JANUARY is the month that opens the New Year. It is the month that stands at the gateway to eleven other months and allows us to pass in silence to them, and use her first day for our resolutions and as "the land of beginning again."

JANUARY is the month of snow, of ice, and wintry blasts that drive us from places of sunshine and make us hover about the open fires—and around these firesides the news of the day is told, the children revel in their stories and games which make the home a little paradise.

JANUARY is the month of winter reading. The open Bible, the farm journal, the Church periodical, the story magazine, and the latest novel, all find their places in hands to appreciate them, under lamps and candles to illuminate their pages. With these things members of the family meet the great minds of a big world, and thus enlarge their own sphere of thinking, have their understanding and sympathies broadened and expanded.

JANUARY is the month when Mother Nature wraps her earth in a blanket of white and brings to death millions of her own insects, that crops months hence may grow to feed a hungry world. It is the month when Nature makes some of her most wonderful pictures that charm and bewilder the artistic mind.

JANUARY is not a month of unbearable blizzards, but a month of charm and beauty and splendor and vigor. Its changing scenes remind man that he shall change from mortality to immortality.

Denominational Loyalty And Church Attendance

Wise is that saying that you must deal with conditions as they are and not as they ought to be. New times bring new conditions, and new conditions demand new programs. The person who is averse to changes is against the time in which he lives. And it should be always fixed in mind that to change is not to disintegrate. Stagnation and decay are but conditions found about things that are stationary. This is a physical principle and applies to man as well as to matter.

There was a time when denominational loyalty and Church attendance were so closely united that there was but little distinction between them. But time has carried us on and conditions have taken us away from things that are old, and we are face to face with things that are new. Denominational loyalty is not so strong today as it once was, and it is the sign of no fertile brain to lament its passing. Denominational loyalty, as our forefathers knew it, embraced strict attendance to the local denominational church. Attendance was based upon the fact that it was their church.

Today people drift to the city, and in most instances attend the finest church, or where the finest speaker is to be found. It is no common thing to hear young people ask if they attended a certain church—of their own denomination—while in some certain city, and to get the response that they did not, but attended some other church, naming a local church superior in structure and leadership to their own.

The process of American education is to appreciate and desire the best. It is, therefore, against the foundation structures of our system of education to ask people to compromise and accept less than the best.

One may not argue that he is against the law of the survival of the fittest, but as the progress of humanity continues to bring all things to a higher level, emphasis is shifted to service. The youth understands that connection with one denomination is about as good as another, and if this be true, he prefers to place his attendance where the greatest service is rendered and where the highest social realm is found.

Let our readers understand this before going further: that we believe in denominations, and that the work of the Kingdom will always possibly be better promoted through separate organizations, so long as the spirit of unity prevails. But a denomination can no longer rely upon its creeds, its principles, or its peculiar practices. This is not to argue to do away with creeds, or principles, or practices. These things anchor us, but service has overshadowed them.

No protesting voice can keep the people from attending the finest churches and flocking to hear the ablest sermons. The denomination that shall prosper must take note of these facts.

Fine churches and able preaching do not argue that religion is less fervent, or worship discredited. Far from it. God will accept our best, and He should have our best, let that be the house in which we worship, the music in it, or the message from the pulpit.

The Functions Of A Conference Secretary

Each year at this time when we are reading the final pages of The Christian Annual, the thought again and again comes to us as to what the functions are of a Conference Secretary. We do not raise the question of what his duties are, but rather we would call attention to his privileges.

We believe that the generally accepted opinion is that a Conference Secretary should keep the records of his Conference, and that his work is done on the Conference floor. Whether we are right in our way of thinking or not, our idea is far from this. The Secretary of a Conference during the sitting of the Conference is merely the clerk of the sessions. The work of a Conference Secretary during the sessions of his Conference may be more exacting than any other of his privileges, but his real work comes in the twelve months that his Conference is not in session.

Since we have said that the main work of a Conference Secretary is not the keeping of the records of the Conference, it is incumbent upon us to say what his functions are. Briefly we shall.

Of course the first work of a Conference Secretary after the adjournment of his Conference is to prepare the records in a creditable manner for The Christian Annual. This first work should be done promptly, unless necessarily delayed by sickness or similar causes. The tardiness in the work of one person usually affects many others. It is the spirit of genuine co-operation to be prompt.

After this clerical work is over the Secretary of the Conference should promptly make out a list of all churches of his Conference and the quota of The Annual for each. After this the various church secretaries should be written, giving full instructions as to the distribution of The Annual. Such instructions can, of course, be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, but should not be depended upon solely, because all the church secretaries do not take THE SUN. Then, too, the letter method is direct and personal.

There are numerous resolutions adopted at Conference that do not end there, or at least should not. (Unfortunately, most of them do.) What is everybody's business is nobody's business. These resolutions should be kept before the people by letter and public print. Members of Conference vote for these things in good faith and it costs money—much money—to print them.

It is poor business to start things and not carry them out, and it is the work of the Conference Secretary to keep these things before the people and get the things adapted that the people adopt. ps. 50 + B.C.

Most Conference Secretaries we have known send out the church blanks to the churches a short time before the Conference meets. That is not enough. These blanks should go out two months before the Conference is to meet, accompanied by a letter, and then later another blank sent and a reminder to have the report filled out and in on time. Then who should aid the pastor in raising Conference requirements but the Conference Secretary? The mails are open to him, THE SUN, and other avenues of approach to the churches. (The bill for postage by the average Conference Secretary is ridiculously small for him to present for payment.)

When the Conference convenes the Secretary should have a memorandum of every important motion made at the last session, what it affects, page in The Annual where recorded, and have a copy of this memorandum for himself and one for the presiding officer.

Let it be written here that the progress of our Conferences depends upon our Secretaries to no small degree.

The Church Paper

The Church paper is a forum of ideas and ideals, a medium of public opinion, and a channel of news for a particular Church. A Church paper that is not a forum of ideas and ideals does not deserve to live, and furthermore, it will not live. A Church paper that suppresses public opinion cannot survive in a democratic age. The spreading of church news is among the lesser functions of a Church paper. Church news has its place, but its interest is only local.

The editor of a Church paper cannot afford to be sectarian, short-visioned, or narrow in his sympathies. He must exercise the spirit of forgiveness, for there are problems that daily worry, vex, and trouble. He must think to himself, often work alone, and the public has only a partial insight into his multiplied duties.

The constituency of a Church paper are the most loyal, progressive, and faithful supporters of the Church and all its enterprises. They daily and weekly come in contact with ideas and ideals and public opinion that shape their souls, stimulate their love and affection, and enlarge the horizon of their own reasoning. A denominational undertaking would never be a success, without the support of those who read the Church paper.

The progressive and forward-looking leaders of the future Church will undertake a program to place the Church paper into every home, for the investment always yields a hundred-fold.

A New Year's resolution is all right if it is backed up by a determination to carry it out. Simply making a resolution is not enough.

Ex-Governor T. W. Bickett

On December 28, 1921, North Carolina mourned the loss of one of her great men in the person of ex-Governor Thomas Walter Bickett. He was stricken in his Raleigh, North Carolina, home, on the evening of December 27, and passed away at 9:30 the next day.

Bickett was a native of Louisburg, North Carolina. He was a lawyer by profession and was a member of the General Assembly of the State in 1907. He was for eight years Attorney General of his native State, and in 1916 was nominated for Governor on the Democratic ticket, and elected. He held this position until January, 1921, when he retired from public life and took up his law practice again.

Bickett was constructive in administration, genial in disposition, and an orator of recognized standing. His messages were forceful, convincing, and powerful. The greatest criticism that came to him in public life was the use of the pardoning power of his office. But on this there were those who approved as well as those who disapproved. As the years come and go the greatness of the man will loom larger and larger, and true historians will record him as among North Carolina's great and good men.

Editorial Briefs

A man may be a good Christian and not support some institution of his Church, but to be a good member of the Christian Church he must support her every institution. Likewise a man may be a good Christian and not take THE CHRISTIAN SUN, but he cannot be a good member of the Christian Church and not take THE SUN.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part X.

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

Field Secretary for Missions

SUNDAY A. M., September 25.—They give great heed to Sunday schools in Porto Rico, far more than we do in the States. For instance, none of the churches have preaching at the Sunday morning hour, and the entire period from 10:30 a. m. till noon is given to Sunday school. We went the round of the schools here in Ponce this morning, spending only a few minutes at each, till we reached our own, half an hour before closing. It was great to see these several hundred men and women, boys and girls, seeking knowledge of God through song, prayer, and Bible study. At the Baptist school we found twenty-eight men and boys, forty girls thirteen to eighteen years of age, and forty women. In the Intermediate Department, Miss Lake a lady missionary and an expert in Sunday school work, had sixty pupils in six groups—and something was doing every moment of the teaching time to keep those children interested and busy. In the Primary Department there were forty small children in charge of two other American lady expert Sunday school teachers. My! these were having one jolly time. I almost wished I was a heathen and a child and could be in one of those classes. For there was the joy of movement, or riveted attention, of unbroken interest.

The singing and opening services of a Porto Rican Sunday school are more emphasized and more impressive than with us. They sing more songs and with more zest and fervor than we do.

At the United Brethren church we found 115 in the main school. In the primary department there were thirty-six and in the intermediate seventy-eight from nine to thirteen. Here we found Miss Reid and a native teacher in charge. This Miss Reid is the most energetic, wide-awake expert in Sunday school work this writer has ever witnessed in action. Her face fairly beams with joy and with ideas. If there is a dull moment from the time she begins till her class has quit and gone home I never discovered it. She tells me she has been here several years and that this work is her life. It would be interesting indeed to know how many lives this one woman reaches for good and saves through Christ.

At the Methodist Episcopal school they were having a special rally day. There were ninety-eight in the primary department, thirty-four in the intermediate, and 115 in the main school. The pastor said he did not have a school like that more than once a year. One wonders why there is so much joy and so many smiles when additional numbers come trooping into Sunday school or church!

At our Christian Sunday school we found three primary classes, one with twenty-six, another with seventeen, and a third with twenty-two present. In the intermediate we found two classes, one with twenty-four, another with nine present. We found our good Mrs. Barrett teaching a fine class of twelve girls. They seemed so happy and Mrs. Barrett was radiant as she went forward with her great work. Brother Barrett had a men's class of seven, and he seemed happy in jabbering away at them in a jargon we could not understand. It does seem to me that when these people go into the house of the Lord they would talk in a tongue to be understood. I told Barrett today I would forgive them for all the jabberish he and his people got off at one another, but I did think that when he prayed in public worship and talked to the Lord he ought to do so in our decent English tongue, for it seemed to me the Lord would appreciate it more! Evidently Barrett has a strange sense of humor, for when I told him that, in all seriousness, he laughed at me. (But that did not phase me, for I observed long ago that some people do not know just when to laugh, and I now rather think Barrett is one of them.) In our school was also a woman's class of fourteen, and two men's classes of eight and seven each. In all the secretary's report showed 170 present today, and there are ten departments in the school. At the close of the school Minton made a talk about the recent session of the World's Sunday School Convention which he attended in Tokyo, Japan. He said that the Sunday school is the means of producing the biggest and best men and women of the world. There were men and women at Tokyo who were known and had influence throughout the world, and that the World's Sunday School Convention was one of the greatest parliaments that ever assembled anywhere on the earth. Which remark I put into my diary at once with the notation that I had been a Sunday school attendant all my life and maybe I could be somebody yet, if I kept it up long enough. My resolve here and now, just between this dear diary and myself, is that when I get home I will attend Sunday school more regularly and more devoutly, with hope.

The Sunday school offering was $2.42. And this is better than some of our Sunday schools in the States do. In fact, we Christians have a wide-awake, interesting Sunday school, and one with many promising young people in it. We have no American teachers other than Brother and Sister Barrett. It would evidently be a great help to them and to our work here to have such teachers, as do the other schools we visited this morning. The worker in the Sunday school is a power here, for the young are the hope of the church and the future, and we should by all means, if possible, train two or three of our bright, consecrated young women in America and send them down here to do such a work for Christ and the Church as they can never hope to do at home.

After Sunday school I join everybody else in walking the streets of Ponce. It is one glorious, balmy spring day here (September or no September). One could wish to live forever if the days were all like this. And everything here seems so open and airy and inviting. Some of the dwellings are palatial, not of the American, but of the Spanish type, great high doors and windows reaching all the way from ceiling to floor, the entrance as if to hotels and public places. And these dwellings finished within and without in cement, are painted pink or blue, or green and trimmed variously in white or red or maroon, or what not. How these Porto Ricans do revel in rich coloring! Their homes are almost as varied in hue and tint as the trees and plants on their lawns.

The Plaza here at Ponce, as the dear girls say, "is a dream." It has stone seats, ample stone or cement walks, large, graceful palms, a flamboyant tree of blazing red in burning blossom, and enticing cocoanut trees growing thirty feet before there is bend or branch, and then all of a sudden bursting out with foliage and fruit enough to fill a hogshead. There is an air plant here which, like many of our congregations in the States, seems to flourish on nothing but hot air and sunshine. It is a fact. The thing grows up in the air and seems to have no root, just all branch. It hangs moss-like on the limbs of the large trees, and without troubling the trees, goes on with its spreading and its growing. It swings out onto telephone and telegraph wires and gets so thick and vigorous there that the wires have to be cleaned of it by laborious effort occasionally. It does not grow in the ground, on the ground, or out of the ground. It does not look to mother earth for nourishment, nor to any tree or plant that grows out of the earth. It grows in the air, feeds on what the air gives it, and wraps itself about with such clothing as the air has to offer. Why not: If a fish can live in water only why cannot a plant live on and in the air only?

I saw a funeral procession today. But there were no women in it. Barrett tells me that no women attend funerals here. They leave that to the men and boys. The funeral I saw had a hearse and carriages, but no automobiles.

The market and the stores all stay upon till noon on Sundays, and then they all close up and the entire population goes on one grand half-holiday. If one wants to see what the world wants to make of Sunday come on to Porto Rico and find out. Gambling and baseball playing and the movies and shows and all the whole outfit of modern and ancient "amusements" have full swing on Sunday afternoon here!

I went into the Catholic church on the Plaza here today. The architecture is wonderful, ancient and mediæval in type, and gives one the sensation of being whirled back in time about 500 years or more. They had an image of Christ on the cross with the nails through His hands, the blood gushing from His side where the ruthless sword thrust Him, and the agony of awful suffering on His face. Seated near the cross where the image hung were two other figures, women in watching and in anguish for Him. Then they had another image of Christ in the same church. It was in a casket near the entrance and is "Christ in the tomb." It looks like a human corpse and is made of some kind of plaster of Paris or yellow cement. It is quite realistic, but sad, sombre, and corpse-like. The mountings and many figures about the altar are of polished brass. There were half a dozen women kneeling, counting their beads, praying before the Virgin Mary. And as Thomas Carlyle somewhere says, "I guess she was blessing them as best she could."

What a Sabbath day I am spending! It is now just after lunch and I have seen and heard and felt enough today already to last me a lifetime. Riches and poverty, luxury and hunger, health and disease, consecration and desecration, devout Christianity and godless idolatry—these are all in close proximity here—in a mighty death grapple, in truth, and one wonders if righteousness will ever win out in Porto Rico.

ELON LETTER

MYSTICS and dreamers have so mystified the conscious presence of God in His world that the idea of the divine immanence has fallen into reproach. Yet there is no doctrine of the faith more vital and no experience of the heart more inspiring than this. We used to sing, "God is in His heavens; all's well with the world." We know now that God is present in His world and that some coming day all will be well with that world.

We have gone a long way in our conception of God's presence with men from that naively describing Him in Genesis as walking in the Garden of Eden in the cool of the day. For the spiritual babyhood of the race such an anthropomorphic conception of the divine immanence was needful. Jesus taught that God is a spirit and is spiritually discerned. When He called out of the cloud to His Son during His early life, Jesus heard His Father's voice, but the by-standers declared it had thundered. They lacked spiritual discernment. So is it now. The voice of God is thunder to so many souls, to whom He yearns to speak a message, but they cannot hear.

The divine immanence can easily pass over into pantheism, which is really no God at all, for when God is everything, He is nothing. Some Christians insist on such an interpretation of the omnipresence of God that they really make impossible the personality of God, which in the Christian teaching is the fundamental conception of the divine immanence. On the contrary, others speak of entering into His presence, to be achieved by certain peculiar methods and at certain specific times and places, thus virtually denying the fact of His continual presence, which is also fundamental to the doctrine. God is present everywhere and He is always there, only we are not at all times and places conscious of Him. Would that we could always realize that we dwell in His presence! Why?

Because His presence, constantly realized, would sweeten our commonest tasks and out of them weave ecstatic experiences. His presence constantly realized in the life would transform the most prosaic duties into occasions of worshipful communion with the Most High. In such a realization the washtub would become a cathedral, the plough handles, the gateway to heaven. How poor our lives are because we get so engrossed in the trivial pursuits of life that we forget He is near! How rich it is our privilege to make them!

Then again the realization of His constant presence would have such purifying, uplifting, inspiring influence over our conduct, our interests, our pursuits. How could we do wrong, conscious of His presence? How could we give attention to unworthy objects or unworthily attend to worthy ones, conscious of His presence? "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God," we are enjoined. Whether we sing or weep, whether we work or play, whether we pray or dig ditches, we shall do it to the glory of God, when we are conscious of His presence. The restraining possibilities of the divine immanence are marvelous. We must do right things only in His presence, and if the things we are doing are not right, the conscious realization of His presence will change us and so change them. The little girl who feigned sickness to keep from going to Sunday school was not wholly wrong in the manner of her reasoning. Her mother said, "Very well, dear, I will leave you here with God." "Oh, no," she replied, "if you are going to leave me with Him, I will go to Sunday school." We cannot undertake to fool God or to do evil in His presence. The Church should therefore proclaim in clarion tones this precious truth of the divine immanence.

One of the tenderest utterances of Jesus is the passage in John where He tells His disciples they are His friends. Jesus came to reveal His Father, and so God is our Friend as well as our Father. Let us therefore not tremble at the thought of God's presence with us. Let us realize that God is present as Friend and that His heart's greatest desire is to help us live the best life possible. He is present not to spy on us, though our misconduct grieves His heart, nor to seek opportunity to bring us to judgment, for He is no supernal sheriff, but to befriend us, to lend us the helping hand whenever we grow weary, and to lift us up and out of the slough when discouragement and despondency would settle down upon us in encircling gloom. The Divine Immanence and the Ever-present Friend—how precious the thought, how priceless the realization! In the inspiring atmosphere of such holy relationship, all jealousy, all injustice, all hatred will disappear as the mist before the rising sun, and love and sacrifice and brotherhood will crown life and all its institutions. Where then will be industrial strife? Where social rivalry? Where international distrust and war? Where personal hatred and harsh judgment of others? They cannot exist in a world conscious of God's presence. Again, then, let us say the Church should proclaim in clarion tones this precious, this dynamic truth of the divine immanence. This restless age needs it, and it will restless be till it rests in Him.

SUFFOLK LETTER

HE same to you" has been uttered millions of times within the Christmas week in response to "I wish you a Merry Christmas" or "a Happy New Year." The expression started my thinking machine and resulted in lessons useful to me, if not to others. I found in the fourth verse of the second chapter of Ruth this: "Boaz came from Bethlehem, and said unto the reapers, 'The Lord be with you.' And they answered him, 'The Lord bless thee.'" Then I read in the eighteenth chapter of Proverbs and twenty-fourth verse this, "A man that hath friends must show himself friendly." I turned over to Matthew seven and twelve and found that "all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." Putting all these together, I concluded that the common saying in response to good wishes, "The same to you," has foundation in the Word of God and the best human relations. It is not an idle phrase without meaning, but a suggestion of value to all sorts and conditions of human society. Boaz was a mighty man of wealth, but he possessed friendly feelings for his employees. His reapers were working men, but they had good wishes for their employer. That spirit would settle all differences between capital and labor. It can never be done by conferences, corporations and unions. The relation is to be improved by the religious spirit and not by verbal agreements.

The principle involved in the Proverb quotation is that friendship begets friendship. Let that operate genuinely among neighbors, and it would remove all jealousies, prejudices, and estrangements. Neighborhood is a valuable asset in community peace and happiness; and the cultivation of the neighborly spirit is the finest expression of friendship. "The same to you" is a fine expression of responsive good will. And the fundamental teaching of Matthew is the fruit of Old Testament practice and doctrine. But this cannot be learned as the rule of life and practiced as a formal expression of human relations; it must be genuine and spontaneous. It must reside in the heart before it is expressed in words. "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal."

This spirit among Churches would remove many hindrances to the gospel and no denomination would suffer. A lack of this spirit retards the growth and influence of all religious organizations. It is as harmful among Churches as it is among neighbors. Suppose this Christmas spirit could run its course for a whole year among business men and corporations; what would become of "competition is the life of trade"? Co-operation is the life of trade. Competition has often killed trade. Trade is not an individual interest, but a community interest. The whole community is interested in the success of business. It would destroy the community for one man or one corporation to have all the water or all the electricity in the community. The water supply belongs to the city, not to a class. Human talents and possessions should be used and administered for the benefit of all; and the relations of men should be governed by the golden rule. The Scriptures cited indicate the expression, the necessity, and the obligation of the meaning, "You the same"; but that response must be to the good will of the other party or parties. It has its origin in the Word of God, is the fruit of the Bethlehem birth, and works its way gradually into the nation that knows and obeys God. That Christmas spirit would make one nation say to others, "The Lord be with you," and other nations respond, "The Lord bless thee." Reduction of armaments, treaties, pacts, and time agreements can never, of themselves, give world-peace; the spirit of Christ, the expression of that spirit among nations, will "beat swords into plowshares, speaks into pruning hooks," and establish relations of harmony that will make the whole world prosper in peace.

A happy New Year! May 1922 bring discords into harmony, hates into love, and start the world along the path of peace!

W. W. STALEY.

PLAIN TALKS TO PLAIN PEOPLE

T was a fine little Mother who was doing the talking. That is, in many ways she was a fine Mother, but her idea of what she wished for her children does not very well seem to uphold the remark quoted above, that she was a fine little Mother. She has two splendid girls who deserve and ought to have the very best atmosphere in which to live and move and breathe, and yet this fond mother of the two lovely little girls, all living in a community of excellent people, if you judge them from the worldly standpoint, said that she wished her girls to do everything that girls around them did. Then she enumerated them somewhat as follows: If their girl associates dance, I want them to dance; if they play cards, I want them to play cards; if they smoke, let them smoke; if they drink, let my girls drink. This is an awful picture to be drawn by the heart and mind of a loving mother. Mother, was that you who said such an unwise thing about what you would choose for your children? If so, let me beg you to stop and think of what it means for your children. If the other girls in your community go the downward way to spiritual ruin, then your girls must go the same way. Mothers, do you realize what that all means, even now, and what it will mean in eternity? It seems there are parents who would rather see their children in favor with the world than to be in favor with God. Are you one of that class? Answer on your knees before God in prayer.

It is far better to preach the truth than it is to give up to speculative conclusions. But did you ask, What kind of truth had we better preach? Oh, revealed truth, of course. Speculative truth is often wrong and always has a chance to be wrong, and for the reason that speculative truth is the outcome of man's thinking, while revealed truth is always right, and so not the least likely to be wrong. The man who is willing, at least now and then, to take a chance at the speculative, is willing to play with a dangerous viper, and usually, though he does not expect it, he comes out of his game worsted, being bitten by error. If the Bible is not true, then we have almost, if not altogether, no assured truth, and for one, I do not wish to try to live on speculation, for usually that leaves us "down and out," so far as truth is concerned. If you think I am mistaken, just look around you and find a man who has turned to speculative thought as the basis of his thinking and living, and you will find a man whose reasoning has been fruitless for good, and he has dried up, so far as giving out real good to his fellows may be concerned. I have seen a tree which in mid-winter had its leaves all in place, but they were all dead, and yet they were sticking to the tree, just where they had grown, and—doing nothing, as if they were expecting to be taken up and given life by the next spring. How mistaken they all are! Suppose they do hang on through the cold and bitter winter, then what? Ah, the first breath of spring that sends out the sap, will not give life and beauty to the dead leaves; no, the first thing that the returning sap will do, will be to push off the old black and dead leaves to make room for real and living leaves. And that is a little parable for the man or the woman who is living on speculation—when the real power of God comes forth to push the old dead stuff they have been preaching, the blackened leaves of human guesswork will drop, and drop into the old and bottomless abyss of things which are dead, and that will be the end of their speculation. Only truth can stand the test of God's judgment. The dead leaves of dead thought will be worthless in the presence of God. Let us see to it that we stand by the Bible—nothing else will sustain Christian truth in the hour of trial, and a thing that will not stand in the hour of trial cannot be of the Lord. Truth is everlasting. It has no dead leaves—they are alive and speaking forth the words of truth and soberness, making men and women wise unto salvation. The sweet fields of Eden are aglow with the truth and its fruits. Cling to the truth till the end.

A HAPPY NEW YEAR

Nearly a century ago was born in Eastern Virginia a little babe. Today on his 96th anniversary day, seated, grey-haired, eloquent with the experience of service well done for the Master, he preached a soulful sermon. It was to the Elon congregation truly "A Happy New Year."

"Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord," was the text. The sermon was a brief exposition of the passage. The life of the man who preached, a Twentieth Century apostle, was the commentary that the congregation most appreciated—silent, but compelling. A rare reverence thrilled the heart as he talked.

To have lived so long and never to have found the Lord other than precious—that in itself is inspiration. Long may he live to bear such cheering witness!

Of course, Uncle Wellons preached. And we were glad.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

FOR THE NEW YEAR

These are the gifts I ask
 Of thee, Spirit serene:
 Strength for the daily task,
 Courage to face the road,
 Good cheer to help me bear the traveler's load;
 And for the hours of rest that come between
 An inward joy in all things heard and seen.
 These are the things I prize
 And hold of dearest worth:
 Light of the sapphire skies,
 Peace of the silent hills,
 Shelter of woods and comfort of the grass,
 Music of birds, murmur of little rills,
 Shadow of clouds that swiftly pass,
 And after showers the smell of flowers
 And of the good grown earth,
 And best of all, along the way, friendship and mirth.
 —Henry Van Dyke.

PRAYING FOR LABORERS

So much is being said upon every hand about the scarcity of laborers in the Lord's harvest field. Jesus Himself foresaw the difficulty in keeping up the needful supply, and gave the remedy—prayer. But what did the Lord say to pray for? Not clock watchers or loafers, but laborers. Those who will toil on and on and on from early morning till nightfall. Those who will work under the Master's eye. Those who consider the Master's interests and work to win His approval. Those who will toil faithfully in heat, cold or rain. Those who are willing to let the Lord of the harvest direct the work.

Then the Lord wants workers who will do their best with the equipment at hand. The man who will not do his best if only a sickle has been provided for him to reap with, will not save the grain for the Master if he is provided with the best implements in the world. One who excused his lack of diligence in the Master's business because of his poor equipment was provided by some of the members of his flock with what he said was necessary for the work. The result was poorer service than ever. He that is faithful in and with little will be faithful in and with much. The Lord will see to it that the necessary equipment for service is provided for the faithful laborer.

The Lord of harvest wants those who will work to save the grain. He has said the harvest is great, and He is not willing that any should be lost, for that grain is very precious to Him. He does not want great numbers gathered into His Church who know nothing of the new birth, but He wants men and women to see the sin in themselves and to turn away from it. Oh, how He yearns over them, and how He watches to see if we are working, toiling, doing our best to save them. Are we praying for just such laborers as the Lord sent out when He was here?

The Lord of the harvest is a sure paymaster. Perhaps the pay may not seem very big at the time the work is being done, but it meets the need and it goes on and on after the sheaves have been gathered in, forever and forever. Just to hear His "Well done, good and faithful servant," would of itself be good pay, but there is the reward for faithful service of entering into His joy and spending eternity with Him. The laboring time is short, eternity never ends. Shall we not therefore pray for laborers in the fullest sense of its meaning, that they may go forth into His harvest field and save the grain for Him?

A happy New Year to all THE SUN family.

MAKING ALL THINGS NEW

The coming of the New Year always brings its suggestion of courage and of hope. We confess that, notwithstanding all the disappointments and failures and disillusionments of life, the new year has never dawned yet without bringing to us a glorious and heartening sense of the possibility of a new and a better start in life. Even though we know that our divisions of time are somewhat artificial, and that the new year is new only because we call it so; even though we know that it is not possible for any man to escape from the record and the result of the years that have gone, yet that picture of the boy sitting down to write before the clean, white page always seems a true and unexaggerated picture of the opportunity God gives every man as the new year dawns. It is a picture that ought to put into every man the strength, courage, and determination that will enable him to link himself unto goodness in a new and vital way and to make each new year a finer achievement and life itself a steady climbing up to God.—The Christian Guardian.

A NEW YEAR SONG

Not of Life's tears
 That mark the memories of the sweet, lost years;
 Not of the crosses Sorrow sanctified—
 The hopes that blossomed and the hopes that died,
 Sing to us, New Year, with the heaven-bright eyes,
 Sing of the sweeter skies!

Grief, that has known the Night,
 Heard, in the dark, sweet whisperings of Light;
 Faith found a Heaven beyond its cloudy bars,
 With Love's face lifted to the light of stars.
 Not of Life's storms, but of new stars that rise,—
 Sing of the sweeter skies!

Sing, with Love's voice alone,
 Of Love, the one Lord, on the only throne!
 The Shelter sure—the mighty to defend,—
 Even Love, Life's brother, to the great world's end!
 Lo! like a dream in the wearying darkness dies,—
 Sing of Love's living skies!

SERVICE THROUGH CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

Christian Endeavor believes in service. This great organization was begun to help young people to find their place in service "For Christ and the Church." And today, as Christian Endeavor is growing and extending its program along all lines, a definite plan of service is presented to all Societies who wish to live up to the high principles of Christian Endeavor, and to realize the great blessings which result from a Society of Christian young people endeavoring to do the Master's will. Briefly this Monthly Service Program of Christian Endeavor includes the following points for emphasis each month:

- September—Enlisting and Tracing; that is, organizing new Societies, securing new members and tracing former members.
- October—Study Classes and Charts.
- November—Personal Work and Subscriptions to Papers.
- December—Sunshine Month.
- January—Publicity Month.
- February—Christian Endeavor Work, including securing Comrades of the Quiet Hour, Tenth Legionaires and Life Work Recruits.
- March—Dixie Endeavor Day, the 19th.
- April—Evangelistic month.
- May—Church Loyalty.
- June—Convention and Recreation month.
- July—All South Convention and Conference month.
- August—Open-Air Meetings.

A very large number of Christian Endeavor Societies are finding in this program a great stimulus to a more effective work. By adapting it to their local needs, they are finding the program a source of real benefit because it provides a definite work for young people and offers a task that is large enough to challenge. Each month the Dixie Endeavorer will carry a complete outline of the monthly service program with full explanations for working it. Also copies of these outlines and suggestions will be mailed to the corresponding secretary of each Society about the 20th of each month preceding the month in which they are to be worked. This is to give ample time for the executive committee to meet and plan the month's work, and make out the report for the preceding month to be sent to the State Secretary of Christian Endeavor.

Another plan which the wide-awake Dixie Endeavorer leaders are offering to the Southern Societies is the Dixie "Four Square Chart" which may be used by Junior, Intermediate and Senior Societies. This chart contains ten items vital to the work. Each item is credited with a certain per cent. When 70 per cent is attained the Society is a "One Square Society"; 80 per cent make a "Two Square Society," 90 per cent "Three Square," and 100 per cent a "Four Square Society." This chart may be secured from the Dixie Endeavorer, 5 Fergar Building, Chattanooga, Tenn., and costs ten cents.

Many of our pastors have reported splendid Christian Endeavor Societies to the Field Secretary. Several more pastors report that they are contemplating organization in the near future. We are hoping in the near future to have a complete list of our Christian Endeavor Societies, and to be able to report more of their good work so that all of our people may know more of the good work our young people are doing.

SHALL THE REIGN OF IGNORANCE END?

The Interchurch Survey reminds us of the fact that nearly seventy per cent of the children and youth of the United States under twenty-five years of age are receiving no religious and moral instruction of a systematic nature. Even among the remaining thirty per cent, what religious education is being given is mainly among Jews and Roman Catholics. Jewish boys and girls are offered 335 hours a year; Catholics provide 200 hours. The Protestants provide less than 30 hours a year.

That is simply appalling. What is to become of the ideals of the Pilgrim Fathers if we take so little care to perpetuate them? And what is to become of Protestantism?

The problem of religious education is the biggest one before the Protestant Church today. It is not being met, except in spots, as in certain towns or cities where school children are taught by pastors of their denominations one hour a day.

Some such system is a crying need. The fact is that if we drift along as we are doing the next generation will know even less of the Bible than the present generation does, and that is little enough. Something adequate can be done only when the Protestant Churches make clear and definite demands and organize the teaching of religion on week-days.—The Christian Endeavor World.

Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D., Elon College, N. C., now entering into his 97th year, desires to send New Year greetings to the Brotherhood.

Rev. R. H. Gott, Kokomo, Indiana, known to many readers of THE SUN, died suddenly at Brazil, Indiana, last week, while holding a series of meetings.

The First Christian church, Greensboro, N. C., Rev. H. Russell Clem, pastor, is now issuing a handsome and serviceable weekly four-page bulletin. The initial number is very creditable and points to a sign of progress for the church.

Senator Boise Penrose, of Pennsylvania, died in Washington on December 31. For many years he had been a unique figure in the Senate and was widely known.

Henry Watterson ("Marse Henry"), the veteran American journalist, passed away in Jacksonville, Florida, December 22, 1921. Few men exercised the influence over political and intellectual life in the United States that Henry Watterson did.

YOUR 1921 INCOME, NORTH CAROLINIANS

The following statement is issued by Collector of Internal Revenue, Gilliam Grissom, for the District of North Carolina:

The Revenue Act of 1921 contains two new and important provisions, which are the subject of frequent inquiry. The first relates to the personal exemptions allowed married persons, and the second to the provision requiring that a return be made of gross income of $5,000 or more.

The act provides that a married person, living with husband or wife, whose net income for 1921 was $5,000 or less, shall be allowed a personal exemption of $2,500. If the net income of such persons was over $5,000, the exemption is $2,000. Under the Revenue Act of 1918 the personal exemption allowed a married person was $2,000, regardless of the amount of net income. The normal tax rate remains unchanged, 4 per cent on the first $4,000 of net income above the exemption and 8 per cent on the remaining net income.

In order that an income slightly in excess of $5,000 shall not be subjected to an inordinately disproportionate tax because of the reduction of the exemption to $2,000 thereon, the law provides that such reduction shall not operate to increase the tax, which would be payable if the exemption were $2,500, by more than the amount of the net income in excess of $5,000.

For example, on a net income of $5,010, the tax, without this saving clause, would be $120.40, which is 4 per cent on $3,010, the amount of net income less an exemption of $2,000. The actual tax is $110.40, computed as follows: from the net income of $5,010 is deducted $2,500, leaving $2,510, the 4 per cent tax on which amounts to $100.40. To this is added $10, the amount of net income in excess of $5,000.

The personal exemptions allowed married persons apply also to the head of a family, a person who supports in one household one or more relatives by blood, marriage or adoption.

Heretofore, a person whose net income was less than his exemption ($1,000, if single, or $2,000, if married) was not required to file a return. Under the Revenue Act of 1921, if the gross income of an individual equalled or exceeded $5,000, or if the combined gross income of a married couple and that of dependent minor children equalled or exceeded $5,000, a return must be filed, regardless of the amount of net income.

"Net income" is gross income, less certain deductions. The fact that allowable deductions from gross income, for business expenses, losses, bad debts, etc., may reduce the net income to an amount below the personal exemptions of $1,000 or $2,000, does not alter the requirement to file a return of gross income, if such gross income equalled or exceeded $5,000.

WHY WE CELEBRATE CHRISTMAS

(Received too late for the Christmas issue)

Many, many years ago, God looked down on this sin-cursed world and saw there was something to be done for us, so He sent His most precious jewel from heaven in the form of a little babe, in Bethlehem of Judea. We know He did not have a fine home and cradle, nor costly clothing, as some babies do, but had merely a manger in which to lie. Nevertheless, it is not fine clothes that count, but the good that we are to the world.

I trust that we will all think of Christmas in the right way. It is not a time when people should get drunk, go to dances, and do things that are not right. I sometimes wonder if we all celebrate Christmas as we should. It is a time when we should sing "Glory to God in the highest" as the angels did, and "Peace on earth, good will toward men." It is a time when we should think of and serve others, for we serve God best when we serve others most. If we fail to help and comfort the least of His we fail to comfort Him.

We must think what a great thing it is to celebrate the birthday of one who has done so much for us. Just think of all the great good He did when He was here among men, healing the sick, raising the dead, preaching and teaching the people about the Kingdom of heaven, eternal life, and all about the Word of God. I do not wonder at their falling down and worshiping Him and presenting their gifts unto Him, nor the angels singing "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, good will toward men." I trust that we may ever follow the star that leads to Jesus until it leads us to where He is.

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

ELM AVENUE, PORTSMOUTH, VIRGINIA

On the third Sunday of December, 1920, a few friends at Prentis Park, Portsmouth, organized a Christian Sunday school with fifteen members. There being no Christian church or available hall, a private residence was used. In January, 1921, a lot was purchased on which to build a church. One year from the date of organizing the Sunday school with its fifteen members there was a Sunday school with 170 names on the roll, and 118 members present, and sixty names on the Cradle Roll. The church in its brief career has had two pastors—Rev. E. H. Rainey, a student of Yale University, who served his vacation months last summer, and Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, the present pastor, who began his work with the church in November. Brother Bradshaw has received five members within the month he has served, congregations are increasing, and the Sunday school is growing. The church has a membership of sixty-eight. There is an open field for great usefulness here, and Brother Bradshaw has entered upon his work with great zeal and enthusiasm. The people are delighted with him and the way in which he has taken up the work.

FRANKLINTON, NORTH CAROLINA

In a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN the wish was expressed by the writer that a worthy successor to Rev. B. F. Black might be found for Franklinton. The wish seems to have been gratified most happily. Rev. D. A. Long, D. D., has visited Franklinton several times since Conference, and he is delighted with the work and the prospects there, and the people seem most happy to have him. Doctor Long has decided to locate at Franklinton and at an early date is moving his family there. He has other churches in easy reach. By residing at Franklinton and holding mid-week services in addition to stated Sunday services, and giving the work his close personal attention, he reasonably expects the work to move forward. The writer is happy at this outcome, and that Doctor Long the coming year has full church work to which he is to devote all his time and effort. Franklinton is a field of promise and the deplorable feature is that we did not begin a church there many, many years ago.

OUTLINE OF WORK FOR MISSIONARY COMMITTEE— 1921-1922

Our Raleigh Christian church, Rev. J. Vincent Knight, pastor, plans to put on a missionary program the coming year which is at once suggestive and inspiring. A copy has reached me and I pass it on, thinking possibly there may be other churches with missionary committees that will appreciate the program and undertake it or something like it the coming year. The committee outlines its work as follows:

The work of our committee might be looked upon as being very general, since it has to do with the whole of the church. In outlining our work, we are endeavoring to serve the whole church and congregation in such a manner as not to duplicate the work of any other committee, board, or organization of the church which is by no means an easy task since our church is well organized. We believe we appreciate the obligation, responsibility and opportunity of this committee, and we believe it is the most important committee of the church—since the whole of church work is, and should be, missions, and rightly so, if we view it in the light of Mark 16:15, where our Lord commissioned His Disciples to evangelize the world.

We believe the work of this committee is largely inspirational, and educational, and our primary purpose shall be the dissemination of missionary knowledge among the entire membership of the local church. This we shall try to do, by means of mission literature—such as posters, tracts, articles and missionary messages. We believe the men of our church as well as the ladies are entitled to this missionary knowledge. We therefore ask your co-operation in carrying out the following five things:

First: A thorough distribution of literature on missions, in the form of tracts, posters, pictures, etc., among the entire membership of our church, Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Society.

Second: In the absence of a good literature committee we would put on a campaign for subscriptions to our Missionary Magazine, and such other magazines as we think suitable—also, "The Christian Sun" and "Herald of Gospel Liberty" (if these are not included in the work of the educational committee) since both are available as missionary periodicals.

Third: To keep our church informed on changes on work and positions of our missionaries at home and abroad. This, by means of letters, photos, etc., and the placing of mission charts on the walls of our church building.

Fourth: The observance of one Mission Sunday in each quarter—to be held in January, April, July and October, the date of which is left up to the pastor and this committee—since our plan would take in the whole day in all church departments.

Fifth: As a matter of good faith in the work, this committee has (with the aid of the pastor) made plans to have Dr. J. O. Atkinson, our Mission Secretary, with us for both services on Sunday, January 22, 1922. He will preach a sermon on missions at the morning hour, and at the evening hour will lecture on his "Experiences in Porto Rico." We are also planning now to bring Dr. W. P. Minton, Foreign Mission Secretary for the American Christian Convention, to our church in May, 1922, and if we succeed, he will give us a complete story of our work in China and Japan by means of pictures.

Respectfully submitted,

MRS. J. VINCENT KNIGHT, Chairman,
MRS. W. R. HUNT,
MRS. L. C. BRINKLEY,
MRS. M. L. MANN,
MRS. P. T. HINES.

This committee evidently has ideas, and here is hoping for great achievements during the new year.

THE WORK IN PORTO RICO

I have this cheerful line in a letter received from Rev. D. P. Barrett: "The work in general in Porto Rico is more prosperous than ever, it seems to me. There have been professions in Ponce, Arus, Santa Isabel, and I think also at Salinas since you and Brother Minton were here. I am expecting to receive sixteen into the church next Sunday, the Lord willing. I then have a list of twenty candidates. We had an average of 190 in our Ponce Sunday school last month."

Brother Barrett is hoping much that a medical missionary will be secured and sent to Porto Rico as the Board has decided, and I join in that hope. Through the medical missionary a point of contact is reached which makes it easy to win the native to Christ, and two out of every five Porto Ricans die without any medical attention whatsoever. Physicians are exceedingly scarce and we Christians need one in the territory of 70,000 people assigned to us by the other denominations to win to Christ.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

HAPPY CHRISTMAS!

Christmas passed off very nicely at the Christian Orphanage. Our friends were very kind to us and sent in plenty of candy, oranges, apples, etc., to give the children several treats. Several churches also took the names of the children and bought a present for each child and put his or her name on the package, so the little child would get the thing that was bought for it. Several churches sent in coops of chickens and we had a chicken dinner (not turkey) and all the little folks enjoyed it to their hearts' limit.

The Superintendent feels that he ought to say for the children that their conduct was so good during the entire Christmas holidays that he did not have to correct a single child.

All the little folks have been happy and appreciate the kind remembrances they have received, and showed their appreciation by being good.

Christmas offerings have not come in as much as we had looked for, but we had a rainy day Christmas day and many people were kept away from church. We hope, however, that all churches will make the Thanksgiving offering one day in January, if they have not already made it, and mail it in. We will soon have to close our books for the year, and we are far from the goal. The Thanksgiving offering to date amounts to $3,620. We must raise, to reach the goal, $2,380. Will we reach it this year before we close the books the last of January? By adding the Christmas offerings sent in amounting to $66.97, we will still have to raise about $2,300.

I have always had faith in our church folks and I have never set a goal yet that you did not push me beyond it, and I still have this faith. I set the goal small this year because of the financial conditions, and I think we ought to reach the amount. Let us all make one strong pull and make some sacrifice in order to reach the goal. We have many members who could mail us a check for a hundred dollars, fifty dollars, twenty-five dollars, and less amounts, and be the happier. Friends, come to my rescue. You see we are far from the goal, and oh, how sad it will be if we fail to reach it! When we call on you and you come to our rescue, it makes us happier and gives us greater strength to push forward to do a larger work. I have faith in you. I do not believe you will fail me now.

Twelve dollars will save a life till harvest time. How many lives of Russian children are we spending in need-less luxuries? Surely we need a deeper conscience on the sin of selfish luxury when others are dying for lack of what we recklessly waste. For our own sake we dare not be so callous as to ignore their cry. It would mean a famine of the soul worse than the famine of the body that the Russians face.

A new world record for long distance radio com-munication was recently made when President Harding's message addressed to the nations of the world was picked up in New Zealand. New Zealand is 10,000 miles from where the message was sent, the new radio center at Rocky Point, Long Island.

CHURCH NEWS

VIRGININA LETTER

It is a duty that the pastor owes his people to write to the Church paper occasionally. He can excuse himself because of other duties, but it is doubtful about his people accepting any excuse. After a long silence I shall attempt a letter of a general nature concerning the work of this field, consisting of Union, Hebron, Lebanon and Liberty churches. While there have been reverses in some parts there has been progress in others. Forty-five members were received during the past Conference year. All of the churches have Sunday schools, Missionary Societies, and some young people's organizations. The field was greatly helped the past year by the aid of Brothers Stanley Harrell, O. D. Poythress and L. E. Smith, who assisted in revival work. There was some falling off over previous years in the financial reports of the churches; but this, I think, is general in the tobacco section. The people have been kind to me and my family. Especially have we been remembered during the Christmas season.

As I look out to the year 1922 it is with hope of a good year. The great spiritual revival that was predicted to follow the war did not come; but on the other hand conditions followed that worked against a real spiritual awakening. Now it is predicted that the spirit of the times indicates a great revival. The church has it within its power to make this prophecy true in reality.

MEBANE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

The Sunday school was opened promptly on time by the superintendent, J. O. Fowler. The lesson was well taught, and during the session various members read interesting articles on the advent of our Savior. The music was splendid and appropriate. At 11 o'clock we preached from Luke 2:10. At 7 p. m. a beautiful program was rendered, consisting of songs by the different classes and by the school, splendid recitations and fine selections were read. At the close an abundant treat was given to the children. This program was prepared and directed by Miss Lillie Fowler, the splendid and useful granddaughter of the late Rev. Thomas Fowler. She had the assistance of some members of the school. Thus the happy day passed.

NEWPORT NEWS POUNDS PASTOR

It was the night before Christmas eve, when everything was quiet, and our little girl, Margaret, had gone to sleep, that there was an unusual sound of footsteps at our front door. The ringing of the door-bell and the sound of voices made me feel at first that someone wanted to get married, but on opening the door I discovered that about thirty or more of the good members of the East End Christian church had loaded themselves with bundles and packages. To our dining room they went, and filled the table with these burdens they were carrying. Among these bundles we found canned goods, butter, milk, coffee, flour, meat, lard, pepper, sugar, fruit, candy, cake, jelly, macaroni, rice, crackers, matches, soap, mistletoe, holly, a doll for the baby, and Merry Christmas and a happy New Year.

Overcome with surprise, we tried to thank the company, but words could not be found to express our appreciation. May the good Lord abundantly bless these good people of Newport News and help me to prove more worthy as their minister.

SOLEMN VOWS

RICE-MORRIS

At Virgilina, Va., on Sunday evening, November 13, 1921, I united in marriage Arthur Rice and Miss Lucy Morris, both of Virgilina, and members of Union Christian church. Mr. Rice is a son of J. W. Rice, and an industrious farmer. His bride is a daughter of William Morris, and a young lady of splendid disposition and a host of friends. May their pilgrimage in life be pleasant, and may they be of service in their church and community.

CRISP-LEWIS

At the home of the officiating minister, 124 Chestnut Street, Suffolk, Va., December 8, 1921, William S. Crisp and Miss Emma Lewis were united in marriage. Mrs. Crisp is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Lewis, of Edgecombe County, N. C. The young and happy couple have the congratulations of their many friends.

H. H. BUTLER.

PARKER-STALLINGS

Linwood Parker and Miss Hortense Stallings, of Taylorsville, N. C., were united in marriage on December 10, 1921, at the home of Rev. H. H. Butler, Suffolk, Va. A large circle of friends extend greetings to this couple.

H. H. BUTLER.

WILKINS-BROWNING

Earl Heiman Wilkins and Miss Mary Sue Browning were married by the writer on December 20, 1921, at the First Presbyterian church, Burlington, N. C. The church was beautifully decorated, and the music was excellent. The beautiful ring ceremony was used. The many friends of the bride and groom wish for them a prosperous and happy life.

P. H. FLEMING.

SEAT-TUCK

Drewry S. Seat and Miss Blandin Tuck were united in marriage at my home, Virgilina, Va., at 1:30 on the afternoon of December 21, 1921. Mr. Seat is a member of Union church and the agent at Mayo, Va. He also conducts a merchandise business. The bride is the daughter of Brother Ernest Tuck, and a member of the M. E. church. She was educated at the Virgilina High School and at Harrisonburg Normal. This is a splendid young couple, and the best wishes of a host of friends is with them.

LOWDER-PERRY

December 21, 1921, Daniel E. Lowder and Miss Lollie Lea Perry, of Union Ridge, North Carolina, were married at the residence of the writer, Church Street, Burlington, N. C. The many friends of the happy couple wish for them a long and happy life.

P. H. FLEMING.

JONES-THOMAS

Adolphus Jones and Miss Ella Thomas were married at my home in Virgilina, Va., on Sunday afternoon, December 25, 1921. The groom is the son of Wyatt Jones, of Granville County, N. C., and has for several years been in the road construction business. He began by handling a scoop. He deemed it his part to do his work well and left it with his employes to advance in position and wages as he saw fit. Now he is one-fourth owner in the business, and independent. The bride is also of Granville County, and was formerly a diligent pupil in our high school here. These young people begin life under very favorable circumstances. May the blessings of heaven attend them.

CALLED HOME

WILKINS.—At her home near Cypress Chapel, Va., December 1, 1921, Mrs. Annie Rebecca Wilkins, beloved wife of George W. Wilkins, died at the age of 67 years. She leaves a devoted husband and seven children. She was a good Christian mother and will be greatly missed in her church, community and home.

The funeral services were conducted by the writer and her remains laid to rest in the cemetery of her church.

H. H. BUTLER.

WHITT.—Miss Susie Whitt died December 2, 1921, age sixty years, eleven months and seven days. Her life had been in many respects a sad one because of affliction; but her faith in God gave sustaining grace and strength. Years ago she united with the Baptist church, and later transferred her membership to Liberty Christian church. Her home was with her sister, Mrs. Fannie Whitt. And no people could have been more devoted and have done more to care for one afflicted than did Brother and Sister Whitt. The funeral was conducted by the writer from Liberty Christian church on Sunday afternoon, December 4, and the burial was in the church cemetery. She loved her church and was faithful in attending worship. The last trip she made from home was to attend church service. She will be missed there. But why should loved ones weep when they believe she has only passed from this life of suffering to the other of freedom from pain and of continuous joy?

OLDHAM.—Brantly H. Oldham died at his home at Cumnock, Route 1, Sunday night, December 4, 1921. He suffered a stroke of apoplexy Sunday morning, and did not regain consciousness. He was 73 years of age. He leaves to mourn their loss a wife, four sons and two daughters.

The funeral was conducted and the interment made at Antioch church. May our Heavenly Father be very merciful to the bereaved family.

A FRIEND.

HALL.—Wiley W. Hall died at his home in Suffolk, Va., December 6, 1921, at the age of 68 years. He leaves a devoted wife and thirteen children, six sons and seven daughters. His first marriage was to Miss Williametta Harris.

The funeral services were conducted at Antioch Christian church by the pastor, and his remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery. May God bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER.

SCOTT.—Ernest Graham Scott, son of L. B. and Roberta Scott, was born December 13, 1895, died December 9, 1921, aged twenty-five years, eleven months and twenty-six days. Brother Scott was a splendid young man and a faithful member of the church. While in camp at Chicamauga he developed a case of pleurisy, from which he never entirely recovered. After being mustered out of service he came back to his home near Semora, N. C., and resumed his work as a farmer. About a week before his death the doctors advised that he be taken to the hospital for an operation. On the Sunday before his death he was carried to the General Hospital, Danville, Va., but the surgeon discovered he was developing a case of pneumonia, so did not operate. His body was brought home to his mother's on Friday afternoon, and on Saturday, the 10th, the funeral was conducted at his church, Lebanon, and the interment was in the church cemetery. A large crowd of relatives and friends were present at the funeral, which gives evidence to the high esteem in which he was held. He leaves a mother, four brothers and four sisters. They sorrow, but not as those without hope.

NEW YEAR'S GIFTS

The Winter King was laughing,
And his laugh rang bold and gay:
'What shall we bring the children
To make glad their New Year's day?'

'I'll give,' said the Storm Cloud, tossing
A rainbow up in the sky,
'I'll give them lovely snowdrifts
For snowballs by and by.'

'And I,' said Jack Frost, sparkling,
'Will bind the rivers tight,
And give them all some skating;
'Twill fill them with delight.'

'I,' said the North Wind, blowing,
'Will help freeze up the snow,
So they can all go sledding;
That's what they like, I know.'

'And so we all will help them—
The Storm, the Snow, the Frost—
And give them such a New Year's Day
Its joy cannot be lost.'

The styles might change before we good plan. And this: Those who have the least to do complain the most about having so much to do. If they had more to do they would be forced to organize better and thus get more done. It is not what a man does, but how he does it, that counts in time.

Soul Support

By W. P. LAWRENCE, Lit. D.

Head of the English Department—Elon College

F bread be the staff of life, faith is soul support. The soul feeds on "things hoped for" and on "the evidence of things not seen." He who has not provided hope and evidence of things not seen to sustain soul-life in times of sorrow, disappointment, and distress, has not put by soul food against the day of spiritual famine. Faith is invisible and is sustained by invisible diet, yet like other invisible forces it is great in power. He Who knew all about every soul endowment declared that faith is of the size of a grain of mustard seed, but would yield mountain-removing power. We hear of radium, liquid air, and like wonders in the natural world. But they who have eyes and ears only for things of time and sense cannot perceive spiritual power.

Faith comes by hearing. By hearing, perhaps, is meant the perceiving or understanding which comes through any bodily sense. If I have not faith, then, the fault is mine. I supply the conditions and the currents of divine energy supply the power. Church-going, Bible-reading, deeds of neighborliness and such like supply the conditions for the inflow of the power of faith.

Too, we believe with the Apostle Paul that without faith it is impossible to please God. We, if we be faithful stewards, are anxious to please our Master. We are anxious to hear somewhere, at some unknown time yonder in the future, His "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." Through faith in the Most High shall we come into that power that comes only by faith.

"The Church In The Present Crisis"

PRESIDENT WILLIAM ALLEN HARPER'S new book is called "The Church in the Present Crisis." The volume came from the press a few days ago, and we have enjoyed reading its 272 pages and imbibing the splendid treatment which he gives the Church in the present world situation.

President Harper has written four volumes, all dealing with the Church, its method, and its program. The first volume was "The New Layman for the New Time." It is true that this volume did not discuss the Church directly, but it could not discuss a layman without connecting him with the Church. The second volume was "The New Church for the New Time," the third was "Reconstructing the Church," and the fourth is "The Church in the Present Crisis."

Dr. Francis E. Clark, one of the best known men in the world and President of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, has this to say of "The Church in the Present Crisis":

"I like the book because it is so constructive and forward-looking. It finds fault with the present order of things, but does not leave us hopeless in regard to the future. The vigor and aptness of the sentences catch the attention and make one eager to read on. I have not found a dull line in the book. It strikes splendid blows for a genuine religious education and experience, and for the strengthening and encouragement of all the good elements in our civil and religious life that still exist. This book is a notable contribution. It is needed by a great multitude of people and I wish they all might read it."

"The Church in the Present Crisis" has its introduction written by Dr. Peter Ainslie, Baltimore, Md. We feel that Dr. Ainslie's introduction is worthy of discussion here.

"There is hardly a chapter or even a subject but that it might be the theme of an entire volume. He has presented these so satisfactorily that no reader will fail to comprehend the importance of the brief discussion and will desire to go into more lengthy examination of these too brief pages, which, after all is the best service a book can render.

"There are wrongs to be abolished and new adjustments to be made. Our social order is out of gear. There is no standard by which it can be permanently righted other than that of Jesus. We need, however, neither to be alarmed nor discouraged. There is growth in the world. Womanhood is being honored; childhood is being recognized without sin at its birth and its right of growth toward God; education is making universal the great facts of the world and the mind's fellowship with God; the inalienable rights of mankind are being recognized; industrial adjustments are in progress, care for the prisoner and concern for delinquents find expression in the activities of many; hospitals are being multiplied so as to meet the demands of ministrations to the sick; societies for the protection of the dumb animals are being organized; the Gospel is being preached to all nations."

President Harper's book is anti to any static order. The following sentence in the opening chapter is proof of this statement: "The very moment the individual Christian becomes satisfied with himself a funeral is in order." President Harper illuminates the book with just this kind of statements. He declares that the very moment a Church considers that its work is all done, it ceases to be an asset to the community in which it is located and becomes a liability. The author enlarges upon this by saying that when a denomination considers itself big enough in program to discharge its obligation to the Kingdom, its downward trend that day begins. The author closely follows good philosophical lines, and reasons accurately and safely that there is no final development in the life of the individual, the life of the local church, or the denomination, if these things are to serve best and most.

The author of "The Church in the Present Crisis" is a layman, sees from that angle, and discusses from that viewpoint. His statements are clear, forceful, daring and brave. They are daring in that they challenge the best in the individual, the local church and the denomination. They are brave in that they fearlessly proclaim in behalf of the Kingdom service.

The author declares that times are perilous. He laments the decline of idealism since the signing of the armistice. He declares that Altruism departed when the Versailles Peace Conference assembled. "Selfishness has gained the ascendancy among the lawmakers. Party politics and the scramble for partisan advantage have dishonored the noble idealism actuating our nation in its war activities." But following this seemingly pessimistic statement the author says that there is no occasion for pessimism and declares that the wreckage of ideals will find anchor.

There is no question but that progress follows accurate and constructive thinking. The world is not without its great minds, but the one great trouble is that so many are resting on their oars and not endeavoring to find new avenues of service. "The Church in the Present Crisis" reveals closely the need and the necessity of not only thinking accurately, but thinking in terms of world service. The author would have us go beyond the beaten paths around our own doors; he would have us lengthen our cords and throw out the life-line to men in all parts of the world.

There is a present crisis. There is a Church, and that Church is in the present crisis. There is no separation of these two things. The Church cannot run away from her duty and maintain her honor. The present crisis cannot continue without the infusion of the life practiced by our Lord and Master. There is one balm; one thing that will heal; one that will cure imperfections and the short-comings of this race. That remedy is Christ and Him crucified.

President Harper has made a valuable addition to the generation in which he lives. The public will do well to read "The Church in the Present Crisis." We commend it to our people, and especially to our leaders.

A Church With A Program

J. O. A.

WHY should a church not have a program? Without a program, what does a church stand for, aim at, or have in mind? In brief what is the difference between a church without a program and a ship without rudder or pilot. What is a church without a program steering at, or towards? Is it just to have Sunday school and preaching each Sunday or once a month? But what is the purpose, what the thing aimed at in having Sunday school and preaching?

It was to answer such questions that our churches of the Southern Christian Convention endeavored a while ago to put on a definite, specific, active program under the general name of Men and Millions Forward Movement. This name may have been, and was, misunderstood by many, and to many others it may not have meant much. But all in all it was an attempt at concert of action on the part of our churches to go forward, get somewhere, do something for the Master, advance His kingdom by dedicating ourselves to Kingdom-activity.

Making up this general program, there were three separate, distinct acts; activity along three lines: First—Stewardship and Tithing, which act was to emphasize that we should consecrate substance as well as self to Him Whose we profess to be. Second—Evangelism, which act was to emphasize that we ourselves want to win others to Christ and His church, and that we are willing to go personally and seek to carry the message of salvation to others. This would result in personal activity in winning others to Christ, and a great increase in church membership. Third—Life Recruits, which act would emphasize the necessity of laying upon the minds and hearts of our young people Christ's need of their entire life for Him, either in the ministry, as missionaries, or as active workers in some form of real Christian vocation. This would result in increasing the number of ministers, evangelists, missionaries, giving all their time and talents to the service of their Lord and His Church.

Now, that we may properly emphasize these several activities, seasons have been appointed for each. First—January, February, March and April are to be given to preaching, teaching, training, thinking on stewardship and tithing. Second—May, June, July and August to evangelism, during which period we shall think, preach, teach, work for an increase of church activity and membership. Third—September, October, November and December to life recruits, during which we shall preach, teach, think, hope, pray that the Lord will lay it upon the hearts of many of our young people to surrender their entire life, time, and talents to Christian service. This is a program worthy of our best efforts, challenging our fullest sympathy and heartiest co-operation in its fulfillment.

The Reasonableness Of A Program

C. B. R.

A PROGRAM once made and adopted, the work is only started. The carrying out, the executing of that program, is essential in a marked degree. To simply have a program is but to have a dream of the dreamer. The putting of that program into practical operation is the doing of the doer.

Work is best done by systematic plans. The world's big tasks are accomplished by men of system and organized forces and energy. The church is one institution that is still wasting much effort and losing much valuable time in duplication and undeveloped plans.

The church fully recognizes a program when nearly all her congregations use the same period of the year for evangelistic work. We refer to the spring and summer months, when the revival meetings are held.

But why should the summer months be used largely for evangelism and no special thing urged during the other months? This question is being asked and will continue to be asked until rightly and accurately answered. There is a reason for the use of the summer months for evangelistic effort. That reason is the favorable condition of the weather.

The program proposed, urged, and insisted upon by our Men and Millions Forward Movement presents an adequate program for the whole year. The division of time is appropriate. The subjects to be stressed are of vital importance, and no church can meet the conditions of this age and not put these things into practice.

It is just as reasonable to have a period of time for the presentation of tithing and stewardship as it is to set aside the summer months for evangelistic effort. Likewise, it seems reasonable enough that during certain months special attention, thought, and prayer should be given to life-recruits—those who are willing to become Christian teachers, ministers and missionaries.

If rendering unto God a part of our material substance is a part of our Christian life—and it is—then it is the privilege and opportunity of the church to teach and enlist all its members to tithe and to acknowledge themselves as stewards of what they possess.

What reason, or excuse, can any church give for using part of the calendar year for special and united effort in the interest of a certain and specific cause, and not use the whole of the year, in divided portions, for other things of great importance?

Let us during the months of January, February, March and April of this good year 1922 put our shoulders to the wheel, unite our efforts, our prayers, our time, our all, that the gospel of proportionate giving and stewardship of possessions may be taught from every pulpit, that His cause may prosper, and that every member may be impressed with the larger meaning of Christian living.

The editorials on this page are by the Editor and his predecessor, Dr. J. O. Atkinson, who are members of the Field Committee of the Men and Millions Forward Movement. By agreement they present two aspects of a program for the church.

IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part XI.

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

Field Secretary for Missions

SUNDAY, p. m., September 25, 1921.—This has been a cloudy, rainy afternoon—thunder, lightning and heavy showers. Minton went to talk to a class of Juniors, whom Mrs. Barrett gets together and teaches Sunday afternoons. (I find that good Mrs. Barrett never rests, and works harder on Sundays than on any other day of the week. I have heard people wonder why so many women are nervous. The wonder to me is that more of them are not nervous wrecks. If we men worked as incessantly and carried as many sorts of duties and responsibilities as they do we would soon fill up the sanatoriums—or the insane asylums.) Minton found thirteen bright, joyous Juniors awaiting him, he says, and had a good time talking to them. (I wonder what sort of a time the Juniors had?) Barrett and I had an engagement for the afternoon at an outlying station, but we called it off and stayed in out of the heavy downpour of rain.

At 7:30 we went to our splendid Christian church here in Ponce. It is a handsome city church edifice of brick and cement, and would do credit to any of our cities in the States. It is modern in build and equipment, seats over three hundred, and the acoustics are fine. Despite the very inclement weather an audience of between seventy-five and one hundred were present. They were much interested in their songs and sang with zest, reverence and vigor. Brother Barrett read a Scripture lesson from Genesis 28, but I could not understand a word he said—except now and then something about “Yay-Cop.” (That is enough to make good old Jacob weep—to be called out from Scripture and at the hour of worship like that.) Then I tried to preach on Jacob’s attitude to God when he made the awful discovery that he was face to face with God and in God’s house. Prof. Juan Rodriguez acted as my interpreter. We were three-quarters of an hour at the business. I had to speak a sentence and then wait for Prof. John (that is what Juan means) to translate it and hand it over in his Spanish. Rodriguez is a fine fellow; knows English and speaks it beautifully, teaching it, in fact, in the city high school. He is a deacon and a leader in our church here, and is a fine example of what real Christianity can do for a man in making him both great and useful. After we were through, Barrett took the stand and spoke for ten minutes. Every ear was strained to catch what he was saying. He tells me that he felt moved mightily to give an invitation to those interested in their own salvation, and who had not previously done so, to come forward. He gave the invitation, not knowing what would happen, and to his great joy fifteen came forward and gave him their hand. Prof. Juan Rodriguez acted as secretary and took their names. The hymns of invitation, though I could not understand the words, were sung with great fervor and reverence, and the interest was tense. The services lasted till nearly 10 o’clock, and the people remained, seemingly with deepest reverence and desire. As Barrett finished his appeal I noticed not a few in tears as seekers came forward. The regular attendants at service—you can always tell them in a church—were much affected and moved. The spirit of the after-meeting was fine, and withal a most inspiring sight. Several who came forward were young people of real intelligence and promise. Brother and Sister Barrett were deeply moved as they witnessed the scene. No wonder! They tell me that most of them were their Sunday school pupils. Barrett says the invitation on his part was entirely spontaneous and evidently of the Spirit, as no previous campaign or solicitations had been carried on. These fifteen did not make an open confession of Christ, but by going forward said: “I want to learn of your Christ. Come to my house and teach me of Him. I am open and ready to receive Him as I now understand; but want to be taught.” Brother Barrett says this is the first step seekers take here and usually results in all of them coming into the church. My first Sunday in Porto Rico has been a joy.

Monday, September 26.—I never sleep much on Sunday nights, and lived up to my reputation on that score last night. So it was a pleasure to jump out of bed early this morning and get busy enough to wear myself out by night so that tonight shall make up for both. Good and early we were off in Barrett’s faithful Ford to Aibonito—my! that is one beautiful word in Spanish. They sing it off to you in a melodious eye-bone-ay-ta. It is about fifty kilometers north of Ponce. (Now I wish these people would say “miles” and not whirl out “kilometers” at me. I am not intending to kill anybody I meet and do not care to be told so every time I inquire about a distance here.) The journey from Ponce to Aibonito is like traveling along a string of pearls set with diamonds, emeralds and sapphires. One does not know which to enjoy most, the quaint houses and peoples one passes on the way, the marvelous military road over which one travels, or the matchless tropical mountain scenery that fills one’s soul with bliss and sets one’s heart to singing. Passing through hanging banana orchards, coffee groves and luxurious sugar cane fields where no frost or winter ever bites or withers, I ask Barrett what hindered the snakes from thriving here and taking the island. He says several years ago the Spaniards imported a number of Mongoose and turned them loose here. What they have done for snakes and other poisonous reptiles “is a plenty.” One seldom sees a snake now anywhere in all this tropical island. Now a Mongoose is a little beast about the size of our mink or weasel, and either hates or loves snakes so savagely that he proceeds to clean up the whole breed of them. But the Mongoose is getting to be a pest, and something needs to be introduced to check or kill him in his ravages! Well did anybody ever! It seems to me they ought to build a monument to this Mongoose—and instead they are wishing for something to eat him! I believe it was Thomas Carlyle who wrote somewhere that the curse of man was that he had nothing to eat him. He would kill and eat and destroy everything beneath him. And because there was nothing above him to eat him, he resorted to war with his own kind and so furnished food for worms from the body of his brother whom he had slain in battle. What would Carlyle now say of war and mankind were he living since the recent World War?)

We went upon a high mountain today to visit the Methodist rest house and found a Disciple minister with his wife resting there. These Disciples, Mr. and Mrs. Carpenter, are agreeable people. They say that Porto Rico's greatest need now is medical missionaries. They are going to ask their Board to send them a medical missionary at the earliest possible date. The native doctors will not stick to their profession, and will do no benevolent or charitable work. There is not an American doctor on the island, unless there is one in San Juan.

The Disciples now have three missionary families on the island, and two single ladies who teach in their Sunday schools. They have seventeen organized churches, with 860 members, and about 1,200 in Sunday school. In one of their churches with 180 members they have twenty-two tithers, and their missionaries are now emphasizing tithing and are anxious to teach all their converts to tithes. Native pastors are weak on taking offerings and raising money and have to be taught and urged to do so. He would much regret to see any denomination now withdraw from missionary work here. It would take years to readjust and harmonize matters as they now are. Each denomination should have four or five missionary families here—and no more. These can direct the work, which must be done by native preachers and workers. There are not enough native workers here now; but four or five missionaries to each denomination here would soon develop a sufficient number of natives to do the work. He says there is no fight between the churches here, but all are needed, have the territory well divided, and each church has all it can do in saving souls.

We had a delightful lunch with Brother and Sister Carpenter in this Methodist rest home, and invoked blessings upon the Disciples, upon the Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists and Brethren who are working together and harmoniously to win this beautiful but sin-soaked island to Christ. They served us fried eggs (what would this world be without eggs?), rice, slaw (of cabbage and tomatoes), delicious tea, bread, fried bananas, and peaches. I like these Carpenters and put them down in my diary as real good Disciples—and wonder if, deep in their hearts, they are not Christians—and deep in my own heart if I am really and truly a Disciple of Him who made all the beauty of Porto Rico and all the wonders and glories of this present world.

ELON LETTER

OTHERWORLDLINESS is not a proper definition of the Christian religion. "Heaven and Hell" are not preached now as they once were. Yet the fact remains that for many Christians the winning of Heaven and the escape from Hell sums up the essence of the faith. They have missed the heart of the parable of the laborers in the vineyard, that the Christian life has compensations here and now that fully justify its earnest pursuit.

Did Christ teach a utilitarian religion? Is religion properly to be conceived as a workable hypothesis for this life or is it a kind of morphia to soothe the pains and heartaches of this present existence by the promise of better days ahead? The Jews, who had the keenest religious sense of any ancient people, were certainly and avowedly utilitarian. Before they were a settled people, they looked forward to their Promised Land, and after they became a nation, religion was constantly held up as the guarantee of national perpetuity as well as of individual prosperity. They expected results immediate and present for their religious conduct.

A careful and judicial analysis of Jesus' teaching will force us to conclude that He was frankly utilitarian in His view. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden." Why? Because "My yoke is easy and my burden is light." "Give, and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom." Why? "For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again." "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness." "Why? "And all these things shall be added unto you." Jesus preached on the Last Judgment, but His gospel had utilitarian value, too, for this present life. He declared Himself to be the life, and that He had come that we might have life, and that we might have it more abundantly. He intended us all to be abundantly cared for here and now.

What we need today is to get men and women to see that religion pays big dividends in the year 1922 and while we live our daily life. Men will in this day not pay much attention to a religion that merely gives them a promissory note on the bank of Heaven or that offers them as the reward for righteous living here an inheritance due to be entered upon at some future judgment day. It is a utilitarian age and nothing that is unworkable appeals to us, no matter how earnestly we may be exhorted to accept it.

Jesus was in thorough sympathy with this attitude. The gospel He preached and taught relates us to God, and it also keeps our feet on the ground. The Christian leaders of the world need to realize this dual respect of the Kingdom and make their proclamation of the gospel complete and symmetrical. There are literally thousands of men and women out of the Churches today, not because they are un-Christian, but because they can not endorse the half-way presentation of the Christian life as our pulpits present it. A full message would win their allegiance and greatly promote the Kingdom's advance.

Religion is the only force that can heal the economic problems of mankind. Religion is faith, mutual trust, brotherhood. It is also an energizing force, a spirit that incites to action and rejoices in serving. It is love and sacrifice, love that leads to sacrifice, both having their utilitarian compensation in the good that comes to others and the prosperity that attends the cause to which we have dedicated ourselves. Hence the blessedness of persecution and the glory of martyrdom! Hence also the explanation of that historic paradox, that the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the Church's prosperity. Love and sacrifice pay. Every Christian understands this and knows that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

But is this true in business? What is the matter with business today? Selfishness infests it like a cancerous growth. Jealousy, distrust, hatred, personal or class aggrandizement, the very antithesis of religion—these characterize business both from the standpoint of the employer and of the employee. What is the way out? Religion and religion only. Capitalist and laboring man are quarreling over the division of what is produced already. What we need is a spirit of co-operation that will unite both capitalist and laborer in the endeavor to produce more than there may be enough to go around and to spare. That "spirit of co-operation" is the sense of brotherhood, of oneness, of social solidarity, of democracy which we know to be the Christian religion, in which we come to think not of what we have, but of what we can give. Let us preach it and practice it and we will all be millionaires.

Religion that does not lead men to work harder and make them prosperous is fundamentally defective. It is sometimes pointed out that people of means are in the Churches, to the discredit of the Churches, as if these people have sought the Church because they are well-to-do. The very reverse is true. These people are well-to-do because they were religious, unless perchance they inherited their wealth. The wealth that a man earns as a Christian will do him no harm, unless he forgets the source of his prosperity. But there is a tremendous connotation in that "unless." For so many times it happens that prosperity deadens the spiritual sense through the satisfactions wealth brings and the power and prestige it confers. Inherited wealth has scant justification in the program of the Christian faith. It is dangerous to become a rich man: it is almost universally disastrous to be the inheritor of great wealth, because those who inherit had not had the aid of religion in acquisition, which is true of most men who have created great estates.

Religion is intensely utilitarian. We need its faith, its mutual trust and confidence, its spirit of service, its love and sacrifice, its sense of unity and solidarity in the every-day problems of life. Its prayer resource, too, we need to unlock the hidden treasures of the soul, and to release for practice affairs the marvelous possibilities of the heart. Religion can work wonders if we are willing to give it a chance and do not forget it when it has brought us to achieve great things, whether there be wealth or science or art or literature or influence or moral and spiritual leadership. "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you."

SUFFOLK LETTER

OME people make fortunes out of other people's misfortunes. Some people grow rich in the hardest times. They take advantage of the hard places in which they find their less provident fellowmen. They ask me when times will get better. My answer is, When people get better and get used to the times in which conditions place us. What we call "times" is largely psychological. Designing persons propagate ideas that grow into public sentiment and then buy or sell at a profit. During the recent war excitement ran so high that traders could sell anything at any price. Then people overbought and suffered when the decline in the price of the commodity came. Now the buyer is afraid to buy lest the price will go lower. Those who saved when prices were high will now purchase at low price real values from those in debt and hold for great profits. A man in debt above his capacity to meet his obligations is at the mercy of soulless men. This is no time to force payments; yet men make fortunes by doing it. It is difficult to locate the blame of the losses and gains of such times. It results in large part from false standards of business and false lives of men. It is really more important to take care of human confidence than to take care of bad debts. No matter what adjustments are made by mortgage sales, bankrupt sales, receiverships, or enforced payments, the same people, the same property, and the same money remain. Nothing is added and nothing is subtracted. The chief thing that enters into the equation is a human relation—human obligation. Language fails to express all that should be known in our common understanding of debtor and creditor. They are both under obligation to each other. In prosperous times the trader makes his profits out of a multitude of purchasers; when times get dull he owes them the weight of his ability to help them by trusting them for what they owe as he trusted them when he sold to them. The purchaser was no more to blame for buying too much than the seller for selling too much. Both agreed to the transaction. Their obligation to each other is a continuous obligation. If the transaction was mutual the suffering should be mutual. Now is the time for men to maintain confidence in one another, practice economy in domestic expenses, co-operate in readjustments, do retail business on a cash basis, stop talking "hard times," take God more into partnership, and lay a new foundation for commercial, social, and religious life. I like what Paul said in the Philippian jail when the jailor drew his sword and was about to kill himself: "Do thyself no harm: for we are all here."

Debtor, creditor, do thyself no harm, for we are all here; and more; we have to remain here together, and work out the problems by co-operation. We cannot do it by oppression nor by complaining. It must be done by good, old-fashioned hard work, sacrifice, and renewed faith in God and the people. I like another of Paul's sayings: "I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise and to the unwise." The Christian is debtor to the sinner. The prosperous man is debtor to the unfortunate man. The creditor is debtor to the debtor. It is a mutual indebtedness based on a legal equity and a moral relation. The times are not so bad. The war has made the people bad. What people call "hard times" is a commercial hospital, a business university, a social corrective, a religious sanitarium, a political restorative. Conditions should improve in 1922; and they will, if the people improve.

W. W. STALEY.

PLAIN TALKS TO PLAIN PEOPLE

 HERE is apparently so much dodging of issues in Christian teaching that at times one can scarcely make sure as to which way to go, but watch closely, and you may see where the dodging takes place. Do not follow the dodger. He is not a safe leader, and not only so, but he may become a very dangerous teacher. To say the least, the Christian has no time and no room for those who dodge the truth in an effort to sideswipe it.

It looks as if we have grown so optimistic along lines of Christian effort that we have almost reached the place where we expect to bring success out of our own efforts. We need to look the situation squarely in the face and see that we do need to put our best efforts in all the Christian work we undertake, but it is just as important to keep constantly in mind the fact that "except the Lord build the house they will labor in vain that do the building." In other words, our Christian efforts must all fail and come to naught, unless we first associate ourselves in Christian work with the Lord, and for the reason that His work must be added to ours if it is to be a success. It was Christ Himself who said, "Without me ye can do nothing." And Paul said, "Ye are workers together with God." That seems to put beyond all question the fact that Christian labor, to be effective, must have the great Master Builder to follow us in all of our labors, placing His finishing touch upon it all.

How careful we ministers ought to be not to give, in our conduct or in our thought, any occasion for others to stumble over us, and yet sometimes some of us lose sight of the harm we may do to others by our conduct or by our thought, as expressed to the public—yes, and even in private conversation. Just recently I got hold of a copy of a daily paper in which I found a page given to a minister to answer questions from his congregation.

He was pastor of a strong city church. He gave them the privilege of asking him any questions they might wish, and then he sent the questions with his answers to this daily newspaper for publication. Here is one of the questions: "Question—Is it wrong to go to a good movie, or watch a baseball game on Sunday?" To this question this minister answered in part: "It is not wrong. The Sabbath was made for recreation and worship." Now think of that! A minister of the gospel takes such a stand before his people and the world! He even gives worship the second place, allowing amusement the first place. And that is the estimate a minister of the gospel put on the worship of God, as it is related to Sunday amusements. God pity such a minister! Let us join in praying for that man, that he may get his eyes open so as to behold wondrous things in the law of God—things which we cannot see when our hearts are full of worldliness and our eyes are blinded by the mists of sin. Another one of his flock asks: "Is it wrong to play cards?" The same minister answers: "No, provided there is no money at stake, and that the other conditions are proper." How can we expect the world to be won to Christ in salvation when the ministers of the Church are talking such stuff to their own people and to the world? Another question asked by one of his flock is this: "Is a lie ever justifiable?" He answers: "Yes. During the war I shouldn't have hesitated to lie to a German army officer in order to prevent him from locating some of our defenseless Sammy boys. But such extremities should not be made an excuse for the lying habit, which is the greatest destroyer of character." Was not that minister relying on a lie to save our boys from the Germans, more than he was depending upon the power of God to take care of them? That minister is too ready to compromise with wrong, and for one, I do not wish such a man to be my pastor. It takes a man of courage and conviction to be a real pastor in leading his people right. God pity the man that has no backbone for the truth?

There is a great storm brewing in the Northwest. As you might expect, it is the outcome of the conflict between Error and Truth. It seems that the Plymouth church in Seattle has a pastor who is so taken with some of the claims of modernism as to espouse such claims. In a recent sermon he endorsed the reported words of Shailer Mathews, of the Chicago University, as saying that "Jesus did not save men because He died, but He died because He saved them." Of course such an assertion stirred up a hornet's nest. Some of the ministers of the same body are putting this man, Dr. Chauncey J. Hawkins, to the test, and they do not spare him. The Rev. R. M. Stevenson, Ph. D., pastor of the Congregational church in Port Angeles, Washington State, in taking this man to task for misrepresenting the Bible, says: "I say without the fear of consequences that Dr. Chauncey J. Hawkins, of Plymouth church, Seattle, is an apostate of the worst type in seeking to fool poor, ignorant souls into the belief that God demands no blood sacrifice for sin." He is charged also with declaring that "those seeking God in order to find happiness and peace are guilty of pure, unadulterated selfishness." He also is charged with teaching the people that the blood redemption of man from sin is purely pagan, and that God makes no such demand. Of course to defend such a position he must repudiate Bible teaching, such as we find in Hebrews 9:22. Men who repudiate the plain teachings of God's Word ought not to be commissioned to go out as preachers of the Gospel. I hope the day is not far distant when such men will find a home outside of the Church of Christ.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

Reidsville, N. C.

THE FALLACY OF "JUST LIFE"

HE only motive that prompts me to offer this reply to S. M. Lynam's article in a recent issue of The Christian Sun is to uphold, spread, and make clear the truth. All of us want the truth; but, we want the truth as Christ taught it and as the Bible reveals it. Man is not the author of truth, and any statement by man purporting to convey the truth is unworthy of consideration unless it is supported by the Bible. Merely stating an individual opinion proves nothing.

The bubble-making sentences of Brother Lynam are surprising. One wonders what sort of "straw man" he has set up to try to knock down with such a fusillade as bombards the thing with. Referring to my article he says: "If I understand him correctly, he takes the position that there is a department of life." There was nothing in my article to indicate that I was advocating a departmentalized life. One wonders where he ever got such an impression from my writings. I do take the position, however, that there is more than "just life." That type of life that can only give evidence of "justice life" is no more than a mere existence. We see this sort of life every day and the scientist experiences no difficulty in analyzing and understanding it. But he is puzzled when he analyzes the body of man and fails to find that which the Bible calls the spirit and soul. His failure to find these faculties prompt him to say that "There is not any sort of life, but just life." If it were true that there is not any sort of life but just life, there could be no higher type of life than that which the lower animals possess. "Just life" can be nothing more than quantitative. The spiritual life is qualitative. Like truth and goodness, it is seen in results and not by analysis. Man possesses a spirit and soul and because of this he is the only creature that is capable of possessing and illustrating the spiritual life. If the lower animals which have "just life" had been capable of possessing the spiritual life, God would have stopped His creative activities when He finished creating them. But it stands to reason that the creative activities of God were not complete when He finished the creation of "just life." Hence He created man in His own image and "breathed into the nostrils of man the breath of life and man became a living soul." It was the breath of God that immortalized His creation and made man spiritual. Life, therefore, as applied to man is more than "just life," it is more than a unit, more than a unity; it is a trinity. Paul says, "I pray God your spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."—I Thes. 5:23. It is only through the spiritual life of man that he can have the consciousness of a Divine being. The spiritual life endows him with a God-consciousness and directs his thoughts heavenward in earnest prayer and sweet communion. "God is a spirit and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." "The things of God knoweth no man, but the spirit of God. Now we have received not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God: that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God."—I Cor. 2:11-12. That was Paul's conception of the spiritual life and certainly our view should be no less fundamental. But to say that there is a spiritual life does not argue or even faintly imply that life is "segregated." It does not mean that the spiritual life of man must go off into one corner and work out its plans secretly and independently. One might as well say that the arm must be separated from the body before it can function. Just as the arm must work out the part allotted to it, so the spiritual life must work out the part allotted to it; and that part is great. It must be so developed through prayer and devotion that it will direct and permeate the whole of life.

Brother Lynam says, "I do not believe that there is a spiritual life which may be grafted on to the normal activities of life." It is not to be supposed that any sane man believes so either. He says, "This life is not made up of departments." I wonder if anybody else than Brother Lynam ever thought or hinted that it was. Some sort of departmental life seems to be a fearful nightmare to him. Then he strikes with the statement, "If I am spiritual at church, I must be spiritual at home. If I am spiritual when I pray, then I must be spiritual when I play." Once more I wonder at the workings of the mind to draw a conclusion like that. If I am spiritual at church, then I should be spiritual at home, and being spiritual when I pray should help me to be spiritual when I play. This is the very thing for which I have been pleading. I wish one through devotion and worship at home and in prayer to so exercise and develop the spiritual nature that it may be able to permeate the whole of life.

The spiritual life of man is that part of him that enables him to conduct an investigation along spiritual lines. The spiritual life is to man what the microscope is to the scientist. The scientist is not entitled to pronounce an opinion upon plant or animal life without employing the aid of a microscope. Paul tells us that we must employ an instrument of which the microscope is a type if we are to successfully investigate spiritual things. He says, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned." The spiritual life is necessary in order to know God and interpret life in all its depth and richness. But the materialists and scientists demur and object when the spiritual nature of man demands a medium of observation and a means of interpretation. They are unjust enough to deny to others an emblem or type of that which is so necessary to their success. It must ever be remembered that just as scientific knowledge is obtained through microscopic investigation, so spiritual knowledge is obtained from "an unction from the Holy One." In support of this view Paul gives us the following, "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. But God hath revealed them unto us by His spirit; for the spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God."—1 Cor. 2:9-10. And Christ said, "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly." Then if there is not any sort of life but just life, why did Jesus speak to those who were so much alive and declare that He had come that "They might have life and that they might have it more abundantly?" Christ recognized the spiritual life and taught the possibility of its attainment.

Is it reasonable to say, "There is no devotional life. There is no spiritual life. There is not any sort of life, but just life?" Let us follow this reasoning to its conclusion and see where it carries us. One might as well say there is no sacred or holy day as to say there is no devotional or spiritual life. If one can be disposed of the other can be disposed of also. God gave us the Sabbath and sanctified it that through the proper observance and the right use of that day the other days of the week might be better served and spent. Likewise we have our devotional periods which I am pleased to call the devotional life, and properly so, in order that through such periods we might come to a stronger, better life for its activities. I wonder how long it will be before we are taught that there are no Sabbath days and no holy places, no any sort of days, no any sort of places, just time and space? According to the "just life" theory, days will degenerate into mere time if they are partitioned off. God saw it differently, however, and partitioned off a Sabbath day for man's betterment.

I presume that Brother Lynam and Dr. W. A. Harper would say there is no spiritual mind, and no carnal mind, no any sort of mind, but just mind. They will have to say that or be untrue to their logic. The apostle Paul, however, did not say that, for he said, "To be carnally minded is death but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." He also says, "The carnal mind is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." Carnality is in direct opposition to Divine love, Divine law, and spirituality. It functions to the exclusion of spirituality. "The world cannot receive the spirit of truth, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him." Yet according to Brother Lynam's reasoning there can be no worldly mind, no carnal mind, no spiritual mind, no any sort of mind, but just mind. But the Scripture proves beyond question that there is a carnal mind and a spiritual mind. Hence Brother Lynam's logic breaks down when subjected to the Bible test—and the test of sound reasoning. If the mind is not spiritual it becomes just mind. On the other hand if the highest type of life is "just life" there can be no spiritual life. But that is not the case. My conviction is that the spiritual life is the whole of life active in spiritual things as the will is the whole of the mind exercising volition, and feeling is the whole of the mind dealing with sensations; but saying that this is dividing the mind into departments is a play with words.

Brother Lynam strikes with the statement, "No where does Jesus speak of saving souls." What would Brother Lynam do with the declaration of Jesus which says, "What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul, or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" The teachings of Jesus abound in such implications and warn us "to fear him who can destroy both soul and body." I experience no difficulty in agreeing with Brother Lynam that Jesus came to save men, whole men. Of course He came to save them physically, mentally, and socially, but ever tried to reach and save the whole man by kindling in man a feeling of need and desire to be saved and attain the things of the spirit.

"Why should we fear to break with precedent?" asks Brother Lynam. I hardly think he need have any fears along this line. He is not breaking with precedent. He seems only to be making words and casting a slur, doubtless without intending it, upon the sweetest and happiest experiences of men and women, namely, those experiences which they have in their moments of delightful worship, of reverential devotion when they are alone with the Divine, when in fact they are trying there to exercise all the spiritual faculties to make the whole life more spiritual by observing these times, places, and seasons which contribute to the spiritual life.

It is amazing to read the following from Brother Lynam's pen, "My spiritual life is not that part of me which will go to heaven." Will he be good enough to tell us just what part of him he thinks will go to heaven? If he reduces everything to "just life," he will have no spirit to go, he will have no soul to go, he will have no spiritual mind to go. He may need a ladder to climb. But the Bible says, "Flesh and blood cannot enter the kingdom of God." A recollection of the Bible plan would have modified Brother Lynam's statements and reduced their argumentative value to their proper nothingness.

Brother Lynam quotes, "I will bow at the shrine where my brothers bowed, humbly, but open-eyed." That presents a rather gruesome and uncanny picture of the man bowing at the shrine in the humility of worship and yet keeping his eyes open. This reminds one of the Publican and Pharisee who went up to pray. There are times in the life of some when the surroundings are too sweet and sacred and solemn for keeping the eyes open. One wishes to close them and shut out all the world and reverently and humbly have a moment in real devotion, silent prayer and genuine worship, that his spiritual life may grow richer, and sweeter and more like God. However, this may not apply to those who think "there is no devotional life, no spiritual life, no any sort of life, but just life." Take away from man the spiritual life and you take away from him that force that transcends all life, that power which touches the whole circle of life. Deny man the possibility of soul culture, of spiritual development, and you deny him the greatest legacy that heaven offers. Such a denial would call upon man to put to silence the voice of his conscience, the voice of God, the voice of his soul which inspire, "a pleasing hope, a fond desire, a longing after immortality."

REACHING ANOTHER GOAL

Our goal for the Thanksgiving offering is $6,000.00. Up to this date we have collected $4,903.33. We still lack $1,096.67 of being to the goal.

We have till January 18 to reach the goal. We have about one hundred churches that have not sent in their Thanksgiving offering. If these churches will come to our rescue we know we will reach the goal. Let every church that has not made the offering take the offering at the next service and mail it in so we will get it on or before January 18. We will have to close our books for 1921 at that time.

We have reached every goal we have set since we have been in this work, and we have set many of them, and we must not fail in this one.

To reach the goal means much for the work here, and it means much for the Church as a whole. Let us do things and not dream them alone.

THE BULLETIN

Rev. C. A. McDaniel has resigned as pastor of the Winchester, Virginia, church, and has accepted a pastorate elsewhere.

Rev. J. F. Morgan is doing the preaching and Rev. I. W. Johnson, the singing, in a revival meeting with our Winchester, Virginia, church this week.

The Board of Publication of the Southern Christian Convention will meet in the office of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Burlington, N. C., Thursday, January 12, at 7:30 p. m.

The front page of this issue is graced by a fine article from the pen of Dr. W. P. Lawrence, Elon College, N. C. We have other articles to follow this, and many others promised.

An important meeting of the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, Ohio, was held during the past week. Drs. Staley, of Suffolk, Virginia, and Clem, of Greensboro, were among those who attended. We have no information from the meeting as we go to press with this issue.

We are endeavoring to give our constituency the best paper possible. Check over it and see how much original matter you will find. Note that nearly all THE SUN is original matter. We take it for granted readers of THE SUN read many other papers, and that much we could reprint would be only a duplication for our readers.

A FREE BOOK

Some time last year we ordered for the benefit of the missionary societies about 75 copies of "The Church and the Community," but for some reason these books were never taken off our hands. We are advised by the publishers that they are unable to place them for us. We have been unable to sell them locally and very much desire to get them off our shelves. The book is a worthwhile mission study and we would be glad to see it placed in the homes of our people. We have, therefore, decided to send a copy of this book free to every person who renews his or her subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN during the remainder of January. Of course, it is understood that we will send books as long as they last. Should you fail to receive a book, after renewing, you will understand that the supply is exhausted.

To Subscribers:

Kindly use this blank in renewing your subscription. Please examine the label on your paper. If your subscription is due, THE SUN will appreciate payment.

The average father succeeds pretty well in discharging his duty to society. He labors along persistently and quietly for six days a week that his family may be provided for; he stands between his family and the world, shouldering the responsibility of the rent, the taxes, the grocery, and the coal bills; he admonishes the boy and advises the mother, seeking always to make their burden lighter; he works unceasingly, without complaint, fighting, scheming, suffering, to the end that his family may be assured comfort and independence. In this he sometimes fails; but he keeps on trying, cheerfully, stolidly, stubbornly plugging along to the end.

The sacrifices that must be made he makes willingly. The boy must go to college, and the girl must have music lessons; something must be cut, and usually it is some luxury of father's that perishes by the wayside. He is not so poetical a figure as mother, not so demonstrative in his affections, so elated in pleasure, so depressed in grief. And yet many will remember a kind word here or a thoughtful act there that stands out, clear and distinct, as one of youth's happiest impressions.

Not often is he appreciated by the growing boy. Often he stands in the family as the official admonisher to whom the boy's faults are related for punishment. On him falls the unpleasant task of supplying the rod; his is the arm that must enforce respect for mother and regard for the rights of others. In this light the growing boy is likely to view him with a mixture of fear, awe, and respect. Not until years bring proper perspective is he rightfully understood and appreciated—and perhaps not even then.—Exchange.

F A T H E R

We sing of mother's love and care
Again and again
In sweet refrain,
But naught of father's share.
She's due each loving thought,
But just add
For dear dad
Some praise for all he's wrought.

A father's affectionate love,
Tender and true,
I once knew;
'Twas like our Father's above.
That love to his children given
A boon conferred,
A strong cord
That drew them closer heaven.

We should no longer keep apart
By such blunder
To render asunder
Those joined together in heart.
In sweetest song and story
Let father abide
By mother's side,
Nor rob him of his glory.

We have the divine command
To honor both,
Yet seem loth
To heed the just demand.
In their love for each other
May they remain
Our parents twain,
Those God hath joined together.

—Sibyl G. Hartzog.

I know whose hand will bring me
An antidote of pain,
Whose touch will soothe and heal me
And raise to health again;
Whose grasp will hold me back from death
When other things are vain.
I know—the hand of mother.

I know whose eye will see me,
Though I may wander far,
Whose glance will follow after
However life may mar;
And blinded be to all my sin
Nor mark my loathsome scar.
I know—the eye of mother.

I know whose prayer will bear me
Unto the throne of grace,
Whose knee would ever bow for me
Sin's record to erase.
I know whose cry in heaven
Would find for me a place.
I know—the prayer of mother.

I know whose love is wider
Than any ocean broad;
I know whose love is deeper
Than any pulsing flood;
I know whose love resembles
The perfect love of God.
I know—the love of mother.

(By Wallace C. Page)

If at times you feel discouraged and sad
That your life is not as it should be,
The future is gloomy when it ought to be glad,
That your way is beset with trials and adversity,
The hope you longed for has turned to despair,
There is trouble deep down in your soul,
A vague unrest, that your friends are unfair,
You have not done your part as a whole—
There is one thought that will cheer above all other,
That is the thought of your own dear mother.

She may still be on earth to comfort and cheer,
She may have gone to that far city of gold;
Think of her tenderly, whisper her name with a tear;
Let memory carry you back to those days of old
When as a child you knelt by her chair at eventide
And heard from her lips of the Father's care
And were taught to trust him whatever betide,
And there learned patience, truth, faith, and prayer.
There is one thought that will brighten your way,
The thought of your mother this memorial day.

In memory's shrine keep her dear face;
It will make life more blessed and pure.
Remember, no love a mother's love can ever replace;
Her love is so tender, so loving and true.
Who can measure the strength of the whirlwind power
Or number the stars that shine brightly above?
Who can purchase from time one golden hour
Or fathom the depth of a true mother's love?
Wear a white flower in her honor if she's gone away;
If she is still on earth, wear a red rose today.

OUR MOUNTAIN SCHOOL

I have a personal letter from Miss Iola Hedgepeth that is so intensely interesting that CHRISTIAN SUN readers must see it:

*Fancy Gap, Virginia,
December 29, 1921.*

DEAR DOCTOR ATKINSON:

The holidays have been so full with me I am just now getting to the time when I feel like replying to your last letter. Santa was so good to us mountain folks that I have been employed at opening packages almost all of the last three weeks. There are some mighty good folks in our Christian Church. You would say so, too, if you had handled the articles of every kind that I have recently. Clothing, distributed among those that seemed so thankful; school supplies that were badly needed; toys, candy, doll-babies (of every description), stockings which came in handily for Santa, and a large variety of things suitable for housekeepers. Our Christmas tree was given in the old school house; therefore, only the children of the community were invited. There were nearly one hundred to be remembered, so we were very busy preparing for the little ones. They hung up their stockings on Friday before Christmas and returned on Christmas morning for them. They arrived before Santa had taken his departure and were much pleased at the appearance of the first real Santa Claus they ever saw. He was more than generous with them, as was indicated. They left with glad hearts, pockets full of candy, tooting horns, balls flying in air, etc. It was real Christmas for them; many of whom had never experienced before the real Christmas joy as they did that day. I do believe. Thanks to good folks who sent them.

Now the holidays will soon be over and we must return to our same little school house to teach. The delay in the roofing of course is the reason we are behind. They are now nearly ready for the inside work, such work as almost any ordinary carpenter can do. I wish there were money enough in the Treasury for you to be able to tell me to get as many as I can and have it finished up. It has been rather expensive, I know, but nothing is done here with as little ease and convenience as in our level sections. When we consider the thousands of pounds of materials that had to be hauled from town, each wagon taking nearly two days at a trip, bringing not more than half an ordinary load up the mountains, then we can realize something of the great task it is to build here. (All the more reason why we should build.) Then the weather is bad often. The carpenters lose much time. That is why we are slow, seemingly.

It is going to be such a nice building. We are all going to be proud of it and will in the future be glad of any sacrifice we have made towards helping in the work. Maybe there are those who would yet do more were we to ask them—that is, to help finance it. If those “down home” could know the great need and opportunity here for “helping others” in the true sense, they wouldn’t hesitate to be “pouring” into our treasury means with which I could work. And aside from fact that this building is badly needed for Sunday school and church purposes, there are many young men here whom I wish to get in school as soon as I have a place for them; those who never attended school at all. Just as soon as I can accommodate more I want to go out into the “highways and hedges” and bring to our school rooms those who have never attended school. I want them to come to us so that we can teach them—give to their aimless lives new ideas and ideals. I want the love of Christ to be put into their souls. I want them to be led to God. There is a great possibility for doing this through the institution I am trying to build. I need more money. Let us pray that the hearts of those who can help will be reached, and I can go forward with a free heart and hand, carrying on this work to which our Church has been called.

I wonder if there are not some yet who would make a special Christmas or New Year’s gift to our Christian training school here in the mountains if they knew how much we needed financial help now, and would send a check to our Mission Secretary marked “For Mountain Work.” I am enclosing mine, Dr. Atkinson, and I know of another you will get by the same mail.”

The other check to which Miss Hedgepeth referred was from Miss Midyett, who is so valiantly aiding Miss Hedgepeth in her great work—and both were for $5.00 each. These who know most the need and are sacrificing most for it are willing to contribute of their savings for this most worthy cause.

I have written Miss Hedgepeth to secure the carpenters needed and push the building to its conclusion at the earliest possible date. I feel justified in this, knowing that our good folks will supply the funds as rapidly as they can.

PASTORLESS CHURCHES—AN ENQUIRY

Does any CHRISTIAN SUN reader now know of a pastorless church anywhere within the bounds of the Southern Christian Convention? In reply to this enquiry printed in THE SUN in two successive issues of December, several responses came, and this writer immediately forwarded names, with ample recommendations, to the enquirer or church secretary. At this writing, so far as is known to the writer, every one of our churches is supplied with a pastor, or with a list of names from which a capable, competent and available pastor may be secured. We yet have names of available pastors, if any of our churches are pastorless. A word of request will carry the list gratis to any church secretary whose church is still pastorless.

Elijah's Challenge of Baal Worship.—I Kings 18:1-46

Golden Text: This is the victory that hath overcome the world, even our faith.—I John 5:4.

Leading Thought: The true will triumph over the false.

The picture of Elijah on Mount Carmel is described by Dr. Maclaren as "one of the great scenes of history, a heart-quickenning instance of moral heroism, and of how one man, all ablaze with enthusiastic conviction, can dominate a multitude. On one side the solitary prophet; on the other the crowd of eager gazers, the four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal, worn out with hours of frenzied yelling; the king, sullenly submissive, and hating the man who had mastered him. At their feet stretched the wide burnt-up plain of Jezreel; over their heads bent a pitiless, cloudless sky. The duel between Jehovah and Baal was now being fought, and the odds seemed great. But one man had no doubts as to the issue. Elijah was sure of victory because he knew that in his solitariness he had God to back him. One man who believes in God is always in the majority, however many his foes."

"Blessed is the nation whose God is Jehovah;
The people whom He hath chosen for His own inheritance."
—Psalms 34:12.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC

January 15, 1922: God In Our Lives.—Galatians 5:16-26.

"Have thine own way, Lord, have Thine own way!
Thou art the Potter; I am the clay.
Mould me and make me, after Thy will,
While I am waiting, yielded and still.

"Have thine own way, Lord, have Thine own way!
Search me and try me, Master, today!
Whiter than snow, Lord, wash me just now,
As in Thy presence humbly I bow.

"Have thine own way, Lord, have Thine own way!
Hold o'er my being absolute sway!
Fill with Thy spirit, till all shall see Christ only, always, living in me!"

FOR YOU TO THINK ABOUT

How would you live if Jesus were daily visible by your side?

How may I honor God in my life?

You, multiplied by God, equals 10,000. Without God, without anything; with God, with everything.—Welsh motto.

100,000 IN OUR SUNDAY SCHOOLS BY NEXT OCTOBER!

According to the Sunday school records compiled in 1921 by the Sunday School Board of the American Christian Convention, the total enrollment of the Sunday schools of the Christian Churches of the United States and Canada is 90,027. The records also show that the Sunday schools of the Southern Christian Convention have enrolled 19,789 of these Sunday school members. Looking forward to the great Convention in Burlington, North Carolina, in October, 1922, the Sunday school officials of the American Christian Convention are hoping to have an enrollment of 100,000 Sunday school members to report to that gathering, and to this end they are working. To meet our share of the quota before we entertain this quadrennial Convention of the Christian Church, the Sunday schools of the South are called upon to enroll 2,198 new members. This means at least a ten per cent increase for every Sunday school we now have, large or small. This means that we need a Sunday school in every church. Four churches without Sunday schools have been reported to the Board of Religious Education during the last month. To do our share in this increase the co-operation of every school is needed. Let us start the new year with a determination that we shall do our part to have bigger, better Sunday schools in 1922.

"The Pennsylvania Plan of Increase" as first used by Pennsylvania Sunday schools, will help your school. Write and ask about it. The Sunday School Board of the American Christian Convention has issued an Efficiency Chart which will help every Sunday school, and is free for the asking. The Board of Religious Education of the Southern Christian Convention is co-operating with the American Christian Convention Sunday School Board, and your Field Secretary (1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Virginia), will be glad to see that any Sunday school gets this material, and any other help desired. Let us know your needs.

OUR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETIES

In response to a letter sent in December to all the pastors of the Southern Christian Convention, twenty-five have responded with a report of the Christian Endeavor Societies in their various churches. Some report no Societies active at the present time. Some declare their intention to organize in the near future. From the following churches we have reports of Societies doing a good work: Haw River, Chapel Hill, First church, Norfolk; Holland, Richland, Ga.; Vanceville, Ga.; Ambrose, Ga.; Sanford, Turner's Chapel, Piney Plains, Newport News, Palm Street, Greensboro; Ether, Richmond. These are all Senior Societies. Burlington and the First Church of Norfolk report Intermediate Societies, and four Junior Societies are reported at Haw River, La Grange, First church, Norfolk, and Newport News.

We know that there are other churches which have not reported Societies that should be in this list. If you have a Christian Endeavor Society which is not mentioned here, will you not kindly write to the Field Secretary and tell about your work?

CHURCH NEWS

A DOUBLE POUNDING

On December 17, 1921, at 7 p. m., about one hundred people came to my home and took possession. My wife and I were directed to the dining room by Rev. J. A. Denham and a real pounding was then presented us. We were presented with four sacks of flour, 150 pounds of sugar, twelve pounds of coffee, sweet potatoes, pork, canned goods of all sorts, preserves, jelly, and many other things.

It seems to me that I have the best church folks in the world. They believe in doing things. They go to Sunday school, to church, and to prayer meeting. They also visit the sick and are living the Christian life. They are loyal to the church and to the pastor. They are not only loyal in their attendance, but they are loyal in their pay. We cannot speak too much in their behalf.

Pounded Again

On December 24 some one called at my front door and it was J. H. and H. B. Floyd from Oak Grove church. I was called out to a big car that stood in front of my door. The car was loaded with many useful and valuable things for self and family. When we began to unload we found meal, sweet potatoes, sugar, coffee, chickens, butter, eggs, fruits, preserves, and many other valuable things. We highly appreciate the people of Oak Grove and pray the Father's blessings upon them.

I am pastor of Lanett, Langdale and Oak Grove, and appreciate and hold in high esteem all of my people.

We have received fourteen members into church fellowship since Conference.

H. M. GRAY, Pastor.

A PLEASANT TRIP

It was a very pleasant privilege I had of spending a few days during the latter part of December among our church folks in the Valley of Virginia, in and about Harrisonburg. The weather was fine most of the time, and our people gave me a royal welcome wherever I went. Their hospitality surely cannot be duplicated in any place on earth, and any one's life is bound to be enriched and ennobled by mingling with them. The fruit crop failure was depressing, and the present trying financial times affect them just as much as the people of any other community, but they are remaining loyal to God and to His cause as represented by the Christian Church, and I predict for them a great and prosperous new year.

The churches visited were Antioch, New Hope, Linville and Beulah. I understood the day I left the Valley that a communication had just recently been received from Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Secretary of the Mission Board, looking to the calling of a permanent pastor for these churches.

THRICE POUNDED!

From the good friends of Auburn, N. C., I received a nice big ham presented by Brother J. I. Branch and family, and from Brother and Sister U. Walker a box which contained a ham, dressed chicken, sugar, butter, sausage, and then some more.

From Bethel church, two boxes that contained flour, sugar, meat, coffee, canned fruit, preserves, butter, sausage, lard, soap, soda, turnips, a nice pair of shoes for myself, and many other useful articles that are used in a preacher's family, also a check.

From New Hill, a nice pair of shoes for myself, from Brother Cary Welch.

From Hanks Chapel, two boxes containing sugar, coffee, meal, dried fruit, two nice pound cakes, cheese, meat, sausage, potatoes, butter, and a nice dressed rabbit, besides other useful things.

My family and I return our grateful thanks and appreciation to our kind brethren and sisters and friends for these great Christmas gifts. May the blessing of our God abide with them. May the Lord help me that I may endeavor to serve them better this year than ever before.

J. S. CARDEN.

BEREA

The old year has slipped away, and another fresh with new opportunities has dawned. We are planning for this year greater and bigger things.

By the help of God we can do them.

We feel proud of our splendid little church and the people who are so faithful in helping to make our Sunday school boom with an average attendance of over 100; also for their faithfulness in giving us a splendid Christmas program.

We are giving one Sunday's offering each month to our Orphanage, and one to missions.

Aside from the Sunday school serving as a training station for the church, we are having cottage prayer meetings each week, which are yielding great results.

We had a goodly number present for the first Sunday. We had two additions to the church and feel very optimistic for the coming year.

SOLEMN VOWS

MACKEY-MURPHY

On the evening of December 13, 1921, at 7 o'clock, Hollis R. Mackey and Miss Fannie Lee Murphy were united in marriage at the parsonage of the Rose Hill Christian church by the writer. Only a few friends witnessed the ceremony. Mr. Mackey is a young man of great promise and holds a responsible position here in the city. Miss Murphy is a charming young lady. This splendid couple have the best wishes of their many friends.

COX-BEVILLE

At 7 p. m., December 31, 1921, Mr. Lenneus Reuben Cox and Miss Alice Aurelia Beville were happily united in marriage at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Cook, Burlington, N. C. The ceremony was witnessed by several relatives and intimate friends. Little Miss Eloise Sharpe, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Sharpe, was ring bearer. Miss Mattie L. Garrett presided at the piano and Miss Madeline Hatch sang "At Dawning" just before the bridal party entered. Mendelssohn's wedding march was beautifully rendered, and the souvenir ring ceremony of the Christian church was used.

The bride was beautiful in a traveling suit of dark blue tricotine and carried bride's roses and lilies of the valley. The bride has a host of friends in Burlington, where she has resided the past eighteen months, and at Elon College, where she had lived previously. Mr. Cox is a business man of Washington, D. C., and immediately after an hour's visit to his mother, Mrs. L. I. Cox, Elon College, N. C., the happy pair left for their future home at Washington, followed by the best wishes of a host of friends.

The marriage ceremony was performed by the writer.

CALLED HOME

EARP.—Margaret Jones Earp, daughter of Leonard and Mary Williamson, was born August 25, 1850, and died December 2, 1921; age seventy-one years, three months and seven days. She was married to J. T. Earp November 10, 1886. Sister Earp first joined the M. E. Church, but later transferred her membership to Lebanon Christian church with her husband. She was a faithful wife and mother, and taught her children to love God and serve Him. There survive three sons, her husband, and seven grandchildren; one grandson deceased. The husband, Brother J. T. Earp, has for years been a deacon in Lebanon, and is one of the most active and faithful members. The sons, Tom Jones, and Henry, are prosperous farmers and are active in Lebanon church. Rev. B. J. Earp, the youngest son, is well known in the Christian Church, having been a faithful minister and pastor for nearly ten years, and is now serving the East End Christian church, Newport News, Va.

Sister Earp had been afflicted a number of years, but bore her sufferings as only one can who has a strong faith in the Savior. At last, tired from continuous suffering, she expressed a desire to depart, and quietly fell asleep in Jesus.

It is my deep regret that I was away at the time of her death and could not be with the family. The funeral was at Lebanon on Sunday afternoon, December 4, conducted by Rev. Mr. Clayton, of the Presbyterian church, and Rev. Mr. Hobbs, of the M. E. Church, and the burial was in the church cemetery.

Mother and wife is missed in the home, but she is daily speaking to them, urging them to come up higher, and they hear her voice in the influence of her faithful life.

TUCK.—Ralph Solomon Tuck, infant son of Brother and Sister Pressley Tuck, of Virgilina, Va., died December 13, 1921, aged 19 days. The little one died within a few minutes after it was discovered he was sick. The fond parents are much grieved. But he had a mission, although his stay was short. It can but keep the father's and mother's thoughts more on heaven and eternity since their little one is with the Savior.

HOLDER.—On December 18, 1921, Mrs. J. W. Holder departed this life. Mrs. Holder was 86 years of age and was a member of the Randleman Christian church. She had been a member for about twenty years, and was faithful until death.

She leaves to mourn their loss five children—three daughters and two sons. The children are Mrs. W. G. Brown, Mrs. Chas. Brookshire, Mrs. A. P. Gaster, Seymour Holder, McLeansville, N. C., and J. W. Holder, Jr., Greensboro, N. C.

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

 EVERYTHING

In last week's issue of THE SUN this page was headed "Everything." We had many odds and ends with nowhere to conveniently place them,—hence the heading, "Everything." This page seems to be worth while, and so we are giving readers this week another page of "Everything."

A few years ago when we introduced the joke column in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, one of our old ministers called us aside one day and said that it would certainly hurt the paper. It had never occurred to us that way; and though we had, and do have, the utmost confidence in our senior's opinion, we have found that the circulation has increased since that time.

And now we believe that this good Brother who advised us not to use jokes has been fully converted to the idea that there is no harm in a good joke.

Talking about jokes, how is this for the latest? If a man marries a widow whose given name is Elizabeth, and to that union are born two children, what does the man have? Answer: He would have a second-hand "Lizzie" and two "runabouts."

We have just recently learned why some of our pastors wait so long before reporting the marriages they perform. It is a day of divorces, and they want to wait to see if the newlyweds are going to get along all right. Well, after all, perhaps we are in the wrong in insisting that these things be sent in promptly.

Many have sent in their renewals during the past week. Somehow these checks and money orders give a refreshing thought for the day's work. Here is hoping that many others may read this and get the suggestion to send their renewals.

In the issue of December 28, the editor printed an announcement which he mailed to the Board of Publication on December 23, 1921, to the effect that he would not stand for reelection at the Convention next May. From many sources letters have been received concerning this announcement. We appreciate these letters and the kind words that have been spoken.

 RATES AND FARES CUT BY THE REMOVAL OF TAXES

Removal of the war taxes of eight per cent on passenger and sleeping car fares and of three per cent on freight charges which became effective at midnight of December 31 will mean a substantial reduction in the cost of both freight and passenger transportation.

A statement issued by the Southern Railway System calls attention to the fact that, as these taxes applied universally, their elimination will result in a material cut in the bill the American people have been paying for transportation.

Under the ruling of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, the railways will not be permitted to make refunds of war taxes paid on unused portions of tickets or mileage books or of such taxes paid on freight overcharges. Refunds of taxes will be made only on direct application to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Washington, and application must be accompanied by certificates from the railway agents through whom refund of the railway charges was made.

Greatest Conqueror

By REV. B. J. EARP, Newport News, Virginia
Pastor East End Christian Church

ANY efforts have been made to conquer the world, without success. Even to this day the world has never been fully conquered. Alexander the Great collected an army and on the principle of force decided to subdue the world. Great success appeared to crown his pathway for a while. Just as his most extensive plans were being drawn for the future, after a banquet had been served, and his men were in fine spirits, and ready to begin almost any kind of conflict, suddenly the world warrior was taken ill and died. His dream of a conquered world had not yet been realized.

Caesar, Rome's great statesman, orator, historian and general—the man who ruled “with a rod of iron”—in the midst of his almost unlimited power, Cassius starts a conspiracy resulting in the assassinaton of Rome's mighty warrior, leaving a world as yet unsubdued.

Charlemagne, crowned king of Lombardy “with an iron crown,” though he was the friend of science and learning, likewise had to die and leave a world unconquered.

Napoleon Bonaparte may have been trained in a military school, and military success and honor may have crowned his path-way in battle and conquest, but one unhappy day he had to meet the Duke of Wellington at Waterloo. Almost by chance he is allowed to go to the island of St. Helena; and as he died in banishment, the great French warrior was aware that the world had not yet been conquered.

The Kaiser of Germany concluded that “might makes right.” Perchance he, too, decided to conquer the world by force. But he was driven from his empire, with his subjects billions of dollars in debt; and the world is yet unsubdued.

Unlike the warriors, Jesus Christ established His kingdom not upon force, but upon love. Not upon military training, but meakness. Not upon egotism, but humility. Today there are millions of people who would die for Him. His Kingdom will finally triumph. Love will finally conquer. “God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.”

Errors Of Continuous Bodies

CONTINUOUS bodies—churches, colleges, banks, and all institutions that are continuous—often make errors, though the casual observer rarely ever considers that they do. They continue, and continue to go and grow, and for that reason it is often considered that they never make bad trades, miss good opportunities, or fail to grasp a situation in time.

But continuous bodies make some of the big mistakes of the world. So often church boards, both of the local church and the denomination, let go some of the finest opportunities of their day. As a rule individuals make less errors in judgment of the future than boards of control in institutions that continue from generation to generation.

We are told, as an example, that there was a time when the University of North Carolina could have secured land around its site for a small sum—in many instances a gift, or near to it. But those in control thought that the University had too much land, or at least had enough for all ages. But for years our State University has been buying land for building sites, campus room, and other facilities at an enormous figure. It could not, or at least was not, seen by those who had charge of things then.

Here is another case. Our own Elon College had land given to it and more offered. But that twenty-five acres was all the land ever needed, as our noble pioneers in higher education saw. Since that day we have needed, and had to have, more land—and had to pay the price. We still need more land and will have to pay the price, regardless of what that may be.

We know another case. A bank had a chance of a corner building in a growing town. The price was $5,000.00, but the controllers of the bank could not see their way to pay that much. Today that bank would give $20,000 for the same site and be glad to get it. Then the site was for sale, but now it is not. Each case is almost a parallel, and to cite others is to repeat the same story.

In our own Church we see many instances that justify the statements made above. They need not be repeated here, for their story is too well known.

Can these things be overcome, is the question that we are concerned about and deeply interested in. It seems to us that they should be and could be.

Two years ago our Convention had the chance of a fine site for headquarters, and in addition thereto, a good building that could have been remodeled and converted to meet present needs. Little more than passing notice was tendered the proposition. But let this be written: We cannot as a Church keep our work going as it should be without centralizing our forces and having regular headquarters. This generation may not (though we hope so), but the next generation will buy and build headquarters. The price then will be far in excess of what the offer was.

Today our own CHRISTIAN SUN is without a home. It has no office that it can call its own. It has no place where it can build a large and creditable book business. It is simply an institution—and an important one—without a permanent location. It cannot continue to be as it is now. In recent years, or, to be specific, within the past three years, it has had good opportunities that have proven their worth. But these things were not seen and the chance passed. Some good day in the near future, let us hope, THE SUN will have a home of its own. That home then will cost a vast sum.

Is it in the form, or the power, of the organization, that continuous bodies, and especially Church bodies, permit such gross errors to be made? If individuals can seize opportunities, why is it that official bodies cannot do even better than they do?

MEN AND MILLIONS MOVEMENT

It may not be generally known to our readers, but it is nevertheless true that the churches of our Southern Christian Convention went further, achieved more, grew faster, won more members to the Church and more souls to Christ, during that campaign than during any other like period of our history. The results achieved in so short a time were nothing less than marvelous.

Now the question has been raised, Are we to make permanent the results achieved and go on to greater tasks, or are we to be quiet about it and let results slip away from us? Many feel that the educational work done during the campaign in the spring of 1919 should continue, and must continue, if the Lord's work is to prosper in our hands.

The Steering Committee and the Campaign Committee are among this number and action is to be taken accordingly. To this end the Campaign Committee decided in a recent meeting that from now until May 1 we should stress stewardship and tithing in all our churches, and Dr. J. O. Atkinson was asked to act as Secretary of Stewardship during this period. The goal is to double the number of tithers by May 1 and create in all our churches an ever deepening sense of stewardship. To this end all our pastors should preach on stewardship and tithing and seek to get members to talk publicly on the subject.

Brother Pastor, are you willing to do all you can in your church to revive the interest in stewardship, and increase the number of tithers? A pull together will bring results that will send a thrill of joy to all Christian hearts of our Convention.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part XII.

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.
Field Secretary for Missions

MONDAY p. m., September 26.—After visiting the Carpenters, who are missionaries of the Disciples of Christ here, but are now taking their summer vacation in a Methodist rest home, we went to the home of a Mr. Snyder. This is the American gentleman who, though residing in Porto Rico, a few years ago went to Dayton, Ohio, and brought back with him as his bride the Christian lady who for years was stenographer to the late lamented Dr. M. T. Morrill, of our Foreign Mission office. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder are both in the States now. They live in a small “cute” house very thickly set about, and almost entirely covered with blooming flowers and a hundred tropical plants. Mr. Snyder is in the bee industry here, or rather, was in it, his bee keeper tells us. Just before and during the World War the bee industry in Porto Rico was exceedingly lucrative. Honey sold for $2.00 a pound, and there is no closed season for bees here. They have summer and sweet blossoms to extract their nectar from all the year around. They did not have to be fed or protected from the cold, but just allowed to have a hive and work themselves to death—which they did and do. But the industry is nil now. Honey has dropped to thirty-five cents the pound and the apiaries are all closed up.

The only beautiful feature about the town of Aibonito is its melodious name. We visited the Methodist minister here, Rev. R. E. Bateson, and his wife, who hail from Michigan. His wife sells lace and fancy needle work made by the natives. I spent the balance of my $10.00 brought for spending money on the trip, namely, $4.94, and Minton spends about all he has, for laces and such which we expect our folks at home to rave over because it comes from so far away. (Distance certainly does lend enchantment to things you buy and carry a long way.) Aibonito is a small, ill-kept mountain town, and I trust our Methodist brethren will be able to redeem it. On our return today we met a funeral procession. Four men carried an old, much worn, but highly polished coffin. There was no order in the procession; some walking, some on horse back, most of the men barefooted—just a crowd. Barrett said they had very likely borrowed the coffin from the municipality, or some accommodating neighbor, and would, on reaching the grave, empty the corpse into it, and then promptly return the coffin to the one from whom it was borrowed. Many of the “better” ones, of course, are buried in caskets, but the poor are deprived in death of box or coffin or other covering than the clothes they have on at the time of death, and mother earth. Neither do they observe any order or direction in burying their dead here. The head may be placed north, south, east or west, as pall-bearer and grave digger may find convenient, and thousands are buried without any religious service or ceremony whatever. We visited the cemetery and found the grave digger throwing out bones of those buried a few years ago to make room for the present dying generation. They have a law here which prevents two graves being dug in the same spot within ten years of each other—but the grave diggers ignore the law and go on digging where convenience and their judgment suggest. Minton and I agreed that we much hoped we would both live till we got back home to be buried.

I found some of the best and most savory bananas, the largest and most luscious, yet seen in Porto Rico. They were eight for five cents, and the oranges were two for a penny. I “set up” the crowd on seven cents—and feel happy for my generosity. Not far out from Aibonito I saw a silo—the first one found so far on the island. Did not learn when or why they put the silage in, but saw some fine milch cows. Somebody will get into the dairy business here one day—and make a fortune.

After a glorious day in the mountains we reach Ponce in time for supper. Mrs. Barrett’s Porto Rican coffee tonight was the best ever. Mosquitoes were plentiful under and about the table, but I killed more of them than they did of me and got that glorious coffee besides.

We talk tonight much of Ponce and home, and the dear ones, and our Christian work here. Ponce is the chief city, with a population of 35,000, in a district of 60,000 souls. We Christians have a church membership here of 113 and a Sunday school with 257 on the regular roll, besides forty-nine in the Home Department and sixty-eight on the Cradle Roll, making a total of 374. We were among the first to begin the work of Christian missions here, but the Baptists, who came about the time we did, built a church to worship in here ten years before we did. The United Brethren, who were among the early comers, had some five or six workers and a building to worship in ten or twelve years before we did. The first thing the Methodists did on coming here was to purchase a lot for $4,000 and soon had a church on it. Our congregation worshipped for years in a very inadequate rented hall on the street, and with others building nice churches, it was difficult to hold a membership in such quarters. It seems to me, as I view it tonight, we have lacked constancy, devotion, determination, and sufficient financial backing in our work here. We people in the States have got to get more in earnest about, more devoted to, more prayerful for, and give larger financial support to the work in Porto Rico, before it will take the place in Kingdom service it ought to have and richly deserves. We have evidently got to send more workers here and then give them more and better equipment after they get here. Miss Mishler came here and did splendid work, I find. Rev. T. E. White came and wrought faithfully, efficiently, and well. But health conditions here would not allow them to remain. Their work still abides, and nothing was lost in sending them here. But how sorely they have been needed here through the years! Of those who have come and gone only Barrett and family, and later, dear Miss Williams, abide on the field and are faithful in the work. Brother Martin had begun a good work and with great hope. But first his wife's health failed, then his own, and they had to give up their dreams of service here. It is no momentary or light task to establish a church in a heathen country. There are hundreds of obstacles in the way that brave souls and faithful ones must overcome. This requires sacrifice, means, heartaches, lives, labors without ceasing. But our Savior knew all this when He said to men and women who are frail, and not to angels who are perfect, "Go ye into all the world and preach my gospel to every creature."

Tuesday a. m., September 27.—I slept seven solid hours last night and hopped from under my mosquito netting promptly at 6:30 this a. m. and was at the calisthenies Minton has taught me in a jiffy. Within thirty minutes we were both ready for a cold shower, and one hour later such a breakfast as we did negotiate was a caution. Minton, like Zaccheus of the good Book, is a man of small stature, but if Zaccheus served in his Jericho home such meals as Minton likes to negotiate, I am sure our Savior had a good day when He told Zaccheus to come down out of the sycamore trees, for He wanted to go home with him to spend the day. (I wonder if they had any Porto Rican coffee in Jericho?) After breakfast, and writing cards home by the last outgoing mail before we leave a week hence, we went to our church where Miss Vasquez Celedonia, a native young woman of talent and training, has a kindergarten class. There are twenty children of from three to six in the class, and they are for the most part children of our church members. They were seated at two tables and were industriously working with card board and cut paper blocks. They had nice little comfortable chairs and a spacious, well lighted and well ventilated room of the church for their work room. The teacher, Miss Celedonia, is a woman of character, skill and energy, and keeps the attention of the children as she carries them from one exercise to another. The Kindergarten is a great institution. It forms a point of contact between church and parent, and also leads the early child life into Sunday school and church.

We went out to Santa Isabel today. On the road we stopped at Desealabrado, a town of a few hundred scattered people. We had a preaching point here up until two years ago, and have eight church members here now. This town is really a barrio, a sort of thickly settled district which has one official who acts as police or constable. Barrett preached in this barrio for twelve years, but it is difficult to reach, being about half way between Ponce and Santa Isabel, and is about three miles off the road to the west. At Santa Isabel we found our native pastor, Rev. Aguino Ojeda (pronounced Akeeno O-heйда, and why in the world don't they spell him that way?) in charge, and we visited very pleasantly in his home and had a good lunch at his table, prepared by his amiable wife. He has been with us since May, and is proving a valuable man. He came from the Baptist ministry, is about twenty-seven years old, has a wife and four children, has studied theology, logic and history privately, and had one year in the theological seminary. We pay him $55.00 a month salary and a nice house, which costs us $18.00 a month rent. He reaches his outlying districts on a bicycle, but wishes a horse and buggy, as this seems more fitting and dignified for a minister. We have now forty-one members in our Santa Isabel church. There were thirty-seven when he came. Prior to him Brother Martin had been pastor and had received ten members. There are 87 in the Sunday school, with an average attendance of thirty-nine. There were fifty present last Sunday. He has an average of thirty-five at Sunday night preaching. He preaches somewhere, or attends a religious gathering—C. E., etc., every day of the week.

Just in front of Ojeda's home is a magnificent royal palm tree. All parts of the royal palm are used. It bears every month a bunch of small berries good for hogs. After berries fall off a nettled thing of straw appears, and this the natives pull off and use for brooms. The part that peels off the blossom and seed is used for string in tying the thatch roof on the houses. The rind that grows between limbs and leaves is used for wash-tubs and house covering. The leaves are used for thatch roof covering. The body of the tree is useful for wood and lumber. A fine pulp for commercial purposes is made from the heart of the tree. Every part of the royal palm tree is used—and its beauty and grandeur far surpass its utility.

IN THE CHRISTIAN SUN a few weeks ago there were some very interesting articles with reference to the Kingdom of God. These articles put me to thinking of "Man's Relation to the Kingdom of God."

The purpose of this discussion is to show the connection between man and the Kingdom of God, or how man gets into the higher kingdom. This is a great task and many have been the efforts to make plain this problem. Some of these efforts have approached a solution. Other efforts have been useless. In other days there were those who employed the deductive method and tried to show by a series of steps that from God there came a transcending issue, and from this issue came a second issue and so on down the scale until we get to the kosmos or the kingdom of mankind. But this effort is not calculated to bring us closer to God, for God's creative and transforming activities are not based on a descending but an ascending scale. In Genesis we have a record of God's method of ascension. The development is from the formless void to the living soul. The ascent does not stop with material substance and living creatures. It transcends all these and moves on to the spiritual being. This is the chief glory of the Kingdom of God.

But how can man link himself to the Kingdom? This is the question that gave Nicodemus so much trouble. It should not have perplexed him. Man should not be panic-stricken today when he faces this problem. When we inquire about the higher life there are two facts that we must accept: In the first place, Jesus said, "Ye must be born again" (from above). Hence the new birth is a necessity. Man's relation to God is based on his willingness to submit to the Divine process. Man has the ability to reform, but only God has the power to transform. Jesus declared in effect that the only way to "get up" is to be "born up." The life must be made over in terms of the higher life. Paul says, "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God. Neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." Paul's argument adds weight to the statement that God's method is based on an ascending scale. It is one of transformation—one of birth from the lower into the higher kingdom.

Man must learn a second fact when he endeavors to relate himself to the kingdom of God; viz., transformation or the new birth is a normal thing. Nicodemus could not understand this, but Jesus said, "Marvel not." As His custom was, Jesus re-enforced His statement by drawing on the kingdom of nature for an analogy to emphasize this spiritual truth. "The wind ploweth where it listeth." Although Nicodemus could not see the wind he could feel it, and this fact bore testimony to its existence. But this was not sufficient to convince him of the possibility of a new life and a new relationship to God. To him the whole issue was shrouded in mystery. It was a clouded issue. The mysteries of the new birth constituted a miracle. At this I am not surprised, because it is only by intimate relation and experience that the finite can understand the purposes and plans of the Infinite.

It is only by the process of uplift and upreach that man can be related to the Kingdom of God. The nourishing properties of the soil, by upreach, move up into the tree and change their form. When the law of nature has completed its process of transformation the soil and chemical properties become fruit, vegetables and grain. The same thing is true with reference to the mineral and animal kingdoms. All these through upreach and uplift become members of a higher kingdom.

Like Nicodemus, we may ask, "How can these things be?" At this point we would do well to remember that a complete knowledge of God and His Kingdom is the last chapter in the history of mortal man. We are to grow in grace and in knowledge. The essential and primary truth that we should learn in our efforts to relate our life to the Kingdom of God is: God will reward our inquiry, if it is backed up by faith, with spiritual insight, and this spiritual insight will bridge the chasm between God and man, and man will be conscious of his relationship to God, and God will honor this relationship by nourishing his soul.

ELON LETTER

WELL do I remember the day in December, 1919, when we met in Suffolk to consider the launching of the Men and Millions Forward Movement. I went prejudiced against any further campaign of any kind. I came away a converted enthusiast for the new undertaking.

There was a reason. I saw the Men and Millions Forward Movement as an educational, developmental system for our Church. I saw that at the end of five years we should have a system of financing our local churches, efficient, Biblical, and convincing, where then we had practically no system at all. Then I saw that a body of trained and experienced workers would be developed in each congregation, knowing how to secure tithers, to win souls for Christ and so members for His Church, and to lead the young to surrender their lives to all-time Christian service. Contemporary with these three splendid goods, I saw the various general enterprises of our churches qualified for larger service through the raising of the large sum of money which the Movement had adopted as its financial goal.

If I had thought or conceived that the Movement would exhaust its impetus and spend its strength with the first four months of the first year of the five-year period, I should never have supported it. The Campaign Committee understood that they were to devote their major energies to the cause for the first four months preceding the assembling of the Convention as an emergency matter, and that then they would be released to resume their normal duties in the Church, a permanent force being provided to carry forward the work so well begun.

The Southern Christian Convention faces, during its approaching session in Suffolk, no more important duty than arranging for the prosecution during the next three years of the high purposes and noble aims that stirred the initiators of our Men and Millions Forward Movement. And I have no doubt that the Convention will adjust itself to the occasion and solve this important problem.

How appropriate, then, the decision on the part of the present Campaign Committee to put on a united endeavor during the next four months for tithing and stewardship! We secured 2,513 tithers during the special Stewardship Period of the Men and Millions Forward Movement campaign. This number should be doubled during the next four months. It can be done and it will be done, provided our pastors and local captains, with their assistants, work earnestly and prayerfully to that end.

Why not double the number of our tithers? Why not? Let's do it.

PLAIN TALKS TO PLAIN PEOPLE

IN the last twenty years I have found not a little objection on the part of many readers to any effort to show up the real attitude of the higher critics to the Bible. In the main, they were members of the Church, in good standing, but they preferred that you would have nothing to say with reference to the course of the man who is what we call a "higher critic." I have seen so much of this sort of thing that I have stopped to wonder why it is that way. Why do men who stand for the Church, at least, yield a sort of support to the men who wish to destroy the integrity of the Bible? After thinking it over somewhat carefully, I have reached some conclusions which may be of some interest to our readers, as follows:

I. He who stands for letting alone the higher critic in his opposition to the reliability of the Bible is ignorant of the real work the higher critic is doing, or at least is seeking to do; or he does not know what it means to the cause of Christ, to have this tide of influence turned against Christianity.

II. If the person thus defending the higher critic is not ignorant of what the higher critic's work means to the Church, then he does know what it means against the Church, and is therefore in sympathy with the higher criticism. Such people might talk to me until the end, but I shall not let up on the work of the higher critic. It may be that I shall lose in popularity with such people, but that does not disturb me at all, and none the less shall I go on, standing against the higher critic's work. I stand for the inerrancy of the Bible, and they do not. Now, if the Bible is not reliable as the Word of God, what have we to depend on as a guide in the divine life? For one, I believe the Bible is the Word of God and that it was given to the Church as its guide in the Christian life. I should like to know on what ground a Church member will give support to such a man? For one, I do not believe in giving him support, and therefore I speak out against the work of the higher critic.

Now and then we find men who claim to think that a man who does not fall in with the "moderns" in their views of things, is of no worth to the Church, and then they try to make the public feel that way. I am wondering if they have lost all common sense, or do they think that no one but themselves are capable of judging such matters. Very well, if they so feel and believe, there are many other people who do not feel that way. Listen to the Professor of English Language and Literature in Yale University, Prof. William L. Phelps, A. M., Ph. D., who must be a scholar, or he could not hold the position he does in that University. Hear him when he says:

"I thoroughly believe in a university education for both men and women; but I believe a knowledge of the Bible without a college course is more valuable than a college course without the Bible."

Continuing, he says:

"Every one who has a thorough knowledge of the Bible may be truly called educated; and no other learning or culture, no matter how extensive or elegant, can form a proper substitute."

If such be the views of able and highly cultured men, it seems to me that it is high time these defenders of self-styled scholarship should begin to look around and see if they are not making themselves more or less ridiculous to people of common sense, when they presume to believe that only men of their type are educated, and that all really educated people share in their lack of faith in the Bible, as the inerrant Word of God. It is true I have quoted only one person as standing for the real worth of the Bible, but there are hundreds and thousands of them throughout the length and breadth of our country. If we should count them accurately and closely, no doubt there will be found a larger number of educated men who stand for the Bible as the Word of God, than there are of educated men who stand against the Bible, as the inerrant Word of God. It is true that we hear a good deal from these men of their views, as to the inaccuracy of the Bible, but let it be remembered that one immodest man can make more ado over his views than a half dozen other men who are modest will make over their stand for the plain and simple Word of God.

UNCLE WELLONS IS GRATEFUL

I want to thank my friends through THE CHRISTIAN SUN for their kind remembrance of me during the Christmas and New Year season. I received over two hundred letters and cards and numerous presents. I do not deserve such consideration, but I do appreciate it.

I cannot write my appreciation to each one, but I am hoping this note in THE SUN will be seen by them, one and all, and taken as a personal word from me.

One letter containing a dollar came to me. I have lost the name, if it was in the letter, and so I cannot personally acknowledge it.

Mrs. West, of Fairfield, Conn., whose daughter, Miss Grace, is in Elon, learned of me through her daughter and the College paper, Maroon and Gold, and sent me a unique present, made with her own hands, and symbolically displaying my age. It was a hand-made bouquet with ninety-six pointers, each pointer containing candied nuts, all the various colors nicely glossed with isinglass. It is certainly beautiful.

Language fails me to express my grateful appreciation. I pray God's richest blessing on all these dear friends and that I may live during 1922 the best Christian life of my experience.

I thank you, dear friends, one and all.

SUFFOLK LETTER

THERE are all sorts of "lines" in the world—steamboat "lines," railroad "lines," telegraph "lines," telephone "lines," "lines" of thought, "lines" of service, boundary "lines" and "lines" of goods; but the greatest of all is, no doubt, the "clothes-line." It may be a rope, a wire, or a fence; but it girdles the globe. It touches every home. It is known to all peoples of all languages, all faiths, and all conditions. It is the cleanest line in the world. It bears the burden of honest work. There is no sham in its service for mankind. It is no respecter of persons or nations. It loves the sunshine and the air. It is the friend of health, school, and the Sabbath. It treats the linens and cottons as if they were equal. It scorns no rag and flatters no silk. Garments of kings and garments of peasants are equally welcome to its service.

I can see the millions of hands of all colors and all sizes reaching up to its waiting arms. The children are in school; father is in the field or shop; mother has put the household garments and linens over the washboard and through the rinse. It was a bent back, an active arm, a life forgetful of self that carried all through the ablution. If there is hard, honest work anywhere upon earth, mother has been through it on Monday every week for forty years. Her heart is stronger than her arms. Her life is cleaner than the clothes. Her love is more enduring than her toil. Her eyes look up to the sky while her hands reach up to the line. "Old Glory" and "Union Jack" are weak symbols of cleansing and power beside the white flags of industrial peace that the mothers of the world hang on the clothes-lines in the yards where liberty breathes its first air of freedom. In the backyard of the cottage, where the clothes-line stretches from the corner of the kitchen to woodshed, is the atmosphere that gives health and strength to the nation. Mother does not work for pay. She works for love. That is the reason the clothes are so clean, and her rest is so sweet. The silk-gowned, painted and powdered and perfumed lady who lifts her arms to meet the arms of the splendid man in evening dress, on the ballroom floor, knows little of the sheer abandon of such a mother when she sleeps. Her evening prayer and her eyes close together, but heaven watches the slumbers of such a soul, clean as the linen on the line. From such homes come the Careys, the Spurgeons, the Cromwells, the Lincolns, the Moodys, the Wellons, and the rest of those men who nursed at the breast of real mothers.

It will be a sad day for nations when they take down the "clothes-line" and do all by steam. The world is mothered and served by the human touch. No sane man objects to progress, to conveniences, to machinery, and to all the modern ways of lifting burdens from mother's arms and heart; but machinery and organizations are taking the heart out of the world.

The old spring, the washpot, the fire under it, the bench on which the washtub rested, and then the line swinging to and fro as the white sails flap in the wind, can never be surpassed by factories and skyscrapers and the throngs in their mad rush for money and new excitement in the halls of business and pleasure. All honor to the "clothes-line" and the army of tired hands that hang the clean linen in the sunshine.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

LOOKING TO JESUS

Recently we heard the Engwerson Choral Society of Denison University render Handel's "Messiah." Aside from the enjoyment of the grand music by that great chorus of trained voices, accompanied by a splendid orchestra, some truths in regard to the Christian life came to me. First, I noticed how attentive each member of the chorus and orchestra were to their director. Secondly, they were strictly obedient to him. As the concert progressed the thought came to me, what great possibilities lie within the church if the eyes of every professing Christian were "looking unto Jesus" as that group. No one remonstrated or sought to justify himself when at the end of a number the director signaled one here and another there to tune their instruments. Their watchfulness and obedience to their leader resulted in matchless harmony.

Discord and the things which destroy power and beauty in service come when Christians take their eyes off of their great director and follow the leadership of another. Those who keep their eyes upon Jesus work together in harmony. There are no envyings or jealousies among them, for they are thinking of the grand whole. They have in mind a work finished so completely, so perfectly, that it will merit their great Leader's "well done." Our Lord said, "Look unto me and be ye saved." It is look unto Him all the way through life to keep saved. It means looking unto Him for power in service, for depending upon another's guidance means failure. We are soon out of step with the Master if we fix our eyes upon another. We need to look to Him for strength and courage. He alone is able to remove the hindrances along our pathway and help us through the hard places in our Christian life. He alone can make the way of escape when the testings become so great we cannot bear them longer.

"Lo, I am with you alway," said He to whom all power is given. He is within reach every day and hour. Are you watching for His signals? Are you looking to Him, letting Him keep your life in tune with His? Are you looking to your great Director in everything, rendering unto Him the perfect obedience which will by and by admit you faultless to that great choir which sing praises unto Him forever and forever?

CHRISTMAS

"Unto you is born this day . . . a Savior."

HIS is just what the world needed. This is just what the world always needs. The world does not want an adviser. The world advised itself almost into hell. The world did not ask for a speculator. Everything that man can do has been done, and men sat in the darkness of their own wisdom. The world did not want a reformer, a man who could change outward and transient relations. The world wanted a Savior.

"Savior" is a pathetic name. It is not an official title; it is not an image you could robe in scarlet, and bow down before on account of its majesty. "Savior" is an angel with tears in his eyes; arms mighty as the lightnings of God, but a heart all tenderness. "Savior" is a complex word. It has in it all human nature, all divine nature, all the past of history, all the possibility of prophecy, all the mystery of apocalypse; the tenderness outlying the love of women.

What kind of a world was it to which the Savior came? Men were hostile to one another. A spirit of enmity was the spirit of such civilization as there was, crude or elaborate. Who could be uppermost, who could rule, who could plunder and destroy? That was the aspect of one section. There was another section apparently refined and cultivated. It was a section that had refined itself into weariness, and cultivated itself to surfeit. Sin had blighted all. What did the world want when the Savior came? What does it want now? What do we want? "Sirs, I would see Jesus!" He knows me better than any one else. His words drop as the small rain, and as the gentle dew and the healing balm. I want Him; He is my Savior.

I may now speak to some whose life-duty it is to represent Christian thought in its latest forms and in its best aspects. Using that function in the spirit of Christ, they may confer inestimable advantage upon the Church and upon the world; but if they say, This is all, this is the beginning and the end; my form is the only possible form; I speak in the name of human reason and human conception: this is the whole mystery of God,—believe them not; they are hirelings and not shepherds, that is the worst kind of popery; it is the popery that is not surrounded by the dignity of a historic sentiment; it is the popery of personal vanity and ignorance. "Unto you this day is born . . . a Savior." Ministers of Christ, that is your gospel. God give you and me grace to preach it! Believers in Christ, that is your gospel. Do not you be making your little mechanical creeds and orthodox contrivances and narrow ecclesiastical gateways. Let all men feel that the church is not a debating club, is not even an academy formed for the higher disputes of metaphysics and philosophy. Let not the world get the impression that only scholars can find their way to the Cross. Oh, sinner, ignorant, blind, there is one traveler that can find his way to the Cross. What is his name? The broken heart. W. S. LONG.

A LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley:—How are you and your little folks getting along? I hope old Santa treated your little folks as good as he did me and my little sister. He filled our stockings full. I could not go to church today on account of the rain and sleet. I am sending you a dime for your little folks. My little sister is three years old and I am five. Your little friends.—R. L. Horton, Jr., Mary Ruth Horton.

Uncle Charley does not hang up his stocking any more—his hair is too thin on top and too silvery around his ears for Santa to notice him any longer, but he enjoys helping "old Santa" to fill the little children's stockings to make them happy. I am glad "old Santa" was good to you and filled your stocking full. I remember when I hung up my stockings, and how anxiously I waited for morning to come so I could see what "Santa" put in them. It is great to live the child life with such great expectations.—Uncle Charley.

A SAMPLE LETTER

(The letter below is a fair sample of many received. We print only a part of it—and for ethieal reasons omit names. We now have the three children referred to in the letter in our Orphanage.—C. D. J.)

DEAR MR. JOHNSTON:

Some few days ago my wife wrote to you in regard to the matter of getting six of the — children into your institution. These six children are aged from two to eleven years. They are very bright, and we are proud to say that we have been able to place the three youngest in the Thomasville Orphanage. This leaves three very pretty girls aged from seven to eleven years.

Mr. Johnston, I would not attempt to picture to you the conditions under which these three girls exist. They have a father living, but he is just naturally ignorant. He does not know what cleanliness is, and if he had a million dollars he could not live decently because he does not know how. Of course the good people minister to these three girls, but it is just like easting pearls into the pen with swine because they do not have any one to teach them, or show them how to use nice things. Some of our good women have gone into this home and serubbed floors and furnishings, bathed children and furnished clean garments, but it lasts only for a few hours because they are too small to know how to keep themselves without some one to live with them and instruct them.

The sad part of this situation to me is the fact that these children are human beings without a ehancee in this great land of liberty. Under present conditions the most that we may hope to make of them will be eriminals and prostitutes; and I am now writing to you in their behalf to know if you will rob the jails of them and give them a chance to become homemakers, and highly respected women? I have faith enough in God Who gave them life to believe that if you will take them to your institution, the additional funds necessary will be provided in some way. If you have no room for them we would be glad to have them sheltered in a decent out-house where they would be under good discipline and Christian training.

If you have no beds we will be glad to furnish beds for them or send you money to buy the kind of beds you want. A decent eow-shed with nice surroundings would be a mansion compared with having to live the filthy, unkept life that has been thrust upon them now.

Sincerely,

December 31, 1921.

Do you want our people to know the Bible way of giving and eonseeration of substanece to God? Then write Stewardship Secretary J. O. Atkinson for literature that will help. It will only cost you a postal eard and you ean get all you need, and it is the best to be had in print on the subject.

At the recent annual meeting of the Federal Council of American Churches, which convened in Chicago on December 14, one of the most important questions raised was that of inter-racial relations. The presentation of the subject was in itself a concrete embodiment of the Christian ideal. On the same platform were heard four leaders from the heart of the South, two white and two black, seeing the question of race relations from a Christian and common point of view.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR DAY

On February 5, the Sunday nearest to the second day of the month, the birthday of Christian Endeavor, Societies all over the world will celebrate the forty-first anniversary of the founding of the Christian Endeavor movement. A program has been prepared for the day by Rev. Robert P. Andeson, entitled, "Around the World with Christian Endeavor," which shows the great progress made by this organization as it has worked "For Christ and the Church."

Christian Endeavor was started in a little Congregational church in Maine, February 2, 1881, with no thought of the movement ever being used outside of that one church. Because it was a method by which the church may help its young people, however, the Christian Endeavor Society of the Willston church began a mighty movement. Today it is found in every country on the globe, has 80,000 Societies with 4,000,000 members, who belong to 87 different denominations. And Christian Endeavor is still growing. During the past year there were 476 new Christian Endeavor Societies reported in "Dixie," and the officials have reason to think that not nearly all new Societies were reported. During the past year more than two hundred "Dixie Christian Endeavorers became Life Work Recruits, and many are now in school preparing for their life work. Truly hath Christian Endeavor redeemed many young people from the hand of the enemy; "and gathered them out of the lands, from the east, and from the west, from the north, and from the south."

In no better way can we celebrate Christian Endeavor's birthday than by planning forward steps in our own work. We honor the day best when we adopt definite plans which will mean the deepening of the devotional life of our young people, and offering to them opportunities for effective Christian service.

LUCY ELDRIDGE.

A UNIVERSAL SIN

(Herald of Gospel Liberty)

There is no other sin so universal among men, as they grow older, as that of losing their vision. Not all older folks yield to it; but those do who do not keep growing, learning new truths and new duties every year. And there is no other sin so cumulative in its hindrances to the gospel, so deadening to the movements for the betterment of mankind, as that disposition to become satisfied with life as it is and to justify things as they are—as if they were God's best and ultimate choice for this world in which so many of His children must live. Nor is there any other sin so enervating to the spiritual life of an individual, so deadening to his soul, as that sordidness which comes with the increase of the years to whoever is not continually keeping faith and keeping pace with the progress of the Kingdom of God.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The nation has been asked to give a million barrels of flour to the 15,000,000 starving people of Russia, to be distributed by the Quakers, who for a year have maintained relief in Russia. Every miller of the country has been approached and asked to give, and the great flour weekly papers, The Northwestern Miller and The Modern Miller have editorially commended the appeal, and have given free pages of advertising to it.

DUTY TO THE FOREIGN-BORN

There are some fourteen millions of foreign-born in the United States, of whom two millions are in New York City. Exact figures as to the use of English are not available, but it is estimated that almost one-half of the foreign-born cannot read English and about one-quarter cannot speak or understand the simplest sentences. We owe it to ourselves, if to no one else, that those who are anxious to learn our speech and our ways shall not be denied the opportunity.

TO-DAY

Thomas Carlyle

Lo, here hath been dawning
Another blue day;
Think, wilt thou let it
Slip useless away?
Out of Eternity
This new day is born;
Into Eternity
At night, will return.
Behold it a foretime
No eye ever did;
So soon it forever
From all eyes is hid.
Here hath been dawning
Another blue day;
Think, wilt thou let it
Slip useless away?

FROM MISS WILLIAMS IN PORTO RICO

Such a nice, newsy, personal letter to me from Miss Williams is at hand that, though I know she never intended print to have it, it must be given THE SUN, and Miss Williams shall have a letter of apology by this mail.

Salinas, Porto Rico, January 2, 1922.

DEAR DOCTOR ATKINSON:

Your letter of the 21st ult. with check for $25.13 for sale of beads sent Mrs. Rowland received December 31, and I thank you so much for your help in disposing of the beads.

I owe you another letter which, in the rush of Christmas work, I could not find time to answer. The words of commendation of the work I am trying to do help more than you have any idea. None of us work for praise. I feel that we all work as we feel the Master is leading us, and it is heart-breaking to see so little results, but we have faith that some time the harvest will come, and with our own knowledge of how hard we work to accomplish so little there has always been the feeling that the friends in the homeland felt we could do more. I am glad you and Mr. Minton saw our field, and that at least two people in the States realize something of our difficulties.

I wish you could have been at our Christmas services at the Playa, the very first Christmas celebration ever held there. Since you were here we have organized our work both at the Playa and Salinas. Three classes in the Playa Sunday school, Primary, Intermediate and Adult, and here in Salinas five classes—one Primary, Intermediate class of girls, Intermediate class of boys, class of young people, and class of old people in the adult division. Enrollment with the Cradle Roll and Home Department, 112. Total enrollment when you were here was less than half that number. More and more I appreciate the work Rev. T. E. White did here, and I wish it were possible for him to return to Porto Rico. I feel he could do more good here than any three men new to the field.

I wish you could see my little girl—one of my kindergarten children that I am keeping and feeding up after a spell of fever. I have taught her to kneel and say her prayers, to say grace at meal time, and when I put her to bed tonight with her doll she began to sing, "O Cristo Mio." She is only five, and is a very poor child, but there was a beautiful dress in a box from Winchester, Va., that just fit the child, and the church there sent me $5.00 for my own Christmas present, and so I used it to buy shoes, stockings, etc., and have the little one dressed like an American child, and she is so sweet I just don't know how I will ever stand it to let her go back to the hut where her people live.

I was in Ponce today attending a workers' meeting—the first time I have been in Ponce since the day I met with you and Mr. Minton at Mr. Barrett's house—and today, as then, I had to leave before we were half through our work.

Our Mission Board granted me a furlough this year—to take, or not, as I wish—and I am finding it hard to decide. I want to stay here. I feel I am needed here, and I am so homesick for the States. I don't know if I will have strength of character to stay at my post of duty or not—the home land is calling, calling until that furlough is a very great temptation.

The people in the States sent me many boxes filled with clothing and toys, and I feel that this has been yours and Mr. Minton's work. I usually received a letter saying that after hearing Dr. Atkinson (or Mr. Minton) tell of my work in Salinas, they wanted to have a share in it and so were sending me a box. The result was that in December I distributed 112 garments, many new, all in good condition, and at Christmas time distributed seventy-five dolls,—nicely dressed ones, too; forty-four rag dolls made by my own girls for children under two years of age, seventy-four scrap books—twenty-four made by my girls, fifty sent from the States; and gave out to the boys forty-six toys, some rather expensive ones; and have a splendid line of things here in the house, among them being a fine stereopticon machine, but no slides, as yet, of Bible pictures. This I want to be used in all of our churches.

I have been reading with a great deal of interest your account of your trip. Hope it may appear in book form. Just such letters as yours will do much in sending our church people down here for winter months in the place of them taking the trip to Florida, and if only a few would come, what an inspiration it would be to us all!

Wishing you and your family a Happy New Year,
I am, Respectfully,

OLIVE G. WILLIAMS.

Miss Williams is greatly devoted to her work in Porto Rico, and is giving it her full strength and talents.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL EXPERIENCE

Superintendent O. V. Cokes, of the New Lebanon Sunday school, Surry County, Va., writing of an experience his Sunday school has enjoyed, says:

For two or three years we have been taking an offering once a month for Missions. I can say with others that it was a hard task to raise enough funds to keep up the expense of the school, but I finally I got our people to vote to give our offering of one Sunday a month for the Orphanage, and our collections doubled. Then came the call for one Sunday a month offering for missions and finally I succeeded in getting them to take this. So now the first Sunday is for the Orphanage, third Sunday for missions, and we get enough out of the other Sundays to meet expenses and more; and the collections of first and third Sundays total more than those of second and fourth. So it pays to help others.

It does take a little faith on the part of a Sunday school that is barely able to meet its current expenses to vote to give as much to others as to self, but the schools that are trying this are finding that their faith is well founded, and as Superintendent Cokes and scores of others are saying, it pays even for the Sunday school to help others.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON— JANUARY 22, 1922

Elijah's Flight and Return.—I Kings 19:1-21.

Golden Text.—I waited patiently for Jehovah; and he inclined unto me, and heard my cry.—Ps. 40: 1.

TO THINK ABOUT:

God cares for His own, and with the "still small voice" brings a message in times of discouragement and trial and disappointment. His children need to keep in close touch with the Divine power that the "voice" shall not go unheard and unheeded. As Christians we need to be more courageous, as defined by Marian Maclean Finney:

"Courage for the big task, and for all the hard tasks, too?
Courage for the hours when I scarce know what to do?
Courage for the things that fret and wear my life away,
Just to fight the war with worry every single day?
Courage for decision in all matters great and small?
Courage to be wise and true in problems each and all?
Courage? Yes, through faith I clearly now can see
Grace is sufficient every day for even me.
Courage? Yes, because through faith I hear His tender voice, Coming low and sweet: 'Fear not, my child, but just rejoice.
Yield thy way to me in perfect trust, and ever know
I will surely guide thee in the way that thou shouldst go.'"

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC—JANUARY 22, 1922
Do Christian Principles Apply to Buying and Selling?—Proverbs
20: 10, 14; Amos 8: 4-6; Luke 6: 38.

SUGGESTION:

Read the books, "In His Steps" and "What Would Jesus Do Today?" for the motto of this meeting, applying it to the activities of the commercial world. Discuss "The Golden Rule as a Business Principle."

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION NOTES

"Vision will be clarified and some of the rough places will be made plain if the highest ideal of service can be raised above all other interests. Religious education exists for the training of Christian character. Sunday schools, week-day religious schools, Daily Vacation Bible Schools, et al., exist for the welfare of the child in Christ's Kingdom. Decisions reached in the radiance of Christ's Cross of Service are safe."—Church School.

Is your church looking forward to Children's Week, April 30 to May 7? This week observed in our churches to arouse our people to the very real needs of the children for Christian education, will mean much to all of our work. Let us realize the truth of the slogan adopted for this week this year: "The race marches forward on the feet of little children." Is your church moving forward? Will your church be doing a greater work in the years to come? The children of today must lead that work. Will they be ready for the responsibility?

The pastor who fails to make the most of the opportunity to train the young people misses his supreme opportunity to advance the Kingdom of God. The golden period of the year for this work is from January to Easter.—Frank M. Sheldon.

Our work in the Sunday schools of the Christian Church for 1922 may be summed up in the two words, "Increase and Efficiency." This means Sunday schools reaching the largest number of people possible with a program adapted to the needs of all.

Rev. A. W. Andes, of Harrisonburg, Va., reports two active Christian Endeavor Societies in his field, in the churches at Timber Ridge and Whistler's Chapel. Reports this week from the Societies at La Grange, Ga., and Noon Day, Ala., tell of a progressive work at both places.

The First Christian church of Norfolk, Va., Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor, is entitled to a place on the Honor Roll of churches, having three Christian Endeavor Societies, Senior, Intermediate and Junior.

A Daily Vacation Bible School lasting three weeks, soon after the close of the public school session, for three hours each day, equals in time alone one year and a half of ordinary Sunday school instruction. The Board of Religious Education is eager to see at least two of these schools, and many more if possible, carried on in each of our Conferences this year. This can be done very successfully with the co-operation of interested individuals in our local churches. If your school is already planning such a movement for this year, will you not kindly write the Chairman of the Board of Religious Education (Rev. W. T. Walters), or the Field Secretary, about your plans? If you are interested in the movement, and desire the very great blessings which a Daily Vacation Bible School can bring to your children and to your church, will you not write us and let us help begin the work in your midst? Mrs. Hazel Straight Stafford, an expert in this work, declares: "The majority of Daily Vacation Bible Schools now in existence have had their origin in the efforts of a single interested, enthusiastic individual. A match properly placed and ignited may start a large conflagration." Thousands of such schools have been successfully held in all parts of this country and in many other nations, and are found to furnish a sane solution to many problems.

ONE PREACHER TREATED RIGHT

Our call to the pastorate of Graham and Providence Christian churches, and the acceptance of the same, was an adventure for pastor and people, not knowing each other.

On learning that the churches needed a pastor more than a preacher, we accepted the call, leaving time to reveal to them the extent of their disappointment.

Leaving the summer climate of Tampa, Fla., and traveling northward more than eleven hundred miles in less than four days by auto, we arrived in Graham, N. C. Only those who have made the sudden change in climate can imagine how cold it seemed here, but we surely had a warm reception from the members and friends of the two churches on our arrival, and have been royally entertained in their homes while waiting for our goods to arrive. When they arrived they put them into the parsonage without cost to us.

After receiving such a welcome, imagine our surprise when the members and friends of the two churches, the first night we had planned to stay in our new home, came in a body and gave us one of the most dreadful poundings you ever heard of a preacher and his family getting. We did not have any black eyes, as Mr. Jiggs usually gets, for they did not have any rolling pins, but they threw at us a whole grocery store and several farm implements. When they had gone we pulled ourselves together enough to see what they, in their haste to get away, had left behind, and it amounted to $45.00, consisting of coal, wood, pig, breakfast foods, potatoes, canned fruits and vegetables, flour, pickles, beans, lard, butter, honey, sugar, syrup, cake, pork sausage and ham, oranges, grapefruit, apples, coffee, cocoa, etc. We would like to make mention of each person who has shared with us the comforts of their homes and who contributed to the pounding party, but space will not permit. We will say that we were agreeably surprised and wish to thank each person for all the comforts bestowed upon us, and always remember our latch string hangs outside. It was also a great pleasure to meet Mr. Lester, former pastor, and Mr. Riddle, acting pastor, during the holiday season, and to have them in our services. May God bless them in their work.

S. L. BEOUGHER.

WAVERLY, VIRGINIA

Christmas at Waverly, Virginia, as has now been our custom for several years, was celebrated by a White Gifts service. Our people have liked this idea so much that (though there is given a little entertainment when our very small children receive gifts) they vote unanimously that the "White Gifts" be our main service for the celebration of Christ's birth.

This year, during the solemn stillness following a prayer by the pastor, and with a beautiful background of white and green on which the congregation could feast their eyes, Jesse West, Jr., came forward and read the sweet story, "The Littlest Son," by Dixie Willson, which was enjoyed from start to finish. The story was interspersed with sweet choruses, duets and solos appropriate to the occasion, and the bringing of gifts for our Orphanage by each Sunday school class as the number was called by the reader. Quite a number of gifts, from a tiny envelope with money in it, to a large bundle with a quilt inside, gave the overloaded table an interesting appearance.

We love this service and shall continue its use as long as our people here feel as they do about it.

On Wednesday afternoon of Christmas week we drove up to Centerville to be present at their Christmas service. A most enjoyable program of recitations and songs had been prepared, and was rendered in happy style, from tiny tots to dear old Santa, as he came to unload the gayly bedecked Christmas tree. The little children were happy, and the grown folks, too, for the Christmas spirit was everywhere, warming hearts of old and young.

Spring Hill had to postpone their prepared program on account of bad weather, but with a touch of green and red and the Christmas bells here and there the pastor delivered his Christmas sermon, feeling that peace and good will were abounding among his people.

Many kind friends remembered pastor and family, and his bountiful Christmas dinner was due to the thoughtful acts of those he seeks to serve.

GOOD TREATMENT

When Hines' Chapel, Apple's Chapel and Monticello churches decided to call the writer as their pastor, forming the Guilford pastorate, at a stated salary and with the understanding that each church was to have two preaching services monthly, nothing else was understood to be received as compensation from these churches. Since we have been located among these good people, they have not, to our knowledge, held a public meeting to decide differently as to what their pastor should receive, but every one seems to have arrived at a new decision.

It was only the first of last October that we gave expression to the joy experienced by the bountiful pounding given by the members of Hines' Chapel church, and nearby neighbors, but since that time the spirit of pounding has not decreased. On December 22 the pastor had the misfortune to get his right arm broken, and those who have had the experience know that the suffering is severe. The news spread rapidly and soon the home was overflowing with neighbors and kind friends who had come to share life with us by their willingness to do anything they were called upon to do. Not only did these friends come to share life by offering their services, but by bringing with them the Christmas spirit in the form of a continued pounding. When we say a "continued pounding," we mean it in the true sense, for we have received chickens, ham, potatoes, pork sausage, backbones and spareribs, preserves, and many other things. It may be clearly seen that the good people of these churches have decided not only to pay their pastor the stated salary, but to board the family as well.

To everyone who has rendered such valuable service, who remembered us with the Christmas spirit, and who divided so graciously of their storehouse, we want to say, again and again, Thank you, and may we be able to prove ourselves more efficient servants unto those whom we are called upon to serve.

REV. AND MRS. C. E. GERRINGER.

CALLED HOME

POOLE.—Mrs. E. J. Poole departed this life December 14, 1921, after a continued illness since August 18. She was a great sufferer, and yet, she was patient and filled with the spirit of Christian endurance until the end came.

Before marriage Mrs. Poole was Miss Sallie Sanderford, daughter of Deacon Sanderford, of Mt. Hermon church. She professed faith and joined the church in early childhood with her parents. In later years the family moved to Auburn and united with the Auburn Christian church, where she remained an active and faithful member until the passing hour.

A godly, consecrated, Christian woman is gone. A home is left in sorrow, and grief-stricken father, daughter and son are left behind, while a community is left poorer, for her life was a Christian example and blessing to all who knew her. The funeral service was held from the home, Thursday, December 15, by the writer, her pastor, and the remains laid to rest in the family burying ground, under a mound of beautiful flowers which expressed, in a small way, the esteem in which she was held.

She leaves behind, a husband, one daughter, Ethel, and one son, Henry; one sister, Mrs. Annie Woodard, one brother, W. M. Sanderford, and a host of loving friends who mourn their loss. God bless them all.
J. VINCENT KNIGHT.

YOUNG.—Charles Lewis Young died on Sunday afternoon, December 25, 1921, at his home, 946 Jamestown Boulevard, Larchmont, Norfolk, Va.

Mr. Young was a native of New York State. He came to Norfolk when he was 21 years old, and as a young man was employed by the Imperial Guano Company, which firm he, together with his brother, Lincoln Young, and cousin, J. R. Young, bought out and continued under the name of Imperial Company. He sold out in 1909 and retired, but later took up the automobile business, being one of the first owners of machines in this city.

He was married to Bessie Francis Portlock, daughter of Franklin Portlock and Eugenia Tatem Portlock, sister of the late Judge Portlock.

Mr. Young is survived by his widow; two daughters, Mrs. Frank S. Pace and Miss Fanie May Young; one brother, Lincoln Young, of Los Angeles, Calif., and three sisters, Mrs. J. B. Brown and Misses Francis and May Young, both of Norfolk.
X.

CORNETT.—Little John Richard Cornett, two-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Homer W. Cornett, of Columbus, Ga., came to an untimely death on the afternoon of December 28, 1921, at 2:30 o'clock. He died as the result of phosphoric poisoning following the swallowing of a small quantity of fireworks. The youngster got possession of some of the fireworks Christmas day and swallowed it. He was ill Sunday but Monday his condition was considerably improved. Monday night he became quite ill, and died Tuesday afternoon, after he had been unconscious for more than an hour.

He is survived by his father and mother, also a sister and a brother. Little John Richard had an unusually bright mind, and was a favorite among the children as well as among the grown people.

The passing of this young life has broken many tender cords; but his going has made heaven richer. God had a mission in his life, and no doubt he completed his earthly mission before God took him.

“How brief the stay, as beautiful as fleeting,
The time that baby came with you to dwell;

Just long enough to give a happy greeting,
Just long enough to give you all farewell.”

He has been called to the abode where immortals are, where unbounded love reigns; and the new radiance and richness and glory of heaven created by his presence should draw his loved ones unto him.

Funeral by the writer, and the body was laid to rest in the Riverdale cemetery.
R. F. BROWN.

LAMBETH.—It is said that death loves a shining mark, and it seems to be true. It was true in the case of little Sarah Elizabeth Lambeth, the young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Lambeth, Reidsville, N. C. She was born April 3, 1920, and passed away on January 5, 1922, after a brief but awful suffering from a sudden attack of membranous croup. After human help had done its best, she passed peacefully away on Thursday evening, near 6 o'clock, having been ill only about 24 hours.

Elizabeth was a most unusual child. Though less than two years old, yet she was in conduct seemingly as mature as an adult. In the home she was rarely known to cry or to make any objection to whatever came to her in her little life. At church, regularly, when present, she was as quiet as a grown person, and in fact, a great deal more so—at least in many cases. The over-much attention which the people of the community gave her, for she was a general favorite, seemed never to spoil her.

She was a bright and lovable child, and her going away has grieved many outside of the family circle, and within the circle of her loved ones there is a void which cannot be filled. We repeat, she was a most remarkable child.

The funeral service was conducted from the home of her parents on Friday afternoon, January 6, by the pastor of the Reidsville Christian church. May God bless the memory of this dear child.

FOR SALE

I have three lots fronting the Elon College campus from the south which I would sell. The lots could be made to give 70 or 80 feet front by about 250 feet deep, or broader front for more money. Or would consider building house for party on long rental. There are but few lots fronting on the campus for sale now. If interested write J. L. Foster, Waverly, Va.

PUBLISHED EVERY WEDNESDAY

The Omitted

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

Field Secretary of Missions, Southern Christian Convention

T was the Communion day in our church, and the service proceeded as usual. My thoughts were all of my unworthiness and Christ's love to me until the pastor asked the question which nobody ever notices, 'Has anyone been omitted in the distribution of the emblems?' Then it seemed to me I could see millions of men, women and children rising silently in China, Japan, India, Africa, in all the countries where they need our Lord, but know Him not, to testify that they have been omitted in the distribution of the emblems of His broken body and His shed blood. And they can take these emblems from no hands but ours, and we do not pass them on. . . ."

So relates a devout church member. In the light of present-day facts it is not out of place to meditate on such a theme a moment. Next Sunday when your preacher or deacon offers the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our Lord, it may be well to bear in mind that there are fifty-eight millions of people, more than half the entire population, here in the United States who will be omitted. This is that number who are not members of any Church, and I am not speaking of the added numbers who belong to the Church and will not be at the Communion table. It has been nearly two thousand years since our Lord gave His parting command to His followers, "Go and make disciples of all the nations." Yet there are more people in the world today who know Him not than were on the earth when He was here. There has been steady growth of Church and Christian prestige and power, but the increase in the world's population has exceeded the increase in adherence to the gospel of our Lord.

