume. These include an especially thoroughgoing and valuable set of general suggestions to teachers introductory to the book, while each lesson is treated in about nine pages containing an explanation of the text, a section giving light from Oriental life, a section dealing with the historical back-ground, a teacher-training thought from the lesson, and two sections, one treating the topic for Young People and Adults, and the other treating the topic for Intermediates and Seniors. This is a very workman-life commentary, and gives a wealth of material which the wide-awake teacher will find invaluable.

YOUNG PEOPLE ARE BAPTIZED.

There was a fine attendance at the mid-week service of the First Christian Church last evening, and the service was of more than usual interest.

A few minutes was taken up in a business session of the church, and this was followed by the baptizing of a number of boys and girls who came into the church as a result of the recent evangelistic campaign. Others are expected to be baptized later, and still others are expected to later come into the church, in the followup services of the revival meeting.

Both the morning and evening services Sunday will be in the nature of follow-up services and will be very important. At the morning hour the pastor will discuss "The Path of a Christian," and in the evening he will speak on "The Danger of Forgetting God," and all members are urged to attend, and the public is cordially invited.

The reports at the business meeting last night showed that the church was in fine condition, and was making progress along all lines, and is rapidly becoming a splendid force for righteousness in the town.

This church expresses its very great appreciation to the Winchester Star, and to each member of the force whose work brings out the paper each day, for their kindness in publishing notices about the work of the church, not only during the special meeting, but also the usual weekly notices as well. For these favors the church is very grateful indeed, and hopes in some way to prove such a blessing in the city that this splendid paper will always be glad that it had the privilege of mentioning the First Christian Church in its columns.—Winchester (Va.) Star.

ROSEMONT WELCOMES NEW PASTOR.

Entire Community Joins in Greetings to Rev. B. F. Black.

A largely attended reception was held Friday night, Nov. 17th, at Rosemont Christian Church in honor of the New Pastor, Rev. B. F. Black and family. A very attractive program consisting of vocal and instrumental music and several addresses were rendered and the Church was handsomely decorated in flowers of the season for the occasion.

The Master of Ceremonies was Mr. C. L. Gibson, who introduced the speakers.

Welcome addresses were made by H. C. Hedly on behalf of the Official Board and the Sunday School; O. S. Mills, on behalf of the Board of Deacons; O. F. Smith, on behalf of the Finance Committee; A. L. Gwynn, J. W. Coburn, and Dr. L. C. Ferebee on behalf of the Congregation at large.

Rev. E. B. Flory of the First Christian Church,

Berkley, delivered the charge to the Church, laying particular stress upon the need of its hearty cooperation with the Pastor at all times.

Rev. J. N. Cutchins delivered the charge to the Pastor with very appropriate remarks.

Mr. Black responded with words of appreciation on behalf of himself and family for the hearty welcome extended them.

A vocal solo was rendered by Mrs. Helen Rust and the Church Quartette sang two selections, an instrumental selection was rendered by Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Etheridge and Mr. John Davis.

After the response by Mr. Black, the guests were invited into the annex where a two-course dinner was served. This was an enjoyable feature and the music and singing of the young folks added to the occasion.

Mr. Black came to Rosemont from the Wolfboro, N. H. Church and we are very glad to welcome him back to old Virginia. The church is indeed fortunate in securing so able a man as its Pastor and we expect wonderful progress under his leadership.

THE CORNER-STONE OF THE FIRST CHRISTIAN CHURCH LAID.

At the appointed time November 18, 1922, 3:30 P. M. the ceremonies of the laying of the corner-stone of the First Christian Church of Richmond, Va., took place. The building is located at the northwest corner of Grove Avenue and Sheppard Street. A large audience was present. The sealed box deposited in the stone contained a history of the organization of the Church, a Bible, a roll of the membership, with other things, which were announced. The stone was lowered in place. Richmond Randolph Lodge, No. 19, A. F. & A. M., with Master A. J. Watkins in charge, directed the exercises. The church choir, assisted by members of the lodge, rendered special music. At appointed place on the program, Rev. W. T. Walters pastor of the church, introduced Dr. W. A. Harper, President of Elon College, N. C., who delivered a most excellent address on "Religion Has its Message for Industry." Dr. Harper stated that Religion, has its message for industry, labor unions, social life, the theater and other forms of amusement, for political parties and for the nations. There is no organization or institution wherein religion's voice may not properly be heard with saving influence.

He said in part:

"The faith once delivered to the saints has grown some during the past twenty centuries, even as it did during the days of the apostles," he said it is not full grown yet. Genuine Christian faith requires progress in understanding God's will and purpose and design in the world He made. Static religions die. Dynamic religions give life, more abundant life. Such the founders of the Christian religion announced the purpose of His advent to have been. Reverent disciples took Him at His word and behold the achievements Godward they have wrought.

"Jesus was not only the revelator of His Father. He was the Christian seer, the Christian statesman par excellence. He recognized, what one day all of us will likewise recognize, that every truth must necessarily be conditioned by the circumstances attending its enunciation. We understand gravity today better than Newton did. A generation from now, relatively will be better comprehended than today. If we do not understand Christianity better today than the early church did, then the Holy Spirit has failed of His mission."

DR. W. S. LONG'S CAREER AS TEACHER SPANS THREE SCORE YEARS

Chapel Hill, Oct. 21.—Sixty-three years' successful teaching experience; county superintendent of schools under Dr. Calvin H. Wiley, North Carolina's first state superintendent of public instruction, and under every succeeding state superintendent of public instruction, which North Carolina has had, except Dr. E. C. Brooks; founder and first president of a college, devoted preacher and leader in his denomination for more than an half century—these services form a part of the contribution to the educational and religious life of North Carolina made by Dr. William S. Long, of Chapel Hill, who celebrates his eighty-third birthday tomorrow. Dr. Long is among the oldest, if not the oldest, of the active teachers of North Carolina today, and he probably has the widest first hand acquaintance with the educational history of this State.

Dr. Long was born in Alamance County, Oct. 22, 1839. At the age of sixteen he was prepared for college. He was very eager to secure a college education, but his father was unwilling to do more for one of his seven sons than for the other and he seemed unable then to send them all to college. However, he agreed to lend William the money for that purpose. The son was to pay the father for time also and to keep an itemized account of all expenditures, giving his note and paying interest at six per cent. Later he repaid the cost of his college education, in large part by preparing his own brothers for college in a school which he had established after the war. The father gave him credit for the tuition of his brothers and as they became prepared for college they borrowed money from their father just as William had done. They in turn gave their notes and in this way all obtained a college course.

License To Preach.

William finished his college course in 1860 and took charge of an academy in Virginia. In October of that year he was licenced to preach by the North Carolina Conference of the Christian Church. At the close of the Civil War he opened a school in Graham, which he called Graham High School, and there he continued to teach until 1890. In 1888 the Southern Christian Convention adopted Mr. Long's school as a denominational college and he turned it over to that body. The school was chartered as Elon College and Mr. Long was made the first president. In 1890 the institution was transferred from Graham to the present location. Meantime he had had other valuable educational experience. In July 1858, a teacher's institute was held at the court house in Graham, Alamance County, conducted by Professor W. H. Doherty who had been associated with Horace Mann at Antioch College, Ohio. Mr. Long who had been a student of Doherty served as the latter's assistant at this institute, which was the first teachers' institute ever held in North Carolina. Calvin H. Wiley was present and took part in the program as was also Professor J. D. Campbell who had commenced the republication of the North Carolina journal of education in Greensboro.

Appointed Superintendent.

Superintendent Wiley was interested in the young teacher and secured him to collect certain facts in regard to the school conditions of Alamance. Shortly afterwards Mr. Long was appointed examiner of teachers, or superintendent of schools for Alamance, and from that time, with the exception of short intervals, he served as county examiner or superintendent under every State superintendent, except the present one, Dr. E. C. Brooks.

Dr. Long has been honored in many ways. For eight years he was president of the Southern Christian Convention. In 1872 Trinity College conferred on him the degree of Master of Arts, and in 1890 the Union Christian College of Indiana conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity. He also holds a degree of LL.D., from Elon College. For many years he was a leading teacher and preacher in North Carolina and he had much to do with the establishment of the graded schools in Burlington, Graham and Haw River.

In spite of his eighty-three years, packed full of devoted service to his church and State, Dr. Long is still very active and takes a lively interest in educational and public matters. He has been teaching in the public schools of Orange County for several years, last year serving as principal of a two-teacher school four miles from Chapel Hill near the Chatham County line. He is a regular attendant at the monthly teachers' meeting of Orange county and his advice is often sought by the school authorities. He is greatly beloved not only in Chapel Hill but throughout the State where he is widely known. He is modest and has never pressed claim for public confidence and favor but has enjoyed and still enjoys a large share of both. As pioneer in public education Dr. Calvin H. Wiley had in him a staunch supporter at a time when the public school idea in North Carolina was making a hard fight for the place which it deserved. His long service as teacher and school administrator has given him a first-hand knowledge of educational conditions in North Carolina which few people possess. His reminiscences of early school practices are full of valuable information concerning the early educational life in his native State.—News and Observer Oct. 22, 1922.

THE TRAIL OF THE KINGDOM.

BY REV. C. B. RIDDLE.

One denomination is using the post card method to bring to the attention of the children the needs of the foreign field. The plan is for various missionaries to have a list of Sunday school pupils and send them post cards showing the pictures of peoples and conditions in foreign lands. In this way the missionary message is kept constantly before the Sunday school members.

The returns are all in from the recent election and it is quiet noteworthy to see that the "Wet" issue, wherever projected in the various states, met with defeat. The exception may be noted, however, in New Jersey. This state went wet on both Senator and Governor. This cannot be interpreted as a change of heart for New Jersey elected a wet Governor three years ago.

W. J. Johnson (better known as "Pussyfoot" Johnson) is now in New South Wales, Australia, in the interest of prohibition. Possibly no man in recent years has put so much energy and enthusiasm into the work of prohibition as W. J. Johnson. It will be remembered that he lost an eye in England in the effort to bring prohibition measure squarely before the people of that country.

The number of lepers in this country is rapidly increasing. There is a leper hospital in Louisiana located on the site formerly occupied by the State Home for Lepers. More than two hundred lepers are patients in this hospital with many more on the waiting list. It is proposed to build a church for the exclusive use of these lepers. Mr. Fleming H. Revell of the Fleming H. Revell Company, Publishers, New York City, is treasurer for the fund to build the proposed church.

There has been a surprising increase in anti-lynching sentiment in the State of Georgia in recent months. In the recent report of the State Committee on Race Relations, it was pointed out that during the present year twenty-two indictments were returned against alleged lynch-ers and four convictions secured, carrying penitentiary sentences. Fifteen of the cases are still to be tried. In one lynching case both the deputy sheriff and chief of police are under indictment. During the last thirty-seven years there have been four-hundred and thirty lynchings in the State of Georgia.

The day of prayer for missions this year is to be February 16, 1923. Last year, for the first time, Canada joined with the United States in observing the same date. The number of programs sold for this event is increasing each year. Most of these meetings are interdenominational and breathe a community spirit rather than being fostered by any denomination. The theme this year is to be about two hours in length, and wherever practicable and convenient, to have both morning and evening services.

"Moonlight Schools" is the name of a new book just from the press of E. P. Dutton & Company, New York. Cora Wilson Stewart. "Moonlight Schools" is the picturesque name given to the night schools for illiterate adults in rural communities, first tried as an experiment in the mountainous districts of Kentucky, and which have since spread to Tennessee, the Carolinas, Alabama, Minnesota, and many other states. Mrs. Stewart, as the author of the Act creating the first Illiteracy Commission in history, the author of the first text-book for adult illiterates, and the inspiration at the back of the anti-illiteracy crusade which produced the "Moonlight Schools" has often been asked for a book telling the story of these schools and of the movement they embody and promote. Here she presents the experience of many years of strenuous campaigning against illiteracy and on account of the achievements of adults who—often at an advanced age—have escaped from the darkness of illiteracy by way of the portals of the "Moonlight Schools." It is a stimulating record of a great enthusiasm and of a great movement of profound importance to the welfare of the nation.

Let Jesus Lead.

We as His children ought to be very careful how we walk and talk before the world today. We often hear people say, if that is religion. I don't want it. If we will let Jesus lead it will be all right. By our talk lots of times we make ourselves known. Let us live close to the Lord Jesus, and when he comes it will all be well with us.

We are rejoicing this morning over the fact that our Church is moving along so nicely. We are working and praying that the First Christian Church of Richmond may meet with success. We pray God's blessing on our work here. We feel that it is the Lord's work, and may the Holy Spirit have right of way in this work. May what we do, be done to the glory of God and the Salvation of souls. J. W. PRICE.

Joy in the heart, though there's frost on the ground,

Thanksgiving Day is the day of good cheer—
Happiness, hopefulness, faith should abound,
All through the year!

Peace in the soul, though the red leaves have blown,

Thanksgiving Day in the day of God's love—
Lord, in the name of the Mercies You've shown, Smile down from above!

PRESBYTERIANS CALLING A HALT.

Not only is the world in a stir, but even the Church in many of its branches is mightily stirred in some of its centers, and the end is not yet. The stir goes on as gravely as if there were nothing to fear, no matter how much the stir be accelerated.

In the world the stir is over political conditions. Kingdoms are crumbling and empires are falling, meantime the stir goes on at full speed and no one can tell what the outcome of it may be.

In the Church the stir is over doctrinal views. Not over mere differences of opinion, but open rebellion against even Biblical standards such as the Church has long held to, and the clouds are growing thicker and blacker as these contestants go on with their struggle. What may be the final outcome of it yet remains to be seen. For one, we do not fear what may be the outcome as the issue is related to the Bible, as the Word of God, but we do fear what may be the outcome as the spiritual prosperity of many of the professed children of God—that many will stumble and grow weak in the faith is, we think, beyond question. Indeed that much has already come to pass. Many not only in the laity, but even some ministers, have laid down their ministerial work and are giving themselves to other labors, and if we are not mistaken, this is due in many instances, to the undermining of the faith which these people professed. If we weaken the standards of Christian teaching, we shall just as surely weaken the teachers, for men cannot teach error and keep up their strength as when they lived upon the truth of God's Word.—mark the point and see if it does not come true.

The Presbyterian Standard, a staunch standard of the Presbyterian Faith, does not hesitate to stand for the truth as set forth in the Bible. Not only so, but it condemns the practice of some of their big churches in the matter of their over liberality toward some of the heretics of the day. Let us keep our eyes open and our hearts and minds alert for the truth, so that as we have opportunity we too may take our stand for truth and righteousness.

Our Presbyterian brethren are now well on the way of this battle, and the future is big with the promise of brave defenders of Bible truth:

The Presbyterian Standard puts the situation in a limited way as follows:

An anomaly in religious activities has been the preaching of a Baptist minister in the First Presbyterian Church of New York. Why should a denomination so rich in pulpit talent go outside to find a man to occupy the place of regular preacher in one of its great historic churches? Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick is a man of rare gifts. He is a fine phrase-maker, a wizard with words, and is reputed to be a splendid speaker. But, why could not his own denomination furnish a field for the exercise of these gifts? Most of all, Harry Emerson Fosdick is a rationalist of a radical cast. During the war he pictured our soldiers in France as ideal Christians. The one article in his creed is altruism. He scouted the type of religion exemplified by Jonathen Edwards, who resolved to make the salvation of his soul the supreme business of every day. He is selfish who seeks his own salvation, while he is worthy of all praise who, regardless of his own personal relation to God, renders service to his fellow-man.

Not only has it puzzled the minds of those interested in the matter that a Baptist minister should be employed to preach in a Presbyterian Church, but it has added to their perplexity that such preaching as this particular Baptist preaches, should be relished by a congregation so long served by preachers of old-fashioned, orthodox views. How could the venerable, pastor emeritus, Dr. George Alexander, who bears the reputation of being a devoted believer in the evangelical doctrines of the Scriptures, remain quiescent, while the people were being beguiled from the "old paths?" The only answer to these questions seemed to be that all parties in New York Presbytery had come to be utterly indifferent to Christian doctrine. Whatever pleased the people, pleased the preachers. Whoever could get a hearing for his views was welcome to proclaim them, no matter how widely views departed from the church's standards.

It is a matter of great interest that at length the voice of one church court is lifted in protest. Dr. Fosdick preached a sermon last May which was published in pamphlet form and widely distributed by an admiring layman. In sending out this sermon, this layman said. "It set a landmark in the progress of religion that such a sermon should be preached in the old First Presbyterian Church of New York." It seemed to many to set a landmark in the progress of error. Their inward thought was, if such a sermon as that is allowed to pass unchallenged, why should the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. longer claim to be a confessional church? If it could suffer such teaching as that to be sent forth with its label on it, then it had practically abrogated its pure food law. It was virtually saying to the public that it recognized no such thing as heresy.

It is somewhat reassuring to note that the great Presbytery of Philadelphia has challenged the right of Dr. Fosdick to use the pulpit of a Presbyterian church for discrediting the evangelical faith, and for substituting his bold rationalism. It sends an overture to the General Assembly asking that venerable court to call a halt, and to take effective measures to see that the preaching in the First Presbyterian Church of New York is henceforth in harmony with the Confession of Faith.

This would seem a most righteous thing to do. It is but pointing the Assembly to a manifest and exigent duty. It is demanding that the General Assembly keep faith with the Master, and with the general public. What justification can there be for a church to set up a standard of doctrine as a test of orthodoxy, require all its ministers to subscribe to it, and then permit a church under its jurisdiction to utterly disregard it, and employ a man to do what he can to destroy it?

Plain as is the path of duty to which the overture points, the Presbytery was manifestly not without apprehensions. It was at pains to call attention to a record which the Assembly of 1910 made: Here are the statements to which that Assembly set its seal:

1. "It is an essential doctrine of the Word of God and our standards that the Holy Spirit did so inspire, guide and move the writers of Holy Scripture as to keep them from error.

2. "It is an essential doctrine of the Word of God and our standards that our Lord Jesus Christ was born of the Virgin Mary.

3. "It is an essential doctrine of the Word of God and our standards that Christ offered up Himself a sacrifice to satisfy divine justice and to reconcile us to God.

4. "It is an essential doctrine of the Word of God and of our standards concerning our Lord Jesus Christ, that on the third day He rose again from the dead with the same body with which He suffered, with which He also ascended into heaven, and there sitteth on the right hand of His Father, making intercession.

5. "It is an essential doctrine of the Word of God as the supreme standard of our faith that our Lord Jesus showed His power and love by working mighty miracles. This power working was not contrary to nature, but superior to it."

These are strong, clear affirmations of what the Assembly deemed essential doctrines. What can be more obvious than the duty of the Assembly to maintain these truths, to give currency to them, and to guard its pulpits and people against opposing errors? Many lovers of these great and precious truths will watch with interest the outcome of this act of Philadelphia Presbytery.

That there is trouble ahead is indicated by the fact that twenty members not only opposed the sending of the overture, but when outvoted entered their protest against the action. It is significant that every Union Seminary man fought the overture.

WITH THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

(Editorial Correspondence)

The annual session of the North Carolina Christian Conference for 1922, was last week held at Hines' chapel, Guilford County, N. C. There was a fine attendance on the part of the people. I did not get to the place of meeting till the second day and so missed the breezy session when the matter of the division of the Conference into three bodies was up for discussion. The division matter was settled on the first day, or early on the second day, before I arrived. As we gathered from the reports current among the delegates it was decided to let the oneness of the Conference remain undisturbed for three years. The necessity for this action arose in the fact that the Secretary of State for the State of North Carolina had informed certain brethren that the laws of the State would not permit the dissolution of the body for three years, or until all indebtedness of the Conference was paid. There thus seemed to be a necessity for the brotherhood to wait three years for the division to go into effect. This was not satisfactory to quite a number of the members of the Conference. So, on the second day, dissatisfaction was quite common. At length Brother E. W. Clements, of Morrisville, introduced a resolution calling the matter up again, and after quite a little discussion, Rev. W. C. Wicker introduced a motion to allow the three separate Conferences, as they formerly existed, to proceed to organize and get ready for work as soon as it might suit them, with the understanding that the present Conference should continue as one body till it could discharge the indebtedness now upon it, thus avoiding the necessity for the State to keep the new Conferences from functioning for three years, or till the indebtedness should be discharged. This arrangement seemed to give entire satisfaction, at least so far as we could learn. Now, during the coming year the three conferences will meet and organize, get to work and then at such time as each may see fit to agree upon they will meet in annual session, meantime the old Conference, covering the State, will meet on Thursday after the second Sunday in November, 1923, to transact such business as may claim their attention in winding up the affairs of said Conference. It adjourned to assemble in 1923 with the church at Wake Chapel, Wake County, N. C., as above indicated. We have rarely seen a more satisfactory settlement of a question which had previously stirred up so much discussion, and we hope for the very best results from the same.

This perplexing question being out of the way, the brethren got down to business and to work in earnest. The discussions on the various enterprises of the Church, while more or less spirited, was briefer than usual perhaps, but none the less interest-making. The reports on Missions, Education, Moral Reform, Publications, Sunday Schools, Christian Endeavor, and possibly others, were well presented.

Rev. T. E. White, the brother who is going to the Isle of Wight County, Va., pastorate, embracing the churches at Windsor, Mount Carmel, Isle of Wight Court House and Bethlehem (which is in Nansemond County), made a very fine address on publications. It was decidedly original and very interesting. It called forth many expressions of appreciation and made a deep impression on the body. It was requested for publication in these columns.

Brother Charles E. Johnston, Superintendent of the Christian Orphanage, was at his best in presenting the claims of the enterprise. His success has been a marvel to us all and is surely the man for the place. They have now 90 orphans in their care and are expecting to have 100 by January 1, 1923. The orphanage has not only been a blessing to many fatherless and motherless children, but it has also been a blessing to our Church—it has learned to do better giving to the cause of Christ than it had ever done before this institution was launched, and now its work is the joy of every wide-awake Christian in the whole denomination. So far as we are acquainted, we believe this is true. Indeed, we do not see how any real Christian could fail to have joy in such a work as is being done in this orphanage.

Prof. P. J. Kernodle, of The Sun's Richmond office, was present, and seemed to be doing a good work in securing renewals and as opportunity came, in securing new subscribers. He reports the increase in new subscribers as very encouraging in a general way.

Two of the liveliest men in the Conference, age being considered, were two brothers, and both preachers. They were Revs. W. S. Long, D. D., and Rev. D. A. Long, D. D. Rev. D. A. is close on to eighty, and Rev. W. S. is now in his eighty-fourth year.

Rev. J. W. Holt, also a veteran member of the body, was present and seemed much stronger, physically, than he did in the Convention at Burlington, N. C., about the middle of October. He is interested in all the doings of the Church, nor does he forget to stand for what he thinks is for its best interests. Though weak in body, his mind seems alert.

There were three of the veterans of the Conference absent, being too feeble to attend. These were, first, Rev. J. D. Wicker, Sanford, N. C., who is, if we are not mistaken, over eighty years of age; second, Rev. William G. Clements, Morrisville, N. C., who, if we remember correctly, is now in his eighty-third year; third, Rev. Jas. W. Wellons, D. D., now in his ninety-seventh year. These dear brethren were very much missed, both by their personal absence and their wise and Christian counsel. God bless the dear old men who have been with us in the burden and heat of the day, bearing their share of the work and the burdens that naturally fall upon the shoulders of the men who are known to be ready to take even more than their share and carry it.

Rev. J. D. Wicker entered the work of the ministry when he was about forty years of age and has done a good work in his day. Brother Wicker's beloved wife is very feeble and likely this, more than his own feebleness, kept him from Conference.

Rev. W. G. Clements is rendered quite feeble by a fall which he got several years ago, making it very difficult for him to get about in large crowds of people.

Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D., Elon College, is the oldest man among us and is necessarily too old and feeble to get about to our public meetings.

These veterans have long been pillars in the work of our Church in North Carolina, and were much missed by the delegates and the people who assembled on this occasion for the annual rally of our work. They are indeed beloved brethren and will long hold a warm place in the hearts of our people, living or dead.

Since we last met with this Conference, many faces have disappeared—they have gone home, but the memory of these absentees is yet fresh and precious in the hearts and minds of the people.

Rev. R. L. Williamson, having served his term as President, and having done his work well, retired gracefully, and Rev. W. C. Wicker, D. D., was chosen as his successor. Brother Wicker is a son of Rev. J. D. Wicker, and is one of the strong men of the Church. He is a man of fine educational advantages. Indeed, it is said by good judges that he can take the place of any man on the faculty of Elon College and fill his place well. That is the kind of a specialist we like—a man who has so specialized as to be able to take any place that may be put upon him and do the work well.

Rev. Stanley W. Harrell was chosen Secretary and seemed to be well acquainted with the duties which fell to his hands.

Brother W. J. Ballentine is the Treasurer and a most excellent officer is he.

I must close this already too lengthy letter, as space is crying out, no more room for this time.

TITHING OUR TIME.

I was made to wonder if it would not be profitable to both the work of God and ourselves if we would get into the habit of tithing our time as well as our money. True, money is needed to carry on God's work. But is not the time to study God's Word and to read what other experienced Christians have learned and given to us in periodical or book form very necessary also? It is so easily for the busy housewife to think she has not time to study and yet she will perhaps pray and ask God to help her be a blessing to others and be able to show them the way of salvation. If she will be a blessing to others and show them the way to Jesus, she must take time to sit at Jesus' feet and learn of Him first. We cannot hope to grow into the best that God expects of us without much prayer, study and preparation. Many people have spent time and talents writing valuable books that would help us so much, but we must take time to read them. Make room for reading in your daily plan of work; that is as necessary to your spiritual welfare as food is to your physical body. Take time when you can be quiet and free to think undisturbed by the children and other home cares.

I find that the early morning hours are the best to give to God, while most children are yet in bed and you can be free to think and ponder over the blessings and mercies of God. Recently I learned a valuable lesson which may help some other sister to solve her problem. I had not been keeping up my prayer and Bible-study regularly. The children seemed unusually troublesome and it seemed as if I just could not force myself into doing anything regularly. I saw something had to be done at once. So my husband and I talked it over and we decided upon a plan which has worked wonders with me. In the early morning hours while the children are left in bed I place the alarm clock in plain view so that I do not forget how long I am reading, then I sit down and spend a certain time in reading, writing and a general Bible-study. I find that if I neglect to study God's Word and pray that I slip back and lose much I have gained. One cannot stop a wagon half-way up hill and expect it to remain where it first stopped. When once it stops going forward and upward, it naturally begins to gradually slip back. So with us in our daily lives, if we neglect to try to learn more of God's will, we shall naturally become careless and lose what ground we have gained. We must keep on fighting the battle, we must keep pushing ahead and striving to learn more and more of what God wants us to do. We must take time to keep saved.—Selected.

As Did the Mother of Moses.

An interesting story from the time of the deportation of Armenians from the city of Urfa has recently become known. In obedience to the commands of Talaat Pasha, the subject peoples from the surrounding country and from the city of Urfa were gathered in camps or driven in long processions through the caravan streets, on their way to the desert.

As these trains continued to pass through the city hundreds and thousands of children, weakened by hunger and unable to walk farther had to be left by the roadside. Their cries caused certain officials of the Provincial government to open orphanages—very primitive ones, to be sure—into which these children might be gathered. They were given Turkish names and the older ones were taught the Moslem faith. But these officials found it impossible to secure Mohammedian women to care for the children. Consequently Armenian women were employed, and these employees were permitted to remain in Urfa. From day to day as the caravans continued to pass, the more promising children from the hungry multitude were brought to the orphanage. Among the rescued some were only a few months old, and mothers who had recently lost their own infants were sought to nurse these little ones, as, with food and rest they were able to do.

So it came about that in a few instances, unknown to her employers, an Armenian mother, like that Hebrew mother of old, became an employed nurse for her own child.

If we mean, by the help of God, to emphasize before the world the worth of our Five Cardinal Principles, and help support all the enterprises that God has given us out of those Principles, why not preach about, teach of and pray for the one Movement that does this very thing, namely our Men and Millions?

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The following clipped from Ledger-Dispatch is the suggestion for this letter: "Pessimist" and under that the picture of Mrs. Sarah Smith, of New York, who, on her ninety-ninth birthday, looks with disfavor on the youth of today, intimating that they rule their parents.

Is her judgment the result of age or the statement of a fact? Do children in this day rule their parents? Was Isaiah right when he described the wolf and lamb dwelling together, the leopard lying down with the kid, the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them? Did the Babe of Bethlehem draw the wise men from the east, and the angelic singers from heaven? Would home be home without the children? Would the church be the church without the children and the Sunday School? Is it true that, "of such is the Kingdom of Heaven?" Is it true that, "Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the Kingdom of Heaven?" Does the "world move forward on the feet of little children?" Would there be any Christmas were there no children? Do parents live for themselves or for their children? Is the human question box the child? Is all knowledge first in the form of question? Do children ask questions that wise men cannot answer? Who plays the piano in the home? Who runs the car that carries the family to Sunday School and church? Who reads the most and is the best educated in the modern family? Who makes the progress of the world the past generation or the present generation?

The opportunities of this age are the finest of any age in human history for education, and many children know more than their parents. The parents discover this and listen to their children as never before. The family is more democratic than it was a hundred years ago. There was a time when parents had the power of life and death over their children, and they exercised such power. Rulers had such power. Pharaoh decreed that all male children among the Jews should be destroyed at birth. That day is gone forever. Children now have a voice in the family and, where they know more, parents yield to them; and it is wise to do so. If parents lose control of their children, the children are not wholly to blame. The sense of obedience on the part of children is not dead nor grossly abused. The absence of cruel punishment in home and school indicates improvement in both. School children behave better than they did when Mrs. Sarah Smith went to school. Pessimism belongs to age; optimism belongs to youth; the same judgment results from the average in medium age and life. The young lawyer attends to the legal affairs of his father's estate. The young doctor ministers to his aged parents. The young minister expounds the word of God to his grand-parents. The little child leads the parents to Sunday School. The young daughter inspires the painting of the house, the clean linen in the dining room. The little child brings in the phonograph, the new Bible and the song book. There are old Christians who knew little of liberal giving until the children joined the church. Looking backward never saved a soul. It cost the life of Lot's wife. The world did not know God until it knew Him through The Child. "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father."

God does not lose control of men because they think and choose and act for themselves; He controls them all the more. Parents do not lose control of their children because the children know enough to think and choose for themselves. They thereby increase their control.

ELON LETTER

Democracy must be organized before it can make its ideals effective. The exercise of high authority is not inconsistent with democracy. The difference between democracy and autocracy is in the sanction from which the authority of the ruler proceeds. The President of the United States exercises royal power and it is right that he should. It is the only hope of effectiveness and efficiency for a free people. But the President of the United States secures his authority by the voice of the populace. His authority does not inhere in himself nor does it originate with God. It comes from you and me and the millions like us, the plain, uncrowned, but sovereign people of this nation. And we can change our President if we do not approve the way he rules us.

The Christian Church rightly separated from Bishop Asbury's Methodist Church in 1792, not because the Church does not need persons of authority for the effective and efficient conduct of her business, but because there is no more room for the divine rights of bishops than there was for the divine rights of kings. Bishops who claimed divine sanction for their governmental powers have gradually had their divinity invaded by the laity and eventually the whole claim will be cast into the discard. And as we wonder now how the people ever for a moment tolerated the obnoxious claim of kings to rule by divine right, so the Church too in some happy day will look upon the whole claim of divine rights for ecclesiastics as ridiculous. The claim now is tragic, because it is the main obstacle in the way of the reunion of a divided Christendom. This does not mean that a reunited Church may not have bishops. But it does mean that the sanction for them will come from the members of the Church and not from a close corporation of ecclesiastical overlords.

But our Christian Church needs a more effective organization in order to accomplish her work for Christ. To be very specific, our annual conferences should not be helpless in the face of the problem we face of churches refusing to enter into pastorate relations. The conferences should be accorded the right to group churches into pastorates and to forbid ministers accepting calls in the future from a single church in such a group. Again our licentiate ministers so they tell me, feel the need of a visit from an older minister occasionally to their fields and of counsel on the ground respecting their work. Why should not our Conferences employ a Home Mission Field Secretary for this purpose? The Conference president of the M. P. Church has this duty. They are as free as we are. Their church law forbids that any one should hold this office for a longer term than five years. A democracy can change its rulers or leaders, if you prefer, whenever the common good demands it. Why should we be afraid of a method that promises better efficiency just because our fathers did not see it that way?

I know of two splendid ministers who have left our Church recently. They reached a crisis in their local church work. They needed counsel. They could not get it through any recognized channel with us. They went where they can get it. I am not justifying their leaving our Church. I am just regretting that we lost them unnecessarily. I am arguing for a change in our official arrangement that will enable us to prevent such leakages as these.

I am getting sick and tired too of this disposition to refer to our general officers as autocrats. Beloved, these autocrats owe their authority to us. They are our hope, these general officers of our Church are, and if we fail to support them, the cause of Christ must suffer. During the American Christian Convention in Burlington a brother referred disparagingly to what he styled "The Dayton crowd!" Immediately my Irish was up and I claimed the personal ownership of the whole bunch. We put that "Dayton Crowd" in office and we can retire them to private life. It is their duty to promote the life and institutions of our Church. We must support them or turn them out. But while they are in, they are our only hope. Not to support them is to be guilty of treason to the Christ. We have the right to criticize certainly. But my brother make your criticism to the official privately or to the board that controls him. Back-biting in the Lord's work is inexcusable folly. And even while you criticize, be loyal enough to the cause of Christ to support those whose official scalp you seek.

This Christian Church of ours has achieved great things for God. We have greater things yet to do for him. We must reunite Christendom. We shall never do it until we improve our governmental organization so as to be able to deliver our full force for Christ and His cause. Let us face the facts and take measures to make our democracy more serviceable to the Kingdom.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LETTER

It seems proper that in this first "Letter" something should be said regarding the origin, name, location, and grade of Bethlehem Christian College. But this information is given with a knowledge of the fact that history is usually undesirable reading.

Bethlehem College originated first in the minds and hearts of the people of Georgia and Alabama. Every great institution is preceded by a great need. It was the sense of great need that actuated the people to think in terms of an institution of higher learning in the far South. For many years this institution was only a dream. But this dream soon translated itself into a vision which was cherished until it found expression at the Southern Christian Convention at Burlington, North Carolina, 1916. At this Convention there was considerable agitation relative to the College, and a Board of Trustees was elected. But the proposed College received only the moral indorsement of the Convention. And of course the Trustees could not build a College without money. Hence no definite steps were taken looking to the establishment of an institution.

Two years past and the Convention met at Raleigh, North Carolina. During this time the Men and Millions movement was born and the funds accruing from this movement gave rise to the hope that some day the long cherished vision of the people of the far South would be a reality. And it will.

The Raleigh Convention appointed a committee on Location, Charter, Grade and Name. This committee entered upon its duties at once.

The competitive plan was adopted by the committee as the most feasible course to pursue in securing a location. The committee received offers of land and money from Columbus, Ga., Americus, Ga., Roanoke, Ala., Abanda, Ala., and Wadley, Ala., for the location of the proposed College in their several localities. After visiting all the places making offers for the location of the proposed College, the committee decided to locate the College at Wadley, Ala., the forty-one-acre campus being given by Mr. Hodge, a citizen of the town, and $24,000 in cash being given by the citizens of the town and community.

After surveying the field and investigating the conditions, it was thought that an institution of Junior College grade would meet all present demands and is all that should be undertaken at the present time. It is hoped that within a few years it will become a standard College.

The committee sent out requests to the interested people to send in names for the College. Quite a number of suggestions were received. After receiving these suggestions, the committee decided to name the institution "Bethlehem" Christian College." The name "Bethlehem" comes from the Hebrew words which mean "The House of Bread." More next week.

FROM GERMANY.

On board Steamer Reliance, U. A. L. from Hamburg to New York.

Dear Doctor Barrett and the Christian Sun:

I am on my way home with my invalid wife from a two months visit to Europe. I have forgotten where I wrote from last; but as I have spent forty days in Germany, I shall confine my thoughts principally to Berlin and Germany. I wish first to say that we sailed on the Homeric, formerly the Bismark, in peace times; but was taken over by the English after the war. This is the second largest ship afloat and a palace on the seas. Its passengers were mixed with celebrated men and women. Some of the very rich and some of great talent and women from the folly up to grand opera. They seemed to be married women who had left their husbands, wives and sweethearts homes off on a vacation for pleasure. Two bars opened as soon as the three-mile was passed and high life started up and continued the entire eight days on the seas. We are returning on a splendid ship, loaded down with passengers of very different temperaments. They all seem like a large family of sober, genteel ladies and gentlemen. No drinking, no gambling, no hilarity, nothing but harmony and genteel conduct. This is due in a large manner to recent emergency law passed by Congress in the States preventing wines, liquors, and beer or any spirits to enter the port of New York on ship board.

I understand all the ships sailing from Europe for New York since this law was passed have left all their liquor behind. There is no sign of any on this ship—and I understand they always carried it before. This should be evidence sufficient to satisfy our folks who say prohibition does not prohibit, that our U. S. A. Congress intends to prohibit the sale of this demon. This means good bye to light wines and beer some of our politicians are clamoring for. You can give credit for this blessing to our grand and glorious women.

When you have lived for two months in Europe in the midst of wines, liquors, beers etc., you would certainly enjoy nothing, but pure water as we are getting on this ship. They held Mrs. King in the hospital for thirty days before they gave her the first drop of water. I was forced to buy mineral water at my hotel, while they served wines almost free with your meals. Food is getting very scarce in Germany, but they seem to have an abundance of wine. I was taught to believe at home that the Germans were cannibals, murderers, highway robbers and we were told by the French, Belgians, and Hollanders that we were going into Germany at the risk of our loves.

I am glad that I have lived with them long enough to know them better and to say that we have formed the wrong impression. I have found them to be great friends to me. I have received every comfort and courtesy that I could wish. My own country could not have done more for me and my wife's comfort than these people have done.

It is true, Germany is on her knees now, and the people are beginning to feel the pangs of suffering, and she is to be pitied. France has taken all her coal and unless some relief they will die this winter from starvation and cold. They are now practically on the verge of Bolshevism. The societies are in power now and they have a splendid leader in President Ebert, who is only a very plain man, but they say they will not starve while there is food in Germany or the nearby countries.

Russia and Poland have suffered under Bolshevism as ignorant as they are and when German starts this force amongst a highly educated and intelligent nation as she is, conditions will be deplorable. Our Ambassador, Mr. Houghton, said to me the day before leaving Berlin that he was hopeful of making a friend in the States this winter to help these people through the very cold season. I truly hope he will be successful, as I have here found them to be men and women of big hearts just like some of us.

The Quakers are doing a wonderful lot of good in Germany. They are like angels from above to these people. They are feeding the poor children at school, otherwise they could not go to school or even live.

Berlin is a great city of four and one half million people. The Kaiser did so much for their city from 1901 to 1910. The architecture is practically the same all over the empire, but they have the best streets and buildings I have ever seen in any city. None of the buildings are over four or five stories, but are all well constructed.

I cannot understand why the Kaiser or the Crown Prince signed a declaration of war when they had all to lose and nothing to gain. I am writing this letter on the 5th day out in the midst of our first storm and will give your editor trouble to read it.

We have five more days of this trip before reaching New York. I have had quite an experience in Europe for the past sixty days and but for one sad experience in Berlin—this would have been the most wonderful trip of my life. I have enough and when I shall be permitted to see the statue of liberty once more, I think I shall feel like saying, "Old lady, if you see my face again—you will have to turn around." —JOHN KING.

THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE.

The North Carolina Christian Conference met in Annual session at Hines Chapel, Guilford county, Tuesday, November 14, 1922, and was called to order by Rev. R. L. Williamson, president. After religious worship conducted by Rev. G. O. Lankford, D.D., the conference proceeded to business. The welcome address was made by Rev. C. E. Gerring, pastor of the church, and the response by L. M. Clymer of the Greensboro Church.

In the afternoon the Referendum Vote was considered at length, but it was not until the third day that the matter was fully disposed of.

Wednesday, after the introductory exercises of the second day, the report on Sunday Schools and Christian Endeavor was considered. An address by Miss Eldredge was given. The reports on Home and Foreign Missions were read. Dr. J. O. Atkinson spoke on these reports. The report of the Woman's Board was presented by Mrs. Carroll. Men and Millions Forward Movement was presented and was stressed. Besides the address by the Mission Secretary many others pledged their support.

Thursday, after opening exercises, the conference proceeded to the consideration of the reports on Superannuation, Moral Reform, and Memories. The apportionment for the coming year stand substantially as for the past year.

The report on Christian Orphanage was presented by Chas. D. Johnston, Superintendent. The report on Christian Union by Dr. W. A. Harper; the report on Education by Dr. N. G. Newman; and the report on Religious Literature by Rev. C. B. Riddle—all were duly considered. Rev. T. E. White delivered the address on Religious Literature to good effect.

The following resolutions were adapted:

Whereas there is a motion passed to continue the North Carolina Christian Conference for three years until the present obligations of said Conferences be met, moved that the three original Conferences be authorized to reorganize with the same members, officers, and committees as at the time of merger.

Be it Resolved: That the local conferences be requested to hold their annual meetings before the date for the annual session of The North Carolina Christian Conference which meets in annual session on Tuesday following the second Sunday in November: And that first, all ordained ministers holding membership in the local conferences shall be members of the N. C. Christian Conference, and second lay delegates shall be elected by the local conferences to the North Carolina Conference on the basis of one lay delegate for each two hundred members or major fraction thereof within said local conference.

It is furthermore requested that a Commission of Policy be appointed to draw up and submit to the North Carolina Christian Conference during its present session, Articles of Agreement outlining the scope of work and the authority to be exercised both by the local Conferences, and by the General Conference.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield was ordained by Revs. T. E. White, P. H. Fleming and W. S. Long. Drs. Atkinson and Harper were chosen delegates to the Washington, (D. C.) Conference of Faith and Order. After the installation of Dr. W. C. Wicker, President; Hon. W. J. Graham, Vice President; Rev. S. C. Harrell, Secretary; Dr. W. A. Harper, Assistant Secretary; and W. J. Ballentine, Treasurer, the conference adjourned to meet on Tuesday after the second Sunday in November, 1923, at Wake Chapel in Wake County, N. C.—Benediction.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

GIVE THE SIGNERS A CHANCE.

This writer happens to know that what thousands who signed pledges for Men and Millions want now is a chance to pay those pledges. If pastors will just speak a word of encouragement, and if Captains will speak to the signers, they will cheerfully and faithfully pay these pledges, meet their obligations to this movement of, and for their church. Several who signed these pledges have said to the writer recently, "we do not know who the Captain in our church is, and our pastor never speaks about Men and Millions." These subscribers are honest, sincere, loyal and want to discharge their solemn obligations. Why not give them a chance? Many have been in such financial strains that they could not pay. Business is better now: conditions are favorable: money is easier and now they wish to pay up.

Every Captain and every Woman Leader in every church should now get busy and give the subscribers a chance. It will only take a day or two of each Captains time to get on his car or his buggy and call upon every subscriber in his church. Oh! how we wish all could be given this chance to do this great and good and holy thing for the church we love, and for the one cause—Men and Millions—that undertakes to carry forward all the church is, has, and tries to do.

J. O. ATKINSON.

KNOCKING MEN AND MILLIONS.

A faithful Captain in one of our churches writes as follows:

"I think Men and Millions is one of the greatest movements that God has entrusted to us.

I have not been able to do much, however, and unless there is a change I do not see any chance to do much. The Movement has been knocked on every side, and the thing that cuts me to the quick is that some of our ministers have knocked it in churches, in the homes and everywhere else they have had a chance. If you will multiply this kind of preaching by bad crops you will see what a hard time I am having with Men and Millions."

As I have stated in this correspondence before, no member of the Christian Church who understands Men and Millions can consistently oppose it. For it stands exactly for what the Christian Church stands for, seeks to proclaim to all the world the five cardinal principles of the Church and to help in every way possible every enterprise of the Church. The preacher who in the pulpit, or out of it, opposes Men and Millions opposes, therefore, the very Church that affords him a pulpit from which he preaches and before his people advocates that which would destroy all that his Church has ever done or is seeking to do. I say this of course, taking it for granted that the pastors opposing understand Men and Millions in its motive, purpose and program. This qualification is added because I know full well that no preacher with an understanding of the purpose and program of Men and Millions can oppose it no more than he can oppose the principles and position and possessions of this present hour some have always managed to misunderstand and oppose the best, the purest and holiest that God ever gave to earth. Not every enterprise that the world opposes is good by any means, but so far as the writer has ever read or observed no really true, noble, holy enterprise or movement has ever been given by God or man which did not meet opposers and objectors. This possibly is the way our Heavenly Father has of making a really good cause strong and mighty in the world.

I have the faith to believe that Men and Millions will not only come to triumph and a great victory but will be the strongest and the more victorious in spite of the indifference and the opposition and the misunderstanding on the part of some to this the holiest and the most helpful Movement God has seen fit to give to the Christian Church in all its history.

MEN AND MILLIONS PLEDGES.

Our Men and Millions pledges were made in good faith. As Dr. Staley has so repeatedly said in the Sun we can no more repudiate these pledges than we can any other debt we owe or obligation we have assumed. This obligation in fact is the more binding because we made it in the name and for the sake of our church and God.

We are now seeking to give every subscriber a chance to pay some on his pledges before Dec. 25. Rev. E. M. Carter began last Monday in our Alabama Conference to go in company with the Captain in each church to call on every subscriber in the church to pay something on his M. & M. pledge. Bro. Carter is and has been deeply interested in M. & M. from the beginning and will now give every day of his time to this work till all subscribers in the churches of his Conference have been seen. Bro. Carter is enjoying his work and will meet with success because his heart is in it.

UNITED STUDY OF PROMOTION WORK.

"They were considering the financial programs of the churches, but the one outstanding impression was the spiritual solidarity of the group." Thus an observer characterized the conference on "Better Methods of Promotional Work," held at Columbus, Ohio, November 1 and 2, under the auspices of the Federal Council of the Churches and attended by delegated representatives of the promotional agencies of seventeen denominations. "The great missionary objectives for which each denomination was seeking its money," the observer explained, "were so fully one, and the problems of the several organizations so identical, that there was a new experience of unity in a common task."

The keynote of the inseparability of the financial program from the spiritual motive was sounded in the opening address by Dr. Robert E. Speer, the President of the Federal Council, on "The Purpose and Scope of a Denomination's Promotional Program." "The forward movements or promotional organizations," he said, "must unite, not separate, the financial and the spiritual ideals. Financial support for the church is not simply a business proposition to be handled mechanically through schemes of budgets and apportionments; if it is to be permanently sustained at a high level, it has to rest back on a deep spiritual foundation. We must be on our guard constantly to see that the right motives are appealed to. To appeal for support for the church on the ground that religion helps business, or for missions on the ground that trade and security follow the work of the missionary, is subtly to undermine the real power of the Christian religion."

"The churches are not undertaking these 'forward movements,'" another speaker declared, "in order that they may raise great sums of money; they are raising great sums of money in order that there may be a forward movement."

"The heart of the church is sound to an appeal to meet a real need when once it is clearly seen," was the testimony of Bishop Thomas Nicholson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Chairman of the conference. "As an evidence of this, the Methodist Episcopal Church has raised during the two months ending October 31, $2,000,000. in new money to take the 'sag' out of the Centenary receipts."

The conference was devoted to an interchange of experience as to methods and plans used by the various promotional organizations. The fundamental importance of training in stewardship and methods for doing it in Sunday Schools, study classes, young people's societies and other organizations, was discussed by Rev. David McConaughy, of the New Era Movement of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.; Rev. J. H. White, of the New World Movement of the United Presbyterian Church; Rev. Harry S. Myers, of the Baptist Board of Promotion; Rev. W. E. Lampe, of the Reformed Church in the U. S.; and Rev. G. D. Batdorf, of the United Brethren. Special attention centered around better methods of educational publicity. Rev. Bert Wilson, of the United Christian Missionary Society urged the preparation of literature less in quantity but better in quality. The value of charts and graphs and of the stereopticon was described by Rev. James G. Bailey, of the Presbyterian New Era Movement, and Rev. Ralph E. Diffendorfer, of the Methodist Episcopal Committee on Conservation and Advance, both of whom emphasized the strength of the appeal to the eye. Developing better contact with the press, both in news service and in advertising was urged by Herbert H. Smith, of the Presbyterian Department of Publicity.

The practical questions of budgeting, every-member canvass and accounting were considered in detail. Rev. R. J. Wade, secretary of the Council of Boards of Benevolence of the Methodist Episcopal Church, discussed the advantages of the co-operative budget, including all the boards, missionary, educational and benevolent, as over against the old system under which each of a dozen separate boards made its own independent appeal to the local church. Better Methods in the every-member canvass in the local church were discussed by Rev. M. E. Melvin, of the Progressive Campaign of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. (South), who urged the need for some plan for training canvassers for a more effective carrying out of their task. The importance of better systems of accounting was presented by Rev. J. W. Kilbon, treasurer of the Congregational Commission on Missions, who pointed out the necessity for a uniform definition of what the boards are to mean by "overhead" expenses.

The fact that most of the forward movements are nearing the end of their allotted span caused interest in the relation of the promotional organization to the administrative boards of the denomination. The development of central promotional agencies, functioning for all the board, was noted in most of the denominations, in some cases, like the Methodist and the Baptist, entirely supplanting all separate promotional work by the individual boards. The further step of unified administration among the boards, as well as unified promotion was noted in the case of the Presiding Bishop and Council of the Protestant Episcopal Church and the United Christian Missionary Society, the latter being described by Rev. F. W. Burnham, the President of the Society.

The conference proved so helpful that the Federal Council of the Churches was requested to convene a similar gathering next April, to consider the general theme "Mobilizing the Resources of the Local Church for the whole Christian Program."

The following promotional organizations were represented and participated in all the discussions of the Conference:

The General Board of Promotion of the Northern Baptist Convention.

The Congressional Commission on Missions.
The United Christian Missionary Society.

The Forward Movement of the Christian Church.

The Forward Movement of the Evangelical Synod.

The Five Years Meeting of the Friends.

The Methodist Episcopal Committee on Conservation and Advance.

The Department of Finance of the Canadian Methodist Church.

The Forward Movement of the Methodist Protestant Church.

The New Life Movement of the Moravian Church.

The New Era Movement of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A.

NEAR EAST RELIEF.

By FRED D. SMITH

(Formerly International Secretary Y. M. C. A., now Chairman of the Commission on Councils of Churches, Federal Council of Churches.)

"The need of American relief in the Near East is as great as it ever was. Who dares to think or say that the need is over? With such pitiable poverty there it seemed as if we never would catch up. Just an illustration. I went down to the dock at Constantinople and saw two barges come in,—three thousand people, sickly, half-starved, helpless, hopeless, refugees in rags or nakedness, wretched beyond belief unless you once see it with your own eyes. 'They go to Near East Relief,' said the matter-of-fact dock-master Scotch, I think 'a dribble of where they come from.' And I thought back to my America with bounties heaped up and riches stored up for rust to decay and moths to corrupt. God help us to pour out rivers, not dribbles, of relief. America, believe me, must do this job—for after the war the rest of the nations are all in.

"I do not hesitate to say that the Near East Relief is the finest piece of machinery any nation has to function. Its work is 100 per cent efficient. Besides my own observations in Palestine, Syria, farther East and a Constantinople, I constantly ran into the evidences of its influence and its reputation for efficient service. During my experience of a good many years such universal testimony to the clean-cut character and the minimized waste of Near East Relief operations is decidedly exceptional in rating organizations of similar kind. Even among refugees one did not see able-bodied 'sitters' or hangers-on. All men able to work are hustled to jobs. Women are employed as far as possible in work that helps toward the support of themselves, their dependent children and the orphan institutions. This American relief policy, over and above immediate care of the sick and helpless, frees it from any taint of pauperism.

"It's great to see Americans plan so intelligently, organize so efficiently, and administer so wisely. An amazing standard of life-sustaining food ration has been scientifically worked out. We figured that one of our dinners for two would feed about twenty-four people all day on the relief basis. I was deeply impressed by the scientific method which characterizes Near East Relief operations. The orphan children gathered in institutions learn not only to read and write and figure but each one of them is learning how to do some specific thing—practical, vocational, self-helpful. In the grounds of one orphanage I looked over a group of hundreds of girl orphans. 'Do you mean to say that these six to eight year olds in front do anything like work?' I asked. 'Yes, indeed,' replied the Director, 'they all are learning either to sew buttons on or to sew button-holes.'

"I was charmed with the spirit of the Near East Relief work in its field. Coming on from the Far East and the fields of Christian endeavor in Asiatic lands, I found inspiration in the courage of the American workers 'on the job' and the evidences on every hand that the people of the Near East look, O, so earnestly, to America for their future. Actual laughter and the joy of play I saw in hosts of Armenian children rescued by Americans, now in training as wards of America. Here America continues to put her best foot forward. No spontaneous expression of America's national will has ever been more clear than the will to give the most practical substitute when the possibility of political help passed by in war.

"America is in danger of being put down among the nations for a quitter. This I say fresh from a world round of observation. Near East Relief was one way of showing we meant what we said when we fought for an ideal of world service—not to save our own skins. No one organization ever had more nation-wide backing of the American people. Near East Relief is a way of continuing to prove that we do not intend to be dodgers. To quit before finishing the job would be a national sin."

SAD! SAD!! CONDITIONS.

In a certain county in the United States twenty-five per cent of young men examined for the Great War were found to be affected by the much dreaded plagues resulting from impure life. Think, oh think! of the terrible results in three generations if these awful ravages are not stayed.

In your own county the present results may not be nearly so bad. Yet all who know conditions will agree that they are surely serious.

Who is to blame— What did you do to prevent the present conditions?

What will you do NOW to prevent further disaster?

What was the cause? Lack of knowledge and lack of will power for individual control.

During the war a much-honored Secretary of the cabinet exclaimed "The remedy? There is but one—contenance." He should have said "For prevention, contenance—absolute self-control:" As you cannot recall water that has gone over the dam to return to give power to the mill, so venereally corrupted bodies may never become normal again. Relief may be given, and perhaps sometimes a cure. The best of physicians and surgeons have to admit that after they have thought there was an absolute cure, sometimes twenty years, more or less, later, it has been found that the disease germs have been lodged in latent condition in some part of the body, and have broken forth to cause sudden or lingering death, and often terrible infection to one's family.

Again we ask, who is to blame for present sad conditions? What did you do to prevent them? What will you do NOW to prevent further disaster to individuals, to homes, the nation and the world?

It is our bounden duty to teach and to practice, by God's grace, proper and holy control.

True Sunday School, Christian Endeavor and like workers for the salvation of souls and human betterment, give free service for the uplift and saving of fellow-being. The Great Purity Legion, a department of the International Purity Association, gives free service to this most sadly needed mission, not a dollar of gain to themselves in this glorious work for prevention. We are endeavoring to circulate widely the best obtainable printed helps. God, has said, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." The Great Purity Legion's list of purity booklets, graded to the ages of each sex, embraces in the main that which is needed.

Total $67.30

We are now having the folding doors put in. We forgot to say that the $15. Bible for our pulpit was given to us by a Presbyterian Elder, and that the pulpit, settee, chairs which cost $35, and the memorial windows which cost more than $125. were given by Presbyterian friends. This little band has never failed in a single thing that the conference has required of them, neither have they failed in their "Men and Millions" obligations. We think the Mission Board should help us, at least to some extent, and we are expecting it. As the writer, we believe in helping them who help themselves. We owe a thousand dollars, and half of this is with a Bank, and we all know what that means, when it comes due. And we will assuredly appreciate the help you may give us. Yes we thank you for what you are going to do. Well, our churches, Danville and Mebane, went up to Conference with all obligations paid up in full. These two churches have fine Sunday Schools and prayer meetings. Send all checks to the pastor.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

DECEMBER 3RD, 1922.

SUBJECT: "Jesus Sending Out Missionaries."
Luke 9:1-10:24.

GOLDEN TEXT: "The harvest indeed is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he send forth laborers into his harvest."—Luke 10:2

DEVOTIONAL READING: Matt. 28:16-20.

REFERENCE MATERIAL: Matt. 10:1-42; John 17:17-21; 20:21.

LESSONS TO LEARN.

Last Sunday's lesson was "Jesus the Great Missionary." To-day the lesson tells of how Jesus extended His missionary work by sending out the twelve, and then the seventy to preach the Kingdom of God. The only way He provided for the extension of the Kingdom, was that of the work of his followers. They were to tell others, and those, others, and so on until this day does the work go on. Luke tells in the ninth chapter of the injunctions given to the disciples when they went forth, of the miracle of feeding the multitude with the five loaves and two fishes, of the teachings of Jesus to His followers, urging them to follow Him, of the healing of the boy with the unclean spirit, and of the transfiguration on the mountain. The tenth chapter continues the story of the ministry of Christ by telling of the sending out of the seventy, and of their joyful return.

Jesus did not try to do all the work alone. He instructed others. He trained workers. He sent out missionaries. To inspire others to carry on a good work is a great accomplishment. This is the best of all of our Sunday School work the forming of the right kind of character, the inspiring of the lives of boys and girls to go out into the work of the world, with the spirit of the Master, making their lives count for good in His service. The greatest work that you may ever do may be to train some child to go out to work. The greatest work your Sunday School may ever do, may be to enlist one or more life recruits who will feel in their hearts a consciousness that life belongs to God, that it is a gift from Him, and because of that feeling, will desire to give life in a definite way to His service. The first thing is to develop this feeling, and secure this decision from your young people. And just as essential then is it that you make it possible for that young person to realize the ideal of his heart, and be trained to teach the Word of God by a life wholly dedicated to His service.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest." Pray, and work. The farmer may pray for a plenteous harvest, but he joins daily toil with his prayer. "Christian workers are always to be sure of the power of God in their enterprise, but they are never to allow it to lessen their own activity. God's power works through God's people. Jesus makes the success of the disciples possible in feeding the multitude but the disciple's activity makes his provision effective. Home missions is Christ's task and our opportunity." (Dr. C. B. McAfee).

In his book on "Quiet Talks on Service," S. D. Gordon, writes:

"One day my tired eyes lit upon that wondrous phrase, 'The Lord of the harvest.' It caught fire in my heart at once. 'Oh! there is a Lord of the harvest,' I said to myself. I had been forgetting that. He is a Lord, a masterful One. He has the whole campaign mapped out, and each one's part in helping mapped out, too. And I let the responsibility of the campaign lie over where it belonged. When night came I went to bed to sleep. My pillow was this, 'There is a Lord of the harvest.' There is a Lord to the harvest. He is taking care of things. My part is full, faithful, intelligent obedience to him. He is a Master, a masterful One. He is organizing a victory."

Your church is progressing in all lines of its work. We are undertaking greater missionary enterprises, at home and abroad, than ever before. Every great movement, and every campaign we have undertaken, have been entered into in order that we as the Christian Church may do a larger service to carry on the work which Jesus Christ began when He lived here on earth. He lived in a little corner of the world, but His constant teaching and thought pertained to a whole world. Every dollar given in His name, has helped to realize His ideal of world Kingdom. Every life consecrated to His service counts immeasurably. Is your Sunday School constantly keeping before your members the privilege, and honor of being a Life Recruit for Him. Would it not be splendid if one of your members after studying this lesson in your own Sunday School should say: "Here am I. I will work, I will study, I will prepare myself, and I will spend and be spent until people everywhere have a fair chance at the good things of life"?

"Consecrate me now to Thy service, Lord,
By the pow'r of grace divine;
Let my soul look up with a steadfast hope,
And my will be lost in Thine."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

DECEMBER 3RD, 1922.

SUBJECTS "Better speaking."—Prov. 10:10-21, 31, 32.

THOUGHTS ON THE LESSON.

"If any man thinketh himself to be religious, while he bridleth not his tongue but deceiveth his heart, this man's religion is vain."

James 1:26.

"But far more numerous was the herd of such, Who think too little and talk too much."

Dryden (Verse 19)

Learn something new every day. "Wise men lay up knowledge." Right knowledge gives you something worth talking about, and so provided for "Better Speaking." Gossip often occupies our time because we have no higher thoughts and no better knowledge. Verse 14.

"Gossip is simply the outburst of envy and malice—like a Chinese firecracker—often a fizz and usually dangerous only to him who explodes it.—Herbert Kaufman."

"If your lips would keep from slips,
Five things observe with care—
To whom you speak, of whom you speak,
And how, and when and where."—Anon.

"If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body."

James 3:2

"A thoughtful man will never set
His tongue a-going, and forget
To stop it when his brain has quit
A-thinking thoughts to offer it."

MEETING PLANS.

"The Devotional Meeting Annual" of the Epworth League, suggests a poster for this meeting with a big megaphone featured and the word "SAY" in big letters across the mouth of the megaphone. To the right could then be printed "We Want You at Christian Endeavor Tonight."

The following subjects for short talks (not over three minutes each) may be given to several Endeavorers before the meeting:

"A Troublesome Little Member."—(James 3:5.)

"Words Fitly Spoken."—(Proverbs 25:11)

"A Gentle Tongue Gives Life."—(Proverbs 15:4.)

"The Source Within."—(Luke 6:45)

"Clean Speech.—(A campaign for Clean Speech may be suggested)

The Value of Telling the Good Things about Folks.

Organize a Junior or a Senior Society in a neighboring church. Talk with the pastor there about Christian Endeavor. Tell him what it means for your church, and offer to assist his in enlisting his young people's interest. Go over to his church in a body, if he is willing, and tell your story. Perhaps you may hold a sample meeting.

—Endeavorers Daily Companion.

HAVE YOU READ YOUR HANDBOOK?

Copies of "The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Handbook of the Southern Christian Convention" have been sent by the Board of Religious Education to every pastor and every Sunday School in the Southern Convention. This book is free, but it is also valuable.

It is valuable because of the minutes of our five Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions, which it contains. Two of these Conventions were organized in 1922. All of them held inspiring and successful sessions. The reports given at these gatherings are both encouraging and suggestive. If the recommendations are carried out in the year's work, even greater progress will be evident when Handbook of 1923 appears.

The statistics, while not yet complete, are much ahead of those of last year. Last year we were only able to obtain the record of 119 Sunday Schools, with a total membership of 13,880. This year's Handbook shows 201 Sunday Schools, with a total membership of 21,766. Our goal for the total membership by the time of the meeting of the American Christian Convention was 20,000, a goal reached and surpassed.

The Handbook is also valuable because it reveals points of weakness, as well as gratifying strength. Especially evident is the small number of Teacher Training Classes in all of the Conventions. If our work is to grow, we must have more trained workers. A poor teacher can spoil a good lesson. Several superintendents have written recently for information regarding organizing a Teacher Training Class this fall, and it is to be hoped that many more will follow their example, and strive to see a class meeting regularly, studying what to teach and how to teach so that the lesson will satisfy the needs of the pupils in our Sunday Schools.

The next issue of our Handbook, in keeping with our progress should be a "Handbook of Religious Education" and include in the records our Daily Vacation Bible Schools, Week Day Schools of Religion and all agencies working together to win our boys and girls to Jesus Christ.

Have you read your Handbook? It was sent for your information, that you may keep in touch with our work. It was sent for your inspiration, that you may aid in making the work go forward. A few more copies may be secured from the Field Secretary, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Virginia, if request is made.

A NEW PROFESSION—DIRECTOR OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION.

Phillips Brooks once said: "Who helps a child helps humanity with a distinctness, with an immediateness which no other help given to human creatures in any other stages of their human life can possibly give again." And President Jordan has further declared: "If you wish to go in for philanthropy, if you wish to be of any use in the world, do something for little children. We can dress the sore, bandage the wound, imprison the criminal, heal the sick and bury the dead, but there is always a chance that we can save the child." And both of these utterances were made by men who loved the Master who declared long years ago: "Whoso shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth me." No work in all the world can be greater than to save our child life. The whole life is saved when a child is kept in harmony with his Heavenly Father. The supreme work of the church is the production of men and women with ideals to supply the very great need of the world and its fertile field for work is found among our children.

Religious education is the powerful instrument which has been often overlooked and misunderstood in accomplishing this great task of the church. Religious education is more than instruction. Religious education involves the whole of life, makes religious ideals and purposes the ruling motives of every act of the individual. Religious education leads the child to a gradual development of the spiritual nature, so that it is the most natural thing in the world for him to feel that he "must be about his Father's business." Religious education makes it possible for the boy and girl to accept Jesus Christ as their Saviour and Master and Friend, without first going far astray into the fields of evil. Religious education provides for growth through a program of worship of the Heavenly Father, instruction in His Word and about His children everywhere, and of service with Him. And such a religious, or more truly such a Christian, education, is the birthright of every child that is born into the world, a birthright of which many thousands have been cruelly cheated. The best and most natural way for this child, to receive this heritage is to grow into it gradually from the beginning and those spiritual ideals which have been built into the structure of his very being from earliest childhood form the dynamic force in his later life. And this is the need of the church, of the nation, and of the world today, men and women governed so thoroughly and completely by high Christian ideals that injustice and oppression will be foreign to their very natures.

The Protestant Church has never taken religious education very seriously. In the early days of its modern existence, even the Sunday School was opposed by conscientious, devoted leaders of the church. They regarded such a school as a profanation of the Lord's Day. The Archbishop of Canterbury opposed the movement in no uncertain terms. Many church doors were closed entirely to it, that the Church might not be contaminated by such use, when it had been dedicated to preaching and worship and in no way to teaching. But the Sunday School finally won, and has served the church effectively ever since. And to extend this great work so that every child may have the teaching he needs, certain forces have been working until today the church in coming to recognize as never before that religious education must form an important part of its activity.

We have often heard that "New occasions teach new duties." Just as true is it that new occasions bring forth men to carry on the work of the new day. And the church found that in the field of religious education as in every phase of its work, that the problem was resolved largely into one of leadership. When the seriousness of the task was recognized, serious demands had to be met. In 1906 the first Director of Religious Education, or Minister of Education as many prefer to call him, began his duties in a church in Buffalo, New York, and since that time, the work has grown until today over three hundred men and women are devoting their entire time to supervising and directing the educational program of local churches. This is not a vocation or a profession born in a day, to flourish for a few hours and then to disappear. It has just begun its work. It issues a call to Christian service in terms as unmistakable and as divine as that of the ministry itself. The church of the future must be a teaching as well as a preaching church if it is to live up to its great opportunities.

Certain definite forces have been at work which have made this profession a necessary part of aggressive church work.

(1) The church of 1922 faces different conditions than the church of one hundred years ago. The very complexity of our modern life, even in its demands upon our boys and girls, presents problems to the church which is trying to really touch the life of youth. The child of today faces conditions of which the child of yesterday know nothing. The child of today must be prepared for a tomorrow filled with problems of which we can only guess. And with this very complexity, the church must also recognize that the home is not the strong ally of religious education that it once was. The early homes were decidedly religious. Also in the first days of our nation, the public school, religious in origin, was an active agency in teaching religion. Not much more than a century ago, eighty per cent of the cities and towns of Massachusetts required the use of the Bible as a reading book. Today we find a public school which as a rule at best reads a few verses without comment from the Bible. All of these conditions which have been constantly shifting, make it more essential for the church to realize that it is the force in the community which is directly responsible for the religious training of the young, and to recognize this responsibility by devoting time and money and consecrated, trained effort to this work. Religious education must come to be regarded in the same essential light, and with the same higher standards that secular education is looked upon with. To do this a trained leadership in religious education is vital. Here lies the work of the Director of Religious Education.

(2) During the past twenty-five years, there has been much progress in child welfare work. Many organizations have been formed to guard

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

The Men and Millions Campaign and the causes embraced by it gain and hold their rightful place in the hearts of our people only in proportion as our preachers preach on these great Kingdom interests. The churches having the best record also have preachers who are constantly on their Campaign job.

PREACHING THE CAMPAIGN

No one human agency contributed so much to the victory in subscribing to Men and Millions as the preachers preaching the Campaign. The preacher was then and is now the key man. If the pastor preaches Men and Millions the people will work for and pay their pledges to the Movement.

Make the Victory Sure.

Our people will fall behind in their payment of the pledges if our preachers do not get under the burden again. We can go to the extraordinary session of our Convention next May with a glorious record, if our people are aroused to a full sense of their duty. We need to go to our knees for Power in these great days ahead of us, if we are to truly lead our people, pay our pledges and win out for our Lord.

Preach—Preach—Preach.

VICTORY!

the child spiritually and morally as well as to care for him physically. Much has been written and much said on the subject. Leaders have differed. Many of these new ideas have been hurtled at our churches, until there has been much confusion in the minds of the untrained workers. Everything is essential when promoted by its instigator. The Sunday School Superintendent has been often in doubt. He has no place to which to turn for light. As a result many a new organization started in good faith has died, or a church has become inactive, simply because so much was suggested, and the leaders became discouraged. The church has long needed specialists who are able to adapt the work to the local church, and to correlate the work proposed as essential in religious education.

(3) In the training work in the local church, the emphasis has been placed upon Specialization. This has meant progress along many lines. Workers have been encouraged to study. Teacher training has been more popular. But along with these advantages, also this very program of specialization has emphasized the need of one to direct the whole, of one who has a broader view of the whole program of the church. The danger is that the specialist sees only his own field, without its relation to other activities, and urges it to the sacrifice, sometimes it is to be feared, of all other activities. We need the specialist in his department. But above him, to supervise, we need the leader who can see the work of every department in its relation to every other department and so work out the whole that there will be that gradual, normal development of the child's nature that is the great aim of all our work.

(4) And a fourth force that has been in silent operation toward the creating of this new profession, is the growth of the church consciousness of the need of an effective program of religious education. Surveys like that of the Interchurch World Movement have helped more than any other single force to bring this condition of need and threatening danger before our eyes. It is difficult to realize that 69 per cent of the children of America are spiritual illiterates in a Christian land. A great speaker once declared that it is easier to stir an American audience to the need and pitiable condition of the black child in Africa, and the Chinese or Indian boy and girl, than to the need of the child growing up in America outside of the church. If the world is to be won, the child of America has a great work to do. The church is beginning to see clearly that he must be ready for this task, or the whole world will suffer. This church consciousness which is just developing, is leading the church to turn more and more to a religious education leader as one specially sent of God to meet the needs of a day like this.

These forces, and other influences, have led the church to recognize the Director of Religious Education as an important church servant. He is not an assistant pastor, though he is an associate of the pastor with his own particular field to work. He is not merely a church secretary, but a superintendent of the education work of the church. He is not only a parish visitor, any more than the primary duty of the superintendent of the public school system is to visit the homes of the pupils in his schools. This may come incidentally, but the great work does not come here. The Religious Education Association has, and rightly so, set a high standard for the Religious Education Director. According to its definition: "A director is one who following college work has received a certain amount of professional training, through special courses in religious education, and who is called to the specific task of organizing and directing the educational work of the church or any other religious institution." And only those Directors who can meet these requirements are admitted to active membership in the Religious Education Association, though others of more limited training may become Associate members. The dignity of the profession justifies these high standards of preparation, and the demand for workers should inspire young people to undertake such preparation in order to be able to render the service called for. "The spirit of God does not set any premium upon ignorance" and the man or woman who is to supervise the work of well-educated volunteer workers, must be well fitted for the task.

Many duties will lie before this Director. He will be called upon to keep before the church its responsibility and opportunity through religious education. He will show to the church that truly "The world is marching forward on the feet of little children." and that the church must progress or retreat on the feet of those same little ones. The Director of Religious Education will be called upon to develop a systematic program that will meet the needs of every child at every stage of his growth. Religion with his boys and girls will cease to be the "Sunday morning affair" that it is with so many now, and become a joyous, normal life for every day of the week. The training of teachers and workers will be another task. To-day in the field of secular education there is one supervisor to every 82 teachers. In the field of religious education there is one to every 2,716 teachers who have never received the training of the average school teacher. Better supervision and more adequate training are crying needs. The correlation of the activities of the various organizations of the church doing educational work is an important duty of the new Director of Religious Education. The need is for a systematic, comprehensive program of Christian education which will provide for worship, instruction and expression for every young person, and this the Director must work toward.

No new profession is justified unless there is an apparent need. Here the need comes to us in glaring signs of unreached boys and girls. The Director may work in the local church and many of our churches could now have such an official. The Director may be called to work in a group of churches and more of our churches could undertake a larger program through such a setp. The Director may be a field worker covering a larger territory, with less intensive work possible, but with an office for a clearing house for information, reinforced by the personal work when and where possible. The Director for some of our churches may now have to be the pastor, or a volunteer worker, who is so filled with the love of God and love for His little ones, that he will endeavor to work out for his church a program that will reach all and neglect none. And looking farther still, some of these Directors of Religious Education are now boys and girls in the Church School whom you may touch with a desire to enter a field where their lives will count for much.

Do you say: "We have no need for a Director of Religious Education." Study your own church and community, and see if conditions justify your statement. Do you see that your work could be helped by one truly devoted to and trained for this great work? Then study again your work, ever working on toward the ideal of your heart, a church touching the whole life of every person in any way connected with it, and pray that God may send some one to help your church to this end, and then work with Him to help answer your own prayers.

The Director of Religious Education is here to stay and to work. His call is divine. In the words of that great prophet of religious education, Norman Richardson:

"The call of this new vocation is a call to share with fathers and mothers the spiritual responsibilities of parenthood. It is a call to guide the church in the most important phase of its divine task. It is a call to arouse public sentiment still further, both within and without the church to the challenge of the coming generation. It is a call to patriotic service at a critical moment in the Nation's history. It is a call to share in the work of the Holy Spirit in fostering intimate companionship between both children and adults and the Divine Saviour of mankind."

PROCEEDINGS OF THE AMERICAN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

Burlington, Oct. 24.—Clearing the last item of business from its tables the American Christian Convention, which has been in session here for eight consecutive days, terminated its sessions and adjourned with the conclusion of the evening service tonight.

Important resolutions regarding the Near East Relief were adopted toward the close of the sessions, which resolutions call upon the government for action, and which read as follows:

"That the Christian Church in quadrennial convention assembled pray the President of the United States and the Secretary of State, to use to the uttermost the moral influence of the United States to bring about the cessation of the atrocities against the minorities in the Near East, and to secure their permanent protection.

"To this end we urge that our government take necessary steps without delay, to be officially represented at the approaching conference on Near East Affairs, inasmuch as the American people have given more than Sixty Millions of Dollars for the preservation of the persecuted peoples of the Near East, and have maintained there for generations great educational and benevolent enterprises, we have vital interests at stake in the present crisis as well as a moral responsibility that cannot be ignored.

"That this convention appoint an International relief committee consisting of representatives from our five regional conventions, to co-operate with the near East relief organization, and that, as nearly as possible, the near East relief funds be raised on the Sunday before Christmas, in the North, and on January 21st, in the Southern Convention."

The International Relief committee was appointed with the following members: F. R. Beach, A. B. Kendall, J. O. Atkinson, J. M. Kauffman, E. R. Caswell, W. P. Minton, A. M. Kerr, J. F. Burnett, and W. H. Martin.

Also resolutions were passed expressing the appreciation of the Convention to the people of the First Christian Church, in which the Convention held its sessions, and of the city of Burlington, for their open and unbounded hospitality.

During the afternoon of the last day of the convention Rev. E. O. Watson, Secretary in charge of the Washington office of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, addressed the convention in the interest of the chaplains, both in the army and navy. He indorsed the report on army and navy chaplains which had previously been made by President W. A. Harper of Elon College calling for a full quota of reserve chaplains from the Christian Church and at least three additional regular chaplains; that a memorial be addressed to the Secretary of War expressing regret at the reduction of the spiritual forces at work in behalf of the men in the army and navy, and especially endorsing the proposed legislation for increasing the chaplains to one for every 600 enlisted officers and men; and for the payment out of the general funds of the convention of $100 for each regular chaplain as their part of the expenses of the General Committee on Army and Navy Chaplains, and in addition to provide each regular chaplain with $100 per year to be used in the discharge of his office.

Chaplain W. W. Elder of the Navy then spoke to the convention on the work of the chaplains, giving some of his experiences as a chaplain in the navy.

Representing the Standing Committee on Christian Union Dr. F. G. Coffin presented a brief report of the activities on behalf of Christian Union during the past quadrennium, stating that overtures had been made with other denominations, and especially with the Disciples of Christ Church and other smaller denominations and that while a better feeling of brotherhood and closer relationships had been gained nothing definite had resulted.

Rev. Omers S. Thomas then in his report for Franklinton Christian College, for the Negro race, told of the work being done there. Also Rev. J. W. Wellons of Elon College addressed the convention concerning this college for the colored race.

Rev. J. N. Dales of Canada, representing the Christian Church of that section and the delegates from Canada, made a very delightful speech of presentation to the Christian Church of Burlington of a British flag, "The Cross of St. George," as he called it, which this delegation had brought along with them and which had been displayed in the church during the sessions of the convention, saying that it was a token of appreciation of the gracious hospitality received while in the South, of which hospitality they had often heard, but now that they had come and seen for themselves they were overcome. Rev. Dales spoke of the flag as representing a common ancestry, and the source of a common language, and an emblem of friendly relationships.

Dr. Coffin, president of the convention, made the speech of acceptance of the flag in behalf of the local church.

Dr. W. W. Staley, for many years president of the Southern Christian Convention until his resignation last year, made some closing remarks in which he recalled the first meeting of the American Christian Convention in uniting again after the Civil war which he attended forty years ago, stating that he had attended every session since.

President Coffin in his closing remarks stated that it had been a great convention, great in purpose, but that he hoped it would be more than a paper convention and that back home every single and solitary resolution would be carried out in the field; that it meant sacrifice, but that the members had come for what they would get at the convention but for the purpose to be the better able to glorify Jesus Christ in the work which they had left and to which they are now to return.

Rev. R. C. Helfenstein pronounced the benediction and the convention was officially closed.

The delegates will leave tonight on a special train leaving at mid-night for all points north and west.

C. M. CANNON.

Bearing Burdens.

If I might share
A brother's load along the dusty way,
And I should turn and walk alone that day—
How could I dare,
When in the evening when I knelt to pray
To ask for help to bear my pain and loss
If I had heeded not my brother's cross,
And so I know
That day is lost when I fail to lend
A helping hand to some way-faring friend,
But if it show
A burden lightened by the cheer I sent,
Then do I hold the golden hours well spent
And lay me down in sweet content.

—E. V. Brandt.

Variable Route Tickets Will Advertise South.

The Southern Railway System has announced that this season it will offer to tourists coming from the North and West to Florida resort points a great variety of optional routes with stop-over privileges at all intermediate points in both directions.

This will enable tourists to use different routes on their going and returning journeys and in this way to become acquainted with the attractions and advantages of different sections of the South.

A handsome booklet with maps and detailed description of 116 different routes which are open to travelers using the Southern from Washington, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis or Memphis to winter resorts in Florida and other southern States, has just been issued by the Southern.

A Tarbell's Guide Year!

WORLD-WIDE PRAISE

Baptist World:

"Thousands would rather start a new year without a calendar than without a new 'Tarbell's.'"

G. Campbell Morgan:

"Amazes me by its inspirational and educational advantage to any teacher."

Marion Lawrance:

"The best, most complete, most practical and most satisfactory lesson help."

Alexander Whyte:

"All the help needed by any teacher."

Margaret Slattery:

"Know of nothing better. . . . I use it personally in my work."

John Henry Jowett:

"Of great service to Sunday School teacher—exceedingly well done."

A Teaching Necessity

The recent International Sunday School Convention, in emphasizing the need for BETTER Sunday School instruction, paved the way for "Tarbell's Guide" as a necessity in every school!

Superior

to all other Helps in teaching value, ability, comprehensiveness, and modern appeal. "Tarbell's Guide" raises the international system clear above the objections of its critics, and is the logical teachers' help to-day!

Larger by far

than any other Lesson Handbook, full to overflowing with modern suggestions, "Tarbell's Guide" is now a necessity to all who would apply latest teaching methods and discoveries to Sunday School Lesson presentation.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:

A friend spent the night at the orphanage while on his way to the North Carolina Conference and told me the next day that his visit to the orphanage had made a very deep impression on him and that mingling with the children and seeing the opportunity the church had in doing a great work and realizing what we are trying to do through this institution had given him a vision he had never had before and that he had never been so inclined to loosen his purse strings and give to help in the work as he had since his visit here.

We find that when we can get friends to visit us and see the work for themselves and realize what the church can do through its orphanage for helpless humanity the more sympathy we get in the work.

Friends, Don't forget your Thanksgiving offering. Make it liberal. Remember last year we had rainy Sundays during the entire Thanksgiving season and prices of tobacco and cotton and other crops were low. This year cotton and tobacco are bringing handsome prices and other crops are higher. So let your offerings be in the Thanksgiving offerings.

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

EDUCATION WEEK PROGRAM OUTLINED

American Legion, N. E. A., and Bureau of Education Ask Cooperation.

American Educational week, to be celebrated all over the United States from December 3 to 9, inclusive, is divided into six separate sections, a day being devoted to each department.

Monday is "American Citizenship Day," Tuesday will be devoted to "Patriotism," Wednesday is "School and Teacher Day," Thursday is to be given to a consideration of "Illiteracy," Friday to "Equality of Opportunity," and Saturday to "Physical Education."

The American Legion, the National Education Association, and the United States Bureau of Education, which are all three cooperating in the celebration, are asking aid and assistance from the public. Churches, chambers of commerce, labor organizations, women's organizations, fraternal bodies, luncheon clubs, etc., are asking to urge the mayor to issue a proclamation setting aside this week as American Education Week, and asking the people to cooperate.

MISS MONEMIA ELEY

The Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society of the Suffolk Christian Church has again bereaved of a dear and faithful member. Miss Monemia Eley was a charter member of this Missionary Society and passed away on August 9, 1922, and was laid to rest in Cedar Hill Cemetery on the 11th, after a tender service at the home of her sister, Mrs. Eudora Kilby.

Miss Eley had been a helpless invalid from paralysis for five years before her release. During that long period Mrs. Kilby and her daughter, Miss Duppy, had rendered her more than needed service by day and by night. Such devoted service deserves permanent record in our hearts and on our books.

As a small tribute to her womanly modesty, her personal character, and Christian virtues, we offer the following resolutions:

1. That we prize her life and its useful service in the Lord's work, and count ourselves fortunate to have shared in her friendship and association in this Missionary Society.

2. That we tender her family heartfelt sympathy and prayers in their temporal loss, which we believe was her eternal gain.

MRS. CLARA HERNDON

Mrs. Clara Herndon, widow of the late Dr. W. T. Herndon, died at her home, Winston-Salem, N. C., November 9, 1922, aged 77 years. The funeral services were conducted in Elon College Chapel by the writer, assisted by Drs. J. U. Newman and W. C. Wicker, and the remains interred in Elon cemetery.

Mrs. Herndon leaves a brother, Joseph Edwards, Durham, N. C.; one sister, Mrs. Mary Hilliard, Green Level, N. C.; two daughters, Mrs. Myrtie Moffitt, Ashboro, N. C., and Mrs. Gertrude Scott, Winston-Salem, N. C., and four grandchildren, John, Herndon, Mary Moffitt and Karl Herndon. The deceased lived at Elon College for twenty-six years and was a devoted member of the Christian Church of this place.

N. G. NEWMAN.

MRS. F. E. SELLARS

Whereas, God in His all wise providence saw proper to remove from the Ladies' Aid Society of the First Christian Church of Burlington, N. C., on October 29, 1922, our highly esteemed and much loved sister, Mrs. F. E. Sellars, in the 90th year of her age; therefore, be it Resolved 1st. That this Society has lost one of its best and most useful members.

2nd. That we cherish her memory and will try to follow her good example, as she followed Christ.

3rd. That we tender our sincere sympathies and Christian affections to all her relatives and friends who mourn the loss of such a tender, loving mother and faithful friend.

4th. That a copy of these resolutions be placed in our proceedings and published in the church bulletin, THE CHRISTIAN SUN and the Burlington News.

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. JNO. R. FOSTER,
MRS. G. A. KERNODLE,

Committee.

Mennonites Going to Mexico.—

Mennonites have been leaving Canada for the last two years in large numbers because the laws of the Dominion do not allow them to be as independent as they want to be. Serious objections have been raised to a proposed settlement of Mennonites in Mississippi. Just what has been done about it we do not know. Here is a press report from El Paso, Tex., telling of the migration of Mennonites to Mexico: "The migration of ten thousand more Mennonites from Canada to Mexico will begin this month, the Mennonite Church having advanced $4,000,000 to families contemplating the trip, J. F. D. Wiebe, their representative, announced here. The sixteen hundred Mennonites who settled in Mexico last year have done well with their crops and have erected adobe barns and granaries and stone houses, and Wiebe said by the time other Mennonites arrive they will have wells dug, roads built, and enough extra houses for temporary shelter. Each new family will bring two to four cows, four to six horses, and some sheep and poultry—all blooded stock."—Christian Advocate, Washington.

The Drudgery of Women in Germany.—

"Dr. John T. Christian, Professor of Church History in the Baptist Bible Institute, New Orleans, who recently returned from Germany, tells much about the hard and unpromising conditions in Germany. To illustrate the drudgery of women, he tells the following in an article in the Western Recorder: "One of the first things I saw when I arrived in Bremen Haven was a meadow. A woman and a dog were hitched to a wagon loaded with hay, and a man was lying on top of the hay. Another man was walking beside the wagon with a pitchfork on his shoulder. The woman and dog were pulling the wagon. In the town of which I am now speaking it seemed to me that the older woman the greater was the burden she carried. Some of the baskets carried on the backs of the people were as large as great clothes baskets, and they were full of things. I saw one old woman with a basket on her back, and in it was a sack that would hold three bushels, apparently filled with grain. Most of the produce of the country was brought to the town on the backs of the people. Now and then one would see a cart loaded with hay or grain." Not until a different treatment of women from this is practiced can we hope for the Christianizing of Germany."

Ireland in the Hands of New Chiefs.—

Ireland has not yet "worked out" her problem, but progress is being made. The Outlook of London gives a bit of information about the head of the Irish government and has his chief associates, as follows: "In Mr. Cosgrave, Ireland has a tolerant leader with a sense of humor and a knowledge of his own limitation, a man who will profit from the errors both of the old and of the new nationalism. His chief lieutenant in Parliament is Mr. O'Higgins, to whom has been entrusted the passage of the Irish constitution through the Dail and who is accredited with parliamentary ability and courage, both moral and physical. Mr. MacGrath, Minister of Labor, and Mr. Hogan, Minister of Agriculture, have both given evidence of a kind of philosophical detachment which has hitherto been rare among Irish politicians. They will not ask of their fellow countrymen more than human nature can give. Mr. Blythe, the Home Secretary, is an Ulster Protestant, who knows that the north and the south each suffer from delusions. The two idealists in the government are John MacNeill, Minister of Education, and General Mulcahy, Minister of Defense. In remembering that Mr. MacNeill has lost a son who fought for the irregulars, one realizes something of the personal tragedy which those who have taken up the burden of Irish government have to surmount."—Ex.

An Electric Fly Killer.—

Electricity may be used to swat the fly, we learn from The Journal of Electricity and Western Industry (San Francisco). This paper remarks that devices for the sterilization, heating and cooling of food products and other articles, for the supplying of fresh, pure air, and numberless other sanitary aids have been made possible because of electricity—and now comes the electric fly and rodent destroyer. It continues:

"Considerable inconvenience has always attached itself to the use of the old-fashioned trap commonly used in construction camps and by other establishments such as dairies, farms, hotels and the like. These baited traps were cumbersome and were often obnoxious, as after the flies were entrapped in the cage, there remained the problem of disposal, or killing the flies by such methods as burning paper around the trap or immersing the bulky object in water. With the electric fly-killer these objections are removed, as the flies are killed by the electric current and drop to the ground where they remain and may be swept up and burned.

"The device itself consists of a panel frame connected with a transformer which is attached to any lighting circuit. The frame is crossed by parallel rows of wire which carry a current of 500 volts. This frame is placed where the flies are known to congregate and as they are attracted to the parallel wires they are killed by the heavy voltage. Rats are killed in the same manner.

"The current is on at all times, but according to the manufacturer, electricity is consumed only when a fly comes in actual contact with the wires, and then only a small amount of current is used. In his words, 'One fly will not move a meter.' The fly killer is entirely automatic and requires no attention at all.

"The same transformer and installation is used for killing rats, a change of frame and location being the only requirement. The cost is a little more, however, as the body of the rat is not consumed by the current and electricity is used until the body of the animal is removed from the frame. The electric killer has been tried and has been very successful in dairies, hotels and on farms."—The Literary Digest.

The League of Nations to Capture Civilization.—

The new Prime Minister of England sees no hope for the future of England outside a closer cooperation between the nations of Europe and of the world. This he sees growing in the strengthening of the League of Nations. Commenting on what the Premier says, the Methodist Recorder, of London, adds: "And in that connection it is delightful to study the progress America is making. The name is not openly used. The organization, as it is today, is hardly mentioned, so strong is the resentment of many sections of America, both political and economic, against the person and the policy of their late President. We have no need to interfere in matters of its kind. As the days of the next presidential campaign draw on, these animosities will pass to the rear, even if they be succeeded by others. But the slackness of trade in America and the scope and policy of the religious organizations in America are both moving in one direction. The Churches are faithful to the Christian conception of world authority: that it ought to be inspired by spiritual vision, that it should be exercised for the good of all men, and that it must have nothing to do with force of arms save as police duties may necessitate. The business world is arriving at very much the same conclusions, though it travels by another path and professes to seek other ends. A proposal is on foot for a conference of all the business men of the world—a rather grandiose phrase perhaps—in order that together they may devise the best means of restoring the economic balance necessary to commercial prosperity. Everybody knows that war destroys commerce, that there can be no free trade when one trade sits heavily on all others and smothers as many as it can in the interests of warships, guns, and conscriptions. Whether the big phrase realizes the big idea or not, the big idea is working. It was bound to work. The unity of life is the strength of all lovers of peace and brotherhood. Even politicians in America are beginning to deal more freely with the ideas at the back of the League and are daring more than a little in defense of the ideas. If Great Britain remains wholeheartedly faithful to the League a little longer, there is not the slightest question the ideal will capture civilization." We are counting on Great Britain to hold out "a little longer." May she not fail in this crucial hour! And all this was said before the recent elections in this country.—Exchange.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. M. W. Butler declines the call to the Christian Church at Reidsville, N. C. He will remain with Muncie, Ind. Christian Church. The Reidsville church deserves a good pastor and we pray the Lord to send them the very man needed for the work there. It is a promising field for the right man.

Rev. A. Godley, Tenaflly, N. J., is blessed with a son of unusual prominence in the business world. Bro. Hermon Eldredge said before the late Burlington Convention that when the man in the study and development of Electricity and Radium wished to know what to do with certain problems in these sciences, they turn to Mr. Paul Godley. He is high authority in these spheres, and Bro. Godley is highly honored in being the father of such a son.

The new church at Mebane made a fine report to the North Carolina Conference and it showed splendid work. They are doing a splendid work, but they must need help. We believe men who have money for the Lord's work would gladly help the Mebane, (N. C.) church, if they could know the needs of that people and how heroically they are doing their best to help themselves. If you can lend a helping hand, do so, and send the same to Rev. P. T. Klapp, Elon College, N. C. It is we believe, a fine opportunity to do good.

We who are part of small denominations, sometimes think it must be a fine experience to be associated with a big denomination, but the leaders of big denominations complain of the disadvantages of their bigness, so we of the small bodies will do well to be satisfied with our smallness, rather than to fly to dangers which we may not have. It is good to be content to do our best for the cause of Christ in a small Church. Moral, do your best where you are and make no complaint.

An exchange tells us that having a big following always marks a danger point. Then the same exchange says: "Church history shows that we can stand up under persecution better than under prosperity." Also, we believe one of the weak points in the church life of this day is, we have so little persecution. We do not believe in seeking persecution for persecution's sake but we do believe in living a life which will bring it to us and that is the true and real Christ life. Live that sort of a life and we shall have all the persecution we can stand up under in doing the Lord's work, and that kind will make us more faithful and aggressive in service.

Our Methodist brethren are face to face with their burdens. The Western Christian Advocate says: "We stand appalled at our long battle line, and its mileage scores us away. The Advocate habit would make us wish unto Methodism, but half the folks never see an Advocate, and half of the other half are but half-and-half readers. Since faith now comes by reading, and since we do not read, a big section of our big church lives in blissful and unpardonable ignorance of what we are doing. They are nice folks, as fine as silk, but they are Methodistically illiterate, and mostly not useable." Just think of it! only half of the great Methodist family read, and what is worse, half of the other half read not enough to stimulate them to efficiency in the Lord's work. If we all could only induce the mass of our people to seek the fulness of Christ and the gift of the Holy Spirit, we could then get many more to become readers. Let us try it.

The memory of Rev. L. I. Cox is highly cherished in the Reidsville Christian Church. It was under his labors that the handsome church building at that place was erected only a few years ago. As we have often looked upon the building, we have often wondered how he did it—how he ever got together sufficient money to erect the building, but he did it and not only so but he laid the foundation for its present growing membership, and while it is not yet large, it is growing and promising large usefulness. He wrought well, but early in his ministerial life went to his reward. The Reidsville Church is a monument to the memory of this untiring worker.

The new pastor of the Henderson Christian church was given a welcome of a most hearty character on Wednesday evening, Nov. 23. The church people had made quite a generous display of their welcome. Then Rev. Vicker of the M. E. church, Rev. Prichette of the Methodist Protestant church and the Rev. Lewis Collins of the Presbyterian church all spoke giving a most kindly welcome. Bro. Langston gave the formal welcome on the part of the church to the pastor, to which the pastor made response in an appreciative way. The outlook for the Henderson church is encouraging. The church is united and pulling together in their work. Light refreshments were served free to all in attendance.

The Henderson Christian Church, over which the Editor of this paper is now presiding as pastor, seems to have a good and an open field for usefulness. They have a very neat and comfortable house of worship, a good and well trained Sunday School and a pretty good attendance on its Sunday services. They also have a good bungalow parsonage, and both, the church and the parsonage buildings are practically new, and the outlook is encouraging. Rev. R. L. Williamson, who has only recently retired from this pastorate, did a good work. But the pastor and his good wife leave good names behind them and appreciation of their good work is often expressed by the people whom they served so well for four years. May God's blessings follow them in their new field at Sanford, N. C.

Rev. R. L. Williamson, late pastor at Henderson, N. C., has been given a fine welcome to his new field at Sanford, N. C. Rev. T. E. White, now pastor at Windsor, Va., who was the retiring pastor from that field, had charge of the service at Turner's chapel on Sunday morning, Nov. 19, 1922, Rev. J. D. Wicker had the honor of introducing our brother, as the new pastor, and of course, did it well. Sunday night the service was at Sanford, N. C., and a very pleasant occasion. Rev. T. E. White, the retiring pastor here also, read the Scripture, Bro. J. U. Gunter spoke words of Greeting from the Pastorate; Miss Ruth Gunter also gave greetings from the Ladies' Aid Society, Miss Janette Stout gave a greeting from the young people. R. M. Sanderson brought greetings from the Baptist church, R. E. Carington brought greetings from the Presbyterian church, C. L. Williams from the Methodist church, and Rev. T. E. White presented the new pastor, after which Rev. R. L. Williamson preached the sermon of the evening. Our brother thus gets a good introduction to the field in which he is to work.

Rev. C. E. Geringer, pastor of the Guilford Pastorate which includes the Hines Chapel church which only recently so well entertained the late session of the North Carolina Christian Conference, showed himself a competent pastor for such an occasion. The work of the church in caring for the entertainment and comfort of the people attending was well done, and Brother Geringer and his church deserve very great credit for this. We were glad to hear good and most encouraging words of Bro. Geringer as a pastor and preacher. Men, who like him, are not afraid to tell the truth, as it applies to the people to whom he ministers, are generally appreciated. It is true that sometimes such men are not understood and thereby they suffer some loss, but in the long run, they gain in their hold on the people they serve, and so lead them into the ways of truth and righteousness. Be a man and stand for the truth.

The churches of Christendom now are and long have been laboring most ardently to carry the Gospel to the people of India. Comparatively few realize the embarrassment which the faithful missionaries to these people are experiencing from the introduction of rationalism by those professing to carry the pure Gospel. A still less number realize that the Indians have undertaken to proselyte our own nation, by the attempt to widely spread their leading cults of "The New Thought" and Theosophy. The adherents of these kindred movements claim that they now have in this country ten millions of adherents who compose these companies—not the people of the slums, but those who have had better advantages; those who once knew the Gospel and rejected it. College graduates and persons of speculative tendencies prove to be a prey for this incoming, aggressive enemy. Many parents who have sent their youths away to college have been surprised to find them returning home either indifferent to or opposed to the Gospel, and altogether indifferent to the Church of God.

We confess to being a bit wary of the methods that are employed by some so-called prayer leagues. We have never been greatly alarmed at the threatened judgments that are to be supposedly poured out on that man or woman who breaks a link in a "chain letter" series. But we rejoice in the report given below of the fruitage of three years of effort of the Great Commission Prayer League, whose headquarters are at 808 North La Salle St., Chicago, Ill.: "During the three years ending December 31, 1920, the Great Commission Prayer League sent out a total of 233,641 separate pieces of mail. Of these 119,608 were bulletins and calls to prayer; 44,140 were packages carrying a total of over 4,000,000 leaflets; and 69,893 were outgoing letters. The number of incoming letters was 39,585, and in these incoming letters a total of 69,312 souls were reported won to Christ, the League's literature and prayers having been a factor."—Exchange.

CORNER STONE LAYING AT RICHMOND, VA.

Many hearts rejoiced, when the corner stone, of the First Christian Church of Richmond, was laid November the 18th. The denomination has long needed a church in the Capital of the Old Dominion, and of the Southern Confederacy, and now the church is assured and the building being erected. We are glad to rejoice together. The ceremonies were under the auspices of the Randolph Lodge of Masons, No. 19. Dr. W. A. Harper President of Elon College, delivered the address.

It was a great speech and made a deep, and lasting impression on the audience. The ceremony of the lodge, under the direction of Master A. J. Watkins, was beautiful and faultless. The weather was threatening but the attendance at the ceremonies was most gratifying.

We trust that a number of our friends will make an investment in this beautiful church in the Capital of the State of Virginia.

WHAT PROPORTION OF OUR INCOME SHOULD WE GIVE TO GOD?

BY REV. OVID PULLEN

1. In all ages people have felt that a portion of their income belonged to their God or gods. The Bible teaches that a part of our income belongs to God. This idea is also written in our hearts. What proportion, then, shall we give? What basis for giving shall we adopt? Shall we say:

2. "Give as God has prospered?" This does not tell us the proportion. A stingy person and a generous person might have been prospered $1,000 each. Giving according to their natures, the stingy person might give $5.00, the generous, $100.00. Unless both were tithers, then each would give alike; and the basis, "Give as God has prospered" would mean something definite and be a just basis.

Who can say this collection for the poor did not come out of the tithes of the Corinthian Church? In Deut. 16:16, God called for a certain offering; this offering to come out of a tithe. Then, in the next verse, 17: "Every man shall give as he is able, according to the blessing of the Lord thy God which He hath given thee." Sounds like Paul might have gotten his idea here.

Or, suppose we accept the idea that this collection was a special free-will offering; who can say that Paul was talking against the tithe and advocating a new basis for giving?

3. "Give till we feel it?" As human nature is constituted, one person values $1.00 more than another person values $10.00. Once there was a successful business man who operated a large lumber plant. At the end of a month, as usual, the owner of the plant brought from town, in a satchel, $5,000 with which to pay off his employees. In attending to business and manouvers about the lumber stocks, he lost the money before reaching his office. Next week, an honest old negro came into the office bringing the satchel, containing the money, which he had found. The owner was overjoyed. Taking the money, he said: "Uncle, it does me good to see an honest man, and I want to reward you for your honesty!" Picking about in the satchel, he handed the negro a dime. No doubt this man gave till he felt it, and was honest in his actions.

4. "Give as we have the opportunity or see the need?" There is not a foreign missionary who, each month, on this basis, could not give away all of his salary—being surrounded with poverty and suffering. Likewise, we, in this land, could give all we possess. On the other hand, money can so blind a man that he cannot or will not recognize a worthy cause.

5. "As others give?" This basis is practiced to a large extent. But, "others" may be wrong; they may give too little or too much.

6. "All belongs to God?" Many take this basis; claiming that because we live in the New Testament dispensation we and our possessions belong to God in a peculiar sense, and that it would be wrong to limit God with any fraction of our possessions. Say they: "We give God a little, along. The time may come when the needs will be sufficiently urgent for us to give all we possess. If God ever extends that urgent call we will give all we have." Reader, if you are acting on this basis, now is the time to "unload" all your possessions. Needs never will be greater; Christian schools and colleges, orphanages, extension of the Kingdom at home and abroad, millions of people dying for lack of food and clothing, and the majority of the human race going to perdition.

Whence comes the idea, that in the New Testament dispensation we and our property belong to God in a peculiar sense; and that it is wrong to limit God with a portion of property? As a matter of fact, the A. D. Christian, soul, body, mind and possessions belongs to God for the same cause and to the same extent that the B. C. Christian belonged to God in the Old Testament. The A. D. Christian, any modern Christian, belongs to God just as B. C. Christians, Abraham and Jacob, tithers, belonged to God. In fact, the doctrine of the "Ownership of God" comes first and largely from the Old Testament.

In Old Testament God says: "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof: all souls, cattle, and sheep, silver and gold." At the same time, He says: "Ye have robbed me in tithes and offerings." If, then, in the Old Testament God claimed all property and yet expected His tithes and offerings, why would it be dishonoring God in our time to set aside a portion of our income?

7. Suppose, reader, you are an adult Christian. A young man has recently been converted in your church; he comes to you for advice, saying, "I am beginning the Christian life and I want to do my duty. I am making some money. I know a part of it belongs to God. You have had experience and have thought about this matter. What proportion of my income do you think I ought to set aside for God?"

What answer would you make him? If you would not say "tithes and offerings" (Gen. 14:17: 20, 28:16-22, Mal. 3:7-12, Lk. 11:42), what definite, knowable, doable, basis would you suggest to the man?

9. "Why is not more written about the tithe in the New Testament?" May it not be because the apostles of Christ believed that the Second Coming would take place shortly—certainly within their life-time? (Look up many references).

Elated by this thought, the early disciples practically adopted communism. (Acts 2:44-45). Reasoned they: We do not need our property—Christ may be here just any time. Hence, they gave largely; getting ready themselves and helping others to get ready for the coming. Why should they think about the tithe when Christ was about to come, and they were giving all. The tithe, no doubt, was submerged in the larger gifts. Indeed, it seems for a time the Sabbath was forgotten. Forgotten in this sense: "Every day was Sunday." If the writer remembers correctly, Church History records that the Christian Sabbath was of a gradual growth.

It is true, that in time, the communistic wave largely subsided; but the writers of the New Testament still held to the early coming of Christ, and their actions and writings were influenced thereby.

10. Finally, reader, if you cannot get tithes and offerings out of the Bible, you surely can't get any Bible against it. That is, authority for a smaller proportion of one's income. So would it not be a sensible act if our Church would construct some foundation, and speaking ex cathedra therefrom, say: "Henceforth, Tithes and Offerings it shall be." Thus saving time, labor, men, money and campaigns; and, in addition, making it possible for the "giver" and the "dispenser" to know where they are "at," financially.

AMONG THE SOUTHERN STARS

Studying photographic plates made in Peru at the Arequipa station of the Harvard College Observatory, Howard astronomers have discovered during the Summer more than 2,000 nebulae, several new variable stars, and one nova or new star, and have now measured for the first time the distance and size of the Large Magellanic Cloud, a cloudlike group of stars and nebulae visible from the southern hemisphere and resembling in appearance the Milky Way, says a dispatch from Cambridge, Mass., to the New York Times. "This Magellanic Cloud, which is believed to be a sort of small universe in itself, separate from the Milky Way system of stars of which our own solar system is a comparatively infinitesimal part, proves to be of staggering dimensions. Its distance from the earth, while not the greatest distance ever measured by astronomers, is so immense as to be almost beyond human powers of comprehension, being 110,000 light years. A light year is six trillion miles, the distance traveled in a year's time by light, which covers 186,000 miles in a single second.

"The linear diameter of the cloud has been found to be about 15,000 light years. This is determined by finding the distance, which observes work out by complicated methods involving spectroscopic studies, and then measuring the apparent size of the cloud as it appears on photographic plates made at Arequipa.

"Photometric measures of the stars in the large Magellanic cloud make it possible, now that their distance is known, to find their actual candlepower. This work is still in progress at Harvard, but preliminary results would seem to show that this cloud contains many stars which are actually far brighter than any we have yet discovered in our stellar system, altho of course they appear very faint on account of their immense distance. Hundreds of these stars are found to exceed the brightness of the sun by 10,000 times.

"Photometric investigations are being continued at Cambridge in order to get a more precise measure of the distance of the cloud by other methods than the spectroscopic method provisionally used, and to set up standards of brightness in the cloud so as to make possible the study of various types of stars and nebulae existing there."

The methods followed in finding the 2,000 new nebulae are characteristic of modern astronomy, the writer tells us. They were found by the study and comparison of photographic plates made at Arequipa during the last twenty years. The total number of known nebulae is about twenty thousand, and more than one-fourth of these have been found at various times on plates made with a single telescope, the Bruce photographic refractor, one of the most powerful photographic instruments in the world and one of four instruments in constant use at the Harvard station at Arequipa. To quote further:

"The 2,000 newly discovered nebulae are mostly too far south for observation at the observatories of North America, but many of them are relatively conspicuous and important.

"Of the new variable stars discovered during the summer on plates made at Arequipa some were found by the observers in South America and some by the workers at Harvard on old plates. One of the variables, discovered by Professor S. I. Bailey, is extremely faint, like the variables in the globular clusters, but nearly a degree away from the nearest cluster, which suggests that these variable stars are escaping from the clusters.

"The Arequipa station is situated in Peru at an altitude of 8,000 feet. The work there is in charge of Professor S. I. Bailey, who played a prominent part in the establishment of the station over thirty years ago, and served as acting director of the observatory in Cambridge during the interval between the death of Professor E. C. Pickering in 1919 and the appointment last year of Professor Harlow Shapley as his successor.

"Professor Bailey has recently taken a large number of photographs at Arequipa for the study of the motions of the stars and the variations in their light. He has made several exposures extending over two nights with the Bruce telescope. Single photographs taken with this powerful instrument frequently show more than 500,000 stars. In the clouds of stars in the constellation Sagittarius, recently Harvard plates show the individual stars to be so extraordinarily numerous that the moon could hide 10,000 of them at a time."—The Literary Digest.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Henderson, N. C.

NOT SO, MR. LITERARY DIGEST.

In these troublesome times it requires the most discriminating thinking to state facts as they are. Especially when men and women who are not well acquainted with religious or educational terms, attempt to write with the freedom with which they discuss the secular side of every day affairs.

As an illustration take the statement made by The Literary Digest in its issue for November 18, 1922, when it publishes an article under the heading: "THE PRESBYTERIAN ATTACK ON DR. FOSDICK."

As a matter of fact The Literary Digest is wrong. As we understand it, the Presbyterians have not attacked Dr. Fosdick at all. Dr. Fosdick attacked certain Presbyterian doctrines in a Presbyterian pulpit and the Presbyterians simply resented Dr. Fosdick's undue familiarity with Presbyterian teachings. The truth is therefore Dr. Fosdick attacked the Presbyterian Faith, and for this act no one is to be blamed but Dr. Fosdick himself. A man who does not wish to be repelled should be careful not to attack a man in his own home, but if he is so unwisely daring as to do such a thing, neither he nor his friends should complain of being attacked, when he himself was the aggressor, seeking to destroy the most priceless treasures of that home. The Presbyterians have done right in their effort to protect their own. Dr. Fosdick has at least made himself liable to severe criticism, and justly severe, in that he wontonly attacked the Presbyterian people in their own home and so far as we are informed, he did it without the least provocation. Dr. Fosdick not only attacks most of the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, but, he follows up such attacks with a plea for tolerance. That is, he wishes to attack the most sacred doctrines of Christianity and then he pleads for the privilege of being undisturbed while he does this terrible work of trying to destroy the vital of the very life of the people upon whom he intrudes.

Ought the man who seeks to destroy your home be given liberty to proceed with his unholy work by having the man he seeks to injure, quietly submit to the depredations of the intruder?

Tolerance! Dr. Fosdick go back to your mother's knee and ask her again to teach you the principles of common fairness.

We believe The Literary Digest owes the Presbyterians an apology for misrepresenting them, as when it declares that Presbyterians have attacked Dr. Fosdick, and the more so since the fact is Dr. Fosdick had really attacked the Presbyterians. To be sure the battle of the fundamentalists against the modernists is on in earnest—it is victory or defeat for the fundamentalists. There is no compromise in this battle, and as we see it, there can be none, and for the reason that Christian men and women can not submit willingly to error, not even for the sake of tolerance!

One, so called Presbyterian paper, The Continent, puts in a plea with Dr. Fosdick, declaring that the doctor is only attempting "to propagate in the Church a spirit of tolerance and fellowship toward varying views of Christian fact and faith." Also, it is not Christian truth for which he pleads but error of the most pronounced kind. They are repudiating leading doctrines of the Bible, and so far as we know, they offer us nothing authoritative to take the place of the truths they have repudiated.

And has it come to this that rank error is asking Christianity to tolerate it? And shall Christian men and women consent to this proposition? Never, while truth and righteousness are among men. We are for tolerance when it is a mere matter of human opinions which divide but when the fundamental doctrines of Christianity are involved, we dare say, no, and mean it to the last.

WHAT IS SPIRITUAL FREEDOM?

The very atmosphere seems charged with the presence and power of error in this the early part of the twentieth century. A few clergymen in New York City have of late associated themselves together under the name of the "Modern Churchman's Union of America." The body is made up of men from the Protestant Episcopal Church and they are, we are told claiming the right to put their own spiritual interpretation on the creeds in accordance with the results of modern science and Biblical scholarship."

If that means anything, it must mean that these gentlemen put modern science ahead of Biblical scholarship. If that be correct, then, as we see it, they have a flimsy foundation for their Christian faith, for what is known as modern science has been shown again and again to be in error, as to many of its great teachings. Then if this be true, as we believe it is, and since they put modern science ahead of Biblical Scholarship, we do not believe either is to be trusted. We know that Modern Science has often been wrong, and if it is put ahead of Biblical Scholarship then we may expect, not that the Bible is wrong, but that Biblical Scholarship is in error, as much so as Modern Science, and so we may do well not to depend upon either of these planks in their platform.

Notice that they claim the right to put their own Spiritual interperations on the creeds in accordance with the results of modern science and Biblical Scholarship. That is a very modern view of the situation. If they mean human creeds then we do not seriously object, but if they mean they claim the right to put their own interpretation on the teachings of the Bible, and these interpretations must accord with Modern Science and Biblical Scholarship, then we protest, as we believe the ancient Bible view is infinitely more correct than is either Modern Science or Biblical Scholarship. We are therefore not ready to yield to its teachings. We must know more of its aims and purposes before we can look to it with any hope or prospects of large usefulness.

Another purpose of this union we are told is to promote spiritual freedom. If that means that spirituality is to be under the rule of Modern Science and Biblical Scholarship, then we have no plan for that kind of spirituality. We believe that spiritual freedom is the gift of God through the Spirit, and that neither Modern Science or Biblical Scholarship has anything to do with spiritual freedom in the realm of the Christian life.

Jesus, and not Modern Science or Biblical Scholarship, gives to the people of God spiritual liberty. Paul tells us in 2 Cor. 3:17 that where "the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty."

The Modern Churchman's Union may be a good thing, but we confess that we have more hope of victory, if we may stick to the Bible and its author of spiritual freedom. But so far we have not answered the question with which we began these lines—What is Spiritual Freedom?

We do not believe we shall find it in allowing every man to accept or reject God's plan. No a thousand times, No!

The true Spiritual Freedom is to be found in living in keeping with the teachings of the Lord Jesus. God, and not man, is the source of the spiritual life, and therefore our spiritual freedom must come from above, and not from Modern Science or Biblical Scholarship—it is God's gift in keeping with the plain teachings of God's word.

A BISHOP, A MISSIONARY AND A GENERAL IN A CONFERENCE STRUGGLE.

In the Methodist Conference recently held in Raleigh, N. C., the people of that body came to hand to hand struggle in an effort to save and make a success of their Millions Centenary Campaign. Bishop Denny was presiding. He took his stand for a faithful performance of the task undertaken. Dr. Atkinson thinks we ought to learn something from the heroic work of these men to save a cause which they hold so dear, because of what its success means to the Methodist Church. In like manner our Men and Millions mean so much to us as a people. Let us do our best to uphold Dr. Atkinson's hand in pressing this cause to a successful issue for it even now means much to the work of the Christian Church. The News and Observer, reporting the work of the Methodist Conference in its efforts for its Men and Millions says:

Backsliding and recessions from grace may be established phenomena in good standing in the Methodist church, but when the brethren have set their names on the dotted line of a Centenary pledge they don't apply. They are not even recognized as possibilities. They come mighty near being pre-destined to be paid.

At any rate that is the conclusion that the casual observer must have been driven to after watching and listening to an hour of consideration of the present status of the $35,000,000 Centenary fund now in its fourth year, at the North Carolina Methodist Conference at Edenton Street church yesterday morning. With one voice they declared that there is to be no repudiation.

Nobody ventured to say that they thought that the subscription had been made in too great haste, that the aggregate was too large, and that probably there had better be some recession. After the Bishop, Dr. W. G. Cram and Dr. R. M. Courtney had reminded the conference of the pledge and submitted the present status of the fund, General Julian S. Carr rallied lay and clergy to the slogan of no repudiation.

Through the morning the conference ground its way through the mass of routine that must be done, electing these preachers to the eldership and these to the deaconite; passing on this class for duty, dismissing some for service in other conferences and welcoming others for service in this conference. It was nearly noon before the mill was through grinding and the conference ready for its Centenary discussion.

Half To Be Paid.

Tar Heels Wesleyans pledged a total of $1,700,000 for the Centenary drive, Dr. Wilcox reported to the conference, and of that amount they have paid $750,655 in three years. There remains approximately $800,000. The conference stands second in the condition of its Centenary fund, he declared.

Boiled down by the speaker to cold figures, it appeared that the Methodists of the State, besides taking care of their normal benevolences, have contributed $200,000 a year for the past four years to the general mission work of the church. This has been the easy money, he declared. The remaining pledges will present the challenge to the church.

Then came Dr. Cram, who succeeded Bishop Beacham as head of the Centenary work in the church, following Dr. Wilcox and Dr. Courtney. He told the ministers and laymen what had been done with their money, and what was going to be done with that they are yet to collect on their pledges. Dr. Cram has been a missionary in Korea, and besides that he is a speaker who can put across a story that is worth as much as an hour's address.

Over in Korea he had a native servant, and the story he told about him took the conference by the ears. He sent the man out to buy a cow, and told him to pay $80 for her. He bought her and they kept her four months. He sent him back then to sell her for $80, and he went off and brought home $80. Later on in the year they had a revival.

The Korean got enthused, as Methodists will the world over, and got up to tell his experience. "You remember, Brother Cram, that I bought a cow for you once," he shouted across the church. The event was recalled. "You remember that you had me to sell her and that you told me to get $80 for her?" That was also recalled. The Korean was working after a climax. He summed dramatic gestures.

"Well, my brother, speaking under the influence of profound conviction, I want to confess to you that you owe me a dollar. I didn't get but $79 for the cow." Maybe those who were not present would hardly believe it if it were recorded that the conference howled. But howl they did. "I want to confess to you that you owe me a dollar," the speaker concluded.

You Owe That Dollar.

Bishop Denny took the floor. Two things alone can be done with the pledges he said—pay them or repudiate them, and if they are repudiated, Methodism must cease to be a force in the religious world. He went back into his storehouse of history of the Methodist church, and there are few who have so full a storehouse as has this scholarly Bishop.

He recalled the time when John Wesley was starting to set the world afire, when he was still published among the heretics because he preached the universality of atonement. Some of his friends wanted to know if he didn't need money. He didn't think he did need any, but they insisted on going out and levying a penny a week against the brethren.

"And we have been sticking pretty close to that precedent," he added, with that dry humor that is likely to crop out anywhere. He concluded with the story of Napoleon's drummer boy at Marengo who had never learned to beat "retreat," Methodism has never learned to beat retreat, he declared.

General Carr had been sitting back in the middle of the church, with his eyes riveted on the Bishop. Anybody could tell he had something on his chest, and the first minute an opening occurred, he was going to get it off. When the Bishop was through he advanced down the aisle. He was glad to see the Bishop's beautiful face.

"General, I'm afraid your eyesight is failing you," the Bishop said in recognition.

The General Talks.

"No sir," shouted the General. "Your face was beautiful when I first saw you, and you are the same yesterday, today and forever to me." Then he turned around to the brethren and rallied them. He went back over the beginnings of the Centenary movement in Memphis when people counseled him to have nothing to do with so foolish a thing as a plan to raise $35,000,000 for church work.

But he was determined to be young and foolish, at any cost he said. He believed powerfully in the movement, and every day since had added to his belief. He was no backslider, and no falterer from grace. They meant what they said back there in 1919, and they intended to put it over, and North Carolina Methodists never repudiated their words. The General had them at the shouting stage before he was through.

PROTESTANT LEADERS TO CONSIDER COMMON PROBLEMS.

Representatives of the thirty communions, which comprise the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, will meet in Indianapolis, December 13-15, in the Annual Meeting of the Executive Committee of the Council. This gathering, more than any other meeting in the year, is the occasion for conference on the part of the Protestant Churches as to their program and policies and the development of a united front.

When the annual meeting is convened on Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 13, at the First Baptist Church, Indianapolis, by the chairman, Rev. Frederick W. Burnham, it is expected that about one hundred official representatives of the thirty communions, designated by the highest authorities in their own Churches, will be present. In addition to these official members, who alone have voting privileges, others who are interested in the cooperative work of the Churches are invited to attend as corresponding members or guests.

In addition to the reports from the various departments of the Federal Council and the discussion of its future policy and program, many themes will be considered of outstanding interest to all the Churches. Among the subjects included in the program are: "A Survey of Problems and Tendencies in the Cooperative Work of the Year," "The Call of the Hour for Fuller Cooperation among the Churches," "Evangelism as the Primary Business of the Churches," "The Enlarging Social Mission of the Church," "The Challenge to a Large Program of Christian Education," "The Responsibility of the Churches for Better Relations between the White and Negro Races," "Prohibition on Trial; What is the Verdict?" "The Duty of American Protestantism toward European Protestantism," "The Crisis in the Near East," "The Contribution of Foreign Missions to World Unity," "The Duty of the Church in Christianizing International Life."

Among the prominent figures in the Churches who will participate in the program are: Dr. Robert E. Speer, President of the Federal Council, Bishop William F. McDowell, of Washington, Dean Shailer Mathews, of Chicago, Fred B. Smith, of New York; President J. Ross Stevenson, of Princeton, N. J.; President Ozora S. Davis, of Chicago; Rev. Frederick E. Taylor, of Indianapolis; President W. O. Thompson, of Columbus, Ohio; Ernest H. Cherrington, of Westerville, Ohio; Rev. W. W. Alexandra, of Atlanta; Rev. R. H. Singleton, of the A. M. E. Zion Church; Rev. E. F. Tittle, of Evanston, Ill.; Rt. Rev. Charles H. Brent, of Buffalo, N. Y.; Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of Norfolk, Va.; Charles V. Vickrey, of the Near East Relief; Rev. John Sheridan Zelig, recently returned from Russia, and Dr. Hugh S. Magill, General Secretary of the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education.

BROTHER ABE HEARS FROM HIS FORMER PASTOR.

Dear Brother: I know you have searched every page of the "Sun" to find a letter from me. You know I promised to write six letters just to get you to subscribe for six months. I can say, to your discredit and dishonor, that of all the subscriptions I ever received, yours was the hardest to get. I am glad not only to write six letters but to do almost anything to interest you and your large family in the work of the church. I know full well that many regard you as a hopeless case and would let you entirely alone. On the other hand, I have always seen great possibilities in you, and I shall always hope and pray that you may become just such a member in your church as it is your privilege to be.

When I told you good bye, I felt sad that I had not interested you more. If you had listened to me and heeded my instructions, you would have been today one of our most prominent and useful laymen, tenderly beloved by all. As it is, you are unknown outside your local church, and you have very little influence even there.

Since I left you I attended the North Carolina Christian Conference of course, as you never attended a conference, you do not know what it is like. I would have been glad if you could have been there. You will read about it, I am sure, in your paper. I always wanted you to have the honor of representing your church in a conference, but your brethren would never consent to thus honor you. They said, and I had to agree that it was the truth, that you never would attend a business session of your church, and that you made it a point to always be somewhere else the latter part of the year from a fear that you might be called upon to help out in any deficit that might have been found. I hope you will be so loyal to your church that you will yet convince your brethren that you are worthy of this honor, and that I may, in no distant future, read your name in our annual.

I was glad when I preached my last sermon at your church, that I could say that I parted with nothing but the best wishes for you all. I was glad, too, that I could so warmly recommend my successor to you. You always argued that two years was long enough for a preacher to serve a church. Your principal argument being that, "A new broom sweeps clean." I sincerely trust that your new preacher will use a new broom and will sweep clean. I am going to say this in all kindness to you, Brother Abe, that you certainly need it. You need to have much doubt and suspicion, and almost all of your old-time fads and arguments need to be swept away. As I think of you becoming the man you might be, what a wonderful man you are! I shall add my prayers to your pastor's that you may yet become what we wish you to be.

I have often heard you say that, "You can't kill two birds with one stone." I think you are mistaken in this as you are mistaken in almost everything else you say. While I was at the conference, I was greatly honored. You know I told you that I was to make a speech. I made the speech just after the report on Religious Literature was read, and although we were pressed for time, and I was so embarrassed that I forgot perhaps the best part of it, it was very well received. They actually wanted me to write it out and have it published in "The Sun." And I rose up and told them that I was under an obligation to write six times because of you, or rather because of the promise I made to you, and that I would undertake to reproduce it and send it to your paper for publication. So you ought to see that I shall comply with your request and the request of conference at the same time—thus killing two birds with one stone. As you were not present at your church when I delivered the speech I am going to write, I wish you would study it and let me know what you think of it.

I have reached my new field in perfect safety and am happily housed. I have not as yet seen any of your relatives, or anyone who in the least possible way resembled you.

Sincerely,

T. E. WHITE.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

There are so many discouraging things said, in these days, about the decadence of religion, and the falling off of "church attendance," that one wonders how the conclusions are reached. Nine thousand people heard Billy Sunday in Dayton, Ohio, last night; but you say, "they don't go to church in our town regular like they used to go." It may be that a little survey of the situation will change the mind of those who think the age is going backward in religion. It may be true that the attendance upon the "preaching service" is not as large as it once was; but when one considers the more frequent services in the churches, this may not be true. But there is another view that is sometimes overlooked. There has been such an increase in auxiliary societies within the church, and in the community, that christian agencies are active in ways unknown a quarter of a century ago. If you count the attendance at Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, Missionary Societies, Organized Classes of men and women and then the attendance at the "preaching service" it will run the "church attendance," in number and activities far beyond other days, counted either by actual numbers or by percentages. There is an increase over these days to which discouraged souls refer.

When real service is considered it is enough to open the eyes of the blind. The money contributions to the cause of Christ in these days is so far in advance of those good days of which non-givers dream, that it looks like a revival of faith in God and a willingness to "honor the Lord with their substance and the first-fruits of all their increase." This needs no argument. The records of actual donations furnished incontrovertible proof. But some one says: "Money will not save souls." That is true, but "saved souls" will give money to preach the gospel to the last; and men give money to what they love. Poor land will not give good harvests, and poor christians will not make large gifts. "The liberal soul shall be made fat." There are some fat souls in these days of liberal giving. In giving, the church is not decadent. It is liberal and progressive. Compared with other days' it is far in advance. The constituency of the Convention gives more to the Christian Orphanage now in a year, than it did to all enterprises thirty years ago. That is only one item of gifts and interest.

In the matter of time given to christian thought and work there has been a corresponding increase in giving of self to the cause of Christ and the enterprises of the church. Help for the poor, kindness to the neglected, visiting to the sick, relief for the starving far away, all indicate a sympathy a human interest and a Christian concern that is proof of a growth "in grace and a knowledge of the truth."

The outside organizations doing christian service and teaching a practical gospel add to the work of the church and are really children of the church going into the highways and hedges and compelling them to come in. The church is doing more for the world than in any age since Jesus was born. It may be a righteous zeal for the cause of Christ that expresses itself in discouragement about the disgrace of the church; but it should be remembered that there is "a zeal which is not according to knowledge." If your church is not as good as it used to be, may be it is your fault.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LETTER.

At a called meeting of the Board of Trustees of Bethlehem College, October 11, 1922, at Mt. Zion church, Roanoke, Ala., the undersigned was elected Financial Secretary for the College. The purpose of this office is to place the plans, purposes, and claims of the College before the people, promote the financial interest, and direct the campaign for funds.

The first work in this campaign will be educational in its nature. Such an effort is designed to acquaint the people with the plans, and purposes of the College, its claims upon them and its place in our church life. In order that this information may be properly presented to the people it will be necessary to enlist the help of the ministers. Such a request is already made of the ministers of this section of the church and I am sure they will prove to be educational evangelists in this great cause.

The time designated for this preparatory work is November, December, and January. During this period of preparation the ministers of the Georgia and Alabama and the Alabama conferences are asked to preach at least four sermons relative to the College. The themes suggested are: "The Value of Christian Education," "The Relation of Bethlehem College to our Church Life," "The Value of Co-operation in Kingdom Growth," and "Our Responsibility to Bethlehem College." This preparatory work will acquaint the people with the College and prepare them for the financial canvass the first and second weeks in February, 1923.

Plans are in the making to observe "Bethlehem College Day" in all the churches in these two conferences. The day can be observed to best advantage in January. It should be left to the judgment of the pastor in charge to designate the particular day in January for the observance of this day. The program will be planned several weeks in advance of the service. At this time the pastor will preach a special sermon relative to the College and plan several short addresses and readings, using as many of the young people of the congregation as possible on the program. This special service will be well advertised and should prove to be a great day in the history of the church.

The pastors will be furnished with an ample supply of literature from time to time. This literature will set forth the plans of the College. This literature will be placed in the homes by the pastors and every member of the family is urged to read it.

At the conclusion of this period of intensive preparation, a simultaneous canvass for funds will be launched. The financial goal for this campaign is one hundred thousand dollars. This amount will be required for the initial buildings and equipment. Every man, woman, and child will be urged to contribute to this great cause. Pledges will be secured covering a period of five years, with as large a cash payment as possible.

R. F. BROWN,
Financial Secretary.

With all best wishes for the success of the "Men and Millions" drive that is being put forth, I pledge my loyal support in service for our Lord and Savior.—H. V. COX, Ramseur, N. C.

SWING WIDE OPEN THE DOOR.*

"Behold I stand at the door and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him and he with me".—Rev. 2: 20.

These words are a part of the revelation of Jesus to John concerning the church located at Laodicea. In all probability they came to John sixty years after Jesus' ascension into Heaven. Many things have occurred since that memorable day of Jesus' departure. Pentecost has come. Paul has been dead a quarter century. Nero and others have burned the church at the stake, and Dominion now sits on the throne that rules the world. The church has gone into every quarter, but not in a single place has it escaped oppression. The oldest and last of that first faithful band who followed the Savior from their fishing nets is now an exile on a lonely isle in the Aegean sea.

While on that isle meditating all alone on a time many years ago when he had lain his head upon his Master's breast at that last awful supper, he sees the Christ in all His transcendent beauty, and he is intrusted with a message to each of the seven churches of Asia. And what is this message with which he is intrusted? We may well inquire this because it was so important as to require being delivered by the Savior Himself to the last of the apostles. The church has had its first great trial. What will Jesus say now seeing both its success and its failure? To the Laodiceans He says, "Behold I stand at the door and knock, if any man hear my voice, and open the door I will come in to him and sup with him and he with me."

Here is a church rolling in wealth and external advantage, declaring itself to be rich and having need of nothing and yet treating with the utmost indifference the eternal grace of the Savior of men. No words of censure and rebuke could be too strong for them. They did not know that they were "wretched, and miserable, and poor and blind, and naked," and that on account of their luke-warmness they were to be spued out. Oh! what compassion, for after rebuking them most sorely Jesus says, "As many as I love I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore and repent!"

This is one of the Lord's final messages to sinful men whom He declared in the days of His flesh He came to save. Let us mark more closely its contents:—

We see in the outset a two-fold act of Christ, the first of which is found in the words: "Behold I stand at the door." The initiative in the redemption of a man comes from Christ. He seeks, He takes up His journey and ceases not until He stands before the closed doors of those who treat His infinite love and measureless compassion with utter indifference. Let us think of the journey he has made.—for to stand at the door certainly implies the getting to the door. "Out of the ivory palaces into this world of woe" he has come. He humbled Himself and took upon Himself sinful flesh; He was despised of men; He had not where to lay His head; He was abused sorely by those who professed to honor His Father; He looked out across the valley of Kidron to Jerusalem, the sacred city, whose walls had awaited His coming for many centuries, and said, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often I have gathered thy children together even as a hen doth gather her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." A little later His road led Him through Gethsemane. He was falsely accused, wickedly tried, found innocent, and yet He was crucified on this road He traveled to come to our door.

*This sermon was prepared by Rev. John G. Truitt, now a senior in Princeton Seminary. It is one of the six sermons his course of study requires of him before graduating. We hope he will let The Sun have the other five. Brother Truitt is one of the rising young men of the Christian Church.—Editor.

In second Samuel 23: we read the following interesting bit of history:—David,—now an old king and general,—tired and thirsty from the battle looked across the strong line of the Philistines and saw the old well of Bethlehem,—the well of his childhood and of many fond memories when matters of state weighed not heavily upon his head. He longed to drink of its waters again. Three of his soldiers broke through the lines of the enemy and hazarded their lives in order that their king's wish might be realized. But when they succeeded in bringing the water to him he poured it upon the ground for it was the price of blood and too precious to drink. Jesus has come all the way through the lines of a far more subtle enemy to bring us water of which if we but drink we shall never thirst, but it shall be in us a well of water springing up into eternal life!

His journey has left Him with bleeding hands and feet and a riven side, but we are welcome, thrice welcome, to the meat and drink He has to offer. And oh! how this old world needs it, for behind those fastened doors all amid the luxury and the lust there is hunger, and misery, and nakedness, and sin.

And the second of the two-fold acts we find in the words, "and knock". He does not stop at simply coming. He does not passively wait thinking perchance we will open the door, but instead He knocks. It is the effort of the Son of God; it is a compassionate, persistent, long-suffering to be heard above the revelry and wickedness within. But not forever does He knock for He says in Genesis six three: "My Spirit shall not always strive with men." And again in Hebrews four seven: "Today if ye shall hear His voice, harden not your hearts".

See Him standing at the door of His beloved in the darkness of the darkest nights of woe and sin! "For my head is filled with dew and my locks with the drops of night." Oh! what a picture is that in the Song of Solomon. And He has not where to lay His head. What wonder our doors aren't swinging wide open for One so lovely and true as He! Some day He will be turning from our doors if we heed not His knocking. We continue in the great Song and read: "I opened to my beloved and he was gone." And then we hear the sad refrain coming from a longing soul, "My beloved is the chiefest of ten thousand."

The words of our text were addressed to a church and not to those who had never known Christ. What is this strange thing that the door which once swung so invitingly open as He drew nigh is now closed against His knock. It was disobedience and sin that caused Adam and Eve to hide themselves from the face of the approaching God. Disobedience and sin will shut our doors against the gentle knock of a loving Savior. It was trust in wealth, and indifference to Christ that locked the doors of the Laodiceans and barred them against Him who had given them good and perfect gifts. As I said in the beginning Jesus has taken the initiative, we are to follow His lead as good clay is pliable in a master's hand.

2. So it is that in the second part of our text we come to the two-fold response of man. The first of which is: "If any man hear my voice." Think for a moment what a voice at the door may mean. It may be the voice of robbers in the dead of night; or perchance it is the voice of a friend when we are awaiting in painful suspense his return; or it may be the voice of a father heard by motherless children as he comes in from a storm at sea. A friend of mine living in her home alone with her mother who was indisposed her father acting on one of the State's exemption boards during the Great War, seemed to feel an uncanny fear one night about eleven o'clock. And she said, "Oh! if father was only here so that I could go to bed and go to sleep." And about that time the telephone began to ring. And that tended to frighten her all the more because her father was a physician, and she could seem to feel that there was some terrible need among her father's patients for the doctor. She went to the 'phone and answered with fear and trembling, and long-distance was saying your father is on the line. He told her that he thought she might be up, and be a little afraid, and to fear no harm for he was praying for her. She told me later that the sound of her father's voice was all that was needed to bring an indefinable calm to her soul.

If we would but hear the Savior's voice it would remove every fear and bring a peace that passes understanding. If we are tired of sin and sinning His voice is our hope, if we suffer with the sorrows of life His voice can speak healing to our palpitating breast.

But there are many things that try to hinder us from hearing His voice. The voice of the world is loud. It is insistent. It is beguiling, it is temptingly, yea enticingly sweet. But the voice of Jesus is the sweetest a sinful world has ever heard, and it is a still small voice. You will not likely hear it in some great commotion. "And behold Jehovah passed by, and a great storm wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before Jehovah; but Jehovah was not in the wind: after the wind an earthquake; but Jehovah was not in the earthquake and after the earthquake a fire; but Jehovah was not in the fire; and after the fire a still small voice." We must pick that voice out from all the others.

And not only must we hear it, we must do something about it. Hence the second of man's two-fold act is to "open the door." To open our door to Jesus is to close it to wickedness and worldliness. And not only so, but our doors are surely swinging wide open to one or the other. There is no middle ground. In Matthew twelve thirty we learn, "He that gathereth not with Me scattereth abroad." In the great painting of Christ knocking at the door there is no knob on the outside, because, we are told, the door can be opened only from within.

3. But with the opening of the door there is a two-fold consummation entered into by both our Savior and ourselves. With him on the outside my home is a dingy hovel. As He comes in the room is flooded with a new light! I seem to see clean windows draped with fresh clean curtains; soft white linens cover the formerly ugly board; all the dirt and misery has gone like the winter's last snow before the driving March wind. There is only warmth and beauty and goodness and love. Indeed the whole room is filled with Him. And "I will sup with Him," says the Savior! What the King of kings and Lord of lords eat of my paltry crusts? Eat of my dissappointments and sorrows? Eat of my persecutions and punishments? Yea He condescends to do all this "He eateth with publicans and sinners." He becomes poor and despised, and rejected of men for my sake and for yours. He has gone down into the very jaws of death, hell, and the grave, and suffered our sins for us in order that we might be saved. Yes, yes He does indeed sup with His chosen. There is no cup for us to taste which He has not already drunk to its last bitter dregs! Ah! what consolation that He sups with us!

And now in closing let us notice the immeasurable beauty in the final words of our text "And he with Me." What unspeakable joy that even in this world we are to share the feast of His triumphs! We are to eat of His victory. We are to feel the thrill of His power. We are to know the ecstasy of His joy. There un-limited blessings follow hearing his voice; opening the door; and sitting very, very close to His feet. Only that inside close comrade-ship which amounts to falling down before Him and crying with Thomas, "My Lord and my God" can make these possible. Only the passing over to Him the keys of every room within our soul, leaving nothing in reserve can satisfy. He is willing to make us able, and by faith we are to swing wide the doors! Amen.

THE WAY IT WAS DONE.

It started in a Sunday School Board meeting; and there is where about all the forward steps in our Sunday School start.

The discussion was upon the subject of the Orphanage and the Thanksgiving Offering. After several suggestions it was decided to ask all classes to start a week ahead and set their goals for the offering and then work to that end.

At the same time some one was to give a short talk in the school each Sunday about the Orphanage, and preferably by one who had been there.

The third Sunday of each month is Orphanage Sunday and on this Sunday the school has a standing pledge of ($8.00) eight dollars; but the third Sunday in November must represent the Thanksgiving Offering of the church and school. The matter was more easily worked than the Sunday school because of the divisions into classes and an interested teacher to enthuse each class. Then, too, by actual count the attendance of Sunday school is about the same as at the church service in both numbers and personnel.

Well, the plan of the Board was tried and worked. The short talks were given and the goals were set. Our class dared to set its goal at $25 and some were heard to mutter, "you will do well if you get five." This class reached another goal of over $35. Another class of favored reputation but short vision that day fixed its goal at $5 but when the offering was taken the next Sunday the teacher gave that amount and several others followed suit and they, too, reached a goal of over $35 beating the other class by nine cents. Their vision had in the meantime been enlarged.

Two teachers had the audacity to challenge their classes to double any amount the class would give. One class has an enrollment of 25 Intermediate boys and girls and called upon their teacher for a check for $3.60. The other class has an enrollment of about 45 young men and they took vengeance on their teacher for the amount of $32.50. The Philathea class passed their goal of $3 and made it $10. The Juniors and Primaries and Beginners gave their dimes, quarters and half-dollars in the interest of their little Orphan friends.

When the offering was posted on the bulletin board all were suprised at the amount of $160.06. 154 were present at Sunday school. Two other Sunday's offerings belong to this quarterly report, so uncle Charley be on the look out for a check of $175 or more in the near future.

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

GOOD NEWS.

One Captain of Men and Millions sent the writer a check for $1,000 from his church and added, "We will have another thousand ready soon and we are thinking about getting busy and paying off all our pledges to Men and Millions by next spring." Within the past two or three weeks at the Conferences numbers of our Captains and signers of pledges have said, "We will get busy now and our pledges will be paid. Hard times bit us heavily, but prospects are brighter now and we will do our best." Of course they will. Christians did not make those pledges to be repudiated or denied or disowned. They made them to be paid by God's good help, and here is believing and hoping that they will be paid.

J. O. ATKINSON.

FORWARD OR BACKWARD, WHICH?

Bishop Denny presiding over the North Carolina Methodist Conference, at Raleigh, last week, told the Methodists who had subscribed to the Centenary Movement, "You must now pay those pledges or repudiate them, and, if they are repudiated, Methodism must cease to be afore in the religious world. But Methodism has never learned to beat retreat and will not now."

And the case is similar with us Christians in our Men and Millions Movement. We must pay up or repudiate, and to repudiate is to go backward and lose our place, prestige and power for righteousness in the world.

Brethren and sisters, let every one be faithful, loyal and true now, and may God help us.

J. O. ATKINSON.

SHALL WE CHRISTIANS REPUDIATE?

That question came to the writer's mind today when he read under flaming headlines in one of our State dailies that the Methodists in annual conference at Raleigh had unanimously decided that "There is to be no back-sliding in paying Centenary Pledges." Then the daily further reports, "With one voice they declared that there is to be no repudiation!"

After addresses were made telling the Methodists their plain duty, "Nobody ventured to say that they thought the subscriptions had been made in too great haste, that the aggregate was too large, and that probably there had better be some recession." All were of one mind that there should be no repudiation.

This writer believes that we Christians feel the same way about our Men and Millions pledges and that there is to be no repudiation.

J. O. ATKINSON.

ASSISTING THE CAPTAINS.

Rev. E. M. Carter, is assisting the Captains of Men and Millions in the Alabama Conference; Rev. R. A. Whitten is assisting those in the Ga. and Ala. Conference; and Rev. Fuller Johnson those in the N. C. Conference. These brethren are now working full time every day in an effort to aid the Captains in local churches to get our Men and Millions Movement on a good footing and in working shape, and to collect if possible at least one payment on every pledge made. We made a great beginning in Kingdom service in the initial campaign for Men and Millions and we shall again experience a thrill of joy and of victory when we together shall move in the matter of paying off our pledges. Brethren and friends, make glad the hearts of your Captain and the above named workers and the whole church by making a payment on the outstanding pledges. This is our bounden duty and we shall be happy in discharging it.

J. O. ATKINSON.

ANOTHER CONFERENCE SPEAKS.

Following what the Eastern Conference had already and unanimously voted for all its churches, the North Carolina Conference voted unanimously last week that all churches within its bounds should at the earliest date practicable hang up in the church the chart prepared by the Mission Secretary, get the pastor, Captain of Men and Millions, or delegate to Conference to explain to the congregation and then have the responsive reading. Folders with this responsive reading are being sent to the churches whose delegates or pastors carried the chart from Conference to the home church. If any church has not received the chart and a sufficient number of folders for the responsive reading and will write the undersigned he will take pleasure in forwarding same. This is regarded as a fine and fitting opportunity of emphasizing the fundamental principles of our Christian church and also of making known to all our people the seven enterprises which the pulpit of the Church seeks to proclaim to the world in its effort to make known the saving truth that "Jesus is the Son of the living God." The writer feels that if Men and Millions can be explained in the light of this revelation there will be no trouble in going forward together for this the mightiest undertaking and holiest movement of our Church.

A REPORT FROM OUR MOUNTAIN WORK.

DR. J. O. ATKINSON, Secretary,
Elon College, N. C.

MY DEAR DR. ATKINSON;

On account of my recent illness this report has been long delayed, and I regret very much that I can not make it more accurate, but will do my best with the information I now have.

Sandy Ridge School, (Post Office) Cana, Va. This school is situated about three miles from the foot of Fancy Gap Road, and eight miles from the Elkspur School and Church, which was the first to be organized, and of which Mrs. Iola Hedgepeth Meredith is the supervisor at present.

We had in school the following:

Male 18; Female 31; Average age 11; Total on roll 49; Average attendance in Primary room 17 Average attendance in Higher grades 11; No. families represented in week day school 27; and in Sunday school 35.

This two teacher school was organized on June 5th. 1922 and continued regularly until July 31st. Because of the late crops and inclement weather many boys and girls were unable to attend regularly, but were allowed to come or discontinue at their convenience. Great interest and willingness was shown in the week-day school and improvement could be detected in many ways among the pupils.