Our Savior is waiting on us and it must be His anxious, longing heart that impels the minister at the Communion table to inquire, "Has anyone been omitted in the distribution of the emblems?" Can we enjoy as we should enjoy this solemn, sweet and sacred service, while thousands and millions are omitted in receiving the emblems on no other grounds whatever than our indifference, cold-heartedness and neglect?

THE CHURCH OF YESTERDAY—AND THE CHURCH OF TODAY

Recently a colored minister of the Methodist Church wrote Bishop McDowell the following: "No man respects a beggar. I am tired of being looked upon as a beggar in my church. To me the Centenary plans are too complicated for colored people. We have allowed 'rousement' to play too great a part in our church life; we have never been taught to tithe or give systematically. The old method of church work with its 'rousement' and begging will not meet the requirements and spirit of this reconstruction period. The Church of yesterday lived on the community; the Church of today must serve the community."

We wonder if many of our white ministers can improve on this colored brother's diagnosis of Church ailments and needs. The Church will never be able to quit its "rousements" and begging until it teaches stewardship and practices tithing. Tithing is God's plan for conducting His financial side of His business among men, and that plan has never been improved upon, and likely never will be by man. When the Church quits begging and begins to tithe it can and will then stop living on the community and begin to serve the community. The seventh of a man's time and a tenth of His increase are holy and belong to God. When man so considers and thus uses them he will quit pauperizing himself and the Church, and will serve his community, his Church and his God. One of the great objectives now of our Men and Millions Movement is to double the number of tithers in the Church between now and May 1. Will we pull together and do this great and good thing?

All our financial obligations and pledges to Church enterprises and support can and will be met if we will as a Church begin to tithe. Unless we do tithe we must go on begging, begging, begging—and living on the community instead of serving it.

GOOD WILL

Good will is a financial asset. To have the good will of a community or an individual is to have a financial asset. But good will is worth more than money. Good will is the most valuable asset of business. It is the most valuable asset in any walk of life. W. W. Woolworth and Company, 5 and 10 cent stores, estimates good will at $50,000,000; N. K. Fairbanks and Company (owned by American Cotton Oil Company), makers of "Gold Dust" washing powder, "Fairy Soap," etc., carries good will patterns, trade marks and contracts at $23,000,000; the American Tobacco Company carries its brands, trade marks, patents and good will roughly at $54,000,000; the Coca Cola Company carries trade marks, good will, etc., at nearly $25,000,000; the American Safety Razor Company carries its good will at $7,370,309; Endicott-Johnson Corporation carries its good will at $7,000,000; May Department Store Company, $15,015,226; Studebaker Corporation, $19,807,277; Butterick Company, $13,893,271; Cluett, Peabody and Company, Inc. (makers of Arrow collars and shirts), $18,275,000, and Remington Typewriter Company, $14,181,383.

THE APPROACHING CONVENTION

The Southern Christian Convention is soon to meet. The time will soon be here—May 2—and we need to begin thinking, planning and praying that we may have the best, most progressive and far-reaching session in the history of our work.

There are many problems of much importance to be solved at the next Convention, and this is generally understood. Too often the Convention's membership does not have time to rightly study the various problems after they are presented. It seems fitting, therefore, that THE SUN should open its columns and invite correspondence on different phases of our work to be presented at the Convention. We gladly do so and hope that the opportunity may be worth while.

In this connection the Board of Publication of the Convention voted at its meeting of January 12 to mail to all ministers and delegates-elect a copy of the report made by the Editor and Publishing Agent. This has been done, but it does not exclude others from seeing the report. A copy may be had by asking THE SUN's Editor. The Board also invites correspondence upon the issues that it is to consider.

"DAY-BREAK EVERYWHERE"

This quotation comes to us from having seen or heard it somewhere. "Day-break everywhere!" Happy and thrilling thought! The sentence reminds us that it has been night, or else no day-break could come. Shout the news—that it is day-break in all the world. And is this not true? We think so.

The Far East is seeing the sunrise of material and spiritual progress; the western world is being remade and recharged with a new spirit; Central Europe is slowly coming from under the spell of class domination—and the whole world is being reborn with a brotherhood spirit. Surely it is break of day everywhere. More people going to church, reading the Bible, seeking salvation, and endeavoring to serve humanity.

The world is bad. Yes, all that, but it could be worse. It is growing better all the time. Skeptics and critics, few as they are, are getting fewer. Presses that once turned out questionable matter are now serving man in a most acceptable manner.

"Day-break everywhere!" Sure! The war dogs are sneaking home, and the military high-brows are seeing the need of missionaries instead of soldiers. The world is seeing itself as one nation—a united nations—and not a divided world.

Yes, it is "day-break everywhere." Tell the pessimist to call himself a Rip Van Winkle and wake up from his slumber and help the world to make for itself a glorious day everywhere.

BOARD OF PUBLICATION MEETS

The Board of Publication of the Convention met in Burlington January 12. The members of the Board are: D. R. Fonville, Chairman, Burlington; J. P. Barrett, Reidsville, N. C.; J. D. Kernodle, Graham, N. C.; W. J. Graham, Burlington, N. C., and W. E. Lindsay, Mount Airy, N. C.. All members of the Board were present. The following were present, by invitation, as deliberative members: G. O. Lankford, P. H. Fleming, J. O. Atkinson and C. D. Johnston.

The Editor and Publishing Agent presented a full report of the work of his office, the present cost of maintaining THE SUN, and showed an approximate budget for the next biennium. The report was ordered to be sent to all ministers and delegates to the next Convention. The Board had before it two things—the thought of a new editor, and a plan of meeting the deficit, which is now being met by the Men and Millions Forward Movement funds. No nominee for editor was presented, and no definite plan decided upon as to meeting the deficit. Several plans were taken into consideration and the Board decided to investigate, consider, and outline some plan for a later consideration.

THE IMPASSIONED EVANGELIST

TO feel the thrill of a great love and to be profoundly interested in men and things is not bad form, it is Christ-like. To warm up to a publican and to warm over a Pharisee is the kind of business which thrills the heart of God. He said there was one thing all men needed, and that was conviction. We have our foibles, our weaknesses, our indifferences, our by-plays and our avocations.

The crying need of the world is a few first-class convictions. And what is a conviction? Is it not something that makes a convict of you; that is, something that fastens a man to one thing so that he is not at liberty to roam everywhere to no purpose? Then he can say, "This one thing I believe; this one thing I do."

A Christian without conviction is powerless and is a contradiction of terms. A Christian that prefers plans of salvation to salvation itself, that raises definitions of the nature of Jesus above surrender to the joy-giving Savior is a travesty on the Son of God.

The seal on Adam Clark's grave is a candle burned down to the socket. Underneath are the words, "In living for others, I am burned away."

Carlyle's last message, whispered to a friend, was, "Give yourself royally."

Aristotle said, "No great genius was ever without some admixture of madness."

It was this joy in service, this uncalculating devotion which has proven itself mighty to change the hearts of men, and the age in which it has lived. It was not Erasmus, the polished, the learned, the vacillating, the mightiest intellect of his time, but it was rough, yearning, burning Martin Luther who made Germany.

In his last sermon Joseph Parker said: "As long as the Church of God is one of many institutions, she will have her little day. She will die and that will be all. But just as soon as she gets the spirit of Jesus until the world thinks she has gone stark mad, then we shall be on the high road to capture this planet for Jesus."

One fears that in some quarters the pulpit has lost its nerve and forgotten the evidence of history, that whenever Christianity has been most convincing she has been most victorious, and whenever she has been most apologetic, she has been most futile; and also that it is the schools within Christianity which are constructive and aggressive, and not the schools that are critical and eclectic which have chiefly affected their generation.

If, as some think, our fathers were too sure about everything, it would be an immense gain if some of their children were absolutely certain of anything.

It would be a great disaster if the intellect of the Church should be so occupied in recasting the form of the Scriptures as to have no strength left for declaring the Gospel which they contain.

Is it not time that the strength of the ministry were withdrawn from purely intellectual exercises, from purely intellectual investigations and destructive criticism and given to evangelism?

Have we not had enough of recanting? Is it not time for some confessing?

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part XIII.

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.
Field Secretary for Missions

TUESDAY p. m., September 27, 1921.—The visit today to our preaching place, pastor, and people at Santa Isabel revealed much. We Christians have been resolving and planning and commencing to begin to get ready to build a house of worship here for many a long year. We are still at it—very still. There is as yet no church here—nothing like one. We own a corner lot just off the plaza 100 by 100 feet. This ample and commanding site now has on it a building about the age of the Morro Castle, seemingly, and far more dilapidated and ancient looking. There is a hall of this pristine wooden structure that seats about forty people when all behave themselves and do not fall through the worn-out floor, and then there are four other apartments which one may, by a stretch of the imagination, call rooms, if one really wished to be genteel and generous about it. In these rooms (?) they have as many Bible classes and as many members in these classes as they will hold on Sundays. It is a fact. They have in this building a Sunday school of sixty-two children and twenty-five adults. My conviction is that if these pupils on any Sunday morning would get beside this building they would not have to exercise any great amount of Samsonian strength to pull it right over on themselves, nor do I think that they, like Samson, would have to “die with the Philistines” in the downfall of the building. It would not be much of a downfall. They tell me Miss Mishler lived in one room of this remarkable building, and won many boys and girls to Christ in the other rooms which she used then, as they are still doing, for religious assemblies. There are 1,400 people in Santa Isabel; the old Catholic church is quite dilapidated and without priest or services; and ours is the only Protestant church in, or anywhere within miles of the town. The town and surrounding country have been apportioned to us to reach for Christ and the Church, and if we do not do so, no others will.

I found growing on our lot here in Santa Isabel a glorious quenepa (knapa) tree, also a great old wild grape tree they call Nuva Sylvestro, three cocoanut trees (which tradition says Miss Mishler planted with her own hands), a towering, thick shaded Mango, a Higuera tree (has gourds on it as big as pumpkins), a lovely bread tree, and some date palms. In fact, the only ungainly thing on the lot is the building which we inappropriately call our chapel.

From Santa Isabel we motored around much on Barrett's Ford. Not far off we passed a corn field. It looked fine, green and beautiful. The corn was about six inches high. They were working it out for the first time, and with good luck it should be ready for good fodder-pulling, and a corn shucking by the last of December. We passed many cane fields also. The men were ploughing with four oxen to the plow, and they (the men, not the oxen) get sixty cents a day for their work—when they can get work. Hundreds of people are out of employment here for lack of work, and there is much suffering. They are feeling the financial depression here even more than we in the States. At Paso Seco we Christians have a small hall with six benches, and a desk that Rev. T. E. White made when he was on the field here. White preached here twelve or fifteen years ago, and they still honor and love him. We have no organized church here, and no members; but we could have with proper effort. There have been many conversions to Christianity, and there is yet much interest. At Penuelas I became more interested in the scenery than in houses, peoples, or places. It is one typical Porto Rican and tropical scene. I stood on the dam of a great reservoir. The water was gushing like mad, fuming, fretting, and foaming, as it rushed through pent-up channels out to irrigate neighboring cane fields. Not far off, to the east, velvet-carpeted mountains pierced the clouds; southward, and hard-by, ebbed and flowed the green waters of the irritable Carribean Sea; to the west, for unending miles, were green stretches of waving, billowy cane fields, and spreading far northward were the ample orchards of royal and cocoanut palm. One of the virtues and glories of Porto Rico is that in so many places one can find it condensed and epitomized, drawn together in small area so one can see the picture of the whole and stand in awe and reverence before it.

I saw today a barbas tree. Now barbas is the Spanish for bearded, and this tree lives up to its name. It really has a beard, several of them, hanging more or less gracefully down for six feet and in great clusters. I have an idea that Aaron's beard was no longer, larger, or more real than this. The only difference is that this tree is green and has a yellow beard, while I imagine Aaron was very ripe and had grey beard. And I saw today and examined more closely the flamboyant tree—that tree which really means “a blaze of fire,” and is certainly as red and brilliant as its name indicates. Each flamboyant blossom has five petals, or leaves, three-fourths of an inch across. Four of these petals are a brilliant red, but one of the five is yellow and white. It is indeed variegated and beautiful—indescribable.

At Hauea (pronounced Jawka), we have preaching services in a rented hall, with five benches, seven to the bench. The hall is ten by twelve feet. The village has 100 or more people and is two miles from Santa Isabel.

We had supper tonight with Rev. Aquino Ojeda, our native and now resident pastor at Santa Isabel. He gave us aron-con-pollio, agna cata, roast beef, fried sweet cakes, guava jelly and a hearty welcome to his home and board. At 7:30 we had services in the chapel. The whole town, including mayor, city aldermen (if they have any), constable, police, their wives, children and kindred all were there. Minton made a good talk about how much he desired to see them have a new church and how hard he was working to get the people to build them one. He plead also for their help, and urged co-operation in the project. Barrett interpreted. I tried to give a few feeble remarks, but made poor outs at the business. Martin was at home and talked in the jabberish of the natives, and they all listened. It was a fine meeting. There are men and women of promise and intelligence at Santa Isabel, and we must build here—the sooner the better.

After services we had one glorious ride through a moonlit summer night and millions of mosquitoes back to Ponce. We passed people along the road camping. The way they camp here is to stop their ox-cart in the middle of the road, tie the ox out to graze, get on top the cart or under it, and lay themselves down to sleep to the more or less melodious tune of humming, hungry mosquitoes, while the sleepers are being gnawed and sawn into, and get inoculated with malaria and fever germs.

WEDNESDAY A. M., September 28.—Canas is a barrio near Ponce. Our chapel here cost about $225.00 and was built by money contributed by the natives. Near the church were two beggars. It would be difficult to find a church, or any other building here, near which were not two or more beggars. But these two were interesting. One, the man, was in a cart and has a shaking head and body—has had them thus for thirty years. He was struck and stunned by lightning when about thirty years old and he has been shaking over it ever since. Guess I would shake awhile, if able, after being lightning-struck. He hires a boy to pull him in a cart. An old hag of a woman, puffing away at a cigar stump, followed after. She was shaking too, but from nervousness—I suppose over too abundant indulgence in cigar stumps. It was a sorry-looking outfit, and Minton's kodak took them to task. Beggary in Porto Rico is a profession. Beggars have their regular stands or make their regular rounds twice a week to receive food and money from their patrons. Many of them prosper and would not exchange their profession on any account. One told this story today and said it was true and accurate: One beggar had cataracts on both his eyes. By virtue of this fact, and by dint of continued begging, he now owns a farm purchased from his "earnings." One of the mission doctors not long since offered to remove the cataracts with a surgeon's knife. The beggar declined the offer and swore that the wicked missionary was trying to take from him the means of his employment by which he supported himself and family. All of which may be put down to the credit of generosity among the natives of this wonderful island!

We stopped today and saw the glorious coffee in process of drying and curing. When the grain is red on the bush it is time to pick. Beaten or shelled from its pod, each of which contains two grains, it is spread out on thin cloth or sacks laid on the ground, to dry. After a few days in the hot sun, the faulty grains are picked out by hand, the best is separated from the inferior, and then horses or great trucks are laden with it and sent off to town for marketing. Coffee is gathered from September till February, and is one of the thriving industries of the island. One can buy the very best grades before being roasted at fifteen cents the pound—and it is worth it. But the bush on which the coffee grows has to be shaded from sun and shower by a large, friendly tree. This is true to life and to human nature. It is the part of some to toil and labor and give the fruits of their labors to the world; while it is the portion of others to furnish the friendly protection and the shielding arm for such labors. The coffee bush represents youth; the protecting shade tree, maturity and old age.

PLAIN TALKS TO PLAIN PEOPLE

Are your eyes open? If not, pray the prayer of David, as recorded in Psalm 119: 18, in which he pleaded thus before the Lord:

"Open thou mine eyes, that I may Behold wondrous things out of Thy law."

To get one's eyes open to truth,—that is the need of this day; and we fear there be few that offer such a prayer, or that have such a desire. There are many dear, good people, good after a second hand way, who are blind to truth, the truth of God's Word. Oh, for a praying people, a people who, knowing of their blindness, so far as spiritual vision may be concerned, will betake themselves to prayer, praying that their eyes may be opened to see—to see the TRUTH, as it may be given in the Word of God. Occasionally I see people who have read, or they have heard, the teachings of so-and-so, and they think it just fine, when in truth according to the Bible they are very far from the truth; they do not see the error which is being palmed off on them, and they think it is just fine. The book they read, or the man they heard, was just "pulling the wool over their eyes," leaving them to think that what they were saying was true, when, in fact, it was, to say the least, so mixed with error that it was what you might at least call truth badly poisoned, and so unfit for use, and yet there are hundreds of good people who think that this truth poisoned with error is fine, just the thing they wish. But they do not seem to know that it is poison to the life of the believer who accepts the teaching. And is it not true that false teachers are more abundant than ever before? If you wish to know the Bible idea of the way real believers should treat a false teacher when he comes to your home to give out error, then turn to 2 John 7:11. What are you going to do the next time one comes to your home? Will you do as the Bible plainly indicates you should do, or are you going to be a coward and let him do what the Bible says he should not do? Pray much over the matter before you side with the man who is going around to give out error.

"Brother Barrett will you answer a question for me? Why do you have so much to say of unbelief, higher criticism, worldliness, etc., in the churches?" I am very glad to answer that question. I say what I do of these things in the churches because they are so common in the church life of today, and that is not all, for there are many other things sapping the life of the church today, and so few men actually stand against them. Unbelief is so common on every hand. There are men who have been under Christian influences practically all their lives, and yet they do not hesitate to declare that they do not believe this or that, although the Scriptures abound in passage after passage which declare this true. But to them there seems to be no difference, if the Bible does teach it, if they disapprove they unhesitatingly say, "I do not believe it." I knew a man who was a deacon in the church and high up in its affairs, yet he did not hesitate to say that he did not believe in the resurrection of the body, and he did that in the face of the fact that the Bible again and again declares the truth of the resurrection of the body. To him it seemed to make no difference whether the Bible said this or that, as to the resurrection, for one he did not believe it; and all that in the face of the teachings of the Bible. The same is true of higher criticism. There are many, even in the ministry, who, on the authority of some poor man, that shall die, declare that he does not believe this or that statement in the Bible. And as for worldliness, the Church is full of it, and of course it cannot have power to do the Lord's work so long as it is full of worldliness. And shall I, as a poor, humble creature, shut my mouth and give no warning to the people who are thus led about by the will of man? God helping me, I will not. The people who are dear to me must be warned—they must be shown the dangers of such errors, and I must do my best to show them. But they will not like me! That is so, I suppose, but I would a hundred times rather have the dislike of man with the favor of God, than to have the favor of man and the disapproval of God. That is why I speak against such things. Do you blame me? If so, why?

ELON LETTER

 THE Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, in a report to the Board of Publication dated January 12, 1922, asks this pertinent question: "Why should the Church support a publication at an enormous expense for the writings of less than a dozen men and women, with few exceptions?" Why?

Because it must. We must maintain our stomach for the body. It is a very expensive proposition to do so, but we must do it or die. When the stomach is diseased, nourishment for a few days may be administered through the skin or injected directly into the blood, but this measure is only temporary. If the stomach does not soon resume its normal function as the chief digestive organ and distributing station of nutriment to the physical system, the body dies.

What the stomach is to physical life, the Church paper is to the churches. A local church may continue for an indefinite time without a Church paper, but without it denominational enterprises will die. The Orphanage, Missions, the College, the various Boards, the Conferences and the Convention must all have a medium of approach to the Brotherhood. The Church paper is the most promising method of doing this so far invented. It is conceivable that other methods might be found to achieve the desired result better, but at present we do not know them. If you want to kill our general enterprises, just eclipse THE CHRISTIAN SUN totally and then wait. The Christian Church must have a medium of communication, must have it—that is all there is to it, no matter what it may cost.

So I shall not deal with the matter of cost further than to say that the probable deficit of $8,000 annually which Brother Riddle prophesies in the same report looks reasonable. He includes no unnecessary item. A falling market may eliminate a part of the total, but each item would still appear. We ought not to expect our Editor to furnish at his own expense office, office equipment, fuel, telephone, light, and the other items he details as now unprovided for by the Convention for the conduct of our paper. No matter what THE SUN may cost, we must have THE SUN. Perhaps we shall appreciate it more, the more it costs us, on the principle that men love their wives in accordance with what they cost them.

I am, however, tremendously interested in Brother Riddle's question as it relates to "the writings of less than a dozen men and women." I would say THE CHRISTIAN SUN is worth its cost to me just for the writings of W. W. Staley. What the sayings of Poor Richard were to Franklin's famous Almanac, that the Suffolk Letter is to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

But, however, and nevertheless, barring the fact that I am one whose name regularly appears in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, the Editor is right. It is a pity that more of our leaders do not write for the paper. Yet I recall with what trepidation I wrote my first contribution to THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I was living at Kenly, N. C., and wrote on "Great Writers of the Christian Church." It did not appear the next week, but since no word came from the great Editor I still had hope of seeing my production in print. The next week it appeared, and glory! the Editor wrote in his "Notes" an item to the effect that the writer had since his graduation been giving himself to the study of our Church literature, as the particular article proved. Well, I wanted to frame that paper, but the good wife, being a lady of judgment and taste, did not wish the parlor walls disfigured. I keep the joy of that first essay into the realm of real authorship green to this day.

Nobody asked me to write. I just wrote. But modest men are not so disposed to advertise their ambitions. So we are under obligation or necessity to find a way of jumping them out of their beds of ease. If the Editor will consider himself a hound and his would-be contributor a rabbit, the thing may yet be accomplished which we all know is very, very necessary to the best service our paper should render the Church.

And I am glad the Editor has become a real wolf of a hound-dog in his mad pursuit of those who are at ease in Zion, a-reading of the Suffolk Letter, the Elon Letter, and the other "regular stuff" of our paper, and a-producing nothing themselves—sponges, so to speak. Yes, sir, he is after them, a preacher one week and a layman the next, to write something for the front page of THE CHRISTIAN SUN. That is fine. I've been writing for THE CHRISTIAN SUN for twenty years and nothing I ever wrote ever appeared on the front sheet. But this year I am to stand in the doorway over my own name and introduce the people with a bow or a bump to the contents within. Look out for me. I shall do my best. The Editor has jumped me up and I am madly careering to my destiny. Yes, Brother Editor, your idea is a fine one. I will write one before long. Let everybody else do the same.

W. A. HARPER.

KEEPING THE FAITH

TODAY we hear a great deal about the faith and the keeping of it, and I wonder how often we stop to think what constitutes the faith and the keeping of it. To some it is the adherence to a creed or set of principles as laid down by somebody somewhere. To others it is an indefinite thing.

We talk about the faith of the fathers, and think it heroic to defend it. But to defend what? What is the faith of the fathers? "Faith," the Apostle says, "is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." Taking that for a definition, it seems to me that keeping the faith would be nothing more nor less than living up to the truth we know.

If keeping the faith is living up to the truth we know, then, if I kept the faith yesterday, and have done no more today, I have been untrue to God today. The moment we live up to the truth we have, God makes a new revelation of truth which is also to be lived up to. If I have not lived up to the truth I know, I have not kept the faith. Since truth is a progressive thing, the faith and the keeping of it is a progressive experience.

Christ came to reveal truth, but it is evident that the world was not ready for the whole of truth and that He did not reveal the whole of it. "I have yet many things to say unto you," He said to His disciples as they sat together in the upper room, "But ye cannot bear them now." The Bible is the book of truth, but it does not contain the whole of truth. God has not been silent these two thousand years. He has spoken many times since John penned the "Amen" to the book of Revelation. He has revealed many of the things which His disciples were not then able to bear.

The time is fast passing away when men justify their acts by verses of scripture, and the time is even now with us when we measure our conduct, not so much by what the Bible says, as by what God is, as revealed by His photograph, the Christ. This endeavor to live up to the standards of Christ has brought about the recognition of womanhood, has produced the protective legislation for childhood and the welfare organizations, and has wrought marvelously in the transformation of social relationships of which Jesus and the Biblical writers never spoke. They came as a result of keeping the faith.

In every age and in every land prophets have been misunderstood. They have paid the penalty of living ahead of their time. It meant persecution and oftentimes death for the prophets of old; it sent Paul to the block, Peter to the cross, and imprisoned John on Patmos. Even in our own day and in our own land, to live ahead of one's time and to possess more truth than other men makes a man misunderstood, brands him as a heretic, and brings sweeping down upon him an avalanche of criticism; yet men have dared to keep the faith, to live up to the truth they knew.

No matter what a man may believe, no matter what new thing he may enunciate, I dare not say of any man, "He is a heretic," for it may be that he has kept the faith better and obtained more truth than I. The experience of the past may be the experience of the future, and what we stigmatize as heresy today, may be unchallenged truth of tomorrow; and we, in our endeavor to keep the faith, may be striving to live up to it.

SUFFOLK LETTER

THIS letter is not a sermon nor an official deliverance, but a personal word to the thousands who signed cards during the Men and Millions Campaign. Conditions have changed since the obligation was assumed, but the obligation, in most cases, was not above normal requirements for the Lord's work. Very few people subscribed according to the monetary conditions and prices for labor and products at the time the obligations were written. The need for payment is just as great now as when the canvass was made and the promises were recorded. The question of payment of the Men and Millions obligations is the question with which we have to deal at the present time. There are two elements in this obligation: The one is commercial; the other is moral. All men recognize that a promise over one's signature is binding until it is paid or cancelled; and few such obligations are cancelled. The human nature in such a promise is illustrated in the parable of the Lord who forgave his servant a debt of ten thousand talents, because he had not means to pay; and that same servant went out and cast his fellow-servant in prison because he was not able to pay him an hundred pence. But this human spirit should not enter into the payment of Men and Millions promises. The spirit of forgiveness should rather be applied to members who cannot pay; but this will apply as an exception.

Most of those who made promises to pay can pay, even if time has to be extended. This can and will be done where necessity makes it wise to do so; but even this does not excuse those who are able to pay. There is a moral obligation in the promise that is not limited by five years. It is as permanent as individual faith or profession. A profession of faith in Jesus Christ is not for a specified time, with release at the expiration of that period. It is a life-matter. It involves the whole being. Moral obligations have no self terminations. Men and women who marry cannot terminate the marriage vows at will. Their religious termination is by death of one of the parties. It is not self-determined. Obligations to God are permanent and sacred. "When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it." "Better that thou shouldst not vow, than that thou shouldst vow and not pay." Inability to pay is often moral slackness. It is fair to assume that God will help those who honestly try to keep their pledges. "While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest * * * shall not cease"; but the tiller of the soil can prevent his own harvest. In other words, man helps God to keep His pledge—His word; and God helps man to keep his pledge—his promise. It is a solemn risk to make a promise to the Lord's Church and then try to release self from the obligation. In the case of the Men and Millions pledges, three things should be kept in mind: (1) keep the obligation alive in your heart; (2) if necessary, take more time than first named, but be sure to meet it; (3) try to pay according to the system named on your card of obligation—weekly, monthly, or yearly. The better system you follow, the easier and surer will be the payment.

One more suggestion fits into this obligation. Do not make it secondary, but put it on a par with other obligations and try to meet them on the basis of equality. Do not put this off for the last, but let it share with other promises and other expenses. All the Lord asks is fairness; but He does require that much in our religion. In fact, He usually makes our obligations to Him first. "Seek ye first the Kingdom of heaven." Two things more are important in giving to God: (1) Right feelings toward others. "If thou bring thy gift and rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee, go and be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." (2) That small gifts in the eyes of men may be the largest in the sight of God. Jesus saw "the rich casting their gifts into the treasury, and He saw a certain poor widow casting in two mites, and He said, This poor widow hath cast in more than they all." Do not fail because your promise is small. The world is composed of atoms, and the good of the world of small deeds.

W. W. STALEY.

J. O. Atkinson is Secretary of Stewardship and Tithing. If any of our churches, ministers, deacons, laymen, wish the best literature to be had on the subject, either to read or distribute to church members, write your request—and the literature will come gratis.

A STEWARDSHIP CAMPAIGN

The writer having been designated as Secretary of Stewardship and Tithing, and requested to conduct a campaign in our churches designed to deepen the sense of stewardship and double the number of tithers by May 1, is wondering, first of all, if the pastors and the churches really care for such a campaign. He is wondering if the churches are willing to try and if the pastors are willing and ready to co-operate. He is convinced in his own mind that the Church of the present needs nothing quite so much as it needs such a campaign; that "drives" for this and that have irritated and all obligations to Church and benevolences seem burdensome. What men and women need now is not irritation nor renunciation, but reconsecration. When money was easy and possessions plentiful, we could give as "we happened to have" at the time, and we usually had. But now our God is calling us, through our need and lack, to a new sense of our responsibility to Him, and a consecration of ourselves and our substance to His cause and Kingdom.

When people become tithers and really practice it they have a profound sense of co-partnership and a feeling of consecration to Him who is able to help and to save to the uttermost.

There have been given us three great words by the three great civilizations. The Greeks gave us the first, "Know thy self." The Romans gave us the second, "Know thy power." Christians gave us the third, "Know thy God." The first was self-knowledge. The second was self-realization. The third was self-denial. We have not yet learned the third. Our Christian civilization wastes a tenth in luxury and indulgence. What it needs for redemption is to consecrate a tenth to Kingdom service. Then the knowledge of our Lord will soon cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. All of our increase and all our belongings become sacred and holy as we separate a definite portion for our Lord's use.

But, back to our wondering. Shall we pastors see this and teach this together now? Do the churches wish a deeper consecration to God and the Kingdom? Can we as a free and democratic people really co-operate in any program for God and His cause? We wonder. Can it, shall it be done?

MARCHING OR MARKING?

Secretary W. W. Pinson, of the M. E. Mission Board, thinks that the recent war has taught us a new lesson about our old hymn. He says: "We have been singing, 'Like a mighty army moves the Church of God.' Can we sing it now? We have seen how a great army moves. It levies its billions of dollars, and gets them. It enters our kitchens and tells us what we may eat. It builds ships, requisitions factories, builds cities over-night, and takes over whole railroad systems. It demands our best. Mothers kiss their boys good-bye and send them to face cannon. Men go singing by the million to 'the red rampart's slippery edge.' If we dare sing like that, we must set an undreamed-of standard of loyalty to the Prince of Peace. We have not been marching; we have been marking time."

EDUCATIONAL

(Editorial Note.—In the January number of North Carolina Education President W. A. Harper had an article on "Shall the Bible Be Taught in the Public Schools?" He named three plans of religious activity among high school students and three for students of colleges and universities. We take pleasure in reprinting the six plans named by President Harper.—C. B. R.)

1. The Wenner Plan. This plan calls for the dismissal of children from the public school on Wednesday afternoons that they may go to the church of their parents' choice for religious instruction. No children are forced to go. But those who remain in the public school are given elective work in civics, Americanization, ethics, or memory work, from which those electing the religious work are excused. With this plan also the Daily Vacation Bible School during the summer works well.

2. The Winchester Plan. This is also known as the Federal Council Plan. It calls for the co-operation of the churches in conducting a school or schools as the size of the community may require. The school is inter-denominationally organized, financed, and officered, and is of course contiguous to the public school, so that different grades may at different hours be excused for the religious instruction, which thus comes as often as three times per week rather than once as in the Wenner Plan. The schools of Gary, Ind., illustrate this type.

3. The Athearn Plan. This is also known as the Malden Plan, because in Malden, Mass., it has had its best exemplification. The plan calls for a Board of Religious Education of the Community, whose members are chosen because of their special fitness, corresponding to the Board of Education for the Public Schools. The funds to support such a system of religious education come from voluntary gifts on the part of individuals or organizations. It differs from the Winchester Plan in that the control resides in the community rather than in the churches. The relationship of such a system of religious education to the churches would be paralleled by that of the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A.

There is room for all three of these plans with local modification during these days of experimentation. It is conceivable that the various communities may perpetuate schools of all three types and that still other types may arise. The point for us to recognize is that the churches are busy at their problem, are competent to solve it, and that the State does not have to usurp their inherent function in this direction.

HIGHER EDUCATION

So also is the Church adjusting herself to solving the problem of the religious education of students in State institutions of higher learning. The Church will always maintain her denominational schools to train her own leaders. She must do it. Experience shows they can be had in no other way. But the Church has an obligation, too, to the students in the State institutions. They are entitled to motivation for life in terms of Christian Brotherhood and truth. From these schools will come more than half the nation's leadership. It would be foolish, unstatesmanlike, unChristian to play hands off here. Of course whatever is done will be with the approval of the particular institution, but the motion here too should be made by the Church and not by the State, not in the spirit of criticism, but of anxious co-operation. For be it said the churches need the State institutions as much as they need the churches. Approached in the spirit of Christian Brotherhood, the State institutions will not resent the proffered assistance of the Church in a work which by the fundamental law of the land they cannot function.

Here again three plans are being tried.

1. The Dormitory Plan with Student Pastor. The denomination desiring erects a dormitory on the campus of the State school or contiguous thereto and supports a pastor, who mingles with the students of that denomination who are expected to reside in the dormitory, guiding them vocationally and instructing them in voluntary Bible work.

2. The Dormitory Plan with a Resident Professor of Religion. This plan goes further than the former, in that the teacher does all the student pastor did, offering for credit toward degrees courses of study approved by the institutional authorities, the number of such courses being of course limited.

3. The Inter-denominational Plan. In this plan the denominations provide for a chair or chairs of religious instruction at state institutions, teaching of course the fundamentals of the religious faith on which all are agreed, and side-stepping the mooted, divisive issues, parcelling out the budget of expense on an equitable basis, determined by the directors they have themselves elected to manage the administration of the plan, the institution of course approving in advance and then accepting the courses offered for credit toward degrees.

Now for a campaign for tithers. Was there ever a better time and one more needed for this than now?

* * * * *

In our Men and Millions Campaign for tithers 163 churches put on the campaign and secured 2,513 pledged tithers. There were sixty-four churches that failed to report any tithers.

Stewardship and Tithing—let's make this our slogan from now till May 1.

WOMEN AND THE KINGDOM

WOMAN'S BOARD MEETING, EASTERN VIRGINIA CONFERENCE

The Woman's Mission Board of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference met at the Christian church in Suffolk on Saturday, January 7. All members were present, namely: Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Mrs. M. L. Bryant, Mrs. I. W. Johnson, Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Mrs. L. W. Stagg and Miss Mary Andrews. Dr. J. O. Atkinson and Dr. W. W. Staley attended the session.

Meeting was called to order and devotional exercises led by the President, Mrs. C. H. Rowland.

Dr. Atkinson went over the work of the field with the Board, and spoke particularly of our mountain work and of the imperative need of a church building in Santa Isabel.

Mrs. Bryant, the treasurer, read her report showing the work done by each Society in the Conference.

Mrs. Leathers discussed the Young People's work. Their goal for this year is $2,000. The Home Special goes to the Orphanage and the Mountain work, and the Foreign to Santa Isabel.

The goal for the Woman's work is $4,000. The Home Special goes to the Richmond church ($1,200), and the Foreign to Japan.

Miss Andrews asked that all funds of the Cradle Roll be sent to the Orphanage Baby Home at Elon.

Mrs. Cartwright spoke of plans, as Superintendent of Literature, to arouse more interest in her department.

It was voted to have the District Rallies as follows: Southampton and Isle of Wight, Mrs. J. A. Williams, Superintendent—April 4.

Nansemond and Gates, Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson, Superintendent, April 5.

Wakefield and Waverly, Mrs. L. B. Faison and Mrs. B. E. Livesay, Superintendents—April 6.

Norfolk, Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, Superintendent—April 7.

Dr. Atkinson and Miss Iola Hedgepeth will speak at each of these rallies.

Motion was made and carried to ask that the Program Committee put on a period for Mission Study at the Chantauqua to be held at Ocean View in July.

Time for the Missionary Conference was set for October 6; place, Berea (Nansemond).

The meeting adjourned, subject to the call of the President.

Pope Benedict, head of the Catholic world, died in Rome January 22.

John Kendrick Bangs, lecturer and humorist, died in Atlantic City, N. J., January 21.

The life-sized figure of a woman carved in a solid rock was recently found by campers in a remote corner of Crater Lake, National Park, Oregon. It has been impossible to learn, so far, when the carving was done, or by whom. The initials M. A. Y. and markings which appear to be 1843 are seen nearby. This region was practically unknown by white men in 1843.—Exchange.

DEAR CONTRIBUTOR:—I am very sorry that I mistook the "S. S." in your article for steamship. I understand now that you meant for it to be Sunday school. Mr. Webster does not justify "S. S." for Sunday school, but for steamship. Then, too, good brother, Sunday school is worth spelling out. Next time, spell it out. And this, Mr. Contributor: tell your stenographer that good usage dictates that we spell school with a small letter.—The Editor.

THE GOAL OF SIX THOUSAND DOLLARS REACHED

We set our goal for the Thanksgiving Offering at $6,000.00. Owing to the financial conditions and the very bad crop last year, some thought we would never reach it. While it has taken much work, concentrated thinking, and persistent effort, we have reached the goal; and in the joy of it we have forgotten all about the work it took.

I had faith enough in our Church to believe we would reach it, and that faith has been made stronger. We have never failed to reach a single Thanksgiving goal, and this one makes the fifth one.

My financial report this week ends the year 1921, and the grand total shows what we have accomplished in a financial way. We want to thank the Sunday schools for making their monthly contributions each month for the support of the work here. We want to thank the churches for the special Thanksgiving and Easter offerings. We want to thank the pastors for their sympathy and loyal support. We want to thank each and every one who has had a part. By the loyal support of all, we have been able to do a larger work. May God's richest blessing rest upon each and every one who had a part in the work.

Rev. J. W. Wellons has been sick since Tuesday of last week. He is reported as improving as we go to press this (Monday) afternoon.

Our Graham and Providence churches, under the leadership of Rev. S. L. Beougher, are progressing nicely. THE SUN's Editor was a visitor and worshipper with the Graham congregation last Sunday. The audience was larger than we had ever seen there. Brother Beougher preached a splendid sermon, and from every source we hear complimentary words in his behalf. He is ably supplemented in his work by a talented wife and daughter.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON—JANUARY 29, 1922

Elijah in Naboth's Vineyard.—I Kings 21: 1-29.

Golden Text: Be sure your sin will find you out.—Num. 32:23.

LESSON THOUGHTS:

Sin brings its own punishment.

Grievous sins are rooted in selfishness. Lives are blighted and kingdoms ruined because of selfish motives leading to wicked deeds.

"We who are working in the Sunday school have an unlimited opportunity for training in unselfishness through social and missionary education. Training in unselfishness and in Christian service is the business of the Sunday school."—Lucy Stock Chapin.

"Better be a stoned Naboth, standing for the right, than stealing, lying, murdering Ahab, eaten of dogs."—Bishop Warren.

"The unprincipled man usually gets what he goes after, only to find that on the way he has lost the biggest thing of all—his character."—Boylan.

"For what is a man profited, if he gain the whole world, and lose or forfeit his own self?"—Luke 9:25.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC — JANUARY 29, 1922

What the World Owes to Foreign Missionaries.—Matt. 28:16-20.

MISSIONARY MEETING

This topic offers to every Missionary and Prayer Meeting Committee a splendid opportunity for a program rich with accounts of the deeds of the world's greatest heroes, our foreign missionaries. Through the earnest, unselfish endeavor of consecrated men and women, 12,000 of them supported by the Protestants of the United States and Canada, the world is being blessed daily through the spread of Christianity and all the enlightenment which it brings with it. Preaching, teaching, healing, these "soldiers of the Cross" have obeyed the greatest command of the Master, helping the world in the strength of the divine promise, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

"The foreign missionary is the link between nations which ties them up in one bond of brotherhood."— R. P. Anderson.

"CARRY ON"

"Believe in your mission, greet life with a cheer;
There's a big work to do, and that's why you are here."

In these fitting words the poet, Robert W. Service, urges his comrades to "Carry On" in the great work of making the world better. His counsel to "labor with zest and give of your best" is timely for Christians today, who are striving to see the principles of their Heavenly Father the ruling power in the lives of the boys and girls who are growing up to be the rulers of the nation and the leaders of the Church. Is this your attitude toward the work you are asked to do in the Church? We need men and women who realize that they have a mission in life, and that the Church has a mission which they must help fulfill. We need men and women who will meet problems every day with a heart of cheer and a will that cannot be overcome. We need men and women who know that there is much to do, and who really long to do their part in the great work of the Church of Jesus Christ in all the world.

"There's a big work to do" in 1922, in the Christian churches of the Southern Christian Convention. Our opportunities are very great. The challenge is to go forward along all lines. In the spirit of Paul, may we declare: "I can do all things in Him that strengtheneth me," and with the Christ to guide and help us, take our places in the church and Sunday school, do our work in the Missionary and Christian Endeavor Societies, giving our best to Him who has given us all we have.

SUGGESTED BOOK LIST

A suggested book list for the Sunday school library has been issued by the Sunday School Board of the Christian Church. This list gives books which will be helpful to workers in all departments of the Sunday school, including the Cradle Roll, Beginners, Primary, Junior, Intermediate, Young People, Adult, and Home Department, together with a list of twelve general Sunday school books. If every officer and teacher of your school would purchase one of these books, a splendid nucleus for a Workers' Library would be made, and by adding a few books at a time, very soon a well-equipped library would be the possession of the Sunday school. The familiar statement, "There is no inspiration without some information," has been proved true many, many times. Sunday school workers with more information, such as a carefully selected Workers' Library offers, would do a more effective work. Send to us for the Suggested Book List, and begin to work for your library, and your Sunday school, which means for your boys and girls.

ONE-DAY SCHOOL OF MISSIONS

Our good women are planning to have a "One-Day School of Missions" in the churches this spring. The plan is to group the churches into districts and each district come together at some convenient church of the group and give the day to the study of missionary methods, aims and undertakings.

The Board of the Eastern Virginia Woman's Conference met in Suffolk Saturday, January 7, and arranged for their conference group meeting. There will be four "One-Day School of Missions" in this Conference, in that number of districts. The Southampton and Isle of Wight District, Mrs. J. A. Williams, superintendent, Franklin, Va., will hold its session on Tuesday, April 4. The Nausemond (Va.) and Gates (N. C.) District, Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson, superintendent, Suffolk, Va., R. F. D. No. 5, will hold its session on Wednesday, April 5. The Wakefield and Waverly District united, Mrs. B. E. Livesay, Waverly, Va., and Mrs. L. B. Faison, Wakefield, Va., superintendents, will hold their session jointly on Thursday, April 6. The Norfolk District, Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, 80 La Salle Avenue, Norfolk, Va., superintendent, will hold its session on Friday, April 7.

The North Carolina Board is to give the date of its sessions as soon as can be arranged. And our Woman's Boards of the Virginia Valley Conference and of the Georgia and Alabama Conferences are to arrange groups also, we are assured, in which to hold their One-Day School of Missions this spring. Practical programs of real study and suggestiveness are to be put on and these are to be days not only of inspiration, but of information and construction.

GREENSBORO, NORTH CAROLINA

The Mission Secretary had the privilege of worshipping Sunday, January 15, with our congregation at the First Christian church, Greensboro. The Sunday school is under the direction of Superintendent W. B. Truitt and is a veritable bee-hive of energy, industry and activity. It is a fine school, wide awake and doing something. A large congregation, the best we have ever seen here for regular worship, assembled for the 11 o'clock service. The pastor, Rev. H. Russell Clem, gave a strong sermon on "The Christian's Use of the World." The pastor was beginning a series of ten evening sermons on Sin. Our people of Greensboro are finding Brother Clem most acceptable and they are rallying to his support, and gladly co-operating in his plans for progress. The outlook at Greensboro First church is very hopeful indeed.

MISSIONARY PLAYS AND PAGEANTS

The Mission Secretary has just received samples of some most excellent pageants, plays and missionary entertainments well adapted to any Missionary Society or Sunday school class that may wish to present one. The following, at prices named, can be had and no Society can make a mistake in putting on either:

- "Ma-Li, the Daughter of Ito." 10c.
- "When I Was Sick." 10c.
- "The King's Highway." 7c.
- "Rainbow Pageant." 10c.
- "The House of Brotherhood." 25c.

We especially recommend the first, "Ma-Li," as it is easy of reproduction, and yet most illuminating and convincing in its effect. But all are good. Every Missionary Society, whether of young or old people, ought to give a pageant occasionally. Nothing helps more.

SUCH A LETTER HELPS

Just at this time when we are taxed to the utmost for funds to finish up our splendid Mountain School building, supply the rooms with desks, blackboards and other equipment, and the Sunday school part of the building with substantial folding chairs and other equipment, such a letter as the following not only helps materially, but inspires further effort:

"DEAR SIR: I saw Miss Iola Hedgepeth's letter in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. I am enclosing a check for five dollars for the Mountain Work. I hope you will receive it and that it will be a little mite to help along with the good work. I am interested in this Mountain Work and hope it will continue to grow. I hope you will soon have all the money that is needed for the work. Yours truly,"

• (The above is from a young lady of Harrisonburg, Va., who does not care that her name be given.)

Freinds are inquiring what is most needed in our Mountain school now. The answer is ready and should be known to all. Namely, money, financial help. After the building is completed, paid for and equipped, help in kind will be needed; but just now there is no need for our Mountain Work comparable to that of money; other than, of course, the friendly interest and prayers of the people everywhere for the great and good work Miss Hedgepeth and Miss Midyet are doing.

SOLEMN VOWS

JOHNSON-JOHNSON

At the residence of the bride's parents, Deacon and Mrs. T. W. Johnson, near Waverly, Virginia, William Pate Johnson, of Richmond, Va., was married to Miss Gladys Cornelia Johnson. This was a quiet home wedding only members of the parental families being present. Mrs. J. L. Foster played the wedding march. The bride carried beautiful flowers, the gift of the groom, and wore a beautiful tailored traveling suit. They left immediately on their wedding tour. Mr. Johnson is a fine young business man of Richmond, and Mrs. Johnson is one of Waverly's popular ladies. The ceremony was performed by the pastor, November 21, 1921, at 4:30 p. m. Many friends wish them long life and great happiness.

FOR SALE

I have three lots fronting the Elon College campus from the south which I would sell. The lots could be made to give 70 or 80 feet front by about 250 feet deep, or broader front for more money. Or would consider building house for party on long rental. There are but few lots fronting on the campus for sale now. If interested write J. L. Foster, Waverly, Va.

CALLED HOME

GRIGGS.—Mrs. Sarah Elizabeth Griggs departed this life on December 12, 1921, at the age of 67 years. She was a good Christian mother and leaves to mourn their loss five sons and two daughters.

Her funeral was conducted at the home of her son, John Griggs, on Chestnut St., Suffolk, Va. She was a member of Cypress Chapel Christian church, and her remains were laid to rest at Cypress Chapel, Va. Dr. W. W. Staley assisted in the service. May God's richest blessings be upon the bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER.

BROOKS.—Mrs. Martha Brooks wife of the late M. V. Brooks, departed this life December 18, 1921, at the age of seventy-three years, five months and sixteen days.

She had been a member of the church at Parks' Cross Roads for about 30 years, at which place she was buried beside her husband. May the Heavenly Father comfort her loved ones.

T. J. GREEN.

ROUNTREE.—Charles E. Rountree, aged 42 years, departed this life at his home, Suffolk, Va., on December 26, 1921. He was a member of Bethlehem Christian church. He leaves a devoted wife, five children, father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. John S. Rountree, one half-sister, and many friends.

His funeral service was conducted at his home by the writer, assisted by Dr. W. W. Staley and Rev. Mr. Clark, of the M. E. Church, and his remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery at Bethlehem. The Lord bless the dear bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER.

WHITE.—Little Joseph Arthur White, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jodie White, of Ramseur, N. C., departed this life December 27, 1921, at the early age of one year, five months and sixteen days. Burial at Parks Cross Roads by the writer.

May the father and mother and loved ones take comfort in the words of the Master who said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

T. J. GREEN.

JOHNSON.—At the home of her daughter, Mrs. John D. Howell, Suffolk, Va., Mrs. Mary K. Johnson died December 30, 1921, aged 64 years. She was a dear good Christian mother and will be greatly missed. She leaves two daughters, Mrs. John D. Howell and Mrs. A. C. Kelly, of Suffolk; two sisters, Mrs. W. J. Edwards, Suffolk, and Mrs. C. H. Duck, of Boaz, Va.; three brothers and one half-brother.

She was a member of Mt. Carmel Christian church, and her funeral was conducted from there by her former pastor, assisted by Dr. Staley and Dr. Rowland. Her remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery. The Lord bless and comfort the dear bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER.

POWELL.—Mrs. John Arthur Powell died at her home on Chestnut Street, Suffolk, Va., on January 4, 1922, aged 34 years. She was a member of the Suffolk Christian church. She leaves a devoted husband, seven children, two half-brothers and one half-sister.

Her funeral service was conducted at her church by the writer, assisted by Dr. I. W. Johnson, and her remains were laid to rest in Cedar Hill cemetery. God bless the dear bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER.

STUART.—Helen Lucile Stuart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Stuart, died January 4, 1922, aged twelve years, nine months and fifteen days. She was confined to her bed only a short time when death came.

She had a loving and winning disposition and will be greatly missed in the church and Sunday school work. She was secretary of the North Highland Christian Sunday school for more than a year, and a member of the L. W. class. A father, mother, two brothers, and a sister and a host of friends are left to mourn their loss.

Services conducted by the writer, and remains laid to rest in Riverdale cemetery. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

A. H. SHEPPARD.

HOOK.—Mary Virginia Hook, widow of the late H. P. Hook, was born November 29, 1848, and died January 6, 1922, aged 73 years, one month and seven days. She united with the Timber Ridge Christian church in early womanhood, and remained a faithful member until death. Surviving are three brothers and three sisters, her husband having died about seven years ago. She will be missed in the church and community, as one of her disposition always is. Funeral services were conducted at Timber Ridge, January 8, 1922, in the presence of a large gathering of relatives and friends who deeply mourn her departure. Though she is gone we rest in hope of meeting her again where partings will be no more.

A. W. ANDES.

SHIFFLETT.—Charles Henry, the little son of Erman F. Shifflett, Shenandoah, Va., died January 7, 1922. The child was two years, four months and fifteen days old. The funeral was held and the interment made at St. Peter's Christian-U. B. church, Tuesday, January 10. May He who giveth and who taketh away comfort and strengthen the sorrowing parents. The funeral service was conducted by the writer, Brother Shifflett's pastor.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

COOK.—Mrs. Rebecca J. Cook was born May 24, 1855, and died at the home of her son, near Palmyra, January 7, 1922. Her age was 66 years, seven months and thirteen days. Sister Cook was a member of the Lutheran church, a good woman, and highly respected. She is survived by seven children, all grown to manhood and womanhood. The deceased was a great sufferer for several years prior to her death, but bore it all patiently. It was her request that I preach her funeral, which I did at Palmyra, January 9, 1922. The remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at Bethel Lutheran church several miles away. May God comfort the sorrowing loved ones.

A. W. ANDES.

HOLLAND.—Holmes Earl Holland, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Holland, grandson of Deacon P. C. Holland, died January 10, 1922, aged three years. Services were held at the Holland cemetery, conducted by the Rev. L. F. Paulette, of the Holland Baptist church, and the writer.

JAMES H. LIGHTBOURNE.

BRAY.—John Adams Bray, son of Jordan and Jennie Morris Bray, was born near Cluster Springs, Halifax County, Virginia, September 19, 1833 and died January 12, 1922, aged 88 years, three months and 23 days. He was left fatherless at the age of six, and later became the chief support of his mother, three sisters, and younger brothers. On October 8, 1857, he married Miss Sarah Seat, of Hyco, Virginia. To them were born five children. One son died in infancy, and R. Thomas Bray died September, 1897.

At the beginning of the Civil War he and his three brothers volunteered. Three of the brothers were wounded, and the fourth was captured at Gettysburg and died in prison. John A. was a member of Company K, Third Virginia Regiment, Longstreet's Division. He received a serious wound in the left leg at the battle of Gaines' Mill, and lay on the field from Friday afternoon till Saturday afternoon, when he was found by a companion of his company who had been given special permission to search for him. He was taken to a Richmond hospital, but not until Monday was the limb amputated. Complications had set in and a third amputation was necessary later, leaving him scarcely a stub of the limb. He finally recovered so he could be brought home. Then, after months of suffering, he began life over again practically penniless. The remainder of his life was given to farming. He was a hard worker and a good manager. He said his part was to work and look for results to the Higher power. He died clear of debt and left a very creditable estate.

On August 21, 1867, his first wife died, leaving four children. August 6, 1868, he married Miss Sarah Margaret Tuck, of Virgilina, Va., who died June 28, 1900. To this union were born eight children. The surviving children are Mrs. G. W. Stovall and Mrs. W. P. Vaughan, of Virgilina, Va.; Mrs. C. W. Tuck, of Blackstone, Va.; Mrs. E. T. Dixon, Mrs. J. D. Whitt and Mrs. H. W. Tuck, of Nathalie, Va.; also Misses Ida and Elsie Bray, and J. H. and B. E. Bray, of Nathalie. There are 29 grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

Brother Bray professed faith in Christ before the War and united with Union Christian church, and was baptized by Rev. J. W. Wellons. Thirty years ago he was made a deacon. In 1897 he moved from Virgilina to near Nathalie, Va., and in 1910 Liberty Christian church was organized, for the existence of which church he is responsible more than any other person. He was transferred from Union to Liberty as a charter member and deacon, and never missed a roll call till January, 1922.

The funeral was conducted at Liberty church on January 13, and the burial in the church cemetery. A god man, faithful in all of life's duties, has gone to his reward. He will be missed in the home, his community and church; but the influence of such a faithful, upright life will live on.

MISCELLANEOUS

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas, there is great suffering among the Jewish people of Europe, thousands of whom are reported as being entirely destitute and in a dying condition, due to the lack of food and other necessities; and,

Whereas, our own land has been blessed with a prosperity that not only guarantees our own safety, but which enables us, and should impel us, to share our bounties with our less fortunate fellow human beings in other lands:

Now, therefore, I, Cameron Morrison, Governor of North Carolina, do hereby set apart by this Proclamation the week beginning Monday, February 6, and ending Sunday, February 12, as Jewish Relief Work. I ask that all newspapers of the State give wide publicity to this week, devoted to such a worthy cause; and I especially ask that on Sunday, February 5, notice be given in all the churches that the following week will be observed as Jewish Relief Week, and that the ministers, Sunday School superintendents, and teachers, and others, urge their people to seize this opportunity of helping the suffering and contribute to the relief of these worthy distressed people, so far as their means of relief will permit.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State to be affixed.

Done at our City of Raleigh, this the sixteenth day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand, nine hundred and twenty-two, and in the one hundred and forty-sixth year of our American Independence.

WHAT IS A DIGLOT?

A diglot is a Bible or a Testament or smaller portion of the Christian Scriptures printed in two languages in parallel columns. At any rate that is what it means in the language of the American Bible Society. These two-language books are prepared as a means of Americanization and Christianization of the immigrant within our gates, and have been used with great success in all parts of the country. The Society now has more than thirty-three such diglots in which English and some other language are printed in parallel columns. These include Bohemian, Bulgarian, Chinese, Finnish, French, German, Greek, Hebrew, Hungarian, Italian, Japanese, Persian, Polish, Russian, Spanish, Turkish and Yiddish.

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

The Church

By REV. R. F. BROWN, Pastor

Rose Hill Christian Church, Columbus, Georgia

THE Church is a divinely appointed medium for the dissemination of truth, the furtherance of the Gospel, and the discipline of Christ's followers. The divinity and the mission of the Church guarantee its perpetuity. God is not concerned about the duration of the Church. He knows it will continue. But He is concerned about its mission. Its possibilities are infinite. It is the only institution that can adequately diagnose the present-day ills and apply an effective remedy. It alone can inject the forbearing, tolerant spirit of Christ into the clashing, resentful, unholy life of our time. It offers the cure for the misunderstandings, mistrusts, misgivings, and the deliberate mischief-making which upset and demoralize the common life of today. It stands alone in its ability to dismantle the industrial, social, political, religious and international strife of the world. It imparts the spirit of brotherly love, sympathy, and good-will among individuals, classes, groups, and nations.

If the turmoil of the world is ever quelled, it will be quelled through the message of the Church. Its message is unmistakably clear. It proposes to supplant suspicion with trust, strife with harmony, trouble with happiness, sorrow with smiles, shadows with sunshine, scornful words with considerate statements, sombrous mood with a cheerful disposition, vengeance with love, and chaos with Christ. Only the Church can pour the healing balm on the troubled waters that threaten to engulf humanity. In clear, positive, ringing tones the Church condemns wickedness, crushes rebellion, and saves the rebel. It has the power to effect a reconciliation between the rich and the poor, capital and labor, the employer and employee; and establish a Christian democracy among men. It introduces man to God in order that he may be changed from what he is to what God wants him to be.

Blessed is that Church that realizes its mission and delivers its message to this spineless, vacillating age.

PASTORS AND TITHING

In the campaign to secure more tithers in our churches during February, March and April, much, very much, depends upon our pastors. It is presumed that they themselves believe in and practice tithing. If they do not they are certainly missing much of the joy and power not only of preaching but of giving. As sure as we live, tithing is God's plan for us, in our financial dealings with Him, and His kingdom; and we never get the greatest joy out of giving until we adopt the principle and live by the practice of tithing. The Bible will convince any one of this who is open to conviction and will study it carefully on the subject.

Now, if our pastors will preach this divine plan of financing the Kingdom we will more than double the number of 2,500 tithers in our Convention. We should and can have at least 5,000 pledged tithers this year. A few sermons, addresses and much prayer will secure them. We should seek to make February and March count in an educational way, and then have some week in April as sign-up week. Ample literature and pledge cards are available for the campaign.

A FORERUNNER OF GROWTH

The forerunner of growth is the press, and the forerunner of the Church's growth is the Church press. The growth of the Church always follows the trail of the press. No people ever develop to their capacity, or even make progress satisfactorily, until they have harnessed the press and put it to work. A Church constituency that produces literature makes progress for Kingdom service that is known and recognized by the world.

The progress of Christianity is fifty years behind in America because individuals have had to pioneer with Church journalism. By so doing the resources of the Church press have been limited, and this has curtailed the usefulness of the press.

A REMINDER

Some weeks ago, President W. W. Staley, of the Convention, asked that each Conference Secretary send him the name and address of all delegates-elect to the Convention from his Conference. Also President Staley requested that chairmen of committees of the Convention send him, for program purposes, an outline of what the committees desire presented.

Have you, Brother Secretary, complied with the request—and have you, Brother Committee Chairman, sent the information?

PRESERVING "THE CHRISTIAN SUN"

The last session of the Southern Christian Convention ordered that the volumes of THE CHRISTIAN SUN be bound. Since that time THE SUN'S Editor at intervals has been endeavoring to get this mass of unorganized history together. The task is yet unfinished, but we are far enough along to have a number of volumes already bound. The finished work is a credit to the bindery that is doing the work, and adds greatly to the worth of the files of the paper.

The difficulties encountered in trying to get the volumes of THE SUN together add much to the argument that the paper should have a permanent home.

(We move that all editors who do not keep a complete file of THE SUN and have the same bound at the close of each year be fined one thousand dollars, the same to be applied to the deficit on the paper.)

Speaking of bound volumes of THE SUN, here is a plan that would mean revenue to the paper and at the same time be value received for those who may desire the service: If there are one hundred persons in the Church who would like to have a complete volume of the paper each year, without going to the trouble of keeping their own papers and having them bound, and would be willing to pay the small sum of ten dollars for this volume, the Editor could easily and conveniently keep one hundred copies of each issue and have that many complete volumes at the end of the year. This would mean a revenue of $1,000.00 annually, less the cost of extra copies and binding.

SILENT FORCES

So much is said about silent forces, and yet we do not seem to grasp the opportunities they present. The Church paper is a silent force. Its circulation may be limited, but an average of five persons read each copy of an edition of a paper, we are told. In this way the Church paper reaches and influences more people than any dozen preachers. No one would think of withdrawing support from a dozen of our ablest and best men, yet some of us, without seriously thinking, withdraw our support from our own CHRISTIAN SUN.

Stand by THE SUN. If you cannot renew now, write us freely and frankly and say that you will pay some time during the year. This is not to encourage anyone to get behind with his or her account, but THE SUN must go into the homes of our people, or its mission will be defeated.

A preacher may have a study and not study. He may have a thousand books (to look at) and yet they do him no good. Looking through them is not studying. A half-day spent in the study is not study. Reading the papers is not studying. Studying is a form of mental exercise that is too well known for us to repeat what it is.

A CALL TO PRAYER

In these days of world-wide unrest and commotion, with changes going on everywhere that seem to rock the very foundations of society, and indeed, of our religion, it is well that the Sunday school forces of North America express their answering allegiance to Jesus Christ, the Savior of the world, the same yesterday and today and forever. That fact and that faith are back of the urgent request that every church and Sunday school member unite in earnest prayer that God will lead in all the arrangements for the Sixteenth International Sunday School Convention at Kansas City, Missouri, June 21 to 27, and be present in power by His Holy Spirit in this crucial hour of the world's history, that the Sunday school hosts of North America may be consecrated to His service, and see their opportunity as never before.

GIVE YOUR PASTOR A CHANCE!

The demands made upon the modern minister are both varied and intricate. He is supposed to be a specialist in practically every field connected with Church life. And he is driven at his task from day to day, seven days a week, with very little opportunity for reasons of refreshing, either by way of knowledge or inspiration. He must always be giving out knowledge and inspiration. How valuable it would be for him and for your entire church if a group of men and women should decide to finance for him a trip as delegate to the Sixteenth International Sunday School Convention at Kansas City, Missouri, June 21 to 27, 1922. What joy it would give him! And with what new zeal and enthusiasm he would tackle your Sunday school problems on his return! It takes only one of you to start such a movement. Nominate yourself as that one, interest a few others, and go right at it. It will be one of the wisest investments that you ever had a part in. Don't wait to let your inclination dwindle into inaction. This is your opportunity to help your pastor render greater service to you all.

We have been told from ages past that the idle brain is the workshop of the devil, and that the idle hand is dangerous. We see every day the consequence of unemployed labor. We see the consequence in physical, in moral and in spiritual degeneration. The man who is without work first neglects his home, neglects himself and soon society neglects him. His will becomes, like his muscle, flabby. He loses courage, energy, independence, and he is soon eating the bread of idleness. Perhaps the greatest discipline of the world is the discipline of work. When you deny a man the privilege of work you deny him the privilege of development in spirit, in mind, and in body.

The garden of the heart must be planted in flowers and not briars if the face is to shine and win its way in the world.

EDITING AND PUBLISHING A CHURCH PAPER

Talks With Our Readers—No. I

INTRODUCTION

There are many things connected with editing and publishing a Church paper that are wholly foreign to nearly every reader. It is my purpose during the next several weeks to discuss a few things under the above heading. If those who are deeply interested in the welfare of our dear CHRISTIAN SUN will be patient enough to follow me in this series, somehow I feel that many of us will have a better understanding of the issues involved in caring for a Church periodical. Note that I am writing in the first person, the purpose of which is to play the part of a regular contributor while these articles last. My first article is

THE FIRST ESSENTIAL

The first essential of a Church paper is a need. Great things, worth-while things, come into being because of a real need.

The Church—the denomination—needs a medium of communication, and that is why we have such publications as The Herald of Gospel Liberty, THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and others. No publication should be started because of a public demand alone, for the public can be mistaken. There must be a real need.

The need of a Church paper embodies the bringing together, in thought and assembly, the minds of believers that they may work toward a common end; that principles of the Church may be spread; that undertakings of what the Church is doing may be known to all concerned, and the general public; that leaders may have a chance to educate and give instruction to those who follow and cooperate. And finally, that need must, above all, be to glorify and magnify the Christ.

Our Lord, it seems to me, if He were here on earth, would no more sanction an excess of Church papers than He would too many local churches.

The need, then, is the justification of a Church paper's existence. My readers will agree with me on this, and my next talk will be the beginning of some of the inside facts and operation of a Church paper.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS

IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part XIV.

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.
Field Secretary for Missions

WEDNESDAY, September 28.—Every creek, river or running brook one crosses here, one finds women sitting in the edge thereof doing the family wash. They have a flat wooden tub which they have torn from a palm or some other tropical tree; and then when the washing is done they spread the clothes out on rocks or grass to dry. I have not seen any clotheslines in Porto Rico.

The city of Yauca, through which we passed today, is strikingly unique. It has 6,000 people and is situated on a hillside, for the most part. It is a mixture of hill and valley, mountain and cane field, green palms and red houses, purple lawns and blue buildings. It is the truth. There are long rows and neat archways of cocconut and royal palms, guarding and giving a friendly shade to large dwellings painted red, blue, pink, green and purple. One does not have to wait for a rainbow in Porto Rico to see the seven colors. One may just look out on the houses of town and city and there they are, not only the seven, but seventy colors.

On our way from Yauca to Ensenada we passed through wide and unending cane fields. The plowmen were in groups of four each. And each plowman had four yoke,—that is, eight oxen—hitched to the great old plow he drove to the beam in the mellow soil. There were, then, thirty-two oxen pulling four plows. These four men, besides holding their plow to the fallow, yelled and swore at the stolid yoke, or rather at the boys who rode and goaded them. Sitting perched on the yoke that bound the oxen in twos was a boy of twelve to fourteen to each yoke who cheered the stolid animal to livelier walk with his incessant song, or goaded him to quick step with a pointed steel spear till the hip joint or fore shoulder ran red with blood. And to every group of six or eight was a "major domo," who on his small horse hurried the work along and kept all going as best he might. Stolid ox, swearing plowman, singing lad, hurrying major domo, a hundred of them in a field, constitute farming on a large scale, and make one wonder if one has not really gone back in history to real ante-bellum days.

We went to the Guanica Central. Now a Central is a sugar-making establishment, and this Guanica affair is an institution whose lines go out into all parts of this habitable earth. This is the third-largest sugar-making plant in the world. The plant, with its building, machinery and equipment, cost the snug sum of $7,500,000. And the same Central owns lands and sugar cane plantations that cost them another seven and a half millions. They have about 6,000 acres in sugar cane here, and grow nearly as much in San Domingo. And they only grow a small fraction of the cane they grind. They buy all that is grown for miles around and own their own railroads, which run out into the fields to haul the cane in. Their factory here is driven by great dynamos that generate 6,000 horsepower. There are seven vacuum pans of thirty-five tons capacity each, and four evaporators that evaporate 15,000,000 gallons of cane juice at the time. The capacity of output is 5,500 tons of cane, which yield, on the average, 550 tons of beautifully granulated and snow-white sugar each day. They run day and night during the grinding season of six months in the year, but stop Sunday at noon for twelve hours to clean up and take a fresh start. There are 500 men employed about the plant, and they shipped out about sixteen million pounds of sugar last year. The main offices of the mill are in New Jersey and New York, but under an American name. From these American offices the sugar is sold and the money is handled.

But the sugar industry is at a standstill now. This Central has hundreds of tons of sugar on hand for which it could have got twenty-six cents a pound, but which now sells at four and a half cents the pound—and slow at that. This Central would have "gone broke" but for large undivided profits and big credits on hand. It has lost millions and is still losing, but will likely weather the storm and swing around all right. So the assistant superintendent, who was our pilot through the plant, advised us.

We hasten on to San German (call it Her-mann). In this town of 5,000 people we light upon an eating house at 1 p. m. We reach upstairs hotel by stone steps and find the cooking and dining room filthy enough, though the table linen was fairly decent. We had "eggs one side," rice, beans, coffee, and Le Chosa—a kind of preserves, sweet and palatable.

The plaza at San German is narrow, but it is overlooked by the most interesting Catholic church to be found on the island. The building is over 400 years old, and looks the part. One reaches the entrance by ascending thirty to fifty stone steps. Grass is now growing on these steps, and the church is not only old, but dilapidated and forsaken. The Protestants are doing a thriving missionary work here—our Presbyterian brethren having an elegant church and manse and a wide-awake congregation. The Catholics seem to be put out of business here, judging from the appearance of their ghost-like and spooky-looking church.

But the biggest thing I have seen, heard of, or read about in Porto Rico is J. W. Harris and his "Polytechnic Institute." Now this man Harris is an institution himself, and would make anything go. That sugar plant that we visited today, with its multiplied millions, is nothing compared with Harris. It is worth a dozen trips all the way across the Atlantic and back, even if one had to swim, to see Harris and talk with him about what he is doing. To meet him in working clothes, one would take him for an engineer or a farm hand. To talk with him about education one would take him to be a half-dozen university presidents all made into one. To see him in the school room, one knows he is a great teacher. To sit with him in his palatial home, one discovers that he is a prince. And everywhere one sees him, one knows him to be a man of God with great ideas for Kingdom service, and the heart and mind to put those ideas into practice.

People in Porto Rico vowed that a co-educational school would be a breeder of vice and immorality. Harris has proved that the opposite is true. People in Porto Rico declared that the rich would not work with the poor, and those who had money would not care to learn to work at anything. Harris has proved the opposite. He has a school of 277 pupils—young men and young women. Some are rich and some are poor. But all work with their hands at least two hours each day. They study books in the school-room; but out yonder in the fields they are learning improved methods of farming. Harris is teaching these Porto Rican boys what a real hog is and how he may be raised; what a dairy is, and a garden, and chickens, and what a real cook kitchen and dining room look like. Why, this man is putting up one school building that is costing $75,000. It has in it 120 tons of steel, all sent here from the States. The plan of his farm, dairy, work-shops and school buildings call for an expenditure of $2,000,000. Porto Ricans of San German are now raising $100,000 to put into his plant. He and his school will be worth ten times that to them in a few years. The plan was so stunning, outlandish, enormous, that no Mission Board would back him at first. Then Harris lined up with the God of heaven and flung his great heart and all that he was into the enterprise. He and God have won out. Now some of the wealthiest men and women in the States are behind his enterprise, and the Presbyterian Board has come across and is pouring their tens of thousands into it. I put President J. W. Harris, of the "Polytechnic Institute" of Porto Rico, down as one of the truly great and wonderful men of whom one often reads but seldom meets. He says his present urgent needs are for four cottages for teachers to live in, a girls' dormitory, a boys' dormitory, a dining room and bakery, water-works, and a few such incidentals, to cost a total of $288,500. And here is predicting that Dr. Harris will soon have these wants all supplied, and then be wanting twice that much more and getting it. All the men and women of faith and prayer are not recorded in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, long as that chapter is, nor did all die with the patriarchs. Some are still living—and this man Harris is one of them. There is simply no telling what one man can accomplish in this world when that man flings himself with all he is and has upon the resources of God.

From San German we started late in the afternoon to Mayaguez, but had gone only four or five miles when we were stopped by a flood. Rivers being short here, and rushing down from nearby mountains, a traveler never knows when he will be cut off in his journey and have to turn back. Today, finding the road a flood for miles ahead of us, we faced about and fled homeward as fast as ever our Ford could bring us. We made the return in two and one-half hours, and felt happy on reaching Ponce and Barrett's home by late nightfall.

The deep cuts along the road we traveled today were stone and showed signs of slow and heated formation. I have an idea that the Atlantic Ocean and the Caribbean Sea had a terrible war against each other some centuries back, and this island rose up here to separate them or to guard them from further affrays. At any rate, Porto Rico, like the ship that Paul went to Rome on, is stuck in where two seas meet. I do not know how Porto Rico came to pass, unless God just planted it out here between these two seas to show how beautiful His handiwork could be.

We did not get back to Ponce in time for prayer-meeting, but Mrs. Barrett tells us fifty-one were present, this being about the usual number. Some of our prayer-meetings in the States do not surpass this in numbers.

We talked till 10:30, and then bade the Barretts, and our other good friends, the mosquitoes, an affectionate good-night. (To be continued)

ELON LETTER

UNCLE WELLONS has been sick for a week—not seriously ill, but confined to his room. And thereby hangs a tale. This saint of the Lord cannot do without his daily Bible lesson. He cannot read lying down, so I have the joy of reading to him. It has set me to thinking, and especially so that one so versed in the Scriptures, and now in his 97th year, still feels the daily need of renewing his spiritual vigor at this copious fountain of inspiration.

Personally, I have read the Bible daily since, as a Sophomore in college, I signed a covenant to do so. The more I read it, the more it means to me. Each time I read a passage again, it has a different meaning. This is as it should be. The Holy Spirit speaks to us through its pages, leading us into God's truth according to our capacity and experience to understand. If the reading of the Bible always meant the same to me, I should be sure I had made no progress, experienced no growth in my Christian life. The fact that I increasingly understand it witnesses of the Spirit's presence in all life, encourages me to look to my Father for wisdom and strength and confidence when my own powers do not suffice my needs.

It is my conviction, too, that the Church today stands in great need of a revival of Bible reading. How to secure it is a question for the pastor of each congregation to decide. No stereotyped method will work the desired result universally. Certainly the pastor will preach from his pulpit and urge in his pastoral visitation the unique place of the Bible in the Christian life, and he will suggest personally to individuals various methods of reading the Bible. Every member of the Christian Church should read the Bible through consecutively, beginning with Genesis and concluding with Revelation. We should do this because it is our creed, our rule of faith and practice. I suspect, however, that some who have once accomplished this feel that they can then desist from daily Bible reading. But they cannot afford to do so. Other methods of reading should then be taken up—the topic method, the book at a time method, the outlining a book as you read method, and all the various version methods, the historical method, for example, to mention only a few. The pastor knows these methods; let him explain them fully to his people around the family hearth. Let him enlist them in one or another of them.

Some pastors encourage the whole membership to adopt a uniform set of daily Scripture references—those, for instance, prepared for the Sunday school lesson or for the Christian Endeavor prayer-meetings, or those issued for the International Bible Reading Association. There is an advantage in this—co-operative Bible reading, like co-operative prayer, adds greatly to unity of thought and action in Christian service and life.

Other pastors select a book of the Bible from which they will preach a series of sermons. The congregation is asked to read the book through once before each sermon of the series. The Sunday school library, during the series, is profitably supplied with good commentaries on the book, and where thought desirable, each family is urged to purchase two or three books bearing on the selected book. I heard of at least one preacher who went the whole limit, asking his people to vote on a text from each chapter on which they might desire him to preach. Needles to say, it put him on his mettle, and that as the series advanced the interest and attendance grew.

I am not recommending any specific method nor aiming to exhaust the subject by suggesting all the ways that have been successfully employed. I shall be satisfied to get our people to thinking along the line of reading the Bible, whether individually or in connection with the family worship, or both. Of this I am absolutely sure—we stand today greatly in need of a genuine revival of Bible reading. I pray God we may have it. I know that the Holy Spirit yearns to open up to those who read the Book copiously and prayerfully new and deeper insight into the fundamentals of Christian living. We need this insight, as the basis of our inspiration for work in the Master's service. Let us read, and let us work.

W. A. HARPER.

There is a responsibility—a responsibility which the conscience of the world is waking up to—and that responsibility is this: That when a man is out of employment there is a burden and that burden rests upon the society in which he lives. The laboring class of the world lives on such a close capital that a few days out of employment begins a crisis in the life of the individual and in the home and soon spreads itself into society.

PLAIN TALKS TO PLAIN PEOPLE

HERE is a question which I wish to submit to every reader, no matter how high or how low he stands in the Church: Is your experience as a Christian deep and full? In other words, Are you really and consciously making progress in the divine life? Is your Christian life a real life, or is it a mere formality, cold and without real enthusiasm for God in the salvation of souls? No child of God ought to be content with the mere formalities of the Christian life. We need to know where we are standing and what our goal is. Are we laying up treasures on earth, or in Heaven? See Matthew 6: 19-21. The Church cannot make progress save as her members, individually and collectively, make progress. Think it over and see whether you are helping the Church to move forward or not, and then do your best to help her.

Did you know that blood shed by a murderer cannot be wiped out? That is what I was recently told by a policeman, who has had a good deal of experience in such matters. When a man is murdered, his blood stains remain where his blood falls. The Lord Jesus was murdered, but His love and His blood cannot be wiped out—they stand as an abiding testimony to the great work His death wrought in behalf of souls. Astronomy is changing, as the discoveries of science change, but the love of God is the same; it changes not. Physics may change in its basis, but the basis of love changes not. Geology may present a new feature now and then, but the love of God is always the same—there is no change, the blood of Christ changes not—it always avails for the penitent sinner. We can hold on to our faith in the atoning blood of Christ, since it never changes.

It is commonly held that the day of miracles is past. Sometimes our common belief gets mixed up with error, and then what? Well, we must face the fact and get out of our unbelief the best we can. The day of miracles is not necessarily past—it cannot pass till God's power becomes limited, except if the time should come when God has no further use for miracles, which is not likely to come to pass in this age of unbelief. Dr. Joseph Parker, who was once one of London's great preachers, is quoted as having said on one occasion:

"The day of miracles has only gone for a moment: it will return when faith returns. If ye had faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye would say to this mountain, Be ye cast into the depths of the sea,—and it would fly from you like a thing affrighted."

But the day of faith is not gone with all peoples—some are still holding to the great basic principle of Christianity, and therefore a miracle might occur today if there were real need for it, especially in answer to the call of faith might it come, and there are people who have faith in God and in His Son and in His Holy Spirit. Therefore we believe in the possibility of miracles today. Remove unbelief on the part of God's people, and things new and old will come to pass. May God teach His people how to pray!

Is it ever right to compromise the truth? Some say it is, that at times and under peculiar conditions compromises are inevitable. For instance, one writer—a man of great ability and of world-wide reputation—declares such to be a fact, and then to prove it, he quotes Joshua 15: 63, which reads: “As for the Jebusites, the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the children of Judah could not drive them out, but the Jebusites dwell with the children of Judah at Jerusalem unto this day.” That was not a compromise at all. The children of Judah did not dwell with the Jebusites of choice, nor because they were willing to do so, but because they could not help themselves. When a man does a thing because he cannot help it, it is no compromise on his part, for he does it only because a superior power forces him to do it, and that does not constitute a compromise, as I understand it. Do not let that incident become an excuse for a compromise with wrong. There is nothing in it to justify such a claim; at least, not as I see it.

SUFFOLK LETTER

IRECRACKERS, a species of fireworks, invented, no doubt, by the Chinese, and introduced into Europe by the Italians, came to the western world on the tide of westbound civilization. They represent degraded fireworks, which, originally, had high uses in expressing the heroic feelings and services of mankind. They were once used as night signals on land and sea, and for various purposes in war. The Japanese have invented daylight fireworks, consisting of bombs which explode high in air, and discharge jets of colored smoke in the form of birds, fish, trees, and human beings. The Chinese and Japanese surpass all other nations in pyrotechnics.

Fireworks at the right time, and celebrating worthy events and subjects, have their place in human society in celebrating historic events worthy of remembrance; but firecrackers are a degradation of fireworks, as jazz lowers the standard of music.

The celebration of the Fourth of July, 1776, with fireworks, is a patriotic expression of Independence proclaimed by three million poor, but sovereign people, one hundred and forty-six years ago. If patriotism had increased as fast as population and wealth, this nation would be the mightiest on earth. But we have degraded the meaning of many great principles, and lowered the standard of many great occasions. Fireworks have been degraded to firecrackers, and government has been reduced to a business proposition; and religion to enjoyment and social service. The air is full of college yells and ball vociferations, days and nights are made hideous by unearthly sounds of firecrackers. No composer has attempted to put firecracker sounds into music; if attempted, it would not add to the harmony of the world, nor inspire true patriotism; and no sounds are worthy that cannot be translated into harmony.

The North celebrates the Fourth by the use of firecrackers; the South celebrates Christmas by means of the same vulgar explosives. These two important events, the birthday of the world's greatest Republic and the world's Redeemer, deserve a more dignified and reverent observance. The gunpowder age should yield to the age of peace. Sense and not sound should receive public sanction. Feelings of patriotism and piety should honor the Fourth and Christmas, and the rising generation should be taught lessons of gratitude and loyalty to the State and Jesus Christ. The North is right and the South is wrong in the use of firecrackers, if to be used at all. The Fourth celebrates political independence; Christmas celebrates the birth of the world's Savior. The Civil War is over, and the South should go back to the Fourth of July for its noisy and firecracker celebration; but Christmas should be observed in a religious fashion. Angels set the standard for us, when Jesus was born, with their “Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will among men.” I hope the South will come back into the Fourth of July Union in its use of firecrackers, and that the whole nation will celebrate Christmas as Bethlehem suggests and deserves. I could pray that a spontaneous edict might arise from the whole South saying that no firecrackers shall be sold or used on Christmas, 1922. The Mayor of Kinston, N. C., issued such an order before the last Christmas, and it was obeyed. He touched the right key for the South and I honor him for his courage. Let us no longer celebrate the birth of the Prince of Peace with the relics of barbarism and war. Keep the firecrackers till the Fourth and sing praises on the Twenty-fifth.

AN INQUIRY

I have been waiting to hear something from that referendum vote that was to be taken by the Executive Committee of the North Carolina Conference on the question of dividing the Conference, but not a word has appeared in THE SUN. Certainly a question of so much importance is not to be dropped without a word. I received a blank ballot a few days after the adjournment of Conference and sent in my vote as requested. I was at Bethlehem last Saturday to hold church conference, but the secretary had no instruction concerning the matter. Why have the churches not been notified? I think both ministers and churches should be allowed to vote on the question, and that their votes should be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN at an early date.

The objections to one Conference will, in the main, hold against two if divided as proposed. Two would give us a territory with extreme ends as far apart almost as the ends of the one conference. Two shoe string Conferences would never work satisfactorily. If a campaign of silence is to be waged I will say nothing more now.

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

PISGAH, ALABAMA

Rev. J. W. Elder is pastor of our new church here, and has been since its organization. From reports, he has done an excellent work. The congregation now worships in its new and handsome building. In a letter dated January 20, Brother Elder says: "We are getting along very well here at Pisgah with our church work. We had fine services last Sunday. Just as soon as we get our organ paid for we want to give one Sunday a month offering to the Orphanage and one to Missions." This is a fine resolution for a new church, and one which we wish all our Sunday schools, both new and old, would adopt. Why some of our well established schools still feel too poor to give as much to others as to self—that is to say, one offering a month to Missions and one to the Orphanage—is more than we can understand. However, the increasing number of our schools that are loyally falling in line with the decision of the Convention is very gratifying.

HOW WE DO NEED THE NEW BUILDING!

"Fancy Gap, Va., January 20, 1922. My dear Dr. Atkinson: We had the largest attendance at Sunday school last Sunday since I have been up here, and I just wanted to tell you about it. Our attendance had been quite low for the three or four previous Sundays. I think this was due to the cold weather, though. Snow lay on the ground last Sunday, but it was warm, nevertheless. If you had been here you would have seen forty-two of these mountaineers filing out of our little school-room when Sunday school was over. Forty-two who need guidance and training along the right lines! Yet there are many others who need this same guidance and training, and they were not there! Next Sunday, if possible, we want to have fifty present.

"Our new schoolhouse is looking fine nowadays—inside and out. I believe that I have visited nearly all the homes around here and have received a warm welcome at each of them. Sincerely, Emily Midyett."

What a pity it is our new building has been so much delayed! One who has seen the shabby, outworn, unpainted house now used for our Sunday school and day school wonders how forty-two pupils can get inside of it for any purpose of school or study. But we are soon to have the new building ready, thinks Miss Hedgepeth. A truly great work awaits us in the mountains, and one that is appreciated by the mountaineers.

Get people in the days of adversity and business depression to tithe their income when it is small; and then in the day of prosperity when their income is great they will not depart from it.

BOOK REVIEW

"THE CHURCH AND THE PRESENT CRISIS"

(By President W. A. Harper, of Elon College)

I have just finished reading Dr. Harper's new book, "The Church in the Present Crisis," and I am going to read it again. It is full of meat, but more than that, it is full of spice as well. I like the frank, man-fashion way with which Doctor Harper faces the Church of today. Every Christian ought to get this book and read it through twice. He does not set up any straw man, but clearly defines and frankly faces the real issues with which the Church is confronted in this year of our Lord 1922, and as frankly and as fearlessly suggests the way out. You may or may not agree with him in every conclusion, but you will be forced to say that he has not feigned an issue or feared to face it.

His definition of a real Christian and his interpretation of some fundamental doctrines may take the breath away from some men who think in grooves, but to the real Christian student and statesman his messages along these lines are as refreshing as a summer's breeze and as invigorating as the facing of a blizzard. Personally I thank God and take courage for the privilege of thinking his thoughts after him, and while I do not go with his mind to the finality of every detail, yet I feel myself out in the open field of a real man's religion and rejoice in the prospect of seeing and hearing all about me and going my own way with a glad heart that I have met a man who does his own thinking and believes that I should do mine.

There is hope for the Church if we will think and feel and act in the present crisis, and Doctor Harper's book will surely stimulate your thought, strengthen your will, and make you feel more than ever that "One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren."

NEW YEAR'S OPPORTUNITIES

The year 1921 is in the past. The new year 1922 is upon us. We cannot change anything in the year 1921, but we may profit in the year 1922 by the errors we made in 1921. The New Year brings new responsibilities, new duties to perform, and new opportunities to grasp. It should be our aim to grow better as the years go by, and live closer to God. We should put forth our best efforts to do the work He has for us to do, and be faithful servants in the Master's vineyard.

Our love for the Master is shown by the works we do. If we love Him we will want to do something to show our love for Him. He will place the opportunities in our pathway and it will be up to us to make use of the opportunities as they confront us. As each of us look back over the year just passed, we can see many opportunities we had to do something in the Master's name. But how many of the opportunities did we make use of? Then when we think of our own individual life and take inventory of just the acts of kindness we did during the year just past and the sacrifices we made (real sacrifices) for others, how few in number we will find to our credit! If we will count the opportunities we had and charge them to our account, and then give ourselves credit for just what we did, I suspect we would hide our faces in shame.

Our mansion in the skies will not be built from the things we ought to have done in life, but from the things we do in the Master's name. When we learn to forget ourselves and place God first, and fill each day of our life with kindly deeds of service for the Master, the Mission Board will no longer be cramped for funds to carry out plans for a larger work in the mission field; the Orphanage Superintendent will not have to make appeals each week for funds to meet the expenses of the institution; and the fifty or sixty little orphan children now on the waiting list crying for a place in the Christian Orphanage will be heard, and every member in the Christian denomination will want to make some sacrifice that sufficient funds will be supplied to meet the great needs; every church and Sunday school will want to be and will be on the list of contributors.

Let us make 1922 the best year in the history of our Church.

SUPPOSE

Let us take it for granted that a pastor, or, we will say, the Captain of Men and Millions in the local church, really wishes the members to know the Biblical way of giving, and what the Bible teaches about tithing. Then let some intelligent young man, or young woman, be asked to make a five minutes' talk in the church on each of the following subjects:

1. God calls upon men to worship Him with their substance.
2. The tenth is the proportion used in Scripture records as having been used in giving.
3. The tenth was given in Scripture as an acknowledgment of God's ownership and man's stewardship.
4. The tenth is the only percentage mentioned in Scripture in connection with giving.
5. Jesus sanctions the tithe and emphasizes its spiritual meaning.
6. Paul bases his exhortation for proportionate giving upon the tenth.
7. Giving the tenth is business-like. Haphazard methods will never meet the Kingdom needs.
8. Giving the tithe is a safeguard against covetousness.
9. It carries the promise of God for spiritual blessing and material prosperity.
10. The Church will continue poor and have to beg until Church members adopt the tithe and give according to plain Bible teaching.

Then suppose such young person elected to speak on these topics should say that information and literature were lacking. Then suppose that person were to write the Secretary of Stewardship requesting such help and literature, what would it cost?

Answer: Just the request, that's all, and sufficient literature right to the point, too, would be sent by next mail.

Suppose pastors and captains try this in their churches and see what happens.

MONEY AND THE KINGDOM

FOUR DISCUSSIONS BY REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

PLACING GOD AND THE KINGDOM FIRST

The writer had a friend who for several years past, since he began in business, in fact, has faithfully practiced tithing. He is very successful now, and quite wealthy, but he has in no wise gone back on first principles. Now this friend declares that when one comes in and pays off an obligation to him, his first thought upon receiving the money is not himself, nor his family, nor his debts, nor any other personal affair; but of God. He knows that God is going to get a tenth of it, at least, to advance His Kingdom in this world, and his first thought in receiving the money is of God.

This is the very heart and soul of tithing. It is simply putting first things first.

There is a very important and emphatic Scripture which says, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness, and all these things shall be added."

Now that is exactly what tithing does for one. It puts God and His claims and His Kingdom first in our business and in all our financial affairs.

There is a class of people, some of them good church members, who say, "All that I have belongs to God." Such people remind me of an incident related to me while in Porto Rico. The Spaniards are a very affable, courteous and hospitable people. When you visit in their homes they not infrequently say, "All my home belongs to you." One visitor took the hospitable and lavish Porto Rican host to really mean what he said. There was a painting in the guest chamber which the guest very much desired. He decided that since all in the house had been given him by his host, he could surely have this one picture as his very own. But lo! when the guest made known his intention the host was very angry. So those who, with words, acknowledge that "all they have belongs to God" usually retain all themselves when there is a suggestion that God would like a little portion of His own to use for advancing His Kingdom.

The surest, soundest and safest way to put God first is to separate a portion, grant the first fruits to Him. The way to put God first in any business or undertaking is to adopt and practice the principle of tithing.

FAITHFUL WITH ANOTHER'S

There are two Scriptures which, taken together, not only convince us, beyond all question, that tithing is God's law for us, and is also necessary if we care really to have and enjoy that which we call our own. Leviticus 27: 30, 32: "All the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's; it is holy unto the Lord. And the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord." So the tenth is the Lord's (though in our rebellion and selfishness we may for the time rob Him of it. It does not belong to us.) Now, with this evidently in mind, our Lord said, according to Luke 16: 12, "If ye have not been faithful in that which is another's, who shall give you that which is your own?" If we are not faithful as stewards in administering our Lord's tenth, how do we expect Him to give us that which He wants us to have as our own to possess and enjoy? By giving the tenth we prove our faithfulness in handling His money: By robbing Him of His tenth and appropriating it to our own use, we are faithless certainly as touching one of the fundamental facts of Scripture, and human and divine law.

OUR GOAL BY MAY 1

In the Men and Millions campaign of 1919 we secured in our Christian churches of the Southern Convention 2,513 tithers. If the Movement had done this and nothing else it would have been worth far more than it cost, both in money, effort and energy.

But no work is good enough to be let alone. No man or organization among men can afford to rest on its laurels and be content with past achievements. If tithing was worth while in 1919 it is worth while now. It is God's law for man's giving. The individual and the Church who practice it, prosper.

That our Church may go forward in a work so well begun, an effort is to be made to double the present number of tithers in our Church by May 1. It will take preaching, teaching, praying, to do this. But a united effort and one consecrated to God can bring it to pass.

Will not all our ministers and all interested and loyal laymen who read this resolve here and now to do his or her part in reaching this goal by the time appointed? It will be glorious for our Church, and for the Kingdom. Together, beloved, and we shall, by God's help and favor, reach the goal, and in that act glorify Him whose we are, and Whom alone we seek to serve.

HE GREW RED

"I believe you ought to see these," said a pastor to a bank president. He laid on the desk the weekly offering envelopes of the banker and of a wash-woman. Each contained fifty cents. The banker fingered the envelopes and grew red. He made a new pledge on the spot proportioned to his income. People who tithe do not have a remorse of conscience that makes them grow red on comparison with others.

There was never a better time than now to begin tithing. We are living in a period of adversity and financial depression; and if we cannot now make up our minds that the Lord shall have one-tenth of all our increase, when can we hope to do so? It is God's plan for us, and it sometimes takes adversity to make us adopt His way and give up our own.

THE BULLETIN

Rev. P. T. Klapp closed a successful revival in our High Point church last week.

Rev. R. P. Crumpler, Luray, Virginia, writes that he was engaged in a series of evangelistic services at St. Peter's church, January 9-19.

Rev. J. F. Morgan, pastor of the First Christian church, Norfolk, Va., has accepted a call to our Winchester, Virginia, church and will go to Winchester, we understand, in the spring.

The People's church, Dover, Delaware, Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, pastor, received fifty-six members into church fellowship on a recent Sunday, making a total of one hundred sixty-one during the past year.

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., pastor of the Christian Temple of Norfolk, Thirty-third Street and Llewellyn Avenue, celebrated his third anniversary yesterday as pastor of that church. Dr. Smith's sermons, morning and evening, were of the evangelistic type. He preached with force and power, presenting plain gospel messages that reached the heart and caused many of his hearers to yield when the invitation was extended. There were the two services yesterday, and forty-four united with this church as a result of the day's effort. Nineteen of the forty-four joined through transfers of letters from out-of-the-city churches, and twenty-five joined on profession of faith.

The evangelistic campaign started two weeks ago at the Christian Temple, when one hundred and twenty-five of the church members pledged themselves to do personal work, and it will continue until Easter Sunday, each Sunday's service being evangelistic in nature. It is anticipated that this church will become a powerful factor in its community and in the city, in its endeavor to win individuals for Christ through personal work.—Virginia-Pilot, January 23, 1922.

A GREAT CATASTROPHE

Saturday night, January 28, all Washington, D. C., and the nation, for that matter, were shocked by the instant and accidental killing of more than one hundred persons who were watching the scenes in the great Knickerbocker theater. The roof of the building, under the weight of snow, gave way, and the whole group of more than two thousand persons were thrown into hysterical bewilderment. Nearly one hundred persons perished at once, and others died later. The total deaths reported at this writing (Monday night) is 108, with possibly many more to be added to the list.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON— SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1922

Elijah Taken Up Into Heaven.—II Kings 2 :1-18.

Golden Text: Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee the crown of life.—Rev. 2: 10.

LESSON THOUGHTS:

Faithful service wins divine approval.

The work of the judge on the bench, of the statesman in the legislature, of the minister in the pulpit, and of the missionary on the foreign field, must be carried on. Who will prepare himself to succeed to these places of trust? Is your church training leaders for places of responsibility and opportunity? The work must go on.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR FEBRUARY 5, 1922 Christian Endeavor Around the World.—Psalm 107: 1-3

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR DAY

Forty-one years ago Christian Endeavor was born in a revival in a village Congregational church. Today it is a world organization, with a world vision and program, moulding countless lives. A writer some months ago, discussing in The Christian Endeavor World the secret of the success of Christian Endeavor, asserted: "Christian Endeavor has abolished the old passive Christianity where one sat and sang one's soul away in everlasting bliss, and has substituted a practical, active Christianity. It has put the young to work for the Church and the religion it has preached, recognizing that faith without works is dead, and never more lethal than when it attempts to curb the youthful desire for action, for achievement, or even for evangelization." World-wide Christian Endeavor facts show the great work that the organization is doing today. Did you know that there are more than 70,000 Societies in the world, many of them in foreign lands; that China has 60,000 Christian Endeavorers working in 1,200 Societies; that the number of German Societies doubled during the War, and that during that period more new Societies were organized than in the twenty-five years previous; that the Greek Church of Russia is crying for the work because that land is feeling the need of a movement which will grip its young people; that there are more than 2,000 Societies in the country of India? These facts give but a glimpse of the great work which Christian Endeavor is witnessing upon its forty-first birthday. And all along its path of progress, Christian Endeavor has worked "For Christ and the Church," winning young lives to a deeper consecration and spiritual devotion, and giving to the youth of the Church tasks which have challenged their best service.

THE CHURCH VACATION SCHOOL

The Sunday school devotes about 1,000 minutes a year to teaching the Bible to the children of the Church. The State requires about 93,500 minutes for instruction in English, and 128,000 minutes for instruction in mathematies in its public schools. This appalling contrast must make the members of the Church of America stop and think. To thoughtful persons, concerned for the future of the nation, it is apparent that, if our children are to live and act under Christian motives, some method must be found whereby the minutes devoted to the teaching of the Bible may be materially increased. Various plans have been suggested. Some advocate making the Sunday period longer. Others feel that week-day religious instruction is the only solution.

A third plan which has been growing in favor, because it has proved its practical worth in many places, is the holding of a Church Vacation School, for from two to six weeks during the summer vacation period. This plan has several commendable features. The opportunities of the vacation period are recognized, and instead of being a time for letting-up effort, this free time is utilized for more intensive work. The children are free from the public school program. Twenty million of them in our country have been released from regular duties, and for three months. Surely a part of this time at least can be used to good advantage by the Church. Parents are glad to have them occupied in a safe and helpful pursuit. Many public school teachers, who have the religious needs of childhood at heart, are at liberty to help in the Church Vacation School, and college students are given an opportunity to gain experience while helping in the work. The three factors, idle children, leaders with leisure time, and an unused church, are brought together for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God and the uplift of His little ones. The testimony of thousands of adults and enthusiastic children is given to the value of the Church Vacation School.

Any church can have such a school. A church building, some children, many or few, a devoted Christian who loves children and is willing to devote some time to teaching them the truths of the Word of God, and some simple equipment, will make a Church Vacation School. Thoughtful and prayerful planning by one enthusiastic leader counts for more than anything else. And it is marvelous what can be accomplished. In one such school last year, held for but one hour a day for two weeks, because local conditions made a longer school impossible, showed results in the lives of the boys and girls, and made them call for another session. Churches and communities which hold the school one year are unwilling to leave it out of their annual program again. Make a Place for the Church Vacation School in your educational program for next summer and test its worth.

Most authorities agree that the best time for holding such a school is in the early summer time, soon after the close of the public school. Habits of school attendance have not been lost, the children are eager to be together, and there is less traveling and visiting than later in the season. In most schools the morning hours from 9 to 12 have proved most convenient, but, of course, the time must be decided with reference to local conditions.

The best committee possible should be chosen to work with the Committee on Religious Education, if your church has this valuable committee, to outline the work, provide equipment, secure teachers, make a program and advertise the school. The program should provide for certain very important periods, including the period of worship, the period of instruction and the period of recreation.

The period of worship will include music, prayer, and Scripture reading, with probably a ten-minute talk by someone who can appeal to children; and make this part of the service contribute to their spiritual needs. The song service gives an opportunity to let the children know better the great hymns of the Church, and to enter into their spirit. One Vacation School chose each week one of these hymns, which they memorized and sang at the church service the following Sunday. This program of worship should be carefully planned, and devotionally carried out, for it is a very vital part of the work of the school.

The period of instruction may be divided, giving one time for the Bible story, and another for a missionary story. The method employed throughout the school is the oral method, and the Word of God and the life stories of our great missionary heroes and heroines furnish a wealthy storehouse of material for stories which will grip the lives of boys and girls. Publishing houses are at work issuing tests which will meet the needs of these classes. The instruction period must also include time for the reproduction of the story by re-telling, by hand-work, or by the dramatization of the story. The impression must be deepened by expression. A certain amount of memory work should be planned for each grade or group in your school also.

Recreation, or supervised play, has a place in the program of the Church Vacation School. The leaders of the school will recognize the contribution that suitable games and play can make in character development, and plan for this work.

The number of grades into which the school is divided will depend largely upon the workers available. Many country schools have been conducted successfully with one teacher, with an older girl to help with the expressional and recreational work. Other schools have been fortunate enough to have mothers, who were formerly school teachers, to help carry on the work. Your beginning may be on a very simple scale, but the important thing is to make the beginning in this work. The financial outlay will not necessarily be large, and is usually met by the Church, or by voluntary contributions.

In a very simple way, this is the Church Vacation School. We agree that more time is needed for religious education. That time is available in the summer. The question is, 'Will your church use this time which is at its disposal? Will you help your church to fulfill its obligation to childhood?'

We all are blind until we see
That in the human plan
Nothing is worth the making
If it does not make the man.

Why build these cities glorious
If man unbuilded goes?
We build the world in vain
Unless the builder also grows.

—Edwin Markham.

HOW THE MEN AND MILLIONS FORWARD MOVEMENT HELPS THE BOARD OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

The Men and Millions Forward Movement has made possible the meeting of an urgent need in this department of our Church work; viz.: the employment of a Field Secretary for full time. Miss Luey M. Eldredge, of Erie, Pennsylvania, was elected to this position and assumed her duties July 8, 1921.

The following is a summary of her work up to November 30: Conferences and Conventions visited, 8; churches, 22; Sunday schools, 12; Christian Endeavor Societies, 6; inquiries answered by mail, 53; personal letters written, 238; circular letters mailed, 1,366; Christian Endeavor Societies organized: Young Peoples', 4; Junior, 2; total, 6. Sunday school classes, 1; Teacher Training, 1; Home Department, 1; Cradle Roll, 1. Institutes held, 6; addresses delivered, 47, and 5 classes taught at the Seaside Chautauqua. In addition to this the Handbook has been issued and mailed, and notes furnished weekly to THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

This marks the beginning of our efforts. The number of inquiries received and the calls for personal service show the awakening interest of our people in this work.

The program for the coming year contemplates the holding of Institutes and Vacation Bible Schools throughout the Convention, and also an efficiency contest in our Sunday schools.

A portion of the expense is borne by the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions, and a part by offerings from the Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor Societies, but these are insufficient to maintain it at present, without the financial aid given by Men and Millions.

This department has also shared in the awakened interest in all lines of Church work, which was developed through the Men and Millions Campaign, and has been especially blessed through the enlistment of Life Recruits, many of whom are rendering active service in the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work in the home church.

The work among our young people is so vital to our Church life and so far reaching in its effects that it is impossible to estimate the ultimate results in this one phase of the work of our beloved Church.

W. T. WALTERS, Chairman,
Board of Religious Education.

Richmond, Virginia.

The religion which would comfort the worker when dying must also protect him from death. The preaching which proclaims the value of the soul must also seek to realize that value in life. The employer who is willing to recognize the worker as an immortal spirit within the walls of the church must also treat him as such in the place of employment.

CHURCH NEWS

ELM AVENUE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

The following program was rendered at the Elm Avenue Christian church, Portsmouth, Va., Tuesday night, December 27, 1921:

Song: Joy to the World—Choir.

Recitation: Merry Christmas—Lizzie Felton.

Recitation: Dollie's Presents—Wilma Powell.

Solo—William Rhiner.

Exercise: Christmas Bells—Nine children.

Recitation: Best Claus—Mary Felton.

Dialogue—December Lesson.

Recitation: A Christmas Secret—William Elley.

Recitation: Christmas Songs—Elsie White.

Song—Four girls.

Recitation: Christmas Bells—Marie Gilligan.

Recitation: Santa Is Coming—William Rhiner.

Recitation: Christmas Troubles—Macie White.

Duet: Star of the Morning—Mrs. J. A. Baker and R. L. Baker.

Tableau.

Song—Choir.

Presentation of presents.

The above program, gotten up by some of the good women of our church, was very wisely planned and very beautifully and effectively rendered, for which both the children and the good women deserve a great deal of credit, and especially the women who labored so earnestly to make it a success. This is a young branch of the Church of Christ, but I earnestly pray that the spirit of Christ may so rule and reign in each heart that it may be a real branch of the true Church, and do much for the advancement of His Kingdom on earth.

ELISHA BRADSHAW, Pastor.

VALLEY LETTER

The revival meeting at Whistler's Chapel, which was held the latter part of November, brought good congregations to the services. Eleven young people gave themselves to the Lord and united with the church, and were baptized by immersion at the close of the meeting. There are many unconverted people yet in the community that ought to have been reached for Christ, but our efforts in their behalf appeared to be in vain. We hope the seed sown will still bear good fruit in the conversion of others.

The following named churches of my pastorate observed beautiful and appropriate Christmas services: Bethlehem, Woods' Chapel, Timber Ridge, Mayland, Dry Run, and Concord. It was my happy privilege to attend them all except the one at Timber Ridge, and I regretted to have to miss that one. The services were all exceptionally fine. The pastor was nicely remembered at each service with a suitable token of esteem. At Woods' Chapel a nice pair of driving gloves was presented (very appropriate and useful in my case); at Bethlehem a dressed chicken, cakes, canned fruit, and the sum of $10, were presented; at Mayland, $15.50; at Dry Run, $11.50; at Concord, two beautiful cakes, a dressed chicken, butter, eggs, and other things beautiful and delicious. Several individuals also remembered their pastor and family in a substantial way during the happy Christmas season. These various expressions of good will on the part of churches and individuals call forth our deepest gratitude, and serve to tighten the ties of friendship that bind us together as pastor and people. May our Heavenly Father bless them all and make of us all better workers in His vineyard during the year 1922.

A. W. ANDES.
Harrisonburg, Va., Jan. 12, 1922.

A WEEK OF PRAYER

At the suggestion of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, and in accordance with the request of their pastor, the Christian churches at Leaksville and New Port, Va., observed the first week of January, 1922, as a week of prayer. We feel that this week of praise and prayer has greatly helped both churches. The attendance at every service was good at both churches. On Monday night, there were about twice as many at the Leaksville church as usually attend the mid-week prayer meetings here. On Tuesday night, the congregation was still larger. The congregation on Wednesday night was estimated to be one hundred. Not only was the attendance good all through the week, but there were abundant evidences of the presence of the Holy Spirit at every service. Many gave evidence of being full of the Spirit at each service, and took active part by praying in public and by speaking on the topics outlined by the Federal Council of Churches, speaking of their hope in Christ, and testifying of their love of God and His Christ and of Christian service. Someone at Leaksville remarked that this series of prayer services was better than many revivals that have been held here.

At New Port, the members of the Church of the Brethren united with our people in these prayer-meetings. The services there were held alternately in the two churches—one night in the Christian church and the next night in the Church of the Brethren. We are very much encouraged at the spirit of harmony between the two denominations thus manifested.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

SURPRISED

On Tuesday evening, January 17, 1922, about 7:00 o'clock, a knock was heard at our front door. As we opened the door there stood a car at the end of the walk. It was from Mount Zion church. The car was loaded with Brothers Carden, Pace, and Ray, and a nice supply of eatables, such as canned fruits, pickles, sausage, steak, sugar, coffee, soda, butter, eggs, potatoes, etc. Many thanks to these good people of Mount Zion community. May the Lord richly bless ever one of them and help us to serve them better.

This is our seventh year as pastor of that people. For four years this church has paid its pastor more than the set salary, besides many gifts and presents.

Again we thank every one of these good people for their kindness.

J. F. APPLE.

THE HIGH POINT MEETING

A revival meeting began at High Point on January 16, and continued ten days. The writer assisted the pastor, Rev. J. W. Knight, and much good was accomplished. The weather was rainy and cloudy the first week, but notwithstanding this, the interest was fine. Some thirty or more professed faith in Christ and all of these were grown people. Seven united with the church—all heads of families, except one. Others are expected to join. The church seemed to be greatly encouraged as a result of this meeting.

Brother Knight is greatly beloved by his members and also by the members and friends of his church.

P. T. KLAPP.

FOOD AND RAIMENT

It may be that all preachers do not receive large salaries, but so far as I am able to learn, all of them that with an honest purpose, throw themselves upon His mercy, have plenty to eat and wear. I think I am not destined to grow rich with this world's good (neither do I crave it); but I am sure that the people among whom I labor are sure not to let me want for food and raiment.

Wentworth and Catawba Springs have given us fine poundings, consisting of almost all necessary things for the pantry and some for the pocket-book. Besides these splendid poundings there have been many smaller gifts, such as potatoes, fresh meats, butter, etc., received all through the year from various members.

Some of our Wake Chapel members, together with good Baptist friends, presented me with a handsome overcoat, a splendid suit of clothes, a good pair of shoes, shirt, collar, tie, and cuff links. My wife was not forgotten, and from Washington, D. C., came a nice hat to her from our Wake Chapel friends.

If I know myself I am thankful in my heart to the people for these good things, and grateful to our Lord for His bounty. May our Heavenly Father bless these givers with rich spiritual blessings and make me a better servant of the people for His sake.

Our faithful and loyal superintendent of Wake Chapel church, Brother A. F. Smith, has been confined to his room for about two months with paralysis of the left side. "Uncle Smith," as he is widely called, is improving, and is able to walk a little now by means of a stick and some one to aid him. We, the church and Sunday school, are hoping and praying for his early recovery. He is missed very much in the school, and many of the children have shown their love "with flowers."

A LETTER AND ITS ENCLOSURE

Editor, THE CHRISTIAN SUN:

The enclosed was first intended for The Uplift, but a better thought came, and I am sending it to you so that more of "Uncle Wellons'" friends may see it. You will recall that I edited The Burlington News from 1888 to 1896, and it was through the columns of that paper that much of the discussion as to location of Elon went on.

If you find this available, mail me a copy of THE SUN containing it.

Very truly yours,

C. W. HUNT.

(Enclosure)

Reminiscent

"UNCLE JIMMIE" WELLONS

The editorial in the last number of The Uplift about Rev. J. W. Wellons, aged 96 and preaching on his birthday, brings to mind many recollections of the long ago; for he is the very first preacher that I remember ever visiting my father's home, then in the "Harricane" section of Granville County, near the Wake County line. At that time I was about four years old, and in the dim vista I can recall being at the supper table with him, while a thunder-storm was on, just at nightfall. He was then in charge of two or more churches, one of which was Good Hope, near our home. The other was Pope's Chapel, still a well known church in Franklin County, about three and one-half miles west of Franklinton. In a year, perhaps longer, we moved within sight of Pope's Chapel, where "Uncle Wellons" was still pastor, and was for many years, as I grew to young manhood, and was a frequent visitor in our home all those years.

My church membership at Wesley's Chapel, Methodist, came out of a revival meeting at Pope's, my father, the late Rev. Moses J. Hunt, helping in the meeting. His home was at Franklinton, on a small farm east of the town. For many years I never came in touch with him, after leaving that section, but with the founding of Elon College (and I took a part in the laying of the corner-stone of the first building) and his giving up regular pastoral work he came to Elon, where his saintly presence is felt throughout all the denomination, as students and friends come and go. I have met him once or more.

Just to think of 96 years a servant of his Master, and all the years serving humanity! He never was considered an orator, but was always a very earnest man, interesting even to boys, and always clean in his personal life and ministrations. He and my father worked together many years, father making his work so as to be at Pope's Chapel the fourth Sunday in September each year when the annual revival meeting began; and about this meeting I could write a small book. The glorious times these two men had there preaching to their neighbors made bright spots in their lives. Father passed to his reward when 77 years of age. Had he lived as has "Uncle Wellons," he would have been 98 a few days before the birthday this good man celebrated January 1.

The fifth commandment reads: "Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee." I know nothing of this good man's parentage, but if his early life was like his mature life has been, the fulfillment of the only commandment of the ten containing a promise has been wonderfully amplified in the life we are discussing. It has been many years since I sat under his ministry, but I believe that if I were awakened from sleep by the sound of this man's voice, in the pulpit, I could tell you in the dark who was talking. Here is wishing he will round out the 100th anniversary, still able to remember and enjoy his friends.

It was at Pope's Chapel, under the Sunday school superintendence of the late Calvin Winston, that I studied the Bible and the catechism in which was everything from the creation to the birth of Christ, which knowledge serves me to this day.

FOR SALE

I have three lots fronting the Elon College campus from the south which I would sell. The lots could be made to give 70 or 80 feet front by about 250 feet deep, or broader front for more money. Or would consider building house for party on long rental. There are but few lots fronting on the campus for sale now. If interested write J. L. Foster, Waverly, Va. 1-18-4t

Heart or Mind ?

By MR. HERMON ELDREDGE, Erie, Pa.

HAVE heard somewhere of the little boy who saw a bird fall dead at his feet. The little fellow picked up the limp, lifeless bundle of feathers and ran to his mother, pouring his heart out to her as he buried his face in her lap and sobbed: "O Mamma, why was the birdie killed?"

And then someone supposes the little fellow to be a purely intellectual type, and instead of going as he did to his mother, he came very sedately and properly with the lifeless carcass in his hands, and standing respectfully in her presence, asked in a perfectly even tone: "Mother, I have just witnessed a scene which puzzles me and I have come with the request that you advise me why a sudden fatality has overtaken this bird?"

I have traced that difference of approach to God in prayer, and I wonder which gets the closer to God and the more apt to receive an answer, the one who coolly and properly, with perfect intonation and proper phrase and period, approaches our Heavenly Father, or that one who, in his sense of sin or feeling of need, may even forget the proper words and phrases and casts himself into the lap of God and breathes out his petition or his praise.

No one need to berate the possession of scientific knowledge as a background of true education, but to leave the heart out of the reckoning when we educate the man is a mistake so fatal that Doctor Wirt, of Gary, Illinois, has said: "Education without character is a curse to any man or nation."

*"The night has a thousand eyes, and the day but one.
But all this bright world dies, with the setting sun.
The mind has a thousand eyes, and the heart but one,
But all our bright world dies, when love is done."*

Tonight---A Meditation

WE are meditating tonight as we write. The world is closed out, the fire burns and casts its shadow on the wall. There are hundreds of thoughts that come to us—the thought of war and peace; the thought of life and its happiness. Then, too, the thought of sorrow—the thought that one half the world does not know how the other half is living.

But possibly the greatest and best thought that comes to us tonight is that every man has around him the opportunity and blessings of a world. At our side we have the words of great men. In the various Church papers they delight and edify us each week with words of charm and power. We have just read some of the inspiring utterances of men who have moved and are moving the impulses of the world. These great minds are, by the use of the printing press, brought to us tonight. In the next room we hear the words of some of the world's sweetest singers. The golden voice of Caruso, a few months ago silenced in physical form, stirs our soul as we meditate. Science and invention have brought these things to us. Likewise millions of homes, deprived of the price and privilege of meeting the world's great writers and great singers, are enjoying tonight what we are enjoying because the minds of men have wrought so wonderfully.

We can mention more than a dozen of our Exchanges that bring to us delightful and dignified messages each week. To read their editorial pages is to meet these men under the most favorable circumstances. Many of them we know in person, and those whom we do not know in person, we feel that we intimately know because of their product.

But the utterances of the world's great preachers, the songs of the golden-voiced musicians, and the inspiring words of fellow-editors are not the only things that come to our minds tonight. These things are only among the many.

We are thinking tonight of the men and women, the boys and girls, who week after week find pleasure, delight and edification in reading THE CHRISTIAN SUN. They write us that they do, and it is for lack of space and sufficient room to hide our face that we do not print these messages that we so much appreciate.

We are thinking, too, of our Convention officials who are charged with the delightful work of looking after the general causes of the Church. Our Mission Secretary with his beaten paths over five Conferenees, with his urging and stirring messages in behalf of Missions. His heart and soul are in the work.

Our Orphanage Superintendent pleading week after week for the helpless and homeless. His efforts are untiring; his energies are never spent. He represents a noble cause that is being backed weekly by a noble people. To uphold his hands is to help him who is a father to the fatherless.

Our own College President standing at the helm of our educational work, guiding in a mighty strain the policy, the perplexities, and finances of the institution that means so much to our Southern work and to mankind in general. Support him we must with our prayers and patronage. Behind him we see in the shadow tonight a loyal and untiring faculty whose influence and work find their way to the uttermost parts of the earth. They are content to be practically unknown to the outside world; they are willing to live there and labor that young manhood and young womanhood may come to its full fruitage and a benediction to humanity everywhere.

And the noble women, God bless their kind and prosper their cause. They go forth in the Master's name and put the men to shame. Pity though it is that they had to almost ask for a place. We have many Marys and many Marthas. They represent service and sacrifice and are willing to do at all times no less than the best.

We are just writing—just writing tonight and thinking and thinking and thinking of good people; of good friends; of wholesome fellowship and the things that make a world better.

Yes, our pastors, noble heroes they are, content with small salaries, brave in service and spirit, giving their best that the gospel shall be preached to the uttermost parts of the world. God raise up their successors, and may the cause never fail for the lack of the spoken word!

Mind, wonderful thing it is. A moment ago we were thinking of the homeland, and now, in our imagination, we are in the foreign field. Our missionaries—God never made better or greater hearts. Those of us at home think not enough and concern ourselves about those who have denied themselves of the comforts and conveniences of a homeland that mankind everywhere might be lifted up into the sunlight of God.

There is no better, no greater, no happier, or more wholesome work and fellowship, than to know, love, and associate with men and women who love the Kingdom and work without ceasing that the Kingdom may come.

Yes, for laws, for protection, for the privilege of work we are grateful tonight. The toils of the day make a tired body, but tonight as we meditate joy springs eternal. It is a good world, after all. It is our privilege to be up and doing, seeking to serve and not to be served.

God takes care of an honest man. Somehow the blessing will return to his life, and when he is honest in honesty's ways, he will be honest with his God.

EDITING AND PUBLISHING A CHURCH PAPER

Talks With Our Readers—No. 2.

DEAR JOHN:—

I understand that you have decided to become a contributor to the Church press, and that you anticipate writing to a number of papers. I want to congratulate you on this decision, because it is a field of great usefulness and influence.

Having had some experience in handling articles, it may be that I can be of some service to you. Of course, your first difficulty will be to get the various papers to accept your manuscript. This is no reflection upon your writings, but is the history of practically every new contributor. If you will observe the following fourteen points you will make your articles so attractive and easy to handle that I feel confident you will have no difficulty in being able to market your productions:

1. Write on both sides of the sheet, and do not number your pages. This will give a special delight to the editor and cause no inconvenience to the printer.

2. When you write an article and desire to send a personal letter also, write your letter on the same sheet with your article. The delight that this will give will be for the editor to copy your article to keep your personal letter from going out to be read by the printers.

3. Paragraphing is going out of date. I would suggest that, regardless of the length of your articles, you give no attention to paragraphs. You can see how much paper you will save in this way.

4. Fill your article so full of quotation marks that the pages will look like they have just recovered from a case of smallpox. Quote everything that you possibly can so as to make your article attractive.

5. When you do find it necessary to quote something, do not take your time to complete your quotation marks. Editors know all quotations and they will have no trouble in distinguishing where the quotation ends and your own words begin.

6. If you are ever called upon to write an article concerning a marriage, always say that "Mr. Blank and Miss Blank were married last Sunday," or whatever day the event occurred. The editor will have no trouble in knowing what Sunday, or other day, you have reference to. You may also remember that the article, when it appears two or three weeks later, will not, in the least, be confusing to any one as to what Sunday you mean by "last Sunday." Then again, this will make such complete history for the bride that she can clip out the article, and paste it in her family Bible. Her children, then, will have no difficulty in knowing just what date their mother was married.

7. Should you have occasion to write up the life and death of some good Brother in your community, give only the day he died. Do not give the month, the date or the year. Be economical and say that "Brother Blank died last Friday night." The editor can certainly supply the month, the day and the year.

8. Do not try to be consistent in your spelling. When you use the word today, always use it in one sentence as a hyphenated word—as, to-day—and in the next sentence write it today. I would also suggest that you write Sunday school, using a small "s" for school, but make sure that you use it again in your article and write School by the use of a capital "S." You might also occasionally hyphenate these two words—Sunday-school, but whenever you do this, make sure that you use the two words without hyphenating.

9. Here is a point that I failed to caution you about in reporting a marriage. Always say that "Mary Blank, the accomplished daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Blank, was married to Mr. Blank" on such and such a date. You can understand that if you say the accomplished daughter, the editor can easily tell whether you mean that Mr. Blank has several daughters and that Mary is the accomplished daughter while the others are not accomplished, or that Mary is Mr. Blank's only daughter. If Mary has any sisters it might be well for you to find out why they are not accomplished also.

10. In the use of pronouns, make sure that you use "I" in one sentence and "we" in the next sentence or paragraph. Here again, the editor will easily understand that you are astride the fence and it will not take him more than one hour to get you on one or the other side.

11. If it is convenient for you to do so, write your articles on a typewriter, but make the lines single-space so that if the editor desires to make any corrections he will have ample room between the lines.

12. Do not put a head-line to any of your articles, and begin the first line about one-thirty-second of an inch from the top of the page. By so doing the editor can select a heading himself and write it on a separate piece of paper and pin it to your article.

13. If you should happen to make a mistake some time and accompany your article by a letter, do not sign the article and the letter too. If you sign the letter do not be extravagant enough with your pen to put the same name to the article. The editor has nothing else to do but notice this and put your name to the article before it is packed away with other articles.

14. Any time that you are short on room at the close of your manuscript, your pencil needing trimming, or your fountain pen run dry, do not sign any name to your contribution. The editor can distinguish your product from any other, and hence will know who sent it.

Next week I will write you on another phase of the work. In the meantime, count on my co-operation, and believe me to be,

Cordially yours,

C. B. RIDDLE.

A man does not necessarily have to be poor to be religious.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part XV.

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.
Field Secretary for Missions

THURSDAY a. m., September 29.—I am beginning to feel at home in Porto Rico, so much so that I woke up at 3 o'clock this morning, a custom I have fallen into at home. But a shower, a shave, a newly-laundered Palm Beach, and a wholesome breakfast by 8 o'clock made me forget my debts and forgive my debtors to start the day with. Good Mrs. Barrett, Martin, Minton and myself in the Ford got an early start for Salinas, for we are to spend the day visiting dear Miss Williams and the workers at Salinas. Juan Romero joins us at Arus. Juan is our pastor at Arus and in the adjacent field. He is a good fellow and wishes more education for further service.

In the road near Hauca our Ford stopped and refused to go another inch. It would not be twisted nor coaxed into further momentum. Finally Martin, who was acting chauffeur, makes the startling discovery that there is no gas in the tank. Herein Henry differs from our soldiers in the recent war. They would not go forward if they were gassed and Ford will not go unless he is gassed. We are helpless, till by good fortune a Haynes touring car comes dashing by. We jump into the road and bring the tourists to a stop. There were three men of swarthy complexion in the Haynes, and two well dressed, nice looking white women,—the wives, no doubt, of two of the men, while the third man is the chauffeur of the party. They untank their car, give us the gas needed, jabber away at each other pleasantly, and refuse any pay for emptying the needed gas into our tank—which reminds me to put it here and now in my diary that Porto Ricans are kind and genteel and courteous in a very marked manner. This trait of the Latin nature persists, and no doubt will as long as any of their tribe or type remain on the earth.

We arrived happily at Miss Williams' home in Salinas at 11:45, and found that dear woman radiant with smiles and joy at receiving us. Barrett arrives by rail and other workers come in until there is quite a house-party of us. Miss Williams is not easily perturbed in the matter of hospitality, and greatly encourages us all with the declaration that an experienced man and two good women, acting as cooks today, are preparing dinner for us. Meanwhile we buy five gallons of gas for $2.20 and take in the town. Our pastor here is Reverend Sandoval, a man of experience and a family of seven. We have a very good church building here, neat, ample, and happily situated in the heart of the place. Salinas has some nice residences, a good school building, a moving picture house, a beautiful plaza, a Catholic church, and 1,800 people. Ours is the only Protestant church or regular preaching place for miles around, and unless we evangelize these people they will never be evangelized. We are their only hope; and they are dying by the hundreds and thousands without Christ and without hope while they wait for us Christians to bring them the story of our Christ. I am wondering today while I view this town and people why the people called Christians do their missionary work with such a stinted hand, and why so few of our number offer themselves to go out on the firing line to do and save the unsaved for our Christ and His Church. Here at Salinas is the place where Rev. T. E. White labored and wrought so faithfully many years ago, till ill health and threatened death drove him back home. And though his work and field here were so very inviting, needy and promising, no one has ever been found to come in and fill up the ranks so depleted by his falling out.

Before Miss Williams announces lunch we drive out to Sabana Llams, a village five miles north of Salinas. We have a preaching place here in a rented hall which seats about twenty-five people. Brother Sandoval preaches here every Thursday night and has an average of twenty to hear him. He pays $4.00 a month rent for the hall. Besides seating twenty-five people uncomfortably, it will easily accommodate a million or so mosquitoes and a few frogs. I should call this preaching under difficulties, or rather in unpleasant company; but it is the way in Porto Rico, and the people seem not to mind it. I have learned that human nature is very elastic and can adapt itself to almost any condition. I learn from Brother Sandoval that he was twenty-five years old when converted. His own mother told him stories about Moses which gripped him as a child. He was converted under the preaching of a native Porto Rican who was in the employ of the Christian Missionary Alliance. He was trained in a Jesuit seminary to be a Catholic priest. Becoming converted, he joined a church of the Christian Missionary Alliance and preached in that Church fourteen years. He joined us Christians five years ago, and has been preaching in our Church ever since, having been our pastor at Salinas ever since he has been with us. He preaches at Salinas Sunday morning and usually has about thirty to hear him. At 1 p. m. on Sundays he preaches on the Playa (down on the beach) in a rented hall which costs $3.00 a month. He has an attendance here of thirty-four. Sunday nights he preaches at Salinas again and has an average of twenty-six. Monday nights he holds evangelistic services at La Playa. Tuesday night he has prayer-meeting at Salinas. Wednesday night he preaches at La Marea, about five miles southeast of Salinas, and has an average of thirty-four to hear him. Sabana Llama Thursday night. Friday night he meets with his Christian Endeavor Society in Salinas and has twenty-four members. He gives Saturdays to visiting and in preparation for Sunday. He uses Miss Williams' horse and buggy, but needs and must have a better one for his own use if he is to keep up the work. There are several points in his territory at which he should be having preaching, but cannot do so from lack of horse and buggy or car to travel on.

We were back for Miss Williams' luncheon at 1 p. m. There were two tables of us, covers having been laid for fourteen. At table No. 1 were Rev. W. P. Minton, Rev. W. H. Martin, Pedro Lind, Pedro Roman, Juan R. Romero, Celedonia Riquez and Rev. T. Aquino Ojeda. At table No. 2 were Rev. Don Rainon Sandoval, Mrs. Eva O. Barrett, J. O. Atkinson, Dona Delfino Zayas, Christiano Martiney, Ricardo Martiney and Rev. D. P. Barrett.

Miss Williams, like Martha when her Lord came to visit her once, served, and did so with grace and charm of manner that no rebuke was given. And here is what she served: La Chon (which, interpreted into good English, simply means a pig roasted whole); Arroy; Habitchuela (a long word for dried beans); Papas (not the plural of papa, but the Spanish for Irish potatoes); Armarila; Batnrta (sweet potatoes); Acetuna (olives); Pan (not a vessel to cook in, but the staff of life—bread); Meton; Le Chosa (preserved fruit or dear dulce); glorious Porto Rican coffee. Now fourteen hungry missionaries did justice to this ample lay-out, and rejoiced that we were missionaries, for the time being, anyhow. It was indeed a pleasant dinner party. No wonder Miss Williams wins Porto Ricans. Her kindly manner and cordial hospitality would win a Hottentot or a Timbuctu cannibal. I borrow some money of Minton and purchase two handkerchiefs for $1.80 which her girls have hemstitched or something, and four strings of beads for $4.00 which the workers in her school have made and strung. If my wife and three other friends in the States knew I was broke and was borrowing the money to buy these trinkets with they would appreciate my generosity. I wonder why generosity seems more generous when it is done on borrowed capital!

After lunch Minto takes a kodak of the whole group, and it should look good after such a hearty repast.

We then hold a conference of all our workers. This was interesting. Reports were made by all our workers. Barrett asked, first, for support of the present kindergarten work at Ponce; and second, for preparation of another teacher. He has a girl in mind who could be trained at no great cost for good service.

Ojeda for Santa Isabel said the very greatest need was a building, and all present, and those absent, heartily agreed. He needed, secondly, a horse or car or some means of travel to and from the churehes he was serving outside of Santa Isabel.

Romero, for Arus, needed his building repaired and painted at a cost of at least $35.00. He has three preaching places and needs a horse and buggy.

Sandoval, for Salinas, needs most now a horse and buggy to reach his outlying stations. Another worker, a man, is needed, to keep him in the field, as it is larger than he can cover in any week. We own the house in which he lives, and this needs repairs to the extent of about $350.00.

But all pastors and workers attending the conference say they are willing to lay aside all their pressing needs and make any reasonable sacrifice for the sake of getting a church building at Santa Isabel. And here is the most pressing single need of our Porto Rican work at present. Minton asked the pastors and native workers if they were willing to put on a campaign and help raise some funds for the Santa Isabel building, and all agreed that they were willing and would do so.

Miss Williams lives in a comfortable, neat and beautiful house, large enough to house both her and her school of needle and industrial workers and kindergarten class. It costs her $30.00 a month rent, but is worth it. She lives alone, but is unafraid and feels perfectly secure. The children whom she teaches and works with are fond of her and she is of them. She is doing good work and is perfectly devoted to it. She says she plans to spend the rest of her days and strength here and never expects to get back to the States again. She is literally laying down her life for her friends here, and God is owning and crowning her efforts with success. The entire afternoon was spent in conference.

At 7:30 there were services at the church, and fifty-five people were present. The pastor conducted the opening service and Rev. Ojeda led in prayer. On the ground that the best is reserved for the last, Minton made me speak first. Barrett interpreted. I relate my experience in becoming converted and turning from the old life. Martin greeted the people in their native tongue and made them happy. Minton lived up to his reputation and thrilled his audience in relating his experience in becoming a Christian. Most of those present had become Christians under the ministry of Rev. T. E. White, and they revere his name, and will as long as they live. Eternity only can reveal what a power for righteousness White was during the years he remained here. Christians in the States should pray that the Lord will send here a successor to T. E. White. We asked tonight how many of the audience were actually converted under White's preaching, and nearly a fifth of the audience rose; and they are now the pillars and stay of the church. We Christians have a good house of worship here, plastered, seated with comfortable chairs, and in every way ample and sufficient. The service closed at 9 o'clock, and by 10:45 we were in Ponce again, safe, tired, and happy. My last thought tonight is that we have some faithful workers in Porto Rico who deserve far more help and recruits than we of the States are giving, and that Miss Williams is royal in hospitality and happy in her home as she seeks to serve. (To be continued.)

A "DIARY" CORRECTION

Mrs. Amy Ruse Snyder, whose snug home amid honey bees, a thousand fragrant flowers, and myriads of rich coloring I visited in Porto Rico, is good enough to write me a personal letter calling attention to an error which I am happy to correct. My Diary made me say that during the war honey sold for $2.00 the pound, but now at thirty-five cents. It should have made me say per gallon, instead of per pound, which gallon, by the way, contains twelve pounds of the sweet nectar. It was stupid in my Diary to say pounds when it meant gallons, for that made Mr. and Mrs. Snyder seem like highway profiteers. I learn from Mrs. Snyder's letter that her husband is still in the industry and they are to return to Porto Rico on the Sagua February 23. Bon voyage, good friends, as you seek again your snug home and happiness and honey.—J. O. A.

ELON LETTER

PRAYER is as natural to the Christian life as breathing is to the physical man. There is nothing mysterious about prayer. It is the soul's native tongue. God is our loving heavenly-Father. We are His children. Prayer is how we communicate with Him and He with us. It is the language of the Spirit.

We are to pray without ceasing. That is to say, we are to live always conscious that God is present in all our experience, and to order our life consonantly with the obligations of that Presence. Prayer is not a matter of times or places or bodily attitudes. It is not even a matter of words. It is the perpetual attitude of the life.

It is well, however, to set aside certain times for the concentrated practice of this precious privilege of our kinship with God—certain times when we give ourselves wholly to communion with Him. There are certain places, too, that suggest the same practice for groups of His children—the Church, for instance, the dining table of the Christian home at meal time, the social party of believers, occasions these of social prayer, when we concentrate with our brothers and sisters in Christ on communion with our Father.

The proper attitude of the body in prayer is not prescribed. The Jews prayed standing. The Mohammedans pray lying prone on the ground. Some Christians prefer to kneel, others merely to bow. Jesus Himself prayed at times with His eyes open, as at the tomb of Lazarus. It is not a matter of the body's position, but of the spirit's attitude—that makes one prayer helpful and another a mockery. We might even conclude from the parable of the Publican and Pharisee that we should pray standing, with eyes cast down, and beating our breast, if we expect our prayers to be heard. The Publican was justified, however, not for the manner of his petition, but for the spirit of it. His bodily attitude was wholly incidental. I heard a beautiful prayer yesterday from a man lying flat on his back. I frequently pray that way.

Prayer is not a matter of words. In the silent meditation, experience teaches, the soul often finds God precious, often perceives things that cannot be uttered. In moments of intense application to duty God speaks to the spirit and marvelous energies are released. So are we able to pray without ceasing. So are miracles wrought daily in the release of God's infinite energy incarnate in us.

Prayers do not need to be long or loud or eloquent or punctuated with the frequent repetition of God's name. Public prayers are often long declamations, or loud protestations, or vain repetitions. The injection at every intake of breath of some name for God is evidently suggestion that the one praying is not conscious that God is present, nearer to us than breathing, and so He must be constantly addressed by name to hold His attention. Eloquent prayers are sometimes the spontaneous outpouring of the heart in the presence of God. If so, well and good, but conscious striving after finery of speech, the false garnish of mere verbiage, must be as offensive to our Father as it is to our own taste.

Let us pray as naturally as we converse with a friend we love and who loves us, a friend who has all we can ever need and is anxious to satisfy our every aspiration. Such a friend is our loving heavenly Father. The Christian is privileged to enjoy the constant fellowship, companionship, and sustaining grace of this Friend through the exercise of prayer without ceasing. How rich the privilege of prayer is! How rich its exercise makes our poor lives, how rich and invincible for God!

CLOTHES-LINES

I WAS very much interested in Dr. W. W. Staley's clothes-line article. The more I read the more I wondered if Dr. Staley had ever attempted the family wash. I have so long associated Dr. Staley with long black coats and high black hats that I find it difficult to picture him over the steaming, sudding tubs, or out by the line in a high wind with an obdurate wet sheet.

The background of the clothes-line is the wash-tub, and not very far back, either; and it takes none other than a doctor of divinity to become sentimental about it. Imagine a wash-woman indulging in sentiment over her tubs, or your wife, for that matter, on a Monday morning. Imagine them saying, "There is a deal of heart in these tubs and that line, I tell you. Why, if steam should relieve me of this, the health and the strength of the nation would fail." I knew a wash-woman who used to sing, with a sigh of resignation, "Jesus, I my cross have taken." She was thinking of her tubs. I knew a young wife who over the tubs became apoplectic and almost profane. But Doctor Staley grows sentimental.

Now, I have washed clothes. I have bent over the tub and scrubbed and rubbed, and then I have taken the products of my industry, all white after their ablation, to the clothes-line. I will have to admit I grew a bit proud when I saw the other fellow's out there on the line. But pride is not sentiment. Once I not only had to wash off the soil, but I had to wash out a million or less cooties and their eggs. There was sentiment in that. I will have to admit it—high sentiment. It was indeed pitiful to see that wash of mine on the line, with dead cooties, their feet in the air, all over them for the wind to blow off. But I have a confession. When I did not have to do it any more I was not a bit sad. I was willing to let steam, or most anything else, for that matter, do it.

On the other hand, if Doctor Staley is sure wash-tubs and clothes-lines will make a Carey, or a Spurgeon, or a Cromwell, or a Lincoln, or a Wellons, or even a Staley out of my brand-new son, I will order my wife to the tubs and lines at once. It is rather lamentable, with all this greatness wrapped up in tubs and lines, to think of us sending our wash out week after week.

Doctor Staley has far more experience than I will ever have, but even Solomon made mistakes. Mother did not do it for love, but because if mother did not do it it would not be done—and mother believed in clean clothes as much as in clean faces, clean ears, and clean hands. I know a great many excellent mothers who are not telephoning for the laundries or for Mary to bring the soiled clothes back for them to wash.

It is remarkable how doctors of divinity differ. Not only is it so of theology but of so commonplace a matter as washing clothes. I know a certain degreed seminary graduate who felt it would be a humiliation for him to even run a washer for his wife. He felt a certain group of ministers demeaned themselves by so spending their Monday mornings. What a difference of divinity!

For my part I can not grow sentimental over these tubs and lines. I can not feel that the welfare of the nation is sudded up in the one and tied up in the other. I have honestly tried to do so, but to no avail. But I can see this:

As a Christian people we are challenged by our industrial development. Every device that goes to make life easier, that goes to lessen the sum of labor, challenges us. We are challenged to herald a Gospel and a morality that will satisfy and govern this new order of things. My idea is to put some heart in the factories, the skyscrapers, the halls of business, and the halls of pleasure.

SUFFOLK LETTER

HVERY unique historic event occurred in Richmond, Virginia, on February 1, 1922. It was the day set for the inauguration of Governor E. Lee Trinkle, and plans had been laid for a great parade; and the ceremonies were to be observed and the oath of office administered by Judge Joseph L. Kelly, President of the Supreme Court of Appeals. An eighteen-inch snow prevented the parade and the Portico inauguration; but the Hall of Delegates, with the joint assembly of the Senate and House, and an overflow audience, packed the Chamber. The Governor made a very exhaustive address which won great applause and very favorable comment by the press. His sentences on law enforcement of the eighteenth amendment elicited vigorous and prolonged applause. As the whole State was represented in the audience by Legislature and visiting men and women, one would take it that Virginia is strong for prohibition in spite of loose propaganda to the contrary through the press and individuals; and Governor Trinkle promises enforcement of law.

At the same time, and under the same circumstances, Senator Junius Edgar West, of Suffolk, took the oath of office as Lieutenant-Governor, administered by his brother, Judge Jesse F. West, who, just three hours before that time, in the Supreme Court room, had taken the oath of office as a member of the Supreme Court of Appeals. The unique event was that at 9 o'clock Judge Jesse F. West became a member of the Supreme Court of Virginia, and then administered the oath of office at noon to his own brother, Junius E. West, as Lieutenant-Governor of the State. Such a thing as this has never occurred before in the history of Virginia, and may never occur again. But this is not all. Both of these men were born in Sussex County, and the following State officials are all from that county and from Waverly Magisterial District: J. E. West, Lieutenant-Governor; J. F. West, Supreme Court Judge; John W. West, Jr., nephew, Chief Engineer of the Corporation Commission; F. B. Richardson, Chief Bank Examiner, and Marvin L. Gray, a member of Governor Trinkle's staff. All of them are members of the Christian Church, and nearly all of them came from Spring Hill, a country Christian church. There is no institution of the same size in numbers and wealth, as potent in civil society as the country church. It is the heart of character, the head of progress, the hope of the nation. It is the quarry from which comes the granite of the State. It is the fountain from which flows the stream of virtue to turn the wheels of progress. The city churches are manned largely from the country church. Spring Hill, Sussex County, and Waverly District, may well feel proud of these men, for they are all Christian men. More and more, the Government, in all its branches, is being conducted by men who fear God. The last twenty-five years have wrought great changes in the character of men who fill official position; and the temperance movement, which has culminated in national prohibition, crystalized in the Eighteenth Amendment, has done very much to put Christian men in office; and if The Literary Digest of this week is to be trusted in what it gathers from the press of the nation, prohibition is doing wonders already to reduce crime and improve American citizenship. Do not credit the bluff of wets nor the fear of dries. Other laws are violated as much as temperance laws; but there is not so much said about it. Exaggeration characterizes much of the talk on this subject of temperance which crosses the path of so many old appetites; but a new generation is coming that will care for none of these things.

W. W. STALEY.

I WILL PRAY FOR YOU

During the winter I am so much troubled with asthma and other causes that I cannot get out of the house. Yet I am anxious to work for the Lord even then.

It is my pleasure always to be doing something for my Master. I have been used the past two years especially in praying for my friends. No matter what your trouble is, whether mental or physical, I will pray with you if you come to see me or for you if you will send me your name and address and the nature of your burden. Also tell me your age.

I delight to bear up friends to the Lord in prayer. Call on me if you need help. Last week I prayed for two dear friends, though sick in bed myself. I enjoyed it.

A LETTER AND AN ARTICLE

By REV. H. SHELTON SMITH

Brother Smith makes a suggestion worth while, and we welcome his and all other such articles.
—Editor.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: It has occurred to me that we who are outside the reach of our churches, attending seminaries and universities, might do well to help our fellow pastors and Christian workers who are engaged in their local fields and without our privileges. We hear some of the finest addresses and wish that our friends might hear them and catch the spirit such as our Church leaders need.

But so far, we have been largely "hearers only," content to drink in, sponge-like, the inspirational ideas of these modern seers of God. Therefore, I propose that students who are absent from our churches preparing for Christian service of any kind send in from time to time brief synopses of first-class addresses or sermons which in their minds are worth passing along to others who cannot share their opportunities. These need not be long, but merely stating the principal ideas. In this way THE CHRISTIAN SUN would be a means of extending the good things we enjoy. Would you open the columns of THE SUN for such an exchange of thought? If so, I hereby begin by writing briefly the main points of an address given at Yale recently by Prof. George A. Coe, of Columbia University, on "The Pulpit as Educator."

(Enclosure)

"THE PULPIT AS EDUCATOR"

AMONG the increasingly multiplying offices of the minister that of "educator" is certainly one of his primary duties. The fact that our time is heir to a host of books and periodicals read by enlarging numbers makes it even more necessary that the minister should act as an interpreter and guide of progressing thought. But granting that the minister's duty is that of planning a definite, systematic, and developing educational program, the main question is, How can he do it?

The following principles should guide him in his work as preacher and educator:

FIRST: His sermons should preserve continuity of content. We are in danger of lapsing into a "garrulous pulpit" in which ministers talk sporadically about everything that comes along whenever they please, in season or out of season. Our day demands sermons which contain light as well as heat, and in an order suitable to the growing needs of the parish. Every minister should have, therefore, a well-balanced program which embraces every need of his church, and his sermons should fit into this plan in such a way as to progressively drive home the fundamental objectives of his "church year." Review your whole situation in the light of a thorough community survey; define your aims as minister-educator; and then through timely, vital messages, enlist your whole membership's strength in realizing your vision.

SECOND: The minister should bridge the modern gap which exists in the minds of not a few members between "Ideas" and "Action." We are in too great a measure victims of "The Church-Goer's Illusion." The minister works all the week to bring into the pulpit a "stirring message." His members hear it with mental relish and apparent interest. The minister says: "We ought to have a League of Nations; our politics are out of joint; the city's officials are traitors to their trust; our amusements are wrong; or the Church is losing ground." "Yes," say his complacent listeners, "our minister is right, he certainly preaches the truth; I believe in him and his gospel, and we ought to establish the new order of things." But during the coming week nothing is done; these same folks sit in their accustomed pews the next Sunday to agree mentally with everything the minister says, and to be "re-charged with good feeling," which, alas, are too much like "the morning clouds which the wind driveth away." Our people are full of doctrines and platitudes; they are drunk with evanescent dream of what the world, the social order, ought to be; they ought to be set to work! Church members are not receptacles to get and to keep; they are human channels through which the minister's ideas must take on flesh and blood. The sermon is not something to be heard simply; it is a call to "the colors," and fruitless is the message that does nothing more than innoculate its hearers against a vigorous attempt to eradicate the wrong.

THIRD: The minister's function is not that of passing down from generation to generation "the faith once for all delivered to the saints"; his duty is to provoke his members to think out solutions of modern problems, to stimulate them to frame their own creeds, and to work out their own salvation. Unassimilated doctrines, fossilized by centuries, or untenable dogmas of whatever variety, fail to generate zealous and loyal service. The minister must not be afraid of the truth; there is freedom and progress in the completest sense only when we follow the gleam of truth. The minister should provoke problems in the minds of his people and encourage them to accept the personal responsibility for making their own decisions.

THE DYER ANTI-LYNCHING BILL

The Dyer Anti-Lynching Bill has passed the House by a vote of 230 to 119. The bill provides life imprisonment or lesser penalties for persons who participate in lynchings and for state, county and municipal officials who fail through negligence to prevent them. The measure also stipulates that the county in which mobs form or kill any one shall forfeit $10,000 to the family of the victim.

A QUESTION

If those who read the Church press contribute most to Church enterprises, would it pay to send The Christian Sun into every home of our membership?

THE BABY HOME WARM AND COMFORTABLE

Last fall when the weather began to get cold we saw at once that one of our great needs for the winter would be a heating plant for the "Baby Home," as it was impossible to keep the thirty little children warm and comfortable around the fireplace.

We wrote to several of our good friends, and among the number Mr. James N. Williamson, Jr., formerly of Burlington, N. C., now of Deland, Florida. Mr. Williamson suggested that he would donate one-half of the cost, provided I could get one of his friends to donate the other half; but we were not able to interest his friend enough to make so large a contribution. But the 20th Century Baraca Class of our Suffolk church came to our rescue and subscribed the other thousand; so the heating plant might go in and the children made warm and comfortable. However, Mr. Williamson, after thinking the matter over more thoroughly, decided that he would give the total amount of two thousand dollars and pay for the heating plant in full, and make it as his donation to the work here. The 20th Century Baraca Class very kindly consented for us to use its contribution for the general uses of the Baby Home and give Mr. Williamson the joy of making this splendid contribution to this work.

Our Burlington church, through the efforts of our good friend and Chairman of the Board of Trustees, Mr. W. K. Holt, raised $500.00 to put in concrete floors so the children could have play rooms. When the concrete floors were finished and work had begun on the heating plant, the bitter cold weather struck us hard and held us in its grasp. But the Burlington Hardware Company had faithful boys on the job, and while the snow was almost knee deep, the work went on to completion, and by working in the bitter cold and braving the severe weather, on Saturday, January 28, the furnace was put into service, and now our building is warm and comfortable and the little children happy and content.

Mr. Williamson, though wealthy, does not forget little helpless children who are in need, and his great, sympathetic heart swells with pity for the little needy ones. He will never make a contribution that will be more highly appreciated, and one that will give more service for helpless humanity.

BOOK REVIEW

"THE CHURCH AND THE PRESENT CRISIS"

(By President W. A. Harper, of Elon College)

I have read this latest book from the versatile and facile pen of Doctor Harper with much pleasure. It is vital, vigorous, and vibrant with life, dynamic in thought, modern in interpretation, thought-provoking, stimulating, and inspiring. This volume will appeal strongly to students of the new school of psychology—it does violence to the static type; it inspires the progressive theologian, it sweeps aside a number of theological dogmas; it invites to fuller and richer living, it repudiates like as a closed system; it breathes the larger spirit of humanitarianism, it sweeps aside narrow individualism; it magnifies the brotherhood of the Kingdom, it minimizes the narrowness of sectarianism.

The conception which animates the purpose and program proposed for the modern church is based on the latest and most approved principles of scientific education. Herein the process of religious education is conscious of itself, it has a purpose, a program, and a plan, that will work; and it will enrich the experience of those who try it out. The orthodox may criticize it as being iconoclastic, but those whose souls are vibrant and animated with the living thought of this age, and who look forward with hope and inspiration and prophetic vision for a better day for the Church and the Kingdom, will read it and gain new inspiration to undertake the unfinished task of uniting the Church, evangelizing the race, and saving all mankind.

In all ages poets have sung of the toil and of the toiler. Joy and fellowship are expressed in songs dedicated to the working man. There are plantation songs that are familiar to all of us. Not only have poets paid their tribute to the working man, but orators have, musicians have, artists have. Christ Himself paid tribute to him. The working man is the admiration of the world.

STEWARDSHIP AND TITHING

SOME DISCUSSIONS BY REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

NO BEGGING

We trust the brethren, sisters, and friends, everywhere, who are to help in our present campaign for tithers, will make it clear that this is not a campaign of begging. It is a campaign of education solely, on one of the most vital themes of Scripture. All we ask is that our people of the Christian Church may have the same opportunity to know the Bible and God's will on this matter that other well informed Christians have. This is a campaign of enlightenment and instruction which we believe will bring strength to all our churches and spiritual depth and permanency to all who enter into it. We ask that our congregations, Sunday school classes, Endeavor Societies, and all, shall be informed from the Word of God what the plain teaching there is concerning stewardship and tithing, and then that individuals be urged to read the literature and their Bible as bearing on this matter and act accordingly.

Let us quit impoverishing God's cause by begging and go to supporting God's cause by the way and plan which He has Himself laid down for us.

God's plan for us is always better and wiser than is our own. This campaign is to try to teach God's plan and not our own in financing the affairs of His Kingdom.

TWO SURPRISES

Dr. A. J. Gordon, one of the most consecrated and spiritually minded of all men, thinks that if a Christian is looking for agreeable surprises he or she should try tithing. Read his words: "If any Christian who has never tried tithing will make the experiment, following it through to the end in prosperity and adversity, we predict for him two surprises. First, he will be astonished at the increased amount which by this method he is enabled to give to the Lord, and, secondly, he will be astonished at the increased spiritual and temporal prosperity which the Lord will give to him."

Surely a plan with such promise is worth trying by every Christian—especially since the Bible very plainly teaches that it is God's plan for us.

OUR PASTORS SEEM ANXIOUS

From the replies received, it would seem that our pastors are ready, willing and anxious to have on a real campaign for stewardship and tithing. In answer to a personal letter sent to every pastor in the Southern Convention, replies are coming in of which the three following are typical:

"I am deeply interested in this campaign and wish to assure you that I am willing and ready to co-operate with you in making it a success. To my mind there is nothing that our Church needs quite so much as a tithing and stewardship campaign. It is a note that seems to be dying out in our churches. We must renew the righteousness of God's claim upon our money. We have been engaged in a rivalry of getting. We must have a rivalry of giving."

From another pastor equally interested: "I am, as you know, not able to do much, but you may count on me to do all I can for stewardship and tithing."

And then from another: "I had already been thinking of talking to my people on the subject of tithing. I shall try to do my best with it. You may depend upon me."

Another yet: "As yet I have not received any literature on stewardship and tithing. I can use 50 to 100 copies of anything worth while in my congregations. Now as to my preaching along this line, I feel that I have done some and will do so again. If you or others of your official force can come this way and teach us more on these great topics we will be grateful." The literature referred to was delayed, but has been sent, and is on hand for others who can and will use it now. Then another faithful pastor, who feels for his people in this time of financial depression, writes: "I extend to you a most cordial invitation to be with me at my appointments and present the subject of stewardship and tithing at such time and place as may suit you best." I do not know the best method of procedure. The very approach to the subject of money and giving at this time is difficult. Some of our people are saying that they are unable to pay that which they have already pledged, and it seems that they do not want to hear the matter discussed."

It is doubtful if we have ever faced a time when the doctrine and principle of stewardship and tithing were more needed and more opportune than now. We have passed through an orgie of high making and rapid spending. We are now learning, if we can learn, the necessity of low making and slow spending. In such a time, if we are not ready to hear of God's "better way" for us, and learn His financial plans in our behalf, when will we ever be? If we Christians had been tithing, as God willed we should, we would not now be writhing because of what our wills and ways have brought upon us. The sooner we adopt God's financial plans for us, the richer and happier we shall be. Our pastors know this. Hence their anxiety in this time of need and stress and strain.

We have tried our own self-willed way of financing long enough. Let us try God's will and way for us in this all-important matter.

Brother M. J. Carlton, R. F. D. 6, Raleigh, N. C.: "Will gladly distribute any literature you may send and give my best efforts to show that tithing is the Bible rule for financing the Church. By the way, are non-church members exempt from tithing?" I answer Brother Carlton's question in the negative. God does not exempt any one from His laws and commandments. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse." I see no class exempted there.

THE BULLETIN

TWO LETTERS

During the past week we have received two letters—both from sunny faces, but from different climates. The first letter is from Dr. Daniel Albright Long, and written from Tampa, Florida, under date of January 31. Dr. Long says: "I preached in the First Methodist church at Fort Myers the last time I preached. I am booked to address the Ohio Tourist Club tonight in the Disciples church. I see by the papers, account of the recent snow storm. It was predicted that we would have a killing frost at this place, but it did not come."

Brother Benjamin Franklin Black, Wolfboro, N. H., writes a newsy and appreciative letter of February 1 and says that they are enjoying eight feet of snow with the thermometer reading 43 degrees below zero. Brother Black is liking his new field and has promised to give SUN readers a sketch of his journey there and the work in his new field of labor.

AN EXPLANATION

For some time we have been crowded with "copy" for THE SUN. Our regular weekly departments and weekly letters so nearly fill the paper that we have little room for additional matter. Next week we expect to print every article we have on hand now that is available for publication. These articles will go first and regular matter second. In the meantime, we are endeavoring to make some changes so as to be more accommodating with our limited space.

A CORRECTION

Rev. P. T. Klapp, Elon College, N. C., asks us to correct the error in his report to the North Carolina Conference. The Annual says that Brother Klapp made 25 pastoral visits. He says that he reported 284. We gladly make the correction without tracing the cause to the original source.

The Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., Dr. L. E. Smith, pastor, is now issuing a neat four-page weekly bulletin to the membership.

Dr. Staley tells an interesting story in his "Suffolk Letter" this week. An editorial note on the same subject is crowded out of this issue.

The Methodist Protestant Children's Home, High Point, N. C., is soon to receive $12,000.00 from the estate, by will, from a deceased member of the Methodist Protestant Church.

We have on hand a few copies of "Peloubet's Select Notes" and "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide." Mail your order now.

NAME FOR JUNIOR COLLEGE

The committee on location, charter, grade of work, and name for the school to be established at Wadley, Alabama, wishes to ask any person who has a name to suggest for the school to send the same to the undersigned by February 22. As soon thereafter as possible the name will be decided and announced. The committee, however, reserves the right to reject any or all names submitted, but would greatly appreciate any name anyone has to suggest.

The unemployed are a menace to society, and a poisoned society is dangerous to the growth of the Kingdom through the Church. We must, therefore, as Christian men and women, endeavor to see that our neighbor is employed; that his family is supplied; that his children receive an education, and have something of an equal chance in the world.

There is one cure, and only one, for the world's industrial turmoil, and that cure is the spirit of Jesus revealed in His life and death—the spirit of service, which will lead the strong to share life with the weak and to discover the methods that will ever emancipate the workers from bondage to excessive toil.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON— FEBRUARY 12, 1922

Elisha and the Shunammite Woman.—II Kings 4: 8-37

Golden Text: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour cometh, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live."—John 5:25.

LESSON THOUGHTS:

Life is the gift of God.

Life is mingled joy and sorrow, but the last word is one of hope and cheer.

Faith in God brings victory. Both Elisha and the Shunammite woman exhibit this invincible faith.

"The supplication of a righteous man availeth much in its working."—James 5: 16.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION ACTIVITIES

Better Purposes.—Number 14: 20-24.

DECISION DAY—CONSECRATION MEETING

"Not failure, but low aim, is crime."

What is the purpose of your life? What is the purpose of your Christian Endeavor Society? The success of your life, and the service of your Society, both depend upon the purpose which is the dynamic force in them. Daniel H. Martin once made the following resolution: "I have resolved to talk with God daily before I talk with man; to do my work with sunshine on my face; to be strong in the presence of temptation, alert in the presence of opportunity, open-eared to the call of conscience." This Decision-Consecration Service of your Christian Endeavor Society is a fitting time to thoughtfully consider your life-purpose and the program of your Society, and resolve to take forward steps intent on doing a greater work for the Master. Let your motto be, "In the beginning—God." Be ready to say, "Here am I—send me," to the call for workers. Let "Better Purposes" rule in 1922.

Be Strong

Be strong!

We are not here to play—to dream to drift.

We have hard work to do, and loads to lift.

Shun not the struggle,—face it; 'tis God's gift.

—Maltbie D. Babcock, D. D.

CHRISTIAN EDUCATION ACTIVITIES

There are two great incentives to urge us on to a larger work in the field of religious education. The great need of thousands of boys and girls who are not being touched as yet by the Church or any of its organizations urges us forward. The young people, who are coming to manhood and womanhood without having their spiritual natures awakened and with no personal religious experience to challenge them to enter the Lord's service, are an incentive to a better and more effective work.

The second incentive comes from the young people whom we know and who are doing such a splendid work. Their appreciation for the Church, their loyalty and enthusiasm and their sincere Christianity reveal the great possibilities of work with young people. Their letters tell many an interesting story.

Miss Verua Pinchard, of Roanoke, Alabama, is the secretary of the Christian Endeavor Society at Rock Stand, and also has helped in the work at Mount Zion. In a recent letter she says: "Our Christian Endeavor is just fine; seems as if it gets better every meeting, both at Rock Stand and Mount Zion. I believe Christian Endeavor is one of the best societies for the young people. For instance, before we organized the Society at Mount Zion and Rock Stand, the young people were too timid to lead in prayer or to testify. Now I wish everybody could visit one or both Societies. We do not have any slackers now. After they see what good the Society has done for their friends, they feel nearer their Savior, if they communicate with their Lord every day and every Lord's day. The life of the Society is the good program and singing. If they are given a topic to discuss it is so much easier for them than just to be asked to express their feelings. If our young people are brought up not to be ashamed and afraid to speak of the Lord, not only to their friends but in the church, when they grow older they surely will be glad. I sincerely wish that everyone who does not believe in the Christian Endeavor Society could visit us at Rock Stand." Both of the Societies mentioned are less than one year old, but have already demonstrated their right to live and grow, and are rendering a great service in these communities, to and through the young people. Miss Amie Huey, of Wedowee, Alabama, a member of the Christian Endeavor Society at Noon Day, in a personal letter to the Field Secretary, says: "I would not take anything in the world for our Christian Endeavor Society. I feel that it has helped many of us girls and boys to live closer to God." Mr. Joe French, another charter member of the Noon Day Society, is planning to organize a Society in a nearby church in the near future. And these are only a few of the young people in the Alabama Conference who are working and praying and looking forward to doing much for God and the Christian Church.

An active committee in the Georgia-Alabama Conference, in co-operation with the Conference President, Rev. R. F. Brown, is laying plans for a Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention to be held in the month of April. Rev. C. W. Hanson, pastor of the La Grange church in this Conference, writes of the organization of a teacher-training class with twenty-nine members in his church. He also says that the Junior Endeavor Society is doing a good work, and the membership has increased to twenty-seven. Mr. W. M. Crowder, the efficient superintendent of the East La Grange Sunday school, reports the election of Mr. W. L. Jarriell as missionary superintendent of that school. This school is planning other forward work for the future.

A recent letter from Mr. R. O. Rothgeb, of the church at Leaksville, Virginia, of which Rev. R. P. Crumpler is the pastor, reports progress in Christian Endeavor and Sunday school. He says: "The Christian Endeavor meetings are usually interesting and inspiring, and our aim is always to have something on the program that will elevate the minds of the young and inspire them to set higher ideals. The method of having each member make out the programs in rotation has proven very effective in maintaining interest. In our Teacher-Training Class we have started over the book now for the second time by way of review, and each pupil in the class in rotation teaches a lesson, and the method they use and the manner in which they teach is sufficient evidence that the work has been a success." This is just a sample of the good work the young people at Leaks-ville are doing.

As we read over these letters, and many more like them, we wish that every church we have might become thoroughly aroused to the value of its young people; that every young person whom our Christian churches might reach could be inspired with the vision and filled with the consecrated Christian enthusiasm of these young people. May no church be content with a program which does not include an earnest effort to win and train all of its youth for Christ.

BOARD OF SUPERANNUATION MEETS

The Board of Superannuation created and elected at the last session of the Southern Christian Convention met in its second annual session at Raleigh, N. C., Wednesday p. m., January 25, all members being present except Brother W. K. Holt, who was detained by a pressing business engagement. Rev. W. M. Jay, Secretary, Holland, Virginia, led in prayer and read the proceedings of last meeting, calling attention to several items of unfinished business. The Board last session recommended that all Conferencees of the Convention make an apportionment for the superannuated fund on a basis of five cents per church member, provided no Conference be requested to apportion not less than a total of $100.00. It was reported that all our Conferences in practice adopted or had already operative this request.

It was reported that the total appropriations to beneficiaries the past year was $1,400.00. The line the Board seeks to follow in its appropriations was that laid down by the Convention, as follows:

That at the age of seventy, or earlier in case of disability, to be determined in each case by the Board, all ministers who have been actively engaged in the ministry for twenty years next preceding thereto shall receive annuities from this fund as follows:

(a) Single ministers, $200 per year.

(b) Married ministers, $300 per year.

(c) Widows, $200 a year during their widowhood and membership in the Christian Church; dependents to be provided for in each case by the Board.

While the income thus far has not allowed the Board to reach this maximum, it forms the basis of appropriation, and the allowance in each case approximates the amounts named.

For example, $250.00 was the highest amount we were able to appropriate to a married minister, not from choice, but because of limitation of funds. Widows with dependent children received $200, but those without dependents only $150 each. The total amount appropriated at this session for 1922 was $1,600.00. While this sum is not large, it at least indicates the direction in which the Convention is working, and shows to these faithful and beloved ones that the Church for which they have lived, labored and suffered is not forgetful of them in the years of enforced inactivity when their own earning capacity is either taken away or at a minimum.

Every member of the Board rejoices beyond words that the day has at last come in our Southern Convention when every minister who has served his Church long and loyally is remembered with appreciation and gratitude in his declining years, and no widows of husbands who gave themselves solely to the ministry are forgote in their widowhood. A full report of all beneficiaries and amounts appropriated will be made to the Convention.

CHURCH NEWS

BURLINGTON

We have been silent for some time as to the work of this pastorate, but we trust our silence has not been due to inactivity in the church. The fact is that our silence has been due to activity rather than inactivity, for our time is all engaged in the endeavor to build up the work in broadening its relation to the great enterprises of the Kingdom.

Early in the month of November we held a series of special evangelistic services in the church. The pastor did the preaching throughout these meetings. Rev. C. A. McDaniel, at that time of Winchester, Va., was with us as director of the music. The services were well attended, and a deep spiritual interest seemed to prevail over the hearts of those who came. Many renewed themselves in a definite reconsecration to Christ. Three members were added to the church.

Special services were held on Thanksgiving Day, the exercises consisting of music appropriate to the occasion, Scripture reading and prayer, and two or three short addresses. An offering for the Christian Orphanage was received, the total offering amounting to $634.00.

On Christmas night a "White Gifts for the King" program was rendered in the main auditorium of the church to a very large audience that seemed to appreciate the exercises. On Monday night following, one of our Sunday school classes gave a pageant, after which each member of the school received a "treat," and all visitors present were invited to partake of the refreshments that had been provided for them. The Christmas offering for the Orphanage amounted to approximately $175.00.

The work of the new year has started in a very encouraging way. At the close of the morning service on the first day of the year two members were received into the church. Others are expected to unite with us at an early date.

All departments of our church are pretty thoroughly organized, and we have reason to feel that a period of wholesome progress lies just ahead. To that end we are praying earnestly and working faithfully.

G. O. LANKFORD, Pastor.

WAVERLY, VIRGINIA

On the night of January 11, this being the birthday of the pastor of Waverly, Virginia, Christian church, the good people of that church gave him and his family a surprise donation party. On entering our home, after prayer-meeting we found it alive with people, and our dining room table packed with everything good to eat. There was sugar, hams, canned goods of all kinds, lard, flour, beef, coffee, dried apples, butter, eggs, oranges, cake, cereals of many kinds, sausage, sweet potatoes, turnips, corn, meal, beans, peanuts, sheets, towels, and a lovely linen table cloth with a dozen napkins to match. And that our table should be complete in its setting, the climax came in an additional gift of a beautiful set of silver knives and forks. This was indeed a most valuable addition to our tableware, and one for which we had wished many times.

A most enjoyable hour was spent by pastor and people, and many tears were co-mingled as we tried to express the feeling of gratitude in our hearts for such a lovely act at the beginning of our tenth year of service.

Scarcely had we found room for all the good things of this first donation party when another came. On Tuesday, January 24, Deacon J. J. Faison and wife, representing Spring Hill Christian church and community, drove to our back door and unloaded the contents of their automobile on our kitchen table. There was sugar, three hams, butter, eggs, canned goods of many kinds, pickles, flour, sausage, potatoes, chicken, coffee, collards, oranges and jelly.

It is good to dwell among such a warm-hearted and liberal people, and such an abundance of good things will be in our home many days to remind us of the sweet spirit which has prompted all this kindness. We extend to one and all our most sincere appreciation and pray God's blessing upon them.

REV. AND MRS. J. L. FOSTER.

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES AT ELON COLLEGE

The annual evangelistic services were held at Elon College the week following the third Sunday in January. Dr. G. O. Lankford, of Burlington, N. C., was the preacher, and the music was furnished by Prof. E. M. Betts, organist, and the church choir. The preaching was brief, clear, and forceful. The old stately and worshipful hymns, some of which have stood the test of ages, were used. All services were well attended, and a spirit of interest and reverence prevailed. There were some ten or more professions, and two names have been presented for membership in the local church. The most striking thing about these services was the inspiration on the part of our consecrated young people to carry on the evangelistic work by continuous and systematic personal effort.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

On Friday, January 27, 1922, it was my privilege to attend, as a lay member of our church, a Conference on Evangelism conducted by Dr. Chas. L. Goodell, in the First Congregational church, for the Washington Federation of Churches. One of the members of Dr. Goodell's party, which has been visiting a number of the larger Federations throughout the country in the interest of evangelism, is Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, pastor of the Christian church at Dover, Delaware. Dr. Helfenstein delivered one of the principal addresses of the conference, and his excellent style made a profound impression upon the leading clergy men and laymen of the national capitol. As for myself, I cannot help feeling a deeper sense of pride in the Christian Church because of having listened to this address, and because of the fact that the Church has in it such leaders as Dr. Helfenstein with a vision of the imperative need for world-wide personal evangelism.

Mrs. Helfenstein accompanied her husband on the trip to this city.

HOLLAND, VIRGINIA, NEWS

The new pastor, Rev. James H. Lightbourne, arrived upon the field for the first Sunday of October.

On an early October evening a combination pounding and reception was held. Addresses of welcome and of counsel were made by Rev. L. F. Paulette, of the Baptist church; Rev. W. M. Jay, of our own Holy Neck church, and Mr. I. A. Luke, a deacon of the local church. A response was then in order, and the pastor replied in the same cordial, facetious, and brotherly vein as characterized the addresses of welcome. Music was furnished by the Christian church orchestra of Suffolk, with Mrs. I. W. Johnson at the piano. A program of musical numbers and recitations was rendered, and refreshments were served. The affair was largely attended, the pounding was evidently participated in by all, and a fine spirit prevailed.

The Holland delegation to the Eastern Virginia Conference returned with a splendid impression of Dover, of Delaware hospitality, of Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, and of the Dover church. It may be vision, or it may be visionary, but we hope to entertain a large delegation from Dover at Holland in 1923.

A two weeks' revival was held during November. Mr. Sam Davis, of Norfolk, who has endeared himself to so many of our Southern Convention churches by his artistry, was with us. We did not have either the attendance or the decisions anticipated, but we feel that a good work was done in the church. Four were received into our fellowship.

During the holidays we took part in a community Christmas celebration. A tree, such a tree as must have inspired Joyce Kilmer to write his beautiful poem, "Trees," was erected at the school ground and illuminated with vari-colored bulbs, a cross topping it all. After a program of Christmas carols and appropriate addresses, Santa Claus took a position beneath the tree, and, led by the students of the public school, all brought to him their gifts of food and clothing.

On Christmas night a son was born to Rev. and Mrs. Lightbourne. He, too, is James H. Lightbourne, and it is the hope of his parents that he will some day be ordained an elder in the Christian Church.

Our young men are developing as singers, and besides singing at the Sunday services, they even favor us at the prayer-meeting.

Everyone present at the prayer-service January 18 promised to work for a larger attendance for the next week's service. The night was such, being both cold and blustery, as to dishearten whatever response there might have been from the country, yet even so the attendance went up from thirty-eight to sixty-nine.

Last Sunday evening our school principal, Mr. White, lead the Christian Endeavor. The lower auditorium was practically filled, and a most interesting program was rendered. Two high school students debated, "The dishonest business man never succeeds," and both affirmative and negative did well.

On Wednesday afternoon, January 25, the building committee of the church contracted with Mr. E. C. Smith, of Franklin, Va., for a parsonage. It is to be built as soon as the weather will permit, on the church ground, north side, and is to have seven rooms and bath, running water, electric lights, and hot-water heat. It will be completed some time in June.

We have just secured Miss Laura Smith Holland to assist our church Captain, Mr. W. J. Holland, with the Men and Millions collections. It is not our purpose to be either officious or exacting, but we are going to give our membership an opportunity to do what they can.

The pastor plans for his pulpit work these approaching Lenten weeks, sermons upon tithing, the meaning of church membership, and the outlook for the local church. He also plans a win-one campaign—winning to church attendance, mid-week attendance, home devotions, tithing, and the unsaved to Christ.

CALLED HOME

TATE.—Miss Effie Tate departed this life on December 24, 1921, at the age of fifty-one years. Her death was very sudden. She was apparently well at 10 o'clock on the night of the 23rd when she retired, but the end came during the night, so far as the family knows, without a struggle. A good woman has gone. May she rest in peace. Funeral by the writer.

G. O. LANKFORD.

ISLEY.—Robert Lee, son of P. W. and Lydia Isley, was born January 21, 1907, and died January 2, 1922, aged fourteen years, eleven months and eleven days, after a life spent in sickness, scarcely knowing a well day. But through it all Lee was an unusual child, being diminutive in physical size, though wonderfully large and sweet in character, which caused him to be loved above the average child. Everything was done that medical skill could afford and loving hands could render, but to no avail, for God saw fit to remove him from the home, community and friends, after having won his way to the hearts of all with whom he came in contact.

The funeral was conducted from Hines' Chapel January 3 by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. W. Holt, in the presence of a congregation that over-filled the church, who had come to pay their respect to one they loved so well. The pallbearers and flower-bearers were his classmates in school and the school attended in a body. He is survived by his parents, one brother and one sister, and a host of friends who mourn his death. The body was laid to rest in the church cemetery under a mound of flowers.

C. E. GERRINGER.

AUSTIN.—Mrs. Maniza Austin, wife of Simeon Austin, died on January 12, 1922. She was about 80 years old and was said to be one of the charter members of Wake Chapel church. Only one charter member is now living, that being her husband.

Sister Austin was married twice and leaves three children by her last husband and one by her former, in the person of C. F. Spence, a deacon of Wake Chapel church.

The people who knew her best feel confident that she has gone to be with the Lord to await the resurrection. May richest blessings be with those of hers left behind.

She was buried at Wake Chapel and the service was conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. Henry Norris, of the Baptist church.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

POYTHRESS.—Mr. John Wesley Poythress departed this life Saturday morning, January 14, 1922, at 6 o'clock, in Watts Hospital, Durham, N. C. He was regarded as a good citizen, good neighbor, and one of the church's most useful members. After the death of his father he took a father's place in the family. Deceased was 34 years old and leaves a young wife, one child, five brothers and two sisters to mourn their loss.

His body was brought to Damascus Christian church, where funeral service was conducted by the writer and interment made at the church cemetery. God bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

P. T. KLAPP.

DINGES.—Velva Marie Dinges, daughter of Mrs. Carrie Dinges, of Stanley, Va., was born September 25, 1908; died January 15, 1922. Her age, at her death, was thirteen years, three months and twenty days. She is survived by her widowed mother, two brothers and four sisters. The funeral service was held and the interment made at the Evangelical Lutheran church of Alma, Va., near Stanley, January 17, 1922. The service was conducted by the writer, assisted by Elder J. B. Jenkins, of the Old School Baptist church.

May the dear Friend who 'sticketh closer than a brother' comfort, sustain and provide for the sorrow-stricken mother and the surviving brothers and sisters.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

ISLEY.—Eli K. Isley departed this life at his home near Altamahaw, N. C., January 16, 1922, at the age of 72 years. He leaves a widow, seven children, sixteen grandchildren, and many relatives and friends who sorrow because of his death. He had been a member and a deacon in Bethlehem Christian church for many years.

The funeral services were conducted by his pastor, and interment at Bethlehem. A good man has gone to the spirit world. May God comfort the bereaved.

J. W. HOLT.

JEFFREYS.—Mrs. Alice Jeffreys was born June 12, 1856, and died January 16, 1922. She was married to Sidney E. Jeffreys on May 20, 1875. To this union thirteen children were born, nine of whom are still living, and eight of whom were present at the funeral. The husband has been dead since February 3, 1917. A noble woman, a devout Christian, a good mother, has fallen on sleep. That she is at rest we have no doubt. Funeral by the writer, assisted by Dr. P. H. Fleming.

G. O. LANKFORD.

COVINGTON.—Robert Lee Covington was born August 14, 1891, and passed away at his home in Burlington on January 23, 1922. He had been a great sufferer for several months. He leaves a widowed mother to mourn. God rest him in peace.

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Giving

By REV. E. M. CARTER
Wadley, Alabama

GIVING is an essential element of the Church. It is an expression of service scarcely realized in any other form. The Father gave that the Light might shine into the darkness and that the world through Him might live. The Son gave in order to more forcefully set before the world the opportunity offered of the Father. The Father and the Son worketh hitherto.

To carry out this plan, the Church is to give,—in life and means. Money is an expression of life as it represents the time, thought and strength of man. By it the Gospel may be extended in our own land, and may be the means of establishing the Church in heathen lands, thereby permitting the light to shine into the darkness in our day.

A Need

THERE is one need in our Convention work that we should study and endeavor to relieve. This need is the uniformity of statistical information. Today we wanted to know how much the various Conferences had contributed to the Christian Orphanage as reported in the 1921 Christian Annual. On page 66 of this volume you will find what was reported by the churches of the Virginia Valley Conference. This is good. But turn to page 82 and see if you can tell how much the Alabama Conference reported as paid to the Christian Orphanage. Of course, that Conference paid, but you cannot find it from The Annual. Or let us take the Georgia and Alabama Conference, and the same information is not given. The Eastern Virginia Conference shows how much is raised for the Orphanage, but in the 1922 Annual the nearest approach to it is a column headed "Benevolences."

These are only illustrations. They serve to show that when we desire to get the actual figures covering a certain part of the work for the year, it is a most difficult task to assemble them. There must be a reason.

The reason is very simple. Each Conference Secretary, or the Committee on Statistics, is allowed to take a sheet of paper of his own choosing, or convenience, and make out a table without reference to the uniformity of the whole Convention. This table matter goes up before the Conference, is approved, and sent on for publication. All that can be done is to print what is received.

If you have not studied these things, Brother Reader, take, for example, to find out what was spent on church improvements during the last two years. You will find this very information in some of the Conferences, and others you will not. It is most unreasonable to assume that those Conferences not reporting anything made no improvements. As a matter of fact, they did, but in most cases it is added to the value of the church property.

We need a table to be used in all Conferences, asking for certain information. By the use of the same table in all Conferences the work would be unified, and it would be a small matter to make a report on any item.

THE SUN, therefore, makes a motion that the next Convention appoint a committee to draft a blank table to be used in all the Conferences, so as to unify and intelligently assemble our work. THE SUN would further suggest that the Convention appoint a Committee to revise the church and ministerial letters. These reports call for many things unnecessary and fail to ask for things more important.

Church Statistics---Some Information

(Condensed from syndicated matter)

EVERY day during the last five years an average of 2,173 persons joined the various Churches of America. During the same time an average of three congregations have been organized daily, and the average number joining the ministry has been four and one-half persons per day.

The total church membership of the country, according to the latest available figures, is 45,997,199. This is an increase of 4,070,345 over the 1916 census figures, and indicates a clear gain of more than a million members for the preceding twelve months.

The various religious bodies report 233,104 congregations manned by 200,090 ministers. This is a gain of 5,617 congregations and 8,294 clergy over the government figures for 1916.

Of the 45,997,199 persons listed officially as church members, the Roman Catholics have 17,885,646. Roman Catholic figures represent estimated population including all baptized persons. Protestant bodies count only communicants.

The total religious constituency of the country (including all members and adherents) is placed at 95,858,096 persons. Owing to different statistical methods of the various churches these figures are estimated in accordance with studies made by statisticians. On this comparable basis the constituency of the various great bodies is as follows: Protestants, 74,795,226; Roman Catholics, 17,885,646; Jews, 1,120,000; Eastern Orthodox (Greek and Russian), 411,054; Latter Day Saints (Mormons), 1,646,170.

The Jewish figures—400,000—are estimated. The Jewish bodies have different methods of reporting, some counting only heads of families and others only heads of families who are also pew-holders. Volume 22 of the American Jewish Year Book estimates the Jewish population of the United States at 3,300,000.

As the churches report their statistics as a whole it is practically impossible to tell in what part of the country the greatest gains have been made. Indications are that the advance is all along the line. A specially significant growth has been reported by the Southern Baptists and the Southern Methodists.

For the first time the Baptists have passed the Methodists in total membership, now having 7,835,250 members, against a Methodist membership of 7,797,991. The Lutheran bodies stand third with a membership of 2,466,645 persons, and the Presbyterians are fourth with 2,384,683 members.

Practically all of the major religious faiths have made a gain except the Unitarians, who show a loss of 30,880 members as compared with 1916 figures, their total membership for last year being 51,635; and the Methodist Protestant Church, which shows apparently a loss of 8,623 members for the five-year period. The Churches of God in North America, General Eldership with a membership of 25,920, also show a decrease of 2,456 members. The Roman Catholics show a membership and adherents gain of 2,163,831 during the last five years. They have 16,580 churches manned by 21,643 priests.

The Methodist Episcopal Church (North) reports an increase in membership of 220,870 over the 1916 figures and 62,595 members over last year, its present membership being 3,938,655. It is the largest single Protestant Communion. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, shows a great gain of 91,315 members for the preceding year with an addition of 231,588 over the 1916 figures, its total now being 2,346,067. The Protestant Episcopal Church has recovered its war loss and now shows a gain of 11,208 over the 1916 figures, of which 7,134 were reported last year. Its total membership is 1,104,039 persons. An interesting fact is that the Salvation Army, with a reported membership of 35,969, shows an increase of only 65 persons over five years ago.

Our Statistics Again

ABOUT this season of the year there is always more or less comment on the assembled statistics of the various Churches given out by the Federal Council of Churches. Last year we laid aside a copy of the report for comparison with the report this year. It is natural, of course, that THE SUN is interested in the information concerning our own Church. The report for 1920 gave our Church 1,094 local churches, 826 ministers, with a membership of 104,390. The report for 1921, a copy of which has just been received, gives our Church 1,094 local congregations, 987 ministers, with a total membership of 97,084. According to these figures, we made no gain in congregations, but a gain of 161 ministers, with a loss in membership of 7,306.

There is a saying that "figures never lie." We grant this saying if the figures are correct, but we are confident that there is something wrong in the assembling of these figures.

Our opinion is that, of all records, those of religious bodies are the most inaccurate. We have a resolution that some day, when the time and expense will permit, we will devise a plan to find out direct from every local church of our denomination the facts and figures over which there is contention and concern every year.

The inefficiency of many local church clerks passes on to the Conference Secretary, and from the Conference Secretary to the Convention Secretary. We have in mind now many instances which we could relate to prove that the manner in which the membership statistics of many churches is cared for renders the whole system inefficient.

"Are you a wheelbarrow going around as you are pushed, or are you a self-propeller, a self-starter?"

Editing and Publishing A Church Paper

Talks With Our Readers—No. 3

DEAR JOHN:—

I appreciate your kind letter which I have just received and am delighted to know that you fully understand my fourteen points outlined to you last week.

There is a generally accepted saying that half the world does not know how the other half lives. I believe I can add to this with a degree of confidence in the statement that half the world does not understand the other half's work. The matter of editing a paper is a specific case.

My liking of the newspaper work seems as natural as a duck's desire for water. I have always had a real love for the printed page. And I should say here that I do not believe that any man can, with any degree of success, take care of the demands of the public in a newspaper office unless he has a real desire and liking for the work.

I once thought that an editor had the easiest task of any man. There is only one way to understand and appreciate his work and that is to actually do the work yourself. My first year in college I lived in the hospitable and genial home of my predecessor. It was my pleasure to do the secretarial work in THE CHRISTIAN SUN office, and yet with this close and personal contact with my good Brother, I never dreamed of his many duties until I became his successor. (Then I prayed for him only once a day, and had I known then what I know now, I would have prayed for him twice daily.)

One reason the work of an editor is not understood is because practically all of his work is done behind closed doors. I have had several amusing things to happen with me during the past few years. I have seen the time that I worked from early in the morning until late bed-time, stopping only thirty minutes for my meals, and then be asked by some friend if I was not having a leisurely time. I have always said Yes and went ahead smiling.

You must understand that the recital of these things is in no way to be interpreted that they are boring and not enjoyable. If you enjoy your work in the field of journalism as well as I do you will be happy. There is only one way to do in editing and publishing a paper and that is to keep on the job every day, tackle each task with a smile, and do the best you can. If you form the habit of worrying over every little thing that comes up, or every complaint that comes in, you will become miserable, your work will be half efficient, and the results will tell.

I am glad you are interested in my suggestions, and if I can serve you further, I trust that you will feel yourself free to write me.

Cordially yours,

C. B. RIDDLE.

God required the tithe of the Jews four thousand years ago. He certainly expects no less of us today.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS

IN PORTO RICO

A Diary — Part XVI.

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.
Field Secretary for Missions

RIDAY a. m., September 30.—I was up bright, happy and early this morning. Good Mrs. Barrett had said we would get our first letters from home and the States today. At breakfast we were advised that the truck loads of mail had gone by from the railway station to the postoffice, and there seemed enough for all to get some. The arrival of mail from the States is a great event here. They post in conspicuous places bill-boards stating when the steamer landed at San Juan and just when mails will arrive at different places in the island. The letters from home, a half-dozen of them, came this morning. Minton says each letter from home, after having crossed the ocean and waited a week, is “a bundle of American Beauties tied with the golden strands of sunbeams and freshly sprinkled with spangles from a rainbow,” or something to that effect. Minton’s rhetoric, like his unflinching smile, always comes in at the right time and invariably adds to the gayety of the situation. After reading our letters and indulging our joy over the dear ones at home, we “take in” the city market. I have never seen anything on this earth quite like a city market in Porto Rico. They sell, or offer for sale, everything used by mortal man from the cradle to the grave—and many things no one should use whether in or out of either. They offered us spoons at 2½c. each; cigars not labeled, 2c. each, labeled, 3c.; dippers to drink from, 6c. each; live, squealing pigs at $3.00 each; strings of chewing tobacco at one penny per inch (one inch of which, from its appearance, ought to mean certain death to any one who used it); and then I bought a pocket-book for 10c., a floor mat for 50c., a basket for 30c., a pair of shoes for 25c., a hat for 40c., a doll for 15c., two handkerchiefs for 25c., and a pair of cuff buttons for 25c. Then the money Minton had loaned me gave out. They tried to sell me some goat’s butter, and snake hides, and baked bananas, and broiled “hot-dog,” and roast beef (with the blood still oozing out), and a few other delicacies for light lunches—but fortunately my money had given out. A Porto Rican city market is a dry goods establishment, a grocery store, a restaurant, cigar and cigarette stand, butcher’s and baker’s shop, a farmer’s warehouse, coal bins and fruit stands all multiplied by fifty and then jumbled into one, making unitedly a paudemonium of conduct, a babel of voices and a polyglot of odors. I made up my mind to visit the market again before leaving Porto Rico (as soon as the garlic effects of this visit had vanished). One cannot learn a people’s or a city’s real life unless one sees and understands the market house. For years I have made it a practice on visiting a city to go through the market to see there what the people are buying to load up their stomachs with. What a people eat is an index to what they are.

We lunched happily together at the Barretts’ today and talked about home. Barrett has been here so long that he is not at home elsewhere. He lives, thinks and speaks Porto Rican. I told him today that he jabbered more like a Porto Rican than the Porto Ricans themselves. He can hardly speak our dear English tongue, and more than once has had to stop and think or enquire of Mrs. Barrett what the English word is for some Spanish thing he wants to say to us. There is simply no telling what one can get used to and become in this life.

After lunch we go out to Arus, where we have a wooden framed church building with a hundred chairs in it. It also has an organ, a pulpit, communion table, three hanging lamps, two potted plants (ferns), three windows to the side, a steeple with a bell in it, and the whole house needs painting. It used to be white outside and blue inside, but the color now is but a memory, and the substance of things hoped for. Rev. Juan Romero is the pastor, but is not married and wants to go to school some more for further preparation. We went also to Playito, which is pronounced Ply-eater and means “By the sea.” We have a shabby building here for a preaching-place. The house was made of good boxes, and it seems a pity to destroy boxes to put up a building like this. It is nearly two miles from Arus, and is a thickly settled place on the beach. The people here are very poor, and their houses look like they mean to stay so. The miracle is that mortals can live here at all, for mosquitoes and filth. As big as this world is, I cannot understand why these people don’t move.

We were to have supper at Arus and then hold services. But we didn’t do either. At 5 o’clock we crossed a harmless little stream near Arus that one could jump across at one leap. At 6 o’clock that stream was seven feet deep, one hundred feet wide, spreading in all directions, and was raging, roaring flood. It inundated the whole town of Arus in less than an hour from the time it began to rise, and prevented all services at the church. Our party, Barrett, Martin, Minton and myself, had to flee in another direction in order to reach a bridge. One never knows here when a river is going to rise and flood the region round about, and cut off all travel. Barrett says he has often been away to an appointment and a rainfall in the mountains flooded the streams below so that he was unable to return home for twelve or twenty-four hours after he was expected. We travel tonight many miles to reach a bridge and higher ground, and get back to Ponce at 8 o’clock, tired, happy and hungry. We had a good, though improvised supper, and much pleasant talk.

Saturday morning, October 1.—The Barretts, Miss Williams, Martin, Minton and I met at and around the dining room table at 9:30 this morning for a conference. We go over the work our Church is doing here, and try to make out a budget for the coming year. Making a budget for workers and the work on the foreign field for a year is an intricate task, and requires a hundred details that I never knew about before.

From 2 to 4 in the afternoon we have a visit to the home of Prof. Juan Rodriguez. There were songs, Bible reading and prayer, piano-playing, and a pleasant luncheon.

The Barretts gave a reception tonight in our honor, and all the missionaries in Ponce were invited and came—Baptists, Methodists, United Brethren and Christian. We are all Americans and have a most hilarious and happy time together. We have humorous songs, a game of poetry, a trial at "Gossip," unlimited frolic and fun, and partake with relish of good Mrs. Barrett's grape juice, nabiscoes, and eandy. I find that missionaries have the highest regard and profoundest respect for each other, and the work each is trying to do. How I wish denominational competition and rivalry in the States could and would take pattern after the workers on the foreign field.

Our pleasant party lasted till 11 p. m. It has been a day of rest and play, labor and conference. Life is one endless chain of varied experiences and changes. God alone changeth not. No two of the miracles His Son wrought while here on earth were similar, and no two methods of healing were alike. So He works today with unending changes, and no two days of life are the same or similar. I agree with that distinguished teacher in one of our colleges who began a recent book with the striking paradox, "There is nothing fixed and steadfast in this world except change." (To be continued.)

PLAIN TALKS TO PLAIN PEOPLE

REEPING "the boiling" up is quite as necessary for the Christian life as it is for cooking a meal. Turn to Revelations 3: 15, 16, and you will find the word hot, where it is said, "I would thou wert cold or hot." The word hot there is really the word boiling. The word boiling means that water is being transformed into steam, and steam has power. So then what the sacred writer means is that he wishes the church at Laodicea were one thing or the other, cold or boiling. He knew that if the life of the Christian had reached the boiling state, that is, full enthusiasm for Christ and humanity, then wonderful works would be in progress. Of course, if they had been really cold, they would not have been counted as Christians at all, and so their influence would not have been counted against Christianity, and that is better for the causes than a cold state in which one is counted for the Church, but is truly against the Church. So the Lord does not like the "betwixt and between" Christians, neither cold nor hot. If a Christian reaches the boiling point, then all of his being is enlisted for Christ and the truth. It is more important to reach the boiling point than is any other one thing in a Christian's life, for when he reaches the boiling point, then he will be giving his life in full to the work of the Lord. Try it, and see how you find it to be from a personal standpoint. Do you say, How shall I know when I reach the boiling point in Christian experience? Do not be bothered as to that matter, for when you have the experience, you will know it. Do you know when the wind sweeps gently and pleasantly over your face on a hot summer's evening? And do you have any trouble to know that such a thing is taking place? Well, it will be even easier to know when your life is reaching the boiling state—you will know it by the delightful sensation which you experience.

Did you ever notice what is said in Psalm 76: 10? Then turn to it and read, as follows: "Surely the wrath of man shall praise Thee; the remainder of wrath shalt thou restrain." This is a wonderful passage of Scripture. It is wonderfully illustrated by an incident of which I read recently. It is reported that at the Paris Exposition a New Testament was given to a lady, which she gracefully accepted, but when she had looked at it and seen it was a copy of the New Testament, she angrily tore it to pieces and threw the fragments to the ground. Soon a poor woman came along and, seeing these small pieces of paper, she picked up one of them and undertook to read it. From it she got such a precious message to her soul that she approached a nearby policeman and asked him to tell her where she might find a copy of the book of which this fragment was a part. He kindly directed her to the Bible Society's depot, which was nearby. There she was given a new copy of the New Testament, and in reading it she found Christ and was saved. The wrath of that haughty woman led to the salvation of a sister, although she thought she was showing her contempt for God's Word by tearing it up. Oh, man, know that you are dealing with the Creator, and be assured that you cannot override His will and purpose. Verily, the wrath of man shall praise the Lord, but the remainder He will restrain.

What is your religion doing for you? How does it help you? If it affords you no help, you had better look into the situation and see whether or not you have religion, for if you possess the right kind, then it will show itself in some unmistakable way. It is said that a convert to the Roman Catholic faith experienced some trouble in keeping himself happy, and so he felt that he must not have the true faith. He said of himself: "I was like a spool of thread that had been all wound off and tangled up, but then it was that I brought my tangled self to Jesus, and He loosed the knots and made the twisted threads straight." That seems a clear experience, for that is just what a sound and genuine case of Regeneration will do for a person. May I be permitted to suggest that if your religion has done nothing definite for your life, you had better do as this man did, whether you be a Roman Catholic or a Protestant. Your real need is to have Jesus touch your real life and do something definite for you. Surrender to Him in faith and He will do the much needed thing for your soul and make you a new man by untangling your life and making you straight in your Christian experience.

SUFFOLK LETTER

INCE the religious family expanded into the religious nation, there have been ministers of religion. There were not only prophets, but schools of prophets in Elisha's day. Before Elijah was carried up into heaven, there were such schools at Gilgal, Bethel, and Jericho. After that wonderful separation, the students at Gilgal were too many for their quarters; and they besought permission from Elisha to go unto Jordan and cut beams to construct a place to dwell in; and Elisha gave his consent, and went with them. One of the young men lost his axe-head in the river, and the prophet "cut down a stiek, and cast it in thither, and the iron did swim"; and it was recovered. It was a borrowed axe, and that shows that the young prophet was a poor man. This leads up to the observation that the ministers of the Old Testament and of the New Testament were poor men.

So far as I now recall, no rich, immoral, idle, or proud man was called into the ministry in Bible times and Apostolic days. Poverty is no bar to the prophetic office; morality is no bar to preaching the gospel; work is no bar to the pastoral office; modesty is no bar to ministerial power. It is becoming in one who looks for great things in the other world to be content with small things in this world. Paul says, "Even unto this present hour we both hunger, and thirst, and are naked, and are buffeted, and have no certain dwelling place; and labor, working with our own hands: being reviled, we bless; being persecuted, we suffer it." Only one minister chosen in the early Church, so far as I know, indulged in money considerations; and he "went to his own place." Nothing prevents ministerial efficiency more than money considerations. It is the duty of the congregation to provide for the necessities of the minister. The fact that the minister does not determine his location nor his service by a money consideration does not release the congregation from their obligation to support him. At best the ministry is not a calling that promises large financial remuneration. The word of God guarantees a living for the minister; and he should trust God for his living in this world as implicitly as he trusts Him for eternal life. If the ministry paid in proportion to other lines of work and professions, requiring the same gifts, preparation, and faithful service, its ranks would be crowded with imposters. It is a different line of service from all others. They do not choose, but are chosen. "No man taketh this honor unto himself, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron. "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ by the will of God," tells how ministers enter upon their life-work.

Factories can fashion trees into pews and pulpits, but God grows the trees. Schools can train men for the ministry, but God calls them. The prayers of God's people may help in this matter of call. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that He will send forth laborers into His harvest." No doubt we may pray that certain individuals be called and sent into the vineyard as ministers. In fact, ministers may be inspired to make such call known to others. It was so in the case of Elijah, who was inspired to lead Elisha into the prophetic office. A mother may be moved to touch the heart of her child with such a message. Hannah dedicated Samuel to the Lord before he was born; and the Lord called him while he was yet a child. In the night Samuel thought Eli called him; but "Eli perceived that the Lord had called the child; and Eli said, Go lie down; if He call thee, say, Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth." And the Lord called again, and Samuel answered. But it seems plain that this calling differs from other callings or professions, as it involves a spiritual relation that subjects the individual to God's will and not his own will. He can choose law or medicine, teaching or journalism, without moral risk; and he can change from one of these to another without moral blame. But, in the case of the ministry, he has no such liberty. Paul could not have left the ministry without spiritual loss; for he said, "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel."

OFFICIAL COMMUNICATION

To the Churches of the North Carolina Christian Conference

It will be seen by reference to page 104 of The Christian Annual for 1922 that the following resolution was passed:

"Resolved, that the Executive Committee take a referendum vote of the churches of the Conference by March 15, 1922, on the following three questions:

"1. Shall we have a united Conference as now?

"2. Shall we divide into three Conferences as before the merger?

"3. Shall we divide into two Conferences, using as the dividing line the Cape Fear and Haw Rivers to Haw River, the North Carolina Railroad from Haw River to Durham, and thence the Durham and Keysville Railroad to Keysville, Virginia?

"Resolved further, that the vote be sent the Chairman of the Executive Committee, which committee shall take action to carry out the wishes of the churches supporting a majority proposition."

You will please take this vote in your church at the earliest convenience, fill out the ballot below, and mail to Rev. R. L. Williamson, Henderson, N. C. To be counted your ballot must be in by March 15, 1922.

Sincerely yours,

THE VOTE ON DIVISION

IT was not my privilege to be in the last session of the North Carolina Conference at Danville, Virginia, November, 1921. I understood, however, that there was considerable diversity of opinion as to whether the Conference should remain geographically as it is or whether it should be divided into two or more bodies. The records of the Conference show that a resolution was passed authorizing the various local churches to vote on the question of division under the supervision of the Conference Executive Committee, and that this vote should be taken and reported by March 15, 1922. I write this note to make a statement simply as a matter of information to the churches that are to vote. When the three Conferences were merged into one there was a Home Mission Board constituted and incorporated under the laws of North Carolina. This Mission Board took over the Home Mission funds of the new Conference and Home Mission financial obligations. Among these obligations was an indebtedness of twelve hundred and fifty ($1,250.00) dollars from the Eastern North Carolina Conference secured by mortgages on the Raleigh and Franklinton Christian church properties. These notes have not been paid, but the interest thereon has been paid. Too, the Home Mission Board is obligated to pay twenty-five hundred dollars—five hundred dollars of which obligation has already been paid—to aid Franklinton in constructing a ten thousand dollar house of worship. Besides, the Home Mission Board is under obligations to aid Clayton, N. C., to the extent of twenty-two hundred and fifty dollars in the purchase of a church lot and the construction of a house of worship thereon. The Home Mission Board cannot meet these obligations without borrowing money. It is next to impossible to borrow money with the possibility of a division of the Conference in the near future. Should the vote result in a division of the Conference it will abolish the Home Mission Board as a corporate body. Such a result would throw back on what was the old Eastern North Carolina Conference the above-mentioned financial obligations. If the churches that would likely have the financial obligations above mentioned thrust upon them by a vote resulting in a division should not like for such a result to occur, this will give them a fair chance to use their influence to direct the votes of us who are just about as likely to vote one way as the other.

We go to press this week with twenty-two articles left over—enough to make another issue. Yours is in that list.

Readers in the North Carolina Conference will note some information on the subject of Conference division. We have other articles on the same topic which we hope to get in next week.

Goals for 1922

In setting the goal for 1922 we would like to have suggestions as to the amount to set. We have always set them up to this time, but would like to have suggestions this year for a change.

First—The Easter Offering goal.

Second—The Thanksgiving goal.

Third—The total amount to raise during the year 1922.

Who will be interested enough to write us what you think we ought to set for these three goals for this year and then be willing to help us reach them? Our Thanksgiving goal for last year was $6,000, and we reached it. Our Easter offering goal was $3,000, and we reached it. Our goal for total income for last year was $25,000. We passed the mark by over $2,000.

I give this information to help you base your goals for this year. Will you make me a suggestion?

“THE CHURCH IN THE PRESENT CRISIS”

Fleming H. Revell Co., Publishers. $1.75 the copy.

President Harper's latest book, "The Church in the Present Crisis," wears a suggestive title and presents a challenge to every lover of the Church of Christ. Its frank recognition and searching analysis of the acute problems of our time; its primary emphasis upon service embodied in a definite and comprehensive program of individual and social activities logically related to the local church, the community, and the nation; its subordination of dogma and antiquated creeds to a functional and developing concept of truth and religious experience; its prophetic and courageous appeal for Christian unity instead of a chaotic and divided Christendom; its sustained plea for an adequate program of Religious Education in the Protestant Church; and above all, its exaltation of Jesus Christ as our sufficiency and leader, are main features which readily commend the volume to wide-awake men and women everywhere. Doctor Harper believes in the Church and rejoices to share in her triumph, at the same time his eyes are not closed to her failures, even within our time, to meet and solve constructively many vital issues, both individual and social. But like a wise physician he does more than diagnose the case; he offers the dynamic and the method of approach by which the Gospel can be made to function as a vital foursquare ministry to the whole of man in the home, at church, and in business. How fortunate that such a message from such a leader is delivered to "the Kingdom for such a time as this"!

Here is food and stimulation for the Sunday school teachers and superintendents; it could be studied with profit by an organized class or Christian Endeavor Society, or a church might use it in the mid-week prayer-meeting, taking one chapter a week until the entire fifteen had been discussed and their themes imbibed by its members. It is the voice of a layman summoning thousands of others to unite in giving victory to Christ and the Gospel. Would that every minister and Christian worker throughout our Communion might read it and go forth during this new year to serve with apostolic zeal the expanding interests and ideals of the Kingdom.

H. SHELTON SMITH.

New Haven, Connecticut.

“The Church in the Present Crisis,” a book of sixteen chapters, from the pen of Dr. W. A. Harper, is an attempt to outline the relationship of the Christian Church and individual Christians to the present pressing demands. It is noteworthy in the number of angles from which the subject is treated, and the optimistic forward-looking treatment given to each. The whole work is a tocsin in the present threatening complicated world condition to summon the forces of righteousness to properly interpret and adequately cope with the present religious situation.

Whatever exceptions readers may take to the definitions of the author, none will differ with the implications of the whole treatise. Dr. Harper's book is a real literary contribution, and to the thoughtful will prove a constructive agency in the present crisis.

“THE EVERLASTING WHISPER”

Charles Scribner's Sons, Publishers. $1.75 the copy.

This is a story by Jackson Gregory with the high Sierras as a background. It will be welcomed by all his readers and all lovers of fiction of this nature. The hero is a true woodsman. Left an orphan early in life, his only real friend was a man whose daughter miraculously becomes the heroine of the story and is the first person to divert the woodsman's thought from his everyday life. She is a petted society butterfly, but the blood of her ancestors brings out the real womanhood in her. The author's description of the mountains at their best and worst gives his readers a real thrill. He is one that thoroughly understands human nature.

Elisha and Naaman the Syrian.—II Kings 5: 1-27.

Golden Text: “Bless Jehovah, O my soul, and forget not all His benefits; Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; Who healeth all thy diseases.”—Ps. 103: 2, 3.

Lesson Thoughts: God wants to heal both body and soul. Salvation, like Naaman's cure, comes through obedience. “Even a child maketh himself known by his doings; Whether his work be pure, and whether it be right.”—Prov. 20:11.

The following writing describing a torchlight procession at a country station in honor of a returned hero is quoted in the Sunday School Executive:

“As the procession started, one torch after another blazed into radiance as if touched by electricity. One could not tell what lighted them. But soon a boy was discovered crouching under some timbers to keep away from the wind, with a lighted candle in his hand. Every torch-bearer came to him for light. Silent, smiling, happy, one hand holding the candle and the other sheltering the flame, this little fellow was lighting up the world of darkness! The picture has a deeper meaning. The Gospel is the light of the world, but somebody must hold it and give it out; a child may.

“A child's hand can carry a gift that will gladden a sad heart.

"A child's love can give joy to a father's or mother's life.

"A child's prayer may bring a blessing to someone ready to perish."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC—FEBRUARY 19, 1922

The Sources of Happiness.—John 4: 9-14; 13: 12-17; 15: 11.

The daily readings as outlined by the United Society of Christian Endeavor suggest six sources of happiness: faith, obedience, love, service, labor, and usefulness. To these others may be added from God's Word, as Chastening, Job 5: 17; Knowing God as Jehovah, Ps. 144: 15; Ps. 146: 5; Trust, Proverbs 16: 20; Justice, Ps. 21: 15; Knowing the law of God and doing His will, Ps. 40: 8; Suffering, 1 Peter 3: 14. Read Matthew 5: 3-12, reading for the word "blessed," the word "happy," to find how Christ promised happiness, and to whom.

"Happy is the man that findeth wisdom,
And the man that getteth understanding.
For the gaining of it is better than the gaining of silver,
And the profit thereof than fine gold.
She is more precious than fine rubies;
And none of the things thou canst desire are to be compared unto her.

Length of days is in her right hand;
And in her left are riches and honor.
Her ways are ways of pleasantness,
And all her paths are peace.
She is a tree of life to them that lay hold upon her;
And happy is every one that retaineth her."

—Proverbs 3: 13-18.

NOON DAY CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR SOCIETY

A band of young people met at Noon Day, with Miss Eldredge, and organized a Christian Endeavor Society on October 17, 1921. We began with six members, and since we have gained two more. The meetings seem to be getting better every time, and if it be "talents to get more we hope to gain many more." We have had several good meetings and have good attendance. Everybody takes interest and will respond when put on the program. And, too, I must not forget to make mention of some of the older people who have been with us all the way, and we feel the prayers of those who do not attend, and we surely do appreciate their standing by us and helping. We meet every Sunday night somewhere and have a Christian Endeavor prayer-meeting. We people at Noon Day think it a mighty fine thing, and we hope to grow in the good work of the Master.

Sunday night during Christmas we had a fine Christian Endeavor meeting. Then on Wednesday night in the same week we had a prayer-meeting, as we all understand this meeting is to train the young people to work for the Master. We have already seen a great improvement, for some of the boys and girls who perhaps never before took any interest are now willing and ready to respond. And I must tell you all of our last meeting, on Sunday night, January 22. Brother J. D. Dollar was with us, and we every one enjoyed to the depths of our hearts his being with us, and hope to have him there again before long.

We hope to accomplish more in the year 1922 than ever before. We hope to have more and better workers in the near future. Then we can feel that we have accomplished something for the Master by each one doing his or her part. We hope to help others more "because we serve God best when we serve others most," and we think of the great work Miss Eldredge did for us the short while she was with us. If she only knew the good she did, she would feel as though her trip to the South was successful. We are looking forward for her again at our next Conference.

MINNIE HUEY, President,

Noon Day Christian Endeavor Society.

THE TEN COMMANDMENTS OF LEADERSHIP

The great Sunday school leader, Marion Lawrance, gave the following "Ten Commandments of Leadership" in his message to our Ocean View Chautauqua last July:

1. Thou shalt be a man or woman.

God is seeking better men while we are seeking better methods.

2. Thou shalt be a leader.

They govern best who do not appear to govern at all.

3. Thou shalt have a vision.

Every Sunday school superintendent should have two schools, one in his head and one in his church.

4. Thou shalt have faith.

"He can because he thinks he can."—Virgil.

5. Thou shalt be loyal.

You cannot shoot an arrow into the sun, but it will go higher than if you aim it at the cellar door.

6. Thou shalt be a student.

No one ever grows old till he stops growing.

7. Thou shalt be ambitious.

"Our only competition is yesterday."—Motto of Lowncy, candy-maker.

8. Thou shalt be enthusiastic.

Enthusiasm carries us over many a dead-center of discouragement.

9. Thou shalt be patient.

He that can have patience can have anything.

10. Thou shalt be humble.

Kingliness and lowliness go together.

The New Commandment, "Thou shalt love."

The soul of all improvement is the improvement of the soul.—Teachers' and Officers' Journal.

Honesty takes in every object from center to circumference. Churches sometimes can be dishonest and think they are honest. A great many churches think they are honest when they are dishonest. A church can be dishonest if it keeps its pastor on a wage below the equifort line, when his thought is turned from his sacred work, endeavoring to meet his family obligations.

A QUESTION

If those who read the Church press contribute most to Church enterprises, would it pay to send The Christian Sun into every home of our membership?

WOMEN AND THE KINGDOM

PROCEEDINGS, WOMAN'S BOARD, NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

The Woman's Board of the North Carolina Conference met in the parlors of the Burlington Christian church, January 20, at 3 p. m. Members present were:

President, Mrs. W. H. Carroll; Treasurer, Mrs. W. R. Sellars; Recording Secretary, Mrs. J. W. Patton; Superintendent of Literature, Mrs. J. J. Henderson; Superintendent of Cradle Roll, Mrs. N. G. Newman; and Dr. J. O. Atkinson, our Mission Secretary.

The President, Mrs. W. H. Carroll, called the meeting to order, and after reading a scripture lesson from the 25th chapter of Matthew, Dr. J. O. Atkinson offered prayer.

The President announced that the object of the meeting was to fix dates for the various District Meetings and to outline the work for the coming year. It was decided that we would not speak of the District Meeting as a Missionary Rally Day, but that we would change the name to "One-Day School of Missions." The dates were set as follows:

Alamance District, April 11. Mrs. J. D. Kernodle, Graham, N. C., Superintendent: Berea, Bethel (C), Bethlehem (A), Burlington, Concord, Elon College, Graham, Haw River, Hopedale, Long's Chapel, New Providence, Pleasant Hill (A), Shallow Ford, Union (N. C.)

Vance, Warren, Franklin District, April 9. Mrs. R. L. Williamson, Henderson, N. C., Superintendent: Fuller's Chapel, Liberty (V), Antioch (W), Mt. Auburn, Bethlehem (W), Franklinton, Good Hope (F), Mt. Carmel, Mt. Gillead, New Hope (F), Oak Level, Pope's Chapel, Youngsville.

Guilford, Rockingham District, April 12. Mrs. M. F. Cook, Greensboro, N. C., Superintendent: Apple's Chapel, Belew Creek, First church, Greensboro; High Point, Hines' Chapel, Monticello, Palm Street, Greensboro; Pleasant Ridge (F), Salem Chapel, Smithwood, Happy Home, Howard's Chapel, Kallam Grove, Mount Bethel, New Hope (R), New Lebanon, Reidsville.

Randolph, Moore, Montgomery and Hoke District, April 13. Mrs. G. R. Underwood, Bennett, N. C., Superintendent: Antioch (R), Asheboro, Brown's Chapel, Center Grove, Liberty (R), New Center, Park's Cross Roads, Patterson's Grove, Pleasant Grove (N. C.), Pleasant Ridge (R), Pleasant Union (R), Ramseur, Randleman, Seagrove, Shiloh, Spoon's Chapel, Union Grove, Big Oak, Ether, Addor, Mt. Pleasant, Needham's Grove, Shady Grove.

Lee-Chatham District, April 14. May Gunter, Jonesboro, N. C., Superintendent: Grace's Chapel, Lee's Chapel, Moore's Union, Poplar Branch, Sanford, Shallow Well, Turner's Chapel, Zion, Antioch (C), Bennett, Christian Chapel, Christian Union, Hank's Chapel, New Elam.

Halifax District, April 23. Mrs. W. J. Pierce, News Ferry, Va., Superintendent: Danville (Va.), Hebron (Va.), Ingram (Va.), Lebanon, Liberty (Va.), Pleasant Grove (Va.), Union (Va.)

Wake-Harnett-Johnson District, April 16. Mrs. A. F. Smith, Fuquay Springs, N. C., Superintendent: Christian Light, Pleasant Union (H), Amelia, North Clayton, Pleasant Hill (J), Auburn, Bethel (W), Beulah, Catawba Springs, Ebenezer, Hayes Chapel, Morrisville, Mount Hermon, New Hill, Piney Plains, Plymouth, Raleigh, Six Forks, Wake Chapel, Wentworth.

Durham-Orange District, April 18. Miss Lillian Long, Chapel Hill, N. C., Superintendent: Chapel Hill, Damascus, Mebane, Mt. Zion, Durham, Goshen Chapel, O'Kelly's Chapel, Martha's Chapel.

Dr. Atkinson was asked to invite Dr. W. P. Minton and Miss Iola Hedgepeth to be present and take part on the program for these "One-Day School of Missions." Mrs. Carroll, Mrs. Sellars and Dr. Atkinson will prepare the programs for the various district meetings and complete any organization of the work necessary.

The President announced that the pamphlet containing goals and objectives for 1922 would soon come from the printer and the Secretary was asked to send them to the various Societies as soon as she received them.

Mrs. J. P. Avent was continued as Committee of one to secure Life Members.

Mrs. N. G. Newman, Superintendent of Cradle Roll, spoke concerning her work, and she was encouraged to continue the organization along the same lines she had been pursuing.

It was recommended that the Superintendent of Literature send out plays and pageants asking each Society to give one during the year.

Mrs. J. J. Henderson, Superintendent of Literature, was asked to prepare a monthly missionary program, and not only to send same to the various Societies, but to publish same in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. She hopes to have the March program published some time during February. These programs are recommended for use to those Societies not using the one published in The Christian Missionary.

The President was asked to look after the matter of securing the banners for Societies deserving them at our last Conference.

The Board adjourned to meet again at the call of the President.

MRS. W. H. CARROLL, President.
MRS. J. W. PATTON, Secretary.

TO WOMEN OF THE NORTH CAROLINA CONFERENCE

March 3 has been set apart as a Day of Prayer for Woman's Missionary work by all denominations in the United States.

We would urge the pastors of all churches and officers of all missionary organizations to co-operate in observing this day.

FIRST—"That there may go up from our people everywhere such a volume of united prayer to God for our Woman's Missionary work and for the advancement of God's Kingdom as has never before been known.

SECOND—"That the pastors of all our churches may lend this much aid to our Woman's work and perhaps in this way create among all our people a new enthusiasm for Missions."

We sincerely hope every church in the North Carolina Conference will make a special effort to observe this day. A program has been arranged for this particular service. Send to Room 25, C. P. A. Building, Dayton, Ohio, for this program—price, two cents each.

MRS. W. H. CARROLL, Chairman,

A LETTER

DEAR UNCLE CHARLEY: I am a little boy six years old—go to school and like my teacher. Her name is Miss Keaughley. Have a little sister three years old. We would like to join the band of cousins. Enclosed find 25 cents for February. I guess the ground-hog saw his shadow today.—Kendall and Altha Rich, Graham, North Carolina.

We are real glad to get your letters for this week. It keeps the corner alive. Write often. We have plenty of snow February 8. Guess the ground-hog saw his shadow.—"Uncle Charley."

A COMPLIMENT

One of the small periodicals that find their way into THE CHRISTIAN SUN office is the News Bulletin, issued monthly by the Southern Railway Company. We have been reading this for several years and never miss an issue. In the February number we find these complimentary words concerning Brother J. P. Dalton, a member of our Holland, Virginia, church, and one of THE SUN's most loyal and faithful subscribers:

"J. P. Dalton, who has been agent for the Southern at Holland, Virginia, for more than sixteen years, closed the year 1921 with a record of no claims. During the year only five claims amounting to $20.28 were filed at Holland, but not a penny of this amount was chargeable to the station. Superintendent D. B. Nolan, of the Norfolk Division, has written Mr. Dalton to congratulate him on this record."

CONGRATULATIONS

The account given last week by Dr. Staley of the elevation to high offices of church officials deserves more than a passing mention. Col. J. E. West is one of the foremost laymen in the Church, and so is Judge West. Judge West has been superintendent of the Sunday school at Waverly for the past thirty years. He has never been so busy that he could not give time to his local church. And that reveals a secret: A man can do most for his denomination who does most for his local church. Lieutenant-Governor West is foremost in his home church and that is his background for interest in denominational matters.

THE SUN extends congratulations to "the West boys," as we have heard them called in Eastern Virginia. And to John W. West, Marvin L. Gray, and F. B. Richardson, we offer our best wishes.

STEWARDSHIP AND TITHING

SOME DISCUSSIONS BY REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

SPIRITUAL DEPTHS AND PERMANENCY

The writer, who has been asked to act as Secretary of Stewardship and Tithing, has only one thing in view in all that he has said, or may say, on the subject and that is that the people with whom he lives and labors may find new spiritual depth and permanency in their efforts at tithing. Harvey Reeves Calkins has expressed the writer's attitude and sentiment exactly in regard to the tithe. Here it is in his words: "Whatever may have been the Old Testament requirements concerning the tithe of Jehovah, and whatever may be the New Testament suggestions concerning this same separated portion, we are to seek with knowledge to discern the wide meaning of it all. If the tithe is to have any place in Christian propaganda there must be found for it spiritual depth and permanency.

To set apart and administer a tenth of one's income, as an acknowledgment of God's ownership, it fitting. It is God's way, and to the intelligent Christian this is final. The legalist looks for a statute, the verbalist runs his references, but the Christian, with whom is the mind of the Master, seeks a principle of life."

Now it is this principle of life, this principle that makes for spiritual depths and permanency, that this writer is chiefly interested in as he seeks to bring to the minds and hearts of our people the thought and fact of stewardship and tithing.

It is not what God required of the Jews that interests me. But this: did God's requirement of the Jews have a moral and spiritual lesson for me and bearing on my life? Since God required a certain attitude of the Jews to their possessions, will that same attitude toward my possessions enrich me spiritually, give spiritual depth and permanency to my own life? If it will, then I am, as a Christian, acting with folly if I do not assume that attitude toward my possessions.

If there ever was a time in history for cultivating this principle of life, it is now.

A great clipping bureau whose sole business it is to find out from the newspapers and current literature who is most often mentioned and written about through the press has recently issued a statement showing this order: Henry Ford, first; Jno. D. Rockefeller, second; Chas. M. Schwab, third; Judge Gary (of the Steel Trust), fourth; Thomas A. Edison, fifth, and so on. Now in all this list of notables the most talked of and written about in the run of a day, there is not a name of a preacher, poet, moralist, teacher or statesman. Not one; men of the financial and business world only. These are they to whom our American thought and speech most often turn. They have triumphed in the material world—and are our present heroes.

Can now this principle of life which makes for spiritual depth and permanency be carried into all the realm of matter and man's material transactions? There are some who believe it can. And the principle and practice of stewardship and tithing are the means by which we are to be helped in this direction. Property, possessions, lands, houses, inheritances, flocks, herds and growing crops are not ours: they all belong to God. And no man has ever yet discovered a better plan by which this acknowledgment may be made than by and through stewardship and tithing. Through this, man relates himself to God materially. Through this, man realizes that what he has in his keeping, for the time only, really belongs to go, and he will be called upon some day to leave all behind and give an account of his stewardship.

It is doubtful if the churches ever needed more sorely than now this principle of life that makes for spiritual depth and permanency. And as we preach and teach and talk in the next three months especially, let us keep in mind not the financial returns to the Kingdom that our campaign will bring, but the spiritual depth and permanency that our activities in this direction will beget.

"A COLDNESS IN THE MEETING"

They tell a story in Missouri of a planter whose slaves were stealing. He heard that Pompey had become quite a preacher. "Pompey," he said, "I hear you have become a great preacher."

"Yes, Marster, de Lord do hope me powerful sometimes."

"Well, Pompey, don't you think there is a good deal of stealing going on on the plantation?"

"Yes, sah, Ise afraid dey is."

"Now, Pompey, I want you to preach the biggest sermon you can on the Ten Commandments, and bear down hard on stealing."

"Why, Marster, dat wouldn't do nohow. It would throw sech a powerful coldness over de meeting."

Ah! As soon as we touch on money in our preaching, how many in the congregation begin to shiver, fearing a collection!

A recent writer, who claims to have made the examination, says that one verse in every four in Matthew, Mark and Luke has to do with money or covetousness; that one verse in every six in the New Testament has to do with money or covetousness; that one-half of all our Savior's sermons have to do with money or covetousness. So whe nwe preach on money we at least have a good example. Our Savior evidently did not fear any "powerful coldness in the meeting."

Rev. T. E. White, Sanford, N. C.: "Send me one hundred copies, 'Does a Tenth Belong to God?' for Sunday night's service." Same were sent, and we trust their reading will increase the number of tithers in Brother White's congregation, although a large number of them already tithe, we happen to know.

Miss Emma Hart, Sanford, N. C.: "Will do the best I can for tithing. Most of our members tithe already, but I really think every Christian should tithe."

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP IDEALS

WE should be thankful for ideals. We cannot always live up to the ideal, but we can still look at it and cherish it; and from our uplifted ideal we may sometimes draw healing when we have been bitten by some flying fiery serpent. We cannot have ideals too lofty, too pure, too holy. "Be ye holy as your Father in heaven is holy; be ye perfect as your Father in heaven is perfect."

George Herbert said: "Aim high; shoot afar, higher than he who means a star—then he who means a tree." We cannot strike the star, but the arrow goes the higher for the point at which it was aimed.

What ideals we once had! Who dares bring back to memory all the ideals with which he started life? Where are they? When I—for I will speak thus in the first instance upon narrow grounds—wished to become a preacher of the Gospel, how lofty was the ideal! How devoted was to have been the life! How persuasive and ardent the appeal! "I am determined not to know anything among men, save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified." "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." Do I not thus in quoting my own early ideal and purpose touch the experience and the pensive recollection of every minister of the gospel? Alas! how we have failed! What deference to the customs of the times! What fear of offending men! What study to win the approbation of all, either to be sensational or aesthetical! What fear of striking directly and heavily! What temptation to be hard upon the absent, but to let the present go free from the scorching fire of divine criticism, and the appalling judgments of God!

What is true of the minister is true also of nearly all other men. What a life yours was to have been in business! You should show how business was to be done; there should be no moral blot upon any stationery upon which you wrote; everything should be exact, just, liberal; you would found a model business. Bless God for the youth that wants to found model things, that wants to take the initiative. So few found anything but eternally find fault with those who do. I would not curb the boy who aspires to be a model preacher, a model merchant, a model politician, or a model of anything good. Where is the ideal now? It is many years since you spoke thus about your model life; produce your books, let us see your record. You will not show your books? We know why.

What an ideal home life you were going to have! You remember when you walked between the green hedges in the springtime, among blossoms and singing birds; you used to remark upon the life which other people were living—such unhappy lives, so discontented, so ill-kept, so wanting in proper discipline, and you used to say that when you had a house of your own, it should be as beautiful outside as inside, and the house should be full of music, and though you could not afford expensive pictures and furniture, yet whatever you had should be the very best of its kind, and you said that by a little giving and taking, and by a little concession, a home might be made into a kind of heaven. Those were sweet words, they were beautiful; how have they been realized? Do not tell me, but answer mentally; how is your house? I may never enter it. Is it full of costly furniture, indicating great affluence, or is it full of the wealth of the soul and the mind and the heart? Is love the spirit of the house? Is the good old family altar standing just where it was? Is the Bible in its place on that altar, the center of the house and the chief of its riches? Answer yourself, answer God.

Then what a church-life we were going to live—all of us! When we entered the church, what a model career we were going to complete! We were going to be gentle, courteous, true-minded, large-hearted; we were never going to take offense at anything; we were never going to listen with the ears of criticism, but with the inner ears of necessity, patience and appreciation. We were going to do everything in our power to make the church such a place as was hardly to be found in any other part of the world; we would not curl our nostrils, even if an ill-dressed person sat next us in the pew. We were going to hold up the minister in prayer and sustain him in love.

How is it now? You remember the poor person that wanted to come into your pew, and you pointed that one to the other end of the church. Any critical remarks? Any desire to show your supernatural quickness in detecting mistakes and want of continuity in the discourse? Any unkind and bitter little speeches about other people? I ask questions, you may consider what answer to give.

Let me add to the criticism the gospel which says, We may every one begin again. I feel as if I had written a great warm truth that might touch the home, church, and many persons, and do a gracious work. Brothers, fellow-breakers of the ideals we started with, we may every one begin again. What say you to that gospel opportunity and gospel challenge? Let each say, "I will arise and go to my Father"; let each one say, "I will arise and go to my ideal, I have wounded thee, dishonored thee, fallen infinitely short of thee in every particular. I am no more worthy that thou shouldst be associated with me." We may begin again.

We have finished the page that is now under our hand, and now we turn over a new leaf—white as snow, no trace of the bad writing upon it. We may begin at the very top, and write, line by line, down to the end, without an erasure, a mistake, a blur, a blot. Oh, brother! Thy life's new page is now laid before thee! Take heed how thou writest thereon! At the end, the best writer amongst us will have to say, What I have written, I have written; would it were worthy.

CHURCH NEWS

A REAL HEROINE

The writer has just returned from a ten-days series of meetings in the old South church at Haverhill, Mass. The ten days were most pleasantly spent in spite of the fact that New England was in the grip of the coldest weather since February, 1917. Our meetings were good in spite of a heavy snow and a temperature of 32 degrees below zero.

But the real purpose of this article is to speak of the work of one who deserves far more credit than any of us can give. I refer to the work of Miss Freda Kirkendall, of Huntington, Indiana, who is doing the work of about three workers while on that field.

As most of us know, Miss Kirkendall has charge of our "Americanization work" in Haverhill, and she has a big world before her, and meets its needs by working seven days per week and about fifteen hours per day. I spent ten days on the field, and I have wondered a number of times since just when she slept and took her meals.

I said she had the world before her. Proof: Haverhill has a population of (1921) 64,000, and there are 19,500 of these who are foreigners, mixed up with fifty-two nationalities, who speak forty-eight different languages. Several of these nations are represented on her work. I attended her Italian school, Boy Scout meeting, and a number of her class meets, and every one of them were packed with fine things, which were interesting not only to those in the class but to the man who looked on. Miss Kirkendall is doing a great work for the Christian Church there. The work progresses, and one can see that the few months she has been on the field have certainly not been wasted.

At present she has a number of strong young men from the Italian Sunday school that are ready for church membership. I met and talked with those young men, and they are all splendid fellows. The great volume of the work there will call for more workers soon, and here is hoping the proper help is found to do the right kind of service. Miss Kirkendall's interest, inspiration, enthusiasm and loyalty to her Church are not excelled in all the denomination. All this supported by a strong, stalwart body and mind, and a willingness to make any needed sacrifice for Christ, enables her to carry on this work.

I refer to her as a "real heroine." That is what she is, for no one would sacrifice home-ties, give up a fine position, and take a place of this kind at a sacrifice of salary, and do this work, who does not possess the spirit of a real heroine. God is blessing her work there and the only thing needed to make her work a great success is the proper backing by the denomination as a whole and the local church of Haverhill.

The Mission Board certainly made no mistake in starting this work, and I predict that the coming years will mean much to the denomination in that field. I say this because of the interest our Home Mission Secretary, Dr. O. S. Thomas, puts in it, and the strong personality of the worker he has on the field. If she were weak and tottering, other denominations would already have taken her, but one of the things you will have to appreciate is the fact that she is loyal to the Christian Church, and not jumping from one denomination to another trying to find a big job with a fat salary.

I have written at length of this work and worker, and would close my message with this: A gigantic problem, an unmeasured, unlimited responsibility, and an unthinkable task, attached to a world-wide opportunity for service, is found in this field, with a live, wide-awake, consecrated, loyal worker on the field, and our Church as a whole can ill afford to neglect it in any way.

CALLED HOME

MITCHELL.—L. D. H. Mitchell was born March 10, 1849, and died January 22, 1922, aged 72 years, 10 months and 12 days. He was buried the following day in the family burying ground near his home in Chatham County, near Pittsboro, N. C. He professed faith in Christ when a young man and joined the Baptist Church and lived a consecrated life. He leaves a wife and one son to mourn his going. May the blessing of God abide with the loved ones. Funeral was conducted by the writer.

RIGGSBEE.—T. R. Riggsbee departed this life on January 19, 1922, and was buried January 21, at New Hill, N. C., in the Lashley burying ground. He professed faith in Christ when a young man and joined the Baptist Church. Later he joined the Christian Church. He leaves to mourn his passing a wife, one daughter, one brother, and many friends. He was a member of the Junior Order and was buried under the rules of that Order. Funeral conducted by the pastor. May God bless and comfort the loved ones.

J. S. CARDEN.

JOHNSON.—Mrs. Isabella Johnson, wife of the late Samuel A. Johnson, Sr., died January 29, 1922, at the home of her son, John D. Johnson, Lillington, N. C. She was nearing her 78th birthday, and for many years was a member of Wake Chapel Christian church. She was a woman loved by all who knew her, I think, for her piety and saintliness. It is said of her that she never spoke against any one and that no one has been heard to say aught of her.

She has left behind two sons and three daughters. The two younger daughters, Lora and Lillian, were at one time students at Elon.

May our Lord bless and keep these until they shall meet again.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

PHILLIPS.—Charlie Lee Phillips, son of Robert and Catherine Phillips, was born February, 1875, and died December 24, 1921, at the age of 47 years. About 1897 he married Miss Anna Newton, who survives him. He is also survived by his mother, one brother, James Phillips, and one sister, Mrs. Roxy Brewer. For several years he was a member of the Baptist Church, but five years ago united with Hebron Christian church. His death occurred very unexpectedly at his home near Averett, Mecklenberg County, Virginia. Brother Phillips was one of the best farmers of his community. He began life practically penniless and by industrious and intelligent farming accumulated a good estate. He was kind-hearted and very charitable. The widow and orphan, in his death, have lost a true friend.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT— GARDNER

We wonder sometimes at the passing away of the young and beautiful, but when we remember in whose hands they are, we cry out, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be His holy Name!"

The hearts of loved ones and friends were made sad when the spirit of Carrie Gardner took its flight to her heavenly home. She will be greatly missed in her home and her church. Therefore, be it resolved:

First—That we bow in humble submission to our heavenly Father's will, knowing that he doeth all things well, and that our loss is Heaven's gain;

Second—That the church has lost one of its young members; although she has not been with us in quite a while, we know she was interested in everything pertaining to her beloved church;

Third—That we offer our heart-felt sympathy to those that loved her, bidding them to strive the harder to attain the heavenly mansion prepared for them by God Himself;

Fourth—That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the bereaved family, a copy to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy spread on the minutes of Liberty Spring Christian church records.

HAZING

By M. L. Patrick

(From Maroon and Gold)

The desire to establish and the attempts to maintain class distinctions in all colleges have invariably led to hazing. Whatever methods may have been necessary in the past to insure this distinction are justifiable for what they are worth, and no more. We know this: Brutal forms of punishment, as were once employed to reprimand "fresh" students, have no place in the modern college. Harsh treatment toward the Freshmen is no longer a safe policy and should not be tolerated. Hazing should be abolished as a useless and unjustifiable practice.

But this brings on the question of what constitutes hazing? The statute of North Carolina says that hazing may be defined to be "to annoy by playing abusive or ridiculous tricks upon any student, to frighten, scold, beat or harass, or to subject him to personal indignity." Besides being liable to a misdemeanor, the student who is guilty of hazing is automatically expelled from the college or school he is attending. Another article of the hazing law states that the restrictions shall not be applicable to females.

The framers of the above law were, we assume, at one time college students, and no doubt enjoyed the benefits of class distinctions, whether they participated in formerly used in reprimanding an unruly student, in order that the practice of torturing and abusing students might be eliminated from the schools and colleges. But in their zeal to rid the educational institutions of this baneful practice, the legislators have left the present-day student without any means to preserve the class distinctions that they, the legislators, once enjoyed.

Class distinctions are just as desirable now as they formerly were. No college student, beyond the Freshman year, denies the fact that older students should enjoy certain college privileges that are denied to younger students. We can not conceive of any college that really wants to put the Freshmen on an equal basis with the rest of the classes.

Efforts to preserve class distinctions are still made by institutions that are opposed to hazing. And to do this they had to use methods that are prohibited by law. An example of this may be found at State College. There they have what is known as a "Court of Custhe" methods that were employed to give them these privileges or not. They were, we further assume, conscientious in their efforts to abolish hazing. Hence the stringent laws on the question. No law is carried out to the letter. Therefore we see quite clearly that the aims of the above law were to prohibit methods, mild or harsh, that were toms," composed of seven students from the Sophomore, Junior and Senior classes, whose duty it is to enforce the "Code of Customs." Now, it seems that since this code was formulated by the House, it is legal so far as the student government at that institution goes. All students observe these rules, but they apply especially to Freshmen. A new man entering college is informed immediately of the customs of the campus, and is expected to govern his conduct accordingly. If a student violates the code he is reported to the court, which tries his case, and punishes him publicly. However, the convicted student has the right to appeal to the Student Council, who must confirm the decision of the court before the sentence is carried out. One of the methods employed is to force the convicted student to run down a line of students and take his chances with belt straps.

Now, according to the act prohibiting hazing, running the gauntlet could be interpreted as hazing. But it may be contended that this form of punishment is not hazing, since it is held publicly and has the approval of the students. But it is questionable whether the Student Self Government at any institution has the authority to place this interpretation on the statute. Be that as it may, it is clear that the colleges and the students in North Carolina realize that they must still use certain methods to preserve class harmony and to insure good conduct on the campus.

This is another point showing the undue stringency in the hazing laws. It is highly probable that if the hazing laws were enforced—and they can not be—seventy-five per cent of the male college students in North Carolina would be subject to immediate expulsion. And besides being stringent, the law is somewhat inconsistent. For instance, the so-called act prohibiting hazing is not applicable to female students. Under the existing law, annoying your fellow students, whether by frightening, scolding, or playing abusive tricks, is termed hazing. With all due respects to the fair sex, who doubts that the girls are any less capable of annoying their friends than are the boys?

The time has come when the laws governing hazing should be made to abolish that form of punishment which menaces the peaceful pursuance of a college course, and not to attempt to bar all former methods, effective though they be, by legislating against all forms of insignificant daily occurrences in college life. The remedy for real hazing rests not in petty legislation, but in the enforcement of just such laws as will remove students from the benefits of a college education who persist in jeopardizing the peace and safety of their fellow-students.

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Old Paths

By REV. P. H. FLEMING, D. D.

Burlington, North Carolina

We are living in a world distressed and distraught. It is old, cold, weary and worn in sin, selfishness and bloody wars. It is torn by sin, doubt and unbelief. It is blindly wandering on in the deep, dark night, crying for light and leadership. The regrets of yesterday, the fears of today and the doubts of tomorrow haunt the way.

There has never been a greater need of leadership and spiritual guidance than now. We have heard of "the present crisis" until it has become a nauseating morsel. That there is a crisis is evident, and having discovered the malady, let us find the cure and apply the remedy.

The present crisis is age-old in its cause and the remedy is as old as the curse. Sin is the cause and grace is the remedy. Repentance towards God and faith in Christ and obedience to Him will solve the world's problems, bring peace, and give rest. There is but one remedy, and that is Jesus Christ. The pulpit needs to preach the simple gospel of Jesus Christ; to call sinful man to repentance, faith, hope and love; to tell how Jesus came to seek and to save the lost; to go out into the highways and hedges and tell the travelers and lodgers there the wondrous story of the Cross; to go down where there is sin, sorrow, suffering and fallen ones, and tell them of Christ's love and power to save.

The heart of man is strangely hungry for the simple gospel that tells of sin, calls to repentance and holy living. A heart seeking truth, light and strength goes not to church to be amused, entertained, lectured—but to worship, to be warned, instructed, helped, steadied, strengthened, encouraged, comforted. Give not such hearts a stone—but the Bread of Life. "Ask for the old paths where is the good way and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls."

The good old paths are paths of repentance and righteousness. They are the paths that saints have walked. The way is good, safe, direct; and its destination, rest, heaven.

The Local Church's Function

THE function of the local church is to function. This is the briefest analysis of the situation, but as to how it should function seems to be a thing that many of us disagree upon, or at least we act in different ways in the endeavor to get the local church to function. There is something more for the local church to do than merely to exist. When we discover what that something more is, and then put it to use, a worth-while discovery will be made.

Observing the ways of many local churches, it would seem that their function is to meet at regular times; do the same thing the same way at all times; hold a revival meeting once a year, and report to the Conference. All these things the local church should do, and it is a part of the function of the local church; but have we not, through some strange logic, confined the function of the local church to these things only?

Getting members is only a part—and a very small part—of the work of the local church. The care and training of them, their development, if you please,—these things are the high motives, worthy objects, and high-born functions of the local church. Getting a man into the church is only a part of the program and the responsibility of the Kingdom's work.

Why is it not as important to train the church member in Kingdom-leadership, in Christian service, and in the spirit of benevolence, as it is to have his name on the record book? How is it that we arrive at the conclusion that every year a revival must be held in the church, and at the same time fail to provide systematic work and development for the members received?

Is it not just as important to train and develop the members that are already in the church as it is to get in others? Why put emphasis on numbers and say nothing about service and development? Why let those inside die for the lack of spiritual exercise while chasing after more members?

Is it not just as reasonable that we should have periods for decision for those who are already members as it is for those who are not? We mean decision for larger Christian development. Brother pastor, all your members may not be systematic givers. Then why not have a period each year that others of your members may decide to give systematically? There may be those of your number who have not decided definitely to take some active part in the local church. Then why is it not important to have a period each year for them to decide to do this? There may be those of your number who would like to develop themselves through some form of Christian service. Then why not have a period each year for such decisions? The Christian life is not complete. The Christian life is a life of progress, and the average man is desirous of doing something. He does not care about being "canned" and stuck away for an ornament. He wants to do something.

Our Men and Millions Forward Movement had, and does have, for one of its high motives the constant development of the membership of the local church. Just at this time the local churches and pastors are asked to lay the matter of tithing and Christian stewardship squarely before the membership, not in any sensational way, but as a matter of Kingdom-business. There are pastors who will do this, and there are those who will not. If we were the pastor of a church we would, at some regular service, after the closing of the preliminaries, go before the audience in a plain, practical and sympathetic manner—not in a sermon, if you please, but in a heart to heart talk—and there before our people whom we were endeavoring to lead and develop, explain to them the relation of a man's money to his God; we would explain and testify to the joy of systematic giving; we would substantiate our talk with Biblical references; and there, in the presence of our people, would ask for solemn and deliberate decisions that our own should be converted to the ways and means and the methods of giving. We would let those who made such decision come forward and dedicate their lives there, and by such act, just as they did when they were converted. We would endeavor to make it a solemn occasion.

Now that would be no campaign; that would be no drive; that would be no high-pressure method; it would be the endeavor of an honest heart to lead his people. And here the service would end, without a long sermon or unnecessary lecture.

Wealth creates an obligation. Man cannot pile up wealth and say, "This is mine."

Being good is not enough. You must prove to the world that you are good for something.

A person often finds himself or herself by reading a book. New books are important, and we cannot neglect to have them in our homes.

The man who is able to do better and yet does out to the Lord's work a pittance of ten cents a week pays a poor tribute to what Christianity has done for him.

Editing and Publishing A Church Paper

Talks With Our Readers—No. 4

DEAR JOHN:—

I have read your communication with much pleasure and note that you insist that I tell you what I had in mind when I said in a recent report that a radical change would have to come in Church journalism.

My observation is that every department in the Church enlarges before the facilities of the Church paper increase. Church departments are being multiplied; and, of course, each department asks immediately for a page in the Church paper. This is true of all Church papers.

I have mailed you several copies of The Christian Sun, and you, no doubt, have observed the different classified pages. There are several of these classified departments that we did not have a few years ago; and yet—with the exception of a very short time—The Christian Sun has been sixteen pages since I can recall. You can see, therefore, that we have multiplied our organizations, but we have not increased the number of pages in our Church paper. What is the result? As I see it, it has been about as follows: The Editor is called upon to see that the different departments get in each week, and after these have been provided for there is little room for anything else.

If The Sun should carry each week a page of stories for the children, I am convinced that the paper would go into hundreds of homes where it is not going.

Today I met a man, a good friend of mine, a loyal member of the Church, as well as an intelligent farmer. He said he did not feel able to take but one paper, and that was The Christian Sun. He stated further, however, that unless some secular news appeared in it he would have to discontinue. He made it very plain that he did not depreciate the Church news, but that he thought a greater variety could be put into the paper. He is right.

There is another question, too, that is being discussed in the field of Church journalism just now, and that is the matter of only a very few in each denomination doing the writing to the Church paper. It is very true that not all men have the gift to write, but I am wondering how many preachers surprise their audiences enough on some Sunday morning, before or after the sermon, to speak to the young people about writing to the Church paper. We appeal to our young people for practically everything else, and I wonder what harm it would be to encourage the young people to write to the Church paper. You might think about these things as you contemplate your further development in the field of journalism.

In this connection I should possibly add this: There are those who will tell you that they take the Church paper to read such and such a thing each week, and that they cannot get along without this particular weekly feature in the paper. I sincerely appreciate this spirit, but there is a bit of selfishness in it. Those who insist and demand that something appear each week to fit their particular taste and liking should remember that there are others who have their likes and their tastes, and that for the sake of variety, and that the Church paper may reach more homes, they should not criticise and dislike the things that do not exactly suit their disposition.

And this one other illustration: A few days ago we met the pastor of one of our strongest churches, and he spoke to me as follows: "Riddle, I have always had a great desire that my children should read and love The Christian Sun, but I want to be plain with you and say that the papers that reach our home which contain stories and illustrations are the first read, and I can scarcely get my boys to read The Sun. It is practically a one-theme publication. I know that you are crowded with so much Church propaganda that you cannot widen your variety of reading matter."

Think over these things, dear John, as you plan your work, and decide whether or not they have worth and merit.

Sincerely and faithfully,

C. B. RIDDLE.

THIS AND THAT

It is easy enough for the local church, or the denomination, to wish that it had in its ranks certain men who do big things, but it is another thing for the denomination to discover these great qualities in young men and see that the Church gets them before the business world does.

When every pastor decides that he can put across the things in his own church without having to "import" outside help, it will be a new day for the local church and a marked degree of progress for the Kingdom.

Some of our esteemed contemporaries "hate" the Catholics enough to give them a great deal of free advertising. Every knock is a boost and our Catholic friends know it.

When we hear a preacher beating the air by criticizing the young people for their ways (because they are not like his) instead of preaching a gospel sermon and inspiring these young people to do something, we have a desire immediately to see his "call" papers.

The Church should be as eager to make capital out of every forward-looking and progressive young man as the business world.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part XVII.

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.
Field Secretary for Missions

UNDAY a. m., October 7.—This is a beautiful Sunday morning, and after a shower and a wholesome breakfast of hot toast dipped in glorious Porto Rican coffee we are off to Santa Isabel, some eighteen miles out from Ponce. By way of contrast with the joy of a glorious morning ride through beautiful tropical scenery we discuss graveyards! The government allows graves to be dug over after ten years, and another body deposited where one had slept for a decade. The trouble seems to be, however, that the grave-diggers will not allow the law to have its course, and not infrequently dig up bones of bodies that have not had ten years sepulture and bury a fresh body where the old one had been deposited much less than ten years ago. Barrett says practically the whole cemetery at Ponce has been dug over twice since he came here a little more than twenty years ago. We stopped and watched the grave-digger at his gruesome business, and when his spade would strike a human bone or scalp, as it frequently did, he would toss these out with his hand and go on with his digging. Neither do Porto Ricans bury their dead with bodies east and west as we do, but place them criss-cross in any and every direction. A cemetery in Porto Rico reminds one of a crazy quilt one sometimes sees on exhibition at county fairs.

Another rather uncanny topic of conversation we have on our way to Sunday school is about the Garrecha. This is a goad, some three feet, some nine feet long, to drive and guide oxen with. The law of the land allows a nail one-fourth of an inch long in the end of the garrecha. This nail is filed off to a very keen point, and the natives goad the oxen to a lively pace as they draw their loads to or from market this bright Sunday morning—for the market will close at noon. But the driver will not obey the law and instead of a very keen pointed nail one-fourth of an inch long, many have left them one-half, or an inch long. These they drive to the hilt into the skin and flesh of the oxen. I shall certainly be glad for the oxen's sake when this island is Christianized, for then these drivers will throw away their garrechas and employ some more humane method of making their teams go.

Our Santa Isabel Sunday school is full of life and activity. It is in session when we arrive. In Class No. 1 there were twelve boys from fourteen to twenty-two years old. Class No. 2 has nine little boys from two to five. My! they are bright, lively and interesting. A native lady teacher is in charge, and she is fine. Class No. 3 is a woman's class of five taught by Pastor Ojeda's very intelligent wife. Class No. 4 has fifteen girls from four to eight years old. Class No. 5 is taught this morning by Barrett, and has seventeen young ladies from fifteen to twenty-four, say. Class No. 6 is a Bible class of sixteen young men who discuss the Bible topics with very much animation and enthusiasm. These are all neatly dressed, intelligent, nice-looking young men, well behaved and evidently bent on learning the Bible. The teacher is principal or teacher in the high school, and has character and ability. In fact, all the children in the Sunday school are neatly clad, have on shoes and stockings and show signs of care and Christian training. There are present in the school this morning seventy, and the offering is $1.56. This school here in a heathen land would make some of our schools in the Christian States feel cheap and fare poorly in comparison. On the wall above the pulpit were inscribed in large letters the words Dios-es-Amor, which I take to mean, "God is Love." Underneath this inscription was a picture, "A Living Sacrifice." There was a clock on the wall to tell the preacher when he should stop. The house also has an organ, an elevated place used as a pulpit, a stand with a Bible on it, a decayed floor with holes in it, quite faded pink walls and a hundred and one other suggestions that we should have a decent house of worship here. When the school period was over, Minton made me talk, and I chose as my topic, "The Bible as a Love-Story." Then the librarian distributed tracts, Minton took a kodak of the school, and told me that I made a good talk to the school—this I presume to compensate me for his not talking. This is a splendid Sunday school, and when we get a decent house to hold it in there will be something worth while going on here. We went on to Salinas and had lunch with Miss Williams. At 1:30 we went out to the Playa, one and a half miles from Salinas by the sea. We have here a small, open, dilapidated building that seats thirty. It has half a dozen benches, a painted pulpit, a Bible and some song books. There were thirty in Sunday school—one naked child. They say the children show no disposition or desire to be clothed until they are three or four years old, so why clothe them? After Minton had made a good talk I brought to the school greetings from Rev. T. E. White. The audience, for the most part White's converts, was melted to tears, and their feelings were most tender when thinking or hearing of White. We went to the now desolate and forsaken house in which lived and died Don Federico Tores. He professed faith under White's preaching at the age of sixty-eight and died three weeks ago at the age of eighty. He had much to try him and shake his faith, but Miss Williams says he lived true in the faith to the end, remained loyal to his Lord and the church, and with his dying breath, his last words were, "Yo muero en la fe del Senor Jehu," which means, "I die in the faith of the Lord Jesus." He died in perfect peace, happiness and composure. All through his last long suffering he sang hymns of praise to his God.

As I stand now in the house where he died and make this entry in my diary, I really feel that I am on holy ground. For from this spot three weeks ago one of God's genuine heroes and faithful servants was translated from this shack of a house to that home above, that house not made with hands, eternal and in the heavens. It seems that here, in this sacred spot, sanctified by the death of a real saint, I can almost hear the voice of God in Revelation 2: 10: "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."

Out near the house tall cocoanut trees are growing, and a boy climbs one at Miss Williams' request and knocks down a green cocoanut for each one of the party, that we may have a fresh and good drink of water. The immature cocoanut holds about a quart of the purest, best water, and we are all refreshed with drinking.

At 3:30 we go to La Marea, a preaching-place five miles from Salinas, and by the Caribbean Sea. It is a small chapel with five benches and a pulpit. Near this hall is a billiard room in full swing on this beautiful Sunday afternoon, and the hangers-on and players about the place are a sorry lot to behold—filthy, barefoot, scarcely half-clad, and hungry-looking.

The sea here makes out into a very shallow bay. This recedes with dry weather or the tides, and leaves an endless salt-bed. The natives dig up this salt, evaporate it in the sun, and carry it inland to be refined and shipped to—our tables for use. The salt is "gathered" in blocks twenty to fifty pounds to the block, very much as I have seen ice blocked and housed in winter at home. Just why the Caribbean Sea should make its great salt deposits here and not along the entire shore I do not know, unless it is because the shallows make out into a bay for miles here.

As we get back to Salinas about 4:30 a great baseball game is on, and the whole town and adjacent population seem to be on the scene. Evidently Porto Rieo is rapidly becoming Americanized. Minton goes back to Ponce to preach tonight. Martin goes to Santa Isabel to preach and say good-bye to his many friends and acquaintances there, while Barrett and I remain at Salinas for preaching. We have a most pleasant evening hour and supper with dear Miss Williams, whose hospitality is a joy. There is a pleasant service at the church, a ride by Santa Isabel for Martin and a happy arrival in Ponce before midnight. Minton said he had about one hundred to hear him at our Ponce church tonight, and there were twelve professions of faith in Christ. It has been a glorious, busy and happy day with us—and who knows that we three shall ever spend another Sunday in beautiful, yet poverty-stricken and needy Porto Rieo? These people need the gospel—that is all. God opened His hand wide when He created this island, and this land has been desecrated, is now desecrated with the hand of greed, and gain, and sin. There will be unnecessary sickness, premature death, and indescribable poverty, filth and want here, until the religion of our Lord shall clothe these people and give them their right mind.

And now, my diary, you get no more from me tonight, for as the clock strikes twelve "I lay me down to sleep."

THE weakest point in the Christian program today is the local church. Its weakest point is failure to utilize its members in service becoming their Christian profession. Here are some estimates recently issued by an expert, delineating the failure of local churches to function efficiently. One-half the members of the churches have no church-going habit; two-thirds contribute very little to the income of the church; three-fourths do not go to any religious service between Sundays; five-sixths have little or no interest in general church enterprises; nine-tenths do no work for Christ, either in teaching, public prayer, administrative or benevolent work, or any other work that means real service; nineteen-twentieths never lead a soul to Christ; in the average church a half-dozen or two individuals gather into their hands all the offices of the church; the vast majority of the members of the church are indifferent to its progress.

This view may be said to be overdrawn—it is overdrawn, but we may safely conclude that the next great movement in Christendom will be the development of the local church. This will be especially true of the congregationally independent bodies such as our own Christian Church. Of us it may be truly said that we are no stronger denominationally than our weakest local unit. With us, progress cannot descend from above downward. It must originate locally and ascend upward to Conference and Convention.

The projectors of our Men and Millions Forward Movement knew this and launched their campaign accordingly. The hope and design of this Movement was so to train and utilize local leadership through a period of five years that at the end of that time a permanent uplift should have come to the local church because it would be possessed of the best methods of Church work, along four very essential lines—finances, personal work, stewardship, and enlisting life-work recruits for the Kingdom. The thought that the Movement would become static at the end of four brief months of herculean effort was absolutely foreign to the mind of those who spent their force in that cause.

We rejoice now that the initial spirit of the Movement is returning to its aid and that local captains with the local women leaders and their assistants, plus our pastors, are being asked between now and the Convention to double the number of tithers through local effort. Let me emphasize "through local effort." It would be a great mistake, it seems to me, to undertake to secure these additional tithers through high pressure methods from the outside. They can be secured that way, but a people who accustom themselves to respond to great appeals only under the spur of strong outside influence are spiritual epileptics—they run the Kingdom by spasms, when God's plan is systematic orderliness. The church that through its pastor and local leaders secures its due quota of tithers in this stewardship campaign which Doctor Atkinson is now conducting will acquire new power for achievement in every line of Christian effort. The church that shall remain impotent to proceed without outside stimulation may fool itself into thinking it is developing energies and capacities for future conquests. What it is really doing is administering an opiate to its vital energies rather than stimulating them. After every such period of over-stimulation from without a deadening period of exhaustion ensues. We want no such slump in the normal development of our Zion. The only way to escape such calamity is to engage in this stewardship campaign with local talent. Only through such work conscientiously and faithfully performed by local workers who love the Kingdom and yearn for the growth of its enterprises, can we ever hope to correct the weaknesses mentioned in the first paragraph of this article as characterizing the churches of this nation generally.

The local church is under special necessity to utilize its members in genuine Christian service and to discover and develop the talent of its young. But of those items at a more convenient season.

W. A. HARPER.

THE CONFERENCE REFERENDUM

On November 21, 1921, I sent out to the elders, licentiates, candidates, members of the Woman's Board, and original incorporators of the North Carolina Christian Conference the following personal communication:

Dear Friend:—

Three years ago the three Christian Conferences in North Carolina merged into one. There has been a feeling on the part of some that this was a mistake. If so, we can correct it. The matter was brought up in the Conference recently held in Danville, and after much discussion on the part of the brethren, I introduced a resolution to this effect, which was carried without a dissenting vote:

Resolved: That the Executive Committee take a referendum vote of the churches on the following three propositions:

1. Shall we have one united Conference in North Carolina as at present?
2. Shall we divide into three Conferences as before the merger?
3. Shall we divide into two Conferences, using as the dividing line the Cape Fear and Haw Rivers to Haw River, thence the North Carolina Railroad to Durham, and thence the Durham and Keyville Railroad to Keyville?

I introduced this resolution in the interest of the Kingdom of Christ. We want only what is best. Will you please send me in the enclosed stamped envelope your personal preference as touching these three proposals and the advantages that would accrue from the proposition you favor?

I will esteem this a personal kindness, since I am anxious to know your view in order to make up my own judgment respecting the matter.

Kindly write on the reverse side of this letter.

Date

Dr. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C.

Dear Sir:—

In regard to the three propositions set forth on the reverse side of this letter, I personally favor proposition number

I think this proposition has the following advantages for our work in North Carolina and for the Kingdom of Christ:

.....

Sincerely,

(Signed)

(Address)

The result of this straw ballot of leading individuals of high position interested in the Conference has been tabulated as follows:

For One Conference:

Elders, 14; Licentiates, 1; Woman's Board, 5; Original Incorporators, 4. Total, 24.

For Two Conferences:

Elders, 15; Licentiates, 3; Candidates, 3; Woman's Board, 1; Original Incorporators, 1. Total, 23.

For Three Conferences:

Elders, 10; Licentiates, 4; Candidates, 2. Total, 16.

I had thought to give the individual vote of each person answering my letter. I may do that yet, but some of them considered the matter personal. I trust these facts will help the churches arrive at a judicious and helpful decision.

W. A. HARPER.

ON CONFERENCE DIVISION

 HERE are only two ways to teach people—orally and by the printed page. The printed page leaves out the personality and thereby creates but little enthusiasm, which is quite an asset. Oral teaching throws the personality into the soul of the hearer. To do this it is necessary to come in contact with the people.

These methods of teaching, or rather the personal contact method, can be realized better through three Conferences than in one, or even two. The tendency of religious bodies at the present is to break up into smaller groups. When I first entered the ministry, the Methodist Episcopal Church had only one Conference in North Carolina, and that took in a part of Virginia. Finally, the part of Virginia was left off, and next came a division in the North Carolina Conference, making it into two instead of one.

I was a member of the Missionary Baptist church at Cedar Fork, Wake County, North Carolina, and learned something of the method and enthusiasm of the Baptist brethren. They believed in small Associations—they still believe in small Associations—and have sixty-six Associations in North Carolina. (I have these figures from the office of The Biblical Recorder). The Baptists work from the local church to the Association; from the Association to the State Conference, and from the State Conference to the Southern Convention. We, in my judgment, should go from the local church to the small Conference, and then to our Southern Convention. We certainly cannot reach our weak rural churches with only one Conference.

When the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference met at Shallow Well church with the delegates from the Deep River Conference, the very best talent of the two bodies was there, and after thoughtful consideration it was decided to unite the two Conferences and then divide into three. This matter was talked over at the Wake Chapel Conference the year before the Shallow Well Conference met. It seems to me, from what is given in The Christian Annual, that the three Conferences did good work.

Of course, I was connected with the Eastern North Carolina Conference and can, therefore, speak more definitely of it than I can of the others. There was built in the Eastern Conference a good church at Sau-ford under the energetic labors of Brother G. R. Underwood, aided by the support of the Home Mission Committee. Lee's Chapel was under the faithful efforts of Brother P. T. Klapp and the church at Henderson under the efforts of Brother M. W. Butler and Brother C. E. Newman. These points were also aided by the Home Mission Committee. A church was also built at Chapel Hill. The church at Pleasant Hill (J), which had no preacher for several years, was, through the energy of Brother J. D. Wicker, revived and built up to be a strong church. The church at Raleigh was improved by building Sunday school rooms by the faithful efforts of Rev. L. F. Johnson, pastor at that time. The churches at Franklinton and Mebane were organized and well under way before the Conference division. While the Eastern Conference was in existence quite a number of our churches were remodeled.

The one Conference has, by some cause, weakened the Sunday schools, as shown from the 1920 volume of The Christian Annual. The Sunday school report shows that the three Conferences reported one hundred and sixteen churches and ninety-five Sunday schools with a total enrollment of 7,628. Less than fifty per cent of these schools reported to our Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention last July. We had at that Convention a representation from thirty-five schools, with twelve schools being represented without delegates. These forty-seven schools reported a membership of 4,669 with an average attendance of 1,859. We had present at this Convention seventeen pastors, seven superintendents, 101 delegates, 129 visitors—a total of 254. The last registration of this Convention in the Eastern North Carolina Conference was 247.

I would like for Rev. G. R. Underwood, or some one, to tell me of the work done in the Western North Carolina Conference, and for Rev. J. W. Holt, or some one else, to tell of the work done in the North Carolina Conference.

There is an advantage to our professors at the college by having three Conferences. With three Conferences one professor can go to his Conference one week, the next week another, and so on until three professors have attended their Conferences. In this way the absence of the teachers does not count against their work as if three were to attend one Conference at the same time. Again, in three Conferences you get three days of educational work, three days of missionary work, and three days of the work of the Woman's Board, while in one Conference you get only one of each of these important matters.

We must go out into the "highways and hedges" if we are to "lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes." This we cannot do with one Conference.

I believe that the sooner this question is settled, the better it will be for the Church that we love so well.

I have written this in Christian love and fellowship for all.

PROSPECTS OF PEACE

PEACE triumphant through Christian principles has risen higher on the horizon of our new age. The Washington Conference which now comes to a close after about three months session, has been instrumental in throwing open the door of secret diplomacy, and made the greatest definite step toward world peace, probably of all times. Its keynote was based on frankness, fairness, and good will toward men of all races and creeds. These qualities also were championed by Christ nearly two thousand years ago.

It is not laws, rules and regulations that make peace. It is the heart and point of view. The latter is what the Washington Conference represents—a changed point of view of the principal and governing nations of the world, from that of uncertainty, suspicion, and misunderstandings which breed wars and rumors of wars, to that point of view in which nations take inventory of themselves and recognize their weakest links. It did something to strengthen these links, which entitles it to be the first definite step toward the era of internationalism ushered in through former President Wilson's leadership in the Great War. Contrary to the expectations of many, this conference, in the belief of world leaders, has strengthened rather than weakened co-operation among all nations, which is the only real hope for eliminating wars and the establishment of peace.

The greatest progress of the conference toward peace was undoubtedly made in the Far East. Before the conference was called by President Harding, it was almost a common belief that war must result over the ill-relations between this country and Japan. Talk of the "Yellow Peril," added to the commercial and economic rivalries and jealousies, not only between a few interests in this country in Far Eastern trade, but also between territorial interests of other countries, including Great Britain, strained relations more and more. The Japanese immigration problem in California was a constant irritant which spread all over the United States, increasing suspicion and thoughts of Japan's sinister design. The Japanese occupation of Shantung, their treatment of the Koreans apparently as slaves, and plans for larger and ever increasing navies, gave forebodings of trouble in the future.

But this conference has practically cleared up every cause of friction and suspicion between powers of this part of the world. The ten-year naval holiday announced by Mr. Hughes paved the way for the Four-Power Treaty, in which the nations pledged themselves to frank and honest dealings over all the islands in the Pacific. More important still is the recent treaties in which practically all the powers of the Pacific, including Great Britain, the United States, France, Holland, and Japan pledged themselves for the maintenance of an "open door" in China and the protection of her integrity. Japan gives back Shantung. All of these accomplishments came to decision through frank and face-to-face discussions between the powers concerned. And each power learned to appreciate the sincerity of the other—which was indeed the greatest accomplishment.

Certainly all the problems in the Far East are not solved. Russia was not present to speak against the Japanese hold in Siberia; and there are still some Japanese troops in Manchuria. But Japan agrees to withdraw from Siberia, and who can doubt her good will and her pledged word for future co-operation?

Turning to the European angle of the movement for peace, the first great prospect is the Anglo-Saxon bond welded between this country and Great Britain. Aside from the conference, a very important event in this direction is the settlement of the Irish trouble. Great Britain, in speaking for all of her dominions, showed her sincerity in every possible way, in sacrificing her motto to "build two ships to one against any rival power"; and in her crusade against the submarine, which she would abolish altogether. She could not accomplish the latter step, however, as she was blocked principally by France.

Unfortunate France, struggling through fear and jealousy of Germany's growth, was the only country really out of tune. But in spite of her plea for land armament and the recent political changes in her government, France and Great Britain are bidding for better relations; and one has many reasons to believe in the sincerity of the two allies. Great Britain wants to build up Europe economically; while France wants to aid in the same thing, she is more precarious in attaining it. Italy, Holland, Belgium, Portugal and Holland have all contributed to more peaceful relations in Europe.

There may be contention regarding this country's future intentions: whether she will evolve the promised scheme for an association of nations, or whether she will eventually join the League of Nations. Who can deny that the Washington gathering of the nations has not eliminated many problems which stood in the way of our joining the League? The conference has been an international education to the people of the United States. When we know more about each other, then we lose suspicion and eliminate wars. It is not the law we want, but a spirit to carry out the law, which is a Christian spirit. That only can preserve the peace of the world.

SUFFOLK LETTER

 HERE is another line called the "plow-line." It is of small cost and does no work; but it connects a man with a horse or a mule and helps to feed the world. It is a sort of friendly relation between man-sense and horse-power. It unites the intelligence of man and the strength of animals. The man could not plow the field by his own strength, and the mule would not know how. It, therefore, appears that ignorance does not prevent useful service, and intelligence may be helpless. The electric line is another one of those lines in the hand of man that connects his genius with otherwise useless power. There is a still finer line of connection between man and God. That is invisible; but it lays hold upon Omnipotence. There are other lines on pages of books into which poets have breathed their highest thoughts, and musicians have expressed heavenly harmonies. But this letter deals with that common plow-line discolored by the sweat of the mule as he trudges up and down the furrow. That line has been held by many an honest hand throughout many a hot summer day. That army the largest on earth, has never known the eight-hour day. From sunrise to sunset the sound of gee, haw, punctuates the furrows till the day is done. That business has never increased the taxes of a nation, never been subsidized, and never lowered the morals of a people. The furrows are akin to the "path of the just as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." The boy that plows all day will sleep at night. When he folds up the plow-line and hang it on the hames, he and mule go home to rest.

Talk about the reins of government, but here on the farm are the lines without which the world would die. Where are the resources of food and raiment for the peoples whose numbers climb beyond the billion? In the soil; on the farm; under the furrow; in the plain; on the hill; up the mountain-side. The grain, the cotton, the fruits, are all in debt to the plow. That cotton line that a boy can handle is more than a scepter; it is a line of producing power—the symbol of a harvest to satisfy a hungry race. It is more: it is a sign of faith in God, in seasons, and in soil. It ties man and God together to multiply the loaves and fishes till all are satisfied. That line will never fulfil its true mission till it ties the heart of the man to the life of the mule. It is well enough for the hand of the man to control the mouth of the mule by a line, the mule's value deserves more than stall and food. He deserves kindness, appreciation, sympathy, and care. He is the dumb friend of man. He is the burden-bearer of the race. He is the bread-winner of the world. His needs are few, but they should be met in love. He receives no pay for his work but shelter and food, while man struts about and demands more pay. Solomon says: "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise." One might say: "Go to the mule, thou dissatisfied; consider his ways, and learn." The mule has never had his due. He has been under the sway of autoeracy. It is time he shared in the democratic blessings of which we boast. We have seen the shackles taken from the slave. It is time to liberate dumb beasts from bad treatment and even neglect. Machinery is doing something to lift the burden on a large scale; but the millions of small farms must use the ox, the horse, and the mule; and there is nothing sweeter than the song of field hands, holding the plow-lines, and singing in the cool of the day. No concert is more genuine, and hearts are happier as they sing. All nations have gone to their ruin when rural and agricultural life have been supplanted by great cities with their congestion and their lust.

1922 CONVENTIONS

Georgia and Alabama Conference—Rev. R. F. Brown, Columbus, Ga., President. Convention at Columbus, Ga., in April.

Virginia Valley Central Convention—Mr. R. A. Larrick, Winchester, Va., President. Convention at Mt. Olivet (R), Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 17-19.

North Carolina Convention—Mr. C. H. Stephenson, Raleigh, N. C., President. Liberty (Vance), July 11-13.

Eastern Virginia Convention—Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., Norfolk, Va., President. Ocean View, Va., third week of July.

The Alabama Conference plans to hold its Convention in April.

Are you planning to go to your Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention this year?

As Convention officers and committees are beginning to think of and plan for their 1922 Conventions, the time has come for Sunday school and Christian Endeavor workers to think about them, too. We should think first of why Conventions are held, and then of the part which we may have in them.

Conventions are held for the good of all our churches and their work. They have a four-fold contribution to make to our work.

Conventions are inspirational. Great addresses enthuse the local worker and send him back to his own task with a greater desire and determination to do his part. Successful leaders inspire him with a new and larger vision of the importance and the opportunity of the work in his own Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Society. The Convention needs every worker. Every worker needs the Convention for the inspiration it can give to him.

Conventions give the information upon which lasting inspiration is based. Every program must include practical information about how to do things, giving workable methods for attaining goals desired. Conventions afford the opportunity of exchanging ideas, and ideas exchanged mean ideas multiplied. Time allowed for Conference hours on the Convention program makes it possible for every delegate to go home with a very definite idea of how the problems of his own work have been solved by others, and with the information which will make possible definite forward steps in the work of the local church.

Conventions are social. They mean social contact and acquaintance with people engaged in the same work of Christian education. They make known to each other those working in the same Church to the same great end.

And, above all, Conventions are devotional. Periods of worship, which are more than mere opening exercises to fill in the time until tardy people have arrived, are the very soul of a Convention. The aim of the gathering is to do God's work in a better way. These periods of devotion furnish the power for realizing this aim. As the devotional life of the individual is stirred, the impulse for more consecrated effort is made stronger. Here is found the secret of success in the work of all of our church organizations.

Can you afford to miss this inspirational, knowledge-bringing, social, devotional gathering of the workers in your Conference?

In these months before the Conventions are held, we may have a part in their ultimate success. As the program committees are making plans, pray for them. Pray that God's wisdom may direct them in every step of the way. Pray that the programs may be shaped to make the largest contribution possible to the work. Then help to this end by writing to your President your suggestions regarding the program. He will be glad to know now what you are hoping to receive from the Convention program. The program is for you. To be most helpful, it must be made up from your point of view, taking into consideration local needs and problems. Help your officers with your suggestions. Then talk about the Convention to your workers, and plan to go. Pray—suggest—boost—go, and God will make the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Conventions in the Southern Christian Convention this year, the greatest gatherings ever held for the planning of a more effective work with the young people of our Church.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

GOD WILLS AND PROVIDES FOR THE SALVATION OF ALL MEN

“For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Savior, who will have all men to be saved and to come unto the knowledge of the truth.”—1 Tim. 2: 3, 4.

“He is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world.”—1 John 2: 2.

“Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth, for I am God and there is none else.”—Isa. 45: 22.

And notwithstanding all this, God's power to save is limited. Where there is no faith, God cannot save, for man's faith in God is his counterpart, for God cannot save a man against his will. God cannot save a man who does not meet the conditions of repentance towards God and faith towards our Lord Jesus, and yet God does all that is necessary to get man to meet these conditions. God does what He can to restrain him from his sins. He gives him power to reason, power of judgment and power of conscience. God even reasons with man about his salvation.

“Let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return to the Lord and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon.”—Isa. 55: 7.

“Come, now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord, though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.”—Isa. 1: 18.

God warns man of the danger of sin; He reproves man; He threatens him; He entreats him. God shows His great love for man in giving His Son to die that man might have life. In order to save man, God even chastens him. He sends His Spirit to strive with him; He sends His Gospel to him through His ministers; He gives His inspired word to him; He offers him a home in heaven; He bears long with his sins; He gives many promises of mercy and requires nothing unreasonable of man.

Now some sinners will not let God save them, for they want their way about it. They want to climb up some other way, perhaps on their morals, as the young lawyer, or by signing a card, as many are now, making their way into the membership of the Church, instead of being “born again,” as our Lord requires. God offers mercy but many reject it. The sinner's will is God's only barrier and renders Him powerless to save. God has the power and will to save, but many refuse to let him exercise that power. Now, sinner, what more can God do for you? What will your answer be?

THE BULLETIN

Dr. J. O. Atkinson delivered a series of lectures on missions at Elon College last week.

Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, Durham, N. C., was the speaker at Elon College last Sunday night, the service being held under the auspices of the local Y. M. C. A.

By the request of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America THE SUN has agreed to receive and transmit gifts for any of the suffering countries in Europe. In sending such gifts, donors will please state whether for the famine in Russia, Jewish Relief, Near East, etc. Any contributions received not designated will be sent to the relief committee where demand seems most pressing. We receive weekly bulletins on these things and endeavor to keep informed as to the situation.

The People's church, Dover, Delaware, Rev. R. C. Helfenstein, pastor, has recently enjoyed several worthwhile occasions. The St. Paul's Brotherhood of the church recently gave its eleventh annual banquet. The Dover papers carried a very flattering account of the occasion.

Dr. W. A. Harper was the speaker at the State Y. M. C. A. banquet held in Greensboro last week. Dr. Harper also spoke before the Ministerial Association last week on “A Suggested Program for Religious Education for Burlington.”

NOTICE

Some time ago we announced that we could no longer furnish “Merrill's Marriage Ceremony,” which has been so popular for a number of years, due to the fact that it is out of print. We have been endeavoring to secure a substitute and think that we have now found it—and one that excels. We have secured the little book called “One For Life.” It is a handsome book of limp, flexible binding, covered in pure white wedding paper, and contains 100 pages. It has the full ceremony with the usual quotations and poetry, a place for the photographs of the bride and groom, ample pages for the names of guests, the bridal gifts, wedding journey, a page for a piece of the wedding gown, signatures for those who desire to personally congratulate, and also a certificate to be filled out by the officiating minister and witnesses. “One For Life” sells for 65 cents the copy, postpaid, and we shall be glad to have orders for it from those who have desired the book that is out of print.

"TELL ME A STORY"

Editorial Note.—Some months ago we were forced, or at least we allowed ourselves to be forced, to give up the "Tell Me a Story" page in The Sun, in order to accommodate regular departmental matter. We knew that it was a mistake, but yielded to pressure. You may not, gentle reader, be interested in these stories, but in nearly every home where The Sun goes there are little folks who care nothing for the things in which we older ones are interested. And this is nothing against them. But if we give these little folks something in The Sun in which they are interested, they will associate these things with The Sun. Some day they will not be so interested in these stories, but they will have developed a fondness for The Sun, and will remain with it. This page, therefore, will appear, two issues each month; even the editorial must suffer to accommodate it.—C. B. R.

TRUE STORY OF MARY AND HER LITTLE LAMB

(Harry P. Shaw, in The Monroe Journal)

There are perhaps not any children of school age who have not heard of Mary's little lamb. And again there are not many that have heard the history connected with the little poem.

Mary B. Sawyer was born March 22, 1806, at Sterling, Mass. Mary was seven years old when twin lambs were born to a ewe that belonged to her father. The sheep mother refused to care for one as her own. So Mary took it and raised it with a mother's care. When the lamb was seven months old it followed Mary to school one day. Before the teacher came, some of the mirthful boys suggested that they put the lamb in Mary's desk, which they did. And the little lamb went to sleep, but waked up and began to kick and scrambled out of the desk. This is what made all the children laugh and play to see the lamb in school. Of course the teacher put the lamb out but never scolded Mary in the least. She only laughed with Mary and the children. The lamb stayed all day at school and went home with Mary that night, never to return to school again.

But that day was sufficient to gain fame for the immortal little lamb. For some time later John Roulstone, a Harvard student, was visiting the teacher and he heard of the lamb at school and sat down and wrote:

Mary had a little lamb,
Its fleece was white as snow;
And everywhere that Mary went
The lamb was sure to go.

It followed her to school one day,
Which was against the rule;
It made the children laugh and play,
To see the lamb in school.

So the teacher turned it out,
But still it lingered near;
And waited patiently about
Till Mary did appear.

This little historic lamb lived only two years. It was gored to death by a cow in the barn of Mary's father. The wool of the lamb was spun and knitted into hose for Mary by her mother. Mary never would wear the stockings but kept them in memory of the lamb.

History says many years later the Old South church in Boston was about to be sold for debt, then Mary with other young ladies got up a sale for the benefit of the church. Mary unraveled the stockings made from her pet lamb, cut the yarn in one-yard lengths and would it on cards on which she had written her name. The yarn and card were sold for 25 cents each. The sale of these stockings alone brought two hundred dollars, which saved the old historic South church of Boston from the sheriff's hammer.

Yes! Mary Sawyer married, we are told. She married a man by the name of Tyler. She lived in Somerville, Massachusetts, until 1889, when she died. History tells me that she was buried in Mt. Auburn cemetery near Boston, and that her tomb is beside that of the famous poet, Longfellow. Mary's husband died before she did, so after her death their home was turned into a play-ground for the children of Somerville.

SERMON FOR CHILDREN Cross Cuts

(Ellery Carroll Clapp, in Christian Work)

In the land of Somewhere there is a wondrous city Fair, and in the midst of the city is a Park Beautiful. Now this park is square; each side of equal length; and each of its four corners is fringed with beauteous green. In fact, much of the charm about this Park Beautiful consists in its square corners and untrampled fringe. But sometimes little boys and girls hurrying to school or on errands and thinking themselves late will cut across the corners square and mark the Park Beautiful with the prints of their little feet. It's easier, they think, to clip corners, but not if a policeman sees you!

And now, with your help, I am going to name the corners of the Park Beautiful in the city Fair. One is Truth, and as I am admiring it I seem to see little foot-prints just inside the angle, and as I examine them more closely they seem to spell a word, yes, here it is quite plain, now—l-i-e. Too bad! Someone has failed to observe the square corner Truth, and what is worse, I hear that Officer Conscience is after them!

Then I examine another corner of the beautiful park to see if any thoughtless soul has marred that, and lo, sure enough, across the corner Work I find little foot-prints which spell upon close inspection—s-h-i-r-k. Instead of going around some careless little body has cut across "Work" so that the park is marred.

And likewise the corner Patience has been cross-cut by a little zigzag trail which seems to spell t-e-m-p-e-r, and if this sort of thing continues our park will be no longer beautiful or square.

Yet one corner remains to be named, and that is for you to do, remembering your own cross-cuts, for your life is a park and God intends it to be ever beautiful with the help of Officer Conscience, for in no other way can we be square or our city fair. It is the lives of its citizens which make or mar.

STEWARDSHIP AND TITHING

SOME DISCUSSIONS BY REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

ONE KINGDOM NEVER FALLS

Kingdoms, empires, nations, republics, rise, flourish, and fall—all save one. There is one Kingdom that never falleth, and will never perish. That is the Kingdom of Heaven which God through the Church is establishing and enlarging on earth. Most kingdoms that have perished from the earth and whose names now are but a memory, did so from the wrong use of money. God's Kingdom on earth, this Kingdom of Heaven here that never falleth, is established and maintained financially by employing the freewill offering of its subjects. And our King has taught us that the best way to give the freewill offering and secure its full use for His Kingdom is through the principle and practice of the tithe.

A WORD ON TITHING FROM PORTO RICO

In a personal letter from Brother D. P. Barrett, Ponce, Porto Rico (to whom our letter and literature on stewardship and tithing went, as it did to all our pastors), this line occurs: "We in Porto Rico are deeply interested in the tithing plan and I think I am right in saying that every one of our missionaries here, including our native pastors, practice tithing. I shall take pleasure in preaching on the subject as many times as possible between now and May 1, and shall ask all our native pastors to do likewise, which I know they will be glad to do. By the way, our people are coming up fine with all they have been asked to do in raising money to meet the church budget this year, including the five per cent on pastor's salary."

If our Christian ministers and missionaries on the foreign field can preach and practice tithing on their meager salaries how much more willing and ready ought we of the homeland to be willing, ready and anxious?

LIKES TITHING

One of our women workers, and one of the very best women of all our knowledge, writes:

"I will do all I can to increase the number of tithers in our church. You may send me the literature that will help. I hope our pastor will preach on the subject next Sunday. I have practiced tithing since the Men and Millions Campaign (two years ago) and find that it helps me. I always have something now to give to the church and needy benevolences. I am fully convinced that it is the Bible way of giving, and shall be glad to see others adopt it. Count on me to do all I can for it."

If all our Captains and women workers will do as this good one has, our Kingdom interests will not suffer.

The many personal words coming to us about tithing and the willingness to help are very gratifying. This campaign of teaching on one of the most vital themes of Scripture should appeal to every one.

Read the topics of the pamphlets and booklets we have now for free distribution on Tithing, and if you can use any or all to advantage in your church, Sunday school or community, send us your request. Here they are: "What We Owe and How to Pay It." "Is the Tithe a Debt?" "Is Tithing Worth While?" "How to Tithe and Why." "Thanksgiving Ann." "Does a Tenth Belong to God?" "Stewardship and Tithing." "Can a Woman Tithe? (By Some Who Do)." "Can a Farmer Tithe? (By One Who Does, and How)." "Whose Is It?"

Our present campaign for tithers, if successful, would put an end to begging in the church, and the oft-repeated story, "I am unable to pay my pledges to the church, for times are so hard." We will be cheerful givers indeed, and able to meet our obligations to our Lord's cause when we adopt His plan for doing so, and quit our own plan of "giving as we happen to have." God's plans for us are always better than any we can make for ourselves. Let us seek diligently to find out from the Bible what God's plan for our giving is, and then, like sensible people, let us adopt that plan.

Miss Gussie Harrell, Sunbury, N. C.: "Send me literature on tithing to distribute. I will do the very best I can with the literature, and to get some one to talk on tithing in our church. I have been tithing for several years, though my income is very little. I wish others to share the privilege with me."

Rev. R. L. Williamson, Henderson, N. C., ordered fifty copies each of our seven pamphlets on Stewardship and Tithing. His order was gladly and promptly filled—gratis.

NEEDED—A RULE

I, for one, confess to a need of the human mind for a rule to be guided by in one's giving. Until I discovered the tithe I never knew how much or how little I ought to give. How many of us during a church collection feel like the economical bridegroom at the fair who said to the idol of his heart, "My dear, we might get separated in this great crowd. I reckon you had better give me the lunch basket."

We have men reported among us who object to singing "Old Hundred" when they can sing "The Ninety and Nine" and thus save one per cent. Shortly before the recent war an agitation was started to have the government coin a half-cent. I never knew the reason for the demand unless it was to enable some people to give something to the Church.

Without the law of the tithe we are at sea in our giving. With the tithe, it becomes a joy to apportion our gifts. Without the tithe, collections are disagreeable. With the tithe, they are welcomed. Without the tithe, men term the call of God's cause "begging," and want to write as the epitaph of a successful pulpit financier, "And last of all the beggar died also." With the tithe they realize that such a preacher is merely collecting his Master's taxes.

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

SUNDAY SCHOOLS CONTRIBUTING TO MISSIONS IN JANUARY

All our Sunday School Conventions and our Conferences have voted that all Sunday schools give one offering a month to missions, one-half of which is for Home and one-half for Foreign missions. Not all of our schools have proven loyal to this request and decision, but an increasing number are doing so. The following amounts were sent in during January by the schools named; and we are sure that no school is poorer for having done so:

Berea (Alamance), $1.03; Dry Run (Virginia Valley), $3.01; High Point, $1.50; Pleasant Grove (Halifax, Virginia), $4.83; New Lebanon (Rockingham), $1.45; Spring Hill, Lineville, Alabama, $2.00; East End, Newport News, Va., $7.75; Wadley, Ala., $3.00; Lineville, Va., $4.00; East LaGrange, Ga., 35c.; Zion, Moncure, N. C., $1.10; Reidsville, $2.80; First church, Raleigh, N. C., $7.50; Johnson Grove, Sedley, Va., $2.54; Liberty (Vance), Henderson, N. C., $6.04; Union, Dendron, Va., $1.25; Winchester, Va., $9.14; Holy Neck, Va., $16.00; Wakefield, Va., $7.61; Richland, Ga., $1.00; Henderson, N. C., $4.15; Bethlehem, Broadway, Va., $5.41; South Norfolk, $11.38; Hines Chapel, Gibsonville, N. C., 44c.; Berea, Driver, Va., $12.00; New Elam, New Hill, N. C., $2.21; Durham, $9.47; Lebanon, Semora, N. C., $1.60; Leaksville, Luray, Va., $1.90; Shallow Ford, Elon College, $1.26; Berea (Alamance), $1.08; Dry Run (Virginia Valley), $3.10; Rosemont, Berkley, Va., $18.43; Lineville, Va., $2.52; Berea (Norfolk), $2.35; Wadley, Ala., $1.35; Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., $90.90; Burlington, $63.06. Total for the month, $316.51.

ADDENDUM: The following individuals have sent us amounts named as special's to our Mountain work, and for these we are profoundly grateful:

Miss Emily Midyett, Fancy Gap, Va., $5.00; Miss Iola Hedgepeth, Fancy Gap, Va., $5.00; Miss Olive Showalter, Harrisonburg, Va., $5.00; Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Richmond, Va., $5.00, and Miss Vera E. Gilliam, McIver, N. C., $5.00.

ANOTHER SUNDAY SCHOOL EXPERIENCE

Brother J. W. Payne, R. F. D. 2, Wedowee, Alabama, writes me personally this item about an experience that I feel sure will interest others and that will help many of our schools if they will take it to heart and in faith launch out. It is as follows:

“One thing that might be of interest to you about the work here at Noon Day is that the Sunday school here decided last May to accept your challenge to give one Sunday’s collection each month to missions and one to the Orphanage. When this decision was made, the school was in debt for literature nearly $12.00. A committee was appointed to collect this and get it out of the way. The school has paid cash for all its literature since, and has a little money in the treasury, after paying for this quarter’s supplies.”

May many other schools go and do likewise.

A LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley:—As I read the children’s letters in The Christian Sun, I want to join the Band of Cousins. I am nine years of age and in the third grade. My teacher is Mrs. Harry Lewellyn, and I like her very much. Enclosed you will find a dime for February, from Annie Robinson, Graham, N. C.

Real glad to have your letter this week. At this writing (February 16) the ground is white with snow. We have had lots of snow this winter. We are looking for a good wheat crop this year.—“Uncle Charley.”

Remember the date on which the next session of the Convention will meet—May 2, 1922.

CHURCH NEWS

MT. BETHEL

I have had two pleasant trips to the Summerfield community and have found the people humbly carrying the banner of Christ. When we look at Mt. Bethel's history we are inspired to go into the awaiting future with new courage. Out of this little church in the past twelve years have gone five ministers, two of whom are now studying in universities. Aside from the gospel ministry, several have gone into the ministry of education.

With this splendid history and with our loyal members we are looking for a great year for the Master. The members and friends of this grand old church are loyal to our college and are giving their mutual support. By the help of God, Mt. Bethel means to do things for the Master.

NORTHERN ALABAMA

The work here is moving along nicely but we must show ourselves worthy of the sacred trust.

I desire to ask all friends of the Alabama Conference who made the special pledge at the Conference last fall for the support of the mission work in North Alabama, to pay your pledge just as early as it is convenient for you to do so. Send all money and checks to J. W. Payne, Wedowee, Ala.

The Women's Missionary Societies will also please take note to send your contributions to Brother Payne at the above address.

I realize that times are hard but I feel that if we do our duty our Father in heaven will prosper us.

SOLEMN VOWS

STRATFORD-KERNODLE

John Bailey Stratford, of Burlington, N. C., and Lorena Kernodle, the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Kernodle, Graham, N. C., were happily united in marriage at the Christian church, Graham, Wednesday p. m., February 1, 1922.

Just prior to the ceremony Miss Lillian Proctor, of Lumberton, sang "Until," accompanied at the piano by Miss Lucinda Martin, of Leaksville-Spray. To the strains of Lohengrin's Wedding March the ushers entered as follows: Will A. Leggett and Claude C. Fonville, of Burlington; Parke Stratford, of Greensboro, and L. H. Kernodle, of Graham, who took their places on either side of the altar. They were followed by Mrs. John J. Henderson, sister of the bride, as dame of honor, and Mrs. J. D. Kernodle, mother of the bride, as matron of honor. Next came the dainty flower girls, little Miss Mary Catherine Proctor, of Lumberton, and Cora Emaline Henderson, nieces of the bride, followed by Master Stratford May, of Burlington, nephew of the groom, carrying the wedding rings on a white satin pillow. The groom, with his best man, Mr. Oscar McNairy, of Jacksonville, Fla., entered from the left side, and were met at the altar by the bride on the arm of her father, who gave her away.

The souvenir double ring ceremony of the Christian Church was used by the writer, assisted by the bride's pastor, Rev. S. L. Beougher.

The bridal party retired from the church to the strains of Mendelssohn's Wedding March.

The bride was beautiful in white brocaded georgette over white satin, carrying a bouquet of Bride's roses with showers of lily of the valley. She wore a bridal veil draped with sprays of lily of the valley and a bandeau of orange blossoms and pearls.

The church was tastefully decorated in white with sprays of green and numerous potted plants.

Immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Stratford left for a wedding trip north. They will be at home in Graham, N. C., after February 10.

Mr. Stratford is a successful business man of Burlington, and Mrs. Stratford is a most attractive and lovable young woman.

Expensive presents of silver, cut glass, china and mahogany bric-a-brac covered the bride's present-tables.

A host of friends wish the popular pair much joy and happiness in life.

SMITH-MACON

At the residence of the writer on February 1, 1922, Mr. W. B. Smith, of Kernersville, and Miss Coney Macon, of Seagrove, N. C., were united in marriage.

Mr. Smith is at present engaged in teaching school near Kernersville, N. C. Mrs. Smith is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Will Macon, of Seagrove, N. C., R. F. D. 1.

She has been for some time the church organist at New Center Christian church.

May happiness be theirs.

COFER-SAVAGE

The home of J. W. Price, Richmond, Virginia, was the scene of a beautiful home wedding on the evening of December 22, 1921, when his niece, Miss Edith Blanche Savage, was united in marriage to Mr. Dennis Fleetwood Cofer. Quite a number of friends and relatives gathered to witness the taking of the nuptial vows. The ring ceremony was used, and the writer spoke the words which made them husband and wife. After the ceremony the bridal couple went to their home at Elberon, Virginia.

A sumptuous evening meal was served to the invited guests. We join the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Cofer in wishing them much happiness.

CALLED HOME

BYNAKER.—Miss Martha Lee Bynaker was born July 3, 1900, and died January 22, 1922, aged 21 years, six months and 19 days. The deceased was a member of the Woods' Chapel Christian church. She is survived by her mother, four sisters, and three brothers. Her father, a sister, and a brother died quite close together several years ago. Funeral service was held at Woods' Chapel, January 24, 1922, and the body laid to rest in the adjoining cemetery. A. W. ANDES.

CLEM.—Walter Lee Clem, son of Mr. and Mrs. David Clem, in Powell's Fort, was killed by a falling limb from a tree January 26, 1922. The news of his sudden death came as a great shock to his relatives and many friends. The deceased was born February 6, 1886, and was, therefore, 35 years, 11 months and 20 days old at the time of his death. He was married to Miss Pearl Ritenour, of Dry Run, July 31, 1912. Two children were born to them, both of whom died in infancy. The wife also died November 3, 1918. He is survived by his parents, five brothers, and three sisters. He was a member of the Lutheran Church, as are also his other immediate relatives. Funeral at Dry Run Christian church, January 29, 1922, conducted by the writer. A. W. ANDES.

KNICK.—Mrs. Elsie Lee Knick was born February 3, 1888, and died January 26, 1922. Her age was 33 years, 11 months and 23 days. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Reuben Fultz, of Harrisonburg, Va., and is survived by them, two sisters, six brothers, and by her husband and one little son. It seemed very sad indeed that this happy home had to be broken up so soon. She was a splendid Christian woman, and was a member of the Newport Christian church, as are also several other members of the Fultz family. Funeral services were conducted from the home in Harrisonburg, January 27, 1922. A. W. ANDES.

DICKEY.—Thelma Elizabeth Dickey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. R. Dickey, of Glenco, N. C., died February 10, 1922, aged two years, six months and seven days. Her death at such a tender and interesting age brought deep sorrow to the home that loved her so well. A little one has fallen asleep in the arms of Him who said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the Kingdom of heaven." The funeral was conducted by the writer from the home, and the burial was as Union Ridge, N. C. May the Healer of broken hearts comfort the bereaved ones. P. H. FLEMING.

REYNOLDS.—Judge R. H. Reynolds was born December 24, 1842, and died January 11, 1922. He made a public profession of faith in Christ early in life and joined the Methodist Church. He lived and worked in this Church for several years and then became a charter member of the Brown Springs Christian church. He moved to Columbus, Ga., in 1911, and joined the Rose Hill Christian church. He was a deacon in this church and was faithful to the duties of his office and loyal and true to the principles of the Christian Church.

He was thrice married and there were three children; namely, Mr. Samuel Reynolds, Mrs. W. H. Chism, Columbus, Ga., and Mrs. W. L. Slayton, Columbus, Ga.

For eight years he was judge of the Muschogee District Court, and was always regarded as being a fair and impartial judge. His decisions were rendered after careful investigation and mature thought. He retired from the bench last year. He was planning to enter the service again this spring, but was stricken with pneumonia and died after three days' illness.

Judge Reynolds was a soldier in the Confederate army all during the war. He enlisted in the beginning of the war and fought in many of the more important engagements without receiving a wound. He attributed his safety to the protecting hand of God. He was a brave soldier and hero.

He was not only a soldier in the Confederate army but in the army of God as well. He loved his church and the people of God. He was very liberal in his views and was a great advocate of Christian union. Among the great virtues of his life was reverend, pious, congenial disposition. Everybody loved him. The writer has never heard a word against his life. He was devoted to his family, his friends, his church and his God. He was a prince in the community. To him death was no monster. He was perfectly composed and reconciled and died happy.

The funeral was conducted from the home by the writer, assisted by Rev. R. M. Rigdon, of the Baptist Church, and Rev. G. W. Thomas, of the Methodist Church, in the presence of a large congregation, and the interment was made in the Riverdale cemetery.

His dear companion and children have the deepest sympathy of their friends. May the Healer of broken hearts comfort them. R. F. BROWN.

STEWART.—Mrs. Martha Stewart, wife of J. A. Stewart, Columbus, Ga., died February 12, 1922. She was 48 years old. Fourteen years ago she confessed Christ and joined the Christian Church, and lived a consistent Christian life. For the last three years she had been in ill health, but was patient in her afflictions and remained true to God and the Church.

She leaves a husband, one sister, and an adopted girl, Arvil Stewart, to mourn their loss.

The funeral was conducted by the writer from her home in North Columbus, and the interment was made in the Double church cemetery.

May the Holy Spirit comfort the broken hearts. R. F. BROWN.

YOU?

Somebody signed a mission pledge, Testing his purse to utmost edge; Somebody paid it through the year, Brightening the world with Christian cheer:

Was that somebody you? Was that somebody you?

Somebody handed cheerfully in Money to help God's cause to win; Somebody kept his promise to pay, Writing each check on a scheduled day:

Was that somebody you? Was that somebody you?

Somebody's pledge was only a scrap, Paper that had no value, mayhap; Somebody's soul grew shriveled and small;

Failing, he grieved the Lord of all: Was that somebody you? Was that somebody you?

A YOUNG GRAMMARIAN

Although Judge Jones' little daughter had talked several times through the telephone to her father, she had never gone through the formalities necessary in calling him up. The first time she tried it she took the receiver off the hook, as she had seen others do, placed her lips to the transmitter, and said:

"Hello! I want to talk to papa."

"Number, please?" said Central.

"Singular," she answered, surprised at the question, but proud that she knew something of the rudiments of grammar.—Harper's Magazine.

FROM APPRECIATIVE READERS

Words of appreciation are received in every mail from readers who have found The Christian Sun a vital force in their hearts and lives and an indispensable visitor in their homes.

"Enclosed find check for five dollars. Please place same to my credit for The Christian Sun. You are giving us a very interesting and attractive paper. Hope you have not decided to give up its management."

Mrs. W. H. Andrews, Hall Place, Suffolk, Va.

"Enclosed you will find check for renewal of The Christian Sun, which has been in our home for fifty-two consecutive years, and is read with much interest—editorials, letters, and all contributions."

M. J. Lee, R. F. D. 5, Suffolk, Va.

"It is with profound regret that we learn you are giving up The Christian Sun. We congratulate you on the splendid work you have done. You have made it a wonderful factor in the religious life of our homes. Our best wish for your successor is that he may be able to maintain the high standards you have set."

"All right!" exclaimed the mistress of the house, "then shake those ashes for me."—Wayside Tales.

The Trinity

By WILLIAM ALLEN HARPER, LL. D.
Elon College, N. C.

We no longer debate the Trinity. We accept it and live in accordance with it. We accept it as a doctrine and use it as a helpful life-principle, despite the fact that it is not specifically mentioned in the Bible. It is one of those blessed truths into which the Comforter was sent to lead us.

The Trinity presupposes the Tri-unity of God, the threeness in one. This also is even less specifically mentioned in the Bible. It is one of those teachings Jesus said His disciples were unable then to bear. With idolatry all around them, with the philosophy of the day deeply enmeshed in superstition, such a conception of God would in that time have been taken as a reversion to polytheism, just as it is hard today for the idolatrous adherents of the non-Christian faiths to regard it as other than a doctrine of three gods. But we Christians understand and are glad.

I am myself a trinity and I am tri-une. I am capable of affection, of thought, of action. I am a soul with heart, mind, and will. Yet I am not three persons. I am one. What my affectional nature is to me, that the Father is to the God-head; what my mental power is to me, that the Son is to the God-head, the expressive Word of the Father's love. What my will is to my conduct in ordering my life, that the Holy Spirit is to the God-head, the guiding Comforter of the Father's holy eternal purpose for His children, speaking to their individual hearts and consciences the yearning message of the Father's will and purpose and design. The Tri-unity of God represents the three essential qualities of the divine nature, His inherent modes of being. The Trinity rests upon this conception and connotes the three-fold manifestation of the Divine in His relations to men.

Thus does the Trinity confirm our kinship to our Father. We are in His image. As we are to understand Him as we do ourselves and approach Him as we do one another, with the reverence due His exalted station, and yet as a person of like nature with our own, though infinitely magnified and pure and holy and loving. Such is our Father. He is worthy to be our God. Let us live worthy of such a Father. That is the behest of the Trinity today. Blessed behest, growing out of such a blessed revelation of God and His relation to ourselves!

A Significant Move

OUR Raleigh church has been contemplating building for some years. In recent years she has been moved toward this step by the hand of necessity. The church is now under immediate and urgent necessity of building.

Following the Washington theater disaster in which more than one hundred persons lost their lives, the department of public safety in the city of Raleigh, N. C., inspected all places for public gatherings. Our church was inspected and the main auditorium condemned as unsafe for the public, as Pastor J. V. Knight tells us on another page.

All too many years we have needed a better house of worship in the State's capital. Without offering any criticism of our Mission Board, it seems to us that we could have invested more wisely in Raleigh than in some other places. Raleigh is an important point, and we have there a loyal and generous-hearted people. It need not be pointed out how much we have lost in members and prestige of the denomination by not fully providing for the Raleigh work during the past dozen years.

But Raleigh is to build—must build—and the Church at large cannot close its eyes to the significance of this move. To build in Raleigh is to make strong and to fortify one of our greatest centers. Wake County, in which Raleigh is located, is a county of Christian churches. These churches send their sons and daughters there to enter business and to enroll in the capital's half-dozen schools and colleges. It is a center of great ingathering of our people. Not to prepare for them is to lose them.

Raleigh will build! The whole Church must guarantee this. She will build for the future, and Brother Knight's comment that some day the Convention may select Raleigh as headquarters should not go unheeded. The point is central, transportation adequate, and the future of property investment safe.

Why not the Convention officials negotiate with our Raleigh church officials looking toward a proposition to submit to the next Convention?

Our Raleigh church faces a herculean task, but one that she will conquer. She enters a day that is new, and one that is significant—significant of greater, bigger, and better things. Let our prayers and means be to this good end.

Meditative Notes

The rhythm of music and constant repeated practice make it easy to sing "All to Him I owe," but it takes "notes" of a different shape, a heart and mind of another kind, to back it up by changing the words "to Him I'll pay."

The Church is no ambulance to pick up the wounded, and that alone. The Church's place is in the front ranks to help defend and to prevent all the deaths she can. The Church is no trailer—she is the forerunner of the age.

When we see a thirteen-year-old with "bobbed" hair, with a dress that represents scarcity of material, short stockings, and with enough powder and paint on to stain a stream, we frown in thinking of America's future mothers and shudder at the thought of her future statesmen (?)

The understanding that the object of the Christian life is to escape hell and to enter heaven is only a half estimate of what Christ and religion mean. Religion should shift our interests from self to others; it should be the means of knowing that we are saved to serve and not merely saved to escape a hell and to gain eternal rest.

One weakness of our Conference work is that we adopt a great many things and then go back home and refuse, by indifference, to see that the plan adopted is brought to pass. If the counsel of the many is worth while, then it is incumbent upon those of us at home to undertake the things wrought out, thought out, and adopted.

This much talk about the shortage of ministers does not seem to take into account the needless churches. The average statistician counts the number of churches (the number of houses) and then finds out the number of ministers. The difference is usually the number of ministers the country is short. This thing of having a church on every street in every little hamlet will always reveal a shortage of ministers—and it should.

The subject of Religious Education is looking the Church squarely in the face. The issue must be faced. An inquiry rightly and scientifically conducted among the masses in three countries has revealed conditions of gross and dangerous ignorance within the Church. A service of one hour on Sunday is too short a time for inspiration and instruction. The masses must be taught in the ways of Christianity, else the foundations of Christian civilization will be shattered.

Here and there are heard the rumblings that our Convention should establish headquarters. These rumblings will continue because there is a need. It cannot be downed. Downed once, it will rise again. The constructive minds of the Church feel the need of centralized work. They are growing tired of a shifting program.

Religious liberty is being abused. The high cost of living is helping to check this abuse—and in this way: A few persons whose hearts and minds are unwilling to co-operate with others, decide to build a house of worship and employ a preacher. We mean that once they could do this, and secure a pastor for a few hundred dollars. This can they no longer do. Instead of uniting for larger and greater things, the cry is sent out that men are forsaking the ministry. So often we are driven to progress.

Every patent medicine, "free watch," and cheap perfume advertisement in the Church paper is an acknowledgment that the Church must, in a few pages, preach a gospel of character-making and cleanliness, and then spread before its readers the venders of the earth that they may mislead the innocent into spending their money foolishly. Shall the Church continue this thing that her publication may keep their heads above the water?

There is too much impatience with a thirty-minutes' sermon and not enough impatience with a two-hours' reel; there is too much "tommy rot" about not understanding the Sunday school lesson and nothing being said about five hours' reading of some slime that has found its way into print. There is too much being said about "bringing up father" and not enough about bringing up Johnny; there is too much watching the clock for quitting time and not enough watch on the character of the work that is being done. There is too much talk about making money and not enough about honesty.

Not a thousand years ago we were attending a certain conference. The president became somewhat vexed because certain committees did not have reports ready, whereupon the presiding officer charged the committees to have their reports ready before coming to the conference. The next day the presiding officer, who was chairman of a committee, was called upon for a report and it was not ready. All this to remind committees of the Convention that their reports should be in full preparation now. If your committee is widely separated, it is the duty of the chairman to draft the report and send members a copy. Brother Committee Chairman, it is not right for you to rob the Convention of attendance to transact business that can be handled at other times. Begin now for the Convention, which meets May 2, 1922.

Editing and Publishing A Church Paper

Talks With Our Readers—No. 5

DEAR JOHN:—

There are a few things that most of us have held to be patent facts in the matter of a Church paper. One is that the pastor is agent for his Church paper, and another is that we should support a Church paper because it is a paper of our Church.

It is said that the pastor is key man to everything in his church. I have heard this until I have decided that he is the key to so many things that he has keyed much talent out of the local churches. Why is the pastor to be looked upon as the agent for the Church paper any more than a deacon? How many deacons do you know who hold the functions of their office so high that they feel it incumbent upon themselves to get the Church paper into the homes of the membership? So far as our situation is concerned, our membership is largely rural, and the pastor can do but little more than preach. How then can he be agent for his Church paper and attend to the dozens of other things which he is called upon to do? Let it be not said that I have advocated that the pastor stop taking an interest in getting the Church paper into the homes. I have not said it. What I am endeavoring to make plain is that we have looked to the pastor to serve from janitor to preacher, and he cannot do all. And this: Few pastors are going to do much for the Church paper. There is no use to keep saying that the pastors should do it. Years of experience have proven otherwise, and a new step must be taken to secure solicitors for the Church press.

The liberalized spirit of the times has decreased the number who will support a Church paper—just because it fosters the work of their own denomination. This will be hard for some of the loyal and devoted lovers of the Church to reconcile, but it is a fact and must be looked squarely in the face. A paper sells on its merit and not on what it represents. It is true that the Church paper has the merit, but it is also true that it does not have a variety of matter sufficient to engage the youth of the Church, and so the habit of reading the Church paper is not fixed early enough in life.

Summing up the situation, it would take about this form: Shall the Church paper be a workers' bulletin, limited to the interested workers, or a family paper for the moral, spiritual, and intellectual uplift of the home?

Sincerely yours,

C. B. RIDDLE.

A denomination must stand by its educative forces if it puts any premium on permanent growth and reliable leadership.

"Abide in Me," said our Christ. Not in self or riches, or greatness or fame, but "in Me." And when we abide in Him, He abides in us.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part XVIII

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

Field Secretary for Missions

MONDAY a. m., October 3.—With only two more days on the island, we bid Ponce and the Barrett home a loving and long farewell. Within the ten days housed here many places and peoples are already familiar, and we as never before appreciate to a degree Paul's words to his friends at Ephesus: "And now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the Kingdom of God, shall see my face no more." Through the preaching and teaching, the life and the faithful labors of the Barretts, the Whites, Miss Mishler, Miss Williams, the Martins and our devoted native missionaries, faithful Christians have been brought into the fold here, and their influence for God and Christian liberty on this blessed and beautiful island will be as unending as eternity. We have some real saints here whom to meet and mingle with, to learn to know and to love, has been a real benediction and blessing. We are leaving them behind in the sunlight and glory of this beautiful Monday morning, and though we shall be separated soon by an intervening ocean, it will be physical and material separation only; for from henceforth we shall be one in Christian service and fellowship, till we gather again to be one in praising Him Who sits upon a throne out of which there issues "a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal," and on either side of which is the tree of life: "and the leaves of the tree are for the healing of the nations." (Rev. 22:2.)

Our journey today is to be a long one on the Ford, for we indulge the hope that we may travel all around the northern end of the island and reach San Juan some time tonight. Barrett is at the wheel, Martin and Minton are piled up under, on and with the baggage in the rear, and I am happy on the front seat with nothing to pester me for the 150-mile journey except a heavy dress suit case in my lap—which I am using for a writing-board—and two or three well-filled handbags about my feet. But the scenery through which we are passing now is full of rapture, ecstasy and delight. Both the royal palm and aqua cota trees are in full blossom, and give to the deep ravines between the hills and mountains along whose sloping borders we pass, such a scene and sense of color, life and beauty that one feels like pulling off one's hat and bowing down in reverence and worship before a Being Who had the mind, as well as the power, to create such scenery as this. The green hills rise gloriously and in stately grandeur one above the other, each a close rival of the other in gorgeous coloring, in flourishing fruit trees, and in shapely outline. We get to Mayaguez by late lunch time. We learn some Porto Rican manners at table today. The Porto Rican sets great store by his coffee, and, considering the fact that he has the best to be had on earth, one cannot blame him.

He wants his coffee right, and then he wants it served right at table. To put coffee on the table before the food plates are removed is a gross insult to a Porto Rican. Take away all impedimenta and suggestive hindrances—and then fetch him his coffee, and he wants it "straight," unsugared, black, and bountiful. Some engaging writer ought to come to Porto Rico and write a book on "Over the Coffee Cups." He would find abundant material for his volume. For here is where the Porto Rican is at home, at his best, and expresses most fully his native air and Spanish philosophy.

Mayaguez is a live town and the Presbyterians are regenerating it physically, mentally and spiritually. We went to visit the city high school. An American lady named Miss Williams, a former missionary, is superintendent. If I were in America talking, instead of in Porto Rico writing in a diary, I would say "She is a hummer." She has high school buildings equal to our American college buildings, and has in them from 1,200 to 1,400 pupils, taught by about thirty teachers—and she is the dynamo as well as the directing hand of the whole outfit. She has enough energy in her eyes to run an ordinary power-plant, enough courage in the firmness of her features to lead an army through blood and into the jaws of death, and enough brain in her shapely head to govern a kingdom. She decided she could reach so many more people and influence for good so many more young lives as Superintendent of City Schools than she could as a missionary, that she went over to the city—and took charge of the mental and moral development of the whole growing population. And the city of Mayaguez has decided that she is altogether worthy and well qualified to lead them, and that altogether she is about the greatest institution that ever came over the blue deep to their rescue. The more I see and learn of some of these workers, teachers, nurses, preachers, missionaries here in Porto Rico and of what they are doing to really help their fellowmen, the more confidence I have in mankind and the more respect I have for the human race. I remember hearing Robert E. Speer say in a great address once, that from the single life of one missionary there sometimes goes out more power for human betterment and uplift than from whole governments. Since seeing these missionaries I am prepared to agree with him.

We went to the Marina Neighborhood House located and conducted in the poorest section of Mayaguez. This is under the auspices of the Woman's Mission Board of the Presbyterian Church. The House was founded in 1907, and has developed to such an extent that there are at present four American workers, six Porto Rican workers and a number of others who devote a part of their time to this neighborhood work. There is something doing here. Another woman is in charge, and she is surcharged with dynamite, evidently, from the way things move about her. There are five departments of the work. Kindergarten, Primary, Industrial Classes, Day Nursery and Dispensary. And every "Department" moves. The Day Nursery is to take care of very small children of poor mothers who have to work out for a living—and they take care of fifty babies a day here. The Industrial Department employs young women from the city at regular pay to do fancy needle work. The lady who presides over this department was herself a poor girl from Mecklenburg County, North Carolina, who got into a Presbyterian Mission school at Asheville, and after her training and educational work there, dedicated her life to missionary work—and so here she is a fine young woman teaching these Porto Rican girls how to sew—and serve the Lord. At the dispensary 1,700 patients were treated last year, and the nurse made 3,000 visits to the sick and needy.

Last year the average attendance in the Primary Department was forty-three children daily, and in the Kindergarten fifty tots. When I think that one spare woman is at the head, is, in fact, the head and heart of all these departments, and directs them all personally, and is now putting up a $64,000 building, which money she secured from her Woman's Board, my head grows dizzy, my eyes fill with something, and my pen is so unsteady I can hardly write these lines in my diary. Some of these days, I hope, if it be the will of God, to stand up in some audience of women in the States and put to them just this one question: "Why do you crowd in upon one another at home in trying to find some small field of service, while some of your sisters yonder in glorious and beautiful, but poverty-stricken and needy Porto Rico, are reaching just hundreds of lives daily in the service of their Master, and while there are still many thousands out there yet waiting to be reached, and whose hands are even now outstretched in pleading help from you?"

The Presbyterian pastor here is a native, but a man of scholarship, culture and dignity. He lives in an elegant home, has an elegant church to preach in, spent ten years studying in the States at our great seminaries and universities, and is now using his great talents in reaching and in winning to Christ the people of his native tongue and land. He has 157 members of his church, and 300 in his Sunday school.

As we leave Mayaguez, bewildered by the wonderful work for human uplift going on there, we swing out around the foot-hills on a beautiful hard-surfaced road towards Aquadilla. We invade the rich realm of the coconut palm, and while Barrett rests from driving in order to fix a puncture in his Ford tire we "take in" the surrounding trees, scenes and shrubbery. I counted 150 coconuts on one tree. If this tree were not so high to the first limb, or if I were as I used to be when I went 'possum-hunting, there would soon be a point of contact between some of those nuts and myself. No wonder we grown-ups and rheumatics are more pious and saintly than we were in our youth! We just can't now, like we could then—that's all. I certainly am glad I did not die and have to give an account of the deeds done in the body when I was in my 'teens and early twenties!

Well, of all the scenes, here it is! An ill-kept, rickety, thatch-roofed house. Too filthy to stay in, and the folks about the door too poorly clad to stay out of doors and too hungry-looking to stay inside. There is a woman with a stone pestle beating black coffee, that she had gathered and roasted, in a hewn-out stone trough. She was beating that coffee into a powder, while her nude baby pulls at the mother's filthy rags, and the family of five hungry ones impatiently wait for that black coffee—and night.

We reach Aquadilla at 6 p. m., and just have to stop awhile in this ancient town where Columbus landed—and where they have a statue of the discoverer. I wish to spend a day here, but only have a half-hour. Since I cannot spend time I borrow some more money from Minton and spend it. The Presbyterians have an industrial work here that engages my eye and pocketbook. I buy three mats for my wife's table to set hot dishes on and pay $1.25 for it—and then give Miss Buxton, the lady manager, twenty cents for stamps that she may send the outfit home by parcels post. Martin and Minton also spend about all they seem to have in pocket, for these mats are made of some kind of white bark or twigs or grass and have "some class" to them. But it is nightfall, and no quarters for Americans to lodge in are within sixty miles of this place. Farewell, Aquadilla, and Christopher Columbus' statue, and a glorious day! At 9:15 we reach Arecibo, where, by ascending two flights of rickety stairs and scaling the roofs of several intervening houses we find a bed overhung with mosquito netting—and then we thank God and take courage.

PLAIN TALKS TO PLAIN PEOPLE

MINISTERS are still very scarce, or if plentiful, they are not being used in serving the churches of this country as pastors. The Rev. Paul Rader has recently made public the statement that 35,000 churches in the United States are without pastors, and so these churches are not only empty, but they are doing nothing. The mere statement that 35,000 churches are doing nothing is alarming. What can be at the bottom of such vacancies? There is something not going in the right direction. Dr. H. F. Schwartz, a denominational secretary, with office at the Fourth Avenue headquarters, in New York City, gives some light on this situation. Hear him: "I myself asked some twenty-eight churches, including many of the most important in the country, which I had visited during the months previous to November, how many men they had sent into the ministry during the last twenty-five years. Only two were able to report that any young man had gone into the ministry from their membership." If that is the way our churches are giving their young men into the ministry for the last twenty-five years, it is no wonder that we have 35,000 churches in the United States without pastors. From another source we get this statement, given to the public under the heading of "Some Solemn Facts," in which it is said: "There were 3,413 ministers serving churches in 1919, showing a loss of 2,690 in four years." Where could all of these ministers have gone in four years? I suppose they quit the ranks of the ministry and went into business to make a living for themselves and families, but we dare say that some time they will see their mistake. Can any one tell us what is the cause of such situations in the Church in the early part of the Twentieth Century? In part, we think it is due to three things specially; viz.: (1) the lack of a praying and Bible-studying Church; (2) the influence of higher criticism on the faith of the Church, weakening it, and so disqualifying its membership for bringing forth men and women who have enough spiritual power to enter the ministry; (3) the lack of family prayer in the homes of the Church people. We conceive of these three reasons as the basis of this great scarcity of ministers. Can you say that we are not right in this matter? We think not, and for the reason that this kind of people cannot bring forth ministers.

We are needing a real spiritual quickening of the life of the Church today. The Church has a large membership, it has education, it has money, it has in many places a fine social standing, but the Church, not in anything like an adequate supply of spiritual illumination and power, and that is the reason that she can accomplish so much in all worldly endeavors, but can do practically nothing in the line of real Christian work. If this is true, as we believe it is, then its helplessness as a Church is nothing strange, for without a real spiritual union with Christ, we can do nothing. Jesus said that Himself, and we need not be waiting to see if He was right. The Church must come into close spiritual touch with Jesus under the light and leadership of the Holy Spirit, or the Church will continue to have thousands of churches without pastors, and without any sort of real spiritual activity that will help in any large way to bring the world to Christ. Going as we have been going along these lines, we need not expect to see the churches bringing forth ministers to supply the vacant pulpits of our country. We may harp on the activity of the Church, but until we get ourselves aroused and in line with the highest spiritual ideals of Christianity, we shall have poor results in doing the Lord's work.

The Church is today facing a grave situation in that she has so many members who seem never to have been converted at all, judging by the way they conduct themselves as Christians. When a man or woman joins the Church, but considers his duty done in so doing, and henceforth takes no active part in the work of the Church, attends divine worship only now and then, although living very near to the church; well, that man has not enough of Christ in him to push up and be in his place, or to do any work. Now, beloved people, this ought not so to be, and we can never have our pulpits supplied with divinely-called ministers until we learn to do a great deal better in the sphere of spiritual life. Just so long as the Church neglects the study of the Bible, the prayer life and the spiritual activities of the Christian profession, just so long must we expect to have a breaking down Church and a fruitless membership. God hasten the day when the eyes of the Church shall be opened and the Church shall become a means of great power in saving the world in Christ.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

SUFFOLK LETTER

ASKED a minister of another denomination one day if his members took their Church paper fairly well. He replied: "I have one of my best Sunday school teachers who does not take our paper." That teacher was a man and the head of the family. I pay sixty-five cents per month for my Virginian-Pilot, which is $7.80 per year; and THE CHRISTIAN SUN costs $2.50 per year. Each paper fills its own sphere, and neither can fill the place of the other. The daily paper represents the community interests in its own locality, with a little of the world in its daily happenings. It reports on politics, business, social life, sports, courts—in fact, everything that happens. The Church paper deals with religion, education, benevolences, missions, Church interests, and the Kingdom of God in all its relations and obligations. In its tone, its language, its topics, and its suggestions, it is higher, cleaner, and more wholesome. It contaminates no thought, defiles no character, suggests no extravagance, tempts to no desecration of the Sabbath, blights no home, leads to no divorce, and leads no life away from the House of Prayer. The Church paper has really put much good into the secular press, and it has initiated the great reforms, afterward furthered by the daily papers.

Every family in the Church should receive the Church paper. In towns many families spend enough at the movies in one week to pay for THE CHRISTIAN SUN for one year, and then plead inability as a reason for not taking the Church paper. No doubt one of the greatest sins among Church members is the excuses they make for not doing their financial duty. The useless luxuries get their part of individual and family support, and the better things could, if the people would. Five cents a week is no burden on any family, and that is the cost of THE SUN, with two weeks free. But the trouble with all we write is that those who read are already subscribers.

Now, I am asking you, regular reader of THE SUN, to see your neighbor, have a square talk with him, show him the importance of this family visitor, induce him to subscribe, help him to send his money, if he does not know how, and thus do your part in the circulation of the paper. It may be as much your duty to get a new subscriber as it is for the other party to subscribe. If 2,000 subscribers would secure one new subscriber, it would mean 2,000 new subscribers. It is impossible for the editor or the pastor to do all of this work; but you can do it, and it will make you feel better, and do much good. If Christians did no work to lead sinners to Christ, would sinners be saved? If subscribers do no work to get new subscribers, will the list be increased? I am making this plea without the editor's knowledge, much less his consent; but I think I know the value of individual personal work, and I think I know the value of a Church paper. It is the balance wheel in literature, the silent teacher of purity and honesty, the cohesive force of a Church organization, the medium of denominational information, the conservation of spiritual integrity, the mouth through which the Convention utters its voice.

W. W. STALEY.

ON TO JAPAN

HLL arrangements for our sailing, checking of trunks, etc., had been completed, and we were found boarding steamer "China," bound for eastern ports, at 1 o'clock, December 10, 1921. Having placed our baggage in our cabin, we returned to the deck, where we were to have an experience like unto which we never had had, and that was leaving our native land. The steamer band played "Farewell to Thee"; husbands told their wives good-by; the farewell word was uttered to friends and loved ones; the gang-plank was lifted, and our steamer smoothly glided from her pier into the great Pacific, every turn of the propeller making a little greater the distance between us and the land which at that moment seemed dearer than any spot on earth.

Our first real experience happened in a few hours after we had eaten our lunch, and was what was known to us before boarding the steamer as sea-sickness. I wish I could tell you just what this experience is like, but I cannot. We suddenly lost our appetite and what we had previously eaten. This continued through a number of days.

There was not very much change in the motion of the boat until Wednesday morning, when we were awakened at an unusual hour and way. We found our steamer trunks, suit-cases, hats, and almost everything we had, racing back and forth across the cabin. I might say that we would have done so, had it not been for our ability to hold on. I suppose if we should have been privileged to get on dry land at this moment, and the few hours succeeding, we would have given all of our possessions. However, this was not to last always, for we are told that there is a calm that follows every storm. After two days of rolling and tumbling of our ship, the sea became calm. To those who have never had a long sea voyage this calm is appreciated even more than the beautiful sunshine that follows a season of rain. The people came out with smiles on their faces, because it was indeed a day welcomed by all.

We were told that early Saturday afternoon we could see land, and when that day came everyone was found on the upper deck, bright and early. We were soon permitted to land at our pier in the city of Honolulu. If we had not known that we were in Honolulu we would have thought at once that we were in one of the cities in the States, with the exception of the inhabitants. I am told that the inhabitants are akin to everybody, but belong to none. Indeed we can say it is a cosmopolitan city. There are, however, more Japanese in Honolulu than any particular race. The natural beauty of this city and the surrounding country cannot be equalled by any American city. I have heard many descriptions of the garden of Eden, but this city comes nearer being like what I imagine the garden of Eden was than any description I have heard. As we traveled through the suburban district we were greeted on every hand by all kinds of tropical fruits, such as bananas, oranges, pineapples, and the like. If any who read this article should desire to take a short sea voyage at any time, I cannot think of any place where you could go that you would enjoy more than a trip to Honolulu.

We sailed from our pier at 4 o'clock, our ship being bound for Yokohama. Sunday morning, December 18, we met for our first religious service on the boat. The writer was asked to take charge of the service, which he did, with results that were gratifying. Most everyone attended the service.

The previously arranged sports for the entertainment of the passengers on board began Monday morning. They were continued until the close of our journey, and added much to the enjoyment of the latter half of our journey.

It will be interesting to many to know that we had Christmas on the boat in most every form as you did on land. A nice little tree had been placed on board, and on Christmas eve it was placed in the dining saloon. Presents were placed on the tree not only for the European, but the Chinese children on board as well. Each one enjoyed seeing Santa just as much as if they had been on land. It is unfortunate that we grown-up people cannot adapt ourselves so well to new conditions. After the children's service a musical program was given, consisting of songs relative to Christmas. The Christmas day services were conducted by Rev. Locke White, who was on his way to China as a missionary sent out by the Southern Presbyterian Board.

We arrived in Yokohama Thursday morning, December 29, at 10:30 o'clock. The first thing of interest that attracted our eyes was Mount Fuji, far in the distance. This was a beautiful introduction to the beautiful island of Japan. On arriving in Yokohama we were made to feel that we were not so very far away from home after all, for among the first voices we heard was the voice of some one calling us by name. We soon learned that these were our new friends and associates, Dr. and Mrs. Layman, Rev. Obee, and Miss Barnes, the latter having been in Japan since September. After having our baggage examined by the customs officer we were taken to the girls' school, where a most splendid dinner had been prepared. Here we met Miss Hodges, the head of the school, and a number of other lady missionaries who were assembled there at that time for a union missionary meeting between the two Boards.

In a few hours we were taken to the great city of Tokyo. The city is so large that the stranger is lost completely. Upon arriving in Tokyo we were carried to the home of Mrs. F. E. Hodgkin, where we are to make our home while in the Language School. While we are at home we do not feel away from home, but to go up street we are lost in word and act. We will write more later.

ON CONFERENCE DIVISION

"START SOMETHING AND THEN KILL IT"

Not long ago, one of the leading and most progressive men in our Conference said: "The Christian Church is great on starting something, and then killing it." While he was referring to the Summer School we should have had at Elon last summer, he certainly spoke my sentiments relative to dividing the North Carolina Conference.

I was not in North Carolina when the Conferences voted to unite, but I did vote for it on the Southern Convention floor, and still think the three Conferences did a wise thing. As I see it, every church in the Conference that votes for this division votes against its best interest, and that of the Conference as a whole. We are small now, with all our forces united—so small that we hardly command recognition of the other denominations in the State, and so why divide?

It seems to me that those who opposed the union to begin with are busy still, trying to get back to something, I know not what. While in the North Carolina Conference last fall, I was approached three different times by three different men who were trying in a personal way to get me to line up with this fight for division, and to use what influence I had toward getting the thing through. Since the thing was left to a referendum vote, I have had personal letters asking me to help turn the vote of the churches for the division. This letter will clear all matters in the minds of these brethren, and the Conference as a whole.

What it will amount to I cannot say, but my vote is already cast for one Conference, and I would not change it if I could. How Raleigh, Auburn and Amelia will vote, I cannot say; but one thing is sure: it is far from me to try to influence these churches to vote for what I believe to be their own hurt. Furthermore, I shall discuss it freely with them, and try my best to get a vote for the best interest of the whole Church. Count me one who will NOT use his influence to divide. Keep starting something and killing it, and we will soon have no Conference at all.

J. VINCENT KNIGHT.

Raleigh, N. C.

DO NOT HEED LAWRENCE

I think that Brother W. P. Lawrence must not have read the referendum resolutions printed in The Christian Annual. The last resolution states that the vote be sent to the chairman of the Executive Committee, which committee shall take action to carry out the wishes of the churches supporting a majority proposition.

We had a similar question when the North Carolina and Virginia and the Deep River Conferences united and then divided into three. The question was settled without any trouble.

The report of the Executive Committee will finally be sent to the Convention.

Do not let Brother Lawrence's article give you any trouble whatever. Of course, each Conference will be perfectly willing to bear its part of any indebtedness. Brother Lawrence will vote for one Conference, but I expect to vote for three, because I feel sure it will be better for the progress of the Kingdom. May God direct all of us in the right way.

W. G. CLEMENTS.

Morrisville, N. C.

HEED LAWRENCE

This is a matter of great importance, and after reading the statement of Dr. Lawrence as given in THE SUN, I consider it exceedingly unfortunate that this question has been presented to the Conference at this time. Evidently it was presented without due consideration and without an accurate knowledge of the situation and condition of the work of the Conference as now constituted.

A division now of any kind will be a serious matter—a calamity. It will suspend all missionary operations, and if the Eastern Conference should be set up, will place on it a heavy obligation of over $5,000 which it must meet or fail to discharge. This movement has already suspended the missionary work, as no one will lend or advance funds while this state of things exists.

I suggest that all who have voted, or may yet vote, consider well what Dr. Lawrence stated in THE SUN February 15, and change their vote, if you have voted for a division, and vote to let the body remain, for the present at least, just as it is, an undivided Conference. We cannot afford to step backward. Let us have time to consider and understand what we do.

W. S. LONG.

Chapel Hill, N. C.

THE DIVIDING LINE FOR TWO CONFERENCES

If the churches of the North Carolina Conference should divide said Conferences into two bodies, I think the dividing line should be as follows: Beginning at Fayetteville, following the Cape Fear River, north, thence with Haw River to Governor Holt's Cotton Mill, thence with the North Carolina Railroad to the Orange County line, thence north with the Alamance and Orange County lines, north, to the Richmond and Danville Railroad.

I am sure that this dividing line as a natural line will make the Conferences nearer equal than to go by Durham, thence to Keysville, Virginia. I give this suggestion in case the churches should decide upon having two Conferences.

P. T. KLAPP.

An American "Y" secretary in Buenos Aires has organized 100 boys of the boot-black and street gang classes into an athletic club, and worked so conspicuous a reform that influential citizens have undertaken to raise the money for a community building and maintain it for two years. This type of practical Christianity appeals to the people and opens the way to their hearts.

SHALL WE DIVIDE THE CONFERENCE?

(A) represents the delegation that attended Conference in 1918 before the division. The dark part of this bar represents the delegates that did not attend, and the light part represents the 58% that attended the three separate Conferences. The entire bar represents the 100% that the three Conferences were entitled to.

(B) represents the 100% of delegates that should have attended the Conference at Danville, Virginia, 1921. The light part represents the 32% that attended, the dark part represents the 68% that should have attended.

(C) represents the 100% of delegates that should have attended the Eastern North Carolina Conference in 1918. The light part represents the 58% that attended, the dark part represents the 42% that should have attended.

(D) represents the 100% of delegates that should have attended the North Carolina and Virginia Conference in 1918. The light part represents the 64% that attended, the dark part represents the 36% that should have attended.

(E) represents the 100% of delegates that should have attended the Western North Carolina Conference in 1918. The light part represents the 50% that attended, the dark part represents the 50% that should have attended.

(F) represents the 100% of delegates that attended all three of the Conferences jointly in 1918. The light part represents the 58% that attended in 1921. The dark part represents the 42% that did not attend in 1921.

This study shows that the local churches are not being represented at the united Conference, that a few of the leaders are assuming the responsibility of transacting the business of Conference for the majority that remain at home.

The more people we have in the Conference the more interest we shall have in the local churches. The condition out of which the original Christian Conference developed is returning in regard to our united Conference. The people should rule the Conference, the laymen should be more largely represented, they should not leave the business of Conference to the few, but this must be the condition while we have the present large territory. The proposed two Conferences will not remedy the condition in the Conference that extends from near Fayetteville to Nathalie, Virginia—a distance that is greater than the present Conference from east to west. I am confident that the three Conferences before the division would now have larger representation and do better work than is now being done by the single body with over half of the delegates at home. The church that undertakes to entertain 300 delegates and over 100 preachers will have a burden that will be too heavy for most of the churches, hence a small delegation is forced upon the Conference. Shall we have three?

W. C. WICKER.

Elon College, N. C.

ONE OR THREE CONFERENCES?

A vote for two Conferences instead of three will tend to defeat the whole proposition, as it may prevent a majority for either.

The Christian Annual for 1916 gives the enrollment at Conference for the three Conferences: Ministers, 42; lay delegates, 152. For the one Conference, 1921, at Danville, Virginia: Ministers, 32; lay delegates, 90.

As to the financial problem that may arise, that can all be adjusted satisfactorily by committees from the different Conferences or by the Southern Christian Convention.

J. W. HOLT.

THREE CONFERENCES OR ONE?

Dr. W. P. Lawrence is right in eliminating the idea of two Conferences. We do not need "shoe-string" Conferences. Let us have one or three.

It was claimed by those who advocated merging the three into one that certain advantages would be obtained thereby: First, that we as a denomination would gain recognition by the press because of the larger body of more prominent men composing its sessions, and because of the more impressive reports. Second, that the large Conference could take care of its mission work to better advantage than could the three small Conferences. While there were other reasons given in favor of the merger, the above were the two principal ones. These two reasons have failed to prove true under the test. The secular press has given us, if anything, less notice than before; and mission work has gone on about the same. The Home Mission Board took over the funds and the indebtedness ($1,250.00) of the Eastern North Carolina Conference. That $1,250.00 is still unpaid, while the man to whom it is owed wants it and needs it badly; unless it has been paid since Conference met in November, 1921. Moreover, it is difficult to see why one-third of the present Conference cannot do one-third of its work with one-third of its funds as easily as all of the present Conference can do all of its work with all of its funds. The Eastern North Carolina Conference took care of its mission points before the merger, and we are willing to undertake it again. We were able to borrow money when we needed it; we think we can do it again. We hope that those who are "just about as likely to vote one way as the other" will not vote for the one Conference through sympathy for us. We trust they will vote their judgment and not their sympathy. The answer to the question, What is best for the work? should decide every vote.

We think three Conferences are better than one, for when the delegates have so far to go a great many churches are not represented, and consequently do not send up their apportionments. It is more difficult to find a church that is willing to entertain the larger body. A Conference is an inspiration to the community where it meets, and with one Conference it takes three times as long to get around, and the smaller churches being too weak to entertain it, fail to get this inspiration while they need it most.

The smaller churches always do better work in proportion to their numbers than the larger ones; we think the same would be true of a Conference.

With the smaller Conferences, the lay membership, as compared with the ministers, is larger in proportion than in the larger Conference, which we think is a decided advantage.

In consideration of these facts, I favor three Conferences instead of one.

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

THE SUN'S Editor has suggested that we issue the financial report every week and let the Superintendent's message appear every other week. This plan has been accepted, which we are glad to do in order to help accommodate the space of our Church paper.

Two weeks ago a widow who has four children came to see us. Her husband has been dead about a year. She told me how she had to sell her household goods to pay her debts she owed at the time of her husband's death, and then started out to make a living for herself and her four children. Broken in health and having to have an operation which had left her almost an invalid—not able to do but very little work. She told me how she had asked people to help her, and said that they had been kind and had helped her very much. But while she had made a heroic effort to support the little children, and keep them with her, she found that she had reached the point where she could not see her way clear to hold out longer, and had decided to ask the Christian Orphanage to lend her a helping hand. She plead with me, with tears trickling down her cheeks, to take at least two of her children, and by getting that much relief, she thought she could work in a hosiery mill and make a living for the other two. As I talked with this good woman and realized what humble circumstances she was in, and how much she needed relief, and what a golden opportunity our Church has to act the good Samaritan in this case and help this widow in her dire distress, I wondered if we are not passing on the other side and leaving not only her, but many, whom we could so easily help, to their fate.

If pure religion is to visit the widows and fatherless in their affliction, then here is a case to test our religion.

A LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley—I have not sent you any money for the Orphanage for some time. I do not know how much I am due but am sending 40 cents. It is snowing here today and I hope Grandmother will let me go out, but I know she will not. Last Sunday it was snowing and I was sick and could only stand and look through the glass of the door. Love to you and the children.—Virginia Johnson, Portsmouth, Va.

We have had lots of snow here, too. It was so cold that our little folks did not play in it very much. We are glad to have your letter this week. It helps to brighten the Corner.—"Uncle Charley."

The greatest disaster known to the aviation world took place on February 21, when the semi-dirigible "Roma" caught fire at Newport News, Virginia, and caused the death of thirty-four men.

Jehovah's Mercy to a Heathen City.—Jonah, Chapters 3 and 4
Golden Text: "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto Jehovah, and He will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for He will abundantly pardon."—Isaiah 55: 7.

LESSON THOUGHTS:

Jonah was called by God to do a great work. When he disobeyed and went in the opposite direction, his troubles began, and they did not end until he sought forgiveness and went where God wanted him to go. God needs men to go for Him today. He is calling strong men and women to be willing to sing with their whole hearts: "If Jesus goes with me, I'll go anywhere."

God stands ready to forgive when His children are penitent.

"By so much as we love to call God 'Father,' by so much are we under the noble duty to make our Father known to all His children—our brothers." God plans the work. He calls the worker. The part of the Christian is to live so closely to the Heavenly Father that the call may be heard and gladly obeyed.

"The Lord is merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy."—Psalm 103: 8.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC—MARCH 5, 1922
Better Home Life.—II Samuel 6: 1-12.

As we read in our Scripture lesson of how the home of Obed-edom was blessed by the Lord when the ark was there, it will be helpful to consider how great a source of blessing Christian teaching will be to the home of today, and what a contribution to the home life can make to the work of Christian education. In an article entitled "The Inner Circle of Christian Education," in the March issue of The Church School, Mr. Rufus W. Miller declares: "If we are to solve the serious problems of these times, then, indeed, in the truest sense, we must 'keep the home fires burning.' The light of religion dare not go out upon the hearthstones of the people. The coming of God's Kingdom depends upon the moral integrity and spiritual fineness of the family."

The home is the supreme agency of religious education, and to it must our Christian Endeavor Societies and Sunday schools look for help and co-operation. "The religion of the nation can rise no higher than the religion of the nation's homes." "The child is wax to receive and granite to hold the impressions of the fireside." Make our homes better by bringing God into them. Place upon the wall and in the heart the motto: "Christ is the Head of this house, the Unseen Guest at every meal, the Silent Listener to every conversation." Make the home such a place as Spurgeon thought of when he said: "When home is ruled according to God's Word, angels might be asked to stay a night with us, and they would not find themselves out of their element." Better homes will mean a better Church, a better America, and a better world.

The Soldier Bonus Bill is still an unadjusted matter in Congress.

THE BULLETIN

Dean W. P. Lawrence, of Elon, is to speak before the teachers of Wilson County, March 10.

The First church, Greensboro, held a Father and Sons' banquet Wednesday night of last week.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson has accepted an invitation to deliver the baccalaureate sermon at the State A. and E. College, Raleigh, N. C., at its approaching commencement.

Our good friend, Dr. D. A. Long, writes that he is doing well in the land of flowers. He is fishing, preaching, lecturing, and writing poetry for pastime.

Last week's Herald of Gospel Liberty was an Evangelism Number. Most of the material was arranged by Dr. R. C. Helfenstein. Editor Kerr and his co-laborers did a fine thing in getting out this special number.

We note that the People's church, Dover, Delaware, uses a Question Box for the members who desire to ask questions to be answered by the pastor publicly. We understand that the feature creates considerable interest.

The Sunday school of our Leaksville church, Virginia Valley Conference, sent Pastor R. P. Crumpler to the State Sunday School Convention which met in Charlottesville, Virginia, February 21-22, and paid all his expenses. A good and generous thing, and we congratulate both Sunday school and pastor.

The forward-looking speech delivered by Dr. Harper in Greensboro has brought him urgent invitations to address the men's meetings of the Y. M. C. A.'s of Concord and Winston-Salem. The Greensboro speech made a deep impression on the secretaries present when it was delivered. Dr. Harper will most likely speak in Concord and Winston-Salem later in the spring.—Maroon and Gold.

State Treasurer Lacy, of North Carolina, is ill in New York. General Julian S. Carr, Durham, N. C., is also ill.

Henri Desire Landru, of Versailles, France, convicted of murdering ten women and one youth, was beheaded February 25.

The head of the Health Department in Mexico City was formerly a member of the Y. M. C. A. staff in the capital.

WOMEN AND THE KINGDOM

SUGGESTED PROGRAM FOR MARCH IN WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETIES

As Superintendent of Literature I was asked to prepare a program each month for Woman's Missionary Societies not using the programs found elsewhere and not following the course in a mission study book. I begin with March, but regret my disappointment in not securing beforehand such literature as needed.

Our calendar calls for March, April and May for foreign missions. March 3 is union day of prayer for missions. Let us get familiar with our missionaries and their stations during this time.

PROGRAM

Opening Hymn: "The Morning Light Is Breaking."
Bible lesson: Timothy, first chapter.

Sentence prayers.

Our Porto Rican Missionaries—Rev. and Mrs. D. P. Barrett, Miss Olive Williams. (Biographical sketches read by some member.)

A Vision of Porto Rico.

Prayer for these missionaries.

Doctor Atkinson's "Scenes and Impressions in Porto Rico." (Diary, Part XV, from CHRISTIAN SUN, issue of February 8.)

Song: "How Firm a Foundation."

Offering.

Closing prayer.

Let us study a part of Japan for April.

MRS. J. J. HENDERSON,

Superintendent Literature and Mite Boxes.
Graham, N. C.

WAVERLY, VIRGINIA

On February 12, at our evening service, under the auspices of the Woman's Missionary Society, was given the "Rainbow Pageant," a beautiful missionary service, which I want to recommend to any church desiring anything of this kind.

Short talks were made by Messrs. Marvin Gray, Jesse West, Jr., and B. E. White. A boys' quartet gave a musical reading, "If any little word of ours can make one heart the lighter," etc. This was followed by the very appropriate song, "Every cloud will wear a rainbow, if your heart keeps right."

As the choir softly sang, "In the Cross of Christ I Glory," the throne at the foot of a large cross was occupied by the motive "Love," and as she held the different colored streamers, the Rainbow Girls came forward, taking the other end of the color matching her costume, and gave the reading appropriate to her motive. They made a fan-shaped figure—the seven colors of the rainbow against a background of pure white. Red represented Gratitude; Orange, Obedience; Yellow, Honor; Green, Loyalty; Blue, Ambition; Indigo, Privilege; Violet, Self-Denial; White, Love.

A free-will offering was taken which amounted to a neat little sum for the treasury; but most of all we feel that this service will teach us to have a motive in our acts—in our giving and not simply "drift with the crowd."

The gowns for this service can be rented for the extremely low price of 50 cents plus postage from Mrs. S. L. Caylor, 222 Boyer Avenue, Dayton, Ohio, and it is hoped many of our missionary societies will give the "Rainbow Pageant."

MRS. J. L. FOSTER.

TREASURER'S REPORT—VALLEY CONFERENCE WOMAN'S BOARD

Owing to illness in the home of Miss Verdie Shwalter, Treasurer of the Woman's Board of the Virginia Valley Central Conference, she asked me to make her report to the Treasurer of the Southern Christian Convention Woman's Board for the past quarter. Some of our churches and societies did not report during the quarter, I am very sorry to say. We should not fail to make our offerings, and to make them as big as possible, so that we can reach our goal, which is $750.00.