On June 4th. the first Sunday School was held with an attendance of about fifty-five. This Bible School continued regularly on Sunday afternoons until July 30th. The attendance increased to seventy-five and above, and occasionally the little school house among the hills was crowded until there was scarcely standing room. The Sunday School consisted of an adult class, an intermediate class and a primary class. There is great need in the Sandy Ridge School for a teacher for the Young Men's Class. There are about twenty-five young men and boys who need a leader and guide.

Many families were represented in the Sunday School who did not patronize the week-day school on account of the work in the fields at that time of the year.

During the latest two weeks of July a series of preaching services were held at the Sandy Ridge School-house by Mr. M. T. Sorrel of Elon College. Great results came from this.

Forty-five of the noble mountain people, school boys and girls, with their mothers and fathers, who were seizing their first opportunity, stepped to the front for Christ. Later a baptizing was held and a church was organized. When we left there was great hope of a church building being erected near the school house.

We the workers in the Sandy Ridge community, Mrs. Teague, Miss Janet Hedgepeth, and I greatly enjoyed this season of service in the mountains. A comfortable one room cabin was given to us for our summer home by Mr. Humphry McMillan, who proved himself a real friend to us as well as a protector. Necessary furnishings for the cabin were borrowed from our neighbors and a great many of the vegetables and fruits that we used were given to us by our neighbors and patrons of the school. In fact, they were so kind to us that on one occasion it became necessary to announce at Sunday School that we had an ample store of provisions to last us through the coming week and asked that they send less to us, in order that the food might not spoil.

We found the mountaineers to be among the noblest people we had ever known. A great many are men of ability and live beautiful lives, but are yet untrained. The man of the mountains is big of stature and sunburned because he labors honestly in God's great out of doors: he is uneducated, not because he prefers ignorance, but because poor and untrained teachers, if any have been placed there, instead of the best: he is sensitive because he feels that there is something big in the world that should be his, which he does not and can not possess without a teacher. He resorts to liquor because he has always been used to it, and he has never been taught that it was harmful. He throws open the door of his cabin and reaches out a willing and eager hand because his heart is big and his soul is full of love and life. He is not a Christian because we have not thought it necessary to go tell him the simple story.

I find that the volunteer who undertakes this work need not abandon the idea of pleasure and happiness, just because he or she is leaving home to teach in the mountains: neither should one go for only the pleasure that is received from it. While we are sacrificing our summer vacation at home, we are gaining an experience that makes one bigger and broader at heart. Personally, I enjoyed living among these noble Virginians, teaching them and doing for them what I could, roaming the mountains on horse-back and resting by the rhododendron bordered brooks as I have enjoyed no other experience of my life. The appreciation of these people is very great, and our hearts are made glad when we see them accept Christ and become Christian workers.

I hope that sometime I shall have the opportunity to return to Carroll County and work again among my mountain friends.

Sincerely,

KATE WHEELER,

851 W. 5th. St. Winston-Salem, N. C.

Miss Wheeler graduated from Elon College last May and went immediately to work in one of our mountain schools. The above tells her story as far as print is concerned. But eternity alone can tell the whole story for good.

NOTICE OF APPOINTMENTS.

Rev. R. A. Whitten of the Georgia and Alabama Conference will preach at the following places by arrangement with the pastor Rev. H. W. Elder:

Ambrose, Ga. Tuesday Night Dec. 5; Vanceville, Ga. Thursday Night Dec. 7; and Enigma, Ga. Sunday 11 A. M. Dec. 10.

As previously announced Bro. Whitten will preach at La Grange, Ga. 11 A. M. Dec. 3 and at East La Grange 7:30 P. M. same day.

If brethren interested will make known these appointments and give Bro. Whitten a good hearing he as well as the writer will greatly appreciate it.

J. O. ATKINSON.

Mission Secretary.

NOTICE!

Is there now a church in the North Carolina Conference without a pastor? If so, will the secretary or some interested member write the undersigned? Conference voted that I try to ascertain this fact and then supply such churches, if there are any, with a list of available pastors. This I shall be glad to do if only the names of churches without pastors can be secured. We have enough able and worthy preachers in the Conference, I think, to supply well every vacancy. Any helpful information gladly received.

THE CHRISTIAN HOME.

The dearest and most sacred spot on earth to you and me—a spot around which cluster the sweetest associations and the most precious memories is the Christian home. The home problem is the greatest problem of our civilization. The homes of this country are constantly pouring their influence into the great current of our moral, social and political life.

The national life can never rise above the home life. When God wanted to start a nation he made the home life the deciding question, and selected Abraham as the foundation, "For He knew him, that he would command his children and his household after him, that they should keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment, that the Lord might bring upon Abraham that which he had spoken of him."

Two years ago as I stood in Washington and looked upon the capitol for the first time, I said to myself, "Here is the home of my nation," but a few weeks later I found that I was mistaken. Being entertained in an old-fashioned country home for a day and a night, where the noble Christian father read from the old-fashioned Bible and knelt with his children around the family altar and I drank in the influence of that old-fashioned Christian home, I was convinced that, that pile of marble, magnificent as it is, is not the home of my country, but here in such homes are reared the men and women, that make this country the greatest nation God's eyes ever looked upon.

After twenty-five years of experience visiting from house to house, year in and year out, I am convinced that neither the law nor the gospel can make a Christian nation without the help of home authority and home example. Anarchy is not born in the Hay-market of Chicago; outlawism is not born in street mobs.

The question of obedience of law is settled in childhood. The child who does not obey his father and mother will obey neither social, civil, nor divine laws. I believe in the truth of the proverb of the Old Book: "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." The normal way to get rid of drunkards, liars, thieves, debauchees and criminals, is to quit raising them. There is but one question, said Mr. Gladstone to Dr. Talmage, "that is Christianity. Settle that right and you settle all others." Christianity rightly settled in the home settles all questions everywhere.

The most dangerous sign of our times is the neglect of home life and the growing disrespect of children for parents. The learning of the academy, the college, the university, may fade from the mind, but the simple lessons of the home defy years, and live on. The words of a mother make deeper impressions than any other words that touch our plastic childhood. The mother of Walter Scott was well educated and a great lover of poetry and painting. Lord Byron's mother was proud, ill-tempered and violent. The mother of Nero was a murderess. The mother of Washington was a pure woman. The mother of Patrick Henry was eloquent in speech. The last thing the devil takes away from a boy or girl are the early impressions made by their father and mother.

Mrs. Wesley who had reared a noble family of children, without a single black sheep, was asked how she did it. She replied: "I did it with prayer and hickory" Two better instruments were never used. I do not encourage the brutal punishment of children, but when solid piety and wholesome authority go hand in hand obedience and pious children follow. The boys and girls in this country are like Tennessee oats in dry weather—they "head" too soon.

Fathers and mothers, your little children are looking up into your faces, asking which way to go. The child who dressed life papa, might have looked comical, but it had in it a lesson as touching as the great realities of life. They are following your footsteps; do not lead them wrong.

PRESENT STATUS OF CHRISTIAN CONFERENCES IN NORTH CAROLINA.

By vote of the North Carolina Conference the Secretary was requested to publish the action taken by Conference with regards to the Referendum Vote, and the division of the Conference.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Resolution offered by Rev. P. T. Klapp:

That the Conference hereby resolve to remain united for three years, and pay the indebtedness at certain Mission Points.

On motion it was adopted.

Resolution offered by Rev. W. C. Wicker:

Whereas there is a motion passed to continue the N. C. Christian Conference for three years; it is moved that the three original Conferences be authorized to reorganize with the same officers and committees as were in office at the time of the merger.

The motion was adopted.

Resolution offered by Rev. Stanley C. Harrell:

That the local Conferences be requested to hold their annual meetings before the date for the annual session of the N. C. Christian Conference, which meets on Tuesday following the second Sunday in November. That the membership of the N. C. Christian Conference shall consist of, First, all ordained ministers holding membership in the local Conferences, and Second, lay delegates elected by the local Conferences, on the basis of one lay delegate for each two hundred members or major fraction thereof within said local Conference.

It is furthermore requested that a Commission of Polity be appointed to draw up, and submit to the North Carolina Christian Conference during its present session, Articles of Agreement outlining the scope of work, and the authority to be exercised both by the Local Conference, and by the General Conference.

On motion it was adopted.

The President appointed W. C. Wicker, C. D. Johnson, P. H. Fleming, E. W. Brown, J. E. Franks, and C. H. Stephens a Commission on Polity.

The Commission on Polity submitted the following report:

As a Board we beg to submit the following report:

1. That the several local Conferences send their Home Mission collections to the North Carolina Christian Conference until the present obligations are paid; and that when the term of office of the present Home Mission Board of the North Carolina Christian Conference shall expire, that the local Conferences each elect three members, who shall constitute a Home Mission Board of the North Carolina Christian Conference under the present charter of the said N. C. Conference.

2. That we approve the motion passed in this morning's session providing for the local Conferences to elect delegates to the N. C. Christian Conference on the basis of one delegate for every 200 members or major fraction thereof.

3. That the N. C. Christian Conference have a standing committee on Church Polity, and that the present conference now in session name such a committee.

The report of the Commission was adopted by motion.

The above includes all motions passed by the North Carolina Christian Conference, on said subject, in the order of their adoption.

STANLEY C. HARRELL

Secretary N. C. Christian Conference.

WHAT THE HOME DEPARTMENT DOES.

1. It secures the co-operation of parents with the Sunday school teacher of their children.

2. It unites families in Bible study and sets up the family altar.

3. It opens to the pastor many doors that have been closed.

4. It gives the pastor many assistants in caring for the church membership.

5. It wins back to the church many who have wandered away.

6. It brings good cheer and help to many who are "shut-ins," and reveals many cases of need.

7. It multiplies the number and increases the efficiency of lay workers.

8. It makes possible "every church member a member of the Sunday school."

9. It makes it impossible for any one to say "No man careth for my soul."

10. It strengthens the Sunday school in every other department.—The Heidelberg Teacher.

CHILD'S HOUR

Peach Blossoms and Human Hearts.

An exchange tells us of a lesson which a father taught his children one morning at the breakfast table.

This father took great pleasure in his orchard, delighting to walk about among the trees, examining them, watching their growth, and seeing that they were properly pruned and sprayed against disease. He was an early riser, and when the weather was good, took a walk in the orchard before breakfast.

One morning he was gone a little longer than usual, and when he came in to breakfast later, had in his hands several branches that he had cut from peach trees. There had been a frost, and he had been trying to find out whether or not the fruit was hurt.

When the family had finished breakfast, he looked around the circle and asked the children what they thought about the prospect for plenty of fruit that summer, handing them the branches as he asked the question. They looked at the branches, and said they seemed all right as far as they could tell.

"About one-third of the blossoms are dead, however," said the father. Then he asked the children if they could pick out the dead ones. Again they examined the blossoms carefully, but had to admit that they could see no difference in them. "Neither can I by just looking at them," said the father.

He broke off a number of the blossoms, from different twigs, and opening his pen knife, divided each blossom into halves, and passed them around the circle for examination again.

The young people were now able to see that some blossoms were green and fresh looking all the way through, while others had little black specks in the center. "Those with the black hearts have been killed in the fruit bearing part by the frost," he said.

Then he left off talking about fruit blossoms and began to talk about human hearts. "For after all the two are much alike."

He showed the children that just as the frost had blackened the heart of the peach blossoms, so the frost of sin blackened human hearts and spoiled their chances of fruitfulness.

"You can not always tell," he said, "by looking at a person's face what sort of a heart he has. If the sin has been going on long enough then it may show, but at first it usually does not. And we can not take a knife and go into the hearts of folks, as I have done with the peach blossoms. For that reason many black hearts keep their places among the good ones, and no one knows the difference for a while. But the Great Husbandman knows what is inside, just as He knew that a cup polished on the outside did not always mean a clean cup. And tombstones white washed on the outside did not hide from His eyes the dead men's bones which the graves contained in the inside.

He concluded by warning the young people of the blighting frost of sin. "We can not hide black hearts from the Master," he said, "even though we may deceive men. And we can not make black hearts bear fruit."—Herald of Holiness.

STRANGE FORCES ATTACK COMETS' TAILS

Long and delicate Comet tails sweeping through the planetary spaces are sometimes disturbed and broken by some force still mysterious to astronomers, according to Prof. E. E. Barnard of Yerkes Observatory. His remarks on this subject at the meeting of the American Astronomical Society at Williams Bay, Wis., are summarized in Science Service's Science News Bulletin (Washington). Besides showing that the comet itself has much control over the direction of the tail and streamers, photography has shown that unknown influences opposed to the theory of gravitation seem to be at work in the space immediately about our sun. We read:

"This is highly suggestive and may lead to discoveries of very great importance concerning certain conditions within the solar system.

"It is well known that a comet's tail always points approximately away from the sun, and that its form is determined by the speed with which the small particles forming it leave the head, going outward from the sun by the pressure of the sun's light. We may therefore have, if the particles are moving very fast, relative to the speed of the comet in its orbit, a very straight tail pointing directly away from the sun. If the speed of the particles is relatively slow, then the motion of the comet in its orbit, combined with the motion of the particles, will cause the tail to be curved away from the direction of motion. These features of a comet's tail are easily understood from our knowledge of the motion of a comet and the repellant action of the sun's light, so that we may have a straight tail if the particles are moving very fast away from the sun or a violently curved one if their motion is slow. But the curvature, if there is any, must invariably be away from the direction of motion. Photographs have sometimes shown a curvature in a contrary direction to this and that the tail has been thrown forward at a large angle, sometimes suddenly, thus moving faster than the comet itself, which is nearer the sun. This is opposed to the theory of gravitation and must be due to some cause which is independent of the sun and comet. Within twenty-four hours it may recover its natural position."

Prof. Barnard explains that by far the most interesting comets have not been visible to the naked eye. The smaller and more active are studied on the photographic plate. Some of the very large and best known, as Halley's comet of 1910, and others, have not shown any unusual phenomena. He goes on:

"Sometimes a comet will reject its tail, always sending out a new one in a slightly different direction, which, like the smoke from a locomotive, will drift away and dissipate in space. Sometimes a comet will cease to hold its particles together and will itself melt away in space and cease forever to be a comet. These are called 'lost comets.' Biela's is the best known of the lost comets. It has resolved itself into a great swarm of meteors that sometimes are encountered by the earth and burned up in our atmosphere. These displays are called meteoric showers. A comet may sometimes separate into two or more bodies and later disappear altogether from the heavens."—L. D.

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

Christian Orphanage

DEAR FRIENDS:-

Encouraging reports are coming to us from many sections that the Thanksgiving offerings will be much better than last year. One church increased its offerings over last year one hundred per cent. That is fine and is very encouraging to us.

Our goal is ten thousand dollars from November first to end of year. We want to raise six thousand dollars of this amount through the Thanksgiving offering and four thousand from the other offerings. Get busy and help us to reach this goal.

Some of our churches are putting on special programs for this offering and are going to do their best to reach the goal.

Mr. B. N. Duke of New York City mailed us his check for $500.00 this week.

Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Kiltz of Mass. mailed their check for $100.00. This gives us a good start on our Thanksgiving offering.

If our churches and Sunday Schools will take a special interest in this offering this year, and we have pretty Sundays we will raise the largest offering we have ever had.

I notice from the papers that the other Orphanages in this State are going to do big things this year in their Thanksgiving offerings. Why not the Christian church do as well as the others when we have a large territory to help us.

Our good friends are beginning to send in things for a Thank offering:

- Durham Hosiery Mills 8 doz. Hose.
- Maye Hosiery Mill 14 Joz. Hose.
- Minneola Mfg. Co. 100 vds. Outing.
- Womens Missionary Society, Mrs. Jas. Lindley Pres. Brooklyn, N. Y. one box containing 12 sheets. and 12 pillow cases.
- Farmers Coitton Oil Co., Wilson, N. C. 10 bags Nutri-Laden Cattle feed 1,000 lbs.

We are grateful indeed.

Things a Preacher Should Do.

Grow in grace, power, and adaptation to his work.

Keep up the reputation of his class by being just as good a man as possible.

Read the most important new (safe) books, if he can possibly buy them or borrow them.

Cultivate habits of punctuality, begin every service on time and close it on time.

Interest himself in the children and young people, for their good and his own.

Take kindly all honest criticism, and learn something from that which is not kindly.

Make a vigorous push for honest success, doing his very best all the time.

Neglect nothing; small matters neglected by a finding.

Avoid condemning in haste a brother minister; as carefully avoid defending a bad man because he is a minister.

Take time in deciding difficult questions arising in his church. The silence of the pastor will often convince both parties that they are wrong, and a well-pondered judgment will have weight.

Things a Preacher Should Not Do.

Insist too much on being respected for his office; but rather let the office command respect.

Get tired of work that is good work, but seems fruitless. Soul crops often take a good while to grow.

Hesitate to preach a truth because it is unpopular. It may be misunderstood; and the misunderstanding should be sought out and removed.

Try to be eyes for the people who are not blind. Every church has a few saints of whom the preacher may learn of God more perfectly.

Be so rhetorical as to be vague. A great use of rhetoric is to make light strong on a particular point; but there is a rhetoric which is nothing but unaimed brightness.

Be always hiding his thoughts behind general orthodox terms that people do not understand. Peter, on the day of Pentecost, spoke in plain words.—Brethren Evangelist.

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

The Men and Millions Campaign and the causes embraced by it gain and hold their rightful place in the hearts of our people only in proportion as our preachers preach on these great Kingdom interests. The churches having the best record also have preachers who are constantly on their Campaign job.

PREACHING THE CAMPAIGN

No one human agency contributed so much to the victory in subscribing to Men and Millions as the preachers preaching the Campaign. The preacher was then and is now the key man. If the pastor preaches Men and Millions the people will work for and pay their pledges to the Movement.

Make the Victory Sure.

Our people will fall behind in their payment of the pledges if our preachers do not get under the burden again. We can go to the extraordinary session of our Convention next May with a glorious record, if our people are aroused to a full sense of their duty. We need to go to our knees for Power in these great days ahead of us, if we are to truly lead our people, pay our pledges and win out for our Lord.

Preach—Preach—Preach.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

DECEMBER 10, 1922.

SUBJECT: "Story of the Good Samaritan."—
Luke 10:25-36.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."—Lev. 19:18.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ps. 41:1-4; 10-13.

LESSONS TO LEARN.

The story of this lesson tells itself. The message is there so clear that it cannot be misunderstood. The message is just one of love, the love which never fails (1. Cor. 13). In this simple story to the inquiring lawyer, Jesus teaches that the law of love is the highest law of all. Someone has said that the "art of living together" is the greatest art of all. Only love makes this "art" possible. "God is love; and he that abideth in love abideth in God, and God abideth in him." The story of the Good Samaritan is just the story of love for another, regardless of class or station in life. To the smallest child it is interesting for he understands kindness. To the oldest man it is applicable as his interest is in the plan of Jesus for the relations of men. The deepest impression is made when the story is told in its simple language, and then applied to every day life to-day.

"It is not place, but love which makes neighbors."—Wordsworth. To the Jew, only the Jew was a neighbor. We are not told the nation of the "certain man" who "went down from Jerusalem to Jericho." He was simply a man who was unfortunate, a man in need. And the neighbor was He that shewed mercy on him." Rev. George Henry Hubbard declares: "Neighborhood is not a matter of geography but of humanity. Every man may have just as many neighbors as he chooses to make." God gives us the opportunity to show kindness. Are we seeing our "neighbors?" The world is nearer together to-day than before the days of easy communication and travel. We know more about people. We hear more of their ends. With that knowledge our responsibility increases. Often we have the opportunity to be neighborly in the personal way in which the Good Samaritan showed his merciful nature. Sometimes it is the chance to uplift one whom we never saw. The law of the Love of Jesus in our hearts is broad enough and big enough to cover a whole world. The spirit of love is the spirit of the Master, and should govern our giving.

"And if I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and if I give my body to be burned, but have not love, it profiteth me nothing."

The Good Samaritan cared for the wounded man in a friendly way. He might have gone the other way, but his neighbor was there on the Jericho road. We are called to care for the wounded and despised, but is there not also a responsibility to make the way safe for others to follow? Love is a constructive force. Love is a guiding principle in our church work; a principle which compels us to care for the fallen, but also to protect and guide those who are just beginning the journey. Christian education is a powerful means to safeguard the road.

"Go, and do thou likewise." No man can live to himself. The teaching of Christ was not for the lawyer of His time alone. The command to "Go. . . . Do" is to His followers of all time.

The Good Samaritan has a message for us. Are you a good neighbor?

Henry Ward Beecher once said: "There is but one thing required of man, that is, that he shall have love. If you take care of that, everything else will take care of itself. There are other feelings and attributes essential to the soul, but these necessarily exist and act where there is love. As in a watch there is a spring, which, if you coil it up, will of itself keep all the wheels in motion, so there is in the human soul a spring which, if you wind it up, will uncoil itself and carry forward everything related to your duties and conduct in this world."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

December 10, 1922.

SUBJECT: "Some Things I Believe and Why."—
John 11:17-27; 41-46.

PLANNING THE PROGRAM.

A suggested poster is to make a drawing of a young man mounting steps and on the steps have such words printed: Faith, Repentance, Confession, Justification, Witness of the Spirit, Assurance, with the words "By grace are ye saved" under the steps.

Let the leader plan to have brought out during the meeting the belief of the members about the Christian life, and also the fundamental truths for which the Christian church stands. The leaflet: "A Picture, A Purpose, and a Program" published by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, recently, will give information which will be helpful. Write to him for copies. Write Dr. J. F. Burnett, Dayton, Ohio, Christian Publishing Association for booklet giving history and teaching of the Christian Church. How that Christian Endeavor stands for Christian consecration and church loyalty, and trains leaders to carry on the great program of Christianity.

FOR BIBLE READING: Ps. 27:13; Roman 10:17; Mark 9:23; Acts 16:31; Roman 10:14; 1 John 5:1, 5.

SUGGESTED HYMNS: Faith of our Fathers; God Will Take Care of You; Take Time to Be Holy; My Faith Looks Up To Thee; How Firm a Foundation; More about Jesus.

THOUGHTS ON THE LESSON.

"Be a bold, brave, true, honest man. If you know a thing is right, do it. If you have a solemn conviction, dare to utter it in the fear of God."—John B. Gough.

To express your belief in God and His Son, Jesus Christ, may strengthen another life, as well as your own Christian experience. Martha said: "I have believed that thou art Christ, the Son of God," and great was the blessing which came into her life. Testimony strengthens belief.

Do you believe in Jesus Christ and His teachings? Is this belief revealed in your daily life? Are you playing the "Good Samaritan?"

"Belief cometh of hearing" Romans 10:17. Church attendance and worship determines many things which we believe. Do you know and believe the cardinal principles of your Church? These principles of the Christian church, are briefly: Christ the Foundation, and only Head of the Church; the Bible the only creed; Christian the only name; Christian character the only test of fellowship; and liberty of conscience granted to all.

The part taken in the program of the church reveals much of the belief of the member in its divine principles. A program is planned and carried on to support the work of the church in every phase of its service. Men are called for to dedicate life and talent to the King's business. Millions are called for to make it possible for more people to know the Lord Christ. Do you believe in "Men and Millions?" What part are you taking in its great work?

And Jesus lifted up his eyes, and said, "Father, I thank thee that thou heardest me." Ralph Waldo Emerson once declared "No man ever prayed heartily without learning something." Just as true is it that man does not pray without believing something. Jesus thanked His Heavenly Father, showing His belief in the prayer of gratitude, as well as in the prayer of petition. Pray to God for your church, in gratitude for its great work of the past, in petition for guidance in the future. Prayer will deepen your belief in the divine mission of the church. Earnest prayer for the enterprises of the church will make you believe in them; Missions, Religious Education, The Christian Sun, Elon College, the Christian Orphanage, Superannuation, the Southern Christian Convention. Every one of them need your prayers.

"Some things I believe and why" is our subject; a theme which should engage our thoughts more often. With Paul, can you say: "I know him whom I have believed, and I am persuaded that he is able to guard that which I have committed unto him against that day?"

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION ACTIVITIES IN THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

The Pleasant Ridge, North Carolina, Church has just organized a Young People's Missionary Society.

A Christian Endeavor Society with twenty-five members has been organized at the Liberty Church Vance County, North Carolina, with C. O. Eaves as President.

T. J. Holland, Wray, Georgia, reports progress and splendid interest in both Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work in the Ambrose Christian Church.

Seagrove, North Carolina, has a good Christian Endeavor Society, with A. B. Cox of Seagrove as president, and Miss Ruth Vuncannon as Secretary. This is another new society.

The Pleasant Grove, Virginia, Christian Sunday School now has an organized Young Men's Class, which is planning good work for the winter. Rev. J. E. McCauley is the pastor of this church, and Mr. P. W. Farmer, Sunday School superintendent.

Leaksville Sunday School, V. L. Eppard, Superintendent, has taken a forward step by providing a Sunday School library for the use of its pupils and workers. A Workers' Library is an indispensable aid to any Sunday School or Christian Endeavor Society.

Mr. J. A. Carlton is the new superintendent of the Sunday School of the Ebenezer Christian Church, near Raleigh, North Carolina. He succeeds Mr. M. J. Carlton who has seen many improvements in the work there during his twenty-five years of service.

St. Paul's Christian Church, Wyoming, Delaware, has both a Sunday School and a Christian Endeavor Society. The superintendent, Mr. Samuel S. Sapp writes of the deep interest in the work of both organizations, and of plans for growth in numbers and activity.

The work of the Sunday School at Parks Cross Roads is going on nicely. A Teachers Training Class of thirteen members has just been organized as the first of a number of forward steps planned by the church, under the direction of the superintendent W. M. Dorsett and the secretary W. R. Rightsell.

On Sunday afternoon, November 19th, the Field Secretary visited the new Christian Endeavor Society at the Monticello Christian Church. The attendance was good and the interest alive in matters of the Society and the church. The prospects are fine for a Society which will inspire and train the young people of the church and community.

Rock Stand Christian Church, of the Alabama Conference has a Christian Endeavor Society with a membership of one hundred and twenty-five. This is a live Society, and its members have organized or assisted in the work of at least three other Christian Endeavor Societies in the Conference. Christian Endeavor is growing rapidly and doing good work in the churches of the Alabama Conference.

The First Christian Church of Norfolk is making real progress in its program of Christian Education. Twelve of the teachers have just completed one unit of the Standard Training Course, and are following up this work with another training class. The Sunday School is thoroughly graded and using the graded lessons up to the Intermediate, and plans to introduce the Intermediate lessons very soon. J. O. Wiggs is the progressive superintendent of this Sunday School.

Several weeks ago the Raleigh Christian Endeavor Society carried out a "Booster" program for a Sunday evening service. The program was made up of the devotional period, special music, and talks on the following subjects: "Definition of a Booster;" "How C. E. Can Boost the Church;" "How C. E. Can Boost the Sunday School;" "How C. E. Can Boost Itself." The meeting proved very interesting and helpful in linking together the work of the various organizations of the Church.

On Sunday night the Field Secretary visited the Palm Street Christian Church of Greensboro. The Christian Endeavor Society here is just one year old. Robert L. Fine is the president, and Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, who was ordained at the recent session of the North Carolina Conference, the pastor. At both Christian Endeavor and church services, we found interested and attentive groups of Christian people, who seemed filled with a determination to go forward in all phases of the work of the church.

The attendance of the Greensboro Sunday School, First Christian Church, passed the two hundred mark on Sunday, November 19th. They are now engaged in a contest between the ladies and men, and on the above Sunday the report showed the ladies in the lead. The spirit throughout the service seemed to be to go forward in the work, as the School, under the splendid leadership of its superintendent, W. B. Truitt, works with its motto: "Fetch one." The present church building is now overcrowded with the present attendance. The Field Secretary had the privilege of visiting this Sunday School on November 19th, and both taking part in the worship service in the Primary Department, and of speaking to the whole school in the closing service. Miss Christine Thompson, superintendent of the little folks, is doing fine work in this department. It is inspiring to visit a Sunday School like that at Greensboro.

The Mebane Christian Church, of which Rev. P. T. Klapp is the pastor, is making good progress in its building program. The new stained glass windows have been put in the church, and soon the folding doors which will make Sunday school rooms possible, will be put in. On Saturday night, the 18th of November, the people of the church met with the pastor and the Field Secretary for a conference hour to discuss the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work. The membership of the Mebane church is small, but all seem to be earnest, consecrated workers for the Master. Miss Lillie Fowler has charge of the Endeavor work, and has a fine group of boys and girls whom she is training, and who will be a strong asset in the Mebane church in the future days. Mr. J. O. Fowler is the superintendent of the Sunday school. This was our first visit to the Mebane church, and the outstanding impression which the visit made was a feeling of pride in and gratitude for the work which our churches, even the smaller ones, are doing in the work of teaching and training the boys and girls of our church. The Mebane church deserves every encouragement and merits our aid and prayers that the best work may be done there.

A Tarbell's Guide Year!

WORLD-WIDE PRAISE

Baptist World:

"Thousands would rather start a new year without a calendar than without a new 'Tarbell's.'"

G. Campbell Morgan:

"Amazes me by its inspirational and educational advantage to any teacher."

Marion Lawrance:

"The best, most complete, most practical and most satisfactory lesson help."

Alexander Whyte:

"All the help needed by any teacher."

Margaret Slattery:

"Know of nothing better. . . . I use it personally in my work."

John Henry Jowett:

"Of great service to Sunday School teacher—exceedingly well done."

A Teaching Necessity

The recent International Sunday School Convention, in emphasizing the need for BETTER Sunday School instruction, paved the way for "Tarbell's Guide" as a necessity in every school!

Superior

to all other Helps in teaching value, ability, comprehensiveness, and modern appeal. "Tarbell's Guide" raises the international system clear above the objections of its critics, and is the logical teachers' help to-day!

Larger by far

than any other Lesson Handbook, full to overflowing with modern suggestions, "Tarbell's Guide" is now a necessity to all who would apply latest teaching methods and discoveries to Sunday School Lesson presentation.

NEW BOOKS FOR THE LIBRARY AND THE HOME

CRUSADING IN THE WEST INDIES, by Rev. W. F. Jordan, Secretary of the Upper Andes Agency of the American Bible Society. Illustrated and with Introduction by W. I. Haven, D. D. Published by The Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, Chicago, London and Edinburgh. Well bound in cloth. Price $1.75.

This is a very readable book and from the pen of the man who wrote on first hand knowledge. Mr. Jordan, the author, has traveled in the lands of which he writes, and so he gives his impressions of these most interesting people, not from hearsay, but from actual observations on the field in person.

He writes of the peoples of Cuba, Haiti, Santa Domingo, Porto Rica, The French Islands, and closes with a chapter of Observations, making a most readable book, especially for those who have no particular knowledge of these peoples from the various countries described. When Bro. Jordan writes of Porto Rica, he tells us of some most interesting matters. He says on page 152:

I asked a man who could not read, which he preferred, the United States Government, or that of Spain. The man answered: "There is no comparison. I never learned to read; and if we had remained under Spain my children would never have had an opportunity to learn; but now they can all read, and the oldest is ready for the high school."

Mr. Jordan declares that America has brought justice to the poor man and opened the door of opportunity to all. Science is eradicating the hook-worm, creating a public opinion in favor of clean living and making the Island healthy. There still remains, however, the problem of bettering the economic condition and of creating in the heart of the laborer a self-respect, that shall demand a better housing than is a shack that would make an American farmer blush to own as a pig-pen.

Again Mr. Jordan brings out the appreciation of the common people of Porto Rico for the work the United States has done for them, as follows: "On my first visit to Ponce I overheard some laboring men on the railway platform discussing a case in court where a laborer had received justice in a suit against a rich man, who had tried to defraud him." Said one of the men, referring to this decision: "That is the United States," evidently feeling some pride in the fact. And then he added: "In Spanish times the poor man had no chance," and it seemed that the group was unanimous in this view. The book is full of matter of a most interesting character, and we gladly commend it to all of our readers.

THE LIFE OF A. B. SIMPSON, Authorized Edition, by Rev. A. E. Thompson, M. A. It also has special chapters by Rev. Jas. M. Gray, D. D., Rev. J. Gregory Mantle, D. D., R. H. Glover, M. D., Rev. Kenneth Mackenzie, Rev. F. H. Senft, B. A., and W. M. Turnbull, D. D. The book contains 300 pages, bound in cloth. Price $2.50. Published by The Christian Alliance Publishing Company, 3611 Fourteenth Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Rev. A. B. Simpson was one of the most remarkable men of his day. He was a man of marked ability and great energy which under the blessing of God enabled him to reach various parts of the world with the great message which God had given him. By birth he was a Canadian and Presbyterian. As such, he was educated and entered the ministry of the Presbyterian Church. He was first called to a church in Canada, which, though quite young (17 years) he filled with marked ability. Later he was called to a Presbyterian Church in Louisville, Ky., where he did a great work, and later was called to a Presbyterian church in New York City, which he accepted and served with great ability, till he became impressed with the thought that he must seek to reach the lower classes of society—he must go down into the slums of New York and win men and women from that strata of human society. It was a crisis in his life. His friends thought it was a great mistake, but A. B. Simpson had settled this matter on his knees, and he was not to be driven from his purpose to win souls for Christ. The people of the upper class in which his ministry had been so largely spent, cried failure, but A. B. Simpson was deaf to the plea of any danger of failure. He went on in the work which he felt God had given him. Beginning in the slum centers of New York, he pressed on till his field widened, taking in China, Japan, India, the Islands of the Sea, Africa and Tibet, besides doing a great work in the United States and Canada in home mission work. Indeed, the field continued to widen till it took in practically the whole world, for his zeal knew no limits to his vision. Wherever there was need, there he was ready to hear the cry of the perishing, and when he heard the cry, he made haste to send the gospel to the dying.

Mr. Simpson was not only a great preacher, but he was a ready writer and edited The Alliance Weekly for many years in his labors for the spread of the gospel to the ends of the earth. Not only so, but he wrote many books of high value to the spiritual life of God's people. While he was doing all this, he was pastor of the Gospel Tabernacle in New York City and was the responsible head of The Christian and Missionary Alliance, carefully looking after every detail of its work. He is the one man of his day and generation who did a Herculean task in the spread of the gospel, and he did it because he felt that God had sent him to do it. Nothing we can say or do can give the reader an adequate idea of the real man as he was. If you will send and get the book itself, that will give you the best idea of the man he was and especially of the man he was as the servant of God. We had the honor of his personal acquaintance and believe we can say that few men, very few indeed, have influenced this writer as did A. B. Simpson.

IN HIS IMAGE, by William Jennings Bryan, 266 pages, bound in cloth. Sells at $1.75. Published by Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, Chicago, London and Edinburgh.

This Mr. Bryan is a great man, a statesman of great ability, and a faithful follower of Jesus of Nazareth. The publication of this book has added to the number of men who like to deride Mr. Bryan, or in some way belittle him, but this man of God is not afraid and therefore where he feels the call to service, there he is in quick time and doing his best for the Master's cause. This book Mr. Bryan has written to show up the false pleas of Evolution, and he has done his work well. If there were no other proof of this fact, it would be quite sufficient to show how he has stirred the evolutionists. They have been awakened as by some rude hand spoiling their fondest pet theory, and they have arisen in their might to destroy the influence of Mr. Bryan's great work. He has sent back to them a message to the effect that he is not at all disturbed by their frantic efforts against him. And well he may not be, for he is backed by the truth that cannot be shaken.

We have read In His Image with delight and a constantly growing interest. Mr. Bryan certainly deals this cult of Evolution some mighty blows and the proof of the fact is, as Sam Jones used to say, the dog that is hit is the one that hollers. It has certainly made a mighty stir among the Evolutionists—they have hollered loud enough to frighten some people, but a good work has been done by Mr. Bryan and it will stand, notwithstanding the mighty efforts of these men of science, so called. We commend to the study of the people Mr. Bryan's new book, In His Image. He is a great speaker and a great writer, and the proof of the fact appears in that he deals with this theory of Evolution in such a plain way that the average reader can get at his thought with little trouble. If you wish to be posted as to the Christian side of this question of Evolution, then get Mr. Bryan's book and give it a thorough reading, and we believe you will find your back-bone for the truth strengthened not a little. We have read the book with a real delight.

THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN THEOPHAGY, by Preserve Smith, 223 pages, in cloth binding. Published by Open Court Publishing Company, Chicago, Ill.

We like to do justice to all books sent to this office for review, but when a book seeks to make its main issue one not easily recognizable by its conformity to the Scriptures, we feel under no obligation to give it a hearing. As soon as we read in the first chapter the following sentence, we had no desire to pursue the line of thought any further: "The most excellent of the sacraments" was borrowed by the Christians from the older mystery religions. That they attributed the institution of their rite to their founder was inevitable."

Any man who is capable of believing that the early disciples and apostles were capable of taking a sacrament from some older religion and then attribute the institution of the same to Christ as their founder, well we do not care to read after him, as it would seem to be time wasted.

THE BELIEF IN GOD AND IMMORTALITY, by Jas. H. Leuba, containing 329 pages, in cloth binding, and published by The Open Court Publishing Company, Chicago, Ill.

Here is another book from the same company, although from a different writer. Its ear marks indicate a work of hostility to the truth, so we have nothing to say in its favor. Let it alone.

SABER AND SONG, by William Thornton Whitsett, Whitsett Institute, Whitsett, N. C.

A real poetic spirit is disclosed in SABER AND SONG.

The gifted writer shows in his verses a rare talent and expression of a soul overflowing with harmony and rhythm—a real charm of style which few writers possess.

We are glad to add to our library a book of such genuine genius as this book presents.

"These, though the year is dying fast, Still bid us e'er remember Thanksgiving comes, when toil is past, To light the drear November."—Saber and Song.

WHAT PRAYER MEANS TO ME

BY ELOISE REID.

Prayer has come into my life as a revelation of God's Spirit within that moves my heart to seek him.

It has come to mean a definite surrender to this calling as an avenue of missionary life service, an outlet for the desire to co-operate with those who are giving all to meet the need of the non-Christian world. The ambition for a great, compelling work has been absorbed by the insistent call that is before the Christian world to meet with God in prayer.

To the humblest of us perception of this mighty field of endeavor so victoriously explored by the Christlike of every time grows as we tread the path, and we learn to appreciate the high place in the plan of God intercession holds.

Opportunities are constantly coming to those who yield themselves to this devotion, and every precious promise to those who come to him "in spirit" inspires our effort to "keep faith" in secret with him. It opens to us the greatest privilege of life—the way to help another with understanding sympathy. And at the same time it becomes the clearing house of our own desires, a guiding and corrective agency of the Spirit.

In the workshop of this inner and hidden life the great Carpenter is still the designer and finisher of all the material that comes in, and he is constantly building windows. To pray one must see, not hazily nor through blinds, but with shades raised high to insure a perfect light.

To live within this atmosphere brings added leaven to the working of the kingdom, not only in our corner, but to the whole. To follow this simple life means struggle and discipline as well as peace and sustaining comfort. It calls for all the courage and obedience of a soldier. It is the greatest challenge for usefulness and leads to sure activity for God.

Directed prayer has meant the enlarging and the steadying of my prayer life. For this the Bureau of Specials has been and is the means used of God to bring a keen sense of this responsibility and a way to meet it. The World News this department sends out to the Church that it may be kept in close touch with the progress and needs of our fields and missionaries has acted as a spiritual radio through which to "listen in" and hear the special calls for prayer. It stands as an open recourse for every one who would enlist in this comradeship with Christ.

It gives to a yearning heart an intelligent and alert fellowship with the forward movement of the noblest army on earth, a positive share in the triumphs of his kingdom.

It is the mighty and beauty-filled channel through which we find the "substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

To The Sun

A quiet, but very pretty marriage took place Saturday afternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. S. R. B. Howell, when their daughter, Minnie Grace, became the bride of Mr. Thomas Gregory, of Norfolk. The rooms were beautifully decorated with ferns and cut-flowers. Rev. W. M. Jay, pastor of Holy Neck Christian Church, performed the ceremony.

The bride was attired in a lovely coat suit of dark blue maline, trimmed with gray fur. She wore a hat to match. Her corsage was of white rosebuds and ferns.

Little Misses Barbara Howell of Norfolk, Va., and Hazelette Rooks, of Washington, D. C., nieces of the bride, were ring bearer and flower girl. Both wore dainty dresses of white organdie. Miss Annie Welch, of Norfolk, a cousin of the bride, furnished the music.

Immediately after the ceremony, Mr. and Mrs. Gregory left for a short wedding trip, after which they will be at home in Lafayette Annex, Norfolk, Va.

DIED

At his home, Norfolk, Va., on Friday, November 17, 1922, W. J. Atkins, son of Mr. Wiley J. Atkins, of Windsor, Va., aged 41 years, 10 months and 20 days. He was a member of the First Disciples Church of Norfolk, Va. He leaves a wife, one son, an aged father, three sisters, two brothers and many friends. He was also a member of the Order Fraternal Americans, and was well known in the business circle of Norfolk, Va., having been a contractor for 18 years. Funeral services were conducted at Antioch by the pastor and his remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery. May the dear bereaved ones find comfort in Jesus.

DIED

At his home, near Suffolk, Va., on Sunday morning, November 19, 1922, Augustus Henry Powell, aged 59 years. He was a member of Cypress Chapel Christian Church and will be greatly missed in his community, home and church. His sufferings were great, though he bore them with Christian fortitude, being resigned to the will of his Lord. He leaves a devoted wife, two daughters, one son and many friends. His funeral services were conducted at his home and his remains were laid to rest in Cedar Hill Cemetery. The Lord bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

SELLARS

Mrs. Frusannah Elizabeth Sellars was born August 3, 1833, and died October 29, 1922, being in her ninetieth year. Her marriage to Dr. B. A. Sellars occurred July 3, 1850. To this union eleven children were born, ten of whom survive. Early in life she found Christ, and to Him she was true unto the end. Faithfulness was one of the outstanding watchwords of her life. She rests from her labors and her works follow her. Funeral was held from the Christian Church in Burlington on Monday, October 30, at 3:30, the pastor being assisted by Dr. P. H. Fleming, former pastor of the deceased. Interment took place in Pine Hill Cemetery, Burlington.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

"Senator Felton."—

Mrs. W. H. Felton, who was appointed by Governor Hardwick to succeed Senator Watson, was permitted through courtesy to be sworn in as a senator. Mr. George, of Georgia, was duly nominated and elected by the State of Georgia as the successor of Mr. Watson, and was given his commission which entitled him to the seat, but in order to permit Mrs. Felton to have the honor of occupying a seat in the highest legislative body of the country, even though it was for but a little while, he withheld his commission.

We have noticed that since women came into politics men are willing to show them courtesy if no office is likely to be lost thereby on the part of the male contingency. A woman will be asked to occupy the speaker's desk in the legislature, or she will be appointed to some important position which she accepts as a compliment. But in most cases where women run for elective offices they are overwhelmingly defeated. Major Chas. M. Steadman defeated Mrs. Patterson by a tremendous majority.

Of course, this will be changed later on when women become better acquainted with the ways of the politicians. But until they do learn some lessons as to political manipulations, courtesy is about all they need expect.—Exchange.

Lausanne Conference.—

The Lausanne Conference, which was called to try to settle affairs between Greece and Turkey, met on Monday, November 20. At this time the session is getting under way and we trust will amount to something, though the history of the many European conferences already held is not re-assuring.

The United States is not represented at this conference. We have "observers" there who have been accorded the right to take part in the discussions. But as the United States refused to be officially represented, these observers will have no vote.

Mr. R. W. Child, our representative to Italy, and Mr. John A. Crew, American ambassador to Switzerland, are our accredited "observers." Admiral Bristol, who did such magnificent work in rescuing the refugees of Smyrna, will also attend the conference.

Lord Curzon of England, who is the presiding officer of the conference, warmly welcomed these gentlemen from America and plainly showed his appreciation of their presence.

The interests of America will be safe-guarded and we have no doubt that the presence of these men, though not there in an official capacity, will be a steadying influence at the conference.

At the time of this writing the request from the Turks that they be allowed to retain Thrace was unanimously denied. It is said that the unanimity in refusing this request greatly depressed the Turkish representatives. We venture the opinion that they will be still further depressed before this conference ends.

As Mr. Lloyd George failed in his diplomacy in regard to Turkey at a former conference and was severely criticized for the way he managed affairs, it may be that the new regime will profit by his failure and have better success.—Exchange.

Newberry Resigns.—

It will be recalled that Senator Newberry was tried in a Michigan court for violating the election laws, and was convicted. He appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States, which tribunal acquitted him on the ground that the law was not violated in fact. While the court's decision, in all probability, was rendered according to law, Mr. Newberry was condemned by the verdict of the court of public opinion. He took his seat in the Senate and a resolution for his expulsion was introduced. The introduction of the resolution was followed by a hot debate. And when the vote was taken the resolution was lost by the narrow margin of five votes. Many members of Mr. Newberry's own party spoke and voted for his expulsion.

The recent election in Michigan was a repudiation of Newberry. Senator Townsend, his colleague, stood for re-election and Newberryism was the chief issue. Townsend was defeated as were senators from other States who opposed the expulsion of Newberry from the Senate. Seeing the hand-writing on the wall, Mr. Newberry sent in his resignation which was accepted. The rebuke given to those who stood for Newberry will be a wholesome lesson to men in public life. One hundred and ninety-five thousand dollars was spent in Michigan to secure his nomination and election as a member of the Senate. If candidates for the Senate, or their friends, are allowed to buy seats in this important body by the expenditure of vast sums that body, which has the reputation of being the most august in the world, will degenerate into a mere bargain place at which the men who can command the biggest purse will secure the prize.

If the law is so defective that no punishment can be administered whenever an unreasonable sum is used for election purposes, Congress should lose no time in amending the law so as to make it operative.

Without any regard to party whatever, we rejoice that this blot has been removed from the United States Senate.—Biblical Recorder.

Harveyitis.—

Mr. Geo. Harvey, of London and New York, has been heard from after months of silence, at least his mouth has been silent. Mr Harvey is afflicted. It is a bad affliction. He can't control his mouth. It is like a double hinged door that opens both ways. Some people talk when they have something to say—some people talk when they have nothing to say. Some mouths are wired up so they connect with a supply of ideas and some are not.

Mr. Geo. Harvey spoke last at an Author's Club in London. He was there as an author and as American representative to the British Government. In his speech, he stressed the theory that women have no souls. There is no need to be alarmed over Mr. Harvey's mouth and what it said this time. If he had not said this, he would have said something else. It is bad to have a mouth without a rudder and a steering wheel, but there are many such running at large. They go to church, to the Aid Society, in the choir and everywhere else. A stray and irresponsible mouth is not pleasant to have running at large in a neighborhood.

But the whole point in this is being missed. It is all a joke. Mr. Harvey was sent to the Court of St. James as a joke. It was a huge American joke pulled on our English cousins. They had had such diplomats as Hay, Reid, Choate and Page and others, and the President, desiring to give them relaxation from life's serious strain, sent Mr. Geo. Harvey as a joke. Of course, the English do not see the joke. They seldom do until it comes back on the return trip. When Mr. Harvey comes home, they will begin to understand what a funny man he is. When American comedies first appeared in London and one Mutt smeared another in the face with a pie or hit him in the head with a hammer, they didn't see anything funny in that. America screamed in fun, but London groaned in pain. There isn't any humor in it but we thought we were expected to laugh. If London didn't see humor in that, they will hardly see it in Geo. Harvey's mouth. But it is there just the same.

Some days ago, we heard two negroes talking. One was a philosopher of his race and we listened.

"Does yer know why niggers is black?" he asked.

"No I doesn't, does you?" his companion replied.

"Yes—God made Adam a white man and all ovm was white till Cain done and talk too much and God turnt him black. Den all ovm what talk too much was turnt black. You never see no nigger what don't talk too much."

There, of course, is weakness in his theory or some folks who are white are due for a darker hue and before Col. Harvey returns from London, his friends may not know him. It is bad to talk too much when you have anything to say, but it is worse when you have nothing to say.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

NOTES-PERSONALS

And why is it that Bro. Black has nothing to say of his new field? We are sure there are good items floating around there.

Will Dr. Long tell us what is going on in the Franklinton new church? Our brethren will be glad to know of the progress that good work is making.

Do tell us the news from your field. Make it brief, but expressive of the facts. Just give us the general facts, not so much of the details, please.

THE SUN begins to think it is time the President of the Southern Christian Convention was having something to say to his large constituency. How about it Dr. L. E. Smith?

Who has Raleigh got for its pastor? That church is too important to go without a pastor. We hope the Raleigh brethren and sisters will get together and secure a pastor, for no church can well do without a leader.

What has become of the manuscript of that sermon delivered at the Eastern Virginia Conference, Bro. Flory? We mean the one the Conference asked you to give to THE CHRISTIAN SUN for publication. Let it come as soon as convenient.

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., is pastor of Mount Auburn in Warren County, N. C., where he is very popular with the people. He has served them for many years and enjoys his work there. Mount Auburn is one of our strong churches and is always in the line when it comes to doing good. That is the New Testament kind of churches. See Titus 2:14.

We are glad to know that Deacon William Watts of the Auburn church, who was one of our parishioners something like forty years ago, is still living and still standing by his post as a deacon in the Auburn church. Well, done good and faithful servant—may that be your welcome brother, when you go to get your reward. How we would like to see him again and shake his hand as in the olden time of the long ago.

Many are the good words spoken by the people of the Henderson Christian Church in favor of the work of Rev. Elisha Bradshaw in their recent protracted meeting. Bro. Bradshaw made a good impression for the work of the gospel and at the same time he won a place in the hearts of the people. Bro. Bradshaw is a faithful preacher of the word. Many are following his work at Fancy Gap, Va., an abiding interest. We hope he will report his work for THE SUN's readers.

We deeply regret the loss which recently befell Rev. J. E. Franks, in the burning of his barn, in which he lost one hundred barrels of corn, much long feed, a tractor and his farming implements. In his effort to save some of these his hands and face were quite much burned. While Bro. Franks has farming work done, and is very successful in the same, he is at the same time one of our most successful pastors and is doing a fine work. He is a most earnest and consecrated worker. He will have much sympathy from our brethren and especially from the churches he so well and successfully serves. Let his churches see that he is not hindered in his pulpit work.

In a note from Rev. B. J. Earp, Newport News, Va., he says: "Our field at Newport News is moving nicely. Nov. 26th, was called with us 'Christian Orphanage Day.' Our church raised $75.00 for worthy orphanage. Next Sunday is Church Day, when we will present the cause of the Men and Millions which embraces all the enterprises of our Church." That was a fine offering for the orphanage, especially for a church which is not yet considered old. We hope to hear a good report from the Men and Millions Day.

Bro. Herbert E. Carlton, Henderson, N. C., was recently in Richmond, Va., and on his return reported that the new building for the First Christian Church of Richmond is going up nicely and with good prospects. This will be gratifying news to our many readers. We need to give Richmond a helping hand, for it is a most important undertaking. The building, if we mistake not, is to be completed by next April. It will be a great addition to our people living in Richmond and, as we believe, it will mark a new era in the work of our church in that city.

What is the matter with Rev. W. H. Garman, pastor of the Lambert's Point Christian Church (old Zion)? We rarely hear anything from him personally, but when we get down that way we do hear that wonderful things are taking place under his ministry—he seems to be a drawing force in his pulpit, for it is said that though they enlarged the church building for the sake of accommodating the people who attend his ministry, still they cannot all get in. We think it is almost ashame that Bro. Garman has such crowds and yet does not tell us (THE SUN's readers) anything about it.

Is the Christian Church growing? Yes, wonderfully in her institutions, but not so much numerically. In our missionary operations, in our colleges, in our publishing interests, and in the building of more substantial church buildings, we are away ahead of ourselves in former years. In all this we rejoice, but we do not see why we may not be growing in numbers also. It may be that necessarily there was a let up in numbers when we began to give more attention to strengthening our work along the lines of our institutions. At any rate, now that we are doing so well along many lines, we must take care of the matter of winning men and women from the world to Christ.

We regret to learn of the most unfortunate accident which befell Miss Olive G. Williams recently. Only a few weeks ago she was reported as in hospital at Raleigh, suffering from an attack of pneumonia. She was recovering nicely, and in preparation for leaving the hospital, she attempted to walk across the room, when she fell and broke her shoulder blade and now the doctor says she will have to remain in the hospital eight weeks in order to fully recover. Her many friends will deeply sympathize with her in suffering and confinement from this misfortune. Miss Williams is one of our Porta Rica Missionaries, now home on a furlough. Let our sister be remembered in prayer for her comfort and healing.

Brethren, what are you doing with your pens? THE SUN's columns need your assistance and we appeal for it. We wish your best articles for the reading of our people, and then we wish the news reported from your field. Just remember that your work needs the sympathy and help of your brethren, but how can they give it, if they know nothing about it? Again, our people are entitled to the best instruction our thinking and well informed men can give them. We plead not primarily for your help for the editor, although that is appreciated, but we are pleading for your help for the men and women who are seeking spiritual food at the hands of the Christian Church and her ministers. Brethren, rub your pens to cleanness and give us short articles made up from your best thought. There is a responsibility in this matter which deserves the prayerful attention of men and women who are qualified to write for the instruction of others.

Dr. W. A. Harper, as has been announced in these columns, has been elected Secretary of Christian Education for the American Christian Convention and he has accepted. The college paper, Maroon and Gold, the mouthpiece for Elon College and its student body, seems to think that Dr. Harper may resign in order to serve as Secretary of Christian Education. We do not so understand it, and we see no need for him to resign on that account, or as for that, on any other account. So far as building up a large patronage for Elon College is concerned, we do not think his work can be excelled. We do not believe he will resign and see no reason why he should so far as this Secretaryship is concerned. He has unusual ability along all lines of college work, both as to his business and literary qualifications. Business is almost like play to him, he despatches it so readily, and as for matters of scholarship, he seems able to grasp anything he needs to master. We predict he will not leave Elon, not that he might not do better elsewhere, so far as salary is concerned, but he loves Elon and the Christian Church. If nothing else will keep him here, these will. The cords of love are hard to break and we believe they will hold him fast and keep him at Elon.

On Tuesday, Nov. 28, 1922, Rev. and Mrs. J. T. Whitley, now of Norfolk, Va., celebrated their golden wedding. Then Bro. Whitley was a rising and popular young minister in the Christian Church with great prospects before him. Now that fifty years have passed away since that pleasant event, he is no more the rising young minister, but a man of maturity and he is watching a sunset scene, and to him and his wife it is full of significance. What eventful days these fifty years have included, and more, for many of these days have been full of blessings from our Father's hand. THE CHRISTIAN SUN, of which Dr. Whitley was once editor, hereby tenders to him, and to the lovely lady who was then his bride, but who, after so many years have come and gone, is still his devoted and faithful wife, a brother's greeting with very best wishes for the brightest sunshine of a lovely sunset to make their last days bright and happy in Christ. May the richest of all the blessings of life be given them as the crown of long and useful lives in the Master's service. We recall that marriage day, even though it is so long ago, with many vivid recollections, and one of these recollections is that the young bridegroom was very proud of his beautiful bride, and she was a very beautiful woman, as well as a beautiful bride. How wonderful and what a blessing to spend fifty years together in the Master's service! The Park Place Methodist Church tendered this beloved couple a real surprise party, as commemorative of the interesting event, and they also gave them a purse as indicating the esteem in which these dear people are held by the Park Place Church, although he is not the pastor of the church, but an attendant and a faithful helper as opportunity may present itself. May God's richest blessings be upon you, dear friend, is the wish of one who was in that day closely associated with you in the work of the Lord.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, Editor,
Henderson, N. C.

A BROTHER PUTS HIMSELF IN A CLOSE PLACE.

In a doctrinal sermon preached by the Rev. J. B. Hill, a Baptist minister, which was published in The Religious Herald Sept. 28, 1922, are some remarkable statements, which ought not to go unchallenged. The sermon is based on the incident of the Tessera Stone as given to us in Rev. 2:17, which reads:

"I will give him a white stone, and upon the stone a new name written, which no one knoweth but he that receiveth it."

Commentators claim that the imagery of this text is based on an orientalism which was common in the days when John was writing the book of Revelation. The Tessera Stone was used by two persons who wished to form a friendship pact in which they pledged, life-long loyalty to each other. They took a small and long white stone and the two would break the stone midway its length, and each one would take one half of the stone and this was to be a perpetual token of undying friendship and love. No matter when nor whence one should be in need, or in trouble, if he could find the man who held the other half of the Tessera Stone, and could prove the former pact of undying friendship by showing that the two pieces of stone, in the break would fit exactly, one into the other, then no matter what the conditions were, help must be immediately given.

Under this agreement it is said that two persons, youths, broke the Tessera Stone, and parted. One remained in the community and became very rich. The other became a wanderer, and after fifty years of the life of a hobo, he came back, poor, ragged, destitute. As he passed a palace, he asked the servants who lived there. A certain name was given—it was the name of his Tessera friend. He at once asked to be taken in to the man of that palace, but the servants refused, saying their master would not allow beggars to come in to his presence. Then he reached for his part of the Tessera Stone which he had sacredly kept through all his wanderings, and asked that it be taken in and shown to the man of the palace. The servant took the stone and carried it to his master. The rich man immediately took out his piece of the stone and trying it, saw that it matched his piece. At once he rushed out and threw his arms about the neck of the tramp, for he knew it was his Tessera friend of fifty years ago. He at once conducted him into the palace and treated him as a brother, meeting his every need and making him indeed comfortable and at home.

Then Bro. Hill declared:

"So it is with us, my friends; when we give ourselves with heart-loyalty to Jesus in confession of sin and regeneration, the Holy Spirit breaks the Tessera Stone with us. He keeping one end and we the other; a pledge of secrecy is made between the Spirit and the new born and newly named soul, and no one knows it but Jesus."

So far so good. Our brother, however, is not satisfied to leave the beautiful story to tell its own tale and make its own application, but he must need undertake to make it help him out in one of his denominational shibboleths for which we think he can find no passage of scripture which definitely sustains him.

Now follow him a little further, especially when he says:

"When we partake of the bread and wine, if the devil himself sits on one side of us and the tallest angel in glory on the other, we should not look at either, for we are not "communing" with either, for we should be personally absorbed in the dying love of the Lord for us. In that act we are striving to keep in remembrance that love until he comes or calls us to be with Him. Baptism and the Lord's Supper as practiced by Baptists fit in exactly with the way taught by the word and practiced by the Jerusalem Church, both ends of the Tessera, the white stone, fit perfectly."

Ah, Brother, are you sure of your facts? Who has ever claimed that we should look at the devil or the tallest angel when we commemorate the sufferings and death of our Lord in the Supper? We have heard of no one who does such a thing. You say in the act (of celebrating the Supper) we are striving to keep in remembrance that love until He comes or calls us to be with Him.

And so you think that baptism and the Lord's Supper, as practiced by Baptists fit in exactly with the way taught by the Word and practiced by the Jerusalem Church. Well, Brother, if you will give us the passage of Scripture, naming the Bible book, chapter and verse, in which your statement is confirmed plainly and unequivocally, we will doff the editorial hat to you and proclaim you the greatest friend of the Baptist cause in the nation. Now let us have no equivocation in this matter.—just give us the book, chapter and verse in the Bible upon which you depend to establish your claim that baptism and the Lord's Supper, as practiced by Baptists fit in exactly with the way taught by the Word and practiced by the Jerusalem Church. You may say a great many things in reply, Bro. Hill, but be sure to name the chapter of the Bible book and the verse which gives you authority to make such a statement.

Very well. Then if a Baptist has the white stone and a Methodist has the white stone, both given of the Holy Spirit, why may not both of them together commemorate the dying love of the Lord and from the same table? As we understand it, Baptists admit that they are not the only Christians, but that there are Christians in the Methodist Church. Now if a Baptist Christian and a Methodist Christian are both in Christ new creatures, why should they not celebrate the dying love of the Lord and at the same table? If both of them have the seal of the Spirit, that they are new creatures in Christ, on what basis would Bro. Hill refuse to allow them both to do the same thing in honor of their Lord and Master? The Baptist celebrates the dying love of the Lord in the Supper and the Methodist, having his part of the Tessera Stone along with the Baptist, likewise celebrates the dying love of the Lord, now on what grounds may our Baptist brethren refuse to let the Methodist brother or sister join him in celebrating (not the presence of the devil or the tallest angel) but the dying love of the Lord? If we are not mistaken the Tessera Stone illustration illustrates too much and so puts Bro. Hill in a close place from which we fear he will find difficulty in extricating himself.

Again Bro. Hill says:

"When in life's experiences we become sick, or poor, or needy, we can call on our Tessera friend and find help, and when we pass through the gate of death and our souls go up to Heaven, its gate will be opened by the hand of Jesus with whom we have broken Tessera. No hypocrite or counterfeit soul can deceive Him. He may have many marks of a Christian and look very much like the genuine, but the test will come at the touch of the Tessera, the soul of Jesus and our likeness to it. Our only passport to the riches and joys of the glorified and eternal city of our Lord is the breaking of the Tessera with the Lord Himself. Education, social or financial position or morality and philanthropy will not suffice; there must be that friendship pact between the individual soul and Jesus Himself. Jesus must be our Tessera friend."

That is all very interesting, but does our brother mean to say to the Christian world that only Baptists have broken Tessera with Jesus? He seems to be drawing the line between Baptists and other denominations, but does he mean, as he seems to do, that all outside of the Baptist ranks are hypocrites and counterfeit souls? Does he mean to say that all the other denominations have included in Education, social or financial position or morality and philanthropy?

Will Bro. Hill tell us the name of the denomination which teaches that the "communion" is a mere feast of good-fellowship? We will appreciate his kindness if he will tell us who is guilty of such an unseemly and unscriptural thing as regarding the Lord's Supper as a mere feast of good-fellowship? May we suggest that Bro. Hill revise his sermon on Rev. 2:17, if he desires to be understood as recognizing all who have broken Tessera with Jesus as entitled to a mansion in the skies?

WHO ARE THE FUNDAMENTALISTS, AND WHAT DO THEY STAND FOR?

In this day of upheavals in religious thought, we need not be surprised at any turn which may be given to the discussions along the lines of a conservative phase of Christianity. Our Baptist brethren know something of what is likely to occur when the hornet's nest of doctrines is stirred up. What is known as the Fundamentalists' Movement has brought a crash in the ranks of the Baptist brotherhood. Our old friend and college mate, the Rev. R. H. Pitt, seems to have thrown himself into the midst of the storm. If we may judge from appearances our dear brother, (editor of The Religious Herald) finds himself in the center of the storm. He is hearing the roar of battle, he is seeing the flash of the lightning and he is feeling now and then the burst of thunder. He is doing his best to keep from getting hurt, but he is not as yet, we think, quite sure of just what will be the outcome of the conflict as to himself. He says he does not accept the premillennial view, but that he is not fighting it. We are a bit surprised that Dr. Pitt does not fight error, as he sees it, lifting its head in the midst of his brethren. The premillennial teaching has surely gotten a footing among the Baptist brethren, and whether Dr. Pitt believes it or not, he may be sure it has come to stay, and while it stays it will make its presence felt.

Rev. John Roach Stratton, Pastor of the Calvary Baptist Church of New York City, and a southern man, if we mistake not, is just the man to stand for the great doctrine now making such a stir in Baptist ranks. Dr. Stratton, in a recent issue of The Religious Herald, puts the situation in a very clear and strong light. What he says so nearly presents the truth from the Bible standpoint that we are glad to give it to our readers that they may get a clear insight into the teaching of the Fundamentalist Movement as to the second coming of our Lord.

Dr. Roach says:

I have been much interested in the discussion which has been going on recently in The Religious Herald over the Fundamentalists and what they stand for. The evident distress of mind of my dear friend and brother, the editor of The Herald, founded, as I believe, on a misapprehension, has prompted me to write a brief statement about the matter.

Dr. Pitt tells us that in the beginning he was very friendly to the Fundamentalist Movement because he believed it to be "an effort to restore what seemed to have been a lost emphasis on great evangelical doctrines," and that is precisely what the movement was, is, and will continue to be.

The mental distress of Dr. Pitt seems to have arisen from the fact that Dr. Riley wrote, admitting that the Fundamentalists were believers in the premillennial coming of our Lord. So in the editorial of November 2d he says: "Any attempt to write into a Baptist confession or declaration of faith any particular detailed program for the second advent will tend to division," etc. Now there has never been any attempt, nor has such an idea been in contemplation, so far as I know, within ranks of the leaders of the Fundamentalist Movement.

So far from its being the case that the Fundamentalists are all extreme premillennialists, it is true that there is every shade of belief among them upon the doctrine of the second coming of our Lord. The doctrine of the second coming has not had any larger place in the program of the Fundamentalists' gatherings than the other great Fundamental doctrines of the faith. That they are not simply "one doctrine" people is proved by the fact that they introduced and fought for "The New Hampshire Confession of Faith" at Indianapolis.

It does happen that some of the leaders among the Fundamentalists are strong believers in the premillennial coming of our Lord, but this is not primarily the reason why they are leaders in this movement. It happens that these brethren have heard the call of God to speak out, and do what they can in defence of the faith of the fathers, and the mere fact that some of them happen to be premillennialists should not prejudice the brotherhood against the movement any more than the fact that Dr. A. J. Gordon was a premillennialist, when he was president of the Northern Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, should have prejudiced people against that Society. By logic and by right, all Conservatives belong with the Fundamentalists, for we are standing in defence of the holy faith that is dear to the hearts of those who accept the Bible as a real revelation from God.

And the need of concerted activity on the part of those who do thus believe has come about because of the tremendous aggressiveness of the Radicals. Dr. Harry Emerson Fosdick, for example, not only preached his now famous sermon here in New York on the question "Shall the Fundamentalists Win?" in which he repudiated the inspiration of the Scriptures, the virgin birth, the vicarious atonement, and the second coming of our Lord, but this sermon was then put into pamphlet form and has been broadcasted throughout the nation.

Just how radical are the views of those whom the Fundamentalists are opposing is set forth, for example, by a recent interview from another New York preacher Dr. E. Ethelred Brown. Dr. Brown said in this interview:

"The Bible is a gold mine. Let us separate the gold from the dross; use the one and leave the other. The Fall is a story of the childhood of the race. Man has never fallen. Rather, starting from very low beginnings, he has moved ever onward until at length he is where he is today—himself, a co-creator with God. The evidence for the Incarnation as recorded in the Bible is wholly insufficient, and as such, it is untrustworthy to establish so extraordinary an event. And well is it that this is so, for Jesus is saved to humanity and the sanctity of motherhood is preserved. Since the fall, which is the foundation of the Atonement, has been removed, this superstructure (the Atonement) falls also. Moral guilt is nontransferable. Punishment is not an arbitrary infliction, but an inherent part of sin, therefore the sinner, and the sinner only, can be punished. Jesus has not paid it all. The Trinity is a doctrine that is at once unreasonable, unscriptural and unnecessary. The Divinity of Jesus is a doctrine unknown to the early church and is the result of a long series of controversies and church councils. The words and actions of Jesus Himself deny this age-long error and prove His essential manhood. Bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh, He is our inspirer, our example, our guide—not our God but our Brother."

These statements constitute a good sample of the utterly revolutionary views that the Fundamentalists are fighting. It is not merely the denial of the second coming of our Lord, but, as is evident, a repudiation of the very fundamentals of the faith. We fight these insidious heresies—this thinly camouflaged infidelity—and that is the reason we are called Fundamentalists. We are doing battle for the "fundamentals"—all of them and not one or two. Will any Virginia Baptist assert that organized and aggressive warfare ought not be waged against such heresies?

The great question before the religious world today is: whether we will stand idly by and let such teachers and preachers as these seduce the people from the truths of God, and mislead them into these byways of error and infidelity, or whether we will "contend earnestly for the faith once for all delivered to the saints" of God, and battle valiantly for the glorious truths of revealed religion. That is the one issue, and the Fundamentalists are simply those who believe that we ought to do the latter.

The Fundamentalists are merely old fashioned believers in the Bible, the great truths it enunciates, and the divine Christ it enshrines. The Fundamentalists are not on the aggressive, but on the defensive. They are not "the disturbers of Israel," but the disturbers are the radicals and the revolutionaries who have departed from the faith and who are seeking to carry all of protestantism over to their sceptical views and methods.

I think that Virginia Baptists know where I stand concerning the great Fundamentals of the faith of our fathers and speaking now from position through which I know the facts, I can assure them that the Fundamentalists of the North are not out to "ride a hobby" but that we are seeking as best we may to stem the ever rising tide of rationalism and scepticism within the religious ranks, and the appalling worldliness and loss of spirituality and consecration which ever go with it.

We wish to direct attention especially to the paragraph which Dr. Stratton quotes from the Rev. E. Ethered Brown. Notice especially that he says the Bible is a gold mine. At first glance this may seem an expression of high appreciation of the Bible, but follow his view just a bit further, and you will readily see that what he means by a gold mine is not what you would mean. Notice he says let us separate the gold from the dross. Ah, is there any dross in the Bible? Dr. Brown evidently thinks there is, for he calls upon the people to separate the gold from the dross. If you wish to do so, you can easily see what he regards as the dross of the Bible. You can do this by reading his paragraph through. You will see that he holds that man has never fallen, but that he is a co-creator with God, he does not accept the incarnation, he rejects the Atonement, punishment is not an arbitrary infliction. He declares that Jesus has not paid it all, that the Trinity is an unreasonable doctrine, unscriptural and unnecessary. The Divinity as a doctrine was known to the early Church. He claims that the words and actions of Jesus Himself deny this age-long error. If Mr. Brown believes such doctrines be the dross of the Bible, we wish he would tell us just what part of it is gold. There are brethren, not only in the Baptist Church, who find a bit of fault of such men and women as object to the modern view of Bible doctrines, and Mr. Brown is one of these men, these modern preachers, but we do not see how a man can possibly class himself as a preacher of the gospel, and yet give these modern prophets their sanction. If we are going to give up as dross the parts of the Bible which teach the conservative view of the doctrines of Christianity, then we do not see why we need to hold on to anything taught therein. Brethren, let us wake up and face the situation, as it is presented to the people today, and then we believe we shall see why we should be up and doing our best to teach the doctrines of the Bible as the truth of God. Let every minister of Jesus Christ take his stand for truth and righteousness as taught in the Bible. We have no time to be trifling with the word of God by denying what it teaches.

BEYOND FOUR SCORE AND YET IN THE RACE.

Dear Brethren and Sisters and Readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN:

"You do not know how I prize Heaven. I cannot be with you in our annual conference, but sometimes joy comes double handed. Yesterday we had a bright and sunny Thanksgiving Day, and today I am rejoicing in my eighty-third birthday. With the exception of a lame hip my health is good. I think THE CHRISTIAN SUN is splendid. Mrs. Clements' health continues very poor. She is confined to her bed nearly all the time.

"If I live to see the time, it will be a great joy to me to meet in Conference next fall. May God bless you all.

Your brother in Christ,
"W. G. CLEMENTS."