The following remittances have been received, and have been sent on to Mrs. W. T. Walters, Treasurer:

Dry Run, Young People, for Miss Hedgepeth, $10.15; Winchester, dues, $3.55; Winchester, Thank Offering, $21.00; Timber Ridge, Young People, for Miss Hedgepeth, $5.35; New Hope, Women's Society, $9.40; Mrs. J. A. Andes, for Miss Hedgepeth, $.55; making a total of $50.00 for the quarter.

BOOK REVIEW

Books reviewed on this page may be secured from
C. B. RIDDLE, Publishing Agent, Burlington, N. C.

"THE NEW PROGRAM OF RELIGIOUS EDUCATION"—

George Herbert Betts

This has been called "the most significant book of the year in the field of religious education." Of this book Marion Lawrence says: "This is a very bold book. It strikes straight from the shoulder, but its arguments are irrefutable, and sooner or later the Church is going to recognize the claims made in this book and put religious education in the place where it belongs. Then will the Church begin to build upon a sure foundation and grow as it has never grown in the past." This book should be read by every earnest Church school worker.
The Abingdon Press, New York City. $75 net.

"CRADLE ROLL MANUAL"—Jessie Eleanor Moore

This is a new and very fine and complete book on Cradle Roll work. The first three chapters deal with "The Rights of the Child," "The Beginnings of Character Building," and "The Essentials of Christian Motherhood." The remaining nine chapters deal with the Cradle Roll work, the Parents' Class, Mothers' Meetings, and other helpful agencies. The bibliography is extensive and good. This book will form a valued addition to the Cradle Roll worker's library.
Methodist Book Concern. $.65 net.

“METHODS WITH BEGINNERS”—Frances Weld Danielson

This is one of the units of the third year specialization work, but is valuable for any teacher of Beginners. Miss Danielson's work is always full of vitality, bubbling over with enthusiasm, which makes what she writes particularly easy to read and apply.

Pilgrim Press. $.60 net.

“METHODS FOR PRIMARY TEACHERS”—Hazel A. Lewis

This is another unit in the specialization (third year) teacher training. The chapters of this book coincide with those of “Methods With Beginners,” the topics being presented from the standpoint of the Primary instead of Beginners' teacher and class. This book has “grown out of the author's personal experience and wide observation,” and will be found of great value, even by those who are not engaged in completing the three years' training course.

Front Rank Press. $.60 net.

“MISSION STORIES FOR LITTLE FOLKS”—Margaret T. Applegarth

Applegarth

These two books are arranged, the one for Primary and the other for Junior children. They are arranged to form a year's consecutive missionary teaching in story form for the children. While the stories are told from the child's standpoint, and intended for children, many are quite interesting enough to be told to grown people as well, and if you have but a one-room school you may be sure of holding the interest and attention of your entire audience. In ordering, designate whether you want the book for Primary or Junior children.

The Doran Company. $1.75, each book.

“VACATION CHURCH SCHOOL; TEACHER'S MANUAL”

There are three of these Manuals; one for the younger primary group, for children five and six years of age; the second for the older Primary group, or children of seven and eight; and the third for the Junior group, children approximately nine to twelve years old. The value of these Manuals is the correlating of the Sunday school graded lesson with the Vacation school lesson. Lists of extra material are given, much of which is often already in use in the graded school, thus materially decreasing the cost of books and material for beginning the work. This is a really fine set of manuals for this work.

Christian Board of Publication. Manuals $.25 each.

“MAKING MISSIONS REAL”—Jay S. Stowell and Others

This is a helpful little book giving demonstrations and map talks for teen age groups. It presents in a new and unusual way something of the meaning of the great world-wide missionary program of the Church. To “Make Missions Real” is one of the most important tasks which can confront a Christian trainer of youth, and this book will prove a help to this great end.

The Abingdon Press. $.75.

“THE USE OF PROJECTS IN RELIGIOUS EDUCATION”—

Gertrude Hartley

This is one of the series of books put out by the Judson Press. The use of handwork as a means of “teaching the child by doing it” is distinctly set forth. Suggestions are given for illuminating hymns, Bible verses, for making posters, and for using the sand table. The last chapter on “Utilizing the Play Instinct” will be of help to many teachers seeking for a solution of this problem. The illustrations add greatly to the value of the book.

Judson Press. $1.00 net.

“THE VACATION RELIGIOUS DAY SCHOOL”—Hazel

Straight Stafford

If you see the value of the Vacation Religious Day school, and really wish to see one in your church this summer, many of your problems in starting this work will be solved in this teacher's manual of principles and programs. Details are given for establishing and conducting such a school, and detailed programs for each grade are presented. This is a practical handbook for committees, superintendents and teachers.

Abingdon Press. $1.00 net.

“YOUTH AND THE CHURCH”—Cynthia Pearl Maus

This is a helpful manual for teachers and leaders of Intermediates, Seniors and Young People in the Church school. Programs of worship, instruction and expression are helpfully presented, together with plans of organization and administration for this department.

Standard Publishing Company. $1.35.

[All books this week reviewed by Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Richmond, Va., and are adapted for the use in Religious Education.—Editor.]

There are things of earth and things of heaven. The pulpit must discuss more of the things of earth if the Church expects to get control of more things of earth to enrich the Kingdom. We have learned that one thing cannot isolate itself from another; that one community cannot live without the help and co-operation of another. We are a unit in all things for good, but if that unit fails to move together as a unit, results that are lasting cannot follow. It is our part and privilege to act together, live together, work together, and worship together.

The Y. M. C. A. sent its first secretaries to India and Japan in 1889. The number has since increased to 200, who have associated with them more than 500 native secretaries. The Association is now well established in sixteen foreign countries, and since the war has found new place in Central Europe through its welfare work.

MISSIONARY LECTURES

Dr. J. O. Atkinson delivered his annual series of missionary lectures February 16-19. The Doctor was at his best, and the lectures were highly instructive as well as inspiring. His general theme was World Brotherhood. Four factors, he said, enter into any contribution to world brotherhood: the missionary motive, the missionary morale, the missionary message, and the missionary method. He spoke first on the missionary motive, declaring that the fundamental motive of every missionary movement is found in the creative and redemptive character of God and in the inherent sociability of man.

In the second lecture, on the missionary morale, he declared that the right kind of morale transformed weaklings into giants, and the source of this was in the conscious presence and power of God. Faith, passion, and vision must enter into this morale. The power of morale is the power of personality. The man behind the great deed is greater than the deed.

Into the missionary message must enter facts, big facts, human facts, related facts. The source of the message is the Bible. The scope is as broad as the needs of man. The Bible, he continued, is the history of an idea and a program; i. e., that there is one holy and righteous God and that He plans to lead all men to worship Him.

The closing lecture was an inspiring sermon on the Righteousness of God. The one method, he declared, is to make known the righteousness of God through the Church organized for activity and supported by the free-will offerings of men. The speaker closed with a strong appeal for the tithe as the practical, efficient, and scriptural method of maintaining the work of the Kingdom.

Sunday, February 19, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, of Durham, N. C., spoke to the students under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. His theme was "Prayer, the Battle Ground of the Christian Faith." He showed that the rude shock that comes to many children when they fail to have their prayers answered is due to false and pagan teachings as to prayer. He directed the thoughts of his hearers from age-long centuries of pious error to the simple teachings of the Man of Galilee concerning prayer. The Master, he said, gave two great reasons for praying to God: one, because He is Father—a natural, simple reason; the other, contained in his text, "If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you." The latter is profoundly scientific, he declared. The discourse was logical, concise and forceful, and of the character to appeal to thoughtful young men.

ELM AVENUE—A WELCOME

We want to extend an invitation to the country and neighboring city people when in Portsmouth to visit Elm Avenue Christian church. We will endeavor to make them feel at home and take care of them while in the city. We are located on the corner of Elm Avenue and Duke Street, Prentis Place.

We organized a little over a year ago with fifteen members. Under hard persecutions which we have overcome, we now have a membership of 85. We make every preaching service evangelistic. There has not been a Sunday in more than two months that some one did not join the church. We are now rejoicing over our Victory Sunday, February 12, when Brother C. H. Cole lead the way to the altar, with twelve following, giving the Lord and the church thirteen new members. The Lord was so good in revealing His spirit that we all felt good to be there. Our future looks brighter every day.

Our Christian Endeavor Society held its regular monthly service at the jail Sunday afternoon—February 12—with over thirty professions for the Master. There are about thirty members of this organization and Miss Elizabeth Eley is president.

We have an enrollment of 175 in our Sunday school, of which Brother L. R. Baker is superintendent.

The Ladies' Aid Society of about twenty members has Mrs. L. R. Baker for its president.

We are hoping to organize a Ladies' Missionary Union in the near future, then we will not forget the Mission Board for what it did for us. But for the Mission Board we would not have Elm Avenue church, which we prize more than anything else. We will ever thank the Mission Board, Brother Atkinson, and others, for their support.

We wish also to thank Dr. Atkinson and others who helped in securing Brother Elisha Bradshaw as our pastor. He is doing fine and we all like him.

RALEIGH PLANS TO BUILD

The First Christian church of Raleigh, N. C., has recently committed itself to a building program, and before this appears in print, will be in the midst of a campaign to raise approximately $75,000.00 for the new building. Those who already know something of this plan will be interested to know that the original plan has been greatly enlarged. The church is awake to the fact that it must build for the future. Not only this, but the church boards and membership as a whole have voted unanimously in favor of the great undertaking.

Plans for the campaign are almost complete, and just as soon as the steering committee and architect can finish the blue print of the proposed building the active campaign will begin. It is our purpose to advertise the work in a large way. The plan calls for erection of a modern up-to-date auditorium with necessary Sunday school and young people's equipment, that will take care of the work in the future years, as well as to be a credit to the denomination as a whole. To do this will call for the greatest sacrifice ever asked of a church with a membership of this size, but we cannot feel that it is just and fair to ourselves and the denomination to erect anything short of a building that will command the respect and admiration of the city and Church as a whole. Then, too, Raleigh is the most central place in the Southern Christian Convention work for a headquarters building, and we hope that some day the Convention will see fit to locate the headquarters here.

To some it may seem strange, but to the writer it seems Providential, that on the same night our plans were submitted, discussed and unanimously accepted, the City of Raleigh condemned our present auditorium as unsafe for public gatherings, and we have had to vacate it and hold all services in the Sunday school auditorium, which will cut the attendance of the Sunday services, since this auditorium will seat only about 200 people. We have no kick to make to the authorities who condemned, but rather a vote of thanks because they have hurried up things. This came about following the Washington disaster, when all city officials closely examined all old buildings. It has made us conscious of the fact that something must be done in the near future, and the whole membership of the church, from the children up, are getting ready for the big task.

This letter is a direct appeal to everyone who reads it, and it is an appeal for prayer. Won't you make this work an object of your daily prayer and supplication? It means a great sacrifice to the church membership, but it means more than this—it means added strength to the denomination as a whole to have a modernly equipped building in every respect in one of the finest cities of the whole Southland. Pray for us in this great undertaking, for the work must go forward.

J. VINCENT KNIGHT.

MISCELLANEOUS

TO THE AFFLICTED

When I spoke of praying for the afflicted I meant those who had chronic trouble that the doctors did not control. I cannot pray for the many who may apply when they have such diseases that the doctors can control. I have more than I can accommodate. Let those who are suffering with diseases that can be controlled by the doctors apply to their own physicians. I cannot handle so many. It will be my great pleasure to pray with or for those who have chronic troubles in that I may be able to help them.

J. W. WELLONS.

“THE AMBITION OF A HALF-SPANISH GIRL”

During the Spanish-American War there was a noted gentleman of Tennessee who was no doubt dissatisfied with his present position. By the guiding hand of the Infinite Being he enlisted in the army, landing on the coast of Porto Rico. He was among those who came through the battle's smoke still alive. Well, young and brave as he was, after having fallen in love with a Spanish girl, he succeeded in winning her as his help-mate, and decided to make her native land their home. He soon became a speaker of the Spanish tongue as well as his native language. In their lovely home there was soon added a baby birl, and she was brought up under the Spanish tongue, also Catholicism, until she was seven years of age. The father then decided to return to his native land, but the mother, unwilling to depart from the land of her friends and loved ones, was left weeping behind as he took the girl and brought her with him to America, in order that she might escape the things to which she was subject there.

She is now a Protestant and speaks beautiful English. Her ambition is (after she has finished school) to return to Porto Rico, her native land, and teach her people the way of life. I admire this kind of an ideal of life.

If we were to find some great fortune that would become ours only by just accepting it, and there was plenty more for others, why surely we would lead our friends to the place in order that they too might become rich. But life is greater than riches, so if we have life why not help some one else to possess the same? Will she succeed? She has with her the same promise Christ left with His disciples (Matthew 28: 20). We consider war as a terrible thing, but oftentimes great things are made possible as a result thereof.

ENDORSES PRESIDENT HARPER'S LATEST BOOK

I have been greatly pleased and benefited in reading and re-reading President Harper's new book, "The Church in the Present Crisis," and I heartily recommend it to all our pastors and laymen. The laymen especially will be greatly pleased with this book. President Harper faces the problems of the modern day church so courageously and presents solutions which appeal so directly to the "common sense" and intelligence of the average church member, who is not steeped in theological dogmas, that it is refreshing indeed to read the text. He writes as one heartily in love with the Church and with reverence for her history and traditions, but his belief in the traditions does not prevent him facing the problems of today as they exist.

A. G. CARIS.

“THE CHURCH IN THE PRESENT CRISIS”

This book is a treatise on vital Christianity with a world outlook. It has a searching and eloquent climax in the chapter entitled, "Christ Our Sufficiency," and while the author is frankly critical, he is ever optimistic. The wilderness of creeds, the mutual jealousies of capital and labor, and the clashing interests of the world's affairs cannot daunt the faithful. There is a way out—even into the Promised Land. Great achievements crown lofty ideals because a greater than Moses is with us. Jesus of Nazareth, the Captain of our Salvation, leads us onward and ever upward until the radiance of the everlasting hills shines full upon us.

Dr. Harper believes in a Mouroe Doctrine for the world. He gladly goes adventuring to seek the Holy Grail. His inspiration is the life of Christ, and his faith in Him is assured because He has already wrought such wonderful changes for the betterment of the world. It is certainly a heartening book, conservative enough to be safe and radical enough to be a tonic for the spiritual life.

SOLEMN VOWS

KEEL-RYALS

Mr. Fannie K. Keel and Miss Ha Ryals, both of Raleigh, N. C., were united in marriage at the parsonage of the First Christian church, Raleigh, on Thursday evening, February 23, 1922. The ceremony was read by Rev. J. Vincent Knight, the pastor of the groom.

Both parties are popular among the younger set of the city, and in Sunday school and church circles. Mr. Keel is at present a government student, and a young man of fine business qualities. The bride is numbered among the young business women and girls of the city, and has a number of fine friends here and at Benson, N. C., her old home. They will make their home in Raleigh.

CALLED HOME

HOLLAND.—Richard H. Holland died at his home near Boaz, Va., January 24, 1922, aged 74 years, eight months and 13 days. He was a member of Mount Carmel Christian church. Five sous survive him. They are John W., of Boykins, Va.; J. H., of Windsor, Va.; M. W., of Buckhorn, Va.; Charlie L., of Boaz, Va., and A. L., of Suffolk, Va. Two daughters, Mrs. J. H. Duck and Mrs. Timothy Carr, preceded their father to the grave.

Funeral services were held at his church and his remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery. God bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER.

JENNINGS.—Archibald Jennings was born at Edgefield, S. C., August 11, 1833. His parents moved to Tallapoosa County, Alabama, where he spent his life. He died February 3, 1922, and was buried at Eagle Creek. Funeral services were conducted by Rev. O. L. Burns, of the M. E. Church.

Brother Jennings joined the Congregational Methodist Church early in life, and was a charter member of Christiana Christian church. He remained strong in faith until death.

He leaves three children, W. A. and A. L. Jennings and Mrs. Belle Freeman. His wife and six children preceded him to the grave.

May God's blessings be upon the bereaved.

HOLLAND.—Mrs. Georgia A. Holland died at her home near Windsor, Va., February 11, 1922, at the age of 79 years, one month and four days. She was a faithful member of Antioch church and will be greatly missed. She leaves one son, M. T. Holland, of Windsor, Va.; two daughters, Mrs. S. T. Butler and Mrs. John T. Godwin, of Windsor. The funeral services were conducted by her pastor and her remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery. God bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

H. H. BUTLER.

COLLINS.—Mrs. Stella Powell Collins, wife of Mr. J. L. Collins, of Philadelphia, departed this life February 17, 1922. Her remains were brought to Raleigh and the funeral services were held from the home of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Summers on February 19, and the remains laid to rest in Oakwood cemetery. Funeral services conducted by the writer.

Mrs. Collins before marriage was Miss Stella Powell, of Auburn, N. C., and had been a member of Auburn Christian church for a number of years, with which church she held membership until death, though she had lived in Philadelphia for quite a while.

She leaves behind, beside her husband, two children, Robert Collins and Mrs. Laura Lamb, of Philadelphia; two sisters, Mrs. Oscar Summers and Miss Fleeta Powell, of Raleigh, and a host of distant relatives and friends who are left to mourn the loss of a good mother, companion, sister and dear friend. Blessings upon the entire family.

J. VINCENT KNIGHT.

ATKINSON.—William Edward Atkinson, of Norfolk, Va., died February 19, 1922, at the age of 32 years, nine months and 20 days. He leaves a father, W. J. Atkinson, of Windsor, Va.; three brothers, W. Joseph, Odell and Pressley O.; three sisters, Mrs. J. W. Martin, Mrs. J. T. Landing and Mrs. J. H. W. Bridges, and many friends. Funeral services were conducted at Antioch church by the pastor, and the remains were laid to rest in the church cemetery.

The dear bereaved ones have the deepest sympathy of their many friends.

Jesus

By REV. JOHN G. TRUITT, Graduate Student
Princeton Theological Seminary
Princeton, N. J.

ODAY I desire to write about Jesus, for today I realize more than ever that He is the Lamb of God that takes away the sins of the world! Jesus has died for me. Mother nearly died for me—Jesus altogether. Mother has bathed her face in tears for me, but Jesus bathed His in blood! Parents and friends visited me when I was sick in body—but Jesus visited me then, and what is more, He visited me whenever I was sick in soul. When ambition and sin, and my sinful self, sought for first place in my heart, and I was being trampled beneath their unheeding feet, I cried in my despair, “O Lord, hear; O Lord, forgive; O Lord, harken and do. . . . (Daniel 9: 19); and I seemed to hear Him say out of that heart of infinite love, “Weary one, I died on Calvary’s rugged cross for you, and ‘Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.’” And so I pray that as long as I live it shall be my portion to talk about and for Jesus, in word and deed, in spirit and life; and to write Him first in the hearts of my fellowmen. And who is He? “The Christ, the Son of the living God” (Matthew 16: 16). “He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him, and with His stripes we are healed” (Isaiah 53: 5). My Redeemer and Savior, and yours—blessed Jesus forevermore! Amen.

EDITORIAL

WHAT DO YOU SUGGEST?

The present management of The Sun has always made it a custom to give special invitation to readers to contribute concerning any special meeting or movement of the denomination. Our Southern Christian Convention is soon to meet and many of us have many opinions as to many things a Convention should undertake. The Sun's columns are, therefore, open to delegates-elect, or to any other member of the Church. We would be glad to have free and cordial expressions as to what thing or things the Convention should do. Not only this, but officers of the Convention and delegates who are to attend are anxious to know the voice and will of the people.

And this: Let us have these suggestions now and not a few days before the Convention meets, when we will not have time to get your article in the paper before the Convention meets.

INSPIRING THE YOUTH

About a year ago we had an editorial in this paper entitled, "Wanted—A Man." In that editorial our plea was that we should have a man to give all his time to the work of enlisting, inspiring, and suggesting to our young people concerning the matter of educational preparation. We endeavored to point out that no campaign, regardless of how well prosecuted, could, during vacation, suffice for real foundation work. Again, we endeavored to point out that the matter of deciding to go to college does not often happen in a day, a week, a month, or in many cases, in a year. Many college students and college graduates will tell you that they received the inspiration to go to college years before they realized the way.

President Harper, of Elon College, in this week's issue of The Sun, plainly points out the great need of having in every community some person who can encourage and lead to higher things the boys and girls of that community. He makes the statement that the pastor is the logical man, to which statement we subscribe with the exception that many pastors do not possess such qualifications. Yes, we need a man whose business it would be to inspire our young people to seek greater things in life. He should encourage and inspire the young men and women to take advantage of the best opportunities at home when no greater opportunity is theirs. A great work for some great heart.

As a denomination lifts its standard of thinking, it advances in growth. We need an educational revival. Who shall lead us? A thousand souls await the answer to this question.

A GREAT EDITORIAL

In last week's issue of Maroon and Gold, the wide-awake student publication of Elon College, the editor very plainly and practically points out the fallacy of electing men to positions in college classes purely upon their social popularity. If the Maroon and Gold does no other good than to check the absurd custom of electing so-and-so to an office in some class on the basis of popularity, it will have served its purpose.

Many of us have seen some fellow elected to fill a position of trust and honor and had no qualifications. To use common parlance, we have seen some of the biggest messes by some fellow trying to hold an office when he did not know how. We congratulate the editor of Maroon and Gold on saying freely and frankly to his fellow students that the time has come when mere social popularity will not suffice.

In this connection, the idea might be enlarged and made to mean that there are essentials and qualifications necessary for a public official other than simply being popular with the masses. Character and brains are worth something, and one thing that the American people need to do is to stop supporting a man purely on the ground that he moves best in society.

A GREAT SERMON BY A GREAT PREACHER

The Sun's editor was privileged to be in Raleigh, N. C., last Sunday, to hear Dr. George W. Truett, "the world's biggest Baptist," preach. Dr. Truett is preaching in the City Auditorium of Raleigh for a number of days, and while we have always considered him to be the biggest Baptist in the South, we now agree with that denomination's own declaration which we have just quoted—that he is the biggest Baptist in the world, so far as we know.

Dr. Truett's text was Paul's declaration, "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." It was a great message by a great messenger. The language was plain, conversational, and convincing. There were no tricks of speech, no flights of oratory, no walking the rostrum or pounding the speaker's desk.

Raleigh's City Auditorium has a seating capacity of 5,000. Though we went long before the time, practically every seat was taken, and it was only through the courtesy of one of the ushers, because we were an editor, that we obtained a seat, fortunately near the speaker. The usher told us that there were a thousand people without seats, which would make the number 6,000 who gathered to hear Truett.

The theme along which Dr. Truett spoke was Jesus. He magnified and glorified the Man of Galilee. He did not resort to illustrations other than the life of Jesus. No words of ours here can do justice to the great sermon. Truett is bigger than his denomination or any other denomination. He was born and reared a poor boy in North Carolina, but is today pastor of the First Baptist church of Dallas, Texas, which church has a membership of 6,000.

Editing and Publishing A Church Paper

Talks With Our Readers—No. 6

Dear John:

The summary of my last letter to you raised a question as to whether a Church paper shall be a workers' bulletin, limited to the interested workers, or a family paper for the moral, spiritual and intellectual uplift of the home.

You may be interested to know that a number of readers of The Sun have been talking over this point with me. All of us agree that each Church or denomination must have its own official papers. This fact, no one will contest. The question, however, is whether or not a Church paper can ever hope to reach a large circulation so long as it is confined to purely propaganda matter. For my part, I do not believe that it can be done, and the experience of the Church press will bear me out in this statement.

Along with this thought comes the question as to what an office of publication or a denomination should offer in the way of books. Should the Church press and its office cater solely to Bibles, religious books, and general Church supplies, or should it carry a full line of general reading matter, including good fiction and stories for children?

I want to relate to you a little circumstance and let it speak for itself: The 1918 session of the Southern Christian Convention authorized the keeping of separate accounts of The Christian Sun and the Publishing Agent. The accounts were separated June 1, 1918, and the Publishing Agent account began with a capital of zero and limited its sales to Bibles, religious books, including mission study books, song books, communion sets, etc. As Publishing Agent, my report to the 1920 Convention showed that the gross sales during the biennium amounted to $4,043.47, on which there was a profit realized of $1,252.36. I have contended all the while that if the Convention would provide an adequate capital for a book business so that the variety of the sales could be enlarged, that the book business would amount to a considerable annual item, to say nothing of the good that would be accomplished in distributing wholesome literature.

On December 12, 1921, I had an opportunity to buy for the Convention an old established book business in Burlington, but I could not get the Board of Publication to agree. Feeling confident that the Convention was missing a big opportunity—one that would possibly never return—I bought the business that was offered for sale, against the sanction of the Board. The purchase was made on December 12, 1921, and on December 22, ten days later, I was able to write a check for the total amount of the purchase. (Ninety-five per cent of this money was derived from the cash sale of the stock bought.) I was not only able in ten days to pay the amount of the purchase price, but had more than 500 volumes of books left over, plus the business, and that is worth possibly more than the cash outlay.

In looking over the books of the Publishing Agent today I noticed that the sales for December, 1921, January and February, 1922, amounted to $1,144.31. This would indicate that at the present outlay the sales would amount to something over $4,500.00 per year, even if business were not subjected to growth. If the Convention could see its way clear to put up sufficient money to capitalize a modern and up-to-date book business, my prediction is that the Publishing Agent could easily handle $10,000.00 worth of books and other items annually. However, I have not been able to get the Convention to see as I see, and take it for granted that the combined wisdom of those who rule means more than the figures which I have shown.

If I had to choose between investing $5,000.00 in a printing plant and that same amount in a book business to help make money to assist the Church paper, I would choose the book business. I am speaking from experience from both standpoints and not from theory, under any circumstances.

But this may be taken into consideration: No enormous amount of business can be done when the sales are limited strictly to Bibles and religious books. This is no criticism of those who do or do not buy religious books. Here is the point: A Bible reader will purchase a Bible about every five or ten years, while there are those who will buy ten to twenty-five books of fiction every year. This does not mean that they do not read their Bibles. The situation is not comparable.

Without offering any advice to our next Convention, I take the liberty of offering, as a suggestion, that the Convention provide an up-to-date and adequate book store and employ a Publishing Agent who is an energetic, up-to-date, and wide-awake business man, and let him prosecute vigorously and systematically the book business and the business end of The Christian Sun. Writing editorials is one proposition; buying and selling books, financing the business of a Church paper, is an entirely different proposition.

Cordially yours,

(March 11.)

C. B. Riddle.

We have often said in these columns that we have no special objection to a regular revival in the church, but at the same time, we have pointed out the seemingly patent program that most churches depend upon for getting men and women saved. Is it not more of a custom than any thing else that we have fallen into of holding a special revival in order to bring the unconverted to Christ? Why is not the local church an evangelist at all times? Why is it not?

“Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honour preferring one another; recompense to no man evil for evil. Provide things honest in the sight of all men. Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good.” (Romans 12: 10, 17, 21.)

SUFFOLK LETTER

ANOTHER line is almost universal in its use—the fishing-line; and it means more to the world's life than at first appears. Fishing is one of the great industries of the world. In the United States alone the output is over 2,000,000,000 lbs. a year, valued at over $60,000,000, employing $100,000,000 capital and over 200,000 persons. Japan employs 3,500,000 persons, uses 427,000 boats, and the output value is over $40,000,000. Other nations carry on this industry in like proportion. Fish enter into food products of the very best kind. Fishing is more than a business, though the above facts show its immense value.

Fish-hooks have been found in America and Europe of prehistoric times, made of flint, bone, shell, copper, bronze, and, in America, even of gold. Ancient Roman hooks found in Pompeii resemble hooks of the present time.

Thousands of volumes have been written upon the subject of angling; ninety-two editions of Waltou's Complete Angler have been published.

Sixty steamers operate on the Chesapeake Bay catching a little fish called alewives, and they are ground up for fertilizer; and they say that they are on the increase. They are used also for bait in catching blue-fish in the Bay with hook and line. One day, a few summers ago, fishermen caught 400 barrels of blue-fish in one day with hook and line. I have seen men's hands badly cut by the line in this work.

Fishing is also a means of recreation, in which business and sport are combined; for the result of the sport furnishes food. If I had been born by the sea, I might have been a fisherman, as Peter and John, unless I had been called, as they were, to become a fisher of men.

When I was a small boy my mother was a widow dwelling near a stream called "Chubhole." I took to that stream to fish in all sorts of ways—hook and line, trap, gig, and with my hands under logs and rocks. I went one Sunday with hook and line, and, while fishing, I saw a water-snake lying upon an alder bush over the water. It was licking out its tongue at me. I took fright, ran to the house, and told my mother what I had seen. She took her Bible and read to me the story of the serpent tempting Eve. I thought I had seen the devil, and I have not been fishing on Sunday since that time. I have often thought my mother was wise in reading that Scripture instead of scolding me.

I suppose I am a born fisherman; but I do it for recreation. Fishing has been designated "the contemplative man's recreation." It may be. I like to get my own bait, paddle my own boat (unless Dr. I. W. Johnson is with me), and then we unite our forces. In that way, I get the sport and exercise combined. I do not care for fancy tackle; but when summertime comes, Nature grows tired and sluggish, and the year's work robs me of energy, I long for pond-recreation. One cannot rest in his study or in his store. The boat is the only place of oblivion. As the line goes down you forget everything. You think of nothing. You are in Nature's lap. She rocks you into forgetfulness. You watch the line and the cork. It is rest until you see the cork go under, and then it is ecstasy. If the fish do not bite, there is a lull that is as sweet as sleep with pleasant dreams. The fishing line goes out of sight and puts one in touch with unseen nature which God has made for human use. The fish is a cold-blooded animal and does not suffer pain, else I would not enjoy myself at the expense of its pain. The apostles were poor men, but I am sure it was a supreme test to leave the Lake; but they left all and followed Him. But they went again after His resurrection, and He came to the Lake and directed them to success where they "had toiled all night and taken nothing." The world succeeds in obeying Christ. The song of the fishing-line is music that has never been written, but it has been heard with delight.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER

IN every community there is needed a person able to inspire promising youth to prepare themselves for places of leadership. Why should not the minister be the one to do this?

Some families have no need of such inspirational guidance. These homes have parents of education and culture presiding over them, and the young there, as a matter of course, will go to the public schools and later to college or professional schools. But not all the leadership of the next generation is born into such homes. The world's leaders have, generally speaking, come from the great middle class, and, at times, out of the most unexpected hovels of the poor or vicious.

Some brilliant children born in humble and obscure circumstances have such gifts of aspiration that, single-handed and alone, they are able to overcome their handicaps and climb to a life-preparation adequate for leadership. Such was Lincoln. Such was Doctor Craven, founder of Trinity College in North Carolina. Such was William Wirt, Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court.

But such instances are rare. The great majority of geniuses in humble homes are born to spend their lives of rich endowment in the desert and waste places of the earth. Oftentimes the nagging highbrow critics of a community wound the budding aspirations of such a hopeful life with stinging insinuations, if it should begin to look up from its obscure place and to bestir itself for a larger service. How many times has the poor boy of great promise and hopeful aspiration been ridiculed as being above his parents, if he suggests going to college, though he will have to earn every dollar of his way! "He ought to help with the farm," these thoughtless or jealous critics assert. And the aspiring daughter of the home of poverty, it is insinuated, is a “masher” if she begins to hope she may, by her labor, enter some college that will prepare her for a larger service. “She ought to be a washerwoman rather than a college student,” her critics sneer.

Despite all our democracy, we are, in practice and thought, adherents of a sort of aristocracy. Somehow, we expect homes of a certain economic or social grade to produce for us our leaders. Those in homes below this scale we expect to be the human beasts of burden for the drudge work of the world. Now, drudge work is all right. It is no disgrace to do it, but not all Nazarenes are by birth condemned to such labor. God has prophets in Nazareth, too. Out of that unpromising city may arise the liberator of the world. The humblest home may produce a Woodrow Wilson or a W. W. Staley.

It is in such cases that the person of sympathy and inspiration is a positive asset of helpfulness in the community. I know one country church in this state that has more than twenty of its young people in colleges this hard year. Why? Because their pastor counseled with parent and child alike to make the necessary sacrifice, when he saw in son or daughter evidences of large usefulness. Many of these young people are from humble homes, and so they are earning their way through college in whole or in part. The pastor in every case helped make the arrangements.

We have in the North Carolina Conference a minister of like practices. We may have many others, but he is remarkably successful in his efforts. He would never forgive me for calling his name. But something happens in every community where he labors to stir the hearts of the young people for higher education, and to secure it in our own college. When he leaves a field, in a few years the attendance falls off. How does he do it? He studies the list of pupils of his congregations in high school. He encourages them. He counsels with them. He prays for them by name. We need many such men. Happy is the parish with such a great-heart in its pulpit!

W. A. HARPER.

CLOTHES-LINES AGAIN

 HAVE read Dr. W. W. Staley’s article on the “clothes-line,” and I wish that I could write so as to tell him of the good things that have come into my life through his regular writings to THE SUN. I will never hang out another washing that I will not think of him and that one article. However, when I saw in THE SUN of February 8, Brother J. H. Lightbourne’s reply, I said in my heart, I am going to try to write something.

I have been washing since I was ten years old—and I will be 53 March 26—and I want to say that all the water I have used has not been soapy and hot, and all the wash days have not been windy. Brother Lightbourne said that he knew a washerwoman who used to sing with a sigh of resignation, “Jesus, I My Cross Have Taken,” and I am wondering how he could tell she was thinking of her tub. One of my favorite songs is, “Must Jesus Bear the Cross Alone?” and while singing this dear old song, I am thinking how little my crosses are to those of His. Brother Lightbourne speaks of the young wife who, over her tub, became apoplectic and almost profane. I wonder if he thinks these tubs are going to be held responsible in the day of judgment. Now, Brother Lightbourne, I have handled all kinds of tubs, and they haven’t affected me that way.

Now, about that brand-new son: God bless his life, I hope he will be called of God to preach the gospel, but if I had him to rear I would rather take a chance even at the wash tub than bringing him up in many other ways in this generation.

I have been a reader of THE SUN since I was eleven years old. At that time I was crippled, and for months did not move except when my father moved me, and then I walked on crutches for many months. I was so glad when I was able to walk again that I did not mind handling wash tubs.

CHRISTIAN CHINA FROM A BUSINESS STANDPOINT

 F China wants to grow and become a strong and self-sustaining nation she must accept Christianity. This is the opinion of Thomas W. Lamont, prominent New York banker, and organizer of the fight on the famine in China a year ago, and one of the leading authorities on that country in the United States. He said that the Chinese must give up their cult of ancestor-worship if they are to take advantage of all the benefits which accrue to them from the Washington Conference.

The Chinese have the capacity, the industry and the character to make themselves a progressive and modern nation, according to Mr. Lamont, but are obstructed in their progress by the lengths to which they carry forefather worship, which now influences most of their acts. On his recent visit to China, Mr. Lamont said that one far-sighted Chinese in the business world of that country with whom he talked, said that the prospects of making a great and prosperous nation out of China lay in the substitution of Christianity for Confucianism.

Would not Christian business men, in our future dealings with China and other countries of the Far East, be a great aid to foreign missions? The world needs men that play fair and square, with a love and appreciation of their fellowman, wherever they go. Such men in our foreign trade would go a long way toward redeeming the blot of the opium trade and other such business deals that have been turning the Chinese against the foreigners; as demonstrated in the Boxer uprising in 1900. No doubt if American and European business men like Mr. Lamont and other Christian business men in China could get together and work with the missionaries of China, that country would be Christianized in a very short time. Then Christianize the Japanese and the Far Eastern problem will be safely solved.

J. E. MASSEY.

A SUGGESTION

It is a long time since I have broken into the columns of THE SUN, but there is just a brief word I feel constrained to write, which has been provoked by Dr. Staley's letter this week.

What a fine thing it will be for the circulation of THE SUN when two thousand subscribers secure two thousand more! Permit me to suggest this: There are doubtless quite a number of readers who will say something like the following: "That looks well enough on paper, but to do the thing is quite another proposition." Then there are perhaps equally as many who will say, "I believe the thing can be done, and I am going to try it."

Now, may I assume that all of these people in both groups are members and FRIENDS of the Christian Church? If so, then they are all vitally interested in seeing the circulation of THE SUN increased. Let the people who think the thing can be done, go out to prove to the people who think it cannot be done that they are mistaken; and let the people who think it cannot be done, go out to prove to the people who think it can be done that it cannot be done. But be careful in no instance to substitute will not for can not, and see what is in store for you.

I did not start out to write what I have written, but it looks attractive, and so I shall allow it to stand. What the editor may see fit to do may be another story.

Here is what I started to write: Let each church-member be solicited to increase his subscription to his church five cents a week. As rapidly as these are secured, have the church treasurer forward to THE CHRISTIAN SUN $2.50 with the name of the subscriber. Thus every subscription will be kept paid up, and THE SUN will shine the more brightly. While it is true the church treasury will feel a little extra strain at the beginning, I am sure it will be found a good paying investment. I mean it will pay in dollars, as well as in spiritual dividends. No person may long be a reader of his Church paper who shall not be found inquiring of his Lord and Master new avenues of usefulness through which he may function in righteousness. And where there is the ability to do, the avenue of giving with a more liberal hand will not long remain closed.

Now we have tried substantially this very plan, and it works. We have not tried it yet with the Herald of Gospel Liberty, but we expect to, when the opportune time comes. But we have tried it with our Missionary Society. Our Woman's Missionary Society three years ago had fourteen members. We secured a few subscriptions to The Christian Missionary. Let me tell you it was up-hill work, too. But it was not long—a few months—until we began to see a difference in the interest in missions. Then we went out and succeeded in doubling the membership of the Society. After that things seemed to settle down to the carrying out of a larger program, but in a more or less stereotyped fashion. Nearly a year passed in this way, when the plan suggested above was presented. Mark you, this was in Rhode Island, where it is almost a crime to establish a precedent. The dues were ten cents a month. The suggestion to increase them to fifteen cents a month met with no opposition whatsoever. The treasury of the society thus profited ten cents a year from each subscription, and each member became automatically a subscriber to the magazine. But that was not all. A month ago a donation of three dollars was made to the Society on condition that a like sum be voted from the treasury with which to invest in twelve copies of the magazine for free distribution for propaganda purposes. Another precedent was established right there. It was done. And last night, at the monthly meeting, eleven new members were added to the Society. A number of others are in sight, and we shall be very much disappointed if we do not reach fifty before summer.

KEEPING THE CHILD GOOD, OR MAKING THE ADULT TO BE GOOD?

It was my privilege, during February, to attend two inspirational meetings: the State Sunday School Convention at Charlottesville, Va., and the Law Enforcement Convention at Richmond, Va. Probably the importance of what they stand for is in the order named, though the last named convention was held first.

I have been thinking, especially since seeing and hearing so much about religious education, that if we could so teach the child as to keep him good, never to be out of harmony with God and the right, we would not have to hold our Law Enforcement Conventions, with the thought of getting the older ones to be good—to behave themselves.

It is a beautiful ideal—to some only an ideal—to so teach the child and nourish it in the Christian doctrine, that he would never know what sin is by an experience. I will not at this time discuss that phase of it. I suppose that we are all agreed with Robert Raikes, that if we are going to uplift humanity and to Christianize the race, we must begin with the child.

We have made much progress since his day in the way of Sunday school efficiency, still we seem to be far from a perfect system of religious education. We have some splendid machinery and ideals, but much of the material seems to slip away at a very critical time. Recent finding report eighty per cent of the boys and girls in England dropping out of the Sunday school when they are about fourteen years of age, and a recent statement makes the percentage sixty in our American schools of those dropping out at about this age.

And in the face of this we have the statement that in this country there are forty-seven million boys and girls who are receiving no sort of religious instruction—one hundred and sixty thousand of these in Virginia alone. It is from this number and those that slip out of our hands that we get our lawless and disobedient, anarchist, I. W. W.'s and every class that is vile.

Let us by all means keep up our hospitals, and if need be build more, but when will we get fully awake to the thought, and appreciate it, that an ounce of preventative is worth a pound of cure? We will keep on our work of re-formation, but we would not have so much of this to do if we could solve the problem of proper formation. Let us work to save souls, but try to realize how much more it may mean to save lives.

Where are we to look for the training of our children? We have in mind three institutions: the Home, the State, the Church. What are these doing, or what can they do? There are three words which we seem to see written over these three institutions, making the situation not so encouraging as it might be: over the home, neglect; over the State, limited; over the Church, divided. The limit put upon the public schools and state institutions places an added responsibility upon the Church for the teaching of youth, and yet she is far from a unit in filling her mission. The home must be aroused to a sense of its primary importance in religious education.

Three great books have been written within the last three years, reporting certain findings among the men of the armies in England and America as to their knowledge of things Christian. These Commissions say, we might hope that in a Christian country, men generally, even those without any allegiance to Christ or His Church, would know what Christianity is, but the Chaplains say they do not. And they go beyond that and say that men nominally in the Church, men who have been to Christian schools, are in much the same condition. They do not have the Christian idea of God. They have no clear knowledge of Christ. The Kingdom of God is often a meaningless term to them.

The remedy offered in the findings of the three books mentioned is that the Church must become a teaching Church. The English group, especially, lays stress upon the thought that the Church will have to put its very heart and soul into the work of restating the great faiths by which it lives and from which it draws its inspiration, in terms which can be understood.

How did the truths of Christianity win their way at first? Was it not because the life of the Church arrested the attention of the Jew, the Greek and the Roman, so that the truths presented commended themselves as solving the problem of life? Some of these old-time preachers were accused of being drunk, mad, turning the world upside down, and teaching things which they ought not. Let us not be carried away with the book of numbers but have regard for the book of acts. Let the teachers be prepared to teach, but let us not forget that we may know about the things of God without knowing the things of God. "Even so, the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God." (1 Cor. 2: 11.)

A REVIEW

(Received too late for classification)

I have been very much interested in the discussions going on in THE CHRISTIAN SUN regarding the division of the North Carolina Conference. There is one thing I hope we all will remember: That the Christian Church is bigger than any one man, or group of men. It is not what we want to do, but what we have done, that counts.

What have we done as three Conferences? During the life of the Western North Carolina Conference five churches were organized and houses built, seven new churches were built by old organizations, and several remodeled. We entered the merger out of debt, with funds on hand to do missionary work; and more money to help the worn-out preachers than both the other Conferences, the records will show.

At the last session of the North Carolina Conference no appropriations were made for missionary work, because of the lack of funds; yet there are those who say, "We are progressing," and "Let us go on." I hope that the churches will seriously consider this matter.

Now, as to the argument for one Conference: We have the supposed referendum of the preachers by Dr. W. A. Harper. What for? Next is "Start Something and Then Kill It." Who said so? Rev. J. V. Knight says that the other fellow said so. I hope the other fellow will speak out. Prof. W. P. Lawrence puts up a fright of indebtedness in the Eastern North Carolina Conference. If the Conference contracted the debt, she is able to pay it and ought to do so. Dr. W. S. Long says, "Heed Lawrence." I say, heed the cause. This is why I am in favor of three Conferences. Rev. P. T. Klapp has abandoned his line he put up at Conference, for a new one. What will be the next?

The General Assembly of Virginia is now entertaining a bill providing for $12,000,000 for the construction of state highways. We note that Governor Trimble has promised the first road money to be used on the road between Hillsville via Faney Gap and the North Carolina line. This road will, therefore, serve our mountain school.

Rev. H. W. Dowding, Portsmouth, Va., some weeks ago outlined a plan of handling the soldiers' bonus. We notice in the Portsmouth (Va.) Star that the President asked Brother Dowding to send him his plan, which he did. The bill that was reported on favorably some days ago was practically the same as Brother Dowding's plan.

THE SUN's editor thoroughly appreciates the many splendid letters which he has received in recent weeks. It is almost a physical impossibility for us to reply to all of these letters and at the same time carry on our other work. Nevertheless, good friends, we thank you.

Burlington Daily News, Burlington's daily paper, made its appearance today (Monday) and in creditable form. Mr. O. F. Crowson is president of the company issuing the paper. We welcome it to this sanetum and wish it a long and useful life.

President W. A. Harper spoke in the Methodist Protestant church, Burlington, last Sunday night. His theme was "The Preeminence of Jesus in Education."

ON CONFERENCE DIVISION

A SERIOUS QUESTION

The time is now very near when we are going to decide whether or not the North Carolina Christian Conference shall stand united. Personally, I am sorry that there has been sufficient opposition to a united Conference to cause a referendum vote to be taken. But since it is so, it is a question to be taken more seriously than some of us are likely to think. Division is suggestive of weakness and failure. Unity is the basis of power, and the only thing by which the Kingdom of God shall be brought to pass. Standing and working together, we are a strong army for the Master; divided, we can be none other than weak and inefficient for His work. Standing together, our influence will reach far and wide; sitting alone, it must inevitably be narrow.

Today the demands of the Kingdom are great, and it is only through united effort that they can be met. May we all, in considering this matter, free ourselves of any petty ideas or interests which are likely to influence our action, and face the issue with our hearts centered upon the interest of the Kingdom. Permit me to give expression to what I feel and believe, in saying that if our Conference is divided, the Christian Church will incur one of the greatest, if not altogether the greatest, injury that has ever come upon it. We have launched forth into a new day, a great duty is incumbent upon us, and let us be true to our trust. May it be that we shall stand firm, united as one body, and bound together in the spirit of the Man of Galilee.

I have written these few words as one who desires above everything else to be loyal to the Kingdom of our Master, who prays for its fulfilment upon the earth, and in the hope that we might be led to think again before we commit ourselves to a thing that can easily mean irreparable loss to the progress of the work we are endeavoring to carry on. May I say then, let us stand together, and in that good day we shall receive the commendation from the hands of Him who never errs, and shall be glad and rejoice for what we have done, for His blessing shall be upon us.

DISAGREE AND GO AHEAD

In reference to Conference division, we certainly can not see alike, but the best way that I can see is to agree to disagree. I was in Conference when the vote was taken to unite, and I opposed the move. I thought at the time that it was a mistake, and think so yet, and also think that it would be a mistake now to divide again so soon. I never did admire the crawfish plan, yet it may be best, as it is liable to be a wrangle in every Conference until division is effected.

If we divide, let us have three and not two Conferences. I think it would be a great mistake to divide into two Conferences, as some suggest. I do not think we will ever better the condition before the union. I find that wise heads make mistakes as well as others. I have been a Justice of the Peace for about twenty-five years, and in the presence of three or four lawyers would ask for explanation of certain statutes, and very often could not get two to agree; and I find that our wiser heads in this matter of union and division of Conference are divided.

So in conclusion, let us agree to disagree, and pull together for the good of the cause. I am now in my seventy-third year and have missed very few Conferences for twenty-five or thirty years, but don't feel that I will be able to attend many more unless they are nearer by. But my desires and prayers will be with the brethren if I am absent.

"DOCTORS OF DIVINITY"

These cabalistic symbols seem to have a certain charm in the eyes of non-possessors, while to those who have experienced their emptiness they are "like dead sea fruits that tempt the eye, but turn to ashes on the lips."

Their peculiar fascination in the eyes of many was recently shown in the response to the offer from Denver, Colorado, to confer the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon any minister sending $25.00 in cool cash. In one week he received more than $1,200.

When you remember how poor the preachers, as a class, are, this fact speaks volumes.

Not only are we surprised that a sum as large as that should be raised by such men, but we are the more surprised that this craving for an honorary title should be able to override the voice of conscience and persuade them to flaunt a lie in the face of men.

It is evident that there is before the ministry a strong temptation to strut in borrowed plumes, and to imagine that the possession of a degree will raise them in the estimation of the Church.

It would be well, if it were possible, to abolish this artificial and, in many cases, undeserved distinction between brethren, especially in those churches that hold to the parity of the ministry.

As one who has staggered under this honor for many years, we can testify that it is a liability rather than an asset, and that too often the wearer of it feels as if he were an ass strutting about in a lion's skin.

When we meet one "bearing his blushing honors thick upon him," we are reminded of the saying of Cicero that in his day one soothsayer could not look another one in the face without laughter.

But whatever be our personal views, it is safe to say to all aspirants that the honor is not worth twenty-five dollars.—Presbyterian Standard.

"Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord. . . . Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is."—Jeremiah 17: 5, 7.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

THROUGH THE FIRE WITH GOD

“Think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you. But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ’s sufferings; that when His glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad with exceeding joy.” Have you thought what the fiery furnace did for those three Jews away back in Nebuchadnezzar’s time? They were cast into the burning fiery furnace bound, but everything which the fire hurt was the cords which bound them. Soon the king was astonished because he saw four men, unhurt, unbound, loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and the fourth was like the Son of God.

Oh, how Christians today need to be set free from the things which bind them to the world! Many, like the rich young ruler, are bound by their love of money, or what it gets. Others are bound by their love of pleasure, others by the love of fame. Anything which holds a larger place than Jesus does in the heart is a cord which is binding us to the world, and the burning fiery furnace is often necessary to loose us from those binding cords.

That blessed fourth Person who is like the Son of God is always present in every fiery trial to deliver His servants who trust in Him. He not only is with them in the furnace, but He goes with them through the fiery trial. “When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee.” Remember, He does not say into the fire—that might cause us to think there would be a possibility of His leaving us there alone. But He says through the fire. Oh, what a loving, thoughtful Father our God is. He begins with a “fear not” and a promise to be with us all the way through the fiery trials which He lets come into our lives.

So “think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you.” It is the purifying effect God has in view when He lets fiery trials of any kind come into our lives. It is to loose us from the earthly cares and pleasures which are holding us bound. He knows our faith is more precious than gold, and He purifies and disciplines, that we may “be found unto praise and honor and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ: whom having not seen, we love.” What a day that is to look forward to, the day of His appearing! Are you letting Him lead you through the burning fiery furnace, that the cords which hold you bound to the world may all be burned away? That you may be a partaker of His glory, and be glad with exceeding joy when His glory shall be revealed?

IN AT LAST AND HAPPY

I came near yelling at the top of my voice in sheer joy when I opened this letter from Miss Hedgepeth:

"We began teaching in our new building this week. It is so nice and comfortable. We are very much pleased with it and should not like to exchange positions now with any girls we know.

"I am able to teach more regularly now and our little ones are doing fine. My next work is to get all the folks of school age (here) in school. That will mean much work, of course, but it is greatly needed, and I must try to reach them some way. Considerably more interest is being manifested in the Sunday schools. The one here at least is improving in attendance and interest. Miss Midyett should receive the praise for this. She is much interested in all there is to be done, and is a splendid worker. I am very thankful that the Lord opened the way for her to come.

"My next task about the building is to see about the inside painting. I have everything planned for the outside. And as soon as there is fit weather we shall begin on it. The inside furnishing upon which I had decided does not prove to be just what we want. I am investigating about paints, stains, etc., and shall wait until spring to have same applied, I think.

"A little later I hope to be able to write to our people through THE SUN of our school, the completion of the building, and the work generally."

This is the best news coming to us in many months. Now for furnishing the equipment for the building and the cash with which to pay for it. Most of the seats, we have no doubt, are there and ready, but they are not paid for.

HONOR ROLL OF SUNDAY SCHOOLS FOR FEBRUARY

The following are the Sunday schools that reported missionary offerings for the month of February, and amounts sent in. How we wish every school in the Southern Convention would prove its loyalty to the Convention's voice and vote in urging that the offering of one Sunday per month be given to the Orphanage and one Sunday a month to missions; the offerings of the other two Sundays each month to pay current expenses. Several other schools took offerings in February, but their report reached us too late for the February report. Their names and amounts will appear in the report for March. The Board has voted that one-half these funds be used in promoting our Mountain work (home missions), the other half in building our Kindergarten and Night School in Japan (foreign work). It seems that every Sunday school in the Southern Convention would wish to have a part in these worthy and needful enterprises. We are happy that the number gradually increases, and long for the day when our report will show one hundred per cent of our schools following the plan, "As much for others as for self."

The February report includes: New Providence, Graham, N. C., $3.00; Beulah, Phoenix, Ala., $1.60; Rose Hill, Columbus, Ga., $9.35; Union (Surry), $1.00; High Point, $2.00; Reidsville, $2.21; Winchester, $6.08; Berea (Alamance), $1.54; Richland, Ga., $1.10; Henderson, $5.90; Bethlehem (Nans.), Va., $3.40; Rose Hill, Columbus, Ga., $3.25; Wake Chapel, Cardenas, N. C., $4.00; New Providence, Graham, N. C., $3.45; Liberty (Vance), $4.60; South Norfolk, $11.24; Leaksville, Va., $1.33; Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, Va., $6.75; Third Avenue, Danville, Va., $12.09; Berea (Norfolk), $1.50; Burlington, $72.11; Third Church, Norfolk, Va., $496.80. Total, $654.30.

EDUCATIONAL

INTERESTED IN JUNIOR COLLEGE

To say that we are interested in the Junior College to be built at Wadley, Alabama, does not express our appreciation as strongly as we will express it by giving it our support with our means, boys and girls. I read with interest Doctor Lankford's note in THE SUN recently regarding a name for the college. Brother J. O. Cheek ("Uncle John," as he is called) of Linville, Alabama, paid me the first $50.00 on the college, and I congratulate myself on depositing the first money toward the institution. I think when the trustees get ready to build, our part of the money will be forthcoming.

He took one hundred executives, responsible for the administration of these great enterprises, and set up an inquiry as to the human stuff that they were made of, beginning with the influences which surrounded their boyhood. And he publishes this as the result: Sons of bankers, 5 per cent; sons of manufacturers and merchants, 20 per cent; sons of farmers and laborers, 20 per cent; sons of teachers, physicians, and lawyers, 20 per cent; sons of poor country preachers, 30 per cent!—Exchange.

"TELL ME A STORY"

A LITTLE CHILD

(Marian B. Craig)

Dear Lord, I do not ask

That Thou shouldst give me some high work of Thine,
Some noble calling or some wondrous task;
Give me a little hand to hold in mine.

Give me a little child to point the way

Over the strange, sweet path that leads to Thee;
Give me a little voice to teach to pray;
Give me two shining eyes Thy face to see.

The only crown I ask, dear Lord, to wear,
Is this—that I may teach a little child.

I do not ask that I should ever stand

Among the wise, the worthy or the great;
I only ask that, softly, hand in hand,
A child and I may enter at the gate.

RAIN AND SNOW

(Dorothy Tanner)

Some Indian people in our far-off West tell the children that this world has seven layers or stories. There is one below the one in which we live, and above us are five. In the one directly above us lives Muinwa, the rain god. He has a great brush made of birds' feathers. Every bird has plucked a feather for it, so proud is he to have his plumage used by Muinwa.

This great brush Muinwa dips into the lakes and rivers of the skies and sprinkles the earth with refreshing showers. Then the grass grows green, and the flowers lift up their drooping heads. In winter, Muinwa crushes the ice flakes of the skies, and scatters them over the earth, and the children exclaim, "See the snow-storm!"

A CLEVER TAILOR BIRD

(Jean McIntyre, in Our Dumb Animals)

Did you know that there was a little bird so clever that he could sew, could make a bag?

Yes, it is true. He is a native of India, and he bores tiny holes with his bill in the edges of a leaf and then sews it up with shreds of fiber, which he strips from the trees or leaves.

If you were to sew up a leaf, you would find that you had made a "sweety poke," shaped jut like the pretty ones you see on the Christmas trees filled with candy.

Well, the clever tailor bird makes a bag out of a leaf, or sometimes two, if they are small ones, then fills it with soft seraps to make it warm, and that is his nest.

The little tailors like it very much, and must look very cunning peering out of such a funny home.

THE SUNSHINE HOUSE

(Rev. Howard J. Chidley, in Story Sermons for Children)

Over in a village called Holmwood, in the county of Surrey, England, is an old house which stands in a beautiful garden, and on this house is a strange sun-dial. It is fastened on the end of the house where the sun shines in the morning, and tells the time, like other sun-dials when the sun shines on it.

But the most interesting thing about this sun-dial is the verse which is painted above it on the wall of the house. The verse runs like this:

Let others tell of storms and showers,
I mark the sunny morning hours.

I think the sun-dial had a very good motto. I wish every boy and girl would take it as his motto:

Let others tell of storms and showers,
I mark the sunny morning hours.

Wouldn't it be a fine thing if every boy and girl would do as that sun-dial? When clouds are in the sky or a storm comes it says nothing at all about it. It only makes note of the sunshine.

If boys and girls would take that as their motto we should never hear them telling of their disappointments. They would not be complaining to others about their clothes, or their teachers in school, or what they have to eat. And I am very sure we should never hear them saying anything disagreeable about other boys and girls.

If boys and girls took the motto of the sun-dial they would talk of only the good things and the beautiful things. They would not talk about the faults of other boys and girls. They would talk about the fine things they see in their playmates. For you know there are fine things in every boy and girl if you only look for them. These children would not talk about the things they do not have. But they would talk about the many blessings they do have. They would not talk about the teachers they don't like. They would keep in mind the teachers they do like.

There is another thing I want you to notice about this sun-dial. It marked the sunny morning hours. Some one has said that if you keep sweet up to 10 o'clock in the morning you will keep sweet all of the rest of the day. There is a great deal of truth in that. Try being sunny in the morning. Get up sunny and happy. Come to the breakfast table with a smile, and the rest of the day will go much better.

Nobody wishes to go with the boy or girl who sees and talks about the disagreeable things. An old verse has it:

Laugh and the world laughs with you,
Weep and you weep alone.

If you would have friends you must

Let others tell of storms and showers.

Keep on the sunny side of the house.

WHAT EVERYONE KNOWS

Cocks crow in the morn to tell us to rise,
And he who lies late will never be wise;
For early to bed and early to rise,
Is the way to be healthy and wealthy and wise.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON— MARCH 12, 1922

Amos Warns Israel (Temperance Lesson)—Amos 6: 1-8

Golden Text: "Wine is a mocker, strong drink a brawler; and whosoever erreth thereby is not wise."—Proverbs 20: 1.

LESSON THOUGHTS:

Social evils destroy a people. Prosperity is often the test of a nation's strength.

Amos, the prophet of righteousness, was called from his humble life as a shepherd of Tekoa to be God's messenger to warn His people. Today God is calling Christians to protest against social injustice and oppression and sin. This call to leadership imposes responsibility for the safety of men and women. Today God is preparing boys and girls to carry on His work. Are you helping these young people to be ready in your Sunday school?

This lesson brings up the question of the duty of the Sunday school toward the evils of the community. Can Christians be faithful to the high moral and spiritual standard of the Master and ignore the poor, the oppressed, child labor, graft, breaking of the prohibition laws, showing of immoral moving pictures, and all such influences which tend to corrupt society and harm young life? The Sunday school needs to sound the note of warning, and to send out Christians with high ideals of righteousness and purity and justice to correct these social evils.

"O man, what is good; and what doth Jehovah require of thee, but to do justly, and to love kindness, and to walk humbly with thy God?"—Micah 6: 8.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR MARCH 12, 1922

Habits, Good and Bad.—Prov. 4: 23-27; Heb. 10: 23-25

TO THINK ABOUT:

"Habits are like a rolling stone upon a mountain top, which a child may first set off but a giant cannot stop."—French.

"Here are some things that should be crystallized into habit: Careful thinking on every subject; assimilating the knowledge that comes from reading and observation; correctness in conversation and manners; physical exercise and regular hours; Bible study, prayer, the old-fashioned virtues of industry and economy; method in work of every kind."—Archer Brown.

"Have your habits fighting for you, not against you."—Governor Carlson.

It is difficult to lay aside the habits formed in youth. "Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? Then may ye also do good that are accustomed to do evil." (Jeremiah 13: 23.) With God all things are possible, and He is ready to give us help in the formation of good habits, and in overcoming the evil habits. Without His divine aid, too often Habit is the master.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION ACTIVITIES IN OUR CHURCHES

The Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor is a live factor in the Winchester, Virginia, church. A recent letter from the former president of this society, Mr. Paul Hook, tells something of the work that the society has done in helping the church financially, and also in furnishing workers in the evangelistic services. Ushers, singers in the choir, and musicians for the orchestra came from the Christian Endeavor Society to help in these services in the church, and in the union evangelistic campaign held in Winchester as well. This society is working on the Efficiency Chart, and is making splendid progress. The society is looking forward eagerly to the arrival of Rev. J. F. Morgan as their pastor, hoping under his inspiration to do a greater Christian Endeavor work.

Miss Ella Pickering, of Broadway, Virginia, writes: "We have been having a very good Sunday school at Bethlehem this winter," and also: "I am highly in favor of holding a Church Vacation School here this summer, and will be glad to do anything I can to help along with the school." Mr. Welch, the superintendent of this Sunday school, has also expressed his interest in the Church Vacation School, and is planning to carry on this work at Bethlehem late this spring. What church will be next to take up this great work?

Mr. J. E. Foster, a member of the Leaksville Christian church, and an active Sunday school worker, was elected a member of the Executive Committee of the Virginia State Sunday School Association, to represent the Christian Church. This committee was elected at the recent annual session of the Association at Charlottesville. At this Convention, the Christian Church was represented by Dr. W. D. Harward, of Dendron; Mr. D. H. Welch, of Bethlehem church (Valley of Virginia); Rev. R. P. Crumpler and Mr. J. E. Foster, of Leaksville, and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, Field Secretary, of Richmond. The Convention was well attended, the program was most helpful and inspiring, and the meeting was declared to be one of the most successful in the history of the Virginia Sunday School Association.

Mr. W. L. Jarrel has been elected Missionary Superintendent of the East La Grange Sunday school (La Grange, Ga.), and is just beginning his good work by declaring: "I want to say that I am thankful for the position, . . . and by the help of God, I will try my best to please Him." Workers understanding the task in this spirit will surely render a great service.

A new Christian Endeavor Society has been organized recently in the church at Ramseur, N. C. Several other churches are planning to organize this work in the early spring.

Jesus said: "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another: as I have loved you, that ye also love one another. By this shall all men know that ye are My disciples, if ye have love one to another." (John 13: 34, 35.)

STEWARDSHIP AND TITHING

SOME DISCUSSIONS BY REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

WHAT PASTORS ARE SAYING

Our pastors who are in closest touch with their members realize that this is no time for urging money matters nor unduly pressing the people. They understand, however, that our campaign for tithers in nowise calls for money nor presses any one to do anything save to learn what the Bible teaches on this vital topic, and then let the individual act in keeping therewith, or decline as one may decide. I think all understand that the present campaign for tithers is one of education along a most vital line of Bible teaching. A letter before me now from an active, wideawake pastor is typical of many, and reads as follows: "First, tithing is the solution of our (church) financial problems. Second, there is a great spiritual benefit for the tither. Third, very few farmers are making anything. Fourth, very few business men are making anything. Fifth, at this time we need a campaign of encouragement, with stress laid upon the moral obligation involved in the Men and Millions pledges. Sixth, that when times are nearer normalcy a stewardship and tithing campaign would be more effectual. We will do our best to co-operate in whatever you propose. We would appreciate any literature you can send that really meets the farmer's tithing problem."

Seems that this pastor has sensed the situation and says briefly what scores are saying at greater or less length. It is realized that we would possibly at some other time get more tithers than can be obtained now, but it is further realized that the pledge to tithe now requires faith, and those who tithe in such a time are likely to prove faithful to the end. Moreover, we are not trying in this campaign to compel any one to give money or to collect money from any one, but we are trying to bring home to the people that sense of stewardship that expresses itself in the tithe in order that spiritual advantages may be derived and that there may be spiritual growth and permanency. We have secured, and are sending to those who will agree to distribute it prudently, literature which, if read carefully, will, we think, lead any one to see that tithing is the Biblical way of giving. One of our pamphlets is "Can a Farmer Tithe," by one who does; another is, "Can a Woman Tithe?" by some who know; another is "How to Tithe and Why," by a layman; another, "Is Tithing Worth While?" by Harvey Reeves Calkins; another still, "Does a Tenth Belong to God?" by Dr. H. Clay Trumbull. This literature has been the means of leading thousands into the light of Bible teaching on this great topic, and if our people will only learn what the Bible teaches and follow in the light of their learning from the Book, this question will be settled right and permanently. If any reader of this article desires any of the literature mentioned and can use it to advantage, the request will be appreciated and the order supplied without charge.

LET CHRISTIANS DECIDE

The writer believes that Christian people are capable of deciding for themselves the vital issues of life. His only purpose in emphasizing stewardship and tithing at this time is to get Christians who have not thought seriously on the subject to study it in the light of Bible teaching. He is not urging people to do something against their will, nor trying to compel people to think about a worn-out and disagreeable problem. The fact is, when people have thought over the matter and become convinced for themselves that tithing is right, they have got untold joy from the practice and experience. God's plans for us are always better than our own, and it is the desire of the writer not to have any of his own plans adopted in the matter, but to get the people to study the question and see what God's plans are for them.

Thousands of the very best Christians of this and other countries are practicing tithing to their profit spiritually and physically, and we Christians should share the joy that others do in this great matter.

During these months I am gratified to find that Methodists, Presbyterians, Baptists, Reformed, and others are trying to bring home to their people the thought of stewardship and tithing as plainly taught in God's Word. It is devoutly to be hoped that all our pastors will call to the attention of their congregation the plain Bible teaching on tithing, and seek through sermon and service to influence as many of their congregation as they can to this Biblical way of financing the Kingdom. This is no drive for money, and no scheme for entangling the brotherhood, but an honest effort to bring about spiritual growth and permanency in our churches. If we signed up 2,500 tithers two years ago, have we not grown enough in that time through the members taken in and through the efforts put forth two years ago to very largely increase, if not double, this number? It is primarily for the benefit of the local church, its progress and development, that this campaign is being carried on. If we could just get the people to reading, talking, and thinking about tithing, we do not fear the results.

We are glad that so many are availing themselves of the good literature that we have on the subject. These requests are coming in and we are pleased to gratify them without any charges. We have secured the best literature published on tithing, and we are anxious that CHRISTIAN SUN readers shall have the benefit of it. Send in your request: read, think, and decide for yourself what God's plan is for you in giving to His cause.

Sister C. F. Rudd, of our Portsmouth, Virginia, congregation: "I will do all I can for the Stewardship and Tithing Campaign. Send me literature and I will do my best to increase and double if possible the number of tithers in our church. I tithe myself since the Men and Millions Movement, and find the greatest pleasure I have ever had in the service of my Lord."

"Many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up into the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and He will teach us of His ways, and we will walk in His paths."—Micah 4: 2.

CHURCH NEWS

A PLEASANT SURPRISE

It came in the way of a "pounding." It was given by the good people of the Wakefield church. We were made aware of it at the close of our evening service Christmas day. It was their intention to load the Ford before we came out to start home, but we happened to be driving a Runabout that night and its capacity was not sufficient to hold the good things gotten together. We were asked to come over in a touring car next day. We were very glad to do so and we are still glad and thankful.

POUNDED AGAIN

It was Saturday night, February 18, 1922. I stopped with Brother Larkin Maness to spend the night. It was not long until some people came, being close neighbors of the home. A very lively social conversation began, harmoniously discussing various topics, among which Biblical thoughts were mentioned occasionally. Supper time came, and having walked about two miles, through mud part of the way, we enjoyed our evening repast immensely.

Returning in the house and resuming our conversation, all was going well when suddenly I was asked to come out to the kitchen, where only a few moments ago we had enjoyed a very sumptuous supper. The table was set with items of a different form from what it was at supper. I was told, "This is for you." Quite surprised, at first I did not understand, but it was a pounding, the kind that replenishes the pantry when everything is getting low.

This was made up by Shady Grove church and community people, all of which we highly appreciate. To one and all we hereby wish to extend our many thanks. May the good Lord bless all and help us to be more worthy servants.

FRANKLIN, VIRGINIA, NOTES

On February 13, 1922, "Aunt Dizia" Brantley, a member of Union Christian church, celebrated her one-hundredth birthday. Many of her friends and relatives gathered with her on this occasion.

"Aunt Dizia" before her marriage was a Miss Slade. Her parents died when she was small, and she was taken to live in the home of the late Dred Kitchen. She married Allen Brantley, by whom, at one time, all the land now included in the town of Franklin, Virginia, was cultivated as a farm.

In his childhood she nursed Rev. J. T. Kitchen, who affectionately visited her occasionally as long as he lived. Just a short while before his death, he made his accustomed pilgrimage to her home. "Aunt Dizia" is tenderly cared for by her only daughter, Miss Martha Brantley, and, for one of her age, is wonderfully preserved and active.

On Sunday, February 26, at the close of the morning service, Brother L. B. Norfleet, son of the late Deacon I. W. Norfleet, was ordained to the office of deacon. Brother Norfleet is a young man of exemplary life—the worthy son of a worthy sire.

We are looking forward to a meeting of days beginning April 19, and trust it may prove a real revival. Evangelist George D. Eastes will do the preaching. Singing will be led by Mr. Balmond, his talented leader.

NOTICE

To the churches of which I am pastor, viz.: Ebenezer, Six Forks, Franklinton, Mt. Auburn, Antioch and Bethlehem:

Please do not fail to read the notice published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, in regard to various propositions to the division of our Conference. If you have not voted, then arrange to do so, according to your best judgment, and report the result of your votes promptly, as requested, without any regard to the views of your humble pastor, expressed or implied.

WOLFEBORO, NEW HAMPSHIRE

The church at Wolfeboro, N. H., Rev. B. F. Black, pastor, has just reconstructed its old parsonage, making it over almost entirely new. It is fitted with steam heat, electric lights, and other modern conveniences. Plans for the coming year include redecorating of the church interior; remodeling of the pulpit and choir loft; building new classrooms for the Sunday school, which has outgrown its present quarters; installing a gymnasium for the Boys' Club, which is under the splendid leadership of Mr. Harold Clayton; the addition of memorial windows; a new entrance and new tablets; and improvement of the grounds. Part of the work has already been commenced. Surely Rev. Mr. Black is starting out under most favorable auspices, and he has the united support of all who are interested in the success of the Christian Church in Wolfeboro.

CALLED HOME

JUDKINS.—Everett J. Judkins was born December 11, 1853, in Surry County, Va., and died at his home in the same county, February 7, 1922, aged 68 years, one month and 27 days. February 10, 1886, he was married to Mollie Elizabeth Marrow. To this union two daughters were born, Mrs. Annie Savedge and Mrs. Carrie Slade.

He was a faithful member of New Lebanon Christian church, and for several years served as one of its deacons.

Besides the widow, two daughters, and one grandson, he leaves to mourn their loss one brother, T. W. Judkins, of Newport News, Va.

The funeral service was held in the church of which he was a member, after which the body was laid away in the old family cemetery.

EDWARDS.—Mrs. Mary Edwards was born March 5, 1833, and died February 17, 1922, aged 88 years, 11 months and 12 days.

She was married at about the age of 21 to Joshua Edwards, who preceded her to the Spirit land about 23 years. To this union seven children were born, six of whom still survive, one, Mrs. Elizabeth Parks, having died several years ago. Those living are Mrs. J. A. Stout and Mrs. J. A. Parks, of Ramseur, N. C.; Mrs. W. H. York, Ramseur, R. 2; Mr. W. N. Edwards and Mrs. J. D. Brower, of Jordan, N. C., and Rev. W. J. Edwards, of Coleridge, N. C.

She has living 32 grandchildren and 52 great-grandchildren, one brother, Mister Loammi Johnson, and scores of other relatives and friends who lament her passing.

She professed faith in Christ about 30 years ago and joined the church at Parks' Cross Roads, at which place her remains were laid to rest by those of her husband in the presence of a large congregation of friends and relatives. She said she had no fears and died trusting in the Lord.

God bless her loved ones.

EPPARD.—Mrs. Ardelia Virginia Eppard, wife of J. K. Eppard, of Stanley, Va., died February 16, 1922, aged 50 years and five days. She united with Leaksville Christian church about thirty-six years ago, and had lived the life of a true follower of Christ ever since. She was a devoted wife, a self-sacrificing and affectionate mother, and a kind and obliging neighbor. She was kind, considerate, and unselfish. She simply lived her life for her Savior and for other people. She was a patient sufferer the last six months of her life. During all of her sufferings and her troubles, she was never heard to murmur or complain.

Her husband, who survives her, is a deacon and a leader in the Leaksville church, and one of the leading laymen of the Virginia Valley Christian Conference. Sister Eppard is also survived by one son, Vern L. Eppard, of Luray, Va., R. F. D., who is also a deacon of the Leaksville church and the superintendent of the Sunday school of this church; and by Mrs. Harry Jenkins, of Luray, R. F. D., and Mrs. William Clatterbuck, of Harrisonburg, Va., both of whom are members of the Christian Church at Leaksville.

The funeral services were conducted at Leaksville, Sunday, February 19, by the writer, assisted by Elder J. B. Jenkins, of the Old School Baptist church.

May our Heavenly Father comfort and sustain the surviving loved ones.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

WILKINS.—Mrs. Julia Virginia Wilkins, daughter of James and Isabel Brown, was born December 17, 1872, and died February 17, 1922, aged 49 years and two months. When a girl, she professed faith in Christ and united with Union Christian church, Virgilina, Va. In 1896 she was married to Thomas Wilkins, who survives her, together with two children—Thomas Jackson and Isabella. She is also survived by three brothers and four sisters.

Sister Wilkins for nine months was an inmate of Hilltop Sanatorium, Danville, Va. Two weeks before her death she was taken to Catawba, where her daughter was in training for a nurse. She bore her afflictions patiently and was cheerful almost to the end. A good woman has gone to her reward.

The funeral was conducted from her home, Virgilina, Va., by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. W. Reynolds, of the Baptist church, on Sunday afternoon, February 19, and the burial was in the church cemetery.

C. E. NEWMAN.

CAMPBELL.—On Sunday, February 26, 1922, New Port Christian church lost one of its charter members by the death of Mrs. Ellen Purdum Campbell, of Stauley, Va., R. F. D. Mrs. Campbell's age at the time of her death was 71 years, 5 months and 25 days. She had been totally blind for 24 years, though this handicap was taken with perfect submission; and her spirit of resignation and her love for God enabled her to do her household work without a murmur.

She united with the New Port Christian church when it was organized 54 years ago, and had been a faithful and consistent member ever since. She died, as she lived, in the triumphs of faith in Christ. She is survived by her husband, two sons (one of whom is a minister in the Baptist church) five daughters, and quite a number of grandchildren. The funeral service was conducted in the home on Tuesday, February 28, and the body entombed in the graveyard nearby. The writer conducted the service.

CORRESPONDENCE

APPRECIATES THE SUN

TO THE EDITOR:

I had the pleasure last summer of meeting a number of your people from the Southern Christian Convention at Ocean View, and became very much attached to them for the short week we were together. THE SUN is about my only source to hear from them, so I felt it my duty to tell you and them how much I enjoy their writing in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

My wife and I read Dr. Atkinson's articles, then Dr. Staley's, Dr. Barrett's, Brother Smith's, Dr. Harper's, and many others whom I cannot name just now, and talk about what fine people they are and how we enjoyed being with them. I must say of THE SUN that the articles which appear in it are fine and of a high standard. It seems like a long, long way from us to your people of the South, but in God's great work we are very close together, and I am sure all are working in harmony for His cause.

A CENTENARIAN

TO THE EDITOR:

On Monday, February 13, of this year, I conducted the funeral of a lady (Mrs. Susan E. Kern, of Stanley, Va., R. F. D.), who was 72 years, five months and 27 days old. The next day after this funeral I visited this same lady's mother, Mrs. Diana Dovel, who was 102 years old the 17th of last October. As I wrote you last year, I am Mrs. Dovel's pastor. This dear old soldier of the Cross, although somewhat feeble now, is still able to walk to the dining table with the aid of her cane and some one to "steady" her a little, notwithstanding the fact that a little more than a year ago she was thrown out of an automobile and sustained a broken shoulder. Within a few months from the time of this accident, to the great surprise of every one, the broken bone of her arm had knit together again.

WHY?

I read with much interest the article headed "Church Statistics," by the editor, in the issue dated February 15, of THE SUN. I was made to feel glad as I read the accomplishment of our different churches—some of whose gain in membership in the past five years exceeds by far our total membership. However, my joy began to diminish, for as I read on I saw that some of our churches had actually sustained a loss. I read the statistics of our own Christian Church, and a series of Whys? began to fill my mind. I began to wonder if my inactivity had helped to cause this unpleasant condition. I am persuaded that a great many of our people have assumed a passive state and have contented themselves to "stand still and see the salvation of our Lord," and could not use the latter part of the verse which says, "Go out against them, for the Lord will be with you."

The question that is uppermost in my mind at this time is: What is the matter with us? The trouble is not with our creed, because it is the Bible; it is not with the plan of salvation because it is perfect; it is not with God because He is the same yesterday, today and forever. The only sensible conclusion is for us who are guilty to repent and be baptized afresh with the Holy Spirit.

My heart is heavy because of this fact. Let us unitedly pray that God will baptize our ministers and laymen with the Holy Ghost, that we may put the Lord's money to usury, and not be classed as slothful servants.

BEGIN THE DAY RIGHT

We have no faith in the old saying that "a good beginning makes a bad ending," nor in the converse that "a bad beginning makes a good ending." The way to end right is to begin right, and the way to begin the day is by establishing communion with God through reading His Word and through prayer. As a recent writer has said: "A little contact with the Scriptures at the beginning of the day is like the touch of fresh water upon the face. It clears our mental vision, it freshens our better instincts, it steadies our spiritual pulse. Not seldom some verse will come home to our spirits with a new meaning and a new power and will thus sing all day in the background of our thoughts like some strain from some lovely and remembered music." If we begin the day right ourselves, it is more than likely that we shall help somebody else to finish it right.—New Orleans Christian Advocate.

The Kingdom First

By REV. STANLEY C. HARRELL, Pastor,
First Christian Church, Durham, N. C.

SEEK ye first His Kingdom. (Matthew 6: 33.) This commandment is one of the most fundamental duties of man. It is foremost in point of time. It is the foundation upon which all other duties and virtues are built. It is equally binding on all men, from the vilest sinner to the most consecrated saint.

The tendency of our day is to hold the Church responsible for all the sins and all the sinners of the world. If there are multitudes of men and women walking in sin, it is because the Church has not won them for Christ. If there are economic injustices, and social diseases, it is because the Church has not Christianized the social order. If Church members are inconsistent in their moral lives, and neglectful of their religious duties, it is because the Church has failed to teach and to lead them aright. Even the horrors of the World War were attributed to the failure of Christianity.

This may be, and doubtless is, true from the viewpoint of the Church's obligation to warn a world full of sinners and neglectful men. But it does not fix the responsibility for individual sin, or for the failure of Church members to discharge their full duty to the Kingdom of the Christ. Jesus lays the responsibility squarely upon the shoulders of the individual. It is the individual man who has walked in the ways of sin, rather than according to the commandments of God. To him Jesus says, "Seek ye first His Kingdom." It is the individual man who has been redeemed by the blood of the Lamb, and who owes to the Kingdom his heart's best gratitude, service and love. To him Jesus says, "Seek ye first His Kingdom." It is the duty of the Church to warn and to teach. It is the duty of man to seek.

EDITORIAL

The Closed Mind

HE thought of this editorial comes from an article which appeared in The Christian Advocate (New York) March 2, 1922, entitled, "The Tragedy of the Closed Mind." The editor relates a circumstance of a subscriber of his paper who was bubbling over with enthusiasm because of a splendid article that recently appeared in that paper. The elated subscriber was questioning another subscriber if he had read the article, whereby the person who was questioned seemed to know nothing of the article under discussion or of anything else in that issue.

Our brother editor is right in saying that the closed mind is a tragedy. How often do we have that same experience! Many are the times that some of our most devoted and prominent contributors pour their hearts and souls into a message for our dear Church and the Kingdom. The Editor reads these things with interest, reads the proof with increasing interest, and delights when they can be sent to the public so that the Church may enjoy that which he has enjoyed. But, lo and behold, when we begin to ask our brethren when we meet them, what they think of such and such a message in The Sun, to find that they have not read it! Oh, the tragedy of a mind that is closed! The tragedy of the soul that is withered and narrowed until the sunlight of freedom, the spirit of growth, and impulse of forwardness, no longer find their way into the heart. How shall we develop a reading people? Who can answer and point the way?

And how often do we feel depressed after we read in the daily press something which concerns all of us, to find that even those who have newspapers scattered about their feet trample upon such things without notice or concern! How pathetic it is, as we travel along the streets and see thousands with no concern, content to let time drift! Their souls perish; their mental capacity shrinks, and they add nothing to the world in which they live.

And how great is the tragedy as we behold the thousands of men who read little and study less and yet stand before a waiting congregation on the holy Sabbath day and call their utterances preaching! Their very best is superficial. They let that which should be a sermon, be a series of illustrations, many of them familiar to nearly everyone present. Oh, the tragedy of the mind that is closed to truth, to knowledge! Imagine the tragedy of the soul that seeks not daily the fellowship of God eternal.

The Christian Advocate, of which we make mention in the outset of this editorial, closes its splendid message in these words:

"In a world of reasoning, however, there is neither place nor use for the man with the closed mind. It is a commonplace that truth is dynamic, not static; that God's self-revelation is progressive; it reached its ultimate in the person of Christ, but man's understanding of that divine self-revelation is a task for all time, if not for eternity; that progress involves increasing change in thought, in forms of service, in human conditions and relationships. Therefore, it is every man's business to keep the windows of his soul open toward God and the truth. No one knows it all—yet. No one is responsible for his fragmentary outlook upon the Infinite. That is the common lot of finite beings. But that man is responsible, and will be held so before the Great Assize, who, by reason of stubborn bigotry or egotistical cock-sureness or anything else, closes his intellect against the light and condemns it to self-inflicted darkness.

"Let knowledge grow from more to more,
But more of reverence in us dwell."

THAT LETTER OF TRANSFER

That letter of transfer in our Church must be reckoned with. It is a small piece of paper that so often is asked for, reluctantly granted, and laid away in some careless place, not to be resurrected until some other pastor begs that it be brought to light.

Member "A" and his family leave a certain community and move to another. If asked if they expect to move their church membership they are unable to decide; and if approached on the subject by some member or the pastor in the community in which they go, their reply is that they have not decided; that their people are buried in the home cemetery and the family ties there are strong. All these things are true and the pastors and other church leaders are as much to blame for this indifference as Member "A" or "B."

The family leaves the home church and feels no special responsibility of the church in the community which it has gone into because they are not members. They attend when they feel like it, pay in the same manner, and too often finally drift out of the church.

We need a genuine change of policy in this method. It has a leakage that should be stopped. We have it within our power to stop it, to a degree at least, and we should avail ourselves of the opportunity.

DOES A CHURCH EVER GET TOO LARGE?

Does a local church ever get too large—too large in membership? Does it ever get so many members that it cannot function efficiently and continue to prosper? We answer in the affirmative. It is possible, we believe, for a local church to get so large that one man cannot sufficiently take care of the situation. Hives of bees often do this very thing. There is not enough room in the gum to store away the winter supply and leave sufficient room for the bees to dwell. But Mr. Bee takes care of the situation, for as soon as the swarm gets too large he sends out a swarm, and they build.

We, therefore, say to the church that is too large, go thou to the bee and learn a lesson. He moves before winter—before the period of starvation—but poor mortal man so often chooses slow and gradual death rather than to hustle out and build for himself.

Does your church need to profit by the life lesson of the bee?

EDITORIAL NOTES

It concerns us but little whether Paul was sprinkled or dipped to the bottom of the river Jordan. His life was bigger than his baptism, and unless we make the acts of our lives bigger than the mode of baptism, baptism will have little to do with our future in the final wind-up.

We love the Bible and love to read it, but have the deepest sympathy for that type of characters who think there is no good in any other book except the Bible. To take such a position is to condemn the whole progress of the Christian religion. This is a day of much condemning. There is a tendency toward criticising without offering anything better. It is a dangerous tendency and should be watched with care.

Home Going Of Rev. J. W. Pinnix

[An Editorial by Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D.]

REV. J. W. Pinnix, son of Major J. C. and Mary E. Pinnix, was born in Caswell County, N. C., March 10, 1845, and died at his home in Kernersville, N. C., Wednesday, March 8, 1922. His father died when he was about eleven years of age; a few years later his mother died, leaving five children, J. W., J. A., M. Z., Susan E., and Nannie. The only one now surviving is Dr. J. A. Pinnix, Caswell County, N. C.

The subject of our sketch attended Melvin Academy in Alamance County, under Dr. Wilson, and received a good education. He later became principal of Shady Grove School, and taught in Alamance, Guilford, and Forsyth Counties.

He was a member of the County Board of Education of Forsyth County for a number of years, and was Chairman of the Board for the Graded School and High School of Kernersville for four years. He rendered much service to the cause of education in these responsible positions, and taught school for forty-four years.

He professed faith in Christ at Concord Christian church in Caswell County, N. C., on Thursday, October 10, 1872, and received license to preach from the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference November 16, 1872. For a number of years he served churches in North Carolina and Virginia. No one ever struggled harder for the cause of education, the furtherance of the Gospel, and the advancement of the Kingdom, than he.

He was a member of Company 3, Eleventh North Carolina Regiment of the Confederate Army, and was in the battles around Petersburg. On April 2, 1865, he was shot and wounded and was carried to Fortress Monroe on April 8, and remained there till July 12, when he returned home, weak and feeble in health. After recovering in a great measure his strength, he went to his life work, teaching and preaching.

On February 22, 1881, he married Victoria Caffey, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Caffey, of Alamance County, whose death occurred in 1904. She was a cultured Christian woman. To this union were born eleven children. Later he married Mrs. S. F. Coffin, a woman of inestimable character and worth, who has been a devoted wife and mother. He leaves to mourn their loss, a wife, Mrs. S. F. Pinnix; two sons, John M. and W. M., and six daughter, Mrs. Carrie Stone, Mrs. R. C. Morris, Mrs. J. D. Maultsby, Mrs. G. C. Smith, Miss Maude Pinnix, and Miss Juana Pinnix, three children having died in infancy.

Brother Pinnix was a faithful and loyal soldier of the Cross, and died in the triumphs of a vital faith. The people of Kernersville and friends from far and near gathered in great numbers to pay proper tribute of respect to his memory, and to his long life's service, Thursday afternoon, March 9, when the funeral services were conducted by the writer in the Methodist Episcopal church of the town. Rev. P. T. Klapp, who was licensed and also ordained in the same class with Brother Pinnix, spoke beautiful words of tribute to his dear friend and comrade in service. All the pastors of the town, Rev. Mr. Richardson, of the Baptist church; Rev. Mr. Cole, of the M. E. church, and Rev. Mr. Edwards, of the M. P. church, in very appropriate words bore testimony to the faithful life and sweet appropriate designs, which attest the high esteem in which he was held.

The floral offerings were abundant and of the most appropriate designs.

The writer always greatly esteemed Brother Pinnix for his unmistakable Christian virtues, and now mourns with the devoted and bereaved family that we shall see his face no more in the flesh. But "precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of His saints," and so we sorrow in hope.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part XIX.

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

Field Secretary for Missions

TUESDAY a. m., October 4.—I had a good bed and undisturbed sleep last night, even if I did have to find it by scaling the roofs of several houses and follow a devious and doubtful path to it.

These narrow alley-ways, winding stairs, and dark passages which one has to traverse in a Spanish hotel to find one's room makes the "creeps" come over you, and makes you lie awake awhile after retiring "trying to hear things at night." But I have learned that the Spaniards are not half as dangerous as they seem, and as many of their buildings would make you think they are. Take that old castle at San Juan that guarded the entrance to the Porto Rican harbor. Now that castle was not so bad; it just scared the whole world into believing it was bad and for 400 years no one tried to find out how little danger there was to it. It was as harmless as a mole hill when one of our big ships sailed in shooting distance and just sent one bullet crashing through its crumbly old ghostly-looking shell. And I do believe the devil is very much like the Spaniards in this respect. He puts up a dreadful front and makes you think he is awful with his horns and cloven feet. And he is awful as long as one stands off and shivers before him; but charge into him and his strongholds, with the breastplate of righteousness and the sword of the Spirit, and he capitulates or shuffles away. I am in a meditative mood at breakfast this morning, and so that my digestion may not be interfered with, I order one soft-boiled egg, one piece of soft toast, half a cup of glorious Porto Rican coffee, and, for dessert, two grains of calomel. I do not usually take dessert for breakfast, but tomorrow p. m. we set sail on "the briny deep," and it seems to me wise to put some dynamite under my sluggish liver today. The name of this hotel is Las Baleares, the dining-room is upstairs and opens out into a court of much shrubbery and fine foliage. Arecibo is a considerable city on the north-west coast of the island, and is putting down hard-surfaced streets. As we take our Ford, in front of the hotel, to leave, and pack our numerous suit-cases, hand-bags and impedimenta, including Martin and Minton, all on the rear seat, some thirty or more people gather to watch the performance. I ask Barrett to inquire of the people why the excitement about us. He does so in his Spanish jargon and learns that the throng had taken us for revenue officers and thought we were the party that captured some blockade-stills last night not far out of town. They were anxious for us to be gone from the town, and so had gathered excitedly about us to make sure that we did leave when we seemed to. We left.

Well, live and learn! Here is a new one on me! Some two miles out from Arecibo they are plowing a great field to plant sugar cane. And two great stationary engines pull the great plows that are tearing up and turning over the soil ditch-deep. The plows move and the soil stirs, but the engines that do the pulling stand still. They draw the plows by use of great cables which turn, or are driven, by these engines. American genius is responsible for this plowing device, though I never witnessed such plowing in the States.

We stop at a grape-fruit and orange packing house. A gasoline engine drives the machinery of the whole plant. The fruit is all washed off with long revolving brushes, dried and sorted as to size by machinery. The women who wrap the fruit and pack it in boxes are paid thirty cents a day, and the men who handle the machinery and do the boxing and shipping are paid seventy cents per day—and all board themselves.

This northwestern part of the island is the most beautiful and prosperous-looking section of any we have seen. It is given to great fields of pineapple culture, grape-fruit and orange growing, and is largely financed by Americans, many of whom have palatial homes and live here among their orchards. Theirs is a veritable garden of Eden. But by the side of these palaces are huts and hovels that are unspeakable for the filth, want and poverty. Here are progress and poverty side by side, in closest proximity, and the contrast is painful.

We arrive at San Juan at 12:45, after a drive of forty miles or more this morning, through the most beautiful and thriving section of Edenic Porto Rico. Our stop here is at the Palace Hotel, where we spent two nights on our arrival in Porto Rico. This hotel is conducted after the manner of our American institutions, and we feel happy and at home—save for the discomforts of our dessert at breakfast today. Somehow I seem to have eaten about all the Porto Rican food I care for at present, and instead of a heavy lunch, indulge in the delicacy of two more grains of dynamite for my stupid liver. The one who first said that whether life was worth living depended altogether upon the liver was in Solomon's class, and no sort of play or words can obscure his sane philosophy. I leave Martin and Minton and Barrett to take in the town, while I keep to my bed from 1 till 6 p. m. It somehow feels better to me than this capital city, with all its ancient castles and modern palaces, looks. Even our point of view is changed by the liver. I am glad to be sick, for the bed does feel so good, snug and comfortable.

"Coming events cast their shadows before," wrote William Shakespeare, who must have at some time in his life been on the eve of taking a sea journey. At any rate, I am in the shadows today, and so at supper only indulge in chicken soup, coffee, and two uncooked eggs—with a bit more calomel with which to finish the day.

My room still looks better to me than the streets, and after penning these lines, switch off the lights for retiring at 11 p. m.—though I have been retired since 1 today.

Wednesday, October 5.—The great, good and fateful day has arrived. The time of our departure from this island draweth nigh. Our sailing is registered for 5 p. m. today. I sit much in my room today and think over the scenes, incidents and impressions that have come to me within the last two weeks. I envy Barrett of the great work he has done here in planting our Christian cause on the island, and on being able physically to stand by it through all these years. He seems to thrive on mosquitoes, malaria, and mercy. That which saps the vitality and gradually takes away the strength and endurance of others seems to be food to his body and nourishment to his soul. Evidently God in His wisdom called this man, and his faithful companion, to be missionaries on this island. And through all these twenty years and more God has been reaching and redeeming benighted souls through the consecrated lives and efforts of these two. And I envy Miss Williams, that royal soul who gave up all that was near and dear at home, in home ties and native land, to come out here and plunge into this stream of perishing humanity, to spend her strength in trying to rescue some. I envy her because there are in the States now, and here in Porto Rico, young boys and young girls who call her "mother" and to whom she has been and is a veritable angel of light and life and love. If I ever get up to the "pearly gates" and find a throng here waiting to be admitted, I expect to inquire if there are any missionaries present; and if there are, I am going to tarry on the outside till they have been admitted, and then shall count it a high honor to follow them, for I know I shall not be worthy to go in ahead of them. If there are any high degrees or reserved seats in heaven I certainly expect to see them occupied by the faithful missionaries. If somehow our people in the States who have all the joys of home ties and share all the comforts and conveniences of life could ever know the needs of Porto Rico, the lives of sacrificial service our missionaries are pouring out here, thousands of dollars would pour into this work and to our workers where reluctant hundreds have come in before. Our people just don't know, that is all; for if they did we would have money now to build that Santa Isabel church, and to supply a medical missionary, nurses, and a hospital, and a score of other needs such as we never have or knew in the States. But the people at home don't know—and no tongue or pen can tell them. So in heart hunger and in need, our dear missionaries must pour out their lives here in an effort to reach and to save some. God bless them. I shall love them better ever after this and I know our people would, if they only knew, if they only could know.

At noon I eat a light lunch of milk and toast and ice cream—for our boat lifts anchor at 5 p. m.—and we shall have supper out on the blue deep. The afternoon is cloudy, shocked and tremulous with resounding thunder, the heavens are rent with forked lightning, and the rain pours in torrents. We make our way to the pier at 4 p. m., and find our room is No. 21 on "A" deck, with door opening on the outside. The ship sails under the name of "The Ponce," but looks like a tub in comparison with the stately and luxurious "San Lorenzo" that brought us over. Our room is hot and the odor is disagreeable, and the oncoming passengers are mostly Spanish. Promptly at 5 the great gang plank is lifted, five hundred friends and acquaintances ashore wave adieu to the hundred or so on the decks, and the Ponce points her nose out to sea and takes up the task of plowing her way through the fourteen hundred miles of intervening ocean between San Juan and New York harbor. We sail around ghostly old Morro Castle, leaving her crumbly old walls to the right, and the city of San Juan, with its millions of glittering, shimmering lights, fades slowly out of view. With doubtful but hopeful emotions we move out toward the open sea. The sea looks large and wide and masterful, but friendly and not over-angry, though threatening clouds lower on all sides, the thunders roar and a slow rain sets in. We peer out from our deck and wonder what awaits us for the night, and how the sea will serve us as we entrust ourselves to her in this tubby-bottomed Ponce. Withal, though, it is pleasant, as we put out to sea. All have on our Palm Beach suits, and but for a weakness brought over from yesterday with memories of liver dynamiting I should be comfortable indeed. But while I pen these lines in my diary, that magic chime rings out for supper and—good-by diary!

One hour and a half later.—A young Porto Rican doctor attached to the United States army and now stationed in Panama was at our table. He says Porto Rico has advanced more in every way under American administration in the last twenty years than it did in the past 400 years of Spanish rule. He is a warm friend of America, and thinks this the greatest country in the world, and that all Porto Ricans ought to love all Americans forever. It is good to be at a dining table on a boat once more. I am weak, however, and want a good night's rest to fit me for the sea journey of five more days and nights, so I only eat olives, celery, consomme, roast duck, gooseberry pie, ice cream and coffee. I hope to be ready for a hearty breakfast and make up for that day I lost from eating in San Juan.

It is a dark, damp, cloudy night. The sea is not rough, since we passed over the breakers just outside the harbor—and now, dear diary, good-night, while we are comfortably rocked in the cradle of the deep.

"Have a good word for everybody. The only man who has a right to look down on another is the man in an airship. Even the tombstones speak well of those beneath them."

It is not money that damns people, but it is the wrong use of money that works the evil. Our Lord never did condemn money as money, but it was always the use of it. Being rich does not send a man to hell, neither does being poor guarantee him a seat in heaven.

"Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace."—Psalm 37: 37.

ELON LETTER

HOSE fault is it? Suppose science is becoming more and more materialistic. Suppose modern psychology degenerates oftentimes into the ouija board. Suppose social reform is gravitating toward Bolshevism and the Red Terrorism of the I. W. W. Suppose men do tend to forget God and His Christ in laying the plans for their life and its aspirations. Whose fault is it?

It is the fault of the Church. It is the supreme function of the Church to give to men the religious interpretation of life, so to motivate life with Christian principles that it will function for God and the right. It is sometimes said that it is the business of the Church to preach the gospel. That depends upon what is meant by preaching the gospel. The word "gospel" means "good news." How often is it that? How much more frequently is it just a tirade of invectives against things with nothing positively good for the soul that is tossing on the ocean of life rudderless and compassless!

What are we going to do about it? What is to be the Church's program? But first what is a program? It is an objective plus a method of achieving it. The Church is strong on the objective feature of programizing life. High idealism is and has been her specialty. But the mere statement of an ideal is a fatuous dream haunting us in the night, unless it is harnessed up to some load that offers it a field for expression. The Church has the objective, but what of its method of attaining it?

It is not a time or the occasion of pessimism. It will do nothing toward solving the problems of our tumultuous times to exhaust our vocabulary in describing the degeneracy of the times. What we need is not only to pull up the weeds that infest the garden of life, but to cultivate vegetables and grains therein for the sustenance of our being. Here is a man who, early in the spring, goes out to his field and chops down the weeds. He repeats this regularly each week until the frost comes. His neighbors he observes are harvesting their crops. But he has nothing to garner into his barns. In his determination to kill the weeds, he neglected to plant any corn or potatoes? A fool of a farmer, you say? He is your idealist in the moral and spiritual realm knocking things on the head and sighing over the social and moral ills of the times, feeling that he has discharged his duty to God and brotherman in thus cataloguing the failures of the social order. His motive is good, but his method lacks fruitfulness. "By their fruits ye shall know them," said the Master.

We need a method of redeeming science from materialism, of showing psychology the fruitlessness of ouija boards, of making Bolsheviks and Reds into brothers of all men, of leading men everywhere to make no plan without taking God into account. How? By regarding the Church as the servant of life, all life, with a message for all life. By espousing causes, such as the Social Creed of the Churches, Week-Day Religious Instruction, the Open Forum, Legislation to Protect Women and Children, the League of Nations, and the others, which undertake to apply the spirit of the gospel in practical ways. Let no local church be satisfied with just keeping itself and its organizations alive. Let every church have a church year, with clean-cut plans for realizing its objectives, which shall include evangelism, missions, social service, religious education, local and general benevolence, and any other features needful to make it the functioning interpretation of the gospel it is its high and holy privilege to be.

Preach idealism, by all means. But also hitch your objective to a method. Thus you will have a program. Then work it.

Pardon the reversion to our former illustration above. What is the best method to kill weeds? Is it not to plow them in the land, where they become fertilizing for growing crops? And will not the cultivation of the crops keep them down? Who is to blame for our present unsatisfactory conditions in the garden of life? Whose fault is it?

SUFFOLK LETTER

HEIR line is gone out through all the earth." That line is invisible, but it is connected with "the heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth His handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge. No speech nor language, their voice is not heard. Their line is gone out through all the earth, and their words to the end of the world." In Psalm 16: 5, David says: "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage." Lines marked off the location of the several tribes. We still use the term lines between estates. These lines are invisible, but they protect men in their rights and their possessions. David felt that his life was marked off by lines drawn by the divine hand, and that God had given him a goodly heritage. I wonder if we feel as David did; or do we feel that our lot is hard and our possessions too small for us.

But in the 19th Psalm, it is the line running out from the heavenly bodies "into all the earth." In other words, it seems to mean the influence of the heavenly bodies as God's ministers. The sun, moon, and stars, as God's traveling preachers, telling the whole world of His "glory and His handiwork." "In every star His glory shines." There is no speech; their voice is not heard, but their line goes out to all. The wireless message runs along a line from its source to its destination. The line from the north star to the sextant enables the surveyor to determine old lines and new lines and to determine the lines between states, counties and farms. These lines determine farms, homes, and estates for generations. The boundary line of every man's estate is known by lines from heavenly bodies—"their line." The sinner could not own a farm in peaceful possession and legal right, if his lines were not determined by heaven; and he cannot be certain of fixed character, unless he is influenced by the Star of Bethlehem. The most puerile position held by man is to think that he can determine his own course without God. He could not own his house or draw water from his well without obeying the laws of stars and gravitation.

The silence of God is universal speech. Their voice is not heard. Influence is mightier than vocal speech. The sun says nothing in words, but it gives life to forest and field, beauty and fragrance to flowers, and fruit to orchards and grain. There is no noise in the process that crystalizes coal into diamond. God speaks to man through the stars, the Bible, and the Holy Spirit. These are just as silent, and just as perfect, as crystalization. Flowers reflect the glory of the sun, and believers reflect the spirit of Jesus. Silences are more potential than noises. Grief, love, fear, purpose, are expressed by silence. The stream makes its noise in the shallows. Children make the noise; mother is quiet, but her thoughts are deeper and her power greater. The gentle rain and the noiseless sunshine make the harvests; the storm with its wind and thunder makes the noise. The line of Christian influence that goes out from you is the mightiest force in your life for righteousness.

PLAIN TALKS TO PLAIN PEOPLE

GAIN and again we hear people asking, "What is the matter with the Church?" We are said to be losing in spiritual life and power, losing our churches, losing our ministers, and losing in general interest. Of course, something is wrong, and unless that something can be corrected, we are going to keep on losing. What can the matter be? According to the best light I can get on the situation, the trouble lies in the fact that the Holy Spirit seems to have departed from the outward, or the visible church, and His absence accounts for the losses and failures of the Church, and here we are face to face with the crisis thus brought into the Church. Do you think I am mistaken? Then let me ask you to give a better reason for the present condition of the Church. If any one will do that, then we may be ready to hear words against this explanation.

The Sunday School Times says there are seven indications that the Holy Spirit has withdrawn from the external Church, and these indications are as follows:

1. The absence of the sense of sin in the Church and the world points this way.
2. The absence of a restraining power hindering the commission of sin is patent today.
3. The absence of the spirit of prayer in Christian lives and in church courts suggests the withdrawal of the Spirit.
4. The withdrawal of the Spirit in His presidential authority from church courts and from much corporate church activity is one of the marked signs revealing the departure of the glory.
5. This withdrawal of the Spirit is seen in the dimming of the glory of Christ's deity and work by the unbelief of the day.
6. The prophetic warning seen in the altered position of the admonition of the Spirit in the messages to the last four of the seven churches of Asia, is strikingly evidential as to the withdrawal of the Spirit to a position outside of the professing churches.

7. The gradual departure of the Spirit eastward (as the glory in Ezekiel), to the great mission fields of the heathen and Moslems, is a fact of tremendous significance. It has long been noticed how the power is departing from the nations of Christendom.

To say the least, these are remarkable statements. If they are true, as we believe they are, then the Church needs to repent in sackcloth and ashes, and so bring back the Holy Spirit as the Guide and Leader of the Church. If any one hold that these seven points, as set forth by The Sunday School Times, are not true, then let him prove they are not true.

Who can tell us why it is that so many professing Christians are sticklers for keeping some of the commandments of the Bible and seemingly care nothing for others? Most men and women believe we ought to keep the commandment: "Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain," but how many do not believe, and so pay no attention to the commandment given us in I Timothy 2: 9, which reads: "I will that women adorn themselves in modest apparel with shamefacedness and sobriety."

Most church members believe the command: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind." Then why do we not strive to keep that law. It is vital to the true Christian life. Oh, why do we not seek to keep it and so obey God? The man or the woman who knows of that commandment, but lets it go by with no effort to keep it, but by deceiving himself or herself with the thought that it makes no difference whether I keep it or not. But, oh, how deceived such an one is!

Most of us believe the commandment which says, "Thou shalt not steal," but how many of us believe that passage is true which says, "Without holiness no man shall see the Lord"? If one of these commandments is of God, so is the other, and one is just as binding as the other. The latter is not a command, but it is an assertion, and so is just as necessary to the Christian life.

Jesus gave the right answer, no doubt, when He said, "If ye love Me, ye will keep My commandments." If you doubt this as a fact fully sustained by the Scriptures, turn to John 14: 21. Then if you care to see the same idea presented from another standpoint, turn to John 14: 24, and you will see the same thought presented from another point of view.

Do not forget that when God gave a commandment, He saw that it was important for His people to observe that commandment. You may not like a certain commandment, but that will be no excuse for not keeping it. What say you, is the Bible authority in your religious life, or not? If you say No, it marks you as in rebellion against the authority of your Maker. Let us right-about-face, in so far as we have been in this sort of rebellion, and do our best to be obedient to our Lord and Master.

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT.

Reidsville, N. C.

WHY NOT ALL JOIN THE CATHOLICS, THEN?

MY good friend and greatly esteemed brother, Rev. H. Shelton Smith, New Haven, Conn., has written for The Herald of Gospel Liberty a wonderfully interesting and pointed article on "Evangelism Through Education." I think no one more than myself realizes the futility, not to say disagreeableness, on controversy in a Church paper, and these lines are written not to in any wise weaken the power nor lessen the influence of Brother Smith's weighty article. I am wondering, however, if good friend Smith did not allow his zeal for a great cause, and his fervor of spirit, to say more in the concluding paragraph of his article than he really intended to say. Charity, at least, and my warm friendship for Smith, would lead me to so interpret, for in this paragraph this question is found: "Why does the Catholic Church challenge the world with the statement: 'Give me the child until he is seven years old and I will give him back to the world and he will always be a Catholic?'" The answer to this question Brother Smith gives in the following words: "Precisely because that Church knows the secret of Christian nurture, and keeps the child saved from the day of his birth. If Romanism can do it in spite of her poor pedagogy and Middle Age dogmas, how much more can the Protestant Church accomplish through her use of modern methods, interests, and attitudes. 'Let the Protestant Church,' continues Brother Smith, 'save her children from the beginning of their lives, * * * and she will by divine right rule the world.'" That which surprises me in this statement is Brother Smith's declaration that the Catholic Church keeps the child saved from the day of his birth. This being true, I cannot understand why Protestantism should not at once haul down her banners and go bag and baggage into the Catholic Church. I had at least supposed that there were sinners and the sinning, the lost and the erring, even among young and old of Catholics, but Brother Smith's teaching would lead me, could I accept it, to believe that I am mistaken. I do not know how other readers of the article feel, but being a father of children and having yet some of tender years who are to a degree looking to me for moral and spiritual guidance, if I could feel that friend Smith's conclusion is correct, I should renounce my Protestantism at once and apply for membership in the Catholic Church, and lead my children into it if I could. I say this frankly and mean every word of it, because as parent I certainly desire to see and "keep my children saved" from the day of their birth.

I am reminded of an incident that occurred during the war. I chanced to be on a visit to an army camp. In that camp was a Catholic chaplain who was assigned to the post by the government to minister to the spiritual needs of the Catholic constituency there. There was also in the same camp a Protestant chaplain, a good friend of mine, assigned by the government also to minister to the moral and spiritual needs of the Protestants and to such as would receive his ministrations. Now this Protestant chaplain described, at some length, the conduct of the Catholic chaplain, stating among other things that he did not hesitate on Saturday night to gamble at cards, or tarry till drunkenness came in the deep hours of the night over the table and bottle, with the very ones to whom he was to minister as their priest on the Sabbath. I asked my friend then what effect the Catholic priest's immoral conduct on Saturday had upon the size of his congregation on Sunday. "None whatever," said my friend, "so far as I can gather." That is just the difference between a Catholic chaplain and a Protestant chaplain, for the Catholic, if sober at the time, can lead his congregation through the ritual and the forms and ceremonies, and that is all that is required. "I, on the other hand," continued my friend, "must win personally the esteem and gain the confidence of my parishioners if a congregation shall gather to hear me on the Sabbath."

I presume that this Catholic chaplain who can swear and gamble and drink had been a Catholic from birth till that hour, but I am wondering if good Brother Smith would acknowledge that the Catholic Church had kept him saved from the day of his birth.

One other sentence raises a question. Brother Smith speaks of what the Protestant Church can accomplish "through her use of modern methods, interests, and attitudes." I am wondering what the Protestant Church could accomplish if it would put Christ first and preach and teach through all its churches, schools and auxiliaries that "neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." (Luke 4: 10.) I am glad that Brother Smith has told us parents that our children are all "untainted by Adam's sin except in so far as Adam and all other Adams since gave rise to 'certain psycho-physical tendencies to evil.'" Now that is so comforting. Hereafter when our children do wrong, disobey, go astray in spite of all the advice, counsel, praying, godly rearing we can give them, we can assure ourselves, and take comfort from the fact that they are untainted by sin and only have "a psycho-physical tendency to evil"—whatever that means. But oh, if we had just been Catholics even that "psycho-physical tendency to evil" would have made no difference, for, as good friend Smith continues, "We of the Protestant Church have allowed the seeds of evil sowing to grow and produce a harvest while we slept, until our only hope—and a doubtful one, indeed—of enlisting the millions of nominally Protestant members is by 'throwing out the life-line' to shipwrecked victims." One cannot escape the conclusion that Catholics have not allowed the seeds of evil sowing to grow while they slept, and so they are not driven, as we Protestants are, to "the only hope, and that a very doubtful one, of throwing out the life-line" to any of their number, for among them—well, they have all been saved from infancy up by education—and so do not need the redemptive power of Jesus Christ to save them! But surely Brother Smith's fervor of spirit, and enthusiasm for a great cause, led him to write in his Church paper words that had a meaning he had not fully reckoned with.

WILL YOU?

Easter will soon be here, and we have eighty-three little boys and girls in the Christian Orphanage who will want a nice clean new suit of clothes or a nice new spring dress to wear on Easter Sunday.

But did you ever stop to think what a mountain of work it is to get every child fitly dressed to go to Sunday school? Just think for a moment how much work it will take to make a suit for eighty-three children!

If we had the time of the larger girls with the matron in charge of the sewing room, we could easily do this work, but all the girls are in school most of the day; and when they are not in school they have the laundry to do and also the cooking, besides a thousand other things, and hence have very little time to sew.

Of course every member of the Christian Church wants to see these little children dressed neatly and kept clean. But did you ever think how you could help us to accomplish this with very little sacrifice, a very little time, a very little expense?

Suppose eighty-three good women would buy a few yards of gingham, or some similar goods, and make a nice little Easter dress for a little girl, say from three years to thirteen. Or make a little suit with pants and body for a little boy from three to ten years of age, or buy a little suit, the problem would be solved and eighty-three good women would be happy.

This is your Orphanage. These children are a charge upon the Christian Church. You are a member of the Church, and you have a responsibility and a duty.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

A LETTER

DEAR UNCLE CHARLEY: I would like to join the band of cousins. I am a little boy seventeen months old and can say several words. The other day I opened the door and walked out in the poreh and fell down in the snow before Mother could get me in.

I am sending ten cents to the cousins and hope they are all well. Love to you and all the children.—JESSE PAUL LONG, JR., Hertford, N. C.

You are a fine little boy. I guess Mother took you to be a snow-ball when you rolled in the snow. You must write often.—UNCLE CHARLEY.

SCHOOL HONOR ROLL FOR FEBRUARY

LETTERS FROM THE COUSINS

(Deferred from last week)

DEAR UNCLE CHARLEY: I enclose 20 cents for February and March. I hope the little people haven't had the flu yet. We have some eases down here. We have eescaped it so far and hope we will not have it.—ZULA BUCHANAN, Apex, N. C.

No, we have had no flu, but have had ehickenpox. Our little folks have had pretty good health this winter.—UNCLE CHARLEY.

DEAR UNCLE CHARLEY: I am a little girl nine years old, and I want to join the band of eousins. I am in the third grade at school. My teacher is Miss Blanehe Cheek. I like her fine. I am sending a dime for the orphans.—CLARA LEONARD, Bennett, N. C.

We give you a warm welcome as a member of our band of cousins. We want you to write often and help keep the corner full of letters.—UNCLE CHARLEY.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON— SUNDAY, MARCH 19, 1922

The Downfall of Israel—II Kings 17: 9-18.

Golden Text: "Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people."

LESSON THOUGHTS:

The people who forsake God must perish. To disobey the laws of God means disaster to individuals and nations. Sin spells ruin.

"The sin, when it is full grown, bringeth forth death." James 1: 15.

The patriotic citizen works for righteousness and justice in the nation, and so assures its future growth and prosperity.

God warned His people by seer and prophet, but they would not heed. Men, too, are warned against sin today:

"A still small voice in childhood,
A beckoning hand in youth,
An impulse prompting justice,
A heart inclined to truth,
A firm resolve to follow
The paths where saints have trod,
Some of us call it Conscience,
And others call it God."

—Rev. Charles C. Albertson, D. D.

A LESSON ILLUSTRATION:

"On the slope of Long's Peak in Colorado lies the ruin of a forest giant. The naturalist tells us that the tree had stood for four hundred years; that it was a seedling when Columbus landed at San Salvador; that it had been struck by lightning fourteen times; that the avalanches of four centuries had thundered past it. In the end, however, beetles killed the tree. A giant that age had not withered nor lightning blasted nor storms subdued fell at last before insects that a man could crush between his forefinger and his thumb. So human characters collapse into futile uselessness not only through 'presumptuous sins' but more frequently through secret faults."—Westminster Teacher.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR MARCH 19, 1922

What Does Following Christ Mean?—Matt. 16: 24-26;

John 10: 27-30; 12: 26.

Following Christ, "trusting in Him for strength," is the keynote of Christian Endeavor. Make this meeting show that following Christ means service and sacrifice, obedience and perseverance, devotion and worship.

March 19 has been appointed as "Dixie Endeavor Day," to be observed by all Southern Christian Endeavor Societies. A program has been sent to each Society between his forefinger and his thumb. So human character-advantage in our Christian Endeavor Societies. Christian Endeavor is doing a great work in "Dixie," and merits the co-operation and sympathy, the prayers and effort of all of our people to help it go forward "For Christ and the Church."

NOTICE! NOTICE!!

The Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Georgia-Alabama Conference will meet with the Rose Hill Christian church, Columbus, Ga., April 11, 12, 13, 1922. Every pastor and Sunday school superintendent in the Conference should begin now to make arrangements to attend this Convention. Their presence will be needed. Also, every Sunday school and Christian Endeavor society in the Conference should elect delegates now to represent them in this Convention. The Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor societies are entitled to one delegate for every twenty-five members in the Sunday school or Endeavor society.

The program purports to be a very interesting one. Such speakers as Mrs. F. E. Bullock and Miss Lucy Eldredge will be present and deliver addresses. We are very fortunate in being able to secure these helpers and it is hoped that every Sunday school and Christian Endeavor society will be represented in order that new life and new inspiration may be injected into our work in the Conference.

This will be a great Convention if everybody will co-operate. Let us do our best and we will be proud of the Convention. What do you say? All together!

R. F. BROWN, President.

A NEW CLASS

The Intermediate class of the North Highland Christian church was organized October 23, 1921, by our Field Secretary of Religious Education, Miss Lucy Eldredge. The following officers were elected:

President—Homer Wilkerson.
Secretary—Annie Kinsie.
Treasurer—Mamie Graham.

Upon motion duly made, seconded and carried, this class was called the L. W. Class. Of course you know what the L. W. stands for.

This class meets every two weeks and the dues are five cents per week. They will hold their next meeting with Miss Johnnie Pearl Newberry.

They presented their teacher with a new hat Christmas, which was very much appreciated. This is a fine class of boys and girls.

A. H. SHEPPARD.

We have very little patience with the man who is always discussing the location of hell or what hell is, and pays little attention to the kind of life he is living. The location of things amount to little compared with their characters.

The committee charged with the responsibility of selecting the name for the Junior College to be established at Wadley, Alabama, met at Burlington, N. C., on March 10, for this purpose. The committee wishes to announce that the name selected is as follows: "Bethlehem College." Bethlehem College, Wadley, Alabama, is to be the official title of the school which we hope will, one day in the future, be a second Elon College for the South.

Perhaps it should be said that the Committee had what it considered two good reasons for this selection. First, Bethlehem was a place of beginnings. It was here, as every child knows, that the Master began His life. A college is a place of beginnings; it is the college that sets the feet of youth upon a new and larger path. In the second place, it was to Bethlehem that the Wise Men of the East came and learned a new and vital thing for themselves and for humanity at large; it was there that they formed an acquaintance with Him whom this world needs to know, and without a knowledge of Whom education is very incomplete. It is the hope and prayer of the committee that many young men and women shall gather to this Bethlehem to learn those things that shall fit them for real living and service in the world as the years pass on.

The Committee earnestly hopes that the name selected will meet with the approval of all who are interested. Our decision was not easily reached, we did not jump at this conclusion. On the other hand we sought guidance from above, and then gave our very best thought to the matter. So we pass our decision on to you as stated above.

G. O. LANKFORD, Chairman.

THE QUESTION OF DIVORCE

This is a question in the discussion of which sentiment plays an important part. Those for or against it always fall back upon sentiment when argument fails.

The picture of a man or woman tied to each other when their lives have been one constant fight, comes to every one with peculiar force especially when you put yourself in the other's place.

On the other hand, to allow the marriage tie to be made so loose that you can shake it off for any excuse, would soon destroy family life and undermine the morals of society. In these days the current seems to run strongly one way, to make divorce easy.

Even in this State of churches and high standard of morality—nearly every session of the legislature an attempt is made to change our already too loose laws in the interest of easy divorce.

If you read the proceedings of our courts you will find that at each session granting divorces occupies the largest part of the judge's time. It is therefore with peculiar pleasure and approval that we read recently the action of the Supreme Court of this State that separation of husband and wife caused by one being confined in insane asylum is not that separation that the law recognizes as a ground for divorce.

There are other grounds pleaded at times which are as worthless as this, but they do not shock public sentiment as this does.

There is something very cruel in a husband repudiating an insane wife that arouses the indignation of men. This was seen years ago when a millionaire used the power of his money to make the legislature of his State pass a law making confinement in an asylum a legal ground for divorce. We remember the wide-spread indignation and the crippling of the usefulness of the minister who performed the ceremony.

Those who study the downfall of every land in the past will tell you that among the signs of such ruin the increase and ease of divorce were conspicuous.

Let all who love their land set their faces against this evil, and refuse to recognize socially all who thus defy God's law that those married must cleave to each other till death do them part.—Presbyterian Standard, Charlotte, N. C.

On March 12 seven passengers were killed outright and sixteen injured near Atlanta, Ga., when a car on the A. B. and A. railroad left the track due to a defective wheel.

The Soldier Bonus Bill is still an uncertain issue before Congress. No plan so far made out has been accepted. It is understood that President Harding is against any plan that does not provide the means of raising the bonus.

Mrs. Alice V. Morrill, president of the Woman's Board of the A. C. C., is to be present at the One-Day School of Missions conducted by the Woman's Missionary Societies of the Eastern Virginia and North Carolina Conferences.

The Editor was privileged to preach at both the morning and evening services of the Hocutt Memorial Baptist church, Burlington, last Sunday.

"Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me."—John 5: 39.

"For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart."—Hebrews 4: 12.

The State Sunday School Convention of North Carolina meets in Charlotte April 11, 12 and 13. The railroads have granted reduced rates. If you are interested in attending, write State Secretary D. W. Sims, Raleigh, N. C.

MINISTERIAL SHORTAGE

Two Views

PREACHERS AND PULPITS

I was much impressed with statements in Dr. Barrett's recent article and I wish to say some things that I have been wanting to say for some time.

Are we not living in the age of "perilous times"? II Timothy 3: 1. We have ruled the Bible out of our universities and men have become lovers of pleasure and money more than they love God. I honestly think one reason why we have so many vacant pulpits is this: I fear we have too many man-made preachers. I fear we have influenced men to enter the Gospel ministry whom God has never called. They perhaps did not feel "Woe is me if I preach not the gospel," and if they do not feel that God has called them to preach His Gospel, why is it not strange that they should leave the pulpit for other fields?

I read a story of two sons of one father—one of them a brilliant boy and the other of ordinary talent; the father educated the brilliant one for a preacher, and when he commenced his work in the ministry he charmed the people with his eloquence. But soon the people tired of eloquence, as they found no soul food in it, and he finally retired from the ministry. Later his brother informed his father that God had called him to preach the Gospel, and his father undertook to discourage him; but he said, "God has called, and I must obey," and he became a useful minister.

I knew a man who had an only son, and that father called him his preacher from the day of his birth, and educated him to that end. He preached a while, but soon quit and went home to the farm. I knew another man who went to school with me and who was preparing for the ministry. I think he preached three or four times, and then turned back to the farm and to teaching school. Not long since, a preacher came to me to buy a lot next to my house; I asked him why he wanted to locate his family, and he said he was making $5,000 a year before he went to preaching, and now he was not making so much and he thought he would go back to his former business.

I think Dr. Barrett is entirely right, for there being so many empty pulpits. I also believe it is due to the fact that too many have entered the ministry without feeling that their call was from above, and also for the lack of a better support. I know that some of our ministers have had to take up some side issues in order to meet expenses. Paul made preaching his first duty, then spent his spare time in making tents, but he did not commend that course. A man who is called of God to preach the Gospel may have to engage in some other lines of work in order to meet expenses, but I do not believe that if God has put his hand upon the man, he will turn his back upon the pulpit because he does not have a full support from his ministerial labors. I want it to be understood that I believe that our ministers should have support sufficient to keep them from debt and give their families a decent living and to have a surplus with which they could be able to support benevolences as others do.

A young man once went to the great Baptist preacher, Spurgeon, of London, and told him that he was in trouble, that God wanted him to preach, and asked what he must do about it. Spurgeon told him to keep out of it if he could. Spurgeon knew that if God's hand was on the young man, he would manage him. I believe if we would talk to God in prayer and ask Him to give us preachers for the great field which is white unto the harvest, instead of talking so much to men, that He would answer our prayers. I know a church in our beloved Zion that has people of prayer and faith, and out of that church have come six preachers. If the family altar was really established throughout the Church, I do not believe that there would be such a scarcity of ministers and so many vacant pulpits.

P. T. KLAPP.

WHY THE SHORTAGE—ANOTHER VIEW

In almost every issue of THE SUN, and in almost all other Church papers, I see reports or statistics showing a shortage of ministers. I would like to know the cause of this. Many have given, in their opinion, reasons for the shortage, and others, no doubt, have in mind other causes but hesitate to express themselves publicly. What is the cause of the shortage of ministers to fill the pulpits of today?

My honest conviction is that the great cause of this shortage will be found by careful inspection on the part of the present-day plans of the Church in giving the young people a chance to do real active service. We are too much interested in getting the young people into the Church, and not interested enough in giving them something to do after we get them in. The lack of a program for the young people, and a chance to put into action their will to do service when they come into the Church, is driving the young people away from the Church and away from the places in the Church where they are needed most.

We, as a rule, have a program for only one season of the year in our Church work. This program is only for the summer months, most effectual during the revival services. This program is to get them to join the Church. We send out through the congregation personal workers who are urged to rush a decision of joining the Church—to talk them in. After the revival is over the program ends, and the personal workers go in their dens so far as the planning of work for their new converts is concerned. Just as long as these conditions exist there will be empty pulpits and cries for young men to fill them.

The Church must turn its plans and prayers toward the young people, and give the ones we already have on roll something to do. Then we will have no trouble in getting others into the Church or some one to fill the pulpits. We must give them work to do in order that they may have a knowledge of the Spirit's presence, and in this they will find peace and satisfaction. Not only will the new member feel satisfied to be in the Church, but the Church can depend on that person when things need to be done. The program today is to get them into the Church and set them down, as much as to say, "Sit there and sin not, until we call for you"; and we never call for them, but expect them to keep unspotted from the world, and to turn down all invitations to the dance, the card party, the motion picture show, and all manner of worldly amusements or entertainments. It has been said that a boy is a boy and you can make nothing else out of him. This is the attitude the Church has taken toward the young people. They are expected to be Christians anyway after they get their names on the Church roll, and that they will need nothing to do to make them better and more active or to encourage them.

The world has a program for the entertainment of its young people, and until the Church wakes up to the fact that the young people of the Church need and must have a way by which they can have some amusement and something to do, there will be a lack of ministers in the pulpits and active laymen in the pews. This situation can be greatly relieved through the Sunday schools. I have heard old men boast of how long they had been superintendent of the Sunday school, or teacher, or secretary. If I were the man who said this or who could say such I would beg forgiveness of the young people of my school or class, and select or elect some wide-awake young man or woman with new ideas and with a broader conception of the work, and if anybody should sit down and sit, let it be myself.

God speed the day when a plan for the young people in Christian service shall be worked out and practiced in our churches.

STEWARDSHIP AND TITHING

SOME DISCUSSIONS BY REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

GOD'S PLAN AND OURS

Shall we not bear in mind that the Church is the most powerful organization on this earth? God planned and planted the Church. Man plans and plants many organizations and institutions, but none are equal in weight, power and worth to the Church.

Now it is folly to think that God would have planned and planted that which was to be the most powerful institution on earth, and then left it to "beg" its way through the world and through the ages. And the reason why we of the Church have to beg—beg for our pastor's salary, beg for our benevolences, beg for our Conference apportionments, is because we refuse to adopt God's plan of giving.

We are now in a period of financial depression. Man's folly, and not God's goodness, is to blame for this. We should, therefore, not let His cause suffer because of our short-comings. How are we to prevent this? Adopt God's plan of giving. Some of the best men and women in Christendom are tithing. They would not depart from the practice on any account—save to give more than the tithe. They have tried God's way and found it worth while. Oh, if all CHRISTIAN SUN readers would only study this subject in the light of plain Bible teaching! That would settle the matter—and settle it right!

WHAT ABOUT IT, BROTHER PASTOR?

We wonder if all our pastors are taking advantage of the present campaign to increase the number of tithers in their charge? The opportunity is now theirs to use to great advantage. We have secured literature at far less than it would cost to print it, and from the best pens that ever wrote on the subject. Pastors or captains or woman leaders in the churches can secure this literature for the asking. While it is cheap we do not wish to waste a piece of it. Why not request this literature, and then ask the members of the congregation to take it home with them and read for themselves? All we wish is that we of the Christian Church shall do our giving according to plain, unmistakable Bible teaching.

LITERATURE ON GIVING

Is any CHRISTIAN SUN reader in doubt as to how and what to give for Church, charity, missions, and benevolences? If so, why not settle the question? The following literature is for free distribution to CHRISTIAN SUN readers, and can be had in neat pamphlet form for the asking:

- "Can a Farmer Tithe?"
- "Can a Woman Tithe?"
- "Does a Tenth Belong to God?"
- "Is the Tithe a Debt?"
- "Is Tithing Worth While?"
- "How to Tithe and Why?"
- "What We Owe and How to Pay It."
- "Mine and Thine."
- "Thanksgiving Ann."
- "Whose Is It?"

These pamphlets are by the very ablest authors and Bible students. Address request for any of these to J. O. Atkinson, Secretary Stewardship and Tithing, Burlington, N. C.

The press is being filled these days with a lot of slush, trying to break down the Eighteenth Amendment. It is shallow thinking (or no thinking) when one condescends to this kind of cheap propaganda.

After all it is not the number you are able to enroll in your Sunday school class that counts. It is the kind of food that the teacher is able to give. If you are a teacher, what kind of mental and spiritual food are you giving your class?

PUT GOD IN YOUR BUDGET

By FRANK G. WEAVER, In January Association Men

E. B. Crow, Raleigh, N. C., banker, who began to tithe on his first pay-day, 30 years ago, declares that it makes religion practical

WHEN E. B. Crow was seventeen years old he went to the president of the Commercial National Bank of Raleigh, N. C., and asked for work.

"Young man, what can you do around a bank?" the president wanted to know.

"I can learn to do almost anything," the boy answered.

"Well, sir, can you sweep out the lobby every morning and clean the sidewalk out front?"

This was a facer. White boys in the South were not usually called upon to do work of this nature. But young Crow needed a job.

"Yes, sir, I can," he declared.

"All right," the official said, "find the broom and begin."

Crow went to work, and for days the lobby was kept as clean as a careful housewife's kitchen. Then he was suddenly relieved of his broom duties and made a collector. The president, it was evident, had wanted to determine the boy's calibre.

It was at the end of the first month of his connection with the bank that the second challenge was put up to him. One day he was summoned by the assistant cashier, H. W. Jackson, who is now a figure in financial circles of Richmond, Virginia.

"Ed, I have just had your pay deposited," he said. "You have $25 to your credit. Now I want you to draw out $2.50 and put it away—that belongs to God. The other nine-tenths is yours."

"Do you do that, Mr. Jackson?" Crow inquired.

"Yes."

"Why—is it the right thing to do?"

The man explained what tithing meant to him.

"All right, I'll do it every month; then." The boy accepted the responsibilities of stewardship, and under the guidance of this Christian business man, he set aside his first tenth.

This was thirty years ago, and over that stretch not a pay-day has passed without giving up its tenth for religious purposes. And those marching years have carried Crow along from the sweeping boy's low station to the vice-presidency step by step—he has been collector, filing clerk, bookkeeper, teller, assistant cashier, cashier and now is vice-president.

The episode of the broom and the tithing incident set in motion in Crow's mind convictions that have made him one of Raleigh's outstanding citizens. He has never hesitated to do any work to achieve a worthy purpose, and he has always been a militant apostle of "giving unto God the things that are God's." The first was a man-test, and it found him strong; the second was a God test and he has met it faithfully. Both have been potent figures in his development, and it is difficult to determine, today, whether he wields a bigger influence as a business or religious leader. Surely it is true that he is a bigger business man because of his religious leadership.

As he told me of these beginnings, Mr. Crow pointed to a Scriptural passage which has been a foundation stone in his career, and which has been proved by his life—"Bring ye all the tithes into the store house . . . and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of Heaven and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

An Assertive Leadership

That the blessings which have abounded in his own life may be the experience of fellow business men is deeply desired by Mr. Crow, and he is devoting tireless hours of evangelism to this end. It is of his religious leadership, therefore, that this sketch must concern itself, and not with his business progress or his civic attainments, both of which, he avers, are but by-products of the first.

This leadership takes most vigorous form in the Vanguard Bible Class of the First Presbyterian Church of Raleigh, of which he is the organizer and teacher. It is not large, as modern Bible classes go, but in its membership of 150 is concentrated the city's business and professional strength. The class was organized in 1904, and is the outgrowth of a boys' class taught by Mr. Crow's mother in the few years preceding 1895, when he took charge, upon her death. By 1904 the members had reached young manhood, and they decided that they could do more effective work by organizing on a permanent basis. Dr. A. H. Moment, their pastor at the time, was consulted regarding name, motto, text and aim, and he advised the following:

"The Vanguard Class" as the name.

"Always Ready" as the motto.

"Be thou strong therefore, and shew thyself a man" (II Kings 2:2) as the text.

"All present on time, Bible in hand; a liberal contribution, a well-studied lesson; a mind to learn," as the aim.

Mr. Crow devised as a shield, a white V on a diamond-shaped background of blue, by which the class is readily identified—and now he himself is more frequently referred to as "Blue Diamond" Crow than by any other appellation.

A Champion of Tithing

Since 1914 more than 1,000 men have been enrolled, and today a Vanguard may be found in practically every state, and some in other lands. The class also supports a foreign missionary. It strives always to promote "the spirit of good fellowship, the consecration of the tithe, and a desire to wield the 'sword of the spirit, which is the Word of God,' in such a way as to win men for Christ." Its record of activity inspires. Each year has produced results, nearly any one of which would be a story in itself.

Mr. Crow is an evangelist of tithing. In the class of 150 men, whose combined incomes exceed $200,000 annually, there are 60 who have signed the pledge which has as its principal clause this: "Realizing my dependence upon God for all my needs, and my stewardship and accountability to Him, I resolve that, together with other Vanguard men, I will set aside one-tenth of my income for God's work and His Kingdom here among men."

"Tithing ties a man up with God in a practical way," declared Mr. Crow. "It is a form of consecrated finance which the Church needs so greatly today. If every man would realize his debt to God, our religion would be vastly more virile and far-reaching. I want my class to be very definite in its relation to God. Tithing makes Christianity a living thing, and enables us to really walk with Him."

A Plan That Never Has Failed

In presenting and urging this account Mr. Crow has not always found it easy to convince men that it is possible to give ten per cent, no matter what their circumstances. One plan only he uses, and it has been effective. He offers to repay out of his personal funds to any man the amount of his tithe if at the end of a year the tither does not find himself in as good or better financial condition than he was before. In other words, he applies the challenge, "Prove me, saith the Lord."

Many have begun tithing on this condition with little faith.

One man, a Canadian, heard Mr. Crow make this proposition, and went to him.

"I believe you are bluffing about the practicability of tithing," he said. "I am going to accept your proposal just to call you. I'll draw upon you in twelve months because I cannot spare ten per cent a month. But I'll try it for a year."

The year passed and each month the Canadian's tithe was received. As the thirteenth came, it brought Mr. Crow a note from the man, who had written:

"The year is up. I have tithed faithfully and now find myself, as you predicted, better off than ever. Here's my check for $50 for the class fund."

Another came to "Blue Diamond" and said:

"I can't possibly tithe, Mr. Crow. I'm too far in debt, and haven't money enough to go around as it is. I owe the doctor and the grocer. My coal bill is overdue."

"You say you owe all these men," Mr. Crow replied. "But who is your biggest creditor?"

The man thought it over.

"I see what you mean," he said slowly.

"Tell me what I mean, then," demanded Mr. Crow.

"Well, you mean that I owe most to God," was the reply.

"Right. Now put God where He belongs in your budget."

The other agreed, and, like the Canadian, won. So is faith born.

Building a Chapel on Faith

To extend the scope of the Vanguard usefulness, Mr. Crow has projected a plan of Community Bible schools, seeking to reach out into the rural sections. His dream is of a Raleigh girded around by Vanguard chapels. Two have already been elected, and are proving of inestimable value in bringing the farmer-folk into close touch with religious activities, and in developing leadership.

The first chapel, located near Raleigh, was built more than four years ago, on a lot given by one of the Vanguard men. It was completed within eight weeks after ground was broken, and today this Bible school has more than 100 members who were not previously being reached.

The second chapel, a much larger building, and more costly, was a direct product of the soil, one might say. It followed the development of an idea of service during the war which found expression in class farming. A tract of four acres was turned over to the class by E. R. Pace, a city commissioner, and was planted in corn. A crop of 250 bushels was harvested, and the grain converted into water-ground meal and sold for cash.

The next spring a friend of the Vanguards who was especially interested in their agricultural endeavor, came to Mr. Crow with the suggestion that the class buy a 40-acre tract of which he knew and farm on a larger scale.

"We haven't any money," said Mr. Crow.

"Why not borrow it? I can get you a fine price on the land."

"Yes, but the debt would have to be paid."

"Your class could swing it," persisted the friend.

He went into details, with the result that Mr. Crow and three other Raleigh men borrowed the necessary cash. The land was surveyed, and ten acres set aside as the Lord's. The balance was soon sold for enough to take up the note at the bank.

With more than enough land to continue farming, the class decided to erect a chapel. The building of tapestry brick went up—a model of architecture and convenience, but it cost $17,500 with equipment and there was only $5,000 in the treasury. Again it was imperative to raise money, and a bond issue was decided upon.

An issue of Vanguard Bonds, bearing interest at six per cent, and maturing in eight years, was placed upon the market. It was handled in precisely the same way as any municipal or public improvement paper. To retire the bonds the class provided a sinking fund. At par value of $100 the entire issue was sold within thirty days, following a vigorous advertising campaign.

This center, as in the case of the first, has become one of the busiest in the community. The farming continues, of course, with special attention given to flower culture, roses being raised to stock Raleigh hospital rooms.

He Is Thinking of Tomorrow

As Mr. Crow considers the future of the Vanguards and of the Church, he looks into the past and sees that the stalwart religious men of Raleigh today were, yesterday, boys with him; boys who early came under high-minded leadership. And he realizes that now is the time to be finding and shaping boys and young men for the responsibilities of the Church in years to come, for the present must be the past of the future. The torch must be passed on.

So he makes his appeal to fathers—that they set the feet of their sons in the right path. But he believes that fathers should go farther than that, and he urges that they interest themselves in some under-privileged lad outside their kinship.

Thirty years ago E. B. Crow was a boy of 17 years—a critical age. Kindly, far-seeing leadership impressed him. A human challenge came, and he met it squarely; a divine challenge followed and found him strong. His life has become an influence of great good. Never afraid to work, never ashamed to pray, never weary enough to lose his real conviction, he stands today a symbol of success—a great man, greatly motivated.

A SAMPLE LETTER

Here is a letter which is a sample of many which we receive. Mrs. H. L. Brantley, Ivor, Va., in renewing her subscription to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, says: "I regret that all our members do not take the Church paper."

ONE OF THE SECRETS

Many readers of THE CHRISTIAN SUN are familiar with the fact that Dr. George W. Truett, one of the biggest Baptist ministers in the world, has been holding a series of meetings in Raleigh, and we have just read that Truett's father was a subscriber to three of the leading papers of his denomination.

A Methodist Episcopal Church, South, minister at Quicksand, Ky., had three candidates for immersion. Because there was no place for this service in Quicksand, he went to the neighboring town of Jackson, where there is a Baptist church.

This Christian church hose was therefore attached to the Presbyterian faucet and the Presbyterian water flowed into the Baptist baptistry, and the Methodist preacher read the Methodist ritual and immersed three people who refused to be merely sprinkled.

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church. 2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church. 3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice. 4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership. 5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Rural Independence

By MR. JOHN KING
Suffolk, Va.

THE country pew has overtaken and passed the country pulpit in culture and learning. The rural preacher's position is rendered insecure by the fact that, as compared with his congregation, he is often behind the times, occasionally considerably out of date. Once the pulpit was invested with a kind of splendor, and the preacher was the leading man in the community, in matters of civil and social, as well as religious, affairs; but that day has passed.

Since the day of the "two by four" country school has passed into the day of the high school taught by college graduates, the children are given the privilege of obtaining a high school distinction, and they are thinking for themselves. They have taken on the privileges of private judgment.

Where the pulpit could once ostracize the pew, the pew can now starve the pulpit. The country minister who has not kept up with the procession is usually neither well educated, well housed nor well dressed.

It is a sad state of affairs. The ancient pre-eminence of the clergy has been submerged by the general democratic leveling of its congregations, and the ministry as a body has not been diligent to maintain its intellectual ascendancy.

The pew has come into power, and its attitude is the attitude of industry, of commerce, of business—that is, of civilization. It can not be coerced by fear, or by any of the "Thou shalt nots," for the time when church-going was considered the dividing line between the sheep and the goats is dead. There is no social ostracism for the unchurched. The country people no longer take religion to be inevitable, nor the utterances of the clergy on trust; nor do they consider the support of the Church as obligatory.

This leveling up of the people is wholly and unconditionally good. But where the ministry fails to take account of the changing conditions and to adjust itself to them, it not only renders its own position precarious, but also leaves the newly prosperous, newly lettered, newly independent people, without leadership, discipline, vision, or essential religious inspiration.

Signs of The Times

DURING the past few years there have been many editorials written on this subject. It is no new theme, but almost every time it is discussed it requires treatment in a different way. There are signs in all times—signs that point the direction in which men and conditions are going. There are such signs now; and, if we can help lift the veil and point out these signs, the object of this editorial shall be accomplished.

We are living in an age of reaction from idealism. A period of war is the very mother of idealism. The sound of the drum, the noise of the gun, and the sight of the flag, cause to well up in our hearts that which sweeps us on and carries us into realms of unusual thought. Every nerve is excited; men are impatient and conditions change so rapidly that only idealism can serve or satisfy. But idealism, in such times as we have mentioned, is not new to real thinkers and leaders, and no man can be a leader without being a thinker. A period of idealism is the achieving or the accomplishing of the things of the thinker; it is the time of the realization of his dreams.

Conditions during the past few years brought us together. We were in sympathy with leaders in all classes. We bowed at the feet of the nation's executive and worshipped at each sound of his name. Leaders at home, in Church and in State, found great crowds waiting to execute a program and carry a message for the uplift of mankind. But behold, in a night, the world's honored man was despised and rejected while those at home in places of trust and confidence saw the number of their followers diminishing. The statesman realized that he was no longer a hero, and the leader in Church affairs found himself almost alone, trying to stem the tide on the moral sea.

Our soldiers marched to the front while we saluted and honored and worshipped them. They returned home, many of them maimed and broken in health, to find that our "spell" of enthusiasm had waned. Possibly those who never returned died with higher thoughts of us than those who have lived to see the reaction of the times.

But the signs of the times point to low thinking, low moral standards, and the lessening of the forces that would really do good. The reactionaries have asserted themselves. The signs indicate that the progressives are soon to dismount and the reactionaries are to take the saddle. They are crying for the good old days; they are crying for the times like once they knew. They know not the first letter in the word progress. They believe in being good, just to be good—they know nothing of being good that carries with it a passion that a world shall be conquered for Christ and mankind shall be saved.

In our own Church there is a spirit of lethargy; a spirit of letting up, or a spirit in which each individual is concerned about himself or the things of his own household. There is a dimming of a world vision and impediments that are rapidly blocking the wheels of progress.

The signs of the times, if these things continue, show that the doors of opportunity will be closed to many of our loyal and ambitious young people. These signs show us that our next Convention will be reactionary, and that its vision will be lessened. These signs plainly point out to us that our Convention is on the very eve of taking a backward step instead of a forward one. The tendency seems to be to put the "soft pedal" on everything. But can we afford, after such a vision of world service, to recede? As we see it, we cannot. There is no backward move—it must be forward.

Our Convention has a program—a program that challenges every member of the Christian Church. If this program is not ample, then we have worked three years in vain. The Sun believes that the program is ample and that every part of it should be undertaken.

Shall our next Convention meet, just to meet and transact business of the routine sort, or shall it be a Convention that is enterprising, forward-looking, and with a vision?

The Point System In College

The point system in college came into use after our exit from that shrine of learning. If we understand the point system correctly it is this: A student is elected to some position, such as class president, debater, or something of this kind. Such an election counts so many points, and each student is allowed to receive only so many points during the year. After he has been granted his quota of points he cannot expect further honors during that year.

Such a system is in operation at Elon College and we want to commend the institution for such a system, regardless of the fact that Editor Rainey, of the Maroon and Gold, says that "the system as it now operates is as wrong as stealing and as foolish as war." No doubt our worthy contemporary knows more about the point system than we do. But after several years' reflection on college life (a man really does not begin to reflect on college life until after he leaves college) we can see the foolishness and the folly of allowing a few students to take off all the honors of an institution. For an institution to allow a student to accept too many places of honor and public trust is to endanger the student's own career. Too many times have we seen some student with so many offices and miscellaneous duties about the college to look after, that it was difficult for him to make a reasonable grade. To allow a student to accept so many places is to debar many others from places that they rightly deserve.

The Maroon and Gold argues that if a certain student is a good orator and an excellent debater, he should be given opportunity for the exercise of these gifts. The student may not get to exercise such gifts, but not true from the standpoint that the student should exercise some will and caution and not accept so many things so as to debar him or her from the place for which he or she is best fitted. If a student desires to take part in a debate, let that student look forward to such a program and not accept every little thing that comes along.

Of all places, a college should be the seat of democracy, but it cannot be so long as it allows a few students to monopolize all the college honors.

Put it down that The Sun is for the point system in college. We believe in it.

EDITORIAL BRIEFLETS

A selfish church will die. It cannot live. Its ways are not the ways of Christianity.

There is too much tendency to build churches—houses—rather than to develop members.

The community in which you live knows more about your rating than you think it does.

There is much difference between an opponent and an enemy. An opponent will play fair, but an enemy will not.

We grow tired of this "What's the Matter With the Church?" stuff. It is a groove (we should have said grave) that non-thinkers have fallen into.

A denomination's chances for growth and development are in proportion to the ways that the denomination's leaders—its ministers—can co-operate.

There are so many organizations and no more days and hours until the average home is about to be menaced. There is no time for home life, for thought, for recreation, and for serious thinking.

An organization, whether it be social, political, or religious, rises no higher than its leaders. An educated ministry guarantees an intelligent leadership, and that is what it takes to place a Church in the forefront in the march of progress.

Editing and Publishing A Church Paper

Talks With Our Readers—No. 7

Dear John:

In last week's issue of The Sun there appeared a statement that only one paper of the Methodist Episcopal Church is self-supporting. This statement was made by a member of that denomination who knows. So far as I know, I cannot name another Church paper that meets expenses.

The Christian Sun is not in a class to itself in the matter of sustaining a deficit. It is public record that The Herald of Gospel Liberty lost during its last fiscal year $10,927.54. (The Christian Annual issued last year by the American Christian Convention sustained a deficit of $454.39.) The deficit for The Christian Sun is now averaging about $6,000.00 per year. This brings a very serious question to the Christian Church, especially when you take into consideration the fact that each of these papers has an exceedingly small circulation.

The Church is face to face with the problem of continuing to meet this deficit or arrange some way to decrease the expense. I have figured from every angle during the past twelve months, and out of this calculation, together with my actual experience, I do not know of a dollar's expense that could be eliminated. In fact, I say with all seriousness that it will cost more to run The Christian Sun during the next fiscal year than it has during the past. This statement will stand true even if the biggest item of expense, with the exception of the cost of printing, should be cut fifty per cent.

The Church press is undoubtedly in a new era. It is in a new era from the standpoint of thought, circulation, and cost. The controversial type of the Church press can no longer live. The many publications, religious in nature, are making great inroads upon the subscription list of the Church periodical, while the future has no hope for the price of printing as it once was. Men are no longer willing to "stick" type one letter at a time with their fingers. Modern machinery has supplanted practically all the hand work. Hours of labor have been reduced from ten or twelve to eight or six per day. The educational preparation in practical lines for first-class printers is equal to that of the school teacher. Very few employing printers desire to take in young men as beginners who have less than a high school education. There is no use in arguing against these conditions. Press, pulpit, and pew, have advocated the uplift of all laboring conditions. And so press, pulpit and pew must not speak out against its own product.

Trusting that the information which I have been giving you is worth while, and will serve to enlighten your mind as you enter upon your journalistic career, I am,

Cordially yours,

C. B. Riddle.

ELON LETTER

I DO hope the Bible will not be driven out of the Sunday school," writes one of my dearest friends. "There is an earnest need for the study of the Bible more than there is of books about the Bible," he continues. Nor is our brother alone. Some would even go further than he, and rule out of the Sunday school lesson helps of every description, using the Bible text alone for teaching purposes.

And so a theme is suggested about which I have often thought and written not seldom. Out of it grows such queries as these: What is the purpose of the Sunday school? What sort of curriculum will best meet the requirements of this purpose? Of what value is a knowledge of the Bible? How do you distinguish between the Bible and books about the Bible? Do we need knowledge of both? What is the relation between Bible study and life?

I read my friend's letter and after careful consideration, wrote him as follows: "With you I agree that the study of the Bible must not be excluded from the Sunday school. However, we need to interpret the Bible in the Sunday school in terms of modern life. It is the same gospel with new application." What responsibility thus rests upon us Sunday school teachers! Our aim is not Bible information, but Bible application—not knowledge, but character. You may pump your pupils full of the Bible so that they can reel off with the rapidity of the motion picture machine and likewise with its accuracy, whole books of the Bible, so that they can give you the facts without hesitation relative to any person mentioned in the Scriptures, and yet they may be knaves. Bible teaching must be applied to life, must fruit in character, must be interpreted in terms of modern life. It is the same Bible, but it is differently applied. It will ever be thus. A static gospel has no message for a dynamic age.

The real purpose of the Sunday school, as of every other religious organization, is the production of Christian character fruiting in daily life. The seed is the same in every age, but the soil is different, and methods of tillage suitable to the soil and the climatic and atmospheric conditions must be employed. The other day I read a religious discourse written a thousand years ago. It had slight meaning to me. Jonathan Edwards' great discourse on "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God" suited his day. It would produce small effect today. Sermons are poor reading. The better they are, the truer this is. Sermons are vital interpretations of the Gospel for a particular situation. Addresses on religious themes are different. We have more addresses than we need, and fewer sermons.

The same principle holds for those of us who teach. Even in the exact sciences like mathematics, text-books and methods of instruction are constantly changing. As the spirit of the times varies, so must our approach to any subject we essay to teach. We cannot present Christian truth on any other basis than an interpretation of it to modern life. Antiquarians may be interested in fossils, but the world's workers have hardly been concerned about fossils.

The curriculum of the Sunday school should interpret the gospel to the present-day world in the language it can comprehend. It is not so much a question as to whether the message is an exposition of certain verses of Scripture, as that it should be vitally Christian. Beecher is said to have delivered one of his ablest sermons on "God tempers the wind to the shorn lamb." A washer-woman's favorite "Scripture" text was, "Grin and bear it." It is not expository preaching or teaching that we need, so much as prophetic insight into the problems of our age, teaching that shall eventuate in wisdom rather than pedantry or mere accumulations of erudite Biblical knowledge.

Why should not the Sunday school teach its adolescents the principles of choosing a life-work? Why should it not have classes on "What Constitutes a Christian Home"? Why should it not have parents' classes on how to nurture children in the ways of the Lord? Of course the Bible will be the inspiration of all these courses and of the many others that reverent seekers after God shall prepare for the Sunday school. So will the Bible be to us what it was to Jesus—the inspiration of life. It meant so much to Him that He quoted it even on His cross. It had become a part of His life. It was in His ease not only knowledge of the Bible that helped, but experience of its teachings in daily living. The Bible contains God's Word. That Word He commissions us to interpret for Him in our teaching efforts. Certainly we'll keep it in our Sunday schools.

W. A. HARPER.

SUFFOLK LETTER

WE have inaugurated an innovation in the Wednesday night meetings of the Suffolk Christian church. Twenty-five persons, twenty-one men and four women, have been selected to deliver addresses for as many weeks as there are persons asked to render this service. So far, six men have delivered six addresses. This, you see, will require only one address from one person within six months. The people have enjoyed these addresses and the attendance has more than doubled. In addition to this new interest the pastor has requested a layman to conduct the singing, and he has consented. It will surprise one who has not made this test to find out how much latent talent resides in the membership of the congregation.

I have not made a program for these addresses, but let each speaker discuss a theme of his own selection. In that way variety is presented, and each one can present the Christian thought that lies upon his own heart.

Thus the meetings are spiced with heart-thoughts and warm suggestions. Of course the prayers and songs follow the usual course of devotional services.

The Sunday school in this church is increasing in numbers and interest, a very fine orchestra furnishes the music, and the interest seems to indicate a rising tide in the spiritual life of the congregation.

The church is coming up fairly well in Men and Millions payment of pledges, and after-war conditions seem to be returning to before-war conditions. If we pay in full our war-time subscriptions to Missions, Standardization Fund, and Men and Millions pledges, we will "thank God and take courage." People put too much on Mr. Hardtimes in these days. He has been with us before, but he has never stopped progress, except temporarily. There are ten cars now where there was one buggy when I first came to Suffolk, and people spend more cash in their families for moving pictures and ice cream than they did for Church and education forty years ago. There was only one decent carriage in Suffolk when I came here in 1882. People are not so poor, except by contrast with 1917-1920 financial conditions. The same people, the same money, and the same chances to live and serve are here today; but we have lost heart and want too much for too little. To pay the little obligations made to the Lord's cause will not bankrupt any person nor any community. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." (Proverbs 11: 24.) Solomon is pretty good authority on money matters, and especially when inspired by the Holy Spirit what to write. The main thing in God's dealings with men is the keeping of His promises; and the main thing in man's dealing with God is the keeping of his promises.

W. W. STALEY.

WILL IT MEET OUR NEEDS?

 HE more thought that I have given to the question of dividing the North Carolina Christian Conference, the more uncertain I am as to what is best to be done. I can not be as absolutely sure of my opinion as some of my brethren on both sides of the question seem to be. From the first I have felt that now is not the time to settle the matter. After the union has been perfected, and all the work organized, it is my opinion that we should give is a five-year trial at least. These past three years have not been favorable to pass sound judgment on anything.

First—As to a united Conference of all our forces in the State, it seems to me that we are bound to have it if we are to do the things for the Kingdom that we are hoping and praying for. We need the breadth of vision and the strength of concerted action that only a united Conference can give. Here in our local church we have to keep reminding ourselves that we are not all of the Christian Church, so isolated are we from other churches of our connection. The annual Conference with its fellowship with all the brethren and its reports from all the churches, is a source of inspiration and blessing whose value it is impossible to estimate. And when it comes to deciding upon the places of greatest need and largest opportunity of service, it seems that we must have a united Conference that our combined strength may be able to do a work that is worth while.

But when we think of the needs of our weak churches in the country districts we are forced to the conclusion that we must carry to them inspiration, encouragement, and the information as to modern ways and means of doing things. They must be reached and helped as they are not being helped now. Our forces must be linked together and vitalized by a new spirit if we are going to do more than mark time in the future. How can we do it? Will one Conference, as we now have, accomplish the task? Will three Conferences, as we formerly had, do what we wish to do? Will two Conferences, as has been proposed, meet our needs? Frankly, I do not believe either proposition will adequately meet our needs.

When the Durham Christian church took up the question of the three propositions submitted by the Conference, we were perplexed; we were uncertain; we did not know what is best to be done. From our very earnest and prayerful deliberation, the resolutions hereunto appended were evolved. The seed thoughts of this proposal were contained in Brother Clements' exceedingly thoughtful article which recently appeared in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. This article proved all that he contended, and more. If you will compare the proposed scheme of organization with those of all the larger denominations that are doing effective work in our State, I believe you will find they coincide in all the salient features. We submit this resolution for the consideration of the brotherhood. We are confident that we all wish to do what is best, if we can only find out what is best. The Durham Christian church will stand by the decision of the majority with all the strength and resources at its command. The Resolution is as follows:

Whereas, the Executive Committee of the North Carolina Christian Conference has submitted a referendum vote regarding the three propositions as provided for at the last session of Conference, the Durham Christian church has voted in favor of Proposition One.

After having duly deliberated and voted upon the propositions as submitted by the Executive Committee, the Durham Christian church unanimously adopted the following resolution: "Resolved, that it is the conviction of the Durham church that to best serve the cause of the Christian Church in North Carolina, we need a general Conference for the State; in addition, we need, as a connecting link between the General Conference and the local church, District Conferences, of such numbers, and so arranged geographically, as to be easily accessible to every church in the group. That these District Conferences be held at a convenient season during the summer. That they be authorized to present a program, and to transact such business as will meet their local needs. And that these District Conferences elect delegates who shall represent them at the General Annual Conference for the State."

We believe that a scheme carefully worked out in detail along the general lines herein suggested will meet all the obligations to the Conference as now organized, and will serve our interests far more effectively than either of the three propositions submitted in the referendum.

Signed for the Durham Christian church,

STANLEY C. HARRELL, Pastor.

OUR HISTORY

N THE CHRISTIAN SUN of March 8 is an editorial relative to the things that should be considered at the coming session of the Southern Christian Convention. While not a delegate, there is one matter that appears to have been greatly neglected by the Christian Church, South, and that is the gathering up of our history, and putting it in book form for the use of the ministry and the laymen of the Church. It has now been about 128 years since the name was taken by the body in session in Surry County, Virginia, and while our records show that from time to time committees have been appointed to do this work, yet so far as we are aware no report was ever made and put in print.

Before we had a college of our own, there was little opportunity for our ministerial students to get much of our Church history. But we have now had a college since 1890, and still very little has been done. So far as we are aware there is now no complete history of the Christian Church in the South in existence.

Our ministerial students, after taking their degrees at college, unless they have a natural turn for things historical, know very little about our Church history; many not using what material there is at hand to inform themselves.

As no nation or denomination has ever grown great until it had a history, it may be that this is one of the contributing causes to our slow growth as a denomination. We find also that those churches in this section that have gathered and printed their history are the ones that have grown the faster. Their membership is loyal, and they know for what their church stands.

Would it not be a good idea for the coming Convention to appoint a commission to gather up our Church history and compile it into a volume or volumes, to be used as a text-book by the ministerial students, and those expecting to enter the ministry of the Christian Church? If a work of this kind could be produced, we believe its effects would be felt for years to come, as the ministers would then be well grounded in the principles and history of the Church, and this would most naturally be carried by them to their congregations.

It will be no small matter to do this, as it has been neglected so long, yet we have men of brains, and who are not afraid of work (and it means work) in our number, and if each minister and layman would do his bit, it could be easily done in a very short time.

The work can be done. We have men who can do it, and it will be a matter for the Convention to say whether the time has now arrived for it to be done.

W. E. MACCLENNEY.

A TRUE STORY

About fifty years ago I was living in the home of Henry Pearce, in Franklin County, North Carolina. One evening Rev. W. W. Staley was there, and we went over to the home of Brother Jack Winston, about a quarter of a mile away. While there our attention was attracted by the whistling of some young partridges in and around the yard. Some hunters had killed the old mother bird a day or two before, and these little birds, only a few days old, had been running about the yard in great distress, trying to find their mother. Without their natural protector, and night coming on, they had come into the yard in search of their lost mother.

Brother Staley went out into the yard beside a large tree and began to whistle like the old bird, and in a few minutes the little birds came running towards him and crept into his hands, which he was holding close to the ground, until some three or four were huddled together in his hands without his making any effort to catch them. Brother Staley may remember the exact number. The warm hand soon hushed the crying of the little birds. Brother Staley came into the house holding the little motherless birds in his hands, to the surprise of us all. They were soon tucked away in a nice little box.

Without any fault of their own, they had lost a mother to feed, protect, and warm them. So it sometimes happens with little children when their mother dies. They are in great need of some one who will care for them, and it is hard to find a friend who can fill the place of a mother. But there is such a Friend. For Jesus says, "Suffer the little children to come unto me." The Christian Orphanage was built to take care of the little children who have lost their parents. When lost, or naked, or hungry, or cold, or wandering in sin, children need a friend, and no better friend can be found than Jesus Christ. Go to Him.

RELIGIOUS JOURNALS ON THE "SECOND COMING"

The Baptist paper, The Watchman-Examiner, edited by that man Laws, is spokesman for the "second coming"; The Baptist, the other paper, is outwardly only mildly on the other side, inwardly it is in agony. The Presbyterian is a stalwart of this new antichrist, while the other notable paper of the Presbyterian denomination, The Continent, loathing the thing, yet pursues a tepid career. Zion's Herald, brave and independent Methodist journal, dares, against great opposition and in the face of economic jeopardy, to tell the truth of the doctrine's deadly effect upon Methodist missions, while the New York Christian Advocate, sustained "officially" by the denomination, plays safe by not mentioning the subject, so far as we have read, keeping well to the quiet and cautious side.

Among the Disciples of Christ, there is an interesting condition. The denominational opponent to the evil thing is The Christian Century, which does much specious advertising that it is an undenominational journal. It is sustained by liberal-minded laymen of the Disciples communion. It is doing its liberalizing work under grave conditions. For example, the sect's United Christian Missionary Society has just scored a coup, in getting on record a creedal test for missionaries, somewhat like that which the reactionary Baptists forced through at the behest of a kind-hearted gentleman with a purse containing a half-million dollars. They got the money! The Disciple missionaries must unequivocally believe in immersion, according to this new creed, and they must ac-

THE BULLETIN

VOTE ON CONFERENCE DIVISION

THE SUN was unable at the time of going to press with this issue to get the vote on division of the North Carolina Conference. The matter is in the hands of the executive committee, and we hope to carry the announcement next week.

THAT CARD

The other day we received a card from Dr. W. W. Staley asking that we advise by return mail if we were going to attend the Southern Christian Convention, which meets in Suffolk, Virginia, on May 2, 1922. Did you, Brother Delegate (or Sister Delegate), receive this card? If you did, and have not returned it, do so now. It is a matter of courtesy to reply immediately to a request like this, as well as to assist the entertainment committee in its plans. This matter is important, and we trust no delegate will overlook the matter of informing the committee about his or her attendance. And here is also hoping that every delegate elected will do his or her best to attend; and if not convenient to attend, to arrange for the alternate to go.

"THE PRE-EMINENCE OF JESUS"

THE SUN'S Editor was privileged on last Sunday night to speak in the Methodist Protestant church of Burlington on "The Pre-eminence of Jesus in the Home." It was the second of a series of addresses on "The Pre-eminence of Jesus," planned by the pastor, Rev. S. W. Taylor. President Harper delivered the first, his theme being "The Pre-eminence of Jesus in Education." Hon. Gilbert T. Stephenson, Winston-Salem, N. C., delivers the third on "The Pre-eminence of Jesus in Business," while Mr. J. Norman Wills, of Greensboro, N. C., is to deliver the fourth, which is to be "The Pre-eminence of Jesus in the Individual."

A GOOD SUGGESTION

Pastor Lankford, of the Burlington church, has suggested and expressed the desire of having all nearby churches to Burlington to send a delegation on certain days to attend the American Christian Convention, which is to meet in the Burlington church in October, 1922. Brother Lankford's suggestion is good, and we see no reason why a number of our churches, in a radius of fifty to one hundred miles of Burlington, could not easily arrange for delegations to attend the Convention. The nearby country churches with their automobile facilities, and the city churches with convenient train schedules, could easily arrange to spend the day in Burlington and return home that night.

We pass this suggestion along, Brother Pastor, and hope that you will make a note of it and present the same to your people at the proper time.

OLD PROVIDENCE CHURCH, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA, TO DISBAND

The Old Providence Christian church, Norfolk, Virginia, is to disband on May 28, and the members to unite with the Christian Temple of Norfolk. Old Providence church was organized in 1804 and has served well her day's generation. The church was once located in a very prominent and promising section, but in recent years new roads and streets have been laid out and the old church is left practically in a field alone, while her members have joined other nearby Christian churches.

LAST MINUTE NEWS

The Federal court in North Carolina has denied the railroads a reduction in their taxable property. The fight centered about a proposal to reduce the value of the property entered for taxes in the state.

The indications are now that President Harding will veto the Bonus Bill. The Senate is likely to kill the bill before it reaches the President.

Forty special government agents, eight flying squadrons of five men, acting under the direction of the Narcotic Division of the Internal Revenue Department, made a liquor clean-up in Miami, Fla., on March 20. About twenty-five places were raided and more than twenty arrests made.

France is to pay her debt to the United States, so it is now, regardless of the fact that rumors have been circulated to the contrary.

PROTESTANT DENOMINATIONS UNITE FORCES IN RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By unanimous action of the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations, representing more than thirty evangelical communions, and of the Executive Committee of the International Sunday School Association, representing more than sixty state, provincial and national auxiliary units, these two bodies have consummated the unification of their forces with a common program, personnel and objectives.

This action was taken at Chicago in the annual winter meetings of these bodies, held respectively on the 15th and 16th days of February, 1922.

After years of agitation, conference, correspondence, and consultation and in the face of traditions and legal difficulties which at times appeared insuperable, the Committee of Reference and Counsel to which the task of reconstruction was committed were able to formulate a simple instrument of merger which met the ardent, formal endorsement of both organizations without a dissenting voice.

The pole star of conviction which served as a perpetual urge to the Committee, was the appalling illiteracy of American youth and the necessity for a united front in attacking the momentous tasks involved in building an adequate ethical and religious foundation for the national life.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

A CALL TO PRAYER

For the Pre-Easter Period and the Easter Week of Prayer,
April 9 to 16, 1922

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America and the Commissions on Evangelism of its constituent Churches unite in this Easter call to prayer, to consecration and to service at an hour when the weakness of humanity, without divine strength, is clearly revealed in the affairs of men. Let us continue to "pray without ceasing" that the hand of God and the spirit of Christ may so guide and inspire the nations that they may press on towards the brotherhood of men.

Never has the appeal come to us with more impelling force in behalf of human suffering in the Near East and Russia where millions of our brethren face starvation.

Great movements for the promotion of brotherhood and for the incitement of human compassion are but the natural products of the Gospel and the Church of Jesus Christ.

The streams of human life can rise no higher than their source. Nations can be redeemed only as mankind is convicted of sin, induced to repentance and becomes subject to our divine Lord and Master. National hatred can only be overcome and human compassion can only be deepened by getting hatred and sin out of the hearts of men and out of our own hearts by the expulsive power of the love of Christ.

Our first call is to self-examination and penitence.

Let us, therefore, seek with humility and faith for the outpouring of the Spirit in the lives of men. We have abundant reason for hope. The result of our prayer and service during the past two years was an unusual increase in the membership of our churches. This must not be permitted to induce self-satisfaction, but it should hearten us and fill us with renewed faith that the prayers of millions of the members of our churches will bring immeasurable release of spiritual power.

We have evidences of this awakened faith. "The Week of Prayer" in January, 1922, was more widely observed than it has been for many previous years.

The subjects for the Easter season deal with the fundamental faith upon which depends the destiny of our country and the world. It is the redemption through Christ. "There is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved." We are seeking to follow the experiences of the closing days and hours of our Master's life. With His followers, and through them, the whole world of mankind may be resurrected from the sepulchre of human suspicion and human conflict into which the world has fallen as the result of a war brought on by human selfishness and sin. Let us pray that hundreds of thousands of new voices may be added to the company of those who cry out of a personal experience, "He is risen!"

The Church must do her work upon the plain of human life if she follows her Master, but she must also, with her Master, seek the mountain top of prayer.

"The World sits at the feet of Christ,
Unknowing, blind, and unconsoled,
It yet shall touch His garment's fold
And feel the heavenly alchemist
Transform its very dust to gold."

WITNESSING FOR CHRIST

Not many weeks ago we were in a testimony meeting where we saw two men sitting side by side. One of them is known in the community where he lives as a very active church worker. The community also knows he leads a double life, for when he goes to the nearby cities, he leads the life which our Lord condemned. The other man, everyone knows, puts away sin as soon as he recognizes it as sin. All present knew both. The man of the double life arose and testified, while the one in whom all have confidence as an earnest Christian sat still. He has courage to stand for the right anywhere, but that night he did not get upon his feet. Which of the two is the stronger witness for the Lord?

The same evening side by side sat two women. The one who arose and testified, everyone present knew "filthy communication" proceeds from her mouth continually, and for years she has been a leader in drawing young converts into dancing and other worldly amusements. The other woman was known by all present to be one who lives a clean, pure life, a life consistent with the profession which she makes. That very evening within the church he saw her rebuke the other woman for a suggestive remark. Which gave the strongest testimony for the Lord?

The pastor said all who kept their seats had said they were ashamed of Jesus. Did not that man who is leading a double life, and that woman who is leading others into evil, put Jesus to open shame? Do you remember that Jesus said there is a day coming when many would say unto Him, "Lord, Lord, have we not done many acts of kindness for Thee, and spoken for Thee, and done many wonderful works in Thy Name?" Do you not also remember our Lord said He was going to say unto them, "I never knew you: depart from me ye that work iniquity"? We need to witness for Jesus with our mouths as well as with our lives. But the testimony should come from a clean mouth which speaks out of the abundance of a clean heart. Then our testimony will have weight in leading others to put away their sins and follow Jesus.

The American Bible Society, contrary to certain reports, has not given up its publishing business, in which it has been engaged for more than 100 years, and has had no thought of so doing. It will continue as a publishing house, issuing the Scriptures in more than 150 languages and dialects, having its work done through various printing concerns. It will continue to control its own plates so as to preserve the accuracy of its versions for which it has received wide recognition and acknowledgment. This change of policy in its printing program has been dictated by the fact that the Society is convinced that it can do its printing more economically elsewhere than it can be conducting its own printing establishment. There will be an actual increase in the Society's output, and this change of policy marks a distinct advance and is in no sense a retrenchment in its program of Scripture publication.

PROGRAMS—ONE DAY SCHOOL OF MISSIONS

As THE SUN's editor announced in his notes last week, Mrs. Alice V. Morrill, Defiance, Ohio, President of the Woman's Foreign Mission Board of the American Christian Convention, is to be one of the speakers at the One-Day School of Missions the women are to hold in their several districts of the Eastern Virginia and the North Carolina and Virginia Conferences in April. The women were most fortunate in securing Mrs. Morrill, and are very happy that she is to come. She is great, and has missionary information, as well as inspiration and zeal. None can hear her missionary talks and not become missionary enthusiasts. Then Miss Iola Hedgepeth, fresh from her school in the mountains, is to be at all these meetings. She has a first-hand message that will deeply interest all who hear her. The women, young people and pastors who attend these meetings this spring have a real treat in store.

Here is the program adopted as a whole, but will be changed in minor detail to fit local conditions:

Devotionals. Minutes of last session. Roll call of churches and enrollment of delegates. Appointment of committees. Superintendent's Message. Song and Prayer. "Our Plans for the Year"—by a member of the Board. "Bible Study in Missions," by Rev. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary, Southern Christian Convention. Missionary Address by Mrs. Alice V. Morrill, President Woman's Board for Foreign Missions, American Christian Convention.

Adjourn for lunch—One hour.

Afternoon Session

Devotionals. "Why and How of Missions in the Sunday School"—Discussion fifteen minutes, led by..... "Our Mountain Work," Miss Iola Hedgepeth, Superintendent. Round Table—By Mrs. Morrill. Report of Committees. Election of Officers and Selection of Place for Next Session. Last Words; Adjournment.

NOTICE

Mrs. C. H. Rowland, President Woman's Board of the Eastern Virginia Conferences, desires all pastors and presidents of Missionary Societies in that Conference to please take note of and publicly announce the dates and places of meeting of the One-Day School of Missions as follows:

Isle of Wight and South Hampton District at Franklin, Virginia, Tuesday, April 4; Mrs. J. A. Williams, Franklin, Va., Superintendent.

Nansemond and Gates County District at Bethlehem church, Wednesday, April 5, Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson, Suffolk, Va., R. F. D. 5, Superintendent.

Wakefield-Waverly-Dendron District at Dendron, Va., Thursday, April 6; Mrs. L. B. Faison, Wakefield, Va., and Mrs. B. F. Livesay, Waverly, Va., Superintendents.

Norfolk County and Newport News District at Prentiss Place, Portsmouth, Va., Friday, April 7; Mrs. J. E. Cartwright, 80 La Salle Avenue, Norfolk, Va., Superintendent.

The meetings will begin in each instance at 10 a. m. Mrs. Alice V. Morrill, President of the Foreign Mission Board, American Christian Convention, Defiance, Ohio, and Miss Iola Hedgepeth, of our Mountain School, Fancy Gap, Va., and our Secretary of Missions for the Southern Christian Convention, together with local speakers, will make addresses or teach a class at each of these meetings. It is desired that each delegate bring a Bible and a notebook.

Address: "Our Men and Millions," by Rev. G. D. Hunt.

Churches will please take notice and send large delegations. Rock Stand is anxious to entertain the people, and we are all eagerly looking forward to the meeting.

C. W. CARTER, Chairman of Committee.

Miss Iola Hedgepeth, in a recent letter, gives this encouraging information: "Our work is growing. We are becoming better established and are confronting greater responsibilities every day. A wonderful work this. I trust I can do my part faithfully and well, God helping me. We need a minister of the Gospel in our midst. I can see it and feel same, for I know how hungry I have become for a real preaching service once in a while. At present we have 125 on our two Sunday school rolls, mostly young people. Out of that number, including adults represented in the homes from which they come, not over six or eight have ever made any profession of faith in Christ."

MONEY AND CONVICTIONS IN THE CHURCH

To the observer from outside, no rebuke would seem too scathing for the Baptist Home Mission Society and the United Christian Missionary Society. A year and a half ago a benevolent-minded but somewhat ignorant Baptist layman of California, who had acquired a fortune in oil, determined to make a considerable gift to the Baptist Home Mission Society. In the Baptist churches has grown up in the last twenty years a party now commonly called fundamentalists. They are a group who insist on the acceptance of a pretty definite body of doctrine, which includes the substitutional theory of the atonement, a premillennial view of the return of Christ, and so on. The oil man's views were of the fundamentalist school. He made his gift to the Board conditional on the acceptance by its officers of five dogmas of this description. If there is one thing of which the Baptists have boasted it is their refusal ever to impose a creed upon themselves. But the vision of $1,500,000 looked bigger than the liberty of the church to the Baptist Board. It consented to the provision. Last year, as most of us are aware, the Board was sustained by a snap vote of the Home Mission Society at its meeting in Des Moines. But the convention appointed a committee to report next year on the desirability of accepting conditional gifts. Meanwhile the Baptist Home Mission Society, having betrayed the fulness of Christian liberty for a price, is finding that the oil man's gift may prove financially as well as spiritually an apple of Sodom. The gift was not in money, but in oil stock, in a concern whose property is in Mexico. The stock has shrunk very considerably from its valuation eighteen months ago. The company is still in need of development, and the stock, it transpires, is assessable. The Baptist Home Mission Society may actually be forced to pay out money for the sake of betraying its principles! The devil is a poor paymaster.—The Christian Work.

STEWARDSHIP AND TITHING

SOME DISCUSSIONS BY REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

IS THERE A JOHN HAMILL IN YOUR CHURCH?

(Note: The Tither, formerly edited by The Sun's editor, was transferred on January 1, 1922, to Rev. J. S. Huebschmann, 1645 Superior Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio. In the January (1922) number of The Tither the following interesting article appears, together with the accompanying picture. The Sun has secured permission to reprint this. The story is to appear soon in Brother Huebschmann's book, "Three Great Successes."—Editor.)

The writer is acquainted with many happy tithers. Tithing is contagious.

Let me tell you something about John Hamill. John Hamill lives in Cleveland, Ohio. He is known by his church people as the Blacksmith Missionary. He used to be a blacksmith. He is now engaged by the East Ohio Gas Company to look after the repairs of trucks and autos. A number of years ago he contributed only $5.00 to $6.00 annually toward his church treasury. His vision has grown. He heard a sermon on "Tithing." He began to tithe.

He told me a little more than a year ago, that within the last twelve months he averaged an income of $43.00 a week, amounting to $2,236.00 the year. Out of that he gave to his church, missions, and God's good causes between $700 and $800. And he gave it cheerfully.

No, he did not inherit money! He told me that every dollar he ever had, he had to work for.

No, he is not a single man, who has no cares but his own! He is a married man and has several children.

Mr. Hamill is supporting a missionary in Africa, Miss G. Bowyer. This young lady tithes her meager income. She gave me the picture of two of her black converts of Africa. The one is so happy about the Christian religion that he gives one-tenth to God's work, the other gives one-seventh.

The church to which Mr. Hamill belongs has a membership of about 300 to 400 members. That congregation is paying the entire expenses of about seven missionaries, in different countries.

Have you a John Hamill in your congregation?

Reader! Can't you become an example for others in your church, as John Hamill did in his church? Now is a good time to start. Why not begin today?

JOHN HAMILL, THE BLACKSMITH MISSIONARY

SECURING TITHERS

Rev. Roy C. Helfenstein, Dover, Delaware, writes March 13: "Please send me by return mail 300 copies 'How to Tithe and Why?' also 300 copies 'The Divinity of the Dollar.' I preached yesterday morning on Tithing and expect to preach another sermon on the same subject next Sunday. We now have thirty-one tithers in the People's church, and I hope to have fifty on our Tithers' Roll by next Sunday." This is the way to go at the good work. People love to tithe when shown why and how they should.

Under the same date Rev. J. F. Morgan, Norfolk, Virginia, writes: "Please send me 100 copies, 'How to Tithe and Why?' for distribution among my people."

Many of our pastors are taking advantage of the free and fine literature we have on the subject, and are getting results. We have sent a small packet of this literature to one or two persons in every church of the Convention, with one or two exceptions, and trust the same has been placed and is being read to advantage. Here is the plain, bare question after all: "Shall we pay tithes or rob God?" Malachi 3: 8-10 makes that alternative for us, and from it there is no escape. If we are not tithing we are robbing God; and if the people are shown the plain Bible teaching on the subject, many will tithe. Why not do our part in giving the people a chance to adopt the Bible plan?

THREE KINDS OF GIVERS

Some witty person once said: "There are three kinds of givers—the flint, the sponge, and the honeycomb."

To get anything out of a flint you must hammer it, and then you get only chips and sparks.

To get water out of a sponge you must squeeze it, and the more you squeeze, the more you will get.

But the honey-comb just overflows with its own sweetness.

Some people are stingy and hard; they give nothing away if they can help it.

Others are good-natured; they yield to pressure, and the more they are pressed, the more they will give.

A few delight in giving, without being asked at all; and of these the Bible says, "The Lord loveth a cheerful giver."—The Christian (London.)

What Our Country Owes to Home Missionaries.—Luke 10: 1-17.

"He who would measure the greatness of our history must take into account the home missionary."—Senator Hoar.

"Back of Home Missions must stand that which gives them reason for being, as well as incentive and inspiration—the religion of Jesus Christ. Back of our national problems must ever be the question whether they shall be solved by a Christian or a non-Christian nation."—Mrs. Athella M. Howsare, in "Christian Missionary."

The splendid work of Miss Hedgepeth and Miss Midyett in the mountains of Virginia, and of Miss Kirkendall in the foreign section of Haverhill, and of Rev. W. R. Caldwell, among the logging men of Western Washington, may well be presented to the Christian Endeavorers at this meeting as illustrating the contribution which the Christian Church is making to the great work of missions in the homeland.

LETTERS FROM THE COUSINS

DEAR UNCLE CHARLEY: We are having some wet weather and cannot run around outdoors much. I want to join the Band of Cousins. I am a little girl nine years old and go to school every day. I have a nice teacher. Her name is Miss Indie Lee Griffin. I live right near the school and can go in bad weather most of the time. Enclosed you will find 25 cents for March. —Virginia Wells, Edgerton, Va.

Yes, we are having much rain, too. We want to plant Irish potatoes, but the ground keeps too wet. You are fortunate to be close to the schoolhouse these rainy days. —"Uncle Charley."

DEAR UNCLE CHARLEY: It has been a long time since I wrote to you and the cousins, yet I hope you have not forgotten me. I am in the fifth grade and like my teacher very much. Am sending you the dollar that daddy gave me for not missing a word in spelling for a month. I hope I can make another one to send the Corner soon. When school is over I am going to work in the field, for I am nearly eleven years old now. Mother says she thinks perhaps James Everett and Jennings will study harder and have a dollar for you next month. —Jack Hargroves, Jr., Driver, Va.

We had not forgotten you but thought you had forgotten us. You are a good boy to send your dollar for the orphans. I give our little folks one dollar if they average 95. I had to hand over eight dollars for last month. —"Uncle Charley."

“TELL ME A STORY”

JACK'S COURAGE

Crash! Bang! Jack's heart nearly stopped beating. There was mother's best vase on the floor broken into hundreds of pieces.

“People shouldn't put vases on little tables just where a fellow couldn't help bumping into them,” muttered Jack. Still, he had been told not to go into the drawing-room in his heavy boots, and he began to feel rather queer. “Oh, well, they'll think it was the cat,” he said to himself, as off he went.

Every one had started supper when Jack came in again, and he slipped quietly to his place. “Where's Puss?” he asked.

“Oh, she's in disgrace,” answered Margaret. We've shut her up in the cellar. She knocked over mother's new vase.”

“No one seems to know anything about it, so we thought Puss must have done it,” said mother.

“Oh,” said Jack, and nothing more was said about the vase.

When Jack took up his lesson-books, somehow he could not study. What was it that the new teacher had said? Something about courage. Oh, yes! “Courage consists not only in bearding a lion or facing a mad bull, but in the quiet performance of unpleasant duties or the cheerful acceptance of deserved censure.”

“Acceptance of deserved censure.” Yes, that meant taking the blame on yourself.

“Miaow, miaow,” came faintly from the cellar, and that settled Jack.

He cleared his throat and began, “I say, mother.” “Yes, Jack,” answered mother, softly.

Why would that queer feeling come in a fellow's throat? “I—I nocked the vase over.”

“I'm so glad you told me, son,” she smiled back at him. “I don't mind so much about the vase, but I'd hate to think my boy wasn't truthful. Wouldn't you like to let Puss in?”

“My, won't I work hard for father in the garden this summer, and buy her a new vase!” thought Jack, as he went to the door and called Puss.—Lillian Ladyman, in Jewels.

A COLORED BOY'S COPPERS

Freddy, a little colored boy, was a scholar in Sabbath school. Though a rugged little fellow, he contracted a disease which resulted in his death. A few days after the funeral the home was visited by the deaconess of the church, who found the heart-broken mother putting Freddy's possessions away. What to do with Freddy's bank, which contained twenty-five cents, she scarcely knew. But the appearance of the deaconess suggested the idea that it be given to her to be used in some good cause.

They had a Mission Circle in the Sabbath school, and after thought and prayer, she told the girls the story of the twenty-five cents and suggested that it be invested in cardboard holders, each with spaces for twenty-five-cent pieces. These were distributed among the girls, who went out collecting for missions. Some of the holders were filled more quickly than others. One girl, whose interest in missions had been difficult to arouse, was inspired with the idea of making as much as possible out of Freddy's quarter; she came to the meeting carrying her holder, filled, in one hand, and in the other enough twenty-five-cent pieces to fill another. She soon filled a third, collecting nine dollars in all. Forty dollars was the financial result of a group of girls taking Freddy's legacy and using it for the Master's sake.

Freddy had two sisters who joined the Circle and became excellent workers. His mother and grandmother became members of the Woman's Missionary Society. The mother of the girl who collected nine dollars also became a member.

Jesus one day long ago took a boy's lunch, consisting of five buns and two fishes, and fed a multitude. Who shall say how many hungry hearts have been fed on the bread of life in distant lands because a group of wide-awake girls had placed in their hands Freddy's twenty-five cents and multiplied them into forty dollars?

What wonderful things Jesus can do with coppers, plus consecration!—Exchange.

THE BUSY BEE

Few people realize the enormous effort required to make a single pound of honey. In a pound jar, the Manchester Guardian tells us, there is the concentrated essence of 60,000 flowers.

To make a pound of clover honey the bees must take nectar from 62,000 blossoms and make 2,700,000 visits in getting it. Often the journey from the hive to the flower and back is as much as two miles, so that the making of a pound of honey requires journeys that may aggregate more than 5,000,000 miles. When we know these facts, we realize that the bee is indeed “busy.”—Selected.

At a meeting of the Committee of Arrangements and Program for the Sixteenth International Sunday School Convention, to be held at Kansas City, Missouri, June 21 to 27, 1922, recently held in Chicago, a strong tentative program was outlined. Its scope of activities and interests as well as its provision for detailed information and methods in the field of Sunday school work promises unusual returns for the time invested by the 8,777 delegates from every State and Province in the United States and Canada who are expected to be present.

A committee of five to investigate the needs of the 60,000 blind people in this country for religious education, literature which they can read, and oversight and care in the field of religion, has just been appointed by the Home Missions Council and the Council of Women for Home Missions. There is very little religious literature available in the Braille type at the present time.

CHURCH NEWS

A CHURCH DEBT IS PAID

I am more than glad to report to our brotherhood that the debt of long standing on the Christian church building at Reidsville, N. C., has been paid. Some two or three months ago in a little conference one night we made an effort to see what we could get pledged for the payment of this debt, which has been standing against the church since it was erected several years ago. The subscriptions were liberal, but some thought many would not pay after pledging. Last Monday night in our regular quarterly meeting we called for the payment of said pledges, and every subscriber came forward with the cash, not a single one failed. There was real joy in the audience as it became more and more evident that the debt would be paid. There was one man, a laboring man in a factory, who had promised $50. As the calling of the list proceeded, many felt doubtful of his being able to respond with the cash, and for two reasons, one was the scarcity of work and the other was the fact that his wife was then in a hospital in Baltimore, Md., having submitted to a very serious operation. The people in the audience waited with almost anxious breath to see if this man would respond. At length the secretary called his name. Then he arose slowly and started to the secretary's table. Well, we all felt like giving this humble but heroic man three cheers, but everybody remained quiet and this man did not fail, for he laid on the table his fifty dollars, and so as we went through the list it was found that not a man had failed to pay his pledge, and then others paid in who had not pledged, and—the debt was paid. Hurrah for Reidsville, for she has done her part and nobly done it and the church is rejoicing. Besides, in our regular Sunday services the congregations are increasing in a most satisfactory and encouraging way. Then, too, our mid-week prayer meetings are doing splendidly. We have from fourteen in inclement weather, to seventy-five in good weather to attend, and the young people make up the larger portion of the attendance. We have a very faithful company of young people and they are nearly always in place. The interest in the Reidsville church is growing and most encouraging. Rev. W. L. Wells, now of Portsmouth, Va., is very affectionately remembered by many in this congregation. He was my predecessor here and their fondness for their former pastor is gratifying. I have rarely preached to a congregation in which there was a more decided and growing interest. We are all feeling good over the situation, and especially over the fact that the debt is paid. The outlook is encouraging.

CORRESPONDENCE

UNCLE WELLONS AND THE "LITTLE BROWN JUG"

Dear Editor:

I find in The Sun of February 1, a letter from C. W. Hunt, of Charlotte, N. C., calling my attention to his father Rev. Moses J. Hunt, whom I met at Good Hope the second Sunday in February, 1863. I have many tender ties that bound me to Brother Hunt. He was then a widower living with his sister near the church. I do not remember his children's names, but I remember them. I found in Brother Hunt a man who was striving to win souls to Christ. We had many precious meetings together, and witnessed a great many souls coming to Christ. He married the second time and lived in sight of Pope's chapel. We held many excellent meetings at Pope's chapel. He promised to be at Pope's on Monday, following the fourth Sunday in September. He went away to fill an appointment in Warren County to return Monday, but when I met him Monday afternoon his countenance was overflowing with joy. He preached on Sunday, went home with Mr. Jones, who had a school conducted at his house. Monday morning he said to Brother Hunt, "Talk a little to my school on the subject of religion." And soon the teacher accepted Christ. The young man working for him accepted Christ. Mr. Jones' daughters, and all his boarders there then accepted Christ as their Savior; and Brother Hunt couldn't get away until after dinner.

On another occasion Brother Hunt promised to help me at Pope's if all was well, and he was there. I won't tell you the circumstances under which he was there, lest you all have a hearty laugh. Brother Hunt was a great worker for souls, and when he didn't have a church to hold a meeting in, he would go out in the woods, where there were souls to be saved, and conduct a meeting there under an arbor. I wish we had a thousand Rev. Moses J. Hunts with as great love for the salvation of souls as he had.

Now let us go back again to Good Hope for a few minutes. I found that church so dilapidated, it was not fit to hold a service in, at the close of the war. I had to give up preaching there and give up that little flock or build them a house. I and my congregation were all without money. I resorted to every honorable means, to get a house for worship. I never worked as hard anywhere to build a church as I did there. The church was without window-lights. I had to stand in the cold and preach, while the people listened. I couldn't see just how I'd get any lights, but I said to the young ladies, "Make me a bed-quilt," and Ah! two bretheren, not members there, but members of my church, said, "Brother Wellons, you are going to gambling." I said, "Look at those windows. I've begged you until I can't get five cents more out of you. Would you have me stand there and preach to a cold congregation? Hush! Shut your mouth." And I heard no more from that. I gathered up from two little books some simple stories that were quite amusing. I got the young people to compare these simple plans. I got a number of wagon covers, by the side of the church. I sent fifteen miles to a grandfather, to bring his little granddaughter—a sweet little child—to sing the "Little Brown Jug" for me. I gave notice on Easter Monday that we would have these tableaux scenes and the selling of the quilt. (I sold that quilt and got seventeen dollars for it.) The people came from nearby and far off. Everybody saw the windows that I was striving to close, brought along their twenty-five cents, and if they heard the "Little Brown Jug," and saw these amusing plays, they were expected to pay their twenty-five cents. This was the first meeting I ever had of that sort, and the last. In a few weeks my window sashes were in and well glazed, and a comfortable heating stove. So Good Hope stands today, with all of its nice improvements. After all of these improvements were made, I still had a slight amount of money left.

J. W. Wellons.

SOLEMN VOWS

Drewry-Clarke

The marriage of Miss Bessie Parke Clarke, daughter of Mr and Mrs. W. R. Clarke, of Wakefield, Va., and Mr. Turner Monroe Drewry, son of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Drewry, of Wakefield, Va., took place at 5 o'clock, Thursday afternoon, February 16, 1922, at the Wakefield Christian church, the pastor officiating.

The church was decorated with evergreens, potted plants and cathedral candles.

Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for Washington and other northern cities.

They will make their home near Wakefield, Va., where the groom is engaged in farming.

W. D. Harward.

West-Conrad

Mr. Thomas M. West and Miss Tressie Conrad were married at the Christian parsonage, Waverly, Va., February 17, 1922. This was a very quiet marriage. The ring ceremony was used.

Mr. West is a farmer and merchant of near Waverly, Va. The bride is of the same neighborhood. There is a beauty, a dignity, and a stability in the marriage of good neighbor-country folk which is most praiseworthy. The many friends of this good couple wish for them many happy years of successful life.

Ceremony by the writer.

Jas. L. Foster.

Loy-Griffin

Mr. Raymond W. Loy and Miss Lesta Mac Griffin were united in marriage at the parsonage of the Rose Hill Christian church, Columbus, Ga., on the evening of March 11, 1922, at 7:00 o'clock.

Mr. Loy is a young man of splendid personality. He is a member of the Christian church and is at present enlisted in the Officers'

Training School at Fort Benning, Ga. He is a member of a prominent family. Mrs. Loy is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Griffin of this city. She is prominent in society and church and is a most charming young lady.

Only a few friends and relatives gathered to witness the taking of the sacred and solemn vows. The beautiful ring ceremony of the Christian church was used. The writer spoke the words which made them husband and wife.

A host of friends wish the popular young couple much joy and happiness in life.

BEST CROP FOR ANY NATION

The best crop any state or nation can raise is a crop of just plain, wholesome boys and girls. What would be the use of working hard to develop a fine country, unless there were some good, dependable boys and girls to leave it to? But boys and girls are more difficult to raise than record-breaking cows and fine horses. Sometimes we get so interested in building up a fine farm, or a great city, that we forget to bring up the kind of children that can be trusted with these wonderful investments and enterprises.

We cannot leave the boys and girls to grow up any more than a farmer can turn his cattle loose in the neighborhood and expect to have fine stock in the end. The youth must be given high ideals and training to be honest and dependable men and women. A healthy body can only produce a strong and vigorous mind. By constant effort on the part of parents and leaders, habits of thrift and industry are formed that will insure success. It takes time, trouble and money to raise a good crop of boys and girls, but it's worth it.—Thrift Magazine.

BABSON PREACHES

Roger W. Babson is a voice crying in the wilderness of the nation's selfish rush for gain. It is most refreshing—a very means of grace to hear this glowing testimony from this Christian business man:

"It seems to me that the only cure, the only thing that will stave off the crash, will be some sort of religious revival that will get men into a different point of view. We must have something that will make men substitute faith for fear, production for selfishness; something whereby our minds may be focused upon making things instead of upon a division of things. The great need of the hour is more religion, more emphasis on service, more on making rather than on purchasing, more on being rather than on simply getting by.

"Some time ago I put a question to the President of Argentina as to why South America is backward as compared with North America, although settled first. He answered: "South America was settled by men from Spain who came in search of gold, with only a vision of gold, but North America was settled by the Pilgrim fathers, who came with a vision of God and a desire to serve Him." Let us not kick down the ladder by which we have climbed up."—Selected.

RADIO SERVICE

Had you been at the home of E. M. Underwood on Endor street last Sunday night you would have had the privilege of listening to a sermon by William Jennings Bryan, delivered in Point Breeze Presbyterian Church, Pittsburg, Pa., which was broadcasted by wireless telephone. Myron, the young son of Mr. and Mrs. Underwood, has fitted up a splendid wireless set in the home, where evening concerts given in Newark, N. J., Washington, Pittsburg, Chicago and other distant cities, are heard. The voice of the great Commoner was just as clear as if one had been sitting in the same building with him. Mr. Bryan stated in beginning his address that it was the first time a speech of his had ever been broadcasted and that the audience listening was probably the largest he had ever addressed. It was a great speech and the speaker was about an hour and a quarter delivering it. Subject, "The Prince of Peace."—Sanford Express, March 17.

Japanese reporters at the Disarmament Conference twice sent Secretary Hughes' message to their home paper, the Asahai of Tokyo, at triple rates. The minute Secretary Hughes made his naval offer, representatives of the Tokyo paper prepared a 400-word summary containing every salient point. This they sent urgent cable, at three times the regular commercial rate, or $3 a word.

POCKET BIBLE FOR THE BLIND

The American Bible Society is producing a small handy volume of Scripture selections for the Blind. The purpose is to have a light book for easy handling by the aged and invalids, and for easy carrying by those who travel. The cost of the book will be very moderate so that it can be widely circulated. The passages of Scripture will be among those universally cherished by Christians for instruction, comfort and inspiration.

The Blind are not only handicapped seriously by blindness, but by the necessary bulk and cost of books in embossed systems. While an ink print Bible can be supplied for fifty cents, an average embossed Bible costs over fifty dollars. The fifty cent ink print Bible weighs about a pound. While an average Bible for the blind weighs over one hundred fifty pounds, of course such a Bible is not in one volume. It takes from eleven to fifty-eight volumes, according to the embossed system, to make a Bible, the pages of which are 13 x 14 inches, on an average.

The small volume will consist of approximately forty sheets 7 x 14 inches and will weigh about one pound. It will be the nearest approximation of a vest pocket edition ever issued for the blind.

Inquiries in regard to this volume and gifts to promote its circulation should be addressed to Mr. L. B. Chamberlain, Bible House, Astor Place, New York City.

Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life; and they are they which testify of me.— (John 5:39.)

Fourteen Points on Making a Church Go.

1. It's Sunday! Stop Look! Listen! Are you on your way to church?

2. Avoid spasmodicism! Steady and united action will redeem the world.

3. Ask yourself, not what do I get out of this service, but what do I put into it?

4. Be as enthusiastic over your church and religion as you are over your - business, lodge, or politics.

5. Keep paid up. Religion is the one thing needful. It's worth paying for as well as praying for.

6. Give your children a chance to grow up in the church. Bring them with you.

7. Welcome the stranger even though you miss the usual greeting with friends.

8. Make yourself a committee of one to win one disciple for Christ and His church.

9. Have a good word to say about other churches, but put your own first in your heart and life.

10. Do not see how little you can do to get along, but rather how much you can do to make things go. Remember you are not responsible for the lack of great gifts, but only for the culture and use of what you have.

11. Keep informed. Take and read your own church paper.

12. Practice the homely virtue of faithfulness. Faithfulness is what keeps things going.

13. If certain members have failings, bear in mind that you may have some too, so keep mum! "Charity covereth a multitude of sins."

14. How can the Sunday evening problem be solved? Simply by laymen going to church Sunday evening. So long as the service is maintained, it is the duty of laymen to attend it. Laymen as well as ministers are called to be laborers together with God.

Unity Of The Faith

By REV. F. C. LESTER, Graduate Student
Yale Divinity School
New Haven, Conn.

FOR centuries have men longed and prayed for the unity of the faith. Isaiah, a member of royal family, walked barefoot through the streets of Jerusalem pleading for unity of faith in Jehovah, who alone could save Judah from destruction. Jesus, in the only lengthy prayer we have recorded, prayed passionately three times that those who should later believe on Him might be one. Paul explains that the reason for the gift of apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors and teachers is that we all may come to the unity of the faith. Popes and potentates have issued decrees, councils have been convened and creeds set forth, even persecutions have been carried on, and thousands have died for the unity of Christian faith. And yet that desired good has not been attained.

Division of Christian forces is noticeable everywhere. The tragedy is that even yet brother rises against brother in the household of faith, and Church combats Church. Such must soon pass. Enlightened Christian men know better than to spend God's time in trying to destroy each other while the world, God's world, our world, sinks lower in sin.

But how shall we attain unity of the brotherhood? Organic unity will not come in our generation, if it ever comes. There is a bigger and a better unity—the unity of spirit.

Unity of spirit will come when Christians lift up their eyes unto the fields which were long since ready for harvest, and gladly obey the Master's entreaty, "Go ye." The mission challenge is the hope of the Church. If Christians are content to stand idly by, or even worse, contend with each other, while literally millions of fellow-beings eke out a miserable existence in misery, disease and sin, the Church they represent must surely die—and the sooner, the better. When Zion shall lose her life in sacrificial service at home and abroad, then shall our Lord's prayer be answered, then shall we come in the unity of the faith, then shall dawn the millennium.

The Division of the North Carolina Conference

THE report of the Executive Committee of the North Carolina Conference shows that the vote stands for three Conferences instead of one. The Sun is the official organ of the Convention and works in the mutual interest of all the Conferences, and, hence, has reserved editorial comment on the issues involved in the division of the North Carolina Conference. The vote is now settled and the next step will be for the Convention to ratify this vote and make disposition of whatever proposition, or propositions, that may be presented for the continuing of the old Conferences.

The matter, therefore, now passes from a Conference matter to a Convention matter, and The Sun holds that it is within its own rights now to comment on the situation.

Our position is that the churches in the North Carolina Conference were not willing to give the united Conference a fair trial. It must be remembered that the North Carolina and Virginia Conference was nearly a century old at the time of the merger, while one of the other Conferences was a half century old and the other nearly three-quarters of a century old. All three of the Conferences had done good work, but it had taken them years to do it. There were those who expected the united Conference to accomplish in three years what it had taken more than fifty years to accomplish. Such an expectancy is unfair, and we regret that certain contributors to The Sun resorted to such comparison.

It was pointed out that the churches were not attending the united Conference in the same proportion that they were attending the three Conferences. This scribe recalls when no one went to Conference in an automobile, and often it was inconvenient to get to a Conference on a train. When once you reached Conference you could not very well afford to stay for one day only. In recent years, the use of the automobile has given delegates an opportunity to leave their homes early in the morning, go to Conference for one day, and return that night. We have in mind that many such delegates planned to return to Conference the next day, but when they reached home, they let affairs there prevent them from returning. We saw this very thing in all the Conferences at their last two sessions before uniting. This is going to be seen in the Conferences after they go back to the old boundaries. Mark our prophecy here now that these smaller Conferences are going to have a very difficult task holding themselves together.

Too many of the ministers in the North Carolina Conference have fallen to the opinion of the members whom they serve rather than trying to teach them how to co-operate. Many ministers of the North Carolina Conference have not dared to stand up and tell their people the convincing facts about and advantages of a united Conference.

There is a principle about the division that concerns itself beyond the confines of the North Carolina Conference. It points out very clearly to us that our people cannot co-operate as they should under the splendid liberty which we enjoy. Herein is a principle involved that goes deeper and extends beyond a local affair. This fact must be reckoned with in our Brotherhood. It stares us squarely in the face and it is an issue that we must intelligently settle or suffer by its consequences.

The position of The Sun now is that every member of the North Carolina Conference should accept the vote in a whole-hearted way and abide by the decision of the people. Though we were a strong supporter of a united Conference, we shall, with the same zeal, stand by the Conference of which we shall become a part. We shall nurse no ill feeling and let no prejudice blind us from our Christian duty.

The Men and Millions Forward Movement

OUR Men and Millions Forward Movement has a future. We believe that with all our heart. We believe that the majority of the people think so, too, and that they are willing to help take care of this future. The next session of our Convention will very likely determine the actual future of the Movement. Whatever is done this time will likely fix the destiny of the great undertaking. The Campaign Committee has been continually on the job since the launching of the Movement. Not a member has resigned or otherwise ceased from active duty. Meetings have been held regularly, with few exceptions. Correspondence has been carried on and plans made out. The committee does not, however, feel that it has had the utmost co-operation. But even in the face of this, every member has been, and is, optimistic.

A report is now in preparation for the next Convention. That report will not only give a gist of what has been done, but will make two or three concrete recommendations. It will be remembered that the committee made some recommendations at the last Convention, but they were pushed aside without consideration. The committee has felt keenly the need of the operation of the recommendations made at that time. The committee further feels that the work cannot be rightly and efficiently prosecuted unless some definite steps are taken. The committee is composed of men whose time is completely taken up by other positions and the best that they can do is to give an occasional half day to the prayerful consideration of plans. The Church ought to know now that this committee expects to make what it considers necessary recommendations at the next Convention. The Church ought to know further that the committee feels that unless the Convention is willing to stand behind the undertaking in some definite and concrete way, that it does not feel that it should become responsible for the actual outcome of the Movement.

The Sun's editor is a member of the Campaign Committee, and has been present at its every meeting. He understands the situation in such a way as to give expression in this manner. Let the delegates to the Convention begin to think in terms of the Movement's future and be prepared to consider what step, or steps, should be taken to fully perpetuate our Church's greatest undertaking.

A Sentence Editorial

A DENOMINATION cannot afford to hamper itself with an inadequate literature. An inadequate literature will make an inadequate people. Bare literary necessities will never suffice. There cannot be an adequate literature without an adequate publishing house. A denomination cannot be missionary without the power of the press. The Seventh Day Adventists can stand criticism because they believe in the press, and use it. Give us an insight into the literature of a denomination and we will know that denomination. A tract in the hands of every member makes every member a missionary. The absence of literature produces but little. The printed page reaches the masses. Another denomination will not produce another's literature. The building of a Church college is the task of the Church. The building of a denomination is the task of that denomination. The building of a literature for a denomination is the task of that denomination. The Church paper cannot be discarded because it does not pay in dollars and cents. The small circulation of a Church paper is to be regretted. We have come to think that a missionary must have two feet. We wonder if a missionary ought not to have pages as well as feet. We send men into new territory to build churches. We ought to send our literature into the homes to carry our principles. When the Church neglects the printed page she sets up a germ cell to destroy her physical body. What does the future hold for the Church paper?

It takes four acres of land in the United States, at present methods of cultivation, to sufficiently support one person.

DANCE BY ELON STUDENTS

Back in "ye olden days" when The Sun's Editor was a student in Elon College, the idea of any kind of a fraternity was frowned upon. But time brings changes. Two years ago two Greek letter clubs were organized at Elon for social purposes only, as we have understood it. But is not this the very beginning of all college and university fraternities? Is not this just such a step that creates the first germ that finally pollutes society? Is not this the genesis of a body of men whose stupid rules debar the poor boy and spend in shame the money of parents?

A college needs no social societies to divide the student body into groups. A college allows the canker of ruin to set in when its trustees and faculty set their approval on that which lends itself toward class control.

We have it from good authority that one of these social Greek letter groups at Elon held a dance in Burlington on the night of St. Patrick's day of this year. Such behavior is a blot on the name of an institution that is known to the world as Christian.

If Elon's Greek letter clubs are the means of bringing into our college the same kind of a thing that is permitted in State institutions, then The Sun calls upon every trustee and faculty member to give an account of his stewardship to a loyal and devoted constituency that has made Elon with its prayers and dollars.

One of the best panaceas for an evil is publicity, and we throw the searchlight upon a flaw in our work and call upon the college authorities to defend or condemn what we have said in regard to this dance and the organization that conducted it.

Mr. President, Gentlemen of the Trustees, and Honorable Faculty, tell us something.

LET US HAVE IT—AND NOW

We believe there are many of the brethren who plan to write something for the good of the approaching session of the Southern Christian Convention, but no doubt, many of them are just putting it off. Some will continue to put the matter off and others will send articles a week or two before the Convention meets and expect these articles to appear before the meeting of the body.

Let us have your suggestions now. The Editor has in mind to have the issues of April 12, 19 and 26 prepared as much ahead of time as he can, and hopes that those who plan to write on some phase of the Convention's work will do so at an early date. Let your impulses lead you today.

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Dairy—Part XX

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

Field Secretary for Missions

THURSDAY A. M., OCTOBER 6.—It was dark, cloudy and threatening last night, but clear at dawn this morning. I was up at 6:30 and had ample exercise in deck-walking to whet the appetite for an 8 o'clock breakfast. Besides taking grape-fruit, prunes, bacon, eggs, and Porto Rican coffee for breakfast, we meet at table Mr. Woodbridge, a public accountant of Porto Rico, on his way back home in the States for a vacation. He likes Porto Rico but drinks buttermilk instead of coffee for breakfast. I put him in my diary as one deserving pity—something is wrong with his digestion. He cannot eat potatoes or bread, but can negotiate meats and fruits and nuts and buttermilk. During the war he was coming to the States on vacation and one day in mid-ocean a German submarine "bobbed up" out of the water all in a flash and without warning. However, the submarine's captain was a generous-hearted soul, as generosity ran among the Germans at that time. He commanded all on board the Porto Rican ship to take to their life preservers and life boats—and do it in fifteen minutes, for at the end of that time their ship would be "blown up." Woodbridge said no time was lost at forsaking their steamer, and just as the last passenger had cleared the decks and had safely launched in the little lifeboat, there was a terrific explosion, water was flung in sprays hundreds of feet into the air, and when the smoke of the explosion cleared, their good ship was seen torn wide open and with yawning, gaping sides, was rapidly swallowed up by the great blue deep. All night the passengers in their little rowboats tugged and toiled aimlessly about on the sea. About 2 a. m. a drenching rain set in and a fierce windstorm broke upon the sea. Some perished; but most came through the night, and next afternoon were picked up by a great old sail-boat far out at sea, and after days of peril at the mercy of wind and wave, all who were fortunate enough to go through the first night on the lifeboats were brought safely into New York harbor. Woodbridge says this was an experience he does not care to repeat. No wonder he had all the starch taken out of him—and has not been allowed by his physicians to eat anything since with starch in it. He is thankful now that he can live even on buttermilk. I enjoy his talk and decide not to get seasick on all this journey of five nights so I can have his company at meals.

The Ponce is a slow boat, but the sea is exceedingly blue and the little waves break over each other in snow-drift fashion. We sit on deck and doze and dream and read and talk and do nothing. I have resolved that if I should ever overwork and become a nervous wreck I shall take to some big ship and go to sea. One just can't do anything on board ship except be lazy and idle and indolent. A trip or two across the ocean would restore any sort of wrecked or wretched nerves. We have today a pleasant breeze, a friendly sea, and a steady ship. From 2 to 3 p. m. I have a most refreshing "nap," and awaken with the feeling that our first day out at sea on the way home is all that can be desired. To make up for all the inconveniences and limitations of sea travel they give elegant meals and serve them in the finest and best style ever. This evening at dinner the menu card was printed in colors and had cuts of Porto Rican scenes and also one of a great ship steaming out to sea. Besides the beautiful and artistic card, they served Queen olives, iced celery, pear onions, mock-turtle soup, consomme julienne, boiled salmon, Windsor potatoes, paella a la valenciana, queen fritters with sweet sauce, boiled pig's head with spinach, roast prime ribs of beef, roast veal with brown sauce, boiled and mashed potatoes, roast sweet potatoes, green corn on cob, lima beans, roast chicken with dressing, lettuce salad with French dressing, aquacate sauce, cabinet pudding, lemon sauce, blackberry pie, Horton ice cream, cherry jelly, assorted pastry, assorted nuts, fresh fruits, young American and Edam cheese, toasted water crackers—and glorious Porto Rican coffee. Now, if one cannot make a dinner on that, any or all of it as one may choose, one should be thrown overboard and himself be fed to the fish. I was not thrown over.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 7.—Had a splendid night's rest and feel fit and fine this morning. The day is very warm, but the breeze is delightful and sailing is fine. There is much swell in the sea and our good ship Ponce rises and falls with a grace of movement and bearing that is delightful. All on deck today seem sleepy and lazy, and some sea-sick. Sea travel is for rest—that's all. I have read today "James' Twenty Years in Porto Rico," "Old Spain in New America," and a few light articles in The Saturday Evening Post. They have a good library and reading room on board this ship, and one finds many interesting books to read while one is being rocked and rolled to sleep and indolence out "in the cradle of the deep." Our captain says we should now be off the Florida coast some few hundred miles. How I wish he would "head in" and let me take a fast train for home! It is Friday p. m., and we have no promise, even with a favorable sea, of landing in New York till next Monday p. m. The soft sun glimmers on the sparkling blue, balmy breezes flow from the tropical South, and but for fear that a storm will sweep down on us I could enjoy this forever. I see by the log we have traveled 284 miles from yesterday noon till today noon; 517 miles since leaving San Juan Wednesday p. m., and still have 863 miles to go to get in harbor at New York. That looks a long way—but we are going, and every blue mile counts.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 8.—Sea travel grown monotonous, except the great eating and the wonderful sleeping. One certainly feels close to and dependent upon God away out at sea. The billows are so big—space seems so infinite and abundant, and the sea so friendly—or so fierce. I stand on deck and look and look and look—out into boundless space and the infinite expanse. “What is due east of us?” Our skipper says, “The Bermudas.” “And west?” “Oh, possible the South Carolina coast.” If I could set foot on terra firma! And yet perhaps some day I shall remember these experiences—and be glad because of them. And here is the whole secret and philosophy of life. We spend our days—we poor mortals do—in fear, longing, wishing, hoping, smiling now and then, and looking out into the future. Then after awhile we look back upon the scenes and experiences of the past—and they are pleasant to think on. When we get to heaven I am sure we will look back on the hardships and trials of life and count them all pleasant. It is strange how experiences unpleasant at the time come to be pleasant in memory. I never talked with a rich man in my life that he did not love to tell about the hardships and poverty of youth and the early days. And I never talked to a great man that he did not enjoy telling about the hard knocks he had in the days before he came to be great..

I have lazed on deck today and read “Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm.” Out on the sea—reading and dreaming about the farm! The book of 200 pages is fine and carries sunshine not only from Rebecca—but on broad acres and fat herds as well. The sea has been good to us today, and our good ship covered 296 miles from noon yesterday till noon today. We are having a southerly wind, warm and balmy, and the sea at 2 p. m. is almost like glass in smoothness, though the sun is obscured and the weather seems soggy. We are headed for a storm!

Our wireless operator gave us news today from Athens (Greece), Lisbon, London, Washington, and New York. He gave us the score between the “Yanks” and the “Giants” in the world’s baseball series.

At 5:20 p. m. this Saturday, while the people in the States are on a busy half-holiday, I am writing this line in my diary to say that the dark clouds are lowering, the sea is growing more nervous and angry, and the rushing waves are beating themselves into a frothing foam. White caps are everywhere and signs of increasing anger appear on all sides. The sea is uncertain and capricious. One hour it may be calm and gentle and as docile as a lamb. The next it may be as turbulent, as fierce and as angry as a lion. It is too quick-tempered, and is easily provoked into passionate rage and frenzy.

SUNDAY A. M., OCTOBER 9.—We ran head-into a storm about 5 o’clock last evening. Thick clouds enveloped our good ship and the whole raging sea about us by 6:30 p. m. By 8 o’clock it was pitch dark, the wind was furious, the waves rolled and roared and seethed; and all night long our good ship Ponce tumbled and tossed and engaged in one fierce and continuous battle with angry wind and beating wave. It was a splendid tussle, but a restless, nervous, sleepless night for me. Occasionally our ship’s bottom would strike an oncoming wave with such force and suddenness that it sounded like an automobile at fast speed hitting a stump or a mound in the road. This morning, however, day peeped out gradually from behind the clouds, and slowly the sun has been battling for a clear sky as manfully as our Ponce battled with wind and wave last night.

All of today the sea has been one mad, seething, furious monster. It has been to me a most strange and wonderful day. The sea was so nervous, so restless, so terrible in its frenzied grandeur. I have stood for hours on deck and watched the most wonderful display of useless anger I have ever witnessed. A storm tore across the surface here early last night; and while the day has been full of sunshine and joy, the sea has displayed an anger terrible and wonderful to look upon. This, my last full day at sea, has been the most glorious of all, because so different. I have enjoyed my three square meals, and amid such ceaseless energy and frenzied activity one could not be indolent and inactive. Tomorrow is to be our last on the journey and the skipper says we are to land in the morning and put foot to pier in New York harbor by 2 p. m. If coming joys cast their bliss in front I shall have one sweet night of unbroken sleep and peaceful slumber this night. (Concluded in the next)

SUFFOLK LETTER

VERNON M. Herriek, son of W. H. and Cora Herriek, was born in Norfolk, Virginia, August 7, 1900. His parent moved to Suffolk when he was four months old where he lived until he joined the First Virginia Ambulance Company August 24, 1917, in Norfolk, Virginia. He left Norfolk September 16, 1917 for Camp McClellan, Anniston, Alabama, where the name was changed to 115 Ambulance Company. In December 1917 he was transferred to Sanitary Squad Two 104 Sanitary Train. He remained in that train until taken sick and came home on furlough May 2, 1918, and returned to Camp May 6.

He left for New York June 21, 1918, and sailed for England July 5 and arrived in England July 12. From England he went to France where he was taken sick the first week in October, the very night his Company was ordered to the Verdun front. He was sent to 89 Field Hospital for a few days and then on to Base Hospital 50, where he remained until January 28, 1919. He was then transferred to Base Hospital 54 where he died Saturday morning February 8, 1919, at 6:50 o’clock.

He was buried from the Y. M. C. A. Hut with military honors February 10, at Mesnes, France. His remains were brought to New York from Mesnes December 18, 1920, and to Suffolk Saturday morning January 8, 1921, at 7:50 o’clock, exactly twenty-three months and one hour from the time he died in France. He was re-buried in Cedar Hill cemetery, Suffolk, Virginia, with military honors, Sunday afternoon, January 9, at 3:30 o’clock. Pall Bearers: Bill Joe Barnes, Elbert Sturgeon, W. B. Allen, Len Evans, Edgar Harrell, and Joseph Mizell.

This young soldier of the World War is survived by his parents, brother and half brother, grandfather and grandmother, one uncle, and several aunts and cousins. He was a private in Sanitary Squad 2, Sanitary Train 104, Division 29, but his memory ranks with the highest officials when service is appraised. His parents and brother are members of the Suffolk Christian Church and the final service was conducted by the pastor. There were eighty-four enlisted from this congregation; two were killed and five died.

If you multiply the death of Vernon Herrick—only eighteen years, six months, and one day old—by one hundred thousand, and then think of the fathers and mothers in their grief, you may have a faint idea of the American loss in this great war. The loss in manhood! The loss in family plans! The loss in useful service! The loss is simply appalling; and all intelligent and religious forces ought to combine to prevent another war; for another war would be more of an international conflict than the one we call the "World War." Human interests and international relations grow larger year by year. Hemispheres are smaller now than continents were when Columbus landed on the western shore. Trade, missions, travel, intercourse now girdle the globe. The individual grows smaller as the world grows smaller. The individual ruler is doomed. Autocracy must pass to the museum of history, and broader views must control the nations and the Church of God. This young soldier's life went into the great struggle for the self-determination of small nations as well as great nations. "Without the shedding of blood there is no remission," and without the shedding of blood there has come no human freedom; but it is useless to shed more blood since "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." To trust in that blood prevents the shedding of more blood.

Peace be to the ashes of the soldier boy, buried in France or home cemetery! Peace and hope to the parents of Vernon Herrick, and all parents whose boys were buried with military honors.

ELON LETTER

 HE other night I went into the college wireless room and heard a magnificent concert by one of the world's great bands. The concert was given in Pittsburgh, Pa., and I was about five hundred miles away. The sermons of Dr. Truett, recently delivered in Raleigh, could be heard over wireless in many states. When the weather is rough or we are tired, why not lie in bed at home on Sunday and hear the best sermon by the nation's best preacher?

Why not? Because public worship is more than a sermon, and a sermon is more than the ideas it contains. Worship in church is a social affair. It is a mistake to think we go to church to meet God. God is everywhere, and if we cannot meet Him in our daily work, we cannot meet Him anywhere. We go to church, not to meet God, but to meet our fellows in the effort the better to realize God's will and purpose and plan for us. What our whole life should have as its engrossing purpose, the understanding and doing of God's will, that in a social way is the purpose of public worship. God promises to be with the two or three who so assemble, just as much as He does ever to be with his lone disciple everywhere and all the time. The ether has been ever filled with the myriad cadences and messages the wireless now speaks to us out of the encircling space, but we were not tuned to hear them. So it is with God. He has ever yearned to speak to His children. They could not hear. They did not even know He was speaking, and forgot He was present.

But to return to our thesis, while God is present everywhere, the social gain in public worship is conditioned on the presence of our fellows with us. No matter how eloquent a sermon or what entrancing music we may hear by means of the wireless, we can never feel the heart inspiration which characterizes the assembling of the people together in the place and at the hour appointed. "One shall chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight"—such is the geometric progression of associated action. This situation rings true to experience, too. The presence of others brings out the best or the worst in us, according as the group is directed toward good or evil ends.

It requires more to be a good preacher now than it ever did. The general dissemination of knowledge, the daily, weekly, and religious press, to say nothing of magazines and the literal maze of books, the multiplied gatherings of the people for instruction such as the movies or the theater or the various clubs, the piano-player, the phonograph, and now the wireless with its undreamed possibilities—have all of them for the average citizen produced an intellectual surfeit. The average man is mentally tired, over-fed, so to speak, when he goes to church. It must be a tempting morsel indeed that will hold him true and keep him a regular attendant. Inability to furnish mental nutriment and spiritual uplift has induced many preachers to resort to what I may be pardoned to call pulpit vaudeville to attract a crowd and get a hearing for themselves. Such procedure belittles the gospel and is shortlived.

What is the minister to do? He is to unify the music, the Scripture reading, the prayers, and his sermon, so that true worship may result. He will spend long seasons in communion with God, that he may discover His will and purpose and become His prophet. A prophet is not so much a fore-teller as he is a forth-teller. He speaks on behalf of God, interpreting His message to his own time and to his particular people. He will subject himself to a rigorous, consistent course of study. Desultory reading will not do. The hit-and-miss method seldom hits: it practically always misses. The average preacher is not able to construct for himself such a course of study. His denomination should do it through some Board, or he should accept membership in some one of the interdenominational reading and study circles. I have myself taken some of these courses. They are all right.

Whatever we do or aim to do, we must not neglect public worship and the sermon is here to stay, the right sort of sermon by the right sort of preacher.

PLAIN TALKS TO PLAIN PEOPLE

OMETIMES we handle truth as if it were glass, but there is no danger—you cannot get a jolt big and strong enough to down the truth. Some one has said that you cannot burn the truth, you cannot behead it, nor can you crucify it. On the other hand a lie is a lie even though it be on the throne. Remember another fact, that a lie on the throne is yet a lie which is on its way to defeat and ruin. Truth is still truth though it be on the way to a dungeon. You cannot destroy truth, since it is as eternal as its Author. Even though truth be crushed to the ground, it will in due time arise and go forward, for it is on the way to victory. Let us be patient for the victory of truth, since it must come, and in coming, it will destroy error.

Are there not many people who think it is quite sufficient to follow along close to truth? It is not, as they seem to think, quite necessary to be so careful to make your pathway the pathway of truth. If you keep close to truth, in the neighborhood of truth, that will do! But that is a serious mistake. We need to follow the pathway of truth, even to walking in it, for then only is the thinker safe from danger—the danger of error, which is always fatal to the highest and best interests of right. We are told that on September 5, 1870, a caravan of eleven persons left Chamouni to ascend Mount Blanc. They had with them as guides Mr. Randall, Mr. Bean and Mr. Corkindale. On their way down they were caught in a wild and terrible storm, and it lasted more than a week. When they were found ten of the eleven were dead, and near the summit of the mount. In the midst of the storm, they became bewildered, and wandering around and around, going over their own tracks, again and again, in a space not more than one hundred yards square, till at length they became exhausted and lay down to die in the very arms of the storm. They did not know where they were, but as a matter of fact they were so near to the path of safety that five steps more would have brought them into it and to safety. No doubt there are many souls just as near to the path of eternal truth, and yet, becoming bewildered by error, they lie down to die so near to the summit of truth and light. It is so important that every soul should keep in the pathway of right, for we know not how soon some storm may burst upon us and bring us to death. God help us to search diligently for truth, for it is the sign post to the way of eternal life in Christ.

I have recently come across some very remarkable testimony which I wish THE SUN'S readers to have. Let every reader of the same give it most careful attention, as it is a matter of the gravest importance. It is well known among reading people that the Rev. Marcus Dods, D. D., and the Rev. George Adam Smith, D. D., while living, belonged to the school of higher criticism, which they with pen and tongue, held as truth. The Sunday School Times says that just before his death, a short time ago, Dr. Dods asked his son to publish this confession as from him: "I now take no interest in prayer. I am down under the waters of doubt. I see no blue sky, no light." Now that is the testimony which Dr.

Dods, a well known higher critic, left behind him. Is any one surprised that a life dedicated to throwing doubt on the reliability of the Bible should end in such testimony? A little while before his death, Dr. George Adam Smith said at Yale University in substance this: "The conflict between traditionalism and scholarship (higher criticism) is ended. Scholarship has won. All that remains is to fix the indemnity." During the late World War Dr. Smith lost three sons in battle. A fourth came home desperately wounded. To the Presbyterian General Assembly at Columbus, Ohio, this same Dr. Smith said: "I have come back to the faith of my covenanting fathers, to the doctrine of salvation by grace, to the God Who died for me on Calvary's cross." That seems to be quite clear as testimony for the truth. Dr. Dods, by his own confession, went out at death into outer darkness, having lost faith in prayer, he went down under the waters of doubt, seeing no blue sky over him and no light beyond him. What a pity that such a man could be hood-winked by error till he came to such a plight! Then there is Dr. George Adam Smith, one of the most scholarly men of his day, said to the students of Yale that scholarship had won and all that was then needed was to fix the indemnity. But wait a moment, a little later, after having waded through the dark waters of affliction, Dr. Smith found that higher criticism had no power to comfort in the moment of sorrow and suffering, and then to the Presbyterian General Assembly, at Columbus, Ohio, he declared:

"I have come back to the faith of my covenanting fathers, to the Gospel of salvation by grace, to the God Who died for me on Calvary's cross." And then The Sunday School Times adds this: "The New Theology will not save souls in mining camps, nor comfort scholars on their death bed." I respectfully ask that all of THE SUN'S modernist readers take notice of this testimony, and then get down on their knees and appeal to God for divine guidance that they may follow truth, and not the myths of men's minds—of mere speculation—the vaporings of learning that has run mad.

WHICH WAY?

OW unfortunate it is for any of us to have such a limited vision that we see only that which is in our own narrow circle in which we move! There are, viewed from this standpoint, many discouraging things to dampen our enthusiasm, and threaten our faith. If, for example, we look at the aggregate of our membership from year to year, it would seem as if we were at a standstill or worse. But the tree which has had trimmed from it many dead branches, and others which hindered the production of more abundant and better fruit, is really a more valuable tree than before its pruning and consequent reduction in size.

Though lacking the information which would permit a thorough analysis, I am venturing to give the results of a recent study of some of our leading churches in various parts of the country. To avoid confusion, I am simply presenting them from the standpoint of their comparative size at three different periods. While it is doubtless true that some of these are doing less for the real interests of the Kingdom than are some smaller churches, I happen to know that the majority of them are a real force for righteousness. We certainly have reason to feel grateful for the things which they have accomplished.

In 1902 we had one little church in the city of Dayton, Ohio, with 148 members. That church now has a membership of 371, and two others have been organized. The combined membership of these three churches is 629. In 1910 they had 305. Eaton had 200—317—471 respectively for the years of 1902—1910—1922. Covington, 419—459—390. Greenville, 207—294—449. Piqua, 357—426—637. Troy, 495—680—1,033. Versailles, 342—391—342. Conneaut, 143—259—542. Lima was not even organized in 1902, or at least was not reported in the Annual of that date. In 1910, 170, and in 1922, 387 members. Leaving Ohio and coming to New Jersey, Irvington shows 218—361—650 respectively. Providence, R. I., 178—173—522. New Bedford, Mass., 423—448—454. Huntington, Ind., 200—361—621. Warren, Ind., 290—404—444. The Third church of Norfolk, Va., not organized in 1902, but since organization in 1907, and recently merging its life with Memorial Temple, had membership in 1922 of 826. In 1910 it had 52. Suffolk, Va., 409—726—1,056. Holy Neck, Va., 434—490—522. First church, Norfolk, 116—171—403. South Norfolk, Va., not organized in 1902. In 1910, 86, and now 435. The aggregate benevolent offerings of these nineteen churches were certainly not less than $30,000 as reported in 1922. The records are very imperfect. The published record in our National Annual, and the Southern Annual shows nearly $18,000 for benevolent purposes, but none of the Forward Movement money is included in the Northern reports, and apparently they are not included in the Southern reports. As to the latter however, I am uncertain. But at this lowest possible estimate of $30,000 in benevolences, how think you this compares with 1902? Although actual knowledge is not accessible to me, I venture to estimate the nineteen churches' gifts at less than $5,000 for that year, and at less than $8,000 for 1910. Which way are we headed?

"BACK TO METHUSELAH"

The velocity at which we travel in our modern Twentieth Century—the age of airplanes and wireless—is not without its reactions in human life. There is a movement being launched to overcome the hitherto common apprehension that a man living in so fast an age must necessarily have a short life and die long before he attains anything like the ripe old ages of his ancestors. One notes that during the last two years century clubs are becoming popular. Members join with the pledge to "live to be 100 years old," by keeping themselves physically fit. Life insurance companies of the United States announce that since the war the death rate has been lower, and that rates of life insurance are to be reduced accordingly.

Physical training and the cultivation of a strong will power is to form the basis of this movement. A most thorough study of these possibilities of longer life is found in George Bernard Shaw's play "Back To Methuselah," which is now being played in New York City. In this work the author penetrates with his keen visioned mind, far into the future, and explains that men will be able to attain great length of life again, as in the days of Methuselah. He believes that men become what they think, and that the people of the future will direct themselves toward extending the years of service of each human individual, which at present are altogether too few. The fear of life kills, while the faith, strength and hope of life makes one live, and especially if that faith is in the Creator of all things.

Unfortunately too many people have been living to die rather than living to serve. The Scriptures not only teach us to "fear God" but also to "serve Him." To me the latter is far more important. Too much fear makes one inefficient. Entirely too many church-goers have been slaves to this kind of fear and tried to snatch what little they could out of life at the Twentieth Century rate. They have reaped accordingly. They should center their minds upon being more efficient with their life possibilities. One may not agree with everything Mr. Shaw has said; and getting "back to Methuselah" may be a long way off, but the fact remains that the more you put into life, God being your guide, the more you and your fellowmen will reap in return.

SEND THEM TO THE CONVENTION

All our pastors desire to attend, and should attend, the Southern Christian Convention at Suffolk, Virginia, first week of May. The Convention will be better because of their presence, and they will be the wiser and better for attending. Why not the churches do the generous and magnanimous thing and pay their pastors' way to Suffolk and return for this Convention? The pastor will appreciate it, and will give back to his church or churches, in better service, far more than it will cost the church to send him. Get together, beloved church members, and make your pastor's heart glad by sending him to the Convention. You will never regret it, nor be the poorer for it.

J. O. ATKINSON.

What unparalleled dignity is accorded to man in the Word of God! Psalm viii, for instance, by a more accurate translation, says, "Made a little lower than God," and in other passages, "Made in the likeness of God"; "but salvation in Christ made sons of God, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ"; "having Christ in him, Christ and the Father abiding with him"; "Christ himself a second Adam, to create a race of men like himself." Is it not pitiful to descend from all the glories to a man born of an ape, with many brute propensities still in him only to be evolved out in ages to come?—Eastern Methodist.

Asa Relies on God.—II Chronicles 14: 1-12

Golden Text: Help us, O Jehovah our God; for we rely on Thee.—II Chron. 14: 11.

Leading Thought: People prosper when they are loyal to God.

For three months we have been studying Later Leaders and Prophets of Israel. With this lesson we begin to study the Prophets and Kings of Judah. We have seen that Israel had many dynasties. Now we are to view the kingdom of Judah as it is ruled over by the descendants of David, who were the ancestors of Jesus Christ. The division was made under King Rehoboam, who was succeeded by his son, Abijah, who reigned for three years, and then was succeeded by his son Asa. Of Asa it is said, "He did that which was good and right in the eyes of Jehovah his God." He commanded Judah to seek Jehovah and keep the law. Asa was a reformer and carried on a campaign to rid the land of idolatry. He went to war, with a strong battle array, praying to God in Whose name he advanced, and became the victor in his power over a mighty army. Asa had found the real source of individual and national power to be in trust in God.

"The man who on himself relies,
Shall fail, however strong and wise;
But he who grips the strength of God Shall walk the path the heroes trod."
—Thomas Curtis Clark.

"No matter where we are if God be with us, nor who is absent if God is present."—Matt. Henry.

Asa was willing to trust God for victory or defeat. When the aged Polycarp was asked to renounce Christ or suffer death, he said: "Eighty and six years have I served my Lord and Master and He has done me nothing but good; how then can I deny my Savior?" In that faith he died, and ever since the Church has glorified in his victory. (Hugh Thomson Kerr.)

"Jehovah is nigh unto all them that call upon Him,
To all that call upon Him in truth." (Psalm 145: 18.)

(CONSECRATION MEETING)

To Think About:

Daily Bible reading is a constant inspiration. "The times demand men who carry into everyday life the ideals of Jesus Christ and who hold Him in daily life as the One through contact with Whom these ideals in life may in large measure be realized."

"Thy Word is a lamp unto my feet,
And a light unto my path."

The traveler studies his guidebook carefully. The Bible is the Christian's infallible guidebook on the journey of life.

"Open Thou mine eyes that I may behold Wondrous things out of Thy law."

Why not make it a rule to spend at least as much time daily in Bible reading as in reading the daily newspaper? Daily Bible reading, accompanied by prayer and meditation, in the "Quiet Hour" gives to the Christian strength and power and joy.

"Every scripture inspired of God is also profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness: that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work."—II Timothy 16: 17.

"Everyone who has a thorough knowledge of the Bible may truly be called educated, and no other learning or culture, no matter how extensive or elegant, can form a proper substitute."—William Lyon Phelps.

"To every man who faces life with real desire to do his part in everything, I appeal for a study of the Bible. No man can afford to be ignorant of the Bible."—Theodore Roosevelt.

"Incline my heart unto Thy testimonies."

CHILDHOOD AND RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

By Warren G. Harding

Childhood is the basis of the future, and I believe in religious instruction for American children. The future of the nation cannot be trusted to the children unless their education includes their spiritual development. It is time, therefore, that we give our attention to the religious instruction of the children of America, not in the spirit of intolerance, nor to emphasize distinctions or controversy between creeds or beliefs, but to extend religious teaching to all in such a form that conscience is developed and duty to one's neighbor and to God is understood and fulfilled.—Classmate.

"Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith."—Rev. 3: 20, 22.

Executive Committee of the North Carolina Christian Conference.

Elon scored a double win in the inter-collegiate debate held on March 24 between that institution and Guilford College. At Elon the decision was unanimous in favor of the Elon representatives, and at Guilford College the decision resulted in a two to one victory for Elon's speakers. H. Lee Scott and R. S. Helms, Elon's representatives at home, upholding the affirmative side of the question: "Resolved, That the Treaty-Making Power of the United States Should be Transferred to the Executive Department of Government, Constitutionality Waived," clearly out-argued S. G. Hodgkin and J. S. Taylor, Jr., who were upholding the negative side of the argument for Guilford, and had little trouble gaining a unanimous decision from the judges. R. O. Smith and W. T. Scott, debating the negative for Elon at Guilford College at the same time the other team was debating at Elon, secured a two to one decision over the Guilford speakers, thus making a complete victory for Elon, having won both sides of the question, the affirmative at Elon and the negative at Guilford.

Mrs. J. L. Foster is at Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Virginia, for treatment, and we understand may have to undergo a triple operation. SUN readers will remember Sister Foster in their prayers that she may be restored to health.

Only one month till Convention time. Are you planning to go? Let us have a full delegation.

President W. A. Harper is in Norfolk, Va., this week where he is delivering a series of Lenten lectures before the Norfolk Federation of Churches. This is a signal honor for our College President. He spoke in the Christian Temple, Norfolk, last Sunday morning and at Rosemont at night.

NEWS IN BRIEF.

The Senate has ratified the Four-Power Treaty by a vote of 67 to 27.

Henry Ford has adopted a 40-hour week in his plant by adding 3,000 additional men and closing down on Friday nights, standing on Saturdays.

Nineteen men were entombed in a mine in Trinidad, Colo., March 24.

On March 25 six persons were killed by a storm near Beaumont, Texas.

It is desired that each delegate bring a Bible and a notebook.

GEMS FROM THE RELIGIOUS PRESS

PROHIBITION IN MEXICO POSSIBLE

Mexico in the prohibition column would seem strange indeed, and yet the Associated Press sends a report from Mexico City which says: "The 'wets' in Mexico are frankly alarmed. They say there is a real possibility that Mexico City at least may go 'dry' before the end of the year and that if so the next step would be to make the entire republic arid of alcoholic beverages. President Obregon does not say that he is a Prohibitionist, but within the past few months he has given his unqualified support to certain legal measures which aim to put down drinking and eventually to put intoxicants under the ban."—Presbyterian of the South.

THE GIFT OF HEALING

Never in the history of the Christian Church has the ministry of healing been more effective than at the present time in our Christian hospitals throughout the world. At the present time there are in America 1,975 nurses' training schools among the Protestant, Roman Catholic, Jewish, and independent organizations, having in attendance 66,000 students. The ministry of the Church in healing the sick in this manner in fulfilling the command of Christ. Whatever interpretation we may place upon the passages of scripture in the New Testament which refer to the healing of the sick or the gift of healing, we must not overlook the fact that that kind of work today is not comparable to the continuous, steady work in our hospitals around the world in ministering to the sick.—California Christian Advocate.

"THERE ARE OTHERS."

Nothing is more common, perhaps we should add nothing is more natural, than for each of us to be so buried in his own daily tasks and interests as to give little thought to the ways and interest of others. It is this concentration that makes the wheels of the world go round. Every man to his task and a task for every man. Still, as the slang phrase goes, "there are others." In the same way in which we should study concentration upon our own work we should cultivate ready sympathy and quick understanding of others in theirs. One thing at least we can always do; listen to the man who wants to tell of his affairs. It is surprising how soothing that is to the average human.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"REAL COMPENSATIONS"

Your life here must become very monotonous and wearisome," said a city visitor to the Sabbath school missionary. "Of course the scenery is beautiful, and there must be compensations in an occasional outing among the hills with rod and gun; but, nevertheless, I should think you would soon grow weary of it." "Yes," replied the missionary, "if this locality held nothing for me but beautiful scenery or occasional outings among the hills, I would soon tire of it. But you've overlooked entirely the most attractive feature of all, the people—the men and women out here among these hills. If you could see their faces light up with happiness over some simple gospel story or hear their words of gratitude over some trivial ministry of kindness which I give them, you would want no higher joy. These things are my real compensations."—Forward.

WHY THIS DIFFERENCE?

We heard a man speaking of his experience as a Confederate soldier in the Civil War. He said: "I left a good home and a good business in order to go to the front. I slept on the cold ground with only the heavens over me. I ate hard-tack and rancid bacon and sometimes almost starved. I stood amid the rain of shot and shell, exposing my life for the lost cause. I marched until I fell faint by the roadside. I dug trenches with hands which had never known toil before. I bore burdens which would weary a mule to carry. I stood all kinds of hardships, braved all sorts of dangers, made all sorts of sacrifices, all for a cause which I loved, but which I am now glad I lost. But when I am called upon to do something for the cause of Christ, I am ashamed to find myself hesitating and higgling about matters that are so little and to find myself unwilling to endure hardness as a good soldier of Christ.—Central Methodist.

FRIENDSHIP

Have you ever stopped to think what it really means to be a friend to any one? Much is required. To be a friend to others we must really and truly love them; we must be mutually interested in them at all times. We will speak some word of cheer to those who are sad, and try to brighten their pathway as they go along through life. We will help those who are in trouble. We will weep with those who weep and rejoice with those who rejoice. We will not condemn the sinful ones, because their sin has already condemned them. When they have sin's leprosy we should not cast them out and trample them under our feet, but we should be like the little Hebrew maid who was so anxious about her master Naaman being cleansed. God grant that we may be such servants as she was! If we are really friends we will not be trying to wreck and ruin some one's character. We will be willing to lend a helping hand at all times and will do all that is within our power for them.

It is mighty good to have people say of us that we are friends in need and friends indeed, and they will, if we do not think ourselves above them. We should use the Golden Rule and do as the good Samaritan did. For an illustration: Once there was a man who had been cast out by all his people and most of his friends because he drank. One day a good man came along and said, "Hello, my friend," and it drew the man's attention and he said, "Look here, did you call me friend?" Those words thrilled the heart of the man so much—to think that there was yet some one who cared, and he resolved to be a better man! That kind word that was spoken caused the man to reform. So it is with us. We do not know what time we are going to say some encouraging word that will help someone. Therefore, let us always be scattering seeds of kindness as we pass along the way, for "the pleasure of many may oftimes be traced to one, and the hand that plants the acorn shelters armies from the sun." If we have the love for our friends that Christ has for us, we will be willing to lay down our lives for them, and we know no man can have a greater love than this.

I am sure we all have thought of these things before, but let us keep them fresh in our minds, and God help us that we may be real friends to everybody.

LOIS CALHOUN.

WORLDLY MINDEDNESS

Every Christian ought to know and find his place, whether in the church or in the home, on the street or anywhere he may chance to be. If people do not know that we love God I do not believe that our Savior will own us before the great Heavenly Father, Who knows the very secret thoughts of every man. God cannot be deceived. He is not mocked. One can not have a form of religion. We must love Him with all our hearts, and our neighbors as ourselves. Love is the fulfilling of all law. We have good preaching and we do not believe and heed because we do not love. We go into the house of worship talking about our business and the things of the world, and we hear the good songs and prayers, and a good sermon by a good man—one that loves us and would give his life for us—and then we go out in the same condition. We begin our same gossip. If we are spiritually minded we talk with the Spirit and also walk in the Spirit.

We, at our church (Oak Grove), have had for twenty-five years some of the best men of any church, but we have not gone far enough. We believed and were baptized, but the devil said, "Don't carry your cattle, neither your children," so our church of twenty-five years ago has settled down in times, and tending to their business and filling the pews with the young boys and girls, and soon as we have a couple to get married, they do the same. God told His people not to leave a hoof behind. Dear brother pastor, tell us a remedy. When we are lost we want some one to tell us the way, and we want a light. If our church has no light, how can we find the way out of darkness into the light? We need to be told more of the baptism of the Spirit and the power to come into ourselves. If our church has lost its power, it becomes as weak as the world. If our pastors and church members talk and do as the world, we ought to be cast out.

MRS. R. N. MURPHY.

THE LITTLE "DAVID" OF JOURNALISM

Who can measure the power for right or wrong our newspapers wield? There are a few really great independent papers in the world. But in thinking of the average metropolitan daily, I am invariably reminded of a Joseph's-coat-of-many-colors—with no Joseph inside the coat; or varying the metaphor, I am reminded of the voice of Jacob, the hand of Esau, and the silver of Judas Iscariot. To put it in a word, most newspapers certainly "yawp" too much for the standing room they do not pay for.

But there is another type of journalism for which too much cannot be said. I mean that large number of denominational and undenominational Christian weeklies. They are the salt of our journalistic earth. Most of them are published at financial loss; a few with perhaps a slender margin of profit. Let this be said to our shame! Without the inspiring tides of idealism constantly poured into the world's life by our Christian editors, we should suffer untold loss in our politics, schools, homes, and churches. They are solvents of civilization. They clear the atmosphere. They lift discussions out of partisan muck up to the prophetic mountains.

I think every man who reads his partisan daily—Republican, Democratic, Socialistic—would greatly profit by seriously reading some one of the fine and definitely Christian weeklies. They are an antidote to rabid nationalism; they are an offset to violent partisanship; they foster an atmosphere of brotherhood and world-vision.—Rev. Frederick F. Shannon, D. D., in Western Christian Advocate.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

EASTER OFFERING APPEAL

Easter comes this year at one of the most beautiful seasons we have during the entire year. It is just as we emerge from the cold and disagreeable winter months and walk out into the sunshine of spring. The forest will be putting on its new dress of green. The apple trees will be in full bloom of white and pink, and the peach trees will be in their full dress of blushing pink. The frogs will be sitting on the banks of the ponds watching the minnows play, and the birds will be singing in the trees. The beautiful warm sunshine will make us all feel good and happy, and we will want to join our voices with the melody of the birds and sing praises to Him Who gave life to us all and made us a beautiful world to live in. The beautiful surroundings and the songs of the birds on all sides will make us want to do something to bring to ourselves the consolation of bringing joy and happiness to those who have not the joy in life that we may have.

It will be a most opportune time to make an offering for the Christian Orphanage—an offering to help give the little children a chance in life. To help meet the crying need of the many who are now pleading for a home in our institution. It is our annual opportunity of helping the fatherless and the widows in their distress. We ask you to make your offering as liberal as possible.

We want to ask each church and Sunday school to make this Special Easter Offering on or near Easter Sunday, and make it as liberal as possible. Remember we had so many rainy Sundays during the Thanksgiving offerings that many churches had small congregations and the offerings were small. Many little children are crying to us for help. We have the room if we can get the funds. Remember when you contribute to this offering that you will be helping some little helpless child. We want to raise for our Special Easter Offering the sum of Three Thousand Dollars. If you will do your part—if you will see that your church does its part, we will reach it. Help us to reach it. This is your Orphanage. You have a duty—you have this privilege to help. Envelopes have been mailed to every Sunday school superintendent in the Southern Christian Convention. Please use them to best advantage.

CHAS. D. JOHNSTON, Supt.

LETTERS FROM THE COUSINS

DEAR UNCLE CHARLEY: I am a little late with my dime this month. I hope you and your little folks are all well. Glad to see the spring coming. My little sister and I go to Sunday school at New Providence Christian church. We like to go every Sunday. Miss Grace Piper is our teacher, we like her fine. She gives us little ribbon bows every Sunday. When we get ten she gives us a prize. Enclosed you will find our dimes. With love to all.—Altha and Kendall Rich, Graham, N. C.

We like to work for a prize, don't we? We give our little children $1.00 when they average 95 on their studies for the month. Eight got the prize last month.—"Uncle Charley."

DEAR UNCLE CHARLEY: I am a little girl five years old and I want to join the Band of Cousins. I often think of the little orphans and wish I could visit them. I am the only one at home with mother, as my older brothers and sisters go to school. So I help mother feed the chickens, wash the dishes, cook, and lots of other little things, and sometimes go out for a walk. I am sending a dime for the Cousins and hope they are all well. With love to you and the children.—Lyda Janette Carter, Sunbury, N. C.

I wonder if "Uncle Charley" is ahead of you on raising chickens. He has just one hundred little chicks. They are orphans and "Uncle Charley" keeps them in a box and feeds them. They are interesting little things and we enjoy looking at them.—"Uncle Charley."

CHURCH NEWS

NEWPORT NEWS, VIRGINIA

We are breathing a spirit of optimism in Newport News now since the government has said that our town could complete the battleship, West Virginia, and repair the Leviathan. That will mean work for many who this winter have been without employment.

I have now been with the East End church of this city for five months. The splendid fellowship with these dear people has been fine. The Sunday school, with its seventeen classes, is well graded, and faithful superintended by Caleb D. West, who is one of the progressive men of our denomination.

We have the largest Junior Endeavor Society of the Peninsular Union. Our Senior Christian Endeavor Society of 20 members is doing nice work. This month both our Junior and Senior Christian Endeavor Societies won the banner at the Peninsular Union.

Our mid-week prayer service has been on the increase in attendance, as well as our divine services. We have preached this quarter on Stewardship, as well as the continuation plans for the Men and Millions Forward Movement.

Our city is planning a simultaneous revival campaign, April 2-16. All the churches have agreed to participate in the meeting. We are hoping that this will mean a great deal for Newport News, as well as our local church. Rev. O. D. Poythress is to be with us and do the preaching at the Christian church. Our cottage prayer meetings have already begun, and the interest is good.

B. J. EARP, Pastor.

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

The attendance at the services of our church has been hindered since the beginning of the year by a street car strike, inclement weather, and sickness among our members, but notwithstanding that the interest has been good and since the advent of better weather it has increased. We have had five new members to join our Sunday school in the last two Sundays.

Our people enjoyed a good sermon recently by Rev. W. C. Hoover, a member of the State Legislature from Rockingham County. He is an old friend of the writer and a member of the Brethren church, and is deeply interested in interdenominational work. It was a pleasure to have him with us.

The First Christian church, and the Christian denomination, lost a good friend in the death of E. S. Carlton, son of J. W. Carlton. Reared in the Christian Church, but leaving home when a young man and not finding a church of his own denomination, he joined the Methodist Church, but was always a friend of the Christian denomination.

We are planning for our second anniversary service, April 2. We are expecting to receive a number of new members on that occasion.

We hope to begin our building within the next sixty days. Our people are anxious for it and we feel that we are going to have good co-operation.

The pastor was made to rejoice last Sunday at the announcement that two members would give jointly $6,000 on the building fund. Including contributions, subscriptions and appropriations, the fund secured for our church plant has passed the fifty-eight thousand dollar mark, for which we are truly grateful.

There are many members and friends of the Christian Church who are anxious to see a Christian church established in the city of Richmond, and who want the privilege of investing something in it. To all who are thus interested we would say that all subscriptions and contributions should be sent to J. T. Kernodle, 1012 East Marshall street, Richmond, Va., who is treasurer of the building committee.

W. T. WALTERS, Pastor.

3115 Garland Ave., Richmond, Va.
March 14, 1922.

STEWARDSHIP READING CONTESTS AND PLAYLETS

Experience shows that nothing so increases the interest in Stewardship and adds to the number of tithers in any church as a reading contest followed by the presentation of a playlet.

We now publish a pamphlet entitled "Live Wire Reading Contests," also "Thanksgiving Ann" and "Aunt Margaret's Tenth," both in playlet form.

For 20 cents we will send postpaid to any address samples of these, also 21 other Stewardship pamphlets aggregating over 200 pages. This is less than the cost of printing. Please mention THE CHRISTIAN SUN; also give denomination.

SOLEMN VOWS

BRITTLE-ROGERS

J. S. Brittle and Miss Virginia I. Rogers were married at the home of the writer February 28, 1922. The ceremony, which was witnessed by a number of friends and relatives, was performed by the undersigned. The groom is a progressive grocery merchant of Richmond, Virginia.

W. T. WALTERS.

ATKINS-MATTHEWS

Oscar G. Atkins, of Newport News, and Miss Grace May Matthews, of Portsmouth, in the presence of their friends at the pastor's study of the Christian church, Newport News, Va., were quietly united in matrimony on March 17, 1922.

CALLED HOME

FITCH.—J. H. Fitch departed this life March 15, 1922, his age being 64 years, nine months and 25 days. His remains were laid to rest in Mt. Zion cemetery. The funeral was conducted by the writer. He was a member of Mt. Zion Christian church for many years. He was also a deacon of the church. In his death the church lost one of its most loyal and devoted members. We will miss him greatly.

He leaves to mourn their loss a widow and seven children. May the Lord bless them and let His light shine upon them in this hour of need.

J. F. APPLE.

RICHARDSON.—Little Clare Ann Richardson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene C. Richardson, of Suffolk, Va., died February 26, 1922, after lingering sickness. She was one year, one month and 18 days old. She was buried at Spring Hill cemetery, February 28, 1922.

It is always sad to bury little children. Much sympathy is felt for the parents of little Clare, since they have lost a number of dear little ones. Children are loved on earth, but in heaven they are loved more.

Burial services by the writer.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—FOGLEMAN

Whereas, on February 19, 1922, God in His wisdom saw fit to remove from our midst Mrs. Sarah Fogleman, a beloved member of the Pleasant Hill Woman's Missionary Society. Therefore, Be it resolved:

First—That we bow to God's will, knowing that He doeth all things well, and never maketh a mistake.

Second—That we extend to her sorrowing loved ones the assurance of our heartfelt sympathy, that God's richest blessings may be theirs, and that He will sustain them with His love.

Third—That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication, and a copy be spread on the minutes of the Pleasant Hill Woman's Missionary Society.

“How well she fell asleep!

Like some great river, widening toward the sea;

Calmly and grandly, silently and deep,
Her life joined Eternity.”

“DADDY” WATKINS

Engineer Samuel T. Watkins, of the Birmingham Division, who died at Anniston, Alabama, on December 20 as the results of injuries received the day before in the derailment of his train at Tarsus, was a popular and valued employe. His tragic death cut short a useful life which had been devoted to the cause of redeeming and brightening the lives of his fellowmen.

For Engineer Watkins not only was a good engineer and performed his duties in such a manner as to win the confidence and esteem of the officers of the railway, but he was a good man and devoted more than thirty years of his life to evangelistic work among the prisons and missions of Georgia and Alabama. The number of persons converted through all the years of his ministry (as a layman), if the record could be had, would run into the thousands. It is a known fact that fifteen of the firemen who worked in the cab with him were among those converted, and that during the last three years of his life he brought about the conversion of 1,100 persons. The influence of such a man among his fellows was great and he was universally loved and respected.

To this man, the love of a little child meant more than riches. “I would rather have the love and respect of the little children along my run than all the riches of this world,” was the way he expressed it in a conversation several weeks before the fatal accident occurred. His passage through the towns on his run between Atlanta and Birmingham always was hailed with pleasure by the little folk. Among his treasured possessions were hundreds of notes from children along the line, expressing in quaint style their appreciation of and love for the big-hearted engineer who always had a smile, a pleasant greeting, and often gifts, for them.

Mr. Watkins was born at Keysville, Va., on August 26, 1857, and had been in the Southern's service for thirty-seven years. His run was on the Birmingham Division for thirty-one years. Mr. Watkins belonged to a Southern Railway family. His brother, M. Lee Watkins, is a veteran engineer of the Richmond Division; his daughter is the wife of Superintendent M. E. Madden, of the Alabama Great Southern Railroad; and his youngest son, Howard W. Watkins, is employed in the Atlanta general freight office.—Southern Railway News Bulletin, February, 1922.

PROSPECTS BRIGHT FOR THE STATE SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

The outlook is bright for the approaching State Sunday School Convention which will be in session in Charlotte, April 11-12-13, according to communication received from D. W. Sims, General Superintendent of North Carolina Sunday School Association.

Six out-of-state specialists of national reputation have been secured for the program. They are as follows: Mrs. Maud J. Baldwin, Chicago, Ill., Children's Division Superintendent of International Sunday School Association; Dr. H. E. Tralle, Editor.

ONE'S LIFE WORK.

There are some young people who seem to know almost by intuition the life work for which they are destined.

Without going into detail, there are three guiding principles in the choice of a life work which should always be taken into account.

In the second place, the occupation chosen should offer a reasonable prospect of earning a livelihood.

Then, in the third place, a life work should be enjoyable. A person who is really in the right occupation, whether it be teaching, preaching, practicing medicine, editing a paper, tilling the soil, or selling goods, would rather do the work he is engaged upon than anything else.

Unfortunately a great many people are today misfits. They are round pegs in square holes, or vice versa.

To Have or To Serve

By REV. I. W. JOHNSON, D. D.
Suffolk, Va.

ESUS did not seem to concern Himself about what He could have. He had nowhere to lay His head. "The Son of Man came to minister." The dominant passion of this age is to have. A man came to Jesus saying, "What good thing shall I do that I may have eternal life?" Apparently a vital question. This wise, prosperous man seemed to be anxious to do some good thing. But he was more concerned about what he might have as a reward for his work. The reply of Jesus offered him a life of service—not a life of poverty. He evidently did not understand the meaning of "eternal life." Somehow he had heard of this wonderful truth, and the thought seized him, "I want to have that, and I will investigate the way to discover this great blessing." When Jesus revealed to this inquirer the fact that having, and not doing some good thing, was the master passion, and must be surrendered for a life of sacrificial service, the man "went away sorrowful, for he had great possessions." He commanded the man to give; but the command involved more than giving.

Jesus calls today for a consecration which rises above the question, "What shall I have?" The day has come when the pulpit, the press, the teacher and all who help to mould public sentiment should rise above the personal matters of private gain, and become the flaming evangels of that higher type of intellectual, moral, and spiritual life which finds its happiest expression in the larger service for God and mankind. "What shall I have?" is narrow, sordid, selfish, and belittles the real dignity of man. "What good thing shall I do?" is the real question which should spring out of a heart willing to "sell all, and give to the poor, and follow Jesus," if that is the God-given call for life and service.

All-Time Convention President

ABOUT a year ago THE SUN suggested that the time had come when we should employ an all-time president for our Southern Christian Convention. With the time approaching for a meeting of this body, we repeat, with emphasis, our statement of last year, that such a step deserves more than a passing consideration. It deserves prayerful consideration, and we trust that every delegate will endeavor to think through the advantages of such a change and go to the Convention prepared to lift a voice and cast a vote in favor of such an arrangement.

The business world demonstrates beyond a reasonable doubt that any enterprise must be headed up by someone who is constantly on the job. The every-man's plan of doing things can no longer suffice in an age like this.

The position of president of the Southern Christian Convention amounts to little beyond that of a presiding officer for three or four days every two years. We have always harnessed a busy man and placed him in the position, and his only recourse to the public is by correspondence, which, at best, is very unsatisfactory in Church affairs.

So often we are inclined to condemn some church, or group of churches, for their lack of doing things. No church wilfully neglects its duty. Churches and individuals, as a rule, advance in the same proportion as they are led. So often the pastor is blamed for a certain showing in his church, or churches. We expect the pastor to do everything, and such an expectation is unfair.

Our Convention president has the objective of the whole denomination; and such an official can do more with a local church in getting it to line up with the denominational program than any one else. The president of our Southern Christian Convention is our highest official, and our people recognize and appreciate this; wherever such a personage shall go among us the doors of our churches and homes will be open to him.

The secretary of some department of the Church will never be able to unify the churches into one strong group like a man who must think in terms of the Church as a whole. The president of our Convention is in position to lead the people in a unified body as no other can do.

We have worked at long range too much. The editor of THE SUN cannot secure subscriptions by correspondence; the president of our College accomplishes little through correspondence as compared to personal solicitation for students; our Orphanage superintendent paves the way for new, enlarged, and happier givers wherever he goes to tell of our Orphanage and its great work.

THE SUN is not alone in its opinion that the time has come when we should have an all-time president. We have been endeavoring to get the pulse-beat of the people on this subject during the past two years, and we speak for many of our leaders, if not all, when we say that the approaching Convention should seriously consider this matter.

There may be objections offered. One will be as to from what source we may be able to derive the salary. With our president among the people, the increased attendance, increased offerings, and increased interest will amount, in dollars alone, to ten times a handsome salary during the first year. Of course, we will not be able to know just what the difference would be without an all-time officer, but any clear thinking person can easily reason this out and see that the proposition will pay, financially, to say nothing of the other things that will be accomplished which are of greater importance than money.

THE SUN, therefore, moves that the Convention consider this subject and elect an all-time president whose term of office shall begin on the first of some month during the good year 1922.

EDITORIAL CAUSES COMMENT

An editorial appearing in THE SUN last week concerning Elon students having a dance in Burlington has caused considerable comment. From many sources—by letter, telephone, and personal interview—we have received words that commend our stand. Some Elon students have resented it, and it would have been a great surprise if they had not. President Harper was away last week, but sent us word as soon as he read the editorial that the matter was being investigated and that the statement asked for by THE SUN would be issued as soon as possible. We also had a similar volunteer message from the Dean of Men, Dr. W. P. Lawrence. In the meantime let all interested be assured that THE SUN has more to say and is prepared to say it.

SENTENCES FROM A SERMON

The windows of heaven are always open. It is the windows of our souls that get closed.

God is not far away, though we represent Him to be by loud praying.

It is a sort of a habit that people have in asking God for everything in one prayer.

God reveals Himself to us in the same proportion that we seek Him.

God is love. Love is unfailing and so God is unfailing. Failure belongs to human and not divine nature.

The longing for heaven will be made the greater if we seek to make earth a little more heavenly.

Three Great Men

I

OME days ago we stole away from the office for a few hours and rode to the capital city of this State, primarily to get away from the routine of the office, and to transact a little business as a side-line. While in Raleigh, by invitation, we called to see Mr. E. B. Crow, whose life-story recently appeared in THE CHRISTIAN SUN. Mr. Crow had asked us to call the first time that we were in his city. As we started into his institution—the Commercial National Bank—we met Crow and knew him by his picture. It was at 12:45 p. m. and he had started to a group prayer-meeting being held in the interest of Gypsy Smith's meeting which was in progress in Raleigh at that time. He invited us to go with him, and we gladly went. We hurried to a class room in the First Presbyterian church, where about twenty-five business and professional men of the city had gathered for an hour's prayer service. Along the street different ones saluted and said, "How are you, Ed Crow?" and "Hello, Ed Crow." We knew then that Crow lived in the hearts of his fellowmen.

When those who met for prayer were called to order, Crow was the first man called upon to offer prayer. This great tithing layman prayed earnestly for his fellow-citizens. But Crow does not end his activity in prayer; he goes out and talks face to face with his fellowmen about their soul's salvation. Crow is the dynamo in the Vanguard Bible Class of the First Presbyterian church, and he loves his work and every one of his nearly two hundred members. He is a prince of a layman, and may God multiply his kind.

II

During our few hours in Raleigh, we chanced to meet again that friend of the farmer, Dr. Clarence Poe, editor of The Progressive Farmer. Poe was born and reared on a farm in Chatham County, North Carolina. He had a dream—a dream to help educate the farmer to do a greater work in farming. The realization of this dream has been manifested in making The Progressive Farmer one of the leading agricultural journals of the world. The paper has a circulation of over 200,000 copies per week. Among the great men of our nation is listed the name of Clarence Poe, who has done so much to bring to the farmers of the South a remarkable degree of knowledge in their line.

III

As we journeyed home that afternoon we met again that much loved man, General Julian S. Carr, who is known the country over. Mr. Carr has just lost a son, besides recently recovering from a serious illness himself. Mr. Carr is a prince among Southern business men. But he is not only a business man in the material world, for he is a business man in Kingdom service. Besides being officially connected with a dozen business concerns, he is prominently connected with that many institutions of his own Church, aside from social and religious organizations not of his denomination.

Mr. Carr takes pride in a very peculiar way in the help which he has given to poor boys and girls. Here is an example about which he told us, as he looked out over the wheat fields on the hills of Orange: Some years ago someone wrote General Carr about a little girl in the eastern part of the State that had been practically forsaken. His big heart could not wait for the slow process of writing, but rather he resorted to means of the telegraph line and wired the parties in authority to send the little girl to him at once. She was sent and Mr. Carr sent her away to a school. She grew into womanhood, receiving her education at Mr. Carr's expense. Years passed on, and one day, as Mr. Carr related to us, he was waiting in a town for a train, when someone touched him on the shoulder. There was the little girl of a few years ago who had been placed almost as an outcast. She took Mr. Carr in her own automobile to see her home and her husband and the institution which they had built to care for nearly fifty worn-out persons. In a very modest manner Mr. Carr related this story, and we saw in his own eyes the joy that had come to him through this little deed, as he would call it.

This story is only one of many that Mr. Carr could tell, if he would. He is more than a business man; he is more than a layman—he is a preacher in a very large sense of the word, giving expression to the gospel of cheer, good-will, and hope.

And we reached home that evening feeling that our association with these three great men had helped to lead us out of the valley and get a view from the mountain top. There are great men all about us—men whose hearts are burdened for the world's good. God prospers them and they return to His cause a fair portion. God has thousands of preachers who wear no long coats, possess no degrees of divinity, and have never been set aside by the hands of men. May their kind multiply and our Lord's Prayer be answered, that the Kingdom may come on earth.

DIFFERENCE IN RELIGIONS

There are yet some in this Christian country who think we might let the heathen alone to get along as they may with their religions. Such people would do well to think over the distinction between religions as pointed out by Dr. A. H. Bradford in these words:

"Christianity is superior to the other religions because it alone identifies religion and ethics. Here I wish to speak with care. I do not say that the other religions ignore ethics, but that in them ethics is not essential. A man may be an orthodox Hindu and treat half his fellowmen as if they were dogs; a man may be a sound Mohammedan and believe that he is justified in killing those who are not Mohammedans; a man may be a Buddhist and at the same time be an adulterer; but if a man treat his fellowmen as if they were dogs, he cannot be a Christian; if he commits murder, even though it be in the name of religion, he is a murderer; until he has repented and forsaken his sin he is not a Christian. Christianity never teaches that if a man holds a good creed he may live a bad life. * * * Jesus identified religion and morality."

SCENES AND IMPRESSIONS IN PORTO RICO

A Diary—Part XXI

(Final Chapter)

By REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.
Field Secretary for Missions

MONDAY, OCTOBER 10.—After a wonderfully weird and spectacular day, spent in watching the mad ocean trying to calm itself after having been beaten into a frenzy by a storm, I had a fine night's rest. The troubled sea had gained control of itself by 7 p. m., and the whole of last night the sailing was calm, and the only sound caught between "naps" was the incessant splashing of the dividing waters against the battered sides of our faithful ship. There was just enough rolling and dipping to really lull and rock one to sleep. I retired at 8:45 p. m., was asleep before 9, and arose at 6:30 this morning. When shall I ever have another such a night? For by 3 this afternoon we are promised a landing. Then, farewell, ships, and seas, and finest eats, and best table waiters, and this life of ease and sleep and idleness!

Had a fine shower bath and ample deck-walking by 8 o'clock to make a grape-fruit, prunes, lamb chops, scrambled eggs, hot rolls and glorious Porto Rican coffee go good. The sea has completely changed overnight. Its color now is an olive green, whereas yesterday it was indigo blue. Evidently the water is not as deep now as that through which we passed yesterday, as the color of the water is due, we are told, solely to the depth of the sea. Is is a clear, cloudless, October day, sweet, wholesome and balmy. It is great to be living on a day—and a sea and a ship—like this. I am feeling fine, am so grateful and happy, and in an expectant mood. We are to see land soon after noon today, and one simply cannot compose oneself on ship when the sight of land is expected. This whole trip has been a marvel and a revelation to me! The ocean is the only place of all the world that man has not defiled and spoiled. The waves, with all their graceful curves and velvet-like formations, are the same now—as pure, graceful, fickle and powerful—as they were on the day of creation. There is nothing to compare with the ocean. It is Nature's grandest and most marvelous spectacle. My nine days on its kindly bosom have been days of pleasantness, plenty, and comparative peace. The sea has been good to me, and I shall cherish in my heart naught but the kindest consideration for all its gracious favors.

At noon we sight land. This means we are only fifteen miles out. Sailors tell us we can only see an object fifteen miles away at sea; the rotundity of the earth obscures the vision beyond that distance.

MONDAY, 8:30 P. M.—We landed safely and rejoiced to set foot on terra firma once more. We caught a subway near the foot of Brooklyn Bridge, and were whirled underground at a rapid rate through the six or seven miles necessary to reach Pennsylvania Station. Was it not a task, though, for man to tunnel under a great city a distance of seven, eight, ten, twelve miles, a hole wide enough to lay four railroad lines side by side, and deep enough to allow trains of cars, with their engines, and strong enough to hold up the streets and houses and traffic above them! New York is a great and crowded city, so much so that the people and trains travel three deep—beneath the surface on the subway, on the surface in street cars, and high above the surface and over the tops of the houses on elevated railways. Why in the world don't some of these people move and come on "down home" where we have more land, more room, and plenty of fresh air?

Martin and Minton caught an early evening train for their home in the great West, and I got a Pennsylvania at 8:05 for Cape Charles and Norfolk. After a comfortable supper, and a day of jostling experiences, it is pleasant to sit here on a Pennsylvania Pullman and write in my diary at the rate of forty miles an hour. From New York to Cape Charles, Virginia, is a matter of less than ten hours—while one may read or write or sleep as quietly and as comfortable as if at home—and more so. Men have learned to travel by sea and by land in perfect ease and comfort, and while one is being whirled through space at the rate of twenty-five to fifty miles an hour, whether on sea or on land, one is about as safe and secure as one is in one's own home in a country village, and more so than in a great city.

And now, my tell-tale Diary, that I am back in the experiences of every-day travel and routine life, I will count you a closed volume and write—Finis.

March 20, 1922.

A WORD PERSONAL

It was by the merest accident that I kept a diary. Having borrowed a notebook for the purpose after getting aboard ship for the outgoing trip. But I am most grateful for the accident. Very many friends and acquaintances have written me such kind letters of their appreciation for my giving the diary to THE SUN and The Herald, that I feel more than repaid for the little time required in transcribing the lines for the press. Moreover, it has been a real joy to me to do this, because in so doing I lived over again the pleasant experiences of sea travel, and of those happy hours in Edenic Porto Rico.

I am now, and ever will be, most grateful to the Mission Board of the Christian Church for making me go to Porto Rico (for I did not want to go). And I am grateful beyond words to Secretary Minton for providing beforehand for my every want and for planning in detail the entire trip. His is a royal heart and a soul as big as the sea. Brother Martin is a most congenial traveling companion, and added much in a hundred ways to the joys of all the journey. He loves Porto Rico.

and his heart yearns for her moral uplift and spiritual redemption. He seasoned the whole trip with his singular devotion to the country and people we visited.

And I am still thinking of the dear, faithful workers left behind in Porto Rico. Of the Barretts and Miss Williams, who are spending and being spent for the Gospel's sake amid their beloved Porto Ricans, for whose salvation they are pouring out their lives. And for the faithful native workers they have raised up in the Lord, and gathered about them. We of America are not doing what we should do, what we must do for them and for Porto Rico. We must send them helpers. They need them and long for them so much. We must send a medical missionary. We must build that long overdue house of worship at Santa Isabel. We must send out other preachers, Sunday school teachers and religious workers. Other denominations are forging ahead with their work on the island. Where we are sending one, they are sending four and five; and where we are sending hundreds of dollars, they are sending thousands. We now have in Porto Rico three American missionaries, five natives, one kindergarten teacher, thirteen preaching stations, six organized churches, 263 church members, seven Sunday schools, 717 pupils in Sunday schools, five young people's societies, 154 enrolled in these societies, six church buildings and chapels, and our two missionary homes. This is not much; but it is enough to be grateful for, and to encourage to greater and more determined effort. In comparison with results of other denominations this showing seems small; but my conviction is, after a hurried survey of the field, that in proportion to the missionaries we have sent out, and the money spent in Porto Rico, our results are equal to those of any other denomination working on the island. We have everything to challenge us to greater zeal, effort, devotion and contributions to our Christian cause in Porto Rico. Let us pray for Porto Rico, and resolve by the help of God that we will do more than we have been doing for her moral and spiritual redemption and regeneration.

SUFFOLK LETTER

 HE country is overrun by solicitations for money from all sorts of organizations. There is a legitimate request for contributions, but it is within the constituency properly organized and maintained. To organize for a specific purpose and then send out printed or personal appeals for money, does not constitute a legal or moral right to collect funds. And it is not the function of a church to solicit the whole community for help. If ten congregations in one city were to appeal to the whole community for aid it would mean ten calls upon the same people for money. A local church has no more right to appeal to the community to help build a church than a citizen has to beg money to build him a better house for his family. The church has a right to solicit help from its own membership and the people affiliated with the congregation. Still further, it may be said that one congregation has no legal or moral right to appeal to another congregation of the same denomination for funds to aid in their legal work. Each congregation contributes to Home Missions, and any appeal from a local congregation should be made to the proper Board for any needed help. There is an ethical principle involved in the matter of "raising money" that should be observed. As great an organization as the Federal Council violates this principle in its methods of raising money. The thirty constituent denominations which compose the Council are assessed, on the basis of membership to care for the regular financial obligations of the Council. In addition to this method, which is perfectly legitimate because the constituent bodies have representatives in the body, they solicit, through their duly authorized officials, help from local pastors and churches. I recite this to show that a false standard has been set up in the field of financial operations for benevolent purposes.

The public is tired of drives. The public is not tired of doing its duty, but it recognizes the injustice of independent organizations assuming the right to allot a fixed sum to a community for Y. M. C. A., Salvation Army, Red Cross, or any other good object that might be named. It is time to recognize what is ethical in doing good. Many letters and printed appeals come to me for help in many ways. It is embarrassing, to say the least, either to deny the appeal or to comply on a small scale.

No bad motive is attributed to people who are anxious to do good and go out to ask help for some worthy cause; but little has been said or written on this subject that has tried so many good souls. People ought to "give as the Lord has prospered them," but the present-day method is a dissipation of benevolence, and tends toward the creation of a nation of beggars. The cause may be worthy, the solicitor may be prompted by the best motive, and the giver may be generous at heart; but all this may operate under a custom that is unwise and void of sound ethics.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER

 DUCATION is the process of so training the young that they will be prepared to live with and for each other. Education in this exalted sense is evidently not a matter of books solely, though formal instruction can make its contribution to that end. Every experience of life is influential in motivating conduct for social living.

Religious education is the process of so training the young that they will be prepared to live with and for each other and unto God. Manifestly too religious education is not solely or even largely a matter of precept or formal instruction. Here the method of example, of indirection, is very efficacious. Every experience of life is a challenge to the religious educator properly to motivate conduct in terms of Christian living.

Long before the babe starts to Sunday school it has learned many great principles of life. Not what mother says to baby when she bends over it in loving adoration alone affects its character, but how she conducts herself when she is about the routine matters of the home, how she responds to baby's outbursts of crying, how she feeds and adorns it—these too fatally enter into the texture of its developing character. Nor can father escape his dual responsibility with mother in the Christian nurture of their child. Parenthood is the greatest calling in the world. To neglect its responsibilities is to defeat civilization. God expects parents to devote themselves to their children, as He has devoted Himself to the human race. How patient, how loving, how forgiving a Father He is! Let us learn from Him the way of parenthood.

There is a lot of pessimism in the land today respecting the decay of parental authority and the disobedience of children. Parental authority is never an end in itself, nor is obedience. Resistance to tyrants is a Christian duty. Many homes are little autoeracies, or at best dual monarchies. The ideal home is a democracy and in it should be regnant the golden rule of democratic organization—that the strong should bear the infirmities of the weak. Parents exist for their children, not children for their parents. Our first duty is to the young life entrusted to our care, that we may fashion it in the ways of the Lord, bring it to maturity in His nurture and admonition. Our homes are the most potent agencies of our social order in the winners of the young to God. These homes of ours must never degenerate into mere private hotels. They are the experiment stations wherein manhood and womanhood of the Christian type are to grow and fruit. They are increasingly to become the seminaries of Christian character where the offspring of two hearts that love shall as rapidly ripen into Christian citizenship as the sparks fly upward.

But how? Christian idealism must be the fountain source of such devotion. Fathers are all too prone to become absorbed in the business or profession of life, mothers in the purposeless innocence of social engagements. The fires of Christian idealism will need to be constantly replenished or their lives will find their chief concern in other things than in their divine calling to Christian parenthood. This idealism may be fed by Sunday school or the preaching service. It may be ministered to by Chautauqua lecture courses. One of the most certain methods, experience teaches, of keeping it alive, of-kindling it to white heat, is to provide religious books for the home.

What a wealth of such books greets us on every hand today! No man can read them all. He ought not to try. Let him select one or two allied departments, and let him buy a book in those lines as frequently as he can afford. It is a good plan to buy and read a religious book a week. By all means buy and read one such book a month. Provide for it in the family budget. Then read and discuss the books so purchased. The home that makes place in its program for the reading and discussion of religious books will have gone a long way toward keeping Christian idealism as its strong ally in Christian nurture. Such a home will foster a suitable atmosphere for the production of Christian character. From such a home spiritual leaders will arise with ideals for the advancement of the Kingdom and with the spirit and zeal to achieve it. The home that shall produce a Moses for the next generation will have contributed most in its day to the realization of God's eternal purpose in the world. How we need such homes! How the Kingdom is retarded for the lack of them!

Christian idealism in the home—that will make possible the Kingdom's advancing program. The price of such idealism is—forget it not—the mastery of religious books, books that interpret the Christian gospel to the day wherein God has ordained that we should live. Forget not to provide regularly, systematically, for the purchase and mastery of such books. They are part and parcel with a worth-while program of religious education in the home.

CATHOLICS VS. PROTESTANTS

HAVE no thought of coming to the defense of the unusually able article from the pen of Rev. H. Shelton Smith, in The Herald of Gospel Liberty, as referred to in a recent issue of THE SUN, by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, for the splendid article in question is its own defense. But because of the unfavorable reaction of our dearly beloved Brother Atkinson to the article, as expressed in his criticism on the subject: "Why Not All Join the Catholics Then," I want to call attention to the misinterpretation Dr. Atkinson gave certain statements in Brother Smith's article. I have no doubt that Brother Smith will write explaining Dr. Atkinson's misinterpretation. But I wish to write so as to show that Brother Smith's meaning was clear to most of his readers. If it were not for the fact that Dr. Atkinson is one of the best friends I have I would not feel free to write on this topic in this connection.

Dr. Atkinson gives his chief criticisms to Bro. Smith's statement in quotation of the Catholic Church's challenge to the world: "Give me the child until it is seven years old, and I will give him back to the world and he will always be a Catholic," and Brother Smith's answer to this contention,—"Precisely because that Church knows the secret of Christian nurture, and keeps the child saved from the day of his birth," etc.

Dr. Atkinson interprets Brother Smith as meaning that the Catholic Church thus saves the child to the Kingdom, and therefore, Dr. Atkinson takes exception with the contention, as all Protestants would if that had been Brother Smith's idea. But that interpretation I am sure is the very, very farthest from Brother Smith's meaning, and from the interpretation that most readers gave the statement.

Personally, the meaning seemed perfectly clear to me that Brother Smith meant that by the program of religious education the Catholic Church kept the child saved to the Catholic Church, from the beginning of the child's life on up through the years, and that if the Protestant Church had an adequate system of religious education for the youth, and appreciated properly the importance of the first seven years in a child's life, that the Protestant Church could also save its children to the Protestant Church, the which it has not been doing. But instead, the Protestant Church has been allowing more than 70 per cent of her Sunday school children to go out into the world with no religious connection whatever.

A layman just now came into my office, and I read the paragraph in question from Brother Smith's article, and asked him what he thought the writer meant. His answer was prompt:—"He means that the Catholic Church in that way saves the children from the beginning of their lives to the Catholic Church." I think that most of the readers thus got Brother Smith's meaning.

This simply shows how easy it is for us all to be misunderstood, and how easy it is for people to give our statements interpretations absolutely contrary to our thought and meaning.

I secured the article in question from Brother Smith for the Evangelism Issue of The Herald of Gospel Liberty, and the numerous letters I have received from men all over the Brotherhood, North, South, East, and West, and from leaders of other denominations, expressing their high appreciation of Brother Smith's scholarly article on "Evangelism Through Education," is evidence of the merit of the article. Several of our leaders stated that they believed it was the most comprehensive pronouncement on the relation of Religious Education to Evangelism that they had ever read.

WORLD FEDERATION

Two years ago when our Washington congregation affiliated itself with the Federation of Churches in this city it elected me one of its representatives and consequently it was my great privilege to attend the annual dinner and business meeting of the Federation held in the assembly room of the Raleigh Hotel on Wednesday evening, March 15.

Dr. Hugh Birkhead, Rector of Emmanuel Protestant Episcopal Church of Baltimore, Md., was the principal speaker for the evening. His subject was: "World Federation."

Among the statements he made which impressed me most were the following: "Christ advocated world federation when He said: 'There shall be one fold and one shepherd.'" "The world is no longer bound together by wire, by fast sailing vessels, by express trains, etc. We are bound together by the air we breathe." He then cited the aeroplane, and the wireless telegraph and telephone.

"America is sitting in a room, the walls of which are conveying the peoples of it are being drawing closer together.

"America is being asked of God one question: 'Will you expend your intelligence, your wealth, for the world or for self?'"

LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT TO RESUME

The outlook is for a resumption of the activities of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. Quiescent since the inauguration of the Interchurch World Movement, in order to cause that organization no embarrassment in undertaking the large task which it had set itself to do, the time now seems ripe for renewing the activities at that time laid aside.

With this conviction, a group of laymen in the Central West are calling a Missionary Conference in Chicago, May 3 and 4 for the purpose of facing frankly the present situation in order to ascertain the mind of the laymen of Protestantism with reference to the part they want to take in the type of work which the Laymen's Missionary Movement inaugurated and carried on so efficiently for so many years.

The conference will be strictly unofficial and self-entertaining. The program will call for the reviewing of the present missionary situation, the considering of the increasing need for unofficial and friendly association in the missionary work of the Church which affords opportunity for the cultivation of a spiritual co-operation among Christian forces, particularly in respect to the development of missionary vision and purpose, and the ascertaining quite definitely the policies on the basis of which the Laymen's Missionary Movement may be of the widest and greatest service. The Conference will be held at the Hotel LaSalle.

REVISED GOVERNMENT AND PRINCIPLES

The Revision Committee of the Convention has passed upon the revised Government and Principles of the Christian Church and is soon to authorize the publication of the new edition. The Convention's Publishing Agent desires to ascertain something of the demands for the book so as to know how many copies to have printed.

It does not seem practical at this time to issue the new book in more than two bindings. The cloth binding will sell at 75 cents the copy and the morocco binding at $1.50 the copy. In order to ascertain the demand for the new book at these prices we will thank those who care to place order to fill out the coupon below and return to us at an early date.

BLOWING BUBBLES

While Betty was blowing soap bubbles one day,
 A dear little fairy came walking that way;
 So tired was she,
 And, as Betty could see,
 Just as footsore and sad as a fairy could be.
 "O, please," said the poor little thing in dismay,
 "Have you seen a fairy coach passing this way?
 Oh, isn't it late?
 And I really can't wait,
 For I'm due at the Fairy Queen's party at eight."
 "Don't worry, dear Fairy," said Betty with pride,
 "I'll blow a soap bubble if you step inside.
 It will take you straight there,
 Right up through the air,
 And you'll get to the party with time and to spare."
 —Ethel Talbot, in Exchange.

DANGER IN THE STREET

When we were young the street was a fairly safe place for play. Very few streets or roads were improved, and the soft, dry dust provided a soft cushion for the bare feet in summer, while the lumbering horses gave generous warning to step aside ere there was danger. Today it is altogether changed. The automobile, moving with the speed of the railroad train, turns the public highway into a track of death, while city streets are at times almost impassable.

It is the children who suffer most. Naturally careless, they often tempt accident. In the streets of Philadelphia there were one hundred and thirty-one children killed last year. So serious was the situation that the superintendent of the public schools issued the following order to the school children while going to or coming from school:

"Always cross at the regular crossing and not between streets.

"Where the traffic policeman is in control, never cross except when the stream of traffic has stopped.

"Always look both ways before crossing a street.

"Never steal rides on passing vehicles."

To these rules, more or less applicable to boys and girls alike, Superintendent Broome has added a fifth edict, directed particularly to girl students: "Never accept an invitation to ride with a driver whom you do not know."

We reproduce these orders here, believing they will apply to the children of every city and town in America. The probability is that automobiles will not be forced to reduce their speed, and with the rapid development of our improved roads throughout the country the danger involved in street crossing will grow rather than decrease. Only one thing remains, and that is for children to employ care in crossing a public street.

Our children cannot be too cautious in this matter.

WOMEN AND THE KINGDOM

DELEGATES TO THE WOMAN'S DISTRICT MISSIONARY MEETINGS

The women of the North Carolina Board, Mrs. W. H. Carroll, President, Burlington, N. C., are exceedingly anxious to have large delegations present at each of the meetings appointed. If any pastor or CHRISTIAN SUN reader does not have in mind the place or date of these meetings, the same can be found in last week's CHRISTIAN SUN. The women are exceedingly anxious that as many as possible of our people, especially the women and young people, shall hear Mrs. Morrill and Miss Hedgepeth. To this end they ask not only that Woman's and Young People's Missionary Societies send delegates, but churches without Societies shall elect and send representatives and that Sunday schools elect good delegations of their young people to attend. The program gives promise of unusual worth and interest, and every church and Sunday school should take advantage of these meetings. One pastor writes to inquire if men are allowed. They are, and are urged to be present, and the women certainly expect all pastors in each district to be present and have some part in the program of the day.

THIS SOCIETY MAKES READY

The Woman's District Missionary meeting for the Halifax, Va., district convenes with the Virgilina Christian church, Thursday, April 20, at 10 a. m. Of this meeting Mrs. C. E. Newman, of Virgilina, writes: "I am very glad the Woman's Missionary Rally will be with us. As Mr. Newman wired, we will serve free lunch. Moreover, anyone wishing to stay overnight will find our homes open and a welcome awaiting them. Or, if to make connection, any should come the evening before, they will be cordially received and cared for. Our Missionary Society is working with more interest and enthusiasm than usual." This is good news indeed, and Mrs. W. J. Pierce, Superintendent, News Ferry, Va., is exceedingly anxious that all the pastors of our churches in Halifax County, Va., also our Danville church and Lebanon church, Semora, N. C., shall have delegates present, not only from their Missionary and Young People's Societies, but from their churches and Sunday schools as well.

OPTIONAL PROGRAM FOR THE WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETIES FOR APRIL

OTHER SUNDAY SCHOOLS ENTER THE LIST

Our Sunday school of the First Christian church, Portsmouth, Virginia, has joined the ranks of Sunday schools giving one Sunday's offering a month to missions, and under date of March 27 sends a check for $39.11 to cover their first payment in this behalf. This indeed is encouraging, for we know it means bigger things for our work and better things for our Sunday schools. “Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also.” As our Sunday schools put their treasure in missionary work their hearts will go there also, and our young people in the Sunday schools will begin to learn invaluable lessons of missionary work.

Pleasant Union Sunday school, Harnett County, N. C., reorganized on Sunday, March 26, and, wisely, elected a Missionary Superintendent, who, on the Sunday they make their offering to missions, will make a brief missionary talk or give a brief missionary program.

Piney Plains Sunday school has recently voted to give one Sunday's offering a month to missions. We are most happy to see the list of schools doing this good thing constantly increasing. Some of the schools make this a most valuable day and the offering exceedingly gratifying.

A check of $20.28 comes in this mail from our Rosemount Sunday school, as their one Sunday a month offering for February and March. And in the same mail comes a money order for $11.40 from our new Sunday school, Elm Avenue, Portsmouth, this being their offering for February and March.

Many other schools are equally as liberal in their monthly offering and are doing valuable work in sowing missionary seed and cultivating the missionary spirit. I am hoping that the day is not far away when all our Sunday schools will fall in line with this wise plan that our Southern Christian Convention has adopted for developing missionary interest and increasing missionary offerings.

OUR RICHMOND CHURCH GOES FORWARD

Rev. W. T. Walters, pastor, sends the following:

To the Members and Friends of the First Christian church:

With the return of spring and fair weather, there is an increased interest in our church work. We had a good interest last Sunday and one new scholar in the Sunday school.

The pastor was rejoiced to learn that two members together are going to make a contribution of $6,000 to the building fund. We have received on the church lot and building fund to date in cash, subscriptions and appropriations, more than $58,000. I am sure we are all encouraged over this beginning. Let us set ourselves to the task of building up our congregation this month, and try as far as possible to meet all back obligations, and where possible, assume new ones. A conscientious co-operative effort on the part of everyone will soon result in a church building of our own.

Let us do our best to work up large crowds and a good interest in our three special meetings:

1. Evangelistic services March 26.
2. Quarterly business meeting March 29. We hope to have a blue print of our new church to show at this meeting.
3. Anniversary services April 2, at which time new members will be received.

We have every good reason to be encouraged over the prospect and progress of our Richmond church.

A great deal of praying reminds us of a steamer in a perpetual fog—their foghorn is forever wide open. Lots of poor souls live so near the bogs that they have need to blow their foghorn all the time. There is a blessing in it, after all. The other fellow can steer his boat around the other way. No wonder some souls are lonely! The perpetual howl of their foghorn makes one keep out of the range of even “speaking” distance.—Texas Christian Advocate.

EDUCATIONAL

THE FIRST BUSINESS OF A CHRISTIAN COLLEGE

How are educated youth to be saved from the futility and frivolity which beset their lives, and be fitted for a career of usefulness to themselves and society? In the dearth of constructive ideas on this question, a new voice will be welcome.

In his inaugural address as president of the University of Chattanooga, Dr. Arlo Ayres Brown did not discuss the difference between the Christian college and other colleges—he did a better thing, he exemplified it! He plunged straight down to the fundamental reason for the weaknesses in the character of the youth of today, as shown by the study of the religion of young men in the American armies in the World War, and demonstrated the supreme duty of the Christian college to remedy that defect by inculcating in its students those motives which produce the highest types of human character.

In an inaugural, whose title, "Motivation in Education," suggests a technical treatment which is quite foreign to its style, President Brown holds up three motives as desirable in the education of a college student: "A passion for thoroughness in whatever task he undertakes, a passion to discriminate right from wrong, and a passion for unselfish service." Few will deny that such motives, whether operating in or out of college, constitute a formula for successful living. President Brown pointed out certain ways in which the teaching and example of the faculty, and the influence of the extra-curricular activities of the students might be made to foster such motives. But the culmination of his argument was the one which deserves the consideration of every educator. He advocates as a means of developing these high motives from which character is built: "Direct instruction in the materials which historically have been most effective in inspiring the two essential motives." In other words, he recommends the study of the Bible and other religious materials, "not because they contain a great deposit of helpful experiences which occurred in the past, but because they are more calculated to make a man want to do right and want to serve his fellows than any other curriculum materials that are known."

It will be admitted by anyone conversant with the facts that "religious materials," once so powerful in American education in public schools and in the higher institutions, have in the past two generations been crowded down, if not crowded out. Yet President Brown well says: "We cannot hope to maintain long the present amount of interest in religious sanctions for conduct, unless the generations to come learn more about the actual facts of religion than they know today." Those who lament what has been called the waywardness and wildness of the rising generation should ponder well this educator's remark: "If we are failing in any degree to develop right motives in our students, it may be in part due to our keeping them in ignorance of the resources which have inspired the greatest number of people to right living and unselfish service for the past two thousand years."

And so President Brown proposes that the college student in one college at least shall take the facts of the Christian religion into his philosophy of life. He will face the subject in the curriculum as he faces science, and will put his mind, under the direction of competent and inspiring teachers, to the study and analysis of "the movement which has named the era in which we live, the movement to which the world seems to be pinning its hope of world-wide happiness." He calls for teachers who have been trained in college and normal school to appreciate the capacity of Christianity to develop right motives. "Concentrated attention upon the development of right motives on the part of all the educational institutions of America would set forward the progress of the world by a great leap in the next twenty-five years."

A great many earnest people are expressing concern for the conduct of the rising generation. So many are suggesting any practical method of substituting steady purpose for the prevailing frivolity, altruistic service for destructive self-indulgence and a living Christianity for pagan indifference to an inspiring faith. It is a distinctly helpful sign that a young college president, just entering upon his life work, and graduating from a period of brilliant service in the field of religious education, ventures to say, and to say with boldness and confidence, that now as always motives make men, that Christian motives make the best men, and that it will be his aim as the head of a Christian college to plant and cultivate such motives at the center of the lives of all the young people who resort to Chattanooga to prepare themselves for life.—Christian Advocate (New York).

"A FAMILY ALTAR IN EVERY CHRISTIAN HOME"

"The Family Altar League," a non-sectarian, international organization which has been laboring for fourteen years in the interests of daily Bible reading and prayer in the home, announces in the Annual Report that in 1921 it passed the 50,000 mark in the number of homes in which it has been instrumental in establishing family worship. The League, in celebration of this attainment of its goal of years, has embarked on a new era of service to be made world-wide, with expanded facilities and new resources. It has taken its new motto, "A Family Altar in Every Christian Home." Its quota for 1922 has been set at 100,000 new homes maintaining the family altar.

As a part of its service it is prepared to aid churches anywhere in local campaigns for establishing family worship. An extensive literature on the subject is printed for distribution. It invites pastors to make free use of its resources, writing for samples of the materials being published. Sermon material is also supplied. Address Family Altar League, Marquette Building, Chicago, Ill. Rev. William E. Biederwolf, the noted evangelist, is President, and Rev. William Matthew Holderby, is General Secretary.

THE BULLETIN

Rev. R. F. Brown writes that he has been sick, but is out again, we are glad to state.

Dr. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., is taking a much-needed rest for three months. Dr. Rowland is a tireless worker and richly deserves the three months' vacation so generously given by his church.

THE SUN'S Editor had the pleasure last Sunday of worshipping with the congregation of New Providence church, Graham, N. C., Rev. S. L. Beougher, pastor. Brother Beougher is doing a good work for the two Graham churches. He is a splendid preacher, a good pastor, and his people love him.

TO OFFER AMENDMENT

Rev. W. G. Clements, Morrisville, N. C., authorizes us to say that he will offer the following amendment to our Church Government at the next Convention: "That the Executive Committee of a Conference shall be Conference Elders.

GETTING TO THE CONVENTION

Next week THE SUN will carry a train schedule that will be of practical benefit to many who will go to the Convention. Look for it. And in the meantime, if any delegate desires full information as to schedule and fare from his or her town, let THE SUN'S Editor know and he will secure such information gladly. We are ready and willing to serve.

THE EDITOR AND A DECISION

THE SUN'S editor has decided that when he hears a fellow talking that he will never own an automobile, never drive one, and that they are a curse to the world, you had better put it down that such a person is sincere, but just does not know what he is talking about.

What did we see some weeks ago? Our good friend, Capt. W. H. Turrentine, whose love for and knowledge of the Christian Church are not excelled; a man whose whole life has been along paths of good deeds; a man whose life has been spent in following the slow gait of mules and horses. The sight of dear Brother Turrentine was not right without the presence of that dear and devoted mule. That mule was as faithful in coming to church as was his master. Yes sir, we came very near being run over by a brand new Ford one morning being driven by the Captain! Had we been on police duty we would have arrested him for speeding.

And today, as we hurried home, trying to make up a few lost minutes by using more gas, it was an almost vain attempt of ours to pass another brand-new John Henry. Could we believe our eyes? Hardly! And there in that Ford was our good friend, Rev. Jeremiah

W. Holt, who believes that the former is good enough for him, a-riding and a-driving at the city's speed limit rate.

Well, sir, look our for the Editor and Brother Holt at the Convention! Going to go and Brother Holt is a-going to drive that car. Look out for us—we'll be there.

FOLLOW UP WORK

A Church had a meeting which, while good, was not considered very successful, as only eight cards were handed it. But so faithful was the work done in following up the meetings that within a few months fifty members were received. Oftentimes deep impressions are made at a meeting, but earnest work is needed, which is often greatly successful. So has it often been with such meetings as those of Billy Sunday. Those men who content themselves by saying that not many cards were received by them had little to show for the meetings. Those who took the meetings as a starting point for real evangelistic effort and went to work and kept at work had very much to show for it as the months went by.—Herald and Presbyter.

THE INFLUENCE OF GOOD WOMEN

The helpful influence of good women has been recognized in all ages. When they unite in some same effort for the betterment of society or the uplift of the fallen or the reform of some harmful habit or fad, the results are always salutary. Twelve hundred women who recently held their first annual convention have opened in Washington a service school for women, with Dr. Charles P. Neall, Commissioner of Labor under President Roosevelt, Taft, and Wilson, at its head. The same women have set to work to protect the sanctity of marriage and of the home, to restore conventions of dress and of action among women, which always have been intrinsic factors in the influence of good women, and to induce editors of newspapers not to print unimportant and improper details of crimes, especially when committed by women.—Acton Free Press, Canada.

PRESENT-DAY EVANGELISM

"Hippodrome evangelism" is the apt term that has been employed to designate the present-day Evangelistic Campaign. Campaigns of the sort designated by the foregoing are by no means new, neither have they reached the end of their activities. They will continue, if not under the auspices of the regularly organized Christian Churches, then as outside religious upheavals in the community, because they rest upon a sound psychological basis. The popular appeal of these—oftentimes sensational, if not spectacular, occasions—is practically irresistible. Whenever men fearlessly preach righteousness, accompanied by a religious appeal, they invariably get a hearing. The constant blunder of people in forming their judgments of the permanent value of the great Evangelistic Campaign is to either overestimate or underestimate its true value. The Church should correctly estimate and to that extent employ this agency of the kingdom.—North Carolina Christian Advocate.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON— APRIL 9, 1922

Golden Text: "Jehovah preserveth all them that love Him."
Psalm 145: 20.

Leading Thought: God's purposes and promises will be fulfilled.

This lesson brings the story of how the safety of the kingdom of Judah was threatened because of the wickedness of a woman, while this evil was overbalanced by the good of another woman who preserved the life of her rightful king, Joash. Thus the safety of a whole nation gathered around the fortune of a little child. In seclusion did Jehoshaphat care for her future sovereign. The safety of nations today is likewise gathered around the fortunes of little children. Just as truly do they need to be protected from the modern Athaliahs, who would rob them of their rights as members of the human family, who would press them into factory labor, who would endanger their well-being physically, who would deny them their spiritual heritage. Every child has the right to be "placed in the midst" where Jesus Christ placed him. "The ages are in his keeping; his training is in ours." As you study this lesson telling how God preserved this king of old, may you also consider how you as His servant may help in the great work of saving the modern child for him and preparing that child for the important duties that will challenge his greatest devotion and wisdom in Church and State in the years to come.

"A child more than all other gifts
That earth can offer to declining man, Brings hope with it, and forward-looking thoughts."
—Wordsworth.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC—APRIL 9, 1922 The Master's Invitation.—Luke 14: 16-24; John 3: 16.

The invitation of the Master is a call to a satisfying life. It is said that out in the Western desert there is a plant which is very palatable, but has absolutely no nourishment in it. A person might eat of this plant until he could eat no more and then die of starvation. It is pleasant, but it does not satisfy. Christ's invitation is to an abundant feast. The Christian life satisfies.

The invitation of the Master is a loving invitation. "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son." The greatest evidence of love is the willingness and desire to give. God loves us and is giving us much. He gave us His best. What are we giving to Him in return? Are we heeding the loving invitation of the Master, to give ourselves?

The invitation of the Master admits no excuses. In the light of His presence, our best excuses sound trifling and foolish. It we do not accept His invitation, it is because we really prefer to do something else. Are we truly endeavoring to "seek first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness?"

"Come, ye that love the Lord,
And let your joys be known.

MRS. BULLOCK TO VISIT THE SOUTH

The Board of Religious Education is glad to announce that Mrs. Fred Bullock, of Dayton, Ohio, Field Secretary of the Sunday School Board of the American Christian Convention, is to visit many churches in the Southern Christian Convention during the month of April. With our own Field Secretary, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, she will make a tour in the Far South and in the North Carolina Conference. Sunday school institutes in the Georgia-Alabama Conference will be held at the following points, with an afternoon and evening session at each place: Kite, April 4; Ambrose, April 5; Vanceville, April 6; Enigma, April 7; Richland and Randall's Crossing, April 9. The Georgia-Alabama Sunday School Convention will be held in the Rose Hill church, Columbus, Ga., April 11-13, and following this meeting, other points will be visited.

Beginning April 23, a series of Sunday school institutes will be held in the North Carolina Conference by Mrs. Bullock and Miss Eldredge, and other prominent Sunday school workers. The dates and places for these meetings are as follows: April 23, Sanford; April 24, Ramseur; April 25 (afternoon), Apple's Chapel, (evening), Monticello; April 26, Burlington; April 27, Durham; April 28, Wake Chapel; April 29, Raleigh, and April 30, Henderson. Every day except April 25, when two churches are visited, afternoon and evening sessions will be held. At many of the evening sessions Dr. J. O. Atkinson will deliver an address on "Missions in the Sunday School." Mr. George McCullers, of the Music Committee of the North Carolina Conference, will have charge of the song services. Other officers of the Conference will attend the institutes as possible for them to do so.

The Board urges all of our Sunday school workers to make an earnest effort to attend these gatherings. Mrs. Bullock is well known as a consecrated and efficient Sunday school worker, and we feel that we are very fortunate to have her in our midst, for this time. Come and hear her and gain renewed inspiration for carrying on a greater work in your church and community.

STRIKE OF COAL MINERS

On April 1 a national strike was made among coal mine workers. About 600,000 men are out of employment due to the strike. President John Lewis, of the United Mine Workers, declares that the strikers are prepared to remain on strike for an indefinite period of time.

STEWARDSHIP AND TITHING

SOME DISCUSSIONS BY REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D.

STEWARDSHIP AND TITHING CAMPAIGN

Many of our pastors and interested church workers have taken advantage of the good literature we had for distribution on the subject of Tithing. We have sent this to all who requested, and some to every pastor—with one or two exceptions. We sincerely trust the literature has been distributed, and read to great advantage. This week pledge cards are being sent to all pastors, and to Captains and Women Workers in every church. Both old and new tithers should be asked to sign. During April every one in all our churches should be given a chance to sign as tithers. We only ask that the church membership be given a chance. This is a vital matter of Scripture and we wish all to think and study and decide for themselves.

TITHING PLEDGE CARDS

A packet of pledge cards for tithers has been sent each pastor for use in securing tithers during April. Pastors have been requested by letter to give sufficient cards to Captains and Women leaders in each church that all who will may sign. Two years ago in the tithers campaign 2,500 tithers were secured. If we do our best during April I feel that we can easily double the number secured in the previous effort. There has been much educational work going on and our people in many churches have been studying the Bible for themselves on this vital matter of tithing. Many pastors have taken deep interest not only in distributing the literature, but in urging its reading and in preaching on the subject. We are anxious that all the people in all our congregations have a chance to sign a pledge card as a tither. If any member anywhere wishes a card, or any number of cards to get others to pledge we shall be most happy to supply the number requested. If the pastors will use the cards sent and request others we shall rejoice.

Let's give the church membership a chance to become tithers—co-partners with the Lord in a division of their substance.

CHURCH NEWS

FROM PASTOR JAY'S PEN

These are strenuous days for the church, especially the rural church. The church is being put into the crucible, and the question is, How will she stand the test? Nobody wants to see the church fail or take a backward step, yet many are doing absolutely nothing to prevent such a step but keeping their names on the church roll.

If the church is to come through this crucial test unscathed by shameful retrenchments and scars of unfaithfulness, it will be because the membership individually stands faithfully and loyally by the church and her program. If we put God and the church first, the wherewithal will be provided to take care of all other affairs.

The work at Holy Neck is no exception to the rule; our hope of success and escape from retrenchment lies in the faithfulness and loyalty of the membership. The church can do no more than the membership wills.

Considering the almost impassable condition of the roads throughout the month of February and a good part of March, the services have held up remarkably well, and the past few Sundays have witnessed almost normal congregations and a splendid interest. The choir and others are busy getting ready for the special Easter service, which will probably be held on the Sunday night of April 23.

On the second Sunday in February we began the first of three different series of three sermons each on the subjects, "Stewardship," "The Principles of the Christian Church," and "The Miracles of Jesus." They are being heard with interest.

The ladies of the Missionary Society are planning to have a large delegation attend the Missionary Rally at Bethlehem on April 5.

On account of having no pastor, we have been supplying the Bethlehem church twice a month, second and fourth Sunday afternoons, since Christmas. At a conference held Saturday, March 25, and continued on Sunday, it was definitely decided to proceed with the remodeling of the church, which, when completed, will give the church a fine auditorium and splendid Sunday school rooms and equipment. The cost will amount to twelve or fifteen thousand dollars. The job calls for about 25,000 feet of rough lumber, all of which will be donated by members of the church.

About $300 worth of bricks are already on the ground and paid for, and about $3,000 cash in hand, with probably $10,000 more pledged. This is the evidence of the progress made while Brother E. T. Cotten, the former pastor, was on the field.

The church sees the futility of waiting longer and are now in real earnest to push the building program with all proper haste. On account of a needed rest for Dr. C. H. Rowland, the pastor at Franklin, his church has very graciously given him a leave of absence for several weeks for rest and recuperation. The church is having the morning services supplied by ministers and laymen in a very acceptable manner while Rev. J. H. Lightbourne and myself have agreed to take care of the night services, preaching on alternate Sunday nights. We are also taking care of the work at Mt. Carmel in the same way, as Dr. Rowland preached here twice a month.

The four churches—Bethlehem, Mt. Carmel, Windsor and Mt. Zion—which formerly constituted the pastorate held by Rev. E. T. Cotten, are still without a pastor for the whole field. This is a splendid field and a good people and will take care of a pastor and his family in fine shape. Any minister interested in a good field should get in touch with the chairman of the pastoral committee, Mr. Roberts, of Walters, Va.

CORRESPONDENCE

REMINISCENCES

Dear Brother Riddle:

Long years ago I was preaching in an old shanty of a house where you could run your finger through the floor or walls of the house. I said to the congregation on Saturday quarterly meeting that I could not preach for them longer than that year, unless they built me a better house. The congregation thought it was quite a task, and I asked them to give me a building committee. One brother replied, "What do you want with a building committee when you haven't got a dollar in the treasury?" But I still urged them to give me a building committee. When a motion was made giving me a committee and making me chairman of the same with the privilege of selecting my own committee, I told them I would make the announcement Sunday morning of the names of the committee. This I did. One member was a married man with a family. A second committeeman was a man who was married but had no family. Then I gave the names of five bachelors, making seven in all, when of course my congregation joined in a hearty laugh. Monday morning I called a meeting of my committee at the church and we laid all of our plans, and made our appointments. By Saturday night we had all the logs that we needed at the saw-mill for the building of the church, and everybody in the community with one exception, regardless of denomination, came right to me and said, "What will you have me do?" One was to haul rock for the foundation, sand for the plastering, haul the lumber from the sawmill, and just what I wanted them to do. We at once commenced to build the shanty for curing the lumber. The work commenced at once. The lumber was cured and dressed. The framing was all arranged and the work went forward. I said that we would not paint at once, but a brother member of another denomination who had two members of his family belonging to our church asked me the cost to paint it. I told him the cost and he said, "Go right ahead and paint."

Our house was soon built, completed, painted and plastered, and the rubbish all cleared away. We dedicated it on Sunday morning following. On Monday morning we met at the church and arranged for the settling of every bill, with $120 good subscriptions on hand. Everything was clean and nice on the grounds, and we had a very beautiful house, although it was not quite as large as we ought to have had it.

A strange man came along and asked to be employed as a carpenter. We employed him at a moderate price, and he proved to be one of the best joint workmen I have ever seen. He stayed with us to the close, doing all our nicest work, and behaved himself nicely. He was a good-looking man and had splendid manners. But we never knew from whence he came. We never knew his proper name. He was evidently an escaped goat. When he left we had no idea where he was going. We never heard of him after that.

That year was the sorriest wheat crop year I ever recollect seeing, but I saw an entire change in that community, with the finest crop I had ever seen. I said to a friend of mine, "Be sure to thresh the wheat raised in that community." I saw him after he had done so and he said it was the finest crop he had ever seen, with one exception. He said he had threshed enough straw for him to get a hundred bushels of wheat but he only got forty. I asked him who it was for and he told me the man's name. I said I could not expect a penny from that brother in helping to build the house, not even to board some of the hands. But he was the lone man of all that country who did not help me build and complete the church. He lost about sixty bushels of wheat.

SOLEMN VOWS

Corbin-Liskey

On March 18, 1922, I united in marriage Mr. Joseph R. Corbin and Miss Mae Liskey. The ceremony was performed in my home in the presence of a few intimate friends. The groom is a plumber in Harrisonburg, Va. Mrs. Corbin is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. A. Liskey near New Hope church. These popular young people have many friends who extend heartiest congratulations and best wishes for a happy married life.

CALLED HOME

MORRIS.—The Timber Ridge Christian church lost one of its faithful old members in the death of Alexander Morris. For many years he contended earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and was always at his post of duty whenever possible. Brother Morris was born in August, 1849, and died February 8, 1922, at the age of 72 years and six months. The last few years of his life were spent in Hagerstown, Md., when his death occurred. His devoted wife and other members of his family accompanied the remains to Winchester, Va., where the funeral services were held February 11, 1922, and interment was made in the city cemetery. Surviving besides his widow are six sons and three daughters. Three children preceded him to the Glory land. Truly a good man from us has gone. May younger ones step in to fill his place.

BUTLER.—Miss Nancy Butler died at Lake View Hospital, Suffolk, Va., February 22, 1922, aged 79 years, four months and 18 days. She was a member of Antioch Christian church for many years, and did what she could. She leaves three nieces: Mrs. W. H. Griffin, Mrs. Sarah F. Pope, of Windsor, Va., and Mrs. Sallie J. Cutchins, of Smithfield, Va. One nephew, Mr. Frank Butler, of Norfolk, Va., also survives.

Funeral services were conducted by her pastor and the remains laid to rest in the family burying ground.

RHODES.—Janet Rebecca Rhodes, infant daughter of Hunter and Frances Rhodes, was born December 4, 1921, and died February 23, 1922, aged two months and 19 days. Death occurred at the home of the grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. I. N. Rhodes, in Dayton, Va. The little body was taken to Linville for burial, February 25, 1922, and interred in the Christian church cemetery there. A brief service was conducted by the writer.

CHRISTMAN.—Anne Christman, daughter of Newton and Ella Flack Christman, was born February 17, 1901, and died March 14, 1922, aged 21 years and 25 days.

She was a member of a family of five—three girls and two boys. Two sisters, one brother and mother preceded her in death.

Early in life she professed faith in Christ, but never united with any church, though she possessed many lovable traits of character. One so prominent in her life was her sunny disposition and obedience to parents.

The funeral was conducted from Apple's Chapel March 16 by the writer, in the presence of a large number of friends, and the interment was in the church cemetery.

The many beautiful floral offerings and a large crowd of weeping friends bespeak of the high esteem in which she was held.

May God bless father, step-mother, and brother, who so sorely weep in this hour.

C. E. GERRINGER.

YARBROUGH.—J. C. Yarbrough, of Richmond, Va., died March 15, 1922, at the age of forty-four years. He leaves a devoted mother and many relatives and friends.

Funeral services were conducted by the pastor of Antioch Christian church.

The deceased was a member of the Presbyterian church at Norfolk, Va.

May the Lord bless and comfort the dear mother and loved ones with the hope of meeting again where no sorrow shall ever come or death shall ever enter.

CABLE.—Mrs. Maggie C. Cable died on March 18, 1922, at the home of her sister, Mrs. Henry King, near Burlington, N. C. She was in her 53rd year. She was the daughter of Tom Wilkins and the widow of Milton Cable.

She confessed Christ some twenty-five years ago, and expressed herself as trusting Christ and not afraid to go, as the end of her pilgrimage approached.

The funeral service was conducted from New Providence Christian church, Graham, N. C., by the writer, assisted by Revs. J. W. Holt and S. L. Beougher. Her body was laid to rest in the New Providence church cemetery, where it awaits the resurrection morn.

May the Son of God, our Savior, bless and comfort the bereaved ones.

YORK.—On March 18, 1922, our community was shocked and our hearts saddened by the death of Mary E. York, wife of the late W. B. York. Mrs. York was born in Chatham County at O'Kelley's Chapel on February 18, 1845, being the youngest daughter of Thomas Jefferson Fowler and Aurelia O'Kelly.

She was the last member of a family of eight, five sons and three daughters, all of whom have gone on before her to the home beyond, leaving her to fight the battles of life alone for four years. In her later life she suffered the great affliction of losing her eyesight, but through it all she was submissive and held fast to her faith in her Savior—always looking forward to a triumphant reunion with all her loved ones gone before.

In early life she united with the Church of her choice, which was the Christian Church, but after her marriage to W. B. York she joined the Lebanon M. E. church, and together they labored for the success and upbuilding of Christ's Kingdom. By none will she be more sorely missed than by her adopted daughter, Mrs. T. C. Farrell, and her children.

In her life we found her to be a plain, matter-of-fact, consecrated Christian, always standing for the right and against the wrong. Her father served actively as a minister in the Christian Church for sixty years, and his hands in rearing his family were uplifted in all his laudable undertakings by his consecrated Christian wife.

We commend her spirit to the God Who gave it and Whom she so faithfully served. We will ever cherish her memory here, knowing that our faith has been strengthened by her fidelity and perseverance.

On March 20 her funeral was conducted from the Christian church, Mebane, N. C., by Rev. J. A. Daily, of Fremont, N. C., who came at her request, and her remains were laid to rest beside those of her husband in the town cemetery. X.

STUDENT OPINION

DEPARTED WITHOUT SYMPATHY

At last it seems that the students of Elon have arrived at a point in their upward progress where they will no longer tolerate the ingratitude of a bunch of lazy athletes. That is what we have needed for a long time. It appears that we have turned over a new leaf, and will no longer (as the saying is) allow athletes "to get away with murder."

In the past when someone was debarred from a team student sentiment was so much in his favor that by petitions, or some "hook of a crook," he would eventually be reinstated. But the bigoted athlete who loafes on his job and fails to make a grade, thus making him ineligible for the team, has at last lost his foothold, and student sympathy for him is failing fast. Five men not long since received notice that for failure to make a grade their services were no longer needed on the 1922 baseball team. The sympathy we used to hear for such men has turned to wrath. We are glad that this is so. It speaks well for Elon.

Now, this paper believes in athletics. No one admires a worthy athlete more than we do, and no one gives the team any more whole-hearted backing than we do. But we most certainly do not believe in the athlete who will lie down on his job and flunk most of his subjects just because he thinks his position on the team is so essential to the welfare of the college that he will be allowed to play anyway. The students back such a man on the athletic field to the limit of their resources, and for him to spit in the face of such support as he does when he has himself kicked from the team is nothing short of treason to his teammates and to his fellow students.

We have not heard a word of sympathy for the lost baseball players, and we hope we shall not hear any. If these fellows have the making of real men in them, they will spruce up and regain their lost place in the respect and affection of Elon students. If they are no good at all, they will quit entirely, and we shall let them go without any regrets.—Maroon and Gold, Elon College.

CHILDREN'S SAYINGS

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

The Great Victory

C. B. R.

ASTER SUNDAY! How great and full of meaning are the words! It is the day on which the whole Christian world celebrates the Savior's final victory—the greatest victory. It was His victory over death and the grave. It was, and is, the day of new-born hope for the Church which He gave to redeem humanity from sin.

Easter Sunday looks ahead—looks forward, by the greatest anticipation, to that ultimate victory of faith and power for all them that sleep in Jesus. It is a time when we can boldly ask, already knowing the answer, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? * * *"

Easter Sunday is a time of richest promise, for Jesus said "Whosoever liveth and believeth shall never die." This promise is even fulfilled here in the influence that never dies. The mother secludes herself in a little place called home, but all the while her life's impress is being made upon her children, who make their impress upon the world.

Though buried in a borrowed tomb, Jesus came forth and won the greatest victory of all ages. May we on the glad and happy Easter morn remember that we, too, shall come forth from death's hidden mysteries in celestial triumph, if we but follow, obey, and serve Him.

General Convention of Christian Church

EDITORIAL

OUR HISTORY

In The Sun of March 22 Brother W. E. MacClenny, Suffolk, Virginia, spoke very wisely concerning the history of the Christians in the South. It is a sad commentary upon us that we have not written a history covering our first one hundred years. Sketches have been written, but no real history.

There is one among us who is capable and qualified to do such a work. Historians are scarce, and the Christians in the South should feel proud over the person of Historian Wilbur E. MacClenny. He knows more about the history of the Christian Church than any man among us, and we should take advantage of his ability and put into history our work as a Church. Our leaders need such a book, and most certainly our young men in college should be required to study it as a text-book. There is too much general knowledge these days and not enough actual facts and principles known. Our young ministers do not know the history of the Christian Church, and each year's enrollment seems to know less about our great work as a denomination.

About two years ago we listened to one of the finest papers on the history of the Christians in Virginia by our good Brother MacClenny that we have heard or read on the subject. The paper was heartily approved, and by unanimous vote, ordered to be put into book form. That is the last that we have heard from that, and this serves as an example of how we are interested in our history.

Let our Convention take steps to put our history into readable form. We have the history; we have the man to do it—and we ought to do it.

THE LOCAL VIEW

Every person, and especially every minister, ought to take inventory of himself to see whether his view is only local or beyond his own realm. There are those of us who think only in local terms, work with local methods, and become so absorbed in local affairs that we do not see the denomination as a whole as it functions.

Possibly there are those of us who are not adapted to conditions other than local. For a preacher to be so constituted is no reflection on him. The local work must be done, and if a minister finds that he is best adapted for local work, he ought to work mightily to that end. On the other hand, if a man finds that he is suited to general affairs of the Church he ought to work in that direction as much and as often as opportunities present themselves.

It is often pointed out that such and such a man gets the wrong position in Conference or Convention. A very good way to find out whether such is true or not is to determine whether that individual has only a local view of things or can see the Church at work as a whole. The man with only a local view will never make a leader, while it is equally true that the man with the larger vision—the promoter, the dreamer—will never succeed very well when he is worked in local harness.

Let each of us find ourselves, know where we can work best, and then seek to fill that place full of earnestness, soul, and heart.

BEAUTIFYING THE CHURCH-YARD

With the approach of spring, it is natural that we clean up around our houses, barns and fences. While doing this we ought not to neglect to do something to the church-yard, so as to make it beautiful. A church-yard ought to be one of the most attractive places in the community. If the growth consists of trees only, they should be properly pruned by taking out the dead limbs. Wherever suitable, flowers should be set out and kept cultivated. The cemetery, likewise, should be given attention and so make the grounds about the church beautiful and attractive. It is most unreasonable that we furnish nice homes, handsome school buildings, and fine automobiles for our children, and expect them to have a desire to go to the place of worship on Sunday where the building is dilapidated, the grounds improperly kept, and the place where our loved ones are buried looking like some forgotten place.

UNIFORM CHURCH BLANKS

We have already called attention to the necessity of having complete and uniform church blanks for all the Conferences as well as the Convention. It is very important that the next Convention appoint a committee whose duty it shall be to unify our records so that the compiled information for the Christian Annual may not only be complete, but uniform from the various Conferences. In speaking of church records we want to include letters of membership transfer as well as those records that pertain to the Conferences. Let this matter not be overlooked when the Convention meets.

A GREAT UNDERTAKING

Dr. L. E. Smith, Pastor, Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., recites on page fourteen of this issue an undertaking that is stupendous, yet worth while, and one that will be done. The Sun has concurred in the opinion of others in consolidating two of our Norfolk churches. We have only the facts as presented through this paper and the Christian Annual, and have no doubt that a wise step has been taken. The wisdom of the step, however, will be in the same degree that we adequately build and provide for our people gathered in one flock. Doctor Smith and his people deserve the prayers of the entire Brotherhood that the great undertaking may be completed. Let us pray to that end.

FURTHER SUGGESTIONS

Some weeks ago The Sun asked for suggestions about things that the next Convention should consider. So far the brethren have been very slow to speak. We have already pointed out some things that should be considered and speak of some more in this issue. We have not space to name all these things, but the time is rapidly passing and only a few more issues of The Sun before the Convention meets. There are many other very important things that we have in mind; but as stated before, we shall be glad to hear from the brethren.

TRUSTEES OF OUR COLLEGE

For some time it has occurred to us that the Convention would do well to consider the matter of placing younger men on the Board of Trustees of Elon College. This does not say that there are really any old men on the Board. What we have in mind is that younger men of the college are possibly in closer touch with college life than many of those who are now serving on the Board. We pass this suggestion along to the Nominating Committee of the Convention for whatever it is worth.

It costs more to pass a ton of freight through New York City terminals, encompassing a distance from ten to twenty miles, than it does to haul that same ton of freight from Buffalo to New York City, which is a distance of about 400 miles. Congested transportation in the city causes this striking difference in the cost per mile.

There are more people in New York City than in the whole continent of Australia, which has an area nearly as large as the entire United States.

THANK YOU, GOVERNOR WEST

Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West gives us a straight-from-the-shoulder message in this issue. We thank him for it, and especially for two things: That the Convention should be a deliberative and not a speech-making body, and that if old leaders cannot go forward, get out of the way. Governor, you have said it, and hearty "Amens" will go up in every quarter. Nearly every session of the Convention is so drawn out with long, set addresses that the sessions become boresome—and these addresses are usually by the older members. The public knows so well where it is putting our young men that we need not state here. Yes, brethren, let us sit in council this time and not forget that those who are in attendance have been hearing sermons and addresses during the last two years, and then some.

A COMMON COURTESY

It is a matter of common courtesy that a person should reply to a personal letter if the letter requires or indicates an answer. It is more incumbent upon the receiver of the letter to make reply if there is a stamp or stamped envelope enclosed. It is an easy matter to neglect a thing, but when one person receives a letter from another with postage enclosed, the sender of the letter certainly cannot expect anything less than a reply. It may be that some of our readers are guilty of the very thing of which we speak, but we trust not. We believe that it was Mark Twain who wrote a friend to return his stamp after he had waited a long time for a reply to a personal letter. Somehow we feel that Mark had the right idea.

IS THIS YOUR LAST COPY?

This may be your last copy of The Sun, dear reader, unless you renew. It has already been announced that the present editor of this paper anticipates retiring from the work at the coming Convention. It seems unfair to turn over the work to another with many on the list who have made no attempt to renew, or given reply to our many requests to renew. After this issue we plan to begin to prune the list. We must do it. If you are behind and cannot pay, let us know, and we will endeavor to further indulge you. Please do not blame us if you fail to get your paper next week. To those whom we shall cut off, the editor desires to say good-by, and to assure all of his best wishes. Is this your last copy?

ELON LETTER

AT EASTER the mind naturally reverts to that great fundamental doctrine of the Christian faith, the resurrection of the dead. Did Jesus really rise from the dead? We may be sure that He did because of the fact that His disciples were willing to die for their avowal of it, and this in spite of the prior fact that they did not expect Him to rise and could not understand His meaning when He told them of it. Yet after the event they steadfastly adhered to its proclamation, though they knew that imprisonment and death awaited them for doing so. Surely one of them would have weakened on the question, had it been a fabrication. But every one of them died to substantiate its veracity. Not only so, but the transforming effect it had upon their vacillating characters can be accounted for only on the basis of its absolute truthfulness. Something happened between Calvary and Pentecost to transform unlearned fishermen and taxgatherers into the boldest group of propagandists this world has ever known. That thing was to their minds the indisputable resurrection of their Lord and Master, at least that is what they said it was, and they knew. This argument is unanswerable, but there are other weighty evidences too. We shall attend to them briefly.

And first among these we will note the testimony of the gospel narratives. You cannot read them without concluding that they are accounts proceeding from eye witnesses to the events therein recorded. The accounts differ from each other, showing there was no collusion. The discrepancies between the accounts but strengthen the conviction that they are faithful efforts to recall years after just what happened on a certain outstanding event in experience. These accounts are artless in their simplicity and natural in their straightforwardness. We come away from their reading with the inescapable conviction that this writer has told the truth as he saw or heard it. And we are particularly driven to this conclusion from the accidental things, not vital at all to the recital of the event, which are mentioned in connection with it. In courts of justice, the accidental statements of a witness often do more to clarify a situation than his direct testimony. We have happily incidents of this character in the account of the resurrection of Jesus. Take for instance the fact that His disciples did not recognize Him after He arose. This goes far toward proving the case for us. They were not expecting Him to rise and did not recognize Him after He did rise. Therefore, they did not invent the story of His resurrection. Take that other incident of the folded napkin. Who would have mentioned such a trivial, accidental detail unless it were so? Take still further the race of John and Peter to the tomb on hearing of the great event. It happened just as we would expect. John was younger and outran Peter, but when Peter did get there, true to his impetuosity, without delay he entered the tomb. We may rest absolutely sure that this is exactly as it happened. Another incident of large import is the bribing of the soldiers to lie about what happened and the promised protection should their failure at the post of duty involved in the transaction reach the ears of the Roman authorities. From what we know of Roman military and civil authorities and of Jewish ecclesiastics, we are sure this is the simple truth. The record does not say that such things were customary. It merely states as a fact what independent historical sources reveal to have been an all too common practice.

One other of the incidents will claim our attention—the fact that Jesus appeared only to His disciples after His resurrection. Now if the matter had been manufactured, how impossible it would have been to refrain from having Him appear to Pilate and to Annas and Caiaphas and others. A writer of fiction could not have avoided so specious a method of proving His case. This fact alone would demonstrate the genuineness of the record just as it is and justify us in concluding that it is the account of an actual, natural, historical event.

This last mentioned argument is vital and comforting. Jesus arose with a spiritual body. Spiritual things are spiritually discerned. Jesus could not have appeared to Pilate. God is present everywhere, but we do not all know it and even those of us who live most consciously in His presence do not always realize He is with us all the while. Jesus appeared to those who could discern His resurrected body and He appeared to them often enough to assure them that the place He had promised to prepare for them would be ready and waiting when they like Himself should have passed through the translation of death. He appears to His disciples now and speaks to them messages that send them forth as invincible crusaders for His cause.

SUFFOLK LETTER

INFLUENCE is more than radiation. Radiation sends forth rays as the sun, a stove, an iceberg; but influence flows in, enters, penetrates another object. The sun not only radiates heat, but those rays flow into growing plants and make our flowers and our harvests. Influence is invisible, but potential, and can be measured only by results. Influence is always greatest at the center of radiation. Nothing could stand the sun at the center. It would burn up the world; yet its influence gives beauty to the rose, and sweetness to the orange. The weakness of our religion is at the center. The human heart of itself is cold in its spiritual affection until touched by the Sun of Righteousness. In fact, without Christ, it is dead; and death is always cold. The volcano may contain snow when the fire that consumed the mountain dies. What we need is the fire of a new life in Christ and the radiation of His spirit from us until it influences others and changes the complexion of their character. Influence may be bad as well as good; but I am thinking of good influence as I write this letter.

The missionary program needs hotter fires at the center. The world cannot be saved by men and money unless they are the radiation of Christian faith and fervor. The pulpit may be the furnace in the church and the minister may be the stoker. Most of us are conscious that the spiritual fires run low. We ourselves are not warm, though close to the furnace. We put the library in place of Christ, the book in place of the Cross, the plan in place of the person, the head in place of the heart. Influence is not in statistics and offerings, but in spirit and life. If the Church were hotter at home it would influence nations abroad. It is the silent life that tells. It is the unspoken message that reaches the unsaved. Spiritual influence is like the speech of the heavens; "their voice is not heard." I am not thinking of what we say and do and give, but of that unseen, unspoken, indefinable, spiritual message that causes others to take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus. The old method, the crude method of agriculture, was to cut down more trees, bring in more acres, as soil wore out; the new method is to save trees, improve the acres already under cultivation, to do intensive rather than extensive farming. The result is greater results and finer life. The old was hard compared with the new. We are still in the old method of missionary work. We are undertaking extensive rather than intensive work. The heathen do not see at our home what we teach abroad. The world could be brought to Christ with precious little money, if we made the sacrifice of self in our life. The gospel of the sun is light. The mission of the church is carried by influence. We are more intellectual than spiritual, more generous than self-denying, more verbal than actual, more active than radiant. Paul puts it to Timothy in this way: "Stir up the gift of God, which is in thee." We need to stir the fire of our own personal experience, then the influence of our life will do what nothing else can do. I am not discounting what we do: I am pleading for the greater thing to be done.

DOCTOR HARPER, LENTEN SPEAKER

IT has been the custom of the Norfolk Council of Churches to observe Lent with united services, in various churches, and with different speakers. Men representing the Churches composing the Council have been invited to appear on the program. This year for the first time the Christian Church was invited to furnish a number of men from whom to choose a speaker. The Evangelistic Committee finally decided to invite Dr. W. A. Harper, President of Elon College, to take part on the program. Doctor Harper accepted, came, and has gone, but not without leaving a very definite impression upon the city of Norfolk.

Doctor Harper's general theme was "A Layman's View of Religion." He spoke twelve times, and every address was a masterpiece. He thoroughly masters his subject before he attempts to present it to his audience. He is so full of every fact that relates to his theme that his very message animates his personality and compels his audience to listen. The most wholesome thing about the entire series of addresses was the deep religious theme running through every message. They gave evidences of wide reading, but were evidently bathed in the spirit of God. They were progressive and forward-looking, but always intended to be in harmony with the will of God.

Other speakers have been to Norfolk who drew larger crowds, but no speaker on the Lenten program has ever had the wide publicity that he has had. The papers were eager for his manuscripts, and with but few exceptions printed them in full. His visit to Norfolk has done our cause great good.

I was especially glad to have Doctor Harper with us on the day that we took our forward step, that of letting the contract for our new building. The contract was let on Sunday morning, after Doctor Harper had spoken on the topic, "Christianity the Universal Religion," and I hope and pray that we as a Church may ever feel it our duty in the sight of God to carry the message of the Christ unto the ends of the earth, that all may hear and that all may live.

THAT ELON DANCE IN BURLINGTON (A) President's Statement

ELON COLLEGE is the property of the Christian Church, and as such is responsible to it for all its acts. The Church controls the College through its Board of Trustees, all of whom have to be nominated by the Southern Christian Convention, and all of whom must be members of the Christian Church.

THE CHRISTIAN SUN is the official publicity channel of the Christian Church, and owes it to the Church to call attention to every good as well as to every evil connected with the College or any other Church institution. THE CHRISTIAN SUN was well within its rights to acquaint the Brotherhood with its recital of the facts about a recent dance promoted by Elon students, and to call on the College for an explanation of its position and of its relationship to the issues involved.

As stated in a signed article in this issue by the College Dean, the Faculty was investigating the rumors as to the dance before the appearance of the editorial in THE SUN. It should further be stated that this dance was a clandestine affair held without the knowledge or sanction of the College. It should also be stated that no lady student of the College boarding on the campus where the College controls attended it. One lady student living with a relative went, and another living with her parents also went. Even the young men who went did not have the required permission to be out of town. Officially, then, the College is not responsible and we disclaim all responsibility.

But we do not rest our case there. The records of the Board of Trustees show that "dancing even as a form of exercise is prohibited on the part of Elon students." This statement is printed in the College Catalogue, and as the Dean says, is known to students. Last year some young men staged a stag dance here. They were punished for it by the Student Senate. In this case the name of the young man claiming to have solely promoted the dance, but using the name "Elon Social Club" on his invitations to give dignity to the occasion, has been reported to his Social Club for the fact, and their action is being awaited; the names of the men who went are being reported to the Student Senate; and the name of the one lady amenable to the College regulations since not living in her own home is being reported to the Student Council. I have no doubt these student groups to whom responsibility has been assigned in such matters by the Faculty and Board of Trustees will deal in their usually vigorous and impartial manner with these violations of the whole tradition and spirit of our College. The men and women who have made Elon "with their prayers and dollars," as the Editor eloquently stated, and also with the entrustment of their sons and daughters, may rest absolutely assured that dancing is not permitted nor winked at by their College. We may not be able in every case to prevent it, but we will not approve nor condone it.

One other point THE SUN's editorial raises—the advisability of the Social Clubs (We have four of them now, two for each sex.) authorized three years ago. These clubs are not Greek Letter Fraternities. They are not secret. The Faculty controls them. The conditions under which they organize and operate are clearly set forth in the catalogue. They have Greek Letter names, but they are purely local. The Board of Trustees has barred the old-line national secret fraternities from the College. We agree with the Editor that such organizations have been and are hurtful to the spirit of Christian Brotherhood.

But our experience with the Social Club idea here has been for the most part wholesome. There are some faults in any human organization. The Editor knows how prone errors are to creep into so excellent a paper as THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and under his watchful eye. The Faculty has the right to discipline these Social Clubs and to revoke the constitution of any such organization here which, in their opinion, is not serving the best interests of the College. The type of men and women who are social club members here is evidence that they are not undermining the character of the College, and if at any time such social clubs do become a menace in the opinion of the Faculty or Trustees, the Church is hereby assured they will be immediately disbanded.

I welcome the opportunity thus to set forth the attitude of our College in respect to these matters, and thank the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN for calling upon me to do so.

W. A. HARPER,
President.

(B) The Dean's Findings

IN THE CHRISTIAN SUN of March 29, the Editor calls attention to a dance as reported to have been held in Burlington, N. C., on the evening of St. Patrick's Day of the present year, and that the dance in question is reported to have been held under the auspices of one of the social clubs of Elon College. Such report had come to the attention of the faculty of the College before the appearance of the article in THE CHRISTIAN SUN, herein referred to. The Dean was instructed by the faculty to ascertain the facts.

It is known, presumably, to all students of the College that the institution does not permit dancing. It is known also, to most people of the Southern Christian Convention, which Convention owns and fosters the College, that dancing is prohibited in Elon College. This fact explains why the Faculty took note of the above-named rumor. The findings of the Dean to date are that the dance did occur as rumored, but that it was a private affair and should not be accredited to either of the social clubs among the men of the College. Yet it appears to have been confined to members of a certain club. Too, the name of that club was so used in connection with the dance as to leave the impression that it was a club dance.

Since these social clubs exist by the permission of the Trustees of the College it may be necessary for the club to defend itself before the Trustees at their approaching annual session by excluding from its membership the offending member or members, or else have its right to exist withdrawn.

The Faculty will insist on loyalty to the rule of the Board of Trustees in such matters, and the student who disregards such insistence will lose his membership in the College. Occasionally a student comes to us who is so persistent in opposing the traditions of the College that he dances away his opportunity. Let parents do their best to influence their children to live, as far as possible, while students at Elon, in harmony with the traditions of the College. It is not a pleasant thing for a young person to lose for any cause his membership in a college.

W. P. LAWRENCE, Dean.

Elon College, N. C., April 5, 1922.

THE EASTER SEASON

The Easter season is becoming more important as a religious festival. Its observance is being impressed upon Christian people in all denominations. While Lent is commanding respect even by those who look upon life with the least degree of seriousness, the careless Christian finds himself rebuked on every hand, while a score of interests press themselves upon his consideration. Indeed, we are facing a peril of taking advantage of the season to push other interests than those for which it was intended. It has been looked upon as a time for walking with Jesus Christ and for religious meditations. It is becoming a period which we have filled with the most strenuous activities.—Exchange.

CONVENTION CONSIDERATIONS

By Hon. J. E. West, Lieutenant-Governor of Virginia

The next Southern Christian Convention should be a deliberative Convention with a few set of addresses.

I consider the following the most important things to be considered:

1. Conserve the Men and Millions Movement. A proper solution of this question means progress along all lines.
2. Establish a full Theological Department at Elon College with the best equipped teachers that can be selected.
3. Place THE CHRISTIAN SUN on a sound financial basis. If this is not done, it will bankrupt the Convention.
4. Reorganize the Convention and consider seriously changing same to annual sessions and also limit the work of Conferences. In numbers the entire Convention is hardly large enough for a strong Conference. The day of small Conference for real constructive work has passed. This Convention should elect a strong delegation to the American Christian Convention, instructed to insist on a reorganization of same along more constructive lines. If the gradual reduction in total membership of the Christian Church in the United States and Canada and the constant increase in pastorless and defunct churches does not arouse our leaders to the necessity of adjusting our reorganization along constructive lines, it is time to brush aside old leaders and give new ones a chance.

LOVE, THE COIN OF THE KINGDOM

Love transmuted into service is the coin of the realm in the Kingdom of God.

All good motives have their places in the salvation of man, but love is the key-stone of the arch.

Love is the time that binds together the family, the Church, the nation, and must bind all the races of mankind.

Love is the most God-like attribute of the human heart, and finds its perfection in love to God.—E. S. Allhands.

MAKE EVERY WEEK A PASSION WEEK

When the Easter morning dawns we devoutly pray that there will come into the life of the Church a re-enforcement of the divine power of Christ which finds its supreme illustration in his resurrection from the dead. When every week becomes a passion week, then every day will be a redemption day and every Sunday a symbol of perennial Easter in the life of our beloved Methodism. For this we dare to look; for this we dare to pray; for this we dare to preach; for this we dare to plan; for this we dare to plead; for this we dare to hope when we shall place upon all of our service of body, mind, and heart the ineffaceable emblem of the print of the nails. For ourselves an dour Church "we long to know Christ and the power which is in his resurrection and to share in his suffering and die even as he died, in the hope that we may attain to the resurrection from among the dead."—Bishop Theodore S. Henderson, in Western Christian Advocate.

WHY I BELIEVE IN CHURCH ADVERTISING

1. Because it definitely locates a church for the stranger, the newcomer, the occasional attendant. By looking at his Saturday paper, one can find where the church which meets his denominational requirements, or his religious ideals, or even his theological whims, is located.
2. Because it places the church in the class where it belongs, the class of the producers of things people need in life.
3. Because it puts the church, its minister, and its people on their mettle to produce and dispense just what they claim they have, in the most attractive, sincere, earnest, and compelling way possible.
4. Because it reaches with the message of truth some whom pastoral preaching and calling and church activities do not, and in some cases cannot reach. Not all people can come to church. This makes good advertising on the part of the church especially essential.—James T. Veneklasen, pastor Faith Presbyterian Church, Baltimore, Maryland.

"O Cross that liftest up my head,
I dare not ask to flee from thee!
I lay in dust life's glory dead,
And from the ground there blossoms red
Life that shall endless be."

A THOUGHT FOR EASTER

Let us grasp anew the fact of our own immortality. This truth accepted as fundamental and kept consciously in the foreground of thought will give us a principle for the wise guidance of life. It is not this body of ours, it is not the material things of life that are important. The only real and lasting things are the spiritual. There is nothing that can give us so true a sense of proportion, no other touchstone that can so quickly determine for us the absolute values of life as this steady sense of the reality of unseen things.—Exchange.

IF I WERE A LAYMAN

IT IS easier to paint a picture than live a life. Laymen or preachers who speculate as spectators would find it difficult to follow their directions if their positions were reversed. A layman may be described as a man or woman whose vocation is other than preaching, but who as a disciple of Christ is committed to the task of co-operating in establishing the Kingdom of God.