That is what we call a brave message from an old veteran. From almost my earliest recollections, Bro. Clements has been in the active ministry and a most useful man. Not only has he been an earnest and a faithful preacher, but he has been a real church builder. One of the fine pieces of his constructive work was the building of the Raleigh church, besides a number of others. Not only has he done a fine work as a builder of houses of worship, but he has led in the organization of a number of churches, and with it all, he has served a large number of churches as pastor, and a very faithful pastor he was. In his best days you could hardly break him down, physically. His endurance was remarkable. Besides all of this class of work which he did and did well, he was superintendent of Public Instruction for Wake County for several years. He has been a trustee of Elon College almost from its foundation. He has thus linked his name and life work not only with the ministry as a pastor, preacher and church builder, but also with the educational work of the people of his State and church, and though now he is unable to labor, yet like the old wounded soldier that he is (he left an arm on the battle field of the civil war) he is still looking on the busy scene of conflict between darkness and light, between sin and righteousness and between ignorance and knowledge, and as he looks, he finds his heart beating with a living interest in the noble and God-given work of his brethren. He has maintained a clean moral life as a man and a consecrated service as a minister of the Gospel of the Son of God. No man has ever heard him cast any thought of suspicion upon the truth and integrity of the Bible. Loyalty has been prominent in his life, and as for sincerity we have heard no man through all of the eventful days of his earthly warfare against sin and uncleanness, even intimate that he was anything but sincerity. For more than fifty years he has stood as a watchman on the wall to give warning to all passersby to be ready, for in such an hour as we think not the Son of man may appear.

A few years ago Bro. Clements fell and fractured his hip, and since then the old soldier has been unable to perform the active service of a minister of the Gospel, but his prayers are going up for the cause which has been so close and dear to his heart for more than fifty years, and we feel quite sure, as these lines are read throughout our brotherhood, there will go up from many a heart and family altar a prayer for this noble and faithful servant of God. He is no doubt watching the sunset scene of life and as he watches, joy fills his heart as he looks upon the signs of coming victory. God bless not only Bro. Clements, but all of our splendid army of veterans who have born the burden and heat of the day and are now almost ready to hear the call to come up higher and receive the plaudit of the Lord and Master of us all: "Well done good and faithful servant, enter ye into the joys of your Lord." God bless you Brother Clements and may the last days of your earthly life be so filled with the sunshine of God as to give you a foretaste of the coming glory that shall be revealed as you cross over the river and enter into the presence of the Judge of all of the earth.—EDITOR.

"WHOSE WE ARE"

BY ROBERT E. SPEER, D. D.

Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions.

We commend to our readers a careful perusal of the following article. It is from the mind and heart of one of the foremost workers in the Lord's vineyard of today, and as such, it deserves the reader's best attention—Editor.

When the obligation to set aside a definite proportion of one's income, at least a tenth, to be devoted to distinctly Christian objects, is urged upon us we often reply that such an idea is legalistic and mechanical, that the true view is that we and all that we have belong to the Lord. This is a valid reply, provided it does not result in withholding help from works of religion and philanthropy and in depriving the Lord of one-tenth of our income as well as the other nine.

The temptation to give the Lord nothing by the device of avowing that all is His, is a very old temptation. Jesus spoke some very plain words about it in the seventh chapter of Mark. There were religious people there who declined to give to specific cases of need on the ground that all they had was already recognized as belonging to God. This way of thinking Jesus said was a bare-faced evasion of God's law. The tenth of His ownership of everything is intended to mean something, not nothing. It is the ground of giving, not of withholding.

The institution of the tithe is our best defence against this old and ever-present temptation. We say we recognize God's right to all. Well, we will lay down at once as proof of our good faith in the matter one-tenth of all we get. The other nine-tenths will not be made any the less God's by this act, any more than the six secular days of the week are less God's because we set aside the first day as especially and definitely His. Indeed it is in the lives of those who keep Sunday holy that God's ownership of all days is most clearly recognized. The one-tenth givers likewise are the people who most easily and surely admit God's ownership of all ten tenths.

It is in the hearty acceptance, accordingly, of the principles of the tithe, that I wish to say something here about ways in which the truth of God's ownership of the other nine-tenths may be made not only a religious theory but an economic reality.

One way is the evidence of waste. What belongs to God ought not to be wasted. Our Lord's life is full of evidence of His generous frugality. After His feeding of the multitudes He bade his disciples to care for the remnants. There was no parsimony in Him. He dealt His gifts with a generous hand. But there was no carelessness. There is altogether too much carelessness today. With the money with which we are entrusted and which we acknowledge to be God's, as we are God's, we too often buy what we do not need, what we could do without, and often might better do without. We create unnecessary labor, which is a form of waste. We make the laundry work needlessly heavy. We pay more for clothes than we absolutely have to. We cause disorder, which means labor for the one who has to clean up. In these and a hundred ways we misuse the money, strength and time of ourselves and of others, which we theoretically admit belong to God. A man might give God a tenth of his income and yet so misuse the balance of it as to annul by his untrustworthy stewardship of the nine-tenths what he set out to do by means of his tithe.

Another way to train one's self to the honest use of all one's resources as God's, is to become so genuinely interested in some part of the work of Christ's Kingdom that one becomes desirous of putting all that he can into it. Much of the best Christian work in the world has been made possible by the devotion of men who put their money into it in the same way in which other men put their lives into it. Mr. John Converse could not address evangelistic meetings, but he could make it possible for Dr. Chapman to go all over the world winning men to Christ. Mr. Moody could do what Mr. James and Mr. Dodge could not do, but he could do it only because they, and men like them, worked with him. And givers like these lived for such giving. They did not have to compell themselves to spare something for God. It was their meat and drink to do God's will, and money was worth to them only as an agency for promoting Christ's kingdom. When it bears this significance to us it will be easy to use all of it which comes into hands, not as our own, but as God's. One danger in some of our modern giving programs is they will deprive men of this living connection with specific activities of the cause of Christ. These programs invite men to give their money in a general sum to some one else to administer for them. Within limits this is what has to be done now. But it is a method which has its limits. And we shall lose a great deal if men miss the personal connection with living undertakings which absorb their interest and command their whole life's support.

But the best of all methods of according Christ His rightful control over our whole income, is to practice the Gospel of the New Testament. That Gospel is two pieces of good news. One is that Christ is ours and the other is that we are Christ's. And "we" means the whole of us, body and soul, powers and possessions. Christianity to Paul meant Christ's ownership of all there was of him. "To me to live is Christ." What does such a principle omit from Christ's authority. Our Christian hymns are full of the recognition of this elementary Christian truth. "I am Thine, O Lord." "Yes, Thou hast bought me, I am not mine own. . . . I am Thine, Thine alone." "Naught that I have mine own I call, I hold it for the Giver. . . . I am His and His forever." These are not mere ecstatic expressions of Christian devotees. They are calm assertions of the fundamental Christian fact that we and all that we command belong to the One whose we are and Whom we serve.

It is no doubt true this view is not the common practice. That is one reason Christianity is not more powerful than it is. When more Christians adopt this view as their working principle, Christianity will operate with a greater energy. For there is no force in the world comparable with the power of a life which men see lived by the law of Christ, who lived as wholly God's and who relives in all who recognize that they and all that is theirs are God's also.—Christian Work.

DON'T BLAME THE GULF STREAM.

Weather experts in Washington doubt that there are any grounds for the fear reported to have been voiced by the director of the Institute of Oceanography at Paris that possibly diversion of the Gulf Stream from fills made on the Florida East Coast Railway may cause destructively cold climate in Europe. Science Service's Science News Bulletin (Washington) says that officials of the U. S. Weather Bureau and of the Hydrographic Office of the Navy point out that this railroad is not in the main path of the Gulf Stream, and that it is more than doubtful that any man-made obstructions could seriously affect this mighty ocean current. We read:

Weather Bureau officials are inclined to discredit the claim that the Gulf Stream is the all-important factor in creating European climate. The effect of such currents has been greatly exaggerated, they say. These meteorologists believe that changes in wind pressure and wind drift that interact and react the whole world around produce the climate of the world. The Gulf Stream is a small area compared to the enormous masses of the ocean. Prevailing winds from the west blowing over the vast expanse of ocean water as a whole are believed to produce the mildness of the climate in England, Norway, and other countries in much the same latitude as chilly Labrador on this side of the sea. Navy men, however, credit the ocean currents with more importance as climate makers. They say that this warm stream heats the air above it and that the winds carry this warmed air across the surrounding waters and thus, in turn, raise the temperature of the waters over which the prevailing winds blow. Dr. G. W. Littlehales, hydrographic engineer of the U. S. Hydrographic Office, says that there would still be much warming even if there was no Gulf Stream, however, for a large amount of warm water is added to this stream by the north equatorial current which travels clockwise through the Atlantic. This current joins the Gulf Stream above the Bahamas, much farther north than Key West, the location of the railroad which has been suggested as a menace to climate in England, Norway, and continental countries. But Dr. Littlehales believes that the Gulf Stream has a profound but indirect effect upon the European climate through its changes in temperature and velocity from day to day. He declared that there are great possibilities of making long-range forecasts of weather conditions affecting agricultural crops and fisheries in Norway from observations taken in the Gulf Stream off Florida. Predictions six months or more in advance are thought possible. This great Gulf Stream is so large that 2,000 Mississippi Rivers would be required to form it."

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

OUR REDEMPTION SONG.

To me one of the sweetest and at the same time most pointed and potent songs of the day is entitled, "Is That Somebody You?" The lines of that song have been employed in the following with adaptations to suit. I presume all Christian congregations know the tune and I wish every congregation in our Convention would on some nearby Sunday sing it together using the following words, copies of which I would be pleased to supply on request.

OUR REDEMPTION SONG

Somebody signed a mission pledge,
Testing his purse to utmost edge;
Somebody paid it through the year,
Brightening the world with Christian cheer;
Was that somebody you? Was that somebody you?

Somebody handed cheerfully in Money to help God's cause to win;
Somebody kept his promise to pay,
Writing each check on scheduled day;
Was that somebody you? Was that somebody you?

Somebody let the year slip by,
Heedless of payments piling high;
Somebody said, "No more delay,
I'll pay my Men and Millions today."
Was that somebody you? Was that somebody you?

Somebody's pledge was only a scrap,—
Paper that had no value, mayhap;
Somebody's soul grew shriveled and small;
Failing, he grieved the Lord of all.
Was that somebody you? Was that somebody you?

THAT STOLEN TEN CENTS.

Many years ago a little boy went alone to a meeting for prayer for the whole world, which is called a monthly concert. As he was going his father gave him a silver quarter of a dollar to put in the contribution box.

In the town where he lived, this meeting was held on Monday evening, and as he was on his way he stopped often and looked at the lighted shop windows. At one place he saw some very fine oranges, the first he had seen for a long time. The thought came to him that he might get one of those oranges with the quarter of a dollar, and then have something left over for the contribution box. He yielded at once to this sudden temptation, and soon had an orange and fifteen cents in his hand. But when he was in the meeting, and sitting quietly in his seat he began to think what he had done. He is an old man now, but he says he will never forget how mean he felt, how he despised himself when he put that fifteen cents in the contribution box. He says: "I often feel that I can never make good that stolen ten cents; and when I am called to give money for the missionaries, or to any charitable purpose, I think to myself, 'Here is a chance to pay the interest on that ten cents,' but I think I can never fully pay it."—Advocate and Guardian.

THREE CHRISTIAN CONFERENCES.

By the action of the recent session of the North Carolina Christian Conference which met at Hines' Chapel, Nov. 14-16, the original three Christian Conferences that operated before the merger four years ago are authorized to reorganize with the same membership. Officers, and committees that were operating at that time, and hold their first session before the next meeting of the North Carolina Conference which is continued until the present obligations are fully met. In order to meet these obligations, it was agreed that all the Home Mission money raised by the several conferences should be sent to the annual session of the merged conference, but that no further obligations should be made by the Mission Board of said conference, and that when the present term of office of the members of this Board shall terminate each of the three conferences should name and elect three members of the joint board of Home Missions.

Executive Committees.

The Executive Committees of these Conferences are as follows:— Western North Carolina, Rev. T. E. White, Rev. L. I. Cox, G. R. Underwood; Eastern North Carolina, G. J. Green, J. D. Wicker, J. E. Franks. North Carolina and Virginia, P. H. Fleming, J. W. Holt, N. G. Newman.

Rev. T. E. White having moved his membership to Eastern Virginia Christian Conference, and Rev. L. I. Cox having died since their appointment to the Executive Committee of the Western North Carolina Conference, Rev. G. R. Underwood will confer with the brethren of that conference and select two other brethren to act with him as members of the Executive Committee. These several Executive Committees are requested to hold meetings and plan to promote the work of their several conferences. It is the earnest desire of the President of the North Carolina Conference that the work in all the conferences shall faithfully support all the enterprises of the work as outlined by the merged conference, plan to hold the annual session sometime during October, prior to the session of the joint conference, as per agreement, and stimulate all the churches to send a full representation to the annual meeting.

Evangelism.

It is desired that the greatest Evangelistic campaign shall be conducted by the pastors this year that has ever been conducted in the history of our work. Use the best talent the church has, select the best time for the meeting, plan for protracted prayer for the success of the meeting for at least three months before the meetings shall begin. The one aim of the Christian Church should be to place the salvation of souls above every other consideration.

Christian Education.

In order that the evangelistic meetings shall be a success, the work of Christian Education, through the Sunday School, should be pushed to the highest degree of efficiency in training the young people for the spiritual life. It is earnestly desired that pastors, church leaders, and parents will use their best efforts to influence the children to remain in church services, and not leave as soon as the Sunday School closes. This course will, if persisted in, lead to a system of habits that will cause these young people not to abandon the church when they shall become grown people. Practices pursued through childhood adolescence, and youth will surely continue to function through life or all the theories of Education are false. Christ was at the Temple at twelve years of age at his Father's business. Why may not the children of this present age do likewise. He said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." We are taught to train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it. When he goes away from the church service he is not going in the way he should go.

Ministerial Students.

All ministers of the church should have frequent consultations with promising young men and women of the church concerning committing themselves to the Christian ministry or other form of active Christian work. It is just as much the duty and function of the ministry to urge young people to answer the divine call to the ministry as to urge them to answer the divine call to salvation. Over one-third of the graduates from one Christian college in North Carolina have committed themselves to the Christian ministry. This is a fine record, but because somebody has been wisely guiding these young people to answer the divine call. This work of the Christian should begin with the parents, be followed by the Sunday School teachers, be followed by the ministers, and continued by the Christian people of our college faculties.

The Christian Sun.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN should be placed in every home in the conferences during the present year. It is well edited by an experienced editor, well printed by an expert printer, and contains subject matter that should be the constant mental and spiritual food of all the members of the Christian Church and their children. If young people and children are familiar with what the church is doing from childhood, they will be loyal to the church of their childhood and all her institutions. They will grow up with some convictions, some stability of purpose, devotion to the institutions of the church, gratitude for what the church stands for, honesty of purpose, and loyalty to the ideals which the church promotes.

The Christian Orphanage.

The Orphanage should find a tender place in the heart of every member of the church. It is the best expression of unselfishness, sympathy, altruism, brotherly love, and Christian sacrifice that we have. The Superintendent and his corps of assistants are doing a great work in this institution for humanity and the Kingdom of Heaven, and all who help him will have part in this blessed work.

Missions.

All branches of the mission work should have the loyal support of these new conferences, because the real mission of the church is to promote missions. Every item contained in the Men and Millions Movement is worthy of the highest loyalty, earnest prayers, liberal support, and untiring sacrifice of all the people of the church. Everything that can be done to encourage our people to rally to the support of this movement that can be done by both leaders in the local church and ministers should be done. By united effort we can accomplish great things for the Kingdom. The leaders in this work need the combined support of every member of the church—need his moral support, need his prayers, need his influence, need the united support of a united church. If obligations have been made, and it requires sacrifice to meet them, time will be extended until the last dollar subscribed can be paid. This will render the contributor happy, render the church a great benefactor, lay the foundation for our children to have greater opportunities than we had, enlarge the Kingdom, and show the loyalty and devotion of a people that represents the finest denomination among men.

The foregoing are a few of the things that these reorganized conferences should plan to accomplish during the coming year, should plan to begin immediately, and promote with Christian aggression throughout the entire year. Such devotion, such loyalty, such sacrifices, such service will reveal what the Christian Church can do when her membership is allowed to have all the freedom and franchise, self-expression and liberty as the founders of the Christian Church vouchsafed to her membership for all time. As long as it is my privilege to continue the chosen servant of the work in North Carolina, it shall be my earnest desire to voice the will of the people and the will of God and guide them along the path of Christian freedom wherein every member of the church shall be given equal voice in all the church activities.

SOME OTHER HUNGRY PEOPLE.

BY W. H. MORSE, M. D.
in S. S. Times.

I will tell you some one thing that you could not guess off in a whole calendar of days, if you were to try. It is that there are some other hungry people in this country (Italy) besides my own people. That is for you to understand that I signify that I mean about the Holy Scriptures.

I had run up against it myself until I began to realize it. Very much desirous that my own people should have the best treasure in the very world, of which they so long have been destituted by the Roman Catholic Church, I was mostly selfish for them and their sakes, when now and then I came over across others who not Italians are, who are just as much in famine. After some little while it got on my sympathetic nerve, as it were, and I was calling in Rome at Palazzo Assicurazioni Generali, on the Piazza Venezia, there to see a most excellent Waldensian, who is the Rev. Dr. Enrico Pons, whom I knew in his old pastorate at Palermo. I asked him about had he noticed it.

"My good Paolo," was what he said to me, "although you, having come from that America, was accustomed to Anglicize my name, and nick me Henry Bridge, I will not bother to say a word! Yes, I have noticed it," he said, "and I tell you what and soever, that there are to my knowledge not less than forty-three different languages which have the Holy Scripture in them here in this Italy."

What do you think about that? Italy suffering some centuries from a famine of the Bible, and yet—listen, will you, please—forty-two other languages have the good Book in my country! Dr. Pons knows.

Very occasionally I am asked for American Bibles or the New Testaments in the English language. Those say to me that they do not want it in Italian, but in English. Oh, why? Because the Pope puts his foot down on Italian Bibles. Some do not dare to do what he says be sure not to do. But they get around about it by saying that he did not say opposes American English Bibles. See? They want it, because they think soon enough they will to that America go yet, and will have it on hand.

Then I find a considerable many French and Germans who are without Bibles. There are too Hungarians and the Polish; and they ask have I any kind of Holy Scriptures in their tongues, if it is only a few pages of. The Ruthenians are come in a number of places, and if I had Holy Scripture in their language it would go like hot doughnuts. You see they are hungry, and their eyes stick out. I have also seen some Russians who say to me with some of their swearing (or what sounds to be swearing) that they do not want any Italian Bibles, but they would take Russian. One man, in a rag place in the Abruzzi, stopped my Mr. Sundqvist and myself, that if we came by that way again with no Russian New Testaments, he would shoot us. Yes, he said so. He wanted it bad.

I tell you another thing. You would not guess it, but ever so many times I am to Rome or Naples, there are those theological students who on the quiet beg of me, will I let them have some of my books? Greedy, I say. They would take all I have. And they also ask if we have any in Hebrew and in the Greek. I get my impatience when they ask that way; but you see they are hungry.

About the priests themselves I must say a word. Do you think always they are seizing the Scripture that we let the people have? Yes, that is so but not always. I know they seize the books sometimes, and they keep them. But that is not all there is about it. I get some Nicodemus-kind of priests who on the quiet ask me for American Bibles, and proffer to pay for them, too. Yes I have let them have the books, and they just so secretish about it that I laugh to myself softly. You say, "What! Are they hungry, too?" Well you may guess. I tell you the straight-edge truth, that a priest can go hungry as well as any one; that is, for the Holy Scripture. And, mind you, they are priests.

WHY THE TOY WAS DROPPED.

BY REV. F. B. MEYER, D. D., London, Eng.

There is an old Dutch picture of a little child dropping a cherished toy from its hands; and, at the corner of the picture, the eye is attracted to a white dove winging its flight toward the emptied outstretched hands. Similary we are prepared to forego a good deal when once we catch sight of the spiritual acquisitions which beckon to us. And this is the true way to reach consecration and surrender. Do not ever dwell on the giving up side, but on the receiving side. Keep in mind the meaning of the old Hebrew word for consecration, to fill the hand. There will not be much trouble in getting men to empty their hands of wood, hay, and stubble if they see that there is a chance of filling them with the treasures which gleam from the faces or lives of others, or which call to them from the page of Scripture. The world pities us, because it sees only what we give up; but it would hold its sympathy if it could also see how much we receive—"good measure, pressed down, and running over given into our bosom." "Let us lay aside the sin which doth so closely cling to us." (R. V.)

There will, of course, be difficulties in all our lives to impede our heavenward progress: difficulties from within our hearts. We shall need patience and long forbearance as we tread our appointed track. But there are two sources of comfort open to us.

Let us remember that the course is set before us by our heavenly Father, who therefore knows all its roughness and straightness, and will make all grace abound toward us, sufficient for our need. To do His will is rest and heaven.

Let us "look off unto Jesus." And away from past failure and success; away from human applause and blame; away from the gold pieces scattered on the path, and the flowers that line either side. Do not look now and again, but acquire the habit of looking always, so that it shall become natural to look up from every piece of daily work, from every room, however small, from every street, however crowded, to His dear, calm, sweet face; just as the sojourner on the northern shores of Geneva's lake is constantly prone to look up from any book or work on which the attention may have been engaged, to behold the splendor and glory of the noble range of snow-capped summits on the further shores. And if it seems hard to acquire this habitual attitude, trust the Holy Spirit to form it in your soul.

Above all, remember that where you tread there your Lord once trod, combating your difficulties and sorrows, though without sin; and ere long you shall be where He is now. Keep your eye fixed, then, on Him as He stands to welcome and reward you; and struggle through all, animated by His smile, and attracted to His side, and you will find weights and unbelief dropping off almost insensibly and of themselves.

This is the only way by which souls can be persuaded. Argue with them; urge them; try to force them—and they will cling the closer to the encumbrances which are clogging their steps. But present to them Jesus in the beauty and attractiveness of His person and work, and there will be a natural loosening of impediments; as the snow which had been bending the leaves to the earth drops away when the sun begins to shine. And God never takes aught from us, without giving us something better. He removes the symbol, to give us the reality; breaks the type, to give us the substance; releases us from the natural and human, to give us the divine. Oh, trust Him, soul: and dare let go, that thou mayest take; to be stopped, that thou mayest become clothed!—Selected.

PRAYER.

True prayer is wrought by the Holy Spirit in the heart; it always accords with (and is never contrary to) the will of the holy Father, and true prayer is always presented through the mediation of the Holy Son—in His name, and for His sake. Thus true prayer is to the One God, with respect to the Trinity of Persons in the Godhead. It consists in:

1. Adoration. The Holy Spirit always produces reverence and awe in the presence of the Almighty. Without the fear of God, there can be no approach to a holy God. We are dust and ashes. He is the eternal Jehovah.

2. Confession of Sins. With hand on mouth, humble penitents draw near to the throne to confess their sins. It is not enough to confess in a general way that we are sinners; there will be a specifying the particular sins of which we are guilty, the making a clean breast of it.

3. Thanksgiving for Mercies Will Have Place in Prayer. Our unworthiness acknowledged, it becomes us to acknowledge the Lord's goodness to us notwithstanding. Here again, the Lord's mercies will be specified and enumerated, with an act of thanksgiving for each. Then comes—

4. Petition for Favors Needed. This is properly supplication, and here the soul will bring special requests for special blessings. The spirit of grace and supplications teaches us what we need and enables us to tell the Lord, whether it be for spiritual or providential mercies.

5. Intercession. The believer does not pray only for himself. True religion is personal, but not selfish. There will be prayer for others, which is intercession; and, in this, the believer has fellowship with Jesus, for Jesus ever lives to pray for the brethren.—EDWARD CARR.

I thought he acted a good deal as if he had something nice to think about. I've seen that look on people's faces sometimes, and it always makes me feel a little surer that I'm a human being.—Zona Gale.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The International Convention of the "World's League against Alcoholism" was held in Toronto, Canada, November 24 to 29, 1922. The Convention was composed of accredited delegates from sixty-one nations. The leaders in Temperance reform throughout the world were conspicuous on the platform; but State officials, also, were staunch advocates of Prohibition. It was the greatest Convention in favor of temperance the world has ever known. The sessions were held in Massey Hall, the largest in Toronto, and it was crowded at the night sessions, and well filled in the daytime. No time was wasted and there was a marked unanimity in all the messages. There were four outstanding characteristics of the Convention: 1. The testimony from the sixty-one nations was in favor of Prohibition. This was not the expression of fanatical zeal, nor the vaporing of sentimentalists, but the sober testimony of wise and balanced minds. 2. The eye of the world turns to the United States, by reason of the 18th Amendment to the Constitution, and the mind of the temperance world makes its appeal to this country to lead in the world-effort to rid the race of the alcoholic curse. The convention seems to have seized the conscience of mankind that alcoholic beverages should be banished forever from commerce. 3. Recognition of women as a world-factor in this great movement. The W. C. T. U. received praise for their work not only in America, but in many other lands. Women from many nations demonstrated, on the platform, their devotion, their ability, and their determination to make the world dry. The women of the world are coming to the front more and more in all lands, and this means that the temperance cause will grow among the nations till Prohibition covers the earth. Wise women are consistent, insistent, and persistent in whatever cause they oppose, and it will tell in this great movement. 4. The great work must be done in the schools among the children and young people. Education will aid this movement, and a new generation will rise up in the majesty of a great purpose to destroy this monster evil and set the nations free. The colleges must teach temperance and organize for definite work in this great field. They must learn the damage to body, mind, and usefulness by the use of alcohol. These four outstanding points in the world-program for Prohibition impressed me as potential factors and forces now at work in the minds of thoughtful people.

So far as Prohibition is concerned in the United States, three points may be mentioned: 1. That Prohibition has come to stay. The 18th Amendment is as safe as any other part of the Constitution. 2. That Prohibition does prohibit. Taking the whole country and the whole population, this law is as well obeyed as other laws. Violations are exaggerated and sometimes condoned; but the law controls law-abiding citizens. 3. Violators of this law are criminals as much as those who violate other laws. Any violation of this law is lawlessness, and enforcement of the law was emphasized as essential to the demonstration of its value to other nations.

One of the great facts remains to be stated, that the churches of Christendom stand together on this vital question and in this great fight. Protestants and Roman Catholics vied with each other on the platform in favor of Prohibition.

ELON LETTER.

There is no warrant in experience for insisting that all must undergo the same type of conversion in entering upon the Christian life. It is doubtful if any two persons become Christians in the same manner. Each particular life is a special design of God and is distinct in personality from every other life. The sympathetic, loving Father Who notes the sparrow's fall certainly does not need that there should be uniformity in the manner of His children's approach to Him.

The theologians have mystified a most normal heart-experience in their voluminous but not often luminous discussion of conversation. The high-sounding steps in the process which they have differentiated sometimes bewilder rather than clarify the earnest seeker for the way of life. Not so long since a splendid man was explaining to me that he had never gone through those stages. And so he felt himself lost, though he loves Jesus and trusts Him as the guide of his life.

That theologian who came to Jesus by night was not unlike the theologians of our day. His whole idea was wrong. Ritualistic performance and childish tithing of worthless foibles with neglect of justice and mercy made up for him and his class the way God wished men to live. He and his class needed to be born again, or as other versions give it, from above, that is to say, they needed to begin life all over again as a little child made in the image of God. Being a theologian and accustomed to tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee distinctions Nicodemus could not understand. Theologians do not today, many of them, understand the beautiful simplicity and naturalness of our entrance upon the Christian life.

Jesus recognized that it is not necessary for every soul to undergo a crisis, cataclysmic upheaval in order to enter His Kingdom. To begin with He put all children there. "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven," He declared of them. Whose fault is it that they stray away? We will let the conscience of Christian parents answer that.

The fact is that far too many do stray away from God, some to far countries, others only a little way. Conversion is simply their return to their Father's house and to their fellowship with Him. Note the wealth of figures Jesus used to typify and illustrate this point. Note too that He does not represent it as a great theological mystery, but as one of the simplest, most natural, most normal things in the world. What could be more simple than entering a door or a gate, accepting an invitation to a wedding feast, looking up to God with the supreme trustfulness of the babe,—all of which figures Matthew reports Him as having employed in telling men how to return to God. Mark adds the idea of just believing the good news and of following a person in fellowship and service. Luke speaks of the idea from God's side as a shepherd finding a lost sheep or a woman searching for a lost coin. He also gives that beautiful picture, most typical and satisfying of all, of the returning prodigal. The picture he paints is true today in that the elder brother, typifying the theologians, will continue to regard the prodigal as unsaved until he has undergone an experience involving more than merely returning to his Father's house. John's gospel gives us the idea of conversion being like taking a drink of water and that too from a very sinful woman. He also speaks of its being like receiving an indwelling guest in the heart. And as we have already said for some theologians, such as Nicodemus was and the religious leaders of his day, Christ in his gospel requires a new birth.

How natural the Christian way is and how manifold and personal the methods of approach to Christian citizenship according to it! No involved naturalization papers are required. We return to the loving embrace of our loving Father. He puts new shoes on our feet, a ring on our fingers, a robe on our bodies, and kills the fatted calf to signalize our return. Let every one who has strayed from this Father's love return to Him. He will forgive and abundantly pardon. He will restore to full fellowship and remember our iniquities against us no more forever.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LETTER.

One fundamental purpose usually predominates in every enterprise. Peoples, institutions, and nations never rise higher than their ideals. Bethlehem College has one great purpose, namely: To furnish young men and women, on equal terms, with thorough preparation for service to God and humanity. This preparation will be given under the most positive moral and Christian influence. Emphasis will be placed on scholarship and the development of Christian character. Scholarship without Christian culture is incomplete. It was Eliot who said, "Exclude religion from education and you have no foundation upon which to build moral character." Christian education is the antecedent of Christian character. It is also the antidote to effective service and effective service is the antidote to true greatness. The more thorough and Christ-like the preparation the greater the service, and the greater the service the greater the glory of serving.

Christ settled forever the question about greatness when He said, "He that is greatest among you shall be your servant." The law of true greatness is realized in the path of unselfish service. A desire to be great is no mean aspiration; but the aspirant must realize that greatness is not a free gift. It must be paid for. It was Christ's contention that all true greatness must be purchased through service to others.

But no individual can become truly great and adequately serve God and humanity until he fully realizes himself. It was this desire for self-realization that made Washington great. He was engaged in a life and death struggle. He was defeated at Germantown and Brandywine. He spent a most miserable winter at Valley Forge. His soldiers were half naked, half starved and without help and sympathy. But later he asserted his possibilities and plucked the brightest jewel from the crown of England. Lincoln might have died unheard of but for that grinding effort to realize himself and his desire to aid others in the task of self-realization. It was that try-again-spirit that brought success and greatness to Demosthenese. It was because they waited to realize themselves that the disciples at Pentecost became great and brought greatness to others. Christ came to minister and became mighty. The little church at Antioch served its way to sovereignty.

An individual or an institution can serve humanity most acceptably by striving to correct the many misconceptions that exist in life. Mankind is suffering from the great malady of misconception. Indifference to Christian ideals, brought about by the most hideous misconceptions, is a twentieth century tragedy. In the existing social, moral, industrial, and spiritual crises the denominational school can make its voice heard and its influence felt if it will. The institution that does not function in this field has fallen short of its duty and privilege. An institution can never build up to the level of its opportunity until it builds down to the foundation of its duty. The ability of an institution to apply its ideals and make effective its influence in this hour of selfish prosperity, extravagant living, social ambitions, miserable misconceptions of life, moral decay, and spiritual bankruptcy will measure its growth and greatness.

Just as faith is the foundation of Christianity, so Christian character is the basic principle in true education. Men must be set right in their thinking before they can be set right in their conduct. The heart of man is no purer than his thoughts. Man can never do right until he thinks right, Christian education plus Christian service is the only cure for this Christian age.

R. F. BROWN.

THE FAITH OF THE COMMON MAN.

It is a widespread opinion, and possibly true, that no age has witnessed a fiercer or more persistent onslaught on the Bible than that which is being made in our day. A deplorable feature of this assault is that it is being made not by those without, but those within the church; not by those who deny a divine revelation, but by those who allow that the Bible is such a revelation. They even insist that they are giving an increased value to the Bible by their critical labors.

All the same, they deny that the Bible is the Word of God, they deny its infallible inspiration; they deny the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch; and they deny the historical character of much of what purports to be history. In a word, they would substitute for the traditional view of the Bible, which has held sway in the church since Apostolic times, a view based on the philosophy of evolution. They make the Bible the product of the development of the religious consciousness of the Jewish people. It is divine revelation in the same sense that nature is. "The heavens declare the glory of God; the firmament showeth His handiwork; day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge."

These people bring to the support of their evolutionary views a great array of learning, and much dialectical skill. They show scant courtesy to those who oppose them by openly charging or silently assuming that opposition is due to ignorance or invincible prejudice. Now the charge of ignorance is just as respects the common man. Comparatively few can lay claim to expert knowledge in the sphere of Biblical literature. The great body of Christians are disqualified by ignorance from pronouncing on the validity of the arguments used by the destructive critics. What then? Obviously the common man must follow some leader. Is there no learned leadership which still clings to the old traditional Bible? We think so, and the common man should not be lightly charged with being controlled by a blind prejudice if he should prefer the leadership of the scholars of conservative views to that of the scholars of radical views.

As a matter of fact, however, the common man is not following the leadership of the uninspired man. The great body of Christians know nothing and care nothing about the strife which is creating so much noise among the learned critics. They are getting their views of the Bible just where their predecessors in all generations got theirs, namely, from the Bible itself. Furthermore, this is just where their successors are going to get their views. The laborious German scholars, who have devoted their energies to work out this new theory about the origin and structure of the Bible, and who have shown marvellous acuteness and tireless patience, have written libraries of books that are on their way to swift oblivion. Their English followers are doing the same. These books have no influence on the common man and never will have. "The thing that hath been is the thing that shall be." To the end, the multitudinous army of God's children will continue to get their views of the Bible from the Bible itself, and the Bible is against the Higher Critic. It is the one formidable opponent which he will never be able to overcome.

Is the common man's faith without a reasonable foundation? In saying that he gets his views of the Bible from the Bible itself are we saying that he is making no use of the reason that God has given him? It may be well to call to mind what a very wise company of men once said about the Bible: "The heavenliness of the matter, the efficacy of the doctrine, the majesty of the style, the consent of all the parts, the scope of the whole (which is to give all glory to God) the full discovery it makes of the only way of man's salvation, the many other incomparable excellencies, and the entire perfection thereof, are arguments whereby it doth abundantly evidence itself to be the Word of God." According to the well-considered judgment of these wise and devout men, the Bible furnishes arguments to human reason abundantly sufficient to prove that it is the Word of God. The common man is not discrediting his rational powers when he rests the case on the Bible's own witness to its claims.

Jesus Christ is on the side of the common man. Apparently He held what is now called the traditional view of the Bible. He quotes from it, and refers to it precisely as if He regarded it, in its entirety, as of Divine authority. Whether He so regarded it or not, it is beyond question that He permitted and even encouraged His disciples to hold the traditional view. The Jews of His time had the Old Testament in precisely the form in which we have it. They believed it to be throughout the Word of God, plenary inspired. In dealing with His disciples Jesus availed Himself of this belief in His own use of Scripture. This is so perfectly manifest to the common man that he never thinks to question it. Hence in forming his view he follows the leadership of Jesus. As between Jesus and the Higher Critic, it doesn't take the average Christian long to decide.

So far as we can see the only way for the learned critic to influence the faith of the common man is to write a better book than the Bible, and show himself more worthy of leadership than Jesus Christ.—Presbyterian Standard.

MUNCIE (INDIANA) LETTER.

Since the Burlington Convention sectional lines in our church life will seem less distinct to many, and remote sections will possibly feel more interested in each other's work. I am not in the least apologetic when I say that, it seems most natural for me to report any field news to THE CHRISTIAN SUN in the South although my field is out here in the Middle-West, as I do to the Herald of Gospel Liberty. There is a sense in which I belong to both.

Yesterday was filled with unusual interest about our church here. It was the occasion of Rally Day in our Sunday School. The attendance at both the Sunday School and forenoon service was larger than in several years, although we did the unusual thing of having a continuous program which kept our Sunday School through our forenoon service, which made the attendance larger. In the afternoon, Attorney Fred McClellan, a real leader in Sunday School work, delivered an excellent address on the Bible as a standard of conduct and life. He was followed by Mrs. Clarence Benadum, wife of our Prosecuting Attorney, who is a leader in Junior work. She gave us a very fine address on departmental work, confining her thought largely to the Junior and Primary departments. The attendance in the afternoon was very fine. At noon some of the families of the church served luncheon in the basement, as a church-family-gathering.

The outside painting of the wood and metallic work on our building is completed and the painters are now painting and decorating the interior walls this week. We have also recently had our heating system re-installed.

The Executive Committee of the Boys and Girls Congress of the Eastern Indiana Conference met in the Pastor's study here last Saturday and planned for the work of the year, including several district conferences.

We had the privilege today of hearing Mr. W. C. Pearce, Field Worker of the World's Sunday School Convention. Mr. Pearce is just from a trip around the world in the interest of the Sunday School, and his message was full of stirring interest. Rev. L. E. Follansbee will be with Rev. D. R. Lusk next week in special meetings at Farmland, Indiana.

MURDOCK W. BUTLER.

Muncie, Indiana, Nov. 22, 1922.

CLEMENCEAU.

War Premier of France Clemenceau is on a visit to this country. He says he comes as a private citizen to use his influence to bring about a better understanding between France and America. Though eighty-one years old, the French "Tiger" is as vigorous as a man of half his age. He has already addressed two or three immense audiences in New York, and has spoken with utmost frankness.

Clemenceau expresses his gratitude for the part America took in the World War. He says our country went into the war at an opportune time, and our soldiers had a most important part in winning the victory. But he says we failed in our duty after the war by not taking part in the reconstruction of the world. He is not enamored of the League of Nations as a peace measure, but he says if we had gone into it we could have at least settled things until the nations would have had cooling time, and after reflection upon the terrible results of the last war he indicated that the world would have been slow to enter another.

Mr. Clemenceau is to make a tour of the country, the itinerary having been mapped out by Col. E. M. House, the mysterious citizen who wielded such an influence during the first few years of Mr. Wilson's occupancy of the White House. We think Senator Borah showed rather bad taste in criticising Clemenceau the other day and charging him with the responsibility for present world conditions.

Our distinguished visitor suffered an indignity in having received a letter which threatened his life. The letter warned him to be very careful as to what he said about his country and Germany, else he might hear bullets whistling around his head. The letter was signed "War Veteran."

It is said that the old "Tiger" was not perturbed by the reception of this letter. But those who had charge of the arrangements for his speaking in New York asked the police force to increase the number of policemen who were to act as a body guard for the former premier.

We sincerely hope that the visit of Mr. Clemenceau will result in good.—Exchange.

CHILD'S HOUR

AN ANGRY BLOW.

Ralph and his sister May were playing together one morning. Something which May said angered him, and in a burst of passion Ralph struck her.

She staggered against a pillar and tried to catch hold of it, but lost her balance and fell upon the step, crying as she did so,—

"I didn't mean to make you mad, Ralph."

He was glad rather than sorry, to see her fall, in the fierce heat of his anger. But when he saw that she did not stir or try to get up from the steps upon which she had fallen, he began to be frightened.

"Are you hurt?" he asked.

She did not answer.

He ran to her and lifted her up. The blood was running in a little red stream from the cut in the side of her head. She was insensible.

He carried her into the house and told his mother that they had been playing on the veranda and May had fallen on the steps.

At first they were not much alarmed about the little girl. But that afternoon she seemed to be delirious and the doctor was sent for.

He looked grave when he turned away from the bed in which she lay. "I think she is threatened with brain fever," he said. "The wound is more severe than it looks to be."

Ralph did not understand much about brain fever, but the doctor's looks and words alarmed him.

"O mother, it was all my fault!" he said, hiding his head in her lap. "I got angry and struck her and she fell. She'll die, I know she will, and they'll hang me for killing her!"

The next day May was worse. She kept saying over and over:

"I didn't mean to make you mad, Ralph, I'm sorry."

When Ralph heard her saying that, he was cut to the heart with remorse.

"Oh, I wish I was in her place," he told his mother. "Poor little May! I know now she didn't mean to make me angry, but I didn't stop to think of it then. If God'll only let her get well, I'll never speak a cross word to her or be unkind again if I can help it."

"I pray he may spare her to us," his mother said gravely. "If he does or does not it will be a lesson that I trust you may never forget."

For some days May lingered at the gate of death. Many times every day Ralph crept to her bedside, to see if she was in her right mind that he might ask her forgiveness. When he called her name she would say, "I didn't mean to make you mad, brother. I'm sorry, sorry." Then Ralph would burst into tears and go away by himself to beg God to let her live.

And his prayer was answered. One day the doctor told them that all the danger was over. Ralph went up to the bedside, and mingled joy and sorry filled his heart when she held out her thin little hand to him with a wan smile on her face.

"O May, forgive me," he said, and began to cry. "If you only knew how sorry I am."

May put her arm about his neck and whispered:

"I'm sorry I was cross, Ralph. We'll try not to make each other angry any more, won't we?"

Ralph has never forgotten his lesson. It has made a gentle, better boy of him.—Zion's Herald.

ELON COLLEGE NOTES.

Elon College, Nov. 29th.—A unanimous decision was handed the juniors, of Elon College in their annual forensic contest with the seniors here tonight; the juniors winning the affirmative side of the question that Congress should enact a compulsory arbitration law for public utilities engaged in interstate business.

Wild enthusiasm swept over the members of the junior class as the three to nothing vote for the affirmative was read, and with a scream of delight the class as a whole rushed forward to congratulate its representatives.

A large audience turned out to hear this, the first debate of the college year, and was unanimous in its expression that the debate was one of the best heard here in some time, because of its interest, forcefulness of its speakers, intelligent presentation, and in spite of the one-sided decision. T. H. Andrews presided over the debate and in a brief speech welcomed the audience. Miss Della Cotton acted as secretary for the occasion.

Miss Lucy Austin, Taylorsville, N. C., opened the discussion for the affirmative. She pictured the detrimental effect of labor strikes to the general public as well as to labor and capital themselves, bringing out the fact that a steady increase in strikes for the past five years had been noted, and that only a small percentage of strikes had been settled by voluntary arbitration.

Herbert Scholz, Jr., Macon, N. C., began the argument on the negative side of the question, which was upheld by the seniors, and brought out facts showing that compulsory arbitration would only irritate and antagonize the labor situation.

Mrs. R. S. Rainey and G. A. Brown, seniors, and G. D. Colclough, and N. T. Scott, juniors, constituted the other speakers for the debate, presenting argument on their respective sides.

The juniors, upholding the affirmative, contended that the great mass of people never win in a strike, they always lose, and that public opinion is decidedly against strikes, and that the government's failure to be of service in the recent shopman's strike was because it did not have power to interfere.

Continuing the argument the seniors advance on the affirmative side the points that all the people are prejudiced either for one or the other of the classes and no fair board could be found to settle disputes, and held up as a remedy for the present evils of the industrial system the profit sharing plan as now in operation by the Henry Ford and Standard Oil plants.

For the judges Profs. A. L. Hook, P. S. Kennett, and N. G. Newman served.

Marshals of the occasion were Messrs R. V. Morris, chief, J. C. Whitesell, W. L. Haslett, and Misses Esther Farmer and Berta Crutchfield.

THE OLDEST BOOK.

The Bible is the oldest book in the world. A portion of it was old when Cecrops founded Egypt. The Book of Job had been written three thousand years when Chaucer opened the springs of "English undefiled." The Book of Ruth was 2,500 years old when America was discovered. Yet there are hundreds of millions of people who read their Bibles daily and find them fresh as the break of day. This is because the Bible was adjusted, in the beginning, to all vicissitudes of time and to all progress of coming ages. Its truths, its ethical precepts, its exceeding great and precious promises are like Oriental spices, which the more they are rubbed give forth the more of fragrant sweetness. The gospel is "good news." It is as fresh as when the evangel first came to paradise. It is the latest news from the heaven of a loving God.—The Bible in New York.

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

Christian Orphanage

SHALL THE ORPHANAGE REACH ITS GOAL?

DEAR FRIENDS:

To reach our goal of $6,000.00 for the Thanksgiving Offering, we must get $4,600.00 between now and the end of the year. To reach our goal of $10,000.00 from November 1st to the end of the year, we must raise $7,361.29. We want you to put forth your best efforts in your church and Sunday School, and also personally, to help us reach it. I have the utmost faith in our people, and I believe we will reach each goal.

I want to say to our people that Christmas will soon be here, and our little folks always look forward with bright and happy thoughts for Christmas and expect "Santa" to come with many things to make them happy. Every year they have been made happy, and I feel sure that this year will not come up lacking.

I want to ask the churches and the Sunday Schools that send boxes, to get them off in time to reach us before Christmas day.

I truly hope some of our friends who have peanuts will remember that all little folks like peanuts, and I believe our little folks like them better than any other children from the way they eat them. Apples are next in line of the good things to eat. Don't forget us Christmas.

The following has been sent in as Thanksgiving offerings:

Missionary Society, First Christian Church Danville, Ill., one box clothing.

Ladies Aid Society, Eures Christian Church, one pair blankets, one pair sheets, one pair pillow cases.

Sellars Store, Burlington, N. C., several boxes of goods.

Glencoe Cotton Mill, by Mr. R. L. Holt, 700 yds. outings.

Lakeside Mills, Mr. J. H. Holt, 255 yds. shirts and heavy goods.

Elmira Cotton Mill, 200 yds. nice gingham.

Ossipee Cotton Mills, 360 yds. outing.

Holt Gant and Holt, 100 yds. blue denim for overalls.

Revolution Cotton Mills, 507 yds. outing.

Pomona Cotton Mills, 144 1-3 gingham.

Belvilleview Cotton Mills, 170 yds. gingham.

Proximity Cotton Mills, 414 yds. denim for overalls.

Sidney Cotton Mill, 172 yds. checks.

L. Banks Holt manufacturing Co., 32 yds. shirting.

Virginia Cotton Mills, 45 yds. gingham.

A friend Norfolk, Va., 10 sheets.

Mrs. J. H. Cates, 2 doz. cans fruit.

We are grateful indeed for such liberal support.

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

The Men and Millions Campaign and the causes embraced by it gain and hold their rightful place in the hearts of our people only in proportion as our preachers preach on these great Kingdom interests. The churches having the best record also have preachers who are constantly on their Campaign job.

PREACHING THE CAMPAIGN

No one human agency contributed so much to the victory in subscribing to Men and Millions as the preachers preaching the Campaign. The preacher was then and is now the key man. If the pastor preaches Men and Millions the people will work for and pay their pledges to the Movement.

Make the Victory Sure.

Our people will fall behind in their payment of the pledges if our preachers do not get under the burden again. We can go to the extraordinary session of our Convention next May with a glorious record, if our people are aroused to a full sense of their duty. We need to go to our knees for Power in these great days ahead of us, if we are to truly lead our people, pay our pledges and win out for our Lord.

Preach—Preach—Preach.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

December 17, 1922.

SUBJECT: "Jesus Among Friends and Foes."—
Luke 10:38-11:54.

GOLDEN TEXT: "Ye are my friends, if ye do the things which I command you."—John 15:14.

DEVOTIONAL READING: John 15:8-16.

REFERENCE MATERIAL: Luke 2:34,35.

LESSONS TO LEARN.

"Love is the ability to see the beautiful others miss, to miss the evil others witness, to render the service which only springs from pure good will."—Edward Campbell White.

Jesus loved people. He could see clearly their needs, and was able to commend the virtue, and reprove the fault. To Mary, He was the great Teacher from whom she could learn great lessons. To Martha, He was an honored guest, for whom adequate preparations must be made. Robert Louis Stevenson has said: "So long as we love, we serve." Martha wished to express her love in kindly service. And the Christ appreciated her loving spirit while he sympathetically told her that Mary had chosen the better part.
Worship and service must be closely linked together. The life of the Master, as well as His words, teach the need for communion with God, and study of His Word as a preparation for service. Christians need a blending of the Marthaspirit of deeds, and the Mary-spirit of learning together with a faith in God which will drive out the feeling of careful anxiety.

"When He who, sad and weary, longing sore
For loving sweet service, sought the sisters' door;

One saw the Heavenly, one the human guest;
But who shall say which loved the Master best?"—Whittier.

The story of Jesus, the Guest, brings to mind
the motto often seen:

"Christ is the Head of this house, The Unseen Guest at every meal; The Silent Listener to every conversation."

Is Jesus the unseen, but honored Guest in your home? Too often today as we are "cumbered about much serving" the better part is forgotten. The "Giver of every good and perfect gift" is not thanked. The Master is overlooked.
Has Jesus His place in your home and heart?

Jesus had many friends, and active enemies as well. His enemies were the men whose lives did not measure up to the standard of His teachings. The proud Pharisee was condemned for his superficial religion. He had placed all stress on the outward obedience to the letter of the law, and had disregarded justice and the love of God.
Jesus's definition of religion corresponds with that of Hosea: "What doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly and to love kindness and to walk humble with thy God." The enemies of Jesus today are seeking their own welfare, but dealing unjustly with others; are observing certain forms and ceremonies, but leaving undone far more important things.

Jesus had many friends, and is a friend to many. "Ye are my friends."

It is said that Mrs. Browning once asked
Charles Kingsley what was the secret of his life,

"Tell me that I may make mine beautiful, too."
His reply was, "I had a friend." The secret of the beauty of the Christian life is intimate friendship with Jesus. Thomas a Kempis once declared:
"Without a friend thou canst not well live;
and if Jesus be not above all friends to thee, thou shalt be indeed sad and desolate."

"Do you seek for a friend who is always the same,

Who will answer your sign and your call?
There is just such a Friend, I will tell you
His name—

It is Jesus, the best Friend of all."

—G. M. Bills.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

DECEMBER 17, 1922.

SUBJECT: "The Glorious Gains of Fidelity."—
Rev. 2:1-10.

THOUGHTS ON THE LESSON.

God knows our work and endeavor and efforts.
No undertaking is in vain if undertaken for Him.
—Verse 2.

"Endurance is nobler than strength, and patience than beauty."—John Ruskin. Patient faithfulness is the secret of the success of many a great achievement. "He that can have patience can have what he will."—Benjamin Franklin.
The church needs workers who go forth in the Master's name, and do not grow weary. See Galatians 6:9. Verse 3.

"To him that overcometh" is the reward. Fidelity, or faithfulness in the Christian life spells ultimate victory.—Verse 7.

Tribulation and poverty and opposition from others are trying, but do not furnish reason for unfaithfulness. The "crown of life" is to the man or woman who is "faithful unto death."
Trouble is the test of the strength of faith.—
Verses 9-10.

"It's easy enough to be happy
When life goes like a song;
But the man who's worth while,
Is the man who can smile,
When everything goes dead wrong."

"Nevertheless that which ye have, hold fast till I come. And he that keepeth my words unto the end, to him will I give authority over the nations."—Rev. 2:25,26.

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Be loyal to your Christian Endeavor Society, and faithful to your pledge by coming to this meeting, and bringing somebody with you.

The leader may arrange with different members to tell of the faithfulness of Bible characters;
as Daniel (Daniel 6:4); David (1 Samuel 22:
14); Moses (Numbers 12:7); Timothy (1 Cor.
4:17). Even Juniors can tell these stories so that the fidelity of God's servants will be shown.

During the meeting have the fact brought out that there are many objects which demand our loyalty; as home, family, friends, church, community, country, and above all, the Kingdom of God. Each of these may be the theme of a brief talk. Christian Endeavor is no place for long addresses. Opportunity must be given for all to take part.

Suggested Hymns: Faith of Our Fathers;
Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken; The Son of God
Goes Forth to War; Face to Face; Beulah Land.
The songs "Some Time We'll Understand" and

"Some Day the Silver Cord Will Break" are good for special numbers by the choir or soloist.

As this meeting comes so near the close of the year, it may be well to suggest the need of even greater faithfulness during the coming year and that the great program of the church needs every Christian at work all of the time if the story of Jesus is to be told to the whole world.

THE INFLUENCE OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

It seems sometimes that we just take the Sunday School "for granted." We do not stop to think just what part the teaching which has been done through this organization of the church has played in all of our affairs. An editorial in this month's number of "The Westminster Teacher" gives one more testimony to the great influence which the Sunday School is wielding in the world.
The editorial is headed "They Went to Sunday School" and reads as follows:

"A large part of our Sunday School work seems to be barren of positive results, at least of results we can tabulate. But we never can know its full value. One who visited Wales during the coal strike in 1919, hearing revolutionary talk everywhere, only a spark being needed for an explosion, wondered what prevented it. He asked a labor leader what was holding things together, and he replied, "All that holds now is the fact that these men went to Sunday School in the churches and chapels of Wales years ago; nothing else restrains them." Thus the religious sense of the common welfare, developed through Christian teaching, holds when all else gives way."

We cannot estimate the value of the Sunday Schools to our churches. Through them and in all of the educational work in our churches, we are determining the future service of the Christian Church, for that service will be rendered by the boys and girls of today.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION ACTIVITIES IN THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

C. H. Stephenson of Raleigh, S. M. Lynam of Elon College, and J. U. Gunter of Sanford were appointed as the Religious Education Committee at its recent session at Hines' Chapel.

The Southern Christian Convention has now over seventy active Christian Endeavor Societies of which we have record. If your church has not reported its Christian Endeavor Societies, or plans to organize one, let us know.

Christiana Sunday School has adopted the plan of giving one offering a month to missions, and one offering a month to the Orphanage, and is doing fine work along all lines. The Christiana Christian Endeavor Society is also progressing nicely.

A new Christian Endeavor Society has been organized at Pisgah, Alabama, with twenty-five members. Mrs. Eva W. Hall, as one of the leaders in the Society, writes of the interest of the young people, and of their eager desire to work in the church.

Suffolk is another "Honor Church" in Christian Endeavor, having three Societies, Senior, Intermediate and Junior. Mrs. Clarence Rawls is president of the Senior Society, Miss Susie Powell, Junior Superintendent, and Mrs. J. V. Bland Intermediate Superintendent.

Dr. G. O. Lankford is the teacher of the Teacher Training Class organized recently among the workers of the Burlington Sunday School. The class is using for its textbook, "The Pilgrim Training Course for Teachers-First Year," the first book in the new standard teacher training course.

The number of inquiries which have come to the office of the Board of Religious Education during the past few weeks shows a growing interest in our church in the work of Christian Education and a determination on the part of many churches to enter into the work more heartily than ever before. Recently a letter was mailed to every superintendent asking for a list of the officers and teachers of our Sunday Schools, and the officers of the Christian Endeavor Societies. The response from many has been splendid, but there are still superintendents who have been very silent. Will you not write the Field Secretary, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Virginia, about your Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society? Let's know each other! Let's work together!

MODERNISM AND THE MODERNIST.

A modernist is one who accepts evolution and applies its philosophy to religion. Modernism is the resultant therefrom. What contents are in that "resultant"?

The Baptist of Chicago, a paper for which the Northern Convention put up $25,000 to keep it running another year, is no friend to fundamentalism, as is plain. Its sympathies seem clearly to be with modernism. It ought to be able, therefore, to tell what modernism is. We find credited as appearing in that journal the following:

"Modernism is a system of thought exhibited in denial of a personal God, of revelation, of Christ, of the Bible, of the atonement, of salvation by faith, and of practically the entire range of Christian truth which is involved in these central conceptions. Its essential notion is that modern rational and scientific investigations have superseded and invalidated faith in any revealed religion." And it adds: "Modernism is a system of philosophy which, in the name of modern reason and science, denies the essential truth of the Christian religion." Behold resultant. And evolution applied to the Scriptures gives us the higher criticism and applied to theology gives us the "new" theology.

The Baptist is right in its statement. As has been said repeatedly in this magazine, a fundamental working postulate of the evolutionary philosophy is a denial of the intervention of the supernatural. Says Kuenen, the distinguished German scholar, "So long as we allow the supernatural to intervene even in a single point, so long our view of the whole continues to be incorrect." And says Lyman Abbott, one of the foremost apostles of modernism in America: "The fundamental basis of the old theology is expressed by the word supernatural. It held a sharp distinction between the natural and the supernatural, and the supernatural came to be a test of orthodoxy. . . . The New Theology denies absolutely the old assumed distinction between the natural and the supernatural."

The question just now is not the truth or falsity of either Christianity or Modernism. The question that is surging to the fore is the attitude and relation of the two to each other, and what should be done about it.

Let it be understood that Christianity is supernaturalism through and through, and that modernism is naturalism. Naturalism eliminates supernaturalism. The two are irreconcilably antagonistic, mutually destructive. Christianity de-supernaturalized is Christianity extinguished.

Thus by one stroke modernism annihilates Christianity. Undeniably this is the logic of the situation—Christianity or no Christianity.

We are not talking now about the ethics of Christianity, but about its essentials, its fundamentals. Ethics, the common moralities, Christianity and paganism both hold. Before me as I write is a volume, "The Discourses of Epictetus." The old Stoic philosopher, so far as morality is concerned, would pass for a good church member. So would Seneca and Marcus Aurelius. But there was no salvation in their philosophies. Neither is there salvation in modernism, for it denies, as we see, the very truths on which salvation rests. With its abundant complement of moralities, it is but baptized paganism. Modernism is today the chiefest enemy of vital Christianity.

The siren-voiced, silver-tongued, suave propagandists of the modernistic school that are touring mission fields to induce holders of the Old Faith of the Ages that only has brought salvation, to compromise their principles so as to fit modernism and live and work at peace with it, are attempting a bootless and foolish pursuit. It can't be done so long as there remains loyalty to Jesus Christ and His truths. And loyalty will not be lacking.

Talking recently with a United Presbyterian theological professor, he said: "It looks as though the time is coming when there must be a new alignment, and it will be not along denominational lines, but along the line of the fundamentals." What should be, must be, will be done. Separation is the word.—The Bible Champion.

A Tarbell's Guide Year!

WORLD-WIDE PRAISE

Baptist World:

"Thousands would rather start a new year without a calendar than without a new 'Tarbell's.'"

G. Campbell Morgan:

"Amazes me by its inspirational and educational advantage to any teacher."

Marion Lawrance:

"The best, most complete, most practical and most satisfactory lesson help."

Alexander Whyte:

"All the help needed by any teacher."

Margaret Slattery:

"Know of nothing better. . . . I use it personally in my work."

John Henry Jowett:

"Of great service to Sunday School teacher—exceedingly well done."

A Teaching Necessity

The recent International Sunday School Convention, in emphasizing the need for BETTER Sunday School instruction, paved the way for "Tarbell's Guide" as a necessity in every school!

Superior

to all other Helps in teaching value, ability, comprehensiveness, and modern appeal. "Tarbell's Guide" raises the international system clear above the objections of its critics, and is the logical teachers' help to-day!

Larger by far

than any other Lesson Handbook, full to overflowing with modern suggestions, "Tarbell's Guide" is now a necessity to all who would apply latest teaching methods and discoveries to Sunday School Lesson presentation.

THE JUBILANCE OF A SONG IN THE NIGHT.

A Sermon by REV. J. H. JOWETT, D. D., LL. D.

Text: In the Lord put I my trust—Psa. 11:1.

That is a jubilant bird-note. The bird is singing, not on some fair, dewy spring morning, but in a cloudy heaven, and in the very midst of a destructive tempest.

A little while ago I listened to a concert of mingled thunder and bird-song. Between the crashing peals of thunder, I heard the clear, thrilling note of a lark. The melody seemed to come out of the very heart of the tempest. The environment of this Psalm is stormy. The sun is down. The stars are hid. The waters are out. The roads are broken up, and in the very midst of the darkness and desolation one hears the triumphant cry of the Psalmist, "In the Lord put I my trust!" The singer is a soul in difficulty. He is the victim of relentless antagonists. He is pursued by implacable foes. The fight would appear to be going against him. The enemies are overwhelming, and, just at this point of seeming defeat and imminent disaster, there emerges this note of joyful confidence in God. "In the Lord put I my trust." It is a song in the night!

"How say ye to my soul, Flee as a bird to your mountain?" The Psalmist now hears the voices of counsellors. They are urging him to get away from the exposed plains to the strongholds. They beseech him to fly to the mountains, and to seek security from his foes in the heights. Away in the mountain fastnesses, he will be able to hide in perfect security; but to the Psalmist the suggested defenses are inadequate. The enemy can reach him there. Evil has a long-range ministry. He will be discovered in his hiding-place, and will be wounded and defeated even in the heights, "For lo, the wicked bend their bow; they make ready their arrow upon the string, that they may shoot in darkness at the upright in heart." Against these imperfect defenses the Psalmist proclaims his own confident boast: "In the Lord put I my trust."

Have we no similarity in adequate resources which are suggested to the driven soul today? The soul is assailed by fierce temptations. It becomes possessed by the feverishness of ambition. It lies exposed to the contagion of the leprosy of avarice. It is the target of the fiery darts of lust. Where may the soul find security? In what defense may a man rest in the strength of peaceful security? What protective ramparts are offered to the soul?

The world is not slow to recommend its own fastnesses, its secure heights, its mountain air. I do not despise them. I am grateful for any defensive strength which they may offer to me; but, at the best, their resources are all insufficient. In the best of earth's health resorts one can catch disease. Even the most conspicuously healthy place has its published death rate. There are graveyards even among the Alps. And these mountain heights, which are recommended for the security of men who are persecuted by temptations and exposed to the assaults of the devil, leave the soul vulnerable at a thousand points.

Look at two or three of these suggested refuges. "Flee as a bird to your mountain." "Take up literature!" No one can be more grateful than I for the magnificent defenses offered by elevated literature. A healthy book is a strong defense. But if a man immerse himself in the very best literature, he is not necessarily out of the reach of evil. "Lo, the wicked bend their bow." There are interstices in the most refined and finely woven literature through which the forces of evil can pour like an atmospheric flood.

"Flee as a bird to your mountain." "Take up music!" How grateful we are for the gracious ministry of music. It gives expression to the moods of the soul for which speech is altogether too coarse and imperfect a medium. Music refines the emotions, and helps to lighten and purify the desires. But are its defenses adequate? Is the musician out of the range of the evil one? I should say that in this health-resort the death rate is abnormally high. The jealousies and strides, and petty envies of musicians have become a common-place. The love of high class music frequently co-habits with the lack of moral principle, fostering a dangerous sensationalism, which is often used in shameful lust.

"Flee as a bird to your mountain." "Take up Science or art!" Here again one is grateful for the invigorating ministry. It is a rare benediction to be led into the wonder and beauty of nature, into the unveiling of her features, and the disclosures of her soul. I know of nothing more helpful, outside the realms of actual fellowship with Christ, than to go out into the country, and engage oneself with the unfolding marvels of the natural world. Such a habit affords a grand shield for the soul.

But the armor is not complete. "The wicked can bend the bow," and discover the soul through many an exposed and unprotected place. The esthetic can not subdue the immoral, nor is science a safeguard against irreverence and impurity. All these suggested strongholds are inadequate. Evil can invade these fastnesses. The air that blows on these heights is a breeder of the microbe of moral disease. "How say ye to my soul, Flee as a bird to your mountain?" "In the Lord put I my trust."

Upon what, then, shall the driven soul depend? "In the Lord put I my trust." In Him are the sure foundations of a mighty stronghold. In Him man's security is complete. In the remainder of the Psalm, the Psalmist enumerates some of the foundations upon which his joyful confidence is built. I do not wonder that the inspection is accomplished to the accompaniment of a song. What are some of the stones of the grand foundation?

The Lord's Immanence.—"The Lord is in His Holy Temple." That is the beginning of his confidence. Our God is not an absentee. "The Tabernacle of God is with man." God is very near. We can get at Him, and He can get at us; we can speak to Him, and He will speak to us.

The Lord's Sovereignty.—"The Lord's Throne is in the Heaven." We are not under the dominion of chance. Forces are not moving in blindness towards unknown destinies. The Lord governs the coming and going of the night. The clouds accomplish His bidding. He rides upon the storm. "God is in His Heaven." That is the second great note in the Psalmist's faith.

The Lord's Discernments.—"His eyes behold. His eyelids try." Our God is a close observer. He is familiar with everything that is happening. Nothing gets the start of Him. He sees things in their germ. He sees conduct when it is only yet a wish. He sees the finished work when it is only yet a stammering prayer. Our Lord sees. All the secret movements of vice and virtue are known to Him. I need have no wonders as whether He knows the forces that surround me. He knows them all—their measure, their weight, and the power of my endurance. This is another element in the Psalmist's boast.

The Lord's Repulsions.—"The wicked and him that loveth violence, His soul hateth." The Lord is not passive, He does not stand aloof, and allow things to go by default. He hateth sin. Divine hatred means Divine antagonism. To know that the evil temptation that besets me has God for its antagonist, strengthens the nerve and invigorates the will. Evil has God for its antagonist, and for its overthrow the Psalmist waits with fruitful certainty.

The Lord's Purposes.—The wicked haste towards the night. "Upon the wicked He shall rain snare and fire of brimstone, and horrible tempest." I do not know the full import of these words, but I can catch their drift. The wicked are moving towards destruction! The righteous march towards the dawn! "The upright shall behold His face." They are moving on, through tribulation and pain, to a quiet and radiant morning. This is the design of God, and in the design the Psalmist builds his faith. Such are the foundations of the Psalmist's security. He will not be overwhelmed. God is with him! The end of all things shall be to him, and to all the faithful, an unspeakably glorious dawn!

BRO. HOLT IS POUNDED.

Burlington, N. C., Nov. 18, 1922.

Bro. Barrett:

I filled my last appointment at Bethlehem the second Sunday in November, closing a pastorate of over thirty years. Only those who have lived and labored with a loyal congregation for so many years know how to appreciate the ties that bind loving hearts together in Christian service, and what it means to retire from such fellowship. I have never served a truer and better people.

At the last service when I entered the pulpit I noticed the table in front of me was covered with packages, large and small, Bro. A. C. Madren interrupted me to say that my friends wished to tender to me these packages as an evidence of their appreciation of my services with them. There were thirty-five separate packages: About 50 lbs. sugar; two sacks of flour; cereals; coffee, etc. $19.25 in cash. My wife and I cannot tell how much we appreciate this pounding from our friends, coming to us in the evening time of life. May God bless all who had any part in this donation.

JEREMIAH W. HOLT AND WIFE.

NOTICE.

To the women of North Carolina Christian Conference:

Your attention is called to the Annual Thank Offering which is due to be taken in December. The Annual Thank Offering is supposed to be set aside for building and maintaining homes for our Missionaries. The Thank Offering taken by the young People's Society will be used this year for the Santa Isabel Chapel building fund. Mrs. Morrill has prepared a very beautiful program for a Thank Offering Service. You will find this program in Christian Missionary for October, 1922.

Mother.

Some one has called this the sweetest word in the English Language, one which brings up ideas and associations more tender and sacred than any other known to the race. Fortunate indeed is that boy or girl who has enjoyed the loving ministry of a good mother. It is the nearest thing to divine love that the world has ever seen.

True mother love is wholly unselfish. No matter how wayward has been the boy, nor how far he has gone from the home life, mother loves him still. That was a lovely idea of Miss Anna Jarvis of Philadelphia, when, some years ago, she suggested that every one wear a flower on the second Sunday in May in memory of mother. If she is still living, go to see her and tell her how much you love her. In case this cannot be done then write her a real love-letter. In any case let there be some expression of appreciation for the mother love which we have received so freely. No amount of kindness on our part will ever cancel the debt we owe for what she has done for us.

OBEYING ORDERS

Poster up at the railroad stations and in the post offices are notices by the government calling for young men to join the army. A young man is left to his own choice whether he will join the army or not, but once enlisted, he is no longer left to his own course. If Uncle Sam says for him to go to China or the Philippines, there he must go, and there is no alternative. If he declines to obey orders he is dismissed from the service, and that, too, under disgrace. It is none the less true when we enlist under the Captain of our salvation, that we are in service and must obey orders. The order is to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. William Duncan was once asked if he would go to the Indians of the great Northwest. He replied by saying that he would go anywhere in the world where he was sent, and if need be he could be ready in an hour.

All along our coasts are saving stations. Now and then a ship is dashed upon the rocks and many are in the perils of the deep. Just where it may happen no one can tell; but there is a constant lookout from the shore for shipwrecked mariners, and wherever it may happen there the rescuing party hastens with all speed to render all possible assistance. Often his is accompanied with great hardships and perils. But no man enlisted in the service thinks for a moment of drawing back because of these things. Can a Christian do less?—J. M. McCaleb.

THE LEADING

In pastures green? Not always; sometimes He Who knoweth best, in kindness leadeth me

In weary ways, where heavy shadows be. Out of the sunshine warm, and soft and bright,

Out of the sunshine into darkest night; I oft would faint with sorrow and affright—

Only for this—I know He holds my hand;

So whether in green or desert land, I trust, although I may not understand. And by still waters? No, not always so;

Ofttimes the heavy tempests round me blow,

And o'er my soul the waves and billows go.

But when the storms beat loudest and I cry

Aloud for help, the Master standeth by, And whispers to my soul, "Lo it is I." Above the tempest wild I hear Him say, "Beyond this darkness lies the perfect day,

In every path of thine I lead the way." So, whether on the hilltops high and fair I dwell, or in the sunless valleys, where The shadows lie—what matter? He is there.

And more than this; where'er the path-way lead

He gives to me no helpless, broken reed, But His own hand, sufficient for my need.

So where He leads me I can safely go; And in the blest hereafter I shall know Why, in His wisdom, He hath led me so. —Author Unknown.

"I never knew a case where one-tenth was given that did not produce the most satisfactory results. I believe it to be about the surest way to prosperity that a man can possibly adopt in this world; it is just what the Scriptures call it, the 'scattering which increaseth,' while the opposite plan is the 'withholding more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty.'"

THE KIND OF SERMONS NEEDED

We need sermons that shall expound the Bible. But if we are to secure this, we must have ministers who believe the Bible, and who are duly educated and trained in its exposition. Such men will not sneer at what they are pleased to call "The Sermon Tradition." To them, Bible study and Bible preaching will not be a slavery, but a delight.

One correspondent says truly that "congregations desire, not diluted babe's milk, but the strong meat of spiritual truth; not necessarily more intellectual sermons, but heart-to-heart talks."

Dr. Phillips Brooks has well said: "The preacher needs to be a pastor, that he may preach to real men. The pastor needs to be a preacher, that he may keep the dignity of his work alive. The preacher who is not a pastor grows remote. The pastor who is not a preacher grows petty."

May God in His mercy graciously send us such preachers, such pastors, and such sermons!—The Bible Call.

JOHNSON

Died at her home in Greensboro, N. C., on the morning of November 23, 1922, Mrs. Margarette Lee Johnson, in her 21st year. She was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Pearson, of Haw River, N. C. Her husband, Mr. C. P. Johnson, and an infant daughter survive her. She was a member of the Haw River Christian Church. Her death was quite a shock to her family and many friends. The funeral services were conducted from the Springwood Presbyterian Church by the writer, assisted by Rev. Mr. Whitely. May the blessed Christ comfort the bereaved.

WEAVING

My life is but a weaving
Between my God and me;
I may but choose the colors—
He worketh steadily.
For oft he weaveth sorrow;
And I, in foolish pride,
Forget He sees the upper,
And I the under side!

I choose the strands all golden,
And watch for golden stars;
I murmur when the pattern
Is set in blurs and mars.
I can not yet remember
Whose hands the shuttles guide;
And that my stars are shining
Upon the upper side.

I choose my threads all crimson,
And wait for flowers to bloom,
For warp and woof to blossom
Upon that mighty loom.
Full oft I seek them vainly,
And fret for them denied—
Though flowering wreaths and garlands
May deck the upper side.

My life is but a weaving
Between my God and me;
I see the seams and tangles—
The fair designs sees He.
Then let me wait in patience
And blindness; satisfied
To make the pattern lovely
Upon the upper side.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

To Stableize Financial Centers.—

The whole civilized world now seems to be uneasy and restless. We wonder what is the matter with the people any way. Of course, there is a variety of opinions, some holding to one thing and some to another as an explanation for the present disturbed condition of the world. At length it seems that the stabilization of the German Mark is the key to the situation. That may be a help, but by no means do we believe that even the making of the German Mark into a gold dollar will relieve the world's strain at this time. We believe that the only thing that will bring rest to the people of God is for them to return humbly and devoutly unto the Lord, confessing their sins and laying hold on Him for life everlasting—we think that would stableize the great financial centers of the world, and then we might get out of our present situation of unrest and see the financial world again come to its rest. An exchange puts the matter this way when it says:

"Experts investigating economic conditions in Germany have come to the conclusion that the financial condition not only of Germany but of Europe cannot be improved without a stabilization of the German mark on the basis of 3,000 to 3,500 on the dollar and of the utilization of Reichsbank gold reserve. The experts also concluded that there cannot be this stabilization without a moratorium of at least two years in reparation payments. They find that payments should not be resumed until Germany shall have become able to make them from a real budget surplus. Of course France is bitterly opposed to any moratorium whatever and will certainly fight the report of the commission of experts, consisting of Professors Keynes, Brand, Jenks, and Cassell."

The Cruelty of Man to His Fellowman.—

We have heard of the cruelty of the Moham-medaus, the Turks and the Germans, but we believe for cruelty with the bottom dropped out, the Turks excell as the people on the face of the earth. It is hard to conceive what can be the possible motive for inflicting such cruelty. Who can imagine the Turk being bloodthirsty enough to even dream of doing many of the things which the public press tells us are being done, first by this one and then again by that one, and still it seems that not one of the great powers of the world will put their hand down in an effort to stop such cruelty. One of our exchanges tells us of an awful instance of Turkish cruelty. It puts it up in this way:

"Ali Kemal Bey, an intelligent and enlightened Turkish editor who was highly respected in Constantinople, was beaten to death recently by a mob of infuriated Turkish women at Ismid. His body was afterwards dragged through the streets and exposed to public gaze for several hours on the gibbet where he was to have been executed because of his pleading through his paper for a more just treatment of enemies and foreigners. The allied government had tried to save the life of this man, and it is said that the mob of women beat him to death more as a protest against the efforts of the Allies to save him than because of what the man himself had done. His shameful death is another affront to the allied governments, who sought to protect this editor because they regarded him as innocent of any crime and because they felt that he was a man capable of and disposed to be of real help in bringing a better day in Turkey. This deed also illustrates the bloody-minded intolerance which is a Turkish characteristic. There is no such thing as freedom of the press or freedom of speech among the nationalists in Turkey."

What Do You Think of A World Congress?—

The discussion is on and something must come of it. Either it will come to nothing, or it will precipitate one of the biggest questions the world has faced in its history, so far as money matters are concerned. One of our exchanges puts it this way:

"The proposal that a world economic congress be called by the United States, suggested by Dr. Joseph Wirth, former German Chancellor, has been indorsed and presented to Congress by the United States Trade Commission. Mr. C. J. Owens, Chairman of the Trade Commission, says that after three months' careful study of a committee appointed by the Commission the Commission favors a world congress such as Dr. Wirth has suggested. The Commission in its request to Congress suggested (1) an international congress of bankers and governmental representatives to devise a scheme for the payment of international debts and the payment by Germany of reparation; (2) the amendment of laws of the United States to coordinate the agencies of the American government at home and abroad as they relate to the foreign service of the country; (3) the revision of tariff from a nomination standpoint so as to remove the barriers to foreign trade; (4) the change of our diplomatic policy so that foreign representatives may submit constructive criticisms on economic subjects without partisan bias and without fear of reprimand. The Commission declares that 'Europe is more nearly on the verge of armed conflict than at any time since immediately preceding the World War,' and 'the fundamental problem is that of settlement of war debts and reparations. This must include all nations that are parties to international obligations.' The Commission suggests that America is the creditor nation and therefore should call such a congress."

Punishing Automobilists.—

One of the most frightful causes of death among the people in our modern times is the accident from the running of the automobilist, and this ought not so to be. The automobilist kills himself almost as often as other people, although he frequently kills other people too, and it really seems as if there is nothing found that will make the average driver of an automobile careful. Life is imperilled when ever the run is made on auto wheels. Not all accidents are from careless driving, or from fast driving, but there is little doubt that a great proportion of automobile accidents could be avoided if the driver was only careful in driving. Detroit is the great automobile center of the United States and Detroit is the center of automobilists accidents. Judge Charles L. Bartlett of that city is trying a new experiment, looking to the making of these people more careful in driving and far more considerate of the safety of the public. We are told by an exchange that Judge Bartlett has sentenced seventy automobilists speedsters to a most garrowing ordeal, and we believe he is right and we wish him great success in his novel undertaking. His plan is to sentence all speeders to visit with him in a hospital ward where the victims of these accidents are suffering. His idea is to make these reckless drivers look upon their suffering victims as they are confined to their beds and living in great agony. Most of the children were maimed for life. Then the Judge led the convicted speeders through the morgue, where reposed the mangled bodies of several persons who had been killed by automobiles. The Judge announced that he proposed to continue passing such sentences, since he believes that the mental torture the law violators suffer in looking upon their victims does more good than other forms of punishment. In each case the guilty are sent to prison following the "mental-torture" sentence. Judge Bartlett suggests that if courts all over the country would follow the example he set of "mental-torture" sentences followed by imprisonment automobile accidents would be reduced rapidly. We believe that the Judge is right.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., preached a Thanksgiving sermon in the First Baptist Church at Franklinton, N. C., on Thursday, Nov. 30, 1922.

When you change your residence, please notify THE SUN if the postoffice address of your paper is to be changed.

Let's make December "pay up month" for our Men and Millions pledges. If we do we shall have a brighter, happier, better Christmas.

A sample copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN of this issue is mailed to former subscribers who are not now on the mailing list. This copy is an invitation to you to send in your subscription and become a reader again.

Our pastors should bear in mind that the battle for Men and Millions is their battle and that all they preach, teach and represent will be aided or impeded by the success or failure of this Movement.

Rev. D. A. Long has accepted the pastoral charge of the following churches for the coming year: Popes Chapel, Mt. Auburn, and Franklinton, N. C. He is at Mt. Auburn second Sundays, at Pope's 4th Sundays, and at Franklinton on other Sundays.

The Layman's Subscription Campaign which has been on for three months ends with this issue of the paper. Premiums and commissions will be sent out as soon as the final reports have had time to get in and the checks made out. THE SUN appreciates the work done.

Dr. D. A. Long is expecting to spend January and February, and possibly March, 1923, in Florida, where he can keep warm in winter. We wish you well, Dr. Long, and we would be glad to go with you, but we have too much work at this end of the line to permit such a trip.

Rev. T. E. White, now of Windsor, Virginia, has another letter in this issue addressed to his "Brother Abe." That is all we need say, for we are sure that to let you know such a letter is in this issue will insure its reading. Bro. White is doing a bit of plain talking to Brother Abe,—and to others also. Keep it up, Bro. White.

While you are doing your Christmas shopping, don't forget that the paper-man, the ink-man, the type-man and the pressman would like to be remembered. Look at the label on your paper, it will tell you whether you are paid in advance or whether you are in arrears. If in arrears, you will enjoy Christmas better if you know that THE SUN'S "men" are all paid. Renew your subscription.

Rev. J. G. Truitt, now in his senior year at Princeton Seminary, is making ready for his graduation next Spring. The church that is seeking a talented and consecrated man for its pastor, will do well, we think, to keep an eye on this brother and make sure of getting him if possible. We shall soon give another of his splendid papers on Fullness and Emptiness. Be sure to watch for it and give it a good reading when it appears.

Are you praying for the success of Dr. Atkinson in his great effort for the completing of the Men and Millions campaign? Help him in every way you can, but remember that if you truly pray for him, that act itself will make it a pleasure to help him carry on the work as you have opportunity to do so. Do not knock, but help him in the good work. A helping hand is so much better than a knocking hand. Help him brethren and sisters, for he is doing a good and a noble work for our cause.

"I certainly am in a position to appreciate thoroughly the fine editorial of yours on the Fosdick affair. You are exactly right. May God bless you, Dr. Barrett. I like to hear you speak out like you do." "That comes to us from one who is giving his life to the work of preaching the truth to the people, and as such we appreciate it. It does help the lonely sentinel to feel the touch of a brother's elbow now and then as he stands on the post of duty. It is encouraging to know that you do not stand entirely alone, so far as your brethren are concerned."

Rev. T. E. White has reached his new field at Windsor, Virginia, and is now busy, getting the harness on and adjusting himself to it. If he talks to his present field (people) as plainly as he did to his Brother Abe, there will be something doing around in the regions near his churches. He is a worthy man and has ability for the work he is undertaking. He surely did make a fine address before the North Carolina Conference in its late session, and the people gave him close attention. When such plain talking is given the people they are going to set up and listen and get good out of it.

Rev. J. Vincent Knight has connected himself with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and has taken work in the North Carolina M. E. Conference. We wish Bro. Knight well, although some of our brethren think it means that the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, is gaining at our loss, but that is a mistake. It is true Bro. Knight has withdrawn from our work and joined the Methodists, but what of that? The Eastern Virginia Christian Conference in its late (Nov.) session received two able ministers from the Methodist Episcopal Church. So if the going of a minister from one denomination to another means anything, denominationally, we are still ahead for we received more than we lost—two for one is not so bad, now is it?

The Nashville Christian Advocate (Nashville) has had a vision, and a very fine one too. If it is correct, then we are just entering one of the most prosperous seasons we have had in many years. The Advocate says:

Reports from the Department of Commerce and the Department of Labor at Washington state that unemployment this winter will be at its lowest ebb since the World War. Few people who want work need go without a job. The reports say that a shortage of labor, especially unskilled labor, is certain to exist before next spring. Secretary of the Treasurer Mellon is advocating the modifying of the immigration laws so as to admit such laborers as are needed in this country. There is an almost unprecedented building program on all over the country. The railroads are ordering hundreds of millions of dollars worth of equipment. Various public improvement enterprises are on and will be put on within the next six months. There is such a road-building program as was never seen before in any country. Automobiles and automobile equipment are being manufactured in tremendous quantities. All in all, it does seem certain that all who want to work can work now.

Here is a suggestion to our ministers who will preach a Christmas sermon. You have no doubt found it a bit hard to select a text. Preach a sermon Dec. 24th on The Virgin Birth, taking as a text some suitable passage of Scripture such as Luke 1:35. Give it a careful and prayerful study, and so present to your people the best thought you have on this most important question. THE VIRGIN BIRTH is a matter of vital importance in the Christian Faith, for if Jesus was not born of a Virgin, then Jesus is only a man, and if only a man, having a human father and mother, then he is only a man and not in an especial sense the Son of God. THE VIRGIN BIRTH is a key-stone to the teachings of Christianity. With the Virgin Birth, the structure stands a living monument to Divinity, but without it the structure still stands as a hollow ideal. By all means give to your people the Bible teaching on the Virgin Birth. After you have preached on the question, if you did not do so in preparing the sermon, prepare the sermon by writing it out in full for the press. Send the same to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Henderson, N. C., and he will have the same examined by a competent Committee of three ministers. To the author of the sermon which this committee shall pronounce to be the best from a Scriptural standpoint, the editor of this paper will present Five Dollars in gold and publish the sermon in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The second and third best will also be published in these columns. Get busy and keep much upon your knees and may the Lord help you to produce a sermon that may be greatly used of God for the furtherance of the truth of the Virgin Birth. Of course, these sermons must be in support of this great doctrine. The sermon must be in the editor's hands by Jan. 1, 1923.

FROM ELON COLLEGE.

I want to say to my many dear friends that after the Burlington Convention, I had to have a hard fight with asthma, but am now nearly normal again. About the 22nd or 23rd of this month I expect to go up to Greensboro to my Masonic Home where I am Chaplain. I'll remain there until about the 27th with my old, dear friends whom it will be such a pleasure for me to see. About the 27th, I expect to return to Elon to be present on my 97th birthday 1st day of January. I will expect at that time quite a number of letters, cards, etc., as I am accustomed to getting quite a number on my birthday and I want to thank you all in advance for the same.

DR. HARWARD'S WORK IN PORTSMOUTH.

We have now about 160 members in the Elm Avenue Christian Church of Portsmouth, Va. Rev. W. D. Harward, D. D., is our pastor. He has been with us only a short time, but he and his wife are doing splendid work. I feel that they are going to do much for us here. On Sabbath, Dec. 3rd, we had splendid services and fine attendance. We had 116 in Sunday School present. Then we had a very good number in our church services. Pray for our church and for each member, that we may do a good work for the Master—that we may win many souls to Christ.

TWO IMPORTANT EVENTS.

Through the Richmond and Norfolk papers we learn of two important events in our current history. On Saturday, Nov. 18th, Richmond witnessed, at least a part of it did, what it had never seen before, viz.: The laying of a corner stone for a new church building for our people in that city. We are told that the weather was inclement, but there was a great crowd of people to witness the ceremonies of the occasion.

In this instance the building, as we may judge from the laying of the Corner-Stone, is well on the way under construction, and we are told that the building is assured. Of course, the fact that it is assured does not mean to say that the Richmond Church will not need the liberal help of our people. It does need and ought to have it promptly, but the building will, under the favoring love of God, be built. We believe the contractor is under bond to give it to the church completed by next April, and that means that real work must be done, for next April is only a little more than three months away. Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., the pastor of the Richmond Church is a hard worker and has heretofore successfully undertaken some heavy tasks in the way of building, and we are looking for him to bring the work to a successful completion on the time appointed.

The Richmond Christian Church building will be a handsome structure and will add to our usefulness, as we trust largely, especially in the capital city of the Old Dominion, where we have long needed a working church. The location is a fine one, we judge, and the future of the cause of the Christians in that city is looking up and with a fine prospect. In thirty years, that is to say, by the year 1945, we ought to have a strong church in that city and from two to three younger churches growing up around what will then be called the Mother Church of our people in that city. This ought to be the condition at this time, and for the reason that we ought to have had this work well under way thirty years ago. If the present status had existed thirty years ago, we might have had a great work in progress there at this time, but we are glad we have begun at this late day. Let us take courage and go bravely forward in that great and growing city.

On Thanksgiving Day, 1922, another important event in the current history of our people came off in the city of Norfolk, Va. It was the laying of the corner stone of The Christian Temple, Park Place, Norfolk, Va. It was a great occasion a fine day and a large attendance on the part of the people. Dr. Smith, the pastor presided and directed the events of the occasion. The program for the exercise was quite an attractive affair, comprising a pamphlet with the cover of 16 pages. Several speakers were on hand and did a fine piece of work in bringing out striking features of the institution whose corner stone was to be laid that day. The Rev. Jas. A. Crain, Secretary of the Norfolk Council of Federated Churches, spoke on "What This Church Should Mean to Cooperative Christianity." Then an address on "What this Church Should Mean to the City," by City Manager Charles E. Ashburner was read by Mr. Steed, who represented Mr. Ashburner, as he could not be present. Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West, Suffolk, Va., spoke on "What This Church Should Mean to the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference," and it is said that Liet.-Gov. West was at his best and made a telling speech in favor of the principles of the Christian Church. He was followed by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, on "What This Church Should Mean to the Southern Christian Convention," and those who know Dr. Atkinson need not be told that he made a great speech, for he is given to doing that sort of thing. The music was good and very appropriate. They sang, "I love Thy Kingdom, Lord", then "The Churches One Foundation" and others. The occasion was one of great interest and the building was surrounded by a vast throng of people and the laying of the Corner-Stone of this new temple was considered a great success. The building is likely to be the handsomest structure in the whole denomination, East or West, North or South, costing, it is said, a quarter million dollars. It will likely be the handsomest church building in the city of Norfolk of any denomination. This naturally calls much attention to it. Who could have thought even ten years ago of the people of the Christian Church erecting in the City of Norfolk a church building of such a character? We have no doubt that to the other denominations who have handsome church buildings in the city, it seems like a strange thing to have it this way—that is the smallest denomination in the city be the owners of the handsomest church building occupied by a small body of people. Of course this handsome building can be of real service and truly acceptable to God only as it shall be filled with the right type of Christian people, worshipping the true God through Jesus Christ our Lord. May this temple be one not merely of great physical strength and beauty, but may it stand for generation after generation, a tower of spiritual strength and light to all the denominations, and especially to the city of Norfolk and Eastern Virginia, and more, may its light shine in Porto Rico and Japan through its fine missionary spirit and work.

As the Christian Temple of Norfolk, Va., it is the successor of the Memorial Christian Temple and Old Providence Church, just outside the City, and the Third Church, all brought into one. Its future is big with promise and its outlook for large usefulness under the blessings of God, are very bright. There are thousands of our people who will watch its career with great interest and wish for it the best possible service for God and our fellowmen.

When the ceremony of laying the corner-stone was completed, the Mason in charge turned to the Marshall of the day and said:

Brother Marshall, you will make proclamation that the corner-stone of the building to be erected here, has this day been found square, level, plumb, true and trusty, and laid according to our ancient customs.

Then the people joined in singing that grand old hymn of Christianity:

"How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Is laid for your faith in His excellent Word!
What more can He say than to you He hath said,
You who unto Jesus for refuge have fled?"

THE TIDE IS RISING.

It has taken a long while to get the good people of this country awake as to the dangers of Evolution, but at last there is evidence that the people are getting their eyes open, and once aroused; we believe there will be no let up in their efforts to stay the tide of scientific opposition to the Bible. We call it scientific opposition, but in fact we believe it is very unscientific, and therefore its literature ought to take its place on the dumping ground of other dead theories. The Christian heart and mind, the Christian home, the Christian pulpit and the Christian press are certainly not the places for the display of these goods.

No doubt some of our friends, who are so much in love with the ideals of Evolution, feel a degree of chagrin on seeing the opposition which is rising all over the country to these unproved and unestablished theories, but they may as well take down their chagrin and look the situation squarely in the face, for the opposition to Evolution will not die till Evolution is dead and buried. Even now the idea of Evolution is much nearer dead than many think. As a fact Evolution has never been proven and it is not likely to be. The originator of the theory of Evolution himself admitted, if we mistake not, that there is a missing link in its chain of evidence, and so far no man has been able to supply this link. Till this link is supplied, clearly and definitely, it seems to us that it is a piece of vanity on the part of its friends to try to make Evolution a basis of opposition to revealed truth as we find it in the Bible. If there be any truth in Evolution, that truth is God's gift to man, and we may be sure that the All-wise and infinite God would not give us the truth of the Scriptures and then give us a separate line of truths which are so fully in opposition to what He has revealed to us in the Bible. It is no wonder that Christian men and women are rising with so much unanimity and force against this wild-eyed enemy of Christianity.

We find the following condemnation of Evolution as it is creeping into public schools in this country. We commend it as well worthy of the imitation of other States and Cities. Let the people but get their eyes open to the dangers of this enemy of Christianity, and we shall see something take place, and it will not tend to boost Evolution, at least we do not believe it will. These resolutions are taken from a Western magazine and deserve the thought and earnest consideration of the people.

PASTORS CONDEMN EVOLUTION THEORY IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

At a conference held in the First Baptist Church in Minneapolis, Minn., recently, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

"PREAMBLE—As American citizens we believe in the complete separation of church and State, and are opposed to religious teaching in public schools—higher or lower.

"As those who wish to teach Christianity must support their private schools, we believe it but just that those who wish to teach anti-Christian theories should be forbidden the use of tax supported schools for propagating their opinions.

"Whereas, The evolutionary hypothesis has come to be accepted by many American teachers, and is increasingly taught in the public schools, of Minnesota, including high schools, our State normals and State university, and

"Whereas, This hypothesis, after sixty-three years of study, remains wholly unproven, and has increasingly shown itself to be a foe to the Christian faith, denying as it does the veracity of the Scriptures.

"Therefore, be it resolved, That we, citizens of Minnesota, representing thousands of our fellow citizens, hereby utter our protest against this propaganda of infidelity, palmed off in the name of science, and we call upon the trustees of State institutions to demand of teachers a cessation of such teaching and the removal from our schools of such textbooks as favorably present the same.

"We do this in the interest of true science vs. science falsely so-called; and in the interest of fair dealing, if to Christian citizens, it shall not be made a subject of scoffing on the part of tax paid teachers.

"We hold that the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, 'Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion,' was never intended to be interpreted that the state should become sponsor for irreligion; and that it is manifestly unfair to impose taxes upon Christian taxpayers to inculcate teachings inimical to the Bible and destructive of civilization itself.

"We have waited patiently for this hypothesis to either prove a truth or to pass from public instruction. Having now no prospect of either, we demand that the state shall prove its impartiality towards its citizens by dispensing with a subject that is utterly divisive; and is, in the judgment of thousands of its taxpayers, utterly false.

"And we declare that if the school authorities prove derelict in the enforcement of the law relating to the teaching of religion or of theories subversive of the Christian faith, we will appeal to the legislature for the enactment of such laws as shall eliminate from our tax supported school system this anti-scientific and anti-scriptural theory of the origin of man and the universe."

These resolutions speak for these men in no uncertain terms, and we believe the multitudes will catch up this thought and hurl it back whence it came, and when its enemies are done with it, it will at least have the appearance of having been in a storm of such dreadful proportions as mean an uncertain future for it. We believe Evolution is doomed.

"REVISING OUR CONCEPTION OF STEWARDSHIP."

We Ought To Do It. Let Us Prayerfully Study the Proposition.

Many of us do not do the things we ought to do, and we do not for the reason that we do not know the right thing to do. But will that excuse us for not doing? We think not, unless we have been so situated that we could get no chance to find out through study what we ought to do. Not many of our readers have such a reason for not doing, for with most of us, if we did not know what we ought to do, we could have known if we had honestly and faithfully tried to find out what we most needed to do in the service we would render to the cause of Christ. Then by all means, do let us try to ascertain just what our Christian privilege calls us to do in the name of Christ.

Let us take the matter of Christian Stewardship. Have we done our best in our service as stewards in the cause of Christ? He has given us certain opportunities, certain means or money, and He has wished us to put our money where it will do the most good, but where did you put it? Did you put it where the cause of Christ most needed it, or did you put it where you are interested, it may be, in some local enterprise? And did you do it just because it was a local enterprise, or did you do it because you really thought, after praying over the matter, that this was the most needy cause just at that time? Do let us be careful in deciding such matters, for often the usefulness of our money, be it little, or be it much depends on such decision.

One of the most thoughtful articles along this line recently appeared in Christian Work, from the pen of the Rev. William P. Merrill, D. D., Minister of the Brick Presbyterian Church of

New York City. It is so good and so much to the point that we are republishing it below that our readers may have the chance to read it and study it. We advise that you read it over once, and then a day or two later, give it another reading, and then another a few days still later, and each time you read it, ask the Lord to give you light that you may understand it in so far as it is in keeping with God's will, and as you come to understand it, just that far begin to practice what he teaches. We urge this because we believe his ideas are Biblical and so deserve to be practiced among Christians of all names.

Dr. Merrill puts the case this way:

"As the wealth in the hands of church members has increased in amount and in power to bring results, there has been an increasing effort, on the part of church leaders, to deepen the sense of stewardship on the part of all who have control of money beyond the legitimate needs of their personal and family life.

"What is commonly and carelessly understood by the principle of stewardship is this: that men and women of large means should consider themselves to be handling trust funds, and should use their money accordingly for the work of the Kingdom of God. This is a good conception so far as it goes; but it penetrates only slightly below the surface. As a matter of fact, stewardship is a word with meaning for those of moderate means as well as for those of large means. In the deepest sense it holds for the poorest; for it means that every dollar a Christian controls should be spent in accordance with the will of God. What one spends on daily bread and recreation and all other matters is a part of stewardship, no less than what he spends on Foreign or City Missionary Work.

"Yet practically stewardship has to do with the use of our surplus. It means that one is a trustee, handling funds that belong to God, an agent, under orders as to the way he conducts his business; that he must conscientiously keep down expenditure on himself, and put all he can into God's business.

"The obligations of stewardship are not met by compliance with the law of the tithe. Yet, freely adopted, that law, or some other rule of proportionate giving, is of such great practical help that it is the part of Christian wisdom to adopt it. It is a great thing to have an adequate part of one's income so absolutely set apart for benevolence and missionary purposes that one never by any possibility thinks of it as his own money. It enables one to give more, and feel it less, than if he gave spasmodically.

"But stewardship involves more than giving liberally and definitely and conscientiously to the work of the Kingdom of God. That might make one only a silent partner, furnishing capital, claiming occasionally the right to say how the money shall be used, but with no active and regular interest in the business.

"A steward is an under officer, one intrusted with a department of a business. We need only a deepened sense of stewardship that shall lead men to give more money. We need an enlarged conception of stewardship that shall lead men and women who control the expenditure of God's money to consider themselves officers in God's great business, not mere contributing partners.

"What does that mean practically? Two things at least.

"1. It means that one shall put his money not where he wants to put it, but where the business needs it.

"A man who 'owns' his business, or the money he puts into it, may feel that he has a right to choose the particular places and ways in which his capital shall be spent. He may, if he chooses, withdraw it from one particular part of his work and put it all into another part. But the steward cannot so act. He must consider no individual preference, no private whim, in the use to which he devotes the money he controls. It is not his; it belongs to the proprietor of the business; and the only consideration that has the right to decide and govern his use of the funds in his hands is the good of the business.

"Every Christian, in his giving for the Kingdom of God, is a steward and not a capitalist. He is not only under bonds of conscience to put his money into the work of the Kingdom; he is bound to put it, not where he wants to put it, but where the business of the Kingdom needs it.

"Here is a phase of stewardship needing emphasis. Some Christians give liberally, but give according to individual preference. They give, in other words, in the spirit of the owner, who wishes to gratify his desires through his giving, rather than in the spirit of the steward, who has an eye to the development of the business and puts his resources where they will count most. Hence, some parts of the work of the Kingdom overflow, and others are in want. Some causes get money readily, not because they are most important, but because they are most popular. College presidents tell us they can get money far more readily for a building than for general endowment; not because colleges need buildings more, but because givers prefer to give them. That indicates the capitalist, not the steward, Church and individual Christians have favorite benevolences. They give largely to them and meagerly to others, not from careful estimate of the relative importance of the two sets of objects, but because they like the one set more than the other. There are not many who look carefully for the neediest work before deciding where to place their gifts, are there? Yet only such are stewards.

"2. The second meaning involved in stewardship is closely akin to the first: to be a steward is to work with the organization.

"No matter how much one contributes to the work of the Kingdom, he is not really and fully a steward if he waits to be sought out by the work, or makes it hard for those in charge to set the needs before him, or gives only when the facts beat their way through his defences. One who knows the conditions has a deep sympathy for men and women of large means, beset continually as they are by countless representatives of innumerable good causes, importuned to "stop, look and listen" many times a day. In self-defense they must deny their attention to most of the appeals. And it is not strange that they grow very weary of them.

"But there is no reason why every man and woman who has any considerable amount to give to the work of the Kingdom should not at least look into the situation with sufficient care to determine which large organizations or movements or Boards or Committees or men are of most worthy to the Kingdom, and then selecting a few such, give them ready and full access at all times to their minds and hearts, ever seeking from them the facts without which one cannot intelligently play the part of steward. Here is something even more vital than large contributions. Why should not the authorized directors of great church undertakings have ready access to men and women of means, to lay before them the real needs of the Kingdom, just as the directors of a great business come to the officers or to the men who hold the funds, and show them what is needed and where it will produce the results? Such stewardship would lift one of the heaviest burdens from the leaders of our great church activities, who must spend much time and ingenuity getting access to the men and women who ought to grant it freely and spontaneously.

"One of the best of God's stewards in recent times was Mr. Louis H. Severance. He not only gave liberally, but he knew the business, looked into the facts, sought out the leaders, tried to place his money where it was needed rather than where he preferred to put it. Why should not many Christians seek out the leaders of our mission work, as did he, with constructive suggestions and inquiries as to pressing needs, and continual openness to information as to the condition of the work of the church?"

"Stewardship is a great word; but press its meaning as far as you can, and it is not too strong to fit the facts. We are handling trust funds; and we must handle them as stewards, not as capitalists.

"Christ told a parable about a steward. There is a detail in the story that is uncomfortably true to the facts in the life of many a Christian. 'How much owest thou unto my Lord?' each debtor was asked. And when he said, 'A hundred measures of wheat,' the answer came, 'Take thy bill, and sit down quickly, and write fifty.' That sort of dialogue goes on in many a soul. How much do I owe? If I looked the matter squarely in the face and gave an honest answer, I might say, 'A hundred.' But I take my subscription card, and sit down quickly and write fifty. There can be no question that, if every one in the Church saw himself as a steward, a trustee, and referred to his conscience the amount and the objects of his giving to the Kingdom of God, the work of Christ in the world would be fully supplied with resources. Is that any more than every Christian is bound to do? God speed the day when all the Lord's people shall assume the obligation and enter into the joy of stewardship."

"THE LAWS AGAINST LIQUOR MUST BE MAINTAINED."

Under this heading The Southern Churchman says some very suggestive and timely things for present consideration. The time is ripe for such thought. We bring it to our readers that their pure hearts and minds may be stimulated to stand for the thoughts and purposes therein set forth. The laws of the land in which we live must be not only maintained, but rightly enforced, or the will of the people will be defeated. There was a time, if we mistake not, and that time was not so long ago, when if a man or a woman had talked against the Constitution of the United States, as some are doing in the hope of breaking down the Eighteenth Amendment today, such an one would hardly have been recognized as fit to live in a decent community. Have the friends of the Constitution fallen from grace that such opposition to the Constitution of the United States is now tolerated? Is it not just as near an offence against the Constitution now to speak in a disrespectful way of that honored instrument, as it was in the days of the past?

The Southern Churchman in discussing the necessity for maintaining the laws against the liquor business in this country, says:

"A matter which has immediately arisen for discussion in connection with the results of the Congressional election, ten days ago, is the probable attitude of the next Congress toward Prohibition. As far as one can judge from the indications available, it seems unlikely that the newly elected body will, as a whole, represent any decided shift in sentiment. Those who desire to keep the laws against the sale of liquor as they now are will apparently retain a safe majority in the next Congress.

"The fact must be clearly recognized, however, that very powerful influences in the United States, allied with influences also in other countries, are doing their utmost to break down, in whole, or in part, the present prohibition laws. In the recent elections, some of the States sent to Congress men who have been vehement spokesmen of the anti-prohibition sentiment. Ex-Governor Edwards, of New Jersey, elected from that State to succeed Senator Frelinghuysen, has been at the head and forefront of those who would destroy the entire prohibition experiment to the utmost possible degree. Dr. Royal S. Copeland, who defeated Senator Calder, in New York, is also prominently identified with the anti-prohibition forces. The election of these two men, though, of course, not accounted for solely on this one issue, yet undoubtedly indicates that the efforts of those who would befriend, and as far as possible reinstate, the liquor traffic, have not been without results in those great cities of our country such as New York, and Newark, and Paterson, and other communities, where there is a very great foreign-born population. When these men take their seats in Congress, they will, unquestionably, work to their utmost, in the first place for the repeal of the Volstead Act, to the end that the sale of wine and beer might be legalized; and, after that, if they should be successful to this extent, they doubtless would use that partial victory as the ground from which to launch an assault upon the whole prohibition amendment itself.

It is a frequent device of the liquor traffic to try to throw the friends of prohibition off their guard by talking smoothly of prohibition as a 'settled issue.' But it is not a 'settled issue' if the unwearied and implacable efforts of its enemies can by any means unsettle it. There has been formed in Europe a world association against prohibition, by which the liquor producers in all countries are working grimly to prevent the spread of prohibition, and to discredit it where it is already in effect. That immense body of men and women in America who are determined that this mighty adventure for a more moral and wholesome society shall not fail, must be alert and determined. Prohibition, even in its imperfect development, has brought immeasurable benefit to America, as thoughtful and unselfish citizens everywhere have recognized. The will which enacted it must be matched now by a patient and unswerving determination to carry it on deliberately to full success.

"As to the specious plea which is often made, that beer and wine might be legalized without tampering with the prohibition of more intoxicating liquors, and that the return of these drinks would be a positive gain to the real sobriety and orderliness of the country, let the following judgment be considered from Professor Edward A. Ross, one of the greatest students of sociology in America. In his most recent book, 'The Social Trend,' he has written:

"The catering of liquor became commercialized. It came to be a "big business" intent on profits—always more profits. From being shrinking and apologetic, it became brazen and aggressive. It no longer pleaded humbly for leave to assuage existing thirsts. In order to "promote business" it deliberately and methodically set itself to create new thirsts. It advertised, gave away samples, subsidized convivial organizations, encouraged festal customs, of a "damp" character, planted saloons in new places, and brought them into close partnership with the great social plagues, gambling and prostitution. In olden time alcoholic beverages were no more "pushed" than hen's eggs are "pushed." But as production and distribution were centralized, and business grew more capitalistic, the saloon-keeper came to be the brewer's man, while systematic efforts were made to "shove" liquor, especially beer. Between 1880 and 1907 the annual per capita consumption of all liquors in this country rose from ten gallons to nearly twenty-three gallons! Far, then, from being a superfluous stroke at a dying social custom, prohibition was an urgent social-defense forced by greedy liquor interests which were so short-sighted that they would not leave non-drinkers alone. Continually they plotted to tempt the public into a large consumption. Their ambition seemed to be to convert the rising generation of males into peripatetic tanks.

"A long and variegated experience with attempts to regulate the liquor traffic showed that it was incapable of being made decent and law-abiding. It would respect no law, heed no warning or protests. Always it was secretly digging under or insolently breaking over any bounds the community set to it. So, not out of a sour resentment of other people's pleasures, but out of bitter experience with an unmitigated social evil, grew the sentiment for destroying it, "root and branch." When parents and other earnest people realized that here was a sinister thing doing its utmost to ensnare our boys and ravel out the fabric of sound principles and good resolutions which home and school and church had been at such pains to weave into the soul of youth, they hardened their hearts and struck it down."

SHALL THE PREACHER EAT?

The Literary Digest says:

To keep body and soul together, a Newton, N. J., pastor was recently forced to add to his income by taking a job as time-keeper for a gang of road-pavers. Unquestionably, we are told, the paving job pays him much more than the ministry. Many other pastors have supplemented their small stipends by outside work, and often their cases go unnoticed, except in their own localities. But the minister who took up the paving job so that he could get enough to eat while he was preaching the Gospel again forces the remark that the average clergyman gets less than the average laborer, that it costs less to save souls than to dig ditches or pave streets. Yet, the Washington Star reminds us, these ministers have spent many years of study and preparation for their pastoral duties. They have worked hard to gain their education, and have struggled against adversity, "supported by faith in their calling, by a sincere conviction that they are needed in the field of church work. And their reward is constant anxiety, desperate poverty and an obligation to present a creditable appearance without the means to do so." Some denominations, we are told, are making better provisions for the clergy, and some are better able to pay good salaries to the church leaders.

Another paper in presenting the same subject says:

"In most churches the financial problem is the most serious. Collections vary, and annual subscriptions are sometimes undependable. Fairs, bazaars, suppers, entertainments are held to get funds. The congregations are constantly under pressure, in one form or another, forever subject to the appeal for money.

"It is a great pity that this is the case. The Church is for spiritual advancement. How can it be fully effective as such if the sordid questions of finance are constantly obtruding? True, the sacrifice of means for this good end is wholesome and often a practical corrective of worldliness. But in the long run the one who sacrifices most is the man who, after hard work in preparation, undertakes the spiritual guidance of a flock with less provision for his physical sustenance than even the humblest member of his church."

MISSIONS

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary.

A BLESSING OR A CURSE?

A friend in conversation with the writer the other day said, "Do you know that another wave of prosperity has struck our country, and this time a permanent and powerful one? It has the solid backing of real and not inflated values and has come to stay?" The writer trusts his informant, who is a hard working man and a producer, was none too optimistic and is correct in his conclusions. And then the writer read this sentence "Increased prosperity without increased morality and deepening spirituality tends to gross materialism and makes a people ignore or forget God." And then he thought further in the fact that many more nations have gone to their ruin and to their undoing from prosperity and riches than from poverty and want. It is not adversity but indulgence that has overthrown governments and destroyed principalities.

Unless, then, the churches can keep open and freely flowing the fountains and channels of charity and benevolence, our returning prosperity will prove a curse instead of a blessing. In the days of our plenty and gladness we should not forget the Hand and the Heart that gave us all.

PAYING THROUGH AFFLICTION.

If all who have made pledges to Men and Millions could realize how some are sacrificing to meet these pledges there would be a great outpouring on the altar of our Lord in consecration to Him for the furtherance of His work in winning the world through the atoning blood of His Son. Before me now under date of December 1st. are these lines: "I am sending $5.00 which will finish paying the $25.00 I promised to pay on our special Mission fund. I hope now I can begin paying my pledges, or some of it, to Men and Millions, both for myself and my wife. We have an afflicted child and in addition to medicine and doctor's bill weekly it seems hard on a poor man, though by God's help I am going to finish paying my pledges to Men and Millions just as soon as I can. Help me pray for my little afflicted one, who has been sick now for four years."

Somehow afflictions seem to be necessary in the wisdom of God and in the economy of grace, since we are told in the Book that even our Lord Christ was made perfect through suffering. (Heb. 2:10). Our Men and Millions pledges were made in the day of plenty and prosperity. The fact that many of them must now be paid through suffering and adversity will in the providence of God prove a blessing spiritually to the church in completing this great task.

PAY UP MONTH.

There are other and greater features of the Men and Millions Movement than the money feature: but Oct. Nov. and Dec. are the months when the money side is to be stressed. All who pledged and have not paid during the year certainly owe it to themselves, their conscience, their church and their God to make, or do their best to make, at least one payment during these months on their pledges. In January, February and March we should stress the thought and fact of stewardship. In April, May and June we should emphasize the idea of our young people dedicating their lives, as Life Recruits, to some form of Christian service. July, August and September should begin to emphasize the thought and fact of evangelism—winning souls to Christ and increasing our church membership. But now is the time for us to consider paying up our dues to church and the Lord's cause, if we have not already done so. Only one month is left of the period. Let's make December "pay-up-month" and all who have not done so, pay up a Men and Million pledge.

J. O. ATKINSON.

MEN AND MILLIONS AWAKENING.

The November report from Supt. C. D. Johnston is a distinct advance for Men and Millions over previous months. Brother Johnston feels that payments will be better now. There seems to be an increasing interest all along the line. Those who have pledged realize that they have an obligation that they cannot repudiate. I know full well that our people will pay these pledges as rapidly as they are able. We should keep the matter constantly in mind and in the public eye in order that as we meet other obligations we may bear in mind this one also. I very much hope that December will show a considerable advance over November collections, and it should. We will have a better Christmas and enjoy the good occasion if we pay off our obligations to Men and Millions.

Together brethren, and we shall have great occasion for rejoicing in the good days ahead.

J. O. ATKINSON.

ROUNDING OUT THE YEARS.

December should be made the "best yet" month of all the year in paying our Men and Millions pledges. Bear in mind that when we pay these pledges we express our loyalty and devotion to all the enterprises of the church; and every dollar we pay in goes to the support of these enterprises severally according to their need. We want to finish the good year of our Lord 1922 right, and have a clean record, a clean conscience and a grateful heart as we face the new year. Let us then, beloved, pay every penny possible on our Men and Millions pledges for the good of the church and the glory of our Lord.

Rev. R. A. Whitten is now working in the Ga. and Ala. Conference; Rev. E. M. Carter in the Alabama Conference and Rev. Fuller Johnson in the N. C. Conference in behalf of Men and Millions. These brethren are going daily with Captains in the local churches too see each subscriber and request at least one year's payment on pledges made. Any aid given these brethren in this strenuous effort for this great cause of our church will be service rendered as unto the Lord, for it is His work we are seeking to carry on. "Whosoever believeth in me the works that I do shall he do also and greater works than these shall he do because I go unto my Father."

Is it not glorious to be a comrade with our dear Lord in His work?

BROTHER ABE HEARS FROM HIS FORMER PASTOR.

Dear Brother:—

Before I begin to tell you what I told the conference in my speech, I want to tell you about my trip on my faithful Ford to my new field of labor. I thought of you so often, and was so deeply impressed on the way, that I felt that you should know something about it.

It was a real experience to me to leave home to leave my friends, the new-made graves of my loved ones, my two single sisters, who have been so recently bereft of a loving father, my only brother, my wife and my two little girls. You never had such experience, Brother Abe, and, of course, cannot appreciate, it. It reminded me of what our Savior said about leaving father, mother, brothers and sisters, wife and children, homes and lands for His sake.

I made the journey over the splendid high-way, constructed at such great costs to both North Carolina and Virginia. As I sped along and alone, I reflected much, and gathered sermons by the way. This splendid road, I reflected, had been built for me, that I might travel with rapidity and safety to my new home. As I meditated along the way about these things, it occurred to me that God had created a world for me, had moved men to inventions, to make progress for me. I seemed to be reaping and enjoying all God's creation and all the progress and wealth of mankind. I felt large, and I felt small. I thought too, of the highway of which we read in Holy Writ, how plain, the sign posts, the filling stations, the travelers, and the great cost of its construction. And, it was all done for me. I decided upon two things: First, I will appreciate what the States have done for me, and I will be just as good citizen as I know how to be. Secondly, I will appreciate what God has done for me, and I will strive to do what He would have me do.

As I have stated, I was alone. How much better, I thought, if I could have had company! The journey would have been happier and the way easier. All which reminded me that we can travel the heavenly way much more easily if we have good company. And, yet, for all that, we can make the journey successfully, if entirely alone. It appeared too, that everybody was going the other way. Only three cars passed me, as I recall, going my way, while hundreds were going in just the opposite direction. Along the road, I saw tourists camping, and all of them seemed to be going the opposite way. Is it true, I mused, that the multitude of earth are treading the downward way?

Again I was impressed by the many conveniences along the way: Filling stations, where the cleverest boys would come out upon a single toot of the horn and pour in oil and gas. I did not have to soil my fingers or clothes—so clever were they. Then there were signposts at cross roads, pointing out the way, as well as clever boys who delighted in telling the way. Then, too, there seemed to be some whose business it was to help those in trouble. I passed one such car, that was being towed in for repairs. All along the way were shops many of them especially built to help those in trouble. And it appeared to me that in all of them they were busy. Oh! it is a wonderful and convenient way! It reminded me so much of the King's Highway, where we may be filled with the spirit and the oil of gladness, read the signs and get repaired when we are hurt by sin! I certainly thought of you, Brother Abe, when I saw the boys pulling the car in for repairs. It recalled the first protracted meeting I held at your church. You were in the rear. Your wife and children and neighbors were weeping over you and pulling at you, trying to get you in for repairs. It was a hard job, for you were deep in the mire. But we finally got you in, cleaned up the spark plugs rearranged the wires, and poured in fresh oil. It was a hard job, as I remember. You were all out of fix except the horn, and that was wrong too, for somehow it got to sounding and we couldn't stop it. I never shall forget when we got you fixed up, and how a strong brother took you by the hand,—gave you a twist, and how you ran off in high gear.

Again I was reminded of you very forcibly when I crossed a long bridge over Roanoke River. When I reached the middle, I was stopped by a black man, who demanded of me toll. I paid the toll, and wondered what you would have done! Somehow, I had the feeling that you would have refused and turned back. I trembled at the very thought of you. How many times in our church have I seen you refuse to pay toll, saying the whole way is free! Not so. "Bring ye all the tithes into the store house." Yes, we must pay toll.

Well, sir, after I paid the toll and passed over, I made great progress. The road seemed smoother and my Ford raced faster and faster. I here gave it a new name. I said, "thy name shall no longer be 'Tin Lizzie,' but 'Henry Husty' shall be thy name." I began to think if I had started earlier, I could have made the trip in one day. But, like too many upon the heavenly way, I started too late; and darkness overtook me before the journey was done.

On the following day, I had another chance. Thank God for the second chance! Jonah had it. Peter had it. John Mark had it. Adam, and all the rest of us. But somehow, the way seemed worse. And I was reminded that perhaps, before we reach the end of life, the way may be rough. I have known some preachers, who seemed to have their hardest trials in old age. Somewhat neglected, unnoticed, forgotten, and unprovided for. Too, I read of the "valley of the shadow of death," and about a last enemy called "death." However, it may be, the end is sure. Good road and bad road, fair weather and foul, new home at last!

Another word, and I close. I thought I would be a stranger here, but everybody seemed to know me—even my name. They were looking for me. They knew I was on the way. So when we reach the end of our earthly pilgrimage, they will be looking for us, and will know us. Already, "over there," father and mother, brothers and sisters, children and friends are waiting and watching for us. Let us not disappoint them. Are we on the right road, following the sign posts, paying the tolls, making progress? My love for you emboldens me to warn you that you be careful.

Sincerely,
T. E. WHITE.

Windsor, Va. 12-4-'22.

P. S. My letter, I know, is too long. One thing I must add: If you could have made the trip with me, you would have been convinced that Prohibition prohibits. I did not see any sign of drunkenness on the way. Everybody was polite, and gave me the road. I could not have made the journey in safety, if bar rooms had been along the way.

Our Men and Millions Movement is not primarily one for money. It is a call for the consecration of lives and means on the altar of the Lord that the whole church may go forward in its work of soul saving.

KEEPING OPEN ALL THE YEAR.

A few of our Sunday Schools still go into "winter quarters." It is true that the number is yearly decreasing, as more and more of our churches are realizing the importance of the work of the Sunday School, and the very limited time, which it has at best, to do its work of teaching. But to the Schools, which may be thinking next Sunday, of voting to suspend the sessions of the Sunday School until spring, we submit the following suggestive thought of Mr. M. W. Brabham of the Methodist Church.

It has been pointedly said: "A Sunday School should be evergreen, and the teacher never green." Give teachers and superintendents who are interested and well informed about their tasks, and immediately bad roads, unfavorable weather, long distances, and other difficulties seem smaller.

"One rural superintendent attended a Sunday School institute in North Carolina. He went back to his work with "this one thing I do" fixed in his mind: "Our Sunday School will run through the winter." Early in December he announced to the school that instead of closing for the three winter months, as they had done for many years, the school would continue to meet regularly. Some of the teachers doubted if it could be done; some of the grown people had not yet seen the importance of it; there were some objections raised. The superintendent explained to them how important he believed it to be, and closed by telling them that "rain or shine, snow or sleet, you will find me here every Sunday through the winter." It is needless to add that the school continued through that winter and through each succeeding winter and has grown stronger through the entire year.

"There is hardly a community in village or remote rural section in which a Sunday School closes where you will not find the rural public school running through the winter. The same roads are traveled, the same children attend the schools, but the parents have not come to regard the Sunday School as of equal importance with the public school. This winter ought to see many Sunday Schools remaining open which have been accustomed to close."

It is important to make the church building comfortable. Perhaps this will necessitate fixing a broken window or door, or laying in a supply of fuel, or repairing a stove. The vital thing is to resolve that the teaching of God's Word is task big enough and challenging enough to require an all-round program of work throughout the whole year. What is your Sunday School going to do regarding this responsibility?—LUCY M. ELDRIDGE.

Can we Christians cooperate in Kingdom service through the channels of the church? That question is to be answered by our success or failure in collecting our Men and Millions pledges and in making that Movement a success or a failure.

"Together brethren in Kingdom service, in the name of our church and in the strength of our Lord" is the meaning, the challenge and the spirit of our Men and Millions Movement.

The campaign for Men and Millions is nothing more nor less than a campaign for the Christian Church, her sacred principles and her future activities.

Remember that every dime paid to Men and Millions goes to every object and enterprise of the Christian Church in proportion to their several needs.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

When one considers the cost of the International Convention against alcoholism, held in Toronto, Canada, in November, he is impressed with the sincerity of temperance advocates. Nearly a thousand accredited delegates had come from many lands, not in their own interest, but in the interest of the victims of alcohol, and to prevent such victims in the future. Viewed solely as a financial proposition, it was benevolent and Christian. So far as I know, all of the delegates attended at their own charges, or by the kindness of some other self-sacrificing spirit. It was purely a Christian convention with philanthropic purposes. In that sense it was the world's greatest expression of the Christian position on the subject of temperance. It was held for the gain of those who composed the convention. It convened "not to be ministered unto, but to minister"; and that far it was like the Master. The impressions of the meeting will be carried to all lands and be distributed among the peoples. National, denominational, and racial lines were no barriers to the united movement for world-prohibition. Unity of spirit, of purpose, and of effort, was the keynote of every address and of every demonstration.

Telegrams from Governors, Senators, and other officials gave sustained evidence of confidence in the law and its support by enforcement, and the growth of such a sentiment among the nations. The Governor and Attorney General of Ontario, bishops and priests, Anti-saloon leaders, laymen and women from all ranks and professions, vied with one another in expressions of hope for a saloonless world in the near future. Alcohol has always been lawless in its operations. It never had inherent rights. It never had any moral rights. The only right it ever had was a legal right, and that is to be withdrawn forever. It never ministered to the social or moral elevation of man. It always interrupted domestic peace.

The "Whiskey Insurrection" in western Pennsylvania in 1794 was the same kind of spirit that engages in bootlegging and the illicit traffic in liquors at the present time. It was local resistance to the excise law of 1791. Conventions were held—one in Pittsburgh—property was destroyed, an officer was shot. Finally Government sent a commission to meet two hundred delegates from western Pennsylvania at Parkinson's Ferry; but no satisfactory result was attained, and 15,000 militia men were sent by Washington, under Governor Henry Lee of Virginia, to quell the disturbance. The leaders fled the country, several hundred were taken prisoners, all of whom were subsequently pardoned, and order was restored. The "Whiskey Ring," a secret association of distillers and Federal officials, formed in 1875 to defraud the government of a large amount of tax on distilled liquors, and to use part of the same in political corruption, was brought to light in St. Louis, Chicago, and Milwaukee. Some 200 persons were implicated in this violation of the law. But such breaches of the law subsided, and respect for law again prevailed. Illicit manufacture, sale, and use of alcohol will cease again, and obedience to law will return, the Press will help the Government, and the people, when better informed, will understand their obligations and obey them. The benefits of Prohibition and the wrongs of violation will make a better citizenship and a happier people.

The great purpose expressed in the Convention was to get the facts and benefits of Prohibition down to the last man. But it is a difficult task to reach all the people, and a still more difficult task to reach the unwilling. The Toronto meeting has put Prohibition on the map, and it will put it into the minds and conscience of the nations. Australia says she will be the first dry continent in 1930. Every member of the Finland Parliament is a member of the Anti-saloon League, and crime in that country has decreased 50% in a population of 3,500,000, under Prohibition. Ignorance and lawlessness say that Prohibition does not prohibit; What do you say?

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER.

Jesus was a layman. The dauntless prophets of Israel, with a single exception, were laymen. Biblically there is ample justification for a layman's participation in the discussion of religious themes.

Historically too, there is weighty evidence in the same direction. The Christian Church was founded by laymen. The thing that impressed most of the critics of the early church was that there were no ecclesiastics among its leaders. They were described in Acts 4:13 by a Greek word which transliterated into English would be "idiots." In that day an idiot was a member of the non-ecclesiastical type, or of that proletarian group of the churches known in our day as the laity. The Christian Church was founded by these "idiots" and chief among them was the great Leader of the faith, Jesus the Christ.

Every uprising of the idiots, of the plain, simple laity of the Church, has marked the progressive advance of the Kingdom. Whenever ecclesiasticism and sacerdotalism have had their way, the Kingdom has languished and progress has marked time. Priestly leadership is of the conservative type. It takes its inspiration too often out of the past. It is not able to let the dead past bury its dead. But laymen are progressives. But for the professionals, the churches would long ago have united.

Consider the laymen's contribution to our modern time. The Sunday School by Raikes; the Y. M. C. A. by Williams; the Salvation Army by Booth; the Modern Missionary Movement, inaugurated in 1806 in the famous haystack prayer-meeting by five laymen, Mills, Richards, Robbins, Loomis, and Green; the Student Volunteer Movement, founded in 1896 by the layman evangelist Moody, and led today by Mott; the Social Settlement work founded by Riis and Jane Addams; the Baraca and Philathea Movement by Hudson; the Layman's Missionary Movement in 1906 by John B. Sleman, Jr.; the Federal Council of Churches headed up by Robert E. Speer; William Jennings Bryan pleading for the orthodox view; Cope and Ellwood for the liberal view. What a record! And these are but few choice selections. The whole record is magnificent.

In the times preceding, the leadership of the laity has been equally pronounced. The great revivals of the history of the church have been led by laymen. It was the lay-preachers of the first Christian century who made Asia Christian. The laymen monks made the Reformation possible and so freed the Church in freeing the individual believer. The Wesleyan revival was a lay revival. John Calvin was a layman. The Wycliffe and Lollard Movements were lay movements. The Welsh revival, perhaps the most distinctively spiritual revival of history, was led by that simple hearted layman, Evan Roberts. Billy Sunday's marvellous success is attributable as much to his lay-organization and his layman song leader Rhodeheaver as to his own personality, and so in spite of the crude theology he preaches he is really a vital influence for God.

The crisis of the Church today calls for a layman theologian, like John Calvin, and for an organizer like John Wesley. The Church suffers today because her leaders are not able to see how science and revealed religion, both of which proceed from God, can work harmoniously together for the promotion of human welfare and the Kingdom of God. We need a social religion, which shall do for the religious life all that democracy should do for the political life, and that shall weld all scientific truth with religious truth into a beautiful symmetry. Who knows but that a layman must do this?

The Church suffers also today because of schism. A lost world is the fearful price we pay for a divided Christendom. Some prophet of unity must arise and fuse into a battling army the competing groups of Christ's followers. Who knows but that a layman must do this, as has already been said, the ecclesiastics are keeping the churches apart.

We need a revival of lay-leadership, a genuine mass movement of the laity. Every time a layman gives himself to Christian thought and Kingdom-planning we should greatly rejoice. And no layman should be satisfied to transfer his religious thinking to his pastor any more than that he should undertake to do his praying or his giving by proxy. According to Jesus' view we are all kings and priests unto God, sovereigns of our own souls and rightly entitled to direct access to the Spiritual Sovereign of the Universe.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LETTER.

More thought is given to the theme of education today than ever before in the history of the world. This is due in large measure to the modern conception and interpretation of education. The new day in which we live has stamped education with a new meaning. For several thousand years it has been subjected to the most scrutinizing tests. Low aims fostered by its promoters minimized its real value and thwarted its great mission. It has suffered untold privation in the unholy hands of its rankest enemies. It has been clothed in the robe of misconception. Mankind has suffered and the progress of the world has been hindered as a result of the terrible malady of misconception. The situation assumed serious proportions and finally culminated in the greatest tragedy to the human race the world has ever witnessed—the world war.

But a new day has dawned for education. Old things have passed away. The world has been nerved with a new conception. The new meaning of education has been written across its scarred and wrinkled brow. Within an amazingly short time this new conception has wrought great changes in the attitude of people and nations. New thoughts, new purposes, and new ideals have forged their way to the surface and revealed vast changes in the pulse of the world. These obvious changes have been watched with scrupulous eyes. With many there has been great rejoicing. Men have cautiously counted the steps in the change, adventurously marked the resting places, and anxiously measured the speed and space of the march. From ancient Chaldea to modern America, the change has been one of adding and subtracting, of approving and discarding, of grafting the new upon the old, that the old may be renewed with the fresh blood of the new conception. It is through these changes that we are able to blaze our way into the more hopeful things of the future. The church that fails to grasp this opportunity will be left behind in the march. The Christian Church in the far South stands on the threshold of a new day. But our highest hopes cannot be realized unless we make Bethlehem College a reality. We have in this section new territory, new men, and new ideals. Shall we not make the new meaning of education a dominating factor in shaping the conceptions of our people?

In former days the thoughts of the disciple were guided implicitly by the maxim of his master. The student was expected to think the thoughts of his teacher. And the student that could best accomplish this end was reckoned as the most promising scholar. But this is no longer true. Today the student imbibes the spirit of the institution. The painful customs of former days have been ingloriously tossed aside, and today the student is urged to build upon the foundation of worthy principles. From such a foundation will emerge the rising temple of a well-rounded education. The application of such a principle in the educational process will balance the mental powers of the student and cause him to discover his own possibilities. It will lift the robe of misconception and banish the illusion that the power to think is relegated to a favored few, or that the meaning of education was summoned out of the void and must to the void quickly return.

The denominational College will not only aid the student in his search for truth and scholarship, but will interpret for him the new meaning of these possessions and show him how to use them to the best advantage in life.

R. F. BROWN.

WHAT OBJECT SHOULD ONE HAVE IN JOINING THE CHURCH?

Their real object should be to forsake the world and worldly things and serve and glorify God. The church needs us and we need the church. Membership in the church of itself gives opportunity for witnessing for Christ, just as wearing a badge of an organization is a way of showing one's loyalty. It is a way of asking to be counted on the right side. We should be on the right side and join the church with but one true purpose in heart, that to be ready to love and serve God in sincerity and truth, by living up to our duties as best we can. We should be willing to throw ourselves unreservedly upon the altar, put on the whole armor of God, and work for our King. Christ called his followers to be witnesses for him and he expects us to confess him and glorify God.

It is the duty of each member to testify for him at any time and place the opportunity presents itself. Some have one object, that of having their names on the church roll, while others join thinking they can serve God and mammon, but we cannot serve two masters.

We are either for Him or against Him.

Man should have but three objects in life:

1. To glorify God.
2. To help his fellowman to heaven and happiness.
3. To develop himself withal and by all, to the stature and likeness of Christ.

Here is a principle on which to build and a character with which to clothe that time cannot destroy nor eternity take away. Any other principle or character is an insufficient foundation.

Let us remember there is only one church that we can join and be saved and that is the Church of God. Only one way by which we can join, and that the way of the cross.

Through faith in Jesus have our names written in the book of life. To do this we have to make a full surrender of self and consecrate our lives to God, by living and working for him, for neither life, time, talent nor money are our own. We are his slaves, for we have been bought with a price. The word tells us there are some lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof, from such, turn away. It takes grace to be a real church member; that is, one who tries to live in the likeness of his Lord. To be such a member you must be endued with power from on high. Pray for more of this Christian spirit, for an intimate touch with Jesus.

To know our duties as church members, we must carefully and prayerfully study God's word and obey the teachings thereof. Christ wants us to be humble, gentle, meek, submissive and forgiving with love serve one another. And above all, give him the first place in our heart and life. His ideal for his church has not been reached on earth yet. Do let all of us, as church members, be true to God, true to our church and true to ourselves, by fully consecrating our lives in service to our Lord, and thus be worthy of the vocation wherein we are called.

MRS. R. J. NEWTON.

Liberty (Vane.) Church.

BUYING AND SELLING.

The Word tells us that twice while our Lord was upon the earth He cleansed the Temple, driving out those who bought and sold therein. He told them His Father's house was not a house of merchandise, but it was a house of prayer. We have sometimes wondered if He would not do some cleansing and remind us that His Father's house is still a place of prayer, instead of a place of buying and selling, if He were to walk through some of our churches today. The oxen, the sheep and the doves which were being bought and sold then would not be there. But within the church have you ever seen any one sell out for popularity, or some one of questionable character bought up with prominence?

Jesus cast out the buyers and sellers, so we are told, telling them they had made His Father's house a den of thieves. There are many kinds of robbers. There are robbers of honor, robbers of character, robbers of the Christian life, and sometimes they get within the church. Woe to every one of their kind, for "it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the sea." One casting out did not stop it. They came back again, and again He cast them out. But did that stop it?

Jesus let the rich young ruler go away, He also let the multitude go rather than compromise. Our Lord knew the man or woman who, because of their money, are popular, or have influence in the world would never be able to win men to Him until they renounced the world and became not of the world. Compromising the truth or the standard of Christian life given by Jesus will never make Christians. It may make church members, but not members of the body of which He is the Head.

How many churches today would let the moral, or immoral rich man go away. Would not many of them rather give him a place of prominence to keep him and his money in the church? We once knew a church which had a deacon who was both dishonest and intemperate. It was a common thing for him to pass the emblems with the odor of liquor upon his breath. But he was very rich. Selling the Lord of lords and King of kings for a man's bank account. Buying with the prominence which a sacred office gave him a drunkard, when the Holy Spirit had it recorded that drunkards shall not inherit the Kingdom of God. Be not deceived. God is not mocked. There will be another casting out of them that bought and sold.

"What shall it profit a man though he gain the whole world and lose his own soul? What shall it profit a church though it gain money and members who know nothing of the new birth, and lose in spirituality? Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Whatsoever a church soweth that shall it also reap. I can show you today, a church which bought up with about all the prominence a church can give, (for he is one of the "rule or ruin" kind), a rich man who is untruthful, full of malice, over-reaching in business and who has been known to use church funds dishonestly more than once. Within a year after the buying and selling every young man in the Sunday School was in disgrace. There were two cases of forgery, one arrest for drunkenness, four arrests for stealing. No Sunday School superintendent or teacher can lift the young people in the school to higher ground than that upon which they stand. Whatsoever a church soweth it will also reap. Do not forget the seed which is sown, be it good or evil, will produce a harvest, forty, sixty or a hundred fold.

The Head of the church made it plain that His Father's house is to be kept free from buying and selling, and that it is to be a house of prayer. He is coming again unannounced, coming as a thief in the night. He is coming suddenly and unexpectedly. He is coming as the Judge of all the earth, and He will judge aright. Where will He find you? Will you be among those who are cast out, or will you be among those who are caught up to meet Him in the air?

FROM BROOKLYN.

I have resigned my work in Brooklyn to take charge of the new Christian Orphanage at Carversville, Penn.

Our new institutions is scheduled to open Jan. 1st. I am moving out this week to get everything in readiness for the little folks in time. This new work starts with a very bright outlook, and gives promise of large things.

I am pleased to note the wonderful progress being made with the new Christian Church enterprise in Richmond, Va.

In the near future we expect to erect a large modern church building in Brooklyn, N. Y. We have five lots on one of the most beautiful corners in this part of the city, and ten thousand dollars in cash on new enterprise. We have a very comfortable building at present, but it does not meet present day demands. We must build larger and better.

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

The Men and Millions Campaign and the causes embraced by it gain and hold their rightful place in the hearts of our people only in proportion as our preachers preach on these great Kingdom interests. The churches having the best record also have preachers who are constantly on their Campaign job.

PREACHING THE CAMPAIGN

No one human agency contributed so much to the victory in subscribing to Men and Millions as the preachers preaching the Campaign. The preacher was then and is now the key man. If the pastor preaches Men and Millions the people will work for and pay their pledges to the Movement.

Make the Victory Sure.

Our people will fall behind in their payment of the pledges if our preachers do not get under the burden again. We can go to the extraordinary session of our Convention next May with a glorious record, if our people are aroused to a full sense of their duty. We need to go to our knees for Power in these great days ahead of us, if we are to truly lead our people, pay our pledges and win out for our Lord.

Preach—Preach—Preach.

VICTORY!

REV. E. O. WATSON, Sec'y,
Federal Council of Churches,
937 Woodward Building,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir:

In your year book of the churches 1921-22, you give the Christian Church as having 97,084 members and say raised for all purposes $197,723.00. This is a gross error as the Southern Christian Convention, which is a part of the Christian Church with 28,251 members raised for all purposes last year $345,933.11. The Eastern Virginia Conference with a membership of 8,299 raised for all purposes $181,966.11. I hope that you will get more accurate statistics about our church for the year 1922 and I will be glad to assist you in any way I can so far as our work in the South is concerned. I cannot give you this information until the Christian Annual is published, which will be some time in January, 1923.

Yours very truly,
J. E. WEST.

NEWS FROM BERE A, NORFOLK COUNTY.

Last Sunday, December 3rd, at eleven o'clock A. M. Rev. B. F. Black, our pastor, gave us one of the most instructive, encouraging and inspiring sermons on Men and Millions we have ever had in this church. He based his remarks on Matt, 16:13-18 first referring to the query of Jesus, as to what the world or men generally thought of him, and then what did they, his followers, think of him. Bro Black had one of the charts that Dr. Atkinson has recently prepared and gotten out for impressiveness and inspiration, relative to our Men and Millions Movement. He beautifully pictured verbally the origin and foundation of the church and further showing what are the principles and impressions we base our faith and doctrines upon, with much earnestness and pathos he made it plain that the seven enterprises mentioned on the chart were expressions of the impressions that we, God's children, get from being loyal and faithful to Him and having fellowship with those in His service. He pleaded with us to never let Men and Millions die, for if we did it would mean the declining, if not the departure, of all we hold dear in the church. His sermon was an unceasing current of thought that would, to my mind, bring out of our hearts and lives the very best impression and sentiments within us and blend them together in such an united responsiveness that it will bring a glorious victory for Men and Millions in our church.

REUNION.

On Thanksgiving Day I had the pleasure of being in the home of Bro. W. M. Crutchfield, Guilford Co., N. C. to celebrate Thanksgiving Day together.

I was once pastor of this dear family at which time most of the children gave their hearts to the Lord, and two of the young men are now ministers, G. C. and E. H. Crutchfield. It did my heart good to be in this home and with these dear folks again.

There was present a large number of friends and several of Bro. Crutchfield's brothers and sisters and their families. We had a great Thanksgiving dinner of almost every thing good to eat, and every body seemed to enjoy it, and the social part of the program.

The following were present with their families: W. M. Crutchfield, J. R. Crutchfield, G. E. Crutchfield, R. W. Crutchfield, R. V. Crutchfield, Carl Pope, Pat Lineback, R. S. Chase, H. P. Smith, C. W. McFarland and Mrs. Jim Cane. Also Miss K. W. Webb and Mr. A. B. McFarland. Those present numbered seventy. May the good Lord bless and save them all is my prayer.

LAYMAN'S SUBSCRIPTION CAMPAIGN.

This is simply the name of the movement. It is not the purpose to limit this campaign for subscribers to the Christian Sun to the laymen of the church; but members of the Church and Sunday-school scholars, preachers and deacons, men and women, boys and girls, may all take part in this work of placing The Sun in the home of every church member. The paper is the messenger to the people and makes known the needs of every department of church work. Through it every enterprise of the church is brought to the attention of the people. And better still if the paper can be placed in other homes even beyond the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention. For through it the principles of the church can be made known to others.

The Sun as now published is equal to the best; and our people can feel confident in their belief for it is true.

The publishers of The Sun have arranged and will carry out to the letter a financial plan that will guarantee to every person the rewards or prizes herein offered for subscriptions. The amount of money to be used for this purpose is limited to ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS ($1,000.00). Three months' time will be given, beginning September 15th to December 15th, 1922. The premium for this work will constitute a handsome Christmas present, and will be worthy of your best efforts. The work of the contest may begin any time after September 15th. It will close December 15th as denoted by post mark on reports. Subscription report lists and receipt books will be sent to all who desire to engage in this campaign for new subscribers.

Send your name and reference at once, and receive the necessary report blanks and receipt books.

SCHEDULE OF SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The Sun has been greatly enlarged. The subscription price, recently reduced, is now $2.00 per year; two six months' subscriptions at $1.00 each, count as one year. Premiums will be paid as follows:

1. To one sending 100 subscriptions or more$50.00
2. To one sending 80 to 99 subscriptions. 37.50
3. To one sending 60 to 79 subscriptions. 25.00
4. To one sending 50 to 59 subscriptions. 20.00
5. To one sending 40 to 49 subscriptions. 15.00
6. To one sending 30 to 39 subscriptions. 10.00
7. To one sending 20 to 29 subscriptions. 5.00

To all solicitors will be paid 10 per cent. commission on all net subscriptions sent in during the time specified above. But those receiving prizes will not be entitled to commission.

Many persons of means, if asked, would donate a subscription to a family which does not take the paper either from lack of interest or lack of means. Such people would be helped, and might become interested in the church. Remittances made on this campaign are to be net; amounts less than $10.00 will be subject to cost of collection. Post office money orders constitute a safe plan of remittance.

Christian Orphanage

GOOD NEWS FROM THE ORPHANAGE.

DEAR FRIENDS:—

Thanksgiving was a very happy day with the Orphanage family. The Durham Ice Cream Co., Durham, N. C., made the children a present of six gallons ice cream for Thanksgiving dinner and the good ladies of the Burlington Church furnished some cakes. The matron killed some old hens that ate lots of feed and laid but few eggs, and had a real nice dinner for the little folks and all were happy and enjoyed their dinner.

Out of the ninety children we did not have a sick one and every child was able to fill its place at the table.

The boys had the day off and most of them spent it hunting. Several of our boys who have gone out came home to see us and spent Thanksgiving with us. We are always glad to have our children to come to see us. It shows that they appreciate their old home.

I know it was always a source of happiness to me to have the opportunity to go back home after I had reached manhood and had gone out in life to fight its battles and make my own living. Since I have a home of my own and a family I love my home and find no place like home. When my days work is done I am always anxious to go home. When I am away on a trip and my work is finished and I turn my face homeward the train never runs too fast for me.

The following articles have been sent in since our last letter:

Mrs. Eunice Lenagar, Turon, Kans. One box clothing.

Ladies Aid Society Graham Christian Church 23 lbs. sugar, potatoes, apples, pumpkin, can salmon etc.

Willing Workers of same church one basket fruit, one box of stick candy.

BIBLE HEALTH VERSES.

ANNA I. HELFENSTEIN, M. D.
Dean of Women, Elon College, N. C.

Ps. 67:2—That Thy way may be known upon earth, Thy saving health among all nations.

Ps. 42:11—Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God; for I shall yet praise Him Who is the health of my countenance, and my God.

Jer. 8:22.—Is there no balm in Gilead? is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered?

Jer. 8:15.—We looked for peace, (but no good came,) and for a time of health and behold trouble.

Prov. 16:24.—Pleasant words are as an honey comb, sweet to the soul, and health to the bones.

Isaiah 58:8.—Then shall thy light break forth as the morning and thine health shall spring forth speedily.

III John 2. —Behold, I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper and be in health, even as thy soul prospereth.

On Christmas day we will celebrate God's greatest gift to man. On or before that day let us Christians make sure our greatest gift to our church by paying our Men and Millions.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

MISS LUCY M. ELDREDGE, Field Secretary,

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON.

DECEMBER 24, 1922.

SUBJECT: "A Lesson in Trust and Preparedness."—Luke 12.

GOLDEN TEXT: "The life is more than food and the money than raiment."—Luke 12:23.

OR

"The Birth of Jesus." (Christmas Lesson).—Luke 2:1-20.

GOLDEN TEXT: There is born to you this day in the city of David a Savior, who is Christ the Lord.—Luke 2:11.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Isa. 32:1-8.

REFERENCE MATERIAL: Matt. 1:18-25.

Note: The teacher will choose which lesson to use, for he knows best the needs of his class. In children's classes, using the Uniform Lessons, no doubt the choice will fall upon the Christmas story of the Babe of Bethlehem, and the song of the angels and the shepherds praising God. Classes of adults may decide to use the Lesson in Trust and Preparedness as found in the twelfth chapter of Luke, the last of the lessons of the quarter in the study of the life and teachings of the Master. This may be linked with the Christmas lesson by showing the great blessings which have come to man from the words of Jesus, the best gift ever given to man. And God, in His great love, has given us many other gifts. "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall he not also with him freely give us all.

"The beginning of everything is the Cradle of Christ."—Faber.

The angels joined in a song of praise at Christ's birth. Surely they must celebrate his coming every year. May our voices join in the chorus, and with our songs and our lives may we strive to bring to the whole earth the angelic message:

"Glory to God in the highest,

And on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased."

The angels rejoice over the birth of Christ in every soul. What better time can there be to accept His love, and to give Him yourself than at the Christmas season?

"O then open your heart's closed portals,

Receiving from God above,

The Gift of the Saviour of mankind,

And send forth His wondrous love."

—Shannon.

Christmas is the birthday of the Christ. On that first Christmas Day He was the object of the shepherd's adoration, the theme of the angel's chorus, the one whom the Wise Men came far to see. Does your celebration of the Christmas-tide, honor the Christ first of all?

As the shepherd's watched their sheep, the angel appeared. Only as we are faithful to the duties near at hand, will the vision come to us. God blesses faithful service.

"And the shepherds return glorifying and praising God for all. . . . they had heard and seen." They had seen the Christ Child in the manger, and the angels from Heaven; they had heard the message of the angels, and song of the angelic choir. It is no wonder that they glorified and praised God. "Christmas is a time of song and joy for in Christ Jesus, God was brought down out of the clouds to live and dwell among men."

"Christmas stands for birth, beginning, a condition followed by wonderful growth. When Christ is born in us, it is only the beginning of an eternity of development. "(B. B. Brown). Christmas makes it possible for us to grow. The spirit of Christmas is the spirit which we need to carry us through all of the days of the whole year. The spirit of joyful praise, of loving giving, of adoration, of thoughtfulness for others, all of these would help to sweeten life. The spirit of Christmas is the Christian spirit.

"Let every heart keep its Christmas within,
Christ's pity for sorrow, Christ's hatred for sin,
Christ's care for the weakest, Christ's courage for right,
Christ's dread of the darkness, Christ's love of the light,
And everywhere, everywhere Christmas will be bright."

—Dixie Endeavor.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

DECEMBER 24, 1922.

SUBJECT: "Christmas all the Year."—Luke 2:8-20.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CHRISTMAS PLANS.

Invite every member of the church and Sunday School to your Christmas service. Invitations may be written on Christmas cards, or on cards cut from colored paper in the shape of a bell, or star.

During the meeting sing the old Christmas carols: "Silent Night," "It Came Upon the Midnight Clear;" "O, Little Town of Bethlehem;" "Joy to the World;" "Come All Ye Faithful," and any others you can get. Sing them together during the service, and then on Christmas eve, or Christmas day, go to sing them for any shut-ins in your community, or if you are near to any Alms House, or Home for the Aged, plan a Christmas visit to these. Carry the Christmas spirit in your carols as far as you can.

Many societies ask each member to bring a gift to the Christmas meeting, food or clothing or toys, to be given after the meeting for a Christmas gift to brighten the holiday of someone.

A Candle-Light meeting is effective. Make a big star out of cardboard to place in front of the Society. Place small candles around each point of the star. After the opening part of the service, put out all lights, except one candle on the organ or piano, and one on the leader's desk. Then as each member takes part, light a candle on the star. It takes all the members to make the star shine brightly.

Close the meeting with the telling of a good Christmas story. Some which are especially good are "Why the Chimes Rang"; "Her Birthday Dream"; "The Fir Tree"; "The worker in Sandalwood," or best of all just the story, told simply, of the First Christmas Day, as told in the Gospel of St. Luke.

Make your Christian Endeavor Christmas service one which will so impress the Christmas spirit of good will that your members will think of the meeting as the beginning of a year filled with deeds of kindness, in the name of the Christ.

A VISIT TO FANCY GAP.

MRS. F. E. BULLOCK.

(Note: We are glad to have this account of the people who are in our Sunday Schools in the mountains of Virginia from Mrs. Bullock's pen. The great possibilities of the work at Fancy Gap and Rocky Ford, and all through those mountainous sections, challenge our deepest interest and call for our best support and most earnest prayers, L. M. E.)

On my way home from the American Christian Convention it was my pleasure to make a trip up into the mountains to visit our mountain mission work under the supervision of my old-time friend, Miss Iola Hedgepeth, now Mrs. J. Russel Meredith. Mrs. Meredith met me in Mt. Airy and we went together to her home in the mountains, riding in a truck in which a young man had carried a load of cabbage to the markets at Winston-Salem, sixty miles away. On our way we met ox teams coming down to Mt. Airy, which had been on the road all day and were still miles from their destination.

Mrs. Meredith lives in what was the old school house, a one-room building which her husband has fixed over into a living room. The first night I was there the wind blew a gale all night. Sometimes I thought the building would surely go down before it, but they told me that there was not much wind for "on top of the mountain." I find there is a very definite distinction made between "down in the mountain" and "up on top." A mountain has an elevation of about three thousand feet and the top is a broad plateau covered with knobs and valleys, among which people raise such crops as will do well at that height. Cabbage seems to be the main money making crop.

The next day I visited the new school house with its groups of children studying under the efficient leadership of Mrs. Meredith and Miss Midyett. Mrs. Meredith has the first four or five grades and her children range in age from six to twenty-two. Miss Midyett teaches the older pupils. Among her pupils is a teacher in the mountain Sunday School some distance away who is striving to secure a better education. I told Bible stories to these groups of boys and girls, which they seemed to enjoy most heartily.

On Thursday night, in company with Miss Midyett and three of the older pupils from the school, I went "down the mountain" to visit the Sunday School at Rocky Ford begun by Miss Clemmer of Eaton, Ohio. It is five miles by the road from the Fancy Gap School, and is, they tell me, by far the best Sunday School of any so far begun. The people certainly love Miss Clemmer and ask about her of anyone who can give them any information. A Mr. Rigney has built an addition on his house, 8 by 12 feet, and in this the Sunday School and Singing Class are held. In this building are a few chairs, an old organ, but the main seats are boards laid across blocks of wood. The night I was there twenty-six people had gathered for singing gospel hymns. They told me if they had known I was coming they would have had a "house full."

I stayed over night in this house where I was made most cordially welcome. The main room of the home has no windows, securing its light from the fire place or the open door-way. I slept in the room above which was in the peak of the roof and is the room which was occupied by Miss Gladys Lankford during her weeks of teaching this summer.

This little school is really doing a splendid work. I returned there for their Sunday service and found more than fifty people waiting to welcome me. They could not all get into the little room so I stood in the door way to speak so that all might hear. We had services on Friday and Saturday nights in the Fancy Gap school house, also Sunday School Sunday morning. As they were used to having Sunday School in the afternoon, not many turned out for the morning service, but they all seemed very much in earnest, and very enthusiastic for the work done by Miss Hedgpeeth or Mrs. Meredith. One of the mountain men said to me: "There is no way of telling what she has done for us; you would just have to live here and see it."

The people are not all poor. Some are well-to-do, but some are desperately poor. When it takes a full day to go to Mount Airy, the nearest town, and another day to return, it is evident not much contact with the world is had. New plans are being made for better roads, and some of those, who are more able, are securing trucks in which to haul their produce, and there is hope for a new day dawning for these mountains. Strange to say, the feeling seems to exist that one of the best things which ever happened to this section was the Hillsville tragedy, and the realization that those who are brought up in a Godless community will make Godless men and women. One man said to me, "I tell my boys they have got to go to school, and they've got to learn the law; if they don't learn it in the school, they'll most likely learn it in the penitentiary."

The means of making extra money in this section are extremely limited, and the prices paid for such work as can be done are ridiculously small. Women make the small tobacco sacks which are filled down in the plains, and I judge that by working industrially about ten hours a day, a woman might, after she was trained in the work, make thirty or thirty-five cents per day. This seems to be a fair average price for such forms of labor.

Mrs. Meredith's work is not done when the school house doors are closed. She has general oversight of the work and acts rather in the capacity of Mother-Advisor of the whole community. As, for instance, one evening a little girl came in with a great sore upon her foot. Mrs. Meredith gave her explicit directions for cleansing and sterilizing the wound upon her return home, and also gave her some salve to put upon the sore, with directions for bandaging it and caring for it. The mountain women come to her for help in cooking, for fashions, and in fact for advice along all lines.

It seems to me that the two greatest needs of the work at present are these: First, a class for new converts. People have joined the churches with but the vaguest ideas as to what church membership really means and what Christian character is. They are "babes in Christ" in the most literal sense of the work. They need instruction as to what the church and God will expect from them. For instance it does not seem to have occurred to any of them that giving is a part of the Christian life. Yet, while some are apparently unable to give anything, others could and should give toward the support of the work. That they will give when taught to do so, is, I think, evidenced by the gifts of fruit, vegetable, nuts, etc., continually brought to Mrs. Meredith and Miss Midyett.

Second; a dormitory where boys and girls living too far away to walk back and forth might remain under the care of a matron, to be taught the principles of housekeeping and home making by actual experimentation. I saw one woman of middle life in the mountains who had good teeth.

I cannot but think that part of this is caused by faulty diet, as well as by the neglect of the teeth, one woman expressed it to me: "We fry everything we eat, exceptin' the coffee," and her daughter reminded her, "Oh no! we roast the coffee in the frying pan, too." It is evident that good training along this line might be made to mean a great deal for the homes of the future.

As an instance of how impossible it is for some of these children to attend schools now, let me say it took us over an hour to go "down the mountain" from Fancy Gap to the Rocky Ford Sunday School, and this was through a cut-off where the road was exceedingly steep, and where we climbed fences, scrambled through bramble patches and took advantage of every semblance of a road which existed. On my return the next day, I went around by the road, which is about five miles, two and one-half miles of this being to "the top of the mountain" or Fancy Gap proper, a little better than two miles from the school. I walked one and one-half miles of this, and rode on a lumber wagon for a mile, and it took us just one hour to cover the two and one-half miles. I think I could have out-walked the horses at that. It is evident that even mountain boys and girls used to this manner of walking could not possibly cover these distances in bad weather, or when the snow lies deep upon the mountains, and yet, in the family where I stayed at Rocky Ford are two bright, intelligent girls who by all means should be in school, and scattered through the valleys are others who would gladly go to school if they could.

I am more than glad for this opportunity of visiting our work, and I wish it might be so arranged as to make the mountain work a work in which the entire church was interested. These people are splendid men and women, with wonderful possibilities, and it seems to me to be a place where the whole church is needed to cover the whole of the task.

"Thousands would rather start a new year without a calendar than without a new 'Tarbell's.'"

G. Campbell Morgan:

"Amazes me by its inspirational and educational advantage to any teacher."

Marion Lawrance:

"The best, most complete, most practical and most satisfactory lesson help."

Alexander Whyte:

"All the help needed by any teacher."

Margaret Slattery:

"Know of nothing better. . . . I use it personally in my work."

John Henry Jowett:

"Of great service to Sunday School teacher—exceedingly well done."

A Teaching Necessity

The recent International Sunday School Convention, in emphasizing the need for BETTER Sunday School instruction, paved the way for "Tarbell's Guide" as a necessity in every school!

Superior

to all other Helps in teaching value, ability, comprehensiveness, and modern appeal. "Tarbell's Guide" raises the international system clear above the objections of its critics, and is the logical teachers' help to-day!

Larger by far

than any other Lesson Handbook, full to overflowing with modern suggestions, "Tarbell's Guide" is now a necessity to all who would apply latest teaching methods and discoveries to Sunday School Lesson presentation.

WHO IS CONQUERING?

Richard Morris was hesitating between the ministry and the life of a business man.

Richard's father was a minister, and one evening he frankly confessed his growing distrust of his personal faith, and especially of the real power of Jesus in a world that is full of tremendous evil.

The father was a wise man; he calmly said:

"Will you honestly accept proof that Christianity is the greatest power in the world today if I can give it to you?"

"I certainly will, father; that is what I want."

"Well, then, do we have any terrible sins or vices on earth now that were not here when Jesus was born?"

The young man hesitated.

"I don't know of any."

"When Jesus was born there were drunkenness, slavery, impurity, greed, cruelty, child labor, tramping on womanhood, war, and every phase of human selfishness. Does not history show that?"

"Yes, beyond a doubt."

"Is it not also true that, although these wrongs still exist, there is a deep, earnest protest against them?"

"Yes, that is so."

"From whom do these protests come?"

The son was silent. He had studied history carefully, and saw what his father's argument was.

"Does it not come almost entirely from Christians, from people who have know the name of Jesus? Can you think of a single group of suffering humanity anywhere today that some other group is not trying to help, to lift up, or heal?"

No, father I cannot."

"At the heart of the world's best life you will always find the spirit of Jesus Christ. Once there was no protest, or very little against the wrongs that are done in the world. Now there is a mighty protest. Christianity has wrought this miracle. It is creating new standards of life among men. You cannot account for all the wonderful changes in the heart of man except through Jesus and the religion He taught.

And after a long silence the son answered quietly, "I see that, father."

A LIE MUST DIE
BY HOWARD W. POPE.

A lie is surely an awful thing,
And should be viewed with alarm;
Where'er it goes it leaveth a sting,
Which produces untold harm.

A lie doth poison the very air,
And all partake of this cup;
Like thistle down it flies everywhere,
And who can gather it up.

A lie can run all the world around,
While truth putteth on her shoes;
But while the lie may have a good sound,
We prefer the Truth for news.

A lie induced the first man to sin,
And caused the death of our Lord;
But the Truth is always sure to win,
According to God's own word.

CHURCHILL

Mrs. Jane Churchill, widow of the late William Churchill, departed this life on October 22, 1922, at the age of 72 years. The following members of her immediate family survive her: two sons, Thomas and Webb, one daughter, Mrs. Green, one brother and one sister.

She was a member of Martha's Chapel Christian Church for many years, and we believe that she lived the best she knew.

In the presence of a large number of relatives and friends, the writer conducted the funeral services from the church above mentioned.

B. J. HOWARD.

DIED

Mrs. L. A. Goodman departed this life Nov. 24th, 1922, aged 90 years, 1 month and 20 days.

She was a charter member of North Highland Christian Church, and will be greatly missed, however, in her declining years she was too feeble to attend church, but was a devout Christian. She leaves to mourn their loss, three sons and four daughters and a host of friends. Services were conducted at North Highland Christian Church by the writer. She was laid to rest in Riverdale Cemetery. May our dear heavenly Father bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

A. H. SHEPPARD.

DIED

Richard Ruffin Holmes, for many years a devout member of the Christian Church at Pope's Chapel, Franklin Co., N. C., ended his pilgrimage in the ninety third year at the old Holmes Homestead, Nov. 28th, 1922. Three living children, thirteen grand-children and three great grand-children survive. Funeral services took place from the residence. Congregation large, day beautiful, flowers in profusion, Masonic rites, remains deposited in the family cemetery near residence. Dr. Harris, the children and neighbors ministered to the aged pilgrim tenderly and lovingly until he closed his eyes in death's slumber.

D. A. L.

DIED

Mrs. Sarah Jane May died at Elon College, N. C., Nov. 28, 1922, aged 90 years. The funeral was conducted at Shallow Ford Church by Rev. J. D. Andrews and the writer. Mrs. May was the daughter of Frederick A. and Esther Williams and widow of Washington May. She leaves three children, Mrs. George Saul, Mrs. Anderson Sharp and Theodore Atha May and twelve grand and great grand-children. The deceased was a member of Shallow Ford Christian Church and was characterized by a strong religious faith. May the comfort of the Holy Spirit rest upon her loved ones.

THOMAS

At the age of 23 years, 1 month and 23 days, Miss Bessie Caro Thomas, daughter of Mr. Charlie Thomas, New Hill, Rt. 2, fell asleep November 26, 1922, after an illness lasting more than a year.

She was a patient sufferer; always considerate of those upon whom she depended for attention. She had been a member of New Elam Christian Church since early childhood, and was ever regarded as one of its most consecrated members.

Many sorrowing friends attended the funeral which was held from the above named church on the day following her death.

Her father and one sister are left alone in the home.

WHITE

A long delayed tribute to my friend and Bro W. H. White, who died September 7th, 1922, age about 85 years. Bro. White professed religion when a boy and united with the Christian Church at Hank's Chapel, and when the war between the States came on he volunteered and went to the front and remained there during the years that tried the souls of men. He came home with a minnee ball in one of his eyes, which one of his neighbors removed, not a physician. When Center Grove Christian Church was organized he became a charter member and was elected deacon.

Bro. White was a plain, faithful christian gentleman of the old school. He leaves to mourn their loss four children, Rev. T. E. White, Sanford, N. C.; Grover C. White, of Siler City, N. C., and Misses Notie and Ora White, who live at the old home place near Center Grove. Funeral by writer, assisted by his pastor, Rev. B. J. Howard. Verily a good and brave man has gone to his reward. God bless the bereaved ones.

HEARNE

Elsie, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charlie Hearne, died November 27, 1922, at the age of 2 years, 2 months and 15 days. A throat trouble was the cause of its death. Its suffering was intense, but of short duration.

Little Elsie was the only daughter of the home, and was a child of unusual intelligence and sweetness of disposition.

A goodly number of sympathizing friends gathered with the grief stricken parents for the funeral service and burial at New Elam Church on the day following its death.

May the Lord's comforting presence be sufficient for these bleeding hearts and broken spirits.

DIED

At Williamsburg, Va., Dec. 1st, 1922, Mr. Mills V. Bracy, aged 78 years, 9 months and 16 days. He went through the Civil War. He was with Gen. R. E. Lee when he surrendered to Gen. Grant. He was a devoted father, a good neighbor and a faithful friend. He was brought home and on Monday, Dec. 4th, his remains were laid to rest in the family cemetery. He leaves four children, two sons, Mr. Mills E. Bracy and Mr. R. S. Bracy, of Zuni, Va., and Mrs. W. H. Braswell, of Windsor, Va., Mrs. Carr Munford, of Zuni, Va., thirteen grand-children, one great grand-child and many friends. The Lord be with and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

SMITH

The spirit of little Francis Watts, the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Smith, Chapel Hill, N. C., took its flight November 5, 1922.

The death of this child would not have been a surprise at any time during the two months of its earthly stay; yet its passing brought grief to the parents.

DEATH

Mr. James H. Murry departed this life on the seventeenth day of Nov., 1922. He had lived to a ripe old age, being more than eighty years old. He joined Catawba Springs Christian Church early in life, and I think was one of the charter members. After holding his membership there for a number of years he moved to Plymouth Christian Church where he remained a member until his death.

A more devout Christian man would be hard to find, and it seemed that all who knew him believed in his Christianity. He was a man of faith and prayer and believed much in assurance of his salvation.

He leaves a host of friends and several sons and daughters, besides grand-children to miss him. May the Lord bless and keep these to meet him again.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT REV. J. W. PINNIX

The North Carolina Conference, in session at Hines' Chapel, McLeansville, N. C., November 16, 1922, notes with sorrow the death of our brother, Rev. J. W. Pinnix, which occurred at his home in Kernersville, N. C., March 8, 1922, at the age of seventy-seven years.

Whereas, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to take from our midst and his labors, Brother Pinnix, therefore, be it resolved:

First, That we bow in humble submission to the will of Him Who doeth all things well.

Second, That in the death of Brother

Pinnix the Christian Church has lost a faithful member and loyal worker.

Third, That we extend to the bereaved family our deepest sympathy in their great sorrows.

Fourth, That we shall cherish the memory of Brother Pinnix; and that these resolutions be spread on the minutes of this Conference and a copy sent to the bereaved family.

Christmas Day

"And Suddenly there was with the Angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God"—Luke 2:13.

What sudden blaze of song
Spreads o'er th' expanse of Heaven?
In waves of light it thrills along,
Th' angelic signal given—
"Glory to God!" from yonder central fire
Flows out the echoing lay beyond the starry choir;

Like circles widening round
Upon a clear blue river,
Orb after orb, the wondrous sound
Is echoed on forever:
"Glory to God on high, on earth be peace,
And love towards men of love, salvation and release."

Yet stay, before thou dare
To join that festal throng;
Listen and mark what gentle air
First stirred the tide of song;
'Tis not, "the Saviour born in David's home,
To whom for power and health obedient worlds should come."

'Tis not, "the Christ the Lord"—
With fixed adoring look
The choir of Angels caught the word,
Nor yet their silence broke;
But when they heard the sign, where Christ should be,
In sudden light they shone and heavenly harmony.

Wrapped in His swaddling bands,
And in His manger laid,
The Hope and Glory of all lands
Is come to the world's aid;
No peaceful home upon His cradle smiled,
Guests rudely went and came, where slept the royal Child.

But where Thou dwellest, Lord,
No other thought should be,
Once duly welcomed and adored,
How should I part with Thee?
Bethlehem must lose Thee soon, but Thou wilt grace
The single heart to be Thy sure abiding-place.

Thee, on the bosom laid
Of a pure Virgin mind,
In quiet ever, and in shade,
Shepherd and sage may find;
They, who have bowed untaught to Nature's sway,
And they, who follow Truth along her star-paved way.

The pastoral spirits first Approach Thee, Babe divine,
For they in lowly thoughts are nursed,
Meet for Thy lowly shrine;
Sooner than they should miss where Thou dost dwell, Angels from Heaven will stoop to guide them to Thy cell.

Still, as the day comes round
For Thee to be revealed,
By wakeful shepherds Thou art found,
Abiding in the field.
All through the wintry heaven and chill night air,
In music and in light Thou dawnest on their prayer.

O faint not ye for fear—
What though your wandering sheep,
Reckless of what they see and hear,
Lie lost in wilful sleep?
High Heaven in mercy to your sad annoy
Still greets you with glad tidings of immortal joy.

Think on th' eternal home,
The Saviour left for you;
Think on the Lord most holy, come
To dwell with hearts untrue;
So shall ye tread untired His pastoral ways,
And in the darkness sing your carol of high praise.

NOTES-PERSONALS

Rev. E. B. Flory, pastor of the First Church, Berkley Ward, Norfolk, Va., promises that sermon he preached at the Eastern Virginia Conference in November, shall be forth coming very soon. Keep an eye on its appearance and read it.

Through Bro. J. M. Lambeth, we learn that the Rev. J. A. Ledbetter has accepted a call to the pastorate of the Reidsville Christian Church for full time service and has already begun his labors. Bro. Ledbetter is a man of ability and we wish for him and the Reidsville Church great usefulness in their united labors. Reidsville is an inviting field for a man who is not afraid of hard work.

The News Leader of Richmond gives a portrait of Rev. W. T. Walters, D. D., pastor of the Richmond Christian Church and announces that he has been elected secretary of the Ministerial Union of that City. We feel sure our brother will well represent our people in his work in the city and one evidence that we are right is the fact that the Ministerial Union of Richmond has called him to serve them as secretary.

Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., says he has never missed an appointment of his own making in all his ministry. That is a remarkable record for a ministry running through fifty years or more. Can any other minister in the Christian Church maintain such a record? We should like to know. Such regularity in making appointments and meeting them is to be most highly commended. Who else has such a record? Can you name the man who has?

The venerable Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D., a man greatly beloved wherever he is known, although in the ninety-seventh year of his age, is still refusing to be placed on the shelf. He is soon to make a visitation to the Masonic Home for Aged People at Greensboro, N. C., where he will seek to lead the aged ones into the light of the way of life. God bless His aged servant as he seeks to help the needy ones so near to the sunset of life and may he gain many sheaves to lay at the Master's feet, when his day's work is done.

The Secretaries of the Various Conferences in the Southern Christian Convention are requested to forward their conference proceedings to the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Henderson, N. C., if they wish to get the Annual any time soon. In preparing the minutes please do not use abbreviated words such as S. C. C. for the Southern Christian Convention, or A. L. for something which no one but your self understands. Please be prompt in sending in copy and by all means do not pile it in on us during the Christmas holidays. It is quite enough to be overrun with work, but to push on us during the Christmas holidays, and so refuse us even a breathing spell, is quite a cruelty, perhaps a thoughtless cruelty, but a cruelty all the same.

Rev. B. J. Earp, Newport News, Va., says: "Many of our people express to me their appreciation of THE SUN. We held our Church Day Dec. 3. Men and Millions was discussed, along with the general topics of the church. Several have expressed since that day their determination to pay every dollar of their pledges. Yesterday, Dec. 10, we held a splendid Junior Endeavor Rally. Fifty-one of our Juniors were present and forty visitors. Four other societies of the city met us. "That is an encouraging message from the church at Newport News. We consider the attendance of fifty-one members with forty visitors is quite a good showing. If they will just stand with the society and make it active, the day will come when it will wield a great influence for the cause of our Newport News Church.

Rev. G. D. Hunt wants to know what about getting out THE ANNUAL this year. The Publication Committee of the Southern Christian Convention has recently authorized Prof. P. J. Kernodle, the managing Editor of THE SUN, to publish the Annual this year while they have put the editorial responsibility on the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, who may be addressed at Henderson, N. C. All matters for THE ANNUAL should be addressed to him. Do not delay sending, as the delay of one conference will delay the appearance of THE ANNUAL not a little, and then some one will be wishing to know, Why in the world is the Annual so long delayed? Well, it would not be so long delayed, we think, if the manuscript of the matter which is to go in to its pages, were given to us in good time.

Chaplain Rountree is preparing for the columns of THE CHRISTIAN SUN an article on, MY PARISH, in which he will tell our readers of the varied duties which fall to him in the service of Uncle Sam. We are very glad to have him do this so that our readers may know something of the life and work of a Chaplain. We are quite sure that many will have their notions of the work of Chaplain changed. He has not only important and exacting duties to perform, but he has many duties of the highest importance to the men under the control of Uncle Sam. Because of the many who know almost nothing of these varied duties and the necessity for them, we are very glad to have Bro. Rountree give the facts to our readers. We wonder if Bro. Elder could not do similar service by writing an article which shall set before our readers a definite idea of the work he is called upon to do as Chaplain in the United States Navy.

"From your hand, at least I guess it was from your hand, I received a copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN—one of the most spicy, newsy and up to date Christian Journals that it has been my lot to read. For this present I assure you I am very grateful. I am sure I wish you the very best of success. I know by your ability, fitness, integrity and sense of right and wrong that THE CHRISTIAN SUN will be all that its many patrons wish it to be. You have my prayers and best wishes for your success—A. J. YOHEY, Muncie, Ind. No, brother, the copy of THE CHRISTIAN SUN you received was not sent by the editor, but by some other kind hand. Since you appreciate it, we wish we had sent it. Bro. Yohey is an old friend and stood by us in the trying days of service in Ohio. It is a real help to know that he is still in the land of the living and service for God and the right. Stand there, brother, till the work of life has been finished, and then we hope to meet again in the better country."

One of the South's able political leaders has been called home to give an account of his stewardship. Gen. Luke E. Wright, formerly Secretary of War and ex-Governor of the Philippines, died at his home, in Memphis, Tenn., on November 17th. General Wright was a native of Tennessee. He was a Democrat in politics, but was first appointed to Federal office by President McKinley, who named him a member of the Phillipine Commission. Later he became vice-governor and then governor general of the islands. He resigned the latter position in 1906 to become Ambassador to Japan. During the year he spent in Tokyo he handled a number of delicate situations arising from California's protest against the "open door" as it applied to Japanese immigration. He resigned as Ambassador to become Secretary of War in President Roosevelt's cabinet. Following his resignation from this office he spent several months in world travel, afterwards returning and resuming the practice of law in Memphis. General Wright was of Scotch parentage, being the son of Judge Archibald Wright, for many years chief of the Tennessee Supreme Court. In addition to Federal offices held, General Wright was for a number of years attorney general of Tennessee. During the yellow fever epidemic of 1878 he remained in Memphis and directed relief work.

WHAT ABOUT THESE NEW DEPARTURES?

I believe one danger to the church in these days is the desire on the part of many to do some new things, or bring about some new change, not because such a thing is necessary, or the change needed, but just to be doing something new.

This desire affects not only the conduct, but undermines the faith of men. For example, to believe the Bible is God's word, that Jesus is the Son of God, that one must be born again in order to be saved, are old truths, and many are turning away from them to the newer, or modern idea, that the Bible is just one of the many good books, and men don't have to be born again to be saved, and that Jesus, after all, was just a good man.

I believe if the church is to succeed, she must stand by the definite fundamental truths, that the Bible is the Word of God, that Jesus is the divine Son of God and man's only Saviour, and that we can make real progress only in proportion as we recognize His program for our lives.

I believe that one of the mistakes of our Christian Church in the past has been the over-emphasizing of our fifth Cardinal Principle, and a too little emphasis on the other four great principles of our church. The fifth principle when taken with the other four is all right, but when taken alone, and apart from the other four Principles, it loses some of its greatness. I have known people to claim the right to do certain things that were un-Christian, basing that right on that fifth Principle of our church. I have also observed that men make the same claim for new ideas, whether they are in keeping with the Bible or not.

Would it not be wise for our church to lay a new emphasis on our principles, Christ our only Head, the Bible our only rule of faith and practice, and Christian Character the test of fellowship, and the other two principles will then naturally come in, and continue to prove their right to live.

We must get closer together as a church, there must be a new loyalty among our people to our church, each church, and each member of each church must recognize that they are a part of the whole church, before we can go forward as we ought. And I know of no better way to bring about this result, than to emphasize anew that Christ is our Leader, the Bible our rule of faith and practice, and that Christian Character is our test of fellowship.

THE VIRGIN BIRTH.

The day of real conflict over vital issues is upon us. The enemies of the gospel no more care to waste their strength in attacking mere personal opinions—they are seeking to pull down the strongholds of truth, such as have been given to us through inspired men. Years ago much was said of "Falling from grace," or "foreordination, predestination and election," together with other thought of like character, but now these questions are rarely mentioned: The so called scholars and big men are reaching after bigger matters. They no longer give themselves to such ideas as are not vital to the very life of Christianity, but to the strongholds of the truth of Bible teaching. You do not hear of scholars now undertaking to settle the question of the mode of baptism, falling from grace, foreordination, predestination and election. Now they are tackling bigger questions—bigger as they call them. The favorite points of discussion are along the lines of the fundamental truths of Christianity, such as the Virgin Birth of Jesus, Deity of Christ, Miracles, Atonement, the resurrection of our Lord, and many others of like character, such as constitute the ground work and pillars of the truth. There seems to be no question as to the purpose of these men, many of them preachers of the Word of God. Any man who attacks the ground and pillar of the truth is beyond all reasonable doubt the enemy of Christianity, and as such they seek its overthrow in the substitution of human teaching for divine revelation.

One of the first things they do is to reduce the character and standing of Jesus to the level of a mere man. A good many of them hold that He was ignorant and therefore did not know the truth, as to many things that were said to have been declared by Him. If they can get the people to believe that Jesus did not know what He was talking about, when He was giving out some of these vital truths, then may some be led astray.

One of these truths, which they have so violently attacked is the Virgin Birth of Jesus. They hold that such a thing is unreasonable—that it is the outgrowth of tradition, or superstition, or ignorance. If you produce the testimony of the gospels themselves, they immediately declare that most of the New Testament writers have nothing to say touching such a thought, and therefore, notwithstanding the very explicit statement of Matthew and Luke, they decide that it is impossible to think of such a thing as Mark and John and the Apostle Paul having nothing to say to such a birth, and at once they concluded that the Virgin Birth is a myth—that there is nothing to it, and they do in the face of the fact that Matthew and Luke both declare the doctrine in the plainest possible terms.

Let us hear the utterance of Matthew bearing on this subject. He says: "But while he thought on these things, behold the angels of the Lord appeared unto him in a dream, saying: "Joseph, thou son of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife: for that which is conceived in her is of the Holy Ghost. And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call His name JESUS; for He shall save His people from their sins"—Matt. 1:20-21.

Do you wish any plainer language than this? Then let us turn to Luke, 1:35, and read as follows: "And the angel answered and said unto her, The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the highest shall overshadow thee: Therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." Is that not plain enough? Suppose two of the Apostles did not mention the Virgin Birth, what of that? Two others did mention it and declared it as plainly as human language can make it. Suppose two did not mention the fact, even then two others did mention it and in very plain language and in an emphatic way. If the Holy Ghost saw fit to use Matthew and Luke to state the fact, why might He not do it, without subjecting Deity Himself to the indignity of the doubt of His Word? So far as we know there is no reason to believe that God ever promised that every truth announced to man should so be announced by all the four Evangelists. Two of them announced the truth of the Virgin Birth of Jesus, why was it necessary to have it repeated by the other two? No one can answer that, indeed, no one would try to dispute it unless it was an infidel, or a modernist.

But why should any man seek to establish such a claim? Oh, it seems to be the ambition of some to deprive the world of a divine Savior, and when they have done that, what have they accomplished? Nothing but to plunge the world into deeper darkness and ruin. Do you doubt the statement? If they establish the fact that Jesus was the bastard son of Joseph and Mary, that at once deprives man of a Savior, for we know that no ordinary man can save fallen humanity. It is clear then that if Jesus can save to the uttermost them that come to God, through Him, He must be more than man—He must be divinely endued from on high.

Many seem to doubt that God could, or would, make a man as he is supposed to have done in the case of Jesus. Anselm, one of the ancient fathers in the church, said that God could make a man in any one of four ways, viz.: "From a man and woman, as constant custom shows; From neither man or woman, as in the case of Adam; From a man without a woman, as in the case of Eve; or from a woman without a man, as in the case of the Son of God." No doubt that Jesus was brought into this world, as a man, without a man, but through Mary. This being true, Jesus had the qualifications that no other man in history has had to become the Savior of the world. The Holy Ghost was His father and Mary was His mother. His Virgin Birth, therefore, becomes the basis of humanity and of His divinity, and putting the power of the human and the divine together, we have a being at once unique and qualified by His lowly human nature to reach down to man and lift him up to God and at the same time reach up to God and command the powers of the world to come to rest on man unto his salvation in Christ.

When a man talks of there being no such thing as a Virgin Birth, let him keep in mind that his plea has nothing else in it but to deprive all humanity of the power of salvation, and if that power be taken away, then it is woe indeed to man, for there is no other way to have salvation, even imputed to him. Verily we may say if there be no Virgin Birth, then there is no salvation, and we of all men are most miserable. When a man says there is no such thing as a Virgin Birth, he is either speaking ignorantly, or blasphemously, and either case he is not at all fitted to be a teacher of the sons and daughters of men. We consider the Virgin Birth as a basal fact in the plan of salvation. Let us keep it there, till He comes.

UPON WHAT DO YOU DEPEND IN THE TIME OF A STORM?

We ask this question because we wish our readers to answer it. But before you answer this question, we ask that you will read this article to the end and then tell us upon what you depend for guidance and safety when you are battling with the mad storms of human passion and human thought. Do you depend upon yourself? Do you depend on human opinion as to what course you will take and upon what you will depend for guidance in the time of conviction.

That you may learn to be careful and discriminate closely in choosing your guide over the uneven ways of life, we ask that you will read of the mistakes others have made, and we wish that you may notice in each instance that these misguided people were put out of the way in their thought by choosing a wrong dependence in shaping their ways. The North Carolina Christian Advocate presents the point we wish you to study before you give your answer. It says:

"Copernicus in the sixteenth century taught contrary to existing belief that the earth is not the center of the universe, but that the earth and planets revolve around the sun. Martin Luther denounced him as a fool for writing thus in defiance of the Scriptures, and Melancthon insisted that such mischievous doctrines should be suppressed by secular power. Poor old Galileo, though a devout Catholic, suffered to the end of his long life the inquisitorial powers of Rome for daring to teach that the earth moved around the sun and other notions about the stellar universe as previously set forth by Copernicus. Furthermore, the Roman Catholic Church condemned the Copernican astronomy and up to 1822 it remained a damnable heresy in the edicts of Roman Catholicism to teach that the earth went round the sun."

Now can you guess why these great men went astray in their thoughts as to the great questions in which they were so deeply interested? I think we may. Why did Martin Luther make the mistake of calling Copernicus a fool? Was he not depending upon the Bible for the attitude he held? Undoubtedly he was. Then why did he make a wrong conclusion. It was not because he did not depend on the most dependable element in human thought, but because he misinterpreted its statements. Why did Melancthon make a similar mistake? Undoubtedly for the same reason. They did not in that early day get a right viewpoint and they were misled. Why was it that Galileo was made to suffer because of his teachings. It was undoubtedly ignorance on the part of the men and women who stood against him. Thus we are able to see clearly that we need to know the facts involved before we get too far. Well, but did not Luther, Melancthon and others who made these mistakes know their Bibles? Yes, in part they did, but in part they did not. The light of their day had not made clear to their minds the meaning of many of the things on which they were sitting in judgment, and consequently they failed to get the truth. The Bible was correct, if only they had understood it. The editor of The North Carolina Christian Advocate seems to insist that because the Bible is a book of religion that it is not a book of science. We make the statement boldly and fearlessly that the Bible is the most accurate book in the world on the facts and principles of science. Some of our beloved confreres hold that the Bible is a book of religion and not of science. We go a step further and say that the Bible is the most dependable in matters of science of any book with which we are acquainted. Of course, it does not deal with every phase of modern science, but on many matters it does, and we do thoroughly believe it is the most reliable for accurate information of any of the books written.

A little later we mean to show that this statement is not a mere fancy, but a reality. Therefore, taking in the situation with reference to science and the Bible, we wish to say that the Bible and the science it teaches is the most reliable guide within the reach of man. Whenever modern science takes a stand against the Bible, we take a stand against modern science. God is the author of the Bible and at the same time the author of all true science, and of necessity they cannot be in opposition, the one to the other. So after all, in choosing a guide in the matters of human life, let us stand by the BIBLE, first, last, and all the time. It is the only safe guide in human life for the men and women who mean to be true to God and true science and the Inspired Word of God. Here let us rest for a time, assured that God is always true.

A MISLEADING LIGHTHOUSE.

Of all the dangerous things in human life, we know of not many things that are more dangerous than a false lighthouse. On a dangerous coast a false lighthouse may wreck many a passing ship and destroy the lives of thousands of men and women and children, just because it was taking the place of a lighthouse, but was in fact not a lighthouse at all. You see when a thing calls itself a lighthouse and puts itself in the place of a lighthouse, there are many people who will without investigation take it for a lighthouse and undertake to depend on it for safety, and so be led to ruin. That is all literally true in our modern civilization and no doubt many have been misled by false lighthouses on the shore, bordering on the pathway of life.

One of our exchanges tells of a most interesting case of this kind in another sphere. It declares that a certain Bishop in the Episcopal Church fought prohibition and so himself became a false lighthouse and led many to go wrong as to the prohibition of the liquor traffic. A Bishop of course was supposed to be capable of giving out the true light, and no doubt he was capable, but he failed to do it. Rather he presented the darkness of this world and so directed many in the narrow way that leads to death.

This fact suggests the importance of true lighthouses all along the shores of time. Every Christian is to let his light shine, and in so far as he does, he becomes a true lighthouse, pointing men and women in the way of life. In so far as he takes the place of a lighthouse and then fails to reflect from his own life and thought the true light, he becomes a false lighthouse and leads men and women astray. The preacher, the teacher, all men who go out as light-bearers and then give a false light, they are themselves false lighthouses, doing great damage to the people who may come under their influence. Well, did Jesus say: Let your light shine that men may see your good works and so glorify your Father which is in Heaven. Your light may be a small one, but if it is big enough to look like a lighthouse, you will do well to be careful of how your light shines, or you may come to be a false lighthouse, and so lead people to ruin on the rocks of sin and selfishness.

THE STAR OF BETHLEHEM.

By REV. CLARENCE H. BENSON, KOBE, JAPAN.

What was the star of Bethlehem? Was it just like the other brilliant orbs that stud the sky?

Much has been written upon this subject, but as a student of the stars I have many reasons for believing that it was a natural phenomenon rendered spectacular by the time in which it appeared.

Not that I have any doubt that it could have been a supernatural occurrence but because the natural is perfectly rational. God frequently uses the natural rather than the supernatural to accomplish His purpose.

First of all, the star was not in the east. If it had been, the wise men necessarily would have come from Europe or Africa, or more directly, from the depths of the Mediterranean. When I was a boy I could not straighten out the directions, but it is very simple when we read the passage, "the star of the east." The star appeared to the people east of Bethlehem but it was in reality in the western part of the sky. The translation would be less misleading if the text read, "The star which they saw while they were in the east."

Kepler's Discovery

In December, 1603, Kepler noted a conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn joined in March by Mars. These three journey together until October when they were further distinguished as a mark of interest by the appearance of a brilliant new star which gradually faded, disappearing entirely in February, 1605.

Kepler calculated that Jupiter and Saturn were similarly in conjunction during the year 6 B. C., in the constellation Pisces, Mars having again joined them the following year.

Subsequently astronomers have corrected Kepler's data with the result that we know positively that in 7 B. C. there were three conjunctions of the two great major planets in May, September and December, in the constellation Pisces.

Hence it is supposed that the Wise Men who were students of the stars and also had a knowledge of Jewish prophecy, associated the two in May, and upon their second conjunction in September, started for Judea or the "fish land" suggested by the constellation in which the phenomena took place.

Before they arrived at Jerusalem the planets separated, but upon leaving Herod in December, to their great delight, they perceived for the third time that the planets were united and Mars was in the immediate vicinity.

Kepler's theory was so plausible as to be generally accepted as a rational explanation, but it has never been without its difficulties, and in the light of more recent astronomical knowledge can be supplemented by a more plausible supposition.

The wise men even of that ancient day would not likely confuse the familiar planets with "His star in the east." Moreover these planetary conjunctions were at least two years prior to the generally accepted date of Christ's birth.

It is more likely that these oriental scholars had learned from the Jewish traditions of Babylon and Susa that "there shall come a star out of Jacob and a Scepter shall arise out of Israel" and that this constituted the redemptive hope of the peculiar people of captivity. The extraordinary conjunctions of the planets first attracted their attention and led to their observation of the heavens for some new star. The three remarkable contacts between Jupiter and Saturn with the addition of Mars to their field of vision were sufficient phenomena to arouse their anticipations and stimulate their vigilance for the resplendent revelation of a luminary of royal radiance. In this they were not to be disappointed.

A New Star

The famous conjunctions of Jupiter, Saturn and Mars in 1603 were followed by the flashing out of a brilliant new star in the constellation Ophiuchus. According to Kepler this magnificent orb for two weeks rivaled the light of Venus and was visible to the light of nearly a year and a half.

Had the eminent astronomer suggested his famous new star as the explanation of the Star of Bethlehem there is reason for us now to believe that his hypothesis would have been correct. Exhaustive examination of Nova Auriga (1892) and Nova Persei (1901) revolutionized many new fields of observation.

It is now confidently believed that these brilliant orbs that have flashed out from time to time are the result of an awful collision of two burnt out suns too remote to be visible except by the conflagration resulting from their terrific impact.

The nebulae created from such tremendous celestial bodies crashing together is the basis of new solar systems and the beginning of new planets. Why should not the heavens provide a fitting illumination to honor Him who was to be the "Light of the world?" Why should not new worlds be created to magnify the earthly entrance of Him who "maketh all things new"?

The Chinese Records

While western historians are silent regarding the appearance of a new star about the time of Christ that does not disprove it. Archeological research may yet reveal a written witness of this heavenly vista.

In the annals of the Chinese Empire there is historical evidence of the bursting forth of such a luminary in the western sky. In fact in the records of this venerable nation there is not only the official declaration of the appearance of this extraordinary star, but also the additional information that it marked the birth of a great saint who introduced his religion into the world.

It is not improbable, then, that the entrance of the King of Glory upon earthly scenes was manifested by a mighty cataclysm in the heavens and the formation of new worlds at the very hour He came to save the planet called Earth.

As the Chinese annals state that this brilliant orb appeared in the southwest it is not unlikely that the wise men who had been preparing themselves for this event, immediately set off in this direction.

The logical home of the Magi, as their name indicates, was in Media.

Now those who are familiar with the topography of western Asia will understand how the western traveler is diverted by the great Arabian desert to the north in the direction of Nineveh.

Thus as the Magi moved up the Euphrates valley they must have been conscious that in making this great detour they were moving away from the direction of Jerusalem, the point in the southwest to which the star plainly pointed. But they must have also been aware of a more serious circumstance. Their guiding star was deserting the evening sky and disappearing into the glory of the setting sun.

Why the Wise Men Inquired

The apparent eastward motion of the sun among the constellations is so rapid that a star appearing directly overhead at sunset in three months will have passed into the realm of the ruler of the day.

Then if the Star of Bethlehem had first appeared as high as forty-five degrees above the western horizon these Median astronomers could not have proceeded much more than a month's journey before their leading light would have been lost in the powerful rays of the sun.

Now this is probably just what happened. Coming from Media, the Magi moving at the rate of twenty miles a day, would have been able to reach the upper course of the Euphrates before being bereft of their nocturnal guide. But here their undoubted acquaintance with Jewish prophecy came to their assistance and conducted their course southward toward Jerusalem, the point plainly designated by their celestial conductor in the early part of their journey.

From the Euphrates it would take nearly a month to reach the Jewish capital, and it is not surprising after this long period of darkness that they should seek light from the authorities of that city.

Moreover, it is evident from the entire conversation that took place in Jerusalem that these oriental scientists had lost their heavenly beacon and were now dependent upon the direction of human agencies.

Indeed it ought not to have been a difficult matter from the prophetic information provided by the chief priest and scribes to definitely locate the new born babe in the small village six miles distant.

They were not able to point out the new star to Herod but in answer to his urgent inquiries related the remarkable conjunctions of the planets as well as the appearance of a hitherto unknown star in the heaven. As the phenomenon of the planets had taken place nearly two years earlier we can understand why Herod took precaution to have all the babes "from two years and under" included in the Bethlehem massacre.

The Star Re-discovered

But how can the reappearance of the luminary be explained and especially that very difficult passage, "the star went before them till it came and stood over where the young child lay"?

I grant that such behavior is contrary to the movement of any heavenly body. Still to call it a "meteor supernaturally suspended" does not relieve the situation. No distant sun, planet, comet or even celestial meteor could make any perceptible movement in the short journey from Jerusalem to Bethlehem that would follow out a literal interpretation of the passage. Nothing but a terrestrial illumination a few hundred feet at the most above the earth could answer the purpose. Such would have been recognized and recorded as a pillar of fire, similar to that which conducted the children of Israel and rested upon the tabernacle.

But it is only too apparent that the beacon that cheered the hearts of the Magi after they left Jerusalem was the identical star that had been their inspiration and instructor from the beginning. These oriental astronomers did not designate it as a pillar of fire, but because it undoubtedly partook of the appearance and behavior of the most massive and majestic objects of God's creation they recognized and recorded it as a star.

What it seems to me more likely happened is, that during the month that the Magi were moving south to Jerusalem their lost luminary was passing into the morning sky. By the time they left the conference of scientists in Jerusalem it would have been high enough above the horizon to have made an imposing sight before sunrise.

It was this re-discovery which brought so much joy in their hearts. As it now appeared in the southeast it confirmed the testimony of the prophets that their journey was at an end, and even if it did not beckon them on to Bethlehem as it rose to the zenith with the advancing day it would be literally true that sooner or later their cherished heavenly guide "stood over where the young child lay."

That these men of recognized intellectual attainments should have failed to understand the disappearance of this star is not surprising when we know that the astronomers of their time never guessed that Mercury or Venus were the same planets when they were on the eastern and western sides of the sun.

The Greeks called Mercury Apollo when it was morning star and Venus accounts for the sudden appearance of the Star of Bethlehem while the apparent western movement of all fixed stars can best adapt it to the direction, time and length of the journey of the magi.

The re-appearance and recognition of this star upon the eastern horizon is the best explanation of the great joy of the wise men while its ascendancy toward the zenith would permit it literally to "stand over where the young child lay."

A THRILLING STORY OF THE THREE WISE MEN.

AN APPEAL TO YOUNG PEOPLE TO WALK IN WISDOM'S WAY.—BY REV. W. G. MOORE.

Jesus spoke of His disciples as sheep. "My sheep, hear my voice." The metaphor is not only true in the realm of Christianity; it is race-wide in its application. The millions of earth are following. Comparatively, there are but few leaders, some of whom are unfit. History's pages are replete with the tragic stories of the foolish and the beautiful, thrilling stories of the wise. In the light of overwhelming evidence in favor of the latter, we should make our choice, with the assurance that our lives will thus be founded upon the Rock which the storms and floods of time cannot move.

"Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and the rain descended, and the flood came, and the winds blew, and beat upon the house; and it fell not: for it was founded upon a rock."

Naturally, we want to know more about the Wise Men than what is given to us in the brief account of their visit to the infant Saviour as recorded in the second chapter of Matthew. The brevity of the account is, perhaps, best explained by saying that the writer was interested only in the essential facts of the story. There were Wise Men from the east to Jerusalem; they were inquiring men: "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" They discovered Him and rejoiced; they worshipped Him, and presented unto Him their gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh; and they were warned in a dream that they should not return to Herod, so they departed into their own country another way.

With these bare yet meaningful facts, the Biblical account closes.

From extra-Biblical sources, however, we have some information which adds much to the bare facts of Matthew's account. For example, Eder-shim, in his "Life and Times of Jesus," tells us that from the year 120 B. C. to the year 600 A. D. the kings of Arabia, from which country these Magi doubtless came, were believers in the Jewish religion.

Outsiders sometimes see more in what we believe than we ourselves. It was the Queen of Sheba, whose vision comprehended more than mere magnificent material display, who said of Solomon's reign: "The half has never yet been told." It was certain Greeks who came and said:

"We Would See Jesus".

It was the Wise Men who came from afar, inquiring: "Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him." It was a foreigner studying, in one of our own theological seminaries, who said, not long ago: "Our country will be Christian before America."

In the visit of the Magi we have an incident of surpassing imaginative beauty. Literature and art have vied with each other in portraying the singular grandeur of this wonderful story.

The world prefers to believe that these Wise Men were only three. And they are represented in art as men of different ages. The reason why they are so represented is due to a tradition which comes to us from the great traveler, Marco Polo. He tells us that when he came to the East he made every effort possible to find out more about these Wise Men. In a certain place he was shown their tomb, but this did not satisfy him. He traveled on, and finally came to a little village where the inhabitants worshipped fire. When he inquired why the village bore a certain strange name, he was told that the village was so named because three Wise Men, who were kings, journeyed from this place in the long ago to worship a Great Being who was born in the West, and whose star they followed. He recounts that when they came to the stable in Bethlehem they went in one at a time. First, the old man, and instead of finding what he expected, he found an old man, who conversed with him. Next, the man of middle age entered. He was surprised to find a teacher of his own years. And, last, the young man, who was nonplused to find himself in the presence of a young prophet. And, finally, they all went in together and beheld the infant Christ. Each saw in Christ the reflection of his own condition: it took them all to see Him as He was—Christ, the infinite, adaptable Saviour: the Christ of youth, the Christ of middle life, and the Christ of our declining years.

This wonderful visit of the Magi suggests to me one important consideration, namely, THEY WERE WISE MEN.

Solomon's choice was wisdom. He had comprehended the magnitude and solemnity of the regal task, and so he prayed: "Give me wisdom." And I am convinced that the wisdom of these Wise Men was akin to that which God gave to Solomon, and which produced such beneficent results in Israel prior to the time of Solomon's defection and sin. These Magi, in their far-off country, yet not without means of comprehending God, realizing the magnitude of life's task and obligation, had cried: "God give us wisdom."

They Followed His Star.

And from what practical viewpoints may we view their wisdom today?

1. They were wise men because they read the message of God in nature.

The simple yet beautiful statement is: "They followed His star." It is all right to be stargazers if the stars lead us to God. David, like the Magi of the East, was a student of nature. In his study of the heavens he passes in his thought and description from the grandeur of nature to the sublimity of nature's God. Who can forget the poetic beauty and picturesqueness of the nineteenth Psalm, in which the writer climbs by fine poetic climaxes from nature to nature's God:

"The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork, Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard. Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world. In them hath he set a tabernacle for the sun, which is as a bridegroom coming out of his chamber, and rejoiceth as a strong man to run a race. His going forth is from the end of the heaven, and his circuit unto the ends of it: and there is nothing hid from the heat thereof."

From the grandeur of nature he passes to nature's God:

"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple. The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes. The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring forever: the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold: sweeter also than honey and the honeycomb. Moreover by them is thy servant warned: and in keeping of them there is great reward. Who can understand his errors? Cleanse thou me from secret faults. Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; let them not have dominion over me: then shall I be upright, and I shall be innocent from the great transgression."

And then in the closing verse he reaches that wonderful climax of humility and trust:

"Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength, and my redeemer."

"The graceful form and beauty of nature are but the wall which hides from view the fact of the Infinite. The springtime, with its birds of song; the summer, with its fragrant flowers; the autumn, with its faded leaves; and the winter, with its falling snows, are but the manifestations of the Infinite Spirit. Nature is His mantle, which He hath woven in the loom of time. From the waves that play sportively on the seashore to the stars that keep vigil in the sky is His power at work. In the song of the bird, the purple of the violet, the blush of the rose, the beauty of the sunset, the roar of the thunder, the moan of the ocean, the dawning light, and the springing green is His glory revealed."

The Voice of the Stream Becomes the Voice of God.

I was charmed not long ago in reading again Sidney Lanier's beautiful, rhythmic poem entitled "The Song of the Chattahoochee," to observe how he listens to the voice of the stream until he hears only the voice of God, who calls to the ministry of duty;

"But oh, not the hills of Habersham,
And oh, not the valleys of Hall
Avail: I am fain for to water the plain;
Downward the voices of duty call,
Downward, to toil and be mixed with the main,
The dry fields burn, and the mills are to turn,
And a myriad flowers morally yearn,
And the lordly main from beyond the plain,
Calls o'er the hills of Habersham,
Calls through the valleys of Hall."

Charles Darwin, after studying nature for years, and then writing his "Origin of Species," gave up the religion of Christ and penned the following words which expressed his hopeless outlook: "I must be content to remain an agnostic." How different from the pessimism of Darwin is the radiant, Christian optimism of the poet Bryant, who studied nature and saw in it the unmistakable evidences of nature's living, personal God. In the last stanzas of his poem "To a Waterfowl," he says:

"Thou'rt gone; the abyss of heaven
Hath swallowed up thy form; yet on my heart
Deeply hath sunk the lesson thou hast given,
And shall not soon depart.
He who, from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way that I must tread alone
Will lead my steps aright."

How essential it is for us that we shall be able, like the Wise Men, to read the message of God in nature.

God as Seen In Human History:

2. They were wise men because they read the message of God in history.

God has manifested Himself in history. Undoubtedly these Wise Men were thoroughgoing believers in that philosophy so aptly expressed by William Shakespeare, the great English dramatist: "There is a divinity that shapes our ends, rough-hew them how we will."

I have already indicated that these Wise Men were of the Jewish faith, and doubtless it is not too presumptuous to say that they had acquainted themselves with all the available religious literature of the Jews. From the time that Abel kindled his altar fire outside of Eden to the clarion call of Isaiah, the messianic prophet, they had painstakingly and prayerfully traced the stately steppings of God in the affairs of the Chosen People. No doubt that vague prophecy in Genesis, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head," in comparison with Isaiah's pen picture of Jesus as the suffering Messiah, and Micah's prediction of a birthplace in Bethlehem, had added intelligence to a zeal which expressed itself in the quest for the Saviour. Any way, they saw God in history.

God Alone Can Claim It.

"What we need," said General Gordon, "is a profound faith in God's ruling all things."

John Wesley quaintly remarked: "I read my newspaper to see how God rules the world."

Abraham Lincoln spoke the following memorable words during the dark days of the Civil War: "Now, at the end of three years' struggle, the nation's condition is not what either party or any man desired or expected. God alone can claim it."

Dr. Lyman Abbott, the great preacher and theologian, said: "I no longer look back for the evidence that God was in history—though I believe He was in history—but I look about me to see Him in history now."

Recall, if you will, the fate of the Spanish Armada, of Napoleon's campaign against Moscow, where on the memorable night of cold twenty thousand horses perished and the strength of the French army was utterly broken. Here God used the cold as He may have used the pestilence in the destruction of Sennacherib's army. The great Victor Hugo says that the defeat of Napoleon at Waterloo was due to a shower of rain, which in the early morning rendered the roads unfit for the movement of artillery. He says that in this way Providence defeated the Man of Destiny.

Professor Creasy tells us about the decisive battles of history. The following is the sum of his ten lectures: All races are under guidance: those people that listen to the voice of God advanced rapidly, and those cities like Carthage and Thebes, that refuse restraint and rebel against His guidance, are brought to desolation and ruin. God has thought out in advance His plan for each city and nation, and those that rebel are cast out of the universe, where God rules and guides as supreme Lord and King. That nation alone shall live that accepts the guidance and obeys the laws of an overruling God.

What is this revelation? It is "conscience, the whisper of God in the soul of man."

A boy was seen one day lounging around a circus tent. If there is anything in the world tempting to a boy it is a circus, and knowing this, a gentleman said:

"Come, young man, and let us go to the circus."

"No," said the boy, "father would not like it."

"But your father need not know it," said the man.

"But I will know it," said the boy, "and when father comes home tonight I shall not be able to look into his face."

How important, young people, when your life's work is finished, the evening shadows are gathering, and our home-going is nigh, to be able to look up into your Father's face and say like Paul: "I have fought the good fight, I have finished the course, I have kept the faith."

The Wrath and Folly of Man Praise God.

Think of that nation which accepted the philosophy of Nietzsche and rejected Christ. Her boasted Hindenburg line was broken, and no doubt in the aftermath of war's humiliation and defeat God speaks: "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people. Pride goeth before destruction, a haughty spirit before a fall."

We should think today, young people, of how God within recent years has made the infidelity, wrath, and conceit of the nations of the earth to praise Him by breaking them in pieces and ushering in this new day of incipient world democracy.

"Right forever on the scaffold,
Wrong forever on the throne,
Yet that scaffold sways the future,
And behind the dim unknown
Standeth God within the shadow,
Keeping watch above His own."

3. They were wise men because they read the message of God in their own hearts.

God reveals Himself in the human heart. In the picturesque language of Genesis this revelation is thus described: "They heard the voice of God walking in the garden in the cool of the day." When the day's work was finished and the quiet of the evening lent itself to retrospect, how many times have we heard the footfall of God as He walked in the garden of our heart?

In poetic language David describes this revelation in his own heart: "As the heart panteth after the waterbrook, so panteth my soul for Thee, O God."

One of the church fathers said: "O Lord, Thou hast made us for thyself, and our souls shall be restless and hopeless until they rest and hope in Thee."

In the language of the text this revelation is thus graphically set forth: "Where is He that is born King of the Jews? For we have seen His star in the east, and are come to worship Him."

Above the horizon of all religious consciousness this star has risen and the impulse to worship has followed.

We Meet God In Conscience.

Dean Stubs tells us how at last we shall meet God in our consciences:

"I sat alone with my conscience
In a place where time had ceased,
And we talked of my former living
In a land where the years increased.
The ghosts of forgotten actions
Came floating before my sight,
And things that I thought were dead things
Were alive with a terrible might;

The vision of all my past life
Was an awful thing to face,
Along with my conscience sitting
In that silent, solemn place."

Like the wise men listen to the voice of conscience "the whisper of God in the soul of man."

4. Finally, they were wise men because they brought their best to the Saviour.

Their costly gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh were the best that they had.

Today the scene in the house of Simon the leper, illustrating the same beautiful spirit of giving, comes across the feverish centuries, asking you if you are as faithful to the best impulses of your hearts as the woman was to hers. Are you breaking a single flask of precious ointment in disinterested self-forgetfulness in behalf of any needy child of the eternal Father?

Now, as then, the real struggle for life is not for bread and clothing, but for ideals, for truth and purity. The bolshevistic bread-seekers of Russia are torn asunder by internecine war and starving. They have lost sight of that which is fundamental to bread—that Christian idealism which lifts man above the law of the jungle.

It is related that a famous artist once painted a picture of the divine Christ pointing to lilies of the valley. When the people gazed upon the work of art they were specially impressed with the delicate proportion of the lilies, and when they left the picture gallery they each and all exclaimed: "What beautiful lilies." When the artist heard this he seized his brush and went to his picture and struck out the lilies, exclaiming: "No work of mine shall hide the Saviour."

Let Not Works Hide God.

No work of yours, my young friends, should hide our precious Saviour.

Not many months ago the daily papers were filled with descriptions of the work being done in the city of New York by the famous orthopedic surgeon Dr. Lorens, of Australia. When it was officially announced that the great bloodless surgeon would hold his clinic at a certain hospital, before daybreak of the morning when the clinic was to be held hundreds of fathers and mothers with their crippled and deformed children thronged the hospital. When the hour for operating arrived and all were admitted that could be accommodated, hundreds of other anxious fathers and mothers held up their deformed children and cried: "Lorens, Lorens, save our children." How the world needs the ministry that has the healing touch of the Master!

"The bread that bringeth strength I want to give.

The water pure that bids the thirsty live;
I want to help the fainting day by day:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give the oil of joy for tears,
The faith to conquer crowding doubts and fears:

Beauty for ashes may I give away:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give good measure running o'er,
And into angry hearts I want to pour
The answer soft that turneth wrath away:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

I want to give to others hope and faith;
I want to do all that the Master saith;
I want to live aright from day to day:
I'm sure I shall not pass again this way.

Live this message, young people, read God's message in nature, in history, in your own hearts, and give your best to the Saviour, and

"Thy feet at last shall stand on jasper floors;
Thy heart at last shall seem a thousand hearts—

Each single heart with myriad raptures filled—
While thou shalt sit with princes and with kings, Rich in the jewel of a ransomed soul."

The quest of all quests is the quest for the Saviour and the wisdom of all wisdom is to be able to read His message and bring our best to His feet.

THE DEITY OF CHRIST AND HIS VIRGIN BIRTH.

BY REV. WILLIAM LEON BROWN, GREENFIELD, O.

Whom do men say that I, the Son of man, am?" (Matt. 16:13) was the question which Jesus asked His disciples. They answered by saying, "Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets." From that time until the present, men have been discussing this same question. There are those who believe Christ to have been a mere man; others think that He was more than man—even superior to the angels; while still others, believe Him to be the eternal God. Let us search the Scriptures, that we may ascertain the facts.

What the Bible Says

Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel (Isa. 7:14).

For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulders and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God; The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace (Isa. 9:6).

In the first of these passages from Isaiah, written 758 B. C., it is plainly declared that at some future period, a virgin would be distinguished by the name "Emmanuel." Accordingly, in Matthew 1:18 we read, "Now the birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise: When as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with child of the Holy Ghost." In Luke 1:35 we are told that the angel in speaking to Mary said, "That holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." "And so it was, that, while they were there, the days were accomplished that she should be delivered. And she brought forth her firstborn son, and wrapped him in swaddling clothes, and laid him in a manger" (Luke 2:6-7). "Now all this was done, that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Behold, a virgin shall be with child, and shall bring forth a son, and they shall call his name Emmanuel, which being interpreted is, God with us" (Matt. 1:22-23).

In our second quotation it is stated that this same child, to be born of the virgin, would also be called "Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace."

Now, the fact that "Emmanuel" and the other titles here given, have not been the names by which Jesus has usually been distinguished is a matter of no significance, since His revealed character was and is exactly what these names imply, and, since speaking of Himself He makes the following declarations:

1. "Before Abraham was, I am" (John 8:58). He does not say, "Before Abraham was, I was;" but "Before Abraham was, I AM." The use of the present tense denotes, not only that He existed before Abraham, but that He exists through all time.

The same expression occurs Exodus 3:13-14:

"And Moses said unto God, Behold, when I come unto the children of Israel and shall say unto them, The God of your fathers hath sent me unto you; and they shall say to me, What is his name? what shall I say unto them? And God said unto Moses, I AM THAT I AM: and he said, Thus shalt thou say unto the children of Israel, I AM hath sent me unto you."

Here God distinguishes Himself by the name, "I AM," because all time centers in Him as the self-existent and eternal Jehovah. Also in the next verse God says, "This is my name forever, and this is my memorial unto all generations" Hence, for the same reason, Christ declares that He is "I AM." Christ is therefore, according to His own testimony, the self-existent and eternal God.

2. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16).

Here Jesus calls Himself the only begotten Son of God. If this statement is true, God can have no other Son than Jesus.

3. "All men should honour the Son' even as they honour the Father (John 5:23)."

Here Jesus places Himself on an equality with God—demanding equal honor with the Father. In numerous passages He speaks of Himself in language which none but God could truthfully apply to Himself.

Think of These Claims of Jesus

All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth (Matt. 28:18).

And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was (John 17:5).

When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory: And before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a sheperd divideth his sheep from the goats (Matt. 25:31-32).

All things are delivered unto me of my Father: and no man knoweth the Son, but the Father; neither knoweth any man the Father, save the Son, and he to whomsoever the Son will reveal him (Matt. 11:27).

If ye believeth not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins (John 8:24).

This last utterance was equivalent to declaring that if men denied His Godhead they would be eternally lost.

How could it be made plainer than in the language above quoted, that Jesus declared Himself, not only to be super to all created beings, but that He is JEHOVAH?

We have heard it said that Jesus, in substance, acknowledged that Joseph was His father, because He allowed it to be so "supposed" when He was "about thirty years of age" (Luke 3:23).

It is a common thing for people to address seniors as father or mother, when they are aware that no relationship exists!

So, the young prophets are called the sons of the prophets and these style the eldest, fathers. "My father, my father," said Elisha to Elijah (2 Kings 2:12). Father is a term of respect which inferiors give to their superiors, and servants to their masters; "My father," said Naaman's servants to their master (2 Kings 5:13).

Therefore, even if Jesus addressed Joseph as father, it would not indicate that in reality He recognized any such relationship. But it matters not how He addressed him, because His language later, as we have quoted makes it very plain that He acknowledges God only as His Father and Himself as God's only begotten Son.

SUFFOLK LETTER.

The manger-cradle is the domestic throne of the world. Babyhood found its rights in the Babe of Bethlehem. There was no Christmas for four thousand years before Jesus was born. Even babyhood was serious and sad until Mary brought forth her firstborn child. Ages had waited for the fulfillment of the promise that a virgin should bring forth a son. He was the only child promised for centuries before he was born. The world waited for Him; and, in the fullness of time, He was born; He covers two vast periods: one of prophecy, the other of history. He was in the womb of eternity, and of His Kingdom there will be no end. His coming changed the calendar of time. He fulfilled all prophecy and all righteousness. He humbled Himself to be born of a woman, though He was conceived by the Holy Ghost. He sanctified suffering, set prisoners free, and robbed death of its sting and the grave of its victory.

His birth is celebrated by what is called Christmas.

That was a quiet December night in Bethlehem, when Joseph and Mary occupied a stall, because there was no room for them in the Inn. There were no rockers on His cradle, though His gospel has put rockers on the cradle of Christendom. The little town did not know that night that His birth would make it famous for all time; but the shepherds, watching their flocks on the hillside, heard the angel say:

"Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." "And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." The working people of the world are closest to angels and their songs. Of course they went in haste and found it as the angel had said—Mary, Joseph, and the Babe, lying in a manger. His bed was a bed of straw, but He has cushioned the beds of infants throughout the world.

Later came the wise men to worship Him, and to present their gifts of gold, frankincense, and Myrrh. The slaughter of the Innocents, the flight into Egypt, and the return to Nazareth interrupted the family joy for a brief period, but did not interrupt the Father's loving care.

Christmas is the tenderest of days. It is filled with love, gifts, and song. Childhood is full of joy. Age looks on with inexpressible delight. Maternity reaches its highest point in life by the Babe. A halo gathers around the cabin and turns it into a palace. Christmas morning opens with a flood of joy. The year has poured its tide of love and thought into the gifts, whether great or small. Greetings as sweet as angel songs fill the home, the street, and the field. Heaven opens her lap and pours her treasures into the hearts of men. No wonder angels came down to announce the coming of the Babe and the good will He would bring. The Babe has softened many a crusty temper, sweetened many a sour spirit, and built many beautiful homes, churches and schools.

Christmas is more than the celebration of a Holiday, the keeping of a Christian Festival, or a time for good will. It is the crystallization of a divine purpose, the entrance of the reign of peace, the rescue of a lost world, the entrance of light into the night of despair. The toyworld, bookworld, cardworld, musicworld, furniture and bandying world, the school and the nation all pause under the compulsion of a spiritual force and listens again to the song of angels and the shout of children. Yes, a little child shall lead and age with trembling lips and tearfilled eyes will be thrilled again with sensations of youthful joy. Parents, grandparents, brothers, sisters, babies and friends, will all unite in the Christmas joy. The angel went away into heaven, the shepherds verified the message, and made known abroad the saying which was told them concerning this child. Jesus came close to man in His childhood, and man keeps closest to Him in the babies of the world.

ELON LETTER.

The word gospel we have been told again and again means good news. But that could mean any one of a thousand things. A rich uncle bequeathing you a fortune would be good news. The discovery of a long lost friend would be good news. What did Jesus mean by His good news?

One day in the synagogue at Nazareth He read from Isaiah—"The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me, because He hath anointed Me to preach the gospel to the poor; He hath sent Me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovering of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised, to preach the acceptable year of the Lord." Is this what we mean by the gospel? If Jesus were to come to our church next Sunday, would He recognize the sermon as setting forth His gospel?

His gospel included good news for the poor, for sorrowing ones, for prisoners, for the blind, for the oppressed, and the cancellation of debts once in fifty years. No wonder the Jews thirsted for His blood. What would Wall Street say to such a gospel in this year 1922?

Until Jesus preached the poor were not thought worthy of the consideration of man or God. Imprisonment for debts was practiced, thus rating property above humanity. But Jesus said one single man was of more worth than all the property values of the world. That was good news for the poor.

For bereavement the solace was problematic till Jesus came. He arose from the grave and became the healing balm of every broken heart. Paul made the resurrection central in our Christian faith. Experience agrees with Paul's estimate. What splendid news it was to the broken-hearted to know that all heart-aches will be healed in the life that without a break continues this one!

For prisoners, for the blind as well as for these handicapped by other human ailments, for the oppressed Jesus preached release, not only the reward of salvation in the spirit-world, but release in this present life. The condition of these suffering brothers has not been ideally improved as yet, but splendid progress has been made and the way grows brighter from day to day. What good news this Galilean brought!

But His most revolutionary doctrine was His espousal of the acceptable year of the Lord. In Lev. 25:10-13 the institution of this Jubilee year is set forth in the following language: "And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family.

"A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you: ye shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undressed.

"For it is the jubilee: it shall be holy unto you; ye shall eat the increase thereof out of the field.

"In the year of this jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possession." We have no record that the Jews ever celebrate this feast nor that any other nation ever did, but the Mosaic law provides for it and Jesus approved its provision. It was exactly in accord with His exaltation of human interests above property interests. The cancellation of debts once in fifty years would do violence to property rights and other vested interests. Jesus felt that it would promote the vital interests of human life. What do we think? If our thought is different from His, how will we justify ourselves?

Jesus' gospel made the relations of men one with another a religious matter. God He revealed as vitally concerned in every experience of life. His social gospel laid down three fundamental attitudes and in terms of these we are to weigh every institution or measure. They are—personality is inviolable; men are brothers; and the strong should minister to the weak.

The poor of His day heard Him gladly. The day will come when the rich and powerful will not only gladly hear, but joyously practice this gospel. That hope and expectation is good news now for those of us who have committed our lives to His Kingdom's coming. "He shall reign, halleluiah." His good news is to permeate the earth and thrill every heart.

BETHLEHEM COLLEGE LETTER.

Christmas is a time of giving and receiving. The whole atmosphere is pervaded with this spirit. It was because of a Gift that we celebrate Christmas. It is a question whether the spirit of the season is in keeping with the spirit that prompted the season. Today both old and young are wondering what kind of a gift to present to their friend and what their friend will give them in turn. It is high time that the conscience of the world was changed on this point. People have too long thought in terms of material gifts. The conscience of the world must be changed from a material conscience to a spiritual conscience.

It is not the material value of a gift that causes it to be appreciated, but the spirit that prompts the gift. The world appreciates Christ because He was an unselfish Gift. He lived an unselfish life and died an unselfish death.

There is one gift that must precede the material gift. Every gift of money or possessions must be preceded by the gift of self. When this is done all other gifts, whether heroic or sacrificial, will become a blessing and a privilege to the giver as well as the receiver. The Imagination is not strong enough to picture a man who thinks he is making a gift to man or God if he withholds himself. The woman with her two pence made a respectable, worthy, sacrifice offering with her mite and her self, while the cold-hearted, selfish, rich givers eluded, escaped, and defrauded the kingdom of God by dropping their thousands into the vessel of the sanctuary when they should have given themselves. The abundance of a man's wealth is no index to his life and liberality.

The promoters of Bethlehem College are facing a great problem. We need money to finance the project. This we must have. We expect the people to give the necessary money. And they will. But before they give their money they must give themselves. Solicit a man who has given himself to God and His program of kingdom progress and his money gift is the natural sequence. It cannot be said that a man has fully given himself to God, if he withholds his possessions from God's enterprises. The opinion is current that other people are liberal with their money. Their response to the various calls of the church bears witness to this fact. It is a joyous task and a great privilege to raise money for the kingdom when people are willing to give to the point of sacrifice.

The only angle from which we may correctly view the subject of giving is from the spiritual angle. The only position from which we may properly view the question of giving is from our knees. No man can truly pray for spiritual leadership and seal his purse to the treasury of God. The finest gifts of man are those that are born in prayer, offered in a sacrificial spirit and sealed with the blood of the Cross. Unless we view the question of financing Bethlehem College from the standpoint of prayer, we will wrongly judge God's demands upon our money and our gifts will remain material and mechanical.

Even Alexander the Great, a pagan, thought of the subject of giving as a means of storing up treasures. After he had accomplished the conquest of Persia, he asked where the treasure was which he had taken, and he replied, "In my chest." When asked where his chest was, he pointed to the poor, and said, "I have given all to the poor." He was then asked, "What has your Majesty kept for yourself?" He said, "Hope of greater and better things."

R. F. BROWN.

FULLNESS AND EMPTINESS—A CONTRAST.

Ruth 1:21. "I went out full, and Jehovah has brought me home again empty."

This text is readily divided into FULLNESS, and EMPTINESS. The fullness is the fullness of earthly relationship; the emptiness is the being stripped of these; and I wish to add a third which is obvious enough: man's emptiness gives place for God's in-filling.

Our message is from the land of Bethlehem a thousand years before Jesus was born in that same city. It is the self-same land where Jacob buried his beloved Rachel centuries before. It is the birth place of David and is five miles south of Jerusalem. It is in the heart of the farmlands of the ancient people of God. The land, then, is a land of famine and plenty, while the character Naomi is one of plenty and want and then a higher, and nobler recurrence of plenty.—that abundant plenty of Heaven.

(1) "I went out full." Indeed, Naomi did go out full! She went out from Bethlehem-Judah with a husband in the fullest promise of life and two young sons; she went out with hopes high for material success, and material conquest; she went out with her fondest dreams fastly coming true before her eyes. She had a husband who sought diligently and arduously to provide for her and their two sons. Other Jewish maidens and kinswomen may look forward with a sense of dread to a childless career, which was one of the things greatly to be dreaded in her day, but not Naomi, for she had now, and for her very own, her husband and her two sons. Full of dreams and hopes for what the future no doubt held for her household she fares forth with her husband into a land beyond the sea.—into the land of Moab, a land of plenty,—until the famine be passed in her own land of Judah.

I shall not be among those who decry the piety of Naomi. I believe she was a sincere and noble woman of her day and land, but how perfectly natural it was for her in her enthusiasm for Elimelech, and Mahlon and Chilion to forget to rely sorely and completely on Jehovah. She was trusting a great deal no doubt in her relatives and her earthly circumstances.

Is it not true, all too true, that in our modern life we are looking to exteriors? Are we not often trusting in men? For instance, our church here may need a great awakening, are we not too prone to seek great men to stir us up? Or we have mapped out perhaps a program of life for ourselves not realizing that our program is on the face of it man-made! Then do we not continue our earthly program by getting men as our aids? Do we not use our relatives, friends, and even, adroitly, our foes to advance our plans? Oh! how prone we are to be of the earth earthy. In second Cor. 1:19 we read: "We should not trust ourselves, but in God." In Jer. 17:5 we read: "Cursed is the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from Jehovah. For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh, but shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, a salt land and not inhabited. Blessed is the man that trusteth in Jehovah, and whose trust Jehovah is. For he shall be as the tree planted by the waters, that spreadeth out its roots by the river and shall not fear when heat cometh, but his leaf shall be green and he shall not be careful in the year of drought, neither shall he cease from yielding fruit." The Scriptures are replete with such warnings and promises.

(2) "Jehovah hath brought me home again empty." The going out was in her own hands, "I went," but the returning was in God's hand, "Jehovah brought me." It is like us to go away, but it is like God, in His loving grace, to bring us back, even though He must often chastise us so to do. When Naomi had been in Moab for only a short while reverses began. In a strange land she is left a widow. Her promising sons now become two charges in whom she must keep life until they can earn their own living. Any one in this audience that has seen that sort of thing appreciates to some extent poor Naomi's position. But the years pass. Her sons remember not the fond dreams of their once young mother and marry Moabitish women instead of returning with her to Bethlehem and marrying maidens of Judah as they were wont. Naomi's ardor has in all probability cooled with her afflictions and years, and she has not insisted on this. So she has lost her husband; she has lost her two sons; she has lost her hopes; and she even bids her daughters-in-law to turn from following after her! Empty, and alone she would return home to pass her remaining years. But Ruth clings to her, and in her no doubt she feels is left with a hopeless charge.

Just here let us remember what Paul says in 2 Cor. 12:10, "Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, for when I am weak then am I strong." One great man of God has said, "He that empties us of the creature knows how to fill us with Himself." Always in God's dealing with men He has shown that "self" is in the way of spiritual progress. God would make of Saul a great king, but as soon as Saul begins to take the matter in his own hands, disintegration and ruin creeps in. Saul allows himself to grow and finally falls upon his own sword and dies upon his own battle field.

With earthly authority and sublime confidence in himself Saul of Tarsus sets out to Damascus but God brought him into that city empty, blind, foiled. The man of him has been on his face and in the dust and now in the humiliating blindness he finds himself at the journey's end. Later in life he says, "I am crucified with him." Empty! from the dark garden of Gethsemane down across the ages I hear One saying, "Not my will, but Thine be done!"

Oh! that God would empty us of ourselves! Oh! that we would come over to Him and say, "Not my will but Thine." Oh! that we would cease to try to save ourselves, and recognize how futile is the death of our dear Saviour upon the cross if saving ourselves be possible! Empty of ourselves and blind to the world can we not look up to the cross, to Christ, the only name under heaven whereby we may be saved?

(3) Then comes the re-filling. It may come through a circuitous route, but it comes none the less certain. A kinsman of Elimelech marries the daughter-in-law of Naomi. A son is born, out of whom follows that celebrated ancestral line of Obed, Jesse, and David, yea, and finally Jesus Christ Himself. Oh! unbounded, unforeseen fruition of an ancient hope! Seemingly empty, Naomi says, "Call me no longer Naomi; call me Mara: for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me. I went out full and Jehovah hath brought me home again empty." Indeed Jehovah had brought her home. Home to her beloved Bethlehem; home to another male child in her arms even though it is Ruth's; and home to the rearing of an ancestor in the lineage of the Lord of lords and King of kings!

There is something quite as remarkable for each one of us today will allow the Almighty first and only place within his heart. Because all are dead in sin; all are under the sentence of death, but by believing on Jesus Christ, and by clinging to even our frail bit of faith, we have for death eternal life! We are thus changed from miserable, lost and undone sinners to sons of God through our blessed Lord! "And now are we the sons of God, and doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him for we shall see Him as He is." Oh! Christ help us to see Thee even though Thou shouldst have to "bring us home again empty." Amen.

JOHN G. TRUITT,

Princeton, N. J. Nov. 15, 1922.

Rev. E. T. White has not seemingly had much to say since he went to his new field in Virginia, except to Brother Abe. What he has said to him has been a plenty and to the point. We should like to know what Brother Abe has to say. How does he feel when he gets such a drubbing? Bro. White surely does know how to make some people see themselves. We may be mistaken, but we think Brother Abe has seen himself in a new light. It is said that Bro. White is making the work in his new field get up and move. He is also doing a fine work for THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and we are glad he is. We wonder if our Virginia preachers are going to allow a Tar Heel to come over there and walk all around them in picking up subscribers to their church paper. Well, let us wait and see.

If you do not see it in this issue, look out for it in the next, for Rev. J. F. Morgan, Winchester, Va., is turning on some much needed emphasis on certain plain truths which some seem disposed to minimize. Bro. Morgan is striking at the right thing and we hope he and others may keep it up. This is a day when too little emphasis is placed on some of the fundamental truths of Christianity. We can try that when we will, but in practically every instance the cause will be weakened by any let down in the vital doctrines of Christianity. Bible doctrines (not sectarian doctrines) constitute the backbone of Christianity. God help us to get our eyes open.

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

The Men and Millions Campaign and the causes embraced by it gain and hold their rightful place in the hearts of our people only in proportion as our preachers preach on these great Kingdom interests. The churches having the best record also have preachers who are constantly on their Campaign job.

PREACHING THE CAMPAIGN

No one human agency contributed so much to the victory in subscribing to Men and Millions as the preachers preaching the Campaign. The preacher was then and is now the key man. If the pastor preaches Men and Millions the people will work for and pay their pledges to the Movement.

Make the Victory Sure.

Our people will fall behind in their payment of the pledges if our preachers do not get under the burden again. We can go to the extraordinary session of our Convention next May with a glorious record, if our people are aroused to a full sense of their duty. We need to go to our knees for Power in these great days ahead of us, if we are to truly lead our people, pay our pledges and win out for our Lord.

Preach—Preach—Preach.

VICTORY!

CHILD'S HOUR

MARY ELLEN'S CHRISTMAS WISH.

BY ERROLL HAY COLCÖCK.

It was Christmas Eve, and the clocks all over the house had chimed the midnight hour.

Dorothea sat up in bed with a start and looked expectantly toward the fireplace, but, as yet, Santa Clause had not made his appearance.

"Guess he'll soon be coming, Mary Ellen," she sleepily remarked to her doll, who sat perched at the foot of the bed, "and I know he'll bring me lots and lots of pretty things. I wonder if every child in the world is as happy as I am tonight!"

She had scarcely settled back upon her pillows when a queer thing happened. Mary Ellen's painted lips parted, and, to the astonishment of the little girl, the doll commenced to talk as naturally as possible.

"No, Dorothea," she said, with a shake of her flaxen curls, "I am sorry to say there are numerous children in the world not nearly so happy as you. Listen well, for I have a question to ask."

Dorothea was all attention as the doll took a deep breath and continued: "Once every year at Christmas Eve at midnight we are permitted to come to life and make a wish. Now, Santa Clause will soon be here with a vast number of toys and dolls for you to play with. What are you going to do with your old ones, Dorothea, is what I want to know?"

"Why—just keep them," replied the little girl, wondering at the strange question. "I've got several trunks filled with playthings—the left-over toys which I've kept from year to year."

"Yes," said Mary Ellen, sitting up very straight and glancing about the room, "the nursery is already filled with more things than you know what to do with. Have you never thought, Dorothea, of sharing your toys with little children, too poor, perhaps, to buy any themselves?"

The other was silent for a moment then shook her head. "No, I've never thought much about it," she confessed, frankly. "You see, having always had so much myself I've never known what it was to be without anything I wanted."

The doll bent over and her red lips parted in a smile. "That's just it," she said, "You've really never thought about it or I'm sure you would have long ago shared your playthings with others. Now, I want you to know, Dorothea, that I've been very happy here since last Christmas Day but my wish is that tomorrow you'll dress me in my prettiest gown and take me yourself to some poor child, who, perhaps, has never known the joy of having a doll of her own."

Dorothea bent forward and drew the speaker tenderly within her arms.

"But—I love you so much, Mary Ellen," she faltered, with a quiver in her voice. "Of course Santa Clause will bring me new dolls, but I don't want to give up anything I really—love!"

Mary Ellen smiled again, but there was an earnest look in the depths of her big, blue eyes. "You will have to learn," she said softly, "that in parting with the things you do not want yourself, you are not really being generous at all. That is not the true spirit of giving, Dorothea. Suppose, instead of some day putting me away as a useless plaything with your other cast-off toys, you think well of what I've said, and make up your mind to grant my Christmas wish!" Her voice trailed off in a whisper, and before the other could reply there was the sound of footsteps approaching and Mr. and Mrs. Merriman entered the room.

"Merry Christmas Dorothea!" they exclaimed. "Wake up and see what Santa Clause has brought you!"

The little girl opened her eyes with a start. Why, how had morning come so soon and what had become of Mary Ellen, the talking doll?

Ah, there she was seated at the foot of the bed as before, but the magic hour had passed and she had relapsed into silence.

Dorothea could scarcely realize it had all been a dream. Somehow, Mary Ellen seemed to still regard her in a very life-like way from her big, blue eyes, and in fancy she could hear her whisper: "Don't forget the poor children, Dorothea, and my Christmas wish. Surely you will help to make them happy!"

And so after a long joyful morning spent amidst playthings galore, Dorothea called her mother into the nursery and told her what had been on her mind all day.

Mrs. Merriman was delighted to know of the lovely plan her little daughter was eager to carry out, and together the two of them went through the various trunks and assorted innumerable toys to take to the poor children that afternoon.

When the limousine drew up before the City Orphanage at sunset, and a little pale-faced girl greeted them from her wheel-chair by the window, a lovely doll in her very prettiest dress and ribbons was placed in her arms.

Indeed, the smile that came to the lips of the tiny shut-in brought real happiness to the heart of the giver, and as the limousine was gliding homeward, after the playthings had all been distributed, Dorothea turned to Mrs. Merriman with sparkling eyes.

"Oh mother," she exclaimed, "this has truly been a glorious day! The poor children seemed so happy, and I'm ever so glad I made Mary Ellen's Christmas wish come true!"—The Girl's Weekly.

AS PANTETH THE HART

BY G. A. SIMMONS

[This hymn was written by Bernard of Clairvaux, 1091-1153, the enthusiastic preacher of the Second Crusade. It is a reminiscence of that beautiful Psalm beginning: "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God."]

As the panting hart desireth
Purling waters, pastures green,
So the faithful soul aspireth
To Jehovah's living stream.

As the water's running river
Brings refreshments where it goes,
Likewise God, the all-good Giver,
Saves from sin the thirsty souls.

Ah! what fortune dost thou furnish,
Lord, to those who are upright!
But the man himself does punish
Who eschews eternal light.

He who seeketh thee shall find
Joyous life and lasting peace;
He who severs thee from mind
Sorrow reaps without surcease.

Peace thou givest, and a crown
Goes to those who fight for thee;
All things joyous without bound
To the just who dwell with thee.

Christian Orphanage

THE GOOD WORK GOES ON.

DEAR FRIENDS:—

You remember we set for our goals $6,000.00 for the Thanksgiving offerings. We have passed the half way mark. Our total for the Thanksgiving offering to date is $3,147.67. To reach the goal we must raise by the end of the year $2,852.33 on the Thanksgiving offerings. Seventy-five churches have already reported. One hundred and sixty to report yet. Our other goal is to raise $10,000.00 from November 1st to end of the year. We have raised on this amount $4,542.00. To reach this goal we must raise yet $5,458.00 by the end of the year.

Don't let us fail in reaching these two goals. It means much to the work here. It means to do a larger work through this institution. See to it that your church makes its Thanksgiving offerings and makes them liberal. Mail the check in so you can get credit before the books close for the year. Let no church in our Southern Convention fail in this offering. Let every member of the Christian denomination feel an interest in the Christian Orphanage and take an interest in helping to reach the goals set. Mail your personal checks to help make the desired amount. Let everybody get busy and we will reach it. Work and pray to that end. God will bless your efforts.

We need your prayers. We need your sympathy. We need your help.

The following articles have been sent in since our last report:

Mr. J. T. Williams, Suffolk, Va., 12 bags Irish potatoes.

Durham Ice Cream Co., 6 gallons ice cream. A Friend, Petersburg, Va., 36 yds. gingham. Mebane Milling Co., one barrel flour.

Rosemont Christian Church, Va., one box containing dresses, shirts, hose, hats, caps, outing goods, and other articles. Mrs. Gibson, same church, one dresser.

Ingram Christian Church, Va., two bags dried fruit.

Woman's Missionary Society, New Hope Church, Abanda, Ala., one box—pillow cases, shirts, towels, hose, dress, coat, fruit, etc.

Mrs. Julian King, Springboro, Pa. 12 ready made outing garments.

Intermediate Sunday School Class Christian Church, Springboro, Pa., one beautiful quilt.

Dr. and Mrs. J. T. Stuart, Stokesdale, N. C., one doz. cans fruit.

Bible Class, Haw River Christian Church, one drugget for sitting room.

First Christian Church, Warren, Ind., one box Christmas presents for children and clothing.

Other Witnesses

Having thus heard Christ's testimony as to His exalted personality, we will now hearken to other witnesses:

1. Nebuchadnezzar, a heathen king, knowing not the true God and never having heard of His Son yet he bears witness of the Son,—“Lo, I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and they have no hurt; and the form of the fourth is like the Son of God” (Dan. 3:25).

2. John the Baptist,—“And I saw, and bare record that this is the Son of God” (John 1:34).

3. Christ's works,—“Then Jesus answering said unto them, Go your way, and tell John what things ye have seen and heard; how that the blind see, the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, the deaf hear, the dead are raised, to the poor the gospel is preached” (Luke 7:22).

4. The devils testify and acknowledge their subjection, saying—“What have we to do with thee, Jesus thou Son of God?” (Matt. 8:29).

5. God, the Father, testifies, saying,—“This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased” (Matt. 3:17). God never so recognized Abraham, Moses or any human being.

In John 1:1, we read, “In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.” In verse 14, “And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us.” In verse 15, “John bare witness of him.” Of whom did John bare witness? Only one—of Christ, or the Word. “And the Word was God.”

Trinity in Unity

The unity of God, and, also, that there is more than one person in the Godhead, is taught in Genesis 1:1: “In the beginning, the Gods, He created the heavens and the earth.” (Such is the translation of President Dwight of Yale College.) Also, in Genesis 1:26, we read, “And God said, Let us make man in our own image, after our likeness.” Observe, both the singular and the plural are used in speaking of God.

In this language, besides being stated that there is more than one person in the Godhead, the doctrine of the trinity is implied, and, this doctrine is very plainly taught in Matthew 28:19, where Jesus says to the disciples, “Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.”

Christ's virgin birth, His Godhead, and the doctrine of the trinity, it seems to us, are so plainly taught, both in the Old and New Testaments, that no one can consistently deny these facts, and at the same time acknowledge the truth and inspiration of the Scriptures.

As for those who do not believe God's Word, an altogether different mode of reasoning would be essential; but no mode, in itself, could be effectual. The acknowledgment that was made by Peter, “Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God,” is a truth which flesh and blood cannot reveal.

FROM BRO. WYRICK'S FIELD.

The work at Mt. Pleasant last year was very pleasant and the outlook for this year is bright. The first Sunday of this month was our first appointment this conference year. We received two members by letter from the M. E. Church. Every one was happy to have them unite with the church. The church is planning to remodel the house soon. Sunday School is good, and prayer meeting every Sunday night, has been kept up since the revival services. This is a splendid people to serve.

REVIEW.

GOLDEN TEXT: "The Spirit of the Lord is upon me, Because he anointed me to preach good tidings to the poor."—Luke 4:18.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Psalm 98.

Our review this quarter presents for our study and thought the life of Jesus from His birth in Bethlehem, through His youth, His temptation, and His ministry up until three months before His death. Most fitting is it to spend time on the last day of the year of 1922, to consideration of the teachings of the life of Christ in the personal, intimate way in which they are presented in the Gospel of Luke. It should prove most helpful as we are naturally thinking a little of the past year, and perhaps wondering more about the coming year, to measure our lives in the light of the teachings of the Master, to resolve to live closer to Him that we may enter more fully into the Christian life of joy and service. There are certain words which will sum up in a general way the lessons of the quarter, as:

Preparation. Long before the coming of the Christ-child, prophets had been preparing the world for His appearance. For centuries, people had been praying and watching for the Saviour. John, the Baptist, was sent to prepare the way for His ministry. Jesus Christ Himself spent by far the greater number of years of His life on earth in preparation for His public work. As a boy He grew strong and wise and friendly, and to know about and to love His Heavenly Father. He studied the Scriptures. He knew men with their great needs. Thirty years spent in preparation for three years ministry. Surely God believes in preparation. Today He is calling His children to prepare for the work of the Kingdom, to be ready for the great work which must be done.

"Get your spindle and distaff ready and God will send the flax."

Temptation. "One that hath been in all points tempted like as we see, yet without sin." "Full of the Holy Spirit" Jesus overcame temptation of a three-fold nature. To every suggestions of the tempter, He gave a Bible answer. Temptations differ, but the Word of God gives strength for overcoming every kind. On one side or another, everybody is subject to temptation, and to all yielding is sin. The Christ-way is the victorious way, and in His strength, no temptation can overcome us.

"Find out what your temptations are, and you will find out largely what you are yourself."

—Henry Ward Beecher.

Service. The ministry of Jesus was a ministry of service. To those with diseased bodies, He was the Great Physician who could cure both body and soul. He was the All-Wise Teacher, whose lessons were so plain that all could understand. Who serves more than the teacher, who makes the way of life plain? He was the loving Friend of sinners, and the welcome guest at Bethany. He was the Greatest of all Missionaries, who went about doing good, and taught and sent out many others to teach and to save. The service of Jesus was not occasional, nor was it performed to secure the praise of others, but rather was it the service that springs from an understanding and sympathetic heart, which sought opportunities everywhere always to give expression of its love for the whole world. Love is the motive power guiding true service. The message of Jesus to the world of all times, is a message of loving service to all men.

"But now abideth faith, hope, love these three; but the greatest of these is love."

Vision. All of the teachings of Jesus reveal His depth and breadth of vision. He could see into the very souls of men, and He knew their needs better than they did themselves. He saw far into the future as He sent out those followers of His, to tell the story. He lived in a small section of the earth, and yet His constant plea was that the whole world might be won. His last command was to "Go into all the world . . . and teach all men." As we begin to live in the new year, should we not pray that our own vision might be clearer, that our service may be more faithful, that God's power may keep us from yielding to temptation, and that He will prepare us for our part in His work.

"A few days after the death of Lord Roberts, placards were posted throughout Great Britain, with a portrait of the great field marshal, and underneath these words:

"He did his duty;
Will you do yours?"

This is the question, the men and women, and boys and girls in our churches must face, as the life-story of the Christ is taught.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

DECEMBER 31, 1922.

Lessons from a New Year's Psalm. Ps. 90:1-17

NEW YEAR'S THOUGHTS.

When asked to read a portion of the Bible, which would be most fitting to the occasion, at the opening of the twentieth century, Edward Everett Hale chose the 90th Psalm, the Scripture lesson for this meeting. Read the psalm very carefully and thoughtfully, and see how this prayer of Moses, the man of God, brings the message of an eternal, unchanging God, to a world which is constantly changing. "In all generations" the Heavenly Father has remained the same, always caring for, guiding and loving His children. "What shall I render unto Jehovah for all his benefits toward me?" (Ps. 116:12.)

"Teach us to number our days" (verse 12). Life is given to us by God, and the service of our days belongs to him. Life should be invested to bring in the largest returns of blessings to others. "Where can my life be invested to count for the most," is the question which every young person should face squarely. How many Life-Work Recruits are in your Christian Endeavor Society?

"That we may rejoice and be glad all our days." God's kindness should make His children happy. The Christian religion is a religion of joy. This happiness is found in helping others. "Happiness is the echo of the pleasant words we speak to others."

"Let thy work appear." There is work for us to do, God's work, and He is counting upon us to do it. Some place is your own task. God will make it clear what that work is and where it is.

"The work of our hands, establish thou it." God will bless our work if we are faithful in our efforts. He gives us a new opportunity to work for Him every day and every year. This psalm teaches that He will always be with us.

"For He is sweeter as the years roll by,
To be worthy of His love I'll try;
So I'll love Him more and more,
As I near the other shore,
For He is sweeter as the years roll by."

PLANS FOR THE MEETING.

Where it is possible make this a Watch Night Service, spending the last moments of the year, in the Christian Endeavor service, thinking of the great truths in this psalm. The thought of reviewing the past year will enter the meeting, but for the most part, make it a forward-looking meeting, trying to see the great truths which should strengthen lives in the coming year.

A poster advertising the meeting, or invitations, may bear the words in large letters "What Are We Aiming At?" or a good motto for the meeting is found in the words of Paul: "This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press forward toward the mark of the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

If your Society has not definitely worked for Life-Work Recruits, this meeting is a splendid opportunity to impress upon young people the call to work for God. Our Life Work Recruits Covenant reads thus: "Conscious that my life is God's gift and that I am His and desiring to give myself in a definite way for His Service, I covenant with Him: To enter the Gospel Ministry; To become a Foreign Missionary; To Undertake Home Missionary Work; or To Enter as a Life Work some Department of Christian Service in the Home Land."

Suggested Hymns: Sweeter as the Years Go By One More Day's (or Year's) Work for Jesus; Take My Life and Let It Be; Have Thine Own Way, Lord"; More Love to Thee; Take Time to Be Holy; You May Have the Joy Bells; Onward Christian Soldiers.

MEN AND MILLIONS' SUNDAY.

There is no phase of the Work of the church with which religious education is not most closely allied. Our Sunday Schools are the teaching force which is exerting an influence of inestimable values. These, together with our Christian Endeavor and Missionary Societies, Daily Vacation Bible Schools, Week Day Religious Instruction; and all of the means of teaching in our churches are making future members for the Christian Church. In a very literal sense, the future church of the South, is now at work in two hundred and more places as Sunday School children are meeting with older people to study the Bible, to worship together in order that all may be ready to take their places in the work of the Kingdom. It is important that these boys and girls who are rapidly growing up to places of responsibility shall know more about their church. It is vital that they shall know something of what the church stands for, and what it is trying to do. We believe that when all of our people come to know more about the church and its work, that interest will be much deeper, and the church will be ready to go forward together to a large work. The church needs men, men who are loyal and true and unafraid to face responsibilities. The church needs women, women who are faithful and unselfish and consecrated to see the opportunity. Men and women are needed who will give this vision to the boys and girls to whom much of the work will be entrusted. This is largely a work of teaching.

Because the Board of Religious Education realizes these facts, it is anxious that our boys and girls shall know more about the church. One step toward seeing this desire realized, will be "Men and Millions Day" which it is hoped will be observed in every Sunday School and every Christian Endeavor Society during the month in January.

In the Sunday Schools, it is not necessary that this program shall interfere with the regular class period. It may easily be given for the opening or closing service. Suggestions for the service will be sent to every worker who will drop a card to the office of the Field Secretary, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Virginia. A Responsive Reading is being printed which will give in a brief, simple form the chief facts which our people should know. Copies of this are free to every Sunday School. They may be used in two ways: 1, As a reading exercise, as suggested, for Men and Millions Sunday; 2, As extra-memory work in the Sunday School classes and Junior Christian Endeavor Societies, where with the help of the leader the boys and girls will memorize part or all of the questions and answers for special honor. The Day is called "Men and Millions Sunday" because these words sum up the whole program of our church at this time, and with this slogan, the Southern Christian Convention is undertaking a great work.

Christian Endeavor Societies may wish to celebrate this day on the last Sunday of January when their regular subject is "What Are the Rightful Claims of Our Church upon us?" Every one of our seventy and more Young People's Societies should on this night face fairly the claims of the Christian Church for our loyalty, our prayers, our money, and our very lives that the world may be blessed through the work of the church.

Choose the best Sunday in January for your Church. Write us for material. If your Sunday School has thought of going into "winter quarters," observe this special day, and resolve in the spirit of the day to carry on your work throughout the year.

The Board of Religious Education challenges our Sunday School leaders and our Christian Endeavor forces to enter into a larger program during the year 1923, and to begin that program by looking at the work of the church as a whole on your "Men and Millions' Sunday", facing prayerfully the call of your church and of your Father in Heaven to work for Him.

"Press on. The best of men are those unwon;
The vaster harvest-fields are unexplored,
The greater task remaineth to be done;
Make straight a desert pathway for the Lord."

A GIVING CLASS.

The Philathea Class of the Suffolk Christian Church recently celebrated its ninth anniversary. The report for the year showed 109 members on the roll, 480 visits made to the Hospitals and $386.69 distributed for benevolences, the principal amounts being as follows:

Missions	$85.57
Tubercular patient at Catawaba, not a member of class	75.00
Orphanage	69.91
Sunday School Orchestra	33.00
Standardization Fund	40.00
Five Subscribers to CHRISTIAN SUN ..	10.00

The Class began the work of the 10th year by contributing Ten Dollars to the Superannuated Fund, thereby contributing to all the benevolences of the Church.

MR. WATSON'S ANSWER TO BRO. WEST.

Mr. J. E. West,
Suffolk, Va.,
My dear Mr. West:

Thank you for your letter of December 6th. In reply beg to say that our figures were furnished us by wire by Rev. J. F. Burnett, Secretary of the American Christian Convention. Mr. Burnett, however, in his telegram stated that local church expenses were not included and I presume the amount of money reported raised was simply the amount that entered into the general budget handled by him. We are desirous, however, of getting this more accurately reported for the next edition as it was clear in the last reports that some churches were reporting total budgets and others simply budgets exclusive of local expenses.

The questionnaire we will send out this year will, if the statisticians comply with our requests, minimize error in this respect.

We are extremely anxious to make our Year Book valuable in every way and especially in the matter of accuracy and, therefore, greatly appreciate your calling our attention to this matter and your offer of service.

Sincerely yours,
E. O. WATSON, Secretary.

A Teaching Necessity

The recent International Sunday School Convention, in emphasizing the need for BETTER Sunday School instruction, paved the way for "Tarbell's Guide" as a necessity in every school!

Superior

to all other Helps in teaching value, ability, comprehensiveness, and modern appeal. "Tarbell's Guide" raises the international system clear above the objections of its critics, and is the logical teachers' help to-day!

Larger by far

than any other Lesson Handbook, full to overflowing with modern suggestions, "Tarbell's Guide" is now a necessity to all who would apply latest teaching methods and discoveries to Sunday School Lesson presentation.

CURIOUS FACTS ABOUT OUR EX-PRESIDENTS.

Americans lionize their chosen leaders. Our Presidents are the most carefully scrutinized individuals in the world. The number of eggs they eat for breakfast, the color of their ties, the kindness of their smiles, are all questions of national importance.

People are so interested in the President that on November 2d, when the news flashed over the wires that Mr. Harding had been elected a squad of Secret Service men quietly boarded the train for Marion. The President must always be under guard, not only from the violence of possible enemies, but from the curiosity of his admirers.

With Mr. Harding's inauguration Woodrow Wilson became merely a private citizen, but the American public will always be interested in what he says and does. If he follows the precedent set by former ex-Presidents, he will still take an active part in public life.

Washington retired to Mount Vernon to live as a planter; but, when war with France threatened in 1798 he was commissioned leader of the army. Jefferson founded the University of Virginia, of which Madison was later an official.

Many former Presidents have been active in politics after retiring from the highest office in the land. Madison was a delegate to the Virginia constitutional convention. John Quincy Adams served as national Representative for sixteen years. Van Buren was defeated for a second term, but continued to take a prominent part in political affairs. Tyler was elected to the first Confederate Congress. Andrew Johnson, after being defeated for the Senate and the House, was finally elected to the Senate in 1875.

Of our more recent ex-Presidents, several have served as professors at leading universities, Benjamin Harrison at Leland Stanford, Cleveland at Princeton, and Taft at Yale.

True to his strenuous disposition, Mr. Roosevelt did not find one occupation sufficient, and so divided his time in the fields of African and South American exploration, magazine writing, and politics.

There has often been a marked contrast in the financial situation of the men on and off the presidential stage. Although the President receives only $75,000 a year salary, this amount is but a fraction of the amount appropriated for his use. Provision is made for all of his ordinary expenses. He has 25,000 a year for traveling expenses. Uncle Sam pays for his secretary, his office helpers, his secret service guards, and his servants. When he entertains at a state dinner, the government not only furnishes the chicken, but the flowers; the White House green house, by the way, costs about $9,000 a year. From these luxurious surroundings an ex-President steps out into the cold, cold world. Uncle Sam gives him nothing with which to feather his nest in his declining years.

Many of our former Presidents have found it difficult to make a living, for it is harder possibly for them to compete with others in the commercial world. Jefferson was forced to sell his library to Congress to help pay his debts. Monroe died almost in poverty. Grant was forced to pawn his gifts from his tour of the world in order to obtain funds. Many men have declined the opportunity to run for the presidency because they felt that they must provide for old age, something Presidents hardly have time to do. In 1922 several men, notably Mr. McAdoo, gave this as their reason for refusing to lift a hand in the preliminary nomination contests.

The interest on $200,000 at six per cent would provide $12,000 annually for the comfort of our former leaders. Such a sum, although not large, would remove the fear of poverty such as some ex-Presidents have actually experienced. If we had paid this sum to all of our ex-Presidents from Washington down to the present day during all of the years of their retirement, we should have expended about $2,736,000, or about one-fourth of what the United States pays for battleship that wears out in a few years. It is argued, however, that some appropriation should be made, not because it is comparatively small, but because in the past many of our ex-Presidents have been financially embarrassed. America cannot afford to be neglectful of her most distinguished citizens.

It has been suggested that the ex-President should be ex-officio advisers to the President in office. They could doubtless give much valuable advice. But as in the case of Mr. Wilson and Mr. Harding the incoming executive is often a man of different political faith and with different ideas of "how to save the nation." Cooperation would prove difficult if not impossible.

We often hear the phrase, "our only living ex-President." There was a time when there were five living ex-Presidents; this was during Lincoln's first administration, when Van Buren, Tyler, Fillmore, Pierce, and Buchanan were all alive. It is a noteworthy fact that in the record of the Civil War none of their names are outstanding. Four ex-Presidents were alive during the administration of John Quincy Adams, Polk, and Buchanan. During nine other terms there have been three ex-Presidents. During five terms the phrase "our only living ex-President" has been true. During many administrations, of course, the number has varied, due to the death of some former chief executive.

The record for long life after leaving the presidency is held by John Adams who lived for 25 years after his retirement. Next comes Van Buren and Fillmore with 21 years to their credit, and John Quincy Adams with 18 years.

Of the 27 men who have held the office, one was less than 50 when he was succeeded, Garfield being 49 years and 10 months old at the time of his death. Fifteen were between the ages of 50 and 60; seven between 60 and 65; and five between 65 and 70. Though a large percentage were not yet 60, the best years of their lives were behind them. After a President has dealt with Congress and an army of office seekers for from four to eight years he is ready for a long vacation.

That the presidency is growing more and more strenuous may be deduced from the comparative ages of the Presidents. John Adams died at the age of 90; Jefferson at the age of 83; John Quincy Adams at the age of 80. But since the Civil War not one of our ex-Presidents has reached the age of 75.—CARSON C. HATHAWAY, in C. E. World.

A Bed-Time Story.

It was growing late and the evening breeze just stirred the fallen October leaves. The mother stood in the open of the tiny cottage, her tired eyes gazed into the dust, then turning, she called her children to her. "Alonsus and Evette, dears," she said, "it is growing late, soon you must go to bed; but, as it is so hot, you may go down to the corner and get a soda, and on your way back, my darlings, stop at the drug store and bring your father home."

And they all lived happily ever after.

Bankers' Convention.

A young groom who happened to strike town during the Bankers' Convention and the World's Series found it necessary to telegraph home to Papa for more funds to finance the honeymoon, he was rather surprised to receive a message from the father saying: "I am sending you money for your hotel bill. Don't buy any more hotels at that price. They are cheating you."

A CHRISTMAS GIFT TO THE WORLD

By BISHOP WILLIAM A. QUAYLE

☪THE silent skies have set up a song. The great blue-black vault of the night heavens is now a blaze of light and a gust of song. There is a chime of wings—the wings of angels. Their silver trumpets shine like white fire. The domed skies are crowded with shining, hal- lowed faces, and every face clear as a star, but like a star smiling.

☪AND then these shining, smiling faces break forth into exultant music. Singing was invented that night. It sprang full-throated from heaven's heart—the Hall- elujah Chorus of the Angels. The black night sky, silent for centuries past, has now become a holy, ex- uberant, exultant voice.

☪WHAT has happened to bring the shining, winged angels down against our ground where sleeping sheep are watched by sleepless shepherds in the dark? No- body can guess. The thing which brought them here is beyond our guesses. We cannot guess so high. Though we fly far like the stars, we cannot come as far as the Epiphany of that night. What happened? Ask it, Earth. Ask it, sin-weary world! Ask it, sin-bounded world. Ask it, weary, weeping women. Ask it, war- wounded men. Ask it slave kennelled with the dogs. Ask it, child who hangs no Christmas stocking up. Ask it, dim eyes from which all hope has died. Ask it, yet earthly multitudes for whose throats there is no song and for whose hearts there is no sky, and for whose dust there is neither angel nor spirit! ASK IT.

☪AND the angels raptured their song, "Christ is here, this is Christmas night!"

☪RUN, shepherds, though ye be slow of foot, outrun the winds!

☪AND NOW, since that night, all the year's road leads toward Christmas. We are Christmas bound. We look ahead; and there Sweet Christmas stands, when God gave His only begotten Son.

☪THAT is Christmas—the gift of God of His Son, even our Christ. Merry Christmas! This earth has Christmas, wherefore, earth, exult, lift up your voice and sing Christmas carols, not to the skies, not to the angels in high antiphon, but to God the Father for the gift of God the son.

☪WE must all hang our stockings up. Christmas is here. We must all fill somebody's stocking up. Christ- mas is here.

☪CHRIST gave gifts unto men—Merry Christmas! We be His children, His little children, His bigger children, His big children. We must do as He did and does. Christ gave gifts unto men.

☪CHRISTIANITY, you are God's child, give Christmas gifts to men. Hang the world's stockings up. The chimney corner is crowded with the hung-up stockings of the world's children, and needy grown folks of the whole earth. They must not be disap- pointed on Christmas morning. Must they?

☪WHEREFORE, everybody blessed of Christ, in whose heart Christmas is come, give Christmas gifts to the world, to which Christ gave Himself a Christ- mas gift. Merry Christmas!

☪AND if we give to the least of these My brethren, then on Christmas morning we shall see the Christ looking at us and smiling.

☪Merry Christmas!

VOLUME LXXIV.

RICHMOND, VA., THURSDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1922.

NUMBER 52.

THE SUN'S OBSERVATORY

Ancient Bible.—

In a large collection of books recently presented to the Cambridge Municipal Library by a woman whose identity is kept secret has been discovered an edition of the Bible nearly 400 years old and now valued at $100,000. T. Harrison Cummings, librarian, has just learned the value of the edition.

The volume, it is said, is one of four extant in the world and came from the hand press of Peter Quentels in Cologne in 1527. Other copies are in the British Museum, London; the Royal Library, Stuttgart, and the National Library, Paris.

"I have found the book of the law in the house of the Lord."—2 Kings 22:8.—The M. Protestant.

"Goliath Versus God!"—

Goliath seemed to have everything on his side except God. And the things in which he boasted were just the things in which men are prone to boast today.

He had physical strength. "His height was six cubits and a span." Athletics had done all they could for him, and he was a fine type of animal protection.

He had a splendid military equipment. "A helmet of brass," and "a coat of mail," and "a spear like a weaver's beam!" Surely, if fine material equipment determines combats, the shepherd-lad from the hills of Bethlehem will be annihilated.

And he enjoyed the enthusiastic confidence of the Philistines. He was his nation's pride and glory! He strode out amid their shouts, and the cheers were like iron in his blood.

But all this counted for nothing, because God was against him. Men and nations may attain to a fine animalism, their warlike equipment may satisfy the most exacting standard, and yet, with God against them, they shall be as structures woven out of mists, and they shall collapse at the touch of apparent weakness. The issue was not Goliath versus David, but Goliath versus God!"—John Henry Howett.

The Root of the Tree.—

The United States Government has been finally aroused to righteous indignation against the open violation of the eighteenth amendment, and President Harding has proclaimed throughout the country his determination to punish violators of the law. In anticipation of this new departure the authorities at Washington, the Federal courts began, almost immediately after the November elections, to punish violators of the law by sending them to prison rather than by the mere imposition of fines. It was discovered that fines were without any decisive results; for if a man is fined even ten thousand dollars for breaking the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act, and at the same time makes fifty thousand dollars during each epoch of punishment, what cares that man for the fine itself, or even for the law, in the name of which the fine is imposed? He is still forty thousand ahead, and the aftermath of court action such as this is nothing less than disrespect for the majesty of the law. But sending a lawbreaker to prison is effective in two ways at once. First of all, it deprives the lawbreaker of his personal liberty and compels him to realize that he is really a criminal; and, as a second great influence, it creates a wholesome environment in the community from which the lawbreaker goes to his cell. This is laying the axe to the root of the tree; and the upas tree of anarchy which has grown up under the shadow of the outlawed liquor traffic can be destroyed in no other way. President Harding now follows this enlightened and progressive policy of the judiciary by announcing to the whole nation a determination to compel respect for the Constitution of the United States, and for all the enactments which are corollary to this fundamental law of the land.—Methodist Recorder.

"And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees."—Matt. 3:10.

What Can Be Done to Relieve the Indian?—

The Christian Advocate of Nashville, Tenn., is doing some plain talking out in meeting. This talk is not vain, but very much needed. The only serious question is: Will the people of this country heed the talk? It ought to do so and it ought to do it at once. Listen to what the Advocate is saying:

"Under the title 'The Case for the Indian' the Graphic Number of the Survey for October, 1922, has articles and pictures representing the Indians, particularly of the Pueblos of New Mexico and the Southwest, and these points are made respecting the injustices which the Indians have suffered: Their interests have been administered by Indian agents, who have almost absolute power over the Indians' property and personal rights, and this power inevitably has in many cases been exercised arbitrarily. This is a criticism not of men so much as of the wrong system which the government has followed from the very beginning in dealing with the Indians. Congress is the ultimate authority in dealing with Indian affairs. Congress changes as party politics change, and the politics of the government with reference to treaties, the removal of wrongs, and the protection of rights have been vacillating and changing. Indian fortunes have been bandied back and forth. Under such treatment the Indians have become suspicious, and few government officials who deal with them take time to enter into their thoughts and secure their confidence. Although the number of Indians in the country is not large (about 330,000 altogether), yet they have peculiar claims upon the conscience of the American people, and the American people should demand that a wise and continuing policy should be pursued in dealing with them and protecting all of their interests."

Japanese Can't be U. S. Citizen.—

The supreme court has made a decision of far-reaching importance, in a case coming from Hawaii where a Japanese sought to be naturalized as an American citizen. The court cites the various laws of congress dating from 1790 which all limit naturalization to persons either of "free white" blood or those of African descent. It declares that the Japanese do not come under either of these two heads and hence they are excluded. Congress, it says, must state its intentions plainly if it wants other standards adopted.

This question of the eligibility of Japanese for citizenship has been making trouble for years. The Japanese are a spirited and proud race and they do not take kindly to any action by this country which implies that they are inferiors. As a matter of fact they are our superiors in some ways. Just now, for instance, they are censoring American movie films because they find them immoral. But that is not the point. The traditional policy has been to keep this a "white man's country," and the Asiatics are not classed as "white," though they may actually be whiter, both outside and inside, than some of the scum and dregs we admit from Europe. It is the law that decides.

The Japanese will naturally be angered at this new slap in the face. For some years there has been a "gentlemen's agreement" under which a limited number of Japanese have been admitted to this country, and the issue has thus remained in suspense. Sooner or later it would have to be met, and the supreme court has merely done an unpleasant duty in saying plainly what the law is. Many Japanese are already American citizens by birth, for the constitution gives citizenship to all persons born in U. S. Territory.—Pathfinder.

"Yet it came to pass, when the children of Israel were waxen strong, that they put the Canaanites to tribute: but did not utterly drive them out."—Joshua 17:13.

NOTES-PERSONALS

That is an interesting article in this issue by Bro. Richard Klages, Suffolk, Va., on a "Wonderful Occurrence in Astronomy Proves that a Star Did appear when Christ was Born." Read it carefully and get its worth. Write again Bro. Klages.

Rev. E. M. Carter, Wadley, Ala., has recently been on a visitation to our North Alabama work in the interests of our Men and Millions. Bro. Carter, tell us of what you found over in that field as to the prospects not only of Men and Millions, but of the outlook generally for our cause in that part of the State.

"You are doing very excellent work as editor. How I wish the circulation of our church papers could be many times increased. The members in general do not seem to appreciate the very helpful labors of a consecrated editor who toils almost night and day for their spiritual welfare. God help us all more and more. I have long appreciated your able and conscientious labors of love for all."—Rev. Albert Godley, Tenafly, N. J.

Did you preach the sermon on Sunday before Christmas on the Virgin Birth of Christ? If so, will you send it to the editor of this paper by Jan. 1, 1923, in competition for the five dollars in gold offered by the editor for the sermon on that subject and in its favor? The merits of the sermons will be determined by three able ministers of the gospel—and when they have decided who is entitled to it the money will be sent at once.

The International Purity Association has taken for its mission the awakening of the people on the need of purity in the life of the people. In a private note the Rev. Albert Godley says, "the matter has been so sadly neglected! God help the people to think!" Indeed purity among the people is the one great need in connection with the Christian life. Many indulge, as we fear, in impurity without much thought. Bro. Godley, some may not encourage you, but do your best to awaken the people as to their need of purity of heart and life.

Rev. S. Q. Helfenstein, D. D., the editor of our Sunday School Literature, Dayton, Ohio, speaks of his visit to the Burlington Convention with great interest. He says he was in such a delightful home, and we guess all the delegates to that Convention feel that way, and well they may, for the Burlington people generally have very delightful homes. For this Quadrennium Dr. Helfenstein has been given the work of editing the Bible Class Quarterly. The harness must fit our brother, for he has been in this work of editing our Sunday School literature since Jan. 1, 1907.

Rev. M. W. Butler, pastor of the Muncie, Ind., Christian Church, has recently been elected Secretary of the Ministerial Association of that city and the county in which the city is located, and as we think, they have made no mistake in their selection, for Bro. Butler will not only do his work well and faithfully, but his record will be as neat and correct as the most artistic taste could desire. We are glad, too, to learn that Bro. Butler's work is prospering. His people have just renovated the entire church building, putting it in fine shape. His work is steadily growing and gives promise of great usefulness.

Brethren, in writing for the press, do not use abbreviated forms of words, except possibly in the case of such as are usually in that way. If you wish to write Suffolk, Va., such an abbreviation is allowable, but in most other instances it is well to spell the word out in full. Do not forget it, please, when you write. Your abbreviation is perfectly understood by yourself, but to many readers it is so much Chinese. The man who writes, "the people of the E. V. C. C.," may be positive of its meaning, but not one in ten will know that he is writing of the people of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference. Write it out, and the people will not misunderstand you.

One of our leading laymen says: "You might have given us laymen a chance on the Virgin Birth prize. The idea is fine." Well now, that was an oversight—we shall be quite willing to have any layman make the effort and he shall come in on equal terms with the ministers who may write for that purpose. We suppose the fact that laymen are so little accustomed to write on such themes may be the reason we did not include them, but if any shall write on this question we shall instruct the judges to give the laymen equal hearing with the ministers. We do not regard the Five Dollars offered as a prize, but as a reward for the one who does the best work.

That was a beautiful act on the part of Y. W. C. A. and the Y. M. C. A., connected with Elon College, when they made a Christmas tree for the Baby Home Department of our Christian Orphanage at Elon. What a treat it must have been to the dear little orphans—they had no father and mother to look after making them happy at this Christmas time, but these dear young people in college had the thoughtfulness to take the place of the father and mother who are not, and make the little ones happy on this happy occasion. These young people may have many opportunities in this life, but not many of these opportunities will be more to their credit than this generous deed done for the little orphans on this occasion. See Mr. Cannon's letter in this issue.

Let us settle up all old accounts before New Year's and then begin the New Year with a clean sheet and do our best to keep it clean in honor of our Saviour who gave His life that we might be able to live a clean life and so a fruitful life in all that is good. Especially if you are holding any old grudge in your heart against some one, by all means get that out and put it away forever, or if you allow it to keep its abiding place in your heart and mind, it will condemn you forever before the judge of all the earth. Do you ask my authority for making such a statement? Then turn to Matt. 6:14-15 and read: "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your Heavenly Father will also forgive you. But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." That is plain enough. A school boy, ten years of age, ought to be able to understand the meaning of that statement. Now if you do not forgive men their trespasses, then you know what your sentence is—you cannot be forgiven and your doom is sealed, unless you do repent and forgive others their trespasses as you hope and wish to be forgiven.

The Presbyterian of The South says: "If the fundamental doctrines of the church are to be discredited, there is little hope for the church." That is just our view of the matter. The Lord, in a certain sense, made the church the custodian of the truth, and now if the church means it will sit by and see the world crowd in and destroy the truth, then most surely the church will have an awful responsibility in the day when the accounts of the people of God will have a statement. It does seem that there are many who think it their privilege to repudiate any doctrine they may please to have it that way, but we cannot sacrifice to liberality, nor to toleration nor to broad fellowship. Not one of these was ever designed to take the place of the truth—it is truth that makes men and women free to shun sin and error and free to do the right thing at all times and under all circumstances. It is not liberalism, nor toleration, it is not broad fellowship that is to do the work of saving the world—that must be done by TRUTH through Christ. Even Christ will not save the world through error. If saved at all, it must be through the truth. If the great doctrines of Christianity are to be forgotten by an over dose of modernism, let us know now that surely the church will become a sort of a powerless and helpless thing—it will not be able to stand in the great battle between Truth and Righteousness on the one hand and between error and unrighteousness on the other. The church must take care of its own treasures, and that is what the TRUTH of God is—its the church's own light out of darkness. Let us see to it that the truth of God's Word is not sacrificed to Error, or to anything else. We shall lose our power in the day that we deliberately give up sound doctrine for real Error, for the church cannot save the world except through Christ and the truth He has given to the world. See that you do your part to help the church stand for the truth God has given to her—for that is her hope of life in Christ. Surely, if we give up the stronghold of Christianity to please the devil, then we can expect nothing but failure. See that you do not surrender any truth that has been given to you—hold it till the end.

SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION TO MEET IN MAY.

By vote of the Convention in its recent session in Suffolk the Southern Christian Convention is called to meet in "extraordinary" session on Tuesday the first day of May next at 7:30, P. M. I am reminding the brotherhood of this action through our paper, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and to invite any church wishing to entertain the Convention at the time to let me have their invitation at once.

According to custom the Convention should meet in N. C. Come on N. C. and give us an invitation.

The Executive Committee invites suggestions as to program, if you have any let us have them.

Yours in Christ,

LEON EDGAR SMITH, President.

FROM DOWN SOUTH.

On account of the inclemency of the weather we did not have any service at Bethany the second Saturday, but had two services Sunday. Rev. P. L. Duke, pastor of Beulah Christian Church went with us and preached two heart searching sermons which were enjoyed very much by those who heard him.

After the eleven o'clock service, we went to our car and found it loaded with good things to eat, such as dried fruit, canned fruit, sugar cane syrup, pickles, preserves, and many other things.

In my absence from home the second Saturday night the good folks of North Highland gave my wife a pounding, such as sugar, coffee, meal, and many other things we needed. Surely these people are a willing people. May the Lord richly bless them all and help me to render them more efficient service.

THROWING MUD AT OUR ANCESTORS.

We think it is time we were learning some sense in the practical spheres of life. If a father has done an honest part for his boy, why should the boy go around throwing mud at his father? We will venture to assert that in every such case there has been a fall—it was truly the descent of man. Why is it that some of our “moderns” seem to like to throw mud at their ancestors? Well, if we had to guess at an answer to that question, we should think he throws mud at his ancestors because they are so far ahead of him as to make him feel that it is his only way to catch up, and if he did but have wisdom enough to know it, he will never catch up that way.

The truth is the best blood that ever flowed through human veins was in the Puritans, and the ablest men that this country has ever produced were the sons of Puritan fathers and mothers. When we hear a man ridiculing the Puritans, we guess at once that there is some weak place in the moral character of that man, and we believe our guess is right. The moral stamina of this country came to us through our Puritan fathers and mothers. The outcome of Puritan stock in the people of this country has been the strength of our citizenship for many years, and while they had their defects, the fruits of Puritan ancestors is away ahead of the present day citizenship which has come to us out of present day tendencies to such utter liberalism as to make a mockery of training a child in the way he should go—the policy of the modern would seem rather to be train up a child in no way, but let him do as he may please.

The Western Christian Advocate puts the matter in a true light, as it seems to us. Read what that good paper says:

Every once in a while someone throws the searchlight upon our Puritan fathers. For some reason it frequently results to their disadvantage. Perhaps the lens used is too powerful. Something always happens that affects our ideals. The light used never fails to lower them or reduce them in size. It seeks to reveal the fact that we have been thinking about them under a delusion. It seeks to drive us to the conclusion that they were not as great as we have been led to think they were. What shall we say to this? What about these detractors? Are they trustworthy? What is their intent? Well, they are men of ability. They seem to enjoy taking a “bat” at the worthy men whom the nation has been taught to revere.

We believe it is not very helpful for our American idealism to have a certain type of historians tell us with a sneer the Pilgrims and the Puritans were very human; that they were very narrow; that they were intolerant; that they had many flagrant faults; that they were not the saints we have thought them to be by a long sight. They smash the moral character and down goes in a crash another ideal. Now comes another historian declaring that George Washington, first in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen, bought lottery tickets, loved chicken fights and his daily dram, speculated in lands, and accomplished other mild sins. Then this historian ironically declared he is “fed up on our ancestors.” Too bad for this modern Pharisee who out-Puritans the great cavalier.

Why should a man throw clubs at his ancestors? Why should one suddenly grow sick of his fathers? Why read a man into the times in which he lived and then condemn him in the light of present-day moral standards? The people of this country have been led to highly value the men and women who founded this nation. Shall we come to believe they were no better than the middle-class folks we are today? Shall we pull them down, throw mud at them because their lives stand in such sublime contrast with our own? Well, nevertheless we believe in George Washington and the spiritual and moral integrity of the Puritan fathers.

DO YOU WISH AN EXAMPLE OF CHRISTIAN HEROISM?

Sometimes we see in professing Christians such examples of real cowardice as to make us feel that there are no real example of true heroism in the lives of Christian men and women of today, but that is a mistake. No doubt there are both men and women in the church who show little bravery for Christ and the church. Such instances throw so much gloom on the situation of present day religion that we are tempted to say, “Well there are no brave Christian men and women, who will dare any danger and take any risk,” but that too is a mistake. There are at least some of as brave Christians on the earth today as ever have been, and they were men and women who were of the common crowd, but in some way they had grace enough to make them heroes and heroines for the cause of Christ, and they did it like men who know their Lord and Master.

We found the other day a clipping concerning the life and death of Mary Morrill who laid down her life for the cause of Christ, and did it nobly and unselfishly. She no doubt loved life as most people do, but when it came to the matter of dying for the truth, she went unflinchingly to her death at the hands of the boxer rebels a few years ago. Read it and if you do not feel like rising up to stand for the cause of Christ, when you see how bravely she died, then we shall feel that there is something lacking in the make-up in your character. True Christianity gives courage to the real children of God. Read the following account of Mary Morrill's death and see if it does not impress you with the thought that the grace of God is sufficient for every need of a Christian man or woman who has dedicated all to the service of our God. The exchange presents the matter as follows:

MARY MORRILL AND GENERAL FENG.

Mary Morrill was an American missionary who in 1900 was beheaded by the Boxers; and Feng, at that time a young Chinese cadet, was one of the witnesses. The impression must have been similar to that which doubtless was made upon Saul when the latter witnessed the martyrdom of Stephen.

“Feng heard the woman missionary plead for the lives of the missionaries and of the Chinese Christians. When that plea was of no avail, he heard her beg that they might slay her and spare the others. He saw her on the way to the place of execution, speaking quietly to some of the people who watched the procession, and giving silver from her purse to a poor creature in the crowd. He saw the fortitude with which she met her death. The sacrificial love which stood there revealed made an unforgettable impression on him.”

It was Mary Morrill's martyrdom, together with other deeply impressive incidents, which finally resulted in Feng's conversion in 1911, and during the eleven years that have since elapsed General Feng has probably been the most mightily used Christian in China. Not only has his own brigade, numbering not far from ten thousand men, been led in large part to Christ, but thousands of others have been pointed to the Lamb of God, and in addition many needed reforms have been successfully instituted.

A CALL FOR THE OBSERVANCE OF WORLD PEACE SUNDAY.

Issued By

THE FEDERAL COUNCIL OF THE CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AMERICA.

To the Churches of America:

In accordance with the proposal of the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches that Christmas Sunday, or the Sunday preceding Christmas, be recognized in all nations as World Peace Sunday, the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America urges all churches throughout our country to cooperate in this world-wide observance.

When can we more appropriately voice our appeal for peace than at the celebration of the coming into the world of Him whom we hail as the Prince of Peace? Especially in a year when we are still haunted by the memory of ten million young men who laid down their lives in the last war; when famine and want continue to stalk in its wake; when intrigue and selfishness again are seeking to control the foreign policies of nations; when rival armaments and threats of war tragically harass the people of Europe, it would seem to be the clear obligation of every Church that bears the name of Christ to raise its voice unequivocally against the whole war system and to demand that the governments of the world find other ways of settling every dispute which may arise.

Other ways can and will be found if the Christian people of the world urgently and persistently demand it. By a concerted appeal at Christmas time, followed by unremitting effort during the year, we may bear effective witness to our conviction that war can be outlawed by the building up of international agencies for the preservation of peace and the development of a community life among the nations.

Most of all at this Christmas tide let us proclaim our unshaken faith that a great increase in the spirit of trust and brotherhood and good-will, and this alone, will make world peace a permanent reality. The task of getting rid of war and securing peace requires international organization, but it requires more. The trouble in our present international life is a spiritual trouble the attitude of selfishness, of fear, of suspicion among men in organized groups. So the remedy must be a spiritual one, the acceptance of a way of life not yet generally accepted in economic and international affairs—the way of brotherhood, of friendly cooperation and of love, revealed to us in Him whose life we now commemorate.

THE WHAT AND WHY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

BY REV. W. T. WALTERS.

(This sermon was preached at the Seventh Street Christian (Disciples) Church Dec. 10th, as one of a series of "Better Acquaintance" sermons, participated in by various denominations.)

Because of the spirit, because of the trend of churches at the present time, I think we are beginning to realize that the task before the Kingdom of Christ is too large for any one denomination, and that if we are to make the church the great force it would be that there must be a united effort. We may have a neighbor a few blocks from us of whom we know little, and perhaps think little, but if we can get acquainted with him, the probability is that we shall like him better. I believe that the better our churches get acquainted with each other, the better we shall like each other, and the better we like each other, the better we can work together. There ought not to be any feeling of distrust, jealousy, or any feeling at all in a bad way against one of our sister denominations. We have our different beliefs. We have our different forms of government, ceremonies, but if we are living the Christian life at all, we are all children of the same Heavenly Father, worshipping the same God. We are brothers and sisters in Christ and as such we ought to work and toil and labor together.

My text tonight may be found in the twenty-first verse of the seventeenth chapter of St. John: "That they all may be one;"

I want to bring you tonight by way of introduction that which sounds like a romance, that which we might find in counterpart in fiction, the beginning of the Christian Church.

In the year 1792, the first General Convention of the Methodist Church met in Baltimore. The church was just shaping up its form of government. In that Convention, there was a presiding elder who was opposed to the episcopal form of government, who felt that the ministers and the laymen ought to have some privileges and rights aside from those granted by a bishop, and in that Convention James O'Kelly introduced the following resolution: "When a minister is appointed to a field of labor, if he does not want to go to that field, he may appeal from that decision." They debated the question for three days, and then the resolution was voted down. James O'Kelly declared that it took a man's privilege away from him. He walked out of the Convention with thirty other ministers. They still wanted to be a part of the church, and sent a committee to the Bishop, but to no avail. They met the next year and called themselves the "Republican Methodist Church." In 1794, they met again and one of their number taking the Bible, and holding it up, said: "I find here that the followers of Jesus Christ were called Christians. I move that henceforth we call ourselves Christians." Another said: "I move that we take the Word of God as our creed and rule of faith and practice." This was the formal beginning of the Christian Church, and took place in the State of Virginia, in Surry County.

In 1799, there was a great revival in Kentucky, known as the Cane Ridge Revival. Numbers of people were converted. People became so interested that they left their homes for weeks to attend the meetings. Among those who took part were a number of Presbyterians. When the meeting was over those who took such an active part found they were not in such good standing with the Presbyterians, and they formed an organization of their own.

In 1804 they wrote what was called the "Last Will and Testament of the Springfield Presbytery" and they adopted, as the people in Virginia, the Bible as their creed, Christian as their name, the test of fellowship, Christian character.

In 1802 there was a Baptist in New England who did not agree with all the teachings of his church, and started out to form an organization of his own, and organized his first church at Lynden, Vermont. His name was Abner Jones, and he did exactly as these other organizations had done. As far as we have been able to find out these organizations knew nothing of each other. They were effected thirty years before the first railroad, forty before the first telegraph. Mail facilities were poor. There were few newspapers. Yet these three sections had just one thing in mind. We want a church which is broad enough to include every follower of Jesus Christ. In 1809 they got in touch with each other. They found that they were on the same platform, standing on the same ground, having adopted the same principles, and there was nothing to do but to unite into one church. The Christian Church has its weaknesses, but it came from good stock, from the Methodist in the South, the Presbyterian in the West, and the Baptist in the North.

Briefly, I wish to refer to some things which the Christian Church has done. The Christian Church published the first religious newspaper in the world. The oldest newspaper published in the world today, is published in Dayton, Ohio, "The Herald of Gospel Liberty," established in 1808. The Christian Church was first to open its college doors with equal privileges to both sexes, in Antioch College, at Yellow Springs, Ohio, under the leadership of the great educator, Horace Mann. The Christian Church was the first church to advocate the unity of all Protestant churches, the first church to adopt the Bible name and to take the Bible as its creed, to make Christian character the only test of fellowship.

As a church we stand definitely for five things, which we call our Five Cardinal Principles.

First: "The Lord Jesus Christ is the only head of the church." Numbers of Scripture references could be pointed out, but time permits only one or two. "And he is the head of the body, the church: "Cor. 1:18. And gave him to be the head over all things to the church, which is his body"—Eph. 1:22-23. The Word of God teaches us that Jesus Christ is the head of the church. We do not believe that power has ever been transferred to a pope, bishop, conference, synod, presbytery, committee or anybody, but that Christ is still the head of the church and that the church must look to Jesus for leadership, instruction and teaching as to how we shall live and what we shall do.

Second: "Christian is a sufficient name for the church." In connection with this I wish to read a prophecy and its fulfillment. In Isaiah 62:2, these words are found: "And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory: and thou shalt be called by a new name which the mouth of the Lord shall name." And this prophecy concerning the followers of Jesus Christ was fulfilled. "And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch"—Acts 11:26. You might say tonight: "Your church is trying to appropriate to itself a name which belongs to all of us." We do not look at it from that standpoint at all, but we are trying to serve our Heavenly Father. We try to live as His children, and as His children, we refuse to take any other name than the name the Father has given us. You may claim that the name has nothing to do with it, but the name does mean a good deal. The Church of Jesus Christ is represented as the bride and Christ as the bridegroom. Shall the bride wear the name of the groom, or some other name? If your name is Smith, do you want your wife known as Mrs. Jones, no matter how good a man Jones may be? It makes a difference. When the denominations of this country became interested in the work of Japan and sent missionaries there, leading Japanese came to them and said: "You have brought to us thirty Christs. You go back and decide amongst yourselves which is the right Christ and then come to us." And the head of the denominations all agreed that the Empire of Japan was worth more than their denominational names, so they adopted the name "Christians." That was the only name of all which they could come together on in Japan, and in other foreign fields. Our church believes that what is good for Japan and other heathen countries is good for all the world and we believe that the Church of Jesus Christ is going to reach out and take this world, and that to do this they must come together somewhere under a name that will win the world. What was the church named for anyhow? So that we might tell the difference between followers of Jesus Christ, or is it a name that might tell the difference between the church and the world? We want a name that will differentiate between the people in the church and out of the church, and the name "Christian" will do that because the followers of Christ have been called "Christians" from the early days.

Third: "The Holy Bible is the sufficient rule of faith and practice." "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." II Tim 3:16-17.

"The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul: the testimony of the Lord is sure, making wise the simple. The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart: the commandment of the Lord is pure, enlightening the eyes." Ps. 19:7-18.

We believe that the best creed that man has ever written for a church was the creed that was nearest like this Book, but we believe that the Book is better still than the creed that was written by man. "The Law of the Lord is perfect converting the soul." Does a creed do that? "The testimony of the Lord is sure making wise the simple." If the creed does that it ought to be as easy as this Book. "The commandment of the Lord is pure enlightening the eyes." If the Bible is made plain enough that we can understand it, and God certainly intended that it should be, why should you want to try to improve upon it? If you believe in a creed. I have no quarrel with you. Those who believe in a creed have two main reasons for doing so:

1. They believe that a creed will keep out dangerous elements. What is the dangerous element that we wish to keep out? Your neighbor in the other church who does not practice and believe as you do? I do not consider the people of any church a dangerous element. Any man who is serving God is not a dangerous element.

2. They believe that the creed will bind people together. If you will study the history of creeds, you will find that it has not worked out just this way. Churches have been divided into many branches. There was something in the creed that somebody did not like, and they got out and made a new creed, and that has been kept up, until many denominations have been formed.

Fourth: "Christian character is the sufficient test of fellowship and church membership.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord shall enter into the kingdom of Heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in Heaven."—Matt. 7:21.

The Christian Church would open the door of the Church as wide as we believe that the door of Heaven is opened, and would say to every child of God: "No matter what may be your beliefs about what the churches differ upon, come in and make yourself at home in our church." We feel that we have no right to shut the door of the church in the face of any man who is living the Christian life, and to say to him because of the way you were baptized, because of your belief regarding church government, or because of any doctrine which you hold, you cannot be one of us. I am speaking for our church. We feel that we cannot afford to put a stumbling block in the way of any of God's little ones. No church on earth is as good as Heaven. Any man or woman who is fit to enter the Kingdom of Heaven is good enough to come into His church. Let him believe in whatever he pleases, if a man in your neighbor's church can get into Heaven, why should we not come together in the church, dwell together, live together? Why put up a barrier on earth? Christian character is the only test of church fellowship that is needed; the only test of church membership.

Fifth: "The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is the right and privilege that should be accorded to all."

"Who art thou that judgest another man's servant? to his own master he standeth or falleth: yea, he shall be holden up: for God is able to make him stand."—Romans 14:4.

The people of the church will never agree upon all things. We are getting closer together as denominations. We have made wonderful strides in the last fifty years. We will make more wonderful progress in the years to come, but we will never come to the time when everybody will see things alike. I do not believe that it is essential that we shall ever come to that. When you try to make men believe certain things, you are taking away individuality. When you make your little grooves, and ask men to step down into them, you are destroying initiative. That time is not coming. We are always going to have our different opinions. We are always going to look at things from different viewpoints. Just as long as men read that Bible, you are going to have people that believe with all their hearts that the only mode of baptism is to go under the water, and others who will believe just as strongly that is not necessary, and that one can be baptized by effusion. These are not the essential things. Let a man have the right of private judgment. A man may be dipped into the water a thousand times, and if he still believes in sprinkling, he is not baptized. Just as long as people differ on these things, we give a man the right of private judgment. We make our church broad enough to let him in. That is our position as a church.

In conclusion I wish to remind you of the night on which our Lord was betrayed. The night when he gathered those disciples very close about Him and when He felt the things which were before Him. He knew the trials which were coming. Those were not the things which troubled Him most. He started out with prayer. He prayed first that the Father would glorify Him. Then that God would keep them. But you know the prayer our Lord had on His heart and His mind. He looked on down through the centuries to our time, and he saw how the time would come that His people would be split up into different branches and five times in that one prayer He prayed that His people might be one; not divided, then He gave the reason why, "That the world might believe." I do not know what you think about it, my friends, but Christ said whatever He asked of the Father, He would give it to Him. He is going to give Him the answer to that prayer. You may say that it has been two thousand years and it has not been answered. But it took four thousand years from the time God promised the Son before He sent Him. It took four thousand years to get the world ready for the plan of salvation. It may take four thousand years but I believe the time is coming when we are going to be one.

There ought to be somewhere a common ground upon which all the followers of Jesus Christ can get together and a common meeting place where they can be one. I am not saying that my church has a foundation for that. We have come as close to it as we can. The foundation upon which the whole world can come and worship and unite together. There may be some things to be added yet. There may be some things to be changed. So far as we know how we have laid the foundation upon which every follower of Jesus Christ may come together. I believe that there ought to be an organization holding that thought out before the world. We stand there. We are willing to sacrifice, toil for it, labor for it, to struggle on year after year for it. We can worship with other denominations, but we never feel like we are altogether at home. A member of the Christian Church may unite with any other church when it is more convenient, but there is always something lacking, something which the other church does not have. We struggled on years and years without any response to this. We are not large yet as you count numbers, though our church extends through several States in the United States, and in Canada. We are not a large denomination, and we are still struggling on and already we are seeing in the dawn the coming day. Christian Endeavor Societies come together in the great Conventions on that platform of Christian fellowship. In our great gatherings, we recognize back of everything Christian character. We are standing for the same things. We recognize men as Christian men. We have seen the denominations of this country come together in the great Federal Council of Churches. Thirty different denominations have come on the platform of Christian Character. They have come with different beliefs, ceremonies, baptisms, on the basic principles of God—Christian character. We have seen the dawn of a new day. The sun is going higher toward the zenith and by and by, that great, glad day is going to burst upon the world when they all shall be one, even as the Son and the Father are one.

TOPICS FOR THE WEEK OF PRAYER, JANUARY 7-13, 1923.

SUGGESTED BY THE WORLD'S EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 7TH.

TEXT FOR SERMONS AND ADDRESSES.

"If Thy presence go not with us, carry us not up hence."—(Exodus 32:15.)

"Arise, shine, for thy light is come."—(Isaiah 60:1.)

"Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, that ye may go and bring forth fruit, that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name he may give it you."—(John 15:16.)

"Behold, I make all things new."—(Rev. 21:5.)

MONDAY, JANUARY 8TH.

"THANKSGIVING AND HUMILIATION."

"Let us give thanks"—For another year of the infinite patience and mercy of God. For every victory in our individual and national life of the Spirit of Christ. For the sense of failure revealing the greatness of our task; for the break-down of worldly policies and the emptiness of earthly success, revealing our need of Christ and His sufficiency. For every adventure of faith through the overcoming of fear and doubt; and God's response to it.

"Let us confess"—Our failure in past resolve; our lack of obedience; our denial of the spirit of fellowship; our feeble grasp of the range and glory of Christ's kingdom on earth; the closed mind and the hard heart and the censorious temper.

"And let us pray"—For the spirit of utter sincerity; the open mind to truth from whatever quarter; the ready heart to carry burdens in fellowship with Christ; the spirit of practical service and sacrificial sympathy; the willingness to accept rebukes and to learn from those to whom by temperament or conviction we are opposed. That being stripped of pride and searched in heart before the Cross, we may claim no standing but in His mercy and grace.

Scripture readings—Ps. 40; Matt. 17:1-21; II. Cor. 4.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 9TH.

"THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL—THE 'ONE BODY' OF WHICH CHRIST IS THE HEAD."

Let us give thanks—For all increase in charity through a new sense of what lies behind our differences. For an awakening social conscience throughout the church, and a braver claim to spiritual leadership. For a clearer vision of the things in which we can work together for the dominion of Christ. For all scorn suffered through our loyalty; and for all criticism through which we have come to see and confess our failure.

Let us confess—Our frequent blindness to spiritual issues in temporal things; our resentment of rebuke; our bigotry and prejudice; our want of faith in new enterprises; our foolish fears for the truth; our failure to explore and employ the powers which are ours in Christ Jesus; our want of the marks of the Cross, reflecting the spirit of the Lord.

And let us pray—For a new burning conviction of the world's need of Christ and of His glorious appearing; for a love that will win its way through all hindrances into the hearts of men; for a new fearlessness and hope, for a message without confusion and a heart without despair. That the desire for unity among the branches of the one church of Christ may be strengthened; that movement towards reunion may be guided by the Holy Spirit in all things; that a new confidence in the evangel of Jesus Christ may pervade the whole fellowship of faith.

Scripture reading—Isa. 42: 1-12; Luke 22:17-30; I. Cor. 13; Eph. 4:1-16.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 10TH.

NATIONS AND THEIR RULERS.

Let us thank God—For the deepening desire of peace; for the settlement of questions in the Far East which have long threatened the future; for efforts towards the restoration of Europe; for a closer international unity; the willingness to forget the past and to try new paths; for the quickened sense of responsibility among rulers in the maintainance of world peace.

Let us confess—The defects of our patriotism; our false ideas of national greatness; our want of sympathy with the difficulties of other nations; the cruelty and inhumanity which have mingled with progress; our slow emancipation from the spirit of national selfishness.

And let us pray—For all rulers, that they may be fitted for spiritual leadership; have a clean eye for moral issues in political questions, and courage, at all costs, to follow the light. For all nations, that the strong may increasingly respect the right of the weak. That the rising spirit of nationality throughout the world may be safely guided; that a vision of God as holy may be granted to cleanse from vice and selfishness; and a vision of God as love to deliver from disdain or strife; that all nations may come to see their mutual dependence in the family of mankind; that the kingdoms of the world may soon become the kingdom of God and of His Son, Jesus Christ.

Scripture Readings—Ps. 33; Ps. 72; Zech. 2:1-5; Eph. 2:13-22.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 11TH.
MISSIONS.

Let us give thanks—For the courage and loyalty of mission staffs amid tremendous difficulties. For the rallying of the church to meet the strain. For the power of Christian ideas in the outlook of nature governments; and the witness of the Spirit in countless heathen hearts.

Let us pray—For true conceptions of the kingdom of Christ and for His coming to reign. For union on the mission fields, and deliverance from intolerance and narrowness, from carelessness and disloyalty. For all missionaries, that grace may be given in the application of Christianity to the practical guidance of life among their converts. That the march of Islam may be stayed; that national movements may become a new Christian opportunity; that Christian men may find an increasing place in native governments. For the deepening of all nations in the fellowship of missionary service.

Scripture Readings—Isaiah 32; Acts 4:5-12; Rom. 10:11-21.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 12TH.
FAMILIES, SCHOOLS, COLLEGES, AND THE YOUNG.

Let us thank God—For the increasing demand for education. For the fresh interest awaking in many questions in the teaching of the Bible. For the growth of movements for child welfare, and the training of the young; for all Christian movements in our schools and colleges, and all they have accomplished.

Let us pray—For the recovery of home religion and the practice of family prayer. For the restoring of reverence by which love is purged from passion and base caprice. For the capture by Christ of the student mind and a new recognition of Him as Leader and Friend of youth. For the uplifting of ambition in youth from the spirit of gain into the spirit of service. For increased efficiency in Sunday Schools; that the church may lay the burden of the young upon her heart to bring them to God.

Scripture Readings—Matt. 19:13-22; Prov. 3:1-17; Ps. 119:9-16; 33-40.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 13TH.
THE HOME BASE, AND THE JEWS.

Let us pray—That the church may make a fresh discovery of Jesus Christ, and be delivered from lukewarmness into a spirit of daring and loyalty up to the point of sacrifice. That Christian men and masters may witness for Christ in business and industrial life. That Christ may become real to His church as in the early days, and find the same response of utter surrender. That work among the Jews may not be hindered by past prejudices and race feelings: that the spirit of Christ's forgiveness and yearning love may replace the ancient hostility. For patience to wait God's leisure in results, and zeal that knows no tiring; for deliverance from material values in results; for a new sense of own resources in Christ and faith to use them; for a love which refuses to be content with an individual or national salvation.

Scripture Readings—Isa. 60:1-5. 18-22; John 15:1-17; Eph. 3:14-21; 1 Cor. 1:18-31.

FANNIE CROSBY.

BY A MEMBER OF THE WAY OF FAITH STAFF.

This life, which was to be so useful for ninety-five years, came into existence in March, 1820, and continued on earth until February, 1915. Having become blind when six weeks old by the mal-practice of a physician applying poultices to her eyes, she, by her fortitude of faith, became a living example of what God's grace can do for one who is fully yielding to Him. This beautiful saint in her darkness had a heart which always had a melody in it to cheer and brighten other lives. Having written 6,000 hymns, many of them becoming famous, she is easily the most voluminous and able author of songs since Isaac Watts and Charles Wesley. Lest some one doubt this statement, we will say that those who arranged song books used 200 pen names for her so as to avoid the appearance of having too many numbers from the hand of one writer.

She was born in New York State, of good parents, who were anxious about her welfare. At fifteen years of age she entered an institute for the blind. She remained there for some years, being trained in English grammar and rhetoric, Greek, Roman and American history. During her early years she began writing. Later she married Alexander Van Altyne, a blind music teacher, who died in 1902. He set to music some of his wife's best poems, but he always insisted that she retain in her published works the name thousands had learned to love, so as Fannie Crosby she has always been known.

Later in life Miss Crosby spoke concerning her blindness and philosophy of life in the following words: "As for my age, it does not seem to me that I am in the nineties; and I attribute my good health and long life to the fact that I never let anything trouble me, and to my implicit faith, my implicit trust in my Heavenly Father's goodness. If I do not get the thing I want today, well, I'll get it tomorrow. If not, then I realize that it is not good for me to have it.In the case of the loss of my sight, I can see how the Lord permitted it. He didn't order it, He permitted it. You know it happened when I was about six weeks old. I caught cold in my eyes and in the absence of the family physician, my mother took me to another near my home who, as it afterward turned out, had no right to be practicing.My sight was totally destroyed. Now the Lord did not order that. The man broke a law of nature. Instead of regarding it as an affliction, I have always thought of it as one of the greatest blessings ever conferred on me, for it carried out God's plan.

The direct appeal to men's beliefs and emotions in her songs have been found effective by revivalists. The most conspicuous example of this was the integral part she had in the Moody and Sankey revival. She wrote her best hymns for Mr. Sankey. Judged by the appeal they make to the masses, they rank high in hymnology. The universal religious emotion expressed in fluent and rhythmic verse made a telling appeal to millions, making her spiritual songs a permanent and valuable addition to religious literature.

Some of her best known are, "Safe in the Arms of Jesus," "Saved by Grace," "Blessed Assurance," "Rescue the Perishing," "I Am Thine, O Lord," "Jesus Keep Me Near the Cross," and "I Shall See Him Face to Face." "Safe in the Arms of Jesus" is the most loved of her hymns. Of it she said, "It is my most successful hymn, and I believe it was born for a mission." Of this the New York Evening Post once said: "No modern hymn has circumnavigated the globe more thoroughly or been translated into more modern languages than this one."

Fannie Crosby's coronation day came February 12th, 1915. The writer who had written "At Evening Time It Shall Be Light," having added a verse during her last week, had cast off the blindness of this world to see her Saviour face to face. She who had lived so many years contemplating this joy manifesting it by writing "I Shall See Him Face to Face," no longer need sing it in the future tense. She who had also added a verse during this week to "God's Peace We'll Know," had his transcending peace.

Her religion, which was always so essential a part of her, made her path, in spite of blindness, shine more and more unto the perfect day. Beside writing sacred songs in life's latest days she also showed a beautiful spirit of humility. A friend called to see her bringing with him the story of the life of Billy Sunday by W. T. Ellis, in which there is a reference to her hymns. As it was read to her she was surprised, but took it with the customary self-effacement. Fearing she might be unduly exalted she said, "Pray for me, that I may be kept at the feet of Jesus." Her pastor also visited her, and he testified that she seemed "full of radiant light." In this conversation she affirmed her interest in foreign missions, rescue work and the temperance cause. She said there were four classes of people in whom she was particularly interested, railroad men, policemen, prisoners and the poor. Upon being asked whether she would recognize friends in Heaven, she almost leaped from her chair, saying, "Why, of course, I shall remember you and know you and all whom I have known and loved here. The clergyman went away feeling that he had breathed the dew of Heaven; not knowing this would be his last visit.

The next day she did not eat, but happily moved about the house. At 2:30 A. M. the next day she was resting quietly in sleep. At 3:30 her niece heard her stirring in the hall. Tenderly she laid the slight form upon the bed and witnessed her passing before a physician could arrive. Thus the saint, who had suffered from blindness all through fourscore plus fourteen years, was translated without illness into the palace of the King.

Does not this beautiful end of life remind us of Enoch? "Enoch walked with God; and he was not; for God took him."

Thongs came to pay tribute to their common friend—Protestant, Catholic, young and old, men of prominence and the poor expressed a universal sorrow.

WONDERFUL OCCURRENCE IN ASTRONOMY PROVES THAT A STAR DID APPEAR WHEN CHRIST WAS BORN.

BY RICHARD KLAGES.

Rejoice, ye people of Zion; come let us sing unto the Lord our God: for He has been our shield and defender; come to Him, rejoice and sing.

On June 8, 1918, there appeared a very bright star in the constellation of the Eagle, where none was visible before. This star, Nova Aquila became one of the brightest stars in the northern heavens. Before this outburst of luminosity, it could be seen only by the most powerful optical aid, as it appears in the telescopic negatives of the Harvard Observatory. In a few days it grew in brilliancy some seven hundred times. It could be found by the amateur near and just below the Great Cross that lies in the Milky Way. This star has since lost its brilliancy, and can no longer be seen; but the fact remains that a star can appear, and proves that a star did appear, when Christ was born.

The Great Cross in the Milky Way can be found in the evening now, by looking toward the north-west just after the sun sets, as there are three stars that form a very conspicuous L. with the star Altair of the Eagle at the top and the brilliant Vega Lyra at the angle, and Deneb at the end, which is also the top star of the cross, which extends toward the south from Deneb. This new star is the most important that has appeared in many hundred years. Only one or two in all history, have exceeded this one in brilliancy.

There was one which appeared in 1604, which was plainly visible in broad daylight. This star appeared in the Eagle, and the eagle is the emblem of this country, let us hope that it signifies, that the churches, of our country, are to have a very important part in spreading the gospel to the ends of the earth, and of hastening the time when God's will may be done in earth as it is done in heaven.

Across the Judean hills nineteen hundred years ago there appeared a bright star, and the angels sang: "Fear not, for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord. And this shall be a sign unto you; ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger. Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men. And the wise men came from the east bringing gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh."

In 1604, another star appeared, and a few years later the wise men of England, by the authority of the King, presented to King James and to the world the authorized version of the Bible and since that time the Bible has been an open book, and a source of inspiration to countless millions of people.

In 1918 this latest star appeared, and in 1921 the wise men met in Washington, in the disarmament conference, to try to bring peace to this sin and war-cursed world.

Let us rejoice that this generation has been permitted to know of this wonderful new star, which is such a startling duplicate of that star which appeared so many years ago, and let us work and pray that our Father's kingdom may come, and His will be done, on earth as it is done in heaven. Amen.

HOW TO BE HAPPY.

There are many miserable, gloomy, unhappy persons in the world—empty, restless, disappointed ones—souls seeking joy and gladness, but never finding it. All such deserve our sympathy and help.

Happiness is not in things.
Happiness is not in places.
Happiness is not in worldly honor.
Happiness is not in political power.
Happiness is not in great learning.
Happiness is not even in bodily health.

Paul was happy in jail.
Daniel was happy in the lion's den.
John was happy on Patmos.
Bunyan was happy in prison.
Wesley was happy while dying.
God wills that all should be happy.

Happy are the humble.
Happy are the gentle.
Happy are the thankful.
Happy are the holy.

A thing must be sought where it can be found. You can't find the living among the dead. Gold is not found in an ash heap. Water is not found in desert sands. We don't seek for wisdom among fools. Oranges do not grow at the North Pole. Strawberries are not found on nettles.

Only fools seek happiness in sin. There is nothing but the sting of death and hell in sin.

Cast your sins on Christ.
Abstain from all evil.
Shun evil companions.
Forgive your enemies.
Pray most earnestly for your enemies.
Give generously and regularly.

Read good books.
Think good thoughts.
Have a time and place for fervent prayer.
Visit the poor and obscure.
Put God first in all your plans.

Heaven begins on earth.
Heaven is more than streets of goal.
Heaven begins when sin ends.
Heaven is Jesus Christ in us.

The proud could not be happy in heaven.
The lawless could not be happy in heaven.
The selfish could not be happy in heaven.
The irreverent could not be happy in heaven.
The Christ neglectors could not be happy in heaven.

Heaven is a holy place, and only those who have honestly and fully received Jesus Christ as their own personal Redeemer and Saviour from all sin, only such can be happy in heaven, and all such receive a good measure of joy and gladness even in this present life.

"The joy of the Lord is our strength."

"Rejoice ever more."

"Thou hast put gladness in my heart, more than in the time that their corn and wine increased."

"How happy every child of grace who knows his sins forgiven,"

PROCEEDINGS OF THE WOMAN'S MISSION BOARD OF THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.

The Woman's Mission Board of the S. C. C. met in the Franklin Christian Church on Tues. Nov. 28, 1922 at 10:30, with the following members present: Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson, Mrs. J. G. Holland, and Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Revs. J. O. Atkinson and C. H. Rowland were also present, offering helpful counsel and suggestions. Dr. Rowland, having just returned from the General Board meeting in Dayton, spoke of some of the proceedings and actions taken there. After a devotional service, the minutes of the W. M. Convention which met in Suffolk were read, corrected and approved. The goals as adopted there, were taken into consideration. These as adopted for the various conferences for the present biennium are as follows:

Eastern Virginia Conference, $12,000, 25 new societies; North Carolina Conference, $10,000, 25 new societies; Valley Conference, $3,000, 10 new societies; Alabama Conference, $1,500, 25 new societies; Georgia and Alabama Conference $1,500, 25 new societies; Total $28,000, 110 new societies

The Secretary was instructed to write to all the Conference Secretaries of their respective appointments and ask that they endeavor to raise the amounts asked for.

After some discussion, it was decided that we urge the societies to use the programs issued by the A. C. C. Woman's Board, of Dayton, Ohio.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Called to order by President who lead the Board in prayer. It was carried that the President have some official stationery for the officers. Voted that the Superintendent of N. P. and W. W. urge the use of the programs prepared by the General Woman's Board and the organization of Mission Study Classes for the young people. Voted that they be asked to organize during the year 10 new societies in each of the Conferences, and raise the following amounts:

Eastern Virginia Young People, $2,000; N. C. Young People, $1,100; Virginia Valley Young People, $200; Alabama Young People, $100; Georgia and Alabama, $100; Total $3,500.

Voted that the expenses of the Board members be presented to Mrs. Carroll, who will present the same to the Treasurer.

Voted that if one can be secured, a full time Field Secretary be secured for the Southern Christian Convention and that Mrs. Carroll and Dr. Atkinson be a Committee to employ the same.

Voted to ask each Woman's Missionary Conference to send one or more representatives to a Summer School of Missions and in case a Field-Secretary is secured that this Board bear her expenses.

Voted that the Cradle Roll Department be asked to raise $500 during the year, as follows:

Eastern Virginia, $200; North Carolina, $150; Virginia Valley, $50; Alabama, $50; Georgia and Alabama, $50.

Voted that our Annual Board meeting be held on or before August 1, each year at the call of the President.

After a prayer, the Board stood adjourned.

MRS. W. H. CARROLL, President.

MRS. C. H. ROWLAND, Secretary.

FROM DOWN SOUTH.

Dear SUN:—

We had a good service at Beulah Church, the last day of November, which day was fittingly observed by school and church as Thanksgiving Day. Rev. H. B. Robinson, pastor of the Baptist Church preached the sermon at 11:00 A. M. The school rendered a program in the afternoon. At the close of the service in the house the churches proceeded to pound their pastors.

Some weeks since I announced to my people that we hoped to present Bro. Robinson with some things needful for him and his family, and that we make that a part of our Thanksgiving service, and also appointed a committee to have charge of the affair, and to my very great surprise the committee arranged to pound both of us. Prof. T. J. Welch was asked to make a speech, which he did in his usual happy manner. Bro. Robinson and I responded with a few feeble remarks. We were presented with many useful and valuable articles for the dining room and pantry: handkerchiefs, hosiery, dress goods, etc., for the family. Thank you, dear friends, I am now entering upon my 32nd year with this church and I trust this may be the best year of my pastoral labors. God bless every one who aided in any way this generous remembrance. I shall try to be a humble shepherd of a kind thoughtful people.

G. D. HUNT.

Today.

Today is mine, not yesterday,

Nor yet the day to be,

I cannot now retrace my way

Nor can I paths foresee,

But this one day is surely mine;—

O God, may it be wholly Thine!

No gift of mine which lies behind,

And none which lies before,

But in this present day I find

A full and precious store

Of all my life and heart can need—

With this, I am content indeed!

SUFFOLK LETTER.

Prohibition has done two things of significant importance. It got into the Constitution of the United States on its own merits, and it has set the nations to thinking on the question of alcohol as never before. The United States is now in a position to lead other nations in their desire for prohibition in all the world. There are four phases of this question. It touches four of the most vital interests of the race. It touches business, politics, social life, and religion. 1. Business is essential to human welfare and material prosperity. England spent, last year, FOUR HUNDRED MILLION POUNDS STERLING for alcohol, which is equal to TWO BILLION DOLLARS of American money. That sum was diverted from other channels of industry and trade. No economist will argue that this business adds as much to national prosperity as money that goes into essentials and permanent industries. It enters business as a loss to industry, efficiency, and prosperity. A drunken nation totters as well as a drunken man. Alcohol has no stabilizing force in commerce, no efficiency in labor, and no safety in capital. 2. It has had its day in politics. It was once a power in political caucuses, conventions, and campaigns; but it never made them cleaner, clearer, nor calmer. No liquor advocate ever satisfied the civic conscience on public affairs, or raised the standard of official service. A sober official is not only a man who does not drink, but one who does not advocate the cause of beverage drinks. Alcohol is simply the material product of an error back in the mind of its advocates. The feeling back of a stroke is meaner than the stroke itself. 3. Social life has rights and its dangers. Virtue is never at its best and highest in a life under the influence of alcohol. Domestic prosperity and happiness have never followed the habitual ruser. Children in the home of inebriates suffer in education, reputation, and religious opportunity. Prohibition has built more homes, more schoolhouses, more hope and more prosperity, in its short history, than the legalized liquor traffic had built in a century. The Red Light district in large cities was the normal center of the saloon business. Human nature, at its best, is a dangerous possession, but fired by liquor it becomes a raging passion that nothing but divine grace and human help can control. When reason is dethroned, passion acts without control or restraint; and this is universal. The social order is not a favored segment of society, but the entire race, including all nations. 4. Religion has its base of operation in the nature of men, and finds its highest expression in the regenerate man. Any indulgence that lowers nature in its inherent capacity for decent living, hinders the entrance of truth, the operation of grace, and the choice that leads out into the field of personal obedience to the divine will. The use of alcohol affects the finest human faculties first, and it, therefore, arrests the spiritual faculties first of all: then the intellectual; and finally the body itself. That state is usually called "drunk;" but the man is drunk in spirit and mind before he falls to the ground. Drunkards shall not "inherit the Kingdom of Heaven." The religious sense of mankind, the Christian conscience of the world, and the honest conviction of the church throughout Christendom, all unite in an expressed purpose to rid the world of beverage alcohol. That is the task to which the "World League Against Alcoholism" has set its united effort in ALL lands. It is the sober judgment and Christian purpose of those who have the welfare of mankind at heart to complete this herculean task.

ELON LETTER.

In view of the action of the American Christian Convention in electing me Secretary of Christian Education and of what has been written regarding this action by THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Maroon and Gold, The News and Observer, and other papers, to say nothing of numerous personal letters from friends, perhaps a statement from me would be in order and is expected.

For many years now the leaders in Christian Education in our own and other churches have been insisting that all the educational agencies of the church should be correlated into a unified program, so as to avoid duplication of effort and so as to present a unified impact on the personality of the individual being moulded and fashioned by the various educational agencies, such as Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, Week-Day Religious Instruction, Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, Colleges, Missionary, Recreational, Benevolent, and Amusement organizations, etc. Our Burlington Convention voted to take steps to do this by merging its Sunday School, Christian Endeavor, and Education Boards into a single Board of Christian Education. This step places our church in the very forefront of opportunity in the realm of Christian Education. If we fail, we will set back the cause we have espoused. If we succeed, great will be our contribution to the solution of the most compelling problem in the Christian world today. Our Brotherhood should thank God that our church has once more swung into the place of initiative and leadership in Christian effort as in the days of our forefathers, and should pray earnestly that the work may be prospered of our Master.

The American Christian Convention elected me as president of this board and secretary of Christian Education as has been said above. With the election there went a proviso that the Board of Trustees of Elon College should confer with the Board of Christian Education before I was to be asked to give up my work here. The College work demands full time service, and certainly the Secretary of Christian Education should be an all-time officer.

By the constitution of the American Christian Convention the new Board of Christian Education must begin its work January 1st. At a meeting recently held in Dayton, Ohio, Mr. Hermon Eldredge and Mrs. F. E. Bullock were elected editors and field secretaries of the Department of Christian Education and I was designated as General Secretary. My work is to be editorial and directorial. The Board provided stenographic help and office expenses, but no salary for any service I may render. The field work is to be done by Mr. Eldredge and Mrs. Bullock.

Immediately upon my return from Dayton, I submitted the proposal to the Trustees of Elon College by letter, to ascertain if they would be willing for me in connection with my college duties to undertake to organize and direct this work. Following their responses the Executive Board met on Tuesday the 12th and passed the following order: "President Harper is granted permission to accept the secretaryship of Christian Education until the general meeting of the Board of Trustees in May."

By that time it is hoped the American Christian Convention may have found an all-time officer for this important post. Meanwhile I call upon our people everywhere to intercede earnestly and fervently for God's blessing on our courageous venture on behalf of Christian Education and for Him.

W. A. HARPER.

BROTHER ABE HEARS FROM HIS FORMER PASTOR.

BEAR BROTHER:—

I am now going to relate to you the substance of my address at the North Carolina Conference. I delivered it, you understand, after the report on Religious Literature had been submitted. There were two things in the report upon which I based my remarks—The Bible and our periodicals—My purpose was to try to show the value of such literature in growing a loyal constituency for our church.

The emphasis, of course, was first placed upon the Bible. We have succeeded in placing the Bible in every home, and it would be safe to say that every member of our church could easily have access to it. We are Bible owners, but all are not Bible readers. It would embarrass almost any congregation to ask if they had read all of God's Word. Our people should be diligent students of the Word. Others may, and of course with profit, read it all, but we must know it. And, for the reason, that we have taken the Bible as the rule of our faith and practice. How to get not only Bible owners, but also Bible readers is for us an important task.

As a means to this end, I offer the following suggestion: That each church, in making out the annual budget, put in a sufficient amount to purchase Bibles, and give one to every member who comes into the church, to have and to hold, to keep and to read, as their own possession. We have a beautiful custom of presenting the Bible to those joining the church, and making a beautiful speech, but we spoil it by permitting it to be a custom instead of being a real fact. How sweet would be the recollection of uniting with the church if we had the Book in which was inscribed our names by our pastor! And, what incentive would it be to read the precious Book! I shall continue to suggest this until I see it done, or until I am convinced that it is unwise. Too costly! What is the cost compared to an informed and interested church member?

The second necessary thing in growing a loyal membership is our papers. Every family in our Conference ought to take "THE SUN", and every member ought to read it. It is the life of our Southern Christian Convention. What the circulation of the blood is to the life of the body; What the circulation of money is to the life of commerce, the circulation of THE CHRISTIAN SUN is to the life of our church. It binds and holds us together, as the cement binds and holds together the bricks of a building. It is a great source of information and inspiration. It is like a great dredging machine, unstopping the channels, so that blessings may flow to the orphan and to the uttermost part of the earth.

It is a voice that champions every enterprise of the church. It is like a broad-casting station, gathering the best thought and the best news, and radiating its blessings to every subscriber. It is a weekly feast of good things, the pastor's best assistant, and the subscribers faithful visitor and friend. It is, in fine, the food, let me say, Royal Food, that will grow for us a loyal constituency.

That I may illustrate the point I would make, I may be excused for relating my own experiences: A number of years ago I went home with a brother who had a large family of boys and girls. It was my first visit, and it was bitter cold. I observed from the papers I saw in the room that my brother must certainly be of the Republican faith. We piled on the wool and soon had a comfortable fire. As I had never been there before, I had a seat in the corner, and somewhat the center of attraction. Around that big fire were soon gathered boys and girls of all sizes and ages. We were having a good time. It was cold without, but warm and pleasant within. I looked right in the face of my brother and said: "Sir, I see you are a Republican." To which he replied: "Yes, sir, and I'm proud of it." I gave a glance at the troop of boys, and again looked him in the face and said: "And all these boys are going to be Republicans." With somewhat doubtful speech, he replied: "Well, I hope so." "Hardly a doubt about it. I feel confident sure." "Wouldn't you be glad for all these boys to be Christians?" I continued. "Oh, certainly." "Well," said I, "two things now occur to me: "One is that all your boys will be Republicans. Of this you may be sure. The second is, they may become Christians, but I have my doubts about it." You ought to have seen him wink his eyes in wonder at that strange speech! Of course he wanted a reason, which I gave to him as follows: All the papers you take are Republican, and these will mold the thoughts of your boys and make them Republicans. You do not take "THE CHRISTIAN SUN." Here he saw the point, and would not let me finish, but stopped me and said: "I'll take THE CHRISTIAN SUN. He did so, and one of his boys is to receive license to preach at this Conference.

When I returned to my home after a week's absence about a year ago, my family got me to guessing what they had gotten while I was away. Well, I guessed everything I could think of, and finally had to be told. A swarm of bees had undertaken to pass that way, and my wife stopped them, got a box put them into it, and started them to work. We got interested in the bee business. I wrote to the Department of Agriculture at Washington for information about bees, consulted my Encyclopedia, and read an interesting book about bees. Our hive soon perished, but I was left with some very valuable information a part of which will illustrate the point I am trying to make. The queen bee lays all the eggs. When hatched, there is no difference in the little larvae. To produce a queen, they feed one grub on special food, called Royal Food, and the result is a queen. Bees are wiser than men sometimes. There is no such thing as fear of queen-shortage, or dearth of queens, they grow them. Men now know how to produce queens; and I am of the opinion that we may produce a loyal church constituency by feeding our folks on Royal Food. There is one conclusion which I have reached, namely, that when a grub is fed on royal food and becomes a queen, that no kind of food, thereafter, will change it into any other kind of bee. When we have fed our constituency on our own literature, they will feel as much out of place in any other hive, as a bee would feel in a hornets' nest.

How to get our people to read our literature is a bigger task than to get them to subscribe. My personal experience is that it is the opportunity of the pastor. I can remember when "THE SUN" had no charm for me. My first interest was in our preachers, not in our paper. I shall always cherish the memory of Rev. C. A. Boone, for had it not been for him, in all probability, I would not have been a minister in this Christian Church today. He organized our church, got "THE SUN" to going into our home, and got me to reading it. He was the first Christian preacher I had ever seen. When he would come to our house (which he often did) I would ride his horse, and he would walk with my father. One day some one said that Brother Boone had a letter in "THE SUN". So he did. It was about our church, and it was great! It was my first morsel of Royal Food.

A while after this, our church decided to have Dr. Barrett come to our church and preach a sermon on the Principles of the Christian Church. I was not much interested in what his sermon would be, but I was interested in him. He was to come to our house, and it was to be a great occasion. We scoured the house, swept the yards; killed a sheep (I think) boiled a ham, and killed a hen. Dr. Barrett was coming! The next day was a great day at our church, but what interested me most was the next copy of "THE SUN." There was a note about the editor's visit to our church and our house. It was a very precious morsel of Royal Food, and gave me quite a relish for other things in "THE SUN."

Sometime after this a very wonderful picture was printed in "THE SUN". It was a cut of the administration building at Elon College. I read all about it, enjoyed it and digested it. It was a royal meal. Brother Boone gave my sister a little book, and she solicited people to write their names on spaces, representing bricks in it. It cost just ten cents to write your name. I gave ten cents, wrote my name, and became from that very moment a part of the college.

But time would fail me to continue, enough has been recited to illustrate my claim—THE CHRISTIAN SUN furnishes food to grow a loyal constituency. Only eternity will tell its value. It is impossible to exactly estimate what you have done when you place it in a home. It constitutes one of the best gifts, and reminds the receiver each week of the giver. Blessed is the one who prepares this weekly feast, and more blessed still is that home where father, mother, and children gather mental and spiritual food from its pages.

T. E. WHITE.

Windsor, Va. 12-14-'22.

ARE WE PITCHING OUR TENTS TOWARD SODOM?

Nearly the whole world seems to be pitching its tents toward Sodom. Every one who has been into the kingdom of God knows the voice of God. If the Spirit of the King of kings and Lord of lords ever once enters the heart, making it His abode, then we know they have His voice in words on paper, or if face to face can hear His talk. If a man loves money, then he talks money, if he loves fine mansions he talks of them. If he is a Pharisee he don't care how many starve and are naked in this world just so he has a fine church building and a large congregation to deliver his message to, for the veil has never been removed. He has put darkness where light ought to be and light where darkness ought to be. We have them by legions in this day as well as when John began to preach repentance, saying the kingdom of Heaven is at hand. He knew Christ was then ready to come into their midst, and you can be assured that he is still ready to come into the hearts and lives of as many as believe Him.

Christ said when you see all these things come to pass of which Daniel spoke, you may know that the end is nigh. He also said: "For these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled.—Luke 21:22. Did He not also say:

"And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars: and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring; Men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth: for the powers of Heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory.—Luke 21:25-27.

Why are men's hearts failing them? Is it not because our leaders have so blinded the people that they are not prepared for the coming of the Christ? He said He would come as a thief in the night and catch us all asleep. Christian men and women find their children marrying in Sodom—and that is just where we pitched our tents. What else could we expect? Because the church is permitting these things in its membership, it has lost much of its power. Has not the church itself been deceived, not by men from Jerusalem, but from our modern sources of information? Men who are filled with the Holy Ghost do not thus mislead the flock? If we had all been studying Daniel 9 and 12; Matthew 24, Luke 21, and other kindred passages of Scripture, we would have been crying, not peace, since the war, when there was no peace. We should rather have been looking for the great tribulation as revealed to us in Matt. 24. That chapter tells Oh, so plainly, what shall happen in the end, if our leaders had been sitting at the feet of Jesus as humble learners, they would have known that these things were coming, and then the people would not have been deceived in ignorance.

VALLEY LETTER.

After busy revival meeting season I am home again for a few days with wife, babies, books, and papers. What a pleasure to be busy in the Master's service even though away from home! And then what a pleasure to sit at one's own fireside, and feel the tugging of little hands, hear the pattering of little feet and the consoling sound of voices that are just a little different from all others in the world! It is also a pleasure to catch up a little with neglected correspondence, and do a bit of much needed reading and studying. Church papers and religious books have a wonderful fascination for me. I think no one could enjoy them more than I do when I get a chance, and it is a matter of great regret to me that I have so little time to spend with them.

The revival meeting at Woods' Chapel was pronounced by many to be the best ever held there. The congregation were unusually large and the interest was good almost from the beginning. Twenty-two professed faith in Christ, some of them being members of the church who had drifted away, and came back renewing their vows to the Lord. Eight new members were received into the church. There has been one more conversion and addition to the church since the meeting.

Immediately following this meeting I held a revival at Bethlehem. Rev. W. C. Hook preached part of the time during the meeting. The people enjoyed his sermons very much, and I heard many favorable comments. Congregations were rather small at first, but increased very nicely later on. There were ten conversions and eight additions to the church.

I have more meetings to hold yet than I shall be able to get through with this year, but I do not think I shall begin another one until the worst of the winter weather is supposed to be over.

Several of my churches are arranging for Christmas services to be given soon.

MEN AND MILLIONS

PREACH THE CAMPAIGN

The Men and Millions Campaign and the causes embraced by it gain and hold their rightful place in the hearts of our people only in proportion as our preachers preach on these great Kingdom interests. The churches having the best record also have preachers who are constantly on their Campaign job.

PREACHING THE CAMPAIGN

No one human agency contributed so much to the victory in subscribing to Men and Millions as the preachers preaching the Campaign. The preacher was then and is now the key man. If the pastor preaches Men and Millions the people will work for and pay their pledges to the Movement.

Make the Victory Sure.

Our people will fall behind in their payment of the pledges if our preachers do not get under the burden again. We can go to the extraordinary session of our Convention next May with a glorious record, if our people are aroused to a full sense of their duty. We need to go to our knees for Power in these great days ahead of us, if we are to truly lead our people, pay our pledges and win out for our Lord.

Preach—Preach—Preach.

VICTORY!

Christian Orphanage

CLIMBING TOWARD THE GOAL.

Dear Friends:—

We are still climbing toward the goals. To reach the goal of $10,000 from November first to end of the year we must raise within the next few weeks $4,033.60.

To reach our Thanksgiving goal six thousand dollars for this year we must raise within the next few weeks the sum of $1,923.36.

Will we reach it? That is the important question that stares us in the face just at this time. We have set goal after goal since we have been in this work and have never failed to reach a goal we have set. How about this time? You have always made it possible in the past. Will you make it possible this time.

If everybody will put their shoulder to the wheel and give us a little push we will do our best to reach it. One hundred and twenty churches have reported. One hundred and fifteen to report yet. If your church has not made its offering make it at your next service. I will hold my books open till you mail it in. Don't fail to do this and make it liberal. If the one hundred and fifteen churches would average just $17.00 it would put us across the line. But all these churches will not make a report and some of them will not raise seventeen dollars. So to make this up individuals will have to make personal contributions.

Now, if you are interested in your orphanage and its success mail us your personal check to help us out right at this time of need. You will be our friend, indeed.

GOD'S OVER-RULING PROVIDENCE

BY HOWARD W. POPE.

Happy and hopeful are youth's day dreams,
And frequently they come true;
For God shows to young men things which seem,
Both strange and entirely new.

Joseph revealed his dreams in the night,
And gained his brethren's ill will;
He was sold as a slave, passed out of sight,
But God remained with him still.

And he unfolded other men's dreams,
And told them what they would do;
For God taught Joseph what they did mean,
And in each case it came true.

When Pharaoh's wise men could not explain,
His dream which came for two night;
His butler told of the Jew in chains,
Who interpreted his dream right.

So Pharaoh sent for the Hebrew lad,
And told him about his dream;
And Joseph said that his God had Revealed to him, what it did mean.

So Joseph became first in the land,
And laid up the corn seven years;
And saved the starving on every hand,
Who bought the coveted ears.

Thus Joseph rewarded his brethren,
Repaid their evil with love;
And so fulfilled—not the plan of men—
But the purpose of God above.

Our Lord was slain as a wicked man,
And bad men opposed him from birth;
Not knowing that they fulfilled God's plan,
To save sinners throughout the earth.

FAMILY ALTAR

THE FAMILY ALTAR AND A DAILY MESSAGE.

By DR. J. GREGORY MANTLE, in Alliance Weekly.

SUNDAY.

"Cause me to hear Thy loving kindness at the dawning; for in Thee do I trust" (Psa. 143:8).

The real significance of the morning watch hour of devotion seems plainly to be this: at the close of His night of loving vigil over us the Lord requests us to rise and spend the last minutes of His morning watch with Him. It is as though He might say in our human language: "I have been watching over you all the night while you slept, and now I wish you would give me the refreshment of a quiet bit of talk and fellowship with you before day begins." Notice Isaiah 50:4 in the Revised translation: "The Lord God hath given me the tongue of them that are taught that I should know to sustain with words him that is weary; He wakeneth morning by morning; he wakeneth mine ear to hear as they that are taught." Here is a morning appointment with God. It is at His special request, for "He wakeneth." It is the first appointment of the morning, and it is early morning, for one is wakened for it. It is daily, for "He wakeneth morning by morning." And the results are remarkable. First, a trained ear, then a trained tongue, (what rarities!) and then a life of helpfulness.—S. D. GORDON.

"This is the time to listen to what the Lord will say;
This is the time to gather the manna for the day;
New enemies to conquer, new victories to win;
To gain a march on Satan—to gain a march on sin."

MONDAY.

"Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us" (I John 3:1).

For more than half a century the Apostle of Love had been contemplating with adoring gratitude the love of God, and as he meditates upon it he exclaims, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us!" (I John 3:1). The word translated "manner," means literally "of what country." Passing through the streets of a large city you may sometimes see a man whose face and dress distinguish him as a Chinaman; the appearance of another bespeaks his African birth; another is evidently a native of the sunny South. But here is one whose dress and features are entirely unfamiliar, and as you gaze at him curiously, you inquire from what country he hails. That will perhaps serve to illustrate this familiar verse. From what country is such love? It is of no earthly origin. The blight and barrenness of this lower world could never produce so rare a plant. It is the Love of Heaven come down to earth. Divine Love was clothed with flesh that He might identify Himself with the life of humanity, and tabernacle permanently among men. He ascended to the throne of heaven that, having given a new commandment, He might by the Holy Spirit also give to His redeemed the heart to obey it. Manifested in the flesh, He is now manifested in the church wherever men and women are found who will find heart-room for the Love of God now shed abroad by the Holy Spirit.—J. G. M.

"Beloved, let us love one another," says St. John, Eagle of Eagles calling from above:
Words of strong nourishment for life to feed upon.
'Beloved let us love.'

"Voice of an angel, yea, Voice of the Dove:
If we may love, winter is past and gone;
Publish we, praise we, for lo it is enough.
'Beloved, let us love.'

"More sunny than sunshine that ever yet shone,
Sweetener of the bitter, smoother of the rough,
Highest lesson of all lessons for all to con,
'Beloved, let us love.'

TUESDAY.

"I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go" (Psa. 32:8).

"I will instruct thee and teach thee," says God, "in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with Mine eye. Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding; whose trappings must be bit and bridle to hold them in, else they will not come near unto thee" (Psa. 32:8-9). The Greek word for man signifies the upward-looking one, in contrast with the brute, who is formed to look downwards. With a thoroughly obedient and affectionate child a look of guidance is sufficient. He does not wait until the parent has issued an actual prohibition or imposed an absolute command. Such a child will take direction from the eyes, from a turn of the countenance, from a gesture. God wants His children to look out for the hints as well as the commands; for the wishes obscurely intimated as well as precepts unmistakably expressed. When the greatest delight of life becomes the doing of the Father's will, there is searching of His Word, in which the child feels not only as though he were hearkening to the Father's voice, but as though he were studying his Father's countenance for directions as to how to act.—J. G. M.

God holds the key of all unknown,
And I am glad;
If other hands should hold the key,
Or if He trusted it to me
I might be sad.

I cannot read His future plans;
But this I know;
I have the smiling of His face
And all the fulness of His grace
While here below."

WEDNESDAY.

"Be ye not as the horse or as the mule which have no understanding" (Psa. 32:9).

We can have guidance either by the Father's eye or by the bit and bridle of circumstances. If, like the horse or mule, we have no spiritual understanding, instead of guiding us with His eye, God has to curb us with His hand. There can, of course, be no guidance by the eye unless there is constant attention on the one side and constant superintendence on the other. The promise, "I will counsel thee with Mine eye upon thee," implies the existence of a disposition of watchfulness and of readiness to note God's hand in the minutest occurrences of life. It implies also the possession of such a knowledge of His will and of such spiritual understanding as enables its possessor to look at first causes in everything, like him who, when a prisoner in Rome, did not speak of himself as a prisoner of Caesar, but as "a prisoner of Jesus Christ" (Philemon I). God never curbs us with His hand unless He has failed to guide us with His eye. Where the look has been scorned the bridle must be fastened. If He is compelled to use methods which suggest restraint and coercion, it is because we are inattentive and self-willed. The only guidance for the horse is bit and bridle, and the more self-willed the horse the severer the bit and the bridle. A look would be lost upon a horse or a mule. How often the look has been lost upon us because we have been out of touch with God; claiming to be His friends, yet following Him afar off; sad and depressed because of no perfect understanding; knowing nothing of freedom because under the bit and bridle; unable to sing because of the bit in the mouth.

—J. G. M.

THURSDAY.

"Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the Lord delivereth him out of them all" (Psa. 34:19).

Thrice in this Psalm are we assured that the Lord delivereth the righteous out of all their troubles. This means much more than that they live through them; the wicked often do that. God brings His people out at the right end of their troubles. Our experience in trouble and affliction may be likened to a passage across a stormy sea. Many and "grievous" are the pains and trials of the journey; but Christ, our Pilot, our Deliverer, our Comforter, is with us in the boat. Moreover, if we will only cleave to Him, and heartily and wholly follow His directions, we shall find that our bark will be brought at last to a most blessed haven of peace and safety: and on the shore we shall find spread a very "feast of fat things." Few hours of the believer's life are brighter and gladder than those in which we are just landing at the right place from the stormy sea of some trouble or affliction. We find that the painful voyage has only been our Father's way of bringing us to a large and wealthy place, where our souls are filled with "joy unspeakable," and our lips with abundant praise.

"Praise, my soul, the King of heaven,
To His feet thy tribute bring;
Ransomed, healed, restored, forgiven,
Who like thee His praise should sing.
Praise Him! praise Him!
Praise the everlasting King."

FRIDAY.

"Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God" (Matt. 5:8).

How can this purity, without which all challenges to a clean life are utterly in vain, be obtained? Jesus Christ is exactly to you what your faith takes Him to be. The law of the spiritual life always is "According to your faith be it unto you." One of the familiar words in the literature of today is, "Attain!" "Attain!" I would substitute another word, "Obtain!" for nothing in the kingdom of grace is first of all by attainment but by obtaining. The only one who ever attained to a righteous life was Jesus Christ; and we obtain His righteousness by faith. The only one who ever attained to holiness was Jesus Christ, and we obtain His holiness by faith. In one sentence, His attainments were all for us, and become our obtainments by faith. One of the greatest passages in the New Testament is this: "But of Him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us a Wisdom consisting of Righteousness and Sanctification and Redemption" (I Cor. 1:30). Wisdom is the casket, and in the casket are these three precious jewels, Righteousness, Sanctification, Redemption. All are to be had for the claiming. How strange that we should be content with so little when we might have so much.—J. G. M.

"I hold Thee with a trembling hand,
But will not let Thee go,
Till steadfastly by faith I stand
And all Thy goodness know"

Man is not what he says, but what he does. For a man to say what he does, and not to do what he says, is to resemble those trees which are full of leaves but void of fruit—those barns wherein there is much chaff but no grain. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord.—William Seeker.

JESUS HEALING ON THE SABBATH.—LUKE 13.

GOLDEN TEXT: "It is lawful to do good on the sabbath day."—Matt. 12:12.

DEVOTIONAL READING: Ps. 103:1-8.

REFERENCE MATERIAL: Ex. 20:8-11; Isa. 35; Isa. 56:1-8; Mark 2:23-3:5.

"As we keep or break the Sabbath day, we nobly save or meanly lose the last, best hope by which man rises."—Abraham Lincoln.

"Teaching in one of the synagogues on the sabbath day."

Jesus recognized the house of God as His place on the Sabbath day. He placed upon church attendance His divine sanction by being in the service when He lived among men on earth. He was there to worship with others, to honor His Heavenly Father. More—He was there to teach, combining service with worship. His week days were very full of good works, but nevertheless on the Sabbath, He was in His place in His Father's house. Someone has declared that church attendance is a test of man's loyalty to God. The true follower of the Christ will find joy, as He did, in the public service of worship in the church.

"This is the day which Jehovah hath made, We will rejoice and be glad in it."—Ps. 118:24.

"When Jesus saw her, he called her."

Jesus saw the suffering woman who needed the relief which only He could give to her. He sought her out of the crowd. His loving spirit made Him want to help people, and was not content to just wait for opportunities to serve to come to Him. Just so, He sees our needs and calls us. And when we listen and come to Him, the great blessing is ours. The woman was at the synagogue, in spite of her infirmities. She, no doubt, came not suspecting in the least the great blessing she was to receive. But the Lord met her there. The Lord meets all of His followers in His house, and helps them according to their needs. A promised blessing for those who keep the Sabbath holy is given by God through His prophet. (Isa. 58:13-14).

But the ruler was moved with indignation. The Jewish law had been broken. He was far more concerned for the letter of the law than for the woman's pain. With Jesus Christ it was different. With Him, it was always lawful to do good. And at the Master's rebuke, the objectors were silent in shame, while the people rejoiced. Christians hear the indignation of the enemies still. But people rejoice when His will is carried out. Lives are brighter. Folks are happier.

"Skies will grow bright and sunny,
If your heart keeps bright."

That is what Jesus wants: the heart kept right. Then the Sabbath will be kept holy. Christians will be loyal to the Church of God. The Sabbath was made for man's welfare, physically, and spiritually. It was not given for anything which would weaken the body, or make the man forget God. There are so many things to do on the Sabbath, which will make life sweeter and stronger and more joyful, that it is a day which means much in the development of our lives. Fifty-two Sundays each year. What have those days, over seven weeks in time, brought to your life? What can they bring to you, and to others through you?

"Jesus calls us; o'er the tumult.
Of our life's wild, restless sea,
Day by day His sweet voice soundeth, Saying 'Christian, follow me.'"

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

JANUARY 7, 1922.

Lessons from the Psalms. I. The Guide Board Psalm. Ps. 1:1-6.

(Consecration Meeting.)

THOUGHTS FOR THE MEETING.

"Blessed is the man that walketh." Every man is moving, and the question of vital importance is whether he is moving forward or backward; whether he is walking the way of God, or in the way of sinners. This psalm points out the way of life. It is the guideboard to the righteous life, to walk in which means eternal life.—Verse 1.

"Delight is in the law." We delight in that which we love. Unless we love the Word of God with all our hearts, we cannot take delight in reading it, and thinking of it. Love makes our religion joyful. As Comrades of the Quiet Hour, many are finding help and joy in daily communion with God and meditation upon His law. Verse 2.

"By their fruits ye shall know them" said Jesus Christ. The man who follows the righteous way pointed out by this "Guideboard" brings forth fruit. Whatsoever he does in the name of the Christ shall prosper. As the tree by the stream, with the green leaves, brings forth fruit, the life strengthened by knowledge of God's law, and sweetened by the spirit of Christ, will prosper and do good.—Verse 3.

The wicked man's life endures not. He is like chaff, of no use, and soon his days are over, and no good done.—Verse 4.

"Jehovah knoweth the way of the righteous." The righteous are building for eternity. Mr. Cheley speaks thus of this building: "In Fairy stories beautiful buildings are erected over night by good spirits at work. Yet there is something more wonderful actually going on within every man. There are buildings going up for eternity. There is not a thought that is not striking a blow; there is not an impulse that is not doing mason work; there is not a passion darting this way or that is not a workman's thrust. There are as many master-workmen in you as there are separate faculties, and there are as many blows being struck as there are separate emotions and separate thoughts and separate volitions." This psalm gives us a guide to direct the building of character, founded upon God's Word, strengthened by communion with Him, erected to accomplish good things in a righteous way, for all time, with the blessing of Jehovah upon it.

This psalm gives us a true guide-board to follow for the years to come. May we heed its counsel.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THE MEETING.

Advertise the meeting with a poster upon which a simple guide-board with two arms has been drawn. Place the words "Righteous" and "Wicked" on the boards, with the word "Which?" underneath, and the time and place of the Christian Endeavor meeting.

This is the first of a series of Consecration Meetings on "Lessons from the Psalms." Twelve nights will be given during the year to these lessons, and some of the most beautiful psalms will be studied. Why not start out to memorize these twelve passages of Scripture during the months, repeating them in the opening worship service in the Sunday night meeting? This would make these meetings of very permanent value and the lessons lasting. Surely Christian Endeavorers can learn one psalm a month.

Ask several members to come to the meeting ready to tell what lesson in this psalm most impresses them. Give time for a thorough discussion.

For the Roll-Call for this Consecration Meeting, ask each member to respond with a Bible verse, containing the word "righteous" or with a verse which they have decided to make their motto for the year 1923.

Suggested Hymns: The Son of God to War; Take My Life and Let It Be; Take the Name of Jesus With You; A Charge to Keep I Have; My Faith Looks Up To Thee; Stand Up For Jesus; I Would Be Like Jesus.

MEN AND MILLIONS' SUNDAY.

Sunday School Superintendent:

Have you talked over your "Men and Millions Sunday" in your Sunday School with your officers and teachers, and decided that you are going to observe this special day very soon? Copies of the Responsive Reading, prepared for the day by several of our workers, are ready to be sent to you when you let us know how many you will need. This may be a special feature, which will inject enthusiasm into all of your work to begin the new year. It may, indeed, be a Winter Rally Day, when all of your members will meet, to think of the work of the whole church, to learn more about it, perhaps, to pray earnestly for its success, and to resolve to go forward together. The plan is to make "Men and Millions" the special theme of your opening worship service, or of the closing service on this day which you will choose, and devote from twenty to thirty minutes to this special service. And what do we hope from this effort? We hope that many boys and girls and men and women will learn something more about the work of the Christian Church. We hope that there will be kindled a new enthusiasm to carry on the work along all lines. We hope that some young man or woman, perhaps many of them, will be stirred to resolve to give his or her life to active work in the great program of the church, at home or abroad. We hope to show the church that our Sunday Schools are loyally standing by the work of the whole church. Through our superintendents, we hope to realize these hopes.

Sunday School Teachers:

Have you wished that you could stir the hearts of your boys and girls with a deep interest in the work of your church? Through this responsive reading, which has been prepared for "Men and Millions Sunday," we offer you the simple facts regarding what the church stands for and what it is trying to do to carry out the Lord's will. We hope that our Sunday School Teachers will take this little leaflet and study it, and try to carry it to the hearts of the boys and girls who are needed so sorely in the work of the church, and who have so great a need to have a love for the church in their hearts. The Sunday School Teacher has an influence which counts for much. How are you using your influence? May we send you some copies of the leaflet?

Order your leaflets from the Board of Religious Education, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Virginia. There is no charge for these, and any information regarding the day, or any of your work will be gladly sent to you from the same office upon application.

MOONLIGHT SCHOOLS.

Sometimes adult illiterates owe their ignorance of letters to causes beyond their control, and for that reason they deserve our sympathy. We often wonder why efforts to help them now so successful, should not have been made years ago.

Travellers through the backwoods of every State found men and women unable to read, though they were among the aged.

This was largely due to their isolated conditions, being shut in by mountains, over which travel was difficult.

The finding of the draft boards during the Great War disclosed an amount of illiteracy that was alarming, and filled every thinking American with gloomy forebodings for his country.

Mrs. Cora Stewart, chairman Illiteracy Commission, National Education Association; chairman Illiteracy Committees: National Council of Education, and General Federation Women's Clubs, conceived the idea of helping these unfortunates, by opening night schools where the older people could gather and be taught without any unpleasant comparison being drawn between them and the younger pupils.

It was first tried as an experiment in the mountainous districts of Kentucky, and it has since spread to Tennessee, the Carolinas, Alabama, Minnesota, and many other States.

Mrs. Stewart, as the author of the Act creating the first Illiteracy Commission in history, the author of the first text-book for adult illiterates, and the inspiration at the back of the anti-illiteracy crusade which produced the "Moonlight Schools," has often been asked for a book telling the story of these schools and of the movement which they embody and promote.

In this book, recently published by E. P. Dutton and Co., New York, at a cost of $2, she presents the experience of many years of strenuous campaigning against illiteracy and an account of the achievements of adults who—often at an advanced age—have escaped from the darkness of illiteracy by way of the portals of the "Moonlight Schools."

It is a stimulating record of a great enthusiasm and of a great movement of profound importance to the welfare of the nation.

The following is from the New York World: "Mrs. Stewart's book gives the first detailed account so far as we know of this wonderful work for the salvaging of what she describes with Kentucky only in mind, as a "treasure of citizenship richer far than all its vast fields of coal, its oil, its timber or mineral wealth," we advise the reading of "Moonlight Schools" wherever it is held that the best gift to the people of a great land is that of enlightenment."—Presbyterian Standard.

THANKS.

December 5, 1922.

I want to acknowledge through the columns of our CHRISTIAN SUN, the kindness of Bro. J. I. Branch and family of the Auburn Christian Church, for a sack of nice sweet potatoes. I was their pastor for six years and have been away for two years, but my dear brother hasn't forgotten me. They continue to show that by sending me gifts. Many thanks Bro. Branch to you and your family, and may the blessings of our heavenly Father continue to rest upon you all, is the prayer of your former pastor.

CHRISTMAS TREE FOR THE BABIES.

Elon College.—Santa Clause and the spirit of the Christmas season has been made real to the children of the Baby Home Department of the Christian Orphanage here when on last evening a Christmas tree was given the babies.

The College Y. W. C. A. and Y. M. C. A. cabinets prepared the tree for the children of the orphanage. Miss Pattie Coghill of Henderson, N. C., President of the Y. W. C. A., was in charge of the affair, and the members of the cabinets seemed as happy in the giving of the presents as the orphanage kiddies were to receive them, their smiles rivaling those on the faces of the little four-year-old who had just been given a toy.

The Christmas tree, brilliantly decorated, was set up in the reception room of the Baby Home. The children of the Orphanage marched in and sang Christmas songs. All children under twelve years old were given toys by Santa Clause who was dressed up in his traditional red suit with white fur trimmings. All Children of the orphanage were given a bag containing fruits, nuts, and candies. And the little charges of the Baby Home believe as firmly in Santa Clause as any child who gets his stockings filled on Christmas eve.

"Amazes me by its inspirational and educational advantage to any teacher."

Marion Lawrance:

"The best, most complete, most practical and most satisfactory lesson help."

Alexander Whyte:

"All the help needed by any teacher."

Margaret Slattery:

"Know of nothing better. . . . I use it personally in my work."

John Henry Jowett:

"Of great service to Sunday School teacher—exceedingly well done."

A Teaching Necessity

The recent International Sunday School Convention, in emphasizing the need for BETTER Sunday School instruction, paved the way for "Tarbell's Guide" as a necessity in every school!

Superior

to all other Helps in teaching value, ability, comprehensiveness, and modern appeal. "Tarbell's Guide" raises the international system clear above the objections of its critics, and is the logical teachers' help to-day!

Larger by far

than any other Lesson Handbook, full to overflowing with modern suggestions, "Tarbell's Guide" is now a necessity to all who would apply latest teaching methods and discoveries to Sunday School Lesson presentation.

CHILD'S HOUR

"THE PRARIE PET SHOW—AND JIX."

(Based on a True Incident.)

Phil Summers lived in the Mimbres Valley, New Mexico. He had spent most of his fourteen years in the open on a cattle ranch, and was very fond of wild animals.

At the foot of a rocky hillslope threequarters of a mile from the ranch house there was prairie dog village among bunches of cane, cactus and tall yucca stalks.

One afternoon as Phil came down the trail from school, he concealed himself behind a clump of tall cactus to watch the prairie dogs nibbling at the grass roots. He gave a sharp whistle just to see the little animals scuttle to their holes.

All were soon out of sight, except one young prairie dog that Phil noticed had a crippled leg. In his haste to dodge into a hole, the lame leg became entangled in some vines and held him a frightened captive. As Phil reached out and caught him, the captive gave a call for help, which brought many a brown head peering cautiously above the holes.

Emitting sharp barks they dodged back into the safety of their underground homes, as Phil playfully advanced toward them, holding his protesting captive in a firm grasp. When he pretended to retreat, they swiftly reappeared, only to dodge back as the boy turned toward them.

After teasing the furry dwellers of the hillside till he tired of this sport, Phil carried the little captive to the ranch, where he examined the lame leg. He found a tough cactus thorn sticking through the little leg just above the foot. Very carefully Phil removed the thorn, dressed the wound, then he put the young prairie dog into an empty cage, vacated by a pet squirrel.

Phil named his captive Jix, and it soon learned to like its master, who was never unkind or rough in training the little creature. The cripple leg healed quickly, but a long time Jix walked on three feet. He would assume lameness at times just to receive Phil's attention.

At first Phil had not intended keeping the prairie dog, only long enough to treat the wounded leg. But as the days passed a strong attachment grew up between the ranch boy and Jix, and Phil put off restoring his pet to its wild home on the hillslope.

Jix was very teachable, and Phil taught him many amusing tricks. One was to spring upon Phil's leg and climb to a safe retreat in the boy's coat pocket. In this way Phil often mounted his pony and gave Jix a lively canter over the hills.

A favorite retreating place for Jix was under the ranch house. There he chased lizards and caught mice to his heart's content. Phil peering under the porch watched these pursuits with keen enjoyment.

One day Phil's teacher requested the pupils to bring their various pets to school. Snuggled in Phil's pocket Jix was brought to the exhibition of strange pets. Sadie Taylor brought a trained duck; Bennie Lane had a box of white mice; Ted Foster displayed a rooster that would fly upon his shoulder and crow lustily; Dave Derby was followed up the trail by a fawn that could jump through a hoop; and Amy Boone brought her pet crow, which had been trained to try to caw certain words.

To the teacher and the children it was a very interesting exhibit, and many a good laugh was enjoyed at the odd tricks of the different pets.

Jix was shy when the pupils tried to touch him. But he knew and trusted Phil, and when the duck quacked and waddled in Jix's direction, or when Mazie Brown's pet owl gave a doleful hoot he sought quick refuge in his master's pocket from which he protruded a shiny head, uttering a series of defiant little barks.

"Jix must think Phil's pocket is a prairie dog hole," remarked the teacher.

"And Whoo-Whoo acts as if Mazie's arms are parts of a tree, the way he flies from one to the other," said Ted, pointing to the owl.

"Well, her arms are limbs, you know," observed Phil. "Whoo-Whoo is a knowing bird."

It was a wonderful day for the pupils, and the teacher used the observations made of the pets for language and nature study work. The children learned that kindness and patience are important in the training of animals.

As Phil, Bennie, and Amy were going home past the prairie dog village, the rodent citizens greeted them with brisk barks. Hoppy, the crow, returned the greeting with a chorus of shrill caws. Jix, recognizing the calls of his kind, climbed out of Phil's pocket and slid to the ground. Hoppy's alert eyes spied Jix, and as the little creature scurried away on three feet, perhaps to identify himself to the villagers, the crow gave swift pursuit. In fear of his jetty pursuer Jix ran to a little tower of gravel, and as Hoppy made a hopping swoop in his direction, he uttered a bark and dodged in to a hole. Hoppy peered into the opening, but Jix did not show himself.

"Oh, Phil," cried Bennie in sympathy, "Hoppy's made you lose Jix."

"Naughty Hoppy!" scolded Amy, catching the crow and carrying him away from the little tower where Jix had disappeared.

Phil knelt by the hole, calling, "Jix, Jix!" But no Jix appeared. It was evident he dreaded meeting his black-feathered enemy in the outer world, and no amount of coaxing on his master's part could bring him forth.

"He won't come, will he?" said Bennie sadly. "I guess you'll never see Jix again."

"It's all right," returned Phil bravely, "Jix is better off in his own home town. I won't be selfish."

In spite of trying hard to resign himself to the loss of his pet prairie dog Phil lay awake a long time that night. Over and over he resolved never again to train another wild animal. There was always a hurting somewhere deep in a fellow when he had to give up a pet. And such a chummy pet as Jix had been made the parting all the harder.

The next morning as Phil ran out to feed his pony in the corral, a sleek cinnamon-brown little body flung itself against the boy's leg, and with a bark burrowed down into his coat pocket. Jix! The runaway had come back. By some dog-like instinct Jix had followed the trail back to the ranch.

All spring and summer Jix went back and forth over the trail. After staying a few days with his furry relatives on the hillside, he would suddenly appear at the Summers ranch, where he would remain part of the week in chummy comradeship with the delighted Phil.—Addison Howard Gibson, in S. S. Times.

MORE FOR EDUCATION, LESS FOR LUXURY.

"Education is the vital element in the success of any nation," said the Hon. John J. Tigert, in a public speech, pointing to vocational training and industrial teaching in such manufacturing centers as Detroit as an example of the practical value of education.

Continuing, he quoted statistics proving that the one and one-half billion dollars spent on education in the Nation last year, while a large sum in itself, was pitiful when compared with the twenty-two billions spent for luxuries.

"From these statistics," he said, "it would appear that the country cares more for chewing gum, cigars and cigarettes, and cosmetics than it does for education."

Educators have seized upon this comparison as a striking argument in favor of the passage of the Towner-Sterling bill, now before Congress, creating a Department of Education, with a Secretary in the President's Cabinet. The bill appropriates a hundred million dollars to be spent among the states in the aid of education. One hundred millions is the two hundred and twentieth part of last year's country-wide bill for luxuries.

Dr. Tigert drew attention to the "insidious propaganda" spread by "some agency" against the expenditure of large sums by the Government in aid of education, and termed the proper and wise use of money in education as the salvation of the country against many of the evils of ignorance, intolerance, and fanaticism, which menace its prosperity.

The Old-New Gospel.

I know the hundred and one arguments against the minister's dipping into politics and burning his fingers in industrial questions "about which he cannot possibly know anything practical." I know the insistent appeal that he preach "the old gospel." But I am convinced that the religious leader who does not boldly interpret the moral significance of social, political, and industrial policies becomes in time only a "seller of rhetoric." If we will stop trying to reconstruct theology and undertake to rediscover Christianity, we shall find that, far from asking the minister to preach a "new gospel," this is really an appeal to preach the "old gospel" which was for several centuries lost in the hands of men who were content to preach only half of the message of the Carpenter—the personal half. I do not suggest that the pulpit be transformed into a lecture-desk. There are men a plenty to lecture on this or that problem. The world is waiting, as some one puts it, for the religious leader who can talk economics so that men will feel in the presence of God.—Glenn Frank in The Century Magazine.

Overcoming Difficulties.

The proprietor of a summer boarding-house was asked by a musical guest to have the piano tuned.

"But why should I do that?" he said. "It sounds good enough to me."

"But there are two notes in the treble that don't even play."

"Only two!" replied the proprietor, sarcastically. "Why, man, if you were any kind of a player, you'd know enough to skip those!"—Harper's Magazine.

An Ethical Game.

Sir Oliver Lodge, the English scientist, learned to play golf at St. Andrews many years ago. One day Professor Maitland, who was his teacher, said to him, "You don't play golf with your muscles, you play it with your morals."

"I hope," said Sir Oliver, with a hasty glance around, "that no one will consider my morals as bad as my golf."—Boston Transcript.

THEY ARE ALL MINE.

An atheist going along a country road overtook a woman poorly clad, who seemed strangely excited. Her face was glowing with a calm and radiant joy.

"What were you talking about as you walked along?" he asked.

"I nebber knowed I was talking; 'pears like I didn't notice myself. I was thinkin' as I look on de worl' an' de sky, an' took 'em all in, dat they is all mine—all mine, 'cause I is Christ's and Christ is God's!"

He was a learned man, but this was a kind of learning he had never heard of. He was a successful man, but here was such triumph that he had never dreamed of. He listened, full of curiosity, to what the woman had to say; he went away, but the say: "They are all mine, for I am Christ's!"

This kind of influence counts. God owns it. It makes its impression upon the unsaved. The results are a blessing to the one who gives and the one who receives. No apology is needed because of any adverse effects. The earthly end of such a being is peace and joy and satisfaction.—Central Christian Advocate.

ANGEL-JOHNSON

On December 3, 1922, at 2:30 P. M., Mr. Irvin A. Johnson and Miss Katie Mae Angel were united in holy wedlock at the home of the bride's parents. Only a few friends and relatives witnessed the ceremony.

Mr. Johnson and Miss Angel are members of Mt. Pleasant Christian Church. They are also popular young people of their community. They will probably reside in their present neighborhood.

Although the ceremony was quiet and private, yet it was beautiful and solemn. The writer, their pastor, was the official.

Their many friends wish for them a long, happy, peaceful life. The blessings of our Heavenly Father attend them while they live here.

BLANCHARD

Died at his home in Alamance County, N. C., Lonnie Robert Blanchard, December, 10, 1922, in his 29th year. He leaves a wife and three small children. His death was quite a shock to his family and to his many relatives and friends.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer at Long's Chapel Christian Church and the interment was in the Church Cemetery close by.

The sympathy of the community goes out to the bereaved. May the blessed Christ sustain and comfort those who mourn.

P. H. FLEMING.

ROSENBERGER

Mrs. M. Elizabeth Rosenberger was born May 17, 1854, and died November 5, 1922, at the age of 68 years, 5 months and 18 days. Deceased was the widow of D. P. Rosenberger who was during his life quite active in the work of the Christian Church in the Valley of Virginia. Sister Rosenberger was an excellent Christian character, highly esteemed by all who knew her. She held her membership with the Lineville Christian Church, though for a number of years prior to her death, she lived entirely out of the community.

She is survived by two sons and one daughter. Funeral services were conducted by the writer at Mountain Valley U. B. Church, November 7, 1922, near the home of her daughter, where she spent her last days.

A. W. ANDES.

BEAN

Mrs. D. E. Bean, wife of deacon D. E. Bean, of Union Grove Christian Church, died December 3, 1922, at the age of 49 years, 10 months and 12 days. She was a faithful member of Shiloh Church, having joined early in life. She leaves to mourn their loss a husband, 10 children, several grandchildren, many other relatives and friends.

Though she suffered a great deal, she was calm and patient to the end. In the presence of a large congregation she was laid to rest in the cemetery at Union Grove. Many were the expressions, "She was a good woman."

The Lord comfort her loved ones.

TICKLE

Mrs. Nance Jane Tickle was born March 7, 1862, and died December 5, 1922, at her home at Altamahaw, N. C. Sister Tickle was the mother of ten children. Seven survive. She has several grandchildren and five brothers and one sister who survive her also. She was a member of Berea Christian Church.

Funeral services were held from the Bethlehem Christian Church by the writer, assisted by Rev. G. C. Crutchfield. Interment followed at the Church Cemetery. May God bless the bereaved in this sad hour.

WM. T. SCOTT.

DIED

Mrs. Jno. T. Clark was born January 4th, 1871 in Dinwiddie County, Va., and died December 3, 1922, age 51 years, 10 months and 29 days. Sister Clark had been married twice, one daughter of the first marriage survives her, Miss Annie Atkinson. She was married to Bro. Jno. T. Clark, of near Waverly, Va., May 4th, 1904. One son and two daughters survive her from this marriage. Thus three daughters and one son and a devoted husband are left to mourn their loss. She had gone across the fields to visit Bro. and Sister E. B. Richardson, whose little boy was sick, while there she was taken with severe pains in head and sank into a semi-conscious condition and never rallied sufficient for conversation. Sister Clark was an active, faithful Christian and died in the active work of her church. She had been a member of Spring Hill Christian Church for years. She was highly esteemed by the church and community for her motherly kindness toward all. The entire community extend deepest sympathy to the sorrowing family. The many beautiful flowers silently portrayed her quiet Christian life. The burial services were held at Spring Hill Cemetery by Rev. J. L. Foster, pastor, Tuesday, 3 P. M., December 5, 1922.

JAS. L. FOSTER.

STOUT

Mrs. Elizabeth Stout died November 27, 1922, aged 75 years, 1 month and 27 days. She leaves to mourn their loss a husband, W. A. Stout, 3 children, J. E. Stout, A. R. Stout and Mrs. Daisy Hodgkin, fifteen grandchildren and five great grandchildren, besides many other relatives and friends. She had been a member at Park's X Roads Church since 1872, at which place she was buried.

She said she was ready to go.

Burial by Rev. G. R. Underwood and the writer.