Laymen are privileged to give permanency to church enterprises. They stay. Preachers come and go. Laymen may have the joy of adorning the doctrine and furnishing fresh proofs to neighbors and acquaintances that the general claims for the gospel work in concrete cases, and that the transforming power of grace is a glorious reality.

Every layman illustrates many phases of truth, but has some outstanding characteristic by which he is especially distinguished and remembered. These characteristics, varying in quality and strength in each individual, are sufficiently similar in different individuals so that laymen may be classified by them. When so classified, there are certain types which, so far as they conform to type, are not to be regarded as useful in the work of the Church or agreeable in the close relationships of the Church family life. Among them we would list the following:

Some Folks Who Would Not Be Missed

The conspicuous fault finder, who, content with finding the fault, does little to correct it. The old proverb, "A kicking horse does not pull," may not be true. It is safe, however, that while the kicking is being indulged in, very little pulling is being done by the horse that is kicking. A frequent excuse maker lowers the morale of the working force. The fine quality of skill used in evading plain duty is surely worthy of a better cause. A human sponge, receiving much and giving little, furnishes more aid and comfort to the enemy of souls than to the soul winner, and by trying to keep without using, neither keeps nor uses. The sensitive layman suffers, and suffering verifies the Scriptural statement, "Whether one member suffer, all suffer with it."

The Pharisaical brother who thanks God that he is unlike the rest of the church members would be surprised to know how many of his associates share in his thanksgiving, and how small a contribution he makes toward raising the spiritual standards of the Church. Church bosses are fewer than frequently imagined, and can be replaced by Church leaders, who are numerous and much more efficient. The shirk, who is not disturbed by the sight of work undone and tasks uncompleted, adds both to the toil and the worry of others. The spasmodic brother, who rushes the regulars in the race today and retards them tomorrow, breaks in upon the steady pace that wins. The spineless member, who has a wishbone where a backbone is needed, does not afford sufficient stability for the Church of today, that must often, for Jesus' sake, take a stand for righteousness that is neither easy nor popular. The standpatter ill uses the noble quality of stability through lack of vision and perspective. He forgets that "new occasions teach new duties," and in a changing world can seldom be used for a leader except when the order is given to retreat.

The uninformed layman economizes in books, church papers and convention expenses at great cost to his efficiency. Great world movements and programs, unknown and unheeded, lose his support. His judgment is dwarfed and his conversation confined to glittering generalities. His prayers are rambling and his investments of money and life a guess and a chance. The Creator placed the eyes in the front of the head as a perpetual reminder that people made in His image were to be forward looking folk. The layman who makes it easy for his right hand and his left hand, and all the hands engaged in church enterprises to know of his deeds, would make a wiser use of time in "telling to others around what a Saviour he has found."

A Better Crowd to Line Up With

These undesirables are but a small minority in any church, anywhere, but the number everywhere is sufficiently large, that, were I a layman, for my own sake and the sake of the Kingdom, I would zealously guard against being listed with them by an impartial and discerning census taker. The desirable laymen are distinguished by characteristics quite as marked and much more coveted than the group just described. They are real men and real women. Their natural gifts and graces have been enhanced and empowered by the Spirit of God. They put Him first. Everything else must take second place. They are busy, but not too busy to pray. They take time to be holy. They have a definite Christian experience. This experience is their own, and differs from that of everyone else, as surely as does their thumb print. It is definite, satisfying, assuring. They locate themselves well, both for inspiration and work, that they may function to the best advantage as a church force, a community force, a national force, and a world force. The hymns, "Close to Thee, Close to Thee," and "Brighten the Corner Where You Are," are not only good songs, but good suggestions for location. They are great factors in creating the right kind of a church atmosphere. There is more in an atmosphere than in an argument. The warmth of spring melts the snow of winter and invites vegetation to flourish and flowers to bloom. When the spiritual atmosphere is right, conversions are many, converts develop into useful Christians, and the whole company of believers increases in grace and the knowledge of Jesus Christ. Reverence, friendliness, personal responsibility, dependence upon God, a knowledge of men and their needs, an appreciation of Christ and the Church, a yearning for souls and a willingness to serve, create an atmosphere that will convince a sinner of his need of Christ, confirm a stranger seeking a church home that he has found it, and bring out pastoral and preaching powers in the pastor that under other circumstances could not be expected to develop.

The Man Who Can't Be Spared

Such a layman takes his church vows seriously. Having promised to pay attention to the private means of grace, he does not forget the study of his Bible, the establishment of the family altar, and the saying of grace at his table. Having promised attendance upon the services of the sanctuary, he is present stately and regularly and receives the benefits which must come to the person whose soul is refreshed by prayer, praise, meditation, revelation and practical beneficence which form a part of every public service. Having promised to worship God, he is gradually changed from image to image into the likeness of Christ, as the character of God and the ideals of Christianity are held before him Sabbath after Sabbath. Having promised to give of his means for the support of the gospel, he turns away from the spirit of the pagan which would spend all on self, and receives the Christian spirit, which spends itself, and despising alike the spendthrift of the prodigal, and the hoarding of the prodigal's brother, regards himself as a steward whose all belongs to God.

He regards the giving of the tenth as a minimum. Having promised to promote the welfare of others, he spends himself in social evangelism and does his bit in his community to correct un-Christian conditions of the social and industrial order. He believes that Christianity applied would do away with the necessity of both poverty and the charity that ministers to poverty. He seeks to change conditions as well as save individuals. Having promised to advance the Redeemer's kingdom, he believes in and practices personal evangelism and by both his gifts and his prayers supports the missionary enterprises of his Church. As a result of his experience, his reading and his conversation with others he is an intelligent Christian and as such regards certain things pertaining to the Kingdom as practically settled, among them these:

Some Jobs to Be Tackled

God is our Father. Jesus Christ is our Elder Brother, and therefore the Church should be for everybody, and class distinctions in the Church are both vicious and dangerous. The Church grows from the inside out, and not from the outside in. Therefore, the consecrated endeavors and personal efforts of the laymen rather than sensational and outside attractions, are to be depended upon in the development of the Church. The Church is a force to work a field, and not a field to itself; therefore, the pastor should be expected to spend himself converting sinners instead of coddling saints. The character of the Church is determined by the place of emphasis; therefore, every effort looking toward the stressing of personal evangelism, social evangelism and world evangelism should have the support of a good layman. The Church is pre-eminent among all the institutions working for the establishment of the Kingdom; therefore, if a layman must choose his place of activity and the investment of time and money he will not forget to put first things first. The standards of education and the general level of education having been raised, a layman or a minister or a missionary or a special worker of any sort is greatly handicapped without special training for the task in hand. Life is so complex that a person working alone in any good cause cannot accomplish as much as when working with others; therefore, as a layman, I would help organize the Church so that unitedly it might face its goals, assured by a constituency that could be mobilized, with no one underfed and overworked, or overfed and underworked. The purchasing power of a dollar having decreased in the last five years so that a dollar today will purchase only about what forty cents would purchase five years ago, the good layman will make his contribution and estimate salaries accordingly.

To sum up the whole matter, either a good preacher or a good layman will say with Paul, "I am become all things to all men in order that by all means I may save some."—E. L. Waldorf, D. D., in The Christian Advocate (N. Y.)

MISSIONARY PLAYS AND PAGEANTS

It helps every Missionary Society to give a suitable pageant occasionally. Both the society presenting and the church, Sunday school, or community receiving, are taught impressive lessons and are benefited. Among the pageants we have on hand and can recommend to Societies at present are:

Ma-Li, The Daughter of Ito, 8c a copy. Missionary Clinic, 8c a copy. The Rainbow Pageant, 10c a copy. The Kings Highway, 7c a copy. The Children of Many Lands, (a Missionary Program for children, with all music included), 10c a copy. Lovest Thou Me?, A missionary exercise with music, 20c a copy.

I will be glad to send these on receipt of price or to secure for a society any other missionary play or pageant desired.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR APRIL 16, 1922

(The International Lesson Committee suggests two lessons for this Easter Sunday, the one which would naturally fall in this course of lessons, and the Easter lesson. References for both are given here.)

The Love of Joash for God's House.—II Kings 11: 12—12: 6

Golden Text: "I was glad when they said unto me, let us go unto the house of Jehovah."—Ps. 122: 1.

Topics for Discussion: Taking care of God's house; what our church should mean to us; why and how to maintain public worship; a neglected church restored.

Easter Lesson.—John 20: 19-31.

Golden Text: "The Lord is risen indeed."—Luke 24: 34.

If your class uses this lesson, you will turn from the study of the Prophets and kings of Judah, to join with all the Christian world in thinking of the message of the Eastertide. In the Scripture lesson we are given the record of the manifestation of Jesus to those who were nearest to Him in His earthly ministry. All the centuries since that time have been filled with the revelation of the wisdom and love and power of that same risen Christ. Someone has said: "Easter is Easter, not because Jesus rose long ago, but because Jesus still lives, and because there are those among us who know that He lives."

"Shall our Easter stand for the strong white life
We promised to live anew,
For the resurrection of good, that died
When we failed God's work to do?
Let the old ambition revive again
With a glad, insistent power,
And the peace that is in us find a voice
For the joy of the Easter hour."

—Lizzie De Armong.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR APRIL 16, 1922

Citizens of Two Worlds (Easter Meeting)
Romans 12: 1, 2; Phil. 3: 13, 14, 20; I Peter 1: 3-5

"I am a stranger here, within a foreign land,
My home is far away upon a golden strand;
Ambassador to be, of realms beyond the sea,
I'm here on business for my King."

Christians are citizens of heaven in God's world on "The King's Business." God must do His work through His earthly children. As they pray, "Thy will be done," Christians have a holy mission to help bring to pass their prayer. The message of the Easter sermon is one of new life, and hence new strength and new power. "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things that are above."

Wherever a mantle of pity falls soft on a wound or a woe;
Wherever a peace or a pardon springs up to o'ermaster a foe;
Wherever a soft hand of blessing outreaches to succor a need,
Wherever spring's healing for wounding, the Master is risen indeed!

So fling out your banners, brave toilers; bring lilies to altar and shrine;
Ring out, Easter bells, He is risen! For you is the token and sign;
There's a world moving sunward and Godward; ye are called to the front; ye must lead!
Behind are the grave and the darkness; the Master is risen indeed.

INCREASED MEMBERSHIP

Every Sunday school should receive a letter this week announcing the campaign for increased membership in our Sunday schools. The Sunday School Board of the American Christian Convention is working for a ten per cent increase in Sunday school membership before the Burlington Convention. This means two thousand new Sunday school members in the Southern Christian Convention. To reach our goal, for six weeks, May 7 through June 11, there will be a contest between the Sunday schools of the North Carolina and Alabama Conferences, and those of the two Virginia and the Georgia-Alabama Conferences. At present, the enrollment of the Virginia and the Georgia-Alabama schools is a little higher than that of the North Carolina and the Alabama schools, but the latter group has a few more schools, so the race is about even. Points in the contest are secured by enrolling new members, contributing larger offerings, and maintaining a high average attendance, as based on enrollment.

"Honor schools" in the contest will be those which succeed in increasing their membership ten per cent, and those which have an average attendance of 70 per cent of their enrollment during the time of the contest. The winning side will be the one that succeeds in gaining the most points, as follows:

1. Side enrolling largest number of new members, 100 points.
2. Side contributing largest offerings, 100 points.
3. Side with most "Honor schools" on increase, 100 points.
4. Side with most "Honor schools" on attendance, 100 points.
5. Side having the highest average attendance, 100 points.

Cards for reporting weekly your attendance, offering and new members will be furnished to each secretary. Send in the name and address of your secretary today. Write to our office, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va., for suggestions or answers to any questions. Study the "Pennsylvania Plan of Increase" sent to your school, and lay your plans for an intensive campaign of Sunday school work.

Let all work together for the Convention, the Conference, the Sunday school, and most of all, for the boy and the girl.

Mrs. Fred Bullock, of Dayton, Ohio, and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, of Richmond, Va., are spending ten days in the Georgia and Alabama Conference in institute work. They also attended the Georgia and Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention held at the Rose Hill church, Columbus, Rev. R. F. Brown, pastor.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

GETTING READY FOR EASTER

After a scourge of "flu" the Orphanage is getting back to normal again. We had about thirty cases. I am glad to say that we had none of a serious nature and all have gotten out and are seemingly well.

Our matrons are now busy at work trying to get all our big family ready for Easter. It is our aim to have a nice new dress for each little girl and a nice new suit for each of the little boys. A number of our good ladies have written me that they were making dresses for the little girls, and it will be quite a help to us. I wish all our friends could see the happy smiles Easter morning when all get dressed up. I well remember when I was a little boy (years ago) how happy it made me to get a nice new suit of clothes, and if father got it in the middle of the week I thought Sunday would never come so I could wear it. I guess all little boys are just alike along that line, and all appreciate new things to wear.

It is a source of a great deal of appreciation on our part when we ask our friends to help us and they come to our rescue, as the good women have at this time in making and sending us dresses for the children to help us out.

I will report after Easter all the dresses sent in. Since our last report the following articles have come in: Ladies' Missionary Society, Liberty church, Vance Co., N. C., two quilts; Young People's Missionary Society, same church, one quilt; Willing Workers class, same church, one quilt; Mrs. L. H. Brawley, Ivor, Va., one bushel beans; Ladies' Aid Society, South Norfolk church, three quilts for Baby Home.

Don't forget the Easter Offering in your church. We need it.

REVISED GOVERNMENT AND PRINCIPLES

The Revision Committee of the Convention has passed upon the revised Government and Principles of the Christian Church and is soon to authorize the publica- tion of the new edition. The Convention's Publishing Agent desires to ascertain something of the demands for the book so as to know how many copies to have printed.

It does not seem practical at this time to issue the new book in more than two bindings. The cloth binding will sell at 75 cents the copy and the morocco binding at $1.50 the copy. In order to ascertain the demand for the new book at these prices we will thank those who care to place order to fill out the coupon below and return to us at an early date.

CHURCH NEWS

THE CHRISTIAN TEMPLE OF NORFOLK VOTES TO ERECT HANDSOME NEW EDIFICE

For many years the Third Christian church, now Christian Temple of Norfolk, has been hoping and planning for a new church building; resolutions have been adopted, committees have been appointed, plans have been suggested, but now the one definite step has been taken.

At the close of the morning service yesterday, April 2, the Building Committee made its final report to the congregation. Dr. J. W. Manning, reporting for the committee, stated that some months ago the committee asked for general bids; that four construction companies responded with definite propositions. The Clarkson-Meredith Construction Company, of Norfolk, Va., proposed to build according to plans and specifications for the sum of $238,000; the Northeastern Construction Company, of New York, $217,300; the M. A. Long Company, Baltimore, $181,507, and the H. D. Watts Company, Baltimore and Norfolk, $177,400. These bids were just for the building, no furnishings included. They were all rejected as too high.

The committee then called on the H. D. Watts Company and asked them to figure with us for the best bid they could possibly make. This they did and their final bid was $160,000, exclusive of the art glass windows, interior decorations and all furnishings. This bid was accepted by the committee and was unanimously adopted by the congregation at the meeting April 2. The building will begin next Tuesday, April 12, and is to be completed on or before March 1, 1923. The building when complete and ready for use will cost about $200,000. This is a tremendous undertaking and I pray that the brotherhood at large will support us by their prayers and their gifts.

L. E. SMITH.

Norfolk, Va.

A MEMORABLE DAY

April 2, 1922, will remain for a long time to come as a memorable day in life's calendar of important events. That day I was privileged to be with the Christian Temple of Norfolk, Dr. L. E. Smith, pastor.

This church is heir to three former congregations, Providence, the Memorial Temple, and the Third Church. In the great gathering present that morning were familiar faces of all three of these formerly separate, but now happily united churches. That condition alone would make the day a memorable one for me, born as I was in Providence church.

But something really worth while occurred. A referendum vote of the united congregation was to be taken on the report of the building committee for the new church plant. Dr. Smith in straightforward manner announced the fact, and following an impassioned prayer, called on Dr. J. W. Manning to make the report. The report was a masterpiece of presentation, not argumentative, but hopeful, inspirational, compelling. Then the pastor asked all who favored the report to begin at once the erection of a plant that will cost around $200,000 when completed and equipped to stand to their feet. Almost to a person, a congregation of around five hundred arose. A few visitors did not vote. No one stood in opposition to the plan.

This decision called for sublime faith and heroic sacrifice, for Norfolk is now financially depressed. It is an expression of the unalloyed confidence, too, of the membership in the leadership of their pastor. It was a beautiful scene.

The Christian Temple will be the finest church plant in Norfolk, I am told, and its seating capacity will be 1700. Situated as it is at the population center of the city, and accessible to street cars and jitney lines, it bids fair to be the religious center for co-operative religious gatherings in the city.

To me April 2 was a memorable day. To me it was and is an inspiration.

W. A. HARPER.

CORRESPONDENCE

A SUGGESTION

Dear Brother Riddle: I note your editorial in The Christian Sun on the matter of dividing the North Carolina Christian Conference. The thing may work out all right since the Southern Christian Convention is well organized to take care of Conferences, large or small, within its bounds. Since reading your editorial I have taken the time to study my North Carolina Geography a little—knowing the location of each local church as I do, having visited most all of them while serving as pastor of churches in North Carolina. I am convinced that there should be a compromise made on the Conference division, and that the compromise should be for two Conferences. They can be divided in such a manner as to make Raleigh the geographical center of one, and Greensboro the geographical center of the other. The survey of churches as I have them in mind at present would put fifty-five churches with Raleigh as a center, and sixty-two churches with Greensboro as a center. The number of churches and number of communicants in each of the suggested Conferences would make Conferences of more than the average size in the Christian denomination.

I am thoroughly convinced in my mind that two Conferences in North Carolina would be better than three. I have no voice nor vote in the matter, but since North Carolina is home to me, I feel deeply interested in the future of the Christian Church in the State. Having had experience in both small and large Conferences, I cannot help but feel that dividing up into fragments will prove a hindrance instead of a blessing and progress. I do not see how the Conferences can hope to be fruitful in all good works so divided.

Sincerely,

L. F. JOHNSON.

EASTER THOUGHTS

WHEN EASTER LIFTS HER LILY FACE

When Easter lifts her lily face,
And smiles into the sun;
I feel the hopes of other days,
Grow flower-like, one by one,
Until the joyous azure skies
Seem singing down to me
The gladness of the Master's love
And springtime's mystery.

When Easter lifts her lily face,
My sorrows pass away,
As lightly as the stone that rolled
From where the Savior lay!
And as the tender grasses leap
From winter's frozen sod,
I feel again, past fear and pain,
The boundless love of God!

When Easter lifts her lily face,
I want to laugh aloud,
And all at once I see the glow
Of silver in each cloud;
I feel new life in every breeze,
In every budding tree—
And through the gleam of Spring-time's dream,
God's face smiles down on me!

The Christian Herald.

IMMORTALITY

By Charles M. Sheldon

We do not rest our belief in immortality on the findings of science. Neither is it proved by reasoning or logic. Neither do we have to rely on what we might call direct proof in the personal experiences of the race, although in many remarkable personal testimonies, people who were dying, when the division between body and spirit has been so thin that the spirit seemed to look through, have told of the glories of the other world which they are already beholding.

On what does the belief in immortality rest?

Simply on the personal testimony and statement of Jesus Christ!

If you have a friend who is perfectly sane, and who has never deceived you, one in whom you have the most implicit faith, one who can be trusted, one who is absolutely reliable under all conditions, and that friend should come to you and say: "Nine thousand miles from here there is a beautiful place all built of white stone; it is situated on the side of a most wonderful bay, where the waters are of the most enchanting emerald; the streets of this town are clean and wide; there is no poverty to amount to anything there; every one is well fed and well clothed; on Sunday almost the entire population goes to worship; kindness and goodness are far more common than any vices; it is a most beautiful little town built nearly all of wonderful white stone"—

If your friend should then go on to say that he had just come from this town himself, and was so much impressed with its beauty that he would like to have every one see it, you would certainly believe him. And yet you have never seen this town. You do not even know in what part of the world it is until your friend tells you that it is on the east coast of New Zealand, and is called Timaru.

But Jesus Christ is the one Person in all the world who is the incarnate Truth. That was one of His names. "I am the Truth!" He said. Jesus Christ is also the most sane person in all the world. In addition, He was and is the most spiritual, and, being Himself divine, the nearest to God and spiritual things of any person that ever lived on this earth. If any personal friend whom you have known can claim your faith in his word, then certainly the word of Jesus on such a supremely important thing as immortality can be trusted. And when Jesus says, "In my Father's house are many mansions," you can believe Him far more surely than you can believe your friend when he tells you he has seen this white stone town in New Zealand.

And when Jesus says, "I came from God and I am going back to Him;" when He Says, "I go to prepare a place for you;" when He says to the dying robber, "Today you shall be with me in Paradise;" when He says, "I am the resurrection and the life; whosoever believeth in me shall never die;" when He says, "Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul," you can believe Him who could not lie, and who knew from personal experience that immortality is a great and wonderful fact.

On that basis, then, the Christian puts his faith in immortality. He does not wait for science or learning or logic or mathematics or the chemical laboratory to prove immortality. They may agree or not as to the probability of a future existence. It makes little difference whether they do or not. The great proof of immortality is, "Jesus said so!" That is enough for any reasonable person. I trust Him more than I trust my dearest and most truthful friend.—Selected.

MISCELLANEOUS

The Educated Fish

A jocose contributor to Outdoor Life is the author of the most delightful "fish story" we have read in a long while.

An interesting experiment, he says, was tried some time ago with an ordinary salt-water herring. The fish was put into a large bowl of salt water, and every day a small quantity of it was removed and an equal quantity of fresh water substituted until eventually the herring lived and thrived in purely fresh water.

The owner was so much pleased with the success of the experiment that he began daily to remove a small quantity of water from the bowl until it was empty. The herring seemed to do very well without it, and, since it was as lively in the empty bowl, the owner had it put in a cage.

There it lived happily, hopping from perch to perch, just like a bird, until one day some sudden noise upset and startled it, and it fell into the water trough and was drowned.—The Youth's Companion.

Not His Intention

A boy fell into a pond. A man stopped and pulled him out and said, "Well, son, how did you come to fall into the lake?"

"I didn't come to fall in at all," replied the boy with some heat, "I came to fish."—Stray Wisdom.

VACATION RAILROAD RATES

During the coming summer tourist season, the Southern Railway System will sell round-trip week-end tickets from principal points to all mountain and seashore resorts in the South at sixty per cent of the double one-way fare, or a fare and one-fifth, for the round trip. As an illustration, where the one way fare is $10, the round trip fare will be $12.00.

These tickets will be sold on Fridays and Saturdays and will be good for return trip until Tuesdays, this being a more liberal arrangement than has ever before been in effect, and one which will enable the people of the South to make week-end trips to mountain and seashore resorts at a very reasonable cost. It will be especially advantageous to business men who wish to make weekly visits to their families at resorts. These tickets will be sold from Washington, D. C., Cincinnati, Ohio, and Louisville, Ky., as well as points throughout the Southeast.

These tickets will be put on sale May 15 and will be sold until the latter part of September.

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

FOUR ESSENTIALS FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF A LIVE AND FLOURISHING CHURCH

A WORTHY WALK ON THE PART OF THE MEMBERS.—“I, therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called.” (Ephesians 4: 1.) Inconsistencies in the lives of church members stand greatly in the way of the progress of the church today. A church membership may be well equipped in many ways, but if it is of the dancing, drinking, card-playing, theater-going, deceitful, worldly-minded sort, no pastor can build a flourishing church out of it unless that membership become converted.

BROTHERLY LOVE.—“Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamour, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ’s sake hath forgiven you.” (Eph. 4: 31, 32.) A church torn by dissensions and strife cannot expect to grow. Let old grudges be laid aside, and let brotherly love prevail, and then the Lord can smile upon it.

A WILLING MIND.—Nehemiah’s marvelous success in building the walls of Jerusalem is explained in one sentence: “The people had a mind to work.” (Nehemiah 4: 6.) A willing mind and an energy to lay hold upon the work of the church is excellent material out of which to build a live, growing church.

UNSELFISHNESS.—“There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth; and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty.” (Proverbs 11:24.) The selfish church member says: “We must keep our men and money at home; we have all we can do here.” But as the Scripture asserts, and church history proves, “it tendeth to poverty.” The unselfish member believes in looking out for the good of others and dividing with them; and as the Scripture says, and church history proves, that puts the church on the road to increase.

EDITORIAL

Merging The Sun and The Herald

(A Personal Editorial)

IN last week's issue of The Sun I had an editorial in regard to merging The Christian Sun and The Herald of Gospel Liberty. The favorable comment which has been received on the subject of the editorial is beyond my expectation. A number of the brethren had already been thinking along the same line and have said that the editorial expresses their sentiment.

Having been asked some questions in regard to the practical operation of such a plan, I feel it incumbent upon me to remark further concerning this merger.

The cost of manufacturing any publication has become so great that it is a question whether it is best to own your own plant or to "farm" out your work. I am sure that it will not be surprising to readers of The Sun to know that some of the largest publishing houses neither own nor operate their own machinery. It has been my privilege to visit some of the largest book dealers in the cities of Philadelphia and New York. Very few of these own their own plants. They have large offices and display rooms and all the work is done on contract. For one hundred years the American Bible Society has operated its own plant, but found last year that it could get its Bibles published much cheaper than it could maintain its own plant. The Society, only a few months ago, sold its plant and now all its work is done on contract.

The reasons for such business steps are numerous and all justifiable. For instance, to produce one copy of The Christian Sun requires an outlay of about $20,000.00 worth of machinery. There are a number of very expensive machines that must be used. When a publication undertakes to own its own plant it is under the necessity of securing work to keep this expensive machinery going every working hour of the day. To give further reasons would take us too far into the details and consume too much space.

I have no motive other than the good of the cause and the Kingdom's advancement in advocating that The Sun and The Herald be merged. Perhaps I ought to say this: The public, generally, knows that I have a financial interest in the Burlington Printing Company, the company that now prints The Sun. The Sun is the biggest weekly job that the company has.

During recent months the company's business has grown to such an extent that The Sun could not be taken care of, together with other job work, without the purchase of an additional linotype, which would cost $3,600.00. We could very easily reason that if, for any reason, we should lose The Sun, it would necessitate running the risk of finding other work to keep this additional machine going. I was conscious of this when I wrote the editorial. While The Sun is printed at the very lowest possible figure, and so far, cheaper than any reputable printer in the State, the required work on it goes a long way in supplying full time work for the company's force. But my interest in the Christian Church and the Kingdom's cause which it represents rises higher than the material investment. I have never let interest of self stand between me and speaking my convictions. I pray that I shall never see the day when I can not or will not do as I have done.

The public knows that I have insisted all the while on the development of a book business, and I want to say frankly that it is next to impossible for an editor to write all his editorials, handle the manuscript for a sixteen-page weekly publication, direct the correspondence, read proof, give his time to the public's every call, prepare sermons and addresses, look after book orders, and give attention to the local book trade, and do his full duty by a constituency who look each week to a publication for guidance and direction. The Editor of The Christian Sun, at his best, must be a cosmopolite of the first magnitude.

Brethren of the Convention, I want to impress this upon you: No man of average strength can measure up to the responsibility as your Editor and at the same time develop the business end of the office. I have cast my last vote for one man to be both Editor and Publishing Agent. It is injurious to the man and hurtful to the cause.

If we should merge The Sun and The Herald, then one man could reasonably take care of the Southern office, and he would have a splendid opportunity to develop the book business. He could keep in touch with every department of the work and furnish the organ of the Church a summary of the work each week. He would have the editorial viewpoint of our Southern work and could keep it constantly before the public.

One objection to the merger is that it would remove some of the possibility of local items. I have checked the 1921 volume of The Christian Sun and find that not 50% of our ministers report anything from their church, or churches, during the year. I blush to say it—and yet I shall—that very few local items appear except in case of a pounding, or where a pounding is reported in connection with some local news. I am pointing my finger at no one; I am giving bare facts as the records show.

What is the object of a Church paper? Is the object of a Church paper to disseminate local news, tell about some fellow who has been pounded as a substitute for an honorable salary, or is it to be a constructive element? The first element of a Church paper is to be constructive in thought and leadership.

Our pastors ought to report more from their work, but it could be done in condensed form. The average long article of Church News that appears in The Christian Sun is the summarizing of things for two or three months. There is not a pastor in the Southern Christian Convention who is not capable of writing on a postal card a gist of what happens in his church each week—and this should be the method.

But here are questions that must be answered: What about the financial end of the paper after it is merged? What will it cost? What will the deficit be, if any?

The cost of issuing the combined publication, 32 pages, will be approximately $300.00 per week. In round numbers, the annual cost would be $15,000.00. The income should be $11,500.00 from subscriptions and $1,500.00 from advertising. This would leave us short $2,000.00, with salaries of editors to be added. If the salary of the editor in Dayton is $2,000.00 per year (we do not know what it is) with $1,000.00 for office help, and the salary of our editor is $1,000.00 with $500.00 allowed for help, the deficit would be $6,500.00, which would be less than the present deficit on one publication. The book business in the Southern Convention, if properly handled and financially backed, should pay the editor's salary, office rent, and whatever help that he should need from time to time. Assuming that this could be done, the deficit should be around $5,000.00 annually for the entire Church to meet.

But these figures are based on the present circulation of the two papers. They do not allow for growth, which should certainly come.

Brethren, again: Is it the Master's will that we should lose from ten to fifteen thousand dollars annually on our two publications when the same purpose can be served at a deficit of around $5,000.00? We must look beyond all sentiment to answer such a question. Had we better not put this money into the support of our mission work? If we believe that we are stewards of our money, and we are, then let us consider this matter as a stewardship and settle it on that basis.

And this—

The right kind of an editor can gather our news each week and work it into the proper form that will demand far more attention than to allow every fellow all the space he desires. And more: It is not the long articles that you read, Brother and Sister reader, but it is the short notes—The Bulletin, if you please.

More readers of The Sun read what is written in condensed form than any other part of the paper. Our readers know that this is true.

And finally—

Brethren, I have been down into the dark and the deep with The Christian Sun during the past six years. I have seen the time when no one, save our Heavenly Father, knew the burdens I was carrying. This was before the day when the Convention assumed the responsibility of financing the paper. I have served during the war period. Labor has been able to assert itself. I have carried nearly every end of the paper. The dark hours I do not wish to recall. I have sent many an issue of The Sun to the public through tears and a body almost broken with work. All this to say that I have seriously considered every phase of the work, and I ask those who oppose my views in this matter, to remember that I know wherein I speak. I leave it to the good judgment of the Convention. So far as I know I have no further thing to present. I have offered a plan. Let those who oppose offer a better one. I am for the best thing, the welfare of the Kingdom being considered. I am ready to sit at the council table; I am ready to work with the majority.

"YEAR BOOK OF THE CHRISTIANS"

The Christian Church publishes two annuals—one by the Southern Convention and one issued by the American Christian Convention.

Our Southern Annual contains too much miscellaneous matter that should never go into such a publication. But who has dared to break a precedent and leave out all preliminaries? Not us, without authority from the Conferences that support it.

The Annual issued by the American Christian Convention does not conform to ours in style and treatment. Why not have one year book and call it "The Year Book of the Christians"? The two Annuals can be improved upon. Each is being printed at a loss. Let us combine these two books and have a worth-while handbook of ready reference.

ANOTHER SUGGESTION

We have the suggestion indirectly from one of our leading pastors that the Convention would be acting the part of wisdom to appoint a committee of twelve at the opening of the Convention whose duty it would be to review all the reports to be presented, and from these reports make out a policy by which the Convention is to be guided during the next biennium. This is the suggestion as we have understood it. There ought to be and must be a uniform program of procedure and such a program can be best made after studying the reports that the various boards and committees are to make.

The suggestion is a good one, and we are sure that it will be carried.

CONTRIBUTIONS

SUFFOLK LETTER

 THE Ministerial Association of the Eastern Virginia Christian Conference is a valuable asset in the work of the Conference. It meets bimonthly in Norfolk, and all the ministers in the Conference except three are members of the Association. It has been the custom for years to select some book of importance, each member purchasing a copy, and choose a leader who conducted the study of the book in regular class fashion. In that way our ministers have kept up somewhat with the literary and theological trend of the times. The expense of the meetings is shared equally by all the members, whether they live in Norfolk or Waverly. In addition to regular book studies, practical questions relating to ministerial work are considered in the light of experience, so that each one shares with all in pulpit and pastoral views. It takes only one Monday out of two months and is a school of fellowship as well as of education.

At our last meeting, April 10, Rev. J. F. Morgan, who has been the efficient Secretary of our Association for six years, resigned the position, as he has accepted the pastorate of the Winchester church, and will enter upon that work the first Sunday in May, just after the Convention in Suffolk. Morgan has been pastor of the First Christian church in Norfolk for six and one-half years. During that time he has had a remarkable period of pastoral success. The membership of the church has increased more than three hundred, which is over fifty per cent of the membership when he went to Norfolk. His has been a fine record for a young pastor. Rev. Edwin B. Flory, of New York, succeeds Rev. J. F. Morgan as pastor of the First church, and he bears a good reputation as a minister.

Upon the retirement of Secretary Morgan from our Association a unanimous vote of regret was passed, and he was highly commended to the Winchester congregation in the hope that his labors may be as greatly blessed in that field as in the one he leaves; and we are hoping that his success in Winchester will be an inspiration to the whole Valley Conference. The prayers, good will, and best wishes of the Association follow Brother Morgan to his new field of labor.

This letter may seem to be unusually personal, but the gospel is personal and all the best relations in life are personal. Jesus says, "Follow Me;" and the apostles said, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Religion is a personal relation of human beings to the divine. "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." Creeds and systems of theology are intellectual expressions of what men think; but the relation that saves is a heart relation to God. "If any man be in Christ Jesus, he is a new creature." The Church is strong in the personality of her membership rather than in any other possession. The "life of the Christian is hid with Christ in God." We all should strive to possess more and more the spirit of the Master; and this is the especial need of the pulpit. It is through the minister that God speaks to men, and there never was such an opportunity for young ministers to witness for Christ as this present age; but he cannot do it by words alone; he must "bear in his body the marks of the Lord Jesus." The world is hungry for a message that represents the love, the purity, and the wisdom of Jesus Christ.

W. W. STALEY.

ELON LETTER

 THE Editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN has asked the Church to express itself with reference to the paper and its future. He has written a series of very illuminating and suggestive articles himself. I have read all of them and thought considerable on the issues that face us.

I am convinced that the subscription income cannot possibly pay for the paper. I am also convinced that the editorship should be absolutely divorced from the business managership of the paper. I am sure we can go far toward reducing the deficit by increasing the size of the paper, using the space added for advertising, and by building up a good book business.

In a statement issued by Brother Riddle under date of January 12, 1922, occurs an item for salary of Editor and Bookkeeper of $3,000.00. If the Editor is relieved of all duty but preparing his copy for the press and writing the editorials, he could do this work and be pastor of a church or group of churches. It is possible that Brother Riddle himself would reconsider his decision to retire from the editorship, if he could thus be relieved of all the business cares, proof-reading, and publishing agent's duties. On this basis, we could perhaps get a business manager for $2,400 and an editor for $600, which would leave the salary total untouched.

Now, as to the value to the paper of advertising, candor compels us to say that the income from that source is problematic. Suppose we decide to keep the number of pages sixteen, but increase the size of the page fifty per cent. The advertising rate per page of THE SUN now is $15.00. If we sold this additional space, the equivalent of eight of our present pages, we would secure an annual income of $6,240 from advertising. But adding the additional space and the extra cost for setting advertisements over regular reading matter would perhaps add fifty per cent to the cost of the paper. The cost is figured in the statement above quoted at $7,500. If the cost were increased fifty per cent, or $3,750, we would still net a gain of $2,490 the year from advertisements.

Let us again consider the book and Bible business. In the issue of March 8, Brother Riddle estimates a business of $10,000 annually. He is conservative. By selecting lists of books for ministers, for teachers, for mothers, for the Christian home, and the like, and offering a certificate for those who purchased and read such a library, the sale of books can be made much larger. I may be mistaken, but I suspect we could earn $5,000.00 annually through such a business in such a city as Burlington to furnish a local trade, and with a business man, given only to business, directing the sales and stimulating a demand for books and Bibles.

In no sense must this letter be interpreted as a criticism of Brother Riddle and his administration of our publishing interests. We have expected him to do two kinds of work. This is a day of specialists and of specialization. Occasionally you may discover a man able to give himself consistently and at maximum output to two diverse lines of business. It is always better to differentiate the work of editing and business management, however, and to assign them respectively to two persons.

If I may now revert to the book business, I would like to say that one of the prime needs of our leadership today is to get in touch with the living, vibrant thought of our time. Some of our people are aspiring to do consistent, constructive, worth-while study. Our publishing agent, in co-operation with our various boards, should guide, direct, and stimulate such leaders. As I have said before in the Elon Letter, desultory reading will not do, nor does it continue. When our Movement began, we wrote the books and published the literature that others read. They ridiculed us by styling us "New Lights." The slur pierced us to the quick. We now do not often read what the others to whom our scepter passed write. From being the most progressive thinkers and religious pioneers on the continent, we have entered upon an era of reactionism, or what is the same thing, we have stood practically still with our glorious principles while the procession has passed us by. All progress is relative. The Christian Church has not kept pace.

But in our spiritual veins is the blood of James O'Kelley, of Barton W. Stone, of Elias Smith, of W. B. Wellons—seers and prophets of a high order. What we need now to do is to acknowledge our pedigree and to bring forth plans and methods in Kingdom service worthy of these spiritual sires. It is no time for pessimism. I am an optimist. Our Convention in Suffolk is to justify our hopes and start us on the wave of a prosperity and of a service for God and brotherman such as we have not yet attempted. In order to do this, we must care for our publishing and publicity interests. So I have essayed to write on this theme. Whatever else we do, we must care for THE CHRISTIAN SUN and see to it that religious literature of the best type circulates freely and regularly among us.

W. A. HARPER.

Editorial Comment.—Dr. Harper goes far afield in his figuring. The advertising rate of $15.00 is set because we cannot afford to sell for less and meet the cost of composition, handling, accounting, etc., but that price cannot be obtained. Dr. Harper sent in this letter four weeks ago and we took the liberty of submitting his calculation to two first-class newspaper men and each said that it was one of those things on paper that could not be proven with practice. They are right.—C. B. R.

OUR RELIGIOUS PAPERS

AN absolute necessity in carrying on our denominational work is our periodical literature. To cease to publish means death. We must have a means of communication, to inform our people and to unite all sections in general work. I think no one doubts this. No independent religious paper, however good and however ably edited, can supply the place of our own denominational publications. Every church family should have the Church paper. But I need not argue as to this matter. What tremendously concerns me is the financial condition of THE SUN and The Herald. The fact has been published that for the past year the two papers have failed to meet current expenses with current receipts by about the aggregate sum of $18,000.

As I view it, one of the important things to be done by the May and October Conventions, is to find a way to stop this heavy deficit. To obtain the bulk of the most important news as to the work of our people, North and South, I must pay $4.50 a year and take two papers. I am not complaining of this simply for myself, but when this deficit stares us in the face, despite all that has thus far been done to avoid it, I am deeply pained, and wonder how long this order of things can go on. I believe that it is possible to devise a plan which, after a little time to get it into shape, will solve the difficulty, and cause the publication enterprise to PAY.

My suggestion is to merge the papers. When I say this I am not a partisan for the place of publication. It may be Dayton, Burlington, Norfolk, Columbus, Springfield, or any place where the work can be done the best—to the best advantage, with all sections represented equitably in the editorial sanctum. Each paper has been published at more than one place. Maybe it ought to be in a new place. But let us have ONE paper, representing all sections, receiving the united support of ALL our ministers and laymen. Other denominations have consolidated papers. May we not learn from them? I am for "union of papers."

ALVA H. MORRILL.

Newton, N. H., April 18, 1922.

CONVENTION HEADQUARTERS

AFOR a number of years the need for Convention headquarters has been keenly felt by some of the leaders of the Christian Church. At the last Convention the desire for a headquarters for our Church in the South found expression in the following motion made by this writer: "That the President appoint a committee of five men to consider the matter of location of headquarters for the Convention, as to time, place, and cost. This committee is to be composed of one man from each of the five Conferences, and shall report to this Convention."

This committee was duly appointed and held a meeting, considered the matter, and made the following apology to the Convention: "Your committee feels that the time is too short to duly consider and decide upon such an important step; therefore we recommend that a committee of five be appointed who shall consider these and any other propositions or invitations and report with recommendations to the Executive Committee of this Convention as soon as possible."

This committee was discharged and another committee composed of four men from the North Carolina Conference and one from the Eastern Virginia Conference was appointed. This last committee was not in keeping with the motion adopted by the Convention that the committee be composed of one man from each of the five Conferences and it is my opinion that this is the reason we have no designated headquarters today. The committee has been heard from only once, and the report was simply an announcement that the committee could not agree on the place. Of course they could not agree. But few people, if any, expected them to agree. If the original committee had been continued we would have had a headquarters today.

I have said all this to show how lightly some of the most important matters of our Convention are disregarded by some of the so-called leaders of our Convention. When a Convention expresses a desire for a thing to be done the leaders should see to it that it is done. If the leaders do not accomplish the desires of the people we had better quit talking about our democratic form of government.

It seems to me that this matter of establishing headquarters should have first consideration at the forthcoming Convention. We have been without a headquarters long enough and we are unable to justify ourselves in this delinquency. We may not be able to build and own our house, but we can rent a place until we can build. The thing we should do is to designate the place and then provide the building.

THE BULLETIN

Rev. B. J. Earp, Newport News, Virginia, writes under date of April 21: "Our revival of three weeks closed last night with the church greatly revived, and twenty-one members received."

President Harper, and others of the college faculty, are being called upon these days for commencement addresses in various high schools.

THE SUN would be pleased to have the various pastors report the number of members received on Easter Sunday.

Rev. W. J. Edwards, Coleridge, N. C., informs us that Brown's Chapel has recently made necessary additions by repairs, including the addition of a new pulpit.

Our Durham congregation, Rev. Stanley C. Harrell, pastor, is planning to remodel the church edifice at an early date, spending $10,000.00, or more, for the purpose.

You will be interested to know that we are now in the midst of a series of evangelistic meetings. I am doing the preaching. There are high hopes of great results. The other two Christian churches of the city are holding their revival also. Rev. H. W. Elder is assisting Rev. A. H. Sheppard at North Highland and Rev. J. D. Dollar is helping Rev. P. L. Duke at Beulah, Phenix City. The services will continue at these churches through the fifth Sunday in April.—R. F. BROWN, April 18, 1922.

SPECIAL NOTICE

I will appreciate it very much if alternates or visitors, men or women, who plan to attend the Southern Christian Convention, which will meet in Suffolk, Virginia, May 2-5, will notify me before April 30 of their coming, so that entertainment can be provided for them. Do not put this off—and it will be better to notify me before the time mentioned above. We want to entertain in a comfortable way those who come, but we cannot do it conveniently unless we know who is coming.

THE LARGER LIFE

THE CLOSED DOOR

I never crossed your threshold with a grief
 But that I went without it; never came Heart hungry but you fed me, eased the blame,
 And gave the sorrow solace and relief.

I never left you but I took away
 The love that drew me to your side again
 Through that wide door that never could remain
 Quite closed between us for a little day.

Oh! Friend, who gave and comforted, who knew
 So overwell the want of heart and mind,
 Where may I turn for solace now, or find
 Relief from this unceasing loss of you?

Be it for fault, for folly, or for sin,
 Oh! terrible my penance, and most sore
 To face the tragedy of that closed door Whereby I pass and may not enter in.
 —Theodosia Garrison.

THE MINISTRY OF LETTER-WRITING

It is possible with a very little trouble to make letter-writing, especially at one period of life, one of the most beneficent and helpful things that can possibly be imagined.

Letter may be a great means of bucking up, and in connection with this I will tell a true story.

Many years ago three students who had come to the close of their college career met together. They had been the closest of comrades for years. Never a day had passed without their meeting. They had no secrets from one another. They had been engaged on the same profession, and with opportunities and possibilities very much the same. There was nothing they had concealed in their free, unreserved talk, and there was nothing that needed to be concealed. They knew that their separation and their going into different parts of the country was a very serious matter. The only thing to be done was to write regularly, to write openly, and to take what chances might offer for meeting. Their lives had been thoroughly united. They loved society, but were independent of it. They feared that in the country they might find it hard to find congenial friends. Well, they made their vow, and the wonderful thing is that they kept it. They wrote on a specific day each week and put everything into the letter that they had seen or heard or conjectured. For years this correspondence was regularly maintained, and an infinite comfort the letters were, coming often at very lonely hours. They were eagerly responded to, and there is no such way of avoiding boredom and killing time as letter writing. Spend the evening in writing letters and making them of any length, and you will be taken by amazement with the news when the day has come to its appointed close.

The inevitable changes of life and its growing complexity of relations prevented this correspondence from going on with its primal fulness, but the three are all living, and they all keep the vow and they exchange letters on grave occasions, and visit each other as often as they can, though now of the home-loving age.

But without thinking about it, and meaning the very best, friends sometimes put into their letters rumors or repetitions that cause pain. They do it for the best, and sometimes they do it with a didactic intention, but it is altogether bad. Be sure when you are corresponding with a friend to make your letters as pleasant as you possibly can. If you have written anything that breathes the spirit of carelessness or unkindness, put the letter in the fire. It was written in a wrong spirit and is best out of sight. My point, however, is in particular that these letters should contain, not a flattering element—it is very rare that downright flattery is needed—but your letters should be like your presence, with something hearty and cheery about them. How well everyone must remember getting letters that strangely warmed the heart. They could not point to any definite sentence or statement, but there was a warmth and a glow about the letter that spoke of keen affection and true understanding.

There is a great deal in the detail of the subject on which I shall not attempt to touch, but a few remarks may be made.

Covet the spirit of cheer and good will in your letters, until you get the character of being safe. I have been very fortunate in the matter of receiving letters—very much more fortunate than I deserve, for I have written comparatively few. But I have known a good many men whose letters are a guarantee. You know you may read them right away. There is nothing in them but what will please you, and there is something that pleases you very much in the total impression. Lord Rosebery, with characteristic shrewdness, has said that the handwriting of some people is in itself an offence. And so it is. It is peculiarly offensive in the way of signatures. But beware of writing friendly letters that cannot be opened at once. I do not think that the writers of these are necessarily wicked and malicious persons. They are like the people who advise you as to your course in life, and who tell you your weak points, and quote expressions of this one and that one to your condemnation. I am sure this never does any good. We all see young men spoiling their lives, and are tempted to go and draw them back from the gulf. But, alas! it is hardly ever of any use. It takes away any little influence you may have, and it adds none of any kind. You are in no danger of over praising.—Claudius Clear, in The British Weekly.

Charles J. Chamberlain of the University of Chicago thinks a cypress in a graveyard in the little Mexican town of Santa Maria del Tule is probably the oldest growing thing in the world. With finger-tips barely touching, 28 people can span its 50-foot circumference which exceeds by 14 feet the largest California redwoods.

INTERNATIONAL UNIFORM SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON FOR APRIL 30, 1922.

“Isaiah’s Summons and Response. Isaiah 6:1-13.

Golden Text: “Here am I; send me.”—Isaiah 6:8.

Leading Thought: Volunteers for God’s service are needed.

Teaching Points:

Prophets of God were divinely called to their sacred work. Isaiah’s call and his response were very definite. God is calling in terms just as unmistakable today. What is your response?

Isaiah realized his own weakness, but his ready and willing answer to God’s call gave him power from on high to do a mighty work.

When we see a vision of God’s holiness, we see our own sinfulness. When we see His might, we see our own weakness. But when we surrender our weakness to His strength, power comes into the life.

A vision of God and an appreciation of the need of man, sounds a call to Christian service. God’s call to Isaiah was general: “Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?” and the call is still sounding to men and women today.

“Consecrate me now to Thy service, Lord,
By the pow’r of grace divine;
Let my soul look up with a steadfast hope,
And my will be lost in Thine.”

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR APRIL 30, 1922

Applying Religion to Every-Day Life.—Joshua 22: 1-6

Thoughts of Great Minds:

Religion is not a method, it is a life.” (Amiel.)

“Religion should be the rule of life, not an occasional incident of it.” (Benjamin Disraeli.)

“Our religion should be carried into everything. It should go with us to the farm and the factory; to the counting house and the courthouse; into the sick chamber not only, but into the senate chamber; with the manner it should ride the stormy sea, and with the miner descend into the bowels of the earth; it should sit with the artist in his studio, with the teacher in his school-room, with the lawyer in his office; it should go with the physician to his patient’s, and the artisan to his shop; it should stand with the salesman behind the counter and with the clerk at his desk; it should be carried into our pleasures, and by no means be absent from our politics.” (W. D. Howard.)

“All work is religious.” (Peter Ainslie.)

“Pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep oneself unspotted from the world.” (James 1: 27.)

IN THE COTTON BELT

The meetings conducted in Georgia under the auspices of the Board of Religious Education have been well attended, and the people have seemed most enthusiastic.

Too much praise cannot be given Rev. H. W. Elder, who personally conducted the tour among his churches in South Georgia. He did everything humanly possible to make the trip profitable to his people and pleasant to Miss Eldredge and Mrs. Bullock, on a journey which would have been tiresome and arduous without his aid.

Beginning at Kite, Ga., April 4, where an afternoon and evening meeting was held, and where the people seemed most thoroughly interested, the next meeting was held in Ambrose, Ga. Here also two Conference periods were held, Wednesday night and Thursday morning, after which we motored to Vaneeville and held an afternoon and night meeting there, going on to Enigma for Friday afternoon and night.

Almost all day Saturday was spent in reaching Richland, where three meetings were held. A meeting was also held on Sunday afternoon at Red Hill (Providence) the mother church of Georgia. Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday were spent in Columbus, Ga., at the Georgia and Alabama Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention, the program for which has already appeared in this paper.

The people have responded liberally in a financial way, and in the way of enthusiastic response to the call for an upward step in Sunday school and Christian Endeavor. A Sunday school was organized at Enigma, and the organization completed at Providence of one started a week or two previous. New Christian Endeavor Societies were arranged for at Enigma and Providence, and others made ready to attempt to reach other points on the standard. An explanation of the Sunday school standard also brought promises to attempt to reach one or more points not yet attained.

At LaGrange, meetings have been held with each of the three LaGrange churches, two of which, Southwest LaGrange and East LaGrange, have good Sunday schools; Southwest LaGrange has a most enthusiastic Junior Endeavor.

FIRST SUNDAY SCHOOL AND CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION OF THE GA.-ALA. CONFERENCE

On April 11, 12 and 13, the first Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Georgia-Alabama Conference was held at the Rose Hill Christian church, Columbus, Ga. The meeting was attended by ministers, superintendents and delegates from the various churches. The keynote of the Convention was sounded the first evening in an impressive address by Rev. R. F. Brown, President. Throughout the entire Convention there was deep interest shown in the discussion of Sunday school and Christian Endeavor problems. Reports were given on all phases of the work and adopted. Especially helpful and inspiring were the addresses given by Mrs. F. E. Bullock, of Dayton, Ohio, and Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, of Richmond, Virginia.

Rev. H. W. Elder made two addresses which were very well received. "The Need of Religious Education" was ably presented by Miss Edwina Wood, of Columbus, Ga. Rev. T. K. Currie, of the Rose Hill Presbyterian church, made an instructive talk on "How the Christian Endeavor Aids the Pastor in Training Leaders for Church Work."

On the third morning the Missionary Rally was conducted by the Woman's Board under the direction of the President, Mrs. A. A. Terrell.

The officers for the coming year were elected as follows: President, Rev. R. F. Brown, Columbus, Ga.; Vice President, Rev. H. W. Elder, Richland, Ga.; Secretary-Treasurer, Miss Alymer Goodwin, Columbus, Ga.; General Secretary, Mrs. R. F. Brown, Columbus, Ga.

The place of the next meeting was left to the Executive Committee.

To the pastor and members of the Rose Hill Christian church a rising vote of thanks was given for their cordial hospitality and earnest effort to make the Convention the success it proved to be.

MRS. J. H. ABELL,

NOTES

Are your plans made for Children's Week? This should be one of the biggest events of your church's program this year.

The Christian Endeavor Board of the American Christian Convention has sent us copies of the Christian Endeavor Standard of the Christian Church, together with leaflets explaining the work. We shall be glad to send copies to any of our Southern Societies.

ONE DAY SCHOOL OF MISSIONS—SOUTHAMPTON AND ISLE OF WIGHT COUNTIES

The One-Day School of Missions of the Southampton and Isle of Wight Counties met with the Franklin Christian church, April 4, 1922, at 10 o'clock. There were representatives present from Ivor, Johnson's Grove, Union, Franklin, Mount Carmel, Windsor, Antioch, and Barrett's, Isle of Wight C. H. being the only church in this district not represented. More than one hundred were present and all were agreed that it was a pleasant and profitable day. The general program adopted for these meetings was carried out. Mrs. J. A. Williams, of Franklin, was re-elected Superintendent, and Mrs. Rhodes, of Windsor, Secretary. Antioch was selected as the place for the next meeting. Especial mention should be made of the addresses of Dr. Atkinson, Mrs. Morrill, and Miss Hedgepeth. They were full of helpfulness and inspiration. We consider it of great value to have these leaders go among our churches and carry the messages which they have. The women of the Franklin Society provided lunch in the basement of the church for all who were present.

OUR FATHER'S WILL

The hour is near at hand when the Convention is to meet. Delegates, and others, have varied opinions about things. Strange, but progress is made by the way of the winding trail where many minds differ from each other. It is the process that leaves the dross and magnifies the finer parts.

Regardless of what our opinions may be,

LET US PRAY

That our Father's will may be carried out in regard to

1. The Men and Millions Forward Movement.
2. The Christian Sun and our publishing interests.
3. The women of the Church and their unselfish undertakings.
4. Our mission work and all that pertains to it.
5. Our educational interests everywhere.
6. Our Orphanage and its future work for mankind.
7. Our pastors and their families and flocks.
8. Our local churches and the great work that is theirs.

AND FINALLY

That Kingdom-progress may be made regardless of our ideas, wills, and differences.

"TELL ME A STORY"

A LITTLE OLD MACKINAW CAT

Once upon a time a little cat went out to walk by himself in Old Mackinaw. It was right for the little cat to go walking like that without his mother cat, because she told him that it was time for him to venture forth alone if he wished to be strong and brave. Before that day the little cat had never walked farther from his mother's side than across the woodshed, where he lived, and back again. He was white and so spotlessly clean and plump that babies always longed to squeeze him. Said the mother cat when he fared forth: "Be brave, son cat. Do not fear to look danger in the face."

The little cat felt so brave when he started that he chose a wild and roaring place for his walk. He decided to go up the beach a little way and back again beside the big blue water. It was a windy day, and the waves came

"Swish, bang!
Swish, bang!
Swish, bang!"

on the stones.

High in the sky white gulls were flying. As the little cat went along, stepping high and waving his tail, he looked up and saw them. There wasn't a boy or girl or a baby in sight, nor a hen nor a rooster. It was a bit lonely; but the little cat went hoppity skip, hoppity skip over the stones and felt brave and important.

Boats whistled "Woo-ooo-oo" out on the big blue water, and pine trees sang the lullaby of the pines, and there seemed to be nothing to fear. It was lonely, though, and the little cat had just decided that he had walked far enough for the first time when a huge dog appeared.

The little cat had seen that dog before; but the dog never looked so big as he did that day. His name was Rags, and he was the Airedale that lived in the house that belonged to the little cat's woodshed. Rags was coming straight toward the little cat. He was walking slowly with his head down; he looked as if he were thinking about how a little cat might taste. The little cat hadn't known before that Rags had such a big mouth and such long legs. Rags was coming after him, too; he said so, dog talk.

The little cat was dreadfully frightened, but he remembered his mother's advice and tried to be brave.

Just then Rags looked up and saw two gulls flying low, and then that silly dog tried to catch those birds. They went flying, flying, with their wings moving fast, fast, fast, and Rags went bounding along fast, fast, fast. His feet made a big noise on the stones, and the waves came hurrying in:

"Swish, bang!
Swish, bang!
Swish, bang!"

The little cat thought it very exciting, but he was frightened, too. Up the beach flew the gulls and back again; up the beach galloped the dog and back again. The little cat thought he should never see his mother again when Rags came pounding, bounding straight toward him. However, the little cat remembered to stand still and look danger in the face instead of trying to run away, and he stood like a rock, gazing straight toward Rags as the dog came pounding, bounding, tearing along. The dog didn't see the little cat; it was because the little cat stood so still when he passed. That silly dog was trying to catch gulls in the sky, and that was why he forgot that there was a little cat out walking on the beach.

As soon as the dog was gone the little cat walked home fast. He called it walking, but truly he ran like a streak of white fur. And he didn't stop running until he reached home and snuggled down beside the other kittens and his mother cat.

Then said the little kitten proud and smiling: "Purr, purr, purr!"—Frances Margaret Fox, in the Continent.

THE NOSE OF A FOX.

A fox depends more on his nose than on anything else, and in finding out things that nose of his is equal to a whole library of books. He can go trotting along with his nose to the ground and tell you everything that has happened there in the last twenty-four hours. His nose tells him that another fox has been along that same path; and as he always likes to find out all he can about his own kind of folk, he smells around and learns that the other fox was traveling in a certain direction, that it is about so many hours since he passed, and that he was walking, not running. So he knew he had already dined and was feeling good and full. The tracks told him a whole lot more fox news that he was glad to know about.

Now, scattered all through the woods where foxes live are certain trees where every fox that passes stops and leaves a note for the next one that comes along. The way they do it is like this: Each fox stands on his hind feet and reaches up on the tree as far as he can and makes a scratch on the bark. This tells the next fox his size and how high up he could reach. Every animal that passes through the woods may not "leave footsteps on the sands of time," but every time he touches the ground with his feet he does leave all the information a wise old fox could ask for. The fox can tell by smelling just how many dogs were in the pack that passed by that morning and how many hunters were in the party and also if they were walking or riding. When he gets on the track of a rabbit, his nose tells him all about the rabbit that he has never seen, which way it was going, whether in a hurry or not, whether it was a young one or an old one, and many other things that one would never suspect. That wonderful nose tells him where the family of partridges roosted last night and whether they flew up from their resting place or whether they wandered off through the broom sedge. It showed him exactly the zigzag path the old bullfrog followed when he came out of the pond to hunt for snails, and it showed him the place where a ground squirrel sat upon a log. So you see the little wood folk can have mighty few secrets from the prying nose of a fox when he makes up his mind to find out things.—C. A. David.

EDUCATIONAL

A SAD FEATURE OF MODERN LIFE

The spiritual poverty of an educated person is one of the most pathetic things in human experience. Education is the child and the handmaid of true religion. A religion that does not emancipate the intellect as well as renew and ennoble the heart is, by that token, false. The evidence of discipleship, said Jesus, is that "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall set you free." A Brazilian statesman asked an eminent representative of the United States why it was that his country was so enlightened, progressive, and materially prosperous, while South America was so backward in all the arts, sciences, inventions, and achievements of modern civilization. Receiving no adequate answer, he replied, "I know the reason: the Spanish came to Brazil seeking gold, while the Pilgrims came to Plymouth Rock seeking God." Had the Spaniards of that day possessed in their religion as lofty a spirituality as the men who launched the Mayflower, the entire history of South America would have been changed, and the southern half of the western hemisphere would have rivalled the north in education, culture, progress, and material prosperity.

The modern divorcement of religion from education in many of our higher institutions of learning is one of the most unpromising, not to say portentous, signs of the times. The college faculties of forty and fifty years ago were as eminent for their spirituality as for their scholarship. They were masterful men in learning and intellect largely because they were so devout in their faith and so profound and vital in their religious life. They were character builders, makers of great men, because they had the vision of prophets and Christ's estimate of man's immortal worth. Their personal impress was their greatest contribution to their students in the evolving processes of education. Many a modern educator has lost this human element and interest—this creative personal touch—because he has lost the sources of it out of his own life.

Recently the writer had long interviews with a university professor upon the deeper realities of the spiritual life. He is professedly a Christian believer and a member of an evangelical church. His reading and studies, however, have brought him under the influence of much of the negative and naturalistic thought of the day. Commenting, in a personal letter, upon the peace which is the happy possession of those who are justified by faith, he says:

"Your statement has quite cleared up for me what had seemed obscure in the evangelical position. Though I understand it, and wish I knew the peace the saved soul seems to possess, I cannot honestly say I share your view that only through Christ can the soul reach immeasurable perfection. I read Plato a good deal. No matter how tired and disgusted I am, an hour with Plato restores my sanity and my faith in ideals. His ideal was omoi-osis theo, growing like God, and the means was the practice of righteousness. I believe that if everyone followed Plato's teaching, we should have a saved world just as inevitably as we should if everyone followed Jesus. So I cannot believe the only road is the via dolorosa of renunciation and the cross. I know the way of the cross is not the only road to peace, for I find the Bahaists are at peace. Their peace is as a river, and the mystics are at peace. Their peace of mind is literally ineffable. We hear them laughed at often. It is said the Oriental saint will sit looking at the end of his nose till he is filled with beatitude; but I have known mystics who were as much at peace as Saint Francis, or any other saintly follower of the Lamb."

If this experienced educator, who is still loyal to the Church in outward form at least, has lost the key to the deeper and distinguishing realities of the Christian faith, what must be said of the average professor who has not back of him such a heritage of spiritual life and influence?

Naturalistic science makes no provision for man's deeper needs as a spiritual being, and has no insight into that realm of life. It does not seem to know that were there no supernatural there could be no natural. It consequently imprisons the soul, and intellect as well, instead of setting both free. It will not acknowledge the possibility of a spiritual re-birth which is above the realm of natural law, and yet which millions of the noblest and most intelligent and sane souls on earth have experienced. The power of Protestantism has always lain in the vitality of its evangelical faith. It has built colleges, been the universal promoter of intelligence and free thought, and has, withal, recognized the supreme importance of the spiritual man. When learning in all these colleges becomes divorced from the religion that founded and nourished them, the power and glory of Protestantism has gone, and the civilization produced by its spiritual energy is on the highway of certain and rapid decline.—Western Christian Advocate.

WHY AMERICAN HISTORY?

The city of New York, for the moment concerned regarding the kind of history it shall impose upon its school children, has committed the guardianship of American tradition to one David Hirshfield.

Mr. Hirshfield has been holding hearings. There have appeared the advocates of all kinds of history. There have been those who demand an American past, in which the valor of American arms, the stainlessness of American honor, and the demi-godlike stature of American statesmen appear in bold relief. Then there are those who insist they march behind the white banner of truth and who abhor the idea of remembering national heroes only in terms of the funeral eulogy and forgetting the fact that they ate with their knives. The stalwart advocates of truth have thus far brought into controversy the vital question as to whether the hair under George Washington's powdered wig was brown, or—horror of horrors—red. In addition, Mr. Hirshfield has before him the protagonists of the belief that the salient things are not taught in present history books. These latter rely chiefly on the fact that the books have no record of Washington's home brew recipe.

But the testimony of one witness would seem to indicate that the proponents of the investigation have missed the point. A lecturer who had talked in the schools on "The American Flag" testified that it was his custom to ask the pupils regarding famous figures in American history. In a typical school in the Bronx—the borough in which the alien ear is least often offended by the sound of the English language—he sought information regarding Paul Revere. Two pupils of the entire class had heard the name.

"Now," asked the lecturer, "is there anyone who can tell me about Lenin and Trotsky?"

Every hand went up.—Dearborn Independent.

The negative influence of "Christian Science" is not abating. Its Publishing Society had net profits amounting to one million and a half dollars within one year, according to a report to the Supreme Court of Massachusetts.

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

EASTER AT THE ORPHANAGE

Easter Sunday has come and gone. The little children at the Christian Orphanage had a happy day Easter. Three egg hunts were in store for them on Easter Monday. On Saturday before Easter, Mrs. Walter Harden, from the Graham Christian church, and her Sunday school class, gave the little folks an egg hunt and a picnic lunch out on the lawn.

Sunday all of them dressed up in their new suits and went to Sunday school happy as could be. The day was ideal and our little folks enjoyed the day with hearts filled with gladness. Monday had three egg hunts in store for them, and they awoke with bright expectations. The girls at the college gave all under fourteen years an egg hunt on the college campus. The ladies of the Burlington church brought us enough eggs already colored to give all the children a hunt. On Monday afternoon we divided the eggs and let the little tots at the "Baby Home" have their hunt first. Then the larger children had theirs. It was a happy crowd, and every one found an egg, and some quite a number.

The good women of the church came to our rescue beautifully in answering the call for little dresses and suits for the children in the "Baby Home." Dresses came to us from North Carolina, Virginia, Georgia, Alabama, New York, Delaware, Missouri, and Pennsylvania—two hundred and four little dresses and thirty-four little suits. I regret that I do not have space to publish the name of each donor.

I have a permanent record of each one who sent a dress and will write each one a personal letter of thanks. If the good ladies got as much joy out of the making as the children did out of the wearing, all were happy.

LETTERS FROM THE COUSINS

Dear Uncle Charley: I am sending one of your little girls a dress for Easter and a bonnet to keep the "freckles" off her nose. These are for a little three-year-old girl—that is how big I am. Hope she loves pink as well as I do. Your little friend, Edna.

The baby girl got the bonnet and she is a happy little girl.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: I enclose 30 cents for my dues for March and April. I am twelve years old and go to Fort Hill school. My teachers are Miss Dupesy and Miss Fray. Hope you will have many things to eat. We planted some potatoes peas and beets this morning. The school is going to have an Easter egg hunt. Hope your little children have a good egg hunt. Carl Dunn, Lynchburg, Va., Route 1.

Our little folks had four egg hunts. They had a happy time.—"Uncle Charley."

Dear Uncle Charley: I am a little girl eight years old and I want to join the band of Cousins. I am in the second grade. My teacher is Mr. Williamson. I like him fine. I am sending a dime for the orphans.—Allie Maude Edmonson, Cragford, Ala.

Your letter was deferred from last week. Glad to have you join the band of Cousins. Hope you will write often.—"Uncle Charley."

CHURCH NEWS

NEWPORT NEWS, VIRGINIA

We have been having a great revival within the city of Newport News. Several months ago the pastors of this city of all denominations agreed to launch a simultaneous campaign for souls, beginning April 2, and continuing until Easter. The influence of this campaign has effected the entire city. Every church has increased its membership, some churches receiving over sixty members. Most truly in answer to our prayers God has abundantly blessed us throughout the entire city.

At the Christian church we have had nineteen members added during the revival. Rev. O. D. Poythress, of South Norfolk, has been with us most of the time, and while here did the preaching and led the singing. His sermons were first-hand experimental information, and coming, as they did, from the heart, reached the hearts of his hearers with wonderful effect. Our church has been greatly revived. Wherever he goes Brother Poythress is a hard worker and God rewards his labors with success.

B. J. EARP, Pastor.

REIDSVILLE NOTES

Our Easter service was chiefly the work of the children and the good ladies who trained them for the occasion. The service came off on Sunday night, April 16. The house was packed, both in the main auditorium and the gallery, and the dear little people acquitted themselves very well, as was so well attested by the approval of the large congregation present. The increase in the interest of the Reidsville work for some time past is most encouraging.

On April 12 we had with us the One-Day School of Missions for the Guilford and Rockingham Counties District, and it was a day of real work and much pleasure, and, we trust, also of much profit. We had quite a good attendance and the interest was fine. The speakers of the day were chiefly Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., Secretary of Missions for the Southern Christian Convention; Mrs. Alice V. Morrill, President of the Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, Defiance, Ohio; and Miss Iola Hedgepeth, of our Mountain School, Fancy Gap, Va., making three strong and attractive speakers. Dr. Atkinson brought us a new message on missions. It would seem almost strange that Dr. Atkinson could bring so many new messages on this theme, when he is so frequently speaking on that subject, but he never seems to tire. Mrs. Morrill also brought us a fine message on Woman's Work for Missions. She is a good speaker and well informed in the line of her work. Miss Hedgepeth is young and full of enthusiasm for the work in which she is engaged, the school in the mountains of Virginia. They now have two teachers and they are fast transforming that section of Virginia into a garden of roses, figuratively speaking. They have their new building so nearly completed as to be occupying it in regular work. We wish, very much wish, that all our churches could have at least a One-Day School of Missions.

Sunday, April 30, we expect to have our house of worship dedicated. Dr. J. O. Atkinson is to preach the dedicatory sermon at 11 o'clock a. m. Dr. W. A. Harper is to give a history of the Reidsville church at the evening service, and this reading of the history of the church will be followed by a sermon by Rev. W. L. Wells, the former pastor of the Reidsville church, now of Portsmouth, Va. The public is invited, and this includes our friends at a distance.

FIRST CHURCH, NORFOLK, VIRGINIA

As my work with the First Christian church is drawing to a close I want to say a few words through The Sun in regard to this field.

It is one of the most convenient fields in the Christian Church. The great majority of the members live near the church and are easily reached in a short time from the parsonage by the pastor when he is needed. The parsonage is situated in one of the best sections in Norfolk, and is a very comfortable as well as convenient home for the minister. The people are as fine as one will find anywhere, and I have enjoyed the six and one-half years I have been their pastor very much indeed. They have been great years for me, and I hope, for the church also. I am leaving this field May 1, not because of any conditions that exist here, but because I feel I am needed more on my new field at Winchester. I feel I have decided wisely, and I hope to be of service to our Church and the Kingdom among our people in the Valley Conference. Of course I shall miss my many friends here, and this will be painful for me, and if I had let personal feelings dominate I might have made a different decision, but in all important decisions I try to let the interest of the Church and Kingdom dominate all personal interest and feelings; hence I am going to Winchester. I will always remember my Norfolk friends, however, and will always have a warm spot in my heart for them. I wish for them and their new pastor every possible success. I believe Brother Flory will do a great work here. Of course he will not find it easy, for no minister expects a church to grow without himself and his people doing some hard work, but this work will be done under the leadership of Flory, and the First church will grow, and her influence will be felt in this great city by the sea in the future as it has never been felt before. I congratulate both Brother Flory and the First church in thus getting together to work in the interest of the Kingdom, and predict for them a happy and successful journey along the pathway of Kingdom service.

SOLEMN VOWS

Belote-Chappell

A very pretty and impressive marriage took place in the East End Christian church, of Newport News, Va., April 12, 1922, when Miss Rosa Chappell became the wife of Mr. E. N. Belote. Both are members of the Christian church here, and have numerous friends throughout the city. The church was very beautifully decorated, and the ring ceremony was used. Their host of friends wish for them many years of sunshine and happiness.

MISS HEDGEPEETH SPEAKS TO ELON STUDENTS

Miss Iola Hedgepeth gave a history of her work in the Virginia mountains in a talk to the girls of the college in the Psiphelian Hall Wednesday afternoon. Miss Hedgepeth is a charming conversationalist and gave her talk in a confidential manner. She is so interested in her work that the discussion held the attention of the audience and everyone who heard the talk caught a glimpse of her wonderful enthusiasm and determination that carried her successfully through the many difficulties encountered as a pioneer in the mountain work of the Christian Church.

Miss Hedgepeth was a teacher who felt that the "still small voice" called her to help the mountaineer of Virginia. One summer she saw a notice in the paper calling for volunteers to teach in a summer school in the mountains. She thus secured a position that greatly increased her interest in the work. A gentleman of the Christian Church hearing her relate her experience, wrote Dr. Atkinson requesting him to ask Miss Hedgepeth to tell her story before the Mission Board. Dr. Atkinson invited her to do this and Miss Hedgepeth, trembling with fright, appeared, and due to her speech the Board decided to begin the work and asked her to pioneer in the field. After writing the superintendents of the mountain counties, she decided to go to Carroll county. When she arrived at the nearest railroad station she had no idea as to her destination. She visited the superintendent and he told her of Fancy Gap. She went to Hillsville, where the great Allen tragedy occurred and there took a car to Elk Spur mountain. After many failures she secured board at a mountain home for a few days.

The school house at this place had long before fallen into disuse and the situation looked very discouraging. Miss Hedgepeth was determined to succeed and she has attained her ambition in a certain degree. She has built a nice four room school house and has it well equipped. There are about eighty-five pupils in the school and Miss Hedgepeth has an assistant as the school has grown so rapidly that one person can not do all the teaching. She has organized a Sunday school and has resorted to preaching because there is no preacher in the community. The pupils range in age from five to twenty-five and there are several teachers who are attending in order to become more efficient workers in the task of educating the people of the mountains. She has fitted the children in clothing so that they may attend school and Sunday school. Miss Hedgepeth has begun a work that will grow and bring blessings to those without a chance through no fault of their own.

More teachers are needed in the work for the summer and Miss Hedgepeth is asking for help.—Maroon and Gold.

The Cloud

By REV. J. F. MORGAN, Pastor
First Christian Church, Norfolk, Va.

ALL nature takes on new life when the sun comes from behind the cloud after the rain, and kisses the earth into a garden of dew-drop diamonds. Man also experiences a new thrill as a result of this sunshine. However, for the good of the world of nature, as well as for the good of the world of man, it seems best that both should be overshadowed occasionally by the cloud, for there is the voice out of the cloud that often means as much to the world of nature, and many times more to the world of man, than the voice from the sunshine.

Peter, James, and John on the Mount of Transfiguration with Jesus, were overshadowed by a cloud, and it was out of this cloud that the Father's voice came with the convincing, as well as cheering message to these fearful disciples, "This is my beloved Son; hear Him." It was this voice from the cloud that gave the needed message, and the new vision of "Jesus only."

Thousands of people in this day are overshadowed by clouds of various description, and out of these clouds God is speaking to them a definite message, the purpose of which message is to get them to see "Jesus only." The clouds of trouble and sorrow, sickness and suffering have been the means of leading hundreds to hear the Father's voice, and see Jesus as their only Saviour. The cloud of the individual's sin has to overshadow him, in most instances, before he will hear God's voice, or feel his need of the Christ.

God speaks to us out of the sunshine, too, but this voice is often unheeded, or drowned by the voices of the world. Hence, in order to get the ear and heart of His people, God is often compelled to call out of the cloud.

EDITORIAL

Editing and Publishing A Church Paper

FOR several issues we have been running a series of articles under the heading, "Editing and Publishing a Church Paper." We have written these articles with the hope of acquainting our readers with the real problem that faces the Church paper. It is a problem that is fraught with difficulties and dangers. The financial end of maintaining a Church paper is the most serious in the history of the publishing industry. The Church must become awakened to this situation and set herself to do something for her publications that is really worth while, or reconstruct the foundation on which we have built these things.

We wish to assure the Brotherhood that The Christian Sun has been published during the last biennium just as cheaply as it possibly could. We have on record in our office various estimates on the paper, and yet no equal to the price that we have been paying. Our books, correspondence, and contracts have been kept before the Board of Publication during the bi-ennium. Every member of the Board will vouch for the fact that strictest economy has been practiced. But even in view of these facts, The Sun has sustained a deficit of $10,113.87 for the two years. To this should be added $4,000.00 which the editor has received as a salary for two years, bringing the total deficit up to $14,113.87. From the salary paid, the editor has spent out of his own pocket $1,280.13, for office help, traveling expenses, and incidentals used directly in maintaining The Christian Sun. Our position has been, and is, that The Sun cannot be maintained without an annual deficit of $6,000.00 or more per year. We have canvassed and analyzed the cost of labor, the price of paper, and every item that goes into making up the cost of a publication, and we can see practically no change for the near future. The Convention has within its power to reduce the editor's salary, but since the present editor is planning to retire, he takes the liberty of expressing the hope that the Convention will take no advantage of the present salary basis, especially in view of the fact that The Sun's editor is called upon to be a public servant in addition to his work, and no expense fund provided. It is for the benefit of the cause that we say further that a salaried officer of the Convention should not accept any free-will offerings whenever he preaches or makes addresses. This is the standing rule of the present editor.

But even if the Convention could save in salary, it should bear in mind that under the present arrangements the editor must furnish his own office, office equipment, and provide store space for the book business and Church supplies. Certainly the Convention will offer to bear this burden in the future.

This is not all the dark picture of our publishing interests. While The Christian Sun sustained a deficit of $14,113.87 for two years (over $7,000.00 per year) The Herald of Gospel Liberty lost, in one year, $10,927.54. If we assume that the next fiscal year of The Herald sustains another deficit of the same amount, it will mean a deficit of $35,968.05 on two publications for two years. Brethren and beloved, there is no use saying that we can hope to make a much better showing so long as we operate under present arrangements.

We have pointed out the troubles. The whole Church awaits the answer as to how to solve the situation. One plan suggested for The Sun is for it to maintain its own publishing plant. This is a business-like idea. The Church undertook to do this very thing one time, but made a miserable failure. The failure was not because of the nature of the business, but purely upon its location. Had even one-half the money we spent in building a printing plant at Elon College been placed in a growing town, the business would have been worth now many times its original cost. It was one of the most serious things that have happened to our publishing interest here in the South; and those who were in charge know it as well as we do, and confess it like men. The question arises, then, shall we undertake it again? Personally, we feel that it can be done if the Convention will approve of some plan of financing the proposition.

There are several things to be taken into consideration in building a publishing house. We shall name only one here: Interest must be paid on money, new machinery added, and other expenses met, before profits can be applied to deficits of Church papers.

Who knows but what present economic conditions may be for the Kingdom's good? Who knows but that under this financial pressure of our publications we may be driven to the light where we should have already gone of our own volition?

This is a day of changes, a day of demands—demands that necessitate changes. Some new step must be taken to finance The Christian Sun. We must face the issue. It is not business-like to go along as we are going, though the Church is getting value received for its money, we think. There is a time coming when the fund from which we are now meeting the deficit will be no more. We, therefore, shall present the following resolutions to the Convention:

RESOLUTIONS FOR MERGING THE CHRISTIAN SUN WITH THE HERALD OF GOSPEL LIBERTY

In view of the fact that The Christian Sun shows a total deficit for the bi-ennium of $14,113.87 and that the Herald of Gospel Liberty, during its last fiscal year, lost $10,927.54, therefore, I offer the following resolutions:

1. That The Christian Sun and The Herald of Gospel Liberty be merged, the same to take place on or before January 1, 1923.
2. That it be the sense of this Convention that the combined publication have two editors, and that we elect one and the A. C. C. one; the duty of the editor elected by this body to furnish half the editorials, including a page of notes about our Southern work, maintain the book depository, and serve as Publishing Agent of this Convention.

3. That the Convention instruct and empower the Board of Publication, together with the Executive Committee of this Convention, to work out the details of the merger with the American Christian Convention and the basis of operation for the combined publication.

(Signed): C. B. RIDDLE.

COMMENT ON THE FOREGOING RESOLUTIONS

The Herald of Gospel Liberty has a circulation of 3,500, while The Christian Sun has a circulation of 2,500, making a combined circulation of only 6,000, which is scarcely half the circulation that one of these papers should have.

In combining The Christian Sun and The Herald of Gospel Liberty we should be able to bring together, in a very definite way, the thought and activity of our people. We preach and teach the spirit of unity, and yet it is common knowledge that there are differences between our brethren in the North and our brethren in the South that should not exist. As a denomination, we are too small to have any dividing lines. We even try to divide our missionary work, though it is all too small as it is. A combined publication should serve greatly in many ways to unite us as a people.

By merging the two papers we should be in a position to develop our best writers and further strengthen our contributed pages. It is the constructive element of a publication that is worth while. Local news, including church news, can be so classified as to make it attractive.

The present size of The Christian Sun is known to all of us to be too small, both in the number of pages and in their size. The same criticism can be meted out to The Herald of Gospel Liberty. By combining the two papers we can easily maintain a publication of thirty-two pages, and with the combined circulation, begin to attract some reasonable advertising, whereas now we cannot.

We can maintain for our Southern work a book depository, and by this merger could enlarge it. Book stock from the Christian Publishing Association could be placed on consignment in our Southern office.

Our departments—Missions, Education, Religious Education, and others as now exist in The Christian Sun, represent a common cause for the entire Church and could be carried on in the enlarged publication with greater effect. This will eliminate the expense of carrying the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor topics in two publications.

A combined paper will give us a larger vision of things, bring us into closer touch and fellowship with each other, and should greatly enlarge our horizon as a people.

Brethren, let us consider these things and ponder them in our hearts before saying what we will or will not do. The issue calls for a serious consideration, as we view it.

CONTRIBUTIONS

ELON LETTER

THE ideals of a college are more readily experienced than stated. The founders of Elon College entertained certain high conceptions for the institution they initiated in 1889.

Their first thought was that it should be truly a Christian college. This was also their last thought, and every thought in between has been directly influenced by these two boundary ideals.

Here is the way it has bodied itself forth thus far: A Christian institution will open its doors to all actual or potential Christians. So it must be co-educational. This is no new thought today, but in 1889 for North Carolina it was educational heresy.

A Christian institution must minister to the whole life. So it will provide for athletics, social life, religious nurture, cultural and vocational studies, wholesome food, and whatever else may become the human life.

A Christian institution must minister to all Christians. And so it must not be sectarian. Every Elon faculty member must be a Christian and by life and example support the institutions of religion, but the Board of Trustees have never hesitated to employ any teacher because he happened to belong to another denomination than the one fostering and supporting Elon. As a consequence eight denominations now are numbered in the faculty.

As a consequence too, fifty-two per cent of the student body have come from homes of sister denominations. Students never care for the denomination of a fellow student. They care greatly about his relationship to Christ. And so the Christians of Elon are a body of sincere brothers and sisters in Christ. Perhaps this is why only one person in thirty-two years has been graduated from Elon who was not a Christian.

The standards here are those of similar colleges—fifteen units for entrance, sixty minutes recitations, one hundred and twenty semester hours for a degree, a curriculum of majors and minors in all the schools of instruction freely elective. Of course, the Bible is taught, as the Word of God and the sufficient rule of faith and practice. The Department of Religious Education, too, offers practical equipment for lives of Christian service. Forty per cent of Elon graduates teach. Twenty-two per cent enter the ministry. These facts would seem to justify the contention of her friends that Elon is a character building institution, where high ideals function in altruistic service for Church and for State.

W. A. HARPER.

PROMOTING CIVILITY

In the hurried pace of modern public life, especially that most common to our large cities, people are oftentimes (justly or unjustly) accused for not being courteous and polite to each other. The most striking example of this crowded life, of course, is New York City. But amid the rush of millions to and fro, on the streets, on the busses, in the subways, at the theaters and hotels, and other places of public concourse, there is dawning upon the minds of public service concerns the thought of having more civility—to teach people to have greater regard for each other, and to add more of the qualities of home life to public life.

An instance of this realization is the Fifth Avenue Coach Company, which is putting on a campaign to promote civility in the city. To do this it pledges itself to hire only the most courteous employees—those who will take time to be polite and radiate more sunshine to cheer the people of the stressed machine of business and industry. Also, through the distribution of pamphlets and other forms of literature, the company is trying to educate the public to keep in spirit with the movement. It is attempting to center the minds of the people upon this civility, so that they will discuss it, see its value and need, and practice it.

There are many reasons to justify this new movement in the field of advertising. If we advertise "Postum" or "Sloan's Liniment," articles of food, clothing and necessities of life, why can't we also advertise civility and point out to the ever-increasing crowds, qualities (seemingly intangible), but which are indispensable to the happiness and welfare of human society? We are what we think. If we are able to get people to thinking civility, then we will sooner expect them to practice civility, whether they are in the streets of a large metropolis or the humdrum of so many "Main Streets." It is the unexpected ray of sunshine that is most appreciated.

J. E. MASSEY.

THE PASTOR'S VACATION (?)

The writer reads from six to ten different Church papers, including two of his own, every month. He finds in these papers plea after plea from the editors, asking the churches to give their pastors a vacation—let them get a rest and some new methods and plans for the work of the churches which they serve. But how many of them really have anything like a vacation? Very few, unless they happen to fall sick and are forced away from the field.

The fault is not the editors', for there is not a month passes that these men of God do not call out for the churches to give their pastors a leave of absence. If you will look a bit deeper, you will find that the churches really need the vacation as well as the pastors, and in many instances more, because of the fact that many churches have young men who cannot speak from mature experience of life. My candid opinion is that arrangements ought to be made so these men and churches could have the needed vacation—not simply to hunt or fish, but to study new plans for the church work. If it can not be had without it, it would be better for the church to close up for one month that its pastor might study plans for the work.

But how are we to go about it? The larger denominations and our brethren in the West are solving the problem with the pastors' conference idea, and reports show that the work of these conferences is doubly worth while. The churches pastored by the men taking these courses show a great net gain. Yes, the vacation is needed by both pastor and church, and it would not be a bad idea for the editors of these papers to suggest exchanges of pulpits by men in different sections of the brotherhood for a month. It would be far better than no vacation at all, and might serve as a means of great helpfulness.

After all, the thing I am driving at is simply this: The time has come in the South that we must have some help from somewhere. We need a pastors' council in every Conference, similar to the one in Eastern Virginia. We need a central conference for pastors in the bounds of the Southern Convention, and more than all this, we need a school of theology and training in the Convention, with the very best faculty the denomination affords. We have talked this thing for years, and it is time something was done toward establishing it. There is no man in the Convention who feels this need more than the writer, located as he is at the heart of the educational, political, social and moral center of North Carolina. The pull of it all makes one's work difficult.

It is not always possible for a man to pull up and go to a Conference in Indiana, or Massachusetts, or some other far-away place, and it has not seemed possible, at all times, to even attend the Chautauqua. We need a conference and school of theology and methods for our pastors, and we must have it or continue to lose interest and men. I hope the next Convention will take this matter to heart and act.

SPECIAL NOTICE

I will appreciate it very much if alternates or visitors, men or women, who plan to attend the Southern Christian Convention, which will meet in Suffolk, Virginia, May 2-5, will notify me before April 30 of their coming, so that entertainment can be provided for them. Do not put this off—and it will be better to notify me before the time mentioned above. We want to entertain in a comfortable way those who come, but we cannot do it conveniently unless we know who is coming.

REPORT OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION TO THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

1922 Session

The Educational Situation

Rapid changes have occurred in the educational world the past two years. The war gave a great impetus to education and the government through its Vocational Board has initiated innovations of far-reaching consequence, should they succeed. From the standpoint of the curriculum, the emphasis has been upon the sciences, with corresponding decrease in the numbers of students studying the ancient languages. Experiments are being tried too with reference to mental measurements as an aid to determine fitness to enter colleges and for vocational guidance.

But perhaps the most significant aim has been the erection of standards for colleges. President Wilson by executive order in 1913 forbade the Bureau of Education to standardize the colleges. However, this Bureau is now busy collecting and circulating lists of "standard colleges" made out by voluntary educational associations having no legal warrant whatsoever for such procedure, thus accomplishing by indirection what it has been specifically ordered not to do. We called the Bureau's attention to this violation of their orders. We also wrote F. M. Simmons. He has the issue now in hand. His view is the same as we expressed, that the Bureau is endeavoring to do by indirection what it was ordered not to do directly.

The stronger colleges in wealth and numbers are pushing hard to drive the poorer schools and the small colleges from the field or to reduce them to the status of Junior Colleges. Two years ago we expressed our resentment that standardizing agencies should rate colleges solely by their physical assets. We reiterate that resentment now. It is our conviction, and history sustains us, that small colleges are the effective seminaries of Christian character and of true greatness. It is true of colleges, as of men, that the middle class constitute the nation's finest asset and determine her future.

Christian Education

There is also a growing differentiation of function between denominational colleges and all other types of educational institutions of higher learning, particularly the tax-supported institutions. The denominational colleges are to produce citizens too, but they are to produce Christians primarily, men and women not only motivated in terms of Christian idealism, but definitely trained and experienced in methods and principles of promoting the Kingdom's work. So these colleges are strengthening their Biblical Departments and adding Departments of Religious Education. Our own college was among the first to sense this new expectation of the churches. Bible is now required of all Freshmen and Sophomores one hour a week and elective to all Juniors and Seniors. We have a four-year course in Religious Education, treating such themes as the history and principles of religious education, the Christian home, the local church, week-day religious instruction, the auxiliary organizations of the church, and kindred themes. This department aims to accomplish two things—to prepare those who pursue its work for four years to be directors of Religious Education in local churches and to train those who take even a single one of its courses to appreciate the importance of investing their leisure hours in services to the church.

The Church's System of Education

This Board in January 1921 issued its now famous poster on "The Church's System of Education." The announced intent of this poster was to demonstrate to the eye the articulate relationship between the Sunday schools of the denomination and Elon. Elon by it is defined as the Sunday schools of the Southern Christian Convention engaged in the work of higher education. Prominent educators of the country to whom this system was submitted for criticism have declared it to be unique and sorely needed in all the denominations. There can be no doubt that the Sunday schools of our Church are the normal source of supply for students in our college. The Church's system of education insists that every Sunday school should regard itself as a local recruiting station for our college and that the college in turn should regard itself as heading up the whole educational work of the church. This poster went forth in February 1921. The consequence was that we had 32 schools that reached their quota of one Freshmen in Elon for every one hundred of enrollment or fraction thereof this year and 34 others are represented in the college this year. For the first time in many years more than half the students come from our own homes.

One other step is necessary to make this coordination and correlation of our college and Sunday schools complete—a course of study for students in our Sunday schools of high school age, issued by our college, supplied to the schools, and accredited toward entrance to college. The International Sunday School Council for Religious Education in June is expected to issue such a course. If it should, we will edit it, giving it the Elon and Christian setting, and send it forth to serve the cause of Christ in our midst. If not, we purpose to construct our own course along the following four lines, giving a year to the consideration of each theme:

Principles of the Christian Life,
The Bible and Social Living,
The World a Field for Christian Service,
Preparation for Lives of Christian Service.

Those who are acquainted with the curriculum materials now in existence will recognize that other denominations have courses of study similar to these proposals. They do not, however, serve in their published form to unite the local schools and the college. Our system will be unique in that respect. The possibilities that inhere in this statesman-like movement at coordination and conservation loom large with prophecy for the progress of our church. This system practiced faithfully for a generation will give us a personnel in leadership trained for Kingdom promotion second to none.

Preparatory Department Eliminated

The Board of Trustees have eliminated the preparatory department. This step has resulted in a temporary decrease in enrollment. In a few years we ought to recover. There is no doubt but that it was a wise decision. However, helpful this department was in the years passed, there is no necessity now for colleges to maintain preparatory departments.

Junior College in Far South

There is no need that we should speak in detail with reference to the proposed Junior College our Church is to found for the Georgia and Alabama brethren. A special committee will report on it. Suffice it to say that its founding will supply a long felt need in our Church and we rejoice in it.

Ministerial Education Fund

The Convention at its last session voted to merge the ministerial educational funds of the various conferences into one and to make the Treasurer of Elon College, since he is under bond, the custodian of these funds, loans to be made by him upon the order of this Board, request for the same being first approved by the respective conference committees of education. The custodian makes the following report to us, which we incorporate herewith:

Report of Custodian, Ministerial Funds, Southern Christian Convention.

To the Chairman, Board of Education,
Southern Christian Convention:

As custodian of the funds of the Board of Education of the Southern Christian Convention, I have the honor to make the following report:

There have been turned into my hands by the treasurers of the different Conferences notes amounting to $4,467.35; certi-ificates of deposit, Alamance Bank & Trust Co., and Elon Banking and Trust Co., $1,027.89; balance in bank on checking account, $38.67; Total, $5,533.91.

Report of Auditing Committee:

We, the Auditing Committee, have examined the books of Dr. T. C. Amick, Custodian of Ministerial Funds, and find them correct, showing a balance in bank of $38.67 and total funds amounting to $5,533.91.

W. C. WICKER,
CHAS. D. JOHNSTON.

April 4, 1922.

The funds and notes that have come into my hands have come from H. B. Floyd, J. A. Dickey, W. A. Harper, W. J. Ballentine, and Samuel Earman, Treasurers or Secretaries of their respective conferences. Mr. H. B. Floyd sent me $233.29 in cash, Samuel Earman sent me the Winchester Church note, and J. A. Dickey, W. A. Harper, and W. J. Ballentine sent the remainder.

As yet the Custodian of the Ministerial Funds has not received any funds or notes, so far as his records show, from the Eastern Virginia Conference or from the Men and Millions Forward Movement. It was understood by the Custodian of the funds that all Ministerial funds from these sources should come into his hands.

Very respectfully,
(Signed): THOS. C. AMICK,
Custodian of Ministerial Funds,
Southern Christian Convention.

April 4, 1922.

Other Items

The increase in number of ministerial students attending Elon this year is most gratifying. This is directly attributed to the Men and Millions Forward Movement. The number of our young men studying in the Yale, Princeton, and Chicago seminaries also encourages us to hope for large growth in the days ahead.

There is no doubt that we should officially adopt a college month and annually celebrate it in all our churches. June seems to us to be the most promising month for this purpose, and we so recommend. We urge every church and pastor to co-operate with the college to make this month the occasion of great strengthening for the cause of education in the Convention.

The value of the Elon College Fund has been amply demonstrated through the years. With the founding of the Junior College for Georgia and Alabama, part of this fund should go to that school. We recommend that the name of the fund be changed to "Schools and Colleges Fund" and that the portion of it raised in Georgia and Alabama be paid to the school there, a note being given on the same basis as the note to "The Board of Trustees of Elon College."

We urge our people to pay promptly their pledges to the Standardization Fund. The college needs the income on this fund and deserves that its friends meet their obligations so generously assumed on its behalf.

The indebtedness of the college, incurred by increased cost of operation and needed improvements, full account of which was printed in The Christian Sun in November, 1921, will have to be cared for by a special fund for its liquidation at a later date. We hardly think it advisable to undertake to raise money for this purpose now.

In conclusion, we wish again to record our hearty approval of our college and of its splendid work. We bespeak for it increased support and the devoted loyalty of all who love the Christian church and are anxious for its growth and prosperity.

JOSEPH OF ARIMATHEA AND NICODEMUS*

By DR. FRANK S. CHILD

"Joseph of Arimathea, being a disciple of Jesus, but secretly for fear of the Jews." (John 13: 38).

"Nicodemus, which at the first came to Jesus by night." (John 19: 39).

The association of these two men in paying honor to Jesus at the time of His crucifixion is exceedingly interesting and suggestive.

Joseph of Arimathea was a wealthy Jew, member of the great court of the Sanhedrin. St. Mark describes him as "an honorable counsellor who waited for the Kingdom of God." He owned a garden near where the cross had been reared, and in this garden, according to the manner of his brethren, he had hewn a sepulchre for himself—a room cut into the face of the rock with its entrance protected by a huge stone. Luke says of Him that "he was a good man and a just, who had not consented to counsel and deed" of men who condemned Jesus—doubtless being absent on the occasion when judgment was pronounced.

Nicodemus was a Pharisee and likewise a member of the Sanhedrin. St. John is the only evangelist who refers to him, and he appears three times in this gospel. It was he who sought Jesus by night that he might question Him concerning the things of the Kingdom. "Art thou a master of Israel and knowest not these things?" said the Lord. A man of thought, rigid adherence to law, and high authority among the people. A second view of him is given when the officers sent to arrest Jesus report to the Chief Priests and Pharisees that "never man spake like this man." Nicodemus was present and exclaimed against the injustice with which they proposed to treat the New Teacher. "Doth our law judge any man before it hear him and know what he doeth?" he asked. He was evidently a lover of truth, earnest in his desire to know and do the right. His third appearance is thus recorded in the nineteenth chapter, where it is told how Nicodemus which at first came to Jesus, brought a mixture of myrrh and aloes, about an hundred pounds, for the purpose of embalming the Savior's body—a very large and generous gift, showing the reverence and affection of the man. It was these two dignitaries of the Jewish Church—two members of that Council which had condemned Jesus—who suddenly braved public opinion, took possession of the body, wound it in clean linen with the fragrant spices, and tenderly placed it in the unused private tomb nigh the place of crucifixion.

Joseph of Arimathea, being a disciple of Jesus, but "secretly for fear of the Jews," and Nicodemus, which at first came to Jesus "by night." What a strange, glorious fellowship of love and service bind these two men together in the hour of crisis, the two men who were likewise united by a mysterious bond of fellowship through their timid following of the Master in the earlier days of His career.

For observe what it signified to these two honorable counsellors that at last they openly confessed their loyalty to Jesus—cast to one side their caution, reserve, cowardice, and claimed the privilege of honoring this great Teacher. They would subject themselves to the scorn and hatred of their kinsmen and friends. People with whom they were connected in a social or business way would look askance upon them and perhaps refuse recognition on the streets. The Sanhedrin itself appeals among the Jew court of highest honor and largest authority would probably condemn them as heretics and banish them from its precincts. It meant ostracism and dishonor for these men. Yet it was this startling crisis which quickened the faith of Joseph and Nicodemus into a vital and vivid flame. It was this crisis which emboldened them to assert themselves and publicly enter upon the Master's service. It was this crisis which revealed their true character and gave them their proper place in the company of disciples. When Joseph and Nicodemus were numbered with the followers of Christ their Christian manhood shone with undimmed splendor. Their exalted station, opulence and noble spirit enabled them to serve the Master with notable results. Their strength, bravery, zeal, fidelity, offsetting former timidity and reticence, would have great influence over men who wavered, and inspire many a weak and trembling believer to an honest confession.

There have always been secret disciples of our Lord. It was a perilous matter to confess Christ in the days of the apostles. "for fear of the Jews." And it was not less perilous in the days which followed when the cry often sounded in the Roman amphitheatres, "The Christian to the lions!" Persecution was rife throughout the empire. And it was perilous in later ages when confession often meant a breaking from old form and worship of God under new conditions. There were secret disciples all along down the centuries. And there are such disciples today. This narrative of victory over reserve, timidity, caution, fear on the part of Joseph and Nicodemus reminds us that there is a like victory to be won by many people standing by our side and sharing our great Christian privileges—a like victory with a like result in the development of character and spread of helpful influence.

Secret disciples today stand in no fear of persecution. There are no lions to which they will be thrown on confession of their faith. They will not be ostracised by society and boycotted in trade. And yet the pervasive spirit of Christianity—its leavening influence in statesmanship, literature, business, the realm of family life and community life compel us to believe that many secret disciples live among us. They are respected by all classes. They are often regular attendants upon public worship. They support the Gospel with cordiality and generosity. They set an example of integrity and beneficence worthy and commendable. And yet they say not a word concerning religion, they never refer to the leadership of Jesus. They take no active part in the management of organizations which are devoted to evangelism. They carry no share of the burden, which responsibility for the progress of truth and righteousness puts upon Christian workers. We shall not refer to the excuse given for this apparent indifference. We simply point to the fact that the Church, that Christianity, has reached a crisis which demands that such undeclared Christian men and women declare themselves and throw their full influence on the side of the Master Whom they secretly revere and follow.

A crisis is upon us. The tendencies of the age are materialistic. We measure men and matters by the dollar or by the benefit which prosperity represents. This generation looks with contempt upon failure. Success is the goal—a visible, tangible, material success—as never before in the history of the world. We are all tremendously influenced by these prevailing conditions. We need every help which will enable us to put material things where they belong and spiritual things in their proper, commanding place of ascendancy or supremacy.

It is a period of crisis, for this strong tendency toward materialism—this consideration of life from the physical, matter-of-fact, point of view, is a distorted and demoralizing view of life. It lessens moral force and bedims the eyes of the soul so that men easily drift into the hard life of selfishness, worldliness, carelessness, wickedness. This drift and tendency—this flood of life must be turned into its true channel—into channels of faith—otherwise it will carry ruin and sorrow in its onward sweep. There is needed the strength of every disciple which may be summoned.

Society has also become infected with strange doctrines concerning law, order, force, government, civil, political and religious activity—doctrines and ideals which imperil our peace and threaten to destroy the very fabric of the nation. When such conditions have been widespread in former ages the result has been revolution as in France a hundred and twenty-five years ago, or the disintegration of a people as in Russia today. The restlessness, the talk about anarchy, the impious and hardened assault upon institutions of liberty, morality and religion reveal a state of mind which must be counteracted and conquered. For such a task all the forces of the Kingdom of God on earth must be amassed and marshaled.

Now we might appeal to the secret disciples of the Master on the ground that it is for their good that they manfully make their confession and step into the ranks with us. For there is no doubt that secrecy in a thing so important and vital as religion is a grave hindrance to a person's development and happiness. The mere fact that he hold himself aloof from his full share in life and work means that he forfeits to that extent the share of helpful impulse and rational enjoyment in frank activity which belongs to the acknowledged disciple. He loses a very precious part of life—the sense of glad fraternity in common, friendly, Christian co-operation. But it is the loss which comes to the men who would be influenced by the example and encouragement of these secret disciples that we emphasize today—a loss which to that extent retards and minimizes the progress of our faith. For these secret disciples are not only reckoned as indifferent to the Master—thus forming a company which obstructs Christian progress, but these disciples touch a vast company of other people who are following their example and setting up their standard and treating religion with apparent indifference or hostility. So we have a sad condition in Christian America and in all Christendom—a multitude of men who look unto Jesus as the author and finisher of their faith, and yet cast a certain influence on the side of unbelief or hostility to religion, or suspicion of Christianity, so that the day of Christ and victory is pushed into the future.

Here is a crisis in world affairs. The urgency for cordial union and united action makes appeal to you. I heard the other day of a belated act on the part of a United States Senator, who was finishing his course. Sending for his pastor, he said: "I want to express my sorrow that I have lived my life well nigh to the end without making a public profession of my faith in Jesus Christ. I have lived my life long a secret disciple and have been afraid to speak. In justice to myself, to my many associates and to my Master, I now acknowledge my love and trust. I desire that the young men who have honored me with their friendship and loyalty—the people who have chosen me as their representative in Congress—should know that I am a follower of Christ, and I urge them, warned by my example of unhappy secrecy, to enter boldly and happily at once upon a service whose rewards are rich in proportion to a man's fidelity."

Are there secret disciples here in Elon College? The community, the country, calls for your frank and honorable help—your encouragement in making the Church a strong, aggressive, triumphant force which shall overthrow vice and sin and establish the Kingdom of righteousness and Love. This college town—this commonwealth of North Carolina—this nation must not be given over to rank skepticism or immorality, or vile selfishness, or loud-mouthed lawlessness, or a gross and cruel disorder ending in anarchy and death. The appeal sounds in the ear of every lover of truth and peace and good-will, in the ears of every follower of the Lord Jesus, however humble, reserved in his discipleship—the earnest, urgent appeal—come over and help us. It is a world-wide warfare which enlists every Christian. We need Asia and Africa and the islands of the sea as well as ancient Europe and modern America yielding in some measure to Gospel power. It is a world-wide warfare and it is a world-wide victory. Declare yourselves and come ye up to the help of the Lord and share full-heartedly the final triumph of this Kingdom of eternal joy and peace and righteousness.

We have on hand ten copies Tarbell's Teachers' Guide which will sell for $1.00 the volume, postpaid. First orders first filled. The regular price is $2.00 the volume.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

A SERVICE OF GOLD

When the Lord gave directions concerning the furnishings of His sanctuary, He commanded that they all should be made of pure gold. The altar of incense and the table of shew-bread were to be overlaid with pure gold. The dishes and spoons, the candlestick, the snuffers and snuff dishes were all to be made of pure gold. Our God requires perfect obedience. If silver, brass, or anything else had been substituted, it would have been rejected. Gold—and pure gold at that—was all the Lord would accept.

The Lord has given directions concerning the Christian's life and service, and the same obedience is required now as in Moses' day. We might persuade others to accept a substitute, but not so with God. He requires a pure golden service from each and every Christian today. It must be a service free from the alloy of selfish motives and seeking to win the praise of men. The dross must all be taken out of the life and service, and it takes the refiner's fire to accomplish the work and make it pure gold. Oh, how we dread it, and how we try to shun the fire, even though we have the promise that He will be with us through it all. The trials of our faith, the sorrows and troubles which come, are needed to cleanse and purify our lives and service, that they may become pure gold.

The Lord also requires that each one keep in his or her own place of service. Have you not noticed when reading the story of Gideon, the Holy Spirit had it recorded that when he went out with his three hundred God-chosen men to battle, "they stood every man in his place"? The sons of Kohath were to bear all the golden furnishings of the Tabernacle when the camp moved. That was their God-appointed work. We are told the fate of one of them who attempted to intrude into the place of another. Pushing for prominence, crowding into another's God-appointed place of service, does not meet with God's approval today any more than it did in Korah's day. So, whether we are the candlestick, the snuffers or the snuff dish, whatever we are, wherever we are, we are to be pure gold in the service we render, and do all we can to send the Light of the world into all the dark places of the earth.

PRESENT-DAY CONDITIONS

In this time of turmoil and unrest it seems that the world has gone wild after the material and perishable things, while the spiritual things are being neglected. No doubt, Jesus looks with disapproval on the conditions of the world. Churches being neglected while theaters and places of amusement are being filled to an overflowing. There are millions of children half fed and half clothed.

It is said there are nearly 3,000,000 persons out of work in the United States. If the people, both rich and poor, were following in the footsteps of the lowly Nazarene, there would be no hard times and no suffering children. We need the spirit of Christ imbibed in our hearts that we might be more like Him, more thoughtful about the welfare of others, then we would not do anything that would injure our fellow being. Jesus so loved the world that He died that we might have life everlasting. If Jesus so loved us that He died for our salvation, ought we not to so love one another as to make this world the most pleasant place possible? The world is what we make it. Man has brought the present-day ills by his thoughts and deeds. This will be overcome only when man puts the spiritual things first and conforms his deeds to the will of God.

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

SHALL WE SEND A PREACHER?

Miss Iola Hedgepeth went for us to the mountains eighteen months ago to start teaching a school there. It was our desire to prove to our friends in the mountains that we were not trying to put some cult or creed over on them. The past school term Miss Hedgepeth has had an assistant, as readers of THE SUN know, in the person of Miss Emily Midyett, of Norfolk, Va. We have also erected for the work a commodious and comfortable building for school purposes and for Sunday services. We are assured now that the people in that section of Carroll County, Virginia, that we are seeking to help, want a preacher. I have just today received the following personal letter from Miss Midyett, upon whom the responsibility of the work has fallen while Miss Hedgepeth has been attending our One-Day School of Missions in North Carolina and in Virginia. This letter will indicate something of the need of a minister:

"Fancy Gap, Va., April 7, 1922. DEAR DR. ATKINSON: The five months that I have lived among the mountain people have certainly passed quickly. I thoroughly enjoy the work.

"Last Tuesday sadness had a place in my work. Floyd Ayers, eighteen years of age, a pupil of our school, died with pneumonia. Slowly, slowly, up the mountain road the yoke of oxen drew the wagon which held the casket. His father, relatives, and friends walked behind the wagon. The casket was placed upon some planks that lay upon the ground. Perhaps, seventy-five or more persons were scattered about, sitting on the ground. His father, stepmother, and brother sat just beside the casket. His father stated that he had tried several times to get a preacher to conduct the burial services, but was unsuccessful. He, therefore, asked me to say a few words. It was a real opportunity for me because there were so many there who had never been to our Sunday school. My message was to the living—the words of Jesus Christ Himself, ‘I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.’ (John 11:25.) Ah, how sorely the need of a minister presses! I used the stump of a tree for a pulpit.

“Following the burial I went to the home of his grandparents, with whom he lived. His grandfather was then very ill, and is so even now. His wife desired me to pray and read the Bible. There were some friends present, so we gathered in the room where the sick man lay and I held a short service.

“The Sunday school attendance for March 26 was thirty-two and for last Sunday twenty-one. Although the attendance is not increasing much, the interest is becoming more noticeable. Sincerely, EMILY MIDYETT.”

Miss Hedgepeth assures me personally that the greatest present need is for a preacher. It may be of interest to readers of THE SUN that at least one minister has volunteered to go for a period during the summer, visit the people in the communities we have been reaching, and possibly hold two or three evangelistic meetings. It is the present policy of the Board to hold these meetings during the summer, and then, if deemed wise and possible, to locate a minister with his family there the coming fall.

Uzziah's Pride and Punishment.—II Chron. 26: 1-21

Golden Text: “Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall.” (Proverbs 16: 18.)

Leading Thought: Pride leads one to be untrue to God.

Uzziah was the grandson of Joash, the king whose life was preserved in childhood by Jehosheba. Joash, under the direction of the high priest Jehoidad, followed the right, but after the priest's death, he departed into paths of wickedness, and finally, after a reign of forty years, put an end to his own life. Amaziah, his son and successor, reigned for twenty-nine years, and “he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, but not with a perfect heart.” He conquered the Edomites, but later became idolatrous, and was finally assassinated. This lesson introduces the reign of his son, Uzziah, who came to the throne at the age of sixteen and reigned for fifty-two years, and “as long as he sought Jehovah, God made him to prosper.” As a mighty warrior, as a great builder, as one who loved husbandry, Uzziah enjoyed prosperity. His name spread far abroad. But the very test of his strength came in this time of prosperity and popularity, and he could not meet the test. Hillis has declared: “He who is intoxicated with success is essentially a weak man.” Uzziah failed to recognize that the true measure of greatness is service, and his pride was punished. In verses 16 through 21, we read of his sin and punishment, for “Uzziah the king was a leper unto the day of his death.”

“Keep back thy servant also from presumptuous sins; Let them not have dominion over me.”

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC—APRIL 23, 1922

How to Overcome Difficulties.—Numbers 13: 25-31.

For You to Think About:

Do difficulties frighten you? To be afraid is to be half-defeated. Trust in God—and proceed.

The men who have accomplished most in the world have overcome the greatest difficulties.

The courageous man cannot be daunted by difficulty. A Spartan at Thermopylae was told that the Persians were so numerous that their darts would darken the sun. “Then,” he replied, “we will fight in the shade.” A courageous spirit overcomes difficulties.

Perseverance must be employed in overcoming difficulties. An architect of a cathedral in Cleveland, Ohio, drew sixty plans, all of which were rejected. But the sixty-first plan was accepted. To develop the white blackberry, Luther Burbank examined several times during several years twenty-five thousand bushes. Don't give up!

“Doing what can't be done is the joy of living.”—Sam Armstrong.

“The imperative command of the ‘Almighty’ is ‘to overcome.’”—George Lorimer.

“For whosoever is begotten of God overcometh the world: and this is the victory that hath overcome the world, even our faith.”—I John 5: 4.

Delegates to the Southern Christian Convention were appointed from each of the Woman's and Young People's Societies in the district.

Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson was appointed Superintendent, and Miss Mary Andrews Secretary for the coming year.

Liberty Spring, Nansemond County, invited this body too meet with that church next spring.

About two hundred delegates and visitors were present, and the box lunch plan was used very successfully, and it was decided to continue this plan for next year. The good ladies of the Bethlehem church served delicious hot coffee to go with the lunch.

The addresses of the day were very instructive, fraught with interest, and gave a good insight into the work which is being done in the mountains of Virginia and on the foreign fields.

Rising vote of thanks extended the members of Bethlehem for their generous hospitality.

MISS MARY V. ANDREWS, Acting Secretary.

"TELL ME A STORY"

HOW THE CHILDREN WELCOMED JESUS

After Jesus had been teaching and preaching for about three years he went up to the great city Jerusalem to a big passover gathering. He had done so many wonderful works, such as healing the sick and even bringing the dead back to life, that everybody had heard of him. Besides, he had been kind to everybody. He knew people by their names and talked to little children. So when He first got to the city a large crowd of people went out to give Him a welcome.

But He was not welcomed by some. They were envious because the people left them to follow Him. And besides, when He went into the temple, which was God's house of prayer, he found people buying and selling, and because it was wrong He drove them out.

Then the people who had not liked Him before became very angry and planned to kill Him. This caused most of those who had welcomed the Master to the city to forsake Him. And now those who had waved palm branches and even spread down their cloaks for Christ to walk on as He came into the city, got frightened and left Christ alone to face His enemies.

Jesus must have felt very lonely. He needed a show of love from some one. It is an awful thing to have no one to care for you.

Just when this lonesome moment came to Jesus, and He seemed to be given up by every one, a very beautiful thing was done. Some children who had been singing in the temple choir came out and saw Jesus. They knew how He loved children. He was their great friend. They saw a hurt look in His face, but He would not forget to mingle with the children. And when He saw them He was glad, and they saw His face grow brighter.

At that time one of the boys commenced singing, "Hosanna, Hosanna." Instantly all the others joined in and their voices rose clear and sweet, and the sound rang throughout the temple. They kept on and grew more joyful all the while. "Hosanna, Hosanna, blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Those who hated Christ tried to stop the singing. But the boys loved Jesus so much they were not afraid. And as Jesus listened to them, all the sadness left His face and a bright, happy smile came instead. He went amongst these boys and put His hands on their heads and His arms about them. He did not take any notice of those who were so angry, for He was happy in the welcome of the children. He left the temple to go back to Bethany for the night, and the children went home. As they went they talked to one another about their great friend and when they got home they told their parents what had happened in the Temple, and their parents were also glad.—The Christian-Evangelist.

IF I WERE THE PREACHER

IF I were the preacher I am sure that I would soon be wishing I had an easier job.

I am certain of one thing, that I would be wishing that I had a better brand of laymen to work with than the writer of this article.

I have often thought that the situation between the preacher and the layman is like the ancient joke about the Pilgrim fathers. It is to the effect that the Pilgrim mothers had a very much harder time than the Pilgrim fathers, because they had to endure not only the hardships of the wilderness, but they had to endure the Pilgrim fathers as well.

A minister has to contend not only with the actual handicaps of his work, but frequently has to contend with the laymen as well.

I have been familiar with the work of quite a number of churches, and the more I see the accomplishments of preachers with inadequate equipment, large numbers of indifferent members and meager salaries, the more I marvel at their great achievements.

"Sell Your Hammer"

I hesitate to write on this subject lest anything I say be construed as a wholesale criticism of the ministry. I have no desire to sit in the seat of the scornful about any phase of the work of the Church, or to take the smallest part in an anvil chorus on the work of the ministry. I venture to say that I could successfully defend the proposition that no company of men are rendering service higher in character, variety, or lasting value to the country than the preachers. For a good many years my advice has been, in the everyday language of the street, to the critics of the preachers, "Sell your hammer and get a horn."

The few things that I say I would like to do if I were a preacher are merely some things that I have seen scores and scores of preachers do and my statement amounts to saying that I would like to be like them.

The First Job

First of all, if I were a preacher, I believe I would preach. That is so obvious that it sounds foolish, but it is not as foolish as it sounds. I am old-fashioned enough to believe that the preacher's chief excuse for asking men to listen to him is that he is a messenger of the "good news" of Jesus Christ.

He may also be a learned essayist—many preachers are. Or he may be an authority on the labor question, or the immigration question. He may be a shrewd commentator on current events, but these things are incidental to his main business, and when the preacher regards them as his principal job he loses power.

If I were a preacher I would try to make everything carry this message: "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Now that does not mean that I would keep harping on one single note, like a man tuning a piano, until the congregation gets nervous prostration.

A preacher can asphyxiate any church in America in six months by wearing threadbare one little section of Truth. The gospel ruins the whole octave of human life. Nothing human is foreign to it, but I would like to make all the different streams run into one river.

To use a crude illustration, I have a friend who is a traveling salesman. He does lots of other things. He has a family and a garden. He can talk baseball, politics, and once in a while he can venture an opinion on music, though he never puts very far out to sea on this subject. But no matter what he talks about he always sells goods. He does not come back from a trip with nothing but the memory of a few pleasant conversations to show for it. Now sometimes I believe the preacher does come back from a trip without having sold very many goods. He is in great danger of becoming so many other things that preaching is only one of his side lines. He is an engineer, advertising man and also sometimes a good deal of an errand boy.

Especially today is there tremendous need of a preacher to be an ambassador of God. There are lots of things to talk about, but there is one message that in its various forms is needed more than anything else, that, "If any man is in Jesus, he is a new creature."

Everyday Speech

If I were a preacher, I would try to talk everyday language. I do not mean that I would use slang. Slang in the pulpit is a pitiable, impertinent substitute for ideals.

Whenever a preacher uses slang in the pulpit I would like to get up and go out. Sometimes I do. But there is a great danger in the other extreme. Sometimes the preacher's message is wrapped up in barbed wire entanglements of speech foreign to everyday life. We hear a good deal of discussion that certain dead languages ought to be studied in college. We ought to remember that the deadest of all languages is dead English, and we might say to the preacher, "The goblins will catch you if you don't watch out."

Visiting once in a church I heard something like this: "If the Church is to function effectively the norm of its accomplishments must be the cultivation of the expressional activities of the adolescent." Now that may mean something. I cannot say. But nine men out of ten do not know what it means, and ten men out of ten do not care. A sermon that is heavily loaded with such words as function, analytic, consequential, apocalyptic, and others of the same six-syllable family, is bound to strike on the rocks before it comes home to port. The message of Jesus Christ is all bound up in a strait-jacket.

If I were a preacher I would try to tear off the bandages and let the message run in plain English words so direct and familiar that no one could miss its meaning.

Using the Men

I would try to use the men in my church as much as possible. Being a layman myself I know what stubborn, cantankerous creatures they frequently are, and I admit that it is a hard job to get men moving and to keep them moving. I do not mean that ministers are not today making spiritual use of the laymen, but there is a big field of opportunity. A preacher who can get twenty men to work with him multiplies himself. Many a minister wears his life out trying to do more than any one man can do, when some of the things he does could be done by other men. Sometimes the preacher acts as though he were Robinson Crusoe stranded on a desert island with no one around who could do anything. Particularly now in the Methodist Church, with this great evangelistic campaign on us, I would like to line up every last man possible for evangelistic work.

In using men I would begin with my official board. I would not let an official meeting degenerate into simply a discussion of repairs and janitors' wages. I would plan co-operatively with the board for definite instruction and inspiration looking toward leadership.

Yesterday vs. Tomorrow

I would put my major effort into the development of all the latent possibilities in the young folk. The old folk have done their best or their worst for the Kingdom—their comfort should not be disturbed unnecessarily—but the rising generation needs adroit leadership if they are to possess the land.

Religious Education or Pious Pastime

I would contrive by hook or crook to make the Sunday school feed the Church rather than have it sit as a separate or competing organization as it too frequently does. I would try hard for a grip on teachers and officers and lead them to see the possibilities of real education in the realm of religion and the inutility of overloading the young mind with Hebrew legend and history.

The Fight for an Open Mind

I would do forty things to keep the hinges of my mind from becoming rusty. For instance: I would read the best papers of other denominations; this to broaden and humanize my circle and help me minimize the cant and jargon of my own sect.

If a college or university were within hailing distance I would, every year or two, take a course in something—economics, sociology, psychology—just to keep fresh and up-to-date in the world of thought, that world where things have their beginnings. I would not want to be the last man to hear of the new vital things and bring them to my people.

I would play golf or tennis or have some other such hobby, and whatever the game or hobby I would play it well.

And unless I had such confidence in my calling and message that not all the lame laymen in the Conference could shake I would quit and go back to the farm or forward to life insurance.

A Wide World View

If I were a preacher I would try to keep some open windows in my church and in my sermon, out of which a man could see a good slice of the world. Nothing puts more enthusiasm into the average man than to feel that he is part of a tremendous Church that it going into all the world, righting wrongs and lifting burdens. Men are lifted out of indifference by getting the vision of Christianity in earnest and on a big scale.

The common type of ingrowing religion which never comes outside of the little circle of one small neighborhood has not much thrill for the average man. If a man can feel that the Church is actually doing what it is supposed to do to "save the world," he is ready to jump at the chance to help it.—A. A. Clarke, in the Christian Advocate (New York).

REVISED GOVERNMENT AND PRINCIPLES

The Revision Committee of the Convention has passed upon the revised Government and Principles of the Christian Church and is soon to authorize the publication of the new edition. The Convention's Publishing Agent desires to ascertain something of the demands for the book so as to know how many copies to have printed.

It does not seem practical at this time to issue the new book in more than two bindings. The cloth binding will sell at 75 cents the copy and the morocco binding at $1.50 the copy. In order to ascertain the demand for the new book at these prices we will thank those who care to place order to fill out the coupon below and return to us at an early date.

CHURCH NEWS

PEOPLE'S CHURCH

At the annual election of officers of People's Christian church Sunday school, held Sunday afternoon, April 9, Mr. John B. Hutton, a prominent Dover attorney-at-law, who has been superintendent of the school for a number of years, was unanimously re-elected, as were all the remainder of the officers of the school.

After the election had been completed, Herman C. Taylor, teacher of the William T. Smithers class of the Sunday school, which now numbers nearly 175, with an average attendance each Sunday from 75 to 100, stepped to the front of the room and asked for a few moments' indulgence of the school. The request was granted. Mr. Taylor then addressed the newly re-elected superintendent as follows:

"Mr. Superintendent:

"This Sunday school is a school that believes in doing things, as is fully demonstrated in the manner in which the membership of the school has increased within the past six months.

"There is a class in this Sunday school (the William T. Smithers class) which also believes in doing things, which I feel can be fully borne out by the mentioning of but two or three things of the more important things recently accomplished by this class.

"From January, 1921, to July, 1921, this class through the fasting pledge, contributed to the starving of Armenia and others of Europe, over $350.

"Last year this class also contributed to the new organ of this church by the multiplying of a dollar given by the teacher to several members, also receipts from a motion picture entertainment, $142.

"This class has also contracted for a memorial window to be placed in this church to the memory of its first teacher, Hon. William T. Smithers, more than half of the cost ($185) having been subscribed and the larger part of the subscription paid in.

"It has also contributed since December 4, 1921, up to last Sunday (April 9) $189.94 to the starving of Armenia, by the fast pledge.

"This class, recognizing the splendid organization of this school under the most efficient leadership of its Superintendent, John B. Hutton, who has marshalled the forces for several years, in a general-like manner, and today has again been honored by this school with a re-election for another year, desire to express to you its sincere appreciation of your keen interest in all things pertaining to the school as well as pledging to you a continued support of loyalty in making People's church Sunday school the largest and best school in the town of Dover.

"And in further appreciation of your services to this school, I desire, on the part of the William T. Smithers class, to present you with this small token, a brief case, feeling that as an attorney-at-law, it might be of assistance to you in 'packing up your troubles' when you appear before the courts of this state, to plead your clients' cause, and incidentally may be of valuable service to you when you take your trip to the far West, in quest of the several millions said to be waiting there for some of your clients.

"I take great pleasure in presenting you with this brief case."

Superintendent Hutton, who was completely taken by surprise, no intimation whatever having been given by teacher or class of any such presentation, recovered himself sufficiently to acknowledge the gift in a most appreciative way and thanked all for the good wishes expressed and the pledge of continued loyal support in the management of People's church Sunday school.

DEDICATION AT REIDSVILLE

The Christian church at Reidsville, N. C., will be dedicated April 30, at 11 o'clock in the morning. Rev. J. O. Atkinson, D. D., will preach the sermon. In the evening Dr. W. A. Harper will read the history of the church, after which Rev. W. L. Wells, Portsmouth, Va., will preach. The friends of the church, living within reasonable distance, are most cordially invited to be with us. We are expecting to have a day of blessing and shall hope for a large attendance.

J. P. BARRETT, Pastor.

The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord.—Psalm 37: 23.

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA

The second anniversary service of the First Christian church of Richmond, Va., was held April 2. Rev. J. P. Barrett, D. D., of Reidsville, N. C., preached both morning and evening. He gave two strong sermons which delighted and inspired our people. Three members were received into fellowship at the morning service and one candidate baptized at the evening service.

We feel that the Lord has richly blessed us in the two years of our organization. More than one hundred members are on our roll, among whom are a number of the most loyal and faithful workers with whom it has been my pleasure to labor. A lot has been purchased and subscriptions and appropriations secured which justifies us in proceeding with our building program. The contributions of the church, in all departments, have been more than $6,000. We are continually finding other people interested in the Christian Church and expect to receive another group into fellowship Easter Sunday.

We feel that there is a good opportunity before the Christian Church in Richmond and trust that we may have the prayers and cooperation of the brotherhood in the great undertaking before us.

THE BENSON MEETING

By request we began a meeting at Benson, N. C., and continued for ten days, with gracious results, so far as we were able to understand. It was indeed a time of spiritual uplift, and when the meeting closed the dear people expressed their appreciation in a very sweet and substantial way. This is a consecrated and spiritually minded people. God bless and prosper them!

We are now in Danville, Va., planning and arranging for a series of meetings. We are praying and looking for a great meeting. This church has had, for quite a while, some serious trouble, but now it seems to be moving on harmoniously. We have a fine Sunday school. We have a Woman's Missionary Society and we are trying to get every member of the church to become a member of it. The women active members will have control of the business. The men will only be honorary members. If young and old, male and female, were asked to connect themselves with the Missionary Society, it would be a means of getting our young people interested in missions. I think it would be wise for us, as soon as we receive a member into our churches, to get him or her to join the missionary society and thereby start at once in this great and good work.

P. T. KLAPP, Pastor.

April 10, 1922.

PORTSMOUTH, VIRGINIA

The second Sunday in March was the beginning of a series of evangelistic services with the First Christian church, Portsmouth, Va., closing Sunday night, March 26. Rev. J. F. Morgan, Berkley, was with us and rendered a most effective service in leading the singing and in other ways. The pastor did the preaching, and by the earnest prayers and splendid co-operation of our people the Lord gave us a great meeting. The interest and the attendance increased from night to night. At times the Spirit's power was most manifest. Hearts overflowed with joy. "It was good to be there." We had prayed for a real revival in the church and the Lord heard our prayer. There were twelve or fifteen professions of faith in Christ and a goodly number of reconsecrations and seventeen additions to the church. It was a gracious revival and we give our Lord the praise.

I am glad to say that our work here is making progress. The church is in working condition, and our people seem to be very much encouraged with the work in general. At some early date I want to write more in detail of our work here, for some of our organizations are doing some very interesting work.

Our good people here are looking out for the material needs of their pastor and family. On Thursday night of last week—April 6—a large number of our church members and some who were good friends of our church and the pastor came to our home, and they came with a real pounding. It was a heavy pounding. For instance, they came tugging in with a two-bushel bag of fine Irish potatoes, which was borne of two; about one hundred pounds of sugar, one-half barrel of flour, nicely cured Virginia hams, a large quantity of the best coffee, canned goods, Crisco, and a large number of other things for the pantry; and when I came down to my study, which is in the church, I found an additional amount of good things given by the Loyal Helpers Bible Class of our Sunday school.

For our splendid, big-hearted people to remember us in such a substantial way fills our hearts with gratitude to God and to these fine people. We tried to find words to express our thanks, but we could not. May God bless them all and help us to serve them in our Master's way, is our prayer.

CALLED HOME

MILLER.—Mrs. Lottie May Miller was born December 23, 1889, and departed this life March 3, 1922, aged 32 years, two months, and 10 days. Death came after a long seige of affliction. Her husband and three small children survive; also two sisters and two brothers. Death is unusually sad in this case when one thinks of the three little ones who will likely need so much the care of a mother in their growing years. The deceased was a member of the Woods' Chapel Christian church, and expressed herself freely to her friends as being ready any time to meet the Lord, though wishing to live for the sake of her loved ones. Funeral services at Woods' Chapel, March 5, 1922.

A. W. ANDES.

RHODES.—The home of Brother and Sister Levi S. Rhodes at Linville was made sad by the death of their daughter, Mabel Edith, March 4, 1922. Death came as a result of severe burns received a few days before when her clothing caught fire. Mabel was born July 5, 1897, making her age, therefore, 24 years, seven months and 29 days. She was never in good health, and, perhaps by reason of her afflictions, was all the more tenderly loved by the others of the family. Besides her parents she is survived by three brothers, and two sisters. Funeral services were conducted at Linville Christian church, March 6, 1922.

A. W. ANDES.

HAWKINS.—Mrs. Sarah Catherine Hawkins was born January 1, 1854, and departed this life rather suddenly, March 8, 1922, at her home in Edinburg, Va. Her age was 68 years, two months and 27 days. On November 1, 1877, she was married to Erasmus Dewitt Hawkins. The husband still survives, together with four sons, and three daughters. She also leaves three brothers and three sisters to mourn her departure. The deceased was held in high esteem by all who knew her. Funeral services were held at the Disciple church in Edinburg, March 12, 1922, and the remains laid to rest in the town cemetery.

A. W. ANDES.

ELLIOTT.—Mrs. Mandy Jane Elliott, of Ramseur, died March 21, 1922, in her 83rd year. She was so well known and so highly respected in her town that her death cast a gloom over all. Her long life was a blessing to her children and her church, and she will be sadly missed from the large circle she leaves. Her whole life had been religious. She loved her pastors like a mother, and the Bible and The Sun were her favorite reading.

She was twice married. Her first husband was William Chervis Poe, who was killed during the Civil War. To this union were born three children. All have died but W. E. Poe, of Ramseur, with whom she made her home.

Her second marriage was to David K. Elliott, who passed away 25 years ago, leaving her a widow with little children, a second time. To this union were born three children, one of whom, Mrs. Cora Lee Brown, died five years ago. Those surviving are George W., of Randleman, and W. M. Elliott, of Ramseur. There are seven grandchildren, one of these, W. C. Poe, whose mother died when he was small, she reared and loved as tenderly as any of her own sons.

She was a charter member of our church at Ramseur. We buried her in the cemetery where the church she loved so well seems to keep watch over her, and covered her grave with beautiful flowers.

Giving

By REV. T. E. WHITE
Sanford, N. C.

GIVING is a command (Luke 6:38), a grace (II Corinthians 8:6,7), and a blessing (Acts 20:35). There is no other Bible command any more strongly surrounded and supported by Biblical reasons. The questions of Why, What, How, How Much, When, Whom, and To Whom are all satisfactorily answered in God's good Word. God wants us to be like Him, and He is always giving. Jesus, our example, was always giving. To be like the Father and the Son, I must give. The first gift I should bring is myself (II Corinthians 8:5). Then follows praise and thanks, and of our increase. In II Corinthians 9:7 we are told both how we should, and how we should not give. The Scriptures enjoin that we should give ourselves entirely to God. This done, it naturally follows that whatever we may possess is His also. This elevates us to stewardship, and makes us partners with Almighty God.

The tithe is the minimum amount that God demands of all, whether saved or unsaved, whether paid or unpaid. This law is still binding, for Jesus set His kingly seal upon it (Luke 11:42). The reason more is not about it in the New Testament may be understood when we remember that the early Church exceeded so far the law of the tithe. At first all who believed sold their possessions (Acts 2:44,45). This, however, was not obligatory (Acts 5:4). The churches of Macedonia exceeded their power (II Corinthians 8:3). Obedience to (I Corinthians 16:1-2) answers the questions as to how much, as to the time when, and to the persons.

We can no more give for another than we can repent for another. All gifts should be given in the name of Jesus. He is the real receiver of all true gifts (Matthew 25:40). A knowledge of this way, and strict walking therein leads us to the open windows of Heaven (Malachi 3:10).

What is your business, Brother Preacher—to preach to a world of sinners or to coddle the saints?

OUR PASTORS

Our pastors are faithful, sacrificing, and humble servants of God and the people. Out of these words can be written their greatest epitaph. They are faithful to their trusts, sacrificing in their needs that others may be helped. They are humble in their service of God and those whom they lead and give spiritual counsel. Our pastors deserve the best—they deserve far more and better than most of them get. We have it in our hands and hearts to make our pastors feel that they are the noblest class of men on earth, and likewise we can make life a burden to them. In which direction are you working, fellow church members?

“Most of the things sold over the bargain counter have ‘No Exchange’ tags on them.”

OUR WOMEN

A new day has come to our Church in the South. For years we considered ourselves progressive, enlightened, and liberal, and yet gave the women no special place in our Conference and Convention work. Shame upon us men that they had to ask for a place. With the sweetness of the character of Mary and with the devotion of Martha, they came to our rescue—and more, they have gently, quietly, modestly, worked in His name. Their number has multiplied, their work prospered, and already we call their names blessed. The Sun in behalf of every man of the Convention, pays this feeble tribute to our great and noble women and bid them God-speed.

“No change of circumstances can repair a defect of character.”

THE MISSION OF JESUS

Jesus announced His own mission. He came to seek and to save the lost. He came to seek the man who has lost his way as well as the man who has lost his soul. There are those who have strayed away, missed the path. Jesus is seeking to find them. He is ever on their trail. He is bidding them to return. He is following them over life's rugged road, through the night's sightless path, in the world's endless and uncertain beat, and into their every thought, act, and deed. “Behold I stand at the door and knock.” Yes, even after we have tried to close the door to Him, He knocks—gently knocks—that He may have access to the secret chambers of our life and heart. Jesus came to seek and to SAVE.

“Success comes in cans. Failure in can'ts.”

“THE FATHER - - - LOVETH YOU”

Love is the world's strongest and noblest tie. In the hovel and in the mansion love finds it's way. Love expresses itself in thousands of ways. Love has her hundreds of vocabularies. Her speech may be silent, but never goes unnoticed or unheard. The heavenly Father, too, loves in many ways known to us, if only we let Him come in and abide. The Father loves us. “The Father - - - loveth you” is one of John's most beautiful statements. The Father loves us, loves us ever and always. His love is abiding, enduring, faithful. Reader He loves you—this heavenly Father does. Shall this Father's love go unheeded, unnoticed, and untried by us? His love is for all—the saint and the sinner.

“It's better to be a peptomist than either an optimist or a pessimist.”

THE WOUNDED HANDS

The hand makes an interesting study. It beckons to the one who is trying to find the way; it signals the fast running train that is about to encounter danger; it helps to vanish pain; it cheers by the touch when we grasp the hand of another; it is the servant of the heart in doing evil or good, but seems to be filling its function when doing good. Human hands have the privilege of doing what His wounded hands would were they here to administer. And it is the wounded hands of our Lord that we need to grasp, for we need their leading, their divine touch, and to imbide their gentleness. Let the Church and all her followers hold fast to the wounded hands of our crucified Savior.

“The ladder of life is full of splinters but we never realize it until we begin to slide down.
Keep climbing.”

HOW BIG IS YOUR TOWN?

How big is your town? We do not mean its area in feet or miles or blocks. We do not mean the number of men, women, and children. We do not mean the number of houses or the miles of paved side walks or hard surfaced roads. We mean is your town big in heart, and if so, how big? We mean is your town big in purpose, and if so, how big? We mean is your town big in ideals, and if so, how big? We mean is your town big enough to protect the weak, the innocent, and the helpless? Is your town big enough in thought and purpose and motive to have fine churches, good preachers, good schools, and the things that elevate and educate? Does your town have a heart, a purpose, and an ideal? How big is your town? Give the answer without the use of the dollar mark.

"If God wants a mushroom, He can grow it overnight. He hasn't chosen to grow leaders that way."

POWER OF THE PRESS

The printing press is used for every kind of propaganda. The sinner is just as busy with it as the saint; the platform is just as active as the pulpit; political powers and parties are just as busily engaged as the pew. The power of the press does not lie in the mechanical form or find its greatest asset in large buildings and modern machinery. The power of the press lies in the human heart. It is the motive behind the press that makes the press powerful. A sinner can make every form of the printing art respond to his hand just as easily as the saint. Servants of the devil can print the Bible in just as nice a style as servants of the most high God. But behind every edition of the Bible lies the religious force that demands its publication. Illustration after illustration would only repeat that the power of the press is in the individual and not in its advancement through improvement and invention.

"Failures are people who can just sit down anywhere and hope."

SOME COMMON SENSE

Henry Ford not only manufactures automobiles, but he issues each week the "Dearborn Independent," and he is truly making it an "international weekly." Mr. Ford contributes a page each week—"Mr. Ford's Page"—and in a recent article of Mr. Ford's on Law and Order, we quote the following, which has in it a worth while consideration: "If a man kills another, he should be compelled to take up that other man's burdens and carry them through. He should be compelled to labor under surveillance for the fulfillment of his victim's economic responsibilities. If his victim left children, the slayer should be put to work to support and educate those children. Murder would be a serious thing if murderers were thus compelled to live out the economic duties of the life they destroyed. And injuries thus arranging for restitution would find truer verdicts. What is more wasteful than for the state to kill a man, losing two lives for one, and leaving families without the benefit of restitutive labor?"

A HIGH HOPE

We have a high hope of the Convention this week—a hope that an increasing number share with us. It is the hope that every speaker on the program will have and exercise the highest regard for the Convention's time. If Congress were a more deliberative body than that of speech making it would get more done and come in for less criticism from the public. We need the inspiration of the addresses, it is true, but above all the Convention has a real work to do. Many a long speech has had its opposite effect on a vote. Many a good thing has been killed because of much speech making. Brethren and beloved, let those of us who are scheduled to speak be brief, to the point, and remember the other fellow.

"Christ is either Lord of all, or He is not Lord at all."

"SERIOUS PROBLEMS"

Not once, but many times have we heard this expression from Convention delegates in referring to the work to be done by the Convention this week. There are serious problems to be considered by the Convention. Each Convention is to transact business for the King and the Kingdom—and Kingdom problems always demand our best, our all. It is His will, not ours, motive prevail. Let love and harmony prevail. Let divine wisdom guide. Let the majority rule. The great must be servant of the whole. As followers of the lowly Nazarine, let us stand united for Christ and the Church.

"A man may give without loving, but he can not love without giving."

College students in China (numbering from 25,000 to 30,000) practically form the public opinion of the remaining 400,000,000 inhabitants of the country. According to Dr. Paul Monroe, of Columbia University, frequently it happens that these students attending educational institutions act as dictators to the heads of the Chinese Government, and in nearly every case they are obeyed.

"Only as the church fulfills her missionary obligation does she justify her existence."

Sociologists say that within the next two decades the negro problem (hitherto confined mainly to the South) will be as great a problem in the North and West as in the South today. This change is being brought about by the unprecedented drift of the colored race to the industrial centers of the North and West.

ELON LETTER

THIS is Wednesday and I have just had an interview with a Christian publisher who last year earned $13,000 above depreciation and interest on a splendid plant for his Church. He was reading my article in last week's SUN when I inserted my presence into his peaceful sanctum. He greeted me by saying: "You are exactly right in your figures," referring to my estimate on advertising. "Jacobs and Co.," he inferred, "would not give $15.00 a page for our advertisements, but we could, and should and no doubt, would get it if we went after it."

He made a price of $110.00 per issue for THE CHRISTIAN SUN of the present size, quality of paper, and workmanship, folded, pasted, mailed, mailing list corrected to date. He also offered desk space in his office with free heat, light, and telephone.

The present size of THE SUN is 480 inches. He agreed to give a sixteen page paper, four columns and fourteen inches long, containing 896 inches, with the other considerations mentioned above, for $185 per week. I feel sure that the Burlington Printing Company would be willing to meet these figures on a comparative basis of work and service. We could then use all our present space for reading matter and sell 416 inches of advertisements at the rate Jacobs and Company charge for a paper of 2,600 circulation, or 37 1-2 cents, and net for ourselves $156.00 per week, clear of knots and limbs. He specifically stated that he would as soon set advertisements for the paper as reading matter. This would mean that the paper would cost us but $29.00 an issue, PROVIDED the advertisements could be sold. I felt encouraged that this brother was willing to take up time with me and our paper.

Now I have another thought to add. Last week I said I believed a book store properly managed would earn us $5,000.00 a year. The manager ought to have a salary of $2,400.00. I suggested a pastor-editor could be had for $600.00. We can save even that item by making the book store man managing editor to read proof and prepare copy for the printer, and by securing a board of contributing editors who would serve without money and without price, just to keep THE CHRISTIAN SUN shining. I feel sure we can find many such men in our Brotherhood, to say nothing of women, who would write an editorial each month if the Convention should ask it.

A Church paper should serve two purposes—a medium of Christian nurture and an agency of propaganda and publicity for church institutions. The proposed merger would readily provide for the Christian nurture feature, but would be wholly inadequate for propaganda and publicity purposes. Elon College, the Mission Board, and the Christian Orphanage could better afford each to be assessed one thousand dollars a year in order to keep THE CHRISTIAN SUN a going concern than to have it merged with any paper so far removed from the center of our activity as the good Herald of Gospel Liberty is. No paper published in Ohio can serve our Southern interests for publicity purposes. I wish it could, but it seems an unpromising project.

Brother Riddle and this writer are the best of friends. We see it differently—that is all. It is true THE CHRISTIAN SUN is a small paper, but there are those of us who love it, and please, God, we will find a way to perpetuate its usefulness among us.

W. A. HARPER.

THE OTHER SIDE

PRESIDENT Harper has made a valuable discovery. He has turned the trick and now those of us who have been worrying and wondering how THE CHRISTIAN SUN can meet expenses have been relieved of all anxiety. Through these years of toil and work and worry and tribulations we have lacked only one thing—a man to lead us out and show us the way. President Harper shows us how to get out THE SUN with a deficit of only $29.00 per week. I am due a black balling by the Convention for not having done this long ago.

Several times in my life I have worked out a fortune on paper. It looked good, very good. That fortune is still on paper. It is not in any asset. Dozens of times during the past six years I have figured over a dozen sheets of paper and tabulated how I might make ends meet on THE SUN. The figures are still on paper—and not on THE SUN books. Wonderful!

Here is the BIG condition about the advertising feature: " * * but we could and should no doubt get it if we went after it." I have been after advertisers and had to come back without the advertising. On one occasion, in talking over the advertising feature of THE SUN with President Harper, I let him name the list of advertisers who could, as he thought, be induced to take advertising in THE SUN. I wrote each a personal letter, and in just as good form as I possibly could. From this effort I received only two replies—and they were negative.

President Harper names no man or firm. However, we know the man and the firm he refers to. That paper has a circulation of 24,000 copies weekly, and we challenge the same man to drop off 21,500 of his papers, reducing his list to that of THE SUN, and then show us how it can be done. He will find the difference just as I have found it.

There is a vast difference between desk room, and a creditable office. Who wants THE SUN to be a parasite in the office of another denominational paper? *If THE SUN is worth maintaining, and it is, it is worth caring for in a good manner.

The difference in the present price and the estimate President Harper gets is $17.50 per issue. Let the public know this: That THE SUN gets a first-class, modern office free; it gets one-fourth the space in a building on which there is a monthly rental of $85.00; in short it pays for nothing save printing.

The house which makes the estimate and shows President Harper how to do the magic stunt, turns out a paper that comes to pieces no sooner than it is handled. The paper in question reaches my office each week and I would leave it to any child to make the comparison between it and the present form of THE SUN.

President Harper names a salary of $2,400 for the Publishing Agent and $600.00 for the Editor, making a total $3,000.00, which is $1,000.00 more than is being spent now for these items. What about office help to bring in this $156.00 worth of advertising each week? Can all this work be done in some other office to which the public has access? Can it be done with just desk room? How about a place to carry on a book business? Will the rent be free? What about insurance and other necessary things?

Where is the place? Greensboro, N. C. is where this marvelous trick can be worked. We need to build up our book business, but Greensboro is already overstocked with book stores. Can we afford to go into a city with our paper and follow the course of taking second place as we have done in too many instances with our churches? Is it not time for the Christian Church to say to the world that she deserves the best and show the world that we can have it?

My mind is not so closed to one proposition that I cannot consider the thing that seems to be best. If we do not merge THE SUN with The Herald of Gospel Liberty, then let us do a thing worth while. Let us build a house of our own, making of it a combination headquarters, and undertake something that will challenge us. Let failures be cast to the wind; let those who say that it cannot be done stand aside; let the younger men of the Convention get under the burden and put it across. I cast my lot and my vote with such a group and hold there until something is done. I am not willing to be led into the impossible and impractical thing.

President Harper, you are making us a good college president, but my six years' experience will not let me compliment you on your plan for THE SUN.

C. B. RIDDLE.

P. S. And this, President Harper, and brethren: If a Christian publisher of another Church can earn $13,000.00 a year and be proud of it, then why can we not do it? Let us lead—not follow.

IS IT TRUE?

On page three of THE SUN of April 12, in a short note concerning high school graduates and college students, is this brief sentence: "Only one out of twelve college entrants is able to graduate." If this be true, only one hundred out of every twelve hundred students entering college would receive full diplomas at the end of a four years' course. I do not know upon what authority this statement is made, but I most emphatically say that I do not credit the statement.

I am not acquainted with many colleges, but I know something about my own Alma Mater, Dartmouth College, from which I received my diploma in 1872. From what I know of my own class, and some others, I know the statement does not apply to that institution.

During our four years' course, ninety-two men were members of the class. At graduation in June, 1872, sixty-nine received diplomas, and within a few years three others were so honored, so that we had seventy-two graduates in all. Of these twenty men who did not complete their course in Dartmouth, one transferred to another college, and became after graduation a prominent teacher in Yale and later in Williams College, while seven fitted themselves for the practice of law, medicine and teaching by pursuing studies elsewhere. Seventy out of the ninety-two secured diplomas. Thus fully seventy-six per cent graduated. I am confident that my own class was about an average class in that college.

Such a statement, I think, does great injustice to college students.

SUFFOLK LETTER

OUNTRY life is closer to nature than city life and has a future all its own. Ancient cities like Babylon and Memphis have passed away; but the surrounding country remains. The centennial of President Grant's birth held April 27 at Mount Pleasant, Ohio, where he was born in a little house like many other great Americans, was a national event. The republic rests on the yeomen of the nation. There is a sturdy citizenship in the country that flatters no friends and fears no enemies. Life in the country, if the modern doctrine environment is sound, is untainted by the luxuries, artificialities, and associations of city life. Genuineness expresses the status of country life.

There is no disposition in this Letter to undervalue or reflect upon city life, for cities are essential parts of national life and the Kingdom of God in the world. Jerusalem was made the center of religious worship a thousand years before Christ came to plant His gospel in the hearts of men, and taught the woman at the well that "the true worshippers worship the Father in spirit and in truth." So far as spiritual religion is concerned it is the same in the city and in the country.

The outward manifestations, modes of worship, times of meeting, and methods of work, may differ, but the inward life is the same in all men and all places.

The tendency of the young mind in the country is toward the city. Education points in that direction. In this respect much of the present day education is false. Fine education trains for the life and service after the school. The farm needs men just as much as the mill and the store. Millions are in the cities, living from hand to mouth, associated with the unclean, embittered by designing leaders, and corrupted by artificial behavior, who might be clean and prosperous in the quiet and satisfied life on the farm. President Harding said in his address at the village of Mount Pleasant: "I would rather have come to a spot like this than to any other in the Republic that I could choose. Not but what I have great reverence for the genius and the determination and the capacity which belongs to great cities, but if my observations in life count for anything, I want to say to you that the one everlasting anchorage of this Republic is in the communities like this in which we are gathered." The attraction of the city is its artificial life; but it is well to keep in mind that the sunset surpasses any painting of the sunset; the orchard is more than any fruit display; the cattle on the ranch more than the packing-house; but it is the condensed presentation of all material products in the city that tempt the young away from the country. The city and the country are two parts of one whole, and properly balanced make society wiser, more prosperous, and more missionary. Country life does not develop charity as city life does, because there is less destitution in the country. This shows that poverty increases with the growth of great cities.

The larger task of the church is in the city. Here are larger numbers. Here are greater evils. Here are greater temptations. Lust thrives in the cities, and the lust is peril of human society. Think of Babylon, Sodom, Pompeii, lust destroyed those great cities. This is a fire that no fire department can put out. No reservoir holds water enough to put out this fire of hell. Country life is freer than city life from this universal danger. Country people should be contented and happy with their flocks and heads, their crops and friends, their quiet and time for thought and prayer.

The unpardonable sin in writing English is to write Rev. John Smith or Rev. Simon Brown after this horrible fashion, "Rev. Smith" or "Rev. Brown." Such an intellectual crime deserves stake and fagot without the benefit of clergy.—North Carolina Christian Advocate. To this THE SUN says Amen, and Amen. Such form cannot be justified as a localism or by any rhetoric or grammar that we have ever seen. When we get an article so written we have a desire to modestly ask the contributor something which we shall not write here.

PRESENT-DAY RESPONSIBILITY

(Address by President, Rev. W. W. Staley, D. D., before the Southern Christian Convention in session, Suffolk, Virginia, this week.)

RESPONSIBILITY is a trust and means to promise again. We are under obligation to re-promise in Christian service. There is no release till death, and, even then, "their work do follow them."

Conditions change and obligations change with them. Besides this, larger intelligence discovers needs and obligations before unknown. This lays a new and binding responsibility upon the Church. Several elements enter into Christian responsibility. (1). It must be felt. It is not enough to think in any realm; one must feel, for feeling controls the world. Love and hate are the two dominant feelings, and both are in the heart. Responsibility matures in the sensibilities. Paul expressed it when he said: "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the gospel." I Corinthians 9:16; and Jesus, in the garden when He said: "Not my will, but thine, be done." Luke 22:42. (2). It must be known. Hosea 4:6 says: "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge." And Jesus made this plain in John 8:32: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. "Feeling and knowledge go together; for, "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." Proverbs 23:7. (3). It must be expressed. The art-world expresses itself in pictures, sculpture, poetry, music, and architecture. God expresses His creative power in the universe. In the beginning "the earth was without form and void;" then God expressed His creation in light, firmament, earth and sea, sun, moon, and stars, land and sea animals, and men. So all great ideas and obligations are first felt and known, and then expressed. This deep sense of Christian responsibility must find expression in personal service for the Kingdom. This expression, through ministers and laymen, may embrace four items:

(I) Teaching

The subject for teaching is the Word; not cults, philosophies, theologies, nor letters. "These words shall be in thine heart; and thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children." Deuteronomy 6:6-7 "Preach the word", II Timothy 4:2. For, "the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." Hebrews 4:12. The responsibility upon the Church is to teach the Bible in the home, the school, and the pulpit. The age is full of vagaries that weaken the teaching of the Church. The higher educational institutions of the nation carry the youth away from the simple faith in God and His word.

(II) Loyalty

Loyalty to the Christ, the Church, and her institutions. Loyalty to Christ includes all the rest. A Roman emperor engaged a Greek architect to plan the Colosseum; and, when it was completed, the emperor set a day on which to honor the architect. Eighty-six thousand people were seated in the great amphitheater. The emperor arose and said: "Let us make merry and enjoy ourselves: bring out the Christians, and let the lions destroy them." They were led into the arena, the half-starved lions turned loose upon them, and they were soon devoured. Then the architect slowly arose, and in a firm but gentle voice said: "I too am a Christian." The howling mob seized him and flung him to the fierce beasts which tore his limbs from his body. That was loyalty to Christ worthy of imitation by Christians of this day. Such loyalty to Christ will make loyalty to the Church and all her institutions. THE CHRISTIAN SUN, founded 1844, now 78 years old; Missions made a Convention obligation 1887, now 35 years old; Elon College, founded 1890, now 32 years of age; Christian Orphanage established 1907, now 15 years old, in her teens, but doing a great work. Loyalty to these institutions grows out of loyalty to Christ.

(III) Co-operation

In methods, movements, and missions. It may be difficult to adapt one method to all local conditions; but any method would co-operate with a general method. The main thing is to work a method. Movements stir the whole body and awaken a keener sense of responsibility in the membership of the Church. The Men and Millions Forward Movement, though all too quickly done, awakened in the membership of this Convention a new sense of obligation, opportunity, and outlook. The results have disappointed enthusiastic leaders, but it has stimulated lay-activity, liberality, and larger plans of service. Some seed did not germinate, and more seed must be planted; but some did spring up and bear fruit. Ministers and laymen must co-operate in an effort to awaken a sense of personal obligation to Church movements for the growth of the Kingdom.

(IV) Progress

In education, finance, and service. The whole Convention, that is, the Conferences composing it, need goals that will bring out the latent talent and energy into service for progress. Local enthusiasm must be extended to all of the institutions of the Convention, with personal interest and financial support. Everything rests upon the constituency—the membership of the churches—and the Convention is the organic expression of their will and their plans. The Boards and Committees that will present reports to the Convention represent the Conferences, as organized units, and no plan can go beyond the support of the people. Present-day needs are greater than any day in history, and as expenditures in all directions increase, Kingdom expenses increase, and that lays larger financial responsibilities upon all. Five and ten cent stores are as much a part of business as Standard Oil, United States Steel, railroads, or any other great activity. The five or ten cent member is as much a part of the Church as the five or ten dollar member. All must take part "according to his several ability" to keep the work in active operation. The widow's mite must not be forgotten. The ocean lashes the shore by little waves, and the Church moves forward by the march of little children and little givers. The small givers have underestimated their value. It is better that one hundred persons give one dollar each than that one person give a hundred dollars; both should give freely. We have over-worked the willing and trained, and neglected to train the untaught and unwilling. "Little drops of water, little grains of sand" should teach the Church the way of progress toward the conquest of the world. Tiny seed by their life-activity in obscurity produce the harvests that feed mankind. Units of organized activity can do much toward solving financial problems, but every member, feeling and understanding personal responsibility, would solve all financial problems in the Church.

What has been said may seem too homiletic, but behind all practical activities there must be a deep-seated sense of responsibility to maintain sympathetic, systematic, and sound service. Presuming that the Boards in their reports would present plans and objectives, well wrought out in clear phrase, these have not been presented in this address; but it may be said that no progress can be made without an ideal goal. Plans must always be larger than achievements; and nothing can stop without dying.

The women of the Church are out-doing the men through personal work and small contributions; there should be some plan devised to enlist men in a new and hearty way for advanced Kingdom service. The Conferences must be willing for larger apportionments to the local churches, and the ministers should encourage full payment of such apportionments.

I congratulate the Convention upon the co-operation and progress already made in Publications, Missions, Education, Benevolences, and Evangelism. But this progress suggests larger plans, greater effort, increased liberality, wiser co-operation, and a firmer faith in Him Who gave Himself for us. The fire must not go out on the altar of service. We have said too much about trained leaders as compared with trained larger numbers, and this is the larger task, and the more important. The great responsibility of training the whole membership in loyalty, co-operation, liberality, and real service is a task hereulean; but in that school lies the hope of the Convention and the Kingdom.

REPORT OF THE WOMAN'S BOARD TO THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

We are glad to report progress in the Woman's Missionary department of our Church work, despite the prevailing difficulty of the times. For the first time in our ten years of history we have fully organized boards in each of our five Southern conferences, and at this session each of these conference boards through its president will report on its work already done and outline its plans for the future. While we have done well, there is large room for future growth and progress. Really, it seems to me, our woman's work is in its infancy. Its possibilities are tremendous.

The reports of the various officers of the Southern Christian Convention Woman's Board will bring you messages of heartening cheer as they shall tell of the achievements of our past two years and of our plans for two years immediately ahead. I wish here to pause to express to each of these who shall later make their reports my personal appreciation of their fine spirit of co-operation with me in all that I have asked them to do. I am sure no finer group of workers can be found than these officers of our Southern Christian Convention Woman's Board.

My own work during the biennium has required the writing of many hundreds of letters answering the specific questions of our local leaders and of a general character preparing the way for the Thank Offering, the Week of Prayer, and the annual Rally Day Programs. In all this work of general correspondence I have written to some leading woman in every church, whether it has a missionary organization or not, and sent the literature that had been prepared and requested an offering for our work. In this way a general interest has been awakened and the way opened for organizational work later. A few organizations have developed directly as a consequence of this propaganda work.

It will be recalled that I have named December as the period of the Thank Offering. This has been done for two reasons—so many of our churches are rural that a month is required for any cause that is to reach them all and the Orphanage claims November as its month.

This year I secured the Week of Prayer programs from the Federal Council of Churches and mailed copies with accompanying letter to each church or Society. This seemed to meet with hearty approval, from the numbers of letters that came commending the plan and the requests for additional copies.

The Missionary Rally Day for one of the summer months has encouraging possibilities. It serves to give wide publicity to Missions and to quicken the local zeal as well as provides a splendid atmosphere for receiving an offering for the work.

These three special occasions give us fine opportunities for spiritual giving, which is the heart of missionary effort. The societies should set a definite goal to be reached on each of these occasions—say an average of twenty-five or fifty cents or a dollar a member. This will be found to stimulate giving.

More emphasis too should be given to life-memberships. Honorary life memberships too for men will be found to be a fruitful source of income for our societies.

I cannot too earnestly commend The Christian Missionary. THE CHRISTIAN SUN, and the regular mission study courses for the societies. Missionary inspiration that is to bear fruit in generous giving must rest solidly on missionary information, accurate, sympathetic, and complete. We can get this information from the three sources mentioned.

But it seems to me as I have thought the matter through earnestly and prayerfully that the ultimate fountain of our strength consists in the making of our Christian homes agencies for missionary education and inspiration.

CHURCH HISTORY

HISTORY OF THE REIDSVILLE CHRISTIAN CHURCH*

By W. A. HARPER

The study of the history of the Reidsville Christian church convinces me that the number thirteen is an auspicious one. The church was organized in 1913 with thirteen members present.

But preceding this happy day there were years of heart-aching expectancy and experimentation. In the year 1886 Rev. J. Pressley Barrett, at that time editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, preached in Reidsville and report was made to the Conference in November that this point looked promising for undertaking a Christian church. Two years later Rev. A. G. Anderson reported that the point still looked hopeful, but he was informed by the Conference that financial assistance could not then be guaranteed.

In 1890 the conference appropriated $100 for the ensuing conference year on pastor's salary provided two Sundays should be given. Rev. R. A. Ricks was chosen as pastor and divided his time between Reidsville and Burlington. On April 26, 1891, the tragic death of Brother Ricks in the pulpit of the M. E. church of Burlington, N. C., terminated what promised to be a very successful church organization here.

Rev. C. C. Peel succeeded Brother Ricks as pastor in Burlington and also in Reidsville according to THE CHRISTIAN SUN of June 11, 1891. Members of the first organization here do not recall that this statement in THE SUN is correct. It is certain, however, that Brother Peel did preach here one or more times. It is also certain that the work was abandoned before Conference met in November, 1891, since no mention of it is made in the minutes of that session.

Let me digress here long enough to pay a tribute to the memory of Rev. R. A. Ricks, who fell on sleep in the prime of his hopeful career. THE CHRISTIAN SUN characterized him at the time of his death as "the finest sermonizer in our Church." On October 15, 1891, THE SUN printed a sermon of his on "Light" that seemed to make good this large claim. The first issue of THE SUN under Rev. W. G. Clements' editorship carried another splendid sermon by Brother Ricks. THE SUN proposed to publish his other discourses with these two in book form, if there should be demand. It is no credit to the Brotherhood that the demand was not forthcoming. He was truly one of our ablest men. The little church at Reidsville adopted resolutions of regret at their great loss and printed them in THE SUN on May 1, 1891. The resolutions were signed by L. M. Clymer, B. L. Hurdle, Mary S. Paschall, and Dora B. Huffines.

The blow thus sustained staggered the faithful band here. Money had been raised to purchase a lot. According to Brother L. M. Clymer all who desired to have their payments refunded were so accommodated. The residue was divided between the Burlington Christian church for a memorial window to Brother Ricks and Elon College, which was then in its first year. What a tribute this to the Christian character and spirit of sacrifice of the membership of the first organization in Reidsville! How fitting, too, that the Elon endowment should finance this noble people's church at its later re-organization.

For twenty years the re-organization of a Christian church in Reidsville was not mentioned. It was in 1911 that the attention of the North Carolina and Virginia Conferences was called to the matter and urgent request made to consider again the undertaking of the work. Rev. L. I. Cox was asked to investigate the prospects. Rev. P. T. Klapp preached here during the ensuing year, for which the Conference compensated him at its 1912 session. Brother Klapp also preached at Reidsville in the 80's he informs me. During 1911-'12 he held his services in the Academy, but no organization was effected.

The Christian Missionary Association of the North Carolina and Virginia Conference that fall asked to have Reidsville allotted to it as a special. The Conference so voted and the Association referred the matter to a committee consisting of W. P. Lawrence, J. O. Atkinson, and W. A. Harper. This committee employed Rev. L. I. Cox to prosecute the work. In December, 1912, Brother Cox held his first formal meeting with the faithful workers here and received great encouragement to go forward. On February 24, 1913, the lot on which the church now stands was paid for and on July 14 following, the present organization was perfected in the home of W. R. Brown with thirteen charter members present. The final charter memberships consisted of J. M. Lambeth, E. R. Rascoe, Mrs. Rachel E. Rascoe, Miss Birdie Rascoe, W. R. Brown, Mrs. W. R. Brown, Mrs. P. C. Apple, Mrs. J. L. Martin, S. F. Fagg, Charles D. Rascoe, J. W. Lambeth, Maggie M. Lambeth, Jas. T. Lambeth, E. E. Rascoe, Grace P. Lambeth, Flora B. Smith, W. H. Smith, Mrs. M. C. Brande, Lizzie Barnes, Annie Chaney, J. W. Chaney, Elizabeth Rice, L. C. Burton, J. A. Burton, Exie Griffith, Julia Griffith, J. L. Martin, and R. M. Gillie. This makes a total of thirty one charter members, but only thirteen were present as such when the organization was perfected. (Thirteen, too, of these charter members were present when this history was read.) Brother W. R. Brown came into the organization as a deacon. The first deacons elected by the congregation were J. T. Matkins and J. M. Lambeth, who were ordained on September 19, 1915.

The building committee for the present church consisted of W. R. Brown, E. R. Rascoe, J. M. Lambeth, W. P. Lawrence, and W. A. Harper. The building was completed in November 1915 at a total cost of $9,825.74. It then had to be seated and furnished.

On March 6, 1922, the last dollar of the debt on the present plant was liquidated and April 30, 1922, set as the date of dedication. This day will be a memorable one in the history of the church. Dr. J. O. Atkinson preached the dedicatory sermon in the morning. The afternoon witnessed a memorial service to Rev. L. I. Cox, and a reading of the history of the church. At night Rev. W. L. Wells preached.

The following have been pastors of the present congregation:

Rev. L. I. Cox, 1912-1918.
Rev. W. L. Wells, 1918-1921.
Dr. J. P. Barrett, 1921—

The Reidsville Christian church is barely ten years of age, but it is out of debt and with a membership of 105 and 160 in its Sunday school. It possesses property valued at $20,000. It has never failed to come up to Conference as a banner church. It numbers fifteen persons as obligated tithers. Though at the time a struggling mission point, this church gave $507 to the Special Mission Campaign, was apportioned $500 for the Elon Standardization drive and gave $1,025.00, and for the Men and Millions Forward Movement was asked for $2,218 and responded with $2,244.00. I do not believe this record for generosity can be surpassed.

Besides, this church entertained the North Carolina and Virginia Christian Conference in its 1918 session and the Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention for the North Carolina Conference in July 1921. It has even expressed its willingness to entertain the Southern Christian Convention.

The future is bright and prophetic of enlarging Kingdom service for this splendid company of the Lord's elect.

Acknowledgement: For the fact presented in this history of the Reidsville church I am indebted to Dr. J. Pressley Barrett, Dr. W. S. Long, Mrs. R. A. Ricks, Rev. P. T. Klapp, L. M. Clymer, and B. L. Hurdle. Of course the Christian Annual and THE CHRISTIAN SUN files have made invaluable contribution.

Correction: THE SUN was furnished an advanced copy of this historical paper, and after going to press with page nine, we learned that the name of Mrs. A. G. Fagg should have been included in the list of final charter members.—EDITOR.

THE BULLETIN

Rev. S. L. Beougher, pastor of Graham and Providence churches, preached at the Burlington church last Sunday morning in the absence of Pastor Lankford, who was in Eastern Virginia.

The People's church, Dover, Delaware, received sixty-five members into fellowship on Easter Sunday. This church has also installed a motion picture machine to be used in its work of moral and religious education.

Rev. R. O. Smith, one of our promising ministerial students at Elon College, won second place in the State Peace Contest held in Burlington on April 21. The prize was $50.00 in gold. THE SUN offers its congratulations.

Those participating in the memorial service held for the Rev. L. I. Cox, in the Reidsville church, last Sunday, were Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Dr. N. G. Newman, Rev. W. L. Wells, Dr. J. P. Barrett, Dr. W. P. Lawrence and Dr. W. A. Harper, who presided.

"The Little White Church" is a sixteen-page local church paper published by the Christian church of Wolfeboro, N. H. Rev. Benjamin Franklin Black is editor and pastor. Long live this publicity and success to the undertaking.

Dr. Henry F. Cope, of Chicago, General Secretary of the Religious Education Association, and editor of "Religious Education," is to deliver the literary address at Elon's approaching commencement. Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, Dover, Delaware, is to deliver the baccalaureate sermon.

As we go to press this (Monday) morning, this cheering and inspiring telegram reaches us signed by Dr. L. E. Smith: "Great day at Christian Temple. Former pledges made public and new ones added totalling one hundred thirty-one thousand dollars by local congregation. Lieut.-Gov. J. E. West spoke at morning service—Dr. W. H. Denison at evening service. Excavating completed. Work progressing splendidly."

If recent issues of THE SUN have not measured up to the standard, we ask the kind and patient indulgence of our readers. The Editor has had sickness in his home for several weeks and has found it no easy task endeavoring to keep his hand on the helm and do his duty by his family.

BOOK REVIEW

“THE REBIRTH OF EUROPE”

In his “Rebirth of Europe,” Dr. Martyn Summerbell has rendered a valuable service to thought and scholarship. With comprehensive historical grasp he has pictured in chaste and elegant style, devoid of pedantic lore and yet exact in scholarship, a period of history all too seriously neglected. His book bridges the hiatus between the ancient and the modern, the Dark Age, and throws a flood of light on its many hidden facts and forces. His summary of the value of the Crusades is especially noteworthy, but there is not a dull sentence in the book, which is happy in its sanity and clarification for the non-technical reader of this interesting, but neglected era in man’s upward climb toward civilization and God.

“THE REBIRTH OF EUROPE”

Dr. Martyn Summerbell, Lakemont, N. Y., has just brought from the press of the Stratford Company, Boston, Mass., a volume of one hundred and ninety pages entitled “The Rebirth of Europe,” in twenty concise chapters. Dr. Summerbell tells the story of the revival of the nations after the decline of the Roman Empire, through the different periods of history down to the time of the Crusaders. “The Rebirth of Europe” is a book that treats an interesting period of history—a period almost forgotten by many. To read this book is to get the understanding of the basic principles of some of the later historical developments. This volume will be read with interest and we recommend it to our readers. The price is $2.00 and may be secured direct from the Stratford Company, Publishers, Boston, Mass., or ordered through THE CHRISTIAN SUN office.

“FROM GENESIS TO REVELATION”

We have had the privilege of examining a volume of 260 pages by Mildred Berry entitled “From Genesis to Revelation.” The author has condensed the story of the Bible in readable form for the child. The first chapter of the book tells only facts about the Bible, and the thirty-seven chapters make most interesting and helpful reading.

This volume will no doubt come in for its proper part of the usual criticism meted out to any condensed form of the Scriptures. But this book is not to be taken as a substitute for the Bible, but as an interesting story, properly written, concerning the events about which the Bible speaks. This volume should prove exceedingly helpful to children as well as being worth-while to adults who cannot well remember the different incidents of the Bible.

It is by way of digression when we say that there is too much unjust criticism about many of the helpful books on the Bible, when those who offer such criticism tell the Bible stories themselves in their own language, which is doing exactly what they criticize others for doing.

“From Genesis to Revelation” sells for $2.00 the volume, and the MacMillan Company, New York, are the publishers. Orders may be sent direct to them or mailed to THE CHRISTIAN SUN office.

A CORRECTION

Treasurer W. J. Ballentine of the North Carolina Conference has asked that a correction to the recent issue of The Annual be made in regard to the Pleasant Grove (Va.) church. The Annual shows that the church was apportioned $300.00 and paid $100.00. This is what the original Church Letter shows, from which source the information in The Annual was secured. The church, however, paid $300.00 and the Conference treasurer failed to get the Church Letter to make the correction. We are glad to give Pleasant Grove church credit for what she has done, for the public always understands that this church is always in the fore-front in its every obligation.

Drivers of automobiles and other vehicles using the public highways of Virginia must come to a full stop before crossing any main line railway tracks at grade under a law recently enacted by the General Assembly of Virginia. The law provides that drivers of all vehicles on approaching any grade crossing of a main line railway track outside an incorporated town must stop not less than ten feet nor more than one hundred feet from the nearest rail. A penalty of ten dollars for each violation is provided in the act.

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

MISSIONARY TEACHING OF JESUS

Much of Jesus' teaching is so clearly missionary in character that its application is obvious. The great commission, "Go ye therefore, and make disciples of all the nations, * * * and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," is such an example. In other cases the missionary teaching is not so direct.

The missionary implications of some of the teachings of Jesus which at first do not seem to be particularly missionary may be emphasized. One example will illustrate: Jesus laid great emphasis upon the necessity and the desirability of sacrifice on the part of his followers. "He that loveth father or mother more than me is not worthy of me." "No man, having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." If a man "renounceth not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." These and many other words of Jesus indicate His thought concerning sacrifice. It was not the abnormal and exceptional thing, but it was the thing which He expected of all His disciples. In teaching these and similar passages in Sunday school classes, there is afforded an opportunity to lay the foundations of a life of consecrated missionary activity. It has sometimes been felt that it is asking too much of a beautiful young woman or of a brilliant young man, each of whom has spent years in preparation for life's work, to say "good-by" to friends and go to a distant land as a missionary, or to accept a home missionary salary when business opportunities offer. To become a missionary has seemed abnormal and the missionary has been considered in a certain sense "peculiar." In the sense that only a few can become missionaries to distant parts, the missionary is different from others. It is not true, however, that those who stay at home are therefore relieved of the obligation of sacrificial service. Is it not clear, if this important teaching of Jesus concerning sacrifice as a normal part of the Christian life is emphasized, a very great service to the pupil and the Kingdom may be done? Instead of a few exceptional individuals who have caught the spirit of Christ-like self-sacrifice, the Kingdom needs a host of individuals who have made this spirit a normal part of their Christian life. The pupil must of necessity live such a life of self-sacrifice if he is to have a normal Christian development and attain unto the worth-while things of the Christian life.

"I want to be a missionary," said a ten-year-old girl one day to her mother. Too young to make a life choice, did you say? Yet not too young to declare a present desire and intention, which, if cherished, will in all probability crystalize into a life decision later. Young children cannot make life choices, but they can express present desires. These may be the same as life choices made later. What was back of the ten-year-old girl's expressed desire to become a missionary? The immediate background was a missionary meeting in which several young people had volunteered for service, but back of that was a Christian home and a training both in the home and church which stressed the beauty of the Christian life and the need of unselfish service for Christ and others. The parents had not only taught Christian precepts but exemplified them, and the declaration of the child was, with such environment and training, but natural.—The Sunday School Teacher and the Program of Jesus.

ONE-DAY SCHOOL OF MISSIONS

These Schools were held as per appointment noted in previous issues of The Sun. For the most part they were well attended and the interest was deep and abiding. Mrs. Alice V. Morrill carried messages of real inspiration to hundreds of our women in the South that they will never forget. She made a most favorable impression wherever she went and the people were impressed with her personality and power as a worker for Christ and the Kingdom. She fully comprehends the missionary motive and objective and has a power of expression that carries conviction and confidence to those who hear her. Our women's work in the South is wonderfully strengthened by her presence and addresses. She will not live long enough to realize the good accomplished by her coming and the efforts she put forth in behalf of our missionary work.

Miss Iola Hedgepeth told in a most convincing manner of the wonderful work being done to help the people in Carroll County, Virginia, educationally and religiously. Our Heavenly Father seems to be using her for real constructive work and uplift in His cause and and name. Her messages were plain, comprehensive, sincere, and direct. The people have a better understanding wherever she has been of the work the Christians are doing to help lift their brothers and sisters of our remote mountain sections to higher plains of living and activity. Miss Hedgepeth is a real pioneer for us in a field most needy and deserving.

Too much cannot be said about the efforts put forth by the Superintendents of each of the eleven Districts in which the schools were held and all the local support manifested and the abiding and lively interest shown in every church and District where the Schools were held. It was a real privilege to attend these Schools and observe the increase in interest over those held for the first time, one year ago. The Schools this year were attended by not less than a total of 1,100 people, mostly our women from various Missionary Societies and churches where societies should be. While in the work of the Schools Mrs. Morrill and Miss Hedgepeth addressed not fewer than 2,000 people. All of the Districts wish the School next year and will try to improve in interest and program.

A LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley: You will find enclosed 20 cents—my dues for March and April. I am a little late this time, for Mother and two of my sisters have had the flu. It did not get me. Daddy said it would have to get me running. I was three years old April 2. I help gather up the eggs when they will let me, and Mother says I break so many. I hope this little letter will find you and all the orphans well.—Jewel Banks Stout.

I am glad you did not have the flu. I had it some weeks ago and it is bad. I felt somewhat like I was going to fly.—“Uncle Charley.”

Better Sabbath Keeping.—Jeremiah 17: 19-27

For You To Think About:

Your Sundays constitute one-seventh of your life. If you live to be three score and ten, ten years of that time will be made up of Sundays. Is your customary method of spending the Sabbath helping or hindering your Christian life?

Would we keep the Sabbath better if all work were brought to a minimum?

Better Sabbath keeping is not secured only by refraining from doing certain things. The positive side is just as important. What helpful activities should be encouraged on the Sabbath?

“Take the Sunday with you through the week
And sweeten with all the other days.”

CHURCH NEWS

GRAHAM CHRISTIAN CHURCH

I desire to let the readers of THE SUN know that our church is still on the map and for the past few months has made some progress.

First, I desire to mention our pastor, Rev. S. L. Beougher. He and his good family came to us as strangers, but we were not long in getting acquainted with each other. Since our pastor arrived he has put the whole church, along with himself and family, to work. There is a fine spirit of co-operation. The members have been divided into several different commissions as follows: Executive, Publicity, Financial, Decoration, Visitation, and Membership. All of these commissions are getting under way and our labors have already been rewarded in that our Sunday school and church attendance has about doubled.

While we have appreciated all this very, very much, we would not close this article without mentioning our good, true, and unfiring friend, Rev. C. B. Riddle, for it was he who searched to far away Florida for a pastor for our church. It was he who felt in his heart that he had found the right man for us, and we wish to extend to him a vote of thanks from our church, and to remind him that he is a man who is not living to himself alone, but is helping others who need help. He is a man who is truly using his best self for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God here on earth.

J. B. FARRELL.

PORTSMOUTH, VIRGINIA

I came to Elm Avenue church the first of last November. The church had just been organized and built, and I found a very earnest body of about fifty members. These have stood by the work, with their prayers as well as their personal work, in a very satisfactory way. This has been a great encouragement to me, and we have made much progress. I have preached mostly evangelistical sermons, and up till the first of April we had received about forty members by profession of faith, reconsecration and letter.

On the first Sunday in April we started a series of meetings that lasted for two weeks. During this time we had about thirty others to join, anywhere from six to eighty-two years of age.

We have not had any outside help as to preaching, in any of these meetings, but God has been with the pastor and people and has greatly blessed their efforts put forth in His name. To Him we give all the glory, honor, and praise.

The Sunday school is doing nicely with an earnest body of teachers, and officers. Brother R. L. Baker is superintendent. We have felt a great need for some divisions in the church in order to separate the classes of different grades. We decided that curtain rooms was the best we could do at present. The Sunday school voiced its desire to do this, and in less than five minutes on last Sunday, April 23, we received pledges for seventy-five dollars to do this work.

The prayer of the pastor, and people, is that this work may continue to be built on faith, prayer, and personal work, in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and may He help us to be true and living witnesses for Him.

ELISHA BRADSHAW.

WORK WITHOUT A PASTOR

Our Winchester people have not been idle during the months since January 1, while without a pastor. Brother Roy A. Larrick writing under date of April 25 gives the following items relative to activities in their pastorless church:

"The work of redecorating the interior and putting in a new lighting system in our church has been completed; this has made a wonderful improvement to our church building. The expense of this was met by our Ladies' Aid Society.

"The house we bought for a parsonage has been vacated and several of our ladies are going to put in tomorrow cleaning it up and putting it in first class shape for the pastor and his family.

"Brother Morgan will ship his car of furniture next Tuesday, and we look for it to arrive here the latter part of next week. Mr. and Mrs. Morgan will arrive here at noon, Saturday, May 6.

"We are real glad to know that the time for us to have a pastor is drawing very near. We have been doing the very best we can to keep everything in our church while we have been without a pastor. We think our church and all of its organizations are in good shape and we trust under the splendid leadership of Brother Morgan that the work here will move forward."

The Winchester people are certainly numbered among the faithful. Their devotion to the church and Kingdom service constantly finds expression in activities of the right sort.

SHUT THE DOOR

A man was standing in a telephone booth trying to talk, but could not make out the message. He kept saying, "I can't hear, I can't hear." The other man by and bye said sharply, "If you'll shut the door you can hear."

His door was not shut, and he could hear not only the man's voice, but the street and store noises, too. Some folk have gotten their hearing badly confused because their doors have not been closed tightly. Man's voice and God's voice have become mixed in their ears. They cannot distinguish between them. The trouble is partly with the door. If you'll shut the door, you can hear.—S. D. Gordon.

CALLED HOME

YOW.—Mary Brown Yow was born May 12, 1848, and died March 28, 1922, aged 74 years, ten months and 16 days.

She was first married to George Crawford and after his decease, to William Yow who preceded her to the grave several years.

She professed faith in Christ in early life and united with the M. E. church at Mt. Olivet. During her sickness she expressed her willingness and readiness to depart this life.

At the time of her death she was residing with her daughter, Mrs. Raleigh Cagle, at Ramseur, N. C., and interment was made at Pleasant Ridge. The Lord comfort her loved ones.

T. J. G.

SPIVEY.—Delaney M. Spivey was born March 21, 1861, and died March 28, after an illness of eight weeks. She married R. R. Spivey January 13, 1878, and was the mother of nine children, six of whom are living. She had been a member of Shallow Well Christian church for twenty-six years. She was a good woman, full of faith and well beloved by all who knew her. She was buried at Poplar Springs, and the funeral was conducted by her pastor.

T. E. WHITE.

HUGHES.—Mrs. Frances Hughes died April 9, 1922, at her home, Union Ridge, N. C., at the age of 84. She is survived by two sons and three daughters—her husband and one daughter having preceded her to the grave. A devoted wife, loving mother, and kind friend has gone to her reward.

She was a member of Union Ridge Christian church. The funeral services were conducted by the writer and her body laid to rest in the church cemetery to await the resurrection. May the bereaved ones find comfort in the Healer of broken hearts.

P. H. FLEMING.

POWELL.—Isaac N. Powell, son of the late Daniel Powell, of Savage, N. C., died at his home in Washington, D. C., April 9, 1922. He was fifty-nine years of age. The body was carried to his old home and funeral services were conducted on April 12 and the remains laid to rest in the family cemetery. Two brothers—Richard and George Powell, Newport News, Va., survive him; also a niece, Mrs. W. C. Beamon of Savage, N. C., and many relatives and friends.

H. H. BUTLER.

ALGER.—Phillip Alger, of Elkton, Va., R. F. D., departed this life April 12, 1922, aged 67 years, 10 months, and 7 days. He is survived by his widow, seven children—two sons and five daughters, and twenty-five grandchildren.

Brother Alger was a charter member of Bethel Christian church. From the time that he united with the church until his death, he lived a consistent Christian life and was ever loyal to his church and to Christ.

The funeral sermon was preached in Bethel church on Friday, April 14, by Brother Alger's pastor, R. P. Crumpler. The interment was made in a neighborhood cemetery near by.

R. P. C.

RODGERS.—Mrs. E. R. Rodgers, died on April 13, at the age of 68 years. A very impressive short service was conducted in Newport News, and her remains were taken to Dendron, Va., where her pastor, Dr. W. D. Harward, preached her funeral. Sister Rodgers has been a member of the Christian church all her life and leaves behind four sons, two daughters, and several grandchildren. She continues to live with Christ because it was in Him she put her trust while in this world.

B. J. EARP.

CLARK.—Mrs. Richard T. Clark, of Wakefield, Va., departed this life March 31, 1922, aged 34 years, seven months and 28 days. She was a member of Burton's Grove Christian church. She leaves to mourn their loss, husband, seven children, four sisters and four brothers. She expressed herself as being ready for the going which he felt was to be very soon. Burial service by the writer.

W. D. HARWARD.

LONG.—On April 3, 1922, we received the sad news of the death of George H. Long, of Lillington, N. C. George was the son of Thomas and Jenette Sexton Long. His father has been dead for a number of years, but his mother still lives and is the oldest living member of Pleasant Union Christian church. There are four brothers and two sisters that are left to miss him. Brothers Joe Long, Archie Long and Willie Long, of Lillington, and James Long, of Ashland, Kentucky; Sister Molie Goodwin, of Dunn, N. C., and Flora Long Johnson, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Besides these there were a host of friends who were grieved at his going as one could tell by the large crowd which gathered at the old home church for the funeral services, and by the profusion of flowers that were placed on his grave. George united with Pleasant Union church at the age of 18, I think, when the larger portion of the family still hold their membership.

He was one of the big-hearted kind who did not know how to be close-fisted, and his sympathy was easily aroused when he saw a need. It is said that on one occasion at a school commencement all the girls on the stage were receiving flowers save one who was less fortunate because of the humble home from whence she came. George saw the situation and procured a bouquet and had them delivered to this girl, who never knew from whence they came. He was proprietor of the Cape Fear Drug Co., and seldom if ever did the preacher of any denomination have to pay for needed drugs. More than once the writer has had free medicines from his store.

It seemed that almost everybody who knew George liked him. He had a way of making you like him. A young man told me that he was commissioned to carry the news of his death out to an old colored man who lived on one of George's farms. When he broke the news to the colored tenant the old black man dropped his face on the table and began to cry. These things show something of the way people felt towards him and he towards them.

He will be greatly missed by many friends, but by none like his mother. George was a mother boy, and although he was 46 years of age it is said that he went to see his mother every Sunday. If she was at home he went and if she was in other parts he went. May our Heavenly Father sustain and comfort his mother and all the rest while they are left here to miss him, and bring them all together again when troubles never come.

J. LEE JOHNSON.

BRADSHAW.—Mrs. Elizabeth Bradshaw, widow of the late William Bradshaw, died April 4, 1922, in her 76th year, at the home of her son, Jacob E. Bradshaw, near Windsor, Va. She leaves to mourn their loss one sister, three daughters, four sons, 33 grandchildren and 33 great-grandchildren. She was one of the charter members of Isle of Wight Christian church.

Hers was a well spent life, and she has entered into the joys of the reward which awaits the finally faithful. Funeral services were conducted from the church on April 5, by the writer.

May God's grace sustain and comfort the bereaved ones.

J. M. ROBERTS.

ANDREWS.—Miss Elizabeth R. Andrews was born June 25, 1853. On April 16, 1877, she was married to William T. Rodgers. To this union were born eight children, five of whom are living.

She departed this life April 13, 1922, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Lloyd Price, Newport News, Va. The body was brought to Dendron, Va., from whence it was borne to the old family cemetery, near Union Christian church, where she held her membership. Burial services by the writer.

W. D. HARWARD.

CLEMENTS.—On April 18, 1922, Ira G. Clements, of Newport News, Va., ended his life by tying his belt about his neck and strangling himself to death. The deceased was twenty-seven years old and had spent one year of his life at Elon College, N. C., in preparation for the ministry, but later changed his plans. He had been in bad health for a few months, and the last week or two his mind showed signs of being unbalanced. He was a member of Dendron, Va., Christian church. He leaves a wife and a five-year-old child, a father and mother, and one sister. God's blessings be upon the bereaved.

B. J. EARP.

HICKS.—Mrs. Sarah A. Hicks departed this life on April 22, 1922, being very close to her 84th birthday. The deceased had been in bad health for a long time, and expressed her readiness and willingness to go at the Master's call. She was a member of Olive Branch Disciple church. She died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. E. L. Combs, who is a member of the Christian church here. Interment in Newport News. Services by the writer.

BRIEFLY TOLD

The year 1921 was the healthiest one in the history of the United States and Canada, according to the records of 37 leading American insurance companies. Anatole, France, the winner of the Nobel prize, has given the entire $40,000 to Russian relief in the Volga district. William Henry Harrison was the oldest man ever chosen for the presidency of the United States, being 68 at the time of his inauguration in 1841. Probably the greatest master of language the world has ever known was the renowned Cardinal Mezzofanti (1774-1849), who is said to have known 114 languages or dialects, and 50 well. If anyone could invent a scientifically perfect black paint, which would absorb all light and reflect none, he would solve the riddle of invisibility, for it would be impossible to see such objects even in the brightest of sunlight.

CARDINAL PRINCIPLES OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH

- 1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

God Leads

By REV. W. T. WALTERS, D. D., Pastor

First Christian Church, Richmond, Va.

VER since God said, "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head," there has been a gradual development of mankind and an unfolding of the divine purpose. Every act of His dealings with the children of Israel was a necessary link in the chain of events in perfecting the plan of salvation.

Since the coming of Christ, through the Holy Spirit, He has been leading the race into all truth: feudalism has died, duelling has ceased, slaves have been given freedom, alcohol has been outlawed, the League of Nations has been formed, the conference on Limitation of Armaments has been held, the World Court established—the three greatest legal steps for the abolishment of war the world has ever taken—and through it all God has been leading, sometimes it has been through years of darkness and gloom, sometimes beneath the sunny skies of his divine favor, but through it all He has been at the helm and gradually, but surely the forces of righteousness have been overcoming the forces of evil.

And He comes to us in our weakness and says, "Follow me," sometimes the path has led through the mire of despondency, sometimes by the hedges of sin and the thorns have pricked the heart, or we have passed through the valley of sorrow where the clouds overshadowed us, and again we have been by the pleasant fields and grassy meadows, with the still waters of peace at our feet and the noon-day glare of God's glory around us; but whether sunshine or shadow, joy or sorrow, we are assured that all things work together for our good; God leads and all is well.

*The Press

THE press forms the greatest medium of communication in the world. It is next to the original means of communication; and while yet one of the oldest means of communication, it is not being absorbed by other methods. The telegraph, the telephone, and the wireless, and all forms of communication added since the day of the printing press, have only served to magnify the work of the press.

The world has never paid its rightful tribute to the pioneers in the printing craft. Those who pioneered in this great art are not only the world's greatest educators, in the truest sense of the expression, but are the greatest benefactors to civilization. Without the printing press the world would be in bewilderment and no mind now can conceive of what chaos would soon come.

The printing press is used for every kind of propaganda. The sinner is just as busy as the saint; the platform just as active as the pulpit; political powers and parties just as busily engaged as the pew. The power of the press does not lie in mechanical form or find its greatest asset in large buildings and modern machinery. The power of the press lies in the human heart. It is the motive behind the press that makes the press powerful. A sinner can make every form of the printing art respond to his hand just as easily as the saint. Servants of the devil can print the Bible in just as nice style as servants of the most high God. But behind every edition of the Bible lies the religious force that demands its publication. Illustration after illustration would only repeat that the power of the press is in the individual and not in its advancement through improvement and invention.

The Church has found the press to be one of its greatest forces. The press is stronger than the pulpit in that it can reach more homes and more persons. Weather conditions may keep members from church, but Uncle Sam sends the printed matter to your door almost every day, regardless of the weather. Sickness may prevent members from attending church, but in the home the printed page is carried into the sick chamber, to the fire-side, the wash-tub, the ironing board, and cook stove. The pulpit speaks one day in each week, but the press is at work every day. The pastor may make a visit weekly, but the presence of the Church paper is in the home every day.

The power of the press is silent, but sure. It has power enough to over-turn a Government. It has sent innocent men to the scaffold; it has set guilty men free. It has caused many a land to be stained in blood; it has caused the flag of peace to ascend. The press, therefore, is good or bad in proportion to the motive behind it. If the motive be Christian the impress of the press will be Christian. If the Churches could control the press it would be greater than if it controlled the Government. To be able to control the press would be greater than to control the whole world.

We forget the things that friends tell us because of the impossibility of being able to retain on memory's impression all that we hear or even all that we see. The printed page is unchangeable and forms a ready reference at all times.

Put great literature in the homes and great men will come out of those homes. The absence of good literature in a home makes it almost impossible to find a leader there. We get our ministers out of homes where the Bible and Church paper are read. Our Church leaders, from janitor in the local church to the presidents of our Convention, come out of those homes where we send the Church paper.

Every time we desire to add a recruit to our ministry it should be preceded by a desire to add a Church paper to one more home. Every time we endeavor to build a local church, we should endeavor with equal concern to increase the circulation of the Church paper.

It is most unfortunate and unfair for the usefulness of a Church paper to be compared to its financial side. There is no comparison. To maintain the Church paper is to pay the rightful price of progress of the Kingdom. The member who contributes to the Church press, contributes to missions, to education, to the Orphanage work, and to every enterprise promoted by the denomination. The member who contributes to the support of the Church paper contributes to the advancement of civilization as represented through a Christian cause.

When the Church paper becomes the object of our thought and our prayers in the same measure as every other institution of the Church, it will be a new day, have a new meaning, and lend itself to a larger, to a better, and greater usefulness that the Kingdom may come on earth as it is in heaven.

The United States is facing, as a result of the drift of its population from country to town, a complete reverse in its food status. In other words, we are changing from a country of exporters of food to a country of importers.

*An address delivered by The Sun's Editor before the Southern Christian Convention, Suffolk, Virginia, May 4, 1922.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE MEN AND MILLIONS FORWARD MOVEMENT*

The Men and Millions Forward Movement has been, and is, a success, a decided success. The achievements already wrought are great enough to inspire us to give this undertaking of our Convention our prayerful and deliberate consideration.

Our people have been face to face with their biggest task, their greatest undertaking. It is true that some of us have not faced this task and its heroic undertaking in just such a way as we should have, but, nevertheless, the task remains unchanged and the challenge yet beckons to us. The Movement has discovered weak places as well as found strong holds. If we can but further strengthen the strong places of our Church and seek to mend the weak places, the searchlight of the Movement will within itself amply repay us for all that has been done.

The funds that have gone into our college have helped to relieve pressing financial obligations, and this continued support, together with like activities, help insure the future of our own beloved Elon College. The Christian Orphanage, too, has received a worth while benefit from the fund. This assistance added with the regular channels of contribution of our Orphanage is making possible a new and better day for the direct benevolent work of our Church.

Our people in the far South have been patient and painstaking, generous and big-hearted in accepting the Convention's excuses from year to year in lieu of a school now have their hopes materialized. The site of the institution has already been donated and this body has set into operation the educational interest of the good people. This achievement alone is a direct result of our Men and Millions Movement.

Our superannuated ministers, a long neglected group of God's noble men, are now being recognized by at least a small annual income. The Men and Millions Forward Movement is happily sharing in this universally approved plan of our Church.

Our extension work in a dozen places, too familiarly known to repeat here, are receiving and will receive great and lasting support because of our Convention's undertaking of the Church's greatest Movement. Then too, the mission work, that work which is the pride of every heart, is being greatly augmented from the fund.

The Christian Sun, the pride of our publicity in this Convention, has been kept shining because of the fund. The Sun has had no way to function during the past two years except to receive support from the Men and Millions Forward Movement. This achievement alone is worth the price that we have paid on our feeble efforts for the Kingdom's cause as represented through this great Movement.

*Closing words of an address prepared by The Sun's editor to be delivered before the Southern Christian Convention, but not delivered because of his absence at the time the address was called for.

Our Men and Millions Forward Movement was organized in this church. We said then, and we have said repeatedly since, that the undertaking was the greatest in the history of our denomination. If we meant it then, and mean it now, then brethren and beloved let us seek to perpetuate the Movement. To do less than that which we have set out to do is to acknowledge that we did not mean what we said and to destroy the confidence of our people when we undertake to do some other great thing. If we forsake the Movement, a thing which we certainly cannot afford to do, is to weaken the next challenge of our Convention to its constituency. We are at the cross roads of progress. Which road shall we take?

THE SUN TO CHANGE EDITORIAL AND BUSINESS MANAGEMENT

The Convention in session last week elected Dr. J. P. Barrett, Reidsville, N. C., editor of The Christian Sun, to succeed the present editor, who gave notice last December that he would not stand for re-election. Prof. P. J. Kernodle, Richmond, Virginia, was elected managing editor, and his firm, the Central Publishing Company, Richmond, Virginia, was given contract for the printing during the next two years. This change in editorial work takes place June 1 and the change in the location of printing takes place July 1. All business matters, including subscriptions, should be addressed as usual until July 1. Readers will please take note and govern themselves accordingly.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

The present editor has arranged with the editor-elect, Dr. J. P. Barrett, Reidsville, N. C., to assume editorial responsibility beginning with the first issue in June. Therefore, contributors will take notice and mail all matter for publication to Dr. J. P. Barrett, Reidsville, N. C., after Friday, May 26. The forms for the issue of May 31 will practically close on May 27, and so all matter received after that date will have to be for some issue in June. All subscriptions and other matters of business of the paper should be addressed to Burlington, N. C., to the present editor, until July 1, at which time a change will be made in the business management.

MOTHERS' DAY

Next Sunday is Mothers' Day. We reprint in this issue a few choice selections on the theme of Mother. Turn to them and read them—and better still: Think in your own terms about that mother of yours, whether she be dead or alive. Remember her on that day. Go to see her if you can; and if not, write her a letter, send her a bunch of flowers, or something with which to express your love for, and devotion to, her. Remember your mother. She may be just the plain old mother (and that is the greatest of them all) but she is your mother and the world will honor you in the same proportion that you honor your mother.

FROM OTHER SANCTUMS

PAY THE PASTOR HIS SALARY

Pay it to him because it was promised to him. It was written down in the bond of his call and is a legal agreement as binding as any other business contract. Yet it must be confessed that some church officers treat the pastor's salary as though it were less binding than other agreements. Other obligations must be paid when due, but the pastor's salary can wait; it is not subject to the law of contracts; no sheriff or other officer of the court will appear to collect it by process of law; it is religion and not business. This is false in theory and practice. The pastor's salary is business as well as religion, and because it is business it should be paid in accordance with the letter of the contract. The pastor asks no favor, but he does expect fair and square dealing.

Pay the pastor his salary because he has earned it. Some people appear to think the pastor does nothing but lounge around during the week and talk a little on Sunday; and therefore they begrudge his small salary and have little compunction of conscience if he does not get it. But if such people knew the real work of a minister they would change their minds. Sermon building makes the brain sweat and pastoral care makes the heart ache. The preacher belongs to no union and knows no eight hour day. His day runs from morning until in the night, and his week from Monday morning to Sunday evening. A church is a complex institution and the pastor is held responsible for its successful operation from its pulpit down through the pews to the heating furnace in the cellar. He must answer for whatever happens, and often for whatever doesn't happen. Judged simply on the basis of hard work the pastor has earned his salary, and it ought to be paid to him. The laborer is worthy of his hire.

Pay the pastor his salary because he needs it. The minister that has means beyond his salary is a rare exception. He depends on his salary to buy the necessities of life. Rent must be paid, the table must be supplied, the children and even the wife must occasionally have new clothes, and books must be bought. It is only by the most careful economizing that the salary can be made to cover these things. The minister has bills to pay and he wants to pay them promptly. It is a point of honor with him to do business in a business way. Unpaid bills are an anxiety and a menace to him. He cannot do his best work with a debt hanging over him and worrying him. When the pastor has had his salary paid to him and has paid his own bills, he goes about his work with a clear head and a light heart.

Pay the pastor his salary promptly. Here is the point where many churches fail. It is rare that any salary is ever repudiated by a congregation or lost by a pastor. But many churches let the salary fall in arrears. It drags behind, and the presence and pinch of the burden falls on the pastor as it puts him in a sore strait to get along, and, besides, may discourage him terribly in his work. The cruelty of this business is that this burden of unpaid salary nearly always falls on pastors with small salaries; rich churches that pay large salaries always pay promptly. One trouble with such delinquent churches is that they have no provision for paying the salary when it is due, whether the money for it is in the treasury or not. Some churches do not even have a definite time for paying the salary and pay it only when the treasurer happens to have the money, when the treasurer has no money, the pastor must wait. Every church should have an arrangement by which the salary is paid with promptness and certainty when it is due. If there is a deficiency in the treasury and money must be borrowed, let the church borrow it and not the pastor. He can then count on his salary and do business in a business way.

Pay the pastor his salary so that he can do his work in the best spirit. The work of a minister depends more than that of most men on his being in fine tune and in good spirits. Take the heart out of him and he will work dispiritedly; put heart into him and he will work splendidly. Pile upon him the load of unpaid salary and you put a millstone about his neck; pay him his salary and you buoy him up as with wings. There is true psychology in the story of the minister who borrowed ten dollars every Saturday night because he said he could preach better with the bill in his pocket. There is close connection between gold and grace, and nowhere is this connection more vital than at the point of the pastor's salary. God has ordained that they that preach the gospel shall live by the gospel, and this ordinance is one of the conditions of spiritual prosperity. Pay the pastor his salary, and pastor and people will work together in harmony and heartiness, and both shall receive a blessing.

Finally, pay the pastor enough salary. This is a point that is subject to the special condition of each congregation, but it is one that each congregation should consider. When the financial ability of the congregation increases through a growing membership, or prices rise through changed economic conditions, the congregation should take note of the fact and act accordingly. It is poor encouragement to the pastor when the congregation grows and no recognition of it is taken in the way of ampler salary. The pastor is not working for larger compensation, but it is welcome when it comes and it increases his efficiency. All these reasons combine with the urgency of both business and religion to pay the pastor his salary.—The Presbyterian Magazine.

I declare, now that I am dying, I would not have spent my life otherwise for the whole world.—David Brainerd.

ELON LETTER

THE denominational college is nothing more nor less than the local church schools of its constituency engaged in the work of higher education. This conception is not universally accepted. The growth and progress of the Kingdom waits on its practical application in the spirit of genuine co-operation.

This view will require that the college keep in close touch with the church schools of its constituency, securing from them lists of all their pupils of high school age, sending these young people literature, and providing them free a course of study for the four-year high school period, and agreeing to credit it when certified by teacher, superintendent, or pastor toward entrance to college. Teachers, superintendents, and pastors also will be kept fully informed as to the college and its plans. They will keep the college prominent in the thought of the church school.

The college further will undertake to train all-time religious lay-workers as well as volunteer lay-workers and ministers for effective service in the local church schools. Every course in its curriculum will be taught by a sincere, earnest Christian professor. But particularly its departments of the Bible and of Religious Education will furnish content courses as the basis of a wholesome practice growing out of tested theory as to the whole field of the religious life and its activities.

The college must do more than this: it must maintain laboratory facilities for its future Christian leaders in training. By this is meant not simply that the Sunday school, Christian Endeavor Society, and other college religious organizations shall function well in their respective spheres, nor alone that they should be coordinated and correlated the one with the other so that these auxiliaries of the modern church may truly constitute a church school, but also that week-day religious schools should be maintained in the college community, manned by the students themselves under proper supervision.

Our own college thus maintains a Week-Day Religious School for the white graded school, another for the Christian Orphanage, a third for the colored graded school, and a fourth for colored adults, this last being of necessity held at night. In these various schools emphasis is placed on worth while instruction of the informational character of course, but large attention is also focussed on the supervision of plan and recreation, the aim ever being to make as many contacts as possible with the life problems of the children taught and to extract from their daily experiences the moral and spiritual principles of the ideal Christian life.

It goes without saying that the local church schools will regard themselves as their own denominational college engaged locally in the work of Christian education.

So will grow up a generation of trained and trusted and devoted leaders, capable of great achievements for the local churches and likewise for the Kingdom of God which they exist to promote.

MISSIONARY RALLY OF ALABAMA CONFERENCE

Many had looked forward to the coming of the Missionary Rally at Rock Stand with high hopes. Saturday morning dawned with very unfavorable weather. It seemed that our rally would be a complete failure. Many speakers had to come from a distance, and at the opening hour quite a number in the immediate community were present, but only one speaker, Rev. J. D. Dollar. Brother Dollar seemed to be at his best and made a splendid speech on the subject assigned him. While he was speaking Revs. C. W. and E. M. Carter arrived. Rev. C. W. Carter followed Brother Dollar with a very able sermon delivered in a most masterful manner.

The main speakers in the afternoon were Rev. E. M. Carter and Miss Berma Dollar. Brother Carter delivered a splendid missionary speech. Miss Dollar spoke on "Our North Alabama Work." A number of volunteer speeches were made and the day was most delightfully spent.

Sunday the weather had improved, and the congregation was larger. Prof. T. C. Harris, our efficient Sunday school superintendent, had arranged a most appropriate program which was rendered at the close of Sunday school.

The two speakers for the morning session of the rally were Miss Lois Calhoun and J. W. Payne. Miss Calhoun spoke on "Christian Endeavor as a Missionary Force." Her talk was splendid indeed. Brother Payne discussed "Sunday Schools and Missions." This subject has, for a long time, been dear to the speaker, and his speech was indeed edifying.

At the 11 o'clock hour Rev. J. D. Dollar delivered a most forceful sermon. Nearing his conclusion Brother Dollar appealed with great power to the young people for life recruits. On conclusion of his sermon someone suggested that he make a proposition for voluntary life recruits. His own daughter, Miss Berma Dollar, was the first to step forward and take her stand as a volunteer life recruit in the Master's Kingdom, followed by sixteen other boys and girls, making a total of seventeen who laid their lives upon the altar for the Master.

This was a great meeting, one of the greatest that the writer has ever had the privilege of witnessing. The rally was in every way a success, and will go down in history as one of the great meetings of the Alabama Conference.

CONVENTION BULLETIN

(EXPLANATORY NOTE: THE SUN'S Editor was not privileged to attend but one day's session of the Convention. We made request that some one be appointed to make a special report for the Convention, to THE SUN, but at the time of going to press with the last side of this issue, nothing had reached us, and so from memory and note-book we give the following sketches of matters. We are conscious of the brevity and no doubt have failed to mention many important items. We trust that the Convention Secretary, or someone, will give a more detailed review of the Convention's work.—Editor.)

Attendance

The attendance of the Convention was considered good. About the usual number of representatives from the Conferences were present. The local attendance added greatly to the inspiration and counsel.

Sermons and Addresses

The sermons and addresses delivered before the body were of a high type, evoking in thought, and well delivered. Dr. O. S. Thomas, Rev. W. P. Minton, and Mrs. Fred Bullock were the out-of-Convention speakers.

Report of Mission Board

The Mission Board made a good report, showing the usual steady progress. No special changes or undertakings.

Report of Woman's Board

The report of the Woman's Board, including the session held by the ladies, showed continual growth and enlargement of missionary effort and purpose. No new work was undertaken other than to use all offerings for foreign work for China. Mrs. W. A. Harper, who so enthusiastically and loyally headed the work for several years, resigned. Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, N. C., was chosen president to succeed Mrs. Harper. Mrs. R. F. Brown, Columbus, Ga., was elected vice president; Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va., secretary; Mrs. W. T. Walters, Richmond, Va., treasurer; Miss Jennie W. Atkinson, Bennett Creek, N. C., superintendent of young people's work, and Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Holland, Va., superintendent of literature and mite boxes.

Bethlehem College

A special report was given in behalf of Bethlehem College, Wadley, Alabama. Twelve trustees were elected, the charter presented and approved. Final report of location committee made and accepted. The report included a donation of a 44-acre tract of land and subscriptions of $22,262.50, all from the town of Wadley, Alabama. Temporary organization of the institution was arranged and permanent organization to be perfected as soon as the charter is recorded.

Men and Millions Movement

The campaign committee of the Men and Millions Forward Movement outlined a program for the future of that work, but the Convention saw fit to do otherwise and merged the Movement with the Mission Board. The details of the Movement are to be worked out by the Mission Board and a definite program to be announced later.

Proposition to Merge Sun and Herald

The proposition to merge THE CHRISTIAN SUN with The Herald of Gospel Liberty met with fair and favorable comment, though the Convention voted not to approve such a step at this time.

The Christian Sun—Its Future

The future of THE CHRISTIAN SUN took up considerable time with the Convention. Dr. J. P. Barrett, Reidsville, N. C., was chosen editor. The Central Publishing Company, Richmond, Va., was given the contract for printing, with Prof. P. J. Kernodle, managing editor. Dr. Barrett is to take editorial charge on June 1, and the paper is to be moved from Burlington to Richmond, Va., on July 1. The Publishing Agent business was left in the hands of the Board of Publication for such disposition as it may see fit.

Board of Religious Education

The Board of Religious Education made an extended report on its activity, with a program of promise. Miss Lucy Eldredge is the all-time worker in this department, and her efforts are being rewarded by renewed interest in the matter of Sunday School and Christian Endeavor work. This Board has a great opportunity and the Convention predicts for it great success.

Officers of the Convention

Dr. W. W. Staley, who has served the Convention for more than a quarter of a century as its efficient, painstaking, hard-working president, retired, and was presented with a beautiful loving cup from the Convention. Dr. L. E. Smith, Norfolk, Va., was chosen president; Dr. N. G. Newman, Elon College, N. C., vice president; Dr. I. W. Johnson, Suffolk, Va., secretary; Mrs. W. H. Andrews, Suffolk, Va., assistant secretary, and Dr. W. C. Wicker, Elon College, N. C., treasurer.

North Carolina Conference Matter

The matter of dividing the North Carolina Conference into three bodies was brought before the Convention by the report of the Executive Committee of the North Carolina Conference, which reported that the referendum vote was for three Conferences instead of one. The Convention as a body would not pass upon the details as to dividing the Conference and redistributing the assets and obligations of the present Conference, but left the matter in the hands of a committee. When the committee has worked out the details it will present the same to the Executive Committee of the Convention and it will become effective whenever accepted by the North Carolina Conference.

Future Sessions

It was voted to hold a session of the Convention next year, and at that time determine whether or not it is advisable to hold a session annually instead of biennially. The place for the meeting of the next Convention was left in the hands of the Executive Committee.

Entertainment

The entertainment of the Convention was 100 per cent perfect. The noon meals were served in one of the large Sunday schools rooms of the church, and every item was carried out in clock-work style. Suffolk church knows how to do the thing in the Old Dominion way.

BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE

If you have a gray-haired mother
 In the old home far away,
 Sit you down and write the letter
 You put off from day to day.
 Don't wait until her weary steps
 Reach heaven's pearly gate,
 But show her that you think of her
 Before it is too late.

If you have a tender message,
 Or a loving word to say,
 Don't wait till you forget it,
 But whisper it today.
 Who knows what bitter memories
 May haunt you if you wait,
 So make your loved one happy
 Before it is too late.

The tender words unspoken,
 The letters never sent,
 The long-forgotten messages,
 The wealth of love unspent—
 For these some hearts are breaking,
 For these some loved ones wait;
 Show them that you care for them
 Before it is too late.

—George Bancroft Griffith.

AN IMMIGRANT MOTHER

O mother, worn with constant toil and care—
 Thy tenement forlorn and cold and bare—
 With courage facing poverty and want,
 With trust sublime, resisting hunger gaunt,
 No light supernal shines from out thy face,
 No high, ethereal splendor—no such grace
 As Raphael, Titian, or Murillo gave Immortalized Madonnas, sweet and grave!
 But strong, enduring, pure and true and bold,
 Thy patent features in their rugged mold,
 All beaming with affection's glories mild,
 Are bent in prayer and brooding o'er thy child.

Around thy brow thou needst no aureole,
 No formal artifice to show thy soul;
 For saintly motherhood, itself divine,
 Sufficient is for heaven's holy sign;
 It asks no touch of genius in art,
 No better attestation than its heart!
 What though thy home be poor and wretched?—hers,
 The Virgin Mother's, was a Carpenter's;
 What though in weariness thy days are spent?
 Madonna Mary knew what labor meant;
 Yea, and her Child—that pitying Christ she bore—
 Knows all thy life, upholds thee evermore.

—Selected.

'Tis counted something great to be a queen,
 And bend a kingdom to a woman's will.
 To be a mother such as mine, I ween,
 Is something better and more noble still.

—May Riley Smith.

MOTHER'S WAYS

Let mother have her old-time ways
 And don't find fault with them,
 For childhood thought her ways the best,
 And they're as good as then.
 The way of love and tenderness
 Are never out of style;
 Remember this and tell her so—
 Don't wait till after while
 Let not affection wane with years;
 It waneth not for you.
 Go, put your arms around her now—
 Kiss her as you used to do.
 More than you know, her heart cries out
 And craves affection still.
 The same sweet mother love is there,
 Unchanged; it never will.
 Life does not hold enough of years
 In which we can repay
 A mother's love—but do your best
 Before she goes away.

—Pittsburgh Gazette-Times.

MOTHER'S APRON-STRING

If you would have the safest guide,
 And drink from sweetest springs,
 Oh, keep your heart forever tied
 To mother's apron-strings.

—Nixon Waterman.

MOTHER'S SONGS

The heavenly songs can no sweeter be
 Than the songs that my mother made dear to me,
 And in God's city I hope, some day,
 To hear them sung in my mother's way.

—Eben E. Rexford.

BRAVE MOTHERS

“Smiling they go unto the grave;
 They are only true and brave.”

KINDLY SILENCE

The kindness of silence is something we might well bestow much oftener than we do. Granted that we do not indulge in scandal; that when we know of the distress and humiliation that has befallen a friend's household in the wrongdoing of one of its members, we tell the tale only pityingly and with every extenuating circumstance; yet why tell it at all? If it were one of our beloved that has stumbled into sin and disgrace; if one dear to us had yielded to sudden temptation; if our home had been rent with bitterness and dissension, would not the first impulse, a right and natural impulse, be to hide the hurt and stain from ever human eye? Would we not bless the friendship that so far as possible closed its eyes and sealed its lips, and that could be trusted not to repeat what it perforce had seen and heard? Surely this is a place where the Golden Rule might have much wider practice that it has—the shielding of others by silence as we would have our own shielded.—Selected.

MISSIONARY

REV. J. O. ATKINSON, D. D., Field Secretary

MISSIONS IN THE HOME*

The home is the heart of the Christian social order. It is also its fate. As go the homes, so must go the Church and also the nation. An adage has it that what you would put in the nation's life, you must first put in the schools. It would be more nearly correct to say, what your schools are successfully to teach your homes must approve, encourage, and supplement.

As I survey the growth of our Woman's Missionary work these ten years, I rejoice and take courage. Certainly we have everything to encourage and hearten us. Our efforts have been rewarded in an increased number of organizations, in enlarged gifts, in more mission study classes, in more readers of The Christian Missionary, in a general awakening of missionary zeal and interest in every department of our work. Let us rejoice and let us give thanks to God for the victories we have achieved, as revealed by the reports of our several officers.

A very fruitful source of profit awaits us however, in our homes. Here is woman's realm of service, her throne of divine ministry to young life. By making our homes missionary, we can so instill into the next generation the method and spirit of missions that the evangelization of the world can become for them a realizable project and not as with us merely an inviting ideal. Herein I am persuaded we shall be able to make our most telling impression for the cause we have espoused and rejoiced to advance.

The atmosphere of the home should be missionary, or that is the same, truly and virtually Christian. Such an atmosphere does not come by chance. It is a matter of conscious achievement, the product of sustained and purposeful effort. The Christian home motivates conduct in terms of the gospel. It nurtures its young in the ways of the Lord. Every act of the child, its every experience, is seen to have influence in the shaping of character, and will be appropriated in a program of well directed training for that higher purpose. Our aim will be to lead the child to love God and all His children and to stimulate a loving concern that all may know Him to be the good Friend Christian children have found Him to be in their experience of and contact with Him.

My experience as a teacher of Beginners in the Sunday school convinces me that children can understand God and live as in His presence even more readily than adults. And they are deeply interested in children of other lands and will cheerfully give to make them happy. They never fail to respond beautifully in their love for less fortunate children, whether they learn of them through pictures or the story-method. If the Christian religion is presented to the little ones as expressive of the family love for each other and for all, we may confidently predict that for the future the "little child shall lead" the way to world redemption.

But the teaching on Sunday is not ample for this purpose, and long before the little curly-head is old enough to enter the Beginners' class, it should know of God and of His other children and how we should all love each other. The mother in her home is the Kingdom's most potent Christian educator. "The hand that rocks the cradle" holds the destiny of the Kingdom in her power. God bless and prosper our Christian mothers!

The thought has often occurred to me as I have studied our mission courses, that we might more profitably be studying how to teach missions to our children in our homes, how to infuse the missionary spirit in their young lives and so prepare the way of missionary success in the years ahead. We do not however need to relinquish our efforts to inform our women in missions, for information is the necessary basis of missionary enthusiasm as also missionary giving. I hope we shall add to what we are now doing methods of making our homes generators of missionary zealots, who will go as missionaries or who will generously support those who go out as their representatives.

I have already hinted at some ways we can utilize to accomplish these very much needed results. The atmosphere of the Christian home creates a situation conducive to and favorable for instruction in missions must rest on the two great fundamental conception of the Christian faith, the Fatherhood of God, and the Brotherhood of Man. A home founded on these mighty Gibralters of the faith will be a congenial climate for the growth and development of the missionary spirit.

But missions are more than a spirit. They are a method and an objective based on definite information. These must be communicated to the child in terms it can understand. How the approach to the theme is to be made will depend on circumstances. Mothers have been known to teach their little ones first love for domestic animals as God's creatures. Then love for birds. Then love for their neighbors. Then for all children, showing pictures of little ones in non-Christian lands and weaving in beautiful stories designed to impart information and to quicken love into action. It is wonderful how the babes in Christ rejoice in such nurture and how lavishly they will give to missions when so instructed.

But where can mothers get the missionary stories to tell the children? Quite a number of such books have been issued. The best are by Tull, though our own Mrs. Burnett's stories are excellent. They were written to be told in Sunday school, but the skillful story teller can adapt them to the home. Sunday afternoons, evenings, rainy days, any time will be found suitable for the telling of these stories. Always have the story told back to you, not once, but many times and on many occasions. Children love to hear stories, but they love to tell them even more.

The missionary magazines and Church periodicals contain material that can be made into beautiful and instructive stories. Of course we are not to confine our story-telling work to missionary stories. Missions are a normal part of life and are best taught as constituting a unity with other experiences. Make the stories you tell natural and don't announce in advance that you are going to tell a missionary story. Just tell it, resting assured the good results you crave will inevitably follow.

As soon as the children are old enough to read for themselves, supplement the story-telling period by suitable books and at least one missionary magazine adapted to children, such for example as "Everyland." The Church paper too should be placed in their hands. I wish we could have more help from this source. I know however how difficult it is for editors to specialize in supplying every need of the people for spiritual nurture. I do not offer this suggestion as a criticism, but merely as voicing a hope for the future.

Every home should form a contact with actual missionary workers or native Christians. Pictures of the person so in touch with the home and all the facts possible about the field should be collected in the Home's Missionary Scrap Book. If possible, have missionaries on furlough visit the home and meet the children. Nor must we neglect to provide missionary socials for the children. When children play missions, the next generation will not only pray for missions, but will also generously give for their support. Of course the little ones will have their gospel chest and part of its contents will after conference with them go to missions.

I realize how inadequately I have expressed the thought that impressed me to discuss this subject. I shall be satisfied if our Christian mothers are by any word I have said induced to undertake steps to make their homes function as vital forces in missionary education. Of this I am sure, our homes can be the most potent creators of missionary zeal. They must function in this direction if the Kingdom of God ever comes in its fullness. What an opportunity our Christian homes offer us in Kingdom service! Out of these homes arise not only the issues of life, but of the Kingdom itself. Let us make them missionary, vitally and devotedly missionary!

WOMEN AND THE KINGDOM

RESIGNATION

(Resignation of Mrs. W. A. Harper, President of the Woman's Board of the S. C. C., read before the Convention last week.)

Last July I communicated to the Woman's Board members present at our Ocean View meeting my intention of resigning from the presidency of our Woman's Missionary Work at this time. In presenting to you this resignation I would be untrue to my heart's impulses did I not record my most grateful appreciation of the splendid co-operation you, my sisters and dear fellow workers, have accorded me during the past four years. Our ministers too have been graciously kind in their attitude toward our work. I thank them sincerely.

I took up this great work with a burdened heart. I lay it down, grateful for your beautiful loyalty and confident that greater days await us in the unfolding years. I thank you from the bottom of my heart for your confidence and loyal support and I pray for the work the continued blessings of our loving Heavenly Father. And I bespeak for my successor the same devoted loyalty which has characterized your relations with me for the four years during which you have honored me with the high position for which I felt so unequal, but in which nevertheless because of your love and co-operation it has been a genuine joy to labor. God bless you and this gracious work.

ONE-DAY SCHOOL OF MISSIONS—DURHAM-ORANGE DISTRICT

The One Day School of Missions for the Durham-Orange District of the Christian Church was held at the Chapel Hill church on Tuesday, April 18.

Minutes of last meeting were read and approved. Roll call of the churches in the district showed the following delegates present: Chapel Hill—Grace Neville, Lillian Long. Damascus—Not represented. Durham—Mrs. A. E. Maynor, Mrs. J. S. Carden, Mrs. E. H. Bobbitt, Mrs. W. H. Boone, Mrs. W. B. Bagwell, Mrs. J. H. Harward, Misses Minnie Carden, and Lessie Stanfield, Mrs. R. J. Atkins, Rev. J. S. Carden and Stanley C. Harrell. Goshen's Chapel—Not represented. Mebane—Not represented. Mt. Zion—Not represented. O'Kelly's Chapel—Not represented.

Mrs. Alice Morrill, President Woman's Board for Foreign Missions A. C. C., talked briefly on what should be done when a new society was organized. She said that the organizers should go through a regular program of the meeting so that the newly organized society would know how to proceed when they met again.

Reports of committee appointed to organize new societies were called for. Miss Long reported no Society organized at Damascus for the reason that no one could be found who was ready and willing to take the responsibility of leadership. Rev. B. J. Howard reported that the people in that locality were interested, however, and indications lead us to hope that we will be able to organize soon. Mrs. Avent reported no Society organized at O'Kelly's Chapel because of the fact that there were so few ladies in the church. This leads to the question: How many ladies does it take to organize a Society? Mrs. Morrill replied that she knew of one that organized with four members.

The Superintendent appointed on nominating committee, Misses Grace Neville, Minnie Carden, and Mrs. E. H. Bobbitt. These were to make nominations for superintendent, secretary, delegates to attend the Suffolk meeting in May, and place of meeting for next year. Nominations were made and adopted as follows: Superintendent, Mrs. W. H. Boone; Secretary, Miss Lillian Long; Place of meeting, Durham, N. C.

Delegates to meeting at Suffolk, Va., in May:—Chapel Hill, Mrs. E. W. Neville; Damascus, Miss Pearl McLennan; Durham, Mrs. J. P. Avent, Misses Lessie Stanfield, Jennie Turner; Mebane, Mrs. J. O. Fowler.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson read "Our Plans for the Year," which were the goals set by the W. M. Conference in its annual meeting in Greensboro.

Bible study in Missions was conducted by Dr. Atkinson. He showed us the difference in God's righteousness and man's righteousness: and that the former was a power sufficient for the world-wide task of evangelization.

The Missionary address given by Mrs. Morrill was an inspiration to each woman present.

"Why and How of Missions in the Sunday School," was briefly discussed by Rev. S. C. Harrell. He said that the church as a whole is God's Missionary Society, and expressed the hope that no stop would be made until each woman and man in the church was a member of a Woman's Missionary Society; or in other words, until the W. M. S.'s had swallowed up the church.

Dr. Atkinson then introduced Miss Iola Hedgepeth, Superintendent of Mountain Work. Miss Hedgepeth told us in her own inimitable way of her work since she has been at Fancy Gap. The difficulty she had of getting a house built to teach in and hold services in, the many hardships she had gone through, the handicaps under which she has labored, and the almost unbelievable progress that had been made with these mountain folk. Now, after eighteen months, they are ready for a minister. Offering amounted to $8.85.

There being no further business, the meeting adjourned to meet next year with the Durham church.

MRS. J. P. AVENT, Superintendent,
MRS. LILLIAN LONG, Secretary.

WANTED

We desire to obtain the following volumes of The Christian Annual for our files: 1888, 1889, 1892, 1893, 1895, 1896, 1897, 1898, 1899, 1900.

CHAPLAIN ELDER SPEAKS

Chaplain W. W. Elder, who is now located at Indian Head, Md., spoke at Elon College last Sunday morning and in the Burlington church that night. Chaplain Elder has been in service for several years. He likes his work and Uncle Sam likes him. Chaplain Elder's messages were well received.

DR. CHILD DIES

Dr. Frank S. Child, Fairfield, Conn., known to many readers of THE SUN, passed to rest on Thursday, May 4, after a brief illness. Dr. Child came south every year to lecture at Elon College, and his home-going will mean a loss to those who had the privilege of hearing his scholarly lectures and enjoying his fine personality.

OUR NEW "FACE"

Some weeks ago when the "boys" in the shop designed THE SUN a new face they were not exactly satisfied with it. However, due to pressure of work they have not had the time to make another. The "boys" presented us with a new "face" when this issue was ready for the press. We accept it and feel that our readers will be well pleased, too.

THE DEAF CITIZEN

The Deaf Citizen is a four-page, four-column monthly published by the deaf mutes of North Carolina, and ably edited by Mr. J. M. Vestal, Burlington, N. C. This publication is in the third year of its existence and is serving as a communication between the deaf mutes in North Carolina and many of the other states. We commend our deaf friends in their untiring efforts in producing so excellent a publication. The paper is printed in Burlington, N. C., by the same house that now prints THE CHRISTIAN SUN

NOTICE

While it is elsewhere announced that THE SUN is to change business management July 1, 1922, it is the desire of the present management to carefully check every subscription account between now and that time, and this will be done. If your account is wrong in any way, according to your thinking, we shall be pleased to know it. If for any reason you are getting THE SUN and you do not know who is sending it, and your subscription is out, it would be well to advise this office of that fact. If you have any complaint to make, let us have it now. It is only fair to our successor that we seek just as far as possible to get the list in the most creditable manner. Despite our painstaking efforts to keep every account 100 per cent perfect, and every subscriber receiving his or her paper, it may be that we have not succeeded in every instance.

“TELL ME A STORY”

AN ORCHARD POLICEMAN

There is a busy little fellow who does police duty in the orchard. His uniform is a coat of slate blue, a white vest, and a black cap, and he is called the topsy-turvy bird. The eyes of this busy little bird are constantly in search of bugs and tiny worms which do so much damage to the fruit trees. He catches the criminals of the insect world between his sharp bill, and he does not waste any time in taking them to the police station; he catches, tries, and judges them on the spot, and death is the penalty always. This police bird is small in size, but his appetite is large, so, during the hours of a day, he deals out punishment to ever so many crawling robbers that sap the vitality of fruit trees in the orchard.

Instead of climbing up a tree and backing down, like a woodpecker, this bird in the slate-orchard coat and white vest turns around and descends head first, which is, no doubt, the reason why he is called the topsy-turvy bird. His book name is the white-breasted nuthatch.

However, if he does travel downward instead of upward, he seldom misses an insect while he is on police duty, for he hunts them out tirelessly no matter how carefully they hide. He even can travel the under side of a limb, like a fly, and peep into every crevice with his bright eyes and punish every insect thief with his sharp bill.

Sometimes he takes a vacation—the best of policemen are allowed some playtime—and visits the “sugar bush” when the sap is running, to sample the sweet juice. This vacation is always taken in the spring when the maple sap is at its best. And it is in the same season of the year that he takes time to sing. His song is not at all musical, although Mrs. Nuthatch seems to enjoy his caressing, wooing note. However, as he is busy usually doing police duty, his song is seldom heard.—Jane V. Roach in Child’s Gem.

CONSIDER THE CAT

If you are one of those morbid persons who hate cats, while your barn, and even your own residence, are turned into rat and mouse incubators, from which the whole neighborhood is supplied; and you keep your premises strewn with “rat poisons” which are usually eaten by some innocent animal—your neighbor’s cat, for instance—or your own chickens, rather than by Mr. Rat, then you are a nuisance to your neighborhood, and your mind is like a moldy garret badly in need of fresh air and sunshine.

No other domestic animal has been so much abused as the cat; and yet, with the exception of the useful birds, she is the farmer’s and suburbanite’s best friend.

Some persons, whose humane instincts are confined to one channel, have gone so far as to advocate killing the cat in defense of the birds; but from my own observation, I have known one misguided boy to destroy more birds in one day with a sling shot or gun than are destroyed by a dozen cats in a whole year. And yet not even the most fanatic have hinted at a campaign against the life of the small boy.

The cat that preys on birds is usually one that was left to starve by her superstitious owner when he moved away and, quite naturally, seeks her food wherever it can be found.

When treated kindly and fed properly, the cat very seldom leaves her haunts around the house and barn to seek the lives of birds.

There are never less than a score of birds’ nests among the vines and shrubbery around our home in the spring; and not one has yet been destroyed by our cat. But one night we heard a great commotion on the front porch, and on investigating found Mr. Rat with the remains of a small wren, which he had taken from the nest in the clematis vine, still in his mouth; while he struggled in the firm grip of Buddy, our cat. Before Buddy became a member of our family it was almost impossible to raise any kind of fowls on the place. Brood after brood were destroyed by Mr. Rat, and even the eggs were taken from the nests. But not one little chick or egg has been lost in this way since Buddy’s reign.

Besides the usefulness of the cat, there is no pet more cleanly, more affectionate, or more satisfactory to have in one’s home. And when she is not all this, it is due to improper training, or ill treatment, rather than to her own instincts.—Ollie Barnes, in Our Dumb Animals.

The spirit of Christ is the spirit of missions, and the nearer we get to Him, the more intensely missionary we must become.—Henry Martyn.

How Can We Help Our Church and Get Help From It?
Psalm 122: 1-9.

“I love Thy Church, O God!
Her walls before Thee stand,
Dear as the apple of Thine eye
And graven on Thy hand.

“Beyond my highest joy
I prize her heavenly ways,
Her sweet communion, solemn voice,
Her hymns of love and praise.”

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION ACTIVITIES

Last Sunday, May 7, was the first Sunday of our Contest for Increase in the Southern Christian Convention. Many Sunday schools have expressed their determination to increase their membership at least 10% during the six weeks from May 7 through June 11. Several are using the “Pennsylvania Plan of Increase” a copy of which was sent to each superintendent. The Board of Religious Education is hoping that every school will put forth a special effort to increase its membership and attendance, and that our Sunday school secretaries will be prompt in sending in the report cards each Monday morning. The Field Secretary will gladly answer any questions regarding this Contest, and help in every way possible. Next week we shall publish the results of the first week’s reports.

Several new Christian Endeavor Societies have been organized recently and are doing splendid work. The Society in the Vanceville (Ga.) church is just six months old, and has more than doubled its membership since organization, and is continuing to grow under the leadership of its president, Miss Lucille Martin. New Societies have also been organized at Ambrose and Enigma in the Georgia-Alabama Conference, and Red Hill is planning to organize in the near future. The Monticello church in the North Carolina Conference has a new Society also.

During the last week of April Sunday School Institutes were held at eight churches in the North Carolina Conference, including Sanford, Ramseur, Apple’s Chapel, Monticello, Burlington, Durham, Raleigh, and Henderson. We were especially fortunate in having Mrs. Fred E. Bullock, of Dayton Ohio, Field Secretary of Sunday Schools of the American Christian Convention to address these gatherings. All of her addresses brought information and inspiration to the workers who attended these Institutes.

The annual Sunday School and C. E. Convention of the Virginia Valley Central Conference will be held with the Mt. Olivet (R) church, May, 17, 18, and 19. The President, Mr. Roy A. Larrick of Winchester is working hard to have a helpful program, and every Sunday school superintendent, officer and teacher, and Christian Endeavor worker, should be planning to be at this meeting.

NEW BUSINESS MANAGER, C. P. A.
(Herald of Gospel Liberty)

The new manager of The Christian Publishing Association, Mr. John H. Stewart, was born in Huntington, Indiana. His father and mother were charter members of the Christian Church of that city, and he himself was a member while living there. The mother has "passed beyond the river," but his father still lives and is one of the few surviving charter members of that church. Later he transferred his membership to the First Christian church of Dayton. About twelve years ago he moved to Decatur, Indiana. As there was no Christian church in that town, he, with his family, united with the Presbyterian Church, of which he has been an honored member. Mr. Stewart began to learn the printing business at Huntington, Indiana. Later he held a position on the Decatur (Indiana) Journal, going from there to The Christian Publishing Association at Dayton as a linotype operator in 1905. He installed the first two machines in the new Publishing House building. After a time he became connected with the Mercantile Corporation in Dayton. In 1909, he went to Decatur, Indiana, as a linotype operator; was later promoted to have charge of the job printing business; and for the past three years has been city editor of the daily paper published by this company. Mr. Stewart has been active in all matters pertaining to the public good. He makes friends readily and is highly esteemed by the people of that city. He comes to take charge of the Publishing House on May 1, with the strongest recommendations from the company he has served for the past twelve and one-half years. We bespeak for him the most cordial and loyal support of our entire brotherhood, in confidence that he will render faithful and competent service.

O. W. WHITELOCK,
President C. P. A.

CHANGES WITH THE C. P. A.
(Herald of Gospel Liberty)

There was the spirit of very deep regret throughout the Publishing House last Saturday, when three of our associates in the work left the positions they have held for so many years—Mr. Rathbun, the Manager; Mr. Charles W. Montgomery, for seven and one-half years the head of the printing department; and Miss Leah Scott, for several years in charge of several important phases of the office work. There was the giving of tokens of friendship and the expressions of genuine esteem and good wishes which can be voiced only where there has been that good comradeship in service which has characterized the work here. And Mr. Stewart, in taking charge as the new Manager, will find the spirit of good fellowship and co-operation pervading his entire working organization and all of those associated with the various departments of the work in this building. Already he has taken hold of the work with zest, and plans to push it vigorously. He is an optimistic, genial fellow whom we believe that our brotherhood will like very much; and he comes to the business with a greater technical knowledge and experience in the printing and newspaper business than any previous manager had at the time of accepting the work here. And we are sure that he will receive the most kindly reception and earnest support and cooperation on the part of the entire brotherhood. He is exceedingly anxious to give service and satisfaction to every customer and patron; to enlarge the touch of the House with the brotherhood, through its periodicals and otherwise; and to be kindly informed of any and every instance wherein the service of the House could be bettered and made more satisfactory. If the brotherhood will give him their heart and hand in the work as the entire working force here is doing, we believe that the results will be most pleasing and satisfactory.

CHURCH NEWS

A GREAT PROGRAM

Most readers of THE SUN are aware of the fact that for several years the Third Christian church of Norfolk, has had high hopes and aspirations, hoping and believing that some day, we would be able to do something that would be a credit to the denomination, and above all, to the glory of God.

When, in 1907 twenty-six charter members met in the little temporary building costing about $1,000.00, we all had hopes—hopes that some time we might see a building erected costing probably as much as thirty or forty thousand dollars. That, by most people, was thought to be rather an extravagant hope.

But the Lord set His seal of approval on the work, and it has had a steady growth all the while. Since Dr. L. E. Smith came to us as our pastor, it has had really a phenomenal growth. We soon saw that the small building that we had first conceived would not take care of the present need, allowing nothing for future growth and expansion. As we began to plan for the future our vision began to enlarge and our faith to increase. We saw that to meet the need we must plan for a larger building. As we began to consider the size and necessary cost of an adequate building we realized that to accomplish it we must have help from some source.

Our committee went before the Board of the Southern Christian Convention and laid our plans before the Board. We told the Board that if it could arrange to stand by us in a very substantial way, that we would undertake to do something in a big way for our Master. Most readers of these lines know the result. I know that there has been some criticism of the Board for helping as liberally as it did. But brethren, please remember that it was that action of the Board that gave us inspiration and courage to attempt the stupendous task we have. I hope and believe, that the time is not far distant, when we will be able to repay the Brotherhood many fold for every dollar put into the Mission fund, by what, under God, we may be able to do because of the splendid equipment we will have for work.

We began two years ago to solicit subscriptions for our building fund, but the depression that struck the country came on and we decided that it was not best to attempt to complete it at that time. Recently we decided to complete the canvass for funds.

Dr. Smith has personally conducted the canvass for subscriptions, in a quiet, private, campaign. We decided to make April 30 the day to rally our forces and complete the fund. Dr. Smith had approximately $110,000.00 in subscriptions to make public, to begin with.

Col. J. E. West, Lieutenant Governor of Virginia, was present and had charge at 11 a. m. Dr. W. H. Denison of Dayton, Ohio, Secretary of the Forward Movement, was with us and had charge at the evening service. When the "smoke of battle" had cleared away and results were totaled it was found that the amount stood at $131,200. About $2,000.00 has been added since. These subscriptions run over a period of five years, payable semi-annually.

The contract for the erection of the building has been let to the Watts Construction Co., of Baltimore, for $160,000.00 exclusive of the furnishings and windows, which will make the cost around or in excess of $200,000.00. Contract calls for completion by March 1, 1923.

The membership of the church is now 826. On May 16, we begin a two weeks meeting, at the close of which we are hoping to be able to record a membership of at least 1000 then with that as a basis—with three missionaries of our own in the field—with a pastor and his assistant on the local field for their full time—with the completion of our new building—we feel that we have only laid the foundation and are then just getting ready for real aggressive work for the glory of God, and to hasten the coming of His Kingdom on earth. We crave the prayers of the Brotherhood, that we may ever keep humbly at the feet of the Master and active in His service.

J. W. MANNING.

THE REVIVAL AT NEW PORT

The greatest revival that New Port Christian church and the other people of the New Port community have experienced in a good many years was held with our church there March 20-30. Rev. H. P. Ruppenthal, pastor of the United Brethern Church of Shanandoah, Va., did the preaching for us the first five nights. The Holy Spirit was with him and used his preaching to accomplish much good. The pastor had to do the preaching during the remainder of the meetings, and conducted the preliminary services the entire time. While we did not have so much ministerial assistance as we wanted, the Holy Spirit was with us in mighty manifestations of power. We felt a consciousness of His presence at every service such as we have not experienced in some time.

Besides the aid of the Holy Spirit, about the most helpful feature of the entire series of meetings was the whole hearted way in which all of the consecrated children of God of all denominations of the New Port, Leaksville, and surrounding communities entered into every praise, prayer, and song service. During the meeting, denominational differences were absolutely eliminated. We were all as one affectionate family, feasting at the same banquet table of divine blessings.

As a result of these services, thirteen people—principally grown young men and ladies—were happily and genuinely converted and united with the Christian church, many others re-consecrated themselves to Christ, and the membership of the three predominant denominations of that section were greatly revived. For all these wonderful blessings, all praise and honor is given to the Heavenly Father.

The revival services at Leaksville began on Sunday following the close of the New Port meetings on Thursday night (March 30) and closed Saturday night, April 15. As was the case at New Port, the pastor had to do a part of the preaching and depend on local assistance for the rest. Rev. J. Lee Johnson of Fuquay Springs, N. C. was to have assisted us; but stuck a nail half through one of his feet a few days before he was to have come, and so could not come.

Rev. A. W. Campbell of the "Regular" Baptist church (a branch of the "Primitive" Baptist church) of Luray, preached one night; Rev. F. A. Tinney, of the Disciples church of Luray preached two nights; and Rev. J. W. Leggett, pastor of the M. E. church south, of Luray preached the last six nights. Furthermore, many of the bretheren of the laity of our denomination and of other evangelical denominations of the Leaksville section and from other sections, especially from New Port and Luray came to our assistance and took active parts in the praise, prayer, and song services. As was the case at New Port, this was about the most helpful human part of the services. Above all, the Lord was with us also at Leaksville in convicting, converting, and reviving power, and gave us a good meeting. Twelve or more gave their hearts to Christ as a result of these services. Most of these have connected themselves with our church already, and the others are expecting to do so next Sunday (May 6th.)

Denominational distinctions were forgotten during our Leaksville revival, also. To God, the giver of all good gifts be all the glory.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

FROM OHIO

Sunday March 26 was "Foreign Mission Day" in the Pleasant Hill Christian church. Rev. W. P. Minton, a former pastor and now our Foreign Mission Secretary, was with us at both morning and evening services. Mr. Smolinsky, our Mission Superintendent of the Sunday school had planned for a big day, and we had it. Of course with the Mission Secretary Minton present, the results of the day's program had to be good.

This Sunday also marked the beginning of a two weeks revival. The writer had with him Dr. Frank H. Peters who did the preaching. The pastor leading the music. We had a good meeting. The weather was not favorable the first week, but was alright the second. The interest during the entire period was fine. Dr. Peters is an educational evangelist, the kind I suspect the most of our churches need. The church people are usually ready to do and move to "greater things" when they are properly instructed.

Previous to the Mission Day and the revival the church finished the job of installing the "Delco Light" system and papering the church. This improvement proved to be good advance work. The light and paper men are sometimes possibly the best preliminary agents for a good evangelistic campaign. Try them. This plan worked well also in my other church, Broadway Christian. Just prior to our revival services during the Christmas holidays this church had made improvements amounting to $400.00 and they are continuing along this line. And Brother pastors, at the close of each mentioned special meeting above, I received a Sunday pounding on the good old Virginia plan.

The Pleasant Hill and Broadway people are certainly great to serve.

J. C. BARRETT, Pastor and Student.
Defiance College, Defiance, Ohio.

LAGRANGE, GEORGIA

We have had one of the greatest revivals here that this section has witnessed in some time. The attendance was fine, the church not being able to accommodate the people.

Brother T. C. Cassady of Birmingham, Alabama, did the preaching. We have received sixty-three members for the Christian church and nine for the other churches of the town. Our church has put on new life and we expect to do more than we have ever done for the Lord.

We are running a union meeting at East LaGrange. We trust that the Lord will give us a great meeting. Our church here will soon be completed and we hope to fill it with some good members. We desire the prayers of all that we may have a successful year.

CALLED HOME

SHIRKEY.—William D. Shirkey was born May 25, 1894, and died April 7, 1922, aged 27 years, 10 months and 12 days. He leaves a wife and four little children to mourn his untimely death. These have the deepest sympathy of their many friends. It was the writer's privilege several years ago to receive Brother Shirkey into the church at Mayland, where his wife also is a member. A large congregation attended the funeral which was held at Linville Creek Dunkard church April 9, 1922.

A. W. ANDES.

DENSON.—Mrs. Rosa Melinda Denson, wife of T. E. Denson, of Dendron, Va., died in a Richmond hospital April 8, 1922, just after a very serious operation. She was 59 years 11 months and three days old. The body was brought to Wakefield and conveyed about two miles out in the country to the old family cemetery for interment.

She was twice married. Her first husband, James P. Gay, and three children preceded her in death. Husband, six children and one sister survive her. She was a member of the Dendron Christian church.

W. D. HARWARD.

DOFFLEMYRE.—Mrs. Rachel Rebecca Dofflemyre, widow of the late B. F. Dofflemyre, of Stanley, Va., R. F. D., died April 18, 1922, aged 75 years, two months and 18 days. Mrs. Dofflemyre was a member of the Christian church for more than 50 years, and lived the life of a real Christian. She is survived by three sons, five daughters, and quite a number of grandchildren.

The funeral was conducted at her home near New Port, Va., April 20, by her pastor.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

FAUCETTE.—Capt. Robert Hawood Faucette departed this life April 21, 1922, at the age of 85 years, four months and six days. He was a member of Company K, 47th Regiment, North Carolina troops in the Civil War, and was in the great battle at Gettysburg in which his command lost 80 guns of the 90 with which they entered the battle.

He leaves four children, six grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

He was widely known in the counties of Alamance, Caswell, Guilford, and Rockingham. His funeral and interment took place at Stony Creek Presbyterian church and was conducted by Rev. J. W. Holt, of Burlington. A good man and a good citizen has gone from among us.

J. W. HOLT.

Resolutions of Respect—Johnston

On March 19, 1922, God in His infinite wisdom saw fit to remove one of our beloved members, Mrs. R. H. Johnston.

She was a devoted mother, a kind neighbor, and a loyal member of Holland Christian church, Sunday school and Woman's Missionary Society, and attended these services as long as her health permitted.

Therefore, we, the members of the Missionary Society, offer the following resolutions:

First—That we as a Society have sustained a great loss.

Second—That we hereby give expression to our feeling of sorrow and appreciation of her life.

Third—That we extend our deepest sympathy to her family and pray God's richest blessings upon them in their bereavement.

Fourth—That these resolutions be recorded in the minutes of the Missionary Society, a copy sent to the family and a copy sent to The Christian Sun for publication.

PRESIDENT HARDING BECOMES LIFE MEMBER OF THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

President and Mrs. Harding are now life members of the American Bible Society. A short time ago a friend of the Society, in her eighty-sixth year, wrote expressing her admiration for President Harding and stated that she campaigned for him, voted for him in his election, and that she was anxious for him to be affiliated with the American Bible Society. She also wanted Mrs. Harding to be associated with her husband in this membership. This desire on her part was communicated to the President and Mrs. Harding and both of them have very graciously accepted. The certificates of membership were presented at the White House by a small committee from the Society, headed by Secretary of State, Mr. Hughes, who is a vice-president of the Society.

MISCELLANEOUS

DEGRADING SPECTACLE

Doverites in the vicinity of the county jail last Saturday afternoon were treated to a spectacle that years ago was a common occurrence, but which happily, in recent years, has been dispensed with in this country, the lashing of a prisoner at the public whipping-post in the jail yard. The lashes were applied lightly by our human sheriff, but nevertheless the sight was a disgusting one. Squirming humanity, clinging to a post to which he is manacled, cringing under the leather thongs—is it to be wondered that the spectacle recalled to many the dark ages when instruments of torture and barbarism were in vogue?

Every other State in the Union has dispensed with the whipping-post. But for some reason, still unexplained in any convincing manner, Delaware clings to this cruel relic of those ancient days. "It drives away the criminal," argues those who favor the punishment. True, but it also drives many a youth who is just stepping upon the wayward path into the ranks of hardened criminals.

The post has broken more spirits, driven more men to hell, awakened the devil in the hearts of more human beings, than its advocate realize. Perhaps some day they may see the light and the fair name of Delaware will then be cleansed of this blot which makes its notorious throughout the Nation.—Delaware State News, Dover, Delaware [April 20, 1922.]

IF A HORSE COULD TALK
 Load me but lightly, Master,
 Drive with an easy line.
 If the sun is warm to your lesser form,
 Just think what it is to mine.

A pound in the winter, Master,
 Is two in the summer sun.
 The mercy course makes a better horse
 When the hot day's work is done.

Easy in loading, Master,
 Light with the driving line.
 Forget the goad on a sun-baked road
 Be merciful, Master mine.

THE HILLS OF GOD
 The hills of God encircled are
 With spaciousness and peace,
 From narrow chafing fetters they
 The fretting soul release.

Lift up thine eyes, sweep far thy view,
 Swim in this boundless sea.
 The soul, thus lost, shall find its life,
 In joyous liberty.

MORE OF THE BIBLE IN DAILY LIFE
 What we need in our care and strife
 Is more of the Bible in daily life,
 More of its lessons and gospel love,
 More of its music of lark and dove,
 More of its blossoms of cheer and song,
 More of its spirit to make us strong.

More of the Bible in business and toil,
 More of its fertile and beautiful soil,
 More of its earnest and helpful joy,
 More of its teachings for man and boy,
 More of its courage and faith and cheer,
 More of its laughter to dry the tear.

We often think of a thousand things
 That life needs most when its trouble
 stings,
 And its worries and its hardships count;
 But we need more Bible to help us
 mount,
 We need more Bible to help us see
 The men we are not and we ought to be.

Living In The Past

By REV. B. J. HOWARD

Chapel Hill, N. C.

NE is moved to wonderment and sympathy by the person who is conscious of his inability to adjust himself to the present age, and hopelessly struggles with a dead past to which he has become so strangely fixed. Asleep to the fact that the whole structure of life is ever undergoing constant change, he awakes to disown the new day that has come with the passing of the hours. He is conscious of a suddenness; but cannot believe that it belongs to his awakening rather than to the day that has come. He cannot ascribe to what he sees the everlasting order of all life-gradual growth. He tries to interpret the morning in terms of evening twilight. In his frenzy, he rushes from his chamber an alarmist and extremist. He calls progress prodigality, and the whitened harvest fields are as but a wilderness of woe and waste. He watches the lurking of lone highwaymen while multitudes pass on their way about the Master's business. He shudders at the oaths of one profane and is deaf to echoes coming from millions of family altars. He is not an idler, but the mis-user of a tremendous amount of energy. Like one observing a spurious growth from his favorite apple tree, cries "ruined!", and then diverting his rust ruined pruning hooks from their intended use, he tries to uproot the entire tree. Or like him who insists upon superannuated symbols with which to clothe the present, only to find them outgrown. But he refuses to part from them. He cries "ruined!" He lodges his hope in some kind of collapse. Early and sudden endings and beginnings of dispensations are for what he plans, prays and predicts.

OUR NEW PRESIDENT

We present to readers of The Sun the likeness of the Convention's new President, Reverend Leon Edgar Smith, A. B., M. A., B. D., D. D., 4312 Colonial Avenue, Norfolk, Virginia. Dr. Smith is a graduate of Elon College and Princeton University. He has held some of our most prominent charges and is now pastor of the Christian Temple of Norfolk, Virginia. Dr. Smith assumes the duties of his office with enthusiasm and a spirit of sincerity and earnestness that will win. The Sun, in behalf of its constituency, congratulates Dr. Smith to the elevation of this high office in the Brotherhood.

"COLLEGE MONTH"

President Harper in his Elon Letter in this issue calls attention to "College Month." A good idea, we think, and here is The Sun's endorsement of the plan. We have all kinds of special days, weeks, and months, and certainly the matter of education is of such importance that we cannot afford to deny it a place in our church life. The progress of Christianity is the progress of education, and the progress of education is the progress of Christianity. They are inseparable. During the next few months many of our young men and women will be thinking of attending some college next year. They may need advice. We feel that pastors will cooperate in the work and make a special plea to our young people. There are hundreds of boys and girls who never attend college, and who are just as able to attend as those who go. The reason that they do not attend is for lack of encouragement—the lack of being properly instructed so as to see the need of a higher education. What an opportunity our pastors have!

And College Month means more—it is an opportunity to bring before the people the financial needs of our schools.

LAYMEN'S MISSIONARY MOVEMENT TO RESUME ACTIVITIES

(Condensed from Press matter)

At a meeting of representative laymen of twenty-one evangelical denominations, held at the LaSalle Hotel, Chicago, Illinois, May 3 and 4, it was voted to resume the work of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, which had been in abeyance since the organization of the Inter-Church World Movement, in order to cause that organization no embarrassment in undertaking the large task which it set itself to do.

The purpose of the movement is to promote the missionary program of Christianity by laymen through prayer, study and work. It is an unofficial movement of the laymen in loyal relation to their respective churches for the extension of the Kingdom of Jesus Christ. It is not the purpose of the organization to administer missionary funds but to assist churches in an educational and inspirational way.

A committee of forty-one outstanding laymen from every part of the country was appointed a general committee with power to add to their number. As the work of the Movement shall develop, district, state and local committees may be created. Such committees shall be self-governing but will be expected to adhere to the general policy and outlines of the movement. There shall also be a general advisory committee of Missionary Board secretaries and ministers, which shall meet and counsel with the General Committee from time to time, at least annually. In order to co-ordinate the work of the Laymen's Missionary Movement with the missionary programs of the various denominations or communications, the Laymen's Missionary Movement shall seek counsel from a gathering of Missionary Board leaders each year, at which recommendations concerning the following year's program of the Laymen's Missionary Movement shall be formulated. By such a plan the Laymen's Missionary Movement retains its unofficial character and at the same time cooperates with denominational leadership. The expenses are not secured from Mission Board treasuries or from the treasuries of local congregations. Its expenses are supplied by certain individuals whose gifts do not interfere with obligations to their churches.

OUR COUNTRY CHURCHES

That which has concerned us for many years, and concerns us yet, is the great and undeveloped work of the country church. We have only praise for the fine work that the average country church is doing. It is the country church that is sending the ministerial students to our colleges; it is the country church that is giving the best and ablest leaders to the denomination, to all denominations, and to the whole nation. But while this is true, the country church is not measuring up to the great opportunity which she has. Magnificent school buildings have found their way into practically every locality. Most of these schools are being manned by college and university graduates. Subjects are being taught in these schools that a few years ago were taught in colleges. Community pride is asserting itself, and no man is acceptable as a teacher unless he is thoroughly capable.

But what of the country church? We find practically the same type of country churches that we found ten years ago. It is true that we have built a few new churches, but we have not kept pace with other things or done our duty by the country church. How long can the church continue to hold the respect of her young people when she does not measure up in opportunity to other organizations in the community?

Where does the blame lie? The average community has fallen into the habit of contenting itself with a once-a-month service and claims that such is all it has time for.

The country church cannot demand the ablest men so long as $25,000 worth of automobiles are parked in the church yard while the people listen to a $200 preacher. God cannot prosper a cause where the people will pay more for gasoline to be used as a means to help get them to church, than they pay the preacher who must speak to them after they get there.

This is no tirade against automobiles. We believe in the modern conveyance, but we should be willing to help pay that the church may advance along with other things. The church can demand the respect of the world only as the membership of the church respects the church. Let us have good schools and good teachers, but let us also have good church buildings and good preachers. Let us have automobiles, but let us pay our pastors enough salary to put them beyond the starvation line and give them a chance to study and show their best.

OUR FRONT PAGE ARTICLES

We wish that those who have written articles for the front page of The Sun could know the many compliments we have received in their behalf. Readers are freely expressing their appreciation of them. We have several more on hand with promises from others to write. We are sure that those who have already written would be glad to furnish another article any time. It is the expressed hope of many that this feature of the paper may be continued.

EDITORIAL BRIEFS

American life is organized, or rather so over-organized, that it is difficult to think in any constructive way. The multiplicity of organizations are making their inroads upon the home, and if the home-life be destroyed, the whole underground structure of civilization will then be cut loose.

We are not so much concerned about the past life of a man as we are as to his future. Turn the past loose. Seize the future and seal it with a purpose.

Weather conditions are now favorable for church attendance and the churches during the next few months should be filled and overflowing.

The school closing season is at hand. Let us remember to congratulate and seek to inspire the graduates, both of high school and college.

The boys of today are the men of tomorrow. What you desire the men of tomorrow to be will have to be taught the boys of today.

The reason that more people are not filled with righteousness is because they are not hungering and thirsting for it.

Are you only a shadow in your community, or do you mean something worth while to those about you?

A nation can rise no higher than the ideals of her homes. How high are the ideals of your home?

It is the Father's will that we should seek to know and to do and not our own wish.

We can make the church the biggest thing in the community—if we will.

A church boss is a first cousin to the devil's private secretary.

IMPORTANT NOTICE

The present editor has arranged with the editor-elect, Dr. J. P. Barrett, Reidsville, N. C., to assume editorial responsibility beginning with the first issue in June. Therefore, contributors will take notice and mail all matter for publication to Dr. J. P. Barrett, Reidsville, N. C., after Friday, May 26. The forms for the issue of May 31 will practically close on May 27, and so all matter received after that date will have to be for some issue in June. All subscriptions and other matters of business of the paper should be addressed to Burlington, N. C., to the present editor, until July 1, at which time a change will be made in the business management.

CONTRIBUTIONS

ELON LETTER

 THE Southern Christian Convention provided that June in the future should be College month in our Church. It was a wise and progressive step, provided.

PROVIDED we unite to make it mean what it ought and can mean, College month has great possibilities. The College authorities can only outline the plans. To be wholly effective these plans must be worked by pastor and people in the local congregations. We know our pastors and we know our people. We can do it. We will.

Before this letter sees the light of THE SUN a personal word will have gone to each pastor requesting the Sunday that will suit him best to observe College Day in his church or churches, and asking for suggestions as to how to make the occasion most successful. I believe our pastors will answer these letters promptly and that consequently great progress awaits us in the growth of our educational life.

This provision of College month is the logical next step in the working out of the Churches System of Education as provided two years ago. This system as is well known aims to correlate and unify the educational institutions of the Church in such a way that they will feel themselves a unity and function as such. The educational institutions of the Church are her Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, Chautauquas and Schools of Methods, Mission Study Classes, and the Colleges. The coordination of these educational forces will mean efficiency and progress in Christian effort. The Colleges will regard themselves as local educational institutions engaged in the work of higher education, with the purpose particularly of providing trained leaders, lay and ministerial, for the local organizations. The local organizations will regard themselves as an integral part of the whole work of Christian education. Crowned by the Colleges as their final fruit, but rooted and grounded in each local Sunday school and other local organizations as the foundation stone of success and achievement. So will College president and Sunday school superintendent stand shoulder to shoulder as leaders in the united educational work of the Kingdom. So will Sunday school teachers and College professors labor hand in hand for the development of Christian character through the Church's system of education.

Ever high school graduate in any of our Sunday schools should regard himself or herself as having been prepared locally to enter our College in the completion of his or her education. Elon is the logical and proper next step for all such young people. As they are loyal to the local church, they must also be loyal to their own College. So will our Church grow and prosper through the education in her own College of her own young people.

College month is needed as the next step to emphasize the necessity for higher education, to show that it should be of the Christian type, and to enlist our own young people as recruits for our College, giving public recognition to their loyalty and setting them aside publicly to the work of future preparation for their life's investment in the service of the Kingdom.

Let us seek the divine guidance that the celebration of College month may result in just that impetus to the growth and progress of our educational work which is needed and which God can own and bless.

W. A. HARPER.

SUFFOLK LETTER

 THE best way to meet the growing demands upon the Church, financially, it seems to me, is for Conferences to enlarge their apportionments upon the churches. This is not a popular suggestion, as any attempt to increase that kind of financial obligations upon the churches meets with opposition or a fear that the people will not stand for it. This unwillingness is as manifest among the ministers as among the laymen. This position is not the result of indifference toward the cause, nor an unwillingness to perform duty; it is doubt that grows out of a lack of confidence in the ability of the people to do more than they are now doing. One might say that it is a lack of faith in the membership of the church in the field of finance. Careful study of the situation will reveal at least two plain facts: first, that the people in all the churches are more able than they seem to be; second, that the church membership is more liberal than they seem to be. As a rule, ministers are afraid that they will burden the members if they ask for more money; but this is a false fear. Giving is like every other service, ability increases with the proper exercise of giving. The old saying, "Give till it hurts," is false philosophy; small giving hurts the worst. This is the philosophy I would suggest: "Give till it pleases you." The happy people are the givers. The main thing is a system. Tithing is, in its main features, simply a system. Subscriptions, pledges, campaigns, personal and congregational appeals are all very good; but they are at best spasmodic and temporary. A system grows, increases in efficiency, produces results in a quiet, regular way, and gets easier like all other practices.

I have suggested increase at the Convention in Raleigh and again in Suffolk, and worked up a table for increase; but in neither case did the suggestion meet with favor. The plan for the Convention part of the apportionment was five thousand dollars for each of the four departments for which apportionments are made. The present calls for Convention Missions $4,500; Foreign Missions, $4,500; Elon College, $4,500; and Convention Fund, $1,500, making a total of $5,000 per year for Convention purposes. The suggestion for $5,000 for each of the four subjects named above would mean a total of $20,000 a year or an increase of $5,000, which would mean an average of only $25.00 apiece for 200 churches. This would mean only an average of twenty cents per member per year and it would give $10,000 a year for Missions; $5,000 a year for the College, and $5,000 a year for Convention expenses and THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The thing that has saved the situation is the apportionment system; not because it is apportionment, but because it is a system. The apostolic system was to "lay aside the first day of the week." The value of the envelope is its system. To wait till "just before Conference" and then pay $5.00 looks big to some givers; but to pay ten cents per week, which is $5.20 per year, looks small. The faith that removes mountains is a shovel full at a time. The field is tilled by a furrow at a time, till we get a cultivator, or a tractor; but for the average man, it is a furrow at a time. Churches are willing and able when they understand the need and practice the system. I have tried it and it works. It is not an untried theory, but a workable system that pleases and prospers the churches that undertake larger things for Jesus.

REPORT OF AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY

The biggest year of Bible circulation since the high levels of the war period is reported by the American Bible Society in their annual report just issued.

The total number of volumes circulated during the year was 4,855,464, which is more than a million in excess of the distribution of the preceding year. The largest increase is shown in China, where 2,362,730 were circulated. From Japan, the Near East, and all of Latin America, there has come an increased demand so great that the Society has been unable to meet it.

During the year, the Society has been busy with many important translation programs. The revised Spanish New Testament has been completed and will be ready for distribution during the coming year. Translation work has gone forward also in Luragoli for missions in British East Africa; in Quechu for the Bolivian Indians; in Zulu for the black people of South Africa; in K'pelle for use in Liberia. In China large parts of the Scriptures have been issued in the new Phonetic Script, which is a simplified written form endorsed and promoted by the government.

During the year the Society has arranged for the reorganization of its manufacturing program and hopes thereby to largely increase its output. It will make use of the largest and best organized printing concerns in America for the rapid production of its books in many languages for use in all parts of the world. It will continue to use its own plates and exercise painstaking supervision of versions in accordance with its policy of over one hundred years.

THE BULLETIN

President W. A. Harper delivered the literary address of the Kernersville High School on May 6. He also spoke to the graduating class of the Presbyterian Hospital Training School, Charlotte, N. C., on Monday evening, May 15.

Dr. W. T. Walters, Richmond, Va., was called to Burlington last week, due to the critical illness of his father, who is better at this writing.

Rev. B. J. Earp, Newport News, Virginia, writes: "Our work here seems to be moving along nicely. The recent revival gave us twenty-one additions."

Dr. P. H. Fleming preached the baccalaureate sermon at the Pilot Mountain High School closing on Sunday, May 7. Rev. H. J. Fleming has been the principal of the Pilot Mountain school during the past year.

Rev. J. F. Morgan changes his address from 18 Hardy Avenue, Berkley, Norfolk, Virginia, to 12 West Clifford Street, Winchester, Virginia. Brother Morgan has entered upon his duties as pastor of the Winchester church.

THE SUN'S Editor greatly enjoyed last Sunday at Mt. Zion church, Orange County. It was the time of the annual memorial. We delivered the memorial address at the morning service and preached at the afternoon service. The congregations were large, the flowers beautiful and abundant, the dinner of the best, and the fellowship fine. Rev. J. F. Apple is the pastor of this church and the people love him. Mt. Zion is one of our fine country churches.

WAKE FOREST EXPELS GREEK LETTER MEN

Twelve members of the Wake Forest student body were dismissed from college last Saturday by vote of the faculty, on being found guilty of affiliation with a secret fraternity. The ruling that caused the faculty to dismiss the men from college is one of long standing and prescribed by the board of trustees. The regulation prescribes that there shall be no Greek letter fraternities in the college, and expulsion came when the faculty found the twelve men guilty. Of the number expelled, three were members of the Senior class and all were students of good standing.—Greensboro Daily News.

THE SIZE OF THE PREACHER'S SALARY

By F. E. SMITH, in The Christian-Evangelist

ONE of the grave dangers in American economic life is the low pay of the preacher. Two-thirds of the ministry of our country are compelled to live below the standard set by the Government for an American family. The preacher cannot escape the force of such an economic situation nor can the church. Facts, recently discovered, reveal alarming conditions sufficient to shock the church into action. The demands on the preacher always make his expense higher than for others of the same income. This adds to his difficulty. If he is to fill his place he must be a representative man in his community. He represents the church and people judge the church by him. He is the symbol of religious things. His home is open to all people and at almost all hours. The impression must be for good on all who come. Many will catch the spirit of his home for theirs, his silent leadership counting as much as the spoken.

The preacher must have a real part in the life of the whole community. His service does not belong to the church alone. True, he must guard his leadership in the church from degenerating into an overworked community committee man. He should have a part in organized life that means the welfare of the people. Let his salary be such that he can pay his own way. There are many good intentions that unconsciously result in his humiliation. The gift of memberships, the provision of facilities that he cannot afford, all done out of a sense of benevolence. Be done with feeling sorry for the preacher! He does not need it and will thoroughly resent it. Give him the support so that, in his own right, he can take proper place with his fellows. He must have books and supplies for his work. Economy here is dangerous. When the reading and study hours are trimmed be sure that sermons will show it and the church will know it. He must attend conventions and conferences, even beyond the point which many will consider necessary, but he knows he cannot be a "stay at home" and feel the pull of the life of his times.

The Salary Must be Support

The size of the salary is not significant, as expenses usually follow in the same ratio of increase. It is necessary that there shall be a just support. It is not merely for a living. Any real preacher can compel that, put him down where he will, or he has no business trying to preach. Nor is it that he may have ease and a life without trial. Any real leader of the church despises all such. It is to make him the most efficient servant of the church. It is strange reasoning that sets him out in his task, the greatest in the world, with huge handicaps. Too many stop short of support for the preacher, not seeing that it is a part of resource of the church in her task of world redemption. How often men of affairs are not willing to see the salary of the preacher on the same scale with men of like ability and preparation in business. Sometimes good men hold down the support of the preacher and then join in the criticism that he is no manager.

The Freedom of the Preacher

His support should leave him free to work out his highest ideals for the ministry. Primarily his is a creative work. He ought not give all his time and thought to what will feed the flock. Let him forget at times the sermon and the address and the never-ending line of committees and do the thing that will feed himself. He must get above the level of always hunting fodder. Let him find fresh life in recreation as when a child, the time when the world was real and God was most of all, where doubt never came and faith always spoke for the soul. What a rest from the ceaseless sense of drive! In such an atmosphere we fancy his soul would break out in a new song. How can the creative live in the man who all the time feels the drive of the job? Provide for him the seasons of play, the church will be the richer.

Preacher's Shadows

One of the haunting things of the preacher's life is the anxiety about the future for himself and loved ones. He cannot and it is not his business to save money. If he makes that an ambition he pays for it dearly. The days of old age or misfortune are not provided for, nor can they be on the average salary. He is entitled to a living support while at his task and by the same token also when he is aged or broken. Nor is it back pay or deferred wages. By the very nature of his service his support is for life. He refuses opportunities to make money and provide a competency as other men. How often the church foolishly pays so little that he is compelled to gain part of his living from other pursuits. His interest is divided and a divided affection follows.

Often an unfair temptation is laid on the preacher when he has become successful in business. The next step is to quit the ministry. No man can make money and also preach the gospel. The numbers now out of the ministry are a conclusive argument. The work of the church is big enough to use the full power of any man. It can never be done by a half-hearted service. The responsibility is not so great, paradoxical as it may seem, with two tasks. The comfort and independence may be greater so that it turns out that there are many today, intended of God to be great leaders in the Kingdom, who occupy inconspicuous places in successful business. The trial laid on the preacher becomes a snare of satan. But for the money question many a successful leader would be at his post in the church instead of being lost to the church, and sometimes, we fear, lost to God.

Treatment of the Preacher

We rejoice in those churches that have been a tower of strength to their preacher, who have held him up and helped bring victory for his ministry. We also recognize that all preachers are not the same. Varying capacity and training with differing degrees of consecration and devotion mark the life of those who preach the Gospel. We speak of the ministry and the average church. We believe many churches have not grasped the full value of this high calling or their treatment would be different.

The preacher's pay has been the object of sharp practices of many would-be shrewd church officers, a kind of Hebrew quality of which they seem proud as if beating the preacher at the financial game was a real achievement. To induce a man to come to a church on an income less than he previously received or the church securing him has been accustomed to pay. To cut the salary for various reasons when a man could not afford to move. To discharge a man from service when he and his family were under quarantine. Such have happened; would that they would never happen again!

Certain churches may not be guilty of these particular sins against the ministry but may practice others just as mean. It may be offered in a defense that part of the injustice suffered by the preachers comes from thoughtlessness. If so then the more is the shame because no one took the pains to think! How many a heart-ache might be saved to the most loved man if we had not been too busy to think! The thing that cuts the preacher deepest is not what happens to him but to see his wife and children forced to suffer and sacrifice, usually with a smile, making for him a refined sort of torture. There are not lacking organs and organizations outside the church, which call attention to the desperate situation as regards the ministry. They seem more sensitive about this all-important matter than the church.

The pay of the preacher should be prompt. How often he has been given a poor credit rating which he did not deserve. Other bills are usually met with business regard. He often has to borrow money because of salary not paid, and pay interest out of the already small income. The church uses his money and he pays the interest. If the salaries due preachers, and which never will be paid, could be placed in a permanent fund, there would be provided generous pension benefits for every preacher. In contrast consider the practice of a certain church whose treasurer takes pride in the custom of handing the preacher his check each Lord's Day just before he enters the pulpit. We fancy he preaches with greater conviction. It is a matter of encouragement to know of the much better conscience exercised by churches on this question.

The Blighting Effect

The effect of this mistaken policy, too long tolerated by the preacher, is serious enough. It has taken the heart out of good men and while they have too much conviction to quit, they carry their work in a hopeless spirit. No man can be at his best when he is saddled with sapping anxieties. There has been a steady loss of experienced men from the ministry. Even with a future of fine service ahead, they have despaired over the continual struggle to make ends meet and have gone over to the persuasive call of business. The young men are not coming into the ministry in appreciable numbers. The home is not emphasizing the ministry as a vocation. Oddly enough, the call of God is not only left out but often bitterly opposed when children purpose to follow the high promptings of their souls in Christian leadership. With the unfair proportion of burden laid on the ministry the young man refuses to be led into such an unnatural situation. This condition need only continue for another generation and the church will be practically leaderless. It is all too true now for many churches. The unfair support of the ministry has discounted the power and place of the church. When she lowers her ideals she loses the respect of all. If she mistreats her own workers what message can she bear for righteousness in industry?

THE MAN WHO SMILES

The man who smiles and the man who frowns,
They met in the street one day.
Said the man who smiles to the man who frowns,
"Hold, brother, one minute, pray.

"I've noted you often on the crowded street,
From morn till the sun goes down,
And your very sight quite casts a blight
On the happiest man in town.
Now what is the reason, pray tell me,
You wear that eternal frown?"

Said the man who frowns to the man who smiles,
"Oh, why should I be gay?
I work and strive, to keep alive,
For a pitiful sum called pay.

"Yes, I work from early morn till night,
Just why, I cannot see;
For I spend what I make for bread and cake;
What joy in life is for me?"

Said the man who smiles to the man who frowns,
"This world is a good old place!
And I'm glad, not sad, to be alive,
So I wear a smile on my face.

"You say you strive to keep alive,
Why, so do I, my friend;
But the joy of life is in that strife,
And I hope to strive to the end.

"You say you are poor as poor can be;
Then glance at that cripple there—
Broken of limb; oh, pity him,
For he is the one who is poor.

"While you are rich, and know it not,
For you have more than he;
He may have wealth, but you have health;
Now complain no more to me."

The man who frowned then turned around,
And thought a long, long while;
Then went his way, 'mongst the sad and gay,
And on his face was a smile.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC FOR MAY 21, 1922

What Christian Endeavor Does For Me.—Matt. 25:14-30
(Union Meeting With the Juniors and Intermediates)

OUR INCREASE CONTEST

Splendid reports are coming from our Sunday school secretaries for the first Sunday of our contest between Conference groups. By the end of the week we hope to have reports from many more Secretaries. At present the Virginia-Georgia Conferences are in the lead, reporting fifty-six new members enrolled on May 7, while North Carolina-Alabama reports so far show thirty-one new members. Splendid offerings are reported for missions, the Orphanage, and regular Sunday school expenses. Many of our workers have expressed a deep interest in this contest, and have declared their purpose to help their own schools increase at least ten per cent. in membership during the time of the campaign, May 7, to June 11. Christiania, Alabama Conference, announces its determination to increase one hundred per cent.

The greatest success of this contest depends upon two things: (1) That every Sunday school in the Southern Christian Convention shall work to increase its membership in order that more boys and girls, men and women may be reached by our Sunday school work, and (2) that every Sunday school Secretary will promptly mail in the report cards so that we may know just what each school is doing, and report through THE CHRISTIAN SUN each week of the progress being made. Will you not let us know what your school is doing? The contest ends on June 11, which will be Children's Day in most of our schools. Let us begin now to plan to make that the greatest day in our history of Sunday school work.

Many inquiries are coming in to the office of the Board of Religious Education for Children's Day programs. We have a good supply of the programs issued by the Board in 1920 and 1921, which we shall be glad to mail to any school upon request. Both of these programs are very complete and suggestive, and furnish much material for a splendid Children's Day program for any of our schools, where they have not been used before. Write to the Board of Religious Education, 1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Virginia, for the copies which you can use.

The Virginia Valley Central Sunday School and C. E. Convention is in session this week with the Mt. Olivet church. A fine program has been prepared under the direction of the president, Mr. Roy A. Larrick, of Winchester, Virginia, and a great convention is anticipated. Our Field Secretary, Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, has been spending the days before the Convention visiting several churches in the Valley, and after the Convention will spend a few days with the Bethlehem church in their Daily Vacation Bible School, which opens May 22.

THOSE INSTITUTES

No doubt all of us think something ought to be said relative to the institutes held in the South during the last two weeks by Miss Lucy Eldredge, our Field Secretary of Religious Education, and Mrs. Fred Bullock, of Dayton, Ohio; and yet one may wait for another and finally nothing at all be said about this work. Lest that should be true, I shall give in a few words my impression of this work.

The whole program in Raleigh was manned, and manned well, by these two ladies. None of the Convention officers being present to take a very active part, the team took hold and did an excellent piece of work. The only fault I find was the very small attendance, caused by the fact that the institute was held on Saturday afternoon and night, both speakers remaining for the morning Sunday school services. The lack of attendance was certainly no fault of theirs.

The class or quality of these messages was very high, second to none in their make-up and helpfulness. We have had in our city all classes and kinds of religious workers and speakers for the last two years, and the messages of our own workers are equal to any of them. It has been my privilege to hear such speakers as Prof. Honline, D. W. Sims, Mrs. Baldwin of Chicago, Dr. Brown of Yale, and Marion Lawrance, during the last two years, on similar subjects, and so far as I can see, the methods, plans and ideas of our own workers are just as helpful as theirs, and were delivered just as well. There is, however, one question in my mind, and that is this: "Why is it our people in the Christian Church all over the South will not turn out to hear a message of this kind?" Every thinking man and woman knows, or should know, that information along this line is one of the things we need most.

The Board of Religious Education did a fine piece of work when it planned these institutes, and put these fine workers in the field. Yet, it is unfair to the Board and to the team to send them forward to speak to empty benches. I hope the Board will see fit to continue the institute work, but it is a shame to do it unless the churches of the Convention are going to back them. Here is one of the greatest fields of Christian service in the denomination, and the institute work ought to be repeated next spring on a large scale.

THE HOUR OF WORSHIP

A SUMMER WITH CHRISTIAN SUNDAYS

At the beginning of each summer season, it is well to ask ourselves, What kind of Sundays am I intending to observe during the hot weather? Will I make them pagan or Christian? selfish or unselfish? worldly or spiritual? destructive or constructive? hurtful or helpful?

There are two ways of spending Sundays. Unless definite pains are taken to choose the right way, we are certain to drift into the wrong one. Human nature is constituted lazy, especially in warm climates. No flowery beds of ease have ever held the saint intent on doing the will of the Lord. Clean-cut decisions to adopt the Christian path on Sundays must be repeated.

Christian Sundays include the regular performance of church duties as teacher, leader, musician, singer, and preacher. Vacations certainly are in order, but should not be taken hit-or-miss, whenever the "flesh is weak."

Church attendance is as necessary for the spiritual life in summer as in winter. Why not make up our minds to be present at least once every Sunday wherever we may be? Not only will the preacher be cheered, but every other worshiper will feel stronger because of our moral support.

Make the automobile contribute to human happiness, not only for ourselves, but also for others. Why insist on garage men doing work on Sundays that could have been done before that day, if proper forethought had been taken? Why not make the automobile an agency for the bringing of children to Sunday school? Remember the shut-ins who through long winter days and nights have seen nothing of the outside world save through a single window, but who now might enjoy a ride on the brightest day of the year.

And on vacation attend if possible at some Christian watering place where good comrades can be found, where Sunday is remembered as a holy day, and where God is especially near to all waiting hearts.—Western Christian Advocate.

Believed to be the oldest twins in the Southwest, Mrs. Mary Peoke and Mrs. Belle Billings recently celebrated their eighty-third birthday at their ranch in El Paso County, Texas. They were born in Camden, Maine.

REPRINTS FOR PASTORS

PUT THEM DOWN

Emerson is said to have kept a pad and pencil by his bed so that he might jot down any thought that seemed to come to him by inspiration. The custom must have been better for essays than for sleep. The minister who has many plans and much routine work might well remember that constructive ideas come often by inspiration as well as great thoughts. Some days and hours are particularly fruitful in them. They are not to be commanded the next day. Put them down when they hover in the mind. Much may come of them.—The Congregationalist.

CENTERING OUR PRAYERS

The other Wednesday evening we attended a prayer service where the pastor directed the petitions into one channel—the Sunday school. Each one leading in prayer was asked to hold some particular problem of the school up to the Lord. As the meeting progressed, the hearts of all assembled warmed and glowed with interest in the school and went forth the hour's petitioning more fully determined to help God answer the petitions they had just uttered. Such particularizing of our petitions seems to be far more profitable than to assemble in mid-week meeting with no idea of the direction our prayers are to take and have them scatter to the four winds with every possible sort of petition.—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

THE SUCCESSFUL MINISTER MUST BE A STUDENT

To meet his opportunity the minister must be a student. His life gives him time to become intimate with the thoughts of the great men of all ages. He must be a reader of the poets and philosophers, the essayists and the historians. To the man who loves clear thinking or beautiful poetry this phase of the work offers a constant joy. His reading does not have to be confined to market reports and sweetened with the sporting page of a daily paper. Instead of this, it is a study of the world's best. No other vocation offers such a wide range of reading and requires a man, if he is to succeed in his profession, to read not as a pastime but as a part of his work. To the lover of literature this is a privilege not to be ignored.—The Continent.

A SON'S TESTIMONY TO HIS PREACHER FATHER

Bishop McDowell read at the Baltimore Conference a portion of a letter received from a professor in a certain university, the son of a Methodist preacher. These are the fine words he wrote the Bishop concerning his father:

"I know not what my father wrote you; he merely mentioned it in passing. But without doubt he failed to tell you the really vital things: that he has reared and educated eight children on a salary ranging from $325 to $1,200; that no man or woman ever said aught against his character; that he is absolutely consecrated to his work; that his preaching is learned and convincingly sincere even though he isn't a Beecher; that he is better than a doctor in a sick room and that his heart is as big as a mountain; that boys love and respect him, girls accept his counsel, and men and women of all ages and classes listen to him and go away with lighter hearts; and that he would walk twelve miles any day (he has done it) to bring cheer to a weary heart. His religion is practical, constant, effervescent, and real. His preaching is convincing and scholarly, profound, intelligent, moving to action and to better things. His pastorate is kindly, affectionately paternal, bringing good cheer and smoothing rough places everywhere. I never knew a preacher who had more personal influence out of the pulpit. And his ministry is consecrated, self-forgetting, altruistic, diligent, and loving."—The Methodist.

LIFE'S HERITAGE

When so a heavy rod shall rise to smite me,
And sore afflictions come to sear my soul,
And complications round about affright me,
And clouds of sorrow from all sides uproll;
When trial waits my gaze at every turning,
And chill misunderstanding greets my deed,
And spite of all the thirst for good that's burning
Within my heart finds no responsive heed;

When sturdy friends I've counted on are wanting;
When enemies rejoice to see me fall;
And in my troubled spirit gray the haunting
Fears of ruin imminent appall;
When all my days are days of gloom and sadness,
And where was light no hint of light appears,
And every hope I hold to seems but madness,
And they who used to praise now turn to jeers;

Still in my heart, despite its load of sorrow,
Despite the pressure of o'erwhelming care,
I sense the thrilling joy of a to-morrow
Whose dawn shall lighten up the darkness there.
I sense a moment nigh when, woe abating,
I'll tread the path that leads on to release,
And find a cure for troubles dire awaiting Safe in the everlasting arms of Peace.

For Life and Love so close are interweaving
That none can live and yet be portionless;
And days must come with hours all retrieving
The dreary years of unfound happiness;
And he whose share of Love is not yet ready,
Whose measure of its joy is yet unknown,
Need only keep his Faith both sure and steady
To come sometime, somewhere, into his own!

THE CHRISTIAN ORPHANAGE

Elon College, N. C.

NOT FAR FROM THE GOAL

Our Easter offerings have come in very nicely and we are moving on toward the goal. We hope by the time all the offerings get in that we will be far beyond the mark set.

Our Church has been very loyal to the Superintendent and the Board of Trustees in handling this work here and have made it possible to accomplish what has been done here in the last five years and made it possible for us to give eighty-three little children a home instead of forty-two five years ago.

When all of our churches fall in line in the monthly offerings, the Thanksgiving offerings and the Easter offerings we will be able to do a larger work than now. Our Eastern Virginia Conference stands at the head of the list in the monthly offerings, as every church, except two, in the Conference is making the monthly offerings. We hope in the near future to get these two on the list. While many of the Sunday schools make small offerings, putting many small offerings together makes quite a nice little sum. I hope before we see the close of this year that most of the Sunday schools, if not all, will be on the list of monthly contributors.

The Christian Orphanage is not a burden on the Church, but ought to be a source of happiness and joy in helping the helpless. It gives us all an opportunity to be a father to the fatherless and a friend to the needy.

I believe the good women got as much real joy out of making the little Easter dresses for the little girls as any one thing I have ever asked them to do for us. I received many letters telling me how much real joy it was to the ladies who took part in making them and the great pleasure it was to them.

This life is a life of service. It is not a life to live for self alone. When our blessed Master was on earth His life was spent in helping others. What brings to our life more than doing some little kind act to bring joy and happiness to the life of some one in distress and sorrow. A small sacrifice does not cost us much but what joy it might bring to some in distress and perhaps discouraged.

In making the little Easter dresses was but a small sacrifice to those who made them but what a joy it brought to the little girls who got them.

Let us not forget our Orphanage—our eighty-three little children and the great opportunity it gives us to help the little fatherless ones.

A LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley: Here I come again with my short letter. I also enclose a dime for April. I go to Sunday school every Sunday. My teacher is Mrs. Linda Seawell. She is nice and I like her fine. Hope you and the cousins had a fine time Easter. With love to each of you.—Lyda Janette Carter, Sunbury, N. C.

We are glad to have your letter this week. I guess you will be glad when the school closes.—Uncle Charley.

TITHERS PLEDGE CARDS

Will all pastors and others who have secured them please send to the undersigned as soon as possible all pledge cards taken in the recent effort to secure additional tithers in our churches? Quite a number have sent in and some have written that they will do so shortly. It is greatly desired that all cards be turned in at an early date. However, if any church, because of other program or activities, failed to put on the campaign for tithers, it is not too late yet to engage in this work. We have on hand blank cards that we will be glad to supply any church or any pastor desiring them. If we can give any assistance further than that we have tried to give, we shall be happy to do so.

J. O. ATKINSON,

Secretary Stewardship and Tithing.

BACK OF IT ALL

Back of the commissions and the investigations, back of the conference and conventions, back of the statecraft and the strategy, back of the numbers of men and resources in money, back of all that we do during these busy days, in the living Christ lie the energies that this movement must have in greater measure if we are to have truly world-conquering power created in his presence. Everything else follows. Our financial problems will be solved. Men and women will be offering their lives, places will be shaken, and multitudes will flock into his Kingdom. Whatever else the Centenary misses, let it not miss the opening of the channels for the great bestowal of spiritual power near and far upon the Churches.—John R. Mott.

EDUCATIONAL

THE NEGLECTED DUTY OF THE SCHOOLS

Again, people are asking this question as never before: What are our schools doing to give worthy ideals to the multitudes of eager, aspiring, truth-seeking boys and girls who pass through their portals?

The schools of today teach facts, but what are they doing to develop character or even happiness? If Edwin Markham was right when he said that man's three great needs are represented by three B's—"bread, beauty, and brotherhood"—what are our schools doing to train our youth for this three-fold challenge of life? In our country schools the practical subjects like arithmetic are taught in terms of town things and town interests, and it is often hard to get half-way recognition for agricultural subjects. Beauty is largely forgotten and brotherhood even more largely so. Do we not teach boys and girls to think of individual and personal success rather than of success through service to one's fellows and one's community? As Dr. Henry F. Cope says:

"There, I am convinced, is the very heart of our weakness in educational matters—that our present system of public education is organized for the education of individuals in individualism. * * * It matters not at all what the youth has learned of the encyclopedia of science if he has felt no passion for life, if he has never quickened with a thrill for humanity, if he has never seen a vision nor dreamt a dream of a better, fairer world."

And if our schools are failing to train the young for noble citizenship, for community service, for neighborhood betterment, are they not also letting our boys and girls drift without moral chart or compass? Are they not failing to provide any compelling moral guidance for life? Granting that parents themselves should give moral training to the young, must we not face the fact that half the parents are not giving such training? And is not the general public suffering seriously because of this widespread neglect? Can our nation afford to let such a condition go on without remedy?

Here in America, we of course cannot, must not, teach the doctrines of any religious sect. But even though this is true, should not the Ten Commandments, the Golden Rule, the Two Great Commandments, and the Sermon on the Mount be early taught to every boy and girl as forming a universally acceptable moral basis for life, whatever one's sectarian views may be? And will the seeming moral degeneracy of today be checked until we do give such training?—Progressive Farmer.

THE CHALLENGE TO THE CHURCH

How is this situation to be remedied, millions are now asking, except by the joint action of the church and school? Must not the church turn aside from a host of its petty disputes and grapple instead with its greatest task—which is that of spiritualizing, beautifying, and glorifying human life by teaching men and women the high dignity, honor, and happiness that should be theirs as veritable sons and daughters of the Most High King?

Is not each religious denomination today concerning itself too much about the little differences that divide it from other denominations and not enough about the high principles on which they might unite with power? Are not many so-called leaders looking for petty differences about which they may wage a fruitless quarrel with science instead of emphasizing those essential things about which science and religion are in agreement? If there are things that the Founder of Christianity thought so little about that He did not take the trouble to make them clear, is it not likely that He wants His children to concentrate rather on those great, beautiful, and fundamental things He did emphasize and did make clear?

And though He taught us to pray, "Thy kingdom come on earth," is the Church doing all it should to promote not only the saving of souls for the after-life, but the actual establishment of God's Kingdom on earth in such a way that it will itself preach more powerfully to men than mere words can ever do? We send missionaries to foreign countries—and we do well—but are we vigorously seeking to make our own counties and communities "little provinces in the great and coming Kingdom on Earth?"—Progressive Farmer.

EFFICIENT RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION

Efficient religious instruction must provide ample and suitable information, give training in devotion, and furnish opportunity for expression. None of these phases of the educative process is wholly distinct from the others; they are bound one to another in a process which is a unity. Information furnishes the ideas which are emotionalized in devotion. Expression makes the instruction and its emotional response a part of the very life of the pupil. Omit or neglect any one of these phases and your educational effort is wasted in proportion. Neglect any phases and your educational product is correspondingly defective. Information which does not touch the emotions is cold, useless, soon forgotten. Emotion which is devoid of a broad instructional background and which fails to register itself in life and conduct is emotionalism—a defective type of religious life too common to need further discussion. To seek religious expression from children and young people when such expression does not spring from the inner-most foundations of their being is to compel them to make bricks without straw. They will get little joy out of such activity, neither will they long continue it."—W. A. Squires.

ARE YOU INTERESTED IN MEDICINE?

For all China there are about one thousand modern doctors. A full third of these are missionary doctors. There are 162 foreign and 895 native nurses in missionary hospitals and in missionary work. There are no better instruments of Christianity than this small army of over two thousand, who bear to the four hundred and twenty-seven million of China the tidings of Christian health, cleanliness, and the sacred Christian right of the sick and weak to care and tenderness. There are over a million blind in China and four hundred thousand deaf. No estimates are available to tell the story of how many lepers, feeble-minded, insane, dependent and uncared-for children and aged. No one has calculated the number in prison or the total number of professional beggars who infest the country. These people suffer wretchedness, but are no worse off than they would be in the Western world if public and private agencies were not established for the care of the unfit.—World Survey, Foreign Volume.

HEATHENISM IN SIGHT

In Mayari there is a very beautiful Catholic church with many members. The priest, the pastor of the flock, is of the better type in Cuba, but his life is such that does not permit me to describe. This week I have passed the church and watched many of the children and women at worship. They had the image of the crucified Lord clothed in fine linen and placed in the pulpit.

All those women and children passed by and kissed the feet of the image and then deposited into the hand of a half-drunken priest their annual fees. It was rather hard for me when I saw the mothers of some of my own Sunday school scholars dress their children and go to this kind of worship. Of course they will not go to church again until next Easter. Here we have absolutely nothing to begin with but a morally wrecked people. If ten million people could be moved with compassion for Latin America and intercede daily for her, who could tell what would happen?—J. W. Fitzgerald, Cuba.

THE DEGREE OF "DOCTOR OF DIVINITY"

We have already expressed our opinion of this honor, that to an ordinary man it is a liability rather than an asset. Experience will prove to any holder of it that more is expected from him than from a plain minister, and that when he fails to measure up, his downfall is correspondingly greater. There are men, however, who enjoy sailing under false colors, and who derive a peculiar satisfaction in passing as a learned man.

If this honor comes as a recognition of real scholarship; or represents real work in theology, the owner of such a title has a right to all the satisfaction he can get from it.

The title has become so abundant that a man feels disgraced who cannot secure it. We know of several brethren who have earned it, as they suppose by taking a special course in some Western College.

A friend seeing that this honor had been conferred upon one of our ministers by a certain Western College, wrote to that College for fuller information. At once he received a reply, in the shape of a catalogue which gave a course of study that amounted to nothing, and he also received an intimation that $25.00 must accompany his application.

There are others wearing this title at the end of their names, and no one can tell whence it came.

Under these circumstances it would be far wiser to do away with this honor, since it has ceased to be such, and also because it tends to deception.

As it is now, this title is as common and as easy to secure as the title of Colonel in post war days.

John Phoenix, in his humorous sketches, when describing Western scenes, says that in early days he was standing on the deck of a steamer leaving San Francisco; amidst the bustle of leaving, when everyone seemed to have a friend on the wharf having a farewell, he stood alone, a stranger without a single acquaintance.

Pitying eyes were turned upon him which increased his sense of loneliness. Suddenly he raised his hat and waved his hand and cried: "Goodbye, Colonel." Instantly a hundred hats were lifted and a hundred voices cried, "Goodbye."

The same would take place at any of our Church Courts, if a stranger would cry, "Good-bye, Doctor."—Presbyterian Standard.

CORRESPONDENCE

FROM JAPAN

The following letter while wholly personal is from one who has so many friends among SUN readers that I pass it on for their enjoyment also.—
J. O. ATKINSON.

“Christian Girls’ School, Utsunomiya, Japan, January 28, 1922. Dear Dr. Atkinson: This is the first of January by the old Japanese calendar. Most of us use the same calendar as that of yours, and I had my New-Year’s-day twenty-eight days ago. The farmers and those who still stick to the old custom of over sixty years ago are celebrating today as New Year’s.

“During the past fall term I was very busy. Mrs. Fry was not here during the first part, and then the new teacher who was to come here in the place of Mrs. Aevano failed to come. Therefore, until Mrs. Fry’s return Mrs. Takita and I managed to run the school, and it certainly was some experience for us.

“We were told that Mrs. Fry and her families were sailing from Seattle on September 17, and that the steamer due Yokohama on the 29 or 30. So, I with eight school girls went to Yokohama on the 29 and waited the arrival of Mrs. Fry. While we were there, three days, several steamers entered the port, and we looked and searched for her, but no Mrs. Fry came.

“We, the nine lost sheep, returned to school with a great disappointment, but on our return to the school we found out that she was back waiting for us. We certainly were glad to have her back with us again; and she at once took up her work. Mr. Fry and Maki Chan, too are looking fine.

“On December 7, the sixteenth Literary Entertainment of the school was given at the auditorium for the largest audience we ever had before. Both the teachers and the pupils worked very hard to get it up and to make it a success.

“After the entertainment, three busy weeks followed. During those weeks we tried to get ready for Christmas. Though the term-examination was on hand we were happy to work for the merriest time of year. On the eve of the twenty-fourth, we gathered in our church and had our Merry Christmas and to my estimation over two-hundred people were present. Of course many of them did not know the Savior, but I am sure they learned something about Him that night.

“During the Christmas holidays only seven girls and I remained in the dormitory, and it was a very quiet vacation for us. It was my intention to remain throughout the holidays, but on account of my adopted brother’s death, I was called home suddenly on the last day of the old year. You see what a sad New Year I had. He was sick for a long time, but his death was rather a sudden one. Everybody who knew of his sad, lonely, life of the past 30 years shed tears; but his life was not as sad and lonely as the people thought of, because several years ago he found a Friend Who could share his sorrow and pain and Who comforted and cheered him. It was indeed, the greatest joy of his life to serve Him.

“April 10, 1922.—May I continue the old letter? I was so busy that I put it off and off until tonight. I somehow had so many little odd things to look after or to do that many a letter was destroyed unfinished.

“Thank you very much for your letter of March 3, which I received the other day and appreciated. The money reached me a few days ago. I know I ought to write to the Third Christian church thanking for the money each time when I receive it. I am afraid they have already formed an opinion that I am very ungrateful, and that I do not appreciate their unflinching support truly enough to write and thank them. I somehow have been unable to recall Dr. Smith’s address. Dr. Atkinson, when you write him, will you please ask him to tell the members of the church how much I really am grateful to them for their noble support, even though I do not write and tell them so?

“In Japan, this is the season of beautiful cherry blossoms. When I see the cherry blossoms I think of and long for the lovely apple blossoms of the South. The memories of the South are all very sweet and dear to me.

“On March 20, seven girls graduated from here. And April 1 was the opening day of another year. This term I am to teach seventeen hours a week besides the special teachings between 2 and 4 in the afternoon, and the matron’s work at the dormitory. They keep me quite busy all day long, but I am just as happy as I can be.

“Sometime ago a relative of mine tried to get me to teach in a certain school which is much larger than this. When I told him I was not working for gold, but for God, he said that I would have just as many opportunities there as I have here. But he found out that I was going to work wherever I felt I was most needed.

“In the dormitory I now have only nineteen girls, and most of them are very young and little. Some of them are still childish enough to be afraid to go out in the dark. It was not very long ago when I, one mid-night was awakened by a girl who rushed in my room where I was sleeping. The girl was very pale and trembling like a leaf in wind, but when I asked her what happened she told me that a man was in the kitchen. I too began to shake a little, but I had to be strong. I dressed in a minute and went out to see who was the man who transgressed the law of this “No-Mans-Land.” I searched and looked for him, but all I found in the kitchen was a great-big black cat.

“O, please pardon me for failing to thank you for the little book, ‘Can a Woman Tithe?’ I read it as soon as I received it and appreciated what it taught me. I don’t think it very hard to tithe, and there is a great joy in doing it.

“By the way, when you next time receive my salary will you please pay my subscription Maroon and Gold, and then for what our class pledged to leave to the College? I am very ashamed of the way I have been neglecting my duties. I certainly will appreciate it if you will do me the favor.

“Please give my kindest regards to my good friends there.

CALLED HOME

DOVEL—Mrs. Diana Dovel, of Stanley, Va., R. F. D., was born October 17, 1819, and died April 28, 1922, being 102 years six months, and eleven days old. She belonged to a family of unusual longevity, four of her brothers dying at the ages of 93, 88, 88, and 80 years, respectively. Her only surviving brother—W. D. Shuler, of Hutchinson, Kansas—is now in his ninetieth year. Grandmother Dovel was married at the age of 16, and was the mother of eleven children, four of whom are still living. She leaves forty grand children, with eighteen dead; 152 great-grand children with thirty-three dead, and twenty-one great-great-grandchildren, with two dead.

She had been a member of the Christian church for eighty-eight years, and lived a consistent Christian life to the end. She lived an industrious, plain, and simple life, never worrying about material things. She always said that God would take care of her. She told the writer of these lines, and others, that she was willing and ready to go at any time God should see fit to take her. Although, she lived to a remarkable old age, (102 years, six months and eleven days), she had the full use of all of the five senses and of the faculties of her mind until the last. She also possessed a wonderful vitality. She was thrown from an automobile a few days after the 101st anniversary of her birthday, and sustained a broken arm. From this, she fully recovered in a few months. She died suddenly, being in her usual good health until a few minutes before her spirit took its departure for its eternal home.

The funeral services were conducted at St. Paul's Lutheran church, near Grove Hill, Va., on Sunday, April 30, by her pastor, the writer, assisted by Rev. A. L. Bolick, of Shenandoah, Va. The crowd attending this funeral was variously estimated to be from 1,000 to 1,300.

R. P. CRUMPLER.

GORDON—William Thomas Gordon, was born April 19, 1861, and died April 29, 1922, age 61 years and 10 days. His entire life was spent in Prince George and Sussex Counties, Virginia.

He married Miss Ida A. Bishop, April 18, 1888. To this union were born four children, viz., Mrs. Alma V. Southall, of Disputanta, Va., Louis B. Gordon, of Petersburg, Va., Joseph H. Gordon, and Mrs. Myrtie B. Jennings, of Disputanta, Va., all of whom with the widowed mother survive him. Also he leaves three brothers and one sister, J. M. and J. H. Gordon of Richmond, Va. and R. M. Gordon and Mrs. E. J. Ferguson, of Petersburg, Va.

He professed faith in Christ in his early manhood and joined the church. For many years he was a faithful deacon and the trusted collector and treasurer of Centerville Christian church, which position he held until death. He was a church member and officer who took a delight and great care in doing his official duties. He was a strong temperance man, and proved himself faithful to the church.

His was the quiet, but firm life. His was the kind and charitable life. He was obliging and helpful to neighbors and friends. He saw the virtues of his fellow man and forgave and covered the mistakes of others. He was liberal in the use of his means in the support of the Church. Deacon Gordon was of strong Christian convictions and lived a deeply religious life. His character and services will be hard to duplicate. The funeral services were held from Centerville Christian church, he was laid to rest in the church cemetery beneath a bank of most beautiful flowers, and in the presence of the largest gathering the pastor has ever seen at the church. Beautiful music was rendered in the church and during the filling of the grave. Deep sympathy was felt for the weeping widow and children. Truly a good man has gone to his reward and the church and community will greatly miss Deacon William Thomas Gordon. Peace to his dust, and eternal happiness to his soul.

JAS. L. FOSTER, Pastor.

HIGH BLOOD PRESSURE

The condition of the heart and blood vessels and whether or not they are working under normal conditions, can be determined by an estimate of the blood pressure. Such an estimate can be made by any competent physician who is equipped with a blood pressure apparatus. The average normal blood pressure for an adult is about 120—meaning that the pressure is sufficient to raise a column of mercury in the blood pressure apparatus to a height of 120 millimeters. Men usually have a slightly higher pressure than women and as the age advances the blood pressure advances.

A blood pressure higher than the pressure.

normal for any particular age means that there is some condition of the circulatory system or some stimulant (poison it may be called) in the blood which makes it necessary for the heart to perform extra work. Unless the blood pressure is reduced to normal this will, in time, lead to a changed and weakened condition of the heart muscle and the walls of the arteries and to changes in other parts of the body.

Among the most common causes of high blood pressure is excess in eating and drinking. The poisons from the digestion of excessive food are irritating and this is especially true of meat. Alcohol, by affecting the appetite and increasing the amount of food taken, is also a cause. Stimulants, like caffeine and nicotine as taken in the form of coffee and tobacco, excite the nerve centers which control the circulation and may lead to high pressure. Hard work, mental worry, nervous conditions, changes in the thyroid gland, diseases like syphilis and kidney troubles, are also common causes.

No matter what the cause, if the high pressure persists, changes will take place in the walls of the arteries, causing them to become thickened; such changes may finally lead to heart failure, dropsy, and hemorrhage of the brain (apoplexy).

The usual symptoms of high blood pressure are headaches, flushed face, dizziness; and, as the kidneys are often involved, the symptoms of kidney trouble.

Prevention of high blood pressure lies in moderate living, avoiding excessively heavy work, worry, the excessive use of coffee and tobacco, and alcohol. Patients with infectious fevers should never get up too soon, as this is liable to strain the heart.

The most important measure in treating high blood pressure is the proper regulation of the personal habits and diet. Constipation should be kept under control by eating fruits and vegetables, but avoiding any which may cause gas to gather in the stomach and bowels. Meats should be taken in limited amounts while it may be necessary not to eat meat at all. The patient should never take alcohol, tea, or coffee but should drink milk instead. If the kidneys are acting properly, water should be taken in large quantities; but if the kidneys are not acting freely too much fluid may increase instead of lower the

There are a number of drugs which are useful in lowering the blood pressure, but these should never be taken except upon the advice of a careful physician. In fact any person who has blood pressure high enough to cause symptoms should consult a competent physician who has a blood pressure apparatus; the cause of the high pressure should be sought and the blood pressure should be taken at regular intervals. This is the only manner by which one is able to know the result of treatment and dieting.—B. E. Washburn, M. D., in Progressive Farmer.

Listening To God

By REV. W. D. HARWARD, D. D.
Dendron, Va.

THAT they had hearkened to Me" is a reminder to God's people as to what might have been in the way of fruitfulness and victory. Activity and even much talking to God may dull the ear that should be kept open to Him. The sound of the hammer may make it difficult for the architect to talk of plans. Direction from the sky may be overlooked even in the act of sailing. The knock of the divine Guest at the door may not be heard on account of the bustle and noise within. "Be still and know that I am God."

The boy who sits quietly with his father gets a new idea of life which the boy would not be able to receive in his more active moments. The deeper things of God cannot be known, neither can God have a chance to work through a life until it becomes receptive and open to Him.

A scientist has figured that 95 per cent of the energy expended in producing a crop of wheat is the universe taking advantage of the chance which the farmer gave it.

So God's greater servants have not thought chiefly of what they could do for God but of what God could do through them, if they gave Him opportunity. Never to be unresponsive to His will was their chief concern.

Take out of life solitude, where God's voice can be heard, the receptive mood that welcomes His guidance, the willingness to do whatever God wills and what can God do through any life? "I will hear what God the Lord will speak." Psalms 85:8.

No pastor can afford to neglect his young people. To do so is to invite decay for the local church and stagnation for the denomination.

Paul did not go pouting around when he was stricken on the Jericho road. He wanted to know what to do and wanted to know it then.

A mocking bird song in the choir will never suffice for a clean life. A trained voice is no substitute for a trained soul.

There are those who stand aghast at the waste of money and sanction, by act, the waste of time. The two are close akin.

True religion does not always stay at home. It will go out and find the unfortunate, the needy, the poor, and seek to help them.

The Church's greatest undeveloped resource is its laymen. Few are active in local work, but in larger positions of the Church the number is very small.

There are those who believe in the right of private judgment (for others) so long as it coincides with theirs.

The average young person loses enough time between the ages of twelve and twenty to become the best informed citizen of his or her community, if only the lost hours were put to use.

The Church is a teaching force as well as a preaching force. Christ used the word "teaching" in a sentence before He said "preaching." One is the handmaid of the other.

A man has no more right to make a living out of a community without giving something back to that community than he has to receive that for which he does not give value received.

There is something radically wrong with the community that never sends a boy or girl into public life.

The twenty-third Psalm read in the negative will reveal its acceptance to many.

AN EMBARRASSMENT

The other night we dropped into an evangelistic meeting that was being held under a tent in a certain North Carolina town. When we arrived the minister was "lifting the collection," to use his own words. He was making a passionate plea for money. Now our position on money and the church is too well known to our readers to re-state it. We believe in tithing and then some. We know that money is necessary in maintaining an evangelistic meeting, but the public should not be embarrassed at every service on the money question—and for the preacher himself to have to help "lift the collection" is all the more embarrassing. Laymen of the church are growing tired of the prominent display of the money side of the evangelistic meeting. Laymen are thinking of a more business-like way. Hundreds of them who will not give over $1.00 to a public offering would give from $5.00 to $100.00 if approached privately. Yes, we believe in money for the Kingdom, but we do not believe in being forced to talk louder over the money question than over the Kingdom's interest.

YOUR PASTOR'S VACATION

For six years we have been pleading with the churches to give pastors a vacation. Many churches do this thoughtful thing. We have endeavored to add to the suggestion each year that the expenses of the pastor be provided during his vacation. We ask the privilege of repeating ourselves, that we consider of all men the pastor deserves a vacation. Remember your pastor this summer and get him away to some place of rest and study. Your church will gain more than the pastor. And don't forget the pastor's family.

WRITING

There is a common conception that being able to write is a gift. There is a truth in this, but not all the truth. Writing, like so many other things, comes by constant practice. The best way to become a writer is to have to write. Writing a certain amount each week is easier than writing the same amount each month. The editor of a daily paper is much better off than the editor of a weekly. The editor of a weekly can put off his writing till the morrow—the editor of a daily cannot. The best way to become a writer is to write, and the best way to think is with pencil and paper in hand.

WHY?

Most periodicals for women are edited by men. The majority of women's dressmakers are men. Music appeals most largely to women, but it is composed largely by men. The membership of the church is largely of women, but the world's greatest preachers are men. Why?

Shedding tears may be far from being willing to leave money at the inn for the unfortunate's expenses.

THE GENOA CONFERENCE

Last week the Conference which has been in session at Genoa for some weeks came to an end. The Conference was called together to consider the economic conditions of the world, with the hope of working out some plan, or plans, whereby normal conditions could be restored and economic conditions better adjusted to suit the peoples of the world. The Conference ended without any definite result, the cause, we believe, being due largely to the fact that selfishness was in the foreground. Neither individuals nor nations can survive and better world conditions so long as the god of selfishness rules.

A COLLEGE PRESIDENT UNDER FIRE

President W. L. Poteat, of Wake Forest College, has been under fire for more than a year because of his position on the subject of evolution. The Biblical Recorder, Raleigh, N. C., the official organ of the Baptist Church in North Carolina, opened its columns some months ago for the commendation and condemnation of President Poteat's position. We consider that the Recorder has stirred up a hornet's nest and added nothing to its church or to Wake Forest College. We are not particularly concerned on the subject of evolution, but we do contend that a man has a very circumscribed view of things who considers that all truth has been discovered.

THE SUN REDUCES SUBSCRIPTION PRICE

By vote of the Southern Christian Convention in Suffolk on May 4, it was voted to reduce the subscription price of The Christian Sun from $2.50 to $2.00 per year, effective June 1. When the price of The Sun was advanced from $1.50 to $2.00, and then from $2.00 to $2.50, the Board of Publication ruled that those who were behind with their accounts at that time should be required to pay up at the advanced rate, taking into consideration that since the paper is cash in advance, any lapse of credit was a matter of courtesy towards the subscriber. The Board is of the opinion that the rule should be reciprocative and that all money received after the appearance of this issue will be credited at the rate of $2.00 per year, whether for back account, renewal, or new subscription. It is to be understood, however, that those who have paid for a year or more in advance (or less than a year) are to have no extension of credit. The Board of Publication feels that The Sun's constituency is too loyal to the paper and too well acquainted with its financial problems to ask any rebate. Possibly some of those who were required to pay up back accounts at the advanced rate may now get the advantage of paying the back account at the reduced rate.

YOUR SUBSCRIPTION ACCOUNT

Mr. P. J. Kernodle, Richmond, Virginia, who is to become managing editor of The Christian Sun on July 1, has suggested of his own volition that those who are in arrears with their accounts endeavor to pay up before July 1. The present editor of The Sun heartily appreciates this suggestion by Brother Kernodle. Possibly not in the history of the paper have we carried so many past due accounts as we are now carrying. During the next few weeks every account will be audited and every means will be used to turn over to our successor every account one hundred per cent correct. Those remitting for their subscriptions after this notice goes to the public may do so at the rate of $2.00 per year in accordance with announcement on this same page.

THE FUTURE OF THE CHURCH PAPER

The future of the Church paper has a question mark wrapped up with it. We re-print on page four of this issue a very sane and sensible article from the pen of Mr. W. J. Cameron, Editor of The Dearborn Independent, Dearborn, Michigan. It occurs to us that Mr. Cameron sees conditions as they are, looks them straight in the face and delivers some utterances worthy of thought and prayerful deliberation. Read Mr. Cameron's article and see if your mind agrees with his.

OLD CHURCH SOLD

The old Christian church building and the lot in Burlington were sold last week at public auction at a price of $11,000.00. This was the same property offered as a gift to the Southern Christian Convention two years ago for the purpose of denominational headquarters. We felt then, and continue to feel, that the Convention made a mistake by allowing such a gift to pass—and passed practically unnoticed. We are of the opinion that a like offer will not be made to the Convention any time in the near future.

ELON'S COMMENCEMENT

Elon's Commencement begins Sunday, May 28, and closes Tuesday night, May 30. Elon's commencement is more than a local affair and deserves more than passing consideration. Each commencement marks another mile stone in the onward and progressive march of our educational work in the South. Each commencement brings to the public eye a group of fine-spirited young men and women who are sent out into the world with the blessing of the institution upon them. May these commencements continue to fasten in our hearts and minds.

NEARING A CLOSE

Our editorial work this week brings us practically to a close. Next week we will have no general topics, but will confine ourselves to our valedictory. The notes on the editorial pages this week are some final jottings which practically clear our desk of our editorial work. Next week our valedictory and with that we bid our subscribers adieu.

Are Church Papers Read?

[The Dearborn Independent]

IN a discussion of the results of a multiplicity of religious publications, the California Christian Advocate questions the benefit to the church of so many as are at present struggling for existence. The same multiplicity exists in the secular field, and for the same reason, but the elimination of superfluous literature is not so simple as it is with the religious bodies.

One great trouble is that so many inferior and useless offerings are put on both markets. Individuals aspire to teach the world who themselves lack the equipment either to instruct or to interest.

The editor of a church paper should be of the brightest mentality, thoroughly educated, with an ability to compel attention, and with a knowledge of the world few of the students of theology possess. Not only should he be fitted for his work, but he must be fitted to it. The aptitude, the natural talent, is not to be gained, but thorough education gives ability so to clothe his ideas as to present them as polished jewels to an eager clientele. That clientele must be won by merit.

No paper has the right to claim support merely on the ground of loyalty on the part of sect or party or class it claims to represent. It may achieve a financial support that will keep it alive, but the man who takes it from a sense of duty has no use for it usually, and its printed content is not known to him. He subscribes just as he would give to a beggar—to get rid of the suppliant in the easiest way.

The pastor who suggests from the pulpit the need of the general support of the church paper should be more careful than he is in general to avoid aid to the unworthy. No pastor should accept a commission as an agent for private enterprise. He is paid to do a certain work for his church. If he knows or believes a publication to be of value, there can be no criticism if he says so, publicly or privately, but there his efforts should cease.

Two propositions made by the Advocate are not to be questioned: the multiplication of papers does not increase the number of readers, and the expense is a waste and a drain on the sources of supply to those worth while.

ELON LETTER

IN a recent examination here in Religious Education II, the following question was asked:

I. "What would you have done in the following situation: A boy of eighteen, out with a comrade and two girls in his father's automobile, drove so far that he did not return until 2 a. m. His mother, waiting up to receive him, after reproaching him for the worry he had caused in four homes, told him that he ought to remember that it was not generous to the girls to keep them out so late, unchaperoned. He drew up angrily: "Mother, do you realize what you are saying? You are accusing your son of being no gentleman.'"

Many of the young people in this class of thirty-two members were about this age. Only one undertook to justify the young man, and he side-stepped the issue by suggesting an accident caused the delay, forgetting that the statement said he had driven so far he could not return before the unseemly hour. I say this to let parents who shall read this know that young people do have a conscience relative to such matters.

I cannot, of course, in the brief space of this letter, detail the various answers this project-problem elicited. Summaries only can be given.

Most of them agreed that a chaperon should have been provided. This will be illuminating to many who think young people resent being chaperoned.

Practically all thought the mother inopportune in her chiding. The idea was that his mother should have greeted her son with tears and an embrace and joy that he had returned safely, and then have sent him to bed, waiting till a moment more sympathetic to discuss with him the improprieties of his prolonged ride. The father's attitude toward the prodigal son was cited.

Several thought the previous training given the son in the home had been defective. Practical suggestions were made for the sort of training that parents ought to give their children from their infancy, tending to make it unthinkable for a young man to do as this one did. Chief among these suggestions were Christian nurture, good books, and parental companionship. Three papers said, in substance, "Father and mother had evidently not been pals with their son."

All of them but one agreed that the young men lacked proper consideration for others. He seemed not to have thought of the four parents involved, nor of the reputation of the young women. This, too, was attributed to improper home training.

All these young people, so the thought tended in these examination papers, lacked respect for the conventionalities of life, evidently regarding them as impertinences or senseless interference with individual rights and privileges. The young people on examination felt that conventionalities are social experiences reduced to guiding principles for life and conduct, and are to be respected. This, too, will surprise some who think the flapper attitude the viewpoint of all young people.

But the best observation of all was that suggested by several to the effect that we cannot govern ourselves by individual standards alone. We are social beings and must take into account the social conscience of the society in which we live and move. The social conscience condemns any association of young people that experience shows has wrought moral havoc with those who have tried it. This viewpoint the young man lacked, and lacking it he was poor in his spiritual equipment for life.

These matters are paraded here not to advertise these young people nor to advertise our College, but to set parents and young people elsewhere to thinking on the really vital issues involved in such a situation. Parents especially, it is hoped, will weigh well the opinions of these young people and profit by their viewpoint in dealing with the growing members of their families.

And now, dear reader, what would you have done with this boy?

W. A. HARPER.

SUFFOLK LETTER

MUCH of the evil of this age grows out of peripatetic population. When people remained among their kinsmen and acquaintances it surrounded them with a moral restraint that they lose among strangers. Transportation and multiplicity of occupations make residence and birthplace no longer coterminous. Immigration and emigration have changed the habitation of mankind. Mankind is, therefore one in interest; and the gospel is right that says: "The field is the world." The state is no larger than a county was a hundred years ago. The gospel in that day dealt with the individual and the family; now it deals with the community and the world. In those "good old days" family life and family character counted in religion as well as business and politics; but those days cannot return. They passed away with the passing of the muzzle-loader and the tallow candle. People take more risks in business and in the social circle where they are unknown; and that accounts for the multiplication of crime and lust.

This new order has created a demand for a new application of the gospel on a larger scale. It is not enough, now, to make a good family: it must be a good community to protect the individual. It is not enough for the individual to keep the Sabbath; the Sabbath itself must be kept holy: and the community must be kept virtuous for the safety of the individual. When families lived far apart, each family could have its own pig-pen; but when the community grows into a city no family can have a pig-pen. The question then becomes a community question. The individual merges into the community. All sanitary laws grow out of this community relation. This new relation grows larger all the time. The gospel for the whole world grows as an obligation upon the church. The time is coming when no nation can be safe till all nations are safe. The urge for world-peace grows out of this necessity. The missionary program is not an ideal of enthusiasm; it is a huge obligation for the protection of Christianity as well as the salvation of mankind. What is called the social gospel is simply the application of the gospel on a larger scale. This of course, does not neglect the individual, but blesses the individual in countless ways. Business is no longer an individual enterprise, but a corporate enterprise, which is simply legal co-operation. As the world comes closer together, this is a necessity. Democracy is nothing more nor less than monarchy expanded into the rule by the people instead of by one man. Individual rulership is dead; individual religion no longer covers the ground; though the individual spiritual power is greater as it becomes a factor in community religion. One steel rail does not make a rail-road, but one steel rail out of place in the track may wreck a train. The single rail becomes more important as it joins its brother-rails in the hundred mile track. Individual religion becomes mighty linked up with community temperance, honesty, virtue and social purity.

W. W. STALEY.

PLEDGE CARDS COMING IN

The writer could wish that all our pastors felt in the matter of tithers as the one did who on May 10 sent in quite a list from his field properly signed up with the following declaration and request:

"I am sending herewith some tithers' pledge cards properly signed, and I wish you would send me some extra ones, as it is my purpose to carry on this campaign until every member of my church signs up, or gives excuse for not signing. I shall need several, and should I not need all you send, I shall return them for your further use in that work. I am recommending to my people that we push this until every member has a chance to sign a card. And further, I am recommending that immediate steps be taken to place THE CHRISTIAN SUN in every home in our church."

I am sure many other pastors are increasing the number of tithers, as cards coming in indicate as much. And with the increase of tithers goes increase in devotion and activity along other lines.

J. O. ATKINSON, Secretary.

At the time the forms of this issue had to be closed to departments, the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor topics had not reached us.

On May 21 nearly 100 persons, including two American ladies, lost their lives when the passenger liner "Egypt" sank off the island Ushant, France.

An Appreciation of Dr. W. W. Staley

By W. A. HARPER, LL. D., President of Elon College

DR. STALEY

DR. STALEY was elected president of the Southern Christian Convention in 1886. He voluntarily and insistently laid the office down at the recent session held in Suffolk. Save for the term served by Dr. P. H. Fleming, he has for thirty-six years been the continuous president of our highest body in the South. These years of his incumbency have been fraught with great advance steps for the Church. When he became our chief executive we had only THE CHRISTIAN SUN as the one institution of the Church. Now we have Elon with Bethlehem in prospect; the Mission Board; the Woman's Work; the Christian Orphanage; the Board of Superannuation; the Ministerial Education Fund; Men and Millions; the Board of Religious Education, and even these do not complete the list.

It was fitting that the Convention should signalize his retirement by a token of their love and appreciation. So a beautiful loving cup was presented him on the closing afternoon of the recent session. It was presented in eloquent manner by Dr. J. O. Atkinson, who spoke for a grateful people. Dr. Staley's response was as modest and unassuming as his life has ever been. He declared the things that had been accomplished under his administration had been attributed to him, but that others had achieved them. He likened himself to a pecan tree. The tree gets credit for the nuts it yields, but soil, moisture, sunshine, atmosphere, and the care of man make its fruit possible. He accepted the cup to be passed on to the next generation, a generation that would esteem him a real somebody because it did not know him really. This characteristic modesty has kept our great leader in the forefront for the past generation. Such self-effacing devotion to a cause is a primal need in the Kingdom's work. God grant us more such men!

Very appropriately, too, this year the class of '22 has dedicated the College Annual, The Phipsciei to Dr. Staley, very appropriately because he has been a trustee of our Elon since the called session of the Southern Christian Convention in September, 1888, made provision for the college. Dr. Staley was non-resident president of Elon for eleven fateful years, years of grim struggle with reaction in the Church and a load of debt, from 1894 to 1905, never accepted a penny for his services, and during all that time he was the busy pastor of a growing congregation in Suffolk. And he has always led the way for giving in every financial drive. He was one of the original thousand dollar men years ago when such givers were few and far between in the Church, and during the recent Standardization Fund Campaign it was W. W. Staley who startled the Brotherhood into the most unexampled achievement of giving in the Church's history by proposing to give $5,000 if ten others should be found to do likewise, the result being that twenty-one followed in his train.

The life history of Dr. Staley is inspiration to all who have been privileged to know the obstacles over which he has climbed to greatness and an enduring place in the affections of a people. Cradled in an humble Christian home, orphaned at the tender age of five, granted his freedom by his step-father at seventeen, this Gamaliel in scholarship in the Christian Church in this generation, this Barnabas in generosity among us, worked his way first through the high school of Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., then through Trinity College (paying his tuition though as a ministerial student he was entitled to have it free), then to the University of Virginia, by splitting wood, working gardens, caring for live stock, acting as man-servant in private residences and janitor in public buildings, rising from college janitor to college president and filling both offices with a rare fidelity and whole-heartedness of service, coming out of his experiences not embittered or resentful, but rejoicing that hardship had been his lot, as witness these words of his, the words of a twentieth century Paul—"About the easiest work of my life was to work through college; and, if I may make one remark, it would be that the danger of schools is to make education too easy. The armor used by Roman soldiers in camp exercises was twice the weight of that they used in battle. This made battle easy as compared with drill. It seems to me that college life ought to develop human powers by double strain so as to prepare for life's big task. Hothouse methods cannot make men of greatest endurance and usefulness. That is why so many men drop out suddenly in the prime of life. They cannot stand the strain of great public service."

After leaving the University of Virginia in 1878, Dr. Staley taught for five years in the Graham, (N. C.) High School, meanwhile serving as pastoral assistant of New Providence, and pastor of Hanks' Chapel, Mt. Zion, and Morrisville Christian churches, and was for two years County Superintendent of Schools for Alamance County, 1880-1882. In the latter year he was called to the pastorate of the Christian church in Suffolk, Va., then in its infancy with but 135 members and a salary of but $600 the year for its minister without parsonage. For forty successive years this Church has unanimously elected Dr. Staley its pastor and what marvelous increase for the Kingdom has come during those years! The membership now exceeds 1,000 and the annual offerings have grown from $1,000 forty years ago to more than $31,000 last year, and their pastor is not the pastor of his own flock merely, but the spiritual leader of a whole city.

Dr. Staley has never been a localized man. You cannot confine a man of his soul qualities and leadership ability to any parish. His labors in general enterprises are Herculean in their impressiveness. For many years president of the Eastern Virginia Conference, for thirty-four years as we have said president of the Southern Christian Convention, for twenty years a trustee of the Christian Publishing Association, always a member of the American Christian Convention since its reorganization in 1890 and chairman of the commission that brought about the union of the Northern and Southern branches of the Christian Church, member of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America since its organization, for one term its vice-president, and always serving on its important committees, ever giving literary addresses and baccalaureate sermons and special lectures before educational, literary, social, religious and commercial bodies—the marvel is how a man can be so ready and replete in such diverse situations, and ever an electrifying, inspirational force.

Dr. Staley has also written regularly and charmingly for the religious press. His weekly Suffolk Letter in THE CHRISTIAN SUN has had as much influence in establishing that paper's reputation as Poor Richard's sayings did in the case of Franklin's famous Almanac. His book, too, "The Minister," really the biography of his life's purpose and method, has taken high rank.

Dr. Staley holds the A. B. and M. A. degrees from Trinity, the D. D. from Union Christian College, the LL. D. from Elon. There is no honor in degrees. The life of the man who holds them—he honors the degrees. This is certainly true of Rev. William Wesley Staley.

Dr. Staley was married to Miss Pattie Pearce of Franklin County, North Carolina, in 1879, a woman of rare devoutness of Christian character and unalloyed devotion to her husband and the Church of Christ. She went to her heavenly reward in 1917. To their home were born three children, all of them graduates of Elon and all earnest workers in the Church of Christ—Mrs. T. F. Cheatham (Bessie), Miss Annie who is her father's home-maker and help-mate in all good works, and Mrs. Ben T. Holden (Willie).

Affable ever in social graces, interested in men and women rather than measures, a humanitarian in the true sense of that fine sentiment, Dr. Staley has enriched the society in which he has mingled by his wholesome appreciation of wit and humor, particularly wit and humor in which he is the occasion of the merriment. Nothing delights his soul more than to "pull one" on himself, a grace that gives him a winsome charm in any social group.

Carrying the burden of great responsibilities, surrounded by men and women to whom his suggestions are wisdom and the bread of life, reaching out ever toward larger things, Dr. Staley has labored beyond the allotted three score and ten, but nobody knows it unless he consults the calendar. His host of friends can pray no better thing for him or themselves than that his life of light and leadership may be spared for many years futher of benign and helpful service in our beloved Church.

From childhood I have known and loved Dr. Staley. I was graduated from college under his presidency and likewise under his presidency elected to an Elon professorship with leave of absence for two years. In my present position Dr. Staley has been my close adviser and trusted counsellor ever. This poor appreciation is the irresistible impulse of a grateful heart to voice its spontaneous sentiment. Would that this tribute were as worthy as the man for whom it essays to express appreciation.

SELLING BIBLES AT COST

According to the annual report of the American Bible Society just issued, the more important development in the Society's work during the past year was the change in its manufacturing program at the Bible House, New York.

In order that the Society might publish more Scriptures more economically and at lower prices, the Board of Managers determined to have the manufacturing in the United States carried on under the same policies as prevail in its Near Eastern and Far Eastern Agencies, and therefore decided to discontinue manufacturing at the Bible House and to avail themselves of the facilities of the best equipped printing establishments in the country. They expect thereby to increase the output of their publication and they will continue to use their own plates and to exercise the same care over their versions which has given the publications of the Society standing and repute all over the world.

Allowing for any saving which was made on the work manufactured outside the Bible House during 1921, a total loss in the manufacturing department of $44,841.73 was sustained as shown by the report of the certified accountants.

The American Bible Society is not a commercial concern but a missionary organization circulating the Scriptures in more than 150 languages in all parts of the world. It has been the Society's policy for over a hundred years, except where grants are made, to sell its books at cost. The items entering into the cost of its Scriptures are the cost of paper, printing and binding, together with fixed charges for manufacturing superintendence, heat, light and power, insurance on stock and expenses of handling books in the depository and shipping office.

According to the report of the Society, the total expenditures for the year 1921 were $1,172,756. Toward this amount there came in from the sale of books $462,832. The number of volumes distributed throughout the world was 4,855,464, which means that on the average 24 cents was spent per volume to produce a book, transport it, and place it in the hands of those who desire it. Toward meeting this expense, only 9 cents per volume was received by the processes of sale. The difference between the Society's expenditures and the money it receives by sale of its books is contributed by churches and individuals who are interested in the missionary program of the Society which seeks to reach every individual with a copy of the Scriptures in his own language.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

LUCY M. ELDRIDGE—FIELD SECRETARY
1012 East Marshall Street, Richmond, Va.

OUR INCREASE CONTEST

The Sunday school of the First Christian church of Winchester, Virginia, is doing a splendid work under the leadership of the superintendent, Mr. Nelson Richards. Keen interest is being shown in the "Increase Contest" and already twenty-six new members have been enrolled, while the attendance each Sunday so far has been 85 per cent of the enrollment. The school has six organized classes and an active Teacher Training class taught by the superintendent. Progress is being made along every line, and Winchester church may justly be proud of its Sunday school work.

The Timber Ridge church also has a Sunday school which is alive and doing a fine work. Mr. Walter Oates is the superintendent, and he and his teachers are striving to conduct a Sunday school which will meet the needs of the young people in the community.

The Field Secretary of Religious Education had the privilege of visiting these two churches on Sunday, May 14, and of thus knowing personally something of the work they are doing.

THE CHURCH AND THE BOY

Note: Readers of the "SUN" will welcome the following timely article on a subject which is vital in the field of religious education. Mr. Rainey, who is a student in the Yale Divinity School, has studied carefully work with boys, having had practical experience among Italian boys in a Settlement House, among colored boys in a mission, among the wealthy class of boys in a city church school, as well as in his own pastoral work. "Boys will be boys" every where, and many of our Sunday school teachers will find many helpful suggestions in this article, and will look forward to future articles from Mr. Rainey's pen.—L. M. E.

BOYS are worth their weight in gold, and the church will ever be rich that has them. Each characteristic of a boy's nature reveals a need for the protective and guiding hand of the church. Too often the church and the boy have failed to get together. One can readily imagine that if Jesus should visit one of our church services and see, as is usually the case, only one boy out of ten present, he would again exclaim, "Where are the nine?"

"Protestantism has never made good with the boy," says one religious education authority, and another says, "Big-brothering a boy is the biggest job in the world." If our churches expect to reach the boys en masse they must do three things: (1) realize the needs of boys and their worth to the church, (2) utilize strong men as teachers of boys, and (3) impress upon these teachers the difficulty and the glory of their work.

To realize the needs of boys one has but to look at the vast amount of improvement required to make good citizens and church leaders out of the street corner gang that includes such a large per cent of our boys. Sins of omission are as deadly as those of commission, and in the case of the training of boys by the churches the sins of omission are evidently more widespread. If we fail to reach the boy the odds are heavily against it for ever reaching the man, for statistics show that three-fourths of all conversions come before the age of sixteen. The boy of today is the home-builder of tomorrow. To him we must look for a large part of our church leadership and a larger part of its finances, to say nothing of the political and industrial reforms for which we long. Theodore Roosevelt once said: "If you are going to do anything permanent for the average man, you have got to begin before he is a man. The chance of success lies in working with the boy and not with the man."

Special efforts are required to reach boys, because, as the old adage goes, "Boys will be boys." They are just different, that's all. An eminent authority says that on the whole boys require five times as much safeguarding as do girls. This is quite contrary to the usual custom of rearing girls with painstaking care and allowing boys to face the many evils of the world with little or no protection. If by former methods the church has failed to reach the boy it should adopt other methods. The church should not be content with its success in reaching little children, old women and big girls, if in trying to reach live boys it has failed to touch their nature and needs.

Since teaching boys is a "man's size job," I say unhesitatingly that boys should have men for their teachers. This is said with due recognition for all of the good that girls and women have ever done as teachers of boys, and may God richly bless them for their work. It is very evident that a man should be the religious teacher of boys, for religion covers the whole of life, and having been a boy once himself, a man knows how to appreciate a boy's problems and is more competent of giving the advice that a boy needs so much.

Boys, then, should be in separate classes from girls and have a man teacher so that the most intimate questions can be discussed in a free and open way. Furthermore, boys want men teachers if they get a man whom they can respect. So men with strong morals should be chosen by the church to teach its boys, and if possible, men of outstanding achievements should be secured. Boys will respect such men and thus the problem of discipline will be solved. One of the most effective forces for keeping boys away from the church and religion is the widespread idea among them that it is all a "sissy" sort of thing. When boys have a strong virile type of man to teach them he can disillusion them of this erroneous idea. Might it not be that the reason why we see so little evidence of religion in the political and industrial world is because men have always looked upon religion as mother's affair, applicable only to her queenly virtues, and because this idea has been carried over into the church where one instinctively speaks of a Sunday school teacher as "her"? Anyone that has ever heard a small boy boasting of the virtues of his father knows that there is nothing that a boy likes better than a fine big man. "The idea with the strongest background wins," and if a man is worthy of a place on the teaching force of a Sunday school what he says has weight with boys. Thus, if a teacher is a Christian business man he can demonstrate to boys that profiteering is un-Christian; if he is a mechanic he can explain how that one may even mash a finger without swearing; or if he be a farmer he can show boys the place of Christianity in growing crops. We learn much by doing, but a far greater amount of our knowledge comes through observation and association. Hence it is easier for a boy to be a good man after observing and associating with a good man. The effect of a strong personality on a young life can never be over-estimated. The increasing appeal of Jesus centers in his unique personality. All boys have their heroes whom they worship. They are very fond of imagining themselves as grown men that do things. Now the object of this hero worship can be changed in the Sunday school from the prize-fighter and "home-run hitter" to the Christian man, or to Jesus Christ, the great hero of all.

Anyone who has a class of noisy boys wants to know just how to get the truth of a lesson across to them. Before discussing how to teach a class of boys let me say a few things about how not to teach a class. Never try to preach or lecture to boys and expect them to sit still and listen. Most of the preaching to boys is useless, for to sound a danger is to invite their curiosity and give them a desire to do the daring thing. All boys like forbidden fruit, as any neighbor with a fruit tree in his back yard will testify. Again, don't ever approach a class with the air of a policeman and attempt to force attention. Attention should be free and spontaneous, and if it is not thus secured it is the fault of the teacher and not of the boys.

There are no set methods of teaching boys, for, as in Latin grammar, there are always more exceptions than rules. The first essential of teaching boys, then, is to be able to adapt oneself to the changing mood of the class. One may succeed in gaining attention and presenting the truths of the lesson by certain methods one Sunday, and utterly fail the next by using the same methods. One should remember that "variety is the spice of life," and that boys like a lot of it.

In all good teaching it is necessary for the teacher to know what he is trying to teach. The teacher should not only have a plan of what to say about a lesson, but should always have a reserve supply of knowledge pertaining to all the details of the lesson, for strange and pressing questions come from the ingenious mind of a boy. A teacher was teaching a class of twelve-year-old boys the story of Elijah and the prophets of Baal, when one boy wanted to know where Elijah got so many barrels of water, if as the Bible narrative says, there was no water in the land on account of a long drought. Reader, what would you have answered? The successful teacher of boys must know the lesson well enough to teach without a book. While one is turning the pages of a book in search for another question to ask, some mischievous boy will take advantage of the pause to pinch his neighbor, another will let fly a "spit-ball," and "Bing" goes your discipline and attention.

Much depends upon how a teacher begins the lesson. Never begin by saying "a long, long time ago," for that leaves the impression of a ghost story or a fairy tale. Begin with a brief introduction that connects very definitely the boy and the lesson. For instance, if one should begin a lesson about the dreams of Joseph by asking the boys to relate the most exciting dream they ever had, each boy will center his thoughts on dreams and thus the discussion could be directed to the lesson of the day.

One should always use short, simple words, for and before a class of young boys, also in teaching them. Strange sounding theological terms mean nothing to a boy, and teaching is much more effective if simple illustrations and familiar phraseology are used. The best way to introduce a boy to God and His Son Jesus Christ is to speak simply of God as "our Father," and of Jesus as the Big Brother of all mankind. There are as many morals to be drawn from the experiences of boys as are to be gathered from the experiences of grown people. Use them, as they are much more effective. As a matter of fact, the beloved teacher of boys is called "a regular fellow" because he does know and appreciate the experiences of boys. Such a teacher throws new light on the subject of Christianity for a boy as he knows the value of a smile and emphasizes the joyous side of Christ's message.

The climax of all moral teaching is reached when right conduct follows. Boys more than any other class of people need something to do to make the Christian life real and vivid to them. Boys should not only share in class discussion but should be allowed some part in the general work of the church. A good plan is to give each class a name and a motto, then let them do some work under the name of their class. Publicity stimulates interest and greatly encourages the boy in his work. I know of a class that call themselves the "Ever-Ready Class," and in their youthful enthusiasm has adopted as a motto, "The World for Christ." That they are living up to their name is evidenced by the fact that they take part in ninety per cent of the programs of the church. The one adjective, active, will describe all normal boys. They have a surplus of enthusiasm that must find an outlet. Boys will use up their surplus energy in chasing cats, in teasing sister, or in doing work for the church according as they are trained. Religion to a boy is giving up wrong and doing good. But mind you, he will do something. If he isn't given some wholesome activity he will revert to evil habits. Stories with action in them are very helpful to teachers of boys and should be used extensively. By frequent use of the more dramatic portions of the Bible, missionary biographies, and similar literature boys will learn that there are good things to do that are quite as exciting and as adventurous as the bad things.

After all is said, the element of love is the most effective force for the teacher of boys. One should love them in spite of their noise, and so act that boys will love in return. This is easily done where sympathy, tact, and patience are used. Every teacher of a boy should remember that he is doing a part of the most effective and rewarding work of the church.

The Preacher and the Funeral Service

THE CONTRIBUTING EDITOR OF The Christian-Evangelist

NOTHING so surely marks the preacher's place of power in the community he serves as the frequency with which he is called to speak comfort words to those who are laying away their dead. Let the sentence be repeated without change: Nothing so surely marks the preacher's place in the community he serves as the frequency with which he is called to speak comfort words to those who are laying away their dead.

This place is not fixed nor its power determined by the size of the audiences that wait upon his Sunday sermons. I have known many men, who by virtue of outstanding platform gifts, attracted large audiences to their churches, who yet, by reason of this or that, did not so commend themselves to the public they entertained that in hours of stress and sorrow their ministries were sought. One may care to hear a preacher talk and yet not want that preacher to keep watch with him in soul Gethsemanes.

Much the less is that place of power found in the exhibits of wide civic ministries in response to public call. To be asked to make many speeches before lodges, clubs, literary societies, political organizations may be proof indeed of verbal facility and large accommodativeness of thought and utterance, but it betrays no strong bonds and is purely superficial in its connotations. One may be a very passable nickel-in-the-slot talking-machine and yet have very little influence in a community.

But the funeral service is all-revealing. Who serves most in saddest hours has greatest power.

To fit one's self for a ministry so tender and so sacred should be a preacher's deep concern.

He can begin this fitting by a clean sloughing off of all professionalism. At such a time to serve mechanically is not to serve at all. Naturalness is the note. If there be the slightest outcropping of the official the ministry is marred.

Then there are certain primary don'ts that are never to be lost sight of.

Don't deliver a sermon. Those who sorrow, those whose hearts are sore, are in no mood to follow your firstlys, much less your fourthlys, and as for "argument," there is no place for it whatsoever. The funeral talk must never be open out to sermon reaches, must never be cast in sermon molds.

Don't deliver an "oration;" that is even less befitting than a sermon. As ordinarily conceived it is an abomination. To strain and pose and revel in sonorities and swelling phrases is nothing short of crime.

Don't try to quote all the poetry you know. Poetry has its mission in such an hour, but it must be drawn upon sparingly and with nice discrimination.

Taboo the poems that have become frayed with too frequent use. The flowers that rest upon the bier are fresh, and preacher's words should breathe that same freshness. For example, I have heard a really outstanding preacher conduct a number of funeral services, and in every one of them he cited Tennyson's

"Crossing the Bar"—beautiful to be sure, yet not to be quoted every other day. It's a bad thing to be so tied up to any stock quotations. Take pains to learn the new word, the new music.

Above all, don't "elocute." If you must quote do it with such simplicity and naturalness that no taste will be offended thereby. A straining after the dramatic at such an hour reveals not only an ignorant taste but a colossal and selfish egotism. To put self to the front in such an hour! To strive after the tricks of the actor while men's hearts are anguished and women are softly weeping! To think of attitude and gesture beside a coffin!

Don't talk too long. Don't pray too long. No long funeral talk is a good one. No long prayer at such a time is a good prayer. Years ago I conducted a funeral service where the sister of the brother who had died being upon the verge of hysteria, in recognition of her condition I made only a five minutes' talk. At the close of the talk I called upon a brother preacher to lead us in a brief prayer, emphasizing the "brief." To my horror and righteous indignation that prayer stretched through twenty-five minutes! It was literally a "moving" prayer, pushing the girl into a dead faint. To this day I can but feel that the recording angel checked down against that inconsiderate parson that prayer as sin. I trust the dominie had grace, as I am very sure that he had no gumption.

Don't try to make folk cry. Haven't you seen a few preachers, in your lives, who acted as if they felt that it was their mission to harrow the feelings of the mourners, to start their tears, and indeed, who seemed to measure their successes in such ministries by their evocation of laments? Yet this is downright profanation. Best be careful when in sounding the personal note and let all references to the deceased be couched in delicacy and restraint. It isn't necessary to tell the mourners that they will miss their beloved, and paint pictures of hearts' desolations. They know all that and more already, and its emphasis by the preacher is unmitigated cruelty.

Don't indulge in excessive eulogy. This is to invite suspicion of one's sincerity. No life is perfect, few lives can be praised without qualification. If acquaintanceship with the deceased has been long and intimate, appreciations are not only justified but demanded. If, on the other hand, the preacher has only slight knowledge of the deceased, a glowing eulogium without hint of reservation is misfit and mischievous. It is a great misfortune to become known as the parson who "preaches everybody to heaven." This does not mean that the sins of the sleeper should be paraded—that would be not act of courage but act of brutality—but it certainly inhibits an all-inclusive verbal "all's well," though even a preacher be the guarantor.

So much space has been given to the don'ts that there is scant room for the comment of the positives.

Yet the very "don'ts" have already suggested the affirmatives. Be brief. Be natural. Be tender. Speak hopefully. Speak comfortingly. Sound the note of victory. Point eyes skyward. Believe in God's ability to heal all hurts. Believe that God through you is speaking to sorrowing souls. And in his name bid them, even at the bier-side, be of good cheer.

Many's the time, my brother, you have stood in such a presence, but fail not to realize that the home into which death has come is under a weight of sorrow as if death had never before visited it. A common loss? Yes, but it seems not so to those who mourn. It is a great and tragic hour to each and all, and, if ever a preacher had honest need of grace of God, it is when he stands in such a presence.

A LETTER

Dear Uncle Charley: I am sending my dues for April and May and hope all the little cousins are well. I have a bad cold and am just as bad as ever. I am playing in the cook stove now. I tell you, I give mother a chase to keep me straight. As ever, Paul Long, Jr., Hertford, N. C.

Uncle Charley's little grand-son from Dunn, N. C., is visiting him this week, and he is a live wire, too. He is a great little man.—Uncle Charley.

Two railroad men told THE SUN's Editor the other day that in their twenty-five years of railroad service, Elon College was the only town that they had never put off or taken on a drunken passenger.

THE BULLETIN

The Burlington church enjoyed a double service last Sunday at the morning hour. The pastor spoke for fifteen minutes and so did Dr. J. O. Atkinson. The occasion was Parents' Day. Pastor Lankford spoke on the family altar and Dr. Atkinson spoke on the influence of parents. Immediately after the service Dr. Lankford went to Long's Chapel to deliver a memorial address.

Elon commencement begins next Sunday. Dr. Roy C. Helfenstein, Dover, Delaware, preaches the Baccalaureate sermon, while President Harper delivers the Baccalaureate address on Sunday night. Dr. Henry F. Cope is to deliver the literary address. We hope to delay next week's SUN one day in order to get a gist of the commencement in the issue for May 31.

Mr. J. M. Fix, a member of the Burlington church, who has been cashier of the Alamance Bank and Trust Company for the past twenty years, has, upon advice from his physicians, resigned that position to take effect at an early date. Mr. Fix is one of our leading and loyal laymen and is a business man of the first magnitude.

Dr. D. A. Long is to deliver the Baccalaureate sermon at Churchland, Virginia, high school next Sunday, and Rev. J. W. Holt is to fill Dr. Long's pulpit at Antioch and Bethlehem, Warren County, N. C.

The annual memorial will be held at New Providence church, Graham, N. C., Sunday, June 4. Rev. S. L. Beougher will deliver the address at 11:45 a. m. The public is cordially invited to attend the services.

Memorial Day was held at Bethlehem (Alamance) church last Sunday. Drs. W. A. Harper and J. P. Barrett were the speakers.

THE SUN deeply sympathizes with Rev. T. E. White in the loss of a brother. His death is recorded on page 15 of this issue.

NOTICE TO PASTORS

Any pastor of the Christian Church taking the regular summer course at any standard theological seminary, or in the theological department of any university, is entitled to a scholarship of $50 from the Educational Board of the American Christian Convention.

These summer courses are a wonderful source of help and inspiration, and it is hoped that a large number of pastors will avail themselves of this aid.

For further aid, write the Secretary of the Department, Dr. W. G. Sargent, 138 Lenox Avenue, Providence, R. I.

WHAT?

"What can I do with that boy?" she cried;
 He plays and forgets to study.
 Five years old, but he tears his clothes,
 And gets his clothes all muddy."

The culprit drooped a curly head;
 But the little sister, bolder,
 Laid a soft, defensive arm
 Carressingly 'round his shoulder.

"You don't know what to do wif him?" she said,
 With love that could never doubt him.

BLACKIE

Once upon a time there was an old mother hen who had twelve baby chicks. They were all fluffy and yellow except one who was so black that he was called Blackie.

Every morning the little girl who lived in the big farmhouse came out to feed the chicks.

"Cluck, cluck, cluck," said the old mother hen, and "Peep, peep, peep!" cried the baby chicks as if they were saying "Thank you" to the little girl for taking such good care of them.

"Peep, peep," said Blackie, "now that I have had my breakfast I'm going to take a journey." And away he hopped from his mother and little brothers and sisters as fast as he could go.

By and by he came to a hole in the fence, and out he went. He found himself on the nice green lawn and very near a lovely big flower bed full of pretty red and yellow tulips.

"What a fine world this is!" thought Blackie. "I'm glad I ran away from the old chicken yard, for it was never so wonderful as this." With that he began to scratch around the tulip bed to find something more to eat.

Just then a terrible noise sounded quite near him: "Bow, wow, wow!" It was the little girl's fat brown puppy that was jumping about on his funny big feet, his tongue hanging out in much excitement.

"What are yo doing ot of the hen yard?" he said. "Go right back, or I shall make you!"

"Peep, peep, peep!" cried frightened Blackie, and away he ran without looking at all to see where he was going.

Before he knew it he hopped right into the middle of a puddle of water. Little chicks do not like water at all, so poor Blackie was more frightened than ever. He fluttered his little wings, took a great hop, and up he jumped on to a smooth stone in the middle of the puddle.

"Peep, peep, peep! Mother, mother!" he cried. But the mother hen was far away in the hen yard and could not even hear him.

The old tabby cat was curled up in the sun on the steps of the farmhouse porch, not far away. The little girl had given her a good saucer of milk, and she was napping after her breakfast.

"Peep, peep, peep!" cried the baby chick from his stone in the puddle. "I want my mother!"

The old tabby cat heard him and came down to see if she could help. She put one paw into the water, but drew it out in a hurry and shook off the drops; then she sat down as if she were trying to think of some other way, for tabby cat did not like to wet her feet.

"Peep, peep, peep! I want my mother! I'm afraid I'm going to drown!"

Bang! went the screen door, and down the porch steps ran the little girl. How she did laugh when she saw little Blackie and the trouble he was in!

"Never mind, Blackie, I'll take you back to your mother," she said, and, picking him up very carefully, she carried him back to the old mother hen.—Mary Collins Terry, in Presbyterian Advance.

HOW RUTH LOVED HER NEIGHBOR

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," read Ruth in a troubled voice. "I don't see how I can do that, mamma. Miss Martha is my neighbor," glancing across to the next porch, where a lady sat reading, "and I don't love her at all."

Mamma smiled and explained that the word "neighbor" had a wider meaning than the literal one. Still, it might apply literally, too, on the principle that charity begins at home, but does not end there.

"But I still don't understand," persisted Ruthie. "What does 'as thyself' mean?"

"Why, how do you like people to treat you?" asked mamma.

Ruth thought a minute. "I like them to be kind and thoughtful and"—

"Exactly," said mamma. "You love your little self and want it treated kindly and considerately. Now, you are to love your neighbor 'as yourself.' The Golden Rule comes in there, do you see?"

Ruth's blue eyes opened wide. "Oh, I see!" she said thoughtfully. "I must treat Miss Martha and everybody else as I would like them to treat me. I can love Miss Martha that way."

The very next day she had an opportunity to put the rule into practice. Miss Martha stopped in on her way home, very hot and tired, after a morning of shopping.

"Dear me," she said, dropping into a porch chair, "I am just too worn out to go even those few steps further to get home! Please let me rest here a few minutes, Mrs. Woodleigh."

Mamma smiled and welcomed her cordially, and Ruth, suddenly remembering her text, thought: "What would I like Miss Martha to do to me if I were hot and tired?" She brought a big palmetto fan, which Miss Martha took with a grateful "Thank you, my dear," and went on talking to mamma of her shopping.

Ruth slipped away and presently returned with a tray containing a tall glass of iced tea, a sancer of delicious berries, and a little plate of delicate crackers—just the lunch for a hot day.

Miss Martha seemed very glad of it, and as she finished she said with a smile: "That has done me a world of good. I felt too tired to go home and get myself a cup of tea, and now I feel quite refreshed and cool. You are a thoughtful little girl. Thank you, dear."

Ruth smiled as she carried away the tray. "As thyself," she murmured. "I understand now, and I like Miss Martha a lot better, too."—Pittsburgh Christian Advocate.

BOY WANTED

Wanted—a boy that is manly,
A boy that is kind and polite,
A boy you can always depend on
To do what he knows is right;

A boy that is truthful and honest,
And faithful and willing to work;
But we have not a place that we care to disgrace
With a boy that is ready to shirk.

Wanted—a boy you can tie to,
A boy that is trusty and true,
A boy that is good to old people
And kind to the little ones, too;

A boy that is nice to the home folk
And pleasant to sister and brother,
A boy who will try when things go awry
To be helpful to father and mother.

These are the boys we depend on—
Our hope for the future, and then
Grave problems of State and the world's work await Such boys when they grow to be men.

WOMEN AND THE KINGDOM

ONE-DAY SCHOOL OF MISSIONS

The 1922 One-Day School of Missions for the Guilford District met at Reidsville, N. C., on April 12. The meeting was called to order by Mrs. H. Russell Clem, acting chairman for Mrs. M. F. Cook, who could not attend because of illness. The following program was rendered:

Special music by the Reidsville choir. Devotional Service—Mrs. W. R. McKinney. Address of Welcome—Dr. J. P. Barrett. Response—Mrs. J. W. Patton. Minutes of the 1921 Missionary Rally.

Representatives from the following churches responded to roll call: Greensboro First Church, Hines' Chapel, Greensboro, Palm Street, Apple's Chapel, Monticello, Happy Home, New Lebanon, Howard's Chapel and Reidsville.

Dr. Atkinson, Miss Hedgepeth and Mrs. Morrill, introduced as honor guests and special teachers.

Reports from the various churches represented. Appointment of committees: (1) Plans and place of meeting for next year, (2) Resolutions, (3) Nominating.

Bible Study in Missions—Dr. Atkinson. Adjournment for lunch.

Called to order at 1:30 o'clock.

Devotional Exercise—Rev. G. C. Crutchfield. Address—Mrs. Alice V. Morrill. Why and How of Missions in the Sunday School—Discussion led by Dr. J. P. Barrett.

Our Mountain Work—Miss Iola Hedgepeth, Superintendent. Offering taken for Mountain Work, $10.42. Round Table Discussion, Mrs. Morrill.

Delegates to the Southern Convention were Appointed from each of the Woman's Societies represented.

The committee on plans and place reported that Monticello was the place, and recommended that next year our program include more work for the young people. Adopted.

Nominating committee presented the names of Mrs. M. F. Cook, chairman; Mrs. W. R. McKinney, Secretary, and Mrs. Hinshaw, Treasurer, for the ensuing year. Adopted.

Reports on Resolutions adopted and rising vote taken extending thanks to Reidsville church for generous hospitality.

The Secretary was asked to secure a substantial book and record the Minutes of 1921 and 1922 sessions.

The addresses of the day were very instructive, fraught with interest, giving a good insight into the work being done at home and in the foreign fields. Last words were spoken in which nearly every one present took part, expressing from the heart just what the day had meant to them. Closed with prayer.

MRS. J. W. PATTON, Acting Secretary.

CHURCH NEWS

FROM GEORGIA

Our revival began at North Highland, April 16, and ended the fifth Sunday night. We had a splendid meeting. The church was greatly revived and is in much better working condition. There were twenty accessions to the church.

Rev. H. W. Elder assisted us in this meeting. I shall never forget Brother Elder for the good work he did for us here.

UNION RIDGE

We had excellent services at Union Ridge on the second Sunday in May. The audience was large. The house was filled to overflowing at both the morning and afternoon services. The pastor preached at 11:00 a. m. and the Lord's Supper was administered at the close of the morning sermon, by Revs. A. F. Iseley and H. J. Fleming. It was a very impressive service. At the close of the morning service through the kindness of Bro. W. J. Graham the pastor presented to Confederate veterans white carnations which were pinned on the lapels of their coats by young ladies. It was Mother's Day. There were twenty-six Confederate veterans present. From the church, Revs. H. J. Fleming and A. F. Iseley led the way to the cemetery followed by those who carried flowers and others of the congregation. In the cemetery Brother Iseley offered prayer and flowers were placed upon the graves. The occasion was our memorial day. A bountiful dinner was served; and at 2:00 p. m. the congregation reassembled for service. Mrs. W. N. Huff sang a couple of solos to the delight of the audience. Rev. H. J. Fleming preached an interesting sermon to good acceptance. The church choir rendered good music at both the morning and afternoon services. A quartette from the choir rendered one selection at the morning service which was much enjoyed.

SOLEMN VOWS

WILDER-MORGAN

A quiet but beautiful marriage took place at the Chapel Hill Christian parsonage Tuesday, May 16, 1922. The contracting parties were Mr. A. B. Wilder, of near Raleigh, and Miss Hattie Morgan, Apex, R. F. D. 4. A few friends accompanied the young couple and witnessed the ceremony.

The groom is a prosperous young farmer and business man, and is of fine Christian character. The bride, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Morgan, is an accomplished young woman, and has made an enviable record in her interest in educational and general betterment work in her community. She is a most valuable member of Martha's Chapel church.

Immediately after the ceremony, by the writer, Mr. and Mrs. Wilder left for Asheville and other places of interest in Western North Carolina.

Best wishes for their future.

ENJOYMENT AT HOME

Home and heaven are not so far separated as we sometimes think. They are not separated at all, for they are both in the same great building. Home is the lower story, and is located down here on the ground floor; heaven is up stairs, in the second and third stories. As one after another of the family is called to "come up higher," that which seems to be such a strange place begins to wear a familiar aspect, and when the last one is left below, the home is transferred to heaven, and heaven is home.

Don't shut up your house, lest the sun should fade your carpets and your hearts, lest a merry laugh should shake down some of the musty old cobwebs there. If you want to ruin your sons, let them think that all mirth and social enjoyment must be left on the threshold without when they come home at night. When once a home is regarded as only a place to eat, drink, and sleep in, the work has begun that ends in endless degradation. Young people must have fun and relaxation somewhere; if they don't have it at their own hearthstones, it will be sought at other and perhaps less profitable places. Therefore, let the fire burn brightly at night, and make the homestead delightful with all those little arts so perfectly understood.

Don't repress the buoyant spirit of your children. Half an hour of merriment around the lamp and firelight of a home blots out many a care and annoyance during the day; and the best safeguard they can take with them into the world is the unseen influence of a bright little domestic circle.

Home is the bulwark of American happiness. Put home first and foremost, and you will give your children a good heritage in their minds and characters: for there will come a time when the home circle will be broken: when you will "long for the touch of a vanished hand, and the sound of a voice that is still."—Durham Herald.

CALLED HOME

BARNES—Mrs. R. Henry Barnes died at her home in Winder, Ga., on April 20, 1922, at 5 o'clock p. m., after an illness of two months. Mrs. Barnes possessed a rare, genial disposition and many other charming qualities which won for her many admiring friends wherever she went. She is survived by her husband, Dr. R. H. Barnes, one son, R. T. Barnes, eight years old; her parents, Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Dick, of Athens, Ga., and one brother, T. A. Dick of Norfolk, Va.

WHITE—Brother Robert L. White, son of W. H. and Sarah White, died at his home a few miles south of Pittsboro on April 26, 1922, at the age of 50 years, six months and 12 days. A wife and four small children are sorely bereaved. Others of his relatives who survive are his aged father, and two sisters, Miss Ora and Miss Notie, also two brothers, Grover, of Siler City, and Rev. T. E., of Sanford, N. C.

Brother White became a member of Center Grove Christian church in early life, and remained a consistent member thereof to the day of his death. For many years he had been a deacon and secretary of the church that he loved and served to the admiration of all who knew him. As a justice of the peace and school committeeman, he did much to advance the common good of a people among whom he lived. No interest of his Lord's Kingdom in his community escaped his attention. Truly a good man has gone to his reward.

Many were the sorrowing friends who witnessed his burial, which was with the honors of the Jr. O. U. A. M.

God's blessings be upon the faithful companion and those dear little children who are left to be comforted.

B. J. HOWARD.

MACON—Willard Haully Macon, son of Alfred and Dora Macon, was born April 18, 1906, and died April 30, 1922, aged sixteen years and twelve days. He leaves to mourn their loss three sisters, four brothers, and a host of friends. He expressed himself as being ready and anxious to go.

He was buried at Holly Springs beside his father and mother. The writer was assisted in the burial by Rev. William Cox.

T. J. GREEN.

LAWRENCE—Mrs. Alice Yow Lawrence, daughter of Spinks and Mary Yow, was born August 21, 1862 and died May 7, 1922, aged fifty-nine years, eight months and sixteen days.

In early girlhood she professed faith in Christ and joined the New Center Christian church, of which she continued a faithful and consistent member until her death. December 24, 1879, she was married to T. W. Lawrence. To this union were born ten children, six sons and four daughters. Eight children survive the mother, two sons having preceded her into the great beyond. One of these, Lawson, died in infancy; the other, Everett, died in young manhood while in the service of his country on the Mexican border. Besides the eight living children, she is survived by her husband, one brother, two sisters and sixteen grandchildren.

Burial at Why Not by the writer, assisted by Rev. G. R. Underwood, Rev. W. J. Edwards, and Rev. Mr. Hulin. Many beautiful flowers covered her grave. May the Heavenly Father comfort the loved ones.

Resolutions of Respect—Benton

Man in his weakness cannot fathom the will and workings of our Divine Father sufficient to us to know: "He doeth all things well." We should strive as Christians to know that the separation of death, while it cometh to us left behind as a great sorrow, it means to the one summoned a brighter, happier home, if his life and conduct has been wholly acceptable unto God. Believing that the summoning of Brother J. E. Benton meant to him all things good, Therefore be it Resolved—

First: That we express thus our sympathy to the members of his family he has left behind, and at the same time assure them that their grief is our grief, their loss is our loss, but we also claim a portion of the loving memories of him to be always treasured in our hearts.

Second: That a copy of these resolutions be published in The Christian Sun and a copy sent to the family.

Resolutions of Respect—Heffington

Whereas it hath pleased our Heavenly Father to call from our church, Brother W. L. Heffington to his reward in a fairer land; Therefore, be it Resolved—

First: That we commend Brother Heffington's example in life as a stalwart citizen, a conscientious, consecrated church member, and a devoted husband and father, to all men as one worthy of imitation and respect.

Second: That we express through these resolutions our gratitude for having had the privilege of knowing and loving him and that we express further to the members of Brother Heffington's family our deepest sympathy for them in their bereavement.

Third: That a copy of these resolutions be published in The Christian Sun and a copy sent to the family.

MISCELLANEOUS

BIBLE CONFERENCES

The Bible conference movement of our day is the greatest Christian asset we have. There was a time when we had a conference or two in all the land once a year, but now practically every city of any size in the country has its many conferences each year. It is just beginning. Greater things are yet ahead. Everything else has failed—ecclesiasticism, education, organization, all have had their day. Now let us all get the Bible to the people and it will take care of itself. We do not even need to argue about its veracity; let us wield the Sword and it will prove its own vitality and infallibility.—The Wonderful Word.

WONDERFUL

The love of the wonderful is deeply implanted in man. And this for an obvious reason. God's name is "Wonderful," and He delights in great exhibitions of His power and sufficiency. He has given man a taste for beholding these exhibitions, that there may be this additional bond of union with Him. Man's taste for the wonderful appears in literature found among all people, and constituting in the case of the majority the most interesting portion of their reading. The Bible is pre-eminently a Book of wonders, and the day will come when God will fill the world with wonders in attestation of its truths.—Bible League Quarterly

THREE VITAL THINGS

To bring men to Christ, to build men up in Christ, to serve men with Christ, these constitute the unchanging and the complete mission of the church.

Bringing men to Christ is evangelism. To bring men in all of their need to Christ, who can supply it all, is the primary task of the church. To build men up in Christ is education. There is no education worth having that does not build men up in Christ. To serve men with Christ, is ministry. It covers the whole range of the activity of the church.

So far as the program of a denomination or of an individual congregation is builded around these three things, which in turn are all centered in Christ and circumferenced in men, it will stand every test.—The New Era

NEW EQUIPMENT FOR SOUTHERN RAILWAY SYSTEM

That it may continue adequately to "Serve the South," Southern Railway System has recently placed orders for new equipment consisting of 20 locomotives, 5,390 freight cars of steel construction, 500 automobile cars of steel construction, 100 steel passenger cars, and 250 caboose cars of steel underframe construction.

The magnitude of this order can be better appreciated when it is realized that if it were possible to place the freight car equipment in one train it would be 47 miles from the engine to the caboose. If broken up into trains of an average length, it would comprise 250 freight trains, or one train every 2½ miles from Washington to Atlanta.

The new passenger cars, if coupled into one train would be a mile and a half in length from the engine to the rear coach, and represent 20 trains of the average length. The coaches are of the latest design and are of all steel construction.

In placing this large order for new equipment, which will be delivered in time for the fall business, the Southern has demonstrated its faith in the return of business prosperity in the South and this will place the Southern in position to handle with safety and dispatch this increased business.

At a dinner party the little son of the host and hostess was allowed to come down to desert. Having had what his mother considered a sufficiency of fruit, he was told he must not have any more, when, to the surprise of every one of the guests, he exclaimed: "If you don't give me some more I'll tell!"

A fresh supply was at once given to him, and as soon as it was finished he repeated his threat; whereupon he was suddenly and swiftly removed from the room, but had had just time to convulse the company by exclaiming:

"My new trousers are made out of ma's old bedroom curtains."—Exchange.

"Mollie (aged six):—'Mummie, I know what I'm going to give you for your birthday. A nice rose bowl.'

"Mother: 'But I have one, dear.'

"Mollie: 'Yes, I know, but * * * I've just broken it.'"—Morning Post.

Great Usefulness

By REV. J. PRESSLEY BARRETT, D. D.

Reidsville, N. C.

LET not difficulties dismay you, nor even your own weakness induce you to surrender to them. Let not your own modesty persuade you to give place to failure. Remember that in the field of human activity, to which God has called you, and you may by faithfulness reach the mark of real excellence and do a great work in the world—this is one of God's ways to great usefulness in service.

Moses was called from attending the flock of his father-in-law to the burning bush, where he was commissioned to become the Law-Giver of Israel, and in that position he influenced the high tides of civilization in all lands and ages.

John Bunyan, the immortal tinker of Bedford, though confined to jail, wrote a book which, next to the Bible, has the strongest hold on the human heart of any book published in the last five hundred years.

Faithful preparation and loyalty in service in the common walks of life is God's way to larger fields of high usefulness and to greater fruitfulness in the Christian life. The man who "feeds from a silver spoon" has a poor show for reaching high ideals in service, while the man who is poor, but true to the truth, has before him high possibilities in the sphere of large service.

Farewell, Friends --- Good-Night

"I Have Called You Friends!"

COULD not say these parting words during the hum-drum of the day's activities. Feeble as they may be, I can best say them here by this table and at this late hour tonight. Here it is that this pen has endeavored to express itself to you, kind friends, and here—here tonight—I say the parting word. Yes, more than a word, for lovers have their long talks by the gate-post long, long after they attempt to say the last word.

For six years, dear readers, you and I have been together in these columns. Your faithfulness to me has been, and is, far ahead of my editorial ministry to you. My weaknesses rise before me as I look down the road ahead. But at my best I have endeavored to be a minister. I could never have accepted the place had I not thought it purely ministerial. And by this desk for these six years I have thought of it as my pulpit. I have endeavored to instruct, inspire, and lift readers of The Christian Sun to greater, higher, and holier things.

Looking Backward

IT is natural that I should look backward to my first issue of The Sun and think of each issue during these years of genuine enjoyment as your humble editor. With a complete file of my work, and one for the Convention, I shall, I hope, find time at intervals to look through this piece of familiar history and enjoy again the articles, messages, and names that have made this prized history—prized because of you, my friends.

An Inventory

I SAY in behalf of all future editors of The Sun that few people, exceedingly few, understand and appreciate the tasks and toils of an editor. To the public there is little work—to the man who does it there is a difference.

During my three terms as editor of The Sun I have written enough original matter to fill twelve volumes of three hundred pages each. I have read, corrected and copied enough manuscript to make fifty volumes of two hundred pages each. By reading manuscript once and proof twice, gives me the reading of enough type on The Sun alone to make one hundred and fifty volumes of two hundred pages each. I have received, opened, and answered approximately twenty thousand letters. I have written and delivered many addresses, sermons, and lectures, and have otherwise sought to serve my fellowmen. These things take in only part of the things that find their way into an editor's path. But I glory not in what little I have done. I feel a sense of regret that I have not done more. I shall continue to press forward for the cause.

Personal Interest in The Sun

I HAVE edited three hundred and fifteen separate issues of The Sun, and have been present when three hundred and thirteen of these went to press. I have endeavored to be as particular with each issue of The Sun as if it were my personal correspondence. It is with a sense of personal pride and pleasure that I can say I have done part of the arranging of the type in every issue during my tenure of office.

Blest in Health

GOD has been good to me during these six years. I have been detained from my office on account of sickness only two days since becoming your editor. There have been days when rest was needed, but my work has always come first.

Some Changes

DURING these fleeting years many changes have taken place in the Church and in the world. Some of our great leaders have been promoted to the land of the unknown. Their influence lives on and challenges all of us to rise upon our dead selves to things that are higher. I have written of them by this desk and shall think of them as the years come and go and endeavor to follow their great examples.

My Associates

I CANNOT—I will not—forget those who have been my associates in this good work which I close tonight. In my office I have had honest, tried and trusted help. Of those who have helped me in office and in plant, all but one are living, and it seems like a tie of providential friendship that her heart-broken husband be Chairman of the Board of Publication at the time I retire. God bless those who have so well and so faithfully helped me to serve you, my unseen friends, and may their willing hearts and ready hands continue to serve, which is the greatest thing that we can do. I would be untrue, unkind, and unfair not to publicly acknowledge the great help and inspiration that my companion has been. She, too, has been your humble and devoted servant. Honor her, not me.

Contributors

TO those who have so faithfully contributed to the pages of The Sun during these years I record my sincere thanks. They have helped me and spread a halo of gladness around thousands of homes. May their pens continue in the good work. I shall scan The Sun's pages each week looking for these familiar names. They are household words with me.

Exchanges

MY fellow editors will never know the lasting joy which I have had in reading carefully their productions. Not only their editorials have I read, but general articles and even the personal notes about the going and coming of their people. Farewell, fellow editors, good-night to you—and God bless you, too!

An Incident

I RECALL that on one occasion a deep snow was on the ground. A lady in the nearby rural district called me on Friday night near 10 o'clock and said that her copy of The Sun had failed to come that week. I knew that The Sun was her Sunday reading. If the paper were not mailed by 7 o'clock the next morning she would not get it until Monday. It was a pleasure then, and a pleasure yet, that I have because I walked back to my office through the deep snow to mail that paper. This is cited as an illustration that my greatest pleasure has been in trying to render service aside from actual editorial work. I have not done enough, good friends. You are not indebted to me.

A Decision

I REACHED a definite decision last December to retire from the work. If conditions so permit, I hope to rest most of the time for the remainder of this year, and then I shall hope to take up active Christian work again if it be the Father's will.

My Successor

MY successor is too well known to need any introduction. Dr. Barrett's experience fully qualifies him for the duties now about to be his. Let us uphold him and his associates by our prayers and our purses.

And Finally

THE hour grows late. We lovers must part, and so here by this desk, I, in my imagination, take you by the hand, friends—you, my friends from the cotton belt of Georgia, the cane fields of Alabama, the apple orchards of the Virginia Valley, the trucking section of Eastern Virginia, the cotton and tobacco fields of North Carolina; you who are from the cities, the highlands, and by the rolling sea—friends everywhere—I say farewell, friends, good-night.

Personals

Pastor Fleming announces all day memorial and Children's Day service at Pleasant Hill next Sunday. Dr. J. O. Atkinson and others are to speak.

President Harper is not only a busy man in college administration, but he is sought by the public as a public speaker. He has had so many engagements of late that we have not been able to keep up with him. He is here, there, and everywhere. This to the trustees: Make Dr. Harper take a vacation. There is no use voting him such a thing. That has been done time and again. He will not obey. Make him take it—that is what to do, Mr. Trustees.

(Inserted by the office force.)

The final pages of this issue are made up in the absence of Mr. Riddle, who is at the bedside of Mrs. Riddle, who underwent an operation at Watts Hospital, Durham, N. C., today (Monday). Last minute information states that she is resting well. Mr. Riddle's only child, Ruth Teague, is also in the same hospital for treatment.

Final Scraps From The Editor's Table

Many friends called to see us during the commencement at Elon. Some we saw and others we did not. We are always glad to have our friends call.

Let this be remembered: All subscription money for The Sun should be addressed as usual until July 1. During the month of June the retiring editor will carefully check all accounts and handle the business end of the paper as usual.

What is faith? President Harper delivered an address to the graduating class of Elon last Sunday night on the subject. We secured an advance copy of it for the benefit of our readers. Look for it in this issue and see what Dr. Harper says about faith.

It is always a great pleasure to meet former Elon students. We meet them on trains occasionally and they are always asking about the College and the "boys" of former days. Years are fleeting and we are reminded of it the more as we cross the paths of men who were once "just boys."

If the pastors would spend one cent each week—just fifty-two cents each year—and give five minutes time each week—just four and one-third hours per year—and send to The Sun's editor an item from which he could make a note the paper would grow in greater popularity. No editor can make news—real news—he must get the information.

We are glad to hear that our Greensboro church and its faithful pastor are planning now to build a new church. The present location being not a very desirable one, they have a fine lot some two or three squares from the present location, and it is hoped that soon a new church will go up on the new lot. Brother Clem, the pastor, has had good experience in building, as at Springfield, Ohio. If he and his Greensboro church shall determine to do this work, you may expect it will be done well, and the Greensboro First church will in the not distant future have a good building in which to worship and to do Christian work.

Elon College has just issued a fine and inspiring bulletin to be used as a help to College Day in the churches. It is a valuable piece of literature and should be read by every member of the Church. Already many of the churches are planning for this special day. Back in the sandhills of Lee County, where the retiring editor enjoyed his boyhood days, is Grace's Chapel. That little church is planning to observe the day, so writes Pastor Thomas E. White. By invitation, we plan to journey back to the home church on that day and speak to the "boys" and "girls" of olden (?) days.

ELON LETTER

ITTLE children are supposed to be selfish, but speaking of them Jesus said, "Of such is the Kingdom of Heaven." Is the Kingdom of Heaven made up of selfish persons? Or is it more likely that our notions of the innate, original selfishness of children is in error?

Whence this notion of child selfishness?

Theologically it arose out of the doctrine of total depravity, according to which we are all born in sin, aliens from God. Those who prefer to look upon God as a loving Heavenly Father have parted company with this doctrine long ago. It is a very comforting doctrine, for it puts the blame of all parental failure properly to nurture and admonish their children in the Lord on the Creator Himself. The other day a man laconically remarked that he could readily believe in the depravity of other men's children, but not his own.

Instinctively, too, the notion of the original selfishness of children has arisen from the fact that all human beings possess certain tendencies to act so as to preserve, protect, and promote their own lives and interests. Such tendencies, for example, are the dispositions to hunt, collect, hoard, to fight, to fear, to get angry, to show off. These tendencies are good for the race as well as for the individual. They become selfish only when they are indulged in a way injurious to others. Nor must we forget that there are other tendencies wholly social innate in us all.

The child's outspoken frankness causes his elders to think he is selfish. He has not yet acquired the ability to act according to society's conventions. He does not act or tell white lies. He is what he is.

The child, it must be remembered, has nothing to be generous with but himself, his affections. These he lavishes in prodigality. He will love a negro baby as readily as a white baby. Here again he is unconventional. The child's poverty in material possessions does not enable him ordinarily to be generous. We adults are to blame for keeping him oftentimes all too long a pauper.

The child, it must be said in addition, lacks experience. He does not know the consequence of an act of his on himself or on others. If he could imagine himself wrapped in bandages and linseed oil, he would never go near the fire. If he could see his sister crying because of his rudeness, he would never have torn his dolly to pieces. As his experience ripens and his imagination develops, there ought to be a decided improvement in his thoughtless acts which look to us adults as the outcropping of native selfishness and there will be such improvement if he is properly trained and nurtured.

This brings us to the real crux of the matter. Children imitate their elders. They gain far more from observation of their parents in action than they do from their formal preachments. People can really read our character in our children. If they grow up to be selfish and un-Christian, let us be charitable to them and inquire if some adult person or persons somewhere did not fail to direct tottering little feet in the ways of altruism and Christian brotherhood. It is our duty to train and nurture them spiritually.

Parenthood is the noblest calling of life. What a privilege parents have so to direct the development of the little ones made in God's image that that image may never be obscured by selfishness!

SUFFOLK LETTER

HERE is a tendency in the present age to lower standards for the sake of popularity. This tendency has entered almost every department of life and every product from pen and brush. It manifests itself in manufacture of tools and foods. Adulteration in medicines, cloth, metals, stocks, and many things in common use. The efforts made by government inspection to discover such deceptions prove the existence of such conditions. This tendency grows out of what is known as popular government, which, in the estimation of many, means license rather than law. Democracy is the antithesis of autocracy and it may run into disregard of authority. The church is not exempt from this desire for popularity. The dictionary makes no effort at popularity; its sole purpose is accuracy; the Bible does not offer attraction, but truth. "Be not conformed to this world" suggests no lowering of the standard of righteousness. The church needs above attraction for people a higher life in Christ that magnifies Him and sets forth in "living epistles" the real meaning of salvation. The world is not to be saved by lowering standards, but by living standards.

People talk of attractions as if they were spectacular and outward demonstrations of a material nature; but attraction is an invisible force that draws and holds by a power we call influence. The power that holds the earth together and worlds in their places is unseen and mighty. The power of the church is in its silent, unseen, spiritual influence over men. No made-up occasion can substitute for the life-testimony of real Christians. It is easy to popularize religious services to draw a crowd; but crowds are no sign of character. The world is more influenced by a small spiritual church than by a large worldly-minded church.

Social standards are lowered under the pressure of new conditions. The once high standards of respect and courtesy on the part of men for women are not felt and practiced as in former days. This has reduced virtue to a losing point in the social scale, and increased divorces. The world drifts with the tide of lower standards and wakes up in the maelstrom of currents too mighty for individual escape. Things are not good because they are popular; and they are not popular because they are good. Goodness and popularity may go together; but usually they are diametrical. The good will be popular when the people are good.

The church can never lower its standard and be safe and useful. The standard of character is Jesus Christ; and the standard of doctrine is the Bible. Musical standards have been lowered in an effort to make music popular; and this effort has commercialized music. Books in music are produced as a financial business. Writers and publishers work together in this field. This is safe so long as the soul of music is preserved and praise is continued. It should be adapted rather than lowered. Gravity is adapted but never lowered. It works in the same way and on the same high plane between atoms as between worlds. Spiritual character is the same in earth as in heaven. God's family is the same in this world as in the world to come; "of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named."

STATISTICIAN NEEDED

Probably one of the greatest needs of the Christian Church is a statistician. The American Christian Convention should create such an office, pay a small salary and all expenses, and hold the statistician responsible for correct statistics. I also favor the appointment of a statistician by the Southern Christian Convention.

Assuming that our statistics are about as correct one year as another, from the best possible investigation I have been able to make, the Christian Church is losing in ministers, churches and communicants.

From the Christian Annuals we get this data:

Year	Ministers	Churches	Membership
1898	1391	1424	107,868
1899	1452	1505	112,414
1910	1273	1471	92,181
1922	987	1089	3,695
Colored (included in totals above)
1899	91	99	6,493
1922	74	58	3,659

As practically all the colored members are in the South. I am satisfied their statistics for 1922 are very incomplete.

While the United State and Canada show a loss along these lines, the Southern Christian Convention now has a membership of 28,251, showing a large gain since 1910, for which we are grateful. Their goal is a ten per cent increase in membership each year.

DR. J. P. BARRETT

Dr. J. P. Barrett, our new—yes, old—editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, needs no introduction. His name is a household word north, south, east and west, among the members of our Brotherhood. It is the bright and breezy morn of life, with the young and brilliant editor who is so soon to leave the editorial tripod. He will not lay his pen aside to rust. No, no, we will see and hear from him from time to time. He will be in training for still greater usefulness. But now is the time to rally to the support of Dr. Barrett. So young in feeling and interest, and yet so ripe in years of experience and faithful, unselfish service. Prof. P. J. Kernodle, his managing editor, is one of the ripest scholars and most devoted characters among our lay-members.

LECTURE ON EVOLUTION

I went to Raleigh to hear the debate on Evolution May 18. I got a big pencil and a large tablet of paper, secured a seat at close quarters and took copious notes. As the city papers contain full reports, I will not express any opinions in regard to the debate. For over fifty years I have, as I imagined, tried to keep an open mind while reading and listening to learned discourses on this and other subjects. Pullen Hall was crowded as I never saw it before. The exercises were opened without a song or a prayer. The building rocked with applause for each speaker. The people are deeply interested and fearfully divided. The great solid granite masses of the people simply seek to know the truth. They are just as hungry for the demonstrated facts of science as they are for the demonstrated facts of religion.

MOTHER

Whose love can equal the love of a mother? Whose the devotion so loyal and true? Who suffers so much with such joy for another? Who works with such pleasure as Mother for you? You hail with delight the friendship of others; you revel in love of the sweet-heart you've won. Yet, where do you find a friend like mother, unbroken till death calls and life's work is done?

Mrs. B. S. Cox.

Greensboro, N. C.

On Tuesday evening, May 16, Rev. J. F. Morgan was duly installed as pastor of our Winchester, Virginia, church. The program rendered was as follows: Opening Chorus—Choir. Invocation—Rev. W. M. Depp. Hymn: "Onward Christian Soldiers." Scripture Lesson—Rev. Boyd Switzer. Anthem. Installation Sermon—Dr. J. O. Atkinson. Installation Prayer—Rev. Geo. W. Stover. Solo. Charge to Pastor—Dr. W. T. Walters. Charge to Church—Rev. A. W. Andes. Welcome (local church)—Nelson F. Richards. Welcome (churches of city)—Rev. Chas. Adey. Welcome (city)—W. W. Glass. Response—Rev. J. F. Morgan. FAITH AND PROGRESS

"According to your faith, be it unto you." (Matthew 9: 29)

Baccalaureate Address Delivered by President W. A. Harper, Before Elon's 1922 Graduating Class, Sunday, May 28

THESE are the words of Jesus, spoken to two blind men. Now it is not to be inferred that the members of this class are blind. So we shall not primarily concern ourselves with the blindness of these two brothers of ours of the long ago, but rather with their faith. Through faith they recovered their sight. Jesus set great store by faith.

What is faith?

But first let us say that men had faith before Jesus came. In that inspiring catalogue of the Hebrew faithfuls recorded in the 11th of Hebrews, while the list begins with Abraham, we are not to suppose that faith began with him. The adage which rates him the father of the faithful is not historically true. Nor are we to conclude that faith is a concept limited to Jewish Christian people only. We find it among those who have as yet never heard of the Jews or the Christians. No man ever existed without it. Faith is an innate, original soul-quality. It is more than an instinct. It is one of the three abiding functions of the soul—which a great spiritual seer declared to be faith, hope, and love. Paul considers love greater than faith or hope, but love is fed by hope which is based on faith. The three are an indivisible trinity in every spiritual experience. Faith, then, is the basis of that moral, spiritual, religious hope, which issues in fruits of love.

What, then, is that basic thing? What is faith?

Faith is sometimes identified with superstition, sometimes with credulity, sometimes with a fatalistic attitude growing out of a fear that approaches reverence. We must candidly admit that faith has been infected in every land and in every age with all these spiritual poisons. We must further state that faith tends to feed itself upon these poisons in the absence of its proper nourishment. For faith is no vacuum, nor is it a mummy. It will, it must grow. It will fill its garden of life with noxious weeds of the spirit unless it is properly seeded and cultivated. Faith reaches out toward God, is the soul of man yearning to touch the soul of the Father. It will use the means at hand to attain the satisfaction its innate impulse forces it irresistibly to strive after. However disappointed it may be in its effort, faith still urges the soul on in its search for God and the life God wills for His children. If superstition is the best vehicle at hand, faith will use it. If credulity be the most promising instrument, faith will grasp it. If fatalistic fear of God be the atmosphere surrounding it in its hunger for God and life, faith will imbibe it and endeavor from it to extract the inspiration for life's advancement.

But faith is not superstition. Superstition is the product of too much religion. Paul in his Mars Hill sermon was the first religious teacher to say this. In rendering his thought in the English tongue the translators have had difficulty to find an adequate phrase—rendering it now "too superstitious" and now "too religious." Paul's idea is that too much religion is superstition. The Greeks certainly had too much religion. They erected altars and burned incense to every divinity their fertile imagination could invent, and then for fear they had omitted some spirit they erected their altar "To the Unknown God." Too much religion had made them mad. The most primitive men we know, the Bushmen of Africa and the South Australians, are too religious. The cracking of a limb in the forest, the murmur characteristic of the shells of the sea, every movement of any material substance, is to them directly due to the presence indwelling of a spiritual being. They must pay so much attention to the spirits about them that they have no time for progress. Poor, deluded brothers! We owe them release from such religious insanity. To withhold from these suffering brothers of ours the glad freedom of a ministering faith is high treason toward the Kingdom of God. Superstition is a perversion of faith, growing out of a false conception of God. Even the superstition of our Christian social order hinders the proper fruiting of faith. Real faith must expel superstition from life. Superstition is a parasitic growth on faith. It feeds on faith, saps its vitality, perverts its functions, prevents it from yielding its maximum service to life and progress. The superstitious man is not a man of faith, but of blinded faith. He needs to recover his sight, that faith for him may yield her normal increment of light and leadership for life. Real faith will ultimately drive superstition from the heart and life of men.

Nor is credulity faith's equivalent. That is to say, intellectual assent to certain historical facts or dogmas or doctrines or creeds is not faith. There were men of faith before there were any dogmas or doctrines or creeds. There were men of faith before there were historical facts to record. Faith made the facts as well as their history capable of recording. Just believing things is not faith. The ability to believe varies with individuals and in the individual according to certain times of life. The little child believes in fairies and accepts every statement he hears with absolute confidence. Persons of limited mental or spiritual horizon more readily accept certain dogmatic, doctrinal, or creedal statements than do others whose thoughtful consideration and enlarged experience personal and cultural have led to a revision of earlier concepts. Experience is a large part of every man's faith. A faith that is not experiential, a faith that stops with believing, a faith that takes no account of the past, a faith that fails to issue in action—such faith declared a great Christian administrator of the first century is dead.

We must pause here to examine doubt as the antithesis of faith. With a host of excellent Christians to express doubt as to some fact of the Bible is to lose all hope of eternal life. Usually such Christians naively conceive that their interpretation of Scripture is Scripture itself, and so to differ from them is to be anathema maranatha. Such heretic hunters attract far more attention today than they deserve, but their power over men's minds is not to be compared with the influence their spiritual predecessors exercised. When their spiritual progenitors you will recall sat in the places of authority in Church and State, history records a period known as the Dark Age. It will be so again. Take away from faithful men their right to think except as some pope or potentate shall decree, and once again we shall revert to barbarism. This applies to matters spiritual as well as to matters scientific. To doubt is not to be damned, if it be honest doubt. Tennyson has said there lives more faith in honest doubt than in half the creeds. Is he right? History it would seem substantiates his statement. The world has been cruel to her prophets, whether they were an Isaiah or a Jeremiah or a John the Baptist or a Copernicus or a Galileo or a Darwin or a Woodrow Wilson. But the debt she owes them she can never repay. Dissatisfaction with conditions as they are, doubt that they are as they should be, earnest desire to reconstruct faith and life in terms of the enlarged vision—such are the equipage of the prophetic office. Who shall say how much the Christian Church owes to her Thomases? But for the honest doubter Thomas we should never have known that the spiritual body is so like the physical body as to be readily recognizable from the way it has been treated or mistreated. The honest doubter adjusts himself to arriving at an honest conclusion. The man who airs his doubts as an advertisement really betrays his intellectual and spiritual shallowness. The donkey is his totem animal and fool or knave aptly describes his character. Scorn such a man. But the man of honest doubt deserves every sympathy. See that he gets it. It may be he will prove to be a second Lew Wallace. General Lew Wallace was an infidel. He honestly doubted the Bible. Being an honest doubter, he searched the Scriptures. He came away from his research an earnest, sincere Christian, and then wrote that charming story of the early Christian Church, Beu Hur, a book that has clarified the spiritual way for many a Christian pilgrim groping for the path-way of eternal life. It is our privilege, our duty, to examine every evidence relative to God and His dealings with men with careful scrutiny and to draw our own conclusion. Nothing less than this is worthy the creature made in the image of God.

This brings us face to face with the question of authority or, as it is known is the Christian world, of orthodoxy. Every individual is king and priest unto God. That is to say no man has the right to enslave another in body or in thought. That is to say also that every man has direct access to God and that no man or set of men have any right to prescribe rules for such access. From the very nature of God this is so, because God is everywhere and interested in all our life. We do not go to Church, or bend on our knees, to meet God. We cannot take ourselves from His presence and no man could, if he would, prevent our communicating with Him. And the opposite is also true—no one can hinder Him from speaking to us, no one but ourselves. Christians believe in prayer, in men's duty to speak to God. We must equally believe in God's willingness to speak to us. He is just as ready to speak to me today as He was to speak to Paul. God is no respecter of persons nor of races nor of times. He is no absentee from His world. He is the ever-present companion of His children. He has not lost His faculty of speech. Our loving Heavenly Father is not dumb. We, His children are frequently unconscious of His presence and deaf to our Father's voice. We need to cultivate the presence of God. We need to say "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth." We need to wait on the Lord, and when we do, He will speak, and such a speech! We get our knowledge of God from experience, from observation of the lives of others, from our reasoning ability, and from revelation, but the greatest of these sources of knowledge of Him is experience. No man can rob me of my experience of God. He may prove by every process of logic and reason that I am deceiving myself, yet I will know I am right. It is incumbent upon us to consider the Bible, the testimony of others, our own and others' reasonable conclusions in arriving at a philosophy for our life, in making up our faith, but the ultimate thing for us will be our own experience of God. We cannot deny "the still small voice" when it speaks to us, the voice of God; It is to each devout child of His the ultimate test of authority, of orthodoxy. This in no way excuses us from using every means at our disposal to test the spirits, to see if they be the voice of God. But when we have tested and find God has spoken, there is but one course open to us—obey God's voice, follow its directions no matter where it may lead or what it may cost us.

Nor is faith such confidence in God's power that the individual is excused from obligation to bestir himself in the interest of the Kingdom or any of the enterprises of life. Some people profess to have such faith in God that they leave everything to Him. Usually their philosophy holds only for religious things in the narrow interpretation of that term. They are wide-awake and alert as regards other things. Such faith grows out of fear, awe, reverence for the person and character and power of God. It looks impious to a person of such faith to presume to help such a Being as our God is to accomplish His work in His world. This is a very comforting faith. It makes God responsible for everything, our sins, our weaknesses, our suffering, all. That such faith does not please Him is demonstrated by the decadence that overtakes those who have professed it. Their kind is rapidly disappearing. God made us in His own image. He works, and so should we. There is no room for fatalism in all the universe of God. We are free, we are responsible, but God rejoices when we honor Him with a true, vigorous, vital faith.

So we ask again, What is Faith?

"Faith," declared the most eloquent man of his time, "is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." This same man demonstrated his faith by taking the gospel to the gentile world of his day and by writing more books of the Bible than any other man. Faith to him was no thing to be enjoyed, but a power to be used. Service was its watchword, action its breath of life. No doubt this valiant hero of the faith could give expression to that truth which will never die—"we are justified by faith." Lovers of ease in Zion misunderstood the great apostle. They thought men are justified by mere belief, that intellectual assent to certain facts and dogmas had saving quality. Such a conception was far removed from the real meaning Paul attached to faith and tallied not at all with his own example and practice. "Without faith," we find him saying again, "it is impossible to please God." By this he meant that without putting forth every possible effort to make real in the world God's "eternal purpose" God is not pleased with us. So Paul meant the same thing by his "we are justified by faith" as James did by his "faith without works is dead." Paul and James were in perfect agreement. It was the interpreters of Paul's view who impelled James to rebuke their lethargic ease by telling them their credulous belief would avail them naught in bringing them into saving relations with God. Paul's "saved by grace" is in harmony too with his justification by faith. Grace is the God-ward side of salvation, for which faith is the man-ward side. Both grace and faith fuse into unity of life and conduct in the recognition of the mutuality of God and man in every action. Grace is conscious recognition of God's presence for blessing and inspiration and assistance. Faith is appropriation of that grace and its investment in fruitful action. Truly therefore are we "saved by grace" and "justified by faith," and truly is faith dead when it yields no works.

The faith that "is the substance of things hoped for" is no static affair. It is dynamic, energizing, militant, conquestial. This sort of faith is a disturber of the peace, being ever dissatisfied with things as they are. For it there are no insurmountable obstacles. Before it all forces must yield. It was this sort of faith of which the Master spoke when He said a man possessed of it could say to a mountain "Be thou removed, and be thou cast into the sea," and see his command carried out, because forthwith with pick and shovel or other material invention he would set about to achieve his heart's desire. Such faith subdues the kingdoms of evil, works righteousness, obtains promises from unwilling oppressors of men, stops the mouths of the lions that prey upon humanity, quenches the violence of the fire of revolution or of passion, escapes the edge of the sword by beating the sword itself into a pruning hook, out of weakness is made strong, waxes valiant in the fight for God and brotherman, turns to flight the armies of the aliens who war against the progress of righteousness and truth and peace. They who are energized by such faith are never content to sit as onlookers of the Kingdom's progress. They throw themselves into the conflict for its advancement. They are ready to be stoned, to be slain with the sword or with ridicule, to be destitute, afflicted, tormented, despised, for the Kingdom's sake—such is the vitalizing self-abandon to which their faith has led them. It is ever so of true faith—of faith that "is the substance of things hoped for."

The man of faith is the man of courage undaunted, of hope radiant. No pessimist is he. Discouragement, disheartenment—he knows them not. He is the optimist of optimists and why should he not be? Because he has in his faith "the substance of" the things he hopes for, their real essence. You cannot defeat such a man. He will realize his aspiration, he will express it in action, because he is possessed of its substance. Put him in jail for preaching and he will write his sermons into a book that will not die. Put out his eyes and he will pull down the temple of those who would tantalize him in his affliction. Frances E. Willard died, but her dream of a saloonless America is an abiding reality, and the day is not far distant, the Christian Endeavorers have definitely set the time as 1940, when we shall have a saloonless world. Faith that possesses "the substance of things hoped for" is the main-spring of human progress, the explanation of our achievement in every realm of experience.

But faith is more than that—it is "the evidence of things not seen." How beautiful! How impelling! The faith that is "the substance of things hoped for" is "the evidence of things not seen," the proof that they will be seen. Blessed faith! How we need it! Such faith the disciples had when they were willing to act upon that amazing commission to go into all the world and to preach the gospel to every creature. Such faith our American doughboys cherished when called suddenly from the walks of civil life they threw themselves with such confident assurance against the seasoned veterans of the Kaiser that the once famous Hindenberg line first bent and then broke. Every crusader for righteousness in every generation has known the verity of this energizing life-principle, has known the joyous comfort of it, has known the unconquerable inspiration of it. So is faith the basis, the guarantee, the substance and the evidence of progress.

With us as with the blind men who met Jesus, our life's achievement is according to our faith. Faith is not limited to religion merely. It energizes every realm of life and experience. The proper function of every quality and capacity we are endowed with is dependent upon faith. But it is also true that as religious faith is that which brings us into right relationship with God and brotherman, it is the most fruitful faith we can possess. Into religious faith, into the faith that orders itself in terms of God's presence and man's brotherhood, all other kinds of faith congruently fit and in it find their concordant explanation. It is a mistake to undertake to differentiate faith into kinds and types. Life is a unity and functions as a whole. Faith that "is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" should rightly characterize every act of the normal man. Faith as truly tunnels rivers and invents radiophones as it makes real in experience the loving kindness and tender mercy of God. Faith as truly erects hospitals and discovers the cause and cure of diseases as it comforts and makes clean the sinful heart. As we sing in our songs of worship—"faith is the victory," the victory indeed that overcomes the world, by which we mean it is the force that solves every problem that confronts men, every problem from every source, and by which we further mean to describe it as the force that enables us to use the world and its every possibility to promote the life of man and glorify God. God is glorified when man's life is promoted and enriched.

The class of '22 has come to a choice experience in life's highway—the glad, the hoped for, the challenging time of graduation. The world needs you, my dear young friends. It needs your buoyant optimism. It needs your confident hope. It needs your consecrated devotion. It needs your lofty aspiration, your noble ideals. It has great work needing to be done. The world has grown wonderfully since Eden. Marvellous achievements have been wrought since in the beginning God looked upon His world and pronounced it "very good." It is a better world now, a more serviceable world now, become so because men of faith have dared make use of God's bounty in material, in intellectual, in moral, in spiritual things. But it is not a perfect world yet. We have not utilized all the powers of nature. There are great possibilities surrounding us on every hand, waiting for some man of science and of faith to garner them for our benefit and uplift. There are, too, great social forces, great spiritual powers, awaiting our discovery and our utilization of them in the interest of enlarging life. I bid you garner these possibilities. I bid you harness these forces. I bid you conserve these powers. And I promise you that you shall achieve your heart's aspiration in your chosen line of service "according to your faith." Possessed of the faith which "is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen," go forth for God and for brotherman assured that victory shall crown your useful lives with happy, wholesome fruitage. Without such faith it is impossible to please God and to advance the vital interests of man. You shall be men and women promotive of the progress of the race "according to your faith." There can be no progress without faith. No faith is genuine that does not issue in progress.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson preached the Baccalaureate Sermon at the State Agricultural and Mechanical College, Raleigh, N. C., last Sunday. The press gave favorable comment on the sermon.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC—JUNE 4, 1922.

Better Friendship.—1 Samuel 18:1-4; 19:1-7

(CONSECRATION MEETING)

ONE THOUSAND DOLLARS FOR RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

At the recent session of the Southern Christian Convention, a resolution was unanimously adopted to ask every Sunday school and Christian Endeavor Society in the Convention to take an offering for the work of the Board of Religious Education the second Sunday in June, and where possible the Sunday school make this Children's Day. This will give the children an opportunity to make an offering for the children's and young people's work.

Miss Lucy M. Eldredge, the Field Secretary, is rendering a splendid service in developing activities in the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor work, but the work cannot be maintained without funds. We need one thousand dollars from these offerings, and if all our 206 Sunday schools and 52 Christian Endeavor Societies will give a reasonable offering we will pass that mark.

Envelopes will be furnished and we want every member of the Sunday school and Christian Endeavor to have part in this offering. Send all contributions promptly to Chas. H. Stephenson, Treasurer, 214 South Wilmington Street, Raleigh, N. C.

Ten months in the field has shown that the movement is worth while, let us co-operate in making a worth-while offering.

W. T. WALTERS, Chairman,
Board of Religious Education.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONTEST OF THE SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

In the absence of the Field Secretary, we wish to make the following report. Many secretaries are neglecting to make regular reports, which makes it impossible to tell just how much is being accomplished. The total number of members reported is 228, with a total offering of $267.29 and a total attendance of 6,517. The 228 new members make the contest worth while.

We hope to have a full report from all the Sunday schools from now until the close of the contest, June 11.

"Love never asks how much must I do, but how much can I do?"

ELON'S THIRTY-SECOND COMMENCEMENT

(By C. M. Cannon.)

The thirty-second annual commencement exercises began Sunday at 11:30 with the occasion of the baccalaureate sermon by Dr. R. C. Helfenstein, Dover, Del., pastor of the People's Church of that city.

Dr. N. G. Newman, pastor of the college church, was in charge of the exercises and introduced the speaker. Professor G. F. Alexander, head of the Voice Department of the college, in the opening services rendered a solo, "O God, Have Mercy," by Mendelssohn.

Baccalaureate Sermon

Dr. Helfenstein spoke on "The Challenge of Opportunity," taking his text from Esther 4:14—"Who knoweth whether thou art not come to the Kingdom for such a time as this?"

Speaking to the graduating members of the Senior class in particular and to the large audience in general, Dr. Helfenstein said in part: "the world in which we live today is a different world from that of six years ago." Continuing he said: "I do not contend that it is a better world than it was in the spring of 1914. But it is a different world, and it is our supreme privilege and a heaven imposed obligation resting upon us to help make it a better world. To be perfectly candid, I am willing to admit that at present, though not in all yet in many respects, the New World, on the threshold of which we now find ourselves, is not so good a world as was the old world—the world before the war.

"There has been a perilous letting down of our moral, our civic and our social standards. We have been drifting with the tide. The alarming and demoralizing social reactions following the war, to which the present day has fallen heir; the economic unrest in every department of life; the industrial conflict; and the divisions of the cause of religion, make the present hour of momentous significance to the future history of the world. The response that the present generation makes to its opportunities of service and advancement will determine the world's progress for all time to come. And if we fail humanity in this crucial hour, 'so shall our judgement be forever.'

"There is no one thing of which the world stands in such need today as it does of a genuine and powerful love,—love for the truth—love for one's task—love for God, and love for mankind. We have tried to conquer and subdue the world with big ships, big guns, big armies, big navies, and with the biggest war of all times. But where are we? We have been beating against the air. We have failed with big armies and big navies. It is time we were trying Big Love. That is Christ's way.

"The enthronement of love in the personal, the social, the educational, the commercial and the industrial life; and in the national and international life would speedily usher in the millennium of peace, prosperity and happiness which all right-minded men and women desire. It must be done sometime. But how is it going to be done? That is the problem. And who knows but that you young men and women of this graduating class have come to the Kingdom for such a time and such a task as this?"

Baccalaureate Address

As has been the custom from year to year Dr. W. A. Harper, president of the college, delivered his final words to the graduating class at the evening exercises Sunday night in his baccalaureate address.

The theme of President Harper's address was "Faith and Progress." He insisted that men and women are promotive of the vital enterprises of life according to their faith. There can be no progress without faith and no genuine faith without progress according to Dr. Harper's view of faith as "the basis of that moral, spiritual, religious hope which issues in fruits of love" and which is "more than instinct," being "an innate, original soul quality." (See address in this issue of The Sun.)

Class Day Program

The Class Day program opened the second day of the commencement season this morning at 10:30, the exercises being held by the members of the Class of '22. This year the Senior Class numbers forty-two members and associate members to receive degrees, one of the largest graduating classes Elon has ever produced.

After the welcome address by Mr. W. M. Garrison, president of the class, the following program was rendered:

Class History, Mary Miller.

Class Poem, Bessie Holmes.

Class Prophecy, Nannie D. Reitzel.

Last Will and Testament, Margaret Corbitt.

Delivery of Trophies, Banks Garmon.

Delivery of Mantle, Sula Patterson.

The delivery of Trophies by Mr. Garmon was the amusing feature of these exercises. The many articles which he delivered were in keeping with some oddity or peculiarity of the senior to whom they were presented, or stood for some characteristic, and brought merriment and laughter to the audience.

Society Representatives

At 3:00 p. m., as is the custom each year two representatives from each of the three Literary Societies of the College, one for young women, and two for the men, delivered orations and essays, the young men orations and the women essays.

The Psephelian literary society was represented this year by Mrs. Grace M. Rainey, whose subject was "Our Contemporary Ancestors," and Miss Minnie Edge, who spoke on "The Bane and Boon of Superstition."

The Philologist society representatives were Mr. W. G. Stoner, whose oration was entitled "The Future Demands of American Manhood," and Mr. W. E. Marlette, who used as his theme "Leadership."

Mr. R. S. Helms and Mr. E. Carl White represented the Clio society using the subjects of "The Lust for Power," and "Christian Education," respectively for their discourses.

Alumni Oration

Mrs. E. A. Crawford of Mebane, N. C., delivered the alumni address this year. Usually the oratorio occurred at the Monday night exercises but this year these items were interchanged as to time. Mrs. Crawford is a member of the Class of 1916, and she used as her theme for the address: "The Ideal of Christian Nurture as Related to Women."

Woman's place, she declared, was first to see that her home was a Christian home and that the method of Christian nurture was practiced in that home with reference to the children; if then the woman had time and opportunity for politics or other occupations she could enter them freely.

Concluding her argument for this cause she said "for if the home, the very fountain head of all organic bodies be healed there shall burst forth a river of Godly lives, noble thoughts, and lofty ambitions, whose crystal streams shall make pure the community, the State, the Church and shall hasten the time when none shall say to his neighbor 'Know ye the Lord?' and happy, yea, thrice happy is that woman who not having neglected state or church, still recognizes with satisfaction that the most enduring work she has done, has been the Godly influence set in motion in her own home. And so shall woman indeed come into her own and her reward shall be the regenerated soul of her own household."

After the alumni address of Mrs. Crawford the Alumni Association met in the college gymnasium for a business and social session refreshments being served.

Graduation Exercises

The graduation exercises began at 10:00 o'clock on Tuesday morning and after the invocation by Dr. W. W. Staley, Suffolk, Va., former president of Elon College, the salutatory address was given by Mr. I. O. Hauser, Shoals, N. C. Six representatives of the Senior class then spoke in competition for honors. Miss Mary Miller used for her essay subject "The 'Our Father.'" Miss Margaret Corbitt's theme was "Butterflies at Sea." in which she pictured the young girls of the present day as butterflies out at sea, but making for the harbor. "Some Gordian Knots of Today," was the title of Miss Eunice Rich's essay. Mr. R. S. Rainey spoke on "A Great Heart," portraying the life of former Governor Bickett of North Carolina. The oration "More than Conquerers," was delivered by Mr. W. M. Clem. Mr. H. G. Self spoke on "From Slavery to Democracy."

Literary Address

Following the speeches of the Seniors, Dr. Henry F. Cope, General Secretary of the Religious Education Association, Chicago, Ill., delivered the literary address. President Harper introduced the speaker.

Speaking on "The Challenge of Democracy" Dr. Cope said: "Democracy calls on us to change our minds. To live in freedom is to be free from the bondage of serfdom to the life that lives for things alone. For any man to be free all men must be free. For any man to realize full human values he must live so that all men may find those values. Our world stands at the forks of the road. Either it will go on in its present individualistic struggle, each man for himself, intensifying the means and the scope of warfare until it ends in the suicide of such a struggle, or it must find a new way. It must find new motives for men, motives that will be as powerful as the present acquisitive ones, that will afford greater satisfaction and will work practically. We have come to our present world impasses because we have not believed in democracy; we have not lived for common human values. We have, individuals and nations, each sought our own. Class has been set against class, man against man and nation against nation in a common struggle to possess the property of the earth. The war has taught us little if it has not taught us that the current motives must lead to a disaster beyond our language to depict.

"Democracy offers the way out. But democracy is powerless without the motive that will move us from the passion for individual and exclusive property to the passion for the good of all. There is only one thing that can save our world. It is not new arrangements of civil geography; it is not diplomatic devices; it is not the make-shift of ameliorations in the lot of suffering classes. It is the shift of human purposes from property ends to personal ends, from social prestige to the enrichment of society, from our present lust to human love. The greatest reformer of all times called on men to change their minds. The world crisis calls on us to change our minds. We have held the faith, so far, that self-interest is the only motive that will work. Democracy means that love will work. The purpose of human good demands the motive of human love.

"Our democracy challenges every college man and woman to find a way out for the world. To tackle the hardest of all problems, the problem of changing the minds of men, that is our task. We have no less to do than to make a world see new values, find new ways and realize democracy through the spiritual experience of social goodwill. No man knows just what the ways will be; but we do know that we never can walk in these new ways until we have the will to live for human good. To form and enrich that will in ourselves, to show it to others, to strengthen it in them, that is our task. The way of human love is possible; its technique is new to the world; to work it out is no small task. And it is to this that democracy challenges us, to make a new world of human justice, goodwill and common satisfactions."

Conferring of Degrees

Degrees were conferred and diplomas and certificates were awarded to eighty-seven seniors and students of the special departments. The members of the Senior class received degrees as follows: S. R. Lt. Governor of Virginia, J. E. West, a trustee of the college, presented each member of the Senior Class with a handsome Bible, the gift of the college to its graduates.

Winners of Medals and Scholarships

The winners of medals and scholarships were then announced by President Harper as follows:

Stanford Orator's Medal, H. G. Self; Moffitt Essayist Medal, Eunice Rich; Wellon's Scholarship Medal, Mary Miller; Morrow Thesis Medal, C. P. Farmer; J. J. Summerbell Scholarship Medal, Berta Crutchfield; Philologist Orator's Medal, W. G. Stoner; Clio Orator's Medal, R. S. Helms.

The honorary degree of D. D. was conferred upon Rev. W. M. Jay, pastor Holy Neck Christian church, Holland, Virginia.

The Valedictory address by Miss Mary Miller, Luray, Va., concluded the graduation exercises.

Society Reunions

The afternoon of the last day of the commencement was given over to the society and class reunions. Quite a number of the former students and alumni of Elon returned for this commencement, and these reunions were enjoyed as a homecoming affair by all attending.

Oratorio

The closing, and most pleasing event of the commencement season was the Oratorio, the annual celebration of the Choral Society, which at 8:30 on Tuesday evening rendered the cantata "Indian Summer," by Marzo. Prof. E. M. Betts, Director of the Department of Music of the college, was in charge of the cantata. Miss Florence Fisher, Soprano, Miss Marian Corey, Alto, Mrs. Katherine Sturm, Pianist, and Miss Alice Hundley, Organist, assisted Prof. Betts in the conduct of the cantata choir.

Walter B. Pitkin, noted American philosopher and writer, says that out of every twelve persons in the United States, one is either engaged in crime or would break the law to accomplish his desires. We must still fight hard for moral reformation.

AS OTHERS SEE US

Editor Emeritus, in The Christian-Evangelist

A recent letter makes an inquiry concerning "a religious body, separate and distinct from our own, designating themselves 'The Christian Church.'" "Can you tell me how their movement differs from our own?" asks the writer.

In THE CHRISTIAN SUN, published at Burlington, N. C., and designated as the "Official Organ of the Southern Christian Convention"—one of the two papers representing "The Christian Church," at one time nick-named "New Lights"—there recently appeared the following "Cardinal Principles" of that body, which we take to be authentic:

1. The Lord Jesus Christ is the only Head of the Church.
2. Christian is a sufficient name for the Church.
3. The Holy Bible is a sufficient rule of faith and practice.
4. Christian character is a sufficient test of fellowship, and of Church membership.
5. The right of private judgment and the liberty of conscience is a right and a privilege that should be accorded to and exercised by all.

Our inquirer and other readers will probably be able to infer from the foregoing clear statement, just where the difference is, so far as formal statement is concerned. Number 4, they will conclude, expresses an indefiniteness about the condition of church membership which differs from our teaching and practice and from what we believe to be the New Testament teaching and practice. Hence there is a greater visible difference, perhaps, in the aggressive methods and growth of the two bodies. But we are glad to bear witness to the excellent Christian character of our "Christian" brethren and to the fine spirit of The Herald of Gospel Liberty, of Dayton, O., and THE CHRISTIAN SUN, their two papers, which, we learn, are to be united. They are a lovable people judging by these papers, and there ought to be closer unity between themselves and us—and, no doubt, will be some day.

We have had the pleasure of finding in the Southern Medical Journal a very fine article written by Dr. J. E. Rawles, Suffolk, Virginia. The article deals with cooperation among the medical men. Dr. Rawles is a member of the Suffolk, Virginia church, and a devoted and loyal layman.

The retiring editor shall ever remember the very pleasant fellowship that has existed between him and Dr. Alva M. Kerr, editor of The Herald of Gospel of Liberty. Dr. Kerr is a fellow editor of the finest ethical principle and a man of great heart.

THANKS

The retiring editor desires to thank friends for so many kind and appreciative letters received during the past few days. Not only for recent letters do we thank our friends, but for the many kind words received from time to time which we have not been privileged to give a personal answer. Thank you, thank you.

FINAL MISTAKES

"Uncle" Wellons is the oldest contributor to THE SUN and we have enjoyed editing his articles. And here is a little joke which has proven not to be a joke: Shortly after we became editor of THE SUN "Uncle" Wellons delivered to us a cut made from his favorite photograph to be used in any way that we desired at the time of his decease. We informed "Uncle" Wellons that we would keep it and deliver it to our successor in office, for we were sure that he had many years to live and enjoy the SUN. "Uncle" Wellons thought what we told him was a joke, but we were sincere and now "Uncle" Wellons knows that we were right.

The linotype operators and the proof-readers in the printing plant are all passing around a smile with this issue, being relieved of reading the editor's handwriting. It was only two or three weeks ago that we discovered that it gave anybody any trouble. How we regret that we did not find it out earlier.

Our good friend and fellow-editor, Dr. J. F. McCulloch, Greensboro, N. C., says that editing a paper is like having a bear by the tail and going around a tree—you must swing on to keep the bear from getting you. We bear testimony to this truth. It applies to all phases of the work.

There is an old adage, that once printers ink on your hands, never off. Our successor has had it on his hands for many years and it looks like the saying might be true.

Though we have plead with subscribers of THE SUN for six years to buy Rev. C. E. Newman a typewriter, we have not succeeded. Will the editor-elect please take the matter in charge.

During our six years as editor, only one (?) woman got mad with us and she has written us the sweetest letter saying that it is all over now. We knew that she had a forgiving heart.

Every man who has been in touch with the printing craft knows what the "printers' devil" is. Now we begueth to that well known gentleman all the criticism that we have had and wish for him great success with it.

How will it feel next week not to be scratching around for editorial subjects? My! can we even think what it will mean to tell the "boys" to call the other fellow for "copy." Yes, sir, boys we are a-going-a fishin' some time soon. Come along.

Observation: Those who say the most about the Church paper on the floors of Conference furnish the fewest subscribers.

A Decision: Of all things, the hardest to get perfect—reading proof beats them all.

WOMEN AND THE KINGDOM

REPORT OF WOMAN'S MISSIONARY CONVENTION, SOUTHERN CHRISTIAN CONVENTION

The Woman's Missionary Convention of the Southern Christian Convention convened in the First Methodist church, Suffolk, Va., May 3, 1922, at 10 o'clock a. m., Mrs. W. A. Harper, Elon College, N. C., President, presiding. Devotional service was conducted by Mrs. J. P. Avent, Durham, N. C. Prayer by Mrs. Fred Bullock, of the International Sunday School Board. Address of Welcome was delivered by Mrs. W. H. Andrews, Suffolk, Va. Miss Sadie Fonville, Burlington, N. C., responded in a very charming manner.

Reports of the officers of the Woman's Board of the Southern Christian Convention were submitted as follows:

Mrs. W. A. Harper, President (report printed in SUN.) Mrs. J. P. Avent, Vice President. Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Secretary. Mrs. W. T. Walters, Treasurer (report printed in SUN.) Mrs. H. R. Clem, Superintendent Young People's Work. Mrs. Job G. Holland, Superintendent Literature and Mite Boxes. Mrs. Boyd Richards, Superintendent Cradle Roll. Mrs. J. W. Patton, Superintendent Boys' Work.

All reports showed a decided increase over reports made two years previous. It is very evident that the hearts and minds of the women are being unfolded by the grace of God, and a greater service is being rendered in His name for the uplift of mankind and the saving of immortal souls. Upon recommendation by Mrs. J. W. Patton, the Convention voted to merge the Boys' Work into the Young People's Work.

At this juncture a beautiful quartet was rendered by members of the Christian church choir.

Statements by presidents of Conference Woman's Boards were made as follows: Alabama Conference—In the absence of Miss Tinie May Hunt, Rev. E. M. Carter, Wadley, Ala., spoke of the work being done by the women of that Conference. Rev. R. F. Brown and Rev. H. W. Elder responded for the Georgia and Alabama Woman's Board, Mrs. A. A. Terrell, president, being absent. Mrs. C. H. Rowland made a most encouraging and inspiring statement for the Eastern Virginia Conference. Mrs. W. H. Carroll's report for the North Carolina Woman's Board showed an increase in number of Societies, and along all lines of work.

The Convention was most fortunate in having present Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Mission Secretary of the Southern Christian Convention; Rev. W. P. Minton, Foreign Mission Secretary, American Christian Convention; Dr. O. S. Thomas, Home Mission Secretary, American Christian Convention.

Dr. J. O. Atkinson, in his remarks, emphasized the importance of supporting the Richmond pastorate as a Home Mission Special. The Young People's Home Mission Special, Our Mountain Work; Foreign Special, the Santa Isabel Work. Dr. Atkinson further stated that it is the purpose of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention to walk side by side with the Woman's Board of the Southern Christian Convention and to co-operate in every way possible in putting over the plans of the Woman's Board.

Rev. W. P. Minton commended the work done by the women of the Southern Boards. He stated that the support of the Sendai Orphanage is of great importance. This institution is supported wholly by Missionary Society specials. All Thank Offering funds are set aside for building and supporting Mission Homes on Foreign Fields.

The work of Donna Delfina, the Porto Rican Bible Woman, was complimented. Rev. Mr. Minton reported $9,000 on hand for the Santa Isabel chapel, and $3,000 more needed to complete a suitable building.

Dr. O. S. Thomas urged the women to push the study of Home Missions in the various churches, not only the women, but men, women and children were urged to be a missionary force in putting across a great Home Mission program. Dr. Thomas further stated that the Thank Offerings of the Woman's Boards of the American Christian Convention go to support the colored school at Franklinton, N. C.

Mrs. Britt, President of the Woman's Mission Board of the Methodist Church of Virginia, was introduced to the Convention at this time. Mrs. Britt brought greetings and words of encouragement.

Mrs. C. H. Rowland read a letter from Miss Iola Hedgepeth, Fancy Gap, Va. Greetings from Toshio Sato San were conveyed by Dr. J. O. Atkinson. A letter from Mrs. D. P. Barrett, Ponce, Porto Rico, was very much appreciated. A chain of prayer for the workers in the foreign fields was held.

The following special committees were appointed: Resolutions—Mrs. J. B. Gay, Mrs. L. E. Smith, Mrs. R. B. Wood, Mrs. J. P. Avent. Apportionment—Mrs. W. V. Leathers, Mrs. W. T. Walters, Mrs. C. H. Rowland, Mrs. H. C. Pollard, Miss Lessie Stansfield. Nominations—Mrs. L. L. Vaughn, Mrs. J. Williams, Miss Sadie Fonville. Press Reporter—Dr. W. A. Harper.

The President, Mrs. W. A. Harper, offered her resignation. No action taken. Adjourned for lunch.

AFTERNOON SESSION

In the absence of Mrs. J. L. Foster, Waverly, Va., who was on the program to conduct the opening devotional service, Mrs. W. C. Hook served by reading the 100th Psalm. Prayer by Mrs. I. W. Johnson. A special season of prayer led by Mrs. C. H. Rowland for the recovery of Mrs. J. L. Foster, who is ill in the Lakeview Sanitarium, was held. Many earnest petitions were offered in Mrs. Foster's behalf.

Reports of the following committees were read and approved: Apportionments, Nominations, and Resolutions.

The following officers were elected and installed: President, Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Burlington, N. C. Vice President, Mrs. R. F. Brown, Columbus, Ga. Secretary, Mrs. Chas. H. Rowland, Franklin, Va. Treasurer, Mrs. W. T. Walters, Richmond, Va.

Superintendent Young People's Work, Miss Jennie Willis Atkinson.

Superintendent Literature and Mite Boxes, Mrs. Job G. Holland, Holland, Va.

Superintendent Cradle Roll, Mrs. Boyd R. Richards, Winchester, Va.

On motion, Mrs. W. A. Harper was elected editor of the woman's page in The Christian Missionary.

On motion by Mrs. Rowland, it was decided that all the Home Mission Specials from the Woman's Societies go into a lump sum for use in the Richmond work. The regular division of the monthly dues, half for foreign and half for home work, to remain the same. The goal for Home Mission Specials is $6,000.

The Circle plan of organization for Missionary Societies as used by sister denominations was presented to the Convention. After due discussion, the question of approving the plan and recommending its use in missionary organizations throughout the Convention was voted upon and carried. The Circle plan as given by the Presbyterian denomination to be published in THE CHRISTIAN SUN.

The closing prayer of consecration was led by Mrs. W. D. Harward. Convention adjourned.

MRS. W. H. CARROLL, Secretary.

NOTICE

We would be pleased to have copies of The Christian Annual for the following years, for the purpose of completing files of this publication: 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904, 1905, 1907, 1908, 1909, 1911, 1912, 1914, 1916.

We have received a copy of Elon's twenty-eighth annual catalogue. It carries the usual announcements, with necessary changes in minor matters. A college catalogue is not interesting to those who are not vitally concerned in college education, but to many a boy and girl this summer the college catalogue will be a source of joy and satisfaction. We repeat what we have said before, that a college catalogue well read will inspire a young person for a college education. Send to President Harper for a copy of this publication. It is free.

Brother Charles D. Johnston, our much loved Orphanage Superintendent, renders a fine report to the Board of Trustees this week at the annual meeting. Brother Johnston and co-laborers are doing a fine piece of work for the Church.

NOTICE

All matter intended for publication should be sent to Dr. J. P. Barrett, Editor, Reidsville, North Carolina. All subscription money and business matters should be addressed to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, Burlington, North Carolina, until July 1.

CHURCH NEWS

GREENSBORO FIRST CHURCH

Yesterday was a significant day with the First church here. The congregation at the morning service by its vote confirmed and endorsed a resolution having been passed previously by the Board of Directors that the church go into a program for a new building.

The growth of the Bible school recently necessitates this step, and the probability now is that temporary quarters will have to be supplied to care for the growth immediately. Since the beginning of the present pastorate the increase has been about 100 per cent, with an attendance that breaks the record of any previous years.

Twenty new members have been added to the Missionary Society, and thirty-seven added to the church membership. I have never known a survey to reveal as large per cent of members of the Christian Church living in a city of the same size, who are not members of the local church, as live here. That means an opportunity for active service which, it is hoped, the local church will be able to live up to.

H. R. CLEM, Pastor.

MOTHERS' DAY AT MT. AUBURN

The divinities of the weather did their best to keep the people away. Yet the sun appeared in golden glory before 11 a. m. and the congregation came, laden with garlands of roses and lilies. Honorable John King, of Suffolk, Virginia, was the orator at 11 a. m. and 2:30 p. m. His words has a living beauty and a depth of pathos which thrilled and captured all hearts. There is a lambent vein of humor running through his entire nature which makes him a charming guest in all homes. The dinner, as usual, was sumptuous. Before night the sky was overcast with the angry frown of the tempest, and the hail-storm swept over Henderson, Manson, Norlina and other places.

CALLED HOME

DAVIS—Mrs. Mary L. Davis, the mother of our beloved pianist and coworker, departed this life on the morning of May, 6 at 8:45. Mrs. Davis was born in North Carolina, near Elizabeth City, June 15, 1854. She and Sam had lived in Norfolk for a number of years. Mrs. Davis was a most faithful mother and lived a beautiful Christian life. She was a member of the First Baptist church, this city. The funeral was conducted from the residence on Fifteenth Street by her pastor, Dr. W. M. Vines, assisted by the writer. Interment at Forest Lawn cemetery. She is survived by one daughter, Mrs. C. W. Brooks and one son, Sam Leonard, both of Norfolk. May God bless, comfort, and keep the bereaved.

MORRISON—Mrs. Nannie B. Morrison, of Rosemont Christian church, Norfolk, Virginia, was born May 26, 1859, and died April 27, 1922, being at the time of her death, 62 years, 11 months and 1 day old. Early in life Mrs. Morrison became a Christian and united with Old Providence Christian church where she remained until the organization of Rosemont church, about twenty years ago, where she became a charter member, and where her husband, Brother J. R. Morrison is now senior deacon, and where all her children are members. Besides her six children and husband, she leaves to mourn a number of other relatives, and a great company of friends.

Mrs. Morrison was a devout Christian, a loyal church member, and an unusual wife and mother. Her husband had reason to "praise her in the gates" and her children will "rise up and call her blessed." There is no doubt that her soul rests in peace.

Funeral was held from Rosemont church by the pastor, Rev. W. C. Hook, assisted by the writer, her former pastor, Friday April 28, at four o'clock p. m.

G. O. LANKFORD

BRANDT—Camillas Brandt, son of the late Vincent and Timey Brandt was born in Person county, April 24, 1849 and dropped dead in his yard near Brown Summit, April 25, 1922, aged 72 years and one day.

He was a member of a family of nine children, four boys and five girls. All having preceded him in death except one brother.

On February 28, 1886 he was married to Miss Louise Wright. To this union were no children born.

Mr. Brandt, never professed any religion nor united with any church, though shortly before death he expressed himself as trusting in God. He is survived by his wife and one brother. Funeral was conducted by the writer from Friendship Methodist church, and interment was made in the church cemetery.

MRS. MARY L. DAVIS PASSES AWAY

Saturday morning, May 6, 1922 at 8:45 o'clock, after a lingering and painful illness, Mr. Mary L. Davis, of Norfolk, and the mother of the widely known pianist, Sam L. Davis, passed away. It is a great loss to us when any of our loved ones leave us, the loss is greater when it happens to be a mother, but I wonder if any of us have lost quite so much in losing any of our loved ones as this young man has in losing his mother? She was a mother to him in everything that that word carries with it, and yet, much more. She was his protector, his human guide in the home, on the streets and through life, his mediator between him and the printed page, his business manager in every transaction, his spiritual advisor in all printed matters pertaining to the Kingdom, she was his light in nature's beautiful world that for him has been veiled in darkness all the days of his life. Could any one lose more in the loss of a single loved one? His sister, like he, lost a mother but she has her own family and her natural vision by which she may not stumble; Sam is alone save for his friends.

We wonder sometimes how he bears the loss. He bears it only by God's sustaining Grace and His many precious promises. She lived a beautiful Christian life, was so trustful, so submissive and so patient in her illness and great pain. Continuing in the memory of her Christian life, of her bright hopes and joyous expectation of God's blessed forever, Sam will labor to perfect his own life and fit his own spirit for the glad day when, if it pleases God, he shall awake in his Father's house, and they two, mother and son shall greet each other anew, the imperfection of the bodies all gone, they having new bodies according to His own will.

L. E. SMITH,

Norfolk, Virginia.

Unity says the following letter from the School Board at Lancaster, Ohio, dated 1828, "ought to be read by everybody at least once a year": "You are welcome to the use of the schoolhouse to debate all proper questions in; but such things as railroads and telegraphs are impossibilities and rank infidelity. There is nothing in the Word of God about them. If God had designed that his intelligent creatures should travel at the frightful speed of fifteen miles an hour by steam, he would clearly have foretold it through his holy prophets. It is a device of Satan to lead immortal souls down to hell."—Christian Register.

MISSIONARY EDUCATION MOVEMENT CONFERENCE PROGRAM COMPLETE

The program of the 20th annual session of the Missionary Education Conference to be held at Blue Ridge, N. C., June 23 to July 3, is now complete, and is one of the strongest ever put on in the South. Several important additions have just been made to the list of thirty-odd well known speakers and leaders previously announced. Bishop Logan Herbert Roots, of China, one of the great missionary figures of the age, will represent the missionary work of the Protestant Episcopal Church; Dr. J. M. Blaine, of China, that of the Southern Presbyterian Church; Rev. C. B. Dawsey, of Brazil, the Southern Methodist Church, and Mrs. Lippard, of Japan, the Lutheran Board. Dr. George A. Rutley, of India, will also be there, making a very strong missionary staff, which will add greatly to the interest of the conference. Mrs. C. N. Downey, of Atlanta, has been secured as the official representative of the United Christian Missionary Society. Another interesting late addition to the program is a study class on "The Church and Industrial Reconstruction." The speakers and leaders have been drawn from all the principal Protestant denominations. The hostesses of the conference will be Mrs. T. W. Bickett, of North Carolina; Mrs. Neill Sparr, of Knoxville, and Mrs. Arch Trawiek, of Nashville.

The mission boards of nearly all the denominations working in the South are actively behind the conference. An attendance of four or five hundred is expected. A folder setting forth the program of the Conference and the attractions of Blue Ridge will be sent on request of the chairman, Dr. W. D. Weatherford, of Southern College, Nashville, Tennessee.

USELESS PRAYING

There is a time and place when prayer is an insult to Almighty God. To attempt to pray over the top of a heart full of bitterness, and a life that has been unbrotherly and unkind, is folly.

God has told us to stop praying under these circumstances and to cleanse our hands and our hearts first.

Then there is a danger with some excellent people of measuring prayer by its volume and length.

We do not forget that our Lord has said that "men ought always to pray," and that the Apostle enjoined us to "pray without ceasing," and that we were to watch therein with all perseverance.

But we know, too, that our Lord warned us against "vain repetitions," and expecting to be "heard for our much speaking." The wise man enjoined us, when we entered the house of God, to "let our words be few."

If we spent more time in preparation for prayer, we should not need to spend so much time in prayer.

When the heart is right it can abide in fellowship with God, and abiding communion implies "praying always."—The Evangelical Christian.

THE MINISTRY

There is a great dearth of ministers such as was never before known in the history of the church. The need is appalling. What are we doing to meet the need? The church has not had the vision. If more had had the vision and foresight of some, every church would at the present time be supplied with a pastor. The ministering brethren are not as anxious about this situation as they should be. There is too much anxiety and concern for making money, accumulating fortunes, etc., but not enough for the spiritual needs of the church. We ought to get in dead earnest once, and ask God to give us such a burden for those shepherdless congregations that we cannot eat, sleep or work, until that need is supplied. If God saw that we were dead in earnest concerning this matter, praying night and day, the need would soon be supplied.

WANTED: A REVIVAL

Spiritually bankrupt, and financially insolvent: that about expresses the condition of the world after its emotional debauch. Drunk on the wine of economic fallacies, the new day, that was to usher in the glad era of no work wherein all men are brothers, brings but a headache.

What a sick world needs just now is an old-fashioned religious revival, a little more regard for the sacredness of contract, and then a lot of self-denial and intelligent expenditure of both time and money. Kick out the sociological quacks, read the Sermon on the Mount, and go back to work. All will yet be well—for those who survive.—Business Chronicle.

BORROWED BRIEFS

"In every life God has the last word."

"The man who wields a whip has it in his heart to become a tyrant."

"God, in order of creation, made no place for a lazy man. That is the reason he has such a hard time."

"The only place to begin to understand the world is the place where Moses began—'In the beginning—God.'"

"After all, God is not dead, as Luther assured one whose mouth was full of criticism. Things have been bad before, but God has found a way to make them better. The infinite Jehovah never gets to His wit's end."

A starving child is an arraignment of civilization. In a civilized society there ought not to be such a thing as a starving child. Every civilization in the past has been wrecked on the rocks of selfishness, and the selfishness that has been most manifest in its attitude toward the child. As long as children are coming into the world and being given half a chance to get right ideals and a loving guidance, the world is safe.—The Methodist Protestant.

Some Sundays ago we were in a distant city. At dusk a chime of bells on a church played, "Abide with Me, Fast Falls the Eventide." The evening was the close of a day of singular beauty. The effect was most worshipful. Those bells were a benediction to us, and we believe they must be to that city. How many weary hearts in that city needed just that message! When we came to our last hour, we would that some kind hand could chime that message into our ears—it would ease the fear of dying.—Selected.

Our Prayer

ORD, teach us how to pray." And He said: "Say, Our Father," etc. A great petition and a great response, the first and only answer to the prophets' age-long question, "How shall I come before God?" We must come with the right intellectual attitude. We must come with the right conception of God. Say, "Our Father." Come with the right conception of man. Say, "Our Father," the Father of us all, of all men, and we brothers in a common household. Come with the right conception of prayer. Say; "Thy will be done." Seek to discover and bring yourself into harmony with the divine will.

We must come with the right spiritual attitude—reverence, dependence, submission. Say, "Hallowed be thy name," "Thine is the Kingdom and the power," "Thy will be done."

We must come with right petitions, our supreme needs. The human body is the divine temple and God's character is to be revealed in the flesh, so "Give us this day our daily bread." The cumulative power of sin is a deadly burden that must be gotten rid of. We, therefore, pray, "Forgive us our trespasses." But the conflict, which is evil, is still on. "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." Man's highest and best can be attained only in an environment in which the will of God is the law of life, and so we end where we began: "Thy Kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth."

This prayer is the climax of Jesus' teaching, the philosophy of the Kingdom, the sum total of Christian theology.

NOTES

Mr. John King, Suffolk, Va., is a staunch friend of tithing. He made a strong appeal before the Convention at Suffolk recently. There are many calls for his work in that line.

* * *

Rev. J. Lee Johnson is assisting the pastor in a series of meetings in the Christian church at Reidsville, N. C. He is indeed a workman that needeth not to be ashamed because he preaches the Word.

* * *

Judge J. F. West, of the Supreme Court of Virginia, got away from his arduous labors and ran down to Suffolk to get a good glimpse at the Convention in action, and to see his many friends who were members of that body.

* * *

Our Southern Christian Convention had as visitors Rev. W. P. Minton, Foreign Mission Secretary, and Rev. O. S. Thomas, Home Mission Secretary, both of Dayton, Ohio. They took a lively interest in the work of the Convention.

* * *

The many friends of Mrs. J. L. Foster, Waverly, Va., will be pained to know that she is in Lakeview Hospital, Suffolk, Va., awaiting a surgical operation. She has the best wishes and prayers of her many friends for speedy recovery.

* * *

Rev. J. D. Wicker, another of the veterans of the Christian Church, was in regular attendance upon the sessions of the Southern Christian Convention. He is still active in the work and greatly interested in the progress of the Church.

* * *

Rev. C. B. Riddle, the retiring editor of THE CHRISTIAN SUN, does so with the best wishes of his many friends. He has worked hard and met many difficult situations during the three terms of his services. We wish him well and great success in doing good.

* * *

Dr. Staley and his church in Suffolk entertained the Southern Christian Convention with a liberal hand. Eastern Virginia is a great place for lavish entertainment, and with our people, Suffolk is the capital of Eastern Virginia—in the matter of entertainment.

* * *

The friends of Dr. W. W. Staley, the retiring President of the Convention, as he was retiring, presented him with a loving cup, as a token of the high esteem in which he was held by the Convention. It was a most graceful tribute, paid to one of the most faithful of officers.

Rev. L. E. Smith, D. D., pastor of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., was chosen as Dr. Staley's successor as President of the Southern Christian Convention. He has before him a great opportunity in advancing the interests of the Convention. His brethren greet him and wish him the highest success in serving the Brotherhood.

The ladies who are conducting a fine annual campaign for missions in the Southern Christian Convention were much encouraged by the good reports sent in from the field to their late session at Suffolk. These ladies alone are now doing more for the cause of missions than the whole Church was doing twenty-five or thirty years ago, and their work is but in its infancy—greater results will be achieved in the years to come.

The many friends of Rev. J. W. Wellons, D. D., Elon College, N. C., were pleased to see him at the Southern Christian Convention, Suffolk, Va., early in May. Many years ago Dr. Wellons lived in Suffolk, and so he no doubt felt much at home, only there were few of his friends of those early days to be seen—they had gone away whence no traveler returns. He was able to be in the Convention but little, but he enjoyed that much.

* * *

Dr. G. S. Watson, from the beginning a Trustee of Elon College, though advanced in age, is still living at the College and maintains his interest in the work that institution is doing. He has many friends in the Christian Church who will long remember his good service in the interest of that institution. May his days yet be many and his life continue, as it has long been, so very useful in every good work which comes to him for encouragement and help.

* * *

Rev. W. S. Long, D. D., a man of high standing in the Christian Church and for many years one of its leading educators, was in the Southern Christian Convention at Suffolk, and though his age would seem to make him necessarily inactive, yet he was active and kept his eye on what was passing in the Convention, and when it was necessary he was as ready to speak as the younger men, ever on the alert to guard the best interests of the Church he has loved and served for so many years.

* * *

Rev. W. G. Clements, Morrisville, N. C., was gladly welcomed among his brethren at the Southern Christian Convention in Suffolk early in May. He is now 82 years old, and for two years or more he has been greatly afflicted by reason of a fall, which disabled him most likely for life. He is, as of old, greatly interested in the work of the Church, and if we mistake not, was found in his seat in the Convention daily. God bless and keep our aged and faithful men, as they come down toward the sunset hour of life.

With the closing of June THE CHRISTIAN SUN will be published by the Central Publishing Company, Richmond, Va., under the personal supervision of Prof. P. J. Kernodle, who was formerly a professor in Elon College. He is also the author and publisher of a handsome volume of sketches of our deceased ministers. He is well known in the work of the Christian Church, and he has the best wishes of his many friends in the enterprise of publishing THE CHRISTIAN SUN. The price is reduced from $2.50 to $2.00, and the paper will be greatly enlarged. Get your subscriptions ready and send them after June 30 to THE CHRISTIAN SUN, care of the Central Publishing Company, Richmond, Va.

GET TOGETHER—MAKE COMMON CAUSE

IF the people of the Christian Church could get their eyes open to the true situation and hear the call of God to do a great work in giving the Gospel to all the world, we should not be long in abandoning all petty schemes and bending ourselves and giving our true strength to the great work which Jesus had in mind when He said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

There can be no question as to the wisdom of the Master's plan—His purpose is the salvation of the lost, and to that end He calls upon His people to get together and do their best to reach all classes and conditions of the human family. This command is as much to the people of the Christian Church as to any other, and therefore we have the greater need to walk in the light of truth, binding ourselves together in a common cause. If this is to be, then we cannot afford to pull every one in his own way, but rather we should each press the fight in the way the Master has indicated.

We cannot afford to run off after new ways as a matter of novelty, or as a matter of experiment. We need to bend ourselves down to the limits Jesus gave, and, doing our best to serve Him in that way, be found ever faithful and doing our best as laborers to enter into the thought of co-workers together with God. We may not see every matter alike, but so long as our seeing is within the limits of the teachings of the Scriptures, let us make due allowance for the differences and press on to gain the larger end of real service. When we divide, save for the cause of real truth, then we weaken ourselves and hinder our usefulness in service.

Let us get together and let us work together for the building up of the cause of our Divine Master. We can better afford to sacrifice our own pleasures, even our own preferences, as to ways and means in service, rather than stop the work of the whole by standing for some merely human opinion. We are not pleading for the sacrifice of truth as a means of progress, but for a standing together and for united effort in labor that we may promote the work of saving the world by standing for the truth. We expect brethren to differ sometimes, but let them differ outside the bounds of truth, not on the inside of truth. Let them differ in the spirit of Christ, where matters of opinion are at stake, but let us stand like a stone wall for truth and righteousness of God in Christ. We cannot afford, as a people, to split up into factions over mere opinions, unless our opinions are supported by the Word of God.

In the Christian Church the Bible is in an especial sense our final authority for what we do and for what we teach. The right to think for one's self is cheerfully accorded to every member of the Christian Church, but we are not by that fact authorized to stir up the whole body of believers, and so bring confusion into our work. Standing on the promises of God and pressing the battle with a holy enthusiasm, we cannot fail, we shall not fail, for God is able to make His true servants to stand in hard places and give them victory.

We have yet to learn one great lesson, and that is this: To be permanently successful in the building up of the cause of Christ, we must be substantially in harmony with God and the messages He has sent to us in His Word. It will not do to run after new ideas, unless we are sure that the new ideas are in keeping with the thoughts of the God of hosts. If one has a plea in the name of our God, let him first assure himself that the plea is supported by the Bible, and standing on the Book as his basis, he can stand till his work is done.

All of this "tomfoolery" of the wisdom of man being greater than the wisdom of God, as set forth in the Bible, is the merest nonsense, and as such it is inexcusable and a curse to the cause for which we plead and in which we hope to do our part for the saving of the world through Christ. "Back to the Bible" is by no means a meaningless phrase, for in many respects we have slowly crept away from this great basis of truth. We need to get together on this great foundation—the Bible, the Bible alone is our authority in religion. Let no man set up his opinion as such a basis so long as God permits us to have the Bible, as the chart and compass of the way we take in the divine life. Let us bring our thinking into harmony with the Word and then make common cause for truth and righteousness that we may pull down the strongholds of sin and build up the Kingdom of Christ. Then may we hope for great achievements in giving Light to the world.

PUZZLING PROBLEMS

AS civilization advances it becomes more complex, giving rise to most puzzling problems for the children of men to solve. It is interesting to see how bravely men and women are tackling these problems and trying to bring them into subjection to human wisdom. It also calls out the pity of the human heart to see how we fail in finding the true solution of the same. Forty years ago we scarcely knew that these problems had a place in human thought. Of course they did have such a place, but they were so little discussed as to appear insignificant indeed. Now it is different—almost every man and woman is talking of the problems which confront the people of this age.

We suppose these problems are in process of solution, but really we are making progress most slowly. Who can say that this or that problem has been solved? No doubt there are a few of these problems which have been solved, or at least practically so, but the larger part are still under discussion and the people are waiting and hoping that soon they will be masters of these difficult situations. But will they? They may or they may not, since usually it takes well nigh a generation to solve problems which are bewildering the people. In many instances the solving of a problem is announced only to be followed quickly by announcing that the problem is still a problem—that its solution has failed, and the people are again at sea as to their difficulties.

We believe there are solutions for all these problems, but they are largely beyond the human mind—only God can make plain His ways through human affairs, and the finding of God's ways and their application to human affairs alone will bring to us the solving of the problems of human society. God has given to us a solution of human problems, if only we could induce ourselves to take the solution as He has given it to us and apply the same to our difficulties. Jesus Christ is the solution of all human problems—He alone can lead us out of the wilderness of human failure and doubt. Jesus Himself assured us that He is "the way, the truth and the life." If we would turn to Him in all of our difficulties we might soon find the way out—out of confusion and into the light of truth, where we could see just the way out of our disappointments in our failures to solve the problems which have so beset us and defied our best efforts to make the way plain.

Only the Light of the World is capable of making the human mind and heart see the truth. That we have turned ourselves to ourselves in our efforts to solve our problems is the real explanation of our failures. Instead of turning ourselves from the difficulties and turning to Jesus the Christ of God to make the way clear, we have done our best in our own strength and have failed. Shall we never learn to find the solutions of our problems in Jesus Christ? That is the way. No man has been able to face his difficulties in a trying moment and solve them in a satisfactory way. If we might ever keep before our minds that fact—that Jesus is the solution of all human problems—and might look to Him instead of to ourselves for the way out and into the light, then indeed might we see some great problems solved in a single generation, or in the lifetime of the people who are suffering because of their unsolved problems.

Take the problem of capital and labor. It will not be solved in our day, and it will not because the two great parties who are interested in its settlement are not willing to settle it according to the gospel of good will to all. If the men who have money and the men who labor could only see that the way out of their difficulties is through doing unto others as they would have others to do to them, as Jesus taught, then we should soon be beyond strikes, as a means of solving the labor problem, we should soon be able to lay aside the power of money as a means of squeezing the life out of men in order to get the riches of the flesh for ourselves. Let us keep in mind that ill-gotten gain is ever a source of danger and ruin to the men who may wield such a power for their own enrichment. Absolutely the Golden Rule is the only way most of the disturbing problems of the human family can be solved and solved for the good of all—both sides, labor as well as capital. Almost everything else has been tried, but without success. Now let us take Jesus into our labor councils and let Him lead the way out of trouble into peace and good will to all on both sides, and then we shall see the Sun arise with healing in His wings and a new day shall dawn.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

At request of Bro. Riddle, we are taking charge of THE CHRISTIAN SUN one month ahead of time fixed for the transfer from Burlington, N. C., to Richmond, Va. Till July 1, THE CHRISTIAN SUN will be published at Burlington, but from June 1, it will be edited by the writer. As I cannot just now leave my work at Reidsville, N. C., I shall edit the matter for THE SUN in Reidsville, N. C., and send it to the publisher. Contributors sending in matter should send it not to the Publisher, but to the Editor CHRISTIAN SUN, Reidsville, N. C. All contributions and "News From the Field," should be sent so as to reach Reidsville by Thursday of the week preceding the time it is desired to have it appear. Even then in some cases we may not be able to get it in the paper till the week following, depending on what room may be left in its columns when the matter reaches the office. Send all advertising and subscriptions to the publisher at Burlington, N. C., till July 1, and after that to Prof. P. J. Kernodle, care Central Publishing Company, Richmond, Va. Please follow these instructions strictly and we will do our best for you.

Faithfully yours,

J. PRESSLEY BARRETT,

Editor.

NOTES

They say that it is not an easy task to transplant a flower from a hot to a colder climate, and this may be true of flowers, but it is not necessarily true of men, as is proven by the coming of our Brother Beougher from Florida to Graham, N. C. We are glad to hear good words of him and his work in Graham.

Dr. D. A. Long, the man who has been president of more colleges than any other man in the Christian Church, yet seems to be young enough to fill practically any place among us. He is active and would not fancy being classed as an old man. He was in the Suffolk Convention and as alert and active as most young men.

One thing in the Suffolk Christian Church attracted deserved attention and that was a fine oil painting of the late Rev. W. B. Wellons, D. D., who was the founder of the Suffolk church and its only pastor for many years. It is a life-size portrait of this distinguished servant of God, and as the Convention proceeded with its work, he seemed to be standing above and looking down upon the body at work. In his day he was a leader in the Convention.

No formal introductory editorial will be given in this issue. The editor-elect takes charge simply as an accommodation to Brother Riddle. He therefore will simply fill out the balance of his term, ending July 1, and then the formal introduction will be given in the first paper issued from Richmond, Va. Let contributors continue their matter as usual. Let articles be sent in at once. Brother Riddle had used up all of the matter he had on hand and therefore we have to use what we can get till we get started. Give us a little time to get everything to running smoothly.

SUFFOLK LETTER

THE Fancy Gap building, which is a beautiful combination structure for day school, Sunday school, and church, under the supervision of the Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention, was dedicated at 2 p. m., May 31, 1922. As is well known to SUN readers, this work as a mountain school in Carroll County, Virginia, was initiated in the fall of 1920 under the leadership of Miss Iola Hedgepeth by the approval and support of the Mission Board of which Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West is chairman and Rev. Dr. J. O. Atkinson is secretary-treasurer. This Christian effort to help a neglected and remote mountain district by the Christian Church has been a responsive field from the beginning, and Miss Hedgepeth has put into the work her head, her heart, and her life, with gratifying results. The people in the local churches have contributed their thought, their prayers, their sympathy, and material help. Many boxes of clothing, donations of money, two organs, a big Bible, and faith in the work have encouraged the people in that vicinity as well as the leader and the Board.

The school opened with eight children and has increased to eighty-five. The Sunday schools have now an enrollment of nearly 200. The progress made by the children and young people in dress, in manners, in singing, and in aspiration, has surpassed expectation, and the parents are taking a commendable interest in the work.

The building which has been erected by the co-operation of the Mission Board and the community is a credit to both and surpasses buildings in many more advanced sections. It was storm-sheathed, double-walled, and well built on a piece of seventeen acres of land purchased by the Board, and one additional acre donated by Mr. Wash Edwards, who lives near the place. The building is divided into three rooms, heated by stoves, and well lighted. The main room contains about one hundred opera chairs, with platform at the end, and this room will be used for Sunday school and church. The other rooms are seated with regular school desks and chairs combined. One of these rooms can be opened into the main room, giving a seating capacity of about two hundred. The range of mountains in sight gives a grand landscape view.

The following persons went over to the service of dedication: J. O. Atkinson, G. O. Lankford, Mrs. W. H. Carroll, Mrs. Ada Teague, Miss Gladys Lankford, Miss Kate Wheeler, and this scribe. Miss Hedgepeth and her sister were already there. Miss Gladys Lankford, Miss Kate Wheeler, and Mrs. Ada Teague remained to assist in the work during the summer. These generous ladies are to work for their expenses and without pay. Day schools and Sunday schools too far away to attend the new building for the present will be conducted by these good helpers in order to tie them up to the main school.

It rained all the night before the dedication, and off and on all that day, but more than a hundred people came with a bountiful basket dinner and radiant smiles. Dr. Atkinson had charge of the exercises and used Mrs. Carroll, who is President of the Woman's Board, Dr. Lankford and this scribe in public addresses during the forenoon and made one of his good addresses himself.

Then came the dinner which all enjoyed.

At 2 p. m. the dedicatory services were held, the good Doctor Atkinson having me preach the sermon and read the dedicatory service, and Dr. Lankford to make the dedicatory prayer. Dr. Atkinson then conducted the closing service, Miss Hedgepeth and her young people leading in the singing throughout the day.

We all regretted that Brother J. M. Darden was called back to Suffolk by wire and was thus prevented from attendance, which would have meant so much to the work.

Two machines driven by Mr. Burroughs and Mr. Hawks conveyed us to and from the place from Mount Airy, N. C., and they proved themselves fine fellows and good drivers over wet and sometimes dangerous places.

Upon our return to Mount Airy, Brother W. E. Lindsay and his good wife received us into their fine new home and gave us Christian hospitality for the night.

We are now homeward-bound.

ELON LETTER

THE 32nd Elon Commencement is now history. The active campaign to bring the 1922-23 student body together in September is already begun. How well we shall succeed depends upon many circumstances. We are learning now that running Elon is not a matter solely for its trustees and faculty. Elon's success or failure is the success or failure of the entire Church.

Chief among these circumstances this June will be the co-operation of our pastors and other Sunday school officers in the celebration of College Day. The Bulletin with program and suggestive helps has already gone forth to every pastor and Sunday school secretary. Co-operation will do the rest. I will send copies of this bulletin free to any who desire it.

Rev. C. B. Riddle has shown a fine spirit of co-operation for this new departure. There are perhaps fifty churches in our Southern Christian Convention who have never sent a student to Elon. Brother Riddle proposes to give free tuition to one student out of such a church for the next five years. This means he will dedicate $325 in five years to bringing our College and our churches that have not sent a student to our College closer together. A fine idea! Who will follow in his train? Let any interested prospective student write him at once. Let any one desiring to follow with a similar proposal write me.

The Board of Trustees at Commencement took high ground in three particulars. They decided to add space for thirty-two more girls in the Ladies' Hall. Last year board there cost $9.15 a month. Next year we hope to reduce it to $8 per month.

They decided also to reduce board in the College dining hall from $225 to $180. In the Men's Club last year the cost was $15 a month. Next year we hope it will fall as low as $12. In other words, we hope to keep expenses at Elon at a low point, the lowest-point compatible with high standards.

But the best thing they did was to provide that two additional professors in the Biblical Department shall be added by September, 1923. This means the College shall all the better serve the Church with trained ministers and lay-workers. Lieut.-Gov. West, of Virginia, is directly to be credited with this achievement. For years, almost single-handed and alone, he has stood for this, and now he has won his case.

Governor West delivered the Bibles to the graduating class on Commencement day, the first layman to perform this service. He spoke eloquently for the Church, the Bible, and the vital principles of the Christian life. How inspiring it was to hear this great layman plead for the Kingdom and its vital interests!

Does Elon face a new, a brighter day? Yes, but the Christian Church shall finally answer, the Christian Church in which this writer has the highest hopes, the sublimest confidence.

W. A. HARPER.

PUTTING FIRST THINGS FIRST

TO make the Christian more emphatic in the name of the Young Men's Christian Association was the purpose which led to the Conference on Religious Work initiated by the Religious Work Department of the International Committee. And the more than one hundred secretaries and leaders, representing all departments of Association activities, who came from all parts of the United States and Canada, will hold the days spent together at Lakehurst, N. J., as high hours in spiritual experience. They were hours portentous also for the future of the Associations, for all who shared in them will carry into their work a deeper sense of responsibility and a new desire to realize the supreme original objective of the organization—to win men and boys to Jesus Christ as Savior and enlist them for service in the church. The prayer spirit was contagious, the reports and discussions befitted the subjects in seriousness, the conclusions unanimously reached were weighty with possibilities of power.

The conference grew out of a widespread conviction that the distinctively religious work of the Associations has not kept pace with the growth of the work as a whole, and that this condition must not continue. In order to proceed intelligently, commissions had been appointed to study various subjects, such as the present status of the religious work, the place of prayer in the Association's Christian Education and training, enlisting volunteer leadership, and the results and lessons of the pre-Easter evangelistic effort. The carefully prepared reports formed the basis of frank discussion. Difficulties in doing religious work today were admitted, but impossibilities were not, and it was agreed that busy secretaries must not be so busy with material and monetary affairs as to forget or neglect the primary object—the spiritual. Responsibility for religious work and atmosphere in local Associations was laid primarily on directors and general secretary, but each member of the staff was also held responsible in his own special zone. "When religious work is a dominant passion of the secretary, all of the work will be permeated with religion." That was accepted as final and the true ideal.

Especially interesting was the reiterated expression as to the need of close co-operation with the churches, both in planning and carrying out the religious work programs. "We recognize as a primary task that of co-operation with the churches in their work for men and boys." That starts one section of the conclusions unanimously adopted. The Associations may contribute methods of work, courses of study, facilities for week-day activities, and leadership for natural groupings of men and boys in the churches, but it is declared that "a program of religious work most effective in the community is accomplished only by constant counsel and co-operation with the representatives of the churches." This strikes the right note. Great mutual advantage must result from such co-operation, which would utilize the Associations as the agency of the churches for specialized community service, and unite all forces for the common good.

The conclusions further place strong emphasis upon Bible study and prayer as the most effective means to lead to decisions for Christ. The need of training in prayer life was disclosed by the questionnaire as to habits of prayer. Christian decision founded on an experience of a personal relationship to God in Jesus Christ is absolutely essential—the end to be sought by every worker as his first and greatest aim. And the decision must be followed through to open confession in church membership before his duty is fulfilled. It may be noted here that about 5,000 decisions were reported as a result of the pre-Easter movement, with about 2,000 additions to the churches.

After a frank diagnosis of religious conditions, it was the common opinion that the main objective of the Association has been preserved and even enriched with the spiritual experiences of the years. At the same time the need of far more attention to the development of the spiritual life in the Associations was vividly realized and made the subject of special prayer. Indeed, the forty-minute period of prayer following the Saturday evening report of the General Secretaries Commission on Religious Work was the climax of the sessions. The tests proposed for Association secretaries might well be studied by pastors and church members. And if the spirit of this conference could be carried into every church and Association to the last member, we should see the great day of universal revival, for which so many have prayed, breaking upon a world that needs God, that is by all reports hungry for a knowledge of God, and that waits for a Spirit-inspired church to reveal Him through its faith and love and life.

CIRCULATING TITHING LITERATURE

AS a representative of the Layman Company, 35 North Dearborn Street, Chicago, I am sending the following report of the number of pages of literature advocating tithing which that company has furnished to denominations and individual ministers and church workers for circulation in their churches during the five years commencing January 1, 1917, and ending January 1, 1922. The figures are as follows:

1917	10,817,000	pages
1918	8,901,600	pages
1919	17,374,000	pages
1920	21,996,700	pages
1921	21,968,000	pages
Total	91,058,100	pages

From January 1, 1922, to May 6, four months and six days, orders have been received which aggregate over 10,566,000 pages, making a total of over one hundred million pages.

May 6 the Committee on Conservation and Advance of the Methodist church ordered 181,000 copies of seven pamphlets, over two million pages.

From January 1 to March 1, 1922, the Baptist Young People's Union of America, through its General Secretary, James Asa White, ordered a total of 3,170,000 pages.

During six months from September 1, 1921, to March 1, 1922, the Baptist General Board of Promotion, New York, and the state convention secretaries of nine different states, ordered a total of 1,699,400 pages.

Tithing literature is stewardship seed. The church or denomination that sows the seed bountifully will reap an abundant harvest of tithing stewards with a corresponding increase in church support and offerings for benevolences. My experience of more than forty-five years, especially during the last five years, abundantly proves this statement.

LAYMAN.

DR. J. O. ATKINSON

Dr. J. O. Atkinson is putting forth Herculean efforts to do certain things assigned him by the Southern Christian Convention. Among them are: First, Missions; second, to collect the remainder due from pledges for the Men and Millions Movement; third, to secure additional pledges; fourth, to continue the campaign for tithers.

I urge the members of the churches of my charge to aid Dr. Atkinson in every honorable way, to make his work a success. It is our work, our cause. We cannot live and grow as we should unless we stand shoulder to shoulder and press forward in our work in prosperity and in adversity.

D. A. LONG.

ELON COLLEGE

This institution is the child of our Church. President Harper has, very wisely, called on all of its friends to send him all the money and students possible, to build up the good work of Christian education. I call upon the churches of my charge to look up and seek out the name and post-office of every high school graduate in their community and forward the same promptly to Dr. Harper; also report the names of any possible candidates for the Christian ministry. There are those, too, who expect to aid Elon with their prayers and in their wills. The following clause in the will is the thing: "I give and bequeath, to the Trustees of Elon College, Alamance County, N. C., the following, to be used as said trustees think wisest and best to aid the cause of Christian Education."

D. A. LONG.

THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH IN 1847

In J. Winebrenner's History of All the Religious denominations in the United States, published in 1852, Rev. David Millard, a prominent author and Professor in the Free Theological School, at Meadville, Pa., wrote the History of the Christians.

As to statistics, I quote the following:

"The statistics of the connexion, though imperfect, may probably be computed at the present time (1847) as follows: The number of preachers, about 1,800, and 30 licentiates; number of churches, about 1,800, including about 140,000 communicants."

Why such a decline in our membership? Let the Burlington Convention answer.

J. E. WEST.

Suffolk, Virginia.

A CORRECTION

In the SUN's issue for May 31 appeared an article by Lieutenant-Governor J. E. West. In giving the membership of white Christian churches for 1922 the figures should be 97,084 instead of 3,695 as published. The last named figures are for the colored membership, as will be seen by referring to the article.

Rev. Leon E. Smith, D. D., and the people of the Christian Temple, Norfolk, Va., are undertaking great things in the building of their new house of worship. Some one has said that Dr. Smith and his people have a "white elephant" on their hands in this undertaking. You may think that way about it, but you will do well not to tell Dr. Smith any such thing. The building is to cost $200,000, and it is said it will be the handsomest church building in the city of Norfolk. That is saying a good deal, but we do not question the truth of the statement. While they have a great task on their hands and will need all the help our people can give them, we have but one suggestion to give them at this time, and that is: Be sure that the membership of the church keep the building of their own spiritual lives ahead of the building of that fine church, and then when the building is ready for dedication, they will have to dedicate only the new building, as the members will be already dedicated to the service of God.

IN THE HANDS OF CHINESE ROBBERS

(The following thrilling story of the treatment of missionaries in China will interest many of our readers and at the same time give a true idea of the sufferings of some of the men and women who go as missionaries of the Cross to proclaim the good news of salvation to the benighted ones in heathen lands. The account was written by W. H. Oldfield, South China, and was originally published in a secular paper. It sets forth in a most striking way life in foreign lands as experienced by men and women who go in the name of the Lord to call sinners to repentance.—Editor.)

ROBBED, kidnapped, bound with ropes and with eighty other unfortunate captives led into the mountains by a robber band but finally escaping unhurt under a brisk fire from robber rifles; thus ended an eventful day filled with excitement, danger and new experiences. It was a day however marked especially by God's protecting care and the deliverance which He alone could give.

We have travelled but little this autumn because the country has been so unsettled, but the time for the quarterly meeting of the Executive Committee was at hand and in response to a wire calling me to Wuchow I prepared to leave for that city. There was a long wait, but finally a boat was prepared to leave and I got on board and started for Wuchow. The first night we anchored at the market town of Loh-keo, which place has not a savory reputation. We reached the town early in the evening, and I went on shore and posted a card home. I did not like the looks of the place or the people and said so to a friend who was with me. However, we spent a peaceful night and at daylight the next morning we "opened" boat and were off.

Crashing of Bullets

However, we had not gone more than three miles before we were set on by robbers and the firing began. There was commotion, of course, and as the bullets came through the sides of the boat most of the passengers left the upper berths and covered themselves with their blankets on the floor. At first I did not realize the danger I was in and so remained up in my berth. Another launch was ahead of us and was meeting the fire too but in descending a rapid the launch ahead went aground and closed the channel to us. The pilot tried to turn around and retreat, but in so doing the boat ran aground. The other launch got loose and was off, but we were stuck, and at the mercy of the robbers who poured a fusillade into the side of the boat; the side on which I was. The dust began to fly around my head as the bullets came whizzing through the boards. I was lying lengthwise of the launch and fearing lest I might get hit I got down on the floor with the others and squeezed myself in between a fat man and a thin woman and put my hand grip at my head for protection. A few moments later my berth was pierced by three bullets, two of which would have hit me had I been in the berth; one in the head and the other in the hips. The third bullet was too high to hit me unless I had had my knees up. A fourth bullet entered about two feet from my head and two more came whizzing through where I was lying. A bullet went through the left side of my open vest, just where my heart is usually, but I do not know whether this was done when I had the vest for a pillow, or after I put the vest on. I had so many bullets whistling around me all morning on the boat and then on the land, that I do not know just when the thing happened. The heel of my slipper which was under my pillow was also knocked off.

For half an hour the firing continued while the boatmen worked heroically to get the launch into deeper water, but in vain. She stuck fast.

The bullets came crashing through the sides of the launch causing splinters to fly in all directions. Some bullets fell with a sickening thud as they entered the heavier timbers, while others sang in a minor key as they sped unhindered through the sides of the boat. About four hundred shots were fired before the crew gave in, and abandoned themselves to the mercy of the robbers.

Bugles and Booty

A lull came in the shooting and the robbers called for small boats to bring them out to the launch. I got up to have a peep, and with that peep my heart sank. The shore was lined with robbers. They could be seen coming out of the grass away down the river while the murderous notes of their long bugles told plainly that it was a large band, well organized. Personally I would say there were about one hundred men, but others put the number up as high as three hundred. I saw the robbers would soon be on the boat so I quickly put my watch in an inside vest pocket and a roll of bills down in the heel of one of my socks. Then in order to save a little clothing I hurriedly put on two vests, coat and overcoat and lay down again with the others covering my head, leaving only a peep-hole so I could see what was doing.

When the robbers reached the boat there was the greatest uproar; swearing, yelling, threatening, crying and pleading for mercy. Some of the boatmen, I think, were beaten and three others were shot. At first the robbers seemed to be busy in the rooms at the front of the boat; on the lighter that carried the cargo, and in the large rooms occupied by the women. At last, however, they began to enter the general room where I with other passengers was lying covered up with blankets. At first the robbers just went here and there and selected things they wanted, but before long they began to take blankets and coverlets, and my comforter was pulled. I got up.

The robber searched me a little, but while doing so he was attracted by something on the next passenger and so turned away from me. The ticks of my watch and the beats of my heart were in unison. Fearing lest I be searched again by others I quickly turned my pockets inside out and unbuttoned my two vests half way up so that it would appear that I had been stripped clean, and then with "I haven't got a cent" expression on my face, I stood with my hands dangling at my sides, watching the other passengers as their money and valuables were taken away from them.

When they started to take baskets and trunks I took my basket down from the nail on which it was hanging and placed it before me on the floor. I offered to open the basket but the robbers evidently thought I was too obliging to have anything worth while, and so shook their heads and passed on to others. The amount of loot taken was simply enormous. The opium alone was worth a lot of money. The launch contained over sixty cases of opium, each case weighing approximately 200 pounds and the greater half of this was taken by the robbers.

It was not long before kidnapping began. Men were tied up with ropes around their necks and arms, while women were taken unbound. Presently I was selected and I stepped out a captive. I thought I might be held prisoner for weeks and so asked if I might take my leather grip containing Bible, tracts, tooth brush, etc. This request was granted, but when the robbers saw the bag they made a grab for it. I quickly opened it for them and emptied the contents on the floor. But I held the grip in such a way that my purse and a roll of bills containing $160.00 entrusted to me by a business man to take for him to Wuchow, was retained inside and not noticed by the robbers. Several of the robbers made a scramble for the loose silver that fell out upon the floor, and while they picked up the money I picked up some papers, tracts and my Bible, and put them back into the bag again. My captor noticed the tracts and asked me if I were a missionary. When I told him that I was he said he would let me go. I went back and stood by my birth feeling like Amalec, "Surely the bitterness of (kidnapping) is past."

Contending With Robbers

The robbers worked very leisurely and were fully two hours in carrying out their work. I was left alone for a long time while others all around me were tied up and led away. The tears of women and the pleading of men were all in vain. Entreaties were useless. The least resistance was the signal for the rattle of rifles and the brandishing of knives. It seemed as if everybody was being taken, and soon one fellow, rougher than the rest with a yell grabbed me by the collar. I told him I was a missionary and had been let go once, but he said he did not care what I was he wanted me. He started to bind me and I told him he did not need to do this as I would go quietly, but my request only brought forth harsher treatment and so I kept quiet and held out my arms to be bound. The rope was fastened around my neck and then my left arm was bound. The rope evidently was not long enough to bind both arms and so the right arm was left free. One or two thought they had better kill me as they had done three others on the boat, but the others thought better. The robber then drew his knife and looked me over. I knew what he wanted as I watched the performance on the other captives. Each prisoner had a small piece of his clothing cut off which the robber put in his pocket as an indication mark so that later when the captives were claimed each robber cut and I was told to stand aside, and wait for the small would know his man. A piece of my trousers was then bound to come to take me ashore.

All human hope had fled. I had been shown no preferences, but had been roughly handled and roped up like the others, and what was before me I did not know. I did know, however, "Man is immortal till his life's work is done," and that the God of Elisha who surrounded the trusting prophet with unseen chariots of fire could do the same for me. I quietly stood and waited for the next order. While waiting thus I whispered to a passenger to kindly pick up anything I might have left after the robbers had gone, and hand it over to our Mission giving them the details of the robbery and notifying Mrs. Oldfield that I had been taken.

I was still standing there when one of the robbers found a box containing two large Chinese cakes. When he began to eat I asked him for some, as I had had no breakfast. The robber broke off a great big chunk and tossed it to me. I divided it with other unfortunates like myself. Then later as we were going down the back steps of the boat the robbers stopped at the kitchen for some noodles, and I asked for a bowl too. I had to gulp the noodles down hurriedly for the robbers were urging us to be quick, and the small boat was back for another load.

The boatmen pitied me as they watched me being tied up and later led away, but they could not voice sympathy and were powerless to help.

As each boat load of prisoners and booty reached the shore the robbers and their captives started off on their journey. I was in the second last boat to land and there were five other captives tied up in the boat with me. While crossing the shore I busied myself by baling out the boat. We were landed on a small island and had to wade a long way to shore. I asked permission to take off my shoes to cross the stream, but this was refused twice. I asked again and told the robbers that leather shoes when wet were too slippery to walk on the wet stones. My guard gruffly consented, but hurried me and told me to keep on my socks. Little did that robber know how glad I was to obey that order. He did not know that down in the heel of one sock was a roll of bills he would like to have had.

When we reached the shore I did not take time to put on my shoes, but walked in my stocking feet and carried my overcoat in one hand and my leather grip in the other. We followed the river for some distance and then turned among the hills and walked on paths seldom frequented by man or beast. We were being led deep into the mountains toward the robbers' den. What awaited us we did not know.

KEEPING THE PRICE PAID

The writer of the Hebrews said: "Ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise." Two questions arise: Patience is what, and the promise of whom? The Bible contains more than one exceeding great and precious promise, with a view to our becoming Godlike; but there is one preeminent promise, called "the promise of the Father." It is a promise of power, of authority over unclean spirits, to cast them out. Its fulfillment in the lives of God's servants in the Bible days has meant their unity of heart, their enlarged missionary and evangelistic success, the purging out of the heaven of false doctrine, and the overthrow of Zion's foes. It would seem that this promise was never lightly entered upon. When the apostle prayed for its fulfillment in the church at Ephesus (Eph. 3) his prayer contained a preamble that they might first have a capacity to receive the promise—that they might be strengthened and enlarged on the inner man. When they tarried for it at Jerusalem nine days of self-examination and patient waiting intervened. So precious is the gift of the Spirit that he cannot be trusted with the people who take the promise lightly, who expect to enter with the appropriate preliminary meditation, with a hop, skip and a jump, as it were. The situation of a man possessed of the Spirit and not paying the price would be anomalous. God must have some practical guarantee as to our treatment of the trust before He commits the treasure to an earthen vessel. A man cannot enter into the fulness of the Spirit upon a mere syllogism of consecration and faith. The gift of the Spirit will move us out into a larger life of public and private prayer and the devotional reading of the Scriptures; it will open our purses in a liberality of which the tithe will be a minimum; it will provoke in us a wholesome mortification over any unwholesome conditions in the home or the business where our influence is supposed to extend, and set us to work to save them that are next to us, with an intelligence and presistance similar to that of a veteran general who lays siege to a fortified city. If there is room for it, the gift of the Spirit will put a new snap in our moral lives; more charity in our conversation, more patience in our dealing with the perverse, more modesty in asserting our rights, and more cleanliness in the habits of our physical persons. Since these things are to follow the gift of the Spirit, a condition where the individual refused to let them follow would frustrate the grace of God and create an abnormal situation. In response for the luxury and reward of this wondrous gift, the Spirit of God is entitled to a warranty deed to all his claims on us, before he moves in. We are his inheritance, and there is no better way to invite him into his inheritance than to grant him beforehand everything that we can anticipate his requiring; to grant it, not for a day, but day in, and day out, without a break. Often we begin to live for the power and invite the fulness of the Spirit into our lives, enjoying that spirit of prayer that usually attends such a state of mind, but break down because we cannot see quick results. We reason this way: Others who work for Christ do things that I would not do, and leave off duties that I would not neglect, and yet have more success than I; more of the divine seal upon their labors. This may seem to be true, and it may test your patience in seeking the power; but if you will be patient and keep the price paid there will, in God's good time, be such an accord with Him in your life that you will forget to compare yourself with others, and your life will enjoy a rich and charming success that is all its own. This is to be the case, not when we engage to keep the price paid for a day or a week or a camp meeting season, but forever; when the contract on our part becomes fixed and sealed it will be easy for us to exercise that faith which admits into our life God's seal, the Holy Spirit of promise.—Way of Faith.

THE NAME, WONDERFUL

The first of a series of names by which our Lord is characterized in Isaiah 9:6 is Wonderful, by which we understand that there was to be in Him and in His gospel certain facts beyond comprehension of human reason; things for which no earthly science could find an explanation: laws which belong to a higher realm than finite man is permitted to explore. Least among these laws, and merely incidental, were those laws which permitted our risen Lord to conceal His presence, to pass into closed rooms, to move without the ordinary facilities of locomotion, and to ignore the law of gravity in His ascension. We might class with these His power to set aside disease. Greater among these superior laws are those which He broke the power of the lower spirit world, took away the sense of guilt from the human heart, changed men's natures, in violation of every tenet of psychology, and dissolved the bands of death. In the latter case He literally originated life; a thing which every experiment of science has gone to prove impossible.

It was for these reasons that our Lord was to be called Wonderful. That He abundantly fulfilled them in the days of His flesh, all, even His enemies, will admit; but here is the question we would present to His church today: Is He still wonderful? If so, in what sense does He through His gospel agencies exceed the laws of human science and bewilder the rational minds? Does He still cast out devils? Does He still turn men from the darkness of guilt? Do men through the gospel get glimpses of the upper world with its higher laws? Is prayer answered in the healing of the human body and in the commonplace affairs of life? All this ought to be. All, I may say, without exception, should be sought after by us, that our Prince of Peace, our everlasting Father, our mighty God and Counsellor, might reveal to us His other name. The church may do without many of the things which prayer can bring: the mourner's bench bathed with tears; the hard sinner, turned in a day; the diffident daughter transformed into a prophetess; the sick man healed in answer to prayer; the drouth ended by intercession; business problems solved by appealing to Christ. Laws of mind and laws of matter may be adequate for dealing with temporal troubles, without calling on the Lord; there may be physic and spiritual resources to carry on the work of the kingdom without invoking the "sensational" and without encouraging the cataclysmic. But when we concede all this and surrender ourselves to a rationalistic order, when we turn the progress of the church into a kind of evolution, the supernatural will disappear. It will not be possible for the living Christ to move in our midst; for before He can move in the midst of His people and march ahead of His armies He must be known as Wonderful. There is not much wonderful about a Saviour whose activities are bounded by natural law and whose functions are prescribed by rationalistic preachers and teachers. We must have the Wonderful Christ or our interest, once spontaneous, shall become mechanical; and our native passion for a Saviour who exceeds the natural may decline into a disease, a distressing melancholia. The church that loses this name of the Master may still know God; but in its knowledge there will be the maximum of theory and the minimum of experience.

By His name Wonderful our Lord is fascinating to the masses of the world. It is thus, instinctively they know the Messiah ought to come. They run after every fad that pretends to meet this essential requirement; and the existence of "Christian Science," Mormonism, and a dozen-and-one minor movements, is proof that Satan knows how to take advantage of the situation. It is under this name Wonderful that those who are carnally wise and prudent despise Jesus most. That which is beyond the realm of analysis (as are all items of faith) is foolishness to our modern Greek mind, just as it was a stumbling stone to the blackslidden Jew. It is true as in the days of Beacon that a little philosophy inclineth men's hearts to atheism. How disgustingly sudden does the young student after taking a few semesters of science begin to foster a contempt for every phase of the gospel which challenges his comprehension of eclipses natural law. He escapes this snare only by being anchored in the wonderful Christ. Prior to this he was equal to any problem in the universe. He could define electricity and gravity; he could explain how a hundred million suns got fuel to maintain their heat through unmeasured ages, and what was the probable origin of life; he could almost write an account of the "first cause" in the evolution of the universe. Limitless space was no problem to him, and his elastic brain was not dazed at the thought of an unbounded eternity of time. In such a mood there was no room for a spirit of real worship. Such a heart is filled with a pride that dries up its richer fountains of emotion. Happy is the man who before exposing himself to this virus of vanity gives full place in his heart to the wonderful Christ. Fortunate is the man who reaches that depth in philosophy where he can cease from his own thoughts and think God's thoughts; therefore he will find that the greatest of God's thoughts is Christ; that He whose name is Wonderful is the highest expression of law which the universe affords.

A wonderful Christ must be an experimental Christ. He cannot be wonderful till He exceeds the boundaries of our understanding; and, wherein He exceeds those boundaries, we lose Him entirely, unless we retain Him purely as an experimental fact. I must know that whereas I was blind, now I see; whereas I was condemned, now I am free; that I have found (not solved) the mystery of godliness; that in my inward cry for purity, born with my initial vision of Christ, has been answered by the Spirit through the blood, and that He abideth within. —Way of Faith.

OUR CAMPAIGN FOR INCREASE

Next Sunday, June 11, marks the close of our six weeks' contest for a ten per cent increase in the membership of our Southern Sunday schools, together with increased offerings, and a higher average attendance. The report cards show that a great forward step has been taken during this period, and when all honors are received, we are confident that there will be many "Honor schools" to report. Very soon when all reports were received, the list of such schools will be published, together with the side which has done the best work during the contest. The enthusiasm of many of our schools in this Increase Campaign has been very gratifying. It is hoped that this may be just the initial step taken for bigger and better Sunday schools throughout the Convention. Only by an adequate program can the gains achieved be conserved and our Sunday schools become the mighty power for good which they can be in our churches.

THE VALLEY SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION

The annual Sunday School and Christian Endeavor Convention of the Virginia Valley Central Christian Conference was held with the Mt. Olivet church in Rockingham County, May 17 to 19. In spite of rainy weather, the church was well filled at all sessions with interested and enthusiastic Sunday school workers and Christian Endeavorers. Visitors to the Convention were Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Field Secretary of Missions, and Miss Lucy Eldredge, Field Secretary of Religious Education.

The opening address, delivered by Rev. A. W. Andes, was uplifting and inspiring, a fitting beginning to a great Convention. The sessions on the second day included several helpful addresses, one by Dr. Atkinson dealing with the difficulties which have faced the Sunday school movement, and showing how really vital the work of the Sunday school is. Dr. W. T. Walters, President of the Conference, delivered the annual address, a stirring message on "The Church of Tomorrow." Miss Eldredge spoke on "The Greatest Challenge Before the Church," showing the importance of the religious teaching of our children and youth. Reports from all departments showed progress and made recommendations for an even larger work in the future. Many delegates spoke of the work accomplished locally.

The Thursday night session was a missionary service presided over by Mrs. Boyd Richards, of Winchester, Virginia, and addressed by Dr. Atkinson. On Friday, "Christian Endeavor That Wins" was the subject of an inspiring address by Rev. J. F. Morgan, of Winchester, and Rev. R. P. Crumpler spoke on "The Worship of a Little Child," calling attention ably to a part of our work which is so often overlooked. The closing address, "Forward March!" was delivered by Miss Eldredge.

By all present the Convention was pronounced a success. Harmony and a progressive attitude marked the business sessions under the leadership of the Valley's able president, Mr. Roy A. Larrick. Growth and progress all along the line are indications of his interest and untiring efforts. The banner was won this year by the Winchester Sunday school, with Leaksville a close second, and Bethlehem third.

Next year's Convention will be held with the Dry Run church during the third week of May.

For every one per cent increase in yield per acre in the United States, there must be a five per cent increase in the cost of production.

HAS SABBATH OBSERVANCE BEEN "DONE AWAY"?

A member of our class drew my attention to the editorial on the front page of the Times of February 4. "Reading the Bible Like Any Other Book." After reading this article carefully a couple of times I cannot understand why, when writing of things that have been done away, you should have said that "among the things to which this rule applies are sabbath observance," etc. Won't you please explain in The Sunday School Times, so that there will not be any excuse and in order that people may know that our sabbaths must be kept holy, well spent, and not wasted?—A Missouri Reader.

What right has any one to say that "Remember the sabbath day to keep it holy" is no longer binding upon us? One would have just as much right to say that the commandments concerning murder, covetousness, and the like are no longer binding. May I thank you in advance for explaining this matter?—A California Reader.

The sabbath day instituted by God for Israel in the Ten Commandments, and fully explained as to its requirements in the Moasic Law, is not observed by the Christian Church today, nor has it ever been so observed by the great body of evangelical Christians since the time of events recorded in the Book of Acts. This is evident when we remember that the observance of the sabbath required by the Old Testament law given by God to Israel was the observance of the seventh day of the week (not the first day of the week, as most Christians now observe the Lord's day), and was commanded by God to be such a day of complete rest that, by His own order, a man was put to death for gathering sticks on the sabbath day (Num. 15: 32-36). That this Old Testament observance of the sabbath was "done away" when Christ fulfilled the whole law is recognized by Christians everywhere, and is what was meant by the editorial statement concerning the sabbath. It is interesting to note, by the way, that sabbath keeping is the only one of the Ten Commandments that is not restated (in harmony with the principle of grace) in the New Testament, after our Lord's resurrection, as a Christian duty. All the other principles of conduct in the Ten Commandments are either directly or indirectly taught in the Epistles of the New Testament. Sabbath keeping is not only not taught as a Christian duty, but Christians are specifically cautioned not to place themselves under law in this matter: "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a feast day or a new moon or a sabbath day." (Col. 2: 16).

But that editorial statement did not mean that the Lord's people are not to observe the Lord's day, the first day of the week. This blessed weekly memorial of the day in which the Head of the Church, our Lord Jesus Christ, was raised from the dead that we might be saved and share in the new creation, is indeed to be observed out of thankful, joyous hearts by God's people everywhere.

There are fundamental differences, however, between the Christian's observance of the Lord's day in accordance with the grace-teaching of the New Testament, and the Jews' Old Testament law-observance of the sabbath day. A brief summary of the difference is given illuminatingly in the footnote on Matthew 12: 1 in the Scofield Reference Bible, in comment on the record of the criticism which the Pharisees made of our Lord's disciples when "Jesus went on the sabbath day through the corn; and his disciples were an hungered, and began to pluck the ears of corn, and eat." Dr. Schofield's comment follows:

(1) The sabbath ("cessation") appears in Scripture as the day of God's rest in the finished work of creation (Gen. 2:2, 3). For 2,500 years of human life absolutely no mention is made of it. At Sinai the sabbath was revealed (Neh. 9:13, 14); made a part of the law (Exod. 20:8-11); and invested with the character of a "sign" between Jehovah and Israel, a perpetual reminder to Israel of their separation to God (Exod. 31:13-17). It was observed by complete rest (Exod. 35:2, 3), and by Jehovah's express order a man was put to death for gathering sticks on the sabbath day (Num. 15:32-36). Apart from maintaining the continued burnt-offering (Num. 28:9), and its connection with the annual feasts (Exod. 12:16; Lev. 23:3, 8; Num. 28:25), the seventh-day sabbath was never made a day of sacrifice, worship, or any manner of religious service. It was simply and only a day of complete rest to man and beast, a humane provision for man's needs. In Christ's words, "The sabbath was made for man, and not man for the sabbath" (Mark 2:27). Our Lord found the observance of the day encrusted with rabbinical evasions (Matt. 12:2) and restrictions, wholly unknown to the law, so that he himself held to be a sabbath-breaker by the religious authorities of the time. The sabbath will be again observed during the kingdom-age (Isa. 66:23). (3) The Christian first day perpetuates in the dispensation of grace the principle that one-seventh of the time is especially sacred, but in all other respects is in contrast with the sabbath. One is the seventh day, the other the first. The sabbath commemorates God's creation rest, the first day Christ's resurrection. On the seventh day God rested, on the first day Christ was ceaselessly active. The sabbath commemorates a finished creation, the first day a finished redemption. The sabbath was a day of legal obligation, the first one of voluntary worship and service. The sabbath is mentioned in the Acts only in connection with the Jews, and in the rest of the New Testament but twice (Col. 2:16; Heb. 4:4). In these passages the seventh-day sabbath is explained to be to the Christian not a day into which he enters when "he also ceases from his own works" and trusts Christ.

Perhaps the fullest study of the whole question of the sabbath and the Lord's day, and the Christian's observance in the light of all the Scriptures, both Old Testament and New, that has yet been made will appear in a forthcoming volume by Lewis Sperry Chafer entitled "Grace" (to be published this spring by the Sunday School Times Co., at $1.50). Mr. Chafer devotes fifty-six pages to a comprehensive discussion of the whole question because it is typical, and essential to a clear understanding, of God's marvelous grace manifested to us in the Lord Jesus Christ.—Sunday School Times.

SUPERINTENDENT'S LETTER

The Superintendent was so busy last week trying to get our beans, tomatoes, and sweet potato crop planted that he did not take time to write a letter for the SUN. We hope to get our crop planted in the next few weeks and then we will have more time to think of something to write.

The College Commencement exercises are over. The graded school has closed its session and Miss Brothers finished her work at the Orphanage school, so we will hardly know what to do to keep all the little folks amused.

Our Board of Trustees held their annual meeting in the office at the Orphanage on May 31, and were delighted to have with them Dr. W. W. Staley, whose suggestions were very helpful.

The children always look forward to the meeting of the Board of Trustees with a great deal of delight as we make it a rule to have ice cream on that day, and they enjoy it very much.

It was regretted very much by the Board that Brothers B. D. Jones, C. D. West, and J. M. Darden, members of the Board, could not be present. Brother Jones and West could not come and Brother Darden was called away after reaching Elon.

The Board had a very pleasant meeting, notwithstanding the regret and disappointment over the absence of the other members.

CHURCH NEWS

LIBERTY, VANCE COUNTY, N. C.

Brother J. E. Franks is the able and highly esteemed pastor of this church. The third Sunday in May was Mother's Day and Memorial Day at Liberty. Brother Franks preached at Franklinton Christian Church, and I preached at Liberty. It was my first visit, though many members said they were glad to see and hear me, once more at Liberty, they took D. A. for W. S. Long.

Liberty is located in a cultured and progressive community. The membership is large and united. With such a Sunday school as that of which E. M. Newman, superintends, and Bro. Franks as pastor, it is no wonder that the large house had to be greatly enlarged recently. They are able to send Professor P. J. Kernodle many subscribers for THE SUN, and President Harper many students for Elon College.

THE DANVILLE MEETING

Our meeting on Third Avenue, North Danville, Va., began May 14, and continued for ten days. It was a glorious meeting. The church was much revived, between thirty and forty professed faith in Christ, and twenty-one have united with the church, and I think there will be others who will join at my next appointment. It rained nearly every day during the first week, but the attendance was fine from the beginning to the close.

Rev. J. G. Truitt, just from Princeton Seminary, came to our assistance and did all the preaching twice a day from the time he came till the close. His sermons were fine; were clear, logical and forceful. While there he made many friends for himself. The church had just gone through some very severe testings, previous to this meeting, but now it seems to be in a fine condition. Our congregations have greatly increased, and the Sunday school has reached 193 in attendance. And for all of it, we give all the praise, honor, and glory to our Heavenly Father.

CALLED HOME

PATTERSON.—Mrs. M. Aleathea Patterson was born August 1, 1843 died May 25, 1922, aged 78 years, 9 months and 24 days. She was married to W. H. Patterson, October 14, 1863. To this union were born 12 children, sons as follows: Wm. G., Geo. H., Chas. T. and Hugh. Daughters: Mrs. Sallie Burgess, (dec.), Mrs. Susan I. Coward, Mrs. Anna Bell Craven, Mrs. Maggie Coward, Mrs. Stella Brown, Mrs. Minnie Freeman, (Thomas and Jimmie deceased). There are living 41 grand children, and 42 great-grand children, besides a host of other relatives. In these are included two brothers, J. R. and L. T. Parks.

Her remains were laid to rest by that of her husband in the cemetery at Parks Cross Roads of which church she was a life-long member. Many attended the burial and the floral offering was abundant.

It can truly be said a good woman has gone to her reward.

CAMPBELL.—Andrew J. Campbell, of Luray, Va., R. F. D., died of cancers on the face, Sunday, May 21, 1922 at the age of 77 years, 7 months and 29 days. He had been a member of Leaksville Christian church some five or six years; and clung to his faith and to Christ until the end. He is survived by his wife, two sons and two daughters (all of whom are members of the Christian Church); and by three brothers and one sister. The funeral services were conducted at his home, May 23, by his pastor, the writer of these lines.

EDGAR SAMUEL CARLTON

It is timely and fitting that the life of any great layman be given more than a passing comment in the religious press, because most of the Christians of America are layman, and because our young men and women can be greatly benefited by reading the record of man in the business world and who put the principles of Christianity first both in profession and practice. Accordingly I venture to offer a brief summary of the life of Edgar Samuel Carlton. Having visited at different times in his home, having been his father's pastor and the pastor of his people, and the church of his youth, and having lived with his aunt Mrs. M. E. Pierce, whom he loved so much to visit, I saw him from many angles and admired him from every one.

He was born October 1, 1866 in Callaway County, Missouri being the oldest son of the late Mary Ellen Farmer and Joseph W. Carlton. He died February 18, 1922 at his home in Richmond, Virginia. He was a steward in the Centenary Methodist Church, a trustee of Randolph-Macon College, a director of Planters' National Bank, Richmond, a director of the Richmond Chamber of Commerce and of the Dan River Cotton Mills, Danville, Va., and American director of the Imperial Tobacco Company of Great Britain and Ireland, Ltd. He was never married and is survived by his father, and his sister, Mrs. T. S. Parrott, of Newnan, Ga., and three brothers, L. E. of Kinston, N. C., H. A., of Henderson, N. C., and P. J., of Richmond, Virginia.

When he was twelve years old his parents moved to Halifax County, Va., to the old home of his maternal ancestors. He loved the same fields, forests and streams that his forefathers,—and especially his grand father, Archer A. Farmer,—had loved as a boy in other days. Indeed the whole surrounding country is still fragrant with the name of his grandfather and that of his grand uncle, Pleasant W. Farmer.

His training was much the same as that of the average country boy. His earliest recollection of his mother was that of a pretty matron on bended knees. His father and mother taught him the sanctity of the church and the farm, the power of prayer and to love the Word of God. They taught him to shoulder responsibilities, to obey commands, to play fair, to be courteous, to shun deceit, to hate vanity, to hate thriftlessness and to keep clean. In these things he was an apt pupil.

On Sunday he went to Sunday school and at an early age he joined the church at Pleasant Grove, Va. Always religion to him was a reality. It was as real to him as his work or as his father and his mother whom he loved with unexcelled devotion. I must say here that his devotion to his home folks and his near of kin was a marvelous example of being steadfast and true to those whom God had given him, and for this God heaped upon him manifold blessings.

He went to Graham Normal College, and a business school in Lexington, Ky. Although his education was never complete his fine mind and his love for his mother and father made the very toil to which he turned an open book.

He could not have avoided work had that been his choice for it was a necessity and idleness was taboo among his people. It was characteristic of him to do his work well, at first on the farm and later in the factory.

In 1897 he entered the tobacco business in Danville, Va. There being no Christian church in Danville he advised with his mother about joining the Methodist Episcopal church which out of her good heart she advised him to do. In five years he was transferred to Richmond, Va. In six years more he became the American director of the Imperial Tobacco Co. of Great Britain and Ireland, Ltd. And in the thirteen remaining years of his life the man was much as the boy had been. Becoming a man of wealth and affluence he remained ever the unassuming son, the lovely brother and kinsman, and the same dear friend of his friends be they ever so humble.

One of his Richmond contemporaries writes for the press, "He ever showed a great interest in the church, and was a liberal contributor to all its enterprises. His benevolences to all charitable causes were large and generous." Another: "Mr. Carlton was one of nature's noble-men. Unassuming, quite, gentle, he made no effort at display of talent or success." The Richmond Times Dispatch describes him, as "a big figure in the business world." I love to think of him as he sat one summer evening quietly telling me some of the things that count for most in this good world of ours. He was just saying the old things over, but from him they seemed, new, warm and vital. He let me talk, too. He understood my dreams, he laughed, in that charming way of his, at my fears, and when I retired that night I knew I had talked with a great and good man.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT—
MORRISON

In the good providence of God, the Rosemont Christian Church has been bereft of one of its most loyal and faithful members in the person of Mrs. Nannie Rowland Morrison who passed from labor to reward on the morning of April 26, 1922. Therefore, be it Resolved:

First: That in her death we have lost a faithful co-laborer in all phases of religious work and a genial companion in the social circle.

Second: That we express through these resolutions, to the family, our deepest sympathy for them in their bereavement.

Third: That a copy of these resolutions be published in The Christian Sun a copy sent to the family.

MISCELLANEOUS

PASTORAL VISITING*

Dear Brother:

I am not addressing this letter to any one preacher in particular, but to all the preachers in the district. Some may need the exhortation I am about to give more than others, but those who need it the least may possibly profit by it.

I want to say a few words about pastoral visiting. Every member of the conference when he was received into full connection was asked by the Bishop if he would "visit from house to house," and only after giving an affirmative answer was he received. Not all of us, however, have kept that vow as faithfully as we might. Some have been heard to say that visiting is now out of date, that the modern preacher is not expected to visit, that his business is to preach. I would not for a moment discount the great work of preaching, or the value of study as a means of preparing for the pulpit, but we have not yet come to the time when we can afford to dispense with visiting.

Some preachers may think that visiting is not necessary, but the people whom they serve do not agree with them. In my experience as presiding elder I have heard more complaints about preachers not visiting them than about their failings in any other particular. From half the charges in this district last year there came to me complaints to this effect. More often than otherwise when people ask for a change of preachers they do so on the ground that the preacher they have will not visit.

Now some people, I know, are unreasonable in their demands, and when that is clearly the case we cannot afford to be governed by their wishes. But as a rule, when the leading people in a charge offer this complaint there is some ground for it. The complaint comes generally not from the people who are neglected, but from them into whose homes the preacher goes most frequently. It is not a personal matter with them.

*The foregoing letter has recently been mailed by a presiding elder to all the preachers in his district. It is published here for the benefit of preachers outside that district.

They can see that the church is suffering because the people who need the most attention receive the least, and it is their interest in the church that leads them to ask for a visiting preacher.

What do we mean by visiting from house to house? We do not mean taking dinner at some good home on Sunday when passing from one appointment to another. We do not mean spending the night occasionally with some of our people when it is not convenient to get back to the parsonage. We do not mean visiting merely the sick, or those in trouble, however important that may be. We do not mean visiting only where we have been invited. Visiting from house to house means going from one home to another until all the homes in the charge have been visited, and then doing this again and again as long as one is on the charge. Following this plan one may easily on a small charge visit each home on an average once a quarter. On the larger charges one may by a wise use of his time visit each home at least once during the year. No pastor should be satisfied with anything less than this.

No preacher can do his best work on any charge who neglects pastoral visiting. He may claim that he needs the time for study, that his pulpit will suffer if he undertakes to do much visiting. I claim that pastoral visiting of the right kind will enable him to do better preaching and more effective preaching. If he has spent considerable time in the homes of the people during the week he will come nearer bringing to them on Sunday the message they need than he would if he had not come in touch with them, and he will be more than likely to have the people there to hear him. A sermon may be faultless from a literary or homiletic standpoint, but it will have been prepared and delivered in vain if it does not meet the needs of the people, or if it does not reach their ears. Good pastoral work helps wonderfully in getting the people to church, and in preparing both pastor and people for the hour's worship.

Then a visit in the home furnishes a splendid opportunity for the pastor to promote the various enterprises of the church, and to help the people in their spiritual lives. A word spoken here concerning the family altar, observance of the sacraments, attendance upon the Sunday school, Epworth League or missionary society, reading the church paper, contributing to the benevolences, or any worthy object that needs to be encouraged, will count for more than when spoken from the pulpit to the entire congregation. He who neglects such opportunities will necessarily fail in much that is expected of the preacher in charge of work.

Some preachers say that they just cannot visit. Then I say they ought to learn to visit as they learn to preach. There was a time when they found it hard to preach, but they did not give it up on that account. They felt that they had to preach, and they persisted in the effort. Now they find it much easier to preach than when they first began. If a man will make himself visit he will in time overcome much of his timidity or other obstacle in his way, and he will find increasing satisfaction and joy in this part of his work. Here is something for our young preachers especially to think about. Their future usefulness depends in no small degree upon their efficiency in real pastoral work, and they can afford to pay any reasonable price to acquire it.

TITHING LITERATURE AT LESS THAN COST

During the last five years, up to May 6, The Layman Company, Chicago, has circulated more than one hundred million pages of pamphlets advocating tithing, either free or at less than cost.

They now offer to send, postage paid, a package containing 26 of these pamphlets, aggregating 275 pages by 24 different authors, for 30 cents. They include "Thanksgiving Ann" and one other in playlet form; also a "Tithing Account Book" with plain directions for use, and "Questions and Answers About Tithing," 32 pages. The price is less than the cost of production.

Please mention THE CHRISTIAN SUN; also give denomination.

The Great Gift

By REV. H. S. HARDCASTLE, Student
Yale Divinity School
New Haven, Conn.

JESUS came from a hated and despised race. His parents were humble and poor. The scene of His nativity was a stable, and His first cradle was a manger. His boyhood and youth were spent in a vile city. His active ministry was confined to less than three years. It was filled with misunderstanding, opposition, and persecution. It was ended by death on a cross, a symbol then of shame and disgrace. During His life-time He gathered twelve humble, unlettered men as His disciples, and one of these betrayed Him. The others forsook Him and fled.

Jesus made no material gift to the world. He built no monument nor reared any edifice. He composed no music. So far as we know He never wrote anything except a few letters or marks on the ground. There is no record that He ever gave away a farthing. And yet He is known as the Giver, the Great Giver. "How can these things be?"

Jesus' gift was spiritual. He gave men a new conception of God. Jesus never argued for the existence of God; He took that fact for granted. And He told men that God was a Father, that He loved them supremely, that He was interested in every detail of their lives, that He was long-suffering and merciful, and that He was seeking them out, and would welcome them into His Father heart.

Jesus gave men, also, a new conception of life. It was not "a cup to be drained, but a measure to be filled." It consisteth not in the abundance of the things that a man possesseth, but in the finer, eternal qualities of mind and heart. It was to be accepted as a stewardship, and its end was not in being served, but in serving; not in getting, but in giving; not in repression, but in abundant expression. Life, to Jesus, was real and earnest.

Someone writes of The Nonsense of Christian Science—a most practical subject, though not a pleasing theme to the members and friends of that cult.

Brethren, please get busy and let us see what we can do to put THE CHRISTIAN SUN in better shape financially. We can do it if we will, and we must.

We have gained about seventy members since I came here, less than a year ago.—Rev. Elisha Bradshaw, Second Church, Portsmouth, Va. That is a fine showing for our younger church in that city by the sea.

Let your articles for THE SUN columns come right along to the office of the editor, Reidsville, N. C. Remember that every issue of THE CHRISTIAN SUN gives you a fine opportunity to increase your usefulness. Pick up your best thoughts and put them in shape, please, and send them along for our columns.

In this issue there is a message from Dr. W. S. Long on one of the most important lines of work which our Southern Christian Convention has taken in its history, and that is the establishment of a Theological Seminary in connection with Elon College. Be sure to give him careful reading, and then do your best to encourage the work.

Lieut.-Gov. J. E. West is not only a man of ability, but he is in earnest in whatever he undertakes in church work, and he undertakes, too. If you can get him to undertake work, you may count on it being done. He came of good old Christian Church stock and he may be depended on till the going down of the sun. He is a hard worker and a wise manager.

Our old friend and brother, Mr. John H. Stewart, Decatur, Ind., has become the Business Manager of The Herald of Gospel Liberty and all the publishing interests of the Christian Publishing Association, Dayton, O. He is a man worthy of the large confidence of our people and we look for good things to come from his work in the Christian Publishing Association.

Rev. J. W. Holt's address before the Convention at Suffolk on Law Enforcement, Backed by Moral Sentiment, attracted much attention and was spoken of with high approval. Brother Holt was at home in discussing that theme, for he has long been a watchman on the walls against the liquor business, and now he is just as ready as ever to strike when he gets a chance.

Rev. G. C. Crutchfield, pastor of the Palm Street church in Greensboro, has been greatly blessed in his work, and the Palm Street church knows how to appreciate a good article when it has it. If you do not believe it, you get your church to call Brother Crutchfield to be your pastor and see if you can get him. However, we warn you to be prepared for a disappointment.

Some of our church officials find themselves much handicapped in communicating with our Sunday school and church officers and even our ministers, and for the reason that in our Annual, those living in large cities do not give the street number. When our next Annuals are prepared, we urge those in charge to see that this error, or mistake, is corrected. Do not forget.

Rev. H. Russell Clem, the new pastor at Greensboro, N. C., seems to be moving well in his work there. He did a fine work at Springfield, Ohio, before coming to North Carolina, and we expect good results in his labors in Greensboro. Brother Clem is a native of Virginia—from the Shenandoah Valley, if we mistake not, but he had been in Ohio for a number of years; but when two attractions put their powers upon him, he could not resist the temptation to come south, and he came.

From away out in Ohio comes this encouraging word: "I cannot tell how glad I was when I learned that you are to be THE SUN's editor. One church paper is in safe hands." "Be strong and of a good courage; be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed, for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest." Remember His "I will be with thee; I will not fail thee, nor forsake thee." Our Buckeye friend gives us good advice and we hope to cherish it and so make it a blessing to the cause we serve.

Rev. Chas. H. Rowland, D. D., pastor of the Christian church at Franklin, Va., is still resting and recuperating. His health has much improved of late, and yet his physician does not think it is wise for him to return to his work just yet a while. His many friends will rejoice in the fact that he is gaining. He is spending his time in Central North Carolina, where they have perhaps the best drinking water in the South. Being out of his pastorate, he is as restless as a fish out of water, but we are hoping by the fall of the year to see him back in his work and able to do his full share as he has done for so many years.

A note from Brother Riddle makes plain to our readers what relation his bookstore will maintain to the work and people of our churches in the Southern Christian Convention, as follows: "Proper adjustment has been made and I have agreed to continue to handle books, Bibles, church and Sunday school blanks, etc., as usual, for the convenience of the churches. However, the work is not to be financed by the Convention, but merely the Board of Publication is to recognize my office as a book depository for the Convention. The business in the future will not be conducted under the name of C. B. Riddle, Publishing Agent, but that of Church Supply House. I am not giving my time to this work myself, but placing it in the hands of a competent person who will conduct the work and be able to supply you, or any of your churches, with the usual needs. From time to time additional stock will be added and our facilities greatly increased. Whenever in need of anything along the line of books, Bibles, communion sets, and general church supplies, send your order to the Church Supply House, Burlington, N. C."

EDITORIAL

ONE HOPEFUL SIGN

MANY are the criticisms of the Church, as a whole, on the ground that it is so slow in the work it claims to do—the work which is considered its special mission to the world. Very much of this criticism is made in ignorance—men, and sometimes women, who really know very little of what the Church is undertaking to do, and less of what it is actually doing, for the spread of Christianity and the uplift of humanity.

Sometimes they try to compare the Church with other organizations as to the work they are doing, and generally to the disparagement of the Church, but the basis for such comparisons is ignorance—men are talking, not of what they know through actual investigation, but of what they have heard, or perhaps worse yet, of what they have fancied, while as a matter of fact the truth is not reached at all as to what the Church is doing.

We make bold to claim that the most active organization of benevolent and philanthropic character in all the world is the Church of Jesus Christ. We go a step further, and declare that we believe if all mere human organizations of this class were put together, they would not equal what the Church of Christ is doing. If you like, try it, and see what results you get. The benevolent and philanthropic work of the church will far exceed that of all social and philanthropic organizations in the country, and then include its spiritual work and you will be surprised.

To begin with put all the work of this class which the church is doing in a lump, and then get what all the social organizations of the world are doing, and you will soon see that the church leads the world. Do you believe it? If not; try it for yourself and be convinced. Take all the church is doing for the uplift of humanity and compare it with what all the various orders are doing for the same purpose, and you will get your eyes open to some startling facts.

The Church of Christ is the greatest benevolent, philanthropic and spiritual force in the world, notwithstanding its many defects, it is greater in fact than all of the lodges and social orders put together. Begin by including the work the church is doing for the saving of the world to the highest ideals of life. Include the building and keeping up of church buildings, the support of same, and the ministry, then its schools and colleges, its hospitals, its benevolent institutions, in all lands, its home and foreign mission work, in all its phases, and when you have summed it all up, you will see it is useless even to begin to count up the work of the lodges and social organizations of every kind—the Church safely outstrips them all, and is easily the leading benevolent institution in all the world.

According to these figures less than half of the people of the Americas are in the churches, as we have considerably over 100,000,000 in population. Taking from that number 45,997,199, and we have in America 64,002,801 people out of the churches. These figures look quite well, but we fear they are above, rather than below, the number of actual church members. Then we know that a large per cent of those in the Churches are at least very uncertain as to their place in the column of actual Christians. Putting the situation at its best, we can easily see that the church has a great task before it in the matter of winning America to Christ. If the church members in America could be counted under the rule of the church in Korea, that is, count no one a member till he had shown his discipleship by winning at least one person to Christ, then we should hope soon to win America to Christ. May the churches of this country face this situation with a steady aim and push on to final victory in Christ.

If the ministers, Evangelists and churches would only get down to real soul-saving and not try to bring men and women into the ranks of the churches till they give some tangible evidence of real discipleship, we should see the churches greatly improved in its class of members and the cause of Christ greatly encouraged. Every time an unconverted person is pulled by some hook or crook into the membership of the churches, without regeneration, we believe a great wrong is done, not only to the individual himself, but to the churches, for an unregenerated church member is a dead weight in the church, and cannot possibly add anything of real value to the church militant. May we hope to soon see a reversion in this situation—may we soon see the day come when we shall count real discipleship as the only basis on which men and women can come into the church of the Lord Jesus Christ; we mean, of course, the visible Church, for, as a matter of fact, the humanly white-washed members are not even now in the Invisible Church of Christ. We are decidedly in favor of the churches of Christ in America making a great campaign to bring in actual converts, as far as it is capable of doing such a thing. As a matter of fact this will greatly increase the power of the churches of all denominations.

THE PRESSING QUESTION OF TODAY

ARE we to have a sweeping revival or not? The answer depends in a large degree on the wishes and attitude of the church members. We are drifting day by day and we have been drifting for a long while, but we do not get to any particular place in the divine life by drifting. We must do more than drift—we must go directly to the place of need and there put down our life in service after the Lord's way, and then we shall get somewhere, not in our strength, but in the power of God we shall begin to accomplish something. As a church we are too slack in our service and we are satisfied with any kind of service we may render. Indeed, we fear too many are satisfied with rendering no service in the salvation of souls at all. We shall never have a real sweeping revival from that sort of effort. We need to get down before the Lord and wait in prayer, crying unto God for the outpouring of His Spirit, not only upon ourselves, but upon the multitudes who are about us, but out of Christ and so out of the church.

Praying people, those who pray in faith, may have a revival when they need it, when they wish it. Prayer of the right kind may bring a revival from heaven when it is needed, and so far as we know there is no way to get a revival outside of the circles of prayer. Praying people have in other days been mighty in bringing a revival into a community and praying people may again be mighty in bringing a revival into a community. Is a real revival needed in your church? Then you and your fellow-laborers may get it by uniting in prayer and holding on until the revival is given—given down from Heaven. Keep in mind, revivals are not worked up—they are prayed down from above, and when that sort of revival is given it will mean something in the salvation of souls—and it will have not only good effects, but it will in a very large measure bring permanent blessings to your church and community. That is the kind of revival to pray for—pray and wait before the Lord till He gives it, and you will see quickly a marvelous difference between a revival which is worked up and a revival which is prayed down from heaven, and this is the need of the Church and the world today—a God-given revival, and then a new day in Christianity will dawn, a new life will appear, and new fruitage will come, the Church will be alive under the power of the Holy Ghost, and great things will come to pass in the Church of Jesus Christ—men and women will be convicted of sin and they will turn unto the Lord and they will become new creatures in Christ. A church which is composed of men and women who have been born again, born from above, will become a great power—great power for the bringing of a revival, for getting men and women by their heart strings and leading them into the fulness of life. The life which is in Christ Jesus will bring to pass a new day in the life of the Church and in the salvation of souls.

If we are to win men and women to the Lord Jesus Christ, as the Saviour of the world, we must not only make a profession of religion, but we must have the very Spirit of Christ. In other words, we must have the divine nature implanted in our hearts and lives, and then we shall see the Church putting on new life and becoming a real power for righteousness in the world. If the Christian people of this day could be brought to be a praying people, then we should see the dawning of a new day in the saving of the world.

We must have imparted to us the divine nature and this cannot be done by man. You may expect your pastor to give it to you, but he cannot do it. The divine nature can be given, so far as we know, only by the power of God manifested in Jesus Christ. In answer to prayer God can give the Church of today a great and sweeping revival. We should not expect Him to give us such a revival without prayer. Suppose He would give it to us without prayer, what would be the result? There really would be no revival, for while God is able to give anything in the way of a revival, we could not receive what He might give us, if we have not been much in prayer for it. The greatest revivals of the past have come in answer to prayer.

The great revival in Wales a few years ago was in answer to prayer. It is estimated that 100,000 souls were won to Christ. Since the close of the great World War, Czecho-Slovakia, a country that was shaken in that war as with a terrible destruction, but when it was over some one went to praying for a revival and it came, and Mr. Sherwood Eddy, who was in that country, said that 200,000 people were brought to Christ. If the people of the Christian Church want a sweeping revival, they can get it through prayer—through a mighty coming together of the people in prayer, begging for the coming of a great revival. Shall we have it? Who will begin to pray?

“Revive Thy work, O Lord!
Thy mighty arm make bare;
Speak with the voice that wakes the dead,
And make Thy people hear.

Revive Thy work, O Lord!
Disturb this sleep of death;
Quicken the smouldering embers now
By Thine Almighty breath.

Revive Thy work, O Lord!
Exalt Thy gloriouse name,
And by the Holy Ghost, our love
For Thee and Thine inflame.

Revive Thy work, O Lord!
Send Pentecostal showers;
The glory shall be all Thine own,
The blessing Lord, be ours.”

NOTES

Mrs. C. B. Riddle, wife of Rev. C. B. Riddle, late editor of THE SUN, is in the hospital at Durham. The latest news from her is to the effect that she is doing well.

The last session of the Southern Christian Convention, which met in Suffolk, Va., made an important change in the management of the Men and Millions work. The enterprise is now managed not by the Campaign Committee, but by our Mission Board of the Southern Christian Convention. We appeal to our brotherhood to give every possible aid to the efforts of the Mission Board to bring success to this great movement. We cannot afford to neglect this enterprise, and for the reason that it gives promise of support for our most important undertakings. Dr. J. O. Atkinson, Secretary of Missions, will lead the work, and we sincerely wish that we may all get beside him to give this work support. Brethren, in some instances it may be hard for you to meet your pledges, but do your best to meet them by paying them just as fast as you can, in keeping with your promise. You made the promise and it becomes you as a Christian man to do your best to meet the same by paying. Remember, your promise was made to the cause of Christ, for that cause cannot be carried on as it should be without money. Do your best, brethren, taking the matter to God in prayer, asking Him to help you to discharge this debt, for it is a debt, in the best way possible. If you make an honest effort on your own part to pay your pledge, looking to the Lord for guidance and the means to pay it, we believe you will succeed in paying it. If you wish to know anything pertaining to your pledge, write to Rev. J. O. Atkinson, Burlington, N. C.

ELON LETTER

IT is not often that I quote from a personal letter in a public way. Since this letter in particular is symptomatic, I feel justified in quoting from it with all personalities omitted. Before quoting, however, permit me to say that the young woman who wrote the letter is one of our leaders in the Southern Christian Convention, and that the family whose daughter plans to go to another college is one of our most prominent. I trust every friend of the Christian Church will read this letter. The letter reads as follows:
